Clerk as commissioner of insanity. The clerk of the district court may not, in addition to his regular salary, retain the fees collected by him for acting as a commissioner of insanity.

Baldwin v Stewart, 207-1135; 222 NW 348

CHAPTER 480
JURORS IN GENERAL

10842 Competency.

Competency of jurors. See under §§11472, 13830

10843 Exemption.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 13; '34 AG Op 58

10846 Fees of jurors.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 441; '32 AG Op 13; AG Op Feb. 27, '40

Equitable estoppel — when inapplicable to public. A county is not estopped to recover back unlawful excess mileage paid a grand juror, even tho the payment was made under an ex parte order of court.

Park v Polk County, 220-120; 261 NW 508

Judicial legislation. A court enters the wholly unallowable field of judicial legislation when it assumes to enter ex parte orders directing the payment of mileage to grand jurors in an amount different than the amount provided by statute.

Park v Polk County, 220-120; 261 NW 508

Mileage—limitation on. A grand juror is entitled, for each term of court, to only one mileage of ten cents for each mile traveled from his residence to the county seat. If more be paid the county may recover back the illegal excess.

Park v Polk County, 220-120; 261 NW 508

CHAPTER 482
SELECTION OF JURORS

10868 Lists by board of supervisors.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 463

Correction. A jury list which contains the names of the judges of election of the precinct from which the list is sent, is not a list, as provided by statute, and is properly corrected by the board of supervisors by striking the names of said judges and by inserting the names of qualified persons in lieu thereof.

State v Pierson, 204-837; 216 NW 43

Correction without formal record. The act of the board of supervisors in correcting a jury list by substituting the names of competent jurors in lieu of those who are incompetent, is not rendered illegal because the substituted names were all suggested by one member of the board, nor because no record of the correction was preserved in the minutes of the proceedings, it appearing that the final correction was approved by the board.

10869 Certification.

Competency—waiver. The fact that a juror was an election judge at the election at which the jury list was selected and certified is not a ground for challenge for cause under §13830, C., '24, even tho his name is certified as a juror in violation of this statute. In any event, any tenable objection to the juror is waived by not discovering the incompetency until after the verdict.

State v Burch, 202-348; 209 NW 474

10873 Preparation of ballots.

Drawn on precept. If a grand jury be once regularly drawn, and for any cause fails to appear at a subsequent term, a precept for a jury should, at that term, issue to the body of the county, and §240, C., '73 [§§10873, 10874, C., '39] providing that the jurors shall be drawn 20 days before the term, does not apply.

10879 Notice of drawing.

Ignoring statutory time-notice. The fact that the ex officio jury commission under order of court drew a petit jury panel to take the place of discharged jurors on the regular panel, and did so without the five-day notice provided by the statute, will not be deemed prejudicial in the absence of an affirmative showing by complainant that he was prejudiced.

State v Archibald, 208-1139; 226 NW 186

10885 Number from township limited.

Setting aside indictment. An indictment must be set aside when returned by a grand jury two members of which were from the same township. (But now see §13781.1)

State v Judkins, 200-1234; 206 NW 119

CHAPTER 483

ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELORS

10907 Admission to practice.

Discussion. See 17 ILR 50—Integration of the bar; 17 ILR 83—Practice by corporations

Supreme court—no power to enjoin unlicensed person practicing law. Supreme court has no implied power, by virtue of its exclusive statutory power to admit persons to practice as attorneys, to enjoin unlicensed law practice, for it has no original jurisdiction to grant injunctive relief, and an equity action therefor by members of bar is in no way related to the matter of admission to bar or disbarment.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

District court's power to enjoin unlicensed person practicing law—certiorari thereon annulled. Whether attorneys admitted to practice law are possessed of valuable right, privilege, or franchise which may be unlawfully encroached upon by an unlicensed person, thereby causing irreparable damage and injury to such attorneys and others similarly situated, and whether they are entitled to injunctive relief in equity, were all questions determinable by the district court after hearing of evidence, so a writ of certiorari, issued by the supreme court to the district court, for want of jurisdiction of subject matter, must be quashed and annulled.

10919 Nonresident attorney—appointment of local attorney.

Appointment of resident attorney. This section does not apply to an action (1) in which the foreign attorney is a plaintiff, or (2) in which a resident attorney appears of record with the foreign attorney.

I OFFICER OF COURT

Discussion. See 11 ILR 224—Duty of lawyer to the court

Attorney as witness. An attorney in a cause is not per se incompetent to testify in his client's behalf.

Kellar v Lindley, 203-57; 212 NW 360

Attorney as witness. It still seems necessary for the courts to express their strong disapproval of the conduct of an attorney in voluntarily maintaining the dual attitude of counsel and vital witness in his own case.

Bibler v Bibler, 205-639; 216 NW 99

Attorney as counsel and witness in same case. While the court views with emphatic disfavor the act of an attorney in assuming the dual attitude of both counsel and witness in the same case, yet such conduct does not go to the competency of the attorney as a witness, but to the weight and credibility of his testimony, which latter fact may be very properly presented to the jury by appropriate instruction.

Cuvelier v Dumont, 221-1016; 266 NW 517

Attorney fees—material evidence withheld from court. An executor being an officer of the court, the matter of his expenses is at all times subject to revision, so an order fixing his attorney's fees should be set aside when it appears that material matters were not before the court at the hearing.

In re Schropfer, 225-576; 281 NW 139

Affidavit for cost bond—valid execution by attorney for corporation. The statutory affidavit supporting a motion for cost bond may be made and filed by a defendant corporation's attorney, and a corporation need not personally make and file such affidavit.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

II FIDUCIARY RELATION

When fiduciary relationship exists. No fiduciary relation exists between an attorney and another relative to the contract which creates the relation of attorney and client.

State v Cas. Co., 212-1052; 237 NW 360

Presumption of fraud. Transactions between an attorney and his aged and mentally infirm client which are apparently advantageous to the attorney and disadvantageous to the client, and which are not merely incidental to the relationship of attorney and client, are pre-sumptively fraudulent. Evidence held insufficient to overcome said presumption.

Reeder v Lund, 213-300; 236 NW 40

Parent and child—required proof. In an action to set aside a trust agreement executed to a son and an attorney by plaintiff, evidence held to support decree dismissing plaintiff's petition. The existence of a confidential relationship or facts giving rise thereto must be proved before doctrine of fiduciary relationship can be applied—the mere relationship of parent and child does not create fiduciary relationship.

Hatt v Hatt, (NOR); 265 NW 640

Negating fraud. The plea of fraudulent representation as to the value of property must necessarily fall in the face of testimony that the complainant was a person of unusual business ability and experience and had had long, personal and intimate knowledge of the property in question far superior to that of the alleged wrongdoer.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

Insufficient showing. The relation of attorney and client is not established by the simple showing that the attorney in question had, at one time in the past, examined an abstract of title for the juror.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

Payment of claims—death of claimant's attorney — peculiar circumstances relieving barred claim. Where an attorney files a probate claim for a nonresident claimant, but dies one day before the expiration of the year and without serving a notice of hearing on such claim—claimant, not learning of his attorney's death until later, and then delaying several months while his new attorney negotiated with the estate, held to have shown peculiar circumstances entitling him to equitable relief considering the estate was still unsettled and solvent.

Hagen v Nielsen, 225-127; 279 NW 94; 281 NW 356

Note—evidence. Record reviewed and held wholly insufficient to establish any fiduciary relation as attorney and client between the payee and the maker of a promissory note at the time the note was executed.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

III DISABILITIES

Communications between attorney and client—when not privileged. A client who consults his attorney for the simple purpose of having the attorney put him in touch with a broker, with whom the client could arrange for the sale of property, may not claim that the resulting conversation is privileged or confidential; likewise, if the client's purpose is to obtain such assistance as will enable him to consummate a crime.

State v Kirkpatrick, 220-974; 263 NW 52

Improper appearance—who may object. An objection that an attorney was appearing both for and against a party litigant cannot be made by a litigant other than the one affected.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

IV LIABILITY TO CLIENT

Fraud—illegal interest charge. Evidence held insufficient to show fraud on the part of an attorney in charging interest in excess of the legal rate on certain obligations.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

Fraud in foreclosure. Evidence held insufficient to show fraud in the receipt by an attorney of a portion of an attorney fee taxed in a foreign foreclosure.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

Fraud—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to show fraud on the part of an attorney in withholding facts which were of no concern to the complainant.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

Inadvertent misrepresentation. Evidence held insufficient to show fraud by an attorney in the making of an inadvertent false representation.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

Summary proceedings—appeal—no hearing de novo. A summary proceeding by a client against his attorney will be heard on appeal only on errors assigned—not de novo.

Norman v Bennett, 216-181; 246 NW 378

Attorney omitting defense—belated attack ineffectual. A regularly entered decree against a person represented by reputable counsel will not seven years thereafter be set aside for alleged fraud of an attorney in failing to plead a bankruptcy discharge as a defense.

Ware v Eckman, 224-783; 277 NW 725

V ACQUIRING CLIENT'S PROPERTY

Presumption of fraud. Transactions between an attorney and his aged and mentally infirm client which are apparently advantageous to the attorney and disadvantageous to the client, and which are not merely incidental to the relationship of attorney and client, are presumptively fraudulent. Evidence held insufficient to overcome said presumption.

Reeder v Lund, 213-300; 236 NW 40

VI COMPENSATION

Discussion. See 3 ILB 43—Attorney's services—void or champertous contract

Action for services in effecting settlement—evidence. An attorney in an action against a client on a contract of employment may testify to the acts and things done by him in effecting an agreement of settlement of the claim in question.

Attorney's fee fixed by agreement of heirs. The fee of an administrator's attorney may be fixed by agreement of the heirs and the amount is of no concern to anyone else, where no rights of creditors are involved.

In re Schropfer, 225-576; 281 NW 139

Attorney fees as matter of right. A defendant in attachment who counterclaims on the bond and recovers both actual and exemplary damages is entitled to a taxation of reasonable attorney fees as a matter of right, even tho the sureties on the bond are not made parties to the counterclaim.

Mogler v Nelson, 211-1288; 234 NW 480

Fees for services to estate. The burden of proof is on attorney claiming fees for services, whether ordinary or extraordinary, and, while court may to a certain extent use its own judgment, claim should be based on evidence.

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

Fees for extraordinary services. An executor has the burden to prove the extraordinary services and the reasonableness of additional compensation.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Fees for extraordinary services. Without evidence as to extent and value of extraordinary services, an allowance therefor to executor and his attorney is not res judicata as to factual matters, and the attorney's statement which fails to separate time spent in courtroom from time spent in briefing and consultation will not furnish proper legal basis for any final adjudication.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Counterclaim—justifiable dismissal. An unsupported counterclaim for damages consequent on the negligent handling of a claim by an attorney who sued for fees due him, is, of course, properly dismissed by the court.

Hunt v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Contract of employment not presumptively fraudulent. The rule that contracts entered into between attorney and client subsequent to the creation of such relation are presumptively fraudulent, has no application to the contract by which the relation of attorney and client is created.

Coughlon v Pedelty, 211-138; 233 NW 63

Contracts—offers—when implied acceptance not recognized. Proof that a party made an offer to pay a stated sum for services to be performed and that the offeree thereafter proceeded to perform the services, creates a presumption that the offeree accepted all the terms of the offer; not so, however, when such offer is made after a large part of the services has been rendered on the basis of a quantum meruit, and the offeree continues to perform the remaining services. In the latter instance, the quantum meruit contract will be deemed to continue unless an acceptance of the offer is actually proven.

Kelly, etc. v Trust Co., 217-725; 248 NW 9; 250 NW 171

Directed verdict—when required. Plaintiff in an action to recover, e. g., attorney fees, is necessarily entitled to a directed verdict when the evidence on all the controverted issues is uncontradicted, sufficient, and conclusive in plaintiff's favor.

Hunt v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Elements to be considered. In fixing the compensation for attorneys on a quantum meruit basis, due consideration must be given (1) to the amount involved, (2) to the nature of the litigation in question, (3) to the time occupied, (4) to the results accomplished, and (5) to the standing of the attorney.

Kelly, etc. v Trust Co., 217-725; 248 NW 9; 250 NW 171

Employment by apparent agent. An attorney who claims to have been employed, by an alleged apparent agent, to defend an action, may not, after the action is dismissed and immediately recommenced, continue to rely on the alleged contract with the apparent agent when he then knows that said agent never had any authority to employ.

Orwig v Railway, 217-521; 250 NW 148; 90 ALR 258

Essentials of employment. A contract of employment of an attorney is established on a showing that the advice and assistance of the attorney in a matter pertinent to his profession were solicited and received.

Anderson v Lundt, 200-1265; 206 NW 657

Harmless error—taxation of attorney fees. Error in taxing attorney fees when the instrument sued on does not provide therefor is fully cured by a statement in the written argument on appeal by the attorney in whose favor the taxation was had, to the effect that he had fully released and satisfied the judgment for such fees, such statement, though irregularly presented, being irrevocably binding on the attorney.

Koontz v Clark Bros., 209-62; 227 NW 584

Injecting unpleaded issue into instructions. On the one duly joined issue whether plaintiff was orally employed to render services for defendant in a certain matter, the court commits reversible error by injecting into the instructions the unpleaded issue whether defendant knew that plaintiff was performing services for defendant and accepted the benefits of such services.

Graeser v Jones, 217-499; 251 NW 162

Instructions. In an action by an attorney for services based on an express contract to assist in the settlement of an appeal, the court, in its instructions, should not make plaintiff's recovery dependent on proof that defendant was apprised of just what efforts plaintiff was making to effect a settlement.

Graeser v Jones, 220-354; 261 NW 439

Record—materiality. In an action by an attorney for services in obtaining a decree for the defendant, the record of the decree is receivable in evidence, as bearing on the issue of the performance of the contract.

Hornish v Overton, 206-780; 221 NW 483

Trusts—compensation and attorney fees. The compensation of a trustee and of his attorney necessarily rests quite largely in the discretion of the trial court.

Turner v Ryan, 223-191; 272 NW 60; 110 ALR 554

VII CONTINGENT FEE—CHAMPERTY

Belated presentation of defense. In summary proceedings between an attorney and a client, the defense that a contract between the parties was champertous, or against public policy, must be presented in some manner in the trial court, even tho such summary proceedings are heard by the trial court without written pleadings.

Norman v Bennett, 216-181; 246 NW 378

Contingent fee—validity of contract. A contract between an attorney and a client fixing the contingent compensation of the attorney at one-third of the amount recovered, entered into at a time when the extent of the litigation was quite problematical, is not rendered unenforceable because ultimately the services necessary to effect a recovery were quite small. Nor is such a contract champertous.

10921 Deceit or collusion.

Recovery of fraudulently induced fee. Ordinarily, one who has paid an attorney for services and seeks to recover the entire fee on the ground that payment was fraudulently induced, must show that the services were of no value, and the evidence is fatally deficient if services are performed, but their value is not shown, as the plaintiff thereby fails to establish the amount of his damage.

Gipp v Lynch, 226-1020; 285 NW 659

10922 Authority.

ANALYSIS

- I GENERAL AUTHORITY
- II EXECUTION OF BONDS AND OTHER PAPERS
- III AGREEMENTS GENERALLY
- IV AUTHORIZED AGREEMENTS
- V UNAUTHORIZED AGREEMENTS
- VI EVIDENCE OF AGREEMENT
- VII RIGHT TO RECEIVE MONEY

I GENERAL AUTHORITY

Liability to third persons. As between a principal and third parties, the principal is bound by the acts of his agent within the limits of the apparent scope of his authority.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

"Apparent authority" defined. "Apparent authority" is the result of the manifestation by one person of consent that another shall act as his agent, made to a third person, where such manifestation differs from that made to the purported agent.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Undisclosed limitation of agent's authority—effect. Altho a principal may by special limitations restrict the authority of his agent, and altho such restrictions are obligatory between the principal and his agent, such limitations are not binding upon third parties and, in the absence of knowledge of such restrictions by them, the principal will be bound to the same extent as tho the restrictions were not made.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Admissions—when receivable. Admissions or statements by an attorney during the course of, and pertaining to, his client's litigation are not admissible against, nor binding on, his client unless made for the express purpose of dispensing with formal proof of a fact at the trial. A priori, admissions or statements made after the litigation has terminated and relating to a distinctly different subject matter are in no manner chargeable to said former client.

Dugan v Midwest Co., 213-751; 239 NW 697

Admissions by attorney—conditions. Admissions of fact by an attorney are admissible against his client when said admissions are relevant and material and within the actual or ostensible scope of the attorney's employment, and are not in effect an offer of compromise.

Suntken v Suntken, 223-347; 272 NW 132

Admission binding on client. A party is bound by the admission of his attorneys, made in a counterclaim to another action.

Mitchell v Automobile Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

Admissions of attorney—effect. The admission of an attorney, made during a trial, as to the agency of a party for his client, is not necessarily binding on the client in other and subsequent litigation of a similar nature.

Iowa Co. v Seaman, 203-310; 210 NW 937

Implied ratification of agent's acts. Acquiescence by the principal in a series of acts by the agent indicates authorization to perform similar acts in the future, and an affirm-

ance of an unauthorized transaction may be inferred from a failure to repudiate it.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Attorney signing notice and accepting service thereof. An attorney who signs a notice of appeal on behalf of an appealing defendant, for whom he appeared in the trial court, may validly accept service of said notice on behalf of a nonappealing co-defendant for whom said attorney also appeared in the trial court.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 220-685; 263 NW 1

Authority of attorney to employ attorney. Record held to be wholly insufficient to present a jury question on the issue whether an attorney for defendant had apparent authority to employ another attorney on behalf of defendant; also whether an alleged employment was ratified.

Orwig v Ry. Co., 217-521; 250 NW 148; 90 ALR 258

Correcting instrument after employment terminates—invalidity. Attorneys hired to draft a mortgage, altho discovering that they have made a mistake in the description of the land, have no authority on their own initiative after termination of their employment and without consulting the mortgagee, to change the description and re-record the mortgage in the recorder's office.

Winker v Tiefenthaler, 225-180; 279 NW 436

Costs — persons acting officially. Costs should not be taxed against a county auditor in a matter in which he acts officially, in good faith, and on the advice of counsel.

Northwestern Bank v Van Roekel, 202-237; 207 NW 345

Death of party. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Forfeiture—notice—sufficient signing. Notices of forfeiture of a real estate contract are all-sufficient when signed in the name of the vendor by his duly authorized attorney.

Cassady v Mott, 203-17; 212 NW 332

Indorsement of check. The plea that a loss resulting from the nonpayment of a check must be borne by the payee because of delay by the attorney who received it to present it for payment must fail when there is no showing that the attorney had authority to make the indorsement.

Prudential v Hart, 205-801; 218 NW 529

Indorsement by payee's attorney—authority. In action to recover against bank which had cashed checks indorsed by payee's attorney, the authority to make such indorsements is, under §9479, C., '39, determinable from the rules applicable in cases of agency generally.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Attorney's authority to indorse check. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks upon indorsement by payee's attorney, the burden of proof is upon defendant-bank to establish apparent, ostensible, or implied authority in the attorney to indorse the checks as the basis for estoppel against payee to assert lack of authority on part of attorney.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Attorney indorsing client's checks. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed without actual authority by payee's local attorney who, over a period of years, had collected rents for the payee, evidence of transactions to show custom of attorney in indorsing payee's checks and in remitting by his personal checks was admissible, even tho bank did not have knowledge of all of the transactions, and it warranted finding that payee had knowledge of and acquiesced in such custom and was bound thereby.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Instructing on basis of counsel's admissions. The court is not in error in peremptorily instructing in an action of replevin that plaintiff is entitled to the immediate possession of all property claimed by him (except specifically enumerated articles) when said instruction is in strict accord with the explicit admission in court of defendant's counsel, tho no such admission appears in defendant's answer.

Luther v Investment Co., 222-305; 268 NW 589

Mandatory duty of court to vacate judgment. A judgment must be set aside on proper and timely application when an agreement or understanding existed between the respective counsel such that one of the counsel was justified in assuming, and in good faith did assume, that the cause would not be assigned for trial without notice to him, and when the judgment was the result of a violation of said agreement or understanding.

First N. Bk. v Bank, 210-521; 231 NW 453; 69 ALR 1329

Nonright of attorney to bind estate. An executor is not estopped to enforce a liability against a surety on the bond of a former executor by reason of the fact that his attorney has represented to such surety that the estate intends to enforce said liability solely against the estate of another surety, even tho said surety acted on such representation and did not file any contingent claim against the estate of the other surety.

In re Carpenter, 210-553; 231 NW 376

Estoppel to deny agent's authority. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed by payee's attorney without actual authority, where bank defended on ground that payee was estopped from asserting lack of authority, held, strict rules relating to equitable estoppel based upon false misrepresentation or concealment were not applicable in determining such defense.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Notice of additional testimony — acceptance of service by attorney valid. Service of notice, and copy thereof, of the intention of the state, on the trial of an indictment, to offer stated testimony additional to that receivable under the indictment as returned, may be validly accepted in writing for and on behalf of the defendant, by the defendant's acting attorney of record.

State v Froah, 220-840; 263 NW 525

Opinion by attorney—effect. The written opinion of an attorney as to the law governing a certain matter is not admissible against the client to whom the opinion is addressed.

In re Dodge, 207-374; 223 NW 106

Oral stipulations — conflicting affidavits — effect. A war of conflicting affidavits between counsel as to what oral understanding was had relative to the filing of abstracts will not necessarily be determined by the supreme court. Moral: Oral stipulations and agreements should be reduced to writing and duly signed.

Reppert v Reppert, 214-17; 241 NW 487

Payment of claims — death of claimant's attorney — peculiar circumstances relieving barred claim. Where an attorney files a probate claim for a nonresident claimant, but dies one day before the expiration of the year and without serving a notice of hearing on such claim—claimant, not learning of his attorney's death until later, and tho then delaying several months while his new attorney negotiated with the estate, held to have shown peculiar circumstances entitling him to equitable relief considering the estate was still unsettled and solvent.

Hagen v Nielsen, 225-127; 279 NW 94; 281 NW 356

"Practice of court" includes practices of attorneys. Expression "practice of this court" fairly includes more than acts of presiding judge and means practices characteristic of the proceedings when attorneys appear for litigants therein, including practice of attorneys of informing opposing counsel of intention to take default, and evidence of such practice of attorneys was admissible under a petition to set aside a default judgment, altho petition alleged practice of this court.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

Proof of authority — necessity in general. Aside from the statutory powers and authority of an attorney, a client is not bound by the contract of his attorney in his behalf unless the authority of the attorney so to bind the client is made to appear.

Albright v Albright, 209-409; 227 NW 913

Pleading agent's apparent authority—sufficiency. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed without actual authority by payee's local attorney, bank's answer alleging (1) payee's knowledge and acquiescence in the attorney's custom of indorsing payee's checks and remitting proceeds to it by his personal checks, (2) the bank's reliance thereon, and (3) that payee was estopped from asserting lack of authority held sufficient to raise question of attorney's implied, apparent, or ostensible authority.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Reservation of grounds—belated attack on stipulation. The contention that a stipulation in the trial court as to the testimony of a party was collusive and fraudulent may not be presented for the first time on appeal.

Bolte v Schenk, 205-834; 210 NW 797

Redemption — 90-day notice — defective return of service. An affidavit of service of the 90-day notice to redeem from tax sale is insufficient when served by a sheriff at the instance of the certificate holder's attorney, thereby failing to show that the person who made the service was the certificate holder's agent or attorney and, consequently, the period of redemption was not terminated.

Weidman v Pocahontas, 225-141; 279 NW 146

II EXECUTION OF BONDS AND OTHER PAPERS

Affidavit for cost bond—valid execution by attorney for corporation. The statutory affidavit supporting a motion for cost bond may be made and filed by a defendant corporation's attorney, and a corporation need not personally make and file such affidavit.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

Bonds — presumption of validity. A bond executed in the name of a plaintiff in attachment, by the attorney appearing for such plaintiff, is presumptively valid.

Carson, etc., v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

II EXECUTION OF BONDS AND OTHER PAPERS—concluded

Cost bond affidavit by attorney. A corporation defendant's attorney making statutory affidavit in support of a motion for cost bond will be presumed to have had sufficient knowledge of facts to enable him to make such affidavit and such knowledge need not be alleged.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

III AGREEMENTS GENERALLY

Cost bond application before answer is timely. Court erred in overruling a motion for cost bond and holding that defendant's application therefor was not filed in time, because filed after time for defendant's appearance when evidence showed that the plaintiff's attorney, through correspondence, gave defendant's attorney more time, and where it was filed long prior to filing of any answer in cause, there being no order of court therein requiring such motion for cost bond to be filed within certain time.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

Corporation judgment compromised—former stockholder—no authority. Stockholders who had sold their stock after the corporation had recovered a judgment no longer had an interest in the judgment which remained the property of the corporation even when its name was changed, so a compromise settlement of the judgment had no validity when made by attorneys with consent given by one former stockholder, as only the corporation could authorize such settlement.

Glenwood Lbr. Co. v Hammers, 226-788; 285 NW 277

Court acting on own motion contrary to agreement of counsel. Consolidated actions, dismissed by the court on its own motion in the absence of counsel, for want of prosecution, are properly reinstated on a showing of "unavoidable casualty and misfortune" in that there was no negligence on the part of plaintiffs or their counsel and that they were relying on an agreement between counsel that certain motions would not be made nor issues made up until convenient to all counsel.

Thoreson v Central States Elec. Co., 225-1406; 283 NW 253

In re evidence and objections thereto. Litigants may validly agree of record (at least with the consent of the court) that, in the taking of testimony, objections thereto need not be made at the time of offer, but that such testimony shall be deemed objected to on "all grounds known to the law".

Lindburg v Engster, 220-1073; 264 NW 31; 116 ALR 591

Oral nonrecord agreements. Oral agreements between litigants or their attorneys when not brought to the attention of the court are entitled to little favor on hearings to set aside default judgments.

Standard v Marvill, 201-614; 206 NW 37

Stipulations—appearance date agreed on—waiver of notice. Where the parties in a proceeding to vacate an order of court approving the final report of a bank receiver stipulate that the court may set a date for appearance later than the second day of the term, and that the bank examiner will file an appearance or pleading on or before that date, and that no other or further notice to him shall be necessary, the examiner may not assert the departure from the statutory requirements as to the appearance date as a ground for challenging the jurisdiction of the court by a special appearance.

Bates v Loan & Trust Co., 227-1347; 291 NW 184

Stipulations—indefiniteness as to time—effect accorded. An oral agreement or understanding between opposing counsel that one of them should have time, additional to that specified by statute, in which to file exceptions to the report of a referee, tho the extent of such additional time is quite indefinite, will be construed and recognized by the court in the spirit and to the extent reasonably contemplated by the parties.

Holdorf v Miller, 220-1380; 264 NW 602

Waiver of jury by agreement of attorneys—validity. A written agreement or stipulation, duly signed and filed by opposing attorneys in a law action and approved of record by the court, agreeing to waive a jury and to try the action to the court is, in the absence of fraud or proof that an attorney had no authority so to agree, binding on the parties to the action for at least one trial to the court, even tho, after the stipulation was entered into, the pleadings be amended and the cause be continued to a later term.

IV AUTHORIZED AGREEMENTS

Consent decree. While counsel cannot exceed their authority in making contract or settlement affecting their clients' rights, an attorney having full charge of client's action for mandatory injunction is authorized to consent to decree substantially complying with supreme court order.

Vaughan v Dist. Court, (NOR); 226 NW 49

V UNAUTHORIZED AGREEMENTS

Corporation judgment compromised. Stockholders who had sold their stock after the corporation had recovered a judgment no longer had an interest in the judgment which remained the property of the corporation even when its name was changed, so a compromise settlement of the judgment had no validity when made by attorneys with consent given by one former stockholder, as only the corporation could authorize such settlement.

Glenwood Lbr. Co. v Hammers, 226-788; 285 NW 277

Employment by apparent agent. An attorney who claims to have been employed, by an alleged apparent agent, to defend an action, may not, after the action is dismissed and immediately recommenced, continue to rely on the alleged contract with the apparent agent when he then knows that said agent never had any authority to employ.

Involuntary dismissal—justifiable setting aside. The court is, manifestly, within its discretion in setting aside the dismissal of an action when the dismissal was entered by the plaintiff's counsel at a time when he had been discharged.

Pilcher Co. v Clark, 218-150; 253 NW 907

Unauthorized investment—advice of counsel—effect. An illegal and unauthorized investment by a trustee will not, on an accounting, be treated as legal and authorized on a showing that the investment was made on the advice of an attorney.

In re Skinner, 215-1021; 247 NW 484

VI EVIDENCE OF AGREEMENT

Offer to pay attorney fees not accepted. When an attorney, who had received a retainer fee of $100 to represent the insured in a criminal case arising from an automobile accident, received a letter from the attorney for the insurer requesting him to tell the insured that the insurer was willing to take care of attorney fees, such letter was admissible to show an offer to pay such fees, but was insufficient to show that such offer was authorized by the insurer, and his reply that he would look to the company for payment of only those fees exceeding $100, did not amount to an acceptance of the offer.

VII RIGHT TO RECEIVE MONEY

Compromise of judgment by attorney. A statute authorizing an attorney to receive money claimed by his client in an action, and upon payment thereof, to acknowledge satisfaction of the judgment, means not payment in part, but payment in full, as the general rule is that an attorney who has recovered a judgment for his client has authority to receive payment, but cannot accept in satisfaction of the claim a sum less than is actually due.

Attorney indorsing client's checks. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed without actual authority by payee's local attorney who, over a period of years, had collected rents for the payee, evidence of transactions to show custom of attorney in indorsing payee's checks and in remitting by his personal checks was admissible, even the bank did not have knowledge of all the transactions, and it warranted finding that payee had knowledge of and acquiesced in such custom and was bound thereby.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Nonpresumption as to authority. It will not be presumed that an attorney for a plaintiff in partition has authority, after the death of said plaintiff, to receive on behalf of the resulting estate the share which said plaintiff would have received had he lived, it appearing that said plaintiff's administrator was not substituted in the partition action.

Albright v. Moeckley, 209-1304; 230 NW 351

10923 Proof of authority.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II EMPLOYMENT OF ATTORNEY
- III PROOF OF AUTHORITY

I IN GENERAL

Agency not asserted—no estoppel to deny. In an action to recover a retainer fee given an attorney for defending a criminal case, the attorney was not estopped from denying that he was the agent for an insurance company, when he had made no claim of being such agent and had told the client that the company was not interested in the case and would not pay the attorney fee.

Gipp v Lynch, 226-1020; 285 NW 659

Presumption. An attorney who appears for a party to an action will be presumed to have been authorized so to appear—until the opposing party shows the want of such authority.

Bleakley v Long, 222-76; 268 NW 152

Retainer and authority. Aside from the statutory powers and authority of an attorney, a client is not bound by the contract of his attorney in his behalf unless the authority of the attorney so to bind the client is made to appear.

In re Lipp, 209-409; 227 NW 913

II EMPLOYMENT OF ATTORNEY

Compensation—contract of employment not presumptively fraudulent. The rule that contracts entered into between attorney and client subsequent to the creation of such relation are presumptively fraudulent has no application to the contract by which the relation of attorney and client is created.

II EMPLOYMENT OF ATTORNEY—concluded

Coughlon v Pedelty, 211-138; 233 NW 63

Defending dry trust. A trustee may not employ attorneys at the expense of the estate to defend a trust which has become legally dry.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

Employment by apparent agent. An attorney who claims to have been employed, by an alleged apparent agent, to defend an action, may not, after the action is dismissed and immediately recommenced, continue to rely on the alleged contract with the apparent agent when he then knows that said agent never had any authority to employ.

Orwig v Railway, 217-521; 250 NW 148; 90 ALR 258

Ratification. Record held to be wholly insufficient to present a jury question on the issue whether an attorney for defendant had apparent authority to employ another attorney on behalf of defendant; also whether an alleged employment was ratified.

Orwig v Railway, 217-521; 250 NW 148; 90 ALR 258

Refusal to establish drains—appeal. The board of supervisors, after refusing to establish a proposed drainage improvement because such establishment would not be conducive to public benefit, utility, health, convenience, and welfare, has no power to employ attorneys and an engineer to defend, on appeal, the action of the board. Such employment being a nullity, the resulting expense may not be taxed to the petitioners.

Christensen v Agan, 209-1315; 230 NW 800

School district property, contracts, and liabilities. An informal employment of attorneys by the directors of a school district in a matter as to which the district had a right to employ attorneys is fully ratified by the good-faith formal action of the board, with full knowledge of the facts, in allowing the claim of the attorneys.

Beers v Lasher, 209-1158; 229 NW 821

III PROOF OF AUTHORITY

Presumption attending appearance. The law presumes that an attorney who appears for a party to an action had authority from the party so to do. Evidence held insufficient to overcome the presumption.

Sloan v Jepson, 217-1082; 252 NW 535

10924 Attorney's lien—notice.

ANALYSIS

- I NATURE, EXTENT, AND SUBJECT MATTER
- II NOTICE OF LIEN
- III PRIORITY OF LIEN

IV DEFEATING LIEN

V ENFORCEMENT OF LIEN

I NATURE, EXTENT, AND SUBJECT MATTER

Attorney fees—ordering clerk to satisfy. When at the time of agreeing to a property settlement, plaintiff in divorce proceeding also orally agreed to pay her attorney a fee of $250 for his services, the court should order the clerk to satisfy said fee from the money paid into his hands in satisfaction of said property settlement and on which money the attorney had perfected a lien,—it appearing that said fee was reasonable in amount and the agreement therefor untainted with any illegality.

Mickelson v Mickelson, 222-942; 270 NW 365

Attorney's lien as assignment—effect. The duly perfected lien of an attorney with reference to the judgment obtained by him for his client, is tantamount to an assignment of an interest in the judgment. It follows that the attorney has such interest in the judgment as to support an intervention by him in an action by the judgment plaintiff to set aside certain conveyances as fraudulent.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 217-636; 251 NW 51

Burden of proof. An attorney who seeks to establish a lien for his fees on money in the hands of the adverse party has the burden to show that the adverse party, after the service of notice of such lien, had money in his possession belonging to the attorney's client.

Hemingway v Bank, 206-1308; 221 NW 920

Decree in divorce for attorney fees—non-adjudication as to attorney. A decree in divorce proceedings awarding plaintiff (in addition to a divorce) a specified sum as attorney fees is not an adjudication as to the amount owing by plaintiff to her attorney for services rendered in the action,—the attorney, of course, not being a party to the action.

Duke v Park, 220-889; 262 NW 799

Jones v Park, 220-894; 262 NW 797; 264 NW 700

Compensation—elements to be considered. In fixing the compensation for attorneys on a quantum meruit basis, due consideration must be given (1) to the amount involved, (2) to the nature of the litigation in question, (3) to the time occupied, (4) to the results accomplished, and (5) to the standing of the attorney.

Kelley v Bank, 217-725; 248 NW 9; 250 NW 171

Error against noncomplainant. A defendant in an action by an attorney for professional services may not complain that the jury was instructed that no consideration should be given to the fact, if it was a fact, that the plaintiff possessed extraordinary skill and experience as a lawyer.

Klass v Ins. Co., 210-78; 230 NW 314

Nonallowable attorney fees. An attorney who, under employment by a debtor whose property is under receivership, successfully defends an attempt to throw the debtor into bankruptcy, may not have his attorney fees paid from the receivership funds, when the receiver and his attorney, under order of court, also appeared and successfully contested said bankruptcy proceeding.

Cook v McHenry, 208-442; 223 NW 377

Offers—when implied acceptance not recognized. Proof that a party made an offer to pay a stated sum for services to be performed and that the offeree thereafter proceeded to perform the services, creates a presumption that the offeree accepted all the terms of the offer; not so, however, when such offer is made after a large part of the services has been rendered on the basis of a quantum meruit, and the offeree continues to perform the remaining services. In the latter instance, the quantum meruit contract will be deemed to continue unless an acceptance of the offer is actually proven.

Kelley v Bank, 217-725; 248 NW 9; 250 NW 171

Statutory liens—discharge. An attorney's lien which is adjudicated by a foreclosure decree unappealed from, to have become a lien on defendant's land as of a date several years prior to the filing by defendant of a petition in bankruptcy (to which the attorney was not a party) is not discharged by §67f of the bankruptcy act [11 USC, §107f], even tho the foreclosure decree was entered within the four-months period immediately preceding the filing of said petition in bankruptcy.

Sweatt v Acres, 209-1288; 228 NW 74

Unauthorized order for lien. An order establishing the heirship of persons to an estate and, without notice, decreeing a lien in favor of the attorney on the cash shares of certain heirs for whom the attorney has never appeared, is a nullity insofar as the order establishing the lien and the amount thereof is concerned.

In re Lear, 204-346; 213 NW 240

Witness—inexperience of attorney. The fact that a lawyer never drew a particular legal instrument does not disqualify him from testifying as to the reasonable value of the services of an attorney in drawing such instrument.

Klass v Ins. Co., 210-78; 230 NW 314

II NOTICE OF LIEN

Fatally delayed notice. An attorney loses his lien for attorney fees when he delays serving an adverse party with notice of his lien until after the adverse party has in good faith settled and discharged in full his indebtedness to the attorney's client.

Hemingway v Bank, 206-1308; 221 NW 920

III PRIORITY OF LIEN

Set-off of judgments—effect on lien. The offsetting of the larger against the smaller of two mutual judgments wholly terminates an unadjudicated attorney's lien duly noticed in the judgment docket of the smaller judgment, when the indebtedness represented by the larger judgment antedates the indebtedness represented by the smaller judgment.

McIntosh v McIntosh, 211-750; 234 NW 234

Belated cost modification—review by certiorari. Where an action was instituted to set aside conveyances and to subject land to a judgment, and an attorney having a lien on such judgment intervenes, establishes and gets an adjudication of priority in the decree, which made no provision for payment of costs but later was invalidly modified under guise of a motion to retax costs, the trial court being without jurisdiction to modify the decree (1) after an appeal therefrom had been perfected and (2) because the modification was not made during the term the decree was entered, certiorari will lie to correct the lower court's excess of jurisdiction, and fact that plaintiff is a banking corporation no longer in existence will not defeat the certiorari, since corporation must be regarded as existing to the degree necessary to wind up its affairs.

Grimes Sav. Bank v Jordan, 224-28; 276 NW 71

IV DEFEATING LIEN

Lien—burden of proof. An attorney who seeks to establish a lien for his fees on money in the hands of the adverse party has the burden to show that the adverse party, after the service of notice of such lien, had money in his possession belonging to the attorney's client.

Hemingway v Bank, 206-1308; 221 NW 920

Lien—fatally delayed notice. An attorney loses his lien for attorney fees when he delays serving an adverse party with notice of his lien until after the adverse party has in good faith settled and discharged in full his indebtedness to the attorney's client.

Hemingway v Bank, 206-1308; 221 NW 920

Lien—unauthorized order. An order establishing the heirship of persons to an estate and, without notice, decreeing a lien in favor of the attorney on the cash shares of certain heirs for whom the attorney has never appeared, is a nullity, insofar as the order establishing the lien and the amount thereof is concerned.

Sweatt v Acres, 209-1288; 228 NW 74

Receivers—claims—unallowable attorney fees. An attorney who, under employment by a debtor whose property is under receivership, successfully defends an attempt to throw the debtor into bankruptcy, may not have his attorney fees paid from the receivership funds when the receiver and his attorney, under order of court, also appeared and successfully contested said bankruptcy proceeding.

Cook v McHenry, 208-442; 223 NW 377

V ENFORCEMENT OF LIEN

Lien as interest in judgment—basis for intervention. An attorney's lien, when perfected, creates an interest in a judgment and is a sustaining basis for an intervention by the attorney in a separate equity action to subject land to the payment of the judgment.

10925 Release of lien by bond.

Transaction with deceased partner. In an action by the surviving members of a firm of attorneys to recover attorney fees on the basis of a quantum meruit, the surety on the bond to release the lien for said fees is incompetent to testify that; after a large part of the services had been rendered, he had an oral agreement with the deceased partner to the effect that the firm would accept a certain definite sum for all services performed and to be performed.

10929 Revocation of license.

Discussion. See 8 ILB 65—Character qualifications—disbarment

Right to practice mere privilege. The right to practice law is not a constitutional right—not a vested right—but a mere privilege.

10930 Grounds of revocation.

Conviction of felony—judicial notice of reversal. On an appeal from an order disbarring an attorney on the ground that he has been convicted of a felony, the appellate court will take judicial notice that said conviction has been reversed by said court subsequent to the entry of the order of disbarment.

State v Metcalfe, 204-123; 214 NW 874

Abandoned conviction. A conviction of an attorney in police court for keeping a disorderly house followed by an appeal which has remained dormant for six years must be deemed abandoned as a ground for disbarment of the attorney.

State v Metcalfe, 204-123; 214 NW 874

Disbarment—evidence—sufficiency. Record reviewed and held ample to justify a judgment of disbarment of an attorney.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Disbarment—modification of judgment on appeal. A judgment of disbarment of an attorney may, in view of the immature age and inexperience of the accused, and the unappealing nature of the charges preferred and established against him, be modified on appeal by providing that the accused may, after a stated time, apply for reinstatement.

In re DeCaro, 220-176; 262 NW 132

Disbarment—settlement with client—effect. The fact that an attorney has settled with his client and fully accounted for all funds of the client does not preclude an examination of his conduct and his disbarment on proper proof of misconduct.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Grounds—false certificate as to bond.

In re Hunt, 201-181; 205 NW 321

Intoxicating liquor nuisance. Proof that an attorney has been enjoined from trafficking in intoxicating liquors, but that his participation in such trafficking was purely passive, does not furnish grounds for disbarment.

State v Metcalfe, 204-123; 214 NW 874

Quarreling, fighting and breaches of the peace. The fact that an attorney has been personally embroiled in quarrels with others and has inflicted grievous wounds upon them, does not furnish grounds for disbarment unless such transactions establish a lack of that professional integrity, honesty, and fidelity which are required in an attorney.

State v Metcalfe, 204-123; 214 NW 874

Solicitation of business. The solicitation of business by attorneys and the working up of legal controversies are unprofessional, and violate all the ethics of the profession.

State v Kaufmann, 202-157; 209 NW 417

10931 Proceedings.

Discussion. See 23 ILR 83—Liability of bar association—libel

Jurisdiction—how acquired.

In re Hunt, 201-181; 205 NW 321

Disbarment—jurisdictional order. The order of court, finding that formal charges against an attorney are sufficient to justify disbarment proceedings, and ordering copy thereof served on him and for his appearance, is jurisdictional, but not the preliminary order for the investigation into the conduct of the attorney.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Disbarment—preliminary order. An order signed by all the judges of a district court directing the making of an investigation of the conduct of an attorney, and directing the conditional filing of disbarment proceedings, becomes an order of the district court when filed by the presiding judge in the proper county with the clerk of said court. And this is true tho said order was prepared and signed outside said county.

10934.4 Trial court.

Special court—constitutionality. The act of the supreme court in appointing three district court judges as a special court to hear and determine disbarment proceedings against an attorney is necessarily a holding that the statute providing for such appointment is constitutional.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Special court. The legislature has ample constitutional power to create a special court to hear and determine disbarment proceedings against an attorney and the fact that said special court is composed of three district court judges appointed by the supreme court does not constitute an attempt by the legislature to create a district court of three judges in violation of Art. V, §5, of the constitution.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

10934.7 Record and judgment.

Majority decree. The findings and judgment of the special court for the trial and determination of disbarment proceedings, concurred in by a majority of the members of said court, are the findings and judgment of a court of record, because the requirement that such findings and judgment of said court shall constitute a part of the records of the district court ipso facto constitutes said special court a court of record.

10934.8 Pleadings—evidence—preservation.

Disbarment—evidence required. Evidence sufficient to disbar an attorney must clearly, satisfactorily and convincingly establish the wrongdoing charged.

In re DeCaro, 220-176; 262 NW 132

10936 Appeal.

Appeal heard de novo. An appeal by the accused in disbarment proceedings is triable de novo.

In re DeCaro, 220-176; 262 NW 132

De novo procedure. An appeal in disbarment proceedings against an attorney is, on a proper record, triable de novo, even tho tried by the special court as an action at law.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Modification of judgment on appeal. A judgment of disbarment of an attorney may, in view of the immature age and inexperience of the accused, and the unappealing nature of the charges preferred and established against him, be modified on appeal by providing that the accused may, after a stated time, apply for reinstatement.

Permissible record. On appeal from an order of disbarment, the state has the right to present the entire record, even tho it embraces testimony relative to charges on which the accused was acquitted.

Election between securities. The holder of both a chattel and a real estate mortgage securing the same debt has the right to elect to proceed to the foreclosure of his mortgages and to abandon all interest in a block of trust bonds secured by trust deed on other real estate and held by him as collateral security for said debt, and in such case the foreclosure by the trustee of the trust deed and the buying in of the trust property by the trustee in the interest of the bondholders will not be deemed a payment to any extent of the chattel and real estate mortgage-secured debt.

Silver v Wickfield Farms, 209-856; 227 NW 97

Allowable legal and equitable actions at same time. Where each of a series of matured, mortgage-secured, promissory notes of the same maker possesses the same grade of lien, and is, by a trust agreement executed by the various noteholders, placed in the hands of a trustee with power to institute such actions as he may deem fit in order to effect collection, the trustee may maintain and carry on at the same time an action at law on a portion of said notes, and an action in equity to foreclose the mortgage for the remainder of the notes.

Farmers & M. Bk. v Anderson, 216-988; 250 NW 214

Duplicate actions on same subject matter—priority. When two actions involving the same subject matter are commenced by different parties (e.g., partition of land), the action in which completed service is first made on all necessary parties must be deemed first commenced even tho the other action was first formally filed with the clerk, unless said first action was commenced by an unauthorized plaintiff.

I ACTIONS IN GENERAL

Splitting causes—pleading. See under §11111 (II)

Special action defined. A proceeding for the forfeiture of a conveyance because of its use in the unlawful transportation of liquors is a special action, and not triable de novo on appeal.

State v Coupe, 205-597; 218 NW 346

Action at law as nonwaiver of lien. The obtaining of a judgment at law on an account and the sale of property seized on an attachment, do not constitute a waiver of a mechanic's lien for the same account to the extent that the judgment remains unpaid.

Southern Sur. v Serv. Co., 209-104; 227 NW 606

Condemnation of automobile—non de novo hearing. A proceeding for the condemnation of an automobile because employed in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors will not be tried de novo on appeal. Whether the statutory presumption of knowledge of such use, by the claimant, has been negated rests with the trial court.

State v Chrysler Coupe, 215-1308; 245 NW 243; 247 NW 639

Cumulative and exclusive remedy. A contract provision to the effect that, if damages accrue to one party, he may apply to the payment thereof any money in his hands belonging to the other party, is permissive only, and additional to the usual remedy by action in court.

Clear Lake Co-op. v Weir, 200-1293; 206 NW 297

Enjoining action in foreign state. A defendant who is a resident of this state may, even after he has filed formal answer, enjoin a plaintiff who is a resident of this state from maintaining in a foreign state an action on a contract arising in this state, when said action is sought to be maintained for the purpose of vexatiously harassing the defendant and subjecting him to unnecessary costs, part of which are untaxable as costs.

Bankers Life v Loring, 217-534; 250 NW 8

Illegal transaction. Principle reaffirmed that in an action on a fraudulent contract, as to which both parties are in pari delicto, the court will refuse relief to either party.

Schmidt v Twedt, 219-128; 257 NW 325

Lex fori procedure—exclusiveness. While, as a matter of comity, the courts of this state will, under proper pleading, recognize and enforce the civil rights and liabilities of parties to a tort committed in a foreign state—if not contrary to the public policy of this state—yet in determining all issues of fact on which such rights and liabilities depend, the judicial procedure of the courts of this state must be followed.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617

Nature and form—submission with and without action. The filing of a petition and answer, without service of an original notice, and the submission of the matter to the court on an agreed statement of facts which stipulated for judgment for plaintiff in case the court found that a recovery should be allowed, followed by a motion by defendant for a verdict in his favor, show the institution and prosecution of an ordinary action, and not the submission of a controversy to the court without action, as provided by Ch 547, C., '24.

Robinson v Bruce Co., 205-261; 215 NW 724; 61 ALR 851

Splitting—insufficient showing. A mortgagee who, in foreclosure, continues until after decree and sale his application for the appointment of a receiver for the pledged rents does not thereby "split" his cause of action.

Equitable v Rood, 205-1273; 218 NW 42

Treating sight draft as paid and later denying payment. The drawer of a sight draft who sends it to a bank for collection, and knows that said bank has assumed to collect it, and has forwarded its own bank draft in payment of the collection, and who, after payment of the bank draft is refused because of the insolvency of the collecting bank, lays claim to said bank draft and establishes his claim thereon against the receiver, may not thereafter proceed against the receiver and the original drawee in the sight draft and obtain judgment against them on the pleaded theory that said drawee in the sight draft never in fact paid it—paid it by an overdraft on the collecting bank, and that the defendants must account to plaintiff for said overdraft.

Enterline v Andrew, 211-176; 231 NW 416

Writs of prohibition. The supreme court has original jurisdiction, under the constitution, to issue common-law writs of prohibition; but, when the application is for a writ directed to a district court and commanding it to discontinue further jurisdiction over named actions pending in said lower court, the supreme court must act solely on the established facts as revealed in the proceedings in said district court, and, if material disputed issues of fact arise, the writ will be refused, as the supreme court has no power to take testimony on disputed questions of fact dehors said district court records.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

Inquisitions—appeal—special proceeding. An appeal to the district court from the finding of the county insanity commission is a special proceeding, and, since the legislature did not provide for a jury trial, the issue is triable to the court.

In re Brewer, 224-773; 276 NW 766

II ELECTION OF REMEDIES

Splitting causes. See under §§11111 (II), 11567 (VII)

Election of remedy. It cannot be said that a party conclusively elected his remedy by proceeding under a statute under which he was adjudged to have no right.

Hansen v Bank, 209-1352; 230 NW 415

Election of remedy. A mortgagor who, in foreclosure, pleads for judgment against his subsequent purchaser on the original contract of purchase, makes no such election of remedies as will prevent him from subsequently praying for such reformation of the deed to such purchaser as to show that the purchaser had assumed the mortgage debt.

American Bk. v Borcharding, 205-633; 216 NW 719

Election of remedies. A purchaser of land who rescinds, and obtains against the vendor judgment at law for the amount advanced as purchase price and for other proper expenditures, does not thereby waive his right to bring an action in equity to have the judgment declared a lien on the land.

Larson v Metcalf, 201-1208; 207 NW 382; 45 ALR 344

II ELECTION OF REMEDIES—continued

Election of remedies. The fact that a city institutes an action against its treasurer to recover its public funds is not an election of remedies such as will preclude the city from maintaining an action against a county treasurer to recover its funds illegally paid to the city treasurer.

State v Hanson, 210-773; 231 NW 428

Election of remedies—when doctrine applicable. The doctrine of election of remedies applies only when a party is attempting to pursue inconsistent remedies.

Andrew v Bank, 218-1313; 256 NW 292

When doctrine not applicable. The doctrine of election of remedies is applicable only to inconsistent remedies, but in a probate proceeding, the filing of a claim against estate of husband for the support of widow to whom husband bequeathed realty for life, with right of disposal of realty for her necessary support, held, not such an election of remedy as to bar proceeding in equity to establish the claim for support as a lien on realty.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Inconsistent remedies. An administrator who has credible information for the belief and does believe that a wrongdoer has elected bank certificates of deposit belonging to the deceased to be paid by the bank on forged indorsements, and who, in an action between said wrongdoer and himself involving the estate, cross-petitions for judgment for the amount of the proceeds of said certificates, and who successfully prosecutes said cross-petition to judgment against the wrongdoer, thereby makes an election of remedies which precludes said administrator from subsequently maintaining an action against the bank on said certificates.

Sackett v Bank, 209-487; 228 NW 51

Inconsistent remedies—creditor bound by election. A creditor who is faced by the dilemma (1) of foreclosing his mortgage and treating the mortgagor as the sole debtor, or (2) of proceeding against a third party on the theory that said third party actually received the money in question under circumstances giving rise to an implied promise to return said money, and who chooses the former procedure, is irrevocably bound by his election. In other words, after taking personal judgment against the mortgagor and foreclosing against and selling the land with unfavorable results, he will not be permitted to proceed against said third party on the remaining, inconsistent theory.

Inconsistent remedies—holder of draft. One who receives a check from his debtor and, on presenting it, receives in payment from the drawee bank a draft which is dishonored because of the insolvency of the bank, and who thereupon seeks to be decreed the status of a preferential trust holder to the amount of the draft, but is decreed the status of a general creditor only, may not later reshape and refile his claim and be decreed subrogated to the rights of the depositor who originally drew the check; and especially is this true when the latter remedy was alternatively sought in the prior litigation.

Becker v Leach, 208-1347; 227 NW 344

Inconsistent remedies—irrevocable election—effect. A judgment creditor who, instead of satisfying his judgment (1) by enforcing his lien on personal property which his judgment debtor had assigned to him as security, satisfies said judgment, (2) by buying in the same property under a general execution levy and sale under his said judgment, must be deemed to have irrevocably waived all right under his said assignment as security, it appearing that after said levy but before the sale thereunder, the said judgment creditor learned that the judgment defendant had also assigned said property to another party.

Zimmerman v Horner, 223-149; 272 NW 148

Noninconsistent remedies. The commencement of an action of replevin to recover the possession of promissory notes does not constitute the election of a remedy which will preclude the subsequent filing of a substituted petition presenting the controversy in the form of an action in equity.

Pickford v Smith, 215-1080; 247 NW 256

Noninconsistent action. Where a bank credits its correspondent bank with the amount of a check forwarded by the correspondent, and, in reliance on said credit, pays the drafts drawn on it by the correspondent, the act of said crediting bank in cancelling the said credit on learning of the insolvency of said correspondent, and in returning said check to the receiver as a claim against the correspondent, is not such an election of remedies as will estop the crediting bank from later contending that it had, in due course of business, become the absolute owner of said check.

Bureau Service v Lewis, 220-662; 263 NW 7

Pursuing noninconsistent remedies. A policy holder who, in an action at law, pleads that the insurer has waived that provision of the policy which invalidates the insurance in case of a change in the title to the insured property, and is unsuccessful on appeal in sustaining said plea, does not thereby make such an election of remedies as will prevent him, after remand, from amending and praying in equity that the policy be so reformed as to eliminate the invalidating provision.

Green v Ins. Co., 218-1131; 253 NW 36

Action for contract possession works no rescission. The vendor in a conditional sale contract by instituting replevin for the possession of the article, as provided by the contract in case of the vendee's default, manifests a clear intent to stand on the contract, and not to rescind it. It follows that the refusal of the court to submit to the jury the issue of rescission and return of the purchase price is proper.

Schmoller Co. v Smith, 204-661; 215 NW 628

Action to enforce partner's liability—waiver. The liquidating receiver of a private bank, when appointed with power to bring action against the partners on their individual liability, may, with the approval of the court, and notwithstanding the objections of a creditor, settle and compromise the liability of a partner when the creditor has appeared in the receivership proceedings and secured the allowance of his claim.

Reason: The creditor, by submitting himself to the jurisdiction of the receivership court, irrevocably elects his remedy.

Ellis v Bank, 218-750; 251 NW 744

Amendment—no election of remedies. In an action to compel certain heirs to contribute a share of a judgment arising out of a decedent's ownership of bank stock, a petition that alleges defendants' liability as individuals is not an election of remedies so as to prevent an amendment thereto setting up liability against an estate as an additional party, since there was no change in the nature of relief asked and no choice was made between inconsistent remedies at the time of the election.

Daniel v Best, 224-1348; 279 NW 374

Changing amendment. A plaintiff who, in a timely brought action, pleads a rescission of a fraud-induced contract, and prays for judgment for the consideration paid, and who, after discovering his inability to prove the pleaded rescission, and after the statute of limitation has fully run against his cause of action, amends his pleadings by praying for damages consequent upon the fraud, does not thereby plead a new cause of action. He simply exercises his permissible right to change the remedy.

Reinertson v Struthers, 201-1186; 207 NW 247

Breach of patent license contract. When a patent licensee ceased to pay royalties due the licensor, the licensor was not limited to an action against the licensee as a patent infringer, but could elect to treat the contract as still in force and bring an action to collect royalties.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 285 NW 131

Conclusive election of remedy—nonapplicability of doctrine. A party who elects to pursue one of two or more concurrent, inconsistent remedies is absolutely bound thereby, but the purchaser of land who, subsequent to the purchase, pays the contract price by reconveying to the vendor is not thereby necessarily estopped to sue for false representation in the original sale.

Boysen v Petersen, 203-1073; 211 NW 894

Irrevocable abandonment of action. An intervenor who pleads a personal claim to specific attached property, but later joins with other intervenors in a joint demand for judgment for all the property seized on the attachment belonging to all the intervenors, and receives a part of the resulting judgment when it is paid, must be held to have irrevocably abandoned her formerly pleaded personal claim.

Peoples Bank v McCarthy, 211-40; 231 NW 482

Mistake in remedy. The filing of a claim against an estate will not estop the party from abandoning such claim and instituting an action for a partnership accounting with deceased when such latter proceeding was his sole allowable remedy.

Hull v Padgett, 207-430; 223 NW 154

Noninconsistent action. The bringing of an action against a party on his obligation is not such election of remedies as will bar an action on the same obligation, but against a third party who has agreed to pay it.

Mohler v Andrew, 206-297; 218 NW 71

Paving—suing city on express contract. Where a holder of invalid paving assessment certificates elects to base his recovery solely on an express written contract, no question of estoppel, waiver, ratification, or accord and satisfaction is involved.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

Rent—dual lien—election. A landlord seeking to enforce a dual lien for the rent, viz: a contract lien by virtue of the lease, and the statutory lien by virtue of the statute, need not elect on which lien he will proceed.

Mau v Rice Bros., 216-864; 249 NW 206

Statutory and contract lien for rent. A landlord who seeks to enforce his statutory lien for rent through an ordinary landlord's attachment makes no election of remedies such as will prevent him from amending his pleading and asking the foreclosure of a contractual lien embraced in the lease. Both remedies are coexistent and consistent.

Pickler v Lanphere, 209-910; 227 NW 526

III IN REM GENERALLY

Discussion. See 7 ILB 138—Actions in personam and actions in rem in Iowa; 25 ILR 329—General appearance—quasi in rem

Cancellation of mortgage as real action—venue change to land situs. Ultimate test of applicability of §11034, C., '35, is not whether

III IN REM GENERALLY—concluded proceeding is in personam or in rem but whether determination of a right in real estate is involved, and therefore an action for cancellation of mortgages involving a determination of a right in real estate, which is the subject of the action, must be brought in the county where the land is located, and granting change of venue thereto will be upheld on certiorari.

Whalen v Ring, 224-267; 276 NW 409

Primary jurisdiction in personam—decree affecting status of bank deposit. Primarily and fundamentally, courts of equity act only in personam, and it is only by statute that they have acquired jurisdiction to act directly in rem. The fact that a decree determines the rights of parties to a bank deposit from insurance proceeds, and indirectly affects the status thereof, does not make the proceeding one in rem.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

10940 Forms of action.

Abolition of forms. See under §11108

Foreclosure—agreed public sale. An agreement between chattel mortgagees and the chattel mortgagor that the mortgaged property shall be sold at public sale and the proceeds turned over to the mortgagees in the order of their liens, is valid and enforceable in equity. In other words equity, in order to enforce the agreement, will impress a trust on said proceeds in favor of said mortgagees, even tho the occasion so to do arises in a proceeding at law, to wit, a garnishment.

Jasper Co. Bank v Klauenberg, 218-578; 255 NW 884

Foreign remedial statute—nonapplicability. The remedial statutes of a foreign state, authorizing an action in said state against a corporation which has been dissolved at the instance of said state, do not and cannot control the procedure when the action is sought to be maintained in this state; and especially is this true when said authorized foreign procedure is contrary to the procedural law of this state.

Peoria Co. v Streator Co., 221-690; 266 NW 548

Insured's remedy—law (?) or equity (?)—law action on contract proper. An insured under an accident policy has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, to wit: action on the contract; and, unless the insurer makes unreasonable and bad-faith demands on insured, he is not entitled to relief in equity.

Eller v Guthrie, 226-467; 284 NW 412

Nature and form—statutory remedies not necessarily exclusive. A statutory remedy will not be construed as abrogating an existing common-law remedy unless the statute affirmatively indicates an intention to make the statutory remedy exclusive.

Jones v Knutson, 212-268; 234 NW 548

Nontransfer to equity on cross-petition merely re-stating answer. An action at law to recover bank deposits does not become a suit in equity because of defendant's cross-petition which only served to amplify and repeat the defense pleaded in the answer.

Younkin v Bank, 226-343; 284 NW 151

Paternity statutes—proceedings civil. The statutory proceeding to determine paternity and for support money is not a criminal proceeding but is tried as an ordinary action.

State v Devore, 225-815; 281 NW 740

Prayer not necessarily controlling. The prayer to a petition is not necessarily controlling on the question whether the action is at law or in equity.

Markworth v Bank, 212-954; 237 NW 471

Submission with and without action. The filing of a petition and answer, without service of an original notice, and the submission of the matter to the court on an agreed statement of facts which stipulated for judgment for plaintiff in case the court found that a recovery should be allowed, and followed by a motion by defendant for a verdict in his favor, show the institution and prosecution of an ordinary action, and not the submission of a controversy to the court without action, as provided by Ch 547, C., '24.

Robinson v Bruce Co., 205-261; 215 NW 724; 61 ALR 851

Taking gravel—injury to mortgage security—measure of damages. A mortgagee, being a lienholder, may not maintain trespass against third persons but must sue for injury to his security, and in taking gravel from mortgaged premises the measure of damages is not the value of the gravel taken but the difference in the value of the premises before and after the taking.

Bates v Humboldt County, 224-841; 277 NW 715

Wrong form of action. Supreme court cannot assume jurisdiction on appeal where the matter in issue is not such as was triable in the form of action brought in the trial court below.

I EQUITABLE ACTIONS—JURISDICTION

Discussion. See 19 ILR 406, 540—U.S. courts—consent receiverships

Exclusive equitable action. Equity has exclusive jurisdiction of a petition which, in effect, alleges that a husband and wife mutually pooled their efforts and respective personal properties in a joint undertaking under their joint management, and with title in the husband to the properties and to their future accumulations; that it was agreed that the properties should be so employed by the survivor of the two, and on the death of the latter, should be divided equally among the heirs of each; that both parties are now dead; that plaintiffs are the heirs of the wife,—with prayer for a money judgment and general relief, together with other allegations of an equitable nature.

McAnulty v Peisen, 208-625; 226 NW 144

Primary jurisdiction in personam. Primarily and fundamentally, courts of equity act only in personam, and it is only by statute that they have acquired jurisdiction to act directly in rem. The fact that a decree determines the rights of parties to a bank deposit from insurance proceeds, and indirectly affects the status thereof, does not make the proceeding one in rem.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Accounting—opening de novo—exceptions. In some cases of gross fraud, mistake or disadvantage, equity will open the whole accounting de novo, but if all items are not so affected, equity may (1) allow the account to stand except to the extent invalidated by the opposing party, who has the burden to prove errors, or (2) open the account to contest as to such items as are specified to be erroneous, otherwise conclusive.

Clark v Bank, 223-1176; 274 NW 919

Contract to purchase estate property—equity action. Bank receiver's specific performance action to require heirs to perform contract to purchase receiver's interest in estate property is not lacking in mutuality and is not transferable to law because involving both personal and real property, since equity once acquiring jurisdiction retains it for all purposes, and since cross-petition filed by heirs also asking specific performance, is sufficient reason to deny transfer to law.

Utterback v Stewart, 224-1135; 277 NW 735

Court's jurisdiction—legal issues. In action for a money judgment, foreclosure of a mortgage and appointment of a receiver, the equity court had jurisdiction of the controversy and parties. The action having been properly brought in equity, all issues, legal and equitable, are triable therein.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

Claims—lapsed time for hearing—reopening discretionary. Trial court administering receiverships has a discretion dependent upon equitable circumstances and not a mandatory duty to permit a claim to be presented and heard after the time fixed therefor.

Headford et al. Co. v Associated Co., 224-1364; 278 NW 624

Election of remedies. The doctrine of election of remedies is applicable only to inconsistent remedies, but in a probate proceeding, the filing of a claim against estate of husband for the support of widow to whom husband bequeathed realty for life, with right of disposal of realty for her necessary support, held, not such an election of remedy as to bar proceeding in equity to establish the claim for support as a lien on realty.

I EQUITABLE ACTIONS — JURISDICTION—continued

Enjoining unlicensed person practicing law. In an equity suit brought by members of bar for injunction to restrain an unlicensed person from professing to be an attorney and from practicing law, where irreparable damage was the gist of the action, this subject matter was within the jurisdiction of the district court.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

Mandamus. A mandamus proceeding, altho originally an action at law under Iowa practice, is now triable in equity and, in the determination of such action, the court must necessarily apply equitable principles.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

Selection of official county newspapers — speedy and adequate remedy — jurisdiction. Mandamus to compel county supervisors to select petitioner's newspaper as one of three official newspapers was a proper procedure where petitioner was one of three applicants and had no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, since there was no contest in the selection from which an appeal would lie under §5406, C., '39.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Probate court. Where a clear and unambiguous will is admitted to probate and administration is being had thereon in probate court, the jurisdiction of such court to determine any rights thereunder, and to administer and direct the disposition of the property involved, cannot be interfered with by a court of equity.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

Merger of estates—nonapplicability of doctrine. When a will devised all of testatrix's property to daughter in trust, directing trustee to make a monthly payment to a third party and to transfer a one-fourth interest in the trust estate to each of two grandchildren when they reached a certain age, and providing that daughter should have a one-half interest in the estate during her life only in the event obligations to her judgment creditors were barred or satisfied, such will established a trust, and did not repose entire beneficial interest in daughter. Nor was the trust extinguished by a merger of daughter's legal and equitable estate so that property could be subjected to satisfaction of creditor's judgments, because in equity the doctrine of merger will not be invoked if it would frustrate the testatrix's expressed intentions or if there is some other reason for keeping the estates separate.

Freier v Longnecker, 227-366; 288 NW 444

Mutual wills—enforcement in equity. Mutual wills are those made as separate wills of two people which are reciprocal in provision. Such wills may be enforced in equity.

Child v Smith, 225-1205; 282 NW 316

Objections to executrix's report—real estate title issue not misjoinder. Where an executrix after resigning files her reports, objections thereto asking that she account for land in another county allegedly purchased with estate money does not misjoin equitable action to impose trust on or establish title in land, but is special probate proceeding to compel executrix to account for assets over which probate court has statutory jurisdiction coextensive with the state.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Ordinary probate proceedings—noninterference by equity court. An equity court may not interfere with the ordinary proceedings of the probate court in exercising its exclusive jurisdiction in the administration of estates. Rule applies when probate court is following the manner and the method provided by the testator in the will.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Widow's support—probate claim denied—no bar in subsequent equity action. A prior judgment in a law action tried on the merits is conclusive as to a subsequent action in equity between the same parties and the same facts, but where a widow is bequeathed a life estate in realty with the right to dispose of such realty for her necessary support, a probate adjudication on the merits that her claim for widow's support could not be established against husband's estate, is not such an adjudication as bars a later equity proceeding to establish such support claim as a lien on such realty.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Pupils' residence determined by school district. When school district had exclusive jurisdiction to determine residence of pupils, it waived such exclusive jurisdiction by bringing equitable action in district court, as all material matters necessary to determine the issues, including the determination of residence, were before the court and within its jurisdiction.

School Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

Practicing medicine without license—injunction—constitutionality. The statute which authorizes injunction to restrain the practice of medicine and surgery without a license is constitutional for the reason that such practice constitutes a nuisance under the general law of the state, and chancery has, from time immemorial, possessed jurisdiction to enjoin nuisances; and this is true irrespective of the question whether the district court may be constitutionally vested with an equitable jurisdiction not possessed by chancery courts when the state constitution was adopted.

State v Howard, 214-60; 241 NW 682

Remedy at law. Equity will not assume jurisdiction to declare illegal and to enjoin the enforcement of a contract between an employer and a local labor union on behalf of the employees when the controversy may readily be presented in a law action. So held where the contract required the employer to retain certain sums from the pay of each employee and to pay the same to the local union as members' dues, it appearing that some of the employees had objected to the retention of said sums.

Des Moines Railway v Amalgamated Assn.. 204-1195; 213 NW 264

Setting aside executed contract or deed. A court of equity is not warranted in setting aside an executed contract such as a warranty deed in the absence of actual or constructive fraud.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

State statute providing review on tax assessments—federal equity jurisdiction. The statutes offering a remedy to banks for review of excessive assessments, held, not sufficiently adequate to preclude federal jurisdiction in equity.

Munn v D. M. Nat. Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

Unallowable cancellation in equity of insurance policy. Equity will not, after the death of the insured, entertain jurisdiction to cancel the life insurance policy unless exceptional circumstances render cancellation necessary for the protection of the insurer. The fact that the policy becomes incontestable after two years does not constitute such circumstance when said time has not yet elapsed.

Bankers Life v Bennett, 220-922; 263 NW 44

Vacation of plat. A county auditor's plat may be vacated by a court of equity at the instance of a plaintiff who, since the plat was duly executed, has become the owner of all the various tracts embraced in said plat.

Schemmel v Town, 214-321; 242 NW 89

II LAW AND EQUITY CONCURRENT

Law action tried by equity procedure—errors must be assigned. Where an essentially law action to recover a money judgment is brought and recognized as such by the parties and the court, it is not, without a record entry transferring it to equity, converted to an equity action because the parties with the consent of the court use an equity procedure, and appeal therefrom will be dismissed when no errors are assigned.

Petersen v Ins. Co., 225-293; 280 NW 521

III LAW OR EQUITY DEPENDING ON ALLEGATIONS AND RELIEF

Calendars—right to trial at law. A plaintiff who, in an ordinary action on a promissory note, alleges a fraudulent transfer by defendant of his property and prays for an attachment and a decree subjecting the property to his judgment, does not, by docketing said action in equity, deprive defendant of the right to a transfer to the law calendar of that part of the action which involves his liability on the note.

Fed. Bk. v Geannoulis, 203-1385; 214 NW 576

Claims against estate—belated filing—equitable circumstances. While establishing a probate claim is a law proceeding, the determination of the existence of peculiar circumstances relieving the failure to file a probate claim within the statutory period is an equitable proceeding.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Oral agreement to devise realty—insufficiency of evidence to set aside. In an equity action to recover a sum of money alleged to be the share of plaintiff's intestate in the estate of his father, where evidence shows the mother of plaintiff's intestate was left with five minor children, and that she filed a partition proceeding involving 400 acres of land owned by her husband, who died intestate, and she thereafter was the successful purchaser at a sale of the land, and that, as a part of the purchase price, she executed a note and mortgage on the land to a guardian appointed for the minor children to secure their respective shares in the father's estate, and that, as the children became of age, there were no guardianship funds to pay their respective shares, and that it was orally agreed that the children would receipt for their respective shares, in cash, to the guardian (altho no cash was received), and the mother agreed to, and did, execute a will leaving the land to the children in equal shares, the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to set aside the agreement, and the trial court's order, affirming the agreement and impounding the mother's will until her death, was affirmed.

Baumann v Willemsen, 228- ; 292 NW 77

Damages in lieu of specific performance. A party who has failed to establish his right to specific performance, may not complain that the court of equity refused to allow damages in lieu of specific performance, and relegated him to an action at law as to such damages.

Dunlop v Wever, 209-590; 228 NW 562

Redemption—law remedy to remove tax sale cloud. A property owner, presumed to have been informed of his tax assessments, know-

III LAW OR EQUITY DEPENDING ON ALLEGATIONS AND RELIEF—concluded that they will become due and payable without demand, yet allowing the taxes to become delinquent and the property to go to tax sale, may not resort to equity to remove the cloud on his title when he has by redemption a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law.

Jones v Mills County, 224-1375; 279 NW 96

Trial de novo. An action which plaintiff denominates when commenced as "in equity", and which is fully tried "in equity" without objection or effort to transfer to law, will, on appeal by defendant, be treated as "in equity" and tried de novo, without assignment of error.

Bates v Seeds, 223-70; 272 NW 515

IV GRANTING OF RELIEF IN GENERAL

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 18 ILR 266—Champerly with third party; 24 ILR 337—Mistake of law

Common fund doctrine.

In re Lear, 204-346; 213 NW 240

Accounting — setting aside final report. Principle reaffirmed that the final report of an executor or administrator, after due approval and discharge, will be set aside only on a clear and satisfactory showing of fraud, mistake, or other equitable grounds. Evidence held to justify such order.

Becker v Becker Bros., 202-7; 209 NW 447

Defense arising or discovered since judgment entered. The fact that a claim, when judgment was entered thereon, had been discharged in bankruptcy is not a "defense which has arisen or been discovered since the judgment was rendered," and therefore within the power of a court of equity to annul or modify.

Harding v Quilan, 209-1190; 229 NW 672

Duty to set aside fraud-induced deed. When a deed has been manifestly obtained by the fraud of the grantee, and without consideration, a court of equity must set it aside, on a distinct prayer for such relief, and not assume to reform it, without any prayer therefor, and decree a life interest in the defrauded grantor.

Gunther v Kurtz, 204-732; 216 NW 39

Fraudulent acts by bank cashier—repudiation of only part of transaction. Where the cashier of the plaintiff bank obtained credit with the defendant bank in order to conceal a shortage in the accounts of the plaintiff, giving unauthorized drafts on the plaintiff and crediting the plaintiff with the amounts, it was erroneous for the court to find that the cashier had borrowed from the defendant to pay the plaintiff and then paid the defendant with the drafts with the result that the defendant then held assets of the plaintiff equal to the amount of the drafts. To hold thus would permit the plaintiff bank to accept payment of the shortage through the unauthorized acts of its agent, the cashier, and at the same time repudiate the remainder of the transaction and deny the right of the defendant to use the unauthorized drafts.

Community Sav. Bk. v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Equitable relief for fraud. In action for equitable relief and damages, where proof justified the purely equitable relief of quieting title and cancellation of mortgage because of fraud, entry of personal judgment for damages against grantee was proper.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Equitable assignment. The oral statement by the president of a bank, made to the payee of a draft at the time of its issuance and delivery, that the draft "operated as an assignment" of an equal amount of money then in the hands of the drawee-bank and belonging to the issuing bank does not constitute an actual assignment.

Andrew v Bank, 215-290; 245 NW 329

Promise to apply proceeds—equitable assignment. Promise not to sell or mortgage any real estate (which was not described) and that proceeds of any sale or mortgage should be applied on payment of debt, held not to create an equitable assignment of proceeds of sale or mortgage.

Kuppenheimer v Mornin, 78 F 2d, 261

Father promising son's creditor not to change son's legacy. Simply because a testator contracts with a bank not to change his will bequeathing $10,000 to a son who was indebted to the bank, and when the father did not contract to pay the son's debt, there is no "unjust enrichment" of devisees and legatees who accept property willed to them, although father during his lifetime had depleted his estate by property transfers and conveyances to his other children.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Oral agreement to devise realty—insufficiency of evidence to set aside. In an equity action to recover a sum of money alleged to be the share of plaintiff's intestate in the estate of his father, where evidence shows the mother of plaintiff's intestate was left with five minor children, and that she filed a partition proceeding involving 400 acres of land owned by her husband, who died intestate, and she thereafter was the successful purchaser at a sale of the land, and that, as a part of the purchase price, she executed a note and mortgage on the land to a guardian appointed for the minor children to secure their respective shares in the father's estate, and that, as the children became of age, there were no guardianship funds to pay their respective shares, and that it was orally agreed that the children would receipt for their respective shares, in cash, to the guardian (altho no cash was received), and the mother agreed to, and did, execute a will leaving the land to the children in equal shares, the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to set aside the agreement, and the trial court's order, affirming the agreement and impounding the mother's will until her death, was affirmed.

Improvements—special assessment—appeal as sole remedy. The objection that the board of supervisors levied an assessment for a highway improvement against an entire 40-acre tract, instead of that part only which was at right angles to the improvement, must be presented on appeal from the assessment, and not by an independent action in equity.

Paul v Marshall County, 204-1114; 216 NW 736

Legal and conventional subrogation distinguished. Legal subrogation exists only in favor of one who, to protect his own rights, pays the debt of another. Conventional subrogation arises only upon agreement, between the lender and the debtor or old creditor, that the lender shall be subrogated to the old lien.

HOLC v Rupe, 225-1044; 483 NW 108

Liens—impressment of trust on proceeds of sale. An understanding between a lienor and a lienee to the effect that personal property upon which the lienor has a lien may be sold by the lienee, and the lien satisfied from the proceeds of the sale, will be enforced in equity by impressing a trust on said proceeds. So held as to rent due a landlord.

Stegemann v Bendixen, 219-1190; 260 NW 14

Origin and theory of subrogation. The doctrine of subrogation is purely of equitable origin and grew out of the need, in aid of natural justice, in placing a burden where it of right ought to rest.

HOLC v Rupe, 225-1044; 483 NW 108

Relief notwithstanding partial failure of recovery. A subcontractor on a public improvement who, in an equitable action, establishes a contract right of recovery against the principal contractor is entitled to judgment accordingly, notwithstanding the fact that, because of his noncompliance with the statute, he is denied recovery, either against the surety for the principal contractor, or against the municipality, or against the undistributed funds in the hands of the municipality.

Zeidler Co. v Ryan, 205-37; 215 NW 801

Restoration of status quo. An incompetent, through his guardian, may, on proper grounds, maintain an action to set aside and annul a judgment in foreclosure without offering to restore the status quo, when the incompetent received no part of the money secured by the mortgage.

Engelbercht v Davison, 204-1394; 213 NW 225

Equitable assignment—sheriff's certificate—homestead—redemption by judgment creditor. Where judgment creditor redeemed from foreclosure sale and secured an assignment of the sheriff's certificate from the mortgagee, and appellant-owners failed to make a statutory redemption, the judgment creditor was an equitable assignee of the sheriff's certificate entitled to deed, even assuming that he had no right to redeem because of the homestead character of the land, since it made no difference to appellant-owners whether the mortgagee or judgment creditor was the holder of the certificate.

Ackerman v Bank, 228- ; 291 NW 150

Unjust enrichment as basis for recovery. No basis for recovery against a city, on the theory that the city has been unjustly enriched and must pay therefor, is established by proof of the reasonable value of that which the city has received.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Interstate shipment—building contractor not consignee—nonliability. A common carrier's petition against a building contractor alleging transportation as a benefit received, alleging unjust enrichment and nonpayment, and seeking to collect transportation charges on an interstate shipment of building material is demurrable and fails to state a cause of action in omitting an allegation showing a contractual liability on the defendant contractor as a party to the shipping contract.

Des Moines & C. I. Ry. v Ins. Co., 224-15; 276 NW 56

Right to reconvert—consent of spouse. The right of a legatee to make and enforce an election to take real estate in lieu of a devise of the proceeds thereof does not depend in any degree on the consent of the spouse of such legatee.

In re Warner, 209-948; 229 NW 241

Scope of relief. In equitable action where pleading "was not as clear as it might have been", yet prayed for general equitable relief, court enforced express provisions of legal contract to preserve rents and profits under the rule that where general equitable relief is prayed, any relief may be granted consistent with the pleadings and the evidence.

Wagner v Securities Co., 226-568; 284 NW 461

Supreme court—no power to enjoin unlicensed person practicing law. Supreme court has no implied power, by virtue of its exclusive statutory power to admit persons to practice as attorneys, to enjoin unlicensed law practice, for it has no original jurisdiction to grant injunctive relief, and an equity action therefor by members of bar is in no way related to the matter of admission to bar or disbarment.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

Unpaid stock subscription—nonliability. A subscriber for corporate stock who is not a promoter of the purported corporation is not liable on his fraud-induced, unpaid stock subscription contract in an action by the receiver of the corporation when the charter of the corporation has been judicially annulled, subsequent to the subscription contract, by the state, for fraud perpetrated on the state in obtaining the charter; in other words, the so-called English "equitable trust fund doctrine" does not apply to such a condition.

Fundamental reason. Such purported corporation, having been conceived, born, and nurtured in fraud, was never, in truth or fact, a corporation de jure or de facto, in a business sense.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

Accounting—trial de novo—record. The defendant, in an equitable action for an accounting, unsuccessfully moves at the close of plaintiff's testimony for a dismissal of the action, yet the final determination of the action must be determined, in the trial court and on appeal, on the entire record testimony including that introduced by said unsuccessful movant.

Economy Co. v Honett, 222-894; 270 NW 842

(b) EQUITABLE LIENS GENERALLY

Claimant planting crops subsequent to receiver's appointment—value of labor and material allowed. Claimant who, before institution of foreclosure suit in which receiver for mortgagor was appointed, had furnished and planted seed under oral agreement with mortgagor's heirs held entitled to reasonable value of labor and material from receivership fund.

Chicago JSL Bank v Hargrove, (NOR); 234 NW 801

Wife's deed to husband's creditors as mortgage. Wife's deed to creditors in payment of husband's notes, under circumstances, construed as mortgage with right to creditors to foreclose.

Allen v Hume, 227-1224; 290 NW 687

Franchise renewal—no corporate obligation nor lien. Statute requiring majority stockholders, voting for renewal of corporate franchise, to purchase objecting stockholders' stock creates no liability against the corporation nor lien on its assets.

Terrell v Tel. Co., 225-994; 282 NW 702

Attachment liens set aside—insolvency. In an equity action brought by trustee in bankruptcy to set aside and annul an attachment lien upon the bankrupt's property, the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act are such that it is essential that the person attacking a lien must show that debtor was insolvent when the lien was obtained.

Matthews v Engineering Co., 228- ; 292 NW 64

Impressment of lien—special execution. A court of equity upon impressing a lien on property should order the issuance of a special execution for the sale of the property and the satisfaction of the lien.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

No lien. Where no real estate was described, promise not to convey or mortgage any real estate then owned until payment of debt guaranteed by promisor, and that proceeds of any sale or mortgage should be applied on such debt, held not to have created equitable lien on promisor's real estate.

Kuppenheimer & Co. v Mornin, 78 F 2d, 261

Partners—agreement for lien—construction. A partnership agreement which provides that it shall stand as security for all money "advanced to said business" by the second party, and all indebtedness of the first party to the second party, does not embrace the right to a lien for money not shown to have been "advanced to said business", nor for money advanced subsequent to the said agreement.

Reilly v Woods, 216-419; 249 NW 381

Testator's contract to devise to son—will changed after loan relying thereon. A bank, after contracting with debtor's father to wait until father's death for payment of the son's debt from his share in father's estate, under existing devise in will, has a right to impress an equitable lien on the land when it discovers that the father had changed his will and was fraudulently, without consideration, transferring his property to others than the debtor son.

Emerson Bank v Cole, 225-281; 280 NW 515

Vendor's and equitable lien contrasted. The power of a court of equity to establish an equitable lien is quite independent of the law applicable to a vendor's lien.

Bogle v Goldsworthy, 202-764; 211 NW 257

(c) MARSHALING ASSETS

Discussion. See 24 ILR 328—Marshaling assets

Marshaling assets—inadequate showing in order to apply doctrine. An assignee of property subject to a prior judgment is not entitled to the benefit of the doctrine of marshaling of assets by simply alleging and proving the naked fact that the judgment holder has mortgage security on other property for his judgment debt.

Iowa Co. v Clark, 213-875; 237 NW 336

Marshaling of assets. In the foreclosure of a valid and good-faith real estate mortgage by a mortgagee who also holds chattel security for the same debt, a judgment creditor and a junior lienholder may not have a marshaling of assets in the absence of any duly joined issue relating thereto, and when the real estate is of a value sufficient to satisfy all liens against it; neither may the court arbitrarily decree that the plaintiff's mortgage shall have priority over the junior lien to an amount less than the full amount due on the mortgage.

White v Smith, 210-787; 231 NW 309

Partnership assets marshaled. Where partnership property and the individual property of all the partners are in the hands of the partnership receiver, a creditor whose claim is against the partnership because of a partnership transaction, and also against an individual partner because the partner has individually guaranteed the claim, may have the assets so marshaled that he will share in the partnership property along with the other partnership creditors, and then resort to the individual property of the guaranteeing partner to the exclusion of partnership creditors.

Simmons v Simmons, 215-654; 245 NW 597

Valuation of accounts. The fair valuation of accounts is that amount which, with reasonable diligence, can be realized from their collection within a reasonable time, and the amount as shown on the face of ordinary retail business accounts is not usually their fair value, tho of course accounts may be such that their face value, as a matter of fact, is their fair value.

Matthews v Engineering Co., 228- ; 292 NW 64

Valuation of business assets—evidence. In an equity action by trustee in bankruptcy to set aside an attachment lien wherein the attaching creditor urges the insufficient showing of the debtor's insolvency, the evidence of the trustee as to fair valuation of the personal assets of a lumber company was sufficient to sustain the finding of the court as to valuation. Since the record stipulated the appraisal found by two competent lumbermen, acquainted with such values, substantiated the value placed thereon by the trustee, and, as the trustee was not bound by any one witness' testimony, it was the function of the court to consider all the admissible evidence.

Valuation of realty—evidence. In an equity action brought by trustee in bankruptcy to set aside an attachment lien on bankrupt's property, where judgment creditor complains of the evidence establishing the valuation in order to determine debtor's insolvency, and where creditor relies on a valuation of $4500 offered for the property several years previous, but which offer had not been subsequently made by anyone, the reasonable finding, in view of all the evidence, is that the fair value of such property did not exceed $2600.

V PRINCIPLES AND MAXIMS

Preservation of property by administrator. In proceeding to recover from surety on administrator's bond, principle held applicable that a trustee is presumed to have preserved the property and that such presumption stands until overcome by evidence. Fact that such proceeding is at law does not preclude application of equitable principles.

In re Willenbrock, 228- ; 290 NW 503

Clean hands—collateral transaction. Principle recognized that a plaintiff is not deprived of his right to equitable relief in a given transaction simply because his hands were somewhat soiled by fraud in another subsequent transaction which is only incidentally or collaterally connected with said prior transaction.

Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Construction—clear and unambiguous wills. In equitable action for construction of wills of deceased husband and wife, where husband's will provided for payment of debts and funeral expenses and devised to his wife all his estate; and where wife's will contained certain specific bequests and directed that remainder and after-acquired property be divided into equal shares for distribution, held, both wills to be clear and unambiguous and therefore not open to construction. Actions for that purpose are entertained by a court of equity or probate only when there is uncertainty or ambiguity.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

Equal equities—which shall prevail. Principle reaffirmed that as between equal equities, the first in time shall prevail—that the first in time shall be first in right. Applied as between special assessment certificates issued at different times against the same lots or land for different improvements.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Dickey, 222-995; 270 NW 29

Two innocent parties—one liable who made wrongful act possible. Where one of two innocent parties must suffer from the wrongs of a third person, he who placed the wrongdoer in a position to do the wrong must suffer the consequences of his act.

Allen v Hume, 227-1224; 290 NW 687

Equitable representation—limit to doctrine. The rule that in some instances a person may,

V PRINCIPLES AND MAXIMS—concluded on the principle of “equitable representation”, be bound by an adjudication bearing on the title to realty, tho said person is not a party to the action in which the adjudication is had, cannot be extended to include persons who are in being and subject to being brought under the jurisdiction of the court, and who are entitled to notice and hearing as to the matter in question.

Skelton v Cross, 222-262; 268 NW 499; 109 ALR 129

Reformation of deed—refusal to surrender advantage. The grantee in a deed of conveyance who has obtained a decree quieting his title on the plea that the deed was in satisfaction of the grantor’s prior mortgage on the land may not, while insisting on all the advantages accruing to him under the decree, have the deed so reformed as to include the grantor’s homestead, on the claim that the homestead was mistakenly or fraudulently omitted from the deed.

Galvin v Taylor, 203-1139; 212 NW 709

Sale—tax tender as doing equity before enjoining deed issuance. One who allows his property to go to tax sale and later seeks to enjoin the county from issuing a tax deed claiming a void sale must, if seeking equity, do equity by tendering the amount of the taxes due and attempt to make redemption as by statute provided.

Jones v Mills County, 224-1375; 279 NW 96

VI LACHES AND STALE DEMANDS

Action in 1923 to enjoin excessive assessment of 1919—no laches. Banks suing in 1923 to enjoin excessive levy in years 1919 to 1922, inclusive, held, not estopped by laches.

Munn v D. M. Nat. Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

Federal court rule as applied to state statute. The rule in federal courts in equitable actions is that state statutes of limitations are not controlling but will be followed in application of the doctrine of laches unless the circumstances of the particular case are convincing that a shorter or longer period would be just.

Crawford Bank v Crawford County, 66 F 2d, 971

Limitation of action—failure to plead—no question of laches presented. In action to quiet title by owner of land against a tax deed which had been issued on an insufficient affidavit of service of notice of expiration of redemption from tax sale, where the right to redeem had not expired, and no claim of statute of limitations was made, no question of laches was presented.

Weideman v Pocahontas, 225-141; 279 NW 146

Banking corporations—stockholders—double liability—laches as bar. Record reviewed and held insufficient to show such laches as would bar an action to enforce, against the estate of a stockholder, the latter’s statutory, super-added liability on capital stock.

Bates v McGill, 223-62; 272 NW 535

Bridge abandoned—sleeping on one’s rights. A property owner who, with his grantor, has acquiesced for over a half century in the action of public authorities in substituting a solid earth embankment for a bridge spanning a natural drain across a public highway, need not expect a court of equity to listen to his belated demand for a reinstatement of the bridge.

Thomas v Cedar Falls, 223-229; 272 NW 79

County paying support of insane person—laches of officials imputed to county. When a county was not liable for the support of a person committed to a state institution as insane, and through the negligence and laches of its officials paid such support for about 14 years before objecting, the negligence was imputed to the county, and the bar of laches prevented a recovery for such expenditures from the county which should have paid, but the burden of continuing payments was on the other county from the time payments ceased.

State v Clay County, 226-885; 285 NW 229

Detachment of territory—unallowable defense. The fact that territory has remained within a municipality for some half century without the institution of proceedings to have it detached, furnishes no basis, when such proceedings are instituted, for the defensive plea of laches, equitable estoppel, or acquiescence.

McKeon v Council Bluffs, 206-556; 221 NW 351; 62 ALR 1006

Estoppel to rely on limitation—essential evidence. The maker of a promissory note cannot be held estopped to plead the statute of limitation in the absence of evidence of some act of omission or commission upon which the holder relied to his detriment.

King v Knudson, 209-1214; 229 NW 839

Laches—nonoperative as to unknown issue. Where an equitable issue involving an oral contract is unknown to plaintiff until pleaded by defendant, plaintiff is neither guilty of laches in withholding the issue nor thereby deprived of its benefits, when, because of death, the defendants have in the meantime lost the benefit of the testimony of one of the parties to the oral contract and equitable issue.

Emerson Bank v Cole, 225-281; 280 NW 515

Unavailable plea. Laches will not be imputed to a person in possession of property to the advantage of one who has contracted in relation thereto without inquiry or investigation as to the rights of such possessor.

Lutton v Steng, 208-1379; 227 NW 414

Licenses—for occupations—estoppel—evidence—sufficiency. It is futile for the defendant, in an action by the state to enjoin the defendant from practicing medicine without a license, to plead that the state and its officers are estopped to question his right to so practice, and assume to support such plea by the fact that the state had not, for twenty years, questioned his right so to practice tho he had never offered to take the statutory examination for any recognized system of practice.

State v Howard, 216-545; 245 NW 871

Partnership—accounting. An action to establish a partnership of some 35 years standing and for an accounting thereunder is not barred by laches when the plaintiff moved with reasonable promptness after his interest was questioned.

Hull v Padgett, 207-430; 223 NW 154

Principles—sleeping on rights. One who, without requiring the production of a note, innocently pays the note to one who is not the agent of the holder may not insist that the said holder, and not himself, should suffer the loss, especially when the latter, upon discovering the truth, does nothing to protect himself against the solvent wrongdoer.

Ritter v Plumb, 203-1001; 213 NW 571

Right to corporate transfer of stock. Delay of some seven years by a pledgee of corporate shares of stock, to enforce his right to have the stock transferred on the corporate stock records, will not bar the enforcement of said right when there are no unprotected rights of third parties intervening and when the corporation has not been harmed by the delay.

Bankers Tr. v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

VII ESTOPPEL GENERALLY

Discussion. See 1 ILB 142—Estoppel by silence; 17 ILR 472—By record and in pais “Estoppel” and “waiver” contrasted. Principle reaffirmed that, to constitute waiver, action to the prejudice of the party relying thereon is not essential, while such showing is essential to estoppel.

Euclid Bank v Nesbit, 201-506; 207 NW 761

Acting to one's detriment. An estoppel necessitates proof that a party has acted to his detriment because of something done by the other party.

In re Sarvey, 206-527; 219 NW 318

Innocent parties—most blameworthy to suffer. Where one of two innocent people must suffer because of the wrongful act of a third person, that one must suffer who has placed the third person in a position to do the wrong.

Deater v Bank, 223-86; 272 NW 423

Wife's deed for husband's debt—cancellation—consideration—estoppel. Wife who was not illiterate, and who deeded her land in payment of husband's notes, and who, by placing deed in husband's hands, clothed him with apparent authority to deliver the deed, thereby inducing creditors to surrender other land owned by the husband, is estopped from questioning the validity of the deed. The consideration to wife was advantage to husband and detriment to creditors.

Allen v Hume, 227-1224; 290 NW 687

Absence of fraudulent intent. Principle reaffirmed that a fraudulent intent is not a necessary element of an equitable estoppel.

Browning v Kanno, 202-465; 210 NW 596

Fundamental element. Fundamentally a plea of estoppel demands proof that the person alleged to be estopped has done something, or omitted to do something which he ought to have done, which has justifiably caused the pleader to change his position to his detriment.

Macheak v Adamsen, 214-446; 239 NW 574

Inconsistent conduct not relied on. An estoppel may not be rested on alleged inconsistent conduct on which the pleader never relied.

Hartford Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 263 NW 269

Streets and alleys—estoppel to open. A city estops itself from asserting any right in and to a public alley when, knowing that a person has taken possession of such alley under a claim of right, it permits such person to remain in undisturbed possession under such claim for ten years and to erect valuable improvements on such alley.

Fraud as essential element. If there be no fraud, actual or constructive, in the execution and delivery of a deed of conveyance, there can be no estoppel against the grantee.

McCloud v Bates, 220-252; 261 NW 766

Appeal—failure to file brief and argument—estoppel to assert claim. In action by subcontractor against principal and drainage district jointly to establish claim as a lien on the district's fund, where drainage district filed no brief or argument, court need give no attention to its plea that subcontractor was estopped from asserting claim by his action in accepting auditor's warrant for a lesser amount than that to which he was entitled.

Graettinger Works v Gjellefald, (NOR); 214 NW 579

Adoption by estoppel. Evidence that at the age of 13 months the plaintiff was taken by foster parents from her natural parents under an agreement to adopt her, and that she was reared by the foster parents, the foster mother referring to her as a daughter in conversation and in a will, established an adoption by estoppel, estopping other heirs of the foster mother from denying the adoption.

Vermillion v Sikora, 227-786; 289 NW 27

Adjudication—inconsistent attitude of party. A plaintiff who successfully prevents an attempted intervention on the grounds that the intervener's claim would not be prejudiced by the adjudication of the issues between the plaintiff and the defendant, may not thereafter claim that the adjudication so had did adjudicate the claim of the party attempting to intervene.

Tutt v Smith, 201-107; 204 NW 294; 48 ALR 394

Establishment by consent—user—estoppel. In an action to enjoin the repair of a dike originally constructed in connection with drainage system created jointly by adjoining landowners, including plaintiff's predecessor in title, and used with knowledge of plaintiff for over 20 years without objection, principles reaffirmed (1) that where there is proof of more than mere user, the statute providing that an easement cannot be established by proof of mere user alone does not apply, and (2) that the owner of a dominant estate may by consent, express or implied, estop himself from insisting upon adherence to the principle that the owner of a servient estate has no right to interfere with the natural flow of water in a well-defined course so as to cast it back upon the dominant estate.

Dodd v Aitken, 227-679; 288 NW 898

Establishment—estoppel to question validity. One who redeemed land from tax sale for nonpayment of drainage assessment installments and who acquiesced in drainage proceedings during years in which her land received benefits of the improvement is estopped from questioning establishment of the drainage district.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

Contested election—appeal from consent judgment. An election contestant may not appeal from the judgment of the contest board holding the election in question illegal and providing for the calling of a new election by said board, when he consented to the entry of such judgment; nor may an estoppel to question such appeal be based upon the fact that the official board of which appellees were members refused to recognize the validity of the new election called by the contest board.

Leslie v Barnes, 201-1159; 208 NW 725

Erroneous but nonreversible error. Where an indorser of a promissory note pleaded an estoppel as consisting (1) of a mere promise by the payee to collect the note from the maker and a prior indorser, and (2) of a later statement by the payee that the note had been paid, the submission of said pleaded promise in one instruction, and of said statement as to payment in another instruction, thereby inferentially indicating that there were two estoppels, will not be deemed reversible error when the record reveals the fact that the maker and prior indorser both remained solvent up to the time and after the statement as to payment was made.

Birmingham Bank v Keller, 205-271; 215 NW 649

Estoppel to deny agent's authority. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed by payee's attorney without actual authority, where bank defended on ground that payee was estopped from asserting lack of authority, held, strict rules relating to equitable estoppel based upon false misrepresentation or concealment were not applicable in determining such defense.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Banking corporations—insolvency—estoppel to present claim. Plea of estoppel to present a claim in bank receivership reviewed and held not sustained.

Andrew v Bank, 218-1313; 256 NW 292

Equitable estoppel—unrecorded conveyance—pleader's burden. One alleging an equitable estoppel must prove it by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, hence in asserting in a fraudulent conveyance action, an equitable estoppel against the wife of a bank stockholder, because she withheld from record, for many years, a deed to herself from her husband, the creditors of the bank have not sustained the burden of proving estoppel when they admit that they did not deposit their money on the wife's representation, nor upon their belief in, the husband's ownership of the land.

Bates v Kleve, 225-255; 280 NW 501

Wrongful issuance of certificate of deposit—timely repudiation. A party to whom a bank, without authority, has issued a certificate of deposit in payment of a claim due from the bank, may not be deemed estopped to repudiate such certificate, or be deemed to have ratified the issuance of such certificate, when his repudiation was reasonably prompt, and when no injury resulted to the bank or to its receiver from any delay in repudiating.

Andrew v Bank, 217-232; 251 NW 860

Bills and notes—estoppel when negotiable paper transferred by apparent owner. An owner who leaves in the hands of another, negotiable paper or nonnegotiable choses in action or security which can be transferred without the execution of further documents thereby creates an appearance of ownership or control in the custodian, and is estopped as against an innocent party who has acted in reliance on the appearance thus created.

Matalone v Bank, 226-1031; 285 NW 648

Consideration, failure of—nonestoppel to plead. The maker of a promissory note is not estopped to plead failure of consideration for the note as to him because of the fact that, subsequent to the signing, he was a party to a contract under which there was a novation of security.

Insell v McDaniels, 201-533; 207 NW 533

Failure of consideration—when plea unallowable. The maker of a promissory note may not plead failure of consideration when his own fraud brought about such failure.

Cloud v Burnett, 201-733; 206 NW 283

Failure to reply to letter as to ownership of instrument. The acceptor of a trade acceptance does not estop himself from pleading defensive matter by failing to reply to a letter from an indorsee to the effect that the indorsee has purchased the acceptance.

First N. Bank v Power Co., 211-153; 233 NW 103

Grounds—giving note for goods. A vendee who executes and delivers his promissory note for goods purchased does not thereby estop himself from the recovery of damages consequent on feeding the goods to his stock.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

Holdership in due course—fraud. The maker of a negotiable promissory note may not be said to be estopped to plead fraud in the inception of the note, against a transferee, on a record which fails to show that the maker's conduct ever came to the knowledge of the transferee or in any manner controlled his conduct.

State Bank v Behm, 202-192; 209 NW 523

Holdership in due course—inconsistent attitude. The maker of negotiable promissory notes is not estopped to plead fraud in the inception of the notes because he appeared in the insolvency proceedings against the payee and obtained judgment for the amount of the notes (which had been negotiated), and in such proceedings took the position, in effect, that the indorsees were holders in due course, when the evidence fails to show that anyone had relied on such course of conduct to his injury.

Citizens Bank v Martens, 204-1378; 215 NW 754

Implied authority to negotiate note. The maker of a nonnegotiable promissory note will not be held to be estopped to deny liability on the theory that he impliedly clothed the payee with authority to negotiate the note, when the entire transaction contemplated such transfer.

Hubbard v Wallace, 201-1143; 208 NW 730; 45 ALR 1065

Party entitled to allege error. A plaintiff who prays for and is given judgment on a promissory note may not insist, on appeal by the defendant, that a particular and material provision of the note was not embraced in the note when it was executed and delivered.

Anderson v Foglesong, 201-481; 207 NW 562

Failure to act promptly caused by act of agent. Where the plaintiff's name was called outside a theatre as winner of a bank night drawing, and when she entered she was told that it was her husband's name that was called, and he was told he was one second too late when he followed her in, the theatre could not claim that neither she nor her husband had claimed the prize within the time set. If the husband was the one entitled to the prize, the theatre was estopped to claim the advantage of the one-second delay caused by the act of their agent in calling the wrong name outside the theatre.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Payment to holder's agent. The holder of a promissory note who permits another person for a series of years to collect both interest and installments of principal on the note will not be permitted to deny the authority of such other person to make all collections on the note. And it is immaterial that the note was not surrendered to the maker when he made his final payment.

Ragatz v Diener, 218-703; 253 NW 824

Silence. The holder of a note and mortgage as collateral, who stands by, and even encourages and assists the maker and payee of the note to execute a rescission of the transaction out of which the note and mortgage arose, may not thereafter assert against the maker his right as a collateral holder, the said maker being ignorant that the said obligations were being so held as collateral.

Iowa Bank v Rons, 203-51; 212 NW 362

Bonds—validity—estoppel to question. A duly appointed referee in partition will not be permitted to question the authorized execution in his name of a bond as such referee, when, subsequent to the said execution and filing of said bond, he reports to the court and under oath, that he had given said bond and had effected a sale of said property.

Indemnity Ins. v Opdycke, 223-502; 273 NW 373

Liability of surety—authority of agent. A surety company will not, in an action on a bond issued in its name by its agent, be permitted to dispute the authority which it has specifically conferred on said agent in a written power of attorney filed with the clerk of the district court

VII ESTOPPEL GENERALLY—continued and relied on by said clerk in approving the bond, the obligee in the bond having no knowledge of any limitation on the authority of the agent.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Permitting reliance on unauthorized bond. The surety on an appeal (supersedeas) bond is estopped to question its liability on the bond when, knowing of the execution of the bond by its agent and the filing and acceptance thereof, it permits the appellee-obligee and the clerk accepting the bond, innocently to act and rely on said bond until the full purpose of the bond had been accomplished.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Pleading one's own wrong. In an action on a bond given by a bank as principal and by its directors as sureties to secure a trust fund which was in the possession of the bank, the defensive plea that plaintiff was estopped from prosecuting the action by his laches in so doing, is not available to the sureties when they at all times, before the bank became insolvent, had unhampered opportunity to compel compliance with the bond, and thus protect themselves, but, on the contrary, manifestly connived at a continuous breach of the bond in order to conserve the interest of their bank.

Olin Assn. v Bank, 222-1053; 270 NW 455; 112 ALR 1205

Statutory bond—validity questioned. The sureties on a bond to secure deposits of county funds in a bank who, upon the failure of the bank, induce the county, because of their suretyship, to institute an action against the receiver for an order of preference in the payment of said deposits, and who intervene in such action because and on the basis of their confessed suretyship, and who later, after preference is denied, induce the county to delay action on the bond under a promise that, as soon as all dividends have been paid on the deposit account, they will, without further question, pay the balance due under the bond, will not be permitted, when sued on the bond, to question either the validity of the bond or the validity of the deposits made thereunder.

Plymouth County v Schulz, 209-81; 227 NW 622

Statutory bonds—estoppel to deny. A bond given for the performance of a public building contract, and containing some of the conditions which the statute mandatorily prescribes for such a bond, anything in any contract to the contrary notwithstanding, will be deemed a statutory bond, with all the statutory conditions impliedly inserted therein.

Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Corporations—issuance of stock. One, who has explicit knowledge of the facts under which corporate shares of stock were issued to him and later accepts and retains a dividend paid on the stock, will not, at least as against creditors of the corporation, be heard to say that the stock was improperly issued to him.

Andrew v Bank & Trust, 219-939; 258 NW 925

Necessity to plead. Under an allegation that plaintiff was the owner of corporate stock when it was sold, no defense is presented by a general denial. If defendant claims that plaintiff is estopped to assert such ownership, then defendant must specially so plead.

Wilson v Lindhart, 216-825; 249 NW 218

Stock subscriber—nonbar or estoppel. A decree that a subscriber for corporate stock could not recover of the corporate receiver the amount already paid to the corporation on his subscription contract—such being the sole issue—does not estop the subscriber, when sued by the receiver for the unpaid amount of said contract, from pleading in defense that the purported corporation never had any corporate existence.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

Issuance of unpaid stock—pledge to innocent party. A corporation which issues and delivers its corporate shares of stock without receiving payment therefor estops itself to question such issuance and delivery after the stock has been pledged by the holder thereof to a good-faith pledgee for value and without notice of the fact of nonpayment.

Bankers Tr. v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

Repurchase of stock—equitable issues not raised by demurrer. The facts, set up in answer by a Delaware corporation, that (1) it had no surplus, and (2) the laws of the state of its domicile prohibited a repurchase of its stock from capital, present a defense to an action for recovery on an alleged breach of contract to repurchase stock when such answer is attacked simply by demurrer rather than by an appropriate remedy based on equitable rights. Demurrer does not raise estoppel, ratification, implied contract nor any other equitable theory.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

Ultra vires in re corporate accommodation note. A corporation is not estopped to plead ultra vires in becoming the maker of an accommodation promissory note, from the fact that its officers knew that the payee (who was not the accommodated party) was making advances to the party actually accommodated, when the payee knew (1) that the note was an accommodation solely to the party receiving the advances, and (2) that the note was not executed in conformity with the authority which the corporation had granted to its officers.

Black Hawk Bk. v Monarch Co., 201-240; 207 NW 121

Contracts—duress—estoppel to assert. The plea that an obligation was signed under duress must fall when the signer, during a long time following the execution of said obligation, recognized it as legally binding, and caused others to act on such recognition to their detriment.

Smith v Morgan, 214-555; 240 NW 257

Contracts—disaffirmance. A minor may estop himself by his conduct from disaffirming or questioning the legality of his contract.

First Bank v Torkelson, 209-659; 228 NW 655

Devisees' rights—election by spouse. The heirs of a surviving wife are not estopped to insist that the wife took her dower interest, and did not take under the will, by the fact that, separately and apart from the will and prior to its execution, the husband had turned over certain funds to a society under an agreement that the society should pay interest on the funds to him and to the wife during their lifetime, and that the wife received such interest after the death of the husband.

In re Culbertson, 204-473; 215 NW 761

Estoppel by deed. Mortgagors will not be permitted to deny that they own the quality of title which they have assumed to mortgage.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

By deed—signing chattel mortgage—effect. The mere signing of a chattel mortgage in a partnership name does not, in and of itself, estop the signer from denying that the mortgaged property is partnership property.

Citizens Bank v Scott & Son, 217-584; 250 NW 626

Father-son partnership—no estoppel. Estoppel would not prevent a son from maintaining an action against his mother for an accounting and dissolution of a partnership which was established between son and father and mother and upon father's death was continued with mother; theory being that estoppel arose on account of son's acquiescence in mother's taking possession of and disposing of certain partnership assets as executrix and sole beneficiary of her husband's estate under his will. Son, having no claim against estate of his father, and not knowing of mother's claim that she was sole partner with her husband, could not be estopped thereby.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

Guardian's delayed report—failure to rely. A party will not be permitted to say that he relied, to his financial disadvantage, on the long delay of a guardian to file his final report, when it appears that he did not change his position because of said delay—did not, because of his own lack of due diligence, have knowledge of said delay until long after he had acted to his disadvantage.

Bates v Remley, 223-654; 273 NW 180

Care of ward's estate—when ward estopped to object. A mentally competent adult person, who, on his own application, causes a guardian of his property to be appointed (§12617, C., '35), will be estopped to object to fair and honest investment of guardianship funds in real estate, when said investment, tho made without first securing the approval of the court, was made with the knowledge, consent, and approval of the ward, and when the ward at once entered into possession of the property and thereon resided for some seven years without payment of rent of any kind.

In re Meinders, 222-236; 268 NW 537

Evidence—degree of proof required. The plea of a surety on a promissory note that he, under an arrangement with the principal maker, furnished a portion of the funds with which to make full payment of the note, but that payee wrongfully applied said payment on another note owing by said maker, and that, therefore, said payee is estopped to maintain an action against him, must be supported by clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence that said payee had full knowledge of said arrangement before he made application of said payment.

Reason: Fundamentally, estoppel is not a favorite of the law.

Stookesberry v Burgher, 220-916; 262 NW 820

Parol or extrinsic evidence affecting writings. A party may not object to oral evidence which shows that an apparently absolute note and mortgage were given as collateral security for other debts when the absence of such evidence would leave the objector without any defense whatever.

Bilharz v Martinsen, 209-296; 228 NW 268

Governmental agency—estoppel against. A county which accepts, and for some thirty years retains, the financial benefits arising from a particular action of its governing body will not be permitted, as to said transaction, to question the legal authority of its governing body to act as it did act.

Plymouth County v Koehler, 221-1022; 267 NW 106

Public funds—misappropriation—recovery. Where, during a series of years, public funds have been appropriated by a county to a farm bureau organization under the good-faith but mistaken belief that a statute authorized such appropriations, and where said funds have been expended in furtherance of the agricultural

VII ESTOPPEL GENERALLY—continued activities of said bureau, an action to recover such funds on behalf of the county will not lie by a taxpayer who has at all time had actual knowledge of the making of such appropriations and of the use to which they were being put, and took no action to question them.

Blume v Crawford County, 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92 ALR 757

Public improvements—hidden fraud—non-estoppel by use. A city, by using a pavement for some three and a half years, does not estop itself from legally moving against the contractor because of a hidden-from-view, fraudulent defect in the work for which the contractor was responsible.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Simmer law—no estoppel to deny general liability for engineering services. Where a city contracts for engineering services necessary to construct a municipal electric light and power plant to be paid for under the Simmer law, out of plant's future earnings, and then later repeals the ordinance authorizing its construction and adopts a resolution withdrawing the application for the federal loan therefor, yet the city was not estopped to deny a general liability for the engineering services performed, when it was known to the engineering company, when the services were commenced, that no money derived from taxation was payable for any services it might render, and there was no showing of reliance by the plaintiff company on alleged implied obligation to erect the plant.

Burns & McDonnell Co. v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

Estoppel to dispute power of insurance agent. An insurance company estops itself from asserting that its agent is other than a recording or policy-issuing agent when it furnishes the agent with all blanks and supplies necessary for the actual execution and issuance by him of policies and otherwise recognizes his broad powers, and when a policyholder has relied on the agreement and representation of said agent.

Fillgraf v Ins. Co., 218-1335; 256 NW 421

Physician's certificate—conclusiveness. An Iowa statute providing that medical examiner's certificate of health issued to insured would estop insurer from setting up in defense of action on policy that insured was not in condition of health required by policy at time of issuance or delivery thereof, unless certificate was procured by fraud of insured, had the effect of changing contract through estoppel. A statute of this character does not limit the equitable jurisdiction of federal court and is enforceable therein, whether statute had been construed by Iowa supreme court as being rule of substantive law passing into contract, or as being merely a remedial right.

Mutual Ins. v Cunningham, 87 F 2d, 842

Jurisdiction—estoppel to question. A party who instigates and successfully promotes a fraudulent proceeding on the part of his wife under which she is granted a decree of divorce, who pays the alimony decreed, and who promptly remarries, will not be permitted, after the death of his former wife, to maintain an action to annul said decree (and thereby restore his property rights) on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to enter said decree.

Robson v Kramer, 215-973; 245 NW 341

Mortgages—equitable estoppel—nonchange of position. Estoppel to declare a mortgage-secured debt due for nonpayment of interest, as provided in an accelerating clause, may not be based on transactions and conversations between the parties which in no manner caused the mortgagor to change his position.

Collins v Nagel, 200-562; 203 NW 702

Non-change in position. The plea of a mortgagee that a mortgagor was estopped to deny the validity of his signature to the mortgage because, when the mortgagor was thrown into bankruptcy, the mortgage prevented the mortgagee from participating in dividends to unsecured creditors, must fall when there is no showing that there were any such dividends.

State Bank v Nolan, 201-722; 207 NW 745

Allegation of mortgageable interest. A mortgagor is presumed to have a mortgageable interest in the property mortgaged, and is estopped to assert the contrary.

Gotsch v Schoenjahn, 201-1317; 207 NW 567

Allegation of ownership or mortgageable interest. A petition in mortgage foreclosure need not allege that the mortgagor owned the land or had a mortgageable interest therein; neither need it allege that the mortgagor is estopped to deny such ownership or interest because the execution of such mortgage worked such estoppel in and of itself.

Watts v Wright, 201-1118; 206 NW 668

Equitable relief for fraud. In action for equitable relief and damages, where proof justified the purely equitable relief of quieting title and cancellation of mortgage because of fraud, entry of personal judgment for damages against grantee was proper.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Receiver for rents—estoppel to question. A mortgagor is estopped, in foreclosure proceedings, to question the appointment of a receiver for the rents of the mortgaged premises when it was made with his consent, and for his benefit, and recognized by him without objection throughout some three years of protracted proceedings.

Wenstrand v Kiddoo, 222-284; 268 NW 574

Appointment of receiver. A mortgagee who consents to the appointment of a receiver in foreclosure proceedings in which the court would not otherwise have made the appointment may not, on change of mind, recover of the receiver funds properly applied by him.

Malvern Bank v Swain, 203-616; 213 NW 216

Unrecorded mortgage—estoppel to assert lien. Naked proof that, during the time the mortgagee of land neglected to record his mortgage, the mortgagor obtained credit from another, who placed his claim in judgment, is wholly insufficient to estop the mortgagee from insisting on the priority of his mortgage lien. Additional proof of fraud or deception in some form is indispensable.

Brauch v Freking, 219-556; 258 NW 892

Partnerships—personal property of other partner—liability. In equity action to subject junior partner's personal property to payment of judgment against senior partner, evidence held insufficient to show that former acted fraudulently or that he was estopped as against senior partner's judgment creditors to claim such personal property.

Creston Bank v Wessels, (NOR); 232 NW 496

Money advanced on joint representations—suing jointly. Where money is invested with several persons representing themselves to be jointly interested in a hemp production scheme, such joint promoters may be sued jointly notwithstanding one of them asserts that he was not in fact so interested,—he is estopped from denying his interest.

Smith v Secor, 225-650; 281 NW 178

Equitable estoppel—pleading. An estoppel and the facts supporting it must be pleaded.

Securities Corp. v Noltze, 222-678; 269 NW 866

Pleading—sufficiency. An estoppel is properly pleaded by setting forth the facts upon which the estoppel is based, even tho the term "estoppel" is not used.

Bibler v Bibler, 205-639; 216 NW 99

Essential requirements. A good plea of estoppel requires a succinct fact basis and an allegation that because of said facts the pleader has been misled or has detrimentally changed his position.

Federal Land Bk. v Sherburne, 213-612; 239 NW 778

Failure to submit plea—effect. Failure to submit a plea of estoppel to rely on an alleged agreement may be quite harmless in view of the full and explicit instructions on the subject of waiver of the right to rely on the said alleged agreement.

Adamson v McKeon, 208-949; 225 NW 414; 65 ALR 817

Mending hold. Answer reviewed in an action for recovery of double benefits on a life insurance policy, and held not strikeable on motion on the alleged ground that defendant was thereby changing his defensive position after action had been brought on the policy.

Wenger v Assur. Soc., 222-1269; 271 NW 220

Nonnecessity to plead. A mortgagee who seeks to enforce the agreement of a grantee of the land to pay the mortgage debt need not plead that the grantee, by taking and retaining possession of the land, has waived, or is estopped to assert, any defect in the title to the land.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Special plea required. He who relies on a prior adjudication must plead it.

Andrew v Bank, 205-237; 216 NW 12

Probate—belated claimant not entitled to hotchpot. A claimant against an estate who, by grace of the statute and by grace of the court, is permitted, because of "peculiar circumstances", to file and prove his claim after the expiration of the 12 months given for the filing of claims (§11972, C., '27), has no right, when the estate is found to be insolvent, to pursue other fourth class claimants who have filed and had their claims allowed within said 12 months and to recapture and put in hotchpot the payments legally made to them, in order that a new distribution may be made.

Elliott v Bank, 209-1258; 228 NW 274

Inconsistent conduct—contesting will and claiming property as gift. The fact that a daughter contests the probate of her father's will does not estop her from later claiming as a gift a portion of the devised property; nor does the judgment admitting the will to probate constitute an adjudication against her of her claim of gift.

Rapp v Losee, 215-356; 245 NW 317

Real property—assessments. Principle reaffirmed that when property owners stand by and see a drainage improvement made, and take no steps of legal interference, they are estopped to raise the question of validity when called upon to pay their assessments.

Dashner v Woods Co., 205-64; 217 NW 464

Drains—assessments—validity—estoppel. A property owner cannot be deemed estopped to question the illegality of a drainage improvement because of the action of a former owner of the land on which no one relied; nor because the property owner, after he discovered that the work has been substantially completed, entered a formal complaint as to certain defects in the work.

Kelleher v Drain. Dist., 216-348; 249 NW 401

Change of position. A landowner is estopped to deny the effectiveness of his consent to the relocation of an established boundary line after the adjoining landowner has acted on such consent and rebuilt the fence in accordance with the relocation agreement.

Cheshire v McCoy, 205-474; 218 NW 329

Clothing one with apparent title. A creditor who claims that the actual owner of property is estopped to assert his title because such actual owner has so dealt with the property as to apparently clothe another person with the title, and has thereby misled the creditor into extending credit to such other person, must show some actual or implied knowledge on the part of the actual owner that such credit was being extended.

Bihlmeier v Budzine, 201-398; 205 NW 763

Ejectment. A recorded titleholder who learns that his grantor, without authority, has contracted to sell the property, and thereupon consents that the contract may be consummated provided he—the titleholder—receives the purchase price, is not estopped to insist on his title and right to possession thereunder, by receiving part of said sale price, it appearing that the contracting purchaser had no knowledge of such consent and made no payment in reliance on such consent.

Fitch v Stephenson, 217-458; 252 NW 130

Estoppel to dispute husband's title. A wife who permits her husband to take and record title to her lands, and for a long series of years to exercise the usual and customary indicia of ownership, is estopped to assert her title against the claims of the husband's creditors who have extended credit to him in reliance on his apparent title. So held where the husband, a farmer, became a debtor by reason of having signed notes as a surety.

Farmers Bank v Pugh, 204-580; 215 NW 652

Homestead and nonhomestead property—sale en masse—appropriation of surplus. A junior execution creditor who, at a senior mortgage foreclosure sale, buys in property which, in accordance with the mortgagor's agreement to that effect, is sold en masse, and regardless of the homestead character of part of the property, and who, in so buying, bids an amount in excess of the senior mortgage debt, on the express condition that said excess be indorsed on his junior execution (which is done), and who, with the full knowledge of the mortgagor, and without objection by him, complies with his bid, and after a year for redemption takes a deed, is not thereafter liable to the mortgagor for the amount of said excess on the theory that such excess represents the mortgagor's homestead, on which the junior execution creditor admittedly had no lien. This is true (1) because the mortgagor by his silence has permitted the junior execution creditor to change his position to his detriment, and is estopped to question the appropriation of said excess, and (2) because the mortgagor, by failing to attack said sale, and by demanding said excess under and by virtue of the sale, has confirmed the bid and all matters inhering therein,—i. e., the condition attending said bid.

Phoenix Co. v Vaught, 201-450; 205 NW 792

Knowledge of grantee—nonparticipation in fraud. A creditor will be protected in taking a conveyance from his debtor when the creditor acts solely for his own protection, and not to aid the debtor in defrauding other creditors.

Jordan v Sharp, 204-11; 214 NW 572

Landlord's title—estoppel to dispute. A tenant who remains in undisturbed possession of realty under a lease with an executor, and refuses to quit and surrender said premises at the termination of said lease, may not defend his wrongful possession by or under the plea that the executor had no legal right to lease the land.

Wright v Zachgo, 222-1368; 271 NW 512

Recognizing invalid tax deed—effect. An owner of land who, for his own advantage, recognizes the validity of a tax deed to his land, and thereby causes another to change his position, may not thereafter plead invalidating irregularities in the deed.

First N. Bank v Barthell, 201-857; 208 NW 286

Reconveyance of property. The fractional owner of property who quitclaims his interest to his co-owner in order to enable the co-owner to mortgage the entire property for his own purpose, and who receives from the co-owner an agreement to reconvey, free of incumbrance, within a named time or to pay a named sum, may not, after the mortgage is executed, and after the mortgagee has in good faith agreed to take over the property in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, obtain specific performance of the agreement to reconvey, even tho the mortgagee, before the deal was fully closed, had notice of the agreement to reconvey.

Clarkson v Bank, 218-326; 253 NW 25

Remainderman's offer to pay taxes adjudged by court. Where remainderman offers to reimburse the heirs of a life tenant for delinquent taxes paid by life tenant in such amount as the court may find to be due, it cannot be held that the remainderman recognized or acquiesced in the claim for reimbursement, and is not thereby estopped from refusing to pay.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

Repudiating one's own chain of title. A titleholder who, by contract, repudiates the deeds under which he claims title and agrees that they shall be deemed null and void, thereby estops himself from asserting said deeds against parties who subsequently acquire title in reliance on said repudiation.

Carr v McCauley, 215-298; 245 NW 290

Riparian rights—accretion—apportionment. Riparian landowners interested in accretions to their lands may by agreement, acquiescence, or other conduct, apportion the accretion in a manner and way different than the law would apportion it, and thereby estop themselves, in an action to quiet title, from asserting that land did not pass under their deed because it was not accretion land.

Haynie v May, 217-1233; 252 NW 749

Self-imposed knowledge of vendor. A vendor of land will not be heard to claim that he did not know that his purchaser was holding adversely to him.

Burch v Wickliff, 209-582; 227 NW 133

Surviving spouse—failing to plead and prove election. An adopted son, defending a contribution action growing out of expenditures made by his mother as tenant in common in inherited real estate, and in his answer admitting that his mother possessed by right of dower, but nowhere claiming or assuming his burden to prove that the widow elected to take a life estate in lieu of other dower rights, is estopped to raise such point on appeal or matters corollary thereto.

Yagge v Tyler, 225-352; 280 NW 559

Special interrogatories. One who causes a special interrogatory to be submitted to the jury is estopped thereafter to claim that the record contains no sufficient evidence to support the answer.

Tigue Co. v Motor Co., 207-567; 221 NW 514

Trademark signs. In an action for injuries caused by alleged negligence of filling station operator, the fact that trademark signs of defendant oil company were displayed did not estop it from claiming that it was not the owner of filling station business and that operator was not employee of company, it being a matter of common knowledge that such signs are displayed throughout country by independent dealers.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Trust—establishment and enforcement. A party estops himself from ingrafting a trust on an absolute conveyance of real estate after he has stood by and allowed the grantee to treat the property as his own and to pledge it to grantee's innocent creditors.

Hospers v Watts, 209-1193; 229 NW 844

Consent to change in trustee. An owner of land under trust deed to secure a bond issue, who unqualifiedly consents to a change of trustee, may not thereafter claim that the new trustee is not the proper party to foreclose the trust deed, especially when the bondholders unanimously approve of such change.

Central Bank v Benson, 209-1176; 229 NW 691

Establishment and enforcement of trust. A chattel mortgagee who, knowing that the mortgaged property has been sold without his consent and that the proceeds of the sale have been deposited in a bank to the mortgagor's credit, accepts the mortgagor's check on said deposited proceeds for the amount due under the mortgage, together with security for the payment of said check in the form of an assignment by the mortgagor of the balance of said deposit in the bank (which had failed), thereby estops himself from asserting that said deposited proceeds have always belonged to him and therefore constitute a trust fund in his favor.

Andrew v Bank, 209-273; 228 NW 12

Knowledge and acceptance of benefits. Beneficiaries of a trust will not be heard in equity to assert the invalidity of a lease entered into by their trustee, when they (1) had full general knowledge thereof, (2) long acquiesced therein, (3) accepted and retained the rentals arising from the lease, and (4) knew at all times that the lessee was relying thereon at great expense.

Bowman v Coal Co., 201-1236; 207 NW 591

Trusts—loss of right against innocent grantee. The owner of an equitable interest in land loses all right (1) to establish his interest as a trust in the land, and (2) to personal judgment against the grantees of the land, when, after refusing a proffered deed to the land, he knowingly permits the legal titleholder to convey the land by quitclaim deed and for a valuable consideration to another equitable interested party who had no notice or knowledge of said first party's claim; and especially is this true when the consideration for the quitclaim deed was at all times a senior claim.

Brenton Bros. v Bissell, 214-175; 239 NW 14

Witness—estoppel to change testimony. A clerk of the district court who testifies, in an action to which he is not a party, that he has "in his hands" the amount of a tender deposited with him, will not, in a later action against him by one of said litigants who relied on said testimony and thereby materially altered his position, be permitted to show that at the time of so testifying he did not have said money "in his hands" because he had already lost it by failure of the bank in which it was deposited.

Andresen v Andresen, 219-434; 258 NW 107

Truthful answer to inquiry. The holder of a mortgage on the individual share of an heir does not estop himself from insisting on his mortgage because, upon receiving a subsequent inquiry whether there was any incumbrance on the estate, he truthfully answered in the negative.

Halbert v Halbert, 204-1227; 214 NW 535

VIII PLEADING

Motion to dismiss—optional rights. When a motion to dismiss an equitable action is sustained, the plaintiff may (1) stand on his pleadings and appeal, or (2) amend.

Schwartzendruber v Polke, 205-382; 218 NW 62

Mandamus—petition—motion to dismiss as proper attack. Attack on mandamus petition should have been made by a motion to dismiss rather than by a demurrer, since statutes provide that mandamus shall be tried as an equitable action, and that a petition in equity may be attacked by motion to dismiss.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Motion to consolidate actions by plaintiffs. Two personal injury actions arising out of the same accident and brought against the same defendant cannot be consolidated on motion by the plaintiffs for altho equity has the power to consolidate causes of action to avoid multiplicity of suits, the right to move for a consolidation of causes of action in law is by statute granted only to the defendant, and a plaintiff has no such right.

Brooks v Paulson, 227-1359; 291 NW 144

Technicalities ignored. In equity action seeking the appointment of a receiver, defendant's contention, that a receiver could not be appointed because no main cause of action was stated, was without merit, since plaintiff was in fact seeking to foreclose a lien on rents and had asked for general equitable relief, the rule being that "equity does not deal in technicalities, but rather it seeks to ascertain the true intent of the pleading filed".

Wagner v Securities Co., 226-568; 284 NW 461

Trust—essential allegation. In an action to establish a bank deposit as a trust fund, an allegation as to the trust character of the deposit is all-essential.

Peterson v Bank & Trust, 219-699; 259 NW 199

Unallowable repetition—procedure. The filing of a petition once held insufficient is properly reached by a plea to the jurisdiction, or by a motion to strike, treated as such plea.

Schwartzendruber v Polke, 205-382; 218 NW 62

IX EVIDENCE GENERALLY

Appeals—weight of court's findings. In the trial of an equity case where the credibility of the witnesses is in issue, great weight will be given to the findings of the trial court.

Panama Bank v Arkfeld, 228- ; 291 NW 182

Equity proceeding to establish heirs—triable de novo. In a probate proceeding to assist administrator to determine heirs of intestate, it being determined upon appeal from (1) the form of the pleadings as prescribed in equity, (2) the record of proceedings indicating use of equitable powers, (3) the reception of evidence under equitable procedure, and (4) rulings of the court reserved as in equity, that such proceeding, having been conducted in a manner wholly foreign to procedure at law, was tried in equity and therefore was triable de novo on appeal.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Estoppel—nonchange of position. Estoppel may not be predicated on conversations and negotiations which induced no change in the position of a party.

School District v Morris, 208-588; 226 NW 66

Accord and satisfaction. Evidence exhaustively reviewed in an equitable action wherein was involved the issue of accord and satisfaction, and, inter alia, held that it is not in accord with reason that an aged and experienced, and financially involved, business man would convey property of substantial value (and the last remnant of his once ample fortune) for no consideration whatever except that the grantee would pay to the public authorities the taxes thereon.

Stuart v Beans, 221-307; 263 NW 816

Sale for delinquent taxes not carried forward—insufficient tender. A tax sale for delinquent taxes not carried forward will not be set aside in equity nor the deed issuance restrained when the titleholder's offer to do equity by tendering such taxes as "constitute a valid lien" and "actually paid" by the purchaser is a disingenuous tender.

McClelland v Polk County, 225-177; 279 NW 423

X DISMISSAL

Motion to dismiss equitable action—authority. There is no statutory authority for a motion to dismiss an equitable action at the close of plaintiff's testimony.

Appanoose Bureau v Board, 218-945; 256 NW 687

Motion to dismiss. If any of the grounds of a motion to dismiss petition for construction of a will are well-taken, it is not error to sustain such motion.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

Motion to dismiss in equity—operation and effect. A defendant who, at the close of plaintiff's testimony in an equitable action, makes and stands on a motion for judgment in his own favor and for dismissal of plaintiff's pe-tion, in effect, announces that he rests his case.

Haggin v Derby, 209-939; 229 NW 257

Trial after dismissal. A judgment entered as the result of an attempted trial after plaintiff had dismissed his action is a nullity as to the dismissing plaintiff when the defendant's pleadings were purely defensive.

Eclipse Co. v Kepler, 204-286; 213 NW 809

Unallowable equitable action. An order of court which, in bank receivership proceedings, mistakenly grants, under a misapprehension of the law, an absolute preference in payment of the deposit of a municipality may not, on the ground of such mistake, be set aside by an independent action in equity by other depositors and creditors of the insolvent bank, when such depositors and creditors neither (1) appealed from said order nor (2) entered, in the receivership proceedings, any objection to such order.

Schubert v Andrew, 205-353; 218 NW 78

When trial precluded. The dismissal of an action by plaintiff before trial, even tho it is an equitable action which involves the liability of a defendant-city relative to various claimants for work and materials on a public improvement, deprives the court of all jurisdiction thereafter to proceed with the trial and adjudicate any right of the dismissing plaintiff's when the pleadings of the defendant are solely defensive.

Eclipse Co. v Waukon, 204-278; 213 NW 804

XI PARTICULAR ACTIONS

(a) IN GENERAL

Appeals triable de novo. Equity appeals are triable de novo both as to the facts and the law.

Kurth v Ins. Co., 227-242; 288 NW 90

Avoidance of multiplicity of law actions. A strict action at law may not be brought and maintained in equity on the mere allegation that thereby a multiplicity of actions will be avoided. So held where plaintiff sought, in equity, to recover not only presently accrued, but future possibly accruing weekly total disability benefits under a policy of accident insurance.

Gephardt v Ins. Co., 213-354; 239 NW 235

Constructive trusts solely cognizable in equity. An action to establish and enforce a constructive trust, e. g., an action to recover funds to which plaintiff has equitable title against a defendant who holds the legal title, must, on timely motion by the defendant, be tried as an equitable action, (a) even tho plaintiff disclaims all equitable relief, and prays for a money judgment only, and (b) even tho, under plaintiff's allegation defendant obtained possession of the funds by fraud practiced on a third party, but under circumstances excluding any inference or presumption that he received the funds for the use and benefit of plaintiff.

Markworth v Bank, 212-954; 237 NW 471

Fraud between banks—constructive trust not established. The plaintiff bank, in failing to establish that the defendant bank was guilty of fraudulent conduct in aiding the plaintiff's cashier to conceal a shortage in his accounts, thereby failed to establish any basis for a constructive trust against the assets of the defendant bank for the amount of the shortage, or a basis for requiring the defendant bank to be held to account for the loss.

Community Sav. Bk. v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Decree—broad power under general prayer for relief. A court of equity, in dealing with and adjusting involved and complicated matters of fact, has exceptionally broad power to effect equity and justice when both parties pray for general equitable relief. Illustrated where defendant, who was the owner of coal lands, and those working in conjunction with him, had wrongfully interfered with the rights of lessees, and were held liable in a reasonable amount for permanent improvements placed in the mine by lessees, even tho said improvements became worthless, it appearing that defendant's misconduct had materially contributed to said latter condition.

Interpleader—availability of remedy. The pre-code equitable action of "interpleader" is available to an insurer who is faced by different, mutually hostile claimants to the amount due under the policy, which amount the insurer admits less deduction provided by the policy. And said insurer will be entitled to an injunction restraining the institution or further prosecution against him of separate actions on the policy by said warring parties.

Equitable Life v Johnston, 222-687; 269 NW 767; 108 ALR 257

Accounting—burden of proof. In action for accounting plaintiff has burden to prove account and show balance and amount due.

Palmer v Manville, (NOR); 228 NW 20

Accounting—evidence. Evidence reviewed, in an action for an accounting, and held that an assignment of a claim by plaintiff to defendant was absolute and not for collection for the benefit of plaintiff.

Moore v Bolton, 220-258; 260 NW 676

Accounting—inconsequential plea. In an action on a contract to recover a money judgment for plaintiff's interest in certain property, the plea of an intervenor who claims an interest in the property that there must first be an accounting between plaintiff and defendant is of no consequence where there is no evidence that defendant has ever paid plaintiff anything on his claim.

Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Debt due—prerequisite proof. In actions in which an accounting is sought to determine the balance due from one party to another, it must be alleged and established that something is due before an accounting will be undertaken. This rule does not apply, however, in cases where an accounting is asked of a trustee who is under duty to account.

Burkey v Bank, (NOR); 256 NW 300

Duty to account as unavoidable preliminary issue. The court has no authority, in an action for an accounting, to appoint, without the consent of the defendant, a referee to take the accounting, until defendant's plea that he is under no legal duty to account is first determined adversely to the defendant.

Benson v Weitz' Sons, 211-489; 231 NW 431

Agreement excluding increase in livestock—accounting denied. Where defendants, in consideration of cancellation of debts, deeded farm to plaintiffs and gave bill of sale for farm personalty under agreement that defendants would operate farm, and as payment therefor take increase from livestock and surplus crops not needed for feeding livestock, plaintiffs were not entitled to accounting for produce or increase of livestock, but only for property turned over by plaintiffs under the contract.

Russell v Moeller, (NOR); 268 NW 60

Contract not to change son's legacy—creditor bank estopped as to other legacies. Where a son is indebted to a bank, and his father contracts with the bank to make no change in his will respecting a $10,000 bequest to the son, and bank seeks liability against all of father's property, there is no estoppel against the other heirs claiming the son's indebtedness be deducted from any bequest payable to him.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Affirmation (?) or rescission (?) of contract. A purchaser of land, after he has given notice of rescission and moved off the land, will not be held to have elected to affirm the contract and to recover damages at law by bringing an action which is entitled neither at law nor in equity, and which prays for the same money relief to which he would be entitled on a rescission, even tho the petition as it stands would be triable at law.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

Boundary line between farm buildings—grantor's alleged use and occupancy of buildings denied. In a special action to determine the true location of an east and west half-section line, where the grantor, owning the entire west half of the section, sells the north-west quarter, thinking his barn and corncrib were situated south of the half-section line, whereas a survey showed the buildings to be situated north of the half-section line, grantor's claim of a reservation of the use and occupancy of the barn and corncrib and ground appurtenant thereto under an implied easement on the theory that the barn and corncrib were necessary to the use and enjoyment of the land retained by grantor, could not be sustained, since the use of such buildings was just as essential to the part sold, in proportion to the acreage, as it was to the part retained.

Dyer v Knowles, 227-1038; 289 NW 911

Easements—part of single ownership conveyed—implied easement or reservation—clear intent of parties necessary. Principle reaffirmed that, where real estate has been used under single ownership and as a unity, one part of it may be burdened with a use which is largely or entirely for the benefit of another part of it, and when divided by devise, descent or sale, one part may be burdened or benefited by an implied reservation or granting of an easement right if it is apparent and necessary, but such implied grant or reservation must be clearly within the intention of the parties.

Dyer v Knowles, 227-1038; 289 NW 911

Rescission of contract—wife denying husband's agency. A wife, owning a rooming house, sold on the fraudulent representation of her husband, made in response to purchaser's direct question, that the furnace heated the upstairs rooms, will not, in purchaser's action to rescind and recover the down payment, be permitted to deny her husband's authority to represent her and at the same time retain the down payment as fruits of the deceit.

Smith v Miller, 225-241; 280 NW 493

Rescission of contract—defaulting plaintiff. Plaintiff vendee, after first defaulting under a contract for the sale of real estate, may not in equity, while still in default, rescind the contract because defendant vendor had later allowed a prior mortgage on the real estate to be foreclosed, and, therefore, had no title to deliver if plaintiff fully performed.

Fitchner v Walling, 225-8; 279 NW 417

Liability for corporate debts. The personal and individual liability imposed by statute (§8380, G., '24) on the corporate directors and officers for corporate debts to which they have knowingly consented, and which are in excess of the indebtedness permitted by law, is a liability which is enforceable, not by action at law by each creditor in piecemeal, and against one or more or all offending officers and directors, but by an action in equity for and on behalf of all creditors, wherein may be adjudicated, once for all, the extent of liability of each defendant and the extent of right of each creditor.

Platner v Hughes, 200-1363; 206 NW 268; 43 ALR 1141

Unpaid stock subscriptions. An action by a receiver of a dissolved corporation to collect on the unpaid stock subscriptions of various parties must be by separate, ordinary proceedings at law, and not jointly in equity when the demand is solely for a money judgment; and this is true even tho in equity a multiplicity of suits would be avoided.

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 215 NW 261

Damages by surface waters. Surface water collected by one landowner and drained by tile to the land of another's servient estate, where it is there conveyed by the latter's tile to the lands of a second servient estate, all through the natural course of drainage, is not such subject of damages as to entitle the third estate owner to equitable relief; especially when it is not shown that he was substantially damaged thereby.

Johannsen v Otto, 225-976; 282 NW 334

Fraud—presumption and burden of proof. Fraud is never presumed. He who alleges its existence must establish it by clear, convincing and satisfactory evidence. Principle applied in an equitable action to set aside and cancel certain financial obligations allegedly obtained by fraud.

Eckhardt v Trust Co., 223-471; 273 NW 347

Judgment creditors and mortgage holders—proper intervenors. In an action between copartners for receivership and accounting, holders of mortgages and deficiency judgments against land purchased in name of some partners for partnership purposes held proper intervenors.

Heger v Bussanmas, (NOR); 232 NW 663

Moratorium act—unallowable independent action. An independent action in equity to secure, under the moratorium act, an extension of time in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale, and to enjoin the plaintiff in foreclosure from procuring a writ of possession, is not maintainable, all such matters of relief being determinable in said foreclosure proceedings.

Brown v Lincoln JSL Bank, 221-42; 265 NW 115

Municipal corporations—demand for legal salary. A city officer, who has not, for a series of months, received his full salary as legally fixed by ordinance, may not, in an equitable action, compel the city to pay him the deficiency when, during said time, he has properly received an unknown amount of fees belonging to the city (or county) but has illegally retained them as salary and makes no offer to return said fees.

King v Eldora, 220-568; 261 NW 602

Excessive assessment—nonestoppel. A property owner is not estopped to assert that his property has been assessed in excess of 25 percent of its value because he (along with a majority of the property owners) had petitioned for the improvement, and in the petition had waived the 25 percent limitation, when the record made by the city council shows that the petition was ignored, and that the improvement was ordered solely on the motion of the council.

Nelson v Sioux City, 208-709; 226 NW 41

Probate—claim against deceased's realty. In an equity action to establish a claim against deceased's real estate for services rendered deceased's widow to whom deceased devised such realty for life, with right to dispose of real estate for her necessary support, held, such action was not a "suit for construction" of will, merely because trial court's opinion mentioned word "construction", but not in such manner as to indicate that trial court held action to be for that purpose. A will which in plain and uncertain terms makes disposition of property is one which needs no construction.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Debt-encumbered remainder—equitable action to enforce. Where a testator devises to his wife a life estate in all his property (which estate she accepts), with remainder to his children, a provision of the will to the specific effect that "all just debts and funeral expenses" of said wife shall be paid out of testator's estate, will enable the wife's creditor, who became such subsequent to the probating of the will and the closing of the estate, and shortly prior to the death of the wife some thirty years later, to maintain an action in equity to establish the debt, and to subject the lands, passing under the will and in the hands of remaindermen, to the satisfaction of said debt.

Diagonal Bk. v Nichols, 219-342; 258 NW 700

Devise—life estate (?) or fee (?)—mortgage validity. Where a will devised land to a son to use until son's youngest child became 20 years old, or if such child died before such age, then until January 1, 1940, when the land became the property of the "son and his heirs", a mortgage placed on the land by the son, although before 1940, is a valid lien, not merely on a life estate, but on the fee, and an equitable action by son's children against the mortgagee and others to establish title in the land was properly dismissed.

Hudnutt v Ins. Co., 224-430; 275 NW 581

Dower—assignment or setting off—recognized methods. The statutory provisions for admeasurement of dower do not exclude the setting off of dower by an action in equity, by partition, or by any other appropriate action.

Ehler v Ehler, 214-789; 243 NW 591

Independent action reopening estate—judgment appealable. A judgment for plaintiff in a separate independent action in equity brought, not against an administrator but against the surviving spouse and heir, seeking to set aside the order in probate approving the final report and closing the estate, is a final judgment such as will entitle the defendant to appeal.

Federal Bank v Bonnett, 226-112; 284 NW 97

Equitable liens—improvements on land of another. One who places improvements on land solely because of his confident belief that his wife will ultimately become a devisee of the land will not, in case the land is otherwise willed, be accorded an equitable lien on the land for the value of said improvements.

Grecian v Steele, 208-1359; 227 NW 341

Release on basis of mistaken diagnosis. Where a settlement and release of a personal injury claim involved a mistaken diagnosis by the injured person's doctor, his statements are binding on the defendant, although he was not connected with the defendant or its liability insurance carrier, since the inquiry, not involving fraud, centers on the existence of and good-faith reliance on the mistaken diagnosis.

Jordan v Brady Co., 226-137; 284 NW 73

Representations as to priority of mortgages—owner's liability. Where owner of property represented to bank from which he was borrowing money that only specified mortgages were superior to those offered to bank as security for loans, and bank relied thereon, law of estoppel will not permit owner to acquire mortgage and assert its priority contrary to representation and agreement, since to allow such mortgage priority would constitute fraud, and equity requires owner to make his promises and representations good.

Stoner v Cook, (NOR); 229 NW 696

Specific performance—discretionary matter. Specific performance is largely a matter of discretion with the trial court and not a matter of absolute right.

Hotz v Equitable, 224-552; 276 NW 413

Cashing conditional down-payment check—claim of mistake. In an action for specific performance of a land purchase contract, the act of an agent having power to contract in allowing a down-payment check to be cashed when it bears a notation, of which he is aware, that it is not to be cashed until and unless the contract is accepted, furnishes support for a finding in equity that the contract was accepted, even tho the agent later claims that the check was cashed by mistake.

Hotz v Equitable, 224-552; 276 NW 413

Mutual wills enforced as contract. Clear and satisfactory evidence that husband and wife entered into a mutual contract, and in accordance therewith executed mutual and reciprocal wills providing for the disposition of all their property to each other and to certain named beneficiaries upon the death of survivor, entitles beneficiaries to specific performance thereof and to restrain probating of another will, executed by husband after the wife's death, making provision contrary thereto.

Child v Smith, 225-1205; 282 NW 316

Trusteed special assessment certificates. Where a corporation, dealing in securities, owns a group of special assessment certificates for public improvements, and places them in a trust, against which trust are sold certain "ownership certificates" issued in numerical order as representing an interest therein and redeemable in their numerical order, and when, subsequently, it becomes apparent that the trust is insolvent, an application by the trustee to the court for instructions as to whether payment was to be made in numerical order or pro rata was properly decided for the pro rata method on the equity rule of equality and proportionate distribution of the remaining assets.

Iowa-Des M. Bank v Dietz, 225-566; 281 NW 134

(b) REFORMATION AND CANCELLATION GENERALLY

Reformation—implied contract. A court of equity cannot reform a written contract, let alone an implied contract.

Snell v Kresge Co., 220-837; 263 NW 493

Evidence mandatorily required. A written instrument will not be reformed because of a mutual mistake unless said mistake is established substantially beyond a reasonable doubt. Evidence held insufficient.

Fischer v Bockenstedt, 215-319; 245 NW 352

Mutual mistake or fraud—proof necessary. To entitle a person to reformation of a contract, there must be some showing of fraud, ambiguity, or mutual mistake, and the general rule is that proof must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing. A contract cannot be reformed on grounds of both mutual mistake and fraud, as such claims would be mutually destructive. Evidence insufficient to warrant finding of fraud or mutual mistake.

Wall v Ins. Co., 228- ; 289 NW 901

Futile reformation. An instrument will not be reformed when the reformation asked would be entirely futile.

State v Kronstadt, 204-1151; 216 NW 707

Nonnecessity to reform. No necessity exists for reforming a written instrument when the party thereto has a legal right to orally contradict it because his controversy is with a stranger to the instrument.

Nissen v Sabin, 202-1362; 212 NW 125; 50 ALR 1216

Proceedings and relief—absence of required plea. A plea of fraud, accident, or mistake, is a condition precedent to the right to reform any written instrument.

Sargent v Ins. Co., 217-225; 251 NW 71

Deed without contract assumption of mortgage. The holder of a mortgage on land may not have a deed to a subsequent purchaser so reformed as to embrace an assumption by the purchaser of the payment of the mortgage, on the naked plea that the purchaser, in buying the land, contracted to pay such mortgage. This is true because such contract assumption was subject to cancellation by the vendor and purchaser at any time before the mortgagee had assented to the assumption, and the passing of a deed without the incorporation therein of such assumption generates a presumption that the contract assumption had been abrogated or in some manner canceled.

American Bk. v Borcharding, 201-765; 208 NW 518

Action to cancel trust deed. An action to cancel a trust deed (which in legal effect is a mortgage), and the lien thereof, and to quiet plaintiff's title to the land is strictly local, and is properly brought in the county in which the land is situated, even tho plaintiff also prays for the cancellation of the promissory notes, a proceeding which would be transitory if separately brought.

Eckhardt v Trust Co., 218-983; 249 NW 244; 252 NW 373

Deed as mortgage—consideration. A warranty deed may not be decreed to be a mortgage when the daughter-grantee pays a good-faith and complete consideration to her father, the grantor.

Witousek & Co. v Holt, (NOR); 224 NW 530

Cancellation of sheriff's certificate—issuance of deed restrained. An action to enjoin issuance of sheriff's deed and to cancel certificate held properly brought in equity as against contention that §11792, C., '24, furnished exclusive remedy.

Paulsen v Hansen, (NOR); 216 NW 762

Defense—negligent acceptance of deed. Reformation of a deed which wrongfully obligated the grantee to pay an existing mortgage on the land will not be denied because the grantee was guilty of a measure of negligence in accepting the deed, it appearing that the objectionable clause was quite successfully camouflaged by other language of the deed.

Betz v Swanson, 200-824; 205 NW 507

Cancellation—want of consideration. Want of consideration in itself will not warrant the setting aside of a deed, it being competent for a grantor to make a gift of his property and, although want of consideration is a good defense to an executory contract, a deed is not such a contract, but instead represents a contract executed and a conveyance fully accomplished.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Wife's deed for husband's debt—cancellation—consideration—estoppel. Wife who was not illiterate, and who deeded her land in payment of husband's notes, and who, by placing deed in husband's hands, clothed him with apparent authority to deliver the deed, thereby inducing creditors to surrender other land owned by the husband, is estopped from questioning the validity of the deed. The consideration to wife was advantage to husband and detriment to creditors.

Allen v Hume, 227-1224; 290 NW 687

Insurance premium notes—evidence establishing cancellation. In action to cancel insurance premium notes where evidence, clearly admissible against administrator of deceased insurance agent, established that check and two notes were delivered to agent for payment of premium and that insurer rejected application for insurance, such evidence warranted cancellation of the notes and established agent's liability for the unaccounted part of the check as against administrator of the agent's estate.

Economy Co. v Ins. Co., 227-1123; 290 NW 82

Excessive deed. A deed which is shown by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence to embrace a larger portion of an originally integral tract of land than the grantor and the grantee mutually intended, will be so reformed in favor of a nonnegligent grantor as to meet the mutual intent of said parties.

Taylor v Lindenmann, 211-1122; 235 NW 310

Making contract for parties. Reformation of the description of land sought to be conveyed is unthinkable when the vendee would be compelled to take, under such proposed reformation, land which he in part clearly did not intend to buy, and would lose land which he unquestionably intended to buy.

Cahail v Langman, 204-1011; 216 NW 765

Motion to separate actions—nonright to withdraw answer. In an action (1) to cancel a deed and (2) to set aside the probate of a will on the ground of mental incapacity of the testator-grantor—both instruments having been executed by the same party and at the same time—it is not necessarily error for the court to refuse to permit defendant to withdraw his answer in order to permit defendant to file motion to separate the alleged separate causes of action and to transfer to the law docket.

Walters v Heaton, 223-405; 271 NW 310

Particular description followed by recital of acreage—effect. In a reformation action a deed to a governmental described 20-acre division of land, but containing the recital "containing 18½ acres, more or less", does not convey a tract of 1½ acres contained in said division and already conveyed by the grantor to another grantee.

Montgomery Co. v Case, 212-73; 232 NW 150

Performance of contract—deed. A decree which correctly, by metes and bounds, describes the land which was mutually sold and purchased, impliedly reforms the grantor's deed, which inadvertently described slightly less acreage than as correctly described by the decree.

Elliott v Horton, 205-156; 217 NW 829

Refusal to surrender advantage. The grantee in a deed of conveyance who has obtained a decree quieting his title on the plea that the deed was in satisfaction of the grantor's prior mortgage on the land may not, while insisting on all the advantages accruing to him under the decree, have the deed so reformed as to include the grantor's homestead, on the claim that the homestead was mistakenly or fraudulently omitted from the deed.

Galvin v Taylor, 203-1139; 212 NW 709

Tax deed—evidence. Evidence held insufficient to show that a mortgagee had, in taking his mortgage, agreed, inter alia, to pay a tax sale certificate under which he subsequently took a tax deed.

Proctor v Williamson, 205-127; 215 NW 593

Evidence required. To justify the reformation of a written instrument, the evidence must be clear, satisfactory and convincing and free from reasonable doubt. So held in an action to reform the term of a bond, the evidence being held insufficient.

Olin Assn. v Bank, 222-1053; 270 NW 455; 112 ALR 1205

Reformation of instruments—evidence required. Principle reaffirmed that a contract will not be reformed except on clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence establishing the grounds alleged. Evidence held insufficient to meet the rule.

Runciman v Bailey, 217-1034; 250 NW 630

Burden of proof. The plea of alteration of an instrument will be disregarded in the absence of evidence by the pleader not only that the alteration was material, but that it was made after delivery.

Monona County v Gray, 200-1133; 206 NW 26

Evidence—burden which complainant must carry. An instrument will not be reformed on the ground of mutual mistake unless the supporting testimony is clear, satisfactory, and convincing beyond a mere preponderance of the evidence, nor will such reformation be granted if the complainant has been guilty of inexcusable neglect in not having the instrument read; and especially is this true when a reformation will detrimentally affect the intervening rights of innocent third parties.

Galva Bank v Reed, 205-7; 215 NW 732

Evidence—sufficiency. Reformation of an instrument can only be decreed on testimony which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

King v Good, 205-1203; 219 NW 517

Evidence must be clear and satisfactory. A court of equity will only reform a written instrument when it is moved to do so by clear and satisfactory evidence of a mutual mistake or other reason for reformation.

Knott v Ins. Co., 228- ; 290 NW 91

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held sufficient to justify such reformation of a deed as to show that the grantee had assumed and agreed to pay a mortgage on the property.

American Bank v Borcharding, 205-633; 216 NW 719

Reformation of deed—evidence—sufficiency. A deed will not be reformed by striking therefrom a clause wherein grantee assumes an existing mortgage when the testimony of mutual mistake consists wholly of the conclusions of the witness and is otherwise uncertain.

Peilecke v Cartwright, 213-144; 238 NW 621

Evidence—insufficiency. A contract for the sale and purchase of real estate will necessarily not be so reformed as to render it a contract for sale at a stated sum per acre, when the testimony preponderates in favor of a contract for a lump-sum price.

Davis v Norton, 202-374; 210 NW 438

Documentary evidence—judgment—admissibility against stranger. A final decree and the pleadings relating thereto may, in some cases, be admissible in a subsequent action to prove an ultimate fact even tho the party against whom the decree is offered was not a party to the decree. So held where the decree was received to prove the judicial cancellation of a contract of sale upon which cancellation depended the validity of a promissory note sued on.

Pigee v Lichtenstein, 214-315; 242 NW 59

Mandatory degree of proof. Plaintiff seeking the reformation of a written instrument must fail unless he establishes by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence—by evidence exceeding a mere preponderance—by evidence approximating proof beyond a reasonable doubt—the definite contract which the executed writing does not embrace. Evidence reviewed in detail under a prayer for the reformation of a lease, and held insufficient to comply with the rule.

Stillman v Bank, 216-957; 249 NW 230

Official survey on court order—evidence sufficient to support confirming report. In an action for reformation of description by metes and bounds in realty mortgages and for their foreclosure, evidence held sufficient to support judgment confirming surveyor's report, where surveyor is permitted to testify, without objection, that he was qualified to make the survey and that the plat of survey prepared by him is a true and correct survey showing the property in question and made in accordance with a previous order of court and such plat, after identification, was introduced in evidence without objection.

State Bank v Mapel, 226-1328; 286 NW 517

Parol or extrinsic evidence affecting writings—"exceptions" catalogued. The so-called "exceptions" to the parol evidence rule may be stated thus: Parol evidence is admissible,

1. To establish grounds for the reformation of a written contract.
2. To establish the unnamed consideration for a unilateral written contract.
3. To establish a distinctly separate and complete contract contemporaneous with, and non-contradictory of, a written contract.
4. To establish the conditional delivery of a written contract, and the failure of said condition.
5. To complete a written contract which shows on its face that it is fragmentary and incomplete.

In re Simplot, 215-578; 246 NW 396

Parol evidence rule. The rule of evidence which forbids oral testimony to contradict or vary the terms of a written contract has no application to proceedings in equity where a mistake in the contract is alleged, and its reformation demanded.

Floberg v Peterson, 214-1364; 242 NW 13

Parol evidence rule—nonapplicability. The parol evidence rule is not applicable to a proceeding to reform an instrument.

In re Jenkins, 201-423; 205 NW 772

Proceedings and relief—evidence—sufficiency. To justify the reformation of an instrument in the language of a bill of sale so it will stand as a chattel mortgage, the supporting evidence must be more than a preponderance. It must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Scott v Menin, 216-1211; 250 NW 457

Grounds—mistake and fraud. A written release and quitclaim of all the interest of an heir in an estate will be reformed on a showing that one party thereto was mistaken in its scope and that the fraud of the other party was responsible for the mistake.

In re Jenkins, 201-423; 205 NW 772

Grounds—fraud plus unilateral mistake. A showing (1) that a grantor either mistakenly or fraudulently inserted in his deed a clause binding the grantee to pay an existing mortgage on the land, contrary to the prior contract of the parties, and (2) that the grantee without undue negligence accepted said deed without knowledge of said clause affords ample ground for the reformation of said deed.

Betz v Swanson, 200-824; 205 NW 507

Grounds—degree of proof. Reformation of an instrument on the ground of mutual mistake cannot be granted except on very clear, satisfactory, and convincing proof of the mistake, because otherwise the court might unwittingly make a contract for the parties.

Phillips v McIlrath, 205-1126; 217 NW 429

Negligence—effect. Negligence in signing an instrument is not necessarily fatal to a plea for reformation, especially when the equities are strongly in favor of the pleader.

Steele v Kluter, 204-153; 214 NW 522

Negligence in signing. The maker of an instrument may not have it reformed by striking material matters therefrom, when he had unlimited and unimpeded opportunity before signing to learn just what was in the instrument, but negligently failed to inform himself.

Turnis v Ballou, 201-468; 205 NW 746

Negligence—mutual mistake. Reformation will be denied in a proper case for negligence in failing to read a written instrument but will be granted for a mutual mistake arising from the negligence of both parties.

Conrad v Ins. Assn., 223-828; 273 NW 918

Mutual mistake—description in deed—evidence—sufficiency. Where the grantor of land executed to grantee a quitclaim deed to a strip of land 10 feet wide to provide grantee a wider, better way over grantor's land to the highway, and the evidence of grantor's attorney, who prepared quitclaim deed, shows there was no consideration for the deed and no other land was mentioned except the 10-foot roadway, this testimony being uncontradicted by defendant, the trial court's findings and decree reforming the deed, so as to except any accretions to the 10-foot strip described, was justified on the ground of mutual mistake of all the parties in not expressly excepting the accretions from the deed.

Right of action—negligence barring relief. A party who has no excuse whatever for signing a writing without reading it, or without requesting a reading of it, will not be granted reformation. And the rights of the wife of the signer insofar as she is interested in the writing, tho not a signer thereof, will be foreclosed by her like inexcusable neglect to read or request the reading of the instrument.

Stillman v Bank, 216-957; 249 NW 230

Negligence—mistake—evidence—sufficiency. A deed of conveyance will not, on the plea of the grantor, be reformed by inserting therein an assumption by the grantee of an existing mortgage, when the grantor executed the deed without reading it, though he was able to read, and was not prevented from reading, when his testimony in support of a mutual mistake is neither satisfactory nor convincing; and especially when the grantee has, in the meantime, justifiably changed his position in reliance on the omission of the assumption clause.

Scover v Gauley, 209-1100; 229 NW 684

Mistake—evidence. Evidence held quite insufficient to show any mistake in the reservation in a conveyance of an easement.

Spalding v McCartney, 207-1025; 221 NW 665

Mistake. The statute of limitation does not commence to run against an action to reform a deed on the ground of mutual mistake until the mistake has been discovered.

American Bank v Borcharding, 205-633; 216 NW 719

Adopting wrong instrument to accomplish purpose—effect. The execution of an ordinary, unconditional promissory note and mortgage on the mutual supposition of the parties thereto that said instruments would exactly carry out their agreement that one of them would pay the other a life annuity only, is not such mistake of law as will prevent reformation of the note and mortgage to meet the mutual purpose of the parties; but, of course, the proof of mutual mistake must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Floberg v Peterson, 214-1364; 242 NW 13

Mistake affecting interest. A deed cannot be reformed by one who is not a party thereto unless the mistake claimed therein affects his interest.

American Bk. v Borcharding, 201-765; 208 NW 518

Contracts—revocation for mistake. Mistake as a basis to set aside a settlement, release, accord and satisfaction or covenant not to sue, must be a mutual mistake of an essential fact, inducing the execution of the instrument.

Jordan v Brady Co., 226-137; 284 NW 73

Mistake—dragnet clause in mortgage. A dragnet clause in a mortgage, to the effect that the mortgage shall stand as security for any other debt which the mortgagee may hold or acquire against the mortgagor, will be stricken from the mortgage on proper plea for reformation, and on proof that, by the use of a printed form, the said clause was inadvertently embraced in the mortgage by both parties.

Pospishil v Jensen, 205-1360; 219 NW 507

Mistake—fraud—evidence—sufficiency. Reformation of an instrument because of the mistake of plaintiff and fraud on the part of defendant will not be decreed except on clear, satisfactory, and convincing proof of the existence of said grounds. Evidence held insufficient.

West v Hysham, 214-349; 242 NW 18

Mistake and fraud—evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held ample to justify the reformation of a deed because of the mistaken, and fraudulently induced, omission therefrom of a clause reserving to grantors a life estate in the land in question.

Foote v Soukup, 221-1218; 266 NW 904

Mistake—gross negligence in failure to read. The maker of an instrument may not avoid it because he did not have knowledge of its contents, when he failed to avail himself of admitted ability to read and of unrestricted and uncircumvented opportunity to read.

Charlson v Bank, 201-120; 206 NW 812

Instruments reformable—mistake. A written contract between a drainage contractor and the board of supervisors which inadvertently departs from the terms of the bid and the acceptance by the board will be reformed on an application in equity.

Gjellefald v Drainage Dist., 203-1144; 212 NW 691

Mistake—omission of lands from mortgage-judgment creditors. A mortgage may be so reformed as to correct the mutual mistake of mortgagor and mortgagee in omitting certain lands from the mortgage, even against a judgment creditor of the mortgagor's, who became such after the mortgage was executed.

Davis v Bunnell, 207-1181; 225 NW 6

Mistake tolling statute. A mortgagee, seeking to reform his mortgage to correct an error in the real estate description and escape the statute of limitations on the ground of mutual mistake which tolled the statute until discovered, has the burden of showing he did not discover the error until a time within 5 years before bringing action, and without which proof the statute operates as a bar.

Beerman v Beerman, 225-48; 279 NW 449; 118 ALR 997

Mutual mistake—conflicting testimony. Circumstances and attending facts bearing on the issue of reformation because of mutual mistake may be ample to establish such mistake even tho the parties are hopelessly at war in their personal testimony relative to such issue.

Steele v Kluter, 204-153; 214 NW 522

Recovery of payments—mutual mistake—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed in an action to recover back money alleged to have been paid under a mutual mistake for heat furnished, and held insufficient to establish such mistake.

Thomas v Central Co., 217-899; 251 NW 616

Mortgages — omitted tract — reformation against non-innocent incumbrancers. A plaintiff-mortgagee, after having foreclosed his purchase money mortgage and purchased the land at execution sale, discovering that one 80-acre tract was erroneously omitted from the mortgage and sale, and that mortgagor, having discovered the error, had executed another mortgage thereon as security for an old loan to parties with notice and knowledge of plaintiff's equitable right in the land, is entitled to a reformation of his mortgage, since later mortgagees were not innocent incumbrancers.

Winker v Tiefenthaler, 225-180; 279 NW 426

Mortgages—assumption of mortgage debt—no consideration. Where an instrument is executed without consideration on the part of a grantee, to assume and pay the mortgage debt, the contract is not binding upon him, or if the deed is delivered in blank, or the conveyance made as security only, or if a clause is inserted by fraud, inadvertence, or mistake, without the knowledge or acquiescence of the grantee, he may have the instrument reformed in equity so as to make it express the true intent and understanding of the parties.

Guarantee Co. v Cox, 201-598; 206 NW 278

Conclusiveness of judgment. A decree in mortgage foreclosure that the mortgagee is not entitled to the reformation of a deed from the mortgagor to a subsequent purchaser so as to show an assumption by such purchaser of the mortgage debt is not an adjudication that the mortgagor is not entitled to such reformation, even tho the mortgagor was a party to the foreclosure, but not a party to the mortgagee's petition for reformation.

American Bank v Borcharding, 205-633; 216 NW 719

Dragnet clause securing multiple debts. A general clause in a mortgage to the effect that the mortgage shall stand as security for any debt in addition to the debt specifically secured which the mortgagee may hold or acquire against the mortgagors or either of them will be wholly eliminated on a prayer for reformation on proof that said clause was contrary to the mutual intent of the mortgagors and mortgagee when the mortgage was executed, because to hold that said clause was enforceable under such circumstances would be to countenance a legal fraud. And all this is true tho the mortgagors did not read and were not prevented from reading the mortgage when it was executed.

Commercial Bank v Ireland, 215-241; 245 NW 224

Estoppel—insufficiency. A mortgagee cannot be estopped to insist on a reformation of his mortgage so as to include mistakenly omitted land simply because a subsequent judgment creditor had omitted to levy on the unincumbered land and collect his judgment.

Davis v Bunnell, 207-1181; 225 NW 6

Discrepancy between mortgage and application for loan. A mortgage to secure a loan will not be reformed by striking therefrom a material clause on the ground that such clause was not embraced in the application for the loan, when the application was a naked proposal for the loan, did not assume to be a contract in itself, and did not provide for the various terms and conditions of the mortgage in case the application was accepted.

Turnis v Ballou, 201-468; 205 NW 746

Nonestoppel. A mortgagor who, in foreclosure proceedings, withholds his plea for a reformation of his deed to a subsequent purchaser in order to show an assumption of the debt until the mortgagee has unsuccessfully attempted to secure such reformation, and who actively seeks to aid the mortgagee in such attempt, does not thereby estop himself from interposing such plea after the mortgagee's attempt has proven a failure.

American Bank v Borcharding, 205-633; 216 NW 719

Mortgage on homestead. A mortgage which is duly and jointly executed by a husband and wife on part of their homestead, when they unquestionably intended to embrace in the mortgage the entire homestead, is so reformable, on proper showing of the mistake, as to make the instrument in form exactly what it always has been in law; and such reformation is not violative of the statute (§10147, C., '24) which declares conveyances of the homestead invalid when the husband and wife do not join in the execution of the same joint instrument.

Rankin v Taylor, 204-384; 214 NW 725

Relief barred by fraud. A mortgagor's prayer for cancellation of a mortgage on the plea of payment will be denied when, in connection with the transaction on which the claim of payment is based, he dishonestly obtained from the mortgagee, and without the knowledge of the latter, a sum exactly equal to the claimed payment.

Strahan v Strahan, 205-92; 217 NW 436

Right in general—ineffectual reformation.

A contract between a mortgagor of real estate and a purchaser of the land, wherein the purchaser assumes the payment of the mortgage, will not be reformed in proceedings to foreclose the mortgage, by inserting in the contract a maturity date which is different from the admittedly true maturity date as specified in the mortgage, because such reformation could not possibly affect the mortgagee.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Tract omitted from mortgage. Equity will not only reform a mortgage between the parties by including an omitted tract so as to carry out their intentions but also against subsequent purchasers with notice.

Winker v Tiefenthaler, 225-180; 279 NW 436

Reformation—abuse of discretion in refusing. A court of equity abuses its discretion when it refuses to reform a written contract wherein the owner of property lists it with a broker for sale and binds himself to pay a commission in case a sale is made, even by himself, when it is shown, by clear, satisfactory, and convincing testimony, that the oral preliminary contract which the parties attempted to reduce to writing embraced the definite, mutual understanding that no commission would be payable if the owner made a sale to his then tenant, and that said understanding was inadvertently omitted from said writing. (In this case the owner made a sale to his tenant and was later sued by the broker for a commission.)

Milligan Co. v Lott, 220-1043; 263 NW 262

Bail bond—necessary parties. A bail bond will not be reformed when the defendant on whose behalf the bond was given, and who signed it, is not before the court.

State v Kronstadt, 204-1151; 216 NW 707

Statutory bonds. A statutory bond may not be so reformed as to defeat its purpose.

Leach v Bank, 205-975; 213 NW 612

Reformation of promissory note—change of venue. An equitable action for the reformation of a promissory note, by changing the name of the payee, and for judgment on the note as reformed, cannot be maintained in the county wherein the note by its terms is payable, when the defendant's residence is elsewhere in this state, and he properly moves for a change of venue.

Palmas v Tankersley, 218-416; 255 NW 514

Defenses—merger of prior contract. The principle that a contract for the sale of real estate is, as a general rule, merged in the subsequently executed deed has no application to an action wherein reformation of the deed is asked in order to make it harmonize with the prior contract.

Betz v Swanson, 200-824; 205 NW 507

Dissolution of partnership. A partnership settlement on dissolution may be so reformed that it will show that it does not embrace partnership assets discovered subsequent to the dissolution and then unknown to the partners.

Power v Wood, 200-979; 205 NW 784; 41 ALR 1452

Dissolution of partnership—by order in equity—insufficient ground. A partnership or joint adventure for a definite contract term will not be cancelled and terminated by a court of equity before the time fixed by the contract, on the ground that such quarreling and bickering between the parties have resulted as to render inadvisable the further continuance of the undertaking, when the applicant for the cancellation and termination of the contract is the only one of the parties who has done any quarreling or been guilty of any bickering.

Green v Kubik, 213-763; 239 NW 589

Joint adventures—dissolution in equity. Assuming, arguendo, that proof that a joint undertaking had proven to be a losing venture is sufficient to justify an order of dissolution, by a court of equity, of a joint undertaking, yet evidence reviewed, and held insufficient to so show such fact.

Green v Kubik, 213-763; 239 NW 589

Cancellation of instruments—divorce. In divorce action, trial court was justified in cancelling notes and deeds from husband to wife for lack of consideration, under statute empowering court to make proper disposition of the property of the parties.

Graham v Graham, 227-223; 288 NW 78

Duress—required showing. A contract obtained by so oppressing a person, by threats regarding his personal safety or liberty as to deprive him of the free exercise of his will and prevent the meeting of minds necessary to a valid contract, may be avoided on the ground of duress. So held in case of mortgages and notes.

Guttenfelder v Iebsen, 222-1116; 270 NW 900

Erroneous finding against garnishee. Concede that a finding by the court that the garnishee was indebted to the defendant in attachment was erroneous, nevertheless such fact furnishes no basis for enjoining the enforcement of the judgment entered on such finding, when the court was proceeding under fully acquired jurisdiction.

Farmers Exchange v Iowa Co., 201-78; 203 NW 283

Forgery—insufficient evidence. Evidence held insufficient to show forgery of a mortgage.

McDaniel v Life Co., 210-1279; 232 NW 649
McDaniel v Bank, 210-1287; 232 NW 653

Incomplete contract. A court of equity may not reform a written instrument by supplying any element necessary to give it validity, or by compelling the party in default to supply the omitted element. So held where the court was asked to compel or order one of the makers of a note payable "to ourselves" to indorse the note.

In re Divelbess, 216-1296; 249 NW 260

Laches—when no defense. Delay, on the part of the signer of an unmatured, negotiable promissory note, in bringing action to cancel the note for want of consideration, is quite immaterial when the delay has not been harmful to anyone.

Sterner v Bank, 221-1362; 268 NW 158

Excessive lease. A written lease which is shown by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence to embrace a larger portion of integral premises than the lessor and lessee mutually intended, will be so reformed as to meet the mutual intent of said parties.

Kanofsky v Woerderhoff, 211-1175; 235 NW 305

Oral wage agreement. An oral wage scale agreement applicable to the first few weeks of employment, incorrectly reduced to writing by employer's agent, but correctly followed in paying wages which was not challenged by employee during the several years he continued in this employment, justifies a reformation of the writing to conform to the oral agreement.

Koch v Abramson, 223-1356; 275 NW 58

Personal contract reformed to show contract as representative of another. A written contract of sale of property purporting to obligate the purchaser personally will, on clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence that the purchaser was acting as guardian only, be so reformed as to avoid the mutual mistake or oversight.

Kowalke v Evernham, 210-1270; 232 NW 670

Policy of insurance. A mutual mistake as to the location of insured buildings is reformable.

Jack v Farm Ins., 205-1294; 217 NW 816

Wrong motor numbers not invalidating liability policy. Motor numbers in an automobile insurance policy are only for the purpose of aiding in identifying the car, and, tho the numbers be wrong, a liability policy will not be invalidated if the car is otherwise properly identified, for which purpose other evidence may be resorted to, and, if sufficient, will cure the error without resort to a proceeding in equity to reform the policy.

Fucaloro v Standard Co., 225-437; 280 NW 605

Public improvements—void contract—unjust enrichment as basis for recovery. No basis for recovery against a city, on the theory that the city has been unjustly enriched and must pay therefor, is established by proof of the reasonable value of that which the city has received.

Roland Co. v Carlisle (Town), 215-82; 244-NW 707

Remedies of buyer. The purchaser of goods manifestly may not have his note and mortgage canceled on the claim of payment unless he establishes such payment.

Rogers v Hale, 205-557; 218 NW 264

Right of action—nudum pactum. An unmatured negotiable promissory note, in the hands of the original payee, will be canceled, in equity, as to a party who signs it without consideration after the transaction giving rise to the note as to the other signer had been fully closed without obligation on the part of said other signer to obtain the additional signature in question.

Sterner v Bank, 221-1362; 268 NW 158

Transfer of funds by check—reformation. Where, "for the bona fide transfer of funds" a cashier's check is purchased by one who supposed he was receiving a draft (and the bank official so knew), the court may treat the check as a draft in order to afford the check holder a preference in case the bank becomes insolvent before the check is paid.

Reason: So treating the check constitutes, in effect, a proper reformation of the check to comply with the mutual understanding of the parties.

Andrew v Bank, 216-1165; 250 NW 487

Vendor and purchaser both defaulting—equity directing performance, rescission and redemption. In a vendee's action to rescind a real estate contract and promissory note, supreme court may invoke broad equitable power to protect both vendor and vendee by allowing vendor, after his mortgage on the real estate had been foreclosed, to negotiate vendee's note to provide funds with which to redeem, on the condition that he apply the proceeds to the mortgage indebtedness and then pay the remaining mortgage indebtedness so as to deliver a clear title to vendees at the time fixed in the contract, or suffer a cancellation of the real estate contract and note.

10942 Action on note and mortgage.

Action at law—pendency of foreclosure in foreign state—effect. The right of a party to maintain in this state an action at law to recover of the maker of bonds the balance due after foreclosure, in a foreign state, of the securing mortgage, will not be denied on the plea that the foreclosed property is yet in the hands of the foreclosing receiver and that the amount of rents which will be derived thereunder is not made to appear, when the evidence demonstrates that the utmost that can be realized will not pay taxes and other expenses.

Minnesota Co. v Hannan, 215-1060; 247 NW 536

Action on note—prima facie showing. In an action on a promissory note, the introduction of the note with proof of the genuineness of the signature thereto makes a prima facie case for the plaintiff.

Pfeffer v Corey, 211-203; 233 NW 126

Allowable legal and equitable actions at same time. Where each of a series of matured, mortgage-secured, promissory notes of the same maker possesses the same grade of lien, and is, by a trust agreement executed by the various noteholders, placed in the hands of a trustee with power to institute such actions as he may deem fit in order to effect collection, the trustee may maintain and carry on at the same time an action at law on a portion of said notes, and an action in equity to foreclose the mortgage for the remainder of the notes.

Iowa T. & L. Co. v Clark, 215-929; 247 NW 211

Claims acquired during foreclosure—inde- pendent action to enforce. Where, pending foreclosure action, plaintiff acquires an additional claim against the defendant, he is not bound to amend and assert said claim in the foreclosure proceedings, but may maintain a subsequent and independent action on the newly acquired claim even tho it pertains to the subject-matter of the foreclosure.

Central Bk. v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

Court's jurisdiction—legal issues. In action for a money judgment, foreclosure of a mortgage and appointment of a receiver, the equity court had jurisdiction of the controversy and parties. The action having been properly brought in equity, all issues, legal and equitable, are triable therein.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

Judgment for installment as adjudication. A judgment for the amount of one installment and interest on a promissory note, being all that was then due on the note, is not an adjudication of an action to recover a future maturing installment and interest, the note not containing an accelerating clause maturing the entire indebtedness in case of a default.

Andrew v Stearns, 215-5; 244 NW 670

Judgment in equitable action. The holder of unquestioned, matured promissory notes, secured by a real estate mortgage, is entitled to judgment on the notes, on a proper prayer in an equitable proceeding, even tho the proceeding is not for the foreclosure of the mortgage.

Iowa Bank v Young, 214-1287; 244 NW 271; 84 ALR 1400

Judgment on note alone. A separate judgment on a note does not discharge the mortgage securing it.

Beckett v Clark, 225-1012; 282 NW 724; 121 ALR 912

Land situated wholly in foreign state. A mortgage on land situated wholly within a foreign state may not be foreclosed in this state, tho the mortgagee may maintain, in this state, an action at law on the note so secured.

Beach v Youngblood, 215-979; 247 NW 545

Mortgage foreclosure after judgment on note. A mortgage foreclosure action is maintainable after securing judgment on the note secured thereby.

Beckett v Clark, 225-1012; 282 NW 724; 121 ALR 912

Nonsplitting of action. A mortgagee is not guilty of splitting his cause of action (1) by suing at law on his secured note and proceeding against property of the mortgagor other than the mortgaged property, and (2) by instituting foreclosure proceeding as trustee for other secured noteholders without making any claim therein on his own note.

Iowa T. & L. Co. v Clark, 213-875; 237 NW 336

No presumption foreign foreclosure was in personam. In an action in this state on a foreign, mortgage-secured promissory note, the court will not presume that a foreclosure of the mortgage was on personal service within the jurisdiction of the foreclosing court, on the makers of the note (residents of Iowa), and that, therefore, the note sued on was merged in the foreclosure decree.

Pfeffer v Corey, 211-203; 233 NW 126

Omnibus assignment of error. In an appeal in a law action on a promissory note, tried to the court, where all assigned errors violate supreme court rule 30 as being omnibus in form and supreme court, on its own initiative, could discover no errors, an affirmance and dismissal of the appeal on motion will result.

Pickett v Wray, 225-288; 280 NW 519

Optional remedies to enforce payment. The trustee in a deed of trust securing bonds cannot be deemed to be limited simply to a foreclosure of the deed—cannot be deemed to be excluded from maintaining an action at law against the maker—when the deed confers upon the trustee the widest discretion as to the remedy which he may choose to enforce collection.

Minnesota Co. v Hannan, 215-1060; 247 NW 536

Party defendants in foreclosure. In an action to foreclose a mortgage, it is allowable to join as defendants (1) the maker of the promissory note, (2) the payee-indorser in blank, and (3) all assumptors of the mortgage.

Hansen v Bowers, 208-545; 223 NW 891.

Right of mortgagee to sue at law. A mortgagee has a legal right to sue at law on his mortgage-secured note, and to enforce the resulting judgment against leivable property of the mortgagor other than the mortgaged property.

10943 Ordinary proceedings.

Law (?) or equity (?)—mutual treatment of action. An action mutually treated as a law action, from its inception in the trial court to and including its presentation on appeal, must be treated on appeal as a law action.

Garden v Ins. Co., 218-1094; 254 NW 287

Appeal from fence viewers. Since an appeal to district court from decision of fence viewers is triable as a law action to a jury, if demanded, the supreme court will not interfere with verdict if there is substantial evidence to sustain it. Hence, where parties waived jury on trial of such appeal, the trial court's decision, supported by sufficient evidence, was necessarily affirmed.

Moore v Short, 227-380; 288 NW 407

Application for order in probate. Application for orders in probate which necessitate a construction of a will have no place on the jury calendar, and reversible error results from a refusal to exclude them from such calendar on application of an interested litigant.

In re Watters, 201-884; 208 NW 281

Assignment for benefit of creditors—equity (?) or law(?). The court is inclined to treat an assignment for the benefit of creditors as a proceeding in equity; but howsoever this may be, a proceeding which involves the final report of the assignee and the accounting therein made, and which embraces equitable issues, will be heard on appeal as in equity when so treated by the litigants and trial court.

In re Stone, 220-1341; 264 NW 604

Claims against estate—belated filing—equitable circumstances. While establishing a probate claim is a law proceeding, the determination of the existence of peculiar circumstances relieving the failure to file a probate claim within the statutory period is an equitable proceeding.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Deception constituting fraud—nonright to rely. A plaintiff may not maintain an action at law for damages consequent on fraudulent representations not made to him or his agent.

Markworth v Bank, 212-954; 237 NW 471

Findings in re homestead—conclusiveness. On an application by an executor for an order to sell real estate to pay debts, a finding by the court that certain land was not the homestead of the deceased is conclusive on appeal (1) unless such finding is without substantial support in the evidence, or (2) unless the court erroneously applied the law to conceded facts.

In re McClain, 220-638; 262 NW 666

Law issues in equity—no transfer. Law issues in a suit properly brought in equity are not transferable to the law calendar.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

Taking gravel—injury to mortgage security—measure of damages. A mortgagee, being a lienholder, may not maintain trespass against third persons but must sue for injury to his security, and in taking gravel from mortgaged premises the measure of damages is not the value of the gravel taken but the difference in the value of the premises before and after the taking.

Bates v Humboldt Co., 224-841; 277 NW 715

Unallowable action at law. An action for money had and received cannot be maintained at law under circumstances excluding any inference or presumption that defendant received the money for the use and benefit of plaintiff.

Markworth v Bank, 212-954; 237 NW 471

Unallowable equitable remedy. Equity will not assume jurisdiction to declare illegal and to enjoin the enforcement of a contract between an employer and a local labor union on behalf of the employees when the controversy may readily be presented in a law action.

Des M. Ry. v Assn., 204-1195; 213 NW 264

Unpaid stock subscriptions. An action by a receiver of a dissolved corporation to collect on the unpaid stock subscriptions of various parties must be by separate, ordinary proceedings at law, and not jointly in equity, when the demand is solely for a money judgment; and this is true even tho in equity a multiplicity of suits would be avoided.

10944 Error—effect of.

Discussion. See 20 ILR 106—"Mending, hold doctrine"

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II TRANSFER OF CAUSES
- III ELECTION OF REMEDIES GENERALLY

I IN GENERAL

Equitable action—legal relief. The plaintiff in equity prays for a decree for the specific performance by defendant of the latter's written contract to repurchase corporate shares of stock sold to plaintiff, yet, if plaintiff's alternate prayer be sufficiently broad, the court may, on supporting evidence, enter such a judgment in favor of plaintiff as would be his legal due were his action strictly at law. And, in such case, it is manifestly wholly aside the mark for defendant to contend that specific performance was unallowable (1) because the life of the corporation in question had expired, (2) because of the nature of the property involved, and (3) because the contract in question was nonmutual.

Patterson v Bingham, 222-107; 268 NW 30

Ademption of bequest. A bequest is specific in a will where a note and real estate mortgage securing it were bequeathed to a son of testatrix, and the residuary estate was bequeathed to such son and her grandson; and cancellation by testatrix of the note and mortgage and the taking of title to such real estate in lieu thereof adeems the bequest as respects son's claim that subject matter of bequest still existed but was only changed in form.

In re Keeler, 225-1349; 282 NW 362

Wrong form of action. Supreme court cannot assume jurisdiction on appeal where the matter in issue is not such as was triable in the form of action brought in the trial court below.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

II TRANSFER OF CAUSES

Nonapplicability of statute. The statutory provision for a transfer of a cause from law to equity is not applicable to a cause distinctly brought and tried at law,—a cause wherein plaintiff neither pleads nor proves an equitable cause of action.

Platner v Hughes, 200-1363; 206 NW 268; 43 ALR 1141

Transfer from law to equity sole remedy. Defendant's plea to the jurisdiction of the court because the action is at law, when it ought to be in equity, is unknown to our practice. A transfer on motion to equity is the sole remedy.

Ayres v Nopoulos, 204-881; 216 NW 258
Heileman v Dakan, 211-344; 233 NW 542

Error as to form—exclusive procedure. Mistakenly instituting an action in equity when it ought to be at law must be met by a motion, not to dismiss, but to transfer to the law calendar.

Solberg v Davenport, 211-612; 232 NW 477

Estoppel to allege error. A defendant who, in the trial court, in an action on an unliquidated claim, remains on the equity side of the calendar, without request for transfer to the law calendar, estops himself from complaining on appeal that he was denied a jury trial.

Ober v Dodge, 210-643; 231 NW 444

Contract to purchase estate property—specific performance—equity action. Bank receiver's specific performance action to require heirs to perform contract to purchase receiver's interest in estate property is not lacking in mutuality and is not transferable to law because involving both personal and real property, since equity once acquiring jurisdiction retains it for all purposes, and since cross-petition filed by heirs also asking specific performance, is sufficient reason to deny transfer to law.

Utterback v Stewart, 224-1135; 277 NW 735

Curing erroneous docketing. The erroneous docketing on the equity side of the calendar of an action of forcible entry and detainer becomes inconsequential when subsequent pleadings put title in issue and thereby convert the original law action into an equitable action.

Suiter v Wehde, 218-200; 254 NW 33

Injunction in lieu of certiorari—procedure. It seems that when a plaintiff brings an action in equity for injunction when certiorari is the proper action, the defendant's sole remedy is to move for a transfer of the injunction proceedings into certiorari proceedings.

Zimmerman v O'Meara, 215-1140; 245 NW 715

Law issues in proper equity action nontransferable. Principle recognized that law issues, defensively injected into an action properly commenced in equity, are not transferable to the law calendar.

Bankers Life v Bennett, 220-922; 263 NW 44

Remand in equity—untried law issue. Tho an equitable action is tried de novo on appeal, and modified as to the amount due, yet the entire judgment will be set aside and remanded for trial by the lower court of an issue improperly transferred to the law calendar, and for the final entry of such judgment by the lower court as may be fit and proper.

Pace v Mason, 206-794; 221 NW 455

Transfer from equity to law—undetermined motion—procedure. An undetermined motion by defendant to dismiss an action erroneously pending in equity immediately becomes a demurrer when the action is properly transferred to the law calendar, and must be disposed of as any other demurrer, and with the same consequences.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

Wrong calendar—transfer as sole remedy. A court which has jurisdiction of an action when brought in the right forum has jurisdiction when brought in the wrong forum. The remedy for an incorrect forum is to transfer to the correct docket.

In re Nish, 220-45; 261 NW 521; 100 ALR 1516

III ELECTION OF REMEDIES GENERALLY

Petition to board of review on excessive tax assessment—not exclusion of federal court. Bank's petition to board of review, held, not to constitute a selection of statutory remedy for adjudication of alleged excessive assessment to exclusion of remedy in federal court of equity.

10945 Correction by plaintiff.

Noninconsistent remedies. The commencement of an action of replevin to recover the possession of promissory notes does not constitute the election of a remedy which will preclude the subsequent filing of a substituted petition presenting the controversy in the form of an action in equity.

Pickford v Smith, 215-1080; 247 NW 256

10946 Correction on motion.

Cross-petition—provisional remedies. The right of a litigant to move to transfer an issue from the equity calendar to the law calendar is not a provisional remedy, within the meaning of §11155, C., '27.

Pace v Mason, 206-794; 221 NW 455

Dockets—transfer—exclusive remedy. Motion to transfer is the exclusive remedy when an action has been commenced at law instead of in equity.

Heileman v Dakan, 211-344; 233 NW 542

Error as to forum—failure to file motion—effect. Where an action is commenced in equity and defendants make no motion to change action to law, the action was commenced in the wrong forum, it could remain and be concluded in equity.

Russell v Moeller, (NOR); 268 NW 60

Misjoinder — wrong calendar — waiver. A defendant in equity who files answer after the overruling of his motion (1) to strike alleged misjoined causes of action, and (2) to transfer from equity to law, may not maintain an appeal from the ruling on his said motion.

Thompson v Erbes, 221-1347; 268 NW 47

Motions—nonright to withdraw answer. In an action (1) to cancel a deed and (2) to set aside the probate of a will on the ground of mental incapacity of the testator-grantor—both instruments having been executed by the same party and at the same time—it is not necessarily error for the court to refuse to permit defendant to withdraw his answer in order to permit defendant to file motion to separate the alleged separate causes of action and to transfer to the law docket.

Walters v Heaton, 223-405; 271 NW 310

Right to transfer action waived by answer. Defendant in an equitable action, when confronted by an amendment to the petition pleading an action at law in addition to the equitable matters, waives his right to have the law action transferred to the law docket by first filing an answer to said amendment; and this is true tho the equitable issues are later entirely disposed of by decree leaving nothing for determination but the issues raised by said amendment and answer.

Kimmel Inv. Co. v Renwick, 220-362; 261 NW 775

Transfer to equity—return to probate refused. Where an application in probate brought by a trustee under a will asking for directions of the court was transferred to equity on a motion by intervenors after a hearing at which all parties appeared and submitted arguments but did not except to the transfer, it was proper for the court to refuse a motion made eight months later asking that the transfer be canceled, when it was not shown that the rights of the parties could be better determined in probate than in equity, the question being a matter of forum rather than of jurisdiction.

In re Proestler, 227-895; 289 NW 436

Trespass on real estate. Allegations to the effect that defendants on a certain occasion tore down plaintiff's fence, trespassed upon plaintiff's land, and wrongfully removed a building belonging to plaintiff disclose no equitable jurisdiction for the issuance of a mandatory injunction for the restoration of the fence and building; and such action is properly transferred to the law calendar.

Griffiths v Allen, 212-831; 237 NW 219

Unallowable transfer from equity to law. Law issues which are injected by cross-petition into an action properly commenced in equity are not transferable to the law calendar on motion of either party.

Pace v Mason, 206-794; 221 NW 455

10947 Equitable issues.

- III EQUITABLE ISSUES IN LAW ACTION—EFFECT
- IV LAW ISSUES IN EQUITABLE ACTION—EFFECT
- V PRIORITY IN TRIAL OF LEGAL AND EQUITABLE ISSUES
- VI ERRONEOUS TRANSFER OR REFUSAL TO TRANSFER—EFFECT

I ISSUES AND TRIALS GENERALLY

Equitable action not transferable to law. A motion will not lie to transfer an equitable action to the law calendar.

Federal Sur. v Morris Plan, 209-339; 228 NW 293

Nontransfer to equity on cross-petition merely re-stating answer. An action at law to recover bank deposits does not become a suit in equity because of defendant's cross-petition which only served to amplify and repeat the defense pleaded in the answer.

Younkin v Bank, 226-343; 284 NW 151

Equitable and law issues in probate. In appeals involving claims in probate, frequent practice of supreme court has been to review equitable issues by trial de novo, while considering alleged errors assigned in the law action.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Restraint on alienation—no reformation to limited time. Where an individual agrees to construct a grotto on land of a charitable organization, such agreement will not be reformed to restrict alienation for period of individual's lifetime since restraints against alienation are void even for limited times.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Objections to executrix's report—real estate title issue not misjoinder. Where an executrix after resigning files her reports, objections thereto asking that she account for land in another county allegedly purchased with estate money does not misjoin equitable action to impose trust on or establish title in land, but is special probate proceeding to compel executrix to account for assets over which probate court has statutory jurisdiction coextensive with the state.

Loss of right to equitable relief. A duly entered judgment against plaintiff on the merits in a law action, and affirmed on appeal, constitutes a final judgment, and §11017, C., '31, furnishes no authority to plaintiff thereafter to file in the adjudicated law action a "substituted petition in equity" (and motion to transfer to equity) involving the same subject matter, and no authority or jurisdiction to the court to entertain such attempted action.

Phoenix Ins. v Fuller, 216-1201; 250 NW 499

Fraud as defense in law action—nonright to transfer. A defendant in an action at law on a policy of insurance is not entitled to a transfer of the action to the equity calendar simply because he pleads fraudulent representation as a defense and prays a cancellation of the policy.

Beeman v Life Co., 215-1163; 247 NW 673

Fraud as defense to law action—nonright to transfer. A defendant who is sued at law for damages for breach of contract, and who defensively pleads that he was fraudulently induced to enter into the contract, and prays for the cancellation of the contract, is not entitled to an order transferring the action to the equity calendar.

Randolph v Ins. Co., 216-1414; 250 NW 639

Inaccurate stipulation for trial in equity—effect. The trial to the court of a strictly law action on the law calendar under a stipulation that the trial shall be "in the same manner as an equity cause" gives appellant no right to a trial de novo on appeal, it appearing that the cause was treated throughout as a law action.

Hostler Lbr. v Stuff, 205-1341; 219 NW 481

Assignment of part of expected judgment—effect. A transfer of a strictly law action to equity is not required simply because an intervenor, on the motion of the defendant, appears and sets up an assignment of part of the expected judgment as security for a claim held by intervenor against plaintiff, intervenor distinctly disclaiming any interest whatever in plaintiff's cause of action.

Wilkinson v Lbr. Co., 208-933; 226 NW 43

Involved account. An action commenced at law on an account may be very properly ordered transferred to the equity calendar when the account runs through a series of years, is extremely involved and complicated, and necessitates innumerable computations beyond the comprehension of the average juror.

Mann v Wilson & Co., 218-395; 253 NW 506

Law action with prayer for injunction. In an action at law for damages, with auxiliary prayer for injunction to prevent a repetition of the injury, the injunction feature of the action is not transferable to the equity calendar for trial.

Pisny v Railway, 207-515; 221 NW 205; 222 NW 609

Nontransferable to equity. A demand for an accounting is not necessarily transferable to equity. For instance, an action by a surety

(who has paid the debt) against a co-surety for proportional reimbursement is not so transferable simply because of the defensive plea that plaintiff had failed to apply to the debt funds in his hands belonging to the principal, and that defendant was, therefore, entitled to an "accounting".

Brown v Conway, 201-117; 206 NW 665

Replevin nontransferable. An action in replevin, insofar as plaintiff claims a lien on the property replevined, may not be transferred to equity.

Commer. Credit v Hazel, 214-213; 242 NW 47

Replevin—substituted petition in equity—mandatory transfer. A plaintiff who, as the maker of promissory notes, brings an action of replevin against the holder, and obtains possession of the notes on the ground of fraudulent representations and want and failure of consideration in the inception of the notes, and who, without his legal right so to do being questioned, thereupon files an amended and substituted petition in equity praying the cancellation of the notes on the grounds pleaded in the replevin action, is entitled to a transfer to the equity docket and to a trial in equity. This is true because of the favorable rule in equity that fraudulent representations may be established without proof of scienter.

Pickford v Smith, 215-1080; 247 NW 256

Transfer from equity to law—effect. A law action, e. g., quo warranto, commenced as an equitable action and properly transferred by the court to law, will, on appeal, be disposed of as a law action.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

Unallowable transfer to equity. An action of replevin involving mortgaged chattels, and wherein the only issue joined is that of fraud and want of consideration in the execution of the mortgage, cannot be legally transferred to equity for the equitable foreclosure of the mortgage.

McDonald v Johnston, 218-1352; 256 NW 676

Implied contract. A court of equity cannot reform a written contract, let alone an implied contract.

Snell v Kresge Co., 220-837; 263 NW 493

II WHEN EQUITABLE ISSUES ARISE

Proper calendar—equity issues. A foreclosure proceeding wherein an intervener is asking for an accounting by a receiver, and wherein an adverse party is praying for the reformation of an instrument, is manifestly properly kept on the equity side of the calendar.

King v Good, 205-1203; 219 NW 517

Retention of suit to award damages. When plaintiff in an action for specific performance has quite successfully shown that he is not entitled to any equitable relief, equity will not retain the suit in order to award damages.

Fisher v Bank, 206-1105; 221 NW 816

III EQUITABLE ISSUES IN LAW ACTION —EFFECT

Action properly at law—limitation on transfer. In an action properly commenced at law on a policy of insurance, defendant may not complain that his plea of arbitration only was transferred to equity.

Koopman v Ins. Assn., 209-958; 229 NW 221

Implied consolidation. A stipulation by parties that a jury be waived in a law action, and that said action together with an equitable action involving the same general subject matter be tried by the court as an equitable matter, constitutes a consolidation of the actions tho no actual order of consolidation is entered.

Holman v Wahner, 221-1318; 268 NW 168

Belated transfer from law to equity. After a jury has been impaneled, evidence taken, and an amendment raising an equitable issue filed, the court may enter an order transferring the cause to equity.

Benson v Weitz, 208-397; 224 NW 592

Appeal from condemnation award—transfer to equity. In a condemnation proceeding where two separate tracts of land under separate ownerships were treated as being jointly owned, and where, on appeal from a lump sum award covering both tracts, the owners in one count of their petition sought dismissal of the condemnation proceeding, and, where issues of waiver and estoppel as to such irregularity were joined, it was proper to transfer said count to equity so that such issues could be determined in advance of the trial to a jury on question of damages.

Newby v Des Moines, 227-382; 288 NW 399

Claims against estate—belated filing—equitable circumstances. While establishing a probate claim is a law proceeding, the determination of the existence of peculiar circumstances relieving the failure to file a probate claim within the statutory period is an equitable proceeding.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Eminent domain proceeding. An alleged owner of land who appeals to the district court from an award of damages in eminent domain proceedings may not complain of an order which transfers to the equity side of the calendar so much of said appeal as involves the issue whether the condemnor or the appellant owns part of the land sought to be condemned.

Montgomery County v Case, 204-1104; 216 NW 633

III EQUITABLE ISSUES IN LAW ACTION—EFFECT—concluded

Fiduciary relation—proper transfer to equity. A claim in probate is properly transferred to the equity docket for trial on a showing that a confidential relation existed between claimant and the deceased, and that deceased had fraudulently concealed from claimant the existence of certain trust funds belonging to claimant, and had failed to account therefor.

In re Sibert, 220-971; 263 NW 5

Formal transfer excused. Failure to formally transfer an equitable issue of reformation of an instrument in a law action—i. e., a probate proceeding—to equity, will be disregarded on appeal when the issue was determinative of the litigation and was tried to the court without objection.

In re Jenkins, 201-423; 205 NW 772

Preliminary proceedings—motion to transfer to equity—law question. On a motion to transfer to equity an issue as to reformation of contract, the question of transfer is one of law, determinable from the pleadings.

Koch v Abramson, 223-1356; 275 NW 58

Proper law action nontransferable in toto. An action brought on a contract (e. g., a property settlement between husband and wife), and properly brought at law, is not rendered transferable in toto to the equity calendar by defendant's plea of fraud and prayer for a judicial rescission of the contract. Said alleged fraud, if established in the law action, constitutes a complete defense, and remaining equitable issues are properly transferred to and disposed of in equity. Failure, in the law action, to establish said alleged fraud, necessarily removes from the case said equitable issue of rescission.

Poole v Poole, 221-1073; 265 NW 653

Specific performance. In consolidated actions at law, involving a promissory note payable "to ourselves", the issue of specific performance of an oral contract by one of the makers to indorse the note, should be transferred to the equity calendar.

In re Divelbess, 216-1296; 249 NW 260

Wage recovery dependent on reformation. In a law action for wages, allegedly due an employee under contract, where parties stipulate that the employee shall not recover such wages if the defendant prevails on his cross-petition for reformation, transferred to equity on motion, the employee may not thereafter deny the court's right to try the reformation issue and is bound by the decree if not contrary to the evidence.

Koch v Abramson, 223-1356; 275 NW 58

IV LAW ISSUES IN EQUITABLE ACTION—EFFECT

Law issues in proper equity action nontransferable. Principle recognized that law issues, defensively injected into an action properly commenced in equity, are not transferable to the law calendar.

Bankers Life v Bennett, 220-922; 263 NW 44

Law issues in equity—no transfer. Law issues in a suit properly brought in equity are not transferable to the law calendar.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

Unallowable transfer from equity to law. Law issues which are injected by cross-petition into an action properly commenced in equity are not transferable to the law calendar on motion of either party.

Pace v Mason, 206-794; 221 NW 455

Non-right to transfer. The guarantor of a promissory note who is properly joined with the makers in equitable proceedings to foreclose the mortgage given to secure the note is not entitled to a transfer to the law calendar even tho the makers, by defaulting and suffering judgment, leave no issue for trial in the equitable proceedings except the guarantor's liability at law on his guaranty.

Williamsburg Bank v Donohoe, 203-257; 212 NW 555

Right to trial at law. A plaintiff who, in an ordinary action on a promissory note, alleges a fraudulent transfer by defendant of his property, and prays for an attachment and a decree subjecting the property to his judgment, does not by docketing said action in equity, deprive defendant of the right to a transfer to the law calendar of that part of the action which involves his liability on the note.

Federal Res. Bank v Geannoulis, 203-1385; 214 NW 576

Cross-petition at law in equitable action—nontransferability. A defendant in an equitable action who answers therein, and files therein a cross-petition at law, without questioning either the legal sufficiency of the petition or the jurisdiction of the court over such equitable action, thereby waives all right, if any, to have plaintiff's action transferred to the law calendar. Neither has defendant a right to have his cross-petition at law transferred to said law calendar.

Penn Ins. v Doyen, 211-426; 233 NW 790

Complete relief granted tho subject matter partly legal. Principle reaffirmed that equity having once obtained jurisdiction will determine all necessary matters even tho some of them are ordinarily cognizable only at law.

Penn Ins. v Doyen, 211-426; 233 NW 790

Rent and advances—contract for lien—enforcement—proper forum. An action to establish and enforce a contract lien for rent is properly brought in equity, and is not transferable to law, because the answer presents law issues. Held that a contract lien for rent is validly created by a lease provision that the landlord should have, not only the statutory lien for rent, but also a lien upon all property of the tenant used or situated on the leased premises whether exempt from execution or not.

Beh v Tilk, 222-729; 269 NW 751

V PRIORITY IN TRIAL OF LEGAL AND EQUITABLE ISSUES

Equitable and law issues—order of trial—estoppel. The fact that the court first tries the pending equitable issues rather than the pending law issues furnishes no basis for complaint by a party who at the time neither requested a different order of trial nor objected to the order pursued by the court.

Pickler v Lanphere, 209-910; 227 NW 526

Allowance and payment of claims—non-transferability to equity. A simple, unsecured claim for money, filed against an estate by the surviving widow, is not, against the objections of the administrator, transferable to equity for trial. So held as to a claim due the widow under an alleged antenuptial contract.

In re Mason, 223-179; 272 NW 88

Law and equity—consolidation—mandatory order of trial. When litigants submit to the court, for trial by the court, both a law action and an equitable action, the court is under duty to first try the equitable issues if they be such as to dispose of both cases.

Holman v Wahner, 221-1318; 268 NW 168

Appeal from condemnation award—transfer to equity. In a condemnation proceeding where two separate tracts of land under separate ownerships were treated as being jointly owned, and where, on appeal from a lump sum award covering both tracts, the owners in one count of their petition sought dismissal of the condemnation proceeding, and, where issues of waiver and estoppel as to such irregularity were joined, it was proper to transfer said count to equity so that such issues could be determined in advance of the trial to a jury on question of damages.

Newby v Des Moines, 227-382; 288 NW 399

VI ERRONEOUS TRANSFER OR REFUSAL TO TRANSFER—EFFECT

Refusal to transfer. The refusal to transfer from equity to law is quite harmless when the record reveals the fact that movant has no defense in law or in equity.

Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

Refusal to transfer. It is error to refuse a transfer to equity of an issue of reformation arising in a law action.

Power v Wood, 200-979; 205 NW 784; 41 ALR 1452

10948 Court may order change.

Eminent domain — bringing in necessary parties. In eminent domain proceedings on appeal from the award of the sheriff's jury, the court may permit the appellant land owner to amend, and bring in, and join equitable issue of ownership as to a portion of the property involved, with a stranger to the proceedings, and to try out such issue prior to trying out the issue of damages.

McCall v Highway Com., 217-1054; 252 NW 546

10949 Errors waived.

Waiver. A defendant who, in an equitable action for injunction, prays for equitable relief may not, after trial, question the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that plaintiff's action ought to have been at law,—to wit, replevin.

Baxter v Baxter, 204-1321; 217 NW 231

Equity instead of law—estoppel. A litigant may not allow an action in the trial court to remain on the equity side of the calendar without objection, and on appeal, for the first time, claim that the action should have been at law.

Burmeister v Hamann, 208-412; 226 NW 10
Des M. Music Co. v Lindquist, 214-117; 241 NW 425

Petition at law in equitable action—non-transferability. A defendant in an equitable action who answers therein and files therein a cross-petition at law, without questioning either the legal sufficiency of the petition or the jurisdiction of the court over such equitable action, thereby waives all right, if any, to have plaintiff's action transferred to the law calendar. Neither has defendant a right to have his cross-petition at law transferred to said law calendar.

Penn Ins. v Doyen, 211-426; 233 NW 790

Waiver by answer. Defendant in an equitable action, when confronted by an amendment to the petition pleading an action at law in addition to the equitable matters, waives his right to have the law action transferred to the law docket by first filing an answer to said amendment; and this is true tho the equitable issues are later entirely disposed of by decree leaving nothing for determination but the issues raised by said amendment and answer.

Kimmel Corp. v Renwick, 220-362; 261 NW 775

Law (?) or equity (?)—presentation of question. Whether an action brought in equity should have been brought at law can only be raised by a motion to transfer to the law side of the calendar.

Beach v Youngblood, 215-979; 247 NW 545

Wrong docket—waiver. When in an action brought against two defendants in equity one defendant is sought to be charged at law and the other in equity and the equity feature of the action is wholly dismissed, the remaining party waives any right to a transfer to the law docket by failing to move for such transfer.

Minnesota Co. v Hannan, 215-1060; 247 NW 536

Failure to except. Rulings relative to the transfer of a cause from law to equity or vice versa will not be reviewed in the absence of exceptions to the rulings.

Hogan v Perkins, 213-1175; 238 NW 608

Van Dyck v Abramsohn, 214-87; 241 NW 461

Following trial court method of trial. An appeal will be heard de novo when the parties mutually and without controversy tried the cause in equity in the trial court.

State v Automobile, 214-1088; 243 NW 303

Separating issues—required procedure. A party who wishes to separate the equitable issues already joined from a law action, pleaded by the adversary as an amendment, must move to separate before he answers.

Kimmel Corp. v Renwick, 220-362; 261 NW 775

Transfer to equity—return to probate refused. Where an application in probate brought by a trustee under a will asking for directions of the court was transferred to equity on a motion by intervenors after a hearing at which all parties appeared and submitted arguments but did not except to the transfer, it was proper for the court to refuse a motion made eight months later asking that the transfer be canceled, when it was not shown that the rights of the parties could be better determined in probate than in equity, the question being a matter of forum rather than of jurisdiction.

10950 Uniformity of procedure.

Comity between states. A cause of action which is predicated on the statutes of a foreign state will, as a matter of comity, be enforced in the courts of this state, but only under and in accordance with the recognized and prescribed court procedure of this state.

Rastede v Railway, 203-430; 212 NW 751

Service on foreign insurer—physician not agent. An Iowa accident insurance association which has not been licensed to transact its business in a foreign state (in which it has neither office, agent nor property), and whose certificates of insurance are strictly Iowa contracts, cannot be deemed to have subjected itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of such foreign state (1) because a very large number of its certificate holders reside in said foreign state, or (2) because said association, from time to time and by mail from its Iowa office, requests a physician in said foreign state to there examine claimants and to report as to accidental injuries received by claimants,—it appearing that said physician was under no contract obligation to comply with said requests and to make such examinations tho he had done so for several years and had received a stated fee for each separate examination.

Held, the foreign court, in an action on a certificate, acquired no jurisdiction under process served on said physician.

Saunders v Trav. Assn., 222-969; 270 NW 407

10951 Title of cause.

Immaterial deviation. The fact that a guardian brings an action in behalf of the ward as "next friend" does not necessarily affect the validity of the proceedings.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

10952 Judgments annulled in equity.

Enforcement of judgments restrained. See under §12527

Consent decree. Equity will not set aside a consent judgment for attorney fees for both parties in divorce proceedings, against the defeated party and his land, when no fraud is shown, and when the court had personal jurisdiction over both parties to the proceeding.

Coulter v Smith, 201-984; 206 NW 827

Counterclaim—waiver by failure to plead. A party who is sued on a nonnegotiable claim by the assignee or quasi assignee thereof or by one who has been subrogated to the right to the claim, and fails to plead in defense a counterclaim which he then holds against the assignor, whether such counterclaim be liquidated or unliquidated, unconditionally waives the right to use such counterclaim as an offset against the judgment obtained by the assignee or subrogated party on the claim sued on.

Southern Sur. v Ins. Co., 210-359; 228 NW 56

Defense arising or discovered since judgment entered. The fact that a claim, when judgment was entered thereon, had been discharged in bankruptcy, is not a "defense which has arisen or been discovered since the judgment was rendered", and therefore within the power of a court of equity to annul or modify.

Harding v Quinlan, 209-1190; 229 NW 672

Equitable action after one year. What exact limitations a court of equity will impose on itself in exercising its power to vacate a judgment or decree and to grant a new trial because of evidence discovered after the expiration of the statutory one year for vacation and new trial, quare (§12787 et seq.); but such power will not be exercised either (1) when the new evidence was or ought to have been discovered during said statutory period, or (2) when such evidence falls far short of presenting strong equitable considerations, is largely incompetent, and, within the range of competency, is a double-edged sword which militates strongly against the equities of the applicant.

Abell v Partello, 202-1236; 211 NW 868

Failure to do equity. Equity will not set aside a judgment for a debt which complainant admits he owes, and which he in no manner offers to discharge.

Coulter v Smith, 201-984; 206 NW 827

Fraud of judgment plaintiff. A judgment entered against a defendant after plaintiff, for a sinister purpose, had assured defendant that he would not be held on his indorsement of the note in question, and after plaintiff had induced defendant to forego reimbursing himself by a settlement with the maker of the note, will be deemed fraudulent and set aside accordingly.

Foote v Bank, 201-174; 206 NW 819

Void judgment always subject to attack. A void judgment may be attacked in any proceeding in which it is sought to be enforced.

Gohring v Koonce, 224-1186; 278 NW 283

10953 Action to obtain discovery.

Discussion. See 19 ILR 589—Illinois-Iowa procedure; 20 ILR 68—Discovery before trial

Improper use of statute. Principle reaffirmed that the court will not extend its aid to a litigant in his effort to enter upon a roving, gambling expedition for the purpose of discovering his antagonist's evidence.

Scott v Seabury, 216-1214; 250 NW 468

Discovery proceedings—extent of jurisdiction. In a discovery proceeding against a person suspected of taking wrongful possession of decedent's property, where a dispute arises as to ownership of property, neither the trial nor appellate court has authority to order delivery of the property to the executor or administrator unless it appears beyond controversy that the person examined has wrongful possession of the property.

In re Hoffman, 227-973; 289 NW 720

Motions—more specific statement—unreasonable requirement. In an action in the nature of a discovery and for an accounting, plaintiff ought not, under a motion for a more specific statement, to be required to set forth the very facts which he is seeking to discover.

Garretson v Harlan, 218-1049; 256 NW 749

10956 Successive actions.

Statute of limitations on successive actions. See under §11007, Vol I Successive actions on statutory bond.

Philip Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Splitting action. A party to a continuing, executory contract may, notwithstanding the wrongful repudiation of the contract by the other party, insist on the contract and sue and recover the matured installments to date; and such action is no bar to a subsequent action to recover henceforth for the wrongful breach of the contract.

Collier v Rawson, 202-1159; 211 NW 704

Permissible splitting of action. When a promissory note, and the last interest coupon note, both mature at the same time in the hands of the same holder, a judgment in an action solely on the interest coupon note (which contains no promise to pay the principal) is not an adjudication of the amount due on the principal note. In other words, the holder may first sue on the coupon note and later on the principal note.

Des M. Trust Co. v Littell, 209-22; 227 NW 503

Failure to enforce all security in mortgage foreclosure.

Schnuettgen v Mathewson, 207-294; 222 NW 893

Failure to plead available claim in foreclosure.

Miller Bk. v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550
Jones v Knutson, 212-268; 234 NW 548

Allowable partial assignment. The owner of a chose in action has a legal right to assign a part of his interest in such chose, and thereafter to join with the assignee in the prosecution of the entire cause of action.

Welch v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

Future payments—total disability. In action on life insurance policy for total disability payments, where supreme court ordered insurance company in prior case, decided in 1931, to pay annual benefits up to that time, the decision of the trial court in a subsequent action on the same policy ordering payments up to 1937 and thereafter, was erroneous as to that part requiring future payments, particularly since opinion in first appeal is binding not only under the doctrine of stare decisis, but also under the rule of res adjudicata, when the first opinion held that "continuance of such disability must be established by later proofs".

Kurth v Ins. Co., 227-242; 288 NW 90

Mortgagee suing for delinquent taxes omitted from foreclosure judgment—splitting action. A mortgagee who had paid delinquent taxes on the mortgaged land, according to a provision of the mortgage that if taxes were not paid the mortgagee could pay them and obtain repayment, should have taken care of his claim for taxes in the foreclosure proceedings and was not permitted by Ch. 501, C., '35, to split his cause of action and bring an action for the taxes after the mortgagor had redeemed.

Monroe v Busick, 225-791; 281 NW 486

10957 Actions survive.

Discussion. See 3 ILB 196—Instantaneous death; 10 ILB 169—Liability for wrongful death; 11 ILR 28—Liability for wrongful death

ANALYSIS

- I SURVIVAL OF ACTIONS AND RESULTING RIGHTS
- II ASSIGNABILITY OF ACTIONS

Assignment of chose in action. See under §10971
Assignment of nonnegotiable instruments and accounts. See under §9451

I SURVIVAL OF ACTIONS AND RESULTING RIGHTS

What causes of action survive. While the right of an injured employee to compensation under the workmen's compensation act is based on disability, and the right of his dependents to compensation in event of his death is based on loss of support, nevertheless the facts maturing each right are substantially the same, and therefore, in case the injured employee dies while his application for compensation is pending, the cause of action survives to his dependents, they being his "successors in interest" within the meaning of the statute.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

Death of spouse—effect. Principle reaffirmed that the mutual property rights of a husband and wife may be determined after the death of one of the parties.

Melvin v Lawrence, 203-619; 213 NW 420

Damages for death—evidence. In an action for damages for wrongful death, evidence is admissible of the recent purchase, solely on credit, by decedent, of a business, and of the marked reduction by decedent of his indebtedness subsequent to such purchase, together with evidence of his ability, health, and other kindred matters.

Scott v Hinman, 216-1126; 249 NW 249

Assessment on bank stock—liability survives. The cause of action for the enforcement of an assessment on corporate bank stock survives the death of the stockholder, the stock continuing to stand in his name on the books of the bank until the necessity for, and right to, the assessment arose.

Andrew v Bank, 219-1244; 260 NW 849

Alimony—modification by action by executor. Whether an action or proceeding to modify an alimony allowance survives the death of the obligated party, and passes to the latter's executor, quare, but, conceding such survival, there must be proof that the right to such modification existed in the obligated party during his lifetime.

Goldsberry v Goldsberry, 217-750; 252 NW 531

Death of defendant—effect. The death of a defendant in a criminal prosecution, even after trial, conviction, judgment and appeal, but before the final determination of the latter proceeding, works a complete abatement of the proceeding ab initio.

State v Kriechbaum, 219-457; 258 NW 110; 96 ALR 1317

Bonds—enforcement against heirs et al. The bond of a fiduciary, under the terms of which a surety purports to bind "his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives", is not revoked by the death of the surety, and binds the estate of the surety in the hands of his heirs, devisees, or personal representative.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Common law abrogated. The original cause of action that accrued to an injured party survives his death in favor of his legal representatives, the common-law rule to the contrary being abrogated by statute.

Boyle v Bernholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Death of party—appeal not abated. Death of appellee during pendency of divorce appeal to the supreme court does not abate the action when property rights are involved.

Graham v Graham, 227-223; 288 NW 78

II ASSIGNABILITY OF ACTIONS

Joinder—causes assigned for collection—right of assignee. Plaintiff, in an action at law against a defendant, may join in separate counts:

1. Any number of causes of action against defendant of which plaintiff is the unqualified holder, and which are triable at law in said county of suit, and

2. Any number of causes of action against defendant of which plaintiff is holder as assignee for collection only, and which are triable at law in said county of suit.

Carson etc. v Long, 222-506; 268 NW 518

10958 Civil remedy not merged in crime.

Bar of action—acquittal as bar to civil action—penalties—forfeitures. The general rule is that a defendant's acquittal in a criminal prosecution is neither a bar to a civil action against him nor evidence in such action of his innocence; but, when the subsequent action, altho civil in form, is quasi-criminal in nature, as to recovering penalties or declaring forfeitures, the second action may be barred by the former.

Bates v Carter, 225-893; 281 NW 727

10959 Actions by or against legal representatives—substitution.

ANALYSIS,

- I IN GENERAL
- II SUBSTITUTION
- III ACCRUAL OF ACTION
- IV RECOVERY AND DISTRIBUTION

Disposition of recovered proceeds. See under §11920

I IN GENERAL

Action against executor as such. An action at law against an executor as such, in the county in which he was appointed such officer, for damages for personal injuries inflicted by the deceased, is, in legal effect, but an action in rem against the assets of the estate. It follows that the executor is not entitled to demand a change of place of trial to another county of which he is a legal resident.

Van Iperen v Hays, 219-715; 259 NW 448

Collection of estate—breach of contract. An executor may maintain an action for the breach of a contract between the deceased and an heir of deceased by which the latter agreed to pay, as part of the estate, a named sum to another heir.

Rodgers v Reinking, 205-1311; 217 NW 441

Death of partner—action by surviving partner. A surviving partner cannot maintain an action at law against the representative of a deceased copartner to recover plaintiff's share of specific partnership property appropriated by the deceased partner, in the absence of proof that the partnership affairs have been settled and all partnership debts paid.

Dolan v McManus, 209-1037; 229 NW 687

Judgment after death of defendant. Principle recognized that the court having taken a cause under advisement, and delayed decision until after the death of the defendant, may validly render judgment as of the date of the submission.

Chariton Bank v Taylor, 213-1206; 240 NW 740

Statutory double liability repealed—limitation of action. After the effective date of Ch 219 of the 47th G.A., the act repealing the statutory double assessment liability on bank stock, a closed bank's receiver may not maintain against the executor and beneficiaries under the will an action to enforce the double liability as to stock issued prior to December 1, 1933, and formerly owned by decedent.

Bates v Bank, 227-925; 289 NW 735

Surety bond—when enforceable against heir. A claim arising under a bond wherein the surety binds "his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives", and arising after the death of said surety and the due settlement of his estate, is enforceable:

1. Against the property received by an heir, as such, from said ancestor-surety, and

2. Against the property passing from said ancestor and owned by said heir under conveyance for which he paid nothing, and

3. Against the heir, personally, for the value of the property so received if he has consumed it. And this is true even tho, necessarily, said claim was not filed against the estate of said surety.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

II SUBSTITUTION

Appeal in name of deceased party. Altho plaintiff died during pendency of action below, supreme court took jurisdiction of appeal taken in name of such decedent, because parties treated cause as one properly before the court and because it was a case where court's constitutional authority could be invoked.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Death of applicant for compensation—proper substitution. Where an injured employee files with the industrial commissioner, under the workmen's compensation act, his application for compensation, and dies before compensation has been adjudicated, the surviving wife, who is the sole surviving dependent, may be substituted as claimant.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

Death of party without substitution. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Substitution—irregular practice. A plaintiff who permits his action to quiet title to lie dormant until the defendants are all dead is guilty of very irregular practice in his attempt to obtain a substitution of defendants by filing a purported amendment, not under the title of his pending action, but under a new title, in which the heirs of the deceased

II SUBSTITUTION—concluded

defendants are for the first time enumerated and named as the defendants, and, under such title, moving for a substitution of defendants in the old action.

Benjamin v Jackson, 207-581; 223 NW 383

Substitution of administrator. Upon the death of a party plaintiff, his administrator is properly substituted as plaintiff.

Dimon v Wright, 206-693; 214 NW 673

Substitution of county treasurer as defendant without notice. A default judgment entered against a county treasurer who had been substituted as defendant in lieu of a former treasurer, in an action to enjoin the sale of land for taxes, must be set aside when the substitution is made without the service of original notice upon him, and without knowledge on his part, even tho the former treasurer had been negligent in not entering an appearance; and especially is this true when the application to set aside is timely, and accompanied by an affidavit of merit and an apparently good answer.

Dewell v Suddick, 211-1352; 232 NW 118

Belated substitution—discretion. In an action at law by a corporation to recover on a contract, the court has discretionary power during the actual trial and after the jury has been obtained and after some testimony has been introduced, to order plaintiff's assignee for the benefit of creditors to be substituted as plaintiff,—no actual prejudice to defendant being made to appear; and this is true even tho the defendant was, of course, deprived of the privilege of examining the jurors relative to their relations to the said assignee.

Webster County Buick Co. v Auto Co., 216-485; 249 NW 203

III ACCRUAL OF ACTION

Common law abrogated. The original cause of action that accrued to an injured party survives his death in favor of his legal representatives, the common-law rule to the contrary being abrogated by statute.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

IV RECOVERY AND DISTRIBUTION

Dormant action until death of defendants—substitution of heirs—irregular practice. A plaintiff who permits his action to quiet title to lie dormant until the defendants are all dead is guilty of very irregular practice in his attempt to obtain a substitution of defendants by filing a purported amendment, not under the title of his pending action, but under a new title, in which the heirs of the deceased defendants are for the first time enumerated and named as the defendants, and, under such title, moving for a substitution of defendants in the old action.

Benjamin v Jackson, 207-581; 223 NW 383

Workmen's compensation—death of party claiming disability—substitution of dependents for loss of support. While the right of an injured employee to compensation under the workmen's compensation act is based on disability, and the right of his dependents to compensation in event of his death is based on loss of support, nevertheless the facts maturing each right are substantially the same, and therefore, in case the injured employee dies while his application for compensation is pending, the cause of action survives to his dependents, they being his "successors in interest" within the meaning of the statute.

I NEGLIGENCE

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 2 ILB 122; 5 ILB 36—Last clear chance

Interpretation of uncertain and indefinite plea. An indefinite and uncertain plea of negligence may very properly be given an interpretation by the court that is not inconsistent with the plea and which is consistent with the way or manner in which both parties have treated it.

Dean v Koolish, 212-238; 234 NW 179

No warning signal at railroad crossing—statute violations—negligence. The failure of compliance with a statutory standard of care is negligence. In an action for personal injuries sustained by an automobile passenger in collision in Illinois between an automobile and railway motorcar, where petition alleged that railway employees failed to ring bell or sound whistle of motorcar while approaching a crossing, as required by Illinois statute, such allegations were sufficient to state a cause of action based on negligence of employees of defendant railroad.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

Due care—measure affected by conditions. Care commensurate with the dangers inherent in the surroundings is required for the exercise of due care.

Denny v Augustine, 223-1202; 275 NW 117

Ordinary care—definition reaffirmed—first complaint on appeal. The standard definition of ordinary care need not be augmented by adding an extra word "ordinarily" to the phrases "would do" or "would not do under the circumstances", and, without a proper request in the trial court, complaint cannot be made on appeal.

Johnston v Johnson, 225-77; 279 NW 139; 118 ALR 233

Ordinary care—unallowable standard. Error results from instructing that a party would not be guilty of negligence if he moved machinery across a railroad track in the manner in which he usually so moved it, unless he knew such manner to be dangerous.

Graves v Railway, 207-30; 222 NW 344

Physical defect. The doctrine that a traveler upon the public highway must exercise a degree of ordinary care commensurate with a known physical defect necessarily can have no application when he did not know that he had the physical defect in question.

Greenlee v Belle Plaine, 204-1055; 216 NW 774

Intervention of second force—determining liability. Where an injury results through the operation of a second force, ordinarily liability depends upon whether or not that second force may be anticipated to be the natural and probable consequence of the negligent act of the first party.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

"Volenti non fit injuria" defined. The maxim "Volenti non fit injuria" means: "That to which a person assents is not esteemed in law an injury" or "He who consents cannot receive an injury."

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

Evidence—jury question. The court cannot, ordinarily, say that conflicting testimony tending to establish a charge of negligence is per se so absurd and improbable as to be insufficient to generate a jury question.

Elmore v Railway, 207-862; 224 NW 28; 32 NCCA 185; 35 NCCA 421

Contributory negligence—jury question. Principle reaffirmed that a jury question exists on the issue of negligence whenever on the record reasonable minds might reasonably differ as to the effect of what was done or not done under the circumstances.

Rosenberg v Railway, 213-152; 238 NW 703

Submitting both negligence and recklessness. Both questions of negligence and of recklessness may in a proper case be submitted together to the jury.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308

"Last clear chance" doctrine—applicability. The "last clear chance" doctrine has no application except in those cases only where defendant actually discovers plaintiff's position of peril in time to prevent injury by the exercise of ordinary care, and fails to exercise such care.

Graves v Railway, 207-30; 222 NW 344

Assumption of risk—lack of knowledge. An injured party may not be held to assume the risk of a defect of which he had no knowledge.

Dahna v Fun House Co., 204-922; 216 NW 262

Contributory negligence per se—hotel laundry truck—failure to see. Evidence reviewed and held to establish negligence per se on the part of plaintiff in not seeing and avoiding a truck which was standing in the hallway of a hotel.

Walker v Hotel Co., 214-1150; 241 NW 484

Hotels—negligence liability.

Van Heukelom v Hotels Corp., 222-1033; 270 NW 16

Inadvertent self-inflicted injury. One may not recover damages for an injury arising out of his own act, and under circumstances under his exclusive control. So held where the party in removing a prop under a loading chute was injured by the prop falling against his face.

Rodgers v Railway, 214-1018; 243 NW 351

Tripping over mop handle. A naked showing that a pedestrian, while walking along a public street, was tripped and caused to fall by a mop handle in the hands of a window cleaner does not present a jury question on the issue of negligence.

Aita v Beno Co., 206-1361; 222 NW 386; 61 ALR 351

Unsupported issue. An unsupported issue of negligence must not be submitted to the jury. So held on the issue whether a city had negligently maintained its dump grounds.

Nichols Co. v Des Moines, 215-894; 245 NW 358

Depositing refuse on city dump. A person who deposits, on dump grounds provided by a city, discarded materials containing acid or capable of generating acid by a process of decomposition, becomes, henceforth, a stranger to such materials. In other words, he cannot be deemed negligent, toward persons frequenting said grounds, either in making the original deposit or in leaving it unguarded on the grounds. But evidence reviewed and held insufficient to sustain plaintiff's action even on a contrary theory.

Cabrnoch v Penick & Ford, 218-972; 252 NW 88

Negligence of contractor—unanticipated event. A contractor who, while constructing a sewer under the direction of and in accordance with the plans prescribed by the city, is unexpectedly interrupted in his work by the failure of the city to acquire a continuous right of way for the sewer, is under no legal obligation to a property owner to leave his uncompleted work in such condition as will avoid damages which no reasonable foresight would anticipate.

Newton Co. v Herrick, 203-424; 212 NW 680

Governmental function—nonliability. Neither a county, as a quasi corporation, nor its board of supervisors is liable for the negligence of its employee in operating after dark a road maintainer without lights on the left-hand side of a highway, and in an action by a motorist who sustained injuries on account of such negligence demurrers to the petition by the county and its board of supervisors were properly sustained.

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 224-1159; 276 NW 706; 281 NW 837

Drowning in swimming pool. Negligence of a corporation operating a swimming pool in which an 11-year-old boy drowned, could not be grounded upon lack of sufficient attentive life guards, where it had one competent guard who never left his post at the deep water end and no showing was made as to need for more guards and none of the many bathers saw the drowning; and where most of the bathers, including the deceased, were in special groups which had competent life guards and other adult attendants for their own special protection.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Charitable institutions—nonliability to beneficiaries for employees' negligence. Tho as between benefactor and beneficiary, an institution conducted solely for doing charity may not be liable for the negligence of its employees to a person receiving the benefits of that charity; however, a WPA worker doing work on the premises of a Y. M. C. A. was not a beneficiary of the charitable work of the institution, so as to be within this rule.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186

Vicious and runaway team. Evidence held insufficient to establish that a team of horses in question were vicious and addicted to running away.

Hansen v Jensen, 204-1063; 216 NW 677

Failure to warn employee. An employer is not negligent in failing to warn an experienced farm hand of the danger of going in front of a team of horses when the employee had full knowledge of the temperamental condition of the team.

Hansen v Jensen, 204-1063; 216 NW 677; 39 NCCA 431

Master and servant—injuries to servant—place for work—loose rug on polished floor. The maintenance in the doorway between the dining room and hallway of an ordinary home, and on the polished hardwood floor thereof, of a 3-ft. x 6-ft. Persian rug with ribbed undersurface but without floor fastenings of any kind, cannot, as a matter of law, be deemed negligence.

Nelson v Smeltzer, 221-972; 265 NW 924

Unguarded opening in wall—nonattractive nuisance. It is not negligent for a factory owner to maintain on his premises an unguarded opening in a wall under a building adjoining a driveway, when the opening is of a size sufficient to enable a small child to crawl through and under the building and come in contact with hidden machinery.

Nelson v Canning Co., 193-1346; 188 NW 990

Wrecking building—duty in re adjoining tenants. A party rightfully engaged in tearing down a building is under legal obligation to exercise reasonable care for the safety of other persons who are rightfully in buildings adjoining the one which is being torn down.

Crawford v Emerson Co., 222-378; 269 NW 334

Nonpresented theory. Correct instructions relative to the duty of the defendant to guard an excavation made by him are all-sufficient, in the absence of a request by defendant that there be presented to the jury his claim that he had properly covered the excavation and that someone had, without his knowledge, wrongfully removed such covering.

McKee v Iowa Co., 204-44; 214 NW 564

Willful or wanton act—evidence. Evidence, relative to the circumstances under which a visitor in a manufacturing plant was injured by her clothing catching on a revolving shaft, reviewed, and held quite insufficient to reveal any element of willfulness or wantonness in the conduct of an employee of the plant.

Sanburn v Rollins Mills, 217-218; 251 NW 144

Boy drowning in swimming pool at boys' camp—owners of pool—liability. In an action to recover damages for the drowning of an 11-year-old boy who was attending an outing camp, where the camp director had arranged with the Red Cross to provide two swimming instructors and life guards to be on duty at a specified time to protect about one hundred boys at the camp, and when the corporation operating the swimming pool took no part in arranging for life guards, it was not, under the circumstances, negligent in presumably admitting the decedent to the pool a few moments in advance of the time fixed for the entire group and in advance of supervision by the Red Cross instructors and life guards.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Agent's duty to care for principal's property. An agent has the duty to exercise reasonable care in safeguarding the property of his principal, and ordinarily he is not liable for loss of such property resulting from causes other than his own negligence.

Crouse v Cadwell, 226-1083; 285 NW 623

Negligence of tenant—liability of landlord. Principle recognized that a property owner who has parted with full possession and control of his premises by lease is not liable to third persons for injuries caused by the negligence of the tenant.

Updegraff v Ottumwa, 210-382; 226 NW 928

Bailments—gratuitous lender—no affirmative duty to user—injury from borrowed corn shredder. A gratuitous bailor or lender of a chattel, deriving no advantage from the relationship, owes no affirmative duty to his donee to see that the chattel is free from danger, except to inform the donee of known dangerous conditions. Rule applied to loaned corn shredder in which a person injured his hand.

Davis v Sanderman, 225-1001; 282 NW 717

Borrowing automobile to deliver telegraph message. A telegraph company is not responsible for the act of its messenger in borrowing an automobile with which to make a delivery of a message when the usual and ordinary way of making delivery was by means of a bicycle, and when the borrowing aforesaid was wholly unauthorized by and unknown to the company.

Hughes v Western Union, 211-1391; 236 NW 8; 31 NCCA 423

Bailments—duty to user—injury from borrowed corn shredder. A person supplying a chattel for another's use, and who derives some beneficial interest therefrom, must use reasonable care to discover, and is liable for, unreasonable risks due to the condition or disrepair of the chattel or its unfitness or inadequacy for the purpose for which supplied. The user assumes only such risks as are not known and not discoverable by the supplier using ordinary care. Rule applied to corn shredder loaned to neighbor and in which shredder a person injured his hand.

Davis v Sanderman, 225-1001; 282 NW 717

Corn shredder gratuitously loaned—farm machinery mechanic injuring hand in knives—directing verdict. Directing a verdict is proper against a plaintiff, a farm machinery mechanic and salesman, seeking recovery for an injury sustained when his hand was caught in a corn shredder, which had been gratuitously loaned by defendant to a neighbor on whose farm plaintiff was operating the machine, the evidence showing plaintiff was an adult familiar with such machinery and in full possession of his faculties, and that there was no negligence attributable to defendant.

Davis v Sanderman, 225-1001; 282 NW 717

Trespassing boy—jumping from freight car to building. There are cases where the owner of premises will be held liable for injury to a child too young to understand the fact or meaning of trespass, or to care for his own safety when attracted to the premises by some act or omission of the owner which he knows, or as a reasonably prudent person ought to apprehend, would render the premises dangerous. But where, as in this case, a boy 13 years of age climbed upon a freight car standing at defendant's railway station and from there jumped to the roof of a storage building for electric cars, and when about to jump back to the car was injured by contact with an uninsulated power wire passing above the roof of the building, and it appeared that plaintiff knew he was a trespasser, that the railway was operated by electricity and that electric wires were dangerous; that the roof could only be reached by climbing the cars; that this was the first incident of the kind and no necessity for guards or signs had been indicated to the owner, the plaintiff was guilty of such negligence as to preclude recovery for the injury.

Anderson v Railway, 150-465; 130 NW 391

Alighting from moving train. Negligence may be found in the act of a brakeman of a train in advising a passenger to alight from a moving train, and it is not necessarily negligence for the passenger to follow the advice.

Bersie v Railway, 202-1090; 211 NW 250

Nonapprehended danger. Negligence may not be predicated on the failure of the operatives of a train to stop and remove a 7-year-old child from a pile of cinders near the track when there is no occasion to apprehend danger to the child.

Radenhausen v Railway, 205-547; 218 NW 316

Sudden stopping of streetcar. Evidence that a street railway car was put in motion in order to carry it around a corner at two intersecting streets, and was momentarily thereafter brought to a sudden stop because of the unexpected act of an automobile driver in attempting to pass the streetcar and in being caught by the overswing of the rear end of the streetcar, presents no jury question on the issue of negligence in operating the streetcar.

Wheeler v Railway, 205-439; 215 NW 950; 55 ALR 473

Instructions—undue burden. No undue burden is imposed on a defending street railway company by requiring it to keep its car "under proper control and to use ordinary care," to operate its car "in a careful manner and not at a dangerous rate of speed," and to give notice of its approach "by ringing the gong or bell or otherwise," when the pleaded assignment of negligence embraces (1) excessive speed, (2) want of proper control of the car, and (3) failure to give warning of the approach of the car.

Johnson v Railway, 201-1044; 207 NW 984

Failure to instruct on general negligence. There was no prejudicial error in failing to instruct that an action was based on general negligence when, in assigning this alleged error, the defendant stated that the court set out the substance of the petition in stating the issues, but did not show in what manner the jury would have better understood the issues had the court instructed as to general negligence.

Porter v Elec. Co., 228- ; 292 NW 231

Specific negligence—res ipsa loquitur—separate counts. Having received burns from a beauty parlor treatment, a plaintiff, after pleading specific acts of negligence in one count and the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in another count, may at the conclusion of the evidence withdraw the first count and rely on the res ipsa loquitur doctrine which is always applicable in cases where all the instrumentalities are under the control of the operator and where, had ordinary care been used, the injuries would not ordinarily have occurred.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65

Adverse result of X-ray treatment — jury question. While the adverse result attending X-ray treatment, e. g., a burn, is not in and of itself evidence of negligence, yet evidence that such result does not ordinarily follow reasonably skillful treatment, plus evidence that such result may result from too frequent treatment, or from treatment prolonged during a long period of time, and that plaintiff was so treated, may generate a jury question on the issue of negligence.

Berg v Willett, 212-1109; 232 NW 821; 38 NCCA 383

Joint action—evidence. In a joint action against two physicians for malpractice, evidence of negligence on the part of one of the defendants prior to the other defendant's connection with the case is inadmissible.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393

Necessity for amputation—jury question. The issue whether a necessity existed for the amputation of an arm does not become a jury question on general descriptive testimony of laymen, bearing on the appearance of the arm, and tending to show no necessity for amputation, and unanimous expert testimony to the effect that amputation was necessary in order to save the life of the patient.

Jackovach v Yocom, 212-914; 237 NW 444; 76 ALR 551; 38 NCCA 346

Amputation without X-ray picture. The issue whether a surgeon was negligent in failing to have an X-ray picture taken of a broken arm before amputating it does not become a jury question on general testimony by laymen descriptive of the arm opposed by unanimous expert testimony that the extent of the broken, crushed, and mangled arm was plainly apparent without an X-ray picture, the issue being whether amputation was necessary.

Malpractice—other possible causes of injury. In a malpractice action against dentist for injuries caused by lodging of root of tooth in plaintiff's lung, other possible and reasonable causes of the injury were eliminated on the contentions that the object causing injury was not the root of a human tooth, when six laymen testified that it was, even tho there was no expert testimony to this effect; that the object was a calcareous deposit when the defendant, after viewing the object, failed to suggest that it was a calcareous deposit and stated, "We will see you through all this", that no one saw the root at the time it was expectorated when it would have been impossible to see it in the bloody mass of sputum; and that plaintiff could have unknowingly sucked the root into his lung when such objects do not unknowingly pass into the windpipe.

Collections—relying on telephone message.

A bank which receives from a livestock commission company a check on a local bank, payable to a nonresident shipper (for whom the receiving bank was acting as general collector), is not, as a matter of law, negligent if, in attempting to collect the check, it relies on the telephoned statement of the drawee-bank that the drawer has no funds on deposit with which to pay the check, even tho it is made to appear that the check would have been paid if it had been personally presented at later, but unidentified, times during the same or the following day.

Steadman v Bank, 200-347; 202 NW 523

Insurance companies—negligence in issuing policy—liability. An insurance company, even tho it be but a mutual association which reports to assessments on its members for funds with which to pay losses "and necessary expenses", must respond in damages for its tort in negligently failing to issue a policy which had been duly contracted for.

Mortimer v Ins. Assn., 217-1246; 249 NW 405; 35 NCCA 134

Sales—belated and unexplained sale at low price. A sale by a commission merchant at an extremely low price, and on a steadily falling market, and after a long and unexplained delay, may be sufficient to present a jury question on the issue of negligence.

Blanchard v Wood Co., 204-255; 214 NW 583

Truck tire—placing on rim. Where recovery is sought because a minute particle of metal, apparently chipped off of operator's hammer, flew into plaintiff's eye while his truck tire was being repaired by filling station operator, and where there was no showing that tools and methods used by the operator were not those ordinarily used, motion for directed verdict should have been sustained.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

(b) ATTRACTIVE NUISANCE IN GENERAL

Attractive nuisance—basis of theory. In this state, the doctrine of attractive nuisance has its foundation in an implied invitation of the landlord on the theory that the temptation of an attractive plaything to a child of tender years is equivalent to an express invitation to an adult.

Harriman v Afton, 225-659; 281 NW 183

Building reconstruction—attractive nuisance. In an action for damages consequent on a child falling into an opening in the floor of a building which was undergoing reconstruction after a fire, an amendment to the petition, alleging that the building was an attractive nuisance, and offered on the theory of conforming the pleadings to the proof, is properly rejected when the record is bare of any evidence that the said place was attractive to children.

Battin v Cornwall, 218-42; 253 NW 842

City reservoir and raft thereon—attractive nuisance doctrine not applicable. Neither a reservoir maintained by a city on private ground isolated from any public place or playground nor a raft thereon, capable of supporting a man, used to measure the water depth, being inherently an attractive nuisance, a combination of the two will not invoke a different rule.

Harriman v Afton, 225-659; 281 NW 183

Swimming pool not an "attractive nuisance". A swimming pool, either natural or artificial, is not an attractive nuisance.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Concealed amusement device. The maintenance and operation of an amusement device may constitute actionable negligence as to one from whom the maintenance and operation were concealed, even tho it might be otherwise as to one who had full knowledge.

Dahna v Fun House Co., 204-922; 216 NW 262

Dangerous machinery—attractive nuisance doctrine inapplicable. The owners and proprietors of shops and factories may be liable for negligence by exposing and leaving in an unguarded condition in an open or public place dangerous machinery likely to attract children, where their presence may be known or reasonably apprehended; but such owners or proprietors are not precluded from the right to use their appliances and machinery in their own buildings and upon their own premises as may best serve their advantage, and when neither expressly inviting children to enter there or to put themselves in a place of danger they will not be liable for an injury not wantonly inflicted.

Hart v Brick & Tile Co., 154-741; 135 NW 423

Park instrumentality as nuisance. A combined "teeter-totter and merry-go-round" erected and maintained in a city park by the city through its park board, for the sole purpose of amusing children, cannot be deemed an attractive nuisance, even tho said instrumentality is not kept in repair.

Smith v Iowa City, 213-391; 239 NW 29; 34 NCCA 468; 34 NCCA 553; 3 NCCA (NS) 432

(b) ATTRACTIVE NUISANCE IN GENERAL—concluded

Pool of water not "attractive nuisance". A small, but deep and unguarded, pond or pool of water, permitted to form at the outlet of a municipal stormwater sewer, will not be deemed an "attractive nuisance" within the law of negligence.

Raeside v Sioux City, 209-975; 229 NW 216; 30 NCCA 299; 2 NCCA(NS) 734

Water tank and electric transformer not attractive nuisance. The maintenance in a brickyard where children sometimes play of a circular water tank about 11 feet in height, with no inviting or ready means of going up and down the side thereof except a perpendicular, smooth overflow pipe 1¼ inch in diameter extending from the top to the bottom of the tank and at a distance of 8 inches from the outside wall, and the maintenance on the top of the tank of heavily charged electric transformers 4 feet high, without any warning signs of danger, will not be deemed an "attractive nuisance", within the law of negligence.

(c) RES IPSA LOQUITUR IN GENERAL

Res ipsa loquitur—nonapplicability. Record reviewed relative to the fatal injuries received by a party on, in, or about, a freight elevator, and relative to the defendant's control of the operation of said elevator at the time said injuries were received, and held to show the inapplicability of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Boles v Hotel Maytag, 221-211; 265 NW 183

Malpractice—doctrine generally inapplicable. As a general rule, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply in malpractice cases for the reason that the professional man is required to exercise only that degree of care and skill ordinarily exercised by other members of the same profession, in like communities, under similar circumstances; also, the doctor does not have complete and exclusive control over the instrumentality with which he is working.

Whetstine v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Malpractice—root of tooth in lung. While the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not ordinarily apply in malpractice cases, the doctrine was held applicable under the pleadings and proof that plaintiff was given a general anesthetic, was completely unconscious and under the exclusive control of the defendant-dentist at the time his teeth were extracted, and that nine months later he expectorated from his lungs, after a violent spasm of coughing, a quantity of sputum, mucus and blood containing the root of a tooth.

Whetstine v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Carriers—applicability. Principle recognized that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is, under appropriate facts, applicable to common carriers.

Preston v Railway, 214-156; 241 NW 648

Carriage of passengers—res ipsa loquitur applicable tho negligence pleaded specifically. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur may be applicable under one unquestioned count of a petition which alleges negligence generally, notwithstanding the fact that the same cause of action is pleaded in another count under specific allegations of negligence.

Crozier v Hawkeye, Inc., 209-313; 228 NW 320

Limitation of actions—amendment after period has run. The identity of a cause of action is not changed by an amendment (made at a time when the action would otherwise be barred) which strikes from a petition a specific allegation of negligence in furnishing electricity for lighting purposes, and substituting therefor a general allegation of negligence in order to rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Orr v D. M. Elec., 213-127; 238 NW 604

Inflammable gas—explosion. Basis for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is established by proof that pipes and appliances for conducting inflammable gas into a place of business were under the full control of the party furnishing the gas, that gas leaked from said pipes and appliances before it entered the meter, and that a violent explosion resulted from such leakage.

Sutcliffe v Elec. Co., 218-1386; 257 NW 406

Negligence—applicability. The rule of res ipsa loquitur applies where the circumstances attending the injury are of such character that the accident could not well have happened in the ordinary course of events without negligence on defendants' part, and the instrumentalities causing the injury were within exclusive control of defendants.

Peterson v De Luxe Co., 225-809; 281 NW 737

Malpractice—physicians and surgeons. It has seldom been questioned that where the act of omission or commission upon the part of a surgeon has been plainly negligent, as where a sponge, gauze, instrument, or needle has been left in the body, the rule of res ipsa loquitur applies, and that it is also unnecessary to show by expert testimony that such an act does not comport with the required standards.

Whetstine v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Inapplicability. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur has no place in a cause wherein plaintiff rests his action on specific allegations of negligence.

Rauch v D. M. Elec., 206-309; 218 NW 340; 34 NCCA 668

Evidence. Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur held applicable to an accident of which noninsulated electric wires were the proximate cause.

Beman v Iowa Co., 205-730; 218 NW 343; 30 NCCA 635

Pleading. A general allegation of negligence, or a pleading of facts which is equivalent to such allegation, is an essential prerequisite to the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Whitmore v Herrick, 205-621; 218 NW 334; 34 NCCA 670

Dangerous instrumentalities. The full limit of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is that the peculiar facts of the occurrence warrant or permit the jury to draw the inference of negligence, not that such facts compel the jury to draw such inference. The doctrine does not in the slightest degree change the burden of proof on the issue of negligence.

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151; 3 NCCA (NS) 547

Scope. The full limit of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is that the peculiar facts of the occurrence warrant or permit the jury to draw the inference of negligence, not that such facts compel the jury to draw such inference in the absence of explanatory evidence. The doctrine does not in the slightest degree change the burden of proof on the issue of negligence.

Preston v Railway, 214-156; 241 NW 648; 33 NCCA 782

Pleading. Plaintiff who relies on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and pleads facts showing the applicability of such doctrine, may (and should) plead negligence generally—need not (and should not) plead specific acts of negligence on the part of defendant and his employees.

Van Heukelom v Hotels Corp., 222-1033; 270 NW 16

Pleading—waiver. A general allegation of negligence, supportable by the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, is waived by inserting in the same count a specific allegation of negligence; but the rule is otherwise when the different allegations are in different counts and when the issue arising on the general allegation is alone submitted because of the dismissal by plaintiff of the count containing the specific allegation.

Sutcliffe v Elec. Co., 218-1386; 257 NW 406

Motions—more specific statement—avoidance under res ipsa loquitur. A general allegation of negligence is subject to a motion for a more specific statement unless the pleader clearly indicates in his pleading his purpose to sustain said general allegation under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Sutcliffe v Elec. Co., 218-1386; 257 NW 406

Specific allegations—effect. Proof that an agency or thing caused an injury under circumstances strongly suggestive of negligence on the part of the defendant having control of such agency or thing, but under circumstances such that direct evidence of the specific negligence is not readily available, opens the door to the injured party to rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, unless the injured party sees fit to allege and rely on specific allegations of negligence.

Orr v Des Moines L. Co., 207-1149; 222 NW 560; 30 NCCA 622; 3 NCCA (NS) 540

Trap door in leased coliseum not a nuisance. Trap door in leased coliseum opened only to dispose of refuse held not a nuisance. Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur held inapplicable where person fell into opening, especially in view of fact that trap door was not wholly under control of defendant-lessees.

Work v Coliseum Co., (NOR); 207 NW 679

Drowning—res ipsa loquitur nonapplicable. The mere fact that a person drowns in a swimming pool does not of itself establish negligence on the part of the proprietor under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

(d) NO-EYEWITNESS RULE IN GENERAL

Accidents at crossings. The presumption of care which may be indulged in case of an accident of which there is no eyewitness has no application when the record affirmatively shows that the accident would not have happened had the injured party exercised reasonable care.

Tegtmeier v Byram, 204-1169; 216 NW 613

Improper submission of issue. When the record affirmatively shows the absence of all eyewitnesses to a fatal accident because the sole survivor was not observing the deceased persons immediately preceding the accident, the court should peremptorily instruct that there were no such witnesses; but the defendant is not, in such case, prejudiced if the existence of such witnesses is submitted to the jury.

Rastede v Railway, 203-430; 212 NW 751

Indispensable showing—nonpresumption. In an action against a railway company for damages for negligently running over and killing, during the nighttime, and within its switching yard, a pedestrian, the all-important and indispensable fact that said pedestrian was, when hit, on a near-by public sidewalk—where he had a right to be—will not be presumed from the fact that there was no eyewitness to the fatal accident, the “no-eyewitness rule” having no such function.

Young v Railway, 223-773; 273 NW 885

(d) NO-EYEWITNESS RULE IN GENERAL—concluded

No-eyewitness rule — instructions. Instructions relative to the permissible inference of care which the law authorizes when there are no eyewitnesses to an accident reviewed and held correct.

Azeltine v Lutterman, 218-675; 254 NW 854

Omission to state “no-eyewitness” rule — effect. Failure to instruct as to the presumption of care which the law indulges when there is no eyewitness to a fatal accident does not constitute reversible error when no such instruction was requested, and when it is somewhat questionable whether plaintiff was entitled to such instruction, and the ordinary instruction as to freedom from contributory negligence was given.

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151; 3 NCCA (NS) 547

Presumption arising from human instinct. The presumption that the instinct of self preservation caused a traveler who was killed by a train at a crossing to look for a train before he went upon the crossing has no application when it affirmatively appears that, had he looked at any time while he was in the zone of danger, he must have seen the train.

Wasson v Railway, 203-705; 213 NW 388

Eyewitness requirement. Proof by an insurer that the insured was murdered by being shot by some unknown person does not establish the defense that a limited liability is provided by the policy if the insured is killed by the discharge of firearms and there is no actual witness to the transaction “except the insured himself,” because such proof establishes that there was an eyewitness other than the insured, to wit, the assailant.

Carpenter v Trav. Assn., 213-1001; 240 NW 639

(e) NEGLIGENCE PER SE IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 11 ILR 78—Violation of statutes and ordinances

Electricity — charged wire. A person is guilty of contributory negligence per se when, knowing that a wire at the top of a pole carries a very dangerous voltage of electricity, and faced by no emergency requiring or excusing a relaxation of due care, he attempts to get another wire out of his way by swinging it upward in the form of a rainbow, in order to hook it over a spike which has been driven into the pole some two feet below the dangerously charged wire.

Murphy v Iowa Co., 206-567; 220 NW 360

Known obstruction on sidewalk. A pedestrian who discovers in his pathway on a public sidewalk a substantial obstruction of frozen straw and other refuse and unnecessarily attempts to walk over the same is guilty of negligence per se.

Wells v Oskaloosa, 212-1095; 235 NW 322

Machinery in enclosed building. The maintenance and operation of machinery, for a legitimate purpose, in an enclosed building and with ordinary and suitable protection is not negligence, altho attractive to children and no special guard is employed to look after their safety.

Brown v Canning Co., 132-631; 110 NW 12

Negligence of pedestrian. A pedestrian must be deemed guilty of negligence per se when, on a dark and cloudy morning, in full possession of the senses of seeing and hearing, he looks for an approaching streetcar while at the street curb line, and claims he saw none (tho a car would be visible at a distance of 100 feet), and when he thereupon quickly passes into the street for a distance of 18 feet and is hit by the car which he says he did not see.

Barboe v Service Co., 205-1074; 215 NW 740

Streets—obstructions. A pedestrian who, on a dark and rainy night, passes over a parking in a public street in close proximity to a pile of broken cement, with full knowledge of the presence of such obstruction and of its dangerous character, and is injured by stumbling over a detached piece of the cement, is guilty of contributory negligence per se when it appears that a very slight deviation in his course would have placed him in a zone of perfect safety.

Roppel v Mount Pleasant, 208-117; 224 NW 579

Stopping on streetcar track. A vehicle driver who passes a streetcar going in the same direction, and later drives upon the streetcar tracks and stops at a point 100 feet ahead of the car, is not guilty of negligence per se.

Towberman v Railway, 202-1299; 211 NW 854

Torts—defects or obstructions in streets. A pedestrian who attempts to pass over an abrupt decline, known to be dangerous, in a public street, in the belief that he can do so in safety, will be deemed guilty of negligence per se, in the absence of any showing of acts of care on his part.

Lundy v Ames, 202-100; 209 NW 427

Injury near track. Negligence per se is established by evidence which conclusively forces the mind to the conclusion that a deceased who was hit by a passing train either did not look or listen for the train, which was in plain sight, or attempted to cross the track in front of the train, which he knew to be coming.

Pieczynski v Railway, 202-625; 210 NW 758

(f) IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE IN GENERAL

Passenger elevator falling—nonliability—elevator manufacturer. The builder of a passenger elevator is neither liable for a personal injury caused by the falling of the car where the safety device, designed to prevent such falling and stop the car, was of an approved pattern in general use and was not shown to have ever before failed to work efficiently, nor where it is disclosed by the accident a device could have been made which would have obviated the particular defect which caused the particular accident, unless it is further shown that reasonable prudence would have discovered this defect and remedied it. Due care, in a legal sense, does not require an uncanny foresight.

Hoskins v Otis Elev. Co., 16 F 2d, 220

(g) RECKLESSNESS IN GENERAL

Submitting both negligence and recklessness. Both questions of negligence and of recklessness may in a proper case be submitted together to the jury.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308

Recklessness of railway employees—insufficient pleading to establish. In action for personal injuries sustained by automobile passenger in collision between automobile and railway motorcar, where petition alleged that railway motorcar had been standing a short distance from crossing, obscured from view of motorist by shrubbery along railway right of way, and was driven onto crossing and into the course of oncoming automobile without warning, and that railway motorcar could have been stopped by applying brakes, such allegations were insufficient to state a cause of action based upon recklessness of employees of defendant railroad.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

Wantonness or recklessness. Wantonness is something more than recklessness and recklessness is something more than negligence.

Sanburn v Hosiery Mills, 217-218; 251 NW 144

II PROXIMATE, REMOTE, AND CONCURRING CAUSE IN GENERAL

Aggravation of disease—liability in general. One who is predisposed to disease which is aggravated or accelerated by negligence is entitled to recover damages necessarily and proximately resulting from such aggravation or acceleration.

Hackley v Robinson, (NOR); 219 NW 398

Proximate cause—fatal uncertainty. The theory that animals died from the effects of a so-called stock remedy administered to them cannot be said to be established when the cause of the deaths is essentially and necessarily within the domain of expert testimony, and when the experts are unable to determine with reasonable certainty whether said remedy caused or contributed to said deaths.

Tracy v Oil Co., 208-882; 226 NW 178

Burden of proof. Causal connection between the negligence proven and the injury complained of must be established by plaintiff. Evidence held insufficient.

Rauch v Elec. Co., 206-309; 218 NW 340

Causal relation. Evidence held to show causal relation between the taking of a radiograph of plaintiff's head and certain subsequent injuries.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

Evidence. Evidence held insufficient to show that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of an injury.

Schmidt v Hayden, 205-1369; 219 NW 399

Failure to maintain lookout. Failure of the operatives of a train to keep a lookout for pedestrians near the tracks does not constitute negligence when such failure had nothing whatever to do with the resulting accident.

Radenhausen v Railway, 205-547; 218 NW 316

Illegal payment of funds to city. The act of a county treasurer in illegally paying collected municipal taxes to the city treasurer is the proximate cause of the loss of said funds consequent on the deposit of said funds in an insolvent bank by the city treasurer,—it being assumed that the question of negligence and proximate cause is a material inquiry in such a case.

State v Hanson, 210-773; 231 NW 428

Intervening cause. The principle that a defendant is not relieved of the consequences of his negligence because some other cause operates therewith manifestly has no application to a case wherein it is not shown that defendant was negligent.

Rauch v Elec. Co., 206-309; 218 NW 340

Malpractice. In an action for malpractice, plaintiff does not make a jury question by proof that the defendant was negligent in the treatment or in the lack of treatment of the patient, but must go forward with his proof and establish by a preponderance of the testimony that such negligence, and not the original injury, was the proximate cause of death.

Ramberg v Morgan, 209-474; 218 NW 492

Malpractice—root of tooth in lung. In a malpractice action against dentist, the court erroneously directed a verdict for defendant on the ground that there was no showing that the presence of the root of a tooth in plaintiff's right lung was the proximate cause of the injury to plaintiff, under evidence that plaintiff was given a general anesthetic, was completely unconscious at time six teeth were extracted, and that plaintiff lost 60 pounds between the day of the extractions and the day he expectorated, after a violent spasm of coughing, a quantity of sputum, mucus and blood containing the root of a tooth.

Whetstone v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Noncausal relation. Principle reaffirmed that negligence becomes quite inconsequential when it has no causal relation to the accident in question.

Simmons v Railway, 217-1277; 252 NW 516

Proximate cause of injury—when jury question. Whether certain negligence was the proximate cause of a certain injury is always a jury question when different minds might reasonably reach different conclusions.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

One conclusion by all reasonable men—court question. Ordinarily the questions of proximate cause and contributory negligence are matters for the jury, and it is only where the facts are such, that all reasonable men must draw the same conclusion, that these questions become of law for the court.

Gowing v Field, 225-729; 281 NW 281

Accident causing injury—death following—jury question. Where a healthy normal boy of 17 dies from an ear infection and mastoid involvement, the symptoms of which began shortly after the upsetting of a school bus in which he was riding, a jury question is created as to whether such accident was the moving or producing—the proximate—cause of the injury and death.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Repetition of instruction. A definite and correct instruction as to proximate cause of an injury need not be repeated in other instructions.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229

Specific grounds alleged—proximate cause. In damage action based on drowning in a swimming pool wherein several grounds of negligence were specified, it was necessary to establish one of the grounds and prove that it was the proximate cause of the drowning—actionable negligence being negligence that is fastened to the injury.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Storm waters into sanitary sewer. A city has the duty to maintain its sanitary sewer with ordinary care and prudence and, where the city diverts storm waters into a sanitary sewer designed for a certain capacity, a jury might find the city negligent, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of damage from overflow due to the inability of the sewer to handle the increased flowage.

Wilkinson v Indianola, 224-1285; 278 NW 326

Excess voltage—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to show that certain acts of omission and commission were the proximate cause of the reaching and entrance to a building of an excess voltage of electricity.

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151; 3 NCCA (NS) 547

Contributory negligence and proximate cause. Actionable negligence must be proximate cause whereas contributory negligence need only contribute to the injury.

Aller v Iowa Co., 227-185; 288 NW 66

III CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 6 ILB 55—Self-preservation instinct—due care

Avoidance by last clear chance. Principle reaffirmed that the doctrine of the “last clear chance” has no application except where it affirmatively appears that the one charged with negligence actually knew of the position of peril of the injured person in time to prevent the injury by the exercise of reasonable care.

Hamilton v Railway, 211-924; 234 NW 810; 31 NCCA 762

“Last clear chance”—inapplicability of doctrine. The doctrine of “the last clear chance” has no application to a record which shows (1) that the plaintiff was confessedly negligent, and (2) that the accident of which plaintiff complains occurred instantly and inevitably after plaintiff’s negligence was discovered.

Albrecht v Berry, 202-250; 208 NW 205; 32 NCCA 108

Injury avoidable notwithstanding contributory negligence—“last clear chance”—inapplicability. The doctrine of the “last clear chance” can have no application when the nonnegligent driver of a conveyance, after he discovers the danger, does everything in his power to prevent an accident.

Middleton v Railway, 209-1278; 227 NW 915

Degree barring recovery—model instruction. Principle reasserted that negligence is not contributory unless it contributes directly to plaintiff’s injury.

Engle v Ungles, 223-780; 273 NW 879

Adequate definition. Instructions defining contributory negligence as negligence which contributes to cause the injury and stating that before plaintiff could recover he must establish by a preponderance of the evidence that he was not guilty of any negligence that in any degree contributed to cause of collision were not erroneous and did not tell jury such negligence must be a proximate cause before it would prevent recovery.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Contributory negligence—degree. Contributory negligence sufficient to bar recovery need go no further than to contribute to the causing of plaintiff's injuries, but it is not error against plaintiff to define such negligence as that negligence without which the injury would not have been sustained.

Hellberg v Lund, 217-1; 250 NW 192

Erroneous definition—effect. Defining contributory negligence as including only acts of omission does not necessarily constitute reversible error, especially when such definition is in harmony with the trial theory.

Williams v Railway, 205-446; 214 NW 692

Contributory negligence—freedom from. Freedom from contributory negligence is proven if, under all the facts and circumstances, a jury can reasonably find a plaintiff was exercising ordinary care.

Denny v Augustine, 223-1202; 275 NW 117

Contributory negligence—jury or law question. Contributory negligence is ordinarily for the jury, but it becomes a question of law only when reasonable minds can come to but one conclusion from facts and circumstances.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

Jury question unless all minds concur. Contributory negligence is for the jury, and a directed verdict should be denied except in cases where the facts are clear and undisputed and the cause and effect so apparent to every candid mind that but one conclusion may be fairly drawn.

In re Green, 224-1268; 278 NW 285

Law question. Principle reaffirmed that a very clear and unequivocal showing of negligence is required to make the issue of contributory negligence a question of law.

Beman v Iowa Co., 205-730; 218 NW 343

Law of case—implied avoidance. The law of a case on the subject of contributory negligence as declared on appeal cannot be avoided on a retrial by simply adding to the testimony of a witness, by implication, something that the witness did not say.

Russell v Elec. Co., 218-427; 255 NW 504

Nonproximate cause. Contributory negligence may bar recovery even tho it is not the proximate cause of the injury.

Towberman v Railway, 202-1299; 211 NW 854

Plaintiff's conduct—conflict in evidence. The presence or absence of contributory negligence is generally a jury question, and two elements are involved: (1) what plaintiff did, and (2) the effect of his action; if either or both of said propositions present uncertainty, there is a jury question.

Riggs v Pan-Amer., 225-1051; 283 NW 250

Assumption of risk—walking down fire escape carrying tools. A plumber, an independent contractor, who attempts the acrobatic feat of walking down a steep, but ordinarily safe, fire escape as if it were a stairway, with his hands full of wrenches and a length of pipe, or, while balancing on one heel, attempts to swing his body around while his hands were so employed, has assumed the risk arising from such conduct and must be held, as a matter of law, to have contributed to his injuries, if he falls.

Gowing v Field, 225-729; 281 NW 281

Defendant's belief as to plaintiff's safety. In an action for damages consequent on the alleged negligence of defendant in tearing down the walls of a building adjoining the building in which plaintiff, at the time, was rightfully present, the court cannot properly say that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence per se in being present in his said building when the evidence shows that defendant, at the time, believed plaintiff was in a safe place while in his said building.

Crawford v Emerson Co., 222-378; 269 NW 334

Burden of proof. A definite instruction that plaintiff has the burden of proof to show that he was not guilty of any negligence contributing to his injury is in no degree overcome by later instructions wherein the court, with reference to contributory-fact issues, uses the expression "if you find." In other words, such expression does not have the effect of impliedly placing the burden of proof as to contributory negligence upon the defendant.

Dean v Koolish, 212-238; 234 NW 179

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to show contributory negligence per se in an accident on a sidewalk.

Sloan v Des Moines, 205-823; 218 NW 301

Contributory negligence—entering pitch-dark room. An invitee who enters a bakery in the nighttime, at a place other than a perfectly safe place where he had entered on a former occasion, and is unable to see anything owing to the darkness, and finds his progress blocked by an obstruction which, by sense of feeling, proves to be a movable, lattice gateway and who deliberately removes said gateway and, on advancing, falls into an elevator shaft, is, per se, guilty of negligence contributing to his resulting injury.

Hammer v Liberty Bak. Co., 220-229; 260 NW 720

Contributory negligence. Evidence reviewed and held to establish negligence per se on the part of plaintiff in not seeing and avoiding a laundry truck which was standing in the hallway of a hotel.

Walker v Hotel Co., 214-1150; 241 NW 484

Contracts—signing without reading. A party will not be permitted to say that he was defrauded into signing an instrument without knowing its contents when he could read, did not read, and was in no manner prevented from reading.

Legler v Ins. Assn., 214-937; 243 NW 157

Derrick—improper erection and use. Record reviewed and held that a deceased foreman of a construction company was guilty of negligence contributing to his own death, by the manner in which he erected and attempted to operate a derrick for the handling of stone.

Hatfield v Freight Co., 223-7; 272 NW 99

Electric elevator—place of danger. When, in order to make repairs, a WPA carpenter descended to the bottom of an elevator shaft in a Y. M. C. A. while the superintendent of the building assisted him, and when the superintendent had twice repeated an instruction to the elevator operator in the presence of the carpenter that the elevator was not to go below the first floor, the carpenter, who died because the elevator descended on him, was not required to anticipate that the elevator operator would negligently violate the instructions. Under these facts, contributory negligence was a jury question.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186

Operation of electric elevator—no eyewitnesses. An expert and experienced electrician who enters an electrically operated freight elevator which he had often operated,—the mechanism and condition of which were fully known to him, and especially the fact that the elevator could be moved at any time by manipulation by other parties on other floors of the building unless the electric circuit was broken,—is guilty of negligence per se in taking the risk of the elevator moving while he was attempting, without breaking the circuit, to close a door with known defective appliances,—the circuit breaker being in his immediate presence and easily accessible; and this is true tho there were no eyewitnesses to the occurrence.

Boles v Hotel Maytag, 218-306; 253 NW 515

Inadvertent self-inflicted injury. One may not recover damages for an injury arising out of his own act, and under circumstances under his exclusive control. So held where the party in removing a prop under a loading chute was injured by the prop falling against his face.

Rodgers v Railway, 214-1018; 243 NW 351

Injuries to servant—instruction. The court may very properly instruct the jury that a master must establish his plea of contributory negligence on the part of his servant by a preponderance of the evidence, and that such plea, if so established, is available to the master only in mitigation of damages.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229; 34 NCCA 67

Minors—contributory negligence—12-year-old child—presumption. A child between the ages of seven and 14 is presumed to be free from contributory negligence, and where a plaintiff is between those ages a prima facie case of nonnegligence on his part is established.

Samuelson v Sherrill, 225-421; 280 NW 596

Imputed negligence—guest. The negligence of the driver of a conveyance in which a child is riding is, in an action by the child against a third party for damages, wholly immaterial as far as said child is concerned unless said negligence is the sole cause of the damages. (See also under §5028.)

Armstrong v Waffle, 212-335; 236 NW 507; 5 NCCA (NS) 763

Contributory negligence of 11-year-old boy. In an action for personal injuries sustained by an 11-year-old boy who, while playing in a tree in a public street fell into wires of public utility company, sustaining severe burns, the question of contributory negligence of the boy together with question of whether defendant company had knowledge of the use of the tree by the boys in the neighborhood in playing, and the question of proximate cause of the injury should have been submitted to the jury.

Reynolds v Utilities Co., 21 F 2d, 958

Minors—presumption and burden of proof. An instruction, in a personal injury action, that the burden of proof is on plaintiff to establish his freedom from contributory negligence is not nullified by an instruction that the plaintiff, if of the age of eight years only, is presumed to be incapable of such negligence, and that, to find to the contrary, defendant must so show.

Stutzman v Younkerman, 204-1162; 216 NW 627

Unnecessarily placing one's self in danger. A person 18 years of age and of ordinary intelligence (not an employee of the defendant) who, in attempting to drive a wagon over a manifestly heavy six-inch steel pipe, deliberately places his foot in front of and against said pipe, knowing and expecting that when the team was started the wheels of the wagon would probably roll the pipe toward him, is guilty of negligence as a matter of law.

Perkins v Schmit Co., 215-350; 245 NW 343; 37 NCCA 301

Negligence as defense. In an action for the breach of an express warranty as to the healthfulness of animals, it is incumbent on the defendant to allege contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, rather than for plaintiff to allege his freedom from negligence.

Cavanaugh v Stock Co., 206-893; 221 NW 512

Ordinary and extraordinary dangers contrasted. A nontrespassing party who voluntarily exposes himself to the dangers attending the ordinary and customary manner of wrecking or tearing down the walls of a building, and is injured, may be guilty of contributory negligence per se, but not necessarily so when, without his knowledge, the manner of doing the work was unusually and extraordinarily dangerous and hazardous, and by reason thereof the party was injured.

Crawford v Emerson Co., 222-378; 269 NW 334

Overdose of poison. In an action for damages consequent on the death of animals caused by an overdose of copper sulphate, in part contained in a stock food, it is manifest that plaintiff cannot recover if, by his own conduct, he has contributed to his said injury.

Jensen v Moorman Mfg. Co., 213-922; 239 NW 917

Pedestrians—defective sidewalk—duty to see defect. A person is not exercising reasonable care, as a matter of law, when, immediately after emerging from a store, she walks directly across an eight-foot cement sidewalk, of which she had a general knowledge, and fails to see that the extreme inner edge of the walk, elevated some eight inches above the vehicular part of the street, has been broken away for a distance of some 30 inches, and to an irregular depth not exceeding eight inches, when the unobscured opening is directly in front of her, and when she is walking under perfect conditions of weather, light, and sight, and attended by no mental abstraction except a voluntary conversation with her companion.

Seiser v Redfield (Town), 211-1035; 232 NW 129

Negligence of pedestrian. A pedestrian must be deemed guilty of negligence per se when, on a dark and cloudy morning, in full possession of the senses of seeing and hearing, he looks for an approaching streetcar while at the street curb line, and claims he saw none (tho a car would be visible at a distance of 100 feet), and when he thereupon quickly passes into the street for a distance of 18 feet and is hit by the car which he says he did not see.

Obstructions in street—jury question. Evidence reviewed relative to the act of plaintiff (injured by coming in contact with a wire stretched across a public street) in running, in semidarkness along the street and outside a crowded sidewalk, in order to reach shelter from a sudden and rapidly gathering thunderstorm, and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.

Cuvelier v Dumont (Town), 221-1016; 266 NW 517

Passing along known slippery sidewalk. A pedestrian is not guilty of negligence per se in attempting to walk along a freshly snow-covered sidewalk bounded by a foot or two of snow, even tho he knows that the walk is rough, uneven, and slippery from an accumulation of ice, when he had prepared his feet with rubbers in order to avoid slipping and, upon reaching the walk, thoughtfully slackened his speed, and was proceeding cautiously in order to avoid a fall.

Smith v Hamburg, 212-1022; 237 NW 330

Tree over transmission line—failure to remove. Where a tree limb on plaintiffs' land had broken and lodged in the fork of a dead tree and hung two or three feet over defendant's transmission line, and later electricity from the line set the tree on fire and it spread to the plaintiffs' house, in an action to recover for the fire loss it could not be said as a matter of law that the plaintiffs were contributorily negligent in not removing the limb when they had acted as reasonable and prudent persons in twice requesting the defendant to take the line down or shut off the current so the tree could be cut down and the overhanging limb removed.

Porter v Elec. Co., 228- ; 292 NW 231

Municipal corporation—construction of approach to sidewalk. A municipality is not bound to construct an approach from street to sidewalk differently because some engineer other than its own thought some other method would be better, so where a pedestrian, who was familiar with such approach, who admitted that there was plenty of room for a pedestrian to pass on meeting two other pedestrians in broad daylight, and who without thought or attention stepped off approach and fell, such pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery for personal injuries.

Hoffman v Sioux City, 227-1131; 290 NW 62

Subsequent negligence aggravating injury—amount of recovery. After receiving burns in a beauty parlor treatment, a person's subsequent neglect of proper medical treatment, not contributing to the original injuries, is not contributory negligence and does not defeat but affects only the amount of recovery.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65

Contributory negligence and proximate cause. Actionable negligence must be proximate mate cause whereas contributory negligence need only contribute to the injury.

Aller v Iowa Co., 227-185; 288 NW 66

Drawing wire cable against power line. Farmer attempting to connect wire cable from hay carrier on barn to pole 50 or 55 feet distant is contributorily negligent in drawing cable against power line when he saw or should have seen the power line and knew that it was not insulated.

Aller v Iowa Co., 227-185; 288 NW 66

IV INVITEES, LICENSEES, AND TRESPASSERS

Discussion. See 7 ILB 65—Duty to strangers on land

(a) INVITEES

"Invitee"—"licensee." An invitee to a place of business is one who goes there, either at the express or implied invitation of the owner or occupant, on business of mutual interest to both, or in connection with the business of the owner or occupant. A licensee is one who goes upon the property of another, either at the invitation, or with the implied acquiescence, of the owner or occupant, for a purpose purely personal to himself.

Wilson v Goodrich, 218-462; 252 NW 142

Acts or omissions constituting negligence. One who enters the office of a private business as an invitee may, upon leaving the office, immediately become, by his conduct, a mere licensee.

Wilson v Goodrich, 218-462; 252 NW 142

Charitable institutions liable to strangers, invitees, or employees. Public policy has never demanded nor has the legislature adopted any immunity to charitable institutions from liability to strangers, invitees, or employees arising because of negligence of the servants of such institutions, and the court will not grant such immunity.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186

Condition of store building—invitee (?) or licensee (?). An invitee in a public store continues as an invitee after he passes from in front of a counter and around the end thereof into a narrow space having no connection with the space back of the counter, and with no intent to pass back of the counter, but for the purpose of inspecting and possibly buying goods on a shelf directly in front of him; and when the appearance of the space in which he is then walking reasonably justifies his belief that said space is a place to which customers are impliedly admitted for the purpose of inspecting goods which they wish to purchase, and when the facts are in fair dispute, a jury question is generated.

Nelson v Woolworth Co., 211-592; 231 NW 665; 30 NCCA 542

Trap door in drug store prescription room—telephone user as invitee (?) or licensee (?). Hotel guest given permission to use telephone just inside entrance to prescription room in hotel drug store was a mere licensee and not an invitee, and could not recover damages sustained by falling through open trap door when partially entering the prescription room to reach the telephone, unless showing was made that injury was result of willful or wanton misconduct on part of hotel company, and evidence that manager of store directed plaintiff to telephone did not establish such conduct in absence of showing that he knew trap door was open.

McMullen v Hotel Co., 227-1061; 290 NW 3

Contributory negligence. A physician who enters a food-processing plant and in an effort to reach a rear room for a purpose purely personal to himself, ignores a wide, well-lighted passageway provided for and ordinarily used for reaching said rear room, and pursues a narrow, out-of-the-way course where neither licensees nor invitees were expected to be, and falls into an elevator shaft in front of which an electric light, suspended from the ceiling, was burning and immediately adjacent to which was an open, five-foot door opening into said rear room in which some thirty electric lights were burning, is guilty of negligence per se even tho he be deemed an invitee.

Wilson v Goodrich, 218-462; 252 NW 142

Damages—aged man with small earning capacity. In a personal injury action, evidence reviewed relative to past and future pain, loss of time, and decreased earning capacity, of a 67-year-old plaintiff, and held, a verdict of $5,000 was excessive and should be reduced to $4,000.

Johnson v Sioux City, 220-66; 261 NW 536

Elevator accident—liability of subtenant. Subtenants occupying only a portion of a building are not liable to the customers or employees of the tenants who enter the premises without their invitation, for injuries resulting from the negligent failure to properly guard an elevator shaft, where such subtenants had no leasehold right to use the elevator, or, having the right to use it in common, were under no obligation to repair or maintain the same.

Burner v Higman & Skinner, 127-580; 103 NW 802

Elevator accident—liability of tenants. A tenant who sublets a portion of the premises to another for the purpose of storing goods, impliedly invites his subtenant or his employees to enter upon the premises, and is liable for an injury caused by a negligent failure to properly guard an elevator shaft used in storing and removing such goods. Evidence held sufficient to take the case to the jury on the question of the tenant's negligence.

Burner v Higman & Skinner, 127-580; 103 NW 802

Independent contractor as invitee—known danger revealed. Person employing an independent contractor to put steam pipes in down-spouting owes only the duty to such invitee to use reasonable care for his safety, and to warn the contractor as to defects or dangers known to the employer and not apparent to the contractor. The employer is not responsible to the contractor for injuries from defects that the contractor knew of or, in the exercise of ordinary care, ought to have known of.

Gowing v Field, 225-729; 281 NW 281

Injury to invitee. Evidence reviewed and held to sustain a verdict for damages consequent on an invitee's stepping into hot ashes piled upon the premises of the defendant.

Pomerantz v Penn. Corp., 214-1002; 243 NW 283

Invitee—deliveryman under direction of consignee. A deliveryman placing goods on consignee's premises, under direction of said consignee, is an invitee, and it is consignee's duty to furnish the deliveryman a safe place in which to discharge his duties.

Riggs v Pan-American Co., 225-1051; 283 NW 250

Invitee's duty—"reasonably safe place" defined. The operator of a filling station was under a legal obligation to exercise reasonable and ordinary care to see that his place of business was reasonably safe for an invitee who was having truck tire repaired—the phrase "reasonably safe" meaning safe according to the usage, habits, and ordinary risks of the business.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Invitee in public store—jury question. An invitee in a public store has a right to assume that the operator of the store will not be negligent in furnishing a safe place for customers, and a jury question on the issue of the invitee's contributory negligence is presented by such assumption in connection with testimony tending to show that the invitee, in walking along a passageway, looked, but could not see the floor or an adjacent open stairway, and thereupon continued to move forward, with his eyes on some goods on a shelf slightly above the level of his eyes.

Nelson v Woolworth Co., 211-592; 231 NW 665; 30 NCCA 542

Invitees—reasonably safe premises must be provided. Customer was store owners' invitee to premises of store and it was therefore owners' duty to be reasonably sure that they were not inviting customer into a place of danger, and to that end they were required to exercise ordinary care and prudence to make the premises reasonably safe for customer's visit.

Osborn v Klaber Bros., 227-105; 287 NW 252

Inviters—waxed floor with polished surface not inherent hazard to invitees. A waxed floor resulting in a polished surface is not an inherent hazard to the safety of invitees within the standard of care required of inviters.

Osborn v Klaber Bros., 227-105; 287 NW 252

Inviters—common carriers' high liability not applicable. An inviter is not held to that high liability that attaches to common carriers of passengers for hire.

Osborn v Klaber Bros., 227-105; 287 NW 252

Lost person as invitee. A traveler who loses his way and drives upon premises on the supposition that he is on a public highway, and consequently not for a purpose which has in view the mutual benefit of the traveler and the owner of the premises, may not be deemed an invitee, it appearing that the way over which the traveler passed never had been used and could not be used for general unrestricted travel by the public.

Printy v Reimbold, 200-541; 202 NW 122; 205 NW 211

Unguarded premises—duty of inviter. Principle recognized that he who invites people to come upon his premises must exercise reasonable care to keep them free from danger. So held as to an unguarded elevator shaft.

Noyes v Des Moines Club, 178-815; 160 NW 215

(b) LICENSEES

"Invitee"—"licensee". An invitee to a place of business is one who goes there, either at the express or implied invitation of the owner or occupant, on business of mutual interest to both, or in connection with the business of the owner or occupant. A licensee is one who goes upon the property of another, either at the invitation, or with the implied acquiescence, of the owner or occupant, for a purpose purely personal to himself.

Wilson v Goodrich, 218-462; 252 NW 142

Acts or omissions constituting negligence. A licensee on the premises of a manufacturing plant is bound to accept the premises as he finds them.

Sanburn v Hosiery Mills, 217-218; 251 NW 144

Bare licensee—nonliability for injury. One upon premises by the sufferance or acquiescence of the owner is a bare licensee, and there is no liability on the owner's part to keep the premises in safe condition for the licensee's use.

Davis v Malvern Co., 186-884; 173 NW 262

Condition of store building—open stairway. The operator of a public store is not necessarily negligent toward an invitee in maintaining an open stairway in that part of the store to which customers are impliedly invited; but a jury question may arise, if an invitee falls down the stairway, whether the operator was negligent in maintaining an open, unlighted, and narrow stairway with the first step thereof immediately adjacent to the space set aside to invitees for passage.

(b) LICENSEES—concluded

Nelson v Woolworth Co., 211-592; 231 NW 665; 30 NCCA 542

Duty owed to licensee. When a material issue is whether a person injured in a public store because of a defect in the maintenance of the store was, at the time of the injury, an invitee or a mere licensee, the court must plainly tell the jury that, if the injured party was a mere licensee when injured, he cannot recover, even tho the operator of the store was negligent in maintaining the store, unless the injured party shows that he was injured by some willful or affirmative action of the said operator.

Nelson v Woolworth Co., 211-592; 231 NW 665

Elevator accident—liability of owner of premises. Where the owner of a building containing a freight elevator for the common use of the tenants does not by the terms of the lease part with his control of the elevator except the right to use the same, he may be liable with a tenant for injuries to a licensee of the tenant resulting from negligent construction and maintenance of the elevator, without proper gates or guards, in such a place that it could not be readily seen, and knowing that persons must frequent the place and use the elevator to make the premises available to the tenant. Evidence held sufficient to take the case to the jury on the question of the owner's liability.

Burner v Higman & Skinner, 127-580; 103 NW 802

Failure to signal approach of train. Train operatives may not be said to be negligent in failing to signal the approach of a train for the benefit of a pedestrian who had full and timely knowledge of such approach.

Radenhausen v Railway, 205-547; 218 NW 316

Nonduty to guard visible obstruction. Where pedestrians had habitually used a path on a railway right of way and near the track, the act of the company in dumping a ridge of cinders upon the path and in failing to guard or so obstruct the way as to prevent walking upon the cinders does not constitute actionable negligence.

Radenhausen v Railway, 205-547; 218 NW 316

Permitting relation of licensor and licensee. A railway company may not be said to be guilty of actionable negligence because it habitually permits or suffers pedestrians on its right of way to use a path alongside, but well removed from, the rails of its track.

Radenhausen v Railway, 205-547; 218 NW 316; 39 NCCA 36

Person not customer in store. A person who enters an ordinary retail store and discloses no purpose other than to obtain an accommodation strictly personal to himself, and is granted such accommodation by those in charge of the store, is a mere licensee, and not an invitee, and the owner of the store is not liable for an injury received by said licensee while availing himself of said accommodation, and while at a place in the store not provided for customers.

Keeran v Spurgeon Co., 194-1240; 191 NW 99

Trap door in drug store prescription room—telephone user as invitee (?) or licensee (?). Hotel guest given permission to use telephone just inside entrance to prescription room in hotel drug store was a mere licensee and not an invitee, and could not recover damages sustained by falling through open trap door when partially entering the prescription room to reach the telephone, unless showing was made that injury was result of willful or wanton misconduct on part of hotel company, and evidence that manager of store directed plaintiff to telephone did not establish such conduct in absence of showing that he knew trap door was open.

McMullen v Hotel Co., 227-1061; 290 NW 3

Private premises—owner's duty. The owner of private premises over which others are not accustomed to pass is not required to keep them in a safe condition for the benefit of a bare licensee.

Connell v Electric Ry., 131-622; 109 NW 177

Willful or wanton act—evidence. Evidence, relative to the circumstances under which a visitor in a manufacturing plant was injured by her clothing catching on a revolving shaft, reviewed, and held quite insufficient to reveal any element of willfulness or wantonness in the conduct of an employee of the plant.

(c) TRESPASSERS

Building reconstruction—trespassing children. The owner or occupier of real property is under no legal obligation to make or keep the premises safe for trespassers or bare licensees. So held where a child fell through an opening in the floor of a building which was undergoing reconstruction after a fire.

Battin v Cornwall, 218-42; 253 NW 842

Electrical structure—trespassing as defense. The fact that a person injured by coming in contact with a high-voltage wire was a trespasser on the land of a third party upon whose land the wire was erected is no defense to an action for damages for said injury.

Lipovac v Iowa Co., 202-517; 210 NW 573
Cox v Des Moines Co., 209-931; 229 NW 244

Electric wires—owner of premises—duty. The owner of premises negligently maintaining electric wires over the same is liable for the death of a bare licensee or trespasser coming in contact therewith, where it appears that the public was accustomed to cross the premises and the owner can be reasonably charged with knowledge of that fact.

Connell v Electric Ry., 131-622; 109 NW 177

Electric pole—spikes driven in as ladder—trespassers. An owner of property may so negligently use it as to become liable in damages for a resulting injury to a trespasser. A jury question, both as to negligence and contributory negligence, is presented by testimony tending to show that an owner, without full compliance with city ordinance requirements, erected and maintained, on his own unincluded, populously surrounded, and promiscuously frequented premises, which abutted upon an unincluded and much frequented public park and fishing resort, a pole with a ladder thereon in the form of spikes driven therein, and with a cross arm on the pole, some 25 feet from the ground, carrying wires heavily charged with electricity, and that a trespassing boy 14 years of age, and of ordinary intelligence, climbed the pole and, upon reaching the cross arm, was killed by an electric shock.

McKiddy v Des Moines Co., 202-225; 206 NW 815

Landowner's duty to trespasser. The owner of property owes to a trespasser no duty other than not to injure him willfully or wantonly and to use reasonable care, after his presence becomes known, to avoid injuring him.

Harriman v Afton (Town), 225-659; 281 NW 183

Liability of owner or operator of machinery. In determining the liability of the owner or operator of machinery for injury to a trespasser upon the premises the mental capacity of the injured party is immaterial.

Brown v Canning Co., 132-631; 110 NW 12

Municipal market place—open manhole. A municipality is not liable in damages to a person who is injured in a municipal market place by falling through an open manhole while he is on an errand distinctly personal to himself, and not as a customer of the market, and when the manhole is located at a place where he is neither expected nor invited to be.

Knote v Des Moines, 204-948; 216 NW 52

Trespassers—duty of owner of premises. The only duty an owner of premises owes to a trespasser thereon is not to injure him willfully or wantonly, and to use reasonable care, after his presence on the premises becomes known, to avoid injuring him.

Davis v Malvern L. & P. Co., 186-884; 173 NW 262

Trespassing boy—jumping from freight car to building. There are cases where the owner of premises will be held liable for injury to a child too young to understand the fact or meaning of trespass, or to care for his own safety when attracted to the premises by some act or omission of the owner which he knows, or as a reasonably prudent person ought to apprehend, would render the premises dangerous. But where, as in this case, a boy 13 years of age climbed upon a freight car standing at defendant's railway station and from there jumped to the roof of a storage building for electric cars, and when about to jump back to the car was injured by contact with an un-insulated power wire passing above the roof of the building, and it appeared that plaintiff knew he was a trespasser, that the railway was operated by electricity and that electric wires were dangerous; that the roof could only be reached by climbing the cars; that this was the first incident of the kind and no necessity for guards or signs had been indicated to the owner, the plaintiff was guilty of such negligence as to preclude recovery for the injury.

Anderson v Railway, 150-465; 130 NW 391

Use of highway. A pedestrian is not a trespasser while walking along that part of a public highway which is not and could not be used for ordinary travel.

Eves v Const. Co., 202-1338; 212 NW 154

V ACTIONS GENERALLY

Accident—evidence—jury question. Evidence, tho somewhat inconsistent, held to present a jury question on the issue as to the manner in which an injury occurred.

Elmore v Surety Co., 207-872; 224 NW 32

Bad-faith defense by vouchee. One who is vouched by a defendant into an action, and assumes exclusive charge of the defense, and in the trial pursues a course distinctly hostile to the defendant and distinctly favorable to himself, may thereby make himself, in legal effect, a co-defendant, and be conclusively bound by the judgment against the defendant. So held where the vouchee, knowing that he was vouched into the action by the defendant on the theory that the negligence charged was primary as to the vouchee and secondary as to the defendant, actively attempted to establish that he (the vouchee) was not negligent and that the defendant was negligent.

Hoskins v Hotel, 203-1152; 211 NW 423; 65 ALR 1125

Carriage of passengers—hand baggage—condition to liability. A carrier of passengers is not liable, as an insurer, for the loss of the hand baggage of the passenger unless said baggage is definitely surrendered into the exclusive possession and control of the carrier. If liability is predicated on negligence, such ground must be pleaded and, of course, proven. Evidence held to show no such surrender of custody.

Jensen v Interstate Corp., 221-513; 266 NW 9

No warning signal at railroad crossing—statute violations—negligence. The failure of compliance with a statutory standard of care is negligence. In an action for personal injuries sustained by an automobile passenger in collision in Illinois between an automobile and railway motorcar, where petition alleged that railway employees failed to ring bell or sound whistle of motorcar while approaching a crossing, as required by Illinois statute, such allegations were sufficient to state a cause of action based on negligence of employees of defendant railroad.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

Pleading negligence of employees operating railway motorcar—sufficiency. In action for personal injuries sustained by an automobile passenger in collision between automobile and railroad motorcar, where petition alleged that motorcar standing at crossing, obscured from view of motorist by shrubbery along railroad right of way, and was driven into course of the oncoming automobile without any warning and that it could have been stopped by applying the brakes, such allegations were sufficient to state a cause of action based upon negligence of railroad employees.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

Circumstantial evidence. Circumstantial evidence is wholly insufficient, in and of itself, to generate a jury question on the issue whether a defendant in repairing an automobile so negligently replaced a wheel on the car that thereby it became detached while in operation (with resulting damage to plaintiff) when said evidence is also consistent with the additional theory that said wheel became detached because of defects and weaknesses in the car arising from its age and great use.

Tyrell v Oil Co., 222-1257; 270 NW 857

Conclusions controlled by specific allegations. An allegation that an act was done "carelessly, negligently, and fraudulently" must be construed as predicating the action solely on negligence, when such is the effect of the pleader's subsequent and particularized allegations.

Pease v Bank, 210-331; 228 NW 83

Fatally belated contention. A litigant who, in the trial court, relies solely on specific acts of negligence as a basis for his cause of action may not be heard, on appeal, to assert that he has a right to rely on a statutory presumption of negligence.

Dilley v Iowa Co., 210-1332; 227 NW 173

Insurance—negligence in passing on application—damages. In an action for damages consequent on the alleged negligence of an insurer in passing on an application for insurance, the plaintiff must fail, irrespective of his evidence of negligence, unless he establishes, to the extent of furnishing a measure for his damages, the substance of the contract which he was prevented from entering into.

Winn v Ins. Co., 216-1249; 250 NW 459

Insurance—negligence—passing on application. Evidence reviewed in an action for damages consequent on the alleged negligence of an insurer in passing on, prior to the death of the applicant, an application for industrial insurance, and held quite insufficient to establish such negligence.

Winn v Ins. Co., 216-1249; 250 NW 459

Justifiable submission. The submission to the jury, in an action for personal injury, of the question of "internal injury" is proper under evidence that the plaintiff, after receiving a grave physical injury, suffered from internal hemorrhages.

Ashcraft v Kriv, 207-574; 223 NW 365

Negligence in making bank deposits. Evidence held insufficient to show negligence on the part of a public officer in making deposit of public funds in a bank which ultimately failed.

Danbury v Riedmiller, 208-879; 226 NW 159

Contracts—signing. Principle reaffirmed that it is incumbent upon a person who executes an instrument to exercise reasonable care to ascertain its contents.

Farwark v Railway, 202-1229; 211 NW 875; 26 NCCA 231; 4 NCCA (NS) 197

Reformation of instruments—negligence barring relief. A party who has no excuse whatever for signing a writing without reading it, or without requesting a reading of it, will not be granted reformation. And the rights of the wife of the signer insofar as she is interested in the writing, tho not a signer thereof, will be foreclosed by her like inexcusable neglect to read or request the reading of the instrument.

Stillman v Bank, 216-957; 249 NW 230

Specific allegations conclusive. Principle recognized that, when negligence is the foundation of an action, specific allegations control, and plaintiff may not rely on general allegations of negligence.

McCoy v Railway, 210-1075; 231 NW 353

Res ipsa loquitur—nonapplicability. Record reviewed relative to the fatal injuries received by a party on, in, or about a freight elevator, and relative to the defendant's control of the operation of said elevator at the time said injuries were received, and held to show the inapplicability of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Boles v Hotel, 221-211; 265 NW 183

Substituting specific negligence for general negligence. A plaintiff who, on one trial, rests on a general allegation of negligence, does not plead a new cause of action within the meaning of the statute of limitation, when on retrial he, by amendment, withdraws his general allegation and substitutes a specific allegation of negligence which, if proven, will furnish basis for the doctrine of the "last clear chance".

Reason: The latter allegation was always embraced within the former general allegation.

Pettijohn v Weede, 219-465; 258 NW 72

Use of mongrel "and/or". The use of the mongrel term "and/or" in pleading specifications of negligence or recklessness, is sharply disapproved of.

Popham v Case, 223-52; 271 NW 226

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Lex fori procedure. While, as a matter of comity, the courts of this state will, under proper pleading, recognize and enforce the civil rights and liabilities of parties to a tort committed in a foreign state—if not contrary to the public policy of this state—yet in determining all issues of fact on which such rights and liabilities depend, the judicial procedure of the courts of this state must be followed.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617; 1 NCCA(NS) 292

Committee of unincorporated association—suability. A committee of an unincorporated organization is not a legal entity and is not suable in tort.

Work v Coliseum Co., (NOR); 207 NW 679

"Alibi" in civil cause—burden of proof. Where a defendant in a civil case enters a general denial to a charge of having committed a tort, and in support thereof testifies that, at the time in question, he was at his home, not far from the scene of the alleged tort, the court has no right to instruct (1) that defendant's defense is that of an "alibi," and (2) that defendant has the burden to establish such alibi by evidence which will outweigh the evidence tending to show that defendant did commit the tort.

Gregory v Sorensen, 208-174; 225 NW 342

Bond of notary—action. An action against a notary public and his sureties for damages consequent on a willfully false certificate of acknowledgment does not sound in tort.

Atlas Security v O'Donnell, 210-810; 232 NW 121; 30 NCCA 273

Cause of loss of rentals—construction work (?) or business depression (?). Question as to whether rentals from property are lost because of construction of a bridge and new creek channel by a city, which construction occasioned some inconvenience to tenants in egress or ingress to the property, or because of depression in business conditions, is a question for the jury.

Edmond v Sioux City, 225-1058; 283 NW 260

Civil liability—damages—failure to establish. Proof that defendants have conspired to injure plaintiff's business or to employ unfair competition against plaintiff becomes of no consequence in a law action when plaintiff fails to establish damages.

Roggensack v Winona Co., 211-1307; 233 NW 493

Municipal corporations—liability to pedestrians. Principle reaffirmed that in determining municipality's liability for injuries to pedestrian, precedents are of little value. Each case must be determined upon its own peculiar facts.

Hoffman v Sioux City, 227-1131; 290 NW 62

Cornice on building as nuisance. Evidence that a building built flush with the street line

I IN GENERAL—concluded

was surmounted by a cornice which overhung the street for a material distance and which for several years, through some defect, cast water upon the sidewalk, and at times caused a dangerous accumulation of ice on the sidewalk, furnishes ample basis for a jury finding that the city had not and was not keeping its street free from nuisance.

Wright v A. & P. Co., 216-565; 246 NW 846; 32 NCCA 509

Defects or obstructions in streets—liability of property owner. Principle recognized that a property owner may be liable in damages for creating or permitting to exist a nuisance upon a public sidewalk, even tho the municipality rests by statute under substantially the same liability.

Updegraff v Ottumwa, 210-382; 226 NW 928

Evidence—footprints. Evidence of footprints at or near the scene of the commission of a wrongful act is admissible in an action against the defendant for the resulting damages, provided the defendant is properly connected with said footprints.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Evidence—newspaper advertisement. In an action for damages consequent on an alleged wrongful act by defendant, a competitor of plaintiff, an advertisement inserted by defendant in a local newspaper and tending to show hostility against plaintiff, may be relevant and material in view of other evidence in the case.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Felling tree into street. A city is not liable in damages consequent on the act of a property owner or his contractor in felling into a street a tree standing in the parking. In other words, the city is not liable because of its failure to exercise its governmental power to police the street at the place and time when the tree was felled, it knowing that the property owner intended to cut and fell said tree.

Armstrong v Waffle, 212-335; 236 NW 507

Joinder—contract and tort. A plaintiff may not base an action to recover damages for a personal injury on both (1) the commission of a tort by the defendant and (2) the breach of a contract by the defendant; and reversible error necessarily results from submitting both issues when they are not identical.

Randall v Moen Co., 206-1319; 221 NW 944

Liability of mere employee. The mere employee of a tort-feasor is not necessarily liable for the damage resulting from the tort. So held in an action by the lessee of coal lands for damages consequent on the wrongful removal of coal by the owner of the leased land.

Hartford Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 268 NW 269

Money given to obstruct justice—recovery denied. The courts will not aid one to recover money that has been given to another to be used in obstructing or interfering with the orderly course of justice, nor will they protect one who obtains the money of another for a particular lawful purpose when he fails to so use it and refuses to return it.

Sarico v Romano, (NOR); 205 NW 862

Dunning letters—threats. Willful threats made to a debtor for the purpose of producing in the mind of the debtor such mental pain, anguish, and harassment as will induce him to pay the debt, render the offender liable in damages for the resulting pain and anguish, even tho there be no actual or threatened physical injury, provided the threats are not mere threats to resort to legal procedure.

Barnett v Collection Co., 214-1303; 242 NW 25; 4 NCCA(NS) 223

Motions—more specific pleading—erroneous denial. In an action for general and special damages, under general and somewhat meager pleading, based on an alleged libelous publication resulting (1) in loss of customers, (2) in being refused credit, and (3) in loss of earnings in business, plaintiff should, on motion for more specific statement of the action, be compelled to set forth the names of customers lost, the names of those who refused him credit, and the ultimate facts upon which he bases his demand for judgment on account of injury to his earnings.

Dorman v Credit Co., 213-1016; 241 NW 436

Surface waters—increased flowage consequent on nonnegligent execution of expert plans. Damage to a property owner from an increased flowage of water consequent on the nonnegligent execution of concededly expert plans for paving and surface-water intakes therein, and for curbing, is damnum absque injuria, especially when the damage occurs at the converging point of natural watercourses.

Cole v Des Moines, 212-1270; 232 NW 800

Trespass. The mere opening of an unlocked door and entering premises, without right or authority, constitutes a breaking and entering within the law of trespass.

Girard v Anderson, 219-142; 257 NW 400; 4 NCCA(NS) 203

II JOINT TORT-FEASORS

Discussion. See 8 ILB 115—Judgments against joint tort-feasors; 16 ILR 361—Vicarious liability

Proximate cause—concurrent causes—liability. Principle reaffirmed that when two parties by their concurrent negligence injure a nonnegligent third party, both of said two parties are liable for the resulting damages suffered by said third party.

Andersen v Christensen, 222-177; 268 NW 527

Unintentional injury. Two or more tortfeasors are suable jointly as for a joint tort when their concurring negligence is the proximate cause of a wholly unintentional injury which is indivisible in its nature.

McDonald v Robinson, 207-1293; 224 NW 820; 62 ALR 1419; 34 NCCA 306

Objections—unallowable motion to strike. In an action against several defendants for damages consequent on a negligent act, that defendant who is, in effect, alleged to have occupied the position of respondeat superior cannot have his name stricken from the petition.

Elder v Maudlin, 213-758; 239 NW 577

Release of joint tort-feasor. An injured party who voluntarily, and without being imposed on by fraud, accepts and receives from one alleged joint tort-feasor a legal consideration in the form of property in settlement of his injuries, may not thereafter maintain an action against another joint tort-feasor for damages for the same injury.

Barden v Hurd, 217-798; 253 NW 127

Action based on fraud—conspiracy. In an action based on a conspiracy to defraud, the issue of conspiracy is not determinative, the important factor being that in order to be granted relief, it is necessary that the plaintiff establish the necessary elements of actionable fraud, the amount of recovery being dependent upon the extent of damage resulting from the fraudulent conduct.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Admissibility of contract in action sounding in tort. In an action sounding in tort only, against alleged joint tort-feasors, a contract entered into by one of the defendants with a third party, and conversations between said parties relative to matters arising under said contract, may be material, not for the purpose of permitting plaintiff to recover on the contract, but for the purpose of showing the defendant's relation to a certain subject matter, and thereby establishing a basis for the applicable law of tort.

Hanna v Central Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

Joining contract and tort actions. A joint action cannot be maintained (1) against a contractor on his contract liability to answer for possible torts committed during the progress of work, and (2) against those who are alleged to have subsequently committed a tort during the progress of said work, when the contractor and the alleged tort-feasors are residents of different counties.

Elder v Maudlin, 213-758; 239 NW 577

Partnership—husband and wife—joint or separate liability. A transfer company operating under a trade name, headquartering at defendants' home, having trucks registered in wife's name, but with the state permit in the husband's name, and performing contracts in husband's name, are facts so indicating a partnership that court properly submitted automobile collision case as a joint liability of the husband and wife operating the transfer company.

Schalk v Smith, 224-904; 277 NW 303

Liability of principal and independent contractors. A contract granting the right of way over land for an underground pipe line, on payment of a certain sum per rod, and on payment of "damages to growing crops, fences, or improvements occasioned in laying, repairing, or removing lines", does not constitute an agreement by grantee that he will pay damages consequent on the negligent act (tort) of an independent contractor in injuring grantor's private bridge which was located wholly outside said right of way.

Asher v Continental Corp., 216-977; 250 NW 179

Malpractice—nonjoint liability. The mere fact that a physician directs his patient to go to a named dentist for the extraction of a tooth, and agrees to and does administer the anaesthetic, does not create such relation as will render the physician liable for the negligence of the dentist.

Nelson v Sandell, 202-109; 209 NW 440; 46 ALR 1447

Malpractice—negligence—evidence. In a joint action against two physicians for malpractice, evidence of negligence on the part of one of the defendants prior to the other defendant's connection with the case is inadmissible.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393

Settlement and release—conclusiveness. A party who has been negligently injured and settles with and releases the original wrongdoer may not thereafter maintain an action against a physician for malpractice in treating the very injuries for which he has effected a settlement.

Phillips v Werndorff, 215-521; 243 NW 525; 39 NCCA 574

Attorney fees for defending. When joint wrongdoers jointly and severally employ attorneys to defend themselves in an action for damages consequent on the joint tort, the one who pays the attorney fees may enforce contribution from all the other co-defendants.

Licht v Klipp, 213-1071; 240 NW 722; 1 NCCA(NS) 419

III FRAUD GENERALLY

Discussion. See 4 ILB 46—Elements of deceit; .14 ILR 453—Misrepresentation of law; 21 ILR 158—Caveat emptor—misrepresentation

Essential elements. The elements necessary to constitute actionable fraud are representation, falsity, materiality, scienter, intent to deceive, reliance, and resulting injury and damage.

Gipp v Lynch, 226-1020; 285 NW 659

Damage or prejudice must be shown. There can be no actionable fraud in the absence of damage or prejudice, as without these elements there is no fraud, even tho there is an intent to defraud.

Gipp v Lynch, 226-1020; 285 NW 659

Actual intent to defraud. An actual intent to defraud may be found from false and material representations made by a party as of his own knowledge.

Hills Bank v Cress, 205-306; 218 NW 74

Representations must be made to plaintiff. A plaintiff may not maintain an action at law for damages consequent on fraudulent representations not made to him or his agent.

Markworth v Bank, 212-954; 237 NW 471

Evidence of intent—other transactions. On an issue of specific fraud, other related and nonremote transactions of a fraudulent character are admissible on the question of motive and intent.

Lambertson v Finance Co., 200-527; 202 NW 119

Clean hands—collateral transaction. Principle recognized that a plaintiff is not deprived of his right to equitable relief in a given transaction simply because his hands were somewhat soiled by fraud in another subsequent transaction which is only incidentally or collaterally connected with said prior transaction.

Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Fraud pleas—status in court. In fraud actions, courts are reluctant to permit a cheater to profit by his own wrongdoing, tho at the same time courts are constrained by another consideration—that it is for the public welfare not to afford parties to written agreements such ready avenues of escape from their obligations that the purpose of lastingly recording such obligations in writing would be quite indifferently attained—the aim being to minimize both evils without accentuating either of them.

Griffiths v Brooks, 227-966; 289 NW 715

Pleading conclusions insufficient. Pleading general charge of fraud merely by way of conclusions is insufficient to raise issue of fraud.

Nash v Rehmann Bros., 53 F 2d, 624

Burden of proof. Fraud, in the absence of any showing of fiduciary relationship between the parties, cannot be presumed, but must be established by the party alleging it.

Plymouth County v Koehler, 221-1022; 267 NW 106

Evidence—sufficiency. Fraud must be affirmatively established.

King v Good, 205-1203; 219 NW 517

Evidence—weight and sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that proof of fraud must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Goff v Milliron, 221-998; 266 NW 526

Evidence — insufficiency — directed verdict warranted. In a damage action arising out of fraudulent procurement of plaintiff's signature to note and conditional sale contract, where plaintiff predicates error on granting defendant a directed verdict on the ground that defendant's fraud was not proved—the evidence showing that plaintiff could read and write English language but failed to read instruments while having an opportunity to do so—and where plaintiff's reasons for not reading instruments were (1) he did not have his glasses, and (2) he thought he was signing an ordinary order for automobile, held, plaintiff's conduct precludes him from asserting fraud, and the ruling on the motion was warranted.

Griffiths v Brooks, 227-966; 289 NW 715

Presumption and burden of proof. Fraud is never presumed. He who alleges its existence must establish it by clear, convincing and satisfactory evidence. Principle applied in an equitable action to set aside and cancel certain financial obligations allegedly obtained by fraud.

Eckhardt v Trust Co., 223-471; 273 NW 347

Scienter as essential element. A demand for damages based on alleged fraud cannot be sustained without proof of scienter or its equivalent, whether the action be at law or in equity.

Appleby v Kurtz, 212-657; 237 NW 312

Damages—scienter. Scienter—knowledge of the falsity—is an indispensable element of an action for damages for fraudulent representation. Evidence held insufficient to show knowledge of the falsity of representation relative to the extent to which a farm was tiled.

Kleinmeyer v Willenbrock, 202-1049; 210 NW 447

False representations—reliance. The right to rely on representations in one transaction may have a very material bearing on the right to rely on the same representations in a former transaction between the same parties.

Breza v Federal Soc., 200-507; 205 NW 206

Unauthorized representations of seller's agent—buyer's rescission for falsity—seller's responsibility. Where buyer rescinds contract induced by fraudulent misrepresentations of seller's agent and seeks recovery of purchase price, the agent's limited authority, otherwise binding on the buyer, does not preclude the buyer from alleging and proving such representations, and the seller is bound by such representations even tho unauthorized and even tho the contract expressly limits the agent's authority to make agreements.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

Opinions—effect. Expressions of opinions may, under some circumstances, amount to representations of fact.

Baumchen v Donahoe, 215-512; 242 NW 533

Opinion (?) or fact (?). A representation may be one of fact per se, or it may be one of opinion per se, or it may be neither per se. In the latter case, whether the representation or statement be of fact or of opinion depends essentially on the subject matter of the transaction and on all the material attending facts and circumstances thereof; and the court must, in its instructions, clearly differentiate between the two questions. So held where the representation was as to presence of rock on the premises.

Boysen v Petersen, 203-1073; 211 NW 894

Representations referring to existing facts. The rule that fraud cannot be predicated upon the failure to perform a promise or stated intention to do something in the future unless the statement is made with an existing real intention not to perform does not apply when the representations relied on refer to existing facts. The representation by a corporation that it has adopted a particular sales program was such reference to existing facts.

Lee v Sundberg, 227-1375; 291 NW 146

Interwoven statements of fact and opinion. A fraud-doer may not complain of the submission to the jury of matters of opinion, as distinguished from representations of fact, when his statements of opinion are so interwoven with his statements of fact that to separate them is practically impossible.

Pullan v Struthers, 201-1179; 207 NW 235

Damages—pleading and proof. Allegation and proof of fraud without any allegation and proof of damages leave plaintiff without a cause of action.

Vorpahl v Surety Co., 208-348; 223 NW 366

Elements—damage—failure of proof. Fraud, howsoever clearly established, becomes inconsequential in a law action when it appears that the victim of the fraud was in no manner damaged.

Rawleigh v Cook, 200-412; 205 NW 57

Federal court jurisdiction—exemplary damages. Exemplary damages may be added to actual damages to make up federal jurisdictional amount where exemplary damages are recoverable, and exemplary damages may be allowed in actions on case of conspiracy or deceit.

Young v Main, 72 F 2d, 640

Knowledge of fraud. One who knows that he is being defrauded and voluntarily submits thereto and consummates the transaction waives the fraud.

Loots v Knoke, 209-447; 228 NW 45

Specific elements—instructions. An abstract instruction defining fraudulent representations is not adequate when there is a request for a specific instruction covering the elements of falsity, scienter, deception, and injury.

Gray v Shell Corp., 212-825; 237 NW 460

Discovery—petition—sufficiency. Petition for the production of papers and correspondence, in an action for damages for deceit, reviewed, and held to comply with the governing statute.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Discovery—correspondence with defendant and his trade-name affiliates. The court, in an action against an individual for deceit, is not necessarily acting beyond its jurisdiction in ordering the production of correspondence not only with the defendant personally, but with various trade-name concerns under which the defendant is alleged to be doing business.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Advice—when fraudulent. One who is sought out as an adviser in a contemplated purchase, and gives such advice fraudulently, and with the intent to defraud and to promote his own secret, but concealed, interest in the transaction, must respond in damages to the one who justifiably relies thereon.

Faust v Parker, 204-297; 213 NW 794

Commercial college representations. Record reviewed, and held insufficient to support a finding either (1) that an instructor in a commercial college was not an "expert," as represented, or (2) that the student in such college did not receive "individual instruction," as represented.

Mitchell v College, 200-1202; 206 NW 81

Measure of damages. The measure of damages for fraudulently representing the nature of instruction given to students in a commercial college is the difference between the value of the represented instruction and the value of the instruction actually received.

Mitchell v College, 200-1202; 206 NW 81

Ratification of part ratifies all. Partial ratification of an agency adopts it as a whole, including detriments.

Smith v Miller, 225-241; 280 NW 493

Fraud on agent, fraud on principal. Fraud on an agent, in a matter in which the agent is acting in his representative capacity, is a fraud on the principal. It follows that the principal may seek redress to the same extent as tho the fraud was perpetrated directly and personally upon him.

Andrew v Baird, 221-83; 265 NW 170

Wife denying husband's agency but accepting benefits not permitted. A wife, owning a rooming house, sold on the fraudulent representation of her husband, made in response to purchaser's direct question, that the furnace heated the upstairs rooms, will not, in purchaser's action to rescind and recover the down payment, be permitted to deny her husband's authority to represent her and at the same time retain the down payment as fruits of the deceit.

Smith v Miller, 225-241; 280 NW 493

Attorney and client—inadvertent misrepresentation. Evidence held insufficient to show fraud by an attorney in the making of an inadvertent false representation.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

Financial statement—future reliance. The plea that a financial statement as a basis for credit was given so long prior to the actual granting of credit that the plaintiff granting the credit had, as a matter of law, no right to rely thereon is futile when said statement distinctly recognizes that it is a continuing one, and for the purpose of future reliance.

Hills Bank v Cress, 205-306; 218 NW 74

Delay—misrepresentation by carrier. A charge of misrepresentation may not be successfully based on the good-faith statement by the agent of the carrier as to his understanding as to where a shipment was and when it would arrive.

Percy v Railway, 207-889; 223 NW 879

False promise. A statement to the effect that if a party will sign an obligation "he will never be sued thereon," is fraudulent when made for the purpose of deceiving the party to whom made, and when the latter justifiably relies thereon.

Commercial Bank v Kietges, 206-90; 219 NW 44

Waiver by action for breach of contract. He who bases his action on the breach of a contract thereby affirms the contract, and may not recover damages for fraud in the inception of the contract.

Bergman v Coal Co., 200-419; 203 NW 697

Fraud—irrevocable waiver of action for damages. One who, with full knowledge that he has been fraudulently inveigled into signing an option contract for the sale of his property, elects not to rescind but to affirm and perform the contract, and does perform at a time when the contract is wholly executory and without consideration, thereby irrevocably waives, as a matter of law, any and all right to sue the wrongdoer for damages.

Ankeney v Brenton, 214-357; 238 NW 71

Payment with knowledge of facts. Principle reaffirmed that one who voluntarily pays a disputed claim with full knowledge of the facts may not recover the sum so paid.

Meyer v Gotsdiner, 208-677; 226 NW 38

Federal jurisdiction. Where petition alleged rescission of contract obtained by fraud, and prayed for purchase price and for damages for conspiracy or deceit, federal court did not acquire jurisdiction on ground that total amount sought exceeded $3,000, where action in effect was one in assumpsit for recovery of purchase price which was less than $3,000.

Young v Main, 72 F 2d, 640

Cause of action not tort. Petition alleging that defendants by fraudulent statements induced plaintiff to buy machines, and that promptly thereafter plaintiff rescinded contract of purchase and demanded return of purchase price, and that fraudulent statements were made willfully and maliciously, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover amount of purchase price and exemplary damages held to set out cause for recovery of purchase price and not in tort.

Young v Main, 72 F 2d, 640

Damages—recovery. Instructions reviewed and held to correctly state the conditions under which recovery could be had for damages consequent on the feeding of a so-called hog remedy to hogs.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

Measure of recovery. Measure of recovery for plaintiff who has rescinded his contract on ground that contract was obtained by fraud is return of money paid or recovery of property with which he parted, and by rescinding contract plaintiff demands that parties be placed in statu quo, and plaintiff has right to have money or property with which he parted restored to him.

Young v Main, 72 F 2d, 640

Permissible relief. Where contract is obtained by fraud, person defrauded may affirm contract and sue party who defrauded him for his damages, or he may repudiate contract and recover purchase price paid, but he must elect one remedy and, if injured person pleads rescission, he cannot then say that his action is in tort.

Young v Main, 72 F 2d, 640

Husband and wife—action on property-settlement contract. A defendant sued by his former wife on a property-settlement contract, fully performed by her, availeth himself nothing in the way of a defense by nakedly alleging fraud by the wife in obtaining the contract when such allegation is made neither as a basis for a rescission of the contract nor for damages.

Poole v Poole, 219-70; 257 NW 305

Compromise and settlement—impeachment—burden of proof. Fraud, in impeachment of a compromise and settlement, must be established by the pleader who alleges it.

Coffman v Brenton, 214-185; 239 NW 9

Evidence of intent to defraud—sufficiency. In an action to cancel an alleged fraud-induced compromise settlement of indebtedness, proof that in the negotiations leading up to said settlement defendant made to plaintiff inducing and material statements as of fact but which defendant, at the time, knew to be false, justifies the finding, without further proof, that defendant made said statements with intent to defraud and deceive the plaintiff.

Andrew v Baird, 221-83; 265 NW 170

Compromise settlement—impeachment—burden of proof. A plaintiff who attacks a compromise settlement of the amount due under a policy of insurance on the ground that it was fraud-induced has the burden to show that the representations inducing the settlement were knowingly false and that he innocently relied thereon; and plaintiff must, of course, fail on a record showing that the representations were true, and that he knew they were true.

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156

Insurance—fraud-induced settlement. In an action, not on a policy of insurance, but for damages consequent on an alleged fraud-induced contract of settlement of the amount due on the policy, the burden of proof to show that the application for the insurance was not attached to or indorsed on the policy is on the insured when he pleads that the insurer may not avail itself of representations contained in the application.

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156

Insurance—compromise settlement—justifiable representation of defense. An officer of an insurance company is amply justified in believing that his company has a good defense to an action on a policy and in so stating to the insured in negotiations for a compromise settlement when the application for the insurance contained false representations of a material nature and an agreement that "the right to recover * * * should be barred" if any of the statements in the application "material either to the acceptance of the risk or the hazard assumed by the company is false and made with the intent to deceive."

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156

Deception constituting fraud and liability therefor—right to rely on false statement. A debtor who falsely asserts his complete insolvency, and thereby induces his creditor, wholly ignorant of the true facts, to enter into a compromise settlement of indebtedness, will not, in an action to cancel the fraud-induced settlement, be heard to assert that the creditor had no right to rely on said false statement—that the creditor, before acting, should have made an independent investigation as to the truth of said statement.

Andrew v Baird, 221-83; 265 NW 170

Reinsurance—disclosure of material facts. In an action on a reinsurance contract against reinsurer, held, not breached on account of original insurer's failure to retain full amount of liability agreed upon where original insurer was liable on another contract with the same principal and the evidence was insufficient to show any wrongful or fraudulent concealment of material facts, since the same principles of law as to false representations and concealments govern in reinsurance as in original insurance. Altho insured and reinsured have duty to exercise good faith and disclose all material facts, a presumption must be based on facts, not upon other presumptions. The mere nondisclosure of facts possibly known is not fraudulent concealment of facts, so reinsurer, to establish concealment of facts, must show intentional concealment or bad faith in ascertaining facts.

General Reins. v Surety Co., 27 F 2d, 265

Delay—effect. Long delay (short of the running of the statute of limitation) does not bar an action for damages for deceit in the sale of land.

Boysen v Petersen, 203-1073; 211 NW 894

False representations—measure of damages. The measure of damages for false representations inducing the purchase of real estate is the difference between the value of the land as received and the value as it would have been, had the land been as represented.

Aldrich v Worley, 200-1009; 205 NW 851

Sale of land—fraudulent representations. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of fraud in the sale of land.

Williams v Burnside, 207-239; 222 NW 413

Measure of damages—instruction following rescission theory—error without prejudice under evidence. In vendee's action for damages for fraudulent representations of value in the sale of real estate, no rescission being asked, it is error to instruct that the measure of damages is the amount paid less the reasonable rental value for the time occupied, which error, however, is without reversible prejudice to the vendor, when the amount of recovery is so small that the hope for a more favorable verdict on a retrial is, under the evidence, too remote.

Neal v Miller, 225-252; 280 NW 499

Measure of damages. Principle reaffirmed that the measure of damages for fraudulent representations as to the condition of land sold is the difference between the reasonable value of the land at the time in question and what would have been said value had the land been as represented.

Fry Co. v Gould, 214-983; 241 NW 666

Wholly unallowable counterclaim. The amount which a vendee of land claims to have expended on land foisted upon him because of fraudulent representations by the vendor, in order to render the land "suitable, productive, and usable," is wholly unallowable as a counterclaim because said amount as a measure of damages for the wrong suffered is unknown to the law.

Fry Co. v Gould, 214-983; 241 NW 666

Evidence—sufficiency. A showing that a conveyance by a debtor is attended by a mere suspicion of fraud is not sufficient foundation for decreeing its invalidity. Fraud must be clearly and satisfactorily established.

First N. Bank v Lynch, 202-795; 211 NW 381

Remedy—unallowable action for damages. A judgment plaintiff may not maintain an action at law for damages against the fraudulent grantee of land transferred by the judgment defendant, even tho the action is aided by an allegation of conspiracy to defraud plaintiff.

McKay v Barrick, 207-1091; 224 NW 84

False representations—actionable matters of fact and opinion. Representations (1) that land was a choice tract, (2) that it was adapted to rice culture at small expense, (3) that it was well improved, (4) that it had improvements in good repair and of ample capacity and of a named value, and (5) that the cost of operating certain machinery would not exceed a named sum are statements of present fact and actionable, if false. If treated as matters of opinion, they are likewise actionable if false, when made by a party as of his own personal knowledge.

Aldrich v Worley, 200-1009; 205 NW 851

Negating fraud. The plea of fraudulent representation as to the value of property must necessarily fall in the face of testimony that the complainant was a person of unusual business ability and experience and had had long, personal and intimate knowledge of the property in question far superior to that of the alleged wrongdoer.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

Nonreliance on representations. Fraud may not be based on alleged false representations as to the value and condition of property when it appears that complainant had unrestricted opportunity to investigate said representations and availed himself to the fullest extent of said opportunity.

Hall v Swanson, 201-134; 206 NW 671

Right to rely on representation. A purchaser of real estate who makes an unhampered examination of the premises prior to purchase may not rely on representations of any fact as to the truth of which he can reasonably assure himself.

Boysen v Petersen, 203-1073; 211 NW 894

Unavailing inspection—effect. The plea that the party complaining of false and fraudulent representations in an exchange of land had inspected the land prior to accepting it, and had full opportunity to learn all relevant facts, must necessarily fall when it is shown that an inspection at said time would not reveal the falsity of the particular representations relied on.

Baumhover v Gerken, 200-551; 203 NW 15

Reformation of deed—omission. Evidence reviewed, and held ample to justify the reformation of a deed because of the mistaken, and fraudulently induced, omission therefrom of a clause reserving to grantors a life estate in the land in question.

Foote v Soukup, 221-1218; 266 NW 904

Silence—effect. A vendor who, in answer to an inquiry by a proposed purchaser concerning a fact having material relation to the property, speaks half the truth and remains silent as to the other half, may be guilty of actionable false representation. Evidence held insufficient to apply the principle.

Foreman v Dugan, 205-929; 218 NW 912

Mechanic's lien release through fraud. Where a landowner desiring to refinance a mortgage on his land is unable to do so, unless he also satisfies a mechanic's lien thereon, and when the landowner's son, seeking to aid his father by securing a release of the mechanic's lien, executes to a bank a chattel mortgage, after which the mechanic's lien is released because of a special account set up by the bank for the mechanic's lien holder, but which account is available, however, only in such amounts and at such times as the son paid off the chattel mortgage to the bank, and when the same bank later took another chattel mortgage from both the landowner and son, which it later foreclosed, and in the sale disposed of the property, previously mortgaged for the benefit of the mechanic's lien holder, without crediting to the mechanic's lien holder's benefit the proceeds therefrom, a fraud action by the mechanic's lien holder against the bank held not to have been proven.

Shimp v Place, 225-1098; 281 NW 471

Nonwaiver by exercising acts of ownership. Fraud in an exchange of properties is not waived by the victim of the fraud by exercising acts of ownership over the land received, at a time when he had not fully discovered the fraud practiced on him, and at a time when the other party was asserting that the contract was not fraudulent, and that the deal, if not satisfactory, would be mutually rescinded.

Baumhover v Gerken, 200-551; 203 NW 15

False statement as to incumbrancer. Fraud may consist of a statement that a named banking institution was the holder of an incumbrance upon land when in fact the incumbrance holder was an estate, the victim of the fraud knowing nothing of the value of the land.

Hills Bank v Cress, 205-306; 218 NW 74

Mother paying on contract while daughter gets tax deed—invalidity. A tax deed will be set aside when a mother buying property on contract allows it to go to tax sale, then contracts with the certificate purchaser to buy the certificate while continuing payments to the landowner, assuring said landowner that she is redeeming, yet, when the certificate is acquired, a daughter's name is inserted and treasurer's deed issued thereto, the mother must be held to have conspired with the daughter to defraud the landowner and to have accomplished no more than a redemption for herself.

Blotky v Silberman, 225-519; 281 NW 496

Concealment. An heir may not predicate fraud in the sale of his share in an estate on the claim that his stepmother, the purchaser, concealed from him the amount of the estate, when the inventory was on file, when the uncertainty attending the existence of debts and a possible will was equally known to all parties, and when the heir possessed the same opportunity to learn the full amount of the estate as was possessed by the stepmother.

Ward v Ward, 207-647; 223 NW 369

Confidential relations—parent and child. A conveyance between parent and child generates no presumption of fraud, but necessarily invites critical examination of the attending circumstances. Circumstances indicative of fraud reviewed, and held to outweigh positive testimony tending to show good faith.

First N. Bank v Hartsock, 202-603; 210 NW 919

Fiduciary relationship—required proof. In an action to set aside a trust agreement executed to a son and an attorney by plaintiff, evidence held to support decree dismissing plaintiff's petition. The existence of a confidential relationship or facts giving rise thereto must be proved before doctrine of fiduciary relationship can be applied—the mere relationship of parent and child does not create fiduciary relationship.

Hatt v Hatt, (NOR); 265 NW 640

Resulting trusts. The plea that a trust resulted against one who fraudulently obtained the property necessitates proof of representation, reliance thereon, falsity thereof, scienter, deception, and injury. Evidence held affirmatively to show the contrary.

Andrew v Bank, 205-244; 216 NW 551

Recovery of money against innocent third party. One who is defrauded of his money may not recover the same of an innocent third party to whom the wrongdoer paid it in discharge of the bona fide debt of the wrongdoer to the innocent third party.

Bogle v Bank, 203-203; 212 NW 547

Law of foreign state. A representation to the effect that, when a good-faith purchaser of property acquired it, a conditional sale contract was already of record in a foreign state in conformity with the laws thereof, is a representation of fact, and, if false, will sustain a plea of fraud in the execution of notes by said purchaser in the good-faith reliance on such representation, even tho such purchaser makes no examination of the laws of the foreign state.

Baker v Bockelman, 208-254; 225 NW 411

Validity of note. Evidence reviewed and held ample to show that the promissory note in question was fraud-induced.

North Amer. Ins. v Holstrum, 208-56; 221 NW 214

Cashing fraud-induced check—nonliability to maker. The payee of a check, negotiable in form and regular on its face, and received in the ordinary course of business, and for value, and wholly without knowledge of a fraud which attended and induced the execution and delivery of the check, may not be held liable to the drawer of the check for damages consequent on said fraud.

Deater v Bank, 223-86; 272 NW 423

Holdership in due course—estoppel. The maker of a negotiable promissory note may not be said to be estopped to plead fraud in the inception of the note, against a transferee, on a record which fails to show that the maker's conduct ever came to the knowledge of the transferee or in any manner controlled his conduct.

State Bank v Behm, 202-192; 209 NW 523

Banks—objectionable assets. False representations by the managing officers of a reorganized bank to the effect that all objectionable assets of the old bank had been eliminated from the new bank are actionable if relied on to one's damage.

Baumchen v Donahoe, 215-512; 242 NW 533

Payment of funds to one with apparent authority to collect. When the plaintiff gave a third party his passbook to be used to withdraw an account from an Italian bank, and the third party used the passbook to secure a personal note given to the defendant bank through which the exchange transaction was made, the bank was not liable for using the funds received from the Italian bank as payment of the note, when it might have thought that the note was given to obtain an advance for the plaintiff and had no knowledge of wrongdoing, and previous transactions indicated an apparent authority to transact the business in such manner.

Matalone v Bank, 226-1031; 285 NW 648

Purchase of stock—damages. The measure of damages for false representations inducing the purchase of corporate bank stock is the price paid for the stock; also, in addition, the amount of assessments subsequently paid on the stock if said assessments are the proximate results of the cause which brought about the original loss.

Baumchen v Donahoe, 215-512; 242 NW 533

Iowa securities act—false representations. A corporation's false representations and statements made to the secretary of state and purchasers are within provision of the Iowa securities act, and evidence of such false representations supported a judgment for plaintiff in an action to set aside sales of corporate stock and to recover amounts paid with attorney's fees for violation of such act.

Associated Mfr. Corp. v De Jong, 64 F 2d, 64

Sale of bonds—fraud—discovery—limitation of action. Under the rule that the statute of limitations begins to run on a law action for fraud when the fraud is consummated unless tolled by an intentional fraudulent concealment, and since §11010 does not apply to law actions, in a case where bonds were sold in 1922 and buyers could have secured at any time a detailed statement of the securities held for payment of the bonds, the buyers cannot claim they did not discover, until 1933, fraud in the sale of the bonds.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

Essential elements. A jury question is presented by testimony which tends to show that defendants, with the intent to defraud, falsely represented the value and ownership of corporate stock and its great desirability as an investment, and that the victim thereof justifiably relied thereon to his damage.

Faust v Parker, 204-297; 213 NW 794

Knowledge of falsity—opportunity to learn truth. The purchaser of corporate shares of stock will not be permitted to say that he relied to his damage on false representations as to the assets of the corporation and the value thereof, and as to amount originally paid in on the stock and the dividends declared, when, at the time the representations were made, he personally knew that some of the representations were false, and when, at said time, he had equal opportunity with the seller to know and learn the actual truth of the remaining representations but did not avail himself of said opportunity.

Wead v Ganzhorn, 216-478; 249 NW 271

False promise—when actionable. The deliberate making of a promise to resell corporate stock which was being offered for sale, with the intent to defraud, and with no intention of performing such promise, matures a cause of action in one who justifiably relies thereon to his damage.

Faust v Parker, 204-297; 213 NW 794

Interwoven statements as to future possibilities. On the issue whether the purchase of corporate shares of stock was induced by fraudulent representations, the entire series of interwoven representations which were made to induce such purchase must be considered, even though some of them relate to the future possibilities of the corporation and of its stock.

North Amer. Ins. v. Holstrum, 208-722; 217 NW 239; 224 NW 492

Fraud pleadable against corporate creditors. One who is fraudulently induced to subscribe for corporate stock and to execute his negotiable promissory note in payment therefor may plead said fraud against a creditor of the corporation who, by indorsement, became a collateral security holder of the note, with full knowledge that it was given in payment for stock, (1) whether the creditor sues on the note or (2) whether the creditor sues on the theory (conceding, arguendo, its legal permissibility) that the indorsement of the note worked an assignment to him of the corporation's right of action against the subscriber for unpaid installments of stock.

Arnd v Grell, 200-1272; 206 NW 613

Corporate stock—no market value—net value of assets. If there is no evidence of the market value of corporate stock—in an action for damages consequent on a fraudulently induced sale—said value must be determined by ascertaining the net value of the assets of the corporation.

Humphrey v Baron, 223-735; 273 NW 856

Action based on fraud—conspiracy. In an action based on a conspiracy to defraud, the issue of conspiracy is not determinative, the important factor being that in order to be granted relief, it is necessary that the plaintiff establish the necessary elements of actionable fraud, the amount of recovery being dependent upon the extent of damage resulting from the fraudulent conduct.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Fraud on bank by officer—conspiracy. Where the cashier of the plaintiff bank concealed a shortage with the bank by making fraudulent entries in its bond account and, to further conceal the shortage, obtained credit with the defendant bank by using drafts on the plaintiff bank as security, and concealed the monthly statements of the defendant in order to continue to conceal the shortage, the defendant having nothing to gain by aiding him in his fraud, there was neither direct nor circumstantial evidence of any arrangement between the cashier and the defendant to support a claim that there was conspiracy between them.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Conspiracy—concert of action—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to present a jury question on the issue of concert of action between the officers and directors of a corporation for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff in the purchase of stock, except as to two defendants.

Stambaugh v Haffa, 217-1161; 253 NW 137; 38 NCCA 114.

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue of fraud in the sale of corporate stock.

Reinertson v Products Co., 205-417; 216 NW 68

Different fraud in same transaction. A decree in an action for fraudulent representations in the sale of the corporate stock of one corporation is not an adjudication of an action for materially different fraudulent representations in the sale of the corporate stock of another and different corporation; and this is true tho said actions grew out of the same written contract of purchase.

Reinertson v Products Co., 205-417; 216 NW 68

Defendants not fraud perpetrators—directing verdict. In an action against the incorporators of an investment company for damages for fraud in the sale of bonds, a directed verdict in favor of the incorporators was proper when the evidence, other than the outlawed printed representations on the back of the bonds, showed the fraud, if any, was committed by a bank trustee of the securities.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

Sale of bonds—damage accrual—later exchange no concealment of fraud. Where bonds purchased in 1922 were exchanged in 1927 and 1932 for new bonds, the damage from fraud in their sale, if any, occurred when they were first purchased, and when neither the actual fraud itself nor due diligence to discover the same are proven, the subsequent exchange transactions will not toll the statute as a concealment of the original fraud, especially if none existed.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

Deception constituting fraud—sale of bonds—duty to investigate. Under clause in bonds entitling buyers to statement of securities, it is no excuse for failing to request the same, to say that statement from fraud perpetrators if furnished would not be true.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

Joinder of corporations and officers. Two corporations, each organized by the same promoters, for identically the same purpose, and officered by the same officers, may be joined with the common president, in an action based upon a single joint transaction wherein the said president in the sale of corporate stock of both corporations made false representations in the interest of and for the benefit of both corporations.

McCarthy v Dixon, 219-15; 257 NW 327

Municipal officers—pensions—findings and orders—effect. The official decision of the board of trustees of the firemen's pension fund that an applicant was not entitled to a pension on account of an alleged injury, is final and conclusive in the absence of fraud, and fraud will not be presumed in the absence of proof thereof. So held as to a claimed injury which had, apparently, been concealed for some nine years before being presented as a ground for pension.

Fehrman v Sioux City, 223-308; 271 NW 500

IV CONVERSION, CIVIL LIABILITY GENERALLY

Joint liability. If two parties be liable for a conversion, plaintiff may sue either or both.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Pleading—trespass and conversion. A party may plead trespass and conversion in the same action.

Girard v Anderson, 219-142; 257 NW 400; 4 NCCA (NS) 203

Admissions showing weakness of contentions. Where the cashier of the plaintiff bank had entered into two similar credit transactions with the defendant bank in order to cover a shortage in accounts, in an action to recover the amount of the shortage, the plaintiff's brief stating that there had been a full accounting between the two banks except as to one of the two transactions, such statement recognized a weakness in the plaintiff's contentions, as the amount claimed was equal to the amount involved in only one of the transactions and, when both had been accounted for in the same manner, the accounting for both had to be either proper or improper.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Jury question. Direct evidence is not essential in order to generate a jury question on the issue of conversion.

Mulenix v Bank, 203-897; 209 NW 432

Separate and distinct conversions. A misjoinder of causes of action and of parties occurs when a petition for damages, consequent on successive sales of mortgaged chattels, reveals that two separate and distinct sales were made with actual or constructive notice of the recorded mortgage,—one by part of the defendants, and one by the remaining defendants,—without any allegation of conspiracy, unity of design, or concert of action on the part of all of said defendants, and without any allegation that the concurrent acts of all the defendants proximately contributed to the conversion.

Producers Assn. v Livingston, 216-1257; 250 NW 602

Title—evidence. On the issue of ownership of personal property, plaintiff may introduce (for what it is worth) a policy of insurance carried by him on the property, especially when defendant is insisting that plaintiff's claim of ownership is a belated afterthought.

Antes v Coal Co., 203-485; 210 NW 767

Transfer of property by mortgagor. The purchaser of mortgaged chattels is not liable to the mortgagee, as for a conversion, when the mortgagee has waived his lien by expressly or impliedly consenting to a sale by the mortgagor.

Producers Assn. v Morrell & Co., 220-948; 263 NW 242

Right to dictate application. A chattel mortgagee who consents to the shipment and sale of the mortgaged property in his name must obey the instructions of the mortgagor to apply the receipts on the mortgage-secured debt, irrespective of his right in the absence of such instructions.

Reichenbach v Bank, 205-1009; 218 NW 903

Liabilities of parties. A senior chattel mortgagee who, without foreclosure, takes possession of the mortgaged property and sells it at private sale must account to a junior mortgagee for such part of the proceeds as he applies to unsecured claims due him.

Money v Bank, 202-106; 209 NW 275

Liability of bailee. The bailee of an article is liable to the bailor for the reasonable value of the article when the bailee sells it after receiving it under an agreement to credit the bailor with a certain amount on a contemplated purchase of a new article of the same kind, it appearing that the bailor had abandoned his former contemplated new purchase.

Kinsey v Massey, 204-758; 216 NW 54

Unidentified bailments—ratable distribution. When the subject matter of various bailments with the same bailee is identical in kind,—e. g., government bonds,—and becomes so intermingled that the owners are unable to identify their separate property, the entire series of bailments must, in case of the in-solveny of the bailee, be ratably distributed among the bailors.

In re F. & M. Bank, 202-859; 211 NW 532; 51 ALR 910

Insurance premium—conversion by agent—liability of insurer. Where insurance agent taking an application for life insurance had authority to collect premiums on behalf of the insurer and where proceeds of check given with application for payment of premium were partly converted while in authorized possession of insurer's agent, and the application was thereafter rejected by insurer, the conversion was an act for which the insurer was liable.

Economy Co. v Ins. Co., 227-1123; 290 NW 82

Treating collateral security as one's own. The collateral holder of mortgage-secured bonds is guilty of conversion if, when the mortgage is foreclosed, he so treats said bonds as his individual property that they pass beyond the control of himself and of the real owner, without the knowledge or consent of said real owner.

Leonard v Sehman, 206-277; 220 NW 77

Fraud on bank by officer. Where the cashier of the plaintiff bank concealed a shortage with the bank by making fraudulent entries in its bond account and, to further conceal the shortage, obtained credit with the defendant bank by using drafts on the plaintiff bank as security, and concealed the monthly statements of the defendant in order to continue to conceal the shortage, the defendant having nothing to gain by aiding him in his fraud, there was neither direct nor circumstantial evidence of any arrangement between the cashier and the defendant to support a claim that there was conspiracy between them.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Fraudulent acts by bank cashier—repudiation of only part of transaction. Where the cashier of the plaintiff bank obtained credit with the defendant bank in order to conceal a shortage in the accounts of the plaintiff, giving unauthorized drafts on the plaintiff and crediting the plaintiff with the amounts, it was erroneous for the court to find that the cashier had borrowed from the defendant to pay the plaintiff and then paid the defendant with the drafts with the result that the defendant then held assets of the plaintiff equal to the amount of the drafts. To hold thus would permit the plaintiff bank to accept payment of the shortage through the unauthorized acts of its agent, the cashier, and at the same time repudiate the remainder of the transaction and deny the right of the defendant to use the unauthorized drafts.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Bonds — evidence — sufficiency. Plaintiff in an action for the conversion of bonds may recover on proof of the conversion and of the value of the bonds. Proof that bonds found in the possession of the converter or of his executor are the identical bonds converted is material only in case plaintiff elects to recover the bonds in kind.

Annis v Morgan, 210-478; 231 NW 457

Corporate stock — evidence — jury question. Evidence held to present jury question on the issue whether corporate stock alleged to have been converted was worthless, whether a bank cashier acted individually or on behalf of the bank, and whether the bank received any funds in the transaction in question.

Butterworth v Bank, 211-1327; 236 NW 83

Official bonds—time deposit works conversion. A sheriff is guilty of instant conversion and a breach of his bond when he deposits in a bank funds properly coming into his hands in unadjudicated condemnation proceedings and takes from the bank a certificate of deposit which is payable at a definite time in the future, because he thereby fails so to "hold" said funds as commanded by statute as to enable him to account for such funds whenever the proceedings are finally determined; and in such case the question of due care or negligence in making the deposit is quite immaterial.

Northwestern Co. v Bassett, 205-999; 218 NW 982

Identification of goods—evidence. In an action against an execution plaintiff for conversion of goods stored in certain "boxes, barrels, and trunks," and sold in bulk, without inventory of the contents, plaintiff may introduce duly identified and detailed inventories of the contents, on a showing that such inventories represent the contents of said "boxes, barrels, and trunks."

Antes v Coal Co., 203-485; 210 NW 767

Chattel mortgage foreclosure — misdescription of horses. In an action against a bank for conversion of horses sold in a chattel mortgage foreclosure and allegedly being the same horses mortgaged previously to induce the release of a mechanic's lien, held, evidence failed to establish that the horses sold were the same ones described in the prior chattel mortgage.

Shimp Bros. v Place, 225-1098; 281 NW 471

Property under receivership. One who is in possession of property as agent of a duly appointed receiver is not guilty of a conversion of the property by refusing to give it up without the consent of the receiver, even though such agent is plaintiff in the action in which the receiver was appointed, and even though a full settlement of the action has been consummated, but not yet called to the attention of the court.

McCarthy v Cutchall, 209-193; 225 NW 865

Trusts — management—unauthorized transfer of collateral. The act of a trustee holding collateral as security for a particular bond issue in transferring, without authority, the collateral so held to another and, different series of bonds, in order that the said latter bonds may be better secured, or the transfer of such collateral to any other foreign purpose, constitutes a conversion and renders the trustee and the corporate officers who connive thereat personally responsible to the bondholders for the loss suffered by them.

Walker v Howell, 209-823; 226 NW 85

Matured crops. Principle reaffirmed that matured corn, standing in the field, is personal property and therefore subject to conversion.

Durfinger v Heaton, 219-528; 258 NW 543

Rent—conversion—jury question. Record held to present jury question on issue whether property on which a landlord had a lien for rent had been sold by the tenant with or without the consent of the landlord.

Mau v Rice Bros., 216-864; 249 NW 206

Rent—lien—liability of purchaser—burden of proof. A landlord may successfully maintain an action for conversion against the purchaser of property on which he has a lien for rent, unless such purchaser avoids the action by a plea of waiver or estoppel. Especially is it erroneous to instruct the jury that the landlord must prove that he had no "knowledge" of the sale.

Wilson v Fortune, 209-810; 229 NW 190

V ASSAULTS

Disabilities—torts during coverture. A wife may not maintain an action against her husband for damages consequent upon willful injuries inflicted upon her by her husband.

In re Dolmage, 203-231; 212 NW 553

Civil liability—jury question. Evidence held to present jury question in an action for damages for assault and battery.

Fox v McCurnin, 205-752; 218 NW 499

Evidence — competency — non-res-gestae statements. In an action for damages consequent on an assault, a witness will not be permitted, over proper objection, to testify as to what plaintiff, some two hours after the occurrence, said relative to the cause of her agitation.

McQueen v Stores, 214-1300; 244 NW 278

Evidence—hearsay—incompetency. Plaintiff in an action for damages consequent on an assault, may not testify as to the "remarks" that her friends and neighbors made to her relative to the assault, such "remarks" being hearsay.

V ASSAULTS—continued

Pleading—confession and avoidance. In an action for injuries inflicted upon the plaintiff when he was forcibly ejected from the home of the defendant, where the defendant's answer assumed the burden of proof by admitting the assault and battery, but by way of justification and confession and avoidance asserted that the plaintiff had been ejected after refusing to leave, the evidence was not sufficient to compel the court to direct a verdict for the defendant on the issue of whether the defendant had used more force than was necessary to accomplish the ejection.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Civil liability—trespassers—abortive issue. The plea in an action for personal injury that plaintiff was a trespasser on defendant's property presents no jury question when defendant neither pleads nor proves (1) that he had requested plaintiff to depart and that plaintiff had refused to do so, or (2) that any force was necessary to remove plaintiff—in short, when defendant does not plead or show that he was ejecting plaintiff as a trespasser.

Pettijohn v Halloran, 200-1355; 206 NW 631

Civil liability—self-defense. The aggressor in a physical encounter who is met by allowable self-defense necessarily has no cause of action against the party he assaults.

Lake v Moots, 215-126; 244 NW 693

Arrest without warrant—reasonable ground—excessive force. Testimony reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issues (1) whether a defendant-sheriff in an action for damages had reasonable cause to believe that plaintiff's automobile contained the persons who had just prior thereto committed a robbery, (2) whether the sheriff acted as a prudent and reasonable officer would act under similar circumstances, and (3) whether the sheriff employed more force than was apparently necessary to stop the car.

Lawyer v Stansell, 217-111; 250 NW 887

Combatants' consent to fight—no defense. In a case of mutual combat consent is no defense in an action by either combatant to recover damages for injuries inflicted by the other. Such fighting being unlawful, and the combat involving a breach of the peace, the mutual consent is to be regarded as unlawful and as not depriving the injured party, or, for that matter, either party, from recovering damages.

Schwaller v McFarland, 228- ; 291 NW 852

Self-defense—admitted aggression—effect. Whether defendant employed excessive force in repelling an assault upon him is the sole question at issue in a civil action for damages when plaintiff admits that he was the aggressor in the affray with defendant. In other words, in such a case neither the issue (1) whether the plaintiff was the aggressor, or (2) whether the defendant had the right of self-defense, should be submitted to the jury.

Bootton v Metcalfe, 201-311; 207 NW 386

Self-defense—permissible degree of force. The degree of force which a defendant may employ in order to prevent injury to himself from an assault by one person is not necessarily the measure of defendant's permissible resistance when, at the same instant of time, he is menacingly threatened by several other persons in his immediate presence. This important fact must not be overlooked by the instructions.

Bootton v Metcalfe, 201-311; 207 NW 386

Excessive force used to eject—instructions limiting recovery. When the jury was told that if it found that the defendant used more force than was reasonably necessary to eject the plaintiff from his home, they must find the defendant liable for the injuries caused by the excessive force, the instructions, when considered as a whole, were not subject to the objection that the right of recovery was not limited in the event that the injuries were due to the excessive force.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Error in favor of complainant. An instruction relative to the right of the jury to determine the extent and severity of injuries suffered by plaintiff in a personal encounter with defendant by considering, inter alia, the relative size, health, and physical conditions of the parties is harmless (conceding it to be erroneous) when apparently, on the face of the record, such instruction was to the material advantage of the complainant.

Morrow v Scoville, 206-1134; 221 NW 802

Instructions concerning assault—balancing illustration. The court, after instructing that the taking of indecent liberties with the person of a woman may constitute an assault, and after employing an illustration descriptive of indecent liberty, need not balance the illustration by giving the converse thereof.

Ransom v McDermott, 215-594; 246 NW 266

"Assault" admitted in pleadings—use of term permitted. In an action for damages in which the defendant's answer admitted an assault and battery but attempted to justify the act, he could not complain that the court, in its statement of the issues, said that he admitted the assault, as the word "assault" did not admit all that the plaintiff contended, but only the same act upon which the action was based.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Instructions as whole—self-defense properly submitted. In an assault and battery case an instruction setting out elements of plaintiff's proof without referring to "self-defense" is not erroneous when "self-defense" is sufficiently explained to the jury in other instructions.

Hauser v Boever, 225-1; 279 NW 137

Self-defense—instructions. Where defendant voluntarily participated in a fight, not in his own defense, the court did not err in failing to instruct the jury on self-defense as, under such circumstances, self-defense was not available as a defense.

Schwaller v McFarland, 228- ; 291 NW 852

Damages—loss of earnings. In an action for injuries received in an assault and battery, evidence that the plaintiff had been incapacitated for 41 days and that his earnings prior to the injury were about $10 per day, was sufficient to submit to the jury an issue of loss of earnings.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Instructions—directing jury to award damages to plaintiff. Undisputed evidence held to establish that plaintiff and defendant mutually consented to engage in a fight, and that defendant unlawfully committed an assault and battery on plaintiff, warranting an instruction to the jury to return a verdict for plaintiff in some amount.

Schwaller v McFarland, 228- ; 291 NW 852

Civil liability — damages — physical pain. Damages may be awarded for physical pain and suffering consequent on an assault and battery even tho no very appreciable physical injury is made to appear.

Ransom v McDermott, 215-594; 246 NW 266

Excessive verdict—$3,500 for indecent assault. Verdict of $1,500 actual and $2,000 punitive damages held excessive as to the actual damages.

Ransom v McDermott, 215-594; 246 NW 266

Nominal damages—right to recover more. The court is not in error in instructing that a plaintiff is entitled to more than nominal damages ("such as one dollar or less") consequent on a wholly unjustified assault and battery resulting in admittedly substantial physical injury to plaintiff.

Ashby v Nine, 218-953; 256 NW 679

Exemplary damages—malice as basis. Exemplary damages are allowable for malicious assault and false imprisonment.

Schultz v Enlow, 201-1083; 205 NW 972

Elements in mental anguish—separate recoveries as double damages—curing by remittitur. Humiliation and mortification being included in mental anguish, an instruction in an assault and battery case allowing one recovery for mental anguish and another recovery for humiliation and mortification is erroneous as allowing for double damages for the element of mental anguish; however, the defect is cured by requiring the plaintiff to remit the entire amount allowed for humiliation and mortification.

Hauser v Boever, 225-1; 279 NW 137

Verdict—directed on questions of law only. Directed verdicts have no place in jury trials unless the record clearly presents controlling questions of law. Record evidence held wholly insufficient to justify a directed verdict against plaintiff on the ground that as a matter of law the contract for damages for assault—on which plaintiff sued—was based in part (1) on an agreement by plaintiff to compound or conceal the commission of a public offense, or (2) on an agreement by plaintiff as an employee to refrain from circulating scandalous information concerning his employer.

In re Cuykendall, 223-526; 273 NW 117

VI THREATS

Boycott — essential elements — intimidation and coercion. Intimidation and coercion are essential elements of boycott. It must appear that the means used are threatening and intended to overcome the will of others and compel them to do or refrain from doing that which they would or would not otherwise have done.

Smythe Co. v Local Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

Secondary boycott—essential elements. A secondary boycott may be defined as a combination to cause a loss to one person by coercing others against their will to withdraw from their beneficial business intercourse, by threats that, unless they do so, the combination will cause similar loss to them; or by the use of such means as the infliction of bodily harm on them, or such intimidation as will put them in fear of bodily harm.

Smythe Co. v Local Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

Peacefully picketing not secondary boycott —no injunction. A threat to do something that a person has a right to do is not a threat in a legal sense. Held that union officials, by lawfully placing a neon sign manufacturer on the unfair list, advertising to the public that he was unfair to electrical workers and peacefully picketing his place of business, were not guilty of such conspiracy as to constitute a secondary boycott, and an injunction will not lie.

Smythe Co. v Local Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

Duress—pleading—conclusiveness. A party must stand or fall on the particular threat alleged by him as constituting duress. Reversible error results from permitting the jury to base its finding of duress on unpleaded matters.

Gray v Shell Corp., 212-825; 237 NW 460

Liability for mental pain. Willful threats made to a debtor for the purpose of producing in the mind of the debtor such mental pain, anguish, and harassment as will induce him to pay the debt, render the offender liable in damages for the resulting pain and anguish, even tho there be no actual or threatened physical injury, provided the threats are not mere threats to resort to legal procedure.

Barnett v Collection Co., 214-1303; 242 NW 25; 4 NCCA (NS) 223

VII ABUSE OF PROCESS

Writs of prohibition—power of supreme court to issue. The supreme court has original jurisdiction, under the constitution, to issue common-law writs of prohibition; but, when the application is for a writ directed to a district court and commanding it to discontinue further jurisdiction over named actions pending in said lower court, the supreme court must act solely on the established facts as revealed in the proceedings in said district court, and, if material disputed issues of fact arise, the writ will be refused, as the supreme court has no power to take testimony on disputed questions of fact de hors said district court records.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to present jury question on the issue of abuse of process.

Sokolowske v Wilson, 211-1112; 235 NW 80

Execution sale—presumption of ownership. In an action against a sheriff for the wrongful sale of plaintiff's machinery as the property of an execution defendant, no error results from the failure to instruct that the finding of the property on the premises of the execution defendant raised a presumption of ownership in the latter when the court specifically placed the burden on plaintiff to prove his ownership of said property. (No request for the instruction was made.)

Rosander v Knee, 222-1164; 271 NW 292

Rent—writ of attachment—legality. The issuance of a landlord's writ of attachment for rent admittedly due is not rendered unlawful because the tenant subsequently pleads and establishes a counterclaim which cancels the landlord's admitted claim for rent.

Kelp v McManus, 218-226; 253 NW 813

Threatened attachment levy. The fact that a tenant's creditor is present at a public sale of the tenant's property and threatens to levy an attachment on said property does not constitute such abuse of process as will invalidate a check given by the landlord to the creditor in payment of his claim and to prevent such levy.

Myers v Watson, 204-635; 215 NW 634

VIII ELECTRICITY GENERALLY

Danger signs—posting—sufficient evidence. Evidence sufficient to justify finding that electric company had complied with statute requiring danger signs to be posted on poles or towers along highway.

Aller v Elec. Co., 227-185; 288 NW 66

Common knowledge that metal wire will conduct electricity. Farmer 36 years of age familiar with high lines and use of electricity is presumed to have the common knowledge of all intelligent persons that a metal wire will conduct electric current.

Aller v Elec. Co., 227-185; 288 NW 66

Contributory negligence nullifies statutory presumption. When a person is injured by transmission line, the statutory presumption of defendant's negligence need not be rebutted when plaintiff fails to establish freedom from contributory negligence.

Aller v Elec. Co., 227-185; 288 NW 66

Contributory negligence—operation of electric elevator—no eyewitnesses. An expert and experienced electrician who enters an electrically operated freight elevator which he had often operated,—the mechanism and condition of which were fully known to him, and especially the fact that the elevator could be moved at any time by manipulation by other parties on other floors of the building unless the electric circuit was broken,—is guilty of negligence per se in taking the risk of the elevator moving while he was attempting, without breaking the circuit, to close a door with known defective appliances,—the circuit breaker being in his immediate presence and easily accessible; and this is true tho there were no eyewitnesses to the occurrence.

Boles v Hotel Co., 218-306; 253 NW 515

Manner of construction of lines. In an action against an electric company whose transmission line was so close to plaintiff's building that firemen could not throw water on a fire until current was turned off, which delay caused destruction of building and contents, a complaint alleging violation of town ordinance and a state statute respecting construction of transmission line held insufficient to state a cause of action.

Bowen v Ia. Public Service, 35 F 2d, 616

Tree over transmission line—failure to remove. Where a tree limb on plaintiffs' land had broken and lodged in the fork of a dead tree and hung two or three feet over defendant's transmission line, and later electricity from the line set the tree on fire and it spread to the plaintiffs' house, in an action to recover for the fire loss it could not be said as a matter of law that the plaintiffs were contributorily negligent in not removing the limb when they had acted as reasonable and prudent persons in twice requesting the defendant to take the line down or shut off the current so the tree could be cut down and the overhanging limb removed.

Porter v Elec. Co., 228- ; 292 NW 231

Negligence—presumption. An allegation of negligent construction or maintenance of an electrical transmission line is unnecessary and, if made, need not be proved, in an action for damages caused by fire set out by such line. Proof that fire was communicated to property by said line, and proof of the amount of damages resulting, plus the statutory presumption of negligence on the part of the operator of the line, make a prima facie case for recovery.

Walters v Iowa Co., '203-471; 212 NW 884; 38 NCCA 551

Res ipsa loquitur. Evidence tending to show that decedent came to his death from an electric shock consequent on handling an ordinary electric lighting fixture, charged, with electricity by the defendant, and that the ordinary lighting voltage was harmless, even tho there is evidence to the contrary as to the last proposition, furnishes basis for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and creates a jury question on the issue of the defendant's negligence.

Orr v Elec. L. Co., 213-127; 238 NW 604

Water tank and electric transformer not attractive nuisance. The maintenance in a brick yard, where children sometimes play, of a circular water tank about eleven feet in height with no inviting or ready means of going up and down the side thereof except a perpendicular, smooth, overflow pipe one and one-fourth inches in diameter extending from the top to the bottom of the tank and at a distance of eight inches from the outside wall, and the maintenance on the top of the tank of heavily charged electric transformers, four feet high, without any warning signs of danger, will not be deemed an "attractive nuisance" within the law of negligence.

Cox v Elec. Co., 209-931; 229 NW 244

IX EXPLOSIONS, LIABILITY

Actions—pleading—res ipsa loquitur—waiver. A general allegation of negligence, supportable by the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, is waived by inserting in the same count a specific allegation of negligence; but the rule is otherwise when the different allegations are in different counts and when the issue arising on the general allegation is alone submitted because of the dismissal by plaintiff of the count containing the specific allegation.

Sutcliffe v Elec. Co., 218-1386; 257 NW 406

Actions—res ipsa loquitur—applicability. Basis for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is established by proof that pipes and appliances for conducting inflammable gas into a place of business were under the full control of the party furnishing the gas, that gas leaked from said pipes and appliances before it entered the meter, and that a violent explosion resulted from such leakage.

Sutcliffe v Elec. Co., 218-1386; 257 NW 406

Negligence—proximate cause. The act of a contractor in abandoning dynamite caps in a public highway is the proximate cause of an injury to an immature boy who found the caps and was injured thereby, rather than the act of the boy in attempting to remove the explosive from the container.

Eves v Const. Co., 202-1338; 212 NW 154; 28 NCCA 155

Gas—duty as to unowned pipes and fixtures. A gas company engaged in furnishing inflammable gas for domestic or for other like or similar purposes is under legal obligation to exercise a degree of care, commensurate with the danger, to maintain in a safe condition the pipes and fixtures over which it has full control, and through which its gas passes into the meter, even tho the company does not own said pipes or fixtures and did not originally install them.

Sutcliffe v Elec. Co., 218-1386; 257 NW 406

CHAPTER 485

JOINDER OF ACTIONS

10960 When permitted.

ANALYSIS

- I PROPER JOINDER OF ACTIONS
- II IMPROPER JOINDER OF ACTIONS
- III PROCEDURE ON IMPROPER JOINDER

I PROPER JOINDER OF ACTIONS

Action on bond. An action on a bond, brought against both the principal and surety, presents no question of misjoinder of causes of action. So held as to a bond given under the Iowa securities act.

Kellogg v Bell, 222-510; 268 NW 534

Causes assigned for collection—right of assignee. Plaintiff, in an action at law against a defendant, may join in separate counts:

1. Any number of causes of action against defendant of which plaintiff is the unqualified holder, and which are triable at law in said county of suit, and

2. Any number of causes of action against defendant of which plaintiff is holder as assignee for collection only, and which are triable at law in said county of suit.

Carson v Long, 222-506; 268 NW 518

Independent causes of action—appeal. When plaintiff sues on two independent causes of

I PROPER JOINDER OF ACTIONS—concluded action, the appellate court may, on appeal, reverse as to one cause of action and affirm as to the other.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Concerted action without conspiracy. Joint liability may exist without allegation or proof of conspiracy. So held where there was allegation and proof of concerted action by several persons with common intent and purpose.

Baumchen v Donahoe, 215-512; 242 NW 533

Joinder—city and benefited property owners. There is no misjoinder of parties or causes of action where a city in its own behalf and in behalf of the parties beneficially interested brings an action against a contractor, combining therein both a claim for damages for defective pavement and a claim for the cost of "coring" to determine the thickness, since the basis for the latter claim was found in the contract. A motion to strike is properly overruled.

Sioux City v Krage, 225-1154; 281 NW 828

Petition in two counts—(1) guest and (2) not a guest. An automobile passenger receiving injuries in a collision may not be required to elect between counts when his petition contains (1) a count alleging recklessness based on theory he was a guest, and (2) a count alleging negligence based on theory he was not a guest—where plaintiff's cause of action is for a single wrong and he seeks in each count damages for the same injuries arising out of the same act of decedent.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Quieting title—prayer for writ of possession. An equitable action (1) to quiet title, and (2) in addition, to obtain a writ ousting defendant from the premises, is proper.

McKenney v Nelson, 220-504; 262 NW 101

Objections to executrix's report—real estate title issue not misjoinder—jurisdiction. Where an executrix after resigning files her reports, objections thereto asking that she account for land in another county allegedly purchased with estate money does not misjoin equitable action to impose trust on or establish title in land, but is special probate proceeding to compel executrix to account for assets over which probate court has statutory jurisdiction co-extensive with the state.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Objections to executrix's report—conversion issue not misjoinder. Where an executrix after resigning files her reports, objections thereto asking that she report and account for certain alleged estate assets claimed by executrix as individual property do not misjoin in probate an action against executrix for conversion, and such objections are not subject to motion to strike.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Trust—action against joint trustees. Two or more persons acting jointly in a fiduciary capacity in relation to the same property for the same beneficiary are properly made joint defendants in an action to enforce the trust.

Burger v Krall, 211-1160; 235 NW 318

Trustee to collect—allowable joinder. A trustee who has been authorized by the joint instrument of several individual owners of separate promissory notes, signed by the same maker, to bring such actions as he may deem fit to enforce collection of said notes, may maintain solely in his own name as such trustee an action at law on all or on any number of said notes. It follows that a motion to require the plaintiff to elect as to the particular count on which he will proceed will not lie.

Iowa Co. v Clark, 215-929; 247 NW 211

Parties acting jointly and in cooperation. Several persons engaged jointly and in cooperation in the unlawful furnishing, prescribing and administering of medicine without a license may be properly joined in one action for injunction.

State v Baker, 212-571; 235 NW 313

Claims acquired during foreclosure—independent action to enforce. Where, pending foreclosure action, plaintiff acquires an additional claim against the defendant, he is not bound to amend and assert said claim in the foreclosure proceedings, but may maintain a subsequent and independent action on the newly acquired claim even tho it pertains to the subject matter of the foreclosure.

Central Bank v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

II IMPROPER JOINDER OF ACTIONS

Decisions reviewable—orders to strike and dismiss. An order overruling a motion to strike a pleading and to dismiss parties because of the improper joinder of actions and of party defendants is appealable.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Ruling on motion as adjudication. Whether a ruling sustaining a motion to strike a pleading on the ground that it improperly joins causes of action and party defendants constitutes (in the absence of an appeal) a final adjudication in the further progress of the cause, quaere.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Mandamus and damages. An action of mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to proceed to the assessment of damages consequent on the taking of land in order to effect a change in a highway is properly stricken on motion when joined with an action against the county for damages for the taking of said land.

Valentine v Board, 206-841; 221 NW 517

Unallowable joinder of law and mandamus.

An action at law against a county for judgment for taxes illegally exacted may not be joined with an equitable action of mandamus for an order on the board of supervisors directing the county treasurer to refund such taxes.

First N. Bank v Board, 217-702; 247 NW 617; 250 NW 887

Joining law and equity. It is not permissible for the receiver of an insolvent private bank to join (1) a law action to obtain a judgment against an alleged partner in the bank, and (2) an equitable action against the partner and his grantee to set aside a conveyance alleged to be fraudulent.

Cooper v Erickson, 213-448; 239 NW 87

Law and equity. An equitable action to foreclose a mortgage, and a law action to enforce the liability of an indorser who indorsed "without recourse", may not be joined.

Leekley v Short, 216-376; 249 NW 363; 91 ALR 394

See Murphy v Board, 205-256; 215 NW 744

Joinder—tort of one and contract of another.

A joint action (1) against a wrongdoer upon his tort consequent on the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, and (2) against a surety company upon its policy to indemnify the wrongdoer from loss because of said tort, even tho but one recovery is sought, presents two different causes of action, and the joinder thereof is wholly unallowable. And this is true whether the policy is simply a private, optional contract between the insured and insurer, or a policy mandatorily required by statute to be filed with and approved by the railroad commission as a condition precedent to the obtaining of a permit to operate said vehicle.

Ellis v Bruce, 215-308; 245 NW 320

Contract and tort. A plaintiff may not base an action to recover damages for a personal injury on both (1) the commission of a tort by the defendant and (2) the breach of a contract by the defendant, and reversible error necessarily results from submitting both issues, when they are not identical.

Randall v Moen Co., 206-1319; 221 NW 944

Joining contract and tort actions. A joint action cannot be maintained (1) against a contractor on his contract liability to answer for possible torts committed during the progress of work, and (2) against those who are alleged to have subsequently committed a tort during the progress of said work, when the contractor and the alleged tort-feasors are residents of different counties.

Elder v Maudlin, 213-758; 239 NW 577

Nonpermissible joinder. An action against a corporation on its obligation and an action against the directors to enforce a statutory liability relative to such obligation may not be joined.

McPherson v Sec. Co., 206-562; 218 NW 306

Motion to consolidate actions by plaintiffs. Two personal injury actions arising out of the same accident and brought against the same defendant cannot be consolidated on motion by the plaintiffs for although equity has the power to consolidate causes of action to avoid multiplicity of suits, the right to move for a consolidation of causes of action in law is by statute granted only to the defendant, and a plaintiff has no such right.

Brooks v Paulson, 227-1359; 291 NW 144

Separate and distinct conversions. A misjoinder of causes of action and of parties occurs when a petition for damages, consequent on successive sales of mortgaged chattels, reveals that two separate and distinct sales were made with actual or constructive notice of the recorded mortgage,—one by part of the defendants, and one by the remaining defendants,—without any allegation of conspiracy, unity of design, or concert of action on the part of all of said defendants, and without any allegation that the concurrent acts of all the defendants proximately contributed to the conversion.

Producers Assn. v Livingston, 216-1257; 250 NW 602

III PROCEDURE ON IMPROPER JOINDER

Misjoinder. In an action by plaintiff to recover for money paid for the use and benefit of defendant, an allegation of money paid by a third party for the use and benefit of defendant is properly stricken on motion.

Wragg v Wragg, 208-939; 226 NW 99; 64 ALR 1292

Improper joinder in wrong county—procedure. Where a receiver joins in one proceeding (1) an equitable action asking the court to declare an assessment on unpaid stock subscriptions, and (2) a law action praying judgment on the assessment against stock subscribers who were nonresidents of the county of such proceedings, the stock subscribers need not move to strike the latter cause of action, but may very properly move (1) to separate the latter cause of action from the former, (2) to transfer the said latter cause of action to the law calendar, and (3) to transfer said latter cause of action to the various counties of the subscribers' residences.

State v Packing Co., 217-1172; 250 NW 876

Objections to executrix's report—conversion issue not misjoinder—motion to strike. Where an executrix after resigning files her reports, objections thereto asking that she report and account for certain alleged estate assets

III PROCEDURE ON IMPROPER JOINDER—concluded claimed by executrix as individual property do not misjoin in probate an action against executrix for conversion, and such objections are not subject to motion to strike.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Motion to strike as demurrer. A motion in a law action to strike an alleged misjoined action will be treated by the appellate court as a demurrer when so treated by the trial court and by the parties to the action.

Kellogg v Bell, 222-510; 268 NW 534

Demurrer. In action on promissory notes, defendant's demurrer, filed after answer, on ground of misjoinder both of causes of action and of parties was properly overruled.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Pleadings unamendable after dismissal. When the trial court abates an equitable action (e. g., mandamus) by dismissing it on the ground of misjoinder both of parties-plaintiffs and of causes of action, and plaintiff makes no effort to avoid the abatement by pruning out of his pleading the objectionable misjoinders, but stands on his pleadings, and on appeal suffers an affirmation of said order of dismissal, he may not thereafter amend his pleadings in the dismissed action by then pruning out said objectionable matter. The pleadings of a finally dismissed action are, manifestly, not subject to amendment.

First N. Bank v Board, 221-348; 264 NW 281; 106 ALR 566

Curing misjoinder. Any claim of misjoinder of causes of action as to defendants and of misjoinder of parties defendant because plaintiff joined an action at law on bonds against one defendant with an action in equity to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance against the other defendant, is effectually effaced by an order of court dismissing the action as to the equitably charged defendant.

10962 Plaintiff may strike out.

Unamendable pleadings after dismissal. When the trial court abates an equitable action (e. g., mandamus) by dismissing it on the ground of misjoinder both of parties-plaintiffs and of causes of action, and plaintiff makes no effort to avoid the abatement by pruning out of his pleading the objectionable misjoinders, but stands on his pleadings, and on appeal suffers an affirmation of said order of dismissal, he may not thereafter amend his pleadings in the dismissed action by then pruning out said objectionable matter. The pleadings of a finally dismissed action are, manifestly, not subject to amendment.

First N. Bank v Board, 221-348; 264 NW 281; 106 ALR 566

10963 Motion to strike out.

Discussion. See 20 ILR 49—Defective pleading

Order refusing separation of misjoined causes of action. The court, on proper motion, must correct an unallowable joinder of causes of action and an order refusing so to do is appealable.

Ellis v Bruce, 215-308; 245 NW 320

Unallowable motion. A motion to dismiss an action because of a misjoinder of causes of action will not lie.

Federal Sur. v Morris Plan, 209-339; 228 NW 293

Improper joinder—sole remedy. A motion by defendant to require plaintiff to elect on which of two improperly joined causes of action he will proceed to trial is unallowable. Motion to strike is the sole remedy.

Neidigh v Finance System, 219-225; 257 NW 563

Motion to correct improper joinder—form. Where causes of action against different defendants are unallowably joined in the same action, a defendant wishing to correct the error should move to strike from the petition the cause of action not affecting himself.

Ellis v Bruce, 215-308; 245 NW 320

Misjoinder both of parties and of causes. In action on promissory notes, defendant's demurrer, filed after answer, on ground of misjoinder both of causes of action and of parties was properly overruled.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Intermingled law and equity. A petition, tho divided into "divisions" and to some extent separately embracing legal and equitable matters, is not subject to a motion to strike because of misjoinder, when the petition as a whole manifestly pleads but one cause of action, viz: an action for discovery and for an accounting.

Garretson v Harlan, 218-1049; 256 NW 749

Separating issues—required procedure. A party who wishes to separate the equitable issues already joined from a law action pleaded by the adversary as an amendment must move to separate before he answers.

Kimmel Inv. Co. v Renwick, 220-362; 261 NW 775

Striking objections in probate—affidavits improper. A motion to strike objections to probate accounts on the grounds of misjoinder of actions is determinable only on the contents of the pleading attacked without aid of affidavits.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Misjoinder—motion to strike. When a defendant is sued in a county other than the county of his residence, and is not suable in said county of suit because of misjoinder of causes of action and of parties, he may, by motion to strike, trim the petition of every defendant except himself and of every cause of action except the one pleaded against himself.

Producers Assn. v Livingston, 216-1257; 250 NW 602

Improper joinder in wrong county. Where a receiver joins in one proceeding (1) an equitable action asking the court to declare an assessment on unpaid stock subscriptions, and (2) a law action praying judgment on the assessment against stock subscribers who were nonresidents of the county of such proceedings, the stock subscribers need not move to strike the latter cause of action, but may very properly move (1) to separate the latter cause of action from the former, (2) to transfer the said latter cause of action to the law calendar, and (3) to transfer said latter cause of action to the various counties of the subscribers' residences.

State v Packing Co., 217-1172; 250 NW 876

Single or dual cause of action—test. The obligee of a bond, who pleads solely for the recovery of the amount due him under the bond, pleads but a single cause of action, though he prays for different remedies against different parties, or in part pleads for unallowable relief.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Nonright to withdraw answer. In an action (1) to cancel a deed and (2) to set aside the probate of a will on the ground of mental incapacity of the testator-grantor—both instruments having been executed by the same party and at the same time—it is not necessarily error for the court to refuse to permit defendant to withdraw his answer in order to permit defendant to file motion to separate the alleged separate causes of action and to transfer to the law docket.

Walters v Heaton, 223-405; 271 NW 310

Refusal to strike—answer waives error. Where plaintiff filed law action to establish right to inherit as illegitimate son, then, by way of amendment, filed an equitable petition asking that he be adjudged an adopted son of deceased, and that adoption by estoppel be recognized as against grandchildren of the deceased, and later made application to transfer the cause to the equity docket, the court did not err in overruling defendant's resistance to the transfer and motion to strike the petition in equity, the same result being reached as if the court had sustained the motion to strike and plaintiff had filed his amendment as a separate petition in equity as provided by statute. Moreover, error, if any, in refusal to strike the misjoined causes of action was waived by defendant's act in filing answer.

Bergman v Carson, 226-449; 284 NW 442

Matter incidental to ruling on motion not res judicata. In a libel action brought against a newspaper and others as joint tort-feasors, when affiants testified as to the matter of agency at a hearing on a motion to strike part of the petition, a ruling by the court denying the motion was not res judicata on the question of agency, as agency question was only incidental to the question of misjoinder raised by the motion to strike and could be raised in a subsequent trial on the merits of the case.

Cooper v Gazette Co., 226-737; 285 NW 147

Unallowable motion to strike. In an action against several defendants for damages consequent on a negligent act, that defendant who is, in effect, alleged to have occupied the position of respondeat superior cannot have his name stricken from the petition.

Elder v Maudlin, 213-758; 239 NW 577

10964 Misjoinder waived.

Wrong calendar—waiver by answering. A defendant in equity who files answer after the overruling of his motion (1) to strike alleged misjoined causes of action, and (2) to transfer from equity to law, may not maintain an appeal from the ruling on his said motion.

Thompson v Erbes, 221-1347; 268 NW 47

Waiver by answer. Where plaintiff filed law action to establish right to inherit as illegitimate son, then, by way of amendment, filed an equitable petition asking that he be adjudged an adopted son of deceased, and that adoption by estoppel be recognized as against grandchildren of the deceased, and later made application to transfer the cause to the equity docket, the court did not err in overruling defendant's resistance to the transfer and motion to strike the petition in equity, the same result being reached as if the court had sustained the motion to strike and plaintiff had filed his amendment as a separate petition in equity as provided by statute. Moreover, error, if any, in refusal to strike the misjoined causes of action was waived by defendant's act in filing answer.

Bergman v Carson, 226-449; 284 NW 442

Waiver by filing answer. In action on note, filing of answer waived right to proceed under statute by motion to strike cause of action improperly joined.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Withdrawal of pleading to file demurrer. There is no statutory authority to support common practice of withdrawing pleadings for purpose of filing a demurrer or motion, and such matter rests wholly within sound discretion of trial court.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

10965 Separate petitions.

Transfer of cause. Where plaintiff filed law action to establish right to inherit as illegitimate son, then, by way of amendment, filed an equitable petition asking that he be adjudged an adopted son of deceased, and that adoption by estoppel be recognized as against grandchildren of the deceased, and later made application to transfer the cause to the equity docket, the court did not err in overruling defendant's resistance to the transfer and motion to strike the petition in equity, the same result being reached as if the court had sustained the motion to strike and plaintiff had filed his amendment as a separate petition in equity as provided by statute. Moreover, error, if any, in refusal to strike the misjoined causes of action was waived by defendant's act in filing answer.

10966 Principal and agent.

Discussion. See 1 ILB 83—Vice-principal rule; 8 ILB 95—Share tenancies and partnerships; 10 ILB 144—Liability of principal for acts of agent; 10 ILB 147, 228—Liability of master and servant; 19 ILR 606—Admissions of agent

Master and servant. See under §1495
 Motor vehicles—liability of owner. See under §5037.09

I IN GENERAL

Parties—objections—unallowable motion to strike. In an action against several defendants for damages consequent on a negligent act, that defendant who is, in effect, alleged to have occupied the position of respondeat superior cannot have his name stricken from the petition.

Elder v Maudlin, 213-758; 239 NW 577

Government nonliability for employee's tort. The exemption accorded counties and other governmental bodies and their officers from liability for torts growing out of the negligent acts of their agents or employees is a limitation or exception to the rule of respondeat superior, and in no way affects the fundamental principle of torts that one who wrongfully inflicts injury upon another is individually liable to the injured person.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Negligence—immunity rule—basis. Such immunity as is granted a public charity institution for its negligence has been sustained by the courts on (1) the trust fund theory, or (2) the nonapplicability of the rule of respondeat superior, or (3) the waiver theory, or (4) the public policy theory.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186; 5 NCCA (NS) 335

Agency and joint adventure distinguished. A contract which provides that one party shall, for a limited time and at his own expense, have the exclusive right to sell the property of another and account for sales in a named manner creates a contract of agency only, and not a joint adventure.

Coburn v Davis, 201-1253; 207 NW 586

Agency in county in which action brought. Action on a contract of agency wherein plaintiff is given the exclusive right to make sales on commission in a named county is properly brought in said county, even tho the contract was elsewhere executed, and even tho defendant does not reside in said county.

Hawbaker v Laco Co., 210-544; 231 NW 347

Buyer and seller of note and mortgage. The act of the owner of a note and mortgage in selling them and the act of the purchaser in purchasing said note and mortgage do not, in and of themselves, create the relation of principal and agent.

Federal Land Bk. v Sherburne, 213-612; 239 NW 778

Authority of agent—declarations of agent. Agency may not be established by the declarations of the alleged agent.

Huisman v Althoff, 202-70; 209 NW 525

Authority of agent—ipso facto notice of limitation. A party signing a writing which provides that it shall not constitute a contract until it is signed and expressly approved by the other party thereto is given palpable warning that the agent of such other party has no authority to bind his principal by any final agreement.

Adams v Iowa Co., 200-782; 203 NW 229

Theatre employees—announcement of bank night winner. Testimony by the manager of a theatre that he had hired a lady to call out the name of the bank night drawing in front of the theatre, with evidence that she habitually announced the name drawn on former occasions, was sufficient to establish that she was employed to announce the winner and to establish her agency and make her announcement binding on the theatre owner.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held to show that a party who received money with which to pay a note and mortgage was the agent of the maker of the note and mortgage, and not of the payee thereof.

Clayton Bank v McMorro, 209-165; 225 NW 859

Vendor and vendee—agency—facts not constituting. The vendor of land sold on installments does not constitute the vendee his agent to make improvements and repairs on the property by requiring the vendee to obligate himself to the effect that all improvements placed upon the property shall remain thereon and not be destroyed until final payment is made.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

Service of original notice. Evidence relative to the service of an original notice on a corporation by service on an agent reviewed, and held insufficient to establish the alleged agency.

Bennett v Lumber Co., 201-770; 208 NW 519

Authority—insufficient plea. An allegation that a named party was an officer and was charged with the financial management of a college, "and, because of being such officer and financial agent, was authorized to enter into, on behalf of the college," a specified contract, is not such clear, direct, and definite allegation of authority as is required by the law.

Benton v Morningside, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Assignment of note—payment to original payee—effect. The maker of a promissory note and mortgage who, for four years before maturity of the principal, and for eight years after maturity of the principal, pays the accruing interest to the agent of the original payee, without knowledge that the note and mortgage had been assigned, and finally pays the principal in the same manner, without asking for or receiving the note in question, effects a complete discharge of the note and mortgage against an assignee thereof who had been such during all said times of payment, but without recording his assignment, and in the meantime had permitted the original payee, a corporation, (1) to appear on the records as the owner of the paper and (2) to collect the interest and pay it to him.

Kann v Fish, 209-184; 224 NW 531

Powers of agent—declarations. The declarations of an agent as to his authority may be competent and material, not to show his authority, but to show the capacity in which he acted in the transactions in question and the good faith of the party with whom the agent acted.

State Bank v Fairholm, 201-1094; 206 NW 143

Equitable estoppel—implied authority to negotiate note. The maker of a nonnegotiable promissory note will not be held to be estopped to deny liability on the theory that he impliedly clothed the payee with authority to negotiate the note, when the entire transaction contemplated such transfer.

Hubbard v Wallace, 201-1143; 208 NW 730; 45 ALR 1065

Powers of agent—apparent authority. An owner of land who authorizes his agent (1) to contract with a broker for sale of the land and (2) to pay the broker a specified and limited compensation is bound by the agreement of his agent to pay the broker a greater commission, when the broker had no knowledge of such limited authority.

Boylan v Workman, 206-469; 220 NW 49

Negligence of borrower imputable to lender—effect. One who borrows an automobile becomes, by force of our statute (§5026, C., '24 [§5037.09, C., '39]), the agent of the lender, in the operation of the car. It necessarily follows that the negligence of the borrower is imputable to the lender and is a bar to the recovery of damages by the lender in an action against a third party if such negligence contributed to the injury and resulting damages.

Secured Fin. Co. v Railway, 207-1105; 224 NW 88; 61 ALR 855; 30 NCCA 90

Authority—waiver. A principal who directs his agent to accept cash only, on making sales, waives any violation of his instructions by accepting notes of various purchasers, with full knowledge of the facts.

Donnelly v Walch, 203-32; 212 NW 310

The relation—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence relative to a contract for the exchange of lands reviewed, and held insufficient to show that a party thereto who signed the same individually was acting solely as the agent of his wife.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Agency of husband—custom as evidence. Testimony tending to show a custom by a husband to sign the name of his wife to promissory notes, with her express or implied knowledge and approval, extending continuously through many years prior to the transaction in question, is admissible on the issue whether the husband had such authority from the wife.

State Bank v Fairholm, 201-1094; 206 NW 143

Acts constituting conversion—property under receivership. One who is in possession of property as agent of a duly appointed receiver is not guilty of a conversion of the property by refusing to give it up without the consent of the receiver, even tho such agent is plaintiff in the action in which the receiver was appointed, and even tho a full settlement of the action has been consummated, but not yet called to the attention of the court.

McCarthy v Cutchall, 209-193; 225 NW 865

Authority of agent—collection of interest. Authority in an agent to receive interest accruing on a promissory note does not embrace authority to receive the principal.

Huisman v Althoff, 202-70; 209 NW 525

Authority of agent—implied authority. Principle reaffirmed that a bank has no authority to receive payment of a note from the naked fact that the note is payable at said bank, especially in the absence of the note, and before maturity.

Huismann v Althoff, 202-70; 209 NW 525

Agency to receive payment. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether the original payee of a promissory note was the agent of the indorsee to receive payment.

Andrew v Kolsrud, 218-15; 253 NW 913

Authority—note payable at particular office—effect. Principle recognized that the fact that a promissory note is payable at the office of a particular person does not, in and of itself, authorize or empower such particular person to receive payment on the note.

Whitney v Krasne, 209-236; 225 NW 245

Authority of agent—disbursement of borrowed money. The fact that a loaner of money who was the agent of the borrower to negotiate a loan and receive the money thereon retained the money and paid it to the borrower in installments, in order to protect himself (the loaner), is very persuasive that the said loaner was not also the agent of the borrower to disburse said money.

Hubbard v Wallace, 201-1143; 208 NW 730; 45 ALR 1065

Agent's authority to receive payment on note. The maker of a promissory note who makes payment to someone other than the payee or holder must take on the burden of showing that the recipient of the payment had actual or apparent authority from the payee or holder to receive it. Evidence reviewed in detail, and held to show that the party receiving payment on a note was the agent of the holder to receive any indebtedness due such holder at the place of payment.

Whitney v Krasne, 209-236; 225 NW 245

Agent of interested party. In an action by the beneficiary in a life insurance policy to recover thereon, an agent of the insurer who negotiated the policy is a competent witness to testify that the insured did not make payment to him of the premiums due on the policy.

Range v Ins. Co., 216-410; 249 NW 268

Receipt of proceeds by mutual agent—effect. Where the mortgagor of an unmatured mortgage authorizes his agent to negotiate a new mortgage and with the proceeds pay off the unmatured mortgage, and where the holder of the unmatured mortgage authorizes the same agent to collect and release his unmatured mortgage, the mere receipt by the mutual agent of the proceeds of the new mortgage in the form of checks, etc., does not ipso facto constitute a payment of the unmatured mortgage; and especially so when the mutual agent, on receipt of said proceeds, and pending the final approval of the new mortgage, deposits the said proceeds in his overdrawn general bank account and credits the mortgagor of the unmatured mortgage with the amount thereof. Payment of the unmatured mortgage can only result when the agent has, expressly or impliedly, appropriated the proceeds to said unmatured mortgage.

In re Schanke & Co., 201-678; 207 NW 756

Spurious mortgage—insufficient ratification. Evidence held quite insufficient to show that a purported mortgagor had ratified a spurious mortgage on his property.

Hagensick v Koch, 220-1055; 264 NW 13

Authority—when principal not bound. A principal is not, in the absence of assent or ratification, bound by the acts of his agent which are against the interests of the principal.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Fraudulent acts by bank cashier—repudiation of only part of transaction. Where the cashier of the plaintiff bank obtained credit with the defendant bank in order to conceal a shortage in the accounts of the plaintiff, giving unauthorized drafts on the plaintiff and crediting the plaintiff with the amounts, it was erroneous for the court to find that the cashier had borrowed from the defendant to pay the plaintiff and then paid the defendant with the drafts with the result that the defendant then held assets of the plaintiff equal to the amount of the drafts. To hold thus would permit the plaintiff bank to accept payment of the shortage through the unauthorized acts of its agent, the cashier, and at the same time repudiate the remainder of the transaction and deny the right of the defendant to use the unauthorized drafts.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 239 NW 727

Liability of agent—nonapplicability of rule. The rule that an agent binds himself by acting in his own name for an undisclosed principal may not be invoked by one who is an entire stranger to the contract.

Nissen v Sabin, 202-1362; 212 NW 125; 50 ALR 1216

Signing in representative capacity—effect. The principle that an agent is not personally liable on a contract when the writing shows that another person is the principal is necessarily not applicable when the signer intended to make the contract his own.

Vance v Sowden, 205-389; 217 NW 874

Liability as to third persons—declarations of agent. Principle recognized that a principal is not bound by the independent admissions of an agent after the event.

State Bank v Cooper, 201-225; 205 NW 333

Bank night—evidence of drawing of winner—statements of agents. When one agent of a theatre announced the name of the plaintiff as winner of a bank night drawing and her husband's name was announced by another agent, both agents being in a position to bind the theatre, there was evidence that the name of one was drawn.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Mistaken delivery absolves carrier. A carrier is not responsible for a loss which results from delivering a shipment to a person who is not the agent of the consignee for the purpose of such shipment, when the carrier justifiably believed such person to be such agent, and when such person was the very person to whom the consignor intended delivery to be made, because of a like belief on his part as to such agency.

Malvern Co. v Express Co., 206-292; 220 NW 322

Fraudulent release of prior mortgage by agent. A mortgagee who takes his mortgage as a first mortgage in good-faith reliance on the release by his agent of a prior mortgage does not lose his priority because of the fact that the release was fraudulent in that, prior to the release, the prior mortgage had been assigned without a recording of the assignment, the knowledge of the agent of his own dishonesty not being imputable to his principal, the first mortgagee.

Leach v Bank, 202-265; 209 NW 422

Bank deposits—fraudulent dissipation—non-liability of bank. A bank is not responsible to its depositor for the fraudulent conduct of the depositor's employee, aided by an employee of the bank, in fraudulently withdrawing from the bank the funds of the depositor, on checks which the depositor's employee had specific written authority to draw to himself personally, when the bank had no knowledge or reason to know of any of said wrongdoings.

Pierce v Bank, 213-1388; 239 NW 580

Exoneration of agent exonerates principal. If the master is responsible for an act solely under the doctrine of respondeat superior, then an exoneration of the agent or servant who actually did the act ipso facto exonerates the master.

Hobbs v Railway, 171-624; 152 NW 40

Maine v Maine, 198-1278; 201 NW 20

Lahr v Railway, 212-544; 234 NW 223

Hall v Miller, 212-835; 235 NW 298

Authority of agent—termination by death. Principle reaffirmed that the authority of an agent terminates with the death of the principal.

Huisman v Althoff, 202-70; 209 NW 525

Subagency—essentials. A subagency cannot arise without the knowledge or consent of either the principal or his agent. So held in an action involving the operation of an automobile by a mere volunteer.

McLain v Armour, 205-343; 218 NW 69

Right of action against subagent. Principle reaffirmed that a principal who has expressly or impliedly authorized his agent to employ a subagent may and should bring his action directly against the subagent for the latter's negligence.

Thompson v Bank, 207-786; 223 NW 517

II THE RELATION

Evidence insufficient to establish relation. Agency arises out of contract, express or implied. Stockholder of bank held not bound by purchase of stock for him by cashier, and charging his account therefor, in view of showing as to cashier's authority.

Andrew v Bank, (NOR); 239 NW 551

Creation of relation—effect. The implied promise of a principal to reimburse his surety if the surety is compelled to pay the debt brings into existence the relation of debtor and creditor between the principal and surety immediately upon the execution of the contract of suretyship.

Leach v Bassman, 208-1374; 227 NW 339

Admissions of attorney—effect. The admission of an attorney, made during a trial, as to the agency of a party for his client, is not necessarily binding on the client in other and subsequent litigation of a similar nature.

Iowa Co. v Seaman, 203-310; 210 NW 937

Creation and existence—circumstantial evidence. Agency may be established by circumstantial evidence, as well as by the most affirmative testimony.

Flack v Linden Bk., 211-6; 228 NW 667

Flack v Linden Bk., 211-15; 228 NW 670

Proof under general allegation. A general allegation of agency may be supported by evidence of either an express or implied agency.

Andrew v Kolsrud, 218-15; 253 NW 913

Voluntary nonpaper issues—sufficiency. In an action to recover quantum meruit for the use of machinery, the court, in submitting defendant's nonpaper issue (acquiesced in by plaintiff) whether the use was under a contract for an agreed rental entered into with plaintiff's employee, must submit the question of the authority of the employee to enter into such a contract, there being evidence of the lack of such authority.

Des Moines Co. v Lincoln Co., 201-502; 207 NW 563

Authority of agent—evidence—jury question. The jury has the right, on the issue whether an agent had authority to enter into a contract on behalf of his principal, to pass on whatever competent evidence has a tendency to prove such authority even tho such evidence is not fully and wholly satisfactory. So held as to the correspondence passing between the principal and the agent as to the leasing of the land of the principal.

First JSL Bk. v Noland, 221-1305; 268 NW 69

Proof of agency. It is quite commonplace to say that, under a plea of false representation by an agent, the agency must be proven.

Ettinger v Malcolm, 208-311; 223 NW 247

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to establish agency.

Teget v Polk County, 202-747; 210 NW 954

Actions—pleading and evidence—admission of agency. Record held to show no admission of a subagencyship.

Thompson v Bank, 207-786; 223 NW 517

Substituted service on agent of nonresident. Whether a nonresident may be legally sued in this state by service in this state on an alleged, resident agent (on a cause of action growing out of such alleged agency) must necessarily be determined by resorting (1) to the express contract, if any, between the resident and non-resident parties, and (2) to the course of dealings existing between the said parties. Held, agency not shown, even tho an officer of the alleged resident agent was a director of the nonresident defendant, and even tho the non-resident defendant paid commission on sales to the alleged resident agent.

Toole Co. v Dist. Group, 217-414; 251 NW 689

Rights and liabilities as to third persons—ratification of assumption of agency. Tho there is no agency, in fact, yet if there is an assumption of agency the assumed principal may ratify the unauthorized assumption.

Linn v Kendall, 213-33; 238 NW 547

Rights and liabilities as to third persons—impossible ratification. A vendor of land who, upon discovering that his vendee has placed repairs and improvements upon the property, does nothing in the way of repudiating the actions of the vendee, cannot be held thereby to have ratified the actions of the vendee and constituted the vendee his agent to make the improvements, when the vendee in making said repairs and improvements never assumed to act for the vendor.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

Unauthorized acts—ratification—knowledge. The knowledge of a fiscal agent of a corporation in charge of sales of corporate stock of his corporation that an authorized subagent had received payment for stock sold is presumptively the knowledge of the corporation.

Farmers Bank v Planters Elev., 200-434; 204 NW 298

Authority of agent—receipt of money. Principal reaffirmed that the receipt by a duly authorized agent of money belonging to the principal is, of necessity, a receipt by the principal.

Farmers Bank v Planters Elev., 200-434; 204 NW 298

Remedies of purchaser—delay—unallowable rescission. A purchaser may not rescind his contract of purchase because of a delay which was occasioned by his own agent.

Gutz v Holahan, 209-839; 227 NW 504

Knowledge of agent—when not imputed to principal. The knowledge acquired by the director of a corporation as to the proceedings of its directors will not be imputed to a bank of which the director is cashier, especially when the director-cashier is interested adversely to the bank.

Hancock Bk. v McMahon, 201-657; 208 NW 74

Apparent authority to execute mortgage. Evidence reviewed and held quite insufficient to support the contention that an agent, in executing a mortgage in the name of his principal, was acting within the scope of his apparent authority.

Hagensick v Koch, 220-1055; 264 NW 13

Implied agency—insufficient “holding out.” The holder of notes and mortgage who accepts payment of one of the notes from a maker thereof, in form of part cash and part check payable to the holder, from one who had bought the property subject to the mortgage, cannot be held thereby to have held out the said maker as his agent to receive payment of the remaining note; nor will the added fact that, on two occasions subsequent to the payment in question and on one occasion prior thereto, the said holder had authorized the said maker to receive payments on wholly different transactions, constitute such “holding out”.

Ritter v Plumb, 203-1001; 213 NW 571

Insufficient showing—imputation of knowledge. The fact that the payee of two promissory notes signed by the same maker but by different sureties caused the maker to be consulted relative to which of the notes should be indorsed with a certain payment, and then made the indorsement in accordance with the maker's wishes, cannot have the effect of creating any agency and thereby charging said payee with knowledge of an agreement between the maker and one of the sureties for a different application of the payment.

Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

Insolvency—preference—drawee-bank as agent to collect from self. The holder of a bank check in sending it to the drawee-bank for “collection and remittance” does not create the relation of principal and agent or any trust relation sufficient to support a claim of preference in case the draft of the said drawee-bank in payment of the check is not paid because of the insolvency of the bank.

Leach v Bank, 205-973; 219 NW 43

Bank collections. Principle reaffirmed that the act of the owner of a draft in forwarding the same to a bank for collection, and the act of the bank in making the collection, create the relation of principal and agent, and not that of debtor and creditor.

Andrew v Bank, 207-403; 223 NW 176

Insolvency — preference — drawee-bank as agent to collect from self. The act of the indorsee of a check in sending it to the drawee-bank for collection and remittance, and the act of the drawee-bank in charging the account of the drawer of the check with the amount thereof, create no relation of principal and agent, and consequently no trust relationship.

Leach v Bank, 207-471; 220 NW 10

Dual agency for borrower and loaner. A loaner of money, in closing a loan, may extend to the borrower the option (1) to sign a written direction to the loaner to pay the proceeds of the loan to a named third party as the borrower's agent, or (2) to refuse to sign such direction, and permit the loaner himself to pay out of the loan all prior incumbrances and remit to the borrower the balance, if any, of the loan; and, in the absence of fraud, if the borrower signs such direction, he will be bound by the resulting consequences, even tho said third party, in all the prior loan negotiations, had acted as the agent of the loaner, and while so acting, had furnished the loaner with a forged abstract of title, and had thereby initiated the fraud from which the borrower ultimately suffered.

Burlington Bk. v Ins. Co., 207-808; 221 NW 796; 223 NW 520

Lender and borrower. Principle reaffirmed that the issue whether a third party was the agent of the borrower or of the lender will not be determined solely from the terms of the contract between the lender and the said third party, but that the court will look to the resulting course of dealing between said contracting parties, in order to determine the very truth of the matter of agency.

Burlington Bk. v Ins. Co., 207-808; 221 NW 796; 223 NW 520

Agent as witness—individual (?) or agency (?) transaction. The president of a bank may testify that in a certain transaction he was not acting for or on behalf of the bank of which he was president, but was acting in and with reference to an individual transaction of his own.

Security Bk. v Bigelow, 205-695; 216 NW 96

Disclaiming agency—effect. If a loan company and a party through whom loans are made occupy, in truth and fact, the relation of principal and agent, it matters not that, in their contract, they positively disclaim such relation, or provide that the party through whom loans are made shall be deemed the agent of the borrower, or otherwise studiously seek to disguise such relation.

Burlington Bk. v Ins. Co., 206-475; 218 NW 949

Liability of agent—negligence in preparing estimates for contract. An agent is negligent when, in preparing estimates as a basis for bids by his contractor-principal, he fails to indicate correctly the sum total of his detailed estimates; but before the principal (who obtains the contract) may recover of the agent the amount of the error as a profit lost, he (the principal) must show that he would have secured the contract had no such error been made.

Mayberry v Newell, 200-458; 204 NW 413

Avoidance of policy—false statement as to responsibility. An insured may not recover on an indemnity bond which is given for the performance of a building contract when, in or in connection with the application for the bond, he willfully gives the insurer a false statement relative to the contractor's financial responsibility, and the insurer innocently relies thereon. This is especially true when the insured is, at the time, acting as the agent of the insurer.

Cook v Heinbaugh, 202-1002; 210 NW 129

Contractor authorized by owner to hire architect. It is common knowledge that ordinarily the architect is employed by the owner and not by contractor, but evidence held to show that owner authorized contractor to employ an architect in owner's behalf.

Sugarman Co. v Phoenix System, (NOR); 243 NW 369

Independent contractor—test. If, as to the result, and in the employment of the means, one acts entirely independent of the master, he must be regarded as an independent contractor, and not an employee.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Liability—parties not in privity. An agent who procures contracts for his principal may not hold a subsequently formed corporation liable for his commission, even tho the agent's contract was with a person who subsequently became an officer of the corporation, and even tho the subsequently formed corporation carried out the contracts so obtained.

Heinen v Waterloo Co., 206-198; 220 NW 62

Compensation—lien of agent—proceeds of undorsed check. A broker who, in effecting a sale for his principal, secures possession of a certified but undorsed check, payable to the order of his principal, as part of the purchase price, has no lien for his commission on the funds on deposit representing said check, even tho the broker himself procured the certification of the check and notified the drawee-bank of his claim to a lien on the funds.

Parker v Walsh, 200-1086; 205 NW 853; 42 ALR 622

II THE RELATION—concluded

Termination of relation—agency coupled with interest. To constitute an agency coupled with an interest, the agent must have some other interest than merely to accomplish the purpose of his principal and to earn his commission.

Coburn v Davis, 201-1253; 207 NW 586

Termination when not coupled with an interest. Contract of agency reviewed in detail, and held not coupled with an interest in favor of the agent, and therefore terminable at will.

Andrew v Ins. Co., 211-282; 233 NW 473

Termination by operation of law. A contract of agency is terminated by the insolvency of the agent and the placing of his business affairs in the hands of a receiver.

Andrew v Ins. Co., 211-282; 233 NW 473

III MUTUAL RIGHTS, LIABILITIES, AND DUTIES

Banking corporations—insolvency—trust funds—facts showing. A bank which, through its officers, manages a public sale as agent for a party, and holds the cash proceeds thereof in the bank without settlement with the said party, will be deemed to hold the money as trustee, and in case of insolvency, the trust funds will be presumed to be embraced in a final cash balance which is in excess of the trust; and it is immaterial how or in what manner the bank, on its own motion, treated said cash on its books.

Andrew v Bank, 209-1147; 229 NW 907

Nonliability of bank for personal deal of officers. A bank is not responsible for the acts of an officer of the bank in misappropriating the proceeds of a draft when said draft, the payable to the officer in his official capacity, was received by him, not as an officer of the bank, but in his individual capacity, and in the furtherance of a private transaction between himself and others with whom he was associated.

Security Bk. v Bigelow, 205-695; 216 NW 96

Liability on official bonds—unnecessary demand. In an action on the bond of a public officer to recover funds unaccounted for, no demand on the surety is necessary before commencing the action when proper demand has been made on the principal.

State v Carney, 208-133; 217 NW 472

Presence or absence of directions as to sale. Factors must comply with specific directions as to time of sale. In the absence of such directions, they must sell within a reasonable time.

Alley Co. v Cream Co., 201-621; 207 NW 767

Execution of agency—fraud of agent. In an action for an accounting in the sale of real estate lots, record reviewed, and held to establish fraud on the part of the agent.

Coburn v Davis, 201-1253; 207 NW 586

Worthless investment—ratification. The act of an agent in making for his principal a loan in the form of a mortgage of questionable value must be deemed ratified when the principal received the mortgage, retained it in his possession, and thereafter collected two annual payments of interest thereon.

Van Every v Crawford, 207-1049; 221 NW 914

Failure to obey instructions. A commission merchant is excused from all liability for failure to sell goods on the terms prescribed by the principal when such failure was because of conditions over which he had no control.

Blanchard v Wood Co., 204-255; 214 NW 583

Shortage in shipment. A commission merchant, in an action against his principal for a balance due for advances, must adequately account for all goods consigned to him.

Blanchard v Wood Co., 204-255; 214 NW 583

Assumed authority—no ratification. The act of the payee of a promissory note in receiving and accepting a payment on a note, from one who had no authority to collect it on payee's behalf, does not constitute a ratification of the act of such assumed agent in receiving an additional payment, when payee had no knowledge of such additional payment and no knowledge of such assumed agency.

Huismann v Althoff, 202-70; 209 NW 525

Apparent authority of manager sufficient to bind corporation to tenancy. Corporation held liable for rent as tenant at will, based on correspondence and telephone conversations with corporation's manager, as against contention that manager was not authorized to enter into arrangement made—principal being bound by apparent authority of its agent.

Daly Co. v Brunswick Co., (NOR); 263 NW 234

Authority to collect interest not authority to collect principal. Principle reaffirmed that authority in an agent to receive interest on a promissory note does not, in and of itself, carry authority to receive the amount of the principal.

Holden v Batten, 215-448; 245 NW 750

Broker—acting for parties adversely interested. A broker may act for adversely interested parties provided that they consent to such dual agency.

Loots v Knoke, 209-447; 228 NW 45

Compensation—nondual employment. The fact that different property owners employ the same rental agent to obtain the same tenant does not constitute such a dual employment as to deprive the agent of his compensation from the owner for whom a lease is obtained.

Foley v Mathias, 211-160; 233 NW 106; 71 ALR 696

Assumed purchase of note and mortgage by agent—effect. Where a note and mortgage on land were executed by a principal to his agent and sold by the agent in order to acquire funds with which to discharge a pre-existing note and mortgage on the same land, and where the agent embezzled the funds so acquired, the subsequent act of the agent in assuming to purchase said pre-existing note and mortgage by taking from the holder (who acted in good faith) both an assignment in blank and also a satisfaction piece, cannot be deemed a satisfaction and discharge of said pre-existing note and mortgage (1) when no satisfaction was, in fact, intended, (2) when the agent wholly discarded the satisfaction piece, and consummated the assumed purchase by means of funds belonging solely to an innocent and good-faith re-transferee, and by forthwith delivering said pre-existing note and mortgage to said re-transferee together with said blank assignment properly made out in the latter's favor; and it is immaterial that the re-transferee took said note and mortgage when they were overdue.

Mandel v Siverly, 213-109; 238 NW 596

Mutual liabilities—incorrect expenditures by agent. An agent who disburses the money of his principal without verifying the correctness of the basis on which payment is made, e. g., the weight of stock purchased, becomes liable to the principal for the resulting damage.

McNeil v Farmers Co., 219-1010; 259 NW 594

Knowledge of agent—when not imputed to principal. The knowledge of an agent will not be imputed to his principal when such knowledge involves a breach of duty on the part of the agent to his principal, and is of such nature as to justify the presumption that the offending agent will not convey it to his principal.

Clapp v Wallace, 221-672; 266 NW 493

County board of supervisors—limited power of individual member. A single member of a board of supervisors has no power to bind the board, or to bind the county, unless specifically authorized by the board to act for the whole board, or unless an agreement made by him for the county is approved or ratified by the board.

Greusel v O'Brien County, 223-747; 273 NW 853

Itinerant vendors—agents and employees. The statute which defines an itinerant vendor of drugs as "any person who, by himself, agent or employee goes from place to place or from house to house, and sells, offers or exposes for sale any drug" etc. (§3148, C., '31) renders a person an "itinerant vendor" who goes from place to place or from house to house and does the specified acts, even tho he does such acts solely as the employee of an employer who is concededly an itinerant vendor.

State v Logsdon, 215-1297; 248 NW 4

Treating sight draft as paid and later denying payment. The drawer of a sight draft who sends it to a bank for collection, and knows that said bank has assumed to collect it, and has forwarded its own bank draft in payment of the collection, and who, after payment of the bank draft is refused because of the insolvency of the collecting bank, lays claim to said bank draft and establishes his claim thereon against the receiver, may not thereafter proceed against the receiver and the original drawee in the sight draft and obtain judgment against them on the pleaded theory that said drawee in the sight draft never in fact paid it,—paid it by an overdraft on the collecting bank,—and that the defendants must account to plaintiff for said overdraft.

Enterline v Andrew, 211-176; 231 NW 416

Insurance agents—imputable and nonimputable knowledge. Knowledge on the part of a mere soliciting agent of an insurance company is imputable to his principal when such knowledge is acquired in connection with an application for insurance. Knowledge acquired by such agent subsequent to the issuance of the policy, and relative to an act which invalidates the policy, is not so imputable.

Green v Ins. Co., 215-1220; 247 NW 660

Property damaged while in storage—liability. When motor vehicle carriers utilized the terminal facilities of a third party, who provided pickup and delivery service from the terminal, and had individual spaces rented to each trucker for the storage of that trucker's shipments, it was held that control and possession of the shipments of goods was in the truck carriers during the storage period, and when a fire destroyed the terminal, the terminal-owner was acting as agent for the truckers, who were liable to the owners of the property in transit for the losses occasioned by the fire.

Crouse v Cadwell, 226-1083; 285 NW 623.

Misappropriation by agent. A bank is not charged with notice of, nor liability for, a misappropriation of an agent from the mere fact that the agent deposits funds to his own or his principal's account and thereafter misappropriates the funds by checks drawn upon the account. The mere fact that a bank has notice that the funds deposited belong to a principal imposes no duty upon the bank to inquire as to the agent's authority to make the deposit or withdraw the funds.

Fidelity Co. v Bank, 223-446; 273 NW 141

III MUTUAL RIGHTS, LIABILITIES, AND DUTIES—concluded

New trial—nonabuse of discretion. In action for forcible entry and detainer, where there was evidence of error in instructions in that court assumed that an alleged lease was made with agent of plaintiff with authority to make an oral lease, and that court did not specifically define to jury necessary elements of an oral lease, and there was also question that verdict was not supported by evidence, granting new trial held not an abuse of discretion.

Holman v Rook, (NOR); 271 NW 612

IV RIGHTS OF THIRD PARTIES

Liability to third persons. As between a principal and third parties, the principal is bound by the acts of his agent within the limits of the apparent scope of his authority.

Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Undisclosed limitation of agent's authority—effect. Altho a principal may by special limitations restrict the authority of his agent, and altho such restrictions are obligatory between the principal and his agent, such limitations are not binding upon third parties, and, in the absence of knowledge of such restrictions by them, the principal will be bound to the same extent as tho the restrictions were not made.

Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Insurance agent—authority. Evidence held to show that the authority of an agent ceased upon the delivery of a policy, and that his subsequent knowledge of the execution of a mortgage on the insured premises would not be imputed to the insurer.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Unlicensed insurance agent—noneffect on insurer. Where an accident policy is to become effective at 12 o'clock noon on date of delivery to insured, the application having been made on August 24, 1937, providing (1) it should not bind insurer until accepted nor (2) until policy was accepted by insured, while in good health and free from injury, and where policy, issued September 17, was delivered to insured September 22, while insured was in hospital as result of injuries sustained on August 26, insured could not recover on policy notwithstanding insurance agent's statement to insured that policy would be effective August 26. The fact that agent was unlicensed did not thereby make him a general agent of the insurer, the burden of proving which would be on insured. While an unlicensed agent may be criminally punished, this does not enlarge his authority to bind insurer.

Rainsbarger v Acc. Assn., 227-1076; 289 NW 908

Knowledge of agent. Testimony as to what a party knew that an agent knew is not competent.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Authority of agent—variation from direction—effect. A principal who employs an agent to perform a certain act may be responsible for the doing of the act by the agent in a manner different than the principal had directed.

Herring Co. v Myerly, 207-990; 222 NW 1

Estoppel to deny agent's authority. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed by payee's attorney without actual authority, where bank defended on ground that payee was estopped from asserting lack of authority, held, strict rules relating to equitable estoppel based upon false misrepresentation or concealment were not applicable in determining such defense.

Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Distribution of award. The individual members of a committee appointed by an unincorporated association of banks for the purpose of making distribution of a reward offered by the association for the apprehension of criminals are not responsible to third parties for an erroneous decision as to the manner in which such reward should be distributed.

Bird v Barrett, 207-1158; 224 NW 556

Payment of note—agency—effect. Payment of a promissory note to one who is the actual agent of the owner of the note, even tho the note is not produced and surrendered, effects a full discharge of the note, even tho the payer supposed he was making payment to the actual owner of the note.

Carr v Benjamin, 207-1139; 222 NW 373

Payment of note to holder's agent. The holder of a promissory note who permits another person for a series of years to collect both interest and installments of principal on the note will not be permitted to deny the authority of such other person to make all collections on the note. And it is immaterial that the note was not surrendered to the maker when he made his final payment.

Ragatz v Diener, 218-703; 253 NW 824

Sleeping on rights. One who, without requiring the production of a note, innocently pays the note to one who is not the agent of the holder, may not insist that the said holder, and not himself, should suffer the loss, especially when the latter, upon discovering the truth, does nothing to protect himself against the solvent wrongdoer.

Ritter v Plumb, 203-1001; 213 NW 571

Payment and discharge—apparent agency. A payment made in a bank that is open and transacting business; to one behind the counter, with the permission of the managing officers of the bank, and with apparent authority to receive the money, constitutes a payment to the bank. It follows that the conversation at the time, relative to the subject matter of the payment, is competent.

First St. Bank v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767

Officers and agents—liability for corporate tort. The managing officer of a corporation who causes the corporation of which he is such officer wrongfully to withhold personal property from a person who is entitled to the immediate possession of said property, is guilty of a tort, and is personally liable for said tort along with his said corporation.

Luther v National Co., 222-305; 268 NW 589

Knowledge of agent—when not imputed to principal. The knowledge of an agent—especially an agent with limited authority—will not be imputed to his principal when such knowledge involves a breach of duty to the principal and is in regard to a transaction which is so unusual and exceptional—so out of the ordinary—as necessarily to put on guard the party dealing with the agent.

First JSL Bank v Diercks, 222-534; 267 NW 708

Undisclosed principal liable. An undisclosed principal is liable on a contract which he has permitted to be entered into in his behalf and under which he has received resulting benefits.

Util. Corp. v Chapman, 210-994; 232 NW 116

Undisclosed agency—right of principal to maintain action. An undisclosed principal has a right to maintain an action on a contract signed by the agent in his individual name.

Util. Corp. v Chapman, 210-994; 232 NW 116

Wrongful receipt of payment of note—ratification. The payee of a promissory note does not ratify and confirm the act of a third person in wrongfully receiving payment of the note by subsequently receiving and accepting partial payments from said wrongdoer.

Moron v Tuttle, 211-584; 233 NW 691

Apparent authority of agent to collect collateral. Makers of promissory notes who make payment to the original payee without then demanding the surrender of the paid notes and without then knowing that the original payee had hypothecated said notes and others as collateral security, may not assert apparent agency in said original payee to receive payment on behalf of the collateral holder, on the mere showing that the collateral holder, upon actual receipt from said original payee of the amount of a matured collateral note, credited said payee on his debt and returned the note to him.

Iowa Co. v Seaman, 203-310; 210 NW 937

Unauthorized agency—ratification by accepting benefit. The holder of a note is not estopped to challenge the unauthorized act of a party in receiving payment of the note, by accepting from such unauthorized agent part of the payment, (1) when he accepted such payment without knowledge that the party was assuming such agency, and (2) when such party was a maker of the note.

Ritter v Plumb, 203-1001; 213 NW 571

Undisclosed principal—liability. One who, through a broker with whom land is listed for sale, and without the knowledge of the owner of the land, secretly arranges to buy the land, and obligates himself to pay the purchase price thereof, and who, through said broker, causes an impecunious and fictitious buyer to enter into the contract of purchase and to execute the notes and mortgage and to become the grantee in the deed of conveyance, and who receives from the said fictitious buyer an assignment of the said contract and a deed under which he assumes no personal liability on the mortgage debt, will, nevertheless, be held personally liable to the actual vendor for the full purchase price as an undisclosed principal; and if the agent goes beyond the scope of his authority in negotiating the said contract, the undisclosed principal may not complain, if, with full knowledge of the terms of said contract, and before parting with anything of value, he appropriates to himself the full benefits of the contract.

Collentine v Johnson, 203-109; 202 NW 535; 208 NW 318

“Apparent authority” defined. “Apparent authority” is the result of the manifestation by one person of consent that another shall act as his agent, made to a third person, where such manifestation differs from that made to the purported agent.

Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Pleading agent’s apparent authority—sufficiency. In payee’s action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed without actual authority by payee’s local attorney, bank’s answer alleging (1) payee’s knowledge and acquiescence in the attorney’s custom of indorsing payee’s checks and remitting proceeds to it by his personal checks, (2) the bank’s reliance thereon, and (3) that payee was estopped from asserting lack of authority, held sufficient to raise question of attorney’s implied, apparent, or ostensible authority.

Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Liabilities as to third persons—apparent scope of authority—evidence. Evidence that an agent, for many years, had charge of a certain department of his principal’s business and had, during said times, negotiated many written contracts relative to the subject matter in his charge, may create a jury question on the issue whether the agent had authority, within the scope of his apparent powers, to enter into an oral contract covering the subject matter in his charge.

Webster Co. v Nebr. Co., 216-485; 249 NW 203

Unauthorized acts—ratification—essential elements. To constitute a ratification by a bank of the unauthorized contract of its cashier, the bank must have had full knowledge of the facts and what had been done in its name and on its behalf by said cashier. Record reviewed and held affirmatively to show no ratification.

Chismore v Bank, 221-1256; 268 NW 137

Unauthorized representations of seller's agent—buyer's rescission for falsity—seller's responsibility. Where buyer rescinds contract induced by fraudulent misrepresentations of seller's agent and seeks recovery of purchase price, the agent's limited authority, otherwise binding on the buyer, does not preclude the buyer from alleging and proving such representations, and the seller is bound by such representations even tho unauthorized and even tho the contract expressly limits the agent's authority to make agreements.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

Authority of agent—evidence—jury question. The jury has the right, on the issue whether an agent had authority to enter into a contract on behalf of his principal, to pass on whatever competent evidence has a tendency to prove such authority even tho such evidence is not fully and wholly satisfactory. So held as to the correspondence passing between the principal and the agent as to the leasing of the land of the principal.

First JSL Bank v Noland, 221-1305; 268 NW 69

Implied or apparent authority of agent—unallowable plea. A commission firm was prohibited by the mandatory rules of the board of trade of which it was a member from dealing in so-called "futures" for and on behalf of a nonmember corporation unless the firm first obtained from said nonmember corporation a writing authorizing the latter's manager to contract for such "futures". The firm disregarded said rule and accepted orders for such "futures" from a manager who had been expressly forbidden to exercise such power. Held, that said firm, when sued by the injured corporation for the resulting loss, would not be permitted to defend on the ground that said manager had implied or apparent power to issue said orders.

Watkins Co. v Smith Co., 221-1164; 267 NW 115

Fraud on agent, fraud on principal. Fraud on an agent, in a matter in which the agent is acting in his representative capacity, is a fraud on the principal. It follows that the principal may seek redress to the same extent as tho the fraud was perpetrated directly and personally upon him.

Andrew v Baird, 221-83; 265 NW 170

Nonimputation of hostile knowledge—exception. While a principal is not chargeable with the guilty knowledge which his agent acquires in the agent's own interest and in hostility to the interest of his principal, yet a principal is chargeable with knowledge of facts which his dishonest agent would necessarily have acquired in performing the duties of his employment if he had been honest.

Erickson Co. v Bank, 211-495; 230 NW 342

Authority to receive payment on promissory note. Authority or agency in a third party to receive payment of a promissory note is not shown by evidence:

1. That the note provided for payment at the office of said third party;
2. That the payee received payments of interest from said third party;
3. That the payee authorized said third party to grant an extension of the mortgage security;
4. That the payee wrote to said third party relative to the payment of the note, but long after said third party had collected the amount due thereon.

Moron v Tuttle, 211-584; 233 NW 691

Knowledge of agent—when not imputed to principal. Principle reaffirmed that a principal is not charged with the knowledge of his agent when the agent is interested adversely to the principal.

Templeton v Stephens, 212-1064; 233 NW 704

Trusts—management and disposal of trust property. Individuals who voluntarily associate themselves in a business venture in the form of a trust are each personally liable for the authorized acts of their agent.

Daries v Hart, 214-1312; 243 NW 527

Assumed agency—ratification. The holder of a note and mortgage was informed by one who had subsequently bought the mortgaged property that he had, without requiring the production of the note, paid the note to one of the original makers of the note. Thereupon, the holder admitted that he had received part payment from the said maker, and exhibited the mortgage papers to the informant. Held insufficient to show ratification of the payment to the said maker.

Ritter v Plumb, 203-1001; 213 NW 571

Insurance premium—conversion by agent—liability of insurer. Where insurance agent taking an application for life insurance had authority to collect premiums on behalf of the insurer and where proceeds of check given with application for payment of premium were partly converted while in authorized possession of insurer's agent, and the application was thereafter rejected by insurer, the conversion was an act for which the insurer was liable.

Economy Co. v Ins. Co., 227-1123; 290 NW 82

Embezzlement—agency. In a prosecution for embezzlement by an agent, an allegation of the defendant's agency may be supported by proof that the money in question was delivered by the owner thereof to the defendant for the special purpose of delivering it to the borrower, notwithstanding the fact that the defendant was the agent of the borrower to procure the loan.

State v Reynolds, 209-543; 228 NW 283

Payment of note to payee's agent without surrender of note. Payment of a promissory note, by the maker thereof, to the noteholder's authorized agent to receive payment, works a complete discharge of the note, even tho the maker did not receive a surrender of the note.

Northwestern Ins. v Blohm, 212-89; 234 NW 268

Agent's authority to indorse check. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks upon indorsement by payee's attorney, the burden of proof is upon defendant-bank to establish apparent, ostensible, or implied authority in the attorney to indorse the checks as the basis for estoppel against payee to assert lack of authority on part of attorney.

Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Attorney indorsing client's checks. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed without actual authority by payee's local attorney who, over a period of years, had collected rents for the payee, evidence of transactions to show custom of attorney in indorsing payee's checks and in remitting by his personal checks was admissible, even tho bank did not have knowledge of all the transactions, and it warranted finding that payee had knowledge of and acquiesced in such custom and was bound thereby.

Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Indorsement by payee's attorney—authority. In action to recover against bank which had cashed checks indorsed by payee's attorney, the authority to make such indorsements is, under §9479, C., '39, determinable from the rules applicable in cases of agency generally.

Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Implied ratification of agent's acts. Acquiescence by the principal in a series of acts by the agent indicates authorization to perform similar acts in the future, and an affirmation of an unauthorized transaction may be inferred from a failure to repudiate it.

Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Authority of agent—violation—ratification. A principal must be deemed to ratify irrevocably the act of his agent in making an investment contrary to instructions when, with full knowledge of the said violation, the principal for some three years accepts and retains all benefits resulting from such investment, and otherwise manifests his acquiescence.

Miller v Bank, 203-411; 212 NW 722

Disclosed principal—nonliability of agent. A minor, upon disaffirmance of his contract, may not recover of an agent who disclosed his principal and acted strictly within his authority.

Hubler v Gates, 209-1198; 229 NW 767

True implied agency—knowledge of principal's acts. He who seeks to prove an implied agency (as distinguished from an agency by estoppel) need not show that he had knowledge of, and relied on, the acts of the claimed principal.

Andrew v Kolsrud, 218-15; 253 NW 913

Powers of agent—burden of proof. A defendant who meets an action of quantum meruit for the use of machinery with the defense that he used the machinery under a contract for an agreed rental, entered into with one of the employees of plaintiff, must establish the authority of the employee to enter into such contract.

Des Moines Co. v Lincoln Co., 201-502; 207 NW 568

Constructive trusts—collections by agent. An agent necessarily holds collections in trust for his principal, and an assignee of the agent for the benefit of creditors has no title or interest thereto.

Second N. Bank v Millbrandt, 211-1299; 235 NW 577

Apparent authority—showing preliminary to receiving testimony. Testimony relative to a contract of compromise with a corporate agent on behalf of the corporation is admissible upon proof that the party offering the testimony, preliminary to entering into such contract, in good faith availed himself of the bureau of information maintained by the corporation, and by means thereof made contact with corporate agents who had physical possession of the papers and files relative to the subject matter of said compromise, and who were, apparently and to all appearance, in authoritative charge of said matter for settlement. (Of course, the issue of apparent authority may be a jury question.)

Northwestern Ins. v Steckel, 216-1189; 250 NW 476

Failure to act promptly caused by act of agent. Where the plaintiff's name was called outside a theatre as winner of a bank night drawing, and when she entered she was told that it was her husband's name that was called, and he was told he was one second too late when he followed her in, the theatre could not claim that neither she nor her husband had claimed the prize within the time set. If the husband was the one entitled to the prize, the theatre was estopped to claim the advantage of the one-second delay caused by the act of their agent in calling the wrong name outside the theatre.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Liability of surety—authority of agent—estoppel. A surety company will not, in an action on a bond issued in its name by its agent, be permitted to dispute the authority which it has specifically conferred on said agent in a written power of attorney filed with the clerk of the district court and relied on by said clerk in approving the bond, the obligee in the bond having no knowledge of any limitation on the authority of the agent.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Liability of principal and independent contractors. A contract granting the right of way over land for an underground pipe line, on payment of a certain sum per rod, and on payment of "damages to growing crops, fences, or improvements occasioned in laying, repairing, or removing lines", does not constitute an agreement by grantee that he will pay damages consequent on the negligent act (tort) of an independent contractor in injuring grantor's private bridge which was located wholly outside said right of way.

Asher v Cont. Corp., 216-977; 250 NW 179

Payment to agent without production of note. Payment of a promissory note to one who is in fact the agent of the holder to receive such payment discharges the note, even tho the note is not in the possession of the agent at the time of payment.

Whitney v Krasne, 209-236; 225 NW 245

Unauthorized assignment of mortgage—ratification. An unauthorized assignment by bank officials of a note and mortgage belonging to the bank is ratified and confirmed by the act of the bank in receiving and retaining the consideration paid by the purchaser for said note and mortgage.

Iowa Convention v Howell, 218-1143; 254 NW 848

Reformation of policy—knowledge of agent. The knowledge of a soliciting agent that the insured understood that he was to receive a policy which would permit additional insurance will, on the issue of reformation, be imputed to the insurer, even tho not communicated to the latter.

Smith v Ins. Co., 201-363; 207 NW 334

Contracts in name of unincorporated association—personal liability. One who contracts for, or in the name or on behalf of, a legal nonentity, e. g., an unincorporated society or association, is personally liable on the contract unless he establishes the fact that at the time of so contracting his nonpersonal liability was agreed on.

Haldeman v Addison, 221-218; 265 NW 358

Unincorporated association—liability of members. An individual who, contracts in the name of a voluntary unincorporated association is personally liable thereon in the absence of an agreement with the other party releasing him from personal liability, and such other members of said association who authorize, consent to, or ratify such undertaking are also personally liable in the absence of an agreement exempting them, the personal liability being based upon principles of agency.

Lamm v Stoen, 226-622; 284 NW 465

Conditional sale (?) or contract of agency (?). The act of the owner of an article in reluctantly permitting it to pass into the possession of a party (to whom he had theretofore actually sold many like articles) with permission to forthwith sell the article (which sale was then practically assured) at a stated cash price or to forthwith return the article, without any expressed intention of selling the article to the party so given possession, presents a jury question on the issue whether the transaction was one of simple agency or whether the transaction constituted an oral conditional sale contract which would not be valid against a third party who had no knowledge thereof.

Greenlease v Sadler, 216-302; 249 NW 383

Right to lien—contract with landowner—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held to justify the finding of the trial court that the owner of realty had authorized his tenant as his agent to contract for material for making repairs to improvements on the farm and that a mechanic's lien was properly foreclosed against said owner and his subsequent grantee.

Iowa Supply Co. v Petersen, 221-978; 267 NW 716

Automobile—operation by garageman without knowledge of owner—nonowner—liability. The owner of an automobile is not liable for damages done by his car consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the proprietor of a garage who, without the knowledge of said owner, and as an independent contractor, was towing said car to his place of business in order to repair it; nor is a nonowner of the car, who directed the garageman to take the car and repair it, liable for said damages.

Johnson v Selindh, 221-378; 265 NW 622; 39 NCCA 289, 565

Release—covenant not to sue—joint wrongdoers. The driver of an oil truck sued for damages consequent on his negligent operation of the truck is not released from liability because another party who owned the oil tank and grease rack carried on the truck obtained from the injured party a covenant wherein the injured party agreed not to sue such other party,—the record failing to show that the truck driver and the owner of the tank were joint wrongdoers.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

Wife denying husband's agency but accepting benefits not permitted. A wife, owning a rooming house, sold on the fraudulent representation of her husband, made in response to purchaser's direct question, that the furnace heated the upstairs rooms, will not, in purchaser's action to rescind and recover the down payment, be permitted to deny her husband's authority to represent her and at the same time retain the down payment as fruits of the deceit.

Smith v Miller, 225-241; 280 NW 493

Freight elevator—res ipsa loquitur—nonapplicability. Record reviewed relative to the fatal injuries received by a party on, in, or about, a freight elevator, and relative to the defendant's control of the operation of said elevator at the time said injuries were received, and held to show the inapplicability of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Boles v Hotel Co., 221-211; 265 NW 183

V ACTIONS

Proof of relation—declarations of agent—incompetency. The fact of agency may not be established by the mere declarations of the agent.

Humphrey v Baron, 223-735; 273 NW 856

Negligence — personal injury — evidence insufficient for jury. Where recovery is sought because a minute particle of metal, apparently chipped off of operator's hammer, flew into plaintiff's eye while his truck tire was being repaired by filling station operator, and where there was no showing that tools and methods used by the operator were not those ordinarily used, motion for directed verdict should have been sustained.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Master and servant—oil company and filling station operator. In an action to recover from an oil company for injuries allegedly caused by operator of company's filling station, evidence that operator conducted the station before approval of lease just as if it had been accepted, that he bought merchandise for cash from this company and others and kept the profits, that he received no remuneration from company, that altho company suggested things to help him, it exercised no supervision, that he took out state permits in his own name, and personally arranged for utility service, failed to establish relation of employer and employee. Hence, company's motion for directed verdict should have been sustained.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Taxpayer's remedy by injunction. See under §§12512, 12513

I REAL PARTY IN INTEREST

"Idem sonans" doctrine—applicability. The doctrine of idem sonans is recognized by Iowa courts and, while each case must be determined according to its own facts, the mere fact that names spelled differently from true name could be pronounced like the true name by a strained pronunciation would not make the doctrine applicable, but where the names, when general and ordinary rules of pronunciation are applied, are so identical in pronunciation and so alike that there is no possibility of mistake, the doctrine should be applied; or where two names, as commonly pronounced in the English language, are sounded alike, a variance in their spelling is immaterial; and even slight difference in their pronunciation is unimportant, if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing the two names when pronounced. Such names are "idem sonans" and, altho spelled differently, are to be regarded as the same.

Webb v Ferkins, 227-1157; 290 NW 112

Presumption of jurisdiction. Presumptively, parties to an action in this state are residents of this state, and presumptively, the cause of action sued on arose in this state.

Farmers Bk. v Anderson, 216-988; 250 NW 214

Foreign corporation—right to maintain action. A foreign corporation which has not been authorized to do business in this state may, nevertheless, maintain an action in this state on a contract entered into in a foreign state.

Standard Co. v Sur. Co., 207-619; 223 NW 365

Foreign receivers. A foreign state officer as a foreign receiver of an insolvent foreign corporation, charged by the laws of his state with the mandatory duty of enforcing a "double" liability on the corporate stock of such corporation and of distributing the proceeds among the creditors, is vested with such title to the fund accruing under said liability as will enable him to maintain an action in this state against a resident holder of stock in such corporation.

I REAL PARTY IN INTEREST—continued

Hirning v Hamlin, 200-1322; 206 NW 617

Federal conservator—authority. The federal statute that the conservator of a national bank shall act "under the direction" of the comptroller of the currency does not require the conservator to secure specific authority from the comptroller for the bringing of an attachment and the execution of a bond on behalf of the bank.

Ross v Long, 219-471; 258 NW 94

Public officers. The proper officer charged with the enforcement of the "housing law" may maintain an action to enjoin the storage of gasoline on residence property without a permit.

Clinton v Donnelly, 203-576; 213 NW 262

Taxpayer on behalf of state. A taxpayer may, when the proper state official refuses to act, maintain, on behalf of the state, an action to recover state funds received by the defendant in violation of the constitution of the state.

Wertz v Shane, 216-768; 249 NW 661

Taxpayers. The fact that a party plaintiff is a taxpayer does not, in and of itself, give him any standing to question the action of public authorities when such action does not work any expenditure of public funds.

Sec. N. Bank v Bagley, 202-701; 210 NW 947; 49 ALR 705

Taxpayers. A taxpayer may maintain an action to enjoin the board of supervisors from issuing county bonds for a purpose not authorized by law.

Harding v Board, 213-560; 237 NW 625

Right of taxpayer to question municipal action. A plaintiff has no standing to enjoin a city from entering into a contract for the construction of an electric lighting system to be paid for by special assessments, unless he alleges and proves that, in some specified way, he will be adversely affected by such proposed contract, e. g., (1) that he owns property which will be specially assessed, or (2) that he is a taxpayer and must contribute to the improvement fund from which payment of a deficit must be made.

Donovan Co. v City, 211-506; 231 NW 499

Municipal property owner. A property owner who owns property adjacent to a building being erected in violation of a town ordinance, relating to constructions within the fire limits of the town, has such interest as will entitle him to an injunction against the erection and maintenance of such building.

Boehner v Williams, 213-578; 239 NW 545

Uninjured taxpayer. A public utility corporation, operating in a city under a duly granted franchise, may not, solely as a taxpayer, maintain injunction to test the legality of an ordinance granting a franchise to a competitor, on the grounds (1) that the ordinance rates for private consumers are unreasonable and (2) that the city has an option under the ordinance to take over the ownership of the plant after it has paid for itself out of its own earnings, when it appears that such possible "taking over" will be without the creation of any debt on the part of the city, and without resort to any taxation—in other words, when it appears that there is no present or threatened danger to the plaintiff, except the danger of competition.

Iowa Co. v City, 210-300; 227 NW 514

Assessed lands—correction of description. An owner of land which is assessed for the construction of a drainage improvement may maintain an action of mandamus against the board of supervisors for the correction of the insufficient description of other assessed lands within the district in such manner that such other lands can be sold under the assessment against them.

Plumer v Board, 203-643; 213 NW 257

Right to withdraw. Parties who, through a misunderstanding, have been joined as plaintiffs, necessarily have the right to withdraw from the action.

Schaal v Schaal, 203-667; 213 NW 207

Presumption. On appeal in an action involving the title to real estate, it will be assumed, in support of the judgment, that the plaintiffs were the proper parties in interest, tho the record is indefinite, when they were so treated without objection in the trial below.

Bullock v Smith, 201-247; 207 NW 241

When issue inconsequential. The plea that plaintiff in an action on a note as indorsee is not the real party in interest because the note carries a subsequent indorsement by plaintiff to another indorsee becomes of no consequence when said subsequent indorsee is in court and personally causes proof to be made that plaintiff is the real owner of the note.

First Bk. v Johnson, 202-799; 211 NW 373

Mandamus. One who, as an attorney in fact (tho not an attorney at law), is in good faith interested on behalf of his principal in a transfer of corporate stock, and who will become entitled to a compensation if he succeeds in collecting his client's claim, has such interest as will enable him to maintain mandamus to compel the corporation to permit an examination of the stock books and transfer records of the corporation.

Drennan v Ins. Co., 200-931; 205 NW 735

Mandamus—official newspapers—proprietor as proper party to compel selection. The rule is now well established that the proprietor of a newspaper has such interest in the selection of official newspapers that he can maintain an action of mandamus in his own name to compel the selection by the county supervisors.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Landlord and tenant. A lessor is the real party in interest to recover one-half of the rent due him because of a purchase by the tenant of an undivided half interest in the premises.

Schick v Realty Co., 200-997; 205 NW 782

Reformation of instrument. A deed cannot be reformed by one who is not a party thereto unless the mistake claimed therein affects his interest.

American Bank v Borcharding, 201-765; 208 NW 518

Bondholders (?) or trustees (?). When trustees for a bondholder have, under the terms of the bonds, the exclusive right to maintain an action for the protection of the bondholder, the latter may not maintain such action, and thereby convert himself into a trustee, on the naked allegation, in substance, that the trustees will, because of partiality, be less aggressive in prosecuting such action than the bondholder.

McPherson v Sec. Co., 206-562; 218 NW 306

Equitable owner. An equitable owner of land who effects a sale of the land through an agent, but permits the contract of sale to be made between the purchaser and the legal titleholder, in order to secure to the latter the amount due him, remains the real party in interest in an action against the agent, to compel him to account for a consideration received by him in the sale of the land, and concealed from the said equitable owner.

Hiller v Betts, 204-197; 215 NW 233

Promise for benefit of third party. A promise, made on adequate consideration, for the benefit of a third person, is enforceable by said third party.

Tracewell v Sanborn, 210-1324; 232 NW 724

Agreement for benefit of third party. Principle recognized that a third party, for whose benefit a contract is made, has a right to bring an action on the contract.

Venz v Ins. Assn., 217-662; 251 NW 27

Contest of will by judgment creditor. The creditor of an heir who holds a judgment against him which would be a lien upon any real estate which he would inherit from an ancestor has an interest which entitles him to contest the ancestor's will.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Judgment creditor of heir. Judgments held against a son and heir of the decedent and recorded where real estate owned by the decedent was located became liens upon the real estate at the time the title thereto vested in the son, and were a beneficial interest entitling the creditor to contest the probate of a will which would deprive him of that interest.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Judgment creditor of devisee-heir. When a father's will left property to a son and heir in trust so that it could not be subjected to the son's debts, a judgment creditor of the son was an interested person who had a beneficial and pecuniary interest in the estate of the deceased and in the son's share therein, of which he would be deprived to his prejudice if the will were probated.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Contract by business department of real party. An action on a contract is properly brought by the real contracting party even tho such contract was entered into by one of the business departments of said party.

Butler Co. v Elliott, 211-1068; 233 NW 669

Protection of easement—loss of right. One who bases his attempt to enjoin interference with a public or private easement in a strip of land solely on the ground of his ownership of the abutting land loses such right by an unconditional conveyance of the abutting land.

Rider v Narigon, 204-530; 215 NW 497

Right of trustee-plaintiff. When a plaintiff is a trustee with power simply to receive the amount of the recovery and deliver the same to the real party in interest, the action will be determined solely on the basis of the rights of such real party.

Ronna v Bank, 213-855; 236 NW 68

Action against third party wrongdoer—foreign statute—effect. Under the workmen's compensation act of Illinois, when an employer pays his employee compensation for an injury, said employer is thereby subrogated to the employee's right to maintain an action against a third party wrongdoer who caused the injury, provided all three said parties are operating under said act. Said Illinois act will not be given, in this state, the effect of depriving an employee who renders services in Illinois for his Iowa employer, but who was injured in this state by a wrongdoer resident of this state, of the right to maintain in his own name in this state an action for damages against said wrongdoer, even tho said employer has paid, in Illinois, said employee the compensation called for by the Illinois act, and even tho wrongdoer's general business extended into the state of Illinois.

Henriksen v Stages, Inc., 216-643; 246 NW 913; 32 NCCA 602

Execution of trust—trustees (?) or receiver (?). A court of equity may not terminate or violate a trust agreement between the issuer

I REAL PARTY IN INTEREST—continued of bonds and trustees to the effect that the former will transfer to the latter securities for the benefit of bondholders, and that if the issuer defaults in the payment of interest on, or principal of, the bonds, the trustees, on notice from the unpaid bondholders, shall liquidate said securities and apply the proceeds to the payment of the bonds. It follows that, if the issuer of the bonds becomes insolvent, the trustees, in the absence of any counter-wish of the bondholders, have a right, superior to that of the receiver, to liquidate the securities, the securities being less than the outstanding bonds; and this is true even tho the securities in question are not actually transferred to the trustees but only delivered to them.

In re Trusteeship, 214-884; 241 NW 308

Corporate entity—unallowable disregard of. Where collaterally secured bonds, owned by a corporation, were depreciated in value by the wrongful act of the collateral-holding trustee in permitting worthless collaterals to be substituted for valuable collaterals, the resulting damages belong solely to the corporation. In other words, a stockholder may not maintain an action against the trustee for alleged special damages suffered by said stockholder consequent on the fact that said depreciation so impaired the capital of the corporation that an assessment on the corporate shares became necessary, and that the stockholder was unable to pay said assessment and thereby lost his said stock.

Grimes v Brammer, 214-405; 239 NW 550

Stock—rights of equitable owner. The legal rights of an equitable owner of corporate shares of stock (stock not duly transferred to him on the books of the corporation) are, in many respects, very limited, but, among such rights, is the right to maintain an action against the corporation to establish and protect the interest of such equitable owner in the corporate property.

Graeser v Finance Co., 218-1112; 254 NW 859

Fraudulent conveyance—action by trustee to set aside. A trustee in bankruptcy may not maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the bankrupt unless he pleads and proves that such setting aside is necessary in order to pay claims allowed in the bankruptcy proceedings.

Newman v Callahan, 212-1003; 237 NW 514

Duplicate actions on same subject matter—priority. When two actions involving the same subject matter are commenced by different parties (e. g., partition of land), the action in which completed service is first made on all necessary parties must be deemed first commenced even tho the other action was first formally filed with the clerk, unless said first action was commenced by an unauthorized plaintiff.

Jones et al. v Park, 220-903; 262 NW 801

Causes assigned for collection—right of assignee. Plaintiff, in an action at law against a defendant, may join in separate counts:

1. Any number of causes of action against defendant of which plaintiff is the unqualified holder, and which are triable at law in said county of suit, and

2. Any number of causes of action against defendant of which plaintiff is holder as assignee for collection only, and which are triable at law in said county of suit.

Carson et al. v Long, 222-506; 268 NW 518

Writ of prohibition—state as plaintiff. An original action in the supreme court, for a writ of prohibition directed to a district court and prohibiting further action by said latter court in private actions pending therein, may be brought in the name of the state ex rel its attorney general; especially is this true when said private actions arose out of proceedings instituted by the state through the governor thereof.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

Joinder of corporations and officers. Two corporations, each organized by the same promoters, for identically the same purpose, and officered by the same officers, may be joined with the common president, in an action based upon a single joint transaction wherein the said president in the sale of corporate stock of both corporations made false representations in the interest of and for the benefit of both corporations.

McCarthy v Dixon, 219-15; 257 NW 327

Incapacity to sue—waiver. An objection to the capacity in which plaintiff sues must be interposed by defendant before he pleads to the merits.

Keeling v Priebe, 219-155; 257 NW 199

Statutory bond. An action on a statutory bond is properly brought by the entity to which the bond runs.

Belmond Assn. v Luick, 217-805; 253 NW 521

Action in trade name. A person has the legal right to maintain an action in the duly registered trade name under which he transacts his business.

Keeling v Priebe, 219-155; 257 NW 199

Naked legal titleholder. A judgment plaintiff may maintain an action to set aside conveyances as fraudulent even tho he has transferred the equitable title to the judgment and holds only the legal title.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 217-636; 251 NW 51

Husband of titleholder as improper plaintiff. A husband may not maintain an action to partition lands of which his wife holds the legal title, and in which he has no interest except the contingent interest of a husband.

Jones et al. v Park, 220-903; 262 NW 801

Real estate contract foreclosed against bankrupt. A real estate contract may be foreclosed in the state court and vendor is real party in interest regardless of the buyer's discharge in bankruptcy when the bankruptcy court entirely ignored this property as an asset of the bankrupt, upon which land the vendor had a valid pre-existing lien.

Blotcky v Silberman, 225-519; 281 NW 496

Stockholders—superadded double liability—improper plaintiff. An insolvent bank may not maintain an action against its stockholders to enforce and collect the superadded double liability imposed by §9251, C., '27.

Home Bk. v Berggren, 211-697; 234 NW 573

Bidder at sale of trust property—non-grieved party. In the sale of the personal property assets of an insolvent bank by the liquidating receiver, a bidder who is not a creditor of the bank, or interested in any manner in the trust property except as a proposed buyer, has no such standing or interest as authorizes him to appeal from an order of the court rejecting his bid for an item of said assets, and approving a lesser bid of another party for the same item. Nor will the court, under such circumstances, order a remand when the difference between the two bids is slight. (This is not suggesting (1) that the unsuccessful bidder may not very properly call the attention of the court to the disparity in bids, or (2) that the court has unbridled discretion to reject high bids and to approve low bids.)

Dean v Bank, 221-1270; 268 NW 56

Promissory notes charged off assets. Fact that an agreement with a third person permits the charging off from bank assets of certain promissory notes objected to by the banking department will not divest the bank of title thereto nor render fraudulent a judgment obtained by the bank thereon.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

School districts—tuition transfer. In an equitable action between school districts to prevent a statutory transfer by a county treasurer of funds in payment of tuition, a cross-petition of the defendant school district, not joined in by the county treasurer, may not be stricken therefrom, inasmuch as the county treasurer has no investment therein and is not a necessary party thereto.

Lincoln Dist. v Redfield Dist., 226-298; 283 NW 881

Action on insurance policy. Defendant corporation, Automobile Underwriters, formed to underwrite reciprocal insurance contracts of its unincorporated group of subscribers, called the State Automobile Insurance Association, is the real party in interest in an action to enforce a judgment against the insurance carrier. The association is not a legal entity and, when the Automobile Underwriters is the only legal entity of the two, an admission of an important fact by the underwriters made in a counterclaim in the action in which judgment was obtained is binding on them in the later action.

Mitchell v Automobile Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

Presumptions—ownership of claim. One need not affirmatively prove that he is the owner of a cause of action which arose in his favor out of the very transaction on which he is sued.

Williams v Burnside, 207-239; 222 NW 413

"Real party in interest"—partial loss paid. The circuit court of appeals is bound by decisions of federal court in construing a state statute, in the absence of state court's construction on similar facts, so on question of construction of statute providing for the prosecution of an action in the name of the "real party in interest" held, an insurer cannot maintain an action against a defendant causing loss for amount paid insured, after a judgment has been rendered against defendant and in favor of insured for total amount of loss less insurance received, since the right of action for the entire loss is single and cannot be split and separately maintained by the owner and the various insurers who have paid parts of the loss.

Fireman's Ins. Co. v Bremner, 25 F 2d, 75

Action by automobile owner—insurer and mortgagee not necessary parties. In an automobile owner's damage action against a street railway, wherein defendant pleads a general denial and alleges that plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and wherein interrogatories attached to defendant's answer disclose that plaintiff's loss had been partly settled through insurance, and when defendant then alleges that a bank holds a mortgage on plaintiff's automobile, and moves the court to bring in the insurer and the mortgagee-bank as parties, such motion was properly overruled.

Caligiuri v Railway, 227-466; 238 NW 702

II ASSIGNEES

Unallowable will contestant—assignee of expectancy. An assignee—even for value—of the interest which an heir expects to inherit in the property of his parent, may not contest the will of the parent in case the assignor-heir be disinherited by the last will and testament of the parent.

Burk v Morain, 223-399; 272 NW 441; 112 ALR 79

Assignment of claim of guest—effect. The driver of an automobile involved in an accident may take from his guest an assignment of the guest's cause of action and recover thereon even tho he—the driver—was guilty of contributory negligence, provided the guest was not guilty of such negligence. The driver's contributory negligence simply defeats his own individual claim for damages.

Albert v Trans. Co., 215-197; 243 NW 561

III PARTNERSHIP

Contract for benefit of third party. An oral contract between the joint purchasers of land that they would surrender their rights under the contract of purchase and reconvey to their vendor, upon certain terms, to be performed by the vendor, said contract being partially performed, is enforceable by the vendor, even tho he had no knowledge of such contract at the time it was entered into in his behalf.

Durband v Nicholson, 205-1264; 216 NW 278; 219 NW 318

IV PRINCIPAL AND AGENT

Agent for undisclosed principal or beneficiary. Principle reaffirmed that a mortgagee may enforce the mortgage in his own name, even tho the mortgage is for the benefit of a third party.

Turnis v Ballou, 201-468; 205 NW 746

Right of action against subagent. Principle reaffirmed that a principal who has expressly or impliedly authorized his agent to employ a subagent may and should bring his action directly against the subagent for the latter's negligence.

Thompson v Bank, 207-786; 223 NW 517

Undisclosed principal. An undisclosed principal has a right to maintain an action on a contract signed by the agent in his individual name.

Utilities Corp. v Chapman, 210-994; 232 NW 116

V UNINCORPORATED ASSOCIATIONS

Discussion. See 11 ILR 193—Jurisdiction over partnerships, associations, and joint debtors

Note—signing in representative capacity—liability. No recovery can be had against one who, as treasurer of an unincorporated association, assumes to execute a promissory note in the name of the association, when he is allowed to plead and prove, without objection, that when the note was executed it was agreed with the payee that no personal liability should attach to the said treasurer.

Andrew v Golf Club, 217-577; 250 NW 709

Contracts in name of association—personal liability. One who contracts for, or in the name or on behalf of, a legal nonentity, e. g., an unincorporated society or association, is personally liable on the contract unless he establishes the fact that at the time of so contracting his nonpersonal liability was agreed on.

Haldeman v Addison, 221-218; 265 NW 358

Unincorporated associations. Voluntary unincorporated associations may neither sue nor be sued.

Wilson v Coal Co., 215-855; 246 NW 753

Noncapacity to contract or sue. Strictly speaking, a voluntary unincorporated association organized for literary and social purposes has no right to contract and cannot maintain a suit in the name of such voluntary unincorporated association alone.

Lamm v Stoen, 226-622; 284 NW 465

Committee of unincorporated association. A committee of an unincorporated organization is not a legal entity and is not suable in tort.

Work v Coliseum Co., (NOR); 207 NW 679

VI ADMINISTRATORS AND HEIRS

Collection of estate—breach of contract. An executor may maintain an action for the breach of a contract between the deceased and an heir of deceased by which the latter agreed to pay, as part of the estate, a named sum to another heir.

Rodgers v Reinking, 205-1311; 217 NW 441

Personal property—right of heirs to protect. Tho the title to the personal property of a deceased does not pass directly to his heirs, they may, in the absence of any administration, maintain an action to protect or recover such property.

Powell v McBlain, 222-799; 269 NW 883

Removal of administrator—surety as applicant. A surety on the bond of an administrator has such "interest in the estate" as empowers him to make application for the removal of the administrator, even tho such surety has taken steps to terminate his future suretyship.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Administrator. In an action by an administrator for damages consequent on the wrongful death of the deceased, the defendant may not raise the issue whether the plaintiff is the real party in interest.

Reidy v Railway, 216-415; 249 NW 347

Objections to executrix's report—real estate title issue not misjoinder—jurisdiction. Where an executrix after resigning files her reports, objections thereto asking that she account for land in another county allegedly purchased with estate money does not misjoin equitable action to impose trust on or establish title in land, but is special probate proceeding to compel executrix to account for assets over which probate court has statutory jurisdiction coextensive with the state.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Replevin—testator's gift inter vivos to sister. In a case where decedent, an unmarried man 60 years of age, a physician and capable business man, high in public affairs, is starting on a vacation trip, his gift of all his property to his mother and sister, they being the natural objects of his bounty, cannot be said to be unreasonable or contrary to public policy when in a replevin action the validity of the gift is challenged by decedent's executor at the instance of decedent's second wife whom he married during the vacation trip and just 10 days before his death.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

VII SUBSTITUTION OF PROPER PARTY

Amendment. Amendments are allowable which substitute the real party in interest, even tho such amendment is filed during the actual trial.

Norton v Ferguson, 203-317; 211 NW 417

Substitution of administrator. Upon the death of a party plaintiff, his administrator is properly substituted as plaintiff.

Dimon v Wright, 206-693; 214 NW 673

Right to show ownership of claim. Upon the substitution of the actual owner of a promissory note sued on as plaintiff, in lieu of a plaintiff who has sued as indorsee for collection only, the substituted plaintiff should be permitted to show by written assignment, and irrespective of any consideration, that the note had been fully and formally retransferred to him.

Richardson v Clark, 202-1371; 212 NW 133

Belated substitution—discretion. In an action at law by a corporation to recover on a contract, the court has discretionary power during the actual trial and after the jury has been obtained and after some testimony has been introduced, to order plaintiff's assignee for the benefit of creditors to be substituted as plaintiff,—no actual prejudice to defendant being made to appear; and this is true even tho the defendant was, of course, deprived of the privilege of examining the jurors relative to their relations to the said assignee.

Webster County Buick Co. v Auto. Co., 216-485; 249 NW 203

Death of party without substitution. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

10968 Plaintiff as legal representative.

I TRUSTEE OF EXPRESS TRUST

Derogation of common law. The rule of the common law that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed has no application to the statute law of this state.

In re Van Vechten, 218-229; 251 NW 729

Jurisdiction on diverse citizenship. The jurisdiction of the federal court cannot be defeated by joinder of an unnecessary party, nor will the bringing in of an unnecessary party after commencement of suit oust its jurisdiction.

First Tr. & Sav. Bk. v Iowa-Wis. Bridge Co., 98 F 2d, 416

Estate funds—action to recover. An executor is the proper party to maintain an action against his predecessor and his bondsmen to recover the funds of the estate, even tho such funds ultimately belong to testamentary devisees.

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533

Opinion—parties concluded. One on whose behalf an administrator seeks to maintain an action is necessarily bound by the opinion of the appellate court on appeal, and, on reversal and remand, he acquires no additional standing by simply joining with the administrator in a motion for judgment, without being substituted as plaintiff or in any manner making himself a party to the action by intervention or otherwise, and without in any manner changing the record.

Ronna v Bank, 215-806; 246 NW 798

Trustee to collect—allowable joinder. A trustee who has been authorized by the joint instrument of several individual owners of separate promissory notes, signed by the same maker, to bring such actions as he may deem fit to enforce collection of said notes, may maintain solely in his own name as such trustee an action at law on all or on any number of said notes. It follows that a motion to require the plaintiff to elect as to the particular count on which he will proceed will not lie.

Iowa Co. v Clark, 215-929; 247 NW 211

I TRUSTEE OF EXPRESS TRUST—concluded

Trustee of express trust. The trustee in a deed of trust which secures a series of bonds payable "to said trustee or to bearer", and which have been sold and delivered to numerous parties who continue to be the owners thereof, may maintain an action at law against the maker, on all the bonds, (1) when the trust deed empowers the trustee to declare the entire debt due in case of any default of the maker, and to proceed by means of any legal or equitable action to enforce collection, and imposes on the trustee the duty so to declare and proceed when the bondholders request him so to do, and (2) when all said bondholders, after default in payment of interest, individually redeliver to said trustee all of said bonds and specifically request the trustee in writing to declare the entire debt due and to proceed against the maker by legal action. Authority in plaintiff to maintain said action rests on a two-fold legal basis, viz:

1. Plaintiff is the legal bearer and holder of said bonds.

2. Plaintiff is the trustee of an express trust.

Minnesota Co. v Hannan, 215-1060; 247 NW 536

Continuance and dismissal by guardian. An order in partition proceedings brought by the guardian of an incompetent to the effect that the cause "be continued until certain conditions are complied with, which being fulfilled the cause should be dismissed", and a later order dismissing said cause on a recital that said "conditions" had been fulfilled, cannot be said to be illegal and beyond the jurisdiction of the court, even tho such "conditions" were not recited in the record, it appearing that the court had personal knowledge of them.

Salomon v Newby, 210-1023; 228 NW 661

Estoppel to question proceedings. An executor who institutes an authorized action against a corporate receiver in the county of the receiver's appointment, for relief against an alleged fraud-induced contract by the deceased, and (1) is met by a cross-petition for judgment on the said contract, and (2) has his action properly consolidated with divers other actions under duly joined issues which might have been the basis of an original action against the executor in said county of suit, may not thereupon, after dismissing his action, have all proceedings against himself and the estate dismissed on the claim that the probate court which appointed him had sole jurisdiction to render a judgment against him or against the estate.

Lex v Steel Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Unauthorized action. An action by a plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of a deceased, to recover damages for the wrongful death of the deceased, when plaintiff was not such administrator, is a nullity, and, therefore, does not toll the statute of limitation on the said cause of action. And in case plaintiff is appointed administrator after the statute has fully run, an ex parte order of the probate court assuming to ratify, confirm, and adopt such former proceeding is likewise a nullity.

Pearson v Anthony, 218-697; 254 NW 10

Defect not cured by appearance. Lack of capacity to act as party plaintiff cannot be remedied by the appearance of the defendant in the action.

Pearson v Anthony, 218-697; 254 NW 10

II CONTRACTS FOR BENEFIT OF THIRD PARTY

Discussion. See 1 ILB 187—Suit by third party

Promise for benefit of third party enforceable. The promise, made on adequate consideration, for the benefit of a third person is enforceable by said third party.

Tracewell v Sanborn, 210-1324; 232 NW 724

Third-party action. Principle recognized that a third party, for whose benefit a contract is made, has a right to bring an action on the contract.

Venz v Ins. Assn., 217-662; 251 NW 27

Agent for undisclosed principal or beneficiary. Principle reaffirmed that a mortgagee may enforce the mortgage in his own name, even tho the mortgage is for the benefit of a third party.

Turnis v Ballou, 201-468; 205 NW 746

Party to contract but without interest. A party may maintain foreclosure proceedings on a mortgage in which he is named as mortgagee, tho he has no beneficial interest in the mortgage.

Brauch v Freking, 219-556; 258 NW 892

Bond—breach—allowable and unallowable action by city. A city, tho named as obligee in a bond for the construction of a street pavement, may not—assuming fraud-induced acceptance by the city of the work—maintain in its own right and for its sole benefit an action at law on the bond for damages consequent on the failure of the contractor to construct the pavement of the thickness required by contract. But the city may maintain such action in its own name as representative of the assessed property owners, and to recover for itself its own proper outlay.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Workmen's compensation—paying medical expense—no third-party contract for physician. In a workmen's compensation case a stipulation of settlement including "all medical expense incurred" does not make a contract for the benefit of third persons so as to permit an action to be maintained by the physician who rendered medical services to the injured employee.

Casey v Creamery Co., 224-1094; 278 NW 214

Debt of another—original promise. An agreement by a vendor of real property with his purchaser to pay for the making of certain improvements on the property is an original promise, and not within the statute of frauds.

Madden Co. v Becker Co., 205-783; 218 NW 466

Agreement for benefit of third party. Principle recognized that the rights of a third party for whose benefit a promise is made are subject to the rights of the original parties and to any modifications which such parties may make before knowledge of the covenant is imparted to the third party.

Coen v Bank, 205-483; 218 NW 325

Enforceable by vendor. An oral contract between the joint purchasers of land that they would surrender their rights under the contract of purchase and reconvey to their vendor, upon certain terms to be performed by the vendor, said contract being partially performed, is enforceable by the vendor, even tho he had no knowledge of such contract at the time it was entered into in his behalf.

Durband v Nicholson, 205-1264; 216 NW 278; 219 NW 318

III PLAINTIFF BY STATUTE

Foreign receivership—right to maintain action in this state. A foreign receiver of a foreign insolvent banking corporation may maintain an action in this state to collect a "double" liability assessment on the stock of a stockholder who is a resident of this state when the receiver is charged by statute with the duty to make such collection and to distribute the proceeds among creditors.

Baird v Cole, 207-664; 223 NW 514

Recovery on excess corporate indebtedness—proper party plaintiff. A trustee in bankruptcy of a corporate bankrupt cannot maintain an action against the directors and officers of the corporation to enforce the statutory individual liability attaching to such directors and officers consequent on their act in knowingly consenting to a corporate indebtedness in excess of that permitted by law. Such right of action never, in any sense, belongs to the corporation, but on the contrary is a right extended to the corporate creditors, and is enforceable solely by such creditors, if necessary, irrespective of the bankruptcy proceedings.

Hicklin v Cummings, 211-687; 234 NW 530; 72 ALR 822

Trustees of unincorporated association. The trustees of a voluntary unincorporated association, and not the association itself, are proper plaintiffs in an action to quiet title to real estate of which the association is the beneficial owner.

PARTIES TO ACTIONS §§10968, 10969

Presbyterian Church v Johnson, 213-49; 238 NW 456

10969 Plaintiffs joined.

ANALYSIS

- I PROPER JOINDER
- II IMPROPER JOINDER
- III PROCEDURE ON MISJOINDER

I PROPER JOINDER

State as party. Where a grave situation existed in the locality at the time, the state had the right to be made a party to proceedings involving an injunction violation by labor union officials, by filing a petition incorporating by reference the affidavits of the plaintiff's petition and the injunction upon which it was based, when the state did not seek different and distinct remedies from that asked by the plaintiff.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

City and benefited property owners. There is no misjoinder of parties or causes of action where a city in its own behalf and in behalf of the parties beneficially interested brings an action against a contractor, combining therein both a claim for damages for defective pavement and a claim for the cost of "coring" to determine the thickness, since the basis for the latter claim was found in the contract. A motion to strike is properly overruled.

Sioux City v Krage, 225-1154; 281 NW 828

Action on supersedeas bond. The various obligees in a supersedeas bond given on appeal from a decree quieting title to different tracts of land in different parties are all proper and necessary parties in an action on the bond to recover rents during the period covered by the bond.

Bigelow v Ins. Co., 206-884; 221 NW 661

Inconsequential joinder. It is quite inconsequential in an action by a trustee to recover funds belonging to him as trustee, that the heirs, who are beneficiaries of the trust, are named in the caption of the petition as plaintiffs, said heirs making no claim in the body of the petition adverse to the trustee.

In re Van Vechten, 218-229; 251 NW 729

II IMPROPER JOINDER

Improper parties. A county and its treasurer are not proper parties to an action by the treasurer of state to recover on a depository bond in which the county and its treasurer no longer have any interest.

State v Bartlett, 207-208; 222 NW 529

Party defendants—appraisers under lease. In an action to have the court appoint a third

II IMPROPER JOINDER—concluded appraiser in accordance with the terms of a lease, the two already appointed appraisers are not proper parties to a cross-petition asking the court to construe the rental provisions of the lease concerning which the appraisers were to act.

Minot v Pelletier Co., 207-505; 223 NW 182

Motion to consolidate actions by plaintiffs. Two personal injury actions arising out of the same accident and brought against the same defendant cannot be consolidated on motion by the plaintiffs for altho equity has the power to consolidate causes of action to avoid multiplicity of suits, the right to move for a consolidation of causes of action in law is by statute granted only to the defendant, and a plaintiff has no such right.

Brooks v Paulson, 227-1359; 291 NW 144

Title—nonpermissible adjudication. When, in the settlement of an estate in probate, a contract of sale of land belonging to the estate is fully consummated by payment and deed, and the sale and conveyance duly approved by the court as by contract required, the purchaser, who is an entire stranger to the estate except as such purchaser, is not a proper, necessary or permissible party to a proceeding in said probate court, instituted by the residuary legatee, to set aside the probate order approving said sale and conveyance.

Reason: The probate court cannot, even in piecemeal, adjudicate the validity of the title of said purchaser.

In re Doherty, 222-1352; 271 NW 609

III PROCEDURE ON MISJOINDER

Misjoinder in equity of parties and causes—remedy. A misjoinder, in an equitable action, of parties and causes of action is properly met by motion to dismiss.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Unassailable by demurrer. Misjoinder of parties plaintiff is not a ground of demurrer.

Gibson v Union Co., 208-314; 223 NW 111
 Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Demurrer. In action on promissory notes, defendant's demurrer, filed after answer, on ground of misjoinder both of causes of action and of parties was properly overruled.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

10970 United interests in equity.

Quieting title—separate owners of separate tracts. Various parties, each of whom claims exclusive ownership in separate and different tracts of land formerly held by a railway company as right of way, may join as plaintiffs in an equitable action against said railway company to quiet title in each separate party to the particular tract owned by him.

Duggleby v Railway, 214-776; 243 NW 372

Authorized joinder in equity. Several heirs of an intestate having been adjudged the owners of the undivided lands of an intestate, and having later, by an exchange of deeds, effected particular distribution among themselves, may, in an action to quiet title to their respective tracts, join as plaintiffs against an heir who had been adjudged to have no interest in the said lands because of his insolvency and failure to pay his debt to the estate.

Bauer v Bauer, 221-782; 266 NW 531

10971 Assignments—exception.

Assignment of actions generally. See under §10957 (II)
 Similar provisions. See under §§9451-9456

Foreign assignee of note—assignor and makers residents of state. In an action on a note by an assignee, resident of a different state than makers, held, improperly brought in federal court where assignee derived title through indorsers residing in same state as makers.

Sargent v Trust Co., 12 F 2d, 758

Sufficiency of pleading.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Plaintiffs—transfer of title after action brought—effect. The fact that plaintiff, after commencing an action on promissory notes, transfers the title thereof does not prevent the prosecution of said action to judgment in the name of the original plaintiff.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 213-969; 236 NW 418

Recovery dependent on pleading. In an action on a nonnegotiable promissory note, by a transferee thereof, defendant's plea that he be given a set-off in a stated sum because of an account held by defendant against the original payee, will not be construed as embracing a demand for interest on said "stated sum".

Lewis v Grain Co., 214-143; 241 NW 469

Assignment for collection. Principle reaffirmed that the holder of a claim or account may validly assign it to another solely for collection.

Carson, etc. v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

Allowable partial assignment. The owner of a chose in action has a legal right to assign a part of his interest in such chose, and thereafter to join with the assignee in the prosecution of the entire cause of action.

Welch v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

Unquestioned establishment—proper procedure. A duly pleaded counterclaim which is unquestionably established by the evidence should not be submitted to the jury, but should be summarily allowed by the court; and in a personal injury action the court should direct the jury how to proceed if plaintiff's recovery be more than the amount of the counterclaim; likewise how to proceed if plaintiff's recovery be less than the amount of the counterclaim.

Forrest v Abbott, 219-664; 259 NW 238; 38 NCCA 315

Set-off or retainer against beneficiary — power of probate court. In probate proceedings wherein a beneficiary is indebted to the estate, the right of set-off or retainer is not restricted to a court of equity, but rests upon wholesome principles of right and justice which can be administered in probate courts without the aid of a court of conscience.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Heir's assignment of interest subject to estate claims—rights of assignee. In a probate proceeding where one of the heirs, who is indebted to the estate, purchases a farm from the executor and assigns her one-tenth interest in the estate as security for a purchase note to the executor, who in turn assigns the note to a third party, held that such assignment of interest is taken subject to the estate claims, and whatever interest remains should be paid to the holder of the note irrespective of the fact the executor is also indebted to the estate on his final account.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Insolvent bank—set-offs unallowable. A debtor of an insolvent bank may not, after the appointment of a receiver for the bank, buy up claims against the bank and offset such purchased claims against the amount he is owing the bank. Statutory right of set-off is not applicable.

Parker v Schultz, 219-100; 257 NW 570

Defense available against transferee. The maker of a nonnegotiable promissory note who, subsequent to the execution of the note, and before he had knowledge of the transfer of the note, has on deposit with the payee (a private banker), subject to check, an amount equal to the entire amount due on the note, may plead said claim against a transferee of the note when it is made to appear that the said maker, under an arrangement with the banker to apply the deposit on the note, never withdrew any part of said deposit.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Assignment of policy—estoppel. The beneficiary of a legal reserve life insurance policy who, without fraud, joins with the insured in an assignment of all right, title, and interest in the policy in order to collaterally secure a debt due from each of said assignors, is estopped, after the death of the insured, from asserting any interest in the policy except as the same may exceed the said secured indebtedness, it appearing that the policy reserved to the insured both the right to assign the policy and to change the beneficiary.

Andrew v Life Co., 214-573; 240 NW 215

Heir's interest assigned to executor—chargeable to executor when reassigned. In a probate proceeding where a beneficiary assigns her interest in estate to executor to the extent necessary to satisfy beneficiary's note held by the executor, and the executor reassigns said interest to a third party, the executor is chargeable with value of such interest after deducting beneficiary's indebtedness to the estate.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

10972 Defendants.

I PERMISSIBLE DEFENDANTS

Receiver of national bank—liability in state court. The receiver of an insolvent national bank is not immune from suit in the state court to recover property to which neither the bank nor the receiver ever acquired any title.

Poweshiek County v Bank, 209-467; 228 NW 32; 82 ALR 39

Venue in quo warranto. The district court of one county of a judicial district, in duly authorized quo warranto proceedings in said county involving the rival claims of two parties to the office of district judge, may acquire jurisdiction of both parties even tho one of them is a nonresident of the county of suit and is sole defendant in the county of his residence in a proceeding in quo warranto involving the same office.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

Drainage district not legal entity. Principle reaffirmed that a drainage district is not a legal entity, and, consequently, cannot be sued.

Houghton v Bonnicksen, 212-902; 237 NW 313

Refusal of change of venue. Error in refusing to transfer an action to the county of defendant's residence becomes inconsequential when, in the further making up of the issues, either by additional pleadings in the case itself or by intervention therein or by proper consolidation of the action with other actions, the nature of the final action as tried becomes such that it might have been brought originally against all the defendants in the county in which the original action or actions were brought.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

I PERMISSIBLE DEFENDANTS—concluded

Foreclosure of mortgages. In an action to foreclose a mortgage, it is allowable to join as defendants (1) the maker of the promissory note, (2) the payee-indorser in blank, and (3) all assumptors of the mortgage.

Hansen v Bowers, 208-545; 223 NW 891

Joinder of corporations and officers. Two corporations, each organized by the same promoters, for identically the same purpose, and officered by the same officers, may be joined with the common president, in an action based upon a single joint transaction wherein the said president in the sale of corporate stock of both corporations made false representations in the interest of and for the benefit of both corporations.

McCarthy v Dixon, 219-15; 257 NW 327

Bringing in parties. In an action by a testamentary legatee against an executor to recover an unpaid legacy, the executor, who has already distributed the estate and wishes to bring a third party into the action for recoupment purposes, must, at least, allege that said third party has received some portion of the estate in question.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-961; 256 NW 681

Defendant by implication. A third party who is not a party defendant in an action legally submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court by directing the actual defendant to appear for and on behalf of said third party and to protect his interest.

Davis v Agr. Soc., 208-957; 226 NW 90

Bad-faith defense by vouchee. One who is vouched by a defendant into an action and assumes exclusive charge of the defense, and in the trial pursues a course distinctly hostile to the defendant and distinctly favorable to himself, may thereby make himself, in legal effect, a co-defendant, and be conclusively bound by the judgment against the defendant. So held where the vouchee, knowing that he was vouched into the action by the defendant on the theory that the negligence charged was primary as to the vouchee and secondary as to the defendant, actively attempted to establish that he (the vouchee) was not negligent and that the defendant was negligent.

Hoskins v Hotel, 203-1152; 211 NW 423; 65 ALR 1125

Evidence available against vouchee. In an action for breach of warranty because of an existing mortgage on the property, the foreclosure proceedings and judgment entry therein are admissible against the covenantor-defendant to prove the plaintiff's measure of damages, it appearing that the covenantor had been duly vouched into said foreclosure proceedings.

Kellar v Lindley, 203-57; 212 NW 360

Tort-feasors committing unintentional injury. Two or more tort-feasors are suable jointly as for a joint tort when their concurring negligence is the proximate cause of a wholly unintentional injury which is indivisible in its nature.

McDonald v Robinson, 207-1293; 224 NW 820; 62 ALR 1419; 34 NCCA 306

Party defendant—witness fee. A party defendant is not entitled to witness fees tho he has entered no appearance in the action, but has been subpoenaed.

Vacuum Oil Co. v Carstens, 211-1129; 231 NW 380

II PROPER OR NECESSARY DEFENDANTS

Expiration of official term. An appeal in an action in which the county is the real party in interest will not be dismissed because the terms of office of the official party defendants have expired.

First N. Bank v Burke, 201-994; 196 NW 287

Contending school districts. In an action to determine which of two school districts embraces certain land, both districts are absolutely necessary parties.

Whitmer v Board, 210-239; 230 NW 413

Unallowable motion to strike. In an action against several defendants for damages consequent on a negligent act, that defendant who is, in effect, alleged to have occupied the position of respondeat superior cannot have his name stricken from the petition.

Elder v Maudlin, 213-758; 239 NW 577

Cross-petition defense — state as proper party—belated objections. In an action to dissolve a mining corporation, question whether state, not being stockholder or creditor of the mining corporation, was proper party to make defense to a cross-petition, such question not having been raised in the trial court, may not be raised for the first time and reviewed on appeal.

State v Fuel Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Certiorari to review discharge of state employee. The custodian of public buildings and grounds (at Des Moines) is the sole, proper defendant in an action of certiorari to review the legality, under the soldiers preference law, of the discharge of an employee of said department.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

Parties acting jointly and in cooperation. Several persons engaged jointly and in cooperation in the unlawful furnishing, prescribing and administering of medicine without a license may be properly joined in one action for injunction.

State v Baker, 212-571; 235 NW 313

Fence viewing proceedings. On certiorari to review the action of fence viewers, the party who initiated the proceedings is not a necessary party.

Sinnott v Dist. Court, 201-292; 207 NW 129

Bail bond—necessary parties. A bail bond will not be reformed when the defendant on whose behalf the bond was given, and who signed it, is not before the court.

State v Kronstadt, 204-1151; 216 NW 707

Vendor's lien—absence of necessary parties. A vendor's lien may not be established against land after it has been transferred by the purchaser and the new owners are not made party defendants.

In re Thomas, 203-174; 210 NW 747

Undisclosed principal liable. An undisclosed principal is liable on a contract which he has permitted to be entered into in his behalf and under which he has received resulting benefits.

Utilities Corp. v Chapman, 210-994; 232 NW 116

Replevin. A party from whom both plaintiff and defendant in replevin trace their title is a proper party defendant.

Hart v Wood, 202-58; 209 NW 430

Dissolution of corporation. All stockholders of a corporation are proper parties to an action by the state to dissolve the corporation.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Action by stockholder for contribution. All stockholders of a corporation are proper parties to an action by one stockholder who has fully paid for his stock, for contribution from the other stockholders who have not fully paid for their stock, in order to equalize the losses between stockholders.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Nominal parties—who are not. Pleadings reviewed in an action against a corporation and its officers for an accounting, and held, the corporation could not, under an application for an order for the production of papers and documents, be deemed a merely nominal defendant.

Independent Order v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Action against joint trustees. Two or more persons acting jointly in a fiduciary capacity in relation to the same property for the same beneficiary are properly made joint defendants in an action to enforce the trust.

Burger v Krall, 211-1160; 235 NW 318

Tort-feasors committing unintentional injury. Two or more tort-feasors are suable jointly as for a joint tort when their concurring negligence is the proximate cause of a wholly unintentional injury which is indivisible in its nature.

McDonald v Robinson, 207-1293; 224 NW 820; 62 ALR 1419

Action on note—failure to join surety. In an action on a promissory note, the surety is a proper, but not necessary, party defendant.

Clapp v Wallace, 221-672; 266 NW 493

Unincorporated association—individual liability of members—agency. An individual who contracts in the name of a voluntary unincorporated association is personally liable thereon in the absence of an agreement with the other party releasing him from personal liability, and such other members of said association who authorize, consent to, or ratify such undertaking are also personally liable in the absence of an agreement exempting them, the personal liability being based upon principles of agency.

Lamm v Stoen, 226-622; 284 NW 465

Inheritance taker as "representative" of contingent remainderman. A decree setting aside the probate of a will and canceling said will (the action being instituted in good faith and so tried by all parties thereto) is, on the principle or doctrine of representation, conclusive on remote, contingent remaindermen, even tho they are not parties to the action or are not served with notice of the action, when those persons are legally before the court who would take the first estate of inheritance under the will; and especially is this true when parties of the same class to which the omitted parties belong are also legally before the court.

Harris v Randolph, 213-772; 236 NW 51

See Mennig v Graves, 211-758; 234 NW 189

III UNNECESSARY DEFENDANTS

Action to vacate municipal plat. In an action for the vacation of a county auditor's plat of land within a city or town, the county auditor is not a necessary party.

Schemmel v Town, 214-321; 242 NW 89

Denial of right to implead. In an action on the bond of an administrator, the surety should be granted the right to implead the surety on another bond given by the administrator; but a refusal is nonprejudicial when the rights of the respective sureties, as between themselves, are in no manner adjudicated.

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533

Rent—subtenant as party. A landlord need not, in an action to enforce his lien, make a subtenant a party defendant, even tho a lien is claimed on crops grown by the subtenant.

Hanson v Carl, 201-521; 207 NW 579

Dismissal as to one of defendants when other defendants not affected. In an action for injuries sustained in an automobile accident, a dismissal as to one of the defendants could not be complained of by other defendants who were not prejudicially affected by the dismissal.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

IV IMPROPER DEFENDANTS

Unallowable cross-petition. In an action of quo warranto against a particular claimant to the office, brought, under authorization of the court, in the name of the state on the relation of a private party, the defendant will not be permitted to cross-petition against a third party claimant to the same office, and thereunder bring said third party into the proceeding for an adjudication of his right to the office.

State v Murray, 217-1091; 252 NW 556

Action on bond—prior sureties. Defendant in an action on a guardian's bond has no right to demand that a surety on a prior bond of the guardian be made a party defendant on the theory that the defendant has a right to demand contribution from such prior surety.

Brooke v Bank, 207-668; 223 NW 500

Joining contract and tort actions. A joint action cannot be maintained (1) against a contractor on his contract liability to answer for possible torts committed during the progress of work, and (2) against those who are alleged to have subsequently committed a tort during the progress of said work, when the contractor and the alleged tort-feasors are residents of different counties.

Elder v Maudlin, 213-758; 239 NW 577

Party defendants—appraisers under lease. In an action to have the court appoint a third appraiser in accordance with the terms of a lease, the two already appointed appraisers are not proper parties to a cross-petition asking the court to construe the rental provisions of the lease concerning which the appraisers were to act.

Minot v Pelletier Co., 207-505; 223 NW 182

Substitution—irregular practice. A plaintiff who permits his action to quiet title to lie dormant until the defendants are all dead is guilty of very irregular practice in his attempt to obtain a substitution of defendants by filing a purported amendment, not under the title of his pending action, but under a new title, in which the heirs of the deceased defendants are for the first time enumerated and named as the defendants, and, under such title, moving for a substitution of defendants in the old action.

Benjamin v Jackson, 207-581; 223 NW 383

V EFFECT OF DEFECT IN PARTIES

Belated objection. A claim of defect of party defendants cannot be presented for the first time on appeal.

Page & Crane v City, 208-735; 225 NW 841

Title—nonpermissible adjudication. When, in the settlement of an estate in probate, a contract of sale of land belonging to the estate is fully consummated by payment and deed, and the sale and conveyance duly approved by the court as by contract required, the purchaser, who is an entire stranger to the estate except as such purchaser, is not a proper, necessary, or permissible party to a proceeding in said probate court, instituted by the residuary legatee, to set aside the probate order approving said sale and conveyance.

Reason: The probate court cannot, even in piecemeal, adjudicate the validity of the title of said purchaser.

In re Doherty, 222-1352; 271 NW 609

Death of party without substitution. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

VI MISJOINDER—PROCEDURE

Motion to strike. When a defendant is sued in a county other than the county of his residence, and is not suable in said county of suit because of misjoinder of causes of action and of parties, he may, by motion to strike, trim the petition of every defendant except himself and of every cause of action except the one pleaded against himself.

Producers Assn. v Livingston, 216-1257; 250 NW 602

Separate and distinct conversions. A misjoinder of causes of action and of parties occurs when a petition for damages, consequent on successive sales of mortgaged chattels, reveals that two separate and distinct sales were made with actual or constructive notice of the recorded mortgage—one by part of the defendants, and one by the remaining defendants—without any allegation of conspiracy, unity of design, or concert of action on the part of all of said defendants, and without any allegation that the concurrent acts of all the defendants proximately contributed to the conversion.

Producers Assn. v Livingston, 216-1257; 250 NW 602

Curing misjoinder. Any claim of misjoinder of causes of action as to defendants and of misjoinder of parties defendant because plaintiff joined an action at law on bonds against one defendant with an action in equity to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance against the other defendant, is effectually effaced by an order of court dismissing the action as to the equitably charged defendant.

Minnesota Co. v Hannan, 215-1060; 247 NW 536

Improper joinder in probate. One who files a claim for a simple money demand against the estate of a deceased may not join in the probate proceedings actions against other parties for the same claim for which the estate is alleged to be liable.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Misjoinder of parties—appealable order. The action of the court in overruling a motion to set aside an ex parte order making movant a party to a pending action is appealable, the motion being based on the ground of misjoinder of parties.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-961; 256 NW 681

Decisions reviewable—orders to strike and dismiss. An order overruling a motion to strike a pleading and to dismiss parties because of the improper joinder of actions and of party defendants is appealable.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Ruling on motion as adjudication. Whether a ruling sustaining a motion to strike a pleading on the ground that it improperly joins causes of action and party defendants constitutes (in the absence of an appeal) a final adjudication in the further progress of the cause, quaere.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Misjoinder of corporate parties. On appeal from an order overruling a motion to strike on ground that there was misjoinder of a principal corporation and its subsidiary, where question to be determined was whether the corporate entity of the subsidiary could be disregarded because it was so organized, controlled, and conducted as to make it a mere instrumentality of the principal corporation, such question being one of fact determinable only after a hearing of the evidence, the supreme court would not decide the matter on basis of the pleadings.

Wade v Broadcasting Co., 227-427; 288 NW 441

VII NONJOINER—PROCEDURE

Venue—domicile and residence of parties—venue in quo warranto. The district court of one county of a judicial district, in duly authorized quo warranto proceedings in said county involving the rival claims of two parties to the office of district judge, may acquire jurisdiction of both parties even tho one of them is a nonresident of the county of suit and is sole defendant in the county of his residence in a proceeding in quo warranto involving the same office.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

Appeal and error—harmless error—denial of right to implead. In an action on the bond of an administrator, the surety should be granted the right to implead the surety on another bond given by the administrator; but a refusal is nonprejudicial when the rights of the respective sureties as between themselves are in no manner adjudicated.

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533

Defendant by implication. A third party who is not a party defendant in an action legally submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court by directing the actual defendant to appear for and on behalf of said third party and to protect his interest.

Davis v Agri. Soc., 208-957; 226 NW 90

10973 United interest.

Joint payees. The presumption that joint payees of a promissory note, and of a mortgage securing the same, are equal, must yield to evidence establishing the actual interest of each. So held in the settlement of an estate.

In re Morrison, 220-42; 261 NW 436

Money advanced on joint representations—suing jointly. Where money is invested with several persons representing themselves to be jointly interested in a hemp-production scheme, such joint promoters may be sued jointly, notwithstanding one of them asserts that he was not in fact so interested, because he is estopped from denying his interest.

Smith v Secor, 225-650; 281 NW 178

Action by owner—insurer and mortgagee not necessary parties. In an automobile owner's damage action against a street railway, wherein defendant pleads a general denial and alleges that plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and wherein interrogatories attached to defendant's answer disclose that plaintiff's loss had been partly settled through insurance, and when defendant then alleges that a bank holds a mortgage on plaintiff's automobile, and moves the court to bring in the insurer and the mortgagee-bank as parties, such motion was properly overruled.

Caligiuri v Railway, 227-466; 288 NW 702

10974 One suing for all.

Right of taxpayer to question municipal action. A plaintiff has no standing to enjoin a city from entering into a contract for the construction of an electric lighting system, to be paid for by special assessments, unless he alleges and proves that, in some specified way, he will be adversely affected by such proposed contract: e. g. (1) that he owns property which will be specially assessed; or (2) that he is a taxpayer, and must contribute to the improvement fund from which payment of a deficit must be made.

Donovan Co. v Waterloo, 211-506; 231 NW 499

Right of taxpayer. The statutory discretion of the board of supervisors to enter into an agreement with legally reorganized and approved banks, with reference to the county's deposits in said banks, cannot be questioned by a taxpayer except on proof of fraud or arbitrary abuse of said discretion.

Pugh v Polk County, 220-794; 263 NW 315

Bondholders (?) or trustees (?). When trustees for a bondholder have, under the terms of the bonds, the exclusive right to maintain an action for the protection of the bondholder, the latter may not maintain such action, and thereby convert himself into a trustee, on the naked allegation, in substance, that the trustees will, because of partiality, be less aggressive in prosecuting such action than the bondholder.

McPherson v Sec. Co., 206-562; 218 NW 306

One suing for all—ratification—effect. A member of a fraternal order may not maintain an action against a former officer of the order to recover, on behalf of the order, money belonging to the order and expended by said officer for unauthorized purposes, when the governing body of the order has formally and explicitly ratified such expenditures.

Outing v Plum, 212-1169; 235 NW 559

When demand on corporation unnecessary. Demand on an incorporated fraternal order to institute an action against a former officer of the order to recover money belonging to the order and unlawfully expended by such officer, is not a condition precedent to the commencement of such action by a member of the order, when the record reveals the fact that such demand if made would have been met by a pre-emptory refusal.

Outing v Plum, 212-1169; 235 NW 559

10975 Joint and several obligations.

Suretyship generally. See under §11577

Joint liability—right to sue either or both. If two parties be liable for a conversion, plaintiff may sue either or both.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Joint wrongdoers—attorney fees for defending. When joint wrongdoers jointly and severally employ attorneys to defend themselves, in an action for damages consequent on the joint tort, the one who pays the attorney fees may enforce contribution from all the other co-defendants.

Licht v Klipp, 213-1071; 240 NW 722; 1 NCCA(NS) 419

Concerted action without conspiracy. Joint liability may exist without allegation or proof of conspiracy. So held where there was allegation and proof of concerted action by several persons with common intent and purpose.

Baumchen v Donahoe, 215-512; 242 NW 533

Parties not in privity. An agent who procures contracts for his principal may not hold a subsequently formed corporation liable for his commission, even tho the agent's contract was with a person who subsequently became an officer of the corporation, and even tho the subsequently formed corporation carried out the contracts so obtained.

Heinen v Monument Co., 206-198; 220 NW 62

Notice—coparties. In an action by a municipality against the receiver of an insolvent bank and its surety to obtain a preference in the payment of the municipal deposit, an appeal from the decree granting the prayer on the plea of both plaintiff and the surety will be dismissed when no notice of appeal is had upon the surety.

Independent Dist. v Bank, 204-1; 213 NW 397

Joint contract. A contract wherein two parties, for one and the same consideration, agree to pay to another party a named sum in stated proportions, is a joint contract.

Lockie v Baker, 206-21; 218 NW 483

Joint and several (?) or several only (?). Whether a contract is joint or several must be determined by the terms thereof viewed in the light of the attending circumstances, and the practical, mutual construction, if any, placed thereon by the parties.

Shively v Mfg. Co., 205-1233; 219 NW 266

Licht v Klipp, 213-1071; 240 NW 722

Joint note-makers. A joint action against two alleged joint signers of a promissory note presents no suggestion of a misjoinder of parties.

Greenland v Carter, 219-369; 258 NW 678

Joint purchase—liability. Parties who enter into a joint mutual agreement to purchase land, and induce the vendor to accept the note and mortgage of one of them, with the assurance that the financial responsibility of all is behind the deal, all become personally liable for the indebtedness, and especially so when such has been the interpretation of the transaction by all the parties.

Bond v O'Donnell, 205-902; 218 NW 898; 63 ALR 901

Party defendants—foreclosure of mortgages. In an action to foreclose a mortgage, it is allowable to join as defendants (1) the maker of the promissory note, (2) the payee-indorser in blank, and (3) all assumptors of the mortgage.

Hansen v Bowers, 208-545; 223 NW 891

Action on note—failure to join surety—effect. In an action on a promissory note, the surety is a proper, but not necessary, party defendant.

Clapp v Wallace, 221-672; 266 NW 493

Liability of surety—joint benefit obligation—proportionate liabilities. As between themselves on a joint obligation, each person is a principal as to his own share of the debt or acts and a surety as to the shares or acts of the others.

Clindinin v Graham, 224-142; 275 NW 475

Money advanced on joint representations—suing jointly. Where money is invested with several persons representing themselves to be jointly interested in a hemp-production scheme, such joint promoters may be sued jointly, notwithstanding one of them asserts that he was not in fact so interested, because he is estopped from denying his interest.

Smith v Secor, 225-650; 281 NW 178

Action on bond—prior sureties. Defendant in an action on a guardian's bond has no right to demand that a surety on a prior bond given by the guardian be made a party defendant on the theory that the defendant has a right to demand contribution from such prior surety.

Brooke v Bank, 207-668; 223 NW 500

Motor carriers—action on bond. A party injured in person and property by the operation of a motor vehicle carrier may bring his action directly against the carrier and the statutory surety on the bond filed with the board of railroad commissioners, even tho no service is had on the carrier, and even tho the bond provides, in effect, for an action against the surety in event the injured party first obtains a judgment against the carrier and fails to collect thereon.

Curtis v Michaelson, 206-111; 219 NW 49; 1 NCCA (NS) 336

Loss on fidelity bond—recovery by surety. In action against a person covered by a fidelity bond, to indemnify plaintiff, as surety, for a loss sustained because it executed the bond, a direct evidentiary conflict precludes a directed verdict for plaintiff.

Fidelity Deposit Co. v Ryan, 225-1260; 282 NW 721

Automobile indemnity policy—right of injured party. When the owner or operator of a motor vehicle has insured his liability for damages consequent on the operation of his vehicle, an injured party may not sue directly on the policy which indemnifies the wrongdoer—the insured—until he has obtained a judgment against the wrongdoer—the insured—and until an execution on the judgment has been returned unsatisfied (§8940, C., '31). There is one exception to this statutory rule, to wit: When the policy is one obtained by a motor vehicle carrier as a mandatory statutory condition precedent to obtaining a certificate to operate as such carrier, an injured party may maintain an action on the policy when service of notice of suit cannot be had on the carrier within this state (§5105-a26, C., '31 [§5100.26, C., '39]).

Ellis v Bruce, 215-308; 245 NW 320

Rights and remedies of surety—agreement to indemnify. A written agreement in an application for a surety bond by two duly appointed referees in partition to the effect and in the language of "we hereby agree" to indemnify said surety for any damage suffered by him because of said bond, is jointly and severally binding on both principals even tho one of them received no part of the funds covered by the bond and was guilty of no personal failure to account.

Indemnity Ins. v Opdycke, 223-502; 273 NW 373

Conformity to process and pleading—absence of any issue. The court may not decree who is principal in a transaction and who is surety, and render a personal judgment in favor of the surety and against the principal for sums paid by the surety, when the original notice and petition are silent as to such matters, and when there is no other pleading which prays such relief.

Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

Contractual prerequisites—burden of proof. In an action against a husband and wife on a promissory note signed only by the husband, and involving the wife on a theory that both were engaged in a joint adventure for which the money was used, liability of the wife may be predicated only upon a joint adventure contract, either express or implied, and plaintiff has the burden to prove the existence of such contract.

Valley Bank v Staves, 224-1197; 278 NW 346

Joinder of "separable controversy". The liability of several insurance companies which were members of an association which insured plaintiff's property against loss by fire presented a "separable controversy", and when plaintiff under the statute joined the several defendants in a single action, it did not create a joint liability so as to preclude a nonresident defendant from removing cause from state to federal court.

D. M. Elev. Co. v Grain Assn., 63 F 2d, 103

Relief notwithstanding partial failure of recovery. A subcontractor on a public improvement who, in an equitable action, establishes a contract right of recovery against the principal contractor is entitled to judgment accordingly, notwithstanding the fact that, because of his noncompliance with the statute, he is denied recovery, either against the surety for the principal contractor, or against the municipality, or against the undistributed funds in the hands of the municipality.

Zeidler Co. v Ryan, 205-37; 215 NW 801

Cross-examination — whole of writing — admissibility. A surety who denies in toto the execution, delivery, and consideration of the promissory note in question, but sees fit to cross-examine his co-defendant principal with reference to a letter written by the principal to the payee with reference to said denied matter, may not complain of the reception in evidence of said letter as a part of his own cross-examination.

Granner v Byam, 218-535; 255 NW 653

Remedies of creditors — pleading — prima facie sufficiency. A prima facie cause of action against guarantors is presented by a pleading based on an instrument which purports to reveal a principal debtor and a guaranty of the promise of such debtor and an allegation that the debtor has defaulted.

Foundation Press v Bechler, 211-1217; 233 NW 666

10976 Adjudication.

See under §11567

10979 Service.

Director general of railroads. Service of an original notice on a delivering carrier did not, under the war emergency act, bring the director general of railroads into court as a representative of the initial carrier.

Dye Co. v Davis, 202-1008; 209 NW 744

10980 Liability of joint carriers.

Damage to privately owned car—liability. An action by a shipper to recover of an initial carrier damages to the shipper's own car which had been delivered to the said carrier, fully loaded, for transportation to a connecting carrier, and injured by the connecting carrier while returning the car to the initial carrier, cannot be maintained in the absence of some showing as to the contract or arrangement governing the return of the car.

Bott Bros. Co. v Railway, 215-16; 244 NW 679

10981 Necessary parties.

Discussion. See 21 ILR 644—Interpleader—scope of relief

Unallowable cross-petition. In an action of quo warranto against a particular claimant to the office, brought, under authorization of the court, in the name of the state on the relation of a private party, the defendant will not be permitted to cross-petition against a third party claimant to the same office, and thereunder bring said third party into the proceeding for an adjudication of his right to the office.

State v Murray, 217-1091; 252 NW 556

Necessary parties — school district. In an action to determine which of two school districts embraces certain land, both districts are absolutely necessary parties.

Whitmer v Board, 210-239; 230 NW 413

Foreign guardianship — personal judgment unallowable. A nonresident minor may, in a proper case, be made a party to litigation in this state, by service in this state on the foreign guardian, but such service will not confer jurisdiction on the court to enter a personal judgment against the minor.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-474; 255 NW 670

Absence of necessary parties. The court will not construe a testamentary trust or a deed in the absence of necessary parties.

Windsor v Barnett, 201-1226; 207 NW 362

Fay v Smiley, 201-1290; 207 NW 369

Certiorari. On certiorari to review the action of fence viewers, the party who initiated the proceedings is not a necessary party.

Sinnott v Dist. Court, 201-292; 207 NW 129

Bail bond—necessary parties. A bail bond will not be reformed when the defendant on whose behalf the bond was given, and who signed it, is not before the court.

State v Kronstadt, 204-1151; 216 NW 707

Harmless error—denial of right to implead. In an action on the bond of an administrator, the surety should be granted the right to implead the surety on another bond given by the administrator; but a refusal is nonprejudicial when the rights of the respective sureties as between themselves are in no manner adjudicated.

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533

Supersedeas bond—action—parties plaintiff. The various obligees in a supersedeas bond given on appeal from a decree quieting title to different tracts of land in different parties are all proper and necessary parties in an action on the bond to recover rents during the period covered by the bond.

Bigelow v Ins. Co., 206-884; 221 NW 661

Order of court — noncompliance — effect. The fact that an order of court that certain parties be made parties to an action was not fully complied with is of no consequence when it appears that said order was superfluous.

Harris v Randolph, 213-772; 236 NW 51

Interpleader as remedy. The pre-code equitable action of "interpleader" is available to an insurer who is faced by different, mutually hostile claimants to the amount due under the policy, which amount the insurer admits less deduction provided by the policy. And said insurer will be entitled to an injunction restraining the institution or further prosecution against him of separate actions on the policy by said warring parties.

Equitable v Johnston, 222-687; 269 NW 767; 108 ALR 257

Recovery of unpaid legacy—bringing in parties. In an action by a testamentary legatee against an executor to recover an unpaid legacy, the executor, who has already distributed the estate and wishes to bring a third party into the action for recoupment purposes, must, at least, allege that said third party has received some portion of the estate in question.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-961; 256 NW 681

Title—nonpermissible adjudication. When, in the settlement of an estate in probate, a contract of sale of land belonging to the estate is fully consummated by payment and deed, and the sale and conveyance duly approved by the court as by contract required, the purchaser, who is an entire stranger to the estate except as such purchaser, is not a proper, necessary or permissible party to a proceeding in said probate court, instituted by the residuary legatee, to set aside the probate order approving said sale and conveyance.

Reason: The probate court cannot, even in piecemeal, adjudicate the validity of the title of said purchaser.

In re Doherty, 222-1352; 271 NW 609

Eminent domain—bringing in necessary parties. In eminent domain proceedings on appeal from the award of the sheriff's jury, the court may permit the appellant landowner to amend, and bring in, and join equitable issue of ownership as to a portion of the property involved, with a stranger to the proceedings, and to try out such issue prior to trying out the issue of damages.

McCall v Hy. Com., 217-1054; 252 NW 546

Defect of parties in re objections to guardian's report. A guardian, after purchasing a residence property for his ward at a price authorized by the court, paid the vendor a trifling part of the contract price and obtained a deed from the vendor to the ward who thereafter for years remained in undisturbed possession of the property. The guardian in a later report credited himself with the full amount of the contract price. Later, the deception being discovered, the ward filed objections to the report. The guardian dying, his administrator appeared in re said objections.

Held, the court was in error in establishing a claim in favor of the ward and against the guardian's estate in the amount of the credit improperly taken by the guardian, on condition that the ward reconvey the property to the unpaid vendor,—that the court was per se without jurisdiction to adjudicate said controversy in the absence of said unpaid vendor as a party to said proceedings.

In re Bennett, 221-518; 266 NW 6

Notice of appeal—mortgagor as adverse and necessary party. A titleholder who did not assume a prior mortgage on the property and who appeals from an order in foreclosure appointing a receiver must serve notice of appeal on the mortgagor, as an adverse and necessary party, inasmuch as a personal judgment was rendered against mortgagor in the foreclosure.

Hoffman v Bauhard, 226-133; 284 NW 131

Notice of appeal—administrator failing to serve all objectors—dismissal. Notice of appeal from a judgment sustaining objections to an administrator's final report must be served on all heirs objecting to the report, and a failure will result in a dismissal of the appeal.

Kelley's Est. v Kelley, 226-156; 284 NW 133

Necessary parties—tax sales injunction. An injunction restraining tax sales of all property against which special assessment certificate holders had liens was erroneous insofar as it deprived certificate holders, who were not parties to the action and over whom the court had no jurisdiction, of their right to have the property sold to pay the special assessments.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Impressing unpaid warrant on excess assessment—necessary parties. Where two counties, by contract between both boards of supervisors and the contractors, issued warrants for construction of an intercounty drain and one county had a balance remaining from its assessments after paying all its drainage warrants but the other county after exhausting all funds from its assessments still owed outstanding unpaid warrants, an action in equity by an assignee of one of the unpaid warrants of the latter county to impress a trust for the amount of his warrant on the excess balance of the assessment in the former county, cannot be maintained against the former county alone because the other unpaid warrant holders and the landowners who paid the excess assessment are necessary parties.

Straub v Board, 223-1099; 274 NW 84

Insurer and mortgagee not necessary parties. In an automobile owner's damage action against a street railway, wherein defendant pleads a general denial and alleges that plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and wherein interrogatories attached to defendant's answer disclose that plaintiff's loss had been partly settled through insurance, and when defendant then alleges that a bank holds a mortgage on plaintiff's automobile, and moves the court to bring in the insurer and the mortgagee-bank as parties, such motion was properly overruled.

Caligiuri v Railway, 227-466; 288 NW 702

Death of party without substitution. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

10982 Public bond.

Execution and delivery in foreign state. A statutory bond which is executed and delivered in a foreign state for the performance of a contract in this state will be construed in accordance with the laws of this state when such was the intention of the parties, as shown (1) by the nature of the transaction, (2) by the subject matter, and (3) by the attending circumstances.

Philip Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Construction—law governing. A statutory bond executed in a foreign state and delivered in this state will be construed under the laws of this state.

Philip Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Unallowable limitation on liability. A statutory bond which is given for the express purpose of securing public deposits in a bank may not be limited in liability to less than the liability called for by the statute; and any such attempt will be deemed nugatory, even tho such bond is approved by the public governing board.

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

Bank as beneficiary. An instrument in writing, tho addressed to the superintendent of banking, entered into by the stockholders of a bank in order to avoid an impairment of the capital stock of the bank, wherein the stockholders "guarantee the said bank against loss" in a named amount on certain bills receivable, is a contract of indemnity to the bank; and the bank may maintain an action thereon, its acceptance of the instrument being presumed.

In re Prunty, 201-670; 207 NW 785

Successive actions. A recovery on a statutory bond by one beneficiary constitutes no bar to an action by another beneficiary to the extent of the unexhausted penalty of the bond.

Philip Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Motor carriers—action on bond. A party injured in person and property by the operation of a motor vehicle carrier may bring his action directly against the carrier and the statutory surety on the bond filed with the board of railroad commissioners, even tho no service is had on the carrier, and even tho the bond provides, in effect, for an action against the surety in event the injured party first obtains a judgment against the carrier and fails to collect thereon.

Curtis v Michaelson, 206-111; 219 NW 49; 1 NCCA(NS) 336

Indemnity against loss—"charging off" item of loss—effect. The act of a bank in "charging off" on its books an item of loss in no manner affects the right of the bank to proceed against a party who has legally agreed to indemnify the bank against such loss.

In re Prunty, 201-670; 207 NW 785

Indemnity against impairment of bank capital—consideration. An agreement by the stockholders of a bank with the state superintendent of banking that the former will indemnify the bank (a third party) against loss on certain bills receivable, needs for its support no consideration moving from the bank to the indemnitors. Sufficient consideration is found in the interest of the stockholders in preserving the bank as a going concern and in preventing an impairment of the bank's capital.

In re Prunty, 201-670; 207 NW 785

Surety's answer—effect. In mandamus action by county treasurer to obtain salary warrant where county board of supervisors answered, alleging indebtedness on part of treasurer to county for which set-off was claimed, and where county board brought treasurer's surety into the action as a cross-defendant, held, allegation in surety's answer, indicating that shortage in treasurer's office was due to the embezzlement by a third party, was not binding on board in view of its affirmative allegation that treasurer was indebted to the county.

I THE RELATION GENERALLY

Discussion. See 13 ILR 463—Nature of partnership; 15 ILR 186—Partnership as entity

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held to establish a partnership in the buying and farming of land.

Hull v Padgett, 207-430; 223 NW 154

Pleading—general allegation and general denial—effect. A general allegation of partnership capacity met by a general denial justifies the court in treating the partnership as existing, especially when there is evidence of the existence of such partnership.

Jordison v Jordison Bros., 215-938; 247 NW 491

Unsupported issue of partnership. In an action of replevin for two articles, of which plaintiff was the absolute owner of one and the holder of a chattel mortgage on the other, defendant's issue of partnership is properly rejected when supported only by a showing that the parties had temporarily shared equally in the net earnings of the two articles.

Dieter v Coyne, 201-823; 208 NW 359

The relation—agreement—evidence. An actual or real partnership cannot exist except through an express or implied agreement containing all the elements of a partnership. Evidence held quite insufficient.

Citizens Bank v Scott, 217-584; 250 NW 626

The relation—profit and loss. Principle reaffirmed that an agreement to share in profits and losses is of the essence of a partnership.

Tracey v Judy, 202-646; 210 NW 793

The relation—fundamental essentials. Principle reaffirmed that, aside from ostensible partnerships, there can be no partnership except by agreement of the parties, and unless there exists, expressly or impliedly, an agreement for the sharing of losses as well as profits.

Farmers & M. Bank v Anderson, 216-988; 250 NW 214

The relation—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held wholly insufficient to establish a partnership relation.

DeLong v Whitlock, 204-701; 215 NW 954

Relation nonexistent—operation of bank. Where probate court set aside to decedent's widow a private bank which was thereafter operated for many years by her son, who received none of the profits thereof, held, evidence did not establish partnership as between the son and his mother. Hence, son's trustee in bankruptcy could claim no interest in said bank.

Duckworth v Manning's Estate, (NOR); 252 NW 559

Partnership—the relation. The fact that a party furnished much of the capital with which a partnership did business, took an active part in the business of the partnership, shared in the profits thereof, and when the partnership was merged into a corporation received a substantial block of the corporate stock, does not necessarily show that he was a partner in the partnership.

Smith, etc. v Hollingsworth, 218-920; 251 NW 749

Nonpartnership tho sharing profits. Where it is contemplated that a private unincorporated bank will be reorganized by incorporating the business (apparently in the same name as the private bank) and where stock in the contemplated incorporation is subscribed for, paid, and issued in a name identical with that of the private bank, and where the plans for incorporation are later wholly abandoned, the subscribers do not become partners in the private business when they never intended such relation, or held themselves out as such partners, or as having any interest in said bank; and this is true even tho said private bank continues for several years to pay said subscribers annual dividends out of its earnings.

Kinney v Bank, 213-267; 236 NW 31

Employee (?) or partner (?). One who has no control over the management of a business, and makes no contribution thereto except his personal services, and has no interest therein except to receive a portion of the profits thereof as compensation for his services, is an employee and not a partner.

Butz v Hahn Co., 220-995; 263 NW 257

Opinion evidence—conclusion in re partnership. The question whether an association of individuals constitutes a partnership calls for a legal conclusion.

DeLong v Whitlock, 204-701; 215 NW 954

Substituting or joining partners. Whether individual members of a partnership should be joined as defendants, or substituted for the partnership, in a suit brought against the partnership, under this section, is a question for the state court to decide and is cognizable in the federal courts only so far as it may affect the right to remove the suit from the state court.

McLaughlin v Hallowell, 228 US 278

Joint adventure. The requisites of an ordinary contract, and of a contract of joint adventure, as to form and validity, are substantially the same.

Smith, etc. v Hollingsworth, 218-920; 251 NW 749

Fundamental essentials of relationship. The partnership relation is predicated on mutual consent and is evidenced by the terms of the contract, the conduct of the parties, and the

I THE RELATION GENERALLY—concluded circumstances surrounding the transaction. In action to dissolve partnership involving joint farming operations, evidence held insufficient to show that a partnership existed.

Criswell v Criswell, 225-1219; 282 NW 337

Partnership and trust—same property but different parties. A trust deed and a partnership agreement, altho executed at the same time, cannot be construed together, when the parties thereto and the purposes thereof are not the same.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 224-1323; 278 NW 631

Unsustained verdict—evidence. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to sustain a jury finding that defendant was a partner, and, as a consequence, that the trial court properly set aside the verdict and ordered a new trial.

Spurway v Milling Co., 207-1332; 224 NW 564

Contract—construction. A contract which simply provides that, on the happening of certain conditions, the parties will enter into a partnership agreement cannot be deemed, in and of itself, to constitute such agreement.

Ayres v Nopoulos, 204-881; 216 NW 258

Release of surety—identity of partnership and corporation. A bona fide corporation which is engaged in one business and a bona fide partnership which is engaged in a different business may not, even in equity, be deemed identical—one and the same entity—even tho the corporate stock of the corporation is owned entirely by the partnership entity and by the individual partners, and even tho the individual partners of the partnership constitute the board of directors of the corporation. So held on the plea that a contract of the corporation worked a change in a former contract of the partnership, and thereby released the surety.

Weitz v Fidelity Co., 206-1025; 219 NW 411

Family partnership—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence reviewed in an action to dissolve a partnership, and held that the attempts of both a mother and son to exclude the other from a claimed partnership with the husband and father were not sustained by the evidence, and that each had a third interest in said partnership.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

Incorporation denied by state—partnership formed. Promoters of a corporation are liable to an investor for money received as the agreed purchase price for stock in a corporation, even tho the failure to deliver stock occurred because the state denied the right to incorporate, and they are not relieved by a partnership agreement, signed by the investor, who nowhere waives nor abandons the agreement for delivery of the corporate stock.

Smith v Secor, 225-650; 281 NW 178

Not a joint enterprise between driver and passenger. A joint enterprise is not shown between a driver of an automobile and his passenger when the passenger neither drove the car at any time nor exercised any control over its operation, but merely directed the driver which way to go so that the driver might view a team of mules which he was interested in buying.

Churchill v Briggs, 225-1187; 282 NW 280

II FIRM NAME, CAPITAL, AND PROPERTY

Identity of partnership and corporation. A bona fide corporation which is engaged in one business, and a bona fide partnership which is engaged in a different business may not, even in equity, be deemed identical—one and the same entity—even tho the corporate stock of the corporation is owned entirely by the partnership entity and by the individual partners, and even tho the individual partners of the partnership constitute the board of directors of the corporation. So held on the plea that a contract of the corporation worked a change in a former contract of the partnership, and thereby released the surety.

Weitz v Fidelity Co., 206-1025; 219 NW 411

Signing chattel mortgage—effect. The mere signing of a chattel mortgage in a partnership name does not, in and of itself, estop the signer from denying that the mortgaged property is partnership property.

Citizens Bank v Scott, 217-584; 250 NW 626

III MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES OF PARTNERS

Assumption of mortgage debt. An agreement between partners in their contract of partnership to pay mortgages on land to which they have taken title "subject" to existing mortgages, will be deemed an agreement solely for their own mutual benefit, and not for the benefit of third parties, to wit, said mortgagees.

Bankers Trust v Knee, 222-988; 270 NW 438

Sharing of losses. Principle reaffirmed that an express or implied sharing of losses as well as profits is an essential element of an ordinary partnership.

Butz v Hahn Co., 220-995; 263 NW 257

Extent of interest—presumption. The presumption, in the absence of a contrary showing, that partners hold equal interests in the partnership is, of course, rebuttable.

In re Talbott, 204-363; 213 NW 779

Trading partnership. A trading partnership and the individual members thereof are liable on a promissory note and on extensions thereof executed in the partnership name for borrowed money which, without the knowledge of the lender, was obtained by one partner for the purpose of discharging his individual obligation to another partner.

Cresco Bank v Terry, 202-778; 211 NW 228

Action by partner on segregated matter. While a partner may maintain an action on a segregated partnership matter which has been put in the form of a promissory note in which the partner is both payee and one of several partner-makers, nevertheless, as contribution must be finally worked out when the partnership matters are finally settled, the amount of recovery by the partner-payee may, by agreement, be limited to such proportion of the amount found due on the note as the defending partner has interest in the partnership.

In re Talbott, 200-585; 203 NW 303

Dismissal of partnership suit. A partnership action cannot be legally dismissed by one half of the partners against the wishes of the remaining half of the partners when such dismissal would be materially injurious to the partnership.

Reason: Partners cannot legally dismiss such an action unless they have authority so to do.

Lunt Co. v Hamilton, 217-22; 250 NW 698

Primary liability of partner. A partnership debt is the individual, primary debt of each of the individual members of the partnership.

Boeger v Hagen, 204-435; 215 NW 597; 55 ALR 562

Williams v Schee, 214-1181; 243 NW 529

Members as tenants in common. Principle reaffirmed that the legal title to partnership realty is held by the partners as tenants in common.

Bankers Trust v Knee, 222-988; 270 NW 438

Partner's right to compete with partnership. The members of a partnership may validly authorize a partner to privately engage in the same business for the transaction of which the partnership was formed, and in such cases no partner will be permitted to lay claim, on behalf of the partnership, to any profits accruing under such private contracts,—no rights of third parties being involved.

Anderson v Dunnegan, 217-672; 250 NW 115

Mortgage on interest of joint adventurer. Lands belonging to a joint adventure become individually owned land when the joint adventurers execute and place of record an instrument which specifically states the fractional individual ownership of each in the land. It follows that a subsequent mortgagee who in good faith relies on such record cannot be detrimentally affected by equities arising out of the joint adventure and existing between the joint adventurers.

State Bank v Calvert, 219-539; 258 NW 718

Losses—joint liability. Two or more parties to a contract of joint adventure who agree to pay one half of resulting losses, if any, are each individually liable for said one half, tho no provision is made for any division among themselves.

Fitzhugh v Thode, 221-533; 265 NW 893

Property rights of joint adventurers. Property and profits of joint adventure after division between participants therein become separate and distinct property of joint adventurers. However, joint adventurer sustaining loss through transactions involving mortgage received in settlement and division of property and profits held not entitled to contribution.

Scott v McEvoy, (NOR); 228 NW 16

Agreement for lien—construction. A partnership agreement which provides that it shall stand as security for all money "advanced to said business" by the second party, and all indebtedness of the first party to the second party, does not embrace the right to a lien for money not shown to have been "advanced to said business", nor for money advanced subsequent to the said agreement.

Reilly v Woods, 216-419; 249 NW 381

Personal property of other partner—liability. In equity action to subject junior partner's personal property to payment of judgment against senior partner, evidence held insufficient to show that former acted fraudulently or that he was estopped as against senior partner's judgment creditors to claim such personal property.

Creston Bk. v Wessels, (NOR); 232 NW 496

Rights and liabilities as to third persons—burden of proof. A partnership is not bound by the act of one partner in consenting to, and acquiescing in, an act which is subversive of the very purpose of the partnership, unless he who seeks so to bind the partnership establishes the fact that all the partners consented to, and acquiesced in, said act.

Hartford Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 263 NW 269

Foreign law—comity. The law of a foreign state, which holds parties who are interested as shareholders in an unincorporated association, personally and individually liable as partners for the debts of such association even tho said parties, to the knowledge of the creditor, specifically contracted against such liability, will not be enforced by the courts of this state.

Reason: Said foreign law is directly contrary to the law of this state.

Farmers & M. Bank v Anderson, 216-988; 250 NW 214

Contract—construction. A contract provision to the effect that if income fails to pay expenses of a joint adventure, "at the end of two years and thereafter", the deficiency shall

III MUTUAL RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES OF PARTNERS—concluded

be carried in named proportions by named parties, "after the two years have expired", means, that if, during the first two years, income fails to pay expenses, thereafter the named parties are liable therefor, in said proportions, whether said deficiency occurred during said two years or thereafter, in view of other contract declarations that should any loss be incurred by reason of said adventure, such loss shall be borne by said parties in said proportions.

Fitzhugh v Thode, 221-533; 265 NW 893

Disputed question of partnership business. In equity action to recover judgment against members of alleged partnership and to impress trust on certain funds in satisfaction of such judgment, where existence of partnership is shown, judgment against the members is proper, irrespective of disputed fact question as to whether parties were engaged in partnership business.

Maybaum v Bank, (NOR); 282 NW 370

IV RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES AS TO THIRD PERSONS

Application of assets to liabilities. The assets of a partnership must be applied to partnership obligations before any part thereof can be legally applied to the obligations of the individual partners.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

Negotiable notes taken in name of individual partner. Partners may, in good faith, validly agree between themselves that promissory notes belonging to the partnership shall be taken in the individual name of the partner who is in active charge of the business, and that the individual indorsement of the notes when rediscounted shall bind the partnership.

Second N. Bank v Millbrandt, 211-1299; 235 NW 577

Action for goods sold—dissolution at time—jury question. Whether plaintiff suing partner for goods sold had knowledge that partnership was dissolved at time of sale held question of fact for jury.

Harlan Co. v Saylor, (NOR); 228 NW 6

Conflicting assignments by partnership and partners—priority. An unrecorded assignment by a partnership to a partnership creditor of a lease of real estate and of the rents accruing thereunder is superior in right to a subsequent recorded assignment by one of the partners to his individual creditor of the individual partner's one-half interest in said rents; and especially is this true when the partnership creditor holds a mortgage which pledges the rents of said land.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

Ratification of nonpartnership obligation—unsupported instruction. Instruction authorizing a finding of ratification by partners of a nonpartnership obligation is fundamentally erroneous when there is insufficient evidence to support a finding of ratification.

Maxfield v Heishman, 209-1061; 229 NW 681

Judgment lien on partner's interest—limitation. A judgment decreeing to a judgment-creditor a lien on the uncertain interest of the judgment-debtor in a private banking partnership in process of voluntary liquidation must not exceed the interest which the said partner would be entitled to after final partnership accounting.

Anthony v Heiny, 215-1347; 244 NW 902

Presumption—note executed by partnership—erroneous instruction. An instruction to the effect that one receiving the promissory note of a partnership may presume that it was executed in the course of the partnership business, without any statement of the legal effect of the payee's knowledge that the note represented the individual debt of one of the partners (as shown by the record), is fundamentally erroneous.

Maxfield v Heishman, 209-1061; 229 NW 681

Application of partnership assets and assets of partners. Where partnership property and the individual property of all the partners are in the hands of the partnership receiver, a creditor whose claim is against the partnership because of a partnership transaction, and also against an individual partner because the partner has individually guaranteed the claim, may have the assets so marshaled that he will share in the partnership property along with the other partnership creditors, and then resort to the individual property of the guaranteeing partner to the exclusion of partnership creditors.

Iowa-D.M. Bk. v Lewis, 215-654; 246 NW 597

Levies on realty. Holding reaffirmed that §11680, C., '35, applies solely to levies on personal property.

Bankers Trust v Knee, 222-988; 270 NW 438

Judgment against partners only—effect. A joint, personal judgment solely against the members of a partnership, on a partnership transaction, does not constitute a judgment against the partnership itself.

Bankers Trust v Knee, 222-988; 270 NW 438

Transfers and transactions invalid—right of insolvent partnership to prefer creditor. A partnership engaged in the operation of a private bank may, in good faith, validly pledge promissory notes belonging to it as collateral security for its outstanding obligations, even tho the partnership is insolvent.

Second N. Bank v Millbrandt, 211-1299; 235 NW 577

V RETIREMENT AND ADMISSION OF PARTNERS

Retirement of partners—notice. A partner in a private bank, on a sale of his interest in the bank, need not give notice of such sale to one who already has full knowledge thereof.

Fidelity Co. v Bank, 218-1083; 255 NW 713

Unincorporated association—members. An association name may be regarded as designating the individuals which it represents, altho the members own no proportionate share of its property. Such members have joint use and enjoyment of the property, which right ceases upon termination of membership.

Lamm v Stoen, 226-622; 284 NW 465

Bulk sales—nonapplicability of statute. The bulk sales act has no application to a sale of a partnership interest to a copartner.

Peterson Co. v Freeburn, 204-644; 215 NW 746

Mortgage on partner's interest—priority. A recorded chattel mortgage executed by an incoming partner to an outgoing partner on the one-half interest in the partnership property and on future additions thereto, and representing the purchase price of said interest (all with the consent of the old partner who remains in the business), is superior in right to the subsequently contracted debts of the new partnership.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 204-739; 212 NW 573; 217 NW 448; 54 ALR 527

Remedies of creditors—attacking conveyance—conditions precedent. The surety on an administrator's bond who has paid the shortage of the administrator consequent on the failure of the private bank in which the estate funds were deposited, may not, in an action to recoup his loss, question a conveyance by a former partner in the bank when, prior to the giving of the bond, the said partner had, in good faith and to the full knowledge of the administrator, sold his interest in the bank at a time when the bank had ample funds with which to pay the administrator's deposit.

Fidelity Co. v Bank, 218-1083; 255 NW 713

VI DISSOLUTION, SETTLEMENT, AND ACCOUNTING

Services of partner—value. In action for accounting and dissolution of partnership, reasonable value of services of partner managing garage held properly fixed at $30 per week.

Boldrini v Beneventi, (NOR); 240 NW 680

Right of retiring partner. Articles of partnership which provide (1) for "an undistributed profit" account, as working capital and to pay off loans, (2) for the retirement of partners at their option, and (3) for payment to a retiring partner, in addition to his investment, of profits "accrued to date of effective withdrawal, figured on basis of going concern," entitle a retiring partner to his pro rata share of the undistributed profit account when there are no outstanding loans.

Slaughter v Burgeson, 203-913; 210 NW 553

Allowance of interest to partner. It is not necessarily a badge of fraud that partners, in settling their affairs, allowed one partner interest on funds advanced individually by said partner for the benefit of the firm.

Cass v Ney, 209-17; 227 NW 512

Accounting—laches. An action to establish a partnership of some 35 years standing and for an accounting thereunder is not barred by laches when the plaintiff moved with reasonable promptness after his interest was questioned.

Hull v Padgett, 207-430; 223 NW 154

Joint adventures—dissolution in equity. Assuming, arguendo, that proof that a joint undertaking had proven to be a losing venture is sufficient to justify an order of dissolution, by a court of equity, of a joint undertaking, yet evidence reviewed and held insufficient to show such fact.

Green v Kubik, 213-763; 239 NW 589

Joint adventure. A contract of joint adventure, which is wholly silent as to its duration, is terminable at will by a notice of any one of the parties to all other parties, especially when such other parties make no objection to such termination, and the right to an accounting necessarily follows.

Fitzhugh v Thode, 221-533; 265 NW 893

Excess advancement by partner—priority of claim. The excess capital advanced to the partnership assets by one of two partners will, when such was the original intention of the partners, be treated as the debt of the partnership, and, on dissolution, will be ordered paid out of the partnership assets after the payment of other firm debts, even tho the partner making the advancement holds, for the excess, the promissory note of the partner not making the advancement. It follows that such right belonging to the partner making the advancement will be deemed superior to a mortgage of the other partner's partnership interest.

Hart v Smiley, 210-1004; 229 NW 139

Appointment of receiver—who may not object. Alleged partners in an alleged private banking business may not object to the appointment of a permanent receiver for the business on the prayer of those who are admittedly partners when the order of appointment in no manner disturbs complainants in their property and specifically withholds adjudication of the issues whether complainants are partners.

Tillinghast v Courson, 215-957; 247 NW 252

VI DISSOLUTION, SETTLEMENT, AND ACCOUNTING—concluded

Undiscovered assets. A partner may recover his proportionate share of partnership assets discovered subsequent to a dissolution and settlement, and collected by a copartner.

Power v Wood, 200-979; 205 NW 784; 41 ALR 1452

Dissolution—by order in equity. A partnership or joint adventure for a definite contract term will not be cancelled and terminated by a court of equity before the time fixed by the contract on the ground that such quarreling and bickering between the parties have resulted as to render inadvisable the further continuance of the undertaking, when the applicant for the cancellation and termination of the contract is the only one of the parties who has done any quarreling or been guilty of any bickering.

Green v Kubik, 213-763; 239 NW 589

Partners' incompatibility—dissolution for best interests. A partnership dissolution is proper on application of one of the partners, when the record is replete with disputes, bickerings, and litigation between partners and it is obvious that they can no longer work in harmony.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 224-1323; 278 NW 631

Estoppel of joint adventurer. One of two joint adventurers may not wholly exclude his co-adventurer from all fruits of a successful consummation by claiming that the undertaking was accomplished solely through his efforts when he has never rescinded the contract with his co-adventurer, claims no damages because of a breach of contract by the co-adventurer, and when he has to some material extent profited from the funds and efforts of his co-adventurer.

O'Neil v Stoll, 218-908; 255 NW 692

Death of partner—effect. Principle reaffirmed that the death of a partner, generally speaking, works a dissolution of the partnership.

Williams v Schee, 214-1181; 243 NW 529

Surviving partners—burden of proof. In an accounting between the representative of a deceased partner and the surviving partners, the burden of the accounting is upon the surviving partners.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Evidence—insufficiency. Record reviewed, and held quite insufficient to support the theory that the defendant estate was liable for the claim sued on because contracted in the liquidation of a partnership of which the deceased was a member.

Williams v Schee, 214-1181; 243 NW 529

Corporate stock—book value. In an accounting between surviving partners and the representative of a deceased partner, the surviving partners will not be heard to say, on appeal, that there is no evidence of the actual value of the stock of a corporation owned wholly by the partnership, when said partners did not, in the trial court, question the "book" value of said stock.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Liquidation—corporation as part of assets. Where a corporation is the exclusive property of a partnership, its affairs are subject, in an accounting between the surviving partners and the representatives of a deceased partner, to investigation, correction, and review.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Unallowable credits. In an accounting between the representative of a deceased partner and the surviving partners, who continued the partnership business as tho no dissolution had occurred, attorney fees in the accounting proceedings, and personal, family, and household expenses of the surviving partners are properly rejected by the referee as a credit.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Salary of surviving partners. In an accounting between the representative of a deceased partner and the surviving partners, who continued the partnership business as tho there had been no dissolution, an allowance of a credit by the referee for salaries of the surviving partners in a sum less than actually drawn by them will not be disturbed, in the absence of any evidence of the value of said services.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Rejecting salary of superintendent. In an accounting between the representative of a deceased partner and the surviving partners, who continued the partnership business as tho there had been no dissolution, the refusal of the referee to allow as a credit the salary of a superintendent (the surviving partners devoting their entire time to the business) will not be disturbed when there is no evidence of the value or necessity of such services.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Disallowance of unsupported depreciation in assets. In an accounting between the representative of a deceased partner and the surviving partners, who continued the business as tho no dissolution had occurred, the rejection by the referee of a claimed depreciation in the assets of the partnership is proper when there is no evidence to support such depreciation.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

VII SURVIVING AND DECEASED PARTNERS

Mistake—effect. The filing of a claim against an estate will not estop the party from abandoning such claim and instituting an action for a partnership accounting with deceased when such latter proceeding was his sole allowable remedy.

Hull v Padgett, 207-430; 223 NW 154

Action to recover specific property—conditions precedent. A surviving partner cannot maintain an action at law against the representative of a deceased copartner to recover plaintiff's share of specific partnership property appropriated by the deceased partner, in the absence of proof that the partnership affairs have been settled and all partnership debts paid.

Dolan v McManus, 209-1037; 229 NW 687

Accounting—proper form of judgment. Where an accounting proceeding instituted by the widow of a deceased partner, in order to determine her dower interest in the partnership property, is tried on the mutual theory that her interest, when determined, should be impressed as a trust on the entire partnership property, a judgment in rem against the partnership property should be entered, and not a personal judgment against the surviving partners.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Death of partner—liability of estate. Where a deceased was a member of a banking partnership, a plaintiff seeking to hold the estate liable for financial transactions with the bank must definitely establish that the obligation sued on was created before the death of the deceased.

Williams v Schee, 214-1181; 243 NW 529

Implied authority to continue partnership. Where a deceased had been a member of a banking partnership, an order in probate allowing a claim against the estate consequent on a defalcation of a former employee of the bank, cannot be deemed an implied authorization to the administrator to continue the partnership after the death of the deceased.

Williams v Schee, 214-1181; 243 NW 529

Property passing to survivor—contract. Tenants in common of real estate who embark their holdings, and the personal property used in connection therewith, in a partnership, violate no rights of heirship or testamentary rights of their brothers and sisters by including in their partnership contract an agreement that upon the death of one of the partners the survivor shall become the absolute owner of all the partnership property.

Conlee v Conlee, 222-561; 269 NW 259

Continuing partnership—conditions. An administrator, without an authorizing order of court, has no power to bind the estate by continuing a partnership of which the deceased was a member or by creating a new partnership. And under such circumstances the exparte statements or pretenses of the surviving partners are quite inconsequential.

Williams v Schee, 214-1181; 243 NW 529

Right to close up business—compensation. Surviving partners have a right to continue the partnership business for the purpose of winding up its affairs, but in so doing they become trustees for the heirs of the deceased and must exercise the utmost good faith. Failure to exercise such good faith deprives them of all right to compensation for time and labor expended in closing up the business.

Anderson v Droge, 216-159; 248 NW 344

Allowance and payment of claims—belated filing—insufficient showing of delay. A depositor in a private bank will not be permitted to file and prosecute his claim against the estate of a deceased partner, after the lapse of four years after notice of administration was given, on a showing that the executor soon after his appointment believed the bank as continued by the surviving partners was insolvent, and stipulated for the possible filing, at a later period, by the surviving partners, of a contingent claim against the estate, said stipulation not being shown to be fraudulent and not deceiving said depositor; and especially is this true when the attempt of the depositor to file his claim was evidently an afterthought.

Anthony v Wagner, 216-571; 246 NW 748

Accounting and settlement—right to disregard administration. Notwithstanding the fact that in the administration of an estate the tangible interest of the deceased in a partnership has been sold to the surviving partners under order of court, and the proceeds accounted for, and the administrator discharged, the heirs may maintain, against the surviving partners, an action for an accounting as to the share of said deceased in elements of partnership property other than the tangible property, such, for instance, as profits, and going concern and good-will values. And especially is this true when the surviving partners fraudulently concealed said latter elements of value at the time of the administration aforesaid.

Anderson v Droge, 216-159; 248 NW 344

Continuance of business—effect. Where surviving partners, upon the death of a partner, continue to carry on the partnership business as tho there had been no dissolution, those interested in the share of the deceased partner have the right, on an accounting, to elect to take the profits realized from the continued use of their property.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Accounting for good will. When, on accounting, the heir of a deceased partner is given the benefits of the profits derived from the utilization of the good will of the business, no further charge should be made against the surviving partners for such good will.

Anderson v Droge, 216-159; 248 NW 344

VIII ACTIONS

Discussion. See 11 ILR 193—Jurisdiction over partnerships, nonpartnership associations, and joint debtors

Action to enforce partner's liability—waiver. The liquidating receiver of a private bank, when appointed with power to bring action against the partners on their individual liability, may, with the approval of the court, and notwithstanding the objections of a creditor, settle and compromise the liability of a partner when the creditor has appeared in the receivership proceedings and secured the allowance of his claim.

Reason: The creditor, by submitting himself to the jurisdiction of the receivership court, irrevocably elects his remedy.

Ellis v Bank, 218-750; 251 NW 744

Creditor—right of action. A creditor of a private banking partnership may maintain an action against one of the partners only, to set aside, as fraudulent, a conveyance by said partner, and to subject said property to the satisfaction of his claim.

Biddle v Worthington, 216-102; 248 NW 301

Authority to authorize suit against partners. In an action for the dissolution of an insolvent partnership, a court of equity has power to authorize its receiver to bring suit against the partners to collect the funds necessary to pay the debts of the partnership in full.

Bierma v Ellis, 212-366; 236 NW 402

Election of remedies. A creditor of an insolvent banking partnership who, under an authorizing order of court, files proof of his claim with a duly appointed and unquestioned receiver of the partnership will not be permitted thereafter to maintain an independent action against the partners until after the receivership has been closed, when the receiver, under an order of court, has already instituted an action against all the partners to collect the amount necessary to settle the indebtedness of said bank; and especially is this true when a multiplicity of suits is avoided.

Bierma v Ellis, 212-366; 236 NW 402

Accounting—right of action. The principle that a partnership cannot sue a partner until there has been an accounting has no application to an action by a partnership against parties who have an interest in partnership assets but are not partners, which action, by amendment, is converted into an action for accounting and transferred to the equity calendar.

Lunt Co. v Hamilton, 217-22; 250 NW 698

Judgment creditors and mortgage holders—proper intervenors. In an action between copartners for receivership and accounting, holders of mortgages and deficiency judgments against land purchased in name of some partners for partnership purposes held proper intervenors.

Heger v Bussanmas, (NOR); 232 NW 663

Abatement of authorized action. A court having ordered its receiver in partnership to begin action against the partners, in order to collect funds with which to pay creditors, has discretionary power, after such action has been commenced, and on a showing that the receiver has in his possession a very large amount of unliquidated partnership assets, to abate the action until such assets are liquidated.

Day v Power, 219-138; 257 NW 187

Chattel mortgage to secure partner's debt. A chattel mortgage by a partner on his undivided chattel interest in the partnership to secure his individual debt becomes absolute when it is made to appear that the partnership is free of debt.

Schwanz v Co-op. Co., 204-1273; 214 NW 491; 55 ALR 644

Dismissal of partnership suit. A partnership action cannot be legally dismissed by one half of the partners against the wishes of the remaining half of the partners when such dismissal would be materially injurious to the partnership.

Reason: Partners cannot legally dismiss such an action unless they have authority so to do.

Lunt Co. v Hamilton, 217-22; 250 NW 698

Claim belonging to some of the defendants. In an action against a partnership and against the individual partners thereof, a claim for necessities furnished by the partnership to plaintiff and her husband (who was a party defendant) is not pleadable as a counterclaim, because said claim does not belong to all the defendants.

Jordison v Jordison Bros., 215-938; 247 NW 491

Review de novo—irrespective of failure to file brief. An action in equity to recover a judgment against the members of an alleged partnership and to impress a trust on certain funds is triable de novo on appeal and the supreme court will examine the record despite parties' failure to furnish brief and argument.

Maybaum v Bank, (NOR); 282 NW 370

10985 Seduction.

Promise of marriage by married man. A promise of marriage will not support a charge of seduction when the promisee knows that the promisor is a married man.

Gardner v Boland, 209-362; 227 NW 902

Minor's loss of time—medical expenses. A minor, in an action for damages for her seduction, may not recover for loss of time, nor for the expense of medical service.

Gardner v Boland, 209-362; 227 NW 902

Illicit sexual relations with persons other than defendant. Testimony tending to show that plaintiff in an action for damages for seduction was, shortly after her claimed seduction, guilty of illicit sexual intercourse with men other than the defendant, is admissible on the issues (1) whether plaintiff was truthful in her testimony that she had never had such intercourse except with defendant, (2) whether she was under promise to marry the defendant, and (3) whether defendant was the father of plaintiff's child.

Gardner v Boland, 209-362; 227 NW 902

Instructions—misleading terms. The expression "yielding to the embraces" is not synonymous with "sexual intercourse"; likewise, the expression "wrongful acts" is not synonymous with the term "seduction".

Gardner v Boland, 209-362; 227 NW 902

Unchastity per se. Lewd and lascivious conduct on the part of a female at the very time of her alleged seduction may per se establish her unchastity.

Schultz v Schultz, 203-910; 210 NW 94

10986 Injury or death of minor child.

Emancipation by desertion. A parent who deserts and abandons his minor child thereby emancipates him, and may not maintain an action based on a plea of loss of services consequent upon the wrongful killing of the child.

Lipovac v Iowa Co., 202-517; 210 NW 573

Alienation of affections. A mother may not maintain an action for damages for the alienation of the affection for her of her minor son, in the absence of an allegation that she has thereby been deprived of the custody and services of said minor.

Pyle v Waechter, 202-695; 210 NW 926; 49 ALR 557

Measure of damages—interest on funeral expenses. The measure of damages for wrongful death, while not including reasonable funeral expenses, does include simple interest at a legal rate on such expenses for the time intervening between the premature death and the time when, in the ordinary course of events, the deceased would have died.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

10989 Prisoner in penitentiary.

Appeal bond—late appearance. When a criminal defendant who had posted an appeal bond did not appear after affirmation of the conviction, because he was incarcerated in a federal penitentiary, but was shortly thereafter brought to the court through the efforts of the surety on his bond, and was then taken to the state reformatory, all at the cost of the surety, there was delivery of the defendant into court so that the state could not recover on the bond.

PARTIES TO ACTIONS §§10986-10990

State v Thomason, 226-1057; 285 NW 636

Convict as defendant in civil action—non-right to attendance in court. In death action against imprisoned convict, motion for production of defendant in court held properly overruled.

Collings v Gibson, (NOR); 220 NW 338

10990 Actions by state.

Discussion. See 9 ILB 225—Recovery of moneys paid out by government officials

Rights and remedies of taxpayer. A taxpayer may, when the proper state official refuses to act, maintain, on behalf of the state, an action to recover state funds received by the defendant in violation of the constitution of the state.

Wertz v Shane, 216-768; 249 NW 661

Estoppel against state. When the state allows an estate to be fully settled, and the executor to be duly and finally discharged without the payment of an inheritance tax, and makes no application to open up the accounts of the executor, it may not thereafter enforce the statutory personal liability of the executor to pay said tax. This is true on two fundamental propositions, to wit: (1) That the court, being prohibited by statute from discharging the executor until the tax is paid, must be presumed, in entering such discharge, to have found that no tax was due, and (2) that the state, by designating the court as its special statutory representative, will not be permitted to deny such presumption.

In re Meinert, 204-355; 213 NW 938

Actions—waiver. The state, after reimbursing a county for the loss of county deposits in an insolvent bank, may validly prohibit an action in its own favor on the depository bond to which it was legally subrogated by the process of reimbursing the county.

State v Bartlett, 207-208; 222 NW 529

Negligence not imputable to state. Negligence and laches of public officers in the handling of state funds are not imputable to the state; for instance, in an action to recover from a drawee-bank the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement of a check drawn by a county treasurer against state school funds on deposit with said drawee, it is no defense that the county treasurer was negligent in drawing or delivering the check, or that county officers generally were negligent in not making early discovery of the forged indorsement, and notifying the drawee accordingly.

New Amst. Cas. Co. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Writ of prohibition—state as plaintiff. An original action in the supreme court, for a writ of prohibition directed to a district court and prohibiting further action by said latter court in private actions pending therein, may be brought in the name of the state ex rel its attorney general; and especially is this true when said private actions arose out of the proceedings instituted by the state through the governor thereof.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

County attorney's powers—reinstatement of action. A county attorney who, in his official capacity, brings an action in behalf of the state, and later, by amendment, changes said action to a personal action by himself and others, may not, after he ceases to be such officer, reinstate said action as one on behalf of the state. Nor may the court reinstate said action as an official action in the name of said ex-county attorney. Especially is this true when the official county attorney objects to such procedure.

State v Power Co., 214-1109; 243 NW 149

Labor union injunction. Where a grave situation existed in the locality at the time, the state had the right to be made a party to proceedings involving an injunction violation by labor union officials, by filing a petition incorporating by reference the affidavits of the plaintiff's petition and the injunction upon which it was based, when the state did not seek different and distinct remedies from that asked by the plaintiff.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Continuance. A continuance requested on the ground that the state had been made a party to proceedings involving the violation of an injunction by labor union officers was properly refused when the petition of the state alleged the same matter and sought the same relief as the petition of the plaintiff.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

10990.1 Actions against state.

Action against state. Allegations in a petition to quiet title to land and to obtain a writ of possession for said land, (1) that defendants constitute the entire membership of the state board of control,—an agency of the state,—and (2) that said defendants are wrongfully withholding said possession from plaintiff, furnish no sufficient basis for the holding that said action, in truth and fact, is against the state in its sovereign capacity.

Iowa Co. v Board, 221-1050; 266 NW 543

Special appearance—nondeterminable matters. Whether an action is, in truth and fact, an action against the state in its sovereign capacity, is a question which cannot be tried out on a special appearance—the petition not showing on its face that the action is such.

Iowa Co. v Board, 221-1050; 266 NW 543

Aerial navigation statutes—governmental functions—nonliability in performance. The statutory-prescribed rules of the state governing aerial navigation (§8338-c7, C., '35 [§8338.20, C., '39]) have no application to the state in its sovereign capacity, nor to its governmental agencies, nor to the officials of said agencies when exclusively engaged in performing the duties of said agencies.

De Votie v Cameron, 221-354; 265 NW 637

Cross-petition defense—state as proper party—belated objections. In an action to dissolve a mining corporation, question whether state, not being stockholder or creditor of the mining corporation, was proper party to make defense to a cross-petition, such question not having been raised in the trial court, may not be raised for the first time and reviewed on appeal.

State v Fuel Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Action against agent of state. An employee of a state hospital for the insane may not maintain an action for salary against the executive officer thereof, as such action is, in effect, an action against the state.

Cross v Donohoe, 202-484; 210 NW 532

Enjoining state highway commission. An action against the state highway commission to enjoin it from relocating a primary road, unaccompanied by any allegation of wrongful acts, is, in effect, an action against the state, and nonmaintainable.

Long v Highway Com., 204-376; 213 NW 532

State fair board. The Iowa state fair board is an arm or agency of the state and, therefore, not suable.

De Votie v Fair Board, 216-281; 249 NW 429

Prohibited condemnation. Injunction will lie against the members of the state highway commission to enjoin a prohibited condemnation of private property for highway purposes, even tho such commission is an arm of the state.

Hoover v Hy. Com., 207-56; 222 NW 438

10991 Nonabatement by transfer of interest.

Right to show ownership of claim. Upon the substitution of the actual owner of a promissory note sued on, in lieu of a plaintiff who had sued as indorsee for collection only, the substituted plaintiff should be permitted to show by written assignment, and irrespective of any consideration, that the note had been fully and formally retransferred to him.

Richardson v Clark, 202-1371; 212 NW 133

Transfer of title after action brought—effect. The fact that plaintiff after commencing an action on promissory notes transfers the title thereof does not prevent the prosecution of said action to judgment in the name of the original plaintiff.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 213-969; 236 NW 418

Belated substitution—discretion. In an action at law by a corporation to recover on a contract, the court has discretionary power during the actual trial and after the jury has been obtained and after some testimony has been introduced, to order plaintiff's assignee for the benefit of creditors to be substituted as plaintiff,—no actual prejudice to defendant being made to appear; and this is true even tho defendant was, of course, deprived of the privilege of examining the jurors relative to their relations to the said assignee.

Webster County Buick Co. v Auto Co., 216-485; 249 NW 203

Double liability of stockholders—nonassignability. The statutory "double liability" of a stockholder in an insolvent state bank to all the creditors of the bank is not of such nature that a sale or assignment thereof by the receiver, even under an order of court, will vest in the vendee or assignee the right to enforce such liability exclusively for his own use and benefit.

Andrew v Bank, 214-1339; 242 NW 62; 82 ALR 1280

Appeal—transfer of interest—effect. An appeal may not be dismissed on the ground that the appellant has transferred to another the subject matter involved in the appeal.

Union Ins. v Eggers, 212-1355; 237 NW 240

10991.1 Women—injury or death.

Preservation of accrued right. An action to recover damages for negligently causing the death of a married woman survives the repeal of the statute authorizing such action, and the measure of recovery in such cases is governed by the repealed statute, not by the measure of recovery provided in a later and substituted statute on the same subject.

Azeltine v Lutterman, 218-675; 254 NW 854

Husband's negligence not imputed to passenger-wife. The negligence of a husband in the operation of an automobile is not imputable to his wife who is riding with him as a passenger.

Hough v Freight Service, 222-548; 269 NW 1

Disabilities of coverture—tort action by husband or wife against other. The rule of the common law that neither the husband nor the wife may maintain an action against the other for damages consequent on the negligent or willful injuring of one by the other, is the law of this state,—not having been abrogated by anything contained in this section.

Aldrich v Tracy, 222-84; 269 NW 30

Wrongfully caused death of wife. In an action for the wrongfully caused death of a wife, the statutory power to allow "such sum as the jury may deem proportionate to the injury" is not an unbridled discretion. Evidence reviewed and held that a verdict of $10,000 was excessive to the extent of $4,000. The deceased was childless and illiterate, had accumulated no property, was a beet weeder for a small part of the year, at small wages, and also operated a boarding house, but whether at a profit did not appear.

Hanna v Central Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

Disabilities—torts during coverture. A wife may not maintain an action against her husband for damages consequent upon willful injuries inflicted upon her by her husband.

In re Dolmage, 203-231; 212 NW 553

Torts—fundamental laws govern liability. The fundamental and underlying law of torts is that he who does injury to the person or property of another is civilly liable in damages for the injuries inflicted.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

10996 Insane person.

Appointment of guardian—irregularities in petition—right to bring action. A petition by the wife of an inmate of a state hospital for the insane, asserting that she was the wife of the inmate who had property, and asking that she be appointed guardian, altho insufficient to meet the statutory requirements for a petition for the appointment of a guardian, was sufficient for the appointment of a temporary guardian, and when notice was accepted by the superintendent of the institution and the wife was appointed, she was at least a temporary guardian and, as such, could maintain an action in behalf of the incompetent.

Jensen v Martinsen, 228- ; 291 NW 422

10997 Defense by minor.

Unauthorized satisfaction of bequest. An order of the probate court authorizing an executor to discharge a cash bequest to a minor by transferring to the father of the minor as natural guardian a note and mortgage belonging to the estate, is wholly void when said order is entered without the appearance of any guardian, regular or ad litem, for the minor.

Irwin v Bank, 218-477; 255 NW 671

Guardian and ward—actions—prompt appointment during trial. No prejudicial error is committed when, after a trial has proceeded for some time, it develops that one of the defendants is a minor, a fact previously unknown to the court, whereupon the court promptly appoints the minor's attorney as his guardian ad litem, inasmuch as the minor's rights had been fully protected, since said attorney, being present all the time, was fully cognizant of the proceedings up to that point.

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

11000 Defense of insane person.

When judgment voidable only. A default judgment, even tho procured by fraud not going to the jurisdiction of the court, against an insane person on personal service, and without the appointment of a guardian ad litem, is not void, but voidable only.

Montagne v County, 200-534; 205 NW 228

Unknown insanity—effect. A judgment in foreclosure which was obtained by the holder in due course of the notes secured, and which has passed to foreclosure deed, will not be set aside on the ground that the defendant was at all times mentally incompetent and that the notes and mortgage were forgeries, (1) when neither the plaintiff nor the court had knowledge of such grounds, (2) when the defendant was personally served in the foreclosure and appeared by counsel and filed answer, and (3) when the defendant had never been adjudged to be insane, nor was he an inmate of a state hospital for the insane.

Engelbercht v Davison, 204-1394; 213 NW 225

Note and mortgage in hands of holder in due course. Neither a negotiable promissory note nor a mortgage given by the makers to secure the same, even tho the mortgage is on a homestead, is subject, when in the hands of a holder in due course, to the plea that the maker was insane at the time of the execution of such note and mortgage.

Farmers Ins. v Ryg, 209-330; 228 NW 63

General rule of liability. Persons of unsound mind will be held liable as to executed contracts when the transaction is in the ordinary course of business, when it is reasonable, when the mental condition was not known to the other party, and when the parties cannot be put in status quo.

Farmers Ins. v Ryg, 209-330; 228 NW 63

Guardian ad litem—when necessary—judgment—when valid. Every person is presumed sane until the contrary appears and unless an adult person appearing in court has been judicially declared insane, there is no requirement that a guardian ad litem be appointed to represent him, this being especially true where, not being confined, he appears by counsel and presents a defense, and a judgment against him will not be set aside.

Ware v Eckman, 224-783; 277 NW 725

Judgment against insane person—validity. The validity of a judgment obtained in a law action against an insane defendant is not affected by such insanity, or by fact that a guardian had been appointed for his property.

In re Simpson, 225-1194; 282 NW 283; 119 ALR 1208

11002 Interpleader.

Availability of remedy. The pre-code equitable action of "interpleader" is available to an insurer who is faced by different, mutually hostile claimants to the amount due under the policy, which amount the insurer admits less deduction provided by the policy. And said insurer will be entitled to an injunction restraining the institution or further prosecution against him of separate actions on the policy by said warring parties.

Equitable Life v Johnston, 222-687; 269 NW 767; 108 ALR 257

Prior adjudication—pleading prerequisite to proof. A prior adjudication must be pleaded before evidence thereof is admissible. Rule applicable to interpleaders.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Right to proceeds—change of beneficiary. The original beneficiary, interpleaded in an action on a fraternal insurance policy, acquires no vested interest in benefit as against the subsequent beneficiary designated as such in accordance with bylaws of insurer and statute of this state, notwithstanding insured member's agreement with such original beneficiary that she should remain beneficiary.

I NATURE OF STATUTORY LIMITATION

Construction—retroactive effect. A statute of limitation will be given retroactive effect only when it appears by express provision or necessary implication that such was the legislative intent.

Hinrichs v Locomotive Wks., 203-1395; 214 NW 585

Obligation of contracts—shortening limitation on action—constitutional condition. Principle reaffirmed that the legislature may constitutionally shorten the time within which an existing cause of action may be barred if a reasonable time is given for the commencement of an action before the bar takes effect.

Johnson v Leese, 223-480; 273 NW 111

Action against tax deed holder. When the owner of the fee title continued in possession with rights subservient to the rights of the tax title owner after land was sold for non-payment of taxes, and the owner's right to bring an action for recovery of the real estate was barred by a statute of limitations, one who claimed title under the owner was not entitled to succeed in an action to quiet title against the tax title owner.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

II WHAT LAW GOVERNS

Bar in foreign state—effect. Action on a promissory note executed in a foreign state is barred in this state when action is barred in said foreign state, even tho such promissory note was given in renewal and in lieu of a note executed in this state.

Martin v Martin, 205-209; 217 NW 818

Bar under foreign jurisdiction. Principle reaffirmed that the statute of limitation of the forum ordinarily governs, except where a foreign-accruing claim is fully barred by the law of the foreign country.

Williams v Burnside, 207-239; 222 NW 413

Federal court rule as applied to state statute. The rule in federal courts in equitable actions is that state statutes of limitations are not controlling but will be followed in application of the doctrine of laches unless the circumstances of the particular case are convincing that a shorter or longer period would be just.

Crawford Bank v Crawford County, 66 F 2d, 971

Mortgage on foreign land. A note and mortgage representing a loan on land in a foreign state, duly signed in a foreign state by a resident thereof, and forwarded to the payee in this state, is an Iowa contract insofar as the statute of limitation is concerned, when such forwarding and receiving were with the understanding that the payee would apply the amount of the loan in discharging a prior matured mortgage on the land, if in so doing payee would be assured of a first lien.

Andrew v Ingvaldstad, 218-8; 254 NW 334

National bank directors—violation of duty—state statute invoked—construction. State statutes of limitation apply and may be invoked by directors of national bank in respect to liability for violation of duty, but two-year limitation in respect to personal reputation, held, inapplicable under such circumstances. The plain, obvious, and rational meaning of statute is always to be preferred to any curious, narrow, hidden sense, and, in case of substantial doubt, longer rather than shorter period of limitation is to be preferred.

Payne v Ostrus, 50 F 2d, 1039

Note delivered in this state. When the payee of a promissory note prepares it in blank in this state and sends it to the proposed maker in another state without any specific direction as to the method or manner in which it is to be returned to the payee after being signed, delivery takes place only when the note reaches the hands of the payee in this state. It follows that the statute of limitation of this state governs such note.

In re Young, 208-1261; 226 NW 137

III CONSTRUCTION OF LIMITATION LAWS IN GENERAL

Doing equity notwithstanding statute. The full equitable titleholder of land held under a dry trust who asks equity to invest him with the full legal title must do equity to the extent of reimbursing the trustee for good-faith expenditures made by him at the request, or with the consent and acquiescence of the equitable titleholder in improving or preserving the property, even tho the trustee's claims for such expenditures are barred at law by the statute of limitations.

Warner v Tullis, 206-680; 218 NW 575

Accrual of action—plaintiff perfecting cause of action—exception to rule. While a cause of action does not accrue so as to start the statute of limitations running unless all the facts exist so that plaintiff can allege a complete cause of action, an exception occurs where the only act necessary to perfect the plaintiff's cause of action is one to be performed by the plaintiff and he is under no restraint or disability in the performance of such act.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Drafts—statute runs after reasonable time for presentment. Where no demand or presentment for payment of draft is made for over 19 years after its issuance, and where only person who could make due presentation was plaintiff-holder, the statute of limitations began to run after a reasonable time for presentment.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Laches—effect on law action. The doctrine of laches, in the absence of elements of estoppel, finds no application to an action at law.

Reinertson v Struthers, 201-1186; 207 NW 247

Accounts—interest items. In an action by a widow to establish a claim against the estate of her deceased husband based on an alleged oral contract of decedent to repay a loan of money made by appellant widow to decedent, prior to November 1, 1912, to which the statute of limitations was pleaded, held, mere posting of items of interest applicable to one individual transaction is insufficient to show a "connected series of transactions" so as to convert the matter into a "continuous, open, current account" under statute providing cause of action accrues on date of last item, as this means a connected series of transactions.

Leland v Johnson, 227-520; 288 NW 595

Action in 1923 to enjoin excessive assessment of 1919—no laches. Banks suing in 1923 to enjoin excessive levy in years 1919 to 1922 inclusive, held, not estopped by laches.

Munn v D. M. Nat. Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

Drafts — laches in presentment — action barred. An action to collect a draft is barred by the statute of limitations where no presentment for payment is made for over 19 years, on the theory that a creditor may not postpone the running of the statute by his own neglect or inaction.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Banking superintendent. The superintendent of banking in his acts as bank receiver is not a public officer within the meaning of a statute providing for a limitation on the time for bringing an action against a sheriff or other public officer.

Bates v Niles, 226-1077; 285 NW 626

Barred claims—when pleadable. Statutory principle reaffirmed that a debtor, when sued, may employ, as a set-off against plaintiff's demand, any claim which is barred by the statute of limitation, (1) provided that the debtor owned the claim when it became barred, and (2) provided that the claim was not barred when the demand sued on accrued.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

Right to offset barred claim. A bank may apply the deposit of a deceased depositor on the promissory note of the depositor to the bank, even tho such note is barred by the statute of limitation.

Merritt v Peterson, 208-672; 222 NW 853

Federal court rule as applied to state statute. The rule in federal courts in equitable actions is that state statutes of limitations are not controlling but will be followed in application of the doctrine of laches unless the circumstances of the particular case are convincing that a shorter or longer period would be just.

Crawford Bank v Crawford County, 66 F 2d, 971

National bank directors—violation of duty—state statute invoked. State statutes of limitation apply and may be invoked by directors of national bank in respect to liability for violation of duty, but two-year limitation in respect to personal reputation, held, inapplicable under such circumstances. The plain, obvious, and rational meaning of statute is always to be preferred to any curious, narrow, hidden sense, and, in case of substantial doubt, longer rather than shorter period of limitation is to be preferred.

Payne v Ostrus, 50 F 2d, 1039

Motion to re-tax costs—laches as bar. A delay of some six years on the part of a defendant in moving for a re-taxation of costs, held not such laches as to bar the motion, defendant having moved as soon as assured of the illegality in the taxation, and no one being materially prejudiced by the delay.

Wenstrand v Kiddoo, 222-284; 268 NW 574

Lost admission in writing reviving debt. An admittedly executed but lost written instrument providing for a payment on a real estate mortgage was an admission of indebtedness sufficient to revive the debt barred by the statute of limitations, since neither the amount nor the indebtedness need be specifically referred to, for if the natural and necessary inference from the writing is an admission of an unpaid indebtedness, it is sufficient.

Barton v Boland, 224-1215; 279 NW 87

Revival of contract—admission in writing. In an action by a widow to establish a claim against her deceased husband's estate based on an oral contract to repay to appellant widow a sum of money loaned to decedent prior to November 1, 1912, wherein it is shown by the record of entries in decedent's ledger and by checks signed and deposited by the decedent to joint savings account with the widow, that interest was computed on what purported to be a loan of $4,000, and even tho the statute of limitations had run, the conduct, circumstantial evidence, and admissions of the party to be charged sufficiently showed the existence of a contract so as to make applicable the statute providing for revival of contract by admission in writing.

Leland v Johnson, 227-520; 288 NW 595

Setting aside—limitation of actions—laches. A suit in equity by trustee in bankruptcy to set aside deed by bankrupt to husband on grounds of want of consideration, fraud, and failure to take possession of land, brought more than six years after recording of deed, is barred by laches under statute of limitations where only one creditor secured allowance of claim, which claim was based on note past due when deed was recorded.

Monroe v Ordway, 103 F 2d, 813

Statutory double liability repealed—limitation of action. After the effective date of Ch 219 of the 47th G. A., the act repealing the statutory double assessment liability on bank stock, a closed bank's receiver may not maintain against the executor and beneficiaries under the will an action to enforce the double liability as to stock issued prior to December 1, 1933, and formerly owned by decedent.

Bates v Bank, 227-925; 289 NW 735

Time of payment — marginal entry. A properly dated promissory note which fails to state, in the strict body thereof, any time for payment, is, nevertheless, for the purpose of a demurrer presenting the bar of the statute of limitation, payable at a fixed and definite date when, in the corner of the note and opposite the signature to the note, appear the words, "the term of five years".

Nylander v Nylander, 221-1358; 268 NW 7

IV RETROACTIVE OPERATION

Legislative intent. A statute of limitation will be given retroactive effect only when it appears by express provision, or necessary implication, that such was the legislative intent.

Hinrichs v Locomotive Wks., 203-1395; 214 NW 585

V CHANGE OR REPEAL OF LIMITATION

Shortening limitation on action—constitutional condition. Principle reaffirmed that the legislature may constitutionally shorten the time within which an existing cause of action may be barred if a reasonable time is given for the commencement of an action before the bar takes effect.

Johnson v Leese, 223-480; 273 NW 111

VI LIMITATION AS AGAINST GOVERNMENT, STATE, MUNICIPALITY, PUBLIC CORPORATION, OR OFFICERS

(a) IN GENERAL

Computation of period—accrual of right—official nonfeasance. The breach of official duty, and not the resulting damage, creates the cause of action making operative the statute of limitations, so where a recorder negligently omitted to index a chattel mortgage resulting in a subsequent mortgagee obtaining priority through lack of notice of first mortgage, the cause of action accrued at the time of such omission and an action against the recorder for this nonfeasance was barred, by this section, after three years.

Baie v Rook, 223-845; 273 NW 902; 110 ALR 1062

County claim for care of insane. When a county was not liable for the support of a person committed to a state institution as insane, and through the negligence and laches of its officials paid such support for about 14 years before objecting, the negligence was imputed to the county, and the bar of laches prevented a recovery for such expenditures from the county which should have paid, but the burden of continuing payments was on the other county from the time payments ceased.

State v Clay County, 226-885; 285 NW 229

Inapplicability—duration of lien. Tax sale of land for nonpayment of drainage assessments is not an action barred by statute of limitations, and the duration of a lien for such assessment or the time within which payment may be enforced is not limited by statute.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

Mandamus—when statute runs. The statute of limitation commences to run against an action of mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to levy an additional assessment to pay drainage warrants even tho the board had not levied or otherwise provided for the additional assessment to complete the fund from which the warrants are to be paid.

Lenehan v Drain. Dist., 219-294; 258 NW 91

Nonperformance of public duties. Mandamus to compel a public officer to perform a mandatory public duty is not barred by the lapse of any time.

Perley v Heath, 201-1163; 208 NW 721

(b) IN RE HIGHWAYS, STREETS, ALLEYS, AND PUBLIC GROUNDS

Public not barred. An action to oust an alleged franchise holder from public streets because of the invalidity of the alleged franchise, tho brought by the county attorney in quo warranto, cannot be barred by the lapse of time.

State v Munn, 216-1232; 250 NW 471

"Adverse possession" of highway. The term "adverse possession" is not employed in decisions relative to the abandonment of public highways in the technical sense which such term has acquired as a part of the statute of limitation, but rather in the sense of recognizing those antagonistic acts on the part of a landowner which, if unheeded by the public, will have evidentiary bearing on the issue of abandonment.

Clare v Wogan, 204-1021; 216 NW 739

Inadequate showing of abandonment. A duly established highway which constituted a link between other existing highways is not shown to have been abandoned by evidence that, about a year after the establishment, the landowner (who had petitioned for the highway) fenced in the part carved from his other lands, and held possession for some 15 years, and that the road had never been used, because the public officers had failed to bridge and grade impassable places thereon.

Clare v Wogan, 204-1021; 216 NW 739

Nonapplicability to nonaccepted street. In a quiet title action where land was dedicated but never accepted as street in unincorporated village, the rule that statute of limitations will not run against a municipality exercising a governmental function, does not apply.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

No title accrues from encroachment on highway. Encroachment by an adjoining landowner on an established public highway will not ripen into a title through any statute of limitations, doctrine of acquiescence, adverse possession, or estoppel—the establishment and maintenance of public highways being a governmental function.

Richardson v Derry, 226-178; 284 NW 82

"Nonuser" of highway. Nonuser of an established public highway is not, in and of itself, sufficient to establish a claimed abandonment of the highway, especially when the nonuser is caused by the failure of the public officers to promptly bridge or grade places otherwise impassable.

Clare v Wogan, 204-1021; 216 NW 739

Obstructions and encroachments on highway. Encroachments on a public highway in the form of fences or like obstructions furnish no basis for a legal right, howsoever long continued.

Dickson v Davis County, 201-741; 205 NW 456

Streets and alleys—estoppel to open. A city estops itself from asserting any right in and to a public alley when, knowing that a person has taken possession of such alley under a claim of right, it permits such person to remain in undisturbed possession under such claim for ten years, and to erect valuable improvements on such alley.

Page & Crane v City, 208-735; 225 NW 841

Torts—notice to municipality of injury—proof of service. Evidence of service of notice of injury in consequence of defective street, in order to prevent the attaching of the “three month” statute of limitation, held sufficient to justify submission to jury of the issue of such service.

Cavelier v Dumont, 221-1016; 266 NW 517

Trees in highway not property of adjoining owner. A property owner abutting and occupying a part of a highway has no rights in trees growing on such part of the highway, no matter how long his occupancy of the highway continued before public convenience and necessity required appropriation of the full highway width.

Rabiner v Humboldt Co., 224-1190; 278 NW 612; 116 ALR 89

Unallowable alteration in highway. A highway which was established substantially on a designated line, but which was actually opened and maintained by the public authorities and fenced by the various abutting property owners for more than a half century on a line variant from the established line, may not be summarily changed back to the established line and thereby made to embrace lands which were theretofore undisturbed.

Clarcken v Lennon, 203-359; 212 NW 686

VII LIMITATIONS AS AGAINST QUASI-PUBLIC CORPORATIONS

Waterworks sold to city—stockholder's action to establish interest barred. Where a waterworks was sold to a city, and a stockholder seeks to establish an interest in the waterworks property on the ground that the city took the property burdened with a trust for his benefit, the action was barred by statute of limitations where no effort to enforce claim against city was made during a period of more than 10 years after the sale.

Shaver v Des Moines, 227-411; 288 NW 412

VIII LIMITATION RUNS IN FAVOR OF PUBLIC

Public not barred by statute. An action to oust an alleged franchise holder from public streets because of the invalidity of the alleged franchise, tho brought by the county attorney in quo warranto, cannot be barred by the lapse of time.

State v Munn, 216-1232; 250 NW 471

Unaccepted platted street—applicability. Where parties claim land, dedicated in plat as a street but, not being accepted, never became a street, the public has no interest therein and the doctrine of adverse possession is applicable.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Streets—nonuser—adverse possession—estoppel. Tho a street be legally established, yet where (1) the municipality does not open up the street, or there is nonuser for the statutory period, and (2) private rights have been acquired by adverse possession, then abandonment may be presumed, the public estopped from asserting any rights therein, and public rights in street extinguished.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

IX PERSONS WHO MAY RELY ON LIMITATION

National bank directors—state statute invoked. State statutes of limitation apply and may be invoked by directors of national bank in respect to liability for violation of duty, but two-year limitation in respect to personal reputation, held, inapplicable under such circumstances. The plain, obvious, and rational meaning of statute is always to be preferred to any curious, narrow, hidden sense, and, in case of substantial doubt, longer rather than shorter period of limitation is to be preferred.

Payne v Ostrus, 50 F 2d, 1039

Inapplicable to tax sale for unpaid drainage assessments—duration of lien. Tax sale of land for nonpayment of drainage assessments is not an action barred by statute of limitations, and the duration of a lien for such assessment or the time within which payment may be enforced is not limited by statute.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

Failure to raise statute of limitations as defense in lower court—effect. A defense under statute of limitations not raised in lower court cannot be considered on appeal.

Estoppel. A party may not enter into an understanding with another to the effect that a claim shall remain in status quo, and abide the outcome of pending litigation in another action, and then plead the statute of limitation because of such waiting period.

Weitz v Guar. Co., 206-1025; 219 NW 411

Elements of estoppel. The maker of a promissory note cannot be held estopped to plead the statute of limitation in the absence of evidence of some act of omission or commission upon which the holder relied to his detriment.

King v Knudson, 209-1214; 229 NW 839

Nonestoppel by municipal corporations. The act of a city attorney in stating that he would not plead the statute of limitation against a proposed action against the city for an injury claimed to have been suffered because of a defective street will not estop the city from interposing said plea when the action is actually instituted. Whether the municipality could, under any circumstances, estop itself, quaere.

Welu v Dubuque, 202-201; 209 NW 439

Compromising barred claim. If parties have actually compromised a bona fide controversy between themselves relative to the claim of one of the parties, it is immaterial whether, at the time of the compromise, the claim in controversy was barred by the statute of limitation.

Marron v Lynch, 215-341; 245 NW 346

Delay induced by debtor. The fact that a debtor repeatedly requests time in order to investigate the claim made against him before paying it, and the fact that the creditor repeatedly acquiesces in such delay tho under no obligation so to do, will not estop the debtor, when sued, from pleading the statute of limitation which in the meantime has fully run because of said delays.

Bundy v Canning Co., 215-674; 244 NW 841

Enforcing unknown trust. A trust fund, created without the knowledge of the cestui que trust, in the form of a bank deposit in a national bank and carried on the books of the bank for many years and then dropped, may not, after the bank has become insolvent, a receiver appointed, its affairs liquidated, and its charter surrendered and cancelled, be enforced against a bank which took over certain assets of the old insolvent bank, and assumed certain of its obligations, not including, however, the trust fund in question.

Short v Bank, 210-1202; 232 NW 507

Laches and stale demands. Principle recognized that delay, without any showing of prejudice, in the prosecution of a claim in equity, for a period of time less than the statute of limitation, does not constitute laches.

Lutton v Steng, 208-1379; 227 NW 414

Pleading—sufficiency. A plea, in avoidance of the statute of limitation, to the effect that, while plaintiff city had full knowledge of its cause of action against defendant under an ordinance in the form of a contract, it relied, until the statute had run, on defendant's deliberately false representation that he had never accepted or agreed to said ordinance, is demurrable because presenting no legal basis for tolling said statute, there being no allegation as to diligence to discover the falsity of said representation.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

Right to corporate transfer of stock—laches—effect. Delay of some seven years, by a pledgee of corporate shares of stock, to enforce his right to have the stock transferred on the corporate stock records, will not bar the enforcement of said right when there are no unprotected rights of third parties intervening, and when the corporation has not been harmed by the delay.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

XI AGREEMENTS AS TO PERIOD OF LIMITATION

Statutory bonds. Whether parties to a statutory bond will be permitted by contract to specify the time before which, or after which, an action can be maintained, quaere.

Page County v Deposit Co., 205-798; 216 NW 957

Unreasonableness. A contract provision in an indemnity bond which requires the obligee to begin suit thereon before the amount of his recovery on the bond is determinable, is unreasonable, and therefore unenforceable. In such case, the general statute which limits actions applies.

Cook v Heinbaugh, 202-1002; 210 NW 129

Unreasonableness. A provision in a contract of insurance which prohibits the bringing of an action earlier than 60 days or later than 90 days after loss is unreasonable per se and void.

Page Co. v Deposit Co., 205-798; 216 NW 957

XII ACCRUAL OF RIGHT OF ACTION OR DEFENSE

Discussion. See 4 ILB 118—Accrual of cause of action

(a) ACCRUAL IN GENERAL

Amendment to petition—statute of limitations. An amendment to petition, setting up a new cause of action barred by the statute of limitations, may be stricken, but when both the original petition and the amendment plead the same cause of action in general allegations of negligence, such amendment may not be stricken.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Claims—statute of limitations—continuing liability accruing after death—peculiar circumstances. For the liability of a decedent accruing against his estate on account of ownership of a bank, an action thereon, commenced within five years after the closing of the bank and appointment of a receiver, is neither barred by the general statute of limitation nor by the one-year limitation on filing claims against an estate, when peculiar circumstances concealed the estate's liability thereon.

Daniel v Best, 224-1348; 279 NW 374

Computation of period—claim payable "on or before" death. An oral contract to pay for services, payable "on or before" the death of the promisor, matures at his death and therefore is not barred by the statute of limitations, even tho the claim was running for over 20 years.

Gardner v Marquis, 224-458; 275 NW 493

Defect of notice of commencement of action—noninterruption of running of limitations. In action to recover erroneous refund of income tax, summons addressed to marshal only and commanding him to summon named defendants to appear on specific date "to answer to a complaint filed by the United States of America" was defective as not addressed to defendants, not stating cause of action, and not describing consequences of failure to defend, and hence did not interrupt running of limitations as of date of service.

U. S. v French, 95 F 2d, 922

Premature commencement—instructions. Record reviewed, and held to properly present defendant's plea of premature commencement of the action.

Zabawa v Osman, 202-561; 210 NW 602

School tuition deemed open account. In an action to recover tuition accumulating yearly during the period from 1930 to 1937, the court properly held that the portion of the claim accruing in the period from 1930 to 1932 was not barred by a five-year statute of limitations, since a further statute made a cause of action on a continuous, open, and current account accrue on the date of the last item therein.

School Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

Statute of limitations not started by insufficient tax return. The mere filing of a federal income tax blank containing, not the required information, but only a notation across the face that the corporation was "hopelessly insolvent" and in the hands of a receiver, does not constitute a legal return, as will start the statute of limitations operating against the income tax assessment.

State v American B. & C. Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

Plaintiff perfecting cause of action—exception to rule. While a cause of action does not accrue so as to start the statute of limitations running unless all the facts exist so that plaintiff can allege a complete cause of action, an exception occurs where the only act necessary to perfect the plaintiff's cause of action is one to be performed by the plaintiff and he is under no restraint or disability in the performance of such act.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Drafts—demand necessary within limitation period. Before an action can be maintained against a drawer upon a check, demand for its payment must be made upon the drawee bank, but the demand cannot be postponed indefinitely and must be made within the 10-year limitation period.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Drafts—laches in presentment—action barred. An action to collect a draft is barred by the statute of limitations where no presentment for payment is made for over 19 years, on the theory that a creditor may not postpone the running of the statute by his own neglect or inaction.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Cashier's check as bill of exchange—demand unnecessary—action accrues at making—barred after 10 years. The holder of a cashier's check, certain in amount, containing no provision respecting demand and not in the nature of a certificate of deposit, has a right to sue thereon at any time from and after its issuance. Treated as a bill of exchange, presentment and demand for payment are not necessary to start running the statute of limitations. Therefore, after 10 years from its issuance, a right of action thereon is barred.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Deposit certificate—action accrues only after demand. Makers of notes, acceptors of bills of exchange and issuers of certificates of deposit are charged on the instruments from their inception, and presentment to the maker, or acceptor is unnecessary; but, as to the issuer of a certificate of deposit, there is an imputed agreement that before the depositor may sue the bank thereon, actual demand is necessary to mature the debt.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Certified check as certificate of deposit—action accrues only after demand. The act of a bank in certifying a check, at the request of the holder, creates a new obligation on the part of the bank to that holder, and the check then becomes in legal effect an ordinary certificate of deposit for the holder. Being such, an action thereon does not accrue until it is presented for payment.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Negotiable instrument—"reasonable time" for presentment—primary and secondary liability. The "reasonable time" clause of §9531, C., '35, negotiable instruments law, applies only to persons secondarily liable on the instrument. It has no application in determining what is a reasonable time for presentment, where such step is only preliminary to the enforcement of a remedy against a party primarily liable.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Agreement to pay debt out of insolvent estate. A contract to pay a debt out of dividends on a claim against an insolvent may not be said to be barred when the dividends declared have been so applied and when the estate of the insolvent is still pending.

Flack v Linden Bank, 211-6; 228 NW 667

Flack v Linden Bank, 211-15; 228 NW 670

(b) ACCRUAL IN RE REAL PROPERTY

Contribution by co-tenant. The cause of action in favor of one tenant in common against his co-tenant for contribution for the outlay in discharging an incumbrance on the common property accrues instantly upon payment of the incumbrance and is barred in five years.

Lawrence v Melvin, 202-866; 211 NW 410

Damages—original or continuing. Where a bridge which spanned a natural watercourse or drain across a public highway was removed and replaced by the public authorities with a solid and permanent earth embankment, the injury or hurt to nearby lands, from flood water consequent on said change in the highway, must be deemed original damages which mature upon completion of the embankment—or at least on the occurrence of substantial damages consequent on the change. It follows that the maintenance of said embankment may not be legally questioned by action commenced after the lapse of five years from the maturity of said damages.

Thomas v Cedar Falls, 223-229; 272 NW 79

Injury to property—trespass. The cause of action in favor of a mortgagee and against a third party for wrongfully entering upon the mortgaged premises and removing gravel therefrom, and thereby impairing the mortgage security, accrues when the gravel is removed—when the actual injury is inflicted—not when the mortgagee discovers said injury.

New York Ins. v Clay County, 221-966; 267 NW 79

Mistake tolling statute—burden of proving nondiscovery on pleader. A mortgagee, seeking to reform his mortgage to correct an error in the real estate description and escape the statute of limitations on the ground of mutual mistake which tolled the statute until discovered, has the burden of showing he did not discover the error until a time within five years before bringing action, and without which proof the statute operates as a bar.

Beerman v Beerman, 225-48; 279 NW 449; 118 ALR 997

Mortgage assumed by grantee—effect of extension. When grantees of property accepted a deed by which they assumed a mortgage debt on the property, the statute of limitations began to run from the time of the acceptance of the deed, but the grantees were still liable after the 10 years when they had extended the time of maturity.

Lincoln Ins. v McKenney, 227-727; 289 NW 4

Municipal interference with ingress and egress. An action by a property owner against a city for damages consequent on a long-delayed but finally completed street improvement which, while somewhat various in its operations, is one project, and which substantially destroys the owner's means of passing to and from his property, does not accrue until the improvement is completed.

Ashman v Des Moines, 209-1247; 228 NW 316; 229 NW 907

Railway right of way. The period of adverse possession of a railway right of way begins to run when the claimant takes possession under a color of title or claim of right, and not at a later date when the court ordered the railway sold.

Montgomery County v Case, 212-73; 232 NW 150

Special limitations unaffected by general. The limitation contained in §11028, C., '35, requiring mortgage foreclosure within 20 years, is subject only to the exceptions contained in that section, and not to the exceptions appearing in §11018, C., '35, dealing with revival of action by admission of the indebtedness. This latter section applies only to the general statutes of limitations.

Lackey v Melcher, 225-698; 281 NW 225

Tenancy in common—accounting. Between tenants in common, the statute of limitation does not commence to run on a claim of one of the tenants for the amount individually paid by him on a mortgage on the common property, until there has been a demand for an accounting.

Creger v Fenimore, 216-273; 249 NW 147

Wrongful flooding of land—when action accrues. Where a city, by the erection of a dam on its own land, wrongfully flooded adjacent private land, and some years later instituted proceedings to condemn said overflowed land for a public purpose but later wholly abandoned said proceedings, the injured property owner may not say that his cause of action for damages did not accrue until the city abandoned its condemnation proceedings.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 221-66; 264 NW 906

(c) ACCRUAL IN RE IMPLIED CONTRACTS

No annotations in this volume

(d) ACCRUAL IN RE EXPRESS CONTRACTS

Agreement extending time. The extension of the time for the payment of the debt was sufficient consideration for an agreement extending a mortgage, even tho the holder reserved the right to sue at any time any person who did not consent in writing to the extension.

Lincoln Ins. v McKenney, 227-727; 289 NW 4

Marriage contracts. An action for damages for breach of promise of marriage accrues on the breach, and is barred upon the expiration of two years therefrom.

Wilson v Stever, 202-1396; 212 NW 142

Guardianship—action on bond—accrual. Action on the bond of a guardian is barred in ten years (1) from the death of the guardian, or (2) from the death of the ward, or (3) from the attainment by the ward of his majority.

Armon v Craig, 203-1338; 214 NW 556

Guardianship — conversion — effect. Conversion by a guardian of the guardianship funds does not start the running of the statute of limitation on the bond of the guardian.

Armon v Craig, 203-1338; 214 NW 556

Guardianship — failure to account — effect. The statute of limitation is not held in abeyance on the bond of a guardian by the fact that the guardian makes no accounting or settlement.

Armon v Craig, 203-1338; 214 NW 556

Unpaid subscriptions for stock — order for assessment. The power of the court to enter an order of assessment on unpaid written contracts of subscription for corporate stock in a corporation which has become insolvent and is under receivership, is not barred from and after the lapse of five years from the time the attorney general brought the action for dissolution and alleged the insolvency of the corporation, nor from and after the lapse of five years from the time when the insolvency of the corporation was definitely determined.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

(e) ACCRUAL IN RE TRUSTS AND BAILMENTS

Impressing trust on proceeds of lienable property. An action to impress a trust on the proceeds of property on which a landlord had a lien, against a depository who had full knowledge that the sale had been had for the benefit of the landlord, is not barred immediately after the lapse of six months from the termination of the lease.

Andrew v Bank, 208-1184; 225 NW 957

Recovery of erroneous payment. An action to recover estate funds paid out by an executor under an interlocutory but erroneous order for distribution accrues when the erroneous order is set aside and the executor is ordered to proceed to recover the erroneous payments.

Dillinger v Steele, 207-20; 222 NW 564

Statute of limitation—clerk's costs barred after five years. Clerk's costs inuring to the general fund when collected are no part of the judgment to which they are incident, but are only a debt, not necessarily arising out of a governmental function, which costs are such debts as become outlawed at the expiration of five years and may not then be retaxed and collected.

Great Western Ins. v Saunders, 223-926; 274 NW 28

Trust estate. The statute of limitation does not commence to run against an action for the recovery of trust funds until the trustee, on due notice, repudiates the trust.

Hoffman v Hoffman, 205-1194; 219 NW 311

Trust relation — repudiation. Principle reaffirmed that the statute of limitation commences to run against an action to enforce a trust, from the time the trustee openly repudiates the trust relationship.

In re Hellman, 221-552; 266 NW 36

Howes v Sutton, 221-1326; 268 NW 164

Trust — repudiation necessary to start statute. The statute of limitation does not commence to run against the beneficiary of an express and continuing trust until the trustee directly repudiates the trust. Evidence held insufficient to show repudiation at such remote date as to bar an action for accounting. So held where the grantee of land—the trustee—took title under written agreement to account to grantor for one-half of the profits which might be realized on a sale.

Howes v Sutton, 221-1326; 268 NW 164

Trusts—mere lapse of time. A plea that an action to enforce a trust is barred by the statute of limitation must allege facts other than the mere lapse of time.

Spring v Spring, 210-1124; 229 NW 147

(f) ACCRUAL IN RE NUISANCES

Injury to relative rights—nuisance. An action for damages consequent on a nuisance is not an action for injury to "relative rights" and is not, therefore, barred in two years.

Chase v Winterset, 203-1361; 214 NW 591
Hill v Winterset, 203-1392; 214 NW 592

(g) ACCRUAL IN RE TORT

Actions—accrual—sale of stock. A cause of action for damages arising out of the fraudulent sale of stock accrues when the contract induced by fraud is executed or the stock is bought and paid for.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

(h) ACCRUAL IN RE OFFICIAL TRANSACTIONS

Mistake of law—statute not tolled—mistake defined. Where a sheriff collects fees under a mistake of law, the failure to discover a mistake of law will not toll the running of the statute of limitations. The word "mistake" in §11010, C., '35, means mistake of fact.

George v Webster County, 211-164; 233 NW 49

Morgan v Jasper County, 223-1044; 274 NW 310; 111 ALR 634

Contractor's bond. The right of a public corporation to bring an action on a public contractor's bond conditioned to hold the municipality harmless from all loss which it may suffer in consequence of the contractor's default does not accrue until after judgment is rendered against the city and the same is paid by the city.

Waukon v Surety Co., 214-522; 242 NW 632

Drainage outlet repair—contribution—statute of limitation. The legal right of the governing body of a drainage district located in one county to compel a drainage district located in another county, through its governing body, to contribute to the cost of cleaning out, deepening, enlarging, extending or straightening of the outlet which is common to both of said districts, accrues when the actual cost of said work is legally apportionable to the different districts; and action to enforce said right, unless instituted within five years after said accrual, is barred by the statute of limitation. And the making of an erroneous apportionment will not toll said statute.

Board v Board, 221-337; 264 NW 702

Special assessment certificates. A cause of action accrues against a city or town on special assessment certificates, issued and delivered by it for street improvements, at the point of time when it fails to levy valid assessments for the payment of said certificates, and such cause of action is barred in 10 years after said accrual.

Stockholders Inv. v Town, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Statutory liability. An action to enforce the statutory liability of a county to return mortgage foreclosure execution fees to the certificate holder (when the debtor does not redeem) is barred from and after the expiration of five years from the enactment of the statute giving the right to such return. (40 GA., Ch 102.)

Liljedahl v Montgomery County, 212-951; 237 NW 523

See George v Webster County, 211-164; 233 NW 49

(i) ACCRUAL IN RE STATUTORY ACTIONS AND LIABILITY

Mandamus against county supervisors to erect bridge—nonlapse of time. Mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to erect a bridge on an established and existing highway at the point where the highway is crossed by a public drainage improvement is not barred by the lapse of time.

Perley v Heath, 201-1163; 208 NW 721

Corporate officers' personal statutory liability. A cause of action to enforce the statutory-declared personal liability of corporate officers and directors for prohibited, excess corporate indebtedness (now repealed) is barred after the lapse of five years from the creation of the indebtedness.

Preston v Howell, 219-231; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140

Transfer of corporate stock—when barred. The right of the pledgee of corporate shares of stock to have said stock transferred on the corporate stock records is based on a written contract arising out of the articles of incorporation, bylaws, certificate of stock, and statutes (§§8336, 8337, C., '27), and consequently such right may be enforced at any time within the 10-year period following a written demand for such transfer, unless the enforcement of such right is barred by laches.

Bankers Trust v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

XIII DEATH AND ADMINISTRATION

Discussion. See 22 ILR 557—Limitations and claims against estate

Computation of period—claim payable “on or before” death. An oral contract to pay for services, payable “on or before” the death of the promisor, matures at his death and therefore is not barred by the statute of limitations, even tho the claim was running for over 20 years.

Gardner v Marquis, 224-458; 275 NW 493

Decedent's bank stock. After the effective date of Ch 219 of the 47th GA., the act repealing the statutory double assessment liability on bank stock, a closed bank's receiver may not maintain against the executor and beneficiaries under the will an action to enforce the double liability as to stock issued prior to December 1, 1933, and formerly owned by decedent.

Bates v Bank, 227-925; 289 NW 735

Statute not suspended by death of claim holder. The statute of limitation having commenced to run on a cause of action, during the lifetime of the person in whose favor the cause of action accrued (he being under no disability) is not suspended by the death of such person, even tho the claim descends to minor heirs.

Hodgson v Keppel, 211-795; 232 NW 725

Unauthorized action. An action by a plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of a deceased, to recover damages for the wrongful death of the deceased, when plaintiff was not such administrator, is a nullity, and, therefore, does not toll the statute of limitation on the said cause of action. And in case plaintiff is appointed administrator after the statute has fully run, an ex parte order of the probate court assuming to ratify, confirm, and adopt such former proceeding is likewise a nullity.

Pearson v Anthony, 218-697; 254 NW 10

Valid probate claim—no duty to interpose statute. An administrator is not required to resist a valid existing claim nor interpose the statute of limitations against a claim he believes is just.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

XIV PERSONAL DISABILITIES AND PRIVILEGES

Guardianship—action on bond—accrual. Action on the bond of a guardian is barred in ten years (1) from the death of the guardian, or (2) from the death of the ward, or (3) from the attainment by the ward of his majority.

Armon v Craig, 203-1338; 214 NW 556

Infants—disaffirmance. A minor, upon becoming of age, is required to disaffirm contracts made during minority within a reasonable time after attaining majority or within a reasonable time after discovery of the fraud.

In re Fisher, 226-596; 284 NW 821

Guardian and ward—failure to disaffirm. In guardianship proceeding, wherein father acting as guardian made a settlement with his children after son had reached his majority, but daughter lacked three months of being 21 years of age, and suit against the father for an accounting was not brought until 2½ years after the settlement, held, evidence sufficient to support finding of trial court in approving the guardian's report which, in effect, approved the settlement, the same having been ratified by failure to disaffirm within a reasonable period of time.

In re Fisher, 226-596; 284 NW 821

XV PENDENCY OF LEGAL PROCEEDINGS

Amendments containing “thread” of original claim not barred. In an action for compensation for professional engineering services involved in construction of a sewage disposal plant, profuse substitutions and amendments to a petition which keep a thread of thought identifying them with the claim in the original notice, which amendments and substitutions tho not filed within the allowable period of the statute of limitations, come within the rule that commencement of the action tolls the statute.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 224-212; 276 NW 58

Filing probate application not commencement of action. When heirs filed an application in probate, more than ten years after the clerk had approved certain claims, asking that the claims be disallowed and expunged from the record, the right to object to such claims was not barred by the statute of limitations, as the filing of the application was an appearance prior to any final adjudication in the still pending proceedings to collect such claims, rather than the commencement of an action.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 641

XVI INJURIES FROM DEFECTS IN HIGHWAYS

Notice—fatal inaccuracy. A statutory notice designed to avoid the three months statute of limitation on an action against a city for damages consequent on a defective street is fatally defective when it designates the place of injury at a point on a street some 3,000 feet distant from the place or point on said street where the injury was actually received.

XVI INJURIES FROM DEFECTS IN HIGHWAYS—concluded

Tredwell v Waterloo, 218-243; 251 NW 37

Statute governing action for damages. In a city which has abandoned its special charter and become organized under the commission form of municipal government, actions for damages consequent on defective streets are governed by §11007, subsec. 1, C., '27, and not by §6734, C., '27, such reorganized city having no "vested right" in said latter section within the meaning of §6569, C., '27.

Wilson v Cedar Rapids, 210-790; 231 NW 495

XVII INJURIES TO PERSON OR REPUTATION—RELATIVE RIGHTS

National bank directors—state statute invoked. State statutes of limitation apply and may be invoked by directors of national bank in respect to liability for violation of duty, but two-year limitation in respect to personal reputation, held, inapplicable under such circumstances. The plain, obvious, and rational meaning of statute is always to be preferred to any curious, narrow, hidden sense, and, in case of substantial doubt, longer rather than shorter period of limitation is to be preferred.

Payne v Ostrus, 50 F 2d, 1039

XVIII STATUTE PENALTY

State bank liquidating national bank. In an action by state bank, liquidating a national bank, to recover excess of liabilities over assets, held, not a suit for "statute penalty" within the statute of limitations.

Derscheid v Andrew, 34 F 2d, 884

Statutory liability. A cause of action to enforce the statutory-declared personal liability of corporate officers and directors for prohibited, excess corporate indebtedness (now repealed) is barred after the lapse of five years from the creation of the indebtedness.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140

XIX PROBATE OF WILL

the claims be disallowed and expunged from the record, the right to object to such claims was not barred by the statute of limitations, as the filing of the application was an appearance prior to any final adjudication in the still pending proceedings to collect such claims, rather than the commencement of an action.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 641

XX ACTION AGAINST SHERIFF OR OTHER PUBLIC OFFICER

Computation of period—accrual of right—official nonfeasance. The breach of official duty, and not the resulting damage, creates the cause of action making operative the statute of limitations, so where a recorder negligently omitted to index a chattel mortgage resulting in a subsequent mortgagee obtaining priority through lack of notice of first mortgage, the cause of action accrued at the time of such omission and an action against the recorder for this nonfeasance was barred after three years by this section.

Baie v Rook, 223-845; 273 NW 902; 110 ALR 1082

Public rights—nonperformance. Mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to erect a bridge on an established and existing highway at the point where the highway is crossed by a public drainage improvement is not barred by the lapse of time.

Perley v Heath, 201-1163; 208 NW 721

XXI UNWRITTEN CONTRACTS

Accounts—interest items. In an action by a widow to establish a claim against the estate of her deceased husband based on an alleged oral contract of decedent to repay a loan of money made by appellant widow to decedent, prior to November 1, 1912, to which the statute of limitations was pleaded, held, mere posting of items of interest applicable to one individual transaction is insufficient to show a "connected series of transactions" so as to convert the matter into a "continuous, open, current account" under statute providing cause of action accrues on date of last item, as this means a connected series of transactions.

Leland v Johnson, 227-520; 288 NW 595

Continuous salary account. Statute of limitations will not commence to run against a continuous running salary account until the status of such account is changed.

Bankers Trust Co. v Economy Coal Co., 224-36; 276 NW 16

Revival of contract—admission in writing. In an action by a widow to establish a claim against her deceased husband's estate based on an oral contract to repay to appellant widow a sum of money loaned to decedent prior to November 1, 1912, wherein it is shown by the record of entries in decedent's ledger and by checks signed and deposited by the decedent to joint savings account with the widow, that interest was computed on what purported to be a loan of $4,000, and even tho the statute of limitations had run, the conduct, circumstantial evidence, and admissions of the party to be charged sufficiently showed the existence of a contract so as to make applicable the statute providing for revival of contract by admission in writing.

Leland v Johnson, 227-520; 288 NW 595

Revival of contract by undelivered check. In an action by a widow to establish a claim against deceased husband's estate based on an oral contract to repay a loan made by appellant widow to decedent prior to November 1, 1912, wherein the widow offers evidence of a check purported to have been issued to widow by husband for "interest 1935, 6 months" and deposited by him in joint account with his wife, and it is claimed by appellee that since check was not delivered to appellant widow nor to anyone acting for her, the writing is insufficient, held, such memorandum need not be delivered to opposite party nor his agent nor a person in privity with him, but is sufficient if it is signed and in any way promulgated so as to become an instrument of evidence.

Leland v Johnson, 227-520; 288 NW 595

Oral agreement to devise realty—insufficiency of evidence to set aside. In an equity action to recover a sum of money alleged to be the share of plaintiff's intestate in the estate of his father, where evidence shows the mother of plaintiff's intestate was left with five minor children, and that she filed a partition proceeding involving 400 acres of land owned by her husband, who died intestate, and she thereafter was the successful purchaser at a sale of the land, and that, as a part of the purchase price, she executed a note and mortgage on the land to a guardian appointed for the minor children to secure their respective shares in the father's estate, and that, as the children became of age, there were no guardianship funds to pay their respective shares, and that it was orally agreed that the children would receipt for their respective shares, in cash, to the guardian (altho no cash was received), and the mother agreed to, and did, execute a will leaving the land to the children in equal shares, the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to set aside the agreement, and the trial court's order, affirming the agreement and impounding the mother's will until her death, was affirmed.

Baumann v Willemsen, 228- ; 292 NW 77

XXII INJURY TO PROPERTY

Computation of period—accrual of action—municipal interference with ingress and egress. An action by a property owner against a city for damages consequent on a long delayed but finally completed street improvement which, while somewhat various in its operations, is one project, and which substantially destroys the owner's means of passing to and from his property, does not accrue until the improvement is completed.

Ashman v Des Moines, 209-1247; 228 NW 316; 229 NW 907

Wrongful flooding of land. Where a city, by the erection of a dam on its own land, wrongfully flooded adjacent private land, and some years later instituted proceedings to condemn said overflowed land for a public purpose but later wholly abandoned said proceedings, the injured property owner may not say that his cause of action for damages did not accrue until the city abandoned its condemnation proceedings.

Wheatley v City, 221-66; 264 NW 906

Computation of period—damages—original or continuing. Where a bridge which spanned a natural watercourse or drain across a public highway was removed and replaced by the public authorities with a solid and permanent earth embankment, the injury or hurt to nearby lands, from flood water consequent on said change in the highway, must be deemed original damages which mature upon completion of the embankment—or at least on the occurrence of substantial damages consequent on the change. It follows that the maintenance of said embankment may not be legally questioned by action commenced after the lapse of five years from the maturity of said damages.

Thomas v Cedar Falls, 223-229; 272 NW 79

Computation of period—wrongful flooding of land—when action accrues. Where a city, by the erection of a dam on its own land, wrongfully flooded adjacent private land, and some years later instituted proceedings to condemn said overflowed land for a public purpose but later wholly abandoned said proceedings, the injured property owner may not say that his cause of action for damages did not accrue until the city abandoned its condemnation proceedings.

Wheatley v City, 221-66; 264 NW 906

XXIII FRAUD

Discussion. See 22 ILR 704—Fraud tolling statute of limitations

Concealment—effect. Whether an action for damages for fraudulent representations is barred by the statute of limitations is properly presented to the jury, on evidence that the defendants had for several years concealed the fraudulent acts and conduct which they had perpetrated on the plaintiff.

Reinertson v Chem. Co., 205-417; 216 NW 68

Disaffirmance. A minor, upon becoming of age, is required to disaffirm contracts made during minority within a reasonable time after attaining majority or within a reasonable time after discovery of the fraud.

In re Fisher, 226-596; 284 NW 821

Guardian and ward—failure to disaffirm. In guardianship proceeding, wherein father acting as guardian made a settlement with his children after son had reached his majority, but daughter lacked three months of being 21 years of age, and suit against the father for an accounting was not brought until two and one-half years after the settlement, held, evidence sufficient to support finding of trial court in approving the guardian's report which, in effect, approved the settlement, the same having been ratified by failure to disaffirm within a reasonable period of time.

In re Fisher, 226-596; 284 NW 821

Fraud and mistake distinguished—mistake not involving equity conscience. Relief from the statute of limitations on account of fraud is in equity based on good conscience; whereas when pure mistake is the ground for relief, there is no occasion for weighing matters of conscience against either party.

Beerman v Beerman, 225-48; 279 NW 449; 118 ALR 997

Fraud—discovery—when statute tolled. Unless the fraud be fraudulently concealed by some affirmative act of the fraud perpetrator, a law action for damages on account of such fraud, not being an action solely cognizable in equity prior to the adoption of the statute, the five-year statute of limitations is not tolled by nondiscovery of the fraud.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

Fraudulent concealment of fraud—burden of proof. To overcome the defense of statute of limitations on the ground of fraudulent concealment, the burden to both plead and prove such fraudulent concealment is on the party relying thereon.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

Fraud—instructions—prejudice not presumed. Prejudice will not be presumed from instructions readily reconciled and understood by the jury as not conflicting, but in an action for damages on account of fraud where the defense was the statute of limitations it is prejudicial error to instruct on the elements of fraud as a basis for recovery without requiring consideration of the defense of the statute of limitations.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

Sale of bonds—damage accrual—later exchange no concealment of fraud. Where bonds purchased in 1922 were exchanged in 1927 and 1932 for new bonds, the damage from fraud in their sale, if any, occurred when they were first purchased, and when neither the actual fraud itself nor due diligence to discover the same are proven, the subsequent exchange transactions will not toll the statute as a concealment of the original fraud, especially if none existed.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

Sale of bonds—fraud—discovery. Under the rule that the statute of limitations begins to run on a law action for fraud when the fraud is consummated unless tolled by an intentional fraudulent concealment, and since §11010 does not apply to law actions, in a case where bonds were sold in 1922 and buyers could have secured at any time a detailed statement of the securities held for payment of the bonds, the buyers cannot claim they did not discover, until 1933, fraud in the sale of the bonds.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

Statute tolled by fraudulent concealment. In an action for damages for fraud in the sale of stock where the defense was the statute of limitations, an instruction that fails to tell the jury that the statute of limitations would run unless tolled by some affirmative act of fraudulent concealment on the part of the fraud perpetrator is prejudicially erroneous.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

Subsequent demand for accounting—bar. An administrator may not, after the lapse of more than five years from his final discharge, be compelled to account for funds claimed to have been fraudulently withheld by him, when the evidence of such withholding was accessible to the complainant at and prior to the time the order of discharge was entered.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

XXIV WRITTEN CONTRACTS

Action to redeem from mortgage. When the right of a mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage is barred by the statute of limitation, then the right of the mortgagor to redeem is foreclosed, and vice versa.

Volding v Goepel, 203-540; 211 NW 482

Agreement extending time. The extension of the time for the payment of the debt was sufficient consideration for an agreement extending a mortgage, even tho the holder reserved the right to sue at any time any person who did not consent in writing to the extension.

Lincoln Ins. v McKenney, 227-727; 289 NW 4

Arbitration and award—subsequent written compromise. A definite written agreement in which one party agrees to pay the other a named sum in settlement of their actual differences furnishes ample basis for a future action within 10 years after default, even tho, when it was entered into, the said differences had been submitted to statutory arbitrators, and even tho the agreement contemplated that the arbitrators would report to the court, in accordance with the agreement, which was done, but without filing in court.

In re Powers, 205-956; 218 NW 941

Bond as written contract. The statute of limitation relative to unwritten contracts manifestly has no relevancy to an action for damages consequent on the breach of the statutory bond of a public contractor.

Waukon v Surety Co., 214-522; 242 NW 632

Computation of period—promissory note—severability of interest. Unless the maker and payee on a promissory note agree to sever the promise to pay interest installments from the promise to pay principal so as to make each promise separate and independent of the other, the interest is an incident to the principal debt and as such is barred when the statute of limitations has run against the principal debt.

Yeadon v Farmers Co., 224-829; 277 NW 709; 115 ALR 725

Demand note. A promissory note due on demand is barred after 10 years from the date thereof.

Citizens Bank v Taylor, 201-499; 207 NW 570

Demand notes. A promissory note due 30 days after demand is barred after 10 years and 30 days from the date thereof, no legal justification appearing for delay in making demand.

Lovrien v Oestrich, 214-298; 242 NW 57

Foreclosure of mortgage. The right to foreclose a mortgage is not barred so long as the secured debt is not barred.

Randell v Fellers, 218-1005; 252 NW 787

Lien—mortgage recitation of previous mortgage as extension—priority. A property owner gave a note and mortgage in 1915, due in 1920, but which was not paid and in 1930, before it was barred by the statute of limitations, he gave a second mortgage reciting therein the existence of the prior mortgage, after which in 1931 he gave another note and mortgage to the heirs of the first mortgagee as a renewal of the 1915 mortgage, held that the recitation as to the first mortgage in the second mortgage extended the indebtedness of the first mortgage, so that by renewal of the first mortgage, even after 10 years, it retained priority over the second mortgage.

Lackey v Melcher, 225-698; 281 NW 225

Right to corporate transfer of stock. The right of the pledgee of corporate shares of stock to have said stock transferred on the corporate stock records is based on a written contract arising out of the articles of incorporation, bylaws, certificate of stock and statute (§§8386, 8387, C., '27) and consequently such right may be enforced at any time within the 10-year period following a written demand for such transfer, unless the enforcement of such right is barred by laches.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

XXV RECOVERY OF REAL PROPERTY

Recovery of real property (?) or partition (?). An action for the partition of real property by parties who are in possession of the property, and who claim to be co-owners thereof, may not be deemed an action for the recovery of real property, within the meaning of the statute of limitation, because an intervenor pleads a recorded deed which would deprive plaintiffs of all title, but which deed plaintiffs by reply claim was never delivered.

Gibson v Gibson, 205-1285; 217 NW 852

Duration of mortgage lien. Principle reaffirmed that the lien of a mortgage continues until the debt is paid, irrespective of the form in which the debt is evidenced.

Equitable v Rood, 205-1273; 218 NW 42

Waterworks sold to city—stockholder's action. Where a waterworks was sold to a city, and a stockholder seeks to establish an interest in the waterworks property on the ground that the city took the property burdened with a trust for his benefit, the action was barred by statute of limitations where no effort to enforce claim against city was made during a period of more than 10 years after the sale.

Shaver v Des Moines, 227-411; 288 NW 412

XXVI JUDGMENTS OF COURTS OF RECORD

Judgment due in installments. In case of a judgment for the separate maintenance of a wife through monthly installments, the statute of limitation does not commence to run from the date of the judgment, but on each separate installment from the maturity thereof.

Bennett v Tomlinson, 206-1075; 221 NW 837

Creditor's suit. Record involving an equitable proceeding to discover property belonging to a judgment defendant, and to subject said discovered property to the satisfaction of said judgment, reviewed, and held not barred by §10378 and §11882, C., '35, nor by this section.

XXVI JUDGMENTS OF COURTS OF RECORD—concluded

Bankers Tr. v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Default—setting aside—when fraud no defense. When fraud in obtaining a judgment is not available to have the judgment set aside (because of the lapse of time), such fraud necessarily ceases to be a defense to an auxiliary proceeding to enforce the judgment.

Wade v Swartzendruber, 206-637; 220 NW 37

Lien—judgment is debt—action thereon is ex contractu. A judgment procured upon a judgment creates a lien of the same force and effect upon the real estate of the judgment debtor as does any other judgment of the district court.

Chader v Wilkins, 226-417; 284 NW 183

Lien on real property—attaches by operation of law. A judgment on a judgment is a lien on the real property of the debtor for 10 years and where debtor's father died, leaving real estate to the debtor-son's wife, who then in turn died intestate, the lien attaches to the debtor's one-third interest therein, even though he quitclaimed his interest to his daughter within 10 days after his wife's death and before execution on the judgment issued.

Chader v Wilkins, 226-417; 284 NW 183

XXVII PLEADINGS

Amendment notwithstanding statute. A plaintiff who, in a timely brought action, pleads a rescission of a fraud-induced contract, and prays for judgment for the consideration paid, and who, after discovering his inability to prove the pleaded rescission, and after the statute of limitation has fully run against his cause of action, amends his pleadings by praying for damages consequent upon the fraud, does not thereby plead a new cause of action. He simply exercises his permissible right to change the remedy.

Reinertson v Struthers, 201-1186; 207 NW 247

Amendment to petition—when strikeable. An amendment to petition, setting up a new cause of action barred by the statute of limitations, may be stricken, but when both the original petition and the amendment plead the same cause of action in general allegations of negligence, such amendment may not be stricken.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Amendment in re conspiracy. A pleader does not, in legal effect, change the nature of his cause of action by striking from his petition, the allegation that the defendants "conspired, colluded, and confederated together", and by substituting therefor the allegation that the defendants "acted together jointly and aided and abetted each other".

Dickson v Young, 202-378; 210 NW 452

Amendment setting up new cause of action. A claim in probate bottomed on a judgment on a bond, and a so-called amendment thereto bottomed on the bond itself, present different causes of action, and if the amended claim is filed after the statute of limitation has run it is barred notwithstanding the original filing.

In re Skiles, 210-935; 229 NW 235

Amendment for new relief after action barred. A timely action to set aside the cancellation of a policy of insurance may be amended by asking for a reformation of the policy even though the amendment is filed at a time which would have barred the original action.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Amplifying facts. Plaintiff in an action for damages consequent on the dangerous condition of a sidewalk pleads no new cause of action by so amending his petition as to amplify the facts which brought about said dangerous condition.

Casper v Sioux City, 218-69; 238 NW 591

Burden to overcome bar. Proof that a claim is barred by the statute of limitation imposes on claimant the burden of showing the facts which neutralize the bar.

Lawrence v Melvin, 202-866; 211 NW 410

New cause of action under guise of amendment. A cause of action predicated on the plea that a bank wrongfully hypothecated a bailment as security for a loan to the bank, and that the directors were personally liable for the resulting loss because of their neglect to learn of said wrongful act and to prevent or correct it, is wholly separate and distinct from a cause of action predicated on a plea that the directors personally made the loan and hypothecation. It follows that said latter plea is subject to demurrer when made as an amendment to the former action, and after such latter plea is barred by the statute of limitation.

Cornick v Weir, 212-715; 237 NW 245; 32 NCCA 616

New cause of action under guise of amendment. A cause of action for damages predicated on the alleged negligence of plaintiff's agent in making improvident loans of plaintiff's funds, and a cause of action for damages predicated on the alleged fraudulent misapplication and appropriation by plaintiff's agent of plaintiff's funds, are separate and distinct causes of action. It follows that the pleading of the latter as an amendment to the former is unallowable when the latter cause of action is barred by the statute of limitation.

Pease v Bank, 210-331; 228 NW 83

Non-issue-changing amendment. Where a petition alleges that it was negligent for the driver of a conveyance to use a street owing to its extreme slipperiness, an amendment to the effect that other safe and convenient streets existed which might have been used presents no new issue.

McDowell v Oil Co., 212-1314; 237 NW 456; 31 NCCA 305

Non-issue-changing amendment. The identity of a cause of action is not changed by an amendment (made at a time when the action would otherwise be barred) which strikes from a petition a specific allegation of negligence in furnishing electricity for lighting purposes, and substituting therefor a general allegation of negligence in order to rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Orr v Light Co., 213-127; 238 NW 604

Substituting specific negligence for general negligence. A plaintiff who, on one trial, rests on a general allegation of negligence, does not plead a new cause of action within the meaning of the statute of limitation, when on retrial he, by amendment, withdraws his general allegation and substitutes a specific allegation of negligence which, if proven, will furnish basis for the doctrine of the "last clear chance".

Reason: The latter allegation was always embraced within the former general allegation.

Pettijohn v Weede, 219-465; 258 NW 72

Nonallowable amendment. A timely brought action based solely on the common-law plea of defendant's liability consequent on the negligent operation of an automobile by defendant's employee, in due course of employment, may not, after the action would be barred by the statute of limitation, be so amended as to wholly abandon said pleaded basis and to substitute an entirely new basis for recovery, to wit, an allegation that defendant was liable because the automobile in question belonged to defendant and was operated at the time in question with defendant's consent.

Page v Constr. Co., 219-1017; 257 NW 426

Amendments after expiration of period. The right to reform a policy of insurance (if such right exists) and to recover on it as reformed, is incident to the right to recover on the instrument in its original form. It follows that where plaintiff is unsuccessful on appeal in his effort to recover on the instrument in its original form, he may, after remand, amend and tender the issue of reformation, even though when the amendment is filed an original action would have been barred by the statute of limitation.

Green v Ins. Co., 218-1131; 253 NW 36

Sufficiency. An informal and defective plea of the statute of limitation, and of a former adjudication, may be sufficient in the absence of a proper attack thereon.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

Sufficiency. In pleading the bar of the statute of limitation, the facts must be alleged.

Conklin v Towne, 204-916; 216 NW 264

Timely plea. A plea of the statute of limitation is timely when interposed as soon as its availability becomes known, e. g., during the taking of the testimony.

Lawrence v Melvin, 202-866; 211 NW 410

Conklin v Towne, 204-916; 216 NW 264

Failure to raise statute of limitations as defense in lower court—effect. A defense under statute of limitations not raised in lower court cannot be considered on appeal.

In re Christensen, 227-1028; 290 NW 34

Unallowable motion to strike plea. A motion to strike an answering amendment which interposes the bar of the statute of limitation is not the proper procedure under which to plead facts which avoid the bar. Reply is necessary.

Lawrence v Melvin, 202-866; 211 NW 410

Unavailable plea. A plea of title to real estate by adverse possession is not available against one whose rights were acquired before the lapse of the 10 years sufficient to ripen such title, even though said title had ripened as to the same property as against another party to the litigation.

Oxford Bk. v Hall, 203-320; 211 NW 389

Unnecessary instructions. There is no occasion to instruct relative to the statute of limitation when the parties join no issue thereon.

Dravis v Sawyer, 218-742; 254 NW 920

Waiver. The statute of limitation must be pleaded or the bar will be deemed waived.

North Am. Ins. v Holstrum, 208-722; 217 NW 239; 224 NW 492

When not demurrable. A petition which alleges that defendant, on a date more than five years prior to the commencement of the action, fraudulently converted to his own use property owned by plaintiff subject to a life estate in another, is not demurrable when the petition otherwise shows that plaintiff was entitled to the property only upon the death of the life tenant and that such death occurred less than five years before the commencement of the action.

Mastbergen v Bank, 216-1408; 250 NW 641

XXVIII ADVERSE POSSESSION

Discussion. See 2 ILB 144—Adverse possession

(a) RIGHTS BY PRESCRIPTION IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 24 ILR 268—Seizin and possession—title

Prescription—insufficient evidence. A public way by prescription will not be decreed on evidence which is just as consistent with the theory of the owner that whatever use was made of the land as a road was purely permissive as with the theory that the use was hostile, adverse, and under a claim of right.

Dugan v Zurmuehlen, 203-1114; 211 NW 986

Permissive use. Mere use of a way over the land of another by permission of the latter furnishes no basis for a title by prescription.

Feilhaber v Swiler, 203-1133; 212 NW 417

Self-imposed knowledge of vendor. A vendor of land will not be heard to claim that he did not know that his purchaser was holding adversely to him.

Burch v Wickliff, 209-582; 227 NW 133

Streets—conveyance of title after acceptance and vacation. In an action involving the title to a strip of land which had once been part of a street between town lots, it made no difference whether such street had ever been accepted by the town and opened for public use and later vacated and conveyances of the land made by the town, so long as a question of acquiescence and adverse possession was the decisive issue between the claimants.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

Streets—nonuser—adverse possession—estoppel. Tho a street be legally established, yet where (1) the municipality does not open up the street, or there is nonuser for the statutory period, and (2) private rights have been acquired by adverse possession, then abandonment may be presumed, the public estopped from asserting any rights therein, and public rights in street extinguished.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Unaccepted platted street—applicability. Where parties claim land, dedicated in plat as a street but, not being accepted, never became a street, the public has no interest therein and the doctrine of adverse possession is applicable.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Repair of dike—user—estoppel. In an action to enjoin the repair of a dike originally constructed in connection with drainage system created jointly by adjoining landowners, including plaintiff's predecessor in title, and used with knowledge of plaintiff for over 20 years without objection, principles reaffirmed (1) that where there is proof of more than mere user, the statute providing that an easement cannot be established by proof of mere user alone does not apply, and (2) that the owner of a dominant estate may by consent, express or implied, estop himself from insisting upon adherence to the principle that the owner of a servient estate has no right to interfere with the natural flow of water in a well-defined course so as to cast it back upon the dominant estate.

Dodd v Aitken, 227-679; 288 NW 898

(b) PROPERTY SUBJECT TO PRESCRIPTION

Highways—abandonment—"nonuser" as element. Nonuser of an established public highway is not in and of itself, sufficient to establish a claimed abandonment of the highway, especially when the nonuser is caused by the failure of the public officers to promptly bridge or grade places otherwise impassable.

Clare v Wogan, 204-1021; 216 NW 739

Unaccepted platted street—applicability. Where parties claim land, dedicated in plat as a street but, not being accepted, never became a street, the public has no interest therein and the doctrine of adverse possession is applicable.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

(c) CLAIM OF RIGHT OR COLOR OF TITLE

"Claim of right". "Claim of right" as an element of adverse possession of land is furnished by an oral agreement between claimant and parties to a federal action to determine title, to the effect that if said parties were successful in their action claimant should have the land of which he was then in possession.

Wallis v Clinkenbeard, 214-343; 242 NW 86

Claim of right. A claim of right is an essential element of adverse possession.

Stone v Richardson, 206-419; 218 NW 332

Claim of right—facts militating against. Evidence tending to show that one, while in possession of an abandoned railway right of way to which he claimed title by adverse possession, (1) offered to buy the right of way from the railway company, (2) claimed to the railway company that he would ultimately get title through a reversion, (3) failed to list the right of way for taxation, (4) excluded the right of way from mortgages executed by him, and (5) farmed the right of way under permission from the railway company, is material as militating against the claimant's claim of right.

Montgomery County v Case, 212-73; 232 NW 150

Color of title—deed from tax deedholder. One who is in possession of real property under deed from a tax deedholder has color of title.

Mann v Nies, 213-121; 238 NW 601

Claim of right or title. To constitute claim of right or title something more than the mere assertion of ownership coupled with actual occupancy, must be shown.

McFerrin v Wiltse, 210-627; 231 NW 438

Accretions claimed. In an action to enjoin trespass and recover damages, where defendants filed a cross-petition to quiet title, claiming right to alleged accretions formed by recession of Missouri river, evidence, that for more than 15 years plaintiffs had been in possession of the land under color of title and claim of right, open, notorious, hostile, and adverse as against all others, established title in plaintiffs.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Elements—mutually agreed possession. Possession of land under an amicable arrangement cannot ripen into title by adverse possession.

Warner v Tullis, 206-680; 218 NW 575

Knowledge of hostile claims—effect. The running of the statute of limitation in favor of one who is in good faith in the open and adverse possession of real estate under color of title is manifestly not interrupted by the fact that the possessor knows that other parties are asserting an interest in the property, or that other parties actually had an interest which they might successfully assert, but did not.

Lemker v Claimants, 201-902; 208 NW 290

Homestead possession — effect. An heir cannot successfully claim that he is the owner of premises because his father continuously occupied such premises for some 35 years and until his death, as a homestead, when it appears that during said time the premises went to tax deed, and that thereupon the mother re-acquired title from the tax deed holder and thereunder adversely occupied said premises under said newly acquired deed for more than 10 years.

Mann v Nies, 213-121; 238 NW 601

(d) ACTUAL, VISIBLE, NOTORIOUS, DISTINCT AND EXCLUSIVE POSSESSION

Discussion. See 25 ILR 78—Actual possession

Accretions claimed. In an action to enjoin trespass and recover damages, where defendants filed a cross-petition to quiet title, claiming right to alleged accretions formed by recession of Missouri river, evidence, that for more than 15 years plaintiffs had been in possession of the land under color of title and claim of right, open, notorious, hostile, and adverse as against all others, established title in plaintiffs.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Acquiescence in title. Exclusive possession, control, and use for 18 years of lands by a child after the death of his parents, the owners, under a claim of absolute ownership in which all the other children of the parents acquiesced, ripen into a full title by adverse possession.

Hancock v Frok, 203-491; 211 NW 237

Claim broad as possession — unaccepted street. Where their claim to a certain fence was as broad as their possession, persons, who for more than 10 years had continuous and exclusive possession of a dedicated but unaccepted street secured title thereto by adverse possession.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Essential elements. Open, continuous, and good-faith possession of land, under claim of right, and with the knowledge of the record titleholder, by virtue of an oral contract of purchase, matures in the possessor an absolute title by adverse possession, even tho the contract price has never been paid.

Burch v Wickliff, 209-582; 227 NW 133

Adverse possession — elements — mutually agreed possession. Possession of land under an amicable arrangement cannot ripen into title by adverse possession.

Warner v Tullis, 206-680; 218 NW 575

(e) DURATION AND CONTINUITY OF POSSESSION

Acquiesced-in line—buildings. A line between adjoining tracts of land, definitely marked by a fence which, for 10 years, has been acquiesced in and recognized by the owners of the tracts as the division line, becomes, as between the parties, the conclusive line, irrespective of the true line in fact; and this is true altho neither party intended to claim more than his deed calls for. It follows that either party has a legal right to build in reliance on said acquiesced-in line.

Minear v Keith Co., 213-663; 239 NW 584

Acquiescence in boundary line—effect. Where plaintiffs for over 10 years and plaintiffs and their grantors for over 20 years acquiesced in a certain fence as the boundary of defendants' property and acquiesced in the use of the land south of the fence as a traveled highway, the fence becomes the boundary altho it may not be the true line.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Hostile character of possession. A possession that has been open, continuous, and adverse for the statutory time is a fundamental element of title by adverse possession. Evidence held insufficient.

McFerrin v Wiltse, 210-627; 231 NW 438

Hostile possession—tax deed does not interrupt. The continuity of possession by one claiming title to real estate by adverse possession is not broken by the execution and recording of a tax deed under which no right was asserted against claimant for some 16 years.

(f) HOSTILE POSSESSION

1. Mistake and Effect Thereof

Additional notes. See under §12306

Discussion. See 7 ILB 129—Mistake and adverse possession

Mistake—effect. One may not be said to be in the adverse possession of land beyond the governmental line when, during his entire possession, he never intended to claim beyond the true line.

Kotze v Sullivan, 210-600; 231 NW 339

Boundary dispute on fenced land. In a dispute involving title to a strip of land between two town lots which were separated by a fence, where there was no acquiescence in the fence as the true boundary line, and one party had no intent to claim beyond the true boundary line, held that title was acquired by the other party by adverse possession when he claimed both title and possession to the strip irrespective of the location of the fence.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

Occupancy—intention. For adverse possession there must be occupancy taken with the intention to assert title beyond the true boundary line under a claim of right which must be as broad as the possession, whereas, occupancy taken by mistake beyond the true line with claim of right only up to the true line will not acquire title.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

2. Grantor and Grantee

Adverse possession—title—essential elements. Open, continuous, and good-faith possession of land under claim of right and with the knowledge of the record titleholder, by virtue of an oral contract of purchase, matures in the possessor an absolute title by adverse possession, even tho the contract price has never been paid.

Burch v Wickliff, 209-582; 227 NW 133

3. Mortgagor and Mortgagee

Limitation of actions—written contracts—action to redeem from mortgage. When the right of a mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage is barred by the statute of limitation, then the right of the mortgagor to redeem is foreclosed, and vice versa.

Volding v Goepel, 203-540; 211 NW 482

Adverse possession—nature and requisites—unavailable plea. A plea of title to real estate by adverse possession is not available against one whose rights were acquired before the lapse of the 10 years sufficient to ripen such title, even tho said title had ripened as to the same property as against another party to the litigation.

Oxford Junction Savings Bank v Hall, 203-320; 211 NW 389

4. Trustee and Cestui

No annotations in this volume

5. Landlord and Tenant

Landlord and tenant—change of relation. Manifestly a landlord and his tenant may, at the close of the tenancy, take on and assume the relationship of vendor and purchaser, and thereby enable the former tenant to hold the premises in question adversely to the former landlord.

Burch v Wickliff, 209-582; 227 NW 133

6. Husband and Wife

No annotations in this volume

7. Tenants in Common

Ouster—acts necessary. An ouster may not be predicated on the mere fact that one of several tenants in common, a father, farmed the premises, to the knowledge of the other tenants, his children.

Campbell v Humphreys, 202-472; 210 NW 558

Ouster of all tenants by superior title—effect. Principle reaffirmed that after tenants in common are all ousted by a superior title, e. g., a tax deed, one who was such former tenant in common may buy in the superior title exclusively for his own benefit.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

(g) PAYMENT OF TAXES

Nonpayment of taxes. A title by adverse possession may be acquired even tho such claimant does not pay the taxes on the land.

Wallis v Clinkenbeard, 214-343; 242 NW 86

Presumption in favor of tax deed holder. When land belonging to a daughter was sold for taxes and the tax deed was issued to her mother under an agreement between them, there was a presumption that the continuing possession of the land by the daughter was subordinate to the mother's tax deed, and to defeat the tax title, the presumption had to be overcome and the daughter's possession proven to be adverse. Adverse possession was not established by the continued possession of the daughter under a lease to a tenant, from whom the daughter collected rents and paid taxes, when she made no open claim that the land was her own and that she was asserting her title in hostility to the title under the tax deed.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

(h) BURDEN OF PROOF AND EVIDENCE

Failure to prove title—effect. A plaintiff in an action to quiet title must necessarily fail when he bases his title both on (1) accretion and (2) adverse possession, and establishes neither; and this, too, irrespective of the weakness of defendant's title.

McFerrin v Wiltse, 210-627; 231 NW 438

Fraudulent concealment as tolling statute—burden of proof on pleader. After a defendant raises the defense of statute of limitations, plaintiff, alleging that because of defendant's fraud or fraudulent concealment the cause of action was not barred, has the burden of establishing such facts which he claims avoid the statute of limitations.

Carroll v Arts, 225-487; 280 NW 869

Presumption in favor of tax deed holder. When land belonging to a daughter was sold for taxes and the tax deed was issued to her mother under an agreement between them, there was a presumption that the continuing possession of the land by the daughter was subordinate to the mother's tax deed, and to defeat the tax title, the presumption had to be overcome and the daughter's possession proven to be adverse. Adverse possession was not established by the continued possession of the daughter under a lease to a tenant, from whom the daughter collected rents and paid taxes, when she made no open claim that the land was her own and that she was asserting her title in hostility to the title under the tax deed.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

Recovery of land after tax sale. Under a statute limiting the time in which an action may be brought for the recovery of real estate sold for taxes, the possession by the owner necessary to bar an action by the tax titleholder is ordinarily not the possession required under the general statute of limitations and need not be adverse, but need be only such possession as would entitle the tax titleholder to maintain an action against the owner.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

11009 Judgments.

Reducing statute of limitation on judgments. A legislative act which reduces the existing statutory period of time in which existing judgments may be enforced, yet accords to the holders of such judgments a reasonable time in which to enforce said judgments before the reduced time becomes an absolute bar, is not violative of the "due process" or "impairment of contract" clauses of the federal constitution.

Berg v Berg, 221-326; 264 NW 821

11010 Fraud—mistake—trespass.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 704—Fraud tolling statute of limitations

ANALYSIS

- I FRAUDS WITHIN STATUTE
- II FRAUDS NOT WITHIN STATUTE
- III MISTAKE
- IV KNOWLEDGE OF FRAUD OR MISTAKE

I FRAUDS WITHIN STATUTE

Concealment. Whether an action for damages for fraudulent representations is barred by the statute of limitation is properly presented to the jury, on evidence that the defendants had for several years concealed the fraudulent acts and conduct which they had perpetrated on the plaintiff.

Reinertson v Prod. Co., 205-417; 216 NW 68

Fraud — concealment — effect. A fraud-doer who by a subsequent fraud conceals the original fraud from his victim thereby tolls the statute of limitation on the original fraud until such time as the original fraud is discovered, or in reason ought to have been discovered. This is true irrespective of this section.

Pullan v Struthers, 201-1179; 207 NW 235

Foreclosure proceeding withheld—insufficient evidence. Evidence held quite insufficient to establish a charge to the effect that a plaintiff was fraudulently induced to withhold mortgage foreclosure proceeding.

Andrew v Bank, 215-401; 246 NW 48

Fraud — jury questions. Whether an action at law for damages consequent on fraud is barred by the statute of limitation, may depend, inter alia, on a finding of fact by the jury as to the time when plaintiff discovered the fraud, or should have discovered it by the exercise of due diligence; also whether defendant concealed his liability from plaintiff.

Vertman v Drayton, 223-380; 272 NW 438

Injury to property — trespass. The cause of action in favor of a mortgagee and against a third party for wrongfully entering upon the mortgaged premises and removing gravel therefrom, and thereby impairing the mortgage security, accrues when the gravel is removed—when the actual injury is inflicted—not when the mortgagee discovers said injury.

New York Ins. v Clay Co., 221-966; 267 NW 79

II FRAUDS NOT WITHIN STATUTE

Accessible fraud. An administrator may not, after the lapse of more than five years from his final discharge, be compelled to account for funds claimed to have been fraudulently withheld by him, when the evidence of such withholding was accessible to the complainant at and prior to the time the order of discharge was entered.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

Concealment. A plaintiff who, after the lapse of five years, brings his action for damages consequent on the fraudulent sale of corporate stock, must meet the plea of the statute of limitation by proof that, notwithstanding due diligence on his part, knowledge of the fraud perpetrated upon him, has been fraudulently concealed from him by the defendant.

II FRAUDS NOT WITHIN STATUTE—concluded

Conklin v Towne, 204-916; 216 NW 264

Fraud. An action for damages consequent on a fraud which was discovered seven years prior to commencement of the action is necessarily barred by the statute of limitations.

Van Every v Crawford, 207-1049; 221 NW 914

Fraud—concurrent remedies. An equitable action for an accounting for royalties on a patent sounding in damages and based on the fraud of the defendant is barred in five years after the fraud is perpetrated, nothing being pleaded to toll the statute.

Benedict v Hall, 201-488; 207 NW 606

Fraud—discovery—when statute tolled. Unless the fraud be fraudulently concealed by some affirmative act of the fraud perpetrator, a law action for damages on account of such fraud, not being an action solely cognizable in equity prior to the adoption of the statute, the five-year statute of limitations is not tolled by nondiscovery of the fraud.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

Father and son partnership—mother as partner after father's death—dissolution. Where father and son were partners, and the partnership after father's death was continued with the mother, and tho she refused the son funds but did not, until 10 years after father died, specifically inform the son that she denied his status as a partner, the son's cause of action against his mother for an accounting and dissolution was neither barred by limitation nor laches.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

Sale of bonds—fraud—discovery. Under the rule that the statute of limitations begins to run on a law action for fraud when the fraud is consummated unless tolled by an intentional fraudulent concealment, and since this section does not apply to law actions, in a case where bonds were sold in 1922 and buyers could have secured at any time a detailed statement of the securities held for payment of the bonds, the buyers cannot claim they did not discover, until 1933, fraud in the sale of the bonds.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

III MISTAKE

Mistake—reformation of deed. The statute of limitation does not commence to run against an action to reform a deed on the ground of mutual mistake until the mistake has been discovered.

American Bk. v Borcharding, 205-633; 216 NW 719

Mistake—statute operative from time of discovery. A cause of action for relief on the ground of mistake is not barred until five years after the mistake was discovered.

Winker v Tiefenthaler, 225-180; 279 NW 436

Mistake tolling statute—burden of proving nondiscovery on pleader. A mortgagee, seeking to reform his mortgage to correct an error in the real estate description and escape the statute of limitations on the ground of mutual mistake which tolled the statute until discovered, has the burden of showing he did not discover the error until a time within five years before bringing action, and without which proof the statute operates as a bar.

Beerman v Beerman, 225-48; 279 NW 449; 118 ALR 997

Computation of period under mistake of law. Where a sheriff collects fees under a mistake of law, the failure to discover a mistake of law will not toll the running of the statute of limitations. The word "mistake" in this section means mistake of fact.

George v Webster County, 211-164; 233 NW 49

Morgan v Jasper County, 223-1044; 274 NW 310; 111 ALR 634

Fraud and mistake distinguished. Relief from the statute of limitations on account of fraud is in equity based on good conscience; whereas, when pure mistake is the ground for relief, there is no occasion for weighing matters of conscience against either party.

Beerman v Beerman, 225-48; 279 NW 449; 118 ALR 997

IV KNOWLEDGE OF FRAUD OR MISTAKE

Fraud — discovery — record of deed — effect. A creditor will be deemed to have notice of the fraudulent character of duly recorded conveyances by his debtor.

Bristow v Lange, 221-904; 266 NW 808

Sale of bonds—damage accrual—later exchange no concealment of fraud. Where bonds purchased in 1922 were exchanged in 1927 and 1932 for new bonds, the damage from fraud in their sale, if any, occurred when they were first purchased, and when neither the actual fraud itself nor due diligence to discover the same are proven, the subsequent exchange transactions will not toll the statute as a concealment of the original fraud, especially if none existed.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

11011 Open account.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 150

Open accounts. Tho a continuous, open account runs for many years, the statute of limitation commences to run from the date of the last item.

In re Ransom, 219-284; 258 NW 78

Account—long lapse of time between items. A lapse of three years, and a lapse of 15 months, between credit items of an account, they being the last items in the account, do not constitute such breaks in the account as to start the running of the statute of limitation before the date of the last payment.

Ritter v Schultz, 211-106; 232 NW 830

Construction of pleading. Petition reviewed and held, on its face, to reveal an action on a continuous, open, current account and not an action on a single contract or order for a stipulated amount.

Miller v Boyce, 219-534; 258 NW 764

Continuous salary account. Statute of limitations will not commence to run against a continuous running salary account until the status of such account is changed.

Bankers Trust Co. v Economy Coal Co., 224-36; 276 NW 16

County claims for care of insane. When a county was not liable for the support of a person committed to a state institution as insane, and through the negligence and laches of its officials paid such support for about 14 years before objecting, the negligence was imputed to the county, and the bar of laches prevented a recovery for such expenditures from the county which should have paid, but the burden of continuing payments was on the other county from the time payments ceased.

State v Clay County, 226-885; 285 NW 229

Current account (?) or separate accounts (?). On the issue whether a claim against an estate was based on one continuous, open, current account, or on separate and distinct accounts, to some of which the statute of limitation would apply, evidence held to support the rulings of the court on the introduction of evidence, and the findings of the jury.

In re Davis, 217-509; 248 NW 497

“Continuous, open, current account” defined. A series of independent express contracts for services to be performed for an agreed compensation does not constitute a “continuous, open, current account”.

Sammon v Roach, 211-1104; 235 NW 78

Fraud or mistake. An account stated may always be opened for fraud or mistake.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

Improper assumption of fact. Prejudicial error results from directing the jury, on conflicting evidence, that a claim sued on was an “open, current, and running” account.

Seddon v Richardson, 200-763; 205 NW 307

Interest items—not series of transactions to toll statute. In an action by a widow to establish a claim against the estate of her deceased husband based on an alleged oral contract of decedent to repay a loan of money made by appellant widow to decedent, prior to November 1, 1912, to which the statute of limitations was pleaded, held, mere posting of items of interest applicable to one individual transaction is insufficient to show a “connected series of transactions” so as to convert the matter into a “continuous, open, current account” under statute providing cause of action accrues on date of last item, as this means a connected series of transactions.

Leland v Johnson, 227-520; 288 NW 595

Interruption—instructions. The fragmentary nature of the evidence in proof of the rendition of alleged services may justify the court in instructing as to the effect of any interruptions in the running of the account, even tho there be no direct evidence of such interruptions.

Peterson v Johnson, 205-16; 212 NW 138

School tuition deemed open account. In an action to recover tuition accumulating yearly during the period from 1930 to 1937, the court properly held that the portion of the claim accruing in the period from 1930 to 1932 was not barred by a five-year statute of limitations, since a further statute made a cause of action on a continuous, open, and current account accrue on the date of the last item therein.

School Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

Time lapse starting statute. A lapse of a year and seven months between the first two credit items on a continuous, open, current account is not sufficient to start the running of the statute of limitation prior to the date of the last item.

Miller v Boyce, 219-534; 258 NW 764

11012 Commencement of action.

Insufficient “commencement”. In landlord attachment, the filing of a petition only, and the issuance of the writ prior to the expiration of six months after the termination of the lease, and the levying of the writ after the expiration of said six months, do not constitute the “commencement” of an action in such sense as will preserve the lien against a general creditor who levies after the expiration of said six months.

O'Donnell v Davis, 201-214; 205 NW 347

Defect of notice of commencement of action—noninterruption of running of limitations. In action to recover erroneous refund of income tax, summons addressed to marshal only and commanding him to summon named defendants to appear on specific date “to answer to a complaint filed by the United States of America” was defective as not addressed to defendants, not stating cause of action, and not describing consequences of failure to defend, and hence did not interrupt running of limitations as of date of service.

U. S. v French, 95 F 2d, 922

Filing probate application not commencement of action. When heirs filed an application in probate, more than 10 years after the clerk had approved certain claims, asking that the claims be disallowed and expunged from the record, the right to object to such claims was not barred by the statute of limitations, as the filing of the application was an appearance prior to any final adjudication in the still pending proceedings to collect such claims, rather than the commencement of an action.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 641

Service of notice. An action to modify a judgment for mistake therein is "commenced", under §12793, C., '24, by the service of the notice of such action.

Reno v Avery, 203-645; 212 NW 564

Unsigned notice. An unsigned original notice is a nullity.

Citizens Bank v Taylor, 201-499; 207 NW 570

When action deemed commenced. An action to enforce a mechanic's lien is deemed commenced at the time the original notice of the action is delivered to the sheriff for immediate service.

Consumers Lbr. v Rozema, 212-696; 237 NW 433

11013 Nonresidence.

Nonresidence. Intermittent absences from the state by a debtor in looking after his business affairs do not toll the statute.

Freet v Holdorf, 201-748; 206 NW 609

11014 Bar in foreign jurisdiction.

Nonresidence. Action on a promissory note apparently executed and delivered in this state and not shown to have been elsewhere executed and delivered, is not barred simply because an action on the note could not be maintained in another state to which the maker had removed.

In re Thorne, 202-681; 210 NW 952

Bar in foreign state — effect. Action on a promissory note executed in a foreign state is barred in this state when action is barred in said foreign state, even tho such promissory note was given in renewal and in lieu of a note executed in this state.

Martin v Martin, 205-209; 217 NW 818

11016 Exception in case of death.

See under §11007 (XIII)

Statute not suspended by death of claim holder.

Hodgson v Keppel, 211-795; 232 NW 725

11017 Failure of action.

Applicability of statute. This section is not available to a plaintiff who has validly contracted for the period within which to begin his action and who begins his second action after expiration of the contract period.

Taylor v Railway, 208-1396; 227 NW 407

Dismissal — right to recommence action. A plaintiff who voluntarily dismisses his action without prejudice because, without negligence on his part, he is unable to proceed with the trial when the cause is reached on the assignment, has the right to recommence said action at any time within six months following said dismissal and to have said latter action treated as a continuation of said dismissed action, even tho the statutory period for bringing said action would, otherwise, have expired subsequent to said dismissal and prior to reinstating the action.

Weisz v Moore, 222-492; 265 NW 606; 269 NW 443

Improper procedure. After judgment of dismissal of an action has been entered, plaintiff's right to bring a new action within six months and have it deemed a continuance of the first action (for the purpose of the statute of limitation) can only be exercised by the institution of a new action precisely as tho no prior action had been brought by him. Simply filing a new petition in the defunct prior proceeding is quite futile.

Bird v Nelson, 216-262; 249 NW 393

Loss of right to equitable relief. A duly entered judgment against plaintiff on the merits in a law action, and affirmed on appeal, constitutes a final judgment, and this section furnishes no authority to plaintiff thereafter to file in the adjudicated law action a "substituted petition in equity" (and motion to transfer to equity) involving the same subject matter, and no authority or jurisdiction to the court to entertain such attempted action.

Phoenix Ins. v Fuller, 216-1201; 250 NW 499

New action after failure of former action. An action in equity to mandamus the board of supervisors to order the refund of a tax which has been illegally exacted from plaintiff, may not be deemed a continuation of a former action at law by the same plaintiff against the county and its treasurer for a personal judgment for the amount of said illegally exacted tax.

Murphy v Board, 205-256; 215 NW 744

11018 Admission in writing—new promise.

Admission by attorney — competency. Whether a letter, signed only by the attorney for a debtor and containing an admission of the unpaidness of a debt which is barred by the statute of limitation, is admissible to show a revival of the debt, quaere.

Koht v Dean, 220-86; 261 NW 491

Admission in writing. In an action by a widow to establish a claim against her deceased husband's estate based on an oral contract to repay to appellant widow a sum of money loaned to decedent prior to November 1, 1912, wherein it is shown by the record of entries in decedent's ledger and by checks signed and deposited by the decedent to joint savings account with the widow, that interest was computed on what purported to be a loan of $4,000, and even tho the statute of limitations had run, the conduct, circumstantial evidence, and admissions of the party to be charged sufficiently showed the existence of a contract so as to make applicable the statute providing for revival of contract by admission in writing.

Leland v Johnson, 227-520; 288 NW 595

Admission to attorney. A communication made by a client to his attorney, relative to the unpaidness of a debt then barred by the statute of limitation, cannot be deemed a confidential communication when made for the very purpose of being communicated to the holder of the barred debt, or to the latter's attorney.

Koht v Dean, 220-86; 261 NW 491

Agreement to pay loan in accordance with terms of note—evidence. Evidence held insufficient to show that an oral promise was made to pay a loan in accordance with the terms of a contemporaneously executed note, and that consequently the claim sued on was barred by the statute of limitations.

Hodgson v Keppel, 211-795; 232 NW 725

Ancient mortgage—debt extended—effect on lien. An admission of an old indebtedness, extending the debt another 10 years, starts the running of the statute of limitations anew, and the lien of a mortgage securing the debt is thereby extended for 20 years from its execution date, but as to whether the lien continues thereafter until the indebtedness secured by it would be barred, quaere.

Lackey v Melcher, 225-698; 281 NW 225

Lien—mortgage recitation of previous mortgage as extension—priority. A property owner gave a note and mortgage in 1915, due in 1920, but which was not paid; and in 1930, before it was barred by the statute of limitations, he gave a second mortgage reciting therein the existence of the prior mortgage, after which in 1931 he gave another note and mortgage to the heirs of the first mortgagee as a renewal of the 1915 mortgage, held that the recitation as to the first mortgage in the second mortgage extended the indebtedness of the first mortgage, so that by renewal of the first mortgage, even after 10 years, it retained priority over the second mortgage.

Lackey v Melcher, 225-698; 281 NW 225

Lost admission in writing reviving debt. An admittedly executed but lost written instrument providing for a payment on a real estate mortgage was an admission of indebtedness sufficient to revive the debt barred by the statute of limitations, since neither the amount nor the indebtedness need be specifically referred to, for if the natural and necessary inference from the writing is an admission of an unpaid indebtedness, it is sufficient.

Barton v Boland, 224-1215; 279 NW 87

Oral promise to pay. Whether an oral promise to pay a debt tolls the statute of limitation, quaere.

Bundy v Canning Co., 215-674; 244 NW 841

Oral promise prior to bar. The statute of limitation may be tolled by an admission that the debt is unpaid, or by a promise to pay the debt, made either before or after the statute has run, but such admission or promise must be in writing and signed by the party to be charged.

In re Sleezer, 209-56; 227 NW 644

Reference to prior mortgage in later admission of debt—revival of action. A statement in a second mortgage, that the premises are encumbered by another prior mortgage as of a certain date, constitutes an admission of that indebtedness such as to start the statute of limitations running anew, and the particular mortgage referred to may be established by extrinsic evidence.

Lackey v Melcher, 225-698; 281 NW 225

Revival of contract by undelivered check. In an action by a widow to establish a claim against deceased husband's estate based on an oral contract to repay a loan made by appellant widow to decedent prior to November 1, 1912, wherein the widow offers evidence of a check purported to have been issued to widow by husband for "interest 1935, 6 months" and deposited by him in joint account with his wife, and it is claimed by appellee that since check was not delivered to appellant widow nor to anyone acting for her, the writing is insufficient, held, such memorandum need not be delivered to opposite party nor his agent nor a person in privity with him, but is sufficient if it is signed and in any way promulgated so as to become an instrument of evidence.

Leland v Johnson, 227-520; 288 NW 595

Special limitations unaffected by general. The limitation contained in §11028, C., '35, requiring mortgage foreclosure within 20 years, is subject only to the exceptions contained in that section, and not to the exceptions appearing in this section, dealing with revival of action by admission of the indebtedness. This section applies only to the general statute of limitations.

Lackey v Melcher, 225-698; 281 NW 225

Sufficiency of admission of unpaidness. A promissory note, action on which is barred by the statute of limitation, is revived by a duly signed letter of the maker which, while not directly and specifically stating in the language of the statute "that the note is unpaid", naturally and necessarily does so assert from the language used; and this is true even tho the letter contains a plea to the generosity of the creditor to compromise on the basis of a lesser amount.

McClure v Smeltzer, 222-732; 269 NW 888

Supplementing admission by extrinsic evidence. A written acknowledgment by a debtor that a debt, action on which is barred by the statute of limitation, is unpaid, may, for the purpose of showing a revival of the debt, be supplemented by extrinsic evidence which clearly identifies the unpaid debt and the amount thereof.

Koht v Dean, 220-86; 261 NW 491

Unsigned extension. An unsigned indorsement in the handwriting of the maker of a promissory note, and appearing on the back thereof, and made with the knowledge of the payee, and purporting to extend the note to a named future date does not toll the statute of limitation.

King v Knudson, 209-1214; 229 NW 839

11019 Counterclaim.

Section applied.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

Administrator's funds set off against insolvent bank holding secured note. An estate's deposit in an insolvent bank may be set off against a note held by bank, and contention that debts lacked mutuality was ineffective.

First Natl. Bk. v Malone, 76 F 2d, 251

Barred claim as counterclaim. A defendant, sued on his promissory note to plaintiff, may counterclaim by pleading an admittedly barred claim in defendant's favor and against plaintiff, and arising out of a former partnership between said parties, provided said barred claim was not barred when said note was executed.

Stuff v Stuff, 219-869; 259 NW 924

Judgment assigned by bank receiver. A judgment rendered on May 28, 1926, in favor of a state bank, and later assigned by the receiver of said bank, absolutely ceases to exist on January 1, 1934, for any purpose whatsoever, except as a counterclaim, unless, prior to said latter date, the holder of said judgment and the judgment debtor file in said cause a written stipulation continuing the life of said judgment. (§11033-e1, C., '35 [§11033.1, C., '89]).

Johnson v Keir, 220-69; 261 NW 792

Right to offset on debt to bank. A bank may apply the deposit of a deceased depositor on the promissory note of the depositor to the bank, even tho such note is barred by the statute of limitation.

Merritt v Peterson, 208-672; 222 NW 853

Scope of statute. The statutory right under the general statute of limitations to plead as a counterclaim a barred claim does not extend to a claim barred under a limitation contained in a distinctly different chapter of the code, e. g., a claim for a landlord's lien.

Miller & Chaney Bk. v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550

11020 Injunction.

See annotations under §11007

SPECIAL LIMITATIONS

11021 Recovery by cestui que trust.

From time of repudiation. Principle reaffirmed that the statute of limitation commences to run against an action to enforce a trust from the time the trustee openly repudiates the trust relationship.

11024 Claims to real estate antedating 1920.

11028 Foreclosure of ancient mortgages.

Lien—mortgage recitation of previous mortgage as extension—priority. A property owner gave a note and mortgage in 1915, due in 1920, but which was not paid and in 1930, before it was barred by the statute of limitations, he gave a second mortgage reciting therein the existence of the prior mortgage, after which in 1931 he gave another note and mortgage to the heirs of the first mortgagee as a renewal of the 1915 mortgage, held that the recitation as to the first mortgage in the second mortgage extended the indebtedness of the first mortgage, so that by renewal of the first mortgage, even after 10 years, it retained priority over the second mortgage.

Lackey v Melcher, 225-698; 281 NW 225

Ancient mortgage—debt extended—effect on lien. An admission of an old indebtedness, extending the debt another 10 years, starts the running of the statute of limitations anew, and the lien of a mortgage securing the debt is thereby extended for 20 years from its execution date, but as to whether the lien continues thereafter until the indebtedness secured by it would be barred, quaere.

Lackey v Melcher, 225-698; 281 NW 225

Special limitations unaffected by general. The limitation contained in this section, requiring mortgage foreclosure within 20 years, is subject only to the exceptions contained in this section, and not to the exceptions appearing in §11018, C., '35, dealing with revival of action by admission of the indebtedness. This latter section applies only to the general statute of limitations.

Lackey v Melcher, 225-698; 281 NW 225

CHAPTER 487.1

SPECIAL LIMITATIONS ON JUDGMENTS

11033.1 Execution on certain judgments prohibited.

Deficiency judgment as basis for receivership. See under §12372 (VII)
Deficiency judgments generally. See under §12377

Failure to raise statute of limitations as defense in lower court—effect. A defense under statute of limitations not raised in lower court cannot be considered on appeal.

In re Christensen, 227-1028; 290 NW 34

Reducing statute of limitation on judgments. A legislative act which reduces the existing statutory period of time in which existing judgments may be enforced, yet accords to the holders of such judgments a reasonable time in which to enforce said judgments before the reduced time becomes an absolute bar, is not violative of the "due process" or "impairment of contract" clauses of the federal constitution.

Berg v Berg, 221-326; 264 NW 821

Permissible classification for purpose of legislation. The legislative act which singles out four classes of judgments only, and markedly reduces the period of time theretofore granted by statute for their enforcement, does not constitute prohibited class legislation because the court will judicially take notice of the fact that the enumerated judgments and the claims out of which they arise are generally, if not uniformly, attended by such superior facilities and opportunities for collection as to justify a statute of limitation applicable to them alone.

Berg v Berg, 221-326; 264 NW 821

Statute construed—two-year limitation on foreclosure judgments. Statutory provision that no judgment rendered in foreclosure proceedings "shall be enforced and * * * no force or vitality given thereto for any purpose" after two years from entry thereof, means that after two years, no action could be brought on judgment, no execution could issue thereon, the judgment would not be a lien, no proceedings to enforce the judgment could be commenced by issuance of an execution, and, generally, the judgment would be without force or effect.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

Administrator's settlement of unenforceable lien. Altho a settlement agreement was made between a claimant and an administrator, a decedent's homestead may not be subjected to a mortgage or judgment which has never become a lien thereon, which was not filed or allowed against the estate, which was not enforced within two years after judgment entry, and when such settlement was never approved by the probate court.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

Equitable action—waiver of foreclosure decree—nontransfer to law. In a suit brought for money judgment, foreclosure of mortgage, and appointment of a receiver, the plaintiff does not transform the equity action to a suit at law by waiving the foreclosure decree, and therefore the judgment therein is governed by the special limitation provided for judgments obtained in actions for foreclosure of real estate mortgages.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

Execution levy before judgment barred—validity of sale thereafter. If execution proceedings are instituted and levy made during the lifetime of the judgment, a sale thereunder is valid, tho held after the judgment is barred by the statute of limitations.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

11033.2 Revival of certain judgments prohibited.

Judgment assigned by bank receiver—irrevocable termination. A judgment rendered on May 23, 1926, in favor of a state bank, and later assigned by the receiver of said bank, absolutely ceases to exist on January 1, 1934, for any purpose whatsoever, except as a counterclaim, unless, prior to said latter date, the holder of said judgment and the judgment debtor file in said cause a written stipulation continuing the life of said judgment.

Johnson v Keir, 220-69; 261 NW 792

11033.3 Future judgments without foreclosure.

Discussion. See 25 ILR 146—Mortgages—debt barred

11033.4 Former judgments without foreclosure.

Equitable action—waiver of foreclosure decree—nontransfer to law. In a suit brought for money judgment, foreclosure of mortgage, and appointment of a receiver, the plaintiff does not transform the equity action to a suit at law by waiving the foreclosure decree, and therefore the judgment therein is governed by the special limitation provided for judgments obtained in actions for foreclosure of real estate mortgages.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

Judgment on note—two-year limitation—effect on mortgage foreclosure. Statute outlawing, after two years, a judgment on a promissory note secured by a mortgage did not bar a subsequent foreclosure of the mortgage, commenced before the judgment was barred but while the debt was unpaid, altho the foreclosure decree was not entered until after the judgment on the note was outlawed by the statute.

Beckett v Clark, 225-1012; 282 NW 724; 121 ALR 912

CHAPTER 488

PLACE OF BRINGING ACTIONS

11034 Real property.

Action to cancel trust deed. An action to cancel a trust deed (which in legal effect is a mortgage), and the lien thereof, and to quiet plaintiff's title to the land is strictly local, and is properly brought in the county in which the land is situated, even tho plaintiff also prays for the cancellation of the promissory notes—a proceeding which would be transitory if separately brought.

Eckhardt v Trust Co., 218-983; 252 NW 373

Action to establish and foreclose vendee's lien. An action by the vendee of land for rescission of the contract, for personal judgment against the defendant, and for the establishment and foreclosure of a lien on the land for the purchase money paid under mutual mistake, is properly brought in the county in which the land is located, irrespective of the residence of the defendant.

Lee v Bank, 209-609; 228 NW 570

Cancellation of mortgage as real action—venue change to land situs. Ultimate test of applicability of this section is not whether proceeding is in personam or in rem but whether determination of a right in real estate is involved, and therefore an action for cancellation of mortgages involving a determination of a right in real estate, which is the subject of the action, must be brought in the county where the land is located, and granting change of venue thereto will be upheld on certiorari.

Whalen v Ring, 224-267; 276 NW 409

Foreclosure—lands in different counties—sale—validity. Under an ordinary mortgage foreclosure decree, covering land both in the county in which the decree is rendered and in an adjoining county, the clerk has authority to issue a special execution embracing the lands in both counties, and the sheriff of the county in which the execution is issued has authority to make a valid sale in his county of all said lands.

Tice v Tice, 208-145; 224 NW 571

Recovery of realty—jurisdictional venue. An action by the beneficiaries of a trust in real estate (located in this state) to compel the trustee holding title to convey the land, in accordance with the terms of the trust agreement, to a newly designated trustee, must be brought and litigated in the county in which the land, or some part thereof, is located. If not so brought, the court is under mandatory duty, on motion for change of venue, to transfer the action to a proper county.

Titus Co. v Kelsey, 221-1368; 268 NW 23

11035 Injuries to real property.

Questions undeterminable on certiorari. On certiorari to test the legality of an order denying petitioner a change of venue to the county of his residence, the supreme court cannot determine whether the respondent judge correctly determined (1) that a cause of action was pleaded against petitioner's co-defendant, or (2) that said co-defendant was, in fact, a resident of the county of suit, or (3) that the cause of action pleaded in the original suit was for injury to real estate.

Reason: The lower court had jurisdiction to rule on all said matters, and said rulings, tho erroneous, are not illegal acts within the law of certiorari.

Adams v Smith, 216-1365; 250 NW 466

11036 Local actions.

Official action. An action against a sheriff to set aside an execution sale by him must be brought in the county in which the sheriff made the sale, irrespective of the residence of other party defendants.

Brownell v Bank, 201-781; 208 NW 210

Certiorari—when writ lies—ruling on venue. Certiorari will not lie to review the action of the trial court in overruling a motion by the state appeal board for a change of venue of a trial questioning a decision of such board.

State Board v Dist. Court, 225-296; 280 NW 525

Action where school district located—propriety. An action against the state appeal board to review its rulings affecting a school district under the local budget law is properly brought in the county where the school district was located and where proceedings on the levy involved were held from which resulted the board's ruling.

11038 Resident—attachment.

Unallowable place of suit. All of three separately joined causes of action are brought in the wrong county (1) when brought in a county which is not the residence of the defendant; (2) when one cause of action authorizes suit in the said county, but on its face reveals a presumption of full payment; and (3) when the other two causes of action are admittedly not suable in said county.

Smith v Morrison, 203-245; 212 NW 567

Action on stock subscription. A stockholder of a dissolved corporation is entitled to a change of venue to the county of his residence when sued on a stock subscription in a county where he does not reside.

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 215 NW 261

Enjoining action in foreign state. A defendant who is a resident of this state may, even after he has filed formal answer, enjoin a plaintiff who is a resident of this state from maintaining in a foreign state an action on a contract arising in this state, when said action is sought to be maintained for the purpose of vexatiously harassing the defendant and subjecting him to unnecessary costs, part of which are untaxable as costs.

Bankers Life v Loring, 217-534; 250 NW 8

Foreign assignee of note—assignor and makers residents of state—no jurisdiction. In an action on a note by an assignee, resident of a different state than makers, held, improperly brought in federal court where assignee derived title through indorsers residing in same state as makers.

Sargent v State Bk. & Tr. Co., 12 F 2d, 758

11039 Transfer—attached property held.

Harmless refusal to transfer action. Error in refusing to transfer an action to the county of defendant's residence becomes inconsequential when, in the further making up of the issues, either by additional pleadings in the case itself or by intervention therein or by proper consolidation of the action with other actions, the nature of the final action as tried becomes such that it might have been brought originally against all the defendants in the county in which the original action or actions were brought.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Action against executor as such. An action at law against an executor as such, in the county in which he was appointed such officer, for damages for personal injuries inflicted by the deceased, is, in legal effect, but an action in rem against the assets of the estate. It follows that the executor is not entitled to demand a change of place of trial to another county of which he is a legal resident.

11040 Place of contract.

Unallowable place of suit. All of three separately joined causes of action are brought in the wrong county (1) when brought in a county which is not the residence of the defendant; (2) when one cause of action authorizes suit in the said county, but on its face reveals a presumption of full payment; and (3) when the other two causes of action are admittedly not suable in said county.

Smith v Morrison, 203-245; 212 NW 567

Action against supervisors in re drainage bonds. An action against the board of supervisors relative to public drainage bonds must be brought in the county of which such supervisors are officials, even tho such bonds provide for payment in some other county. It follows that when not so brought a motion for change of venue to the proper county must be sustained. So held where the action sought not only a judgment at law against the supervisors for the amount due on the bonds, but sought mandamus to compel the levy of assessments.

Board v Dist. Court, 209-1030; 229 NW 711

Change of venue—indorser and maker in different counties. In action against maker and indorser of promissory note brought in county of maker's residence where note was payable, the indorser's motion for change of venue to county of its residence was properly overruled.

Lockie v McCauley, (NOR); 213 NW 768

Contracts performable in county. A municipal court has jurisdiction on personal service on the defendant within this state, but outside the county of the court's organization, to render judgment for not exceeding $1,000 on a promissory note signed by the defendant and payable within the said county, even tho the defendant is a nonresident of said county.

West v Heyman, 214-1173; 241 NW 451

Implication to pay in certain county. A mere implication arising from a writing that payments maturing under the writing will be made at a certain place in a certain county, furnishes no legal basis for bringing action in said county when defendant is an actual resident of some other county. Basis for such action in a county other than that of defendant's residence must be found in the express terms of the writing. So held in an action by a holder of drainage bonds to recover assessments on land to pay the bonds.

Bechtel v Dist. Court, 215-295; 245 NW 299

Implied place of performance. The fact that a writing is, by implication only, performable in a certain county, does not justify the bringing of an action thereon in said county when the defendant is a resident of the state but a nonresident of said county.

Adams v Smith, 216-1365; 250 NW 466

Indorser sued in wrong county. The indorser in blank of a promissory note, when sued alone on his indorsement in the county in which the note requires the maker to make payment, is entitled to a change of venue to the county of his residence when said first county is not the county of his residence in this state.

Dougherty v Shankland, 217-951; 251 NW 73
See Darling v Blazek, 142-355; 120 NW 961

Reformation of promissory note. An equitable action for the reformation of a promissory note, by changing the name of the payee, and for judgment on the note as reformed, cannot be maintained in the county wherein the note by its terms is payable, when the defendant's residence is elsewhere in this state, and he properly moves for a change of venue.

Palmas v Tankersley, 218-416; 255 NW 514

Iowa employment contract—action—place of business. Action for damages under oral contract of employment made in Iowa is not governed by the place where the contract was entered into, but may be maintained in state where employer's business was "localized."

Severson v Hanford Air Lines, 105 F 2d, 622

Nonpermissible motion. In an action in the county in which a promissory note is specifically made payable, and against the apparent signers of the note, it is not permissible for a defendant to file a motion to transfer the action to the county of his residence on the ex parte showing that he never signed said note, or authorized or ratified, or confirmed any signing of said note in his name.

Greenland v Carter, 219-369; 258 NW 678

11041 Certain carriers and transmission companies—actions against.

Resident and nonresident defendants. A resident of this state who is sued in a county of which he is not a resident, as a joint defendant with a nonresident railway corporation, may have the entire cause transferred for trial to the county of his residence, even tho the railway corporation is operating its line in the county in which the suit is brought, it appearing that the nonresident defendant would not be materially inconvenienced by said transfer.

Nickell v Dist. Court, 202-408; 210 NW 563

Actions against common carriers. Statute providing that "an action may be brought against any railway corporation, the owner of stages, or other line of coaches or cars * * * in any county through which such road or line passes or is operated" was apparently based upon the thought that the public interest and convenience would be promoted by permitting suits against common carriers in any counties on their lines.

Bruce Transfer v Johnston, 227-50; 287 NW 278

Venue change denied. The terms "line", "stage", "car" and "other line of coaches and cars" as defined at the time of the enactment of the statute specifying venue of actions against carriers are comprehensive enough to include the operations of a transfer company as a common carrier using motor vehicles, and a damage action against such motor vehicle carrier is properly brought in a county where an automobile collided with one of the carrier's trucks while traveling over its regular route, altho company had no office in such county.

Bruce Transfer v Johnston, 227-50; 287 NW 278

Construction—interpretation as of time of enactment. Whether or not the intendment of the legislature as expressed in a statute providing that "an action may be brought against any railway corporation, the owner of stages, or other line of coaches or cars * * * in any county through which such road or line passes or is operated" included a transfer company using motor vehicle freight trucks operating over a regular route must be determined through interpretation of the words of the statute as of the time adopted.

11042 Construction companies.

Construction of highway. Subgrading a street preparatory to putting down curbing and guttering constitutes "construction of a highway improvement" within the meaning of this section and the contractor is suable by the subcontractor in any county where the contract is made or performed, irrespective of the residence of the defendant.

Goben v Akin, 208-1354; 227 NW 400

Retroactive operation—venue. A plaintiff may avail himself of a statute which regulates the venue of the action, and which is in force when the action is brought, irrespective of the fact that the statute was not in force when the cause of action accrued.

Goben v Akin, 208-1354; 227 NW 400

11043 Insurance companies.

Assignee of policy—venue. The assignee of a fractional interest in a life insurance policy may, in conjunction with the original beneficiary (who retains the remaining fractional interest), maintain an action on the policy in the county of which the assignee is a resident, even tho said county is not the county of which the original beneficiary is a resident.

11044 Nonlife insurance assessments.

Class legislation—venue. The legislature may validly classify the subject of insurance into (1) life insurance and (2) nonlife insurance and validly enact that actions to recover assessments under nonlife insurance contracts shall be brought in the county of the defendant's residence without applying the same statutory rule to life insurance companies.

Midwest Ins. v DeHoet, 208-49; 222 NW 548

Impairment of contract—existing statutes. An insurance company may not complain that its contracts are impaired by an unrepealed statute which was enacted prior to its incorporation and which provides that actions on assessments shall be brought in the county in which the defendant resides.

Midwest Ins. v DeHoet, 208-49; 222 NW 548

11044.1 Nonlife insurance premiums or notes.

Statutory change in venue of action. A legislative change in the venue of an action may be validly applied to an existing contract.

Grain Belt Ins. v Gentry, 208-21; 222 NW 855

11046 Office or agency.

Acts not constituting. The act of a corporation whose business was that of a retail clothier in contracting to pay an individual a commission for finding a purchaser for the corporation's real estate in a foreign county (which was the residence of said individual, and which real estate was being used as a branch store), does not constitute the establishment by the corporation of an "office or agency" in such foreign county for the sale of such real estate, no control over the actions of such individual being retained by the corporation.

Syndicate Co. v Garfield, 204-159; 214 NW 598

Change of place of trial—insufficient showing. A defendant who is sued in a county on the theory that the action grew out of an agency maintained by him in said county, is not entitled to have the action transferred to the county of his residence on the simple showing that the particular agent who was in charge when the transaction took place was not such agent when the action was commenced.

Tracy v Oil Co., 208-882; 226 NW 178

Nature or subject of action—agency in county in which action brought. Action on a contract of agency wherein plaintiff is given the exclusive right to make sales on commission in a named county, is properly brought in said county even tho the contract was elsewhere executed, and even tho defendant does not reside in said county.

Hawbaker v Laco Co., 210-544; 231 NW 347

Service on agent at maintained agency. A foreign joint stock land bank must be held to maintain an "office or agency" within the meaning of this section and §11079, C., '35, when, in a county of this state, it maintains a so-called "fieldman" charged with the duty of generally caring for and leasing (under limited authority) the lands belonging to the bank in some 14 counties of this state; and this is true tho said "fieldman" is not designated by the bank as having any office other than his residence in a designated county.

Higdon v Lincoln JSL Bank, 223-57; 272 NW 93

Substituted service on agent of nonresident. Whether a nonresident may be legally sued in this state by service in this state on an alleged, resident agent (on a cause of action growing out of such alleged agency) must necessarily be determined by resorting (1) to the express contract, if any, between the resident and nonresident parties, and (2) to the course of dealings existing between the said parties. Held, agency not shown, even tho an officer of the alleged resident agent was a director of the nonresident defendant, and even tho the nonresident defendant paid commission on sales to the alleged resident agent.

Toole Co. v Group, 217-414; 251 NW 689

Suit in foreign county. A corporation which causes its agent to go into a foreign county and to establish himself at a hotel therein, with authority to take and negotiate promissory notes in effecting sales of corporate stock of the corporation, thereby creates an "office or agency" in said county "for the transaction of business", and may be sued in said county for the return of the consideration paid for a worthless note negotiated in said county by the agent.

Farmers Bank v Planters Elev., 200-434; 204 NW 298

11049 Personal actions.

Discussion. See 13 ILR 212—Distinction between suability and residence

Change of venue—indorser and maker in different counties. In action against maker and indorser of promissory note brought in county of maker's residence where note was payable, the indorser's motion for change of venue to county of its residence was properly overruled.

Lockie v McCauley, (NOR); 213 NW 768

Dismissal—effect on cross-petition. An executor who institutes an authorized action against a corporate receiver in the county of the receiver's appointment, for relief against an alleged fraud-induced contract by the deceased, and (1) is met by a cross-petition for judgment on the said contract, and (2) has his action properly consolidated with divers other actions under duly joined issues which might have been the basis of an original action against the executor in said county of suit, may not thereupon, after dismissing his action, have all proceedings against himself and the estate dismissed on the claim that the probate court which appointed him had sole jurisdiction to render a judgment against him or against the estate.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Dismissal in lieu of change of venue. An action brought against a defendant in a county other than that of his residence, on service on a person who is not the defendant's agent, is properly dismissed, on special appearance by the defendant. Plaintiff has no right to demand that such attempted action be transferred to the county of defendant's residence.

North English Bank v Webber, 204-958; 216 NW 10

Foreign assignee of note — assignor and makers residents of state—no jurisdiction. In an action on a note by an assignee, resident of a different state than makers, held, improperly brought in federal court where assignee derived title through indorsers residing in same state as makers.

Sargent v State Bk. & Tr. Co., 12 F 2d, 758

Official action—action to annul. An action against a sheriff to set aside an execution sale by him must be brought in the county in which the sheriff made the sale, irrespective of the residence of other party defendants.

Brownell v Bank, 201-781; 208 NW 210

Questions undeterminable on certiorari. On certiorari to test the legality of an order denying a petitioner a change of venue to the county of his residence, the supreme court cannot determine whether the respondent judge correctly determined (1) that a cause of action was pleaded against petitioner's co-defendant, or (2) that said co-defendant was, in fact, a resident of the county of suit, or (3) that the cause of action pleaded in the original suit was for injury to real estate.

Reason: The lower court had jurisdiction to rule on all said matters, and said rulings, tho erroneous, are not illegal acts within the law of certiorari.

Adams v Smith, 216-1365; 250 NW 466

Reformation of promissory note. An equitable action for the reformation of a promissory note, by changing the name of the payee, and for judgment on the note as reformed, cannot be maintained in the county wherein the note by its terms is payable, when the defendant's residence is elsewhere in this state, and he properly moves for a change of venue.

Palmas v Tankersley, 218-416; 255 NW 514

Resident and nonresident defendants. A resident of this state who is sued in a county of which he is not a resident, as a joint defendant with a nonresident railway corporation, may have the entire cause transferred for trial to the county of his residence, even tho the railway corporation is operating its line in the county in which suit is brought, it appearing that the nonresident defendant would not be materially inconvenienced by said transfer.

Nickell v Dist. Court, 202-408; 210 NW 563

Stockholders — double liability — procedure. The question whether an assessment on the stockholders of an insolvent banking institution is necessary and, if necessary, the legal amount of such assessment on each stockholder, must be determined in one equitable action instituted by the receiver in the forum of the receivership against all the stockholders. No change of venue is allowable to a defendant who is not a resident of the county where suit is properly brought.

Williams v McCord, 204-851; 214 NW 702

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 215 NW 261

Venue in quo warranto. The district court of one county of a judicial district, in duly authorized quo warranto proceedings in said county involving the rival claims of two parties to the office of district judge, may acquire jurisdiction of both parties even tho one of them is a nonresident of the county of suit and is sole defendant in the county of his residence in a proceeding in quo warranto involving the same office.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

Void sale — relief — venue. A proceeding wherein relief is sought on the theory that the petitioner bought property at a void judicial sale and received nothing for his purchase price must be brought in the court and in the proceedings out of which the execution arose.

State v Beaton, 205-1139; 217 NW 255

11050 Negotiable paper.

Change of venue—indorser and maker in different counties. In action against maker and indorser of promissory note brought in county of maker's residence where note was payable, the indorser's motion for change of venue to county of its residence was properly overruled.

Lockie v McCauley, (NOR); 213 NW 768

Contracts performable in county. A municipal court has jurisdiction on personal service on the defendant within this state but outside the county of the court's organization, to render judgment for not exceeding $1,000 on a promissory note signed by the defendant and payable within the said county, even tho the defendant is a nonresident of said county.

West v Heyman, 214-1173; 241 NW 451

Foreign assignee of note — assignor and makers residents of state—no jurisdiction. In an action on a note by an assignee, resident of a different state than makers, held, improperly brought in federal court where assignee derived title through indorsers residing in same state as makers.

Sargent v State Bk. & Tr. Co., 12 F 2d, 758

Indorser sued in wrong county. The indorser in blank of a promissory note, when sued alone on his indorsement in the county in which the note requires the maker to make payment, is entitled to a change of venue to the county of his residence when said first county is not the county of his residence in this state.

Dougherty v Shankland, 217-951; 251 NW 73

11051 Right of nonresident defendant.

Change of venue—dismissal of resident defendant—effect. In an action against two defendants, one of whom only is a resident of the county of suit, the dismissal of the action as to said resident does not give the remaining defendant a right to have the action transferred to the county of his residence when the entire transaction on which the action was based occurred in the county of suit and at a time when both defendants were residents of said county.

Wilson v Lindhart, 216-825; 249 NW 218

11053 Change when brought in wrong county.

ANALYSIS

- I REMEDY FOR WRONG VENUE
- II RIGHT TO CHANGE
- III QUESTIONS OF FACT
- IV COSTS AND EXPENSES
- V WAIVERS
- VI NONAPPLICABILITY OF STATUTE

I REMEDY FOR WRONG VENUE

Motion to transfer as sole remedy. An action commenced on due and proper service, and concerning a subject matter of which the court has jurisdiction, should not be dismissed because commenced in the wrong county. Motion to transfer to the proper county is the sole remedy.

Baker v Bank, 205-1259; 217 NW 621

II RIGHT TO CHANGE

Action against common carrier — venue change denied. The terms "line", "stage", "car" and "other line of coaches and cars" as defined at the time of the enactment of the statute specifying venue of actions against carriers are comprehensive enough to include the operations of a transfer company as a common carrier, using motor vehicles, and a damage action against such motor vehicle carrier is properly brought in a county where an automobile collided with one of the carrier's trucks while traveling over its regular route, altho company had no office in such county.

Bruce Transfer v Johnston, 227-50; 287 NW 278

Action against executor as such. An action at law against an executor as such, in the county in which he was appointed such officer, for damages for personal injuries inflicted by the deceased, is, in legal effect, but an action in rem against the assets of the estate. It follows that the executor is not entitled to demand a change of place of trial to another county of which he is a legal resident.

Van Iperen v Hays, 219-715; 259 NW 448

Action in county of receivership forum. A resident national bank as a stockholder in an insolvent state bank of this state is subject to suit in equity by the receiver in the county of the receivership forum, along with all other stockholders, to enforce the statutory double liability of stockholders, even tho the county of said forum is not the county of which the national bank is a resident.

Merchants Bank v Henderson, 218-657; 254 NW 65

Action on stock subscriptions. Parties sued jointly as in equity, for a personal judgment on their separate stock subscriptions, by the receiver of an insolvent corporation, are entitled to a change of place of trial to the county of their respective residences, and to a trial at law in their respective counties; and this is true irrespective of any doctrine (1) of multiplicity of suits, (2) of retention of an action by equity, or (3) of the so-called trust fund doctrine.

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 215 NW 261

Answering defendant — unallowable change. Tho, in an action of tort, the husband and wife are sued jointly in a county other than the county of their common residence, the action of the wife in entering a general appearance and filing answer precludes the court thereafter from granting her a change of place of trial to the county of her residence. So held where the court, on the application of the husband, properly granted him a change of place of trial, and later dismissed the entire action because the plaintiff failed to pay, as ordered, the costs consequent on bringing the action in the wrong county.

Mansfield v Municipal Court, 222-61; 268 NW 908

Assessment on stockholders. Stockholders in an insolvent corporation which is in process of liquidation, are not entitled to a change of place of trial to the county of their residence, on the narrow issue whether an assessment on unpaid stock subscriptions is necessary.

II RIGHT TO CHANGE—continued

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 215 NW 261
Williams v McCord, 204-851; 214 NW 702

Change of venue granted—order not appealable. Appeal does not lie from an order sustaining a motion for change of place of trial from one county to another and, under the statute, ordering the cause transferred.

Gervich v Cedar Rapids Co., 226-1223; 286 NW 411

Dismissal in lieu of change of venue. An action brought against a defendant in a county other than that of his residence, on service on a person who is not the defendant's agent, is properly dismissed, on special appearance by the defendant. Plaintiff has no right to demand that such attempted action be transferred to the county of defendant's residence.

North English Bk. v Webber, 204-958; 216 NW 10

Effect on nonresident of state. An order for a change of venue to the county of a defendant's residence in this state ipso facto effects a transfer of that part of the action which is against a nonresident of this state, the latter not objecting to such transfer.

Hinchcliff v Dist. Court, 204-470; 215 NW 605

Fatally delayed motion. It is mandatory that a motion for a change of venue from the county of suit to the county of defendant's residence be filed before answer. Manifestly, certiorari will not lie to question the overruling of such belated motion.

Thornburg v Mershon, 216-455; 249 NW 202

Harmless refusal to transfer action. Error in refusing to transfer an action to the county of defendant's residence becomes inconsequential when, in the further making up of the issues, either by additional pleadings in the case itself or by intervention therein or by proper consolidation of the action with other actions, the nature of the final action as tried becomes such that it might have been brought originally against all the defendants in the county in which the original action or actions were brought.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Improper joinder in foreign county. A party who is sued in a county which is not the county of his residence on two causes of action, one of which is not properly suable in such foreign county, may have the place of trial of the latter action changed to the county of his residence.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Improper joinder in wrong county—procedure. Where a receiver joins in one proceeding (1) an equitable action asking the court to declare an assessment on unpaid stock subscriptions, and (2) a law action praying judgment on the assessment against stock subscribers who were nonresidents of the county of such proceedings, the stock subscribers need not move to strike the latter cause of action, but may very properly move (1) to separate the latter cause of action from the former, (2) to transfer the said latter cause of action to the law calendar, and (3) to transfer said latter cause of action to the various counties of the subscribers' residences.

State v Packing Co., 217-1172; 250 NW 876

Insufficient showing. A defendant who is sued in a county on the theory that the action grew out of an agency maintained by him in said county, is not entitled to have the action transferred to the county of his residence on the simple showing that the particular agent who was in charge when the transaction took place was not such agent when the action was commenced.

Tracy v Oil Co., 208-882; 226 NW 178

Judgment in wrong county—collateral attack—immunity from. Conceding, arguendo, that the municipal court was in error in overruling defendant's motion for change of venue to the county of his conceded residence, yet the court manifestly had jurisdiction to rule on the motion, and defendant having failed to seek correction of the error by appeal or other appropriate direct proceedings, the ruling becomes a finality, and the subject matter thereof cannot properly be injected into subsequent collateral proceedings wherein the judgment entered on the merits is sought to be enforced. So held where the collateral proceeding was an action to recover on a stay bond.

Educational Film v Hansen, 221-1153; 266 NW 487

Nonwaiver. Appearing generally, and filing motions to set aside orders, does not work a waiver of the right to a change of place of trial when the application for such change is made before answer.

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 215 NW 261

Nonwaiver of right to be heard on motion. The right to be heard on a motion for change of venue is not waived because movant simultaneously with the filing of the motion files a demurrer to the petition.

Board v Dist. Court, 209-1030; 229 NW 711

Public officer entitled to change. A sheriff who is defendant in an action to set aside an execution sale is entitled to a transfer to the county in which the sale occurred.

Brownell v Bank, 201-781; 208 NW 210

Resident and nonresident defendants. A resident of this state who is sued in a county of which he is not a resident, as a joint defendant with a nonresident railway corporation, may have the entire cause transferred for trial to the county of his residence, even though the railway corporation is operating its line in the county in which suit is brought, it appearing that the nonresident defendant would not be materially inconvenienced by said transfer.

Nickell v Dist. Court, 202-408; 210 NW 563

Stockholders—"double" liability. A stockholder in an insolvent bank who is sued by the receiver, on his "double liability", in the forum of the receivership, in one equitable action, along with all other stockholders, is not entitled to a change of venue in case the county of suit is not the county of his residence in this state.

Broulik v Henderson, 218-640; 254 NW 63

III QUESTIONS OF FACT

Cancellation of mortgage as real action—venue change to land situs. Ultimate test of applicability of §11034, C., '35, is not whether proceeding is in personam or in rem but whether determination of a right in real estate is involved, and therefore an action for cancellation of mortgages involving a determination of a right in real estate, which is the subject of the action, must be brought in the county where the land is located, and granting change of venue thereto will be upheld on certiorari.

Whalen v Ring, 224-267; 276 NW 409

Denial of signature—effect. The statutory denial under oath of one's apparent signature to a promissory note, on which suit is commenced in the county in which the note is payable, furnishes no basis for a motion to transfer the action to the county of the residence of the mover.

Greenland v Carter, 219-369; 258 NW 678

Nonpermissible motion. In an action in the county in which a promissory note is specifically made payable, and against the apparent signers of the note, it is not permissible for a defendant to file a motion to transfer the action to the county of his residence on the ex parte showing that he never signed said note, or authorized or ratified, or confirmed any signing of said note in his name.

Greenland v Carter, 219-369; 258 NW 678

IV COSTS AND EXPENSES

Items recoverable. A defendant who is sued in the wrong county, and appears in such county solely by his attorney in order to obtain a transfer to the proper county, is entitled to be reimbursed for his reasonable outlay consequent on the employment of his attorney, even tho the attorney fee is the only item of expense which he has suffered.

State v Packing Co., 215-1172; 250 NW 876

When amount discretionary. The amount which a defendant, who is sued in the wrong county, is entitled to for expenses in attending in such county lies in the sound discretion of the court.

State v Packing Co., 217-1172; 250 NW 876

When entitled to reimbursement. A defendant who is ruled to be entitled to the transfer of an action to the county of his residence on the happening of a named condition, and said condition happens, is entitled to be reimbursed for his expenses in attending in the wrong county.

State v Packing Co., 217-1172; 250 NW 876

V WAIVERS

Nature or subject of action—nonwaiver of right to be heard on motion. The right to be heard on a motion for change of venue is not waived because movant, simultaneously with the filing of the motion, files a demurrer to the petition.

Board of Supervisors v Dist. Court, 209-1030; 229 NW 711

Nonresident—nonwaiver of right. The act of a defendant who is sued in a county other than that of his residence in appearing generally, filing motions, and proceeding to trial on preliminary matters, does not work a waiver of his right to a change of place of trial to the county of his residence when the application for such change is made before answer.

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 215 NW 261

VI NONAPPLICABILITY OF STATUTE

Nature and subject of action—action to cancel trust deed. An action to cancel a trust deed (which in legal effect is a mortgage), and the lien thereof, and to quiet plaintiff's title to the land is strictly local, and is properly brought in the county in which the land is situated, even tho the plaintiff also prays for the cancellation of the promissory notes—a proceeding which would be transitory if separately brought.

Eckhardt v Bankers Trust, 218-983; 249 NW 244; 252 NW 373

Change of venue—action against executor as such. An action at law against an executor as such, in the county in which he was appointed such officer, for damages for personal injuries inflicted by the deceased, is, in legal effect, but an action in rem against the assets of the estate. It follows that the executor is not entitled to demand a change of place of trial to another county of which he is a legal resident.

Van Iperen v Hays, 219-715; 259 NW 448

11054 Dismissal.

Change of venue—failure to file papers. When a motion for change of venue is sustained, the papers in the case must be filed in the district court to which the change is granted 10 days before the next term, upon penalty of dismissal of the action by operation of law.

Chariton Finance Co. v Wennerstrum, 226-464; 284 NW 375

• Failure to file papers—effect. When defendant has been granted a change of venue to the county of his residence (because he has been sued in the wrong county), the failure of the plaintiff to file “the papers” in the court to which the change is ordered ten days before the first day of the next term of said court, works an automatic dismissal of the action. Whether the filing of certified copies complies with the statute, quaere.

Sovereignty and immunity, state and federal. See under §2

I COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION

Action commenced—note to settle unlawful transaction—estoppel. Where, after an original notice of an action to recover commissions in purchase and sale of grain on board of trade had been served so that action was deemed commenced under the statute providing for service of original notice, a compromise was consummated whereby defendant executed a note extending payment for a period of six months, defendant is estopped in subsequent action on note to plead or prove that transactions were unlawful, since, regardless of validity of original transaction, the compromise, effected in good faith, estopped either party from any further litigation of matter in dispute.

Hoyt v Wickham, 25 F 2d, 777

Defect of notice of commencement of action—noninterruption of running of limitations. In action to recover erroneous refund of income tax, summons addressed to marshal only and commanding him to summon named defendants to appear on specific date “to answer to a complaint filed by the United States of America” was defective as not addressed to defendants, not stating cause of action, and not describing consequences of failure to defend, and hence did not interrupt running of limitations as of date of service.

U. S. v French, 95 F 2d, 922

II ORIGINAL NOTICES IN GENERAL

Cross-petition—notice of—sufficiency. In an action for the partition of lands, a notice by one co-defendant to another co-defendant of the filing by the former of a cross-petition, denying all interest of the latter in the lands in question, is not a nullity because said notice fails to specifically describe or identify said lands, when said notice makes proper reference to the original petition in the action for a correct description of said lands.

Bauer v Bauer, 221-782; 266 NW 531

Default—setting aside—no service of notice. Where the defendant and his witnesses testify that he was out of the state on the day of purported service of original notice, the discretion of the trial court in setting aside a default will not be reviewed without a showing of abuse, even tho a court bailiff testified that he obtained personal service on that day.

Brunswick-Balke Co. v Dillon, 226-244; 283 NW 872

Employee performing governmental function—jurisdiction through original notice. A liquor commission enforcement officer as a state employee performing a governmental function is, nevertheless, subject to the jurisdiction of the courts by proper service of an original notice.

Anderson v Moon, 225-70; 279 NW 396

Equivocal wording of original notice. An original notice will not justify a personal judgment on default when it is so drawn that a person would naturally and ordinarily conclude that the relief demanded was simply to establish the mortgage sued on as a lien paramount to the defendant’s junior lien; much less would it justify such personal judgment if intentionally drawn to mislead.

Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

Foreign corporations—burden to sustain original notice. In an action against a foreign corporation commenced by service of original notice on the secretary of state, the plaintiff has the burden to sustain its service and failing therein may not question the sufficiency of a motion to quash the service.

Keokuk Bridge v Curtin-Howe Corp., 223-915; 274 NW 78

When jurisdiction acquired. A court acquires no jurisdiction over the person of a defendant by the due service of an original notice of suit, and consequently no jurisdiction to enter judgment against the defendant, until the arrival of the time for entering default against the defendant as specified in said notice; and this is true tho the notice is served by taking defendant's signed acknowledgment of service wherein defendant "waives time" and "consents to the taking of the judgment".

Dayton v Patterson, 216-1382; 250 NW 595

Service — nonresident attending court — immunity. Nonresident witnesses and suitors attending a court outside of the territorial jurisdiction of their residence are immune from service of civil process while attending court, and for a reasonable time before and after.

Lingo v Reichenbach Co., 225-112; 279 NW 121

Service—nonresident entering state to compromise litigation. Where no fraud or bad faith of an adversary is practiced on a nonresident to induce him to enter this state but he enters solely on the instance of his own attorney in order to attempt a compromise settlement of a pending proceeding, he is not entitled to immunity from service of a civil process and a special appearance therefor will be denied.

Lingo v Reichenbach Co., 225-112; 279 NW 121

Service on nonresident — nonwaiver of immunity. Resisting in a foreign state an action involving the same money sought in an Iowa probate proceeding is not a waiver of the immunity from process permitted a party or witness while attending such probate proceeding.

Moseley v Ricks, 223-1038; 274 NW 23

Service—nonresident—when exempt. A nonresident coming into the state as a party or witness and who is sued while attending the contest of her brother's will may appear specially to secure her common-law immunity from civil process of local courts, which immunity exists and continues not only while in attendance but for a reasonable time thereafter.

Moseley v Ricks, 223-1038; 274 NW 23

Nonresident with securities office in state—statute authorizing service on agent—constitutional. A state statute permitting the service of process on any agent or clerk employed in an office or agency maintained in the state by a nonresident in all actions growing out of, or connected with, the business of such office or agency does not abridge the privileges and immunities to which he is entitled by Art. IV, §2, of the federal constitution, or deprive him of the equal protection of the laws.

Doherty & Co. v Goodman, 294 US 623

Substituted service on nonresidents—automobile cases—contents of notice. Provision in motor vehicle law invoking special method of service on nonresidents does not require that the original notice set out facts which warrant use of such method and which might be necessary to sustain jurisdiction. Notice which complies with §§5038.03 and 11055, C., '39, is sufficient.

Welsh v Ruopp, 228- ; 289 NW 760

Service of notice — presumption attending sheriff's return. A very strong presumption obtains in favor of the return of service of original notice made by an officer, and it cannot be impeached except by very clear and satisfactory proof.

Chader v Wilkins, 226-417; 284 NW 183

III NAMES OF PARTIES

Discussion. See 19 ILR 362—Effect of misnomer

"Idem sonans"—name "Ferkins" instead of "Firkins" within rule. In an action against "Dean Firkins" an original notice addressed and naming "Dean Ferkins" as defendant and which was personally served upon "Dean Firkins" was held sufficient to confer jurisdiction over "Dean Firkins" since the names were within the rule of idem sonans.

Webb v Ferkins, 227-1157; 290 NW 112

"Idem sonans"—greater applicability to constructive service. The application of the doctrine of idem sonans, by the courts, is more strict in regard to constructive service of notice than where the service is personal.

Webb v Ferkins, 227-1157; 290 NW 112

"Idem sonans" doctrine—applicability. The doctrine of idem sonans is recognized by Iowa courts and, while each case must be determined according to its own facts, the mere fact that names spelled differently from true name could be pronounced like the true name by a strained pronunciation would not make the doctrine applicable, but where the names, when general and ordinary rules of pronunciation are applied, are so identical in pronunciation and so alike that there is no possibility of mistake, the doctrine should be applied; or where two names, as commonly pronounced in the English language, are sounded alike, a variance in their spelling is immaterial; and even slight difference in their pronunciation is unimportant, if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing the two names when pronounced. Such names are "idem sonans" and, altho spelled differently, are to be regarded as the same.

Webb v Ferkins, 227-1157; 290 NW 112

III NAMES OF PARTIES—concluded

Failure to address to defendant. In an attempted action against a city, an original notice which is not addressed to the city, but to a named person with added words "city clerk", is a nullity.

Barton v Waterloo, 218-495; 255 NW 700

Fatal defect in name. An original notice directed to and duly served on "Frank Genero" confers no jurisdiction to enter a judgment by default against "Frank Geneva".

Geneva v Thompson, 200-1173; 206 NW 132

Name of plaintiff—variations. When, in a duly served original notice of suit, and in the petition filed, plaintiff's name appears as "Joseph Gulberg", the statement in the body of the petition that the plaintiff is also known as "Joseph Eulberg" and "that Joseph Gulberg and Joseph Eulberg are one and the same person" furnishes no ground for quashing the notice and dismissing the action.

Gulberg v Cooper, 219-858; 259 NW 925

IV CAUSE OF ACTION AND RELIEF

Duplicate actions — which abatable. While an action in partition, in which service of the original notice is incomplete in whole or in part, is deemed pending in the sense that said action constitutes a lis pendens from the time the clerk properly indexes it as a lis pendens, yet, until completed service of the original notice of said action is made, said action cannot be deemed "commenced" or "pending" in the sense that it bars another subsequently instituted action in partition between the same parties and involving the same real estate.

It follows that when duplicate actions in partition, involving the same parties and the same real estate, are brought, that action only is abatable in which said service was last completed.

Ohden v Abels, 221-544; 266 NW 24

Duplicate actions on same subject matter—priority. When two actions involving the same subject matter are commenced by different parties (e. g., partition of land), the action in which completed service is first made on all necessary parties must be deemed first commenced even tho the other action was first formally filed with the clerk, unless said first action was commenced by an unauthorized plaintiff.

Jenes et al. v Park, 220-903; 262 NW 801

Injunction—multifarious, vexatious and bad faith litigation. Injunction will lie to restrain the bringing of an action, which has been adjudicated, on a clear showing (1) that the defendant intends in bad faith to institute other and repeated actions on said adjudicated cause of action, (2) that plaintiff has and will continue to suffer irreparable damage and injury in loss of credit and business, and (3) that plaintiff has no remedy for such harassment except to interpose the wholly inadequate plea of adjudication.

Benedict v Mfg. Co., 211-1312; 236 NW 92

Judgment to conform to process and pleading. The court may not decree who is principal in a transaction and who is surety, and render a personal judgment in favor of the surety and against the principal for sums paid by the surety, when the original notice and petition are silent as to such matters, and when there is no other pleading which prays such relief.

Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

Nature of cause of action—failure to state. Jurisdiction is not conferred on the court by an original notice of suit which simply notifies defendant that plaintiff claims a stated sum of money—which contains no statement whatever as to the nature of the cause of action—and said notice is not aided by an inserted statement directing defendant to examine the petition, when filed, for further particulars.

Farley v Carter, 222-92; 269 NW 34

V COURT, TERM, AND APPEARANCE

Incorrect date of appearance term. An original notice of suit in which the date of the beginning of the appearance term is incorrectly stated is fatally insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court.

Pendy v Cole, 211-199; 233 NW 47

Omission of date of commencement of term. An original notice need not state the date on which the appearance term commences. (Note statute as amended.)

Swan v McGowan, 212-631; 231 NW 440

"Place where" court convenes. The statutory requirement that an original notice state the "place where" said court will convene is complied with by a recital that the court will be held "in the courthouse" at a named place.

Ransom v Mellor, 216-197; 248 NW 361

Void when essentials determinable by inference only. An original notice is wholly void when only by inference can it be determined (1) the time of filing the petition, (2) the court in which the petition is or will be filed, and (3) the term at which defendant is required to appear.

Rhodes v Oxley, 212-1018; 235 NW 919

VI SIGNATURE TO NOTICE

Unsigned notice. An unsigned original notice is a nullity.

Citizens Bank v Taylor, 201-499; 207 NW 570

VII FRAUDULENT SERVICE

Nonresident entering state to compromise litigation—no immunity from process. Where no fraud or bad faith of an adversary is practiced on a nonresident to induce him to enter this state but he enters solely on the instance of his own attorney in order to attempt to compromise settlement of a pending proceeding, he is not entitled to immunity from service of a civil process and a special appearance therefor will be denied.

Lingo v Reichenbach Land Co., 225-112; 279 NW 121

11056.1 Process—criminal defendant.

Discussion. See 23 ILR 253—Process—criminal defendant

Constitutionality. A statute which provided that service in any action could be made on a nonresident criminal defendant while he was within the state, was unconstitutional in providing that the statute legalized such service where it had been made in cases pending, as after the commencement of an action the question of determining jurisdiction is a judicial function which the legislature is without power to control.

Frink v Clark, 226-1012; 285 NW 681

Nonresident served while in state as criminal defendant. When nonresident defendants in a criminal case were in attendance within the state, they were privileged from the service of civil process in another action, and a special appearance filed by them should have been sustained, notwithstanding a statute passed later legalizing such notice served on criminal defendants in pending actions.

Frink v Clark, 226-1012; 285 NW 681

Service—nonresident—when exempt. A resident of a foreign state who comes into this state at the request of the sheriff of a county in which an official inquest is being held by the coroner, and for the good-faith and sole purpose of giving his testimony at said inquest, is immune from civil process until the lapse of a reasonable time after he has accomplished said purpose.

Kelly v Shafer, 213-792; 239 NW 547

11057 Dismissal.

Attempt to utilize petition in dismissed action. A plaintiff who dismisses his action without prejudice and thereupon institutes a new action may not treat the petition in the dismissed action as surviving and performing the functions of a petition in his newly brought action, even tho he causes the clerk to mark said old petition "Refiled".

Brown v Dickey, 208-410; 226 NW 65

Duplicate actions on same subject matter—priority. When two actions involving the same subject matter are commenced by different parties (e. g., partition of land), the action in which completed service is first made on all necessary parties must be deemed first commenced even tho the other action was first formally filed with the clerk, unless said first action was commenced by an unauthorized plaintiff.

Jones v Park, 220-903; 262 NW 801

Unallowable reopening of terminated cause. After a cause has gone to judgment as to the only party defendant, no procedure exists which will permit the reopening of the case by service of an original notice on a new party and trying a new case on the old pleadings.

Dye Co. v Davis, 202-1008; 209 NW 744

11058 Who may serve notice.

Service by attorney. Notice of hearing of claims against an estate may be served by the attorney for claimants.

- II SERVICE BY LEAVING COPY
- III ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SERVICE

I PERSONAL SERVICE

Discussion. See 11 ILR 131—Acceptance of service outside state

Default—setting aside—no service of notice. Where the defendant and his witnesses testify that he was out of the state on the day of purported service of original notice, the discretion of the trial court in setting aside a default will not be reviewed without a showing of abuse, even tho a court bailiff testified that he obtained personal service on that day.

Brunswick-Balke Co. v Dillon, 226-244; 283 NW 872

Foreign judgments—immunity from process. A defendant, who, when sued in a foreign state, litigates the issue that he was immune from the service of process in said state because he was then temporarily and involuntarily therein as a military officer of the federal government, and on land owned and used exclusively by said government for military purposes, and who fails to appeal from a ruling denying his claimed immunity may not relitigate said issue when sued in this state on the foreign judgment.

N. W. Cas. Co. v Conaway, 210-126; 230 NW 548; 68 ALR 1465

Mandatory statutory service—strict compliance required. Where jurisdiction of the person depends upon service of either notice or process, the mandatory provision of statutes in regard to such service must be strictly complied with.

Collins v Powell, 224-1015; 277 NW 477

Method of service. As to the proper method of service when statute simply requires the

I PERSONAL SERVICE—concluded notice to be “served”, and specifies no method of service, see

Casey (Town) v Hogue, 204-3; 214 NW 729

“Idem sonans”—name “Ferkins” instead of “Firkins” within rule. In an action against “Dean Firkins” an original notice addressed and naming “Dean Ferkins” as defendant and which was personally served upon “Dean Firkins” was held sufficient to confer jurisdiction over “Dean Firkins” since the names were within the rule of idem sonans.

Webb v Ferkins, 227-1157; 290 NW 112

No presumption foreign foreclosure was in personam. In an action in this state on a foreign, mortgage-secured promissory note, the court will not presume that a foreclosure of the mortgage was on personal service within the jurisdiction of the foreclosing court, on the makers of the note (residents of Iowa), and that, therefore, the note sued on was merged in the foreclosure decree.

Pfeffer v Corey, 211-203; 233 NW 126

Substituted service statute—strict adherence. Statutes providing for substituted service of original notice present a method of procedure that is extraordinary in character and allowed only because specially authorized. Because such statutes are the only authority for the procedure, the facts required in the statute must appear.

Jermaine v Graf, 225-1063; 283 NW 428

Unallowable substituted service. Service of an original notice on a member of defendant's family as a substitute for actual personal service on the defendant (he being neither sick nor under disability) is a nullity when the person making the service knows that the defendant is then within the county of his residence and where he may be readily found.

Coster v Jensen, 218-1215; 257 NW 303

II SERVICE BY LEAVING COPY

Appeal—notice of—proper service. A statute which distinctly provides that a notice, e. g., a notice of appeal, shall be “served as an original notice”, authorizes a service on the designated party by leaving a copy of said notice at the usual place of residence of said party with some member of his family over 14 years of age—when said party is not present in the county at the time of said service. So held as to the service of a notice of appeal under §7133.

In re Sioux City Yards, 222-323; 268 NW 18

Public officers—survival of service. Service on the superintendent of banking, as such, of an original notice of mortgage foreclosure, survives the retirement of said official from office—is valid and binding on his duly appointed successor.

Greenleaf v Bates, 223-274; 271 NW 614

Substituted service. The district court acquires full jurisdiction over a defendant not found within the county of his residence by leaving a copy of the original notice with defendant's daughter with whom defendant lived, except during temporary absences, said daughter being over 14 years of age.

Moughan v Moughan, 218-1162; 254 NW 828

Substituted service authorized. The requirement that, in proceedings to revoke the license of a physician, the notice of the filing of the charges shall be served “in the manner provided for the service of an original notice in a civil action”, authorizes substituted service on a proper member of the defendant's family, in case he cannot be found in the county.

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

Substituted service—presumption. A return of service of an original notice which reveals service on defendant by service on a proper member of his family is presumed correct, and judgment rendered thereon is valid though the defendant never learned of the notice.

Dickerson v Utterback, 202-255; 207 NW 752

Unallowable substituted service. Statutory authority to serve an original notice in certain exceptional instances on the defendant by leaving a copy “at his usual place of residence with some member of his family over 14 years of age” does not permit such substituted service to be made by leaving the copy with a person whose sole contact with the defendant's family is that of an employee in the family of the defendant.

Thompson v Butler, 214-1123; 243 NW 164

“Idem sonans”—greater applicability to constructive service. The application of the doctrine of idem sonans, by the courts, is more strict in regard to constructive service of notice than where the service is personal.

Webb v Ferkins, 227-1157; 290 NW 112

III ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SERVICE

Acceptance by college graduate—knowledge of act. Court properly refused to set aside divorce decree on grounds that defendant did not know the full import of her act in accepting service of the original notice when the record disclosed that she was college-trained and majored in English.

Reppert v Reppert, 214-17; 241 NW 487

11061 Return of personal service.

- III PRIVILEGES AND EXEMPTIONS
- IV RETURN AND PROOF OF SERVICE

I PERSONAL SERVICE IN GENERAL

General appearance—effect. No service of an original notice of suit need be made if the defendant enters a general appearance.

Scott v Price Bros. Co., 207-191; 217 NW 75
Tracy v Oil Co., 208-882; 226 NW 178

II SUBSTITUTED SERVICE

Substituted service statute—strict adherence. Statutes providing for substituted service of original notice present a method of procedure that is extraordinary in character and allowed only because specially authorized. Because such statutes are the only authority for the procedure, the facts required in the statute must appear.

Jermaine v Graf, 225-1063; 283 NW 428

Jurisdiction of court. The district court acquires full jurisdiction over a defendant not found within the county of his residence by leaving a copy of the original notice with defendant's daughter with whom defendant lived, except during temporary absences,—said daughter being over 14 years of age.

Moughan v Moughan, 218-1162; 254 NW 828

Nonresident corporation—substituted service—special appearance—plaintiff's burden. In a motor vehicle accident action wherein plaintiff obtained service of notice upon a nonresident corporation by serving the commissioner of motor vehicles, and wherein the defendant attacked such service by special appearance on the ground that it was not a person within the purview of the statute, the burden was on the plaintiff to make such showing that defendant was a person under the statute. Held burden not met.

Jermaine v Graf, 225-1063; 283 NW 428

Substituted service on nonresident individual. The statute (§11079, C., '31) which provides, in effect, that when a corporation, company, or individual maintains in this state an agency "in any county" other than that in which said principal resides, service of original notice of any action growing out of or connected with said agency may be personally had on the principal in this state by serving in this state an agent employed in said agency, applies to a nonresident individual maintaining an agency in this state, and when so applied does not deny to said defendant (1) due process of law, (2) the equal protection of the law, (3) any privilege or immunity granted to citizens of this state, or (4) any privilege or immunity possessed by said defendant as a citizen of the United States.

Davidson v Doherty, 214-739; 241 NW 700;
91 ALR 1308

Unallowable substituted service. Statutory authority to serve an original notice in certain exceptional instances on the defendant by leaving a copy "at his usual place of residence with some member of his family over 14 years of age" does not permit such substituted service to be made by leaving the copy with a person whose sole contact with the defendant's family is that of an employee in the family of the defendant.

Thompson v Butler, 214-1123; 243 NW 164

Unallowable substituted service. Service of an original notice on a member of defendant's family as a substitute for actual personal service on the defendant (he being neither sick nor under disability) is a nullity when the person making the service knows that the defendant is then within the county of his residence and where he may be readily found.

Coster v Jensen, 218-1215; 257 NW 303

Venue—residence of defendant—dismissal in lieu of change of venue. An action brought against a defendant in a county other than that of his residence, on service on a person who is not the defendant's agent, is properly dismissed, on special appearance by the defendant. Plaintiff has no right to demand that such attempted action be transferred to the county of defendant's residence.

North English Bank v Webber, 204-958; 216 NW 10

III PRIVILEGES AND EXEMPTIONS

Immunity of state and federal government. See under §2

Service—nonresident attending court—immunity. Nonresident witnesses and suitors attending a court outside of the territorial jurisdiction of their residence are immune from service of civil process while attending court, and for a reasonable time before and after.

Lingo v Reichenbach Co., 225-112; 279 NW 121

Service—nonresident—when exempt. A resident of a foreign state who comes into this state at the request of the sheriff of a county in which an official inquest is being held by the coroner, and for the good-faith and sole purpose of giving his testimony at said inquest, is immune from civil process until the lapse of a reasonable time after he has accomplished said purpose.

Kelly v Shafer, 213-792; 239 NW 547

Service—nonresident—when exempt. A nonresident coming into the state as a party or witness and who is sued while attending the contest of her brother's will may appear specially to secure her common-law immunity from civil process of local courts, which immunity exists and continues not only while in attendance but for a reasonable time thereafter.

Moseley v Ricks, 223-1038; 247 NW 23

Service—nonresident—when not exempt. Where no fraud or bad faith of an adversary is practiced on a nonresident to induce him to enter this state but he enters solely on the instance of his own attorney in order to attempt a compromise settlement of a pending proceeding, he is not entitled to immunity from service of a civil process and a special appearance therefor will be denied.

Lingo v Reichenbach Co., 225-112; 279 NW 121

IV RETURN AND PROOF OF SERVICE

Impeachment of return. The return of a notice is impeachable on a direct attack on its validity.

Casey (Town) v Hogue, 204-3; 214 NW 729

Insufficient impeachment. Evidence held insufficient to impeach the sheriff's return of service of an original notice.

Heater v Bagan, 206-1301; 221 NW 932

V NO NOTICE AND DEFECTIVE NOTICE CONTRASTED

No annotations in this volume

VI COURT FINDINGS AND JUDGMENT RECITALS

Default—setting aside—no service of notice. Where the defendant and his witnesses testify that he was out of the state on the day of purported service of original notice, the discretion of the trial court in setting aside a default will not be reviewed without a showing of abuse, even tho a court bailiff testified that he obtained personal service on that day.

11062 Indorsement and return by sheriff.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 59

Garnishment judgment—quashing of return. Upon the quashing of an execution and return, a garnishment judgment has nothing to sustain it.

Gohring v Koonce, 224-1186; 278 NW 283

Service—presumption attending sheriff's return. A very strong presumption obtains in favor of the return of service of original notice made by an officer, and it cannot be impeached except by very clear and satisfactory proof.

Chader v Wilkins, 226-417; 284 NW 183

11063 Penalty—amendment.

Mortgage foreclosure—sale — return — correcting inadvertent error. An inadvertent error in the return of a mortgage foreclosure sale may be corrected by an amendment by the sheriff after the land has gone to sheriff's deed, provided the judgment plaintiff and defendant are the only persons affected. In such case oral testimony showing the error is quite unnecessary. Especially is this true when complainant shows no injury consequent on such correcting amendment.

Equitable v Ryan, 213-603; 239 NW 695

11068 Acknowledgment of service.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 273

Irregularities in petition for appointment of guardian—right to bring action. A petition by the wife of an inmate of a state hospital for the insane, asserting that she was the wife of the inmate who had property, and asking that she be appointed guardian, altho insufficient to meet the statutory requirements for a petition for the appointment of a guardian, was sufficient for the appointment of a temporary guardian, and when notice was accepted by the superintendent of the institution and wife was appointed, she was at least a temporary guardian, and, as such, could maintain an action in behalf of the incompetent.

11072 Public utility and foreign corporations.

"Doing business in this state." A foreign corporation is "doing business in this state" and is subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state when it permanently maintains in this state a sample room of its goods, solicits orders, through its agents, for stocks of goods, assists its purchasers in an advisory way in carrying on their business, and receives, from customers, through said agents, checks for the purpose of the same being forwarded to the main house in the foreign state.

International Co. v Lovejoy, 219-204; 257 NW 576; 101 ALR 122

"Doing business in this state"—what constitutes. Proof that a local resident occasionally solicited and obtained orders for grave memorials to be manufactured by and shipped to this state by a foreign corporation is wholly insufficient, in and of itself, to show that such corporation was doing business in this state in such sense as to evince an intention to submit itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state. It follows that valid service of an original notice of suit may not be made on such corporation by serving said local resident.

Dorsey v Anderson, 222-917; 270 NW 463

Director general of railroads. Service of an original notice on a delivering carrier did not, under the war emergency act, bring the director general of railroads into court as a representative of the initial carrier.

Dye Co. v Davis, 202-1008; 209 NW 744

Service on agent. The fact that a delivering carrier is, in point of law, the agent of the initial carrier in completing a shipment does not authorize service of an original notice on the initial carrier by service on the delivering carrier.

Dye Co. v Davis, 202-1008; 209 NW 744

Service—foreign corporation. A foreign corporation which maintains no office or agency within this state may be validly served with notice of suit by serving said notice on any general agent of the corporation at any point within this state where such agent may be found transacting the business of the corporation.

Kalbach v Equip. Co., 207-1077; 224 NW 73

Foreign corporation without permit—"transacting business" defined. A foreign corporation, even tho it has no permit to do business in this state, and even tho neither it nor its agents maintain an office in this state is, nevertheless, "transacting business" within this state, and subject to service of notice of suit on its resident agent, when, as a continuous and systematic course of business it, in part at its own expense, maintains in this state an agent with powers limited strictly to the solicitation of orders which the corporation approves or disapproves, and on which, in case of approval, it makes its own collections.

American Corp. v Shankland, 205-862; 219 NW 28; 60 ALR 986

Service on soliciting agent. A foreign corporation which has no permit from this state to transact business in this state, and which maintains no office in this state, is not subjected to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state by service in this state of process on the corporation's traveling agent whose authority begins and ends in soliciting and receiving at his own expense in this state orders for goods, and in forwarding said orders to the corporation in the foreign state for approval or disapproval.

Burnham Mfg. v Stove Works, 214-112; 241 NW 405

11073 Consolidated railways.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 670

11074 Insurance company.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 670

Contract remedies for collection—failure to comply with—fatal effect. The beneficiary (and his assignor), in a certificate of insurance of a mutual benefit association, is bound by the bylaws which provide that no resort shall be had to the courts to enforce payment of said certificate until said beneficiary has first exhausted the contract remedies provided by the bylaws for the allowance and payment of said claim.

Ater v Ben. Dept., 222-1390; 271 NW 517

Original notice—service—deputy commissioner may accept. Valid service of an original notice of suit against a foreign insurance company doing business in this state, is made by the act of the deputy commissioner of insurance in accepting, in writing and in the name of said commissioner, service of said notice for and on behalf of said company, tho the authority filed by the company only authorized the commissioner to accept such service.

Woodmen v Dist. Court, 219-1326; 260 NW 713; 98 ALR 1431

Submission to foreign courts—insufficient showing. An Iowa accident insurance association which has not been licensed to transact its business in a foreign state (in which it has neither office, agent nor property), and whose certificates of insurance are strictly Iowa contracts, cannot be deemed to have subjected itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of such foreign state (1) because a very large number of its certificate holders reside in said foreign state, or (2) because said association, from time to time and by mail from its Iowa office, requests a physician in said foreign state to there examine claimants and to report as to accidental injuries received by claimants,—it appearing that said physician was under no contract obligation to comply with said requests and to make such examinations tho he had done so for several years and had received a stated fee for each separate examination.

Held, the foreign court, in an action on a certificate, acquired no jurisdiction under process served on said physician.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 670

Change of place of trial. A defendant who is sued in a county on the theory that the action grew out of an agency maintained by him in said county, is not entitled to have the action transferred to the county of his residence on the simple showing that the particular agent who was in charge when the transaction took place was not such agent when the action was commenced.

Tracy v Oil Co., 208-882; 226 NW 178

Foreign corporation—discharged employee. Service of an original notice on a foreign corporation which has wholly withdrawn from the state may not legally be made on one who was never an officer or acting officer of the corporation, and who, at the time of service, was simply a discharged former employee.

Reliance Co. v Craig, 206-804; 221 NW 499

Garnishment—notice, service, and return. A corporation may be validly garnished by serving the notice of garnishment on an agent employed in the office of the corporation in the general management of the corporation's business, e. g., on one employed as a book-keeper and for general office work, and who looks after the office when the manager is absent, who signs as "cashier" checks issued by the corporation, and who has on occasions, to the knowledge of, and without objection by, the corporation accepted notice of garnishment on the corporation.

Waterloo Canning Co. v Municipal Court, 214-1169; 243 NW 287

Service on corporate director. Statutory authorization of service of an original notice on a corporation by serving a trustee, officer, or general managing agent of the corporation does not authorize such service on a mere director of the corporation.

Bennett v Coal Co., 201-770; 208 NW 519

Service of notice—agent—insufficient proof. Evidence relative to the service of an original notice on a corporation by service on an agent reviewed, and held insufficient to establish the alleged agency.

Bennett v Coal Co., 201-770; 208 NW 519

Service outside state—effect. Jurisdiction in personam of an Iowa corporation is constitutionally obtained by proper service of a proper original notice in a foreign state on one of the last known or acting officers of the corporation, as shown by the last statutory annual report of the corporation on file with the secretary of state of this state.

Bennett v Coal Co., 201-770; 208 NW 519

11079 Actions arising out of agency.

Discussion. See 18 ILR 257—Jurisdiction over nonresidents; 19 ILR 421—Jurisdiction of non-resident

Foreign corporations—burden to sustain original notice. In an action against a foreign corporation commenced by service of original notice on the secretary of state, the plaintiff has the burden to sustain its service and failing therein may not question the sufficiency of a motion to quash the service.

Keokuk Bridge v Curtin-Howe Corp., 223-915; 274 NW 78

Foreign corporations—original notice—quashing service. A foreign corporation that has no office, no representative, and at most only one transaction in Iowa is not "doing business" in the state so as to give Iowa courts jurisdiction thereof by service of original notice on the secretary of state and a motion to quash the service was properly sustained.

Keokuk Bridge v Curtin-Howe Corp., 223-915; 274 NW 78

Foreign corporation without permit—"transacting business" defined. A foreign corporation, even tho it has no permit to do business in this state, and even tho neither it nor its agents maintain an office in this state, is, nevertheless, "transacting business" within this state, and subject to service of notice of suit on its resident agent, when, as a continuous and systematic course of business, it, in part at its own expense, maintains in this state an agent with powers limited strictly to the solicitation of orders which the corporation approves or disapproves, and on which, in case of approval, it makes its own collections.

American Corp. v Shankland, 205-862; 219 NW 28; 60 ALR 986

General appearance—effect. It is of no consequence how or where the defendant was served when he enters a general appearance to the action.

Tracy v Oil Co., 208-882; 226 NW 178

Nonresident with securities office in state—statute authorizing service on agent. A state statute permitting the service of process on any agent or clerk employed in an office or agency maintained in the state by a nonresident in all actions growing out of, or connected with, the business of such office or agency does not abridge the privileges and immunities to which he is entitled by Art. IV, §2, of the federal constitution, or deprive him of the equal protection of the laws.

Henry L. Doherty & Co. v Goodman, 294 US 623

Service on agent—due process. In an action against a partnership as the sole defendant (all the partners being nonresidents of the state, and unserved), a return simply to the effect that the original notice was served on a named person as agent of defendant is fatally wanting in due process unless plaintiff, by some appropriate and adequate showing, establishes the existence of every fact which justifies such substituted service under this statute.

Thornburg v Bennett, 206-1187; 221 NW 840

Service on agent at maintained agency. A foreign joint stock land bank must be held to maintain an "office or agency" within the meaning of §11046 and this section, C., '35, when, in a county of this state, it maintains a so-called "fieldman" charged with the duty of generally caring for and leasing (under limited authority) the lands belonging to the bank in some 14 counties of this state; and this is true tho said "fieldman" is not designated by the bank as having any office other than his residence in a designated county.

Higdon v Lincoln JSL Bank, 223-57; 272 NW 93

Substituted service on nonresident individual. This section applies to a nonresident individual maintaining an agency in this state, and when so applied does not deny to said defendant (1) due process of law, (2) the equal protection of the law, (3) any privilege or immunity granted to citizens of this state, or (4) any privilege or immunity possessed by said defendant as a citizen of the United States.

Davidson v Doherty & Co., 214-739; 241 NW 700; 91 ALR 1308

Substituted service on nonresident individual. Principle reaffirmed that an individual nonresident who maintains in this state an office or agency, even tho he has never personally been within this state, may be legally personally served in this state with original notice of suit as to matters growing out of such office or agency by service directed to him and made on his agent employed in said office or agency.

Goodman v Doherty, 218-529; 255 NW 667

Substituted service on agent of nonresident. Whether a nonresident may be legally sued in this state by service in this state on an alleged, resident agent (on a cause of action growing out of such alleged agency) must necessarily be determined by resorting (1) to the express contract, if any, between the resident and nonresident parties, and (2) to the course of dealings existing between the said parties. Held, agency not shown, even tho an officer of the alleged resident agent was a director of the nonresident defendant, and even tho the nonresident defendant paid commission on sales to the alleged resident agent.

11080 Minor.

Service on minor when parent is plaintiff. In an action to quiet title, statutory acceptance by a parent, of service of the original notice for his minor child under 14 years of age, is adequate, even tho the parent is plaintiff in the action, it affirmatively appearing that the action was not adverse to said minor.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

11081 Service by publication.

ANALYSIS

- I PUBLICATION SERVICE IN GENERAL
- II ACTIONS IN WHICH PUBLICATION AUTHORIZED
- III THE AFFIDAVIT
- IV THE JUDGMENT

I PUBLICATION SERVICE IN GENERAL

Alimony — decree on publication service — effect. A plaintiff who takes a decree of divorce on service by publication may not thereafter resurrect the proceeding for the purpose of an allowance of alimony. This is true even tho the plaintiff prayed for alimony, and even tho the court assumed to continue the proceeding on the question of alimony.

Doeksen v Doeksen, 202-489; 210 NW 545

Jurisdiction under publication service. A decree, rendered on service by publication in the foreclosure of a second mortgage, adjudging that said second mortgage is senior and superior to a first mortgage, in accordance with a definite pleading and prayer to said effect based on a good-faith but mistaken belief that said first mortgage had been paid, is binding and conclusive on the holder of said first mortgage, and may not be collaterally assailed by said first mortgagee in an action to foreclose his mortgage. (It appears that said first mortgagee had allowed the time to elapse in which to attack said decree under §11595.)

Lyster v Brown, 210-317; 228 NW 3

Jurisdiction under publication service. In partition proceedings, service by publication only on a nonresident nonappearing defendant arms the court with jurisdiction to adjudicate the title to the property.

Clark v Robinson, 206-712; 221 NW 217

No presumption foreign foreclosure was in personam. In an action in this state on a foreign, mortgage-secured promissory note, the court will not presume that a foreclosure of the mortgage was on personal service within the jurisdiction of the foreclosing court, on the makers of the note (residents of Iowa), and that, therefore, the note sued on was merged in the foreclosure decree.

Pfeffer v Corey, 211-203; 233 NW 126

II ACTIONS IN WHICH PUBLICATION AUTHORIZED

Publication as to concealed debtor. A judgment in rem on publication service on an actual resident of the county of suit is proper when it is made to appear that the defendant locked herself in her own house and concealed herself in order to avoid personal service of the notice of suit.

Reinecke v Hinman, 202-419; 215 NW 442

III THE AFFIDAVIT

No annotations in this volume

IV THE JUDGMENT

Garnishment—judgment in rem—nonmerger of debt sued on. In an action aided by attachment, the entry, on service on defendant by publication, of a judgment in rem against property of the defendant in the hands of a garnishee, does not work a merger in said judgment of the obligation sued on, and thereby deprive the holder of said obligation of the right to proceed against defendant, at a later time, for the recovery of the balance due on said obligation,—if there be such balance.

Strand v Halverson, 220-1276; 264 NW 266; 103 ALR 835

11082 Unknown defendants.

Inheritance taker as “representative” of contingent remainderman. A decree setting aside the probate of a will and canceling said will (the action being instituted in good faith and so tried by all parties thereto) is, on the principle or doctrine of representation, conclusive on remote, contingent remaindermen, even tho they are not parties to the action or are not served with notice of the action, when those persons are legally before the court who would take the first estate of inheritance under the will; especially is this true when parties of the same class to which the omitted parties belong are also legally before the court.

Harris v Randolph, 213-772; 236 NW 51

Unborn contingent remaindermen. The contingent interest in land of the unborn children of a life tenant, arising out of the terms of a testamentary devise, is not cut off by a decree in an action to quiet title by making the life tenant a party defendant as a "representative" of such unborn children; especially so when said life tenant assumes a hostile attitude toward said unborn children.

Mennig v Graves, 211-758; 234 NW 189

11084 Method of publication.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 128

"General circulation" — general test. A "newspaper of general circulation" is determined not by the number of its subscribers but by the diversity of its subscribers, and is such newspaper if it contains news, tho of limited amount, of a general nature, even tho it makes a specialty of news of a particular kind.

Burak v Ditson, 209-926; 229 NW 227; 68 ALR 538

Divorce—notice by publication—plaintiff assailing own decree. A wife who obtains a divorce by publication may not in a subsequent action between the same parties for divorce, aided by attachment, complain that her previous divorce decree is void for defective publication on the ground that the record fails to show selection of the newspaper by "plaintiff or his attorney", when she relied on the publication and induced the court to grant a decree thereon.

Hanson v Hanson, 226-423; 284 NW 141

Previous divorce by publication — defense. Decree of divorce denied on the ground that the parties were already divorced in a previous proceeding in which the court had full and complete jurisdiction upon service of notice by publication.

Hanson v Hanson, 226-423; 284 NW 141

Requisites—selection of newspaper. Statute providing method of publishing original notice does not require a record showing who selected the newspaper.

Hanson v Hanson, 226-423; 284 NW 141

11085 Service complete—proof.

Service by publication—frivolous objection to affidavit. Argument that an affidavit of publication of original notice having been signed by the "foreman" of the newspaper did not constitute an affidavit by "the publisher or his foreman" in compliance with the statute is too hypercritical and frivolous to be noticed on appeal.

11086 Actual service.

Indexing petition—lis pendens. The filing and due indexing of a petition to subject real estate to the lien of a personal judgment creates a lis pendens, and personal service of the action on the defendants outside the state establishes jurisdiction in rem, even tho the petition may be subject to a corrective motion or to a demurrer.

Lawrence v Stanton, 212-949; 237 NW 512

Special appearance after general appearance. A nonresident defendant who, after a service in a foreign state, enters a general appearance in an action in rem, is not thereby precluded from later entering a special appearance attacking the jurisdiction of the court because of the filing by plaintiff of an amended and substituted petition which converts his former action in rem into an action for an accounting and for personal judgment against said nonresident.

Fidelity Co. v Bank, 213-1058; 237 NW 234

11087 Mode of appearance.

ANALYSIS

- I WHAT CONSTITUTES GENERAL APPEARANCE
- II WHAT DOES NOT CONSTITUTE GENERAL APPEARANCE
- III AUTHORITY TO APPEAR
- IV EFFECT OF APPEARANCE

I WHAT CONSTITUTES GENERAL APPEARANCE

Filing of motion—effect. A defendant who appears generally and files successive motions is necessarily in court for all purposes tho he suffers judgment by default for want of an answer.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1070; 221 NW 809

Pleading to merits. A plea to the merits of a case is necessarily a general appearance.

Scott v Price Bros. Co., 207-191; 217 NW 75

Pro se appearance—new trial—grounds—insufficient record. Record reviewed in an action wherein plaintiff appeared pro se in the trial court, and held insufficient to authorize the court (1) to set aside a former order denying a new trial, and (2) thereupon—11 months after the entry of judgment on a directed verdict—to grant a new trial.

Spoor v Price, 223-362; 272 NW 305

Stipulation for decree constitutes appearance. The signing by a plaintiff and defendant in an action for separate maintenance of an agreement which specifies the amount and terms of such maintenance and provides for the entry of decree in accordance therewith, and the filing of such stipulation in the action, constitute an appearance by the defendant to said action.

Kalde v Kalde, 207-121; 222 NW 351

What constitutes appearance. Whether a duly signed acceptance of service wherein defendant "waive time, and receipt for copy, and consent to the filing of the petition, and the taking of judgment", constitutes an appearance by the defendant, quare, but it cannot be deemed to constitute an acceptance when the court at the time of assuming to enter judgment did not so construe it, but specifically found that defendant had made no appearance.

Dayton v Patterson, 216-1382; 250 NW 595

II WHAT DOES NOT CONSTITUTE GENERAL APPEARANCE

Consent by adversely interested party. One of two adversely interested defendants may not, as a matter of law, appear in court on behalf of such other defendant. It follows that a consent decree entered on such appearance may be set aside.

Graettinger Tile v Paine, 202-804; 211 NW 366

Filing of petition for removal—general (?) or special (?) appearance. Rule of federal courts recognized that filing of petition for removal of cause to federal court constitutes special and not general appearance. Under Iowa statute, the filing of such petition with notation thereof on record would constitute a special appearance even tho not expressly announced as such, since court will look to substance rather than form in determining whether an appearance is general or special.

Johannsen v Mid-Cont. Corp., 227-712; 288 NW 911

Improper appearance—who may object. An objection that an attorney was appearing both for and against a party litigant cannot be made by a litigant other than the one affected.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

Appearance of receiver of insolvent co-executor trust company. Where the district court of Scott county appoints a receiver to take charge of an insolvent trust company which was also a co-executor and co-trustee in an estate pending in the district court of Johnson county, and when such receiver is ordered by the Johnson district court to report and account, such receiver does not, by filing a pleading and supporting it by evidence denying the jurisdiction of the Johnson district court, thereby make a "general appearance" in the Johnson district court.

Bates v Evans, 226-438; 284 NW 385

III AUTHORITY TO APPEAR

Attorney—presumption. An attorney who appears for a party to an action will be presumed to have been authorized so to appear—until the opposing party shows the want of such authority.

Sloan v Jepson, 217-1082; 252 NW 535

Carson & Co. v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

IV EFFECT OF APPEARANCE

Discussion. See 25 ILR 329—Quasi in rem action

Appeal—fatally defective notice—appearance—effect. A fatal defect in a notice of appeal to the district court from the action of the board of review in a city is not cured by the entry in the district court of a general appearance by the city through its attorneys.

Midwestern Co. v Des Moines, 210-942; 231 NW 459

Defective service cured by appearance. Any defect in the service of the notice of the filing of charges in proceedings to revoke the license of a physician is cured by the appearance of the accused.

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

General appearance—effect. It is of no consequence how or where the defendant was served when he enters a general appearance to the action.

Scott v Price Bros. Co., 207-191; 217 NW 75
Tracy v Oil Co., 208-882; 226 NW 178

Defective notice—appearance—effect. A notice of appeal from a refusal of the board of review to lower an assessment and the form, contents, and service of such notice become quite immaterial when the board enters a general appearance and contests the appeal.

Chapman Bros. v Board, 209-304; 228 NW 28

Nonservice cured by appearance. Failure to serve an adverse party in divorce proceedings with notice of a hearing to modify the decree becomes quite immaterial when such adverse party appears at said hearing in person and by attorney.

Guisinger v Guisinger, 201-409; 205 NW 752

Notice—jurisdictional—nonwaiver of defects by appearance. A voluntary appearance by attorneys for appellee and the filing of a motion to dissolve a restraining order do not waive defective notice. Notice of appeal is jurisdic-

Pearson v Anthony, 218-697; 254 NW 10

Vendor's attorneys at vendee's bankruptcy. Fact that attorneys for a real estate contract vendor appeared in vendee's bankruptcy is not a submission to nor adjudication by the bankruptcy court of vendor's rights under the real estate contract, when no claim was filed thereon and purpose of appearance was to protect a different and unsecured indebtedness of the vendee to the vendor.

11088 Special appearance.

Discussion. See 10 ILB 121—Special appearance in Iowa; 13 ILR 468, 17 ILR 81—Pleading to the merits

Special appearance—purpose. Purpose of special appearance is to protect defendant from being required to defend action in which court has no jurisdiction.

Sanford Co. v Ins. Co., 225-1018; 282 NW 771

Filing of petition for removal—general (?) or special (?) appearance. Rule of federal courts recognized that filing of petition for removal of cause to federal court constitutes special and not general appearance. Under Iowa statute, the filing of such petition with notation thereof on record would constitute a special appearance even tho not expressly announced as such, since court will look to substance rather than form in determining whether an appearance is general or special.

Johannsen v Mid-Cont. Corp., 227-712; 288 NW 911

Appearance by vouchee. A vouchee who has voluntarily taken over the defense of an action may not file a special appearance to a motion for judgment against him on the judgment rendered against the principal defendant.

Hoskins v Hotel, 203-1152; 211 NW 423; 65 ALR 1125

Appearance to fatally defective service—effect. Appearance in an appellate tribunal for the purpose of objecting because the notice of appeal was not served as required by law does not confer jurisdiction on the tribunal to hear the appeal.

Casey (Town) v Hogue, 204-3; 214 NW 729

Certiorari—defective service—no jurisdiction through special appearance nor return to writ. Where mandatory statute requiring service of writ of certiorari had neither been complied with nor service accepted, the supreme court acquires no jurisdiction of the inferior tribunal and a proper special appearance will not waive defective service nor does the return to the writ constitute a pleading to the merits.

Collins v Powell, 224-1015; 277 NW 477

Employee performing governmental function—jurisdiction through original notice. A liquor commission enforcement officer as a state employee performing a governmental function is, nevertheless, subject to the jurisdiction of the courts by proper service of an original notice.

Anderson v Moon, 225-70; 279 NW 396

Failure of service—dismissal. The dismissal of an action is proper when it appears that no defendant has been legally served with the original notice.

Thompson v Butler, 214-1123; 243 NW 164

Certiorari—respondent's right to appear specially. A respondent in certiorari has a right to appear specially to question jurisdiction, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, regardless of whether or not this right is conferred by this section.

Collins v Powell, 224-1014; 277 NW 477

Service—nonresident—when not exempt. Where no fraud or bad faith of an adversary is practiced on a nonresident to induce him to enter this state but he enters solely on the instance of his own attorney in order to attempt a compromise settlement of a pending proceeding, he is not entitled to immunity from service of a civil process and a special appearance therefor will be denied.

Lingo v Reichenbach Co., 225-112; 279 NW 121

Service—nonresident—when exempt. A nonresident coming into the state as a party or witness and who is sued while attending the contest of her brother's will may appear specially to secure her common law immunity from civil process of local courts, which immunity exists and continues not only while in attendance but for a reasonable time thereafter.

Moseley v Ricks, 223-1038; 274 NW 23

Special appearance after general appearance. A nonresident defendant who, after service in a foreign state, enters a general appearance in an action in rem, is not thereby precluded from later entering a special appearance attacking the jurisdiction of the court because of the filing by plaintiff of an amended and substituted petition which converts his former action in rem into an action for an accounting and for personal judgment against said nonresident.

Fidelity & Cas. v Bank, 213-1058; 237 NW 234

See Dunlop v Land Bank, 222-887; 270 NW 362

Special appearance after judgment. Where a salesman obtained an Iowa judgment against an Indiana company and after judgment the company filed a combination pleading consisting of a special appearance (the propriety of which is doubtful) and a petition to vacate the judgment for lack of jurisdiction, and a decision is rendered thereon adversely to the company, from which no appeal was taken, such judgment becomes a final judgment, and where company subsequently brings a separate action in equity to vacate such judgment for lack of jurisdiction, the trial court properly dismissed the equity petition and refused to enjoin its enforcement, since the former decision on the jurisdiction question was res adjudicata. The company cannot relitigate the same questions that were, or might have been, determined upon its former petition to vacate the judgment.

Martin Bros. v Fritz, 228- ; 292 NW 143

Special appearance—burden to sustain jurisdiction. On special appearance directly attacking the jurisdiction of the court because of a defect in the original notice or in the service thereof, the burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff to sustain the jurisdiction by proof of an adequate notice and the service thereof; and such burden is not met by the production of a captionless, unaddressed, and unsigned notice.

Pendy v Cole, 211-199; 233 NW 47

Special appearance—standing on. In appealing from an adverse ruling on the issues raised by a special appearance, it is not necessary for appellant especially to elect to stand upon his special appearance, or to suffer judgment to be entered against him.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-470; 254 NW 806

Special appearance—sufficiency. A special appearance for the sole purpose of attacking the jurisdiction of the court, may be made in the form of a motion to dismiss wherein the movant recites that he appears "specially to the jurisdiction".

Hlas v Quaker Co., 211-348; 233 NW 514

Subsequent plea to merits—effect. One who, on special appearance, challenges the jurisdiction of the court on the ground of defective service of the notice of suit, and who, after his challenge is overruled, pleads to the merits and participates in the trial, thereby submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and is in no position to ask, on appeal, for a review of the ruling on his special appearance; especially is this true as to suits in equity.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

Scott v Price Bros. Co., 207-191; 217 NW 75
Webster County Buick Co. v Auto Co., 216-485; 249 NW 203

Substituted service on nonresident corporation—special appearance. In a motor vehicle accident action, wherein plaintiff obtained service of notice upon a nonresident corporation by serving the commissioner of motor vehicles, and wherein the defendant attacked such service by special appearance on the ground that it was not a person within the purview of the statute, the burden was on the plaintiff to make such showing that defendant was a person under the statute. Held burden not met.

Jermaine v Graf, 225-1063; 283 NW 428

Original notice—service on nonresidents under motor vehicle law—showing required. Where an attack by special appearance and motion to quash is made upon use of special method of securing service on nonresidents provided for in motor vehicle law, a showing is required of facts essential to jurisdiction, and one of such basic facts is nonresidence of defendant at the time the use and operation of the vehicle allegedly causing the damage upon which suit is brought. Accordingly, proof of nonresidence at time suit is started would not be sufficient where accident in question occurred one and one-half years earlier.

Welsh v Ruopp, 228- ; 289 NW 760

Writ of prohibition—right to issue. The jurisdiction of the supreme court to issue a writ of prohibition commanding a district court to discontinue all assumption of jurisdiction over named actions pending in said latter court does not depend on whether the district court has made rulings as to special appearances entered in said actions.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

General appearance after special appearance. General appearance subsequent to a special appearance works a waiver of the special appearance.

Music v De Long, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

Scope—applicable to entire action. Statute authorizing a special appearance contemplates such an appearance to the entire action and not to a part of it only.

Sanford Co. v Ins. Co., 225-1018; 282 NW 771

Government employee's automobile collision—immunity as a defense. In a damage action for injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, defendant's claim that he was a state employee performing a governmental function is a matter of defense not properly raised by special appearance.

Groves v Webster City, 222-849; 270 NW 329
Anderson v Moon, 225-70; 279 NW 396

Harmless error—nunc pro tunc correction. Overruling a special appearance to plaintiff's application for a nunc pro tunc order and then correcting the trial record thereunder by substituting "plaintiff" for "defendant" in an order extending time to file exceptions to instructions and motion for new trial is harmless error where defendant appeared and without objections thereto permitted and participated in hearing on the merits of such exceptions and motion for new trial.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Jurisdiction as sole question. Jurisdiction of the court is the only question which can be tried out on special appearance. So held where attempt was made, on such appearance, to try out the question whether attached property was exempt from attachment or execution levy.

Scott v Wamsley, 215-1409; 245 NW 214

Jurisdictional only—no pleading to merits. A special appearance goes only to jurisdictional matters and does not permit any pleading relative to the merits of the case.

Anderson v Moon, 225-70; 279 NW 396

Jurisdiction of officers. It seems that a special appearance before an administrative officer, e.g., the industrial commissioner, for the sole purpose of questioning the jurisdiction of the officer to act in a certain proceeding, is proper, and will not be deemed an appearance to the merits.

Elk River Co. v Funk, 222-1222; 271 NW 204; 110 ALR 1415

Moot case—unnecessary review. An appeal from an order sustaining a special appearance will be dismissed when it appears that since the entry of the order plaintiff has instituted a new action on the same subject matter and that defendant has entered a general appearance thereto.

Schnurr v Brazelton, 217-1125; 253 NW 152

Motion to dismiss—special appearance. In an action against insurance company to recover value of property destroyed by fire, in which action a special appearance attacked only one count of petition, the overruling of the special appearance and motion to dismiss was proper, inasmuch as jurisdiction that may be attacked by special appearance is jurisdiction of court over the entire action, and not jurisdiction of court as to part of such action.

Sanford Co. v Ins. Co., 225-1018; 282 NW 771

Nondeterminable matters. Whether an action is, in truth and fact, an action against the state in its sovereign capacity, is a question which cannot be tried out on a special appearance—the petition not showing on its face that the action is such.

Iowa Elec. Co. v Board, 221-1050; 266 NW 543

Nongeneral appearance. A special appearance to question the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the defendant had been sued in a county other than that of his residence, and on service on a nonagent of the defendant's, is not rendered a general appearance (1) by a motion to quash the return of service of the notice and to dismiss the action, or (2) by the introduction of relevant testimony at the hearing on said motion.

North English Bk. v Webber, 204-958; 216 NW 10

Nonresident served while in state as criminal defendant. When nonresident defendants in a criminal case were in attendance within the state, they were privileged from the service of civil process in another action, and a special appearance filed by them should have been sustained, notwithstanding a statute passed later legalizing such notice served on criminal defendants in pending actions.

Frink v Clark, 226-1012; 285 NW 681

Order overruling special appearance. An order of the district court overruling a special appearance, and thereby sustaining the jurisdiction of the court, is appealable.

In re Sioux City Yards, 222-323; 268 NW 18

Appearance of receiver of insolvent company. Where the district court of Scott county appoints a receiver to take charge of an insolvent trust company which was also a co-executor and co-trustee in an estate pending in the district court of Johnson county, and when such receiver is ordered by the Johnson district court to report and account, such receiver does not, by filing a pleading and supporting it by evidence denying the jurisdiction of the Johnson district court, thereby make a "general appearance" in the Johnson district court.

Bates v Evans, 226-438; 284 NW 385

Appearance date agreed on—waiver of notice. Where the parties in a proceeding to vacate an order of court approving the final report of a bank receiver stipulate that the court may set a date for appearance later than the second day of the term, and that the bank examiner will file an appearance or pleading on or before that date, and that no other or further notice to him shall be necessary, the examiner may not assert the departure from the statutory requirements as to the appearance date as a ground for challenging the jurisdiction of the court by a special appearance.

11091 Unserved parties—optional procedure.

Form. In rendering a decree, the court may very properly insert a precautionary clause to the effect that the decree is not binding on unserved and nonappearing parties.

Gunn v Gould Co., 206-172; 218 NW 895; 220 NW 127

11092 Real estate—action indexed.

Discussion. See 20 ILR 476—Lis pendens

Duplicate actions—which abatable. While an action in partition, in which service of the original notice is incomplete in whole or in part, is deemed pending in the sense that said action constitutes a lis pendens from the time the clerk properly indexes it as a lis pendens, yet, until completed service of the original notice of said action is made, said action cannot be deemed “commenced” or “pending” in the sense that it bars another subsequently instituted action in partition between the same parties and involving the same real estate.

It follows that when duplicate actions in partition, involving the same parties and the same real estate, are brought, that action only is abatable in which said service was last completed.

Ohden v Abels, 221-544; 266 NW 24

Lien on crops pending foreclosure—lis pendens. The remedial provisions of a mortgage, including a pledge of the rents and profits, are such a part of the subject matter of a foreclosure action that indexing in lis pendens imparts to a purchaser of the mortgagor-landlord's share of the corn constructive notice of the mortgagee's lien on the corn.

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

Petition—index—service—effect. The filing and due indexing of a petition to subject real estate to the lien of a personal judgment creates a lis pendens, and personal service of the action on the defendants outside the state establishes jurisdiction in rem, even tho the petition may be subject to a corrective motion or to demurrer.

Lawrence v Stanton, 212-949; 237 NW 512

Rents—lis pendens—effect. The filing of a petition for the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage, with prayer for the appointment of a receiver of the rents pledged by said mortgage, and the due indexing of said petition as a lis pendens, matures the mortgagee's lien on the pledged rents, even tho at said time the original notice of the action has not been served on the mortgagor. It necessarily follows that said matured lien has priority over a subsequent assignment of the said rents.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Jansen, 217-439; 251 NW 711

11093 Lis pendens.

Discussion. See 20 ILR 476—Lis pendens

Assignment pending action—right of grantee. One who becomes an assignee of a real estate mortgage after the commencement of a successful action to set aside the mortgage as fraudulent (the action being legally lis pendens by proper index) and who, during the trial of said action, to which he had been made a party, redeems the land from tax sale, must be deemed a mere volunteer payer of taxes with no right to have the amount paid by him made a lien on the land.

Clarkson v McCoy, 215-1008; 247 NW 270

Foreclosure—perfecting right to receivership. A mortgagee, whose mortgage contains a receivership clause covering the rents during the redemption period, perfects his right to such remedy (1) by duly filing his petition for foreclosure, (2) by praying for the appointment of such receiver, and (3) by causing his action to be indexed as a lis pendens. And this is true even tho the original notice filed with the petition is a nullity. It follows that his right to such remedy is prior to all other mortgagees subsequently foreclosing mortgages which embrace like clauses.

Union Tr. Co. v Carter, 214-1131; 243 NW 523

Indexing lis pendens—overcoming presumption. The presumption that the clerk of the district court duly indexed, as a lis pendens, a petition for the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage is so strong that convincing proof to the contrary is required to overcome it.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Jansen, 217-439; 251 NW 711

Lien on crops pending foreclosure. The remedial provisions of a mortgage, including a pledge of the rents and profits, are such a part of the subject matter of a foreclosure action that indexing in lis pendens imparts to a purchaser of the mortgagor-landlord's share of the corn constructive notice of the mortgagee's lien on the corn.

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

Petition—index—service—effect. The filing and due indexing of a petition to subject real estate to the lien of a personal judgment creates a lis pendens, and personal service of the action on the defendants outside the state establishes jurisdiction in rem, even tho the petition may be subject to a corrective motion or to a demurrer.

Lawrence v Stanton, 212-949; 237 NW 512

Purchase during litigation—effect. Principle reaffirmed that one who acquires an interest in land pendente lite is bound by the resulting judgment, even tho he was not made a party to the pending litigation.

Stiles v Bailey, 205-1385; 219 NW 537

Purchase pending foreclosure. One who purchases real estate pending a properly indexed foreclosure proceeding on the property, purchases at his peril.

Eckert v Sloan, 209-1040; 229 NW 714

Purchase pending foreclosure. The purchaser of real estate pending foreclosure of a mortgage may not avoid the effect of the constructive notice imparted by such proceeding by the claim that he purchased in reliance on a release of the mortgage by the mortgagee, (1) when he knew that the consideration for the release had wholly failed, and (2) when neither he nor the mortgagor acted in good faith in the transaction.

Eckert v Sloan, 209-1040; 229 NW 714

Mortgages—rents—lis pendens—effect. The filing of a petition for the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage, with prayer for the appointment of a receiver of the rents pledged by said mortgage, and the due indexing of said petition as a lis pendens, matures the mortgagee's lien on the pledged rents, even tho at said time the original notice of the action has not been served on the mortgagor. It necessarily follows that said matured lien has priority over a subsequent assignment of the said rents.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Jansen, 217-439; 251 NW 711

Unrecorded contract—election of remedy by seller—third party's rights. Under a contract for sale of automatic sprinkler system where the title or ownership is made to depend on a condition, it comes within §2905, C., '97 [§10016, C., '39] making such contracts invalid against creditors; and where seller by way of counterclaim to buyer's action, to avoid a mechanic's lien for the same property, elected to recover the purchase price, such seller made an irrevocable exercise of his option and neither the fact of filing such action nor filing the notice of lis pendens was a notice of lien as against the trustee for bondholders whose bonds were secured by a mortgage on all equipment of the corporation filed subsequent to such action. However, the action was a notice of an election to recover purchase price which waived any right to title, but was not such notice as was required by §2905, C., '97 [§10016, C., '39].

Fire Protection Co. v Hawkeye Co., 8 F 2d, 810

CHAPTER 490

PUBLICATION AND POSTING OF NOTICES

11098 Publications in English.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 427

11099.1 "Newspaper" defined.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 448; AG Op June 29, '39

Official newspapers—form and sufficiency of application for appointment. Under statute requiring that application shall be made to county supervisors for appointment as an official newspaper, an application which avers the qualifications of the newspaper in the words of the statute is sufficient. The application need not be in any particular form, and any written application by the publisher which apprises the board of the desire of the newspaper to be selected is sufficient to require the board to take cognizance of it.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

"General circulation" — general test. A "newspaper of general circulation" is determined not by the number of its subscribers, but by the diversity of its subscribers, and is such newspaper if it contains news, tho of limited amount, of a general nature, even tho it makes a specialty of news of a particular kind.

Burak v Ditson, 209-926; 229 NW 227; 68 ALR 538

Official newspapers—"bona fide yearly subscribers" defined. On the question whether a newspaper is entitled to be selected as an "official newspaper" of the county for a certain year, the following persons cannot be deemed "bona fide yearly subscribers," tho the newspaper is being sent to and received by them in the county, viz.:

1. Those whose subscriptions have expired prior to the year in question.
2. Those who have not subscribed for the newspaper for several years prior to the year in question.
3. Those who have never subscribed for the newspaper.

Van der Burg v Bailey, 209-991; 229 NW 253

Official newspapers—division of compensation. A newspaper which is entitled to be selected as an official newspaper for a county may agree with a newspaper which is not entitled to be so selected for a division of the compensation for official publications, and in such case both newspapers will be designated as official publications, but for one compensation only.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 448

11103 Refusal to publish.

Right to reject advertisement. The business of publishing a newspaper is a strictly private enterprise, and the owner thereof is free to accept or reject tendered advertisements as he sees fit.

CHAPTER 491

PLEADINGS

11108 Technical forms.

Removal of causes—filing of petition. Rule of federal courts recognized that filing of petition for removal of cause to federal court constitutes special and not general appearance. Under Iowa statute, the filing of such petition with notation thereof on record would constitute a special appearance even tho not expressly announced as such, since court will look to substance rather than form in determining whether an appearance is general or special.

Johannsen v Mid-Cont. Corp., 227-712; 288 NW 911

Allegations—conclusiveness on party pleading. An allegation binds the one who makes it, and when its truth militates against the pleader, it must be taken as true as against him.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825

Immaterial deviation. The fact that a guardian brings an action in behalf of the ward as "next friend" does not necessarily affect the validity of the proceedings.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

Liberality in pleadings. In the adjudication of claims pending in receivership proceedings, compliance with the strict rules of pleadings will not ordinarily be demanded.

Andrew v Bank, 207-948; 222 NW 8

Mongrel "and/or". The use of the mongrel term "and/or", in pleading specifications of negligence or recklessness, is sharply disapproved.

Popham v Case, 223-52; 271 NW 226

Technical inaccuracy. The pleading of an adjudication in a reply, instead of in the petition, does not necessarily constitute an error of consequence, even tho it be conceded that the technical rules of pleading are violated.

Cochran v Sch. Dist., 207-1385; 224 NW 809

11109 "Pleadings" defined.

Treating legally insufficient pleading as sufficient. See under §12827

Voluntary issues. See under §11426

Discussion. See 20 ILR 49—Defective pleading

Allegations in one count not admissions as to another count. Different theories of recovery contained in separate counts of a petition are not admissions by which the plaintiff is bound under the rule that he may not controvert his own pleading.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Answer and motion at same time. The filing of an answer to a petition as amended, and, at the same time, a motion attacking the amendment, is unallowable. In such case the answer will stand and the motion will be deemed waived.

Bliss v Watson, 208-1199; 227 NW 108

Belated filing of motion first raised on appeal—ignored. Question, that a motion attacking an answer was not timely, raised for the first time on appeal, will not be considered by the appellate court.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

Conclusiveness on pleader. A litigant who both concedes and alleges in his pleadings that the adverse party is in possession of premises under a lease is necessarily bound thereby.

Metropolitan v Andrews, 215-1049; 247 NW 551

Conclusiveness on party. The recitals of fact in the verified pleadings of a party may be conclusive on the same party in subsequent litigation.

Plymouth Co. v Schulz, 209-81; 227 NW 622

Contract to repurchase stock—equitable issues not presented. On appeal from a ruling sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to answer of a foreign corporation, in suit for breach of contract to repurchase from plaintiff its own stock, setting up defense that such purchase would impair its capital, which was prohibited under the statute of the state of its domicile, the supreme court could not exercise its inherent equitable power or give consideration to estoppel, ratification, implied contract, or theory that contract was loan, when proper pleading or proof relating thereto was lacking.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

Cost bond affidavit not a pleading. The statutory affidavit in support of a motion for cost bond is not a pleading.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

Equitable estoppel—pleading—necessity. An estoppel and the facts supporting it must be pleaded.

Securities Inv. Corp. v Noltze, 222-678; 269 NW 866

Misnomer—effect. The misnomer of a pleading is of little consequence.

Wilson v Tolles, 210-1218; 229 NW 724

Motion to strike conclusions—overruling not ground for reversal. Supreme court will not assume original jurisdiction to determine a motion to strike not ruled on in the lower court; but, even tho it were overruled, a motion to strike allegations on the ground that they were in the nature of conclusions and not statements of fact would not warrant a reversal in the supreme court.

Albright v Winey, 226-222; 284 NW 86

Receivers—nonnecessity for formal objections. The receiver of an insolvent bank is under no legal obligation to file formal objections to a claim which asserts a right to an equitable preference in payment of a deposit. In other words, he may contest the claim without formal pleadings.

Andrew v Church, 216-1134; 249 NW 274

Rejoinder. A “rejoinder” to a reply is unknown to our practice.

Cochran v Sch. Dist., 207-1385; 224 NW 809
Hiller v Felton, 208-291; 225 NW 452

Reply or amendment—waiver of objections. Altho a pleading, denominated as a reply, is really an amendment to the petition, but the question of proper pleading was not raised, and the defendants amended their answers as tho the reply had been an amendment to petition, and parties, without objection, offered evidence pertaining thereto, any objections possibly arising on account of the departure from the rules of pleading were waived.

Burns & McDonnell v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

Reply to reply—no legal standing. A reply to a reply brief and argument has no standing and will be stricken on motion.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

See Cochran v School Dist., 207-1385; 224 NW 809

Waiver of error—answer after overruling motions to dismiss. An error in overruling a demurrer or motion to dismiss is waived by answering to merits.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

Withdrawal of admission—effect. An admission by a party in his pleading is admissible against him even tho by an amended pleading he has withdrawn his admission.

Beery v Glynn, 214-635; 243 NW 365

11111 Petition.

I FORM OF PETITION

Pleadings in probate—informality. Pleadings in probate do not require the particularity and formality of pleadings in actions generally.

In re Willenbrock, 228- ; 290 NW 503

Name of plaintiff—variations. When, in a duly served original notice of suit, and in the petition filed, plaintiff’s name appears as “Joseph Gulberg”, the statement in the body of the petition that the plaintiff is also known as “Joseph Eulberg” and “that Joseph Gulberg and Joseph Eulberg are one and the same person” furnishes no ground for quashing the notice and dismissing the action.

Gulberg v Cooper, 219-858; 259 NW 925

Novation. A plea of novation must allege a mutual assent of all the parties affected by the transaction.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

II SPLITTING CAUSE OF ACTION

See also §11567 (VII)

Discussion. See 14 ILR 311—Splitting cause of action

Executory contract. A party to a continuing, executory contract may, notwithstanding the wrongful repudiation of the contract by the other party, insist on the contract and sue and recover the matured installments to date; and such action is no bar to a subsequent action to recover henceforth for the wrongful breach of the contract.

Collier v Rawson, 202-1159; 211 NW 704

Subjecting insurance to probate claim—dismissal as to policy in foreign court unallowable. A claimant in probate, alleging an oral contract assigning all decedent’s insurance, may not split this single cause of action by dismissing part of his claim and attempting to establish it in a foreign state where one policy was held as security for the performance of a prior contract of decedent made therein.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Res judicata—persons and matters concluded. Under the doctrine of res judicata a party must try his entire cause without splitting the issues or defenses, and so a former judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction rendered on the merits between the same parties or privies and on the same cause of action estops and bars relitigation of, not only matters raised, but also matters which might properly have been raised.

Bagley v Bates, 223-836; 273 NW 924

Claims acquired during foreclosure—independent action to enforce. Where, pending foreclosure action, plaintiff acquires an additional claim against the defendant, he is not bound to amend and assert said claim in the foreclosure proceedings, but may maintain a subsequent and independent action on the newly acquired claim, even tho it pertains to the subject matter of the foreclosure.

Central Bank v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW
242

Claim acquired during foreclosure. A junior mortgagee who, pending the foreclosure of his mortgage, pays the interest on a senior mortgage, is under no legal duty to include said payment in his foreclosure proceedings. He may subsequently assert such claim in an independent proceeding.

Jones v Knutson, 212-268; 234 NW 548

Mortgagee suing for delinquent taxes omitted from foreclosure judgment. A mortgagee who had paid delinquent taxes on the mortgaged land, according to a provision of the mortgage that if taxes were not paid the mortgagee could pay them and obtain repayment, should have taken care of his claim for taxes in the foreclosure proceedings and was not permitted by Ch 501, C., '35, to split his cause of action and bring an action for the taxes after the mortgagor had redeemed.

Monroe v Busick, 225-791; 281 NW 486

Note and mortgage—nonsplitting of action.
A mortgagee is not guilty of splitting his cause of action (1) by suing at law on his secured note and proceeding against property of the mortgagor other than the mortgaged property, and (2) by instituting foreclosure proceeding as trustee for other secured note holders without making any claim therein on his own note.

Iowa Co. v Clark, 213-875; 237 NW 336

Open account for material and labor—separate counts not required. In action on open account embracing material and labor, court's refusal to require plaintiff to divide cause of action into two counts, alleging items of material in one count and items of labor in the other, held not erroneous.

Edwards v Cooper, (NOR); 222 NW 376

Permissible splitting of action. When a promissory note, and the last interest coupon note, both mature at the same time in the hands of the same holder, a judgment in an action solely on the interest coupon note (which contains no promise to pay the principal) is not an adjudication of the amount due on the principal note. In other words, the holder may first sue on the coupon note and later on the principal note.

Des M. Trust Co. v Littell, 209-22; 227 NW
503

Rent—action on separate installments. The bringing of separate actions on separate installments of rent as they fall due under a lease does not constitute a splitting of a single cause of action, because the maturing of each installment matures a new cause of action.

Hoefler v Fortmann, 219-746; 259 NW 494

III CONSTRUCTION OF PLEADINGS

Construction supporting judgment. The court will, if fairly possible, so construe a pleading as to support the judgment of the trial court.

Schramm & S. Co. v Shope, 200-760; 205
NW 350

Constitutionality of statute. A pleading assailing the constitutionality of a statute must
(1) point out specifically the clause or section of the constitution which it is claimed is violated, and (2) designate the specific grounds upon which the asserted violation is based.

Pevevill v Board, 201-1050; 205 NW 543

Acquiescence in construction. A pleader who acquiesces in the interpretation of the trial court of an ambiguous pleading may not, on appeal, deny the effect of his acquiescence, especially when by a simple amendment he might easily have removed all uncertainty.

Wilson v Stever, 202-1396; 212 NW 142

Alternative allegation—construction. An allegation that a party "knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known" of a certain act, will be construed, when attacked by motion or demurrer, as simply alleging the weaker of the two alternatives, to wit: that the party "by the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known" of said act.

Cornick v Weir, 212-715; 237 NW 245

Action for discovery and accounting—intermingled law and equity. A petition, tho divided into "divisions" and to some extent separately embracing legal and equitable matters, is not subject to a motion to strike because of misjoinder, when the petition as a whole manifestly pleads but one cause of action, viz: an action for discovery and for an accounting.

Garretson v Harlan, 218-1049; 256 NW 749

Mutual construction of indefinite pleadings.
Indefinite pleadings will be treated on appeal as sufficient to properly raise the issue when

III CONSTRUCTION OF PLEADINGS—concluded the parties have so treated them in the trial court.

O'Bryon v Weatherly, 201-190; 206 NW 828

Building contracts—approval of materials—noncontradictory custom. Under a contract providing for the approval of materials to be furnished by a subcontractor to a principal contractor in part execution of a building contract, a known custom may be pleaded, to the effect that such approval was to be determined according to the plans and specifications of the general contract between the principal contractor and the owner of the building, provided that such custom is not contradictory to the subcontractor's contract.

Granette Co. v Neumann & Co., 200-572; 203 NW 935; 205 NW 205

Actions for damages—evidence. Evidence that a nuisance was a "health hazard" is fairly justified by a pleading that plaintiff and his family were, by reason of the nuisance, subject to "offensive, obnoxious, and poisonous odors * * * and detrimental to the comfort, use, and enjoyment of their property."

Hill v Winterset, 203-1392; 214 NW 592; 37 NCCA 232

Authority—insufficient plea. An allegation that a named party was an officer, and was charged with the financial management, of a college, "and, because of being such officer and financial agent, was authorized to enter into, on behalf of the college", a specified contract, is not such clear, direct, and definite allegation of authority as is required by the law.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Contradicting one's own pleading. A pleader is not estopped from pleading a state of facts which is absolutely contrary to his pleaded state of facts in a former pleading in the same court and in the same trial.

First N. Bk. v Frank, 203-364; 212 NW 705

Indefinite treated as sufficient. A court of equity will not reject testimony before it showing the unconscionable nature of the transaction upon which action is brought (i. e., that a contract is pyramided with unconscionable usury), simply because the pleadings are general and indefinite, and do not specifically plead such usury. Especially is this true when the parties have treated the pleadings as all-sufficient.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

Pleadings as evidence—counterclaim as admission. Where corporation, within its agency for an insurance association, insured its own automobile, and when sued along with the driver thereof on account of a collision involving the automobile, and when the corporation counterclaims therein, alleging that it and driver were free from negligence, which counterclaim was subsequently dismissed, then in a later action against corporation to recover on the policy, the corporation was bound by such allegation as an admission of its consent to use the vehicle, and the pleading was admissible in evidence therefor.

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

Action on insurance policy—real party in interest—authority to make admission in pleading. A defendant, Automobile Underwriters, a corporation, formed to underwrite reciprocal insurance contracts of its unincorporated group of subscribers, called the State Automobile Insurance Association, is the real party in interest in an action to enforce a judgment against the insurance carrier. The association is not a legal entity and, when the Automobile Underwriters is the only legal entity of the two, an admission of an important fact by the underwriters made in a counterclaim in the action in which judgment was obtained is binding on them in the later action.

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

Scope of employment—admission. A counterclaim to the effect that defendant's employee was, at a named time and place, operating defendant's automobile in a careful manner and without negligence, with prayer for damages against plaintiff for injuring the machine, will be construed as an admission that the employee was, at the time and place, acting within the scope of his employment.

Hamilton v Sprague, 202-47; 209 NW 446

Supplemental petition after answer—pleading valid second tax deed. Even after answer, a plaintiff relying on tax deeds in a quiet title action, may, after discovering the deeds are invalid, obtain and plead second tax deeds without reserving notice of expiration of redemption, especially when the answer contained, at most, only a conditional offer to pay the taxes and redeem.

Inter-Ocean v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Trespass and conversion. A party may plead trespass and conversion in the same action.

Girard v Anderson, 219-142; 257 NW 400; 4 NCCA (NS) 203

Unpleaded issues—instruction. Instruction reviewed and held not open to the vice of injecting an issue not in the pleadings, to wit: that plaintiff was an unwilling guest in defendant's automobile.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

IV GENERAL TEST OF SUFFICIENCY

Allegations—res ipsa loquitur—applicability determined from pleadings. When a dispute arose as to whether or not plaintiff was relying on res ipsa loquitur, trial court should interpret pleading, and determine therefrom—rather than from statements of counsel—whether res ipsa loquitur was applicable.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

Arrest of judgment—motion goes to sufficiency of petition. A motion in arrest of judgment raises only the question of whether the petition wholly fails to state a cause of action, not whether the petition should have been more specific.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Authority of agent. An allegation that money was paid under a mistake, in that the payer (1) did not know that the payee was not a bona fide holder for value of the nonnegotiable note in question, and (2) did not know the authority of the agent of the payee, is wholly insufficient, no attempt being made to show what authority the agent had.

Benton v Collège, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Belated objections. The objection that a petition does not state a cause of action may be deemed waived when made for the first time in a motion for a new trial.

Clarkson v Cas. Co., 201-1249; 207 NW 132

Beneficiary's right to insurance. An insurer who, in compliance with the policy-authorized demand of the insured, changes the beneficiary of a life insurance policy, and, on the death of the insured, makes full payment to said substituted beneficiary, must be deemed to have discharged the obligation of the policy, unless said insurer knew, or ought to have known, when payment was made, that, notwithstanding the provision of the policy authorizing a change of beneficiary, the first-named beneficiary had such interest or ownership in the policy as entitled him to receive said payment. Petition in equity held subject to motion to dismiss (equitable demurrer) because not sufficiently alleging such interest or ownership and the insurer's knowledge thereof.

Bennett v Ins. Co., 220-927; 263 NW 25

Establishing claim against proceeds of realty. An equity petition which alleged that widow elected to take under will devising to her a life estate, with the right to dispose of realty for her necessary support, and which prayed that a claim for support of widow, pursuant to a contract with her, be established and declared a lien against the realty, was held to plead sufficient facts, and, together with the evidence in the case, was sufficient to warrant its submission.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Foreign corporation's permit to do business—burden of proof. A foreign corporation for pecuniary profit, suing on an Iowa contract, has the burden to plead and prove its compliance with the statutes requiring permit to do business herein, without which a directed verdict in its favor is error.

Johnson Co. v Hamilton, 225-551; 281 NW 127

Judgment by default—no admission of cause of action. Principle reaffirmed that a default is not an admission of a valid cause of action where none is pleaded.

Neilan v Lytle Co., 223-987; 274 NW 103

Judgment notwithstanding the verdict—pleadings complete. Where the pleadings of the successful party averred all material facts necessary to a complete cause of action or defense, a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly overruled.

Lee v Sundberg, 227-1375; 291 NW 146

Nonspecific allegations. Even tho a pleading is not as specific and detailed in its allegations as it ought to be, yet if it alleges the ultimate fact governing plaintiff's action, the submission of such ultimate fact will not necessarily constitute error, especially when there is no motion for a more specific statement.

Kenwood Lbr. v Armstrong, 201-888; 208 NW 371

Petition—competent allegations—striking in toto improper. A motion to strike an entire amended and substituted petition, being too broad, is properly overruled when such pleading, altho replete with objectionable matters, nevertheless contains competent allegations necessary to afford the relief prayed for.

Skaien v Witmer Co., 224-391; 276 NW 623

Public aid—mandamus—sufficiency of petition. In mandamus to compel an appropriation by a board of supervisors to a farm bureau association, the failure of the petition to state the amount of aid furnished the bureau by the federal government is not fatal when the petition was not attacked in the trial court.

Appanoose Bureau v Board, 218-945; 256 NW 687

Removal—petition failing to state grounds. A petition, challenging the appointment of an administrator with will annexed and the correctness of the report filed on behalf of the deceased executrix, concluding with a prayer that the letters of administration be set aside, is insufficient inasmuch as it fails to state any ground for such removal as contemplated by §12066, C., '35.

In re Collicott, 226-106; 283 NW 869

Slander of property or title—essential elements—when petition demurrable. A petition in an action for damages for slander of title is demurrable unless, inter alia, it alleges, in some proper form, (1) the utterance and publication of the alleged slanderous words, and (2) the special legal damages suffered by plaintiff. Pleading reviewed and held fatally deficient in both particulars.

IV GENERAL TEST OF SUFFICIENCY —concluded

Witmer v Bank, 223-671; 273 NW 370

Subsequent purchaser—burden of proof. A mortgagee in an action for the conversion of the mortgaged chattels need only allege the existence of his unsatisfied mortgage. The defendant must allege and prove, not only (1) that he is a subsequent purchaser, but (2) that he became such purchaser without notice of the plaintiff's mortgage.

Loranz & Co. v Smith, 204-35; 214 NW 525; 53 ALR 662

V ULTIMATE FACTS

Admissions of fact—conclusiveness. Specific admissions of fact made in the pleadings which join the issues which are being tried are binding on the party making them, and as to such admissions there can be no issue.

Wilson v Oxborrow, 220-1135; 264 NW 1

Enticing and alienating. An allegation that the affections of a wife were alienated by slandering the plaintiff husband and by cultivating in the wife a dislike for plaintiff is sufficient without setting out the words uttered and the persons in whose presence they were spoken; likewise, an allegation that defendants "jointly and severally" conspired to alienate the affections of the wife from the husband.

Depping v Hansmeier, 202-314; 208 NW 288

Want of consideration. The all-essential element of a plea of failure of consideration is the facts. There need not necessarily be any formal statement "that there was a total failure of consideration."

Miller v Laing, 212-437; 236 NW 378

VI CONCLUSIONS

Conclusion plea. Alleging a legal conclusion without alleging the supporting facts is a bad plea.

Taylor County Bureau v Board, 218-937; 252 NW 498

Conclusions controlled by specific allegations. An allegation that an act was done "carelessly, negligently and fraudulently" must be construed as predicating the action solely on negligence when such is the effect of the pleader's subsequent and particularized allegations.

Pease v Bank, 210-331; 228 NW 83

Fact-supported conclusions permissible. A pleader has the right to plead conclusions provided the ultimate facts alleged support the conclusions.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 220-685; 263 NW 1

Harmless conclusion. An allegation of fact which is sufficient, if proven, to constitute negligence, is none the less sufficient because the pleader adds thereto his conclusion of negligence.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Unallowable conclusion plea. An allegation that a person was a financial officer of a college, and because of such fact was authorized to enter into a specified contract on behalf of the college, is an unallowable conclusion plea.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Unallowable conclusion plea. An allegation that the transferee of a negotiable promissory note received it without consideration,—that said transferee was not a bona fide holder for value,—is a conclusion plea, and is not justified by the additional allegation of fact that said transferee took the note as a "donation or gift".

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Damages—wrongful possession of trust deed and note. In action to recover damages because defendant wrongfully procured and retained possession of trust deed and note, plaintiff's allegation that, "by reason of the alleged wrongful conduct of the defendant, plaintiff was rendered helpless and unable to comply with his contract of sale of said land and to secure an extension of the time of payment" of an incumbrance, was a mere conclusion and insufficient to show that defendant's wrongful appropriation of note and trust deed was proximate cause of plaintiff's damages.

Arthaud v Griffin, (NOR); 205 NW 528

Fraud—conclusion. A general allegation that a defendant practiced fraud and deceit on the plaintiff in procuring the latter's signature to an instrument is a pure conclusion.

Legler v Ins. Assn., 214-937; 243 NW 157

Naked conclusion. An allegation that a fund "belongs to plaintiff" is, in and of itself, a mere conclusion.

Markworth v Bank, 212-954; 237 NW 471

Proof—legal conclusion of fraud—no defense. In an action on an administrator's bond, the surety's pleading of a legal conclusion of fraud between administrator and a claimant will not constitute a defense.

In re Davie, 224-1177; 278 NW 616

Striking of conclusions. Conclusions and immaterial matter have no proper place in a pleading, and should be stricken on motion.

Andrew v Ind. Co., 207-652; 223 NW 529

VII PRESUMPTIONS

Presumption. Principle reaffirmed that it will be presumed that a pleader states a case as strongly as the facts will justify, and that nothing will be assumed in his favor except that which, upon a fair and liberal interpretation, is implied from his averments.

Pettijohn v Halloran, 200-1355; 206 NW 631

Presumption as to sustaining facts. On appeal in an action involving the title to real estate, it will be assumed, in support of the judgment, that the plaintiffs were the proper parties in interest, tho the record is indefinite, when they were so treated without objection in the trial below.

Bullock v Smith, 201-247; 207 NW 241

Probate claim—payments applied on debts due—presumption. In a probate action to establish claim for housekeeping services rendered to decedent, where decedent promised to pay claimant small amounts from time to time to cover cost of her clothing and personal expenses, with an additional amount upon his death out of his estate, it would be presumed that small payments made by decedent in his lifetime were to be applied on debts which were due for such expenses, no showing having been made to the contrary.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Allegation of ownership or mortgageable interest. A petition in mortgage foreclosure need not allege that the mortgagor owned the land or had a mortgageable interest therein; neither need it allege that the mortgagor is estopped to deny such ownership or interest because the execution of such mortgage worked such estoppel in and of itself.

Watts v Wright, 201-1118; 206 NW 668

VIII CONDITIONS MATURING OR DEFEATING ACTION

Demurrer—self-negating petition. A petition which alleges the personal liability of defendants as partners or members of a joint adventure predicated on a writing which on its face reveals the fact that said defendants specifically contracted against such liability—no question of ostensible partnership being raised—is demurrable as not stating a cause of action.

Bank v Anderson, 216-988; 250 NW 214

Unpleaded theory. Appellant's demand, on appeal, for judgment on an unpleaded theory will be ignored.

Forsberg v Const. Co., 218-818; 252 NW 258

IX NEGLIGENCE

Discussion. See 16 ILR 480—Pleading negligence

Action—res ipsa loquitur applicability. The rule of res ipsa loquitur applies where the circumstances attending the injury are of such character that the accident could not well have happened in the ordinary course of events without negligence on defendants' part, and the instrumentalities causing the injury were within exclusive control of defendants.

Peterson v De Luxe Co., 225-809; 281 NW 737

Res ipsa loquitur—malpractice by dentist. While the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not ordinarily apply in malpractice cases, the doctrine was held applicable under the pleadings and proof that plaintiff was given a general anesthetic, was completely unconscious and under the exclusive control of the defendant-dentist at the time his teeth were extracted, and that nine months later he expectorated from his lungs, after a violent spasm of coughing, a quantity of sputum, mucus and blood containing the root of a tooth.

Whetstine v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Res ipsa loquitur. A general allegation of negligence or pleading of facts which is equivalent to such allegation, is an essential prerequisite to the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Whitmore v Herrick, 205-621; 218 NW 334; 34 NCCA 670

Res ipsa loquitur—specific allegations—effect. Proof that an agency or thing caused an injury under circumstances strongly suggestive of negligence on the part of the defendant having control of such agency or thing, but under circumstances such that direct evidence of the specific negligence is not readily available, opens the door to the injured party to rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, unless the injured party sees fit to allege and rely on specific allegations of negligence.

Orr v Elec. Light Co., 207-1149; 222 NW 560; 30 NCCA 622; 3 NCCA (NS) 540

Pleading—res ipsa loquitur. Plaintiff who relies on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and pleads facts showing the applicability of such doctrine, may (and should) plead negligence generally—need not (and should not) plead specific acts of negligence on the part of defendant and his employees.

Van Heukelom v Black Hawk Corp., 222-1033; 270 NW 16

Specific negligence—res ipsa loquitur—separate counts. Having received burns from a beauty parlor treatment, a plaintiff, after pleading specific acts of negligence in one count and the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in another count, may at the conclusion of the evidence withdraw the first count and rely on the res ipsa loquitur doctrine which is always applicable in cases where all the instrumentalities are under the control of the operator and where, had ordinary care been used,

IX NEGLIGENCE—concluded

the injuries would not ordinarily have occurred.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65; 2 NCCA(NS) 613

Res ipsa loquitur in amendment—nonconformity to evidence. Where a prospective purchaser driving a used automobile belonging to an automobile dealer takes as a passenger a person familiar with automobiles to advise as to its value, and while so driving has an accident wherein the passenger is injured, an amended petition relying on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not conform to the proof where the evidence excludes the likelihood of any automobile defect and indicates the accident was caused by driver trying to close automobile door against wind.

Sproll v Burkett Co., 223-902; 274 NW 63; 2 NCCA(NS) 424

Res ipsa loquitur—waiver. A general allegation of negligence, supportable by the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, is waived by inserting in the same count a specific allegation of negligence; but the rule is otherwise when the different allegations are in different counts and when the issue arising on the general allegation is alone submitted because of the dismissal by plaintiff of the count containing the specific allegation.

Sutcliffe v Fort Dodge Co., 218-1386; 257 NW 406

Taxicab door striking eye—res ipsa loquitur. An action for loss of an eye caused by the sudden opening of a taxicab door as plaintiff stopped on the sidewalk to engage the cab, and when plaintiff made no move toward opening the door, the exclusive control of which was lodged in the driver inside the cab, presents a case to which the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies. In such case defendants' motion for a verdict is properly overruled.

Peterson v De Luxe Co., 225-809; 281 NW 737

Amendment to petition—statute of limitations. An amendment to petition, setting up a new cause of action barred by the statute of limitations, may be stricken, but when both the original petition and the amendment plead the same cause of action in general allegations of negligence, such amendment may not be stricken.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Facts alleged generally—arrest of judgment not tenable. A motion in arrest of judgment will not lie to a petition which recites the facts out of which plaintiff's injury arose, and which contains a general allegation of negligence on the part of the defendants.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Allegation of negligence—definiteness determined in each case. Whether a negligence allegation is too general and indefinite to sustain a verdict, must, in every case, be determined in the light of the peculiar facts and circumstances out of which the cause of action arose.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

Negligence—pleading—sufficiency. A pleader is entitled to claim as many grounds of actionable negligence as flow from his pleaded statements of fact.

Sutton v Moreland, 214-337; 242 NW 75

Pleading carrier's degree of care and res ipsa loquitur. A general allegation of negligence in a petition followed by a further allegation of negligence, dealing with the degree of care required of carriers, did not prevent application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Peterson v De Luxe Co., 225-809; 281 NW 737

Rules and customs. Evidence of unpleaded rules and customs as a basis on which to predicate negligence is inadmissible.

Chilcote v Railway, 206-1093; 221 NW 771

Substituting last clear chance—not permitted. In a law action for damages wherein the petition alleges that defendant motorist was negligent in failing to keep a proper lookout, and such allegation was not withdrawn, and it is shown deceased pedestrian was contributorily negligent, it was proper to refuse to submit the case under last clear chance doctrine, on the theory that motorist, being under duty to keep a lookout, presumably performed such duty, but, after seeing deceased, failed to exercise due care in avoiding the injury.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825

Ultimate facts. Assignments of negligence reviewed and held to constitute sufficient statements of ultimate facts pertaining to a collision between vehicles.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Unnecessary particularity—name of negligent employee. Plaintiff, in an action based on negligence need not allege the names of defendant's servants and employees whom he claims were negligent.

Van Heukelom v Black Hawk Corp., 222-1033; 270 NW 16

X FRAUD

Fraud pleas—status in court. In fraud actions, courts are reluctant to permit a cheater to profit by his own wrongdoing, tho at the same time courts are constrained by another consideration—that it is for the public welfare not to afford parties to written agreements such ready avenues of escape from their obligations that the purpose of lastingly recording such obligations in writing would be quite indifferently attained—the aim being to minimize both evils without accentuating either of them.

Griffiths v Brooks, 227-966; 289 NW 715

Fraud—conclusion. An allegation that an administrator “fraudulently and collusively” caused the allowance of a claim against the estate is wholly insufficient to constitute a good plea of fraud.

In re Kessler, 213-633; 239 NW 555

Damages—pleading and proof. Allegation and proof of fraud without any allegation and proof of damages leave plaintiff without a cause of action.

Vorpahl v Surety Co., 208-348; 223 NW 366

Acceptance of completed construction work. In the absence of fraud or mistake, the acceptance of construction work by a city bars recovery on the contractor’s bond, except as to defects undiscoverable or unknown at the time of acceptance; however, the fraud or mistake necessary to overcome the acceptance must be alleged and proven.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Fraud in securing release. In an action on a life policy where the insurance company pleads a release, the burden of proof is on the company to show the execution and delivery of the release and payment of amount due thereunder, and where failure of consideration or fraud is alleged in obtaining the release, the burden of proof is on the party making the allegation, so where the court excluded such a release from evidence on account of insurance company’s failure to establish consideration for the execution of such release, it placed a burden on the company which the company should not have been required to sustain, and the ruling was clearly erroneous.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Evidence—sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that fraud cannot be assumed, and must be established by clear and convincing proof.

Edmunds v Ninemires, 200-805; 204 NW 219

Evidence — insufficiency — directed verdict warranted. In a damage action arising out of fraudulent procurement of plaintiff’s signature to note and conditional sale contract, where plaintiff predicates error on granting defendant a directed verdict on the ground that defendant’s fraud was not proved—the evidence showing that plaintiff could read and write English language but failed to read instruments while having an opportunity to do so—and where plaintiff’s reasons for not reading instruments were (1) he did not have his glasses, and (2) he thought he was signing an ordinary order for automobile, held, plaintiff’s conduct precludes him from asserting fraud, and the ruling on the motion was warranted.

Griffiths v Brooks, 227-966; 289 NW 715

Particular threat—reversible error. A party must stand or fall on the particular threat alleged by him as constituting duress. Reversible error results from permitting the jury to base its finding of duress on unpleaded matters.

Gray v Shell Corp., 212-825; 237 NW 460

XI ALLEGATION OF DAMAGES

Damages (?) or quantum meruit (?). An action for damages for breach of a contract of employment may be supported by evidence of the reasonable value of the services rendered, when the pleadings present such sum as the damages.

Westerfield v Oil Co., 208-912; 223 NW 894

Future pain. Damages for “future” physical and mental pain may not be submitted to the jury under a pleading (1) which makes no specific reference to such damages, and (2) which expressly pleads that such pain continued for a stated period, to wit, three weeks. This is true even though the pleading alleges that the injury alleged resulted in permanent, visible scars upon the “arm and wrist.”

Pettijohn v Halloran, 200-1355; 206 NW 631

Future disability—submission not erroneous when permanent injury alleged. When petition, alleging that plaintiff was permanently injured, contained a general allegation for damages, an instruction on damages for future disability was not objectionable on the ground that the petition did not ask for such damages, and it was not necessary for plaintiff to specifically plead such elements of damage.

Schwaller v McFarland, 228- ; 291 NW 852

Malpractice action — measure of damages. Damages for personal injury by malpractice held not limited to the time plaintiff was in the hospital, but included defendants’ treatment during the subsequent period while the wound was healing.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Manner of construction of lines—pleading violation of statute or ordinance—insufficiency. In an action against an electric company whose transmission line was so close to plaintiff’s building that firemen could not throw water on a fire until current was turned off, which delay caused destruction of building and contents, a complaint alleging violation of town ordinance and a state statute respecting construction of transmission line held insufficient to state a cause of action. .

Bowen v Iowa Public Service, 35 F 2d, 616

XI ALLEGATION OF DAMAGES — concluded

Substituting last clear chance—not permitted. In a law action for damages wherein the petition alleges that defendant motorist was negligent in failing to keep a proper lookout, and such allegation was not withdrawn, and it is shown deceased pedestrian was contributorily negligent, it was proper to refuse to submit the case under last clear chance doctrine, on the theory that motorist, being under duty to keep a lookout, presumably performed such duty, but, after seeing deceased, failed to exercise due care in avoiding the injury.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825

XII PRAYER FOR RELIEF

Prayer not necessarily controlling. The prayer to a petition is not necessarily controlling on the question whether the action is at law or in equity.

Markworth v Bank, 212-954; 237 NW 471

General prayer—scope of relief. In equitable action where pleading “was not as clear as it might have been”, yet prayed for general equitable relief, court enforced express provisions of legal contract to preserve rents and profits under the rule that where general equitable relief is prayed, any relief may be granted consistent with the pleadings and the evidence.

Wagner v Securities Co., 226-568; 284 NW 461

General equitable relief. In equity action seeking the appointment of a receiver, defendant's contention, that a receiver could not be appointed because no main cause of action was stated, was without merit, since plaintiff was in fact seeking to foreclose a lien on rents and had asked for general equitable relief, the rule being that “equity does not deal in technicalities, but rather it seeks to ascertain the true intent of the pleading filed”.

Wagner v Securities Co., 226-568; 284 NW 461

Ignoring defective pleading. A defendant may not ignore a suit against him and allow judgment to be entered and then have the judgment set aside for want of jurisdiction because of merely defective pleading, as distinguished from absence of pleading and prayer.

Nelson v Higgins, 206-672; 218 NW 509

Insufficient prayer. A personal judgment without a specific prayer therefor is erroneous, and a prayer for “other and further relief” is not such prayer.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Labor union injunction. Where a grave situation existed in the locality at the time, the state had the right to be made a party to proceedings involving an injunction violation by labor union officials, by filing a petition incorporating by reference the affidavits of the plaintiff's petition and the injunction upon which it was based, when the state did not seek different and distinct remedies from that asked by the plaintiff.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Petition — statutory requirements — prayer limits relief. Statute specifies the component parts of a petition, and the relief permitted thereunder is limited by the prayer therein.

In re Collicott, 226-106; 283 NW 869

Plea for additional relief—effect. The fact that a substituted petition asks for the same relief asked in the original petition, and for additional relief, does not change the cause of action.

Dunlop v First Tr. JSL Bank, 222-887; 270 NW 362

Teacher's pension—employment prerequisite. A public school teacher, after 30 years' service and while lacking only six months more service to be entitled to a pension, cannot mandamus the school board to compel her re-employment, and, such re-employment being the relief sought, a court may not go outside the pleaded issues and grant such a pension as the school board may have given.

Driver v School Dist., 224-393; 276 NW 37

11112 Counts or divisions—prayer.

Express contract and quantum meruit. A broker may plead in different counts (1) an express contract to pay a specified commission, and (2) an implied contract to pay a reasonable commission, and may insist on the submission of both issues to the jury if the evidence will support either finding. It follows that evidence may be admissible on the issue of quantum meruit, even tho plaintiff produces evidence of an agreement to pay the specifically named commission.

Ransom-Ellis Co. v Eppelsheimer, 205-809; 218 NW 566

Quantum meruit and express contract. In an action for services, duplicate counts are proper, one pleading quantum meruit and the other an express contract for definite compensation, and a refusal to compel plaintiff to elect between the two counts is not erroneous.

Halstead v Rohret, 212-837; 235 NW 293

Express and implied contract. A plaintiff may, in different counts, plead an express and an implied contract as to the same subject-matter.

Richmann v Beach, 201-1167; 206 NW 806

Double recovery. The submission to the jury of duplicate counts—counts praying recovery on the same elements of damages—and permitting recovery on both such counts is clearly erroneous.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144

Form of judgment. Where a trustee under a trust agreement sues the maker of promissory notes on a series of notes the beneficial interest of which is in different parties, the defendant may not complain that a separate judgment is rendered on each count, and an aggregate judgment for the sum of all the separate judgments, the defendant being amply protected, by the terms of the judgments, from a double liability.

Iowa Co. v Clark, 215-929; 247 NW 211

Harmless striking of count. The striking by the court of one of several counts of a petition must be deemed quite harmless when the matter stricken is substantially repeated in an unstricken count.

McGlothlen v Mills, 221-204; 265 NW 117

Multifarious theories in one count. A cause of action which is not barred until ten years after the execution and delivery of a deed is shown by a pleading which (1) pleads a contract of purchase of land by the acre, and the deed in fulfillment thereof, (2) shows payment for the acreage represented in the deed, and (3) alleges actual material shortage in the said acreage; and this is true even though the pleading does allege "mutual mistake" of the parties as to the acreage, and asks for the reformation of a mortgage for the purchase price.

Mahrt v Mann, 203-880; 210 NW 566

Open account for material and labor—separate counts not required. In action on open account embracing material and labor, court's refusal to require plaintiff to divide cause of action into two counts, alleging items of material in one count and items of labor in the other, held not erroneous.

Edwards v Cooper, (NOR); 222 NW 376

Pleadings—objections not raised in lower court. In an action for divorce based on cruelty, where the defendant made no objection either to the verification or the form of an amendment to a petition which alleged conviction of a felony, and the cause proceeded to trial without objection to petition as amended, the defendant on appeal could not complain that, because of the finding that equities were with plaintiff and were based on facts alleged in petition, trial court could not consider ground set out in amendment.

Ayers v Ayers, 227-646; 288 NW 679

Single count—not construed as two causes unless purpose of pleader clearly appears. While a defendant may waive the requirement that each cause of action must be set out separately, parties are presumed to follow the requirements of the statute in preparing their pleadings, and a single count or division of a petition will not be construed to state two causes of action unless the purpose of the pleader to do so clearly appears.

Young v Main, 72 F 2d, 640

Specific negligence—res ipsa loquitur—separate counts. Having received burns from a beauty parlor treatment, a plaintiff, after pleading specific acts of negligence in one count and the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in another count, may at the conclusion of the evidence withdraw the first count and rely on the res ipsa loquitur doctrine which is always applicable in cases where all the instrumentalities are under the control of the operator and where, had ordinary care been used, the injuries would not ordinarily have occurred.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65; 2 NCCA(NS) 613

Striking matter judicially held insufficient. A plaintiff has no right to re-plead a count which had been judicially and finally held to present no cause of action even though he combines said condemned count with another count.

Arthaud v Griffin, 212-646; 235 NW 66

Submission — nonspecific withdrawal of counts. The submission of one count of a petition may, in effect, work a withdrawal of all other counts.

Hill v Winterset, 203-1392; 214 NW 592

When separate counts required. A plaintiff who pleads both quantum meruit and express contract in the same count should be compelled, on motion, to separate his cause of action into separate counts.

Donahoe v Gagen, 217-88; 250 NW 892

Withdrawal of count by failure to instruct. Failure of the court to instruct on a pleaded count constitutes an effectual withdrawal of the count from the jury.

Cox v Fleisher Co., 208-458; 223 NW 521

I ANSWERS IN GENERAL

Admissions, general denial, and special defense—effect. An answer which consists (1)

I ANSWERS IN GENERAL—continued of certain admissions, (2) of a general denial of all other allegations, and (3) of a special defense which is in harmony with the denial, has the effect of requiring the plaintiff to establish all his allegations not admitted.

Walters v Acc. Assn., 208-894; 224 NW 494

Admissions of fact — conclusiveness. Specific admissions of fact made in the pleadings which join the issues which are being tried are binding on the party making them, and as to such admissions there can be no issue.

Wilson v Oxborrow, 220-1135; 264 NW 1

Adopting pleading stating valid defense—default against aged defendant set aside. A default order unaccompanied by any judgment may be validly set aside at a subsequent term. So held in a partition suit where defendant, an 84-year-old mother holding a life estate, after defaulting, adopted the answer and cross-petition of the defendant children, which pleadings, if true, would effectually prevent partition—a sound reason for setting aside the default.

Redding v Redding, 226-327; 284 NW 167

Avoidance of matter first appearing in reply. An answer to a reply seems to be unknown to our practice. But when the defendant in an action to quiet title answers that he is the owner of the property, and is met by a reply that defendant is estopped by his own contract from claiming title, and defendant wishes to plead that said contract was obtained from him by fraud and without consideration, quare: must defendant plead his said defense (a) by way of amendment to his answer, or (b) does the law impliedly supply such plea?

Carr v McCauley, 215-298; 245 NW 290

Bankruptcy—failure to plead discharge—effect. A discharge in bankruptcy of a claim subsequently sued on avails nothing unless the discharge is pleaded as a defense; and this is true tho the plaintiff has knowledge of the discharge.

Harding v Quinlan, 209-1190; 229 NW 672

Bank's mortgage on life estate changed to cover "undivided one-third" interest—effect. Where a bank has knowledge of an arrangement whereby a mother had a life estate in the entire property and made a mortgage accordingly, but in a later mortgage attempts to change its position by a mortgage on her interest as an "undivided one-third", its answer, admitting this allegation in the petition, estops the bank from claiming the mother had a greater interest and, when her interest develops to be a life estate, the bank's mortgage attaches only to an undivided one-third of this life estate.

Redding v Redding, 226-327; 284 NW 167

Cross-complaint — construction in view of stricken references. While the striking of portions of the first division of an answer may be proper as far as plaintiff's action is concerned, yet the court must treat said stricken portions as unstricken in construing defendant's cross-petition contained in a subsequent division of his answer when said stricken portions are essentially material to the cross-petition and are incorporated therein by distinct reference.

Andrew v Boyd, 213-1277; 241 NW 423

Cross-defendant's answer—effect on cross-petitioner. In mandamus action by county treasurer to obtain salary warrant where county board of supervisors answered, alleging indebtedness on part of treasurer to county for which set-off was claimed, and where county board brought treasurer's surety into the action as a cross-defendant, held, allegation in surety's answer, indicating that shortage in treasurer's office was due to the embezzlement by a third party, was not binding on board in view of its affirmative allegation that treasurer was indebted to the county.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

Delayed defense — effect. Long delay in pleading defensive matter is not, in and of itself, sufficient to fatally discredit such defense.

Bibler v Bibler, 205-639; 216 NW 99

Demurrer—improper use in denying truth of pleadings. A so-called demurrer, to a defendant-lessee's answer of lack of consideration for an oral agreement to surrender the premises, which does not admit the truth of the answer, but in effect denies it, is properly overruled. Such application is not the function of demurrer.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

Equitable estoppel—failure to reply to letter as to ownership of instrument. The acceptor of a trade acceptance does not estop himself from pleading defensive matter by failing to reply to a letter from an indorsee to the effect that the indorsee has purchased the acceptance.

First N. Bank v Power Co., 211-153; 233 NW 103

Estoppel to refuse payment. Where remainderman offers to reimburse the heirs of a life tenant, for delinquent taxes paid by life tenant, in such amount as the court may find to be due, it cannot be held that the remainderman recognized or acquiesced in the claim for reimbursement, and is not thereby estopped from refusing to pay.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

Governmental immunity — law question raised in reply. The defense of "governmental immunity" of an employee, in a personal injury action, should properly be assailed by motion or demurrer. However, if the law question of sufficiency of this defense is raised in the reply and not challenged by the defendant, and the case tried on that theory, then the court is correct in recognizing the issue and instructing on the inadequacy of that defense.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Frauds, statute of—pleading. A defendant, who has duly denied the alleged making of a contract to answer for the debt of another, needs no further pleading on which to base, during the trial, an objection that oral testimony is incompetent to establish such contract.

Lindburg v Engster, 220-1073; 264 NW 31; 116 ALR 591

Fraud—insufficient defense. A defendant sued by his former wife on a property-settlement contract, fully performed by her, availeth himself nothing in the way of a defense by nakedly alleging fraud by the wife in obtaining the contract when such allegation is made neither as a basis for a rescission of the contract nor for damages.

Poole v Poole, 219-70; 257 NW 305

Indirect admission. An answer may, by indirection, clearly admit the truth of an allegation contained in the petition.

Arends v DeBruyn, 217-529; 252 NW 249

Invalid defense not attacked by motion—defeating recovery. If matter pleaded as a defense is not challenged by motion or demurrer or otherwise, it will, if proven, defeat the plaintiff's action, tho had the question been properly raised the answer would have been held to present no defense.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Motion to separate actions—nonright to withdraw answer. In an action (1) to cancel a deed and (2) to set aside the probate of a will on the ground of mental incapacity of the testator-grantor—both instruments having been executed by the same party and at the same time—it is not necessarily error for the court to refuse to permit defendant to withdraw his answer in order to permit defendant to file motion to separate the alleged separate causes of action and to transfer to the law docket.

Walters v Heaton, 223-405; 271 NW 310

Pleading—conclusiveness. A party must stand or fall on the particular threat alleged by him as constituting duress. Reversible error results from permitting the jury to base its finding of duress on unpleaded matters.

Gray v Shell Corp., 212-825; 237 NW 460

Plea without proof. A defensive plea without proof availeth nothing.

Hawkeye Clay v Ins. Co., 202-1270; 211 NW 860

Recklessness particulars unchallenged before answer—submitting as alleged. Error may not be predicated on the submission of certain particulars alleging recklessness when their sufficiency is not raised before answer filed and when evidence exists to sustain them.

Claussen v Johnson's Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Stranger to instrument—defense of alteration not available. A third-party stranger to an instrument cannot avail himself of the alteration of such instrument by one of the parties thereto, as a defense against his own wrongful and fraudulent acts.

Winker v Tiefenthaler, 225-180; 279 NW 436

Unallowable pleadings—answer and motion at same time. The filing of an answer to a petition as amended and, at the same time, a motion attacking the amendment are unallowable. In such case, the answer will stand, and the motion will be deemed waived.

Bliss v Watson, 208-1199; 227 NW 108

Unassailed answer or cross-petition. Matter pleaded by defendant in an answer or cross-petition, if not assailed by motion or demurrer, will, if proven, defeat plaintiff's action, altho, had the question been raised, the answer would have been held to present no defense. Held, defendant had failed to prove his allegations.

Maloney v Rose, 224-1071; 277 NW 572

Withdrawing answer—substituting demurrer or motion. It is within the trial court's discretion to permit a litigant to withdraw his answer and substitute therefor a motion or demurrer.

In re Arduser, 226-103; 283 NW 879

Withdrawal to file motion. There is no statutory authority to support common practice of withdrawing pleadings for purpose of filing a demurrer or motion, and such matter rests wholly within sound discretion of trial court.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

II GENERAL DENIAL

Discussion. See 6 ILB 96—Scope of the denial in Iowa

General denial. A denial of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief constitutes a general denial of the allegation referred to.

Dean v Atkinson, 201-818; 208 NW 301

General denial—evidence of gift admitted. Evidence to establish a gift is admissible under a general denial.

II GENERAL DENIAL—continued

General denial—chattel mortgage not admissible thereunder in replevin action. General denial puts in issue only facts pleaded in the petition. So, under a general denial to a replevin action for an automobile, evidence of a prior mortgage is properly excluded, when not pleaded, inasmuch as, under a general denial, the court is not called upon to decide which lien is first but only the question of whether plaintiff is entitled to possession.

General Motors v Koch, 225-897; 281 NW 728

General denial coupled with inferential admission. In an action on a promissory note, an answer which contains a general denial is not rendered demurrable by an answering statement that "defendant admits he signed a note which he assumes is the one in controversy, but he demands its production and proof at the trial herein".

Home Bank v Kelley, 205-514; 218 NW 288

General denial supported by "alibi". Where a defendant in a civil case enters a general denial to a charge of having committed a tort, and in support thereof testifies that at the time in question he was at his home not far from the scene of the alleged tort, the court has no right to instruct (1) that defendant's defense is that of an "alibi", and (2) that defendant has the burden to establish such alibi by evidence which will outweigh the evidence tending to show that defendant did commit the tort.

Gregory v Sorensen, 208-174; 225 NW 342

General denial—unavailable matters in avoidance. Under a general denial of a contract of employment, defendant may not show that the contract was terminated by the discharge of the plaintiff.

Hornish v Overton, 206-780; 221 NW 483

Answer—foreign corporation—right to sue raised by general denial. A general denial will put in issue a foreign corporation's right to sue in Iowa when so alleged, dependent upon securing the statutory permit therefor.

Johnson Co. v Hamilton, 225-551; 281 NW 127

Answer negating petition. An answer which, in effect, is a negation of the allegations of the petition, proof of which plaintiff must make in order to recover, is not subject to a motion to dismiss.

Clark Bros. v Anderson, 211-920; 234 NW 844

Denial that plaintiff is real party in interest. In an automobile owner's damage action against a street railway, wherein defendant pleads a general denial and alleges that plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and wherein interrogatories attached to defendant's answer disclose that plaintiff's loss had been partly settled through insurance, and when defendant then alleges that a bank holds a mortgage on plaintiff's automobile, and moves the court to bring in the insurer and the mortgagee-bank as parties, such motion was properly overruled.

Caligiuri v Railway, 227-466; 288 NW 702

Denial precludes demurrer. An answer which pleads a denial of the execution of the note sued on is not demurrable, even tho, in an evident attempt to plead inconsistent defenses, the answer contains a colorable confession of such execution.

Seibel v Olson Bros., 202-711; 210 NW 925
Empire Trust v Dye, 205-1271; 215 NW 636

Denial with defendant's version. A defendant is under no obligation to prove his version of what a contract really was, even tho he pleads such version, when the plaintiff's plea of the contract has been met by a general denial.

Bremhorst v Coal Co., 202-1251; 211 NW 898

Inoperative denials. A denial of any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief is inoperative when the admissions made remove all matters upon which issue could be joined.

Kaeser v Manderschied, 203-773; 211 NW 379

New matter and general denial in single division—new matter admissions controlling. Where new defensive matter and a general denial are pleaded in a single division answer, the admission implied of the cause of action must control; however, an answer in fact separating its general denial and other matters into numbered parts, altho lacking the word "division" before each numeral, is sufficiently divided to avoid the effect of the foregoing rule.

Keshlear v Banner, 225-471; 280 NW 631

Quiet title—issues under general denial. In an action to quiet title where plaintiff's claim of ownership arose out of a deed deposited with a bank for delivery, and delivered to plaintiff after grantor's death, a general denial puts in issue both the execution and the delivery of the deed.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Rescission for fraud—general denial—effect. Where the plaintiff alleges rescission of a contract of sale because of defendant's fraud, and seeks to recover the money paid, a general denial does not raise the issue that plaintiff, after discovering the fraud, elected to affirm the contract.

Blecher v Schmidt, 211-1063; 235 NW 34

Unnecessary plea—burden of proof. A defendant who specifically pleads certain matter as a defense in addition to his defense of general denial, thereby invites the court so to instruct as to impose on defendant the burden to prove said specially pleaded defense, even tho said defendant might have rested on his general denial.

Jordison v Jordison Bros., 215-938; 247 NW 491

Johnson v McVicker, 216-654; 247 NW 488

III CONCLUSION DENIALS

Proof—legal conclusion of fraud—no defense. In an action on an administrator's bond, the surety's pleading of a legal conclusion of fraud between administrator and a claimant will not constitute a defense.

In re Davie, 224-1177; 278 NW 616

IV INFORMATION OR BELIEF

Answer—inoperative denials. A denial of any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief is inoperative when the admissions made remove all matters upon which issue could be joined.

Kaeser v Manderschied, 203-773; 211 NW 379

General denial—what constitutes. A denial of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to a signature constitutes a general denial of the genuineness of such signature.

Dean v Atkinson, 201-818; 208 NW 301

V CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE

Assault and battery. In an action for injuries inflicted upon the plaintiff when he was forcibly ejected from the home of the defendant, where the defendant's answer assumed the burden of proof by admitting the assault and battery, but by way of justification and confession and avoidance asserted that the plaintiff had been ejected after refusing to leave, the evidence was not sufficient to compel the court to direct a verdict for the defendant on the issue of whether the defendant had used more force than was necessary to accomplish the ejection.

Wessman v. Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

"Assault" admitted in pleadings—use of term permitted. In an action for damages in which the defendant's answer admitted an assault and battery but attempted to justify the act, he could not complain that the court, in its statement of the issues, said that he admitted the assault, as the word "assault" did not admit all that the plaintiff contended, but only the same act upon which the action was based.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

VI SPECIAL AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE AND NEW MATTER

Affirmative defense—burden of pleader. The jury, in a personal injury or death claim action where the defendant pleads "assumption of risk," should be plainly instructed that one pleading an affirmative defense must assume the burden of proving it.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Instructions—reasonable value—admissions from pleadings. In action to recover price of corn sold to elevator, an instruction injecting element of reasonable value was erroneous where the pleading alleged express agreement on price, and a further erroneous instruction stating what defendant's answer admitted, but omitting qualification in defendant's pleadings, was not cured by instruction referring to a substituted oral agreement.

Hartwig v Elevator Co., (NOR); 226 NW 116

Directing verdict—stricken pleading of settlement—nonreview. Since a settlement must be pleaded, the overruling of a motion for directed verdict alleging a settlement of the action is not reviewable when the pleading setting forth the settlement has been ordered stricken and such order stands unchallenged.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65

Government employee's automobile collision. In a damage action for injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, defendant's claim that he was a state employee performing a governmental function is a matter of defense not properly raised by special appearance.

Anderson v Moon, 225-70; 279 NW 396

Matters which may have been litigated in prior action—res judicata. In an action by heirs of intestate against a son of intestate to have property received by such son decreed to be an advancement and be deducted from the son's interest in the estate, wherein it is shown that such son had instituted a prior action in partition to have his interest in realty determined, held that such issue of advancement should have been raised as an affirmative defense and litigated in the prior partition action, and therefore is now res judicata.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Mending hold. Answer reviewed in an action for recovery of double benefits on a life insurance policy, and held not strikeable on motion on the alleged ground that defendant was thereby changing his defensive position after action had been brought on the policy.

Wenger v Assur. Soc., 222-1269; 271 NW 220

Merger and bar of defenses—nonbar or estoppel. A decree that a subscriber for corporate stock could not recover of the corporate receiver the amount already paid to the corporation on his subscription contract—such being the sole issue—does not estop the subscriber, when sued by the receiver for the unpaid amount of said contract, from pleading in

VI SPECIAL AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE AND NEW MATTER—concluded defense that the purported corporation never had any corporate existence.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

Posted signs — damage — settlement offer—denying directed verdict based on stricken pleadings. Denying a directed verdict based on a general standing offer of settlement, made by posted signs to all patrons of a beauty shop in the event of injury, pleaded in answer but stricken on motion by an order not alleged as error, cannot be reviewed on appeal.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65; 2 NCCA(NS) 613

Public official's receipt of money as issue—plea of full accounting—not affirmative defense. A city seeking to recover from its clerk water rents, allegedly received and unaccounted for, must go forward with the evidence and prove by a preponderance thereof, the receipt of such funds by the clerk,—the clerk's answer denying receipt of such funds and asserting that all money received was accounted for. Such answer is not an affirmative defense requiring defendant to prove payment, but raises the receipt of funds as a controverted fact or issue submissible to a jury.

Carroll v Arts, 225-487; 280 NW 869

Res judicata plea—inapplicability—stricken on motion. In an action by citizens against the town council to enjoin the operation of a municipal electric plant, the trial court is correct in striking, on motion, that portion of defendant's answer which pleads res judicata. when it appears that a former action in the United States district court for the same purpose was by a private electric company in its individual capacity to enjoin the construction of the plant and that no judgment on the merits was rendered.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

VII EQUITABLE DEFENSE

Defense against transferee. The maker of a nonnegotiable promissory note who, in defense to an action thereon by a transferee, pleads that, before he learned of the transfer, he had on deposit with the payee (a private banker) a sum sufficient to discharge the note, sufficiently alleges his continued ownership of the deposit by alleging that he never withdrew any part thereof from the bank.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

VIII COUNTERCLAIM

Agreement to release judgment—attorney fee and costs included. Under a settlement in which a judgment debtor agreed to deed certain real estate to his judgment creditor in consideration for release and satisfaction of a judgment, where the debtor performed his part of the agreement and the creditor released the judgment, but refused to satisfy two items consisting of attorney fees and court costs, the debtor, who became primarily liable for said items upon rendition of the judgment, was, on his counterclaim in action brought by creditor, entitled to a decree compelling creditor to satisfy said fees and costs.

Cooke v Harrington, 227-145; 287 NW 837

Amended answer omitting objectionable parts. In an action on a promissory note where the defendant asked for a set-off of the amount of the note and counterclaimed for an additional amount, and the counterclaim was stricken on motion, a substituted answer by the defendant which omitted the counterclaim was not subject to being stricken because of being identical with the original answer.

Lowry v White, (NOR); 285 NW 687

IX WAIVER BY ANSWER

More specific statement—error waived. Error in overruling a motion for more specific statement is waived by movant filing an answer.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Subsequent plea to the merits—effect. One who, on special appearance, challenges the jurisdiction of the court on the ground of defective service of the notice of suit, and who, after his challenge is overruled, pleads to the merits, and participates in the trial, thereby submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and is in no position to ask, on appeal, for a review of the ruling on his special appearance.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

Waiver by filing answer. In action on note, filing of answer waived right to proceed under statute by motion to strike cause of action improperly joined.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Withdrawal of pleading to file motion. There is no statutory authority to support common practice of withdrawing pleadings for purpose of filing a demurrer or motion, and such matter rests wholly within sound discretion of trial court.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Insurance policy admitted by pleadings. In an action to recover on a policy of fire insurance where the plaintiff's petition, a petition of intervention, and the answer to the petition of intervention all agreed that the policy was issued on a certain date and that it covered the same property that was covered by the mortgage and by another insurance contract issued by the intervenor, the record was not fatally deficient when it contained no evidence of the execution of the policy.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

11115 Multiple defenses and counter-claims.

Agreement to release judgment—attorney fee and costs included. Under a settlement in which a judgment debtor agreed to deed certain real estate to his judgment creditor in consideration for release and satisfaction of a judgment, where the debtor performed his part of the agreement and the creditor released the judgment, but refused to satisfy two items consisting of attorney fees and court costs, the debtor, who became primarily liable for said items upon rendition of the judgment, was, on his counterclaim in action brought by creditor, entitled to a decree compelling creditor to satisfy said fees and costs.

Cooke v Harrington, 227-145; 287 NW 837

Repurchase of stock — answer — validity against demurrer—equitable issues not raised by demurrer. The facts, set up in answer by a Delaware corporation, that (1) it had no surplus, and (2) the laws of the state of its domicile prohibited a repurchase of its stock from capital, present a defense to an action for recovery on an alleged breach of contract to repurchase stock when such answer is attacked simply by demurrer rather than by an appropriate remedy based on equitable rights. Demurrer does not raise estoppel, ratification, implied contract nor any other equitable theory.

11117 Divisions of answer.

Answer—new matter and general denial in single division—new matter admissions controlling. Where new defensive matter and a general denial are pleaded in a single division answer, the admission implied of the cause of action must control; however, an answer in fact separating its general denial and other matters into numbered parts, altho lacking the word "division" before each numeral, is sufficiently divided to avoid the effect of the foregoing rule.

Keshlear v Banner, 225-471; 280 NW 631

Burden of proof—public official's receipt of money as issue—plea of full accounting—not affirmative defense. A city seeking to recover from its clerk water rents, allegedly received and unaccounted for, must go forward with the evidence and prove by a preponderance thereof, the receipt of such funds by the clerk, —the clerk's answer, denying receipt of such funds, and asserting that all money received was accounted for. Such answer is not an affirmative defense requiring defendant to prove payment, but raises the receipt of funds as a controverted fact or issue submissible to a jury.

Carroll v Arts, 225-487; 280 NW 869

Demurrer to several defenses—motion to divide—prerequisite. A demurrer to a part only of several defenses not separated into divisions as contemplated by statute, is not the proper method of attack; the proper procedure would have been to require defendant to separate and divide before demurring.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

Inconsistent defenses—necessity for separate counts. A general denial and a plea of settlement of plaintiff's cause of action embraced in one count or division of an answer render inadmissible evidence in support of the general denial, because, when both defenses are pleaded in the same count or division, the general denial is nullified by the plea of settlement.

Miller v Johnson, 205-786; 218 NW 472

11120 Correction of defect.

Discussion. See 20 ILR 49—Defective pleading

Demurrer to several defenses. A demurrer to a part only of several defenses not separated into divisions as contemplated by statute, is not the proper method of attack; the proper procedure would have been to require defendant to separate and divide before demurring.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

Sua sponte simplification by court. The district court has inherent power, sua sponte, to simplify pleadings.

Collins v Cooper, 215-99; 244 NW 858

11121 Time to plead.

Answer after appeal on ruling on demurrer. A defendant who assumes to appeal from an adverse ruling on his demurrer without standing on his demurrer, and without suffering a judgment to be entered against himself, has a right to file an answer after his appeal has been dismissed and before default is entered.

Gow v Dubuque County, 213-92; 238 NW 578

Answer—stricken when belated—court's discretion. When no excuse for delay is shown, striking a belated answer is within the discretion of the trial court.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Special appearance and motion to dismiss. In an action against insurance company to recover value of property destroyed by fire, in which action a special appearance attacked only one count of petition, the overruling of the special appearance and motion to dismiss was proper, inasmuch as jurisdiction that may be attacked by special appearance is jurisdiction of court over the entire action, and not jurisdiction of court as to part of such action.

Sanford Co. v Ins. Co., 225-1018; 282 NW 771

11124 Copy of pleading—fee.

Failure to file—effect. Whether a motion should be sustained to strike a petition on the ground that no copy of the petition was also filed rests in the sound discretion of the court.

Andrew v Bank, 216-60; 245 NW 241

11127 Motion for more specific statement.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II WHEN MOTION WILL LIE
- III WHEN MOTION WILL NOT LIE
- IV WAIVER
- V APPELLATE REVIEW

I IN GENERAL

Amendment—insufficiency. Amendment, in action for damages consequent on alleged breach of building contract, reviewed and held wholly insufficient to comply with a motion for a more specific pleading.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 220-685; 263 NW 1

Exception to order. A plaintiff may except to an order sustaining a motion for a more specific statement and obtain a review of such ruling by refusing to plead over and appealing from the final judgment dismissing his action.

Depping v Hansmeier, 202-314; 208 NW 288

Nonpermissible objects. Motion seeking names and addresses of persons to whom alleged slanderous statements were made held properly overruled.

Johns v Cooper, (NOR); 205 NW 791

Order—attempted compliance—effect. Principle reaffirmed that a plaintiff who attempts to comply with an order of court, that he make his petition more specific, may not, when threatened with discipline for noncompliance, justify himself by the plea that the order for more specific statement ought not to have been entered.

Lamp v Williams, 222-298; 268 NW 543

Order—impossible compliance. A plaintiff who is ordered to make his petition more specific in certain particulars which he is actually or reasonably unable to state, and so demonstrates in a good faith effort to comply with the order, must be deemed to have complied with the order, and must not be disciplined by a dismissal of his action.

Lamp v Williams, 222-298; 268 NW 543

Objections to executor's final report—failure to dispose of securities. Objections to the final report of a trust company are not subject to a motion for more specific statement when officers of the trust company have equal or better knowledge of the facts called for by the motion, especially where the motion calls for evidentiary facts. Held, also, that trustee was charged with maladministration and not fraud.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Maladministration by executor or trustee—definiteness of allegation. When the final report of an executor and trustee of an estate was objected to on the ground of maladministration, the objection was sufficient tho it did not state whether the alleged wrongful acts were performed while the trustee was acting in its official capacity as executor or trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Wrongful retention of securities by trustee or executor. An objection to the final report of a trust company acting as trustee and executor of an estate is sufficient in alleging generally that the trust company wrongfully retained securities which it should have disposed of altho it does not state on what dates the securities should have been sold and what their values were on those dates.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Wrongful purchase of securities by executor or trustee. An objection to the final report of a trust company acting as trustee and executor was sufficient in alleging that securities were purchased without the approval of the court, altho the date of each purchase was not stated, and it was not stated whether the purchases were made as executor or trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Res ipsa loquitur—specific allegations—effect. Proof that an agency or thing caused an injury under circumstances strongly suggestive of negligence on the part of the defendant having control of such agency or thing, but under circumstances such that direct evidence of the specific negligence is not readily available, opens the door to the injured party to rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, unless the injured party sees fit to allege and rely on specific allegations of negligence.

Orr v Elec. Light Co., 207-1149; 222 NW 560; 30 NCCA 622; 3 NCCA (NS) 540

Torts—defect in street—notice—pleading. In an action in tort against a municipality, a plea that the city had notice of the defect in the street may be adequate tho such plea be subject to a motion for more specific statement.

Jensen v Magnolia, 219-209; 257 NW 584

Withdrawal of pleading to file motion. There is no statutory authority to support common practice of withdrawing pleadings for purpose of filing a demurrer or motion, and such matter rests wholly within sound discretion of trial court.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

II WHEN MOTION WILL LIE

Arrest of judgment—motion goes to sufficiency of petition. A motion in arrest of judgment raises only the question of whether the petition wholly fails to state a cause of action, not whether the petition should have been more specific.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Avoidance under res ipsa loquitur. A general allegation of negligence is subject to a motion for a more specific statement unless the pleader clearly indicates in his pleading his purpose to sustain said general allegation under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Sutcliffe v Fort Dodge Co., 218-1386; 257 NW 406

Breach of contract to build—particularity required. In an action for damages based on alleged breach of a written contract for the erection, under written specifications, of a structure (especially when it is of magnitude and complexity), general conclusion allegations by plaintiff of the use by defendant of defective materials and workmanship must, on proper motion, be accompanied and supported by fact allegations showing, with reasonable certainty, (1) wherein said material and workmanship were defective, (2) the location of the several alleged defects, and (under some circumstances) when each of said defects became manifest, and (3) the particular specification which was violated by using such material and workmanship.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 220-685; 263 NW 1

Erroneous denial. In an action for general and special damages, under general and somewhat meager pleading, based on an alleged libelous publication resulting (1) in loss of customers, (2) in being refused credit, and (3) in loss of earnings in business, plaintiff should, on motion for more specific statement of the action, be compelled to set forth the names of customers lost, the names of those who refused him credit, and the ultimate facts upon which he bases his demand for judgment on account of injury to his earnings.

Dorman v Credit Co., 213-1016; 241 NW 436

Overruling motion—movant at loss. An order overruling a motion for a more specific statement is appealable when the ruling deprives the movant of a right which cannot be protected by appeal from the final judgment.

Fay v Dorow, 224-275; 276 NW 31

“Reckless and negligent”—single allegation—more specific statement required. Where two motor vehicles collide and plaintiff riding in the back seat of one of the vehicles sues both drivers alleging “concurrent, reckless, and negligent conduct”, the petition is subject to motion for more specific statement as to whether or not plaintiff was a guest and whether defendants were both charged with both reckless and negligent acts.

Fay v Dorow, 224-275; 276 NW 31

Reservation of ground of review—general allegation of negligence—standing on motion to strike or make specific. To preserve an objection that an allegation of negligence was too general and indefinite to constitute basis of cause of action, a defendant should stand on its motion to strike and for more specific statement. Failing in this and filing its answer, it waived any error of court in overruling motion. A cause of action should be sufficiently precise to enable the defendant to prepare his defense.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

When required—avoidance of contract. A general allegation by an answering defendant of the commission, by plaintiff, of acts of “unfaithfulness and adultery”, pleaded by defendant in avoidance of the contract sued on, must be amplified, on proper motion, by alleging more specifically said alleged acts and the time when, place where, and person with whom, committed.

Poole v Poole, 221-1073; 265 NW 653

III WHEN MOTION WILL NOT LIE

Calling for evidentiary matter. A motion for more specific statement wherein evidentiary matters are largely called for is properly overruled.

Halstead v Rohret, 212-837; 235 NW 293

Excessive order. Motion for more specific statement of cause of action—sustained generally—reviewed, and held to burden plaintiff with unwarranted and unnecessary exactions, compliance with which were either most difficult or impossible.

Lamp v Williams, 222-298; 268 NW 543

Explaining common terms. Plaintiff who alleges that he furnished defendant the article or thing contracted to be furnished and that defendant accepted said article or thing, cannot be required to set forth in his pleadings how or in what manner plaintiff furnished said article or thing and how or in what manner defendant accepted it.

Hoxsey v Baker, 216-85; 246 NW 653

Nonpermissible objects. A motion for more specific statement of a petition should not call for (1) matter evidentiary in character, (2) matter essential for plaintiff's recovery, or (3) matter purely defensive to the action.

Day v Power, 219-138; 257 NW 187

Pleading carrier's degree of care and res ipsa loquitur. A general allegation of negligence in a petition followed by a further allegation of negligence, dealing with the degree of care required of carriers, did not prevent

III WHEN MOTION WILL NOT LIE—concluded application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Peterson v De Luxe Co., 225-809; 281 NW 737

Reasons for dissatisfaction. A landlord, under a lease authorizing either party thereto to cancel the same "in case the farming conditions are not satisfactory", need not, in a petition to remove the tenant, allege or set forth the reasons for his alleged dissatisfaction.

Jepson v Conner, 210-1267; 232 NW 693

Res ipsa loquitur—unnecessary particularity. Plaintiff who relies on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and pleads facts showing the applicability of such doctrine, may (and should) plead negligence generally—need not (and should not) plead specific acts of negligence on the part of defendant and his employees.

Van Heukelom v Black Hawk Corp., 222-1033; 270 NW 16

Specific reliance on res ipsa loquitur. A plaintiff who sues in tort and alleges generally (1) that defendant was guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of her injuries, and (2) that she relies on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, cannot be compelled, by motion for more specific statement, to state the particular acts of negligence of which she complains.

Harvey v Borg, 218-1228; 257 NW 190; 39 NCCA 139

Taxicab door striking eye—res ipsa loquitur. An action for loss of an eye caused by the sudden opening of a taxicab door as plaintiff stopped on the sidewalk to engage the cab, and when plaintiff made no move toward opening the door, the exclusive control of which was lodged in the driver inside the cab, presents a case to which the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies. In such case defendants' motion for a verdict is properly overruled.

Peterson v De Luxe Co., 225-809; 281 NW 737

Unallowable use of motion. A motion for more specific statement must not be made a vehicle with which to obtain from a plaintiff evidence upon which defendant may frame a defense. So held where the motion largely sought the production by plaintiff of matters extraneous to that sued on.

Southern Sur. v Salinger, 213-188; 238 NW 715

Unnecessary particularity—name of negligent employee. Plaintiff, in an action based on negligence need not allege the names of defendant's servants and employees whom he claims were negligent.

Van Heukelom v Black Hawk Corp., 222-1033; 270 NW 16

Unreasonable requirement. In an action in the nature of a discovery and for an accounting, plaintiff ought not, under a motion for a more specific statement, to be required to set forth the very facts which he is seeking to discover.

Garretson v Harlan, 218-1049; 256 NW 749

IV WAIVER

General and indefinite pleadings—waiver. A court of equity will not reject testimony before it showing the unconscionable nature of the transaction upon which action is brought (e. g., that a contract is pyramided with unconscionable usury), simply because the pleadings are general and indefinite, and do not specifically plead such usury. Especially is this true when the parties have treated the pleadings as all-sufficient.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

General or dragnet assignment. A general or dragnet allegation of negligence is properly submitted to the jury in accordance with the supporting evidence when such allegation is neither attacked (1) by motion for more specific allegation, nor (2) by motion to strike or withdraw.

Watson v Railway, 217-1194; 251 NW 31

Failure to attack general pleading. A pleading, unquestioned in the trial court, which alleges that goods were purchased and delivered under an "oral agreement", without specification of any agreed terms as to price or quantity, will support a judgment for the unquestioned reasonable value of the goods.

Chandler Co. v Groc. Co., 200-919; 205 NW 787

Future pain. A supported allegation that certain injuries were "permanent" is sufficient basis for the recovery of damages for future pain, in the absence of a motion for a more specific statement, or of instructions bearing thereon.

Cuthbertson v Hoffa, 205-666; 216 NW 733

More specific statement—error waived by filing answer. Error in overruling a motion for more specific statement is waived by movant filing an answer.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Nonspecific allegations. Even tho a pleading is not as specific and detailed in its allegations as it ought to be, yet if it alleges the ultimate fact governing plaintiff's action, the submission of such ultimate fact will not necessarily constitute error, especially when there is no motion for a more specific statement.

Kenwood Lbr. v Armstrong, 201-888; 208 NW 371

Waiver. Error in overruling a motion for a more specific statement as to alleged negligence is waived by the filing of an answer.

Broderick v Barry, 212-672; 237 NW 481; 75 ALR 1530

McKeehan v City, 213-1351; 242 NW 42

Y. M. C. A. v Caward, 213-408; 239 NW 41

Waiver of error by pleading over. Plaintiff may not predicate error on orders for more specific statement with which orders he has complied by pleading over.

Pride v Kittrell, 218-1247; 257 NW 204

V APPELLATE REVIEW

Appeal. An appeal will lie directly from an order overruling a motion to require plaintiff, in an action to recover the contract price for medical services rendered by him, to state whether at the time of rendering the services he was duly licensed to practice medicine; otherwise as to requiring plaintiff to set forth the contents of the formula used by plaintiff tho said formula was a subject matter of the contract.

Hoxsey v Baker, 216-85; 246 NW 653

Appeal. Orders which simply settle the issues in a case (e. g., an order overruling a motion for a more specific statement) are not ordinarily appealable.

Southern Sur. v Salinger, 213-188; 238 NW 715

Certiorari to review ruling. A litigant who moves to strike a pleading or to require it to be made more specific, may not have the rulings on his motion reviewed on certiorari; and this is necessarily true even tho it be conceded, arguendo, that the pleading in question was not legally on the calendar.

Holcomb v Franklin, 212-1159; 235 NW 474

Order overruling motion for more specific statement. An appeal will lie directly from an order overruling a motion for a more specific statement of a cause of action, when the ruling deprives the movant of a right which cannot be protected by an appeal from the final judgment.

Dorman v Credit Co., 213-1016; 241 NW 436

Motion for more specific statement—denial. An order overruling a motion for a more specific statement of allegations of negligence is not appealable when the allegations so attacked are virtually nugatory—of such nature that evidence in purported support thereof will not be admissible on the trial.

Ferguson v Cannon, 214-798; 243 NW 175

11129 Pleading contract.

Breach of contract to build—particularity required. In an action for damages based on alleged breach of a written contract for the erection, under written specifications, of a structure (especially when it is of magnitude and complexity), general conclusion allegations by plaintiff of the use by defendant of defective materials and workmanship must, on proper motion, be accompanied and supported by fact allegations showing, with reasonable certainty, (1) wherein said material and workmanship were defective, (2) the location of the several alleged defects, and (under some circumstances) when each of said defects became manifest, and (3) the particular specification which was violated by using such material and workmanship.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 220-685; 263 NW 1

Profert, oyer, and exhibits. The common law procedure of "oyer and profert", by which a party obtained the inspection of documents, is unknown to our code procedure.

Dunlop v Dist. Court, 214-389; 239 NW 541

Well drilling—compensation per foot to ample water, as a basis for a mechanic's lien. A contract to drill a well at an agreed price per foot for each foot drilled, coupled with a guarantee by the driller to secure an ample supply of water with no limitation on the depth of the well, means that the driller is to be paid at the contract price for every foot drilled to whatever depth it is necessary to go to fulfill the guarantee.

Collins v Gard, 224-236; 275 NW 392

11130 Equitable actions—motion to dismiss.

Discussion. See 10 ILB 193—Abolition of the equitable demurrer; 20 ILR 49—Defective pleading

Motion to dismiss—definition. A motion to dismiss an equitable action is, in legal effect, an equitable demurrer.

Swartzendruber v Polke, 205-382; 218 NW 62

Motion for dismissal—allowability and effect. A motion to dismiss an action in equity, made at the close of plaintiff's testimony, being without statutory recognition, simply constitutes an announcement by defendant that he rests his case without further testimony.

Vogt v Vogt, 208-1329; 227 NW 107

Motion as demurrer—effect. A motion to dismiss in an equitable action serves the same purpose as a demurrer in a law action, and admits as true only such facts as are well pleaded. Necessarily, then, the motion does not admit the legal conclusions of the pleader.

Duvall v Duvall, 215-24; 244 NW 718; 83 ALR 1242

Motion to dismiss. If any of the grounds of a motion to dismiss petition for construction of a will are well taken, it is not error to sustain such motion.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

Motion to dismiss in lieu of demurrer. A motion to dismiss a petition for a writ of certiorari will be treated as a demurrer when based on statutory grounds for demurrer.

Fehrman v Sioux City, 216-286; 249 NW 200

Mandamus—petition—motion to dismiss as proper attack. Attack on mandamus petition should have been made by a motion to dismiss rather than by a demurrer, since statutes provide that mandamus shall be tried as an equitable action, and that a petition in equity may be attacked by motion to dismiss.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Motion to dismiss—scope of confession. A motion to dismiss, under our new equity practice, confesses all facts which are properly and sufficiently pleaded in the pleading assailed, but not conclusions of law nor conclusions of fact, unless the facts from which the conclusions of fact logically follow are set out.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Motion to dismiss—speaking demurrer. A motion to dismiss in equity, being in effect a demurrer, is a speaking demurrer if it refers to matters not appearing on the face of the petition: e. g., a transcript of the board of review proceedings.

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

Amended pleading—repeating bad pleading—improper striking in toto. Error results from striking in toto an amended and substituted petition in equity on the sole ground that said pleading is but a repetition of a former petition which had been held bad on equitable demurrer (motion to dismiss), when said amended and substituted petition, while in part a repetition of said former bad pleading, alleges an entirely new fact basis for recovery and a prayer in harmony therewith.

Birk v Jones County, 221-794; 266 NW 553

Demurrer in lieu of motion. The attempt to employ a demurrer in an equity cause, in lieu of a motion to dismiss, presents no question to the court, and especially so when the so-called demurrer is inherently faulty.

American Sur. v Leach, 206-1355; 220 NW 34

Demurrer in lieu of motion. A demurrer to a petition in equity will, under some circumstances, be treated by the appellate court as a motion to dismiss.

Heitzman v Hannah, 206-775; 221 NW 470

Mandamus—demurrer treated as motion to dismiss. In mandamus action, where parties treat a demurrer as a motion to dismiss, it will be so viewed on appeal.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Demurrer or motion to dismiss—pleading over in equity. Plaintiff, in an action triable in equity, who has his action dismissed on motion because of defenses in point of law appearing on the face of the petition, must be accorded the right (1) to plead over, or (2) to elect to stand upon the ruling of the court.

Marcovis et al. v Commonwealth Inv. Co., 223-801; 273 NW 888

Equitable demurrer—effect. All material, well-pleaded fact allegations of a petition in equity are, for the purpose of a motion to dismiss (equitable demurrer), admitted to be true.

State v Des Moines, 221-642; 266 NW 41

Equitable demurrer—appeal—condition precedent. A party may not appeal from an order sustaining an equitable demurrer (motion to dismiss) unless he elects in some sufficient manner in the trial court to stand on the ruling of the court.

Benjamin v Jackson, 207-581; 223 NW 383

Sustaining equitable demurrer—failure to stand on pleading or suffer judgment—effect. An order sustaining defendant's motion to dismiss plaintiff's action on the ground that the petition fails to state a cause of action, will not be reviewed on appeal when the record fails to show that plaintiff either, (1) elected to stand on his pleadings, or (2) permitted final judgment to be entered against him. The ruling not being reviewable, the appeal will be dismissed.

Grimm v First N. Bank, 221-667; 266 NW 517

Demurrer in lieu of motion to dismiss. The action of the court in treating a demurrer in an equitable action as a motion to dismiss cannot be questioned by a party who invited such action and acquiesced therein until he suffered an adverse ruling.

Goldsberry v Goldsberry, 217-750; 252 NW 531

Change in beneficiary of insurance—justifiable and unjustifiable payment. An insurer who, in compliance with the policy-authorized demand of the insured, changes the beneficiary of a life insurance policy, and, on the death of the insured, makes full payment to said substituted beneficiary, must be deemed to have discharged the obligation of the policy, unless said insurer knew, or ought to have known, when payment was made, that, notwithstanding the provision of the policy authorizing a change of beneficiary, the first-named beneficiary had such interest or ownership in the policy as entitled him to receive said payment. Petition in equity held subject to motion to dismiss (equitable demurrer) because not sufficiently alleging such interest or ownership and the insurer's knowledge thereof.

Bennett v Ins. Co., 220-927; 263 NW 25

Conditions attending appeal. An appeal will not lie from an order overruling a motion to dismiss an equitable action on the ground of misjoinder of parties, unless the record shows (1) an election to stand on the pleading, or (2) that judgment was entered against the movant.

Fed. Sur. v Morris Plan, 209-339; 228 NW 293

Conditions precedent to appeal. An appeal from a ruling sustaining a motion to strike a plea of the statute of limitation in probate proceedings will not lie when the complainant fails to stand on the plea and fails to permit judgment to go against him.

In re Delaney, 207-451; 223 NW 486
Hawthorne v Andrew, 208-1364; 227 NW 402

Dismissal on plaintiff's testimony—effect. A defendant in an equitable action who, at the close of plaintiff's evidence, moves for and obtains a dismissal of plaintiff's action places himself in the position where, on appeal, the final determination of plaintiff's action must be determined on plaintiff's evidence.

Hirtz v Koppes, 212-536; 234 NW 854

Dissolving temporary injunction not operative as demurrer. General rule being that a preliminary injunction will be dissolved upon filing of an answer fully denying the material allegations of the petition, a motion to dissolve when filed thereafter and sustained will not operate as a demurrer to the petition nor adjudicate that the petition fails to state a cause of action.

Sioux City Patrol v Mathwig, 224-748; 277 NW 457

Franchise renewal statute—objecting stockholders selling to majority. At the termination of a mutual telephone company franchise, stockholders voting against renewal of franchise may not maintain an action against the majority stockholders to require purchase of their stock by such stockholders voting in favor thereof, until after three years from date of voting, under §8365, C., '35, permitting such franchise renewal, if the majority stockholders voting renewal purchase the stock of those voting against renewal within three years from date of voting, and an action commenced within such three-year period, being premature, will be dismissed on motion.

Terrell v Ringgold Tel. Co., 225-994; 282 NW 702

Effect of stipulated evidence. The principle that a motion to dismiss the petition in an equitable action (formerly denominated a demurrer) necessarily admits the truth of the well-pleaded allegation of the petition, may be materially modified or obviated by evidence which the parties stipulate into the record for the purpose of said motion.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633
Panther v Agri. Dept., 211-868; 234 NW 560

Effect of ruling. An order sustaining a motion to dismiss an equitable action and adjudging costs against plaintiff constitutes a final adjudication on the pleaded facts.

Swartzendruber v Polke, 205-382; 218 NW 62

Escheat proceeding. Where the state of Iowa in an estate proceeding files an application for the escheat to the state of the property in the estate and includes in its application extensive allegations dealing with the selection of a new administrator, a motion to strike those portions of the pleading dealing with the new administrator, when sustained, does not present an interlocutory order from which an appeal will lie, and, if taken, the appeal will be dismissed on motion.

In re Bannon, 225-839; 282 NW 287

Governmental immunity — law question raised in reply. The defense of "governmental immunity" of an employee, in a personal injury action, should properly be assailed by motion or demurrer. However, if the law question of sufficiency of this defense is raised in the reply and not challenged by the defendant, and the case tried on that theory, then the court is correct in recognizing the issue and instructing on the inadequacy of that defense.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Improper joinder. A misjoinder both of causes of action and of parties is ground for demurrer or for motion to dismiss in equitable proceedings.

McPherson v Sec. Co., 206-562; 218 NW 306
Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116

Improper use of motion. An issue of fact in an equity case cannot be determined on a motion to dismiss.

Lenahan v Drain. Dist., 219-294; 258 NW 91

Invalid defense not attacked by motion. If matter pleaded as a defense is not challenged by motion or demurrer or otherwise, it will, if proven, defeat the plaintiff's action, tho had the question been properly raised the answer would have been held to present no defense.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Legal effect. Plaintiff who, in an equitable action, moves to dismiss defendant's answer may not avail himself of the allegations of the petition when the allegations of the answer are diametrically the opposite to those of the petition.

Lenahan v Drain. Dist., 219-294; 258 NW 91

Misjoinder both of parties and of causes. In action on promissory notes, defendant's demurrer, filed after answer, on ground of mis-joinder both of causes of action and of parties was properly overruled.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Misjoinder of parties. A mere misjoinder of parties cannot be reached by demurrer.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Misjoinder in equity of parties and causes—remedy. A misjoinder, in an equitable action, of parties and causes of action, is properly met by motion to dismiss.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Nonappealable orders—motion in equity to dismiss. An appeal will not lie from an order in an equity cause sustaining a motion to dismiss made at the close of plaintiff's testimony.

Bridges v Sams, 202-310; 202 NW 558

Optional rights. When a motion to dismiss an equitable action is sustained, the plaintiff may (1) stand on his pleadings and appeal, or (2) amend.

Swartzendruber v Polke, 205-382; 218 NW 62

Order overruling motion to strike. An order overruling a motion to strike a pleading is appealable when the ruling goes to the very merits of the controversy.

State v Murray, 217-1091; 252 NW 556

Repeating bad pleading — improper striking in toto. Error results from striking in toto an amended and substituted petition in equity on the sole ground that said pleading is but a repetition of a former petition which had been held bad on equitable demurrer (motion to dismiss), when said amended and substituted petition,—while in part a repetition of said former bad pleading,—alleges an entirely new fact basis for recovery and a prayer in harmony therewith.

Birk v Jones County, 221-794; 266 NW 553

Ruling as adjudication. The overruling of a motion to dismiss a petition in an equitable action does not amount to an adjudication unless the defendant stands on his motion and allows judgment to be entered against him.

Frazier v Wood, 219-36; 255 NW 647; 257 NW 768

Single or dual cause of action — test. The obligee of a bond, who pleads solely for the recovery of the amount due him under the bond, pleads but a single cause of action, tho he prays for different remedies against different parties, or in part pleads for unallowable relief.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Standing on motion. An order overruling a motion to strike which is not the equivalent of a demurrer imposes no necessity on the appealing party to affirmatively stand on his motion and allow judgment to be entered against him on the merits.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Standing on motion to dismiss. A ruling which denies a motion to dismiss (in lieu of the former equitable demurrer) is not appealable unless the movant unequivocally elects to stand upon his motion, and submits to a final adverse judgment; and this is true tho appellant asserts on his attempted appeal that he has nothing further to plead.

Morrison v Clinic, 204-54; 214 NW 705

Frazier v Wood, 215-1202; 247 NW 618

When appeal lies — overruled demurrer to answer. Where plaintiff after answer moved for judgment of dismissal and also for judgment on the pleadings, held that if it be permissible to treat the latter motion as a demurrer to the answer, yet an adverse ruling thereon was not appealable unless plaintiff elected to stand thereon.

Morrison v Clinic, 204-54; 214 NW 705

Waiver of error—answer after overruling motions to dismiss. An error in overruling a demurrer or motion to dismiss is waived by answering to merits.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

Withdrawal of pleading to file motion. There is no statutory authority to support common practice of withdrawing pleadings for purpose of filing a demurrer or motion, and such matter rests wholly within sound discretion of trial court.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

11131 Disposal of points of law.

Disposing of law points—premature questions. In determining the effect of a ruling on a motion to dispose of points of law, it is proper to read the whole pertinent record to ascertain what the court decided, and where a court overruled such a motion which urged that a certain letter was not a sufficient memorandum to take the case out of the statute of frauds, and record revealed that ruling was made because the question could not be determined before submission of evidence, such ruling was not an adjudication which became the "law of the case" so as to prevent subsequent exclusion of the letter upon objection made during trial.

Patterson v Beard, 227-401; 288 NW 414

Law issues determined—premature motion. Where trial court made a finding in decree on final determination of the case that a finding and determination of law issues, filed three years previously on plaintiff's motion for "Disposal of points of law" under statute, was final as to the rights of litigants, it not having been appealed from, and on appeal from decree on final determination, where plaintiff alleges supreme court is without jurisdiction to hear or determine the appeal for the reason that order determining issues is res adjudicata and notice of appeal not having been filed until after three years, held, since such order on motion to determine law issues was entered not only before any testimony was taken, but before issues were made up, no answer being filed, the motion was premature. The statute is not to be used to test the court on assumed facts which might or might not appear from evidence.

Wall v Ins. Co., 228- ; 289 NW 901

Striking cross-petition. An order in foreclosure proceedings striking a defendant's cross-petition from the files is not appealable when defendant's answer, which remained on file, properly pleaded and prayed for the sole and identical relief pleaded and prayed for in said cross-petition.

Yeomen v Ressler, 216-983; 250 NW 169

Striking objections in probate—affidavits improper. A motion to strike objections to probate accounts on the grounds of misjoinder of actions is determinable only on the contents of the pleading attacked without aid of affidavits.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

11132 Plea in bar or abatement.

Duplicate actions— which abatable. While an action in partition, in which service of the original notice is incomplete in whole or in part, is deemed pending in the sense that said action constitutes a lis pendens from the time the clerk properly indexes it as a lis pendens, yet, until completed service of the original notice of said action is made, said action cannot be deemed "commenced" or "pending" in the sense that it bars another subsequently instituted action in partition between the same parties and involving the same real estate.

It follows that when duplicate actions in partition, involving the same parties and the same real estate, are brought, that action only is abatable in which said service was last completed.

Ohden v Abels, 221-544; 266 NW 24

Prior adjudication—pleading prerequisite to proof. A prior adjudication must be pleaded before evidence thereof is admissible. Rule applicable to interpleaders.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Unamendable pleadings. When the trial court abates an equitable action (e. g., mandamus) by dismissing it on the ground of misjoinder both of parties plaintiffs and of causes of action, and plaintiff makes no effort to avoid the abatement by pruning out of his pleading the objectionable misjoinders, but stands on his pleadings, and on appeal suffers an affirmance of said order of dismissal, he may not thereafter amend his pleadings in the dismissed action by then pruning out said objectionable matter. The pleadings of a finally dismissed action are, manifestly, not subject to amendment.

First N. Bank v Board, 221-348; 264 NW 281; 106 ALR 566

11133 Notice for hearing.

Undetermined motion—procedure. An undetermined motion by defendant to dismiss an action erroneously pending in equity immediately becomes a demurrer when the action is properly transferred to the law calendar, and must be disposed of as any other demurrer, and with the same consequences.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

11134 Time of answer or reply.

Belated reply. A reply filed without leave of court and after the trial is concluded, and purporting to conform the pleadings to the evidence, may be considered, notwithstanding its untimeliness, when neither party is deprived thereby of any testimony.

Miller v Surety Co., 209-1221; 229 NW 909
McDonald Co. v Morrison, 211-882; 228 NW 878

11135 Motions and demurrers.

Motions generally. See under §11229

Discussion. See 20 ILR 49—Defective pleading

Brief of authorities—motion to strike. An elaborate brief of authorities, inserted in a pleading following the pleading of foreign statutes, is properly stricken on motion.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617; 1 NCCA(NS) 292

Decisions reviewable—orders to strike and dismiss. An order overruling a motion to strike a pleading and to dismiss parties because of the improper joinder of actions and of party defendants is appealable.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Misjoinder of parties. A mere misjoinder of parties cannot be reached by demurrer.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Motion to dismiss. If any of the grounds of a motion to dismiss petition for construction of a will are well taken, it is not error to sustain such motion.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

Overruled motion to strike—standing on motion. An order overruling a motion to strike which is not the equivalent of a demurrer imposes no necessity on the appealing party to affirmatively stand on his motion and allow judgment to be entered against him on the merits.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Pleadings—objections not raised in lower court. In an action for divorce based on cruelty, where the defendant made no objection either to the verification or the form of an amendment to a petition which alleged conviction of a felony, and the cause proceeded to trial without objection to petition as amended, the defendant on appeal could not complain that, because of the finding that equities were with plaintiff and were based on facts alleged in petition, trial court could not consider ground set out in amendment.

Ayers v Ayers, 227-646; 288 NW 679

Striking legally unprovable allegation. Legally unprovable allegations in pleadings are properly stricken on motion. So held where, in an action at law to recover the amount due on a written lease, defendant, while admitting the due execution by him of the written lease, pleaded a prior oral lease—contradictory of the written lease—as containing the correct terms of the leasing.

Jacobsen v Moss, 221-1342; 268 NW 162

Unallowable modification of ruling. The court, having overruled a motion (1) to strike an answer, and (2) for judgment nil dicit, has no right, later and after the term of court has expired, and while the cause is pending, to materially amend said ruling without pleadings, without hearing, and without notice to the defendant.

Taylor v Grimes Corp., 218-1281; 257 NW 353

Waiver by filing answer. In action on note, filing of answer waived right to proceed under statute by motion to strike cause of action improperly joined.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Withdrawal of pleading to file motion or demurrer. There is no statutory authority to support common practice of withdrawing pleadings for purpose of filing a demurrer or motion, and such matter rests wholly within sound discretion of trial court.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

11135.1 One motion and demurrer only.

Motion to strike as demurrer. A motion in a law action to strike an alleged misjoined action will be treated by the appellate court as a demurrer when so treated by the trial court and by the parties to the action.

Kellogg v Bell, 222-510; 268 NW 534

Unallowable motion to strike. A second motion to strike matter from the same unamended petition is unallowable.

Conner v Henry, 205-95; 215 NW 506

Unallowable successive motions. It is not permissible for defendant to file separate, successive motions "of the same kind" to the same unamended petition. So held where defendant first filed a motion to strike portions of a petition, and, being overruled, filed a motion for a more specific statement of said petition, it being held that said motions were "of the same kind" in that each motion had the same objective, to wit, the proper settling of the pleading for trial.

The proper and necessary procedure is to combine the subject matters of both motions into one motion.

Bookin v Utilities Co., 221-1336; 268 NW 50

11136 Subsequent pleadings.

Amendments. See under §§11182, 11184

Belated filing—effect. A reply may be permitted, within the discretion of the court, after the close of plaintiff's evidence and after the court has overruled a motion for a directed verdict.

Miller v Surety Co., 209-1221; 229 NW 909
McDonald Co. v Morrison, 211-882; 228 NW 878

Belated filing of motion first raised on appeal—ignored. Question, that a motion attacking an answer was not timely, raised for the first time on appeal, will not be considered by the appellate court.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

Supplemental petition after answer—pleading valid second tax deed. Even after answer, a plaintiff relying on tax deeds in a quiet title action, may, after discovering the deeds are invalid, obtain and plead second tax deeds without re-serving notice of expiration of redemption, especially when the answer contained, at most, only a conditional offer to pay the taxes and redeem.

Inter-Ocean v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

11137 Pleadings suspended.

Undetermined motion—procedure. An undetermined motion by defendant to dismiss an action erroneously pending in equity immediately becomes a demurrer when the action is properly transferred to the law calendar, and must be disposed of as any other demurrer, and with the same consequences.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

11140 Amendment before answer.

Amendment before answer—notice—sufficiency. A notice of the filing of an amendment before answer need not comply with all the requirements of an original notice, either as to form or service.

Swan v McGowan, 212-631; 231 NW 440

Amendment after demurrer—when timely. Timely filing of an amendment to an answer by party entitled so to amend, after a demurrer to the answer was sustained, deprived the ruling on the demurrer of all effect as a final adjudication. Such ruling on demurrer in and of itself settles nothing and it becomes an adjudication only if defeated party chooses to make it such.

Schwartz v School Dist., 225-1272; 282 NW 754

Amendment to petition when ready for trial. In a contract action, when the petition had been on file for almost three years, the pleadings made up, the jury impanelled, and witnesses in attendance when their attendance at another time might have been difficult to obtain, the court acted within sound judicial discretion in striking an amendment which the plaintiff had filed without leave of the court, by which the plaintiff attempted to increase the amount of recovery sought, basing the amendment on quantum meruit rather than on the contract, as in the original petition.

Munn v Drakesville, 226-1040; 285 NW 644

Reply or amendment—waiver of objections. Altho a pleading, denominated as a reply, is really an amendment to the petition, but the question of proper pleading was not raised, and the defendants amended their answers as though the reply had been an amendment to petition, and parties, without objection, offered evidence pertaining thereto, any objections possibly arising on account of the departure from the rules of pleading were waived.

Burns & McDonnell v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

Failure to give notice. A plaintiff may not, after the entry of default, amend his pleadings by increasing the amount of the claim, without notice to the defendant, and take judgment on the amended pleadings.

Chandler Co. v Sinaiko, 201-791; 208 NW 323
Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

Invalidating amendment. A petition to enjoin a defendant from maintaining a nuisance (§2017), may not be so amended, before appearance and before answer, as to convert the petition into one to enjoin the defendant from operating as a bootlegger (§1927), unless the defendant is given due notice of such amendment.

De Witt v Dist. Court, 206-139; 220 NW 70

Matters concluded—issue raised by rejected amendment. An application to amend the petition offered after submission of the case, tho overruled by the court, makes the issue raised by the amendment res judicata when the identical issue is raised in a subsequent action, especially when no appeal is taken from the ruling on such application.

Bagley v Bates, 223-836; 273 NW 924

New cause of action under guise of amendment. A cause of action for damages predicated on the alleged negligence of plaintiff's agent in making improvident loans of plaintiff's funds, and a cause of action for damages predicated on the alleged fraudulent misapplication and appropriation by plaintiff's agent of plaintiff's funds, are separate and distinct causes of action. It follows that the pleading of the latter as an amendment to the former is unallowable when the latter cause of action is barred by the statute of limitation.

Pease v Bank, 210-331; 228 NW 83

Special appearance after general appearance. A nonresident defendant who, after a service in a foreign state, enters a general appearance in an action in rem, is not thereby precluded from later entering a special appearance attacking the jurisdiction of the court because of the filing by plaintiff of an amended and substituted petition which converts his former action in rem into an action for an accounting and for personal judgment against said nonresident.

Fidelity Co. v Bank, 213-1058; 237 NW 234

11141 Demurrer—causes of—actions at law.

Pleading in abatement. See under §11222

I APPLICABILITY AND INAPPLICABILITY IN GENERAL

General denial. A general denial is not demurrable.

Dean v Atkinson, 201-818; 208 NW 301

Denial precludes demurrer. An answer which pleads a denial of the execution of the note sued on is not demurrable, even tho, in an evident attempt to plead inconsistent defenses, the answer contains a colorable confession of such execution.

Seibel v Olson Bros., 202-711; 210 NW 925

I APPLICABILITY AND INAPPLICABILITY IN GENERAL—continued

General denial precludes demurrer. A general denial precludes demurrer.

Empire Co. v Dye, 205-1271; 215 NW 636

General denial coupled with inferential admission. In an action on a promissory note, an answer which contains a general denial is not rendered demurrable by an answering statement that "defendant admits he signed a note which he assumes is the one in controversy, but he demands its production and proof at the trial herein."

Home Bank v Kelley, 205-514; 218 NW 288

Conclusions of law or fact. Conclusions of law or fact are not demurrable.

Dean v Atkinson, 201-818; 208 NW 301

Administrator—petition for removal—when not demurrable. When the allegations of a petition for removal of an administrator are sufficient to warrant a hearing on the application because of a showing of a tangible and substantial reason to believe that damage will accrue to the estate, the petition is not vulnerable to a demurrer.

In re Arduser, 226-103; 283 NW 879

Attorneys for juveniles—compensation—jury question. An action by an attorney against a county for compensation for defending a juvenile delinquent is not demurrable but presents a jury question.

Ferguson v Pottawattamie County, 224-516; 278 NW 223

Bondholders (?) or trustees (?). When trustees for a bondholder have, under the terms of the bonds, the exclusive right to maintain an action for the protection of the bondholder, the latter may not maintain such action, and thereby convert himself into a trustee, on the naked allegation, in substance, that the trustees will, because of partiality, be less aggressive in prosecuting such action than the bondholder.

McPherson v Sec. Co., 206-562; 218 NW 306

Carriage of goods—interstate shipment—building contractor not consignee. A common carrier's petition against a building contractor alleging transportation as a benefit received, alleging unjust enrichment and nonpayment, and seeking to collect transportation charges on an interstate shipment of building material is demurrable and fails to state a cause of action in omitting an allegation showing a contractual liability on the defendant contractor as a party to the shipping contract.

Des Moines & C. I. Ry. v Ins. Co., 224-15; 276 NW 56

Conclusion allegation. A petition in habeas corpus does not show on its face that the petitioner is entitled to a discharge when it simply alleges the naked conclusion that he has served the full statutory time prescribed as a penalty for "arson", the crime of arson being covered by various and different statutes and being attended by various and different terms of imprisonment.

Bailey v Hollowell, 209-729; 229 NW 189

Dissolving temporary injunction not operative as demurrer—nonadjudication. General rule being that a preliminary injunction will be dissolved upon filing of an answer fully denying the material allegations of the petition, a motion to dissolve when filed thereafter and sustained will not operate as a demurrer to the petition nor adjudicate that the petition fails to state a cause of action.

Sioux City Patrol v Mathwig, 224-748; 277 NW 457

Effect of stipulated evidence. The principle that a motion to dismiss the petition in an equitable action (formally denominated a demurrer) necessarily admits the truth of the well-pleaded allegation of the petition, may be materially modified or obviated by evidence which the parties stipulate into the record for the purpose of said motion.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

Panther v Agri. Dept., 211-868; 234 NW 560

Governmental employees—personal liability for torts—demurrer inapplicability. A governmental employee committing a tortious act which causes injury to another in violation of a duty owed to the injured person, becomes, as an individual, personally liable in damages therefor. (Hibbs v School Dist., 218 Iowa 841, overruled.)

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Doherty v Edwards, 226-249; 284 NW 159

Improper motion to strike and judgment on pleadings. A motion to strike an answer and for judgment on the pleadings manifestly cannot be properly sustained when the answer, both by general and specific denials, puts in issue the very gist of plaintiff's cause of action.

Ind. Sch. Dist. v Sch. Dist., 216-1013; 250 NW 192

Invalid defense not attacked by motion—defeating recovery. If matter pleaded as a defense is not challenged by motion or demurrer or otherwise, it will, if proven, defeat the plaintiff's action, tho had the question been properly raised the answer would have been held to present no defense.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Misjoinder both of parties and of causes. In action on promissory notes, defendant's demurrer, filed after answer, on ground of misjoinder both of causes of action and of parties was properly overruled.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Peace officer as agent of public—nonliability of town for tort. A law-enforcing officer, whose office is created by statute and whose duties are prescribed therein, is an agent of the public in general and not the agent of the municipality which employs him, therefore the municipality is not liable in damages for his unlawful or negligent acts, and a petition alleging cause of action thereon against the municipality is demurrable.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

Pleading ministerial character of acts. A petition for damages against a municipality because of the wrongful acts of municipal agents and employees is demurrable unless the petition alleges such facts as show that the acts complained of were corporate or ministerial (the only acts for which the municipality would be liable), and not governmental.

Rowley v City, 203-1245; 212 NW 158; 53 ALR 375; 34 NCCA 464

Pleading—prima facie sufficiency. A prima facie cause of action against guarantors is presented by a pleading based on an instrument which purports to reveal a principal debtor, and a guaranty of the promise of such debtor, and an allegation that the debtor has defaulted.

Foundation Press v Bechler, 211-1217; 233 NW 666

Repurchase of stock — answer — validity against demurrer—equitable issues not raised by demurrer. The facts, set up in answer by a Delaware corporation, that (1) it had no surplus, and (2) the laws of the state of its domicile prohibited a repurchase of its stock from capital, present a defense to an action for recovery on an alleged breach of contract to repurchase stock when such answer is attacked simply by demurrer rather than by an appropriate remedy based on equitable rights. Demurrer does not raise estoppel, ratification, implied contract nor any other equitable theory.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

Right of review—error against appellee—when considered. An answer, in an action to recover personal judgment on a promissory note, to the effect that plaintiff had theretofore foreclosed a mortgage securing the note and had thereby elected his remedy and abandoned all claim to a personal judgment against defendant and was estopped to assert the contrary, is demurrable when there is no allegation, (1) that personal judgment had been, or might have been, rendered in said foreclosure against defendant, or (2) that inconsistent remedies existed and that plaintiff had chosen one of them, or (3) that defendant had altered his position because of said foreclosure; but if error in sustaining the demurrer be conceded, yet the error is not such as an appellee may avail himself of, without appeal, in order to neutralize an error against appellant.

Northern Trust v Anderson, 222-590; 262 NW 529

Ruling on demurrer after answer. The court may, with the acquiescence of all parties, rule on a demurrer after the demurrant has answered. Such action is equivalent to permitting the demurrant to withdraw his answer.

Goldsberry v Goldsberry, 217-750; 252 NW 531

Self-negating petition. A petition which alleges the personal liability of defendants as partners or members of a joint adventure predicated on a writing which on its face reveals the fact that said defendants specifically contracted against such liability—no question of ostensible partnership being raised—is demurrable as not stating a cause of action.

Reason: The petition on its face negatives liability.

Farmers & M. Bk. v Anderson, 216-988; 250 NW 214

Slander of property or title—when petition demurrable. A petition in an action for damages for slander of title is demurrable unless, inter alia, it alleges, in some proper form, (1) the utterance and publication of the alleged slanderous words, and (2) the special legal damages suffered by plaintiff. Pleading reviewed and held fatally deficient in both particulars.

Witmer v Bank, 223-671; 273 NW 370

Teachers—action on contract. A petition which seeks recovery of the compensation arising under a contract for teaching, but which pleads a statutory discharge of plaintiff by the board of directors, is demurrable, even tho plaintiff also pleads that his appeal from the discharge to the superintendent of public instruction was dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Streyfeller v School Dist., 210-780; 231 NW 325

Waiver of error. An error in overruling a demurrer or motion to dismiss is waived by answering to merits.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

Withdrawal of pleading to file demurrer. There is no statutory authority to support common practice of withdrawing pleadings for purpose of filing a demurrer or motion, and such matter rests wholly within sound discretion of trial court.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

II FORM AND REQUISITES

Defective form. A demurrer to a petition in quo warranto—a law action—on the ground that “the facts stated do not entitle plaintiff to the relief demanded” presents no question for the court beyond those wherein the demurrant specifically points out wherein said facts are insufficient.

State v Munn, 216-1232; 250 NW 471

Motion to dismiss as demurrer. A motion to dismiss a petition for a writ of certiorari will be treated as a demurrer when based on statutory grounds for demurrer.

Fehrman v Sioux City, 216-286; 249 NW 200

Motion to strike as demurrer. A motion in probate to strike a plea in defense to a claim sought to be enforced by the executor, admits the truth of all matters properly pleaded in the plea.

In re Carpenter, 210-553; 231 NW 376

Motion to strike as demurrer. A motion in a law action to strike an alleged misjoined action will be treated by the appellate court as a demurrer when so treated by the trial court and by the parties to the action.

Kellogg v Bell, 222-510; 268 NW 534

Conclusions of law not admitted by demurrer. In an action against a school district for the reasonable value of transportation furnished to a pupil, a demurrer by the school district did not admit that the transportation was furnished under an implied contract, as a demurrer does not admit the truth of a conclusion of law.

Buggeman v Sch. Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

Nature or subject of action—nonwaiver of right to be heard on motion. The right to be heard on a motion for change of venue is not waived because movant, simultaneously with the filing of the motion, files a demurrer to the petition.

Board v Dist. Court, 209-1030; 229 NW 711

III SPEAKING DEMURRER

Power of court. The supreme court can take no notice of the allegations of a speaking demurrer.

Grimes v Taylor, (NOR); 282 NW 346

Speaking demurrer. Judicial proceedings, which are extraneous to a pleading which is demurred to, may not be considered in ruling on the demurrer, either in the trial or the appellate court.

McPherson v Sec. Co., 206-562; 218 NW 306

Speaking demurrer. A demurrer presents no questions unless the basic facts giving rise to such questions appear on the face of the pleading demurred to.

Ritter v Schultz, 211-106; 232 NW 830

Motion to dismiss—speaking demurrer—transcript from board of review. A motion to dismiss in equity, being in effect a demurrer, is a speaking demurrer if it refers to matters not appearing on the face of the petition: e. g., a transcript of the board of review proceedings.

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

IV DEMURRER TO PART OF PLEADING

Demurrer—improper use in denying truth of pleadings. A so-called demurrer, to a defendant-lessee's answer of lack of consideration for an oral agreement to surrender the premises, which does not admit the truth of the answer, but in effect denies it, is properly overruled. Such application is not the function of demurrer.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

Demurrer to several defenses—motion to divide—prerequisite. A demurrer to a part only of several defenses not separated into divisions as contemplated by statute, is not the proper method of attack; the proper procedure would have been to require defendant to separate and divide before demurring.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

V DEMURRER TO PLEADING GOOD IN PART

Invalid resolution of necessity—procedural requisites to paving contract—demurrer. After the supreme court has adjudged certain paving assessments and the procedural requisites to a paving contract invalid because the resolution of necessity lacked the necessary three-fourths vote of the city council, an assignee of the paving assessment certificates may not rely on said contract as an express written agreement to pay for the paving from the general fund on account of a clause in the contract requiring deficiencies to be so paid, hence a cause of action thereon is subject to demurrer.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

VI OPERATION AND EFFECT OF DEMURRER

Answer after appeal on ruling on demurrer. A defendant who assumes to appeal from an adverse ruling on his demurrer without standing on his demurrer, and without suffering a judgment to be entered against himself, has a right to file an answer after his appeal has been dismissed and before default is entered.

Gow v County, 213-92; 238 NW 578

Appeal from ruling on demurrer. In an action to recover against the estate of a deceased executor for losses caused by improper handling of an estate, the plaintiffs had no right to appeal from a ruling sustaining a demurrer filed by the defendants when the plaintiffs did not elect to stand on the pleadings nor suffer final judgment to be entered against them.

Hayes v Selzer, 227-693; 289 NW 25

Demurrer admitting paternity of illegitimate child. In an application in probate to construe the word "grandchild" in a will which left the residuary estate to children and grandchildren of testatrix's deceased brother-in-law, and a contention that an illegitimate child of brother-in-law's son was included in such word "grandchild", a demurrer to the petition admitted allegations that brother-in-law's son was father of such illegitimate, and that testatrix knew of such relationship at time will was executed.

In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

Motions—striking revamped pleading. Striking a pleading which is simply a repleading of a formerly stricken matter is proper, but not so when the repleading is so coupled with new matter as to render the whole pleading proper.

Granette Co. v Neumann & Co., 200-572; 203 NW 935; 205 NW 205

Nonwaiver—right of appeal. If it affirmatively appears that the unsuccessful party does not waive the error in ruling on demurrer, he may properly urge, on appeal, objection to such order.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Pleading over—issue abandoned. When district court determines, on demurrer, that restrictions on alienation in a will to avoid debts are invalid, and parties plead over and do not appeal from said ruling, the issue is abandoned and cannot be made the subject of an appeal.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

Questions of fact ignored. Paragraphs of a demurrer which averred defensive matters involving controversial questions of fact, such as ratification, waiver, laches, former adjudication, and estoppel, were not entitled to recognition as grounds of demurrer and were properly ignored by the trial court.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 641

Repleading—not waiver of exception. Pleading a restatement of original allegations of petition does not constitute a waiver of exception to ruling on demurrer, and objection may be urged upon such ruling when the party duly excepts and allows judgment to be entered.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Statute violation—assumed for purpose of demurrer. In an action for injuries resulting from a motor vehicle collision at an intersection, where defendant's truck is alleged to have been parked so as to obscure the view of a stop sign, and where the violations of both city ordinance and state law are pleaded, the supreme court will assume, for the purpose of demurrer, that truck was parked within prohibited distance and did obscure the sign.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Striking matter judicially held insufficient. A plaintiff has no right to replead a count which has been judicially and finally held to present no cause of action even tho he combines said condemned count with another count. It follows that said last count is properly stricken insofar as it embraces said formerly adjudicated count.

Arthaud v Griffin, 212-646; 235 NW 66

Tenancies at will—termination. In a forcible entry and detainer action where the petition alleged a notice dated January 12th terminating a tenancy at will "within 30 days from the date of this notice", such notice being served on January 13th, a demurrer should have been sustained, as only 29 and not the statutory 30 days' written notice was given.

Murphy v Hilton, 224-199; 275 NW 497

VII JURISDICTION OF PERSON OR SUBJECT MATTER

Negligent operation of road maintainer—nonliability—demurrer. Neither a county, as a quasi corporation, nor its board of supervisors is liable for the negligence of its employee in operating after dark a road maintainer without lights on the left-hand side of a highway, and in an action by a motorist who sustained injuries on account of such negligence demurrers to the petition by the county and its board of supervisors were properly sustained.

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

VIII LEGAL CAPACITY TO SUE

Incapacity to sue—waiver. An objection to the capacity in which plaintiff sues must be interposed by defendant before he pleads to the merits.

Keeling v Priebe, 219-155; 257 NW 199

IX ANOTHER ACTION PENDING

No annotations in this volume

X DEFECT OF PARTIES

Improper joinder. A misjoinder both of causes of action and of parties is ground for demurrer or for motion to dismiss in equitable proceedings.

McPherson v Sec. Co., 206-562; 218 NW 306

Misjoinder both of parties and of causes. In action on promissory notes, defendant's demurrer, filed after answer, on ground of misjoinder both of causes of action and of parties was properly overruled.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

X DEFECT OF PARTIES—concluded

Misjoinder of corporate parties. On appeal from an order overruling a motion to strike on ground that there was misjoinder of a principal corporation and its subsidiary, where question to be determined was whether the corporate entity of the subsidiary could be disregarded because it was so organized, controlled, and conducted as to make it a mere instrumentality of the principal corporation, which question being one of fact determinable only after a hearing of the evidence, the supreme court would not decide the matter on basis of the pleadings.

Wade v Broadcasting Co., 227-427; 288 NW 441

Unassailable by demurrer. A mere misjoinder of parties cannot be reached by demurrer.

Gibson v Union Co., 208-314; 223 NW 111
Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

XI INSUFFICIENT STATEMENT OF FACTS TO JUSTIFY RELIEF PRAYED

Counterclaim—failure to complete loan—no bar to recovery of part loaned. Where one person agrees to loan money to form a corporation, pursuant to which he loans a part and takes a note therefor, his failure to loan the balance will not prevent recovery of the part loaned, and a counterclaim so alleging states no cause of action and should be stricken.

Hilje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

Franchise renewal statute—objecting stockholders selling to majority—action within three years premature—dismissal. At the termination of a mutual telephone company franchise, stockholders voting against renewal of franchise may not maintain an action against the majority stockholders to require purchase of their stock by such stockholders voting in favor thereof, until after three years from date of voting, under §8365, C., '35, permitting such franchise renewal, if the majority stockholders voting renewal purchase the stock of those voting against renewal within three years from date of voting, and an action commenced within such three-year period, being premature, will be dismissed on motion.

Terrell v Ringgold Tel. Co., 225-994; 282 NW 702

XII STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

Bills and notes—construction and operation—time of payment—marginal entry. A properly dated promissory note which fails to state, in the strict body thereof, any time for payment, is, nevertheless for the purpose of a demurrer presenting the bar of the statute of limitation, payable at a fixed and definite date when, in the corner of the note and opposite the signature to the note, appear the words, "the term of five years".

Nylander v Nylander, 221-1358; 267 NW 7

Cashier's check as bill of exchange—demand unnecessary—accrual of action—barred after 10 years. The holder of a cashier's check, certain in amount, containing no provisions respecting demand and not in the nature of a certificate of deposit, has a right to sue thereon at any time from and after its issuance. Treated as a bill of exchange, presentment and demand for payment are not necessary to start running the statute of limitations. Therefore, after 10 years from its issuance, a right of action thereon is barred.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

XIII STATUTE OF FRAUDS

Sale of goods—unenforceable contracts. Replevin for the possession of an existing article of personal property cannot be maintained when the action is based solely on an oral contract of purchase which is clearly within the statute of frauds, and under which contract title necessarily did not pass.

Lockie v McKee, 221-95; 264 NW 918

XIV ATTACHING WRITTEN INSTRUMENT OR ACCOUNT OR COPY THEREOF

Credit transactions with bank. Where the cashier of the plaintiff bank had entered into two similar credit transactions with the defendant bank in order to cover a shortage in accounts, in an action to recover the amount of the shortage, the plaintiff's brief stating that there had been a full accounting between the two banks except as to one of the two transactions, such statement recognized a weakness in the plaintiff's contentions, as the amount claimed was equal to the amount involved in only one of the transactions, and, when both had been accounted for in the same manner, the accounting for both had to be either proper or improper.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

11142 Insufficient statement.ANALYSIS

- I SPECIFICATION AT LAW
- II SPECIFICATION IN EQUITY

I SPECIFICATION AT LAW

Demurrer—when bad. A demurrer to a petition in an action for slander will not lie solely on the ground that the petition shows on its face that defendant, at the time of speaking the words in question, was acting in a governmental capacity, because defendant's right to assert the privileged character of the spoken words is not an absolute right but a qualified right only. The demurrer—if employed under such circumstances—must point out wherein said petition fails to state a cause of action against defendant.

Brown v Cochran, 222-34; 268 NW 585

General and nonspecific demurrer. A demurrer to an answer in a law action on the ground that the facts pleaded "do not entitle the defendant to the relief demanded" is fatally defective in definiteness, and should be overruled.

Dean v Atkinson, 201-818; 208 NW 301

II SPECIFICATION IN EQUITY

Pleading—motions—for more specific pleading—when required. A general allegation by an answering defendant of the commission, by plaintiff, of acts of "unfaithfulness and adultery", pleaded by defendant in avoidance of the contract sued on, must be amplified, on proper motion, by alleging more specifically said alleged acts and the time when, place where, and person with whom, committed.

Poole v Poole, 221-1073; 265 NW 653

11144 Effect of demurrer.

ANALYSIS

I ADMISSION BY DEMURRER

II WAIVER IN GENERAL

III ANSWERING OVER AND ADJUDICATION

I ADMISSION BY DEMURRER

Allegation of fact—effect. A well pleaded allegation of ultimate fact must, for the purpose of a demurrer, be taken as true, unless other well pleaded allegation of fact affirmatively shows that the first allegation is erroneous. So held as to an allegation of the book value of corporate stock.

In re Richter, 212-38; 234 NW 285

Facts well pleaded in petition—assumed to be true. For the purpose of demurrer, any fact well pleaded in the petition is assumed to be true.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

Allegations taken as true. The allegations of defendant's answer must be taken as true for the purpose of considering a demurrer thereto.

Sorensen v Ins. Ass'n, 226-1316; 286 NW 494

Will contest—fatal admission. A demurrer to objections to the probate of a will should have been overruled when it admitted as facts that the contestant held judgments against the devisee who was a son and heir of the decedent who died seized of real estate, that the judgments were liens against any real estate the son would inherit as heir, and that the decedent was of unsound mind when the will was made, as, if the decedent were incompetent, the will was void and he died intestate. So the title to the son's share in the real estate vested at the father's death, and, at the same instant, the judgments became liens on his share of the real estate.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Demurrer admitting paternity of illegitimate child. In an application in probate to construe the word "grandchild" in a will which left the residuary estate to children and grandchildren of testatrix's deceased brother-in-law, and a contention that an illegitimate child of brother-in-law's son was included in such word "grandchild", a demurrer to the petition admitted allegations that brother-in-law's son was father of such illegitimate, and that testatrix knew of such relationship at time will was executed.

In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

Defendant admitting negligence. Negligence of defendants alleged in petition is admitted by demurrer.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Sole basis for determining. The court, in passing on a demurrer, may not go outside the allegations of fact contained in the pleading demurred to, and indulge in speculation or conjecture in aid of the demurrer.

Hoefler v Fortmann, 219-746; 259 NW 494

II WAIVER IN GENERAL

Answer after demurrer—waiver waived by consent to withdrawal of answer. While ordinarily the filing of an answer after filing a demurrer waives consideration of the demurrer, the court may properly allow the withdrawal of the answer, the adverse party not objecting, and rule on the demurrer.

Goldsberry v Goldsberry, 217-750; 252 NW 531

Appeal and error—demurrer—nonwaiver—right of appeal. If it affirmatively appears that the unsuccessful party does not waive the error in ruling on demurrer, he may properly urge, on appeal, objection to such order.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Demurrer in equity—waiver by treating as motion to dismiss. In equity proceeding for modification of alimony decree, appellant waived her right to insist that a demurrer could not be filed in lieu of a motion to dismiss, by electing to stand upon the ruling on the demurrer.

Goldsberry v Goldsberry, 217-750; 252 NW 531

Pleading—demurrer—repleading—when not waiver of exception. Pleading a restatement of original allegations of petition does not constitute a waiver of exception to ruling on demurrer, and objection may be urged upon such ruling when the party duly excepts and allows judgment to be entered.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Pleadings—demurrer or exception—motion to dismiss—ruling as adjudication. The overruling of a motion to dismiss a petition in an equitable action does not amount to an adjudication.

cation unless the defendant stands on his motion and allows judgment to be entered against him.

Frazier v Wood, 219-36; 255 NW 647

III ANSWERING OVER AND ADJUDICATION

Amendment after demurrer—when timely. Timely filing of an amendment to an answer by party entitled so to amend, after a demurrer to the answer was sustained, deprived the ruling on the demurrer of all effect as a final adjudication. Such ruling on demurrer in and of itself settles nothing and it becomes an adjudication only if defeated party chooses to make it such.

Schwartz v School Dist., 225-1272; 282 NW 754

Ruling as adjudication. In an action at law on a money demand, aided by attachment on the ground that defendant had fraudulently conveyed his land, the overruling of defendant's demurrer based on the ground that the action was barred because not brought within five years after the recording of said deed, cannot be deemed an adjudication of the ground of said demurrer so as to prevent defendant from asserting the same ground against a later-brought action in equity to set aside said alleged fraudulent deed.

11145 Failure to demur.

Judgment notwithstanding verdict—waiver. The right of plaintiff to file a motion for judgment notwithstanding a verdict in favor of defendant on the ground that defendant's answer fails to plead a defense, is not waived by plaintiff because of his failure to demur to said answer.

Persia Bk. v Wilson, 214-993; 243 NW 581

11147 Pleading over.

ANALYSIS

I PLEADING OVER

II WAIVER BY PLEADING OVER

I PLEADING OVER

Motion to dismiss—pleading over in equity. Plaintiff, in an action triable in equity, who has his action dismissed on motion because of defenses in point of law appearing on the face of the petition, must be accorded the right (1) to plead over, or (2) to elect to stand upon the ruling of the court.

Marcovis v Inv. Co., 223-801; 273 NW 888

Repleading—when not waiver of exception. Pleading a restatement of original allegations of petition does not constitute a waiver of exception to ruling on demurrer, and objection may be urged upon such ruling when the party duly excepts and allows judgment to be entered.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Nonwaiver—right of appeal. If it affirmatively appears that the unsuccessful party does not waive the error in ruling on demurrer, he may properly urge, on appeal, objection to such order.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

II WAIVER BY PLEADING OVER

Issue abandoned—not reviewable. When district court determines, on demurrer, that restrictions on alienation in a will to avoid debts are invalid, and parties plead over and do not appeal from said ruling, the issue is abandoned and cannot be made the subject of an appeal.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

11148 Failure to plead over—effect.

Standing on demurrer. A pleader who (1) excepts to a ruling on demurrer, (2) does not plead over, and (3) suffers a final adverse judgment to be rendered, thereby affirmatively shows that he stands on his demurrer, with consequent right to appeal.

Hanson v Carl, 201-521; 207 NW 579

Standing on demurrer. Where plaintiff after answer moved for judgment of dismissal and also for judgment on the pleadings, held that if it be permissible to treat the latter motion as a demurrer to the answer, yet an adverse ruling thereon was not appealable unless plaintiff elected to stand thereon.

Morrison v Clinic, 204-54; 214 NW 705

Failure to stand on pleading. An appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to a petition for certiorari (or sustaining a motion to dismiss when it is the equivalent of a demurrer) will not lie when plaintiff did not in the trial court stand on his pleading or suffer judgment to go against him.

Fehrman v City, 216-286; 249 NW 200

Standing on overruled motion to dismiss. A ruling which denies a motion to dismiss (in lieu of the former equitable demurrer) is not appealable unless the movant unequivocally elects to stand upon his motion, and submits to a final adverse judgment; and this is true though appellant asserts on his attempted appeal that he has nothing further to plead.

Morrison v Clinic, 204-54; 214 NW 705

Appeal—when allowable. An appeal will not lie from a ruling which sustains a demurrer unless the defeated party does one of two things, to wit: (1) elects to stand on his pleadings, or (2) suffers final judgment to be entered against himself.

Devoe v Dusey, 205-1262; 217 NW 625

Habeas corpus—adverse ruling on demurrer. Where a defendant was sentenced and imprisoned upon failing to plead after his demurrer to the indictment was overruled, an appeal will be dismissed from an adverse ruling on demurrer in a habeas corpus action to test the validity of such imprisonment, when the defendant does not (1) elect to stand upon his pleadings, or (2) suffer judgment to be entered against him in the lower court.

Besch v Haynes, 224-166; 276 NW 13

Refusal to replead—election—effect. After the sustaining of a demurrer, the adverse party may very properly refuse to plead within the time specified by the court and elect to appeal from the ruling on the demurrer.

Home Bank v Kelley, 205-514; 218 NW 288

Refusal to plead over—effect. A defendant who refuses to plead over after an adverse ruling on his demurrer may not complain of the judgment entered on the merits, insofar as it is sustained by the petition.

Shaffer v Marshall, 206-336; 218 NW 292

Answer after appeal on ruling on demurrer. A defendant who assumes to appeal from an adverse ruling on his demurrer without standing on his demurrer, and without suffering a judgment to be entered against himself, has a right to file an answer after his appeal has been dismissed and before default is entered.

Gow v Dubuque County, 213-92; 238 NW 578

Undetermined motion—procedure. An undetermined motion by defendant to dismiss an action erroneously pending in equity immediately becomes a demurrer when the action is properly transferred to the law calendar, and must be disposed of as any other demurrer, and with the same consequences.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

Ruling on demurrer conclusive. A ruling sustaining a demurrer in mortgage foreclosure proceeding on the ground that the estate of the mortgagor is not personally liable on the mortgage because of the failure of the mortgagee to file said claim against the estate within the time provided by statute, constitutes a final adjudication of such nonliability when plaintiff neither pleads over nor appeals from the ruling.

Oates v College, 217-1059; 252 NW 783; 91 ALR 563

Standing on motion. An order overruling a motion to strike which is not the equivalent of a demurrer imposes no necessity on the appealing party to affirmatively stand on his motion and allow judgment to be entered against him on the merits.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Action by teacher for compensation. In a teacher's action to recover compensation against a school district, where a taxpayer files a defensive petition of intervention after a demurrer to the answer had been sustained, but before defendant had made any election to stand on its answer, before any demand to make such election had been made, before default or judgment had been entered, or any demand therefor—the petition of intervention being unquestioned and raising an issue on the additional defensive matter—the court erred in sustaining a motion to strike the petition of intervention and entering judgment against the school district.

Schwartz v School Dist., 225-1272; 282 NW 754

- IV TIME OF ACQUISITION OF COUNTERCLAIM

I COUNTERCLAIM, SET-OFF, RECOURPMENT, DEFENSE, AND CROSS-DEMAND

Discussion. See 22 ILR 118—Recoupment for breach of warranty; 24 ILR 310—Counterclaims

Administrator's funds set off against insolvent bank holding secured note. An estate's deposit in an insolvent bank may be set off against a note held by bank, and contention that debts lacked mutuality was ineffective.

First Natl Bk. v Malone, 76 F 2d, 251

Attorney's admission binding on client. A party is bound by the admission of his attorneys, made in a counterclaim to another action.

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

Claims arising out of extrinsic transactions. A defendant sued by the receiver of an insolvent bank on indebtedness due the bank may not, in order to establish a set-off, plead an interest in certain deposits in the bank, and interest in extraneous transactions when such interests can only be determined by bringing in total strangers to the transactions sued on, and adjudicating their interests.

Foster v Read, 212-803; 237 NW 634

Conversion of collaterals. A debtor when sued may, without first paying the debt, plead a counterclaim to the effect that he deposited collateral securities with the creditor who converted the same to his individual use without the consent of the debtor.

Leonard v Sehman, 206-277; 220 NW 77

Deducting employee's debt to employer. Where a defendant-employer in paying his employee deducted an amount which the employee was owing the employer, and, when sued, based his right so to do (1) on an oral contract that he might so deduct, and (2) on his right to so deduct irrespective of such oral contract, the court prejudicially errs, in its instructions, in making the right to deduct dependent on proof of the oral contract.

I COUNTERCLAIM, SET-OFF, RECOUPMENT, DEFENSE, AND CROSS-DEMAND—continued

Jorgensen v Cocklin, 219-1103; 260 NW 6

Equity retaining jurisdiction—law issues. An action in equity by one school district to enjoin another school district and the county treasurer from transferring, to the defendant school, certain funds claimed to be due from the plaintiff school as tuition, remains in equity although the defendant school files a cross-petition raising issues at law as to determination of the amount due, if any, and for judgment accordingly, since equity, acquiring jurisdiction, may determine all issues.

Lincoln Dist. v Redfield Dist., 226-298; 283 NW 881

Equitable set-off—nature and scope. The doctrine of equitable set-off is a rule of equity, and is applied quite independently of the limitations which attach to a so-called legal or statutory offset.

Andrew v Bank, 216-240; 249 NW 154; 93 ALR 1156

Equitable set-off—surety of insolvent. In an action by the receiver of an insolvent, the defendant may set off, against the obligation sued on, the amount which the defendant as surety for the insolvent has been compelled to pay on the contract of suretyship.

Leach v Bassman, 208-1374; 227 NW 339

Equitable set-off. Where an insolvent bank in the hands of a receiver owes an estate on a deposit, an heir who owes the bank, tho he is the executor of the estate, may have his interest in the deposit set off against his indebtedness to the bank, subject, of course, to claims which may be filed against the estate.

Andrew v Bank, 216-240; 249 NW 154; 93 ALR 1156

Equitable set-off against insolvent county treasurer. Where an insolvent county treasurer brought mandamus action to secure salary warrant, and another suit was pending against the treasurer and his surety wherein county sought to recover for shortage in treasurer's office, the fact that county's claim was unliquidated would not prevent pleading the same as an equitable set-off, in view of the fact that the treasurer was insolvent.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

Erroneous but harmless striking of counterclaim. In an action for damages consequent on the collision of automobiles, the erroneous striking of defendant's counterclaim for damages growing out of the collision is harmless when the jury finds that defendant was proximately negligent and that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

Harriman v Roberts, 211-1372; 235 NW 751

Failure to complete loan—no bar to recovery of part loaned. Where one person agrees to loan money to form a corporation, pursuant to which he loans a part and takes a note therefor, his failure to loan the balance will not prevent recovery of the part loaned, and a counterclaim so alleging states no cause of action and should be stricken.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

Inducing third party to perform covenants. An owner of mortgaged premises who leases the same and agrees with the lessee to erect certain improvements on the land, and who pledges the lease with the mortgagee as additional collateral security for the mortgage debt, and who, in the foreclosure of the mortgage, fully acquiesces in and approves and ratifies an application by the receiver for authority to borrow money and therewith to make the improvements which the lessor had obligated himself to make, thereby impliedly empowers the mortgagee, who advanced the funds with which to make the improvements, to reimburse himself out of the rentals accruing under the lease and collected prior to the expiration of the period for redemption from the mortgage sale.

Quaintance v Bank, 201-457; 205 NW 739

Procedendo—retrial (?) or peremptory judgment (?). When an action at law is reversed because defendant had not sufficiently or properly proven his counterclaim, the cause, after procedendo, stands for retrial on said counterclaim, and the peremptory rendition of judgment by the trial court against defendant on said counterclaim is error.

Perry-Fry Co. v Gould, 217-958; 251 NW 142

Recovery of unpaid legacy—bringing in parties. In an action by a testamentary legatee against an executor to recover an unpaid legacy, the executor, who has already distributed the estate and wishes to bring a third party into the action for recoupment purposes, must, at least, allege that said third party has received some portion of the estate in question.

Irwin v Bank, 218-961; 256 NW 681

Seller's refusal to deliver—buyer's right. Seller's unjustified refusal to furnish materials under a continuing contract was ground for buyer (1) to treat contract as terminated and purchase elsewhere, and (2) to make counterclaim for damages in seller's action against buyer on account.

Eastman Stores, Inc. v Eckert Studio, (NOR); 231 NW 434

Striking counterclaim. An order striking a counterclaim in toto necessarily strikes the prayer for recovery on the counterclaim.

Davis v Robinson, 200-840; 205 NW 520

Subject matter—counterclaim in general. It is not necessary that a counterclaim arise out of the transactions set forth in the petition or be connected with the subject of the action.

Imes v Hamilton, 222-777; 269 NW 757

Tuition transfer—county treasurer—joinder. In an equitable action between school districts to prevent a statutory transfer by a county treasurer of funds in payment of tuition, a cross-petition of the defendant school district, not joined in by the county treasurer, may not be stricken therefrom, inasmuch as the county treasurer has no investment therein and is not a necessary party thereto.

Lincoln Dist. v Redfield Dist., 226-298; 283 NW 881

Unliquidated demand set off against court costs. On a motion by an administrator to tax court costs against a defeated claimant in probate, the latter may not have a duly filed but unliquidated claim in his favor and against the estate adjudicated and set off against said costs and a judgment rendered against the estate for the excess.

In re Nairn, 215-920; 247 NW 220

Unquestioned establishment—proper procedure. A duly pleaded counterclaim which is unquestionably established by the evidence should not be submitted to the jury, but should be summarily allowed by the court; and in a personal injury action the court should direct the jury how to proceed if plaintiff's recovery be more than the amount of the counterclaim; likewise how to proceed if plaintiff's recovery be less than the amount of the counterclaim.

Forrest v Abbott, 219-664; 259 NW 238; 38 NCCA 315

II ALLOWABLE COUNTERCLAIMS

Agreement to release judgment—attorney fee and costs included. Under a settlement in which a judgment debtor agreed to deed certain real estate to his judgment creditor in consideration for release and satisfaction of a judgment, where the debtor performed his part of the agreement and the creditor released the judgment, but refused to satisfy two items consisting of attorney fees and court costs, the debtor, who became primarily liable for said items upon rendition of the judgment, was, on his counterclaim in action brought by creditor, entitled to a decree compelling creditor to satisfy said fees and costs.

Cooke v Harrington, 227-145; 287 NW 837

Attachment bond—counterclaim on deficiency judgment. In suit on attachment bond for damages, principal on bond could file coun-terclaim based on deficiency judgment obtained in foreclosure action altho counterclaim was not in favor of surety on bond, since principal was primarily liable.

Imes v Hamilton, 222-777; 269 NW 757

Right to plead barred counterclaim.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

Damages growing out of same transaction. Joint defendants in an action for damages consequent on a collision of two automobiles, may each separately plead as a counterclaim any damages suffered by him in the collision in question.

Harriman v Roberts, 211-1372; 235 NW 751

Principal and surety — permissible plea. In an action against the principal and surety on an attachment bond for damages consequent on the alleged wrongful issuance of the writ, the principal in said bond may plead a counterclaim which neither arises out of or is connected with the transaction on which plaintiff sues, nor in which the surety has any personal ownership. A surety is not primarily liable on the bond and the principal who is primarily liable should be permitted to defeat recovery on the bond if he can so do.

Imes v Hamilton, 222-777; 269 NW 757

Deposit as set-off. Where, prior to the insolvency of a bank, said bank and a depositor became irrevocably obligated under a letter of credit issued to said depositor to enable him to make a purchase of goods in a foreign country, and where the drafts drawn in the foreign country under said letter of credit did not mature until after the insolvency of said bank, and where the receiver of said bank paid said drafts in full on their maturity, the claim of said receiver against said depositor for reimbursement is subject to an offset to the extent of the depositor's deposit in said insolvent bank.

Andrew v Trust Co., 217-657; 251 NW 48

Specific performance of real estate contract. In an action to recover rent a counterclaim for specific performance of a contract to sell the property was properly prepared when it contained allegations that the purchaser was at that time, and at all times had been, ready, willing, and able to perform, and had made a tender of performance which was refused, and a copy of the letter constituting such tender was attached to the counterclaim.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Resh, 226-780; 285 NW 192

III NONALLOWABLE COUNTERCLAIMS

Unallowable counterclaim. A fraudulent grantee of land may not, in an action by the judgment creditor of the grantor to set aside the conveyance, set up a counterclaim for money due to said grantee from said judgment creditor.

Evans v Evans, 202-493; 210 NW 564

Unallowable counterclaim. A counterclaim has no place in an action of forcible entry and detainer.

Votruba v Hanke, 202-658; 210 NW 753

Unallowable counterclaim. The amount which a vendee of land claims to have expended on land foisted upon him because of fraudulent representations by the vendor, in order to render the land "suitable, productive, and usable", is wholly unallowable as a counterclaim because said amount as a measure of damages for the wrong suffered is unknown to the law.

Perry Fry Co. v Gould, 214-983; 241 NW 666

Unallowable counterclaim. A defendant sued on his indorsement of a promissory note manifestly may not avail himself, by way of counterclaim, of an indorsement by plaintiff to defendant of a promissory note which has been fully discharged. Somewhat unusual circumstances reviewed and held to show such discharge.

Versteeg v Hoeven, 214-92; 239 NW 709

Counterclaim — nullification. Proof that plaintiff substantially performed part of a contract for services and justifiably abandoned the performance of the remaining part necessarily precludes recovery by the defendant on his counterclaim for damages (1) for negligent performance of the part performed, and (2) for failure to complete the work.

Goben v Paving Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

Counterclaim by one joint defendant. New matter which constitutes a cause of action in favor of one of several defendants is not pleadable as a counterclaim; and if an assignment of such cause of action to all the defendants is relied on, it must appear that the assignment was made prior to the commencement of the action.

Shaw v Ioerger, 203-1256; 212 NW 719

Claim belonging to some of the defendants. In an action against a partnership and against the individual partners thereof, a claim for necessities furnished by the partnership to plaintiff and her husband (who was a party defendant) is not pleadable as a counterclaim, because said claim does not belong to all the defendants.

Jordison v Jordison Bros., 215-938; 247 NW 491

Nonright to set-off. The officers of a bank who, to further the interest of their bank, enter into an individual guaranty of the payment of all promissory notes which their bank or its officers may rediscount with the guarantee, are not entitled, when sued on the guaranty, to off-set against their liability the amount of a deposit which their bank had with the guarantee at the time it became insolvent and passed into the hands of a receiver, and which deposit the guarantee surrendered to the receiver on his demand.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Hill, 207-1375; 221 NW 916

Double liability not subject to offset. Funds voluntarily paid into a bank by a stockholder thereof, in order to repair or make good the impaired capital of the bank while it is a going concern, may not later, after the bank has gone into the hands of a receiver for liquidation because of insolvency, be set off by the stockholder against the demand of the receiver for a 100 percent statutory assessment on the stock for the benefit of creditors.

Andrew v Bank, 204-243; 213 NW 925; 56 ALR 521

Justifiable dismissal. An unsupported counterclaim for damages consequent on the negligent handling of a claim by an attorney who sued for fees due him, is, of course, properly dismissed by the court.

Hunt v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Loss of remedy. An unsuccessful defendant in an action for the recovery of real property who is afforded no opportunity therein to interpose a claim for permanent improvements (§§12235, 12249) must necessarily resort to the occupying claimants act (§10128 et seq.) for relief, and when he fails to resort to such remaining and exclusive remedy, and quits and surrenders the premises, he will not be permitted, when subsequently sued on a super-seas bond growing out of the litigation, to interpose a claim for such improvements as a set-off.

Bigelow v Ins. Co., 206-884; 221 NW 661

Malicious prosecution growing out of auto collision. Defendant in an action for damages consequent on a collision between automobiles, may not plead as a counterclaim damages consequent on a malicious prosecution instituted by the plaintiff against defendant for reckless driving at the time of the collision.

Harriman v Roberts, 211-1372; 235 NW 751

Recovery of property. A defendant in an action for the recovery of real property whose possession originated in a contract of purchase which has been formally and legally forfeited may not counterclaim for rescission of the contract, and for judgment against plaintiff for the amount paid on the contract, and for the value of improvements placed on the property, especially when plaintiff was never a party to said contract.

Detmers v Russell, 212-767; 237 NW 494

Representation or warranty—necessity to plead. In an action for the purchase price of a machine, an offset of damages consequent on the defective construction and inefficient operation of the machine cannot be allowed when defendant fails to allege any representations or warranties relative to said defects.

Baker v Ward, 217-581; 250 NW 109

Review—fatally delayed objection. The point that a party may not plead a counterclaim which is based on the assignment of part of a claim unless he brings into the case other interested parties may not be first raised on appeal.

Weitz' Sons v Fidelity Co., 206-1025; 219 NW 411

Waiver by failure to plead. A party who is sued on a nonnegotiable claim by the assignee or quasi-assignee thereof or by one who has been subrogated to the right to the claim, and fails to plead in defense a counterclaim which he then holds against the assignor, whether such counterclaim be liquidated or unliquidated, unconditionally waives the right to use such counterclaim as an off-set against the judgment obtained by the assignee or subrogated party on the claim sued on.

Southern Sur. v Ins. Co., 210-359; 228 NW 56

IV TIME OF ACQUISITION OF COUNTERCLAIM

Set-offs unallowable. A debtor of an insolvent bank may not, after the appointment of a receiver for the bank, buy up claims against the bank and offset such purchased claims against the amount he is owing the bank. Statutory right of set-off not applicable.

Parker v Schultz, 219-100; 257 NW 570

11153 Counterclaim by co-maker or surety.

Administrator's funds set off against insolvent bank holding secured note. An estate's deposit in an insolvent bank may be set off against a note held by bank, and contention that debts lacked mutuality was ineffective.

First Natl Bk. v Malone, 76 F 2d, 251

11155 Cross-petition—third parties.

Rejection of issue which breeds confusion.

Cotten v Halverson, 201-636; 207 NW 795

Certiorari. Certiorari will not lie to review an order of court, entered on its own motion, striking from the files defendant's cross-petition against a co-defendant.

Collins v Cooper, 215-99; 244 NW 858

Construction in view of stricken references. While the striking of portions of the first division of an answer may be proper as far as plaintiff's action is concerned, yet the court must treat said stricken portions as unstricken in construing defendant's cross-petition contained in a subsequent division of his answer when said stricken portions are essentially material to the cross-petition and are incorporated therein by distinct reference.

Andrew v Boyd, 213-1277; 241 NW 423

Cross-complaint—when allowable. In an action by an administrator for damages consequent on the alleged negligent killing by defendant of the intestate in a collision between automobiles, the defendant may cross-petition for damages against the administrator personally under the allegation that the deceased at the time of said collision was negligently operating an automobile which was personally owned by said administrator and was so doing with the consent of said owner. And this is true irrespective of the personal residence of the administrator.

Ryan v Amodeo, 216-752; 249 NW 656

Cross-petition against plaintiff—notice not required. A pleading designated as a cross-petition asking for enforcement of a painting clause in a lease and filed at the close of the evidence was not filed in violation of statute requiring notice of a cross-petition against a co-defendant or third party, since the pleading prayed for affirmative relief against the plaintiff, who was neither a co-defendant nor third party.

Lamm v Stoen, 226-622; 284 NW 465

Cross-petition defense—state as proper party—belated objections. In an action to dissolve a mining corporation, question whether state, not being stockholder or creditor of the mining corporation, was proper party to make defense to a cross-petition, which question not having been raised in the trial court, may not be raised for the first time and reviewed on appeal.

State v Exline Fuel Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Cross-petition not affecting subject matter of main action. In an action on the bonds of a public officer and his bondsmen to recover a shortage, one surety may not cross-petition against a party who he alleges wrongfully received the funds resulting in the shortage, said latter party not being a party to the bond sued on.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Partition—cross-petition—notice of—sufficiency. In an action for the partition of lands, a notice by one co-defendant to another co-defendant of the filing by the former of a cross-petition, denying all interest of the latter in the lands in question, is not a nullity because said notice fails to specifically describe or identify said lands, when said notice makes proper reference to the original petition in the action for a correct description of said lands.

Bauer v Bauer, 221-782; 266 NW 531

Partition—insolvent heir's unpaid debt to estate—jurisdiction of court to offset. The court has jurisdiction, in an equitable action to partition the lands of an intestate (to which action all heirs are parties), to entertain a cross-petition by one of the heirs as administrator of said estate, and, under proper pleading and proof:

1. To decree that a certain insolvent heir has no interest in said land because his unpaid indebtedness to said estate equals or exceeds the value of the share in said lands which he would take were he not so indebted, and

2. To decree that said lands belong solely to the other heirs who are not so indebted, and to the surviving widow, if any.

Bauer v Bauer, 221-782; 266 NW 531

Propriety—waiver. The court has authority to consider and pass upon a cross-petition which asks the court to construe the rental provisions of a lease, when issue is duly joined thereon and tried out without motion to strike or dismiss such petition; and especially is this true when the cross-petitioner alleges the existence of an unadjusted difference between the parties relative to such construction.

Minot v Pelletier Co., 207-505; 223 NW 182

Provisional remedies. The right of a litigant to move to transfer an issue from the equity calendar to the law calendar is not a provisional remedy within the meaning of this section.

Face v Mason, 206-794; 221 NW 455

Review—scope—nonappeal from inferential rulings. When the court finds in favor of the defendant on a specifically named defense, the inference will be indulged that the court found against him on his cross-petition for relief which is affirmative, and in the nature of an independent cause of action. It follows that defendant is not entitled, on an appeal by plaintiff, to a review of the inferential rulings on said affirmative and independent matters.

Toedt v Bollhoefer, 206-39; 218 NW 56

Reviving dismissed cross-petition. A party who dismisses his cross-petition may not subsequently revive the same by giving adverse parties notice of the filing of said petition and the hearing thereon.

Matthews v Quaintance, 200-736; 205 NW 361

Tuition transfer—county treasurer—joinder. In an equitable action between school districts to prevent a statutory transfer by a county treasurer of funds in payment of tuition, a cross-petition of the defendant school district, not joined in by the county treasurer, may not be stricken therefrom, inasmuch as the county treasurer has no investment therein and is not a necessary party thereto.

Lincoln Dist. v Redfield Dist., 226-298; 283 NW 881

Wage recovery dependent on reformation. In a law action for wages, allegedly due an employee under contract, where parties stipulate that the employee shall not recover such wages if the defendant prevails on his cross-petition for reformation, transferred to equity on motion, the employee may not thereafter deny the court's right to try the reformation issue and is bound by the decree if not contrary to the evidence.

Koch v Abramson, 223-1356; 275 NW 58

11156 Reply—when necessary.

Denial by operation of law. See under §11201

When reply necessary. A motion to strike an answering amendment which interposes the bar of the statute of limitation is not the proper procedure under which to plead facts which avoid the bar. Reply is necessary.

Lawrence v Melvin, 202-866; 211 NW 410

When reply not necessary. In an action by a guardian of a minor on a certificate of deposit issued to the minor by the defendant bank, an answer alleging that the minor, in the re-organization of the bank, waived a named portion of the deposit is denied by operation of law.

McFerren v Bank, 214-198; 238 NW 914

When reply unnecessary. In an action wherein plaintiff alleges that defendant is owing him a stated sum, and wherein defendant answers that he has not received proper credit for payments made by him, no reply is necessary in order to enable plaintiff to prove an agreement that certain payments were not to be applied on the account sued on.

Northern Lbr. Co. v Clausen, 201-701; 208 NW 72

Allowable reply. An answer which alleges a failure on the part of an insured to furnish the proofs of loss required by statute is properly met by a reply which alleges that the policy itself waives such proofs.

Glandon v Ins. Assn., 207-1068; 224 NW 65

Avoidance of matter first appearing in reply. An answer to a reply seems to be unknown to our practice. But when the defendant in an action to quiet title answers that he is the owner of the property, and is met by a reply that defendant is estopped by his own contract from claiming title, and defendant wishes to plead that said contract was obtained from him by fraud and without consideration, quære: must defendant plead his said defense (a) by way of amendment to his answer, or (b) does the law impliedly supply such plea?

Carr v McCauley, 215-298; 245 NW 290

Belated reply. A reply filed without leave of court and after the trial is concluded, and purporting to conform the pleadings to the evidence, may be considered, notwithstanding its untimeliness, when neither party is deprived thereby of any testimony.

McDonald Co. v Morrison, 211-882; 228 NW 878

Plea and answer—reply inconsistent with petition—election. Plaintiff's petition alleged a cause of action against defendant as a peace officer. Plaintiff filed a reply in which he denied that the defendant was acting as a peace officer. Such departure did not change, add to, or enlarge the cause of action alleged in the petition. The function of a reply is to avoid matters alleged in the answer or make an issue when a counterclaim is alleged. Plaintiff having alleged but one cause of action, the trial court did not err in refusing to require plaintiff to elect between causes of action.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Reply tho no counterclaim pleaded. Even tho an answer pleads no counterclaim yet if it prays for affirmative relief, a reply may be proper.

Carr v McCauley, 215-298; 245 NW 290

Reply to reply—no legal standing. A reply to a reply brief and argument has no standing and will be stricken on motion.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

See Cochran v School Dist., 207-1385; 224 NW 809

Technical inaccuracy. The pleading of an adjudication in a reply instead of in the petition, does not necessarily constitute an error of consequence, even tho it be conceded that the technical rules of pleading are violated.

Cochran v Sch. Dist., 207-1385; 224 NW 809

11157 Statements of.

Reply—improper use. Principle recognized that a plaintiff may not utilize a reply for the purpose of radically departing from the cause of action made by him in his petition. So held where plaintiff pleaded in his petition as an assignee, and in his reply as a holder in due course.

Ottumwa Bk. v Starns, 202-412; 210 NW 455

Failure to plead and prove avoidance. A clearly established contract of settlement must prevail in the absence of plea and proof of matter in avoidance.

Bebensee v Blumer, 219-261; 257 NW 768

Plea and answer—reply inconsistent with petition. Plaintiff's petition alleged a cause of action against defendant as a peace officer. Plaintiff filed a reply in which he denied that the defendant was acting as a peace officer. Such departure did not change, add to, or enlarge the cause of action alleged in the petition. The function of a reply is to avoid matters alleged in the answer or make an issue when a counterclaim is alleged. Plaintiff having alleged but one cause of action, the trial court did not err in refusing to require plaintiff to elect between causes of action.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Confession and avoidance. Under a claim for workmen's compensation, a defense alleging that the injuries sustained by the claimant were caused by the willful act of a third person is in the nature of a confession and avoidance and places the burden of proving it to be true upon the defendant.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

11158 Allegation of new matter—effect.

Inconsistent defenses. See under §11199

Establishing immaterial reply. An answer which pleads affirmative defenses and a reply which pleads adjudication of such alleged affirmative defenses both become quite immaterial when defendant offers no evidence in support of his answer, but defendant has no basis for complaint if the court finds that the allegations of the reply have been established, and renders judgment for plaintiff "under the whole record".

Hiller v Felton, 208-291; 225 NW 452

Stock—subscriptions—burden of proof. In an action by a corporation on a stock subscription contract for stock in an unorganized but contemplated corporation, plaintiff has the burden to establish every nonadmitted fact entitling it to recover, even tho defendant, in addition to a limited general denial, pleads in great detail that plaintiff's corporate organization was wholly beyond the contemplation of his subscription contract.

Cedar Rapids Amu. Assn. v Wymer, 213-1012; 240 NW 644

11159 Defenses to counterclaim—paragraphs.

Set-offs unallowable. A debtor of an insolvent bank may not, after the appointment of a receiver for the bank, buy up claims against the bank and offset such purchased claims against the amount he is owing the bank. Statutory right of set-off not applicable.

Parker v Schultz, 219-100; 257 NW 570

11160 Signing and verification.

Pleading verification requirements—non-applicability to cost bond affidavit. Statutes requiring verification of pleadings, to be made by persons knowing facts, require the affidavit to state that affiant believed statements therein contained to be true, but such statutes relate to verification of pleadings, and not to affidavits generally in support of motions for special remedies, nor to cost bond affidavit.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

Nonstatutory verification fatal. In an action upon a promissory note, where defendant's answer contained two inconsistent defenses in separate counts, the answer, being verified on defendant's "knowledge, information and belief", was properly stricken on motion, where the statute, in such cases, provided the verification must allege that "the party believes one or the other to be true but cannot determine which".

Stern Finance Co. v Bleifuss, 226-665; 284 NW 460

Objections not raised in lower court. In an action for divorce based on cruelty, where the defendant made no objection either to the verification or the form of an amendment to a petition which alleged conviction of a felony, and the cause proceeded to trial without objection to petition as amended, the defendant on appeal could not complain that, because of the finding that equities were with plaintiff and were based on facts alleged in petition, trial court could not consider ground set out in amendment.

11164 Verification by person knowing facts.

Pleading verification requirements—nonapplicability to cost bond affidavit. Statutes requiring verification of pleadings, to be made by persons knowing facts, require the affidavit to state that affiant believed statements therein contained to be true, but such statutes relate to verification of pleadings, and not to affidavits generally in support of motions for special remedies, nor to cost bond affidavit.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

11166 Verification not required.

Action by administrator. Plaintiff suing as an administrator need not verify his pleadings.

Markworth v Bank, 217-341; 251 NW 857

11168 Failure to verify.

Nonstatutory verification fatal. In an action upon a promissory note, where defendant's answer contained two inconsistent defenses in separate counts, the answer, being verified on defendant's "knowledge, information and belief", was properly stricken on motion, where the statute, in such cases, provided the verification must allege that "the party believes one or the other to be true but cannot determine which".

Stern Finance Co., v Bleifuss, 226-665; 284 NW 460

Waiver of defective verification. Defects in the verification of a pleading are waived by failure to move to strike the defectively verified pleading.

Cutino Co. v Weeks, 203-581; 213 NW 413

11172 Mitigating facts.

Aggravation of injury by unskillful treatment—liability of original wrongdoer. It is a principle of law that one who negligently inflicts a personal injury on another is liable in damages for the aggravation of said injury resulting from the unskillful treatment of said injury by his physicians and surgeons, provided the injured party exercised reasonable care in selecting said physicians and surgeons, but to permit the application of said principle there must be a proper showing of causal connection between said wrongfully inflicted injury and the said unskillful treatment.

Johnson v Selindh, 221-378; 265 NW 622

Confession and avoidance—assault and battery. In an action for injuries inflicted upon the plaintiff when he was forcibly ejected from the home of the defendant, where the defendant's answer assumed the burden of proof by admitting the assault and battery, but by way of justification and confession and avoidance asserted that the plaintiff had been ejected after refusing to leave, the evidence was not sufficient to compel the court to direct a verdict for the defendant on the issue of whether the defendant had used more force than was necessary to accomplish the ejection.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Bad reputation of plaintiff. Under proper plea and proof, evidence of the general bad professional reputation of the plaintiff in the place where he is practicing his profession is admissible in mitigation of damages, even tho the slander was spoken at a nearby place.

Amick v Montross, 206-51; 220 NW 51; 58 ALR 1147

Breach of part not destructive of whole. Generally, where contracts are severable and divisible, and the consideration justly apportioned to part of the contract, a breach of that part does not destroy the contract in toto, but the defendant may only recoup himself in damages.

Paramount Pictures v Maxon, 226-308; 284 NW 119

Immaterial evidence. In an action for assault and false imprisonment committed by a mayor and a city marshal, evidence of violations by plaintiff of an ordinance is inadmissible when it appears that, on the occasion in question, no attempt was made to arrest plaintiff for such violations, and when the pleadings are silent as to justification and mitigation.

Schultz v Enlow, 201-1083; 205 NW 972

Joint wrongdoers release. A party who has been negligently injured and settles with and releases the original wrongdoer may not thereafter maintain an action against a physician for malpractice in treating the very injuries for which he has effected a settlement.

Phillips v Werndorff, 215-521; 243 NW 525

More specific pleading—erroneous denial. In an action for general and special damages, under general and somewhat meager pleading, based on an alleged libelous publication resulting (1) in loss of customers, (2) in being refused credit, and (3) in loss of earnings in business, plaintiff should, on motion for more specific statement of the action, be compelled to set forth the names of customers lost, the names of those who refused him credit, and the ultimate facts upon which he bases his demand for judgment on account of injury to his earnings.

Dorman v Credit Co., 213-1016; 241 NW 436

Motion picture booking as severable contract—damages as remedy. A motion picture exhibitor who books a series of films under contract, a part of which contract specified that he should have a certain film to exhibit on a certain date, is not entitled to breach the entire contract, when distributor fails to provide this certain film on the specified date, but exhibitor must recoup by way of damages, if any.

Paramount Pictures v Maxon, 226-308; 284 NW 119

Teachers—wrongful discharge—duty to seek employment. A teacher wrongfully discharged is under obligation to exercise reasonable diligence to secure like employment in the same locality—not like employment at distant places or similar employment of a lower or different grade.

Shill v School Township, 209-1020; 227 NW 412

11173 Necessity to plead.

Cross-examination. The plaintiff who, in an action for damages for criminal conversation, testifies, in effect, on direct examination, that the defendant's criminal relation with plaintiff's husband was the sole cause of disrupting plaintiff's home, thereby opens the door to cross-examination of the husband's criminal relations with other women and plaintiff's knowledge thereof, even tho defendant has not pleaded such matter in mitigation of damages.

Morrow v Scoville, 206-1134; 221 NW 802

"Assault" admitted in pleadings—use of term permitted. In an action for damages in which the defendant's answer admitted an assault and battery but attempted to justify the act, he could not complain that the court, in its statement of the issues, said that he admitted the assault, as the word "assault" did not admit all that the plaintiff contended, but only the same act upon which the action was based.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Submission without plea. The unpleaded mitigating fact that a plaintiff knew of a fire at the time it was wrongfully set out upon his premises, and made no effort to put out the fire or to lessen his damages, is properly presented to the jury when plaintiff's own testimony tended to prove such fact.

Ferber v Railway, 205-291; 217 NW 880

11174 Intervention.

ANALYSIS

- I INTERVENTION IN GENERAL
- II ALLOWABLE INTERVENTION
- III NONALLOWABLE INTERVENTION

I INTERVENTION IN GENERAL

Preventing intervention—subsequent estoppel.

Tutt v Smith, 201-107; 204 NW 294; 48 ALR 394

Account—inconsequential plea. In an action on a contract to recover a money judgment for plaintiff's interest in certain property, the plea of an intervenor who claims an interest in the property that there must first be an accounting between plaintiff and defendant is of no consequence where there is no evidence that defendant has ever paid plaintiff anything on his claim.

Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Action by teacher for compensation. In a teacher's action to recover compensation against a school district, where a taxpayer files a defensive petition of intervention after a demurrer to the answer had been sustained, but before defendant had made any election to stand on its answer, before any demand to make such election had been made, before default or judgment had been entered, or any demand therefor—the petition of intervention being unquestioned and raising an issue on the additional defensive matter—the court erred in sustaining a motion to strike the petition of intervention and entering judgment against the school district.

Schwartz v School Dist., 225-1272; 282 NW 754

Attorney's lien as assignment—effect. The duly perfected lien of an attorney with reference to the judgment obtained by him for his client, is tantamount to an assignment of an interest in the judgment. It follows that the attorney has such interest in the judgment as to support an intervention by him in an action by the judgment plaintiff to set aside certain conveyances as fraudulent.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 217-636; 251 NW 51

Failure to intervene. The consideration for a lease of mortgaged premises (which mortgage pledges the rents) and for the promissory note given for the rent, wholly fails when the assignee in an unrecorded assignment of the lease and note stands by, during foreclosure, and, without asserting his claim by intervention or otherwise, knowingly permits the mortgagee to foreclose and oust the mortgagor and his tenant, and obtain a decree against the rents and a receiver therefor in order to discharge a deficiency judgment.

Miller v Sievers, 213-45; 238 NW 469

Intervenor as interloper. An intervenor becomes an interloper and consequently is without standing when it appears that he is attempting to institute an independent action under the guise of a petition of intervention.

Cooper v Erickson, 213-448; 239 NW 87

Intervenor—failure to appeal—notice. Where the petition, and a petition of intervention, both asking the same relief, were dismissed on their merits, the fact that intervenor fails to appeal, or was not served with notice of appeal by plaintiff, is quite inconsequential as far as plaintiff's appeal is concerned.

Anderson v Dunnegan, 217-1210; 245 NW 326

Judgment—attempt by party to intervene—effect. A judgment quieting title in plaintiff on the ground that the defendant had fraudulently obtained the possession of a deed by plaintiff to defendant and had recorded the same is not an adjudication of the right of a subsequent purchaser from said defendant because said purchaser attempted to intervene in said action, the record revealing the fact that the intervention was denied on grounds not going to the merits of said purchaser's rights.

Tutt v Smith, 201-107; 204 NW 294; 48 ALR 394

Opinion on appeal—parties concluded. One on whose behalf an administrator seeks to maintain an action is necessarily bound by the opinion of the appellate court on appeal, and, on reversal and remand, he acquires no additional standing by simply joining with the administrator in a motion for judgment, without being substituted as plaintiff or in any manner making himself a party to the action by intervention or otherwise, and without in any manner changing the record.

Ronna v Bank, 215-806; 246 NW 798

Transaction with deceased—intervenor—competency. In equity action to quiet title and to declare a trust in realty, an intervenor who claims same relief as plaintiff may not testify to alleged oral agreement between parties, some of whom are deceased.

Wagner v Wagner, (NOR); 224 NW 583

Unilateral wage agreement—effect of intervention. A wage agreement which is void as to plaintiff who seeks to enforce it (because wholly lacking in mutuality of obligation and remedy) is necessarily void as to intervenors who join in the prayer of plaintiff.

Wilson v Coal Co., 215-855; 246 NW 753

Insurance policy admitted by pleadings. In an action to recover on a policy of fire insurance where the plaintiff's petition, a petition of intervention, and the answer to the petition of intervention all agreed that the policy was issued on a certain date and that it covered the same property that was covered by the mortgage and by another insurance contract issued by the intervenor, the record was not fatally deficient when it contained no evidence of the execution of the policy.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

II ALLOWABLE INTERVENTION

Attorney's lien as interest in judgment—basis for intervention. An attorney's lien, when perfected, creates an interest in a judgment and is a sustaining basis for an intervention by the attorney in a separate equity action to subject land to the payment of the judgment.

Grimes Sav. Bank v Jordan, 224-28; 276 NW 71

Garnishment—attorney's lien against estate funds. Where a casualty company secured a judgment against beneficiaries under a will and issued an execution under which the administrator with will annexed was attached as garnishee, attorneys for the beneficiaries could properly intervene in the garnishment proceedings to assert a claim to the garnished fund for legal services rendered to beneficiaries, in connection with the action by casualty company, which claim was based on written assignment of interests of beneficiaries under said will.

New Amsterdam Co. v Bookhart, 227-1150; 290 NW 61

Judgment creditors and mortgage holders—proper intervenors. In an action between co-partners for receivership and accounting, holders of mortgages and deficiency judgments against land purchased in name of some partners for partnership purposes held proper intervenors.

Heger v Bussanmas, (NOR); 232 NW 663

Right of creditors to contest claims. Creditors whose claims have been allowed have a statutory right to appear and formally contest the allowance of a claim.

In re Lounsberry, 208-596; 226 NW 140

III NONALLOWABLE INTERVENTION

Unallowable intervention. A taxpayer who is given the right to intervene in an action by joining (1) with the plaintiff, or (2) with the defendant, and in an attempted intervention does neither, has no standing in the action.

Mathews v Turner, 212-424; 236 NW 412

Unallowable intervention. In an action by an heir against an executor to quiet title in himself to land which the testator purported to devise, a general creditor of the estate has no standing as an intervenor.

Rapp v Losee, 215-356; 245 NW 317

Unallowable intervention. An intervention involving the right to rents in foreclosure proceedings is unallowable, after decree has been entered, as to all issues pending at the time of such decree.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Cuthbert, 215-718; 246 NW 810

11175 Decision—delay—costs.

Action by teacher for compensation. In a teacher's action to recover compensation against a school district, where a taxpayer files a defensive petition of intervention after a demurrer to the answer had been sustained, but before defendant had made any election to stand on its answer, before any demand to make such election had been made, before default or judgment had been entered, or any demand therefor—the petition of intervention being unquestioned and raising an issue on the additional defensive matter—the court erred in sustaining a motion to strike the petition of intervention and entering judgment against the school district.

Schwartz v School Dist., 225-1272; 282 NW 754

Avoidance of continuance by admission. An intervenor is properly denied a continuance because of his own sickness and consequent inability to be present and testify at the trial, (1) when his intervention was delayed until after the action in question had been reversed and remanded on appeal and until the very eve of the retrial, and (2) when it is admitted that intervenor, if present, would testify to the alleged facts set forth in his application.

Flood v Bank, 220-935; 263 NW 321

Intervenor as applicant for continuance—rule for determination. Whether an intervenor has a right to a continuance, even on account of his own sickness and consequent inability to be present at the trial and testify, must be determined by giving due consideration to the fact that, by this statute he "has no right to delay".

Flood v Bank, 220-935; 263 NW 321

11177 Variance.

ANALYSIS

- I VARIANCE IN GENERAL
- II NONFATAL VARIANCE
- III FATAL VARIANCE

Unquestioned pleadings. See under §12827
 Variance as to "place". See under §11195, Vol I Variance between "time" alleged and proven. See under §11194, Vol I

I VARIANCE IN GENERAL

Alleging quantum meruit and proving express contract. An allegation of quantum meruit cannot be supported by proof of an express contract.

Wayman v Cherokee, 208-905; 225 NW 950

Express and implied contract. There is no variance between an allegation of an express contract of sale of property, and proof that the vendee accepted the offer of the vendor by acts and conduct.

Blakesburg Bk. v Blake, 207-843; 223 NW 895

Rules and customs. Evidence of unpleaded rules and customs as a basis on which to predicate negligence is inadmissible.

Chilcote v Railway, 206-1093; 221 NW 771

Implied contract to pay—absence of agreement to pay entire price—effect. An allegation of oral sale of an article to a defendant is prima facie established, with consequent liability for the entire purchase price, by evidence that the price was fully understood and agreed on, and that the defendant took and retained possession of the article, notwithstanding the fact that the defendant (1) promised to pay one-half only of the purchase price, and (2) promised, without warrant or authority, that a third party would pay the remaining one-half.

Finnerty v Shade, 210-1338; 228 NW 886

Proof under general allegation. A general allegation of agency may be supported by evidence of either an express or implied agency.

Andrew v Kolsrud, 218-15; 253 NW 913

Action for breach of contract. Principle reaffirmed that a contract relied on must be established as pleaded.

Economy Co. v Honett, 222-894; 270 NW 842

Submission of nonpleaded issues. The submission of a nonpleaded issue of negligence constitutes reversible error.

Morse v Castana (town), 213-1225; 241 NW 304

II NONFATAL VARIANCE

Absence of pleading—waiver. A litigant who, without objection, permits a material fact to be established will not be heard thereafter to assert that no appropriate pleading existed as a basis for such testimony.

Harrington v Surety Co., 206-925; 221 NW 577

Express and implied contract. A plaintiff may, in different counts, plead an express and an implied contract as to the same subject matter.

Richmann v Beach, 201-1167; 206 NW 806

Failure to attack general pleading. A pleading, unquestioned in the trial court, which alleges that goods were purchased and delivered under an "oral agreement", without specification of any agreed terms as to price or quantity, will support a judgment for the unquestioned reasonable value of the goods.

Chandler Co. v Groc. Co., 200-919; 205 NW 787

II NONFATAL VARIANCE—concluded

Fraud—nonvariance. An allegation of fraudulent representations of title, as a basis in equity for rescission of a contract of purchase, is sufficiently met by proof of the mutual mistake of the parties as to the title.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

Land description. In an action involving title to real estate, the decree of the court below was not objectionable on the ground that it was not in conformity with pleadings on account of the manner in which the land was described in such pleadings, where throughout the litigation, in the evidence and many of the exhibits the land was fully described, and there was no question as to just what land was in dispute, and where the decree covered the land in controversy.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Similar representation. An allegation that a representation was that a doctor's charge "would not exceed $10" is properly met by proof that the representation was that the said charge "would be about $10".

Robinson v Meek, 203-185; 210 NW 762

III FATAL VARIANCE

Pleading quantum meruit and proving express contract. A fatal variance between allegation and proof results from pleading quantum meruit and proving an express contract for compensation.

Sammon v Roach, 211-1104; 235 NW 78

Specific allegations control general allegations. When negligence is the foundation of an action, specific allegations control, and plaintiff may not rely on general allegations of negligence.

McCoy v Railway, 210-1075; 231 NW 353

11179 Immaterial variance.

Pleading and proof as to entering into contract. No material variance is presented by an allegation "that plaintiff entered into a contract with defendant whereby plaintiff and another (naming him) sold to the defendant", etc., and proof that the contract was entered into by plaintiff and the named other party on the one hand, and by the defendant on the other hand.

Weinhart v Smith, 211-242; 233 NW 26

11180 Failure of proof.

Variance between pleading and proof. See under §11177

Common law rule for recovery—modification. Principle reaffirmed that the common law rule that there can be no recovery on a written contract without a showing that it has been strictly performed has been modified in this state.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

Failure of proof. Evidence of the rental value of lands in a certain neighborhood is no evidence of the rental value of other lands in the same neighborhood, when such other lands are not shown to be similar to the land as to which there is evidence; and a judgment based thereon is improper.

Harris v Carlson, 201-169; 205 NW 202

Failure of proof of material allegation. A fatal failure of proof results from a failure to prove an allegation to the effect that services were to be paid for at the time of the death of the promisor, and where the court instructs to such effect.

Ballard v Miller, 210-1144; 229 NW 159

Failure to meet contract basis for recovery. In an action by an insurer to recover of the insured premiums under a policy indemnifying the insured against injury to his workmen, there is a total failure of proof when the premium is, by contract, computable at a certain rate on the amount paid by the insured to his workmen in a limited and specified class of work, and the insurer wholly fails to present any evidence as to the amount so paid.

Globe Ind. Co. v Anderson-Deering Co., 200-1035; 205 NW 845

Failure to prove condition precedent. In an action by an insurer to recover premiums due on an insurance rider which by its terms is valid only "when signed by an authorized representative", a failure of proof results from the failure of the insurer to prove that the rider was signed as required.

Globe Ind. Co. v Anderson-Deering Co., 200-1035; 205 NW 845

Total failure of proof. Failure of proof results from pleading a claim for money and proving a claim payable in part in money and in part in other personal property.

Hughes v Bridge Co., 204-1229; 210 NW 451

Plea of oral contract. There is a total failure of proof when plaintiff bases his action solely on a plea of oral contract and establishes a written contract.

Lamis v Grain Co., 210-1069; 229 NW 756

Pleading fraud and proving mistake. A plaintiff who pleads that he was induced to make certain payments because of fraudulent representations may not recover on proof that he made the payments because of a unilateral mistake on his own part.

Morrow v Downing, 210-1195; 232 NW 483

Pleading quantum meruit and proving express contract. A fatal variance between allegation and proof results from pleading quantum meruit, and proving an express contract for compensation.

Sammon v Roach, 211-1104; 235 NW 78

Alleging quantum meruit and proving express contract. An allegation of quantum meruit cannot be supported by proof of an express contract.

Wayman v City, 208-905; 225 NW 950

Express contract and quantum meruit. A broker may plead in different counts (1) an express contract to pay a specified commission and (2) an implied contract to pay a reasonable commission, and may insist on the submission of both issues to the jury if the evidence supports both. It follows that evidence may be admissible on the issue of quantum meruit, even though plaintiff produces evidence of an agreement to pay the specifically named commission.

Ransom-Ellis Co. v Eppelsheimer, 205-809; 218 NW 566

Contract and quantum meruit value. Evidence of both the reasonable and contract value of services is admissible when so pleaded, even tho the pleading is embraced in one slovenly drawn but unquestioned count.

Pressly v Stone, 214-449; 239 NW 567

Quantum meruit. A denied plea of quantum meruit for services rendered must be established, or plaintiff must fail, irrespective of whether the defendant does or does not establish his defensive plea that the contract of employment was different, and that thereunder the plaintiff had been paid. Instructions are necessarily erroneous when to the effect that defendant is entitled to the verdict only in case he establishes his claim as to the contract.

Olson v Shuler, 203-518; 210 NW 453

Quantum meruit for services covered by express contract. Plaintiff may not recover on quantum meruit for services which are inseparably connected with, and a part of, services which plaintiff has contracted to perform for an agreed compensation.

Gregerson v Cherry Co., 210-538; 231 NW 350

See Goben v Des M. Co., 214-834; 239 NW 62

Commission—finding sustained by evidence. In a law action by real estate agent to recover commissions for negotiating sale of realty, which had been listed with several brokers, where another agent intervenes claiming such commission, and evidence shows both agents were empowered to dispose of land at reduced price, held, evidence sustained finding of trial court that intervening agent was entitled to commission where he had conducted the preliminary negotiations and also consummated the sale. Broker claiming commission must show he was the efficient and procuring cause of the sale.

Armstrong v Smith, 227-450; 288 NW 621

Contract to find purchaser—tentative offer—effect.

MacVicar v Pav. Corp., 201-355; 207 NW 378

Failure to show agreement. In an action to recover real estate commission, the dismissal of one real estate broker's claim against an intervening real estate broker was proper under the evidence where no showing was made of any agreement for the payment of a definite amount.

Armstrong v Smith, 227-450; 288 NW 621

Granting unallowable relief. The court may not decree the cancellation of an unquestioned judgment, or decree a re-conveyance of land when the validity of the original conveyance was not properly in issue.

Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Novation—pleadings. A plaintiff-vendor who seeks to recover on a contract of sale of land, but pleads that on performance day he conveyed to a party other than the contract purchaser, but under an oral agreement that by so doing the contract purchaser would not be released, must stand or fall on his chosen theory. In other words, he must establish his own theory of nonnovation.

Bobbitt v Van Eaton, 208-404; 226 NW 79

Partly void warrants. There can be no recovery on municipal warrants given in payment of part of a total purported indebtedness, part of which is void because in excess of constitutional debt limitation. In other words, recovery, insofar as permissible, must be had in some proceedings other than on said warrants.

Trepp v Sch. Dist., 213-944; 240 NW 247

11181 Amount of proof.

Burden of proof. See under §11487
Motor vehicle cases. See under Ch 251.1, §§5037.09, 5037.10
Probate claims—burden. See under §11972
Will contests—burden. See under §11846
Workmen's compensation cases. See under §1441

Action on note—sufficiency of proof. The payee in possession of a promissory note the execution of which is not denied makes a prima facie case for recovery by the simple introduction of the note in evidence.

Henderson v Holt, 201-1017; 206 NW 134

Cruel and inhuman treatment—separate maintenance. Principles reaffirmed that a divorce will not be granted on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment unless such treatment endangers the life of the applicant for divorce, nor will separate maintenance be awarded on said ground unless the evidence is such as to justify a divorce if it were asked. Evidence held insufficient to justify either divorce or separate maintenance.

Krotz v Krotz, 209-433; 228 NW 30

Deed to ancestor—proof—title not established as against tax deed. In a quiet title action, stipulated evidence that an ancestor of defendant received and recorded a deed to the land from another is insufficient to overthrow plaintiff's tax deed without a further showing of the previous and subsequent chain of title.

Inter-Ocean v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Directing verdict — amount of evidence. Court in directing a verdict is guided by not whether there is literally no evidence, but whether there is any evidence which ought reasonably to satisfy the jury that the fact is established.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Equitable estoppel — evidence — degree of proof required. The plea of a surety on a promissory note that he, under an arrangement with the principal maker, furnished a portion of the funds with which to make full payment of the note, but that the payee wrongfully applied said payment on another note owing by said maker, and that, therefore, said payee is estopped to maintain an action against him, must be supported by clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence that said payee had full knowledge of said arrangement before he made application of said payment.

Reason: Fundamentally, estoppel is not a favorite of the law.

Stookesberry v Burgher, 220-916; 262 NW 820

No decree on unsworn evidence. In an action to quiet title against paving assessment certificate holders, an unsworn petition supported by unsworn written statements showing, as contention for invalidity of assessments the nonconformity of plat to statutory requirements, is not the sufficient evidence as in equity will support a judgment by default and, the burden of proof thereof being on the plaintiff, the petition was properly dismissed.

Neilan v Lytle Inv. Co., 223-987; 274 NW 103

Foreign corporations — burden to sustain original notice. In an action against a foreign corporation commenced by service of original notice on the secretary of state, the plaintiff has the burden to sustain its service and failing therein may not question the sufficiency of a motion to quash the service.

Keokuk v Curtin-Howe Corp., 223-915; 274 NW 78

Gifts—inter vivos—evidence—sufficiency to establish. Evidence to establish a parol gift of personal property must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing.

Malcor v Johnson, 223-644; 273 NW 145

Grantor's action to set aside deed. When the grantor of a warranty deed had acquiesced for five years in the title of the grantee, he could not set aside the deed and quiet title in himself without establishing a plain, clear, and decisive case.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Instructions—evidence defined. Instruction that "evidence is whatever is admitted in the trial of a case as part of the record, whether it be an article or document marked as exhibit, other matter formally introduced and received, stipulation, or testimony of witnesses, in order to enable jury to pronounce with certainty, concerning the truth of any matter in dispute", considered with other instructions, and while not approved, could not have prejudicially misled the jury.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

Instructions — negligence—requiring excessive proof. An instruction is erroneous when it requires negligence to be established "in the respects charged in the petition," and the negligence so charged is (1) excessive speed, (2) excessive speed after warning, and (3) excessive speed while traveling on loose gravel.

Codner v Stowe, 201-800; 208 NW 330

Negligence—general and specific allegations. Except in res ipsa loquitur cases a specific allegation will not waive a general allegation of negligence, which general allegation must be assailed by motion, if timely, before answer and without such motion is properly submitted to the jury if sustained by the evidence.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

Note as future gift—presumption. Altho a promissory note for which there is no consideration is an unenforceable promise to make a future gift, nevertheless in an action against an executor on a note the presumption that the note imports a consideration, if negated, must be overcome by evidence and this burden is on the maker or his representatives.

In re Cheney's Estate, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Oral agreement between an attorney and a promoter. An attorney who, in an action against a promoter for an accounting, alleges that he acted with the promoter to establish a corporation for conducting "sales contests", which corporation was later dissolved, and that the promoter alone then formed a similar second corporation from which by oral agreement the attorney was to share in the profits, properly has his petition for accounting dismissed, when he fails to establish the alleged oral agreement upon which his action was based.

Davies v Stayton, 226-79; 283 NW 486

Malpractice—proximate cause of damage. In an operation for conization of the cervix, evidence held to clearly place the negligence of the defendants, if any, in failing to keep the canal open while healing, as the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Materiality—adding suspicions. Rejecting evidence which simply adds suspicions held not prejudicial.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

Objections in probate—securities ownership issue—no jury. The probate court having jurisdiction to compel executrix to account for all assets, and the burden to sustain her accounts being on executrix, objections to her accounts raising the issue of ownership of certain securities are triable in probate without a jury.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Oral contract to convey land at death. Absence of strong equities in favor of the plaintiff, a son trying to establish an oral contract with his father, since deceased, does not tend to weaken his corroborating testimony.

Blezek v Blezek, 226-237; 284 NW 180

Physician—revocation of license. In proceedings to revoke the license of a physician, ample proof of some of the grounds for revocation renders quite immaterial the fact that other grounds were not proved.

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

Pleading conspiracy and proving joint wrong. Damages for a joint wrong are recoverable even tho an allegation of conspiracy be not proven.

Andrew v Ind. Co., 207-652; 223 NW 529

Pleading carrier's degree of care and res ipsa loquitur. A general allegation of negligence in a petition followed by a further allegation of negligence, dealing with the degree of care required of carriers, did not prevent application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Peterson v De Luxe Co., 225-809; 281 NW 737

Possession of liquor—third conviction. Where an indictment charged the defendant with committing the crime of unlawful possession of alcoholic liquor, and that he had been convicted on two previous occasions of liquor law violations, and when defendant pleaded guilty, trial court was under no duty to require proof of former convictions.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 282 NW 728

Proof under "guest" statute. In a guest's personal injury action against a father and son, owner and driver, respectively, of the motor vehicle, where the petition alleges the son was driving with the "knowledge and consent" of the father, court's refusal to submit to the jury defendant-appellant's special interrogatory as to finding that son was driving car with "knowledge and consent" of father was not error, as it required an element not contained in the statute—proof under the statute need go no further than to show "consent", even tho the allegation of knowledge was in the petition.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Res ipsa loquitur applicability. The rule of res ipsa loquitur applies where the circumstances attending the injury are of such character that the accident could not well have happened in the ordinary course of events without negligence on defendants' part, and the instrumentalities causing the injury were within exclusive control of defendants.

Peterson v De Luxe Co., 225-809; 281 NW 737

Res ipsa loquitur as rule of evidence. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is a rule of evidence not applicable where specific allegations of negligence are pleaded but only where general allegations of negligence are wholly relied upon.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Specific negligence—res ipsa loquitur—separate counts. Having received burns from a beauty parlor treatment, a plaintiff, after pleading specific acts of negligence in one count and the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in another count, may at the conclusion of the evidence withdraw the first count and rely on the res ipsa loquitur doctrine which is always applicable in cases where all the instrumentalities are under the control of the operator and where, had ordinary care been used, the injuries would not ordinarily have occurred.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65; 2 NCCA(NS) 613

Scintilla evidence rule. In this state a mere scintilla of evidence will not raise a jury question and the trial court will be upheld in directing a verdict where, if the case were submitted and a verdict returned against the moving party, it would be the trial court's duty to set it aside.

Donahoe v Denman, 223-1273; 275 NW 154

Surplus allegation. Plaintiff in an action to recover the balance due on a mortgage-secured promissory note need not allege, and if he does allege, need not prove that the credit on the note arose through a mortgage foreclosure and sale.

Williams v Guy, 209-711; 228 NW 646

Undue burden. No undue burden is imposed on a defending street railway company by requiring it to keep its car "under proper control and to use ordinary care", to operate its car "in a careful manner and not at a dangerous rate of speed", and to give notice of its approach "by ringing the gong or bell or otherwise", when the pleaded assignment of negligence embraces (1) excessive speed, (2) want of proper control of the car, and (3) failure to give warning of the approach of the car.

Johnson v Railway, 201-1044; 207 NW 984

Unjust enrichment as basis for recovery. No basis for recovery against a city, on the theory that the city has been unjustly enriched and must pay therefor, is established by proof of the reasonable value of that which the city has received.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Unpleaded defense—effect. The maker of a promissory note cannot be given the benefit of testimony tending to show that he signed the note under duress when he rests his defense on a distinctly different defense; and the court should so inform the jury.

Farmers Bank v DeWolf, 212-312; 233 NW 524

Curative amendments. See under §11557

I PLEADINGS AMENDABLE

Right to change remedy. A plaintiff who pleads a rescission of a fraud-induced contract and prays for judgment for the consideration paid, may, upon discovering his inability to prove the rescission, amend his pleadings and pray for damages caused by the fraud. (Note that the reverse of this proposition presents a different rule.)

Reinertson v Struthers, 201-1186; 207 NW 247

II AMENDMENTS IN GENERAL

Error as to abandoned pleading. Errors in ruling on motions aimed at a reply to an amended and substituted answer are harmless when defendant later files a new amended and substituted answer.

Butler Co. v Elliott, 211-1068; 233 NW 669

Plea for additional relief—effect. The fact that a substituted petition asks for the same relief asked in the original petition, and for additional relief, does not change the cause of action.

Dunlop v First Tr. JSL Bank, 222-887; 270 NW 362

Repeating bad pleading—improper striking in toto. Error results from striking in toto an amended and substituted petition in equity on the sole ground that said pleading is but a repetition of a former petition which had been held bad on equitable demurrer (motion to dismiss), when said amended and substituted petition—while in part a repetition of said former bad pleading—alleges an entirely new fact basis for recovery and a prayer in harmony therewith.

Birk v Jones County, 221-794; 266 NW 553

Seeming illegality—explanatory amendment. In an action by private citizens to enjoin a municipality and its contractor from carrying out an alleged, illegal, written contract for the construction of a light and power plant, the defendants may be permitted by the court so to amend their answer as to plead, tho' belatedly, that a provision in said contract relative to the manner of testing said plant when completed, and which provision was in material variance with the plans and specifications on which bids were received, was inadvertently inserted in said contract—that the actual agreed test was identical with that called for by said specifications, and that, since the commencement of the suit, the said defendants had entered into a supplemental contract in accordance with said plea.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Stipulation of fact as amendment. A duly signed stipulation as to the ultimate facts in a case may become, in legal effect, an amendment to the petition in the case, for the purpose of a subsequently interposed motion to dismiss the petition.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

Reply—avoidance of matter first appearing in reply. An answer to a reply seems to be unknown to our practice. But when the defendant in an action to quiet title answers that he is the owner of the property, and is met by a reply that defendant is estopped by his own contract from claiming title, and defendant wishes to plead that said contract was obtained from him by fraud and without consideration, quaere: must defendant plead his said defense (a) by way of amendment to his answer, or (b) does the law impliedly supply such plea?

Carr v McCauley, 215-298; 245 NW 290

Substituted petition constituting new action. The filing, by plaintiff in partition, of an amended and substituted petition, in which the name of his wife is omitted as a defendant and appears as a joint plaintiff, must be deemed the commencement of an entirely new action.

Jones et al. v Park, 220-903; 262 NW 801

III LEAVE OF COURT AND TERMS

Amendment after submission. After the trial and submission of an equitable cause, the court may, without notice to the defendant, permit the filing of an amendment which amplifies a defectively pleaded statutory warranty, it appearing that the defendant appeared and unsuccessfully moved to strike said belated amendment, but proffered no pleading in answer thereto.

Wise v Motors Co., 207-939; 223 NW 862
Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151

Discretion of court. Principle reaffirmed that the granting of amendments, and the refusal to grant a continuance on account thereof, rest largely in the discretion of the court.

Wolfe v Decker, 221-600; 266 NW 4

Permitting belated amendment and receiving testimony. After the evidence in an action at law is closed the court may, in its discretion, permit the filing of an amendment presenting equitable issues, and may receive testimony thereon.

Carlson v City, 212-373; 236 NW 421

Striking amendment to petition when case ready for trial. In a contract action, when the petition had been on file for almost three years, the pleadings made up, the jury impanelled, and witnesses in attendance when their attendance at another time might have been difficult to obtain, the court acted within sound judicial discretion in striking an amendment which the plaintiff had filed without leave of the court, by which the plaintiff attempted to increase the amount of recovery sought, basing the amendment on quantum meruit rather than on the contract, as in the original petition.

Munn v Drakesville, 226-1040; 285 NW 644

IV SUBSTANTIAL NATURE OF AMENDMENT

Conformity to pleading—amendment after default. A personal judgment may not validly be entered on an amendment filed after default, of which amendment the defendant has no notice.

Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

V ALLOWABLE AMENDMENTS

Corporate or partnership capacity. An amendment during the trial, alleging partnership capacity of the defendant in lieu of a former allegation of corporate capacity, is proper.

Mau v Rice Bros., 216-864; 249 NW 206

Substitution of real party in interest. Amendments are allowable which substitute the real party in interest, even though such amendment is filed during the actual trial.

Norton v Ferguson, 203-317; 211 NW 417

Substituting quantum meruit plea. A broker may very properly be permitted, at the close of the testimony, to withdraw his plea of express contract as to a commission, and amend by a plea of quantum meruit.

Lowery Co. v Lamp, 200-853; 205 NW 538

Allowable amendment after reversal. The elements of the doctrine of "last clear chance" may be deemed as inherently attending an allegation which, in effect, charges defendant with proximate negligence up to the very time of the infliction of the injury, even tho said allegation carries no reference to the "last clear chance" or to the doctrine thereof. It follows that after trial and reversal thereof, such allegation may be amended and amplified by alleging facts which, if proven, will specifically present the issue of the "last clear chance".

Spaulding v Miller, 220-1107; 264 NW 8

Amendments allowable after reversal and remand. Defendant, in an action at law, may, after reversal and remand on plaintiff's appeal, amend his answer by pleading new and additional grounds of defense.

Flood v Bank, 220-935; 263 NW 321

Amended answer omitting objectionable parts. In an action on a promissory note where the defendant asked for a set-off of the amount of the note and counterclaimed for an additional amount, and the counterclaim was stricken on motion, a substituted answer by the defendant which omitted the counterclaim was not subject to being stricken because of being identical with the original answer.

Lowry v White, (NOR); 285 NW 687

Amendment to cure error in computation. Amendments filed during the trial of an action to cure an error in the computation of the amount of a party's claim are presumptively proper.

Barth Prod. v Kelly, 211-1154; 235 NW 471

Change of venue—fraud in inception of contract—right to amend answer. A defendant who bases a motion for change of venue to the county of his residence on an answer alleging fraud in the inception of the contract sued on may amend such answer, if he deems it defective, and thereafter stand on the amended answer as a basis for the change of venue.

Wright v Thompson, 209-1133; 229 NW 765

Computation of period—amendment in re conspiracy. A pleader does not, in legal effect, change the nature of his cause of action by striking from his petition the allegation that the defendants "conspired, colluded, and confederated together", and by substituting therefor the allegation that the defendants "acted together jointly and aided and abetted each other".

Dickson v Young, 202-378; 210 NW 452

Issue-changing amendment—allowability. Permitting an issue-changing amendment during the course of a trial in equity is not erroneous when the opposite party is given ample time to meet the new issue.

Markworth v Sav. Bk., 217-341; 251 NW 857

V ALLOWABLE AMENDMENTS—continued

Notice of amendment. A plaintiff who at one stage of the pleadings wholly withdraws his claim for personal judgment against the defendant may later, by proper amendment, reassert such claim without notice to the defendant who has appeared, personally and by counsel, and is actively contesting the relief sought by plaintiff.

Gotsch v Schoenjahn, 201-1317; 207 NW 567

Ownership of property—inadvertent plea—effect. An inadvertent pleading to the effect that a person other than plaintiff had an interest in the insured property becomes of no consequence when the pleading was duly corrected, and when the proofs conclusively established sole ownership in plaintiff.

Havirland v Ins. Co., 204-335; 213 NW 762

Rejecting unsupported amendment. In an action for damages consequent on a child falling into an opening in the floor of a building which was undergoing reconstruction after a fire, an amendment to the petition, alleging that the building was an attractive nuisance, and offered on the theory of conforming the pleadings to the proof, is properly rejected when the record is bare of any evidence that the said place was attractive to children.

Battin v Cornwall, 218-42; 253 NW 842

Remand—right to amend. A plaintiff manifestly does not set up a new and different cause of action when, after remand on appeal in a law action based on negligence, he, by allowable pleadings, rephrases and elaborates an unadjudicated ground of negligence which was embraced in his pleadings at the time of the original trial.

Lahr v Railway, 218-1155; 252 NW 525

Admitting evidence on promise to amend. In a law case, especially, it is poor practice to permit evidence, objected to as incompetent, to be admitted on the promise that amendments would later be filed to meet the proof. Such objections coming after the witness has answered should be followed by motions to strike.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Amendments containing "thread" of original claim not barred. In an action for compensation for professional engineering services involved in construction of a sewage disposal plant, where profuse substitutions and amendments to a petition which keep a thread of thought identifying them with the claim in the original notice are filed, such amendments and substitutions, tho not filed within the allowable period of the statute of limitations, come within the rule that commencement of the action tolls the statute.

Slippy Co. v Grinnell, 224-212; 276 NW 58

Continuance—justifiable refusal. Reversible error does not result from the action of the court in permitting a belated nonissue-changing amendment to the petition to stand, and in refusing defendant a continuance until all his attorneys can be present at the opening of the trial.

Newland v McClelland & Son, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Failure to give notice. A plaintiff may not, after the entry of default, amend his pleadings by increasing the amount of the claim, without notice to the defendant, and take judgment on the amended pleadings.

Chandler Co. v Sinaiko, 201-791; 208 NW 323

Inadvertently omitted party—opening proceeding to supply. A court of equity, in the exercise of a sound discretion, may reopen a foreclosure proceeding on application of the purchaser at, and deed holder under, execution sale, in order to bring in a party who was inadvertently omitted as a party defendant in the original institution of the action, and whose claim is manifestly barred by the statute of limitation.

Johnson v Leese, 223-480; 273 NW 111

Issue-changing. The court does not abuse its discretion in refusing a belated amendment which would convert an action for damages for a permanent nuisance into an action to enjoin a nonpermanent nuisance and for damages.

Cary-Platt v Elec. Co., 207-1052; 224 NW 89

Nonissue-changing amendment—no special appearance after general appearance. If a defendant, by proper appearance to an action and pleading thereto, is in court when an amendment is filed to the petition, which amendment does not create a new cause of action, he is precluded from appearing specially to the petition as amended.

Johnston v Federal Land Bank, 226-496; 284 NW 393

Justifiable rejection. The rejection of an amendment may be justified when filed after the cause is fully submitted to the court and without explanation for the delay.

Thul v Weiland, 213-713; 239 NW 515

New party but same relief—no election of remedies. In an action to compel certain heirs to contribute a share of a judgment arising out of a decedent's ownership of bank stock, a petition that alleges defendants' liability as individuals is not an election of remedies so as to prevent an amendment thereto setting up liability against an estate as an additional party, since there was no change in the nature of relief asked and no choice was made between inconsistent remedies at the time of the election.

Daniel v Best, 224-1348; 279 NW 374

Objectionable form. The practice of amending a pleading by dictating the same into the record during the progress of the trial without any record clearly showing what was done, to the knowledge of all the litigants, is condemned.

Mitchell v College, 200-1202; 206 NW 81

Pursuing noninconsistent remedies. A policyholder who, in an action at law, pleads that the insurer has waived that provision of the policy which invalidates the insurance in case of a change in the title to the insured property, and is unsuccessful on appeal in sustaining said plea, does not thereby make such an election of remedies as will prevent him, after remand, from amending and praying in equity that the policy be so reformed as to eliminate the invalidating provision.

Green v Ins. Co., 218-1131; 253 NW 36

Specific performance action. Where a plaintiff, after starting a specific performance action to require a federal land bank to complete a loan as agreed, loses the land by foreclosure because the money from the agreed loan is not available to pay off the outstanding mortgage—thereby damaging the plaintiff-landowner by the loss of his equity in the land—an amendment to the specific performance petition changing the relief sought and seeking damages ascertainable after institution of the original suit does not set up a new cause of action.

Johnston v Federal Land Bank, 226-496; 284 NW 393

Unallowable amendment after remand. A party who attacks the constitutionality of a statute on specified grounds, and, on appeal is defeated in his contentions, will not, after remand to the trial court, be permitted to file an amendment to his pleading attacking the constitutionality of the law on new and additional grounds.

Rural Dist. v McCracken, 215-55; 244 NW 711

Unamendable pleadings. When the trial court abates an equitable action (e. g., mandamus) by dismissing it on the ground of misjoinder both of parties plaintiff and of causes of action, and plaintiff makes no effort to avoid the abatement by pruning out of his pleading the objectionable misjoinders, but stands on his pleadings, and on appeal suffers an affirmance of said order of dismissal, he may not thereafter amend his pleadings in the dismissed action by then pruning out said objectionable matter. The pleadings of a finally dismissed action are, manifestly, not subject to amendment.

First N. Bank v Board, 221-348; 264 NW 281; 106 ALR 566

Nonallowable amendment. A timely brought action based solely on the common law plea of defendant's liability consequent on the negligent operation of an automobile by defendant's employee, in due course of employment, may not, after the action would be barred by the statute of limitation, be so amended as to wholly abandon said pleaded basis and to substitute an entirely new basis for recovery, to wit, an allegation that defendant was liable because the automobile in question belonged to defendant and was operated at the time in question with defendant's consent.

Page v Constr. Co., 219-1017; 257 NW 426

Unnecessary amendment. In proceedings for the appointment of a guardian, the allegation of unsoundness of mind made when the petition is filed may be supported by testimony of unsoundness at the time of the trial, tho the proceedings be long protracted. It follows that the unnecessary allowance of an amendment alleging such subsequent unsoundness is quite harmless.

Anspach v Littler, 217-787; 253 NW 120

Workmen's compensation act—lost memorandum of agreement—procedure. In a proceeding to obtain judgment on a lost memorandum of agreement relative to compensation under the workmen's compensation act, the said memorandum, if found after the record is closed, may yet be made a part of the record, with the consent of the court, by proper amendment to the pleadings.

Biggs v Bank, 218-48; 254 NW 331

VI TIMELY AND UNTIMELY AMENDMENTS

Timely amendment. An amendment to an answer setting up a new defense, filed on the opening day of trial, and as soon as defendant learned of the defense, is timely.

Finch v Gates, 210-859; 229 NW 832

Changing issue after trial. Issue-changing amendments are properly rejected when made after trial.

Fairley v Falcon, 204-290; 214 NW 538
Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Dual amendments on same subject matter—timeliness. Permitting several amendments as to the same subject matter, some being filed after the commencement of the trial, may be proper, especially when complainant has been in no manner surprised.

Dougherty v McFee, 221-391; 265 NW 176

Belated amendment. Striking an amendment filed after the opening statements at the second trial of the cause, is within the discretion of the court, especially when the same amendment had been stricken at the first trial.

Lockie v Baker Est., 208-1293; 227 NW 160

Belated issue-changing amendment. The refusal to allow an issue-changing amendment after the close of the testimony, and after a

VI TIMELY AND UNTIMELY AMENDMENTS—concluded motion had been made to direct a verdict, will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing of prejudice, and especially when an element of negligence exists in not filing the amendment at an earlier date.

Lawyer v Stansell, 217-111; 250 NW 887

Belated new issue. Plaintiff may not amend after verdict and inject into his petition for the first time a plea for "future mental and physical pain".

Pettijohn v Halloran, 200-1355; 206 NW 631

Belated, issue-changing and prejudicial amendment properly stricken. An amendment to an answer is properly stricken on motion when said amendment, if allowed, would materially change the issues to the prejudice of plaintiff, would delay the trial, and was filed after the trial had proceeded some eight days, and after plaintiff had closed his evidence, and when the cause was substantially ready for submission to the jury.

McKeown v McKeown, 220-791; 263 NW 266

Amended and supplemental pleadings—issue-changing amendment. Principle reaffirmed that issue-changing amendments are unallowed after the close of the testimony.

Andrew v Golf Club, 217-577; 250 NW 709

Belated pleading — discretion to strike. Striking an amended and substituted answer and counterclaim which is filed over 18 months after the overruling of defendant's motion to strike and demurrer to petition, instead of being filed within 10 days after said ruling as provided by the court, evinces no abuse of the discretion lodged in the trial court.

Andreas & Son v Hempy, 221-1184; 268 NW 13

Belated plea of fraud. A timely petition for the vacation of a judgment on the ground that the stipulation on which the judgment was rendered was wholly unauthorized, may not, after the lapse of one year after the rendition of the judgment, be so amended as to inject the issue of fraud as a basis for such vacation. (§12790, C., '24.)

Haas v Nielsen, 200-1314; 206 NW 253

Belated and unsupported amendment. It is doubly erroneous for the court, after argument has closed, (1) to permit an amendment assigning a new ground of negligence which is without support in the evidence, and (2) to submit such alleged negligence to the jury.

Peckinpough v Engelke, 215-1248; 247 NW 822

Fatally belated amendment. An issue-changing amendment offered by defendant after he had repeatedly amended his pleadings and delayed the cause, and after testimony had been taken by deposition in a distant state, and after the trial had reached its closing stage, is properly rejected.

Hunt, etc. v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Fatally belated and unallowable amendment. After an action has been twice tried in the trial court, and once heard on appeal in the supreme court on the same issues, it is not permissible to so change the issues as to present a distinctively different cause of action.

State v Cordaro, 214-1070; 241 NW 448

Fatally delayed amendment. The court may be quite justified, in the midst of a trial, in refusing an amendment which will entirely change the issues, even tho the other party to the action is willing to meet the proposed change in the issues.

Dolan v McManus, 209-1037; 229 NW 687

Pleadings amended after submission—refusal. It is not error to refuse permission to file an issue-changing amendment after submission of the cause.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

Unallowable amendment. An amendment to a petition, filed after the cause has been fully tried and submitted to the court, and without leave of the court, and brought to the appellate court as an amendment to the abstract, will be stricken on motion.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Belated presentation of proposition—nonreviewable. Where there is a failure to make a timely submission of a proposition in the court below, it will not be considered on appeal.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 238 NW 915

VII CONFORMING PLEADINGS TO PROOF

Liberality of rule. Quite large discretion is lodged in the trial court in allowing amendments to pleadings in order to conform pleadings to proof.

Eilers v Frieling, 211-841; 234 NW 275

Conforming pleading to proof. One who pleads fraud in the inception of a contract and prays for rescission on that ground may, at any proper time, and in order to conform the pleadings to the proof, amend by pleading that no contract ever existed, because of the failure of the minds of the parties to meet on the terms of the contract.

Cloud v Burnett, 201-733; 206 NW 283

Conforming pleadings to proof—absence of prejudice. An amendment to a petition, which simply conforms the pleadings to the proofs already taken, cannot be deemed prejudicial.

Hardin v Ins. Co., 222-1283; 271 NW 176

Conforming pleadings to proof. Amendments after verdict are proper when they present no new issue and take no one by surprise, but simply conform the pleadings to the proofs.

Yaus v Egg Co., 204-426; 213 NW 230
State v Carney, 208-133; 217 NW 472

Pleading conforming to proof. A pleading may be amended to conform to the proof.

Henriott v Main, 225-20; 279 NW 110

Amendment after appeal. An amendment which is filed after reversal on appeal, and filed in order to conform the pleadings to the real issue as determined on the appeal, should not be stricken, especially when the same issue appears to have been voluntarily litigated in the original trial.

In re Talbott, 204-363; 213 NW 779

Amendment not permitted. An assignment of error which stated that "the court abused its discretion when it refused to permit plaintiff to amend its amended and substituted petition to conform to the proof" is insufficient when the written contract sought to be enforced was not established by the proof; and the court's refusal to permit amendment to pleadings was not an abuse of discretion.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

Belated reply. A reply filed without leave of court and after the trial is concluded, and purporting to conform the pleadings to the evidence, may be considered, notwithstanding its untimeliness, when neither party is deprived thereby of any testimony.

McDonald v Morrison, 211-882; 228 NW 878

Correcting error in copy. An error in a copy of an instrument attached to a pleading may be corrected during the trial, especially when the error had no bearing on any issue in the case.

Mau v Rice Bros., 216-864; 249 NW 206

Nonissue changing. Plaintiff may not successfully complain of an amendment, filed at the close of all the testimony, which conforms the pleadings to the proofs and in no manner changes the defendant's position.

Andrew v Martin, 218-19; 254 NW 67

Res ipsa loquitur in amendment—nonconformity to evidence. Where a prospective purchaser driving a used automobile belonging to an automobile dealer takes as a passenger a person familiar with automobiles to advise as to its value, and while so driving has an accident wherein the passenger is injured, an amended petition relying on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not conform to the proof where the evidence excludes the likelihood of any automobile defect and indicates the accident was caused by driver trying to close automobile door against wind.

Sproll v Burkett Co., 223-902; 274 NW 63;
2 NCCA (NS) 424

Unallowable amendment. An amendment filed after decree, on the theory of conforming the pleading to the facts proven, is necessarily unallowable when the record contains no evidence supporting the amendment.

Des M. Music v Lindquist, 214-117; 241 NW 425

VIII AMENDMENTS IN RE JUSTICE OF THE PEACE APPEALS

Allowable amendment. On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, an unassailed amendment by defendant, setting up a counterclaim which was stricken in the justice court, is good.

Davis v Robinson, 200-840; 205 NW 520

11183 Continuance on account of amendment.

Estoppel. An order which permits the filing of an issue-changing amendment will not be reviewed on appeal when it appears that appellant rejected an offered continuance.

Kellar v Lindley, 203-57; 212 NW 360

11184 How amendment made—substitute pleading.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 123—Amendments after limitation has run

11185 Interrogatories annexed to pleading.

Interrogatories to jury. See under §§11513, 13916

Answers to interrogatories. Answers to interrogatories which are offered in evidence for a particular purpose by the party requiring them, are in evidence for other purposes.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1020; 226 NW 777

Disclosure of insurance settlement. In an automobile owner's damage action against a street railway, wherein defendant pleads a general denial and alleges that plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and wherein interrogatories attached to defendant's answer disclose that plaintiff's loss had been partly settled through insurance, and when defendant then alleges that a bank holds a mortgage on plaintiff's automobile, and moves the court to bring in the insurer and the mortgagee-bank as parties, such motion was properly overruled.

Caligiuri v Railway, 227-466; 288 NW 702

Order overruling objections to interrogatories—not appealable. An order overruling objections and exceptions to interrogatories attached to a plaintiff's petition in an action for accounting is not an order from which an appeal will lie.

Eby v Phipps, 225-1328; 283 NW 423

Review of order overruling objections. This statute simply creates a rule of evidence; and an order which overrules objections to such interrogatories on the naked ground of irrelevancy, incompetency, and immateriality, and which requires the adversary to answer such interrogatories, is not reviewable by certiorari.

Winneshiek Bank v Dist. Court, 203-1277; 212 NW 391

11191 Effect of failure to answer.

Failure to answer—effect. Defendant's failure to answer interrogatories attached to the petition will not entitle plaintiff to judgment on his affidavit and claim when the court has not fixed the time within which the interrogatories must be answered.

Union Rep. Co. v Anderson, 211-1; 232 NW 492

11196 Evidence under denial.

Issues under general denial. See under §11114 Matters specially pleadable. See under §11209

Affirmative elaboration of general denial. The beneficiary in an accident insurance policy has the burden of proof to establish that the insured was killed under the particular condition covered by the policy and alleged in the petition, notwithstanding elaborate affirmative assertions by the defendant in addition to a general denial.

Nelson v Acc. Soc., 212-989; 237 NW 341

Burden of proof. A bank which furnishes its customer periodical statements of the condition of his debits and credits which are acquiesced in by the long silence of the customer, is under no burden of proof to disprove the subsequent claim of the customer that certain specified items of the account were incorrect. The burden rests on the customer to establish his allegation of incorrectness.

State Bank v Cooper, 201-225; 205 NW 333

Collateral issue. The right to pursue a collateral issue developed on cross-examination is in distinct disfavor in our law, especially when the evidence in support thereof is ambiguous, remote from all proper issues, and otherwise incompetent.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

Exercise of option—reasonable time—jury question. In an action to recover part of an advance paid for corn stored in an elevator under a written contract to sell at seller's option, the filing of a general denial raises the issue of defendant's performance; and question as to whether defendant exercised his seller's option within a reasonable time is for the jury.

Andreas & Son v Hempy, 224-561; 276 NW 791

General denial—evidence of gift admitted. Evidence to establish a gift is admissible under a general denial.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Permissible evidence. Under a general denial of an allegation of a loan, defendant may show that the money received by him was his own money.

Southhall v Berry, 207-605; 223 NW 480

Poor practice—admitting evidence on promise to amend—motion to strike. In a law case, especially, it is poor practice to permit evidence, objected to as incompetent, to be admitted on the promise that amendments would later be filed to meet the proof. Such objections coming after the witness has answered should be followed by motions to strike.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Quantum meruit. A denied plea of quantum meruit for services rendered must be established, or plaintiff must fail, irrespective of whether the defendant does or does not establish his defensive plea that the contract of employment was different, and that thereunder the plaintiff had been paid. Instructions are necessarily erroneous when to the effect that defendant is entitled to the verdict only in case he establishes his claim as to the contract.

Olson v Shuler, 203-518; 210 NW 453

Rescission for fraud—general denial—effect. Where plaintiff alleges rescission of a contract of sale because of defendant's fraud and seeks to recover the money paid, a general denial does not raise the issue that plaintiff after discovering the fraud elected to affirm the contract.

Blecher v Schmidt, 211-1063; 235 NW 34

Stock—subscriptions—burden of proof. In an action by a corporation on a stock subscription contract for stock in an unorganized but contemplated corporation, plaintiff has the burden to establish every nonadmitted fact entitling it to recover, even the defendant, in addition to a limited general denial, pleads in great detail that plaintiff's corporate organization was wholly beyond the contemplation of his subscription contract.

Cedar Rapids Amus. Assn. v Wymer, 213-1012; 240 NW 644

Unavailable matters in avoidance. Under a general denial of a contract of employment, defendant may not show that the contract was terminated by the discharge of the plaintiff.

Hornish v Overton, 206-780; 221 NW 483

11197 Sham defenses—redundant matter.

Discussion. See 17 ILR 508—Sham and frivolous pleading; 20 ILR 49—Defective pleading

Abstracts of record—motion to strike. The court will be slow to strike amendments to an abstract when the filing appears to be actuated by a good-faith desire to present with great thoroughness matters of unusual importance.

McCarthy Co. v Coal Co., 204-207; 215 NW 250; 54 ALR 1116

Accord and satisfaction—when plea unallowable. A plea of accord and satisfaction is properly stricken from a pleading when the pleading affirmatively shows that no basis existed or could exist for the plea—affirmatively shows that no bona fide dispute existed or could exist as to the amount due under the instrument on which suit was brought.

Jacobsen v Moss, 221-1342; 268 NW 162

Alleging note as receipt—sham defense—striking. Where a written instrument sued upon contains the legal elements of a negotiable promissory note, an allegation in an answer that such written instrument was a receipt shows on its face that such pleading is false and should be stricken on motion.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

Answer negating petition. An answer which, in effect, is a negation of the allegations of the petition, proof of which plaintiff must make in order to recover, is not subject to a motion to dismiss.

Clark Bros. v Anderson, 211-920; 234 NW 844

Appeal—abandonment. An appeal from the refusal of the court to strike a petition must be deemed abandoned when it is made to appear that subsequent to the perfecting of the appeal, the appellant answered the petition and went to trial on the merits.

Iowa Bk. v Raffensperger, 208-1133; 224 NW 505

Assignment of error. Error, if any, of the court, during the trial, in striking evidence or tendered issues cannot be reached by an assignment of error to the effect that the court erred in failing to instruct on said stricken matters. The assignment must be on the original alleged erroneous striking of said matters.

Reidy v Railway, 220-1386; 258 NW 675

Attorney and guardian fees—immateriality. Allegation, in petition to terminate guardianship, that 37 percent of the receipts of the guardianship had been paid to guardian and his attorney for fees and expenses, was properly stricken out on motion as not being material to the issue before the court.

In re Hawk, 227-232; 288 NW 114

Brief of authorities—motion to strike. An elaborate brief of authorities, inserted in a pleading following the pleading of foreign statutes, is properly stricken on motion.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617

Certiorari to review ruling. A litigant who moves to strike a pleading or to require it to be made more specific, may not have the rulings on his motion reviewed on certiorari; and this is necessarily true even tho it be conceded, arguendo, that the pleading in question was not legally on the calendar.

Holcomb v Franklin, 212-1159; 235 NW 474

Conclusions. Conclusions and immaterial matter have no proper place in a pleading and should be stricken on motion.

Andrew v Indem. Co., 207-652; 223 NW 529

Construction in view of stricken references. While the striking of portions of the first division of an answer may be proper as far as plaintiff's action is concerned, yet the court must treat said stricken portions as unstricken in construing defendant's cross-petition contained in a subsequent division of his answer when said stricken portions are essentially material to the cross-petition and are incorporated therein by distinct reference.

Andrew v Boyd, 213-1277; 241 NW 423

Escheat proceeding—striking allegations asking for new administrator—no appeal—dismissal. Where the state of Iowa in an estate proceeding files an application for the escheat to the state of the property in the estate and includes in its application extensive allegations dealing with the selection of a new administrator, a motion to strike those portions of the pleading dealing with the new administrator, when sustained, does not present an interlocutory order from which an appeal will lie, and, if taken, the appeal will be dismissed on motion.

In re Bannon, 225-839; 282 NW 287

Evidence on stricken plea. After striking from a pleading a claim for damages, error necessarily results from receiving evidence as to the claim and leaving the instructions in such form that the jury may give consideration to such evidence in arriving at their verdict.

Bremhorst v Coal Co., 202-1251; 211 NW 898

Foreign procedural statutes—nonright to plead. In an action in this state to recover damages sustained in a foreign state in consequence of the alleged actionable negligence of the defendant in operating an automobile in said foreign state, plaintiff has no right to plead the procedural statutes and rules of law of said foreign state. For example, those pertaining:

1. To what matters would be presumptive evidence of negligence.

2. To the burden of proof in the trial of the action.

3. To the right of plaintiff to submit his action on different theories of the evidence.

Reason: All said matters are purely procedural.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617

Harmless striking of duplicate count. The striking by the court of one of several counts of a petition must be deemed quite harmless when the matter stricken is substantially repeated in an unstricken count.

McGlothlen v Mills, 221-204; 265 NW 117

Harmless striking of material allegation. No injury results from striking a material allegation from a pleading when the record shows that in the trial the matter stricken was treated as at issue, was duly tried out, and was properly submitted to the jury.

Rudd v Jackson, 203-661; 213 NW 428

Immaterial allegations. On the issue whether plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for a personal injury because of an alleged negligent act, allegations (1) that parties other than plaintiff were injured, and (2) that defendant carried indemnity insurance, are wholly immaterial, and subject to a motion to strike.

Seleine v Wisner, 200-1389; 206 NW 130

Immaterial matter. Immaterial matters are properly stricken from a pleading.

Thomas v Disbrow, 208-873; 224 NW 36; 30 NCCA 672

Improper motion to strike and judgment on pleadings. A motion to strike an answer and for judgment on the pleadings manifestly cannot be properly sustained when the answer, both by general and specific denials, puts in issue the very gist of plaintiff's cause of action.

Ind. Sch. Dist. v Sch. Dist., 216-1013; 250 NW 192

Improper rebuttal evidence—motion to strike necessary for review. If the answer of a witness does not properly constitute rebuttal evidence, it should be attacked by a motion to strike, and the court commits no reversible error in permitting it to stand in the absence of objection.

Churchill v Briggs, 225-1187; 282 NW 280

Irrelevant matter. In an action to set aside decrees canceling certain assessments for paving, because of failure to substantially perform the contract, a cross-petition repleading the formerly sustained plea of "failure substantially to perform the contract" should be stricken, on motion; because, if the decrees were valid, such repleaded matter effected nothing, and if the decrees were invalid, the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the plea, as the time within which to present such a plea had expired.

Western Corp. v City, 203-1324; 214 NW 687

Irrelevant and immaterial matter. In an action for breach of a written contract to sell all fine coal screenings "produced" during a stated time, a pleading that the parties mutually understood that the contract required the seller "to screen all the coal mined during the term" of the contract is irrelevant and immaterial, and properly stricken on motion (1) even tho the contract specifies what shall be deemed "screenings", and (2) even tho such pleading is sought to be aided by a plea of estoppel and custom.

Iowa Co. v Coal Co., 204-202; 215 NW 229

Irrelevant matter on foreclosure. An allegation by a mortgagor in mortgage foreclosure that he had sold the property to one who had not been brought into the foreclosure, and was holding the property as the tenant of said grantee, is irrelevant to any issue in the foreclosure, and is properly stricken on motion.

Kaeser v Manderschied, 203-773; 211 NW 379

Irrelevant and redundant matter.

Iowa Co. v Coal Co., 204-202; 215 NW 229

Joinder—city and benefited property owners. There is no misjoinder of parties or causes of action, where a city in its own behalf and in behalf of the parties beneficially interested brings an action against a contractor, combining therein both a claim for damages for defective pavement and a claim for the cost of "coring" to determine the thickness, since the basis for the latter claim was found in the contract. A motion to strike is properly overruled.

Sioux City v Krage, 225-1154; 281 NW 828

Matter judicially held insufficient. A plaintiff has no right to re-plead a count which has been judicially and finally held to present no cause of action even tho he combines said condemned count with another count. It follows that said last count is properly stricken insofar as it embraces said formerly adjudicated count.

Arthaud v Griffin, 212-646; 235 NW 66

Motions—as pruner for nondefensive matter. Nondefensive allegations in answers are properly stricken on motion.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Motions—mending hold. Answer reviewed in an action for recovery of double benefits on a life insurance policy, and held not strikeable on motion on the alleged ground that defendant was thereby changing his defensive position after action had been brought on the policy.

Wenger v Assur. Soc., 222-1269; 271 NW 220

Motions—striking immaterial allegations. When neither material nor asserted as the truth, allegations in a pleading may be stricken on motion.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

Overruled motion to strike—suffering final judgment. Where a motion to strike which is not the equivalent of a demurrer is overruled, the defeated party is under no duty to suffer final judgment as a condition precedent to an appeal—assuming a right of appeal exists.

Dorman v Credit Co., 213-1016; 241 NW 436

Scope of motion. A motion to strike a pleaded cause of action from two of three existing, specified, and separate pleadings by the same party does not embrace the striking of the cause of action from the third pleading.

Matthews v Quaintance, 200-736; 205 NW 361

Unallowable motion to strike. A second motion to strike matter from the same unamended petition is unallowable.

Conner v Henry, 205-95; 215 NW 506

Nonappealable order—dismissal sua sponte. On an attempted appeal from an order which the appellate court has no jurisdiction to review (e. g., an order striking portions of an answer) the court will dismiss sua sponte, even tho the opposing party does not move to dismiss.

Joslin v Bank, 213-107; 238 NW 715

Nonappealable ruling. An order overruling a motion to strike alleged immaterial or redundant allegations, or to strike matters which do not involve the merits of the case, is not appealable.

Morrison v Clinic, 204-54; 214 NW 705

Nonstrikeable matter. An allegation to cancel the obligations on notes joined with an allegation to cancel the mortgage securing the notes, and to quiet plaintiff's title to the land, is not strikeable. (So held where the controversy was as to the proper venue.)

Eckhardt v Bankers Trust Co., 218-983; 252 NW 373

Order striking portion of answer. An order striking part of an answer is not appealable when defendant fails to stand upon his pleading or to allow final judgment to be entered against him. In other words, he may not maintain an appeal and at the same time maintain his right in the trial court to amend.

Joslin v Bank, 213-107; 238 NW 715

Private drainage—construction under contract. On the issue whether a dominant estate holder may maintain a tile drainage system on his land, and by means thereof discharge waters on the land of a servient estate holder, a plea should not be stricken which asserts, in substance, that the tile system in question was constructed at large cost under an agreement with the former owner of the servient estate, and was open, visible, and notorious to all subsequent purchasers of the latter estate.

Salinger v Winthouser, 200-755; 205 NW 309

Redundant matter. In an action for breach of a written contract to sell all fine coal screenings "produced" during a stated time, a pleading that the parties mutually understood that the contract required the delivery of all fine screenings "produced * * * during the term of said contract" is redundant and properly stricken on motion.

Iowa Co. v Coal Co., 204-202; 215 NW 229

Redundant matter strikeable on motion. Repetitious pleadings are properly stricken on motion.

Flood v Bank, 220-935; 263 NW 321

Redundant pleadings. In an action on a written contract, that part of the pleadings which alleges the mutual understanding of the parties as to the requirements of the contract is properly stricken when such requirements appear on the face of the contract.

Iowa Co. v Coal Co., 204-202; 215 NW 229

Refusal to strike. The refusal to strike a count confined to general allegations of negligence is of no consequence when the specific allegations of the remaining count simply elaborated the general allegations.

Tissue v Durin, 216-709; 246 NW 806

Repeating bad pleading—improper striking in toto. Error results from striking in toto an amended and substituted petition in equity on the sole ground that said pleading is but a repetition of a former petition which had been held bad on equitable demurrer (motion to dismiss), when said amended and substituted petition,—while in part a repetition of said former bad pleading,—alleges an entirely new fact basis for recovery and a prayer in harmony therewith.

Birk v Jones County, 221-794; 266 NW 553

Service by publication—frivolous objection to affidavit. Argument that an affidavit of publication of original notice having been signed by the "foreman" of the newspaper did not constitute an affidavit by "the publisher or his foreman" in compliance with the statute is too hypercritical and frivolous to be noticed on appeal.

Hanson v Hanson, 226-423; 284 NW 141

Stay of proceedings—discretion of court. The matter of granting a stay pending appeal from an order overruling a motion to strike is one resting largely in the sound discretion of the trial court.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

Striking allegation (?) or withdrawal of issue (?). It is not proper practice, at the close of all the evidence, to move to strike from the petition unsupported or legally insufficient allegations of negligence. The proper practice is to move to withdraw such issues from the jury.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Striking counterclaim — effect. An order striking a counterclaim in toto necessarily strikes the prayer for recovery on the counterclaim.

Davis v Robinson, 200-840; 205 NW 520

Striking cross-petition. An order in foreclosure proceedings striking a defendant's cross-petition from the files is not appealable when defendant's answer, which remained on file, properly pleaded and prayed for the sole and identical relief pleaded and prayed for in said cross-petition.

Yeomen v Ressler, 216-983; 250 NW 169

Striking definitely pleaded defense. Definitely pleaded defensive matter should not, manifestly, be stricken from an answer.

Meredith v Miller, 209-849; 228 NW 14

Striking duplicate matter. Striking one count of a petition, on the mistaken assumption that it is but a repetition of a remaining count, is necessarily erroneous.

Lamp v Williams, 222-298; 268 NW 543

Striking irrelevant and redundant matter. Where plaintiff involves in one action (1) demands, as a taxpayer, against a county, and (2) demands against reorganized banks as a depositor thereof, the court commits no error in striking, after the county has been dismissed as a party, all plaintiff's allegation relative to his status as a taxpayer.

Pugh v Polk Co., 220-794; 263 NW 315

Striking legally unprovable allegation. Legally unprovable allegations in pleadings are properly stricken on motion. So held where, in an action at law to recover the amount due on a written lease, defendant, while admitting the due execution by him of the written lease, pleaded a prior oral lease—contradictory of the written lease—as containing the correct terms of the leasing.

Jacobsen v Moss, 221-1342; 268 NW 162

Superfluous denials. A defendant who has denied generally and specifically may not complain that additional affirmative allegations of fact and of argument in emphasis of his denials are stricken from his answer.

Rudd v Jackson, 203-661; 213 NW 428

Unallowable repetition. The filing of a petition once held insufficient is properly reached by a plea to the jurisdiction, or by a motion to strike, treated as such plea.

Swartzendruber v Polke, 205-382; 218 NW 62

Using wrong side of road. An allegation that defendant's car at the time of a collision was "over the center of the pavement, and over on plaintiff's side of the pavement" may be very material and not subject to a motion to strike.

Harriman v Roberts, 211-1372; 235 NW 751

Waiver of right to ruling. Plaintiff waives his right to a ruling on his motion to strike portions of the answer before ruling is made on defendant's motion for a directed verdict, when plaintiff at the close of the trial acquiesces in the action of the court in considering both motions at the same time.

Ankeney v Brenton, 214-357; 238 NW 71

11198 Statute—how pleaded.

Foreign procedural statutes—nonright to plead. In an action in this state to recover damages sustained in a foreign state in consequence of the alleged actionable negligence of the defendant in operating an automobile in said foreign state, plaintiff has no right to plead the procedural statutes and rules of law of said foreign state. For example, those pertaining:

1. To what matters would be presumptive evidence of negligence.

2. To the burden of proof in the trial of the action.

3. To the right of plaintiff to submit his action on different theories of the evidence.

Reason: All said matters are purely procedural.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617

Foreign remedial statutes—right to plead. In an action in this state to recover damages sustained in a foreign state in consequence of the alleged actionable negligence of defendant in operating an automobile in said foreign state, plaintiff may plead those statutes and rules of law of said foreign state from which actionable negligence, under the facts of the case, are deducible, e. g., those (1) which declare the degree of care required of defendant in such operation in said foreign state, and (2) the nature and degree of plaintiff's contributory negligence which will bar his action, said pleaded statutes and laws being of the very essence of plaintiff's cause of action, and not contrary to the public policy of this state, even tho they exact a greater degree of care than would be exacted by the law of this state had the injury occurred in this state.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617

11199 Inconsistent defenses—verification.ANALYSIS

- I INCONSISTENT DEFENSES IN GENERAL
- II "DENIAL" AND "CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE" AS INCONSISTENT DEFENSES
- III INCONSISTENT ATTITUDE

I INCONSISTENT DEFENSES IN GENERAL

Contradicting one's own pleading. A pleader is not estopped from pleading a state of facts which is absolutely contrary to his pleaded state of facts in a former pleading in the same court and in the same trial.

First N. Bk. v Frank, 203-364; 212 NW 705

Inconsistent defenses—abandonment—effect. The abandonment of certain defensive issues and the substitution of another issue in lieu thereof may not be deemed the pleading of inconsistent defenses.

Schaffer v Acklin, 205-567; 218 NW 286

Inconsistent theories of recovery. When a plaintiff can, as a matter of law, avail himself of a contract provision only on the supported theory that defendant has performed the contract, it is baldly manifest that plaintiff cannot recover under said provision when his entire action rests on the asserted theory that defendant has not performed the contract.

Andrew v Bank & Trust Co., 219-921; 258 NW 911

Nonstatutory verification fatal. In an action upon a promissory note, where defendant's answer contained two inconsistent defenses in separate counts, the answer, being verified on defendant's "knowledge, information and belief", was properly stricken on motion, where the statute, in such cases, provided the verification must allege that "the party believes one or the other to be true but cannot determine which".

Stern Finance Co. v Bleifuss, 226-665; 284 NW 460

Use of pleadings for impeaching purposes. Pleadings and amendments thereto which reveal changes and enlargements of the amount sued for may be used for impeaching purposes, and the court may so instruct.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

II "DENIAL" AND "CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE" AS INCONSISTENT DEFENSES

Denial of contract, and payment. A defendant may very properly plead in denial of the contract of employment alleged by plaintiff, and payment of the obligation created by such alleged contract.

Baker v Davis, 212-1249; 235 NW 749

Denial precludes demurrer. An answer which pleads a denial of the execution of the note sued on is not demurrable, even though, in an evident attempt to plead inconsistent defenses, the answer contains a colorable confession of such execution.

Seibel v Olson Bros., 202-711; 210 NW 925

Necessity for separate counts. A general denial and a plea of settlement of plaintiff's cause of action embraced in one count or division of an answer render inadmissible evidence in support of the general denial, because, when both defenses are pleaded in the same count or division, the general denial is nullified by the plea of settlement.

Miller v Johnson, 205-786; 218 NW 472

New matter and general denial in single division. Where new defensive matter and a general denial are pleaded in a single division answer, the admission implied of the cause of action must control; however, an answer in fact separating its general denial and other matters into numbered parts, altho lacking the word "division" before each numeral, is sufficiently divided to avoid the effect of the foregoing rule.

Keshlear v Banner, 225-471; 280 NW 631

III INCONSISTENT ATTITUDE

Estoppel. Pleadings reviewed, and held to evince no inconsistent attitude.

Webber v King, 205-612; 218 NW 282

11201 What deemed admitted.ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II DENIAL OF FACT ALLEGATIONS
- III DENIALS IN LAW
- IV ESTOPPEL TO DENY ISSUE
- V ADMISSIONS

Waiver of law denial. See under §11158, Vol I When reply necessary. See under §11156

I IN GENERAL

Establishing immaterial reply. An answer which pleads affirmative defenses and a reply which pleads adjudication of such alleged affirmative defenses both become quite immaterial when defendant offers no evidence in support of his answer, but defendant has no basis for complaint if the court finds that the allegations of the reply have been established, and renders judgment for plaintiff "under the whole record".

Hiller v Felton, 208-291; 225 NW 452

II DENIAL OF FACT ALLEGATIONS

Unnecessary assumption of burden. A plaintiff may assume the burden of showing that the signature to an instrument, defensively pleaded against him by the defendant, is not genuine, even tho he might have availed himself of a statutorily implied denial of the answer, or might have definitely cast the burden as to genuineness upon the defendant by a denial under oath. And, if he successfully establishes the aforesaid negative, he will be accorded the same protection as tho the defendant had failed to establish the affirmative.

McFerren v Bank, 214-198; 238 NW 914

III DENIALS IN LAW

Existence of lease—conclusiveness on pleader. A litigant who both concedes and alleges in his pleadings that the adverse party is in possession of premises under a lease is necessarily bound thereby.

Metropolitan v Andrews, 215-1049; 247 NW 551

When reply not necessary. In an action by a guardian of a minor on a certificate of deposit issued to the minor by the defendant bank, an answer alleging that the minor, in the re-organization of the bank, waived a named portion of the deposit is denied by operation of law.

McFerren v Bank, 214-198; 238 NW 914

IV ESTOPPEL TO DENY ISSUE

Ex parte allowance of fees. Tho unsupported by affidavits, every material allegation in a verified motion attacking an ex parte order allowing executor's and attorney's fees for extraordinary services will, in the absence of attack thereon or resistance thereto, be taken as true.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

V ADMISSIONS

General denial coupled with inferential admission. In an action on a promissory note, an answer which contains a general denial is not rendered demurrable by an answering statement that "defendant admits he signed a note which he assumes is the one in controversy, but he demands its production and proof at the trial herein".

Home Bank v Kelley, 205-514; 218 NW 288

Admissions showing weakness of contentions. Where the cashier of the plaintiff bank had entered into two similar credit transactions with the defendant bank in order to cover a shortage in accounts, in an action to recover the amount of the shortage, the plaintiff's brief stating that there had been a full accounting between the two banks except as to one of the two transactions, such statement recognized a weakness in the plaintiff's contentions, as the amount claimed was equal to the amount involved in only one of the transactions, and, when both had been accounted for in the same manner, the accounting for both had to be either proper or improper.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Admission of counsel in lieu of testimony. The admission of a material fact by counsel in the course of a trial and for the purpose thereof becomes a part of the record just as tho said fact had been established by testimony in the ordinary manner.

Azeltine v Lutterman, 218-675; 254 NW 854

Admissions of fact—conclusiveness. Specific admissions of fact made in the pleadings which join the issues which are being tried are binding on the party making them, and as to such admissions there can be no issue.

Wilson v Oxborrow, 220-1135; 264 NW 1

Inadvertent admission. An admission will be disregarded when, from the entire record, it clearly appears to have been inadvertent.

Campbell v Humphreys, 202-472; 210 NW 558

11202 Allegations as to value or damage.

Discussion. See 2 ILB 38—Liquidated damages—public contract

Alienation of affections—hearsay. Plaintiff in an action against the parents of her husband for damages for alienating the affections of her husband must not, under the guise of showing the state of mind of her husband toward her, be permitted to testify to a recital by her husband of what his parents had said to him about the plaintiff.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

Ambiguous contract—mutual interpretation. A co-operative marketing association, which, by written contract separately binds each member of the association to sell and deliver exclusively to the association the milk produced by the member—impliedly from day to day—or "pay as liquidated damages $25 for each and every such failure and breach of contract", will not be permitted to recover from a member said amount for each and every day there is a failure so to deliver, when such interpretation is absolutely contrary to the uniform, mutual interpretation theretofore placed on the contract during a long series of years. Especially is this true because otherwise the court would be compelled to construe the said damage clause as a penalty.

Fort Dodge Assn. v Ainsworth, 217-712; 251 NW 85

Breach of contract not to engage in business. In an action to recover damages consequent on the breach by defendant of a contract not to engage for a named time in a named business in a named place, a judgment is sustained by competent and adequate evidence as to the value of plaintiff's business immediately prior to the said breach by defendant, and a like showing of the effect which said breach of contract had on such value.

Eyerly v Smith, 210-1056; 231 NW 383

Credibility of expert witnesses. Instructions are proper which, in substance, direct the jury that they are to use their own judgment in considering evidence relative to values, and that such judgment need not be surrendered for that of the expert witnesses.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Fully reparable injury. If the injury to an article is fully reparable, then the measure of damages is the reasonable cost of the repairs—not the difference between the reasonable value of the article before and after the injury.

Looney v Parker, 210-85; 230 NW 570

Fraud—pleading and proof. Allegation and proof of fraud without any allegation and proof of damages leave plaintiff without a cause of action.

Vorpahl v Surety Co., 208-348; 223 NW 366

Future pain as incident to permanent injury. Even without a claim for damages for future pain and suffering, allegations and proof of permanent injuries from which future pain and suffering are reasonably certain to follow warrant the submission to the jury of this question.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Future pain and suffering—$4,000 not excessive. Record reviewed showing shrinkage of fractured vertebrae, and expectancy of continued pain, held, claim for future pain and suffering properly submitted and $4,000 verdict not excessive.

Smithson v Mommsen, 224-307; 276 NW 47

Hospital expenses—evidence—absence of—effect. In an action for personal injury, no recovery can be had for hospital expenses when there is no evidence of any kind bearing on the reasonableness of the charge—not even in the form of an itemized bill or that the bill had been paid.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Instructions—measure of damages—unsupported element. Instructions to the effect that a measure of damages would be the difference between the value of property as it actually was when a party received it, and its value had it been as represented, are manifestly erroneous when the record contains no testimony of the latter value.

Vanarsdol v Farlow, 200-495; 203 NW 794

Instructions—reasonable value—admissions from pleadings. In action to recover price of corn sold to elevator, an instruction injecting element of reasonable value was erroneous where the pleading alleged express agreement on price, and a further erroneous instruction stating what defendant's answer admitted, but omitting qualification in defendant's pleadings, was not cured by instruction referring to a substituted oral agreement.

Hartwig v Elev. Co., (NOR); 226 NW 116

Intemperate habits bearing on damages. In an action for damages consequent on wrongful death, evidence is admissible tending to show the intemperate habits of the deceased.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Judgment of jurors. It is proper for the court, irrespective of §11471-d1, C., '31 [§11471.1, C., '39], to instruct the jurors that they are not compelled to rely wholly on the opinions of witnesses as to the value of services, but that in connection with such opinions they may use and be guided by their own judgment in such matters.

In re Stencil, 215-1195; 248 NW 18

Landowner—-independent action. Pending eminent domain proceedings by and on behalf of a county relative to land for highway purposes preclude an independent action by the landowner for his damages.

Gibson v Union County, 208-314; 223 NW 111

Liability insurance—destruction of property—evidence of value—pleading. In motor carrier's action on liability insurance policy for loss of property destroyed by fire in freight terminal, plaintiff has burden of proof as to its "custody and control" of goods within policy provisions, also as to value thereof, and stipulation as to value of certain goods on which claims had been paid by insured does not admit value of other goods in absence of competent proof thereof.

American Ins. v Brady Co., 101 F 2d, 144

Liquidated damages (?) or penalty (?). An agreed sum as damages will be treated as "liquidated", even if not so labeled, when from all the attending facts and circumstances it is evident that the parties must have so intended.

Shockley v Davis Co., 200-1094; 205 NW 966

Liquidated damages and penalties—contract restraining competition. An employment contract between two physicians, which after setting forth several requirements of the employee, further provides for “liquidated damages” in case the employee independently practices in the county within 5 years after termination of the employment, may be construed, not as a contract for liquidated damages, but as a penalty.

McMurray v Faust, 224-50; 276 NW 95

Acceleration clause as imposing penalty. A mortgage provision empowering the mortgagee to declare the entire debt due and payable in case of nonpayment of an installment of principal, or of interest, taxes, etc., imposes no penalty on the mortgagor; likewise a provision fixing one rate of interest on unmatured sums, and a different and higher rate on matured and unpaid sums, provided the legal rate is not exceeded.

Federal Land Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

Measure of damages—instructions—assumption of fact. An instruction which is a technically incorrect statement of the measure of damages is harmless when, if a correct instruction had been given, the verdict of the jury must have been the same as found by the jury under the incorrect instruction.

Farmers Bank v Planters Elev., 200-434; 204 NW 298

Medical services. It is error to permit the recovery of expense for medical services necessitated by a personal injury when there is no evidence of the reasonable value of such services and no showing that the amount in question has been paid.

Melsha v Dillon, 214-1324; 243 NW 295

Noncontemplated damages. The purchaser of land may not recover damages because a belated delivery of the land to him prevented him from wrecking the building and using the salvage in other building operations, when the vendor was not apprised of such purpose of the purchaser when the sale was made.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Nonright of jurors to substitute their own knowledge. Jurors may use and employ their own knowledge as to values in determining the weight and effect of expert testimony as to such values, but they must not be instructed, in effect, that they may disregard such expert testimony and substitute their own knowledge as evidence.

State v Brown, 215-600; 246 NW 258

Opinion evidence. If a witness shows “some qualifications” to testify as to value, the court has a discretion to admit his testimony as to value.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Personalty—reparable and nonreparable injury. The measure of damages for injury to an article is:

1. For total destruction, the reasonable value at the time of destruction.

2. For a fully reparable injury, the reasonable cost of the repairs, plus the reasonable value of the use of the article during a reasonable time for repair.

3. For a partially reparable injury, the difference in the reasonable value of the article before and after the injury.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356; 26 NCCA 938

Laizure v Railway, 214-918; 241 NW 480

Bush v Railway, 216-788; 247 NW 645

Remittitur to cure error. The fact that plaintiff, a layman, in a personal injury action, is permitted to testify as to the reasonable value of the medical services rendered him by a physician may not be sufficient to justify a reversal; yet such fact may demand a remittitur as a condition to affirming the case.

Wood v Branning, 215-59; 244 NW 658

Sick and unhealthy animals. Evidence of the fair, reasonable value of sound, healthy, marketable hogs is not admissible to prove the value of admittedly unhealthy and sick hogs.

Tracy v Oil Co., 208-882; 226 NW 178

Speculative damages—unsupported opinions. Damages in the purchase of corporate stock under alleged false representations as to its earning power may not be predicated on the unsupported-by-fact opinion of a witness that, had the stock had the earning power represented, it would have been worth double its par value.

Otte v James, 200-1353; 206 NW 613

Threat of injury. In an action by a wife for damages for the alienation of the affections of her husband, an information filed by the plaintiff, charging the defendants with having threatened to injure her, is wholly irrelevant and incompetent.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

Unallowable conclusions. The mere conclusions of a plaintiff in an action for damages for alienating the affections of her husband as to what the defendants had done in procuring the enlistment of the husband in the army and thereby effecting a separation of plaintiff and her husband are wholly unallowable.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

Value—competency of experts. On the issue of the solvency of a bank, expert witnesses may be permitted to testify to the value of the bank's assets, even tho they do not possess, as to all items, the most comprehensive qualifications.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Value—presumption. The face value of negotiable instruments and other like or similar choses in action is presumptively the actual value.

Leonard v Sehman, 206-277; 220 NW 77

Value—violation of constitutional right. The constitutional right of an accused in a criminal case to be confronted by the witnesses against him is violated, in a criminal case wherein the value of various items of property is material, by an instruction to the effect that the jurors "have the right to use their own knowledge of values * * * in connection with the testimony as to values which have been given by the different witnesses".

State v Henderson, 217-402; 251 NW 640

11203 Account—bill of particulars.

Matter specially pleadable — "account stated". An "account stated" must be specially pleaded.

Schooler Motor Co. v Trust Co., 216-1147; 247 NW 628

11204 Account deemed true.

Accounts—admission in evidence. See under §11281

Burden of proof. In an action on an account, the plaintiff must necessarily fail when he wholly fails to establish either the reasonable value of the goods or the agreed price therefor, such being the issues in the case.

Cutino Co. v Weeks, 203-581; 213 NW 413

Conclusiveness. A bank depositor may not question the correctness of the periodical balancing and statement of his account by the bank when, for years, he has uniformly acquiesced in such accounting with full knowledge of an alleged error in favor of the bank.

First N. Bk. v Williamson, 205-925; 219 NW 32

11206 Conditions precedent.

Common law rule for recovery — modification. Principle reaffirmed that the common law rule that there can be no recovery on a written contract without a showing that it has been strictly performed has been modified in this state.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

When allegation and proof unnecessary. There need be no allegation or proof of the furnishing of proofs of loss under a policy which by its terms waives such proofs.

Glandon v Ins. Assn., 211-60; 232 NW 804

Impossible performance — when no excuse. A person is not legally excused from performing an act which he has unconditionally contracted to perform, but is prevented from performing because of the happening of a contingency of which he had knowledge when he contracted, and against which he might have protected himself.

Salinger v Ins. Corp., 217-560; 250 NW 13

Reasonable time. Principle reaffirmed that a clause in a contract of sale of real estate giving the vendor "whatever time he finds necessary" to perfect his title, must be construed as giving to the vendor a reasonable time only, in view of the circumstances.

Martinsen v Ins. Assn., 217-335; 251 NW 503

Time of making payments as condition precedent. The making of payments under a contract at the exact time specified therein will not be deemed a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action for breach of the contract by the payee, when the contract does not, expressly or impliedly, make the time of payment the essence of the contract.

Armstrong Pav. v Nielsen, 215-238; 245 NW 278

Well drilling contract performed — faulty pump. A well driller's guarantee to secure an ample supply of water has been fulfilled when the evidence in a mechanic's lien foreclosure fairly establishes that there is a constant head of 180 feet of water in the well, and the lack of ample water was due entirely to the improper pump line furnished by the owner.

Collins v Gard, 224-236; 275 NW 392

11207 Allegation of representative capacity.

Corporate or partnership capacity. An amendment during the trial, alleging partnership capacity of the defendant in lieu of a former allegation of corporate capacity, is proper.

Mau v Rice Bros., 216-864; 249 NW 206

General allegation and general denial. A general allegation of partnership capacity met by a general denial, justifies the court in treating the partnership as existing, especially when there is evidence of the existence of such partnership.

Jordison v Jordison, 215-938; 247 NW 491

Nonconclusion allegation. An allegation that plaintiffs are the duly and legally appointed and qualified trustees of a named trust estate is an all-sufficient allegation of representative capacity.

Windsor v Barnett, 201-1226; 207 NW 362

Partnership—husband and wife—liability. A transfer company operating under a trade name, headquartering at defendants' home, having trucks registered in wife's name, but with the state permit in the husband's name, and performing contracts in husband's name, are facts so indicating a partnership that court properly submitted automobile collision case as a joint liability of the husband and wife operating the transfer company.

Schalk v Smith, 224-904; 277 NW 303

Representative capacity. The conservator of a national bank may, in an action instituted by him, allege generally his official capacity and authority.

Ross v Long, 219-471; 258 NW 94

11208 Fact denial required.

"Condition precedent"—denial—effect. The statutory rule that a general allegation of performance of a "condition precedent" is not put in issue by a general denial, has no application to a general allegation of performance of a promise or agreement which was the consideration for the promise or agreement sued on. So held when plaintiff's promise was to discharge a certain promissory note, and in return the promisee agreed to make a will in favor of plaintiff.

In re Fetterman, 207-252; 222 NW 872

Denial of incorporation — insufficiency. A simple denial by a defendant that he has knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief whether plaintiff is a corporation presents no issue as to the incorporation of plaintiff.

Winterset Bk. v Iiams, 211-1226; 233 NW 749

11209 Matters specially pleaded.

ANALYSIS

I MATTERS SPECIALLY PLEADABLE, AND EXCEPTIONS

II MATTERS NOT SPECIALLY PLEADABLE

Matters provable under general denial. See under §11196

Statute of limitations. See under §11007

Waiver in life insurance cases. See under Ch 401, Note 1 (IX)

I MATTERS SPECIALLY PLEADABLE, AND EXCEPTIONS

Absence of required plea. A plea of fraud, accident or mistake is a condition precedent to the right to reform any written instrument.

Sargent v Ins. Co., 217-225; 251 NW 71

"Account stated". An "account stated" must be specially pleaded.

Schooler Motor v Trust Co., 216-1147; 247 NW 628

Adjudication. He who relies on a prior adjudication must plead it.

Andrew v Bank, 205-237; 216 NW 12

Admissions, general denial, and special defense—effect. An answer which consists (1) of certain admissions, (2) of a general denial of all other allegations, and (3) of a special defense which is in harmony with the denial, has the effect of requiring plaintiff to establish all his allegations not admitted.

Walters v Mutual Assn., 208-894; 224 NW 494

Alteration. A pleader who wishes to avoid the legal effect of an instrument, because of a material and unauthorized alteration therein, must plead that the alteration was made after delivery.

Hartwick v Hartwick, 217-758; 252 NW 502

Assumption of risk. The defense of "assumption of risk" must be specially pleaded in order to justify the submission of the issue to the jury.

Johnson v McVicker, 216-654; 247 NW 488

Authority—waiver. A principal who directs his agent to accept cash only, on making sales, waives any violation of his instructions by accepting notes of various purchasers, with full knowledge of the facts.

Donnelly v Walch, 203-32; 212 NW 310

Carriage of passengers—hand baggage—condition to liability. A carrier of passengers is not liable, as an insurer, for the loss of the hand baggage of the passenger unless said baggage is definitely surrendered into the exclusive possession and control of the carrier. If liability is predicated on negligence, such ground must be pleaded and, of course, proven. Evidence held to show no such surrender of custody.

Jensen v Inter. Corp., 221-513; 266 NW 9

Conditional sales—purchase without notice—effecting payment. Full payment for an article, bought in good faith, and for value and without notice of an existing conditional sales contract thereon, is effected by the act of the vendee in delivering to the vendor his negotiable check on actual funds in a foreign bank for the purchase price, and by the act of the vendor-payee in immediately negotiating the check to his bank as a general deposit, even tho the deposit slip in the latter transaction provided that the receiving bank took the check for collection only. It follows that the vendee is under no obligation to stop payment on the check issued by him because he learned of the conditional sale contract after said deposit and before his drawee-bank had paid the check.

General Motors v Whiteley, 217-998; 252 NW 779

Condonation. Condonation must be specifically pleaded.

Nelson v Nelson, 208-713; 225 NW 843

Assault and battery—self-defense—instructions. Where defendant voluntarily participated in a fight, not in his own defense, the court did not err in failing to instruct the jury on self-defense as, under such circumstances, self-defense was not available as a defense.

Schwaller v McFarland, 228- ; 291 NW 852

Consideration—absence of. Refusal to instruct as to the want of consideration in the signing of a promissory note is proper when defendant (1) causes plaintiff's plea of consideration to be stricken, and (2) does not himself plead want of consideration.

Conner v Henry, 205-95; 215 NW 506

Want of consideration. Want of consideration for a pledge of collateral securities must be alleged and proven by the pledgor.

Hiatt v Hamilton, 215-215; 243 NW 578

Discharge in bankruptcy. The discharge of a debt through bankruptcy proceedings must be specially pleaded.

Fierce v Fleming, 205-1281; 217 NW 806

Discharge in bankruptcy. A decree to the effect that a conveyance was fraudulent as to a judgment plaintiff is immune from subsequent attack on the ground that, when the decree was rendered, the judgment in question had been discharged in bankruptcy, such fact not having been pleaded in said action.

Reining v Nevison, 203-995; 213 NW 609

Rights, remedies, and discharge of bankrupt—failure to plead discharge—effect. A discharge in bankruptcy of a claim subsequently sued on avails nothing unless the discharge is pleaded as a defense; and this is true tho the plaintiff has knowledge of the discharge.

Harding v Quilan, 209-1190; 229 NW 672

Equitable estoppel. A good plea of estoppel requires a succinct fact basis, and an allegation that because of said facts the pleader has been misled or has detrimentally changed his position.

Fed. Bank v Sherburne, 213-612; 239 NW 778

Equitable estoppel—degree of proof required. The plea of a surety on a promissory note that he, under an arrangement with the principal maker, furnished a portion of the funds with which to make full payment of the note, but that the payee wrongfully applied said payment on another note owing by said maker, and that, therefore, said payee is estopped to maintain an action against him, must be supported by clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence that said payee had full knowledge of said arrangement before he made application of said payment.

Reason: Fundamentally, estoppel is not a favorite of the law.

Stookesberry v Burgher, 220-916; 262 NW 820

Equitable estoppel. Under an allegation that plaintiff was the owner of corporate stock when it was sold, no defense is presented by a general denial. If defendant claims that plaintiff is estopped to assert such ownership, then defendant must specially so plead.

Wilson v Lindhart, 216-825; 249 NW 218

Equitable relief—defense arising or discovered since judgment entered. The fact that a claim, when judgment was entered thereon, had been discharged in bankruptcy is not a "defense which has arisen or been discovered since the judgment was rendered," and therefore within the power of a court of equity to annul or modify.

Harding v Quilan, 209-1190; 229 NW 672

Estoppel. An estoppel is properly pleaded by setting forth the facts upon which the estoppel is based, even tho the term "estoppel" is not used.

Bibler v Bibler, 205-639; 216 NW 99

Fiduciary relation. The rule that a party who claims under an instrument executed by one to whom he occupies a fiduciary relation must establish the absolute good faith of the transaction has no application in the absence of plea and proof of such relation.

Steenhoek v Trust Co., 205-1379; 219 NW 492

General denial—chattel mortgage not admissible in replevin action. General denial puts in issue only facts pleaded in the petition. So, under a general denial to a replevin action for an automobile, evidence of a prior mortgage is properly excluded, when not pleaded, inasmuch as, under a general denial, the court is not called upon to decide which lien is first but only the question of whether plaintiff is entitled to possession.

General Motors v Koch, 225-897; 281 NW 728

Governmental employee—immunity—pleading.

I MATTERS SPECIALLY PLEADABLE, AND EXCEPTIONS—continued

Homestead exemption. A decree to the effect that a conveyance was fraudulent as to a judgment plaintiff and that plaintiff's judgment was a lien on the land is immune from subsequent attack on the ground that the land was, at the time of the conveyance, the homestead of the grantor and grantee, such fact not being pleaded in the action.

Reining v Nevison, 203-995; 213 NW 609

Nonhomestead character of land. A creditor who is seeking to set aside the deed of his debtor as fraudulent need not prove the non-homestead character of the land even tho he alleges such fact, because the homestead character of the land is an affirmative defense, pleadable and provable by the grantee.

Malcolm Bk. v Mehlin, 200-970; 205 NW 788

"Last clear chance" doctrine. The "last clear chance" doctrine cannot be presented to the jury in the absence of a plea of the ultimate facts which furnish a basis for such doctrine.

Steele v Brada, 213-708; 239 NW 538

See also Crowley v Railway, 65-658; 20 NW 67

"Last clear chance". The doctrine of the "last clear chance" is not available unless distinctly pleaded.

Nyswander v Gonser, 218-136; 253 NW 829; 36 NCCA 1

Merger of note in foreclosure decree. The fact that a promissory note sued on has been merged in a foreclosure decree in a foreign state on good personal service must be specifically pleaded.

Pfeffer v Corey, 211-203; 233 NW 126

Mistake in partnership settlement.

Tabler v Evans, 202-1386; 212 NW 161

Mending hold. Answer reviewed in an action for recovery of double benefits on a life insurance policy, and held not strikeable on motion on the alleged ground that defendant was thereby changing his defensive position after action had been brought on the policy.

Wenger v Assur. Soc. 222-1269; 271 NW 220

Negative condition. A plaintiff who seeks to enjoin the appropriation of county funds in aid of a farm bureau organization on the ground that the bureau was not organized to cooperate with stated governmental agencies, must specially plead and prove said fact.

Blume v Crawford Co., 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92 ALR 757

Payment. Principle reaffirmed that payment as a defense to a claim must be specially pleaded.

Olson v Roberts, 218-410; 255 NW 461

Payment. A plea of payment of a promissory note is an affirmative defense.

Columbia Coll. v Hart, 204-265; 213 NW 761

Payment—burden of proof. A plaintiff who alleges the nonpayment of the note and mortgage, which he is seeking to foreclose, must prove such nonpayment even tho defendant pleads payment.

Larson v Church, 213-930; 239 NW 921

Probate claim—payment specially pleaded—burden of proof—jury question. In probate action to establish claim for services rendered to decedent under an express agreement, where defendant specially pleaded a defense of payment as a part of a different contract of employment, the burden rested upon defendant to establish such different contract, including payment, and, if evidence justified, it was the duty of the court to submit the issue to the jury, but, where defendant's evidence is also consistent with and does not negative plaintiff's claim as to her express contract, it is admissible and proper to be considered by the jury as tending to show that the present claim was an afterthought, or that claimant had failed under suitable circumstances to advance the demand now relied upon, and as tending to support defendant's theory of the nature of her employment. However, such evidence failed to establish the specially pleaded defense of payment, and the court's failure to submit the question of payment to the jury was not erroneous.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Payment. A plaintiff suing for damages consequent on the feeding of a so-called hog remedy to hogs need not allege that the damages have not been paid.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557; 38 NCCA 80

Payment—application—right of debtor. A creditor who has come into the possession of funds belonging to his debtor, but originally without the consent of the debtor, express or implied, must, at the least, obey the direction of the debtor as to the particular debt upon which the said funds shall be applied.

First B. & T. Co. v Welch, 219-318; 258 NW 96

Application of payment—right of debtor to control. An insured in paying his premium dues to an officer authorized to receive them may direct that the money be applied on said dues, and arbitrarily enforce such direction.

Forrest v Camp, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Creditor's right to apply payment. Creditor holding more than one matured obligation against his debtor has the right to apply payments received as he sees fit, where the debtor gives no directions as to application.

Baker v Bank, (NOR); 219 NW 511

Authority to receive payment on promissory note. Authority or agency in a third party to receive payment of a promissory note is not shown by evidence:

1. That the note provided for payment at the office of said third party;
2. That the payee received payments of interest from said third party;
3. That the payee authorized said third party to grant an extension of the mortgage security;
4. That the payee wrote to said third party relative to the payment of the note, but long after said third party had collected the amount due thereon.

Moron v Tuttle, 211-584; 233 NW 691

Payment of note—burden of proof. Defendants, claiming payment on note which plaintiff denied, had burden to prove such payment by a preponderance of evidence, whether payment was made as partial payment on note or on property purchased, and question was for jury.

Sager v Skinner, (NOR); 229 NW 846

Payments and credits—burden of proof. The maker of a promissory note who claims prospective credits on the note, other than those shown by the record, must point out and establish such credits.

Aetna Bank v Hawks, 213-340; 239 NW 91

Evidence—burden of proof. A debtor has the burden to establish his plea that the creditor accepted a check in full payment of the debt in question.

Kruidenier Co. v Manhardt, 220-787; 263 NW 282

Check not necessarily payment. A check issued by an insurer for the amount of an adjusted loss and payable to a mortgagor and mortgagee, jointly, and never cashed because the mortgagor refused to indorse it, cannot be deemed a payment of the loss when there was no express or implied agreement to that effect—when the insurer-drawer first asserted such claim after the bank on which the check was drawn failed.

Union Ins. v Ins. Co., 216-762; 249 NW 653

Payment by check. Principle reaffirmed that the delivery of a check to a creditor does not constitute payment unless, in due course of time, the check is actually paid.

Schwab v Roberts, 220-958; 263 NW 19

Check not payment without agreement. The acceptance of a check by a creditor is not payment of a debt unless an understanding to that effect appears from the circumstances and conduct of the parties, as where a receipt stating "cash" was issued for an insurance premium check—such check later returned marked "insufficient funds".

Hockert v Ins. Co., 224-789; 276 NW 422

Contract for haulage—payment. A contract for hauling material at a stated price per load, with right in the hirer to designate the number of hours each day and the number of days each week on which the work should be done, does not embrace a right of recovery for days on which there was no hauling to do. Especially is this true in view of repeated unexplained receipts "in full of account to date".

Peerboom v Minges, 201-706; 207 NW 753

Directed verdict—payment of rent—sufficiency of evidence. Direction of verdict in action to recover on rent note from tenant was erroneous when there was sufficient evidence of payment by tenant in turning over proceeds of crop to warrant submission of the case to jury.

McCann v McCann, (NOR); 226 NW 922

Employer paying doctor bills — negligent person still liable. Payment of an injured truck driver's doctor bills, by his employer, whether the motive be philanthropy or contract, constitutes a bounty from which a negligent defendant motorist can derive no benefit in reduction of his liability, inasmuch as he owes compensation for all damages as to which his negligence was the proximate cause.

Clark v Berry Co., 225-262; 230 NW 505

Long and unexplained delay in demanding payment. Substantive evidence of the payment of a claim may be found in the conduct of a plaintiff in failing for several years, and during the lifetime of the party obligated, to assert his claim, when the party obligated was financially able to pay, and when the circumstances were such as to fairly cause plaintiff to assert his claim if he had not been paid.

Baker v Davis, 212-1249; 235 NW 749

Nonpayment. Plaintiff must plead nonpayment in an action on contract when the gist of the action is a failure to pay according to the contract. Whether, in an action on contract, an unquestioned allegation that a specified sum is due from defendant is a sufficient plea of nonpayment, quaere.

Andrew v Boyd, 213-1277; 241 NW 423

Payment to authorized agent. The requirement of a certificate of insurance, that premium dues shall be paid to a named officer of the local camp, is not a limitation on the insured's right to pay to some other officer who has been authorized by the association to receive such dues.

Forrest v Camp, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Payment of wages not release of damages. A written release of all damages suffered by an injured party is fraudulent and void when it was in fact mutually intended as a receipt for wages only, and was signed by the injured party without negligence on his part; and the failure of the injured person, who was himself unable to read, to have such instrument read to him does not necessarily constitute negligence per se.

Farwark v Railway, 202-1229; 211 NW 875; 26 NCCA 231, 31 NCCA 759, 4 NCCA(NS) 98, 197

Payment with knowledge of facts. Principle reaffirmed that one who voluntarily pays a disputed claim with full knowledge of the facts may not recover the sum so paid.

Meyer v Gotsdiner, 208-677; 226 NW 38

Presumption of payment. In an action on a claim which calls for payments in a particular manner, a presumption of payment in full will be indulged when the credits set up in the pleadings equal the full amount of said claim, even tho other separate causes of action are joined with the first claim.

Smith v Morrison, 203-245; 212 NW 567

Partnership checks not showing payment. In proving a claim against an estate, by showing an oral contract to pay for services extending over a period of many years, neither the lapse of time nor checks payable to claimant drawn by decedent during the fourteen years just preceding his death, when a partnership existed between them for those years, raises a presumption of payment in view of decedent's admission of the debt shortly before his death.

Gardner v Marquis, 224-458; 275 NW 493

Public official's receipt of money as issue—not affirmative defense. A city seeking to recover from its clerk water rents, allegedly received and unaccounted for, must go forward with the evidence and prove by a preponderance thereof, the receipt of such funds by the clerk,—the clerk's answer, denying receipt of such funds, and asserting that all money received was accounted for. Such answer is not an affirmative defense requiring defendant to prove payment, but raises the receipt of funds as a controverted fact or issue submissible to a jury.

Carroll, City of, v Arts, 225-487; 280 NW 869

Public utility—justifiable refusal to furnish product. A public utility company is within its rights in refusing to furnish its product—electric energy—to one who fails to pay his current bill for such product, and it is not sufficient that the customer tenders payment for future service.

Bailey v Power Co., 209-631; 228 NW 644

Recovery of payments—rule—exception as to officer. Where a sheriff not knowing that a statute has been repealed collects fees thereunder, he acts not under a mistake of fact but under a mistake of law, and such fees when paid to an officer of court, even though voluntarily, are recoverable, this being an exception to the general rule that voluntary payments under a mistake of law are not recoverable.

Morgan v Jasper County, 223-1044; 274 NW 310; 111 ALR 634

Recovery of payments—in general. Principle reaffirmed that a voluntary payment is not recoverable by the party making it.

Browning v Kanno, 202-465; 210 NW 596

Reply—necessity—plea of payment. In an action wherein plaintiff alleges that defendant is owing him a stated sum, and wherein defendant answers that he has not received proper credit for payments made by him, no reply is necessary in order to enable plaintiff to prove an agreement that certain payments were not to be applied on the account sued on.

Northern Lbr. Co. v Clausen, 201-701; 208 NW 72

Treating sight draft as paid and later denying payment. The drawer of a sight draft who sends it to a bank for collection, and knows that said bank has assumed to collect it, and has forwarded its own bank draft in payment of the collection, and who, after payment of the bank draft is refused because of the insolvency of the collecting bank, lays claim to said bank draft and establishes his claim thereon against the receiver, may not thereafter proceed against the receiver and the original drawee in the sight draft and obtain judgment against them on the pleaded theory that said drawee in the sight draft never in fact paid it,—paid it by an overdraft on the collecting bank,—and that the defendants must account to plaintiff for said overdraft.

Enterline v Andrew, 211-176; 231 NW 416

Wrongful receipt of payment of note—ratification. The payee of a promissory note does not ratify and confirm the act of a third person in wrongfully receiving payment of the note by subsequently receiving and accepting partial payments from said wrongdoer.

Moron v Tuttle, 211-584; 233 NW 691

Pleading fraud and recovering on proof of mistake. A plaintiff who pleads that he was induced to make certain payments because of fraudulent representations may not recover on proof that he made the payments because of a unilateral mistake on his own part.

Morrow v Downing, 210-1195; 232 NW 483

Pleading ministerial character of acts. A petition for damages against a municipality because of the wrongful acts of municipal agents and employees is demurrable unless the petition alleges such facts as show that the acts complained of were corporate or ministerial (the only acts for which the municipality would be liable), and not governmental.

Rowley v City, 203-1245; 212 NW 158; 53 ALR 375; 34 NCCA 464

Unpleaded defense—effect. The maker of a promissory note cannot be given the benefit of testimony tending to show that he signed the note under duress when he rests his defense on a distinctly different defense; and the court should so inform the jury.

Farmers Bank v DeWolf, 212-312; 233 NW 524

Unpleaded issue. An unpleaded claim that an oral contract existed for the transfer of a policy of insurance on one automobile to a subsequently acquired automobile amounts to nothing.

Chambers v Ins. Assn., 214-1353; 242 NW 30

Torts—special plea in re governmental function. The nonliability of a municipality, for the negligence of an employee in the performance of a governmental function, is a special defense and must be pleaded as such.

Groves v Webster City, 222-849; 270 NW 329

Transfer of property—invalidation of policy. In equitable action against mutual insurance association where defendant admitted that property in question was insured under a fire policy, defendant's contention that a certain transfer of the property had invalidated the policy, having not been pleaded as a special defense, was not in issue under the pleadings.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 288 NW 868

Trust relationship—pleading. The claim that the purchase price of a bank draft which was not paid constitutes a trust fund because the bank was insolvent at the time of the receipt of the money and the issuance of the draft, must, manifestly, be presented by definite plea and supported by sufficient proof.

Shifflett v Bank, 215-823; 246 NW 757

Waiver. "Waiver" must be specially pleaded.

Breza v Loan Soc., 200-507; 205 NW 206

Cole v Ins. Co., 201-979; 205 NW 3

Harrington v Feddersen, 208-564; 226 NW 110; 66 ALR 59

Schmid v Underwriters, 215-170; 244 NW 729

"Waiver" or "acquiescence". "Waiver" or "acquiescence" is properly pleaded by setting forth the facts showing such waiver or acquiescence, even tho the pleader inaccurately designates his plea as an "estoppel".

Schramm & S. v Shope, 200-760; 205 NW 350

Waiver and estoppel. A mortgagee who seeks to enforce the agreement of a grantee of the land to pay the mortgage debt need not plead that the grantee, by taking and retaining possession of the land, has waived, or is estopped to assert, any defect in the title to the land.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Waiver of right to divorce as consideration. The defense that a waiver by a wife of her asserted right to a divorce constitutes a valid consideration for a conveyance by the husband to the wife must be specifically pleaded.

Burgess v Stinson, 207-1; 222 NW 362

Waiver — voluntary litigated issue. Parties who voluntarily litigate the issue of waiver of the time element in a contract of sale are bound thereby even tho the written pleadings are silent as to waiver.

Andrew v Miller, 216-1378; 250 NW 711

II MATTERS NOT SPECIALLY PLEADABLE

Absence of full knowledge of facts, voluntary payment rule inapplicable. The rule that money voluntarily paid cannot be recovered does not apply where payor did not have full knowledge of all the facts, or where payment was compulsory, or was made under mistake of fact by payor under no legal obligation to make it, and especially where the mistake of fact was mutual.

New York Ins. v Talley, 72 F 2d, 715

Administratrix — voluntary payment for services to one not an attorney. Where defendant rendered services to administratrix, who was also an heir, as an intermediary between her and her attorney in administering the estate, held that she could not recover payment to defendant, made voluntarily and with full knowledge of the facts.

Hartnett v Van Alstine, (NOR); 213 NW 595

Benefits accepted under unconstitutional statute. No objection could be made to the constitutionality of a law extending the period of redemption after mortgage foreclosures by parties who accepted benefits under a court order extending the period and appointing a receiver whose acts benefited both parties.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 239 NW 16

Ex-judge's affidavit—no part of record. A judge's affidavit made after termination of his office, and three months after perfection of the appeal, is no part of the record and cannot be considered against the appellant as a basis for an alleged waiver.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Government employee's automobile collision—immunity as a defense. In a damage action for injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, defendant's claim that he was a state employee performing a governmental function is a matter of defense not properly raised by special appearance.

II MATTERS NOT SPECIALLY PLEADABLE—concluded

Doherty v Edwards, 226-249; 284 NW 159

Last clear chance—amendment after reversal. The elements of the doctrine of "last clear chance" may be deemed as inherently attending an allegation which, in effect, charges defendant with proximate negligence up to the very time of the infliction of the injury, even tho said allegation carries no reference to the "last clear chance" or to the doctrine thereof. It follows that after trial and reversal thereof, such allegation may be amended and amplified by alleging facts which, if proven, will specifically present the issue of the "last clear chance".

Spaulding v Miller, 220-1107; 264 NW 8

Payment. Evidence of payment of an account is not admissible under a general denial.

Siegel Mar. v Billings, 203-190; 210 NW 749

Representation or warranty. In an action for the purchase price of a machine, an offset of damages consequent on the defective construction and inefficient operation of the machine cannot be allowed when defendant fails to allege any representations or warranties relative to said defects.

Baker v Ward, 217-581; 250 NW 109

Unpleaded defense—evidence. In an action on policy of fire insurance, evidence that the fire was of incendiary origin and that the property was, at the time of the fire, being used for an unlawful purpose, is inadmissible in the absence of a defensive plea to that effect.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

11210 Contributory negligence—burden—special exception—mitigation.

Contributory negligence generally. See under Ch 484, Note 1 (III)

Burden of proof. A definite instruction that plaintiff has the burden of proof to show that he was not guilty of any negligence contributing to his injury is in no degree overcome by later instructions wherein the court, with reference to contributory-fact issues, uses the expression "if you find"; in other words, such expression does not have the effect of impliedly placing the burden of proof as to contributory negligence on the defendant.

Dean v Koolish, 212-238; 234 NW 179

Contributory negligence—burden. An employee who voluntarily steps outside the zone of his specific employment and voluntarily engages in a work in which the employer is engaged, and is injured, must, in an action for damages, prove his own freedom from contributory negligence.

Tellier v Davenport, 203-1012; 213 NW 565

Contributory negligence plea. An instruction relative to a master's plea of assumption of risk by his servant will not be deemed to deprive the master of his plea of contributory negligence on the part of the servant when the latter element is correctly covered by a separate instruction.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229

Contributory negligence of servant—effect. In an action by an employee against his employer for damages consequent on the negligence of the employer, the contributory negligence of the employee may be pleaded by the employer in mitigation, only, of damages.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

Drowning—res ipsa loquitur nonapplicable. The mere fact a person drowns in a swimming pool does not of itself establish negligence on the part of the proprietor under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Exoneration of servant exonerates master. A master cannot be held liable for an injury solely on the ground of the negligence of his servant when the jury wholly exonerates the servant from any negligence.

Hall v Miller, 212-835; 235 NW 298

Jury question—rule. Generally, contributory negligence is peculiarly for the jury, the rule being that where the conduct of the plaintiff is such that fair-minded and reasonable men might honestly and sincerely arrive at a different conclusion, then the court should submit the question to the jury.

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Looking left at intersection. Principle reaffirmed that vehicle driver's failure to look to the left when entering highway intersection does not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Minor walking on wrong side of highway. In a law action for damages where it is shown that plaintiff's decedent, a 15-year-old boy, was violating statute requiring pedestrians to walk on the left side of a highway by walking along right side, about four or five feet from west side of highway, and failing to make observations as to oncoming traffic from the rear, while walking after dark on a street traversed by a through highway, held, he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825

Passengers—termination of relation. A passenger on a streetcar ceases to be such the moment he completes his step from the car into the street.

MacLearn v Utilities Co., 212-555; 234 NW 851

Specific reliance on res ipsa loquitur. A plaintiff who sues in tort and alleges generally (1) that defendant was guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of her injuries, and (2) that she relies on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, cannot be compelled, by motion for more specific statement, to state the particular acts of negligence of which she complains.

Harvey v Borg, 218-1228; 257 NW 190; 39 NCCA 139

Statutory effect. The court may very properly instruct the jury that a master must establish his plea of contributory negligence on the part of his servant by a preponderance of the evidence, and that such plea if so established is available to the master only in mitigation of damages.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229; 34 NCCA 67

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785; 34 NCCA 68

11211 Judicial notice.

Foreign statutes. See under §11312
Judicial notice of ordinances. See under §5735, Vol I

Ability to stop car. The court will take judicial notice of the fact that an automobile in good mechanical condition, with good brakes, and traveling at a speed not greater than 25 miles per hour on a highway which is in good condition, can be stopped in a less distance than 100 feet.

Attaching bills of lading to draft. Judicial notice will be taken of the custom of attaching bills of lading to drafts.

Dubuque Fruit Co. v Emerson & Co., 201-129; 206 NW 672

Case reinstated after dismissal. Where an action is dismissed by the clerk under district court rules, but the judge thereof, without notice to the defendant, reinstates the case on motion and showing that the clerk acted erroneously, and where an application to vacate the order of reinstatement is denied, supreme court could not on appeal assume that judge lacked jurisdiction to reinstate without notice to defendant, without the district court rules of practice being in evidence and before the appellate court.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

Change in mode of transportation. Court will take judicial notice of the changes in the mode of transportation occurring during the last preceding twenty-five years.

Harris v Railway, 224-1319; 278 NW 338

Judicial notice of conditions—effect. While the court should, in a proper case, in construing a statute, take judicial notice of the state-wide condition surrounding the subject matter covered by the statute, yet such condition will not warrant the court in overthrowing the clear and concise language of the statute.

Andrew v Bank, 214-204; 242 NW 80

Courts own records. The supreme court takes judicial notice of its own records in a particular case.

Farmers Bank v Miles, 206-766; 221 NW 449

Information and warrant—condemnation of gambling devices. In proceeding to condemn slot machines and punch boards as gambling devices, failure to introduce in evidence the information, search warrant and the property seized was not error where the defendant in his answer admitted seizure of the property and since information and warrant were a part of the case and court would take judicial notice of the files therein.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Depression—real estate values. Court will take judicial notice of the nation-wide depression and shrinkage in real estate values.

Bankers Life v Emmetsburg, 224-1287; 278 NW 311

In re Jeffrey, 225-316; 280 NW 536

Distance between cities, etc. The courts of this state may and do take judicial notice of the distance between cities in this state, and the direction of one from the other; also of the states which abut this state.

Foreign judicial proceedings. The judicial proceedings of the courts of a foreign state may not, of course, be given any effect except on due proof thereof.

Chi. RI Ry. v Lundquist, 206-499; 221 NW 228

Geographical locations. Courts will take judicial notice of the location of cities and towns.

State v Wagner, 207-224; 222 NW 407; 61 ALR 882

Harmless error. Error of the court in improperly taking judicial notice of the pendency of another action becomes quite harmless when the appellant demonstrates by his abstract of the record that said other action was actually pending.

Benjamin v Jackson, 207-581; 223 NW 383

Habits and instincts of chickens. Courts will take judicial notice of the habits and instincts of chickens under different surroundings, and under familiar or unfamiliar methods of care.

Location of farms and highways. Supreme court does not take judicial notice of the location of highways or farms.

State v Archibald, (NOR); 221 NW 814

Matters judicially noticed by supreme court. The supreme court takes judicial notice of matters of common knowledge.

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

Water between plastered and outer walls—deterioration of wood. It is a matter of common knowledge and one of which the court has a right to take judicial notice, that, when water is confined in a space as between the plastered and outer walls of a building where the air cannot circulate, many times the water will cause a deterioration of the lumber and sometimes cause rotting of the wood.

Horn v Ins. Co., 227-1045; 290 NW 8

Moratorium act—emergency must be temporary. An emergency, in order to justify legislation in contravention of the constitution on the theory of an exercise of the reserve police power, must be temporary or it cannot be called an emergency, but becomes an established status. In determining this question, the supreme court may take judicial notice of conditions existing at the time of enactment and whether or not they constitute an emergency.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Arp, 225-1331; 283 NW 441

Moratorium act—purpose. Tho moratorium act makes no distinction between individual and corporate debtors, supreme court may take judicial notice of fact that, Iowa being an agricultural state, moratorium acts were passed primarily for purpose of preserving farm and other homes of distressed debtors.

Massachusetts Ins. v Schenkberg et al. Co., 225-1148; 281 NW 825

Nondischargeable debts. State courts will take judicial notice that, under the federal bankruptcy statutes, a debt arising from the fraud of the debtor is not dischargeable in bankruptcy.

Hills Bank v Cress, 205-306; 218 NW 74

Registration plate on automobile—county of issuance. The court cannot, from the figures alone, take judicial notice that a registration number plate on an automobile was issued by the county treasurer of a certain county.

Putnam v Bussing, 221-871; 266 NW 559

Reversal of conviction. On an appeal from an order disbaring an attorney on the ground that he has been convicted of a felony, the appellate court will take judicial notice that said conviction has been reversed by said court subsequent to the entry of the order of disbarment.

State v Metcalfe, 204-123; 214 NW 874

Sale—deed—ownership of existing crop. On the issue whether the holder of a sheriff's deed was the owner of a crop of corn grown on the land, or whether the crop had matured, and therefore belonged to the tenant, the court will not take judicial notice that corn will mature on any particular date. The holding of the trial court on clearly competent and conflicting testimony is final.

Frum v Kueny, 201-327; 207 NW 372

Sale—good cause for continuing—economic emergency—governor's proclamation. Good cause for continuing a tax sale is shown by the governor's proclamation of the existence of a great economic emergency also recognized by the legislative and judicial branches of the government.

Freemyer v Taylor Co., 224-401; 275 NW 718

Starting vehicle in reverse gear. The court will take judicial notice of the fact that if the engine of a motor vehicle is started while the vehicle is in reverse gear, said vehicle will move backward. And no evidence is necessary to establish a fact of which the court takes judicial notice.

Laudner v James, 221-863; 266 NW 15

Statutory law. The courts of a state will take judicial notice of its statutory law.

Andrew v Indem. Co., 207-652; 223 NW 529

Tender of fare—judicial notice. A passenger failing to leave the train at his destination does not render himself subject to immediate ejection from the train because he fails to tender the fare to another destination. Judicial notice is taken of the fact that it is the duty of the conductor to demand the fare.

Vanderbeck v Railway, 210-230; 230 NW 390

Trademark signs displayed—common knowledge. In an action for injuries caused by alleged negligence of filling station operator, the fact that trademark signs of defendant oil company were displayed did not estop it from claiming that it was not the owner of filling station business and that operator was not employee of company, it being a matter of common knowledge that such signs are displayed throughout country by independent dealers.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Evidence of value. While court may take judicial notice of its own records in same case, this does not obviate necessity for proof of services and the reasonable value as to an attorney fee claim for extraordinary services to estate.

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

11216 Malice.

Exemplary damages. Exemplary damages are allowable for malicious assault and false imprisonment.

Schultz v Enlow, 201-1083; 205 NW 972

Exemplary damages—failure to submit—effect. Failure of the court to submit to the jury the question of exemplary damages is not error, even tho plaintiff's pleading was broad enough to embrace such damages, when the plaintiff neither claimed such damages in the pleading, nor requested the court to submit such issue.

Morrow v Scoville, 206-1134; 221 NW 802

Exemplary damages—purpose. Punishment of the defendant is one of the purposes in permitting an allowance of exemplary damages in a proper case; and it is proper for the court so to instruct the jury.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Hearsay evidence. Plaintiff in an action against the parents of her husband for damages for alienating the affections of her husband must not, under the guise of showing the state of mind of her husband toward her, be permitted to testify to a recital by her husband of what his parents had said to him about the plaintiff.

Paup v Paup, 203-215; 225 NW 251

Insufficient basis. Exemplary damages may not be allowed solely on the basis of the implication of malice which the law attaches to a libel per se.

Ballinger v Demo. Co., 207-576; 223 NW 375

Malice as essential basis. The submission of the question of exemplary damages without supporting evidence of malice is prejudicially erroneous.

Sokolowske v Wilson, 211-1112; 235 NW 80

Measure of damages. The measure of damages in an action commenced during the lifetime of an injured person is what will right the wrong done, including exemplary damages, which are still recoverable if he dies during the pendency of the action; but if commenced by the administrator after death, the measure is the reasonable present value of his life without recovery for pain and suffering or exemplary damages.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Nonexcessive verdict. A verdict for exemplary damages which is fairly in proportion to the actual damages will not be disturbed by the court.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Recovery permissive only. Reversible error results from instructing in substance and in effect that the jury is under obligation to return a verdict for exemplary damages in case it finds that plaintiff has suffered actual damages.

Boom v Boom, 206-70; 220 NW 17

11217 Bond—breaches of.

Allowance and payment of claims against estate—failure to file—when enforceable against heir. A claim arising under a bond wherein the surety binds "his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives", and arising after the death of said surety and the due settlement of his estate, is enforceable:

1. Against the property received by an heir, as such, from said ancestor-surety, and
2. Against the property passing from said ancestor and owned by said heir under conveyance for which he paid nothing, and
3. Against the heir, personally, for the value of the property so received if he has consumed it. And this is true even tho, necessarily, said claim was not filed against the estate of said surety.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Cross-complaint. In an action on the bonds of a public officer and his bondsmen to recover a shortage, one surety may not cross-petition against a party who he alleges wrongfully received the funds resulting in the shortage, said latter party not being a party to the bond sued on.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Liabilities on bonds—existing judgment. Under the general rule that a judgment against an administrator is conclusive against the surety on his bond, where a judgment against an administrator for misappropriation of funds stands unreversed, it is error to set aside judgment on a bond and give the surety a new trial, since such order would not ipso facto vitiate a former order fixing the administrator's liability.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Right to maintain immediate action. An action on a contractor's bond to repair a street may be maintained without allegation and proof that the city has made the repairs.

Charles City v Rasmussen, 210-841; 232 NW 137; 72 ALR 638

Single or dual cause of action. The obligee of a bond, who pleads solely for the recovery of the amount due him under the bond, pleads but a single cause of action, tho he prays for different remedies against different parties, or in part pleads for unallowable relief.

11218 Denial of genuineness of signature.

Change of venue—nonpermissible motion. In an action in the county in which a promissory note is specifically made payable, and against the apparent signers of the note, it is not permissible for a defendant to file a motion to transfer the action to the county of his residence on the ex parte showing that he never signed said note, or authorized or ratified, or confirmed any signing of said note in his name.

Greenland v Carter, 219-369; 258 NW 678

Conclusiveness of proof. The court may not say that the genuineness of a signature, duly put in issue, is conclusively established solely by expert opinion evidence of its genuineness, and thereby rightfully exclude the jury from passing upon the issue.

In re Richardson, 202-328; 208 NW 374

Consideration and signature. Plaintiff in an action on a promissory note which he has set forth by copy in his pleadings, may, on the trial, introduce the note in evidence and rest his case, it appearing that the purported maker of the note (defendant) has made no denial, under oath, of the genuineness of his signature; and this is true tho the defendant maker has pleaded want of consideration as a defense.

Booth v Johnston, 223-724; 273 NW 847

Denial by guardian.

Farmers Bank v Bank, 201-73; 204 NW 404

Denial of signature—avoidance. The denial under oath of the signature to a promissory note may be met by the plaintiff by proof (1) that the signature is genuine, or (2) that the defendant has ratified and adopted the signature as his own.

Old Line Ins. v Jones, 206-664; 221 NW 210

Denial of signature—effect. The statutory denial under oath of one's apparent signature to a promissory note, on which suit is commenced in the county in which the note is payable, furnishes no basis for a motion to transfer the action to the county of the residence of the mover.

Greenland v Carter, 219-369; 258 NW 678

Denial of signature overcome by certificate of acknowledgment. Tho a proper denial of the genuineness of the signature to an instrument casts the burden on the opposing litigant to prove the genuineness of such signature, yet, if the instrument is one which is legally acknowledgeable, and is duly acknowledged and properly introduced in evidence with the acknowledgment, the burden of proof henceforth is on the party causing the signature to be denied to overcome, by clear, satisfactory and convincing evidence, the very strong presumption generated by the certificate of acknowledgment, that the instrument was actually executed by the acknowledging party.

Northwestern Ins. v Blohm, 212-89; 234 NW 268

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to support finding that signatures to note and mortgage were genuine.

Rieper v Berner, 222-1399; 271 NW 519

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence that the signature to a mortgage is the genuine signature of the mortgagor, and that the mortgage is in the possession of the mortgagee is prima facie evidence of the due execution of the mortgage.

Citizens Bk. v Hamilton, 209-626; 227 NW 112

Admissions—evidence—sufficiency. The mere act of a wife in joining with her husband in the execution of a deed of the husband's property in payment of certain notes executed by the husband, cannot be deemed a recognition or admission by her of personal liability on the notes when she did not know that her name had been signed to the notes.

West Chester Bank v Dayton, 217-64; 250 NW 695

Admissibility when signature not denied. A promissory note, duly pleaded and incorporated in the pleading, by original or copy, is receivable in evidence without further proof,—unless the purported maker of the signature, under oath, properly denies said signature.

Strand v Halverson, 220-1276; 264 NW 266; 103 ALR 835

Burden to establish genuineness. Principle reaffirmed that plaintiff in foreclosure has the burden to establish the genuineness of the signatures to the mortgage and accompanying promissory notes when the genuineness of said signatures is specifically denied under oath by the purported maker. Evidence reviewed in detail and held that plaintiff had not successfully carried said burden.

Hagensick v Koch, 220-1055; 264 NW 13

Signing—evidence. In an action on a written guaranty which plaintiff introduces in evidence, the fact that plaintiff dismisses his action, without prejudice, as to one alleged signer, does not render said dismissed defendant incompetent to testify that he never signed said guaranty.

Rawleigh Co. v Moel, 215-843; 246 NW 782

Unnecessary assumption of burden—effect. A plaintiff may assume the burden of showing that the signature to an instrument, defensively pleaded against him by the defendant, is not genuine, even tho he might have availed himself of a statutorily implied denial of the answer, or might have definitely cast the burden as to genuineness upon the defendant by a denial under oath. And, if he successfully establishes the aforesaid negative, he will be accorded the same protection as tho the defendant had failed to establish the affirmative.

McFerren v Bank, 214-198; 238 NW 914

Forged signatures—expert testimony to overcome. While an acknowledgment by a notary is presumptively true and requires clear and convincing evidence to overcome it, yet by statute it is not conclusive, and the court acting as a jury may find, after reviewing the conflicting testimony of handwriting experts, properly received, that signatures to transfers and assignments of assets of an estate, attacked by an administrator de bonis non, were forgeries.

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

General denial. A denial of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to a signature constitutes a general denial of the genuineness of such signature.

Dean v Atkinson, 201-818; 208 NW 301

Impeaching signature but not acknowledgment. Even tho it appears that the purported signature of a wife to a promissory note and mortgage (admittedly executed by the husband on his own land) was affixed by someone other than the wife, yet if the mortgage carries a certificate of acknowledgment in due and proper form as required by law and reciting an acknowledgment by said wife of said mortgage as her voluntary act and deed, the wife must, in order to avoid the mortgage as to herself, overcome, by clear, satisfactory and convincing evidence, the facts affirmed in said certificate.

First Tr. JSL Bank v McNeff, 220-1225; 264 NW 105

Jury question. Where in an action on a promissory note the defendant in his answer denies under oath the genuineness of the signature, a jury question is generated by positive testimony of the payee that the purported maker did sign the note, together with expert testimony on handwriting tending to prove that the signature was genuine, met by equally positive testimony by the purported maker that he did not sign the note.

Seibel v Fisher, 213-388; 239 NW 34

Jury question. A jury question is presented on the issue of the genuineness of a signature denied under oath, (1) by admitted signatures as to the genuineness of which reasonable minds might differ, after comparison with the original; (2) by expert testimony of a not very persuasive nature that the signature was genuine; (3) by testimony tending to show that the party had recognized the indebtedness as her own, and had (impliedly at least) recognized the genuineness of her signature, but had belatedly denied it; and (4) by testimony tending to show that she had adopted the signature as hers, even tho she had not physically affixed it to the instrument.

McCull v Jordan, 200-961; 205 NW 838

Ratification and adoption of signature. Principle reaffirmed that a party may be bound by a signature which he has confirmed and adopted as his own, even tho he has not physically affixed it to the instrument.

McCull v Jordan, 200-961; 205 NW 838

Undenied signature—effect. The mere introduction in evidence of promissory notes sued on makes a prima facie right of recovery when the signatures to said notes are not denied under oath.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 204-322; 213 NW 798

Unimpeached and uncontradicted testimony. The positive and wholly uncontradicted testimony of an unimpeached and disinterested witness that he saw the purported maker of a promissory note sign it, plus the unqualified opinion of a competent and unimpeached witness to the effect that the signature to the note was genuine, justifies a directed verdict when the genuineness of the signature is the sole issue.

In re Work, 212-31; 233 NW 28

Unusual signature—allegation—sufficiency. An allegation, in an action on a promissory note that both defendants executed and delivered the note, followed by a copy of the note bearing the signature "H. G. & L. T. Greenland", sufficiently alleges the signature of "H. G. Greenland."

Greenland v Carter, 219-369; 258 NW 678

Unverified petition—written agreement. Where an unverified petition is filed in an action on a written agreement, the contents of which are challenged by general and specific denials under oath, plaintiff is not entitled to judgment on pleadings, even tho genuineness of signature is not properly challenged.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

11221 Supplemental pleading.

Deportation grounds—reviewed in habeas corpus. On an appeal from a denial of a writ of habeas corpus under deportation order, the question of sufficiency of evidence to support the order may be properly reviewed in a habeas corpus action, and where ground of deportation is fraud committed in Canada with no showing that crimes charged were criminal under the law of Canada, the order denying the writ was reversed with instructions to grant the writ, as neither a court nor an administrative body can take judicial notice of the laws of a foreign country. In an administrative proceeding there must be such procedure as to accord substantial justice and afford the parties a fair trial.

Smith v Hays, 10 F 2d, 145

Nonissue-changing amendment. If a defendant, by proper appearance to an action and pleading thereto, is in court when an amendment is filed to the petition, which amendment does not create a new cause of action, he is precluded from appearing specially to the petition as amended.

Johnston v Federal Land Bank, 226-496; 284 NW 393

Seeming illegality — explanatory amendment. In an action by private citizens to enjoin a municipality and its contractor from carrying out an alleged, illegal, written contract for the construction of a light and power plant, the defendants may be permitted by the court so to amend their answer as to plead, tho belatedly, that a provision in said contract relative to the manner of testing said plant when completed, and which provision was in material variance with the plans and specifications on which bids were received, was inadvertently inserted in said contract—that the actual agreed test was identical with that called for by said specifications, and that, since the commencement of the suit, the said defendants had entered into a supplemental contract in accordance with said plea.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Specific performance action. Where a plaintiff, after starting a specific performance action to require a federal land bank to complete a loan as agreed, loses the land by foreclosure because the money from the agreed loan is not available to pay off the outstanding mortgage—thereby damaging the plaintiff-landowner by the loss of his equity in the land—an amendment to the specific performance petition changing the relief sought and seeking damages ascertainable after institution of the original suit does not set up a new cause of action.

Johnston v Federal Land Bank, 226-496; 284 NW 393

Unnecessary amendment. In proceedings for the appointment of a guardian, the allegation of unsoundness of mind made when the petition is filed may be supported by testimony of unsoundness at the time of the trial, tho the proceedings be long protracted. It follows that the unnecessary allowance of an amendment alleging such subsequent unsoundness is quite harmless.

Anspach v Littler, 217-787; 253 NW 120

11222 Matter in abatement.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II PLEADING
- III ALLOWABLE PLEAS IN ABATEMENT
- IV NONALLOWABLE PLEAS IN ABATEMENT
- V JUDGMENT ON PLEA

I IN GENERAL

Abatement of authorized action. A court having ordered its receiver in partnership to begin action against the partners, in order to collect funds with which to pay creditors, has discretionary power, after such action has been commenced, and on a showing that the receiver has in his possession a very large amount of unliquidated partnership assets, to abate the action until such assets are liquidated.

Day v Power, 219-138; 257 NW 187

Nonabatement of action by receivership. The appointment of a receiver for an insolvent corporation does not abate an action by the corporation as a judgment creditor to set aside conveyances as fraudulent; and if the receiver be not substituted as plaintiff the action may be continued by the corporation in its corporate name.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 217-636; 251 NW 51

Duplicate actions—which abatable. While an action in partition, in which service of the original notice is incomplete in whole or in part, is deemed pending in the sense that said action constitutes a lis pendens from the time the clerk properly indexes it as a lis pendens, yet, until completed service of the original notice of said action is made, said action cannot be deemed “commenced” or “pending” in the sense that it bars another subsequently instituted action in partition between the same parties and involving the same real estate.

It follows that when duplicate actions in partition, involving the same parties and the same real estate, are brought, that action only is abatable in which said service was last completed.

Ohden v Abels, 221-544; 266 NW 24

Foreign corporations—dissolution—effect on pending actions. A duly rendered decree of dissolution of a foreign corporation, at the instance of the state under the laws of which said corporation was organized, is, in effect, an executed sentence of death; being such, said decree ipso facto works an abatement, (1) of an unadjudicated action in rem pending in this state against said dissolved corporation, and (2) of garnishment proceeding pending in connection with said action. Under such circumstances, the garnishee may properly move for and be granted an order of discharge.

Peoria Co. v Streator Co., 221-690; 266 NW 548

Jury question—conflict of evidence. On a plea in abatement in an action on a note which matures when a certain farm is sold, as "per contract" (which was oral), a fair conflict of testimony as to the terms of such contract and when such provision was inserted in the note necessarily presents a jury question.

Anderson v Foglesong, 201-481; 207 NW 562

Receivership—effect. An action for specific performance is not abated by the subsequent appointment of a receiver for the defendant.

Hawkeye Ins. v Trust Co., 210-284; 227 NW 637

II PLEADING

Delay in pleading. Defendant's right to plead in abatement is wholly lost when delayed until the plaintiff might legally have brought his action.

Larsen & Son v Ins. Co., 212-943; 237 NW 468

Necessity for plea. There can be no abatement or stay of an action until another action has been determined when there is no pleading requesting such abatement or stay.

Music v De Long, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

III ALLOWABLE PLEAS IN ABATEMENT

Extension to principal available to surety—abatement of action. An order of a court of bankruptcy granting, to a maker of a negotiable promissory note, an extension of time in which to make payment, is not personal to said maker only, but inures, under USC, title 11, §204, to the benefit of another maker of said note who in fact signed said note as surety only, but without so indicating on the face of the note; and said latter maker, when sued alone by the original payee, may, for the purpose of abating the action, establish his suretyship and consequent secondary liability.

Benson v Alleman, 220-731; 263 NW 305

Pendency of another action—evidence. Indefinite evidence of the pendency of an action by the defendant as an occupying claimant presents no obstacle to the entry of a decree quieting title in the plaintiff.

Korf v Howerton, 205-534; 218 NW 274

IV NONALLOWABLE PLEAS IN ABATEMENT

Abatement—other action pending. A motion or proceeding for the abatement of an action of forcible entry and detainer because an equitable action by movant is pending in the district court for relief consequent on the alleged fraud of plaintiff in the forcible detention action, is properly overruled.

Music v De Long, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

Dissolution and receivership. A foreign decree of dissolution of a corporation, and an order appointing a receiver to wind up its affairs, do not abate an action aided by attachment in this state, because the claim of the receiver of a foreign corporation to its property in this state will not be recognized as against the valid claims of resident attaching creditors.

Watts v Surety Co., 216-150; 248 NW 347

Want of demand. Replevin will not be abated for want of demand on defendants for possession prior to the institution of the action (1) when one defendant had incapacitated himself from complying with a demand, and (2) when the other defendant asserted unqualified title against the plaintiff.

Hart v Wood, 202-58; 209 NW 430

V JUDGMENT ON PLEA

Modification of judgment to show abatement only. A judgment presumptively in bar will be modified on appeal to show that it is in abatement only, when such is in fact the effect of the judgment.

Murphy v Berry, 200-974; 205 NW 777

11223 Waiver of matter in bar.

Pleadings in abatement—effect. Principle recognized that a party may not, after trial on matter of abatement, be permitted, in the same action, to answer or reply matter in bar.

Foster & Son v Bellows, 204-1052; 216 NW 956

11224 Subsequent defenses.

Seeming illegality—explanatory amendment. In an action by private citizens to enjoin a municipality and its contractor from carrying out an alleged, illegal, written contract for the construction of a light and power plant, the defendants may be permitted by the court so to amend their answer as to plead, tho belatedly, that a provision in said contract relative to the manner of testing said plant when completed, and which provision was in material variance with the plans and specifications on which bids were received, was inadvertently inserted in said contract—that the actual agreed test was identical with that called for by said specifications, and that, since the commencement of the suit, the said defendants had entered into a supplemental contract in accordance with said plea.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

11226 Consolidation of actions.

Law and equitable actions. Actions which seek one or more of the following purposes are properly consolidated:

1. Equitable actions for the appointment of a receiver for a corporation and for the closing up of its affairs.

2. Equitable actions by the state for the dissolution of the said corporation.

3. Equitable actions by a stockholder of the said corporation who has fully paid for his stock, for contribution from the other stockholders who have not fully paid for their stock, in order that losses may be equalized on the stockholders.

4. Equitable actions by the executor of a deceased stockholder against the receiver of the corporation for the cancellation of an alleged fraudulently induced stock subscription contract, and for the return of the money paid thereon, met by the receiver with a prayer for judgment for the amount due under the contract.

5. Law actions by the receiver of the said corporation or by the judgment creditors thereof, to recover of the stockholders the amount unpaid on their stock subscriptions.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Discretion of court. The court may be amply justified in refusing to incur and confuse the trial of a distinct issue in mortgage foreclosure with the trial of a cross-petition by one defendant against a co-defendant.

Cotten v Halverson, 201-636; 207 NW 795

Consolidation—pending actions only. A motion by plaintiff, whereby his independent separate action to set aside a dismissal and to reinstate the cause would be consolidated with the original action to recover accident insurance dismissed by such order, is properly overruled upon defendant's resistance thereto, since, under the statute, such motion can only be made at instance of defendant and then only as to pending actions.

McKee v National Assn., 225-1200; 282 NW 291

Motion to consolidate actions by plaintiffs. Two personal injury actions arising out of the same accident and brought against the same defendant cannot be consolidated on motion by the plaintiffs, for altho equity has the power to consolidate causes of action to avoid multiplicity of suits, the right to move for a consolidation of causes of action in law is by statute granted only to the defendant, and a plaintiff has no such right.

Brooks v Paulson, 227-1359; 291 NW 144

Implied consolidation. A stipulation by parties that a jury be waived in a law action, and that said action together with an equitable action involving the same general subject matter be tried by the court as an equitable matter, constitutes a consolidation of the actions tho no actual order of consolidation is entered.

Holman v Wahner, 221-1318; 268 NW 168

Probate—hostile petitions—refusal to consolidate. Possibly the hearing on different petitions for the probate of hostile wills might be consolidated and the validity of said wills tried out in one action, yet an order which refuses such consolidation is not erroneous when the rights of all parties are fully protected by the order.

In re Fitzgerald, 219-988; 259 NW 455

Premature consolidation of actions. The fact that an order for the consolidation of actions was entered prior to the time when the issues were fully made up, and without notice to some of the parties, will not affect the judgment subsequently entered, when the results obtained were the same as would have been obtained, had the order been made on notice and after the issues were fully made up.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Proper consolidation. Separate appeals to the district court in eminent domain proceedings relative to the same award are properly consolidated.

Genco v Mfg. Co., 203-1390; 214 NW 545

11228 Immaterial errors disregarded.

Harmless error. See under §11548

Erroneous but harmless evidence. Tho the cause of death of a deceased was a question for the jury to decide, yet permitting a physician to testify that death resulted from certain injuries must be deemed harmless when the cause of death never was in issue,—when the jury would necessarily have found in accordance with said testimony had it not been received.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Nonprejudicial instructions. An instruction to the effect that if the defendant failed to yield to another motorist one-half of the traveled way, the jury, "in the absence of justifiable excuse", might find the defendant negligent, cannot be deemed prejudicial to a defendant who established no excuse whatever.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Refusing cumulative evidence. Refusal to admit testimony, which at the best is merely cumulative, is not prejudicially erroneous.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

I IN GENERAL

Motion to strike motion. A motion to strike a motion is not proper practice.

Markworth v Bank, 212-954; 237 NW 471

Motion to strike motion not recognized. A motion to strike another motion is a procedure not recognized by our practice, but an order sustaining a motion to strike a pleading consisting of objections to a receiver's report and an application for a hearing on a claim was nothing more than an order overruling the objections and denying the application.

Headford et al. Co. v Associated Co., 224-1364; 278 NW 624

Motions—unallowable successive motions. It is not permissible for defendant to file separate, successive motions "of the same kind" to the same unamended petition. So held where defendant first filed a motion to strike portions of a petition and, being overruled, filed a motion for a more specific statement of said petition, it being held that said motions were "of the same kind" in that each motion had the same objective, to wit, the proper settling of the pleading for trial.

The proper and necessary procedure is to combine the subject matters of both motions into one motion.

Bookin v Utilities Co., 221-1336; 268 NW 50

Alleging note as receipt—sham defense—striking. Where a written instrument sued upon contains the legal elements of a negotiable promissory note, an allegation in an answer that such written instrument was a receipt shows on its face that such pleading is false and should be stricken on motion.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

Cost bond affidavit not a pleading. The statutory affidavit in support of a motion for cost bond is not a pleading.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

Franchise renewal statute. At the termination of a mutual telephone company franchise, stockholders voting against renewal of franchise may not maintain an action against the majority stockholders to require purchase of their stock by such stockholders voting in favor thereof, until after three years from date of voting, under §8365, C., '35, permitting such franchise renewal, if the majority stockholders voting renewal purchase the stock of those voting against renewal within three years from date of voting, and an action commenced within such three-year period, being premature, will be dismissed on motion.

Terrell v Ringgold Tel. Co., 225-994; 282 NW 702

Invalid defense not attacked by motion—defeating recovery. If matter pleaded as a defense is not challenged by motion or demurrer or otherwise, it will, if proven, defeat the plaintiff's action, tho had the question been properly raised the answer would have been held to present no defense.

I IN GENERAL—concluded

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Irregular practice. A plaintiff who permits his action to quiet title to lie dormant until the defendants are all dead is guilty of very irregular practice in his attempt to obtain a substitution of defendants by filing a purported amendment, not under the title of his pending action, but under a new title, in which the heirs of the deceased defendants are for the first time enumerated and named as the defendants, and under such title, moving for a substitution of defendants in the old action.

Benjamin v Jackson, 207-581; 223 NW 383

Motion to dismiss equitable action. There is no statutory authority for a motion to dismiss an equitable action at the close of plaintiff's testimony.

Appanoose Bureau v Board, 218-945; 256 NW 687

Nongermane matters. Motions must be dealt with as presented and not utilized for nongermane purposes.

In re Nairn, 215-920; 247 NW 220

Objections to executrix's report—conversion issue not misjoinder—motion to strike. Where an executrix after resigning files her reports, objections thereto asking that she report and account for certain alleged estate assets claimed by executrix as individual property do not misjoin in probate an action against executrix for conversion, and such objections are not subject to motion to strike.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Pleading verification requirements. Statutes requiring verification of pleadings, to be made by persons knowing facts, require the affidavit to state that affiant believed statements therein contained to be true, but such statutes relate to verification of pleadings, and not to affidavits generally in support of motions for special remedies, nor to cost bond affidavit.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

Poor practice—admitting evidence on promise to amend. In a law case, especially, it is poor practice to permit evidence, objected to as incompetent, to be admitted on the promise that amendments would later be filed to meet the proof. Such objections coming after the witness has answered should be followed by motions to strike.

Osceola v Gjellefeld Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Rulings on motions—correction—certiorari (?) or appeal (?). Certiorari will not lie to review rulings of the court on motions submitted to the court by the hostile litigants, the sole function of the writ being to annul illegal action and not to review mere errors. Appeal is the sole remedy for the correction of the latter.

Morrison v Patterson, 221-883; 267 NW 704

Unassailed answer or cross-petition, if proven, defeats plaintiff. Matter pleaded by defendant in an answer or cross-petition, if not assailed by motion or demurrer, will, if proven, defeat plaintiff's action, altho, had the question been raised, the answer would have been held to present no defense. Held, defendant had failed to prove his allegation.

Maloney v Rose, 224-1071; 277 NW 572

II FORM AND REQUISITES

Unallowable motion to strike. A second motion to strike matter from the same unamended petition is unallowable.

Conner v Henry, 205-95; 215 NW 506

Answer negating petition not subject to motion to strike. An answer which, in effect, is a negation of the allegations of the petition proof of which plaintiff must make in order to recover, is not subject to a motion to dismiss.

Clark Bros. v Anderson & Perry, 211-920; 234 NW 844

When appeal lies—overruled demurrer to answer. Where plaintiff, after answer, moved for judgment of dismissal, and also for judgment on the pleadings, held that, if it be permissible to treat the latter motion as a demurrer to the answer, yet an adverse ruling thereon was not appealable unless plaintiff elected to stand thereon.

Morrison v Clinic, 204-54; 214 NW 705

Elimination of irrelevant and redundant matter. Principle reaffirmed that irrelevant and redundant matter in a pleading must be eliminated by a motion to strike.

Iowa Co. v Coal Co., 204-202; 215 NW 229

Equitable action—motion to dismiss—scope of confession. A motion to dismiss, under our new equity practice (§11130, C., '24), confesses all facts which are properly and sufficiently pleaded in the pleading assailed, but not conclusions of law or conclusions of fact, unless the facts from which the conclusions of fact logically follow are set out.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Improper striking in toto. A count which contains both defensive and nondefensive matter must not be stricken in toto.

Cedar Rapids Co. v Sec. Co., 208-150; 225 NW 339

Judgment notwithstanding verdict. A motion for judgment non obstante veredicto is based wholly on a defective pleading, in that it omits to aver some material fact necessary to complete a cause of action or defense and the motion must clearly point out the omission.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Presentation and reservation of grounds of review—motion to strike—omnibus motion. A blanket motion to strike intermingled competent and incompetent testimony is improper, and will not be reviewed on appeal.

Koopman v Ins. Assn., 209-958; 229 NW 221

III PARTICULAR MOTIONS

Motion as proper remedy. A motion to set aside and vacate an order which is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court is proper.

Guisinger v Guisinger, 201-409; 205 NW 752

Motion to dismiss—definition. A motion to dismiss an equitable action is, in legal effect, an equitable demurrer.

Schwartzendruber v Polke, 205-382; 218 NW 62

Another action pending—necessity for plea. There can be no abatement or stay of an action until another action has been determined, when there is no pleading requesting such abatement or stay.

Music v DeLong, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

Application to vacate. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Competent allegations—striking in toto improper. A motion to strike an entire amended and substituted petition, being too broad, is properly overruled when such pleading, although replete with objectionable matters, nevertheless contains competent allegations necessary to afford the relief prayed for.

Skaien v Witwer Co., 224-391; 276 NW 623

New trial—discretion of court. A large discretion is lodged in the trial court in determining whether a new trial should be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, since the trial court has a much better opportunity for seeing and judging how the testimony given, and that afterward discovered, bears upon the issues, and for determining whether the facts offered are similar or dissimilar.

Larson v Meyer, 227-512; 288 NW 663

New trial—amendment after extended time for filing motion—when permitted. An amendment to a motion for a new trial may be filed after the statutory or extended time for filing the motion if it is germane to the original motion.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

Escheat proceeding—no appeal—dismissal. Where the state of Iowa in an estate proceeding files an application for the escheat to the state of the property in the estate and includes in its application extensive allegations dealing with the selection of a new administrator, a motion to strike those portions of the pleading dealing with the new administrator, when sustained, does not present an interlocutory order from which an appeal will lie, and, if taken, the appeal will be dismissed on motion.

In re Bannon, 225-839; 282 NW 287

Executor's and attorney's fees—proper attack by motion. While an estate is being administered, an ex parte order allowing executor's and attorney's fees for ordinary and extraordinary services is properly attacked by motion.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

General allegation of negligence—standing on motion. To preserve an objection that an allegation of negligence was too general and indefinite to constitute basis of cause of action, a defendant should stand on its motion to strike and for more specific statement. Failing in this and filing its answer, it waived any error of court in overruling motion. A cause of action should be sufficiently precise to enable the defendant to prepare his defense.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 785

Improper rebuttal evidence. If the answer of a witness does not properly constitute rebuttal evidence, it should be attacked by a motion to strike, and the court commits no reversible error in permitting it to stand in the absence of objection.

Churchill v Briggs, 225-1187; 282 NW 280

Improper striking in toto. A count which contains both defensive and nondefensive matter must not be stricken in toto.

Cedar Rapids Co. v Sec. Co., 208-150; 225 NW 339

Incapacity to sue—waiver. An objection to the capacity in which plaintiff sues must be interposed by defendant before he pleads to the merits.

Keeling v Priebe, 219-155; 257 NW 199

New trial—insufficient ground. Where a jury returned a verdict in favor of payee in an action on a note executed by a partnership wherein the defense of payment was pleaded and evidence was introduced to show a tender of payment by the partnership to payee, but with payee's consent the money was retained by one partner as a personal loan from payee to such partner, defendants' motion for new

III PARTICULAR MOTIONS—concluded trial based on newly discovered evidence consisting of other admissions at different times of the same facts presented at the trial was properly overruled, as such evidence of the same kind and to the same point was merely cumulative.

Larson v Meyer, 227-512; 288 NW 663

Judgment on pleadings — motion for — permissibility. The practice of entertaining motions for judgment on the pleadings will be recognized, on appeal, not as a matter of right in movant, but as a matter of mutual agreement between litigants.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Judgment on pleadings denied. Where an unverified petition is filed in action on a written agreement, the contents of which are challenged by general and specific denials under oath, plaintiff is not entitled to judgment on pleadings, even the genuineness of signature is not properly challenged.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

Motion in lieu of reply. A motion to strike an answering amendment which interposes the bar of the statute of limitation is not the proper procedure under which to plead facts which avoid the bar. Reply is necessary.

Lawrence v Melvin, 202-866; 211 NW 410

Motion to correct trial record. Any correction of the trial court record should be made by a motion to correct or expunge in the lower court as provided by statute, and not in the appellate court.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Motion to set aside by stranger to proceeding. The owner of land which has been levied upon and sold under execution as the property of the judgment defendant on the theory that the judgment became a lien on the land before said owner acquired the land may maintain a motion to set aside the sale on the ground that said judgment was not, and never had been, a lien on the land.

Dorsey v Bentzinger, 209-883; 226 NW 52

Motion to set aside decree. A motion to set aside a decree of divorce for fraud, in that plaintiff had not acquired a bona fide residence required by statute, is a proper procedure, but the burden of proof necessarily rests on the maker of the motion.

Girdey v Girdey, 213-1; 238 NW 432

Motion to strike defensive matter in probate—effect. A motion in probate to strike a plea in defense to a claim sought to be enforced by the executor admits the truth of all matters properly pleaded in the plea.

In re Carpenter, 210-553; 231 NW 376

Negligence—conclusion assignment—proper submission. Supported assignments of negligence are properly submitted to the jury, even tho as pleaded by plaintiff they are "the mere opinions and conclusions of plaintiff and not statements of fact," it appearing that defendant wholly failed to question the legal sufficiency of said assignments prior to filing answer—in fact so delayed until after the close of all the testimony in the case.

Engle v Ungles, 223-780; 273 NW 879

New trial. If a different result is not reasonably probable on account of newly discovered evidence, a new trial ought not be granted.

Larson v Meyer, 227-512; 288 NW 663

New trial not germane to non obstante verdicto. A motion for new trial is not germane to a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and cannot be considered if made after a lapse of five days from the verdict.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Overruling motion to strike after curative amendment. A motion to strike a pleading for a defect therein is properly overruled when the defect is cured by proper amendment before the motion is ruled on.

Cleophas v Walker, 211-122; 233 NW 257

Scope of motion. A motion to strike a pleaded cause of action from two of three existing, specified, and separate pleadings by the same party does not embrace the striking of the cause of action from the third pleading.

Matthews v Quaintance, 200-736; 205 NW 361

Striking objections in probate. A motion to strike objections to probate accounts on the grounds of misjoinder of actions is determinable only on the contents of the pleading attacked without aid of affidavits.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Subsequent errors harmless after refusal to direct verdict. Where the court should have directed a verdict for the defendant at the completion of testimony, subsequent errors on rulings or orders were not prejudicial and could not be relied on by the plaintiff as grounds for a new trial, after a verdict was rendered for the defendant.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

IV PARTIES

Death of party without substitution. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Insurer and mortgagee not necessary parties. In an automobile owner's damage action against a street railway, wherein defendant pleads a general denial and alleges that plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and wherein interrogatories attached to defendant's answer disclose that plaintiff's loss had been partly settled through insurance, and when defendant then alleges that a bank holds a mortgage on plaintiff's automobile, and moves the court to bring in the insurer and the mortgagee-bank as parties, such motion was properly overruled.

Caligiuri v Railway, 227-466; 288 NW 702

V NOTICE

Judgment—entry—unallowable modification.

The court, having overruled a motion (1) to strike an answer, and (2) for judgment nil dicit, has no right, later and after the term of court has expired, and while the cause is pending, to materially amend said ruling without pleadings, without hearing, and without notice to the defendant.

Taylor v Grimes Canning Corp., 218-1281; 257 NW 353

VI FILING AND ENTRY

Neglect to file bond within time ordered—effect. The nonwillful neglect to file a cost bond by the time ordered by the court will not justify a dismissal of the action when the bond is filed prior to the ruling on the motion to dismiss.

Arthaud v Griffin, 205-141; 217 NW 809

Motions—negligence—general and specific allegations—belated attack. Except in res ipsa loquitur cases a specific allegation will not waive a general allegation of negligence, which general allegation must be assailed by motion, if timely, before answer and without such motion is properly submitted to the jury if sustained by the evidence.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

Municipal court—extending time. The municipal court has jurisdiction to enter an order extending the time to file a motion for a new trial and exceptions to instructions and judgment non obstante veredicto. Such order is reviewable by appeal, not by certiorari.

Eller v Municipal Ct., 225-501; 281 NW 441

Withdrawal of pleading to file motion. There is no statutory authority to support common practice of withdrawing pleadings for purpose of filing a demurrer or motion, and such matter rests wholly within sound discretion of trial court.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

VII RESISTANCE

Motion to strike motion improper. Principle recognized that a motion to strike a motion is not proper practice.

Markworth v Bank, 212-954; 237 NW 471

VIII HEARING AND DETERMINATION

Action by teacher for compensation. In a teacher's action to recover compensation against a school district, where a taxpayer files a defensive petition of intervention after a demurrer to the answer had been sustained, but before defendant had made any election to stand on its answer, before any demand to make such election had been made, before default or judgment had been entered, or any demand therefor—the petition of intervention being unquestioned and raising an issue on the additional defensive matter—the court erred in sustaining a motion to strike the petition of intervention and entering judgment against the school district.

Schwartz v Con. Sch. Dist., 225-1272; 282 NW 754

Answer—res judicata plea—inapplicability—stricken on motion. In an action by citizens against the town council to enjoin the operation of a municipal electric plant, the trial court is correct in striking, on motion, that portion of defendant's answer which pleads res judicata, when it appears that a former action in the United States district court for the same purpose was by a private electric company in its individual capacity to enjoin the construction of the plant and that no judgment on the merits was rendered.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Ex parte allowance of fees—attack by motion. The unsupported by affidavits, every material allegation in a verified motion attacking an ex parte order allowing executor's and attorney's fees for extraordinary services will, in the absence of attack thereon or resistance thereto, be taken as true.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Joinder—city and benefited property owners. There is no misjoinder of parties or causes of action, where a city in its own behalf and in behalf of the parties beneficially interested brings an action against a contractor, combining therein both a claim for damages for defective pavement and a claim for the cost of "coring" to determine the thickness, since the basis for the latter claim was found in the contract. A motion to strike is properly overruled.

Sioux City v Krage, 225-1154; 281 NW 828

Motion to dismiss—grounds. If any of the grounds of a motion to dismiss petition for construction of a will are well-taken, it is not error to sustain such motion.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

VIII HEARING AND DETERMINATION—concluded

Motion to strike conclusions—overruling not ground for reversal. Supreme court will not assume original jurisdiction to determine a motion to strike not ruled on in the lower court; but, even tho it were overruled, a motion to strike allegations on the ground that they were in the nature of conclusions and not statements of fact would not warrant a reversal in the supreme court.

Albright v Winey, 226-222; 284 NW 86

Ruling on motion to strike—nonreviewable fact question. On appeal from an order overruling a motion to strike on ground that there was misjoinder of a principal corporation and its subsidiary, where question to be determined was whether the corporate entity of the subsidiary could be disregarded because it was so organized, controlled, and conducted as to make it a mere instrumentality of the principal corporation, which question being one of fact determinable only after a hearing of the evidence, the supreme court would not decide the matter on basis of the pleadings.

Wade v Broadcasting Co., 227-427; 288 NW 441

Motion sustained if any ground is good. When a motion to strike an application by an executor to have a clerk's approval of claims against an estate set aside was based on several grounds and when the granting of the motion was assailed as to only one ground, on an appeal, the supreme court was precluded from reversing the case since, if the motion was good on any of its grounds, the ruling below was correct.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 143

Order—vacation—sanity of applicant. In an application to set aside an ex parte order in probate wherein the defendant, inter alia, pleads mental incompetency of the plaintiff, a motion by defendant to set the matter for hearing solely on the issue of plaintiff's sanity is properly overruled.

In re Brockmann, 207-707; 223 NW 473

Order overruling motion to strike. An order overruling a motion to strike a pleading is appealable when the ruling goes to the very merits of the controversy.

State v Murray, 217-1091; 252 NW 556

Reception of evidence—discretion in reopening—new trial for abuse. Granting or refusing a motion to reopen a case to admit further evidence is within the sound discretion of the court, but if a refusal to reopen is an abuse of discretion, a new trial should be granted on appeal.

In re Canterbury, 224-1080; 278 NW 210

Ruling on motion as adjudication. An order overruling plaintiff's motion (1) to strike an answer, and (2) for judgment nil dicit (assuming the propriety of such procedure) constitutes an adjudication that plaintiff has no legal right to a judgment on the pleadings as they then stand; and plaintiff has no right later to present, to another judge of the same court, a motion for judgment on the same pleadings, and said latter judge has no right to review the rulings of the former judge by sustaining said latter motion.

Taylor v Canning Corp., 218-1281; 257 NW 353

Ruling on motion as adjudication. Whether a ruling sustaining a motion to strike a pleading on the ground that it improperly joins causes of action and party defendants constitutes (in the absence of an appeal) a final adjudication in the further progress of the cause, quare.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

IX WITHDRAWAL, ABANDONMENT, OR WAIVER

Answer and motion at same time. The filing of an answer to a petition as amended, and, at the same time, a motion attacking the amendment, is unallowable. In such case the answer will stand and the motion will be deemed waived.

Bliss v Watson, 208-1199; 227 NW 108

More specific statement—error waived. Error in overruling a motion for more specific statement is waived by movant filing an answer.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Motions—waiver by filing subsequent pleading. A motion by defendant to dismiss an application for the appointment of a receiver, and not ruled on, is waived by the subsequent filing by defendant of an answer and resistance to said application.

Interstate Assn. v Nichols, 213-12; 238 NW 435

Motions—waiver of right to ruling. Plaintiff waives his right to a ruling on his motion to strike portions of the answer before ruling is made on defendant's motion for a directed verdict, when plaintiff at the close of the trial acquiesces in the action of the court in considering both motions at the same time.

Ankeney v Brenton, 214-357; 238 NW 71

Scope of remedy—striking allegation (?) or withdrawal of issue (?). It is not proper practice, at the close of all the evidence, to move to strike from the petition unsupported or legally insufficient allegations of negligence. The proper practice is to move to withdraw such issues from the jury.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Treating unallowable motion as allowable. A litigant, by allowing a motion to be argued and submitted to the court for determination without effort to exclude such motion from the record, waives the objection that the movant had no legal right to file said motion.

Iowa Co. v Coal Co., 204-202; 215 NW 229

Trial—effect on unrulred motion. Defendant in a criminal proceeding waives a motion filed by him by going to trial without demanding a ruling on said motion.

State v Wilson, 222-572; 269 NW 205

Waiver by filing answer. In action on note, filing of answer waived right to proceed under statute by motion to strike cause of action improperly joined.

Brown v Correll, 227-659; 288 NW 907

Withdrawing answer—substituting demurrer or motion—court's discretion. It is within the trial court's discretion to permit a litigant to withdraw his answer and substitute therefor a motion or demurrer.

In re Arduser, 226-103; 283 NW 879

11230 Several objects.

Unallowable successive motions. It is not permissible for defendant to file separate, successive motions "of the same kind" to the same unamended petition. So held where defendant first filed a motion to strike portions of a petition, and, being overruled, filed a motion for a more specific statement of said petition, it being held that said motions were "of the same kind" in that each motion had the same objective, to wit, the proper settling of the pleading for trial.

The proper and necessary procedure is to combine the subject matters of both motions into one motion.

Bookin v Utilities Co., 221-1336; 268 NW 50

11231 Proof by affidavit—cross-examination.

Affidavits. See under §11342 et seq.
Oral examination of affiants. See under §11347, Vol I

Affidavit (?) or bill of exceptions (?). Misconduct of an attorney in argument (not taken down and made of record) must be presented by bill of exceptions and not by affidavit attached to the motion for new trial.

Hornish v Overton, 206-780; 221 NW 483

Conflicting affidavits—effect. A war of conflicting affidavits between counsel as to what oral understanding was had relative to the time of filing an abstract on appeal will not necessarily be determined by the supreme court.

Farmers Bank v Miles, 206-766; 221 NW 449
Reppert v Reppert, 214-17; 241 NW 487

Matter incidental to ruling on motion not res judicata. In a libel action brought against a newspaper and others as joint tort-feasors, when affiants testified as to the matter of agency at a hearing on a motion to strike part of the petition, a ruling by the court denying the motion was not res judicata on the question of agency, as agency question was only incidental to the question of misjoinder raised by the motion to strike and could be raised in a subsequent trial on the merits of the case.

Cooper v Gazette Co., 226-737; 285 NW 147

Nonpermissible affidavits. Affidavits to the effect that a juror changed his vote from "not guilty" to "guilty" because of certain misconduct occurring during the deliberation of the jury will be given no consideration whatever.

State v Clark, 210-724; 231 NW 450

Nonpermissible affidavits. Improper argument by the county attorney cannot be shown by affidavits attached to motion for new trial.

State v Hixson, 208-1233; 227 NW 166

Optional methods of proof. The grounds for a new trial need not necessarily be established by affidavits. In proper cases such grounds may be established by the testimony of witnesses.

Skinner v Cron, 206-338; 220 NW 341

Refusal to call jurors. When jurors are present in court when a motion for a new trial comes on for hearing, it is reversible error for the court to refuse to order their personal examination as to specified misconduct which, if established, would reveal grounds for a new trial; and especially so when it appears that the jurors had refused to make their personal affidavits as to the facts.

Skinner v Cron, 206-338; 220 NW 341

Refusal to call jurors. An unsupported request by an accused in a motion for a new trial that certain trial jurors be called for examination as to alleged misconduct on the part of the jury is properly overruled, especially when no affidavit of any juror had been filed.

State v Friend, 206-615; 220 NW 59

Unallowable impeachment. In a personal injury action, a verdict may not be impeached by the affidavits of jurors to the effect that a certain allowance was made for an element of damages as to which there was no evidence.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

11232 Notice of motion.

Case reinstated after dismissal. Where an action is dismissed by the clerk under district court rules, but the judge thereof, without notice to the defendant, reinstates the case on motion and showing that the clerk acted erroneously, and where an application to vacate the order of reinstatement is denied, supreme court could not on appeal assume that judge lacked jurisdiction to reinstate without notice to defendant, without the district court rules of practice being in evidence and before the appellate court.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

11240 "Order" defined.ANALYSIS*I IN GENERAL
II EX PARTE ORDERS*I IN GENERAL

"Order" defined. An "order" of court, speaking broadly, is any direction of the court in a proceeding, not including the judgment or decree.

Blunk v Walker, 206-1389; 222 NW 358

Alimony—nonlienable decree for money. A decree (in divorce proceedings) which, inter alia, simply "orders" defendant to pay to the clerk for the use of plaintiff a stated sum each month, but renders against defendant no present judgment for money, but authorizes the clerk to enter such judgment for payments in default, neither becomes a lien on defendant's lands, nor authorizes the issuance of an execution.

Millisack v O'Brien, 223-752; 273 NW 875

Compromise settlement — approval — effect. An order in guardianship proceedings approving a settlement of a claim on behalf of the ward is conclusive until set aside by some direct and appropriate proceedings in the probate court.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

Fraudulently obtained order. A fraudulently obtained order of court may, of course, be set aside on proper application.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Judicial legislation. A court enters the wholly unallowable field of judicial legislation when it assumes to enter ex parte orders directing the payment of mileage to grand jurors in an amount different than the amount provided by statute.

Park v Polk County, 220-120; 261 NW 508

Municipal court—filing motions after verdict—extending time—jurisdiction. The municipal court has jurisdiction to enter an order extending the time to file a motion for a new trial and exceptions to instructions and judgment non obstante veredicto. Such order is reviewable by appeal, not by certiorari.

Eller v Municipal Court, 225-501; 281 NW 441

Sales and conveyances—approval as interlocutory order. The approval by the probate court of a sale and conveyance of land belonging to an estate, must be deemed an interlocutory order.

In re Doherty, 222-1352; 271 NW 609

Extension of testator's limitation in reacceptance of bequest—effect of unappealed order. Where testator directed his executors to purchase, for a daughter, good Iowa land of the value of $15,600, such daughter having refused to accept partial distribution of realty to heirs prior to testator's death, but the testator also provided such bequest should lapse if daughter failed to select land within one year from testator's death, and where within one year the daughter filed application for extension of time on the ground that estate did not have funds to purchase such land, which extension was granted after due notice to executors and heirs, held, district court had jurisdiction to grant extension of time and, no appeal having been taken therefrom, the order became "final" and the heirs were bound by the decision.

In re Holdorf, 227-977; 289 NW 756

Unappealed but erroneous order dismissing party defendant. In an action of certiorari against the state executive council, and the custodian of public buildings and grounds, to review the legality of the discharge of an employee of the latter department, an unappealed order of court dismissing said custodian as an improper party defendant, tho unqualifiedly erroneous, becomes the law of said particular action, and precludes said plaintiff from thereafter proceeding against said custodian for the relief sought.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

II EX PARTE ORDERS

Attorney fee for extraordinary services—review. Tho a presumption of regularity exists as to an unassailed allowance of attorney fees for extraordinary services, and tho ex parte orders fixing such fees without introduction of evidence are not uncommon, yet such orders are always open to review on final settlement.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Computation of period—tolling statute of limitation—unauthorized action. An action by a plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of a deceased, to recover damages for the wrongful death of the deceased, when plaintiff was not such administrator, is a nullity, and, therefore, does not toll the statute of limitation on the said cause of action. And in case plaintiff is appointed administrator after the statute has fully run, an ex parte order of the probate court assuming to ratify, confirm, and adopt such former proceeding is likewise a nullity.

Pearson v Anthony, 218-697; 254 NW 10

Decisions reviewable—misjoinder of parties. The action of the court in overruling a motion to set aside an ex parte order making movant a party to a pending action is appealable, the motion being based on the ground of misjoinder of parties.

Irwin v Bank, 218-961; 256 NW 681

Executor's and attorney's fees—ex parte allowance. While an estate is being administered, an ex parte order allowing executor's and attorney's fees for ordinary and extraordinary services is properly attacked by motion.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Improper vacation of order. An order approving the final report of an executor and discharging him, on due notice to all parties interested, cannot be later set aside on the ex parte application of the former executor.

In re Brockmann, 207-707; 223 NW 473

Intermediate accounts. Mistakes in ex parte orders, made during settlement of an estate, are subject to correction at any time before final settlement of the estate.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Misjoinder of parties. The action of the court in overruling a motion to set aside an ex parte order making movant a party to a pending action is appealable, the motion being based on the ground of misjoinder of parties.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-961; 256 NW 681

Power of judge at chambers. An ex parte order of a judge at chambers to the effect that a party to an action may, on the trial, use a transcript of the testimony taken in another and former action is a nullity.

Kostlan v Mowery, 208-623; 226 NW 32

11244 Filed and entered.

Irregularities—effect. The validity of a settlement of a claim on behalf of a ward is not affected by the fact that the settlement was signed shortly before the guardian was actually appointed, or that there was some delay in filing the order of court approving the settlement.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

CHAPTER 493

SECURITY FOR COSTS

11245 Bond for costs.

Affidavit for cost bond. The statutory affidavit supporting a motion for cost bond may be made and filed by a defendant corporation's attorney, and a corporation need not personally make and file such affidavit.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

Cost bond affidavit by attorney—presumption of knowledge. A corporation defendant's attorney making statutory affidavit in support of motion for cost bond will be presumed to have had sufficient knowledge of facts to enable him to make such affidavit and such knowledge need not be alleged.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

Cost bond affidavit not a pleading. The statutory affidavit in support of a motion for cost bond is not a pleading.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

Security for payment—cost bond application before answer. Court erred in overruling a motion for cost bond and holding that defendant's application therefor was not filed in time, because filed after time for defendant's appearance when evidence showed that plaintiff's attorney, through correspondence, gave defendant's attorney more time, and where it was filed long prior to filing of any answer in cause, there being no order of court therein requiring such motion for cost bond to be filed within certain time.

Schultz v Ins. Co., 225-1024; 282 NW 776

11248 Dismissal for failure to furnish.

Neglect to file within time ordered—effect. The nonwilful neglect to file a cost bond by the time ordered by the court will not justify a dismissal of the action when the bond is filed prior to the ruling on the motion to dismiss.

Arthaud v Griffin, 205-141; 217 NW 809

I WITNESSES

(a) IN GENERAL

Examination by court. An impartial examination of a witness by the court is proper.

State v Weber, 204-137; 214 NW 531

Examination—leading questions condemned. Record reviewed, and held that, in the examination of certain witnesses, leading questions were not permissible.

Wildeboer v Peterson, 201-1202; 203 NW 284

Definition of "hearing". A "hearing" is the trial of an issue, including the introduction of evidence, the arguments, the consideration by the court, and the final decree and order.

Equitable v McNamara, 224-859; 278 NW 910

Unallowable self-corroboration. A party may not corroborate the testimony of his own witness by having the witness testify that he has told the same story on other occasions.

Wertz v Hale, 206-1018; 221 NW 504

Identity of voice in telephone conversation. Identity of one speaking through a telephone may be by sound of voice or by sound of voice aided by a showing of fact that the speaker in question was perfectly familiar with the particular subject matter of the conversation.

Hanna v Central Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

Conclusiveness on party introducing. Plaintiff who, in his own behalf, calls the defendant as a witness, is bound by the latter's apparently frank, unequivocal and undisputed testimony.

May v Hall, 221-609; 266 NW 297

Malpractice—expert and nonexpert testimony—competency. Ordinarily the question of whether a doctor or dentist exercised the requisite care or skill in any case cannot be determined by the testimony of laymen or nonexperts, nor be left to the judgment of a jury or court, unaided by expert testimony, and only those learned or experienced in the profession may testify as to what should or should not have been done. But there are exceptions to this rule depending wholly on the fact situation, and no ironclad rule can be laid down as to when the doctrine shall be applied.

Whetstone v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Credibility—adverse interest and impeaching circumstances. Self-evident principle applied that the most positive assertion of fact by a witness may be wholly overcome by the adverse interest of the witness, and by impeaching circumstances and sidelights. So held as to testimony relative to the signing and acknowledgment of a mortgage.

Hagensick v Koch, 220-1055; 264 NW 13

Estoppel of witness to change testimony. A clerk of the district court who testifies, in an action to which he is not a party, that he has "in his hands" the amount of a tender deposited with him, will not, in a later action against him by one of said litigants who relied on said testimony and thereby materially altered his position, be permitted to show that at the time of so testifying he did not have said money "in his hands" because he had already lost it by failure of the bank in which it was deposited.

Andresen v Andresen, 219-434; 258 NW 107

Evidence—voluntary inculpatory statements. Police officer need not warn a person in custody that incriminating statements may be used against him, for, if voluntarily made, they are admissible in evidence without warning.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Proof of felony conviction not an impeachment. Proof that witness has been convicted of felony does not of itself impeach him, discredit his testimony, nor make him wholly unworthy of belief. Such proof goes only to the weight to be given his testimony by the jury.

State v Wehde, 226-47; 283 NW 104

Conviction on testimony of felon. A defendant, in a prosecution for receiving stolen hogs, may be convicted on the testimony of one convicted of a felony and since the weight to be given such testimony is for the jury, when there is a conflict, a directed verdict for the defendant is properly refused. Held, evidence sufficient to convict.

State v Wehde, 226-47; 283 NW 104

Impeachment—effect—duty of jury. A witness at the outset is presumed to be telling the truth and it does not follow that, because there is evidence tending to impeach him, that he has thereby been successfully impeached, or that he has been successfully impeached because he has been attacked. If the jury is of the opinion that he has been successfully impeached, it should disregard his testimony unless some material part of it has been corroborated.

State v Wehde, 226-47; 283 NW 104

Stolen bonds—good-faith purchase—seller's bad character—materiality. On the issue whether stolen United States liberty bonds had been purchased by a bank in good faith, evidence that the person from whom the bank bought the bonds was a notorious underworld character is inadmissible, it appearing that he was a regular depositor of the bank, and had had prior bond deals with the purchasing bank.

State Bank v Bank, 223-596; 273 NW 160

(b) CHILDREN

Child a proper corroborating witness. Age alone of a ten-year-old corroborating witness will not vitiate her testimony, since credibility and weight are matters for the jury.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Seven-year-old boy—competency established. A seven-year-old boy is a competent witness in a criminal trial when it is shown that the court examined him and was satisfied that he knew what an oath was, and understood that he was to tell the truth.

State v Hall, 225-1316; 283 NW 414

Leading questions—discretion of court. The propriety of leading questions to immature witnesses must be left, in a large degree, to the discretion of the trial court.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Failure to object to eight-year-old witness. In prosecution for statutory rape where it is shown on preliminary examination of eight-year-old witness that she knew what "telling the truth" meant and knew what a lie was, that it was wrong to tell a lie, and that punishment was the penalty for not telling the truth, it was not error to permit such witness to testify, especially where no objection was made to witness' competency until the conclusion of her testimony, altho she did not understand the meaning of the word "oath", nor definition of word "witness".

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

(b) CHILDREN—concluded

Eight-year-old witness—credibility of testimony. In a prosecution for statutory rape where an eight-year-old witness testified on direct examination in a clear, frank, direct, and intelligent manner as to what she had seen or heard on the occasion in controversy, a motion to strike such testimony was properly overruled, as the question of the credit and weight to be given her testimony was clearly for the jury. The testimony of a witness must be construed in its entirety.

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

Statutory corroboration—trial court to determine. In a prosecution for statutory rape it is essential that the testimony of a prosecuting witness be corroborated by other testimony tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, but it is not necessary that all of the material evidence of the prosecuting witness be corroborated. The question of whether there was statutory corroboration is a question for the trial court, and there was sufficient evidence of corroboration by an eight-year-old witness as to what she saw and heard to warrant the submission of the question of corroboration to the jury.

State v Diggins, 227-632; 288 NW 640

(c) COMPETENCY OR INCOMPETENCY IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 24 ILR 482—Competency

Opinion evidence—allowable conclusion. A nonexpert witness may, on proper foundation, be permitted to testify that an injured person was unable to perform labor for a named time after he was injured.

Looney v Parker, 210-85; 230 NW 570

Insanity—nonexpert witness. A nonexpert witness who has never seen an accused in a homicide case prior to the transaction which resulted in the homicide may not express an opinion as to the then insanity of the accused.

State v Maharras, 208-127; 224 NW 537

Distance in which train could be stopped—opinion. A witness, tho a farmer at the time of trial, is competent to testify concerning the distance in which a certain train could be stopped, when it appears that the witness had formerly been engaged for many years in railroad work on freight and passenger trains as brakeman and conductor; that he was acquainted with the ordinary train-control equipment of such trains; and that long observation had enabled him to know the time required for stopping trains under varying conditions.

Williams v Ry. Co., 205-446; 214 NW 692

Value in condemnation proceedings. A landowner who knows the value of land sought to be condemned for an electric power line is competent to testify to the amount of damages caused to the tract by such condemnation even tho he does not qualify as an electrical expert.

Evans v Utilities Co., 205-283; 218 NW 66

Opinion evidence—value of land. A witness is not competent to testify to the value of land when he has never been on the land and lives a material distance therefrom; neither is a witness competent who has never been on the land but once, lives at a great distance, and has manifestly superficial knowledge of the land.

Vanarsdol v Farlow, 200-495; 203 NW 794

Nonmarital communications. A divorced wife is a competent witness to testify to a communication between her former husband and a third person, prior to the divorce.

Stutzman v Bank, 205-379; 218 NW 39

Report of motor vehicle accident—remarks overheard—privileged communication. Evidence of witness who overheard statement of defendant in reporting accident, the witness being neither a peace officer nor an official, was properly excluded under statute requiring such report to be made and further providing that the report shall be confidential and not used as evidence in any trial, civil or criminal, arising out of the accident.

McBride v Stewart, 227-1273; 290 NW 700

Agent of interested party. In an action by the beneficiary in a life insurance policy to recover thereon, an agent of the insurer who negotiated the policy is a competent witness to testify that the insured did not make payment to him of the premiums due on the policy.

Range v Ins. Co., 216-410; 249 NW 268

Spouse as witness against self. In an action against a husband and wife for the reformation of a mortgage so as to include therein the entire homestead of the parties, the wife is a competent witness to testify against herself and her estate, as distinguished from that of the husband; and the same rule necessarily applies to the husband.

Rankin v Taylor, 204-384; 214 NW 725

Market value. A witness who is familiar with the market reports of an article is prima facie competent to testify to the value of such article.

State v Gill, 202-242; 210 NW 120

Customer injured in store—evidence of store's custom. Where damages are sought for injuries alleged to have been sustained when plaintiff fell down a stairway in defendant's store, and when plaintiff offered a witness to show defendant's custom of giving away boxes and that the removal of boxes by plaintiff was a benefit to defendant, the trial court did not err in excluding this evidence for that purpose when it appears that plaintiff's witness was not employed at defendant's store at the time of the accident, and there is no showing of his competency to testify to the existence of any custom at or before the time of the accident, as no foundation was laid for the purpose of said evidence.

Lotz v United Food Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Incompetency of witness—excessive motion to strike. A motion to strike the entire testimony of a bank examiner as to the value of the assets of a bank alleged to be insolvent should not be sustained simply because it appears that, as to some of many particular assets, he was not competent to express an opinion.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

(d) PHYSICAL OR MENTAL DEFECTS

Mental competency determined by court. It is the duty of the court, on proper hearing, to determine whether a proffered witness is mentally competent to testify as such.

State v Patrick, 201-368; 207 NW 393

Evidence of subnormal mentality. The court is not in error in refusing to receive specific evidence of facts tending to show that a witness of the age of 12 years is of subnormal mentality—as bearing on the credibility of the witness—when such testimony is offered after said witness had been sworn and had testified without question having been raised as to the capacity of the witness to understand the obligation of an oath.

State v Teager, 222-392; 269 NW 348

(e) ATTORNEY AS WITNESS

Attorney as counsel and witness in same case. While the court views with emphatic disfavor the act of an attorney in assuming the dual attitude of both counsel and witness in the same case, yet such conduct does not go to the competency of the attorney as a witness, but to the weight and credibility of his testimony, which latter fact may be very properly presented to the jury by appropriate instruction.

Cuvellier v Dumont, 221-1016; 266 NW 517

Competency of attorney to testify. An attorney in a cause is not per se incompetent to testify in his client's behalf.

Kellar v Lindley, 203-57; 212 NW 360

Action for services of attorney in effecting settlement. An attorney in an action against a client on a contract of employment may testify to the acts and things done by him in effecting an agreement of settlement of the claim in question.

Coughlon v Pedelty, 211-138; 233 NW 63

Examination by court—error waived by failure to object. Where an attorney testified that he had talked with the defendant with reference to a certain car before preparing a mortgage on the car, and the court questioned him in order to decide whether there had been an attorney-client relationship on which the testimony should be excluded, when no objections were made or exceptions taken to the examination by the court, it was proper to refuse a new trial on the ground that the court had made misleading statements of the law and was guilty of misconduct in discrediting the testimony.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

(f) CROSS-EXAMINATION

Discussion. See 24 ILR 564—Cross-examination—scope

Permissible scope—court discretion. The permissible range of cross-examination of witnesses in general rests in the sound discretion of the trial court.

State v Kendall, 200-483; 203 NW 806

Court's discretion. In cross-examination for the purpose of showing partiality and interest of witness, a large discretion rests with trial court.

Higgins v Haagensen, (NOR); 220 NW 38

Discretion of court. Principle reaffirmed that the court has wide discretion as to the scope of a cross-examination.

Olson v Shuler, 208-70; 221 NW 941

Laudner v James, 221-863; 266 NW 15

Abuse—discretion of court. The discretionary power of the trial court over cross-examinations will not be interfered with by the appellate court except in cases of clear abuse.

Rawleigh Co. v Bane, 218-154; 254 NW 18

Cross-examination—unallowable scope. Reversible error results in permitting a cross-examination to develop testimony which is highly prejudicial to the party calling the witness, and which has no relation to the testimony developed on the direct examination. So held where a direct examination was strictly confined to that which the witness observed at the time and place of an accident, while the cross-examination developed the fact that the witness declared at the time of the accident that the defendant was not to blame for the accident.

McNeely v Conlon, 216-796; 248 NW 17

Improper question—effect. The mere asking, on cross-examination of a defendant, of a wholly improper question does not necessarily result in reversible error.

State v Umphalbaugh, 209-561; 228 NW 266

Unallowable cross-examination. Cross-examination on matters which are not germane to anything testified to on direct and not bearing on any contested issue, is properly refused.

Cory v State, 214-222; 242 NW 100

(f) CROSS-EXAMINATION—continued

Fatal undue limitation. Undue limitation on the cross-examination of a witness may constitute reversible error. So held where the examining party offered to prove, on cross-examination, material matter which went to the heart of the controversy.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exc., 221-1382; 268 NW 155

Right to full cross-examination as to inconsistent statements. A witness may always be fully cross-examined as to signed statements of fact made outside the court which are inconsistent with his statements in court.

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

Nonresponsive answers—motion to strike. Error results in overruling a motion to strike, on cross-examination, an answer insofar as it constituted an opinion, conclusion, and voluntary statement, of the witness.

Miller v Fire Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

Expert—opinion evidence. An expert witness who, on a hypothetical question, states that in his opinion a defendant is of unsound mind, and is suffering from a form of senile dementia, may, on cross-examination, be asked, in effect, whether he would be of the same opinion if the defendant was able to accurately explain involved financial transactions—reflected in the testimony and detailed to the expert.

Richardson v Richardson, 217-127; 250 NW 897

Whole of writing—admissibility. A surety who denies in toto the execution, delivery, and consideration of the promissory note in question, but sees fit to cross-examine his co-defendant-principal with reference to a letter written by the principal to the payee with reference to said denied matter, may not complain of the reception in evidence of said letter as a part of his own cross-examination.

Granner v Byam, 218-535; 255 NW 653

Cross-examination as to writing may necessitate reception of writing itself. When a cross-examination is designed to show that a witness had asked plaintiff to sign an untruthful statement of fact, the party calling the witness must be permitted to show by a duplicate original, the unsigned, just what plaintiff was asked to sign.

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

Credibility and impeachment—bias of witness. A witness on his cross-examination may be interrogated as to his state of mind or bias against the party against whom he testifies, for instance, that the witness and said other party are involved in hostile litigation.

Bond v Lotz, 214-683; 243 NW 586

Examination by several counsel. The act of the court in permitting more than one counsel to cross-examine witnesses does not necessarily constitute error, especially when there are several defendants in the case.

Williamson v Craig, 204-555; 215 NW 664

Ignoring statute. The concededly wide discretion of the court in controlling cross-examination does not embrace the right to ignore a statute governing such examination. So held where the court allowed the reception of only part of a conversation.

Bond v Lotz, 214-683; 243 NW 586

Eminent domain—need for fence—issue already settled. In a condemnation action, denial of cross-examination of landowner by condemnor as to necessity of fencing held not reversible error when plat of property already in evidence settled question.

Moran v Highway Com., 223-937; 274 NW 59

Arbitrary right to shape form of question. An examiner in the cross-examination of an expert has the right, as a general rule, to shape his question as he pleases. So held where the witness had testified as to the value of a farm before and after condemnation, and where the examiner chose to ask the witness as to the value of separate tracts without directing the witness, in effect, to exclude all benefits consequent on the condemnation.

Dean v State, 211-143; 233 NW 36

Sworn assessment roll competent for impeaching purposes. The defendant in eminent domain proceedings has the right, on the cross-examination of the plaintiff, and for the purpose of contradicting and impeaching him, to show the sworn statement made by the plaintiff to the assessor as to the value of the farm in question and as to the number and value of the livestock kept on said farm.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Eminent domain—assessment as commissioner's personal judgment. In a condemnation action, permitting landowner to cross-examine a condemnation commissioner regarding the sworn assessment of damages as expressing his personal judgment held not error. (Distinguishing Winkelmans v Des Moines N. W. Ry. Co., 62 Iowa 11.)

Moran v Highway Com., 223-937; 274 NW 59

Accessibility of farm to market. The defendant in eminent domain proceedings has the legal right, on the cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses as to value, to show the distance of plaintiff's farm from the market and the kind of roads leading to such market.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Medical works — examination concerning. Prejudicial error results from permitting a physician, defendant in an action for malpractice, to be cross-examined as to the contents and teaching of scientific works on medicine, when the witness has not testified, directly or indirectly, as to such works.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Harmless error—striking testimony. A party who seeks on cross-examination to secure from the witness an admission of facts derogatory to the credibility of the witness, and is met by a positive denial, may not be deemed prejudiced by the striking out of such denials, tho the cross-examination was proper.

Glass v Ice Cream Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

Harmless error — curtailed cross-examination. Conceding that a cross-examination was unduly curtailed, yet no error results when the complaining party offered the witness as his own witness, and brought out the testimony excluded on cross-examination.

Goben v Des Moines Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

Character and conduct of witness—particular acts or facts. Offer on cross-examination to prove certain reprehensible acts and conduct on the part of the witness reviewed, and held properly rejected.

Wilson v Fortune, 209-810; 229 NW 190

Permissible redirect. When counsel on cross-examination enters an experimental field of inquiry foreign to the essential issues of the case, he may not complain if opposing counsel exercises his right on redirect to make an exploration into the same field of inquiry with disastrous results to the first offender.

Azeltine v Lutterman, 218-675; 254 NW 854

Credibility and impeachment — conclusiveness. A party who, on cross-examination, seeks to secure from the witness an admission that he was not sober at the time of an occurrence and that he had been drinking shortly prior thereto, and is met by a positive denial, is absolutely bound by such testimony, it appearing that the pleadings presented no issue as to whether the witness was sober.

Glass v Ice Cream Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

Paternity — incompetent evidence. On an issue as to the paternity of a child, testimony by the family pastor that at the time the child was baptized prosecutrix charged another person with the paternity of said child does not justify, on cross-examination, testimony as to what said accused party said and did, and what talk the pastor had with members of the family, relative to said charge.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

Evidence—collateral issue. The right to pursue a collateral issue developed on cross-examination is in distinct disfavor in our law, especially when the evidence in support thereof is ambiguous, remote from all proper issues, and otherwise incompetent.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

Nonexplanatory questions — nonapplicability of rule. The rule that the exclusion of questions which in no manner indicate the prospective answer is presumptively without prejudice has little, if any, application to the cross-examination of a witness.

Schulte v Ideal Co., 203-676; 213 NW 431

Admission of entire conversation as evidence. When part of a conversation relative to the execution of a guaranty is drawn from a witness, the entire conversation may be brought out on cross-examination.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

Evidence offered covered by other testimony. Where an offer of evidence was made during cross-examination, and was covered by other testimony, there was no prejudice in sustaining an objection to the offer.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Limiting to matter covered in direct examination. Cross-examination was properly limited to matters brought out on direct examination in an automobile accident case in which the witness was a defendant taxicab driver with whom the plaintiff was riding, when such witness might be regarded as hostile to the plaintiff's cause.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

No opportunity to cross-examine. When a recess was taken after the cross-examination of a witness for the defendants had begun, and through no fault of the defendants the witness did not re-appear for further cross-examination, his testimony was properly stricken on the ground that the plaintiff had been denied the right of full cross-examination.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Permissible cross-examination. In quiet title action brought by the husband of the former owner of land who had continued in possession after her mother had obtained the tax deed under an agreement with the daughter, it was proper to cross-examine the plaintiff as to whether he recalled the time the mother-in-law gave him certain bonds, because of the inference which might be drawn from such testimony as to the purpose for which the mother-in-law acquired the tax deed.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

(g) DIRECT EXAMINATION

Children—leading questions. The propriety of leading questions to immature witnesses

I WITNESSES—concluded(g) DIRECT EXAMINATION—concluded must be left, in a large degree, to the discretion of the trial court.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Leading questions—when permissible. Leading questions on direct examination are permissible, within the range of fair discretion.

State v Costello, 200-313; 202 NW 212

Leading questions condemned. Record reviewed and held that, in the examination of certain witnesses, leading questions were not permissible.

Wildeboer v Peterson, 201-1202; 203 NW 284

Nonleading question—calling attention to topic. Where a question is framed so as only to call the witness' attention to the topic, it is not leading.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Nonresponsiveness of answer—right to object. The party examining a witness has, ordinarily, the sole right to object to answers on the ground that they are not responsive to the question asked.

State v Murray, 222-925; 270 NW 355

Examination by court—error waived by failure to object. Where an attorney testified that he had talked with the defendant with reference to a certain car before preparing a mortgage on the car, and the court questioned him in order to decide whether there had been an attorney-client relationship on which the testimony should be excluded, when no objections were made or exceptions taken to the examination by the court, it was proper to refuse a new trial on the ground that the court had made misleading statements of the law and was guilty of misconduct in discrediting the testimony.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Admission in chief of evidence excluded on cross-examination. In prosecution for bootlegging, the fact that evidence as to officers' search of defendant's car for liquor was excluded on defendant's cross-examination did not require its exclusion when offered in chief by state's witness.

State v Chase, (NOR); 221 NW 796

Expert—medical works—unallowable reception. Error results from permitting a party on the direct examination of his own expert witness to read extracts from a medical work, and then to ask the witness if he agrees with the statement so read.

Morton v Ins. Co., 218-846; 254 NW 325; 96 ALR 315

Redirect examination—corroboration by testimony at former trial. After a party to an action has been cross-examined with regard to his testimony on a former trial for the purpose of laying the foundation for proving contradictory statements, it is wholly unallowable for counsel on redirect examination to read copious excerpts from the transcript of the witness' former testimony and have the witness say that he did so testify.

State v Cordaro, 214-1070; 241 NW 448

Sales—action to recover price paid—evidence—unallowable conclusion and assumption. A buyer of goods who is seeking to recover back from the seller the price paid because the goods were not in accordance with the contract and who has testified on cross-examination that he rejected the goods because his buyer refused to take the goods, may not show on redirect that his buyer refused the goods because the goods "were not up to the grade purchased".

Appel v Carr, 216-64; 246 NW 608

Extension of time for new trial motion—canvass of jury as to misconduct of court. An extension of time for filing a motion for new trial to enable counsel to canvass the jury and learn the prejudicial effect of remarks made by the court during the trial was properly refused when there was attached to the motion an affidavit by a juror that the remarks of the court had led the jury to disbelieve a witness, the affidavit not supporting its conclusion, and when no exceptions were taken to the remarks by the court.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

II EVIDENCE GENERALLY(a) ADMISSIBILITY GENERALLY

Discussion. See 13 ILR 458—Rules—administrative tribunals

1 In General

Discussion. See 24 ILR 411—Introduction of evidence—symposium; 24 ILR 464—Before administrative bodies

Immaterial and irrelevant matters properly excluded. Immaterial and irrelevant matters are properly excluded in the trial of a cause.

Weinhart v Smith, 211-242; 233 NW 26

Intent—materiality. A person may testify to his intent when such intent is material to the issues involved.

In re Talbott, 209-1; 224 NW 550

Evidence similar to that of adverse party. The court having permitted one party to an action to support his case by a particular line of testimony, must, manifestly, permit the other party to introduce opposing testimony along the same line. So held as to testimony as to the market value of second-hand goods destroyed by fire.

Maasdam v Ins. Assn., 222-162; 268 NW 491

Quantum meruit—former contract. On the issue of the quantum meruit of services, a former similar written contract may be relevant, material, and competent.

Olson v Shuler, 208-70; 221 NW 941

Relevancy, materiality, and competency—similar facts and transactions. On the issue whether the proximate cause of the death of hogs was a so-called hog remedy fed to them, evidence is inadmissible that other hog raisers fed the remedy to hogs which in part died, unless there is proof of substantial similarity of all the conditions that might enter into or affect the result.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

Reason for not looking for danger. The reason why a pedestrian while crossing a street did not look in the direction of an oncoming vehicle which injured him is relevant and material, and the injured party may testify as to such reason.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Letter—admissible tho of slight materiality. Letter reviewed, and held admissible as furnishing a possible basis for impeaching party's testimony.

Redfern v Redfern, 212-454; 236 NW 399

Wholesomeness of product. On plaintiff's trial theory that a product purchased of defendant was unwholesome and injurious, defendant may, of course, counter with evidence tending to show the wholesomeness and non-injurious character of the said product.

Tracy v Oil Co., 208-882; 226 NW 178

Answers to interrogatories—use for other purposes. Answers to interrogatories which are offered in evidence for a particular purpose by the party requiring them are in evidence for other purposes.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1020; 226 NW 777

Part of telephone message. A witness, in corroboration of testimony as to a conversation over the telephone, may be permitted to detail that part of the talk heard by him, even though he did not know the identity of the other party to the conversation.

Kruidenier Estate v Trust Co., 203-776; 209 NW 452

Matters of speculation. Transactions which account for a fact by a process of so-called reasoning which is purely speculative are wholly inadmissible.

Wildeboer v Peterson, 201-1202; 203 NW 284

Conversations in the presence of prosecutrix. In a civil prosecution for forcible defilement, statements may become material when made in the presence of the injured female, and long after the commission of the alleged offense, and by a member of her family who was instrumental in later initiating the prosecution, to the effect that the accused was a good man, and that a person other than the accused was responsible for the woman's condition.

Wildeboer v Peterson, 201-1202; 203 NW 284

Conduct of third party as bearing on motive. The long delayed institution of a prosecution for forcible defilement, and then its institution by a member of the family of the alleged injured female, coupled with the very serious discrediting of the testimony of the latter, may render the animus and state of mind of such member of the family justifiably material, and require the reception in evidence of threats, in the presence of the alleged injured woman, by said member "to get even" with the accused for other claimed wrongs.

Wildeboer v Peterson, 201-1202; 203 NW 284

Corroborative testimony. On the issue whether a bank in renewing a promissory note demanded additional security, evidence that the value of the security then held by the bank was ample security for the note is competently corroborative of evidence that no additional security was demanded.

Persia Bank v Wilson, 214-993; 243 NW 581

Value—market price of property. The price paid for property is not conclusive as to its value, but is admissible as evidence thereof.

State v Beaton, 209-1291; 228 NW 111

Whereabouts of insured—result of inquiries. On the issue whether due and proper inquiries as to the whereabouts of an insured person had been made, a person may testify as to the inquiries made by him and as to the results of such inquiries.

Rodskier v Ins. Co., 216-121; 248 NW 295

Relevancy and materiality—implied contract. Evidence relevant and material to the issue of an implied contract is necessarily admissible.

Valentine v Morgan, 207-232; 222 NW 412

Fictitious person—hiring post office box. On the issue whether different names on notes, mortgages, deposit accounts, and checks were fictitious, evidence of the hiring of a post office box under such alleged name, and of the manner in which mail coming thereto was handled, is admissible, in connection with other evidence connected therewith and tending to show the fictitious character of said alleged parties and who the real actor was.

Kruidenier Estate v Trust Co., 203-776; 209 NW 452

Admissibility controlled by issues. Issues control the relevancy, materiality and competency of evidence. Principle applied where it is held that evidence of the value of services is not admissible on the narrow issue whether an oral contract for services for $500 had been entered into.

McManus v Kucharo, 219-865; 259 NW 926

II EVIDENCE GENERALLY—continued

1. In General—continued

Residence and occupation—harmless error in admitting. Evidence as to the residence and occupation of a defendant may be quite immaterial, yet quiet nonprejudicial.

State v Salisbury, 209-139; 227 NW 589

Admissibility of deposition—action between different parties. In an equitable action by an administrator to enforce the dower rights of the deceased, the deposition of the deceased taken in another action between other and different parties is entitled to no consideration on an issue on which the administrator has the burden of proof.

In re Mann, 201-878; 208 NW 310

Conflicting and unfair rulings. Reversible error results from (1) receiving incompetent testimony over plaintiff's objection, (2) striking such testimony at the close of defendant's testimony, and (3) reinstating such testimony, without warning to the plaintiff, after plaintiff had dismissed his witnesses and made his opening argument.

Braverman v Naso, 203-1297; 214 NW 574

Inadmissible experiments. Evidence as to experiments is inadmissible when performed under unstated conditions, or under conditions materially different from those attending the particular fact in issue.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Similar facts and transactions—fraud. A party alleged to have been defrauded may show, on the issue of fraudulent representations inducing the execution of a promissory note, that the defendant made like representations to other parties at about the time in question.

Larson v Bank, 202-333; 208 NW 726

Forgery of note. On the issue of forgery of a promissory note, evidence that other people dealing with the bank through which the note was issued had made no claim of forgeries is manifestly irrelevant.

Schram v Johnson, 208-222; 225 NW 369

Fictitious person—postmaster's and county auditor's testimony. On the issue whether the drawee of a check and the maker of a note and mortgage on real estate was a fictitious and nonexistent person, evidence of the postmaster at the place in question that he knew of no such person is admissible; also, that of the county auditor and of the treasurer that no such person was a taxpayer in their county; and that of the county recorder that the records of his office showed that the land in question belonged to parties other than such alleged person.

Kruidenier Estate v Trust Co., 203-776; 209 NW 452

Contract in re rule of evidence. It is not against public policy for parties to contract that in an action on the contract a specified nonstatutory rule of evidence shall not apply.

Lunt v Grand Lodge, 209-1138; 229 NW 323

Negligence and proximate cause—burden of proof. Both negligence and proximate cause are questions of fact for the jury if the evidence is of sufficient weight and character to warrant their submission, and plaintiff has burden to establish them by a preponderance of the evidence, whether the evidence be direct or circumstantial.

Whetstine v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Gift—burden of proof. The burden to establish a gift causa mortis rests on the donee claiming thereunder. Evidence reviewed, and held that said burden had been successfully met.

Flint v Varney, 220-1241; 264 NW 277

General denial—evidence of gift admitted. Evidence to establish a gift is admissible under a general denial.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Indemnity contract—immateriality of other transaction. On the issue whether defendant had contracted to indemnify plaintiff against liability as surety on an appeal bond in a criminal case, and whether defendant had received funds from the accused with which to perform such indemnity contract, evidence is wholly inadmissible that defendant had received funds from the father or brother of the accused for a purpose wholly foreign to said indemnity contract.

State v Cordaro, 211-224; 233 NW 51.

Evidence beyond issues. Evidence beyond the issues in a case is properly excluded.

West Chester Bank v Dayton, 217-64; 250 NW 695

Unpleaded defense—nonadmissibility. Evidence is inadmissible on an unpleaded defense.

Federal Corp. v Western Co., 219-271; 257 NW 785

Relevancy between evidence and issue. There must be some logical relationship between a fact offered in evidence and the fact sought to be proved, before the offered evidence can be deemed relevant.

West Chester Bank v Dayton, 217-64; 250 NW 695

Sagging wires on highway after storm—knowledge. In a case where a woman is burned by contacting a high tension electric line, sagging over a highway after a storm, and who testifies she had no knowledge it was there, newly discovered evidence to show that she was seen stepping over the broken poles prior to the accident, is not cumulative but tends directly to establish a material fact affecting the result of the case on retrial.

Wilbur v Iowa P. & L. Co., 223-1349; 275 NW 43

Customer injured in store — evidence of store's custom. Where damages are sought for injuries alleged to have been sustained when plaintiff fell down a stairway in defendant's store, and when plaintiff offered a witness to show defendant's custom of giving away boxes and that the removal of boxes by plaintiff was a benefit to defendant, the trial court did not err in excluding this evidence for that purpose when it appears that plaintiff's witness was not employed at defendant's store at the time of the accident, and there is no showing of his competency to testify to the existence of any custom at or before the time of the accident, as no foundation was laid for the purpose of said evidence.

Lotz v United Food Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Res ipsa loquitur as rule of evidence. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is a rule of evidence not applicable where specific allegations of negligence are pleaded but only where general allegations of negligence are wholly relied upon.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Leading questions—court's own objection. Perhaps trial court should refrain from objecting on his own motion to leading questions, but no prejudice resulted where court's views as to weight of evidence were not disclosed and trial court must be allowed some latitude in supervising trials.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

City ordinance—burden to show inadmissibility. The burden of pointing out wherein city ordinance regulating train's speed is defective, either in substance or method of adoption, is on the party objecting to its admissibility.

Meier v Railway, 224-295; 275 NW 139

Accidents at crossings—obstructions. On the issue whether the view of a railway track was so obstructed at the time of an accident that an approaching train could not be seen, testimony by an eyewitness is manifestly admissible to the effect that he immediately stationed himself at the point of accident and could plainly see the entire track over which a train would approach.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356

Materiality—adding suspicions. Rejecting evidence which simply adds suspicions held not prejudicial.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

Administrator supporting sister's claim — not fraud. Testimony by an administrator in support of a sister's claim against estate does not amount to fraud.

In re Sterner's Estate, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Threat of injury. In an action by a wife for damages for the alienation of the affections of her husband, an information filed by the plaintiff, charging the defendants with having threatened to injure her, is wholly irrelevant and incompetent.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

Unallowable conclusions. The mere conclusions of a plaintiff in an action for damages for alienating the affections of her husband as to what the defendants had done in procuring the enlistment of the husband in the army and thereby effecting a separation of plaintiff and her husband, are wholly unallowable.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

Alienation—judgment for temporary alimony. In an action for damages consequent on defendant's acts in alienating the affections of plaintiff's husband, evidence that plaintiff obtained a judgment for temporary alimony and for attorney fees in an action by her husband for divorce and that the judgment was never paid is wholly irrelevant to the issue of relationship existing between plaintiff and defendant.

Case v Case, 212-1213; 238 NW 85

Agency of husband—custom as evidence. Testimony tending to show a custom by a husband to sign the name of his wife to promissory notes, with her express or implied knowledge and approval, extending continuously through many years prior to the transaction in question, is admissible on the issue whether the husband had such authority from the wife.

State Bk. v Fairholm, 201-1094; 206 NW 143

Attorney indorsing client's checks. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed without actual authority by payee's local attorney who, over a period of years, had collected rents for the payee, evidence of transactions to show custom of attorney in indorsing payee's checks and in remitting by his personal checks was admissible, even though bank did not have knowledge of all of the transactions, and it warranted finding that payee had knowledge of and acquiesced in such custom and was bound thereby.

Federal Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Evidence determining section line—first challenged on appeal. Evidence in the record without objection by which a fence on the section line is definitely determined as the boundary of a highway cannot be objected to for the first time on appeal.

Davelaar v Marion Co., 224-669; 277 NW 744

1. In General—continued

Abandonment of easement. Abandonment is an affirmative defense, and clear, unequivocal evidence is required to establish that an easement was abandoned.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Eminent domain—distance to markets. In a condemnation action, evidence as to distance from market centers and condition of old roads not admissible in determining damages.

Moran v Highway Com., 223-937; 274 NW 59

Value of property—trade values. Evidence of the amount which parties place upon property for the sole purpose of effecting a mere trade is not competent to show the reasonable value of such property.

Hiller v Betts, 204-197; 215 NW 533

Value of land—selling price as evidence. The value of farm land, through which a highway right of way is sought to be condemned, cannot be competently shown by evidence of the recent sale price of similar land in a nearby community.

Maxwell v Highway Com., 223-159; 271 NW 883; 118 ALR 862

Rental value of nearby lands. Evidence of the rental value of lands in a certain neighborhood is no evidence of the rental value of other lands in the same neighborhood when such other lands are not shown to be similar to the land as to which there is evidence; and a judgment based thereon is improper.

Harris v Carlson, 201-169; 205 NW 202

Crops on land in neighborhood—competency. A witness should not be permitted to testify to the crop yield of his land as bearing on the probable yield of another farm in the same vicinity unless it appears that the two farms possess similar soil conditions.

Slinger v Ins. Assn., 219-329; 258 NW 101

Eminent domain—value of land—amount of insurance. The amount of insurance carried on farm improvements, situated on a farm through which a highway right of way is sought to be condemned, does not constitute substantive evidence of the value of said farm, and is quite inadmissible for such purpose.

Maxwell v Highway Com., 223-159; 271 NW 883; 118 ALR 862

Discovery—production of noncompetent evidence. The court is not necessarily acting outside its jurisdiction in ordering the production of papers, and copies which would not or might not be admissible as competent evidence on the trial of the pending action.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Malpractice—evidence—usual and ordinary practice. The defendant, in an action for damages for malpractice, may always establish, even by his own testimony, the usual and ordinary practice of physicians and surgeons in treating, in the locality in question, the injury which is the subject matter of the action.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Negligence—usual and ordinary treatment—competency of witness. A witness, his competency to testify being established, may testify as to what was the usual and ordinary practice at a named time and place among physicians and surgeons in the treatment of a specified injury.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393; 26 NCCA 82; 28 NCCA 641

Evidence—undue limitation on reception. The action of the trial court in unduly limiting litigants in the introduction of testimony having direct bearing on a vital and material issue constitutes reversible error. So held as to evidence relative to the tracks of colliding automobiles.

Harness v Tehel, 221-403; 263 NW 843

Dismissal of issue—striking evidence. The court should not permit testimony bearing on a dismissed issue to remain in the record when it has no material bearing on any remaining issue.

In re Muhr, 218-867; 256 NW 305

Evidence improperly admitted—dismissal—nonreview. In appeal from court's refusal to set aside default decree annulling marriage, alleged errors in admitting evidence are not reviewable, even tho raised on motion to set aside the decree, when the appeal from the order denying the motion is dismissed.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

Torts—newspaper advertisement. In an action for damages consequent on an alleged wrongful act by defendant, a competitor of plaintiff, an advertisement inserted by defendant in a local newspaper and tending to show hostility against plaintiff, may be relevant and material in view of other evidence in the case.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Insolvency of corporation—inapplicable testimony. Testimony that a corporation was insolvent when it was placed under receivership is not, in and of itself, competent to establish insolvency of the corporation a year previous to the receivership.

Ryan v Cooper, 201-220; 205 NW 302

Bills and notes—fraud by dissolved corporation. Decree of dissolution of a corporation based on the fraud of the corporation is admissible, on the issue of fraud and want of consideration, against an alleged bona fide holder of a negotiable promissory note which was given to the corporation as the purchase price for its corporate stock, even tho neither of the parties to the action on the note were parties to the dissolution suit.

Andrew v Peterson, 214-582; 243 NW 340

Contract and quantum meruit value. Evidence of both the reasonable and contract value of services is admissible when so pleaded, even tho the pleading is embraced in one slovenly drawn but unquestioned count.

Pressley v Stone, 214-449; 239 NW 567

Action for assault—immaterial evidence. In an action for assault and false imprisonment committed by a mayor and a city marshal, evidence of violations by plaintiff of an ordinance is inadmissible when it appears that, on the occasion in question, no attempt was made to arrest plaintiff for such violations, and when the pleadings are silent as to justification and mitigation.

Schultz v Enlow, 201-1083; 205 NW 972

Accident insurance—pregnancy of injured person. In an action on a policy of accident insurance, evidence that the insured was pregnant and prematurely gave birth to a child which died shortly after birth is admissible on the issue of the extent of the injuries.

Elmore v Surety Co., 207-872; 224 NW 32

Verdict of coroner's jury. The verdict of a coroner's jury is not, in an action on a policy of insurance, admissible on the issue as to the cause of death.

Wilkinson v Life Assn., 203-960; 211 NW 238

Instructions—evidence defined. Instruction that "evidence is whatever is admitted in the trial of a case as part of the record, whether it be an article or document marked as exhibit, other matter formally introduced and received, stipulation, or testimony of witnesses, in order to enable jury to pronounce with certainty, concerning the truth of any matter in dispute", considered with other instructions, and while not approved, could not have prejudicially misled the jury.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

Intoxication subsequent to automobile theft. Exclusion of evidence offered by an insurance company, in an effort to escape liability on a theft policy, as to a thief's intoxicated condition an hour after the alleged theft of motor vehicles, as bearing on his condition at the time of the taking, held not prejudicial.

Whisler v Home Ins., 224-201; 276 NW 606

Examination—retention of nonresponsive answer. The court does not necessarily have to strike the nonresponsive answer of a witness when the answer reveals competent testimony. So held relative to the issue whether a party was intoxicated.

State v Fahey, 201-575; 207 NW 608

Situation—subsequent to injury. Testimony as to the condition of a rain spout on a building some days after an accident is competent when it appears that no change of condition has taken place since the accident.

Updegraff v Ottumwa, 210-382; 226 NW 928

Fraud—family relationship—effect. Principle reaffirmed that, on the issue whether a conveyance is fraudulent, the family relationship of the parties is a circumstance to be considered.

Schulein Co. v Lipschutz, 208-1315; 227 NW 141

Nuisance—admissibility under pleadings. Evidence that a nuisance was a "health hazard" is fairly justified by a pleading that plaintiff and his family were, by reason of the nuisance, subject to "offensive, obnoxious, and poisonous odors * * * and detrimental to the comfort, use, and enjoyment of their property."

Hill v Winterset, 203-1392; 214 NW 592; 37 NCCA 232

Waiver of incompetency. Error may not be predicated on the reception of irrelevant and incompetent testimony relative to the condition of a nuisance at a place remote from the place in controversy when the complainant fails to avail himself of a later indicated willingness on the part of the court to strike such testimony.

Chase v Winterset, 203-1361; 214 NW 591

Harmless error. Wholly irrelevant testimony may be harmless in view of other relevant testimony in the record.

Looney v Parker, 210-85; 230 NW 570

Harmless error—receiving pleadings in evidence. The reception in evidence of a petition already before the court may be quite inconsequential.

Kemmerer v Highway Com., 214-136; 241 NW 693

Reversal on appeal—inconsequential testimony. The reception of immaterial and inconsequential testimony is not ground for reversal.

Graeser v Jones, 217-499; 251 NW 162

Excluding evidence on conceded fact. Error may not be predicated on the exclusion of evidence when the existence of the ultimate fact which said evidence would establish is conceded.

Ankeney v Brenton, 214-357; 238 NW 71

Exclusion of evidence—other competent proof. The supreme court was not required to pass on the soundness of sustained objections to evidence that a certain road was a county trunk highway when there was other competent proof of the point and no offer of controverting testimony was made.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Review—refusing cumulative evidence. Refusal to admit testimony, which at the best is merely cumulative, is not prejudicially erroneous.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

(a) ADMISSIBILITY GENERALLY—continued
1 In General—concluded

Motion to strike—evidence admissible in part. Evidence which is clearly admissible in part will not be stricken in toto on indefinite testimony as to the inadmissible part.

Jones v Sur. Co., 210-61; 230 NW 381.

Parol contract—time of passing title. The intent of the parties necessarily controls the issues (1) whether, in a parol contract of purchase, title passed on delivery, with a right to rescind if a trial proved unsatisfactory, or (2) whether title passed only after a satisfactory trial. Necessarily, what the parties said to each other at the time the contract was entered into is admissible.

Bishop v Starrett, 201-493; 207 NW 561

Enforceability of contract not shown. Where there was no competent evidence to take case out of statute of frauds, it was not error to exclude oral testimony tending to show the making of an oral contract to sell a business college and the buyer's readiness and ability to perform the same.

Patterson v Beard, 227-401; 288 NW 414

Conclusions—nonfatal admission. Admission of conclusions of witnesses that they sawed lumber according to instructions, that the logs of appellee were better than others, and other similar conclusions held not prejudicial when the same testimony was elicited by proper questions and answers.

Waterman v Gaynor Co., (NOR); 215 NW 641

Paternity— incompetent evidence. On an issue as to the paternity of a child, the material fact that prosecutrix had at a former time charged another party with said paternity presents no justification for the reception in evidence of substantially the entire judicial proceeding growing out of said former accusation.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

Will contest—immaterial and prejudicial matter. In a will contest, evidence that the wife of a witness gave birth to a child materially earlier than the ordinary period of gestation is quite improper and immaterial.

In re Thompson, 211-935; 234 NW 841

Lost will—unsuccessful search. In proceedings to establish a lost will, the loss of the will and the search for it were proved by evidence that the will could not be found altho the home of the deceased and other places where the will might have been kept were thoroughly searched. The conclusion of the trial judge on the sufficiency of such evidence will not be disturbed unless discretion is abused.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Effect of "no recollection" by witness. In a libel action, mere testimony that a witness has no recollection of the writing or publication of a letter does not raise an issue as to the fact of writing, but when his testimony, which must be construed as an entirety, shows a denial thereof, a court cannot as a matter of law establish the writing and publication.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Competency—source of evidence—improperly obtained. Testimony is not objectionable simply because it has been obtained by the improper issuance of a search warrant.

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 552

Words actionable—evidence admissible as alleged. In a slander action it is not error to admit in evidence the very statements that plaintiff alleged in his petition were spoken.

Shultz v Shultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562

Words actionable. Woman's statement that son's wife was "dirty trash" admissible as proof of slander per se when understood by hearer to mean a prostitute.

Shultz v Shultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562

2 Circumstantial Evidence

Force and effect—instruction. A jury may be told that, if they find circumstantial evidence to be strong and satisfactory, they should so treat it.

Ferber v Railway, 205-291; 217 NW 880

Weight and sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that a theory cannot be said to be established by circumstantial evidence unless such evidence is not only consistent with said theory, but inconsistent with any other theory.

Field v Surety Co., 211-1239; 235 NW 571

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

Comparet v Metz, 222-1328; 271 NW 847

Sufficiency to establish theory. A theory cannot be established by circumstantial evidence, even in a civil action, unless the facts relied upon are of such a nature and so related to each other that it is the only conclusion that can fairly or reasonably be drawn from them, and it is not sufficient that they be consistent merely with that theory.

Ferber v Railway, 205-291; 217 NW 880

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Voting as evidence of domicile. In determining domicile, fact that person voted in school election in Crawford county is not conclusive evidence that Crawford county was his residence.

Crawford County v Kock, 227-1235; 290 NW 682

Gift—evidence—competency. Delivery of a gift causa mortis may be established by circumstantial evidence; likewise the gift itself may be established by the declarations of the donor tho they be not res gestae.

Flint v Varney, 220-1241; 264 NW 277

Payment of note. Payment of a promissory note may be established by circumstantial evidence: i. e., that the payee was a careful business man; that the maker and the payee resided in the same place; that business transactions occurred between them which might have furnished opportunity for payment; that the note was always readily collectible; that no annual interest and no part of the principal were ever indorsed on the note; that 17 years elapsed from the maturity of the first annual interest and 11 years after the maturity of the principal before any claim was made on the note, and then only after the death of both maker and payee.

Finley v Thorne, 209-343; 226 NW 103

Stock—agreement to repurchase—agency. The existence of authority, actual or apparent, for an agreement made by an agent on behalf of a corporation to repurchase its own stock sold by the agent to a third person, being within his apparent authority, being neither denied nor repudiated by the corporation, and although being based on circumstantial evidence, is not a question of law but a question for the jury.

Wright v Iowa L. & P. Co., 223-1192; 274 NW 892

Place of accident—nonapplicability of circumstantial evidence instruction. In a death claim action for negligence arising from an automobile collision occurring in a suburban district of a city where the negligence alleged was in failing to travel on the right-hand side of the street and where along with the physical facts there was direct evidence by the driver of the car wherein decedent was riding, as to decedent's travel on the right-hand side of the street, it was error to give an instruction, applicable only to cases based entirely on circumstantial evidence, when such instruction prevented the jury from properly considering the direct evidence as to where the accident occurred.

Rusch v Hoffman, 223-895; 274 NW 96

Fraud on bank by officer. Where the cashier of the plaintiff bank concealed a shortage with the bank by making fraudulent entries in its bond account and, to further conceal the shortage, obtained credit with the defendant bank by using drafts on the plaintiff bank as security, and concealed the monthly statements of the defendant in order to continue to conceal the shortage, the defendant having nothing to gain by aiding him in his fraud, there was neither direct nor circumstantial evidence of any arrangement between the cashier and the defendant to support a claim that there was conspiracy between them.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 239 NW 727

Insufficiency to make jury question. Circumstantial evidence is wholly insufficient, in and of itself, to generate a jury question on the issue whether a defendant in repairing an automobile so negligently replaced a wheel on the car that thereby it became detached while in operation (with resulting damage to plaintiff) when said evidence is also consistent with the additional theory that said wheel became detached because of defects and weaknesses in the car arising from its age and great use.

Tyrell v Oil Co., 222-1257; 270 NW 857

Torts—footprints. Evidence of footprints at or near the scene of the commission of a wrongful act is admissible in an action against the defendant for the resulting damages, provided the defendant is properly connected with said footprints.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Theories of equal probability. Circumstantial evidence relative to the loss of a diamond reviewed, and held that the court could not say as a matter of law that the theories of loss by theft or by fire were of equal probability.

Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

Positive testimony vs inherent improbability. The positive testimony of witnesses affirming the existence of an alleged fact, e. g., the entering into a contract, may be wholly overcome by the facts and circumstances attending the alleged fact and by the inherent improbability thereof.

Garretson v Harlan, 218-1049; 256 NW 749

Cause of fire—jury question. Circumstantial evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a fire was set by a passing engine.

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

Other fires set by other engines. In an action to recover damages consequent on a fire alleged to have been set by a certain passing engine, evidence of other fires set by other engines on other occasions near the place in question may be admissible, not on the issue of negligence, but on the issue as to how far an engine would throw burning embers.

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

3 Conduct of Parties

Tampering with witness. Evidence is admissible, in an equitable action for the revocation of the license of a physician, which tends to show that the defendant had tampered with a witness, in an effort to induce her to change her testimony.

State v Knight, 204-819; 216 NW 104

Easements—elements deduced from acts of parties. The fact that a property owner claimed an easement in the land of another "as his right," and "that the party against whom the claim is made had express notice thereof," may manifestly be conclusively deduced from evidence of the negotiations, conduct, and acts which led to and culminated in the creation and establishment of the easement by the parties.

II EVIDENCE GENERALLY—continued(a) ADMISSIBILITY GENERALLY—continued*3 Conduct of Parties—concluded

Ehler v Stier, 205-678; 216 NW 637

Habits of insured. In an action on a policy of insurance, evidence as to the habits and industry of the insured is wholly immaterial, there being no issue in the case on such matters.

Murray v Ins. Co., 204-1108; 216 NW 702

Contract—acceptance of offer—implication. Principle recognized that the conduct of parties to an alleged contract may furnish ample evidence that an offer by one party of certain terms was accepted by the other party.

Breen v Power Co., 207-1161; 224 NW 562

Direct testimony outweighed by inconsistent conduct. Grossly inconsistent conduct may outweigh direct testimony to the contrary. So held as to the making of a gift.

Cherniss v Thompson, 209-309; 228 NW 66

Malicious prosecution—ill feeling. Plaintiff in a prosecution for malicious prosecution may show that, many years prior to the prosecution in question, he had arrested the defendant, and that such arrest resulted in ill feeling on the part of defendant against plaintiff. But plaintiff should not make prominent the reason for such arrest.

Fisher v Tullar, 209-35; 227 NW 580

Renewal of written contract by conduct. Where a heating plant owner contracted to furnish to a storekeeper heat for a period of one year at the termination of which no new written nor verbal contract was made, but for seven years more the heat was furnished and accepted at the same price as in the original agreement, until discontinued at nearly the end of the 1933-34 season, in an action to recover the contract price for the 1933-34 year's heat, a contract would be implied from the storekeeper's conduct, to pay the contract price regardless of the fact that storekeeper shut off some of the radiators.

Snell v Kresge, 223-911; 274 NW 35

Fidelity bond—fraud in extension of credit by overdrafts. In action on fidelity bond of bank cashier the exclusion of evidence of bank's custom of deferring posting of checks creating an overdraft was not erroneous where the dishonest acts complained of were the extension of credit by means of overdrafts in violation of statute.

Fidelity Co. v Bates, 76 F 2d, 160

Guaranty—ambiguity—intent. In searching for the actual intention of both parties to an ambiguous written guaranty—in other words, in searching for the proper construction to place on such contract—the court may receive evidence of the conduct of the party to whom the guaranty was given tending to show that said party, shortly after the time the guaranty was executed, and contrary to his present attitude, was placing the same construction thereon as contended for by the guarantor.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exch., 221-1382; 268 NW 155

Subscribing witness—proof of testamentary intentions. Testimony by a witness to a will that the will was read aloud in the presence of himself and the testator, and that the testator signed it and did not object to the contents, was proper to show that the instrument was executed with the belief that it disposed of the testator's property in accordance with his intentions.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

4 Res Gestae

Discussion. See 1 ILB 36—Res gestae—exception; 14 ILR 87—Res gestae; 24 ILR 558—Unidentified persons Hearsay—res gestae exception. Hearsay which is no part of the res gestae is inadmissible.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Res gestae—real test to determine. The real test whether declarations of an injured party as to how he received his injury are part of the res gestae and admissible as such, is not whether the declarations were contemporaneous with the receiving of the injury, but whether the circumstances attending the making of the declarations exclude premeditation and design.

Miser v Iowa Assn., 223-662; 273 NW 155

All-essential test. On the question whether declarations of an injured party are competent as a part of the res gestae, the length of time elapsing between the receiving of the injury and the making of said declarations is, while important, not necessarily controlling. The all-essential test is whether they (1) relate to, and are explanatory of, the principal transaction, and (2) are made under such circumstances as to reasonably show that they are spontaneous and not the result of deliberation or design. Held, court abused its discretion by excluding declarations made some two hours after the occurrence of a transaction.

Aldine Trust v Accident Assn., 222-20; 268 NW 507

Discretion of court. The ruling of the trial court that certain declarations were not part of the res gestae will not ordinarily be overruled.

Pride v Accident Assn., 207-167; 216 NW 62; 62 ALR 31

Discretion of court. Principle reaffirmed that the court has a wide discretion in ruling on the admissibility of matters claimed to be part of the res gestae.

Case v Case, 212-1213; 238 NW 85

Reception discretionary with court. The admissibility of res gestae statements rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. So held as to nonconsequential statements attending an accident.

Fortman v McBride, 220-1003; 263 NW 345

Declarations made 15 minutes after accident. Declarations of an injured ballplayer made some 15 minutes after he had made a slide to a base, and after he had collapsed, and was apparently in great pain, to the effect that he was so sick he thought he was going to die and that when he made the slide he felt a tear in his abdomen—repeated to the physician to whom he was at once taken—are admissible as a part of the res gestae; nor are such declarations subject to the objection that they are the unallowable opinions of a lay witness.

Dawson v Life Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

Admission by one of defendants. The declaration of the driver of an automobile almost immediately after a collision had occurred, and before or while an injured person was being removed from one of the cars, to the effect that "I know I was driving fast," is part of the res gestae, and admissible against both defendants, to wit, the driver of the car and the owner thereof.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Execution of notes—statement by bank examiner. In an action on promissory notes executed to a bank by its directors and stockholders in order to prevent an impairment of the bank's capital, testimony is admissible as to what the state bank examiner said, at the time the notes were executed, relative to including the notes in the assets of the bank.

Farmers Bk. v Bunge, 211-1357; 231 NW 651

Declaration made two hours after assault. In an action for damages consequent on an assault, a witness will not be permitted, over proper objection, to testify as to what plaintiff, some two hours after the occurrence, said relative to the cause of her agitation.

McQueen v Stores, 214-1300; 244 NW 278

(b) PRESUMPTIONS IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 20 ILR 147; 20 ILR 516; 24 ILR 413—Presumptions

Presumptions act prospectively only. Principle recognized that presumptions do not travel backward. They look forward only.

State v Liechti, 209-1119; 229 NW 743

Laws of other states. Presumptively the law of Minnesota is the same as the law of this state.

Northern Finance v Meinhardt, 209-895; 226 NW 168

"Inference upon inference." It is not true that an inference cannot be based on an inference.

Martin v Life Co., 216-1022; 250 NW 220

Pyramiding of presumptions. Presumptions must rest on proven facts. The pyramiding of presumptions is not recognized in law.

Poweshiek County v Bank, 209-467; 228 NW 32; 82 ALR 39

Presumptions ousted by evidence. Presumptions disappear when evidence of the actual facts is introduced.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Parties presumed residents—cause of action presumed local. Presumptively, parties to an action in this state are residents of this state, and presumptively, the cause of action sued on arose in this state.

Farmers Bk. v Anderson, 216-988; 250 NW 214

Injunction—presumption of continuance of condition. Proof that enjoined acts were being committed at the time of the commencement of an action carries the presumption that the condition complained of existed at the time of the trial.

State v Kindy Co., 216-1157; 248 NW 332

Fraud not presumed. Fraud, in the absence of any showing of fiduciary relationship between the parties, cannot be presumed, but must be established by the party alleging it.

Plymouth County v Koehler, 221-1022; 267 NW 106

Incorrect instruction presumably followed. It will be conclusively presumed that the jury followed an incorrect rule of law as stated to it by the court in its instructions.

Aldine Co. v Acc. Assn., 222-20; 268 NW 507

Regularity of officials' actions. The actions of public officials are presumed to be regular unless there be clear evidence to the contrary.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Banta v Clarke County, 219-1195; 260 NW 329

Thrasher v Haynes, 221-1137; 264 NW 915

Krueger v Mun. Court, 223-1363; 275 NW 122

Execution—levy—return—presumption—burden to overcome. A party who claims that the various entries of the acts done under an execution and constituting the officer's "return" were not entered at the time the various acts were done, has the burden to so show. In the absence of such showing, it must be presumed that the officer did his duty and made the entries at the time required by statute. (§11664, C., '31.)

Northwestern Ins. v Block, 216-401; 249 NW 395

(b) PRESUMPTIONS IN GENERAL—continued

Proper index of lis pendens. The presumption that the clerk of the district court duly indexed, as a lis pendens, a petition for the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage is so strong that convincing proof to the contrary is required to overcome it.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Jansen, 217-439; 251 NW 711

Jurisdictional recital as prima facie showing. A recital made in 1868 by a board of supervisors, when ordering the establishment of a highway, to the effect, "The board being fully advised in the premises", states a prima facie presumption that they had jurisdiction and had complied with all statutory requirements.

Davelaar v Marion County, 224-669; 277 NW 744

Presumption as to width of old road duly established. When the records of the establishment of a highway, made many years ago, are silent as to the width thereof, it must be presumed to be the statutory width, to wit, 66 feet.

Richardson v Derry, 226-178; 284 NW 82

Highway signs—authorized erection. It may be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the ordinary "Stop" and "Slow" signs, as they are found upon the public highways, were erected by and under authority of the proper public officials.

Rogers v Jefferson, 223-718; 277 NW 570; 4 NCCA (NS) 318

Supervisors representing drainage district—good faith. Acts of county supervisors concerning work done by them in their statutory capacity as representatives of a drainage district to maintain the efficiency and durability of a drainage system was presumed to have been done in good faith, and they had an absolute right on behalf of the district to stand behind the contract under which the work was done in the interest of the district.

Kilpatrick v Mills County, 227-721; 288 NW 871

Lawfulness of action. In the absence of any evidence or showing to the contrary, it will not be presumed that a public service corporation is seeking the location of its lines along a highway without having procured a franchise, or that the highway engineer is proceeding to mark such location without a written application therefor. (§4838, C., '31)

Swartzwelter v Util. Corp., 216-1060; 250 NW 121

Possession of property. Proof that stock was on the premises of a defendant and under his control, both before and after it was at large in the public highway (where it was alleged to have caused a damage), and that the defendant had inferentially admitted that the stock was his, creates a jury question on the issue of the defendant's ownership.

Stewart v Wild, 202-357; 208 NW 303

Quitclaim grantees. The grantee of land under a quitclaim deed is conclusively presumed to have known of all prior equities in and to the land, and will be held to have taken and to hold said land subject to said equities.

Junkin v McClain, 221-1084; 265 NW 362

Delivery of deed—presumption attending acceptance. Principle reaffirmed that the acceptance of a deed of conveyance implies an agreement by the grantee to perform legal conditions imposed on him by the deed, e. g., the payment of stated sums to named persons.

Carlson v Hamilton, 221-529; 265 NW 906

Execution and delivery of deed—presumption attending possession by grantee. A deed of conveyance, when produced by the grantee therein, need not be accompanied by any evidence of the execution or of the delivery of the deed, because due execution and delivery will be presumed until he who attacks it shows to the contrary. And this is true even tho the deed did not reach the hands of the grantee, or was not recorded, until after the death of the grantor.

Heavner v Kading, 209-1275; 228 NW 313

Rebutting presumption by possession. Transfers and assignments of property of a deceased, in the hands of certain heirs, raise a presumption that they were delivered. However, facts and circumstances may overcome this presumption, especially when it is shown that the signatures of the deceased to the instruments are forgeries.

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

Deed from parent to child—constructive fraud. The doctrine of constructive fraud arises from the existence of a fiduciary relationship, and equity raises a presumption against the validity of a transaction where the superior party obtains a possible benefit, as in a case where a parent has become the dependent person in his relationship with a child, trusting his interests to the advice and guidance of the child, and has deeded his land to the child.

Stout v Vesely, 228- ; 290 NW 116

Delivery of deed presumed from recording. Recording of a deed does not constitute delivery, but it is evidence which creates a presumption of delivery rebuttable only by clear and satisfactory evidence.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Effect of acknowledgment. Principle reaffirmed that great weight is accorded to a certificate of acknowledgment.

Hutchins v Piano Co., 209-394; 228 NW 281

Forged signatures—expert testimony to overcome. While an acknowledgment by a notary is presumptively true and requires clear and convincing evidence to overcome it, yet by statute it is not conclusive, and the court acting as a jury may find, after reviewing the conflicting testimony of handwriting experts, properly received, that signatures to transfers and assignments of assets of an estate, attacked by an administrator de bonis non, were forgeries.

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

Possession of legal title—rebutting presumption. A mere preponderance of the evidence is not sufficient to overcome the presumption arising from the possession of the legal title to real property.

Wagner v Wagner, 208-1004; 224 NW 583

Setting aside deed—burden of proof. A delivered deed carries a presumption in favor of its validity, so one suing to set aside a deed has the burden of proving that at the time of execution of deed, grantor was incapable of understanding her property and her relations thereto, or understanding natural objects of her bounty or nature and effect of instrument.

Bishop v Leighty, (NOR); 237 NW 251

Alteration of instruments after delivery. Alteration apparent on face of instrument does not raise presumption alteration was made after delivery. Evidence held insufficient to carry burden of showing mortgage was altered after delivery.

Durr v Pratt, (NOR); 240 NW 681

Setting aside conveyance—confidential relation. In an action to set aside a deed and an assignment of a mortgage executed by mother to stepson, burden was on plaintiff to establish the existence of confidential relationship raising presumption of fraud.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Knowledge by mortgagee of adverse claim. Where mortgagee pays money to mortgagor after being notified by third parties that mortgagor's title is defective and that third parties have an adverse interest, the mortgagee is presumed to have a knowledge of all facts of the superior right or title which a reasonable and diligent search would have revealed.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Tax deed. A tax deed is presumptively unassailable.

Fidelity Co. v White, 208-519; 223 NW 884; 225 NW 868

Injunction against tax sales. An injunction restraining a county treasurer from selling real estate at tax sale for special assessments could not be sustained on the ground that tax deeds issued at a sale for general taxes extinguished the lien of the special assessments when the tax deeds were never introduced in evidence to enable the court to rule on whether the statutory requirements had been properly performed to make the tax deed valid.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Tax deed as evidence under statute. Statutes, providing that a tax deed shall be presumptive evidence of certain things and conclusive evidence of others, are construed to mean that unless the tax deed is received in evidence there is no evidence of the tax deed before the court, and when a tax deed is introduced in evidence a prima facie case is established of the regularity of all proceedings prior to its execution. Such statutory provisions with a tendency adverse to the owner of the title under a tax deed are construed most strictly in his favor.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Statutory presumption of validity of tax deeds. A defendant in a quiet title action may not claim that the plaintiff by first pleading title by invalid tax deeds, and then amending by pleading second corrective tax deeds, had abandoned the statutory presumption of their validity, nor must he, therefore, resort to the common law to prove his title.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Issuance of deeds prima facie evidence of regularity. The issuance by the county treasurer of tax deeds is prima facie evidence that proper notice of tax sale had been given.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Consideration—written contract. Presumptively a written contract is supported by a sufficient consideration, and the burden of proof rests on him who asserts to the contrary.

Krcmar v Krcmar, 202-1166; 211 NW 699

Burden of proof—fraud—extending time on mortgage as consideration. In an action by a bank to foreclose a mortgage on land, the defendants had the burden of proving their defenses of fraud and want of consideration, and, altho there was testimony that the mortgage was given to enable the bank to make a good showing to bank examiners and that there had been a promise that it would never be foreclosed, the court was justified in finding from other evidence that there was no fraud and that the consideration was the granting of an extension of time on a past due mortgage on other land.

Panama Bank v Arkfeld, 228- ; 291 NW 182

Insolvency of bank—knowledge of officers presumed. Principle reaffirmed that for many purposes the managing officers of a bank will be conclusively presumed to have knowledge of the insolvent condition of their bank.

Leach v Beazley, 201-337; 207 NW 374

Banks and banking—collections—negligence—measure of damages. The measure of damages consequent on the negligent failure of a collecting bank to notify the payee of deposited checks of their nonpayment, is not, prima facie, the amount of the checks, but such sum or amount as the payee-plaintiff may be able to prove to a reasonable degree of probability he has lost because he was not promptly notified of the nonpayment—not exceeding the amount of said checks. Substantial but conflicting testimony reviewed and held to present a jury question.

Schooler Motor Co. v Trust Co., 216-1147; 247 NW 628; 38 NCCA 361

Authority of agent to collect note. The naked showing that the payee of a promissory note received from a bank or from an officer thereof a payment on the note of a third party creates no presumption that the payee had expressly or impliedly authorized the bank or its official to receive said payment on said payee's behalf.

Huisman v Althoff, 202-70; 209 NW 525

Alteration of instruments—burden of proof. He who alleges a material alteration of an instrument has the burden to prove his allegation. No presumption exists that the alteration was made after the execution of the instrument.

Council Bluffs Bank v Wendt, 203-972; 213 NW 599

Title to certificate of deposit. The mere offer in court of an unquestioned nonnegotiable certificate of deposit by the indorsee-possessor thereof constitutes prima facie evidence of title in and to the instrument.

Farmers Bank v Bank, 201-73; 204 NW 404

Holder in due course. Where payee returned check to maker on account of a debt owing to maker, but by some unknown means again obtained possession of the check, which had not been put in a place of safety, and negotiated it to plaintiff eight days after execution, burden was on defendant-maker to prove plaintiff's lack of good faith in acquiring the check, and lapse of eight days was not such an unreasonable time within statute as to rebut presumption that plaintiff was a holder in due course. What constitutes such an unreasonable time must be determined on facts of each particular case.

Clarinda Sales Co. v Radio Sales, 227-671; 288 NW 923

Consideration and delivery of note—proof by presumptions—instructions. The questions of want of consideration and nondelivery of a note, supported only by presumptions, need not be submitted to the jury when such presumptions are not overcome by evidence, and when the only conflict arises over the genuineness of the signature, the submission of this single question was proper.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Proof of execution and delivery. In an action in probate to establish notes of deceased as claims, proof of the execution and delivery being established, it is presumed that notes were issued for a valuable consideration and the burden of showing lack of consideration is on the defense.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Notes—overcoming presumption of nonpayment. An instruction that the possession of an uncanceled promissory note creates a presumption of nonpayment is erroneous insofar as it further directs the jury, in effect, that it may find the presumption to be overcome by long delay in bringing action on the note and other circumstances, when the delay was some nine years, coupled with the circumstances that the defendant was at all times a nonresident of the state.

Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

Discharge—extension of time. The indorsement on an overdue promissory note of interest in advance of its maturity does not constitute conclusive evidence that the parties have entered into a binding agreement for the extension of the time of payment. The presumption is not more than a prima facie one.

Commercial Bank v Dunning, 202-478; 210 NW 599; 59 ALR 983

Payment—lapse of time with other circumstances. Mere lapse of time for less than 20 years may, with other circumstances, raise a presumption of payment, but it is not alone sufficient.

Citizens Bk. v Probasco, (NOR); 233 NW 510

Mutual expectations—board and lodging. The rendition on one hand and the acceptance on the other of valuable services (board and lodging) for a series of years generates a presumption that the one rendering was to receive pay and that the one receiving was to pay; and this is true tho the receiver and the giver were lifelong associates, and related, but were not members of the same family.

Peterson v Johnson, 205-16; 212 NW 138

Living with and caring for parents at their request. Reciprocal services rendered by and between members of a family are presumed to be gratuitous, yet, the court, a jury being waived, may find that a married daughter, who with her family, returns to the home of her aged parents at their request to care for them, for which she expected to receive and the parents expected to pay remuneration, did not re-establish a family relationship with her parents so as to raise the presumption of gratuitous services. Such finding will be binding on the appellate court.

Clark v Krogh, 225-479; 280 NW 635

Probate claim—payments applied on debts due—presumption. In a probate action to establish claim for housekeeping services rendered to decedent, where decedent promised to pay claimant small amounts from time to time to cover cost of her clothing and personal expenses, with an additional amount upon his death out of his estate, it would be presumed that small payments made by decedent in his lifetime were to be applied on debts which were due for such expenses, no showing having been made to the contrary.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Substitution and release—new contract not creating presumption. The mere fact of the making of a new contract by which a third party becomes obligated to pay another person's previously existing indebtedness does not alone give rise to presumption that the creditor accepts the new debtor and releases the original debtor—question as to whether there is such a release is one of fact to be determined by all the evidence in the case.

Wade v Central Broadcasting Co., 227-422; 288 NW 439

Consideration—note as future gift. Altho a promissory note for which there is no consideration is an unenforceable promise to make a future gift, nevertheless in an action against an executor on a note the presumption that the note imports a consideration, if negated, must be overcome by evidence and this burden is on the maker or his representatives.

In re Cheney's Estate, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Construction of will—death—presumption as to time. A provision in a will as to how property shall pass in case of the death of a devisee or legatee presumptively refers to a death which occurs prior to the death of the testator.

Moore v Dick, 208-693; 225 NW 845

Lost will—presumption of revocation. In the establishment of a lost will, there is a presumption that a will which was in the custody of the testator at his death, and which cannot be found, was destroyed by him with the intention of revoking it. The presumption may be rebutted or strengthened by proof of declarations of the testator, his circumstances, or his relations to the persons involved.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Destruction of evidence by claimant. Principle reaffirmed that a presumption is created against one who voluntarily destroys evidence of a claim asserted by him.

Meyer v Gotsdiner, 208-677; 226 NW 38

Liquidation—trust relation—presumption. The presumption that a trustee has preserved the subject matter of the trust cannot exist, in the absence of an allegation that said subject matter came into the hands of the representative of the trustee, and some proof to sustain the allegation.

Andrew v Bank, 204-431; 215 NW 623

Value of government bonds. The face value of government bonds is prima facie evidence of their actual value.

Mulenix v Bank, 203-897; 209 NW 432

Public improvements—assessments. Presumptively a special assessment for a municipal improvement is equitable. The burden of proof is on him who disputes the presumption.

In re Hume, 202-969; 208 NW 285

Assessor's valuation—burden of proof. The presumption is that the valuation placed by the assessor upon any particular property is correct, and the burden of proof is upon the person challenging that estimate to prove otherwise, as provided by statute, yet the opinion of the assessor is not conclusive, but when properly based and apparently not erroneous, excessive, or out of proportion, it is to be held as the true value of the property.

Trustees of Flynn's Estate v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Assessor's valuation—inequitable assessment even tho below value—failure of proof. There is a strong presumption in favor of the valuation fixed by the assessor which will not be disturbed on appeal, unless the presumption is overcome by proof, and altho the assessment is less than the value of the property, if it is inequitable when compared with assessments on similar property, it will be reduced to an equitable basis; so, where petition for reduction of city tax assessment on petitioner's lots did not allege that it was inequitable, where evidence showed lots were assessed pursuant to uniform system and reason for petitioner's witnesses' disagreement with assessor as to value did not appear, and, where assessments on similar lots in same amount were not challenged, the presumption in favor of assessment was not overcome and petitioner failed to sustain statutory burden of proving that assessor's valuation was inequitable.

Call v Board, 227-1116; 290 NW 109

Assessments—presumption of correctness—failure to overcome. An assessment for sewer must stand when appellant fails to establish his objections: to wit, that the assessment exceeds benefits and exceeds 25 percent of the value of the property.

Chicago, R. I. Ry. v Dysart, 208-422; 223 NW 371

Assessments—presumption of correctness. Evidence held insufficient to overcome presumption of correctness of tax assessments, where two properties, similar in construction and producing about the same income, are claimed to be disproportionate to respective values.

Crary v Board of Review, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

Stock market profits—when not taxable. In an action to cancel and secure a refund of income taxes submitted on a stipulated record, stock market transactions involved therein would be illegal and void as based on a gaming transaction if the buyer neither intended nor contemplated taking actual delivery but intended that the profits or losses should be settled on the market quotations; however, illegality is not presumed, and without illegality appearing in the record, profits accruing from such transactions must be held to be profits from the sale of capital assets, and not taxable as income, hence taxes paid thereon must be refunded.

Martin v Board, 225-1319; 283 NW 418

Foreign corporation doing business without permit. A necessary statutory prerequisite, to the right of a foreign corporation for pecuniary profit to sue on an Iowa contract, is that it first have a permit to transact business in Iowa, and the very nature of its business may raise the presumption that such corporation is one for pecuniary profit.

Johnson Co. v Hamilton, 225-551; 281 NW 127

Liability of capital stock not considered. Under the statute providing for the remedy of a creditor who is damaged by the wrongful diversion of funds of a corporation, it is held, the word "liability", as used in the statute, of a corporation on its capital stock is not an indebtedness to be considered in determining whether or not a corporation may lawfully pay dividends. In the absence of a showing to the contrary the presumption is that the payment of dividends is lawful.

Majestic Co. v Orpheum Circuit, 21 F 2d, 720

Fire damage by railroad—evidence sufficiency. In an action against a railroad for loss of property by fire, the state court's construction of statute, respecting presumption against railroad causing fire damage, is binding on federal courts. So where a prima facie case is established by plaintiff and no rebuttal thereto is offered, evidence held sufficient to make case for jury.

Turner Mfg. Co. v Bremner, 40 F 2d, 368

Presumption of constitutionality of statutes. Principle recognized that a legislative act will be declared constitutional unless its unconstitutionality is clear, palpable and practically free from doubt.

State v Darling, 216-553; 246 NW 390; 88 ALR 218

Berg v Berg, 221-326; 264 NW 821

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Presumption of constitutionality—strong case to invalidate. In passing upon constitutionality of acts of the legislature a presumption exists in favor of constitutionality, and an act will be invalidated only when it is clearly, plainly, and palpably unconstitutional, and it is the duty of the courts to give such a construction to an act that, if possible, this necessity is avoided and the act upheld.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

Construction by executive departments—legislative intent. The legislature is presumed to know the construction of its statutes by the executive departments, and when legislature indicates no dissatisfaction with such construction, the court may conclude such construction followed legislative intent.

State v Ind. Foresters, 226-1339; 286 NW 425

Former statute revised—legislative construction. When the motor vehicle statutes were completely revised, and exempted the vendor of a motor vehicle, under a conditional sales contract, from liability for negligent operation of the vehicle, such revision did not create a legislative construction that a former statute defining "owner" as the person with the use or control of a vehicle included such vendor within its definition, as a general revision of the laws creates no presumption of an intent to change the law, as is created when a particular section or a limited part of an act is re-enacted.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

Unauthorized taking of motor vehicle. When an owner of a motor vehicle establishes that his car was taken without his knowledge or consent from the place he left it, he has made a prima facie case of theft. The law raises a rebuttable presumption that the taking was with intent to steal the same.

Whisler v Home Ins., 224-201; 276 NW 606

Consent of automobile owner—inference—burden of proof. An inference arises from the ownership of an automobile that it was operated with the owner's consent, or under his direction, and the owner has the burden of establishing that such was not the case.

McCann v Downey, 227-1277; 290 NW 690

Retainer and authority of attorney. The presumption that an attorney has authority to appear for a party for whom he does appear, must prevail until the adverse party who demands proof of authority overcomes the presumption by allegation and proof of reasonable grounds tending to disprove such authority.

Bleakley v Long, 222-76; 268 NW 152

Tenants in common—accounting—division of receipts. When it happens that only one of two joint, equal, equitable owners of real estate is personally obligated on the contract for a deed under which the land is held, it is quite manifest that the law cannot presume, without supporting evidence, that forfeited payments received by said parties as the result of a futile attempt at sale of said premises, belong wholly to said nonobligated party; and equally manifest that the law cannot, on such circumstances, rear a so-called quasi contract to the same effect, in the absence of like evidence.

In re Kelly, 221-1067; 267 NW 667

Right of parent to custody of child. Presumptively, the welfare of a child will be best served in the care and control of its parents, and a showing of such relationship makes a strong prima facie case for parents claiming the care of their children. The presumption is rebuttable in cases of extreme neglect of natural and legal duty by the parents, the controlling consideration being the present and best future interests of the children, with due regard to the natural rights of the parents.

Allender v Selders, 227-1324; 291 NW 176

Alienation of affections. Presumptively a wife has affection for her husband, and a defendant has the burden to overcome such presumption.

Weyer v Vollbrecht, 208-914; 224 NW 568

Adjudication of insanity — nonretroactive presumption. An adjudication of insanity creates no presumption that the person in question was insane at any particular period of time prior to said adjudication.

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

Denial of insanity after adjudication. One judicially held to be insane has the burden to overthrow the presumption that such insane condition continues.

Hazen v Donahoe, 208-582; 226 NW 33

Incorrectly addressed letter. There is no presumption that mail matter addressed to a person at a town which is not his post office address will be delivered to the addressee at another town which is his post office address, tho the two towns are in the same county and in the same vicinity.

Lundy v Skinner, 220-831; 263 NW 520

Mailing and delivery of mail matter. In order to raise a presumption of delivery of a paper through the mail, the essential elementary facts giving rise to the presumption may be shown by course of business properly proved; but such proof must be directed to facts, and not conclusions, and the facts proven must be legally sufficient to create the presumption. Proofs held insufficient.

Central Co. v Des Moines, 205-742; 218 NW 580

Mailing notice of cancellation—presumption of receipt. In an action on an insurance policy to recover damages for loss by hail, where the answer alleges cancellation of policy by mailing five days written notice to insured, receipt of which notice plaintiff denies, it may be presumed or inferred by the supreme court in reviewing a decision on demurrer, that the letter properly addressed and mailed reached the plaintiff in due time.

Sorensen v Ins. Assn. 226-1316; 286 NW 494

Insurance—attempted cancellation contrary to bylaws—effect. A mutual insurance company which, in its bylaws, provides for the cancellation of a policy by giving notice "in person or by registered letter," and which, in its attempt to cancel a policy, ignores its own bylaws and attempts to give notice by an unregistered letter, must prove that said letter actually reached the insuree; and the presumption of delivery attending the mailing of such letter and the positive testimony that such letter was never received by the insuree are of equal probative force. Therefore, the insurer has not established the receipt of said notice by the insuree.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Reinsurance—disclosure of material facts. In an action on a reinsurance contract against reinsurer, held, not breached on account of original insurer's failure to retain full amount of liability agreed upon where original insurer was liable on another contract with the same principal and the evidence was insufficient to show any wrongful or fraudulent concealment of material facts, since the same principles of law as to false representations and concealments governs in reinsurance as in original insurance. Although insured and reinsured have duty to exercise good faith and disclose all material facts, a presumption must be based on facts, not upon other presumptions. The mere nondisclosure of facts possibly known is not fraudulent concealment of facts, so reinsurer, to establish concealment of facts, must show intentional concealment or bad faith in ascertaining facts.

General Reins. v So. Surety Co., 27 F 2d, 265

Accidental death—burden of proof. Under a policy providing for additional payment in case of death from accidental means, the beneficiary has burden of showing that insured shot himself accidentally, which need not be proved by direct evidence, but may be proved by proper inferences and presumptions from facts, and the beneficiary is aided in carrying this burden of proof by the presumption that death was not the result of suicide. Such presumption, however, is a rebuttable one and ordinarily a question of fact to be determined by the jury. So where evidence on a fact matter is of such character that reasonable men, in an impartial and fair exercise of their judgment, may honestly reach different conclusions, the question was properly held for the jury.

Mutual Ins. v Hatten, 17 F 2d, 889

Accident insurance—intentional acts resulting in injury. Under a policy of accident insurance which exempts the insurer from liability for injuries sustained by the insured by reason of “intentional” acts, the presumption will be indulged that injuries inflicted upon the insured by another person were not intentional.

Olson v Surety Co., 201-1334; 208 NW 213

Suicide—burden of proof. An insurer is not entitled to a directed verdict on its defensive plea of suicide unless the facts and circumstances preclude every reasonable hypothesis except that of suicide. Evidence held insufficient to overcome presumption of nonsuicide.

Wilkinson v Life Assn., 203-960; 211 NW 238

Death by accidental means. In a law action by beneficiary to recover for death of insured on a policy containing additional benefits for death resulting from accidental means, the defendant insurer complaining that the court erred in submitting to the jury the question of whether or not plaintiff had successfully carried her burden of proof that death resulted from accidental means, held, there being circumstantial evidence tending to establish that the discharge of a gun was accidental, creating a presumption having probative value in favor of the theory of accident, the question was properly submitted to the jury.

Waddell v Ins. Co., 227-604; 288 NW 643

Unexplained absence. A rebuttable presumption of death arises from the unexplained disappearance of a person for seven years from his usual place of living.

McCoid v Norton, 207-1145; 222 NW 390

Evidence of death—presumption—fugitive from justice. Continued and unexplained absence of an insured from his home or usual place of abode for seven years, notwithstanding diligent efforts of relatives and friends to locate him, creates a jury question on the issue of death, even tho the original disappearance was caused by the fact that he was a defaulter in a large amount.

Rodskier v Ins. Co., 216-121; 248 NW 295

Original notice—substituted service. A return of service of an original notice which reveals service on defendant by service on a proper member of his family is presumed correct, and judgment rendered thereon is valid tho defendant never learned of the notice. Evidence held insufficient to overcome said presumption.

Dickerson v Utterback, 202-255; 207 NW 752

Incapacity to make will not presumed—fact question. One under guardianship is not necessarily incompetent to make a will, for instance, as to a drunkard under guardianship incapacity is not presumed. Evidence failed to establish that testator was intoxicated when he made his will, and his competency, being a fact question when decided in his favor by the court after waiver of a jury, will not be disturbed on appeal.

In re Willer, 225-606; 281 NW 155

Certificate of birth—evidentiary effect. That part of an official certificate of birth which states that the name of the father is unknown is not presumptive evidence of that fact in an action for damages for seduction, and does not contradict direct testimony as to the paternity of the child.

Gardner v Boland, 209-362; 227 NW 902

Birth during lawful wedlock—presumption—proof to overthrow. The presumption of legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock is so strong that it will yield only to clear, satisfactory and practically conclusive proof that the husband was:

1. Impotent, or
2. Entirely absent so as to have no access to the mother, or
3. Entirely absent from the mother at the period during which the child must have been begotten, or
4. Present with the mother under circumstances negating sexual intercourse with her.

Craven v Selway, 216-505; 246 NW 821

Attorney fee allowance. Tho a presumption of correctness exists in favor of trial court's decision fixing compensation for administrator's attorney, yet, where objection is made to application for allowance, and no evidence is introduced as to the services other than a bare statement in the applicant's affidavit, the trial court is not warranted in making a finding involving both nature and value of services.

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

Attempted destruction of intoxicating liquors. The attempt on the part of a person to destroy a liquid while the officers are searching his premises under a warrant constitutes prima-facie proof that the liquid was intoxicating, and intended for unlawful purposes.

State v Barton, 202-530; 210 NW 551

No presumption of election from mere occupancy by spouse. Surviving spouse's occupancy of the homestead will not alone, unless inconsistent with every other right, raise a presumption of an election to occupy the homestead for life.

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

“Wormix”—neither descriptive nor parts of two words. The word, “Wormix”, an artificial word coined and used as the name of a hog remedy, is not descriptive in such sense that it may not be used as a valid trade-mark and registered, nor the fact that it is composed of parts of two words does not disqualify it for registration as a trade-mark. So the use by defendant of the word, "Worm-X", for a similar remedy was held a colorful imitation and an infringement, and where defendant has refused on notice to cease the use of an infringing device, and has continued to infringe, neither a fraudulent intent to injure complainant nor an actual misleading of the public need be proved, but will be presumed.

Feil v American S. Co., 16 F 2d, 88

Credibility of witness. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where defendant complains of the court's instruction which stated in part, "it being presumed in law that a man whose general reputation for truth and veracity is bad would be less likely to tell the truth than one whose reputation is good", such instruction did not tell the jury that defendant had been impeached, that he would not tell the truth, or that they could disregard his testimony (they were only informed of a rule applicable in everyday business transactions)—it being more a statement of the reason for such a rule in impeachment than any direction to the jury, and was in no sense a presumption of guilt, but could only be applied to defendant as a witness. The weight of defendant's testimony was left entirely for the jury.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Withholding evidence. Record reviewed and held to afford no basis for an instruction to the effect that a failure of a party to testify to facts that are wholly within his knowledge raises an inference that if he did testify the testimony would be to his disadvantage.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exch., 221-1382; 268 NW 155

Common knowledge that metal wire will conduct electricity. Farmer 36 years of age familiar with high lines and use of electricity is presumed to have the common knowledge of all intelligent persons that a metal wire will conduct electric current.

Aller v Iowa Electric Co., 227-185; 288 NW 66

(c) BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE

Antenuptial contract—proof. Record held to establish, by copy, an antenuptial contract, the original being lost.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 201-1311; 207 NW 772

Secondary evidence—admissibility as affecting title to real estate. Where title to real estate is not in issue, secondary evidence of title is admissible, when proper foundation for its introduction has been laid, otherwise, if title is in issue.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Copies in lieu of originals—conditions. Carbon copies of letters, the originals of which are in the possession of the adverse party, are not admissible until the originals are properly called for and not produced.

Miller v Fire Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

Loss of writing as foundation for secondary. Proof of the loss of the written authority of an agent justifies the reception in evidence of a printed form with proof that such form substantially embodies the words of the lost writing.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 215-665; 246 NW 615

Deposit in banks. The books of a bank constitute the best evidence of the deposits of estate funds by the administrator—not what appears to be deposit slips and letters of the bank relative thereto.

Varga v Guaranty Co., 215-499; 245 NW 765

Requiring creditor to sue—proof of lost notice and service thereof. The contents of a written notice by a surety to a creditor requiring the creditor to sue on the obligation or to permit the surety so to do in the name of the creditor, and the service of such notice, may be proven by oral evidence when neither the original notice nor a copy thereof can be produced; but such proof must be clear, positive, convincing, and satisfactory. Evidence held to meet the rule.

Cleophas v Walker, 211-122; 233 NW 257

Value of livestock. Competent oral testimony of the value of livestock is admissible even tho a recognized market journal is in evidence showing such values.

Riddle v Railway, 203-1232; 210 NW 770

Authority of corporate officer. It is not erroneous to permit a corporate officer to testify to his authority to sign an instrument on behalf of the corporation, a copy of the authorizing resolution of the corporate directors being before the trial court.

Main v Brown, 202-924; 211 NW 232

Profits made in similar business. On the issue, in an action for an accounting, as to the amount of profits made by defendant in the operation of a gasoline and oil service station during a given time at a given place, plaintiff, in the absence of legally better evidence, may show, as bearing on the probable amount of gasoline and oil sold by defendant, the amount of gasoline and oil sold during said time in question and in said locality by other substantially similar stations, similarly situated, even tho the kind or grade of gasoline and oil sold at said latter stations is different than the gasoline and oil sold by defendant. But said evidence furnishes no basis whatever on which to compute the amount of profits made by defendant unless plaintiff supplements said evidence with proof of the wholesale price paid, and the retail price received,

Standard Oil v Stubbs Co., 221-489; 265 NW 121

Lost will—required proof. In proceedings to establish a lost will, the proponent must prove (1) the due execution and existence of the instrument; (2) that it has been lost and could not be found through diligent search; (3) that the presumption of its destruction by the testator with intention to revoke it, arising from its absence on his death, has been rebutted, and (4) the contents or provisions of the will.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Cause of death—testimony of attending physician nonconclusive. The testimony of a physician as to the cause of death of a person whom the physician personally attended shortly prior to said death is not conclusive, especially when the physician was, at the time of the examination, uncertain as to the cause of death. In other words, expert testimony, on proper hypothetical facts, is admissible to show a cause of death other than that testified to by the attending physician.

Dawson v Life Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

(d) DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

1 In General

Demonstrative evidence—order for production. It is discretionary with the court whether a witness shall or shall not produce demonstrative evidence.

State v Graham, 203-532; 211 NW 244

Identification and materiality. Duly identified demonstrative evidence is admissible when shown to be material.

State v Umphalbaugh, 209-561; 228 NW 266

Demonstrative evidence—identification. Exhibit held sufficiently identified, material and relevant, and properly received in evidence.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Erroneous instruction on fact not existing—failure of circumstantial evidence to overcome error. It is error to assume or state in an instruction that certain facts exist which do not exist, and a presumption of prejudicial error arises therefrom. Therefore, in arson trial, circumstantial evidence was held insufficient to establish defendant's guilt so conclusively as to require a conviction notwithstanding an erroneous instruction on state's evidence of footprints "pointing toward and away from" burned store building when there was no evidence of footprints "pointing toward" such building.

State v Neff, 228- ; 291 NW 415

Instructions not substantiated by evidence—error. In arson trial, an instruction on the state's evidence that footprints "pointing toward and away from" burned store building was held erroneous, in absence of any evidence of footprints pointing toward building.

State v Neff, 228- ; 291 NW 415

2 Blood Tests, Urinalysis, and Other Examinations

Discussion. See 23 ILR 57—Scientific tests for intoxication; 24 ILR 191—Blood test—medico-legal aspects Compulsory examination of defendant's person. An examination of the defendant's person, while in jail, by a physician, cannot be said to have been compulsory, where the only evidence of compulsion was that the sheriff accompanied the physician, but it was not shown that he did or said anything in respect to the examination.

State v Struble, 71-11; 32 NW 1

Blood tests. In the absence of a clear and definite statute so authorizing, state and local boards of health may not, on mere suspicion that a person is afflicted with, or has been exposed to, a venereal disease, cause such person to be compulsorily detained and physically examined by withdrawing blood from the veins and pus smear from the urethra, for the purpose of determining the existence of such disease in such person, even though such examination, while painful, is not dangerous to life. (See 24 Iowa Law Review 191).

Wragg v Griffin, 185-243; 170 NW 400

Blood test—authority to take. When a coroner from another county, without legal warrant and without express or implied assent, acted as a volunteer and went into an operating room and took from an unconscious patient a blood sample to be used in a possible future criminal prosecution, the court was in error in a later manslaughter prosecution against the patient, in receiving in evidence, over timely objections by the defendant, the blood sample and the testimony of experts based thereon.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

Blood tests—expert testimony. Greater care could have been taken in tracing a blood sample from an operating room to a trial seven months later than evidence which showed that it had passed through the hands of several persons, not all of them being identified, and had been kept for a time in some sort of mailboxes in a doctor's office in another city. Without more foundation, a statement by the doctor at the trial that the blood sample was then in the same condition as it was in the beginning was a mere conclusion.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

Blood test and urinalysis—testimony as hearsay. In prosecution for driving while intoxicated, physician's testimony concerning analysis of blood and urine of defendant was not objectionable as hearsay on the ground that an assistant made the analysis when the doctor testified that "together we analyzed it."

State v Morkrid, (NOR); 286 NW 412

Blood tests and urinalysis—voluntaryism. Admission of evidence of blood test and urinalysis in prosecution for drunken driving is not objectionable as compelling defendant to be a witness against himself when the evidence disclosed that the analyzed substances were given up voluntarily and without compulsion or entrapment.

State v Morkrid, (NOR); 286 NW 412

3 Physical Injuries

Exhibiting wounds to jury. During the final arguments in a personal injury case, the court may permit the plaintiff to seat himself alongside the jury in order that the jury may have a close-up view of wounds which, during the taking of testimony, have been fully described and exhibited to the jurors while some of them were twenty feet from the witnesses.

Mizner v Lohr, 213-1182; 238 NW 584

Exhibition of injured body. An injured party, in an action for damages, has a right to disrobe and exhibit to the jury his actual injury and the result thereof tho they present a most pitiable sight.

Olson v Tyner, 219-251; 257 NW 538

Presumption attending injuries. In the absence of direct or circumstantial evidence to the contrary, physical injuries to a person are presumed accidental.

Dewey v Ins. Co., 218-1220; 257 NW 308

4 Articles and Objects

Identity of object. The identity of an object may be established (1) by proof of facts and circumstances and (2) by positive identification by a witness who has first revealed his positive knowledge on the subject.

State v Umphalbaugh, 209-561; 228 NW 266

Nonpresented issue. Household furnishings, especially when they have been in use for some three years, are inadmissible to show their condition, when the sole issue before the jury is as to the contract price.

Braverman v Naso, 203-1297; 214 NW 574

Illegal possession of liquors—articles seized on search. In a prosecution for willful and unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, a still seized, together with liquors, during a search of defendant's premises is admissible over the general objections of incompetency, immateriality, and irrelevancy.

State v Matthes, 210-178; 230 NW 522

Identification of subject matter. It is proper to ask a witness whether certain liquors purporting to come from a named place had been delivered to him for analysis, such liquors being otherwise properly identified.

State v Olson, 200-660; 204 NW 278

(e) ADMISSIONS IN GENERAL

Cautious consideration of. Principle reaffirmed that admissions, as a rule, are to be considered with caution and scrutinized with care.

Kuhn v KJose, 216-36; 248 NW 230

Plea of guilty in criminal prosecution. A plea of guilty in a criminal prosecution may be admissible as an admission when the judgment entered thereon would not be admissible.

In re Johnston, 220-328; 261 NW 908; 262 NW 488

Admissions—plea of guilty. In a civil action, the plea of guilty to a criminal prosecution involving the same transaction is admissible as an admission but is not conclusive when the criminal defendant, as a witness in the civil action, gives testimony tending to contradict his plea of guilty.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Offers of compromise—nonviolation of general rule. The reception in evidence of a written "agreement for arbitration" of a loss is not violative of the rule that "offers of compromise" are inadmissible.

Hansell v Ins. Co., 209-378; 228 NW 88

Admissions against interest—admissibility. Testimony by a party against his own interest is admissible in a subsequent proceeding against him wherein said testimony is material.

Stark v White, 215-899; 245 NW 337

Admissions of counsel in lieu of testimony. The admission of a material fact by counsel in the course of a trial and for the purpose thereof becomes a part of the record just as tho said fact had been established by testimony in the ordinary manner.

Azeltine v Lutterman, 218-675; 254 NW 854

Opinion by attorney—effect. The written opinion of an attorney as to the law governing a certain matter is not admissible against the client to whom the opinion is addressed.

In re Dodge, 207-374; 223 NW 106

Insured's settlement offer— inadmissibility. A letter written by plaintiff's attorney before trial offering settlement without expense of litigation is inadmissible in a trial on the merits seeking recovery on an automobile theft insurance policy.

Whisler v Ins. Co., 224-201; 276 NW 606

Counsel revealing offer of compromise. Statements by plaintiff's counsel in his opening statement to the jury to the effect that defendant had offered to compromise the claim sued on, together with testimony by plaintiff to the same effect, constitutes reversible error, even tho said testimony is stricken from the record and the jury is admonished not to consider it.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 218-559; 255 NW 705

Admissions of attorney—effect. The admission of an attorney, made during a trial, as to the agency of a party for his client, is not necessarily binding on the client in other and subsequent litigation of a similar nature.

Iowa Co. v Seaman, 203-310; 210 NW 937

Admissions by attorney—conditions. Admissions of fact by an attorney are admissible against his client when said admissions are relevant and material and within the actual or ostensible scope of the attorney's employment, and are not in effect an offer of compromise.

Suntken v Suntken, 223-347; 272 NW 132

Signature on notes not admitted by spouse. The mere act of a wife in joining with her husband in the execution of a deed of the husband's property, in payment of certain notes executed by the husband, cannot be deemed a recognition or admission by her of personal liability on the notes when she did not know that her name had been signed to the notes.

West Chester Bank v Dayton, 217-64; 250 NW 695

Admissions of husband—when inadmissible against wife. In an action against a wife to subject her homestead to a judgment which had been rendered against her husband on his debt antedating the acquisition by the wife of her said homestead, admissions of the husband tending to show that he furnished the money to pay for the said homestead are not binding on, or admissible against, the wife.

Price v Scharpff, 220-125; 261 NW 511

Admissions of wife against husband. Admissions by a wife in the absence of the husband, tending to show that a claimant in probate had been employed in the business and had not been paid, are admissible against the estate of the husband when it appears that the wife was both the general manager of the business in question and a partner therein with her husband.

Nortman v Lally, 204-638; 215 NW 713

Pleading as evidence—withdrawal of admission—effect. An admission by a party in his pleading is admissible against him even tho by an amended pleading he has withdrawn his admission.

Beery v Glynn, 214-635; 243 NW 365

Allegations in one count not admissions as to another count. Different theories of recovery contained in separate counts of a petition are not admissions by which the plaintiff is bound under the rule that he may not controvert his own pleading.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308

Judgment by default—no admission of cause of action. Principle reaffirmed that a default is not an admission of a valid cause of action where none is pleaded.

Neilan v Lytle Inv. Co., 223-987; 274 NW 103

Rejection and reception of same evidence. Undue strictness in rejecting admissions by plaintiff tending to show that he was to blame for an accident is harmless when the record reveals the fact that such admissions ultimately found their way into the record.

Handlon v Henshaw, 206-771; 221 NW 489

By employee—competency. Admissions by an employee may be competent evidence against such employee while wholly incompetent against the employer.

Glass v Ice Cream Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

By employee—competency. Statements by an employee of an electric light company made about an hour after a fatal accident to the effect that "there was a liability to the case" are inherently incompetent, especially when authority to make such statement is not shown.

Cox v Light Co., 209-931; 229 NW 244

Nonconcerted action of tort-feasors. In a joint action against two or more tort-feasors for damages consequent on their concurring negligence, plaintiff has the right to prove what each did or said, as affecting joint liability. So held where the court properly received the culpable admission of one of the tort-feasors, made after the happening of the accident.

McDonald v Robinson, 207-1293; 224 NW 820; 62 ALR 1419; 34 NCCA 306

Admissions of heirs and devisees. Where there are several devisees or legatees whose interests are several and not joint, the declarations of one are not admissible for the reason that they might operate to the prejudice of the others. In general, the admissions of an heir are not admissible to prove a claim against an estate unless he is the only heir interested upon that side of the action.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Declarations in disparagement of title—admissibility. On the issue whether defendant was a donee of certain bonds and had been such prior to the death of the alleged donor, a writing executed by the alleged donee subsequent to the making of the alleged gift, and tending to show ownership at said time in the alleged donor, is admissible against the alleged donee as in the nature of an admission in disparagement of donee's alleged claim.

Malcor v Johnson, 223-644; 273 NW 145

Damaging statements—failure to deny as admission. Evidence of the failure of a person to reply to material statements made in his presence and hearing, concerning facts affecting his rights, is competent if the statements are of such character and are made under such conditions that a denial would have been natural had the statements been untrue and incorrect.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Attempt to suppress testimony. While an attempt by the defendant to keep an adverse witness from testifying is not necessarily an admission by him that his claim or defense is false, yet such attempt is in effect an admission by the defendant that the testimony sought to be suppressed is unfavorable to his cause; and instructions to this effect, on supporting evidence, are proper.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Bribery as indicating unfavorable admission. Attempt by a defendant to bribe a witness is indicative of an admission on his part that his cause or claim is unjust, dishonest, and unrighteous; and the court may so instruct the jury on supporting testimony.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Agent—corruption of witness. An interwoven transaction tending to show that a defendant and a third party were working in conjunction to corrupt a witness, and consisting of conversations in part between said witness and said third person, and in part between all three said parties, is admissible—the court carefully limiting the jury in the consideration of said testimony.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Destruction of property—evidence of value. In motor carrier's action on liability insurance policy for loss of property destroyed by fire in freight terminal, plaintiff has burden of proof as to its "custody and control" of goods within policy provisions, also as to value thereof, and stipulation as to value of certain goods on which claims had been paid by insured does not admit value of other goods in absence of competent proof thereof.

Amer. Alliance Ins. v Brady Co., 101 F 2d, 144

Civil service—taking examination not admission of necessity. A Sioux City policeman who served as a patrolman for about 14 years and was then promoted to rank of detective, in which capacity he served for about 4 years until demoted to former position of patrolman, came within purview of statute enacted during his service as a detective providing that any person having " * * * 5 years of service in a position or positions, shall retain his position and have full civil service rights * * *" without examination. Hence his demotion without cause was improper, and the fact that he had taken examinations for position of detective did not amount to an admission that an examination was necessary in his case.

Brown v Sturgeon, 227-136; 287 NW 834

Precautionary unbalanced instructions—correction by court. The court may very properly correct a requested precautionary instruction relative to the consideration by the jury of admissions by a deceased, by balancing the instruction, and making it applicable to the admissions of all parties to the action, including the deceased.

Halstead v Rohret, 212-837; 235 NW 293

(f) DECLARATIONS

1 In General

Impeachment—interest in outcome of litigation. An impeaching witness may not testify to declarations of another witness tending to show that such other witness had an interest in the pending litigation, no proper foundation for such declarations appearing.

Cleophas v Walker, 211-122; 233 NW 257

Alienation of affection—declarations of wife. In an action by a husband for damages for alienation of affection, declarations of the wife made long after she had separated from her husband, and explanatory of such separation, are manifestly hearsay.

McGlothlen v Mills, 221-204; 265 NW 117

Declarations of insured. Declarations, not part of the res gestae, of an insured under an accident policy of insurance, tending to prove that an injury to the insured was self-inflicted, are not admissible against the beneficiary of the policy.

Pride v Assn., 207-167; 216 NW 62; 62 ALR 31

Agent as witness—individual (?) or agency (?) transaction. The president of a bank may testify that in a certain transaction he was not acting for or on behalf of the bank of which he was president, but was acting in and with reference to an individual transaction of his own.

Security Bank v Bigelow, 205-695, 216 NW 96

Knowledge of insolvency of bank—declarations subsequent to receipt of deposit. On the issue whether a bank deposit was received by the accused with knowledge of the bank's insolvency, declarations by the accused subsequent to the receipt of the deposit, tending to show that he then, and at the time of the deposit, knew that the bank was insolvent, are admissible.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Impeachment of title by grantor. Principle recognized that the grantor in a deed of con-

Jones v Betz, 203-767; 210 NW 609; 213 NW 282

Damaging statements—failure to deny as admission. Evidence of the failure of a person to reply to material statements made in his presence and hearing, concerning facts affecting his rights, is competent if the statements are of such character and are made under such conditions that a denial would have been natural had the statements been untrue and incorrect.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Declarations of injured party. The declarations of an injured party, made shortly after receiving the injury, as to the manner in which the injury was received, may be admissible as substantive evidence.

Califore v Railway, 220-676; 263 NW 29

Undue influence—declarations of testator. Declarations of a testator that he intended to make disposition of his property in a manner different than that provided in the subsequently executed will is inadmissible on the issue of undue influence.

In re Diver, 214-497; 240 NW 622

Declaration by one of several heirs or devisees. Where there are several devisees or legatees whose interests are several and not joint, the declarations of one are not admissible for the reason that they might operate to the prejudice of the others. In general, the admissions of an heir are not admissible to prove a claim against an estate unless he is the only heir interested upon that side of the action.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Illegitimacy in general—declarations admissible. Declarations of the deceased mother of a child born out of lawful wedlock, as to who was the father of said child, are admissible on the issue of paternity; also like declarations of other members of the family as a matter of family history. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to establish plaintiff's paternity.

Hopp v Petkin, 222-609; 269 NW 758

Bastards—nonallowable evidence. The illegitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock, without proof that the husband was impotent or had no sexual access to the mother, cannot be established by the declarations of the mother, or of the putative father, or of said child, nor by proof of the mother's adultery.

This does not imply that after illegitimacy has been made to appear, by competent proof, the declarations of the putative father and of the mother are not admissible to identify the actual father.

Craven v Selway, 216-505; 246 NW 821

2 Self-serving Declarations

Inadmissibility. Self-serving declarations of a party are inadmissible.

Ankeney v Brenton, 214-357; 238 NW 71

Claim against estate not negated by statements of spouse. Self-serving declarations of a husband or wife during their lifetime are inadmissible to negative a claim in probate against the estate of the husband.

Nortman v Lally, 204-638; 215 NW 713

Gifts inter vivos—self-serving acts—incompetency. An alleged donee may not affirmatively establish the gift by testifying to his own prior self-serving acts and declarations.

Malcor v Johnson, 223-644; 273 NW 145

Self-serving declarations made to physician. In an action for damages for injuries received by plaintiff almost a year previously when a rug fell on her in defendant's store, it was prejudicial error to allow a physician, who had never attended her but had examined her shortly before the trial in order to enable him to give evidence at the trial, to testify over objections as to self-serving declarations concerning her health made at that time by plaintiff, and to allow him to answer hypothetical questions based partly upon the incompetent testimony.

Mitchell v Ward & Co., 226-956; 285 NW 187

Sales—action to recover price paid—letters inadmissible. A contract of sale fully executed and no longer in controversy may be so related to and connected with a later contract between the same parties that the correspondence attending the former may be admissible as interpreting the latter, but the offerer must not be permitted to go to the extent of showing, by his own self-serving letters, his dissatisfaction with the goods furnished to him under said first contract, and the loss he suffered thereunder.

Appel v Carr, 216-64; 246 NW 608

3 Dying Declarations

Discussion. See 16 ILR 530—Dying declarations

Decedent's statements concerning will. Decedent's statements, made to the person who drew a will for him, that he wished to make a will and that he wished a certain person to have all his property, were admissible after his death as an exception to the hearsay rule to prove his existing state of mind at the time and to show that his plan was put into effect by making such a will.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

(g) HEARSAY

Discussion. See 16 ILR 92—Pedigree declarations

Res gestae. Hearsay which is no part of the res gestae is inadmissible.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

Expert—answers to be based on experience. An expert may not testify to matters of fact or opinion which are not based on his own knowledge or experience, but on what he has read.

Evans v Utilities Co., 205-283; 218 NW 66

Physician's observation concerning X-ray. The statement of a physician, not a party to an action, relative to an X-ray picture exhibited to him is hearsay and, therefore, incompetent.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Workmen's compensation. Hearsay evidence is not admissible nor competent to prove any of the basic facts in a compensation case. So held, as to statements made by deceased employee to doctor that injury was received in course of employment.

Schuler v Cudahy Co., 223-1323; 275 NW 39

Physician's opinion—hearsay. The inclusion in a physician's report to an insurance company, of his opinion, that an employee sustaining an eye injury had no vision in that eye previous to the accident, is hearsay evidence.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Competent sustaining evidence necessary—hearing before commission. Where, in a proceeding before the civil service commission, incompetent hearsay evidence, in the form of minutes of testimony before a grand jury, is considered on the question of whether suspended police officers should be reinstated, the supreme court on review in certiorari must examine the record to ascertain if there is other competent evidence to support the commission's ruling.

Luke v Civil Service, 225-189; 279 NW 443

Information of accused concerning crime charged. What an accused has been told about an offense for which he is on trial is immaterial and hearsay.

State v Papst, 221-770; 266 NW 498

Hearsay brought out in cross-examination. Defendant who, on cross-examination of the state's witness, first enters the forbidden field of hearsay testimony on a certain point, is not in an advantageous position to object when the state, on redirect, follows into the same field of inquiry, especially when the testimony erroneously received is not inherently prejudicial and is practically that which was brought out by defendant on cross-examination.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Libel evidence excluded. Evidence as to criminal libel reviewed, and held to be in the nature of hearsay, and properly excluded.

State v Heptonstall, 209-123; 227 NW 616

Slander of title—evidence—competency. Plaintiff in an action for damages consequent on the loss of a sale of his property because of a slander of his title by defendant manifestly will not be permitted to establish by hearsay evidence that the prospective purchaser would have been able to procure a first mortgage loan in a certain amount,—such being a condition of the contemplated sale,—let alone by evidence of a less satisfactory nature.

Farmers Bank v Hintz, 206-911; 221 NW 540

Assault—remarks—incompetency. Plaintiff, in an action for damages consequent on an assault, may not testify as to the "remarks" that her friends and neighbors made to her relative to the assault, such "remarks" being hearsay.

McQueen v Safeway Stores, 214-1300; 244 NW 278

Statement concerning absent person. Evidence of what a school treasurer said to the school board on a matter material to an absent party is in the nature of hearsay, and properly excluded.

School District v Morris, 208-588; 226 NW 66

Deposition based on unidentified records. A deposition is properly excluded for incompetency (and hearsay) when offered in evidence on the trial, when it appears from the deposition itself that the testimony of the witness is based wholly on unidentified hospital records, the correctness and verity of which the witness has no personal knowledge.

Foy v Ins. Co., 220-628; 263 NW 14

Date of letter. Testimony reviewed, contradictory of the testimony of another witness as to the time a letter was written, and held not to constitute a conclusion nor hearsay.

Cleophas v Walker, 211-122; 233 NW 257

Letters demanding payment excluded. In an action on a note by alleged holder in due course, letters written by prior indorsee, after maturity, demanding payment from maker were properly excluded as hearsay, and in the absence of any disproof of prima facie case made under such circumstances it is not the duty of the court to submit case to jury solely on matter of credibility of witness.

Colthurst v Lake View Bank, 18 F 2d, 875

Admission by assignor of chose. In an action on a chose in action by the assignee thereof, suing on behalf of himself and said assignor (because the assignor had retained an interest in the claim), an affidavit by the assignor, containing a recital of facts materially discrediting the claimed chose in action, is admissible even tho made long after the assignment was executed.

Lake v Moots, 215-126; 244 NW 693

Fraud—connected transactions. Fraudulent transactions may be so related, connected, and interwoven that evidence thereof may be admissible against a party who was not present at the transaction.

Leach v Edgerton, 203-512; 211 NW 538

Cancellation of deed—incompetent testimony. In an action by a grantor to set aside deed, testimony as to the contents of statements made by grantor to his attorneys eight days after execution of deed, was incompetent and inadmissible.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Decedent's statements concerning will. Decedent's statements, made to the person who drew a will for him, that he wished to make a will and that he wished a certain person to have all his property, were admissible after his death as an exception to the hearsay rule to prove his existing state of mind at the time and to show that his plan was put into effect by making such a will.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Conversation with deceased. When a person who had talked with the decedent shortly before decedent's death testified that the decedent told him that he had made a will, where it was made, and who were witnesses to the will, the testimony, when not objected to, could be given its full probative effect, and came under an exception to the hearsay rule to show the then state of mind of the decedent, tending to prove the prior execution of the will.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Lost will—contents shown by subscribing witness. The contents of a lost will were sufficiently established by testimony of a subscribing witness who heard the testator tell the scrivener how he wanted to dispose of his property, and heard the will read aloud to the testator who signed it without suggesting any change in the contents, when the testimony met all the requirements justifying an exception to the hearsay rule.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Statements of third party—competency. Principle recognized that a witness may testify to a statement of a third party for the purpose of showing a motive for his actions, but the evidence thus introduced goes only to the question whether such statement was made, not to the truth of such statement.

State v Brown, 218-166; 253 NW 836

Conversation proved by hearsay. Evidence of a conversation which otherwise would be hearsay and inadmissible is admissible when the issue is whether the conversation was actually had.

Graeser v Jones, 217-499; 251 NW 162

Persons who made statement identified. A witness who states that, on a named occasion, a party litigant asked him to name the persons who had asserted the existence of a certain fact does not testify to hearsay evidence by detailing his responsive answer.

McColl v Jordan, 200-961; 205 NW 838

Unobjected to, relevant hearsay evidence considered. In the absence of objection, relevant hearsay evidence may be given consideration.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Alimony—unsupported modification. A decree in divorce action may not be subsequently modified on hearsay evidence of misconduct on the part of one of the parties.

McDaniel v McDaniel, 218-772; 253 NW 803

Corporate stockholder—statement by spouse. On the issue whether defendant was a corporate stockholder, declarations of her husband made out of her presence and hearing and apparently without any authority from her are hearsay and inadmissible.

Gruetzmacher v Quevli, 208-537; 226 NW 5

Alienation of affections. Plaintiff in an action against the parents of her husband for damages for alienating the affections of her husband must not, under the guise of showing the state of mind of her husband toward her, be permitted to testify to a recital by her husband of what his parents had said to him about the plaintiff.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

Bastardy—incompetent declarations by prosecutrix. On the issue as to the paternity of a child, statements by the prosecutrix, not in the presence of the defendant, to the effect that defendant was the father of her child, are wholly incompetent.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

Declarations and letters as to paternity. Ante litem motam declarations and letters of deceased parties relating to the parentage of a certain person, even tho they are not related to such person by blood or marriage, are admissible on the issue of parentage when such declarants and writers stood in such relation to the person in question as to give assurance that they would know the real truth as to such parentage, and could not be mistaken. For a stronger reason, similar declarations and letters of those related by blood or marriage to the person in question are admissible.

(b) DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE IN GENERAL1 In General

Discussion. See 14 ILR 326—Hospital records; 24 ILR 436—Introduction of documents; 24 ILR 751—Business entries—proposed uniform act

Identification of exhibits. Exhibits are receivable in evidence only when properly identified.

State v Halley, 203-192; 210 NW 749

Excluded evidence otherwise received. Excluding exhibits when the contents thereof so far as material are otherwise admitted presents no error.

Ankeney v Brenton, 214-357; 238 NW 71

Failure to mark exhibit—correction. Failure during trial to identify by proper exhibit mark a volume, portions of which were offered in evidence, may, pending appeal, be corrected on motion before the trial court.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 253 NW 84

Exhibit treated by parties as being before the court. The court is not in error in treating an exhibit as in evidence when the party litigants have treated and regarded it as in evidence.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

Improper reception of evidence cured by withdrawal and instructions. The improper reception of noninflammatory evidence is cured by the subsequent withdrawal of the evidence and by pointed instructions to the jury not to consider said evidence.

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

Dragnet objections—exhibit partly admissible. A dragnet objection to an exhibit is properly overruled when the exhibit is clearly admissible in part and when the objector makes no effort to separate the admissible from the inadmissible or to expunge from the record the inadmissible part.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Books of accounts made from sales slips. A book of accounts showing the date of purchase, nature of article sold, and amount, made up from sales slips, constitutes a book of original entries, all other statutory elements of such books being made to appear.

Yunker Bros. v Meredith, 217-1130; 253 NW 58

Summary of books and records. Principle reaffirmed that a duly identified and verified summary of voluminous books and records may be admissible in connection with said books and records.

State v Dobry, 217-858; 250 NW 702

Identification of goods by inventories. In an action against an execution plaintiff for conversion of goods stored in certain "boxes, barrels, and trunks," and sold in bulk, without inventory of the contents, plaintiff may introduce duly identified and detailed inventories of the contents, on a showing that such inventories represent the contents of said "boxes, barrels, and trunks."

Antes v Coal Co., 203-485; 210 NW 767

Examination of witness—memory-refreshing memoranda. An inventory of goods which a witness shows was correct when made may be used by the witness to refresh his memory, and is admissible for that purpose.

Antes v Coal Co., 203-485; 210 NW 767

Discovery—order to produce—effect. An order to produce books and papers is not a ruling that, when produced, the books and papers will be admissible as legal evidence.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Ownership of property—insurance policy. On the issue of ownership of personal property, plaintiff may introduce (for what it is worth) a policy of insurance carried by him on the property, especially when defendant is insisting that plaintiff's claim of ownership is a belated afterthought.

Antes v Coal Co., 203-485; 210 NW 767

Fire insurance—proof of loss. Exhibit held inadmissible to establish the giving of statutory proofs of loss.

Havirland v Ins. Co., 204-335; 213 NW 762

Excessive offer—justifiable rejection. A party may not complain of the rejection of his offer in evidence of a pleading when he makes no effort to separate the relevant from the irrelevant matter and to confine his offer to the relevant matter only.

People's Bk. v Smith, 210-136; 230 NW 565; 69 ALR 399

Tables of life expectancy. The introduction of tables of life expectancy is not a condition precedent to the recovery of damages for future pain.

Cuthbertson v Hoffa, 205-666; 216 NW 733

Life tables—effect. Life tables are not conclusive on the subject of life expectancy, and instructions should carefully elucidate such fact.

Drouillard v Rudolph, 207-367; 223 NW 100

Improper disregard. The court, in its quest for a fact, may not, by assumption based on speculation or inference, refuse to accord force and effect to undisputed, unimpeached, and non-discredited documentary evidence which unequivocally establishes said fact, especially when the fact arises out of a somewhat remote transaction, and when the party carrying the burden of proving said fact is hampered in his proof by reason of the death of parties who had knowledge of said transaction and by his own incompetency resulting from said deaths.

In re Allis, 221-918; 267 NW 683

Ledgers—correctness—who may testify. Testimony of vice-president of bank as to correctness of ledger held inadmissible where it appeared that ledger was posted by assistant cashier and bookkeeper.

Andrew v Bank, (NOR); 213 NW 271

Evidence in other proceeding—inadmissible against nonparty. A transcript of the original, official shorthand notes of a witness in proceedings auxiliary to execution, to which proceedings the witness was not a party, is inadmissible as substantive evidence in a subsequent proceeding against the witness wherein a conveyance is sought to be set aside as fraudulent; neither is such transcript admissible, in the absence of proper foundation, to show the admissions of, or to impeach, the witness.

Hawkins v VerMeulen, 211-1279; 231 NW 361

Action by subcontractor—principal contract admissible. A subcontractor under a building contract is impliedly bound by the standards of performance provided in the principal contract; therefore it is error to reject the principal contractor's offer of such contract as evidence.

Lantz v Goodwin, 210-605; 231 NW 331

Bylaws—insufficient proof. A bylaw may not be deemed established by the mere introduction in evidence of the minute book of the corporation which reveals the presence of the alleged bylaw on pages of the book prior to the commencement of the official minutes of the corporation, which minutes contain no reference to bylaws.

Home Bank v Ratcliffe, 206-201; 220 NW 36

Exhibits bearing on nonissuable matter. In an action for damages consequent on the making of improper loans, exhibits bearing on loans should be confined in their admissibility to the loans to which they have application.

Pease v Bank, 204-70; 214 NW 486

Tax receipts. On the trial of a petition for a new trial because of the discovery of an old and forgotten deed, tax receipts which show who paid the taxes before, and who paid the taxes after, the execution of such deed may be admissible.

Mills v Hall, 202-340; 209 NW 291

General denial—chattel mortgage not admissible thereunder in replevin action. General denial puts in issue only facts pleaded in the petition. So, under a general denial to a replevin action for an automobile, evidence of a prior mortgage is properly excluded, when not pleaded, inasmuch as, under a general denial, the court is not called upon to decide which lien is first but only the question of whether plaintiff is entitled to possession.

General Motors v Koch, 225-897; 281 NW 728

Unsigned copy of fidelity bond—inadmissible. In action by a surety company against defendant, who was covered by a fidelity bond and who agreed to indemnify plaintiff against loss sustained by reason of its executing fidelity bond in his behalf, it was error to admit in evidence instrument purporting to be a certified copy of the bond, but containing no signatures and which was admittedly no true and genuine copy of original bond.

Fidelity Deposit Co. v Ryan, 225-1260; 282 NW 721

Notes—nonadmissibility as evidence. Promissory notes, when offered in evidence, are properly excluded as to a party not shown to be liable thereon.

West Chester Bank v Dayton, 217-64; 250 NW 695

Heirs' rights—evidence of shares. Where a farm, comprising a part of an estate which is settled without administration by vesting control in one of the heirs under a trust agreement, is sold, and several first and second mortgages are taken in part payment and divided among the heirs, and title subsequently reverts to trustee without foreclosure, the mortgages, altho losing their effect as liens, serve as evidencing respective share of each heir.

Meeker v Meeker, (NOR); 283 NW 873

Preferred stockholders' rights—proof by articles of incorporation. Rights of preferred stockholders in a bankrupt corporation's assets are subject to all debts of the corporation, including general creditors, and instruments having attributes commonly attached to preferred stock are construed as stock unless contrary intention clearly appears, in which respect the articles of incorporation are held competent to prove meaning and legal effect of certificates purporting to be issued under such articles.

In re Hicks-Fuller Co., 9 F 2d, 492

Objections—waiver by introducing exhibit. Objections made by the defendant to testimony given by the plaintiff's witness on direct examination were not waived when the defendant introduced an exhibit containing written statements made by the witness which tended to weaken his oral testimony. But objections by the defendant to other testimony in the direct examination were waived by statements in the exhibit supporting the testimony to which objections had been made.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Ancient documents—conditions of admission. Church records of parish church in Sweden, signed by the rector and church custodian, were admissible as ancient documents when they were over 30 years old, when they were obtained from the proper custody, when they were certified as true exhibits from the consulate of Sweden, and where there were no suspicious appearances.

Bergman v Carson, 226-449; 284 NW 442

Tax deed as evidence under statute. Statutes, providing that a tax deed shall be presumptive evidence of certain things and conclusive evidence of others, are construed to mean that unless the tax deed is received in evidence there is no evidence of the tax deed before the court, and when a tax deed is introduced in evidence a prima facie case is established of the regularity of all proceedings prior to its execution. Such statutory provisions with a tendency adverse to the owner of the title under a tax deed are construed most strictly in his favor.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

2 Public Records and Documents (See also §11296, et seq.)

Ballots—prima facie showing. Principle reaffirmed that ballots are prima facie admissible in evidence when it is shown that they have come through the channels and from the custodian provided by law, and have been so guarded and preserved by the legal custodian thereof as to exclude all reasonable possibility of tampering.

Tyler v Klaver, 220-1124; 264 NW 37

City ordinance in re flagman—lack of relevancy. A city ordinance which requires a railway company, during certain hours, to maintain a flagman at one of its street crossings, is neither relevant nor material when the accident did not occur during said hours, but at a time substantially thereafter.

Miller v Railway, 223-316; 272 NW 96

Census enumerator's report. In probate proceedings to establish heirship of certain claimants through the deceased spouse of an intestate (who died without issue), the trial court erroneously disregarded a census enumerator's report which showed that intestate was married and that she had no children. While such record was a hearsay statement, yet because of circumstances under which it was made, and because it is a part of a public record, it would have been admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Official certificates of death—admissibility. A certificate of death not signed, executed, and certified in accordance with the laws governing the disposal of dead bodies is inadmissible as evidence in an action between private parties.

Morton v Ins. Co., 218-846; 254 NW 325; 96 ALR 315

Certificate as to stillborn infant. A certified copy of a return by a physician showing the delivery, by a Caesarean operation, of a stillborn infant, while proper evidence, may have but little bearing on the issue whether said stillborn possessed an independent circulation after being fully separated from the mother.

Wehrman v Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

Records of former compensation claim inadmissible. Records in the industrial commissioner's office as to a former compensation claim are inadmissible when they have no bearing on the merits of the claim at bar.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Bankruptcy proceeding—certified records admissible. Records certified to by the clerk of the United States District Court as to the existence of a bankruptcy proceeding are competent evidence of said bankruptcy admissible in the state courts.

Bagley v Bates, 224-637; 276 NW 797

Federal income tax from receiver. In an action involving a claim for federal income tax from an insolvent corporation, the assessment by the internal revenue collector must be treated as prima facie evidence of the amount due, and the state statutes do not control the matter of deduction for attorney fees, referee fees, court costs, and other expenses, but the burden is on the receiver to establish these deductions.

State v American B. & C. Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

Certified copies—federal statute—effect. The admissibility of evidence relating to a non-judicial public record of a foreign state (foreclosure of mortgage by "advertisement and sale") is not restricted by the federal statutes relating to the form of authentication of such record.

Bristow v Lange, 221-904; 266 NW 808

Photostatic copies—government documents duly authenticated. Photostatic copies of government documents, duly authenticated, are accepted instrumentalities of introducing official records. Tax returns are public records, the filing and preserving of which are official acts.

Cooper v United States, 9 F 2d, 216

2. Public Records and Documents—concluded

Inadmissible assessment rolls showing non-existence of note. Since a party assessed need not list all liabilities, assessment rolls, which fail to show a liability promissory note of decedent, are not thereby admissible as evidence to prove the note never existed nor constituted a real indebtedness.

In re Cheney's Estate, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Assessment rolls—contradictory statements—unallowable purpose. Assessment rolls covering personal property of the taxpayer and the total value thereof, and introduced for purpose of impeachment, are not also receivable for the purpose of showing the value placed on a particular article when the owner demonstrates that the article was not given in for taxation.

Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

Eminent domain—assessment rolls as evidence. In eminent domain proceedings, the duly signed assessment roll of the property in question is admissible for the purpose of showing the assessed value.

Duggan v State, 214-230; 242 NW 98

Tax deed as evidence under statute. Statutes providing that a tax deed shall be presumptive evidence of certain things and conclusive evidence of others, are construed to mean that unless the tax deed is received in evidence there is no evidence of the tax deed before the court, and when a tax deed is introduced in evidence a prima facie case is established of the regularity of all proceedings prior to its execution. Such statutory provisions with a tendency adverse to the owner of the title under a tax deed are construed most strictly in his favor.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Tax deed extinguishing special assessment lien. An injunction restraining a county treasurer from selling real estate at tax sale for special assessments could not be sustained on the ground that tax deeds issued at a sale for general taxes extinguished the lien of the special assessments when the tax deeds were never introduced in evidence to enable the court to rule on whether the statutory requirements had been properly performed to make the tax deed valid.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Tax sale register as evidence of tax certificates. In an action to enjoin a county treasurer from selling at tax sale land on which the county held either certificates of tax sale or tax deeds, books designated as "tax sale registers" containing the county record of tax sales were competent evidence of the issuance of tax certificates to the county, although not evidence of the county's alleged tax deeds.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Certificate of county recorder. The certificate of the county recorder showing the recording or filing of a chattel mortgage is competent and admissible evidence.

Wertheimer v Parsons, 209-1241; 229 NW 829

Notice and proof of service—drainage record book admissible. In action to cancel tax sale certificate for an unpaid drainage assessment, to enjoin issuance of treasurer's deed therefor, and to further enjoin the collection of remaining assessments on ground that drainage district was not legally established because of defective notice and failure to file proof of service, the drainage record book kept by auditor showing compliance with statutory requirements was admissible, and failure to give correct name of mortgagee in proceeding to establish the district was not a jurisdictional defect where proposed ditch did not extend through or abut upon land covered by the mortgage. (§1989-a3, S., '13.)

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

3 Private Memoranda and Statements in General (See also §§11272, 11279, et seq.)

Offers en masse. An offer in evidence, en masse, of voluminous record filings, consisting of both material and immaterial matter, is very properly rejected.

Bates v Brooks, 222-1128; 270 NW 867; 109 ALR 1371

Hotel register—dual purpose. A hotel register may become material and therefore admissible in evidence, not only for the purpose of impeaching a witness who asserted he had registered at the hotel, but as tending to show the presence of the witness at the time in question at the scene of an accident.

Ritter v Fort Madison, 212-564; 234 NW 814

Bills and notes—admissibility when signature not denied. A promissory note, duly pleaded and incorporated in the pleading, by original or copy, is receivable in evidence without further proof,—unless the purported maker of the signature, under oath, properly denies said signature.

Strand v Halverson, 220-1276; 264 NW 266; 103 ALR 835

Taxation—deed not admissible to show value. The recitals of consideration in deeds of conveyances are not admissible to prove the value of real estate for the purpose of taxation.

Iowa Corp. v Board, 209-687; 228 NW 623

Deed—not impeached by will. The ex parte recitals in a will by a grantor of real estate are insufficient to impeach the title conveyed by the deed.

Bibler v Bibler, 205-639; 216 NW 99

Escrow agent's memorandum made in absence of parties. An escrow agent's understanding of the arrangement by which he was to record deeds after the death of the grantor, noted on the envelope in the absence of the parties, is not admissible in evidence as to the substance of the arrangement and would be of doubtful evidentiary value even if admitted.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Memoranda—admissibility. Mere memoranda book entries, when material, are admissible on proper foundation. So held as to entries tending to show when a note was received by a bank.

Farmers Bk. v DeWolf, 212-312; 233 NW 524

Bank ledger. It is not erroneous to receive in evidence the ledger of a bank for the purpose of showing the credits of a depositor, the correctness of such book being first established; and it is immaterial that the account reveals credit items not in controversy.

Ryan v Cooper, 201-220; 205 NW 302

Corporation statement—insufficient authentication. A purported financial statement of a corporation is manifestly inadmissible, in the absence of testimony as to its authenticity or as to the author thereof and the circumstances of its preparation.

Helberg v Zuck, 201-860; 208 NW 209

Genuineness of corporate records. In an action against the secretary of a corporation individually, the record proceedings of the corporation are admissible against him, when material, upon an admission by such secretary that he believed them to be such records, even tho he states such belief as a conclusion, or bases his belief on hearsay, and even tho he states that he does not know that they were correctly kept.

Helberg v Zuck, 201-860; 208 NW 209

Criminal prosecution—corporate books and records. In a prosecution, under the securities law, of an officer of a corporation for having made, before the secretary of state, a false statement relative to the financial condition of the corporation, the corporate books and a tabulated statement and summary thereof, properly identified, are admissible, even tho there is no showing (1) that said books were made in the ordinary course of business, or (2) that they were true or correct, or (3) that they were books of original entry, or (4) that the accused made or directed their making,—it appearing that the examination of the books was made in the office of the corporation and largely in the immediate presence of the accused.

State v Dobry, 217-858; 250 NW 702

Account book—necessity to identify. Pages of a book containing various notations, memoranda, and accounts in the handwriting of a deceased administrator are not admissible in an action to establish a shortage on the part of said administrator without some proper proof identifying said book as the book in which the administrator kept his accounts relative to the estate in question.

Varga v Guaranty Co., 215-499; 245 NW 765

Professional memorandum by deceased. Brief notations on a slip of paper, identified by a deceased attorney's stenographer as made by him at the time a testator conferred with him about the drawing of the will, are incompetent as evidence when the notes do not state any fact. However, their admission in evidence is harmless when the witness had previously testified without objection to the whole of the conversation.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Carriers—rule requiring written orders for cars. The rule of a carrier requiring orders by a shipper for cars to be in writing, and being a part of its freight-rate schedules on file with the board of railroad commissioners, is mandatory, and compliance therewith is not shown by evidence that the station agent upon receiving an oral order made a written memorandum thereof for his own convenience. Such rule is manifestly admissible as evidence in a proper case.

Jackson v Railway, 213-365; 238 NW 912

Delivery date of insurance policy. In an action to recover on a life policy of a daughter, an exhibit showing that a son's policy was delivered on September 14 was admissible to contradict testimony of father and mother that the daughter's policy was delivered August 23 and that son's policy was delivered previously.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

4 Charts and Maps Generally (See also §11800)

Plat explained by parol. A town plat which is ambiguous in its descriptions and recitals is subject to parol explanation.

Schuler v Sand Co., 203-134; 209 NW 731

5 Writings and Telegrams

Letters by persons not parties to action. Letters which pass between parties who are not parties to an action are manifestly incompetent as substantive evidence for or against the parties to the action.

Kollmann v Kollmann, 204-950; 216 NW 77

Construction of contract—telegrams and letters—intention of parties. Telegrams which are brief and incomplete and which reserve the right in each instance to clarify and amplify by letter point quite conclusively to the conclusion that the parties intended that the contract should be determined by a consideration of both the telegrams and letters.

Appel v Carr, 216-64; 246 NW 608

Telegram received—use as evidence. The telegram which a party receives will be deemed the original when there is no showing that a written message was delivered to the company at the point of sending; and in case of the loss of such delivered telegram, a copy thereof is receivable in evidence when material.

State v Lozier, 200-652; 204 NW 256

Relevancy—insured's settlement offer. A letter written by plaintiff's attorney before trial offering settlement without expense of litigation is inadmissible in a trial on the merits seeking recovery on an automobile theft insurance policy.

Whisler v Home Ins., 224-201; 276 NW 606

Handwriting—proper standard for comparison. Proof that a party whose handwriting is in question admitted writing a certain exhibit renders the exhibit admissible as a proper standard for comparison.

State v Debner, 205-25; 215 NW 721

Will as entirety when only signature offered. Without an objection thereto or a showing of prejudice, it is not error to admit and send with the jury the entire will of decedent, even tho only the signature was offered in evidence.

In re Cheney's Estate, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Insurance agents—license application. The written request of an insurance company to the commissioner of insurance for a license for a named agent "to transact its authorized business" is admissible for the purpose of showing that said person was the company's agent, but not for the purpose of showing the scope of the powers of such agent.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 218-720; 253 NW 821

Location of insured—letters tending to prove inquiry. On the issue whether due and proper inquiries as to the whereabouts of an insured person had been made, evidence in the form of identified letters replying to such inquiries are admissible.

Rodskier v Ins. Co., 216-121; 248 NW 295

Offer to pay attorney fees not accepted. When an attorney, who had received a retainer fee of $100 to represent the insured in a criminal case arising from an automobile accident, received a letter from the attorney for the insurer requesting him to tell the insured that the insurer was willing to take care of attorney fees, such letter was admissible to show an offer to pay such fees, but was insufficient to show that such offer was authorized by the insurer, and his reply that he would look to the company for payment of only those fees exceeding $100, did not amount to an acceptance of the offer.

Gipp v Lynch, 226-1020; 285 NW 659

Delivery date of policy—other evidence competent. In an action on a life policy to which insurance company pleads a general denial and further pleads a release and settlement, where-in the delivery date of the policy is in dispute, and the insurance company assigns, as error, the exclusion of testimony of an officer of the company concerning underwriting practices of the company and a letter written by the company to its agent, upon which the agent's reply was indorsed, concerning the date of delivery of the policy, such evidence should have been admitted, and was competent to show that the company honestly believed it had a defense to the policy and explained why the company had the right to rely upon the date appearing upon the receipt for the policy.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Sales—action to recover price paid—evidence—self-serving declarations. A contract of sale fully executed and no longer in controversy may be so related to and connected with a later contract between the same parties that the correspondence attending the former may be admissible as interpreting the latter, but the offerer must not be permitted to go to the extent of showing, by his own self-serving letters, his dissatisfaction with the goods furnished to him under said first contract, and the loss he suffered thereunder.

Appel v Carr, 216-64; 246 NW 608

Mailing and delivery of letter. For the purpose of proving that an original letter was presumptively received by the addressee through the mail, a proven copy of said letter is inadmissible simply on the showing that the writer of the letter personally signed it, and relied on the accuracy of his secretary to make a proper mailing of the letter in accordance with the routine of the office, there being no evidence as to such routine.

Forrest v Woodmen, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Preliminary proceedings—disposing of law points. In determining the effect of a ruling on a motion to dispose of points of law, it is proper to read the whole pertinent record to ascertain what the court decided, and where a court overruled such a motion which urged that a certain letter was not a sufficient memorandum to take the case out of the statute of frauds, and record revealed that ruling was made because the question could not be determined before submission of evidence, such ruling was not an adjudication which became the "law of the case" so as to prevent subsequent exclusion of the letter upon objection made during trial.

Patterson v Beard, 227-401; 288 NW 414

6 Publications (See also §§11276, 11349)

Coca-cola advertisements—admissibility. In an action against a beverage bottler and wholesaler for damages caused by drinking unwholesome coca-cola, sold by the bottler to a retailer, the admission of coca-cola advertisements in evidence held nonprejudicial.

Anderson v Tyler, 223-1033; 274 NW 48

7 Pictures, Photographs, X-rays (See also §11283)

Photographs inadmissible unless relevant. Photographs of a stranger to the prosecution are, manifestly, inadmissible in the absence of evidence showing relevancy.

State v Papst, 221-770; 266 NW 498

Photographs — essentials for admission. Within the sound discretion of the court, a photograph is admissible in evidence when taken under conditions similar to those material to the inquiry to which it relates, and an instruction may call the jury's attention to the difference in lighting conditions at time an injury occurred, and at the time the picture was taken.

Riggs v Pan-Amer., 225-1051; 283 NW 250

Criminal record on reverse side of photograph. The fact that the state, in identifying an accused, employs a photograph on the reverse side of which is printed the criminal record of the accused, furnishes no basis for an assignment of error when the photograph was never in the hands of any juror, and was not received in evidence, and when the criminal record was not referred to in the presence of the jurors.

State v Kelly, 202-729; 210 NW 903

Handwriting photographs — explanatory marks—court's discretion. Photographs of handwriting, although bearing explanatory markings made by the expert witness, are proper evidence to aid the jury's comparison of the disputed signature on a will, as well as to explain expert testimony and their admissibility is largely within the trial court's discretion.

In re Cheney's Estate, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Photostatic copies—government documents duly authenticated. Photostatic copies of government documents, duly authenticated, are accepted instrumentalities of introducing official records. Tax returns are public records, the filing and preserving of which are official acts.

Cooper v United States, 9 F 2d, 216

Identification of ballistic photographs. Evidence held ample to identify certain ballistic photographs.

State v Campbell, 213-677; 239 NW 715

Accounting—obliterated items proved by photograph. In an action by a wife against a bank challenging her husband's speculations and transactions in her behalf and for an accounting as to funds and securities where the wife having (1) permitted, acquiesced in, and cooperated with her husband in managing her business with the bank for a period of years, (2) kept a personal record showing she had knowledge of many challenged transactions (proved through ultra violet ray photography of obliterated items), (3) reported income tax on other challenged transactions, (4) a bank account in her own name showing profits from other challenged transactions, (5) been a woman personally familiar with business and speculative dealings, and (6) made a settlement with the bank after ample consideration and acting upon the advice of friends skilled in the business of securities, cannot thereafter claim that the bank could not rely upon her husband's apparent general agency, nor that his dealings with the bank involving her securities and obligations arising therefrom were not the joint operations of herself and husband, nor that a settlement thereof she thereafter made with the bank resulted from the bank's concealment and duress.

Clark v Iowa-D. M. Bank, 223-1176; 274 NW 919

Radiograph—oral explanation. A radiograph may be explained or interpreted to a jury by an expert insofar as the radiograph does not interpret itself to the mere observation of a nonexpert.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Amputation without X-ray picture. The issue whether a surgeon was negligent in failing to have an X-ray picture taken of a broken arm before amputating it, does not become a jury question on general descriptive testimony of the arm by laymen opposed by unanimous expert testimony that the extent of the broken, crushed, and mangled arm was plainly apparent without an X-ray picture, the issue being whether amputation was necessary.

Jackovach v Yocom, 212-914; 237 NW 444; 76 ALR 551; 38 NCCA 346

X-ray observations by stranger-physician. The statement of a physician, not a party to an action, relative to an X-ray picture exhibited to him is hearsay and, therefore, incompetent.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

X-ray pictures—sufficient foundation. Principle reaffirmed that foundation for the admissibility of X-ray pictures may be established by the testimony of the technicians who took or interpreted the pictures.

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39; 1 NCCA(NS) 761

X-ray picture taken after amputation. An X-ray picture of an arm of the human body taken several days after amputation and when the arm is admittedly in a materially different condition than it was in when amputated, cannot be received for any other purpose than to show the condition of the arm when the picture was taken, the very material issue being as to the condition of the arm at the time of amputation.

Jackovach v Yocom, 212-914; 237 NW 444; 76 ALR 551; 38 NCCA 346

II EVIDENCE GENERALLY—continued

(h) DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE IN GENERAL—concluded

7. Pictures, Photographs, X-rays—concluded

X-ray sciagraphs—sufficient foundation. Proof that certain X-ray sciagraphs were taken, for the use of the attending physician, by an expert in that science, and other circumstantial evidence tending to show the correctness of such sciagraphs, furnish sufficient basis for their introduction as evidence, even tho no witness specifically asserts that they “correctly portray the condition of the body affected.”

Wosoba v Kenyon, 215-226; 243 NW 569; 1 NCCA(NS) 63, 747

X-ray pictures admitted. In a law action for damages for personal injuries resulting from an automobile accident, question of proper foundation being laid for introduction of X-ray pictures is largely in trial court's discretion, and where it is shown that an osteopathic physician and surgeon in charge of surgery and X-ray department in hospital had made a physical examination of injured party and testified in detail to condition of spine, back, and abdomen, the admission of X-ray pictures to illustrate the surgeon's oral testimony was not an abuse of discretion.

Kramer v Henely, 227-504; 288 NW 610

(i) PAROL OR EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS

Understanding of parties to agreement. See §11275

Discussion. See 7 ILB 173; 20 ILR 713—Parol evidence rule

Rule not available to stranger. The parol evidence rule is not available to a stranger to the writing in question.

Kiser v Ins. Assn., 213-18; 237 NW 328

Third parties. Principle reaffirmed that, as between persons who are not parties to a written contract, parol evidence is admissible to prove what in fact was the actual contract.

Holst v School Dist., 203-288; 211 NW 398

Stranger to transaction. The objection that a transaction is within the statute of frauds or that testimony is violative of the parol evidence rule is not available to a party who is a total stranger to the transaction, and to the title involved therein.

Lennert v Cross, 215-551; 241 NW 787; 244 NW 693

Applicability to third parties. Parol evidence rule excluding oral evidence varying terms of written agreement is applicable in case where one claims rights under such instrument even tho he is not a party thereto.

Willard Co. v Palmer, (NOR); 205 NW 976

Unambiguous contract. An unambiguous contract, being the final agreement of the parties, reduced to writing at the conclusion of the negotiations, cannot be varied by parol evidence.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

Unallowable modification. Principle reaffirmed that oral evidence may not be introduced to nullify, modify, or change the character of a written obligation.

First N. Bank v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

Ambiguity clarified by parol—doubts resolved against maker. In reviewing various canons of construction, principles reaffirmed that (1) if a contract is clear cut and unambiguous, the wording of the contract must control, but, if it is ambiguous, then parol evidence is admissible to ascertain intention of the parties, and (2) where there is ambiguity the doubt will be resolved against the party who prepared the instrument.

Vorthmann v Pipe Line Co., 228- ; 289 NW 746

Adding additional agreement. Parol evidence is inadmissible in an action at law to add to a written instrument which clearly reflects its intent and purpose, an additional agreement which the parties failed to insert therein.

Dolan v Bank, 207-597; 223 NW 400

Parol to explain judgment. The use of ambiguous words in a judgment or decree of court may open the door to parol evidence to establish what the court actually decided.

Hawkeye Ins. v Inv. Co., 217-644; 251 NW 874

Admission of debt supplemented by parol. A written acknowledgment by a debtor that a debt, action on which is barred by the statute of limitations, is unpaid may, for the purpose of showing a revival of the debt, be supplemented by extrinsic evidence which clearly identifies the unpaid debt and the amount thereof.

Koht v Dean, 220-86; 261 NW 491

Proof of novation. Evidence tending to show that a contract was novated is not violative of the parol evidence rule.

Montgomery v Beller, 207-278; 222 NW 846

Exception—proof of fraud. The parol evidence rule is not an obstacle to the proof of fraud in obtaining a contract.

Schmidt v Twedt, 219-128; 257 NW 325

Fraudulent conveyance — indebtedness of grantor. Evidence held to show that the grantor in an alleged fraudulent conveyance was indebted at the time of the execution of the conveyance.

Scovel v Pierce, 208-776; 226 NW 133

Instrument in part in form of receipt. An instrument which is in the dual form of part receipt and part agreement is not subject to parol explanation insofar as it evidences an agreement.

Mechanics Bk. v Gish, 200-463; 203 NW 687

Ambiguous recital of settlement. An ambiguous written recital of the settlement of differences between parties may be aided by parol testimony in order to identify the differences actually settled.

Stoner v Stehm, 200-809; 202 NW 530

Registration of private vehicles—transfer—right to contradict. On the issue whether plaintiff, in an action on a policy of insurance covering the theft of an automobile, was the “unconditional and sole” owner of the vehicle, plaintiff may testify to facts attending a written transfer of the certificate of registration tending to show that he, in fact, remained the owner of the vehicle notwithstanding said transfer.

Abraham v Ins. Co., 215-1; 244 NW 675

Mutual insurance associations—validity of assessments. Oral testimony may be admissible as to the manner in which an assessment was made when such testimony bears on matters not revealed by the minutes of the board of directors or is explanatory of such minutes.

Hauge v Ins. Assn., 205-1099; 212 NW 473

Partnership interest. Parol evidence is admissible to show that, at a time subsequent to written articles of partnership which fixed the interest of each partner, the interests of the various partners were, by reason of oral agreement, different from those recited in the former writings.

In re Talbott, 204-363; 213 NW 779

Pipe-line right of way—ambiguity as to compensation. Where landowner made written agreement giving pipe-line company a right of way, and where receipt, executed simultaneously with the agreement, aided by extrinsic oral proof, showed that he actually received $5 per rod for the first line put in, held, landowner was entitled to judgment compensating him at same rate for installation of a second pipe line under the agreement, which provided that “additional lines shall be laid for a consideration the same as for the first”, despite the fact that such agreement also provided for a compensation of only 50 cents per rod.

Vorthmann v Pipe Line Co., 228- ; 289 NW 746

Royalties — reduction by oral agreement — jury question. In an action to recover alleged balance due under coal mining contract for royalties, whether payments provided for in contract were reduced by subsequent oral agreement held to be a jury question.

Heggen v Mining Co., (NOR); 263 NW 268

Right to enlarge writing. When the written evidence of a contract provides, in effect, that named subject matters shall be controlled thereby, oral evidence is admissible to enlarge said subject matters when the writing on its face reveals the contemplation of the parties to make such addition.

Smith & Co. v Hollingsworth, 218-920; 251 NW 749

Composition with creditors—unambiguous. A plain and unambiguous written composition with creditors may not be modified by parol evidence tending to show that the indebtedness referred to was other than that specified in the writing.

Federal Corp. v Western Co., 219-271; 257 NW 785

Cross-examination as to writing may necessitate reception of writing itself. When a cross-examination is designed to show that a witness had asked plaintiff to sign an untruthful statement of fact, the party calling the witness must be permitted to show by a duplicate original, tho unsigned, just what plaintiff was asked to sign.

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

Contracts—prohibited changes—futility. A written contract, which in effect declares that no change in any portion of the contract shall be valid, cannot be construed to take away the right of the parties to subsequently orally modify the contract; nor does a provision for the termination of the contract in a certain manner preclude the parties from mutually terminating it in some other manner.

Webster Co. v Nebr. Co., 216-485; 249 NW 203

Execution of contract proved—witness not present when contract made. Evidence of the execution of an oral contract, which has been performed or partially performed by one of parties, may be introduced in evidence, although the witnesses who testified were not present when the contract was made.

Ford v Young, 225-956; 282 NW 324

“Exceptions” catalogued. The so-called “exceptions” to the parol evidence rule may be stated thus: Parol evidence is admissible,

1. To establish grounds for the reformation of a written contract.

2. To establish the unnamed consideration for a unilateral written contract.

3. To establish a distinctly separate and complete contract contemporaneous with, and noncontradictory of, a written contract.

4. To establish the conditional delivery of a written contract, and the failure of said condition.

5. To complete a written contract which shows on its face that it is fragmentary and incomplete.

In re Simplot, 215-578; 246 NW 396

 (i) PAROL OR EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS—continued

Reformation of instruments—rule inapplicable. The parol evidence rule is not applicable to a proceeding to reform an instrument.

In re Jenkins, 201-423; 205 NW 772

Reformation of instrument—mistake. The rule that parol evidence cannot be invoked to vary the terms of a written contract has no application to prevent parol proof of a mistake or the reforming of an instrument to correct a mistake.

Wormer v Gilchrist, 210-463; 230 NW 856

Reformation of deed—mistake and fraud. Evidence reviewed, and held ample to justify the reformation of a deed because of the mistaken, and fraudulently induced, omission therefrom of a clause reserving to grantors a life estate in the land in question.

Foote v Soukup, 221-1218; 266 NW 904

Reformation of instruments—proceedings and relief—mandatory degree of proof. Plaintiff seeking the reformation of a written instrument must fail unless he establishes by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence—by evidence exceeding a mere preponderance—by evidence approximating proof beyond a reasonable doubt—the definite contract which the executed writing does not embrace. Evidence reviewed in detail under a prayer for the reformation of a lease, and held insufficient to comply with the rule.

Stillman v Bank, 216-957; 249 NW 230

Reformation of instruments—mistake. The rule of evidence which forbids oral testimony to contradict or vary the terms of a written contract has no application to proceedings in equity where a mistake in the contract is alleged, and its reformation demanded.

Floberg v Peterson, 214-1364; 242 NW 13

Passbook—contract partly written, partly oral. Where a passbook issued by a savings bank to a depositor contained certain printed provisions governing the deposit, but contained no provision as to the date when the deposit was payable, parol evidence is admissible to show the agreement between the bank and the depositor as to the said date of payment.

Popofsky Co. v Wearmouth, 216-114; 248 NW 358

Parol variation of check. Parol evidence that a bank agreed with its depositor not to charge a special trust deposit with the amount of a certain check which the depositor had given to the bank to correct a mistake in the depositor's account is not inadmissible as varying the terms of the check.

Townsend v Bank, 212-1078; 237 NW 356

Certificate of deposit. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a time certificate of deposit was accompanied by a collateral oral agreement between the depositor and the bank to the effect that the bank would pay the certificate on demand.

In re Olson, 206-706; 219 NW 401

Passbook—ambiguity—parol to explain. A passbook issued by a savings bank to a depositor and containing certain printed provisions governing deposits, but silent as to the date when the deposit was payable, and carrying the indorsement "Maytag Employee's Special Savings Account", creates such ambiguity (assuming that the printed provisions embraced the full agreement) as to justify the reception of parol evidence to explain the ambiguity.

Popofsky Co. v Wearmouth, 216-114; 248 NW 358

Parol to contradict cash payment. A written contract binding plaintiff to buy of defendant a certain number of shares of corporate stock "and pay for the same" cannot be so modified by parol as to show that payment by plaintiff was to be in the form of services to be performed by plaintiff for defendant.

Cox v Fleisher Co., 208-458; 223 NW 521

Similar but independent contracts. Parol evidence of a contract binding defendant to purchase and deliver to plaintiff a named number of corporate shares of stock in payment for services performed by plaintiff is independent of a subsequent written agreement binding plaintiff to buy of defendant the same number of shares of stock of the same company.

Cox v Fleisher Co., 208-458; 223 NW 521

Admissibility to show conditional delivery. While parol evidence is not admissible to vary the terms of a written instrument, yet it is competent as between the immediate parties to show that the delivery thereof may have been conditional or for a special purpose only, and not for the purpose of transferring the property in the instrument.

Walker v Todd, 225-276; 280 NW 512

Conditional delivery. A written contract, which provides that the failure of any party named therein to sign shall not affect the liability of those who do sign, may be shown to have been delivered on the condition that the writing was to be effective only after being signed by all of the parties.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

Right to explain ambiguous clause. The rule that an ambiguous provision in a written contract may be explained by parol evidence, for the purpose of arriving at a basis on which to rest a legal conclusion as to the meaning of said provision, assuredly does not embrace the right of one party to the contract to show, (1) his understanding of said provision, and (2) the understanding of a former assignee of the contract (at a time when the question of the meaning of the provision had not arisen) as evidence of the understanding which a later assignee had or should have had of said provision.

Zimbelman v Boone Coal, 220-1310; 263 NW 335

Parol to explain the ambiguous. It is always competent in construing inconsistent and ambiguous language in a written contract to receive parol evidence bearing on the situation of the parties, the subject matter of the writing, and the acts of the parties thereunder.

Dunn v Dunn Trust, 219-349; 258 NW 695

Clearly expressed consideration. The clearly expressed consideration recited in an unambiguous written instrument cannot be contradicted by parol evidence.

Burrier v Sheriff, 207-692; 223 NW 395

Consideration—absence of. Principle reaffirmed that parol evidence may be admissible to establish lack of consideration for a promissory note.

Northern Tr. Co. v Anderson, 222-590; 262 NW 529; 271 NW 192

Parol as affecting writings—manner of paying promissory note. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that an ordinary promissory note to a corporation was to be paid from the earnings of the corporation.

Mechanics Bk. v Gish, 200-463; 203 NW 687

Form of note—unallowable variation. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that a note is not payable according to its terms.

Farmers Bk. v Fisher, 204-1049; 216 NW 709

Varying legal effect of blank indorsement. Oral evidence is inadmissible to vary the legal effect of a blank indorsement of a promissory note.

First N. Bk. v Raatz, 208-1189; 225 NW 856

Independent contemporaneous oral agreement. In an action on a promissory note, parol evidence is admissible to show that at the time the note was executed an independent agreement, consistent with the note, was entered into under which certain credits under named contingencies were to be made upon the note.

Andrew v Brooks, 219-134; 257 NW 315

Evidence of assumption—discharge of maker—insufficient. Evidence held insufficient to establish oral agreement discharging makers from liability on note and substituting purchaser of property for maker.

Citizens Bk. v Probasco, (NOR); 233 NW 510

Accommodation maker. Parol evidence is admissible on the issue whether a promissory note is accommodation paper.

State Bk. v Markworth, 208-461; 212 NW 729

Transfer of note—indorsement in blank. Parol evidence is admissible to show that an indorsement in blank of commercial paper was made solely to enable the holder to make collection, and not to transfer title. Especially is this true when the other writings accompanying the indorsement are ambiguous.

Leach v Bank, 201-349; 207 NW 332

Trade acceptances negotiated. In an action to recover on trade acceptances by indorsee thereof, where there is no provision in sales contract prohibiting either delivery, negotiation, or transfer of such acceptances which are regular on their face, held, proof of an alleged oral agreement that acceptances were subject to certain conditions in sale contract is inadmissible in evidence.

State Bk. v Feed Co., 227-596; 288 NW 614

Collateral agreement—payment of note by sureties. Parol evidence is admissible to prove that, when a promissory note was signed by the sureties, it was agreed between all parties thereto that the principal would sell certain property and deliver the proceeds to the payee, and that the payee would apply the proceeds on the note.

Randolph Bk. v Osborn, 207-729; 223 NW 493

Conditional delivery. Parol evidence is admissible to prove that a surety signed a promissory note on the express condition that the note should not be deemed effective until another named party signed it.

Andrew v Hanson, 206-1258; 222 NW 110

Bills and notes—issue, who was accommodated party. Parol evidence to the effect that the payee of a note orally assured the maker, when the note was executed and at later times, that the maker was not liable on the note, and would never be called upon to pay it, is admissible on the issue whether the note was an accommodation note for the accommodation of the payee-plaintiff.

Security Bk. v Carlson, 210-1117; 231 NW 643

Note—oral testimony as to liability. The accommodating maker of a promissory note may not, in the absence of evidence of fraud, testify that when he executed the note an oral agreement was entered into that he was not to assume any liability on the note.

Citizens Bank v Rowe, 214-715; 243 NW 363

Varying written description of notes guaranteed. In an action on a written guaranty of payment of separately and unambiguously described notes, parol evidence is inadmissible to show what notes were intended, and that they are different from those described in the guaranty.

Andrew v Austin, 213-963; 232 NW 79

Varying indorsement of note. An unrestricted indorsement of a promissory note may not be modified by oral evidence to the effect that the indorser was not to be held personally liable on his indorsement.

(i) PAROL OR EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS—continued

Aetna Bank v Hawks, 213-340; 239 NW 91

Oral agreement for mortgage priority. Oral evidence that when a promissory note and the mortgage securing it were assigned, it was agreed that the indorsee should have priority over other prior maturing notes secured by the same mortgage and then held by the assignor, is not violative of the "parol-evidence rule."

White v Gutshall, 213-401; 238 NW 909

Signing note after maturity—oral modification. A promissory note which is signed by a party after maturity is, as to such signer, payable on demand; and parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary such legal effect.

Fairley v Falcon, 204-290; 214 NW 538

Receipts—parol showing of purpose. Under plea of payment of a promissory note, parol evidence is admissible to show that nonexplanatory receipts represented money paid on the note and accepted as such by the payee.

Hallowell v Van Zetten, 213-748; 239 NW 593

Direct contradiction—commission stated in contract. A written contract which provides for a commission of 10 percent on a specified expenditure may not be contradicted by parol evidence to the effect that the parties orally agreed that the commission should be 8 percent.

Parks & Co. v Howard Co., 200-479; 203 NW 247

Parol warranty—when incompetent. Principle reaffirmed that, when a written contract of sale contains no warranty, a parol one may not be engrafted thereon.

Blecher v Schmidt, 211-1063; 235 NW 34

Naked order for goods—parol evidence to show acceptance. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a naked order for goods was accepted, and, when material, that such acceptance was at a certain place.

Anderson Co. v Monument Co., 210-1226; 232 NW 689

Trade acceptances negotiated. In an action to recover on trade acceptances by indorsee thereof, where there is no provision in sales contract prohibiting either delivery, negotiation, or transfer of such acceptances which are regular on their face, held, proof of an alleged oral agreement that acceptances were subject to certain conditions in sales contract is inadmissible in evidence.

State Bk. v Feed Co., 227-596; 288 NW 614

Parol consent to sale of mortgaged chattels. Evidence is admissible that a chattel mortgagee orally consented to the sale of the chattels by the mortgagor, notwithstanding the fact that the criminal statute denominates such sales criminal unless the consent is in writing.

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177

Deed as mortgage. Parol testimony is admissible to show that deed was in fact a mortgage and was so intended.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Oral contradiction of mortgage-assumption clause. One who contracts for and receives a deed to land, and in both instances assumes payment of an existing mortgage on the land, may wholly avoid such apparent obligation, as regards the mortgagee, by oral testimony—the rule against contradicting written instruments by parol evidence to the contrary notwithstanding—to the effect that he never had any interest in the land, and without consideration therefor contracted for and received a deed, and conveyed the land simply as a matter of convenience for the real owner.

Nissen v Sabin, 202-1362; 212 NW 125; 50 ALR 1216

Oral addition to mortgage. Evidence is inadmissible that, at the time of the execution of a purchase-money mortgage, an oral contemporaneous agreement was entered into, to the effect that, if the mortgagor was unable to finance (pay) the mortgage, the mortgagee would pay to the mortgagor the value of any improvements placed on the land by the mortgagor.

Felton v Thompson, 209-29; 227 NW 529

Consideration—failure of, as to wife. Parol evidence is admissible between the original parties to a note and mortgage to show that the wife signed the obligations without any consideration flowing to her, and solely for the purpose of releasing her possible dower interest, and without any knowledge that her signature was being required or demanded by the payee.

Cooley v Will, 212-701; 237 NW 315

Reference to prior mortgage in later admission of debt—revival of action. A statement in a second mortgage, that the premises are encumbered by another prior mortgage as of a certain date, constitutes an admission of that indebtedness such as to start the statute of limitations running anew, and the particular mortgage referred to may be established by extrinsic evidence.

Lackey v Melcher, 225-698; 281 NW 225

Mortgages — priority — oral agreement of parties. The assignee of one of two simultaneously executed mortgages on the same property to different parties may show, in an action wherein the foreclosure of each mortgage is asked, that just prior to the execution of said mortgages it was orally agreed by all parties to both mortgages that a certain one of said mortgages should be the first lien on the property.

Wuennecke v Hausman, 216-725; 247 NW 531

Contradicting mortgage. Parol evidence to the effect that, at the time of the delivery of a mortgage, the mortgagee agreed that he would extend the mortgage indefinitely, and that in no event would a certain portion of the mortgaged property be taken under the mortgage, is wholly inadmissible.

Farmers Bank v Weeks, 209-26; 227 NW 508

Parol nullification of mortgage assumption clause. A written clause in a deed to mortgaged premises purporting to bind the grantee to pay the mortgage debt may be nullified by parol evidence,—the mortgagee not being a party to the deed or to the contract of sale preceding the deed.

Andrew v Naglestad, 216-248; 249 NW 131

Partition plaintiff as purchaser assuming mortgage. A plaintiff in a partition action, becoming the purchaser, who accepts, from the referee with knowledge of its contents, a deed reciting an assumption of a mortgage together with a reference to the referee's report of sale, and who also retains an amount equal to the mortgage, does thereby assume and agree to pay such mortgage. Such a reference incorporates the report into the deed and the actual consideration may be shown by parol evidence.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Thomas, 223-1018; 274 NW 11; 275 NW 392

Parol to explain ambiguous storage contract. A written contract for storage of corn, which makes no provision as to when the seller is to exercise an option to sell nor as to when the storage is to be paid, does not contain the entire agreement entered into, and parol evidence is admissible on the question as to what was reasonable time to perform.

Andreas & Son v Hempy, 224-561; 276 NW 791

Lease—oral explanation. The fact that both of two parties sign a lease and the accompanying rent notes does not necessarily establish, in a controversy strictly between said two parties, that each party should pay one-half the rent. The said fact is open to oral explanation.

Fisher v Nicola, 214-801; 241 NW 478

Oral contract contemporaneous with deed. When a duly recorded deed contains a prohibition against a sale or conveyance of any part of the land during the lifetime of the grantor, parol evidence is admissible against a subsequent mortgagee to show that the purpose of said prohibition was to protect the grantor during his lifetime in a contract reservation of rent in the land.

Iowa F. C. Corp. v Halligan, 214-903; 241 NW 475

Assumption of mortgage—unallowable contradiction. A deed to land wherein the grantee assumes one-half of an existing mortgage on the land may not be modified by testimony to the effect that when the deed was executed it was orally agreed that the grantee should continue to be bound by the original written contract of sale wherein he agreed to assume the entire mortgage.

Reit v Driesen, 212-1011; 237 NW 325

Estoppel to object. A party may not object to oral evidence which shows that an apparently absolute note and mortgage were given as collateral security for other debts when the absence of such evidence would leave the objector without any defense whatever.

Bilharz v Martinsen, 209-296; 228 NW 268

Acceptance of deed—no waiver of easement rights under contract. When a contract of sale of land provided that the deed would grant an easement for the right of ingress and egress to the property, but the deed drawn on the same day failed to make such provision, the acceptance of the deed by the grantee did not waive the provision of the collateral contract, altho ordinarily the acceptance of a deed would complete the execution of the contract and would be conclusive evidence of its complete fulfillment.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Easement rights omitted from deed. When land was purchased under a contract providing that the deed would grant an easement of the right of ingress and egress to the property, and that the exact description of the easement would be made a part of the deed, but such description having been omitted, it was proper, in purchaser's action to assert such easement rights, to admit extrinsic evidence to show the exact location of the easement.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Avoidance of statute of frauds. Parol evidence is competent to show that the titleholder to land has admitted that he was to hold such title only until such time as he was reimbursed for money expended on the property and that such arrangement has been in part carried out.

Neilly v Hennessey, 208-1338; 220 NW 47

Shortage in acreage—evidence. Where lands of an estate are ordered sold for a lump sum, parol evidence is admissible to show that the land was, in reality, sold at a certain price per acre and that the acreage fell short of what was supposed to be the acreage, and that the administrator properly made a deduction for said shortage.

(i) PAROL OR EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS—continued

In re Oelwein, 217-1137; 251 NW 694

Ambiguous plat. A town plat which is ambiguous in its descriptions and recitals is subject to parol explanation.

Shuler v Sand Co., 203-134; 209 NW 731

Ambiguous clause in broker's contract—limitation. In an action to recover commission under real estate broker's contract in which the clause providing for time when commission is due and payable is ambiguous, proof of the circumstances accompanying the execution of the ambiguous instrument is admissible to assist in the interpretation, but not to vary the terms of the instrument.

Mealey v Kanealy, 226-1266; 286 NW 500

Contracts partly written, partly oral. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a building contract was partly in writing and partly oral.

Golwitzer v Hummel, 201-751; 206 NW 254

Building contract—extra costs—written authorization required—effect. A written building contract which, in effect, excludes all claims for extra costs consequent on changes in the plans unless such claims are evidenced by written authorization signed by the owner or by the architect on behalf of the owner must be given the legal effect of excluding all evidence of oral authorization, there being no plea or proof, on behalf of the contractor, of waiver or ratification.

Iowa Elec. Co. v Hopp, 221-680; 266 NW 512

Express trusts—unconditional conveyance. A parol, unexecuted, and unadmitted trust cannot be engrafted on an unconditional conveyance in fee of real estate.

Hospers v Watts, 209-1193; 229 NW 844

Trusts—oral evidence—when competent. Parol evidence is admissible to establish and show the nature of an admitted or partially or wholly executed trust.

Andrew v Bank, 209-1149; 229 NW 819

Parol to prove execution of unenforceable trust. It is true that one claiming to be the absolute owner of land may not, as against the grantee in a conveyance, prove, by parol evidence, that when the conveyance was executed grantee's name was inserted in the conveyance as grantee under an oral agreement that said substituted grantee would hold said land solely and exclusively for said secret grantee, but said parties may show by parol evidence, as against a stranger, that said oral agreement was actually carried out and executed by said parties.

Bates v Zehnpennig, 220-164; 262 NW 141

Constructive trust—evidence—sufficiency. An express trust in real property cannot be legally established by parol, nor may an implied or constructive trust in such property be established except by evidence which is clear, convincing, and satisfactory.

McCains v Tullis, 213-1360; 241 NW 472

Establishing trust by oral agreement—prohibitory statute. Under the Iowa statute an express trust cannot be established by a parol agreement, but such statute is inapplicable to constructive trusts.

D. M. Terminal v D. M. Union, 52 F 2d, 616

Testator's or grantor's meaning admissible. Where such terms as children, grandchildren, or nephews are used in a will or a deed, and there are both legitimates and illegitimates and the testator has full knowledge of such fact, and the intention of the testator is not clearly expressed in the will, the use of such words creates no presumption, but the word is a neutral one and an ambiguity exists, and the intention of the testator or grantor must be determined not only from the provisions of will, but also in the light of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the will, and parol evidence is admissible to prove the intent of the testator or grantor.

In re Estate of Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758

Parol to show circumstances attending making of mutual wills. Even though extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to vary or change the terms of a will, yet evidence may be admitted to show circumstances which accompanied or attended making of the instrument, or to identify papers or writings which in fact constitute the will, especially where it is claimed that two or more writings made at or about the same time are part of a single transaction and together constitute in law a single will.

Child v Smith, 225-1205; 282 NW 316

Adding additional burden. An unambiguous written stipulation and agreement, duly filed in a will contest, providing in effect that defendant will pay, and plaintiff will accept, a named sum of money in full settlement of any and all claim which plaintiff may have against the estate cannot be added to by proof of an oral contemporaneous agreement to the effect that defendant would also execute a will devising and bequeathing all his property to plaintiff.

In re Simplot, 215-578; 246 NW 396

Appointment of executor—notice—proof of service. Parol evidence of the posting, as officially directed, of a notice of the appointment of an executor is admissible, and positive evidence to such effect will not be overcome by evidence of witnesses to the effect that they had not "observed" such posted notice.

Peterson v Johnson, 205-16; 212 NW 138

Court order ratifying oral contemporaneous contract—effect. In an action by a receiver to recover mining royalties accruing under a written contract, the defendant may show that the court has, on due notice and hearing, approved, confirmed, and ratified an oral contract which was contemporaneous with the written contract and which varied and altered the terms of said written contract.

Dinning v Krapfel, 211-888; 232 NW 490

(j) OPINION EVIDENCE

Discussion. See 6 ILB 168—Opinion rule; 24 ILR 498—Character testimony

Nonconclusiveness on trier of fact question. Opinion evidence is not, ordinarily, conclusive on the trier of a question of fact, especially when such evidence happens to be only one of several elements which the trier must weigh in determining the fact.

Wood v Wood, 220-441; 262 NW 773

Discrimination between parties. Permitting one party to introduce opinion evidence on a certain point and denying to the opposing party the right to counter with like evidence does not necessarily constitute reversible error.

Slinger v Ins. Assn., 219-329; 258 NW 101

Conclusions invading province of jury. Questions are unallowable which call for the very conclusions which the jury must ultimately draw.

State v Johnson, 211-874; 234 NW 263

Concealed basis of opinion. An opinion resting on a basis withheld from the jury would be wholly incompetent.

Spicer v Administrator, 201-99; 202 NW 604

Subject of expert testimony—improper hypothetical question. It is not permissible for a party to gather together in the form of a hypothetical question the various circumstances established by him as bearing on a fact issue and present them to a so-called expert for his opinion, when the circumstances are such that the opinion of a lay witness would carry equal evidentiary value.

McClary v Railway, 209-67; 227 NW 646

"Safe condition"—jury question. A witness should not be permitted to testify that a walk was "ordinarily clean" when such condition is the crux of the issue before the jury.

Smith v Sioux City, 200-1100; 205 NW 956

Death of animals—invading province of the jury. The opinion of a witness as to what caused the death of certain animals is wholly incompetent when such cause was the very question submitted to the jury.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

Cause of death as question of law. Evidence reviewed, and held that the court could not say as a matter of law that the expert theory that hogs died of hog cholera after the termination of a shipment was more reasonable than the theory that they died because of the negligence of the carrier during shipment.

Brower v Railway, 218-317; 252 NW 755

Radiograph—oral explanation. A radiograph may be explained or interpreted to a jury by an expert, insofar as the radiograph does not interpret itself to the mere observation of a nonexpert.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Nonright of jurors to substitute their own knowledge. Jurors may use and employ their own knowledge as to values in determining the weight and effect of expert testimony as to such values, but they must not be instructed, in effect, that they may disregard such expert testimony and substitute their own knowledge as evidence.

State v Brown, 215-600; 246 NW 258

Explanation of architectural drawings. The meaning of marks and characters unintelligible to the layman, appearing on an architectural drawing, may be shown by a witness familiar with such matters. So held as to characters which indicated the presence of a sewer.

Des Moines Co. v Magarian, 201-647; 207 NW 750

Fingerprints—expert testimony as to ultimate fact. A witness who is expert in the science of dactylography may testify that, in his opinion, judgment, or belief, different fingerprints were made by one and the same finger, but he may not testify that they were made by one and the same finger.

State v Steffen, 210-196; 230 NW 536; 78 ALR 748

Homicide—robbery. Whether a homicide was committed by one who was at the time robbing the deceased is quite beyond the proper scope of expert testimony.

Nelson v Acc. Soc., 212-989; 237 NW 341

Proof of agency by agent. Testimony by a witness that he acted as agent for the defendant was admissible evidence.

Ballard v Ballard, 226-699; 285 NW 165

Agent's opinion—cause of fire. The expression of an opinion by a party as to the "cause of a fire" is not admissible on such issue, whether viewed as the opinion of an individual or as that of the agent of the party sought to be held liable.

Walters v Elec. Co., 203-467; 212 NW 886

Knowledge of agent. Testimony as to what a party knew that an agent knew is not competent.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Question not to ask for opinion. It is not allowable to ask a witness whether a named person "admitted" writing a named instrument. The question should call for what was said.

(j) OPINION EVIDENCE—continued

State v Debner, 202-150; 209 NW 404

Unallowable opinion on otherwise established fact. The reception of opinion evidence to the effect that a fire was caused in a certain manner is harmless when the record otherwise conclusively demonstrates that the fire was caused in said manner.

Walters v Elec. Co., 203-467; 212 NW 886

Wrongful attachment— incompetent testimony as to damage. In an action on an attachment bond, plaintiff will not be permitted to testify to his opinion as to the effect which the attachment had on a possible sale of the land upon which levy was made, there having been theretofore no negotiations whatever for such sale.

Thielen v Schechinger, 211-470; 233 NW 750

Satisfaction of claim—conclusion usurping jury function. Prejudicial error results from permitting the question whether a party to an action had ever "agreed" to accept a named sum in satisfaction of his claim, and permitting a negative answer, when the existence of such agreement is the sole question before the jury.

Strand v Bleakley, 214-1116; 243 NW 306

Custom of factors—competency. The general custom of factors in handling goods is provable by any witness familiar therewith.

Alley Co. v Cream. Co., 201-621; 207 NW 767

Mathematical computation by witness. A witness may be permitted to make a mathematical computation or summary of detail record evidence.

Johnson Corp. v Shapiro, 200-843; 205 NW 511

Conclusion—material covered in other testimony. In a quiet title action it was not prejudicial to sustain an objection to a question asking the plaintiff if the defendant had made any claim to land at, or prior to, a certain time, when the question asked for a conclusion of the witness, and the witness had answered the question in other testimony.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

Interwoven statements of fact and opinion. A fraud-doer may not complain of the submission to the jury of matters of opinion, as distinguished from representations of fact, when his statements of opinion are so interwoven with his statements of fact that to separate them is practically impossible.

Pullan v Struthers, 201-1179; 207 NW 235

State of mind admissible. If question calls for state of mind, answer is admissible altho in the nature of a conclusion.

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Harmless error—conclusion answers. Error may not be predicated on the fact that a witness was permitted to give a conclusion answer when the witness had, prior thereto, without objection, stated the facts relative to said matter.

First St. Bank v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767

Allowable conclusion. The statement that a party "was trying to get away" from another party is an allowable conclusion.

State v Graham, 203-532; 211 NW 244

Beneficiary's complaints—conclusion. The testimony of a witness that she had never heard the beneficiary of a will talk to the testator in any way "other than in a complaining way of his treatment of her" is a conclusion and properly excluded.

McCollister v Showers, 216-108; 248 NW 363

Allowable conclusion. When the actions and conduct of a witness at a certain time are material and there is no other adequate way of placing the matter before the jury, then the witness should be permitted to describe what he saw, even though his description consists of a mixed statement of fact and conclusion. So held as to the statement "It seemed as though the man jumped right in front of the car, and we hit him."

Wieneke v Steinke, 211-477; 233 NW 535

Position of vehicle—allowable conclusion of witness. Statements of a witness to the effect that a vehicle seemed to be on the wrong side of a black line drawn along the center of a paved highway, may be an allowable conclusion.

Henriksen v Crandic Stages, 216-643; 246 NW 913

Unallowable questions. Whether a motor-man could have done anything which would have stopped his streetcar sooner than it was stopped is properly excluded because the question calls for an unallowable conclusion, and also invades the province of the jury.

Allen v Railway, 218-286; 253 NW 143

Speed of automobile. A witness who has operated an automobile for several years, and whose business necessitates extensive travel by him over the country, mostly by automobile, is competent to give an opinion as to the speed at which an automobile was being operated on a certain occasion.

State v Thomlinson, 209-555; 228 NW 80

Competency of testimony—brakes on train. The opinion of a witness, on proper foundation, as to the distance in which a certain train could be stopped is not rendered incompetent because the witness did not know the particular make of air brake on the train in question or the air pressure carried, he having testified that the ordinary train was so equipped and operated that the effect of manipulating the air valve would be the same, regardless of the kind and make of brakes.

Williams v Railway, 205-446; 214 NW 692

Ability of driver—conclusion. An opinion as to "what kind of a driver" the operator of an automobile was is an unallowable conclusion.

In re Hill, 202-1038; 208 NW 334; 210 NW 241; 26 NCCA 193

Conclusion in re partnership. The question whether an association of individuals constitutes a partnership calls for a legal conclusion.

DeLong v Whitlock, 204-701; 215 NW 954

Contract—conclusions. The question whether a witness had a contract with another which would permit the witness to do thus or so calls for an unallowable conclusion.

Baitinger v Elmore, 208-1342; 227 NW 344

Questions improper—conclusions called for. Questions asking whether defendant's movements caused globe to fall from electroljer, and whether plaintiff exercised more than ordinary care for himself after injury, and whether he suffered a direct money loss in his business as a result of his absence from the store were properly excluded as calling for conclusions.

Rauch v Dingle, (NOR); 218 NW 470

Conclusions—nonfatal admission. Admission of conclusions of witnesses that they sawed lumber according to instructions, that the logs of appellee were better than others, and other similar conclusions held not prejudicial when the same testimony was elicited by proper questions and answers.

Waterman v Gaynor Co., (NOR); 215 NW 641

Cause of injury—invading province of jury. It is improper (1) to call upon an expert witness for his conclusion as to the cause of an injury, or (2) to ask such witness for his opinion as to the "sole cause" or "direct and exclusive cause" or "sole primary cause" of such injury, and reversible error results from permitting the witness to affirmatively state such conclusion or opinion.

Justis v Cas. Co., 215-109; 244 NW 696

Identification of alcohol. The opinion of a properly qualified witness is admissible on the issue whether a certain liquid is alcohol.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

Taste and smell of liquor. Principle reaffirmed that witnesses may testify that certain liquors smelled or tasted like alcohol.

State v Ferro, 211-910; 232 NW 127

Homicide—character of accused. Not even a defendant in a charge of homicide is a competent witness to testify to the reputation of the deceased as to peaceableness or quarrel-someness when he—the defendant—fails to show his qualification to so testify.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Intoxication. The fact of intoxication may be shown by one who has observed the conduct and appearance of the person in question and describes the same.

State v Kendall, 200-483; 203 NW 806

Intoxication—basis of opinion. A witness may testify whether a person was sober or intoxicated without first stating the facts on which the opinion is based.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Insanity—absence of fact basis. Nonexpert testimony by an accused who pleads insanity as a defense to a charge of murder, to the effect that his father was "out of his mind" for some time prior to his death, without any fact basis for such testimony, constitutes an unallowable conclusion.

State v Buck, 205-1028; 219 NW 17

Hypothetical questions to expert. It is not erroneous to permit an attending physician who has detailed the injuries of his patient to answer hypothetical questions.

McDonald v Robinson, 207-1293; 224 NW 820; 62 ALR 1419

Malpractice—evidence—usual and ordinary practice. The defendant, in an action for damages for malpractice, may always establish, even by his own testimony, the usual and ordinary practice of physicians and surgeons in treating, in the locality in question, the injury which is the subject matter of the action.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Usual course of recovery. Evidence of an expert witness relative to the recovery usually made in average cases of certain injuries is wholly irrelevant and immaterial when there is no evidence that the injuries in question constituted an "average case."

DeMoss v Cab Co., 218-77; 254 NW 17

Nonexpert opinion of sanity. A nonexpert witness may base an opinion as to the sanity or insanity of a person on a proper detail of facts.

State v Murphy, 205-1130; 217 NW 225

Mental unsoundness—cross-examination. A witness who testifies to the mental unsoundness of a party may, on cross-examination, be questioned as to his knowledge of rumors in the neighborhood as to the party's mental condition.

Ayres v Nopoulos, 204-881; 216 NW 258

Sanity—permissible hypothetical question. A hypothetical question may embody any material and supported fact. So held as to what witnesses had “observed” as to the actions of an alleged insane person.

(j) OPINION EVIDENCE—continued

State v Murphy, 205-1130; 217 NW 225

Testamentary capacity. A nonexpert witness may not express an opinion that a testator was of unsound mind on a recital of facts which pertain solely to his physical condition.

In re Paczoch, 202-849; 211 NW 500

Expert and lay opinions—which must yield. An expert opinion that a person was insane at a named time prior to the time when said person was judicially declared insane will not be permitted to outweigh overwhelming lay testimony which strongly tends to establish the contrary, when said expert opinion is based almost wholly on information obtained from said person after she was adjudged insane, and on information obtained from the relatives of said person.

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

Value of lands—familiarity. A witness who is shown to be familiar with the value of lands in the vicinity of the land in question is competent to testify as to the value of the latter.

Millard v Mfg. Co., 200-1063; 205 NW 979

Value of land—selling price as evidence. The value of farm land, thru which a highway right of way is sought to be condemned, cannot be competently shown by evidence of the recent sale price of similar land in a nearby community.

Maxwell v Highway Commission, 223-159; 271 NW 883; 118 ALR 862

Land values—familiarity with land. A witness is not competent to testify to the value of land when he has never been on the land and lives a material distance therefrom; neither is a witness competent who has never been on the land but once, lives at a great distance, and has manifestly superficial knowledge of the land.

Vanarsdol v Farlow, 200-495; 203 NW 794

Taxation—farm land within city—evidence warranting reduction in actual value. Where a 371.51-acre farm within the corporate limits of a city was very rough, the top soil washed off, the fertility gone, a third of the land infested with weeds rendering it impossible to raise even grass crops, and where the taxes exceeded the income, and qualified witnesses fixed its value at between $10 and $15 per acre, as against the tax assessor’s value fixed at $65.58 per acre, on same basis as adjoining lands, tho there was no other similar land in the district, the supreme court fixed the actual value thereof for taxation at $30 per acre.

Lincoln Bank v Board, 227-1136; 290 NW 94

Abuse of discretion in curtailing cross-examination. Where an expert witness has testified, on direct, to the value of a farm as a whole before and after a condemnation for a highway right of way, it is an abuse of discretion to refuse a cross-examination as to the value of separate tracts of the farm before and after the condemnation.

Dean v State, 211-143; 233 NW 36

Accessibility of farm to market. The defendant in eminent domain proceedings has the legal right, on the cross-examination of plaintiff’s witnesses as to value, to show the distance of plaintiff’s farm from the market and the kind of roads leading to such market.

Welton v Hy. Comm., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Driving stock across highway. In condemnation proceeding to acquire ground to widen highway which divided plaintiff’s farm, a hypothetical question asked of one witness as to whether the additional trouble experienced by plaintiff in driving his stock across highway, since it had been widened, would affect the values of the farm—alho being a question of doubtful propriety, was related to a matter so simple and self-evident that the opinion of the witness could add no force or prejudicial effect thereto.

Stoner v Hy. Comm., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Value—owner of property. An owner of personal property is a competent witness to give his opinion as to the value of the property.

Walters v Elec. Co., 203-467; 212 NW 886

Incompetency of owner of property. Proof of ownership is ordinarily prima facie proof of qualification on the part of the owner of property to testify to the value thereof, but not so when the record negatives such qualification. So held as to the value of corporate stock.

Ryan v Cooper, 201-220; 205 NW 302

Value of automobile—competency of witness. A witness is competent to testify to the value of an automobile before and after an accident when it appears that he has seen cars of that make sold, and also second-hand cars bought and sold.

Anderson v U. S. Ry. Adm., 203-715; 211 NW 872

Value—discretion of court. If a witness shows “some qualifications” to testify as to value, the court has a discretion to admit his testimony as to value.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Corporate stock—no market value—net value of assets. If there is no evidence of the market value of corporate stock—in an action for damages consequent on a fraudulently induced sale—said value must be determined by ascertaining the net value of the assets of the corporation.

Humphrey v Baron, 223-735; 273 NW 856

Value for services for engineering—contract—inadmissible. In an action against a city for engineering services, consisting of inspection and reconstruction of sewage disposal plant, refusal to admit evidence of value of services rendered within contemplation of contract for lump sum compensation is not error.

Slippy Engineering Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Competency of witness—value of services. Allowing a witness to testify to the value of services without a showing of competency, or after an admission of a total lack of knowledge as to such value, is manifestly erroneous.

Seddon v Richardson, 200-763; 205 NW 307

Competency of expert—value at distant market. A coal dealer who has for a long time purchased coal at points in a foreign state is competent to testify to the value of such commodity at said foreign points.

Smith v Railway, 202-292; 209 NW 465

Value—selling price. The issue of the value of an article is quite conclusively settled by evidence that the defendant had sold the article for the very sum which plaintiff contended was its value.

Kinsey v Massey, 204-758; 216 NW 54

Value—competency of testimony. Competency to testify to the value of an apparatus may not be predicated solely on the fact that the apparatus does not work efficiently.

Chariton Co. v Lester, 202-475; 210 NW 584

(k) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY IN GENERAL

Taking case from jury—scintilla evidence rule. In this state a mere scintilla of evidence will not raise a jury question and the trial court will be upheld in directing a verdict where, if the case were submitted and a verdict returned against the moving party, it would be the trial court's duty to set it aside.

Donahoe v Denman, 223-1273; 275 NW 155

Evidence incapable of direct contradiction—effect. Evidence which is of such nature that it is incapable of direct contradiction must be closely scrutinized.

Heavner v Kading, 209-1271; 228 NW 311

Testimony incapable of direct contradiction—credibility tested. Where the only person who can deny the testimony of a witness is dead, it is incumbent on the court to look upon such testimony with great jealousy and to weigh it in the most scrupulous manner to see what is the character and position of the witness generally, and whether he is corroborated to such an extent as to secure confidence that he is telling the truth.

Peterson v Bank, 228- ; 290 NW 546

Circumstantial evidence—sufficiency to establish theory. A theory cannot be established by circumstantial evidence, even in a civil action, unless the facts relied upon are of such a nature and so related to each other that it is the only conclusion that can fairly or reasonably be drawn from them, and it is not sufficient that they be consistent merely with that theory.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Inferences drawn from record. The trier of facts is entitled to draw such legitimate inferences as the record will warrant.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Acknowledgment—preponderance of testimony. Principle recognized that testimony sufficient to overthrow the probative force of a certificate of acknowledgment must amount to more than a preponderance in the balancing of probabilities.

Parry v Reinertson, 208-739; 224 NW 489; 63 ALR 1051

“Don't remember” testimony. Witness' testimony that he does not remember a conversation is of no probative value and is not sufficient to raise a conflict in the evidence.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Testimony—effect of “improbabilities.” “Improbabilities” in certain features of the testimony relative to a party's claim do not constitute a defense, and the court must not so instruct.

In re Dolmage, 204-231; 213 NW 380

Positive, affirmative and uncontradicted—effect. Positive testimony which affirms a fact cannot, when uncontradicted, be held to prove the negative.

Williams Bank v Murphy, 219-839; 259 NW 467

Burden of proof—negligence and proximate cause. Both negligence and proximate cause are questions of fact for the jury if the evidence is of sufficient weight and character to warrant their submission, and plaintiff has burden to establish them by a preponderance of the evidence, whether the evidence be direct or circumstantial.

Whetstone v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Reformation of instruments—proceedings and relief. Reformation of an instrument because of the mistake of plaintiff and fraud on the part of defendant will not be decreed except on clear, satisfactory, and convincing proof of the existence of said grounds. Evidence held insufficient.

West v Hysham, 214-349; 242 NW 19

Reformation of instruments—mandatory degree of proof. Plaintiff seeking the reformation of a written instrument, must fail unless he establishes by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence—by evidence exceeding a mere preponderance—by evidence approximating proof beyond a reasonable doubt—the definite contract which the executed writing does not embrace. Evidence reviewed in detail under a prayer for the reformation of a lease, and held insufficient to comply with the rule.

Stillman v Bank, 216-957; 249 NW 230

Statutory bond—forgery. Evidence reviewed and held that the signature to a depository bond was genuine.

School District v Bank, 218-91; 253 NW 920

Payment and discharge of note. Evidence held quite insufficient to establish payment of a note.

Andrew v Ingvoldstad, 218-8; 254 NW 334

Accommodation paper. Evidence held to show affirmatively that the maker of a promissory note was not an accommodation party.

Pennington v Nelson, 208-1310; 227 NW 163

Ratification of unauthorized indorsement. Evidence held to show the ratification of an unauthorized indorsement of a promissory note.

Lex v Steel Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Attorney indorsing client's checks. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed without actual authority by payee's local attorney who, over a period of years, had collected rents for the payee, evidence of transactions to show custom of attorney in indorsing payee's checks and in remitting by his personal checks was admissible, even tho bank did not have knowledge of all of the transactions, and it warranted finding that payee had knowledge of and acquiesced in such custom and was bound thereby.

Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Consideration and delivery—proof by presumptions. The questions of want of consideration and nondelivery of a note, though supported in proof by presumptions, need not be submitted under instructions to the jury when such presumptions are not overcome by evidence and the only conflict arises over the genuineness of the signature.

In re Cheney's Estate, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Holdership in due course—participation in fraudulent transaction. Evidence reviewed, and held to sustain a verdict to the effect that the acquisition of a negotiable promissory note by the holder thereof was part of a fraudulent transaction of which the holder had full knowledge and in which he actively participated.

Kenwood Co. v Armstrong, 201-888; 208 NW 371

Execution of contract. Evidence held sufficient to present a jury question on the issue whether bank directors had entered into an agreement as to what each, as between themselves, should pay on a promissory note given for the benefit of the bank.

Adamson v McKeon, 208-949; 225 NW 414; 65 ALR 817

Special deposits. Evidence held insufficient to show that a deposit was made for the special purpose of meeting payment on a particular draft, or was made under such circumstances that the issuance of the draft effected a pro tanto equitable assignment of the deposit.

Heckman v Bank, 208-322; 223 NW 164

Testamentary trustee of business nonchargeable with interest. Evidence reviewed, and held that a testamentary trustee, vested with unusually broad managerial powers, was not chargeable with interest on bank deposits, even though he was a stockholder in the bank.

Evans v Hynes, 212-1; 232 NW 72

Directed verdict—payment of rent. Direction of verdict in action to recover on rent note from tenant was erroneous when there was sufficient evidence of payment by tenant in turning over proceeds of crop to warrant submission of the case to jury.

McCann v McCann, (NOR); 226 NW 922

Evidence insufficient to warrant cancellation of note. Evidence held insufficient to warrant cancellation of note given to bank for loan used to purchase its stock when it did not sustain the plaintiff's charges of fraud, misrepresentation of the value of the stock, or that he received stock other than that which he intended to buy.

Bowne v Bonnifield, 226-712; 285 NW 144

Harmless error. In proceeding on claim against a decedent's estate for an alleged loan, trial court erred in holding that claimant's wife was an incompetent witness as to conversation with decedent wherein he stated that "they should get around to make a note for the $500 he gave him". However since court also found in effect that such evidence would not have been sufficiently definite to establish the claim, such error was not prejudicial.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Action on bond. Evidence reviewed, in action on a fidelity surety bond, and held to show abstraction of the employer's funds by the employee and consequent loss by the employer, within the terms of the bond.

Webster Bank v Ins. Co., 203-1264; 212 NW 545

Fraud—remedies of creditors. Proof (1) that the vendee of personal property did not record or file his bill of sale as required by law, (2) that there was no change of possession following the bill of sale, and (3) that the vendee actively aided the vendor in disposing of the property as the property of the vendor, furnishes ample justification for the holding that the rights of a good faith and innocent attaching creditor of the vendor were superior to the asserted rights of the vendee.

Beno Co. v Perrin, 221-716; 266 NW 539

Fraud—evidence sufficient to sustain. Evidence held to show that conveyance by judgment-debtor was with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditor in collection of judgment.

Phillips v McIlrath, (NOR); 237 NW 212

Action by trustee in bankruptcy—fraudulent conveyance. Trustee in bankruptcy who introduces testimony given on examination in bankruptcy court is bound thereby, and evidence is insufficient to sustain trustee's claim that transfer of note by bankrupt to sister was in fraud of creditors.

Cooney v Graves, (NOR); 230 NW 407

Fraudulent conveyances — self-impeaching evidence. The court cannot say, at least ordinarily, that wholly undisputed testimony tending to show that a conveyance was bona fide and for value is so self-impeaching as to establish the very contrary.

Hawkins v VerMeulen, 211-1279; 231 NW 361

Conveyance and assignment to stepson—evidence to set aside. Where an elderly but unusually self-willed woman executed a deed to her stepson during time in which she managed her own affairs, and relationship with grantee was only that which ordinarily exists between a mother and son, evidence in action to set aside the deed did not warrant finding that confidential relationship existed so as to raise presumption of fraud, but as to the assignment of a mortgage procured by this stepson after he came to live with her and had taken over management of her affairs, evidence justified finding that such relationship did exist.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Fraudulent conveyance. Evidence held to establish the fraudulent nature of a conveyance.

Hansen v Richter, 208-179; 225 NW 361

Self-enrichment of trustee—insufficient evidence of misconduct. A testamentary trustee of a coal mining company who, personally or in connection with employees of the company, with his own funds buys up lands or mining rights in lands and leases to the company the right to mine coal from said lands under a royalty, will not be compelled, long afterward, to account to the legatees and devisees for the royalties so received and for salary drawn during said time (1) when the trustee had been vested, under the will, with substantially the same power over the business as the deceased possessed when living, (2) when the policy of operating on leases was but a continuance of the lifelong policy of the deceased, (3) when the royalties paid were the royalties ordinarily and customarily paid in said locality, and (4) when the existence and history of said transactions were carried openly on the books of the company, and were either personally known or capable of being easily known by all the legatees and devisees.

Evans v Hynes, 212-1; 232 NW 72

Resulting trusts. A resulting trust will be established only on testimony which is clear and certain.

Irving v Grimes, 208-298; 225 NW 453

Validity of deed—constructive fraud. Evidence held to show affirmatively that the execution of a deed was not brought about by any constructive fraud arising out of the intimate relations of the parties.

Utterback v Hollingsworth, 208-300; 225 NW 419

Validity of deed—false representation—proof required. Principle reaffirmed that a deed of conveyance will not be set aside on an allegation of fraudulent representation which is sustained by a mere preponderance of the evidence.

Clark v Beck, 208-156; 225 NW 353

Covenants—action for breach. A covenant against incumbrance or to defend the title against the lawful claims of all persons whomsoever cannot be deemed broken on a naked showing that the covenantee remained out of possession because someone else was in possession. The nature of that possession is manifestly all-important: e. g., whether it is lawful and paramount and hostile to the rights of the covenantee.

Pope v Coe, 208-759; 225 NW 939

Standing truck—negligence per se. Evidence reviewed and held to establish negligence per se on the part of plaintiff in not seeing and avoiding a truck which was standing in the hallway of a hotel.

Walker v Hotel Co., 214-1150; 241 NW 484

Actions—evidence insufficient. In an action by a store customer to recover damages suffered when customer slipped and fell on waxed floor, evidence held insufficient to warrant instruction on question as to whether floor was excessively waxed at place where customer fell and that under the evidence such question was so conjectural as to be outside the jury's proper functioning.

Osborn v Klaber Bros., 227-105; 287 NW 252

Electricity—negligence—proximate cause. Evidence held insufficient to show that certain acts of omission and commission were the proximate cause of the reaching and entrance to a building of an excess voltage of electricity.

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151; 3 NCCA(NS) 547

II EVIDENCE GENERALLY—continued
(k) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY IN GENERAL—continued

Remote examination. Evidence of the existence of marks upon a public street and on the curb bordering thereon, several hours after an accident in question, is admissible over the objection that the evidence is too remote.

Stutzman v Younkerman, 204-1162; 216 NW 627

Cornice on building as nuisance. Evidence that a building built flush with the street line was surmounted by a cornice which overhung the street for a material distance and which for several years, through some defect, cast water upon the sidewalk, and at times caused a dangerous accumulation of ice on the sidewalk, furnishes ample basis for a jury finding that the city had not and was not keeping its street free from nuisance.

Wright v A. & P. Co., 216-565; 246 NW 846; 32 NCCA 509

Alienation of affections. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether the affections of the wife had been alienated.

Weyer v Vollbrecht, 208-914; 224 NW 568

Annulment of marriage—insanity. Evidence reviewed and held sufficient to authorize default decree annulling marriage on ground of insanity at time of marriage.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

Health insurance—partial disability. Evidence held to justify the submission to the jury of the issue of partial disability.

Vorpahl v Surety Co., 208-348; 223 NW 366

Broker — action for compensation — presumption not jury question. In an action by a real estate broker for commission, on the theory that he was the efficient and procuring cause for a sale, his showing that he was authorized to sell and had contacted a buyer who afterward purchased directly from the owner, raises no jury question but only a rebuttable presumption which defendant successfully rebuts by direct evidence to the contrary.

Donahoe v Denman, 223-1273; 275 NW 155

Council's judgment—filling station permit. The wisdom, judgment, or lack thereof, on the part of a city council in issuing a permit to erect a "filling station" is not reviewable by the courts unless the action taken was arbitrary, oppressive, or capricious. Evidence reviewed and permit held valid.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

Waiver—definition—proof—deferred salary. Waiver being an intentional relinquishment of a known right and provable only by clear, satisfactory, unambiguous evidence, where a corporation resolution deferring payment of certain delinquent salary accounts due corporate officers, did not of itself prevent payments thereon, fact of withdrawals thereafter from such salary accounts is not a waiver of such resolution.

Bankers Trust Co. v Economy Coal Co., 224-36; 276 NW 16

Deportation grounds—reviewed in habeas corpus. On an appeal from a denial of a writ of habeas corpus under deportation order, the question of sufficiency of evidence to support the order may be properly reviewed in a habeas corpus action, and where ground of deportation is fraud committed in Canada with no showing that crimes charged were criminal under the law of Canada, the order denying the writ was reversed with instructions to grant the writ, as neither a court nor an administrative body can take judicial notice of the laws of a foreign country. In an administrative proceeding there must be such procedure as to accord substantial justice and afford the parties a fair trial.

Smith v Hays, 10 F 2d, 145

Verdict set aside—criminal more readily than civil. Where the verdict is clearly against the weight of evidence, a new trial should be granted, and the appellate court will interfere more readily in a criminal case than in a civil one.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

No negative fact from affirmative testimony. Positive, uncontradicted testimony of husband and wife, defendants, called to testify by plaintiff, affirming in their own behalf fact of consideration for a deed to wife, cannot be held to have proven a negative fact of lack of consideration.

Donovan v White, 224-138; 275 NW 889

"Last clear chance"—evidence—insufficiency. The doctrine of "last clear chance" is not applicable unless peril of injured party is actually discovered and appreciated in time to prevent his injury by the exercise of ordinary care. So where plaintiff drives his truck at a speed of four or five miles per hour onto a railroad track, and is struck by a train going four or five miles per hour, and it is shown engineer of train felt a jar and, looking out of cab, saw some object in front of locomotive and immediately applied brakes and placed locomotive in reverse, held, evidence insufficient to submit to jury, and a motion for directed verdict was rightfully sustained.

Kinney v C. G. W. Ry. Co., 17 F 2d, 708

Mouse in Coca-Cola—jury question. Evidence establishing (1) purchase of a bottle of Coca-Cola from stand at country club, (2) immediate drinking of part of contents in presence of those in charge of stand, and (3) discovery of a dead mouse in bottle, and becoming ill as consequence, presents question for the jury as to whether the mouse was in the bottle when purchased by the country club.

Anderson v Tyler, 223-1033; 274 NW 48

Special assessments—excessiveness. Evidence held to justify a materially higher assessment for paving than the assessment fixed by the trial court.

Nelson v Sioux City, 208-709; 226 NW 41

Uncontroverted evidence may be insufficient unless corroborated. Positive evidence of the truth of an all-controlling fact may be insufficient to establish such fact when such evidence is, from its very nature, incapable of contradiction by any other witness, and when, if the evidence be true, corroborative facts necessarily exist, and are not shown. So held where it was sought to trace title through a secret trust.

Nehring v Hamilton, 210-1292; 232 NW 655

Unlawful transportation of liquor—evidence—sufficiency. A jury is amply justified in finding that an accused was engaged in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors when the evidence shows that he was found seated in the driver's seat of an automobile standing on a country road, with a loaded revolver by his side, and with fifty-five gallons of alcohol stored in the car.

State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306

Intoxicating liquors—illegal transportation. A charge of illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors is not sustained by unquestioned testimony that the defendant was overtaken by the operator of an automobile and was invited to ride, accepted the invitation, and entered the car (in which he had no interest), where he later found a jug of whisky, in which he likewise had no interest, but which he threw out of the car when pursued by peace officers.

State v Duskin, 202-425; 210 NW 421

Prosecution—probable cause—jury question. "Probable cause" for prosecution is defined as "the knowledge by the prosecuting witness of such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence, acting conscientiously, impartially, reasonably, and without prejudice, to believe the person accused is guilty", and except where the evidence is so clear and undisputed that all reasonable minds must reach the same conclusion, the question of probable cause is for the jury.

Bair v Schultz, 227-193; 288 NW 119

Total disability—de novo determination. Where evidence given by licensed chiropractors testifying for plaintiff, and physicians and surgeons testifying for defendant in regard to plaintiff's total disability is widely divergent and where there is ample evidence to support a finding either way, the supreme court, in a de novo trial, will not disturb the trial court's findings, the trial court being in a far more favorable position to determine whether claim of total disability is made in good faith.

Kurth v Ins. Co., 227-242; 288 NW 90

Absence of showing of cause and effect. Evidence in an action for forcible defilement, to the effect that the injured female suffered a case of nervous prostration over two years after the alleged assault, is wholly inadmissible, in the absence of any testimony tending to show that such condition was attributable to the alleged assault.

Wildeboer v Peterson, 201-1202; 203 NW 284

11255 Credibility.

ANALYSIS

- I CREDIBILITY IN GENERAL
- II IMPEACHMENT UNDER STATUTE
- III IMPEACHMENT IN GENERAL
- IV IMPEACHMENT BY CROSS-EXAMINATION

Confidential communications. See under §11263

I CREDIBILITY IN GENERAL

Testimony incapable of direct contradiction—credibility tested. Where the only person who can deny the testimony of a witness is dead, it is incumbent on the court to look upon such testimony with great jealousy and to weigh it in the most scrupulous manner to see what is the character and position of the witness generally, and whether he is corroborated to such an extent as to secure confidence that he is telling the truth.

Peterson v Bank, 228- ; 290 NW 546

Withdrawal of issue—effect on testimony introduced. Upon the withdrawal by the court of an issue, testimony which was primarily introduced on such issue is properly left in the record when it bears on the weight and credibility of the testimony of witnesses.

Birmingham Bank v Keller, 205-271; 215 NW 649

Incompetent testimony. Testimony that a witness was "arraigned" on a charge of intoxication is wholly incompetent on the issue of the credibility of the witness.

State v Voelpel, 213-702; 239 NW 677

Contradictory statements. It may always be shown that a witness has made material statements out of court contradictory of his material statements in court if proper foundation has been laid in the cross-examination.

State v Patrick, 201-368; 207 NW 393

Jury question on discredited testimony. The testimony of a prosecuting witness (forcible defilement in instant case) may be very seriously discredited, yet present a jury question as to its credibility.

I CREDIBILITY IN GENERAL—continued

Cross-examination affecting credibility—conclusiveness. A party who, on cross-examination, seeks to secure from the witness an admission that he was not sober at the time of an occurrence and that he had been drinking shortly prior thereto, and is met by a positive denial, is absolutely bound by such testimony, it appearing that the pleadings presented no issue as to whether the witness was sober.

Glass v Hutchinson Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

Discretionary limit to cross-examination. After a witness, on cross-examination, has testified (1) that he is a laborer, (2) that he has been convicted of a felony, and (3) that he is now residing in the county jail, the court may very properly curtail further cross-examination by excluding questions designed to show that the witness, instead of being a laborer, has been engaged, generally, in bootlegging and in the commission of larcenies and burglaries.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Evidence of subnormal mentality. The court is not in error in refusing to receive specific evidence of facts tending to show that a witness of the age of 12 years is of subnormal mentality—as bearing on the credibility of the witness—when such testimony is offered after said witness had been sworn and had testified without question having been raised as to the capacity of the witness to understand the obligation of an oath.

State v Teager, 222-391; 269 NW 348

Rape—motive of prosecutrix. Principle recognized that the motive of a witness may be shown as bearing on the question of credibility.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Evidence revealing no inconsistency. Evidence offered for the purpose of impeaching a witness is, of course, properly rejected when such evidence reveals no inconsistency whatever with the testimony of the witness.

In re Work, 212-31; 233 NW 28

Contradictions—duty of jury. The mere fact that the testimony of a witness reveals material contradictions does not necessarily deprive it of all probative force, and deprive the jury of the right and duty to reconcile the contradictions. The fact that the witness is a foreigner and untutored in the English language may be quite material under such circumstances.

State v Andrioli, 216-451; 249 NW 379

Positive testimony vs inherent improbability. The positive testimony of witnesses affirming the existence of an alleged fact, e. g., the entering into a contract, may be wholly overcome by the facts and circumstances attending the alleged fact and by the inherent improbability thereof.

Garretson v Harlan, 218-1049; 256 NW 749

Good character as defense. Defendant in a criminal prosecution may place in issue that trait of his character which is questioned by the charge made against him, and may sustain his good character as to said trait (1) by evidence of his good reputation as to said trait, or (2) by the direct testimony of witnesses who, by knowledge, qualify to speak as to such good character.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Good character generating reasonable doubt. The previous good character of an accused (as to the trait involved) shown either (1) by the general reputation of the accused, or (2) by actual personal experience of witnesses with the accused, may, in connection with all the evidence in the case, generate a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, and entitle him to an acquittal. And the jury must, on request, be so instructed.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Good character witness—cross-examination. A good character witness, who testifies that the general reputation of an accused (charged with operating an automobile while intoxicated) for moral character is good, may, on cross-examination, be asked whether he has heard within a stated recent time that the defendant, while operating a motor vehicle and while in an intoxicated condition, had been involved in certain specified accidents.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Bribery as indicating unfavorable admission. Attempt by a defendant to bribe a witness is indicative of an admission on his part that his cause or claim is unjust, dishonest, and unrighteous; and the court may so instruct the jury on supporting testimony.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Attempt to suppress testimony. While an attempt by the defendant to keep an adverse witness from testifying is not necessarily an admission by him that his claim or defense is false, yet such attempt is in effect an admission by the defendant that the testimony sought to be suppressed is unfavorable to his cause; and instructions to this effect, on supporting evidence, are proper.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Instructions as to credibility. The ordinary instructions as to the credibility of witnesses are all-sufficient in the absence of a request for a specific instruction as to the effect of impeaching testimony.

Altfilisch v Wessel, 208-361; 225 NW 862

Instruction—rule as to presumption on credibility of witness. In prosecution for suborna-tion of perjury, where defendant complains of the court's instruction which stated in part, "it being presumed in law that a man whose general reputation for truth and veracity is bad would be less likely to tell the truth than one whose reputation is good", such instruction did not tell the jury that defendant had been impeached, that he would not tell the truth, or that they could disregard his testimony (they were only informed of a rule applicable in everyday business transactions)—it being more a statement of the reason for such a rule in impeachment than any direction to the jury, and was in no sense a presumption of guilt, but could only be applied to defendant as a witness. The weight of defendant's testimony was left entirely for the jury.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Interest of accused as witness. Principle reaffirmed that an accused as a witness in his own behalf is an interested witness, and that the court may so instruct.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

Instructions—refusal. Reversal of a cause will not be ordered because the court refused to instruct as to the conditions under which the jury might entirely reject the testimony of a witness for falsely testifying, when the court otherwise sufficiently guides the jury as to the credibility of witnesses.

Burke v Lawton (Town), 207-585; 223 NW 397

Former plea of guilty—not conclusive in a civil action. In a civil action the plea of guilty to a criminal prosecution involving the same transaction is admissible as an admission but is not conclusive when the criminal defendant, as a witness in the civil action, gives testimony tending to contradict his plea of guilty.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Intoxication of motorist—evidentiary conflict. A sharp conflict in the testimony, as to whether a motor vehicle driver was intoxicated, generates a question of the credibility of the witnesses, which is a matter peculiarly for the jury.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

Prima facie case established without disproof. In an action on a note by alleged holder in due course, letters written by prior indorsee, after maturity, demanding payment from maker were properly excluded as hearsay, and in the absence of any disproof of prima facie case made under such circumstances it is not the duty of the court to submit case to jury solely on matter of credibility of witness.

Colthurst v Lake View Bank, 18 F 2d, 875

"Don't remember" testimony—no probative value. Witness' testimony that he does not remember a conversation is of no probative value and is not sufficient to raise a conflict in the evidence.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Credibility—contradictory previous testimony. Inconsistent testimony by a witness at one trial as to certain facts in an automobile accident cannot as a matter of law negative his testimony in a later trial, inasmuch as the jury is the sole judge of the credibility of a witness and the weight of his testimony.

Echternacht v Herny, 224-317; 275 NW 576

Credibility—bias of witness. Fact that a doctor, the real instigator of the prosecution, as a witness in a criminal case, showed considerable feeling and interest was a matter for the jury—not for the court.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

Attorney as counsel and witness in same case. While the court views with emphatic disfavor the act of an attorney in assuming the dual attitude of both counsel and witness in the same case, yet such conduct does not go to the competency of the attorney as a witness, but to the weight and credibility of his testimony, which latter fact may be very properly presented to the jury by appropriate instruction.

Cuvelier v Dumont (Town), 221-1016; 266 NW 517

Contradictory statements—unallowable purpose. Assessment rolls covering personal property of the taxpayer and the total value thereof, and introduced for purpose of impeachment, are not also receivable for the purpose of showing the value placed on a particular article when the owner demonstrates that the article was not given in for taxation.

Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

Court's discretion as to cross-examination. In cross-examination for the purpose of showing partiality and interest of witness a large discretion rests with trial court.

Higgins v Haagensen, (NOR); 220 NW 38

Conflicting evidence. On conflicting testimony, the jury is to determine the credibility of the witnesses and to ascertain the facts, and on appeal the supreme court is to determine not what the facts were, but solely what the jury was warranted in finding them to be, reviewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the party in whose favor the verdict was returned.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

II IMPEACHMENT UNDER STATUTE

Impeached but corroborated—effect. Rule restated for weighing the testimony of an impeached but corroborated witness.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

III IMPEACHMENT IN GENERAL

Pleadings as evidence. Pleadings containing inconsistent or contradictory statements of relevant facts are available for impeaching purposes.

Larson v Bank, 202-333; 208 NW 726

Pleadings as evidence. Pleadings and amendments thereto which reveal changes and enlargements of the amount sued for may be used for impeaching purposes, and the court may so instruct.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

Inconsistent conduct. A party who, by his pleading and testimony, denies all liability may be impeached by a showing that he made no denial of liability on a former occasion when a denial would have been natural; likewise by a showing that he has made statements out of court wholly inconsistent with his statements in court.

Starry v Starry, 208-228; 225 NW 268

Shorthand notes. The shorthand notes taken upon the trial of an action may be used for impeaching purposes.

Judd v Rudolph, 207-113; 222 NW 416; 62-ALR 1174

Evidence in other proceeding—inadmissible against nonparty. A transcript of the original, official shorthand notes of a witness in proceedings auxiliary to execution, to which proceedings the witness was not a party, is inadmissible as substantive evidence in a subsequent proceeding against the witness wherein a conveyance is sought to be set aside as fraudulent; neither is such transcript admissible, in the absence of proper foundation, to show the admissions of, or to impeach, the witness.

Hawkins v VerMeulen, 211-1279; 231 NW 361

Right to full cross-examination as to inconsistent statements. A witness may always be fully cross-examined as to signed statements of fact made outside the court which are inconsistent with his statements in court.

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

Form of question. The question used as the foundation for the impeachment of a witness by showing that the witness has made statements out of court contradictory of his statements in court, and the question asked the impeaching witness, do not necessarily have to be in the same words.

State v Patrick, 201-368; 207 NW 393

Immaterial contradictory statements. Impeachment may not be based on immaterial contradictory statements of a witness.

State v Halley, 203-192; 210 NW 749

Disregarding testimony — instructions. The court should instruct, on request, that if the jury believes a witness has been successfully impeached by the making of contradictory statements, his testimony may be disregarded unless it has been corroborated by other credible evidence.

Welton v Hy. Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Disregarding testimony — instructions. Instructions to the effect that the jury may peremptorily reject in toto the testimony of a witness who has testified falsely to any material fact, or who has been impeached, are prejudicially erroneous unless accompanied (1) by qualifying instructions that the false swearing must be wilful, and (2) by instructions guiding the jury in case they find for any reason that the testimony in question is reasonable and credible.

State v McCook, 206-629; 221 NW 59

Unallowable self-corroboration. A witness may not corroborate himself by testifying that on other occasions out of court he has told the same story which he has told in court. Neither may a party prove such extra recitals by other witnesses.

State v Bell, 206-816; 221 NW 521

Unallowable self-corroboration. After a party to an action has been cross-examined with regard to his testimony on a former trial for the purpose of laying the foundation for proving contradictory statements, it is wholly unallowable for counsel on redirect examination to read copious excerpts from the transcript of the witness' former testimony and have the witness say that he did so testify.

State v Cordaro, 214-1070; 241 NW 448

Effect of impeachment. A jury should not be told to reject the testimony of an impeached witness unless it has been corroborated.

State v Ellington, 200-636; 204 NW 307

Contradictory statements. A witness who has testified that, at the time of the search of an establishment for intoxicating liquors, he was the owner thereof by purchase from the accused on trial, may be impeached by testimony that, at the time of the search, he had said that he was working for the accused on trial; and it is immaterial (except as to the application of such testimony) whether the accused on trial was or was not present at the time of said search.

State v Olson, 200-660; 204 NW 278

Striking collateral and immaterial matter. Collateral and immaterial matters which are brought out on the redirect examination of a good-character witness are properly stricken from the record.

Amick v Montross, 206-51; 220 NW 51; 58 ALR 1147

Association with accomplice. An accused who becomes a witness in his own behalf may be impeached by testimony tending to establish his personal association with an accomplice, the existence of such association being material, and having been denied by the accused.

State v Hart, 205-1374; 219 NW 405

Nonresponsive matters. An accused may not impeach a witness for the state by testifying to matters which are quite unresponsive to anything to which the witness has testified.

State v McCook, 206-629; 221 NW 59

Reputation at present time—relevancy. A question calling for the reputation of a witness is properly limited to the present time—the time when he testifies—not to the time of the occurrence concerning which he testifies.

State v Teager, 222-391; 269 NW 348

Bad moral character—scope of cross-examination. A person testifying to the general bad moral character of a witness may be cross-examined as to the reputation of the witness as to truth and veracity.

State v Smalley, 211-109; 233 NW 55

Impeachment by reputation—dual methods. The common-law rule that a witness may be impeached by showing his bad reputation for truth and veracity in the community where he resides or in which he has recently resided, has not been abrogated or in any manner changed by the statutory provision that the general moral character of a witness may be proved for the purpose of testing his credibility.

State v Teager, 222-391; 269 NW 348

Unallowable impeachment—reputation. Mere witnesses in a criminal prosecution are not impeachable by testimony that their general reputation in the community where they reside is bad as to some particular trait of character.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Exclusion of nonexplanatory question. The erroneous refusal of the court, in a prosecution for assault to rape, to permit a witness, proffered by the defendant, to answer a question whether the witness knew the general reputation of the prosecutrix as to truth and veracity in the community where she lived, cannot be deemed harmless error on the ground that the question did not reveal whether the witness would answer "yes" or "no", when, in connection with the proffer of the witness, defendant offered to show that said prosecutrix was "wholly unreliable in her word and statements".

State v Teager, 222-391; 269 NW 348

Adverse party as witness—contradictory testimony. Where plaintiff calls adverse party as witness he vouches for his competency, credibility, and truthfulness; however, he is entitled to the benefit of any conflict, inconsistency, or incongruity, which might be found in his testimony and is not precluded from calling other witnesses to contradict testimony or if the testimony of the adverse party appears to be inherently improbable or lacking in credit or made to appear so by the testimony of other witnesses, the court is not bound by the language in which the witnesses frame their answers, and may enter a decree setting aside a conveyance as fraudulent, notwithstanding that husband and wife, as adverse witnesses called by creditor, testified to sustain conveyances.

Goeb v Bush, 226-1224; 286 NW 492

Impeachment of one's own witness. A party may not impeach his own witness.

Endicott v Shapiro, 200-843; 205 NW 511
Bihlmeier v Budzine, 201-398; 205 NW 763
Lawton Bk. v Bremer, 205-334; 218 NW 49

Impeachment—allowable contradiction. A party may not impeach his own witness but he may offer testimony of other witnesses in contradiction thereof.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Right to contradict one's own witness. While a litigant may not impeach his own witness, he may show that his witness is mistaken.

North Amer. Ins. v Holstrum, 208-722; 217 NW 239; 224 NW 492

Homestead. Life v Salinger, 212-251; 235 NW 485

Larson v Church, 213-930; 239 NW 921

Johnson v Warrington, 213-1216; 240 NW 668

In re Skinner, 215-1021; 247 NW 484

Conclusiveness on party calling witness. A party who calls a witness is not necessarily bound by the testimony of the witness, yet, when a party calls a witness on the issue of fraud and want of consideration in a conveyance, he will not be permitted to say that affirmative, uncontradicted, and positive testimony of the witness that there was no fraud and that there was a consideration establishes the direct contrary.

Pike v Coon, 217-1068; 252 NW 888

Discrediting own witness—claimant against estate. A claimant against an estate who puts the administratrix on the stand as his witness may not discredit her by attempting to show that she tried to deceive him as to the fact of decedent's death so that his claim against the estate would be barred.

Federal Bank v Bonnett, 226-112; 284 NW 97

Impeachment of one's own witness. A party may not show that his own witness has a bad reputation for truth and veracity, or for moral character, or that said witness has made prior contradictory statements relative to the subject-matter in question, but a party may always show the facts attending a transaction tho he

III IMPEACHMENT IN GENERAL—concluded thereby contradicts one or more of his own witnesses.

Johnson v Warrington, 213-1216; 240 NW 668

Right to rebut impeaching testimony. Testimony by grand jurors which tends to show, by way of impeachment, that a witness for an accused made statements before the grand jury inconsistent with the statements of the witness at the trial arms the accused with right to show by the clerk of the grand jury that the grand jurors were mistaken,—that the testimony of the witness in question was the same on both occasions.

State v Archibald, 204-406; 215 NW 258

Limiting impeaching evidence. The failure of the court on its own motion in its instructions to specifically limit impeaching testimony to that particular purpose is not erroneous when the testimony in question is of such a nature that it could not be considered for any other purpose.

State v Brewer, 218-1287; 254 NW 834

Impeachment — inconsistent statements—insufficient foundation. Testimony by a witness that he has no remembrance of having used a certain expression in testifying before a coroner's jury, but that he would not say that he did not use the expression, furnishes no foundation for impeaching the witness by proof that he actually did use said expression.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Impeachment — permissible cross-examination. A witness who has testified to the reputed good character of a party may, within the limits of good faith on the part of the cross-examiner, be examined along the line whether said good character witness had "heard of" certain nefarious transactions in which the said party had been engaged.

State v Carter, 222-474; 269 NW 445

Witness—contradicting self and impeachment. The fact that a witness was impeached or, being mentally slow and confused, makes statements on cross-examination which might be construed as contradictory, instead of being sufficient to take the case from the jury, on the contrary presents a jury question.

Russell v Leschensky, 224-334; 276 NW 608

Impeachment—instructions by court. While in criminal cases the court must fairly present the issues to the jury, yet, after this is done, a defendant should ask for further instructions, if desired, or not be heard to complain; so where the jury would have understood from the instructions given, the purpose of introducing a written instrument for impeachment only and the meaning of the word "impeachment", it was not reversible error to fail to give a separate instruction thereon, especially without a request therefor.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Error which becomes inconsequential. Error in overruling a motion for a directed verdict at the close of plaintiff's evidence when certain all-essential testimony was not then in the record, becomes inconsequential when, at the time of renewing the motion at the close of all the evidence, such testimony is in the record.

Newland v McClelland & Son, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Going under assumed name. It is proper, on cross-examination of an accused in a criminal cause, to ask him if he has not gone under an assumed name since the commission of the offense in question, and, if denial be made, to introduce evidence tending to prove such fact.

State v Ivey, 200-649; 203 NW 38

Corruption of witness. An interwoven transaction tending to show that a defendant and a third party were working in conjunction to corrupt a witness, and consisting of conversations in part between said witness and said third person, and in part between all three said parties, is admissible—the court carefully limiting the jury in the consideration of said testimony.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Documentary contradiction. Testimony that an insurance company would not have issued a policy to an insured had it known his true occupation may be met by the introduction of policies which negated such testimony.

Murray v Ins. Co., 204-1108; 216 NW 702

Impeachment on unallowable point. A witness who makes no denial of his liability on the claim sued on, but by his testimony denies, in effect, the liability of his co-defendant on said claim, may not be impeached by a showing that on former occasions he made no denial of the liability of his co-defendant, it appearing that such former occasions were such as not to call for any denial by him of the liability of his co-defendant.

Starry v Starry, 208-228; 225 NW 268

IV—IMPEACHMENT BY CROSS-EXAMINATION

Sworn assessment roll competent. The defendant in eminent domain proceedings has the right, on the cross-examination of the plaintiff and for the purpose of contradicting and impeaching him, to show the sworn statement made by the plaintiff to the assessor as to the value of the farm in question and as to the number and value of the livestock kept on said farm.

Welton v Hy. Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Bias of witness. A witness on his cross-examination may be interrogated as to his state of mind or bias against the party against whom he testifies, for instance, that the witness and said other party are involved in hostile litigation.

Bond v Lotz, 214-683; 243 NW 586

Improper cross-examination. Reversible error results from repeatedly and insistently injecting into the cross-examination of a defendant on trial for crime, and into the cross-examination of his character witnesses, insinuations and innuendoes to the effect that the accused had been guilty of other crimes prior to the time in question.

State v Rounds, 216-131; 248 NW 500

Remote collateral matters. The state may not, on cross-examination of an accused, delve into remote collateral matters.

State v McCumber, 202-1382; 212 NW 137

Character and conduct — particular acts or facts. Offer on cross-examination to prove certain reprehensible acts and conduct on the part of the witness reviewed, and held properly rejected.

Wilson v Fortune, 209-810; 229 NW 190

Impeachment—improper but harmless cross-examination. The cross-examination of a good character witness for a defendant in a criminal case should be limited to reports and rumors in the community to negative good reputation. But ordinarily prejudicial and reversible error will not be deemed to result from an improper cross-examination when it is not extreme, when the answers are favorable to defendant, and when the court promptly admonishes the jury to wholly disregard such examination.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

Bias—indictment for same offense. A witness for parties jointly indicted for conspiracy may be cross-examined along the line of showing that he, himself, stands indicted for conspiracy of the identical nature as that for which defendants stand indicted,—such testimony being strictly confined to its bearing on the bias of the witness.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

11256 Interest.

Hearsay evidence. An impeaching witness may not testify to declarations of another witness tending to show that such other witness had an interest in the pending litigation, no proper foundation for such declarations appearing.

Cleophas v Walker, 211-122; 233 NW 257

Interest of accused as witness. An accused as a witness in his own behalf is an interested witness, and the court may so instruct.

State v Bird, 207-212; 220 NW 110

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

11257 Transaction with person since deceased.

I APPLICABILITY OF STATUTE IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 19 ILR 521—Admission of evidence

Dead man statute—difficulty in applying. Difficulty or undesirability of applying the so-called dead man statute is no justification for the courts to disregard it, so long as it remains as an act of the legislature.

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

Testimony incapable of direct contradiction—credibility tested. Where the only person who can deny the testimony of a witness is dead, it is incumbent on the court to look upon such testimony with great jealousy and to weigh it in the most scrupulous manner to see what is the character and position of the witness generally, and whether he is corroborated to such an extent as to secure confidence that he is telling the truth.

Peterson v Bank, 228- ; 290 NW 546

Contract with deceased. A claimant against an estate who is sui juris does not competently establish a mutually binding contract between claimant and the deceased for the conveyance of land by deceased to claimant by proving a conversation (1) which took place in the presence of claimant, but solely between the mother of claimant and the deceased, (2) which was in no manner addressed to claimant, and (3) in which claimant took no part.

In re Runnells, 203-144; 212 NW 327

Action against guardian—testimony by wife of indorsee. The wife of the indorsee of a certificate of deposit is incompetent to testify against the guardian of the original payee as to the genuineness of the signature of the latter as indorsee.

Farmers Bank v Bank, 201-73; 204 NW 404

Reliance on statements to third party. A claimant in probate must not be permitted to testify that he relied and acted on statements made by the deceased to a third party in a conversation in which claimant took part; otherwise as to statements made by deceased in conversation in which claimant did not take part.

I APPLICABILITY OF STATUTE IN GENERAL—continued

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

Nonprejudicial exclusion of question. A witness, who is incompetent to testify to material conversations with a deceased person, may be asked and permitted to answer the general question whether he had a conversation with the deceased, on a certain occasion, on the subject matter in issue, but the exclusion of such question is nonprejudicial.

Southhall v Berry, 207-605; 223 NW 480

Cashier-stockholder — incompetency of. In an action by a bank to recover on the promissory notes of a deceased maker, in which action the defendant executor pleads a settlement in full between said bank and said maker, a witness who is both cashier of, and a stockholder in, said bank, is incompetent to testify that at the time of the settlement in question it was "understood" that the notes sued on were not to be included in said settlement; likewise that one of the notes sued on (admittedly without original consideration) was to be substituted for other notes charged off as paid.

Monticello Bk. v Schatz, 222-335; 268 NW 602

Bank receiver not protected. In an action by the receiver of an insolvent bank to recover on promissory notes allegedly due the bank, wherein defendant pleaded payment, held that the receiver was not within the class protected by the dead man statute.

Bates v Zehnpfennig, 220-164; 262 NW 141

Deceased's insurance as security—original holder incompetent witness. Altho having assigned his claim and altho the claim is duly allowed in probate, the original party to an oral contract with a deceased is incompetent as a witness, when the assignee of such contract seeks to subject the proceeds of the deceased's life insurance to payment thereof by reason of an oral contract claimed to have been entered into with the deceased.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Testimony by one who takes no part in conversation. Where a deceased had taken his nephew, raised him, and promised to pay him for working on decedent's farm, testimony as to statements made by the deceased in conversations wherein deceased had said the boy was to be paid from his estate when he died, may be received from the wife of deceased, the wife of claimant, and the claimant himself, provided they took no part in the conversations.

Gardner v Marquis, 224-458; 275 NW 493

Decedent's admissions against interest—scrutiny. In support of a claim against an estate, testimony of decedent's alleged admissions against interest, not being susceptible of denial or explanation by decedent and its worth being measured by the veracity of the witness, should be closely scrutinized and cautiously received.

In re Straka, 224-109; 275 NW 490

Witnesses qualifying books of account—statute not applicable. Statute prohibiting testimony concerning transactions or communications with a person now deceased does not render a claimant against the estate incompetent as witness to testify to preliminary facts required for authentication of books of account, admissibility of which is permitted by statute.

In re Cummins, 226-1207; 286 NW 409

Bills and notes—requisites and validity—delivery of note. In the absence of contrary evidence, a valid delivery was proved by the statutory presumption of delivery arising from possession of a note, aided by evidence, secured without violating the dead man statute, to the effect that the note was in decedent maker's hands while visiting payee during an illness and after decedent left, the note was reposing on payee's bed.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Offering direct examination makes cross-examination admissible. In an action for conversion of an intestate's property, testimony of a witness on direct examination, given in a prior probate discovery proceeding offered and introduced from the transcript of the discovery proceeding, renders also admissible from such transcript the cross-examination of such witness, as being the whole of the conversation, altho under the dead man statute the witness may have been incompetent.

Reeves v Lyon, 224-659; 277 NW 749

Dead man statute—circumventing by indirection. A witness is not permitted to do by indirection that which the law forbids. So held where a passenger in a motor vehicle attempted to circumvent the dead man statute by testifying that he was hired by someone to make the trip, who was no other person than the deceased driver.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Probate claimant's wife. In proceeding on claim against a decedent's estate for an alleged loan, trial court erred in holding that claimant's wife was an incompetent witness as to conversation with decedent wherein he stated that "they should get around to make a note for the $500 he gave him". However since court also found in effect that such evidence would not have been sufficiently definite to establish the claim, such error was not prejudicial.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Conversation with deceased—state of mind—lost will. When a person who had talked with the decedent shortly before decedent's death testified that the decedent told him that he had made a will, where it was made, and who were witnesses to the will, the testimony, when not objected to, could be given its full probative effect, and came under an exception to the hearsay rule to show the then state of mind of the decedent, tending to prove the prior execution of the will.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Fiduciary relationship—intestate and heir. In an action by heirs of intestate to set aside a conveyance of realty made by intestate to son, on the ground of an alleged fiduciary relationship existing between aged intestate and son, held, that evidence was insufficient to establish such relationship, and even tho such relationship existed, whatever property the son received from his mother was by her voluntary and intelligent act, and without duress, dominance or overreaching on his part.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Widow's support—subjecting proceeds from land sale. Where real estate devised to widow for life with right to dispose of such realty for her necessary support, when an equity action was brought to establish a claim for the support of widow as a lien against this realty on the ground that widow contracted for support and intended, prior to her death, to sell such realty, in accordance with the terms of the will to provide money with which to pay such claim, held, evidence sufficient to establish claim and subject the proceeds from the sale of such realty to payment of said claim.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

II PARTIES TO ACTION

Communications between deceased and party to action. A proper party to an action is incompetent to testify, against an administrator, as to a material personal transaction with the deceased, represented by said administrator, even tho said party is only indirectly interested in the issue on trial.

Nugent v Dittel, 213-671; 239 NW 559

Resignation of administrator. An administrator who has been substituted as plaintiff in lieu of the deceased plaintiff, but who has later resigned, and been succeeded by another appointee, may not be deemed a party to the action, and therefore incompetent to testify to personal transactions with the deceased.

Buckley v Ebdorf, 204-896; 216 NW 20

Probate claimant for services—incompetency as witness. In probate action to establish a claim against an estate based on an express contract for services rendered to decedent, claimant could not testify as to existence of contract.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Instruction—agreement with decedent—claimant incompetent to testify. In probate action to establish a claim based upon an express agreement of decedent that claimant's services should be paid for from decedent's estate, an instruction that claimant was not permitted to testify as to agreement between her and decedent, and that if any agreement was in fact made between the parties, it must be proved by testimony other than that of claimant, was not prejudicial to defendant in that jury would believe that it applied to the communication of the contract to claimant through her father, who had been informed by decedent as to the nature of the agreement—there being other testimony of the communication, and the trial court having excluded the testimony of the father after objection of defendant.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Contract with deceased. In an action against an administrator and against a devisee, to quiet title to real estate, plaintiff is wholly incompetent to testify with respect to a contract between the plaintiff and the deceased.

Black v Nichols, 213-976; 240 NW 261

Interest of party. A party to an action against an estate is competent to testify to the material intent which actuated him or which he had in a transaction with the deceased.

In re Talbot, 209-1; 224 NW 550

Intervenor—competency. In equity action to quiet title and to declare a trust in realty, an intervenor who claims same relief as plaintiff may not testify to alleged oral agreement between parties, some of whom are deceased.

Wagner v Wagner, (NOR); 224 NW 583

Co-plaintiffs. When plaintiff and an intervening plaintiff are each claiming an undivided one-third interest in land, and one is incompetent to testify to a personal transaction with a deceased and thereby establish his contract, he is equally incompetent to testify to said personal transaction and thereby establish the contract for his co-plaintiff.

Wagner v Wagner, 208-1004; 224 NW 583

III INTERESTED PARTIES

Will contestant. A will contestant is incompetent to testify to a conversation between herself and the deceased relative to the will.

Worth v Pierson, 208-353; 223 NW 752

Husband of claimant—participation in conversation. In an action against an estate for services rendered the deceased, the husband of claimant is incompetent to testify to conversa-

III INTERESTED PARTIES—concluded
 tions between his wife and the deceased, relative to said services, when the husband takes part to any extent in the subject matter of said conversations.

In re Stencil, 215-1195; 248 NW 18

Nonpayment of insurance premiums. In an action by the beneficiary in a life insurance policy to recover thereon, an agent of the insurer who negotiated the policy is a competent witness to testify that the insured did not make payment to him of the premiums due on the policy.

Range v Ins. Co., 216-410; 249 NW 268

Witness' knowledge of fact but not who told him. In an action for partition, wherein defendant claimed absolute title under a deed which she first physically obtained, after the grantor's death, by going to the bank where it was on deposit, the defendant is a competent witness to testify, (1) that she knew where the deed was kept, but (2) not that grantor told her where it was kept.

Robertson v Renshaw, 220-572; 261 NW 645

Witness — cross-examination establishing competency to testify on redirect. Altho being an incompetent witness as to conversations with the deceased, a daughter, objecting to an executor's report because against her share is offset a promissory note which she claims was canceled by the testator, may be rendered competent to testify on redirect examination when conversations with testator were partially inquired into on cross-examination.

In re Morgan, 225-746; 281 NW 346

Defendant with nominal interest only. A bank cashier, who is made a party defendant in a quiet title action, involving deeds he holds in escrow with instructions to record upon the death of the grantor, is incompetent to testify regarding a conversation had with the deceased husband of the grantor about said deeds, although his interest in the action is purely nominal.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Fraud perpetrated by insane payee of note. In an action on a promissory note by the indorsee thereof, the maker is not a competent witness to testify to the fraud perpetrated on him by the payee in the execution of the note, when, at the time of the action, said payee is insane.

Cherokee Bk. v Lawrey, 203-20; 212 NW 359

IV NONINTERESTED PARTIES

Nondisqualifying interest. A person may not be deemed "interested" in the outcome of an action by an administrator, and therefore disqualified from testifying to personal communications with the deceased, from the fact that the will of the deceased directs that he be paid whatever testatrix may be owing him at the time of her death.

Buckley v Ebendorf, 204-896; 216 NW 20

Disqualifying "interest" defined—testimony as to deposit made by decedent. In action against bank to secure an accounting for funds given to cashier by decedent, where cashier, who was not associated with bank at time of trial, testified that the funds were received by him in connection with a personal transaction had with the decedent, held, that he was not an incompetent witness under dead man statute. To render a witness incompetent under that statute he must be interested in the sense that he will either gain or lose by direct legal operation of the judgment or in the sense that the record will be legal evidence for or against him in some other action.

Peterson v Citizens Bank, 228- ; 290 NW 546

Attesting witness to will—"or otherwise"—construction. An attesting witness to a will is not a person from, through, or under whom the proponents, as legatees, derive any interest or title by assignment "or otherwise" and, therefore, is not incompetent to testify under the dead man statute. Whatever interest proponents have they derive from the will.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Indirect and uncertain interest of attorney. The fact that a will directs the executor and trustee to procure the services of a named attorney (who drew the will) in carrying out the provisions of the will, does not render the said attorney incompetent to testify to personal transactions and communications with the deceased.

In re Kenney, 213-360; 239 NW 44; 78 ALR 1189

Probate claimant's wife. In proceeding on claim against a decedent's estate for an alleged loan, trial court erred in holding that claimant's wife was an incompetent witness as to conversation with decedent wherein he stated that "they should get around to make a note for the $500 he gave him". However since court also found in effect that such evidence would not have been sufficiently definite to establish the claim, such error was not prejudicial.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

V ASSIGNEES, LEGATEES, NEXT OF KIN, EXECUTORS, ETC.

Satisfaction of legacy. On the issue whether a testator had, prior to his death, satisfied a legacy, the legatee is not a competent witness as to a personal conversation between him and the testator relative to said matter.

Heileman v Dakan, 211-344; 233 NW 542

Execution of instrument. The wife of the assignee of a claim is competent to testify that, in a transaction between her husband and the assignor (since deceased), in which transaction she took no part, she saw the assignor affix her signature to the written assignment.

Steenhoek v Tr. Co., 205-1379; 219 NW 492

VI SURVIVORS

Transaction with deceased partner. In an action by the surviving members of a firm of attorneys to recover attorney fees on the basis of a quantum meruit, the surety on the bond to release the lien for said fees is incompetent to testify that, after a large part of the services had been rendered, he had an oral agreement with the deceased partner to the effect that the firm would accept a certain definite sum for all services performed and to be performed.

Kelly v Bk. 217-725; 248 NW 9; 250 NW 171

VII HUSBAND OR WIFE

Admissions of wife against husband. Admissions by a wife in the absence of the husband, tending to show that a claimant in probate had been employed in the business and had not been paid, are admissible against the estate of the husband when it appears that the wife was both the general manager of the business in question and a partner therein with her husband.

Nortman v Lally, 204-638; 215 NW 713

Failure to prosecute claim or disclaimer of interest ineffective. A divorced wife of a deceased may not become a competent witness to an oral contract made jointly between herself, her mother, and the deceased, in order to subject his insurance to payment of her mother's valid probate claim, merely by failing to prosecute a similar claim of her own and disclaiming any interest in the claim in litigation, since she still has her claim and may enforce payment if the contract is established.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Fraudulent conveyance. In action by creditor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by decedent to claimant against estate, claimant and her husband held not incompetent to testify by reason of dead man statute.

First N. Bank v Adams, (NOR); 266 NW 484

VIII PRINCIPAL AND AGENT

Employee of plaintiff as witness. In proceedings in probate to establish a claim against an estate where the plaintiff, a gasoline dealer, sought to prove that the deceased had promised to pay a gasoline bill for his tenant, it was not error to permit the plaintiff's tank wagon driver to testify as to a conversation between the deceased and the tenant concerning the payment of the bill, when the driver took no part in the conversation, had already received his commission on the sale, and had no present, certain, and vested interest in the litigation.

Reichart v Downs, 226-870; 285 NW 256

Ratification of unauthorized act. The agent of a deceased who executes a promissory note in the name of the deceased but without authority so to do, and the person who received the consideration for said note, are incompetent in an action against the administrator on the note, to testify to personal communications with the deceased tending to show that the deceased ratified the unauthorized act of the agent.

Lyon Bank v Winter, 214-533; 242 NW 600

Agent of party litigant. An interested party litigant is a competent witness to testify to personal transactions and communications had by him with the deceased alleged agent of another party litigant who is "next of kin" to such alleged agent, but who is making no claim of right under such kinship.

State Bk. v Fairholm, 201-1094; 206 NW 143

Insurance premium—deceased agent's liability. In action to cancel insurance premium notes where evidence, clearly admissible against administrator of deceased insurance agent, established that check and two notes were delivered to agent for payment of premium and that insurer rejected application for insurance, such evidence warranted cancellation of the notes and established agent's liability for the unaccounted part of the check as against administrator of the agent's estate.

Economy Co. v Ins. Co., 227-1123; 290 NW 82

IX PERSONAL TRANSACTIONS AND COMMUNICATIONS

Delivery of notes. The maker of a promissory note is incompetent to testify against an administrator that he did not deliver promissory notes to the deceased.

Lusby v Wing, 207-1287; 224 NW 554

Creditor of heir. An heir of a deceased is a competent witness to testify against his creditor as to a personal transaction between said heir and his deceased parent.

Lennert v Cross, 215-551; 241 NW 787; 244 NW 693

Incompetency of minor claimant. A claimant against an estate for services rendered to the deceased is not a competent witness to testify to a conversation between her father and the deceased in which the deceased agreed to pay claimant, a minor, for past and future services, even though the claimant took no part in said conversation.

In re Willmott, 211-34; 230 NW 330; 71 ALR 1018

Rendition of services. Plaintiff in an action against an estate for services rendered to the deceased during his lifetime is incompetent to testify to the rendition of the services.

In re Kahl, 210-903; 232 NW 133

IX PERSONAL TRANSACTIONS AND COMMUNICATIONS—concluded

Expectation of payment. A claimant for services rendered as a member of the family of a decedent is incompetent to testify against the executor that she expected to receive compensation for the services performed.

In re Docius, 215-1193; 247 NW 796

Taking part in conversation. Testimony of a claimant in probate as to a conversation between the deceased and a third party, in which claimant took no part, should be stricken from the record, when it is later shown that claimant was present during a material part of the conversation and took part therein.

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

Rendition of judgment against party—effect. The fact that judgment has been rendered against one of several defendants on the pleaded cause of action, does not render said judgment defendant a competent witness to testify against an administrator, who is a defendant, as to a personal transaction with the deceased intestate, said transaction being vital to plaintiff's right to recover.

Rawleigh Co. v Moel, 215-843; 246 NW 782
Stokesberry v Burgher, 220-916; 262 NW 820

Proper objector in will contest. All heirs of a testator and all beneficiaries under testator's will are affected by the ordinary probate proceedings for the proof of the will, provided they have had due service by publication of the notice promulgated by the clerk for the hearing of such proof; and when a contest of the will is injected into such proceedings, the recognized proponent of the will, even tho he is not a testamentary beneficiary, and even tho he is holding no official probate position, may, on behalf of such heirs and beneficiaries, validly interpose the objection that contestant is incompetent to testify to personal transactions and communications with the deceased testator.

Blakely v Cabelka, 207-959; 221 NW 451

Intervenor in garnishment proceedings. In garnishment proceedings involving a controversy between a judgment plaintiff and an intervenor claiming the garnished funds under an assignment, the fact that the judgment defendant is an executor of the alleged assignor does not render the intervenor-assignee incompetent to testify to personal transactions and communications with the deceased assignor, it appearing that the executor was disclaiming any interest in said funds.

Shierry v Randall, 214-1053; 243 NW 350

When incompetent testimony harmless. The reception of incompetent testimony in the form of personal transactions with a deceased becomes inconsequential when the issue on which the testimony has bearing is established beyond question by other competent testimony.

Nortman v Lally, 204-638; 215 NW 713

Evidence disregarded. Prohibited evidence, in an equitable action, of a personal transaction between a grantee in a conveyance and the deceased grantor will be disregarded on appeal.

O'Neil v Morrison, 211-416; 233 NW 708

De novo trial in equity—disregarding improper testimony. On trial de novo on appeal in equity cases, testimony given by incompetent witnesses, as to transactions and communications with a deceased person, will be disregarded.

Flint v Varney, 220-1241; 264 NW 277

X NONPERSONAL TRANSACTIONS AND COMMUNICATIONS, AND EXCEPTIONS

Nonpersonal transactions. A party to an action is competent to testify against an executor as to the receipt of letters through the mail, and as to whose signature is attached to the letter; also, as to the physical condition of an instrument when he signed it.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

Authentication of books of account. The claimant against an estate for services rendered to the deceased is a competent witness to testify to the preliminary facts required by the statute (§11281, C., '31) for the authentication of his books of account against the deceased.

In re Davis, 217-509; 248 NW 497

Reading will which decedent held. Testimony of a claimant in probate that she read a certain provision of a will, while the will was being held in the hands of the testator (since deceased), is not testimony relating to a personal communication or personal transaction with the deceased.

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

State of mind of donor—parents. A daughter claiming under a gift of land from her deceased parents may testify to a conversation, in which she took no part, between her said parents relative to said gift, not for the purpose of establishing a contract between herself and parents, but for the sole purpose of establishing the state of mind of said parents relative to said gift.

Rapp v Losee, 215-356; 245 NW 317

Nonapplicability of statute. Plaintiff, in an action to set aside the probate of a will on the ground that the deceased was mentally incompetent to execute a valid will, and the wife of said plaintiff, are not incompetent:

1. To testify to the personal appearance and actions of said deceased at a time material to the inquiry, or
2. To testify to statements made in their presence by said deceased in conversation with other persons, in which conversation said witnesses took no part.

Diesing v Spencer, 221-1143; 266 NW 567

Nonparticipation in transaction. Principle reaffirmed that, under the dead man statute, a witness, otherwise incompetent, may testify to a transaction or conversation in which said witness took no part.

In re Allis, 221-918; 267 NW 683

When interested witness competent. In a proceeding between the maker of a promissory note and the administratrix of the estate of the deceased payee (involving the issue whether said note had been paid), the wife of said maker, tho herself a joint maker of said note, is a competent witness to testify to a conversation and transaction which occurred between her husband and said payee and which strongly tended to establish said payment—provided said witness took no part in said conversation and transaction.

In re Fish, 220-1247; 264 NW 123

Probate claimant's wife. In proceeding on claim against a decedent's estate for an alleged loan, trial court erred in holding that claimant's wife was an incompetent witness as to conversation with decedent wherein he stated that "they should get around to make a note for the $500 he gave him". However since court also found in effect that such evidence would not have been sufficiently definite to establish the claim, such error was not prejudicial.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Decedent's statements concerning will. Decedent's statements, made to the person who drew a will for him, that he wished to make a will and that he wished a certain person to have all his property, were admissible after his death as an exception to the hearsay rule to prove his existing state of mind at the time and to show that his plan was put into effect by making such a will.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

XI OBJECTIONS AND EXCEPTIONS

Failure to object. Failure to object to testimony as to a personal transaction between an interested party and a deceased precludes assignment of error, on appeal, in receiving such testimony.

In re Willmott, 215-546; 243 NW 634

Dead man statute — operation — trial procedure. The dead man statute is placed in operation by objecting to the competency, not of the testimony, but of the witness.

In re Scholbrock, 224-593; 277 NW 5

11258 Exceptions.

Permissible testimony by executor. An executor may, in his own behalf, testify to personal communications had by him with his deceased co-executor.

In re Culbertson, 204-473; 215 NW 761

Administrator—excluding reports as evidence. Reports of an administrator are properly excluded in toto as evidence in his behalf when they contain self-serving declarations and recitals of personal transactions with the deceased as to which the administrator would be incompetent to testify, and when there is no offer to separate the competent matter from the incompetent matter.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Indirect and uncertain interest of attorney who drew will. The fact that a will directs the executor and trustee to procure the services of a named attorney (who drew the will) in carrying out the provisions of the will, does not render the said attorney incompetent to testify to personal transactions and communications with the deceased.

In re Kenney, 213-360; 239 NW 44; 78 ALR 1189

Cross-examination establishing competency to testify on redirect. Altho being an incompetent witness as to conversations with the deceased, a daughter, objecting to an executor's report because against her share is offset a promissory note which she claims was canceled by the testator, may be rendered competent to testify on redirect examination when conversations with testator were partially inquired into on cross-examination.

In re Morgan, 225-746; 281 NW 346

11260 Husband or wife as witness.

ANALYSIS

- I CIVIL ACTIONS
- II CRIMINAL ACTIONS

I CIVIL ACTIONS

Reformation of mortgage. In an action against a husband and wife for the reformation of a mortgage so as to include therein the entire homestead of the parties, the wife is a competent witness to testify against herself and her estate as distinguished from that of the husband; and the same rule necessarily applies to the husband.

Rankin v Taylor, 204-384; 214 NW 725

Deed consideration—no negative fact from affirmative testimony. Positive, uncontradicted testimony of husband and wife, defendants, called to testify by plaintiff, affirming, in their own behalf, fact of consideration for a deed to wife, cannot be held to have proven a negative fact of lack of consideration.

Donovan v White, 224-138; 275 NW 889

Alienation of affections. In an action by a wife for damages for the alienation of the

I CIVIL ACTIONS—concluded affections of her husband, an information filed by the plaintiff, charging the defendants with having threatened to injure her, is wholly irrelevant and incompetent.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

Alienation—unallowable conclusions. The mere conclusions of a plaintiff in an action for damages for alienating the affections of her husband as to what the defendants had done in procuring the enlistment of the husband in the army and thereby effecting a separation of plaintiff and her husband, are wholly unallowable.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

Hearsay—improper testimony. Plaintiff in an action against the parents of her husband for damages for alienating the affections of her husband must not, under the guise of showing the state of mind of her husband toward her, be permitted to testify to a recital by her husband of what his parents had said to him about the plaintiff.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

II CRIMINAL ACTIONS

Declarations of wife in presence of husband. Declarations of a wife in the presence and hearing of her husband, and undenied by the husband at the time, as to what the husband had done on a certain occasion, are admissible against the husband in a subsequent criminal proceeding against him, wherein the truth of said declarations is material, even tho the wife, if called as a witness against her husband would not be competent to testify to the statements embodied in the declarations.

State v Sharpshair, 215-399; 245 NW 350

Motion to dismiss—improper testimony by wife. A defendant in a criminal case who knows, before the commencement of the trial, that his wife has, before the grand jury, improperly given material testimony against him, must, if he wishes to attack the indictment on such ground, move to quash the indictment. He may not utilize such objection as the basis of a motion for a directed verdict.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

Wife as a witness against husband. The act of the state in calling a woman as a witness against the defendant (who was accused of a felonious assault on a third party) does not constitute reversible error when a preliminary examination, on prompt objection, reveals the fact that the witness is the common law wife of the defendant, and when the witness was thereupon promptly excluded.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

Marriage after return of indictment. A wife, although married to accused after return of the indictment, is nevertheless incompetent as a witness to testify against him.

State v Chrismore, 223-957; 274 NW 3

Marriage as inference of suppressing testimony. It is reversible error in a manslaughter case for the state to call accused's wife as a witness and in the presence of the jury after discovering her relationship, to elicit testimony over accused's objection thereby creating the prejudicial inference that accused's marriage was purposefully to suppress testimony.

State v Chrismore, 223-957; 274 NW 3

11262 Communications between husband and wife.

Communication with third person. A divorced wife is a competent witness to testify to a communication between her former husband and a third person, prior to the divorce.

Stutzman v Bank, 205-379; 218 NW 39

Husband and wife—communications. All communications between a husband and wife during their married life are privileged.

Rodskier v Ins. Co., 216-121; 248 NW 295

Divorced wife's testimony as to venereal disease—nonprejudicial. In a rape prosecution, an unsuccessful attempt to introduce objectionable testimony relative to defendant's affliction with venereal disease, during marriage, by asking divorced wife if she had observed his condition relative to venereal disease, and if she had testified in her divorce action that she had received venereal disease from him, held nonprejudicial error.

State v Donovan, (NOR); 263 NW 516

Dead man statute—payment for services. Where a deceased had taken his nephew, raised him, and promised to pay him for working on decedent's farm, testimony as to statements made by the deceased in conversations wherein deceased had said the boy was to be paid from his estate when he died, may be received from the wife of deceased, the wife of claimant, and the claimant himself, provided they took no part in the conversations.

I PROFESSIONAL COMMUNICATIONS IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 19 ILR 104—Nurses; 24 ILR 538—Professional communications

Physician — confidential communications — admissibility in workmen's compensation case. The statutory rule of evidence that information obtained by a physician from his patient is inadmissible does not apply to workmen's compensation cases.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Privileged communication—waived in proof of loss for insurance. In an action on a life policy where the beneficiary signed a proof of loss which contained an express waiver of the statute protecting communications in professional confidence, the testimony of a nurse who attended deceased-insured should not have been excluded, as such testimony was within the scope of the waiver.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

II ATTORNEY AND CLIENT

Failure to object. One who, without objection, allows an attorney to testify to confidential communications, may not thereafter base error on the reception of such testimony.

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177

Examination by court—error waived by failure to object. Where an attorney testified that he had talked with the defendant with reference to a certain car before preparing a mortgage on the car, and the court questioned him in order to decide whether there had been an attorney-client relationship on which the testimony should be excluded, when no objections were made or exceptions taken to the examination by the court, it was proper to refuse a new trial on the ground that the court had made misleading statements of the law and was guilty of misconduct in discrediting the testimony.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Attorney and client — when not privileged. A client who consults his attorney for the simple purpose of having the attorney put him in touch with a broker, with whom the client could arrange for the sale of property, may not claim that the resulting conversation is privileged or confidential; likewise, if the client's purpose is to obtain such assistance as will enable him to consummate a crime.

State v Kirkpatrick, 220-974; 263 NW 52

Attorney — confidential communications — what is not. A communication made by a client to his attorney relative to the unpaidness of a debt then barred by the statute of limitation, cannot be deemed a confidential communication when made for the very purpose of being communicated to the holder of the barred debt, or to the latter's attorney.

Koht v Dean, 220-86; 261 NW 491

Nonconfidential communications. An attorney for two parties having adverse interests is not disqualified from testifying to communications made to him by one client in the presence of the other client, nor to communications made to him by one client with the intent that they be communicated to the other client.

Lewis v Beh, 206-281; 218 NW 944; 220 NW 126

See Ayres v Nopoulos, 204-881; 216 NW 258

Nonconfidential communications. An attorney is not prohibited from testifying to communications arising out of a transaction between himself and parties who mutually consulted him in regard to contemplated conveyances by one to the other and the rights and duties of each thereunder, no suggestion appearing that any of the parties treated the transaction as confidential.

Crawford v Raible, 206-732; 221 NW 474

Overheard talk between accused and attorney. A witness is competent to testify to a conversation which he overheard between the accused and an attorney relative to the offense charged when the attorney was not an attorney for the accused.

State v Bittner, 209-109; 227 NW 601

Attorney—workmen's compensation settlement confidential. With respect to a workmen's compensation settlement, testimony of an attorney for the deceased workman is a confidential communication not admissible in a hearing to determine the liability of such compensation for deceased's debts, even tho such attorney had also been consulted by the claimant as to the legality of the claim against the compensation money.

Long v Northup, 225-132; 279 NW 104; 116 ALR 1475

III PHYSICIAN AND PATIENT

"Observations" of witness. Testimony by a physician and his attendants, as to their "observations" of a person confined in a state hospital for the insane, is not violative of the statute which prohibits the divulging of confidential communications.

State v Murphy, 205-1130; 217 NW 225

Nonrelation of physician and patient. The relation of physician and patient does not exist between a physician and a person who is examined by such physician, under appointment from the United States government, and for the sole purpose of determining whether said person is entitled to a pension, the said physician neither medically treating nor prescribing for said person.

Cherokee v Ins. Co., 215-1000; 247 NW 495

III PHYSICIAN AND PATIENT—concluded

Expert opinions. The expert opinion of a physician as to the possible cause of an injury, based on no fact obtained from the injured party, does not constitute the disclosing of a confidential communication.

Whitmore v Herrick, 205-621; 218 NW 334

Waiver by act of patient. A physician may testify to facts learned by him in the treatment of a patient when the patient has already detailed said facts to the grand jury or to other persons with whom the patient had no confidential or professional relation.

State v Knight, 204-819; 216 NW 104

Waiver by act of patient. An injured party who describes his injury and exhibits it to the jury thereby waives his right to object to testimony by his physician descriptive of such injury.

Whitmore v Herrick, 205-621; 218 NW 334

Contract waiver. A contract by an applicant for insurance to the effect that any physician who "has been consulted" by him may be examined as a witness as to any matter which the physician has learned from such consultation does not embrace physicians subsequently consulted by the insured.

Pride v Acc. Assn., 207-167; 216 NW 62; 62 ALR 31

Physicians testifying—nonwaiver if one testifies. An injured person who on different occasions is professionally examined and treated by different physicians may call and use as a witness one of the physicians and not thereby waive his privilege as to confidential communications with the other physician.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65

Privileged communications—waiver of statute. A waiver, in a policy of accident insurance, of the statute which forbids a physician when testifying to reveal a professional or privileged communication, is operative whether the particular communication be favorable or unfavorable to the insurer.

Miser v Iowa Assn., 223-662; 273 NW 155

Privileged communication—nonapplicable to physician performing autopsy. In an action to recover on an accident policy for the death of insured, where the court excluded testimony of a physician, who performed a post mortem examination but did not treat the patient before death, on the ground of privileged communication between patient and physician, held, court improperly excluded such testimony, since the privilege is purely statutory and for the purpose of encouraging patients to make full disclosure to the physician of all facts to enable him to prescribe and administer the proper treatment. A deceased body is not a patient and the relation of physician and patient ends when the death of the patient ensues.

Travelers Ins. Co. v Bergeron, 25 F 2d, 680

Physician—nonconfidential communications. Questions asked by a physician and answers thereto, which have no relation whatever to anything which may enable the physician medicinally to treat the persons giving the answers, are not confidential communications.

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Physician—confidential communications—admissibility in workmen's compensation case. The statutory rule of evidence that information obtained by a physician from his patient is inadmissible does not apply to workmen's compensation cases.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

IV MINISTERS

No annotations in this volume

V STENOGRAPHER OR CONFIDENTIAL CLERK

Professional memorandum by deceased—incompetent when stating no fact. Brief notations on a slip of paper, identified by a deceased attorney's stenographer as made by him at the time a testator conferred with him about the drawing of the will, are incompetent as evidence when the notes do not state any fact. However, their admission in evidence is harmless when the witness had previously testified without objection to the whole of the conversation.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

VI WAIVER OF PRIVILEGE

Waived in proof of loss for insurance. In an action on a life policy where the beneficiary signed a proof of loss which contained an express waiver of the statute protecting communications in professional confidence, the testimony of a nurse who attended deceased-insured should not have been excluded, as such testimony was within the scope of the waiver.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

VII OTHER PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS

Competency—husband and wife—communications. All communications between a husband and wife during their married life are privileged.

Rodskier v Ins. Co., 216-121; 248 NW 295

Waived in proof of loss for insurance. In an action on a life policy where the beneficiary signed a proof of loss which contained an express waiver of the statute protecting communications in professional confidence, the testimony of a nurse who attended deceased-insured should not have been excluded, as such testimony was within the scope of the waiver.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Witnesses—competency—nonmarital communications. A divorced wife is a competent witness to testify to a communication between her former husband and a third person, prior to the divorce.

Stutzman v Bank, 205-379; 218 NW 39

11267 Criminating questions.

Discussion. See 5 ILB 174—Self-criminating testimony

Rule of evidence does not compel self-incrimination. The statutory declaration (§1966.1) that the finding of intoxicating liquors in the possession of a person under search warrant proceedings, when the liquors have been adjudged forfeited, shall be prima facie evidence that said person was maintaining a nuisance, does not violate the right of said person not to be a witness against himself.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Testimony of patrolman. In a prosecution arising from an automobile accident, testimony by a patrolman as to statements made by himself is admissible and not within the purview of statutes pertaining to accident reports and incriminating questions.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

Blood tests and urinalysis—voluntary submission to tests. Admission of evidence of blood test and urinalysis in prosecution for drunken driving is not objectionable as compelling defendant to be a witness against himself when the evidence disclosed that the analyzed substances were given up voluntarily and without compulsion or entrapment.

State v Morkrid, (NOR); 286 NW 412

Self-debasement. In an equitable action by the state to revoke the license of a physician, the defendant may not base a claim of error in the fact that, over his objections, the court permitted witnesses for the state to expose themselves to public disgrace and ignominy by their testimony.

State v Knight, 204-819; 216 NW 104

Exemption from self-incrimination—non-waiver. A witness who voluntarily appears before a grand jury, and, without duress or compulsion, testifies to matters which tend to render himself criminally liable for an offense as to which he is not given absolute immunity from prosecution (§11269, C., '35), does not thereby waive his natural, common-law, statutory, and constitutional right to refuse to testify to said matters on the subsequent trial of another party under an indictment returned in whole or in part on the original testimony of said witness.

Duckworth v District Court, 220-1350; 264 NW 715

Statutory privilege. A female upon whom it is alleged a criminal abortion has been committed by a physician may, when called to testify as to what transpired between her and the physician, legally refuse, not on the ground that her answer might render her criminally liable, but on the ground that her answer would expose her to public ignominy.

State v Brown, 218-166; 253 NW 836

11268 Exceptions.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 591

Evidence at preliminary examination. Defendant, on cross-examination, may be examined as to his apparently voluntary testimony given on a preliminary examination in which another was accused of the crime, and not defendant.

State v Kneeskern, 203-929; 210 NW 465

11269 Immunity from prosecution.

Exemption from self-incrimination—non-waiver. A witness who voluntarily appears before a grand jury, and, without duress or compulsion, testifies to matters which tend to render himself criminally liable for an offense as to which he is not given absolute immunity from prosecution, does not thereby waive his natural, common-law, statutory, and constitutional right to refuse to testify to said matters on the subsequent trial of another party under an indictment returned in whole or in part on the original testimony of said witness.

Duckworth v District Court, 220-1350; 264 NW 715

Nonincriminating grand jury testimony—no resulting immunity. A person involuntarily appearing before the grand jury, tho not asked self-incriminating questions, who later is charged by county attorney's information with falsification of records, a subject connected with the grand jury investigation, may not, by certiorari, review the overruling of a motion to dismiss the information on the ground of immunity because of such grand jury appearance, when a remedy by appeal existed.

Kommelter v Dist. Court, 225-273; 280 NW 511

11270 Previous conviction.

Permissible cross-examination. An accused in a criminal prosecution who, for the manifest purpose of placing himself in the light of an honorable and trusted character, testifies to his former membership on the police force may, on cross-examination, be shown to have secured his said position by falsely representing that he had never been convicted of a felony.

State v Shaw, 202-632; 210 NW 901

Former conviction of different felony. It is not erroneous to ask an accused, on cross-examination, whether he has been convicted of a specific felony, the offense on trial and the one inquired about not being the same.

State v Friend, 210-980; 230 NW 425

Conviction of felony—effect on credibility. The law does not presume that a person who has been convicted of a felony is less worthy of belief than a person who has not been so convicted, and error results from so instructing.

State v Voelpel, 208-1049; 226 NW 770

Discretionary limit to cross-examination. After a witness, on cross-examination, has testified (1) that he is a laborer, (2) that he has been convicted of a felony, and (3) that he is now residing in the county jail, the court may very properly curtail further cross-examination, by excluding questions designed to show that the witness, instead of being a laborer, has been engaged, generally, in bootlegging, and in the commission of larcenies and burglaries.

State v Johnson, 215-483; 245 NW 728

Conviction on testimony of felon. A defendant, in a prosecution for receiving stolen hogs, may be convicted on the testimony of one convicted of a felony and since the weight to be given such testimony is for the jury, when there is a conflict, a directed verdict for the defendant is properly refused. Held, evidence sufficient to convict.

State v Wehde, 226-47; 283 NW 104

Impeachment—effect—duty of jury. A witness at the outset is presumed to be telling the truth and it does not follow that, because there is evidence tending to impeach him, that he has thereby been successfully impeached, or that he has been successfully impeached because he has been attacked. If the jury is of the opinion that he has been successfully impeached, it should disregard his testimony unless some material part of it has been corroborated.

State v Wehde, 226-47; 283 NW 104

Proof of felony conviction not an impeachment. Proof that witness has been convicted of felony does not of itself impeach him, discredit his testimony, nor make him wholly unworthy of belief. Such proof goes only to the weight to be given his testimony by the jury.

State v Wehde, 226-47; 283 NW 104

Former plea of guilty—not conclusive in a civil action. In a civil action the plea of guilty to a criminal prosecution involving the same transaction is admissible as an admission but is not conclusive when the criminal defendant, as a witness in the civil action, gives testimony tending to contradict his plea of guilty.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

11271 Moral character.

ANALYSIS

I GENERAL MORAL CHARACTER II SUSTAINING WITNESS

Good character of defendant. See under §13897 (XIX)

I GENERAL MORAL CHARACTER

General moral character. The general reputation of a witness for good moral character may be shown in rebuttal for impeaching purposes without limiting the reputation to the time in controversy.

State v Reynolds, 201-10; 206 NW 635

Cross-examination as to remote matters. The cross-examination of a good character witness may not be carried into matters which are from eight to twelve years remote from the time of trial.

State v Bell, 206-816; 221 NW 521

Impeachment of witness—proper time limitation. A question calling for the reputation of a witness is properly limited to the present time—the time when he testifies—not to the time of the occurrence concerning which he testifies.

State v Teager, 222-391; 269 NW 348

Unnecessary limitation. Testimony of general bad moral character of an accused and of his bad reputation for truth and veracity need not be limited to the very time of the commission of the offense on trial.

State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328

Bad moral character—scope of cross-examination. A person testifying to the general bad moral character of a witness may be cross-examined as to the reputation of the witness as to truth and veracity.

State v Smalley, 211-109; 233 NW 55

Limit on cross-examination. A witness who has testified to the good reputation for honesty of an accused in the community where the accused lives can be cross-examined solely and alone as to what the witness has heard in the community in the way of rumors or reports derogatory to the honesty of the accused. In other words, the state may not, on such examination, ask the witness if he does not know that the accused has been charged with or convicted of this or that offense.

State v Bell, 206-816; 221 NW 521

General reputation—sufficiency. The point that a question calls for testimony of the "reputation" of a witness instead of testimony of the general reputation is not raised by the objection of incompetency and immateriality.

State v Dillard, 205-430; 216 NW 610

Qualification of witness. A witness who testifies that he knows the general moral character of a party, may testify thereto, even tho the witness does not reside in the locality in which the impeached party resides.

State v Weber, 204-137; 214 NW 531

Disregarding testimony of witness. The jury must not be instructed that it may disregard the testimony of a witness if it finds that the general reputation of the witness for truth and veracity is bad.

Jorgensen v Cocklin, 219-1103; 260 NW 6

Unallowable impeachment. Mere witnesses in a criminal prosecution are not impeachable by testimony that their general reputation in the community where they reside is bad as to some particular trait of character.

State v Ferguson, 222-1148; 270 NW 874

Impeachment — dual methods. The common-law rule that a witness may be impeached by showing his bad reputation for truth and veracity in the community where he resides or in which he has recently resided, has not been abrogated or in any manner changed by the statutory provision that the general moral character of a witness may be proved for the purpose of testing his credibility.

State v Teager, 222-392; 269 NW 348

Proof of good character or reputation. Conceding, arguendo, that one accused of being the father of a child may sustain his denial by proof of good character or reputation, yet such evidence must be confined to the traits involved in the charge.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

Stolen bonds—good faith purchase. On the issue whether stolen United States liberty bonds had been purchased by a bank in good faith, evidence that the person from whom the bank bought the bonds was a notorious underworld character is inadmissible, it appearing that he was a regular depositor of the bank, and had had prior bond deals with the purchasing bank.

State Bank v Iowa-Des Moines Bank, 223-596; 273 NW 160

II SUSTAINING WITNESS

See annotations under §13897 (XIX)

11272 Whole of a writing or conversation.

Cross-examination—ignoring statute. The concededly wide discretion of the court in controlling cross-examination does not embrace the right to ignore a statute governing such examination. So held where the court allowed the reception of only part of a conversation.

Bond v Lotz, 214-683; 243 NW 586

Cross-examination as to balance of conversation. When part of a conversation relative to the execution of a guaranty is drawn from a witness, the entire conversation may be brought out on cross-examination.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

Cross-examination — permissible redirect. When counsel on cross-examination enters an experimental field of inquiry foreign to the essential issues of the case, he may not complain if opposing counsel exercises his right on redirect to make an exploration into the same field of inquiry with disastrous results to the first offender.

Azeltine v Lutterman, 218-675; 254 NW 854

Details of conversation — legal limits. Details of a conversation between the soliciting agent of an insurance company and the insured, after the issuance of the policy, with reference to a letter to be written by the agent to the company concerning a loss, are not competent when they extend beyond reference to the subject-matter of the letter.

Miller v Mutual Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

Harmless error — refusal to admit all of conversation. Error in refusing to permit a witness to fully detail a conversation with another party is harmless when the excluded part is otherwise brought out by other witnesses.

Baehr-Shive Co. v Stoner-McCray, 221-1186; 268 NW 53

Examination—part of conversation—rebuttal. A defendant, who places in evidence a conversation between his witness and the plaintiff, may not complain if on rebuttal the plaintiff inquires of the witness as to the whole conversation.

Churchill v Briggs, 225-1187; 282 NW 280

Cross-examination establishing competency to testify on redirect. Altho being an incompetent witness as to conversations with the deceased, a daughter, objecting to an executor's report because against her share is offset a promissory note which she claims was canceled by the testator, may be rendered competent to testify on redirect examination when conversations with testator were partially inquired into on cross-examination.

In re Morgan, 225-746; 281 NW 346

Offering direct examination makes cross-examination admissible. In an action for conversion of an intestate's property, testimony of a witness on direct examination, given in a prior probate discovery proceeding offered and introduced from the transcript of the discovery proceeding, renders also admissible from such transcript the cross-examination of such witness, as being the whole of the conversation, although under the dead man statute the witness may have been incompetent.

Reeves v Lyon, 224-659; 277 NW 749

Improper rebuttal evidence—motion to strike necessary for review. If the answer of a witness does not properly constitute rebuttal evidence, it should be attacked by a motion to strike, and the court commits no reversible error in permitting it to stand in the absence of objection.

Churchill v Briggs, 225-1187; 282 NW 280

Objections—waiver by introducing exhibit. Objections made by the defendant to testimony given by the plaintiff's witness on direct examination were not waived when the defendant introduced an exhibit containing written statements made by the witness which tended to weaken his oral testimony. But objections by the defendant to other testimony in the direct examination were waived by statements in the exhibit supporting the testimony to which objections had been made.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Whole of writing. When a cross-examination is designed to show that a witness had asked plaintiff to sign an untruthful statement of fact, the party calling the witness must be permitted to show by a duplicate original, tho unsigned, just what plaintiff was asked to sign.

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

Whole of writing offered—must be on same subject as part offered. In automobile damage action for injuries sustained by plaintiff while riding as a guest of defendant's deceased husband, where, on cross-examination of plaintiff, he was interrogated for impeachment purposes concerning statements made by him as witness in coroner's investigation, and admitted making certain statements, but claimed he was mistaken as to facts, and defendant offered such statements' found in coroner's transcript as admission against interest, whereupon plaintiff offered the transcript in its entirety under statute providing the whole of a writing on the same subject may be inquired into, exclusion of transcript by the court was rightful since transcript contained statements made by plaintiff that were not on the same subject as were the answers offered by defendant, as well as being self-serving in character.

Jones v Krambeck, 228- ; 290 NW 56

Documentary evidence — will as entirety when only signature offered. Without an objection thereto or a showing of prejudice, it is not error to admit and send with the jury the entire will of decedent, even tho only the signature was offered in evidence.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Res gestae—execution of notes. In an action on promissory notes executed to a bank by its directors and stockholders in order to prevent an impairment of the bank's capital, testimony is admissible as to what the state bank examiner said, at the time the notes were executed, relative to including the notes in the assets of the bank.

Farmers Bk. v Bunge, 211-1357; 231 NW 651

Indictment as evidence. An indictment is wholly inadmissible to show the guilt of the defendant even tho offered, on cross-examination, in connection with an offer, by the accused, of the minutes of testimony returned with the indictment.

State v Huckins, 212-283; 234 NW 554

11273 Detached acts, declarations, or conversations.

Evidence attending interwoven transactions. Conversations had at the time of entering into a series of contracts at different times may be so closely related to, and so closely interwoven with, a subsequent contract as fully to justify their consideration on the issue whether the latter contract was entered into.

Adamson v McKeon, 208-949; 225 NW 414; 65 ALR 817

Separation of relevant and irrelevant matter. When a conversation relates to two distinct and easily separated subject matters, one relevant and one irrelevant, the latter cannot be deemed admissible simply because it is a part of the conversation as a whole. So held where the conversation related (1) to the manner in which an accident happened and (2) to the insurance carried by the defendant.

Kuhn v Kjose, 216-36; 248 NW 230

Different instruments treated as one. Two instruments executed at the same time and as part of the same transaction constitute, for purposes of construction, one instrument.

In re Barnett, 217-187; 251 NW 59

Declarations in disparagement of title—admissibility. On the issue whether defendant was a donee of certain bonds and had been such prior to the death of the alleged donor, a writing executed by the alleged donee subsequent to the making of the alleged gift, and tending to show ownership at said time in the alleged donor, is admissible against the alleged donee as in the nature of an admission in disparagement of donee's alleged claim.

Malcor v Johnson, 223-644; 273 NW 145

Gifts—self-serving acts. An alleged donee may not affirmatively establish the gift by testifying to his own prior self-serving acts and declarations.

Malcor v Johnson, 223-644; 273 NW 145

Admissibility of letter in action on note. A surety who denies in toto the execution, delivery, and consideration of the promissory note in question, but sees fit to cross-examine his co-defendant principal with reference to a letter written by the principal to the payee with reference to said denied matter, may not complain of the reception in evidence of said letter as a part of his own cross-examination.

Granner v Byam, 218-535; 255 NW 653

Delivery date of policy—other evidence competent. In an action on a life policy to which insurance company pleads a general denial and further pleads a release and settlement, wherein the delivery date of the policy is in dispute, and the insurance company assigns, as error, the exclusion of testimony of an officer of the company concerning underwriting practices of the company and a letter written by the company to its agent, upon which the agent's reply was indorsed, concerning the date of delivery of the policy, such evidence should have been admitted, and was competent to show that the company honestly believed it had a defense to the policy and explained why the company had the right to reply upon the date appearing upon the receipt for the policy.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Improper rebuttal evidence—motion to strike necessary for review. If the answer of a witness does not properly constitute rebuttal evidence, it should be attacked by a motion to strike, and the court commits no reversible error in permitting it to stand in the absence of objection.

Churchill v Briggs, 225-1187; 282 NW 280

11274 Writing and printing.

Inconsistent provisions as to title. A purchaser may not insist on a "marketable" title in accordance with the printed provisions of a blank form of contract when the typewritten provisions very clearly provide for a title of lesser quality.

Herman v Engstrom, 204-341; 214 NW 588

11275 Understanding of parties to agreement.

Contracts in general. See under Ch 420

Nonapplicability — unambiguous contract. This section has no application to an unambiguous legal written contract.

Iowa Co. v Coal Co., 204-202; 215 NW 229

Nonapplicability—two contracts in question. An instruction to the effect that, if parties had different understandings as to the terms of a contract, that understanding should prevail against a party in which he had reason to suppose that the other understood it, is wholly inapplicable when the issue is whether one or the other of two different contracts was entered into.

Olson v Shuler, 203-518; 210 NW 453

Construction — intent derived from entire contract. Contract should be considered in its entirety in arriving at the intent of the parties.

State v Sprague, 225-766; 281 NW 349

Intention of parties controls. In construing any instrument in writing, the primary object is to arrive at what the parties had in mind when it was drawn.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Parol evidence of execution of oral contract. Oral evidence of the execution of an oral contract, which has been performed or partially performed by one of parties, may be introduced in evidence, altho the witnesses who testified were not present when the contract was made.

Ford v Young, 225-956; 282 NW 324

Contemporaneous facts as aids. Principle reaffirmed that, when a contract is susceptible of different constructions, it is ambiguous, and the conversations, circumstances, negotiations, and conduct of the parties may be looked to as an aid in determining the true construction.

Cedar Rapids Co. v Sec. Co., 208-150; 225 NW 339

Unambiguous contract—parol inadmissible. An unambiguous written contract may not be aided by parol testimony tending to show the sense in which one party had reason to know the other party understood the contract.

Commercial Bank v Crissman, 214-217; 242 NW 355

Ambiguous contract. When a written contract is susceptible of two or more conflicting constructions, the court, in the quest for the proper construction, will give due consideration to (1) the situation of the parties, (2) the circumstances attending the transaction, and (3) the conduct of the parties.

Tucker v Leise, 201-48; 206 NW 258

Right to explain ambiguous clause—limitation on rule. The rule that an ambiguous provision in a written contract may be explained by parol evidence, for the purpose of arriving at a basis on which to rest a legal conclusion as to the meaning of said provision, assuredly does not embrace the right of one party to the contract to show, (1) his understanding of said provision, and (2) the understanding of a former assignee of the contract (at a time when the question of the meaning of the provision had not arisen) as evidence of the understanding which a later assignee had or should have had of said provision.

Zimbelman v Boone Coal, 220-1310; 263 NW 335

Contemporaneous agreements — circumstances attending execution. Principle reaffirmed that contemporaneous agreements as to the same subject-matter will be construed together, and if ambiguity appears, the facts and circumstances attending the execution of the instruments may be received as an aid to construction.

Seeger v Manifold, 210-683; 231 NW 479

Ambiguity—intent—conduct of parties as evidence. In searching for the actual intention of both parties to an ambiguous written guaranty,—in other words, in searching for the proper construction to place on such contract—the court may receive evidence of the conduct of the party to whom the guaranty was given, tending to show that said party, shortly after the time the guaranty was executed, and contrary to his present attitude, was placing the same construction thereon as contended for by the guarantor.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exchange, 221-1382; 268 NW 155

Mutual understanding. When the parties mutually treat a written compromise and settlement as ambiguous, the court will construe it in the light of their testimony as to the circumstances attending the transaction, and if the question be close, some consideration will be given to the fact that one of the parties was the sole author of the disputed language.

Goode v Ry. Exp. 205-297; 215 NW 621; 217 NW 876

Ambiguous contract—mutual interpretation. A cooperative marketing association, which, by written contract separately binds each member of the association to sell and deliver exclusively to the association the milk produced by the member—impliedly from day to day—or “pay as liquidated damages $25 for each and every such failure and breach of contract”, will not be permitted to recover from a member said amount for each and every day there is a failure so to deliver, when such interpretation is absolutely contrary to the uniform, mutual interpretation theretofore placed on the contract during a long series of years. Especially is this true because otherwise the court would be compelled to construe the said damage clause as a penalty.

Fort Dodge Assn. v Ainsworth, 217-712; 251 NW 85

Construction against party using words. On the question whether, under a written application for a contractor's bond on a grading contract, the contractor had agreed to pay, when the contract was fully executed, an additional percentage premium on the amount received by him on “overhaul”, doubts and uncertainties arising from the noncomprehensiveness of the language used will be construed most strongly against the insurer who solely drafted the application on information solely obtained by himself without fraud on the part of the contractor.

Iowa Cas. v Cram, 209-424; 228 NW 24
See Buser v Land Co., 211-659; 234 NW 241

Construction against party using words. When the construction of a writing which precedes a compromise and settlement is doubtful, the doubt will be resolved against the party who deliberately employed the words in question.

Fairfax Bk. v Coligan, 211-670; 234 NW 537

Spur track to state institution—maintenance cost. After a contract places the burden on the state to pay the cost of construction, maintenance, and operation of a spur track to the industrial school for boys at Eldora, a state institution, and in a later clause requires the railway company to maintain the spur track, the contract as a whole was construed and the apparent ambiguity resolved in a finding that the railroad should do the maintenance work, but that the state should pay the cost.

State v Sprague, 225-766; 281 NW 349

Parol to explain ambiguous contract. A written contract for storage of corn, which makes no provision as to when the seller is to exercise an option to sell nor as to when the storage is to be paid, does not contain the entire agreement entered into, and parol evidence is admissible on the question as to what was reasonable time to perform.

Andreas & Son v Hempy, 224-561; 276 NW 791

Unambiguous contract to sell. An agreement by one party to sell and by another to buy “all gasoline * * * used, kept, or sold” on described premises is quite unambiguous.

Hladik v Noe, 214-854; 243 NW 180

Parol or extrinsic evidence affecting writings—right to enlarge writing. When the written evidence of a contract provides, in effect, that named subject matters shall be controlled thereby, oral evidence is admissible to enlarge said subject matters when the writing on its face reveals the contemplation of the parties to make such addition.

Smith & Co. v Hollingsworth, 218-920; 251 NW 749

Unambiguous contract. An unambiguous contract is self-interpreting. In other words, there is no occasion and no possibility of applying “rules of construction” to such a contract.

Chambers v Bank & Trust, 218-63; 254 NW 309

Rejection of hopelessly indefinite clause. In the construction of a contract, the court may be compelled to wholly reject a hopelessly indefinite clause. So held where a written contract granted to a sales agent the exclusive right to sell on a stated commission in named territory, “except in special cases”.

Hawbaker v Laco Co., 210-544; 231 NW 347

Permissible proof of oral contract. Evidence which will be admissible to prove an oral contract to transfer real property must be either in writing or by tangible acts or circumstances definitely referable to the oral agreement, but when such tangible acts are shown, then parol evidence becomes competent to show the specific terms of the contract.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 235 NW 664

Services and compensation—ambiguous contract in re commissions. Contract construed, and held to provide no commission on sales until said sales exceeded a named amount.

Clinton v Music Co., 209-636; 228 NW 664

Ambiguous clause in contract—limitation. In an action to recover commission under real estate broker's contract in which the clause providing for time when commission is due and payable is ambiguous, proof of the circumstances accompanying the execution of the ambiguous instrument is admissible to assist in the interpretation, but not to vary the terms of the instrument.

Mealey v Kanealy, 226-1266; 286 NW 500

Ambiguous clause—effect. In an action to recover commission under real estate broker's contract, which provides for payment of commission upon execution of the contract to which is added the phrase "The commission being due and payable upon the transfer of properties," held, that the last clause is not repugnant to the general purpose and intent of the instrument, its effect being only to modify and not to destroy an element thereof, such limitation cannot be nullified under the guise of interpretation.

Mealey v Kanealy, 226-1266; 286 NW 500

Conflicting clauses—construction as entirety. In an action upon written contract for real estate commission, in which there are conflicting clauses as to time of payment of commission, the rule is that a contract should be read and interpreted as an entirety rather than by seriatim by clauses and that the position of clauses in such instrument is not material nor controlling.

Mealey v Kanealy, 226-1266; 286 NW 500

Contract to bring infringement suits. A contract between a patent owner as licensor and the manufacturer of the patented article as licensee, providing that the licensor receive royalties and should bring suits to prevent infringement upon the patent using royalties received, was fully performed on the part of the licensor when he spent, in bringing infringement suits, more than the amount of the royalties received.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 285 NW 131

Utility plant—contract and specifications variation first alleged on appeal. A contended variation between the contract for a municipal public utility plant and the specifications, in that the contract omitted the right to call bonds at a certain time, will not be considered on appeal, when such variation, if any, was not an issue in the lower court.

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

Contract for services—question of quantum meruit. In an action against city for engineering services rendered in reconstruction of sewage disposal plant wherein plaintiff bases his claim on quantum meruit, and city contends services were contemplated by contract providing for lump sum compensation, question of liability of city for services on quantum meruit basis held insufficient for jury.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Value of services for engineering—inadmissible. In an action against a city for engineering services, consisting of inspection and reconstruction of sewage disposal plant, refusal to admit evidence of value of services rendered within contemplation of contract for lump sum compensation is not error.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Alteration of plans—nonabandonment of contract. Where a city council hired an engineer to reconstruct a sewage disposal plant for a lump sum compensation, and thereafter adopted a motion to hire an engineer to investigate the adoption of a "trickling filter system" as a substitute for the original plan, to which the engineer who had been employed protested that the original contract was for the entire engineering work, and where a motion before the council to reject engineer's original plans was lost, but a motion was adopted to instruct the engineer to change the original plans, nevertheless the adoption of such motion to change original plans was not an abandonment of the original contract as respects the right of the engineer to compensation.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Mutual partial modification—remainder in force. In a well drilling contract, a provision to use 4-inch casing all the way to the bottom of the well may be subsequently modified by an oral agreement to use 3-inch pipe, implied from the conduct of one party in accord with a change proposed by the other; but such a modification will not, necessarily, also modify the contract price per foot for the drilling.

Collins v Gard, 224-236; 275 NW 392

Requisites—implied from conduct. A contract implied in fact, differing from an express contract only in the method of proof, may be inferred under certain circumstances from acts and conduct justifying a promisee in understanding a promisor intended to contract.

Snell v Kresge Co., 223-911; 274 NW 35

Renewal of written contract by conduct. Where a heating plant owner contracted to furnish to a storekeeper heat for a period of one year at the termination of which no new written nor verbal contract was made, but for seven years more the heat was furnished and accepted at the same price as in the original agreement, until discontinued at nearly the end of the 1933-34 season, in an action to recover the contract price for the 1933-34 year's heat, a contract would be implied from the storekeeper's conduct, to pay the contract price regardless of fact that storekeeper shut off some of the radiators.

Snell v Kresge Co., 223-911; 274 NW 35

Parol testimony—deed as mortgage. Parol testimony is admissible to show that deed was in fact a mortgage and was so intended.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Easement rights omitted from deed—evidence. When land was purchased under a contract providing that the deed would grant an easement of the right of ingress and egress to the property, and that the exact description of the easement would be made a part of the deed, but such description having been omitted, it was proper, in purchaser's action to assert such easement rights, to admit extrinsic evidence to show the exact location of the easement.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Royalties to pay costs of infringement suits—nonrepugnant provisions. A provision in a patent license contract which provided that the amount spent by the licensor in bringing suits to prevent patent infringements should not exceed the amount of royalties received by him, was not repugnant to other clauses providing that such suits should be brought by the licensor, or if not brought by him, the licensee could use the royalties to bring such suits.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 285 NW 131

Escrow agent's memorandum made in absence of parties. An escrow agent's understanding of the arrangement by which he was to record deeds after the death of the grantor, noted on the envelope in the absence of the parties, is not admissible in evidence as to the substance of the arrangement and would be of doubtful evidentiary value even if admitted.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Parol or extrinsic evidence—testator's or grantor's meaning admissible. Where such terms as children, grandchildren, or nephews are used in a will or a deed, and there are both legitimates and illegitimates and the testator has full knowledge of such fact, and the intention of the testator is not clearly expressed in the will, the use of such words creates no presumption, but the word is a neutral one and an ambiguity exists, and the intention of the testator or grantor must be determined not only from the provisions of the will, but also in the light of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the will, and parol evidence is admissible to prove the intent of the testator or grantor.

In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

Individual liability of corporate stockholders. When two individuals who owned practically all of the stock in a corporation executed as individuals a contract in the name of the corporation, without advising the other party to the contract of the corporate character, they could not later deny individual liability, although the performance was by the corporation which in effect acted as their agent in executing the contract.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 285 NW 131

Allowable conclusion—ownership of note. It was not error for the court to permit the plaintiff, in an action on a note, to testify that he was the owner of the note over an objection that such testimony was the conclusion of the witness.

Ballard v Ballard, 226-699; 285 NW 165

Absence of ambiguity. When the terms employed in a policy of insurance are plain and unambiguous there is no room for the application of the oft-quoted rule that the policy must be construed most strongly against the insurer.

Field v Southern Sur., 211-1239; 235 NW 571

Release on basis of mistaken diagnosis. Where a settlement and release of a personal injury claim involved a mistaken diagnosis by the injured person's doctor, his statements are binding on the defendant, altho he was not connected with the defendant or its liability insurance carrier, since the inquiry, not involving fraud, centers on the existence of and good-faith reliance on the mistaken diagnosis.

Jordan v Brady Co., 226-137; 284 NW 73

Delivery date of policy. In an action on a life policy to which insurance company pleads a general denial and further pleads a release and settlement, wherein the delivery date of the policy is in dispute, and the insurance company assigns, as error, the exclusion of testimony of an officer of the company concerning underwriting practices of the company and a letter written by the company to its agent, upon which the agent's reply was indorsed, concerning the date of delivery of the policy, such evidence should have been admitted, and was competent to show that the company honestly believed it had a defense to the policy and explained why the company had the right to rely upon the date appearing upon the receipt for the policy.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Assignment of rent construed. In construing the provisions of a settlement wherein a judgment debtor agreed to assign to his judgment creditor " * * * the amount due from the tenant * * *" of the debtor on certain real estate, the same " * * * being all rentals * * *" for a certain year, held, that federal agricultural conservation payments received by the debtor on the land in question were not in contemplation of the parties. Hence creditor was not, on the basis of said assignment, entitled to these payments.

Cooke v Harrington, 227-145; 287 NW 837

Consideration and acceptance. Where a note was sent for the purchase price of land in partition, and though objections were made to it because the signature was not in ink, a judgment for the plaintiff on the note was warranted when there was evidence on which the jury could have found consideration for the note and that it was later accepted by the plaintiff after learning that the penciled signature was valid.

Ballard v Ballard, 226-699; 285 NW 165

Parol to show circumstances attending making of mutual wills. Even the extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to vary or change the terms of a will, yet evidence may be admitted to show circumstances which accompanied or attended making of the instrument, or to identify papers or writings which in fact constitute the will, especially where it is claimed that two or more writings made at or about the same time are part of a single transaction and together constitute in law a single will.

Child v Smith, 225-1206; 282 NW 316

Contract to will property—past consideration. Altho past services or past indebtedness may be a lawful consideration for an agreement, the parol evidence of such past services or indebtedness will not establish a contract by which the debtor agrees to sell or transfer his property by will in satisfaction of such services or debt.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Long continued mutual construction—effect. A written guaranty by the seller of the assets of a bank "of all outstanding paper to the extent of 93 percent owing said bank at this time" will be construed as guaranteeing 93 percent of each individual piece of commercial paper, when such construction was the construction placed upon the contract by both parties thereto on numerous occasions subsequent to the execution of the contract.

Tucker v Leise, 201-48; 206 NW 258

11276 Historical and scientific works.

Medical works — examination concerning. Prejudicial error results from permitting a physician, defendant in an action for malpractice, to be cross-examined as to the contents and teaching of scientific works on medicine, when the witness has not testified, directly or indirectly, as to such works.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Medical works — unallowable reception. Error results from permitting a party on the direct examination of his own expert witness to read extracts from a medical work, and then to ask the witness if he agrees with the statement so read.

Morton v Ins. Co., 218-846; 254 NW 325; 96 ALR 315

11278 Handwriting.

Expert witnesses generally. See under §11329
Discussion. See 7 ILB 55—Handwriting—instructions

Effect of expert testimony. Competent expert testimony as to the genuineness of a signature is admissible notwithstanding an element of weakness therein.

McCull v Jordan, 200-961; 205 NW 838

Handwriting experts—probative value. Conceding, arguendo, that the testimony of experts on handwriting is not of the highest order, nevertheless, under proper circumstances, such testimony has probative value.

State v Manly, 211-1043; 233 NW 110

Examination of expert. An expert witness may testify that a signature "looks like" the signature of the party in question; likewise that a given signature is "in his judgment" genuine.

McCull v Jordan, 200-961; 205 NW 838

Limitation on nonexpert. A nonexpert witness may not testify that the signature to an instrument "looks like" or "resembles" the genuine signature of a named person. Such a witness is competent to testify only to his belief or opinion.

Schram v Johnson, 208-222; 225 NW 369

Unallowable standard. Manifest error results, in the trial of the issue of handwriting, from admitting in evidence writings as standards for comparison without proof that the person in question wrote the standards.

State v Debner, 202-150; 209 NW 404

Proper standard for comparison. Proof that a party whose handwriting is in question admitted writing a certain exhibit renders the exhibit admissible as a proper standard for comparison.

State v Debner, 205-25; 215 NW 721

Examination—unallowable conclusion. It is not allowable to ask a witness whether a named person "admitted" writing a named instrument. The question should call for what was said.

State v Debner, 202-150; 209 NW 404

Disparaging expert testimony—instructions. A party who requests an instruction which emphasizes the superiority of positive over expert testimony as to the genuineness of handwriting may not complain that the court gave an instruction which fully embodied the idea of the requested instruction, but which more sharply, but correctly, emphasized the inferiority of expert testimony generally.

Keeney v Arp, 212-45; 235 NW 745

Non-issue as to signature. When it is practically conceded, under the evidence, that a party did not himself sign a promissory note (tho his name is signed thereto), the fact that the record contains an admitted signature of the party imposes no obligation on the court to permit the jury, by a comparison of signatures, to find that the party did, himself, sign the note.

West Chester Bank v Dayton, 217-64; 250 NW 695

Cross-examination. The cross-examination of an expert witness, a banker, who has testified to the genuineness of a signature to a promissory note in suit, may not be carried to the extent of questioning the witness as to his course of action in case supposed checks were presented to his bank for payment, when the answers, whatever they might be, can have no legitimate bearing on the credibility, qualification, competency, accuracy, or mental attitude or bias of the witness.

Keeney v Arp, 212-45; 235 NW 745

Signatures — jury question. The mere introduction in evidence of genuine signatures of a party in order to establish the plea that the purported signature of the party to a written release is a forgery does not generate a jury question on the issue of forgery, irrespective of other ample evidence persuasively showing that the signature to the release is genuine.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Expert and jury comparison. On the issue whether certain signatures on checks are purely fictitious and were in reality written by a named existing party, experts in handwriting and the jury may compare said signatures with the admitted or proven handwriting of said named party.

Kruidenier Est. v Trust Co., 203-776; 209 NW 452

Denial of signature—jury question. A jury question is presented on the issue of the genuineness of a signature denied under oath, (1) by admitted signatures as to the genuineness of which reasonable minds might differ, after comparison with the original; (2) by expert testimony of a not very persuasive nature that the signature was genuine; (3) by testimony tending to show that the party had recognized the indebtedness as her own, and had (impliedly at least) recognized the genuineness of her signature, but had belatedly denied it; and (4) by testimony tending to show that she had adopted the signature as hers, even tho she had not physically affixed it to the instrument.

McCull v Jordan, 200-961; 205 NW 838

Conclusiveness of proof. The court may not say that the genuineness of a signature, duly put in issue, is conclusively established solely by expert opinion evidence of its genuineness, and thereby rightfully exclude the jury from passing upon the issue.

In re Richardson, 202-328; 208 NW 374

Comparison by jury. If complainant concedes that an instruction is correct insofar as it characterizes, as of a low order, expert testimony concerning the genuineness or non-genuineness of signatures, then complainant may not complain that comparisons of handwriting by jurors are characterized in the said instruction as of an equally low order.

In re Wood, 213-254; 237 NW 237

Genuineness of signature on note—jury question. Where in an action on a promissory note the defendant in his answer denies under oath the genuineness of the signature, a jury question is generated by positive testimony of the payee that the purported maker did sign the note, together with expert testimony on handwriting tending to prove that the signature was genuine, met by equally positive testimony by the purported maker that he did not sign the note.

Seibel v Fisher, 213-388; 239 NW 34

Will as entirety when only signature offered. Without an objection thereto or a showing of prejudice, it is not error to admit and send with the jury the entire will of decedent, even tho only the signature was offered in evidence.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Handwriting expert — striking evidence — curing error. If evidence, erroneously admitted during the progress of a trial, is distinctly withdrawn by the court, the error is cured, except where it is manifest that the prejudicial effect on the jury remained despite its exclusion. Testimony by a handwriting expert, who referred to notes, which were merely the basis or reason for his opinion as to the genuineness of signatures to a will, held not within the exception.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Forged signatures—expert testimony to overcome. While an acknowledgment by a notary is presumptively true and requires clear and convincing evidence to overcome it, yet by statute it is not conclusive, and the court acting as a jury may find, after reviewing the conflicting testimony of handwriting experts, properly received, that signatures to transfers and assignments of assets of an estate, attacked by an administrator de bonis non, were forgeries.

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

Scientifically demonstrated fact. Evidence consisting of microscopic inspection, magnified photographs, or chemical tests, may so demonstrate the nongenuineness of a writing as to become substantive evidence. It follows that such evidence not being mere expert testimony is not subject to the disparagement usually and ordinarily applied to expert testimony.

Keeney v Arp, 212-45; 235 NW 745

Handwriting photographs—court's discretion. Photographs of handwriting, altho bearing explanatory markings made by the expert witness, are proper evidence to aid the jury's comparison of the disputed signature on a will, as well as to explain expert testimony and their admissibility is largely within the trial court's discretion.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

11279 Private writing—acknowledgment.

Documentary evidence generally. See under §11264 (II)

Instruments affecting realty or adoption of minors as evidence. See under §11289, Vol I

Hotel register—dual purpose. A hotel register may become material and therefore admissible in evidence, not only for the purpose of impeaching a witness who asserted he had registered at the hotel, but as tending to show the presence of the witness at the time in question at the scene of an accident.

Ritter v City, 212-564; 234 NW 814

Documentary evidence—improper disregard of. The court, in its quest for a fact, may not, by assumption based on speculation or inference, refuse to accord force and effect to undisputed, unimpeached, and nondiscredited documentary evidence which unequivocally establishes said fact, especially when the fact arises out of a somewhat remote transaction, and when the party carrying the burden of proving said fact is hampered in his proof by reason of the death of parties who had knowledge of said transaction and by his own incompetency resulting from said deaths.

In re Allis, 221-918; 267 NW 683

11280 Entries and writings of deceased person.

Documentary evidence—necessity to identify. Pages of a book containing various notations, memoranda, and accounts in the handwriting of a deceased administrator are not admissible in an action to establish a shortage on the part of said administrator without some proper proof identifying said book as the book in which the administrator kept his accounts relative to the estate in question.

Varga v Guar. Co., 215-499; 245 NW 765

Professional memorandum by deceased. Brief notations on a slip of paper, identified by a deceased attorney's stenographer as made by him at the time a testator conferred with him about the drawing of the will, are incompetent as evidence when the notes do not state any fact. However, their admission in evidence is harmless when the witness had previously testified without objection to the whole of the conversation.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Revival of contract by undelivered check. In an action by a widow to establish a claim against deceased husband's estate based on an oral contract to repay a loan made by appellant widow to decedent prior to November 1, 1912, wherein the widow offers evidence of a check purported to have been issued to widow by husband for "interest 1935, 6 months" and deposited by him in joint account with his wife, and it is claimed by appellee that since check was not delivered to appellant widow nor to anyone acting for her, the writing is insufficient, held, such memorandum need not be delivered to opposite party nor his agent nor a person in privity with him, but is sufficient if it is signed and in any way promulgated so as to become an instrument of evidence.

Leland v Johnson, 227-520; 288 NW 595

Accounts—interest items posted. In an action by a widow to establish a claim against the estate of her deceased husband based on an alleged oral contract of decedent to repay a loan of money made by appellant widow to decedent, prior to November 1, 1912, to which the statute of limitations was pleaded, held, mere posting of items of interest applicable to one individual transaction is insufficient to show a "connected series of transactions" so as to convert the matter into a "continuous, open, current account" under statute providing cause of action accrues on date of last item, as this means a connected series of transactions.

Leland v Johnson, 227-520; 288 NW 595

11281 Books of account—when admissible.

Discussion. See 7 ILB 88—Regular entries, books of account

ANALYSIS

- I BOOKS OF ORIGINAL ENTRY
- II PRELIMINARY PROOF
- III ADMISSIBILITY

Accounts deemed true. See under §11204

I BOOKS OF ORIGINAL ENTRY

Insufficient proof of claim. A claim for extra work is not proved by the production of the contractor's books of account showing items of time employed, and made up from oral statements by workmen who were not called as witnesses, neither the contractor nor the bookkeeper having any personal knowledge of the correctness of the items.

Van Dyck Co. v Bldg. Co., 200-1003; 205 NW 650

Books of accounts made from sales slips. A book of accounts showing the date of purchase, nature of article sold, and amount, made up from sales slips, constitutes a book of original

I BOOKS OF ORIGINAL ENTRY—concluded entries, all other statutory elements of such books being made to appear.

Yunker Bros. v Meredith, 217-1130; 253 NW 58

Counter slips and sales tickets. In seller's action for lumber sold, counter slips and sales tickets held inadmissible as "books or records of original entries" where slips were offered in whole, covered many transactions not involved in action, were not consecutively dated, and showed changes.

Alquist v Thompson, (NOR); 251 NW 509

II PRELIMINARY PROOF

Documentary evidence—insufficient authentication. A purported financial statement of a corporation is manifestly inadmissible, in the absence of testimony as to its authenticity or as to the author thereof and the circumstances of its preparation.

Helberg v Zuck, 201-860; 208 NW 209

Transaction with deceased — authentication of books of account. The claimant against an estate for services rendered to the deceased is a competent witness to testify to the preliminary facts required by the statute for the authentication of his books of account against the deceased.

In re Davis, 217-509; 248 NW 497

Witnesses qualifying books of account. Statute prohibiting testimony concerning transactions or communications with a person now deceased does not render a claimant against the estate incompetent as witness to testify to preliminary facts required for authentication of books of account, admissibility of which is permitted by statute.

In re Cummins, 226-1207; 286 NW 409

Ledgers — correctness — who may testify. Testimony of vice-president of bank as to correctness of ledger held inadmissible where it appeared that ledger was posted by assistant cashier and bookkeeper.

Andrew v Bank, (NOR); 213 NW 271

Claim for loan based on alleged book of accounts. Where claimant's evidence of loan of $1,000 based on book of accounts is held inadmissible, testimony of payment of interest and admission of existence of loan by decedent standing alone, held insufficient to prove all facts necessary to establish claim against estate of decedent, as required by statute.

In re Cummins, 226-1207; 286 NW 409

III ADMISSIBILITY

Genuineness of corporate records. In an action against the secretary of a corporation individually, the record proceedings of the corporation are admissible against him, when material, upon an admission by such secretary that he believed them to be such records, even tho he states such belief as a conclusion, or bases his belief on hearsay, and even tho he states that he does not know that they were correctly kept.

Helberg v Zuck, 201-860; 208 NW 209

Deposits—stated account. Principle reaffirmed that the monthly and customary statement of a bank to its customer of the condition of the customer's account becomes an account stated after the lapse of a reasonable time without objection by the customer.

Pierce v Bank, 213-1388; 239 NW 580

Slips containing account—admissibility as original entries. Where account books were not kept, slips containing original entries of the account were admissible.

Edwards v Cooper, (NOR); 222 NW 376

Corporate books and records. In a prosecution, under the securities act, of an officer of a corporation for having made, before the secretary of state, a false statement relative to the financial condition of the corporation, the corporate books and a tabulated statement and summary thereof, properly identified, are admissible.

State v Dobry, 217-858; 250 NW 702

Bank ledger. It is not erroneous to receive in evidence the ledger of a bank for the purpose of showing the credits of a depositor, the correctness of such book being first established; and it is immaterial that the account reveals credit items not in controversy.

Ryan v Cooper, 201-220; 205 NW 302

Summary of books and records. Principle reaffirmed that a duly identified and verified summary of voluminous books and records may be admissible in connection with said books and records.

State v Dobry, 217-858; 250 NW 702

Books of account to prove loan of money. In an action to establish a probate claim based on alleged loan to decedent, alleged to be shown in his "book of accounts", which consisted merely of vest-pocket size memorandum book in which appeared an entry indicating a loan to decedent with interest payments, such "book of accounts" is not admissible where evidence was wholly insufficient to establish the claimant as engaged in general banking business or paying out or loaning money to others.

In re Cummins, 226-1207; 286 NW 409

Fair valuation of accounts. The fair valuation of accounts is that amount which, with reasonable diligence, can be realized from their collection within a reasonable time, and the amount as shown on the face of ordinary retail business accounts is not usually their fair value, tho of course accounts may be such that their face value, as a matter of fact, is their fair value.

Matthews v Engineering Co., 228- ; 292 NW 64

Mere memoranda. Mere memoranda book entries, when material, are admissible on proper foundation. So held as to entries tending to show when a note was received by a bank.

Farmers Bk. v De Wolf, 212-312; 233 NW 524

Admissibility in aid of memory. Memoranda of account, the correctness of which is verified by the oath of the witness, may be admissible, in connection with his testimony, as an aid to him in remembering the transactions noted therein.

Madison Bank v Phillips, 216-1399; 250 NW 598

False tax returns—corporation books admissible evidence. In a prosecution of corporate officers for conspiracy to defraud government by filing false income tax return of corporation, the books of the corporation, together with summaries obtained by expert accountants, are admissible as tending to show what the taxable income of the corporation was represented to be, where such books were present and available for cross-examination.

Cooper v United States, 9 F 2d, 216

Meeting statutory proof requirements. Before proper books of account may be received in evidence, the party offering the same must introduce proof to meet all requirements of statute.

In re Cummins, 226-1207; 286 NW 409

11283 Photographic copies.

Photographs and X-rays generally. See under §11254 (II)

X-ray sciagraphs — sufficient foundation. Proof that certain X-ray sciagraphs were taken, for the use of the attending physician, by an expert in that science, and other circumstantial evidence tending to show the correctness of such sciagraphs, furnish sufficient bases for their introduction as evidence, even tho no witness specifically asserts that they "correctly portray the condition of the body affected".

Wosoba v Kenyon, 215-226; 243 NW 569; 1 NCCA(NS) 747

X-ray pictures. Foundation for the admissibility of X-ray pictures may be established by the testimony of the technicians who took or interpreted the pictures.

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39; 1 NCCA(NS) 761

Photographs — essentials for admission. Within the sound discretion of the court, a photograph is admissible in evidence when taken under conditions similar to those material to the inquiry to which it relates, and an instruction may call the jury's attention to the difference in lighting conditions at time an injury occurred, and at the time the picture was taken.

Riggs v Pan-American Co., 225-1051; 283 NW 250

11284 Notarial certificate of protest.

Allowable and unallowable proof. Testimony tending to show the contents of a lost official notarial certificate of protest of a promissory note is inadmissible, but the facts constituting a legal protest of the note may, in such case, be established by any competent oral testimony.

I STATUTE IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 4 ILB 185—Foreign contracts; 21 ILR 630—Applicability to foreign contract

Scope of statute. The statute of frauds is applicable to cases in which a contractual obligation is the basis of recovery; not to cases wherein the basis of recovery is a breach of duty in a fiduciary relationship.

Farmers Bk. v Kaufmann, 201-651; 207 NW 764

Separate writings. A contract is taken out of the statute of frauds by two separate writings each containing internal reference to the other, and together constituting a complete contract.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

Oral contract to will property. Where the plaintiff had done work for a woman who was ill, and had been promised that she would give him certain property in her will in return for the services, and plaintiff seeks specific performance of the agreement, claiming as consideration his oral agreement not to file a claim against the estate for the services until after such claim had been barred by the statute of limitations, such oral agreement was only the manner adopted for extinguishing the claim for the past services and the consideration for the oral agreement was the cancellation of the claim for the services and the discharge and compromise of the obligation which had accrued.

I STATUTE IN GENERAL—concluded

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Accommodation paper. Evidence that promissory notes were accommodation paper and that the party accommodated was the real debtor, is not a violation of the statute of frauds.

Flack v Bank, 211-15; 228 NW 670

Fatally belated objection. The objection that evidence was inadmissible under the statute of frauds may not be presented for the first time on appeal.

Heflen v Brown, 208-325; 223 NW 763

Parol evidence—fraud in procuring deed. Where deed containing recital of consideration was obtained by fraud, the grantor is not precluded as a matter of law from showing a constructive trust arising from the fraud, and equity will allow such showing to be made by parol evidence, but such evidence must be clear and satisfactory.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

II CONTRACT IN GENERAL AND SUFFICIENCY THEREOF

Discussion. See 1 ILB 185—Mutuality—statute of frauds.

Express contract. To constitute an "express contract" there must have been an offer and acceptance as to the same thing. Usually an agreement is arrived at by means of an expressed or implied proposal or offer from one side, expressly or impliedly accepted on the other, but formality in proposing and accepting is not required, providing there is an intention to assume legal liability as distinguished from a mere ebullition of emotion or expression of intention to do an act of generosity. A promissory expression without intention to contract is not sufficient.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Sale of goods—unenforceable contracts. Replevin for the possession of an existing article of personal property cannot be maintained when the action is based solely on an oral contract of purchase which is clearly within the statute of frauds, and under which contract title necessarily did not pass.

Lockie v McKee, 221-95; 264 NW 918

Contract to devise. Principle reaffirmed that a parol contract on due consideration to devise or leave property to another, is shown by clear and convincing testimony, is enforceable, especially when the contract is corroborated by declarations of the alleged grantor against his own interest, and when the equities are strongly in favor of the alleged grantee.

Kisor v Litzenberg, 203-1183; 212 NW 343.

Adoption by estoppel—surrender of child as consideration. An oral contract to adopt a child, not followed by legal adoption, was not within the statute of frauds when part of the consideration, the surrender of the child, was given at the time the agreement was made. So the child was entitled to specific performance of the contract even tho it was contended that the contract was void under the statute of frauds of a foreign state.

Vermillion v Sikora, 227-786; 289 NW 27

III CONTRACTS IN CONSIDERATION OF MARRIAGE

Discussion. See 12 ILR 164—Evidence of oral antenuptial contract

Marriage settlements. A written instrument purporting to be an antenuptial contract waiving all interest which each of the contracting parties would have after marriage in the property of the other, but shown to have been actually signed after marriage, will not bar such property interest when the instrument neither recites (1) that it was executed for the purpose of furnishing evidence of a previous antenuptial oral contract nor (2) that it was executed in consideration of a previous oral antenuptial contract.

Battin v Bank, 202-976; 208 NW 343

Marriage settlements—antenuptial contract—proof. Record held to establish, by copy, an antenuptial contract, the original being lost.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 201-1311; 207 NW 772

Antenuptial agreement—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence held sufficient to show execution of antenuptial agreement precluding widow from dower share.

In re Dunn, (NOR); 224 NW 38

Agreements in consideration of marriage—strangers to contract. A contract made in consideration of marriage is provable against parties who are strangers to such contract.

Benson v Burgess, 214-1220; 243 NW 188

IV DEBT, DEFAULT, OR MISCARRIAGE OF ANOTHER(a) CONTRACTS WITHIN STATUTE

Oral promise to pay orally compromised debt. An oral agreement to pay the debt of another is not taken out of the statute of frauds because the debt arose out of an oral agreement of compromise.

Leytham v McHenry, 209-692; 228 NW 639

Extension of time—insufficient consideration. An oral promise to pay the debt of another person if the creditor will give such other person—the original debtor—an extension of time in which to pay, is within the statute of frauds.

Leytham v McHenry, 209-692; 228 NW 639

Widow's groceries—nonliability of administrator. Administrator who has paid testator's widow more than amount to which she was entitled prior to alleged promise to pay for groceries furnished to widow held not authorized to make payment out of estate for such groceries.

Ypss v Sampson, (NOR); 269 NW 22

(b) CONTRACTS NOT WITHIN STATUTE

Oral contract of indemnity. An oral contract to indemnify and hold harmless a party if he would sign as surety a promissory note of the promisor's son, is an original undertaking and consequently not within the statute of frauds.

Kladivo v Melberg, 210-306; 227 NW 833.

Promise arising out of new consideration or benefit. The oral promise of a bank, upon receipt from a tenant of checks for grain sold, to pay the amount then due the landlord as rent is not within the statute of frauds as a promise to pay the debt of another.

Tracewell v Sanborn, 210-1324; 232 NW 724

Promise to pay debt of another—consideration. Tho the vendee of a stock of goods did not, in making the purchase, assume the payment of an outstanding account for goods, yet his later written promise to pay said bill if the creditor would extend the time of payment and furnish additional stock for the store—which was done—is supported by ample consideration.

Smith Co. v Carmichael, 221-301; 264 NW 65

Promise to answer for debt of another—promise prior to any indebtedness. A defendant who is simply an old acquaintance of a deceased, and who, before any funeral expenses are contracted, orally promises to pay such expenses may not say that he contracted to pay the debt of "another".

Samuels Bros. v Falwell, 215-650; 246 NW 657

Promise to answer for debt of another—direct and original agreement. An oral contract for services to be performed on the lands of third parties, and an oral and unconditional promise to pay for said services, are not within the statute of frauds as a promise to pay the debt of said third parties.

In re Davis, 217-509; 248 NW 497

Original promise. An agreement by a vendor of real property with his purchaser to pay for the making of certain improvements on the property is an original promise, and not within the statute of frauds.

Madden v Roofing Co., 205-783; 218 NW 466

Promise to reimburse party. The promise of the accommodation maker of a promissory note to reimburse the indorser, for assisting in paying the note, out of the amount collected from the principal maker, bears no semblance to a promise to pay the debt of another.

Hirtz v Koppes, 212-536; 234 NW 854

Agreement for contribution. An oral agreement between the directors of a bank to the effect that, as between themselves, each would be liable on a promissory note (given for the benefit of the bank) in proportion to the stock holdings of each, is not within the statute of frauds as an oral promise to pay the debt of another.

Adamson v McKeon, 208-949; 225 NW 414; 65 ALR 817

Promise to answer for debt of another—oral guaranty by bank of payment of director's mortgage. Testimony that a bank, acting through its board of directors, orally guaranteed the payment of the personal mortgage of one of said directors, is incompetent under the statute of frauds.

Lindburg v Engster, 220-1073; 264 NW 31; 116 ALR 591

Debt of another—basis for objection—unnecessary pleading. A defendant, who has duly denied the alleged making of a contract to answer for the debt of another, needs no further pleading on which to base, during the trial, an objection that oral testimony is incompetent to establish such contract.

Lindburg v Engster, 220-1073; 264 NW 31; 116 ALR 591

Debt of another—unallowable implied contract. The law, after refusing, under the statute of frauds, to permit a contract to answer for the debt of another to be established by incompetent parol testimony, will not imply a contract on the part of the alleged obligor to answer for the debt of said other person, or hold said obligor estopped to deny such obligation.

Lindburg v Engster, 220-1073; 264 NW 31; 116 ALR 591

Original or collateral promise. The statute of frauds relative to answering for the debt of another does not enter into the proof of an oral contract to the effect that plaintiff should perform stated services and that the defendant would unconditionally pay therefor.

Richmann v Beach, 201-1167; 206 NW 806

Notice of release after promising to pay for goods furnished to third person. A landlord who promised his tenant, in the presence of a

IV DEBT, DEFAULT, OR MISCARRIAGE OF ANOTHER—concluded

(b) CONTRACTS NOT WITHIN STATUTE—concluded

gasoline dealer, to pay for tractor fuel furnished by the dealer to the tenant, and who later was released from his promise, was not obligated to pay the dealer for fuel sold to the tenant after the dealer received notice of the release.

Reichart v Downs, 226-870; 285 NW 256

Promise to pay for goods furnished—promisor's own debt. When a landlord orally agreed to pay for tractor fuel furnished to his tenant, the agreement was not within the statute of frauds, as the landlord made the payment his own obligation rather than promising to answer for the debt of the tenant.

Reichart v Downs, 226-870; 285 NW 256

Sale of book account—payment orally guaranteed. Where the holder of a book account sold it for a consideration along with an oil station, and orally guaranteed payment, such undertaking was primarily for the benefit of the seller, and was not within the statute of frauds as an oral promise to answer for the debt of another.

Miller v Pound, 226-628; 284 NW 449

V CREATION OR TRANSFER OF INTEREST IN LAND

Permissible proof of the contract. Evidence which will be admissible to prove an oral contract to transfer real property must be either in writing or by tangible acts or circumstances definitely referable to the oral agreement, but when such tangible acts are shown, then parol evidence becomes competent to show the specific terms of the contract.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Oral agreement to change boundary. A naked oral agreement to change an established boundary line is nonenforceable.

Stone v Richardson, 206-419; 218 NW 332

Oral agreement as to security. An oral agreement by one of several heirs of homestead property that the funeral expenses of the deceased should stand against the property is of no validity.

Warner v Tullis, 206-680; 218 NW 575

Evidence—insufficiency. A contract for the sale and purchase of real estate will necessarily not be so reformed as to render it a contract for sale at a stated sum per acre, when the testimony preponderates in favor of a contract for a lump-sum price.

Davis v Norton, 202-374; 210 NW 438

Parol to prove execution of unenforceable trust. It is true that one claiming to be the absolute owner of land may not, as against the grantee in a conveyance, prove, by parol evidence, that when the conveyance was executed grantee's name was inserted in the conveyance as grantee under an oral agreement that said substituted grantee would hold said land solely and exclusively for said secret grantee, but said parties may show by parol evidence, as against a stranger, that said oral agreement was actually carried out and executed by said parties.

Bates v Zehnpfennig, 220-164; 262 NW 141

Validity of contract—court approval as condition. A definite written offer by the superintendent of banking of this state to sell, to a foreign administrator, Iowa real estate belonging to a bank receivership, and the written acceptance of the offer by said foreign administrator, may constitute a valid and specifically enforceable contract tho the offer and the acceptance be both conditioned on the approval of the respective state courts.

Bates v Citizens Bank, 223-385; 272 NW 412

Land—oral agreement to surrender. An oral agreement by a mortgagor of real estate to surrender and abandon the land to the mortgagee is within the statute of frauds.

Parker v Coe, 200-862; 205 NW 505

Fully performed oral contract. A count which pleads a fully performed oral contract for an interest in real estate is not subject to a plea of the statute of frauds.

Halstead v Rohret, 212-837; 235 NW 293

Secondary evidence—admissibility. Where title to real estate is not in issue, secondary evidence of title is admissible when proper foundation for its introduction has been laid; otherwise if title is in issue.

Inter-Ocean v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Stranger to transaction. The objection that a transaction is within the statute of frauds or that testimony is violative of the parol evidence rule is not available to a party who is a total stranger to the transaction, and to the title involved therein.

Lennert v Cross, 215-551; 241 NW 787; 244 NW 693

Parol evidence—fraud in procuring deed. Where deed containing recital of consideration was obtained by fraud, the grantor is not precluded as a matter of law from showing a constructive trust arising from the fraud, and equity will allow such showing to be made by parol evidence, but such evidence must be clear and satisfactory.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

When parol evidence competent. Principle reaffirmed that parol evidence is competent to impress an express trust upon an absolute deed, provided the trust has been partially executed.

Hardy v Daum, 219-982; 259 NW 561

Constructive trust—evidence—sufficiency. An express trust in real property cannot be legally established by parol, nor may an implied or constructive trust in such property be established except by evidence which is clear, convincing, and satisfactory.

McMains v Tullis, 213-1360; 241 NW 472

Parol testimony—deed as mortgage. Parol testimony is admissible to show that deed was in fact a mortgage and was so intended.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Naming child as consideration. A promise by grandfather to will property to grandson, if the parents name the grandson after the grandfather, is void for lack of legal consideration when such promise was made over three months after grandson had already been named after the grandfather.

Lanfier v Lanfier, 227-258; 288 NW 104

VI CONTRACTS NOT PERFORMABLE WITHIN YEAR

Employment contract—bonus at end of year. Oral contract of employment at fixed hourly rate and providing for bonus at end of year held not within statute of frauds.

Meredith v Youngstrom Co., (NOR); 205 NW 749

11286 Exception.

ANALYSIS

I EXCEPTIONS IN GENERAL II POSSESSION, PART PERFORMANCE, AND PAYMENT

I EXCEPTIONS IN GENERAL

Oral gift of real property. An oral executed gift of real estate, established to a reasonable certainty, is valid.

Mann v Nies, 213-121; 238 NW 601

Oral contract—evidentiary demands. Principle reaffirmed that oral evidence of the gift of real estate must be clear, cogent, and convincing.

Black v Nichols, 213-976; 240 NW 261
Long v Kline, 222-81; 268 NW 150

Oral contract to devise. Evidence to establish an alleged oral contract between a father and son, that the father would leave to the son a farm when he died, must be established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence and it is the duty of the court to subject the evidence to every fair test which may tend to weaken its credibility.

Blezek v Blezek, 226-237; 284 NW 180

Oral contract to will property. Where the plaintiff had done work for a woman who was ill, and had been promised that she would give him certain property in her will in return for the services, and plaintiff seeks specific performance of the agreement, claiming as consideration his oral agreement not to file a claim against the estate for the services until after such claim had been barred by the statute of limitations, such oral agreement was only the manner adopted for extinguishing the claim for the past services and the consideration for the oral agreement was the cancellation of the claim for the services and the discharge and compromise of the obligation which had accrued.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Oral contract to convey land at death. Absence of strong equities in favor of the plaintiff, a son trying to establish an oral contract with his father, since deceased, does not tend to weaken his corroborating testimony.

Blezek v Blezek, 226-237; 284 NW 180

Oral contract. Evidence sufficient to establish an oral contract for the conveyance of real estate may be found in the unequivocal and definite testimony of the claimed grantee, which testimony was uncontradicted, though the opportunity to contradict was present and immediately available, plus the strong corroboration afforded by the actual execution by the grantor of a deed which was not effectually delivered.

Kissling v Bank, 203-62; 212 NW 314

See Hagerty v Hagerty, 186-1329; 172 NW 259

Equitable ownership superior to judgment lien. An actual bona fide oral agreement between a debtor and creditor, that the debtor will convey to the creditor certain lands in part satisfaction of the debt, creates in the creditor an equitable ownership in the land (especially when the creditor is already in possession of the land) which is superior to the rights of a subsequent judgment creditor of said debtor. It follows that delay in making delivery of the deed, or even the loss of the deed, will not elevate the subsequent judgment creditor into priority.

Richardson v Estle, 214-1007; 243 NW 611

II POSSESSION, PART PERFORMANCE, AND PAYMENT

Discussion. See 15 ILR 351—Part performance; 19 ILR 54—"Purchase money" doctrine

Interest in realty—dual way to orally establish. An interest in real estate may be established:

1. By parol evidence of claimant and others when the purchase price or a part thereof has been paid, and

2. By parol evidence of the adverse parties. Decree held supported by both classes of evidence.

Hardy v Daum, 219-982; 259 NW 561

II POSSESSION, PART PERFORMANCE, AND PAYMENT—continued

Trusts—when parol evidence competent. Principle reaffirmed that parol evidence is competent to impress an express trust upon an absolute deed, provided the trust has been partially executed.

Hardy v Daum, 219-982; 259 NW 561

Oral contract—part payment. Principle reaffirmed that part payment of the purchase price on an oral contract for an interest in land takes the contract out of the statute of frauds.

Bremhorst v Coal Co., 202-1251; 211 NW 898

Oral sale with part payment. An oral agreement to sell land, accompanied at the time by part payment, constitutes a "sale", within the terms of a lease which provides that, in case of a sale of the premises, the tenancy may be terminated.

Luse v Elliott, 204-378; 213 NW 410

Essentials of consideration. An oral contract for the conveyance of land is not taken out of the statute of frauds (1) by establishing a past and executed consideration for the contract, or (2) by establishing the subsequent performance of an essentially nominal consideration.

In re Runnells, 203-144; 212 NW 327

Agreement by purchasers to reconvey. An oral contract between the joint purchasers of land that they would surrender their rights under the contract of purchase and reconvey to the vendor upon the repayment by the vendor of the earnest money plus a certain bonus, which oral contract was fulfilled by some of said joint purchasers, is not within the statute of frauds.

Durband v Nicholson, 205-1264; 216 NW 278; 219 NW 318

Mortgage contract. An oral agreement that a mortgagor of real estate will pay the mortgagee a stated sum, and, in addition, will convey to the mortgagee the mortgaged premises in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt, is not within the statute of frauds.

Northwestern Ins. v Steckel, 216-1189; 250 NW 476

See Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Contract for estate in return for services. An oral executed contract to the effect that, in return for personal services, the party shall, on the death of the other party to the contract, have the entire personal and real estate of such other party, is specifically enforceable, provided that the evidence is clear and convincing.

Jordan v Doty, 200-1047; 205 NW 964

Oral contract to devise—convincing evidence necessary. An alleged oral contract between a childless couple and a neighbor, that such couple would leave all their property to the neighbor's minor son when he became of age, if he would live with them until that time, must be established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, and when so established, along with proof of compliance by the son, entitles the son to specific performance of the contract.

Ford v Young, 225-956; 282 NW 324

Oral contract to devise or convey lands. An oral offer to convey or devise land in consideration of services to be performed for the offerer, and an oral acceptance thereof by the offeree, is specifically enforceable when both the execution of the contract and the performance thereof are established by clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence, and when the acts of performance are referable exclusively to such contract.

Houlette v Johnson, 205-687; 216 NW 679

Parol transfer of land. Clear and unequivocal testimony is an indispensable requisite, not only to the establishment, but to the performance of an oral contract between a party deceased and another for the transfer of land in return for services.

Helmets v Brand, 203-587; 213 NW 384

Elder v Brown, 203-1124; 212 NW 147

Black v Nichols, 213-976; 240 NW 261

Oral gift—possession followed by improvements. Evidence that the donee in an alleged oral gift of land took possession of the land, but that said possession was not necessarily referable solely to said alleged gift, together with evidence of the making of temporary and inconsequential improvements on the land, is wholly insufficient to take the transaction out of the statute of frauds.

Nugent v Dittel, 213-671; 239 NW 559

Parol contract—nature of proof. A parol contract for the purchase of real estate may not be deemed established unless the sustaining testimony is clear, definite, unequivocal, satisfactory, and convincing, nor unless the acts which are claimed to have been done under such contract are clearly referable to such contract.

Lane v Bank, 209-437; 227 NW 911

Permissible proof of the contract. Evidence which will be admissible to prove an oral contract to transfer real property must be either in writing or by tangible acts or circumstances definitely referable to the oral agreement, but when such tangible acts are shown, then parol evidence becomes competent to show the specific terms of the contract.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Easement contracts fully performed. A right of way easement in real estate is as effectually acquired by the vendee taking possession under an oral contract as tho a formal written deed to the easement has been delivered to the vendee.

Furgason v County, 212-814; 237 NW 214

Oral agreement—boundary change. An oral agreement to change a long established boundary fence is enforceable when taken out of the statute of frauds (1) by the mutual taking of a new survey, (2) by the building of a new fence in accordance with the said survey, and (3) by taking possession of the lands inclosed by such new fence.

Cheshire v McCoy, 205-474; 218 NW 329

Part performance—delivery of deed. An oral contract for the sale of land is not within the statute of frauds when the owner of the land executes and delivers to the buyer a deed of conveyance even tho said deed is blank as to grantee.

Gilbert v Plowman, 218-1345; 256 NW 746

Delivery of deed as part performance. An oral contract between the owner of land and all the heirs, from whom he had obtained it by different deeds, to reconvey the land and thereby cancel the purchase-money mortgage, is taken out of the statute of frauds by the act of the owner in executing and delivering to the attorney for the heirs the deeds agreed on, and the acceptance by one of the heirs of the deed to him.

Anderson v Lundt, 200-1265; 206 NW 657

Avoidance of statute. Parol evidence is competent to show that the titleholder to land has admitted he was to hold such title only until such time as he was reimbursed for money expended on the property, and that such arrangement has been in part carried out.

Neilly v Hennessey, 208-1338; 220 NW 47

Negative act as part performance. To make an oral contract to convey lands enforceable by part performance to take it out of the statute of frauds, where the performance consists of a negative act such as not filing a claim against an estate, there must be written evidence of the agreement or proof of some tangible act or circumstance other than the absence of such claim from the probate record, which will definitely tend to establish that the absence of such claim was because of the oral agreement.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Part performance must be referable to oral contract and subsequent to it. In order for part performance of a contract to convey lands to take a case out of the statute of frauds, such performance must be subsequent to the alleged agreement, and when services were rendered prior to the agreement, they could not be referable to it, not having been done in the performance of, pursuant to, on the faith of, nor in reliance upon, such agreement.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Part performance must refer exclusively to the contract. For part performance to take a case out of the statute of frauds, the oral contract to convey lands must be established by clear, unequivocal, and definite proof, and the acts constituting performance must be equally clear and definite, and referable exclusively to the contract.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Part performance—basis of doctrine. The doctrine of part performance as an exception to the provision of the statute of frauds requiring written evidence of contracts involving the creation or transfer of an interest in lands, is based on equitable estoppel and fraud, to prevent the defendant from escaping performance of his part of an oral agreement after permitting the plaintiff to perform in reliance upon the contract.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Adoption by estoppel—surrender of child as consideration. An oral contract to adopt a child, not followed by legal adoption, was not within the statute of frauds when part of the consideration, the surrender of the child, was given at the time the agreement was made. So the child was entitled to specific performance of the contract even tho it was contended that the contract was void under the statute of frauds of a foreign state.

Vermillion v Sikora, 227-786; 289 NW 27

11287 Contract not denied in the pleadings.

Rule of evidence rather than invalidating statute. The Iowa statute of frauds relating to sales of goods is held to be a rule of evidence and not an invalidating statute, in view of subsequent provision of statute that regulations related merely to proof of contracts and should not prevent enforcement of those not denied in pleadings, and that oral evidence of maker against whom unwritten contract was sought to be enforced should be competent to establish contract. Under Iowa rule, both delivery and passing of title in sale of personal property are determined by intent of parties at time of transaction.

Tipton v Miller, 79 F 2d, 298

11288 Party made witness.

Oral evidence of party. In an action against bank officers and directors on their written guaranty of payment of notes of doubtful value belonging to the bank, wherein the defendants contended that the guaranty did not identify the notes guaranteed, the testimony of a guarantor called by the plaintiff as to what notes were intended to be guaranteed is not violative of the statute of frauds.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

Interest in realty—dual way to orally establish. An interest in real estate may be established:

1. By parol evidence of claimant and others when the purchase price or a part thereof has been paid, and

2. By parol evidence of the adverse parties. Decree held supported by both classes of evidence.

Hardy v Daum, 219-982; 259 NW 561

11289 Instruments affecting real estate—adoption of minors.

Private writings as evidence. See under §11279

Lost real estate contract—degree of proof. Where a lost instrument relied upon affects the record title to real estate, public policy demands that the proof of its former existence, its loss and its contents, should be strong and conclusive—rule applied to real estate contract.

Forrest v Otis, 224-63; 276 NW 102

Fraudulent assignment—failure of proof. In an action by heirs of an intestate against a son and heir of intestate to set aside a transfer of a note and mortgage from intestate to said son, evidence held insufficient to show signatures of aged mother are not the genuine signatures of intestate on assignments.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Conveyance to deceased junior mortgagee. In an equity action for foreclosure against mortgagor and administrators of deceased junior mortgagee to whom mortgagor had allegedly executed the land, evidence held to establish that a deed had been executed by mortgagor in favor of deceased junior mortgagee.

Federal Bank v Ditto, 227-475; 288 NW 618

11290 Record or certified copy.

Necessary preliminary proof. The record of a duly recorded deed is not admissible as proof of title until preliminary proof is offered that the original deed (1) has been lost, or (2) does not belong to the party wishing to use the same, and is not within his control.

Buckley v Ebendorf, 204-896; 216 NW 20

Unsigned copy of fidelity bond. In action by a surety company against defendant, who was covered by a fidelity bond and who agreed to indemnify plaintiff against loss sustained by reason of its executing fidelity bond in his behalf, it was error to admit in evidence instrument purporting to be a certified copy of the bond, but containing no signatures and which was admittedly no true and genuine copy of original bond.

Fidelity Deposit Co. v Ryan, 225-1260; 282 NW 721

Nonjudicial public record—certified copies—federal statute—effect. The admissibility of evidence relating to a nonjudicial public record of a foreign state (foreclosure of mortgage by "advertisement and sale") is not restricted by the federal statutes relating to the form of authentication of such record. (See page 37, C., '35 [page 39, C., '39]; also §11296.)

Bristow v Lange, 221-904; 266 NW 808

Ancient documents—conditions of admission. Church records of parish church in Sweden, signed by the rector and church custodian, were admissible as ancient documents when they were over 30 years old, when they were obtained from the proper custody, when they were certified as true exhibits from the consulate of Sweden, and where there were no suspicious appearances.

Bergman v Carson, 226-449; 284 NW 442

Admitting record of deed. In an equity action for foreclosure of realty mortgage against mortgagor and administrators of deceased junior mortgagee, to whom mortgagor had conveyed the land, where it is shown that deed to junior mortgagee was not within the control of senior mortgagee, and where attorneys for defendants stated that they would "admit what the records show", the admission in evidence of the record of such deed was not error.

Federal Bank v Ditto, 227-475; 288 NW 618

Conveyance to deceased junior mortgagee established. In an equity action for foreclosure against mortgagor and administrators of deceased junior mortgagee to whom mortgagor had allegedly executed the land, evidence held to establish that a deed had been executed by mortgagor in favor of deceased junior mortgagee.

Federal Bank v Ditto, 227-475; 288 NW 618

11293 Presumption rebuttable.

Forged signatures — expert testimony to overcome. While an acknowledgment by a notary is presumptively true and requires clear and convincing evidence to overcome it, yet by statute it is not conclusive, and the court acting as a jury may find, after reviewing the conflicting testimony of handwriting experts, properly received, that signatures to transfers and assignments of assets of an estate, attacked by an administrator de bonis non, were forgeries.

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

Secondary evidence—admissibility as affecting title to real estate. Where title to real estate is not in issue, secondary evidence of title is admissible when proper foundation for its introduction has been laid; otherwise, if title is in issue.

Inter-Ocean v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

11294 United States and state patents.

Presumption. A government patent is not conclusive that the government owned the land at the date of the patent.

Bigelow v Herrink, 200-830; 205 NW 531

Collateral attack. The issuance by the state of a patent to lands is an assertion of the existence of the property conveyed; and such patent is immune from attack in a collateral proceeding.

Meeker v Kautz, 213-370; 239 NW 27

11295 Field notes and plats.

Plat of premises. A privately made plat of premises may be admissible even tho it contains objectionable matter, the jury being orally directed to disregard the latter.

Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Official survey on court order. In an action for reformation of description by metes and bounds in realty mortgages and for their foreclosure, evidence held sufficient to support judgment confirming surveyor's report, where surveyor is permitted to testify, without objection, that he was qualified to make the survey and that the plat of survey prepared by him is a true and correct survey showing the property in question and made in accordance with a previous order of court and such plat, after identification, was introduced in evidence without objection.

State Bank v Mapel, 226-1328; 286 NW 517

Official surveys—objections. In an action for reformation of description in realty mortgage and for foreclosure, wherein a surveyor or civil engineer is appointed by the court to make a survey of property covered by mortgages, and no objections are made to his appointment nor exceptions taken thereto, objection to the surveyor's report on appeal cannot be predicated on alleged failure to strictly follow the statutory provisions applicable to the reference of an equity case to a referee when the parties have agreed to procedure.

State Bank v Mapel, 226-1328; 286 NW 517

11296 Records and entries in public offices.

Incorporation—certified copy of articles. A copy of the articles of incorporation of a banking corporation, duly certified by the secretary of state, is sufficient proof of such incorporation.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

Certificate of county recorder. The certificate of the county recorder showing the recordation or filing of a chattel mortgage is competent and admissible evidence.

Wertheimer v Parsons, 209-1241; 229 NW 829

Ownership not paramount title at issue. In an action between a creditor and a grantee to set aside a deed, ownership by the grantor being the question in issue rather than recovery by virtue of a superior title, an uncontradicted public record showing ownership in grantor at time the deeds were made is conclusive on that issue.

Bagley v Bates, 224-637; 276 NW 797

Assessment rolls as showing nonexistence of note. Since a party assessed need not list all liabilities, assessment rolls, which fail to show a liability promissory note of decedent, are not thereby admissible as evidence to prove the note never existed nor constituted a real indebtedness.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Nonjudicial public record—certified copies—federal statute—effect. The admissibility of evidence relating to a nonjudicial public record of a foreign state (foreclosure of mortgage by "advertisement and sale") is not restricted by the federal statutes relating to the form of authentication of such record. (See page 37, C., '35 [page 39, C., '39]; also §11290.)

Bristow v Lange, 221-904; 266 NW 808

Certificate of death—admissibility. In an action to recover on a policy of insurance, a certificate of death of the insured, tho duly and legally executed by a coroner, is inadmissible as evidence insofar as said certificate assumes to state the cause of death as "suicide by hanging", said stated cause of death being simply the opinion or conclusion of the coroner and not a statement of fact.

Morton v Ins. Co., 218-846; 254 NW 325; 96 ALR 315

See Wilkinson v Assn., 203-960; 211 NW 238

Ballots—preservation. Ballots must be "carefully preserved" after the election, and without such showing they are not admissible in evidence.

Steeves v New Market, 225-618; 281 NW 162

11302 Duplicate receipt of receiver of land office.

Collateral attack. The issuance by the state of a patent to lands is an assertion of the existence of the property conveyed; and such patent is immune from attack in a collateral proceeding.

Meeker v Kautz, 213-370; 239 NW 27

11305 Judicial record—state or federal courts.

Judgment of former conviction. The record of a former conviction of an accused is admissible under an indictment which properly charges such conviction.

State v Lambertti, 204-670; 215 NW 752

Evidence available against vouchee. In an action for breach of warranty because of an existing mortgage on the property, the foreclosure proceedings and judgment entry therein are admissible against the covenantor-defendant to prove the plaintiff's measure of damages, it appearing that the covenantor had been duly vouched into said foreclosure proceedings.

Kellar v Lindley, 203-57; 212 NW 360

Admissibility against stranger. A final decree and the pleadings relating thereto may, in some cases, be admissible in a subsequent action to prove an ultimate fact even tho the party against whom the decree is offered was not a party to the decree. So held where the decree was received to prove the judicial cancellation of a contract of sale upon which cancellation depended the validity of a promissory note sued on.

Pierce v Lichtenstein, 214-315; 242 NW 59

Bankruptcy proceeding—certified records admissible. Records certified to by the clerk of the United States district court as to the existence of a bankruptcy proceeding are competent evidence of said bankruptcy admissible in the state courts.

Bagley v Bates, 224-637; 276 NW 797

Former plea of guilty—not conclusive in a civil action. In a civil action, the plea of guilty to a criminal prosecution involving the same transaction is admissible as an admission but is not conclusive when the criminal defendant, as a witness in the civil action, gives testimony tending to contradict his plea of guilty.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Pleadings as evidence—counterclaim as admission. Where corporation, within its agency for an insurance association, insured its own automobile, and when sued along with the driver thereof on account of a collision involving the automobile, and when the corporation counterclaims therein, alleging that it and driver were free from negligence, which counterclaim was subsequently dismissed, then in a later action against corporation to recover on the policy, the corporation was bound by such allegation as an admission of its consent to use the vehicle, and the pleading was admissible in evidence therefor.

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

11306 Of another state.

Foreign judicial proceedings. The judicial proceedings of the courts of a foreign state may not, of course, be given any effect except on due proof thereof.

Railway v Lundquist, 206-499; 221 NW 228

Improper certification first raised on appeal. Admission of improperly certified judicial records of Texas and Michigan bearing on issue of defendant's sanity in trial of default action to annul marriage is not ground for reversal of court's action in refusing to set aside the default annulment when lower court was not given opportunity to pass upon the competency of the records. The rule is that a party is not to be surprised on appeal by new objections and issues, nor as to defects within his power to remedy had he been advised in the proper time and manner.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

Documentary evidence—certified copies—federal statute. The admissibility of evidence relating to a nonjudicial public record of a foreign state (foreclosure of mortgage by "advertisement and sale") is not restricted by the federal statutes relating to the form of authentication of such record.

Bristow v Lange, 221-904; 266 NW 808

11309 Presumption of regularity.

Similar annotations. See under §§10502, 11548, 14010

Official action. The actions of public officials are presumed to be regular unless there be clear evidence to the contrary.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374
Krueger v Mun. Court, 223-1363; 275 NW 122

Presumptions ousted by evidence. Presumptions disappear when evidence of the actual facts is introduced.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Change of place of commitment. It will be presumed, in the absence of any counter showing, that the court had a legal reason for changing the place of commitment from the county jail of the county of trial to the jail of a foreign county.

State v Herzoff, 200-889; 205 NW 500

Result of election verified by canvassers. It will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that the state board of canvassers has duly performed its duty to certify the result of a primary election to the various chairmen of political parties.

Zellmer v Smith, 206-725; 221 NW 220

Location of public utility lines. In the absence of any evidence or showing to the contrary, it will not be presumed that a public service corporation is seeking the location of its lines along a highway without having procured a franchise, or that the highway engineer is proceeding to mark such location without a written application therefor. (§4838, C., '31.)

Swartzwelter v Utilities Corp., 216-1060; 250 NW 121

Appointment of administrator—collateral attack. The record of the appointment in a county of an administrator and his due qualification is a finality and beyond collateral attack, even tho the record fails affirmatively to show the existence of the facts upon which the jurisdiction of the court depends; otherwise if the record affirmatively reveals want of jurisdiction.

Ferguson v Connell, 210-419; 230 NW 859

Regularity of inferior bodies. Jurisdiction, in an inferior governmental body over a subject matter, lies at the very threshold of a proceeding, and no presumption of regularity in such proceeding can be indulged until the fact of jurisdiction is first made to appear from a record finding of jurisdiction by the body in question, or by other equivalent showing.

McKinley v Lucas County, 215-46; 244 NW 663

Tax sale—scavenger sale. When a county treasurer sells lands to the highest bidder at "scavenger" tax sale it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that said lands were duly and unsuccessfully offered for sale at prior tax sales as required by statute.

Board v Stone, 212-660; 237 NW 478

Sale under execution. A sheriff in making a sale under execution will be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, to have complied with the statutes governing such sales.

Ebinger v Wahrer, 213-84; 238 NW 587

Improvement of county road within town. When a board of supervisors proceeds to improve a town street which is a continuation of a county road, it will be presumed, nothing being shown to the contrary, that the board and the town council first entered into a written agreement covering the work as provided by statute.

Norwalk v County, 210-1262; 232 NW 682

Officers—when jurisdiction must appear. The statutory presumption that the proceedings of inferior tribunals, e. g., the county board of supervisors, are presumed to be regular, does not extend to the acquisition of jurisdiction of the board—this must be shown.

Davelaar v Marion Co., 224-669; 277 NW 744

Erection of proper signs along road. On appeal, the appellate court will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, assume that the board of supervisors has performed its mandatory duty to erect and maintain proper signs on local county roads where they intersect with county trunk roads.

Arends v DeBruyn, 217-529; 252 NW 249

Indexing lis pendens. The presumption that the clerk of the district court duly indexed, as a lis pendens, a petition for the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage is so strong that convincing proof to the contrary is required to overcome it.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Jansen, 217-439; 251 NW 711

Deficient record—presumption. On appeal from action to enjoin trespass and for damages, where record before the supreme court relating to certain issues, including question of damages, was so incomplete as to make determination very difficult, it was presumed that the trial court performed its duty and reached a proper conclusion.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Attorney fee for extraordinary probate services. Tho a presumption of regularity exists as to an unassailed allowance of attorney fees for extraordinary services, and tho ex parte orders fixing such fees without introduction of evidence are not uncommon, yet such orders are always open to review on final settlement.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Mailing and delivery of letter. For the purpose of proving that an original letter was presumptively received by the addressee through the mail, a proven copy of said letter is inadmissible simply on the showing that the writer of the letter personally signed it, and relied on the accuracy of his secretary to make a proper mailing of the letter in accordance with the routine of the office, there being no evidence as to such routine.

Forrest v Sovereign Camp, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Incorrectly addressed letter. There is no presumption that mail matter addressed to a person at a town which is not his post-office address will be delivered to the addressee at another town which is his post-office address, tho the two towns are in the same county and in the same vicinity.

Lundy v Skinner, 220-831; 263 NW 520

11311 Proceedings of legislature.

Enrollment—when conclusive—when not conclusive. The text of the official enrollment of a legislative act will be treated by the courts as an absolute verity, but the courts will go behind such enrollment on the question whether the house or senate complied with the mandatory constitutional requirement that the bill be put on passage by a ye and nay vote and such vote be entered on the legislative journal.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

11312 Printed copies of statutes.

Presumption—law of sister state. Presumptively the laws of a sister state relative to a named subject-matter are the same as those of this state.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

Exception to presumption. No presumption will be indulged that the statutory law of another state is the same as the statutory law of this state when the pleadings of the parties are inconsistent with such presumption.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Presumption—laws of other states. Presumptively the law of Minnesota is the same as the law of this state.

Northern Finance v Meinhardt, 209-895; 226 NW 168

Foreign law governing foreclosure. Presumptively, the laws of a foreign state governing mortgage foreclosures are the same as the laws of this state.

Pfeffer v Corey, 211-203; 233 NW 126

Comity between states—procedure governing. A cause of action which is predicated on the statutes of a foreign state will, as a matter of comity, be enforced in the courts of this state, but only under and in accordance with the recognized and prescribed court procedure of this state.

Rastede v Railway, 203-430; 212 NW 751

Foreign corporations—dissolution—effect on pending actions. A duly rendered decree of dissolution of a foreign corporation, at the instance of the state under the laws of which said corporation was organized, is, in effect, an executed sentence of death; being such, said decree ipso facto works an abatement (1) of an unadjudicated action in rem pending in this state against said dissolved corporation, and (2) of garnishment proceeding pending in connection with said action. Under such circumstances, the garnishee may properly move for and be granted an order of discharge.

Peoria Co. v Streator Co., 221-690; 266 NW 548

Foreign procedural statutes — nonright to plead. In an action in this state to recover damages sustained in a foreign state in consequence of the alleged actionable negligence of the defendant in operating an automobile in said foreign state, plaintiff has no right to plead the procedural statutes and rules of law of said foreign state. For example, those pertaining:

1. To what matters would be presumptive evidence of negligence.
2. To the burden of proof in the trial of the action.
3. To the right of plaintiff to submit his action on different theories of the evidence.

Reason: All said matters are purely procedural.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617

Foreign remedial statute—nonapplicability. The remedial statutes of a foreign state, authorizing an action in said state against a corporation which has been dissolved at the

Peoria Co. v Streator Co., 221-690; 266 NW 548

Foreign remedial statutes — right to plead. In an action in this state to recover damages sustained in a foreign state in consequence of the alleged actionable negligence of defendant in operating an automobile in said foreign state, plaintiff may plead those statutes and rules of law of said foreign state from which actionable negligence, under the facts of the case, are deducible, e. g., those (1) which declare the degree of care required of defendant in such operation in said foreign state, and (2) the nature and degree of plaintiff's contributory negligence which will bar his action, said pleaded statutes and laws being of the very essence of plaintiff's cause of action, and not contrary to the public policy of this state, even tho they exact a greater degree of care than would be exacted by the law of this state had the injury occurred in this state.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617

11315 Ordinances of city or town.

Ordinance book as evidence. A book purporting to be the ordinances of a municipality and duly certified as such by the city clerk is admissible, so far as material, without further showing.

Hollingsworth v Hall, 214-285; 242 NW 39

Sufficient "offer". A book purporting to have been issued by a city or town and to contain the ordinances thereof, as of a certain date, need not be formally offered as such. Counsel need only produce or bring the volume into court for the inspection of the court and thereupon formally offer such portions thereof as he may see fit.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Burden to show inadmissibility. The burden of pointing out wherein city ordinance regulating train's speed is defective, either in substance or method of adoption, is on the party objecting to its admissibility.

Meier v Railway, 224-295; 275 NW 139

11316 Production of books and papers.

Profert, oyer, and exhibits. The common law procedure of "oyer and profert", by which a party obtained the inspection of documents, is unknown to our code procedure.

Dunlop v Dist. Court, 214-389; 239 NW 541

"Paper" defined. A laboratory analysis, duly reduced to writing, of an organ of the human body and of the contents thereof is a "paper", within the meaning of the statute relative to the compulsory production of "papers or books", and the party to an action who has the exclusive possession thereof may be compelled to produce it for the inspection of the other party when such inspection is material to the issue whether the deceased died by accident or by suicide by means of poison; but the production of private correspondence or memoranda relative to the analysis may not be coerced.

Travelers Ins. v Jackson, 201-43; 206 NW 98

Resulting inconvenience—effect. It is inconsequential that a valid and reasonable order for the production of books and papers will inconvenience and interrupt the business of the party ordered to produce them.

Iowa Corp. v Hutchison, 207-453; 223 NW 271

Surrender of possession—legality. An order of court directing a party litigant to produce and deposit in the custody of a court officer certain documents and papers is not void because the effect of the order is temporarily to dispossess said litigant of his own property.

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Production of noncompetent evidence. The court is not necessarily acting outside its jurisdiction in ordering the production of papers, and copies which would not or might not be admissible as competent evidence on the trial of the pending action.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Materiality. The materiality of books and papers in view of the issues is the test by which to determine the correctness of an order of court for their production.

Iowa Corp. v Hutchison, 207-453; 223 NW 271

Dual materiality—effect. An order for the production of books and papers which are material under the pleadings of the applicant for the order is not illegal because such books and papers tend to prove the case of the party ordered to produce such books and papers.

Iowa Corp. v Hutchison, 207-453; 223 NW 271

Materiality generally—presumption. Whether an order should be entered for the production, by one of the parties, of books or papers, manifestly depends on the nature of the action and on a liberal construction of the issues joined. No nice discrimination on the question of materiality should be attempted. Presumptively the order for production is within the jurisdiction of the court.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Sealing portions of books. A rule for the production of books should provide for the sealing up of such parts thereof as are not legally subject to the inspection of the applicant for the rule.

Fairbanks Morse v Dist. Court, 215-703; 247 NW 203

Unallowable scope of order. The court, in order to keep within its jurisdiction, must, irrespective of the scope of objections pressed upon its attention, so frame its order for the production of correspondence as will not enable the applicant for the order to go on a fishing expedition, and ransack and rifle the files of his adversary for matters irrespective of their materiality.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Illegal rule. When an action is predicated by plaintiff on the plea that a corporation in entering into a contract with plaintiff was acting as the agent of one or both of two other corporations, and also on the plea that said contract was in furtherance of a joint adventure of said three parties, the court in granting plaintiff a rule for the production of books and papers acts illegally insofar as it fails to confine said rule to books and papers which tend to support the affirmative of either or both of said issues.

Fairbanks Morse v Dist. Court, 215-703; 247 NW 203

Minority stockholders — right to inspect books. The minority stockholders of a dissolved corporation have the right (in an action for an accounting against another corporation which has succeeded to the business, assets, books, and papers of the dissolved corporation), on a proper petition therefor, to an order for the production and inspection of the material books, records, and papers of the dissolved corporation and of the succeeding corporation.

National Prod. Co., v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

Right to examine books and records. An administrator and the heirs at law of a deceased stockholder in a corporation, when refused an examination by the corporation, have the right, without any plea of good faith, to an order of court, in an appropriate proceeding, permitting them and their necessary assistants to examine the books and records of the corporation in order to determine the financial condition of the corporation and the value of its stock.

Becker v Trust Co., 217-17; 250 NW 644

Certiorari—essential purpose of writ. On certiorari to review an order of the district court relative to the production of books and papers, the sole inquiry is whether the lower court had jurisdiction to enter the order in question, not whether the lower court made errors in exercising its jurisdiction.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Order to produce—admissibility. An order to produce books and papers is not a ruling that, when produced, the books and papers will be admissible as legal evidence.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Order for production—subpoena duces tecum. The power of the court to order a litigant to produce documents and papers is not dependent in any degree on any analogy to the rules of law governing subpoenas duces tecum.

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Optional procedure—depositions. The court is not without jurisdiction to order the production of the original of documents and papers because the applicant for the order might avail himself of depositions.

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Facts otherwise available. The court is not without jurisdiction to order the production of the originals of documents and papers because litigants, hostile to the applicant for the order, have taken depositions which reveal purported copies of said documents and papers. And especially when such depositions were not of record when the order to produce was entered.

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Place of inspection of books. One ordered to produce books for inspection may have the right to insist that said inspection be made at his principal place of business, and not at a place where said books will pass, temporarily, entirely out of his possession.

National Prod. Co. v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

Place of production of books, etc. A rule for the production by defendant of books or papers kept by him at his place of business remote from the place of trial should require the production to be made at said place of business when production at the place of trial would impose on defendant undue burden and expense, and interruption of business.

Fairbanks Morse v Dist. Court, 215-703; 247 NW 203

Foreign corporations—visitatorial power of state. A foreign corporation transacting business within this state is subject to all the remedies available against a domestic corporation. So held under an application for an order for the production of papers and documents.

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Foreign corporation — nonjurisdiction of officer—effect. An order of court directing a foreign corporation, as a litigant doing business in this state, to produce certain documents and papers, is not invalid because jurisdiction, while complete as to the corporation, has not been obtained over any corporate officer.

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Inability to enforce order—effect. That a foreign corporation doing business in this state may not comply with an order for the production of documents and papers and that the court may be unable to enforce its order, is no adequate reason for refusing the order or for annulling such order when made.

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Balance of convenience—order. Record evidence reviewed and held, under “balance of convenience” rule, to justify the court in ordering a defending insurance company located at Toronto, Canada, to produce in this state, and at its own expense certain documents and papers.

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Place of inspection—balance of convenience. A foreign corporation, doing business in this state, has no absolute right to demand that its documents and papers be inspected at its home office in the foreign state. So held as to documents and papers which did not pertain to the daily operations of a foreign insurance company.

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Harmless comprehensive order. The objection that an order for the production of correspondence is so comprehensive as to require the production of mere private letters between the parties, having nothing whatever to do with the suit in question, is neutralized by a record fairly showing that the parties are strangers, residents of distant states, and have never had any transaction except the subject matter of the suit.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Nonexcessive order. Order for the production of the originals of certain documents and papers, and the facts attending such order, reviewed, and held such order could not be deemed a roving commission.

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Refusal to compel production. The refusal of the court to compel the county attorney to produce the confession of a co-accused will not be deemed reversible error when the accused makes no effort to secure such confession except to unsuccessfully request the county attorney to produce it.

State v Bittner, 209-109; 227 NW 601

Correspondence between defendant and third parties. An order, in an action for damages for deceit, for the production by defendant of correspondence between himself and a third party, is within the jurisdiction of the court when the materiality of such correspondence is alleged, and appears tho in not a very definite manner.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Correspondence with defendant and his trade-name affiliates. The court, in an action against an individual for deceit, is not necessarily acting beyond its jurisdiction in ordering the production of correspondence not only with the defendant personally, but with various trade-name concerns under which the defendant is alleged to be doing business.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Admitting record of deed not error. In an equity action for foreclosure of realty mortgage against mortgagor and administrators of deceased junior mortgagee, to whom mortgagor had conveyed the land, where it is shown that deed to junior mortgagee was not within the control of senior mortgagee, and where attorneys for defendants stated that they would "admit what the records show", the admission in evidence of the record of such deed was not error.

Federal Bank v Ditto, 227-475; 288 NW 618

11317 Petition—granting or refusing.

Sufficiency in general. The petition for a rule for the production of books or papers may be sufficient even tho it does not state in detail what particular facts will be proved by certain specified books or papers.

Fairbanks Morse v Dist. Court, 215-703; 247 NW 203

Order for production—sufficiency. Books and papers should, in an order for their production, be identified and pointed out with reasonable certainty, but absolute precision is not required.

Iowa Corp. v Hutchison, 207-453; 223 NW 271

Petition—sufficiency—deceit action. Petition for the production of papers and correspondence, in an action for damages for deceit, reviewed, and held to comply with the governing statute.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

Appeal from order not permitted. An order for the production of books is not appealable.

Stagg v Bank, 203-84; 212 NW 342

Certiorari to review. The legal discretion of the court to enter an order for the production of books and papers cannot be controlled by certiorari.

Iowa Corp. v Hutchison, 207-453; 223 NW 271

(Contra) Stagg v Bank, 203-84; 212 NW 342

Non-jurisdictional showing. The district court has no jurisdiction to enter an order requiring plaintiff in mortgage foreclosure action to deposit with the clerk the original note and mortgage sought to be foreclosed, for the inspection of a non-answering defendant, when the application upon which the order is entered is unverified, and contains no allegation concerning the materiality of said inspection. It follows said order is subject to review on certiorari.

Dunlop v Dist. Court, 214-389; 239 NW 541

Relevancy—determination of issue. The affidavit of one, against whom an order for the production of books is sought, to the effect that said books are wholly irrelevant to the matter in litigation, will be deemed presumptively true.

National Prod. Co. v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

Protection of private papers. A party defendant may not be required to expose to his adversary, or the public, his private business affairs which have no relation to the matters in litigation. If his books contain matters relevant to the litigation, and also purely non-relevant personal matters, the order for the production and inspection of the books must, by some proper provision, protect the latter.

National Prod. Co. v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

Order on strangers to action. The jurisdiction of the court, on a proper petition, to order a party to an action to produce books, papers, etc., does not embrace the jurisdiction to enter such order against one who is not a party to the litigation. And an amendment to the petition for such order which does no more than to insert in the caption the names of various parties as defendants does not make such parties defendants in the statutory sense.

National Prod. Co. v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

Order for correspondence unlimited as to time. An order for the production of correspondence between a party and his agent may be so unlimited as to time of correspondence as to call for manifestly immaterial testimony.

Main v Ring, 219-1270; 260 NW 859

11322 To whom directed—duces tecum.

Subpoena duces tecum—office. The remedy of a party to an action who desires the production of books, papers, etc., in the possession of a stranger to the action is to cause to be issued and served a subpoena duces tecum.

National Prod. Co. v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

Order for production distinguished. The power of the court to order a litigant to produce documents and papers is not dependent in any degree on any analogy to the rules of law governing subpoenas duces tecum.

Foresters v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Copies in lieu of originals. Carbon copies of letters, the originals of which are in the possession of the adverse party, are not admissible until the originals are properly called for and not produced.

Miller v Fire Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

11326 Witness fees.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 177

Party defendant. A party defendant is not entitled to witness fees tho he has entered no appearance in the action, but has been subpoenaed.

Vacuum Oil v Carstens, 211-1129; 231 NW 380

11328 Peace officer.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 431; '36 AG Op 419

11329 Expert witnesses—fee.

Opinion testimony. See under §11254 (II)

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Feb. 27, '40

Answers based on hearsay. An expert may not testify to matters of fact or opinion which are not based on his own knowledge or experience, but on what he has read.

Evans v Iowa Co., 205-283; 218 NW 66

Subsequent appeal—law of case—inability to meet. On the retrial of a reversed and remanded cause, additional testimony in the form of expert opinion which is the merest conjecture—opinion which is not predicated upon any basis (1) of scientific knowledge, or (2) of general experience—is entirely too weak to lift the cause out of the evidential law of the case as first declared on appeal.

Hartford Ins. v Mellon, 206-182; 220 NW 331

Subject of expert testimony. It is not permissible for a party to gather together in the form of a hypothetical question the various circumstances established by him as bearing on a fact issue and present them to a so-called expert for his opinion, when the circumstances are such that the opinion of a lay witness would carry equal evidentiary value.

McClary v Railway, 209-67; 227 NW 646

Cause of injury—invading province of jury. It is improper (1) to call upon an expert witness for his conclusion as to the cause of an injury, or (2) to ask such witness for his opinion as to the "sole cause" or "direct and exclusive cause" or "sole primary cause", of such injury, and reversible error results from permitting the witness to affirmatively state such conclusion or opinion.

Justis v Cas. Co., 215-109; 244 NW 696

Hypothetical question based on testimony of one witness. The inclusion in a hypothetical question of a certain fact is proper tho only one witness has testified to such fact.

Boston v Keokuk Co., 206-753; 221 NW 508

Hypothetical question based on untrue statement. The jury should be plainly instructed, at least on request, that it must give no weight or consideration to an answer to a hypothetical question if it finds that any assumed fact embodied in the question is not, in fact, true.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Instructions—noncontrolling effect of expert testimony. Instructions to the effect that a jury is not necessarily compelled to give controlling effect to expert testimony reviewed, and held correct.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 210-849; 231 NW 323; 38 NCCA 81

Instructions—credibility of expert witnesses. Instructions are proper which, in substance, direct the jury that they are to use their own judgment in considering evidence relative to values and that such judgment need not be surrendered for that of the expert witnesses.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Nonright of jurors to substitute their own knowledge. Jurors may use and employ their own knowledge as to values in determining the weight and effect of expert testimony as to such values, but they must not be instructed, in effect, that they may disregard such expert testimony and substitute their own knowledge as evidence.

State v Brown, 215-600; 246 NW 258

Hypothetical questions on unproven facts. The court may permit hypothetical questions to be asked and answered before all the assumed facts have been established, the jury being cautioned to disregard such testimony in case the assumed facts have not been established at any stage of the trial.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

Opinion evidence—nonconclusiveness. Opinion evidence is not, ordinarily, conclusive on the trier of a question of fact, especially when such evidence happens to be only one of several elements which the trier must weigh in determining the fact.

Wood v Wood, 220-441; 262 NW 773

Explanation of architectural drawings. The meaning of marks and characters unintelligible to the layman, appearing on an architectural drawing, may be shown by a witness familiar with such matters. So held as to characters which indicated the presence of a sewer.

Des Moines Co. v Magarian, 201-647; 207 NW 750

Arbitrary right to shape form of question. An examiner in the cross-examination of an expert has the right, as a general rule, to shape his question as he pleases. So held where the witness had testified as to the value of a farm before and after condemnation, and where the examiner chose to ask the witness as to the value of separate tracts without directing the witness, in effect, to exclude all benefits consequent on the condemnation.

Dean v State, 211-143; 233 NW 36

Subject of expert testimony—radiograph. A radiograph may be explained or interpreted to a jury by an expert, insofar as the radiograph does not interpret itself to the mere observation of a nonexpert.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Harmless error—oral testimony as to foreign statutes. No reversible error occurs in permitting a layman (without objection to his competency) to testify relative to the statute laws of a foreign state when such statutes, relative to the subject matter in question, were ultimately introduced in evidence.

Richmond v Whitaker, 218-606; 255 NW 681

Opinion evidence—qualified mechanic. It is not error to permit testimony of expert witnesses when there is a sufficient showing of their qualifications to give such testimony. So held as to a mechanic's testimony regarding brakes and lights.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

Possible cause of death—artificial heat. In workmen's compensation action in which objection is raised to the admission of expert testimony to show the heat situation in a bake-shop, where the death of a workman is allegedly caused by intensified or artificial heat, held, that insofar as the conditions, causes, and effects to which the experts testified required special study and experience to understand and explain, the admission of such expert testimony was proper.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 238 NW 625

Evidentiary (?) or ultimate (?) facts. In workmen's compensation action to recover for death of workman allegedly caused by intensified or artificial heat, wherein defendant asserts that expert witnesses testified to the ultimate fact that there was excessive heat, which fact was for the determination of the commissioner, held, the evidence given by the experts consisted of material, evidentiary facts, constituting a basis for one of the ultimate facts in the case, which was that decedent received an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment, and therefore was admissible, particularly so where defendant did not object to the testimony on the ground that it stated an ultimate fact.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 238 NW 625

Cause of death of hogs—question of law. Evidence reviewed, and held that the court could not say as a matter of law that the expert theory that hogs died of hog cholera after the termination of a shipment was more reasonable than the theory that they died because of the negligence of the carrier during shipment.

Brower v Railway, 218-317; 252 NW 755

Thickness of pavement. Whether a pavement constructed four and a half inches in thickness only is in substantial compliance with a contract requiring a thickness of six inches, is not a subject of expert testimony.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Hypothetical questions—wholly insufficient basis. Evidence of the naked fact that a railway locomotive was "coaled twice" within a few miles furnishes no foundation for the expert conclusion "that the front end of the engine was burned out, that the screens were in bad condition, or that the flues were dirty."

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

Fingerprints—expert testimony as to ultimate fact. A witness who is expert in the science of dactylography may testify that, in his opinion, judgment, or belief, different fingerprints were made by one and the same finger, but he may not testify that they were made by one and the same finger.

State v Steffen, 210-196; 230 NW 536; 78 ALR 748

Homicide—robbery. Whether a homicide was committed by one who was at the time robbing the deceased is quite beyond the proper scope of expert testimony.

Nelson v Acc. Soc., 212-989; 237 NW 341

Burglars' tools—expert testimony. Expert testimony is admissible as to the burglarious nature of certain tools.

State v McHenry, 207-760; 223 NW 535

Burglar's tools. In a prosecution for possessing burglar's tools, with felonious intent, the state may show by expert testimony that certain instruments could be used in the commission of a burglary, but erroneously asking the witness whether such instruments would be so used is not necessarily prejudicial.

State v Furlong, 216-428; 249 NW 132

"Conclusion" of ballistic expert. The province of a jury is not invaded by permitting a ballistic expert to testify that as a result of his detailed investigation he had "reached the conclusion" that a certain bullet had been fired through the barrel of a certain gun.

State v Campbell, 213-677; 239 NW 715

Identification of ballistic photographs. Evidence held ample to identify certain ballistic photographs.

State v Campbell, 213-677; 239 NW 715

Handwriting—unallowable standard. Manifest error results, in the trial of the issue of handwriting, from admitting in evidence writings as standards for comparison without proof that the person in question wrote the standards.

State v Debner, 202-150; 209 NW 404

Handwriting—proper standard for comparison. Proof that a party whose handwriting is in question admitted writing a certain exhibit renders the exhibit admissible as a proper standard for comparison.

State v Debner, 205-25; 215 NW 721

Signatures—jury question. The mere introduction in evidence of genuine signatures of a party in order to establish the plea that the purported signature of the party to a written release is a forgery does not generate a jury question on the issue of forgery, when other ample evidence persuasively shows that the signature to the release is genuine.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Fictitious signature—expert and jury comparison. On the issue whether certain signatures on checks are purely fictitious and represent no existing person, and were in reality written by a named existing party, experts in handwriting and the jury may compare said signatures with the admitted or proven handwriting of said named party.

Kruidenier Estate v Trust Co., 203-776; 209 NW 452

Handwriting expert—striking evidence. If evidence, erroneously admitted during the progress of a trial, is distinctly withdrawn by the court, the error is cured, except where it is manifest that the prejudicial effect on the jury remained despite its exclusion. Testimony by a handwriting expert, who referred to notes, which were merely the basis or reason for his opinion as to the genuineness of signatures to a will, held not within the exception.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Genuineness of signature. Competent expert testimony as to the genuineness of a signature is admissible notwithstanding an element of weakness therein.

McCull v Jordan, 200-961; 205 NW 838

Disparaging expert testimony—instructions. A party who requests an instruction which emphasizes the superiority of positive over expert testimony as to the genuineness of handwriting may not complain that the court gave an instruction which fully embodied the idea of the requested instruction, but which more sharply, but correctly, emphasized the inferiority of expert testimony generally.

Keeney v Arp, 212-45; 235 NW 745

Limitation on nonexpert. A nonexpert witness may not testify that the signature to an instrument "looks like" or "resembles" the genuine signature of a named person. Such a witness is competent to testify only to his belief or opinion.

Schram v Johnson, 208-222; 225 NW 369

Examination of expert. An expert witness may testify that a signature "looks like" the signature of the party in question; likewise that a given signature is "in his judgment" genuine.

McCull v Jordan, 200-961; 205 NW 838

Handwriting experts—probative value. It being conceded, arguendo, that the testimony of experts on handwriting is not of the highest order, nevertheless, under proper circumstances, such testimony has probative value.

State v Manly, 211-1043; 233 NW 110

Comparison of handwriting—cross-examination. The cross-examination of an expert witness, a banker, who has testified to the genuineness of a signature to a promissory note in suit, may not be carried to the extent of questioning the witness as to his course of action in case supposed checks were presented to his bank for payment, when the answers, whatever they might be, can have no legitimate bearing on the credibility, qualification, competency, accuracy, or mental attitude or bias of the witness.

Keeney v Arp, 212-45; 235 NW 745

Enlarged photographs of handwriting. Evidence consisting of microscopic inspection, magnified photographs, or chemical tests may so demonstrate the nongenuineness of a writing as to become substantive evidence. It follows that such evidence, not being mere expert testimony, is not subject to the disparagement usually and ordinarily applied to expert testimony.

Keeney v Arp, 212-45; 235 NW 745

Handwriting photographs. Photographs of handwriting, altho bearing explanatory markings made by the expert witness, are proper evidence to aid the jury's comparison of the disputed signature on a will, as well as to explain expert testimony and their admissibility is largely within the trial court's discretion.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Taxation—farm land within city—evidence warranting reduction in actual value. Where a 371.51-acre farm within the corporate limits of a city was very rough, the top soil washed off, the fertility gone, a third of the land infested with weeds rendering it impossible to raise even grass crops, and where the taxes exceeded the income, and qualified witnesses fixed its value at between $10 and $15 per acre, as against the tax assessor's value fixed at $65.58 per acre, on same basis as adjoining lands, tho there was no other similar land in the district, the supreme court fixed the actual value thereof for taxation at $30 per acre.

Lincoln Bank v Board, 227-1136; 290 NW 94

Competency of experts—value. On the issue of the solvency of a bank, expert witnesses may be permitted to testify to the value of the bank's assets even tho they do not possess, as to all items, the most comprehensive qualification.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Assets of bank. A qualified expert accountant is competent to testify that certain proven payments of money to a bank "did not come into the assets of the bank as shown by the books and records of the bank."

Andrew v Ind. Co., 207-652; 223 NW 529

Fraudulent banking—insolvency. In a prosecution for receiving deposits with knowledge that the bank was insolvent, the value of the assets of the bank may be proven by any witness who is familiar with such assets and knows the value thereof.

State v Childers, 202-1377; 212 NW 63

Blood test—authority to take. When a coroner from another county, without legal warrant and without express or implied assent, acted as a volunteer and went into an operating room and took from an unconscious patient a blood sample to be used in a possible future criminal prosecution, the court was in error in a later manslaughter prosecution against the patient, in receiving in evidence over timely objections by the defendant, the blood sample and the testimony of experts based thereon.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

Blood test—expert testimony. Greater care could have been taken in tracing a blood sample from an operating room to a trial 7 months later than evidence which showed that it had passed through the hands of several persons, not all of them being identified, and had been kept for a time in some sort of mailboxes in a doctor's office in another city. Without more foundation, a statement by the doctor at the trial that the blood sample was then in the same condition as it was in the beginning was a mere conclusion.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

Attending physician. It is not erroneous to permit an attending physician who has detailed the injuries of his patient to answer hypothetical questions.

McDonald v Robinson, 207-1293; 224 NW 820; 62 ALR 1419

Privileged communications. The expert opinion of a physician as to the possible cause of an injury, based on no fact obtained from the injured party, does not constitute the disclosing of a confidential communication.

Whitmore v Herrick, 205-621; 218 NW 334

Cause of death. A physician may, on a hypothetical question based on the testimony of other witnesses and on his own examination of the body of the deceased, give his opinion as to the cause of death.

State v Korth, 204-1360; 217 NW 236

Documentary evidence—medical works—unallowable reception. Error results from permitting a party on the direct examination of his own expert witness to read extracts from a medical work, and then to ask the witness if he agrees with the statement so read.

Morton v Ins. Co., 218-846; 254 NW 325; 96 ALR 315

Physicians—success of treatment. An expert medical witness may not testify as to the success he has had in treating a specified injury in a specified manner.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Opinion evidence—usual course of recovery. Evidence of an expert witness relative to the recovery usually made in average cases of certain injuries is wholly irrelevant and immaterial when there is no evidence that the injuries in question constituted an "average case."

DeMoss v Cab Co., 218-77; 254 NW 17

Hypothetical questions— inadmissible when not based on evidence. In a prosecution for homicide where it was shown that the deceased was found with a fractured neck, with no marks on his neck or body nor any evidence of a quarrel or struggle, after he had been left alone for only about a minute and a half with the defendant who was a friend of about the same size and weight, it was reversible error to allow a physician to demonstrate a strangle hold, and to answer a hypothetical question, not based on evidence, that force could be applied from the rear so as to break a man's neck.

State v Hillman, 226-932; 285 NW 176

Physician's cross-examination. In a murder prosecution, when a doctor on direct examination testified only as to what he found when he made physical examinations of the deceased, it was not error to deny cross-examination on the history of the patient.

State v Coleman, 226-968; 285 NW 269

Malpractice—testimony of laymen considered. The necessity or nonnecessity for removal of an organ from the body is not exclusively a subject of expert testimony.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Self-serving declarations made to physician. In an action for damages for injuries received by plaintiff almost a year previously when a rug fell on her in defendant's store, it was prejudicial error to allow a physician, who had never attended her but had examined her shortly before the trial in order to enable him to give evidence at the trial, to testify over objections as to self-serving declarations concerning her health made at that time by plaintiff, and to allow him to answer hypothetical questions based partly upon the incompetent testimony.

Mitchell v Ward & Co., 226-956; 285 NW 187

Cause of death—undue burden to establish. Expert medical opinions that an insured died from an intra-cranial, fatty embolus resulting from an external, violent and accidentally suffered injury, met by the same class of expert opinions positively to the contrary, may generate a jury question, determinable by the jury, like any other disputed question of fact, on the preponderance of testimony, the facts on which such conflicting, expert opinions are based being of such nature that the jurors could not therefrom deduce a proper opinion. So held where the court erroneously instructed that "No mere weight of evidence is sufficient to establish the cause of assured's death unless it excludes every other reasonable hypothesis as to the cause of death"—in effect requiring the theory of death by means of an embolus to be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

Aldine Co. v Acc. Assn., 222-20; 268 NW 507

Cause of death—testimony of attending physician nonconclusive. The testimony of a physician as to the cause of death of a person whom the physician personally attended shortly prior to said death is not conclusive, especially when the physician was, at the time of the examination, uncertain as to the cause of death. In other words, expert testimony, on proper hypothetical facts, is admissible to show a cause of death other than that testified to by the attending physician.

Dawson v Life Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

Unallowable conclusion—method of treatment. Whether the results of a line of medical treatment which was employed on a named occasion were satisfactory is, at the best, an unallowable conclusion.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393

Necessity for abortion. A physician who has professionally attended a woman upon whom an abortion has been attempted, and who later performed an autopsy upon her body, may state whether, in his opinion, the abortion was necessary to save the life of the woman. Otherwise as to a physician who bases his opinion on matters not appearing in the record.

State v Sweeney, 203-1305; 214 NW 735

Necessity to guard against infection. A physician may not testify to his conclusion that, in all cases of miscarriage, it is necessary to take precautions to prevent infection.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

Customary medical practice. A witness, after properly testifying to the line of medical treatment employed on a certain occasion, may not testify that such treatment was the usual and ordinary practice of the profession at the time and place in question.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393

Physicians—usual and ordinary practice. The defendant, in an action for damages for malpractice, may always establish, even by his own testimony, the usual and ordinary practice of physicians and surgeons in treating, in the locality in question, the injury which is the subject matter of the action.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Malpractice—expert and nonexpert testimony—competency. Ordinarily the question of whether a doctor or dentist exercised the requisite care or skill in any case cannot be determined by the testimony of laymen or nonexperts, nor be left to the judgment of a jury or court, unaided by expert testimony, and only those learned or experienced in the profession may testify as to what should or should not have been done. But there are exceptions to this rule depending wholly on the fact situation, and no ironclad rule can be laid down as to when the doctrine shall be applied.

Whitestine v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Malpractice—testimony of physician. In a malpractice action, testimony of a physician, who lived 70 miles away from the town where defendants lived, is admissible on the subject of the usual and accepted procedure in like operations in like localities, when it is shown that he had knowledge of the degree of skill, care, and attention necessary to successfully perform the operation.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Malpractice—unsuccessful operation. Altho, in malpractice actions, an unsuccessful operation does not always indicate negligence, yet it is admissible, coupled with other evidence, in determining negligence or want of skill.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Rape—possibility of intercourse. Expert testimony tending to show the possibility of sexual intercourse with a nine-year-old child may be proper.

State v Ingram, 219-501; 258 NW 186

Testamentary capacity—unsoundness of mind—unallowable opinion. Nonexpert witnesses must not be permitted to express their opinions that a testator was of unsound mind except on a recital of facts which fairly indicate mental unsoundness.

In re Diver, 214-497; 240 NW 622

Examination of expert—questions—form and sufficiency. On the trial of the issue whether a deceased was mentally competent to execute a will, counsel has the right to shape his hypothetical questions to his expert witnesses in accordance with his (counsel's) theory of the case—the right to embrace in said questions such proven facts as he deems relevant and material to said theory and the right to omit all other facts, provided his questions as finally framed furnish adequate basis for an expert opinion as to mental soundness.

Diesing v Spencer, 221-1143; 266 NW 567

Nonexpert opinion as to insanity—necessary foundation—discretion of court. Nonexpert opinion as to unsoundness of mind is inadmissible unless the nonexpert witness first details such facts as tend, in the judgment of the court, to show an abnormal state of mind of the person whose mentality is under investigation; and the discretion of the court will not be interfered with unless there is a clear showing of abuse of such discretion.

Campfield v Rutt, 211-1077; 235 NW 59

Opinion as to sanity—cross-examination.

An expert witness who, on a hypothetical question, states that in his opinion a defendant is of unsound mind, and is suffering from a form of senile dementia, may, on cross-examination, be asked, in effect, whether he would be of the same opinion if the defendant was able to accurately explain involved financial transactions—reflected in the testimony and detailed to the expert.

Richardson v Richardson, 217-127; 250 NW 897

Hypothetical question—fundamentally required instructions. Expert testimony tending to show that a party is of unsound mind, based solely on a hypothetical state of fact, is wholly without value unless the jury finds that the assumed state of fact is true, and fundamental error results in failure so to instruct.

Anspach v Littler, 215-873; 245 NW 304

Insanity—inadequate form of question. The opinion of an expert witness to the effect that a person was insane carries but slight probative value when the opinion is based on a hypothetical question which omits therefrom material and influential facts clearly established.

Crawford v Raible, 206-732; 221 NW 474

Expert and lay opinions—which must yield. An expert opinion that a person was insane at a named time prior to the time when said person was judicially declared insane will not be permitted to outweigh overwhelming lay testimony which strongly tends to establish the contrary, when said expert opinion is based almost wholly on information obtained from said person after she was adjudged insane, and on information obtained from the relatives of said person.

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

11330 Fees payable by county.

Fees in criminal causes. See under §13880, Vol I

11331 Fees in advance.

Party defendant. A party defendant is not entitled to witness fees tho he has entered no appearance in the action, but has been subpoenaed.

Vacuum Oil v Carstens, 211-1129; 231 NW 380

11336 When party fails to obey subpoena.

Deposition of adversary. The court has no legal right, even in an equitable action, to enter an order authorizing plaintiff to take, on his own behalf and by deposition, the testimony of the defendants bearing on the issues joined between plaintiff and all of said defendants.

Bagley v Dist. Court, 218-34; 254 NW 26

Proof by affidavit. See under §11231

Unallowable affidavits.

Radle v Radle, 204-82; 214 NW 602

Changing record. A record cannot be amended by affidavits of counsel.

Parker-Gordon v Benakis, 213-136; 238 NW 611

Unallowable affidavit. Improper argument by the county attorney cannot be shown by affidavits attached to motion for new trial.

State v Hixson, 208-1233; 227 NW 166

Grounds for new trial—optional proof. The grounds for a new trial need not necessarily be established by affidavits. In proper cases, such grounds may be established by the testimony of witnesses.

Skinner v Cron, 206-338; 220 NW 341

Affidavit (?) or bill of exceptions (?). Misconduct of an attorney in argument (not taken down and made of record) must be presented by bill of exceptions and not by affidavit attached to the motion for new trial.

Hornish v Overton, 206-780; 221 NW 483

Conflicting affidavits—effect. A war of conflicting affidavits between counsel as to what oral understanding was had relative to the time of filing an abstract on appeal will not necessarily be determined by the supreme court.

Farmers Bank v Miles, 206-766; 221 NW 449

Misconduct of jurors—nonpermissible affidavits. The affidavits of jurors that their verdict was or was not affected by certain verdict-inhering matters are not permissible. The effect of such matters must be determined by the court.

State v Siegel, 221-429; 264 NW 613

Ex-judge's affidavit—no part of record. A judge's affidavit made after termination of his office, and three months after perfection of the appeal, is no part of the record and cannot be considered against the appellant as a basis for an alleged waiver.

11349 Newspaper publications—how proved.

Proof of publication of original notices. See under §11085

11350 Proof of serving or posting notices.

Impeachment of return. The return of a notice is impeachable on a direct attack on its validity.

Casey (Town) v Hogue, 204-3; 214 NW 729

Parol proof of service. Parol evidence of the posting, as officially directed, of a notice of the appointment of an executor is admissible, and positive evidence to such effect will not be overcome by evidence of witnesses to the effect that they had not "observed" such posted notice.

Peterson v Johnson, 205-16; 212 NW 138

Proof of lost notice and service thereof. The contents of a written notice by a surety to a creditor requiring the creditor to sue on the obligation or to permit the surety so to do in the name of the creditor, and the service of such notice, may be proven by oral evidence when neither the original notice nor a copy thereof can be produced, but such proof must be clear, positive, convincing, and satisfactory.

Cleophas v Walker, 211-122; 233 NW 257

REPORTER'S NOTES AS EVIDENCE

11353 Authorized use.

Impeachment purposes. The shorthand notes taken upon the trial of an action may be used for impeaching purposes.

Judd v Rudolph, 207-113; 222 NW 416; 62 ALR 1174

Death or absence of witness—use of transcript. On the retrial of an action a duly certified transcript of the entire testimony at the former trial of a dead or absent witness is admissible.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 213-969; 236 NW 418

Testimony of party in former and different action. The transcript of the testimony of a party to an action is admissible against him in a subsequent and different action to which he is also a party, when such testimony is material as an admission of such party.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Offering direct examination makes cross-examination admissible. In an action for conversion of an intestate's property, testimony of a witness on direct examination, given in a prior probate discovery proceeding offered and introduced from the transcript of the discovery proceeding, renders also admissible from such transcript the cross-examination of such witness, as being the whole of the conversation, altho under the dead man statute the witness may have been incompetent.

Reeves v Lyon, 224-659; 277 NW 749

Ex parte orders. An ex parte order of a judge at chambers to the effect that a party to an action may, on the trial, use a transcript of the testimony taken in another and former action, is a nullity.

Kostlan v Mowery, 208-623; 226 NW 32

Separate actions. The reporter's transcript of the testimony of a witness in bankruptcy proceedings before the commissioner in bankruptcy is not admissible as a deposition in a subsequent replevin action against the witness by one of his creditors.

Endicott Johnson Corp. v Shapiro, 200-843; 205 NW 511

Action between different parties. The reception in evidence (under proper objection), in an equitable action by an administrator, of the deposition of the deceased taken in another action between other and different parties is entitled to no consideration on an issue on which the administrator has the burden of proof.

In re Mann, 201-878; 208 NW 310

Nonadmissible against nonparty. A transcript of the original, official shorthand notes of a witness in proceedings auxiliary to execution, to which proceedings the witness was not a party, is inadmissible as substantive evidence in a subsequent proceeding against the witness wherein a conveyance is sought to be set aside as fraudulent; neither is such transcript admissible in the absence of proper foundation, to show the admissions of, or to impeach, the witness.

Hawkins v Vermeulen, 211-1279; 231 NW 361

DEPOSITIONS

11358 When and before whom taken.

Discussion. See 23 ILR 93—Letters rogatory

Deposition—when admissible. The deposition of an injured employee in support of his application for compensation under the workmen's compensation act, is admissible, after his death, on behalf of a dependent spouse who has been substituted as plaintiff, the proceeding by the employee during his lifetime and the proceeding by the dependent spouse as substituted plaintiff being in law one and the same cause of action.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

"Party" and "witness" not synonymous. The terms "party" to an action and "witness" are not synonymous within the meaning of this section.

Bagley v Dist. Court, 218-34; 254 NW 26

Right to take depositions—remedy by certiorari. Certiorari is the proper remedy to test the legal right of the district court to order defendants in an action to submit to the taking of their depositions by plaintiff.

Bagley v Dist. Court, 218-34; 254 NW 26

Deposition of adversary. The court has no legal right, even in an equitable action, to enter an order authorizing plaintiff to take, on his own behalf and by deposition, the testimony of the defendants bearing on the issues joined between plaintiff and all of said defendants.

Bagley v Dist. Court, 218-34; 254 NW 26

11364 On commission—notice—interrogatories.

"Letters rogatory" as unallowable substitute. The courts of a foreign state have no jurisdiction to issue, and the district courts of this state have no jurisdiction to honor, so-called "letters rogatory" which are such in name only and not in substance, and which are clearly in evasion of the statutes of the state from which issued, which statutes prescribe the procedure to be followed by the courts of said state and by litigants therein desiring the testimony of witnesses residing in a foreign state.

11391 Reasons for taking—presence of witness.

Independent testimony to justify. Upon the offer in evidence of a deposition and upon objection to leading questions therein, the court has a discretion to permit the introduction of testimony, independent of the deposition, explanatory of the circumstances under which the deposition was taken, to wit, that the witness was mentally alert but very weak physically and gave his testimony with difficulty.

11394 Exceptions.

ANALYSIS

- I OBJECTIONS IN GENERAL
- II OBJECTIONS LIMITED IN TIME
- III INCOMPETENCY, IRRELEVANCY, OR IMMATERIALITY
- IV ADMISSIBILITY

I OBJECTIONS IN GENERAL

Leading questions—dependent testimony to justify. Upon the offer in evidence of a deposition, and upon objection to leading questions therein, the court has a discretion to permit the introduction of testimony, independent of the deposition, explanatory of the circumstances under which the deposition was taken: to wit, that the witness was mentally alert, but very weak physically, and gave his testimony with difficulty.

Finnerty v Shade, 210-1338; 228 NW 886

Questions not revealing purpose—exclusion—effect. The rule that the appellate court will not review the exclusion of questions which do not reveal what is proposed to be proven has no application to a question and answer appearing in a deposition.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Re-taking—motion to strike. A second deposition of a witness is, of course, not necessarily subject to a motion to strike.

Justis v Cas. Co., 215-109; 244 NW 696

II OBJECTIONS LIMITED IN TIME

No annotations in this volume

III INCOMPETENCY, IRRELEVANCY, OR IMMATERIALITY

Exclusion on trial for incompetency. A deposition is properly excluded for incompetency (and hearsay) when offered in evidence on the trial, when it appears from the deposition itself that the testimony of the witness is based wholly on unidentified hospital records, the correctness and verity of which the witness has no personal knowledge.

Foy v Ins. Co., 220-628; 263 NW 14

IV ADMISSIBILITY

"Letters rogatory" as unallowable substitute. The courts of a foreign state have no jurisdiction to issue, and the district courts of this state have no jurisdiction to honor, so-called "letters rogatory" which are such in name only and not in substance, and which are clearly in evasion of the statutes of the state from which issued, which statutes prescribe the procedure to be followed by the courts of said state and by litigants therein desiring the testimony of witnesses residing in a foreign state.

Magdanz v Dist. Court, 222-456; 269 NW 498; 108 ALR 377

- II STIPULATIONS FOR CHANGE
- III COUNTY AS PARTY
- IV JUDGE AS PARTY OR INTERESTED
- V PREJUDICE OF INHABITANTS
- VI UNDUE INFLUENCE OF PARTY OR ATTORNEY
- VII DISCRETION TO GRANT OR REFUSE

I CHANGE OF VENUE IN GENERAL

Fraud in inception of contract—right to amend answer. A defendant who bases a motion for change of venue to the county of his residence on an answer alleging fraud in the inception of the contract sued on may amend such answer, if he deems it defective, and thereafter stand on the amended answer as a basis for the change of venue.

Wright v Thompson, 209-1133; 229 NW 765

Impairment of contract. A legislative change in the venue of an action may validly be applied to an existing contract.

Grain Belt Ins. v Gentry, 208-21; 222 NW 855

Certiorari—when writ lies—suing state appeal board. Certiorari will not lie to review the action of the trial court in overruling a motion by the state appeal board for a change of venue of a trial questioning a decision of such board.

State Board v Dist. Court, 225-296; 280 NW 525

Time of trial—delay by criminal defendant. One convicted of larceny, who, on appeal is granted a reversal, and who, then, each time thereafter as his case is assigned for retrial, delays trial on the merits by dilatory moves such as request for rehearing and change of venue, may not complain that he has been denied a speedy trial as provided by law, and certiorari will not lie to require dismissal of the indictment.

Ferguson v Bechly, 224-1049; 277 NW 755

II STIPULATIONS FOR CHANGE

No annotations in this volume

III COUNTY AS PARTY

No annotations in this volume

IV JUDGE AS PARTY OR INTERESTED

Nondisqualifying interest of judge. A judge of the district court does not, by signing a petition to a city council for an election to vote on the proposition whether the city shall erect a specified public utility plant, thereby disqualify himself from fully presiding over litigation questioning the legal sufficiency of said petition.

Piuser v Sioux City, 220-308; 262 NW 551; 100 ALR 1298

V PREJUDICE OF INHABITANTS

No annotations in this volume

VI UNDUE INFLUENCE OF PARTY OR ATTORNEY

Influence of defendant—continuance. An application by plaintiff for a change of venue made after a continuance of the action over a term, on the ground of the undue influence of the defendant, is properly overruled when plaintiff makes no showing that said ground was unknown to him prior to the continuance.

Jackovach v Yocom, 212-914; 237 NW 444; 76 ALR 551

VII DISCRETION TO GRANT OR REFUSE

Appealable orders. While direct and immediate appeal will not lie from an order denying a change of venue, yet such order is reviewable on appeal from a subsequent order refusing to strike an improperly joined cause of action.

Smith v Morrison, 203-245; 212 NW 567

11411 Fraud in written contract.

Nonapplicability of statute. This section has no application to an action brought against a stockholder of a corporation on his stock subscription which contains no agreement as to the place of payment.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Sole basis for change. The sworn answer is the sole basis for a change of venue in an action on a contract in the county of performance, but not the county of defendant's residence.

Sell v Mershon, 202-627; 210 NW 758

Nondiscretion of court. In an action on a contract in the county of performance, but not of the defendant's residence, the filing of a sworn answer which pleads fraud in the inception of the contract, with prayer for change of venue, leaves the court no discretion to refuse the change.

Sell v Mershon, 202-627; 210 NW 758

Arbitrary right. A defendant sued on a written contract in a county which is the county of performance, but which is not the county of defendant's residence, is arbitrarily entitled to a change of venue when he files, (1) a sworn answer properly alleging fraud in the inception of the contract as a complete defense, and (2) the bond required by statute.

Eulberg v Cooper, 218-82; 254 NW 48

Sufficiency of pleading. The technical sufficiency of a sworn answer as a pleading of fraud as a basis for a change of venue will not be passed upon on certiorari, in the absence of any attack thereon in the district court.

Sell v Mershon, 202-627; 210 NW 758

Fraud — sufficiency of allegation. A sworn answer, containing substantially all the fact allegations necessary to constitute fraud in the inception of a contract, furnishes adequate basis for an order for change of venue to the county of defendant's residence, unless the absence of the omitted allegations is specifically called to the attention of the trial court by appropriate pleading.

Iowa Corp. v Allen, 217-1112; 253 NW 43

Right to amend answer. A defendant who bases a motion for change of venue to the county of his residence on an answer alleging fraud in the inception of the contract sued on, may amend such answer, if he deems it defective, and thereafter stand on the amended answer as a basis for the change of venue.

Wright v Thompson, 209-1133; 229 NW 765

Allowable amendment. An answer showing fraud in the inception of a contract constituting a complete defense to the contract, filed as a basis for a motion for a change of venue, does not necessarily have to be complete in itself, but may be amended and the motion renewed on the basis of the answer and amendment thereto.

Iowa Corp. v Sawyer, 210-43; 230 NW 409

Allegation of damages. An answer showing fraud in the inception of a contract, filed as a basis for a motion for a change of venue, sufficiently shows the damages resulting from the fraud when it alleges that said fraud deprived defendant of the only consideration which induced him to execute the obligation sued on.

Iowa Corp. v Sawyer, 210-43; 230 NW 409

Fraud in contract. An action to quiet title under a trust deed, brought in a county in which part of the land is situated, is not transferable to the county of defendant's residence on the plea of fraud in the execution of the deed, when the deed is silent as to the county in which the trustee-grantee shall perform the trust agreements.

McEvoy v Cooper, 208-649; 226 NW 13

11412 Expense and attorney fees.

Amount in controversy—unallowable computation. Where the court, on separate applications in the same case, orders separate changes of venue, and separately adjudges in favor of each party an allowance for expense and attorney fees for attending in the wrong county, the orders are not appealable simply because the sum total of the separate allowances is over $100.

In re Mann, 211-85; 232 NW 839

11413 Bond.

Bond essential. The right to a change of venue on the plea of fraud in the contract sued on is conditioned on the filing of a cost bond by the movant.

McEvoy v Cooper, 208-649; 226 NW 13

Time of filing not jurisdictional. Where a change of venue is sought by a nonresident because of fraud in the inception of the contract sued on, the time of filing the bond required by this section is not jurisdictional. Bond filed before any ruling on motion to dismiss the application is timely in the absence of prejudice.

Iowa Corp. v Sawyer, 210-43; 230 NW 409

11414 Application for change.

Continuance — effect. An application by plaintiff for a change of venue made after a continuance of the action over a term, on the ground of the undue influence of the defendant, is properly overruled when plaintiff makes no showing that said ground was unknown to him prior to the continuance.

Jackovach v Yocom, 212-914; 237 NW 444; 76 ALR 551

TRIAL AND JUDGMENT

11426 Issues.

ANALYSIS

I ISSUES IN GENERAL
II VOLUNTARY ISSUES
III STIPULATIONS

Equitable issues. See under §10947
Estoppel to deny issue. See under §11201 (III)
Instructions on voluntary issues. See under §11493 (II)
Legally insufficient pleading treated as sufficient. See under §12827
Voluntary or nonpaper issues—Instructions. See under §11493

I ISSUES IN GENERAL

Dismissal of issue—striking evidence. The court should not permit testimony bearing on a dismissed issue to remain in the record when it has no material bearing on any remaining issue.

In re Muhr, 218-867; 256 NW 305

Claim of undue submission of issues. A preliminary recital in the language of an unquestioned pleading of an issue of negligence in maintaining a sidewalk, which embraces statements of the method by which and the source from which the alleged nuisance was created on the walk, reveals no error when the definite legal issue was alone actually submitted to the jury.

Fosselman v Dubuque, 211-1213; 233 NW 491

Alleging quantum meruit and proving express contract. An allegation of quantum meruit cannot be supported by proof of an express contract.

Wayman v Cherokee, 208-905; 225 NW 950

Undue influence—submission of dual issues. Testimony which supports the issue of undue influence necessarily has material bearing on the supported issue of the testamentary capacity of an aged and infirm person, but both issues are properly submitted, on supporting testimony.

Brogan v Lynch, 204-260; 214 NW 514

Will contests—contract of settlement—fraud and undue influence. In action to set aside contract for settlement of will contest, representations that “lawyers would get all the property” and that devisee “did not need a lawyer” were not fraudulent representations, and failure of court to submit issue of undue influence and constructive fraud was not error under the evidence.

Smith v Smith, (NOR); 230 NW 401

Unconscionable action with indefinite pleading. A court of equity will not reject testimony before it showing the unconscionable nature of the transaction upon which action is brought (i. e., that a contract is pyramided with unconscionable usury), simply because the pleadings are general and indefinite, and do not specifically plead such usury. Especially is this true when the parties have treated the pleadings as all-sufficient.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

Submitting doubtful issue to jury. In a damage action for fraud, the submission to the jury of an issue as to a repurchase contract held not error under the pleadings and tactics of the parties.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

Matters concluded—issue raised by rejected amendment. An application to amend the petition offered after submission of the case, tho overruled by the court, makes the issue raised by the amendment res judicata when the identical issue is raised in a subsequent action, especially when no appeal is taken from the ruling on such application.

Bagley v Bates, 223-836; 273 NW 924

Mutual construction in re issues. It is quite conclusive that an issue was raised by the pleadings when the parties and the court proceed on that theory in the trial court.

Ia.-D. M. Bk. v Lewis, 215-654; 246 NW 597

Contradicting trial theory. After an action by a widow of a deceased partner to determine her dower interest in her husband's partnership interest is fully tried on the mutual theory of determining the amount and adjudging such amount as a trust against the entire property of the partnership, it is too late for the surviving partners to insist that the widow should take her interest in kind.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Appeal theory not presented to lower court. A contention, on appeal, that a plaintiff son seeking to establish his title in his father's property by reason of an oral contract with the father, inferentially admitted his father's title in his pleadings and is bound thereby, will not be considered on appeal when such was not the theory upon which the case was tried in the lower court.

Blezek v Blezek, 226-237; 284 NW 180

Agency revocation—nonpleaded issues. In an action for real estate commission, contentions as to revocation of the agency arising from disposal of the subject matter of the agency and mental incapacity and death of one of the joint principals before the sale by the agent, will not be considered on appeal when the pleadings show no issue thereon but the action is on a contract allegedly personally made with the defendant.

Maher v Breen, 224-8; 276 NW 52

Writing and publication—when an issue. In a libel action, mere testimony that a witness has no recollection of the writing or publication of a letter does not raise an issue as to the fact of writing, but when his testimony, which must be construed as an entirety, shows a denial thereof, a court cannot as a matter of law establish the writing and publication.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Quitclaim from spendthrift trust beneficiary. The rights of a grantee under a quitclaim deed from a spendthrift trust beneficiary cannot be determined until the trust is terminated, and cannot be litigated in an action between the trustees and grantee where the rights between the grantee and beneficiary are not issues.

Beemer v Challas, 224-411; 276 NW 60

Teachers—pension—employment prerequisite. A public school teacher, after 30 years service and while lacking only six months more service to be entitled to a pension, cannot mandamus the school board to compel her re-employment, and, such re-employment being the relief sought, a court may not go outside the pleaded issues and grant such a pension as the school board may have given.

Driver v School Dist., 224-393; 276 NW 37

Nonreviewable fact question. On appeal from an order overruling a motion to strike on ground that there was misjoinder of a principal corporation and its subsidiary, where question to be determined was whether the corporate entity of the subsidiary could be disregarded because it was so organized, controlled, and conducted as to make it a mere instrumentality of the principal corporation, which question being one of fact determinable only after a hearing of the evidence, the supreme court would not decide the matter on basis of the pleadings.

Wade v Broadcasting Co., 227-427; 288 NW 441

Denial of incorporation—insufficiency. A simple denial by a defendant that he has knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief whether plaintiff is a corporation presents no issue as to the incorporation of plaintiff.

Winterset Bank v Hams, 211-1226; 233 NW 749

II VOLUNTARY ISSUES

Voluntary nonpaper issues. In an action to recover quantum meruit for the use of machinery, the court, in submitting defendant's nonpaper issue (acquiesced in by plaintiff) whether the use was under a contract for an agreed rental entered into with plaintiff's employee, must submit the question of the authority of the employee to enter into such a contract, there being evidence of the lack of such authority.

Des M. Pav. v Lincoln Co., 201-502; 207 NW 563

Voluntary issues—trial—effect. Principle reaffirmed that parties who voluntarily litigate issues which are not within the pleadings, are bound thereby.

Woodall v Woodall, 204-423; 214 NW 483

Andrew v Miller, 216-1378; 250 NW 711

Peterson v Bank, 219-699; 259 NW 199

Insufficient basis. Parties may not be held to have voluntarily litigated a nonpleaded issue—e. g., waiver—because of testimony which was admissible on the written issues.

Durr v Park Co., 205-279; 218 NW 54

Litigation of issue without plea. A party who, without objection, permits to be litigated and submitted to the jury the issue whether the adverse party relied on a pleaded estoppel may not thereafter predicate error on the absence of any formal plea of reliance.

Birmingham Sav. Bank v Keller, 205-271; 215 NW 649; 217 NW 874

Disposition of property. An adjudication of property interests and a disposition of the household goods in a divorce action, is proper, there being a prayer by both parties for general equitable relief, and the issue, moreover, being voluntarily litigated.

Garside v Garside, 208-534; 224 NW 586

III STIPULATIONS

Written stipulation for decree—effect. The signing by a plaintiff and a defendant in an action for separate maintenance of an agreement which specifies the amount and terms of such maintenance and provides for the entry of decree in accordance therewith, and the filing of such stipulation in the action, constitute an appearance by the defendant to said action.

Kalde v Kalde, 207-121; 222 NW 351

Stipulation of fact may act as amendment. A duly signed stipulation as to the ultimate facts in a case may become, in legal effect, an amendment to the petition in the case for the purpose of a subsequently interposed motion to dismiss the petition.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

Submission without action—taxation of costs. When the issues in a controversy are made up by pleadings and the pleadings then abandoned and the matter submitted to the court on a stipulation of fact, the costs are properly taxed against the wholly unsuccessful party.

Chambers v Bank, 218-63; 254 NW 309

III STIPULATIONS—concluded

Motion to dismiss equitable action—effect of stipulated evidence. The principle that a motion to dismiss the petition in an equitable action (formerly denominated a demurrer) necessarily admits the truth of the well-pleaded allegations of the petition, may be materially modified or obviated by evidence which the parties stipulate into the record for the purpose of said motion.

Panther v Department, 211-868; 234 NW 560

Stipulation of fact—conclusiveness. A stipulation of facts upon which a cause is submitted is conclusive on both parties. In other words, no fact not embraced in the stipulation can be considered on appeal.

Andrew v Bank, 209-277; 227 NW 899

Wage recovery dependent on reformation. In a law action for wages, allegedly due an employee under contract, where parties stipulate that the employ ee shall not recover such wages if the defendant prevails on his cross petition for reformation, transferred to equity on motion, the employee may not thereafter deny the court's right to try the reformation issue and is bound by the decree if not contrary to the evidence.

Koch v Abramson, 223-1356; 275 NW 58

Withdrawing after submission of cause. Parties entering into a stipulation before trial, having knowledge or means of knowledge of its contents, may not withdraw part of the stipulated facts long after submission of the cause.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-429; 275 NW 98

Enforceability. The court will enforce a duly filed stipulation by the parties to an action of forcible entry and detainer to the effect that if defendant fails to comply with specified conditions judgment shall be entered against defendant for the possession of said premises.

Peak v Mulvaney, 215-1400; 245 NW 748

Maintenance of status quo—effect. A stipulation entered into by an insured and insurer relative to the employment of attorneys by the insurer to defend an action brought against the insured by a third party, and designed to maintain the status quo of the stipulating parties, cannot be deemed to have any bearing on a waiver of a policy provision already effected by the insurer.

Venz v Ins. Assn., 217-662; 251 NW 27

Settlement of claim—adding additional burden. An unambiguous written stipulation and agreement, duly filed in a will contest, providing in effect that defendant will pay, and plaintiff will accept, a named sum of money in full settlement of any and all claim which plaintiff may have against the estate cannot be added to by proof of an oral contemporaneous agreement to the effect that defendant would also execute a will devising and bequeathing all his property to plaintiff.

In re Simplot, 215-578; 246 NW 396

Trial by jury—waiver by stipulation. A written agreement or stipulation, duly signed and filed by opposing attorneys in a law action and approved of record by the court, agreeing to waive a jury and to try the action to the court is, in the absence of fraud or proof that an attorney had no authority so to agree, binding on the parties to the action for at least one trial to the court, even tho, after the stipulation was entered into, the pleadings be amended and the cause be continued to a later term.

Shores Co. v Iowa Co., 222-347; 268 NW 581; 106 ALR 198

11427 Of fact and of law.

Answer. See under §11114
Demurrer. See under §11141
Petition. See under §11111
Reply. See under §11156

Withdrawal—effect on testimony introduced. Upon the withdrawal by the court of an issue, testimony which was primarily introduced on such issue is properly left in the record when it bears on the weight and credibility of the testimony of witnesses.

Birmingham Sav. Bank v Keller, 205-271; 215 NW 649; 217 NW 874

11428 "Trial" defined.

Law and equity—consolidation—mandatory order of trial. When litigants submit to the court, for trial by the court, both a law action and an equitable action, the court is under duty to first try the equitable issues if they be such as to dispose of both cases.

Holman v Wahner, 221-1318; 268 NW 168

Definition of "hearing". A "hearing" is the trial of an issue, including the introduction of evidence, the arguments, the consideration by the court, and the final decree and order.

Equitable v McNamara, 224-859; 278 NW 910

Trial to court. See under §§11435, 11581
Waiver of jury. See under §§11519, 11581

I RIGHT TO JURY

Trial by court—submissions contrasted. The submission of a pending law action and of the pleadings and stipulations of fact filed therein, for trial by the court without a jury, cannot be deemed a submission under and subject to the provisions of Ch 547, C., '35, relating to the submission of controversies without action.

Rogers v Davis, 223-373; 272 NW 539

Right to trial by jury—default as jury waiver. Failure to appear for trial is a waiver of the right to trial by jury and a consent to trial by the court.

Vaux v Hensal, 224-1055; 277 NW 718

Jury to try fact issues. Issues of fact in a law action are for the determination of the jury unless the jury be waived.

Cooper v Gazette Co., 226-737; 285 NW 147

Reasonable minds differing as to conclusions. If reasonable men may differ as to conclusions drawn from the evidence, the question is one for the jury.

Yale v Hanson, 227-813; 288 NW 905

Taking case from jury—conflicting evidence. The court manifestly has no right to direct a verdict on an issue which is, under the evidence, a question for the jury.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229

Municipal court jury trial. Where plaintiff requested jury trial and later withdrew such request, municipal court's refusal to allow defendant trial by jury was error.

Metier v Brewer, (NOR); 205 NW 734

Conflict of evidence. On a plea in abatement in an action on a note which matures when a certain farm is sold, as "per contract" (which was oral), a fair conflict of testimony as to the terms of such contract and when such provision was inserted in the note necessarily presents a jury question.

Anderson v Foglesong, 201-481; 207 NW 562

Warranty of stock remedy—proximate cause of death. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether the feeding of a so-called hog remedy to hogs was the proximate cause of their death.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

Waiver of jury by agreement of attorneys—validity. A written agreement or stipulation, duly signed and filed by opposing attorneys in a law action and approved of record by the court, agreeing to waive a jury and to try the action to the court is, in the absence of fraud or proof that an attorney had no authority so to agree, binding on the parties to the action for at least one trial to the court, even tho, after the stipulation was entered into, the pleadings be amended and the cause be continued to a later term.

Shores Co. v Chemical Co., 222-347; 268 NW 581; 106 ALR 198

Evidence sufficiency for jury question. Where evidence was sufficient to take a case to the jury on the question of whether the injury of the insured came within the terms of his policy, and it was submitted under proper instructions, there was no error in overruling a motion for new trial made on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence.

Dykes v Washington Co., 226-771; 285 NW 201

Riding or driving motor vehicle. In an action on an insurance policy, there was sufficient evidence for a jury question on whether an accident came within terms of the policy insuring against injuries received in an accident of a vehicle in which the insured was riding or driving, when it was shown that the car started moving down a grade, and the insured was thrown to the ground from a position partly in the car and partly on the running board while attempting to stop the car.

Dykes v Washington Co., 226-771; 285 NW 201

II NONRIGHT TO JURY

Instructions—unsupported issue. Unsupported issues must not be submitted to the jury.

Veith v Cassidy, 201-376; 207 NW 328

Description of property. A jury must not be permitted to pass upon the sufficiency of a description of mortgaged chattels which is sufficient as a matter of law. So held where the description revealed the particular kind of cattle, their age, average weight, the particular brand thereon, the particular farm where kept, and the particular possessor.

Wertheimer v Parsons, 209-1241; 229 NW 829

Insane persons—inquisitions—special proceeding—no jury. An appeal to the district court from the finding of the county insanity commission is a special proceeding, and, since the legislature did not provide for a jury trial, the issue is triable to the court.

In re Brewer, 224-773; 276 NW 766

Application for order in probate. Applications for orders in probate which necessitate a construction of a will have no place on the jury calendar, and reversible error results from a refusal to exclude them from such calendar on application of an interested litigant.

In re Watters, 201-884; 208 NW 281

Objections in probate—no jury. The probate court having jurisdiction to compel executrix to account for all assets, and the burden to sustain her accounts being on executrix, objections to her accounts raising the issue of ownership of certain securities are triable in probate without a jury.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

III REVIEW ON APPEAL

Verdicts—conclusiveness. Where question of fact as to negligence was properly submitted to jury, the supreme court cannot interfere with findings, no matter what its views might be if it were a trier of facts.

Usher v Stafford, 227-443; 288 NW 432

Conflicting evidence—conclusive on appeal. Where there is a conflict in evidence, the question is for jury, and supreme court will not disturb case.

Union Co. v Boyce, (NOR); 238 NW 471

Questions of fact—jury's verdict final. When instructions are proper and the question is one of fact for the jury, its verdict is final and the judgment of the supreme court cannot be substituted for that of the jury.

Ballard v Ballard, 226-699; 285 NW 165

Inferences drawn from record. The trier of facts is entitled to draw such legitimate inferences as the record will warrant.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Verdicts—conflicting evidence—conclusiveness. Where there is conflicting evidence, verdict and judgment thereon constitute a finality in absence of any error of the trial court in rulings on the evidence.

Higgins v Haagensen, (NOR); 220 NW 38

Fact findings of trial court—conclusiveness. The findings of the trial court, on supporting testimony, as to the fact bearing on a question of exemptions are conclusive on the appellate court.

Staton v Vernon, 209-1123; 229 NW 763; 67 ALR 1200

Direction of verdict—most favorable view. In reviewing the action of the trial court in overruling the defendant's motion for a directed verdict, the supreme court must consider the evidence, determining, not what the facts were, but what the jury was warranted in finding them to be, viewing the record in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Supreme court not trier of facts. The supreme court may not sit as a trier of fact and substitute its judgment as to the amount of damages to be awarded, for the judgment of the jury.

Stoner v Hy. Comm., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Excessiveness indicating passion and prejudice. Unless a verdict is so excessive as to indicate clearly passion and prejudice on the part of the jury, it should not be disturbed.

Stoner v Hy. Comm., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Lump sum verdict on several counts—waiver. The defendant may not predicate error on the fact that the jury returned a lump sum as the amount allowed on different counts, when he failed to avail himself of special interrogatories to the jury, and sought to accomplish the same object by requested instructions which embodied certain findings, but failed to submit his substitute for interrogatories to the opposing attorneys before argument.

Ransom v McDermott, 215-594; 246 NW 266

Undetermined issue in equity. In appeals in equity, the appellate court aims to pass upon the issues insofar only as will be necessary to a final determination, and will, especially on appropriate application, formally withdraw from adjudication any undetermined issue.

Goode v Express Co., 205-297; 215 NW 621

Argument ignoring adjudication. A cause will be summarily affirmed on appeal when the record prima facie shows a conclusively established plea of former adjudication, and appellant sees fit in his argument to ignore such condition of the record.

Franquemont v Munn, 208-528; 224 NW 39

Verdicts on conflicting evidence—conclusive. A jury verdict on competent, but conflicting testimony, relative to the consideration—if any—for a chattel mortgage, is conclusive on the appellate court.

McDonald v Webb, 222-1402; 271 NW 521

Speeding in residence district—sufficiency of evidence—jury question. Evidence that accident occurred on main street of town about four or five blocks from the business district, that defendant was driving 50 miles per hour, that there were a number of dwellings on both sides of the street, and that defendant had passed a sign which read, "Slow down, speed limit 25 miles per hour", was sufficient to raise jury question on issue of whether car was being driven in a residence district in excess of 25 miles per hour.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Finding as to proximate cause conclusive on court. A finding by the jury, on supporting testimony, that the negligence of one of two alleged joint tort-feasors was the sole proximate cause of the injury in question is necessarily conclusive on the court.

Hanna v Central Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

Female jurors—no presumption of prejudice. Contention that a fair trial was not obtained on account of female jurors, a majority of which were on the jury, having an inborn prejudice against a woman accused of keeping a house of ill fame, denied because, in absence of a contrary showing, jurors regardless of sex are presumed to follow instructions and determine guilt upon the evidence.

State v Hathaway, 224-478; 276 NW 207

Equitable and law issues in probate—appellate practice. In appeals involving claims in probate, frequent practice of supreme court has been to review equitable issues by trial de novo, while considering alleged errors assigned in the law action.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Testamentary capacity—incapacity not presumed. One under guardianship is not necessarily incompetent to make a will, for instance, as to a drunkard under guardianship, incapacity is not presumed. Evidence failed to establish that testator was intoxicated when he made his will, and his competency, being a fact question when decided in his favor by the court after waiver of a jury, will not be disturbed on appeal.

In re Willer, 225-606; 281 NW 155

Findings on conflicting evidence. Where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from undisputed facts and circumstances, the drawing of any one of such inferences by the court in a trial without a jury is a final finding which will not be disturbed on appeal.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

Conflicting evidence. In an action against street railway for injury to passenger in being thrown to the floor of car, the supreme court is not concerned with the question whether plaintiff got up from seat before car started, where there is a dispute in the testimony on that point, since such question is for the jury.

Havens v Railway, (NOR); 207 NW 677; 32 NCCA 680

Conflicting evidence. Conflicting testimony on the issue whether a tenant had waived his right to certain refrigerating room, as called for by the lease, necessarily generates a jury question, and the verdict thereon is a finality.

Rocho Bros. v Dairy, 204-391; 214 NW 685

Injunction violated—reopening case. After the court had announced its opinion and permitted cross-examination of the defendants as a preliminary step to the final determination of the punishment to be imposed upon them, it had the discretion, in view of the circumstances, to reopen the case.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Disputed fact questions as to value. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire ground for highway purposes, the right of the jury to decide disputed fact questions as to value will not be interfered with by the supreme court, if there is evidence upon which the jury could reach the verdict it did reach.

Stoner v Hy. Comm., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Verdict not excessive for ground and ornamental trees. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire a strip of ground for highway purposes 17 feet wide on each side of an existing highway which divided an 80 acre farm, where the land appropriated comprised 1.2 acres and included 19 trees in front of plaintiff's home, some of them being very large, hardwood, slow growing, ornamental trees, planted in connection with carefully planned landscaping, held, verdict of $2,000 was not excessive.

Stoner v Hy. Comm., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Finding of duplication in claims. Since appellant-claimant failed to challenge finding of trial court that two claims against a decedent's estate based on a note and a loan were a duplication, the sufficiency of other grounds of judgment disallowing claim for the loan was immaterial.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Objections to administrator's final report. Trial court's ruling on objection to administrator's final report will not be disturbed on appeal where fact question was involved, as supreme court would not substitute its judgment for that of court below.

In re Windhorst, 227-808; 288 NW 892

IV PARTICULAR JURY QUESTIONS

Reasonable minds reaching different conclusions. Where reasonable minds may reach different conclusions from the facts presented, the case is one for the jury.

Short v Powell, 228- ; 291 NW 406

Jury's judgment controls on disputed facts. The court cannot substitute its judgment for that of the jury when disputed facts are involved.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

Weight of evidence for jury—duty of court. The weight of the evidence is for jury, and the duty of court is to carefully instruct jury so as to furnish them a guide insofar as possible in attempting to arrive at truth.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Law question submitted to jury. No prejudice can result when court submits to the jury a law question upon which the court could well have ruled adversely to complainant as a matter of law.

Central B. & T. Co. v Squires & Co., 225-416; 280 NW 594

Taking case from jury—scintilla evidence rule. In this state a mere scintilla of evidence will not raise a jury question and the trial court will be upheld in directing a verdict where, if the case were submitted and a verdict returned against the moving party, it would be the trial court's duty to set it aside.

Conflict of testimony. A conflict of testimony in a law action on a material issue necessarily generates a jury question.

Percival Co. v Sea, 207-245; 222 NW 886

Harmless error—erroneous submission of unsupported issue. The submission to the jury, in an action for damages, of an unsupported measure of damages constitutes error, but record reviewed and held harmless to the complaining defendant.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 273 NW 169

Improbability of testimony. A jury question may exist even tho material portions of plaintiff's testimony strongly suggest improbability.

Ransom v McDermott, 215-594; 246 NW 266

Agreed issue conclusive. A plaintiff is bound by his concession, in open court and at the close of his evidence, that of several pleaded grounds of negligence a certain one only should be submitted to the jury.

Gorham v Richard, 223-364; 272 NW 512

Acts not constituting submission of issue. It may not be said that an unsustainable or unsustainable allegation of negligence is submitted to the jury because the court briefly, though unfortunately, mentioned such allegation in a preliminary recital of plaintiff's allegations, it appearing that such objectionable ground of recovery was thereafter studiously ignored in the instructions.

Williams v Railway, 205-446; 214 NW 692

Striking allegations (?) or withdrawal of issue (?). It is not proper practice, at the close of all the evidence, to move to strike from the petition unsupported or legally insufficient allegations of negligence. The proper practice is to move to withdraw such issues from the jury.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Taking case from jury—motion for directed verdict. The court, in passing upon a motion to direct a verdict against plaintiff, must assume that plaintiff has already established every material fact which his evidence fairly tends to prove.

Blecher v Schmidt, 211-1063; 235 NW 34

Directed verdict—absence of jurors—effect. When the court sustains a motion for a directed verdict, it is quite immaterial that all the jurors were not present.

Nyswander v Gonser, 218-136; 253 NW 829; 36 NCCA 1

Court's duty in construing evidence. In passing on a defendant's motion for a directed verdict, the court must construe the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff.

Mueller v State Assn., 223-888; 274 NW 106; 113 ALR 1256

Willers v Flanley Co., 224-409; 275 NW 474

Plaintiff's conduct. The presence or absence of contributory negligence is generally a jury question, and two elements are involved, (1) what plaintiff did, and (2) the effect of his action; if either or both of said propositions present uncertainty, there is a jury question.

Riggs v Pan-American Co., 225-1051; 283 NW 250

One conclusion by all reasonable men. Ordinarily the questions of proximate cause and contributory negligence are matters for the jury, and it is only where the facts are such, that all reasonable men must draw the same conclusion, that these questions become of law for the court.

Gowing v Field Co., 225-729; 281 NW 281

Contributory negligence—jury or law question. Contributory negligence is ordinarily for the jury, but it becomes a question of law only when reasonable minds can come to but one conclusion from facts and circumstances.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

Veracity of witnesses. In reviewing on appeal an action involving an alleged fraudulent transaction, the appellate court must of necessity rely quite largely on the judgment of the trial court as to the veracity of witnesses, especially as to the values of real estate.

Bates v Zehnpfennig, 220-164; 262 NW 141

Contradicting self and impeachment. The fact that a witness was impeached or, being mentally slow and confused, makes statements on cross-examination which might be construed as contradictory, instead of being sufficient to take the case from the jury, on the contrary, presents a jury question.

Russell v Leschensky, 224-334; 276 NW 608

Testamentary capacity. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue of mental competency to execute a will.

Diesing v Spencer, 221-1143; 266 NW 567

Testamentary capacity—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to make a jury question on the issue of testamentary capacity.

Green v Ellsworth, 221-1098; 267 NW 714

Testamentary capacity. A showing of old age, deafness, forgetfulness, inability to understand, moroseness, shyness, exclusiveness, lessened ability to transact business, and a general slowing down of the mental processes to a degree common with the aged does not necessarily present a jury question on the issue of testamentary capacity.

In re Paczoch, 202-849; 211 NW 500

Testator's physical disabilities—lack of education. In an action to contest a will under which a son receives eight times as much property as the children of a deceased son and the evidence is disputed as to whether testator had sufficient understanding of English that when will was read over to her in English, unexplained, she fully understood its contents, a jury question is presented.

In re Younggren's Estate, 226-1377; 286 NW 467

Will contests—contract of settlement—fraud and undue influence. In action to set aside contract for settlement of will contest, representations that "lawyers would get all the property" and that devisee "did not need a lawyer" were not fraudulent representations, and failure of court to submit issue of undue influence and constructive fraud was not error under the evidence.

Smith v Smith, (NOR); 230 NW 401

Subscribing witnesses—sufficiency of request to sign. A will, to be valid, must be witnessed at the request of testator; however, the request need not be spoken but may be by acquiescence, by act or motion, or even by his silence when he knows that the witnesses are signing, though at the request of another, and he makes no objections, but the question of due execution should be left to the jury when it develops from testimony that one witness signed at the request of a beneficiary and that testator may not have, in any manner, requested the witnesses to sign.

Burgan v Kinnick, 225-804; 281 NW 734

Claims against estate—belated filing. While establishing a probate claim is a law proceeding, the determination of the existence of peculiar circumstances relieving the failure to file a probate claim within the statutory period is an equitable proceeding.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Probate claim for services—express contract. In probate action to establish claim against estate based on express contract, where evidence that claimant acted as housekeeper, assisted with clerical work, and performed other duties about the farm for decedent, pursuant to his agreement to pay her a small amount sufficient to cover cost of her clothing and other personal expenses, and in addition thereto to compensate her out of his estate at his decease in such amount as would be in excess of any amount she could earn teaching school, a jury question was presented as to the existence of an enforceable contract and as to its nature.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Services rendered to decedent—evidence of agreement admissible—jury question. In probate action where a claimant seeks to recover for services rendered to decedent under an express contract, the performance of such services must have been induced by a proposal and must have been in accordance therewith. Testimony by a witness to a conversation with decedent, who stated that he intended to see that claimant was properly cared for, that he would give her spending money (the little she would need), and at the end of his life he would leave her a home, was admissible and proper evidence for the jury to consider on question of whether or not there was any such arrangement or agreement. What the parties agreed to must be determined by the jury.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Probate claim—payment specially pleaded—burden of proof—jury question. In probate action to establish claim for services rendered to decedent under an express agreement, where defendant specially pleaded a defense of payment as a part of a different contract of employment, the burden rested upon defendant to establish such different contract, including payment, and, if evidence justified, it was the duty of the court to submit the issue to the jury, but, where the defendant's evidence is also consistent with and does not negative plaintiff's claim as to her express contract, it is admissible and proper to be considered by the jury as tending to show that the present claim was an afterthought, or that claimant had failed under suitable circumstances to advance the demand now relied upon, and as tending to support defendant's theory of the nature of her employment. However, such evidence failed to establish the specially pleaded defense of payment, and the court's failure to submit the question of payment to the jury was not erroneous.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Mental competency and elements of gift. In a replevin action by executor against decedent's sister to recover property held under claim of gift inter vivos from decedent, where clear, cogent, definite, and convincing evidence conclusively established mental competency and all the essential elements of a completed gift inter vivos appear without conflict, no jury question is presented.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 847

Bank cashier—authority to sell realty. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether the cashier of a savings bank had been given actual authority by the board of directors to sell certain real estate belonging to the bank.

Chismore v Bank, 221-1256; 268 NW 137

Reliance on notes by bank. Evidence held to show conclusively that a bank relied on promissory notes given to it in order to prevent an impairment of capital.

Farmers Bank v Bunge, 211-1357; 231 NW 651

Execution of contract—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held sufficient to present a jury question on the issue whether bank directors had entered into an agreement as to what each, as between themselves, should pay on a promissory note given for the benefit of the bank.

Adamson v McKeon, 208-949; 225 NW 414; 65 ALR 817

Bank collections—negligence—measure of damages. The measure of damages consequent on the negligent failure of a collecting bank to notify the payee of deposited checks of their nonpayment, is not, prima facie, the amount of the checks, but such sum or amount as the payee-plaintiff may be able to prove to a reasonable degree of probability he has lost because he was not promptly notified of the nonpayment—not exceeding the amount of said checks. Substantial but conflicting testimony reviewed and held to present a jury question.

Schooler Motor Co. v Trust Co., 216-1147; 247 NW 628; 38 NCCA 361

Conversion of stock. Evidence held to present jury question on the issue whether corporate stock alleged to have been converted was worthless, whether a bank cashier acted individually or on behalf of the bank, and whether the bank received any funds in the transaction in question.

Butterworth v Bank, 211-1327; 236 NW 83

Holdership in due course. Evidence fairly tending to negative holdership in due course of a negotiable promissory note presents a jury question, especially when not all of the officers of the plaintiff (a bank) testify, and negative knowledge of the pleaded fraud.

State Bank v Behm, 202-192; 209 NW 523

Holdership in due course. Holdership in due course of a negotiable promissory note as collateral security for a pre-existing debt is not shown as a matter of law by testimony which, besides being in part impeached, is uncertain as to how, when, and under what circumstances the note was acquired and when the indorsement was made; and especially is this true when the holdership in due course bears the appearance of being an afterthought, born subsequent to the filing of the petition.

Ottumwa Bk. v Starns, 202-412; 210 NW 455

Rights on indorsement—holdership in due course. The court has no right to say that the holder of a negotiable note is a holder in due course and to direct a verdict accordingly when conflicting inferences may be drawn from the facts bearing on such holdership.

Pierce v Lichtenstein, 214-315; 242 NW 59

Renewal of note—breach of agreement—waiver. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a surety signed a renewal note with knowledge that the payee had violated an agreement to apply certain moneys on the preceding note.

Randolph Bk. v Osborn, 207-729; 223 NW 493

Fraud—renewal with knowledge. Evidence reviewed, on the issue whether a maker of fraudulently procured promissory notes renewed them at a time when he had knowledge of the fraud, or in reason ought to have had such knowledge, and held to present a jury question.

Larson v Bank, 202-333; 208 NW 726

Option conditioned on payment of note—conditional delivery—jury question. With the evidence in conflict, a jury question is generated as to whether or not the delivery of a note was conditional when it was given at the time of the execution of a farm lease which contained an option to purchase the farm on condition that the note should be paid.

Walker v Todd, 225-276; 280 NW 512

Action on note. A jury question is necessarily generated when the testimony is such as to justify the jury in finding in favor of a party on his plea of want of consideration for, and conditional delivery of, a promissory note, and against the opposite party on his plea of waiver.

Hill v May, 205-948; 218 NW 946

Fraudulent representations. Competent evidence of fraud in the execution of a lease and promissory notes, tho not free from inconsistencies, and contradicted in part, generates a jury question.

Ottumwa Bk. v Starns, 202-412; 210 NW 455

Blank spaces on note filled in. Testimony that a negotiable promissory note had been delivered without any agreement relative to the filling of a blank therein for the place of payment, and that the holder had filled the blank without any authority from the maker, presents, on the issue of material alteration, a question of law for the court, and not a question of fact for the jury.

Citizens Bank v Martens, 204-1378; 215 NW 754

Agency to receive payment. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether the original payee of a promissory note was the agent of the indorsee to receive payment.

Andrew v Kolsrud, 218-15; 253 NW 913

Nonissue as to signature. When it is practically conceded, under the evidence, that a party did not, himself, sign a promissory note (tho his name is signed thereto), the fact that the record contains an admitted signature of the party imposes no obligation on the court to permit the jury, by a comparison of signatures, to find that the party did, himself, sign the note.

West Chester Bank v Dayton, 217-64; 250 NW 695

Payment of note—burden of proof. Defendants, claiming payment on note which plaintiff denied, had burden to prove such payment by a preponderance of evidence, whether payment was made as partial payment on note or on property purchased, and question was for jury.

Sager v Skinner, (NOR); 229 NW 846

Money loaned—used for mutual benefit—dealing in options. Whether notes sued on represented money furnished by plaintiff to be used by defendants for benefit of both in illegal dealing in margins held for jury.

Hamilton v Wilson, (NOR); 240 NW 685

Actions on policies—accident as jury question. Evidence reviewed and held properly to present a jury question on the issue whether an injury was caused by accidental means.

Miser v Trav. Assn., 223-662; 273 NW 155

Death—"immediate" notice. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a preliminary notice of death, to an insurer, was "immediate," within the meaning of the policy.

Nelson v Acc. Soc., 212-989; 237 NW 341

Injuries resulting from accident complained of. Record held replete with evidence that an insured's injuries and loss of time were caused directly and exclusively by the accident in issue and held to justify a refusal to direct a verdict for insurer on the ground that there was no competent evidence that the injuries were caused by the accident.

Eller v Ins. Co., 226-474; 284 NW 406

Insurance policy—willful deception as to health. Record reviewed on the issue whether an insured had knowingly deceived the insurer in stating his condition of health during the preceding five years, and held to present a jury question.

Parker v Ins. Co., 218-145; 254 NW 31

Avoidance of policy for misrepresentation. On the issue whether a policy of life insurance had been obtained by the insured by means of false and fraudulent representations relative to the prior and present state of health of the insured, record reviewed in detail and held to present a jury question.

Getsinger v Ins. Co., 216-610; 247 NW 260

Insurance—farmer afflicted with arthritis—total disability. Where the insured, a farmer afflicted with arthritis, brings an action on a life insurance policy providing monthly payments for total disability, which was defined as disability preventing insured "from engaging in any occupation or performing any work for compensation of financial value", and where the insured farmer was unable to perform the labor on his farm, but still was able to direct the farming operations of his hired men, it was a jury question whether or not insured was totally and permanently disabled under terms of policy.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 225-1034; 282 NW 781

Osteomyelitis of spine—permanent disability. In an action on a life insurance policy providing against "total and permanent disability", evidence that insured, afflicted with an incurable condition of osteomyelitis of the vertebrae, was able to do a few hours book-keeping, drive an automobile occasionally, and enrolled in the State University for a short time, will not necessarily negative permanent disability but presents a question properly submitted to the jury.

Wood v Ins. Co., 224-179; 277 NW 241

Accidental death—burden of proof. Under a policy providing for additional payment in case of death from accidental means, the beneficiary has burden of showing that insured shot himself accidentally, which need not be proved by direct evidence, but may be proved by proper inferences and presumptions from facts, and the beneficiary is aided in carrying this burden of proof by the presumption that death was not the result of suicide. Such presumption, however, is a rebuttable one and ordinarily a question of fact to be determined by the jury. So where evidence on a fact matter is of such character that reasonable men, in an impartial and fair exercise of their judgment, may honestly reach different conclusions, the question was properly held for the jury.

Mutual Ins. v Hatten, 17 F 2d, 889

Death by accidental means. In a law action by beneficiary to recover for death of insured on a policy containing additional benefits for death resulting from accidental means, the defendant insurer complaining that the court erred in submitting to the jury the question of whether or not plaintiff had successfully carried her burden of proof that death resulted from accidental means, held, there being circumstantial evidence tending to establish that the discharge of a gun was accidental, creating a presumption having probative value in favor of the theory of accident, the question was properly submitted to the jury.

Waddell v Ins. Co., 227-604; 288 NW 643

Presumption against suicidal death. The common law presumption that a death was not a suicide does not necessarily create a jury question, because the presumption may be wholly negated by the attending facts and circumstances.

Warner v Ins. Co., 219-916; 258 NW 75

Application attached to policy—illegibly reduced photo copy. In action on life policies, where defense was based on false representations in application for policy, and it is shown original application is plainly printed in legible letters of fair size, while copy furnished and attached to policy is so reduced in size and so dim or blurred that it can only be read by persons with normal vision by use of a strong magnifying glass, the statute requiring "true copy" of application to be attached to policy is not complied with, and the submission of question to the jury as to legibility under an instruction that a true copy must be readable was not erroneous.

New York Ins. v Miller, 73 F 2d, 350

Evidence of death—presumption—fugitive from justice. Continued and unexplained absence of an insured from his home or usual place of abode for seven years, notwithstanding diligent efforts of relatives and friends to locate him, creates a jury question on the issue of death, even tho the original disappearance was caused by the fact that he was a defaulter in a large amount.

Rodskier v Ins. Co., 216-121; 248 NW 295

Actions on insurance policies—delivery of mortgages. Record held to present a jury question whether mortgages, alleged to have voided a policy of insurance, had been delivered.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 218-559; 255 NW 705

Insurance—soliciting agents—enlarged power. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question whether an insurance company had held out its purported soliciting agent as really having the powers of a recording agent.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 218-720; 253 NW 821

Insurance company's waiver of policy provision. When facts are disputed as to whether insurance company waived policy provisions as to unconditional ownership and as to location where property was to be kept which was later destroyed by fire, such dispute is for the jury.

Buettner v Le Mars Assn., 225-847; 282 NW 733

Taking case from jury—insurance transfer—company knowledge. In an action against an automobile insurance company to collect under the collision clause of a policy after transferring the original policy to another automobile on which a conditional sale was outstanding, a directed verdict is properly refused when fact questions exist as to the company's knowledge of the outstanding conditional sale at time of transfer.

Mougin v Central Assn., 224-1202; 278 NW 336

Circumstantial evidence—theories of equal probability. Circumstantial evidence relative to the loss of a diamond reviewed, and held that the court could not say as a matter of law that the theories of loss by theft or by fire were of equal probability.

Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

Negligence—mouse in Coca-Cola—jury question. Evidence establishing (1) purchase of a bottle of Coca-Cola from stand at country club, (2) immediate drinking of part of contents in presence of those in charge of stand, and (3) discovery of a dead mouse in bottle, and becoming ill as consequence, presents question for the jury as to whether the mouse was in the bottle when purchased by the country club.

Anderson v Tyler, 223-1033; 274 NW 48

Accident—evidence. Evidence, tho somewhat inconsistent, held to present a jury question on the issue as to the manner in which an injury occurred.

Elmore v Surety Co., 207-872; 224 NW 32

Contributory negligence of 11-year-old boy. In an action for personal injuries sustained by an 11-year-old boy, who, while playing in a tree in a public street fell into wires of public utility company, sustaining severe burns, the question of contributory negligence of the boy together with question of whether defendant company had knowledge of the use of the tree by the boys in the neighborhood in playing, and the question of proximate cause of the injury should have been submitted to the jury.

Reynolds v Iowa Southern Utilities Co., 21 F 2d, 958

Negligence—adverse result of X-ray treatment. While the adverse result attending X-ray treatment, e.g., a burn, is not in and of itself evidence of negligence, yet evidence that such result does not ordinarily follow reasonably skillful treatment, plus evidence that such result may result from too frequent treatment, or from treatment prolonged during a long period of time, and that plaintiff was so treated, may generate a jury question on the issue of negligence.

Berg v Willett, 212-1109; 232 NW 821; 38 NCCA 383

Necessity for amputation. The issue whether a necessity existed for the amputation of an arm does not become a jury question on general descriptive testimony of laymen, bearing on the appearance of the arm, and tending to show no necessity for amputation, and unanimous expert testimony to the effect that amputation was necessary in order to save the life of the patient.

Jackovach v Yocom, 212-914; 237 NW 444; 76 ALR 551; 38 NCCA 346

Negligence—amputation without X-ray picture. The issue whether a surgeon was negligent in failing to have an X-ray picture taken of a broken arm before amputating it, does not become a jury question on general descriptive testimony of the arm by laymen opposed by unanimous expert testimony that the extent of the broken, crushed, and mangled arm was plainly apparent without an X-ray picture, the issue being whether amputation was necessary.

Jackovach v Yocom, 212-914; 237 NW 444; 76 ALR 551; 38 NCCA 346

Malpractice action—evidence of medical men—jury question. In a malpractice action, testimony of medical men located in the vicinity of the defendant surgeons, that in cervical operations it is essential that the canal be kept open while healing, makes a jury question when there is testimony that defendants failed to do this.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Internal injury—justifiable submission. The submission to the jury, in an action for personal injury, of the question of "internal injury" is proper, under evidence that the plaintiff, after receiving a grave physical injury, suffered from internal hemorrhages.

Ashcraft v Kriv, 207-574; 223 NW 365

Future pain as incident to permanent injury. Even without a claim for damages for future pain and suffering, allegations and proof of permanent injuries from which future pain and suffering are reasonably certain to follow warrant the submission to the jury of this question.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Worker crushed in elevator shaft. When, in order to make repairs, a WPA carpenter descended to the bottom of an elevator shaft in a Y. M. C. A. while the superintendent of the building assisted him, and when the superintendent had twice repeated an instruction to the elevator operator in the presence of the carpenter that the elevator was not to go below the first floor, the carpenter, who died because the elevator descended on him, was not required to anticipate that the elevator operator would negligently violate the instructions. Under these facts, contributory negligence was a jury question.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186

Deliveryman falling in elevator shaft. Where a deliveryman fell down an elevator shaft in consignee's building, a sharp conflict in the evidence as to whether the deliveryman, an invitee, had been on the premises before, whether the guard rail to an elevator shaft was in place, and whether the lights were burning at the time, generates a jury question on the issue of negligence and contributory negligence.

Riggs v Pan-American Co., 225-1051; 283 NW 250

Excessively waxed floor—jury question conjectural. In an action by a store customer to recover damages suffered when customer slipped and fell on waxed floor, evidence held insufficient to warrant instruction on question as to whether floor was excessively waxed at place where customer fell and that under the evidence such question was so conjectural as to be outside the jury's proper functioning.

Osborn v Klaber Bros., 227-105; 287 NW 252

Contributory negligence—invitee in public store. An invitee in a public store has a right to assume that the operator of the store will not be negligent in furnishing a safe place for customers, and a jury question on the issue of the invitee's contributory negligence is presented by such assumption in connection with testimony tending to show that the invitee, in walking along a passageway, looked, but could not see the floor or an adjacent open stairway, and thereupon continued to move forward, with his eyes on some goods on a shelf slightly above the level of his eyes.

Nelson v Woolworth, 211-592; 231 NW 665; 30 NCCA 542

When reasonable men differ—injury from street defect. When a street defect is of such character that reasonable and prudent men may reasonably differ as to whether an accident could or should have been reasonably anticipated from its existence or not, the question of city's liability for injuries caused thereby is generally one for jury.

Thomas v Fort Madison, 225-822; 281 NW 748

Defects in streets or highway—liability. In determining municipality's liability for injuries from defective streets or highways, if reasonable or prudent men could reasonably differ as to whether accident could and should have been reasonably anticipated from the existence of the defect, then the case is generally one for the jury, but if careful or prudent men would not reasonably anticipate any danger from the existence of the defect, but still an accident happens which could have been guarded against, the question of liability is one of law.

Bird v Keokuk, 226-456; 284 NW 438

Torts—cause of loss of rentals. Question as to whether rentals from property are lost because of construction of a bridge and new creek channel by a city, which construction occasioned some inconvenience to tenants in egress or ingress to the property, or because of depression in business conditions, is a question for the jury.

Edmond v Sioux City, 225-1058; 283 NW 260

Public water supply—water-tightness of dam. Tho no one testifies that a dam for a city reservoir was not water-tight when finished, there is sufficient evidence for the court, trying the case without a jury, to make the determination as to water-tightness on a record showing that when the water, a year after completion of the dam, reached for the first time the desired level, repairs were needed to prevent loss of water.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Leakage through dam—causal connection with contract violation. In an action on a contractor's bond because of leakage through a dam, a defense that no causal connection existed between the violation of the specifications and the damage, inasmuch as extreme heat and freezing as natural causes could also produce the leakage between the cement slabs, raises a fact question for the court, in the absence of a jury, to determine along with other circumstances as to whether this explanation sufficiently justifies a 12- to 18-inch separation of the concrete slabs.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-216; 279 NW 590

Obstructions in street—contributory negligence. Evidence reviewed relative to the act of plaintiff (injured by coming in contact with a wire stretched across a public street) in running, in semidarkness along the street and outside a crowded sidewalk, in order to reach shelter from a sudden and rapidly gathering thunderstorm, and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.

Cuvelier v Dumont (Town), 221-1016; 266 NW 517

"Last clear chance" doctrine—inapplicability. The "last clear chance" doctrine cannot operate against one who has no reason to suspect that a pedestrian is in any danger.

Radenhausen v Ry., 205-547; 218 NW 316

"Last clear chance"—justifiable submission. The mere fact that a train operator on the rear of a backing train saw a party approaching a public crossing, at a time when the party was 100 or more feet distant, affords no basis for submitting to the jury the issue of the "last clear chance," but such basis is furnished by testimony tending to show (1) that, to the knowledge of the operator, the party continued to approach said crossing, and was in a position of peril when 30 feet therefrom, and (2) that the train could have been stopped within 20 feet.

Williams v Railway, 205-446; 214 NW 692

Contributory negligence—"last clear chance" doctrine—applicability. The "last clear chance" doctrine can have no application unless it be found that defendant discovered the negligence of the plaintiff at a time such that, by the exercise of reasonable care, defendant might have avoided injuring plaintiff.

Steele v Brada, 213-708; 239 NW 538

"Last clear chance" doctrine—applicability. The "last clear chance" doctrine has no application except in those cases only where defendant actually discovers plaintiff's position of peril in time to prevent injury by the exercise of ordinary care, and fails to exercise such care.

Graves v Railway, 207-30; 222 NW 344

Positive and negative evidence—signals at railway crossings. Testimony of witnesses to the effect that they did not hear or notice any signals, when the witnesses were in no mental attitude to hear or notice such signals, creates no conflict with positive testimony that such signals were given.

Lenning v Railway, 209-890; 227 NW 828

Starting streetcar. Question whether conductor started streetcar, when passenger who was injured by being thrown to the floor of car was in position of peril and such fact was apparent to him, held for jury determination.

Havens v Railway, (NOR); 207 NW 677; 32 NCCA 680

Opening streetcar door as invitation to alight. Evidence that the conductor of a streetcar called the street, and, at a point very close to the customary place for discharging passengers, opened the exit door, after a stop signal had been given, and after he saw the passenger standing in front of the closed door, presents a jury question on the issue whether the opening of the door was an invitation to the passenger forthwith to alight, even tho unknown to the passenger, the car had not fully stopped.

Fitzgerald v Railway, 201-1302; 207 NW 602; 2 NCCA (NS) 540

Streetcar motorman—failure to maintain lookout. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a motorman in the operation of a streetcar maintained a proper lookout for pedestrians.

Allen v Railway, 218-286; 253 NW 143

Approach of streetcar—failure to give warning. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a motorman in the operation of a streetcar failed to give warning of the approach of the car.

Allen v Railway, 218-286; 253 NW 143

Streetcar—excessive speed—lack of control. Evidence held to present jury questions on the issues whether a motorman was, in view of the presence of children in the street, operating his streetcar at an excessive rate of speed, also whether he had his car under proper control.

Allen v Railway, 218-286; 253 NW 143

Fires—circumstantial evidence. Circumstantial evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a fire was set by a passing engine.

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

Consent to operate vehicle—admission in pleading. In an action against an insurance carrier to collect an unsatisfied judgment arising out of an automobile collision, and where the insurance carrier raises the question of consent to operate the vehicle, its admission of this fact in a pleading in a previous action is sufficient to carry to the jury such question of consent to operation.

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

Intoxication—physical facts considered by jury. Physical facts that a motorist drove over a sidewalk, into the front yard of a house, striking a child, together with certain remarks he made immediately after the accident which were inconsistent with sobriety, warrants the jury, trying to reconcile conflicting testimony, in finding the driver was intoxicated.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

Recklessness—jury question. Evidence that the driver of an automobile on a straight, smooth, graveled road was traveling 45 miles per hour in an attempt to pass other automobiles does not, in and of itself, furnish a jury question on the issue of reckless operation; otherwise as to evidence that after the car slipped and entered a ditch along the roadside the speed materially increased for a distance of 160 feet at which latter point the car collided with an intersecting grade, turned over twice, and came to a stop some 105 feet farther on.

White v McVicker, 216-90; 246 NW 385; 34 NCCA 371; 37 NCCA 126

Intoxication—defense to automobile theft insurance. Conflicting evidence as to whether one who took motor vehicle, without owner's consent, was intoxicated, presents a jury question.

Whisler v Ins. Co., 224-201; 276 NW 606

Absence of tail lights and reflectors. Testimony reviewed and held that the court could not say, as a matter of law, that the truck in question was not, at the time of a collision, equipped with tail lights and reflectors.

Isaacs v Bruce, 218-759; 254 NW 57; 36 NCCA 93

Agent's authority. Questions as to the nature or extent of an agent's authority, determinable or implied from the facts, are for the jury.

Wright v Iowa P. & L. Co., 223-1192; 274 NW 892

Employment—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a contract of employment had been entered into for a definite time.

Breen v Power Co., 207-1161; 224 NW 562

Apparent scope of agent's authority—evidence. Evidence that an agent, for many years, had charge of a certain department of his principal's business and had, during said times, negotiated many written contracts relative to the subject matter in his charge, may create a jury question on the issue whether the agent had authority, within the scope of his apparent powers, to enter into an oral contract covering the subject matter in his charge.

Webster Co. v Nebr. Co., 216-485; 249 NW 203

Rights and liabilities as to third persons—authority of agent—evidence. The jury has the right, on the issue whether an agent had authority to enter into a contract on behalf of his principal, to pass on whatever competent evidence has a tendency to prove such authority even tho such evidence is not fully and wholly satisfactory. So held as to the correspondence passing between the principal and the agent as to the leasing of the land of the principal.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Noland, 221-1305; 268 NW 69

Abandonment of employment—jury question. Conflicting evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether an agent at the time of committing an alleged negligent act was in the course of his employment.

Heintz v Packing Co., 222-517; 268 NW 607

Apparent authority of agent—showing preliminary to receiving testimony. Testimony relative to a contract of compromise with a corporate agent on behalf of the corporation is admissible upon proof that the party offering the testimony, preliminary to entering into such contract, in good faith availed himself of the bureau of information maintained by the corporation, and by means thereof made contact with corporate agents who had physical possession of the papers and files relative to the subject matter of said compromise, and who were, apparently and to all appearance, in authoritative charge of said matter for settlement. (Of course, the issue of apparent authority may be a jury question.)

Actions for compensation—dispute in evidence. Evidence, that defendant orally agreed to pay plaintiff a commission to assist in the sale of gypsum lands upon which plaintiff held drill plats, that agents of purchaser conferred with plaintiff and examined the plats, coupled with a denial by defendant that plaintiff accepted the offer or assisted in consummating the sale, presents a question precisely determinable by the jury.

Maher v Breen, 224-8; 276 NW 52

Broker—action for compensation—procuring cause. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a plaintiff-broker was the procuring cause of the leasing of premises when the lease was made, not to the individual produced by the broker, but to an unincorporated entity.

Baehr-Shive Co. v Stoner-McCray, 221-1186; 268 NW 53

Royalties—reduction by oral agreement. In an action to recover alleged balance due under coal mining contract for royalties, whether payments provided for in contract were reduced by subsequent oral agreement held to be a jury question.

Heggen v Mining Co., (NOR); 263 NW 268

Warranty—waiver. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether the buyer of goods had waived the warranty for which he had contracted.

Mortemoth Co. v Home Co., 211-188; 233 NW 133

Sales—rescission of contract—jury question. In an action by the vendee of an article to recover payments made, a jury question on the issue of rescission of the contract of purchase is made by evidence tending to show that the vendor made repeated but unsuccessful efforts to repair and adjust the article so it would work to vendee's satisfaction, and that thereupon vendee (1) refused to accept it, (2) returned it to the vendor, (3) received from the vendor the note executed when the purchase was made, and (4) was told by the vendor that he would order a new article for vendee.

Trester v Swan, 216-465; 249 NW 168

Conditional sale (?) or contract of agency (?). The act of the owner of an article in reluctantly permitting it to pass into the possession of a party (to whom he had theretofore actually sold many like articles) with permission to forthwith sell the article (which sale was then practically assured) at a stated cash price or to forthwith return the article, without any expressed intention of selling the article to the party so given possession, presents a jury question on the issue whether the transaction was one of simple agency, or whether the transaction constituted an oral conditional sale contract which would not be valid against a third party who had no knowledge thereof.

Greenlease-Lied Motors v Sadler, 216-302; 249 NW 383

Fraud by seller—future promises—opinions. In an action for the purchase price of a trade-named beer dispenser bought for resale, purchaser, although same may have been an inducement to buy, may neither predicate fraud on seller's promise to procure for purchaser future resales, unless the promise is made with a secret intent to disavow, nor upon statements amounting to an opinion as to superior design; however, the jury should determine whether a statement as to merchantableness is an opinion or representation of fact.

Rowe Mfg. Co. v Curtis-Straub Co., 223-858; 273 NW 895

Implied warranty—buyer relying on seller. Ordinarily no warranty of fitness will be implied where buyer orders specific article for specific purpose known to the seller, but where buyer relies on seller to furnish a suitable article for a known purpose warranty of fitness will be implied although article may have a well-known trade name. So whether seller impliedly warranted that certain lumber was fit for manufacture of tool chests, held, a jury question.

Davenport Co. v Edward Hines Co., 43 F 2d, 63

Sale—disputed facts. Disputed evidence in buyer's action against seller over oral contract to deliver corn makes a jury question requiring a motion for directed verdict to be overruled.

Willers v Flanley Co., 224-409; 275 NW 474

Exercise of option—reasonable time. In an action to recover part of an advance paid for corn stored in an elevator under a written contract to sell at seller's option, the filing of a general denial raises the issue of defendant's performance; and question as to whether defendant exercised his seller's option within a reasonable time is for the jury.

Andreas & Son v Hempy, 224-561; 276 NW 791

Action for goods sold—dissolution of partnership at time. Whether plaintiff suing partner for goods sold had knowledge that partnership was dissolved at time of sale held question of fact for jury.

Harlan Co. v Saylor, (NOR); 228 NW 6

Substitution and release. The mere fact of the making of a new contract by which a third party becomes obligated to pay another person's previously existing indebtedness does not alone give rise to presumption that the creditor accepts the new debtor and releases the original debtor—question as to whether there is such a release is one of fact to be determined by all the evidence in the case.

Wade v Broadcasting Co., 227-422; 288 NW 439

Release of damages—implied fraud. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a release of damages was binding on the plaintiff who signed the same without reading it.

Shaddock v Railway, 218-281; 252 NW 772

Release—fraudulent procurement—negligent execution—jury question. Evidence reviewed at length relative to a written release of damages consequent on shockingly severe injuries, and held to present a jury question on the issues (1) of defendant's fraudulent procurement of the release, and (2) of plaintiff's negligence in signing said release.

Engle v Ungles, 223-780; 273 NW 879; 4 NCCA(NS) 92

Release—damages—fraud. A jury question as to the validity of a release of personal injury damages is made by proof that the releasee represented that the doctor's charges would be "about" $10, and that the representation was materially false, and was made to the releasor and acted on by him when he was alone and practically helpless from his injuries.

Robinson v Meek, 203-185; 210 NW 762; 5 NCCA(NS) 434

Opinion evidence—signatures. The mere introduction in evidence of genuine signatures of a party in order to establish the plea that the purported signature of the party to a written release is a forgery does not generate a jury question on the issue of forgery when other ample evidence persuasively shows that the signature to the release is genuine.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Conspiracy—concert of action—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to present a jury question on the issue of concert of action between the officers and directors of a corporation for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff in the purchase of stock, except as to two defendants.

Stambaugh v Haffa, 217-1161; 253 NW 137; 38 NCCA 114

Nonconflicting evidence—only law questions presented. Where the only witnesses to testify at a trial were the plaintiff and her husband and their testimony did not conflict, no disputed question of fact was presented, but only questions of law.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Arrest without warrant—reasonable ground—excessive force. Testimony reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issues (1) whether a defendant-sheriff in an action for damages had reasonable cause to believe that plaintiff's automobile contained the persons who had just prior thereto committed a robbery, (2) whether the sheriff acted as a prudent and reasonable officer would act under similar circumstances, and (3) whether the sheriff employed more force than was apparently necessary to stop the car.

Lawyer v Stansell, 217-111; 250 NW 887

"Unlawful dispensing" of liquor. Evidence that an accused made known to others the location of a cache of intoxicating liquors, assisted in actually locating it, and thereupon, jointly with the other parties, consumed the liquors, presents a jury question on the issue of "unlawful dispensing" of such liquors.

State v Meyer, 203-694; 213 NW 220

Confession of crime—claim of intoxication. A purported confession as to lascivious acts with a child, the admissibility of which confession is objected to because of a claim of intoxication at the time the confession was made, raises a question properly submitted to the jury when it appears the defendant had not taken any liquor for 15 to 18 hours before the confession was made.

State v Hall, 225-1316; 283 NW 414

Bias of witness—driving while intoxicated. Fact that a doctor, the real instigator of the prosecution, as a witness in a criminal case, showed considerable feeling and interest was a matter for the jury—not for the court.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

Homicide—deliberation and premeditation. Deliberation and premeditation as an element of murder in the second degree are necessarily provable by the facts and circumstances attending homicide. Evidence held such as to justify the jury in finding affirmatively on such evidence.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Conflicting testimony of ownership. In prosecution for receiving and concealing a stolen cow, cause was properly submitted to jury when testimony of ownership was conflicting.

State v McAteer, 227-320; 288 NW 72

Discredited testimony. The testimony of a prosecuting witness (forcible defilement in instant case) may be very seriously discredited, yet present a jury question as to its credibility.

Wildeboer v Peterson, 201-1202; 203 NW 284

Attorneys for juveniles—compensation. An action by an attorney against a county for compensation for defending a juvenile delinquent is not demurrable but presents a jury question.

Ferguson v Pottawattamie Co., 224-516; 278 NW 223

Action for malicious prosecution. In an action for malicious prosecution, record reviewed and held to present jury questions on both the issues of (1) want of probable cause, and (2) malice.

Richmond v Whitaker, 218-606; 255 NW 681

Usurping province of jury. A question for the jury, and not for the court, is generated when the defendant in an action for damages for malicious prosecution makes substantial proof that, prior to commencing the prosecution, he made a full, fair, and good-faith recital of the facts to his attorney, and was advised to commence the prosecution.

Beard v Wilson, 211-914; 234 NW 802

Malicious prosecution—want of probable cause—landlord's writ—improper submission. In an action for malicious prosecution in suing out a writ of landlord's attachment for rent admittedly due (but which was canceled by a pleaded and established counterclaim), manifest error results from submitting to the jury the question whether the landlord had probable grounds to believe the truth of the ground alleged as a basis for the writ.

Kelp v McManus, 218-226; 253 NW 813

Arrest with warrant—issue as to person intended. In action for false arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff under an indictment and warrant for commission of an offense committed by another who falsely represented himself to be the plaintiff, issue as to what person was intended by the name used in the warrant could be shown by all the competent facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction out of which the indictment arose and warrant issued, and determination of such question was for jury.

O'Neill v Keeling, 227-754; 288 NW 887

Malicious prosecution — probable cause. "Probable cause" for prosecution is defined as "the knowledge by the prosecuting witness of such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence, acting conscientiously, impartially, reasonably, and without prejudice, to believe the person accused is guilty", and except where the evidence is so clear and undisputed that all reasonable minds must reach the same conclusion, the question of probable cause is for the jury.

Bair v Schultz, 227-193; 288 NW 119

False imprisonment—justification. In an action for wrongful arrest and false imprisonment, where defendants, Polk county sheriff and deputies, acquired information that one "Gene or Eugene Drake, alias J. O. Drake", 40 to 45 years of age, weighing 150 pounds or more, with light hair and complexion, had committed a felony, and by telegraphic request to Omaha, Nebr., police caused arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff, Eugene Drake, 29 years old, weighing 240 pounds, with dark hair, the question as to whether defendants were justified in causing plaintiff's arrest was one for jury, hence court erred in sustaining motion for directed verdict.

Drake v Keeling, (NOR); 287 NW 596

Writing and publication—when an issue. In a libel action, mere testimony that a witness has no recollection of the writing or publication of a letter does not raise an issue as to the fact of writing, but when his testimony, which must be construed as an entirety, shows a denial thereof, a court cannot as a matter of law establish the writing and publication.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Defense—evidence of crime withdrawn from jury. In an action for libel, based on a defamatory publication, that the plaintiff could not tell the truth when on the witness stand, in which action defendant offered to show that plaintiff perjured himself in a previous foreclosure hearing, as to the existence of a certain fence, the court errs in withdrawing this evidence from the jury on the ground of indefiniteness, since in this civil action the defendant was not required to prove perjury beyond a reasonable doubt.

McCuddin v Dickinson, 226-304; 283 NW 886

Transcript of evidence filed prior to judgment. When the reporter's notes and a transcript thereof were made a part of the record before final judgment was signed, filed, or entered, there was no merit in a contention that the court had no jurisdiction because the evidence was not properly made of record before entering judgment.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Assessment of damage. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire ground for highway purposes, the question of damages to be assessed for the land appropriated is peculiarly one for the jury.

Stoner v Hy. Comm., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Credibility—contradictions—duty of jury. The mere fact that the testimony of a witness reveals material contradictions does not necessarily deprive it of all probative force, and deprive the jury of the right and duty to reconcile the contradictions. The fact that the witness is a foreigner and untutored in the English language may be quite material under such circumstances.

State v Andrioli, 216-451; 249 NW 379

Chattel mortgage—replevin action. In replevin action by assignee of alleged chattel mortgage to recover possession of mortgaged property, whether mortgage had ever been executed or whether property was exempt to alleged mortgagor, who claimed he was a married man, the head of a family, and that he made his living with such property, held to be jury question.

Brown v Heising, (NOR); 282 NW 345

Rent—conversion—jury question. Record held to present jury question on issue whether property on which a landlord had a lien for rent had been sold by the tenant with or without the consent of the landlord.

Mau v Rice Bros., 216-864; 249 NW 206

Liability of garnishee—willful destruction of property. Evidence tending to show that a garnishee had, subsequent to garnishment, willfully destroyed the property in his possession belonging to the defendant in garnishment, generates a jury question as to the liability of the garnishee.

Schooley v Efnor, 202-141; 209 NW 408

Family expenses — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence held to present jury questions on the issues of the delivery of certain articles of family expense and the liability of the husband therefor.

Yunker Bros. v Meredith, 217-1130; 253 NW 58

Consideration. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of consideration.

Whitlock v Norris, 218-1066; 256 NW 734

Possession—presumption as to ownership. Proof that stock was on the premises of a defendant and under his control, both before and after it was at large in the public highway (where it was alleged to have caused a damage), and that the defendant had inferentially admitted that the stock was his, creates a jury question on the issue of the defendant's ownership.

Stewart v Wild, 202-357; 208 NW 303

Cause of death as question of law. Evidence reviewed, and held that the court could not say as a matter of law that the expert theory that hogs died of hog cholera after the termination of a shipment was more reasonable than the theory that they died because of the negligence of the carrier during shipment.

Brower v Railway, 218-317; 252 NW 755

11430 Evidence in ordinary actions.

Evidence generally. See under §11254

11431 Ordinary actions—evidence on appeal.

Equitable appeals triable de novo. See under §11433

Law (?) or equity (?). An action which is treated in the trial court as at law will be so treated on appeal, even tho the pleadings and filings therein are indorsed as in equity.

Kline v Reeder, 203-396; 212 NW 693

Action essentially at law. An action which is essentially at law, and so tried to the court under a specific waiver of a jury, is not triable de novo on appeal.

Bremer County v Schroeder, 200-1285; 206 NW 303

Fact questions—absence of evidence. Manifestly the appellate court cannot pass on fact questions unless the evidence is before the court.

Chicago JSL Bank v Eggers, 214-710; 243 NW 193

Inaccurate stipulation—effect. The trial to the court of a strictly law action on the law calendar under a stipulation that the trial shall be "in the same manner as an equity cause" gives appellant no right to a trial de novo on appeal, it appearing that the cause was treated throughout as a law action.

Hostler Co. v Stuff, 205-1341; 219 NW 481

Mutual treatment of action. An action mutually treated as a law action, from its inception in the trial court to and including its presentation on appeal, must be treated on appeal as a law action.

Garden v Ins. Co., 218-1094; 254 NW 287

Correct ruling on erroneous grounds—valid grounds existing. An error in sustaining a motion for new trial on two particular grounds cannot be prejudicial if other grounds exist on which it should be sustained, all of which will be considered on appeal.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Review, scope of—parties entitled. A successful party as appellee may without assigning errors show, if he can, that he was so erred against as to entirely neutralize any errors against appellant.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Final report of administrator—hearing. Hearings on final reports of administrators are not reviewed de novo in the appellate court.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

In re Oelwein, 217-1137; 251 NW 694

Accounting and settlement. An order of the probate court granting an executor credit on his final report for the amount paid by him on his own motion, on a claim against the estate, is conclusive on the appellate court if the record reveals supporting testimony as to the genuineness of the claim.

In re Plendl, 218-103; 253 NW 819

Hearings in probate. Hearings on the final reports of executors are at law and on appeal are reviewed as at law.

In re Mann, 217-1134; 251 NW 83

Reports reviewed on appeal—not de novo. The trial court's findings in probate proceedings relating to executor's reports are not triable or reviewable de novo on appeal to the supreme court. If the findings have support in the record, they cannot be disturbed.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Probate—allowance of claim—review only by appeal. Errors in a probate proceeding for allowance of a claim as in law actions should be corrected by appeal, and no exceptions nor appeal therefrom being taken, a finding in such probate proceeding is a final adjudication.

In re Davie, 224-1177; 278 NW 616

Equitable and law issues in probate—appellate practice. In appeals involving claims in probate, frequent practice of supreme court has been to review equitable issues by trial de novo, while considering alleged errors assigned in the law action.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Hearings in probate. Where the issue whether a trustee should be credited with a loss of trust funds was heard by the probate court without a jury (as a continuation of the probate proceedings out of which the trust arose) the holding of the court, granting such credit, will be sustained if the evidence pro and con would have presented a jury question had the hearing been before a jury.

In re Moylan, 219-624; 258 NW 766

Guardianship. A finding of fact by the court in guardianship proceedings, on supporting testimony, is conclusive on appeal, such proceedings not being reviewable de novo.

Fence viewers—appeal from. Only questions of law will be considered on appeal from an order of the trial court which confirms the decision of fence viewers.

In re Swisher, 204-1072; 216 NW 673

Roach v Oliver, 215-800; 244 NW 899

Instructions—absence of applicable evidence precludes review. The appellate court cannot review an instruction to the jury when the correctness of such instrument depends on the contents of exhibits not embraced in the abstract.

Forrest v Sovereign Camp, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Law action tried by equity procedure. Where an essentially law action to recover a money judgment is brought and recognized as such by the parties and the court, it is not, without a record entry transferring it to equity, converted to an equity action because the parties with the consent of the court use an equity procedure, and appeal therefrom will be dismissed when no errors are assigned.

Petersen v Ins. Co., 225-293; 280 NW 521

Matter of discretion—matter of law—when reviewable. An order phrased in general terms granting a new trial will be deemed discretionary and not reviewable except for an abuse of discretion, but where granted on specific legal grounds it is reviewable like any other error of law.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Verdict contrary to evidence—preserving question in lower court. In an action to establish a claim against an estate for serum, virus, and veterinary supplies furnished to decedent over a term of eight years, argument on appeal that the verdict denying the claim was contrary to the evidence, and should be set aside, cannot be considered when not raised by appropriate procedure in the lower court.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

I TRIAL DE NOVO

Review—trial de novo in equity. Appeals in equity are triable de novo both as to the facts and the law.

Federal Bank v Bonnett, 226-112; 284 NW 97; 226-126; 284 NW 105

Kurth v Ins. Co., 227-242; 288 NW 90

Appeal in equity—method of trial. All appeals in equity are triable anew substantially as tho the appellate court had original jurisdiction.

Manning v Auto Co., 210-1182; 232 NW 501
 Baker v Ward, 217-581; 250 NW 109

Record for trial de novo. In order for an appellant to have a trial de novo on appeal, it is incumbent on him to present a complete record of all the evidence heard, and certified, by the court.

In re Schlicht, 218-114; 253 NW 847

Northrup v Mikkleson, 222-1046; 270 NW 401

Absence of evidence. Trial de novo in the supreme court is impossible in the absence of the evidence.

Gotsch v Schoenjahn, 201-1317; 207 NW 567
 Merritt v Ludwig-Wiese, 212-71; 235 NW 292

Consideration given lower court ruling. Altho a case is triable de novo in the supreme court, consideration will be given to the ruling of the lower court.

Donovan v White, 224-138; 275 NW 889
 Chader v Wilkins, 226-417; 284 NW 183

Findings in equity cases—weight on appeal. In equity cases triable de novo, much weight should be given to findings of the trial court because of the better opportunities of that court to weigh the testimony, and in matters like modification of alimony decrees the court exercises a large discretion which, unless abused, will not be interfered with on appeal.

Siders v Siders, 227-764; 288 NW 909

Equity proceeding to establish heirs. In a probate proceeding to assist administrator to determine heirs of intestate, it being determined upon appeal from (1) the form of the pleadings as prescribed in equity, (2) the record of proceedings indicating use of equitable powers, (3) the reception of evidence under equitable procedure, and (4) rulings of the court reserved as in equity, that such proceeding, having been conducted in a manner wholly foreign to procedure at law, was tried in equity and therefore was triable de novo on appeal.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

On errors (?) or de novo (?). When it cannot be determined whether an action, tried to the court, was brought at law or in equity, it will, on appeal, be tried de novo in compliance with the apparent desire of the parties—the record containing all matters necessary for such review.

Martinsen v Ins. Assn., 217-335; 251 NW 503

Law (?) or equity (?). An action which is treated in the trial court as at law will be so treated on appeal, even tho the pleadings and filings therein are indorsed as in equity.

Kline v Reeder, 203-396; 212 NW 613

Inaccurate stipulation—effect. The trial to the court of a strictly law action on the law calendar under a stipulation that the trial shall be "in the same manner as an equity cause" gives appellant no right to a trial de novo on appeal, it appearing that the cause was treated throughout as a law action.

Hostler Co. v Stuff, 205-1341; 219 NW 481

Following trial court method of trial. An appeal will be heard de novo when the parties mutually and without controversy tried the cause in equity in the trial court.

State v Automobile, 214-1088; 243 NW 303

I TRIAL DE NOVO—continued

Method of trial controls appeal. An action tried in the lower court as equitable will be so treated on appeal.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756
In re Moore, 211-804; 232 NW 729

Commenced and tried in equity—appeal in equity. An action which plaintiff denominates when commenced as “in equity”, and which is fully tried “in equity” without objection or effort to transfer to law, will, on appeal by defendant, be treated as “in equity” and tried de novo, without assignment of error.

Bates v Seeds, 223-70; 272 NW 515

Vacation of judgment. A proceeding to vacate a default judgment and for new trial is not triable de novo on appeal.

Rock Island Plow Co. v Brunkan, 215-1264; 248 NW 32

Injunction violation by labor union—no trial de novo. In certiorari to review a judgment finding the defendants guilty of violating an injunction, the case was not triable de novo in the supreme court.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Fact findings in probate not triable de novo on appeal. Findings of fact by the trial court in a probate proceeding involving objections to an executor's report and payment of certain claims cannot be reviewed on appeal, such not being triable de novo.

In re Scholbrock, 224-593; 277 NW 5

Probate claims—no trial de novo. Probate claims are not triable de novo in the supreme court, as credibility of witnesses and weight of testimony are involved.

In re Martens, 226-162; 283 NW 885

Allowance of probate claim—no appeal de novo. An appeal from probate proceedings, in which a claim was established against an estate of a deceased person, was not triable de novo, but could be reversed when the judgment of the trial court was not supported by the record.

Reichart v Downs, 226-870; 285 NW 256

Workmen's compensation case. Principle reaffirmed that appeals under the workmen's compensation law are not tried de novo.

Arne v Silo Co., 214-511; 242 NW 539

Mechanic's lien foreclosure. An appeal from judgment of dismissal in action to foreclose mechanic's lien is triable de novo in supreme court.

Sloan Co. v Hall, (NOR); 206 NW 573

Record examined irrespective of failure to file brief. An action in equity to recover a judgment against the members of an alleged partnership and to impress a trust on certain funds is triable de novo on appeal, and the supreme court will examine the record despite parties' failure to furnish brief and argument.

Maybaum v Bank, (NOR); 282 NW 370

Assignment for benefit of creditors—equity (?) or law (?). The court is inclined to treat an assignment for the benefit of creditors as a proceeding in equity; but howsoever this may be, a proceeding which involves the final report of the assignee and the accounting therein made, and which embraces equitable issues, will be heard on appeal as in equity when so treated by the litigants and trial court.

In re Stone, 220-1341; 264 NW 604

Decision in general—avoidance of technical remand. The claim on appeal that an equitable action for the foreclosure of a contract for the sale of real estate is premature, and that judgment was rendered for the entire amount prior to its full maturity, will be disregarded on the de novo review on appeal, when it then appears that the entire amount is due and unpaid, and that no plea in abatement of the action, or other objection because of prematurity, was made in the trial court.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Accounting—trial de novo—limitation. An appeal from a ruling on objections to a referee's report must be tried de novo on the objections specified to such report.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Disbarment—appeal heard de novo. An appeal by the accused in disbarment proceedings is triable de novo.

In re DeCaro, 220-176; 262 NW 132

Disbarment—procedure. An appeal in disbarment proceedings against an attorney is, on a proper record, triable de novo, even though tried by the special court as an action at law.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Detaching municipal territory. Proceedings for the severance and detaching of territory from a municipality, being now purely equitable, are triable de novo on appeal.

McKeon v City, 206-556; 221 NW 351; 62 ALR 1006

Levy and assessment—board of supervisors as objectors. The board of supervisors as objectors to the assessment of a stockyards company may properly appeal to the supreme court from an order sustaining a motion to dismiss their appeal to the district court, and the case in the supreme court is triable de novo.

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

Custody of child—appeal—trial de novo. An appeal in habeas corpus proceedings involving the custody and best welfare of a child, necessarily and unavoidably gravitates to a review de novo; obviously such review is proper when distinctly equitable issues are involved.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Habeas corpus proceedings—custody of child. An appeal in habeas corpus proceedings—a law action—involving the custody and best welfare of a child necessarily and unavoidably gravitates to a review de novo.

Adair v Clure, 218-482; 255 NW 658

Custody of children—appeal—deference to trial court. Tho divorce proceedings are triable de novo on appeal, yet the wide discretion vested in the trial court in determining the custody of children will be respected and confirmed in all cases except where the discretion has been abused.

Wood v Wood, 220-441; 262 NW 773

Total disability—de novo determination. Where evidence given by licensed chiropractors testifying for plaintiff, and physicians and surgeons testifying for defendant in regard to plaintiff's total disability is widely divergent and where there is ample evidence to support a finding either way, the supreme court, in a de novo trial, will not disturb the trial court's findings, the trial court being in a far more favorable position to determine whether claim of total disability is made in good faith.

Kurth v Ins. Co., 227-242; 288 NW 90

Guardianship proceedings—findings by court—conclusiveness. A finding of fact by the court in guardianship proceedings on supporting testimony is conclusive on appeal, such proceedings not being reviewable de novo. So held on the issue whether a guardian had, in effect, paid an allowed claim.

In re Roland, 212-907; 237 NW 349

Reports of executors—appeals—review not de novo. Appeals from orders in probate on the final reports of executors are not reviewed de novo.

Bourne v Bourne, 210-883; 232 NW 169

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

In re Oelwein, 217-1137; 251 NW 694

Condemnation of conveyance. A proceeding for the forfeiture of a conveyance because of its use in the unlawful transportation of liquors is a special action, and not triable de novo on appeal.

State v Ford Coupe, 205-597; 218 NW 346

Duties and liabilities to client—summary proceedings—appeal—no hearing de novo. A summary proceeding by a client against his attorney will be heard on appeal only on errors assigned—not de novo.

Norman v Bennett, 216-181; 246 NW 378

Proceedings and determination—method of trial—extent of proof. Certiorari to review contempt proceedings is not triable de novo in the supreme court, and proof of guilt need not appear beyond a reasonable doubt.

Madalozzi v Anderson, 202-104; 209 NW 274

II EQUITABLE PROCEEDINGS TRIABLE ON ERRORS

Irregularities in trial of equity cause. An appeal in equity, tried solely on plaintiff's testimony, will not be reversed because the proper order for the introduction of testimony was not observed, or because defendant improperly brought out material testimony on cross-examination.

Coen & Conway v Bank, 205-483; 218 NW 325

Treating improperly stricken plea as in record. Upon appeal in an equity cause, the court, upon discovering from the record that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitation, will treat an improperly stricken plea of such statute as still in the record, and enter judgment accordingly.

Lawrence v Melvin, 202-866; 211 NW 410

Absence of witnesses. The refusal of the court to continue a cause in order to enable counsel to obtain a witness will not be deemed error when there is no showing as to diligence or as to the time in which the witness might have been produced.

Miller v Hurburgh, 212-970; 235 NW 282

Barth Prod. v Kelly, 211-1154; 235 NW 471

Stockholder — who is — wholly inadequate evidence. In an equitable action to enforce, against an estate, "double" liability on bank stock, a finding and decree (based almost exclusively on the testimony of the record owner of said stock), that the deceased had actually owned said stock for some thirty years and was such owner at the time of his death, will (notwithstanding the deference accorded to the trial court in judging of the credibility of witnesses) be annulled on appeal as without adequate support in the evidence when the actions and conduct of said record owner during substantially all of said time in asserting exclusive ownership in himself, even after the death of the deceased, is wholly at war with his present testimony that he had never owned said stock and that the deceased had always owned it.
