Contributory negligence—consideration of nonimputable negligence. An instruction to the effect that even tho the negligence of a husband with whom the wife was riding could not be imputed to the wife, nevertheless the negligence of the husband could be considered by the jury on the issue whether the negligence of the defendant—the driver of another car—was the proximate cause of plaintiff’s injuries, is a correct statement of law, and if plaintiff wishes such instruction modified by a statement as to the law governing the concurrent negligence of different parties, she must request such instruction.

Kuhn v Kjose, 216-36; 248 NW 230

Subsequent elaboration curing former omission. Any error by the court in one instruction in omitting to tell the jury that the mere happening of an accident or the mere failure of defendant to stop his vehicle on a certain occasion would not constitute negligence per se may be effaced by subsequent elaboration on the general subject of negligence.

Comparet v Coal Co., 200-922; 205 NW 779

Negligence per se—prejudicial submission. Prejudicial error results from submitting to the jury whether a motorist was negligent in so making a left-hand turn as to run into the side of another motorist properly operating his car on the road from which the turn was made, because such a turn with such result is negligence per se in the absence of proof of legal excuse.

Rich v Herny, 222-465; 269 NW 489

Instructions—“last clear chance”—erroneous and confusing. An instruction, in effect, that if defendant, after he discovered plaintiff’s peril, was negligent in the doing of certain acts which resulted in the striking of plaintiff, then “defendant would still be liable even tho plaintiff was negligent”, is prejudicially erroneous; also prejudicially confusing and inconsistent in view of repeated instructions that plaintiff could not recover if he was guilty of contributory negligence.

Steele v Brada, 213-708; 239 NW 538

Pedestrian in voluntary position of appreciable danger. In action for death of pedestrian struck by automobile, instruction that decedent’s contributory negligence barred recovery unless last clear chance doctrine could be invoked, was not erroneous on theory that such contributory negligence must be proximate cause of accident in order to defeat recovery. Moreover, such instruction was justified under the record showing that decedent voluntarily placed himself in a position of evident danger.

Spooner v Wisecup, 227-768; 288 NW 894

Ordinary care—undue limitation on jury. Reversible error results from instructing the jury that a pedestrian on the highway need not, in the exercise of due and ordinary care, continuously look backward and forward.

(The injured party, on a dark night, had ascended a hill and passed the crest thereof and was, when injured by a car approaching from his rear, walking down the sharply descending slope, either near the middle line of the 18-foot pavement or near the right-hand side thereof. The car which did the injury met and passed another car momentarily before the pedestrian was hit.)

Taylor v Wistey, 218-785; 254 NW 50

Pedestrian at crosswalk—right of way—precautions.

Scott v McKelvey, 228- ; 290 NW 729

Pedestrian—vehicle approaching from rear. An instruction relative to the duty of a pedestrian traveling in the public highway to keep a reasonable lookout for vehicles approaching from the rear as well as from the front need not necessarily be modified on request to the effect that such duty does not require him to turn about "constantly and repeatedly" to observe the possible approach of vehicles from his rear.

Kessel v Hunt, 215-117; 244 NW 714; 34 NCCA 247

Sudden fright—trial theory. The abstract proposition that a pedestrian who steps suddenly in front of a moving vehicle is guilty of negligence per se need not be limited by the effect of sudden fright or surprise on the part of the pedestrian when no such claim is made in the pleadings or evidence.

Ryan v Shirk, 207-1327; 224 NW 824

Moving automobile backward—warning person in perilous position. Instructions covering motorist's right to move his car backward and his duty to give warning of his intention to so move the automobile when people are pushing and trying to extricate it from stalled position on icy street, and whether he knew or ought to have known of one in a position of peril at the rear of the automobile, reviewed, and held to correctly present the issues.

Huston v Lindsay, 224-281; 276 NW 201

Person injured on highway construction work. In laborer's personal injury action arising because of truck backing into him while both were engaged in highway construction work, an instruction, that it is the duty of driver in moving a truck to exercise care and caution of ordinarily prudent person and to bring truck under proper control if he discovers, or in exercise of reasonable care should discover, a person in the path of truck, was neither erroneous as submitting to the jury a previously withdrawn issue as to whether defendant driver has truck under control, nor as permitting jury to speculate on defendant's negligence generally.

Rebmann v Heesch, 227-566; 288 NW 695

Passing children—nonright to assume care. Testimony in an action against a motorist for striking and killing a 10-year-old child on the highway supported by the physical facts, from which the jury could find that the child's position on the shoulder could have been seen by defendant when more than 300 feet away, justifies an instruction on the nonright of a motorist to assume that a child under 14, in a place of apparent safety, will remain there, and on his duty to control his machine so as to avoid hitting her if she does not.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Speed as negligence irrespective of conditions. Instruction reviewed and held not to submit to the jury the question whether speed, in and of itself, was the proximate cause of an accident, irrespective of the attending conditions and circumstances.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Requiring excessive proof of alleged negligence. An instruction is erroneous when it requires negligence to be established "in the respects charged in the petition," and the negligence so charged is (1) excessive speed, (2) excessive speed after warning, and (3) excessive speed while traveling on loose gravel.

Codner v Stowe, 201-800; 208 NW 330

Ignoring grounds of negligence. The trial court is within its legal discretion in granting a new trial to plaintiff because the instructions, in fact, ignored a material allegation by the plaintiff as to the speed of defendant's car.

Lewellen v Haynes, 215-132; 244 NW 701

Reference to speed—granting new trial. A reference in an instruction to a motor vehicle speed of 60 miles per hour when the allegation in the petition of such speed was coerced by a ruling of the court, while not in itself sufficient to warrant a reversal, still justifies the trial court in granting a new trial when considered along with other alleged errors.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Collision with bicycle—negligence—jury question. Where a motorist driving east 40 to 50 miles per hour at night on a paved highway, the lights on vehicle working properly (no rain, fog, or snow), his attention being momentarily diverted by an oncoming car, and, simultaneously with its passing, he collided with and fatally injured a bicycle rider, also traveling east, instructions covering diverting circumstances relative to speed (§5029, C., '35 [§5023.01, C., '39]) and failing to turn to left when passing vehicle (§5022, C., '35 [§5024.03,

C., '39]) reviewed and held to correctly present questions for jury.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6; 3 NCCA(NS) 184

Driving on wrong side—unsupported issues not submitted. In a damage action for an automobile collision occurring on a north and south paved road south of an intersection, it is not error to submit the case on the one negligence ground that defendant crossed the center line of the pavement when the record as to other negligence allegations shows a proper speed and lookout, control of the car, and that defendant driving north could not make a left turn before reaching the intersection.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

Collision at intersection. Instructions relative to the rights and duties of operators of automobiles at an intersection reviewed and held authorized under the pleadings.

Melsha v Dillon, 214-1324; 243 NW 295

Rights at through highway intersection.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Assumption of fact. Instruction relative to a collision between automobiles at a street intersection reviewed, and held not to assume that one of the cars first entered the intersection.

Becvar v Batesole, 218-858; 256 NW 297

Instructions compelling jury to draw certain inference. Where plaintiff and defendant were, under conditions which rendered visibility poor, approaching the same intersection approximately at the same time, the court cannot properly instruct the jury that if plaintiff could see several hundred feet in the direction from which defendant was approaching, then the jury must conclude either (1) that plaintiff did not look for defendant as was his duty, or (2) that plaintiff did see the defendant.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Failure to yield half of traveled way—prima facie negligence only. Failure of the driver of a vehicle on highways outside cities and towns to yield one-half of the traveled way to a vehicle traveling in the opposite direction is only prima facie evidence of negligence. Instruction reviewed and held, when read as a whole, violative of this rule of law.

Failure to turn to right as negligence—non-prejudicial error. An instruction to the effect that the failure of the operator of an automobile on a country road to turn to the right on meeting another vehicle constitutes negligence, if erroneous, is error without prejudice when the record reveals beyond question that said operator was guilty of proximate negligence in other respects.

Scott v Hinman, 216-1126; 249 NW 249

Driver on wrong side of highway—collision—presumption. It is erroneous to instruct that where a collision occurs between two vehicles, at a time when one of the vehicles is on the wrong side of the road, the presumption is that the collision was caused by the negligence of the driver who was on the wrong side of the road.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

Occupying right side of highway—jury question. A specification of negligence that defendant did not keep his truck on the right-hand side of the highway when struck from the rear could not be withdrawn and was properly submitted to the jury when there was evidence to sustain the specification. Evidence did not show that collision would have occurred even tho truck had been wholly on right-hand side of the highway.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

Nonprejudicial instructions. An instruction to the effect that if the defendant failed to yield to another motorist one-half of the traveled way, the jury, "in the absence of justifiable excuse", might find the defendant negligent, cannot be deemed prejudicial to a defendant who established no excuse whatever.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Fatally confusing instruction. The presentation to the jury of an assignment of negligence to the specific effect that the two automobiles in question, moving in opposite directions on the highway and immediately before they collided, were each on the left-hand side of the highway, is so confusing as to constitute reversible error.

Balik v Flacker, 212-1381; 238 NW 467

Passing slower moving vehicle—failure to signal. Instructions relative to the duty of the driver of an automobile, in attempting to pass a slower moving vehicle, to sound his horn, may be justified even tho the driver of the slower moving vehicle had knowledge that the other party was attempting to pass.

Johnson v McVicker, 216-654; 247 NW 488

Nonduty to anticipate negligence. An instruction on the subject of contributory negligence is erroneous when it, in effect, requires the person in question to anticipate negligence on the part of the driver of an approaching vehicle.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Anticipated negligence. Prejudicial error results from instructing, in effect, that a person who has stopped his car at a proper place in the highway in order to repair it must anticipate and guard himself against the possibility that the operator of some passing car may be negligent by passing the stationary car on the wrong side.

Hanson v Manning, 213-625; 239 NW 793

Harmless error. Instruction on the subject of imputed negligence held nonprejudicial.

Sutton v Moreland, 214-337; 242 NW 75

Violation of statute—excuse—required instruction. When the violation of a particular law of the road is pleaded by plaintiff as a ground for recovery of damages and such violation is treated as in issue (tho the applicability of the statute be quite doubtful), the court commits error in failing to instruct as to the effect of defendant's evidence tending to legally excuse such alleged violation.

Rich v Herny, 222-465; 269 NW 489

Emergency—conduct under impulse of the moment. In a personal injury action arising from an automobile accident, an instruction is correct which states that a person in a position of peril in an emergency is not required imperatively to do that which, after the emergency is ended, it would appear could have been done to avoid the injury.

Band v Reinke, 227-458; 288 NW 629

Inappropriate term as error. The use in an instruction of a wholly inappropriate and confusing term may constitute error. So held in an action for damages growing out of a collision between automobiles, in which action the court instructed that "defendant is liable to plaintiffs for any liability if any, of the driver of said truck".

Christenson v Tel. Co., 222-808; 270 NW 394

Ignoring supported issue. Error results from the failure of the court, in a personal damage action, to submit to the jury a supported issue of negligence as to the absence of sidelights on a truck.

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

Absence of lights—instructions—sufficiency. An instruction that plaintiff would be guilty of contributory negligence if his automobile was not equipped with two white lights on the front is all-sufficient on that particular subject matter.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Defining terms. Where an accident occurred on a street but outside the vehicular part thereof, it is not important that the court failed to designate the scene of the accident either as a "street" or as a "sidewalk".

Dickeson v Lzicar, 208-275; 225 NW 406

Res ipsa loquitur—ambiguous but not erroneous phrase. In an action against a motorist, for colliding with the rear of a horse-drawn vehicle, tried on the theory of res ipsa loquitur, an instruction containing the phrase, "within her exclusive control, or the exclusive control of her authorized driver", as applied to the automobile or instrumentality, held not erroneous as meaning control to the exclusion of each other but rather control to the exclusion of third persons.

Mein v Reed, 224-1274; 278 NW 307

Joint action against owner and operator—erroneous instruction. In a joint action against the owner and operator of an automobile the evidence, manifestly, may be such as to justify a verdict against the operator and in favor of the owner, and in such cases instructions holding the owner liable in case the jury finds the operator liable are fundamentally erroneous.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144

Declarations inadmissible against master. In a joint action against a master and his servant for damages consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the servant, declarations or statements by the servant made several days after the accident and tending to show the negligence of the servant are, while admissible against the servant, not admissible against the master; and the court must by proper instruction, if requested, limit the testimony accordingly.

Drouillard v Rudolph, 207-367; 223 NW 100

Wilkinson v Lbr. Co., 208-933; 226 NW 43

Looney v Parker, 210-85; 230 NW 570

Glass v Hutchinson Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

Non res gestae statements. When a plaintiff seeks to recover damages from the owner of an automobile because of the negligence of the driver, he must prove such negligence by evidence other and different than the non res gestae statements and declarations of the driver, and where the owner and the driver are co-defendants the court must exercise meticulous care to instruct the jury accordingly.

Cooley v Killingsworth, 209-646; 228 NW 880

Wieneke v Steinke, 211-477; 233 NW 535

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Non res gestae statements of drivers. Non res gestae statements of the driver of an automobile tending to show his negligence are not competent against the owner of the vehicle, nor are such statements of the owner competent evidence against the driver, and the court must clearly and definitely so instruct. In addition the court must submit separate forms of verdict if requested.

Broderick v Barry, 212-672; 237 NW 481; 75 ALR 1530

Verdicts—submission of separate forms. In an action against the driver and owner of a truck, held, the omission to submit separate forms of verdict for each defendant was not prejudicial error—the court having specifically and correctly instructed the jury as to separate liability of each defendant.

Carlson v Decker & Sons, 218-54; 253 NW 923

Separate forms of verdicts. In a joint action against the driver of an automobile and the owner of the vehicle, wherein necessity arises so to instruct as to limit the effect of the driver's admissions to the question of his liability, and the effect of the owner's admissions to the question of his liability, separate forms of verdict must be submitted, if requested.

Broderick v Barry, 212-672; 237 NW 481; 75 ALR 1530

Counterclaim — instruction to disregard. Where plaintiff sued (1) for damages to his car, and (2) on an assignment of the claim of his injured passenger, and defendant counterclaimed for damages to his car, no error occurs in instructing the jury to disregard defendant's claim if a finding is returned for plaintiff, and such finding is so returned.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Operation with consent of owner—scope of employment. In an action against the owner of an automobile on the theory that the car was being operated by the owner's agent and with the owner's consent, the court may very properly instruct that there could not be a recovery unless the driver was, at the time in question, driving within the scope of his employment—such instruction being directly applicable to the supported claim of said owner.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Harmless assumption of fact. The assumption in instructions of the fact that an automobile was being operated with the consent of the owner does not constitute reversible error when the evidence bearing on the element of consent was the one persuasive and unquestioned fact that the owner was riding in the car with the driver thereof at the time of the accident.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Insured claim. The act of plaintiff in persistently keeping before the jury the fact that the defendant carried casualty insurance against the claim sued on constitutes reversible error—an error which is not cured by an instruction to disregard such fact of insurance.

Miller v Kooker, 208-687; 224 NW 46

Evidence of insurance—failure to strike not cured by instructions. Evidence that the owner of an automobile had stated that he did not go out to the scene of the accident after a collision in which the automobile was involved because the car was insured and he would let the insurance company take care of it, improperly injected the question of insurance in an action for damages resulting from the collision. The failure to strike such evidence was error which was not cured by the court's direction to the jury to disregard it.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-154; 239 NW 905

Incompetent testimony incidentally received—withdrawal. The incidental reception in evidence of testimony tending to show that defendant in an action for damages growing out of a collision of vehicles carried indemnity insurance, when the same is withdrawn by the court, will not constitute reversible error.

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

Double recovery. The submission to the jury of duplicate counts—counts praying recovery on the same elements of damages—and permitting recovery on both such counts is clearly erroneous.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144

Loss and injury—failure to limit. Instructions which direct the jury to allow damages for such loss and injuries as necessarily resulted from the accident complained of are too broad because not limited to the loss and injuries properly set out in the petition, and sustained by the evidence.

Balik v Flacker, 212-1381; 238 NW 467

Instruction—sufficiency. Instructions to the effect that the jury should determine from the evidence the amount due plaintiff for injuries to person and property, and allow him such sum as would fairly compensate him, reviewed and held to reveal no error.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Future pain—instructions—adequacy. An instruction to the effect that a recovery would be limited to "the fair and reasonable compensation for personal injury, pain and suffering, past and future * * * as shown by the evidence", is sufficient on the subject of future pain and suffering in the absence of a request for elaboration.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Permanent cripple—future pain—correct instruction. In a personal injury action arising from a motor vehicle collision, an allegation that plaintiff has been crippled for life, sustained by some evidence, justifies an instruction that the jury may allow such sum as in their judgment will fairly compensate plaintiff for future pain and for being crippled.

Clark v Berry Seed Co., 225-262; 280 NW 505

Instructions limiting damages. An instruction in a personal injury action limiting recovery to medical, hospital, nursing, and ambulance service, permanent disfigurement, and for pain and suffering, cannot be deemed in any sense to submit the question of damages for loss of time.

Carlson v Decker, 216-581; 247 NW 296

Headaches—pain and suffering—instruction. In an action to recover for personal injuries sustained in an automobile collision where plaintiff testified that headaches causing much suffering affected him since the accident, and when an expert witness testified that plaintiff's injury might have caused headaches and that the injury might be permanent, an instruction permitting recovery for future pain and suffering from headaches was not erroneous and properly submitted the question to the jury.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Instruction on future and anticipatory damages. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from an automobile collision where petition alleged damages for future medical expenses and the evidence showed plaintiff received severe permanent injuries to his back and spine, suffered intense pain, and received two hernias, together with other injuries, an instruction on future and anticipatory expenses was held proper and supported by the evidence.

Kramer v Henely, 227-504; 288 NW 610

Separating personal injury damage claims. Instructions limiting the amount of total recovery which could be allowed the plaintiff, but not advising how much was claimed for pain and suffering and for permanent disability, were erroneous, and, being erroneous, prejudice is presumed unless the record is such as to overcome the presumption.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Damages—ten percent permanent injury to arm. Where a petition alleges ten percent injury to an arm and asks $1,000 damages therefor, it is not error to permit the jury to return a verdict for the full amount when the evidence shows some permanent injury to the arm and the court in another instruction limited the recovery to the damages sustained.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

(b) DEFINING TERMS

Confused use of word "accident". The use in instruction of the word "accident", both (1) in the sense of an occurrence that was inevitable, and (2) in the sense of an occurrence happening because of negligence, is not necessarily confusing.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Inevitable accident—failure to define. Failure to define the term "inevitable accident" does not result in error when the instruction is correct as far as it goes and when a request for a definition is not made.

Hamilton v Boyd, 218-885; 256 NW 290

"Assured clear distance ahead"—improper definition. Reversible error results from instructing that "assured clear distance ahead" as used in our statute "means the distance ahead within which the driver of an automobile is sure and certain that the highway is not occupied by other vehicles or persons".

Groshens v Lund, 222-49; 268 NW 496

Crosswalks.

Scott v McKelvey, 228- ; 290 NW 729

Contributory negligence—sole cause of injury. An instruction that "where a party is injured and such injury is due to his own negligence he cannot recover," tho incorporated in a paragraph defining contributory negligence, does not have the effect of declaring that the contributory negligence which will bar an injured party from recovering must be a negligence which is the sole cause of the injury.

Ryan v Rendering Works, 215-363; 245 NW 301

Instruction. No particular or fixed phraseology is required in conveying to a jury, in a case founded on negligence, the idea that plaintiff cannot recover if he has, by his own negligence, contributed in any degree to his own injury.

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

Model instruction. Courts, in instructing as to contributory negligence which will bar recovery, should employ the model instruction approved by the appellate court, viz.: "If the injured party contributed in any way or in any degree directly to the injury complained of there can be no recovery," but it is not erroneous to substitute "cooperated" or an equivalent term for "contributed".

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787

Contributory negligence—degree barring recovery. In an action for damages based on actionable negligence of the defendant, the quantum of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff which will absolutely bar recovery is any negligence which directly contributes to said injury "in any way or in any degree". Any material departure in the instructions from this statement of the law must be deemed reversible error.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Rogers v Lagomarcino Co., 215-1270; 248 NW 1

Hellberg v Lund, 217-1; 250 NW 192

Becvar v Batesole, 218-858; 256 NW 297

Hamilton v Boyd, 218-885; 256 NW 290

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

Meggers v Kinley, 221-383; 265 NW 614

Swan v Auto Co., 221-842; 265 NW 143

Clark v Seed Co., 225-262; 280 NW 505

Contributory negligence—adequate definition. An instruction which defines "contributory negligence" as such negligence as "helps" to produce the injury complained of is not erroneous when accompanied by a correct definition of negligence generally.

(b) DEFINING TERMS—continued

Swan v Auto Co., 221-842; 265 NW 143

Contributory negligence—negligence must “directly” contribute. Instruction reaffirmed requiring plaintiff's negligence to contribute “directly” to the injuries before it will defeat recovery.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Contributory negligence. Instructions relative to contributory negligence reviewed, and held sufficient.

McDougal v Bormann, 211-950; 234 NW 807

Contributory negligence—definition—fundamental error. An unobjectionable definition of contributory negligence is converted into fundamental error by the addition of the clause “and but for such negligence on the part of the person injured the injury would not have occurred.”

Ryan v Perry Works, 215-363; 245 NW 301

“Control” of car—definition. Ordinarily, it is not erroneous for the court to instruct the jury that the driver of an automobile has it under control when he has the ability to guide and direct its course of movement, to fix its speed, and bring it to a stop within a reasonable time.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Control of car. Failure of the court to define the term “under control” (as employed in the statutory duty of the operator of an automobile to have his car “under control”) does not constitute error, in the absence of a request for such defining.

Altfilisch v Wessel, 208-361; 225 NW 862; 29 NCCA 95

Failure to define “prima facie”. An instruction characterizing certain acts of omission and commission, if found by the jury, as prima facie evidence of negligence, is not necessarily rendered erroneous because the court failed to define said term “prima facie”.

Wolfe v Decker, 221-600; 266 NW 4

Intersection of highway—instructions. Where a north and south highway splits into two curves near an east and west highway, and connects with the latter at two points some 900 feet apart, it is not erroneous for the court to instruct that the intersection embraces the entire distance of 900 feet (1) when the evidence tends to show that the authorized public authorities have treated said distance as the intersection, and (2) when the instruction is manifestly given for the sole purpose of guiding the jury in applying the statutory command (§5031, C., '35) that motorists shall reduce their speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing intersections of public highways.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Improper definition of “intersection”. There was no error nor abuse of discretion by the court in granting a new trial in a motor vehicle damage case on the ground that an incorrect definition of “intersection” was given to the jury, when the correct definition was a matter of statute, even tho both parties to the action during the trial used the wrong interpretation of the term as it was given by the court.

Hupp v Doolittle, 226-814; 285 NW 247

“Intersection” of highways—definition. In a damage action arising from a collision of motor vehicles at a highway intersection, where the question of negligence centered largely around the rights of the parties within the intersection, it was prejudicial error to instruct the jury that “intersection” is the area within the fence lines, if such fence lines were extended across the road, when a statute defines “intersection” as being the area within the lateral boundary lines of highways which join.

Hupp v Doolittle, 226-814; 285 NW 247

Instructions—paraphrasing “legal excuse”. The phrase, “explained or justified by the evidence”, used as a substitute in instructions for the term “legal excuse”, should be avoided as possibly permitting the jury to consider evidence which would not constitute a legal excuse as defined in another instruction, but under the evidence and considered with other instructions held no reversible error.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Definition of negligence approved. Instruction defining “negligence” and otherwise correct is not rendered erroneous because it includes the statement that “such care is proportionate to the apparent danger involved; where the apparent danger is great, a greater care is required than where such apparent danger is slight.” So held against the contention that degrees of negligence are not recognized in this state.

Wolfe v Decker, 221-600; 266 NW 4

Negligence—correct definition. Instruction reviewed and held to constitute a correct definition of actionable negligence.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Negligence—erroneous definition. A definition of “negligence” which is so broad as to permit the jury to predicate a finding of negligence on the violation of a statute law of the road when the facts rendering such statute applicable are neither pleaded nor proven is necessarily erroneous and prejudicial.

Gross v Bakery, 209-40; 227 NW 620

Negligence—explanatory instruction omitting contributory negligence. Where, on a snow-covered highway containing a single pair of ruts, two automobiles approaching each other, collide on a hill, in a damage action by a passenger injured thereby, an instruction further explaining negligence, but not mentioning contributory negligence, is not erroneous when contributory negligence was covered in other instructions, and when the jury could not have been misled by the explanatory purpose of the instruction.

Tallmon v Larson, 226-564; 284 NW 367

Obscure definition of "ordinary care". An instruction which, somewhat obscurely, defines ordinary care as such care as is commensurate with the danger to be apprehended from the circumstances surrounding or facing the actor may nevertheless be adequate.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Ordinary care—definition reaffirmed. The standard definition of ordinary care need not be augmented by adding an extra word "ordinarily" to the phrases "would do" or "would not do under the circumstances".

Shalk v Smith, 224-904; 277 NW 303
Johnston v Johnson, 225-77; 279 NW 139;
118 ALR 233

Use of highway—care. Instructions reviewed and held correctly to state the degree of care which is incumbent on a person using a highway.

Ryan v Shirk, 207-1327; 224 NW 824

Preponderance of evidence. In defining "preponderance of evidence" as evidence which is "more convincing as to its truth", the court does not, in effect, say that evidence cannot constitute a preponderance unless the jury is satisfied that it is true.

Priest v Hogan, 218-1371; 257 NW 403

Preponderance of evidence erroneously defined. It is error to define "preponderance of the credible evidence" as the testimony which best satisfies the juror's mind "that it is true", because it implies that the jury must be fully convinced of the truth of the testimony which controls the decision on an issue.

Heacock v Baule, 216-311; 249 NW 437; 93 ALR 151; 36 NCCA 25

Res ipsa loquitur. In an action against a motorist for colliding with the rear of a horse-drawn vehicle, tried on the theory of res ipsa loquitur, an instruction containing the phrase, "within her exclusive control, or the exclusive control of her authorized driver", as applied to the automobile or instrumentality, held not erroneous as meaning control to the exclusion of each other, but rather control to the exclusion of third persons.

Mein v Reed, 224-1274; 278 NW 307

"Street" or "sidewalk". Where an accident occurred on a street, but outside the vehicular part thereof, it is not important that the court failed to designate the scene of the accident either as a "street" or as a "sidewalk."

Dickeson v Lzicar, 208-275; 225 NW 406

Yielding half of traveled way—beaten path (?) or entire roadway (?). When the plaintiff's truck turned left at a blind corner, keeping to the right of the beaten path, but not to the right side of the graveled highway, and collided with the defendant's car which was approaching the corner on the right side of the road, it was not improper to instruct the jury that a car must yield half the traveled or graveled part of the road when meeting another car, and that for the plaintiff to recover, it must be found that the truck was hit while on the right side of the road; or, for a recovery to be had by the defendant on a counterclaim, that the plaintiff was negligent in not yielding half the road.

Kiesau v Vangen, 226-824; 285 NW 181

(c) BALANCING INSTRUCTIONS

Fact of collision—negligence. A general allegation that defendant was negligent "in driving his truck against plaintiff's automobile" should not be submitted to the jury unless the jury is properly guarded against finding negligence from the naked fact that defendant's truck came into collision with plaintiff's automobile.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

Unallowable limitation on materiality of evidence. Reversible error results to an unsuccessful plaintiff (in an action pivoted on the issue whether defendant traveling northward yielded half of the traveled way to plaintiff traveling southward) from instructions to the effect that "evidence that defendant just preceding the collision swerved his car to the west is material on the issue whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, even tho plaintiff had not alleged such swerving as a specific act of negligence on the part of defendant". The vice is not in what the court does say but in what the court does not say, to wit: that said evidence is material on the issue of defendant's negligence.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Explanatory instruction omitting contributory negligence. Where, on a snow-covered highway containing a single pair of ruts, two automobiles approaching each other, collide on a hill, in a damage action by a passenger injured thereby, an instruction further explaining negligence, but not mentioning contributory negligence, is not erroneous when contributory negligence was covered in other instructions, and when the jury could not have been misled by the explanatory purpose of the instruction.

(c) BALANCING INSTRUCTIONS—concluded

Weight to be given admission. A cautionary instruction pertaining to the weight to be given an alleged oral admission of defendant to plaintiff following a motor vehicle accident should include a counterbalancing statement that if the admission were deliberately made or often repeated, it might be the most satisfactory evidence.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

(d) PARAPHRASING PLEADINGS, STATUTES

Copying pleadings. Literally copying portions of the pleadings into the instructions is unobjectionable if the issues are thereby fairly and concisely stated.

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787

Copying pleadings. The appellate court again, quite pointedly, expresses its surprise that occasionally some trial courts, in attempting to state the issues to the jury, do not recognize the impropriety of copying verbose pleadings into the instructions.

But error and the resulting confusion in copying pleadings will be deemed cured by the later action of the court in the instructions, in clearly and definitely confining the jury to the proper issues.

Young v Jacobsen Bros., 219-483; 258 NW 104

Copying pleadings — when nonprejudicial. Practice of stating case in language of pleadings, except where pleadings concisely and clearly state the substance of the controversy, condemned by court.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Fact of collision—negligence. A general allegation that defendant was negligent "in driving his truck against plaintiff's automobile" should not be submitted to the jury unless the jury is properly guarded against finding negligence from the naked fact that defendant's truck came into collision with plaintiff's automobile.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

Repealed statute — requested instruction properly refused. In automobile guest's personal injury action resulting in jury verdict for defendant, plaintiff's request for new trial because of refusal to give an instruction to the effect that it was the duty of a driver of an overtaken automobile, upon signal, to drive to the "right center of the traveled way" and remain there until overtaking automobile shall have "safely passed" was properly refused, since such statute was repealed at time plaintiff was injured, and new statute only required such driver to "give way to the right" until overtaking vehicle had "completely passed".

Jones v Krambeck, 228- ; 290 NW 56

Following statute enacted after accident.

Where an automobile collides at night with a truck displaying no lights, it is error to instruct in the language of §5029, C., '35 [§§5023.01, 5023.02, C., '39], that plaintiff had a right to assume that others using the highway would obey the law, when such collision causing the injuries complained of occurred before this right of assumption was added by the legislature, and the statute had previously been construed that a driver had no such right.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

Others' compliance with law assumed—when presumption fails. The right of a motorist to assume that others using the highway will obey the law ceases when he knows that another motorist is not obeying the law. When such motorist testifies that he saw an approaching car skidding and he then drove on the wrong side of a city street to avoid that car, he is not entitled to the embodiment of such rule of assumption in instructions to the jury.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Undue paraphrasing of pleadings. The paraphrasing by the court in the instructions of pleaded negligence must not go to the extent of wholly omitting a material assignment of negligence. So held where the omitted assignment charged "reckless driving on a wet and slippery road".

Rainey v Riese, 219-164; 257 NW 346

Inadequate submission of grounds of negligence. Prejudicial error results from failure to submit to the jury all well-pleaded, separate specifications of negligence which have been established as jury questions and as the alleged compound negligence attending a given transaction, it appearing that the plaintiff has been defeated on an inadequate submission.

Hanson v Manning, 213-625; 239 NW 793

Negligence — justifiable paraphrase of grounds. Both of two grounds of negligence are properly submitted to the jury (1) when the pleadings fairly justify such action, (2) when the court so paraphrased the pleadings, and (3) when the cause was tried on the theory that both grounds were involved.

Buchanan v Cream. Co., 215-415; 246 NW 41

Dragnet instructions under dragnet allegations. A dragnet allegation that defendant drove his automobile in a "careless, negligent and reckless manner without due regard of the safety of others in excess of 25 miles an hour" and "not under proper control", does not justify or permit dragnet instructions which largely cover the statutory law respecting the operation of automobiles, and which thereby places before the jury the duty to determine whether said statutes or some of them have been violated.

Holub v Fitzgerald, 214-857; 243 NW 575

Contributory negligence—error in quoting statute only. In submitting specifications of alleged contributory negligence, the court commits error in simply quoting the statute relating to these grounds without defining just what acts of plaintiff, under the evidence, would constitute contributory negligence, and without applying the law to the facts.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Law of road—justifiable assumption. The operators of automobiles have the right to assume, when they meet on the highway, that the other will yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right; and it is erroneous to refuse a request for such instruction.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Right-side driving—peremptory instruction. Instructions that a party is in duty bound to drive on the right-hand side of a highway, or that he must so drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, without any qualification relative to the driver's right to show legal excuse for driving otherwise, are not erroneous when the driver offers no excuse.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Yielding half of highway—abstract instruction as reversible error. An instruction, tho in the language of the statute, e. g., that "motor vehicles, meeting each other on the public highway, shall give one-half of the traveled way thereof by turning to the right", may constitute reversible error when unaccompanied by any reference to a sudden emergency which is presented as an excuse for a car actually being on the wrong side of the road at the time of a collision.

Christenson v Tel. Co., 222-808; 270 NW 394

Violation of statute—excuse—required instruction. When the violation of a particular law of the road is pleaded by plaintiff as a ground for recovery of damages and such violation is treated as in issue (tho the applicability of the statute be quite doubtful), the court commits error in failing to instruct as to the effect of defendant's evidence tending to legal excuse such alleged violation.

Rich v Herny, 222-465; 269 NW 489

Negligence in re yielding half of highway—interpretation by court of allegation. An allegation, that "defendant negligently drove his car in a northerly direction and allowed it to travel to the west of the center of the highway and encroached upon the line of travel of the plaintiff" (who was traveling in a southerly direction), is properly interpreted by the court as simply charging that defendant failed to yield one-half of the traveled way to plaintiff.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Failure to yield half of way—equivalent allegation. Plaintiff's allegation that defendant, on meeting plaintiff's car on the highway, negligently usurped plaintiff's side of the highway is, in effect, an allegation that defendant failed, on meeting plaintiff, to yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right, and, under supporting evidence justifies an instruction accordingly.

Foster v Flaugh, 223-40; 271 NW 503

Driving on wrong side—necessary instructions. In submitting to the jury the alleged negligence of driving to the left of the center of a traveled way, or driving upon the wrong or left side of the highway, the court must specifically define to the jury what acts would constitute negligence under said allegations.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Driving on wrong side—quoting statute insufficient. In submitting to the jury the alleged negligence of driving to the left of the center of the traveled way, or driving upon the wrong side of the highway, the court must specifically define what acts would constitute negligence under such allegations, and this may not be done by simply quoting the statute

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Paraphrasing allegation of negligence. An allegation that defendant drove his vehicle past a stationary vehicle at an excessive and dangerous rate of speed renders proper, on supporting proof, an instruction as to the duty of the defendant to reduce his speed to a reasonable rate when approaching and passing the stationary vehicle.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Collision with bicycle—failure to turn to left when passing. Where a motorist driving east 40 to 50 miles per hour at night on a paved highway, the lights on vehicle working properly (no rain, fog, or snow), his attention being momentarily diverted by an oncoming car, and, simultaneously with its passing, he collided with and fatally injured a bicycle rider, also traveling east, instructions covering diverting circumstances relative to speed (§5029, C., '35) and failing to turn to left when passing vehicle (§5022, C., '35) reviewed and held to present correctly questions for jury.

Instructions—granting jury undue license. The court is, to say the least, perilously close to committing reversible error when it instructs the jury, even in the literal words of the statute that it should determine whether an automobile was driven "at a careful and prudent speed * * *, having due regard to the traffic, the surface and width of the highway, and of any other conditions then existing". The vice of the instruction is its failure affirm-actively to limit the jury to a consideration of conditions as shown by the evidence.

Groshens v Lund, 222-49; 268 NW 496

Left turn—collision with overtaking and passing vehicle. In a personal injury action arising out of an automobile-truck collision occurring when the automobile in which plaintiff was riding with husband-driver was passing a truck which attempted to make a left turn into driveway of a farm just as the automobile came alongside, and when the automobile driver, attempting to avoid an accident by speeding ahead of truck, collided therewith, held, that statute relating to speed, which requires reasonable speed with due regard to existing conditions, the truck being the only "existing condition" at the time and place of accident, was inapplicable, and the court properly instructed jury only on the statute governing passing vehicles as affecting automobile driver's contributory negligence, which would be imputed to plaintiff by court's former instruction.

Monen v Jewel Tea Co., 227-547; 288 NW 637

Paraphrasing allegation of control. It is quite proper for the court to paraphrase an allegation charging negligence in that defendant "lost control of his car", and to submit the charge in the paraphrased form.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

Negligence under control and speed ordinance. It was not error to submit to the jury the question of negligence based on the violation of a city ordinance with reference to control and speed of a motor vehicle when the ordinance merely embodied the provisions of a statute.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Undue burden. No undue burden is imposed on a defending street railway company by requiring it to keep its car "under proper control and to use ordinary care", to operate its car "in a careful manner and not at a dangerous rate of speed", and to give notice of its approach "by ringing the gong or bell or otherwise", when the pleaded assignment of negligence embraces (1) excessive speed, (2) want of proper control of the car, and (3) failure to give warning of the approach of the car.

Johnson v Railway, 201-1044; 207 NW 984

Approaching intersection—reducing speed. In an action for personal injuries sustained by driver of a motor vehicle in collision with another vehicle which entered intersection from the left, an instruction stating that the statute requires any person operating a motor vehicle to have the same under control and reduce the speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing a crossing or intersection of public highways was correct. Since the jury in most cases must determine from the circumstances whether there had been a compliance with such statute, question was properly submitted.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Requiring excessive proof of speed. An instruction is erroneous when it requires negligence to be established "in the respects charged in the petition", and the negligence so charged is (1) excessive speed, (2) excessive speed after warning, and (3) excessive speed while traveling on loose gravel.

Codner v Stowe, 201-800; 208 NW 330

Departure from pleaded theory. A plaintiff who predicates negligence in the operation of an automobile solely on the fact that defendant failed to give a warning signal after discovering plaintiff's position of danger, may not complain that the court failed to instruct on the statutory duty to give a warning signal "on approaching tops of hills and intersecting highways".

Ryan v Shirk, 207-1327; 224 NW 824

Assured clear distance—erroneous instructions. Instructions relative to the statutory duties of the operator of an automobile, (1) to have the vehicle under control, and (2) to so drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, reviewed and held prejudicially misleading and erroneous.

Swan v Auto Co., 221-842; 265 NW 143; 1 NCCA(NS) 58

Assured clear distance ahead—proper paraphrase. The statutory command so to drive as to be able to stop "within the assured clear distance ahead" is properly paraphrased in instructions as ability to stop "within the distance that discernible objects may be seen ahead".

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505; 1 NCCA(NS) 63, 80

Assured clear distance ahead. Altho the driver of a truck which was following another truck on an icy street on which two cars were parked, could see past the truck and the cars and could have stopped within the distance he could see, when he ran into the truck ahead after it had skidded and turned around, there was a jury question as to whether he had been complying with the assured clear distance ahead rule, and it was proper to give an instruction imposing on him the duty to refrain from driving at a speed greater than would permit him to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Assured clear distance.

Janes v Roach, 228- ; 290 NW 87

Failure of lights—necessary instructions. The operation of an automobile during the nighttime without the required number of lights is not necessarily negligent; and in submitting such issue the court must (especially when requested) clearly state to the jury the circumstances under which the operator would under the statute be negligent and the circumstances under which he would not under the statute be negligent.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Paraphrasing allegations of injuries. The court, in stating the issues to the jury, may very properly paraphrase an allegation as to the injuries which plaintiff claims to have suffered.

McCoy v Cole, 216-1320; 249 NW 213

(e) BURDEN OF PROOF

Statutory noncompliance without legal excuse. An instruction stating that if a defendant motorist failed to comply with the requirements of a statute "without legal excuse", then the verdict should be for the plaintiff, does not shift the plaintiff's burden of proof on the defendant.

Schalk v Smith, 224-904; 277 NW 303

Excuse—improper burden of proof. Reversible error results from an instruction that defendant's failure, on meeting plaintiff, to yield half of the traveled way would be prima facie evidence of negligence unless defendant has established by a preponderance of the evidence his excuse for not so yielding, when defendant did not plead said excuse as an affirmative defense, but, under a general denial, presented it in his evidence.

Rich v Herny, 222-465; 269 NW 489

Emergency—burden of proof. The fact that the evidence in an action for damages reveals a claim by defendant that the accident happened under the circumstances of an unexpected emergency furnishes no justification for an instruction that defendant has the burden to establish the existence of such emergency.

McKeever v Batcheler, 219-93; 257 NW 567

Person creating sudden emergency—negligence not excused. Defendant's contention that he acted as he did because faced with a sudden emergency will not place the burden on the plaintiff to prove there was no such emergency when, if it did exist, it was created by the defendant himself, and an instruction placing on plaintiff the burden of proving nonexistence of the emergency is erroneous.

Bletzer v Wilson, 224-884; 276 NW 836

Driver on wrong side of highway—presumption. It is erroneous to instruct that where a collision occurs between two vehicles at a time when one of the vehicles is on the wrong side of the road, the presumption is that the collision was caused by the negligence of the driver who was on the wrong side of the road.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

Negligence per se. Operating an automobile upon the public highway at a speed prohibited by law constitutes negligence per se, and error results from instructing that such operation creates a presumption of negligence.

Codner v Stowe, 201-800; 208 NW 330; 26 NCCA 207

Holub v Fitzgerald, 214-857; 243 NW 575
Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555
Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660;
1 NCCA(NS) 50

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561
Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223
Grover v Neibauer, 216-631; 247 NW 298

No-eyewitness rule—inapplicability under direct evidence. Where a motorist and other eyewitnesses testify as to deceased's conduct just prior to his driving into the side of a moving train, it is error to instruct on the presumption that defendant's natural instinct of self-preservation would prompt him not to run into a moving train, when direct evidence as to his conduct is obtainable.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

Negligence directly contributing to one's injury. Instructions are correct which, as a whole, direct the jury that plaintiff must show that he did not, by any negligence on his part, directly contribute in any degree to his injury, even tho one of the instructions does not carry the limiting clause "in any degree."

O'Hara v Chaplin, 211-404; 233 NW 516

Contributory negligence. It is strictly accurate to instruct, in an action for damages for negligently inflicted injuries, that, before plaintiff can recover, he must establish as a fact that he, himself, "was not guilty of any negligence that contributed in any manner or degree directly to his own injury".

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505; 1 NCCA(NS) 166

Requiring defendant to prove allegations of co-defendant. In damage action, by one riding in an automobile, against a truck driver and his employer where defense was conducted jointly and where, in respect to negligence, the question was whether negligence of the automobile driver or the negligence of the truck driver was the sole proximate cause of the accident, it was not prejudicial error to instruct jury that burden was upon both defendants to prove negligence of automobile driver, affirmatively alleged by the employer alone.

Usher v Stafford, 227-443; 288 NW 432

Third party negligence as defense. A defendant who pleads that the sole and proximate cause of an injury was the negligence of a third party cannot complain that the court instructs that the negligence of said third person is immaterial unless defendant establishes that such negligence was the sole and proximate cause of said injury.

(e) BURDEN OF PROOF—concluded

Negating defendant's plea. In an action for damages consequent on plaintiff being negligently struck and injured by defendant's automobile [in which action defendant pleads (1) a denial that his car struck plaintiff, and (2) that plaintiff was struck and injured by some other vehicle], the court commits reversible error by instructing that the plaintiff cannot recover unless plaintiff establishes by a preponderance of the evidence not only (1) that defendant's car struck and injured plaintiff, but (2) that no other car struck and injured plaintiff.

Griffin v Stuart, 222-815; 270 NW 442

(f) UNSUPPORTED ISSUES

Plea and proof as basis. Instructions without plea or proof as a basis thereof are erroneous.

Dickeson v Lzicar, 208-275; 225 NW 406
Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17
Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505
Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Unsupported charge of negligence. Unsupported charges of negligence should not be submitted to the jury.

Wilkinson v Lumber Co., 203-476; 212 NW 682

Instructions regarding open car door—proper evidence necessary. Submission to jury of a ground of negligence not supported by the evidence is erroneous. So held where trial court submitted specification of negligence that left rear door of defendant's car was open at time of collision with approaching motorcycle, whereas only testimony on this question came from witnesses who were not present until after accident occurred.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Unsupported issues. Presumptively, prejudicial error results from submitting unsupported issues to the jury; but record reviewed and held to support the submission of all assignments of negligence in an automobile accident case.

Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442

Unsupported issue of general negligence. Instruction injecting unpleaded and unproved specification of general negligence is reversible error.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Conformity to general allegation—nonerror. An assignment of error that a general allegation of negligence specifying "In not operating and driving said truck in a careful and prudent manner on a public highway" should not have been submitted to the jury, because such phraseology implied a moving vehicle, is without merit when there is substantial evidentiary conflict as to whether the truck was moving or stopped.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

Assuming other motorist will obey law—inapplicable instructions refused. Requested instructions that a motorist had a right to assume that taxi driver would obey the law as to speed and lookout, altho correct as abstract propositions of law, are properly refused when not supported by the evidence.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

Others' compliance with law assumed—when presumption fails. The right of a motorist to assume that others using the highway will obey the law ceases when he knows that another motorist is not obeying the law. When such motorist testifies that he saw an approaching car skidding and then drove on the wrong side of a city street to avoid that car, he is not entitled to the embodiment of such rule of assumption in instructions to the jury.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Lookout—negligence—proximate cause. Unsupported issues are very properly and necessarily excluded from the jury. So held as to the issues (1) whether the operator of an automobile failed to maintain a proper lookout, (2) whether he was negligent in stepping out of the car and upon the running board preparatory to cleaning the sleet from the windshield, and (3) whether the snowy and icy condition of the pavement was the proximate cause of an accident.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770; 39 NCCA 308

Passenger's contributory negligence—imputing from driver. In a damage action where a truck, traversing the crest of a hill on a snow-drifted highway, sideswipes a passenger automobile, the question of contributory negligence of a plaintiff motorist riding in the back seat should not be submitted to the jury in the absence of any claim that plaintiff's driver's negligence, if any, was imputable to the plaintiff or was the sole proximate cause of the accident.

Schalk v Smith, 224-904; 277 NW 303

Absence of rear reflectors—nonproximate cause. A "sideswipe" collision between two head-on approaching automobiles could not proximately result from the absence of red reflectors on the rear of the body, and no instruction involving this negligence should be given.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Tire blowout as sole and only cause of injury. In a personal injury action against an automobile owner, where plaintiff complained of instruction denying a recovery if the blowing out of the tire was the sole and only cause of the damage, for the alleged reason that the instruction was not warranted by evidence showing that the car, after swerving to the left, veered back and forth, eventually going into the ditch on right side of the road, as this evidence refuted the driver's testimony that she was excited and did nothing to gain control of the car, held, the question of driver's negligence was before the jury, and the instruction was proper.

Nonpleaded negligence. Instructions that the jury should not consider the failure to ring a bell on a streetcar as a ground of negligence are properly refused (1) when plaintiff pleads no such ground of negligence, (2) when no such ground was submitted to the jury, and (3) when the testimony relative to such failure was received without objection.

Watson v Railway, 217-1194; 251 NW 31

Undue care—instructions harmless. An instruction that a motorman on a streetcar must keep a "constant" lookout for drivers of vehicles on the street is not subject to the exception that it requires an undue degree of care, when the sole issue on trial is whether the motorman, being fully aware of the dangerous position of the vehicle in question, could have avoided the injury by ordinary care.

Lynch v Railway, 215-1119; 245 NW 219

Unsupported negligence. An instruction authorizing a finding of negligence on the part of a railroad company if an employee thereof discovered the danger of an approaching vehicle and did not in the exercise of ordinary care report such danger to the engineer is wholly inapplicable to a record which clearly reveals the fact that when the employee aforesaid discovered the danger no ordinary care could have prevented the accident.

Gilliam v Railway, 206-1291; 222 NW 12

Unavoidable accident. Reversible error results from submitting the issue whether the engineer of a railway train was negligent in not maintaining a proper lookout for automobiles approaching a public crossing, when the evidence shows to the contrary and that the approaching automobile was discovered at the earliest reasonable opportunity, which was too late to prevent the accident.

Simmons v Railway, 217-1277; 252 NW 516

Supplanting issue of negligence with inevitable accident. When the record testimony shows that a collision between automobiles and the resulting damage was caused (1) by the negligence of the plaintiff, or (2) by the negligence of the defendant, or (3) by the negligence of both parties, the court must not in its instructions depart from the issues of negligence and inject into the instructions the theory of inevitable accident.

Christenson v Tel. Co., 222-808; 270 NW 394

"Inevitable" accident—absence of evidence. An instruction on the subject of "inevitable" accident is wholly improper when there is no evidence whatever supporting such a theory.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Confusing and unsupported instructions in re "inevitable accident". Instructions with reference to an "inevitable" accident and defendant's nonliability therefor are wholly out of place when there is no applicable evidence in the record.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Last clear chance—erroneous submission. The submission to the jury of the issue of last clear chance is improper on undisputed testimony that, while an automobile was moving along a traffic-congested street at a speed of from five to ten miles an hour, a pedestrian negligently placed himself in a position of danger in front of said car, but that the operator of said car did not discover said position of danger until his car was only seven feet from said pedestrian, and that thereupon said operator applied or attempted to apply his brakes but not in time to avoid injuring said pedestrian.

Spaulding v Miller, 220-1107; 264 NW 8

Excessive speed—view obstructed. The submission of the issue of speed of a vehicle, in excess of that fixed by statute when the view is obstructed, is necessarily erroneous when there is no evidence that the view was obstructed.

Stoner v Hutzell, 212-1061; 237 NW 487

Unpleaded and unsupported qualification. The abstract proposition that a pedestrian who steps suddenly in front of a moving vehicle is guilty of negligence per se need not be limited by the effect of sudden fright or surprise on the part of the pedestrian when no such claim is made in the pleadings or evidence.

Ryan v Shirk, 207-1327; 224 NW 824

Failure to signal. Whether the operator of an automobile failed to give proper signal on approaching a crossing should not be submitted to the jury when admittedly the complaining pedestrian had full and explicit knowledge of the immediate presence and approach of said car.

Wilkinson v Lbr. Co., 203-476; 212 NW 682; 31 NCCA 345

Failure to signal "stop". The submission to the jury of the issue whether the driver of a truck failed to give a signal of his intention to stop cannot be justified on the naked statement of a witness who was riding with the driver that he did not "see or hear" the driver give any such signal.

Isaacs v Bruce, 218-759; 254 NW 57

Negligence—absence of evidence re accident. The issue of the alleged negligence of a truck driver in running over and killing a person cannot be properly submitted to the jury on evidence which fails to reveal the facts and circumstances immediately attending the accident itself—which leaves to mere conjecture the manner in which the fatal accident occurred. So held as to a fatal injury to a child.

Westenburg v Johnson, 221-134; 264 NW 18

Unsupported assumption of fact. A requested instruction which erroneously assumes that there is a marked place on a street pavement for the crossing by pedestrians is properly refused.

Minks v Stenberg, 217-119; 250 NW 883

Turning to left of overtaken vehicle. The court manifestly commits no error in failing to instruct that a vehicle approaching another vehicle from the rear should pass to the left of the overtaken vehicle, when such was not the theory upon which the trial was had.

Olson v Shafer, 207-1001; 221 NW 949

Law of road—excuse for violation. Failure to instruct that defendant may excuse his apparent violation of a law of the road is proper when such instruction, if given, would have no support in the evidence.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Legal excuse. Instruction submitting "legal excuse" for violation of the assured clear distance statute is reversible error when neither party raises nor gives evidence upon this issue.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 437

Excusing violation of statute—absence of evidence. While a motorist may plead and establish any recognized legal excuse for having violated a statutory standard of care for the operation of an automobile, yet he is manifestly not entitled to any instruction to the jury on the subject of "excuse" when he wholly fails to establish any excusatory fact.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Emergency as legal excuse—evidentiary support. Question of emergency as being legal excuse should not be submitted to the jury without competent evidence to support it. Held, instruction amply supported in instant case.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Sudden emergency—requested instruction. In the absence of a request therefor, defendant may not complain that the jury was not instructed on the question of sudden emergency, especially where, if it did exist, it was of the defendant's own making.

Schalk v Smith, 224-904; 277 NW 303

Defendant driving on wrong side—no sudden emergency instruction for defendant. In an action for injuries sustained in a collision between a motorcycle driven east by plaintiff on his right, the south, side of the road and an approaching automobile operated by the defendant allegedly on the left, or south, side of road, there was no occasion for court giving instruction to effect that defendant was faced with an emergency, when defendant maintained that he was at all times on his own right side of the road, because if he was on the left, or south, side of highway, the emergency was of his own making.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Insufficient headlights—erroneous submission of issue. The submission to the jury of the issue whether an automobile was being operated with lights which were insufficient to reveal a person or object 75 feet ahead of the lights, without any evidence that the lights did not meet the statutory requirements, constitutes reversible error.

Grover v Neibauer, 216-631; 247 NW 298; 36 NCCA 133

Alleged absence of lights. Testimony by a plaintiff to the effect that, as he entered an intersection, he looked along the intersecting highway to his right (which was the proper direction), and saw no approaching automobile or automobile lights, may be sufficient to justify the court in submitting to the jury the question whether the defendant was operating his car without lights.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Reducing speed at intersection.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Assured clear distance instructions. Principle reaffirmed that instructions on a theory not supported by the evidence are erroneous. So held as to instructions relative to the duty of the driver of a vehicle so to drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Dougherty v McFee, 221-391; 265 NW 176

Assured clear distance—oncoming vehicles. Since as to oncoming vehicles, assured clear distance statute applies only to motorist not traveling on his right-hand side of the road, in an action involving a collision between oncoming vehicles on a foggy night when vehicle in which plaintiff was riding was traveling on the right-hand side of the road, a requested instruction applying the assured clear distance statute to the plaintiff was properly refused.

Gregory v Suhr, 224-954; 277 NW 721

Circumstantial evidence instruction. In a death claim action for negligence arising from an automobile collision occurring in a suburban district of a city where the negligence alleged was in failing to travel on the right-hand side of the street and where along with the physical facts there was direct evidence by the driver of the car wherein decedent was riding, as to decedent's travel on the right-hand side of the street, it was error to give an instruction, applicable only to cases based entirely on circumstantial evidence, when such instruction prevented the jury from properly considering the direct evidence as to where the accident occurred.

Rusch v Hoffman, 223-895; 274 NW 96

Half of traveled way. Instruction dealing with contributory negligence and presenting to the jury a situation involving plaintiff's duty to yield one-half of traveled roadway and to turn to the right unless impossible to do so is reversibly erroneous when neither allegations nor evidence raise this question.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Yielding half of traveled way. Instructions which submit to the jury the questions whether a defendant has shown legal excuses (1) for exceeding a statutory speed limit, or (2) for not having yielded one-half of the traveled way are erroneous when there is no evidence supporting an affirmative finding on either proposition.

Deweese v Transit Lines, 218-1327; 256 NW 428

Intoxication. The inclusion, in the court's recital of the issues, of the defendant's wholly unsupported allegation that the deceased was intoxicated at the time of the collision in question, without any withdrawal of said issue, justifies the court in granting plaintiff, against whom verdict was rendered, a new trial.

Fort v Ferguson, 218-756; 255 NW 501

Failure to limit. Instructions which direct the jury to allow damages for such loss and injuries as necessarily resulted from the accident complained of are too broad because not limited to the loss and injuries properly set out in the petition and sustained by the evidence.

Balik v Flacker, 212-1381; 238 NW 467

Failure to limit damages—fatal error. An instruction which fails to limit the jury in its return of damages (1) to the amount claimed for each item of damages, and (2) to such amount only as shown by the evidence, is prejudicially erroneous.

Andersen v Christensen, 222-177; 268 NW 527

Permanent injuries. Instructions relative to damages for permanent injuries are improper where there is no testimony tending to show permanent injuries.

Wilkinson v Lbr. Co., 203-476; 212 NW 682

Unsupported issue of permanent injuries. In an action for physical injuries sustained by the plaintiff when he was struck by the defendant's automobile, it was reversible error to submit to the jury the question of permanent injuries as a measure of damages when there was no evidence of permanent injuries to support such submission.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Permanent injury. Instructions reviewed, and held not subject to the vice of submitting an unsupported issue of permanent injury.

Groshens v Lund, 222-49; 268 NW 496

Earning capacity of child. Elements of damage not sustained by evidence should not be submitted, which applies to the earning capacity of a 10-year-old school girl in the absence of supporting evidence, but in the instant case the error was harmless, as the jury's possibility of considering such element was very remote.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Unduly comprehensive request. Instructions which are so comprehensive as to authorize and direct a verdict in favor of all defendants are properly rejected when one of the defendants would be liable in any event.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Failure to except. Failure to except to an instruction which submits an unsupported issue is fatal to the right of review on appeal.

Lange v Bedell, 203-1194; 212 NW 354

(g) CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE

Principle stated. Principle reaffirmed that instructions must be construed as a whole.

Starry v Hanold, 202-1180; 211 NW 696

Tallmon v Larson, 226-564; 284 NW 367

Cautionary instruction not necessary. A cautionary instruction to the jury that court did not attempt to embody all applicable law in any one instruction, but in considering any one instruction jury should consider each in light of and in harmony with all other given instructions and apply them as a whole to the evidence would be proper; however, a failure to do so would not be reversible error.

Churchill v Briggs, 225-1187; 282 NW 280

Presentation of conflicting theories—non-assumption of fact issue. Instructions presenting the conflicting theories of the plaintiff and defendant as to a collision between motor vehicles, reviewed, and held, when viewed as a whole, not to assume that the collision occurred in the center of an intersection, said point of collision being in issue.

Ballain v Brazelton, 221-806; 266 NW 522

Approaching or entering intersections—right to proceed. In an action for injuries sustained by driver of a motor vehicle in collision with an automobile approaching an intersection from the left, an instruction which in part states, "If a traveler comes to an intersection and finds no one approaching from the right upon the other highway within such distance and approaching at such a rate of speed as to reasonably indicate danger of a collision, he may proceed as a matter of right to use the intersection, unless from his observation he is apprised to the contrary”, when considered with remainder of instruction, was not prejudicial. Instructions must be taken together, and especially must all parts of one instruction be considered as a whole.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Farfetched construction on use of words. An instruction that each of two operators of automobiles had the right “to assume” that the other would comply with the laws of the road (as correctly stated by the court) is not subject to the farfetched and hypercritical construction that thereby an operator was authorized to assume such compliance when he knew there had been a violation.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

Sole cause of injury. An instruction that “where a party is injured and such injury is due to his own negligence he cannot recover”, tho incorporated in a paragraph defining contributory negligence, does not have the effect of declaring that the contributory negligence which will bar an injured party from recovering must be a negligence which is the sole cause of the injury.

Ryan v Rendering Wks., 215-363; 245 NW 301

Contributory negligence—lack of evidence—effect. An instruction which properly directs the jury, in determining the issue of contributory negligence of an injured party, to take into consideration certain enumerated matters as shown by the evidence, is not necessarily erroneous because it makes no reference to the effect of a lack of evidence on the subject.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Contributory negligence — fatally inconsistent instructions. After properly instructing that plaintiff, before she could recover, must establish her entire freedom from contributory negligence, the court commits a fatal inconsistency by instructing that plaintiff could not be charged with negligence in not choosing some other highway than the one in question on which to travel, unless defendant has proven that plaintiff knew or ought to have known that the highway on which she was traveling was in a dangerous condition.

Kehm v Dilts, 222-826; 270 NW 388

Contributory negligence — incurable error. An instruction which summarizes all the elements that plaintiff must prove to make a case, and directs the jury that if these elements and conditions existed, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, is fatally defective when no reference whatever is made to plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. And, in such case, the error is not cured by the fact that in other instructions the jury is instructed that plaintiff must be free from contributory negligence.

Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Traveling highway in fog—keeping lookout—instructions. Where a defendant alleges failure to keep a lookout and contributory negligence on account of plaintiff's travel on the highway in a fog, instructions correctly but generally charging as to negligence and contributory negligence and requiring consideration of all conditions and circumstances are, in the absence of requested instructions thereon, sufficient to require the jury to consider the circumstance of the fog.

Gregory v Suhr, 224-954; 277 NW 721

Negligence—instruction omitting contributory negligence. Where, on a snow-covered highway containing a single pair of ruts, two automobiles approaching each other collide on a hill, in a damage action by a passenger injured thereby, an instruction further explaining negligence, but not mentioning contributory negligence, is not erroneous when contributory negligence was covered in other instructions, and when the jury could not have been misled by the explanatory purpose of the instruction.

Tallmon v Larson, 226-564; 284 NW 367

Lookout—instructions. Instructions involving the negligence of the defendant in failing to drive around another truck and in failing to stop when he could see, or should have seen, that he was about to collide with the other truck, properly presented the question of keeping a proper lookout and were justified by evidence that the defendant ran into another truck which had skidded and turned around on the icy pavement at a time when the defendant's truck was 150 or 200 feet away.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Unallowable limitation on materiality of evidence. Reversible error results to an unsuccessful plaintiff (in an action pivoted on the issue whether defendant traveling northward yielded half of the traveled way to plaintiff traveling southward) from instructions to the effect that “evidence that defendant just preceding the collision swerved his car to the west is material on the issue whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, even tho plaintiff had not alleged such swerving as a specific act of negligence on the part of the defendant”. The vice is not in what the court does say but in what the court does not say, to wit: that said evidence is material on the issue of defendant's negligence.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Instructions — “a proximate cause” — non-prejudicial error. In an automobile collision negligence case where plaintiff's son was driving automobile in which plaintiff was riding, an instruction that plaintiff need only prove defendant's negligence to be "a proximate cause" is not prejudicial error when court also instructed that negligence of plaintiff or plaintiff's son barred recovery and the instructions were to be read as a whole.

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Contributory negligence—reference to proximate cause—error. An instruction that before plaintiff can recover for alleged negligently inflicted injuries, he must establish that he "was free from contributory negligence, that contributed to, or was the proximate cause of such injuries", is entirely erroneous insofar as reference is made to "proximate cause", and the error is not cured by another instruction to the effect that the instructions should be construed "as a whole".

Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Failure to signal approach. An instruction, which properly directs the jury that the defendant would be guilty of negligence if, under named circumstances, he failed to signal his approach to the scene of an accident, is not rendered erroneous because the court does not, in said instruction, make any reference to the law of direct and proximate cause—said latter subject matter being properly covered elsewhere in the instructions.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Proximate negligence not superseded by concurrent negligence. If the jury might justifiably find that the defendant railway company operated its train over one of its crossings at an excessive and unlawful rate of speed and that said speed was the proximate cause of the collision of the train with an automobile and of the injury to an occupant of the automobile, the court must not so instruct as to permit the jury to find that the negligence of the driver of the automobile in approaching and driving upon the crossing was an intervening cause which wholly superseded the said negligence of the defendant railway company.

Dedina v Railway, 220-1336; 264 NW 566

Duty to look and listen—instructions. An instruction to the effect that, in determining the care exercised by a traveler at a railroad crossing, the jury should consider whether obstructions to one's view were such as to require the traveler to look and listen, is quite harmless when the jury was elsewhere correctly instructed as to the duty to look and listen.

Love v Railway, 207-1278; 224 NW 815

Blowing out tire—losing control of car. Where an instruction stating, " * * the blowing out of a tire is a legal excuse to a driver for losing control of his or her automobile * * *", and also stating conditions for recovering control of the car, is challenged because this quoted part withdrew from the jury the question of whether driver was negligent in losing control of car and decided the issue erroneously as a matter of law, such instruction was not erroneous in that the grounds of negligence alleged and submitted to the jury were referable to the conduct of the driver, not at the time of the blowout, but thereafter—bearing in mind that instructions must be read as a whole and that it is unfair to pick out parts of instructions and give them a forced or strained construction.

Carrier's liability. In an action for injuries sustained in an accident at an intersection while riding in a taxicab, an instruction which held the defendant to the liability of a common carrier of passengers for hire was not error in view of other instructions defining a common carrier and making a high degree of care dependent on a finding that the taxi was a common carrier.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Omitting reference to defendant's omission to act. An instruction that the jury, in determining an issue of negligence, should take into consideration "what the defendant did", need not be accompanied by any instruction for the jury to consider what the defendant omitted to do, when the jury is fully instructed to consider all the facts and circumstances bearing on the issue.

Leete v Hays, 211-379; 233 NW 481

Grouping distinct grounds. Reversible error results from grouping separate and distinct grounds of negligence and so instructing as to lead the jury to understand that plaintiff, before he can recover, must establish the truth of an entire group.

Leete v Hays, 211-379; 233 NW 481

Failure to yield one-half traveled way—other circumstances mentioned. In action by automobile passenger, arising out of collision between a bus and approaching automobile, wherein the only ground of negligence submitted was bus driver's failure to yield one-half of traveled way, instructions relating to speed and control of bus and to rights and duties of bus driver in general relating to fact pavement was wet, relating to a car parked in path of bus, and other circumstances, when read with other instructions, that failure to yield one-half of highway was only prima facie negligence and could be justified, explained, or excused, and that parked car on highway might be an emergency creating an excuse, were not erroneous as submitting additional grounds of negligence.

Staggs v Bartovsky, 228- ; 291 NW 443

Damages—submission of pleaded but unsupported amount. No error results from instructing that no recovery can be allowed plaintiff in excess of the pleaded amount for a named element of damages (the evidence concededly showing that plaintiff had not suffered said maximum amount) when other instructions definitely charged the jury to base damages solely on the evidence.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

(h) REQUESTING INSTRUCTIONS

Refusal not error when subject matter covered. Refusal to give requested instructions is not error when the subject matter is covered by instructions given on the court's own motion.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Refusal nonerroneous when otherwise favorably covered. In action arising out of injuries sustained in collision between a bus and approaching automobile, a refusal to give bus owner's requested instruction concerning the discovery of parked car on paved highway in the path of bus as a circumstance bearing on question of bus driver's negligence in failing to yield one-half the traveled way, was not prejudicial error where other instructions given at bus owner's request were at least as favorable to bus owner as refused instruction.

Staggs v Bartovsky, 228- ; 291 NW 443

Covering requested instructions. When three similar instructions were requested, it was not error to refuse to give two of them, and give but one embodying the propositions of the other two.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Contributory negligence of passenger. It is correct to say that a passenger on a vehicle may be found free of contributory negligence if he acted as a person of ordinary prudence would act under like circumstances. Requested instructions reviewed and held properly refused.

Newland v McClelland & Son, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Instructions in conformity with requests—estoppel to urge error. Defendant in an automobile case could not complain of an instruction on speed, lookout, and control given in conformity with instruction requested.

Usher v Stafford, 227-443; 288 NW 432

Requests—right to assume care by plaintiff. A requested instruction in a personal injury action, to the effect that defendant had a right to assume that plaintiff would commit no act of negligence contributing to his own injury, is properly refused (1) when defendant in driving as he did was not influenced by plaintiff's actions, and (2) when the record shows that the jury found that plaintiff was not guilty of any act of contributory negligence.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Speed—lookout—turning to right—presumption. If there be applicable evidence the court must instruct (at least on request) (1) as to the duty of drivers of cars on meeting to obey the laws of the road, such as turning to the right, and maintaining a proper lookout and proper speed, and (2) as to the right of the driver of each car to presume that such duties will be performed by the other driver.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Right to assume compliance with law. Reversible error results from refusing to instruct that the operator of an automobile has a right to assume (until he knows or should know to the contrary) that other operators of automobiles (1) will keep their cars under control, (2) will maintain a speed which will enable them to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) will yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right—all such enumerated subject matters being distinctly in issue.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

"Control" construed in its practical sense. Common words in instructions must generally be understood by the jury in their ordinary and practical sense, and, if a more specific definition is desired, it must be requested. So held as to the word "control" in connection with operating a motor vehicle.

Johnston v Johnson, 225-77; 279 NW 139; 118 ALR 233

Submitting issue notwithstanding negligence per se. It is not necessarily reversible error for the court to fail to instruct the jury that the defendant was negligent as a matter of law, even tho had the court so instructed, the appellate court would not reverse because of such instruction.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Assured clear distance—oncoming vehicles. Since, as to oncoming vehicles, assured clear distance statute applies only to motorist not traveling on his right-hand side of the road, in an action involving a collision between oncoming vehicles on a foggy night, when vehicle in which plaintiff was riding was traveling on the right-hand side of the road, a requested instruction applying the assured clear distance statute to the plaintiff was properly refused.

Gregory v Suhr, 224-954; 277 NW 721

Assuming issuable facts—refusal. When it assumes disputed questions of fact as established, a requested instruction may be properly refused, even tho the request embodies a correct statement of law.

Usher v Stafford, 227-443; 288 NW 432

Assuming right to enter intersection. Instructions are properly refused when they assume that one of the parties to an accident had the superior right to enter a street intersection—such right being a matter of dispute.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Yielding right of way—justifiable assumption. The court may refuse a requested instruction and give the fair equivalent thereof in its own language. So held as to an instruction relative to the duty of the operator of an automobile to yield the right of way at an intersection.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Vehicles approaching from rear—pedestrian's duty. An instruction relative to the duty of a pedestrian traveling in the public highway, to keep a reasonable lookout for vehicles approaching from the rear as well as from the front, need not necessarily be modified on request to the effect that such duty does not require him to turn about "constantly and repeatedly" to observe the possible approach of vehicles from his rear.

Kessel v Hunt, 215-117; 244 NW 714; 34 NCCA 247

Consideration of nonimputable negligence. An instruction to the effect that even tho the negligence of a husband with whom the wife was riding could not be imputed to the wife, nevertheless the negligence of the husband could be considered by the jury on the issue whether the negligence of the defendant—the driver of another car—was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, is a correct statement of law, and if plaintiff wishes such instruction modified by a statement as to the law governing the concurrent negligence of different parties, she must request such instruction.

Kuhn v Kjose, 216-36; 248 NW 230

Proximate negligence of different co-defendants. On separate trials of an action for damages against the operators of different vehicles on one of which plaintiff was a passenger at the time she was injured by a collision, defendant is properly denied an instruction to the effect that he cannot be held liable if his co-defendant was proximately negligent.

Reason: Both defendants might be proximately negligent.

Newland v McClelland, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Sudden emergency instruction properly refused. A defendant-motorist's requested instruction, which deals with the question of sudden emergency arising because, as he alleges, a child suddenly darted from hiding and ran across the path of his car, is properly refused when the issue of error in judgment after the emergency arose was not in the case, and the theory of how and when the child got in his path was otherwise covered by instructions.

Stalled motorist—freedom from negligence. In a damage action for personal injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, the burden is on plaintiff to establish (1) the defendant's negligence, (2) such negligence as the proximate cause of the injury, and (3) plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. Hence, a motorist who stands in the center of the road near the rear of her automobile stalled on the highway, attempting to stop a following motorist, and, tho having the opportunity, fails to seek a place of safety when she sees the approaching motorist apparently will crash into her stalled automobile, is neither entitled to an instruction establishing her freedom from contributory negligence as a matter of law, nor to a directed verdict against the defendant.

Murchland v Jones, 225-149; 279 NW 382

"Physical facts" rule. A requested instruction should be given, when the testimony is supporting, to the effect that, if the view of a railway track is unobstructed for a long distance while a traveler is knowingly approaching it, he will be held to have seen the train approaching thereon, there being no diverting circumstances.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356; 27 NCCA 68; 27 NCCA 69

Separate forms of verdicts. In a joint action against the driver of an automobile and the owner of the vehicle, wherein necessity arises so to instruct as to limit the effect of the driver's admissions to the question of his liability, and the effect of the owner's admissions to the question of his liability, separate forms of verdict must be submitted if requested.

Broderick v Barry, 212-672; 237 NW 481; 75 ALR 1530

Error not waived by requesting instruction. Where a motion for a directed verdict is erroneously overruled, the defeated party does not waive said error by asking instructions which correctly state the law of the case as fixed by the ruling of the court on the motion.

(Overruling Martens v Martens, 181-350, and McDermott v Ida County, 186-736)

Heavilin v Wendell, 214-844; 241 NW 654; 83 ALR 872

X DAMAGES

(a) IN GENERAL

Assessment—double recovery. The submission to the jury of duplicate counts—counts praying recovery on the same elements of damages—and permitting recovery on both such counts is clearly erroneous.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144

Failure to limit damages. Instructions which direct the jury to allow damages for such loss and injuries as necessarily resulted from the accident complained of are too broad because not limited to the loss and injuries properly set out in the petition and sustained by the evidence.

(a) IN GENERAL—continued

Failure to limit damages—fatal error. An instruction which fails to limit the jury in its return of damages (1) to the amount claimed for each item of damages, and (2) to such amount only as shown by the evidence, is prejudicially erroneous.

Andersen v Christensen, 222-177; 268 NW 527

Direct damages only recoverable. It is mandatory on the court to instruct that damages recoverable because of a defendant's negligence are limited to those damages which the evidence shows directly resulted from such negligence.

Schellendorf v Cherry, 220-1101; 264 NW 54

Instruction as to allowable damages. Instruction, specifying that damages should be such as were rendered necessary by the injuries as disclosed by the evidence and which the evidence shows that plaintiff sustained and endured, sufficiently informed the jury that only such damages could be allowed as were caused by, and the direct result of, injuries sustained because of defendant's negligence.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Erroneous limitation on verdict. A general instruction, in a personal injury case, to the effect that the jury must not return a verdict in excess of the sum total of all the damages claimed by plaintiff is prejudicially erroneous when the plaintiff has alleged a particular amount of damages for each element of damages.

Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442

Death—measure of damages. The measure of damages for death is the reasonable present value of the life of the deceased to his estate.

Drouillard v Rudolph, 207-367; 223 NW 100

Occupation and earnings of parent. The occupation and earnings of the father of a minor child may be shown, in an action for the wrongful death of the child, as an element to be considered by the jury on the issue of damages to the child's estate.

McDowell v Oil Co., 212-1314; 237 NW 456

Harmless error—submitting earning capacity of child. Elements of damage not sustained by evidence should not be submitted, which applies to the earning capacity of a 10-year-old schoolgirl in the absence of supporting evidence, but in the instant case the error was harmless, as the jury's possibility of considering such element was very remote.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Wrongful death—purchase of business. In an action for damages for wrongful death, evidence is admissible of the recent purchase, solely on credit, by decedent, of a business, and of the marked reduction by decedent of his indebtedness subsequent to such purchase, together with evidence of his ability, health, and other kindred matters.

Scott v Hinman, 216-1126; 249 NW 249

Medical services. It is error to permit the recovery of expense for medical services necessitated by a personal injury when there is no evidence of the reasonable value of such services and no showing that the amount in question has been paid.

Melsha v Dillon, 214-1324; 243 NW 295

Earnings in discarded business. Evidence by an injured party as to the amount of his earnings in a business which he had, at the time of his injury, abandoned, is incompetent, when the amount of his future earnings in such business, were he to re-engage in it, is conjectural and speculative.

Dickeson v Lzicar, 208-275; 225 NW 406

Hospital expenses—absence of evidence. In an action for personal injury, no recovery can be had for hospital expenses when there is no evidence of any kind bearing on the reasonableness of the charge—not even in the form of an itemized bill or that the bill had been paid.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Hospital expense—board and lodging—when allowable. In personal injury action, allowance of board and lodging in hospital is not error where such items are inseparably tied up with treatment.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Employer paying doctor bills—negligent person still liable. Payment of an injured truck driver's doctor bills by his employer, whether the motive be philanthropy or contract, constitutes a bounty from which a negligent defendant-motorist can derive no benefit in reduction of his liability, inasmuch as he owes compensation for all damages as to which his negligence was the proximate cause.

Clark v Berry Seed Co., 225-262; 280 NW 505

Release—fraud. A jury question as to the validity of a release of personal injury damages is made by proof that the releasee represented that the doctor's charges would be "about" $10, and that the representation was materially false and was made to the releasor and acted on by him when he was alone and practically helpless from his injuries.

Robinson v Meek, 203-185; 210 NW 762; 5 NCCA(NS) 434

Release of joint tort-feasor. An injured party who voluntarily, and without being imposed on by fraud, accepts and receives from one alleged joint tort-feasor a legal consideration in the form of property in settlement of his injuries, may not thereafter maintain an action against another joint tort-feasor for damages for the same injury.

Barden v Hurd, 217-798; 253 NW 127

Covenant not to sue—joint wrongdoers. The driver of an oil truck sued for damages consequent on his negligent operation of the truck is not released from liability because another party who owned the oil tank and grease rack carried on the truck obtained from the injured party a covenant wherein the injured party agreed not to sue such other party—the record failing to show that the truck driver and the owner of the tank were joint wrongdoers.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

(b) PHYSICAL DAMAGES—TO PERSON OR PROPERTY

Reparable and irreparable injury. The measure of damages for injury to an article is: (1) for total destruction, the reasonable value at the time of destruction; (2) for a fully reparable injury, the reasonable cost of the repairs, plus the reasonable value of the use of the article during a reasonable time for repair; (3) for a partially reparable injury, the difference in the reasonable value of the article before and after the injury.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356; 26 NCCA 938

Measure of damages—fully reparable injury. If the injury to an article is fully reparable, then the measure of damages is the reasonable cost of the repairs, not the difference between the reasonable value of the article before and after the injury.

Looney v Parker, 210-85; 230 NW 570

Reparable injury to article. The measure of damages for negligent injury to an article is the reasonable cost of restoring the article to the condition it was in immediately before the injury, not exceeding in any case the reasonable value of the article at the time of injury.

Laizure v Railway, 214-918; 241 NW 480

Measure of damages—total destruction. The measure of damages for the total destruction of an article is the reasonable market value of the article immediately before its destruction.

Bush v Railway, 216-788; 247 NW 645

Failure to limit damages—fatal error. An instruction which fails to limit the jury in its return of damages (1) to the amount claimed for each item of damages, and (2) to such amount only as shown by the evidence, is prejudicially erroneous.

Andersen v Christensen, 222-177; 268 NW 527

Direct damages only recoverable. It is mandatory on the court to instruct that damages recoverable because of a defendant's negligence are limited to those damages which the evidence shows directly resulted from such negligence.

Schellendorf v Cherry, 220-1101; 264 NW 54

Failure to limit findings. An instruction which directs the jury, in determining the damages to an article, "to consider" its value before the injury and its value after injury is erroneous because it fails to confine the jury in its findings of damages.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356; 26 NCCA 938

Instruction—sufficiency. Instructions to the effect that the jury should determine from the evidence the amount due plaintiff for injuries to person and property, and allow him such sum as would fairly compensate him, reviewed and held to reveal no error.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Hospital expenses. In an action for personal injury no recovery can be had for hospital expenses when there is no evidence of any kind bearing on the reasonableness of the charge—not even in the form of an itemized bill or that the bill had been paid.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Nervous injury—evidence—sufficiency. There may be recovery of damages consequent upon nervous injury even tho there is no medical testimony showing the connection between the injury and the nervous disturbance.

McDougal v Bormann, 211-950; 234 NW 807

Nonpermanent recovery—submission. Record reviewed and held that the issue of nonpermanent recovery from a personal injury was properly submitted on supporting expert testimony.

Albert v Trans. Co., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Permanent injuries—evidence. Evidence held sufficient to justify the submission to the jury of the issue whether certain personal injuries were permanent.

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

Personal injuries—evidence. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether injuries were permanent and whether they were the proximate result of an accident or resulted from a former diseased condition of the injured party.

Dickeson v Lzicar, 208-275; 225 NW 406

Damages—permanent cripple—future pain—correct instruction. In a personal injury action arising from a motor vehicle collision, an allegation that plaintiff has been crippled for life, sustained by some evidence, justifies an instruction that the jury may allow such sum as in their judgment will fairly compensate plaintiff for future pain and for being crippled.

X DAMAGES—continued(b) PHYSICAL DAMAGES—TO PERSON OR PROPERTY—concluded

Permanent injury to back and spine—$6,500 not excessive. In an action for damages as a result of automobile collision, a verdict of $6,500 was held not to be excessive where plaintiff received severe permanent injuries to his back and spine and could not work or sleep on account of intense pain, and where, prior to the accident, plaintiff's earnings were around $5 per day, but after the accident not over fifty cents per day, and where plaintiff, prior to the trial, lost two years earnings amounting to $2,500.

Kramer v Henely, 227-504; 288 NW 610

Ten percent permanent injury to arm—non-speculative verdict. Where a petition alleges ten percent injury to an arm and asks $1,000 damages therefor, it is not error to permit the jury to return a verdict for the full amount when the evidence shows some permanent injury to the arm and the court in another instruction limited the recovery to the damages sustained.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Unsupported issue of permanent injury. Instructions reviewed, and held not subject to the vice of submitting an unsupported issue of permanent injury.

Groshens v Lund, 222-49; 268 NW 496

Unsupported issue of permanent injuries—submission to jury improper. In an action for physical injuries sustained by the plaintiff when he was struck by the defendant's automobile, it was reversible error to submit to the jury the question of permanent injuries as a measure of damages when there was no evidence of permanent injuries to support such submission.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Interest on funeral expenses. The measure of damages for wrongful death, while not including reasonable funeral expenses, does include simple interest at a legal rate on such expenses for the time intervening between the premature death and the time when, in the ordinary course of events, the deceased would have died.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

(c) PAIN AND SUFFERING

Future pain—instructions—adequacy. An instruction to the effect that a recovery would be limited to "the fair and reasonable compensation for personal injury, pain and suffering, past and future * * * as shown by the evidence", is sufficient on the subject of future pain and suffering in the absence of a request for elaboration.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Limiting recovery to sum of separate claims.

Limiting a recovery of damages to the sum of one amount claimed for present and future physical pain and one amount claimed for mental pain will not be deemed erroneous when the verdict demonstrates that less was allowed than claimed.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

Mental pain and anguish. An injured plaintiff may recover for mental pain resulting from personal physical injury, even tho no special claim for such recovery is made in the petition; especially may he so recover when the petition fairly presents such claim.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

Future pain—justifiable assumption. Where there is evidence of a permanent injury, and of present pain produced thereby, the jury may very properly conclude that future pain may be suffered even tho no witness specifically so testifies.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

Permanent cripple—future pain. In a personal injury action arising from a motor vehicle collision, an allegation that plaintiff has been crippled for life, sustained by some evidence, justifies an instruction that the jury may allow such sum as in their judgment will fairly compensate plaintiff for future pain and for being crippled.

Clark v Berry Seed Co., 225-262; 280 NW 505

Future pain as incident to permanent injury. Even without a claim for damages for future pain and suffering, allegations and proof of permanent injuries from which future pain and suffering are reasonably certain to follow warrant the submission to the jury of this question.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Headaches—pain and suffering. In an action to recover for personal injuries sustained in an automobile collision where plaintiff testified that headaches causing much suffering affected him since the accident, and when an expert witness testified that plaintiff's injury might have caused headaches and that the injury might be permanent, an instruction permitting recovery for future pain and suffering from headaches was not erroneous and properly submitted the question to the jury.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Instructions—separating personal injury claims. Instructions limiting the amount of total recovery which could be allowed the plaintiff, but not advising how much was claimed for pain and suffering and for permanent disability, were erroneous, and, being erroneous, prejudice is presumed unless the record is such as to overcome the presumption.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Expressions of pain. The reception of evidence tending to show pain and suffering on the part of a deceased for whose death the action has been brought is not erroneous.

Drouillard v Rudolph, 207-367; 223 NW 100

(d) AGGRAVATION OF INJURY

Aggravation of disease—liability in general. One who is predisposed to disease which is aggravated or accelerated by motorist's negligence is entitled to recover damages necessarily and proximately resulting from such aggravation or acceleration.

Hackley v Robinson, (NOR); 219 NW 398

Aggravation of injury by unskillful treatment—liability of original wrongdoer. It is a principle of law that one who negligently inflicts a personal injury on another is liable in damages for the aggravation of said injury resulting from the unskillful treatment of said injury by his physicians and surgeons, provided the injured party exercised reasonable care in selecting said physicians and surgeons, but to permit the application of said principle there must be a proper showing of causal connection between said wrongfully inflicted injury and the said unskillful treatment.

Johnson v Selindh, 221-378; 265 NW 622

Release—joint wrongdoers. A party who has been negligently injured and settles with and releases the original wrongdoer may not thereafter maintain an action against a physician for malpractice in treating the very injuries for which he has effected a settlement.

Phillips v Werndorff, 215-521; 243 NW 525; 39 NCCA 574

(e) INADEQUATE OR EXCESSIVE

When court will interfere. It is not the province of a court to interfere with the amount of a verdict in a personal injury action unless it is clearly made to appear that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice or of a palpable disregard of the evidence. Verdict of $10,000 held nonreviewable.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Option to remit excessive part of verdict. It is proper for the court to give plaintiff the option to remit that portion of a verdict which the court deems excessive, and refuse a new trial (on that ground) if the remittitur is filed.

Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Excessive verdicts.

$2,130 for personal injuries.

Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151

$7,500 for wrongful death.

Lorimer v Hutchinson Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220

$2,500 for personal injury.

Tissue v Durin, 216-709; 246 NW 806

$17,000 for wrongful death.

Scott v Hinman, 216-1126; 249 NW 249

$30,000 for wrongful death.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

$6,000 for death of child.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

$3,500 for broken collarbone. For injuries sustained by a passenger in a taxicab accident, when a verdict of $3,500 was nearly $3,000 over the damages subject to calculation for a broken collarbone, pain and suffering, hospitalization, and loss of about three months work, the amount should be reduced to $2,500.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Slightly excessive recovery. The reception in evidence in a personal injury action of a hospital bill which includes a charge for "board" for the patient, is not reversible error when the amount of the nonrecoverable item is not shown, and when, apparently, the matter was not called to the attention of the trial court.

Sutton v Moreland, 214-337; 242 NW 75

Nonexcessive verdicts.

$2,800 for personal injuries.

O'Hara v Chaplin, 211-404; 233 NW 516

$5,950 for personal injuries.

Mizner v Lohr, 213-1182; 238 NW 584

$3,500 for personal injury.

Raines v Wilson, 213-1251; 239 NW 36

$1,000 for personal injury.

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787

$1,825 for personal injury.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

$12,000 for personal injury.

Henriksen v Stages, 216-643; 246 NW 913

$8,000 for personal injuries.

McCoy v Cole, 216-1320; 249 NW 213

$5,170 for personal injury and property damage.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

$1,328 for personal injury and property loss.

Wolfe v Decker, 221-600; 266 NW 4

$5,091.26 for personal injury.

Janes v Roach, 228- ; 290 NW 87

$3,750 for personal injury—new trial. Damages are generally within the province of the jury and an appellate court hesitates to interfere with the amount unless it is so grossly excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice, or some other reason appears, and ordinarily the trial court's granting or refusing a new trial on the ground of excessiveness of a verdict will not be disturbed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is shown. Held, a $3,750

X DAMAGES—concluded

(e) INADEQUATE OR EXCESSIVE—concluded personal injury verdict was not excessive when based on a fracture of the skull, broken left shoulder, four broken ribs, eye and ear injuries, unconsciousness for five days, and severe headaches.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

$2,500 increase on retrial of personal injury case—nonexcessiveness. A verdict of $10,000 on second trial of automobile accident case, altho $2,500 larger than first verdict, did not under the circumstances indicate passion or prejudice and was not excessive.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

$600 for injuries resulting in loss of eight weeks work. When an automobile accident resulted in damages amounting to $90 to the car and bodily injuries including broken ribs which kept the injured person from work for eight weeks and with continued pain, a verdict of $600 was not excessive.

5037.10 Guest statute.

General application of motor vehicle law. See under §5037.09

I SCOPE OF SECTION IN GENERAL

Nonretroactive statute.

Thomas v Disbrow, 208-873; 224 NW 36; 30 NCCA 195

Nonapplicable to manslaughter. This section fixes civil liability in the operation of automobiles and has nothing to do with automobile operations resulting in manslaughter.

State v Richardson, 216-809; 249 NW 211

Nonrevival of right to recover for negligence. The right of a guest in an automobile to recover damages consequent on the negligence of the operator, having been supplanted by the statute permitting a recovery only in case of "reckless operation", has not been restored by the enactment of §5028, C., '31 [§5022.04, C., '39], wherein, inter alia, the driving of a motor vehicle "without due caution and circumspection" is characterized as "reckless driving", and made punishable as a crime.

Neessen v Armstrong, 213-378; 239 NW 56; 31 NCCA 104

Negligence—liability—exception to rule. The motor vehicle guest statute precluding recovery by a passenger for injuries received while riding in a vehicle, unless the damage is caused by the intoxication or recklessness of the operator, is an exception to the rule as to liability for negligence.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

Exceptions not to supplant general rule. Interpretation of automobile guest statute should be consistent with the intention of the legislature and its mandate in making a host not liable for injuries to guest, except under exceptions of driver being reckless or intoxicated, and the statute should not be so interpreted as to supplant the general rule with the exceptions.

Crabb v Shanks, 226-589; 284 NW 446

Who is not guest. A person while attempting to enter an unoccupied automobile, for the purpose of commencing a journey as a guest, and on the invitation of the owner of the car, is not a "passenger or person riding in said motor vehicle", within the meaning of this section.

Puckett v Pailthorpe, 207-613; 223 NW 254; 30 NCCA 194; 36 NCCA 255

Child on sled being towed not "riding" in vehicle. A person, to be within the provisions of the Iowa guest statute, must be "riding" in the motor vehicle, which excludes a child on a sled hooked to the rear of a moving automobile.

Samuelson v Sherrill, 225-421; 280 NW 596

Exclusive liability of owner. The liability of the owner of an automobile to a guest when the owner is operating the vehicle himself is identical with his liability to a guest when the vehicle is being operated by someone else with his—the owner's—consent.

Stanbery v Johnson, 218-160; 254 NW 303

Consent to use of vehicle denied by defendant—nonconclusiveness. In an action for injuries resulting from a motor vehicle collision, the positive testimony of a defendant that no consent was given to use the automobile is not conclusive and can be rebutted by circumstances, together with the reasonable or unreasonable character of the testimony.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Question of father's consent to son's use of vehicle. Where a guest, injured in an automobile collision, seeks damages from a son and father, as driver and owner, respectively, of a motor vehicle, question of father's consent to son's use of automobile, procured especially for and used exclusively by the son, so as to render the father liable for guest's injuries resulting from son's reckless operation, is a jury question.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Ethical objection to recovery. In an action by a guest to recover of her host damages for injuries inflicted by the reckless operation of an automobile, it is not reversible error to instruct: "Nor is she bound by any ethical rule to the effect that one who is a guest of another should not seek recovery in a proper case", it appearing that the full burden of proving a legal right to recover was plainly imposed on plaintiff.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Injury in foreign state—"guest statute" not applicable. The statutory declaration that the guest of the owner or operator of a motor vehicle is entitled to recover damages only when the damages are the proximate result of the intoxication or reckless operation of the driver is declaratory of the substantive rights of the guest; therefore, said statute has no application to an action in this state to recover damages consequent on an accident occurring in a foreign state in which the common-law rule of liability for negligence exists.

Redfern v Redfern, 212-454; 236 NW 399; 1 NCCA (NS) 291

Federal governmental employee—personal liability for tort. A governmental employee, committing a tortious act which causes injury to another in violation of a duty owed to the injured person, becomes, as an individual, personally liable in damages therefor. So held as to recklessness resulting in death of a guest riding in an automobile with agent of Federal Resettlement Administration.

Doherty v Edwards, 226-249; 284 NW 159

II GUEST OR INVITEE AND EXCEPTIONS

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 18 ILR 358—Persons included

"Guest" defined. A person is a guest while riding gratuitously in an automobile owned, managed, controlled, and directed by the driver.

Kaplan v Kaplan, 213-646; 239 NW 682

Pleading—sufficiency. An allegation that plaintiff was invited by defendant to accompany defendant in the latter's automobile and that plaintiff accepted the invitation and did accompany defendant, is a sufficient allegation that plaintiff was the guest of defendant.

White v McVicker, 219-834; 259 NW 465

"Guest"—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to show that a plaintiff in an action for damages was a "guest" in an automobile.

Thompson v Farrand, 217-160; 251 NW 44

Guest (?) or otherwise—jury question. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether plaintiff, at the time he was injured in a collision, was riding in an automobile as a "guest" or as an employee.

Porter v Decker, 222-1109; 270 NW 897

Guest (?) or otherwise. Issues which are without support in the evidence must not be submitted. So held where on the question whether plaintiff when he was injured was a guest in an automobile, the court submitted the unsupported issues whether plaintiff accompanied defendant (1) for the definite benefit of defendant, or (2) for the mutual benefit of plaintiff and defendant.

Porter v Decker, 222-1109; 270 NW 897

"Guest" or mere "invitee"—negating relation. A passenger riding in an automobile is neither a "guest" nor a mere "invitee" when he is riding therein:

1. For the purpose of performing and in order to perform his duty as a servant of the owner or operator of the car; or
2. For the definite and tangible benefit of the owner or operator; or
3. For the mutual, definite, and tangible benefit of the owner or operator on the one hand, and of the passenger on the other hand.

Necessarily, a jury question is generated by a substantial conflict of testimony.

Knutson v Lurie, 217-192; 251 NW 147; 36 NCCA 275

Guest (?) or for hire, etc. (?)—evidence. A passenger in an automobile operated by the owner thereof may be a mere guest or invitee with right to recover for damages consequent on the reckless operation, only, of the car; but he may be a passenger (1) for hire, or (2) for the benefit of said operator, or (3) for the mutual benefit of both operator and himself, with right to recover for damages consequent on mere negligent operation by the driver. Evidence held wholly insufficient to establish the status of the passenger to be other than a mere guest.

II GUEST OR INVITEE AND EXCEPTIONS—continued

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Clendenning v Simerman, 220-739; 263 NW 248

Witness riding to motorist's wedding. Where a person is invited by the groom to be witness at his wedding, and when such person is injured in an automobile collision while riding with the groom to the wedding, such person is a guest, even tho' she took her own lunch for the trip and offered to pay part of the travel expense. Agreeing to become a witness and furnishing some incidentals do not constitute such consideration for the ride as to render the witness a passenger for hire.

McCornack v Pickerell, 225-1076; 283 NW 899

Passenger receiving expenses nevertheless a guest. A situation where a motorist making a trip offers to take a friend, who objects to the expense but is reassured that the motorist will pay expenses, and which friend is desired, but not required, to relieve the motorist of driving part of the way, is not a transaction amounting to the dignity of a contract nor making the friend a passenger for hire instead of a guest.

Sullivan v Harris, 224-345; 276 NW 88

Companionship and society—contributing to expenses—helping drive. Under guest statute where the only benefits conferred upon the person extending the invitation are those incidental to hospitality, companionship, or society, the passenger is ordinarily held to be a guest. This is also true even if the guest contributes something toward the expenses of the journey and is expected to help drive.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Who is not guest. A person while attempting to enter an unoccupied automobile, for the purpose of commencing a journey as a guest, and on the invitation of the owner of the car, is not a "passenger or person riding in said motor vehicle", within the meaning of this section.

Puckett v Pailthorpe, 207-613; 223 NW 254; 30 NCCA 194; 36 NCCA 255

Who is not guest. A person who contemplates the purchase of an automobile, and, on the invitation of the salesman, enters the car in order to observe the operation of the car by the salesman, is neither a guest nor is he a gratuitous passenger within the meaning of the so-called guest statute.

(Modified, Knutson v Lurie, 217-192; 251 NW 147; 36 NCCA 275)

Bookhart v Motor Co., 215-8; 244 NW 721;

82 ALR 1359; 32 NCCA 587; 34 NCCA 279; 36 NCCA 264; 2 NCCA(NS) 301, 599

Prospective purchaser's passenger—guest (?) or passenger for hire (?). Where a prospective purchaser driving a used automobile belonging to an automobile dealer takes as a passenger a person familiar with automobiles to advise as to its value, and while so driving has an accident wherein the passenger is injured, such passenger is not a passenger for hire, but only a guest, insofar as the automobile dealer's liability for the passenger's injury is concerned.

Sproll v Burkett Co., 223-902; 274 NW 63; 2 NCCA(NS) 424

Transporting passenger for hire. The owner of an automobile who uses it in transporting, from place to place, an orchestra of which he is a member, and who on each trip, by mutual agreement of the members, receives from the earnings of the common enterprise four and one-half cents for each mile traveled, cannot be deemed as transporting his associates as passengers for hire or for a consideration, it appearing that said payment was made for the sole and only purpose of reimbursing said car owner for the actual cost of operating said car, and that said payment did not exceed said actual cost.

Park v Casualty Co., 222-861; 270 NW 23

Burden of proof. Whether the burden of proof is upon a plaintiff administrator seeking to recover damages for death consequent on the reckless operation of an automobile by the defendant, to prove that the deceased was riding in the car by invitation and not for hire, quaere.

Neessen v Armstrong, 213-378; 239 NW 56

Failure of proof— incompetent witness—dead man statute. Where plaintiff, a motor vehicle passenger, predicates his action on two theories, viz: (1) he was not a guest, and (2) he was a guest, and as to the first his proof fails because of witness' incompetency under dead man statute, and as to the second he offers no evidence, there is nothing to be submitted to the jury.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Unpleaded issues—"unwilling guest" interpretation unwarranted. Instruction reviewed and held not open to the vice of injecting an issue not in the pleadings, to wit, that plaintiff was an unwilling guest in defendant's automobile.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

(b) EMPLOYEES

Guest (?) or otherwise—jury question. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether plaintiff, at the time he was injured in a collision, was riding in an automobile as a "guest" or as an employee.

Porter v Decker, 222-1109; 270 NW 897

Guest or employee as pivotal question—duty of court. When, under the pleading and evidence, the pivotal question is whether plaintiff when injured in defendant's car was a guest or an employee of defendant, the court should not refuse instructions which require the jury to determine such question.

Porter v Decker, 222-1109; 270 NW 897

"Guest" or mere "invitee"—negating relation. A passenger riding in an automobile is neither a "guest" nor a mere "invitee" when he is riding therein:

1. For the purpose of performing and in order to perform his duty as a servant of the owner or operator of the car, or

2. For the definite and tangible benefit of the owner or operator, or

3. For the mutual, definite, and tangible benefit of the owner or operator on the one hand, and of the passenger on the other hand. Necessarily, a jury question is generated by a substantial conflict of testimony.

Knutson v Lurie, 217-192; 251 NW 147; 36 NCCA 275

(c) MEMBERS OF FAMILY

Adult daughter—statute applicability. The guest statute is applicable to an adult, emancipated daughter living in the home of her father, but paying for her board and room, when injured while riding in an automobile driven, managed, and controlled by her father.

Kaplan v Kaplan, 213-646; 239 NW 682

(d) JOINT ENTERPRISE

"Guest" or mere "invitee"—negating relation. A passenger riding in an automobile is neither a "guest" nor a mere "invitee" when he is riding therein:

1. For the purpose of performing and in order to perform his duty as a servant of the owner or operator of the car, or

2. For the definite and tangible benefit of the owner or operator, or

3. For the mutual, definite, and tangible benefit of the owner or operator on the one hand, and of the passenger on the other hand. Necessarily, a jury question is generated by a substantial conflict of testimony.

Knutson v Lurie, 217-192; 251 NW 147; 36 NCCA 275

Passenger riding with loan agent—mutual benefit. Under the rule that passenger is neither a guest nor a mere invitee when he is riding with driver for the mutual, tangible, and definite benefit of both parties, a passenger in an automobile driven by a representative of the Federal Resettlement Administration is not a "guest" when both parties are on their way to a bank to secure a temporary loan for passenger until such time as a loan could be completed with the Federal Resettlement Administration.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Guest (?) or for hire, etc. (?)—evidence. A passenger in an automobile operated by the owner thereof may be a mere guest or invitee with right to recover for damages consequent on the reckless operation, only, of the car; but he may be a passenger (1) for hire, or (2) for the benefit of said operator, or (3) for the mutual benefit of both operator and himself, with right to recover for damages consequent on mere negligent operation by the driver. Evidence held wholly insufficient to establish the status of the passenger to be other than a mere guest.

Clendenning v Simerman, 220-739; 263 NW 248

Guest (?) or otherwise. Issues which are without support in the evidence must not be submitted. So held where on the question whether plaintiff when he was injured was a guest in an automobile, the court submitted the unsupported issues whether plaintiff accompanied defendant (1) for the definite benefit of defendant, or (2) for the mutual benefit of plaintiff and defendant.

Porter v Decker, 222-1109; 270 NW 897

Passenger in automobile demonstrator—mutual benefits. Where an automobile salesman, demonstrating a car to a prospective purchaser, and at the same time, among other things, to further his chances of making a sale, transports an employee of the prospective purchaser to her place of employment, such employee, being transported for the mutual benefit of all concerned, is not a guest.

Wittrock v Newcom, 224-925; 277 NW 286

(e) PASSENGERS FOR HIRE

Passenger for hire—division of expenses. The mere division of expenses among members of a party riding in an automobile does not render the person so contributing a passenger for hire.

McCornack v Pickerell, 225-1076; 283 NW 899

Transporting orchestra members. The owner of an automobile who uses it in transporting, from place to place, an orchestra of which he is a member, and who on each trip, by mutual agreement of the members, receives from the earnings of the common enterprise four and one-half cents for each mile traveled, cannot be deemed as transporting his associates as passengers for hire or for a consideration, it appearing that said payment was made for the sole and only purpose of reimbursing said car owner for the actual cost of operating said car, and that said payment did not exceed said actual cost.

Park v Casualty Co., 222-861; 270 NW 23

II GUEST OR INVITEE AND EXCEPTIONS—concluded

(e) PASSENGERS FOR HIRE—concluded

Witness riding to motorist's wedding. Where a person is invited by the groom to be witness at his wedding, and when such person is injured in an automobile collision while riding with the groom to the wedding, such person is a guest, even tho she took her own lunch for the trip and offered to pay part of the travel expense. Agreeing to become a witness and furnishing some incidentals do not constitute such consideration for the ride as to render the witness a passenger for hire.

McCornack v Pickerell, 225-1076; 283 NW 899

III INTOXICATION

Assumption of risk—jury question. Where motorist and guest had been drinking, and automobile was driven off road, wrecked, and guest was killed, the question of assumption of risk was for the jury.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Intoxication as jury question. In a guest case where the evidence shows all the occupants of the motor vehicle had been drinking whisky, the issue of intoxication should not be withdrawn from the jury.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

IV RECKLESSNESS

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 16 ILR 265—Meaning of "reckless"

Exception to negligence liability rule. The motor vehicle guest statute precluding recovery by a passenger for injuries received while riding in a vehicle, unless the damage is caused by the intoxication or recklessness of the operator, is an exception to the rule as to liability for negligence.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

Nonrevival of right to recover for negligence. The right of a guest in an automobile to recover damages consequent on the negligence of the operator, having been supplanted by the statute permitting a recovery only in case of "reckless operation", has not been restored by the enactment of §5028, C., '31 [§5022.04, C., '39], wherein, inter alia, the driving of a motor vehicle "without due caution and circumspection" is characterized as "reckless driving", and made punishable as a crime.

Neessen v Armstrong, 213-378; 239 NW 56; 31 NCCA 104

Civil liability—definition not deducible from criminal statute. The enumeration in §5028, C., '31 [§5022.04, C., '39] of certain acts, and the denomination of said acts as "reckless driving", and imposing a criminal punishment for doing said acts, cannot be deemed as furnishing a definition as to what conduct constitutes "reckless operation" under §5026-b1, C.,

'31 [§5037.10, C., '39], which simply states a rule of civil liability.

Shenkle v Mains, 216-1324; 247 NW 635; 34 NCCA 347

"Reckless operation"—plural definitions. Section 5028, C., '31 [§5022.04, C., '39], which, in effect, provides that the operation of a motor vehicle in specified ways shall be deemed "reckless driving", was not intended to define "reckless operation" as provided in the so-called "guest" statute.

Fleming v Thornton, 247-183; 251 NW 158

Recklessness—manslaughter case.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Improper definition. The approved definition of "recklessness" as "implying no care—a proceeding without heed of or concern for consequences"—is rendered erroneous by the addition thereto of the elements of "desperation" and "foolishly heedless of danger".

White v McVicker, 216-90; 246 NW 385

Instructions defining recklessness but not negligence—no error. Definition of recklessness stating that "recklessness is more than negligence" is not erroneous because of failure to also define negligence.

Claussen v Johnson's Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Recklessness instruction — construing instructions as a whole. An instruction, stating that if defendant's recklessness caused plaintiff's injury the defendant would be liable, is not error when accompanied by other instructions which limit recovery to proof of specific grounds of recklessness.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

Recklessness—instructions as a whole. Instructions clearly and accurately defining "recklessness" in the operation of an automobile and definitely placing on plaintiff the burden to establish such "recklessness", neutralize the evil effect of a particular instruction which might, in and of itself, possibly lead the jury to understand that recklessness might consist of the doing of certain acts irrespective of the conditions or circumstances under which they might be done.

Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352; 34 NCCA 361

Balancing instructions. Instructions to a jury that a motorist is not at his peril required to comply with the protests and warnings of his guest should, if requested by the plaintiff and shown by the evidence, be followed with the converse of this proposition, that if the jury finds the driver was warned some distance from a railroad crossing of imminent danger and, then, if the driver made no attempt to stop or reduce his speed, he is guilty of recklessness as a matter of law.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

Sleeping driver. Recklessness goes beyond mere negligence and means proceeding without concern for consequences, with a heedless disregard for the rights of others. Recklessness under the motor vehicle guest statute is not found from evidence that the driver of a car went to sleep, where there was little evidence that he was conscious of the approach of sleep.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

Falling asleep not recklessness. In an action based on the motor vehicle guest statute, evidence showing that the defendant driver of the car fell asleep and the car ran into a bridge causing the death of the plaintiff's intestate, failed to establish recklessness, and a directed verdict for the defendant would have been justified.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

Insufficient plea. In an action for damages consequent on the operation of an automobile instructions which predicate recovery on proof of "reckless" operation cannot be sustained when the pleadings neither allege reckless driving nor facts from which recklessness is a necessary deduction.

Redfern v Redfern, 212-454; 236 NW 399

Res ipsa loquitur. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is never applicable to establish a presumption of recklessness.

Phillips v Briggs, 215-461; 245 NW 720; 34 NCCA 364; 39 NCCA 126

Admission of fault. On the issue of reckless operation of an automobile evidence that shortly after a collision the driver being asked what was the matter with him replied, "Just a little reckless", is admissible against the driver as tending to show his admitted fault for the collision.

White v Center, 218-1027; 254 NW 90

Signed statement by plaintiff—legal effect. Plaintiff who seeks to establish the reckless operation of an automobile, at a time when he was riding therein as a guest, is not legally precluded by a written statement theretofore signed by him, and introduced as part of his cross-examination, and which statement tended, perhaps conclusively, to disprove said alleged reckless operation, plaintiff not admitting that the statements contained in said signed writing were true for the purposes of said trial.

Wright v Mahaffa, 222-872; 270 NW 402

Defense—third party negligence. A defendant-host who pleads that the sole and proximate cause of an injury was the negligence of a third party cannot complain that the court instructs that the negligence of said third person is immaterial unless defendant-host establishes that such negligence, and not his own recklessness, was the sole and proximate cause of said injury.

Johnson v McVicker, 216-654; 247 NW 488

Concurring cause—effect. The reckless operation of an automobile need not be the sole and only cause of an accident and resulting damage in order to justify a recovery. In other words, the mere fact that some other cause operated with defendant's recklessness to produce the injury does not relieve the defendant.

Johnson v McVicker, 216-654; 247 NW 488

Concurrent acts of negligence showing recklessness. In an action by a guest in an automobile against the driver of the car, for damages consequent on the operation of the car, evidence reviewed at length relative to several alleged concurrent acts of negligence on the part of said driver, and held insufficient, when viewed collectively, to establish prima facie evidence of recklessness.

Wion v Hayes, 220-156; 261 NW 531

Reckless operation—negating possibilities. In order to make a jury question on the issue of reckless operation of an automobile, plaintiff need not negative every possibility which might exculpate the defendant.

White v Center, 218-1027; 254 NW 90

Insufficient evidence. In an action for damages consequent on the alleged reckless operation of the car in which plaintiff was riding as a guest, evidence reviewed and held per se insufficient to establish reckless operation with the repeated holdings of this court.

Popham v Case, 223-52; 271 NW 226

Evidence—insufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to justify submission to the jury of the issue of recklessness in the operation of an automobile.

Wright v What Cheer Co., 221-1292; 267 NW 92

Evidence—sufficiency—jury question. In an action by a guest against the driver and owner of a motor vehicle for injuries sustained as a result of a collision with an oncoming vehicle, where it is shown that the collision occurred on the left side of the road while automobile, with defective brakes, was being driven at an excessive rate of speed through a well-traveled intersection in a town over a slope or hill which limited visibility, and on the left side of the highway in face of visible oncoming traffic, such evidence, on the issue of whether or not collision was caused by driver's recklessness, presented a jury question.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Unsustainable verdict. A verdict finding, in effect, that defendant (with whom a guest was riding) was operating his automobile in a reckless manner cannot be sustained when the testimony tending to establish recklessness, when tested in the light of the admitted physical facts and verities revealed in the record, cannot be true; and this is true notwithstanding plaintiff's conceded right to the benefit of the most favorable view of evidence rule.

Bowermaster v Universal Co., 221-831; 266 NW 503

Physical facts—warranting directed verdict for defendant. Where a guest in defendant's automobile sustains injuries resulting from defendant's alleged recklessness in traveling at a high rate of speed and striking a cow on a paved highway, and where guest recovers judgment in a damage action wherein defendant appeals from an order overruling his motion for directed verdict, evidence reviewed showing that plaintiff's own uncontradicted factual situation, developed on direct examination, failed to sustain his specifications of recklessness in that defendant failed to reduce the speed of the car as he approached the cattle, and held the court erred in not sustaining the motion for a directed verdict.

Scott v Hansen, 228- ; 289 NW 710

(b) RECKLESS AND NONRECKLESS ACTS

Discussion. See 22 ILR 525—Sleeping at the wheel

Recklessness. Recklessness goes beyond mere negligence and means proceeding without concern for consequences, with a heedless disregard for the rights of others. Recklessness under the motor vehicle guest statute is not found from evidence that the driver of a car went to sleep, where there was little evidence that he was conscious of the approach of sleep.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

Driving while asleep. An automobile may not be said to be operated "recklessly" within the meaning of the guest statute when the operator involuntarily falls asleep during said operation, even tho the sleep results in a grave accident.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

Falling asleep not reckless. In an action based on the motor vehicle guest statute, evidence showing that the defendant driver of the car fell asleep and the car ran into a bridge, causing the death of the plaintiff's intestate, failed to establish recklessness, and a directed verdict for the defendant would have been justified.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

Evidence—insufficiency. A jury question on the issue whether an automobile was recklessly operated is not made by proof that the car was being operated on a straight, level, and unobstructed paved road at a speed of some 50 miles per hour by a person who was somewhat weary from loss of sleep, and somewhat unnerved by an accident happening earlier in the day, and that suddenly and without warning the car swerved and went into a ditch and overturned, notwithstanding the evident good-faith efforts of the driver to control the car.

Duncan v Lowe, 221-1278; 268 NW 10

Speed at danger point. The driver of an automobile may be guilty of statutory "recklessness" by operating his vehicle over a graveled highway, in the nighttime, at a high rate of speed, and at a point where he knows he must make abrupt and successive changes in direction of travel.

Hart v Hinkley, 215-915; 247 NW 258; 34 NCCA 359

Speed as recklessness. Where an automobile, traveling 40 miles an hour around a curve that was neither a sharp turn nor a long sweeping curve, ran off the pavement and turned over, injuring plaintiff guest, this evidence did not raise a jury question on whether defendant was reckless within scope of guest statute.

Crabb v Shanks, 226-589; 284 NW 446

Speed at sharp turn. A jury question on the issue of reckless operation of an automobile is made by evidence that the car was being operated (1) over a wide, well-settled graveled highway with which the operator was wholly unfamiliar, (2) at a speed of some 65 miles per hour, (3) during the nighttime when visibility was materially limited, and (4) at a sharp turn in the road so belatedly anticipated and discovered that the driver was unable to negotiate it and was compelled to turn his car into the side ditch.

Mescher v Brogan, 223-573; 272 NW 645

Speed plus surrounding circumstances—jury question. High speed, while not alone decisive of recklessness, yet when coupled with surrounding circumstances such as approaching darkness, difficult visibility, heavy primary road traffic, and a double collision with the rear of an unlighted trailer and an oncoming truck, presents a question on which reasonable minds would differ, and should be submitted to the jury.

Claussen v Johnson's Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Speed as element of recklessness—other factors. Altho speed alone will not be considered recklessness, yet, when combined with such evidence as the car's swerving from side to side, the wetness of the street, the late hour (two o'clock in the morning), the presence of cross streets, and the lack of defendant's effort to check his speed when the view was obstructed, a jury question on the issue of recklessness is created.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

Speed—car out of control. Evidence tending to show that an inexperienced driver operated his automobile for a half mile on a downgrade on a perfectly good, broad, graveled highway at a speed of 55 miles per hour in violation of the statutory speed standard, with the car out of control and swaying from side to side, and that thereupon he inadvertently stepped on the gas instead of the brake and went into a ditch on the wrong side of the road, justifies the submission to the jury of the issue of recklessness.

Slesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352; 34 NCCA 361

Speed on downgrade. A jury question on the issue whether an automobile was operated recklessly, that is, in heedless disregard of consequences, is made by testimony that the driver, faced by no emergency, operated the car on the downgrade of a straight, well-conditioned, 18-foot wide, graveled road, for a distance of over 1500 feet, and at a speed of 75 miles per hour (110 feet per second), and in the direction of a somewhat elevated railway grade crossing, and that in the near vicinity of said crossing, the car, after repeatedly weaving from one side of the roadway to the other, left said roadway, plunged into a ditch and overturned two or three times.

Wright v Mahaffa, 222-872; 270 NW 402

Car running into rear of wagon. A jury question on the issue of reckless operation of an automobile may be made by testimony that the driver, on a straight, level stretch of paved road, and on the right-hand side thereof, and at a time when he could see substantial objects on the road at least one-quarter mile ahead and easily pass them, operated his car at 70 miles per hour and crashed into the rear of and substantially annihilated a wagon and team on the extreme right-hand side of the road and moving in the same direction as the automobile.

White v Center, 218-1027; 254 NW 90; 36 NCCA 339

Warning of danger—no reduction of speed. Instructions to a jury that a motorist is not at his peril required to comply with the protests and warnings of his guest should, if requested by the plaintiff and shown by the evidence, be followed with the converse of this proposition, that if the jury finds the driver was warned some distance from a railroad crossing of imminent danger and, then, if the driver made no attempt to stop or reduce his speed, he is guilty of recklessness as a matter of law.

Condition of highway—evidence insufficiency. Evidence reviewed in detail relative (1) to the operation of an automobile upon a paved road, and upon a straightaway graveled road connecting therewith, (2) to the warning signs upon said paved road, (3) to the condition of said graveled road and to the visibility of the somewhat rough and rutted condition thereof, and (4) to the twice overturning of said automobile almost immediately after it entered upon said graveled road, and held insufficient per se to establish recklessness in the operation of said automobile.

Brown v Martin, 216-1272; 248 NW 368; 34 NCCA 354

Car sliding into ditch. Evidence that the driver of an automobile on a straight, smooth, graveled road was traveling 45 miles per hour in an attempt to pass other automobiles does not, in and of itself, furnish a jury question on the issue of reckless operation; otherwise as to evidence that after the car slipped and entered a ditch along the roadside the speed materially increased for a distance of 160 feet at which latter point the car collided with an intersecting grade, turned over twice, and came to a stop some 105 feet farther on.

See Cerny v Secor, 211-1232; 234 NW 193

Failure to keep lookout. The reckless operation of an automobile, within the meaning of the "guest" statute is not shown by proof that a motorist, in the daytime and without obstruction to view ahead, and while approaching a bridge on a country highway, was traveling at the rate of some forty-odd miles per hour, and astraddle the black lines in the center of an 18-foot wide, level, 10-degree curve; that, while so traveling, he confined his view solely to said black lines as they came into view immediately ahead of the fender or hood of his car; that he did not "look up" and see an approaching truck on the bridge until 75 feet therefrom; and that thereupon he swerved his car to the right but not quite far enough to avoid sideswiping the rear part of the truck while the two vehicles were passing on the bridge.

Wilson v Oxborrow, 220-1135; 264 NW 1

Car running into ditch. Evidence that an automobile was driven over a straight pavement at from 30 to 35 miles per hour; that the wheels on one side ran off the pavement and upon an unfinished dirt shoulder; that in the effort to stop the car, the operator's foot slipped from the brake pedal to the gas pedal and that the car ran into a side ditch for a distance of 100 feet, reveals no basis for a finding of "reckless" operation.

Thompson v Farrand, 217-160; 251 NW 44; 34 NCCA 369

Speed—unsafe inner tube. Evidence that the operator of an automobile ran it at the rate of 55 miles per hour on a paved highway, with a spare tire which inclosed a patched inner tube, is insufficient on which to base a finding that the car was operated recklessly—there being no evidence that he knew the inner tube was unsafe when he placed the same on the car.

Newville v Weller, 217-1144; 251 NW 21; 34 NCCA 379; 39 NCCA 529

Defective steering gear. "Reckless" operation of an automobile is not established as a jury question by proof that it was operated at a time when the operator knew the steering mechanism was in such condition that when the brakes were applied the vehicle would turn to one side.

Stanbery v Johnson, 218-160; 254 NW 303

Inadequate brakes. The court cannot say as a matter of law that an operator of an automobile is guilty of recklessness in attempting to ascend an 18½ percent grade with knowledge that his brakes were not efficient.

Fleming v Thornton, 217-183; 251 NW 158; 34 NCCA 379; 36 NCCA 175

Tire blowout—emergency. A host sued by his guest for damages consequent on the alleged reckless operation of an automobile may very properly plead that at the time of the accident in question he was overtaken by an emergency, e. g., the blowing out of a tire, and that said emergency was the sole cause of the injury, and that after he became aware of said emergency he did not act recklessly.

Kaufman v Borg, 214-293; 242 NW 104; 34 NCCA 377

Failure to stop at sign. The act of a motorist in the nighttime in driving into a highway intersection without stopping in obedience to a statutory "stop" sign, when shortly theretofore he had seen an automobile approaching said intersection on the intersecting highway, manifestly does not necessarily constitute "recklessness" within the meaning of the guest statute. Evidence exhaustively analyzed (in a light as favorable to plaintiff as is reasonably possible), and held per se insufficient to support an allegation of recklessness in the operation of an automobile.

Hansen v Dall, 220-817; 263 NW 530

(c) NEGLIGENCE DISTINGUISHED

"Reckless operation" defined. To constitute "reckless operation" of a motor vehicle, the plea and proof must be such as to justify a finding that the operator was "proceeding without heed of, or concern for, consequences". Plea and proof of negligent operation only is wholly insufficient.

Siesseger v Puth, 213-164; 239 NW 46; 31 NCCA 84; 34 NCCA 495

Neessen v Armstrong, 213-378; 239 NW 56; 31 NCCA 104

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Negligence insufficient to show "recklessness". Testimony which, at the best, only shows that the operator of an automobile was negligent in the operation of the car, is per se wholly insufficient to support a plea of "reckless operation" within the meaning of the "guest" statute.

Neessen v Armstrong, 213-378; 239 NW 56; 31 NCCA 104

Wilde v Griffel, 214-1177; 243 NW 159; 31 NCCA 78; 34 NCCA 496

Levinson v Hagerman, 214-1296; 244 NW 307; 34 NCCA 367

Phillips v Briggs, 215-461; 245 NW 720

Whether jury case is made. In an action for damages based on the plea of reckless operation of the vehicle, the court must determine whether substantially uncontradicted testimony presents, when judged in the light most favorable to plaintiff, no more, at the best, than a case of simple negligence on the part of the operator, or whether said testimony presents a jury question on the issue of recklessness.

Welch v Minkel, 215-848; 246 NW 775; 34 NCCA 384

Shenkle v Mains, 216-1324; 247 NW 635

Reckless operation—degree of proof. Principle reaffirmed that proof of the negligent operation of an automobile will not support an allegation that the automobile was operated recklessly.

Petersen v Detwiller, 218-418; 255 NW 529; 36 NCCA 358

Concurrent acts of negligence showing recklessness. In an action by a guest in an automobile against the driver of the car for damages consequent on the operation of the car, evidence reviewed at length relative to several alleged concurrent acts of negligence on the part of said driver, and held insufficient, when viewed collectively, to establish prima facie evidence of recklessness.

Wion v Hayes, 220-156; 261 NW 531

Avoiding reference to negligent acts. In an action based solely on "reckless" operation of an automobile, the failure of the court to explain and define various acts of negligence covered by the motor vehicle statutes, is eminently proper.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Improper reference to negligence. In an action based solely on the reckless operation of an automobile, the court must not confuse the jury by reciting in its instructions the law governing liability for negligence.

Kaufman v Borg, 214-293; 242 NW 104

Pleadings—"reckless and negligent"—more specific statement required. Where two motor vehicles collide and plaintiff, riding in the back seat of one of the vehicles, sues both drivers, alleging "concurrent, reckless, and negligent conduct", the petition is subject to motion for more specific statement as to whether or not plaintiff was a guest and whether both defendants were charged with both reckless and negligent acts.

Fay v Dorow, 224-275; 276 NW 31

Joint tort-feasors with different defenses—separate trials. Altho joint tort-feasors may be joined in one action, a petition charging two colliding motorists generally with negligence and recklessness and only alleging that plaintiff was riding in one of the vehicles, with no averment as to his status as a guest or otherwise, presents to the jury such complex and confusing issues as to entitle defendants to separate trials.

Fay v Dorow, 224-275; 276 NW 31

Instructions defining recklessness but not negligence—no error. Definition of recklessness stating that "recklessness is more than negligence" is not erroneous because of failure to also define negligence.

Claussen v Johnson's Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Instructions—duty of court. In an action under the guest statute, it is the court's duty to plainly point out to the jury the distinction between negligence and recklessness, and the court, in so doing, by saying "that recklessness means more than negligence", does not unduly emphasize matters in defense or confuse the jury.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

(d) CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF GUEST

Contributory negligence. In an action based on "reckless operation" of a motor vehicle contributory negligence is not an element to be considered or dealt with, either by pleading, proof or instructions.

Siesseger v Puth, 213-164; 239 NW 46; 31 NCCA 84; 34 NCCA 495

Neessen v Armstrong, 213-378; 239 NW 56; 31 NCCA 104

Kaplan v Kaplan, 213-646; 239 NW 682; 31 NCCA 105

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Holding under prior statute. The court must not instruct that a mere guest in an automobile (under duty, of course, to exercise reasonable and ordinary care) will be guilty of negligence if he fails to do some particular thing, e. g., attempt in some manner to check the speed of the car.

Codner v Stowe, 201-800; 208 NW 330; 26 NCCA 207

Contributory negligence. The refusal of the court to instruct as to just what a guest in an automobile must do in order to escape the imputation of contributory negligence is proper, especially in view of the fact that contributory negligence is not an element to be considered in an action for reckless driving.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

V DEFENSES

(a) IN GENERAL

Tire blowout—emergency. A host sued by his guest for damages consequent on the alleged reckless operation of an automobile may very properly plead that at the time of the accident in question he was overtaken by an emergency, e. g., the blowing out of a tire, and that said emergency was the sole cause of the injury, and that after he became aware of said emergency he did not act recklessly.

Kaufman v Borg, 214-293; 242 NW 104; 34 NCCA 377

Consent denied by defendant—nonconclusiveness. In an action for injuries resulting from a motor vehicle collision, the positive testimony of a defendant that no consent was given to use the automobile is not conclusive and can be rebutted by circumstances, together with the reasonable or unreasonable character of the testimony.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Father's consent to son's use of vehicle—jury question. Where a guest, injured in an automobile collision, seeks damages from a son and father, as driver and owner, respectively, of a motor vehicle, question of father's consent to son's use of automobile, procured especially for and used exclusively by the son, so as to render the father liable for guest's injuries resulting from son's reckless operation, is a jury question.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Instructions—father's consent to son's use of vehicle. In a guest's action against a father and son on account of son's reckless operation of automobile, instructions to the jury setting out elements required for recovery against both father and son should have included element that proof of father's consent to son's use of automobile was required to justify a verdict against the father, and any instruction which was intended to refer to son only should have been so stated.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Interrogatory seeking "knowledge and consent" of owner—proper refusal. In a guest's personal injury action against a father and son, owner and driver, respectively, of the motor vehicle, where the petition alleges the son was driving with the "knowledge and consent" of the father, court's refusal to submit to the jury defendant-appellant's special interrogatory as to finding that son was driving car with "knowledge and consent" of father was not error, as it required an element not contained in the statute—proof under the statute need go no further than to show "consent", even tho allegation of knowledge was in the petition.

V DEFENSES—concluded(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Vehicle driven without owner's consent—burden of proof. Where jury is instructed that the law implies that a car being driven by one other than its owner is being driven with the owner's consent, "and this places the burden upon the owner to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the car was not being driven with his consent", this quoted portion of instruction is reversible error as it places undue burden on owner; the inference from ownership does not change the burden of proof which continues on the complaining party throughout the trial.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

(b) ASSUMPTION OF RISK

Knowledge of danger. One who voluntarily becomes a guest in an automobile when he knows the driver is incompetent, inexperienced, reckless, or intoxicated, or who later acquires such knowledge, and thereupon, with knowledge of the nature and extent of the danger, aids, encourages, cooperates or acquiesces in the operation of the car in a reckless manner, must be held to assume the risk of a resulting accident.

White v McVicker, 216-90; 246 NW 385

Absence of knowledge. A guest in an automobile cannot be deemed to have assumed the risk incident to the reckless operation of the automobile unless there is evidence that he had knowledge of the acts constituting recklessness on the part of the driver and acquiesced in such acts.

White v Center, 218-1027; 254 NW 90

Knowledge of mechanical faults. A guest in an automobile cannot be held to assume the risk attending a defective condition of the vehicle when he had no knowledge of such condition.

Stanbery v Johnson, 218-160; 254 NW 303

Drinking driver—jury question. Where motorist and guest had been drinking, and automobile was driven off road, wrecked, and guest was killed, the question of assumption of risk was for the jury.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76; 36 NCCA 359

Risk of riding with aged driver—jury question. While riding in the rear seat of an automobile being demonstrated to her employer as a prospective purchaser, an aged lady, who protests against the salesman permitting her employer, also an aged person, to drive the automobile, and who, altho she cannot get out of the automobile, is assured of safety by the salesman, does not as a matter of law assume the risk incident to her employer's driving, since reasonable minds could differ, and a jury must determine if it was unreasonable for her to rely on the salesman's assurances of safety.

Wittrock v Newcom, 224-925; 277 NW 286

Assignment of error—fatal indefiniteness. Assignments of error to the effect (1) that "the jury was informed of liability insurance," and (2) that the appellee "knew of defendant's inexperience in driving, and that the court permitted evidence thereof to go to the jury," are fatally indefinite.

Siesseger v Puth, 211-775; 234 NW 540

Order striking defense of assumption of risk. In an action to recover for death of guest resulting from motorcycle collision with automobile, an order striking allegation of defendant car owner that decedent assumed risk of motorcycle driver's negligence was appealable because the matter stricken was of such character as to involve the merits of the case.

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

Affirmative defense—burden on pleader. The jury in a personal injury or death claim action where the defendant pleads "assumption of risk" should be plainly instructed that one pleading an affirmative defense must assume the burden of proving it.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

VI TRIAL(a) IN GENERAL

Instructions—recklessness particulars unchallenged before answer—submitting as alleged. Error may not be predicated on the submission of certain particulars alleging recklessness when their sufficiency is not raised before answer filed and when evidence exists to sustain them.

Claussen v Johnson's Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Injury in foreign state—"guest" statute not applicable. The statutory declaration that the guest of the owner or operator of a motor vehicle is entitled to recover damages only when the damages are the proximate result of the intoxication or reckless operation of the driver is declaratory of the substantive rights of the guest; therefore, said statute has no application to an action in this state to recover damages consequent on an accident occurring in a foreign state in which the common-law rule of liability for negligence exists.

Redfern v Redfern, 212-454; 236 NW 399; 1 NCCA(NS) 291

(b) DIRECTING VERDICT

Recklessness—jury (?) or court (?) question. A jury question and not a court question arises (1) when one or more of a series of undisputed facts tend to establish recklessness in the operation of an automobile, and (2) when different minds might reasonably differ on the question whether recklessness was, in fact, established.

Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352; 34 NCCA 361

Speed as recklessness. Where an automobile, traveling 40 miles an hour around a curve that was neither a sharp turn nor a long sweeping curve, ran off the pavement and turned over, injuring plaintiff guest, this evidence did not raise a jury question on whether defendant was reckless within scope of guest statute.

Crabb v Shanks, 226-589; 284 NW 446

Falling asleep not recklessness. In an action based on the motor vehicle guest statute, evidence showing that the defendant driver of the car fell asleep and the car ran into a bridge, causing the death of the plaintiff's intestate, failed to establish recklessness, and a directed verdict for the defendant would have been justified.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

Sustainable and unsustainable grounds. Principle reaffirmed that the sustaining of a motion to direct a verdict must be upheld if one of the grounds is legally good the other grounds may be legally unsustainable.

Phillips v Briggs, 215-461; 245 NW 720

Refusal to direct verdict—nullifying error. The act of the court in wholly withdrawing the issue of "reckless" operation of an automobile nullifies any former error of the court in refusing to direct a verdict on the ground of absence of evidence of reckless operation.

Thompson v Farrand, 217-160; 251 NW 44

Law of ease. A holding on appeal that the record created a jury question, on the issue of reckless operation of an automobile, is absolutely binding on the trial court on retrial on substantially the same evidence.

White v McVicker, 219-834; 259 NW 465

Physical facts—unsustainable verdict. A verdict finding, in effect, that defendant (with whom a guest was riding) was operating his automobile in a reckless manner cannot be sustained when the testimony tending to establish recklessness, when tested in the light of the admitted physical facts and verities revealed in the record, cannot be true; and this is true notwithstanding plaintiff's conceded right to the benefit of the most favorable view of evidence rule.

Bowermaster v Universal Co., 221-831; 266 NW 503

(c) PLEADINGS

Petition in two counts—(1) guest and (2) not a guest. A passenger in an automobile receiving injuries in a collision may not be required to elect between counts when his petition contains (1) a count alleging recklessness based on theory he was a guest and (2) a count alleging negligence based on theory he was not a guest where plaintiff's cause of action is for a single wrong and he seeks in each count damages for the same injuries arising out of the same act of deceased defendant-driver.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Pleading—sufficiency. An allegation that plaintiff was invited by defendant to accompany defendant in the latter's automobile and that plaintiff accepted the invitation, and did accompany defendant, is a sufficient allegation that plaintiff was the guest of defendant.

White v McVicker, 219-834; 259 NW 465

"Reckless and negligent"—single allegation—more specific statement required. Where two motor vehicles collide, and plaintiff, riding in the back seat of one of the vehicles, sues both drivers, alleging "concurrent, reckless, and negligent conduct", the petition is subject to motion for more specific statement as to whether or not plaintiff was a guest and whether both defendants were charged with both reckless and negligent acts.

Fay v Dorow, 224-275; 276 NW 31

"Reckless operation" defined. To constitute "reckless operation" of a motor vehicle, the plea and proof must be such as to justify a finding that the operator was "proceeding without heed of, or concern for, consequences". Plea and proof of negligent operation only is wholly insufficient.

Neessen v Armstrong, 213-378; 239 NW 56; 31 NCCA 104

Petersen v Detwiller, 218-418; 255 NW 529; 36 NCCA 358

Insufficient plea. In an action for damages consequent on the operation of an automobile instructions which predicate recovery on proof of "reckless" operation cannot be sustained when the pleadings neither allege reckless driving nor facts from which recklessness is a necessary deduction.

Redfern v Redfern, 212-454; 236 NW 399

Defense—emergency. A host sued by his guest for damages consequent on the alleged reckless operation of an automobile may very properly plead that at the time of the accident in question he was overtaken by an emergency, e. g., the blowing out of a tire, and that said emergency was the sole cause of the injury, and that after he became aware of said emergency he did not act recklessly.

VI TRIAL—concluded(c) PLEADINGS—concluded

Physical facts—warranting directed verdict for defendant. Where a guest in defendant's automobile sustains injuries resulting from defendant's alleged recklessness in traveling at a high rate of speed and striking a cow on a paved highway, and where guest recovers judgment in a damage action wherein defendant appeals from an order overruling his motion for directed verdict, evidence reviewed showing that plaintiff's own uncontradicted factual situation, developed on direct examination, failed to sustain his specifications of recklessness in that defendant failed to reduce the speed of the car as he approached the cattle, and held the court erred in not sustaining the motion for a directed verdict.

Scott v Hansen, 228- ; 289 NW 710

Physical facts—exception to most favorable evidence rule. On appeal from an order overruling defendant's motion for directed verdict, the supreme court need not follow the most favorable evidence rule, as urged by plaintiff, to the exclusion of the physical facts and other uncontradicted matters which plaintiff not only conceded, but affirmatively and intentionally established.

Scott v Hansen, 228- ; 289 NW 710

Separate trial—right to. Reversible error results from refusing a separate trial to a defendant who is sued jointly with another for damages consequent on his alleged negligence, and on the alleged recklessness of his co-defendant, the defensive issues of the two defendants being wholly hostile to each other, and the opportunity existing for collusion between the plaintiff and such other defendant.

Manley v Paysen, 215-146; 244 NW 863; 84 ALR 1330

Joint tort-feasors with different defenses—separate trials. Altho joint tort-feasors may be joined in one action, a petition charging two colliding motorists generally with negligence and recklessness and only alleging that plaintiff was riding in one of the vehicles, with no averment as to his status as a guest or otherwise, presents to the jury such complex and confusing issues as to entitle defendants to separate trials.

Fay v Dorow, 224-275; 276 NW 31

Defense—third party negligence. A defendant-host who pleads that the sole and proximate cause of an injury was the negligence of a third party cannot complain that the court instructs that the negligence of said third person is immaterial unless defendant-host establishes that such negligence, and not his own recklessness, was the sole and proximate cause of said injury.

Separate specifications submitted—joined by "and"—harmless error. In an action under the Illinois guest statute for damages arising out of injuries received in a motor vehicle collision in Illinois, separate specifications of negligence, based on one charge of excessive speed, but, nevertheless, submitted in the language of the petition, are not rendered prejudicially erroneous because joined together with the word "and".

Moran v Kean, 225-329; 280 NW 543

Admissions of fact—conclusiveness. Specific admissions of fact made in the pleadings which join the issues which are being tried are binding on the party making them, and as to such admissions there can be no issue.

Wilson v Oxborrow, 220-1135; 264 NW 1

Instructions—reference to speed—granting new trial. A reference in an instruction to a motor vehicle speed of 60 miles per hour when the allegation in the petition of such speed was coerced by a ruling of the court, while not in itself sufficient to warrant a reversal, still justifies the trial court in granting a new trial when considered along with other alleged errors.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

VII PRESUMPTIONS, EVIDENCE, AND PROOF(a) IN GENERAL

Speed signs—presumption of officer's performance of duty. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that town officers properly performed the mandatory duty imposed on them by statute in the erection and maintenance of speed limit signs.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

"Reckless operation" defined. To constitute "reckless operation" of a motor vehicle, the plea and proof must be such as to justify a finding that the operator was "proceeding without heed of, or concern for, consequences". Plea and proof of negligent operation only is wholly insufficient.

Neessen v Armstrong, 213-378; 239 NW 56; 31 NCCA 104

Petersen v Detwiller, 218-418; 255 NW 529; 36 NCCA 358

Burden of proof. Whether the burden of proof is upon a plaintiff-administrator seeking to recover damages for death consequent on the reckless operation of an automobile by the defendant, to prove that the deceased was riding in the car by invitation and not for hire, quare.

Neessen v Armstrong, 213-378; 239 NW 56

Concurrent acts of negligence showing recklessness. In an action by a guest in an automobile against the driver of the car for damages consequent on the operation of the car, evidence reviewed at length relative to several alleged concurrent acts of negligence on the part of said driver, and held insufficient, when viewed collectively, to establish prima facie evidence of recklessness.

Wion v Hayes, 220-156; 261 NW 531

Contributory negligence. In an action based on "reckless operation" of a motor vehicle contributory negligence is not an element to be considered or dealt with, either by pleading, proof or instructions.

Siesseger v Puth; 213-164; 239 NW 46; 31 NCCA 84; 34 NCCA 495

Kaplan v Kaplan, 213-646; 239 NW 682; 31 NCCA 105

Recklessness—evidence insufficiency. Evidence reviewed in detail relative (1) to the operation of an automobile upon a paved road, and upon a straightaway graveled road connecting therewith, (2) to the warning signs upon said paved road, (3) to the condition of said graveled road and to the visibility of the somewhat rough and rutted condition thereof, and (4) to the twice overturning of said automobile almost immediately after it entered upon said graveled road, and held insufficient per se to establish recklessness in the operation of said automobile.

Brown v Martin, 216-1272; 248 NW 368; 34 NCCA 354

Physical facts—unsustainable verdict. A verdict finding, in effect, that defendant (with whom a guest was riding) was operating his automobile in a reckless manner cannot be sustained when the testimony tending to establish recklessness, when tested in the light of the admitted physical facts and verities revealed in the record, cannot be true; and this is true notwithstanding plaintiff's conceded right to the benefit of the most favorable view of evidence rule.

Bowermaster v Universal Co., 221-831; 266 NW 503

Issue whether owner driving—circumstantial evidence. On the issue supported by circumstantial evidence as to whether a car owner was driving at the time of an accident, a mere showing that another person was in the front seat creates only a possibility that he was driving, when opposed by facts supporting the probability and more plausible presumption that the owner was driving, arising from evidence that also being in the front seat, seated behind the wheel, the owner was driving the automobile a short time before the accident.

Claussen v Johnson's Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Impeachment of witness—allowable contradiction. A party may not impeach his own witness but he may offer testimony of other witnesses in contradiction thereof.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Dead man statute—circumventing by indirection. A witness is not permitted to do by indirection that which the law forbids. So held where a passenger in a motor vehicle attempted to circumvent the dead man statute by testifying that he was hired by someone to make the trip, who was no other person than the deceased driver.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

(b) NO-EYEWITNESS RULE

Inapplicability of rule under direct evidence. Where a motorist and other eyewitnesses testify as to defendant's conduct just prior to his driving into the side of a moving train, it is error to instruct on the presumption that defendant's natural instinct of self-preservation would prompt him not to run into a moving train, when direct evidence as to his conduct is obtainable.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

(c) OPINION EVIDENCE

Qualified mechanic's testimony as to brakes and lights. It is not error to permit testimony of expert witnesses when there is a sufficient showing of their qualifications to give such testimony. So held as to a mechanic's testimony regarding brakes and lights.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

(d) PHYSICAL FACTS

Determining cause from effect—rarely matter of law. So many elements enter into the physical results produced by motor vehicle collisions that it is very seldom that a court can say as a matter of law that a particular result was produced because certain factors constituted the cause.

Echternacht v Herny, 224-317; 275 NW 576

Unsustainable verdict. A verdict finding, in effect, that defendant (with whom a guest was riding) was operating his automobile in a reckless manner cannot be sustained when the testimony tending to establish recklessness, when tested in the light of the admitted physical facts and verities revealed in the record, cannot be true; and this is true notwithstanding plaintiff's conceded right to the benefit of the most favorable view of evidence rule.

Bowermaster v Universal Co., 221-831; 266 NW 503

Physical facts—warranting directed verdict for defendant. Where a guest in defendant's automobile sustains injuries resulting from defendant's alleged recklessness in traveling at a high rate of speed and striking a cow on a paved highway, and where guest recovers judgment in a damage action wherein defendant appeals from an order overruling his motion for directed verdict, evidence reviewed showing that plaintiff's own uncontradicted factual situation, developed on direct examination, failed to sustain his specifications of recklessness in that defendant failed to reduce the speed of the car as he approached the cattle, and held the court erred in not sustaining the motion for a directed verdict.

Scott v Hansen, 228- ; 289 NW 710

Physical facts—exception to most favorable evidence rule. On appeal from an order overruling defendant's motion for directed verdict, the supreme court need not follow the most favorable evidence rule, as urged by plaintiff, to the exclusion of the physical facts and other uncontradicted matters which plaintiff not only conceded, but affirmatively and intentionally established.

Scott v Hansen, 228- ; 289 NW 710

(e) RES IPSA LOQUITUR

Doctrine never applicable. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is never applicable to establish a presumption of recklessness.

Phillips v Briggs, 215-461; 245 NW 720; 34 NCCA 364; 39 NCCA 126

(f) JURY QUESTIONS

Submitting both negligence and recklessness. Both questions of negligence and of recklessness may in a proper case be submitted together to the jury.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Reckless operation—negating possibilities. In order to make a jury question on the issue of reckless operation of an automobile, plaintiff need not negative every possibility which might exculpate the defendant.

White v Center, 218-1027; 254 NW 90

Whether jury case is made. In an action for damages based on the plea of reckless operation of the vehicle, the court must determine whether substantially uncontradicted testimony presents, when judged in the light most favorable to plaintiff, no more, at the best, than a case of simple negligence on the part of the operator, or whether said testimony presents a jury question on the issue of recklessness.

Shenkle v Mains, 216-1324; 247 NW 635

Recklessness—jury (?) or court (?) question. A jury question and not a court question arises (1) when one or more of a series of undisputed facts tend to establish recklessness in the operation of an automobile, and (2) when different minds might reasonably differ on the question whether recklessness was, in fact, established.

Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352; 34 NCCA 361

Evidence—insufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to justify submission to the jury of the issue of recklessness in the operation of an automobile.

Wright v What Cheer Co., 221-1292; 267 NW 92

Recklessness particulars unchallenged before answer—submitting as alleged. Error may not be predicated on the submission of certain particulars alleging recklessness when their sufficiency is not raised before answer filed and when evidence exists to sustain them.

Claussen v Johnson's Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Defective steering gear—recklessness. "Reckless" operation of an automobile is not established as a jury question by proof that it was operated at a time when the operator knew the steering mechanism was in such condition that when the brakes were applied the vehicle would turn to one side.

Stanbery v Johnson, 218-160; 254 NW 303

Reckless operation—car swerving into ditch. A jury question on the issue whether an automobile was recklessly operated is not made by proof that the car was being operated on a straight, level, and unobstructed paved road at a speed of some 50 miles per hour by a person who was somewhat weary from loss of sleep, and somewhat unnerved by an accident happening earlier in the day, and that suddenly and without warning the car swerved and went into a ditch and overturned, notwithstanding the evident good-faith efforts of the driver to control the car.

Duncan v Lowe, 221-1278; 268 NW 10

Car slipping into ditch. Evidence that the driver of an automobile on a straight, smooth, graveled road was traveling 45 miles per hour in an attempt to pass other automobiles does not, in and of itself, furnish a jury question on the issue of reckless operation; otherwise as to evidence that after the car slipped and entered a ditch along the roadside the speed materially increased for a distance of 160 feet at which latter point the car collided with an intersecting grade, turned over twice, and came to a stop some 105 feet farther on.

See Cerny v Secor, 211-1232; 234 NW 193

Reckless operation—driving in middle of road at high speed. In an action under the guest statute, evidence that the car was being driven down the middle of a graveled road at a high speed, when it collided with an oncoming car on a hill, held insufficient to present a jury question on the issue of reckless operation.

Mayer v Sheetz, 223-582; 273 NW 138

Speed—car out of control. Evidence tending to show that an inexperienced driver operated his automobile for a half mile on a downgrade on a perfectly good, broad, graveled highway at a speed of 55 miles per hour in violation of the statutory speed standard, with the car out of control and swaying from side to side, and that thereupon he inadvertently stepped on the gas instead of the brake and went into a ditch on the wrong side of the road, justifies the submission to the jury of the issue of recklessness.

Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352; 34 NCCA 361

Speed on downgrade. A jury question on the issue whether an automobile was operated recklessly, that is, in heedless disregard of consequences, is made by testimony that the driver, faced by no emergency, operated the car on the downgrade of a straight, good-conditioned, 18-foot wide, graveled road, for a distance of over 1500 feet, and at a speed of 75 miles per hour (110 feet per second), and in the direction of a somewhat elevated railway grade crossing, and that in the near vicinity of said crossing, the car, after repeatedly weaving from one side of the roadway to the other, left said roadway, plunged into a ditch, and overturned two or three times.

Wright v Mahaffa, 222-872; 270 NW 402

Speed. A jury question on the issue of reckless operation of an automobile may be made by testimony that the driver, on a straight, level stretch of paved road, and on the right-hand side thereof, and at a time when he could see substantial objects on the road at least one-quarter mile ahead and easily pass them, operated his car at 70 miles per hour and crashed into the rear of and substantially annihilated a wagon and team on the extreme right-hand side of the road and moving in the same direction as the automobile.

White v Center, 218-1027; 254 NW 90; 36 NCCA 339

Recklessness—speed plus surrounding circumstances. High speed, while not alone decisive of recklessness, yet when coupled with surrounding circumstances such as approaching darkness, difficult visibility, heavy primary road traffic, and a double collision with the rear of an unlighted trailer and an oncoming truck, presents a question on which reasonable minds would differ and should be submitted to the jury.

Claussen v Johnson's Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Speed on unfamiliar road. A jury question on the issue of reckless operation of an automobile is made by evidence that the car was being operated (1) over a wide, well-settled, graveled highway with which the operator was wholly unfamiliar, (2) at a speed of some 65 miles per hour, (3) during the nighttime when visibility was materially limited, and (4) at a turn in the road so belatedly anticipated and discovered that the driver was unable to negotiate it and was compelled to turn his car into the side ditch.

Mescher v Brogan, 223-573; 272 NW 645

Excessive speed at intersection. In an action by a guest against the driver and owner of a motor vehicle for injuries sustained as a result of a collision with an oncoming vehicle, where it is shown that the collision occurred on the left side of the road while automobile, with defective brakes, was being driven at an excessive rate of speed through a well-traveled intersection in a town over a slope or hill which limited visibility, and on the left side of the highway in face of visible oncoming traffic, such evidence, on the issue of whether or not collision was caused by driver's recklessness, presented a jury question.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Speeding in residence district—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence that accident occurred on main street of town about four or five blocks from the business district, that defendant was driving 50 miles per hour, that there were a number of dwellings on both sides of the street, and that defendant had passed a sign which read, "Slow down, speed limit 25 miles per hour", was sufficient to raise jury question on issue of whether car was being driven in a residence district in excess of 25 miles per hour.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

"Guest" or mere "invitee"—negating relation. A passenger in an automobile is neither a "guest" nor a mere "invitee" when he is riding therein:

1. For the purpose of performing and in order to perform his duty as a servant of the owner or operator; or
 2. For the definite and tangible benefit of the owner or operator; or
 3. For the mutual, definite, and tangible benefit of the owner or operator on the one hand, and of the passenger on the other hand.
- Necessarily, a jury question is generated by a substantial conflict of testimony.

Knutson v Lurie, 217-192; 251 NW 157; 36 NCCA 275

Guest or employee as pivotal question—duty of court. When, under the pleading and evidence, the pivotal question is whether plaintiff when injured in defendant's car was a guest or an employee of defendant, the court should not refuse instructions which require the jury to determine such question.

(f) JURY QUESTIONS—concluded

Guest (?) or otherwise—jury question. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether plaintiff, at the time he was injured in a collision, was riding in an automobile as a "guest" or as an employee.

Porter v Decker, 222-1109; 270 NW 897

Failure to support one theory of case. Where plaintiff, a motor vehicle passenger, predicates his action on two theories, viz: (1) he was not a guest, and (2) he was a guest, and as to the first his proof fails because of witness' incompetency under dead man statute, and as to the second he offers no evidence, there is nothing to be submitted to the jury.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Pleading as controlling applicability of guest statute. Even when there is evidence indicating that deceased may not have been a guest, yet when an action is based and tried on the theory of "recklessness", the court may on its own motion properly instruct that deceased was a guest.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

Assumption of risk. Where motorist and guest had been drinking and automobile was driven off road, wrecked, and guest was killed, the question of assumption of risk was for the jury.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Intoxication. In a guest case where the evidence shows all the occupants of the motor vehicle had been drinking whisky, the issue of intoxication should not be withdrawn from the jury.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Conflict as to use of brakes. A conflict in the evidence in a motor vehicle accident case as to whether defendant did or did not apply his brakes is properly a matter for the jury.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

Father's consent to son's use of vehicle. Where a guest, injured in an automobile collision, seeks damages from a son and father, as driver and owner, respectively, of a motor vehicle, question of father's consent to son's use of automobile, procured especially for and used exclusively by the son, so as to render the father liable for guest's injuries resulting from son's reckless operation, is a jury question.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Interrogatory seeking "knowledge and consent"—proper refusal. In a guest's personal injury action against a father and son, owner and driver, respectively, of the motor vehicle, where the petition alleges the son was driving with the "knowledge and consent" of the father, court's refusal to submit to the jury defendant-appellant's special interrogatory as to finding that son was driving car with "knowledge and consent" of father was not error, as it required an element not contained in the statute—proof under the statute need go no further than to show "consent", even tho allegation of knowledge was in the petition.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Passenger suing both drivers—concurring negligence. In an action by a passenger against the drivers of both automobiles involved in a collision, where the vehicle in which he was riding was being driven 50 to 60 miles per hour in a snowstorm, with an oncoming automobile crowding toward the wrong side of the road, a jury question is created as to whether the conduct of the driver with whom the plaintiff was riding was a concurring proximate cause of the passenger's injuries.

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

(g) DECLARATIONS AND ADMISSIONS

Admissions of fact—conclusiveness. Specific admissions of fact made in the pleadings which join the issues which are being tried are binding on the party making them, and as to such admissions there can be no issue.

Wilson v Oxborrow, 220-1185; 264 NW 1

Weight to be given admission. A cautionary instruction pertaining to the weight to be given an alleged oral admission of defendant to plaintiff following a motor vehicle accident should include a counterbalancing statement that if the admission were deliberately made or often repeated, it might be the most satisfactory evidence.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Admission of fault. On the issue of reckless operation of an automobile evidence that shortly after a collision the driver being asked what was the matter with him replied, "Just a little reckless", is admissible against the driver as tending to show his admitted fault for the collision.

White v Center, 218-1027; 254 NW 90

Damaging statements—failure to deny as admission. Evidence of the failure of a person to reply to material statements made in his presence and hearing, concerning facts affecting his rights, is competent if the statements are of such character and are made under such conditions that a denial would have been natural had the statements been untrue and incorrect.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Whole of writing offered—must be on same subject as part offered. In automobile damage action for injuries sustained by plaintiff while riding as a guest of defendant's deceased husband, where, on cross-examination of plaintiff, he was interrogated for impeachment purposes concerning statements made by him as witness in coroner's investigation, and admitted making certain statements, but claimed he was mistaken as to facts, and defendant offered such statements found in coroner's transcript as admission against interest, whereupon plaintiff offered the transcript in its entirety under statute providing the whole of a writing on the same subject may be inquired into, exclusion of transcript by the court was rightful since transcript contained statements made by plaintiff that were not on the same subject as were the answers offered by defendant, as well as being self-serving in character.

(h) RES GESTAE

Reckless operation—admission of fault. On the issue of reckless operation of an automobile evidence that shortly after a collision the driver being asked what was the matter with him replied, "Just a little reckless", is admissible against the driver as tending to show his admitted fault for the collision.

White v Center, 218-1027; 254 NW 90

(i) DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

Signed statement by plaintiff—legal effect. Plaintiff who seeks to establish the reckless operation of an automobile at a time when he was riding therein as a guest is not legally precluded by a written statement theretofore signed by him, and introduced as part of his cross-examination, and which statement tended, perhaps conclusively, to disprove said alleged reckless operation, plaintiff not admitting that the statements contained in said signed writing were true for the purposes of said trial.

Wright v Mahaffa, 222-872; 270 NW 402

VIII INSTRUCTIONS

(a) IN GENERAL

Pleading as controlling applicability of guest statute. Even when there is evidence indicating that deceased may not have been a guest, yet when an action is based and tried on the theory of "recklessness", the court may on its own motion properly instruct that deceased was a guest.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

Guest or employee as pivotal question—duty of court. When, under the pleading and evidence, the pivotal question is whether plaintiff when injured in defendant's car was a guest or an employee of defendant, the court should not refuse instructions which require the jury to determine such question.

Porter v Decker, 222-1109; 270 NW 897

Ethical objection to recovery. In an action by a guest to recover of her host damages for injuries inflicted by the reckless operation of an automobile, it is not reversible error to instruct: "Nor is she bound by any ethical rule to the effect that one who is a guest of another should not seek recovery in a proper case", it appearing that the full burden of proving a legal right to recover was plainly imposed on plaintiff.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Law of case—guest—evidence sufficiency. An instruction to the effect that claimant under the "guest" statute, in order to recover, must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his decedent was a guest, when unobjected to and not appealed from, remains the law of the case, and evidence that automobile trip, like similar prior trips, with operator as host to friends for purpose of attending a school function, was sufficient to sustain jury finding that passenger was a "guest".

Claussen v Johnson's Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Contributory negligence. In an action based on "reckless operation" of a motor vehicle contributory negligence is not an element to be considered or dealt with, either by pleading, proof or instructions.

Siesseger v Puth, 213-164; 239 NW 46; 31 NCCA 84; 34 NCCA 495

Kaplan v Kaplan, 213-646; 239 NW 682; 31 NCCA 105

Contributory negligence. The refusal of the court to instruct as to just what a guest in an automobile must do in order to escape the imputation of contributory negligence is proper, especially in view of the fact that contributory negligence is not an element to be considered in an action for reckless driving.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Holding under prior statute. The court must not instruct that a mere guest in an automobile (under duty, of course, to exercise reasonable and ordinary care) will be guilty of negligence if he fails to do some particular thing, e. g., attempt in some manner to check the speed of the car.

Codner v Stowe, 201-800; 208 NW 330; 26 NCCA 207

Improper reference to negligence. In an action based solely on the reckless operation of an automobile, the court must not confuse the jury by reciting in its instructions the law governing liability for negligence.

Kaufman v Borg, 214-293; 242 NW 104

Avoiding reference to negligent acts. In an action based solely on "reckless" operation of an automobile, the failure of the court to explain and define various acts of negligence covered by the motor vehicle statutes, is eminently proper.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

VIII INSTRUCTIONS—continued

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Reference to speed—granting new trial. A reference in an instruction to a motor vehicle speed of 60 miles per hour when the allegation in the petition of such speed was coerced by a ruling of the court, while not in itself sufficient to warrant a reversal, still justifies the trial court in granting a new trial when considered along with other alleged errors.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

(b) DEFINING TERMS

Recklessness—instructions as a whole. Instructions clearly and accurately defining “recklessness” in the operation of an automobile and definitely placing on plaintiff the burden to establish such “recklessness”, neutralize the evil effect of a particular instruction which might, in and of itself, possibly lead the jury to understand that recklessness might consist of the doing of certain acts irrespective of the conditions or circumstances under which they might be done.

Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352; 34 NCCA 361

Statute distinctions—duty of court. In an action under the guest statute, it is the court’s duty to plainly point out to the jury the distinction between negligence and recklessness, and the court, in so doing, by saying “that recklessness means more than negligence”, does not unduly emphasize matters in defense or confuse the jury.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

Defining recklessness but not negligence—no error. Definition of recklessness stating that “recklessness is more than negligence” is not erroneous because of failure to also define negligence.

Claussen v Johnson’s Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Improper definition of recklessness. The approved definition of “recklessness” as “implying no care—a proceeding without heed or concern for consequences”—is rendered erroneous by the addition thereto of the elements of “desperation” and “foolishly heedless of danger”.

White v McVicker, 216-90; 246 NW 385

Correct but not explicit. Instructions which are correct statements of applicable law, but which are not accompanied by definitions of quite commonplace terms, e. g. “express or implied consent,” are nevertheless all-sufficient in the absence of a request for such definitions.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Failure to define “issue”. It is not erroneous for the court to fail to define the term “issue”.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

(c) BALANCING INSTRUCTIONS

Protests and warnings by guest. Instructions to a jury that a motorist is not at his peril required to comply with the protests and warnings of his guest should, if requested by the plaintiff and shown by the evidence, be followed with the converse of this proposition, that if the jury finds the driver was warned, some distance from a railroad crossing, of imminent danger and, then, if the driver made no attempt to stop or reduce his speed, he is guilty of recklessness as a matter of law.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

Weight to be given admission. A cautionary instruction pertaining to the weight to be given an alleged oral admission of defendant to plaintiff following a motor vehicle accident should include a counterbalancing statement that if the admission were deliberately made or often repeated, it might be the most satisfactory evidence.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

(d) PARAPHRASING PLEADINGS, STATUTES

Paraphrasing grounds of recklessness. An accurate paraphrase of various grounds of recovery is all-sufficient for submission to the jury.

Fleming v Thornton, 217-183; 251 NW 158

Repealed statute—requested instruction properly refused. In automobile guest’s personal injury action resulting in jury verdict for defendant, plaintiff’s request for new trial because of refusal to give an instruction to the effect that it was the duty of a driver of an overtaken automobile, upon signal, to drive to the “right center of the traveled way” and remain there until overtaking automobile shall have “safely passed” was properly refused, since such statute was repealed at time plaintiff was injured, and new statute only required such driver to “give way to the right” until overtaking vehicle had “completely passed”.

Jones v Krambeck, 228- ; 290 NW 56

Separate specifications of wanton misconduct submitted—joined by “and”—harmless error. In an action under the Illinois guest statute, for damages arising out of injuries received in a motor vehicle collision in Illinois, separate specifications of wanton misconduct, based on one charge of excessive speed, but, nevertheless, submitted in the language of the petition, are not rendered prejudicially erroneous because joined together with the word “and”.

Moran v Kean, 225-329; 280 NW 543

(e) BURDEN OF PROOF

Affirmative defense—burden on pleader. The jury in a personal injury or death claim action where the defendant pleads “assumption of risk” should be plainly instructed that one pleading an affirmative defense must assume the burden of proving it.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Ethical objection to recovery. In an action by a guest to recover of her host damages for injuries inflicted by the reckless operation of an automobile, it is not reversible error to instruct: "Nor is she bound by any ethical rule to the effect that one who is a guest of another should not seek recovery in a proper case," it appearing that the full burden of proving a legal right to recover was plainly imposed on plaintiff.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Guest—evidence sufficiency. An instruction to the effect that claimant under the guest statute, in order to recover, must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his decedent was a guest, when unobjected to and not appealed from, remains the law of the case, and evidence that automobile trip, like similar prior trips, with operator as host to friends for purpose of attending a school function, was sufficient to sustain jury finding that passenger was a "guest".

Claussen v Johnson's Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Father's consent to son's use of vehicle. In a guest's action against a father and son on account of son's reckless operation of automobile, instructions to the jury setting out elements required for recovery against both father and son should have included element that proof of father's consent to son's use of automobile was required to justify a verdict against the father, and any instruction which was intended to refer to son only should have been so stated.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Vehicle driven without owner's consent. Where jury is instructed that the law implies that a car being driven by one other than its owner is being driven with the owner's consent "and this places the burden upon the owner to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the car was not being driven with his consent", this quoted portion of instruction is reversible error as it places undue burden on owner; the inference from ownership does not change the burden of proof which continues on the complaining party throughout the trial.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

(f) UNSUPPORTED ISSUES

Submission of evidentiary issue. Issues having no basis in the pleadings need not be submitted to the jury.

Hart v Hinkley, 215-915; 247 NW 258

Insufficient plea. In an action for damages consequent on the operation of an automobile instructions which predicate recovery on proof of "reckless" operation cannot be sustained when the pleadings neither allege reckless driving nor facts from which recklessness is a necessary deduction.

Redfern v Redfern, 212-454; 236 NW 399

Guest (?) or otherwise. Issues which are without support in the evidence must not be submitted. So held where on the question whether plaintiff when he was injured was a guest in an automobile, the court submitted the unsupported issues whether plaintiff accompanied defendant (1) for the definite benefit of defendant, or (2) for the mutual benefit of plaintiff and defendant.

Porter v Decker, 222-1109; 270 NW 897

"Unwilling guest" interpretation unwarranted. Instruction reviewed and held not open to the vice of injecting an issue not in the pleadings, to wit, that plaintiff was an unwilling guest in defendant's automobile.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

Assuming other motorist will obey law. Requested instructions that a motorist had a right to assume that a taxi driver would obey the law as to speed and lookout, altho correct as abstract propositions of law, are properly refused when not supported by the evidence.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

"No-eyewitness" rule. Where a motorist and other eyewitnesses testify as to deceased's conduct just prior to his driving into the side of a moving train, it is error to instruct on the presumption that defendant's natural instinct of self-preservation would prompt him not to run into a moving train, when direct evidence as to his conduct is obtainable.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

Defense—third party negligence. A defendant-host who pleads that the sole and proximate cause of an injury was the negligence of a third party cannot complain that the court instructs that the negligence of said third person is immaterial unless defendant-host establishes that such negligence, and not his own recklessness, was the sole and proximate cause of said injury.

Johnson v McVicker, 216-654; 247 NW 488

(g) CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE

Limiting recovery to proof. An instruction stating that if defendant's recklessness caused plaintiff's injury the defendant would be liable, is not error when accompanied by other instructions which limit recovery to proof of specific grounds of recklessness.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

Neutralizing evil of one instruction. Instructions clearly and accurately defining "recklessness" in the operation of an automobile and definitely placing on plaintiff the burden to establish such "recklessness"; neutralize the evil effect of a particular instruction which might, in and of itself, possibly lead the jury to understand that recklessness might consist of the doing of certain acts irrespective of the conditions or circumstances under which they might be done.

Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352; 34 NCCA 361

Bad effect of one instruction neutralized by repeating good instruction. Repeated instructions, to the effect that plaintiff must, in order to recover, establish that defendant recklessly operated the automobile in question, neutralize the evil effects of a particular instruction which inferentially told the jury that defendant admitted such recklessness.

Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352

Ethical objection to recovery. In an action by a guest to recover of her host damages for injuries inflicted by the reckless operation of an automobile, it is not reversible error to instruct: "Nor is she bound by any ethical rule to the effect that one who is a guest of another should not seek recovery in a proper case", it appearing that the full burden of proving a legal right to recover was plainly imposed on plaintiff.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

(h) REQUESTING INSTRUCTIONS

Guest or employee as pivotal question — duty of court. When, under the pleading and evidence, the pivotal question is whether plaintiff when injured in defendant's car was a guest or an employee of defendant, the court should not refuse instructions which require the jury to determine such question.

Porter v Decker, 222-1109; 270 NW 897

Protests and warnings by guest—balancing instructions. Instructions to a jury that a motorist is not at his peril required to comply with the protests and warnings of his guest should, if requested by the plaintiff and shown by the evidence, be followed with the converse of this proposition, that if the jury finds the driver was warned some distance from a railroad crossing of imminent danger and, then, if the driver made no attempt to stop or reduce his speed, he is guilty of recklessness as a matter of law.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

Interrogatory seeking more than statutory requirements—proper refusal. In a guest's personal injury action against a father and son, owner and driver, respectively, of the motor vehicle, where the petition alleges the son was driving with the "knowledge and consent" of the father, court's refusal to submit to the jury defendant-appellant's special interrogatory as to finding that son was driving car with "knowledge and consent" of father was not error, as it required an element not contained in the statute—proof under the statute need go no further than to show "consent", even tho allegation of knowledge was in the petition.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

IX DAMAGES

Submission of excess recovery. The submission to the jury of a possible amount of recovery slightly in excess of what is legally recoverable does not constitute error when the final result is not affected thereby.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Harmless error—instructions inviting excess recovery. Instructions allowing the jury to return damages in excess of statutory limitation are harmless when the jury returns a verdict for less than the statutory limit.

Siesseger v Puth, 211-775; 234 NW 540

Present worth of estate—inadequate instructions. In an action for damages to the estate of 17-year-old minor consequent on his wrongful death, the court should instruct that the present worth of said estate must be based on the minor's expectancy at the time of his majority. But a substantial reduction of the verdict may cure the error.

Hart v Hinkley, 215-915; 247 NW 258

Verdicts—unallowable impeachment. In a personal injury action, a verdict may not be impeached by the affidavits of jurors to the effect that a certain allowance was made for an element of damages as to which there was no evidence.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Visible disfigurement. A visible and life-long personal disfigurement is necessarily a very persuasive element of damages. Verdict of $5,000 held nonexcessive.

Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352

Verdict due to passion and prejudice. Verdict of $17,000 for wrongfully caused death held to show passion and prejudice, and optionally reduced to $7,000.

Cerny v Secor, 211-1232; 234 NW 193

Fatal personal injury—$15,000—excessiveness. Verdict for $15,000 for death of a 17-year-old boy, reduced by trial court to $10,000, held subject to a further reduction to $7,500.

 Harvard Law Review, Vol. 39 p. 563

Substituted service statute—strict adherence. Statutes providing for substituted service of original notice present a method of procedure that is extraordinary in character and allowed only because specially authorized. Because such statutes are the only authority for the procedure, the facts required in the statute must appear.

Jermaine v Graf, 225-1063; 283 NW 428

Substituted service on nonresident defendants in automobile cases—availability to nonresident plaintiffs. The provisions of the Iowa motor vehicle law relative to substituted service upon nonresident defendants are available to nonresident plaintiffs.

Welsh v Ruopp, 228- ; 289 NW 760

Original notice—service on nonresidents—showing nonresidence at time of accident. Where an attack by special appearance and motion to quash is made upon use of special method of securing service on nonresidents provided for in motor vehicle law, a showing is required of facts essential to jurisdiction, and one of such basic facts is nonresidence of defendant at the time of the use and operation of the vehicle allegedly causing the damage upon which suit is brought. Accordingly, proof of nonresidence at the time suit is started would not be sufficient where accident in question occurred one and one-half years earlier.

Welsh v Ruopp, 228- ; 289 NW 760

Substituted service on nonresident corporation—plaintiff's burden. In a motor vehicle accident action wherein plaintiff obtained service of notice upon a nonresident corporation by serving the commissioner of motor vehicles and wherein the defendant attacked such service by special appearance on the ground that it was not a person within the purview of the statute, the burden was on the plaintiff to make such showing that defendant was a person under the statute. Held, burden not met.

5038.03 Original notice—form.

Substituted service on nonresidents—contents of notice. Provision in motor vehicle law invoking special method of service on nonresidents does not require that the original notice set out facts which warrant use of such method and which might be necessary to sustain jurisdiction. Notice which complies with this section and §11055, C., '39, is sufficient.

5038.04 Manner of service.

Substituted service on nonresidents. Statutes relative to securing substituted service on nonresidents in motor vehicle accident cases do not require that motor vehicle commissioner or his deputy make affidavit proving filing of original notice with the commissioner and proving mailing of notification to nonresidents. Such proof may be made by plaintiff, his attorney, or someone acting in his behalf.

MOTOR VEHICLE DEALERS

5039.02 Definitions.

Conditional sale vendor not liable for negligence of vendee. The vendor of a motor vehicle under a conditional sales contract and his assignee are not to be held responsible for the negligent operation of the vehicle by the vendee on the ground that they have a duty to see if the vendee is responsible before turning him loose on the highway with a dangerous instrumentality.

Right to proceed—instructions. The court should, on supporting testimony, instruct as to the right of a traveler to proceed cautiously toward his destination in case of the failure of his lights to operate.

Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442

Necessary instructions. The operation of an automobile during the nighttime without the required number of lights is not necessarily negligent; and in submitting such issue the court must clearly state to the jury the circumstances under which the operator would, under the statute, be negligent and the circumstances under which he would not, under the statute, be negligent.

Liability of county. A county becomes, within the scope and meaning of chapter 251-F1, C., '35, [Ch 251.3, C., '39] a distributor of motor vehicle fuel when it imports the same from without the state solely for the purpose of operating its power maintainers and trucks in the construction and maintenance of its highways and is under obligation to obtain a license as such distributor and to pay the state the statutory excise charge (without penalty) on such importations.

State v Woodbury County, 222-488; 269 NW 449

Liability of municipality. A municipal corporation becomes, within the scope and meaning of chapter 251-F1, C., '35, [Ch 251.3, C., '39] a "distributor" of motor vehicle fuel when it imports the same from without the state for its own use and is under obligation to obtain a license as such distributor and to pay to the state the statutory excise charge on such importations.

Lineberger v Johnson, 213-800; 239 NW 679

Nonburden on interstate commerce. Principle reaffirmed that the so-called motor vehicle fuel tax is not a direct tax on said fuel imported, but is an excise on the use of the fuel for the propulsion of vehicles on the highways of the state, and is in no sense a burden on interstate commerce.

State v Standard Oil, 222-1209; 271 NW 185

Motor vehicle fuel tax—constitutional. The Iowa motor vehicle fuel tax was obviously not intended to reach transactions in interstate commerce, but to tax the use of motor fuel after it came to rest in Iowa, and the requirement that the distributor as shipper into Iowa shall, as agent of the state, report and pay the tax on the gasoline thus coming into the state for use by others on whom the tax falls, imposes no unconstitutional burden, either upon interstate commerce or upon the distributor.

State v Woitha, 227-1; 287 NW 99
State v Hardy, 227-12; 287 NW 104

Motor vehicle fuel tax—constitutional. The Iowa motor vehicle fuel tax was obviously not intended to reach transactions in interstate commerce, but to tax the use of motor fuel after it came to rest in Iowa, and the requirement that the distributor as shipper into Iowa shall, as agent of the state, report and pay the tax on the gasoline thus coming into the state for use by others on whom the tax falls, imposes no unconstitutional burden, either upon interstate commerce or upon the distributor.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 450; '38 AG Op 294, 502

Unallowable refunds. A distributor of motor vehicle fuel imported into the state who under this statute pays the tax on the "invoiced gallonage"—the number of gallons placed in the car at the refinery—less the statutory gallonage allowed by statute for "loss and evaporation" (3%), is not entitled to a refund of the tax on the difference in gallonage between said invoiced gallonage and the actual unloaded gallonage—a difference arising from the fact that the fuel was loaded when it was at a much higher temperature than at the time it was unloaded.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 72, 438, 551; AG Op March 23, '39

When tax or license refundable. Where the general public is by proper authority excluded from a public highway during its construction, the operation thereon by the contractor of his motor vehicle road construction machinery in carrying out his contract for the construction of said highway is not an "operation upon the public highway" within the meaning of the statute which denies a refund of tax on gasoline used for said latter purpose. Gasoline used in operating said machinery under said circumstances is used for a "commercial" purpose and the tax paid thereon must be refunded.

D. M. Co. v Johnson, 213-594; 239 NW 575

Unallowable refunds. A distributor of motor vehicle fuel imported into the state who under this statute pays the tax on the "invoiced gallonage"—the number of gallons placed in the car at the refinery—less the statutory gallonage allowed by statute for "loss and evaporation" (3%), is not entitled to a refund of the tax on the difference in gallonage between said invoiced gallonage and the actual unloaded gallonage—a difference arising from the fact that the fuel was loaded when it was at a much higher temperature than at the time it was unloaded.

State v Standard Oil, 222-1209; 271 NW 185

Mistaken refunds—recovery of interest. The state treasurer who, under a mistaken interpretation of the law, refunds to a distributor of motor vehicle fuel a portion of the excise properly paid on account of said fuel, may, on behalf of the state, legally recover the amount of said mistaken refund, but with interest only from the date of the judgment.

State v Oil Co., 222-1209; 271 NW 185

5093.31 Certain acts made unlawful.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op May 25, '39

Indictment—short form—erroneous designation of section. A "short-form" indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, even tho it specifically purports to be found under §13045, C., '31, but which, by the bill of particulars, is manifestly based on false pretenses on obtaining a refund of tax paid on motor vehicle fuel as provided by §5093-a8, C., '31, is sufficient to support a conviction under the latter section and a sentence solely thereunder.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 192, 314; '34 AG Op 190

Common carrier—acts constituting. The contention of a trucker that he is a private carrier solely of a particular line of goods and exclusively for the members of an unincorporated association cannot be sustained when he operates his truck (1) between fixed termini, (2) over a regular route, (3) at stated, regular times, and (4) for compensation with the purpose of offering his services to all persons within said territory having need for the same particular line of carriage, the so-called "association" being a mere subterfuge to hide his real character as a carrier.

State v Rosenstein, 217-985; 252 NW 251

Constitutionality of act. Chapters 252-A1 and 252-A2, C., '31, providing for the regulation and taxation of motor vehicle carriers held constitutional by the federal court.

Grolbert v Bd. of R. R. Com., 60 F 2d, 321

"Operation between fixed termini." A trucker cannot be said to operate "between fixed termini, or over a regular route" when, during the time he is not engaged in his regular business of carrying the government mail, he does odd jobs of trucking and of manual labor, and at irregular times and over irregular routes carries goods from a wholesale center to merchants of his own and of nearby towns, provided he can arrange his time so to do.

State v Thompson, 217-994; 252 NW 256

Nonfixed termini — change in business — effect. A duly issued permit under chapter 252-C1, C., '31 [Ch 252.3, C., 39], authorizing a "truck operator" to transport freight for compensation between nonfixed termini and over nonregular routes ceases to afford protection to the holder of the permit whenever his business concentrates upon a regular route and two fixed termini within the meaning of chapters 252-A1 and 252-A2, C., '31 [Chs 252.1, 252.2, C., '39].

State v Mercer, 215-611; 246 NW 406

Status—voluntary change. A "truck operator" within the meaning of chapter 252-C1, C., '35 [Ch 252.3, C., '39] (one not operating between fixed termini nor over a regular route), immediately becomes a "motor vehicle carrier" (one operating between fixed termini, or over a regular route), and governed accordingly, whenever he so changes the course of his business as to take on the status of the latter and leave off the status of the former.

State v Lischer Bros., 223-588; 272 NW 604

Property damaged while in storage—liability. When motor vehicle carriers utilized the terminal facilities of a third party, who provided pickup and delivery service from the terminal, and had individual spaces rented to each trucker for the storage of that trucker's shipments, it was held that control and possession of the shipments of goods was in the truck carriers during the storage period, and when a fire destroyed the terminal, the terminal owner was acting as agent for the truckers, who were liable to the owners of the property in transit for the losses occasioned by the fire.

Crouse v Cadwell, 226-1083; 235 NW 623

Motor freight terminal operator's liability to carrier. When motor carrier operators stored goods belonging to third parties in a motor freight terminal and were held liable when the goods were destroyed in a fire through no negligence on the part of the terminal operator, the carriers were not entitled to recoupment from the terminal operator who acted as their agent in storing the goods, in the absence of an agreement that he be liable for losses not caused by his own negligence.

5100.04 Statutes applicable.

Injunction. Injunction will lie by the state on the relation of the board of railroad commissioners to enjoin the operation of a motor carrier over the public highways contrary to the orders of said board.

State v Holderoft, 207-564; 221 NW 191

Injunction—burden of proof. In an action by the board to enjoin a trucker from operating upon the public highway "between fixed termini or over a regular route" without the legally required certificate and payment of the statutory tax, the board has the burden of proof to establish that the defendant is so operating.

State v Ooten, 215-543; 243 NW 329

5100.06 Certificate of convenience and necessity.

Injunction—burden of proof. In an action by the board of railroad commissioners to enjoin a trucker from operating upon the public highway "between fixed termini or over a regular route" without the legally required certificate and payment of the statutory tax, the board has the burden of proof to establish that the defendant is so operating. Evidence held insufficient.

State v Ooten, 215-543; 243 NW 329

Applicability of statutes. A truck operator who, under a permit duly granted under chapter 252-C1, C., '31 [Ch 252.3, C., '39], and by means of his motor truck, transports for hire freight from place to place at irregular times and on no schedule of service, and only when he receives unsolicited and acceptable calls to do such transporting, is not operating "between fixed termini or over a regular route" within the meaning of chapters 252-A1, or 252-A2, C., '31, [Chs 252.1, 252.2, C., '39] and, therefore, is under no obligation to obtain a certificate of necessity or convenience or to pay the tax required by said chapters.

State v Transfer, 213-1269; 239 NW 125

State v Lischer, 215-607; 246 NW 264

State v Lischer, (NOR); 261 NW 634

5100.15 Objections to application.

Authorized objectors. The legal owner by assignment of a certificate of necessity and convenience for the operation of a motor carrier line is a party authorized to enter objections to the granting of a certificate for a competing line.

Campbell v Eldridge, 206-224; 220 NW 304

5100.21 Appeal.

Appearance by commerce counsel. The commerce counsel has a right to appear for and on behalf of the board of railroad commissioners on an appeal from orders granting or refusing an application for the operation of a motor carrier line.

5100.23 Trial on appeal.

Granting of certificate—review. A determination by the board of railroad commissioners, on supporting evidence, that the operation of a motor carrier line would promote the public convenience and necessity is constitutionally beyond review by the courts.

In re Beasley Bros., 206-229; 220 NW 306

Orders of railroad commissioners—judicial review. The authority of the court to review the finding and order of the board of railroad commissioners in granting or refusing a certificate of convenience and necessity for the operation of a motor carrier is strictly limited to questions of law.

In re Waterloo Railway, 206-238; 220 NW 310

Conclusiveness of orders. The board of railroad commissioners has legal authority, on supporting testimony, to grant in part only an application for authority to operate a motor carrier line, and in such case the orders of the board are conclusive on the courts.

Campbell v Eldridge, 206-224; 220 NW 304

5100.24 Appeal to supreme court.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 165

5100.26 Liability bond.

Scope of bond. A liability insurance bond under this section imposes no liability on the surety for injuries to persons except for injuries for which the motor vehicle carrier would be legally liable.

Crozier v Stages, 209-313; 228 NW 320

Action against surety on bond. A party injured in person and property by the operation of a motor vehicle carrier may bring his action directly against the carrier and the statutory surety on the bond filed with the board of railroad commissioners, even tho no service is had on the carrier and even tho the bond provides, in effect, for an action against the surety in event the injured party first obtains a judgment against the carrier and fails to collect thereon.

Curtis v Michaelson, 206-111; 219 NW 49; 1 NCCA (NS) 336

Regulation—construction and application of statute. An interstate motor vehicle carrier will not be permitted to justify a total disregard of the motor vehicle carrier acts of this state on the plea that said acts (applicable in a general way to both interstate and intrastate carriers) if literally construed, would require him to execute to the state a bond which would be violative of the interstate commerce clause of the federal constitution, because said acts vest the board of railroad commissioners with ample power and duty so to construe and apply said acts that, when applied to an interstate carrier, they will not violate said interstate commerce clause.

State v Martin, 210-207; 230 NW 540

Right of injured party. When the owner or operator of a motor vehicle has insured his liability for damages consequent on the operation of his vehicle, an injured party may not sue directly on the policy which indemnifies the wrongdoer—the insured—until he has obtained a judgment against the wrongdoer—the insured—and until an execution on the judgment has been returned unsatisfied (§8940, C., '31). There is one exception to this statutory rule, to wit: When the policy is one obtained by a motor vehicle carrier as a mandatory statutory condition precedent to obtaining a certificate to operate as such carrier, an injured party may maintain an action on the policy when service of notice of suit cannot be had on the carrier within this state.

Ellis v Bruce, 215-308; 245 NW 320

Joinder—tort of one and contract of another. A joint action (1) against a wrongdoer upon his tort consequent on the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, and (2) against a surety company upon its policy to indemnify the wrongdoer from loss because of said tort, even tho but one recovery is sought, presents two different causes of action, and the joinder thereof is wholly unallowable. And this is true whether the policy is simply a private, optional contract between the insured and insurer, or a policy mandatorily required by statute to be filed with and approved by the railroad commission as a condition precedent to the obtaining of a permit to operate said vehicle.

Ellis v Bruce, 215-308; 245 NW 320

"Resulting from." An injury to a passenger on a motor vehicle bus may not be said to "result from" the operation of the bus when the proximate cause of such injury was the negligence of a third party.

Crozier v Stages, 209-313; 228 NW 320

Res ipsa loquitur—applicability of doctrine. Plaintiff, under a general allegation of negligence on the part of a common carrier of passengers, to wit, a motor bus company, generates, under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, a jury question on the issue of the negligence of such carrier by proof (1) that he was a passenger on said bus; (2) that a collision occurred between said bus and an automobile; (3) that in said collision said bus was overturned; and (4) that plaintiff was injured.

Crozier v Stages, 209-313; 228 NW 320; 29 NCCA 20

Res ipsa loquitur—applicability. Principle recognized that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is, under appropriate facts, applicable to common carriers.

Preston v Railway, 214-156; 241 NW 648

Hand baggage—condition to liability. A carrier of passengers is not liable as an insurer for the loss of hand baggage of the passenger unless said baggage is definitely surrendered into the exclusive possession and control of the carrier. If liability is predicated on negligence, such ground must be pleaded and, of course, proven. Evidence held to show no such surrender of custody.

Jensen v Transit Lines, 221-513; 266 NW 9

Injuries to livestock—directed verdict—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence that injury to cow was caused by negligence of alleged common carrier was insufficient to make a jury question when the injury was not discovered until 3 hours after the cow was delivered and there was no showing of any injury at the time the cow was unloaded.

Mountain v Albaugh, 227-1282; 290 NW 693

Property damaged while in storage—liability. When motor vehicle carriers utilized the terminal facilities of a third party, who provided pickup and delivery service from the terminal, and had individual spaces rented to each trucker for the storage of that trucker's shipments, it was held that control and possession of the shipments of goods was in the truck carriers during the storage period, and when a fire destroyed the terminal, the terminal owner was acting as agent for the truckers, who were liable to the owners of the property in transit for the losses occasioned by the fire.

Crouse v Cadwell Co., 226-1083; 285 NW 623

Motor freight terminal operator's liability to carrier. When motor carrier operators stored goods belonging to third parties in a motor freight terminal, and were held liable when the goods were destroyed in a fire through no negligence on the part of the terminal operator, the carriers were not entitled to recoupment from the terminal operator who acted as their agent in storing the goods, in the absence of an agreement that he be liable for losses not caused by his own negligence.

Crouse v Cadwell Co., 226-1083; 285 NW 623

Destruction of property—evidence of value—pleading. In motor carrier's action on liability insurance policy for loss of property destroyed by fire in freight terminal, plaintiff has burden of proof as to its "custody and control" of goods within policy provisions, also as to value thereof, and stipulation as to value of certain goods on which claims had been paid by insured does not admit value of other goods in absence of competent proof thereof.

Amer. Alliance Ins. v Brady Co., 101 F 2d, 144

New trial—trucker's statutory insurance requirement—jurors' discussion not misconduct. Jurors' discussion of statutory requirement that certain truckers carry liability insurance—being a discussion of law that all were presumed to know—is neither misconduct nor justification for a new trial.

TAXATION OF MOTOR VEHICLE CERTIFICATED CARRIERS

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 89

Constitutionality of act. Chapters 252-A1 and 252-A2, C., '31, providing for the regulation and taxation of motor vehicle carriers held constitutional by the federal court.

Grolbert v Bd. of R. R. Com., 60 F 2d, 321

Permissible classification. The motor vehicle carrier taxation act is not clearly, plainly, and palpably arbitrary, unreasonable, and unlawfully discriminatory because it provides that those who shall pay the tax shall be those only who operate motor vehicles not upon fixed rails, and as common carriers of freight and passengers, over regular routes, on scheduled trips, and between fixed termini.

Iowa Motor v Board, 207-461; 221 NW 364; 75 ALR 1

Status—voluntary change. A "truck operator" within the meaning of Ch 252-C1, C., '35 [Ch 252.3, C., '39] (one not operating between fixed termini nor over a regular route), immediately becomes a "motor vehicle carrier" (one operating between fixed termini, or over a regular route), and governed accordingly, whenever he so changes the course of his business as to take on the status of the latter and leave off the status of the former.

State v Lischer Bros., 223-588; 272 NW 604

Truck operator between nonfixed termini—change in business—effect. A duly issued permit under chapter 252-C1, C., '31, authorizing a "truck operator" to transport freight for compensation between nonfixed termini and over nonregular routes ceases to afford protection to the holder of the permit whenever his business concentrates upon a regular route and two fixed termini within the meaning of chapters 252-A1 and 252-A2, C., '31. Evidence held to show such concentration.

State v Mercer, 215-611; 246 NW 406

Common carrier—acts constituting. The contention of a trucker that he is a private carrier solely of a particular line of goods and exclusively for the members of an unincorporated association cannot be sustained when he operates his truck (1) between fixed termini, (2) over a regular route, (3) at stated, regular times, and (4) for compensation—with the purpose of offering his services to all persons within said territory having need for the same particular line of carriage, the so-called "association" being a mere subterfuge to hide his real character as a carrier.

State v Rosenstein, 217-985; 252 NW 251

"Operation between fixed termini"—scope. A trucker cannot be said to operate "between fixed termini nor over a regular route" when, during the time he is not engaged in his regular business of carrying the government mail, he does odd jobs of trucking and of manual labor, and, at irregular times and over irregular routes carries goods from a wholesale center to merchants of his own and of nearby towns, provided he can arrange his time so to do.

State v Thompson, 217-994; 252 NW 256

Injunction—burden of proof. In an action by the board of railroad commissioners to enjoin a trucker from operating upon the public highway "between fixed termini or over a regular route" without the legally required certificate and payment of the statutory tax, the board has the burden of proof to establish that the defendant is so operating. Evidence held insufficient.

State v Ooten, 215-543; 243 NW 329

5103.02 Compensation tax.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Jan. 11, '40

Applicability of statutes. A truck operator who, under a permit duly granted under chapter 252-C1, C., '31 [Ch 252.3, C., '39], and by means of his motor truck, transports for hire freight from place to place, at irregular times, and on no schedule of service, and only when he receives unsolicited and acceptable calls to do such transporting, is not operating "between fixed termini or over a regular route" within the meaning of chapters 252-A1, or 252-A2, C., '31 [Chs 252.1, 252.2, C., '39], and, therefore, is under no obligation to obtain a certificate of necessity or convenience or to pay the tax required by said chapters.

State v Transfer, 213-1269; 239 NW 125
 State v Lischer, (NQR); 261 NW 634

Bond to pay taxes "incurred"—scope. A bond (1) reciting that the principal therein had been licensed as a motor carrier under named statutes of the state, and (2) conditioned to pay "the taxes and penalties incurred" under said statutes—a positive liability—embraces liability to pay taxes and penalties incurred before, as well as after, the date of said bond.

State v U. S. F. & G. Co., 221-880; 266 NW 501

5103.08 Sale of property.

Tax—nonliability of vehicle. An automobile truck purchased under an ordinary conditional sale contract and operated by a motor vehicle carrier as such under a certificate of authority issued by the board of railroad commissioners is not subject to levy for the payment of the statutory motor vehicle carrier tax under a tax warrant issued by the commissioners after the vendor had repossessed himself of said truck for default in payment of the purchase price.

Universal Credit v Mamminga, 214-1135; 243 NW 513

5103.12 Distribution of proceeds.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 88; '36 AG Op 35

Special act—what is not. A legislative act which first makes a permissible classification of those who must pay the tax (one not arbitrary, unreasonable, and unlawfully discriminatory), and then provides that the resulting tax shall, inter alia, be used for the maintenance and repair of certain public highways, is not a "special law for road purposes", within the meaning of Art. III, §30, of the state constitution.

Iowa Motor v Board, 207-461; 221 NW 364; 75 ALR 1

CHAPTER 252.3

MOTOR VEHICLE TRUCK OPERATORS

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 88

5105.01 Definitions.

Applicability of statutes. A truck operator who, under a permit duly granted under chapter 252-C1, C., '31 [Ch 252.3, C., '39], and by means of his motor truck, transports for hire freight from place to place, at irregular times, and on no schedule of service, and only when he receives unsolicited and acceptable calls to do such transporting, is not operating "between fixed termini or over a regular route" within the meaning of chapters 252-A1, or 252-A2, C., '31 [Chs 252.1, 252.2, C., '39], and, therefore, is under no obligation to obtain a certificate of necessity or convenience or to pay the tax required by said chapters.

State v Transfer, 213-1269; 239 NW 125
 State v Lischer, (NOR); 261 NW 634

"Operation between fixed termini." A trucker cannot be said to operate "between fixed termini, or over a regular route" when, during the time he is not engaged in his regular business of carrying the government mail, he does odd jobs of trucking and of manual labor, and at irregular times and over irregular routes carries goods from a wholesale center to merchants of his own and of nearby towns, provided he can arrange his time so to do.

State v Thompson, 217-994; 252 NW 256

Nonfixed termini—change in business—effect. A duly issued permit under chapter 252-C1, C., '31 [Ch 252.3, C., '39], authorizing a "truck operator" to transport freight for compensation between nonfixed termini and over nonregular routes ceases to afford protection to the holder of the permit whenever his business concentrates upon a regular route and two fixed termini within the meaning of chapters 252-A1 and 252-A2, C., '31 [Chs 252.1, 252.2, C., '39].

State v Mercer, 215-611; 246 NW 406

Status—voluntary change. A "truck operator" within the meaning of chapter 252-C1, C., '35 [Ch 252.3, C., '39] (one not operating between fixed termini nor over a regular route), immediately becomes a "motor vehicle carrier" (one operating between fixed termini, or over a regular route), and governed accordingly, whenever he so changes the course of his business as to take on the status of the latter and leave off the status of the former.

State v Lischer Bros., 223-588; 272 NW 604

"Public transportation"—insufficient proof. A deliveryman who, in a city and for compensation, makes deliveries of goods by motor vehicle truck, but only for merchants with whom he chooses to contract—who has never held himself out as a common carrier—is not engaged in the "public transportation" of freight within the meaning of this chapter.

State v Carlson, 217-854; 251 NW 160

Property damaged while in storage—liability. When motor vehicle carriers utilized the terminal facilities of a third party, who provided pickup and delivery service from the terminal, and had individual spaces rented to each trucker for the storage of that trucker's shipments, it was held that control and possession of the shipments of goods was in the truck carriers during the storage period, and when a fire destroyed the terminal, the terminal owner was acting as agent for the truckers, who were liable to the owners of the property in transit for the losses occasioned by the fire.

Crouse v Cadwell, 226-1083; 285 NW 623

Motor freight terminal operator's liability to carrier. When motor carrier operators stored goods belonging to third parties in a motor freight terminal and were held liable when the goods were destroyed in a fire through no negligence on the part of the terminal operator, the carriers were not entitled to recoupment from the terminal operator who acted as their agent in storing the goods, in the absence of an agreement that he be liable for losses not caused by his own negligence.

Crouse v Cadwell, 226-1083; 285 NW 623

Injunction—burden of proof. In an action by the board of railroad commissioners to enjoin a trucker from operating upon the public highway "between fixed termini or over a regular route" without the legally required certificate and payment of the statutory tax, the board has the burden of proof to establish that the defendant is so operating. Evidence held insufficient.

State v Ooten, 215-543; 243 NW 329

Road construction—method of work. Evidence reviewed and held quite insufficient to establish a "rule" as to where trucks should be operated in the course of paving operations.

5105.06 Permit.

Applicability of statutes. A truck operator who, under a permit duly granted under chapter 252-C1, C., '31, [Ch 252.3, C., '39] and by means of his motor truck, transports for hire freight from place to place, at irregular times, and on no schedule of service, and only when he receives unsolicited and acceptable calls to do such transporting, is not operating "between fixed termini or over a regular route" within the meaning of chapters 252-A1, or 252-A2, C., '31, [Chs 252.1, 252.2, C., '39] and, therefore, is under no obligation to obtain a certificate of necessity or convenience or to pay the tax required by said chapters.

State v Blecha, 213-1269; 239 NW 125

State v Lischer, (NOR); 261 NW 634

Acting without permit—connivance at violation—effect. A shipper of goods will be deemed as participating in the doing of an illegal act when he enters into a contract with a motor vehicle freight operator for the transportation of freight over the highways of this state by said operator as an independent contractor and knows, at the time of so contracting, that said operator has no right to carry on his said business because of the failure of said operator (1) to obtain from the board of railroad commissioners the legally required official permit to carry on said business, and (2) to file with said board the legally required bond. It follows that said operator will not be deemed an independent contractor but simply the agent of said shipper.

Hough v Freight Service, 222-548; 269 NW 1

5105.09 Fee.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Nov. 6, '39

License fee as occupation tax. The permit fee required of a truck operator under chapter 252-C1, C., '31 [Ch 252.3, C., '39] constitutes an occupation or privilege tax.

Towns v City, 214-76; 241 NW 658

See Solberg v Davenport, 211-612; 232 NW 477

Municipal license of trucks—nonrepeal by state law. The legislature by the enactment of chapter 252-C1, C., '31 [Ch 252.3, C., '39], and thereby requiring of truck operators a privilege or occupation tax when not operating between fixed termini nor over a regular route, on any and all highways of the state, did not impliedly repeal that part of §5970, C., '31, which empowers cities and towns to license a truck operator whose business is limited to the municipality—there being no substantial conflict between said statutes.

Towns v City, 214-76; 241 NW 658

5105.13 Expenditure of funds.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 88; '36 AG Op 35

5105.15 Insurance or bond.

New trial—trucker's statutory insurance requirement—jurors' discussion not misconduct. Jurors' discussion of statutory requirement that certain truckers carry liability insurance—being a discussion of law that all were presumed to know—is neither misconduct nor justification for a new trial.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Acting without permit—connivance at violation. A shipper of goods will be deemed as participating in the doing of an illegal act when he enters into a contract with a motor vehicle freight operator for the transportation of freight over the highways of this state by said operator as an independent contractor, and knows, at the time of so contracting, that said operator has no right to carry on his said business because of the failure of said operator (1) to obtain from the board of railroad commissioners the legally required official permit to carry on said business, and (2) to file with said board the legally required bond. It follows that said operator will not be deemed an independent contractor but simply the agent of said shipper.

Hough v Freight Service, 222-548; 269 NW 1

Injuries to livestock—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence that injury to cow was caused by negligence of alleged common carrier was insufficient to make a jury question when the injury was not discovered until three hours after the cow was delivered and there was no showing of any injury at the time the cow was unloaded.

Sale—contract without official action. Proof that a writing purporting to be a contract for the sale by the board of supervisors of county-owned land, signed by the purported purchaser and by one member of the board as "acting chairman", together with proof that the board never took any official action in regard to the said matter, is quite insufficient to show a valid and enforceable contract.

Smith v Standard Oil, 218-709; 255 NW 674

5122 Books to be kept.

Failure to record proceedings—effect.

State v Pierson, 204-837; 216 NW43

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 257

5124 Unliquidated claims.

Allowance of claims. See under §5130

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 158

"Unliquidated". An "unliquidated claim" is one the amount of which has not been ascertained and agreed upon by the parties, or has not been fixed by law.

State v Naumann, 213-418; 239 NW 93; 81 ALR 483

Action on warrants. The liability of a county on a warrant issued by it on its poor fund may be determined and established in an action at law against the county.

Council Bluffs Bk. v County, 216-1123; 250 NW 233

Claims—rescission of allowance—effect. The action of a board of supervisors in formally rescinding its former allowance of an unquestionably legal claim, long after the commencement of an action to compel the issuance of a warrant on the allowed claim, is futile.

Miller Tractor v Hope, 218-1235; 257 NW 312

County hospital claims—ministerial duty of supervisors. The act of the board of trustees of a county-owned public hospital in certifying to the correctness of claims arising out of their legal management and operation of the hospital is conclusive on the board of supervisors and leaves said latter board with no power or duty except to direct the auditor to issue the necessary warrants.

Phinney v Montgomery, 218-1240; 257 NW 208

Accord and satisfaction. The allowance by the board of supervisors of a lump sum on a claim consisting of several unliquidated items, and the taking and cashing by claimant of a warrant for said allowed amount, constitute a final accord and satisfaction.

Smith v Cherokee Co., 219-475; 257 NW 788

Allowing unverified unliquidated claims—effect. Grounds for ousting a public official may not be predicated on the fact that he, apparently in perfectly good faith, allowed unliquidated but bona fide claims when such claims were not verified as provided by statute; at any rate, the state must clearly show that the claims were unliquidated.

5125 Compensation of supervisors.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 306; '32 AG Op 10, 197; '34 AG Op 136

Removal from office — grounds — mileage charge. Allegations that a public officer drew statutory mileage on account of official journeys when the travel (1) was without cost to himself, or (2) was by means of a conveyance owned and supplied by the public, do not state facts constituting grounds for removal from office. (See §1225-d3, C., '31 [§1225.03, C., '39])

State v Naumann, 218-418; 239 NW 93; 81 ALR 483

Conniving for unlawful mileage. Evidence in ouster proceedings relative to a charge that a member of the board of supervisors connived at so separating a continuous session of the board as to make one day appear as committee work, and thereby permit the drawing of unallowable mileage, reviewed and held the state had failed to carry its burden to show that the conduct of the member was willful.

State v Naumann, 218-418; 239 NW 93; 81 ALR 483

Good-faith but erroneous construction of statute. A good-faith construction by the members of the board of supervisors of the statute relative to allowable mileage, even tho erroneous, does not constitute grounds for ouster of such officers.

CHAPTER 254

POWERS AND DUTIES OF BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 217; '38 AG Op 586

5128 Body corporate.

Discussion. See 10 ILB 16—Liability of counties

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 305

Vested interest. A county has no standing to question the constitutionality of a legislative act relative to its governmental powers.

Scott County v Johnson, 209-213; 222 NW 378

Tax statute—constitutionality—no challenge by public official. A county auditor or a board of supervisors as ministerial officers or public officials may not challenge the constitutionality nor competence of the legislature to pass a statute under which they act.

Hewitt & Sons v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

County supervisors—raising constitutionality of statutes not permitted. In an action in equity for mandamus to compel board of supervisors to remit taxes on capital stock of failed bank, held, board of supervisors could not raise issue of constitutionality of statute providing for such remission, either in that it contravened the state or the federal constitution, as counties and other municipal corporations are creatures of the legislature, existing by reason of statutes enacted within the power of the legislature, and the board may not question that power which brought it into existence and set the bounds of its capacities.

Brunner v Floyd County, 226-583; 284 NW 814

Equitable estoppel—against governmental agency. A county which accepts and for some 30 years retains the financial benefits arising from a particular action of its governing body, will not be permitted, as to said transaction, to question the legal authority of its governing body to act as it did act.

Plymouth County v Koehler, 221-1022; 267 NW 106

Equitable estoppel—when inapplicable to public. A county is not estopped to recover unlawful excess mileage paid a grand juror, even tho the payment was made under an ex parte order of court.

Park v Polk County, 220-120; 261 NW 508

Action on warrants. The liability of a county on a warrant issued by it on its poor fund may be determined and established in an action at law against the county.

Council Bl. Bk. v County, 216-1123; 250 NW 233

Negligence—unauthorized contract. A county is not liable for negligence in executing its duly granted governmental powers; a fortiori it is not liable for negligence in executing a wholly unauthorized contract. (See Vol. I, §4635)

Hilgers v County, 200-1318; 206 NW 660

Governmental function—political corporations not suable for torts. Counties and school districts, being political or quasi corporations not clothed with full corporate powers as are cities and towns, cannot be sued for negligence, and the question of the exercise of a governmental function is immaterial.

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

Statute violation—nonliability. Mandatory statutes requiring danger lights on road machinery and providing punishment for their violation do not create any liability on a county for negligent observance thereof.

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

Negligent operation of road maintainer—nonliability—demurrer. Neither a county, as a quasi corporation, nor its board of supervisors is liable for the negligence of its employee in operating after dark a road maintainer without lights on the left-hand side of a highway, and in an action by a motorist who sustained injuries on account of such negligence demurrers to the petition by the county and its board of supervisors were properly sustained.

Shirkey v Keokuk County, 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837

Motor vehicle fuel license — liability of county. A county becomes, within the scope and meaning of chapter 251-F1, Code, '35 [Ch 251.3, C., '39], a distributor of motor vehicle fuel when it imports the same from without the state solely for the purpose of operating its power maintainers and trucks in the construction and maintenance of its highways, and is under obligation to obtain a license as such distributor and to pay the state the statutory excise charge (without penalty) on such importations.

State v Woodbury County, 222-488; 269 NW 449

Governmental employees—personal liability for torts—no governmental immunity. A governmental employee committing a tortious act which causes injury to another in violation of a duty owed to the injured person, becomes, as an individual, personally liable in damages therefor. (Hibbs v School Dist., 218-841, overruled.)

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

Doherty v Edwards, 226-249; 284 NW 159

Nonliability for negligence in constructing culvert. The statutory duty of a town to keep its streets free from nuisances is not interrupted or suspended during the time when the county under an arrangement with the town is engaged in constructing a culvert in a street which is a continuation of a county road outside the town; and the county is under no legal obligation to reimburse the town for any sum voluntarily paid by it in settlement of suits, jointly against the town and county, for damages consequent on persons driving into an unguarded excavation made by the county authorities while constructing the culvert.

Norwalk v County, 210-1262; 232 NW 682

Nonliability of highway engineer in damages. A county highway engineer is not liable in damages consequent on his act in making an excavation in a public highway of his county, for a proper and lawful purpose, and in leaving the work in a condition which becomes dangerous, even tho, by leaving the work in said condition, he creates a public nuisance for which he may be punished. (§4841, C., '31)

Swartzwelter v Utilities Corp., 216-1060; 250 NW 121

Highway improvement—malice immaterial in performance of legal act. Removal of trees from a highway by county authorities for improvement being a legal act, the question as to whether or not they were acting maliciously as alleged by an abutting property owner is immaterial.

Rabiner v Humboldt County, 224-1190; 278 NW 612; 116 ALR 89

Drains — assessments — nonliability of county. A county, as a body corporate, is not liable in damages consequent on the failure of the board of supervisors to levy an adequate assessment against a drainage district to pay the bonds of the district. It follows that the county treasurer and his surety, when sued by the county for damages consequent on the act of said treasurer in using county funds in paying said bonds, cannot be subrogated to any right of the bondholder to proceed against the county—because the bondholder has no such right.

Mitchell County v Odden, 219-793; 259 NW 774

Nonsuperiority over state. When the state, under a given condition of law and fact, is not entitled to a certain right, it necessarily follows that a county, under the same conditions, is not entitled to such right. So held under the preferential bank deposit law.

I POWERS IN GENERAL

When jurisdiction must appear. The statutory presumption that the proceedings of inferior tribunals, e. g., the county board of supervisors, are presumed to be regular, does not extend to the acquisition of jurisdiction of the board—this must be shown.

Davelaar v Marion County, 224-669; 277 NW 744

Limited power of individual member. A single member of a board of supervisors has no power to bind the board or to bind the county, unless specifically authorized by the board to act for the whole board, or unless an agreement made by him for the county is approved or ratified by the board.

Greusel v O'Brien County, 223-747; 273 NW 853

County supervisor-elect—death before qualifying—vacancy. The death of a duly elected member to the board of supervisors, before qualifying, creates a vacancy in that office, to be filled in the manner provided by §1152, subsec. 5, C., '35.

State v Best, 225-338; 280 NW 551

Nonsuperiority over state. When the state, under a given condition of law and fact, is not entitled to a certain right, it necessarily follows that a county, under the same conditions, is not entitled to such right. So held under the preferential bank deposit law.

Leach v Bank, 205-987; 213 NW 528

County supervisors—raising constitutionality of statutes not permitted. In an action in equity for mandamus to compel board of supervisors to remit taxes on capital stock of failed bank, held, board of supervisors could not raise issue of constitutionality of statute providing for such remission, either in that it contravened the state or the federal constitution, as counties and other municipal corporations are creatures of the legislature, existing by reason of statutes enacted within the power of the legislature, and the board may not question that power which brought it into existence and set the bounds of its capacities.

Brunner v Floyd County, 226-583; 284 NW 814

Tax statute—constitutionality—no challenge by public official. A county auditor or a board of supervisors as ministerial officers or public officials may not challenge the constitutional authority nor competence of the legislature to pass a statute under which they act.

Hewitt & Sons v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

County supervisors—duties imposed by law—effect. A statute requiring the board of supervisors to remit unpaid taxes on the capital stock of a bank which fails, imposes a positive duty on board of supervisors to comply with statute irrespective of any demand or notice, and the fact that the stockholders petitioned for a refund of taxes already paid, which is not contemplated by such statute, in addition to remission of unpaid taxes, does not excuse the failure of the board to remit such taxes as come within the purview of the statute, since the performance of this duty is imposed upon the board by law.

Brunner v Floyd County, 226-583; 284 NW 814

Official newspapers—number—nondiscretionary power of supervisors. Under statute providing that county board of supervisors "shall" select three official newspapers, and there were only three applicants, the board had no discretionary power, and petitioner-applicant was entitled to maintain mandamus action to compel the selection of his newspaper.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

County highway maintenance workman—no representative capacity. A county highway maintenance workman stands in no representative capacity for the employer-county when his duties are ministerial only and when he could possess no authority to act for nor bind the county as its representative, since board of supervisors and county engineer cannot delegate their powers and duties to maintain roads except as those duties are ministerial in character.

Schroyer v Jasper County, 224-1391; 279 NW 118

Drains—assessments—nonliability of county. A county, as a body corporate, is not

I POWERS IN GENERAL—concluded liable in damages consequent on the failure of the board of supervisors to levy an adequate assessment against a drainage district to pay the bonds of the district. It follows that the county treasurer and his surety, when sued by the county for damages consequent on the act of said treasurer in using county funds in paying said bonds, cannot be subrogated to any right of the bondholder to proceed against the county—because the bondholder has no such right.

Mitchell County v Odden, 219-793; 259 NW 774

Employment of counsel to defend assessment. County supervisors in their statutory capacity as representatives of a drainage district had right to employ attorneys and issue drainage warrants to them for services to be rendered in the trial and appeal of an action brought by property owners to enjoin collection of assessments levied to meet cost of work done for the district, and fact that elected drainage trustees took over management of the district before services were fully performed in supreme court did not render void the warrant previously issued for such service.

Kilpatrick v Mills County, 227-721; 288 NW 871.

Malice immaterial in performance of legal act. Removal of trees from a highway by county authorities for improvement, being a legal act, the question as to whether or not they were acting maliciously as alleged by an abutting property owner is immaterial.

Rabiner v Humboldt County, 224-1190; 278 NW 612

Motives immaterial when following lawful procedure. The motives of public officials when proceeding according to law to submit the question of municipal ownership of a public utility are not fit subjects for judicial inquiry.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

II ACCOUNTS AND CLAIMS

Claims—rescission of allowance—effect. The action of a board of supervisors in formally rescinding its former allowance of an unquestionably legal claim, long after the commencement of an action to compel the issuance of a warrant on the allowed claim, is futile.

Miller Tractor v Hope, 218-1235; 257 NW 312

Compromise of claims—power of board. The board of supervisors on a proper state of facts has power to compromise the amount due on judgments obtained by the county for support rendered an incompetent in a state hospital for the insane, and to agree, in consideration of the payment of the compromised sum, that a specific tract of land standing in the name of the incompetent and the proceeds and accumulations of said proceeds shall be exempt from all liability for the future support of said incompetent by the county in said hospital. So held where the land was encumbered (1) by judgment on mortgage foreclosure, (2) by a judgment other than those of the county, (3) by an outstanding tax sale certificate, and (4) by an apparently quite persuasive claim of both homestead rights, and ownership in the wife of said incompetent.

Plymouth County v Koehler, 221-1022; 267 NW 106

County old-age assistance board—expenses—how paid. The actual and necessary expenses incurred by members of the old-age assistance board of a county are payable by the county but solely from the state old-age pension fund, such expenses being an “expenditure” within the meaning of §5296-f34, C., '35 [§3828.039, C., '39].

Jones v Dunkelberg, 221-1031; 265 NW 157

Compensation—attorney appointed by juvenile court. The court by statute has power and authority to appoint attorneys to represent juvenile delinquents in municipal court, unable to employ counsel, and an obligation arises on the part of the county to pay a reasonable attorney fee, altho statute makes no provision therefor.

Ferguson v Pottawattamie Co., 224-516; 278 NW 223

III BUILDINGS AND MAINTENANCE

Lease for private use. The board of supervisors may not lease portions of the courthouse to private parties.

Hilgers v County, 200-1318; 206 NW 660

IV REAL ESTATE—PURCHASE AND SALE—SITES

Contract without official action. Proof that a writing purporting to be a contract for the sale by the board of supervisors of county-owned land, signed by the purported purchaser and by one member of the board as “acting chairman”, together with proof that the board never took any official action in regard to the said matter, is quite insufficient to show a valid and enforceable contract.

Smith v Oil Co., 218-709; 255 NW 674

V GENERAL COUNTY MANAGEMENT

(a) IN GENERAL

Right to secure deposits. The officers of a savings bank which is a duly selected and acting depository of county funds under a statutory depository bond, may, in addition to the security afforded by said previously executed bond, validly transfer to the county, and the county through its fiscal officers may validly accept, notes and mortgages of the bank as additional collateral security for said deposits.

Andrew v Bank, 203-1335; 214 NW 559

Agreements in re county deposits—right of taxpayer. The statutory discretion of the board of supervisors to enter into an agreement with legally reorganized and approved banks, with reference to the county's deposits in said banks, cannot be questioned by a taxpayer except on proof of fraud or arbitrary abuse of said discretion.

Pugh v Polk County, 220-794; 263 NW 315

Publishing supervisors' proceedings—homestead exemption—application numbers sufficient. Statute requiring publication of proceedings of board of supervisors is substantially complied with, insofar as the action taken on homestead exemption applications is concerned, by publishing the numbers of the applications as allowed or disallowed.

Choate Co. v Schade, 225-324; 280 NW 540

(b) OFFICERS APPOINTED AND REMOVED

Employment binding on new board. Inasmuch as the board of supervisors has statutory authority to employ a county engineer for a period as long as three years (§4644-c19, C., '31 [§4644.17, C., '39]), an employment of such engineer at the December meeting of the board for the ensuing calendar year is valid, even tho the personnel of the board changes in January following the meeting.

Hahn v Clayton County, 218-543; 255 NW 695

District court clerk—vacancy filled by board. The district court has neither exclusive nor concurrent authority with the board of supervisors to fill a vacancy in the office of clerk of the court (a county office) by appointment; the court's power is confined to the appointment of a temporary clerk until the board fills the vacancy as provided by law.

State v Larson, 224-509; 275 NW 566

Abolishing office of deputy. The board of supervisors, after approving the appointment and bond of a deputy county officer, and after the appointee has qualified and entered upon his duties, has no power to abolish the office of such deputy.

Kellogg v Story County, 218-224; 253 NW 915

(c) OFFICERS' AND EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION

Employees—discretion to limit term of appointment. The board of supervisors, in appointing a janitor of the courthouse, cannot be said to abuse its discretion by limiting the appointment to a term of one year.

Sorenson v Andrews, 221-44; 264 NW 562

Salary—conclusive fixing of. The board of supervisors having once officially fixed the salary of a public office may not, later and during the term of office in question, reduce said salary.

Kellogg v Story County, 219-399; 257 NW 778

(d) OWNING AND OPERATING MOTOR VEHICLES

Road grader not a "car". A caterpillar road grader belonging to a county, and operated on the public highway, is not a "car" within the meaning of the statutory declaration that the owner of a "car" is liable for damages done by the car when it is operated with his consent.

Bateson v County, 213-718; 239 NW 803

Governmental function—negligent operation of road maintainer—nonliability—demurrer. Neither a county, as a quasi corporation, nor its board of supervisors is liable for the negligence of its employee in operating after dark a road maintainer without lights on the left-hand side of a highway, and in an action by a motorist who sustained injuries on account of such negligence demurrers to the petition by the county and its board of supervisors were properly sustained.

Shirkey v Keokuk County, 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

Governmental employees—personal liability for torts—no governmental immunity. A governmental employee committing a tortious act which causes injury to another in violation of a duty owed to the injured person becomes, as an individual, personally liable in damages therefor. (Hibbs v School Dist., 218 Iowa 841, overruled.)

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

Doherty v Edwards, 226-249; 284 NW 159

Government nonliability for employee's tort—respondeat superior—exception. The exemption accorded counties and other governmental bodies and their officers from liability for torts growing out of the negligent acts of their agents or employees is a limitation or exception to the rule of respondeat superior and in no way affects the fundamental principle of torts that one who wrongfully inflicts injury upon another is individually liable to the injured person.

Road grader—workmen's compensation—nonagricultural pursuit. A workman who is employed by a county as a member of the county highway department, and is paid by the county an hourly wage for driving a heavy tractor road grader in the construction and maintenance of county roads—for which work said grader was exclusively designed—is not, as regards the county, the employer, deprived of the benefits of the workmen's compensation law because, when injured in the operation of said grader, he was, under the orders from the board of supervisors, engaged in the construction on a farm and for the benefit of the owner thereof, of a trench silo, such construction not being an engagement by said workman "in an agricultural pursuit or any operation immediately connected therewith" within the meaning of §1361, subsec. 5, C., '35.

5131 Contracts and bids required.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 304; '32 AG Op 132; '38 AG Op 38, 731

Estimated quantities as basis for contract—variation with specifications not fatal. In awarding a contract to build an electric plant, the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of "unit prices" as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities, indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Systematic disregard of law by officer. The conduct of a member of the board of supervisors in systematically disregarding, or by subterfuges avoiding, the law which requires estimates by the county engineer and advertisement of public contracts for work and supplies evinces such "willfulness" as to render such acts ample ground for removal from office.

CHAPTER 255

COUNTY AUDITOR

5141 Duties.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 181

Costs—persons acting officially. Costs should not be taxed against a county auditor in a matter in which he acts officially, in good faith, and on the advice of counsel.

Northwestern Bank v Van Roekel, 202-237; 207 NW 345

Paupers—notice to depart—invalidity. A notice to a nonresident poor person to depart from the county is a nullity unless officially authorized by the township trustees or board of supervisors. The mere fact that the members of the board individually discussed the matter in regular session and "told the chairman to sign the notice" does not constitute such official authorization.

Emmet County v Dally, 216-166; 248 NW 366

Warrant—mandamus—issuance of county warrant. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the county auditor to issue a warrant in payment of legal claims against the county.

Miller Tractor v Hope, 218-1235; 257 NW 312

Tax statute—constitutionality—no challenge by public official. A county auditor or a board of supervisors as ministerial officers or public officials may not challenge the constitutional authority nor competence of the legislature to pass a statute under which they act.

Hewitt & Sons v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

Redemption from tax sale—subsequent taxes—filing of receipts. The act of a tax-sale purchaser in personally delivering to the county auditor at the auditor's office, a duplicate tax receipt for subsequent accruing taxes, constitutes a legal filing in said office, even tho the auditor did not indorse any filing mark on the receipt, and even tho the auditor later returned said receipt to the said purchaser. (§7266, C., '31.)

Peterson v Barnett, 213-514; 239 NW 77

Correcting assessment of private banker. The county auditor may, on proper notice and hearing, and before a tax is paid, correct the erroneous action of the assessor in deducting the debts of a private banker from the value of the banker's taxable property. (§1321, S., '13.)

Mannings Bank v Armstrong, 204-512; 211 NW 485

5142 Issuance of warrants.

Action on warrants. The liability of a county on a warrant issued by it on its poor fund may be determined and established in an action at law against the county.

Council Bl. Bk. v County, 216-1123; 250 NW 233

Duty to issue warrants. The county auditor is under duty to issue and to continue to issue during the calendar year, on the proper fund or funds, warrants in payment of all claims allowed by the board of supervisors on said fund or funds so long as the total of said warrants does not exceed the collectible and available revenues in said fund or funds for said year.

Miller Tractor v Hope, 218-1235; 257 NW 312

Equitable set-off against insolvent county treasurer — unliquidated demand — pleading. Where an insolvent county treasurer brought mandamus action to secure salary warrant, and another suit was pending against the treasurer and his surety wherein county sought to recover for shortage in treasurer's office, the fact that county's claim was unliquidated would not prevent pleading the same as an equitable set-off, in view of the fact that the treasurer was insolvent.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

Issuance of treasurer's salary warrant—equitable relief. In mandamus suit by county treasurer to obtain warrant for salary, defendant's answer alleging, in effect, that treasurer owed county money for which a right of set-off existed, that treasurer was insolvent, and that he was not the head of a family and had not offered to do equity, raised issue as to treasurer's right to equitable relief.

5156 Duties.

Liability for funds. See under §1059

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 176; '38 AG Op 354; AG Op Aug. 1, '39

Illegal handling of public funds—election of remedies. The fact that a city institutes an action against its treasurer to recover its public funds is not an election of remedies such as will preclude the city from maintaining an action against a county treasurer to recover its funds illegally paid to the city treasurer.

State v Hanson, 210-773; 231 NW 428

Using public funds for private use. The acts of a county treasurer in wrongfully and repeatedly taking and using, for his own private purposes, public funds in his possession, ipso facto constitutes "willful misconduct and maladministration in office", notwithstanding the fact (1) that, prior to the commencement of an action to remove him from office, he returns, to the public treasury, the amount of his peculations, and (2) that his bondsmen are liable for his wrongdoing; a priori is this true when he also knowingly connives at and permits like conduct by his official employee.

State v Smith, 219-5; 257 NW 181

Right to secure deposits. The officers of a savings bank which is a duly selected and acting depository of county funds under a statutory depository bond may, in addition to the security afforded by said previously executed bond, validly transfer to the county, and the county through its fiscal officers may validly accept, notes and mortgages of the bank as additional collateral security for said deposits.

Andrew v Bank, 203-1335; 214 NW 559

Liability on official bonds—estoppel—waiver. A county treasurer breaches his official bond by using county funds in paying drainage district bonds, and the county cannot be deemed estopped to insist on said breach, or be held to have waived said breach, because of the fact that the treasurer acted with the knowledge and consent of, or in obedience to the express direction of the board of supervisors.

Mitchell County v Odden, 219-793; 259 NW 774

Drainage levies as ordinary taxes—treasurer as drainage district officer. A county treasurer is not an ex officio officer of a drainage district, so individuals paying drainage levies to him are classed as ordinary taxpayers, and as such cannot be compelled to pay such taxes twice.

Western Assn. v Barrett, 223-932; 274 NW 55

Weyrauch v Johnson, 201-1197; 208 NW 706

Reservation of homestead right—evidence. Where a form book used for the recordation of warranty deeds in the office of the recorder of School board—employment of county attorney. School boards are under no mandatory duty to secure the services of the county attorney in litigation affecting the corporate affairs of the school districts, even tho the statute does require such officers to give legal advice to such boards.

Rural Dist. v Daly, 201-286; 207 NW 124

Powers—reinstatement of action. A county attorney who, in his official capacity, brings an action in behalf of the state, and later, by amendment, changes said action to a personal action by himself and others, may not, after he ceases to be such officer, reinstate said action as one on behalf of the state. Nor may the court reinstate said action as an official action in the name of said ex-county attorney. Especially is this true when the official county attorney objects to such procedure.

State v Power Co., 214-1109; 243 NW 149

Improper presence of county attorney before grand jury. The presence of the county attorney before the grand jury during its investigation of certain charges of criminality, when he is confessedly disqualified from so appearing, necessitates the quashing of all indictments returned by said jury as a result of said investigation.

5180.3 County attorney—prohibitions—disqualified assistants.

Improper appearance before grand jury. An assistant county attorney (in this instance a special prosecutor) by accepting from a private person compensation for services rendered and to be rendered before the grand jury, in its investigation of certain pending charges of criminality, thereby ipso facto disqualifies himself henceforth from being present before said jury during said investigation. And his further presence before said jury during said investigation, in disregard of said disqualification, mandatorily necessitates the quashing, on proper motion, of all indictments returned by said jury on said investigation.

Maley v Dist. Court, 221-732; 266 NW 815

Private assistant. A privately employed attorney may assist the county attorney in the trial of a criminal action, even tho, at a time prior to his connection with such criminal action, such assisting attorney had been interested in a civil action which involved the matters and things involved in the criminal action, but had severed all connection with such civil action prior to any connection with the criminal action. It is a present interest which disqualifies.

Recovery of payments—rule—exception as to officer. Where a sheriff not knowing that a statute has been repealed collects fees thereunder, he acts not under a mistake of fact but under a mistake of law, and such fees when paid to an officer of court, even tho voluntarily, are recoverable, this being an exception to the general rule that voluntary payments under a mistake of law are not recoverable.

5196 Record of funds.

Time deposit works conversion. A sheriff is guilty of instant conversion and a breach of his bond when he deposits in a bank funds properly coming into his hands in unadjudicated condemnation proceedings and takes from the bank a certificate of deposit which is payable at a definite time in the future, because he thereby fails so to "hold" said funds as commanded by statute as to enable himself to account for such funds whenever the proceedings are finally determined; and in such case the question of due care or negligence in making the deposit is quite immaterial.

Evidence—before coroner's jury—best evidence rule. Oral proof of the testimony given by a witness at a coroner's inquest is not properly subject to the objection that it is not the best evidence.

5206 Shorthand reporter.

Transcript of coroner's investigation. In automobile damage action for injuries sustained by plaintiff while riding as a guest of defendant's deceased husband, where, on cross-examination of plaintiff, he was interrogated for impeachment purposes concerning statements made by him as witness in coroner's investigation, and admitted making certain statements, but claimed he was mistaken as to facts, and defendant offered such statements found in coroner's transcript as admission against interest, whereupon plaintiff offered the transcript in its entirety under statute providing the whole of a writing on the same subject may be inquired into, exclusion of transcript by the court was rightful since transcript contained statements made by plaintiff that were not on the same subject as were the answers offered by defendant, as well as being self-serving in character.

Blood test by coroner from another county.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

Privileged communication—nonapplicable to physician performing autopsy. In an action to recover on an accident policy for the death of insured, where the court excluded testimony of a physician, who performed a post mortem examination but did not treat the patient before death, on the ground of privileged communication between patient and physician, held, court improperly excluded such testimony, since the privilege is purely statutory and for the purpose of encouraging patients to make full disclosure to the physician of all facts to enable him to prescribe and administer the proper treatment. A deceased body is not a patient and the relation of physician and patient ends when the death of the patient ensues.

Mandamus—issuance of treasurer's salary warrant. In mandamus suit by county treasurer to obtain warrant for salary, defendant's answer alleging, in effect, that treasurer owed county money for which a right of set-off existed, that treasurer was insolvent, and that he was not the head of a family and had not offered to do equity, raised issue as to treasurer's right to equitable relief.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

Set-off against insolvent county treasurer. Where an insolvent county treasurer brought mandamus action to secure salary warrant, and another suit was pending against the treasurer and his surety wherein county sought to recover for shortage in treasurer's office, the fact that county's claim was unliquidated would not prevent pleading the same as an equitable set-off, in view of the fact that the treasurer was insolvent.

Kellogg v County, 218-224; 253 NW 915

Appointment—approval—want of—effect.

The failure of the board of supervisors to approve, by formal resolution, the appointment of a deputy county officer is inconsequential when it appears that the deputy duly qualified, that the board approved his bond, and that he thereafter acted as such deputy.

Disqualification of attorney—improper appearance before grand jury—quashing indictments. An assistant county attorney (in this instance a special prosecutor) by accepting from a private person compensation for services rendered and to be rendered before the grand jury, in its investigation of certain pending charges of criminality, thereby ipso facto disqualifies himself henceforth from being present before said jury during said investigation. And his further presence before said jury during said investigation, in disregard of said disqualification, mandatorily necessitates the quashing, on proper motion, of all indictments returned by said jury on said investigation.

Presence of assistant county attorney. The presence of a duly appointed assistant county attorney in the grand jury room while the question of indictment was being considered did not render the indictment defective.

Excessive expenditures—effect. The validity of obligations incurred by a county, at a time during a calendar year when the collectible and available revenue in the proper fund or funds for said year is sufficient to pay said obligations, is not affected by the subsequent attempt of the county to incur further obligations which, when added to the former obligations, would exceed said collectible and available revenues.

Miller Tractor v Hope, 218-1235; 257 NW 312

Duty to issue warrants. The county auditor is under duty to issue and to continue to issue, during the calendar year, on the proper fund or funds, warrants in payment of all claims allowed by the board of supervisors on said fund or funds so long as the total of said warrants does not exceed the collectible and available revenues in said fund or funds for said year.

Miller Tractor v Hope, 218-1235; 257 NW 312

Misuse of funds—estoppel—waiver. A county treasurer breaches his official bond by using county funds in paying drainage district bonds, and the county cannot be deemed estopped to insist on said breach, or be held to have waived said breach, because of the fact that the treasurer acted with the knowledge and consent of, or in obedience to the express direction of the board of supervisors.

Number—nondiscretionary power of supervisors—mandamus. Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Mandamus—proprietor as proper party to compel selection. The rule is now well established that the proprietor of a newspaper has such interest in the selection of official newspapers that he can maintain an action of mandamus in his own name to compel the selection by the county supervisors.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 437

Form and sufficiency of application for appointment. Under statute requiring that application shall be made to county supervisors for appointment as an official newspaper, an application which avers the qualifications of the newspaper in the words of the statute is sufficient. The application need not be in any particular form, and any written application by the publisher which apprises the board of the desire of the newspaper to be selected is sufficient to require the board to take cognizance of it.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Mandamus—speedy and adequate remedy—jurisdiction. Mandamus to compel county supervisors to select petitioner's newspaper as one of three official newspapers was a proper procedure where petitioner was one of three applicants and had no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, since there was no contest in the selection from which an appeal would lie under §5406, C., '39.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Mandamus—proprietor as proper party to compel selection. The rule is now well established that the proprietor of a newspaper has such interest in the selection of official newspapers that he can maintain an action of mandamus in his own name to compel the selection by the county supervisors.

Sealed envelopes for subscription list. The depositing with the county auditor of a sealed pasteboard box of cards containing the names of the subscribers of a newspaper which is sought to be selected as a county official newspaper is a sufficient compliance with the statute.

Bloomfield Messenger v Democrat, 201-196; 205 NW 345

Who are subscribers. Two publishers who in good faith consolidate their newspaper plants and subscription lists into one establishment and one subscription list, and issue their respective newspapers separately and mail them to each subscriber on the combined list, without objection by the subscribers, may each, in a contest for selection as county official newspapers, appropriate to himself and against other contestants the entire list of subscribers appearing on the combined list.

Bloomfield Messenger v Democrat, 201-196; 205 NW 345

"Bona fide yearly subscribers" defined. On the question whether a newspaper is entitled to be selected as an "official newspaper" of the county for a certain year, the following persons cannot be deemed "bona fide yearly subscribers", tho the newspaper is being sent to and received by them, in the county, viz:

1. Those whose subscriptions have expired prior to the year in question.

2. Those who have not subscribed for the newspaper for several years prior to the year in question.

3. Those who have never subscribed for the newspaper.

Van der Burg v Bailey, 209-991; 229 NW 253

5402.1 Subscribers—how determined.

“General circulation”—general test. A “newspaper of general circulation” is determined not by the number of its subscribers, but by the diversity of its subscribers, and is such newspaper if it contains news, tho of limited amount, of a general nature, even tho it makes a specialty of news of a particular kind.

Burak v Ditson, 209-926; 229 NW 227; 68 ALR 538

Official newspapers—“bona fide yearly subscribers” defined. On the question whether a newspaper is entitled to be selected as an “official newspaper” of the county for a certain year, the following persons cannot be deemed “bona fide yearly subscribers,” tho the newspaper is being sent to and received by them in the county, viz.:

1. Those whose subscriptions have expired prior to the year in question.
2. Those who have not subscribed for the newspaper for several years prior to the year in question.
3. Those who have never subscribed for the newspaper.

Van der Burg v Bailey, 209-991; 229 NW 253

Official newspapers—division of compensation. A newspaper which is entitled to be selected as an official newspaper for a county may agree with a newspaper which is not entitled to be so selected for a division of the compensation for official publications, and in such case both newspapers will be designated as official publications, but for one compensation only.

5404 Fraudulent lists.

Insufficient showing. No inference of fraud is necessarily deducible in a contest for selection of county official newspapers because a contestant fails to indicate on his filed list of subscribers the times when the various subscriptions expire.

Bloomfield Messenger v Democrat, 201-196; 205 NW 345

Nonwillful subscription list. A publisher who makes application to have his newspaper selected as a county official newspaper is not deprived of standing in the contest because of the nonwillful insertion in his list of subscribers of names of persons who are not bona fide subscribers.

5406 Appeal.

Mandamus—speedy and adequate remedy—jurisdiction. Mandamus to compel county supervisors to select petitioner’s newspaper as one of three official newspapers was a proper procedure where petitioner was one of three applicants and had no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, since there was no contest in the selection from which an appeal would lie under §5406, C., ’39.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Unallowable service of notice. Notice of appeal from the decision of the board of supervisors in selecting official newspapers must be served on the applicant whose selection appellant desires to contest. Service on the attorneys who appeared for said applicant in the hearing before the board is a nullity.

Van der Burg v Bailey, 207-797; 223 NW 515

5410 Division of compensation.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See ’38 AG Op 34

Permissible division. A newspaper which is entitled to be selected as an official newspaper for a county may agree with a newspaper which is not entitled to be so selected, for a division of the compensation for official publications, and in such case both newspapers will be designated as official publications but for one compensation only.

5448 Right and duty to kill unlicensed dog.

Limitation. The statutory authority to kill a dog, when such dog is not wearing a collar with license tag attached, does not embrace the right to invade the premises and residence of the owner of the dog, in order to effect such killing.

Mendenhall v Struck, 207-1094; 224 NW 95

Absence of hunter's license—effect. On the issue whether a defendant had a legal right to kill an unlicensed dog, the fact that the defendant possessed no hunter's license is quite immaterial.

Mendenhall v Struck, 207-1094; 224 NW 95

5449 Right to kill licensed dog.

"Worrying animal" defined. Evidence that a dog barked at and ran after a horse, even tho for only a short time, and that the reaction of the horse indicated that he was frightened, may present a jury question on the issue whether the dog was "worrying" the animal.

Luick v Sondrol, 200-728; 205 NW 331

5450 Liability for damages.

Optional remedies. See under §5452, Vol I

Vicious character. In an action at common law for damages caused by a dog, the vicious character of the dog is an indispensable element. Not so when the action is based on the statute.

Luick v Sondrol, 200-728; 205 NW 331

Common-law and statutory liability distinguished. Principle reaffirmed that, while one who harbors a dog may be liable at common law, statutory liability rests only on the owner.

Luick v Sondrol, 200-728; 205 NW 331

Personal injury by dog—"owner" defined. A person who "keeps or harbors" a dog is an "owner", whether the subject matter is the taxation of the dog or damages done by the dog.

Bigelow v Saylor, 209-294; 228 NW 279

Confining jury to evidence. Instructions should expressly or in effect confine the jury to the evidence. When the sole charge against a dog was that he was worrying an animal, it is error to instruct that the dog had a right to be on the highway "if he behaved properly."

CHAPTER 282.1

BENEFITED WATER DISTRICTS

5526.01 Petition.

Water district 1/3 larger than petition—not "approximate". A proposal to establish a benefited water district, almost one-third larger than that petitioned for, is not a substantial compliance with a statute that requires that the petition shall state the "approximate" district to be served.

Fiesel v Bennett, 225-98; 280 NW 482

Amendment to petition not signed by original petitioners—invalidity. A statute, requiring the signatures of 25 percent of the property owners to establish a benefited water district, is not complied with where the original petition describing the district was so signed, and an amendment adding new territory was subscribed by 25 percent of the owners of the added territory, but the signers of the original petition did not subscribe to the enlarged district.

Fiesel v Bennett, 225-98; 280 NW 482

Amendment not complying with statute. The requisite statutory statements in the original petition for a benefited water district as to

5526.14 Bids for construction.

Public improvements—estimated quantities as basis for contract—variation with specifications not fatal. In awarding a contract, the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of "unit prices", as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities, indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

CHAPTER 283

TOWNSHIPS AND TOWNSHIP OFFICERS

DIVISION, BOUNDARIES, AND CHANGE OF NAMES

5527 Division authorized.

Workmen's compensation act—township not employer. A civil township is not an "employer," within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act, such township being but an unincorporated district. It necessarily follows that a township road superintendent is not an "employee," within the meaning of said act.

Christensen v Board, 201-794; 208 NW 291

5534 Division—effect.

Mandatory duty. The board of supervisors has no discretion to refuse to divide a township which contains a city of 1,500, upon the proper presentation of the required statutory petition. (§5531, C., '24.)

Bremer County v Schroeder, 200-1285; 206 NW 303

Fences—right to divide not limited by property owner's notice. Where a property owner served notice on township trustees that adjoining owners had refused to maintain their share of division line fences, and the adjoining owners claimed no legal division of such fences had ever been made and asked that a division be made, trustees had authority under the statute to make a legal division and were not limited by the notice given by the complaining property owner.

5546 Clerk to keep record.

Paupers—notice to depart—invalidity. A notice to a nonresident poor person to depart from the county is a nullity unless officially authorized by the township trustees or board of supervisors. The mere fact that the members of the board individually discussed the matter in regular session and "told the chairman to sign the notice" does not constitute such official authorization.

Conflicting purchases—priority. One who in good faith, purchases a vacant and wholly unoccupied lot in a township-controlled cemetery, and proceeds to bury his dead thereon, without actual or constructive notice that the lot had been previously sold to another, acquires rights superior to such prior purchaser. And this is true whether the deed to such prior purchaser was or was not recorded, because the statute fails to declare that the legal effect of recording such a deed is to impart constructive notice to subsequent purchasers.

TITLE XV

CITY AND TOWN GOVERNMENT

CHAPTER 286

INCORPORATION

GENERAL PROVISIONS

5588 How effected.

Municipal utility—power to make profits. Municipal corporations owe their origin to, and derive their powers from, the legislature and can exercise only such powers as are granted in express words or fairly implied from, or incident to, the powers expressly granted, or such powers as are essential to purposes of corporation, and, under the Simmer law, permitting cities to pay for public utilities from future earnings, a municipal corporation has statutory power to make profits in excess of statutory demands.

Corning v Iowa-Nebr. Co., 225-1380; 282 NW 791

Tax statute—constitutionality—no challenge by public official. A county auditor or a board of supervisors as ministerial officers or public officials may not challenge the constitutionality nor competence of the legislature to pass a statute under which they act.

Hewitt & Sons v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

Raising constitutionality of statutes not permitted. In an action in equity for mandamus to compel board of supervisors to remit taxes on capital stock of failed bank, held, board of supervisors could not raise issue of constitutionality of statute providing for such remission, either in that it contravened the state or the federal constitution, as counties and other municipal corporations are creatures of the legislature, existing by reason of statutes enacted within the power of the legislature, and the board may not question that power which brought it into existence and set the bounds of its capacities.

Brunner v Floyd County, 226-583; 284 NW 814

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 353

5613 Unplatted territory.

Enlargement of boundaries not a "taking" for public use.

Wertz v City, 201-947; 208 NW 511

Nonjudicial review. The extension of the limits of a municipal corporation in strict compliance with a constitutional statute is conclusive on the courts, even tho the statute is, to a degree, arbitrary.

State v Altoona, 201-730; 207 NW 789

5614 Annexation by resolution.

Constitutionality.

Wertz v City, 201-947; 208 NW 511

Enlargement of boundaries—constitutional objections. The enlargement of the boundaries of a municipality, under an enabling statute, without any notice to property owners within the territory annexed, is not violative of the "due-process" clause of the constitution on the theory that such property owners will assuredly be subject to increased taxation in the future.

5617 Severance of territory.

Material considerations. Territory is properly detached from a municipality when such territory is very severely isolated from the main body of the city, when the inhabitants on such territory never have derived, and probably never will derive, any material benefit from the municipal government, when the municipality does not need, and never will need, such territory for any legitimate purpose, and, finally, when the municipality has never made any substantial use of the territory except to levy taxes thereon.

McKeon v City, 206-556; 221 NW 351; 62 ALR 1006

Unallowable defense. The fact that territory has remained within a municipality for some half century without the institution of proceedings to have it detached, furnishes no basis, when such proceedings are instituted, for the defensive plea of laches, equitable estoppel or acquiescence.

McKeon v City, 206-556; 221 NW 351; 62 ALR 1006

Unallowable severance. Built-up, residential territory of a city will not be severed or detached therefrom when reasonably needed for sanitary purposes, and for police and fire protection and regulation, especially when such severance would reduce the area of the city by substantially one-half.

Creery v Okoboji, 217-1312; 253 NW 810

Method of trial. Proceedings for the severance and detaching of territory from a municipality, being now purely equitable, are triable de novo on appeal.

Hewitt & Sons v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

Watchman—nonauthority to appoint. A mayor of a town has no authority, in the absence of an ordinance so empowering him, to contract for and appoint a night watchman for the municipality—a limitation on the authority of the mayor of which all persons must take notice.

Peterson v Panora, 222-1236; 271 NW 317

Peace officers' qualifications. The public has a right to have, as peace officers, men of character, sobriety, judgment, and discretion.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Peace officer as agent of public—nonliability of town for tort. A law-enforcing officer, whose office is created by statute and whose duties are prescribed therein, is an agent of the public in general and not the agent of the municipality which employs him, therefore the municipality is not liable in damages for his unlawful or negligent acts, and a petition alleging cause of action thereon against the municipality is demurrable.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

Tear gas gun—town not liable for negligent use. A city or town is not liable for the negligent acts of its peace officer employee merely because it furnished him with a tear gas gun.

Council—mayor not member—no vote on contract. Where the four members of a city council vote two in favor of and two against employing a superintendent of the municipal power plant, under a statute requiring a majority vote of the members elected to the council, a contract employing such superintendent entered into after the mayor votes "yes" by virtue of a statute giving him the right to vote in case of a tie, is not a binding contract on the city, the mayor not being a member of the council.

Doonan v Winterset, 224-365; 275 NW 640

5640 Clerk—duties.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 207; '30 AG Op 299

Burden of proof—public official's receipt of money as issue—plea of full accounting—not affirmative defense. A city seeking to recover from its clerk water rents, allegedly received and unaccounted for, must go forward with the evidence and prove by a preponderance thereof, the receipt of such funds by the clerk, the clerk's answer, denying receipt of such funds, and asserting that all money received was accounted for. Such answer is not an affirmative defense requiring defendant to prove payment, but raises the receipt of funds as a controverted fact or issue submissible to a jury.

Carroll v Arts, 225-487; 280 NW 869

5641 Warrants—how drawn.

5644 Treasurer—general duties.

Illegal handling of public funds—election of remedies. The fact that a city institutes an action against its treasurer to recover its public funds is not an election of remedies such as will preclude the city from maintaining an action against a county treasurer to recover its funds illegally paid to the city treasurer.

State v Hanson, 210-773; 231 NW 428

Public debt—recovery—partly void warrants. There can be no recovery on municipal warrants given in payment of part of a total purported indebtedness, part of which is void because in excess of constitutional debt limitation. In other words, recovery, insofar as permissible, must be had in some proceedings other than on said warrants.

Workmen's compensation act—city marshal—noncompensable injuries. The statutory provision (editorially classified as part of the workmen's compensation act, §1422, C., '31) which, inter alia, grants compensation to a city marshal when injured "while performing such official duties where there is peril or hazard peculiar to the work of his office", does not authorize compensation for an injury received by a marshal from the accidental discharge of his revolver as it dropped from his pocket while cleaning the floor of the city jail.

Roberts v City, 219-1136; 260 NW 57; 37 NCCA 807

Workmen's compensation act—officer (?) or employee (?) of city. A city marshal who is appointed by the mayor, and who qualifies by taking the usual oath, and by giving an official bond, all as required by a city ordinance, is a city officer and not a city employee within the scope of the workmen's compensation act.

Roberts v City, 219-1136; 260 NW 57

Tear gas gun—town not liable for negligent use. A city or town is not liable for the negligent acts of its peace officer employee merely because it furnished him with a tear gas gun.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

Peace officer as agent of public—nonliability of town for tort. A law-enforcing officer, whose office is created by statute and whose duties are prescribed therein, is an agent of the public in general and not the agent of the municipality which employs him, therefore the municipality is not liable in damages for his unlawful or negligent acts, and a petition alleging cause of action thereon against the municipality is demurrable.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

False imprisonment—justification—jury question. In an action for wrongful arrest and false imprisonment, where defendants, Polk county sheriff and deputies acquired information that one "Gene or Eugene Drake, alias J. O. Drake", 40 to 45 years of age, weighing 150 pounds or more, with light hair and complexion, had committed a felony, and by telegraphic request to Omaha, Nebr., police caused arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff, Eugene Drake, 29 years old, weighing 240 pounds, with dark hair, the question as to whether defendants were justified in causing plaintiff's arrest was one for jury, hence court erred in sustaining motion for directed verdict.

Drake v Keeling, (NOR); 287 NW 596

Consent to extradition—no waiver of illegal arrest and detention. In an action for wrongful arrest and false imprisonment of plaintiff by Omaha, Nebr., police upon request of defendants, Polk county, Iowa, sheriff and deputies, where plaintiff waived extradition and was taken to Polk county, altho protesting he did not commit alleged offense, and where imprisonment continued in Iowa even after one of the defendant deputies stated that he was satisfied they had the wrong man, the waiver of extradition did not as a matter of law constitute a relinquishment of plaintiff's right to claim such arrest and detention to be unlawful.

5658 Policemen—powers and duties.

Operation of police patrol a governmental function. The operation of a plainly marked police patrol by a policeman in uniform, in conveying policemen in uniform from the police station to their patrol beats, all under orders from the chief of police, is a governmental function. It follows that the city is not liable for damages consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the driver.

Leckliter v City, 211-251; 233 NW 58; 38 NCCA 493

Peace officer as agent of public—nonliability of town for tort. A law-enforcing officer, whose office is created by statute and whose duties are prescribed therein, is an agent of the public in general and not the agent of the municipality which employs him, therefore the municipality is not liable in damages for his unlawful or negligent acts, and a petition alleging cause of action thereon against the municipality is demurrable.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

Tear gas gun—town not liable for negligent use. A city or town is not liable for the negligent acts of its peace officer employee merely because it furnished him with a tear gas gun.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

False imprisonment—justification—jury question. In an action for wrongful arrest and false imprisonment, where defendants, Polk county sheriff and deputies acquired information that one "Gene or Eugene Drake, alias J. O. Drake v Keeling, (NOR); 287 NW 596

Consent to extradition—no waiver of illegal arrest and detention. In an action for wrongful arrest and false imprisonment of plaintiff by Omaha, Nebr., police upon request of defendants, Polk county, Iowa, sheriff and deputies, where plaintiff waived extradition and was taken to Polk county, altho protesting he did not commit alleged offense, and where imprisonment continued in Iowa even after one of the defendant deputies stated that he was satisfied they had the wrong man, the waiver of extradition did not as a matter of law constitute a relinquishment of plaintiff's right to claim such arrest and detention to be unlawful.

Rules—power to waive. A city or town council may waive a rule adopted by it for its own guidance, e. g., a rule that a member shall not incur an indebtedness against the city in excess of a named sum.

Carlson v City, 212-373; 236 NW 421

Employment of assistants. The superintendent of a department of municipal government under the so-called commission plan may himself validly employ authorized and necessary employees to carry on the work of his department (1) when an existing ordinance in effect grants such power, and (2) when an existing ordinance makes an appropriation of funds for such department and fixes the number of employees and the separate salaries thereof; and this is true notwithstanding an additional existing ordinance which provides, in effect, that all contracts shall be entered into or approved by the council as a whole, it being held that the latter ordinance is not a limitation on the former.

Loran v City, 201-543; 207 NW 529

Ordinance fixing monthly salaries excludes fees. A city ordinance, which, under section 5670, C., '31, fixes the salary of the city marshal at a stated sum per month, necessarily fixes said salary "in lieu of all other compensation" (such as fees) even tho said ordinance does not specifically so declare.

King v Eldora, 220-568; 261 NW 602

Salary deficiency—payment by overdraft on different fund. A town marshal employed at a sum fixed by ordinance, but paid each month only a part of that sum from the general fund, may not recover the difference between this sum and the rate fixed by ordinance when he had in fact been paid this difference by an overdraft on the waterworks fund. No supplemental contract of any validity may be inferred from the town so acting contrary to statute.

King v Eldora, 220-568; 261 NW 602

Inequitable demand for legal salary. A city officer, who has not, for a series of months, received his full salary as legally fixed by ordinance, may not, in an equitable action, compel the city to pay him the deficiency when, during said time, he has properly received an unknown amount of fees belonging to the city (or county) but has illegally retained them as salary and makes no offer to return said fees.

Nondisqualifying interest. The adoption of a resolution is not rendered nugatory because of the affirmative vote of a particular member, by the fact that, subsequent to the adoption, the private corporation of which the particular member of the board was an officer entered into a contract with a third party for the carrying out of the purposes and objects of said resolution.

Security Bk. v Bagley, 202-701; 210 NW 947; 49 ALR 705

Interest of councilman. The mere fact that a member of a city council has leased cement mixers to a contractor under an agreement that the rental shall be paid out of the profits arising from the use of such machinery creates no such interest in the councilman in a contract between the city and said contractor as invalidates the contract, even tho the contract contemplated the use of said machinery in the execution of the contract.

Wayman v City, 204-675; 215 NW 655

Perrott v Balkema, 211-764; 234 NW 240

Officers—election bribery by third person—disqualifying effect. A candidate having been elected to office is not disqualified, merely because some third person may have given or offered a bribe to the voters for the purpose of securing the election of said candidate, unless the candidate actually participated in and approved thereof.

CIVIL SERVICE

Att. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 537, 538; '38 AG Op 190, 313

5689 Appointment of commission.

Nature of commission. The civil service commission is a special tribunal of wide discretion within the jurisdictional field confided to it, and entitled to pursue a procedure unshackled by mere formality and technicality.

Substantial compliance with the statute governing it is all-sufficient.

Illegal order—when nonparty may question. An appointee to a public position who has been deprived of said position by the action of the civil service commission may maintain in the district court certiorari to review said action, even tho he was not a party to the proceedings which resulted in said action.

Ash v Board, 215-908; 247 NW 264

Janitors not under civil service. A municipal employee who performs the ordinary and usual manual labor of a janitor must be classified as a "laborer whose occupation requires no special skill or fitness" and, therefore, not within the purview of the civil service law.

Ash v Board, 215-908; 247 NW 264

5695 Preference by service.

Att. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 537; '38 AG Op 290, 728

Holding under former statute. A municipal civil service commission has no jurisdiction over the discharge of a municipal employee who has never taken the civil service examination provided by the commission.

Walling v Commission, 214-1156; 243 NW 178

Holding under former statute. The statutory provision in the civil service act to the effect that persons "who have rendered long and efficient service shall retain their positions without further examination" does not embrace any officer or appointee who is specifically excepted from the benefits of said act.

Ash v Board, 215-908; 247 NW 264

Holding under prior statute. On mandamus to compel a city to comply with an order of the civil service commission, plaintiff must, of course, establish jurisdiction in said commission to enter said order. So held where the order was entered for the reinstatement of an employee who had never taken an examination and had no civil service rights.

Larson v Des Moines, 216-42; 247 NW 38

Employees—who may appeal. Principle reaffirmed that "long and efficient service" by a discharged city employee does not give said employee the right of appeal to the civil service commission.

Larson v Des Moines, 216-42; 247 NW 38

Civil service—sanitary inspector—nonsupervisory position. In certiorari action to annul decision of civil service commission ordering the reinstatement of a discharged sanitary inspector, evidence, that his general duty was to investigate and pass upon complaints with only occasional control over incidental employees, held to support and sustain findings below that such position was "nonsupervisory" under civil service statute allowing a preference to certain employees who had worked a certain length of time.

Des Moines v Board, 227-66; 287 NW 288

Civil service—preference by service—five year provision construed—taking examination not admission of necessity. A Sioux City policeman who served as a patrolman for about 14 years and was then promoted to rank of detective, in which capacity he served for about 4 years until demoted to former position of patrolman, came within purview of statute enacted during his service as a detective providing that any person having " * * * five years of service in a position or positions, shall retain his position and have full civil service rights * * *" without examination. Hence his demotion without cause was improper, and the fact that he had taken examinations for position of detective did not amount to an admission that an examination was necessary in his case.

Brown v Sturgeon, 227-136; 287 NW 834

Civil service—only original appointments probationary. Section 5696, C., '35, providing for examinations by civil service commission and making appointments probationary for a period of not to exceed six months, refers to original appointments and not to old appointees who have later qualified for their position by examination, in view of §5695, C., '35, concerning preference by service.

Des Moines v Board, 227-66; 287 NW 288

5696 Original entrance examination—appointments.

Soldiers preference law—not superseded by civil service law. Where a position occupied by a war veteran, such as license collector for a city, was treated by the council as a continuing one and not for a definite term, the fact that the city conducted a civil service examination (which the veteran failed to pass) will not permit the city to oust the veteran and appoint another without charges, notice, and hearing, as provided by the soldiers preference law.

Jones v Des Moines, 225-1342; 283 NW 924

No waiver by taking civil service examination. A war veteran holding a continuing position for a city does not waive his rights under the soldiers preference law, by taking a civil service examination as to the position he holds. He is secure in the position so long as he is capable and efficient altho he may fail in the examination.

Jones v Des Moines, 225-1342; 283 NW 924

Civil service—only original appointments probationary. This section providing for examinations by civil service commission and making appointments probationary for a period of not to exceed six months, refers to original appointments and not to old appointees who have later qualified for their position by examination, in view of §5695, C., '35, concerning preference by service.

Des Moines v Board, 227-66; 287 NW 288

5697 Preferences.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 533; '38 AG Op 190

Soldiers preference law—purpose of act. The intent of the soldiers preference law is to make veterans secure in their positions in public service and to prevent their removal except for misconduct, and it is not intended for the purpose of retaining in office one who violates his duty.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Soldiers preference law—no waiver by taking civil service examination. A war veteran holding a continuing position for a city does not waive his rights under the soldiers preference law, by taking a civil service examination as to the position he holds. He is secure in the position so long as he is capable and efficient altho he may fail in the examination.

Jones v Des Moines, 225-1342; 283 NW 924

Soldiers preference law—not superseded by civil service law. Where a position occupied by a war veteran, such as license collector for a city, was treated by the council as a continuing one and not for a definite term, the fact that the city conducted a civil service examination (which the veteran failed to pass) will not permit the city to oust the veteran and appoint another without charges, notice, and hearing, as provided by the soldiers preference law.

5698.1 Seniority.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 292, 728

Civil service commission—power to determine seniority rights. Where a sanitary inspector, upon being discharged by a city council, took an appeal to civil service commission, it had jurisdiction to determine his seniority rights.

Des Moines v Board, 227-66; 287 NW 288

5699 Chief of police and chief of fire department.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 290

Peace officer as agent of public—nonliability of town for tort. A law-enforcing officer, whose office is created by statute and whose duties are prescribed therein, is an agent of the public in general and not the agent of the municipality which employs him, therefore the municipality is not liable in damages for his unlawful or negligent acts, and a petition alleging cause of action thereon against the municipality is demurrable.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

Tear gas gun—town not liable for negligent use. A city or town is not liable for the negligent acts of its peace officer employee merely because it furnished him with a tear gas gun.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

5700 Qualifications.

Peace officers' qualifications. The public has a right to have, as peace officers, men of character, sobriety, judgment, and discretion.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

5701 Employees under civil service—qualifications.

5702 Removal, demotion, or suspension.

Civil service and soldiers preference laws—purpose. Civil service and soldiers preference laws were not intended as a cloak or shield to cover misconduct, incompetency, or failure to perform official duties, but to provide protection and safeguard against arbitrary action of superior officers in removing such employees for reasons other than those named in the statutes.

Anderson v Board, 227-1164; 290 NW 493

Discharge by commission—findings—reviewability. Supreme court will not review findings of civil service commission which are supported by competent evidence, where commission has jurisdiction and has otherwise acted legally; but, where evidence is entirely lacking to support the findings, the question becomes one of law and the action of the commission would not only be erroneous, but would amount to an illegality reviewable by certiorari.

Anderson v Board, 227-1164; 290 NW 493

Jurisdiction to discharge. Informal charges against a policeman of misconduct, recited in and recognized tentatively by the city council by resolution filed with the civil service commission, furnish jurisdictional basis for the commission, on proper notice to the accused of the charges, to proceed to a hearing and, in a proper case, to enter an order of discharge.

Dickey v Com., 201-1135; 205 NW 961

Discharge by commission—jurisdiction on appeal. The municipal civil service commission has jurisdiction, on appeal to it by an "indefinitely suspended" policeman as per order of the chief of police, (1) to receive formal written charges of misconduct on the part of appellant, (2) to hold legal hearing thereon, and, on proper proof, (3) to enter an order peremptorily discharging appellant; and such action is, in effect, legally accomplished by an order of the commission "dismissing the appeal and affirming the discharge" by the chief of police.

Fetters v Guth, 221-359; 265 NW 625

Discharge—burden of proof. Burden is on civil service commission to prove statutory grounds for removal of police officer who is entitled to soldiers preference.

Anderson v Board, 227-1164; 290 NW 493

Discharge—nonjurisdiction of civil service commission. A municipal civil service commission has no jurisdiction over the discharge of a municipal employee who has never taken the civil service examination provided by the commission.

Walling v Civil Service, 214-1156; 243 NW 178

Right to abolish office. A city may in good faith—without fraud, sham, subterfuge or arbitrariness—abolish an office or official position which it has theretofore duly placed under municipal civil service, and peremptorily dismiss the occupant of such office.

Kern v Council, 213-510; 239 NW 104

"Hearing and determination"—what constitutes. In certiorari to determine the legality of proceedings of civil service commission in removing a city employee, the commission's statutory duty to "hear and determine" is an essential ingredient of jurisdiction, and the quoted words refer to a judicial investigation and settlement of an issue of fact, which implies the weighing of testimony by both sides, from a consideration of which the relief sought by the moving party is either granted or denied.

Sandahl v Des Moines, 227-1310; 290 NW 697

Fair and impartial hearing. A city employee who has been removed from office cannot be said to have had a fair and impartial hearing before the civil service commission under a record disclosing that the commission, after investigation, unsuccessfully sought to have the employee indicted, that charges against the employee were filed by the commission itself, which then proceeded to "hear and determine" the case, and that a member of the commission stated "We had Paul Sandahl convicted before he ever went before us for trial."

Sandahl v Des Moines, 227-1310; 290 NW 697

Review—scope and extent. A writ of certiorari presents only a question of law, and does not entitle the petitioner to have a review of the facts, unless the return reveals such an absence of facts as to present a law question of arbitrary action.

Dickey v Com., 201-1135; 205 NW 961

Discharge of policeman for nonpayment of debts—nonpermissibility. Civil service commission's removal of police officer, an honorably discharged soldier, on sole ground that he failed to pay his creditors, held arbitrary and void despite fact that police department suffered inconvenience because of creditor's demands for assistance in collection, where such officer made good-faith efforts to meet his obligations which accrued as result of sickness in family.

Anderson v Board, 227-1164; 290 NW 493

Policeman assaulting prisoner—discharge justifiable. In an action in certiorari brought under soldiers preference law to review a ruling of civil service commission sustaining the discharge of a police officer for violation of civil service rules, providing for the dismissal of a policeman who clubs or mistreats a prisoner merely because such prisoner makes derogatory remarks concerning the officer, held, evidence sufficient to sustain findings of the commission.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Peace officers' qualifications. The public has a right to have, as peace officers, men of character, sobriety, judgment, and discretion.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

5703 Removal or discharge of subordinates.

Policeman assaulting prisoner—discharge justifiable. In an action in certiorari brought under soldiers preference law to review a ruling of civil service commission sustaining the discharge of a police officer for violation of civil service rules, providing for the dismissal of a policeman who clubs or mistreats a prisoner merely because such prisoner makes derogatory remarks concerning the officer, held, evidence sufficient to sustain findings of the commission.

5704 Appeal.

Jurisdiction of commission. The civil service commission has jurisdiction, on appeal by an officer of the police department from an order of discharge, to determine, on an appropriate record, (1) whether said officer is simply a special or temporary officer, and dischargeable at pleasure, or (2) whether said officer has acquired the civil service rights of a regular policeman, and, on the latter finding, to order his reinstatement—no charges being filed against him.

Jenney v Com., 200-1042; 205 NW 958

Nonjurisdiction of commission. A municipal civil service commission has no jurisdiction over the discharge of a municipal employee who has never taken the civil service examination provided by the commission.

Walling v Commission, 214-1156; 243 NW 178

Larson v Des Moines, 216-42; 247 NW 38

Employees—who may appeal. Principle reaffirmed that "long and efficient service" by a discharged city employee (under §5695, C., '31) does not give said employee the right of appeal to the civil service commission.

Larson v Des Moines, 216-42; 247 NW 38

Certiorari—competent sustaining evidence necessary—hearsay ignored on review. Where, in a proceeding before the civil service commission, incompetent hearsay evidence, in the form of minutes of testimony before a grand jury, is considered on the question of whether suspended police officers should be reinstated, the supreme court on review in certiorari must examine the record to ascertain if there is other competent evidence to support the commission's ruling.

Luke v Civil Service, 225-189; 279 NW 443

5711 Jurisdiction—attorney—decision.

Certiorari—civil service commission ruling—remedy. No appeal being allowed from a ruling of the civil service commission, and there being no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy if the commission exceeded its proper jurisdiction, or otherwise acted illegally, a writ of certiorari will lie.

Luke v Civil Service, 225-189; 279 NW 443

Fair and impartial hearing. A city employee who has been removed from office cannot be said to have had a fair and impartial hearing before the civil service commission under a record disclosing that the commission, after investigation, unsuccessfully sought to have the employee indicted, that charges against the employee were filed by the commission itself, which then proceeded to "hear and determine" the case, and that a member of the commission stated "We had Paul Sandahl convicted before he ever went before us for trial."

Sandahl v Des Moines, 227-1310; 290 NW 697

"Hearing and determination"—what constitutes. In certiorari to determine the legality of proceedings of civil service commission in removing a city employee, the commission's statutory duty to "hear and determine" is an essential ingredient of jurisdiction, and the quoted words refer to a judicial investigation and settlement of an issue of fact, which implies the weighing of testimony by both sides, from a consideration of which the relief sought by the moving party is either granted or denied.

Sandahl v Des Moines, 227-1310; 290 NW 697

Civil service commission findings—conclusiveness. The ruling of a civil service commission as to the discharge of a veteran under soldiers preference law, altho not conclusive, should not be lightly set aside, it being the general rule that where there is compliance in good faith with all requirements as to hearings, the courts will not usually interfere to direct or control the discretion of the commission.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Findings of fact—when reviewed. In certiorari action by city to annul decision of civil service commission, it is not the court's duty to review findings of fact if sustained by any competent and substantial evidence, unless such lower tribunal otherwise acted illegally and there is no other plain, speedy and adequate remedy at law. However, a lack of such evidence constitutes such illegality as would warrant a review of the findings below.

Des Moines v Board, 227-66; 287 NW 288

Certiorari to review veteran's discharge. Under soldiers preference law affording veterans the right of hearing and review by certiorari, in the event of discharge from public employment, the scope of the review is not, as in ordinary cases of certiorari, limited to evidence on question of jurisdiction or other illegality, but is enlarged to allow a review of all proceedings had before a civil service commission.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Policeman assaulting prisoner—discharge justifiable. In an action in certiorari brought under soldiers preference law to review a ruling of civil service commission sustaining the discharge of a police officer for violation of civil service rules, providing for the dismissal of a policeman who clubs or mistreats a prisoner merely because such prisoner makes derogatory remarks concerning the officer, held, evidence sufficient to sustain findings of the commission.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Civil service commission fixing penalty—record of employee considered. It is the right and duty of a commission or magistrate to take into consideration the record of a guilty person in fixing a penalty.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Jurisdiction to discharge. Informal charges against a policeman of misconduct, recited in and recognized tentatively by the city council by resolution filed with the civil service commission, furnish jurisdictional basis for the commission, on proper notice to the accused of the charges, to proceed to a hearing and, in a proper case, to enter an order of discharge.

Dickey v Com., 201-1135; 205 NW 961

Power to determine seniority rights. Where a sanitary inspector, upon being discharged by a city council, took an appeal to civil service commission, it had jurisdiction to determine his seniority rights.

Des Moines v Board, 227-66; 287 NW 288

Allowance of compensation to employee during discharge. On an appeal by a discharged employee to civil service commission, the allowance of compensation during period of discharge is within discretion of commission.

Des Moines v Board, 227-66; 287 NW 288

Reinstating suspended policeman—back salary denied. A suspended police officer, upon being reinstated by the civil service commission, may be denied his compensation for the time of his suspension, the matter being entirely discretionary with the commission.

Luke v Civil Service, 225-189; 279 NW 443

5712 Employees—number diminished.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 264, 728

Discharge. The city council has plenary power by appropriate resolution to order a good-faith reduction in the number of employees in a municipal department operating under civil service regulations, and may validly delegate to the chief officer of such department the administrative duty to designate, on the basis of efficiency, competency, and length of service, and without the preferring of charges, the employees who shall be discharged; and this is true tho the employees be ex-soldiers, as the soldiers preference act has no application to a case where an office is abolished.

Lyon v Com., 203-1203; 212 NW 579

Right to abolish office. A city may in good faith—without fraud, sham, subterfuge or arbitrariness—abolish an office or official position which it has theretofore duly placed under municipal civil service, and peremptorily dismiss the occupant of such office.

Kern v Council, 213-510; 239 NW 104

How abolished—effect of transfer. The abolishment of a position under civil service can be accomplished only by compliance with statutory requirements relating to the diminution of employees, and the mere transfer of the duties of a position to another department will not amount to an abolishment.

Des Moines v Board, 227-66; 287 NW 288

Transfer of position—evidence incompetent to prove. In certiorari action to annul decision of civil service commission ordering reinstatement of a discharged sanitary inspector, where it was claimed that this position had been transferred from one department to another, evidence to that effect, consisting of (1) only a reference in the certification to a report of the commission, and (2) an appointment made by the city council, was incompetent.

Des Moines v Board, 227-66; 287 NW 288

Power to determine seniority rights. Where a sanitary inspector, upon being discharged by a city council, took an appeal to civil service commission, it had jurisdiction to determine his seniority rights.

ANALYSIS

- I ORDINANCES IN GENERAL
- II VALIDITY IN GENERAL
- III GENERAL WELFARE CLAUSE
- IV ENFORCEMENT

I ORDINANCES IN GENERAL

Nonfraudulent exercise of granted power not reviewable by courts.

Lytle Co. v Gilman, 201-603; 206 NW 108

Approval by voters does not create franchise. The approval, by a majority vote of the electors of a city or town, of a proposed franchise for the use of the streets by a private public utility, does not create a franchise. Such franchise comes into existence only when the city or town council sees fit, after the favorable vote, to enact, and does enact, such franchise in the form of an ordinance.

Schnieders v Town, 213-807; 234 NW 207

Construction. An ordinance must be construed as a whole.

Talarico v City, 215-186; 244 NW 750

Construction—franchise (?) or regulation (?). Ordinance construed in the light of its terms and of the facts attending its enactment, and held, to constitute a franchise to the grantee therein named to operate a telephone exchange, and not to constitute a mere regulatory ordinance imposing a license fee on said business.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

"Coasting" defined—sled hitched to vehicle excluded. A city ordinance, prohibiting "coasting" in the streets, applies only to vehicles or sleds moving by the force of gravity and not to sleds hitched to the rear of motor vehicles.

Samuelson v Sherrill, 225-421; 280 NW 596

Simmer law—filing contract but not resolution—ordinance unnecessary. In establishing municipal ownership of a waterworks plant, it is the contract and not the resolutions calling an election that must be on file with the city clerk for one week before adoption, and an ordinance establishing the municipal waterworks plant is unnecessary.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Employees—compensation. The determination of the salary of a fireman is the exercise of an administrative power and need not be made by ordinance. (§6519, C., '24.)

Murphy v Gilman, 204-58; 214 NW 679

Transmission line—construction—negligence. The owner of a high-voltage electric transmission line may not be said to be negligent in failing to cover the wires with an insulating material when its said line is constructed in full compliance with the law and is guarded from doing injury by every practical device and expedient known and recognized by those who are expert in such construction and use; and one who unwittingly and wrongfully places himself in contact with such a line must be held to be the sole author of the resulting injury.

Dilley v Iowa Co., 210-1332; 227 NW 173

Election bribery—electric rate reduction—fulfillment after trial immaterial. Where the court, after hearing an election contest, finds that candidates to municipal office did not par-

I ORDINANCES IN GENERAL—concluded participate in an illegal bribe by a local electric company offering a rate reduction and a rebate of impounded charges if the municipal ownership opponents were elected, the fact that, after the trial, the council repeals the municipal ownership ordinance, and the company does reduce rates and repay impounded funds to consumers, adds nothing new to the proof of participation and does not warrant a new trial.

Van Der Zee v Means, 225-871; 281 NW 460

Citizens—challenging officers' official acts. Public welfare lodges in citizens of a community the right to challenge the validity of an electric plant construction contract and to enjoin a municipal corporation and its officers from violating their duties and abusing corporate powers, if such construction contract is consummated without competitive bidding, made mandatory by statute.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826

II VALIDITY IN GENERAL

Ordinance—effect of obsolete or repealed provisions. An ordinance may be perfectly valid as to a distinct subject matter therein, even tho the provisions relative to other subject matters have been repealed or have become obsolete.

Towns v City, 214-76; 241 NW 658

Drastic and invalidating penalties. Drastic penalties may, in view of the nature of the acts punished, and in view of the circumstances attending the commission of such acts, nullify an entire ordinance. So held where each day's continuance of each of various acts was declared a separate offense and punished by fine or imprisonment.

Edwards v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Discretionary power. Discretionary power may, in proper cases, be conferred upon the mayor of a city.

Talarico v City, 215-186; 244 NW 750

Delegation of power. Ordinance held not to confer power on the mayor to issue a license.

Talarico v City, 215-186; 244 NW 750

License fees presumptively reasonable. License fees duly fixed by an authorized ordinance will be deemed reasonable unless the contrary appears on the face of the ordinance or on proper evidence.

Towns v City, 214-76; 241 NW 658

Unreasonableness per se. Under statutory authority "to regulate and license" sales by transient merchants, an ordinance which empowers the mayor not only to fix the license fee at any sum from $5 to $100 per day, but also the tenure of the license, is per se arbitrary, unreasonable, and void.

Creston v Mezvinsky, 213-1212; 240 NW 676

Taxation under power to regulate or license. Statutory power in a city to regulate or license a business does not embrace the power to tax the business; and the court will be quick to note whether the revenue derivable is out of proportion to the expense entailed by the regulations; also whether the language of the ordinance purporting to be a police measure is but a subterfuge to hide an actual purpose to tax.

Edwards v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Police powers—consent of property owners—effect. General principle recognized that an ordinance which requires the consent of abutting and adjacent property owners for the erection of a building is invalid on constitutional grounds.

Downey v City, 208-1273; 227 NW 125

Due process—ordinance requiring weighing of loads. A municipal ordinance requiring that merchandise sold in load lots by weight for delivery within the city be weighed by a public weighmaster whose certificate stating the gross, tare, and net weight must be delivered to the purchaser, such ordinance, altho it necessitates that a person trucking coal into the city unload and reload, is not so unreasonable as to violate the due process clause of the constitution.

Huss v Creston, 224-844; 278 NW 196

Fireproof construction—unallowable restriction. Statutory authority to municipalities to prohibit the erection of buildings unless the outer walls be made of "brick, iron, stone, mortar, or other noncombustible materials," will not authorize an ordinance which prohibits the erection of outer walls unless made of "brick and mortar or of iron and stone and mortar"—in other words, an ordinance which excludes the right to use "other noncombustible materials."

Boehner v Williams, 213-578; 239 NW 545

Alley—vacating by ordinance—invalidity for nondescription. An ordinance to vacate an alley is invalid insofar as it affects a certain block in the city plat not mentioned nor described in the ordinance.

Pederson v Radcliffe, 226-166; 284 NW 145

Penal ordinance void for uncertainty. An ordinance which requires storage tanks for inflammable oils and the accessories of such tanks to "be kept and operated in compliance with law, the building code, and other city ordinances, and in a safe and proper manner, and the same shall not be permitted to become or remain defective, hazardous or dangerous" (sic), and penalizing violations, is void for uncertainty and unenforceability.

Edwards v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Regulatory ordinance—absence of specifications—effect. An ordinance purporting to safeguard the public by regulating storage tanks for inflammable oils must, in order to be valid and enforceable, contain such rules and specifications as will enable the property owner to know, definitely, just what is required of him in order to comply with the ordinance and thereby safeguard himself. It is quite insufficient to enact the dragnet command that said tanks and appurtenant accessories "must be kept and operated in compliance with law, the building code, and other city ordinances, and in a safe and proper manner, and the same shall not be permitted to become or remain defective, hazardous or dangerous".

Edwards v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Storage of gasoline—vested right. A person who has the right, under an ordinance, to store gasoline in a certain quantity without a permit from the city, and the right to store gasoline in excess of said quantity only with such permit, and who is refused a permit for such excess storage, does not, by thereafter erecting his storage tanks, acquire a vested right to store gasoline in said lesser quantity without a permit. In other words, the ordinance may validly be amended by reducing the quantity which may be stored without a permit.

Clinton v Donnelly, 203-576; 213 NW 262

Inflammable oils—regulations—permit required. An ordinance regulatory of inflammable oils may validly prohibit the erection and maintenance within the city of gasoline filling stations unless the city council, in the exercise of its legal discretion, first grants a permit for such erection and maintenance. (§5764, C., '27.)

Cecil v Toenjes, 210-407; 228 NW 874

Equal protection of laws—ordinance—arbitrary classification. An ordinance which provides safety regulations over tanks wherein inflammable oils are stored for sale is null and void when in the same municipality there are large numbers of other tanks identical with those embraced in the ordinance and used for the same purpose except the stored oil is not for sale. Especially is this an arbitrary classification when it is made to appear that a material number of the exempted tanks are more dangerous than the tanks to which the ordinance is made applicable.

Edwards v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

City ordinance—burden to show inadmissibility. The burden of pointing out wherein city ordinance regulating train's speed is defective, either in substance or method of adoption, is on the party objecting to its admissibility.

Meier v Railway, 224-295; 275 NW 139

III GENERAL WELFARE CLAUSE

"Construction" as imposing continuous duty. An ordinance which requires all rain spouts on buildings to be so "constructed that water will not be cast upon the sidewalks" imposes a continuing duty upon the property owner—a duty not only to "construct" the spouting as required but to maintain the spouting in such required condition.

Updegraff v City, 210-382; 226 NW 928

Regulatory ordinance—absence of specifications—effect. An ordinance purporting to safeguard the public by regulating storage tanks for inflammable oils must, in order to be valid and enforceable, contain such rules and specifications as will enable the property owner to know, definitely, just what is required of him in order to comply with the ordinance and thereby safeguard himself. It is quite insufficient to enact the dragnet command that said tanks and appurtenant accessories "must be kept and operated in compliance with law, the building code, and other city ordinances, and in a safe and proper manner, and the same shall not be permitted to become or remain defective, hazardous or dangerous".

Edwards v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

IV ENFORCEMENT

Arbitrary action. A mayor, exercising his power under an ordinance to direct the non-issuance of a license, may not be said to act "arbitrarily" when he, in accordance with the ordinance, notifies the applicant of the time and place of hearing on the application and when the applicant ignores the notice.

Talarico v City, 215-186; 244 NW 750

Enforcement of ordinance. A permanent injunction against a mayor and his successor to enjoin the enforcement, against plaintiff's non-resident employees, of a penal ordinance, on the theory that such employees are transient peddlers, will not be entered at a time when it does not appear that said transient employees are in the city in question, or that plaintiff's property rights will be invaded, or that plaintiff will be irreparably injured by enforcement.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 288

Council—mayor not member—no vote on contract. Where the four members of a city council vote two in favor of and two against employing a superintendent of the municipal power plant, under a statute requiring a majority vote of the members elected to the council, a contract employing such superintendent entered into after the mayor votes "yes" by virtue of a statute giving him the right to vote in case of a tie, is not a binding contract on the city, the mayor not being a member of the council.

Doonan v Winterset, 224-365; 275 NW 640

Permanent sidewalk—sufficient showing of jurisdiction. Jurisdiction to construct a permanent sidewalk and to assess property therefor is made to appear by unquestioned proof (1) that the city or town council by resolution ordered such construction, and (2) that the mayor later signed the record of such meeting and the resolution, even tho the record fails to show a three-fourths affirmative vote of all members and fails to show that the yeas and nays were called on the resolution.

Meier v Railway, 224-295; 275 NW 139

5721 Book form.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 536

Ordinance as evidence. A book purporting to be the ordinances of a municipality and duly certified as such by the city clerk is admissible, so far as material, without further showing.

Hollingsworth v Hall, 214-285; 242 NW 39

City ordinance—sufficient "offer". A book purporting to have been issued by a city or town and to contain the ordinances thereof, as of a certain date, need not be formally offered as such. Counsel need only produce or bring the volume into court for the inspection of the court and thereupon formally offer such portions thereof as he may see fit.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Insufficient publication "in pamphlet form". The publication "in pamphlet form", by a city, of the proceedings of the city council for the preceding month (§6581, C., '31), in which pamphlet appears a duly enacted ordinance, does not constitute the publication "in pamphlet form" of said ordinance as contemplated by this section.

Certiorari. The refusal of a mayor to grant defendant a change of venue, in a prosecution for assault and battery, on the ground "that the mayor was prejudiced against him", constitutes an illegality reviewable on certiorari, an appeal from the judgment of the mayor on the merits not being a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy.

Shearer v Sayre, 207-203; 222 NW 445

Nonpermissible appeal. A city, in a criminal prosecution for the violation of its own ordinance, may not appeal from a judgment of conviction in the district court.

I GOVERNMENTAL POWERS AND FUNCTIONS

(a) IN GENERAL

Powers conferred by legislature. A municipal corporation possesses only such powers as are conferred upon it by the legislature—that is, such powers as are granted in express words, or those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly conferred, or those necessarily essential to the identical objects and purposes of the corporation as by statute provided, and not those which are simply convenient.

Iowa Electric v Cascade, 227-480; 288 NW 633

Express or implied power. Principle reaffirmed that no city may exercise any police power unless such police power is expressly or impliedly granted to it by the general assembly.

Downey v City, 208-1273; 227 NW 125

Governmental powers. Principle reaffirmed that what a city does within the zone of its granted powers is not subject to review by the courts, in the absence of plea and proof of fraud.

Lytle Co. v Gilman, 201-603; 206 NW 108

Sale of milk—incidental powers. The statutory power of cities and towns (§5747, C., '31) "to establish and enforce sanitary requirements for the production, handling, and distribution of milk" (and certain milk products) necessarily embraces the power to create, by ordinance, all reasonable administrative machinery for specifically exercising said general power. For example, the ordinance may validly make the legal sale of said products dependent on the seller obtaining a municipal permit, provided the refusal of the permit be not arbitrary.

Des Moines v Fowler, 218-504; 255 NW 880

Power to fix rates. The legislature having graciously granted cities and towns the power to fix public utility rates may, at its pleasure, curtail or limit the power.

Iowa-Neb. Co. v Villisca, 220-238; 261 NW 423

Taxation—source of power. The power of a city to tax is strictly statutory—never implied.

Clark v Des Moines, 222-317; 267 NW 97

Taxpayer—right to maintain action.

Collins v Davis, 57-256; 10 NW 643

Ind. Dist. v Gookin, 72-387; 34 NW 174

Brockman v Creston, 79-587; 44 NW 822

Goetzman v Whitaker, 81-527; 46 NW 1058

Police powers—emergency measure. The attempt of a city to exercise by ordinance an ungranted police power cannot be justified on the plea of emergency.

Downey v City, 208-1273; 227 NW 125

Police powers—consent of property owners—effect. General principle recognized that an ordinance which requires the consent of abutting and adjacent property owners for the erection of a building is invalid on constitutional grounds.

Downey v City, 208-1273; 227 NW 125

Gasoline service station. Principle reaffirmed that the location and regulation of gasoline service stations are clearly within the police powers of municipal corporations.

Yeanos v Oil Co., 220-1317; 263 NW 834

Construction as to employment of assistants. The superintendent of a department of municipal government under the so-called commission plan may himself validly employ authorized and necessary employees to carry on the work of his department (1) when an existing ordinance in effect grants such power, and (2) when an existing ordinance makes an appropriation of funds for such department and fixes the number of employees and the separate salaries thereof.

Loran v City, 201-543; 207 NW 529

Water company in which city owns stock—not "governmental agency"—exempt from federal tax. A private corporation furnishing water to city under arrangement whereby dividends and financial expenditures were limited, and city owned one-third of voting stock with right of representation on board of directors, right of purchase, and right to compel retirement of preferred stock from surplus earnings, held not immune from federal taxation as "governmental agency", since surplus earnings from water tax did not become property of city.

I GOVERNMENTAL POWERS AND FUNCTIONS—continued

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Citizens Water Co. v Com. of Int. Rev., 87 F 2d, 874

Authority to erect public utility—insufficient funds—effect. A city or town which has been authorized by popular election to establish and erect a system of waterworks by issuing bonds to a specified amount, and which discovers, after said funds have been applied, that the system is so incomplete as to be unusable, has no authority, in the absence of a reauthorization by the electorate, to issue additional warrants to complete the system.

Mote v Carlisle, 211-392; 233 NW 695

Municipal utilities—discrimination against privately owned plants. Statutory authority to municipalities to erect, in their proprietary capacity, electric light and power plants, and to pay the entire initial cost thereof from the net profits of said plants, and to this end to fix such rates as will effect such payment, is not void as an unconstitutional discrimination against privately owned plants of the same kind.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

City election favoring utility—no implied obligation to construct utility. Under the Simmer law an action by an engineering company for a general judgment against a city for engineering services cannot be maintained, based on an implied obligation of the city to erect light and power plant, even after repeal of the enabling ordinance, and altho the special election therefor had carried. Such would be unlawful and contrary to public policy and beyond powers of city council. Persons dealing with a municipality are bound to take notice of legislative restrictions upon its authority.

Burns & McDonnell Co. v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

Wrongful exercise of judicial function. A city is not liable for damages consequent on the wrongful attempt of the city council to revoke a permit granted by it for the erection of a store building; nor are the individual members of the council liable for such damages, it appearing that they acted in good faith but under a misapprehension of their legal power.

Rehmann v City, 204-798; 215 NW 957; 55 ALR 430; 34 NCCA 480

Ratification of illegal acts. Assuming that it is legally possible for a city to ratify an illegal payment of city funds to the city treasurer, yet such ratification cannot be based on acts of the city done on inadequate information as to the relevant and material facts.

State v Hanson, 210-773; 231 NW 428

Unjust enrichment as basis for recovery. No basis for recovery against a city, on the theory that the city has been unjustly enriched and must pay therefor, is established by proof of the reasonable value of that which the city has received.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Torts—dedicating part of street to travel—effect. A city or town has the right to divide a street and to set apart a certain part thereof for vehicular traffic, and when it does so, the part thus dedicated to that purpose is the part which falls within the provisions of the statute that the city or town must use reasonable diligence to keep the same free from obstructions and pitfalls.

Morse v Castana, 213-1225; 241 NW 304

Statutes of limitations—nonapplicability to nonaccepted street. In a quiet title action where land was dedicated but never accepted as street in unincorporated village, the rule that statute of limitations will not run against a municipality exercising a governmental function does not apply.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

(b) GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS

Strict construction of power. On the question whether a municipal corporation possesses a certain power, all reasonable doubts must be resolved against the existence of such power.

Van Eaton v Town, 211-986; 231 NW 475; 71 ALR 820

Dual functions of government. The functions of a municipality are two-fold: one is governmental, and the other, proprietary and quasi private. Lighting its streets is governmental, and selling electricity to individual users is proprietary.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826

Operation of police patrol a governmental function. The operation of a plainly marked police patrol by a policeman in uniform, in conveying policemen in uniform from the police station to their patrol beats, all under orders from the chief of police, is a governmental function. It follows that the city is not liable for damages consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the driver.

Lauxman v Tisher, 213-654; 239 NW 675

Peace officer as agent of public—nonliability of town for tort. A law-enforcing officer, whose office is created by statute and whose duties are prescribed therein, is an agent of the public in general and not the agent of the municipality which employs him; therefore, the municipality is not liable in damages for his unlawful or negligent acts, and a petition alleging cause of action thereon against the municipality is demurrable.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

Governmental function—negligence. The maintenance by a municipality of a bathing beach or a city park constitutes the exercise of a governmental function, with consequent nonliability of the municipality for injuries connected with such maintenance.

Norman v City, 201-279; 207 NW 134; 25 NCCA 675

Mocha v City, 204-51; 214 NW 587; 34 NCCA 542; 3 NCCA(NS) 459

Injuries from defects—plans by competent engineer—nonliability. When municipal improvements are constructed according to plans, even tho faulty, of a competent engineer, there is no liability on the municipality because in adopting such plans it is exercising its discretion and acting in a governmental capacity, unless it can be said, as a matter of law, that the plans adopted were obviously defective.

Dodds v West Liberty, 225-506; 281 NW 476

School bus driver as independent contractor—nongovernmental function. A school bus driver, furnishing his own bus, under a contract embodying certain conditions to transport school children, but not under the supervision, control, and regulation of the board, is an independent contractor liable for his own negligence and not an employee exercising a governmental function.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

School districts—mandatory duty to transport pupils. A statute providing that a school board shall furnish transportation to children living two and one-half miles from the school creates a mandatory duty to transport pupils which is a governmental function, but whether the duty be considered as ministerial or governmental, the school district, being a quasi corporation, cannot be sued for failure to furnish such transportation when such right of action is not expressly given by statute.

Bruggeman v School Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

Special plea in re governmental function. The nonliability of a municipality, for the negligence of an employee in the performance of a governmental function, is a special defense and must be pleaded as such.

Groves v Webster City, 222-849; 270 NW 329
Anderson v Moon, 225-70; 279 NW 396

Slander—governmental capacity. A demurrer to a petition in an action for slander will not lie solely on the ground that the petition shows on its face that defendant, at the time of speaking the words in question, was acting in a governmental capacity, because defendant's right to assert the privileged character of the spoken words is not an absolute right but a qualified right only. The demurrer—if employed under such circumstances—must point out wherein said petition fails to state a cause of action against defendant.

Brown v Cochran, 222-34; 268 NW 585

Torts—government nonliability for employee's tort—respondeat superior—exception. The exemption accorded counties and other governmental bodies and their officers from liability for torts growing out of the negligent acts of their agents or employees is a limitation or exception to the rule of respondeat superior, and in no way affects the fundamental principle of torts that one who wrongfully inflicts injury upon another is individually liable to the injured person.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

Governmental employees—personal liability for torts. A governmental employee committing a tortious act which causes injury to another in violation of a duty owed to the injured person, becomes, as an individual, personally liable in damages therefor. (Overruling Hibbs v School Dist., 218 Iowa 841; 34 NCCA 468; 37 NCCA 711).

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

See Anderson v Moon, 225-70; 279 NW 396

Special assessments—collection—county treasurer as agent. The county treasurer is a statutory agent of a city in the collection of special assessments for street improvements and sewers.

Hauge v Des Moines, 207-1209; 224 NW 520

(c) MINISTERIAL FUNCTIONS

Pleading ministerial character of acts. A petition for damages against a municipality because of the wrongful acts of municipal agents and employees is demurrable unless the petition alleges such facts as show that the acts complained of were corporate or ministerial (the only acts for which the municipality would be liable), and not governmental.

Rowley v City, 203-1245; 212 NW 158; 53 ALR 375; 34 NCCA 464

Judicial supervision—council's judgment—filling station permit. The wisdom, judgment, or lack thereof, on the part of a city council

I GOVERNMENTAL POWERS AND FUNCTIONS—concluded

(c) MINISTERIAL FUNCTIONS—concluded in issuing a permit to erect a "filling station" is not reviewable by the courts unless the action taken was arbitrary, oppressive, or capricious. Evidence reviewed and permit held valid.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

Soldiers preference appointments. The soldiers preference law cannot be objected to on the grounds that it deprives the city of self-government when the powers of the municipality are derived solely from the legislature which has power under the constitution and under statute to prescribe rules governing municipalities.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Police power—restricted residence district—valid regulation. An ordinance, based upon a statute valid under the police power of the state, authorizing establishment of restricted residence districts is not a prohibition but a regulation and as such is a legitimate and reasonable exercise of the city's police power.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

Rights, powers, duties, and liabilities—motives immaterial when following lawful procedure. The motives of public officials when proceeding according to law, to submit the question of municipal ownership of a public utility, are not fit subjects for judicial inquiry.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Tax statute—constitutionality—no challenge by public official. A county auditor or a board of supervisors as ministerial officers or public officials may not challenge the constitutional authority nor competence of the legislature to pass a statute under which they act.

Hewitt & Sons v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

Failure to maintain pension fund—proper remedy. An action at law against a city for judgment consequent upon the failure of the council to perform its mandatory duty to levy a tax sufficient to meet and pay pensions for firemen and policemen will not lie either on the theory of contract or damages. Mandamus is the proper remedy.

Lage v Marshalltown, 212-53; 235 NW 761

Raising constitutionality of statutes not permitted. In an action in equity for mandamus to compel board of supervisors to remit taxes on capital stock of failed bank, held, board of supervisors could not raise issue of constitutionality of statute providing for such remission, either in that it contravened the state or the federal constitution, as counties and other municipal corporations are creatures of the legislature, existing by reason of statutes enacted within the power of the legislature, and the board may not question that power which brought it into existence and set the bounds of its capacities.

Brunner v Floyd County, 226-583; 284 NW 814

II CONTRACTS IN GENERAL

Contracts generally. See under Ch 420, Note 1

Legislative control—capacity. The contention that a city or town may not be limited by the state in contracting in its private or municipal capacity is quite unallowable.

Johnson Bk. v City, 212-929; 231 NW 705; 237 NW 507; 84 ALR 926

Consideration in nature of public benefit. Principle recognized that the contract of a municipal corporation must be supported by a consideration in the nature of a public benefit.

Love v City, 210-90; 230 NW 373

Invalid contracts—liability of city. Principle reaffirmed that a city may be held liable for public benefits received and retained pursuant to a purported contract which the city had power to enter into, but which failed in validity because of defective procedure by the city.

Love v City, 210-90; 230 NW 373

Compromise of illegal claim—effect. A compromise in the amount of a claim which a municipal corporation has no legal authority to pay in any amount affords no consideration for the agreement to pay the lesser sum.

Love v City, 210-90; 230 NW 373

Prohibited express contract excludes implied. Absolute lack of authority in a municipality to enter into an express contract relative to a given subject matter necessarily excludes the possibility of an implied contract on the same subject matter.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Implied contracts. A city may, in the absence of a prohibiting statute, validly enter into an implied contract for the grading of its streets preparatory to the construction of permanent sidewalks.

Carlson v City, 212-373; 236 NW 421

Unallowable implied contract. Inasmuch as a city has no statutory authority to expressly contract for a rental for the use of its streets, there can be no implied contract that a telephone company will pay reasonable rental for the space occupied by its equipment in such streets.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

Void contract—nonliability of city as on implied contract. A municipal contract for the repair of a street improvement is void when entered into in disregard of the statute requiring competitive bidding. And after it is decreed that special assessments on benefited property may not be levied, the contractor or his assignee may not, on the theory of an implied contract, recover against the city in its corporate capacity, either at law or in equity (1) for the contract price, or (2) for the reasonable value of the materials and labor furnished under the void contract and retained by the city.

Johnson Bk. v City, 212-929; 231 NW 705; 237 NW 507; 84 ALR 926

Paving contract—contractor's duty to investigate statutory prerequisites. Sound public policy requires a contractor proposing performance of construction work for a city, to ascertain whether the council has sufficiently complied with statutory prerequisites so as to possess power to execute the proposed contract.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

Illegal reimbursement of contractor for loss. A municipal corporation can be given by the general assembly no constitutional legal authority to pay or contract to pay its contractor, after performance of a contract and after settlement therefor, an added sum to reimburse the contractor for loss sustained by him because the federal government commandeered him and his equipment as a war measure, and thereby delayed the performance of the contract in question.

Love v City, 210-90; 230 NW 373

Modification of contract without competitive bidding. A city which has so breached a valid paving contract that the contractor is under no duty to perform, may, without submitting the matter to competitive bidding, validly contract in good faith with the contractor for reasonably enlarged compensation (to be paid from the general fund) as a consideration for the performance of the contract notwithstanding the breach, and the execution of the contract on such basis is beyond attack.

Des Moines v Horrabin, 204-683; 215 NW 967

Public improvements—void contract—sweeping deprivation of rights. A contract for the repair or reconstruction of a street pavement, entered into in total disregard of the mandatory statute requiring competitive bidding (§6004, C., '31), is void ab initio, and, if performed it follows as a matter of public policy and irrespective of the motives of the parties:

1. That special assessments may not be legally levied to defray the cost of such performance, and

2. That the contractor may not, either, (1) on the theory of a contract implied in fact, or (2) on the theory of quasi contract or contract implied in law (unjust enrichment), recover against the city for the expenditures made by him even tho all profit be excluded therefrom.

Especially is the foregoing true when the record reveals a contract manipulation which emits an unmistakable odor of fraud and evasion.

Horrabin Co. v Creston, 221-1237; 262 NW 480

Public improvements—assessments—failure to substantially perform contract—effect. The appellate court will not invalidate an entire assessment for paving because of the non-fraudulent failure of the contractor to substantially comply with the construction of some minor part of the work, i. e., a 6- or 8-inch longitudinal expansion joint along the curb; nor will the court attempt to readjust the assessment because of such default when the record contains no data from which such readjustment can be intelligently arrived at.

Cardell v Perry, 201-628; 207 NW 775

Public improvements—unauthorized contracts. A judicial holding that municipal warrants issued for the erection of a municipal waterworks are void because the erection had not been authorized by the voters is necessarily a holding that the contract under which the warrants are issued is also void.

Roland Co. v Carlisle, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Public improvements—void warrants—legalizing act—construction. A legalizing act purporting to legalize specified void municipal warrants then in litigation, but which act was held in said litigation inapplicable to said warrants because of a proviso in said act that it should not affect pending litigation, is not subject to the construction in later litigation that the act is applicable to the extent of legalizing the contract under which said former warrants were issued even tho the warrants were not legalized.

Roland Co. v Carlisle, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Paving—suing city on express contract—other theories excluded. Where a holder of invalid paving assessment certificates elects to base his recovery solely on an express written contract, no question of estoppel, waiver, ratification, or accord and satisfaction is involved.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

Contracts in general—officers—limitation on power—dealing at peril. One contracting with a municipal corporation is bound to take notice of limitations on the power of the particular officers to make such contract.

Doonan v Winterset, 224-365; 275 NW 640

Watchman—nonauthority to appoint. A mayor of a town has no authority, in the absence of an ordinance so empowering him, to contract for and appoint a night watchman for the municipality—a limitation on the authority of the mayor of which all persons must take notice. (§5634, C., '35.)

Peterson v Panora, 222-1236; 271 NW 317

Employees—salary deficiency—payment by overdraft on different fund. A town marshal employed at a sum fixed by ordinance, but paid each month only a part of that sum from the general fund, may not recover the difference between this sum and the rate fixed by ordi-

II. CONTRACTS IN GENERAL—conclud'd nance when he had in fact been paid this difference by an overdraft on the waterworks fund. No supplemental contract of any validity may be inferred from the town so acting contrary to statute.

Clark v Goldfield, 224-1012; 278 NW 341

Council—mayor not member—no vote on contract. Where the four members of a city council vote two in favor of and two against employing a superintendent of the municipal power plant, under a statute requiring a majority vote of the members elected to the council, a contract employing such superintendent entered into after the mayor votes "yes" by virtue of a statute giving him the right to vote in case of a tie, is not a binding contract on the city, the mayor not being a member of the council.

Doonan v Winterset, 224-365; 275 NW 640

Power to bind future councils. A city council, under legislative authority, may validly enter into a contract which will be binding on future city councils.

Iowa-Neb. Co. v Villisca, 220-238; 261 NW 423

Fiscal management — unauthorized debt — curing illegality in contract. Any invalidity in a contract for the construction of a street improvement arising from the fact that the contract contains a clause which might be construed as imposing on the city an absolute indebtedness beyond its legal power to contract is cured by the act of the city council and its contractor in mutually agreeing, before any part of the contract has been performed, that said clause should be deemed wholly eliminated, and by the subsequent execution of said contract in strict accord with said agreement and the statute.

Waller v Pritchard, 201-1364; 202 NW 770

Right of taxpayer to question municipal action. A plaintiff has no standing to enjoin a city from entering into a contract for the construction of an electric lighting system to be paid for by special assessments, unless he alleges and proves that, in some specified way, he will be adversely affected by such proposed contract, e. g., (1) that he owns property which will be specially assessed, or (2) that he is a taxpayer and must contribute to the improvement fund from which payment of a deficit must be made.

Donovan Co. v City, 211-506; 231 NW 499

Power to acquire property—burden of proof. A municipality as defendant in an action for specific performance of its alleged contract for the purchase of land, has the burden to establish its plea that its attempted purchase of said land was for a purpose not authorized by law. Record reviewed and held said burden had not been met.

Golf View Co. v City, 222-433; 269 NW 451

III TORTS

Officers and agents—personal liability for misfeasance. A public officer, while traveling upon the public highway in the performance of a governmental function, in the sense that he is attempting to reach a point where he can actually perform and consummate such function, is under the same duty to exercise care, and subject to the same liability for want of such care, as any other citizen.

Rowley v Cedar Rapids, 203-1245; 212 NW 158; 53 ALR 375; 34 NCCA 464

Officers and agents—pleading ministerial character of acts. A petition for damages against a municipality because of the wrongful acts of municipal agents and employees is demurrable unless the petition alleges such facts as show that the acts complained of were corporate or ministerial (the only acts for which the municipality would be liable), and not governmental.

Rowley v Cedar Rapids, 203-1245; 212 NW 158; 53 ALR 375; 34 NCCA 464

Attractive nuisance—basis of theory. In this state, the doctrine of attractive nuisance has its foundation in an implied invitation of the landlord on the theory that the temptation of an attractive plaything to a child of tender years is equivalent to an express invitation to an adult.

Harriman v Afton, 225-659; 281 NW 183

Attractive nuisance—limited applicability. The attractive nuisance doctrine applies only to children at an age where they are incapable of appreciating the dangers incidental to the instrumentality in question, and while not necessarily inapplicable to a boy of 13, yet cannot be extended to a situation where a boy 13 years old is drowned after jumping into the water from a raft on a city reservoir, and the evidence shows he was aware of the dangers involved.

Harriman v Afton, 225-659; 281 NW 183

Park instrumentality—attractive nuisance. A combined "teeter-totter and merry-go-round" erected and maintained in a city park by the city through its park board, for the sole purpose of amusing children, cannot be deemed an attractive nuisance, even tho said instrumentality is not kept in repair.

Smith v Iowa City, 213-391; 239 NW 29; 34 NCCA 468; 34 NCCA 553; 3 NCCA (NS) 432

Pool of water not "attractive nuisance". A small, but deep and unguarded, pond or pool of water, permitted to form at the outlet of a municipal storm-water sewer, will not be deemed an "attractive nuisance", within the law of negligence.

Raeseide v Sioux City, 209-975; 229 NW 216; 30 NCCA 299; 2 NCCA(NS) 734

Requirements for attractive nuisance. To come within the doctrine of attractive nuisance, an instrumentality must be both attractive and dangerous. A raft maintained by a city on its reservoir for the purpose of measuring the depth of water cannot be deemed a dangerous instrumentality per se.

Harriman v Afton, 225-659; 281 NW 183

Torts—city reservoir and raft thereon—attractive nuisance doctrine not applicable. Neither a reservoir maintained by a city on private ground isolated from any public place or playground nor a raft thereon, capable of supporting a man, used to measure the water depth, being inherently an attractive nuisance, a combination of the two will not invoke a different rule.

Harriman v Afton, 225-659; 281 NW 183

Legislative change in classification of police patrol—effect on governmental exemption. While the motor vehicle act, C., '24, classified a "police patrol" as a "nonmotor vehicle," the later legislative classification of "police patrols" as "motor vehicles" was not intended to deprive a municipality of its exemption from liability for damages consequent on the negligent operation of a city-owned police patrol as a governmental agency.

Leckliter v Des Moines, 211-251; 233 NW 58

Condition of building—trespasser. A municipality is not liable in damages to a person who is injured in a municipal market place by falling through an open manhole while he is on an errand distinctly personal to himself, and not as a customer of the market, and when the manhole is located at a place where he is neither expected nor invited to be.

Knote v Des Moines, 204-948; 216 NW 52

Negligent maintenance of public park. A city in exercising its governmental power through a park board to acquire and maintain public parks is not liable in damages consequent on the negligent failure to keep the instrumentalities in said parks in repair; nor are the members of the park board individually liable for such nonfeasance on their part.

Smith v Iowa City, 213-391; 239 NW 29; 34 NCCA 468; 34 NCCA 553; 3 NCCA(NS) 432

Sidewalks and intersections—different degree of care. The standard of care that a city owes to a pedestrian in respect to a sidewalk differs from the degree owed where an intersection is involved.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Defects in streets—notice—evidence. A city sued for alleged neglect to maintain its streets may show the date when notice of the injury was served upon it.

Smith v Sioux City, 200-1100; 205 NW 956

Law of case—defect in street. A holding on appeal that a certain defect in a public street was not of such nature as to charge the municipality with negligence is the law of the case on retrial on substantially the same evidence. (See Annos. under §12871.)

Norman v Sioux City, 200-1343; 206 NW 112

Ice on sloping portion of sidewalk—recovery refused on evidence and trial theory. In an action by a pedestrian against a city to recover for personal injuries received from fall on sidewalk where it is shown that pedestrian slipped on smooth, slippery ice, unaffected by artificial causes, on sloping portion of a sidewalk which was lifted by the roots of a tree, the refusal to permit a recovery on either of the following grounds of alleged negligence, to wit, (1) in failing to remove ice, or (2) in failing to repair slope in sidewalk, without the concurrence of the other, was not error under the evidence and the trial theory of plaintiff, consequently, the court could not properly submit such propositions to the jury as independent grounds of negligence.

Leonard v Muscatine, 227-1381; 291 NW 446

Instructions on trial theory—nonduty of court on other theories and necessity of requests. In an action by pedestrian who fell on ice which had formed on a sloping portion of sidewalk, an instruction to jury requiring, as prerequisite to recovery, a finding of knowledge or constructive notice by city of icy condition of sidewalk, was not erroneous where plaintiff failed to request an instruction that such notice was unnecessary, where action was tried on theory expressed in the instruction. A trial court is not required to instruct on theory not in the case as tried, and appellant, who invited instruction given and failed to request different instruction, could not, on appeal, complain of such instruction.

Leonard v Muscatine, 227-1381; 291 NW 446

Torts—cause of loss of rentals—construction work (?) or business depression (?). Question as to whether rentals from property are lost because of construction of a bridge and new creek channel by a city, which construction occasioned some inconvenience to tenants in egress or ingress to the property, or because of depression in business conditions, is a question for the jury.

Edmond v Sioux City, 225-1058; 283 NW 260

Torts—storm waters into sanitary sewer—negligence—jury question. A city has the duty to maintain its sanitary sewer with ordinary care and prudence and, where the city diverts storm waters into a sanitary sewer designed for a certain capacity, a jury might find the city negligent, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of damage from overflow due to the inability of the sewer to handle the increased flowage.

III TORTS—concluded

Wilkinson v Indianola, 224-1285; 278 NW 326

Surface waters—increased flowage consequent on nonnegligent execution of expert plans. Damages to a property owner from an increased flowage of water consequent on the nonnegligent execution of concededly expert plans for paving and surface-water intakes therein, and for curbing, is damnum absque injuria, especially when the damage occurs at the converging point of natural watercourses.

Cole v City, 212-1270; 232 NW 800

Temporary obstruction of access to property—damages. Conceding that a city in changing the course of a stream may, temporarily, substantially obstruct a property owner's access to his property, without liability in damages, yet the maintenance of such obstruction for two years is per se not a temporary obstruction, and evidence tending to exculpate the city is inadmissible.

Graham v Sioux City, 219-594; 258 NW 902

5739 Nuisances—action to abate.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 307; '38 AG Op 408

Obstruction of street. An obstruction of a street or highway is a nuisance.

Pederson v Radcliffe, 226-166; 284 NW 145

Alley—vacating by ordinance—invalidity for nondescription. An ordinance to vacate an alley is invalid insofar as it affects a certain block in the city plat not mentioned nor described in the ordinance.

Pederson v Radcliffe, 226-166; 284 NW 145

Gasoline service station. Principle reaffirmed that the location and regulation of gasoline service stations are clearly within the police powers of municipal corporations.

Yeanos v Oil Co., 220-1317; 263 NW 834

Filling stations—nuisance per se—no presumption on appeal. A court will not assume that a gasoline filling station is a nuisance per se nor that it will be installed in such a manner as to be a nuisance in fact.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

Gasoline service station—evidence. A gasoline service station located in a city is not a nuisance per se. Evidence reviewed and held the station in question was not a nuisance in fact.

Yeanos v Oil Co., 220-1317; 263 NW 834

Storage of gasoline—vested right. A person who has the right, under an ordinance, to store gasoline in a certain quantity without a permit from the city, and the right to store gasoline in excess of said quantity only with such permit, and who is refused a permit for such excess storage, does not, by thereafter erecting his storage tanks, acquire a vested right to store gasoline in said lesser quantity without a permit. In other words, the ordinance may validly be amended by reducing the quantity which may be stored without a permit.

5741 Smoke.

Federal constitution. So far as the federal constitution is concerned, the state may, by itself or through authorized municipalities, declare the emission of dense smoke in cities a nuisance and subject to restraint as such; and the harshness of such legislation, or its effect upon business interests, short of a merely arbitrary enactment, are not valid constitutional objections.

Northwestern Laundry v City, 239 US 486

5743 Power to regulate and license.

Reasonableness of ordinances. See under §5714

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 64; '38 AG Op 238

Unreasonableness per se. Under statutory authority "to regulate and license" sales by transient merchants, an ordinance which empowers the mayor not only to fix the license fee at any sum from $5.00 to $100.00 per day, but also the tenure of the license, is per se arbitrary, unreasonable, and void.

Creston v Mezvinsky, 213-1212; 240 NW 676

5744 Power to restrain and prohibit.

Reasonableness of ordinances. See under §5714

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 396

5745 Power to regulate, license, or prohibit.

Dogs and licensing thereof. See chapter 276
Reasonableness of ordinances. See under §5714

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 61; '34 AG Op 72, 187; '36 AG Op 311, 493

Taxation under power to regulate or license. Statutory power in a city to regulate or license a business does not embrace the power to tax the business; and the court will be quick to note whether the revenue derivable is out of proportion to the expense entailed by the regulations; also whether the language of the ordinance purporting to be a police measure is but a subterfuge to hide an actual purpose to tax.

Edwards v Sioux City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Restricted residence districts—discrimination—exemption to existing business. An ordinance establishing a restricted residence district and prohibiting the subsequent erection and maintenance therein of gasoline filling stations without a permit is not unconstitutional because the ordinance exempts from its operation an already established and maintained gasoline filling station.

Marquis v Waterloo, 210-439; 228 NW 870

Filling station permit—ordinance amending restricted district. Under a restricted residence district ordinance, a city council may issue a permit for erection of a gasoline filling station on certain lots without a separate ordinance to remove the particular lots from the restricted district.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

Necessity for ordinance. The statutory power granted cities and towns "to limit the number of, regulate, license, or prohibit" gasoline curb pumps in streets, must be exercised under a duly enacted ordinance.

Lamoni v Smith, 217-264; 251 NW 706

Enjoining maintenance of nuisance. A gasoline pump erected in the parking of a public street is not only an "incumbrance" on the street, but, when erected without legal authority, is ipso facto a nuisance and, because of the mandatory duty of the municipality to keep its streets free from nuisances, is enjoivable by the city or town.

Lamoni v Smith, 217-264; 251 NW 706

Filling stations—nuisance per se—no presumption on appeal. A court will not assume that a gasoline filling station is a nuisance per se nor that it will be installed in such a manner as to be a nuisance in fact.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

5746 Power to establish and regulate.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 644; '38 AG Op 63; AG Op Feb. 8, '39

Negligence—depositing refuse on city dump. A person who deposits, on dump grounds provided by a city, discarded materials containing acid or capable of generating acid by a process of decomposition, becomes, henceforth, a stranger to such materials. In other words, he cannot be deemed negligent, toward persons frequenting said grounds, either in making the original deposit or in leaving it unguarded on the grounds.

Cabrnosh v Penick & F., 218-972; 252 NW 88

Boy drowning in swimming pool at boys' camp—owners of pool—liability. In an action to recover damages for the drowning of an 11-year-old boy who was attending an outing camp, where the camp director had arranged with the Red Cross to provide two swimming instructors and life guards to be on duty at a specified time to protect about 100 boys at the camp, and when the corporation operating the swimming pool took no part in arranging for life guards, it was not, under the circumstances, negligent in presumably admitting the decedent to the pool a few moments in advance of the time fixed for the entire group and in advance of supervision by the Red Cross instructors and life guards.

Hecht v D. M. Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Drowning in swimming pool—failure to advise as to depth—signs. A corporation, operating a swimming pool in which an 11-year-old boy drowned, was not negligent in not personally informing the deceased of the depth of the water in the pool and in failing to inquire of him as to whether he could swim, where there were many signs, plainly visible about the pool indicating the various depths, and the age, intelligence, and experience of the deceased were sufficient to advise him of the inherent dangers of entering a body of water deeper than his height, especially when he was under the supervision of adults who had more direct and complete control over him than the agents and employees operating the pool.

Hecht v D. M. Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Swimming pool not an "attractive nuisance". A swimming pool, either natural or artificial, is not an attractive nuisance.

Hecht v D. M. Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Drowning in swimming pool—life guards—sufficiency. Negligence of a corporation operating a swimming pool in which an 11-year-old boy drowned, could not be grounded upon lack of sufficient attentive life guards, where it had one competent guard who never left his post at the deep water end and no showing was made as to need for more guards and none of the many bathers saw the drowning; and where most of the bathers, including the deceased, were in special groups which had competent life guards and other adult attendants for their own special protection.

Hecht v D. M. Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Swimming pool—drowning—res ipsa loquitur—nonapplicability. The mere fact a person drowns in a swimming pool does not of itself establish negligence on the part of the proprietor under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Hecht v D. M. Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Swimming pool proprietors—degree of care required. The general rule that the proprietor of a bathhouse or swimming pool for profit is bound to use ordinary care to guard against injury to his patrons held applicable to non-profit corporation operating a swimming pool.

5747 Dairy herds and milk.

Sale of milk—incidental powers. The statutory power of cities and towns "to establish and enforce sanitary requirements for the production, handling, and distribution of milk" (and certain milk products) necessarily embraces the power to create, by ordinance, all reasonable administrative machinery for specifically exercising said general power. For example, the ordinance may validly make the legal sale of said products dependent on the seller obtaining a municipal permit, provided the refusal of the permit be not arbitrary.

5752 Drainage preserved.

Increased flowage consequent on nonnegligent execution of expert plans. Damages to a property owner from an increased flowage of water consequent on the nonnegligent execution of concededly expert plans for paving and surface-water intakes therein, and for curbing, is damnum absque injuria; especially when the damage occurs at the converging point of natural watercourses.

5756 Building code.

Wrongful exercise of judicial function. A city is not liable for damages consequent on the wrongful attempt of the city council to revoke a permit granted by it for the erection of a store building; nor are the individual members of the council liable for such damages, it appearing that they acted in good faith but under a misapprehension of their legal power. (See Annos. under §5738.)

Rehmann v City, 204-798; 215 NW 957; 55 ALR 430; 34 NCCA 480

"Construction" as imposing continuous duty. An ordinance which requires all rain spouts on buildings to be so "constructed" that water will not be cast upon sidewalks imposes a continuing duty upon the property owner—a duty not only to "construct" the spouting as required but to maintain the spouting in such required condition.

Updegraff v City, 210-382; 226 NW 928

Prohibiting erection of building. The legislative grant of power to regulate the erection of buildings does not embrace the power to prohibit the erection of buildings, and the power to prohibit will not be deemed supplied because of the existence of the power in other statutes (Chs 324, 325, C., '27), of which the city has never availed itself.

Downey v City, 208-1273; 227 NW 125

Illegal building permit—nonestoppel to question. The holder of an illegal building permit may not, in an action by injured property owners to restrain operations under the permit, successfully contend that his permit is beyond judicial cancellation because he has already expended a substantial sum in reliance on said permit.

Zimmerman v O'Meara, 215-1140; 245 NW 715

Building permit for dog hospital—revocability. A duly issued building permit is more than a mere "license", and after a building permit is issued under a city's zoning ordinance to a veterinary surgeon who made full disclosure to the city of his plans to build a "dog hospital", with his own living quarters on the second floor, in a "hospital" zoned district, and after the building inspector consulted the city attorney, and after veterinary surgeon had spent considerable money toward constructing the building, an order revoking the permit was illegal and reviewable by certiorari.

Crow v Board, 227-324; 288 NW 145

Unpermitted furnace installation—lawful and unlawful acts—performance—effect. A contract to install an oil burner, being a lawful act, is not rendered void on account of a failure to first secure an installation permit required by a city ordinance, inasmuch as this wrongful omission, not inhering in the contract, does not make an otherwise valid contract void. A distinction exists between doing a per se unlawful and prohibited thing, and doing a lawful thing in a prohibited manner.

Keith Co. v Mac Vicar, 225-246; 280 NW 496

Performance of illegal contract—recovery thereunder barred. A contract to do an illegal act, which cannot be performed without violating the constitution, a constitutional statute or ordinance, is illegal and void, even in some cases when no penalty is provided for the violation.

5760 Fires — electric apparatus — fire limits.

Fire proof construction — unallowable restriction. Statutory authority to municipalities to prohibit the erection of buildings unless the outer walls be made of "brick, iron, stone, mortar, or other noncombustible materials", will not authorize an ordinance which prohibits the erection of outer walls unless made of "brick and mortar or of iron and stone and mortar"—in other words, an ordinance which excludes the right to use "other noncombustible materials".

Boehner v Williams, 213-578; 239 NW 545

Parties—municipal property owner. A property owner who owns property adjacent to a building being erected in violation of a town ordinance relating to constructions within the fire limits of the town, has such interest as will entitle him to an injunction against the erection and maintenance of such building.

5761 Electric installation.

Trespassers and "attractive nuisances". An owner of property may so negligently use it as to become liable in damages for a resulting injury to a trespasser. A jury question, both as to negligence and contributory negligence, is presented by testimony tending to show that an owner, without full compliance with city ordinance requirements, erected and maintained, on his own uninclosed, populously surrounded, and promiscuously frequented premises, which abutted upon an uninclosed and much frequented public park and fishing resort, a pole with a ladder thereon in the form of spikes driven therein, and with a crossarm on the pole, some 25 feet from the ground, carrying wires heavily charged with electricity, and that a trespassing boy of 14 years of age, and of ordinary intelligence, climbed the pole and, upon reaching the crossarm, was killed by an electric shock.

5762 Fire protection.

Taxation under power to regulate or license. Statutory power in a city to regulate or license a business does not embrace the power to tax the business; and the court will be quick to note whether the revenue derivable is out of proportion to the expense entailed by the regulations; also whether the language of the ordinance purporting to be a police measure is but a subterfuge to hide an actual purpose to tax.

Edwards v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Gasoline service station. Principle reaffirmed that the location and regulation of gasoline service stations are clearly within the police powers of municipal corporations.

Yeanos v Oil Co., 220-1317; 263 NW 834

Gasoline service station—evidence. A gasoline service station located in a city is not a nuisance per se. Evidence reviewed and held the station in question was not a nuisance in fact.

Yeanos v Oil Co., 220-1317; 263 NW 834

Penal ordinance void for uncertainty. An ordinance which requires storage tanks for inflammable oils and the accessories of such tanks to "be kept and operated in compliance with law, the building code, and other city ordinances, and in a safe and proper manner, and the same shall not be permitted to become or remain defective, hazardous or dangerous" (sic), and penalizing violations, is void for uncertainty and unenforceability.

Edwards v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Absence of specifications—effect. An ordinance purporting to safeguard the public by regulating storage tanks for inflammable oils must, in order to be valid and enforceable, contain such rules and specifications as will enable the property owner to know, definitely, just what is required of him in order to comply with the ordinance and thereby safeguard himself. It is quite insufficient to enact the dragnet command that said tanks and appurtenant accessories "must be kept and operated in compliance with law, the building code, and other city ordinances, and in a safe and proper manner, and the same shall not be permitted to become or remain defective, hazardous or dangerous".

Edwards v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Arbitrary classification. An ordinance which provides safety regulations over tanks wherein inflammable oils are stored for sale, is null and void when in the same municipality there are large numbers of other tanks identical with those embraced in the ordinance and used for the same purpose except the stored oil is not for sale; especially is this an arbitrary classification when it is made to appear that a material number of the exempted tanks are more dangerous than the tanks to which the ordinance is made applicable.

Edwards v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Regulations—permit required. An ordinance regulatory of inflammable oils may validly prohibit the erection and maintenance within the city of gasoline filling stations unless the city council, in the exercise of its legal discretion, first grants a permit for such erection and maintenance. (§5714, C., '27.)

Cecil v Toenjes, 210-407; 228 NW 874

Permits—failure to specify rules. An ordinance, regulatory of inflammable oils, which prohibits the erection and maintenance of gasoline filling stations without a permit therefor will not be deemed unreasonable, uncertain, and arbitrary because the ordinance fails to contain rules and regulations or any specified plan under which such permit can be obtained.

Cecil v Toenjes, 210-407; 228 NW 874

Storage of gasoline—vested right. A person who has the right, under an ordinance, to store gasoline in a certain quantity without a permit from the city, and the right to store gasoline in excess of said quantity only with such permit, and who is refused a permit for such excess storage, does not, by thereafter erecting his storage tanks, acquire a vested right to store gasoline in said lesser quantity without a permit. In other words, the ordinance may validly be amended by reducing the quantity which may be stored without a permit.

Clinton v Donnelly, 203-576; 213 NW 262

Regulation—nonarbitrary action. Record reviewed and held affirmatively to show that the action of a city council in refusing a permit for a gasoline filling station was not arbitrary.

Cecil v Toenjes, 210-407; 228 NW 874
Marquis v City, 210-439; 228 NW 870

Mandamus—nonavailability of writ. Mandamus will not lie to compel a city council to grant a permit for the erection and maintenance of a gasoline filling station when the council, in the exercise of its legal discretion, has refused such permit.

Due process—ordinance requiring weighing of loads. A municipal ordinance requiring that merchandise sold in load lots by weight for delivery within the city be weighed by a public weighmaster whose certificate stating the gross, tare, and net weight must be delivered to the purchaser, such ordinance, altho it necessitates that a person trucking coal into the city unload and reload, is not so unreasonable as to violate the due process clause of the constitution.

5769 Wharves, docks, and piers.

Paramount right of state. The construction by the state of a wharf below high watermark on a navigable lake (to the bed of which the state has title), in aid of navigation, and without compensation to the riparian owner, is but the exercise of a right and the execution of a trust which is paramount to any right of ingress and egress of said riparian owner.

Peck v Const. Co., 216-519; 245 NW 131; 89 ALR 1132

Wharf—what constitutes. The character of a public wharf in a navigable lake as an aid to navigation is not negated by the fact that the wharf is in good faith so constructed in a circular form that vehicles going upon the wharf may conveniently turn and depart therefrom.

CHAPTER 292.1

PERSONAL SERVICE TRADES

5786.1 Emergency and purpose declared.

Prohibited laws—emergency—effect. No legislative declaration or recital of the existence of an emergency can justify the enactment of a statute which is clearly prohibited by the constitution. So held as to an act fixing prices.

Duncan v Des Moines, 222-218; 268 NW 547

5786.3 Application for ordinance.

Regulation of business—price fixing. Legislative authority to municipalities to adopt ordinances which provide for "fair competition" in personal service trades—trades in which services are rendered upon the person of an individual without necessarily involving the sale of merchandise—cannot constitutionally embrace authority to include in such ordinances a provision fixing the minimum price which may be charged for said services, because neither the state nor the municipality has constitutional power to fix such charges in view of amendment 14, federal constitution and of Art. I, §9, Constitution of Iowa. So held as to the business of barbering. And this is true tho the trade in question be subject to the police power of the state.

CHAPTER 293.1

PERMANENT PARK BOARDS

5813.1 Applicability of chapter.

Applicability of act. A title which recites that the act "creates a park board in cities having a population of 125,000 or more" sufficiently indicates that the act is designed to apply to cities subsequently acquiring the required population.

State v Darling, 216-553; 246 NW 390; 88 ALR 218

Class legislation—classification based on population. The general assembly may constitutionally make a law applicable to cities having a certain population and not applicable to cities having a lesser population, provided the subject matter of the law suggests some reasonable necessity for said distinction. So held in sustaining the constitutionality of an act providing for the government and management of municipal parks by a park board of ten members.

State v Darling, 216-553; 246 NW 390; 88 ALR 218

Class legislation—general and local acts contrasted. Assuming that a supportable reason exists for classifying on the basis of population, a statute applicable to cities "now or hereafter having a population of" a named number, cannot be deemed "a local or special law" even tho when enacted it can apply to only one city, and even tho the creation of the official machinery for putting the act into effect in cities thereafter attaining said population is only implied.

State v Darling, 216-553; 246 NW 390; 88 ALR 218

Illegal interference with management and control. An act creating an appointive board and empowering it to manage and govern the numerous public parks of a city does not constitute an invalid interference with the right of the city to manage and control its own proprietary interests, it appearing that all of said parks, with three exceptions, were open to the public without charge, while, as to said three parks, a charge was made for the use of certain particular conveniences.

5813.6 Powers and duties.

Right of self-government. A statute which creates an appointive board and invests it with power to manage and govern the parks of certain cities, and to this end to expend the public revenues appropriated therefor, but with no power to levy or collect such revenues, is not violative of any right of municipal self-government.

Conveyances in lieu of condemnation. A deed given to a railroad for a strip of land to be used as a right of way, and deeds of a like kind, given by the landowner when condemnation may be imminent if he refuses to convey, should be given such liberal construction as will effectuate the intention of the parties and fully protect the rights of the grantor and his assigns.

Keokuk County v Reinier, 227-499; 288 NW 676

5899.18 Condemnation of property by commission.

ELECTRIC UTILITIES AND MOTORBUS LINES

5904 Regulations.

Rates in special charter cities. See under §6817, Vol I

Ordinance—construction—franchise (?) or regulation (?). Ordinance construed in the light of its terms and of the facts attending its enactment, and held, to constitute a franchise to the grantee therein named to operate a telephone exchange, and not to constitute a mere regulatory ordinance imposing a license fee on said business.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

Perpetual franchise—grantees. A telephone company which, prior to October 1, 1897 (when the Code of 1897 took effect), had constructed a toll line and local telephone system in a city or town, thereby acquired a perpetual legislative franchise subject to the reserved power of the state, and said franchise necessarily passes to the holder's grantee.

Osceola v Utilities, 219-192; 257 NW 340

Unallowable implied contract. Inasmuch as a city has no statutory authority to expressly contract for a rental for the use of its streets, there can be no implied contract that a telephone company will pay reasonable rental for the space occupied by its equipment in such streets.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

Enjoining unauthorized maintenance of wires. The maintenance of electric transmission lines across the streets and alleys of a city or town without a franchise right so to do, constitutes not only a nuisance, but a trespass upon the property of the municipality, and may be enjoined by the municipality, irrespective of the fact whether it has been damaged by such maintenance.

Ackley v Elec. Co., 204-1246; 214 NW 879; 54 ALR 474

5905 Franchise—election.

Franchise—definition. A franchise is a privilege or authority vested in certain persons by grant of the sovereign, to exercise powers or to do or perform acts which, without such grant, they could not legally do or perform.

Mapleton v Iowa Co., 206-9; 216 NW 683

Franchise ordinance—submission to electors. A proposition to grant a franchise to a private party to operate a telephone exchange, initiated by a city council, necessitates the submission to the voters of the franchise ordinance in literal fullness; otherwise, when the proposition is initiated by the private party through petition of voters.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

Approval by voters of proposed utility franchise does not create franchise. The approval, by a majority vote of the electors of a city or town, of a proposed franchise for the use of the streets by a private public utility, does not create a franchise. Such franchise comes into existence only when the city or town council sees fit, after the favorable vote, to enact, and does enact, such franchise in the form of an ordinance.

Schneiders v Town, 213-807; 234 NW 207

Franchise—intentional abandonment. Evidence held quite insufficient to establish an intention to abandon a legislative-acquired franchise.

Osceola v Utilities, 219-192; 257 NW 340

Incomplete franchise—power of council. Where a proposition relative to the granting of a telephone franchise (initiated by petitions to the council), as submitted to the electors, contained no time limitation on the franchise, the council may validly fix and determine said limitation in the subsequently adopted ordinance.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

Adjudication—mandamus to compel calling of election. A judicial holding to the effect that a petition for the calling of an election to vote on the question of granting an electric light and power franchise was in due form and substance, and that mandamus should issue to compel the calling of such election, is res judicata of a subsequent petition by the same petitioner for the same relief.

Iowa Co. v Tourgee, 208-198; 225 NW 372

When ordinance not necessary. The passage of an ordinance and the printing of the same on the ballots are not necessary in those cases where the proposal to grant a franchise to a private party for the erection and operation of an electric light and power franchise is not initiated by the city or town council, but is initiated by the voters, through a statutory petition addressed to the mayor. (See §6555, C., '27, for law governing certain cities.)

Mapleton v Iowa Co., 206-9; 216 NW 683

"Property owners" defined.

Groenendyke v Fowler, 204-598; 215 NW 718

Rates—nonpower to contract for. A city or town which has not been granted the power to fix rates has no power to contract for rates.

Osceola v Utilities, 219-192; 257 NW 340

5910 Authorization.

Crossings—safe condition controlled by transportation needs. It is the duty of railways and municipalities to keep pace with the changes in transportation methods and to keep highways and railroad crossings in a reasonably safe condition, inasmuch as a type of crossing construction, considered safe when built, might be unsafe for a later changed method of use by the public.

Harris v Railway, 224-1319; 278 NW 338

State commerce commission abandoning overhead crossing—street change resulting—excess of jurisdiction. The state commerce commission has no power to order the abandonment of an overpass or overhead crossing over a railroad in a city or town, which results in altering the streets thereof. Jurisdiction of its streets is a city function which may not be invaded by the state commerce commission, regardless of its good-faith motives, and certiorari will lie to prevent such invasion.

Huxley v Conway, 226-268; 284 NW 136

5913 Procedure.

I WHARVES

Wharf—what constitutes. The character of a public wharf in a navigable lake as an aid to navigation is not negatived by the fact that the wharf is in good faith so constructed in a circular form that vehicles going upon the wharf may conveniently turn and depart therefrom.

Peck v Const. Co., 216-519; 245 NW 131; 89 ALR 1132

Construction of wharf—paramount right of state. The construction by the state of a wharf below high-water mark on a navigable lake (to the bed of which the state has title), in aid of navigation, and without compensation to the riparian owner, is but the exercise of a right and the execution of a trust which is paramount to any right of ingress and egress of said riparian owner.

Peck v Const. Co., 216-519; 245 NW 131; 89 ALR 1132

II ESTABLISHMENT OF STREETS

Implied contracts. A city may, in the absence of a prohibiting statute, validly enter into an implied contract for the grading of its streets preparatory to the construction of permanent sidewalks.

Carlson v City, 212-373; 236 NW 421

Change of grade—validity of ordinance. The court cannot say that an ordinance is so arbitrary and unreasonable as to be void per se when it provides for the widening of a street and for a 4-foot change of grade thereon for a distance of some 400 feet, even tho it be conceded that the present grade is far less than other heavily traveled streets on which no change is proposed.

Des M. Ry. v City, 205-495; 216 NW 284

Slope of alley—city not insurer of pedestrian's safety. In action by pedestrian injured by a fall in alley intersection, where city was charged with negligence in paving alley with too steep a slope, the degree of safety to pedestrian is concededly lessened, but pedestrian still owes to himself the duty of exercising ordinary care, and the city's duty is of like character, i.e., such care as characterizes an ordinarily prudent person. In no instance is the city an insurer of the pedestrian's safety.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Increased flowage consequent on nonnegligent execution of expert plans. Damages to a property owner from an increased flowage of water consequent on the nonnegligent execution of concededly expert plans for paving and surface-water intakes therein, and for curbing, is damnum absque injuria; especially when the damage occurs at the converging point of natural watercourses.

Cole v City, 212-1270; 232 NW 800

Vibrolithic pavement—smoothness inherent in construction—nonliability of city. In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained in fall on paving, evidence that the paving was a "vibrolithic" type composed of granite and concrete chips, that the pavement was dry, that there had been no rain or mist, and that there was no foreign substance on the paving does not present a question for the jury on issue of city's negligence in construction, even tho the pavement was "pretty smooth", the smoothness being a quality inherent in the material.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Construction of alley—slope—negligence of city. In determining negligence of city in constructing alley intersection with a steep grade, evidence that the paving sloped 7½ inches in the first 3 feet, 2 inches in the next foot, and 1½ inches in the remaining 4 feet to the center of the intersection, held, not to constitute jury question when the drop and slope were necessary to provide a sufficient means of escape for the surface water.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Power to contract for paving—statutory compliance mandatory. A city council has power to enter into a contract to pave streets and pay the cost either entirely from the general fund, or partly therefrom and partly by levy of special assessments, but, before it may lawfully so contract, it must comply with the necessary statutory provisions.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

Paving contract—contractor's duty to investigate statutory prerequisites. Sound public policy requires a contractor, proposing performance of construction work for a city, to ascertain whether the council has sufficiently complied with statutory prerequisites so as to possess power to execute the proposed contract.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

Street improvements—railroad crossing construction—council's power to require—findings—conclusiveness. Since character and extent of street improvements are within responsible discretion of city authorities and because city council's determination of question of desirability of proposed improvements is conclusive except for want of authority or fraud, and where ordinance granting franchise to railroad gave city council authority to require construction of crossing, damage claim for refusal to construct crossing could not be maintained by owner seeking access to property, when owner instead of requesting council to direct railroad to build crossing merely made such request by personal letter to railroad official.

Call Bd. & Mtg. v Railway, 227-142; 287 NW 832

Torts—injuries from street defects—plans by competent engineer—nonliability. Where a person is thrown against the top of an automobile while crossing a certain type of open

II ESTABLISHMENT OF STREETS—concluded

gutter in a street, constructed according to plans, even tho faulty, of a competent engineer, there is no liability on the municipality because in adopting such plans it is exercising its discretion and acting in a governmental capacity, unless it can be said, as a matter of law, that the plans adopted were obviously defective. Evidence held to establish that certain open gutters in street were reasonably safe for traffic at lawful speeds.

Dodds v West Liberty, 225-506; 281 NW 476

Adoption of engineer's plans—nonliability for tort unless obviously defective. In adopting plans for pavement of alley intersection, the city was acting in a "judicial capacity" and was not liable for defects in engineer's plans unless as a matter of law the plans were obviously defective.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Engineer's plans accepted by city—no obvious defects—no imputation of negligence. Where engineer's plans for paving alley were not obviously defective in failing to show grade of alley, and the work was done in accordance with the plans, no negligence in adopting the plans can be imputed to the city, since engineering expertness is not within the province of the council members, and a lack of such expertness is the reason for employing a competent engineer and relying on his ability and plans for the construction of the improvement.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

State commerce commission abandoning overhead crossing—street change resulting—excess of jurisdiction. The state commerce commission has no power to order the abandonment of an overpass or overhead crossing over a railroad in a city or town, which results in altering the streets thereof. Jurisdiction of its streets is a city function which may not be invaded by the state commerce commission, regardless of its good-faith motives, and certiorari will lie to prevent such invasion.

Huxley v Conway, 226-268; 284 NW 136

Conveyance of title after acceptance and vacation. In an action involving the title to a strip of land which had once been part of a street between town lots, it made no difference whether such street had ever been accepted by the town and opened for public use and later vacated and conveyances of the land made by the town, so long as a question of acquiescence and adverse possession was the decisive issue between the claimants.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

III SALE AND DISPOSAL OF STREETS

IV VACATION

Discussion. See 2 ILE 32—Abutter's right in a street

Vacating alley—adjoining owner's rights. Action by city in vacating alley and conveying it to grantee, who closed the alley by fencing it as a part of his adjoining land, which still gave adjoining property owner ingress and egress to his property at both front and rear, and where only interference with public right was use of alley by children going to and from school, was not an abuse of city's discretion, and such action did not deprive such adjoining property owner of convenient and reasonable access to and from his property or its use.

Stoessel v Ottumwa, 227-1021; 289 NW 718

Streets—conveyance of title after acceptance and vacation. In an action involving the title to a strip of land which had once been part of a street between town lots, it made no difference whether such street had ever been accepted by the town and opened for public use and later vacated and conveyances of the land made by the town, so long as a question of acquiescence and adverse possession was the decisive issue between the claimants.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

Arbitrarily vacating street to make defense to injunction. In an action to enjoin a town from maintaining a nuisance in a street or alley by allowing an adjoining owner to fence and use the street or alley, the action of the town council in arbitrarily vacating the street and the alley, without regard to the interests of the public, for the obvious purpose of creating a defense to the injunction suit, will be declared invalid.

Pederson v Radcliffe, 226-166; 284 NW 145

Temporary obstruction of access to property—damages. Conceding that a city in changing the course of a stream may, temporarily, substantially obstruct a property owner's access to his property, without liability in damages, yet the maintenance of such obstruction for two years is per se not a temporary obstruction, and evidence tending to exculpate the city is inadmissible.

Graham v Sioux City, 219-594; 258 NW 902

Judicial review—extent. Cities and towns possess a wide, tho not unlimited, discretion in opening, controlling and vacating streets and alleys, and courts will not interfere except in a clear case of arbitrary and unjust exercise of such power.

Stoessel v Ottumwa, 227-1021; 289 NW 718

5939 Acceptance of dedication.

Dedication and acceptance. See under §6277

Streets—conveyance of title after acceptance and vacation. In an action involving the title to a strip of land which had once been part of a street between town lots, it made no difference whether such street had ever been accepted by the town and opened for public use and later vacated and conveyances of the land made by the town, so long as a question of acquiescence and adverse possession was the decisive issue between the claimants.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

Torts—unsafe place in partially opened street—instructions. Reversible error results from submitting whether a city was negligent in not filling depressions and tamping soft places in a street (1) when, owing to an unusual unfitness of the street for travel, the city had opened it only to the extent of a narrow roadway and there is no evidence that the failure to fill and tamp said opened roadway was the cause of the injury, and (2) when, under the evidence, the injury may have occurred at a place in the street where the city was under no duty to fill and tamp—at a place which the city had never assumed to put in condition for use.

5940 Optional payments.

Power to contract for paving—statutory compliance mandatory. A city council has power to enter into a contract to pave streets and pay the cost either entirely from the general fund, or partly therefrom and partly by levy of special assessments, but, before it may lawfully so contract, it must comply with the necessary statutory provisions.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

Modification of contract without competitive bidding. A city which has so breached a valid paving contract that the contractor is under no duty to perform, may, without submitting the matter to competitive bidding, validly contract in good faith with the contractor for reasonably enlarged compensation (to be paid from the general fund) as a consideration for the performance of the contract notwithstanding the breach; and the execution of the contract on such basis is beyond attack.

5942.1 Acquisition of lands.

Materially destroying access to property. A substantial interference by a city with access to property by means of a public street constitutes a taking of private property for public use, even tho no part of the physical property of the property owner is taken, and the city must respond in damages for such taking.

Nalon v Sioux City, 216-1041; 250 NW 166

5942.2 Plat and schedule—resolution of necessity.

Justifiable inclusion of "adjacent" property. In designating an improvement district for the purpose of defraying the cost of establishing and opening a municipal street, the council may legally include as "adjacent" land property which will receive special benefits by reason of the improvement, e. g., greater convenience of access to the property and a centralization and stabilization of business in the immediate locality where the property is situated; and it is immaterial in such case that the property is situated a substantial distance from the street in question, to wit, some 2,000 feet.

5942.3 Levy—certificates or bonds.

Pro rata payment nonpermissible. Where a special assessment fund was insufficient to pay in full all outstanding street improvement bonds which had been issued so that each series would mature successively over a period of years, such insufficiency did not affect the order of payment, and therefore the bondholders were not entitled to payment from the fund on a pro rata basis, but only in the order each series matured.

I CONTROL IN GENERAL

Rights, powers, duties, and liabilities—motives immaterial when following lawful procedure. The motives of public officials when proceeding according to law, to submit the question of municipal ownership of a public utility, are not fit subjects for judicial inquiry.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Dual functions of government. The functions of a municipality are two-fold; one is governmental, and the other, proprietary and quasi private. Lighting its streets is governmental, and selling electricity to individual users is proprietary.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Contract to light streets not subject to vote. Cities and towns may contract for lighting streets and alleys under section 5949, C., '35, without submitting the contract to a vote of the people for approval.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Franchise not prerequisite to street lighting contract. The fact that a power company had a franchise and had established poles and lines in the streets to transmit electricity does not preclude the company from maintaining such poles and wires, after the franchise has expired, in order to fulfill its contract to furnish street lights to the city because a franchise is not a prerequisite to a city or town contracting to light its streets.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Use of public places—expired franchise—unexpired street light contract—poles in streets lawful. Electric company's occupancy of town streets to supply street lighting under a valid contract is not a trespass nor a nuisance merely because its franchise has expired.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Expired franchise—service furnished and suit maintained thereafter. A privately owned public utility must after expiration of its franchise continue under contract or otherwise supplying electricity to a city until some other source is available, but its use of the city streets may be discontinued after reasonable notice, and the expiration of the franchise will not prevent it from maintaining an action to enjoin the establishment of a municipal light plant, nor need special personal damages be shown as a condition therefor.

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Unallowable implied contract. Inasmuch as a city has no statutory authority to expressly contract for a rental for the use of its streets, there can be no implied contract that a telephone company will pay reasonable rental for the space occupied by its equipment in such streets.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

"Construction" as imposing continuous duty. An ordinance which requires all rain spouts on buildings to be so "constructed" that water will not be cast upon sidewalks imposes a continuing duty upon the property owner—a duty not only to "construct" the spouting as required but to maintain the spouting in such required condition.

Updegraff v City, 210-382; 226 NW 928

Village streets. All highways appearing on a village plat become streets and belong to the municipality as soon as legal incorporation is effected.

Ackley v Elec. Co., 206-533; 220 NW 315

Dedicating part of street to travel—effect. A city or town has the right to divide a street and to set apart a certain part thereof for vehicular traffic, and when it does so, the part thus dedicated to that purpose is the part which falls within the provisions of the statute that the city or town must use reasonable diligence to keep the same free from obstructions and pitfalls.

Morse v Town, 213-1225; 241 NW 304

Excluding travel from street. A city has no legal right to exclude ordinary travel from a public street in order that the street may be used exclusively for coasting.

Dennier v Johnson, 214-770; 240 NW 745

Arbitrarily vacating street to make defense to injunction. In an action to enjoin a town from maintaining a nuisance in a street or alley by allowing an adjoining owner to fence and use the street or alley, the action of the town council in arbitrarily vacating the street and the alley, without regard to the interests of the public, for the obvious purpose of creating a defense to the injunction suit, will be declared invalid.

Pederson v Radcliffe, 226-166; 284 NW 145

Deed—effect as to subsequently laid out streets. An ordinary railroad right of way deed simply grants to the railroad an easement, and works no impediment to the vesting in a municipality, subject to such easement, of streets subsequently laid out across such right of way; and especially so when the railroad company acquiesces in and recognizes the statutory dedication to the public.

Ackley v Elec. Co., 206-533; 220 NW 315

II LIABILITY IN GENERAL

Liability to pedestrians—precedents of little value. Principle reaffirmed that in determining municipality's liability for injuries to pedestrian, precedents are of little value, each case must be determined upon its own peculiar facts.

Hoffman v Sioux City, 227-1131; 290 NW 62

Rule of care. Principle reaffirmed that the obligation of a city or town to exercise reasonable diligence to maintain its streets in a reasonably safe condition extends, not merely to the surface of the walk, but to those things within its control which endanger the safety of people properly using the walk.

Krska v Town, 200-594; 203 NW 39; 37 NCCA 440

City's liability—degree of care required. Liability of a municipal corporation for injuries arising from defects or obstructions in the streets is for negligence only, and the city is not liable for consequences which could not have been foreseen, but is required to exercise ordinary or reasonable care to maintain its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition.

Bird v Keokuk, 226-456; 284 NW 438

Slope of alley—city not insurer of pedestrian's safety. In action by pedestrian injured by a fall in alley intersection, where city was charged with negligence in paving alley with too steep a slope, the degree of safety to pedestrian is concededly lessened, but pedestrian still owes to himself the duty of exercising ordinary care, and the city's duty is of like character, i.e., such care as characterizes an ordinarily prudent person. In no instance is the city an insurer of the pedestrian's safety.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Defects in streets or highway—liability—jury (?) or law (?) question. In determining municipality's liability for injuries from defective streets or highways, if reasonable or prudent men could reasonably differ as to whether accident could and should have been reasonably anticipated from the existence of the defect, then the case is generally one for the jury, but if careful or prudent men would not reasonably anticipate any danger from the existence of the defect, but still an accident happens which could have been guarded against, the question of liability is one of law.

Bird v Keokuk, 226-456; 284 NW 438

Torts—street defects—actual or constructive notice—reasonable care duty. City streets need not be kept in a condition of absolute safety so as to insure the safety of travelers, but it must use ordinary care, and as a prerequisite to liability it must have actual notice of a dangerous defect, or the condition must have existed a sufficient time to enable the city, using ordinary care, to discover and repair the same.

Thomas v Fort Madison, 225-822; 281 NW 748

Torts—injuries from street defects—plans by competent engineer—nonliability. Where a person is thrown against the top of an automobile while crossing a certain type of open gutter in a street, constructed according to plans, even tho faulty, of a competent engineer, there is no liability on the municipality because in adopting such plans it is exercising its discretion and acting in a governmental capacity, unless it can be said, as a matter of law, that the plans adopted were obviously defective. Evidence held to establish that certain open gutters in street were reasonably safe for traffic at lawful speeds.

Dodds v West Liberty, 225-506; 281 NW 476

Engineer's opinion on construction of approach to sidewalk. A municipality is not bound to construct an approach from street to sidewalk differently because some engineer other than its own thought some other method would be better, so where a pedestrian, who was familiar with such approach, who admitted that there was plenty of room for a pedestrian to pass on meeting two other pedestrians in broad daylight, and who without thought or attention stepped off approach and fell, such pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery for personal injuries.

Hoffman v Sioux City, 227-1131; 290 NW 62

Unallowable defense. The dangerous condition of the streets of a city cannot be excused on the plea that the street funds are overdrawn.

Thompson v City, 212-1348; 237 NW 366

Private road—nonliability of city. A city is not legally responsible for the condition of a road located by private parties for their own convenience diagonally and haphazardly across unoccupied platted lots, and connecting with two public streets, even tho at one time the city, by a small amount of labor, smoothed down said road at its junction with one of the public streets, and even tho the city, in improving its public street, removed dirt in a material amount from said road at said junction point and failed to barricade said private way.

Archip v City, 213-1198; 241 NW 300

Duty to repair sidewalk. A city is under a duty to repair its defective sidewalk, and the claim in such case that the city was originally under no obligation to build the walk is quite immaterial.

Thompson v City, 212-1348; 237 NW 366

Vibrolithic pavement—smoothness inherent in construction—nonliability. In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained in fall on paving, evidence that the paving was a "vibrolithic" type composed of granite and concrete chips, that the pavement was dry, that there had been no rain or mist, and that there was no foreign substance on the paving does not present a question for the jury on issue of

II LIABILITY IN GENERAL—concluded city's negligence in construction, even tho the pavement was "pretty smooth", the smoothness being a quality inherent in the material.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Condition of title irrelevant. In an action for damages consequent on the defective condition of a sidewalk where it crosses an alley, it is wholly irrelevant that the title of the city to the alley was defective.

Thompson v City, 212-1348; 237 NW 366

Nonliability for negligence in constructing culvert in town street. The statutory duty of a town to keep its streets free from nuisances is not interrupted or suspended during the time when the county under an arrangement with the town is engaged in constructing a culvert in a street which is a continuation of a county road outside the town; and the county is under no legal obligation to reimburse the town for any sum voluntarily paid by it in settlement of suits, jointly against the town and county, for damages consequent on persons driving into an unguarded excavation made by the county authorities while constructing the culvert.

Norwalk v County, 210-1262; 232 NW 682

Unguarded street set aside for coasting. A city which temporarily sets aside a public street for coasting purposes is not liable in damages for an injury resulting to a person so using the street, from his coming in contact with an automobile which the city had failed to exclude from the street.

Harris v City, 202-53; 209 NW 454; 46 ALR 1429; 26 NCCA 753

Permitting discharge of fireworks, etc. A city or town is not liable for damages to a pedestrian consequent on the discharge on the public streets of explosives attending a Fourth of July celebration.

Reinart v Town, 210-664; 231 NW 326

Felling tree into street. A city is not liable in damages consequent on the act of a property owner or his contractor in felling into a street a tree standing in the parking; in other words, the city is not liable because of its failure to exercise its governmental power to police the street at the place and time when the tree was felled,—it knowing that the property owner intended to cut and fell said tree.

Armstrong v Waffle, 212-335; 236 NW 507

Claim of undue submission of issues. A preliminary recital in the language of an unquestioned pleading, of an issue of negligence in maintaining a sidewalk, which embraces statements of the method by which and the source from which the alleged nuisance was created on the walk, reveals no error when the definite legal issue was alone actually submitted to the jury.

Fosselman v City, 211-1213; 233 NW 491

Instructions—hopeless conflict. An instruction from which the jury would be wholly unable to determine whether a city was bound to maintain a reasonably safe traveled way to the full width of the street, or to the full width of the graded portion of the street, is prejudicially erroneous.

Morse v Town, 213-1225; 241 NW 304

Instructions — nonapplicability. Reversible error results from instructing a jury that plaintiff, in an action against a city for damages consequent on a defect in a sidewalk, need not show that the city had actual knowledge of the defect if the defect resulted from the original defective construction of the walk, when neither pleading nor evidence presented such issue.

Ritter v City, 212-564; 234 NW 814

III NUISANCES IN GENERAL

Nuisance—essential elements. In order that a construction or erection may properly be classified as a nuisance, there must be something in its nature and in its relation to its surroundings and to the use of such surroundings which foreshadows dangerous possibilities. So held as to a fountain in a public park.

Hensley v Town, 203-388; 212 NW 714; 34 NCCA 559; 3 NCCA(NS) 438

Attractive nuisance. A small, but deep and unguarded pond or pool of water, permitted to form at the outlet of a municipal storm water sewer, will not be deemed an "attractive nuisance" within the law of negligence.

Raeside v City, 209-975; 229 NW 216

See Cox v Elec. Co., 209-931; 229 NW 244; 36 NCCA 160

Torts — park instrumentality as nuisance. A combined "teeter-totter and merry-go-round" erected and maintained in a city park by the city through its park board, for the sole purpose of amusing children, cannot be deemed an attractive nuisance, even tho said instrumentality is not kept in repair.

Smith v Iowa City, 213-391; 239 NW 29; 34 NCCA 468, 553; 3 NCCA(NS) 432

Attractive nuisance — basis of theory. In this state, the doctrine of attractive nuisance has its foundation in an implied invitation of the landlord on the theory that the temptation of an attractive plaything to a child of tender years is equivalent to an express invitation to an adult.

Harriman v Afton, 225-659; 281 NW 183

Cornice on building as nuisance. Evidence that a building built flush with the street line was surmounted by a cornice which overhung the street for a material distance and which for several years, through some defect, cast water upon the sidewalk, and at times caused a dangerous accumulation of ice on the sidewalk, furnishes ample basis for a jury finding that the city had not and was not keeping its street free from nuisance.

Wright v A. & P. Tea Co., 216-565; 246 NW 846; 32 NCCA 509

Nuisances—obstruction of street. An obstruction of a street or highway is a nuisance.

Pederson v Radcliffe, 226-166; 284 NW 145

Enjoining maintenance of nuisance. A gasoline pump erected in the parking of a public street is not only an "incumbrance" on the street, but, when erected without legal authority, is ipso facto a nuisance and, because of the mandatory duty of the municipality to keep its streets free from nuisances, is enjoined by the city or town.

Lamoni v Smith, 217-264; 251 NW 706

IV NEGLIGENCE OF CITY IN GENERAL

Sidewalks and intersections—different degree of care. The standard of care that a city owes to a pedestrian in respect to a sidewalk differs from the degree owed where an intersection is involved.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Negligence—degree of care required. Liability of a municipal corporation for injuries arising from defects or obstructions in the streets is for negligence only, and the city is not liable for consequences which could not have been foreseen, but is required to exercise ordinary or reasonable care to maintain its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition.

Bird v Keokuk, 226-456; 284 NW 438

Adoption of engineer's plans—nonliability unless obviously defective. In adopting plans for pavement of alley intersection, the city was acting in a "judicial capacity" and was not liable for defects in engineer's plans unless as a matter of law the plans were obviously defective.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Slant in pavement. The fact that a street pavement, as it approached a manhole, was on a slant of four inches in three feet affords, in itself, no basis for a charge of negligence against the city.

Corbin v City, 207-1168; 224 NW 828

Tolerating nondangerous condition. An injured person who establishes that the hole or depression in which she fell, and over which she had repeatedly passed, during many months, was not dangerous, is in no position to claim that the city was negligent in knowingly permitting the nondangerous defect to exist.

Geringer v Town, 203-41; 212 NW 365

Trespasser. A municipality is not liable in damages to a person who is injured in a municipal market place by falling through an open manhole while he is on an errand distinctly personal to himself, and not as a customer of the market, and when the manhole is located at a place where he is neither expected nor invited to be.

Knote v City, 204-948; 216 NW 52

Streets—danger in close proximity to sidewalk—guard rails. Where six year old child had to climb over a solid steel girder 34 inches high, located between the sidewalk and the opening in the bridge through which she fell, and the opening being only 3 or 3½ inches at its top and 10 inches at the bottom, there was no dangerous place in such "close proximity" to sidewalk as to imperil use and require guard rails, and no reasonably prudent man would have anticipated that even a child would have climbed over the guard rail and fallen through the opening.

Bird v Keokuk, 226-456; 284 NW 438

City's negligence—guarding against accidents. In action by next friend to recover for child's injuries in falling through opening in bridge when opening was so narrow that it was seemingly impossible for child to fall through it, the city could not be charged with negligence for failure to guard against such a rare, unexpected, and unforeseeable accident.

Bird v Keokuk, 226-456; 284 NW 438

Sidewalk defect—city's negligence—jury question—evidence sufficiency. Where a woman sustains injuries by falling on pavement at intersection, when her heel caught in crevice, between the sidewalk and curb, as she stepped off sidewalk, a jury question on the liability of the city was created under evidence showing the injuries were sustained in nighttime while plaintiff was slowly and carefully walking in a strange part of city, and when this condition of the street had been created by the city ten years before and never remedied, altho considered so unsafe by pedestrians in neighborhood that beaten paths were formed on either side in avoiding it.

Thomas v Fort Madison, 225-822; 281 NW 748

Construction of alley—slope—negligence of city. In determining negligence of city in constructing alley intersection with a steep grade, evidence that the paving sloped 7½ inches in the first 3 feet, 2 inches in the next foot, and 1½ inches in the remaining 4 feet to the center of the intersection, held, not to constitute jury question when the drop and slope were necessary to provide a sufficient means of escape for the surface water.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Ice on sloping portion of sidewalk—recovery refused on evidence and trial theory. In an action by a pedestrian against a city to recover for personal injuries received from fall on sidewalk where it is shown that pedestrian slipped on smooth, slippery ice, unaffected by artificial causes, on sloping portion of a sidewalk which was lifted by the roots of a tree, the refusal to permit a recovery on either of the following grounds of alleged negligence, to wit, (1) in failing to remove ice, or (2) in failing to repair slope in sidewalk, without the concurrence of the other, was not error under the evidence and the trial theory of plaintiff, consequently, the court could not properly submit such propositions to the jury as independent grounds of negligence.

IV NEGLIGENCE OF CITY IN GENERAL —concluded

Leonard v Muscatine, 227-1381; 291 NW 446

V OBSTRUCTIONS, ELEVATIONS, DEPRESSIONS, AND EXCAVATIONS

Liability to pedestrians—precedents of little value. Principle reaffirmed that in determining municipality's liability for injuries to pedestrian, precedents are of little value. Each case must be determined upon its own peculiar facts.

Hoffman v Sioux City, 227-1131; 290 NW 62

Depression in sidewalk with ice therein. It is reversible error to grant a new trial because the court had omitted to submit to the jury the question whether the city was negligent in permitting an alley crossing to remain in a slightly sunken, saucer-shaped condition, and in permitting water to accumulate in the depression and to freeze in a smooth condition, such acts, if done, not being such as to render the city liable in case of an accident.

Turner v City, 210-458; 229 NW 229; 37 NCCA 524

Stepping into depressed street. A pedestrian on a public street who steps from a sidewalk into the street proper at a place other than at a crossing, without in any manner giving heed to the distance from the top of the sidewalk to the level of the street pavement, is guilty of negligence.

Corbin v City, 207-1168; 224 NW 828

Engineer's opinion on construction of approach to sidewalk. A municipality is not bound to construct an approach from street to sidewalk differently because some engineer other than its own thought some other method would be better, so where a pedestrian, who was familiar with such approach, who admitted that there was plenty of room for a pedestrian to pass on meeting two other pedestrians in broad daylight, and who without thought or attention stepped off approach and fell, such pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery for personal injuries.

Engineer's plans accepted by city—no obvious defects—no imputation of negligence.

Where engineer's plans for paving alley were not obviously defective in failing to show grade of alley, and the work was done in accordance with the plans, no negligence in adopting the plans can be imputed to the city, since engineering expertness is not within the province of the council members, and a lack of such expertness is the reason for employing a competent engineer and relying on his ability and plans for the construction of the improvement.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Dangerous depression in walk. A jury question on the issue of actionable negligence is presented by evidence tending to show that a city had for some two years allowed a portion of a block of cement on a sidewalk to remain in a sunken condition of from 1¼ to 2¼ inches below the level of the abutting blocks, and that, on the edge of this sunken condition, but on a level with the abutting blocks, there existed a rough, protruding, and overhanging slab of cement under which the toe of a foot might be caught.

Howard v City, 206-1109; 221 NW 812

Unseen depression. A pedestrian who, in an ordinary way, walks along a cement sidewalk over which he had not passed for about two years prior thereto, is not guilty of negligence per se because he did not see a depression of some two inches in the walk and other conditions which rendered the depression possibly dangerous.

Howard v City, 206-1109; 221 NW 812

Defective sidewalk—duty to see defect. A person is not exercising reasonable care, as a matter of law, when, immediately after emerging from a store, she walks directly across an 8-foot cement sidewalk, of which she had a general knowledge, and fails to see that the extreme inner edge of the walk, elevated some 8 inches above the vehicular part of the street, has been broken away for a distance of some 30 inches, and to an irregular depth not exceeding 8 inches, when the unobscured opening is directly in front of her, and when she is walking under perfect conditions of weather, light, and sight, and attended by no mental abstraction except a voluntary conversation with her companion.

Seiser v Redfield, 211-1035; 232 NW 129

Negligence—jury question. Evidence relative to an unguarded and unlighted excavation in a public street reviewed, and held to present jury questions on the issues of negligence of both plaintiff and defendant.

Smith v Town, 202-300; 207 NW 340

Unsafe place in partially opened street. Reversible error results from submitting whether a city was negligent in not filling depressions and tamping soft places in a street (1) when, owing to an unusual unfitness of the street for travel, the city had opened it only to the extent of a narrow roadway and there is no evidence that the failure to fill and tamp said opened roadway was the cause of the injury, and (2) when, under the evidence, the injury may have occurred at a place in the street where the city was under no duty to fill and tamp—at a place which the city had never assumed to put in condition for use.

McKeehan v City, 213-1351; 242 NW 42

Proximate cause of injury — intervening cause—legal measure of. The proximate cause of a collision between motor vehicles on a public street may be the defective condition which the city has long permitted to exist in a portion of its street, provided said condition, in view of all the relevant facts, was such as to reasonably charge the city with knowledge that some accident would probably result therefrom to motor vehicles and to the occupants thereof traveling over said defect. Phrased otherwise, where a city has long maintained in and on one side of its street a defect of such nature that an automobile passing over the defect was thereby swerved out of its course and onto the opposite side of the street where it collided with another vehicle properly moving in the opposite direction, the city cannot properly contend that said collision was an independent, intervening and efficient cause which prevented the negligence of the city from being the proximate cause of the resulting injuries, when the jury might justly find that said defect, in view of all the relevant facts, was such as to reasonably charge the city with knowledge that some accident would probably result therefrom to motor vehicles and to the occupants thereof traveling over said defect.

Gray v Des Moines, 221-596; 265 NW 612; 104 ALR 1228

Instructions on trial theory—nonduty of court on other theories and necessity of requests. In an action by pedestrian who fell on ice which had formed on a sloping portion of sidewalk, an instruction to jury requiring, as prerequisite to recovery, a finding of knowledge or constructive notice by city of icy condition of sidewalk, was not erroneous where plaintiff failed to request an instruction that such notice was unnecessary, where action was tried on theory expressed in the instruction. A trial court is not required to instruct on theory not in the case as tried, and appellant, who invited instruction given and failed to request different instruction, could not, on appeal, complain of such instruction.

Leonard v Muscatine, 227-1381; 291 NW 446

Aerial obstructions—justifiable assumption. The operator of a truck along a public street has a right, in the absence of actual knowledge to the contrary, to assume that the street is free from aerial obstructions which may strike the top of his vehicle, e. g., a guy wire stretched across the street from a nearby building in process of construction. And especially is this true when the surface of the street along which the driver is moving is badly cluttered up with building material.

Hatfield v Freight Co., 223-7; 272 NW 99

Enjoining unauthorized maintenance of wires. The maintenance of electric transmission lines across the streets and alleys of a city or town without a franchise right so to do, constitutes not only a nuisance, but a trespass upon the property of the municipality, and may be enjoined by the municipality, irrespective of the fact whether it has been damaged by such maintenance.

Ackley v Elec. Co., 206-533; 220 NW 315

Limb of tree as street obstruction. One who in broad daylight, and without diverting circumstances, drives along a public street with which he is familiar, and permits his vehicle to come in contact with a perfectly visible limb of a tree overhanging the traveled part of the street, is guilty of negligence per se.

Abraham v City, 218-1068; 250 NW 461

Proximate cause. A truck which is legally parked alongside the curb of a public street is not the proximate cause of an injury to a child whose sled was deflected into the truck by a bump in the street.

Dennier v Johnson, 214-770; 240 NW 745; 35 NCCA 717

Temporary obstruction of access to property—damages. Conceding that a city in changing the course of a stream may, temporarily, substantially obstruct a property owner's access to his property, without liability in damages, yet the maintenance of such obstruction for two years is per se not a temporary obstruction, and evidence tending to exculpate the city is inadmissible.

Graham v Sioux City, 219-594; 258 NW 902

VI SNOW AND ICE

Negligence. The act of a city in leaving snow upon its streets for a period of four days after it had first melted and then frozen into a rough and irregular condition constitutes negligence.

Tollackson v City, 203-696; 213 NW 222; 37 NCCA 527

Care of vehicular part of street. A city is not negligent in failing to remove snow and ice naturally accumulating on that part of a public street designed for ordinary vehicular travel. If the accumulation is consequent on some defect in the construction of the street at the point of injury, the injured plaintiff must so show.

Workman v Sioux City, 218-217; 253 NW 909

VI SNOW AND ICE—concluded

proof that an entire city had for several weeks been covered by successive snow falls which had become packed and congealed into a blanket of ice between the curb lines, and that during said times vehicular travel had worn abrupt and dangerous ruts into such ice to a depth of from 7 to 10 inches, and that a person alighting from a street car fell into one of said ruts and was severely injured.

Ritchie v Des Moines, 211-1026; 233 NW 43

Burden of proof. An injured person suing for damages consequent upon the dangerous condition of ice and snow on a public street between the curb lines has the burden of proof to show what reasonable action the city might have taken to avoid the said dangerous condition.

Ritchie v Des Moines, 211-1026; 233 NW 43

Ice on sloping portion of sidewalk—recovery refused on evidence and trial theory. In an action by a pedestrian against a city to recover for personal injuries received from fall on sidewalk where it is shown that pedestrian slipped on smooth, slippery ice, unaffected by artificial causes, on sloping portion of a sidewalk which was lifted by the roots of a tree, the refusal to permit a recovery on either of the following grounds of alleged negligence, to wit, (1) in failing to remove ice, or (2) in failing to repair slope in sidewalk, without the concurrence of the other, was not error under the evidence and the trial theory of plaintiff, consequently, the court could not properly submit such propositions to the jury as independent grounds of negligence.

Leonard v Muscatine, 227-1381; 291 NW 446

Unknown recent formation. A city may not be held liable for injury consequent on a fall on an icy sidewalk covered with snow when the ice had formed so recently prior to the accident that no one knew of its existence,—not even plaintiff until he fell.

Wilson v City, 204-1183; 216 NW 698; 37 NCCA 515

Change of temperature—effect. Principle recognized that, when cold weather follows the depositing of moisture on a walk, causing a film of ice to form, which is practically impossible to remove, the city may wait for a change of temperature to remedy the condition, without being subject to the charge of negligence.

Burke v Town, 207-585; 223 NW 397

Defects or obstructions in streets. When negligence is predicated on the unsafe condition of a path made by the town authorities through the snow on a crosswalk, evidence tending to show that said path never was safe necessarily presents a jury question.

Beardmore v New Albin, 203-721; 211 NW 430; 37 NCCA 528

Icy condition of walk—negligence per se. Evidence that a person, on emerging from a building, stepped carefully upon the sidewalk because he knew of the icy and slippery condition of the walk, and that he fell, upon taking the first step, does not per se disclose contributory negligence.

Fosselman v Dubuque, 211-1213; 233 NW 491

Ice-incrusted walk. A pedestrian may, by his testimony as to the manner in which he walked along a rough, ice-incrusted, and dangerous walk, create a jury question on the issue of his contributory negligence.

Burke v Town, 207-585; 223 NW 397; 37 NCCA 522

Rough and uneven ice—instructions. Instructions held to confine the jury strictly to the proposition that plaintiff could recover for an injury only in case he established that the ice in question on the public street had become rough and uneven.

Casper v City, 213-69; 238 NW 591

Instructions on trial theory—nonduty of court on other theories and necessity of requests. In an action by pedestrian who fell on ice which had formed on a sloping portion of sidewalk, an instruction to jury requiring, as prerequisite to recovery, a finding of knowledge or constructive notice by city of icy condition of sidewalk, was not erroneous where plaintiff failed to request an instruction that such notice was unnecessary, where action was tried on theory expressed in the instruction. A trial court is not required to instruct on theory not in the case as tried, and appellant, who invited instruction given and failed to request different instruction, could not, on appeal, complain of such instruction.

Leonard v Muscatine, 227-1381; 291 NW 446

Instructions. Instructions reviewed, and held to state correctly the liability of the city for the accumulation of snow and ice upon the public streets.

Smith v City, 200-1100; 205 NW 956; 37 NCCA 511

Torts—failure to sand and gravel. It is a jury question whether a city was negligent in not spreading sand and gravel over a street crossing which, for several days, by the falling and melting and freezing of snow thereon, and by the travel thereover, had become rough and uneven and corrugated with ice, when the city had, at the time, provided itself with said materials for said purpose and with employees to do and perform the work.

Staples v Spencer, 222-1241; 271 NW 200

VII NOTICE OR KNOWLEDGE OF DEFECT

(a) IN GENERAL

Defect in street—knowledge by city all-essential to liability. In an action against a city for damages for personal injury consequent on a defect in wooden steps maintained by the city in a public street, failure to prove that the city had either actual or constructive knowledge of the defect is fatal to plaintiff's right to recover.

Jeffers v Sioux City, 221-236; 265 NW 521

Notice of defect—inadequate instruction. Instructions which might lead the jury to understand that a plaintiff had a right to recover without proof of knowledge, on the part of the city, of the defect in question, constitute reversible error.

Jensen v Magnolia, 219-209; 257 NW 584

Constructive notice. A city must be held, as a matter of law, to have at least constructive notice of a defect in a public street when such defect had openly and visibly existed for a period of two years.

Howard v City, 206-1109; 221 NW 812

Notice—jury question. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether the city had actual notice of the rough and uneven condition of snow and ice on a public street for some four days prior to an accident; likewise whether the city had constructive notice of such condition for a somewhat longer period.

Casper v City, 213-69; 238 NW 591

(b) EVIDENCE

City's liability for nuisance continued over period of years. Evidence that a building built flush with the street line was surmounted by a cornice which overhung the street for a material distance and which for several years, through some defect, cast water upon the sidewalk, and at times caused a dangerous accumulation of ice on the sidewalk, furnishes ample basis for a jury finding that the city had not and was not keeping its street free from nuisance.

Wright v A. & P. Tea Co., 216-565; 246 NW 846; 32 NCCA 509

VIII CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

(a) IN GENERAL

Knowledge generally. The court cannot say that an injured party was negligent per se because she had, generally speaking, been long familiar with all the streets of the municipality, when she was aged, did not know of the particular defect in the street which caused her injury, and when, just prior to the accident, her mind was excusably diverted from the walk in question.

Greenlee v City, 204-1055; 216 NW 774

Choosing imprudent way—effect. The doctrine that a pedestrian may, under some circumstances, be deemed negligent in traveling a path which it is imprudent to travel, necessarily can have no application when the traveler had no knowledge of any defect in the way traveled by him.

Greenlee v City, 204-1055; 216 NW 774

Torts—obstructions in street. Evidence reviewed relative to the act of plaintiff (injured by coming in contact with a wire stretched across a public street) in running, in semi-darkness, along the street and outside a crowded sidewalk, in order to reach shelter from a sudden and rapidly gathering thunder-storm, and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.

Cuvelier v Dumont, 221-1016; 266 NW 517

(b) KNOWLEDGE OF DANGER

Knowledge of danger. Use of a walk by a pedestrian, with knowledge that it is in an unsafe condition, is not, in and of itself, sufficient to constitute contributory negligence.

Tollackson v City, 203-696; 213 NW 222

Knowledge of danger. A pedestrian who attempts to pass over an abrupt decline, known to be dangerous, in a public street, in the belief that he can do so in safety, will be deemed guilty of negligence per se, in the absence of any showing of acts of care on his part.

Lundy v City, 202-100; 209 NW 427

Knowledge of obstructions. A pedestrian who, on a dark and rainy night, passes over a parking in a public street in close proximity to a pile of broken cement, with full knowledge of the presence of such obstruction and of its dangerous character, and is injured by stumbling over a detached piece of the cement, is guilty of contributory negligence per se when it appears that a very slight deviation in his course would have placed him in a zone of perfect safety.

Roppel v City, 208-117; 224 NW 579

Duty to see defect. A person is not exercising reasonable care as a matter of law when, immediately after emerging from a store, she walks directly across an eight foot cement sidewalk, of which she had a general knowledge, and fails to see that the extreme inner edge of the walk, elevated, some eight inches above the vehicular part of the street, had been broken away for a distance of some thirty inches and to an irregular depth not exceeding eight inches, when the unobscured opening is directly in front of her, and when she is walking under perfect conditions of weather, light, and sight, and attended by no mental abstraction except a voluntary conversation with her companion.

Seiser v Town, 211-1035; 232 NW 129

Nondiverting circumstance. The fact that an injured pedestrian forgot that an obstruction was in his pathway is not a diverting circumstance which will relieve him from re-responsibility for the knowledge which he did have.

Davis v City, 209-1324; 230 NW 421

Attempt to use known defective walk. Mere knowledge of a pedestrian that a walk was defective does not establish negligence in attempting to use it, especially when the walk had undergone severe usage since he last saw it.

Thompson v City, 212-1348; 237 NW 366

Icy condition of walk—negligence per se. Evidence that a person on emerging from a building stepped carefully upon the sidewalk because he knew of the icy and slippery condition of the walk, and that he fell upon taking the first step, does not per se disclose contributory negligence.

Fosselman v City, 211-1213; 233 NW 491

Passing along known slippery sidewalk. A pedestrian is not guilty of negligence per se in attempting to walk along a freshly snow-covered sidewalk bounded by a foot or two of snow, even tho he knows that the walk is rough, uneven, and slippery from an accumulation of ice, when he had prepared his feet with rubbers in order to avoid slipping, and, upon reaching the walk, thoughtfully slackened his speed, and was proceeding cautiously in order to avoid a fall.

Smith v City, 212-1022; 237 NW 330

Negligence per se. A pedestrian who discovers in his pathway on a public sidewalk a substantial obstruction of frozen straw and other refuse and unnecessarily attempts to walk over the same is guilty of negligence per se.

Wells v City, 212-1095; 235 NW 322

IX EVIDENCE

Negligence—noncompetent evidence to excuse. In an action based on alleged negligence in maintaining a sidewalk in front of privately owned property, testimony to the effect that the janitor of the building was under a duty to keep the walk clean is incompetent.

Smith v City, 200-1100; 205 NW 956

X PLEADING AND PROOF

Pleading ministerial character of acts. A petition for damages against a municipality because of the wrongful acts of municipal agents and employees is demurrable unless the petition alleges such facts as show that the acts complained of were corporate or ministerial (the only acts for which the municipality would be liable), and not governmental.

Rowley v City, 203-1245; 212 NW 158; 53 ALR 375; 34 NCCA 464

Defect in street—notice—pleading. In an action in tort against a municipality, a plea that the city had notice of the defect in the street may be adequate tho such plea be subject to a motion for more specific statement.

Jensen v Magnolia, 219-209; 257 NW 584

More specific statement—waiver of error. Error of the trial court in overruling a motion for a more specific statement as to where an accident happened is waived by answering over.

McKeehan v Des Moines, 213-1351; 242 NW 43

Allowable amendment to pleading. Plaintiff in an action for damages consequent on the dangerous condition of a sidewalk pleads no new cause of action by so amending his petition as to amplify the facts which brought about said dangerous condition.

Casper v Sioux City, 213-69; 238 NW 591

Burden of proof. An injured person suing for damages consequent on the dangerous condition of ice and snow on a public street between the curb lines has the burden of proof to show what reasonable action the city might have taken to avoid the said dangerous condition.

Ritchie v City, 211-1026; 233 NW 43

XI LIABILITY OF PROPERTY OWNER OR OTHER WRONGDOER

Property owner. Principle recognized that a property owner may be liable in damages for creating or permitting to exist a nuisance upon a public sidewalk even tho the municipality rests by statute under substantially the same liability.

Updegraff v City, 210-382; 226 NW 928

Tenant. The tenant of a building which abuts upon a public street is not liable for personal injuries resulting to a pedestrian from falling on account of stepping into a one-and-one-half-inch curved depression in the sidewalk adjacent to said building, when said depression was not occasioned by any affirmative act of the tenant, but had, from ordinary travel, been gradually forming through a series of years, it not appearing that the tenant was under any statutory or ordinance duty to repair.

Atkinson v Motor Co., 203-195; 212 NW 484

Governmental employees—personally liable for torts—governmental immunity denied. A governmental employee committing a tortious act which causes injury to another in violation of a duty owed to the injured person, becomes, as an individual, personally liable in damages therefor. (Hibbs v School Dist., 218 Iowa 841, overruled).

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

Shirkey v Keokuk County, 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 150; 287 NW 596

XII PUBLIC GROUNDS IN GENERAL

Negligence—unsupported issue. An unsupported issue of negligence must not be submitted to the jury. So held on the issue whether a city had negligently maintained its dump grounds.

Nichols Co. v Des Moines, 215-894; 245 NW 358

Depositing refuse on city dump. A person who deposits, on dump grounds provided by a city, discarded materials containing acid or capable of generating acid by a process of decomposition, becomes, henceforth, a stranger to such materials. In other words, he cannot be deemed negligent, toward persons frequenting said grounds, either in making the original deposit or in leaving it unguarded on the grounds. But evidence reviewed and held insufficient to sustain plaintiff's action even on a contrary theory.

Cabrnoch v Penick, 218-972; 252 NW 88

5949 Lighting.

Dual functions of government. The functions of a municipality are two-fold: one is governmental, and the other, proprietary and quasi private. Lighting its streets is governmental, and selling electricity to individual users is proprietary.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Contract to light streets not subject to vote. Cities and towns may contract for lighting streets and alleys under this section without submitting the contract to a vote of the people for approval.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Use of public places—expired franchise—unexpired street light contract—poles in streets lawful. Electric company's occupancy of town streets to supply street lighting under a valid contract is not a trespass nor a nuisance merely because its franchise has expired.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Electricity—franchise not prerequisite to street lighting contract. The fact that a power company had a franchise and had established poles and lines in the streets to transmit electricity does not preclude the company from maintaining such poles and wires, after the franchise has expired, in order to fulfill its contract to furnish street lights to the city because a franchise is not a prerequisite to a city or town contracting to light its streets.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

GRADE OF STREETS

5951 Grades and grading.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 746

ANALYSIS

I GRADES IN GENERAL

II LIABILITY OF CITY

I GRADES IN GENERAL

Validity of ordinance. The court cannot say that an ordinance is so arbitrary and unreasonable as to be void per se when it provides for the widening of a street and for a 4-foot change of grade thereon for a distance of some 400 feet, even tho it be conceded that the present grade is far less than other heavily traveled streets on which no change is proposed.

Des M. Ry. v City, 205-495; 216 NW 284

Construction of alley—slope—negligence of city. In determining negligence of city in constructing alley intersection with a steep grade, evidence that the paving sloped 7½ inches in the first 3 feet, 2 inches in the next foot, and 1½ inches in the remaining 4 feet to the center of the intersection, held, not to constitute jury question when the drop and slope were necessary to provide a sufficient means of escape for the surface water.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

II LIABILITY OF CITY

Sidewalks and intersections—different degree of care. The standard of care that a city owes to a pedestrian in respect to a sidewalk differs from the degree owed where an intersection is involved.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Slope of alley—city not insurer of pedestrian's safety. In action by pedestrian injured by a fall in alley intersection, where city was charged with negligence in paving alley with too steep a slope, the degree of safety to pedestrian is concededly lessened, but pedestrian still owes to himself the duty of exercising ordinary care, and the city's duty is of like character, i.e., such care as characterizes an ordinarily prudent person. In no instance is the city an insurer of the pedestrian's safety.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Torts—injuries from street defects—plans by competent engineer—nonliability. Where a person is thrown against the top of an automobile while crossing a certain type of open gutter in a street, constructed according to

II LIABILITY OF CITY—concluded

plans, even tho faulty, of a competent engineer, there is no liability on the municipality because in adopting such plans it is exercising its discretion and acting in a governmental capacity, unless it can be said, as a matter of law, that the plans adopted were obviously defective. Evidence held to establish that certain open gutters in street were reasonably safe for traffic at lawful speeds.

Dodds v West Liberty, 225-506; 281 NW 476

Engineer's plans accepted by city—no obvious defects—no imputation of negligence. Where engineer's plans for paving alley were not obviously defective in failing to show grade of alley, and the work was done in accordance with the plans, no negligence in adopting the plans can be imputed to the city, since engineering expertness is not within the province of the council members, and a lack of such expertness is the reason for employing a competent engineer and relying on his ability and plans for the construction of the improvement.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

Vibrolithic pavement—smoothness inherent in construction—nonliability of city. In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained in fall on paving, evidence that the paving was a "vibrolithic" type composed of granite and concrete chips, that the pavement was dry, that there had been no rain or mist, and that there was no foreign substance on the paving does not present a question for the jury on issue of city's negligence in construction, even tho the pavement was "pretty smooth", the smoothness being a quality inherent in the material.

ANALYSIS

I CHANGE OF GRADE IN GENERAL
II DAMAGES

I CHANGE OF GRADE IN GENERAL

Street railway not "improvement". A street railway is not an "improvement" on the streets of cities and towns, within the meaning of this statute.

Des M. Ry. v City, 205-495; 216 NW 284

II DAMAGES

Accrual of action. An action by a property owner against a city for damages consequent on a long delayed but finally completed street improvement which, while somewhat various in its operations, is one project, and which substantially destroys the owner's means of passing to and from his property, does not accrue until the improvement is completed.

Ashman v City, 209-1247; 228 NW 316; 229 NW 907

Unallowable evidence of damage. In an action for damages consequent on a change of grade in a street, evidence of the cost of entirely rebuilding a building on the property and of the cost of new pavement and new sidewalks is inadmissible.

SIDEWALKS

5962 Permanent sidewalks.

Implied contracts. A city may, in the absence of a prohibiting statute, validly enter into an implied contract for the grading of its streets preparatory to the construction of permanent sidewalks.

Carlson v City, 212-373; 236 NW 421

Sufficient showing of jurisdiction. Jurisdiction to construct a permanent sidewalk, and to assess property therefor is made to appear by unquestioned proof (1) that the city or town council by resolution ordered such construction, and (2) that the mayor later signed the record of such meeting and the resolution, even tho the record fails to show a three-fourths affirmative vote of all members, and fails to show that the yeas and nays were called on the resolution.

Perrott v Balkema, 211-764; 234 NW 240

Necessity—review. Courts may not, in the absence of a plea of fraud or oppression, review the municipal determination that an improvement is necessary.

Brush v Town, 202-1155; 211 NW 856

5963 Objections.

Fatally delayed objection. A property owner may not, after a permanent sidewalk has been fully completed, enjoin the collection of a special assessment on his property on the ground that the sidewalk was constructed by an officer of the city. (§5673, C., '27.)

Perrott v Balkema, 211-764; 234 NW 240

When injunction unallowable. Injunction will not lie to enjoin the collection of a special assessment for a permanent sidewalk when the city or town council had acquired jurisdiction over such construction and assessment, even tho the procedure leading up to such jurisdiction was somewhat indefinite.

Perrott v Balkema, 211-764; 234 NW 240

5964. Payment under waiver.

5966 Certificates of levy—lien.

Tax sales enjoined—error as to non-parties. An injunction restraining tax sales of all property against which special assessment certificate holders had liens was erroneous insofar as it deprived certificate holders, who were not parties to the action and over whom the court had no jurisdiction, of their right to have the property sold to pay the special assessments.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

USE OF STREETS

5970 Conveyances—transportation.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 493

License fees presumptively reasonable. License fees duly fixed by an authorized ordinance will be deemed reasonable unless the contrary appears on the face of the ordinance or on proper evidence.

Towns v City, 214-76; 241 NW 658

Exclusive grant of cab stand privileges. A railway company may grant exclusive rights to a cab stand on its own premises when such grant is not arbitrary or unreasonable.

Red Top Cab Co. v McGlashing, 204-791; 213 NW 791

Municipal license of trucks—nonrepeal by state law. The legislature by the enactment of chapter 252-C1, C., '31 [ch 252.3, C., '39], and thereby requiring of truck operators a privilege or occupation tax when not operating between fixed termini nor over a regular route, on any and all highways of the state, did not impliedly repeal that part of this section which empowers cities and towns to license a truck operator whose business is limited to the municipality—there being no substantial conflict between said statutes.

5972 Flagmen and gates.

City ordinance—lack of relevancy. A city ordinance which requires a railway company, during certain hours, to maintain a flagman at one of its street crossings, is neither relevant nor material when the accident did not occur during said hours, but at a time substantially thereafter.

Miller v Railway, 223-316; 272 NW 96

Absence of flagmen, gates, etc.—effect. The failure of a railway company to maintain flagmen, gates, or warning devices at crossings does not constitute negligence in the absence of proof that the crossing is unusually dangerous and hazardous.

O'Brien v Railway, 203-1301; 214 NW 608

Absence of flagman or signal device—effect. The submission to the jury of the issue of negligence, based on the absence at a railway crossing of a flagman or signaling device, tho not required by ordinance, is justified when the crossing is more than ordinarily dangerous.

Williams v Railway, 205-446; 214 NW 692

Private crossing—nonduty to maintain flagmen. A railroad company is under no obligation to maintain a flagman at a private farm crossing.

Graves v Railway, 207-30; 222 NW 344

Accident at crossing—failure to ring bell. Tho a traveler on a public street has timely knowledge that an engine and a couple of cars are standing immediately outside the curb line of said street, and on a track which crosses said street, yet the failure to ring the bell on said engine may be the proximate cause of an injury to said traveler should the train be suddenly backed into the street without ringing said bell.

Hanrahan v Sprague, 220-867; 263 NW 514

5973 Speed of trains.

Speed—statute or reasonable care controls. No amount of speed of a railroad train is in and of itself negligence unless in violation of statute or ordinance; likewise, any speed may be negligence if, under the circumstances, a slower rate is called for in the exercise of reasonable care.

Finley v Lowden, 224-999; 277 NW 487

Inapplicability of speed ordinance. A city ordinance which limits the speed of railway trains under given conditions is properly excluded, in the absence of any evidence that the ordinance was violated.

Newman v Railway, 202-1059; 206 NW 831

Negligence per se. The driver of a conveyance is guilty of negligence per se when, in approaching an unobscured railway crossing, with which he is perfectly familiar, in full possession of his faculties, and with no distracting circumstances or emergency facing him, he, when 20 feet from the crossing, sees an engine approaching at a distance of 175 feet, and knows that the bell is not ringing, and thereafter drives upon the crossing, without in any manner observing or judging of the speed of the engine; and this is true even though the engine is in fact running in violation of an ordinance relative to the speed of trains and to the ringing of the engine bell.

Erlich v Davis, 202-317; 208 NW 515; 27 NCCA 164

City ordinance—burden to show inadmissibility. The burden of pointing out wherein city ordinance regulating train's speed is defective, either in substance or method of adoption, is on the party objecting to its admissibility.

ANALYSIS

- I IMPROVEMENTS IN GENERAL
- II IMPROVEMENTS SPECIALLY ASSESSABLE
- III PRIVATE CONTRACTS RELATIVE TO PAYMENT OF ASSESSMENTS

I IMPROVEMENTS IN GENERAL

"Oiling"—what constitutes. The resurfacing to a substantially level condition of an uneven, cracked, and rutted pavement by the application of an oleaginous substance in combination with sand, and of a thickness varying from a quarter to a half inch, does not constitute the improvement of a street "by oiling".

Jackson v City, 206-244; 220 NW 92

Paving contract—contractor's duty to investigate statutory prerequisites. Sound public policy requires a contractor, proposing performance of construction work for a city, to ascertain whether the council has sufficiently complied with statutory prerequisites so as to possess power to execute the proposed contract.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

Railroad crossing construction. Since character and extent of street improvements are within responsible discretion of city authorities and because city council's determination of question of desirability of proposed improvements is conclusive except for want of authority or fraud, and where ordinance granting franchise to railroad gave city council authority to require construction of crossing, damage claim for refusal to construct crossing could not be maintained by owner seeking access to property, when owner instead of requesting council to direct railroad to build crossing, merely made such request by personal letter to railroad official.

Call Bond Co. v Railway, 227-142; 287 NW 832

Temporary obstruction of access to property—damages. Conceding that a city in changing the course of a stream may, temporarily, substantially obstruct a property owner's access to his property, without liability in damages, yet the maintenance of such obstruction for two years is per se not a temporary obstruction, and evidence tending to exculpate the city is inadmissible.

Graham v Sioux City, 219-594; 258 NW 902

II IMPROVEMENTS SPECIALLY ASSESSABLE

Paving cost deficiency from general fund—invalid assessment not "deficiency". A city's paving contract providing payment to the contractor in assessment certificates, and any resulting deficiency from the general fund, does not obligate the city to pay the amount represented by the certificates from the general fund when such certificates are declared void. "Deficiency" in such case refers solely to that portion of the cost not lawfully assessable against property.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

III PRIVATE CONTRACTS RELATIVE TO PAYMENT OF ASSESSMENTS

Invalid resolution of necessity—procedural requisites to paving contract—demurrer. After the supreme court has adjudged certain paving assessments and the procedural requisites to a paving contract invalid because the resolution of necessity lacked the necessary three-fourths vote of the city council, an assignee of the paving assessment certificates may not rely on said contract as an express written agreement to pay for the paving from the general fund on account of a clause in the contract requiring deficiencies to be so paid, hence a cause of action thereon is subject to demurrer.

5976 Grading required.

Failure to establish grade—effect. A city council has no jurisdiction to assess property for the paving of an alley unless it has, by ordinance, established the grade of the alley.

Walter v City, 203-1068; 213 NW 935

Absence of grade nonjurisdictional. The due establishment of a permanent grade on a street is not a jurisdictional condition precedent to graveling said street, and assessing the cost thereof to abutting and adjacent property. It follows that the property owner, when duly notified of the proposed assessment, must present to the city council the objection that no permanent grade has been established, or said objection will be irrevocably waived.

5981 Gas, water, and other connections.

Sewer and water connections—illegal assessment. When a city, on default of the property owner, installs water and sewer connections, no assessment can be legally made therefor when the city gives to the property owner no rules or directions whatever as to the location and manner of construction of such connections by the owner; especially is this true when the number of connections made by the city is apparently excessive.

5984 Sewers.

Avoidance of peremptory abatement by city. A sewer system which is being maintained by a municipality for sanitary purposes, but which is a nuisance, should not be peremptorily and finally abated, but the court should (while retaining jurisdiction) enter an interlocutory order of abatement and give the municipality a reasonable time in which to effect the abatement.

Stovern v Town, 204-983; 216 NW 112

Torts—storm waters into sanitary sewer—negligence—jury question. A city has the duty to maintain its sanitary sewer with ordinary care and prudence and, where the city diverts storm waters into a sanitary sewer designed for a certain capacity, a jury might find the city negligent, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of damage from overflow due to the inability of the sewer to handle the increased flowage.

I RESOLUTION IN GENERAL

Existing but noneffective statute—effect. A city, in acquiring jurisdiction to construct a public improvement, need only comply with existing effective statutes. In other words, it need not comply with a statute which then exists, but which has not yet taken effect.

Butters v City, 202-30; 209 NW 401

Width of paving. A resolution of necessity is not rendered invalid because it fixes the width of the proposed paving at a figure which is in excess of the then ordinance-fixed distance between the curb lines, it appearing that, subsequent to the resolution, the curb lines were so adjusted by ordinance as to correspond with the width of the proposed paving.

Turley v Town, 202-1221; 211 NW 723

Railroad crossing construction. Since character and extent of street improvements are within responsible discretion of city authorities and because city council's determination of question of desirability of proposed improvements is conclusive except for want of authority or fraud, and where ordinance granting franchise to railroad gave city council authority to require construction of crossing, damage claim for refusal to construct crossing could not be maintained by owner seeking access to property, when owner instead of requesting council to direct railroad to build crossing, merely made such request by personal letter to railroad official.

Call Bond Co. v Railway, 227-142; 287 NW 832

Invalid resolution of necessity—procedural requisites to paving contract—demurrer. After the supreme court has adjudged certain paving assessments and the procedural requisites to a paving contract invalid because the resolution of necessity lacked the necessary three-fourths vote of the city council, an assignee of the paving assessment certificates may not rely on said contract as an express written agreement to pay for the paving from the general fund on account of a clause in the contract requiring deficiencies to be so paid, hence a cause of action thereon is subject to demurrer.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

Necessity—review. Courts may not, in the absence of a plea of fraud or oppression, review the municipal determination that an improvement is necessary.

Brush v Town, 202-1155; 211 NW 856

II MATERIALS AND METHOD OF CONSTRUCTION

it may intelligently investigate and intelligently object if found necessary.

Cardell v City, 201-628; 207 NW 775

III PROPERTY ASSESSABLE

Assessments—belated objections. The objection that a resolution of necessity did not state whether “abutting or adjacent” property would be assessed for a sewer may not be made for the first time on appeal (1) when the entire municipality had been formed into a sewer district, and (2) when the resolution of necessity specified alternate modes of payment, among which was a special assessment against “all the property in said town.”

Chicago, RI Ry. v Dysart, 208-422; 223 NW 371

IV LOCATION AND TERMINI

Width of paving—validity of resolution of necessity. A resolution of necessity is not rendered invalid because it fixes the width of the proposed paving at a figure which is in excess of the then ordinance-fixed distance between the curb lines, it appearing that, subsequent to the resolution, the curb lines were so adjusted by ordinance as to correspond with the width of the proposed paving.

Turley v Dyersville, 202-1221; 211 NW 723

5992 Additional contents.

Failure to object to estimated assessment. The right of a property owner to object to an assessment for paving on the ground that said assessment is in excess of 25 percent of the value of the lot at the time of the levy is not waived by failure to interpose said objection before the resolution of necessity is adopted, even tho the said resolution and the plat and schedule filed in connection therewith show (1) the valuation fixed by the council on the lot, (2) the estimated assessment on the lot, and (3) a notification that objection to the amount of the estimated assessment shall be deemed waived unless interposed before the resolution was adopted.

Smith Co. v City, 210-700; 231 NW 370

5993 Plat and schedule.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 61

Unallowable exemption. A tract of ground which abuts upon an improvement may not be exempted from assessment simply because the owner contemplates a possible future donation of the tract to the city for a street.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 61

5995 Time of hearing—objections permitted.

Adjournment without date—effect. Jurisdiction over a resolution of necessity for paving

Assessments—how made lienable. A filing by the city clerk with a county auditor of a copy of the published notice of the resolution of necessity covering a sewer improvement is sufficient (under §816, S., '13), if accompanied by proof of publication in one of the required newspapers. (Note change in §6007, C., '24.)

Anderson-Deering Co. v Boone, 201-1129; 205 NW 984

5999 Record—vote required.

Initiation by council—vote required. An assessment for paving cannot be legally made against property when the improvement was initiated by the council by a vote of less than three-fourths of its membership and when the property owner has not estopped himself from objecting to the proceedings.

Seymour v Ames, 218-615; 255 NW 874

Excessive assessment—nonestoppel. A property owner is not estopped to assert that his property has been assessed in excess of 25 percent of its value, because he (along with a majority of the property owners) had petitioned for the improvement and in the petition had waived the 25 percent limitation, when the record made by the city council shows that the petition was ignored, and that the improvement was ordered solely on the motion of the council.

Nelson v City, 208-709; 226 NW 41

Invalid resolution of necessity—procedural requisites to paving contract—demurrer. After the supreme court has adjudged certain paving assessments and the procedural requisites to a paving contract invalid because the resolution of necessity lacked the necessary three-fourths vote of the city council, an assignee of the paving assessment certificates may not rely on said contract as an express written agreement to pay for the paving from the general fund on account of a clause in the contract requiring deficiencies to be so paid, hence a cause of action thereon is subject to demurrer.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Negligence of contractor—unanticipated event. A contractor who, while constructing a sewer under the direction of and in accordance with the plans prescribed by the city, is unexpectedly interrupted in his work by the failure of the city to acquire a continuous right of way for the sewer, is under no legal obligation to a property owner to leave his uncompleted work in such condition as will avoid damages which no reasonable foresight would anticipate.

Newton Auto v Herrick, 203-424; 212 NW 680

Illegal reimbursement of contractor for loss. A municipal corporation has no legal authority, and can be given by the general assembly no constitutional legal authority, to pay or contract to pay its contractor, after performance of a contract and after settlement therefor, an added sum to reimburse the contractor for loss sustained by him because the federal government commandeered him and his equipment as a war measure, and thereby delayed the performance of the contract in question.

Love v City, 210-90; 230 NW 373

Acceptance—avoidance by proof of fraud. A nonfraudulently induced acceptance by a city council of a street pavement estops the city thereafter to plead nonperformance of the contract, but not so when the city pleads and proves that, at the time of said acceptance, the contractor, unbeknown to the council and in collusion with city employees, had constructed said pavement of a thickness substantially less than the thickness required by the contract.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Bond—breach—allowable and unallowable action by city. A city, tho named as obligee in a bond for the construction of a street pavement, may not—assuming fraud-induced acceptance by the city of the work—maintain in its own right and for its sole benefit an action at law on the bond for damages consequent on the failure of the contractor to construct the pavement of the thickness required by contract.

But the city may maintain such action in its own name as representative of the assessed property owners, and to recover for itself its own proper outlay (§10968, C., '35).

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Pavement—insufficient thickness—quantity of material purchased. On the issue whether a pavement was constructed of the thickness required by the contract, evidence of the quantity of material sold and delivered to the contractor is quite immaterial, he making no effort to show the quantity of material that actually went into the structure.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Pavement—noncontract tolerance in re thickness. Contract and accompanying specifications reviewed and held not to authorize a tolerance in the thickness of a concrete pavement applicable to the type of paving contracted for.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Substantial failure to perform—nonallowable recovery. Principle reaffirmed that a contractor who, in the construction of a street pavement, substantially fails to comply with the contract specifications, and is thereby barred from recovering the contract price, may not recover on quantum meruit, either from the city or from the property owners—and especially is this true when the contractor is guilty of fraud in the construction work.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Decree—nullification of contract and enjoining payment thereunder—scope. A decree to the effect that a contract between a contractor and a city was void, and enjoining the city from in any manner making any further payment under the contract, is not an adjudication of another action then pending at law wherein the contractor was seeking to recover on the same subject matter, irrespective of the contract; especially is this true when the decree shows that the court excluded such pending action from the scope of its decree.

Hargrave v City, 208-559; 223 NW 274

Nonjurisdiction of budget director. A contract for street improvements, e. g., paving and curbing, to be paid for by special assessments, is entirely outside the purview and purpose of that part of the Budget Act (Ch 23, C., '31) giving the director of the budget jurisdiction on appeal over proposed contracts for the construction of municipal improvements payable in whole or in part from the funds of the municipality; and this is true tho, in the final adjustment, a portion of the costs is paid from general municipal funds.

Schumacher v City, 214-34; 239 NW 71

6003 Agreement to repair—exception.

Bond to repair—construction. A statutory bond "to keep in good repair" a pavement covers repairs necessitated by defective workmanship and defective materials, not repairs necessitated by ordinary wear and tear.

Charles City v Rasmussen, 210-841; 232 NW 137; 72 ALR 638

Breach—right to maintain immediate action. An action on a contractor's bond to repair a street may be maintained without allegation and proof that the city has made the repairs.

ANALYSIS

- I LETTING CONTRACT
- II PROPOSALS FOR BIDS AND NOTICE
- III BIDS

I LETTING CONTRACT

Statute mandatory. The statute requiring contracts for the repair of a street improvement to be let on competitive bids is mandatory even tho special assessments on benefited property are not within the contemplation of the contract.

Johnson Bk. v City, 212-929; 231 NW 705; 237 NW 507; 84 ALR 926

Modification of contract without competitive bidding. A city which has so breached a valid paving contract that the contractor is under no duty to perform, may, without submitting the matter to competitive bidding, validly contract in good faith with the contractor for reasonably enlarged compensation (to be paid from the general fund) as a consideration for the performance of the contract notwithstanding the breach; and the execution of the contract on such basis is beyond attack.

Des Moines v Horrabin, 204-683; 215 NW 967

Competitive bidding—unallowable contract. Competitive bidding on municipal public works is mandatory, but is not obtained when bids under specifications prescribed by the city are rejected, and the contract is awarded to a bidder who bids under his own specifications which are materially and substantially different than the specifications prescribed by the city.

Iowa Co. v Town, 216-1301; 250 NW 136

Public improvements—estimated quantities as basis for contract—variation with specifications not fatal. In awarding a contract the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of "unit prices", as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities, indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 231 NW 207

Belated objection. Failure to present in the trial court the proposition that a contract for grading was invalid because not let to the lowest bidder, cannot be presented for the first time on appeal.

Carlson v City, 212-373; 236 NW 421

Void contract—nonliability of city as on implied contract. A municipal contract for the repair of a street pavement is void when entered into in disregard of the statute requiring competitive bidding. And after it is decreed that special assessments on benefited property may not be levied, the contractor or his assignee may not, on the theory of an implied contract, recover against the city in its corporate capacity, either at law or in equity (1) for the contract price, or (2) for the reasonable value of the materials and labor furnished under the void contract and retained by the city.

Johnson Bk. v City, 212-929; 231 NW 705; 237 NW 507; 84 ALR 926

Void contract—sweeping deprivation of rights. A contract for the repair or reconstruction of a street pavement, entered into in total disregard of the mandatory statute requiring competitive bidding, is void ab initio, and, if performed, it follows as a matter of public policy and irrespective of the motives of the parties:

1. That special assessments may not be legally levied to defray the cost of such performance, add
2. That the contractor may not, either, (1) on the theory of a contract implied in fact, or (2) on the theory of quasi-contract or contract implied in law (unjust enrichment) recover against the city for the expenditures made by him even tho all profit be excluded therefrom.

Especially is the foregoing true when the record reveals a contract manipulation which emits an unmistakable odor of fraud and evasion.

Horrabin Co. v Creston, 221-1237; 262 NW 480

Contract—assignment as releasing surety— inadequate proof. A surety on a bond for the construction of a city pavement who claims release from liability because the city consented to an assignment of the contract to a third party, must, at the least, establish such consent by evidence of some action on the part of the city council. Proof of consent by the city auditor, alone, to such assignment, is not sufficient. Especially is this true when the record otherwise shows that the original contractor was the only contractor recognized by the city.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

II PROPOSALS FOR BIDS AND NOTICE

Failure to submit to bids. Failure to submit a contract for a street improvement (other than for oiling or chloriding) to competitive bids renders the entire proceedings invalid, and, of course, precludes the right to assess property for the cost thereof.

Jackson v City, 206-244; 220 NW 92

Competitive bids—void provision. A clause inserted in a public improvement contract, to the effect that, if rock or quicksand is encountered, the contractor shall be paid on the basis of cost plus a named percentage, is void when both the specifications and the advertisement for bids are silent as to such contingency. (See annos. under §7463.)

Gjellefeld v Hunt, 202-212; 210 NW 122

Paving contract—contractor's duty to investigate statutory prerequisites. Sound public policy requires a contractor, proposing performance of construction work for a city, to ascertain whether the council has sufficiently complied with statutory prerequisites so as to possess power to execute the proposed contract.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

III BIDS

Competitive bidding—patentee as bidder—legality of bid. When the city calls for competitive bids on four different kinds of paving mixtures, all of substantially the same utility, desirability, and cost of commercial materials, three of which mixtures are unpatented and one of which is patented, the bid of the patentee, tho the only bid on the patented article, to furnish and lay the patented mixture for one cent per square yard above the price (not shown to be exorbitant) at which he had agreed simply to furnish it to all other bidders, is not fraudulent and void as stifling competition, tho the cost of laying the mixture is some twenty-eight cents per square yard.

Hoffman v City, 212-867; 232 NW 430; 77 ALR 680

6006 Bond.

Hidden fraud—nonestoppel by use. A city, by using a pavement for some three and a half years, does not estop itself from legally moving against the contractor because of a hidden-from-view, fraudulent defect in the work for which the contractor was responsible.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

6007 Certification to county auditor—record book.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 65

Special assessments—when lien or incumbrance. A special assessment for a street improvement which has been undertaken by the city without the letting of a contract does not become a lien or incumbrance on the land from the point of time when the assessment is finally approved by the council.

Frankel v Blank, 205-1; 213 NW 597

How made lienable. A filing by the city clerk with a county auditor of a copy of the published notice of the resolution of necessity covering a sewer improvement is sufficient (under §816, S., '13 [§6007, C., '39]), if accompanied by proof of publication in one of the required newspapers.

Anderson-Deering Co. v Boone, 201-1129; 205 NW 984

Certificates—special procedure for collection exclusive. A municipal, improvement certificate may not be foreclosed by an action in court, because, (1) the statutes confer no such authority, and (2) the statutes provide a special procedure for collection along with the collection of ordinary taxes. See §7193-d1, C., '31 [§7193.01, C., '39].

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-Des Moines Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

6008 Lien generally.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 265, 267

Applicability of statute. Principle reaffirmed that §7202 et seq., C., '24, relative to the lien of taxes, have applicability only to general taxes, not to special assessments for street improvements.

Frankel v Blank, 205-1; 213 NW 597

Special assessments—when lien or incumbrance. A special assessment for a street improvement which has been undertaken by the city without the letting of a contract does not become a lien or incumbrance on the land from the point of time when the assessment is finally approved by the council.

Frankel v Blank, 205-1; 213 NW 597

When lien or incumbrance. A covenant against "liens and incumbrances" is not broken by the naked fact that at the time thereof the records of the city show that the city council had finally approved a special assessment on the land for a street improvement which the city had undertaken without the letting of a contract therefor; and this is true even tho the covenantor had appeared in said assessment proceedings and waived irregularities therein.

Frankel v Blank, 205-1; 213 NW 597

Priority. The fully perfected lien of a special assessment for sewer is prior in right to the lien of a subsequent special assessment by the board of supervisors for a public drainage improvement, even tho the latter improvement was initiated prior to the sewer proceedings.

Anderson-Deering Co. v Boone, 201-1129; 205 NW 984

Equal equities—which shall prevail. Principle reaffirmed that as between equal equities, the first in time shall prevail—that the first in time shall be first in right. Applied as between special assessment certificates issued at different times against the same lots or land for different improvements.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Dickey, 222-995; 270 NW 29

Loss of lien. The lien of delinquent special assessments for street improvements is irrevocably lost by the failure of the county treasurer to enter such assessments on the current general tax list. And this is true even tho the property owner has formally waived all illegalities in the assessments, and has agreed to pay them, and even tho the county treasurer has kept his books on forms prescribed by the state auditor.

Wallace v Gilmore, 216-1070; 250 NW 105

Tax deed destroys lien of special assessment. A tax sale for general or ordinary taxes and a tax deed issued thereon displaces unmaturred special assessment liens which attached prior to said sale.

Iowa Co. v Barrett, 210-53; 230 NW 528
Western Sec. Co. v Bank, 211-1304; 231 NW 317

Tax deed nullifies special assessments. A tax deed issued on a sale for ordinary regular taxes nullifies the lien of all special assessments levied on the land by a city after the sale and before the execution of the deed.

Means v City, 214-948; 241 NW 671

Special assessment liens ended by resale.

Tesdell v Greenwalt, 228- ; 290 NW 676

When deed extinguishes drainage taxes. The lien on land of unmaturred installments of duly levied district-drainage taxes is extinguished by a tax deed which is issued on a sale of said land for general (ordinary) taxes levied subsequent to the levy of the drainage taxes.

Ferguson v Aitken, 220-1154; 263 NW 850

Certificates—paramount right of holder. The holder of special paving assessment certificates who obtains an assignment of a tax sale certificate, issued on a sale of the lots or land for general taxes, may be compelled by mandamus to reassign said tax sale certificate (on proper payment) to the holder of special sewer assessment certificates which affect the same lots or land and which latter certificates are legally prior in point of time and right to said paving certificates.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Dickey, 222-995; 270 NW 29

Judgment—persons not parties or privies. A party who purchases a municipal, improvement certificate, lienable on certain property, is not privy to (and therefore not bound by) a subsequently instituted action to quiet title, and the decree entered therein, when he is not made a party to said action.

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-Des Moines Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

6012 Cost of improvements.

Special assessments—discrepancies—effect. Relatively small discrepancies in assessments on different sides of the street improved, and on nonabutting properties having the same relative location, will not invalidate an entire assessment, no relief in such special instances being asked.

In re Fourth St., 203-298; 211 NW 375

Void assessment. A street improvement assessment under the nondistrict method, on property separated by a parallel street from the street improved, is void.

Bates v City, 201-1233; 207 NW 793

6014 Cost of paved roadway.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 399

6015 Cost of sewers.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 333

Payment from sewer fund—effect. When public storm sewers are constructed by a city and paid for out of the city sewer fund, no compliance need be had with the law (Ch 308, C., '27) which controls such construction when the cost is assessed to adjacent property.

Dunn v City, 206-908; 221 NW 571

6017 Deficiencies—nonassessable property.

Paving cost deficiency from general fund—invalid assessment not “deficiency”. A city's paving contract providing payment to the contractor in assessment certificates, and any resulting deficiency from the general fund, does not obligate the city to pay the amount represented by the certificates from the general fund when such certificates are declared void. “Deficiency” in such case refers solely to that portion of the cost not lawfully assessable against property.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

6018 Assessment.

ANALYSIS

- I PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT
- II ACCEPTANCE OR REJECTION OF WORK
- III ASCERTAINMENTS OF COSTS, AMOUNTS ASSESSABLE, ETC.

I PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT

School property—assessability. A school district having lots assessable under a city contract for paving and curbing cannot be deemed a “municipality” entering “into a contract” within the meaning of the state budget act (Ch 23, C., '31). In such circumstances, the district is simply a property owner.

Schumacher v City, 214-34; 239 NW 71

Corporate liability of city. When a paving contract has, in fact, been performed and the work has, in fact, been accepted by the city and assessments made on private property, the conduct of the city in fraudulently conniving, on appeal by property owners, in the entry of a decree that the contract had not been substantially performed, renders the city personally responsible for the loss suffered by the contractor or his assignee.

Western Corp. v City, 203-1324; 214 NW 687

Failure to substantially perform contract. The appellate court will not invalidate an entire assessment for paving, because of the nonfraudulent failure of the contractor to substantially comply with the construction of some minor part of the work, i. e., a six or eight-inch longitudinal expansion joint along the curb; nor will the court attempt to readjust the assessment because of such default when the record contains no data from which such readjustment can be intelligently arrived at.

Cardell v City, 201-628; 207 NW 775

II ACCEPTANCE OR REJECTION OF WORK

Acceptance of completed construction work—undiscoverable defects—recovery. In the absence of fraud or mistake, the acceptance of construction work by a city bars recovery on the contractor's bond, except as to defects undiscoverable or unknown at the time of acceptance; however, the fraud or mistake necessary to overcome the acceptance must be alleged and proven.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Contractor's bond—implied condition—no acceptance of hidden defects. A bond filed by a contractor, assuming the sole responsibility of constructing a water-tight dam for a city reservoir, contains the implied condition that acceptance by the city of the work will not bar recovery by the city on account of defects unknown and undiscovered at the time of acceptance.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Special assessments—fraudulent failure of city to defend assessments—effect. When a paving contract has in fact been performed, and the work has in fact been accepted by the city and assessments made on private property, the conduct of the city in fraudulently conniving, on appeal by property owners, in the entry of a decree that the contract had not been substantially performed, renders the city personally responsible for the loss suffered by the contractor or his assignee.

Western Pav. Corp. v Marshalltown, 203-1324; 214 NW 687

III ASCERTAINMENTS OF COSTS, AMOUNTS ASSESSABLE, ETC.

Cost of sewer embraced in cost of paving. The cost of a storm sewer, rendered necessary in connection with a paving project, may be included in the assessable cost of said paving; but not a charge for attorney fees.

Turley v Town, 202-1221; 211 NW 723

Bonds—corporate liability. A city which legally issues bonds in the form provided by statute, and on the basis of special assessments for street improvements or sewers, must not only make and maintain valid special assessments on the benefited property sufficient to pay the principal of the bonds and all interest accruing thereon, but must, by the due exercise of its own statutory powers relative to the collection of special assessments, supplement, if necessary, the efforts of the county treasurer to collect and realize on such assessments; and for any deficiency which is traceable to the neglect of the city to perform either of such duties, the city is liable in its corporate capacity.

First N. Bk. v Town, 211-341; 233 NW 712

Assessment certificates create no trust relationship. A city or town in issuing valid special assessment certificates for street improvements and in levying valid assessments for the payment of the certificates, does not constitute itself a trustee for said certificate holders.

Stockholders Inv. v Town, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Certificates—nonliability of city. A city or town which issues a valid special assessment certificate against specific property, for paving, and legally levies an adequate assessment against the property to pay the certificate, does not thereby obligate itself to pay the certificate in case the property owner does not pay it, and in case the property in question remains unsold at tax sale.

Morrison v Culver Est., 216-676; 248 NW 237

Special assessments—nonduty to collect and apply. Neither the statutes relative to special assessments nor the certificates issued in connection with such assessments impose on the city or town any right or duty to collect the assessments and to apply the proceeds thereof.

Stockholders Inv. v Town, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Nonduty to create special fund for payment. A city or town is under no obligation to provide or create a special fund for the payment of special assessment certificates other than the fund resulting from valid assessments on the property involved.

Stockholders Inv. v Town, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Limitation of actions—special assessment certificates. A cause of action accrues against a city or town on special assessment certificates issued and delivered by it for street improvements, at the point of time when it fails to levy valid assessments for the payment of said certificates, and such cause of action is barred in ten years after said accrual.

Stockholders Inv. v Town, 216-693; 246 NW 826

ANALYSIS

- I LIMITATION IN GENERAL
- II VALUE OF PROPERTY
- III BENEFITS

I LIMITATION IN GENERAL

Ordinance—failure to include statute. An ordinance which provides for an authorized public improvement and for the assessment of the cost thereof on specified property is not invalid because it does not embrace or repeat therein the statutory limitations on such assessment.

Brush v Town, 202-1155; 211 NW 856

Dual systems of improvements. Two paving contracts initiated and carried on in good faith under separate resolutions do not constitute one system of improvement, even tho they in part affect the same property.

Curtis v Town, 202-588; 210 NW 800

Inequitable assessment—insufficient basis. Evidence of the relative values of different properties is not, in itself, sufficient basis on which to determine whether an assessment is inequitable.

Walter v City, 203-1068; 213 NW 935

Fatally inadequate record on appeal.

Cardell v City, 201-628; 207 NW 775

II VALUE OF PROPERTY

Value of property—elements. In determining the value of real property as the basis for a special assessment, due consideration should be given to its location and adaptability for residence or business purposes, its assessed value, offers made for it, if any, at a public auction, along with the past, present, and future prospects of the city or town.

Turley v Town, 202-1221; 211 NW 723

Valuing agricultural lands. The value of agricultural lands within a municipality must not be determined for special assessment purposes on the basis that the lands will be abandoned for agricultural purposes, and will be platted into blocks and lots; but reasonable future prospects may be given due consideration. Evidence reviewed and values held excessive.

Gronbech v Town, 213-358; 239 NW 26

Selling price as evidence of value. The actual selling price of specially assessed property is not necessarily conclusive on the owner as to its actual value. The terms of the sale are a very material consideration.

Johnson v City, 202-617; 210 NW 755

Improvement—value at time of levy. On a special assessment levied against property for curb and gutter, future prospects of property must be considered only in determining its value, with improvement, at the time of levy.

Nash v Ames, (NOR); 232 NW 340

Personal property not assessable. Only real estate is assessable for a municipal pavement. In other words, in determining the value of a tract of land in order to fix an assessment as high as one-fourth of the actual value, the value of buildings and other improvements belonging solely to lessees must be excluded.

Chi. RI Ry. v Reinbeck, 201-126; 206 NW 664

Presumption. Special assessments for street improvements are presumptively just and correct.

Curtis v Town, 202-588; 210 NW 800

In re Hume, 202-969; 208 NW 285

Assessment in excess of statutory permission. A special assessment in excess of 25 percent of the value of the property is perfectly valid when the property owner fails to enter any objections thereto, as provided by statute. (See annos. under §6029.)

Anderson-Deering Co. v Boone, 201-1129; 205 NW 984

Paving assessments over 25 percent—reduction. In an appeal by a city from a ruling by the trial court that an assessment for paving was more than 25 percent of the value of the adjoining lot and from the resulting order reducing the assessment, evidence reviewed and held that the court's finding was sustained by the weight of the evidence.

Lee v Ames, 225-1061; 283 NW 427

Excessive assessment—nonestoppel. A property owner is not estopped to assert that his property has been assessed in excess of 25 percent of its value, because he (along with a majority of the property owners) had petitioned for the improvement and in the petition had waived the 25 percent limitation, when the record made by the city council shows that the petition was ignored, and that the improvement was ordered solely on the motion of the council.

Nelson v City, 208-709; 226 NW 41

Failure to object to estimated assessment. The right of a property owner to object to an assessment for paving on the ground that said assessment is in excess of 25 percent of the value of the lot at the time of the levy is not waived by failure to interpose said objection before the resolution of necessity is

Smith, etc. Co. v City, 210-700; 231 NW 370

Assessments exceeding statutory limitation—city council's nonfraudulent judgment final. Altho refunding bonds contain a certification that the city has done all things as required by law, such certification is not a misrepresentation, and a city incurs no liability by reason of a claim that certain properties were assessed in excess of the 25 percent statutory limitation, for the reason that having been set up by the legislature to make such determination, the city council's discretion and judgment respecting property values, in the absence of fraud or other sufficient grounds, are not subject to this attack in the courts.

Bankers Life v Emmetsburg, 224-1287; 278 NW 311

Excessive assessment—when evidence admissible. In an action against a city in its corporate capacity to recover a deficiency on a street improvement or sewer bond, it may be shown that the special assessment for the purpose of paying the bond was in excess of 25 percent of the value of the property, and that such fact resulted in the property's selling at tax sale for a less sum than the assessment.

Hauge v City, 207-1209; 224 NW 520

Excessive assessments—inadequate proof. The failure of property to sell at tax sale for the amount of the special assessment levied against it for paving does not establish the contention that the property was assessed in excess of 25 percent of its value.

Morrison v Culver Est., 216-676; 248 NW 237

Excessiveness—evidence. Evidence held to justify a materially higher assessment for paving than the assessment fixed by the trial court.

Nelson v City, 208-709; 226 NW 41
Verlinden v City, 208-892; 226 NW 42

Good faith excessive assessments. A city or town which levies special assessments for street improvements in an amount sufficient to pay the various certificates issued, and obtains waivers, by the various property owners, of illegalities and irregularities in the proceedings and the promises of the said property owners to pay the assessments, is not liable in damages consequent on the fact that the funds actually collected on the assessments were insufficient to retire the certificates; and this is true tho the assessments, without fraud or collusion, exceeded 25 percent of the value of each of the various properties.

Stockholders Inv. v Town, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Intentionally excessive assessment—liability of city. A city or town which levies special assessments for street improvements in an amount sufficient to pay the various certificates issued, and obtains waivers by property owners of illegalities and irregularities in the proceedings, and the written promise of the said property owners to pay the assessments, is not liable in damages consequent on the fact that the funds actually collected on the assessments were insufficient to retire the certificates; and this is true tho the council knowingly and intentionally levied the assessments in excess of 25 percent of the value of each of the various properties.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Sioux City, 219-998; 258 NW 907

III BENEFITS

Computation—method employed. The manner in which the amount of a special assessment is arrived at is quite immaterial if such amount is just and equitable and is in proportion to and not in excess of the benefits conferred.

In re Fourth St., 203-298; 211 NW 375

Future prospects—evidence. Future prospects of property and reasonable anticipations concerning it may be given consideration (1) in fixing the benefits which result to the property by reason of the construction of a public improvement, and (2) in determining the actual value. Evidence reviewed, and held both to sustain and not to sustain the ruling of the trial court as to different tracts.

Finkle v City, 205-918; 218 NW 618

Present use of property. The fact that the owner of real estate is, at the time of a public improvement, using it for such a particular purpose that the land derives little or no benefit from the improvement presents no legal obstacle to allowing the public authorities to view the land in its general relations and apart from its particular use and justly and equitably assess it accordingly.

In re Fourth St., 203-298; 211 NW 375

Presumption—failure to overcome. An assessment for sewer must stand when appellant fails to establish his objections: to wit, that the assessment exceeds benefits and exceeds 25 percent of the value of the property.

Chi. RI Ry. v Town, 208-422; 223 NW 371

Excessive assessments — burden to overthrow. When the record reveals both by presumption and by actual proof that property has been benefited by the construction of a sewer improvement, the complaining property owner must, with reasonable definiteness, es-establish the extent that the assessments exceed the amount of said benefits.

Brenton v Des Moines, 219-267; 257 NW 794

Assessment—evidence. Evidence relative to the location, topography, and surroundings of municipal acreage, and the extent to which it was supplied with municipal facilities and advantages reviewed; and held that a street paving assessment against it of $900 was approximately correct, in view of the statutory prohibition against assessing property in excess of 25 percent of its value.

Adams v Town, 205-456; 218 NW 468

6025 City engineer—duties.

Adoption of engineer's plans—nonliability for tort unless obviously defective. In adopting plans for pavement of alley intersection, the city was acting in a "judicial capacity" and was not liable for defects in engineer's plans unless as a matter of law the plans were obviously defective.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

6026 Notice of assessment.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 262

Special assessments—timely objections. Objections to a proposed special assessment by a city council for paving are timely when filed by the property owner prior to the date for filing such objections, as specified in the published notice of the proposed assessment, even tho such filing was more than 20 days after the first publication.

6028 Hearing and decision.

Special assessments—discrepancies — effect. Relatively small discrepancies in assessments on different sides of the street improved, and on nonabutting properties having the same relative location, will not invalidate an entire assessment, no relief in such special instances being asked.

In re Fourth St., 203-298; 211 NW 375

6029 Objections waived.

ANALYSIS

- I REMEDIES IN GENERAL
- II OBJECTIONS
- III ESTOPPEL TO OBJECT

I REMEDIES IN GENERAL

Void assessment—remedies available. A void assessment for a street improvement may be annulled either (1) on appeal or (2) by an independent action in equity, even tho no objections to the assessment are filed with the city council.

Bates v City, 201-1233; 207 NW 793

Objections as exclusive remedy. Property owners who unsuccessfully file objections before the city council as to an assessment may not thereafter maintain an action in equity, when the proceedings leading up to and culminating in the assessment are prima facie regular, tho long drawn out and delayed and perhaps irregular.

Franquemont v Munn, 208-528; 224 NW 39

Jurisdictional objections. The objection that an assessment for sewer is void because the work was let on a cost-plus contract when the specifications and notice to bidders were silent as to any such contract goes to the jurisdiction of the council to make the assessment, and may be raised for the first time on appeal.

Chi. RI Ry. v Town, 208-422; 223 NW 371

When sufficiency immaterial. The question whether objections filed before a city council against the confirmation of a special assessment are sufficiently specific becomes quite immaterial when it is made to appear that the council was wholly without jurisdiction to make the assessment.

Rivers v City, 202-940; 211 NW 415

Void assessment. The act of a city in taking possession of a strip of ground and paving it as a street, and assessing the cost thereof on the abutting land, without having in any manner acquired the paved land for street purposes, is absolutely void.

Beim v Carlson, 209-1001; 227 NW 421

Nonvoid assessment. The inclusion in an assessment for a street improvement of unallowable items of expense does not render the assessment fraudulent and void; and consequently an independent action in equity to cancel the assessment will not lie, objection before the council and appeal being the proper remedy.

Meijerink v Lindsay, 203-1031; 213 NW 934
Walter v City, 203-1068; 213 NW 935

II OBJECTIONS

Timely objections. Objections to a proposed special assessment by a city council for paving are timely when filed by the property owner prior to the date for filing such objections, as specified in the published notice of the proposed assessment, even tho such filing was more than 20 days after the first publication. (§6026, C., '24.)

Western Corp. v City, 203-1324; 214 NW 687

Inadequate objection. An objection before a city council that a sewer assessment was excessive cannot possibly be construed as an attack on the jurisdiction of the council to make the assessment.

Chi. RI Ry. v Town, 208-422; 223 NW 371

Fatally indefinite objection. An objection to a special assessment must be explicit enough to fairly call to the attention of the city council the nature of the property owner's complaint and to enable the council to investigate. "I object" is quite insufficient.

Downing v City, 203-216; 212 NW 549

Noncomprehensive objection. An objection on appeal that a special assessment was not "ratably and proportionately distributed over all the property in the district" is not embraced within an objection filed with the council to the effect that the assessment "is in excess of benefits, confiscatory, oppressive."

Walter v Ida Grove, 203-1068; 213 NW 935

III ESTOPPEL TO OBJECT

Failure to object—effect. A special assessment in excess of 25 percent of the value of the property is perfectly valid when the property owner fails to enter any objections thereto, as provided by statute. (See annos. under §6021.)

Anderson-Deering Co. v Boone, 201-1129; 205 NW 984

Schumacher v City, 214-34; 239 NW 71

Failure to object—waiver. The right of a property owner to object to an assessment for paving on the ground that said assessment is in excess of 25 percent of the value of the lot at the time of the levy, is not waived by failure to interpose said objection before the resolution of necessity is adopted, even tho the said resolution and the plat and schedule filed in connection therewith show (1) the valuation fixed by the council on the lot, (2) the estimated assessment on the lot, and (3) a notification that objection to the amount of the estimated assessment shall be deemed waived unless interposed before the resolution was adopted. (§§5992, 5993, 5995, 6021, 6023, 6026, C., '27.)

Smith v City, 210-700; 231 NW 370

Belated objections. The objection that a resolution of necessity did not state whether "abutting or adjacent" property would be assessed for a sewer may not be made for the first time on appeal (1) when the entire municipality had been formed into a sewer district, and (2) when the resolution of necessity specified alternate modes of payment, among which was a special assessment against "all the property in said town".

Chi. RI Ry. v Town, 208-422; 223 NW 371

Fatally delayed objection. A property owner may not, after a permanent sidewalk has been fully completed, enjoin the collection of a special assessment on his property on the ground that the sidewalk was constructed by an officer of the city. (§5673, C., '27.)

Perrott v Balkema, 211-764; 234 NW 240

Absence of grade nonjurisdictional. The due establishment of a permanent grade on a street is not a jurisdictional condition precedent to graveling said street, and assessing the cost thereof to abutting and adjacent property. It follows that the property owner, when duly notified of the proposed assessment, must present to the city council the objection that no permanent grade has been established, or said objection will be irrevocably waived.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 27, 295; '28 AG Op 400; '30 AG Op 145; '34 AG Op 412

Graveling street—absence of grade nonjurisdictional. The due establishment of a permanent grade on a street is not a jurisdictional condition precedent to graveling said street, and assessing the cost thereof to abutting and adjacent property. It follows that the property owner, when duly notified of the proposed assessment, must present to the city council the objection that no permanent grade has been established, or said objections will be irrevocably waived.

Peoples Co. v Des Moines, 213-1378; 241 NW 464; 79 ALR 1310

6033 Installments—payment—delinquency.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 27, 222, 295; '28 AG Op 400; '30 AG Op 50, 145; '32 AG Op 65; '34 AG Op 399, 412, 554; '36 AG Op 96; '38 AG Op 851

County treasurer as agent. The county treasurer is a statutory agent of a city in the collection of special assessments for street improvements and sewers.

Hauge v City, 207-1209; 224 NW 520

Duty to discharge assessments. As between life tenants and remaindermen, the former, during their tenancy, should pay the interest on special assessments, and the latter should pay the principal; and refunds on such assessments should be distributed in the same proportions.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 369

6037 Tax sale.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '23 AG Op 226, 425

Inadequate payment. It is idle for one to assert that he has paid all taxes due against real estate when he concededly has not paid matured special assessments on the land.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

Public improvements—excessive assessments—inadequate proof. The failure of property to sell at tax sale for the amount of the special assessment levied against it for paving does not establish the contention that the property was assessed in excess of 25 percent of its value.

Morrison v Culver Est., 216-676; 248 NW 237

Statutes part of certificate holder's contract. The right of a special assessment certificate holder to take advantage of statutes providing that special assessments be collected in the same manner as ordinary taxes, and to have the property sold to pay assessments, was a part of his contract when he purchased the certificates, and was not defeated when another statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the tax sale of property against which the county holds a tax sale certificate.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Amendment of tax sale statute. When a statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the sale of property against which the county held tax sale certificates, the amendment did not apply to other statutes requiring the county treasurer to sell property for delinquent special assessments, as an act amending a specified statute cannot be construed as amending an unmentioned statute, and repeal of statutes by implication is not favored.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Tax sale certificate assignment—installment redemption act. An assignment of a tax sale certificate of purchase by county to city was not premature under chapter 191 of the 47th GA authorizing redemption in installments from public bidder where owner of property failed to take advantage of such act within the 6 months period prescribed therein, and the city was entitled to such assignment because of special assessment due and unpaid on the property.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Specials included in tax sale. The inclusion in tax sale of an installment on a special assessment bond was permissible under this section and did not render sale void where county bid only the amount of the general taxes, interest, penalty and costs pursuant to §7255.1, C., '39, authorizing purchase by county.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Tax sale—error in name of owner. A tax sale is not void because the real estate was advertised and sold as belonging to one who owned only a minor part thereof.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

Tax sales enjoined—error as to nonparties. An injunction restraining tax sales of all property against which special assessment certificate holders had liens was erroneous insofar as it deprived certificate holders, who were not parties to the action and over whom the court had no jurisdiction, of their right to have the property sold to pay the special assessments.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Resale to correct previous error.

Teddell v Greenwalt, 228- ; 290 NW 676

Taxes suspended by appeal—effect. There cannot be a valid sale of real estate for taxes, a part of which consists of special assessments for paving, and which part has been suspended by an appeal to the district court.

Fidelity Inv. v White, 208-519; 223 NW 884

Mandamus to cancel sale. Mandamus (assuming the propriety of the remedy) will not lie to wholly cancel a tax sale which is only partially void.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

6039 City as purchaser.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 144

Deficiency—corporate liability. A city which legally issues bonds in the form provided by statute, and on the basis of special assessments for street improvements or sewers, must not only make and maintain valid special assessments on the benefited property sufficient to pay the principal of the bonds and all interest accruing thereon, but must, by the due exercise of its own statutory powers relative to the collection of special assessments, supplement, if necessary, the efforts of the county treasurer to collect and realize on such assessments; and for any deficiency which is traceable to the neglect of the city to perform either of such duties, the city is liable in its corporate capacity.

First N. Bk. v Town, 211-341; 233 NW 712

Redemption—nonright in town. A town which had no title to real estate when it was sold for nonpayment of special assessments levied by the town, and has acquired no title since said sale, may not redeem after the issuance of tax deed to the tax sale purchaser; and if equitable circumstances are relied on as a basis for redemption, the proof of such circumstances must be substantial.

Story City v Hadley, 214-132; 241 NW 649

Public improvements—assessment certificates—nonliability of city. A city or town which issues a valid special assessment certificate against specific property, for paving, and legally levies an adequate assessment against the property to pay the certificate, does not thereby obligate itself to pay the certificate in case the property owner does not pay it, and in case the property in question remains unsold at tax sale.

Morrison v Culver Est., 216-676; 248 NW 237

6041 Assignment of certificate.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 280; '32 AG Op 265, 267; '34 AG Op 165; '36 AG Op 56, 341; '38 AG Op 2, 266

Certificate as chattel—transferableness. A tax sale certificate of purchase is a mere chattel subject to sale by assignment and indorsement and delivery, and the owner of such certificate who presents the same at the expiration of redemption period is entitled to a deed.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Paramount right of holder. The holder of special paving assessment certificates who obtains an assignment of a tax sale certificate, issued on a sale of the lots or land for general taxes, may be compelled by mandamus to reassign said tax sale certificate (on proper payment) to the holder of special sewer assessment certificates which affect the same lots or land and which latter certificates are legally prior in point of time and right to said paving certificates.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Dickey, 222-995; 270 NW 29

Duty enjoined from "station". Mandamus is a proper remedy to compel the holder of a tax sale certificate to assign the same to a party who has a prior, paramount, legal right to such certificate. This is true because of the "station" which said obligated party has legally taken upon himself. (§12440, C., '35.)

Inter-Ocean Co. v Dickey, 222-995; 270 NW 29

Tax deed nullifies special assessments. A tax deed issued on a sale for ordinary regular taxes nullifies the lien of all special assessments levied on the land by a city after the sale and before the execution of the deed.

Means v City, 214-948; 241 NW 671

Specials included in tax sale. The inclusion in tax sale of an installment on a special assessment bond was permissible under §6037, C., '39, and did not render sale void where county bid only the amount of the general taxes, interest, penalty and costs pursuant to §7255.1, C., '39, authorizing purchase by county.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Certificate assignment—failure to enter on tax sale register. In the statute providing that tax sale certificate of purchase shall be assignable by indorsement and by entry in tax sale register, and that "when such assignment is so entered" it shall vest in assignee all right of assignor, the legislature did not intend by the use of such quoted words to bar other means of proving ownership of such a certificate. Hence assignments of certificate made by indorsement alone without entry upon tax sale register were not void.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Tax sale certificate assignment. An assignment of a tax sale certificate of purchase by county to city was not premature under chapter 191 of the 47th GA authorizing redemption in installments from public bidder where owner of property failed to take advantage of such act within the 6 months period prescribed therein, and the city was entitled to such assignment because of special assessment due and unpaid on the property.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Redemption from tax sale. A town which had no title to real estate when it was sold for nonpayment of special assessments levied by the town, and has acquired no title since said sale, may not redeem after the issuance of tax deed to the tax sale purchaser; and if equitable circumstances are relied on as a basis for redemption, the proof of such circumstances must be substantial.

Story City v Hadley, 214-132; 241 NW 649

Redemption from sale—notice. Where notice of expiration of right of redemption from tax sale was filed with, attached to, and made a part of affidavit of proof of service, and where treasurer made an entry which read, "Notice for deed filed Nov. 10, 1937", opposite the record entry of the sale on his sale register, and the auditor, upon written communication from treasurer, made a similar entry in sale book in his office, there was substantial and sufficient compliance with statutory requirements relating thereto.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Notice by assignor of certificate. Where the assignor of a tax sale certificate of purchase has given notice of expiration of redemption right, assignee is not required to give another such notice.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Notice—affidavit of service. Under statute prescribing method of making affidavit to prove service of notice of expiration of right of redemption from tax sale, it is not necessary for affiant to state method and manner in which the holder of certificate of purchase authorized and directed him to serve the notice. Hence an affidavit stating that agent made service on behalf of and "under the direction of Polk county, Iowa" was sufficient.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Affidavit of service—holder's duty to make. The holder of a tax sale certificate of purchase must give the notice of expiration of right of redemption, and either he or his agent or attorney must make the affidavit of service of such notice.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 444

6043 Roadway district fund.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 444

Agricultural lands—conflicting statutes. The general statutory declaration that designated agricultural lands within the limits of a city or town shall not be taxed "for any city or town purpose" (§6210, C., '27), must be deemed modified by a contemporaneous specific statute to the effect that a tax may be levied "upon all the taxable property in such city" for the purpose of paying the cost of paving arterial highways into and out of the city.

McKinney v McClure, 206-285; 220 NW 354

6044 Payment from primary road fund.

6051.1 Improvements by street railways.

Street railways—fundamental purpose of statute. The fundamental purpose of the statute relative to the assessment of street railways for paving in connection with their tracks (§6051-c1, C., '31 [§6051.1, C., '39]) is to cover the entire subject and declare a basic rule for the government of the same.

In re Walnut Bridge, 220-55; 261 NW 781

Assessments—"public place" includes bridge. The term "public place", as used in the statute relative to the obligation of street car companies to construct, reconstruct and maintain paving between and outside the rails of their tracks, embraces a public bridge.

In re Walnut Bridge, 220-55; 261 NW 781

Assessments — when franchise ordinance must yield to statute. A street railway franchise ordinance which specifies, in effect, that, until the state statutes otherwise provide, the obligation of the company to construct and reconstruct paving between and outside the rails of its tracks shall be thus and so, manifestly must yield to such later enacted state statute.

In re Walnut Bridge, 220-55; 261 NW 781

6052 Improvements by railways.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 362

Railroad crossing construction. Since character and extent of street improvements are within responsible discretion of city authorities and because city council's determination of question of desirability of proposed improvements is conclusive except for want of authority or fraud, and where ordinance granting franchise to railroad gave city council authority to require construction of crossing, damage claim for refusal to construct crossing could not be maintained by owner seeking access to property, when owner instead of requesting council to direct railroad to build crossing, merely made such request by personal letter to railroad official.

6059 Relevy.

Reassessment—basis. A city or town cannot be held to be under obligation to reassess property, which is subject to assessment for the cost of an improvement, in the absence of some showing of inadequacy in the assessment already made.

Morrison v Culver Est., 216-676; 248 NW 237

6061 Correction of assessments.

Deficiency—corporate liability. A city which legally issues bonds in the form provided by statute, and on the basis of special assessments for street improvements or sewers, must not only make and maintain valid special assessments on the benefited property sufficient to pay the principal of the bonds and all interest accruing thereon, but must, by the due exercise of its own statutory powers relative to the collection of special assessments, supplement, if necessary, the efforts of the county treasurer to collect and realize on such assessments; and for any deficiency which is traceable to the neglect of the city to perform either of such duties, the city is liable in its corporate capacity.

Hauge v City, 207-1209; 224 NW 520

6063 Appeal on assessment.

Appeal as sole remedy. The objection that the board of supervisors levied an assessment for a highway improvement against an entire 40-acre tract, instead of that part only which was at right angles to the improvement, must be presented on appeal from the assessment, and not by an independent action in equity.

Paul v Marshall County, 204-1114; 216 NW 736

Equitable action treated as appeal. An apparently independent action in equity to correct nonjurisdictional defects in a special assessment may be treated as an appeal from the adverse action of the council when so mutually treated by the litigants.

Walter v City, 203-1068; 213 NW 935

Unauthorized appeal. One who has no interest in the title to property may not appeal from a special assessment levied thereon.

Wright Const. v City, 202-661; 210 NW 809

Taxes suspended by appeal—effect. There cannot be a valid sale of real estate for taxes, a part of which consists of special assessments for paving, which part has been suspended by an appeal to the district court.

Fidelity Inv. v White, 208-519; 223 NW 884

Objections—sufficiency. An objection on appeal that a special assessment was not "rationally and proportionately distributed over all the property in the district", is not embraced within an objection filed with the council to the effect that the assessment "is in excess of benefits, confiscatory, oppressive". (See under §6029.)

Walter v City, 203-1068; 213 NW 935

Special assessments—inclusion of improper expense—effect. The inclusion in an assessment for a street improvement of unallowable items of expense does not render the assessment fraudulent and void; and consequently an independent action in equity to cancel the assessment will not lie, objection before the council and appeal being the proper remedy.

Meijerink Estate v Lindsay, 203-1031; 213 NW 934

Appeal—effect on assignee of prematurely issued certificates. The assignee of paving assessment certificates who takes his assignment during the pendency of an appeal by the property owners (the certificates being prematurely issued) is bound, so far as the property owners are concerned, by the final decree on appeal, even tho said assignee was not a party to such appeal.

Western Corp. v City, 203-1324; 214 NW 687

6064 Perfecting appeal.

See §12759.1

Fatally defective notice. Where statute required notice of appeal on assessment to be directed to the city or town as defendant, and notice was directed to the "Clerk of the incorporated town", a special appearance was properly sustained—the district court having no jurisdiction to hear the appeal because of the defective notice.

Fuller v Town, 226-604; 284 NW 455

Proper addressee. A notice of appeal to the supreme court addressed to a municipal corporation by name as the sole adverse party is all-sufficient, and service of such notice on the mayor of the city is likewise all-sufficient, even tho the notice is in no manner addressed to the mayor. (See under §12837.)

Lundy v City, 201-186; 206 NW 954

Western Corp. v City, 203-1324; 214 NW 687

Informal approval of bond. In an appeal from a special assessment for a street improvement, an appeal bond otherwise proper, which has been in fact approved by the clerk of the district court, is not rendered insufficient because of the failure of the said clerk to formally enter his approval on the bond.

Bates v City, 201-1233; 207 NW 793

Dickinson v City, 202-782; 211 NW 417

Rivers v City, 202-940; 211 NW 415

Inadequate bond nonamendable. The filing of an appeal bond in the full amount required by statute, and within 15 days from the date of a special assessment for paving being jurisdictional, it follows that a bond inadequate in amount cannot be rectified by an amendment after the lapse of said 15 days.

Woodard v City, 212-326; 232 NW 806

6065 Trial, judgment, and costs.

Failure to substantially perform contract—effect. The appellate court will not invalidate an entire assessment for paving because of the nonfraudulent failure of the contractor to substantially comply with the construction of some minor part of the work, i. e., a six or eight-inch longitudinal expansion joint along the curb; nor will the court attempt to re-adjust the assessment because of such default when the record contains no data from which such readjustment can be intelligently arrived at. (See under §6018.)

Cardell v City, 201-628; 207 NW 775

Decree as to special assessment not adjudication of damages. A decree fixing the amount of special assessment on property consequent on a street improvement cannot be deemed an adjudication of the damages suffered by the property owner consequent on the improvement's cutting off the owner's ingress to and egress from the property, even tho the decree markedly reduced the assessment made by the city council.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Drowning in swimming pool—liability. In an action to recover damages for the drowning of an eleven year old boy who was attending an outing camp, where the camp director had arranged with the Red Cross to provide two swimming instructors and life guards to be on duty at a specified time to protect about one hundred boys at the camp, and when the corporation operating the swimming pool took no part in arranging for life guards, it was not, under the circumstances, negligent in presumably admitting the decedent to the pool a few moments in advance of the time fixed for the entire group and in advance of supervision by the Red Cross instructors and life guards.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Swimming pool—drowning—res ipso loquitur—nonapplicable. The mere fact a person drowns in a swimming pool does not of itself establish negligence on the part of the proprietor under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Swimming pool not an “attractive nuisance”. A swimming pool, either natural or artificial, is not an attractive nuisance.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Drowning in swimming pool—failure to advise as to depth. A corporation, operating a swimming pool in which an eleven year old boy drowned, was not negligent in not personally informing the deceased of the depth of the water in the pool and in failing to inquire of him as to whether he could swim, where there were many signs, plainly visible about the pool indicating the various depths, and the age, intelligence, and experience of the deceased were sufficient to advise him of the inherent dangers of entering a body of water deeper than his height, especially when he was under the supervision of adults, who had more direct and complete control over him than the agents and employees operating the pool.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Drowning in swimming pool—life guards—sufficiency. Negligence of a corporation operating a swimming pool in which an eleven-year-old boy drowned, could not be grounded upon lack of sufficient attentive life guards, where it had one competent guard who never left his post at the deep water end and no showing was made as to need for more guards and none of the many bathers saw the drowning; and where most of the bathers, including the deceased, were in special groups which had competent life guards and other adult attendants for their own special protection.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Parks—scope of power. Statutory power to acquire land for parks embraces the power to acquire land for golf courses.

Temporary obstruction of access to property—damages. Conceding that a city in changing the course of a stream may, temporarily, substantially obstruct a property owner's access to his property, without liability in damages, yet the maintenance of such obstruction for two years is per se not a temporary obstruction, and evidence tending to exculpate the city is inadmissible.

Graham v Sioux City, 219-594; 258 NW 902

Torts—storm waters into sanitary sewer—negligence—jury question. A city has the duty to maintain its sanitary sewer with ordinary care and prudence and, where the city diverts storm waters into a sanitary sewer designed for a certain capacity, a jury might find the city negligent, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of damage from overflow due to the inability of the sewer to handle the increased flowage.

6089 Assessment.

Intentionally excessive assessment—liability of city. A city or town which levies special assessments for street improvements in an amount sufficient to pay the various certificates issued, and obtains waivers by property owners of illegalities and irregularities in the proceedings, and the written promise of the said property owners to pay the assessments, is not liable in damages consequent on the fact that the funds actually collected on the assessments were insufficient to retire the certificates; and this is true tho the council knowingly and intentionally levied the assessments in excess of 25 percent of the value of each of the various properties.

6090 Statutes governing.

Statutes part of special assessment certificate holder's contract. The right of a special assessment certificate holder to take advantage of statutes providing that special assessments be collected in the same manner as ordinary taxes, and to have the property sold to pay assessments, was a part of his contract when he purchased the certificates, and was not defeated when another statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the tax sale of property against which the county holds a tax sale certificate.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Amendment of tax sale statute. When a statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the sale of property against which the county held tax sale certificates, the amendment did not apply to other statutes requiring the county treasurer to sell property for delinquent special assessments, as an act amending a specified statute cannot be construed as amending an unmentioned statute, and repeal of statutes by implication is not favored.

6104 Certificates authorized.

Certificates—special procedure for collection exclusive. A municipal improvement certificate may not be foreclosed by an action in court, because, (1) the statutes confer no such authority, and (2) the statutes provide a special procedure for collection along with the collection of ordinary taxes. See §6007 et seq., §7193-d1, C., '31 [§7193.01, C., '39].

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-Des Moines Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

Paving—suing city on express contract—other theories excluded. Where a holder of invalid paving assessment certificates elects to base his recovery solely on an express written contract, no question of estoppel, waiver, ratification, or accord and satisfaction is involved.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

Certificates—assignment—nonnecessity to record. Conceding arguendo, that municipal improvement certificates and assignments thereof are instruments which require filing and recordation under §10105, C., '31, yet the failure to so file and record is quite inconsequential as to parties who had full knowledge that the certificates were outstanding.

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-Des Moines Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

Judgment—persons not parties or privies. A party who purchases a municipal improvement certificate, lienable on certain property, is not privy to (and therefore not bound by) a subsequently instituted action to quiet title, and the decree entered therein, when he is not made a party to said action.

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-Des Moines Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

Primary road bonds—unlawful diversion. Roads and streets within cities and towns are not part of the primary road system, even tho such roads and streets are continuations of primary roads which are outside cities and towns. It follows that county bonds voted for the purpose of improving the primary roads of the county may not be legally issued nor may the proceeds thereof be legally employed for the improvement of roads and streets within cities and towns.

Wallace v Foster, 213-1151; 241 NW 9

Statutes part of special assessment certificate holder's contract. The right of a special assessment certificate holder to take advantage of statutes providing that special assessments be collected in the same manner as ordinary taxes, and to have the property sold to pay assessments, was a part of his contract when he purchased the certificates, and was not defeated when another statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the tax sale of property against which the county holds a tax sale certificate.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

6105 Requirements.

Personal liability of property owner. Special assessment certificates for paving held to impose no personal obligation on the property owner to pay the assessment.

Morrison v Culver Est., 216-676; 248 NW 237

Certificate — lien — noninvalidating defects. Record reviewed, and held that a municipal special assessment certificate for paving was not invalidated because the name of the owner of the land assessed did not appear therein; nor was the lien of certain installments of said assessment lost because of the failure of the proper county officials to bring forward on the tax books, at the time of tax sale, said unpaid installments (§7193, C., '35).

Hawkeye Ins. v Munn, 223-302; 272 NW 85

Liability of property owner. Special assessment certificates for paving held to impose no personal obligation on the property owner to pay the assessment.

6107 Rights of bearer.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 399

Appeal — effect on assignee of prematurely issued certificates. The assignee of paving assessment certificates who takes his assignment during the pendency of an appeal by the property owners (the certificates being prematurely issued) is bound, so far as the property owners are concerned, by the final decree on appeal, even tho said assignee was not a party to such appeal.

6112 Bonds—series.

Pro rata payment nonpermissible. Where a special assessment fund was insufficient to pay in full all outstanding street improvement bonds which had been issued so that each series would mature successively over a period of years, such insufficiency did not affect the order of payment, and therefore the bondholders were not entitled to payment from the fund on a pro rata basis, but only in the order each series matured.

Shaw v Danbury, 227-415; 288 NW 435

6113 Maturity—name of street—interest.

Successively due special assessment bonds—payment. Where a special assessment fund was insufficient to pay in full all outstanding street improvement bonds which had been issued so that each series would mature successively over a period of years, such insufficiency did not affect the order of payment, and therefore the bondholders were not entitled to payment from the fund on a pro rata basis, but only in the order each series matured.

Shaw v Danbury, 227-415; 288 NW 435

6114 Form.

Right to modify. A statute which, in prescribing the form of a street improvement bond, provides for a promise to pay on a specified date, but also provides that the bond shall be "subject to changes that will conform them to the ordinances or resolution of the council", fairly authorizes the insertion in the bond of an option to pay on or before said specified date.

Ballard-Hassett v City, 207-1351; 224 NW 793

Legal acceleration of payment. A municipal improvement bond which provides for payment (1) on a specified date "or prior thereto at the option of the city", and (2) solely from the proceeds of special property assessments, is, nevertheless, legally payable, at the option of the city, prior to said specified maturity date, from the proceeds of a refund of the bond, even tho such refunding was authorized by a statute enacted subsequent to the issuance of the bond in question.

Ballard-Hassett v City, 207-1351; 224 NW 793

Special improvement bonds not general obligations. Refunding bonds for improvements payable from special assessments are not general obligations of the city.

Bankers Life v Emmetsburg, 224-1287; 278 NW 311

Successively due special assessment bonds—payment. Where a special assessment fund was insufficient to pay in full all outstanding street improvement bonds which had been issued so that each series would mature successively over a period of years, such insufficiency did not affect the order of payment, and therefore the bondholders were not entitled to payment from the fund on a pro rata basis, but only in the order each series matured.

Shaw v Danbury, 227-415; 288 NW 435

6121 Payment from special fund.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 301

Special improvement bonds not general obligations. Refunding bonds for improvements payable from special assessments are not general obligations of the city.

Bankers Life v Emmetsburg, 224-1287; 278 NW 311

Nonduty to create special fund for payment. A city or town is under no obligation to provide or create a special fund for the payment of special assessment certificates other than the fund resulting from valid assessments on the property involved.

Stockholders Inv. Co. v Brooklyn, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Deficiency in special taxes—statutory non-contemplation—city's nonliability. Fact that amount realized from special taxes is insufficient to pay all bonds for certain improvements will not establish liability on the part of the city, since the statutes provide and limit to the cost of the improvement the amount of the special assessments which the city may levy, since the deficiency in the special taxes resulted in part from a nation-wide depression, and since there was a defect inherent in the statute which made no provision for any shortage.

Bankers Life v Emmetsburg, 224-1287; 278 NW 311

Fund insufficient—pro rata payment. Where a special assessment fund was insufficient to pay in full all outstanding street improvement bonds which had been issued so that each series would mature successively over a period of years, such insufficiency did not affect the order of payment, and therefore the bondholders were not entitled to payment from the fund on a pro rata basis, but only in the order each series matured.

Shaw v Danbury, 227-415; 288 NW 435

6122 Limitation on issue.

Successively due special assessment bonds—fund insufficient. Where a special assessment fund was insufficient to pay in full all outstanding street improvement bonds which had been issued so that each series would mature successively over a period of years, such insufficiency did not affect the order of payment, and therefore the bondholders were not entitled to payment from the fund on a pro rata basis, but only in the order each series matured.

Shaw v Danbury, 227-415; 288 NW 435

6123 Liability of city.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 301

Bonds—corporate liability. A city which legally issues bonds in the form provided by statute, and on the basis of special assessments for street improvements or sewers, must not only make and maintain valid special assessments on the benefited property sufficient to pay the principal of the bonds and all interest accruing thereon, but must, by the due exercise of its own statutory powers relative to the collection of special assessments, supplement, if necessary, the efforts of the county treasurer to collect and realize on such assessments; and for any deficiency which is traceable to the neglect of the city to perform either of such duties the city is liable in its corporate capacity.

First N. Bk. v Town, 211-341; 233 NW 712

Certificates—nonliability of city. A city or town which issues a valid special assessment certificate against specific property, for paving, and legally levies an adequate assessment against the property to pay the certificate, does not thereby obligate itself to pay the certificate in case the property owner does not pay it, and in case the property in question remains unsold at tax sale.

Morrison v Culver Est., 216-676; 248 NW 237

Certificates create no trust relationship. A city or town in issuing valid special assessment certificates for street improvements and in levying valid assessments for the payment of the certificates, does not constitute itself a trustee for said certificate holders.

Stockholders Inv. v Town, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Nonduty to create special fund for payment. A city or town is under no obligation to provide or create a special fund for the payment of special assessment certificates other than the fund resulting from valid assessments on the property involved.

Stockholders Inv. v Town, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Assessments—nonduty to collect and apply. Neither the statutes relative to special assessments nor the certificates issued in connection with such assessments impose on the city or town any right or duty to collect the assessments and to apply the proceeds thereof.

Stockholders Inv. v Town, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Intentionally excessive assessment—liability of city. A city or town which levies special assessments for street improvements in an amount sufficient to pay the various certificates issued, and obtains waivers by property owners of illegalities and irregularities in the proceedings, and the written promise of the said property owners to pay the assessments, is not liable in damages consequent on the fact that the funds actually collected on the assessments were insufficient to retire the certificates; and this is true tho the council knowingly and intentionally levied the assessments in excess of 25 percent of the value of each of the various properties.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Sioux City, 219-998; 258 NW 907

Good faith excessive assessments—liability of city. A city or town which levies special assessments for street improvements in an amount sufficient to pay the various certificates issued, and obtains waivers, by the various property owners, of illegalities and irregularities in the proceedings and the promises of the said property owners to pay the assessments, is not liable in damages consequent on the fact that the funds actually collected on the assessments were insufficient to retire the certificates; and this is true tho the assessments, without fraud or collusion, exceeded 25 percent of the value of each of the various properties.

Stockholders Inv. v Town, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Void contract—nonliability of city as on implied contract. A municipal contract for the repair of a public street is void when entered into in disregard of the statute requiring competitive bidding. And after it is decreed that special assessments on benefited property may not be levied, the contractor or his assignee may not, on the theory of an implied contract, recover against the city in its corporate capacity, either at law or in equity (1) for the contract price, or (2) for the reasonable value of the materials and labor furnished under the void contract and retained by the city.

Prohibited express contract excludes implied. Absolute lack of authority in a municipality to enter into an express contract relative to a given subject matter necessarily excludes the possibility of an implied contract on the same subject matter.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Void contract—unjust enrichment as basis for recovery. No basis for recovery against a city, on the theory that the city has been unjustly enriched and must pay therefor, is established by proof of the reasonable value of that which the city has received.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Limitation of action. A cause of action accrues against a city or town on special assessment certificates issued and delivered by it for street improvements, at the point of time when it fails to levy valid assessments for the payment of said certificates, and such cause of action is barred in ten years after said accrual.

Stockholders Inv. v Town, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Fund insufficient—pro rata payment non-permissible. Where a special assessment fund was insufficient to pay in full all outstanding street improvement bonds which had been issued so that each series would mature successively over a period of years, such insufficiency did not affect the order of payment, and therefore the bondholders were not entitled to payment from the fund on a pro rata basis, but only in the order each series matured.

Shaw v Danbury, 227-415; 288 NW 435

6124 Interest—temporary loan.

Fund insufficient—pro rata payment. Where a special assessment fund was insufficient to pay in full all outstanding street improvement bonds which had been issued so that each series would mature successively over a period of years, such insufficiency did not affect the order of payment, and therefore the bondholders were not entitled to payment from the fund on a pro rata basis, but only in the order each series matured.

6125 Sewer bonds authorized—form.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Sept. 21, '39

REFUNDING BONDS

6126.1 Issuance—interest.

Legal acceleration of payment. A municipal improvement bond which provides for payment (1) on a specified date "or prior thereto at the option of the city", and (2) solely from the proceeds of special property assessments, is, nevertheless, legally payable, at the option of the city, prior to said specified maturity date, from the proceeds of a refund of the bond, even tho such refunding was authorized by a statute enacted subsequent to the issuance of the bond in question.

6126.2 Form and amount.

Special improvement refunding bonds—issuance in excess of statutory limit—liability. Where a city issues refunding bonds for certain special improvements without limiting them to the amount of the unpaid special assessments, a liability to the bondholders arises for the amount of the deficiency plus interest carried by the special assessment from the date bonds were issued, plus interest on each unpaid annual interest installment on the bond at the rate carried by the bond from the date each interest installment became due.

Bankers Life v Spirit Lake, 224-1304; 278 NW 320

Refunding bonds for assessments not carried forward—city nonliable. Where a city issues refunding bonds for street and sewer improvements in an amount equal to "unpaid special assessments" including therein "unpaid special assessments" which the county treasurer failed to carry forward on his tax lists, a theory that "unpaid special assessments" meant only those supported by a valid lien, and therefore such bonds exceeded the statutory limit to the extent of those assessments not carried forward, will not make a city liable to the bondholders, inasmuch as those assessments not carried forward are not void but only voidable at the option of the property holder.

Bankers Life v Spirit Lake, 224-1304; 278 NW 320

Delinquent taxes not brought forward—effect on bonds retired by special assessments. County treasurer's failure to bring forward delinquent special assessments, an irregularity rendering the assessments only voidable and not void, will not create a cause of action against the city on refunding bonds based on the claim that such special assessments, not brought forward, may not be included in determining the amount of the "unpaid special assessments."

Bankers Life v Emmetsburg, 224-1287; 278 NW 311

6126.5 Retirement.

Securities—special improvement bonds not general obligations. Refunding bonds for improvements payable from special assessments are not general obligations of the city.

Bankers Life v Emmetsburg, 224-1287; 278 NW 311

6126.6 Liability of city or town.

Securities and taxation—diligence in collection of assessments—acquired property tendered to bondholders. Lack of due diligence in the collection of special assessments to retire refunding bonds is not shown where the record discloses, among other things, the city's acquisition of property by tax deeds, and in one instance by deed from the owner, using general funds therefor, and thereafter tendering these acquisitions to the bondholders.

Bankers Life v Emmetsburg, 224-1287; 278 NW 311

Deficiency in special taxes—statutory non-contemplation—city's nonliability. Fact that amount realized from special taxes is insufficient to pay all bonds for certain improvements will not establish liability on the part of the city, since the statutes provide and limit to the cost of the improvement the amount of the special assessments which the city may levy, since the deficiency in the special taxes resulted in part from a nation-wide depression, and since there was a defect inherent in the statute which made no provision for any shortage.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 289, 490; '34 AG Op 345; '36 AG Op 652; '38 AG Op 63

6127 Cities and towns may purchase.

Reservoir not attractive nuisance. See under §5738 (III)

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 211, 438; '36 AG Op 470

Dual functions of government. The functions of a municipality are two-fold: one is governmental, and the other, proprietary and quasi private. Lighting its streets is governmental, and selling electricity to individual users is proprietary.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Contract to light streets not subject to vote. Cities and towns may contract for lighting streets and alleys under §5949, C., '35, without submitting the contract to a vote of the people for approval.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Powers conferred by legislature. A municipal corporation possesses only such powers as are conferred upon it by the legislature—that is, such powers as are granted in express words, or those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly conferred, or those necessarily essential to the identical objects and purposes of the corporation as by statute provided, and not those which are simply convenient.

Iowa Electric v Cascade, 227-480; 288 NW 633

Pledge of income of electric light plant. The specific statutory power of a city or town to establish an electric light plant and to pay for the same by issuing bonds, does not embrace the implied power to contract to pay for said plant by pledging the income from said plant for an indefinite period of time; and this is true tho it may be convenient or advantageous for the municipality to make payment in said latter way.

Van Eaton v Town, 211-986; 231 NW 475; 71 ALR 820

Christensen v Town, 212-384; 236 NW 406

Unallowable implied contract. Inasmuch as a city has no statutory authority to expressly contract for a rental for the use of its streets, there can be no implied contract that a telephone company will pay reasonable rental for the space occupied by its equipment in such streets.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

Franchise (?) or regulation (?). Ordinance construed in the light of its terms and of the facts attending its enactment, and held, to constitute a franchise to the grantee therein named to operate a telephone exchange, and not to constitute a mere regulatory ordinance imposing a license fee on said business.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

Competitive bidding—object. Under the Simmer law a contract for the construction of improvements by a municipality, such as a municipal electric light and power plant, should be let by competitive bidding, the purpose being to enable the municipal corporation to secure the best bargain for the least money.

Iowa Electric v Cascade, 227-480; 288 NW 633

Advertisements for bids—irregular compliance with mandatory duty. The irregularity of municipal authorities in advertising for, receiving, and opening, bids for the construction of a municipal light and power plant before instead of after the director of the budget had, on appeal, overruled objections to the plans, specifications, and proposed form of contract, (§357, C., '31) does not invalidate the contract entered into after said ruling and specifically approved by said director. But the duty to "advertise for bids" is mandatory in case an appeal is taken to the budget director.

Johnson v Town, 215-1033; 247 NW 552

Rejection of bids—subsequent contract with rejected bidder. After advertising for bids for the construction of a municipal electric light and power plant, and after the rejection of all bids because excessive, the council may, subsequently, in the absence of fraud or bad faith, and without re-advertisement, validly enter into a contract with one of the rejected bidders at a figure substantially less than any of the former bids.

Johnson v Town, 215-1033; 247 NW 552

Damages—superior replacement construction—contractor nonliable. A contractor should not be required to pay in damages for a quality and quantity of replacement construction superior to what he originally contracted to do.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Subjects of damages—municipal light plant earnings—anticipated profits neither nominal nor speculative. In a city's action on a public utility's injunction bond indemnifying city's loss on account of delayed construction of a municipal light plant, even tho plant had not been in operation, loss of profits and loss of use of the plant not in being, are not too speculative nor nominal, and anticipated profits, if established with reasonable certainty, may be recovered as damages.

Corning v Iowa-Nebr. Co., 225-1380; 282 NW 791

Real estate without rental value—"use value" as measure of damages. When real property has no rental value, upon dissolution of a wrongful injunction restraining erection of a municipal light plant thereon, the measure of damages is the use value, including net profits.

Corning v Iowa-Nebr. Co., 225-1380; 282 NW 791

City engineer supervising construction—no abrogation of contract duty. The fact that a city had an engineer directing the construction of a dam does not relieve the contractor of his specified duty to make a water-tight dam when contractor practically concedes that, had he followed the specifications, the dam would hold water.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Acceptance of completed construction work—undiscoverable defects—recovery. In the absence of fraud or mistake, the acceptance of construction work by a city bars recovery on the contractor's bond, except as to defects undiscoverable or unknown at the time of acceptance; however, the fraud or mistake necessary to overcome the acceptance must be alleged and proven.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Eminent domain—compensation—allowable elements. In the condemnation of a portion of a farm in order to create a reservoir on a natural stream for waterworks purposes, the following elements may be taken into consideration in fixing the value of the remaining portion of the farm immediately after the condemnation, to wit:

1. The extent to which the uncondemned land will be detrimentally affected by the percolation of water;

2. The detrimental effect on livestock of hunting and shooting on the condemned land, it appearing that the municipality had authorized such acts;

3. The limitation which will to a reasonable certainty be placed upon the landowner's former right to cast drainage from feed lots directly into said stream.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 213-1187; 240 NW 628

Federal grant for constructing municipal plant. Under §10188, C., '39, authorizing municipal corporations to accept gifts and providing that "conditions attached to such gifts or bequests become binding upon the corporation * * * upon acceptance thereof", a city may accept a federal grant of money to construct a municipal electric light and power plant, tho the grant is conditioned upon the payment of a minimum wage for labor, notwithstanding the Simmer law requiring such contracts be let by competitive bidding, where the wages provided did not in any manner increase the cost of construction.

Iowa Electric v Cascade, 227-480; 288 NW 633

Simmer law — federal money grants. The words "maximum amount to be expended" in the so-called "Simmer law" refer not to the size of the plant but to the amount to be paid from the earnings. It follows that the construction fund may be enlarged by other funds that do not have to be repaid from taxes or from earnings.

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Right of taxpayer to question municipal action. A plaintiff has no standing to enjoin a city from entering into a contract for the construction of an electric lighting system, to be paid for by special assessments, unless he alleges and proves that, in some specified way, he will be adversely affected by such proposed contract: e. g. (1) that he owns property which will be specially assessed; or (2) that he is a taxpayer, and must contribute to the improvement fund from which payment of a deficit must be made.

Donovan Co. v Waterloo, 211-506; 231 NW 499

Stockholder's action to establish interest in city waterworks. A stockholder in a waterworks company, who advocated purchase of its waterworks by city and assisted in carrying an election authorizing the same, and who did not disclose to the city his claim to an interest in or lien upon the property, was estopped to assert as against the city, which purchased the property and made improvements, that city's grantors did not have good title and were trustees ex maleficio, or that the city took property burdened with a trust for his benefit.

Shaver v Des Moines, 227-411; 288 NW 412

6128 Franchise may be granted.

Franchise ordinance—submission to electors.

A proposition to grant a franchise to a private party to operate a telephone exchange, initiated by a city council, necessitates the submission to the voters of the franchise ordinance in literal fullness; otherwise, when the proposition is initiated by the private party through petition of voters.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

When ordinance not necessary. The passage of an ordinance and the printing of the same on the ballots is not necessary in those cases where the proposal to grant a franchise to a private party for the erection and operation of an electric light and power plant is not initiated by the city or town council, but is initiated by the voters through a statutory petition addressed to the mayor. (See §6555, C., '27, for law governing certain cities.)

Mapleton v Iowa Co., 206-9; 216 NW 683

Approval by voters of proposed utility franchise does not create franchise. The approval, by a majority vote of the electors of a city or town, of a proposed franchise for the use of the streets by a private public utility, does not create a franchise. Such franchise comes into existence only when the city or town council sees fit, after the favorable vote, to enact, and does enact, such franchise in the form of an ordinance.

Schnieders v Pocahontas, 213-807; 237 NW 207

Contract termination — right of franchise holder. A city which terminates a franchise under a power reserved in the franchise ordinance may maintain an action to enjoin the franchise holder from operating under the franchise and to oust such holder; but if the city has agreed in said ordinance to purchase the property of the franchise holder in case of ouster, no writ of removal should issue until the purchase price of such property is determined.

Sac City v Iowa Co., 203-1364; 214 NW 571

Franchise — construction. The terms and provisions of an ordinance together with the mutual construction which the city and grantee have placed upon it, may reveal the fact that the grantee has the right to maintain within the city a transmission line of high electrical voltage as distinguished from an ordinary lighting system, even tho the ordinance does not expressly permit such high voltage line.

Dilley v Service Co., 210-1332; 227 NW 173

Waiver of franchise provision—effect. A valid franchise to establish and operate an electric light, heat, and power plant is not rendered invalid by the fact that the city council waived that part of the original ordinance which pertained (1) to the place of manufacture within the municipality and (2) to the assignability of the franchise right.

Mapleton v Iowa Co., 206-9; 216 NW 683

Incomplete franchise—power of council. Where a proposition relative to the granting of a telephone franchise (initiated by petitions to the council), as submitted to the electors, contained no time limitation on the franchise, the council may validly fix and determine said limitation in the subsequently adopted ordinance.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

Limitations—public not barred by. An action to oust an alleged franchise holder from public streets because of the invalidity of the alleged franchise, tho brought by the county attorney in quo warranto, cannot be barred by the lapse of time.

State v Munn, 216-1232; 250 NW 471

Illegal franchise—nonestoppel on public. The fact that an alleged franchise holder has, with the knowledge of a municipality, expended large sums of money under said franchise, does not bar or estop the municipality from questioning the legality of said franchise and from legally excluding the alleged franchise holder from the public streets.

State v Munn, 216-1232; 250 NW 471

Foreclosure—title acquired. The purchaser of a municipal electric light and power plant, under a foreclosure of a pledge thereof, does not automatically acquire a franchise to operate the plant.

Greaves v City, 217-590; 251 NW 766

Expired franchise—service furnished and suit maintained thereafter. A privately owned public utility must after expiration of its franchise continue under contract or otherwise supplying electricity to a city until some other source is available, but its use of the city streets may be discontinued after reasonable notice, and the expiration of the franchise will not prevent it from maintaining an action to enjoin the establishment of a municipal light plant, nor need special personal damages be shown as a condition therefor.

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Leaky gas pipes—res ipsa loquitur. Basis for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is established by proof that pipes and appliances for conducting inflammable gas into a place of business were under the full control of the party furnishing the gas; that gas leaked from said pipes and appliances before it entered the meter; and that a violent explosion resulted from such leakage.

Sutcliffe v Fort Dodge Co., 218-1386; 257 NW 406

Duty as to unowned pipes and fixtures. A gas company engaged in furnishing inflammable gas for domestic or for other like or similar purposes, is under legal obligation to exercise a degree of care, commensurate with the danger, to maintain in a safe condition the pipes and fixtures over which it has full control, and through which its gas passes into the meter, even tho the company does not own said pipes or fixtures and did not originally install them.

Sutcliffe v Fort Dodge Co., 218-1386; 257 NW 406

Judgment—on trial of issues—reservation of unpleaded issue. In an action to enjoin a public utility company from maintaining an electric light and power plant within a city, the reservation in the final decree of the question of the right of the company to maintain a similar plant running through the city and supplying points outside the city—a plant distinct from the company's city plant—is proper when the pleadings do not fairly embrace said latter plant.

Iowa Light Co. v Grand Junction, 217-291; 251 NW 609

6130 Purchase of utility products.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 211; '32 AG Op 18, 81; '36 AG Op 652

Dual functions of government. The functions of a municipality are two-fold: one is governmental, and the other, proprietary and quasi private. Lighting its streets is governmental, and selling electricity to individual users is proprietary.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Contract to light streets not subject to vote. Cities and towns may contract, for lighting streets and alleys under §5949, C., '35, without submitting the contract to a vote of the people for approval.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Use of public places—expired franchise—unexpired street light contract—poles in streets lawful. Electric company's occupancy of town streets to supply street lighting under a valid contract is not a trespass nor a nuisance merely because its franchise has expired.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Franchise not prerequisite to street lighting contract. The fact that a power company had a franchise and had established poles and lines in the streets to transmit electricity does not preclude the company from maintaining such poles and wires, after the franchise has expired, in order to fulfill its contract to furnish street lights to the city because a franchise is not a prerequisite to a city or town contracting to light its streets.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

6131 Election required.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 211

Ballots—substantial compliance with statutory ballot. Form of ballot used in election for establishment of a municipal electric light or power plant reviewed, and held to substantially comply with statute and to be unambiguous.

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

Fatally defective ballot. A ballot is fatally defective when it fails to clearly indicate to the voter whether a proposed municipal electric light and power plant is to be financed, (1) by ordinary taxation or, (2) by pledging the plant and the net earnings thereof; and this is true tho the ballot states the maximum amount of money to be expended.

Pennington v Fairbanks, M. & Co., 217-1117; 253 NW 60

Ballots—validity of form—Simmer law—municipal electric plant. In an election to establish a municipal electric plant under the Simmer law, the ballot held to comply with statute.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Simmer law ballot showing "electric light or power"—"or" synonymous with "and". Since an electric plant produces energy which may be used for either light or power, a ballot, which states the question as to whether a city should establish an "electric light or power plant", would be readily understood by the voters that the city was seeking to establish an "electric light and power plant".

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

Simmer law—expenditure shown on ballot, not on petition for election. The petition authorized by statute (§6132, C., '35) requesting submission to the voters the question of municipal ownership of an electric plant to be paid for from earnings need not state the maximum amount to be expended, but this amount must be stated on the ballot. (§6134-d3, C., '35 [§6134.07, C., '39]).

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Contract to light streets not subject to vote. Cities and towns may contract for lighting streets and alleys under §5949, C., '35, without submitting the contract to a vote of the people for approval.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Power to pledge plant. Due authorization to a municipality by the electors thereof to establish and erect an electric light and power plant at a stated maximum cost payable only out of the earnings of said newly acquired plant without the municipality itself incurring any indebtedness legally invests the council with power to pledge both the plant and its earnings as security for the payment of the resulting cost.

Greaves v City, 217-590; 251 NW 766

City election favoring utility—no implied obligation to construct utility. Under the Simmer law an action by an engineering company for a general judgment against a city for engineering services cannot be maintained, based on an implied obligation of the city to erect light and power plant, even after repeal of the enabling ordinance, and altho the special election therefor had carried. Such would be unlawful and contrary to public policy and beyond powers of city council. Persons dealing with a municipality are bound to take notice of legislative restrictions upon its authority.

Burns & McDonnell v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

Citizen's right to challenge council's official acts. A citizen of a community has the right to challenge the validity of the actions of his city council in proceeding to establish a municipal electric plant and to apply for injunctive relief where by no other proceedings can public or private interests be fully protected.

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Election—statements, public and private, of public officials—effect. Statements by public municipal authorities, made during the pendency of an election contest relative to the authorization of the construction of a public improvement, reviewed and held insufficient to invalidate said election.

Johnson v Town, 215-1033; 247 NW 552

Conduct of election—candidates' statements. Statements made by candidates for municipal office as to what they intended to do in acquiring a public utility plant will not vitiate an election on the proposition of municipal control of said plant without a showing that the election was affected thereby.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291
Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Election—surplusage in stating proposition. When no electric light and power plant exists in a municipality in which an election is held to authorize the municipality to "establish and erect" such plant, the stating of the proposition on the ballot as one "to extend" as well as to "establish and erect" is harmless surplusage.

Johnson v Town, 215-1033; 247 NW 552

Dual methods to acquire utility ownership—single purpose. A proposition submitted to the voters to establish a municipal utility plant "by purchase * * * or by construction" is not dual but relates only to the single purpose of acquiring municipal ownership of a public utility.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291
Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Expiration of franchise—effect. An electric light and power company which permits its franchise in a city to expire without securing a new franchise, or a renewal of the old one, must be deemed to occupy the streets and public places of the city without color of right or authority, and to rest under a legal obligation to remove its property from the streets within a reasonable time.

Iowa Co. v Town, 216-1301; 250 NW 136

Authority to erect public utility—insufficient funds—effect. A city or town which has been authorized, by popular election, to establish and erect a system of waterworks by issuing bonds to a specified amount, and which discovers, after said funds have been applied, that the system is so incomplete as to be unusable, has no authority, in the absence of a reauthorization by the electorate, to issue additional warrants to complete the system.

Mote v Town, 211-392; 233 NW 695

Unauthorized contracts. A judicial holding that municipal warrants issued for the erection of a municipal waterworks are void because the erection had not been authorized by the voters, is necessarily a holding that the contract under which the warrants are issued is also void.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Prohibited express contract excludes implied. Absolute lack of authority in a municipality to enter into an express contract relative to a given subject matter necessarily excludes the possibility of an implied contract on the same subject matter.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Legality—immaterial questions. On the narrow question of the legality of a called election to vote on the erection of a municipal light and power plant, the question whether the plant if authorized and erected would create an unlawful indebtedness is quite immaterial.

Hogan v Corning, 217-504; 250 NW 134

6132 Question submitted.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 212; '32 AG Op 18, 81

Different methods of calling. This section and §6242, C., '31, provide optional methods for submitting to the people the question whether a municipal light and power plant shall be erected and paid for out of the earnings of the plant.

Hogan v Corning, 217-504; 250 NW 134

Election called by council on own motion. An election to vote on the question whether a city shall erect an electric light and power plant and pay for the same out of the earnings of said plant, may be validly called by the city council on its own motion, in accordance with this section.

Hogan v Corning, 217-504; 250 NW 134
Wyatt v Manning, 217-929; 250 NW 141

Petition for election—verification not required. A petition for the calling of an election in a city or town, to vote on the proposition whether the municipality shall construct an electric light and power plant, need not be accompanied by an affidavit as to the electoral qualifications of the signers. The statute (ch 319, C., '31) contains no such requirement.

Piuser v Sioux City, 220-308; 262 NW 551; 100 ALR 1298

Petition for election—insufficiency—burden of proof. He who alleges the insufficiency of a duly filed petition for the calling of a municipal election, to vote on the proposition whether the municipality shall erect an electric light and power plant, has the burden to sustain his allegation when the petition is apparently sufficient and apparently in conformity with the statute.

Piuser v Sioux City, 220-308; 262 NW 551; 100 ALR 1298

Petition—noninvalidating matter. A petition to the mayor of a city for the submission to the people of the question of granting a public utility franchise is not rendered invalid because a proposed or suggested ordinance is included in the petition.

Iowa Co. v Tourgee, 208-36; 222 NW 882

Petition for election—forged signatures. The fact that a petition to a city council for an election to vote on the proposition whether the city shall construct a specified public utility plant contains both forged signatures of electors and signatures of nonresidents of the city will not invalidate the petition if it be otherwise sufficient after the objectionable signatures are excluded.

Piuser v Sioux City, 220-308; 262 NW 551; 100 ALR 1298

Nondiscretionary duty of mayor. Upon the filing with the mayor of a legally sufficient petition for the calling of an election and after the lapse of a reasonable time for a canvass of the legal sufficiency of the petition, a mandatory and nondiscretionary duty, enforceable by mandamus, devolves on the mayor to call the election and make the submission.

Iowa Co. v Tourgee, 208-36; 222 NW 882

Nondisqualifying interest of judge. A judge of the district court does not, by signing a petition to a city council for an election to vote on the proposition whether the city shall erect a specified public utility plant, thereby disqualify himself from fully presiding over litigation questioning the legal sufficiency of said petition.

Piuser v Sioux City, 220-308; 262 NW 551; 100 ALR 1298

Simmer law—expenditure shown on ballot, not on petition for election. The petition authorized by statute requesting submission to the voters the question of municipal ownership of an electric plant to be paid for from earnings need not state the maximum amount to be expended, but this amount must be stated on the ballot. (§6134-d3, C., '35 [§6134.07, C., '39]).

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Ballot—sufficiency. A ballot which sets forth whether the city or town shall “establish, erect, maintain, and operate” an electric light and power plant, and pay for the same solely from the earnings of said plant, and definitely limits the expenditures for establishment, is all-sufficient without any reference (1) to the maximum rate to be charged consumers, or (2) to the interest rate to be paid on the expenditure, or (3) whether past or future earnings are to be so employed, or (4) whether the plant is to be pledged.

Wyatt v Town, 217-929; 250 NW 141

Contents of ballot. At an election called by a city council on its own motion on the question whether the city shall erect an electric light and power plant and pay for the same out of the earnings of the plant, the ballot need only contain (1) the main proposition, and (2) a statement of the maximum amount to be expended. Manifestly, the law does not contemplate the setting forth of a contract which can only be entered into after the election grants the authority for such a contract.

Hogan v Corning, 217-504; 250 NW 134

Sufficient reference to statute in ballot.

Weiss v Woodbine, 228- ; 289 NW 469

Ballots—preservation—showing required—admissibility. Ballots must be “carefully preserved” after the election, and without such showing they are not admissible in evidence.

Steeves v New Market, 225-618; 281 NW 162

6134 General powers granted.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 438; '32 AG Op 18

Bonds—express authority required. Power “to borrow” money does not embrace the power to issue negotiable bonds.

Muscatine Co. v City, 205-82; 217 NW 468

Bonds—extension of existing plant. A city has no power to issue bonds to provide for the cost of extensions and enlargement of an existing municipally constructed electric light and power plant.

Muscatine Co. v City, 205-82; 217 NW 468

Bonds—validity. Bonds issued under a procedure which is, on its face, apparently authorized by law, are, nevertheless, invalid if the record shows that such procedure was simply a subterfuge for the purpose of evading the law and to accomplish an illegal purpose.

Muscatine Co. v City, 205-82; 217 NW 468

Compensation—allowable elements. In the condemnation of a portion of a farm in order to create a reservoir on a natural stream for waterworks purposes, the following elements may be taken into consideration in fixing the value of the remaining portion of the farm immediately after the condemnation, to wit:

1. The extent to which the uncondemned land will be detrimentally affected by the percolation of water.

2. The detrimental effect on livestock of hunting and shooting on the condemned land, it appearing that the municipality had authorized such acts.

3. The limitation which will to a reasonable certainty be placed upon the landowner's former right to cast drainage from feed lots directly into said stream.

Wheatley v City, 213-1187; 240 NW 628

PAYMENT FROM EARNINGS

ANALYSIS

- I GENERAL SCOPE OF SIMMER LAW
- II POWER OF COUNCIL GENERALLY
- III PLEDGE OF PROPERTY AND EARNINGS
- IV INJUNCTIONS—OBJECTIONS

I GENERAL SCOPE OF SIMMER LAW

Holding prior to statute.

Van Eaton v Town, 211-986; 231 NW 475; 71 ALR 820

Christensen v Town, 212-384; 236 NW 406

Nonduality in subject matter. Neither the title of an act nor the act itself is dual in subject matter in a constitutional sense:

1. When the title declares a purpose, (a) to amend a section of an existing statutory chapter governing the acquisition by cities and towns of named public utilities, (b) to provide additional methods of paying for said plants, and (c) outlines in a general way said proposed additional methods, and;

2. When the text of the act follows the title with congruous provisions.

Iowa-Neb. Co. v Villisca, 220-238; 261 NW 423

Illogically placed amendment—effect. An act, additional to existing statutes on the same subject, is not invalid simply because it is declared to be an amendment to a section which, tho

I GENERAL SCOPE OF SIMMER LAW—concluded on the same subject, is not, perhaps, the most logical section to carry such amendment.

Iowa-Neb. Co. v Villisca, 220-238; 261 NW 423

Nullity because of unworkableness. Whether the purchase by a city or town of electrical energy may be financed under this section [§6134-d1], C., '31, or whether the provisions of sections 6134-d5 and 6134-d6 of said code [§§6134.09, 6134.10, C., '39] relative to competitive bidding for furnishing electrical energy are a nullity because of indefiniteness, uncertainty or unworkableness, quaere.

Brutsche v Town, 218-1073; 256 NW 914

Discrimination against privately owned plants. Statutory authority to municipalities to erect, in their proprietary capacity, electric light and power plants, and to pay the entire initial cost thereof from the net profits of said plants, and to this end to fix such rates as will effect such payment, is not void as an unconstitutional discrimination against privately owned plants of the same kind.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Waterworks—extension without election. The trustees of a municipally owned and established waterworks plant may, without an authorizing election, validly contract for improving and extending said plant, and may obtain the funds therefor by issuing bonds payable solely out of the future net earnings of the plant and secured by a lien on said earnings and on said improvements and extensions.

Chitwood v Lanning, 218-1256; 257 NW 345

Allowable "local and special" legalizing act. The general assembly has plenary constitutional power to validate, by a strictly local and special act, the proceedings under which a municipal electric light and power plant (payable from plant earnings) has been constructed and placed in operation,—it appearing that the contract under which said proceedings were had, had been judicially declared void because said contract was not let on competitive bids as mandatorily required by statute,—the constitution ex vi termini (Art. III, §30) clearly recognizing the inapplicability of a general validating act to meet such a situation.

Iowa E. L. & P. Co. v Grand Junction, 221-441; 264 NW 84

Construction of statutes—duty of court to make effective. It is the duty of the court, in construing statutes, to seek the object and purpose of the law and then give it force and effect if not contrary to established legal precedents.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Bond statute not included in title of act. Sufficient reference to statutes in ballot.

Weiss v Woodbine, 228- ; 289 NW 469

Grants of power to cities—manner of exercising—nonstrict construction. Since there is no inherent power vested in a municipality, statutes purporting to grant such power are to be strictly construed; however, this rule does not apply in construing statutes relating to the manner of exercising expressly granted power.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Rights, powers, duties, and liabilities—motives immaterial when following lawful procedure. The motives of public officials when proceeding according to law, to submit the question of municipal ownership of a public utility, are not fit subjects for judicial inquiry.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Electric plant under Simmer law—"net earnings"—reserve not necessary. No fraud or misrepresentation is shown where it is proven that a proposed municipally owned public utility is amply adequate and can be built within the amount proposed, altho no sum is included as a reserve for depreciation, etc. The term "net earnings" in the statute does not include such reserve.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Not a "debt". The expenditure which is necessary to establish a municipal electric light and power plant and which is to be paid solely from the earnings of the said plant, is not a "debt" within the constitutional and statutory limitation on indebtedness.

Wyatt v Manning, 217-929; 250 NW 141

Competitive bidding required. Under the Simmer law a contract for the construction of improvements by a municipality, such as a municipal electric light and power plant, should be let by competitive bidding, the purpose being to enable the municipal corporation to secure the best bargain for the least money.

Iowa Electric v Cascade, 227-480; 288 NW 633

Federal grant for constructing municipal plant. Under §10188, C., '39, authorizing municipal corporations to accept gifts and providing that "conditions attached to such gifts or bequests become binding upon the corporation * * * upon acceptance thereof", a city may accept a federal grant of money to construct a municipal electric light and power plant, tho the grant is conditioned upon the payment of a minimum wage for labor, notwithstanding the Simmer law requiring such contracts be let by competitive bidding, where the wages provided did not in any manner increase the cost of construction.

Iowa Electric v Cascade, 227-480; 288 NW 633

II POWER OF COUNCIL GENERALLY

Powers conferred by legislature. A municipal corporation possesses only such powers as are conferred upon it by the legislature—that is, such powers as are granted in express words, or those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly conferred, or those necessarily essential to the identical objects and purposes of the corporation as by statute provided, and not those which are simply convenient.

Iowa Electric v Cascade, 227-480; 288 NW 633

Grants of power to cities—manner of exercising—nonstrict construction. Since there is no inherent power vested in a municipality, statutes purporting to grant such power are to be strictly construed; however, this rule does not apply in construing statutes relating to the manner of exercising expressly granted power.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Power to bind future councils. A city council, under legislative authority, may validly enter into a contract which will be binding on future city councils.

Iowa-Neb. Co. v Villisca, 220-238; 261 NW 423

Simmer law—municipal utility—power to make profits. Municipal corporations owe their origin to, and derive their powers from, the legislature and can exercise only such powers as are granted in express words or fairly implied from, or incident to, the powers expressly granted, or such powers as are essential to purposes of corporation, and, under the Simmer law, permitting cities to pay for public utilities from future earnings, a municipal corporation has statutory power to make profits in excess of statutory demands.

Corning v Iowa-Nebr. Co., 225-1380; 282 NW 791

City election favoring utility—no implied obligation to construct utility. Under the Simmer law an action by an engineering company for a general judgment against a city for engineering services cannot be maintained, based on an implied obligation of the city to erect light and power plant, even after repeal of the enabling ordinance, and altho the special election therefor had carried. Such would be unlawful and contrary to public policy and beyond powers of city council. Persons dealing with a municipality are bound to take notice of legislative restrictions upon its authority.

Burns & McDonnell v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

Plants payable out of earnings—bids—sufficiency. After the electors of a city or town have duly authorized the construction of an electric light and power plant to be paid for out of the future earnings of the plant, the call for bids need only be for the carrying out of that which the electors have authorized, to wit: The erection of a complete electric generating and distributing system. Sections 6134-d5 and 6134-d6, C., '31 [§§6134.09, 6134.10, C., '39], in providing for competitive bidding for "furnishing" electrical energy do not have the effect of requiring, in addition to bids on the specific authorization, bids on various other constructions and outlays in order to enable the city council to enter into a contract for electrical energy without erecting a complete plant as authorized by the electors.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 218-1073; 256 NW 914

III PLEDGE OF PROPERTY AND EARNINGS

Power to pledge plant. Due authorization to a municipality by the electors thereof to establish and erect an electric light and power plant at a stated maximum cost payable only out of the earnings of said newly acquired plant without the municipality itself incurring any indebtedness legally invests the council with power to pledge both the plant and its earnings as security for the payment of the resulting cost.

Greaves v City, 217-590; 251 NW 766

Foreclosure—title acquired. The purchaser of a municipal electric light and power plant, under a foreclosure of a pledge thereof, does not automatically acquire a franchise to operate the plant.

Greaves v City, 217-590; 251 NW 766

IV INJUNCTIONS—OBJECTIONS

Electric plant under Simmer law—attack by taxpayer—nonright. An action, by a taxpayer, to enjoin the operation of a municipal electric plant, payable from the earnings, does not lie because such plants do not impose any additional burden on the taxpayers.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Citizens—challenging officers' official acts. Public welfare lodges in citizens of a community the right to challenge the validity of an electric plant construction contract and to enjoin a municipal corporation and its officers from violating their duties and abusing corporate powers if such construction contract is consummated without competitive bidding made mandatory by statute.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Enjoining electric plant operation—taxpayer or citizen—moot question. Altho the federal court on application of a taxpayer holds that it will not enjoin an act already done, to wit, to enjoin the construction of a municipal electric plant already built, such holding will not bar a citizen from bringing action to enjoin the operation of the plant.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

IV INJUNCTIONS — OBJECTIONS—concluded

Completely constructed electric plant—operation enjoined—nonmoot question. Fact that a municipal electric plant has been built does not preclude, as a moot question, citizens from bringing action to restrain its operation if the contract is void, since question is not moot if there remains anything on which a decision of the court can operate.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Taxpayer must show adverse interest to enjoin city erecting light plant. One suing to enjoin town's contract for purchase of machinery for electric lighting plant must show interest adversely affected.

Christensen v Kimballton, (NOR); 231 NW 502

Plaintiffs—uninjured taxpayer. A public utility corporation, operating in a city under a duly granted franchise, may not, solely as a taxpayer, maintain injunction to test the legality of an ordinance granting a franchise to a competitor, on the grounds (1) that the ordinance rates for private consumers are unreasonable, and (2) that the city has an option, under the ordinance, to take over the ownership of the plant after it has paid for itself out of its own earnings, when it appears that such possible "taking over" will be without the creation of any debt on the part of the city and without resort to any taxation,—in other words, when it appears that there is no present or threatened danger to the plaintiff, except the danger of competition.

Iowa Co. v Emmetsburg, 210-300; 227 NW 514

Injunction—city officers exceeding authority. To warrant an injunction against the officers of a city or town, there must be some present, tangible, existent infraction or threatened infraction of legal power and authority, with resultant injury and damage to the petitioners.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Electric plant payable out of earnings—contract not "debt" prohibited by constitution or statute. A contract for municipal electric plant payable out of earnings does not create a "debt" within meaning of constitutional inhibition where, although plant was constructed on site owned by town, it was not shown that furnishing of site was part of consideration nor that site had a substantial value. In an action to enjoin the carrying out of such contract, the burden of proof to show that contract created a debt within the meaning of such constitutional inhibition was on the plaintiff electric company.

Iowa So. Utilities v Cassill, 69 F 2d, 703

Contract invalidated by procedure. A contract for the construction of an improvement to a municipally owned waterworks (expenditures thereunder payable from the earnings of the plant) is invalid and therefore enjoined,

(1) when the city council first advertises for bids on plans and specifications (prepared by the ultimately successful bidder) which were so lacking in details as to furnish no common standard for competitive bids, and (2) when, on the day for letting the contract, the council caps the climax of its efforts by letting the contract to one of the bidders on his newly proposed and then-filed plans and specifications which contained many variations from those on which bids had been invited.

Northwestern Co. v Grundy Center, 220-108; 261 NW 604

Noncompetitive bidding on contract.

Weiss v Woodbine, 228- ; 289 NW 469

Seeming illegality—explanatory amendment.

In an action by private citizens to enjoin a municipality and its contractor from carrying out an alleged, illegal, written contract for the construction of a light and power plant, the defendants may be permitted by the court so to amend their answer as to plead, tho belatedly, that a provision in said contract relative to the manner of testing said plant when completed, and which provision was in material variance with the plans and specifications on which bids were received, was inadvertently inserted in said contract—that the actual agreed test was identical with that called for by said specifications, and that, since the commencement of the suit, the said defendants had entered into a supplemental contract in accordance with said plea.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Res judicata plea—inapplicability—stricken on motion.

In an action by citizens against the town council to enjoin the operation of a municipal electric plant, the trial court is correct in striking, on motion, that portion of defendant's answer which pleads res judicata, when it appears that a former action in the United States district court for the same purpose was by a private electric company in its individual capacity to enjoin the construction of the plant and that no judgment on the merits was rendered.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Electric plant earnings—fact findings in trial to court—conclusive on appeal.

Where an injunction wrongfully restrained and delayed, for 11 months, construction of a municipal light plant and in an action on the injunction bonds, tried without a jury, where the trial court had evidence to determine the plant's net earnings for first year of operation and there was sufficient evidence to support his findings that earnings during 11 months lost by delay would have been substantially same, damages in that amount for such period are not too speculative, remote, and uncertain, and such findings are conclusive on appeal.

6134.02 Bonds.

Bonds—extension of existing plant. A city has no power to issue bonds to provide for the cost of extensions and enlargement of an existing municipally constructed electric light and power plant.

Muscatine Co. v Muscatine, 205-82; 217 NW 468

Exemption from registration. Securities issued by cities or towns, even tho not constituting general obligations of the city or town, e. g., "pledge orders" payable solely from the net income of a municipally owned utility, are exempt from registration or qualification under the Iowa securities law.

Ballard-Hassett Co. v Miller, 219-1066; 260 NW 65

Simmer law — rates in contract — unnecessary when cash is paid. A contractor who is paid in cash for building a municipal public utility plant is not interested in the electric rates the city proposes to charge nor in the rate of interest on the bonds sold to provide the cash, nor does the statute contemplate that these items be inserted in the construction contract when such contractor is to be paid in cash.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Simmer law — payment — dual methods — interest rate. In letting contracts for public utilities under the Simmer law the council determines the method of payment, and, if payment is made as earnings accumulate, the interest rate must be specified in the contract, but not when payment is made at once by negotiable revenue bonds.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

6134.03 Refunding bonds.

Simmer law—duration of maximum electric rates—bonds and refunding bonds retired. A contract for a municipal electric plant is not invalid on the ground that it limits the operation of the maximum electric rate therein to the life of the original bonds, for maximum rates need not be in effect after the cost of the plant has been fully paid; but refunding bonds being merely substitutes for the original bonds the original indebtedness would remain, and maximum rates would apply until such obligation was paid.

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

6134.06 Nature and requirements of contract.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 82

Grant of power to fix rates — discretion to modify. The legislature having graciously granted cities and towns the power to fix public utility rates may, at its pleasure, curtail or limit the power.

Iowa-Neb. Co. v Villisca, 220-238; 261 NW 423

Utility plants maintained by taxation—Simmer law not applicable. The statutory provisions for taxation to maintain and operate utility plants, contained in sections 6142 and 6211, C., '35, have no application to plants established under the Simmer law which are paid for from net earnings.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Seeming contradiction—effect. The fact that the so-called Simmer law provides that no part of the cost of light and power plants erected thereunder (1) shall be payable by taxation, yet also provides, (2) that the city shall pay for current used by it—which payment necessarily must be made from funds derived from taxation—presents no such contradiction or unworkable condition as to invalidate the law.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Domestic products preference—not applicable to Simmer law. Sections 1171-b1 and 1171-b2, C., '35 [§§1171.01, 1171.02, C., '39], have no application to contracts let for construction of municipal public utility plants payable from the earnings.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Simmer law—payment—dual methods—interest rate. In letting contracts for public utilities under the Simmer law the council determines the method of payment, and, if payment is made as earnings accumulate, the interest rate must be specified in the contract, but not when payment is made at once by negotiable revenue bonds.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Simmer law—rates in contract—unnecessary when cash is paid. A contractor who is paid in cash for building a municipal public utility plant is not interested in the electric rates the city proposes to charge nor in the rate of interest on the bonds sold to provide the cash, nor does the statute contemplate that these items be inserted in the construction contract when such contractor is to be paid in cash.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Simmer law—duration of maximum electric rates—bonds and refunding bonds retired. A contract for a municipal electric plant is not invalid on the ground that it limits the operation of the maximum electric rate therein to the life of the original bonds, for maximum rates need not be in effect after the cost of the plant has been fully paid; but refunding bonds being merely substitutes for the original bonds the original indebtedness would remain, and maximum rates would apply until such obligation was paid.

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

Public contracts—engineering cost of public utility under Simmer law—no general judgment—directing verdict. Simmer law prohibits payment of construction cost of a municipal electric plant from taxation, and precludes rendering a general judgment for such cost, including a judgment for cost of engineering services in preparing plans and specifications for construction of such public utility, when such services were performed under contract subsequent to the election and passage of the ordinance providing for construction payment from future earnings. Consequently, in an action by the engineers against a city to recover compensation for their services, a directed verdict for the city was proper.

Burns & McDonnell v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

“Net earnings” in statute — public utility plants. In a contract for construction of municipal electric plant payable solely out of earnings, contract provision defining “net earnings” as balance of gross receipts after payment solely of necessary expenses of operation and maintenance, and making no provision for reduction of depreciation reserve, does not violate statute providing that city should not be liable because of insufficiency of “net earnings”.

Iowa So. Utilities v Cassill, 69 F 2d, 703

Electric plant payable out of earnings — contract not “debt” prohibited by constitution or statute. A contract for municipal electric plant payable out of earnings does not create a “debt” within meaning of constitutional inhibition where, altho plant was constructed on site owned by town, it was not shown that furnishing of site was part of consideration nor that site had a substantial value. In an action to enjoin the carrying out of such contract, the burden of proof to show that contract created a debt within the meaning of such constitutional inhibition was on the plaintiff electric company.

Iowa So. Utilities v Cassill, 69 F 2d, 703

6134.07 Interpretative clause — election requirement.

ANALYSIS

I ELECTIONS IN GENERAL
II BALLOTS

I ELECTIONS IN GENERAL

Election — validity. An election to vote on the question whether the city shall erect an electric light and power plant and pay for the same out of the earnings of said plant may be validly called by the city council on its own motion, in accordance with §6132, C., '31.

Hogan v City, 217-504; 250 NW 134

Wyatt v Town, 217-929; 250 NW 141

Extension without election. The trustees of a municipally owned and established waterworks plant may, without an authorizing election, validly contract for improving and extending said plant, and may obtain the funds therefor by issuing bonds payable solely out of the future net earnings of the plant and secured by a lien on said earnings and on said improvements and extensions.

Chitwood v Lanning, 218-1256; 257 NW 345

Simmer law—nonapplicable statutes. Elections to establish municipally owned public utilities payable from the earnings are controlled by chapter 312, C., '35, and sections 1171-d4 [§1171.18, C., '39] and 6246, C., '35, have no application.

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291
Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Power to pledge plant. Due authorization to a municipality by the electors thereof to establish and erect an electric light and power plant at a stated maximum cost payable only out of the earnings of said newly acquired plant without the municipality itself incurring any indebtedness legally invests the council with power to pledge both the plant and its earnings as security for the payment of the resulting cost.

Greaves v Villisca, 217-590; 251 NW 766

Election laws applicable. Statutory requirements as to canvass of votes, preservation of ballots, and care of poll books apply to elections for establishment of a municipal electric plant payable from earnings.

Steeves v New Market, 225-618; 281 NW 162

Simmer law — federal money grants. The words “maximum amount to be expended” in the so-called “Simmer law” refer not to the size of the plant but to the amount to be paid from the earnings. It follows that the construction fund may be enlarged by other funds that do not have to be repaid from taxes or from earnings.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Simmer law—substituting for adequate present service—immateriality. The people of a city or town have a right, under the statute, to vote on the question of establishing a municipally owned public utility, to be paid for from the earnings, which right is unaffected by fact that such a plant would substitute its services for a privately owned plant that has been furnishing adequate and satisfactory service.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Conduct of election—"municipal ownership issue"—candidates' statements. Statements made by candidates for municipal office as to what they intended to do in acquiring a public utility plant will not vitiate an election on the proposition of municipal control of said plant without a showing that the election was affected thereby.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291
Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

II BALLOTS

Ballot—contents of. At an election called by a city council on its own motion on the question whether the city shall erect an electric light and power plant and pay for the same out of the earnings of the plant, the ballot need only contain (1) the main proposition, and (2) a statement of the maximum amount to be expended. Manifestly, the law does not contemplate the setting forth of a contract which can only be entered into after the election grants the authority for such a contract.

Hogan v City, 217-504; 250 NW 134

Substantial compliance with statutory ballot. Form of ballot used in election for establishment of a municipal electric light or power plant reviewed, and held to substantially comply with statute and to be unambiguous.

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

Authority—form of ballot. On the question whether a municipality shall erect a light and power plant and pay for the plant from the earnings thereof, the ballot is not fatally defective because it describes the proposed plant as a "municipal light and power plant" instead of a "municipal electric light and power plant".

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Statement of proposal—completeness required. Section 761, C., '35, (requiring certain proposed public measures, when submitted to the people for adoption or rejection, to be printed in full on the ballot) has no application when the question submitted is whether a municipality shall erect an electric light and power plant and pay for the same solely from the earnings thereof.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Ballot—duality. A ballot which definitely limits the expenditure for establishing an electric plant is not subject to the objection that said amount embraces both (1) establishment, and (2) maintenance and operation.

Wyatt v Town, 217-929; 250 NW 141

Dual methods to acquire utility ownership—single purpose. A proposition submitted to the voters to establish a municipal utility plant "by purchase * * * or by construction" is not dual but relates only to the single purpose of acquiring municipal ownership of a public utility.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291
Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Ballot—sufficiency. A ballot which sets forth whether the city or town shall "establish, erect, maintain, and operate" an electric light and power plant, and pay for the same solely from the earnings of said plant, and definitely limits the expenditures for establishment, is all-sufficient without any reference (1) to the maximum rate to be charged consumers, or (2) to the interest rate to be paid on the expenditure, or (3) whether past or future earnings are to be so employed, or (4) whether the plant is to be pledged.

Wyatt v Town, 217-929; 250 NW 141

Fatally defective ballot. A ballot is fatally defective when it fails to clearly indicate to the voter whether a proposed municipal electric light and power plant is to be financed, (1) by ordinary taxation or, (2) by pledging the plant and the net earnings thereof; and this is true tho the ballot states the maximum amount of money to be expended.

Pennington v Fairbanks & Co., 217-1117; 253 NW 60

Expenditure shown on ballot, not on petition for election. The petition authorized by statute (§6132, C., '35) requesting submission to the voters the question of municipal ownership of an electric plant to be paid for from earnings need not state the maximum amount to be expended, but this amount must be stated on the ballot.

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

"Maximum expenditure" requirement defined. At an election to determine whether a city shall erect a light and power plant and pay therefor from the earnings of said plant, the statutory requirement that the ballot "shall state the maximum amount which may be expended" has reference to the initial cost of the completed plant and not to the total of all payments of principal and interest to be made from future earnings.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Ballot showing "electric light or power"—"or" synonymous with "and". Since an electric plant produces energy which may be used for either light or power, a ballot, which states the question as to whether a city should establish an "electric light or power plant", would be readily understood by the voters that the city was seeking to establish an "electric light and power plant".

6134.08 Notice of proposed contract—publication.

Contract invalidated by procedure in re competitive bids. A contract for the construction of an improvement to a municipally-owned waterworks (expenditures thereunder payable from the earnings of the plant) is invalid and therefore enjoined, (1) when the city council first advertises for bids on plans and specifications (prepared by the ultimately successful bidder) which were so lacking in details as to furnish no common standard for competitive bids, and (2) when, on the day for letting the contract, the council caps the climax of its efforts by letting the contract to one of the bidders on his newly proposed and then filed plans and specifications which contained many variations from those on which bids had been invited.

6134.09 Contents of notice.

Citizens' right to challenge validity. Public welfare lodges in citizens of a community the right to challenge the validity of an electric plant construction contract and to enjoin a municipal corporation and its officers from violating their duties and abusing corporate powers if such construction contract is consummated without competitive bidding, made mandatory by statute.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Plants payable out of earnings—bids—sufficiency. After the electors of a city or town have duly authorized the construction of an electric light and power plant to be paid for out of the future earnings of the plant, the call for bids need only be for the carrying out of that which the electors have authorized, to wit: the erection of a complete electric generating and distributing system. This section [§6134-d5] and section 6134-d6, C., '31 [§§6134.09, 6134.10, C., '39], in providing for competitive bidding for "furnishing" electrical energy do not have the effect of requiring, in addition to bids on the specific authorization, bids on various other constructions and outlays in order to enable the city council to enter into a contract for electrical energy without erecting a complete plant as authorized by the electors.

Brutsche v Town, 218-1073; 256 NW 914

Competitive bidding required—object. Under the Simmer law a contract for the construction of improvements by a municipality, such as a municipal electric light and power plant, should be let by competitive bidding, the purpose being to enable the municipal corporation to secure the best bargain for the least money.

Iowa Electric v Cascade, 227-480; 288 NW 633

Avoidance of competitive bidding. To sustain contracts for the construction of municipal utility plants and for payment therefor from plant earnings, when said contracts substantially fail to comply with the requirements of the plans and specifications on which bids are invited, would work a complete avoidance of that part of the statute which mandatorily requires competitive bidding. (Specifications called for a 375 hp engine of a type which had been in a specified use sufficiently long to prove its ability to generate said power without overcrowding. The contract called for a type of engine rated at 375 hp, but which, until shortly prior to the contract, had been rated at 350 hp. The evidence affirmatively showed that said engine had not had the actual service test required by the specifications.) Held, contract illegal.

Greaves v Villisca, 221-776; 266 NW 805

Noncompetitive bidding—injunction.

Weiss v Woodbine, 228- ; 289 NW 469

Call for bids—reference to plans—extension of time—validity. A call for construction bids which states that the work must be completed by a certain date, but refers to the plans and specifications on file, giving to all bidders the same privileges as given to the successful bidder, who had an extension of time clause in his contract, the inclusion of which, in many public contracts, the court will take judicial notice, is not a restriction on competitive bidding, and the bid and contract containing the extension clause was responsive to the call for bids.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Unresponsive bidding — unallowable contract. When a contract for the construction of a proposed public improvement is required by statute to be let on competitive bids, such contract cannot be legally entered into on the basis and in accordance with a bid which fails in any material respect to respond to the proposal for bids. Held, contract illegal because based on, and in accordance with, a bid which failed to respond to the legal proposals:

1. In re time of commencing and completing the work, and
2. In re testing the improvement as a condition to acceptance.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 220-1295; 264 NW 696

Bidder making own specifications—unallowable contract. Competitive bidding on municipal public works is mandatory, but is not obtained when bids under specifications prescribed by the city are rejected, and the contract is awarded to a bidder who bids under his own specifications which are materially and substantially different than the specifications prescribed by the city.

Iowa Co. v Town, 216-1301; 250 NW 136

Bids—illegal contract on modified plans. When competitive bids for the construction of a municipal electric light plant are manda-torily required, and all bids duly advertised for and received are in excess of the authorized expenditure, no legal contract can be let by the simple expedient of substantially reducing the requirements of the plans and specifications, and, without re-advertising, letting the contract to one of the former bidders at a price within the authorized expenditure.

Iowa-Neb. Co. v Villisca, 220-238; 261 NW 423

Specifications—controlling location. Specifications for the construction of an electric plant—payable from plant earnings only—may specify the particular lot on which the plant shall be erected and what shall be paid therefor, the municipality having an option thereon for a reasonable price.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 223-487; 272 NW 624

Estimated quantities as basis for contract—variation with specifications not fatal. In awarding a contract to build an electric plant, the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of "unit prices", as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities, indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Specifying trade named articles. A call for bids under the Simmer law may specify articles by trade name when followed by the words "or equal" and, if a few minor items omit these words, the entire contract is not vitiated when it appears that these particular items were available to all bidders.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Plans and specifications—undue particularity. Specifications for a contemplated municipal electric light and power plant (payable from plant earnings only) should, manifestly, not be in such minute detail as will practically defeat competitive bidding.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 223-487; 272 NW 624

Nullity because of unworkableness. Whether the purchase by a city or town of electrical energy may be financed under section 6134-d1, C., '31 [§6134.01, C., '39], or whether the provisions of this section [§6134-d5] and section 6134-d6 of said code [§§6134.09, 6134.10, C., '39] relative to competitive bidding for furnishing electrical energy are a nullity because of indefiniteness, uncertainty or unworkableness, quaere.

Federal grant for constructing municipal plant. Under §10188, C., '39, authorizing municipal corporations to accept gifts and providing that "conditions attached to such gifts or bequests become binding upon the corporation * * * upon acceptance thereof", a city may accept a federal grant of money to construct a municipal electric light and power plant, tho the grant is conditioned upon the payment of a minimum wage for labor, notwithstanding the Simmer law requiring such contracts be let by competitive bidding, where the wages provided did not in any manner increase the cost of construction.

Iowa Electric v Cascade, 227-480; 288 NW 633

6134.10 Execution of contract.

Form of contract—sufficiency. In proceedings by a municipality preliminary to the letting of a contract for the construction of a light and power plant, an important feature of the "form of contract" which the city is required to prepare and have on file is a definite statement that the plant is to be paid for solely from the earnings of the plant, but the law does not contemplate that said "form of contract" be complete in and of itself.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Objections—public hearing—scope of. The statutory public hearing on objections to a municipality entering into a contract for the erection of an electric plant—payable from plant earnings only—does not contemplate or authorize the introduction of evidence and a trial in re said objections.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 223-487; 272 NW 624

Utility plant—contract and specifications variation first alleged on appeal. A contended variation between the contract for a municipal public utility plant and the specifications, in that the contract omitted the right to call bonds at a certain time, will not be considered on appeal, when such variation, if any, was not an issue in the lower court.

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

Specifications—allowable general provisions. Specifications for the construction of a municipal improvement (e. g., the construction of an electric light plant) may very properly contain a provision requiring the bidders to specify the amount that would be deducted from or added to the bid for supplying specified things by way of substitution, omission, or addition.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 223-487; 272 NW 624

Call for bids on alternate engines—proposals offering several makes of engines—validity. A call for bids on engines to conform to specification sizes designated by "A" and "B" is responded to by a bidder who submits five sizes and makes of engines designated as proposals "A" to "E", inclusive, when all five makes of engines fit the specification classes of "A" or "B".

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

Ordinance repealed and federal application withdrawn—no estoppel to deny general liability for engineering services. Where a city contracted for engineering services necessary to construct a municipal electric light and power plant to be paid for, under the Simmer law, out of plant's future earnings, and then later repealed the ordinance authorizing its construction and adopted a resolution withdrawing the application for the federal loan therefor, yet the city was not estopped to deny a general liability for the engineering services performed, when it was known to the engineering company, when the services were commenced, that no money derived from taxation was payable for any services it might render, and there was no showing of reliance by the plaintiff company on alleged implied obligation to erect the plant.

Burns & McDonnell v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

Federal grant for constructing municipal plant. Under §10188, C., '39, authorizing municipal corporations to accept gifts and providing that "conditions attached to such gifts or bequests become binding upon the corporation * * * upon acceptance thereof", a city may accept a federal grant of money to construct a municipal electric light and power plant, tho the grant is conditioned upon the payment of a minimum wage for labor, notwithstanding the Simmer law requiring such contracts be let by competitive bidding, where the wages provided did not in any manner increase the cost of construction.

Iowa Electric v Cascade, 227-480; 288 NW 633

Completely constructed plant—operation enjoined—nonmoot question. Fact that a municipal electric plant has been built does not preclude, as a moot question, citizens from bringing action to restrain its operation if the contract is void, since question is not moot if there remains anything on which a decision of the court can operate.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

CONDEMNATION OF EXISTING PLANTS

6135 Special condemnation proceedings—limitation.

Power not subject of contract. A municipal arm of the government may not deprive itself by contract,—even on a valid consideration,—of the right of eminent domain duly vested in it.

Herman v Board, 200-1116; 206 NW 35

JURISDICTION, SALE OF PRODUCTS, AND RATES

6141 Jurisdiction of city.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 300; '36 AG Op 307

Natural watercourses—pollution—limitation on right. The right of a riparian owner to cast refuse into a natural stream may be quite materially limited after a portion of his land has been condemned for a public purpose.

Wheatley v City, 213-1187; 240 NW 628

Eminent domain—compensation—allowable elements. In the condemnation of a portion of a farm in order to create a reservoir on a natural stream for waterworks purposes, the following elements may be taken into consideration in fixing the value of the remaining portion of the farm immediately after the condemnation, to wit:

1. The extent to which the uncondemned land will be detrimentally affected by the percolation of water;

2. The detrimental effect on livestock of hunting and shooting on the condemned land, it appearing that the municipality had authorized such acts;

3. The limitation which will to a reasonable certainty be placed upon the landowner's former right to cast drainage from feed lots directly into said stream.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 213-1187; 240 NW 628

6142 Sale of products—rates—taxes—equipment.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 490

Personal liability of property owner. Statutory power in a city or town to "assess reasonable rates upon each tenement" supplied by the municipality with electric light or power does not authorize an ordinance which renders the owner of premises personally liable for electric light or power furnished by the municipality to the owner's tenant.

Onawa v Oil Co., 217-1042; 252 NW 544

Extra-territorial extension of municipal light and power lines—constitutional taxation. Sections 6142 and 8310, C., '31, are constitutional insofar as they authorize cities and towns to levy taxes for extending, beyond their corporate limits, the transmission lines of their municipally owned electric light and power plants.

Carroll v Cedar Falls, 221-277; 261 NW 652

Power to sell excess products. Cities and towns need no statutory authority in order validly to sell the excess products of their municipally owned utility plants. It follows that the unconstitutionality of a statute which authorizes a city, having 7500 people, and owning its electric light plant, to furnish electricity to a town of 400 people is, at the least, very doubtful, and, being doubtful, the statute must be deemed constitutional.

Carroll v Cedar Falls, 221-277; 261 NW 652

Grant of power to fix rates—discretion to modify. The legislature having graciously granted cities and towns the power to fix public utility rates may, at its pleasure, curtail or limit the power.

Iowa-Neb. L. & P. Co. v Villisca, 220-238; 261 NW 423

Allowable discrimination. In fixing rates for a municipally owned water plant, the classification of apartment houses as residences will not be deemed an unlawful discrimination simply on a showing that such classification deprives a complainant of the benefit of a rate granted to department stores, office buildings, and similarly conditioned businesses.

Knotts v Nollen, 206-261; 218 NW 563

Utility plants maintained by taxation—Simmer law not applicable. The statutory provisions for taxation to maintain and operate utility plants, contained in this section and section 6211, have no application to plants established under the Simmer law which are paid for from net earnings.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

6143 Regulation of rates and service.

Discussion. See 9 ILB 49—Rate making; 12 ILR 249—Public utility rates; 13 ILR 145—Regulation and management; 13 ILR 369—Federal regulation; 13 ILR 354—Municipal unit as base for rates; 20 ILR 128—Federal court jurisdiction; 25 ILR 801—Temporary statutes in expediting rate litigation

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 65; '36 AG Op 470

Municipal rates—effect. A reasonable rate for electricity, duly fixed by a municipality is both a maximum and a minimum rate. In other words, a public utility may not legally charge more or less than the prescribed rate.

Mapleton v Serv. Co., 209-400; 223 NW 476; 68 ALR 993

Reserved power over rates. An ordinance drawn in form of a contract, to be accepted by the franchisee, becomes a contract when accepted and is subject to the reserved power specified in this section. 144 Iowa 426 affirmed.

Cedar Rapids Gas Lt. Co. v City, 223 US 655

Inadequate contract rate. An inadequate rate for public-utility services under this section cannot be enforced even tho cloaked in the garb of a franchise contract. 256 Fed. Rep. 929 reversed.

Southern Ia. El. Co. v City, 255 US 539

Rates—ordinance construed. An ordinance which definitely fixes the rate per kilowatt hour which may be charged for electricity must be deemed to fix a rate above which and below which the utility company cannot legally charge, and not a mere fixing of a maximum rate below which legal charges may be made, even tho the ordinance assumes to declare that the rate shall not be exceeded.

In re Ransom, 219-284; 258 NW 78

Rates—violation—recovery denied. Recovery cannot be had for electricity furnished under an oral contract providing a flat rate per month, irrespective of the amount of electricity used, when a municipal ordinance under which the claimant is operating definitely fixes the legal rate at a stated sum per kilowatt hour; nor may recovery be had on quantum meruit when the quantity used is unknown and therefore there is nothing to which to apply the ordinance rate.

In re Ransom, 219-284; 258 NW 78

Minimum monthly ordinance charge—recovery. Recovery on contract for electricity furnished having been denied a utility company, because of a violation of the rate-fixing ordinance, nevertheless recovery may be possible under a minimum monthly charge clause of the ordinance.

In re Ransom, 219-284; 258 NW 78

Contract to light streets not subject to vote. Cities and towns may contract for lighting streets and alleys under §5949, C., '35, without submitting the contract to a vote of the people for approval.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826; 114 ALR 1423

Justifiable refusal to furnish product. A public utility company is within its rights in refusing to furnish its product—electric energy—to one who fails to pay his current bill for such product, and it is not sufficient that the customer tenders payment for future service.

Bailey v Power Co., 209-631; 228 NW 644

6149.1 Bonds.

Issuance of bonds without authorizing vote. A legislative act authorizing boards of trustees of municipally owned waterworks in cities conditioned in a specified way to issue bonds for the purpose of extending or improving said waterworks does not authorize the trustees to issue said bonds without an authorizing vote of the electors of the municipality when, without such act, an authorizing vote of the electors would be necessary under other statutes which were in no manner repealed.

Fowler v Board, 214-395; 238 NW 618

SURPLUS EARNINGS

6151.1 Transfer of surplus earnings.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 643; '38 AG Op 63

Simmer law—municipal utility—power to make profits. Municipal corporations owe their origin to, and derive their powers from, the legislature and can exercise only such powers as are granted in express words or fairly implied from, or incident to, the powers expressly granted, or such powers as are essential to purposes of corporation, and, under the Simmer law, permitting cities to pay for public utilities from future earnings, a municipal corporation has statutory power to make profits in excess of statutory demands.

“Surplus earned” defined. A municipally owned water plant may not be said to have “a surplus earned from the operation” of the said plant within the meaning of this section, unless in the operation of said plant the income from water rentals and the like, other than taxation, exceeds the cost of operation.

CHAPTER 313

PURCHASE AND CONSTRUCTION OF WATERWORKS IN CERTAIN CITIES

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 269

6155 Contracts—bonds—purchase of waterworks.

Breach of contract to build. In an action for damages based on alleged breach of a written contract for the erection, under written specifications, of a structure (especially when it is of magnitude and complexity), general conclusion allegations by plaintiff of the use by defendant of defective materials and workmanship must, on proper motion, be accompanied and supported by fact allegations showing with reasonable certainty, (1) wherein said material and workmanship were defective, (2) the location of the several alleged defects, and (under some circumstances) when each of said defects became manifest, and (3) the particular specification which was violated by using such material and workmanship.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 220-685; 263 NW 1

Stockholder's action to establish interest in city waterworks. A stockholder in a waterworks company, who advocated purchase of its waterworks by city and assisted in carrying an election authorizing the same, and who did not disclose to the city his claim to an interest in or lien upon the property, was estopped to assert as against the city, which purchased the property and made improvements, that city's grantors did not have good title and were trustees ex maleficio, or that the city took property burdened with a trust for his benefit.

Knotts v Nollen, 206-261; 218 NW 563

CHAPTER 314

PURCHASE OF WATERWORKS BY CITIES OF FIFTY THOUSAND OR OVER

6162 Purchase—condemnation.

Conveyances in lieu of condemnation. A deed given to a railroad for a strip of land to be used as a right of way, and deeds of a like kind, given by the landowner when condemnation may be imminent if he refuses to convey, should be given such liberal construction as will effectuate the intention of the parties and fully protect the rights of the grantor and his assigns.

Keokuk County v Reinier, 227-499; 288 NW 676

Stockholder's action to establish interest in city waterworks. A stockholder in a waterworks company, who advocated purchase of its waterworks by city and assisted in carrying an election authorizing the same, and who did not disclose to the city his claim to an interest in or lien upon the property, was estopped to assert as against the city, which purchased the property and made improvements, that city's grantors did not have good title and were trustees ex maleficio, or that the city took property burdened with a trust for his benefit.

Collisions with motor vehicles. See under §8156 (III)

Contracts—legality. A contract between a street railway company and a local labor union representing the employees will not be decreed illegal by a court of equity on the ground that the contract requires the company, against public policy, to maintain two employees on each car (1) when the city has not exercised its undoubted power over such subject matter, (2) when the city is not a party to the action, and (3) when the object of the action seems to be to obtain a declaratory decree only.

Power not subject of contract. A municipal arm of the government may not deprive itself by contract,—even on a valid consideration,—of the right of eminent domain duly vested in it.

Herman v Board, 200-1116; 206 NW 35

Governmental agency to be treated as individual. A governmental agency has a right, in eminent domain proceedings, to have the jury instructed that such agency is entitled to have the cause tried and determined precisely as tho said agency were an individual.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Construction of wharf—paramount right of state. The construction by the state of a wharf below high watermark on a navigable lake (to the bed of which the state has title), in aid of navigation, and without compensation to the riparian owner, is but the exercise of a right and the execution of a trust which is paramount to any right of ingress and egress of said riparian owner.

Peck v Const. Co., 216-519; 245 NW 131; 89 ALR 1132

Wharf—what constitutes. The character of a public wharf in a navigable lake as an aid to navigation is not negated by the fact that the wharf is in good faith so constructed in a circular form that vehicles going upon the wharf may conveniently turn and depart therefrom.

Peck v Const. Co., 216-519; 245 NW 131; 89 ALR 1132

Acquisition for parks—scope of power. Statutory power to acquire land for parks embraces the power to acquire land for golf courses.

Golf View Co. v City, 222-433; 269 NW 451

Presumptive power to acquire—burden of proof. A municipality as defendant in an action for specific performance of its alleged contract for the purchase of land, has the burden to establish its plea that its attempted purchase of said land was for a purpose not authorized by law. Record reviewed and held said burden had not been met.

Golf View Co. v City, 222-433; 269 NW 451

6201 Streets—conditions prescribed.

Streets—conveyance of title after acceptance and vacation. In an action involving the title to a strip of land which had once been part of a street between town lots, it made no difference whether such street had ever been accepted by the town and opened for public use and later vacated and conveyances of the land made by the town, so long as a question of acquiescence and adverse possession was the decisive issue between the claimants.

City's supervision. Cities and towns possess a wide, tho not unlimited, discretion in opening, controlling and vacating streets and alleys, and courts will not interfere except in a clear case of arbitrary and unjust exercise of such power.

Stoessel v Ottumwa, 227-1021; 289 NW 718

Streets—conveyance of title after acceptance and vacation. In an action involving the title to a strip of land which had once been part of a street between town lots, it made no difference whether such street had ever been accepted by the town and opened for public use and later vacated and conveyances of the land made by the town, so long as a question of acquiescence and adverse possession was the decisive issue between the claimants.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

Vacation and conveyance—effect. A city has no property rights in a cab stand established on land vacated by the city and conveyed to a railway company.

Red Top v McGlashing, 204-791; 213 NW 791

Vacating alley—adjoining owner's rights. Action by city in vacating alley and conveying it to grantee, who closed the alley by fencing it as a part of his adjoining land, which still gave adjoining property owner ingress and egress to his property at both front and rear, and where only interference with public right was use of alley by children going to and from school, was not an abuse of city's discretion, and such action did not deprive such adjoining property owner of convenient and reasonable access to and from his property or its use.

Taxation and assessment—conflicting statutes. The general statutory declaration that designated agricultural lands within the limits of a city or town shall not be taxed "for any city or town purpose" must be deemed modified by a contemporaneous specific statute to the effect that a tax may be levied "upon all the taxable property in such city" for the purpose of paying the cost of paving arterial highways into and out of the city. Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 303; '38 AG Op 266

Statutes part of special assessment certificate holder's contract. The right of a special assessment certificate holder to take advantage of statutes providing that special assessments be collected in the same manner as ordinary taxes, and to have the property sold to pay assessments, was a part of his contract when he purchased the certificates, and was not defeated when another statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the tax sale of property against which the county holds a tax sale certificate.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Amendment of tax sale statute. When a statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the sale of property against which the county held tax sale certificates, the amendment did not apply to other statutes requiring the county treasurer to sell property for delinquent special assessments, as an act amending a specified statute cannot be construed as amending an unmentioned statute, and repeal of statutes by implication is not favored.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

6229 Taxes paid over.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 241; '36 AG Op 303

State v Hanson, 210-773; 231 NW 428

Illegal payment of funds to city with resulting loss. The act of a county treasurer in illegally paying collected municipal taxes to the city treasurer is the proximate cause of the loss of said funds consequent on the deposit of said funds in an insolvent bank by the city treasurer,—it being assumed that the question of negligence and proximate cause is a material inquiry in such a case.

"Taxable property" defined. "Taxable property" embraces "moneys and credits", within the meaning of the constitutional provision which limits municipal indebtedness. (Const., Art. XI, §3.)

Mack v Sch. Dist., 200-1190; 206 NW 145

General obligations exceeding limit—invalidity—trust fund. School warrants which are in form the general obligations of the district, and issued under a purported contract of the district providing for such unconditional issuance, are void if in excess of the constitutional limit of indebtedness, notwithstanding the fact that the said contract carries the inference that the warrants will be paid from a special fund arising from the sale of bonds.

Carstens v Sch. Dist., 218-812; 255 NW 702

Obligation of contracts—tax as asset. In the marshaling of the assets and liabilities of a municipal corporation on the issue whether the debts of the corporation are in excess of constitutional limitation, a duly levied and collectible tax must be deemed a municipal asset, in the absence of proof showing the definite purpose of the tax, and, if for current expenses, that legal obligations have been or necessarily will be created, sufficient to offset said tax fund.

Holst v Sch. Dist., 203-288; 211 NW 398

Obligation of contracts—what constitutes a debt. A contract between an architect and a municipal corporation, which contract imposes a financial obligation on the corporation only in case the corporation enters into a further contract for the erection of the building which the architect has planned, is properly classified as a liability of the corporation's from the moment the building contract is entered into. So held on the issue whether the municipal debt was in excess of constitutional limitation.

Holst v Sch. Dist., 203-288; 211 NW 398

Construction of contract. The specific amount for which a municipal corporation obligates itself in a written contract for the construction of a schoolhouse in return for the contractor's agreement to "provide all the material and perform all of the work," etc., is in no wise lessened by a contract clause that said price "includes five thousand dollar figure for millwork".

Holst v Sch. Dist., 203-288; 211 NW 398

Computation of assets and liabilities. In the marshaling of the assets and liabilities of a municipal corporation on the issue whether the debts of the corporation are in excess of constitutional limitation, collected and uncollected taxes and tuition due the municipality cannot be deemed an asset when it is shown that the current expenses of the municipality will consume the entire amount of said taxes and tuition; otherwise as to municipal property available for sale.

Trepp v Sch. Dist., 213-944; 240 NW 247

Obligation of contracts—unconstitutional indebtedness not curable. The legislature has no constitutional power to authorize a tax levy or a bond issue to pay, in whole or in part, a constitutionally prohibited indebtedness. More concretely, if a municipality creates an indebtedness which is in part valid, and in part constitutionally invalid, the invalid part may not be cured (1) by the voting of a tax to pay or reduce the indebtedness, or (2) by the issuance of bonds, and the application of the proceeds thereof to the same purpose.

Trepp v Sch. Dist., 213-944; 240 NW 247

Funding bonds create no additional debt. A county whose valid bonded indebtedness is beyond the constitutional limitation (because of a drop in property valuations) may, under an authorizing statute, validly refund said bonds, without creating any additional indebtedness in a constitutional sense, by issuing and selling at par and for cash, refunding bonds, and by irrevocably placing the proceeds of said sale in a separate and distinct trust fund which is also irrevocably pledged for the sole purpose of discharging the particularly designated bonds which are being refunded.

Banta v Clarke County, 219-1195; 260 NW 329

Obligations payable out of earnings. The expenditure which is necessary to establish a municipal electric light and power plant and which is to be paid solely from the earnings of the said plant, is not a "debt" within the constitutional and statutory limitation on indebtedness.

Wyatt v Town, 217-929; 250 NW 141

Electric plant payable out of earnings—contract not "debt" prohibited by constitution or statute. A contract for municipal electric plant payable out of earnings does not create a "debt" within meaning of constitutional inhibition where, altho plant was constructed on site owned by town, it was not shown that furnishing of site was part of consideration nor that site had a substantial value. In an action to enjoin the carrying out of such contract, the burden of proof to show that contract created a debt within the meaning of such constitutional inhibition was on the plaintiff electric company.

Iowa So. Utilities v Cassill, 69 F 2d, 703

Simmer law—federal money grants. The words "maximum amount to be expended" in the so-called "Simmer law" refer not to the size of the plant but to the amount to be paid from the earnings. It follows that the construction fund may be enlarged by other funds that do not have to be repaid from taxes or from earnings.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291
Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Election — legality — immaterial questions. On the narrow question of the legality of a called election to vote on the erection of a municipal light and power plant, the question whether the plant if authorized and erected would create an unlawful indebtedness is quite immaterial.

Hogan v City, 217-504; 250 NW 134

Prior indebtedness—supported findings—conclusiveness. On the issue whether the indebtedness of a municipal corporation exceeded the constitutional limit, the supported finding of the trial court that a certain indebtedness was created prior to the indebtedness in question, or that the indebtedness in question "did not precede" said other indebtedness, is not reviewable by the appellate court.

Trepp v Sch. Dist., 213-944; 240 NW 247

Tax list conclusive. On the issue whether the indebtedness of a municipal corporation exceeds the constitutional limitation, the court cannot add other property to the "last state and county tax list."

6241 Election required.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 250; '38 AG Op 63

Issuance of bonds without authorizing vote. A legislative act authorizing boards of trustees of municipally owned waterworks in cities conditioned in a specified way to issue bonds for the purpose of extending or improving said waterworks does not authorize the trustees to issue said bonds without an authorizing vote of the electors of the municipality when, without such act, an authorizing vote of the electors would be necessary under other statutes which were in no manner repealed; especially is this true in view of the legislative history of the state.

Fowler v Board, 214-395; 238 NW 618

6242 Initiation of proceedings.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 250

Election—different methods of calling. Section 6132 and this section, C., '31, provide optional methods for submitting to the people the question whether a municipal light and power plant shall be erected and paid for out of the earnings of the plant.

Hogan v City, 217-504; 250 NW 134

Petition—sufficiency. A statutory provision that a petition for an election to vote authorization for a public utility shall state that such plant cannot be "purchased, erected, built, or furnished" within the limits of a certain percentage on the property valuation is complied with by stating that such plant cannot be "established" within the limits of such percentage, it appearing that no such plant then existed within the municipality.

Iowa Service v City, 203-610; 213 NW 401

Petitioners for election—qualifications. The electors of a city or town who are such under the constitution of this state, even tho their names do not appear on the official books of registered voters of the city or town, are qualified to petition for the calling of an election to vote on the proposition whether the municipality shall erect an electric light and power plant.

Piuser v Sioux City, 220-308; 262 NW 551; 100 ALR 1298

Petition—forged signatures—effect. The fact that a petition to a city council for an election to vote on the proposition whether the city shall construct a specified public utility plant contains both forged signatures of electors and signatures of nonresidents of the city will not invalidate the petition if it be otherwise sufficient after the objectionable signatures are excluded.

Piuser v Sioux City, 220-308; 262 NW 551; 100 ALR 1298

Petition—verification not required. A petition for the calling of an election in a city or town to vote on the proposition whether the municipality shall construct an electric light and power plant, need not be accompanied by an affidavit as to the electoral qualifications of the signers. This chapter contains no such requirement.

Piuser v Sioux City, 220-308; 262 NW 551; 100 ALR 1298

Petition for election—insufficiency—burden of proof. He who alleges the insufficiency of a duly filed petition for the calling of a municipal election to vote on the proposition whether the municipality shall erect an electric light and power plant, has the burden to sustain his allegation when the petition is apparently sufficient and apparently in conformity with the statute.

Piuser v Sioux City, 220-308; 262 NW 551; 100 ALR 1298

Nondisqualifying interest of judge. A judge of the district court does not, by signing a petition to a city council for an election to vote on the proposition whether the city shall erect a specified public utility plant, thereby disqualify himself from fully presiding over litigation questioning the legal sufficiency of said petition.

6245 Questions submitted—manner of submission.

Election—ballot—sufficiency. A ballot which sets forth whether the city or town shall "establish, erect, maintain, and operate" an electric light and power plant, and pay for the same solely from the earnings of said plant, and definitely limits the expenditures for establishment, is all-sufficient without any reference (1) to the maximum rate to be charged consumers, or (2) to the interest rate to be paid on the expenditure, or (3) whether past or future earnings are to be so employed, or (4) whether the plant is to be pledged.

Wyatt v Town, 217-929; 250 NW 141

6246 Majorities required.

Plat—nonconformity with statutes—proof. In an action to quiet title against paving assessment certificate holders, an unsworn petition supported by unsworn written statements showing, as contention for invalidity of assessments the nonconformity of plat to statutory requirements, is not the sufficient evidence as in equity will support a judgment by default and the burden of proof thereof being on the plaintiff, the petition was properly dismissed.

I COMMON-LAW DEDICATION

Fundamental requirements. The mere use of a roadway, howsoever long continued, will not ripen into an irrevocable private easement in favor of the private user, nor into a dedicated public highway in favor of the public generally, unless, in the case of a claim of private easement, the fact is established, independent of the evidence of use, that the private user has, for at least ten years, and to the knowledge of the landowner, asserted or claimed a hostile right to use such way, and unless, in the case of a claimed public dedication, the fact is established that the land owner has, by deliberate, unequivocal, and decisive acts and declarations, manifested a positive intention permanently to abandon the land in question to the public for highway purposes.

Culver v Converse, 207-1173; 224 NW 834

Implied dedication. An implied dedication of land for a public way and an implied acceptance thereof by the public will not be decreed on evidence tending to show a very perfunctory assumption of jurisdiction over the land by the public authorities, plus a use which is as consistent with the theory of mere permission by the owner as with the theory of rightful public use.

Dugan v Zurmuehlen, 203-1114; 211 NW 986

Establishment of highway—prescription. A public way by prescription will not be decreed on evidence which is just as consistent with the theory of the owner that whatever use was made of the land as a road was purely permissive as with the theory that the use was hostile, adverse, and under a claim of right.

Dugan v Zurmuehlen, 203-1114; 211 NW 986

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence that the public highway authorities had, on at least one occasion, worked a roadway, coupled with evidence of use of the roadway by the public for many years, may furnish sufficient evidence of a dedication and the acceptance thereof.

Dillon v Fehd, 207-351; 222 NW 881

II STATUTORY DEDICATION

(a) IN GENERAL

Fatally indefinite deed. A deed to a strip of land is insufficient, in and of itself, to constitute a dedication of land for highway purposes when the deed is void for uncertainty in the description.

Beim v Carlson, 209-1001; 227 NW 421

Deed—effect as to subsequently laid out streets. An ordinary railroad right of way deed simply grants to the railroad an easement, and works no impediment to the vesting in a municipality, subject to such easement, of streets subsequently laid out across such right of way; and especially so when the railroad company acquiesces in and recognizes the statutory dedication to the public.

Ackley v Elec. Co., 206-533; 220 NW 315

(b) CONSTRUCTION OF DEDICATION

Evidence—sufficiency. Plat of a municipal addition reviewed, in the light of explanatory testimony, and held insufficient to show that an irregular tract therein had been dedicated as a public street.

Shuler v Sand Co., 203-134; 209 NW 731

(c) INTENTION TO DEDICATE

Conclusiveness. The recorded plat of an addition must be held to control boundary lines, in the absence of evidence sufficient to establish the acquiescence of the interested parties in other boundary lines. (See under §12306.)

Jackson v Snyder, 202-262; 208 NW 321

(d) REVOCATION OF DEDICATION

Streets—conveyance of title after acceptance and vacation. In an action involving the title to a strip of land which had once been part of a street between town lots, it made no difference whether such street had ever been accepted by the town and opened for public use and later vacated and conveyances of the land made by the town, so long as a question of acquiescence and adverse possession was the decisive issue between the claimants.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

III ACCEPTANCE OF DEDICATION

Adverse possession—unaccepted platted street applicability. Where parties claim land dedicated in plat as a street, but not being accepted, never became a street, the public has no interest therein and the doctrine of adverse possession is applicable.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Use of part of street—access to properties—no vacation of street. Where plaintiffs and defendants, as property owners, abutting on a dedicated but unaccepted street, have for years used a part of the street in entering and leaving their respective properties, thereby acquiring an easement in such part of the street, and where defendants acquired title to the other part of the street by adverse possession and acquiescence, the plaintiffs are not entitled to vacate such street.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Platted streets—nonacceptance—effect. Acceptance of dedication being essential to establishment of a street, where a municipality never accepted a certain plat, the streets remain private property. Purchasers of lots may acquire an easement thereon for access to their premises.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Statutes of limitations—nonapplicability to nonaccepted street. In a quiet title action where land was dedicated but never accepted as street in unincorporated village, the rule that statute of limitations will not run against a municipality exercising a governmental function, does not apply.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

IV PROPRIETARY INTEREST OF CITY OR TOWN

Village streets—ownership. All highways appearing on a village plat become streets and belong to the municipality as soon as legal incorporation is effected.

Ackley v Elec. Co., 206-533; 220 NW 315

Right of way deed—abandonment—effect. A deed to a strip of land for highway purposes is ipso facto annulled and rendered ineffective by the definite abandonment of the proposal to establish the highway. In other words, the municipality may not, years after definitely abandoning the project, establish the highway and claim anything under the deed.

Beim v Carlson, 209-1001; 227 NW 421

Streets—conveyance of title after acceptance and vacation. In an action involving the title to a strip of land which had once been part of a street between town lots, it made no difference whether such street had ever been accepted by the town and opened for public use and later vacated and conveyances of the land made by the town, so long as a question of acquiescence and adverse possession was the decisive issue between the claimants.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

V PROPRIETARY INTEREST OF PROPERTY OWNER

Performance of contract—partial failure of title—alley as nonincumbrance. A vendor who seeks to recover the entire contract price of land which he had contracted to convey, even tho a portion thereof proves to be a public alley, cannot support his claim on the theory that the public alley was a benefit to that portion of the land to which he had good title, and was not an incumbrance.

Van Duzer v Engeldinger, 209-150; 227 NW 591

6282 Streets, alleys, and public grounds.

Streets—nonuser—adverse possession—estoppel. Tho a street be legally established, yet where (1) the municipality does not open up the street, or there is nonuser for the statutory period, and (2) private rights have been acquired by adverse possession, then abandonment may be presumed, the public estopped from asserting any rights therein, and public rights in street extinguished.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Use of part of street—access to properties—no vacation of street. Where plaintiffs and defendants, as property owners, abutting on a dedicated but unaccepted street, have for years used a part of the street in entering and leaving their respective properties, thereby acquiring an easement in such part of the street, and where defendants acquired title to the other part of the street by adverse possession and acquiescence, the plaintiffs are not entitled to vacate such street.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

6284 Vacation by lot owners—petition—notice.

Action to vacate municipal plat. In an action for the vacation of a county auditor's plat of land within a city or town, the county auditor is not a necessary party.

Schemmel v Town, 214-321; 242 NW 89

Vacation of plat by court. A county auditor's plat may be vacated by a court of equity at the instance of a plaintiff who, since the plat was duly executed, has become the owner of all the various tracts embraced in said plat.

Schemmel v Town, 214-321; 242 NW 89

Vacation of plat—when city may not object. A city or town may not justly complain of the vacation of an auditor's plat of land within the municipality when no public property of any kind is located on the land, and when legitimate and authorized municipal taxation is in no manner limited.

Schemmel v Town, 214-321; 242 NW 89

Use of part of street—access to properties—no vacation of street. Where plaintiffs and defendants, as property owners, abutting on a dedicated but unaccepted street, have for years used a part of the street in entering and leaving their respective properties, thereby acquiring an easement in such part of the street, and where defendants acquired title to the other part of the street by adverse possession and acquiescence, the plaintiffs are not entitled to vacate such street.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

6286 Decree.

Use of part of street—access to properties—no vacation of street. Where plaintiffs and defendants, as property owners, abutting on a dedicated but unaccepted street, have for years used a part of the street in entering and leaving their respective properties, thereby acquiring an easement in such part of the street, and where defendants acquired title to the other part of the street by adverse possession and acquiescence, the plaintiffs are not entitled to vacate such street.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Streets—conveyance of title after acceptance and vacation. In an action involving the title to a strip of land which had once been part of a street between town lots, it made no difference whether such street had ever been accepted by the town and opened for public use and later vacated and conveyances of the land made by the town, so long as a question of acquiescence and adverse possession was the decisive issue between the claimants.

6310 Pension funds.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 232; '32 AG Op 120; 153; '34 AG Op 613

Failure to maintain pension fund—proper remedy. An action at law against a city for judgment consequent on the failure of the council to perform its mandatory duty to levy a tax sufficient to meet and pay pensions for firemen and policemen, will not lie either on the theory of contract or damages. Mandamus is the proper remedy.

Lage v City, 212-53; 235 NW 761

Fireman—pension—service prior to adoption of pension plan. Any city or town having an organized fire department must pay to a retired fireman, who was on a monthly salary, his statutory pension when he becomes eligible, if it has become a pension-paying department prior thereto, altho it may not have been such a department for all of the 22 years that the pensioner was in service.

Mathewson v Board, 226-61; 283 NW 256

Deposit of funds—nonpreference. The trustees of a municipal fireman's pension fund may validly make a bank deposit of its funds in an amount sufficient to meet current pension demands. It follows that if the bank becomes insolvent the trustees are simply depositors and no preference over other depositors exists.

Andrew v Bank, 214-105; 241 NW 412

Wrongful deposit defined—preference. A deposit in a bank of municipal firemen's pension funds under conditions which deprive the trustees of the power to immediately withdraw said funds, is wrongful and being wrongful the trustees do not lose title to said funds. It follows that in case the bank becomes insolvent the deposit is entitled to preferential payment from the cash on hand at the time of insolvency; and it matters not that the trustees and bank are in pari delicto.

Nature of right. The right to a pension becomes a vested and enforceable right, upon the happening of the statutory facts which mature the right.

Gaffney v Young, 200-1030; 205 NW 865

Nonbar by lapse of time. The right to make application for and to enforce the allowance of a pension which has actually accrued is barred by no lapse of time.

Gaffney v Young, 200-1030; 205 NW 865

Sanitation officer. The sanitation and quarantine officer appointed by the mayor from the police force of a city (§2232, C., '27) is within the benefits of the statutory policemen's pension fund.

Dempsey v Alber, 212-1134; 236 NW 86; 238 NW 33

Fireman serving prior to adoption of pension plan. Any city or town having an organized fire department must pay to a retired fireman, who was on a monthly salary, his statutory pension when he becomes eligible, if it has become a pension-paying department prior thereto, altho it may not have been such a department for all of the 22 years that the pensioner was in service.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 373

Workmen's compensation—when denied. The minor children of a deceased policeman who was a member of an organized police department and contributing to the statutory pension fund of said department, and who was killed while attempting to effect an arrest and at a time when he was not actually "pensioned", are not entitled to compensation under the workmen's compensation act, notwithstanding section 1422, Code, 1927. 6322 Decision of board.

Certiorari (?) or mandamus (?). Certiorari and not mandamus is the proper remedy to test the legality of the action of the trustees in denying a pension to an applicant.

Gaffney v Young, 200-1030; 205 NW 865

Riley v City, 203-1240; 212 NW 716

Review on question of facts. Certiorari will lie to review the action of the trustees of a statutory pension fund in denying relief to an applicant when the conceded or proven facts mandatorily require the granting of such relief.

Dempsey v Alber, 212-1134; 236 NW 86; 238 NW 38

Findings and orders—conclusiveness. An unquestioned, nonfraudulent order or finding by the board of trustees of the policemen's pension fund, on a due application for retirement on a pension, that the applicant was not entitled to such pension, constitutes a conclusive adjudication of the right to such pension, even tho the board did not act on the advice of a physician as required by statute, and even tho the board otherwise acted irregularly.

Riley v Board, 210-449; 228 NW 578

Conclusiveness. The official decision of the board of trustees of the firemen's pension fund that an applicant was not entitled to a pension on account of an alleged injury, is final and conclusive in the absence of fraud, and fraud will not be presumed in the absence of proof thereof. So held as to a claimed injury which had, apparently, been concealed for some nine years before being presented as a ground for pension.

Nuisance—repair shop in connection with garage—injunction. 6392 Repair of dwelling.

Injury to tenant—common law rules. The housing law (ch 323, C., '31) providing that "Every dwelling and all the parts thereof shall be kept in good repair by the owner", does not change the common law rule of tort liability of the lessor to the lessee.

Johnson v Carter, 218-587; 255 NW 864; 93 ALR 774

Negligence of tenant—liability of landlord. Principle recognized that a property owner who has parted with full possession and control of his premises by lease is not liable to third persons for injuries caused by the negligence of the tenant.

Updegraff v City, 210-382; 226 NW 928

Leased premises—liability—res ipsa loquitur. With respect to trapdoor in coliseum leased by one defendant to another for circus conducted by a third party, doctrine of res ipsa loquitur held not to apply to injury to one falling into opening, especially where the trapdoor was not wholly under the control of defendants.

Work v Coliseum Co., (NOR); 207 NW 679

Causal connection with injury necessary—no conjecture and speculation in verdict. There must be causal connection between an injury caused by falling from a fire escape because of an alleged defect in the top step. When the allegation is not substantiated by the evidence, any more than by the plaintiff's testimony, stating that "something moved", that he "caught his heel on the step", it would be mere conjecture and speculation to base a verdict thereon, and verdicts must rest on something more substantial.

Gowing v Field, 225-729; 281 NW 281

Negligence—trespassing children. The owner or occupier of real property is under no legal obligation to make or keep the premises safe for trespassers or bare licensees. So held where a child fell through an opening in the floor of a building which was undergoing reconstruction after a fire.

Battin v Cornwall, 218-42; 253 NW 842

Independent contractor as invitee—known danger revealed—otherwise reasonable care. Person, employing an independent contractor to put steam pipes in downspouting, owes only the duty to such invitee to use reasonable care for his safety, and to warn the contractor as to defects or dangers known to the employer and not apparent to the contractor. The employer is not responsible to the contractor for injuries from defects that the contractor knew of or, in the exercise of ordinary care, ought to have known of.

ANALYSIS

I IN GENERAL II RESTRICTIONS IN DEEDS

I IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 11 ILR 152—Zoning ordinances

Prohibiting erection of building. The legislative grant of power in §5756, C., '27, to regulate the erection of buildings, does not embrace the power to prohibit the erection of buildings, and the power to prohibit will not be deemed supplied because of the existence of the power in other statutes (chs 324, 325, C., '27), of which the city has never availed itself.

Downey v City, 208-1273; 227 NW 125

Building restrictions—abrogation by ordinance. Building restrictions which constitute covenants running with the land are not abrogated by a subsequently enacted municipal zoning ordinance which is contrary to such building restrictions but which distinctly disclaims any intent to abrogate any existing contract restrictions.

Burgess v Magarian, 214-694; 243 NW 356

Building restrictions—enforcement. Building restrictions prohibiting the erection of a gasoline filling station within a certain addition should be enforced on a proper showing even tho immediately outside said addition a gasoline filling station has been erected.

Burgess v Magarian, 214-694; 243 NW 356

Illegal building permit—nonestoppel to question. The holder of an illegal building permit may not, in an action by injured property owners to restrain operations under the permit, successfully contend that his permit is beyond judicial cancellation because he has already expended a substantial sum in reliance on said permit.

Zimmerman v O'Meara, 215-1140; 245 NW 715

Building permit for dog hospital—revocability. A duly issued building permit is more than a mere "license", and after a building permit is issued under a city's zoning ordinance to a veterinary surgeon who made full disclosure to the city of his plans to build a "dog hospital", with his own living quarters on the second floor, in a "hospital" zoned district, and after the building inspector consulted the city attorney, and after veterinary surgeon had spent considerable money toward constructing the building, an order revoking the permit was illegal and reviewable by certiorari.

Crow v Board, 227-324; 288 NW 145

Undertaking establishment. The operation, under formal municipal permit, of an undertaking and embalming establishment in a city, in a territory designated by a duly enacted zoning ordinance as a commercial district, will not be enjoined on the sole ground that, being adjacent to a residence, said operation will have a depressing mental effect on the occupant and owner of said residence and on the members of his family.

Kirk v Mabis, 215-769; 246 NW 759; 87 ALR 1055

Wrongful exercise of judicial function. A city is not liable for damages consequent on the wrongful attempt of the city council to revoke a permit granted by it for the erection of a store building; nor are the individual members of the council liable for such damages, it appearing that they acted in good faith, but under a misapprehension of their legal power. (See under §5738.)

Rehmann v City, 204-798; 215 NW 957; 55 ALR 430; 34 NCCA 480

II RESTRICTIONS IN DEEDS

Covenants—construction—“buildings”—intent of parties. The word “building” as used in restrictive covenants in deeds of conveyance will be so construed as to give effect to the manifest intention and purposes of the parties. Held, inter alia, that structures for screening sand, and a derrick with hoisting machinery were “buildings” within the meaning of restrictive covenants against the erection of buildings which would cut off a view.

Curtis v Schmidt, 212-1279; 237 NW 463

Building restrictions—knowledge of. A grantee of land who, at the time of purchasing knows, generally, that there are building restrictions running with the land, is bound by such restrictions even tho they are omitted from the deed taken by him.

Burgess v Magarian, 214-694; 243 NW 356

Tax deed destroys prior chain. A valid tax deed issued on a sale for nonpayment of general taxes extinguishes all restrictive covenants in the chain of title of previous owners. So held as to a restriction against erecting or placing a business or store building on the lot in question.

Nedderman v Des Moines, 221-1352; 268 NW 36

6458 Board of adjustment.

Building permit for dog hospital—revocability. A duly issued building permit is more than a mere “license”, and after a building permit is issued under a city’s zoning ordinance to a veterinary surgeon who made full disclosure to the city of his plans to build a “dog hospital”, with his own living quarters on the second floor, in a “hospital” zoned district, and after the building inspector consulted the city attorney, and after veterinary surgeon had spent considerable money toward constructing the building, an order revoking the permit was illegal and reviewable by certiorari.

Crow v Board, 227-324; 288 NW 145

6461 Appeals.

Revocation—exclusive remedy. When a building permit has been nonarbitrarily revoked by the city building inspector who issued it, the sole and exclusive remedy of the permittee is to appeal to the board of adjustment which is specifically provided for that and other related purposes.

Call Co. v City, 219-572; 259 NW 33

6463 Powers.

Arbitrary exercise of power. A board of adjustment, whose powers under a zoning ordinance are substantially identical with the powers granted such boards by this statute, acts wholly without legal authority when it grants to one of many property owners, similarly or identically situated as regards their property, the right to so structurally alter his residence as to convert said residence into a duplex in admitted disregard of the ordinance requirement as to area of lot per family, and to the damage of all property owners within the district.

Zimmerman v O’Meara, 215-1140; 245 NW 715

Nonarbitrary revocation. The revocation by a building inspector of a building permit issued by him, on the ground of illegality of the original issuance, cannot be deemed an arbitrary revocation when it is made to appear that the legality of the original issuance is very questionable.

Call Co. v City, 219-572; 259 NW 33

Permissible revocation. A building permit issued by a city building inspector is revocable by the nonarbitrary action of the inspector when the permittee has not materially and detrimentally altered his position in reliance on the permit.

Call Co. v City, 219-572; 259 NW 33

Building permit for dog hospital—revocability. A duly issued building permit is more than a mere “license”, and after a building permit is issued under a city’s zoning ordinance to a veterinary surgeon who made full disclosure to the city of his plans to build a “dog hospital”, with his own living quarters on the second floor, in a “hospital” zoned district, and after the building inspector consulted the city attorney, and after veterinary surgeon had spent considerable money toward constructing the building, an order revoking the permit was illegal and reviewable by certiorari.

Crow v Board, 227-324; 288 NW 145

6464 Decision on appeal.

Building permit for dog hospital—revocability. A duly issued building permit is more than a mere “license”, and after a building permit is issued under a city’s zoning ordinance to a veterinary surgeon who made full disclosure to the city of his plans to build a “dog hospital”, with his own living quarters on the second floor, in a “hospital” zoned district, and after the building inspector consulted the city attorney, and after veterinary surgeon had spent considerable money toward constructing the building, an order revoking the permit was illegal and reviewable by certiorari.

Crow v Board, 227-324; 288 NW 145

6466 Petition for certiorari.

Illegal modification in zoning ordinance. A detrimentally affected property owner may maintain injunction to restrain the carrying out of a wholly illegal modification of a zoning ordinance when he had no notice of such modification until after the expiration of the thirty days provided by statute for certiorari.

Zimmerman v O'Meara, 215-1140; 245 NW 715

Building permit for dog hospital—revocability. A duly issued building permit is more than a mere "license", and after a building permit is issued under a city's zoning ordinance to a veterinary surgeon who made full disclosure to the city of his plans to build a "dog hospital", with his own living quarters on the second floor, in a "hospital" zoned district, and after the building inspector consulted the city attorney, and after veterinary surgeon had spent considerable money toward constructing the building, an order revoking the permit was illegal and reviewable by certiorari.

6469 Trial—judgment—costs.

Certiorari—procedure. Certiorari to review an order by the board of adjustment in re municipal zoning is not necessarily triable de novo on the return to the writ. Plaintiff, on proper allegation, has the legal right to introduce testimony (when it is not already in the return, or when the facts are in dispute) to show that the order of the board is (1) clearly arbitrary and unreasonable, or (2) is contrary to the public interest and to the spirit of the zoning ordinance. (See under §12464.)

Anderson v Jester, 206-452; 221 NW 354

CHAPTER 325

RESTRICTED RESIDENCE DISTRICTS

6475 Ordinance—scope.

Police power and regulations—restricted residence district—valid regulation. An ordinance, based upon a statute valid under the police power of the state, authorizing establishment of restricted residence districts is not a prohibition but a regulation and as such is a legitimate and reasonable exercise of the city's police power.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

Prohibiting erection of building. The legislative grant of power in section 5756, C., '27, to regulate the erection of buildings does not embrace the power to prohibit the erection of buildings, and the power to prohibit will not be deemed supplied because of the existence of the power in other statutes (chs 324, 325, C., '27), of which the city has never availed itself.

Downey v City, 208-1273; 227 NW 125

Vesting permit power in council. An ordinance establishing a restricted residence district and prohibiting the erection and maintenance therein of gasoline filling stations without obtaining a permit therefor is not unconstitutional because the power to grant or refuse the permit is lodged in the city council—the same body which enacted the ordinance.

Marquis v City, 210-439; 228 NW 870
Cecil v Toenjes, 210-407; 228 NW 874

Failure to specify rules. An ordinance establishing a restricted residence district and prohibiting the erection and maintenance therein of gasoline filling stations without obtaining from the city council a permit therefor, is not unconstitutional because the ordinance fails to specify the rules and regulations governing the granting or refusal of such permit.

Marquis v City, 210-439; 228 NW 870
Cecil v Toenjes, 210-407; 228 NW 874

Discrimination—exemption to existing business. An ordinance establishing a restricted residence district, and prohibiting the subsequent erection and maintenance therein of gasoline filling stations without a permit, is not unconstitutional because the ordinance exempts from its operation an already established and maintained gasoline filling station.

Marquis v City, 210-439; 228 NW 870

Filling station permit—ordinance amending restricted district. Under a restricted residence district ordinance, a city council may issue a permit for erection of a gasoline filling station on certain lots without a separate ordinance to remove the particular lots from the restricted district.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

Judicial supervision—council's judgment—filling station permit. The wisdom, judgment, or lack thereof, on the part of a city council in issuing a permit to erect a "filling station" is not reviewable by the courts unless the action taken was arbitrary, oppressive, or capricious. Evidence reviewed and permit held valid.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

Building permit—permissible revocation. A building permit issued by a city building inspector is revocable by the nonarbitrary action of the inspector when the permittee has not materially and detrimentally altered his position in reliance on the permit.

Call Co. v City, 219-572; 259 NW 33

Permit—nonarbitrary revocation. The revocation by a building inspector of a building permit issued by him, on the ground of illegality of the original issuance, cannot be deemed an arbitrary revocation when it is made to appear that the legality of the original issuance is very questionable.

Call Co. v City, 219-572; 259 NW 33

Building restrictions—abrogation by ordinance. Building restrictions which constitute covenants running with the land are not abrogated by a subsequently enacted municipal zoning ordinance which is contrary to such building restrictions but which distinctly disclaims any intent to abrogate any existing contract restrictions.

Burgess v Magarian, 214-694; 243 NW 356

CHAPTER 326

GOVERNMENT OF CITIES BY COMMISSION

THE COUNCIL

6495 Affidavit of candidacy.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Jan. 24, '39

6516 Bribery and illegal voting.

Conduct of election—municipal public utility ownership—candidates' statements. Statements made by candidates for municipal office as to their intentions respecting the acquisition of a public utility will not vitiate the election deciding the question of municipal ownership without a showing that the election was affected thereby.

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437
Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Contests—electric company offering rate reduction—not candidates' bribery—election valid. Evidence held insufficient to establish bribery and an illegal election in that candidates for municipal office acquiesced in or ratified an advertised plan by which the local electric company offered to reduce its rates, and pay back to its subscribers an accumulating sum as a rebate, in the event the voters would elect council members opposed to municipal ownership.

Van Der Zee v Means, 225-871; 281 NW 460

Officers—election bribery by third person—disqualifying effect. A candidate having been elected to office is not disqualified, merely because some third person may have given or offered a bribe to the voters for the purpose of securing the election of said candidate, unless the candidate actually participated in and approved thereof.

Van Der Zee v Means, 225-871; 281 NW 460

6517 Salaries.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 241

6519 Salaries of minor officers.

Fireman as "employee". The definition of the term "employee", as embodied in §1421, C., '24, is quite immaterial on the issue whether a fireman is an employee under this section.

Murphy v Gilman, 204-58; 214 NW 679

Ordinance not required. The determination of the salary of a fireman is the exercise of an administrative power and need not be made by ordinance.

Murphy v Gilman, 204-58; 214 NW 679

6528 Minor officers and assistants.

Peace officer as agent of public—nonliability of town for tort. A law-enforcing officer, whose office is created by statute and whose duties are prescribed therein, is an agent of the public in general and not the agent of the municipality which employs him, therefore the municipality is not liable in damages for his unlawful or negligent acts, and a petition alleging cause of action thereon against the municipality is demurrable.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

Tear gas gun—town not liable for negligent use. A city or town is not liable for the negligent acts of its peace officer employee merely because it furnished him with a tear gas gun.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

6530 Police judge.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 319

Appointment—no implied repeal. A statute providing that in certain cities the council shall appoint a police judge is not impliedly repealed by the soldiers preference law, which merely places a limitation on the power of appointment.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Soldiers preference case—findings by district court. In an appeal under the soldiers preference law, the district court may direct a city council to appoint a war veteran to the position of police judge and to cancel all action taken in appointing a nonveteran with the same qualifications for the office, rather than remand the case for further consideration by the city council.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Soldiers preference law. In an action to compel the appointment of the plaintiff war veteran as city police judge, where it was shown that both the plaintiff and the nonveteran appointed by the city council were qualified for the position, a finding by the district court in favor of the veteran should not be disturbed.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

6532 Removal of officers.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 290

6533 Create and discontinue offices.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 290

Employees—soldiers preference act—justifiable discharge. An order of a city council to reduce the number of employees in a named department justifies the discharge of an ex-soldier employee whose duties are apparently inseparably connected with said department.

Rounds v Des Moines, 213-52; 238 NW 428

6534 Interest in contracts.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 660

ORDINANCES AND RESOLUTIONS

6553 Time limit on enactment.

Contracts—Simmer law—filing contract but not resolution—ordinance unnecessary. In establishing municipal ownership of a waterworks plant, it is the contract and not the resolutions calling an election that must be on file with the city clerk for one week before adoption, and an ordinance establishing the municipal waterworks plant is unnecessary.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

6556 Petitions for ordinances.

Initiative and referendum—scope. The initiative and referendum applies only to such acts as are legislative in character, as distinguished from those that are of an administrative or executive character. Held that submission of an ordinance which fixed the compensation of firemen was nugatory, even tho the submission was in the form of an amendment to an existing ordinance which fixed such salaries.

Murphy v Gilman, 204-58; 214 NW 679

6557 Ordinance passed or election called.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 422

GENERAL POWERS AND DUTIES

6566 Department superintendents.

Employment of assistants. The superintendent of a department of municipal government under the so-called commission plan may himself validly employ authorized and necessary employees to carry on the work of his department (1) when an existing ordinance in effect grants such power, and (2) when an existing ordinance makes an appropriation of funds for such department and fixes the number of employees and the separate salaries thereof; and this is true notwithstanding an additional existing ordinance which provides, in effect, that all contracts shall be entered into or approved by the council as a whole, it being held that the latter ordinance is not a limitation on the former.

Loran v City, 201-543; 207 NW 529

6567 Statutes applicable.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 92

6569 Existing limits, rights, property.

Statute governing action for damages. In a city which has abandoned its special charter and become organized under the commission form of municipal government, actions for damages consequent on defective streets are governed by §11007, par. 1, C., '27, and not by §6734, C., '27, such reorganized city having no "vested right" in said latter section within the meaning of this section.

Wilson v City, 210-790; 231 NW 495

6571 Discretionary powers.

Civil service employees—discharge. The city council has plenary power by appropriate resolution to order a good-faith reduction in the number of employees in a municipal department operating under civil service regulations, and may validly delegate to the chief officer of such department the administrative duty to designate, on the basis of efficiency, competency, and length of service, and without the preferring of charges, the employees who shall be discharged; and this is true tho the employees be ex-soldiers, as the soldier preference act has no application to a case where an office is abolished.

6574 Flood protection—division of work—levy.

Torts—storm waters into sanitary sewer—negligence—jury question. A city has the duty to maintain its sanitary sewer with ordinary care and prudence and, where the city diverts storm waters into a sanitary sewer designed for a certain capacity, a jury might find the city negligent, and that such negligence was the proximate cause of damage from overflow due to the inability of the sewer to handle the increased flowage.

6575 Special assessments.

Graveling street—absence of grade nonjurisdictional. The due establishment of a permanent grade on a street is not a jurisdictional condition precedent to graveling said street, and assessing the cost thereof to abutting and adjacent property. It follows that the property owner, when duly notified of the proposed assessment, must present to the city council the objection that no permanent grade has been established, or said objection will be irrevocably waived.

Peoples Inv. Co. v Des Moines, 213-1378; 241 NW 464; 79 ALR 1310

6577 Repairs by street railway companies.

Assessment of street railways—fundamental purpose of statute. The fundamental purpose of the statute relative to the assessment of street railways for paving in connection with their tracks (§6051-c1, C., '31 [§6051.1, C., '39]) is to cover the entire subject and declare a basic rule for the government of the same.

In re Walnut Bridge, 220-55; 261 NW 781

Assessments—when franchise ordinance must yield to statute. A street railway franchise ordinance which specifies, in effect, that, until the state statutes otherwise provide, the obligation of the company to construct and reconstruct paving between and outside the rails of its tracks shall be thus and so, manifestly must yield to such later enacted state statute.

In re Walnut Bridge, 220-55; 261 NW 781

6579 Fund for cemeteries.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 126; '34 AG Op 683

6581 Itemized statements.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 262

Ordinance—insufficient publication “in pamphlet form”. The publication “in pamphlet form”, by a city, of the proceedings of the city council for the preceding month in which pamphlet appears a duly enacted ordinance, does not constitute the publication “in pamphlet form” of said ordinance as contemplated by §5721, C., '31.

Des Moines v Miller, 219-632; 259 NW 205

6582 Annual examination.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 92

POLICE EQUIPMENT IN CERTAIN CITIES

6588 Equipment authorized.

Operation of police patrol a governmental function. The operation of a plainly marked police patrol by a policeman in uniform, in conveying policemen in uniform from the police station to their patrol beats, all under orders from the chief of police, is a governmental function. It follows that the city is not liable for damages consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the driver.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 300; '38 AG Op 791

Dams—new high watermark—title of state. The state of Iowa by erecting a permanent dam in the bed of its navigable river, and by maintaining said dam peaceably and uninterruptedly for a period of ten years, legally extends its title to the new high watermark resulting from the erection of the dam; and especially may a private deed holder not complain when his deed, executed after the dam was erected, simply calls for land “up to the river”.

State v Sorenson, 222-1248; 271 NW 234

6598 Tax sales—redemptions.

Tax titles—mother paying on contract while daughter gets tax deed—invalidity. A tax deed will be set aside when a mother buying property on contract, allows it to go to tax sale, then contracts with the certificate purchaser to buy the certificate while continuing payments to the landowner, assuring said landowner that she is redeeming, yet, when the certificate is acquired, a daughter's name is inserted and treasurer's deed issued thereto, the mother must be held to have conspired with the daughter to defraud the landowner and to have accomplished no more than a redemption for herself.

Blotcky v Silberman, 225-519; 281 NW 496

6600 Tax for fire department.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 156

PARKS, SWIMMING POOLS, ETC., IN CERTAIN CITIES

6606 Powers granted.

Governmental functions. The construction and operation by a city of a bathing beach or water fountain is the exercise of a governmental function, and the city is not liable in damages for negligence in such construction and operation; and the charging of a nominal fee for the use of the beach does not change the rule.

Hensley v Towne, 203-388; 212 NW 714; 34 NCCA 559

See Norman v City, 201-279; 207 NW 134; 25 NCCA 675

Drowning in swimming pool—liability. In an action to recover damages for the drowning of an eleven-year-old boy who was attending an outing camp, where the camp director had arranged with the Red Cross to provide two swimming instructors and life guards to be on duty at a specified time to protect about one hundred boys at the camp, and when the corporation operating the swimming pool took no part in arranging for life guards, it was not, under the circumstances, negligent in presumably admitting the decedent to the pool a few moments in advance of the time fixed for the entire group and in advance of supervision by the Red Cross instructors and life guards.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Swimming pool not an "attractive nuisance". A swimming pool, either natural or artificial, is not an attractive nuisance.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Swimming pool—drowning—res ipsa loquitur nonapplicable. The mere fact a person drowns in a swimming pool does not of itself establish negligence on the part of the proprietor under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Swimming pool proprietors—degree of care required. The general rule that the proprietor of a bathhouse or swimming pool for profit is bound to use ordinary care to guard against injury to his patrons held applicable to non-profit corporation operating a swimming pool.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Drowning in swimming pool—failure to advise as to depth. A corporation, operating a swimming pool in which an eleven-year-old boy drowned, was not negligent in not personally informing the deceased of the depth of the water in the pool and in failing to inquire of him as to whether he could swim, where there were many signs, plainly visible about the pool indicating the various depths, and the age, intelligence, and experience of the deceased were sufficient to advise him of the inherent dangers of entering a body of water deeper than his height, especially when he was under the supervision of adults, who had more direct and complete control over him than the agents and employees operating the pool.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Drowning in swimming pool—life guards—sufficiency. Negligence of a corporation operating a swimming pool in which an eleven-year-old boy drowned, could not be grounded upon lack of sufficient attentive life guards, where it had one competent guard who never left his post at the deep water end and no showing was made as to need for more guards and none of the many bathers saw the drowning; and where most of the bathers, including the deceased, were in special groups which had competent life guards and other adult attendants for their own special protection.

CHAPTER 326.1

STREET IMPROVEMENTS AND SEWERS IN CITIES UNDER COMMISSION FORM OF GOVERNMENT

6610.04 Proceedings—plans.

Railroad crossing construction—council's power to require. Since character and extent of street improvements are within responsible discretion of city authorities and because city council's determination of question of desirability of proposed improvements is conclusive except for want of authority or fraud, and where ordinance granting franchise to railroad gave city council authority to require construction of crossing, damage claim for refusal to construct crossing could not be maintained by owner seeking access to property, when owner instead of requesting council to direct railroad to build crossing, merely made such request by personal letter to railroad official.

6610.13 Private initiation of improvement plan.

Railroad crossing construction. ing franchise to railroad gave city council authority to require construction of crossing, damage claim for refusal to construct crossing could not be maintained by owner seeking access to property, when owner instead of requesting council to direct railroad to build crossing, merely made such request by personal letter to railroad official.

Call Co. v Railway, 227-142; 287 NW 832

6610.28 Final determination.

Railroad crossing construction—council's findings—conclusiveness. Since character and extent of street improvements are within responsible discretion of city authorities and because city council's determination of question of desirability of proposed improvements is conclusive except for want of authority or fraud, and where ordinance granting franchise to railroad gave city council authority to require construction of crossing, damage claim for refusal to construct crossing could not be maintained by owner seeking access to property, when owner instead of requesting council to direct railroad to build crossing, merely made such request by personal letter to railroad official.

6610.49 Bids—advertisement—letting of contract.

Public improvements—estimated quantities as basis for contract—variation with specifications not fatal. In awarding a contract, the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of “unit prices”, as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities, indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

6610.57 Railways and street railways.

Railroad crossing construction—council's power to require. Since character and extent of street improvements are within responsible discretion of city authorities and because city council's determination of question of desirability of proposed improvements is conclusive except for want of authority or fraud, and where ordinance granting franchise to railroad gave city council authority to require construction of crossing, damage claim for refusal to construct crossing could not be maintained by owner seeking access to property, when owner instead of requesting council to direct railroad to build crossing, merely made such request by personal letter to railroad official.

6678 General powers conferred.

Drowning in swimming pool—liability. In an action to recover damages for the drowning of an eleven-year-old boy who was attending an outing camp, where the camp director had arranged with the Red Cross to provide two swimming instructors and life guards to be on duty at a specified time to protect about one hundred boys at the camp, and when the corporation operating the swimming pool took no part in arranging for life guards, it was not, under the circumstances, negligent in presumably admitting the decedent to the pool a few moments in advance of the time fixed for the entire group and in advance of supervision by the Red Cross instructors and life guards.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Swimming pool not an “attractive nuisance”. A swimming pool, either natural or artificial, is not an attractive nuisance.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Swimming pool proprietors—degree of care required. The general rule that the proprietor of a bathhouse or swimming pool for profit is bound to use ordinary care to guard against injury to his patrons held applicable to non-profit corporation operating a swimming pool.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Swimming pool—drowning—res ipsa loquitur—nonapplicable. The mere fact a person drowns in a swimming pool does not of itself establish negligence on the part of the proprietor under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Drowning in swimming pool—failure to advise as to depth. A corporation, operating a swimming pool in which an eleven-year-old boy drowned, was not negligent in not personally informing the deceased of the depth of the water in the pool and in failing to inquire of him as to whether he could swim, where there were many signs, plainly visible about the pool indicating the various depths, and the age, intelligence, and experience of the deceased were sufficient to advise him of the inherent dangers of entering a body of water deeper than his height, especially when he was under the supervision of adults, who had more direct and complete control over him than the agents and employees operating the pool.

Hecht v Playground Assn., 227-81; 287 NW 259

Drowning in swimming pool—life guards—sufficiency. Negligence of a corporation operating a swimming pool in which an eleven-year-old boy drowned, could not be grounded upon lack of sufficient attentive life guards, where it had one competent guard who never left his post at the deep water end and no showing was made as to need for more guards and none of the many bathers saw the drowning; and where most of the bathers, including the deceased, were in special groups which had competent life guards and other adult attendants for their own special protection.

CHAPTER 329

CITIES UNDER SPECIAL CHARTER

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

6700 Marshal—policemen.

Peace officers' qualifications. The public has a right to have, as peace officers, men of character, sobriety, judgment, and discretion.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Peace officer as agent of public—nonliability of town for tort. A law-enforcing officer, whose office is created by statute and whose duties are prescribed therein, is an agent of the public in general and not the agent of the municipality which employs him, therefore the municipality is not liable in damages for his unlawful or negligent acts, and a petition alleging cause of action thereon against the municipality is demurrable.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

Tear gas gun—town not liable for negligent use. A city or town is not liable for the negligent acts of its peace officer employee merely because it furnished him with a tear gas gun.

Hagedorn v Schrum, 226-128; 283 NW 876

Policeman assaulting prisoner—discharge justifiable. In an action in certiorari brought under soldiers preference law to review a ruling of civil service commission sustaining the discharge of a police officer for violation of civil service rules, providing for the dismissal of a policeman who clubs or mistreats a prisoner merely because such prisoner makes derogatory remarks concerning the officer, held, evidence sufficient to sustain findings of the commission.

6734 Claims for personal injury—limitation.

Actions against cities generally. See under §5738
Actions against cities—streets—defects—notice. See under §5945

Condition precedent. This section prescribes a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action.

Luke v City, 202-1123; 211 NW 583

Notice—fatal inaccuracy. A statutory notice designed to avoid the three months statute of limitation on an action against a city for damages consequent on a defective street (§11007, C., '31) is fatally defective when it designates the place of injury at a point on a street some 3000 feet distant from the place or point on said street where the injury was actually received.

Tredwell v Waterloo, 218-243; 251 NW 37

Failure to state time. A statement that the injury occurred on "March 22d" is a nullity.

Luke v City, 202-1123; 211 NW 583

Notice—proof of service. Evidence of service of notice of injury in consequence of defective street, in order to prevent the attaching of the "three month" statute of limitation, held sufficient to justify submission to jury of the issue of such service.

Cuvelier v Dumont, 221-1016; 266 NW 517

Reorganization—statute governing action for damages. In a city which has abandoned its special charter and become organized under the commission form of government, actions for damages consequent on defective streets are governed by §11007, par. 1, C., '27, and not by this section, such reorganized city having no "vested right" in said latter section within the meaning of §6569, C., '27.

Wilson v City, 210-790; 231 NW 495

6743 Smoke nuisance.

Repair shop in connection with garage—injunction. A repair shop in connection with a garage, situated in what is in fact a residential district, may be attended with such noise, smoke, gases, and odors as to constitute an abatable private nuisance, provided such shop cannot be so operated as to avoid such objectionable conditions.

Pauly v Montgomery, 209-699; 228 NW 648

6748 Changing watercourses—condemnation.

Percolating waters—damage to adjoining land—causal connection necessary. A city excavating a new creek channel and which thereby collects water on its own land, from which it percolates to adjoining land resulting in damage, is liable therefor, but there must be probative evidence to establish percolation as the cause of the damage.

Bonds—express authority required. Power "to borrow" money does not embrace the power to issue negotiable bonds.

Muscatine Co. v City, 205-82; 217 NW 468

Bonds—extension of existing plant. A city has no power to issue bonds to provide for the cost of extensions and enlargement of an existing municipally constructed electric light and power plant.

Muscatine Co. v City, 205-82; 217 NW 468

Bonds—validity. Bonds issued under a procedure which is, on its face, apparently authorized by law, are, nevertheless, invalid if the record shows that such procedure was simply a subterfuge for the purpose of evading the law and to accomplish an illegal purpose.

Des Moines v Board, 227-66; 287 NW 288

6846 Contagious diseases.

Unvaccinated school children. The appellate court will be slow to interfere with an order by the trial court refusing a temporary injunction against the enforcement by a school board of its order which temporarily excluded unvaccinated pupils from the public school; and especially will the appellate court decline to disturb such refusal when it affirmatively appears that the order of the board has expired ex vi termini.

Extra-territorial extension of municipal light and power lines—constitutional taxation. 6912 Street improvements.

Railroad crossing construction—council's power to require. Since character and extent of street improvements are within responsible discretion of city authorities and because city council's determination of question of desirability of proposed improvements is conclusive except for want of authority or fraud, and where ordinance granting franchise to railroad gave city council authority to require construction of crossing, damage claim for refusal to construct crossing could not be maintained by owner seeking access to property, when owner instead of requesting council to direct railroad to build crossing, merely made such request by personal letter to railroad official.

6927 Requirements of bonds.

Successively due special assessment bonds—pro rata payment nonpermissible. Where a special assessment fund was insufficient to pay in full all outstanding street improvement bonds which had been issued so that each series would mature successively over a period of years, such insufficiency did not affect the order of payment, and therefore the bondholders were not entitled to payment from the fund on a pro rata basis, but only in the order each series matured.

Shaw v Danbury, 227-415; 288 NW 435

TITLE XVITAXATION*CHAPTER 329.2*STATE TAX COMMISSION*6943.023 Rules and regulations.

Delegating powers to nonlegislative board. While the legislature may not delegate its power to make laws, yet when it had declared a policy which is definite in describing the subject to which it relates and the character of the regulation intended to be imposed, it may delegate to nonlegislative board the power to make rules and regulations for effectuating such policy.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 158; '34 AG Op 446; '38 AG Op 109, 558; AG Op Jan. 10, '39

Assessment irregularities—remedy—review by board. If a tax assessment is otherwise valid and legal, a property owner's remedy for an irregularity, such as indefinite description or overlapping assessment, is to appear before the board of review.

Jones v Mills County, 224-1375; 279 NW 96

Appeal—county treasurer not "aggrieved party". The county treasurer may not appeal to the district court from an order of the state board of assessment and review nullifying an assessment made by the said treasurer against alleged omitted property of a taxpayer, said treasurer not being a "party aggrieved" within the meaning of the statute. (§6943-c27, par. 9a, C., '31 [§6943.026, C., '39, (par. 9a repealed by 47 GA, ch 188, §7)]).

In re Lytle Inv. Co., 219-1099; 260 NW 538

Assessment—wrongful classification—statutory remedy must be pursued. A taxpayer, who fails timely to interpose, before the local board of review, or before the state board of assessment and review, his objection that his property (in this case, the capital stock of a bank) was wrongfully classified as personal property and subjected to a consolidated levy instead of being classified as moneys and credits and subject to a six-mill levy, may not proceed in equity to enjoin the collection of the tax.

Security Bk. v Mitts, 220-271; 261 NW 625

Duties—supervision. The state board of assessment and review must as one of its duties exercise supervision over the administration of the tax list, advise with taxing officials, and aid in securing equitable and just enforcement of the tax list.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Taxation supervision—"cubical content" and "zone" assessments. The state board of assessment and review, under §6943-c27, C., '35 [§6943.026, C., '39], still has authority to control, regulate, and supervise the administration of the assessments and the tax laws of the state and to correct assessments made under the "cubical content" and "zone" method of assessing, notwithstanding a repeal of part of said section allowing it other revisory powers over local boards.

State v Local Board, 225-855; 283 NW 87

Arbitrary "zone" reductions—correcting local board. The state board of assessment and review has "supervision" over, and power to direct, the local board and the city assessor of Des Moines, Iowa, to correct an arbitrary and discriminatory practice as to "cubical content" and "zone" of assessments, and in a mandamus action may enforce its order for the correction of such discrimination as may already have resulted. Such an order is not a reassessment nor a revision of individual assessments of individual owners, since it dealt with aggregate valuation in several zones.

State v Local Board, 225-855; 283 NW 87

Levy and assessment—nullification—jurisdiction of state board. Assuming the legal right of the county treasurer to enter an assessment against the alleged omitted property of a taxpayer (§7155 et seq., C., '31), yet the state board of assessment and review has, on proper hearing and order, plenary jurisdiction, subject to appeal to the district court, wholly to nullify such assessment. (§6943-c27, par. 9a, C., '31 [§6943.026, C., '39, (par. 9a repealed by 47 GA, ch 188, §7)]).

Smith v Sioux City Yards, 219-1142; 260 NW 531

Reduction in assessment—power of board. The state board of assessment and review has power, in an even numbered year, and for the purpose of attaining a new basis for the computation of taxes in and for said year, to order the county board of equalization with notice to lower the assessed valuation of the real property in a township, tho it be true, of course, that said assessed valuation was made and legally confirmed in the preceding odd numbered year.

State v Board, 211-1116; 235 NW 303

Order for reduction—discretion. A valid order by the state board of assessment and review to a board of supervisors to reduce certain assessed valuations, leaves said board of supervisors with no discretion as to compliance with the order.

State v Board, 211-1116; 235 NW 303

Valuation—order of reduction. Where the taxable value to be placed on property in 1931 was fixed by the court, and was acquiesced in by all parties and neither appealed, it is considered a fair assessable value where the evidence does not indicate that property was to any considerable degree different in value in 1931 and 1933, and the state board of assessment and review recommends a 20% reduction of the 1931 tax assessment as an equalization of tax-assessments for the year 1933, held, the taxpayer is entitled to the full 20% reduction rather than 10.08% reduction allowed by the assessor.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Statute authorizing reduction in assessed valuation without notice. It is inferentially suggested that the statute which authorizes the state board of assessment and review to order a reduction in the assessed valuation of property is not unconstitutional because the statute assumed to grant such power without notice.

State v Board, 211-1116; 235 NW 303

Voluntary payment on excessive assessment—later reduction by state board—effect. A taxpayer who makes no objection to the local board of review as to the valuation which has been duly placed on his real estate by the assessor for assessment purposes, and voluntarily pays the taxes duly levied during the two following years on said valuation, may not later, and after obtaining an order from the state board of assessment and review reducing said assessed valuation, successfully contend that any part of said voluntarily paid taxes was "erroneously or illegally exacted or paid" within the meaning of the refund statute, §7235, C., '35.

Cedar Rapids Co. v Stirm, 222-206; 268 NW 562

Mandamus proper remedy to secure tax refund. A taxpayer may properly bring a mandamus action to compel a refund of taxes overpaid because of county auditor's failure to comply with budget deduction requirements of section 7164, C., '35. The state board of assessment and review has no power to correct this failure.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 46, 56, 723

Construction—ambiguity as prerequisite. A statute is not to be read as the open to construction as a matter of course; but construction is invoked only when a statute contains such ambiguities or obscurities that reasonable minds may disagree as to their meaning.

Palmer v Board, 226-92; 283 NW 415

Tax statute—construed against taxing body. A proviso or exemption in a taxing statute in derogation of its general enacting clause must be strictly construed. However, as to contention that an income tax statute does not include out-of-state rent, not because of an exception, but by its terms, if open to construction at all, must fall within the general rule that tax statutes are construed strictly against the taxing body.

Palmer v Board, 226-92; 283 NW 415

Rent received on the land in another state taxable. Income tax statutes held to be so plain and certain as to require no construction and to patently indicate a legislative intent to tax all personal income whether originating in the state or without the state, and to plainly include rent received in the state from property located in another state.

Palmer v Board, 226-92; 283 NW 415

Interest on tax-exempt securities. Interest on tax-exempt municipal securities is not exempt from state income tax, tho the securities themselves are, by statute, exempt from general property tax. The statutory declaration that said securities "shall not be taxed" has reference solely to general property tax, and not to an excise tax—an income tax—on the interest collected on such securities.

Hale v Board, 223-321; 271 NW 168; 302 US 95

Income tax on dividends—time of payment controlling—when earned immaterial. Since income tax is not a tax on property but a tax on the individual, income received as dividends paid during the tax year constitutes taxable income for the year, where the return of the taxpayer is made on a cash receipt and disbursement basis for the calendar year, notwithstanding such dividends were accumulated by the corporation before the income tax law became effective.

Martin v Board, 225-1319; 283 NW 418; 120 ALR 1273

Stock market profits as capital investment. Transactions involving the sale of stocks and grain may be in the nature of a capital investment rather than stock in trade and, in the absence of a proper showing that they constituted the latter, the profits would not be taxable under the state income tax statutes.

Martin v Board, 225-1319; 283 NW 418; 120 ALR 1273

Stock market profits—when not taxable—refunds—stipulated record. In an action to cancel and secure a refund of income taxes submitted on a stipulated record, stock market transactions involved therein would be illegal and void as based on a gaming transaction if the buyer neither intended nor contemplated taking actual delivery but intended that the profits or losses should be settled on the market quotations; however, illegality is not presumed, and without illegality appearing in the record, profits accruing from such transactions must be held to be profits from the sale of capital assets, and not taxable as income, hence taxes paid thereon must be refunded.

6943.041 Allowable deductions on gross income.

Federal income tax from receiver—burden of sustaining deductions. In an action involving a claim for federal income tax from an insolvent corporation, the assessment by the internal revenue collector must be treated as prima facie evidence of the amount due, and the state statutes do not control the matter of deduction for attorney fees, referee fees, court costs, and other expenses, but the burden is on the receiver to establish these deductions.

State v American Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

6943.045 Return by individual.

Federal income tax—statute of limitations not started by insufficient tax return. The mere filing of a federal income tax blank containing, not the required information, but only a notation across the face that the corporation was “hopelessly insolvent” and in the hands of a receiver, does not constitute a legal return, as will start the statute of limitations operating against the income tax assessment.

State v American Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

6943.046 Return by fiduciary.

Federal income tax—statute of limitations not started by insufficient tax return. The mere filing of a federal income tax blank containing, not the required information, but only a notation across the face that the corporation was “hopelessly insolvent” and in the hands of a receiver, does not constitute a legal return, as will start the statute of limitations operating against the income tax assessment.

State v American Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

6943.057 Computation of tax, interest and penalties.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 558

6943.058 Lien of tax—collection—action authorized.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 164; AG Op Dec. 20, '39, May 3, '40

Income tax paid by surety. A surety whose bond was held for a compromise of corporate federal income taxes holds no lien upon the corporate assets, but has merely a right to be paid from assets held by receiver before payment to other claimants, and a receiver authorized to continue a business is not personally liable to such surety for diminishment of assets during receivership, tho such assets at the time of receiver's appointment would have been sufficient to pay the surety.

Miller Co. v Silvers Co., 227-1000; 289 NW 699

6943.060 Revision of tax.

Defect of notice of commencement of action—noninterruption of running of limitations. In action to recover erroneous refund of income tax, summons addressed to marshal only and commanding him to summon named defendants to appear on specific date “to answer to a complaint filed by the United States of America” was defective as not addressed to defendants, not stating cause of action, and not describing consequences of failure to defend, and hence did not interrupt running of limitations as of date of service.

U. S. v French, 95 F 2d, 922

DIVISION III

BUSINESS TAX ON CORPORATIONS

6943.065 Corporate tax imposed.

Discussion. See 10 ILR 44—Federal income tax on municipal utilities

Income tax—discriminations—absence of evidence. The state income tax act (Ch 329-F1, C., '35 [Ch 329.3, C., '39]) will not be declared unconstitutionally discriminatory (1) because it exempts domestic corporations, and not individuals, partnerships and fiduciaries, from paying a tax on that part of their income derived from activities carried on outside the state of Iowa, or (2) because the graduate rate of tax (§6943-f5, C., '35 [§6943.037, C., '39]) is not uniform between corporations, individuals and partnerships.

Courts will not assume, in the absence of competent evidence, that no state of facts could reasonably be conceived which could afford a rational basis for distinguishing, for purpose of taxation, between income of an individual and that of a domestic corporation derived from business carried on outside the state.

Vilas v Board, 223-604; 273 NW 338

6943.068 Returns.

Federal income tax—statute of limitations not started by insufficient tax return. The mere filing of a federal income tax blank containing, not the required information, but only a notation across the face that the corporation was “hopelessly insolvent” and in the hands of a receiver, does not constitute a legal return, as will start the statute of limitations operating against the income tax assessment.

State v American Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

DIVISION IV

RETAIL SALES TAX

6943.074 Definitions.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Aug. 16, '39

Legislative definition binding on court—“sale”—“retail sale”. The legislature having defined certain terms, the court will follow that definition. So held as to “sale” and “retail sale” used in the sales tax act.

Kistner v Board, 225-404; 280 NW 587

Shoe repair materials—shoe repairman is “consumer or user”. A shoe repairman is a “consumer or user” of the material used in repairing shoes, within the legislative definition of those terms in the sales tax act, and in charging for such repair he is not primarily reselling those materials, but selling his services, wherefore, the one from whom he buys those materials makes the retail sale subject to the tax.

Sandberg Co. v Board, 225-103; 278 NW 643; 281 NW 197

Shoe repairmen as consumers—taxation uniformity—delegation of power—constitutional-ity. Taxation uniformity, being an equal distribution of taxation burdens upon all persons of a given class, is impossible of perfect application, and a sales tax rule promulgated under valid legislative authority classifying shoe repairmen as consumers of materials used in shoe repairing, within the meaning of the sales tax act, is not arbitrary but uniform and consistent with the law imposing the tax and not a delegation of power.

Sandberg Co. v Board, 225-103; 278 NW 643; 281 NW 197

Undertaker's services—fee including casket—"sale" of casket. The fact that an undertaker makes a contract, wherein he furnishes a casket and a vault, tho called a contract for services, does not change the legal character of the transaction nor preclude it from being a sale of personal property nor prevent a transfer of title of said property to the purchaser.

Kistner v Board, 225-404; 280 NW 587

Undertaker as retailer. A funeral director becomes a retailer when he transfers title to personal property, the casket, vault, etc., to relatives of the deceased, by contract for his services in which such articles are used, and as such is liable for the retail sales tax on such articles.

Kistner v Board, 225-404; 280 NW 587

Fertilizer—processing exemption not applicable. The exemption from taxation in the sales tax statute of materials used in processing does not, in the absence of a declaration of legislative intent, include fertilizer used in growing vegetables. (Holding prior to amendment.)

Kennedy v Board, 224-405; 276 NW 205

Fertilizer—nonretroactive exemption. Taxation being the rule rather than the exception, it cannot be said that a later amendment to the sales tax statute, exempting fertilizers, is retroactive and explanatory of the exemption in the original statute of materials used in processing.

Kennedy v Board, 224-405; 276 NW 205

6943.075 Tax imposed.

Board's rule for undertakers—reasonableness. Rule 49 of the Board of Assessment and Review, applying to sales tax collectible from undertakers, is clearly reasonable and valid,

Federal income tax—statute of limitations not started by insufficient tax return. The mere filing of a federal income tax blank containing, not the required information, but only a notation across the face that the corporation was "hopelessly insolvent" and in the hands of a receiver, does not constitute a legal return, as will start the statute of limitations operating against the income tax assessment.

Unreasonable searches and seizures—what is not. The unreasonable search and seizure clause of the Iowa Constitution (Art I, §8) is not violated by the Iowa income tax act arming the state board with power to examine, under judicial procedure, the books and papers of the taxpayer in order to determine the correctness or fraudulent nature of the taxpayer's return of income.

Vilas v Board, 223-604; 273 NW 338

False tax returns—corporation books admissible evidence. In a prosecution of corporate officers for conspiracy to defraud government by filing false income tax return of corporation, the books of the corporation, together with summaries obtained by expert accountants, are admissible as tending to show what the taxable income of the corporation was represented to be, where such books were present and available for cross-examination.

6943.129 Tax imposed.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 246—Progressive tax on gross income

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 435

Constitutionality—allowable classifications. The general assembly in the enactment of the chain store tax act did not go beyond its conceded broad power to classify:

1. By classifying chain stores, generally, as proper subjects for an occupational tax.

2. By classifying certain of said stores as not subject to said tax.

3. By classifying the tax-paying stores into groups of ten or multiples thereof and graduating the tax progressively on each group—it appearing that none of said classifications were arbitrary—that the reason for each was manifest or reasonably discernible—that all owners of chain stores similarly situated were treated alike.

Tolerton v Board, 222-908; 270 NW 427

Ruling of federal court—conclusiveness. The chain store tax act is in violation of the equal protection clause of the federal constitution insofar as it attempts to levy an annual tax solely on the basis of the gross receipts of said stores, such being the holding of the federal supreme court and such holding necessarily being conclusive on the courts of this state.

Tolerton v Board, 222-908; 270 NW 427

Chain store tax based on receipts on graduated scale—unconstitutional. Iowa chain store tax of 1935, section 4 (b), held unconstitutional, as imposing a tax on gross receipts from sales according to an accumulative graduated scale, and invalid under equal protection clause of the 14th amendment to federal constitution, as creating an arbitrary discrimination.

HOMESTEAD TAX CREDIT

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 540; AG Op Jan. 10, '39

Publishing supervisors' proceedings—homestead exemption—application numbers sufficient. Statute requiring publication of proceedings of the board of supervisors is substantially complied with, insofar as the action taken on homestead exemption applications is concerned, by publishing the numbers of the applications as allowed or disallowed.

Choate Co. v Schade, 225-324; 280 NW 540

6943.143 Qualifying for credit.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 193, 242, 247, 272, 288, 305, 311, 428

Homestead exemption strictly construed. Ambiguities and obscurities in the homestead tax exemption statutes should be strictly construed since taxation is the rule and the exemption therefrom the exception.

Ahrweiler v Board, 226-229; 283 NW 889

Construction—resorting to entire act. In construing a particular statute to arrive at the legislative intention the court should consider the entire act, and, so far as possible, construe its various provisions in the light of their relation to the whole.

Ahrweiler v Board, 226-229; 283 NW 889

Homestead credit to property not to owner—theory of law. The homestead tax exemption law was adopted on the premise of benefit to the people as a whole through the encouragement of home ownership and not as a gift or bonus to the owner. The tax credit is not a credit to the owner, but to the homestead.

Ahrweiler v Board, 226-229; 283 NW 889

6943.144 Verification by board.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 312, 413

Publishing supervisors' proceedings—homestead exemption—application numbers sufficient. Statute requiring publication of proceedings of the board of supervisors is substantially complied with, insofar as the action taken on homestead exemption applications is concerned, by publishing the numbers of the applications as allowed or disallowed.

6943.152 Definitions.

Homestead credit to property not to owner—theory of law. The homestead tax exemption law was adopted on the premise of benefit to the people as a whole through the encouragement of home ownership and not as a gift or bonus to the owner. The tax credit is not a credit to the owner, but to the homestead.

Ahrweiler v Board, 226-229; 283 NW 889

Homestead exemption strictly construed. Ambiguities and obscurities in the homestead tax exemption statutes should be strictly construed since taxation is the rule and the exemption therefrom the exception.

Ahrweiler v Board, 226-229; 283 NW 889

Homestead exemption—waiver of residence relates to year of homestead acquisition. The provision in the homestead tax exemption statute waiving the six months requirement for residence, for the first year of a newly acquired homestead, is not sufficient to extend the exemption back to taxes levied a year previous to the year in which it was acquired.

Ahrweiler v Board, 226-229; 283 NW 889

Homestead exemption—"and" may be both conjunctive and disjunctive. The word "and", used in the homestead exemption act allowing an owner credit on his taxes "for the 1936 taxes payable in 1937 and for the 1937 taxes payable in 1938", construed to be used as a conjunctive with reference to a homestead eligible to benefits for both of said years, and when used with reference to a homestead not eligible in both years to be used as a disjunctive, equivalent to the word "or".

I EXEMPTIONS IN GENERAL

Unambiguous tax exemption statute—strict construction rule nonapplicable. Strict construction of statutes granting exemptions from taxation, altho being the rule, has no application to a plain, clear, and unambiguous statute affording no room for construction.

State v Griswold, 225-237; 280 NW 489

I EXEMPTIONS IN GENERAL—concluded

Homestead exemption strictly construed. Ambiguities and obscurities in the homestead tax exemption statutes should be strictly construed since taxation is the rule and the exemption therefrom the exception.

Ahrweiler v Board, 226-229; 283 NW 889

“Accumulations and funds” of beneficiary association. The statutory exemption from taxation of the “accumulations and funds” of a fraternal beneficiary association does not embrace an exemption from taxation of lands acquired by such association through a mortgage foreclosure deed, even tho loan in question was made from the “funds” of the association.

Grand Lodge v Madigan, 207-24; 222 NW 545

Reservation of grounds of review. When the sole question before the trial court was whether a certain section of the statute (consisting of many separately numbered paragraphs) exempts certain property from taxation, the appellate court in its review will consider and construe all relevant paragraphs of the section, even tho it appears probable that one of said paragraphs was not called to the attention of the trial court.

McCull v Dallas County, 220-434; 262 NW 824

II PAR. 2 MUNICIPAL AND MILITARY PROPERTY

Property of municipality—excise charge. The statutory exemption from taxation of city property is not violated by the imposition of an excise charge.

State v Des Moines, 221-642; 266 NW 41

Trust property for educational purposes. Property transferred to a county in trust for the establishment of a prescribed seminary of learning, and duly accepted by the board of supervisors on behalf of the county, becomes a special part of the school fund of the county, and remains such tho the legal title be transferred to court-appointed trustees for managerial purposes. It follows that, being county property and devoted to public use and not held for pecuniary profit, said property is exempt from taxation (subsec. 2 this section, C., '35), even tho no action has been taken to actually execute the trust.

McCull v Dallas Co., 220-434; 262 NW 824

Interest on tax-exempt securities. Interest on tax-exempt municipal securities is not exempt from state income tax, tho the securities themselves are, by statute, exempt from general property tax. The statutory declaration that said securities “shall not be taxed” has reference solely to general property tax, and not to an excise tax—an income tax—on the interest collected on such securities.

Hale v Board, 223-321; 271 NW 168; 302 US 95

III PAR. 3 PUBLIC GROUNDS AND CEMETERIES

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 69; '38 AG Op 329

IV PAR. 8 LIBRARIES AND ART GALLERIES

Lands devised to library—essential proof. Where a will provides that the residue of the estate shall pass to a public library, exemption from taxation on the lands devised will not be granted until there is a judicial showing that (1) the estate is settled, and (2) that the devised lands constitute part of the residue and belong, legally or equitably, to the institution.

Wapello Bank v Keokuk County, 209-1127; 229 NW 721

V PAR. 9 PROPERTY OF RELIGIOUS, LITERARY, AND CHARITABLE SOCIETIES

Funds devoted to charity. Funds in the hands of a personal trustee, tho the income of such funds is, under a testamentary bequest, devoted solely to charitable purposes, are subject to taxation, said trustee not being an “institution” within the meaning of subsec. 9 of this section, and taxation being the rule and exemption from taxation the exception.

Samuelson v Horn, 221-208; 265 NW 168

Charity and benevolence—nonexemption. Property consisting of town lots and the buildings situated thereon, owned by a corporation, and used in part for charitable and benevolent purposes, and in part for the private profit of one of the incorporators in the practice of his profession of medicine, is not exempt from taxation, to any extent, under subsec. 9 of this section, C, '35. And it is quite immaterial—under such state of facts—that the declared purposes of the corporation are solely charitable and benevolent.

Readlyn Hosp. v Hoth, 223-341; 272 NW 90

Benevolent societies contrasted. The exemption from taxation accorded to certain insurance associations by §7025, C., '35, is determined by the kind or character of the association, whereas the exemption provided by this section, subsec. 9, is determined by the use made of the property by the institutions within its provisions.

Lutheran Soc. v Murphy, 223-1151; 274 NW 907

Homesteaders Life v Murphy, 224-173; 275 NW 146

Fraternity house nonexempt. The property of a college fraternity is not exempt from taxation when the dominant use during the college year, to which the property is put is that of a dormitory, boarding house, home and place of social and fraternal intercourse for its members and when the use of the property for literary or scientific purposes is merely incidental.

Theta Xi v Board, 217-1181; 251 NW 76

VI PAR. 11 PROPERTY OF EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

Discussion. See 19 ILR 71—Federal tax on private business of state educational institutions

Educational institution—acquisition prior to levy. The act of assessing land to the individual owner thereof does not deprive an educational institution of its statutory exemption from taxation when the title subsequently passed to the educational institution prior to the levy of any tax on the land.

Iowa College v Knight, 207-1238; 224 NW 502

Educational institution—essential proof. Where a will provides that the residue of the estate shall pass to an educational institution of this state as a part of its endowment fund, exemption from taxation on lands will not be granted except on the production in evidence of the probate records showing judicially (1) that the estate has been fully settled, and (2) that the lands in question constitute part of the residue of said estate, and, as a consequence, belong, legally or equitably, to said institution.

Wapello Bk. v County, 209-1127; 229 NW 721

County school system as “educational institution”—exemption. The school system of a county is “an educational institution” within the meaning of subsec. 11 of this section. It follows that lands held by a county in trust for a specified educational purpose, and not exceeding 160 acres in a township, are exempt from taxation.

Merchandise accounts belonging to nonresident. Book accounts which belong to a nonresident corporation, but which grow out of a business in this state and are held in this state by the agent of the nonresident owner, may acquire such a “business situs” in this state as to be legally taxable in this state; but a statute (§6958, C., '27) which authorizes the taxation of credits which are in the hands of an agent “with a view to investing or loaning or in any other manner using or holding the same for pecuniary profit” does not authorize the taxation of ordinary current merchandise sale accounts held by the agent of a nonresident owner for collection and use in the merchandise business of such owner.

Merchandise accounts belonging to nonresident. Book accounts which belong to a non-resident corporation, but which grow out of a business in this state and are held in this state by the agent of the nonresident owner, may acquire such a "business situs" in this state as to be legally taxable in this state; but a statute (§6958, C., '27) which authorizes the taxation of credits which are in the hands of an agent "with a view to investing or loaning or in any other manner using or holding the same for pecuniary profit" does not authorize the taxation of ordinary current merchandise sale accounts held by the agent of a nonresident owner for collection and use in the merchandise business of such owner.

Crane Co. v Council, 208-164; 225 NW 344; 76 ALR 801

"Loading" charge of mutual insurance company. A surplus, known as a "loading" charge, accumulated by a mutual legal reserve life insurance company by crediting thereto, annually, a portion of the gross premiums, even tho such surplus is not required by law, is not assessable as moneys and credits when such surplus is used to defray the expense of carrying and fulfilling policies during the various life expectancies, and when such surplus cannot be legally used for any other purpose.

Central Life v City, 212-1254; 238 NW 535; 78 ALR 551

Mistaken classification—waiver. An insurance company which lists its corporate stock to itself as personal property, and at an inadequate value which it induces the assessor to accept,—all on the assumption that it was subject to the consolidated levy,—and thereafter interposes no counter objection, may neither obtain a refund for taxes paid nor enjoin the collection of taxes unpaid, on the theory that the property was in fact only subject to a five-mill levy, as moneys and credits.

Farmers Ins. v County, 202-444; 208 NW 929

Unauthorized classification. Whether certain securities shall be assessed as moneys and credits or as moneyed capital, within the meaning of the federal statutes, must, in the first instance, be determined by the judgment of the assessor and lastly by the judgment of the board of review; and the county auditor has no power to change such determination.

Ft. Madison Sec. v Maxwell, 202-1346; 212 NW 131

Assessment — wrongful classification. A taxpayer, who fails timely to interpose, before the local board of review, or before the state board of assessment and review, his objection that his property (in this case, the capital stock of a bank) was wrongfully classified as personal property and subjected to a consolidated levy instead of being classified as moneys and credits and subject to a six-mill levy, may not proceed in equity to enjoin the collection of the tax.

Security Bank v Mitts, 220-271; 261 NW 625

Moneyed capital used in small loan business. Moneyed capital employed, under §9410 et seq., C., '24 [§9438.01, C., '39], in the making of small loans of $300 or less on personal or chattel security is taxable as moneys and credits, and not at the rate at which national bank stock is taxable, when the evidence shows that such moneyed capital does not come into competition with the business of national banks.

Welfare Loan v City, 205-1400; 219 NW 534
 Universal Loan v Board, 205-1391; 219 NW 536

Taxation of national banks—illegal change by auditor of assessment—effect. The act of a county auditor, on his own motion, and without the connivance of any other official charged with duties pertaining to taxation, in changing a duly made and approved assessment of corporate stock of concerns competing with national, state, and savings banks from its proper classification of "corporate stock" to the classification of "moneys and credits" and computing the tax thereon as provided for moneys and credits is absolutely void, and furnishes no basis for the claim by national, state, and savings banks that they have been discriminated against, in that the consolidated levy has been applied to 20 percent of the value of their stock, while the favored concerns have been taxed on the basis of 5 mills on the dollar of the actual value of their stock. (Reversed by U. S. Sup. Ct.)

Iowa Bank v Stewart, 214-1229; 232 NW 445; 284 US 239

Bank shares—discrimination—violating constitutional rights—taxing officers acting contrary to law. The taxation of state and national bank shares at a higher rate than the shares of competing domestic corporations is violative of the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment and in excess of permission conferred by federal statute for the taxation of national bank stock.

 Iowa Bank v Stewart, 214-1229; 232 NW 445; 284 US 239

Articles of incorporation may control place of taxation. The personal property and moneys and credits of a corporation engaged in blasting and crushing stone are taxable in the taxing district which embraces the place where its principal business is transacted, as declared in its articles of incorporation.

Iowa Co. v Cook, 211-534; 233 NW 682

Failure to return notes for assessment. Failure of the alleged grantee in a conveyance to list for assessment the notes which he claims were satisfied by the conveyance is material on the issue of fraud.

Oelke v Howey, 210-1296; 232 NW 666

Failure to list gift for taxation—effect. The naked fact that a donee fails to list the gift (a substantial sum in cash) for taxation cannot have such evidentiary force as to overthrow other evidence which persuasively shows that the gift was actually made and executed.

Humphrey v Norwood, 213-912; 240 NW 232

Wrongful assessment—administrative remedy to be exhausted before appeal to court. All adequate administrative remedies in matters of taxation must be exhausted before resort can be had to court, so when administrative stage of action is completed, judicial power of court may begin, and the parties may resort to any tribunal having jurisdiction. Hence, where national banks bring an action to restrain collection of alleged illegal taxes on capital stock, basing alleged illegality on fact that other competitive "moneyed capital" was taxed intentionally and consistently at lower rate in violation of federal statutes, held, banks failed to exhaust remedy provided by statutes providing appeal from assessor to board of review.

BANKS

6997 Private banks.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 41

Assessment correct but violative of statute. An assessment of bank stock which correctly arrives at the value of the bank credits is unassailable even tho the statute is not strictly complied with—is, in fact, violated. So held where the listing of the credits was excessive, in that it showed the entire face value of the credits, from which was deducted a specific sum for debts owed by the bank (for which deduction there was no authority), instead of reducing the face value of the credits by the amount for which certain credits had been hypothecated.

In re Stacyville Bank, 202-221; 210 NW 126

Allowable correction of void act without notice.

First N. Bk. v Burke, 201-994; 196 NW 287

Unallowable correction. The county auditor may not, under the guise of correcting the assessment of a private banker, impose an assessment on bills receivable which the banker had rediscounted for full value to his correspondent bank, even tho the rediscounts were, in a sense, held by the correspondent as collateral, because of the mutual contemplation of the banker and the correspondent that the banker would in time redeem said discounts.

Northwestern Bk. v Van Roekel, 202-237; 207 NW 345

Correcting assessment of private banker. The county auditor may, on proper notice and hearing, and before a tax is paid, correct the erroneous action of the assessor in deducting the debts of a private banker from the value of the banker's taxable property. (§1321, S., '13.)

Mannings Bank v Armstrong, 204-512; 211 NW 485

Irregularities not invalidating assessment of capital stock of bank. It cannot be said that no valid assessment of the capital stock and surplus and undivided profits of a bank is effected because of irregularities in that:

1. The bank officials in furnishing the law-required statement, filled out that part of the official blank which the law contemplates will be filled out by the assessor, to wit, the "valuation" sheet showing the actual figures on which the several assessments should be computed,

2. The assessor failed either to sign or verify said valuation sheet as so made out, and

3. The assessor's books, when delivered to the county auditor contained no formal entry of assessments of said items of taxable property,— when the evidence shows that said "valuation" sheet, as so made out, (1) was examined and approved by the assessor, (2) was duly placed before the review board, (3) was by said board examined and left without change, (4) was later, with other assessment records, duly filed with the county auditor, and (5) when no error is claimed in any record figures.

Security Bank v Mitts, 220-271; 261 NW 625

6998 National and state bank stock—place of assessment.

Valuation of bank stock. For purposes of taxation the value of each different issue, class, or denomination of national bank stock must be determined according to the rights vested in it with reference to the assets of the bank and its relationship to the other outstanding stock. Therefore, where there were sufficient assets to pay preferred stock, which had priority over common stock, in full at its par value, it was city assessor's duty to deduct value of the preferred stock at par from bank's assets in computing value of the common stock, and the fact that the preferred stock was nontaxable did not avoid the necessity of such procedure.

Iowa-D. M. Bank v Des Moines, 227-372; 288 NW 408

Permissible change. When the shares of stock of a bank are assessed to the bank, the county auditor may, at any time before the tax is paid, and without notice, change the assessment to the individual stockholders.

deduction in the assessment of the bank assets of a private banker.

Mannings Bk. v Armstrong, 204-512; 211 NW 485

Tax-exempt securities. Shares of stock of national banks may be valued and taxed to the stockholders on the basis of the sum total of the capital, surplus and undivided profits of the bank without deducting the amount of tax-exempt securities owned by the bank, even tho in the assessment of a private banker his tax-exempt securities would not be included in the sum total of his property. 191 Iowa 1240 affirmed.

Des M. Nat. Bk. v Fairweather, 263 US 103

Federal question. The claim that an assessment of national bank stock is in excess of the value of the stock, exorbitant, unjust, and not in proportion with other like property, presents no federal question for review on writ of error from the federal court. 136 Iowa 203, in effect, affirmed.

First N. Bk. v Council, 215 US 341

Valuation of bank stock. For purposes of taxation the value of each different issue, class, or denomination of national bank stock must be determined according to the rights vested in it with reference to the assets of the bank and its relationship to the other outstanding stock. County supervisors—duties imposed by law—effect. A statute, requiring the board of supervisors to remit unpaid taxes on the capital stock of a bank which fails, imposes a positive duty on board of supervisors to comply with statute irrespective of any demand or notice, and the fact that the stockholders petitioned for a refund of taxes already paid, which is not contemplated by such statute, in addition to remission of unpaid taxes, does not excuse the failure of the board to remit such taxes as come within the purview of the statute, since the performance of this duty is imposed upon the board by law.

Brunner v County, 226-583; 284 NW 814

County supervisors—raising constitutionality of statutes not permitted. In an action in equity for mandamus to compel board of supervisors to remit taxes on capital stock of failed bank, held, board of supervisors could not raise issue of constitutionality of statute providing for such remission, either in that it contravened the state or the federal constitution, as counties and other municipal corporations are creatures of the legislature, existing by reason of statutes enacted within the power of the legislature, and the board may not question that power which brought it into existence and set the bounds of its capacities.

Ballard-Hassett v Board, 215-556; 246 NW 277

Applicable statute. Section 1322-1a, S., '13, (now repealed) was not applicable to the assessment of the banking assets of a private banker.

Mannings Bk. v Armstrong, 204-512; 211 NW 485

Unauthorized classification. Whether certain securities shall be assessed as moneys and credits or as moneyed capital, within the meaning of the federal statutes, must, in the first instance, be determined by the judgment of the assessor, and lastly by the judgment of the board of review; and the county auditor has no power to change such determination.

Ft. Madison Sec. v Maxwell, 202-1346; 212 NW 131

Illegal change of assessment by auditor—effect. The act of the county auditor, on his own motion, and without the connivance of any other official charged with duties pertaining to taxation, in changing a duly made and approved assessment of corporate stock of concerns competing with national, state and savings banks, from its proper classification of "corporate stock" to the classification of "moneys and credits" and computing the tax thereon as provided for moneys and credits, is absolutely void, and furnishes no basis for the claim by national, state and savings banks that they have been discriminated against, in that the consolidated levy has been applied to 20 percent of the value of their stock while the favored concerns have been taxed on the basis of 5 mills on the dollar of the actual value of their stock.

Iowa N. Bk. v Stewart, 214-1229; 232 NW 445 Reversed, 284 US 239

Bank shares—taxing officers acting contrary to law. Security Bk. v Mitts, 220-271; 261 NW 625

7007.1 Liability of corporation for tax.

Nonliability of insolvent corporation. The statutory liability of a corporation to pay taxes assessed and levied on its corporate shares of stock and against the individual owners thereof, does not apply to taxes assessed and levied in a year during which, and before the taxes become payable, the corporation becomes insolvent and passes into the hands of a receiver.

Wilcoxon v Munn, 206-1194; 221 NW 823

Lien—corporate bank stock. Taxes on corporate bank stock and against the individual owners thereof are not a lien on the real estate holdings of the corporation in the hands of a receiver, notwithstanding the fact that the statute assumes to make the corporation personally liable therefor.

Andrew v Munn, 205-723; 218 NW 526

Jurisdictional amount—bank combining several protested illegal assessments. Under the statute imposing taxes upon bank stockholders, which makes the bank liable therefor, the bank can maintain an equity action in federal court for taxes paid under protest by several stockholders, where jurisdictional amount was involved, notwithstanding amount paid for any one stockholder would not give the federal court jurisdiction.

Iowa Co. v Cook, 211-534; 233 NW 682

Unallowable computation. An assessor, in computing the value of the shares of stock of a corporation for the purpose of assessing them to the stockholder, has no right to include an item of cash accumulated by the corporation for the good-faith and actual purpose of paying the taxes of the corporation.

Equitable Life v City, 207-879; 223 NW 744

Mistaken classification—waiver. Iowa-D. M. Bank v Des Moines, 227-372; 288 NW 408

Abstract books and equipment of corporation. The abstract books and office equipment of a corporation engaged in making abstracts of title to real estate are so assessable as to come under and be subject to the general tax levy. In other words, such property is not to

CHAPTER 335

INSURANCE COMPANIES

7022 Foreign companies—tax on gross premiums.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 459; '36 AG Op 204

Unallowable deductions. The statutory provision which requires a foreign insurance company to pay a stated tax on "the gross amount of premiums received by it for business done in this state", permits of no deductions for "dividends" which the company may declare, or for so-called "deferred dividends", or for surrender values of policies, on its Iowa business. Especially is this true in view of the fact that such has been the unquestioned administrative construction of the law for over half a century.

New Y. Life v Burbank, 209-199; 216 NW 742

When payable—legislative intent. Legislative intent being the cardinal rule of statutory construction, the plain intent of statute taxing gross premiums of foreign corporations is a tax computed on and payable at the end of the year.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Excise tax. The gross premiums tax on foreign corporations is an excise tax in the nature of a franchise or privilege tax.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Revenue measure—withholding certificate immaterial. A tax on gross premiums of a foreign insurance corporation is neither dependent on, nor satisfied by, the withholding of an annual certificate to do business, but is a revenue measure and a statutory tax owed to and collectible by the state on business done prior to dissolution:

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Annuity contracts. This section requires payment of a tax on sums of money received by an insurance company during the year in payment of annuity contracts, even tho said contracts are not insurance contracts.

Northwestern Ins. v Murphy, 223-333; 271 NW 899; 109 ALR 1054

Fraternal benefit societies—gross premium tax inapplicable. Fraternal benefit societies doing business in this state including one organized under foreign nation are not subject to gross premium tax levied on foreign insurance companies, in view of executive and departmental construction of taxing statute and acquiesced in by legislature.

State v Ind. Foresters, 226-1339; 286 NW 425

Receiverships—gross premiums tax as preferred claim. In estate and receivership proceedings, taxes have preference over other claims. Held, foreign corporations gross premiums tax allowable in receivership as preferred claim without interest.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Illinois receiver—Iowa insurance assets removed—Iowa laws controlling. Where an Illinois receiver was permitted as a matter of comity to take charge of an insurance company's assets held under ancillary receivership in Iowa and remove them, it does not follow that Illinois laws are controlling on question of gross premium taxes due from foreign corporation to the State of Iowa.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Attorney general's opinion—not precedent. Attorney general's opinion that payment of gross premiums tax is "condition precedent to a foreign corporation's obtaining any recognition" is not precedent binding on Supreme Court.

7023 Receipts—certificate of authority.

Gross premiums tax as privilege tax—annual certificate. A statute (§7025, C., '35) requiring proof of payment by foreign corporation of gross premiums tax when annual certificate is issued refers to the tax levy on the premiums at the close of a year's business and not for the ensuing year. Tax imposed not for privilege of continuing, but for the privilege of engaging in business for the year at the end of which the tax is collected.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

As revenue measure—withholding certificate immaterial. A tax on gross premiums of a foreign insurance corporation is neither dependent on, nor satisfied by, the withholding of an annual certificate to do business, but is a revenue measure and a statutory tax owed to and collectible by the state on business done prior to dissolution.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Withholding certificate—penalty. A statute allowing annual certificate to be withheld for nonpayment of gross premiums tax on foreign corporations is not a method of collecting but a penalty imposed.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

7025 Domestic companies — tax on gross premiums.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 459; '32 AG Op 86

Liability of property—exemptions—benevolent societies contrasted. The exemption from taxation accorded to certain insurance associations by this section is determined by the kind or character of the association, whereas the exemption provided by section 6944, subsec. 9, is determined by the use made of the property by the institutions within its provisions.

Homesteaders Life v Murphy, 224-173; 275 NW 146

Mutual benefit insurance — nontaxation of undivided profits — purpose of organization controls. A fraternal beneficiary association organized under chapter 402 of the Code, 1935, "not for profit" is not subject to a tax on gross premiums under this section, and even tho such association does accumulate a surplus and a profit. Violations of chapter 402 by any such association are punishable as provided but such offenses do not change its organizational character.

Homesteaders Life v Murphy, 224-173; 275 NW 146

Fraternal beneficiary certificates—not taxable after reorganization. A fraternal beneficiary association may reorganize into an old line company, but the amounts the new organization collects under the original certificates, which it has assumed, are not taxable under the gross premium tax provision of this section.

Yeomen Ins. v Murphy, 223-1315; 275 NW 127

Commissioner—power of suspension not lodged. The commissioner of insurance is not empowered to suspend the business of a fraternal beneficiary association for failure to comply with commissioner's order to pay a gross premium tax, such order being based on his interpretation of a statute.

Homesteaders Life v Murphy, 224-173; 275 NW 146

7026 Domestic companies—shares of stock.

Unallowable computation. An assessor, in computing the value of the shares of stock of a corporation for the purpose of assessing them to the stockholder, has no right to include an item of cash accumulated by the corporation for the good faith and actual purpose of paying the taxes of the corporation.

Equitable v City, 207-879; 223 NW 744

Mistaken classification—waiver. An insurance company which lists its corporate stock to itself as personal property, and at an inadequate value which it induces the assessor to accept,—all on the assumption that it was subject to the consolidated levy,—and thereafter interposes no counter objection, may neither obtain a refund for taxes paid nor enjoin the collection of taxes unpaid on the theory that the property was in fact only subject to a five-mill levy, as moneys and credits.

“Loading” charge of mutual insurance company. A surplus, known as a “loading” charge, accumulated by a mutual legal reserve life insurance company by crediting thereto, annually, a portion of the gross premiums, even tho such surplus is not required by law, is not assessable as moneys and credits when such surplus is used to defray the expense of carrying and fulfilling policies during the various life expectancies, and when such surplus cannot be legally used for any other purpose.

ANALYSIS

I ASSESSMENTS IN GENERAL
II DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY

I ASSESSMENTS IN GENERAL

Statutory requirements—approximate compliance. In determining assessments where the formula used by the assessor allows depreciation upon the same annual basis for all buildings, and does not take into account all the elements mentioned in the statutes, but does achieve approximate uniformity, and reasonable equality of assessment, and where assessed value is conceded to be less than actual value, assessment is proper.

Crary v Board, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

Assessor's statutory duty—noncompliance—reduction allowed. In a proceeding for reduction of a city tax assessment, where evidence shows that an old frame house, assessed separately from lots, was out of date and not adaptable to use as a residence, was located in a zoning district which limits the property to residential purposes, where petitioner's witnesses agree that on account of such factors the only value that can be fairly attributed to the improvements is a salvage value fixed at $3,000 and where assessor admits that he had no idea what the market value was, nor what the rental or income value would be, and further admits he gave no consideration to rental or income value and that assessment was made on the basis of cubic content or cubic foot replacement, somewhere between 16 and 50 cents per foot, which is not disclosed by the record, and that he allowed only a 25 percent depreciation on 45- or 50-year-old residence, held, assessor did not perform the duties imposed by statute, and assessment reduced to $3,000.

Call v Board, 227-1116; 290 NW 109

Valuation—factors considered. The valuation of property for tax purposes cannot be determined by mathematical formulae alone. While the statute requires that the productive and earning capacity, past, present, and prospective, must be taken into consideration, it is also necessary that the element of the assessor's judgment properly estimating the influence of the various relevant factors must enter in the assessment.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Valuation—equitableness—assessor's duty. In determining values it is the duty of the assessor to fix such values equitably in comparison with other like property.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Assessment—disproportionate and discriminatory—evidence insufficient. On complaint of inequality of assessment and contention that assessment is disproportionate and discriminatory, the trial court properly found, "com-

I ASSESSMENTS IN GENERAL—concluded parison with but one other property in a city the size of Boone, is insufficient to afford relief”.

Crary v Board, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

Assessor’s valuation—presumptions—burden of proof. The presumption is that the valuation placed by the assessor upon any particular property is correct, and the burden of proof is upon the person challenging that estimate to prove otherwise, as provided by statute, yet the opinion of the assessor is not conclusive, but when properly based and apparently not erroneous, excessive, or out of proportion, it is to be held as the true value of the property.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Presumption in favor of assessor’s valuation—burden of proving assessment inequitable. There is a strong presumption in favor of the valuation fixed by the assessor which will not be disturbed on appeal, unless the presumption is overcome by proof, and altho the assessment is less than the value of the property, if it is inequitable when compared with assessments on similar property, it will be reduced to an equitable basis; so, where petition for reduction of city tax assessment on petitioner’s lots did not allege that it was inequitable, where evidence showed lots were assessed pursuant to uniform system and reason for petitioner’s witnesses’ disagreement with assessor as to value did not appear, and, where assessments on similar lots in same amount were not challenged, the presumption in favor of assessment was not overcome and petitioner failed to sustain statutory burden of proving that assessor’s valuation was inequitable.

Call v Board, 227-1116; 290 NW 109

Assessment—presumption of correctness. The strong presumption of correctness which attends an official assessment of property (especially after it has been confirmed by the official board of review) cannot be overcome except by very definite and persuasive testimony to the contrary.

Butler v Des Moines, 219-956; 258 NW 755

Assessor’s valuation—conclusiveness. It is the judgment of the assessor which the statute requires in making assessments. So long as his action is not arbitrary or capricious or so inconsistent with the actual values as to give rise to the inference that for some reason he has not properly discharged his duty, the assessments made by him and confirmed by the local board of review should not be disturbed by the court.

Crary v Board, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

Void assessment voids tax. Under a void tax assessment no valid tax is due.

Jones v Mills County, 224-1375; 279 NW 96

Irregularities in assessment of capital stock of bank. It cannot be said that no valid assessment of the capital stock and surplus and undivided profits of a bank is effected because of irregularities in that:

1. The bank officials, in furnishing the law-required statement, correctly filled out that part of the official blank which the law contemplates will be filled out by the assessor, to wit, the “valuation” sheet showing the actual figures on which the several assessments should be computed,

2. The assessor failed either to sign or verify said valuation sheet as so made out, and

3. The assessor’s books, when delivered to the county auditor contained no formal entry of assessments of said items of taxable property,— when the evidence shows that said “valuation” sheet, as so made out, (1) was examined and approved by the assessor, (2) was duly placed before the review board, (3) was by said board examined and left without change, and (4) was later, with other assessment records, duly filed with the county auditor.

Security Bank v Mitts, 220-271; 261 NW 625

Bar of causes of action—decisions involving former assessments not res judicata. Taxes do not arise out of contract and each year’s taxes constitute a separate cause of action. Therefore, a decision or judgment involving assessments on the same property in former years cannot be res judicata as to future assessments.

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

II DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY

Indefinite description or overlapping assessment—remedy. If a tax assessment is otherwise valid and legal, a property owner’s remedy for an irregularity, such as indefinite description or overlapping assessment, is to appear before the board of review.

Jones v Mills County, 224-1375; 279 NW 96

Forty-acre assessment requirement—limited applicability. The statute (§6962, C., ’35) which provides that assessment of land shall be made by 40-acre tracts applies only to cases where the ownership is unknown.

Jones v Mills County, 224-1375; 279 NW 96

7108 Oath.

Sworn assessment roll competent for impeaching purposes. The defendant in eminent domain proceedings has the right, on the cross-examination of the plaintiff and for the purpose of contradicting and impeaching him, to show the sworn statement made by the plaintiff to the assessor as to the value of the farm in question and as to the number and value of the livestock kept on said farm.

7109 Actual, assessed, and taxable value.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 509

ANALYSISI VALUATION IN GENERAL*II TAXABLE VALUE*I VALUATION IN GENERAL

"Actual" and "market" value. The terms "actual" and "market" value, as employed in the law of taxation, ordinarily mean the same thing.

Hawkeye Co. v Board, 205-161; 217 NW 837

"Value" and "market value"—interchangeable and equivalent to "actual value". By "value", in common parlance, is meant "market value", which is no other than the fair value of property as between one who wants to purchase and another who desires to sell—both terms being used interchangeably and being the equivalent of "actual value" at which the statute requires assessment of property for taxation.

Lincoln JSL Bank v Board, 227-1136; 290 NW 94

Actual value—evidence. On the issue of the actual value of property for purposes of general taxation for a certain year, the prior tax records of the court are inadmissible.

Board v Board, 215-876; 244 NW 855

Assessment at less than actual value—justification. Tho the statute directs property to be assessed at its actual value, it should not be so assessed if other property of a like or similar kind in the same assessment district is assessed at less than its actual value.

Talbott v Des Moines, 218-1397; 257 NW 393

Actual value—limitation on board. The board of review, in readjusting the value of land for assessment purposes must not go beyond the actual, independent value of the 40-acre tract in question. It may not add to such value on the ground that the owner owns other improved contiguous lands.

Davison v Board, 209-1332; 230 NW 304

Assessors—statutory requirements. In determining assessments where the formula used by the assessor allows depreciation upon the same annual basis for all buildings, and does not take into account all the elements mentioned in the statutes, but does achieve approximate uniformity, and reasonable equality of assessment, and where assessed value is conceded to be less than actual value, assessment is proper.

Crary v Board, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

Valuation—equitableness—assessor's duty. In determining values it is the duty of the assessor to fix such values equitably in comparison with other like property.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Levy and assessment—when discriminatory. An assessment is not discriminatory unless it stands out above the general levy.

Crary v Board, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

Discrimination between similar properties—reduction. Tho property is not assessed at its actual value as required by law, nevertheless, if it is assessed for more in proportion to its actual value than other similar properties in the same assessment district, the property owner is entitled to an equalizing reduction.

Chapman Bros. v Board, 209-304; 228 NW 28

Assessment—disproportionate and discriminatory. On complaint of inequality of assessment and contention that assessment is disproportionate and discriminatory, the trial court properly found, "comparison with but one other property in a city the size of Boone, is insufficient to afford relief."

Crary v Board, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

State board of review—supervision. The state board of assessment and review must as one of its duties exercise supervision over the administration of the tax list, advise with taxing officials, and aid in securing equitable and just enforcement of the tax list.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Presumption as to actual value. The court must presume, until the contrary is made to appear, that an assessment of property for general taxation purposes has been made and equalized on the sole basis of actual value as commanded by this section.

Board v Board, 215-876; 244 NW 855

Assessments — presumption of correctness. Evidence held insufficient to overcome presumption of correctness of tax assessments, where two properties, similar in construction and producing about the same income, are claimed to be disproportionate to respective values.

Crary v Board, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

Assessor's valuation — presumption. The presumption is that the valuation placed by the assessor upon any particular property is correct, and the burden of proof is upon the person challenging that estimate to prove otherwise, as provided by statute, yet the opinion of the assessor is not conclusive, but when properly based and apparently not erroneous, excessive, or out of proportion, it is to be held as the true value of the property.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Presumption in favor of assessor's valuation—burden of proving assessment inequitable. There is a strong presumption in favor of the

I VALUATION IN GENERAL—concluded valuation fixed by the assessor which will not be disturbed on appeal, unless the presumption is overcome by proof, and altho the assessment is less than the value of the property, if it is inequitable when compared with assessments on similar property, it will be reduced to an equitable basis; so, where petition for reduction of city tax assessment on petitioner's lots did not allege that it was inequitable, where evidence showed lots were assessed pursuant to uniform system and reason for petitioner's witnesses' disagreement with assessor as to value did not appear, and, where assessments on similar lots in same amount were not challenged, the presumption in favor of assessment was not overcome and petitioner failed to sustain statutory burden of proving that assessor's valuation was inequitable.

Call v Board, 227-1116; 290 NW 109

Assessor's valuation—conclusiveness. It is the judgment of the assessor which the statute requires in making assessments. So long as his action is not arbitrary or capricious or so inconsistent with the actual values as to give rise to the inference that for some reason he has not properly discharged his duty, the assessments made by him and confirmed by the local board of review should not be disturbed by the court.

Crary v Board, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

Presumptions—correctness of assessment—complainant's burden of proof. One who complains of a tax assessment has burden of proof of overcoming the presumption of correctness of assessments.

Crary v Board, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

Assessment — correction — burden of proof. A property owner who attacks an assessment which has been confirmed by the board of review must overthrow the presumption that such assessment is equitable, just, and nondiscriminatory when compared with other like property within the taxing district.

Hawkeye Co. v Board, 205-161; 217 NW 837

Burden of proof. A property owner has the burden of proof to show that the valuation placed upon his property by the board of review, for taxation purposes, is excessive or inequitable.

Appeal of Blank, 214-863; 243 NW 173

Farm land within city—evidence warranting reduction in actual value. Where a 371.51-acre farm within the corporate limits of a city was very rough, the top soil washed off, the fertility gone, a third of the land infested with weeds rendering it impossible to raise even grass crops, and where the taxes exceeded the income, and qualified witnesses fixed its value at between $10 and $15 per acre, as against the tax assessor's value fixed at $65.58 per acre, on same basis as adjoining lands, tho there was no other similar land in the district, the supreme court fixed the actual value thereof for taxation at $30 per acre.

Lincoln JSL Bank v Board, 227-1136; 290 NW 94

Federal interference. The charge, as a basis for a federal injunctive interference, that the executive council (now state tax commission) has discriminated against a nonresident railway company in valuing its property for assessment purposes, as compared with other dissimilar properties, must be supported by a clear and affirmative showing that the discrimination does in fact exist, has been adopted as a practice, and is necessarily intentional.

Chicago, GW Ry. v Kendall, 266 US 94

State statute providing review on tax assessments—federal equity jurisdiction. The statutes offering a remedy to banks for review of excessive assessments, held, not sufficiently adequate to preclude federal jurisdiction in equity.

Munn v Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

II TAXABLE VALUE

Taxable value—determined—60 percent rule. The assessor having determined the actual value and the equitable valuation of the property proportionately with other properties of the district, the value for tax purposes is determined by the 60 percent rule.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Assessors—statutory requirements—approximate compliance. In determining assessments where the formula used by the assessor allows depreciation upon the same annual basis for all buildings, and does not take into account all the elements mentioned in the statutes, but does achieve approximate uniformity, and reasonable equality of assessment, and where assessed value is conceded to be less than actual value, assessment is proper.

Crary v Board, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

Assessor's statutory duty—noncompliance—reduction allowed. In a proceeding for reduction of a city tax assessment, where evidence shows that an old frame house, assessed separately from lots, was out of date and not adaptable to use as a residence, was located in a zoning district which limits the property to residential purposes, where petitioner's witnesses agree that on account of such factors the only value that can be fairly attributed to the improvements is a salvage value fixed at $3,000 and where assessor admits that he had no idea what the market value was, nor what the rental or income value would be, and further admits he gave no consideration to rental or income value and that assessment was made on the basis of cubic content or cubic foot replacement, somewhere between 16 and 50 cents per foot, which is not disclosed by the record, and that he allowed only a 25 percent depreciation on 45- or 50-year-old residence, held, assessor did not perform the duties imposed by statute, and assessment reduced to $3,000.

Call v Board, 227-1116; 290 NW 109

Valuation—factors considered. The valuation of property for tax purposes cannot be determined by mathematical formulae alone. While the statute requires that the productive and earning capacity, past, present, and prospective, must be taken into consideration, it is also necessary that the element of the assessor's judgment properly estimating the influence of the various relevant factors must enter in the assessment.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Valuation—key property reduction—other property—effect. In an action for reduction in valuation of a taxpayer's business property where it is based in part on the valuation of key property selected in the district, upon which the board of assessment and review allows a reduction of valuation of street frontage on one street adjoining key property, held, a corresponding percentage reduction in front foot valuations of taxpayer's property located on another street is not required in absence of any showing that valuation of street frontage of taxpayer's property is fixed solely on account of proximity of key property.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Valuation—order of reduction. Where the taxable value to be placed on property in 1931 was fixed by the court, and was acquiesced in by all parties and neither appealed, it is considered a fair assessable value where the evidence does not indicate that property was to any considerable degree different in value in 1931 and 1933, and the state board of assessment and review recommends a 20 percent reduction of the 1931 tax assessment as an equalization of tax assessments for the year 1933, held, the taxpayer is entitled to the full 20 percent reduction rather than 10.08 percent reduction allowed by the assessor.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Decisions involving former assessments not res judicata. The assessment of property for taxation is separate for each year, being based on a separate valuation, and an adjudication for one year cannot definitely fix the value for succeeding years.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Special legislative act—reduction—nonapplicable. Chapter 244 Special Acts of the Forty-fourth General Assembly, providing for reduction in tax rates for years 1931 and 1932, is not applicable as a basis for reduction in a tax valuation for the year 1933.

Levy and assessment—unauthorized review—effect. The unauthorized act of the county board of review in assuming to offset against an assessment of bank stock the amount of federal tax-exempt securities held by the bank does not constitute an adjudication against the proper county officials to correct the error.

First N. Bank v Burke, 201-994; 196 NW 287

State statute providing review on tax assessments—federal equity jurisdiction. The statutes offering a remedy to banks for review of excessive assessments, held, not sufficiently adequate to preclude federal jurisdiction in equity.

Munn v Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

All adequate administrative remedies in matters of taxation must be exhausted before resort can be had to court, so when administrative stage of action is completed, judicial power of court may begin, and the parties may resort to any tribunal having jurisdiction. Hence, where national banks bring an action to restrain collection of alleged illegal taxes on capital stock, basing alleged illegality on fact that other competitive "moneyed capital" was taxed intentionally and consistently at lower rate in violation of federal statutes, held, banks failed to exhaust remedy provided by statutes providing appeal from assessor to board of review.

A lessee of real estate who has contracted to pay, as part of the rent, all taxes on the land, and who has the right under the lease to contest the validity of any assessment on the land, may institute and maintain such contest in his own name, even tho he might under the lease make such contest in the name of the landlord.

Chapman Bros. v Board, 209-304; 228 NW 28

Assessment at less than actual value—justification. Tho the statute directs property to be assessed at its actual value, it should not be so assessed if other property of a like or similar kind in the same assessment district is assessed at less than its actual value.

Talbott v Des Moines, 218-1397; 257 NW 393

Assessment—wrongful classification—statutory remedy must be pursued. A taxpayer, who fails timely to interpose, before the local board of review, or before the state board of assessment and review, his objection that his property (in this case, the capital stock of a bank) was wrongfully classified as personal property and subjected to a consolidated levy instead of being classified as moneys and credits and subject to a six-mill levy, may not proceed in equity to enjoin the collection of the tax.

Security Bk. v Mitts, 220-271; 261 NW 625

National bank stock taxed in excess of other moneyed capital—discrimination. The action of taxing officials in classifying a national bank's shares of stock as "moneyed capital" under the state laws, while placing competing capital of individuals in class of "moneys and credits", resulting in higher tax rates on banks, held, prohibited discrimination against national bank, and entitled bank to an injunction against the county treasurer restraining collection of discriminatory tax, notwithstanding bank's alleged failure to seek a hearing before state board of review.

Knowles v Bank, 58 F 2d, 232

Voluntary payment on excessive assessment—later reduction by state board—effect. A taxpayer who makes no objection to the local board of review as to the valuation which has been duly placed on his real estate by the assessor for assessment purposes, and voluntarily pays the taxes duly levied during the two following years on said valuation, may not later, and after obtaining an order from the state board of assessment and review reducing said assessed valuation, successfully contend that any part of said voluntarily paid taxes was "erroneously or illegally exacted or paid" within the meaning of the refund statute, §7235, C., '35.

Cedar Rapids Co. v Stirm, 222-206; 268 NW 562

Limitation on relief. A property owner may not, in the adjustment of his assessment, be granted greater relief than that prayed for by him.

Talbott v Des Moines, 218-1397; 257 NW 393

Burden of proof. A property owner has the burden of proof to show that the valuation placed upon his property by the board of review, for taxation purposes, is excessive or inequitable.

Appeal of Blank, 214-863; 243 NW 173

State statute providing review on tax assessments—federal equity jurisdiction. The statutes offering a remedy to banks for review of excessive assessments, held, not sufficiently adequate to preclude federal jurisdiction in equity.

Munn v Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

Petition to board of review on excessive tax assessment—not exclusion of federal court. Bank's petition to board of review, held, not to constitute a selection of statutory remedy for adjudication of alleged excessive assessment to exclusion of remedy in federal court of equity.

Munn v Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

7133 Appeal.

Att. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 196; '38 AG Op 509, 561; AG Op April 24, '39

Invalid amendment. Amendment changing "board" (C., '27) to "county board of review" (43 GA, Ch 205) invalid.

Davidson Co. v Mulock, 212-730; 235 NW 45

Notice of—proper service. A statute which distinctly provides that a notice, e.g., a notice of appeal, shall be "served as an original notice", authorizes a service on the designated party by leaving a copy of said notice at the usual place of residence of said party with some member of his family over fourteen years of age—when said party is not present in the county at the time of said service. So held as to the service of a notice of appeal under this section.

In re Sioux City Yards, 222-323; 268 NW 18

Defective notice—appearance—effect. A notice of appeal from a refusal of the board of review to lower an assessment, and the form, contents, and service of such notice become quite immaterial when the board enters a general appearance and contests the appeal.

Chapman Bros. v Board, 209-304; 228 NW 28

Fatally defective notice. A notice of appeal to the district court from the action of the local board of review, addressed "To the Honorable Mayor and the City Council of Des Moines sitting as a board of review", is wholly insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the district court.

Midwest. Realty v City, 210-942; 231 NW 459

Fatally defective notice—appearance—effect. A fatal defect in a notice of appeal to the district court from the action of the board of review in a city, is not cured by the entry in the district court of a general appearance by the city through its attorney.

Midwest. Realty v City, 210-942; 231 NW 459

Discrimination—exclusive remedy. The exclusive remedy of a taxpayer who claims that he has been discriminated against in an assessment of his property is to point out, even informally, to the board of review the facts showing such discrimination, and to appeal in case he feels aggrieved by the ruling of the board.

Iowa Bank v Stewart, 214-1229; 232 NW 445
See 284 US 239

Decisions involving former assessments not res judicata. Taxes do not arise out of contract and each year's taxes constitute a separate cause of action. Therefore, a decision or judgment involving assessments on the same property in former years cannot be res judicata as to future assessments.

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

Review—transcript defined. For a tax appeal, the transcript from the board of review consists of the assessment, the objections thereto, and the board's ruling on the objections.

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

Appeal to supreme court—limited to questions before board of review. Where taxpayer appealed from board of review complaining of two items of assessment, city and board of review on further appeal to supreme court could not have other controverted items reviewed.

Central Life v Des Moines, (NOR); 236 NW 426

State statute providing review on tax assessments—federal equity jurisdiction. The statutes offering a remedy to banks for review of excessive assessments, held, not sufficiently adequate to preclude federal jurisdiction in equity.

Munn v Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

7134 Trial on appeal.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 158; '38 AG Op 509; AG Op July 31, '39

Appeal—scope. The public may complain, on an appeal from the district court to the supreme court, because the court below decreased the valuation approved by the local board of review.

Appeal of Blank, 214-863; 243 NW 173

Decisions involving former assessments not res judicata. Taxes do not arise out of contract and each year's taxes constitute a separate cause of action. Therefore, a decision or judgment involving assessments on the same property in former years cannot be res judicata as to future assessments.

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

Actual value—evidence. On the issue of the actual value of property for purposes of general taxation for a certain year, the prior tax records are inadmissible.

Board v Board, 215-876; 244 NW 855

Presumption of correctness. The strong presumption of correctness which attends an official assessment of property (especially after it has been confirmed by the official board of review) cannot be overcome except by very definite and persuasive testimony to the contrary. Evidence held insufficient to overcome presumption.

Butler v Des Moines, 219-956; 258 NW 755

Assessment—correction—burden of proof. A property owner who attacks an assessment which has been confirmed by the board of review must overthrow the presumption that such assessment is equitable, just, and non-discriminatory when compared with other like property within the taxing district. Evidence held ample to overthrow such presumption and to justify a reduction by the court.

Hawkeye Co. v Board, 205-161; 217 NW 837

Board of supervisors as objectors—trial de novo. The board of supervisors as objectors to the assessment of a stock yards company may properly appeal to the supreme court from an order sustaining a motion to dismiss their appeal to the district court, and the case in the supreme court is triable de novo.

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

Appeal to supreme court—limited to questions before board of review. Where taxpayer appealed from board of review complaining of two items of assessment, city and board of review on further appeal to supreme court could not have other controverted items reviewed.

Central Life v Des Moines, (NOR); 236 NW 426

State statute providing review on tax assessments—federal equity jurisdiction. The statutes offering a remedy to banks for review of excessive assessments, held, not sufficiently adequate to preclude federal jurisdiction in equity.

Munn v Bank, 18 F 2d 269

7135 Appeal on behalf of public.

Board of supervisors as objectors—trial de novo. The board of supervisors as objectors to the assessment of a stock yards company may properly appeal to the supreme court from an order sustaining a motion to dismiss their appeal to the district court, and the case in the supreme court is triable de novo.

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

State statute providing review on tax assessments—federal equity jurisdiction. The statutes offering a remedy to banks for review of excessive assessments, held, not sufficiently adequate to preclude federal jurisdiction in equity.

Munn v Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

7136 Power of court.

Discrimination between similar properties—reduction. The property is not assessed at its actual value as required by law, nevertheless, if it is assessed for more in proportion to its actual value than other similar properties in the same assessment district, the property owner is entitled to an equalizing reduction.

Chapman Bros. v Board, 209-304; 228 NW 28

Nonpower of court to increase assessment. On appeal by a taxpayer from an assessment against him, the court cannot increase the assessment. The court has power to increase an assessment only in those cases where the appeal is taken by an officer of an interested county, city, town, township or school district. So held where the local board of review based its assessment against an insurance company solely on two items of moneys and credits, thereby conceding the nonassessability of all other items of moneys and credits of the company as shown by its report to the assessor, and where on appeal by the taxpayer it was sought to increase the assessment by other and additional items of moneys and credits as shown by said report.

Central Life v City, 212-1254; 238 NW 535; 78 ALR 551

Appeal by taxpayer—district court cannot increase assessment. Statute authorizing district court on appeal from board of review to increase assessments does not apply to taxpayer's appeal.

Central Life v Des Moines, (NOR); 236 NW 426

Appeal to supreme court—limited to questions before board of review. Where taxpayer appealed from board of review complaining of two items of assessment, city and board of review on further appeal to supreme court could not have other controverted items reviewed.

Central Life v Des Moines, (NOR); 236 NW 426

CHAPTER 344

TAX LIST

7144 Consolidated tax.

Intermingled legal and illegal taxes—procedure. When a taxpayer claims that a separable part of his consolidated tax is illegal, he has the legal right to pay the conceded legal part in whole, or by statutory installments, and to test the legality of the untendered part by proper proceedings. It follows that if he is unsuccessful in his test suit he is liable for interest or penalty on the untendered tax only.

Chicago, RI Ry. v Slate, 213-1294; 241 NW 393

7145 Tax list.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 115; '36 AG Op 486

Approval of assessment—necessarily resulting levy. A duly made and approved assessment on specific property necessarily takes that rate of tax which the law has provided for such property, and the duty of the auditor to compute the tax on such basis is purely ministerial.

Iowa N. Bk. v Stewart, 214-1229; 232 NW 445

See 284 US 239

Tax sale register as evidence. In an action to enjoin a county treasurer from selling at tax sale land on which the county held either certificates of tax sale or tax deeds, books designated as "tax sale registers" containing the county record of tax sales were competent evidence of the issuance of tax certificates to the county, although not evidence of the county's alleged tax deeds.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

7146 Correction—tax apportioned.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 115

7147 Tax list delivered — informality and delay.

Delinquent and unpaid taxes—bringing forward—time limit. The duty of the county treasurer to bring forward and enter on a tax list all delinquent and unpaid taxes against each tract of land (in order to preserve the lien of said taxes) is legally discharged if said bringing forward and entry is done as rapidly as is possible within a reasonable time after said list is received from the county auditor.

Murphy v Smith, 222-780; 269 NW 748

7149 Corrections by auditor.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 134, 453; '28 AG Op 244; '30 AG Op 85; '34 AG Op 446; '36 AG Op 486; AG Op Nov. 6, '39, April 26, '39, May 24, '39

Delegation of authority. The authority of the county auditor to correct errors in assessments cannot be delegated to the county treasurer.

Muscatine Co. v Pitchforth, 214-952; 243 NW 292

Correction—time limit. The error of the assessor in deducting from the assessment of a private bank the amount of money borrowed by the banker may be corrected by the county auditor after the payment of the first installment and before the payment of the last installment of taxes.

Elliott v Rhoads, 203-218; 212 NW 468

No current year limitation. The auditor's power to assess omitted property is not limited to the so-called current year.

Blondel v County, 203-1099; 212 NW 335

Assessment after nullification of tax. The county auditor has power to assess real estate as "omitted" property when the ordinary tax thereon has been decreed void because of an omission by the regular assessor, even tho the county treasurer possibly had the same power.

Blondel v County, 203-1099; 212 NW 335

Correcting assessment of private banker. The county auditor may, on proper notice and hearing, and before a tax is paid, correct the erroneous action of the assessor in deducting the debts of a private banker from the value of the banker's taxable property. (§1821, S., '13 [§6997, C., '39]).

Mannings Bk. v Armstrong, 204-512; 211 NW 485

Bank shares—taxing officers acting contrary to law. The taxation of state and national bank shares at a higher rate than the shares of competing domestic corporations is violative of the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment and in excess of permission conferred by federal statute for the taxation of national bank stock.

Munn v Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

Knowles v Bank, 58 F 2d, 232

First N. Bk. v Anderson, 269 US 341

Iowa N. Bk. v Stewart, 214-1229; 232 NW 445; 284 US 239

Levy and assessment—bank stock—correction of error without notice. The act of the county board of review in setting off against an assessment of bank stock the amount of federal tax-exempt securities held by the bank, and thereby wholly canceling the assessment, is not only an error, but is a nullity; and the county auditor may, without notice to the bank, correct the error by entering the proper assessment on the tax books on the basis of the conceded capital, surplus, and undivided profits, less the real estate, of the bank. (See §§1822, 1885-b, S., '13.)

First N. Bank v Burke, 201-994; 196 NW 287

Unallowable correction. The county auditor may not, under the guise of correcting the assessment of a private banker, impose an assessment on bills receivable which the banker had rediscounted for full value to his correspondent bank, even tho the rediscounts were, in a sense, held by the correspondent as collateral, because of the mutual contemplation of the banker and the correspondent that the banker would in time redeem said discounts.

Northwestern Bk. v Van Roekel, 202-237; 207 NW 345

Illegal change by auditor of assessment — effect. The act of a county auditor, on his own motion, and without the connivance of any other official charged with duties pertaining to taxation, in changing a duly made and approved assessment of corporate stock of concerns competing with national, state and savings banks, from its proper classification of "corporate stock" to the classification of "moneys and credits" and computing the tax thereon as provided for moneys and credits, is absolutely void, and furnishes no basis for the claim by national, state and savings banks that they have been discriminated against, in that the consolidated levy has been applied to 20 percent of the value of their stock while the favored concerns have been taxed on the basis of 5 mills on the dollar of the actual value of their stock.

Iowa N. Bk. v Stewart, 214-1229; 232 NW 445
Reversed, 284 US 239

Unauthorized classification. Whether certain securities shall be assessed as moneys and credits or as moneyed capital, within the meaning of the federal statutes, must, in the first instance, be determined by the judgment of the assessor, and lastly by the judgment of the board of review; and the county auditor has no power to change such determination.

Ft. Madison Sec. v Maxwell, 202-1346; 212 NW 131

7150 Notice.

Allowable correction without notice.

First N. Bk. v Burke, 201-994; 196 NW 287

Permissible change without notice. When the shares of stock of a bank are assessed to the bank, the county auditor may, at any time before the tax is paid, and without notice, change the assessment to the individual stockholders.

Ludeman v County, 204-1100; 216 NW 712

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 134

7154 Procedure on appeal.

Decisions involving former assessments not res judicata. Taxes do not arise out of contract and each year's taxes constitute a separate cause of action. Therefore, a decision or judgment involving assessments on the same property in former years cannot be res judicata as to future assessments.

Corrections by auditor—delegation of authority. The authority of the county auditor to correct errors in assessments cannot be delegated to the county treasurer.

Muscatine Co. v Pitchforth, 214-952; 243 NW 292

Unauthorized change. The county treasurer is wholly without authority to change the amount of a duly made assessment which appears on the tax books in the amount as fixed by the assessor and as modified and approved by the various equalization boards. The property so assessed cannot be deemed omitted property within the meaning of this section.

Muscatine Co. v Pitchforth, 214-952; 243 NW 292

Appeal—county treasurer not “aggrieved party”. The county treasurer may not appeal to the district court from an order of the state board of assessment and review nullifying an assessment made by the said treasurer against alleged omitted property of a taxpayer, said treasurer not being a “party aggrieved” within the meaning of the statute. (§6943-c27, par. 9a, C., '31 [§6943.026, C., '39 (par. 9a repealed by 47 GA, Ch 188, §7)]).

board of supervisors, even tho paid voluntarily and without protest.

Hewitt v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

Mandamus proper remedy to secure tax refund. A taxpayer may properly bring a mandamus action to compel a refund of taxes overpaid because of county auditor's failure to comply with budget deduction requirements of this section. Special method—when followed. A special statutory method for collecting a special tax must be followed, but in the absence of such method, the right which inheres in sovereignty to enforce collection of taxes would apply.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Failure to pay legally assessed tax—presumption. On the naked showing that a party has not paid in full a tax legally assessed against him, the presumption must be indulged that the public authorities not only have the right to collect in full but will collect in full.

Iowa N. Bk. v Stewart, 214-1229; 232 NW 445

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Special assessments—loss of lien. The lien of delinquent special assessments for street improvements is irrevocably lost by the failure of the county treasurer to enter such assessments on the current general tax list. And this is true even tho the property owner has formally waived all illegalities in the assessments and has agreed to pay them, and even tho the county treasurer has kept his books on forms prescribed by the state auditor.

Wallace v Gilmore, 216-1070; 250 NW 105

Sale for current tax and tax not brought forward. A tax sale for a special assessment maturing during the year of sale is not rendered wholly void because the sale is also made for delinquent special assessments for prior years, not brought forward by the treasurer on the tax books.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

Bringing forward on tax list—time limit. The duty of the county treasurer to bring forward and enter on a tax list all delinquent and unpaid taxes against each tract of land (in order to preserve the lien of said taxes) is legally discharged if said bringing forward and entry is done as rapidly as is possible within a reasonable time after said list is received from the county auditor.

Murphy v Smith, 222-780; 269 NW 748

Sale for delinquent taxes not carried forward—setting aside—insufficient tender. A tax sale for delinquent taxes not carried forward will not be set aside in equity nor the deed issuance restrained when the titleholder's offer to do equity by tendering such taxes as "constitute a valid lien" and "actually paid" by the purchaser is a disingenuous tender.

McClelland v Polk County, 225-177; 279 NW 423

Sale for delinquent taxes not brought forward—deed invalidity. A tax deed is invalid as a basis for a quiet title action against the legal titleholder who asks no relief except undisturbed possession where, prior to the sale, the delinquent taxes supporting such deed have not been brought forward by the treasurer and entered on the current tax list opposite the property on which it is a lien.

Bittle v Cain, 224-1332; 278 NW 608

Delinquent taxes not brought forward—effect on bonds retired by special assessments. County treasurer's failure to bring forward delinquent special assessments, an irregularity rendering the assessments only voidable and not void, will not create a cause of action against the city on refunding bonds based on the claim that such special assessments, not brought forward, may not be included in determining the amount of the "unpaid special assessments."

Bankers Life v Emmetsburg, 224-1287; 278 NW 311

Lien—refunding bonds for assessments not carried forward—city nonliable. Where a city issues refunding bonds for street and sewer improvements in an amount equal to "unpaid special assessments" including therein "unpaid special assessments" which the county treasurer failed to carry forward on his tax lists, a theory that "unpaid special assessments" meant only those supported by a valid lien, and therefore such bonds exceeded the statutory limit to the extent of those assessments not carried forward, will not make a city liable to the bondholders, inasmuch as those assessments not carried forward are not void but only voidable at the option of the property holder.

Bankers Life v Spirit Lake, 224-1304; 278 NW 320

Bringing forward special taxes—omission—county treasurer not city's agent. A county treasurer's failure to bring forward special assessments on his tax list does not constitute a delinquency on part of the city, and he is no agent for that purpose.

Bankers Life v Emmetsburg, 224-1287; 278 NW 311

Delinquent personal tax—failure to enter on list—effect. A sale of real estate for a delinquent personal tax not entered on the delinquent personal tax list is void because of the provisions of §7192, C., '27, even tho §7203, C., '27, '31, declares, generally, that personal taxes are a lien on the taxpayer's real estate for a period of ten years after December 31 of the year of levy. (Section 7192, C., '27, now repealed.)

Schoenwetter v Oxley, 213-528; 239 NW 118

Mortgagee as subsequent titleholder denying tax deed validity—delinquent tax tender unnecessary. A mortgagee, being required only to pay the taxes levied on his mortgage, not being the realty titleholder when certain delinquent real estate taxes were levied, and being under no legal obligation to pay such delinquent taxes, is not, after having acquired the land by deed from the mortgagor subsequent to an invalid tax sale, required to tender such delinquent taxes as a condition to defending and denying in a quiet title action the validity of the tax deed issued for such taxes.

Bittle v Cain, 224-1332; 278 NW 608

Tax sale register as evidence. In an action to enjoin a county treasurer from selling at tax sale land on which the county held either certificates of tax sale or tax deeds, books designated as "tax sale registers" containing the county record of tax sales were competent evidence of the issuance of tax certificates to the county, altho not evidence of the county's alleged tax deeds.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Certificate — lien — noninvalidating defects. Record reviewed, and held that a municipal special assessment certificate for paving was not invalidated because the name of the owner of the land assessed did not appear therein (§6105, C., '35); nor was the lien of certain installments of said assessment lost because of the failure of the proper county officials to bring forward on the tax books, at the time of tax sale, said unpaid installments.

7193.04 Entries on general tax list.

Special assessments—loss of lien. The lien of delinquent special assessments for street improvements is irrevocably lost by the failure of the county treasurer to enter such assessments on the current general tax list. And this is true even tho the property owner has formally waived all illegalities in the assessments and has agreed to pay them, and even tho the county treasurer has kept his books on forms prescribed by the state auditor.

Wallace v Gilmore, 216-1070; 250 NW 105

Special procedure for collection exclusive. A municipal improvement certificate may not be foreclosed by an action in court, because (1) the statutes confer no such authority, and (2) the statutes provide a special procedure for collection along with the collection of ordinary taxes. See §6007 et seq., §7193-d1 [§7193.01, C., '39], C., '31.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 204; '36 AG Op 202; '38 AG Op 692

Applicability of statute. Principle reaffirmed that this section relative to the lien of taxes has applicability only to general taxes, not to special assessments for street improvements.

Frankel v Blank, 205-1; 213 NW 597

Special assessments—lien and priority. A tax sale for general taxes and a tax deed duly issued thereon extinguishes the lien of all existing special assessments for paving or sewer.

Iowa Co. v Barrett, 210-53; 230 NW 528

Western Sec. v Bank, 211-1804; 231 NW 317

Priority between different special assessments. The fully perfected lien of a special assessment for sewer is prior in right to the lien of a subsequent special assessment by the board of supervisors for a public drainage improvement, even tho the latter improvement was initiated prior to the sewer proceedings.

Anderson-Deering Co. v Boone, 201-1129; 205 NW 984

Statute declares lien—priority. Unless so expressed by statute, taxes are neither a lien on property assessed nor on taxpayer's other property and this cannot be enlarged by judicial construction, but whether such a lien is paramount to other liens depends on legislative intent ascertained or implied from the statute, which need not contain specific words indicating a "first lien" in order to create priority.

Linn County v Steele, 223-864; 273 NW 920; 110 ALR 1492

Tax deed nullifies special assessments. A tax deed issued on a sale for ordinary regular taxes nullifies the lien of all special assessments levied on the land by a city after the sale and before the execution of the deed.

Means v City, 214-948; 241 NW 671

Tax sale—school fund mortgage. Where a mortgage securing the permanent school fund is on the realty purchased at tax sale, the purchaser is charged with knowledge of the rights of the county holding such mortgage and that the debt secured by the mortgage is unpaid.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

School fund mortgage foreclosure. In an action to foreclose a school fund mortgage, where the court decreed that plaintiff made no demand nor attempt to collect the mortgage until eleven years after it became due, held, that the defendant-holder of the certificate of tax sale was charged with knowledge of plaintiff's lien, and that it was unpaid, and he could not rely on lapse of time, laches or negligence, as against the state.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

School fund mortgage paramount—treasurer exceeding authority. In an action to foreclose a duly recorded mortgage to secure a loan from the permanent school fund, the priority of lien granted by statute can neither be defeated by a tax sale purchaser of such realty on ground of mutual mistake of purchaser and county treasurer in connection with tax sale, nor that the county treasurer exceeded his authority and sold more than the interest of person holding fee in such realty, as the taxes on the realty mortgaged to secure loan from permanent school fund are not a lien against the state and the purchaser at such sale acquired only the right to redeem from mortgage and does not acquire a lien superior to lien of mortgage.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

School fund mortgage paramount. The statutes providing, that where real estate is incumbered to school fund the interest of the person holding the fee shall alone be sold for taxes and that lien of state shall not be affected by the tax sale, will be construed as meaning that lien of mortgage given to the state for land bought on credit and lien of a real estate mortgage to school fund will be paramount to a tax lien.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

Duration of lien. Tax sale of land for non-payment of drainage assessments is not an action barred by statute of limitations, and the duration of a lien for such assessment or the time within which payment may be enforced is not limited by statute.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

Tax sale—school, agricultural college, or university land. In construing statute which provides in substance, that in the sale of school, agricultural college or university land sold on credit which is sold for taxes, the purchaser shall acquire only the interest of the person holding the fee and that the state's lien shall not be affected by such sale, the supreme court will not construe the catchwords for such statute to show legislative intent to omit school fund mortgages, as the catchwords are no part of the law enacted and are not to be considered in construing the statute.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

7203 Lien of personal taxes.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 188, 233, 320; '28 AG Op 384; '32 AG Op 204; '34 AG Op 722; '38 AG Op 15, 65, 595, 697

Delinquent taxes—entry. The entry of taxes on personal property in the delinquent personal tax book as such taxes accrue from year to year constitutes such taxes a lien on the real estate of the delinquent taxpayer.

Hayes v Kemp, 207-53; 222 NW 392

Delinquent personal tax—failure to enter on list—effect. A sale of real estate for a delinquent personal tax not entered on the delinquent personal tax list is void because of the provisions of §7192, C., '27, even tho §7203, C., '27, '31, declares, generally, that personal taxes are a lien on the taxpayer's real estate for a period of 10 years after December 31 of the year of levy. (§7192, C., '27, now repealed.)

Schoenwetter v Oxley, 213-528; 239 NW 118

Sale for tax for one year discharges lien of tax for prior years. A sale of land for taxes thereon for a certain year discharges the lien of personal taxes levied against the owner for prior years.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Corporate bank stock. Taxes on corporate bank stock and against the individual owners thereof are not a lien on the real estate holdings of the corporation in the hands of a receiver, notwithstanding the fact that the statute assumes to make the corporation personally liable therefor.

Andrew v Munn, 205-723; 218 NW 526

Personal property tax lien on homestead. A tax on bank stock, duly entered on the delinquent personal tax list, is a lien on the homestead of the owner of the stock.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 213-983; 234 NW 238; 238 NW 80

Statute declares lien—priority. Unless so expressed by statute, taxes are neither a lien on property assessed nor on taxpayer's other property and this cannot be enlarged by judicial construction, but whether such a lien is paramount to other liens depends on legislative intent ascertained or implied from the statute, which need not contain specific words indicating a "first lien" in order to create priority.

Linn County v Steele, 223-864; 273 NW 920; 110 ALR 1492

Lien and priority—conditional sale lien—superiority of tax lien. Taxes assessed (§§7205, 7206, C., '35) after execution of a conditional sale contract on a stock of goods and other personalty are superior to the lien of such contract inasmuch as (1) historically these sections were contained in a single section; (2) one section already carries a construction creating a lien paramount to all other liens; (3) necessarily security of the revenue is an incident of sovereignty; and (4) the above sections contain language which by necessarily implied legislative intent creates liens continuing and paramount to all other liens.

Linn County v Steele, 223-864; 273 NW 920; 110 ALR 1492

7206 Lien follows building assessed as personalty.

7207 Payment—what receivable.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 324

What constitutes legal payment. The act of a county treasurer in forwarding to a banker officially signed tax receipts, with implied authority to the banker to deliver the receipts to the various taxpayers on payment to the banker of the amount called for by the respective receipts, and the act of the taxpayer in paying the amount and receiving his receipt, constitute a legal payment of the taxes, even tho, because of the insolvency of the bank, the county treasurer never actually received the money.

Uncashed check. I PAYMENT IN GENERAL

Inadequate payment. It is idle for one to assert that he has paid all taxes due against real estate when he concededly has not paid matured special assessments on the land.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

Uncashed check. The uncashed check of a taxpayer to the county treasurer in payment of taxes does not constitute such payment, even tho said check would have been paid, had it been properly presented, and even tho the treasurer, as a matter of bookkeeping, treated said check as cash, and prepared receipts accordingly.

Morgan v Gilbert, 207-725; 223 NW 483

Recovery of tax paid—mandamus as remedy—voluntary payment—effect. Taxes illegally exacted through county auditor's failure to comply with statute requiring budget deduction of moneys and credits tax may be recovered in a mandamus action against the board of supervisors, even tho paid voluntarily and without protest.

Hewitt v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

Intermingled legal and illegal taxes—procedure. When a taxpayer claims that a separable part of his consolidated tax is illegal, he has the legal right to pay the concededly legal part in whole, or by statutory installments, and to test the legality of the untendered part by proper proceedings. It follows that if he is unsuccessful in his test suit he is liable for interest or penalty on the untendered tax only.

II RIGHT OR DUTY OF PARTICULAR PARTIES TO PAY

Discussion. See 22 ILR 39—State taxation and federal agencies

General taxes—life tenant to pay. Principle recognized that a life tenant is under primary duty to pay general taxes.

Kinnett v Ritchie, 223-543; 273 NW 175

When taxes "due". An obligation on the part of a receiver to pay taxes on mortgaged property "as they become due" embraces taxes which are owing on and after the first Monday in January following the levy, even tho they are not delinquent. In other words, nondelinquent taxes are due in the sense that they are owing.

Hawkeye Ins. v Inv. Co., 217-644; 251 NW 874

Foreclosure sale—protection of mortgagee against taxes. A mortgagee who bids in the property under a deficiency bid at foreclosure sale without at any time protecting himself against delinquent taxes as he might have done under the mortgage and foreclosure decree, and later takes a sheriff's deed to the property, may not have the rents collected during the redemption period applied to the discharge of said taxes.

Hartford Ins. v Alexander, 215-573; 246 NW 204

Redemption—law remedy to remove tax sale cloud—equity unavailing. A property owner, presumed to have been informed of his tax assessments, knowing that they will become due and payable without demand, yet allowing the taxes to become delinquent and the property to go to tax sale, may not resort to equity to remove the cloud on his title when he has by redemption a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law.

Jones v Mills County, 224-1375; 279 NW 96

Paying taxes before attacking tax deed—valid tender sufficient. Statute requiring payment of taxes as a prerequisite to attacking a tax deed, §7290, C., '35, does not preclude questioning the title by a person who repeatedly offers to do equity by tendering the whole of the taxes legally and rightfully due together with interest and penalties thereon.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

III CONTRACT TO PAY

Recovery of taxes paid for another. Instruction requiring proof of defendant's oral request that plaintiff pay taxes, promise to repay and payment by plaintiff in reliance thereon was proper under the pleading and proof.

Nelson v Hemminger, (NOR); 224 NW 49

IV PAYMENT BY NONOWNER AND REIMBURSEMENT THEREFOR

Assignment pending action—right of grantee. One who becomes an assignee of a real estate mortgage after the commencement of a successful action to set aside the mortgage as fraudulent (the action being legally his pends by proper index) and who, during the trial of said action, to which he had been made a party, redeems the land from tax sale, must be deemed a mere volunteer payer of taxes with no right to have the amount paid by him made a lien on the land.

Clarkson v McCoy, 215-1008; 247 NW 270

7211 When delinquent.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 315; AG Op March 13, '40

Conditional limitation—obligation to pay taxes. A testamentary proviso which provides that if the life tenant "neglects to pay the taxes on said real estate within six months after they become delinquent", the life estate shall automatically terminate, must be deemed to refer to all the taxes payable during a given year and not to an installment thereof. It follows that a six months delinquency on the first yearly installment of taxes works no forfeiture.

Churchill v Bank, 211-1168; 235 NW 480

Payment—intermingled legal and illegal taxes—procedure. When a taxpayer claims that a separable part of his consolidated tax is illegal, he has the legal right to pay the concededly legal part in whole, or by statutory installments, and to test the legality of the untendered part by proper proceedings. I REFUND IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 16 ILR 381—Restraint and recovery of taxes

Refunding erroneous tax—administrative remedies must be exhausted before resorting to court. Under the statute providing for refunding erroneous tax, stockholders of a national bank are not entitled to money judgment in alternative of statute. All adequate administrative remedies must be exhausted to recover tax illegally collected before resorting to the courts.

First Nat. Bk. v Harrison County, 57 F 2d, 56 Hammerstrom v Bank, 81 F 2d, 628

New action after failure of former action. An action in equity to mandamus the board of supervisors to order the refund of a tax which has been illegally exacted from plaintiff may not be deemed a continuation of a former action at law by the same plaintiff against the county and its treasurer for a personal judgment for the amount of said illegally exacted tax.

Murphy v Board, 205-256; 215 NW 744

Intermingled legal and illegal taxes—procedure. When a taxpayer claims that a separable part of his consolidated tax is illegal; he has the legal right to pay the concededly legal part in whole, or by statutory installments, and to test the legality of the untendered part by proper proceedings. It follows that if he is unsuccessful in his test suit he is liable for interest or penalty on the untendered tax only.

Chi. RI Ry. v Slate, 213-1294; 241 NW 398

Legalizing tax levy after invalidating ruling by court. A legislative act which legalizes a tax levy after the appellate court has ruled (but before entry of judgment) that the taxpayer is entitled to a refund of the tax paid, because the tax levy was void, owing to the absence of an authorizing statute, neither disturbs any vested interest of the taxpayer's nor constitutes an unconstitutional interference with the judiciary.

Chi. RI Ry. v Streepy, 211-1334; 236 NW 24

II RIGHT TO REFUND

Recovery of tax paid—mandamus as remedy—voluntary payment—effect. Taxes illegally exacted through county auditor's failure to comply with statute requiring budget deduction of moneys and credits tax may be recovered in a mandamus action against the board of supervisors, even tho paid voluntarily and without protest.

Hewitt v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

Mandamus as exclusive remedy. A taxpayer may not maintain an action for a general money judgment against a county, arising out of the fact that he has paid in the same year and on the same property an illegal bridge tax levied by a city and a legal bridge tax levied by the board of supervisors. Whatever remedy he has against the county, if any, must be worked out through mandamus to compel a refund.

Murphy v Berry, 200-974; 205 NW 777

Schoenwetter v Oxley, 213-528; 239 NW 118

Unallowable joinder of law and mandamus. An action at law against a county for judgment for taxes illegally exacted may not be joined with an equitable action of mandamus for an order on the board of supervisors directing the county treasurer to refund such taxes.

First N. Bk. v Board, 217-702; 247 NW 617; 250 NW 887

Holder of illegal certificate. The holder of a tax sale certificate issued at an illegal sale of real estate for personal taxes not entered on the delinquent personal tax list, is a "taxpayer" within the statute giving a taxpayer the right to a refund of the money paid.

Schoenwetter v Oxley, 213-528; 239 NW 118

III NONRIGHT TO REFUND

Refund—waiver. An insurance company which lists its corporate stock to itself as personal property, and at an inadequate value which it induces the assessor to accept, all on the assumption that it was subject to the consolidated levy, and thereafter interposes no counter objection, may neither obtain a refund for taxes paid nor enjoin the collection of taxes unpaid, on the theory that the property was in fact only subject to a five-mill levy as moneys and credits.

Farmers Ins. v County, 202-444; 208 NW 929

Voluntary payment on excessive assessment—later reduction by state board—effect. A taxpayer who makes no objection to the local board of review as to the valuation which has been duly placed on his real estate by the assessor for assessment purposes, and voluntarily pays the taxes duly levied during the two following years on said valuation, may not later, and after obtaining an order from the state board of assessment and review reducing said assessed valuation, successfully contend that any part of said voluntarily paid taxes was "erroneously or illegally exacted or paid" within the meaning of this section.

Cedar Rapids Co. v Stirm, 222-206; 268 NW 562

School fund estimates under local budget law omitting money on hand—taxes valid—no refund. School districts, in submitting their budgets for their fiscal year beginning July 1, are not required to include money on hand derived from taxes levied and estimated two years before and collected a year later to be expended during the current school year, and taxes collected accordingly will not be refunded in a mandamus action.

ANALYSIS

- I SALES UNDER PRIOR STATUTES
- II SALES GENERALLY
- III PUBLIC SALE
- IV IRREGULAR OR VOID SALES

I SALES UNDER PRIOR STATUTES

Statutes part of special assessment certificate holder's contract—no effect by amending tax sale statute. The right of a special assessment certificate holder to take advantage of statutes providing that special assessments be collected in the same manner as ordinary taxes, and to have the property sold to pay assessments, was a part of his contract when he purchased the certificates, and was not defeated when another statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the tax sale of property against which the county holds a tax sale certificate.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

II SALES GENERALLY

Sale for tax for one year discharges lien of tax for prior years. A sale of land for taxes thereon for a certain year discharges the lien of personal taxes levied against the owner for prior years.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Continuing tax sale under statute. A county treasurer may, under the statute, without setting a specific date, continue a tax sale for cause from the date first advertised and the later sale will be valid.

Freemyer v Taylor County, 224-401; 275 NW 718

Good cause for continuing—economic emergency—governor's proclamation. Good cause for continuing a tax sale is shown by the governor's proclamation of the existence of a great economic emergency also recognized by the legislative and judicial branches of the government.

Freemyer v Taylor County, 224-401; 275 NW 718

Judgment—substitution of county treasurer as defendant without notice—effect. A default judgment entered against a county treasurer who had been substituted as defendant in lieu of a former treasurer, in an action to enjoin the sale of land for taxes, must be set aside when the substitution is made without the service of original notice upon him and without knowledge on his part, even tho the former treasurer had been negligent in not entering an appearance; and especially is this true when the application to set aside is timely and accompanied by an affidavit of merit and an apparently good answer.

Dewell v Suddick, 211-1352; 232 NW 118

Tax sale register as evidence of tax certificates—not evidence of tax deeds. In an action to enjoin a county treasurer from selling at tax sale land on which the county held either certificates of tax sale or tax deeds, books designated as "tax sale registers" containing the county record of tax sales were competent evidence of the issuance of tax certificates to the county, altho not evidence of the county's alleged tax deeds:

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Special assessment tax sales—injunction decree not justified by pleadings. When the petition asked for an injunction restraining the county treasurer from selling at tax sale lands upon which Polk county holds tax deeds, it was error to grant an injunction restraining tax sales for special assessments regardless of who the owner of the tax deed might be, even tho other general relief was asked by the petition, the petitions of intervention, and the answer, as the court should not render a judgment which has no foundation in the pleading and is not justified by the evidence, issues, or theory upon which the case was tried.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Amendment of tax sale statute—no implied amendment of special assessment sale statute. When a statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the sale of property against which the county held tax sale certificates, the amendment did not apply to other statutes requiring the county treasurer to sell property for delinquent special assessments, as an act amending a specified statute cannot be construed as amending an unmentioned statute, and repeal of statutes by implication is not favored.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Drainage assessments—tax sale for nonpayment. Tax sale of land for nonpayment of drainage assessments is not an action barred by statute of limitations, and the duration of a lien for such assessment or the time within which payment may be enforced is not limited by statute.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

III PUBLIC SALE

No annotations in this volume

IV IRREGULAR OR VOID SALES

Partially void tax sale. Mandamus (assuming the propriety of the remedy) will not lie to wholly cancel a tax sale which is only partially void.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

Voidable sale—terms on which set aside. A tax sale, tho legally voidable, will not be set aside in equity at the instance of the property owner unless he pays, or binds himself to pay, the taxes legally assessed against the property.

Witmer v Polk Co., 222-1075; 270 NW 323

Sale for delinquent taxes not carried forward—setting aside—insufficient tender. A tax sale for delinquent taxes not carried forward will not be set aside in equity nor the deed issuance restrained when the titleholder's offer to do equity by tendering such taxes as "constitute a valid lien" and "actually paid" by the purchaser is a disingenuous tender.

McClelland v Polk County, 225-177; 279 NW 423

Mortgagee as subsequent titleholder denying tax deed validity—delinquent tax tender unnecessary. A mortgagee, being required only to pay the taxes levied on his mortgage, not being the realty titleholder when certain delinquent real estate taxes were levied, and being under no legal obligation to pay such delinquent taxes, is not, after having acquired the land by deed from the mortgagor subsequent to an invalid tax sale, required to tender such delinquent taxes as a condition to defending and denying in a quiet title action the validity of the tax deed issued for such taxes.

Bittle v Cain, 224-1332; 278 NW 608

Tax sales enjoined—error as to persons not parties to action. An injunction restraining tax sales of all property against which special assessment certificate holders had liens was erroneous insofar as it deprived certificate holders, who were not parties to the action and over whom the court had no jurisdiction, of their right to have the property sold to pay the special assessments.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Sale for delinquent taxes not brought forward—deed invalidity. A tax deed is invalid as a basis for a quiet title action against the legal titleholder who asks no relief except undisturbed possession where, prior to the sale, the delinquent taxes supporting such deed have not been brought forward by the treasurer and entered on the current tax list opposite the property on which it is a lien.

Bittle v Cain, 224-1332; 278 NW 608

7246 Notice of sale—service.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 213; '32 AG Op 185; AG Op Sept. 1, '39, Oct. 10, '39

Error in name of owner. A tax sale is not void because the real estate was advertised and sold as belonging to one who owned only a minor part thereof.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

Tax sale—general and special taxes—single sale—en masse sale rule not applicable. An en masse sale of different tracts of land for taxes is void, but land in one tract is not divided into separate tracts for tax sale purposes by virtue of separate assessments of general and special taxes, altho the specials covered only part of the tract.

White v Hammerstrom, 224-1041; 277 NW 483

Correction by resale at adjourned sale.

Tesdell v Greenwalt, 228- ; 290 NW 676

Sale—tax tender as doing equity before enjoining deed issuance. One who allows his property to go to tax sale and later seeks to enjoin the county from issuing a tax deed claiming a void sale must, if seeking equity, do equity by tendering the amount of the taxes due and attempt to make redemption as by statute provided.

Jones v Mills County, 224-1375; 279 NW 96

Amendment of tax sale statute. When a statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the sale of property against which the county held tax sale certificates, the amendment did not apply to other statutes requiring the county treasurer to sell property for delinquent special assessments, as an act amending a specified statute cannot be construed as amending an unmentioned statute, and repeal of statutes by implication is not favored.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Statutes part of special assessment certificate holder's contract. The right of a special assessment certificate holder to take advantage of statutes providing that special assessments be collected in the same manner as ordinary taxes, and to have the property sold to pay assessments, was a part of his contract when he purchased the certificates, and was not defeated when another statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the tax sale of property against which the county holds a tax sale certificate.

7251 Irregularities in advertisement.

Error in name of owner—effect. A tax sale is not void because the real estate was advertised and sold as belonging to one who owned only a minor part thereof.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

7252 Offer for sale.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 295; AG Op May 4, '39

Taxes suspended by appeal—effect. There cannot be a valid sale of real estate for taxes a part of which consists of special assessments for paving, and which part has been suspended by an appeal to the district court.

Fidelity Inv. v White, 208-519; 223 NW 884

Tax sale—general and special taxes—single sale—en masse sale rule not applicable. An en masse sale of different tracts of land for taxes is void, but land in one tract is not divided into separate tracts for tax sale purposes by virtue of separate assessments of general and special taxes, altho the specials covered only part of the tract.

White v Hammerstrom, 224-1041; 277 NW 483

Tax sale—en masse sale of separate tracts—deed recitals conclusive. The sale of more than one tract or parcel of real estate en masse, for the gross sum of taxes thereon, being contrary to the mandatory provisions of statute, voids the entire sale and deeds based thereon. Tax deed recitals relating to whether the sale was separately or en masse are conclusive evidence thereof.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Tax titles—separate tracts—lots with street between used as single unit. A tax deed, issued pursuant to an en masse sale of land, describes two separate tracts of land, when it lists land on two sides of a dedicated street, and the separateness of the tracts is neither affected by fact that the entire tract, including the street, has been used as a pasture for 37 years, nor by the circumstance that the street may never have been accepted, or, if so, had been abandoned, because the tax deed did not convey the land occupied by the street.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Tax sale—mandatory sale method governs public bidder law. The mandatory directions as to the manner of offering and selling real estate for taxes, control the public bidder law, §7255, C., '35, where the treasurer is likewise directed to offer and sell.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Amendment of tax sale statute. When a statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the sale of property against which the county held tax sale certificates, the amendment did not apply to other statutes requiring the county treasurer to sell property for delinquent special assessments, as an act amending a specified statute cannot be construed as amending an unmentioned statute, and repeal of statutes by implication is not favored.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Statutes part of special assessment certificate holder's contract. The right of a special assessment certificate holder to take advantage of statutes providing that special assessments be collected in the same manner as ordinary taxes, and to have the property sold to pay assessments, was a part of his contract when he purchased the certificates, and was not defeated when another statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the tax sale of property against which the county holds a tax sale certificate.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

7253 Bid—purchaser.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 142; '36 AG Op 319; '38 AG Op 10; AG Op Feb. 8, '39

Collusive deed—effect. A landowner who permits his land to be sold at tax sale, pursuant to an understanding with the purchaser that the latter will, after obtaining a tax deed, quitclaim to said landowner, neither acquires by the carrying out of said understanding, a new title, nor any betterment of his old title. By such transaction the landowner has simply paid his taxes.

Harrington v Foster, 220-1066; 264 NW 51

Invalid tax sale and deed in interest of mortgagee. A mortgagor and mortgagee who enter into and execute a scheme to have one of their employees bid in the property at tax sale and secure a tax deed and assign it to the mortgagee in the effort to cut out other lienholders, will be held to have accomplished no more than a payment of the taxes. A tax certificate and a deed issued under such circumstances are void.

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-Des M. Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

Tax sales—who may purchase. Under the statutes of this state any person may become a purchaser at tax sale, and the only statutory exception is found in §7261, C., '39.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Tax sales—who may not purchase. Persons who by reason of their interest in the premises and their relationship to others interested therein, that may not for equitable reasons become purchasers at a tax sale, include persons whose duty it is to pay the taxes or who have such an interest in the property that they might redeem the same from tax sale and save themselves from loss or injury, or those lienholders who may pay the taxes and are given a preferred lien over other lienholders and the titleholder for the amount of taxes paid, and persons occupying fiduciary relationships, such as agents, attorneys, guardians, trustees, etc., who may not violate their trust by becoming purchasers at tax sale of the trust property.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Drainage district bondholder — permissible purchaser at tax sale. Bondholders of a drainage district, by virtue of their ownership of such bonds, do not have an interest in such drainage district land sold for taxes which will disqualify them from becoming purchasers at tax sale.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

7255 "Scavenger sale"—notice.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 231, 474; '28 AG Op 270, 425; '32 AG Op 185; '36 AG Op 319; '38 AG Op 103, 542, 575, 699; AG Op Feb. 8, '39

Presumption of regularity. When a county treasurer sells lands to the highest bidder at "scavenger" tax sale it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that said lands were duly and unsuccessfully offered for sale at prior tax sales as required by statute.

Board v Stone, 212-660; 237 NW 478

Notice—sufficiency. A general notice by a county treasurer, duly published as provided by statute, to the effect that he will, at a named regular tax sale, "sell all real estate which shall have been previously advertised and unsuccessfully offered for sale for two years or more" is all-sufficient.

Board v Stone, 212-660; 237 NW 478

Inadequacy of bid. A bona fide sale of land at "scavenger" sale for delinquent tax will not be deemed void as against public policy because of inadequacy of the bid, in view of the fact (1) that the public authorities have a legal right to bid at said sale, and (2) that the treasurer is under a mandatory duty to sell.

Board v Stone, 212-660; 237 NW 478

Drains—nonduty of supervisors to purchase certificate. The statutory provision, that the board of supervisors or the drainage trustees "may" purchase an outstanding certificate evidencing a sale of land for the nonpayment of drainage assessments, simply invests the board or trustees with discretion so to purchase. No mandatory duty so to purchase in order to protect the bondholder is imposed, even tho the bondholder must look solely to assessments for payment of his bond.

Bechtel v Board, 217-251; 251 NW 633

Tax sale—mandatory sale method governs public bidder law. The mandatory directions of §7252, C., '35, as to the manner of offering and selling real estate for taxes, control the public bidder law, §7255, C., '35, where the treasurer is likewise directed to offer and sell.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Tax titles—prerequisite to defeat deed—non-applicability without valid sale. Statute specifying prerequisites to defeat tax title, §7289, subsec. 4, will not bar recovery by one claiming title adverse to the treasurer's deed, when there has been no valid tax sale.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Tax titles—paying taxes before attacking tax deed—valid tender sufficient. Statute requiring payment of taxes as a prerequisite to attacking a tax deed, §7290, does not preclude questioning the title by a person who repeatedly offers to do equity by tendering the whole of the taxes legally and rightfully due together with interest and penalties thereon.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

7255.1 County as purchaser.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 32; '36 AG Op 260; '38 AG Op 10, 97, 111, 153, 203, 266, 287, 354, 396, 417, 489, 534, 542, 575, 621, 699; AG Op May 24, '39

Title of act. The provisions of the so-called "public bidder law" (46 GA, ch 83) were properly classified in the title to the act as "relating to taxes and the collection thereof" without any reference in the title to chapter 449 of the Code, tho the act itself did make reference to and did effect some change in said chapter.

Witmer v Polk County, 222-1075; 270 NW 323

Tax sale—mandatory sale method governs public bidder law. The mandatory directions of §7252, C., '35, as to the manner of offering and selling real estate for taxes, control the public bidder law, §7255, C., '35, where the treasurer is likewise directed to offer and sell.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Tax sale—en masse sale of separate tracts—deed recitals conclusive. The sale of more than one tract or parcel of real estate en masse, for the gross sum of taxes thereon, being contrary to the mandatory provisions of statute, voids the entire sale and deeds based thereon. Tax deed recitals relating to whether the sale was separately or en masse are conclusive evidence thereof.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Tax titles—separate tracts—lots with street between used as single unit. A tax deed, issued pursuant to an en masse sale of land, describes two separate tracts of land, when it lists land on two sides of a dedicated street, and the separateness of the tracts is neither affected by fact that the entire tract, including the street, has been used as a pasture for 37 years, nor by the circumstance that the street may never have been accepted, or, if so, had been abandoned, because the tax deed did not convey the land occupied by the street.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Purchase by county—amount of bid. The inclusion in tax sale of an installment on a special assessment bond was permissible under §6037, C., '39, and did not render sale void where county bid only the amount of the general taxes, interest, penalty and costs pursuant to §7255.1, C., '39, authorizing purchase by county.

7255.2 In special charter cities.

City as assignee for specials. An assignment of a tax sale certificate of purchase by county to city was not premature under chapter 191 of the 47th GA authorizing redemption in installments from public bidder where owner of property failed to take advantage of such act within the 6-months period prescribed therein, and the city was entitled to such assignment because of special assessment due and unpaid on the property.

7255.3 Applicable statute.

Tax sale certificate assignment—city as assignee. An assignment of a tax sale certificate of purchase by county to city was not premature under chapter 191 of the 47th GA authorizing redemption in installments from public bidder where owner of property failed to take advantage of such act within the 6-months period prescribed therein, and the city was entitled to such assignment because of special assessment due and unpaid on the property.

7257 Resale.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 98

Resale to correct previous error.

Tesdell v Greenwalt, 228- ; 290 NW 676

Timely payment of bid. The statutory requirement that the successful bidder at tax sale shall "forthwith" pay the amount of his bid is complied with by making payment when the treasurer issues the certificate of purchase.

Board v Stone, 212-660; 237 NW 478

7258 Record of sales.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 111

Unlawful record invalidates deed. Tax-sale entries required by law to be made by the county auditor in the "sales book" must be made in ink (§7276-c1, C., '31 [§7276.1, C., '39]) and if not so made the right to redeem continues. It follows that tax deeds issued at a time when the right to redeem exists are void.

Huiskamp v Breen, 220-29; 260 NW 70

7261 Fraud of officers.

Tax sales—who may purchase. Under the statutes of this state any person may become a purchaser at tax sale, and the only statutory exception is found in this section.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Tax sales—who may not purchase. Persons who by reason of their interest in the premises and their relationship to others interested therein, that may not for equitable reasons become purchasers at a tax sale, include persons whose duty it is to pay the taxes or who have such an interest in the property that they might redeem the same from tax sale and save themselves from loss or injury, or those lienholders who may pay the taxes and are given a preferred lien over other lienholders and the titleholder for the amount of taxes paid, and persons occupying fiduciary relationships, such as agents, attorneys, guardians, trustees, etc., who may not violate their trust by becoming purchasers at tax sale of the trust property.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Drainage district bondholder—permissible purchaser at tax sale. Bondholders of a drainage district, by virtue of their ownership of such bonds, do not have an interest in such drainage district land sold for taxes which will disqualify them from becoming purchasers at tax sale.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 319; AG Op May 4, '39

Setting aside—inadequate ground. The purchaser of real estate at execution sale may not have certificates of tax sale of the property set aside, and the issuance of tax deed enjoined on allegation and proof that the owner of the property conspired with another to permit the property to go to tax sale and ultimate deed, because such conspiracy was quite harmless in view of the right of the execution purchaser to redeem from the tax sale.

Hanby v Snyder, 212-845; 237 NW 339

Certificate not merged by quitclaim deed. A tax sale certificate is not merged in a subsequently acquired quitclaim deed from the owner of the property.

Hanby v Snyder, 212-845; 237 NW 339

Right to impeach action of trustee. The act of a trustee in individually buying in property at tax sale and receiving a tax sale certificate when a mortgage on the property constituted part of the trust fund, is unimpeachable except by the cestui que trust; in other words, the subsequent purchaser of said property at foreclosure sale may not impeach such act, especially when such purchaser had both actual and constructive knowledge when he purchased that the taxes had not been paid.

Eyres v Koehler, 212-1290; 237 NW 351

Invalid tax sale and deed in interest of mortgagee. A mortgagor and mortgagee who enter into and execute a scheme to have one of their employees bid in the property at tax sale and secure a tax deed and assign it to the mortgagee in the effort to cut out other lienholders, will be held to have accomplished no more than a payment of the taxes. A tax certificate and a deed issued under such circumstances are void.

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-Des Moines Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

Tax certificate priority waived—extension of time of payment of mortgage—sufficient consideration. Extension of the time of payment on bonds secured by mortgage held sufficient consideration to support waiver of priority of tax certificate owned by mortgagor's daughter.

Beal v Milliron, (NOR); 267 NW 83

Collusive deed—effect. A landowner who permits his land to be sold at tax sale, pursuant to an understanding with the purchaser that the latter will, after obtaining a tax deed, quitclaim to said landowner, neither acquires by the carrying out of said understanding, a new title, nor any betterment of his old title. By such transaction the landowner has simply paid his taxes.

Harrington v Foster, 220-1066; 264 NW 51

Mandamus—defect of parties—effect. In mandamus to obtain an order canceling a tax sale and the certificate issued thereunder (assuming the propriety of such action) the court manifestly cannot disturb the certificate holder when he is not a party to the action.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

7265 Assignment—presumption from deed recitals.

Paramount right of holder. The holder of special paving assessment certificates who obtains an assignment of a tax sale certificate, issued on a sale of the lots or land for general taxes, may be compelled by mandamus to reassign said tax sale certificate (on proper payment) to the holder of special sewer assessment certificates which affect the same lots or land and which latter certificates are legally prior in point of time and right to said paving certificates.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Dickey, 222-995; 270 NW 29

Tax titles—mother paying on contract while daughter gets tax deed—invalidity. A tax deed will be set aside when a mother buying property on contract, allows it to go to tax sale, then contracts with the certificate purchaser to buy the certificate while continuing payments to the landowner, assuring said landowner that she is redeeming, yet, when the certificate is acquired, a daughter's name is inserted and treasurer's deed issued thereto, the mother must be held to have conspired with the daughter to defraud the landowner and to have accomplished no more than a redemption for herself.

Blotcky v Silberman, 225-519; 281 NW 496

Certificate assignment—validity. In the statute providing that tax sale certificate of purchase shall be assignable by indorsement and by entry in tax sale register, and that "when such assignment is so entered" it shall vest in assignee all right of assignor, the legislature did not intend by the use of such quoted words to bar other means of proving ownership of such a certificate. Hence assignments of certificate made by indorsement alone without entry upon tax sale register were not void.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Certificate as chattel—transferableness. A tax sale certificate of purchase is a mere chattel subject to sale by assignment and indorsement and delivery, and the owner of such certificate who presents the same at the expiration of redemption period is entitled to a deed.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Notice by assignor of certificate. Where the assignor of a tax sale certificate of purchase has given notice of expiration of redemption right, assignee is not required to give another such notice.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

7266 Payment of subsequent taxes by purchaser.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 43; '34 AG Op 398; '38 AG Op 697; AG Op Nov. 8, '39

Subsequent taxes—filing of receipts. The act of a tax-sale purchaser in personally delivering to the county auditor at the auditor's office, a duplicate tax receipt for subsequent accruing taxes, constitutes a legal filing in said office, even tho the auditor did not indorse any filing mark on the receipt, and even tho the auditor later returned said receipt to the said purchaser.

Peterson v Barnett, 213-514; 239 NW 77

7267 Failure to file duplicate receipt.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 43

7268 School, agricultural college, or university land.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 59, 602; '38 AG Op 109, 396, 400, 692

Tax sale—school, agricultural college, or university land. In construing statute which provides in substance, that in the sale of school, agricultural college or university land sold on credit which is sold for taxes, the purchaser shall acquire only the interest of the person holding the fee and that the state's lien shall not be affected by such sale, the supreme court will not construe the catchwords for such statute to show legislative intent to omit school fund mortgages, as the catchwords are no part of the law enacted and are not to be considered in construing the statute.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

School fund mortgage. A school fund mortgage is state property and the state has recognized its right to maintain a permanent school fund intact and inviolate for purpose to which dedicated.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

Tax sale—school fund mortgage paramount. The statutes providing, that where real estate is incumbered to school fund the interest of the person holding the fee shall alone be sold for taxes and that lien of state shall not be affected by the tax sale, will be construed as meaning that lien of mortgage given to the state for land bought on credit and lien of a real estate mortgage to school fund will be paramount to a tax lien.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

Tax sale—school fund mortgage paramount. In an action to foreclose a duly recorded mortgage to secure a loan from the permanent school fund the priority of lien granted by statute can neither be defeated by a tax sale purchaser of such realty on ground of mutual mistake of purchaser and county treasurer in connection with tax sale, especially where purchaser relies upon legality of tax sale to sustain his claim of priority, nor that the county treasurer exceeds his authority and sells more than the interest of person holding fee in such realty, as the taxes on the realty mortgaged to secure loan from permanent school fund are not a lien against the state and the purchaser at such sale acquired only the right to redeem from mortgage and does not acquire a lien superior to lien of mortgage.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

School fund mortgage foreclosure. In an action to foreclose a school fund mortgage, where the court decreed that plaintiff made no demand nor attempt to collect the mortgage until 11 years after it became due, held, that the defendant-holder of the certificate of tax sale was charged with knowledge of plaintiff's lien, and that it was unpaid, and he could not rely on lapse of time, laches or negligence, as against the state.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

Tax sale—school fund mortgage unpaid. Where a mortgage securing the permanent school fund is on the realty purchased at tax sale, the purchaser is charged with knowledge of the rights of the county holding such mortgage and that the debt secured by the mortgage is unpaid.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

ANALYSIS

- I REDEMPTION IN GENERAL
- II WHO MAY REDEEM
- III WHO MAY NOT REDEEM
- IV MANNER OF REDEMPTION
- V EFFECT OF REDEMPTION

I REDEMPTION IN GENERAL

Setting aside—inadequate ground. The purchaser of real estate at execution sale may not have certificates of tax sale of the property set aside, and the issuance of tax deed enjoined on allegation and proof that the owner of the property conspired with another to permit the property to go to tax sale and ultimate deed, because such conspiracy was quite harmless in view of the right of the execution purchaser to redeem from the tax sale.

Hanby v Snyder, 212-845; 237 NW 339

Amount necessary to effect tax redemption. A holding on appeal as to the amount which the owner of land must pay in order to effect redemption from tax sale is necessarily conclusive on the parties.

Fidelity Inv. v White, 212-782; 237 NW 518

Redemption—law remedy to remove tax sale cloud—equity unavailing. A property owner, presumed to have been informed of his tax assessments, knowing that they will become due and payable without demand, yet allowing the taxes to become delinquent and the property to go to tax sale, may not resort to equity to remove the cloud on his title when he has by redemption a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law.

Jones v Mills County, 224-1375; 279 NW 96

Sale—tax tender as doing equity before enjoining deed issuance. One who allows his property to go to tax sale and later seeks to enjoin the county from issuing a tax deed claiming a void sale must, if seeking equity, do equity by tendering the amount of the taxes due and attempt to make redemption as by statute provided.

Jones v Mills County, 224-1375; 279 NW 96

Sale for delinquent taxes not carried forward—setting aside—insufficient tender. A tax sale for delinquent taxes not carried forward will not be set aside in equity nor the deed issuance restrained when the titleholder's offer to do equity by tendering such taxes as "constitute a valid lien" and "actually paid" by the purchaser is a disingenuous tender.

McClelland v Polk County, 225-177; 279 NW 423

II WHO MAY REDEEM

Mortgagee as redemptioner. The holder of a mortgage on land has a legal right to redeem from tax sale; and if tax deed be improperly issued, he may maintain the equitable action to redeem provided by §7278.

Bates v Pabst, 223-534; 273 NW 151

Redemption from tax sale—tax deed terminates prior certificate holder's rights. Tax deed being new and independent grant from the state barring all prior liens, a holder of a tax sale certificate issued prior to the certificate sustaining the deed had the right only to redeem from such and subsequent sales and only before the deed was issued.

White v Hammerstrom, 224-1041; 277 NW 483

III WHO MAY NOT REDEEM

Tax title—voidable only by person holding title at time of sale. Under statute requiring challenger of tax deed to have been titleholder at time of sale and to have paid all taxes, where two persons hold tax sale certificates for different years and the later holder takes a deed, it may not be questioned by the holder of the earlier certificate.

White v Hammerstrom, 224-1041; 277 NW 483

IV MANNER OF REDEMPTION

Terms. Redemption from tax sale necessitates a repayment of the legal taxes due at the time of sale, plus all subsequent legal taxes and proper interest and penalties thereon.

Fidelity Inv. v White, 208-519; 223 NW 884; 225 NW 868

Acts not constituting. The act of a testamentary trustee in individually buying in property at tax sale and receiving a tax sale certificate when a mortgage on the property constituted a part of the trust funds cannot be deemed a redemption of the property from the taxes for the benefit of a subsequent purchaser of the property at mortgage foreclosure sale.

Eyres v Koehler, 212-1290; 237 NW 351

V EFFECT OF REDEMPTION

Acquisition by owner—effect. An owner of land who takes a tax deed to his own land simply effects a redemption from the tax sale. He acquires no better title than he before possessed.

Taylor v Olmstead, 201-760; 206 NW 88

Redemption by volunteer. One who becomes the assignee of a mortgage on land during the pendency of a lis pendens action to invalidate the mortgage as fraudulent, and who during the trial of the action (to which he had been made a party) redeems from a tax sale of the premises, will not, upon the entry of a decree invalidating the mortgage, be entitled to a lien on the land for the amount expended in effecting said redemption.

Clarkson v McCoy, 215-1008; 247 NW 270

Redemption from tax sales. One who redeemed land from tax sale for nonpayment of drainage assessment installments and who acquiesced in drainage proceedings during years in which her land received benefits of the improvement is estopped from questioning establishment of the drainage district.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

7276.1 Erasures prohibited.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 2

Unlawful record invalidates deed. Tax-sale entries required by law to be made by the county auditor in the "sales book" must be made in ink and if not so made the right to redeem continues. It follows that tax deeds issued at a time when the right to redeem exists are void.

Huiskamp v Breen, 220-29; 260 NW 70

7278 Redemption after delivery of deed.

Action to redeem—noninterested party. A noninterested party may not maintain an action to redeem from a tax deed.

M. & St. L. Ry. v Pugh, 201-208; 205 NW 758

Mortgagee as redemptioner. The holder of a mortgage on land has a legal right to redeem from tax sale; and if tax deed be improperly issued, he may maintain the equitable action to redeem provided by this section.

Bates v Pabst, 223-534; 273 NW 151

Violation of trust in re tax deed. A director of a bank may not, for his own personal enrichment, take assignment of a tax sale certificate covering land on which the bank of which he is director holds a first mortgage lien, and take tax deed under such certificate. Such deed will, on timely action and proper proof, be set aside and the bank, or its legal representative in case of insolvency, accorded the right to redeem from the tax sale.

Bates v Pabst, 223-534; 273 NW 151

Action to redeem—showing of payment excused. In an action to redeem from a void tax deed, plaintiff need not show that he has paid all taxes due on the property.

M. & St. L. Ry. v Pugh, 201-208; 205 NW 758

Invalid deed—redemption—form of decree. The decree in an action to redeem from an invalid tax sale and deed may very properly require the titleholder, as a condition precedent to his right to redeem, to pay into court for the benefit of the tax deed holder a sum equal to that which the deed holder has paid in the way of taxes, interest, and penalties under the tax sale certificate. No authority exists for a decree which simply makes said reimbursement sum a lien on the land.

Grandy v Adams, 219-51; 256 NW 684

Invalid deed—reimbursement of deed holder—evidence. Record held to sustain a finding of the court in an action to redeem from an invalid tax sale and deed as to the amount necessary to be paid by the titleholder in order to reimburse the tax sale purchaser.

Grandy v Adams, 219-51; 256 NW 684

Redemption notice to residents—personal service mandatory—deed on publication void. A tax deed issued after service of notice of redemption upon residents by publication instead of by personal service contrary to the statutory method provided in §§7279-7282, C., '35, is void as to persons having the right to redeem.

Smith v Huber, 224-817; 277 NW 557; 115 ALR 131

Redemption after tax deed—defective notice—reimbursing tax deed holder. Purchaser and holder of a deed from the receiver of an insolvent bank, for property quitclaimed to the bank by the owners after the property had gone to tax sale, may redeem even after tax deed has issued, tho on defective affidavit of service of the ninety-day notice of expiration of redemption, if then he offers to do equity by completely reimbursing tax deed holder; and a claim that he purchased only for speculation held ineffective.

Weideman v Pocahontas, 225-141; 279 NW 146

Review on appeal—de novo. The appellate court may review all legal propositions presented by the record in an equitable action even tho the trial court considered only one proposition which it deemed controlling.

Geil v Babb, 214-263; 242 NW 34

Payment of taxes not shown—objection. The objection that plaintiff in an action to redeem from a tax deed has not shown that all taxes on the property have been paid will not be considered when raised for the first time on appeal.

M. & St. L. Ry. v Pugh, 201-208; 205 NW 758

I REDEMPTION IN GENERAL

Liberal construction. The right of redemption from a sale will be liberally construed in favor of the taxpayer.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Strict statutory compliance mandatory. The requirements of this section, providing for steps necessary to cut off right of redemption from tax sale, are absolute, and the court is without power or authority to dispense with these positive requirements on the ground that they are unnecessary.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Law governing at time of sale. The time in which redemption may be made from tax sale is absolutely governed by the law in force at the time of the sale. It follows that a legislative amendment shortening the redemption period cannot apply to pre-existing sales.

Lockie v Hammerstrom, 222-451; 269 NW 507

II TIME FOR REDEMPTION

Redemption from tax sale—notice of expiration of period—refusal to file. The county treasurer is under no obligation to receive and file notices of expiration of period for redemption from a tax sale when the fact is manifest that said notices have been prematurely served.

Lockie v Hammerstrom, 222-451; 269 NW 507

III PARTIES ENTITLED TO OR REQUIRED TO GIVE NOTICE

Redemption from sale—notice—affidavit of service—holder's duty to make. The holder of a tax sale certificate of purchase must give the notice of expiration of right of redemption, and either he or his agent or attorney must make the affidavit of service of such notice.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Notice by assignor of certificate. Where the assignor of a tax sale certificate of purchase has given notice of expiration of redemption right, assignee is not required to give another such notice.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

IV NOTICE IN GENERAL

Redemption from tax sale—notice of expiration of period—refusal to file. The county treasurer is under no obligation to receive and file notices of expiration of period for redemption from tax sale when the fact is manifest that said notices have been prematurely served.

Lockie v Hammerstrom, 222-451; 269 NW 507

Tax deed on invalid redemption notice—abstract insufficient. The test as to whether an abstract shows a good, merchantable title depends upon whether or not a reasonably prudent person, familiar with the facts and apprised of the question of law involved, would accept such title in the ordinary course of business; and a tax title upon an invalid redemption notice is not such a title.

Smith v Huber, 224-817; 277 NW 557; 115 ALR 131

Title to real estate—nonparties not bound by judgment. In an action between parties to a contract for the conveyance of real estate, a judgment determining the question as to whether the seller, whose title was based upon a tax deed, had a good and merchantable title when the validity of the statutory notice of redemption is attacked, would not be binding on the former titleholders not parties to the action.

Smith v Huber, 224-817; 277 NW 557; 115 ALR 131

Supplemental petition after answer—pleading valid second tax deed—first deed defective. Even after answer, a plaintiff relying on tax deeds in a quiet title action, may, after discovering the deeds are invalid, obtain and plead second tax deeds without reserving notice of expiration of redemption, especially when the answer contained, at most, only a conditional offer to pay the taxes and redeem.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

V NOTICE TO PERSON IN POSSESSION

Mandatory service. The requirement that notice shall be personally served on the party in possession, if he is a resident, is mandatory.

M. & St. L. Ry. v Pugh, 201-208; 205 NW 758

Necessity of service on wife of tenant. In action to quiet title acquired under tax deed, statute requiring that notice of expiration of right to redeem from tax sale must be served on the "person in possession" of such real estate before tax deed can issue is not complied with by serving the husband only, where husband and wife are tenants, the evidence disclosing that wife was also working and that she paid the rent out of her separate wages.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Deed—redemption not terminated without proper service of notice. The holder of a tax certificate has no right to a deed until he has served the statutory notices on the person in possession and the person in whose name the land is taxed.

White v Hammerstrom, 224-1041; 277 NW 483

VI NOTICE TO PERSON TAXED AS OWNER

Mandatory service. The requirement that notice be personally served on the person in whose name the property is taxed, is absolute, and it is quite immaterial that the name of such person is indicated on the tax books by letter abbreviations, when the tax certificate holder knows exactly who was intended by the abbreviations.

VI NOTICE TO PERSON TAXED AS OWNER—concluded

M. & St. L. Ry. v Pugh, 201-208; 205 NW 758

Notice—service on owner unnecessary. Notice of redemption from a tax sale need not be served on the owner of the property when he is not the person (1) in possession, or (2) in whose name the property is taxed.

Gray v Morin, 218-540; 255 NW 631

Deed—redemption not terminated without proper service of notice. The holder of a tax certificate has no right to a deed until he has served the statutory notices on the person in possession and the person in whose name the land is taxed.

White v Hammerstrom, 224-1041; 277 NW 483

VII SUFFICIENCY AND REQUIREMENTS OF NOTICE

Sale—notice of deed—mandatory requirement. The failure to state, in an affidavit of the service of the notice of the expiration of the right of redemption from tax sale, "under whose direction" the service was made, is fatal to the validity of the subsequently executed tax deed, even tho the affiant states that he is the "agent" of the certificate holder.

Fidelity Inv. Co. v White, 208-519; 223 NW 884; 225 NW 868

VIII MANNER OF SERVICE

Affidavit of service—sufficiency. An affidavit showing the manner of making service of notice of expiration of right to redeem from tax sale is not rendered invalid because said affidavit fails to state that said notice was read to the parties named in the notice in their presence and hearing.

Johnson v Miller, 217-295; 251 NW 747

Affidavit of service—requirements. Under statute prescribing method of making affidavit to prove service of notice of expiration of right of redemption from tax sale, it is not necessary for affiant to state method and manner in which the holder of certificate of purchase authorized and directed him to serve the notice. Hence an affidavit stating that agent made service on behalf of and "under the direction of Polk county, Iowa" was sufficient.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Tax titles—redemption notice to residents—personal service mandatory—deed on publication void. A tax deed issued after service of notice of redemption upon residents by publication instead of by personal service contrary to the statutory method provided in §§7279-7282, C., '35, is void as to persons having the right to redeem.

Smith v Huber, 224-817; 277 NW 557; 115 ALR 131

7280 Service on nonresidents except mortgagees.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 122; AG Op Nov. 7, '39

Unallowable publication. Service by publication of notice of expiration of the right of redemption from tax sale is wholly nugatory when the domestic corporation in whose name the property is taxed has a resident secretary capable of receiving personal notice.

M. & St. L. Ry. v Pugh, 201-208; 205 NW 758

Tax titles—redemption notice to residents—personal service mandatory—deed on publication void. A tax deed issued after service of notice of redemption upon residents by publication instead of by personal service contrary to the statutory method provided in §§7279-7282, C., '35, is void as to persons having the right to redeem.

Smith v Huber, 224-817; 277 NW 557; 115 ALR 131

7282 When service deemed complete—presumption.

ANALYSIS

- I AFFIDAVIT AND PROOF OF SERVICE
- II EXPIRATION OF TIME OF REDEMPTION

I AFFIDAVIT AND PROOF OF SERVICE

Mandatory requirement. The failure to state, in an affidavit of the service of the notice of the expiration of the right of redemption from tax sale, "under whose direction" the service was made, is fatal to the validity of the subsequently executed tax deed, even tho the affiant states that he is the "agent" of the certificate holder.

Fidelity Inv. v White, 208-519; 223 NW 884

Fatally defective affidavit of service. When the actual service of a notice of expiration of redemption from tax sale is made by some one other than the holder of the certificate of purchase, the affidavit designed to fully complete the service must show that the party actually making the service was the agent or attorney of the certificate holder; and a tax deed issued on an affidavit not so showing is void.

Gallego v Duhigg, 218-521; 255 NW 867

Notice—affidavit of service—sufficiency. An affidavit showing the manner of making service of notice of expiration of right to redeem from tax sale is not rendered invalid because said affidavit fails to state that said notice was read to the parties named in the notice in their presence and hearing.

Johnson v Miller, 217-295; 251 NW 747

Redemption—90-day notice—sheriff serving for certificate holder's attorney—defective return of service. An affidavit of service of the 90-day notice to redeem from tax sale is insufficient when served by a sheriff at the instance of the certificate holder's attorney, thereby failing to show that the person who made the service was the certificate holder's agent or attorney, and, consequently, the period of redemption was not terminated.

Weideman v Pocahontas, 225-141; 279 NW 146

Affidavit of service—sufficiency. Where notice of expiration of right of redemption from tax sale was filed with, attached to, and made a part of affidavit of proof of service, and where treasurer made an entry which read, "Notice for deed filed Nov. 10, 1937", opposite the record entry of the sale on his sale register, and the auditor, upon written communication from treasurer, made a similar entry in sale book in his office, there was substantial and sufficient compliance with statutory requirements relating thereto.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Affidavit of service—holder's duty to make. The holder of a tax sale certificate of purchase must give the notice of expiration of right of redemption, and either he or his agent or attorney must make the affidavit of service of such notice.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Affidavit of service—requirements. Under statute prescribing method of making affidavit to prove service of notice of expiration of right of redemption from tax sale, it is not necessary for affiant to state method and manner in which the holder of certificate of purchase authorized and directed him to serve the notice. Hence an affidavit stating that agent made service on behalf of and "under the direction of Polk county, Iowa" was sufficient.

Fleck v Duro, 227-356; 288 NW 426

Refusal to file premature notice. The county treasurer is under no obligation to receive and file notices of expiration of period for redemption from tax sale when the fact is manifest that said notices have been prematurely served.

Lockie v Hammerstrom, 222-451; 269 NW 507

II EXPIRATION OF TIME OF REDEMPTION

Estoppel to dispute landlord's title—exception. One who mistakenly supposes that he has lost his property by the issuance of a tax deed (which in fact is void) and, under the influence of legal duress, becomes the tenant of the deed holder, is not estopped to dispute the latter's title.

Galleger v Duhigg, 218-521; 255 NW 867

Deed—redemption not terminated without proper service of notice. The holder of a tax certificate has no right to a deed until he has served the statutory notices on the person in possession and the person in whose name the land is taxed.

White v Hammerstrom, 224-1041; 277 NW 483

Tax titles—redemption after tax deed—defective 90-day redemption expiration notice—reimbursing tax deed holder. Purchaser and holder of a deed from the receiver of an insolvent bank, for property quitclaimed to the bank by the owners after the property had gone to tax sale, may redeem even after tax deed has issued, tho on defective affidavit of service of the 90-day notice of expiration of redemption, if then he offers to do equity by completely reimbursing tax deed holder; and a claim that he purchased only for speculation held ineffective.

Weideman v Pocahontas, 225-141; 279 NW 146

7283 Cost—fee—report.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 621; AG Op July 17, '39

Failure to report proofs of service. The county treasurer, upon receiving proof of service of notice of expiration of redemption from tax sale and the accompanying statement of cost, must report such fact to the county auditor, who, in turn, must enter such report on the sale book against the proper tract of land, and a tax deed issued without said preliminaries does not terminate the right to redeem.

Geil v Babb, 214-263; 242 NW 34

CHAPTER 349

TAX DEED

7284 Deed executed.

Method of describing land. See under §7250

Redemption—liberal construction. The right of redemption from a sale will be liberally construed in favor of the taxpayer.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Statutory notice to redeem—strict compliance mandatory. The requirements of §7279, C., '35, providing for steps necessary to cut off right of redemption from tax sale, are absolute, and the court is without power or authority to dispense with these positive requirements on the ground that they are unnecessary.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Deed—redemption not terminated without proper service of notice. The holder of a tax certificate has no right to a deed until he has served the statutory notices on the person in possession and the person in whose name the land is taxed.

White v Hammerstrom, 224-1041; 277 NW 483

Tax titles—mother paying on contract while daughter gets tax deed—invalidity. A tax deed will be set aside when a mother buying property on contract, allows it to go to tax sale, then contracts with the certificate purchaser to buy the certificate while continuing payments to the landowner, assuring said landowner that she is redeeming, yet, when the certificate is acquired, a daughter's name is inserted and treasurer's deed issued thereto, the mother must be held to have conspired with the daughter to defraud the landowner and to have accomplished no more than a redemption for herself.

Blotcky v Silberman, 225-519; 281 NW 496

Notice to redeem—necessity of service on wife of tenant. In action to quiet title acquired under tax deed, statute requiring that notice of expiration of right to redeem from tax sale must be served on the "person in possession" of such real estate before tax deed can issue is not complied with by serving the husband only, where husband and wife are tenants, the evidence disclosing that wife was also working and that she paid the rent out of her separate wages.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Tax titles—second tax deed by treasurer—when proper. When the county treasurer has executed a valid deed in accordance with the sale, his power is exhausted and he cannot, by the execution of a second deed, divest, nor in any manner affect, the title thus conveyed, but if the first deed was an insufficient execution, the treasurer does not lose power to execute a valid and sufficient deed.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Injunction—inadequate ground. The purchaser of real estate at execution sale may not have certificates of tax sale of the property set aside, and the issuance of tax deed enjoined on allegation and proof that the owner of the property conspired with another to permit the property to go to tax sale and ultimate deed, because such conspiracy was quite harmless in view of the right of the execution purchaser to redeem from the tax sale.

Hanby v Snyder, 212-845; 237 NW 339

Special assessment tax sales—injunction. When the petition asked for an injunction restraining the county treasurer from selling at tax sale lands upon which Polk county holds tax deeds, it was error to grant an injunction restraining tax sales for special assessments regardless of who the owner of the tax deed might be, even tho other general relief was asked by the petition, the petitions of intervention, and the answer, as the court should not render a judgment which has no foundation in the pleading and is not justified by the evidence, issues, or theory upon which the case was tried.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Doing equity before enjoining deed. One who allows his property to go to tax sale and later seeks to enjoin the county from issuing a tax deed claiming a void sale must, if seeking equity, do equity by tendering the amount of taxes due and attempt to make redemption as by statute provided.

Jones v Mills County, 224-1375; 279 NW 96

Issuance of tax deed enjoined and tax sale certificates cancelled.

Means v Boone, 214-948; 241 NW 671

7285 Form.

Deed—substantial conformance to statute. A tax deed needs only to substantially follow the form set out in the statute.

White v Hammerstrom, 224-1041; 277 NW 483

Tax titles—second tax deed by treasurer—when proper. When the county treasurer has executed a valid deed in accordance with the sale, his power is exhausted and he cannot, by the execution of a second deed, divest, nor in any manner affect, the title thus conveyed, but if the first deed was an insufficient execution, the treasurer does not lose power to execute a valid and sufficient deed.

ANALYSIS

- I ACKNOWLEDGMENT AND RECORDATION
- II NATURE OF TITLE
- III RIGHTS ACQUIRED

I ACKNOWLEDGMENT AND RECORDATION

Unlawful record invalidates deed. Tax sale entries required by law to be made by the county auditor in the "sales book" must be made in ink (§7276-c1, C., '31 [§7276.1, C., '39]) and if not so made the right to redeem continues. It follows that tax deeds issued at a time when the right to redeem exists are void.

Huiskamp v Breen, 220-29; 260 NW 70

II NATURE OF TITLE

Color of title—deed from tax title holder. One who is in possession of real property under deed from a tax deed holder has color of title.

Mann v Nies, 213-121; 238 NW 601

Tax deed—new and independent grant from sovereign—rights of former owner vest in grantee. A tax title is not a derivative title, but is a new and independent grant from the sovereign, and upon the execution and recording of the tax deed, all the right, title, interest, and estate of the former owner becomes vested in the grantee named in the tax deed.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Recording of tax deed vests title in purchaser. When a statute provides that the proper execution and recording of a tax deed shall vest title to the property in the purchaser at a tax sale, it follows, as a corollary, that until title is so vested in the purchaser no interest adverse to him will be divested.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Tax deed as evidence—construction in favor of holder. Statutes, providing that a tax deed shall be presumptive evidence of certain things and conclusive evidence of others, are construed to mean that unless the tax deed is received in evidence there is no evidence of the tax deed before the court, and when a tax deed is introduced in evidence a prima facie case is established of the regularity of all proceedings prior to its execution. Such statutory provisions with a tendency adverse to the owner of the title under a tax deed are construed most strictly in his favor.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Recovery of real property—abstract of title. The holder of a tax deed need not, in an action to recover the property, attach to his petition an abstract of title showing the chain of title which antedated the tax deed.

Shaffer v Marshall, 206-336; 218 NW 292

III RIGHTS ACQUIRED

Tax deed—-independent grant from sovereign. A tax title is not a derivative title, but is a new and independent grant from the sovereign, and upon the execution and recording of the tax deed, all the right, title, interest, and estate of the former owner becomes vested in the grantee named in the tax deed.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Tax title—acquisition by owner—effect. An owner of land who takes a tax deed to his own land simply effects a redemption from the tax sale. He acquires no better title than he before possessed.

Taylor v Olmstead, 201-760; 206 NW 88

Tax deed destroys prior chain. A valid tax deed issued on a sale for nonpayment of general taxes extinguishes all restrictive covenants in the chain of title of previous owners. So held as to a restriction against erecting or placing a business or store building on the lot in question. (But see 47 GA, ch 192)

Nedderman v Des Moines, 221-1352; 268 NW 36

See Iowa Co. v Barrett, 210-53; 230 NW 528

Tax deed nullifies special assessments. A tax deed issued on a sale for ordinary regular taxes nullifies the lien of all special assessments levied on the land by a city after the sale and before the execution of the deed.

Means v City, 214-948; 241 NW 671

Special assessments—lien and priority. A tax sale for general taxes and a tax deed duly issued thereon extinguish the lien of all existing special assessments for paving or sewer.

Western Sec. v Bank, 211-1304; 231 NW 317

When deed extinguishes drainage taxes. The lien on land of unmatured installments of duly levied district-drainage taxes is extinguished by a tax deed which is issued on a sale of said land for general (ordinary) taxes levied subsequent to the levy of the drainage taxes.

Ferguson v Aitken, 220-1154; 263 NW 850

Injunction against tax sales—tax deed extinguishing special assessment lien. An injunction restraining a county treasurer from selling real estate at tax sale for special assessments could not be sustained on the ground that tax deeds issued at a sale for general taxes extinguished the lien of the special assessments when the tax deeds were never introduced in evidence to enable the court to rule on whether the statutory requirements had been properly performed to make the tax deed valid.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Tax deed terminates prior certificate holder's rights. Tax deed being new and independent grant from the state barring all prior liens, a holder of a tax sale certificate issued prior to the certificate sustaining the deed had the right only to redeem from such and subsequent sales and only before the deed was issued.

White v Hammerstrom, 224-1041; 277 NW 483

Tax sale—school fund mortgage unpaid. Where a mortgage securing the permanent school fund is on the realty purchased at tax sale, the purchaser is charged with knowledge of the rights of the county holding such mortgage and that the debt secured by the mortgage is unpaid.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

Invalid tax sale and deed in interest of mortgagee. A mortgagor and mortgagee who enter into and execute a scheme to have one of their employees bid in the property at tax sale and secure a tax deed and assign it to the mortgagee, in the effort to cut out other lienholders, will be held to have accomplished no more than a payment of the taxes. A tax certificate and a deed issued under such circumstances are void.

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-D. M. Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

III RIGHTS ACQUIRED—concluded

Collusive deed—effect. A landowner who permits his land to be sold at tax sale, pursuant to an understanding with the purchaser that the latter will, after obtaining a tax deed, quitclaim to said landowner, neither acquires by the carrying out of said understanding, a new title, nor any betterment of his old title. By such transaction the landowner has simply paid his taxes.

Harrington v Foster, 220-1066; 264 NW 51

Error corrected by resale at adjourned sale.

Tesdell v Greenwalt, 228- ; 290 NW 676

Subsequent tax deed—purchase by wife who joined in mortgage—effect. A wife who joins with her husband in a mortgage on the husband's land, but who assumes no obligation, contractual or otherwise, to pay subsequently accruing taxes on the land, may, after the land has gone to tax deed to a stranger without collusion with her and while she was not in possession, purchase the land of the tax deed holder and acquire his title, viz, a fee simple indefeasible title—a title free from the lien of said mortgage.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Homestead possession—effect. An heir cannot successfully claim that he is the owner of premises because his father continuously occupied said premises for some 35 years and until his death, as a homestead, when it appears that during said time the premises went to tax deed, and that thereupon the mother reacquired title from the tax deed holder and thereunder adversely occupied said premises under said newly acquired deed for more than 10 years.

Mann v Nies, 213-121; 238 NW 601

Tax title on invalid redemption notice not merchantable—contract unenforceable. The supreme court will not compel a land purchaser under contract to accept, as good and merchantable, a title based on a tax deed where the record shows the former titleholders have not been notified in the statutory manner of the expiration of their right of redemption.

Smith v Huber, 224-817; 277 NW 557; 115 ALR 131

Tax deed on invalid redemption notice—abstract insufficient. The test as to whether an abstract shows a good, merchantable title depends upon whether or not a reasonably prudent person, familiar with the facts and apprised of the question of law involved, would accept such title in the ordinary course of business; and a tax title upon an invalid redemption notice is not such a title.

Smith v Huber, 224-817; 277 NW 557; 115 ALR 131

7287 Presumptive evidence.

ANALYSIS

I PRESUMPTIONS IN GENERAL

II PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE

I PRESUMPTIONS IN GENERAL

Deed—presumption. A tax deed is presumptively unassailable.

Fidelity Inv. v White, 208-519; 223 NW 884

Tax deed as evidence under statute—construction in favor of holder. Statutes, providing that a tax deed shall be presumptive evidence of certain things and conclusive evidence of others, are construed to mean that unless the tax deed is received in evidence there is no evidence of the tax deed before the court, and when a tax deed is introduced in evidence a prima facie case is established of the regularity of all proceedings prior to its execution. Such statutory provisions with a tendency adverse to the owner of the title under a tax deed are construed most strictly in his favor.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Statutory presumption of validity to tax deeds—no abandonment by pleading later corrective deeds. A defendant in a quiet title action may not claim that the plaintiff by first pleading title by invalid tax deeds, and then amending by pleading second corrective tax deeds, had abandoned the statutory presumption of their validity, nor must he, therefore, resort to the common law to prove his title.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Presumption in favor of tax deed holder. When land belonging to a daughter was sold for taxes and the tax deed was issued to her mother under an agreement between them, there was a presumption that the continuing possession of the land by the daughter was subordinate to the mother's tax deed, and to defeat the tax title, the presumption had to be overcome and the daughter's possession proven to be adverse. Adverse possession was not established by the continued possession of the daughter under a lease to a tenant, from whom the daughter collected rents and paid taxes, when she made no open claim that the land was her own and that she was asserting her title in hostility to the title under the tax deed.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

Recognizing invalid tax deed—effect. An owner of land who, for his own advantage, recognizes the validity of a tax deed to his land, and thereby causes another to change his position, may not thereafter plead invalidating irregularities in the deed.

First N. Bk. v Barthell, 201-857; 208 NW 286

II PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE

Tax sale—issuance of deeds prima facie evidence of regularity. The issuance by the county treasurer of tax deeds is prima facie evidence that proper notice of tax sale had been given.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Supplemental petition after answer—pleading valid second tax deed—first deed defective. Even after answer, a plaintiff relying on tax deeds in a quiet title action, may, after discovering the deeds are invalid, obtain and plead second tax deeds without re-serving notice of expiration of redemption, especially when the answer contained, at most, only a conditional offer to pay the taxes and redeem.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

The deed as evidence under statute—construction in favor of holder. Statutes, providing that a tax deed shall be presumptive evidence of certain things and conclusive evidence of others, are construed to mean that unless the tax deed is received in evidence there is no evidence of the tax deed before the court, and when a tax deed is introduced in evidence a prima facie case is established of the regularity of all proceedings prior to its execution. Such statutory provisions with a tendency adverse to the owner of the title under a tax deed are construed most strictly in his favor.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Quieting title—tax deed as evidence.

Tesdell v Greenwalt, 228- ; 290 NW 676

7288 Conclusive evidence.

Estoppel to dispute landlord's title—exception. One who mistakenly supposes that he has lost his property by the issuance of a tax deed (which in fact is void) and, under the influence of legal duress, becomes the tenant of the deedholder, is not estopped to dispute the latter's title.

Galleger v Duhigg, 218-521; 255 NW 867

Tax sale—en masse sale of separate tracts—deed recitals conclusive. The sale of more than one tract or parcel of real estate en masse, for the gross sum of taxes thereon, being contrary to the mandatory provisions of statute, voids the entire sale and deeds based thereon. Tax deed recitals relating to whether the sale was separately or en masse are conclusive evidence thereof.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Tax titles—separate tracts—lots with street between used as single unit. A tax deed, issued pursuant to an en masse sale of land, describes two separate tracts of land, when it lists land on two sides of a dedicated street, and the separateness of the tracts is neither affected by fact that the entire tract, including the street, has been used as a pasture for 37 years, nor by the circumstances that the street may never have been accepted, or, if so, had been abandoned, because the tax deed did not convey the land occupied by the street.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Statutory presumption of validity of tax deeds—no abandonment by pleading later corrective deeds. A defendant in a quiet title action may not claim that the plaintiff by first pleading title by invalid tax deeds, and then amending by pleading second corrective tax deeds, had abandoned the statutory presumption of their validity, nor must he, therefore, resort to the common law to prove his title.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Tax deed as evidence—construction in favor of holder. Statutes, providing that a tax deed shall be presumptive evidence of certain things and conclusive evidence of others, are construed to mean that unless the tax deed is received in evidence there is no evidence of the tax deed before the court, and when a tax deed is introduced in evidence a prima facie case is established of the regularity of all proceedings prior to its execution. Such statutory provisions with a tendency adverse to the owner of the title under a tax deed are construed most strictly in his favor.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Tax titles—second tax deed by treasurer—when proper. When the county treasurer has executed a valid deed in accordance with the sale, his power is exhausted and he cannot, by the execution of a second deed, divest, nor in any manner affect, the title thus conveyed, but if the first deed was an insufficient execution, the treasurer does not lose power to execute a valid and sufficient deed.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

7289 Facts necessary to defeat deed.

Redemption—liberal construction. The right of redemption from a sale will be liberally construed in favor of the taxpayer.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Statutory notice to redeem—strict compliance mandatory. The requirements of §7279, C., '35, providing for steps necessary to cut off right of redemption from tax sale, are absolute, and the court is without power or authority to dispense with these positive requirements on the ground that they are unnecessary.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Tax titles—prerequisite to defeat deed—nonapplicability without valid sale. Statute specifying prerequisites to defeat tax title will not bar recovery by one claiming title adverse to the treasurer's deed, when there has been no valid tax sale.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Redemption notice to residents—personal service mandatory—deed on publication void. A tax deed issued after service of notice of redemption upon residents by publication instead of by personal service contrary to the statutory method provided in §§7279-7282, C., '35, is void as to persons having the right to redeem.

Smith v Huber, 224-817; 277 NW 557; 115 ALR 131

Notice to redeem—necessity of service on wife of tenant. In action to quiet title acquired under tax deed, statute requiring that notice of expiration of right to redeem from tax sale must be served on the "person in possession" of such real estate before tax deed can issue is not complied with by serving the husband only, where husband and wife are tenants, the evidence disclosing that wife was also working and that she paid the rent out of her separate wages.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Unlawful record invalidates deed. Tax-sale entries required by law to be made by the county auditor in the "sales book" must be made in ink (§7276-c1, C., '31 [§7276.1, C., '39]), and if not so made the right to redeem continues. It follows that tax deeds issued at a time when the right to redeem exists are void.

Huiskamp v Breen, 220-29; 260 NW 70

Estoppel to dispute landlord's title—exception. One who mistakenly supposes that he has lost his property by the issuance of a tax deed (which in fact is void) and, under the influence of legal duress, becomes the tenant of the deedholder, is not estopped to dispute the latter's title.

Galleger v Duhigg, 218-521; 255 NW 867

Purchase by drainage district bondholder—validity—tender of tax necessary. The statute relating to fraudulent tax sales does not entitle the owner of the property to quiet title against holders of tax deeds on the grounds that tax deeds are void because purchasers are owners and holders of drainage bonds issued by drainage district in which land is situated without tender of taxes paid, when no claim is asserted that there is any fraud or collusion or conspiracy to defraud, and the question submitted is purely a legal question as to whether bondholders are under a legal disability to acquire title.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Tax titles—mother paying on contract while daughter gets tax deed—invalidity. A tax deed will be set aside when a mother buying property on contract, allows it to go to tax sale, then contracts with the certificate purchaser to buy the certificate while continuing payments to the landowner, assuring said landowner that she is redeeming, yet, when the certificate is acquired, a daughter's name is inserted and treasurer's deed issued thereto, the mother must be held to have conspired with the daughter to defraud the landowner and to have accomplished no more than a redemption for herself.

Blotcky v Silberman, 225-519; 281 NW 496

Cancellation—evidence. Evidence held insufficient to show that a mortgagee had, in taking his mortgage, agreed inter alia to pay a tax sale certificate under which he subsequently took a tax deed.

Proctor v Williamson, 205-127; 215 NW 593

Statute of limitations—owner's possession—effect. When the owner of the fee title continued in possession with rights subservient to the rights of the tax title owner after land was sold for nonpayment of taxes, and the owner's right to bring an action for recovery of the real estate was barred by a statute of limitations, one who claimed title under the owner was not entitled to succeed in an action to quiet title against the tax title owner.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

7290 Additional facts necessary.

ANALYSIS

- I TITLE REQUIRED
- II PAYMENT OF TAXES

I TITLE REQUIRED

Noninterested party. A noninterested party may not maintain an action to redeem from a tax deed.

M. & St. L. Ry. v Pugh, 201-208; 205 NW 758

Who may question. The holder of a special assessment certificate against property may not question the title conveyed by a tax deed to said property.

Gray v Morin, 218-540; 255 NW 631

Void deed. The statutory provision that no person shall be permitted to question a tax deed unless he first makes a prescribed showing as to title in himself, has no application when the tax deed which is questioned is wholly void.

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-Des Moines Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

Redemption from tax sale—nonright in town. A town which had no title to real estate when it was sold for nonpayment of special assessments levied by the town, and has acquired no title since said sale, may not redeem after the issuance of tax deed to the tax sale purchaser; and if equitable circumstances are relied on as a basis for redemption, the proof of such circumstances must be substantial.

Story City v Hadley, 214-132; 241 NW 649

Tax title—voidable only by person holding title at time of sale. Under statute requiring challenger of tax deed to have been titleholder at time of sale and to have paid all taxes, where two persons hold tax sale certificates for different years and the later holder takes a deed, it may not be questioned by the holder of the earlier certificate.

White v Hammerstrom, 224-1041; 277 NW 483

Deed to ancestor—previous and subsequent chain of title lacking—title not established as against tax deed. In a quiet title action, stipulated evidence that an ancestor of defendant received and recorded a deed to the land from another is insufficient to overthrow plaintiff's tax deed without a further showing of the previous and subsequent chain of title.

Inter-Ocean v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Adverse possession of land by owner. When land belonging to a daughter was sold for taxes and the tax deed was issued to her mother under an agreement between them, there was a presumption that the continuing possession of the land by the daughter was subordinate to the mother's tax deed, and to defeat the tax title, the presumption had to be overcome and the daughter's possession proven to be adverse. Adverse possession was not established by the continued possession of the daughter under a lease to a tenant, from whom the daughter collected rents and paid taxes, when she made no open claim that the land was her own and that she was asserting her title in hostility to the title under the tax deed.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

Tax titles—second tax deed by treasurer—when proper. When the county treasurer has executed a valid deed in accordance with the sale, his power is exhausted and he cannot, by the execution of a second deed, divest, nor in any manner affect, the title thus conveyed, but if the first deed was an insufficient execution, the treasurer does not lose power to execute a valid and sufficient deed.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Injunction against tax sales—tax deed extinguishing special assessment lien. An injunction restraining a county treasurer from selling real estate at tax sale for special assessments could not be sustained on the ground that tax deeds issued at a sale for general taxes extinguished the lien of the special assessments when the tax deeds were never introduced in evidence to enable the court to rule on whether the statutory requirements had been properly performed to make the tax deed valid.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

II PAYMENT OF TAXES

Tender and offer to pay taxes. Tender and offer by plaintiff to pay all taxes found due is equivalent to payment within the meaning of this section.

M. & St. L. Ry. v Pugh, 201-208; 205 NW 758
Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Sufficiency—offer in pleadings. An offer by a litigant in an equitable pleading to pay whatever sums are legally necessary to effect a redemption constitutes a sufficient tender.

Fidelity Inv. Co. v White, 208-519; 223 NW 884; 225 NW 868

Showing of payment excused. In an action to redeem from a void tax deed, plaintiff need not show that he has paid all taxes due on the property.

M. & St. L. Ry. v Pugh, 201-208; 205 NW 758

Redemption—form of decree. The decree in an action to redeem from an invalid tax sale and deed may very properly require the title holder, as a condition precedent to his right to redeem, to pay into court, for the benefit of the tax deed holder, a sum equal to that which the deed holder has paid in the way of taxes, interest, and penalties under the tax sale certificate. No authority exists for a decree which simply makes said reimbursement sum a lien on the land.

Grandy v Adams, 219-51; 256 NW 684

Invalid deed—reimbursement of deed holder—evidence. Record held to sustain a finding of the court, in an action to redeem from an invalid tax sale and deed, as to the amount necessary to be paid by the title holder in order to reimburse the tax sale purchaser.

Smith v Huber, 224-817; 277 NW 557; 115 ALR 131

II APPLICABILITY OF SECTION

Void and voidable tax deeds—how statute applied. The statutory five-year limitation on actions for recovery of real estate held by tax deed applies not to void but only to voidable deeds and also applies to the holder as well as the one attacking the deed.

Smith v Huber, 224-817; 277 NW 557; 115 ALR 131

III NONAPPLICABILITY OF SECTION

Limitation of action—failure to plead—no question of laches presented. In action to quiet title by owner of land against a tax deed which had been issued on an insufficient affidavit of service of notice of expiration of redemption from tax sale, where the right to redeem had not expired, and no claim of statute of limitations was made, no question of laches was presented.

Weideman v Pocahontas, 225-141; 279 NW 146

IV WHEN PERIOD COMMENCES TO RUN

Action for possession barred. A tax deed holder is barred from maintaining an action for the possession of the land after the lapse of five years from the execution and recordation of the deed.

Wallis v Clinkenbeard, 214-343; 242 NW 86

V QUIETING TITLE

Owner's possession—effect. When the owner of the fee title continued in possession with rights subservient to the rights of the tax title owner after land was sold for nonpayment of taxes, and the owner's right to bring an action for recovery of the real estate was barred by a statute of limitations, one who claimed title under the owner was not entitled to succeed in an action to quiet title against the tax title owner.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

Adverse possession of land by owner. When land belonging to a daughter was sold for taxes and the tax deed was issued to her mother under an agreement between them, there was a presumption that the continuing possession of the land by the daughter was subordinate to the mother's tax deed, and to defeat the tax title, the presumption had to be overcome and the daughter's possession proven to be adverse. Adverse possession was not established by the continued possession of the daughter under a lease to a tenant, from whom the daughter collected rents and paid taxes, when she made no open claim that the land was her own and that she was asserting her title in hostility to the title under the tax deed.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

Possession which will bar action. Under a statute limiting the time in which an action may be brought for the recovery of real estate sold for taxes, the possession by the owner necessary to bar an action by the tax title holder is ordinarily not the possession required under the general statute of limitations and need not be adverse, but need be only such possession as would entitle the tax title holder to maintain an action against the owner.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

CHAPTER 350

APPORTIONMENT OF TAXES

Att'y. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Feb. 1, '40

CHAPTER 351

INHERITANCE TAX

7306 Estates taxable.

Discussion. See 12 ILR 14—Progress in inheritance tax law; 17 ILR 258—Amendments

Double succession tax on intangibles. A state may not enforce a succession tax on intangible personal property, consisting of mortgages on lands within such state, when a like tax has been enforced on the same property by the foreign state in which the deceased had his domicile.

In re Smith, 209-685; 228 NW 638

Unconstitutional levy. Remaindermen are not subject to a succession tax when, prior to the enactment of the succession-tax law, the property in question was irrevocably trusteeed by the trustor for his own personal benefit for life, with remainder to designated persons. Such tax would be violative of the clauses of the federal constitution, relative (1) to the impairment of contracts, and (2) to due process.

Coolidge v Long, 282 US 582

Inheritance tax—proceeds of realty sale in foreign state. When testator's realty is sold pursuant to will in probate proceedings in foreign state where property is located, and inheritance tax paid by executor in said state, the same cannot be included in computing Iowa inheritance tax.

In re Marx, 226-1260; 286 NW 422

Foreign realty sold pursuant to will—proceeds remain tangible property. When testator's realty in a foreign state is sold pursuant to will, the proceeds will not be subject to Iowa inheritance tax under doctrine of equitable conversion, since even tho the realty takes the form of cash it remains tangible property.

In re Marx, 226-1260; 286 NW 422

Proceeds from sale of realty in foreign state by probate—inheritance tax inapplicable on theory of support of government for protection. When testator's realty located in foreign state is sold pursuant to will in probate proceedings in such state and inheritance tax on legacies there paid, proceeds will not be subject to Iowa inheritance tax under the theory that property is obligated to contribute to the support of government giving it protection.

In re Marx, 226-1260; 286 NW 422

7307 Property included.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 268—Tax on trust income

"Transfers in contemplation of death" defined. A transfer of property "in contemplation of death", within the meaning of the inheritance tax law, is a transfer, the impelling cause of which is the thought of death, but not necessarily of immediate or impending death.

In re Mann, 219-597; 258 NW 904

Transfers in contemplation of death—presumption. Transfers of property made within two years prior to the death of the grantor are presumptively made "in contemplation of death". Evidence held insufficient to overcome the presumption attending a transfer some three months prior to death.

In re Mann, 219-597; 258 NW 904

Findings in probate. The finding by the trial court, on supporting testimony, that a transfer of real property was made "in contemplation of death" will not be disturbed on appeal.

In re Mann, 219-597; 258 NW 904

Life reservation, by grantor, of income—effect. This section embraces property which passes by a conveyance in trust in which the grantor or donor reserves unto himself, during his lifetime, the net annual income of the conveyed property; and this is true even tho said section is later so amended as to specifically declare the above to be the effect of such a reservation.

In re Toy, 220-825; 263 NW 501

Approval of executor's report not construction of will. The fact that the court had approved an executor's report, wherein he had attempted to relieve an estate of inheritance tax on the ground that all devises in the will were contingent, does not mean that such holding is a construction of the will, since the construction of the will was not in issue.

Flanagan v Spalti, 225-1231; 282 NW 347

7308 Exemptions.

Public charities. A trust for the purpose of aiding young men and women of the Protestant faith in obtaining an education in the colleges or universities of this state is a public charity, within the meaning of this statute.

Heald v Johnson, 204-1067; 216 NW 772

7312 Transfers in contemplation of death.

Additional annotations. See under §7307 Gifts causa mortis. See Ch 445, note 1

Transfer without consideration. A bona fide transfer of property for a fair consideration, sufficient to render the property nontaxable under the inheritance tax law, is not established by evidence that the instruments of transfer—concededly executed in contemplation of death and to take effect after death—were, at the most, supported only by a past and wholly executed consideration.

McEvoy v Wegman, 216-395; 249 NW 263

"Transfers in contemplation of death" defined. A transfer of property "in contemplation of death", within the meaning of the inheritance tax act, is a transfer, the impelling cause of which is the thought of death, but not necessarily of immediate or impending death.

In re Mann, 219-597; 258 NW 904

7315 Alien beneficiaries.

Discrimination against nonresident alien. The state, in the imposition of an inheritance tax, may validly discriminate in favor of a resident alien and against a nonresident alien.

In re Anderson, 205-324; 218 NW 140

Treaty in re droit de detraction. The clause of a treaty prohibiting discrimination in taxes and charges on the removal of property from the countries of the contracting parties has no reference to inheritance taxes.

In re Anderson, 205-324; 218 NW 140

(Reversed. Nielson v Johnson, 279 US 47.)

Droit de detraction. That paragraph of the treaty between this country and Denmark dealing with droit de detraction does not apply to or govern the imposition of an inheritance tax on property situated in this state and owned by a resident, naturalized citizen. 166 Iowa 617 affirmed.

Petersen v State, 245 US 170

Alien beneficiaries—inheritance tax prohibited by treaty with Denmark. A state inheritance tax as to property of a Denmark citizen residing in Iowa, imposed upon alien beneficiaries before it can pass to his heirs in Denmark, when no such tax is imposed on citizens of this state by Denmark under like circumstances, is prohibited by virtue of a reciprocity treaty between the United States and Denmark.

Time limit for objections. The duty to file objections to an appraisal of property for inheritance tax purposes within twenty days from the filing of the appraisal with the clerk is mandatory, and failure to file objections within said time ipso facto works an approval of the appraisal.

Insel v Wright County, 208-295; 225 NW 378

7336 Hearing—order.

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held on de novo hearing, insufficient to support an appraisal of land for inheritance tax purposes.

In re Seibel, 207-100; 222 NW 361

7339 Cancellation of lien.

Time limit for objections. The duty to file objections to an appraisal of property for inheritance tax purposes within 20 days from the filing of the appraisal with the clerk is mandatory, and failure to file objections within said time ipso facto works an approval of the appraisal.

Insel v Wright County, 208-295; 225 NW 378

7358 Duty of executor to pay tax.

Failure of executor to pay tax—effect. When the state allows an estate to be fully settled and the executor to be duly and finally discharged without the payment of an inheritance tax, and makes no application to open up the accounts of the executor, it may not thereafter enforce the statutory personal liability of the executor to pay said tax. This is true on two fundamental propositions, to wit: (1) that the court, being prohibited by statute from discharging the executor until the tax is paid, must be presumed, in entering such discharge, to have found that no tax was due, and (2) that the state, by designating the court as its special statutory representative, will not be permitted to deny such presumption.

In re Meinert, 204-355; 213 NW 938

Right of testator to pay on bequest. A testator may validly provide that the inheritance tax on a specific devise or bequest made by him in his will shall be paid from the residuary part of his estate, provided he clearly expresses his intention to that effect. Will construed and held clearly so to provide.

Timely action to recover. It is not necessary that an action against the treasurer of state to recover inheritance taxes illegally exacted be both brought and adjudicated within the five years following the payment. It is only necessary that the action be brought within said period—the ambiguity in this section to the contrary notwithstanding.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 95, 183

7402 Loans by county treasurer.

Liability on official bond. See under §1059

Using public funds for private use. The acts of a county treasurer in wrongfully and repeatedly taking and using, for his own private purposes, public funds in his possession, ipso facto constitutes "willful misconduct and maladministration in office", notwithstanding the fact (1) that, prior to the commencement of an action to remove him from office, he returns, to the public treasury, the amount of his peculations, and (2) that his bondsmen are liable for his wrongdoing; a priori is this true when he also knowingly connives at and permits like conduct by his official employee.

7417 Official delinquency.

Deposits—payment on forged indorsement—negligence not imputable to state. Negligence and laches of public officers in the handling of state funds are not imputable to the state; for instance, in an action to recover from a drawee bank the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement of a check drawn by a county treasurer against state school funds on deposit with said drawee, it is no defense that the county treasurer was negligent in drawing or delivering the check, or that county officers generally were negligent in not making early discovery of the forged indorsement, and notifying the drawee accordingly.

New Amsterdam Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Taking assignment of claim. Where, because of the peculations of a county auditor, a depository bank pays a forged check on school funds, the county, on effecting settlement with the surety on the auditor's official bond, may assign to the said surety its cause of action against the bank, and the assignee may enforce the said assigned action as the county might have enforced it.

Leach v Bank, 207-478; 223 NW 171

Wrongful deposit of public funds. A deposit in a bank of municipal pension funds (police and firemen) under conditions which deprive the trustees of the power to immediately withdraw said funds is wrongful, and being wrongful the trustees do not lose title to said funds. It follows that in case the bank becomes insolvent, the deposit is entitled to preferential payment from the cash on hand at the time of insolvency.

Ind. Dist. v Morris, 208-588; 226 NW 66

Excessive bank deposits—effect.

State v Carney, 208-133; 217 NW 472

Bank as depositor. A bank may lawfully become a depositor in another bank. So held where a bank was the sole depository of the funds of a municipality, and upon receipt of such funds, deposited a part thereof with other banks, under a so-called "gentlemen's agreement" with reference thereto.

Leach v Bank, 206-265; 217 NW 865

Bank dissolution—nonpreference in deposits. Principle reaffirmed that, in the settlement of the affairs of an insolvent state bank, the deposit of a municipal corporation has no preference over other deposits. (§9239, C., '24.)

Leach v Bank, 201-346; 207 NW 331

Subrogation—preferential deposit law. Principle reaffirmed (1) that a surety on a public depository bond is not, on payment of the bond, entitled to be subrogated to the preferential rights of the municipality existing when the bond was given, when, at the time of such payment, the statute granting such payment had been repealed; and (2) that the repeal of such statute impaired no contract obligation and violated no vested right of such surety.

Andrew v Bank, 205-883; 213 NW 531

Nonpreference to firemen's funds. The trustees of a municipal firemen's pension fund may validly make a bank deposit of its funds in an amount sufficient to meet current pension demands. It follows that if the bank becomes insolvent the trustees are simply depositors and no preference over other depositors exists.

Andrew v Bank, 214-105; 241 NW 412

Statutory bond—acts constituting breach. A statutory bond conditioned to secure the prompt paying over to the proper authorities of public funds on deposit in a bank is breached on the failure to promptly make such payment, and not from the time when the authorities suffer an actual loss.

Leach v Bank, 205-987; 213 NW 528

Statutory bonds—unallowable limitation on liability. A statutory bond which is given for the express purpose of securing public deposits in a bank may not be limited in liability to less than the liability called for by the statute; and any such attempt will be deemed nugatory, even tho such bond is approved by the public governing board. (See §§10300, 10982.)

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

Statutory bonds—unauthorized substitution—release—effect. Public officers who are authorized to deposit in banks public funds only on the due execution of an indemnifying bond have no authority to accept collateral security in lieu of a statutory bond; and, if taken, the same may be released and the sureties on the statutory bonds may not complain.

Leach v Bank, 205-975; 213 NW 612

Statutory bonds—oral modification—legality. An agreement between the state treasurer and the accommodation sureties on a statutory bank deposit guaranty bond, to the effect that such bond shall be deemed automatically canceled when the deposit of state funds in the bank drops below the amount of existing non-accommodation surety bonds, is invalid both as to the state and as to nonaccommodation sureties who are seeking contribution. (See §12751.)

Leach v Bank, 205-975; 213 NW 612

Payment on forged indorsement—negligence not imputable to state. Negligence and laches of public officers in the handling of state funds are not imputable to the state; for instance, in an action to recover from a drawee bank the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement of a check drawn by a county treasurer against state school funds on deposit with said drawee, it is no defense that the county treasurer was negligent in drawing or delivering the check, or that county officers generally were negligent in not making early discovery of the forged indorsement, and notifying the drawee accordingly.

New Amsterdam Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

School district as depositor. A school district is the depositor of school funds which are placed by the school treasurer in a legally selected depository.

Runyan v Bank, 210-147; 230 NW 418

Bonds—prima facie liability. Proof that a school treasurer drew a check upon the school district bank account in favor of another bank; that the check was duly cashed; that the payee-bank did not credit the amount to any account of the school district; and that said treasurer, on demand, did not deliver said money to the district, constitutes prima facie evidence of the latter's default and of liability on his bond.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Burden of proof. Proof that a municipality had deposited public funds to a named amount in an authorized public depository casts the burden on the depository, or on the receiver thereof, to show what payments were made from such deposits and the legality of such payments. And such burden is not met by the introduction of unexplained ledger entries.

Winnebago County v Horton, 204-1186; 216 NW 769

Rescinding authority. The action of the governing board (1) in rescinding its former action authorizing its treasurer to deposit public funds in a named depository to a named amount, and (2) in authorizing such deposits in said depository in a lesser amount, renders all existing deposits in said depository in excess of the latter authorization, after the lapse of a reasonable time, unlawful and unauthorized, and to that extent deprives the municipality of the right to reimbursement from the state sinking fund for public deposits.

Andrew v Bank, 203-1089; 213 NW 232

Rescinding authority. The act of a city council in rescinding its authority to the city treasurer to deposit municipal funds in a named bank to a named amount, and in authorizing deposits in a lesser amount, does not render an existing deposit unlawful and unauthorized to the extent that it exceeds the latter authorization, when the treasurer is wholly unable to withdraw said excess from said bank because of the distressed financial condition of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 206-464; 221 NW 342

Rescinding authority. Even tho the county treasurer deposits public funds in a depository bank in an amount authorized by a resolution of the board of supervisors, yet if the board later, by resolution, reduces the amount authorized to be deposited, the treasurer and his surety are liable for a loss resulting from the failure of the treasurer to exercise reasonable diligence to reduce his deposit to the amount authorized in the latter resolution. So held where the treasurer might have withdrawn the excess in the ordinary course of business but failed to do so.

State v Surety Co., 210-215; 230 NW 308

Bond—nonapproval by board of supervisors—effect. A bond given by a bank and by sureties interested in the bank, and given for the purpose of inducing the county treasurer to make deposit of public funds in said bank, and which did induce such deposits, is enforceable even tho the board of supervisors did not formally approve it.

Floyd County v Ramsay, 210-1161; 230 NW 404

Agreements in re county deposits—right of taxpayer. The statutory discretion of the board of supervisors to enter into an agreement with legally and approved reorganized banks, with reference to the county's deposits in said banks, cannot be questioned by a taxpayer except on proof of fraud or arbitrary abuse of said discretion.

STATE SINKING FUND FOR PUBLIC DEPOSITS

7420-a6 Interest diverted. (Repealed by 47 GA, ch 194, §4)

Power to divert. The general assembly has ample authority to divert from the county general fund to the state sinking fund for public deposits interest accruing on deposits of public funds in the hands of the county treasurer.

Scott County v Johnson, 209-213; 222 NW 378

Trust funds—diversion of interest. This section has no application to interest on a trust fund which the school district does not own but is administering.

Boyd v Johnson, 212-1201; 238 NW 61

Right to question constitutionality. Neither a school district nor a taxpayer thereof has any standing to question the constitutionality of the act which diverts the future-accruing interest on school funds to the state sinking fund for public deposits (Ch 352-A1, C., '31 [Ch 352.2, C., '39]), for the reason that they have no such thing as a vested right in said interest.

"Public funds" defined. Funds raised by general taxation for the maintenance of public libraries are public funds, and within the protection of this chapter.

Andrew v Bank, 203-349; 212 NW 742

Illegal deposit. A deposit in a bank of the public funds of a school district is not a legally authorized deposit, within the meaning of this chapter, when made simply on the individual and nonofficial written direction of the several members of the board of directors to the school treasurer to make such deposit, nor will such deposit be rendered legal by the fact (1) that the board of directors, after the deposit was made, had knowledge thereof, or (2) that interest was paid on said deposit.

Andrew v Bank, 204-570; 215 NW 807

Embezzlement by depository. School funds duly deposited in a bank under legal authorization of the directors, and embezzled by an officer of the bank, are a legal charge against the state sinking fund for public deposits, in case the bank becomes insolvent.

Rescinding authority—effect. The action of the governing board of a municipality (1) in rescinding its former action authorizing its treasurer to deposit public funds in a named depository to a named amount, and (2) in authorizing such deposits in said depository in a lesser amount, renders all existing deposits in said depository in excess of the latter authorization, after the lapse of a reasonable time, unlawful and unauthorized, and to that extent deprives the municipality of the right to reimbursement from the state sinking fund for public deposits.

Andrew v Bank, 203-1089; 213 NW 232

7421 Jurisdiction to establish.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 365

Interested but nondeciding vote. Drainage proceedings are not rendered illegal by the nondeciding vote of a supervisor who is financially interested in the proposed improvement.

Monona County v Gray, 200-1133; 206 NW 26

Abuse of discretion. It is beyond the discretionary power of the board to establish a drainage improvement which (1) is of no substantial present value, (2) is admittedly incomplete, (3) will entail a heavy financial burden on the taxpayers, and possible confiscation, and (4) furnishes no assurance that benefits will equal assessments.

Dean v District, 200-1162; 206 NW 245

Anderson v Board, 203-1023; 213 NW 623

Failure to obtain jurisdiction. Failure in drainage proceedings to serve any valid notice on a property owner (1) of the proposed establishment of a drainage district, or (2) of the later proposed assessment, renders the entire proceedings void as to such property owner; and the collection of the assessment will be enjoined, even tho the property owner did voluntarily and generally appear at the hearing on the confirmation of the assessment and filed objections thereto and did not appeal from the adverse ruling thereon.

Chicago, NW Ry. v Sedgwick, 203-726; 213 NW 435

Protection from erosion—delegation of authority. In the establishment of a district for the protection of the banks of a stream from erosion, the board of supervisors may validly delegate to the engineer in charge the duty to determine, in good faith, the number, size, and location of the various retards, when, at the time of the filing of the petition for the district, and up to the time the construction is inaugurated, the condition of the river is such that the exact number, size, and location of the said retards cannot be determined.

Dashner v Const. Co., 205-64; 217 NW 464

Injunction as remedy. Injunction is the proper remedy to restrain the board of supervisors from proceeding with a drainage improvement over which it has no jurisdiction.

Maasdam v Kirkpatrick, 214-1388; 243 NW 145

Mandamus as remedy. Mandamus will not lie to compel the board of supervisors to proceed with the construction of a drainage improvement which, in effect, the board has never established.

Eller v Board, 208-285; 225 NW 375

Supervisors nonrepresentative of county. The board of supervisors of a county in establishing a drainage district, and in maintaining the improvement therein, acts as a special tribunal in an official or governmental capacity, and does not in any way represent the county as a body corporate.

Mitchell County v Odden, 219-793; 259 NW 774

7423 "Levee" defined — bank protection.

Delegation of authority. In the establishment of a district for the protection of the banks of a stream from erosion, the board of supervisors may validly delegate to the engineer in charge the duty to determine, in good faith, the number, size, and location of the various retards, when, at the time of the filing of the petition for the district, and up to the time the construction is inaugurated, the condition of the river is such that the exact number, size, and location of the said retards cannot be determined.

Dashner v Const. Co., 205-64; 217 NW 464

7428 Straightening creek or river.

Repairs (?) or original construction (?). Drainage work which consists in the abandonment of a material portion of an existing drain in order to straighten a river, and the substitution therefor of a new channel at a substantial expense and which work, in fact, is a change in the plan under which the ditch was first constructed, must be deemed an original construction, and not a repair. Especially is this true when the said expense exceeds ten per cent of original cost of construction. It follows that the comprehensive procedure for an original construction must be followed, and not the limited procedure governing repairs.

Maasdam v Kirkpatrick, 214-1388; 243 NW 145

7430 Bond.

Conditional signing. Knowledge on the part of a member of a board (1) of the conditions on which sureties signed a drainage improvement bond, and (2) of the violation of such conditions, will not be imputed to the county in accepting the bond, when said member of the board was a landowner within the proposed district, and therefore wholly disqualified, under the statutes, to act in the proceedings.

Monona County v Gray, 200-1133; 206 NW 26

Unallowable defense. In an action on a drainage bond conditioned to pay all expenses incurred by the county in case the district be not established, the plea that the survey departed from the plan proposed in the petition will be disregarded (1) when the petition was unusually comprehensive in its proposal, and assumed to and did invest the board with full statutory jurisdiction over the proposal, and (2) when the survey was not beyond the call of the statute.

Monona County v Gray, 200-1133; 206 NW 26

Estoppel. Sureties on a drainage improvement bond are estopped to plead nonliability on the bond because the conditions on which they signed had been violated, when they filed the bond, or caused it to be filed, with knowledge, or with ready means of knowing, that said conditions had been violated, and stood by in silence while the county, at large expense, acted thereon.

Monona County v Gray, 200-1133; 206 NW 26

Sufficiency of proof. In an action by a county to recover, on bond given in an abortive drainage proceeding, for items paid by the county, proof of the due audit and payment of the claims by the county authorities is conclusive, in the absence of proof of fraud.

Monona County v Gray, 200-1133; 206 NW 26

Evidence—immateriality. In an action on a drainage bond conditioned to pay all expenses incurred by the county in case the district be not established, testimony to the effect that the engineer, after his employment, estimated the cost of the contemplated survey at a certain amount, is immaterial.

Monona County v Gray, 200-1133; 206 NW 26

7438 Report.

Subsequent exclusion of lands—effect. The board of supervisors has no power or jurisdiction to exclude lands from a drainage district subsequent to the final establishment thereof.

Estes v Board, 204-1043; 217 NW 81

7440 Notice of hearing.

Award by board. See under §7451, Vol I

Foreclosure certificate holder as necessary party.

Vien v Harrison County, 209-580; 228 NW 19

Drainage record book admissible—nonjurisdictional defect. In action to cancel tax sale certificate for an unpaid drainage assessment, to enjoin issuance of treasurer's deed therefor and to further enjoin the collection of remaining assessments on ground that drainage district was not legally established because of defective notice and failure to file proof of service, the drainage record book kept by auditor showing compliance with statutory requirements was admissible, and failure to give correct name of mortgagee in proceeding to establish the district was not a jurisdictional defect where proposed ditch did not extend through or abut upon land covered by the mortgage. (§1989-a3, S., '13.)

7442 Service on agent.

Failure to serve designated agent. Failure to serve notice of a proposed drainage assessment on a railway company by serving its agent as designated by it under the statute deprives the board of all jurisdiction to levy such assessment against the company; and no estoppel to plead such failure of service arises from the fact that the company was served (1) by publication and (2) by service on a nondesignated agent of the company, and that the company interposed no objection to the proceedings.

Chi. NW Ry. v Sedgwick, 202-33; 209 NW 456

Failure to serve notice. Failure in drainage proceedings to serve any valid notice on a property owner (1) of the proposed establishment of a drainage district, or (2) of the later proposed assessment, renders the entire proceedings void as to such property owner; and the collection of the assessment will be enjoined, even tho the property owner did voluntarily and generally appear at the hearing on the confirmation of the assessment and filed objections thereto and did not appeal from the adverse ruling thereon.

Chi. NW Ry. v Sedgwick, 203-726; 213 NW 435

7444 Waiver of notice.

Failure to obtain jurisdiction—enjoining assessment. Failure in drainage proceedings to serve any valid notice on a property owner (1) of the proposed establishment of a drainage district, or (2) of the later proposed assessment, renders the entire proceedings void as to such property owner; and the collection of the assessment will be enjoined, even tho the property owner did voluntarily and generally appear at the hearing on the confirmation of the assessment and filed objections thereto, and did not appeal from the adverse ruling thereon.

Chi. NW Ry. v Sedgwick, 203-726; 213 NW 435

7445 Waiver of objections and damages.

Assessments—estoppel. Principle reaffirmed that, when property owners stand by and see a drainage improvement made, and take no steps of legal interference, they are estopped to raise the question of validity when called upon to pay their assessments.

Dashner v Woods Co., 205-64; 217 NW 464

Establishment—estoppel to question validity. One who redeemed land from tax sale for non-payment of drainage assessment installments and who acquiesced in drainage proceedings during years in which her land received benefits of the improvement is estopped from questioning establishment of the drainage district.

7447 Hearing of petition—dismissal.

Refusal to establish—nonpermissible appeal. An appeal will not lie to the district court from the refusal of the board of supervisors to establish a proposed drainage ditch when such refusal is based on a finding by the board (1) that another and existing ditch is sufficient, and (2) that the public benefit, utility, health, convenience, and welfare would not be promoted by establishing said proposed improvement.

Christensen v Agan, 209-1315; 230 NW 800

7448 Establishment—further investigation.

“Public benefit, utility, health, etc.”—effect of former finding. A finding that the establishing of a drainage improvement covering certain lands would be conducive to public benefit, utility, health, convenience, and welfare does not constitute a finding that another and subsequently proposed drainage improvement entirely or partially embracing the same land would be conducive to public benefit, utility, health, convenience, and welfare.

Christensen v Agan, 209-1315; 230 NW 800

7454 Dissolution.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 306

7459 Advertisement for bids.

7460 Bids—letting of work.

Public improvements—estimated quantities as basis for contract—variation with specifications not fatal. In awarding a contract the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of “unit prices”, as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities, indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

Interstate Co. v City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

7462 Performance bond—return of check.

Performance by surety—proper charges. Evidence reviewed relative to certain charges debited against the contract price of a drainage improvement by a surety who had taken over the work of the defaulting contractor, and held proper, and in some instances improper.

Ottumwa Boiler v O'Meara, 206-577; 218 NW 920

Subrogation—priority. A surety who takes over the work of a defaulting public drainage contractor and proceeds to pay off claims which are statutorily lienable against the funds due under the contract acquires a right of subrogation superior to that of a prior assignee of said funds.

Ottumwa Boiler v O'Meara, 206-577; 218 NW 920

Nonlienable claims. Claims for labor and materials furnished to a contractor on a public drainage improvement in repairing the machinery which the contractor employed on the work are not lienable on the drainage funds. (§1989-a57, S., '13; Ch 347, 38 GA, now repealed. See Ch 452, C., '24.)

Ottumwa Boiler v O'Meara, 206-577; 218 NW 920

7463 Contracts.

Reformation of contract. A written contract between a drainage contractor and the board which inadvertently departs from the terms of the bid and the acceptance by the board will be reformed on an application in equity.

Gjellefald v District, 203-1144; 212 NW 691

Extra contract work. While a contractor may not recover for cleaning out a ditch, consequent on his own fault, yet he may recover for extra contract excavation after so cleaning out, on order of the proper authorities.

Gjellefald v District, 203-1144; 212 NW 691

Construction aside contract. A public drainage contractor may not recover for construction work which is neither provided for in his contract nor ordered nor approved by the board, even tho it was ordered by the engineer in charge.

Gjellefald v District, 203-1144; 212 NW 691

Void provision. A clause inserted in a public improvement contract, to the effect that, if rock or quicksand is encountered the contractor shall be paid on the basis of cost plus a named percentage, is void when both the specifications and the advertisement for bids are silent as to such contingency.

Gjellefald v Hunt, 202-212; 210 NW 122

7465 Duties—time for performance—scale of benefits.

Assessments—evidentiary showing sufficient to overcome. A landowner, who claims that his lands have been inequitably assessed, must demonstrate the truth of his claim by presenting to the court such an evidentiary picture of every separate tract of land within the district, or of a determining portion thereof, distinctly reflecting every material fact and element bearing on a legal and proper classification, as will enable the court intelligently to weigh relative benefits, and to weigh them in complainant's favor. If the picture be uncertain or indistinct in material parts or if it fails to show important facts, such, for instance, as pre-existing public drainage improvements and the consideration due such improvements, then it must be held insufficient to overcome the presumed correctness of the assessment.

Fulton v Sherman, 212-1218; 238 NW 88

Employment of counsel to defend assessment. County supervisors in their statutory capacity as representatives of a drainage district had right to employ attorneys and issue drainage warrants to them for services to be rendered in the trial and appeal of an action brought by property owners to enjoin collection of assessments levied to meet cost of work done for the district, and fact that elected drainage trustees took over management of the district before services were fully performed in supreme court did not render void the warrant previously issued for such service.

Kilpatrick v Mills County, 227-721; 288 NW 871

Good faith presumption. Acts of county supervisors concerning work done by them in their statutory capacity as representatives of a drainage district to maintain the efficiency and durability of a drainage system was presumed to have been done in good faith, and they had an absolute right on behalf of the district to stand behind the contract under which the work was done in the interest of the district.

Kilpatrick v Mills County, 227-721; 288 NW 871

7466 Classification as basis for future assessments. (Repealed.)

Duty to follow existing classification. An assessment for the cost of repairing a lateral drain must be levied solely on the lands benefited by the lateral, as shown by the unchanged classification adopted when the lateral was originally constructed, even tho it be a fact that in making the assessment for the original construction, the classification in question was unlawfully disregarded.

Seabury v Adams, 208-1332; 225 NW 264

7468 Assessment for lateral ditches.

Duty to follow existing classification. An assessment for the cost of repairing a lateral drain must be levied solely on the lands benefited by the lateral, as shown by the unchanged classification adopted when the lateral was originally constructed, even tho it be a fact that, in making the assessment for the original construction, the classification in question was unlawfully disregarded.

Seabury v Adams, 208-1332; 225 NW 264

7470 Public highways.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 278, 492; '30 AG Op 240

7471 Report of commissioners.

Statute governing. The assessment procedure to cover the cost of remodeling a public drainage improvement is controlled by the statute in effect when the contract is let.

Mayne v Board, 208-987; 223 NW 904; 225 NW 953

Accretions. When the high-water mark or line of a river is a boundary line of a drainage district, accretions to the land are not assessable for drainage improvements.

Mayne v Board, 208-987; 223 NW 904; 225 NW 953

Existing improvements as credit. In arriving at the amount of a drainage assessment, due credit should be given for existing drainage improvements on the land. Assessment reviewed, and held excessive.

Petersen v Board, 208-748; 226 NW 1

7472 Notice of hearing.

Assessments—estoppel. Principle reaffirmed that, when property owners stand by and see a drainage improvement made, and take no steps of legal interference, they are estopped to raise the question of validity when called upon to pay their assessments.

Dashner v Woods Co., 205-64; 217 NW 464

Notice of hearing—affidavit lacking seal of court clerk. Affidavit of publication of notice of hearing on drainage assessment was sufficient altho court seal was not attached by court clerk before whom the affidavit was made. Moreover, statute did not require that proof of service be by affidavit.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

7473 Hearing and determination.

Existing improvements as credit. In arriving at the amount of a drainage assessment, due credit should be given for existing drainage improvements on the land. Assessment reviewed, and held excessive.

Petersen v Board, 208-748; 226 NW 1

Objections—technical formality unnecessary. Technical formality in presenting to the board of supervisors matters bearing on a drainage assessment is not required. So held where the matter in question was presented through the medium of a so-called "petition", instead of through the medium of formal objections.

Mayne v Board, 208-987; 223 NW 904; 225 NW 953

Assessments—errors in acreage—computation. Where board has jurisdiction to make drainage assessment, errors in (1) acreage of benefited land, (2) method of computing amount of assessment, and (3) using a non-statutory installment plan of payment do not render the assessment void, but are only irregularities not reviewable in a collateral proceeding.

7474 Evidence — conclusive presumption.

Validity—estoppel. A property owner cannot be deemed estopped to question the illegality of a drainage improvement because of the action of a former owner of the land on which no one relied; nor because the property owner, after he discovered that the work had been substantially completed, entered a formal complaint as to certain defects in the work.

Kelleher v Drainage Dist., 216-348; 249 NW 401

7476 Classification as basis for future assessments.

Duty to follow existing classification. An assessment for the cost of repairing a lateral drain must be levied solely on the lands benefited by the lateral as shown by the unchanged classification adopted when the lateral was originally constructed, even tho it be a fact that, in making the assessment for the original construction, the classification in question was unlawfully disregarded.

Seabury v Adams, 208-1332; 225 NW 264

Reclassification—proper basis. A reclassification of lands within a drainage district for an improvement made subsequent to the construction of other improvements within the district should be made on the basis of the condition of the land as it existed just prior to and at the time of the construction of the improvement for which the assessment is made.

Mayne v Board, 208-987; 223 NW 904; 225 NW 953

7477 Levy—interest.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 113

Assessments—nonliability of county. A county, as a body corporate, is not liable in damages consequent on the failure of the board of supervisors to levy an adequate assessment against a drainage district to pay the bonds of the district. It follows that the county treasurer and his surety, when sued by the county for damages consequent on the act of said treasurer in using county funds in paying said bonds, cannot be subrogated to any right of the bondholder to proceed against the county,—because the bondholder has no such right.

Mitchell County v Odden, 219-793; 259 NW 774

Drainage levies as ordinary taxes—treasurer as drainage district officer. A county treasurer is not an ex officio officer of a drainage district, so individuals paying drainage levies to him are classed as ordinary taxpayers, and as such cannot be compelled to pay such taxes twice.

Western Assn. v Barrett, 223-932; 274 NW 55

Tax assessment constitutes lien on land—bond not lien. Under statute providing for issuance of drainage district bonds the tax assessments levied by the district, and not the bond, constitute the lien against the land.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Bond—lien on entire proceeds of special assessment—exclusive remedy. Bond issued by drainage district under statute is a lien upon the entire proceeds of the special assessment and not on any particular tract of land. The whole process being statutory, is exclusive of all other remedies.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Purchase by drainage district bondholder. The statute relating to fraudulent tax sales does not entitle the owner of the property to quiet title against holders of tax deeds on the grounds that tax deeds are void because purchasers are owners and holders of drainage bonds issued by drainage district in which land is situated without tender of taxes paid, when no claim is asserted that there is any fraud or collusion or conspiracy to defraud, and the question submitted is purely a legal question as to whether bondholders are under a legal disability to acquire title.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Drainage district bondholder—permissible purchaser at tax sale. Bondholders of a drainage district, by virtue of their ownership of such bonds, do not have an interest in such drainage district land sold for taxes which will disqualify them from becoming purchasers at tax sale.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

7478 Lien of tax.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 113
Additional annotations. See under §6008

Priority between different special assessments. The fully perfected lien of a special assessment for a city sewer is prior in right to the lien of a subsequent special assessment by the board of supervisors for a public drainage improvement, even tho the latter improvement was initiated prior to the sewer proceedings.

Anderson-Deering Co. v Boone, 201-1129; 205 NW 984

When deed extinguishes drainage taxes. The lien on land of unmatured installments of duly levied district-drainage taxes is extinguished by a tax deed which is issued on a sale of said land for general (ordinary) taxes levied subsequent to the levy of the drainage taxes.

Ferguson v Aitken, 220-1154; 263 NW 850

Tax assessment constitutes lien on land—bond not lien. Under statute providing for issuance of drainage district bonds the tax assessments levied by the district, and not the bond, constitute the lien against the land.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Bond—lien on entire proceeds of special assessment. Bond issued by drainage district under statute is a lien upon the entire proceeds of the special assessment and not on any particular tract of land. The whole process being statutory, is exclusive of all other remedies.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Drainage district bondholder—permissible purchaser at tax sale. Bondholders of a drainage district, by virtue of their ownership of such bonds, do not have an interest in such drainage district land sold for taxes which will disqualify them from becoming purchasers at tax sale.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Drainage levies as ordinary taxes—treasurer as drainage district officer. A county treasurer is not an ex officio officer of a drainage district, so individuals paying drainage levies to him are classed as ordinary taxpayers, and as such cannot be compelled to pay such taxes twice.

Western Assn. v Barrett, 223-932; 274 NW 55

Purchase by drainage district bondholder. The statute relating to fraudulent tax sales does not entitle the owner of the property to quiet title against holders of tax deeds on the grounds that tax deeds are void because purchasers are owners and holders of drainage bonds issued by drainage district in which land is situated without tender of taxes paid, when no claim is asserted that there is any fraud or collusion or conspiracy to defraud, and the question submitted is purely a legal question as to whether bondholders are under a legal disability to acquire title.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Tax sale for nonpayment—duration of lien. Tax sale of land for nonpayment of drainage assessments is not an action barred by statute of limitations, and the duration of a lien for such assessment or the time within which payment may be enforced is not limited by statute.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

7479 Levy for deficiency.

Unallowable item of expense. The boards of supervisors in charge of an intercounty drainage improvement are wholly without jurisdiction to include in a deficiency assessment on all the lands within the district an item of expense which had been contracted in one county by the board of supervisors thereof in the employment of a fiscal agent to sell the bonds which had been issued in such particular county.

Haferman v District, 204-936; 216 NW 257

Limitation of actions. The statute of limitation commences to run against an action of mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to levy an additional assessment to pay drainage warrants even tho the board had not levied or otherwise provided for the additional assessment to complete the fund from which the warrants are to be paid.

Lenehan v Drainage Dist., 219-294; 258 NW 91

Assessments—inability to meet bonds—mandamus not remedy. Where a drainage district was created and a sufficient assessment to pay all bonds was levied and collected but not at all times carried in a separate account by the county treasurer, with the result that on maturity date of the bonds no sufficient balance was available to retire them, a mandamus action on the theory of an insufficient assessment (§7509, C., '35) brought by the bondholders to require the drainage district trustees to make an additional levy was properly denied.

Western Assn. v Barrett, 223-932; 274 NW 55

7480 Record of drainage taxes.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 113

7481 Funds—disbursement—interest.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 428; '28 AG Op 195

Contract for lobbying. The action of a board on behalf of a public drainage district in employing attorneys to induce the state legislature to make an appropriation with which to pay the assessment on state-owned lands within the district is not violative of public policy, and the allowance of a claim for such services is proper, it appearing that the contract was carried out without the employment of any improper influence whatever.

Kemble v Weaver, 200-1333; 206 NW 83

Failure to file brief and argument—estoppel to assert claim. In action by subcontractor against principal and drainage district jointly to establish claim as a lien on the district's fund, where drainage district filed no brief or argument, court need give no attention to its plea that subcontractor was estopped from asserting claim by his action in accepting auditor's warrant for a lesser amount than that to which he was entitled.

Graettinger Works v Gjellefald, (NOR); 214 NW 579

7482 Assessments—maturity and collection.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 113; '34 AG Op 412

Correction of description. Mandamus will lie, by one landowner within a drainage district, to compel the board to so correct the description of other assessed lands that the latter may be sold under the assessment against them.

Plumer v Board, 203-643; 213 NW 257

Drainage levies as ordinary taxes—treasurer as drainage district officer. A county treasurer is not an ex officio officer of a drainage district, so individuals paying drainage levies to him are classed as ordinary taxpayers, and as such cannot be compelled to pay such taxes twice.

Western Assn. v Barrett, 223-932; 274 NW 55

Drainage district bondholder — permissible purchaser at tax sale. Bondholders of a drainage district, by virtue of their ownership of such bonds, do not have an interest in such drainage district land sold for taxes which will disqualify them from becoming purchasers at tax sale.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Estoppel to question validity—redemption from tax sales. One who redeemed land from tax sale for nonpayment of drainage assessment installments and who acquiesced in drainage proceedings during years in which her land received benefits of the improvement is estopped from questioning establishment of the drainage district.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

Assessments—tax sale for nonpayment. Tax sale of land for nonpayment of drainage assessments is not an action barred by statute of limitations, and the duration of a lien for such assessment or the time within which payment may be enforced is not limited by statute.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

7483 Payment before bonds or certificates issued.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 104

7484 Installment payments—waiver.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 104

Implication to pay in certain county—effect. A mere implication arising from a writing that payments maturing under the writing will be made at a certain place in a certain county furnishes no legal basis for bringing action in said county when defendant is an actual resident of some other county. Basis for such action in a county other than that of defendant's residence must be found in the express terms of the writing. So held in an action by a holder of drainage bonds to recover assessments on land to pay the bonds.

Bechtel v Dist. Court, 215-295; 245 NW 299

Assessments — nonstatutory plan of payment. Where board has jurisdiction to make drainage assessment, errors in (1) acreage of benefited land, (2) method of computing amount of assessment, and (3) using a non-statutory installment plan of payment do not render the assessment void, but are only irregularities not reviewable in a collateral proceeding.

7488 Lien of deferred installments.

Warranty and incumbrance. A covenant against incumbrance is not broken by the existence of a public drainage improvement on the land, nor is a general covenant of warranty breached by the fact that subsequent to the deed an additional assessment is levied on the land for such improvement.

Kleinmeyer v Willenbrock, 202-1049; 210 NW 447

Duty to discharge. As between life tenants and remaindermen, the former, during their tenancy, should pay the interest on special assessments and the latter should pay the principal; and refunds on such assessments should be distributed in the same proportions.

Cooper v Barton, 208-447; 226 NW 70

Statute of limitations—duration of lien. Tax sale of land for nonpayment of drainage assessments is not an action barred by statute of limitations, and the duration of a lien for such assessment or the time within which payment may be enforced is not limited by statute.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

7492 Reclassification.

Proper basis. A reclassification of lands within a drainage district for an improvement made subsequent to the construction of other improvements within the district should be made on the basis of the condition of the land as it existed just prior to and at the time of the construction of the improvement for which the assessment is made.

Mayne v Board, 208-987; 223 NW 904; 225 NW 953

Duty to follow existing classification. An assessment for the cost of repairing a lateral drain must be levied solely on the lands benefited by the lateral, as shown by the unchanged classification adopted when the lateral was originally constructed, even tho it be a fact that, in making the assessment for the original construction, the classification in question was unlawfully disregarded.

Seabury v Adams, 208-1332; 225 NW 264

7495 Drainage warrants received for assessments.

Assignment—absolute (?) or conditional (?). Record reviewed and held that a written assignment of a drainage warrant must be deemed to have deprived the assignor of all interest therein.

Simmons v Tatham, 219-1407; 261 NW 434

7495.1 Bonds received for assessments.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op May 18, '39

7499 Improvement certificates.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 106

Implication to pay in certain county—effect. A mere implication arising from a writing that payments maturing under the writing will be made at a certain place in a certain county furnishes no legal basis for bringing action in said county when defendant is an actual resident of some other county. Basis for such action in a county other than that of defendant's residence must be found in the express terms of the writing. So held in an action by a holder of drainage bonds to recover assessments on land to pay the bonds.

7500 Form, negotiability, and effect.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 106

7503 Drainage bonds.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 73, 108

Violation of conditions—good faith of board. The fact that not all signers of a petition for a drainage improvement signed the bond, in accordance with an agreement between the parties who initiated the proceedings, will not affect the enforceability of the bond, when the bond was received and accepted by the county in good faith and without knowledge of said agreement and of the violation thereof.

Monona County v Gray, 200-1133; 206 NW 26

7504 Form.

Nonallowable judgment at law. The holder of a drainage bond issued by a county is not entitled to a personal judgment at law against the county, its board of supervisors, or the drainage district, for the amount due on the bond, the drainage district not being a legal entity, and the county and its supervisors acting only in an official or representative capacity.

Board v Dist. Court, 209-1030; 229 NW 711

Assessments—proper application to bonds. The holder of a matured drainage bond is entitled to have said bond paid in full if funds to that extent are available in the hands of the county treasurer, irrespective of the time when said funds were paid to the treasurer. In other words, the treasurer is not compelled to apply tax collections of a given year solely on bonds maturing in that year.

Bechtel v Mostrom, 214-623; 243 NW 361

Bonds—unauthorized pledge. A pledge of "the faith and resources of the county" for the payment of a drainage bond, issued by the board of supervisors on behalf of a drainage district, is without force or effect because wholly unauthorized.

Mitchell County v Odden, 219-793; 259 NW 774

Misuse of funds—estoppel—waiver. A county treasurer breaches his official bond by using county funds in paying drainage district bonds, and the county cannot be deemed estopped to insist on said breach, or be held to have waived said breach, because of the fact that the treasurer acted with the knowledge and consent of, or in obedience to the express direction of the board of supervisors.

Mitchell County v Odden, 219-793; 259 NW 774

Nonliability of county. A county, as a body corporate, is not liable in damages consequent on the failure of the board of supervisors to levy an adequate assessment against a drainage district to pay the bonds of the district. It follows that the county treasurer and his surety, when sued by the county for damages consequent on the act of said treasurer in using county funds in paying said bonds, cannot be subrogated to any right of the bondholder to proceed against the county,—because the bondholder has no such right.

Mitchell County v Odden, 219-793; 259 NW 774

Bond—lien on entire proceeds of special assessment. Bond issued by drainage district under statute is a lien upon the entire proceeds of the special assessment and not on any particular tract of land. The whole process being statutory, is exclusive of all other remedies.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Drainage district bondholder—permissible purchaser at tax sale. Bondholders of a drainage district, by virtue of their ownership of such bonds, do not have an interest in such drainage district land sold for taxes which will disqualify them from becoming purchasers at tax sale.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Purchase by drainage district bondholder. The statute relating to fraudulent tax sales does not entitle the owner of the property to quiet title against holders of tax deeds on the grounds that tax deeds are void because purchasers are owners and holders of drainage bonds issued by drainage district in which land is situated without tender of taxes paid, when no claim is asserted that there is any fraud or collusion or conspiracy to defraud, and the question submitted is purely a legal question as to whether bondholders are under a legal disability to acquire title.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Tax assessment constitutes lien on land—bond not lien. Under statute providing for issuance of drainage district bonds the tax assessments levied by the district, and not the bond, constitute the lien against the land.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

7509 Deficiency levy—additional bonds.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 131; '32 AG Op 104, 232

Unallowable item of expense. The boards of supervisors in charge of an intercounty drainage improvement are wholly without jurisdiction to include in a deficiency assessment on all the lands within the district an item of expense which had been contracted in one county by the board of supervisors thereof in the employment of a fiscal agent to sell the bonds which had been issued in such particular county.

Haferman v District, 204-936; 216 NW 257

See Kemble v Weaver, 200-1333; 206 NW 83

Assessments—inability to meet bonds—mandamus not remedy. Where a drainage district was created and a sufficient assessment to pay all bonds was levied and collected but not at all times carried in a separate account by the county treasurer, with the result that on maturity date of the bonds no sufficient balance was available to retire them, a mandamus action on the theory of an insufficient assessment brought by the bondholders to require the drainage district trustees to make an additional levy was properly denied.

Western Assn. v Barrett, 223-932; 274 NW 55

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 73

7513 Appeals.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 289

Appeal as sole remedy. The objection that the board of supervisors levied an assessment for a highway improvement against an entire 40-acre tract, instead of that part only which was at right angles to the improvement, must be presented on appeal from the assessment, and not by an independent action in equity.

Paul v Marshall County, 204-1114; 216 NW 736

Appeal as non-exclusive remedy. Either certiorari or appeal will lie to review the action of the board of supervisors in attempting to exclude lands from a drainage district after its establishment and construction, such attempted action being wholly beyond the jurisdiction of the board.

Estes v Board, 204-1043; 217 NW 81

Nonpermissible appeal. An appeal will not lie to the district court from the refusal of the board of supervisors to establish a proposed drainage ditch when such refusal is based on a finding by the board (1) that another and existing ditch is sufficient, and (2) that the public benefit, utility, health, convenience, and welfare would not be promoted by establishing said proposed improvement.

Christensen v Agan, 209-1315; 230 NW 800

Appeal by petitioners for district. Petitioners for the establishment of a drainage district may not maintain an appeal from an order by the district court setting aside the establishment by the board of supervisors of a drainage district, when, up to the time of the entry of the said order of the district court, the board of supervisors and the drainage district were the sole defendants in the proceedings.

Chi., Burl. Ry. v Board, 206-488; 221 NW 223

Assessments—errors nonreviewable in collateral action. Where board has jurisdiction to make drainage assessment, errors in (1) acreage of benefited land, (2) method of computing amount of assessment, and (3) using a nonstatutory installment plan of payment do not render the assessment void, but are only irregularities not reviewable in a collateral proceeding.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

7515 Time and manner.

Appeal notice—proper filing notwithstanding auditor's failure to mark "filed". The statutory requirement of "filing with the auditor" a notice of appeal from the action of the county board of supervisors, with respect to classification and assessment of land in a drainage district, was satisfied when attorney for owner delivered notice of appeal and appeal bond to auditor with instructions to file them, notwithstanding auditor failed to mark papers "filed". A paper is said to be "filed" when it is delivered to the proper officer and by him received to be kept on file.

Mills v Board, 227-1141; 290 NW 50

Appeal bond—filing—statutory presumption of approval. Where, on appeal from action of county board of supervisors with respect to classification and assessment of land in drainage district, the board urges that failure of the auditor to approve the appeal bond constituted a fatal defect and it is shown attorney for property owner delivered the notice of appeal and appeal bond to county auditor with instructions to file them, the delivery to and receipt by the auditor of the tendered appeal bond constituted a "filing" and generated statutory presumption that auditor approved the bond, sufficient to uphold appeal, in absence of evidence to overcome presumption.

7517 Petition—docket fee—waiver—dismissal.

Substantial compliance with statute—sufficiency. On appeal from action of county board of supervisors with respect to classification and assessment of land in drainage district, a motion to dismiss the appeal for alleged failure to fully set out in petition everything required by statute was properly overruled where petition substantially complied with statute.

Mills v Board, 227-1141; 290 NW 50

7519 Proper parties — employment of counsel.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op March 2, '39

Legal representative. The board of supervisors is the proper legal representative of all parties interested in public drainage proceedings except adversary parties.

Chi., Burl. Ry. v Board, 206-488; 221 NW 223

Decree on appeal—conclusiveness. A decree which sustains objections of property owners to a proposed drainage assessment on the assigned ground that certain specified contracts are illegal and void is conclusive on the contractor and his assignees, even tho they are not in fact represented at such hearing; because in law the board of supervisors is, in such proceeding, made the representative, not only of the district, but of every interested party except the adversary parties.

First N. Bk. v County, 204-720; 216 NW 8

Employment of counsel to defend assessment. County supervisors in their statutory capacity as representatives of a drainage district had right to employ attorneys and issue drainage warrants to them for services to be rendered in the trial and appeal of an action brought by property owners to enjoin collection of assessments levied to meet cost of work done for the district, and fact that elected drainage trustees took over management of the district before services were fully performed in supreme court did not render void the warrant previously issued for such service.

Kilpatrick v Mills County, 227-721; 288 NW 871

Supervisors representing drainage district. Acts of county supervisors concerning work done by them in their statutory capacity as representatives of a drainage district to maintain the efficiency and durability of a drainage system was presumed to have been done in good faith, and they had an absolute right on behalf of the district to stand behind the contract under which the work was done in the interest of the district.

Kilpatrick v Mills County, 227-721; 288 NW 871

7521 Right of board and district to sue.

District not legal entity.

Board v Dist. Court, 209-1030; 229 NW 711
Houghton v Bonnicksen, 212-902; 237 NW 313

Nonallowable judgment at law. The holder of a drainage bond issued by a county is not entitled to a personal judgment at law against the county, its board of supervisors, or the drainage district, for the amount due on the bond, the drainage district not being a legal entity, and the county and its supervisors acting only in an official or representative capacity.

Board v Dist. Court, 209-1030; 229 NW 711

7522 Trial on appeal—consolidation.

Excessive assessment—evidence sustaining reduction. On appeal from action of county board of supervisors with respect to assessment of land in drainage district, it may be shown that the amount of assessment as recommended by second report of county commissioners was greatly in excess of amount recommended in first report, as a circumstance entitled to consideration in determining whether second report was excessive. Evidence sustained finding that assessments on certain land were excessive and inequitable and should be reduced by 30 percent.

Mills v Board, 227-1141; 290 NW 50

Petition—substantial compliance with statute—sufficiency. On appeal from action of county board of supervisors with respect to classification and assessment of land in drainage district, a motion to dismiss the appeal for alleged failure to fully set out in petition everything required by statute was properly overruled where petition substantially complied with statute.

Mills v Board, 227-1141; 290 NW 50

Excessive assessment—findings of trial court—effect on appeal. Where the trial court, which saw and heard the witnesses, makes a finding that classification and assessment of certain lands in drainage district were excessive and inequitable and should be reduced by 30 percent, such finding is entitled to some weight on appeal to the supreme court.

Mills v Board, 227-1141; 290 NW 50

7523 Conclusive presumption on appeal.

See annotations under §7474

7526 Decree as to establishing district or including lands.

Annexing additional lands. An order by joint boards of supervisors, annexing additional lands to an already established inter-county drainage district, is appealable to the district court for the purpose of trying anew the quasi judicial issue whether such additional lands will be benefited by the proposed improvement; and on such appeal the court has power to exclude such lands from the district, in case it is clearly shown that they cannot be benefited in any degree by the proposed improvement.

Thompson v Board, 201-1099; 206 NW 624

Impossible project. The setting aside by the district court of an order by the board of supervisors establishing a drainage district is proper when it is made to appear that the project is impossible,—when the sum total of the plan would be to redeem certain lands and unavoidably submerge other lands.

Dean v District, 200-1162; 206 NW 245

Anderson v Board, 203-1023; 213 NW 623

7527 Appeal as exclusive remedy—nonappellants.

Enjoining assessment. Failure in drainage proceedings to serve any valid notice on a property owner (1) of the proposed establishment of a drainage district, or (2) of the later proposed assessment, renders the entire proceedings void as to such property owner; and the collection of the assessment will be enjoined, even tho the property owner did voluntarily and generally appear at the hearing on the confirmation of the assessment and filed objections thereto and did not appeal from the adverse ruling thereon.

Chi. NW Ry. v Sedgwick, 202-33; 209 NW 456

Chi. NW Ry. v Sedgwick, 203-726; 213 NW 435

Estoppel. Principle reaffirmed that, when property owners stand by and see a drainage improvement made, and take no steps of legal interference, they are estopped to raise the question of validity when called upon to pay their assessments.

Dashner v Const. Co., 205-64; 217 NW 464

Injunction to restrain irregularities. Injunction will not lie to restrain a mere irregularity in the levying of a drainage assessment.

Seabury v Adams, 208-1332; 225 NW 264

Injunction—absence of jurisdiction. Principle reaffirmed that injunction is the proper remedy to restrain the board of supervisors from proceeding with a drainage improvement over which it has no jurisdiction.

Maasdam v Kirkpatrick, 214-1388; 243 NW 145

Objection to assessments—remedy. When the board of supervisors exercises discretion in repairing a drainage ditch and their action in levying an assessment is not absolutely void for lack of jurisdiction, the proper remedy for one aggrieved by such action is by appeal to the district court, and not by injunction against the assessment levy.

Baldozier v Mayberry, 226-693; 285 NW 140

Establishment—nonjurisdictional defect. In action to cancel tax sale certificate for an unpaid drainage assessment, to enjoin issuance of treasurer's deed therefor, and to further enjoin the collection of remaining assessments on ground that drainage district was not legally established because of defective notice and failure to file proof of service, the drainage record book kept by auditor showing compliance with statutory requirements was admissible, and failure to give correct name of mortgagee in proceeding to establish the district was not a jurisdictional defect where proposed ditch did not extend thru or abut upon land covered by the mortgage. (§1989-a3, S., '13.)

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

Errors nonreviewable in collateral action. Where board has jurisdiction to make drainage assessment, errors in (1) acreage of benefitted land, (2) method of computing amount of assessment, and (3) using a nonstatutory installment plan of payment do not render the assessment void, but are only irregularities not reviewable in a collateral proceeding.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

7531 Monthly estimate—payment.

Interest on deferred payment. Interest on long deferred payments due to a contractor may properly be ordered.

Gjellefald v District, 203-1144; 212 NW 691

Dual conflicting contracts—procedure in re warrants. An action in equity praying for the adjudication of the amount due on certain drainage warrants will not be entertained when the petition reveals the fact that the warrants were issued under one of two materially different contracts covering the same subject matter, and that as a consequence the warrants in question were wholly valid or wholly invalid.

Houghton v Bonnicksen, 212-902; 237 NW 313

7534 Final settlement.

Acceptance of work—effect. The good-faith final acceptance by the duly constituted authorities of the work performed under a drainage improvement is final.

Dashner v Const. Co., 205-64; 217 NW 464

Failure to file brief and argument—estoppel to assert claim. In action by subcontractor against principal and drainage district jointly to establish claim as a lien on the district's fund, where drainage district filed no brief or argument, court need give no attention to its plea that subcontractor was estopped from asserting claim by his action in accepting auditor's warrant for a lesser amount than that to which he was entitled.

Graettinger Works v Gjellefald, (NOR); 214 NW 579

7537 Construction on or along highway.

Nonappropriation for new purpose. The fact that a public drainage ditch is so laid out and constructed that in places it encroaches, to some extent, upon a public highway, does not per se justify the conclusion that thereby the highway has been legally appropriated for a new public purpose, to wit: drainage.

Robinson v Board, 222-663; 269 NW 921

7539 Bridges.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 445

Nonperformance. Mandamus to compel the board to erect a bridge on an established and existing highway at the point where the highway is crossed by a public drainage improvement is not barred by the lapse of time.

Perley v Heath, 201-1163; 208 NW 721

Mandamus—construction over ditches. The statutory duty of the board of supervisors to construct bridges over public ditches at points where such ditches intersect secondary roads is enforceable by action of mandamus, such duty being in no manner limited or controlled by the statutory powers granted the county board of approval in adopting secondary road programs.

Robinson v Board, 222-663; 269 NW 921

Nonappropriation for new purpose. The fact that a public drainage ditch is so laid out and constructed that in places it encroaches, to some extent, upon a public highway, does not per se justify the conclusion that thereby the highway has been legally appropriated for a new public purpose, to wit: drainage.

Robinson v Board, 222-663; 269 NW 921

7540 Construction across railroad.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 191

Notice from maintenance of bridge. The existence, on a minor fractional part of a government 40-acre tract, of permanent improvements in the form of a railway bridge spanning a public drainage ditch constitutes implied notice to the purchaser of the remaining part of the said 40-acre tract of the unrecorded written contract right of the railway company to maintain said bridge in its then length and elevation without liability in damages to the owner of the abutting land.

Johnson v Railway, 202-1282; 211 NW 842

Overflow damage. In landowner's action against railroad for damage to crops, resulting from overflow, where record showed plans and specifications for drainage ditch did not require railroad to lengthen bridge span, railroad's full compliance with requirements barred recovery.

Kellogg v Railway, (NOR); 239 NW 557

7541 Duty to construct.

Inadequate opening—compulsory construction—effect. Negligence may not be predicated on the insufficient length or height of a railroad bridge within a public drainage district when the bridge was constructed strictly in accordance with the plans and specifications prescribed by the public drainage authorities.

Hunter v Railway, 206-655; 221 NW 360

7549 Annexation of additional lands.

Additional lands in foreign county. A board of supervisors has no jurisdiction to annex to an intracounty drainage improvement lands situated in a foreign county.

Glenn v County, 201-1003; 206 NW 802

Subsequent exclusion of lands. The board of supervisors has no power or jurisdiction to exclude lands from a drainage district subsequent to the final establishment thereof.

Estes v Board, 204-1043; 217 NW 81

Nonpermissible annexation. The power of joint boards of supervisors to annex lands to an existing intercounty drainage district does not extend to lands which are embraced in an existing intracounty drainage district.

Farley Dist. v Drainage Dist., 207-970; 221 NW 589

7550 Proceedings on report.

Annexing additional lands—appeal. An order by joint boards of supervisors, annexing additional lands to an already established intercounty drainage district, is appealable to the district court for the purpose of trying anew the quasi judicial issue whether such additional lands will be benefited by the proposed improvement; and on such appeal the court has power to exclude such lands from the district, in case it is clearly shown that they cannot be benefited in any degree by the proposed improvement.

7554 New district including old district.

“New construction” (?) or “repair” (?). In the effort to correct the inadequacy of an established public drainage improvement, the construction of an entirely different and substituted system of drainage—one costing several times the cost of the inadequate drain, of materially increased capacity, differently located, affecting additional lands, and one which, in fact, is the result of an entirely new plan—must be deemed a “new construction” and not a “repair”. It follows that such “new construction” must be preceded by the establishment of an entirely new district.

Kelleher v Drainage Dist., 216-348; 249 NW 401

7556 Repair.

Atty Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 45, 194; '32 AG Op 235, 274; '38 AG Op 482; AG Op Jan. 11, '39

“Constructed” drain defined. A drainage improvement is “constructed”, within the meaning of this section, whenever the physical work is completed and the governing body has accepted the same, even tho a supplemental improvement governed by a different contract remains unfinished.

Board v Paine, 203-263; 210 NW 929

“Remodeling” not “repair”. The remodeling of a public drain or ditch in order to care for and obviate an undue burden of waters cast into it by other like ditches may not be deemed a repair.

Mayne v Board, 208-987; 223 NW 904; 225 NW 953

Repair (?) or original construction (?). Drainage work which consists in the abandonment of a material portion of an existing drain in order to straighten a river, and the substitution therefor of a new channel at a substantial expense and which work, in fact, is a change in the plan under which the ditch was first constructed, must be deemed an original construction, and not a repair. Especially is this true when the said expense exceeds ten per cent of original cost of construction. It follows that the comprehensive procedure for an original construction must be followed, and not the limited procedure governing repairs.

Maasdam v Kirkpatrick, 214-1388; 243 NW 145

“New construction” (?) or “repair” (?). In the effort to correct the inadequacy of an established public drainage improvement, the construction of an entirely different and substituted system of drainage—one costing several times the cost of the inadequate drain, of materially increased capacity, differently located, affecting additional lands, and one which, in fact, is the result of an entirely new plan—must be deemed a “new construction” and not a “repair”. It follows that such “new construction” must be preceded by the establishment of an entirely new district.

Kelleher v Drainage Dist., 216-348; 249 NW 401

Erosion of banks and depositing of silt. The authority of the board of supervisors to keep a constructed drainage improvement “in repair” embraced the authority to contract for the placing of pipes through the waste banks, in order to prevent erosion of the banks and the depositing of silt in the ditch.

Board v Paine, 203-263; 210 NW 929

New settling basin as repair. The repair of a drainage system may include, inter alia, the providing of an entirely new settling basin in lieu of an old one which has become so silted as to cease to function.

Payne v Drainage Dist., 223-634; 272 NW 618

Changing course of water—effect. The fact that, in repairing a public ditch or drain, certain waters are passed to their final outlet differently than under the condition formerly existing, does not necessarily show an unallowable change in the plan of the improvement.

Payne v Drainage Dist., 223-634; 272 NW 618

Repairs may incidentally benefit adjacent road. Work on a drainage ditch which prevented erosion and prevented an overflow on reclaimed lands was "repair" work within the statutory authority of the board of supervisors to repair drainage ditches even tho there was an incidental benefit to bridges and to a township road at the side of the ditch.

Baldozier v Mayberry, 226-693; 285 NW 140

Evidence that purpose of repairs was to benefit ditch. Evidence of claims filed against a drainage district for labor and materials was a sufficient record of the board of supervisors' proceedings to show that the work was considered from the beginning as being repair work on the ditch.

Baldozier v Mayberry, 226-693; 285 NW 140

Assessments for repairs—levy without notice. If the cost of repairs to drainage ditches amounts to less than 10 percent of the original cost, the county board of supervisors may levy assessments for such repairs without giving notice.

Baldozier v Mayberry, 226-693; 285 NW 140

Notice and hearing not necessary.

Breiholtz v Board, 257 US 118

Taking of land—who entitled to notice. If, in the repair of a public ditch or drain, new land be taken for use by the public, the owners thereof only need be served with notice of eminent domain proceedings.

Payne v Drainage Dist., 223-634; 272 NW 618

Trespass not a "taking". A landowner may not say that his land was taken for public use because in cleaning out a public ditch as a repair thereof, the contractor wrongfully distributed the dirt beyond the right of way line of the ditch as originally constructed.

Payne v Drainage Dist., 223-634; 272 NW 618

Employment of counsel to defend assessment. County supervisors in their statutory capacity as representatives of a drainage district had right to employ attorneys and issue drainage warrants to them for services to be rendered in the trial and appeal of an action brought by property owners to enjoin collection of assessments levied to meet cost of work done for the district, and fact that elected drainage trustees took over management of the district before services were fully performed in supreme court did not render void the warrant previously issued for such service.

Kilpatrick v Mills County, 227-721; 288 NW 871

Supervisors representing drainage district. Acts of county supervisors concerning work done by them in their statutory capacity as representatives of a drainage district to maintain the efficiency and durability of a drainage system was presumed to have been done in good faith, and they had an absolute right on behalf of the district to stand behind the contract under which the work was done in the interest of the district.

Kilpatrick v Mills County, 227-721; 288 NW 871

7558 Assessment without notice.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 235

Repairing without notice. A statute is valid which authorizes the governing board of a duly established and constructed drainage improvement to clean out and repair the improvement, when necessary, and without notice to the property owners, to assess the cost of such repairs in the proportion in which the original cost was apportioned, as provided by said statute. 186 Iowa 1147 affirmed.

Breiholtz v Board, 257 US 118

Assessments for repairs — levy without notice. If the cost of repairs to drainage ditches amounts to less than 10 percent of the original cost, the county board of supervisors may levy assessments for such repairs without giving notice.

Baldozier v Mayberry, 226-693; 285 NW 140

7559 Assessment with notice.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 235; '38 AG Op 483

7560 Additional land.

Who entitled to notice. If in the repair of a public ditch or drain, new land be taken for use by the public, the owners thereof only need to be served with notice of condemnation proceedings.

Payne v Drainage Dist., 223-634; 272 NW 618

Trespass not taking. A landowner may not say that his land was taken for public use because in cleaning out a public ditch as a repair thereof, the contractor wrongfully distributed the dirt beyond the right of way line of the ditch as originally constructed.

Payne v Drainage Dist., 223-634; 272 NW 618

7561 Separate assessments for main ditch and laterals.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 45, 194, 283; '32 AG Op 274

Duty to follow existing classification. An assessment for the cost of repairing a lateral drain must be levied solely on the lands benefited by the lateral, as shown by the unchanged classification adopted when the lateral was originally constructed, even tho it be a fact that, in making the assessment for the original construction, the classification in question was unlawfully disregarded.

Seabury v Adams, 208-1332; 225 NW 264

7562 Reclassification required.

7563 Improvement of common outlet.

Common outlet—what constitutes. A natural watercourse, through the sinuous course of which several adjoining drainage districts separately run their main ditch, must be considered the common outlet of all of said districts notwithstanding the fact that said watercourse remains in its natural condition for a considerable distance between two of the upper districts.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Common outlet costs—mandatory duty. Principle reaffirmed that when the cost of cleaning out or enlarging the common outlet of two or more drainage districts has been properly apportioned among the several districts, a mandatory duty rests on the governing bodies of the several districts to make the proper levies in their respective counties.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Mandamus—remand in equity. Where, on appeal in an equitable action of mandamus to compel the levy of assessments to defray the cost of maintaining the common outlet of several drainage districts, it appears that the trial court erroneously denied relief as to one of two expenditures, and the record so blends and combines the allowable and unallowable expenditures that the appellate court is unable to determine the matter, a reversal and remand may be entered with order to the trial court to receive additional testimony and determine the amount of the allowable expenditure.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Common outlet—new right of way—notice. Statutory power "to enlarge, deepen or widen" a public drain in order to carry the combined waters of several districts using said drain as a common outlet, includes the power by necessary implication to acquire a new right of way for the purpose of effecting such enlargement, deepening or widening, and no one is entitled to notice of such acquisition or taking except the owner of the land taken, such taking being analogous to the taking of new right of way in case of repairs generally on constructed ditches.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Assessments—improvement of common outlet—absence of notice—effect. The statutes (§1989-a24, S., '13; 38 GA, ch. 332), authorizing certain improvements on the common outlet of two or more drainage districts, and an apportionment of the cost thereof among the several districts by means of assessments on the basis of water discharged by each district, are not unconstitutional because said statutes fail to provide for notice to interested parties prior to the making of said improvements, said improvements being analogous to repairs on ditches generally, subsequent to their construction.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Assessments—unconstitutional basis—burden of proof. The court will not declare a drainage statute unconstitutional because it fixes a ratio of water discharged as the basis for computing assessments between districts, when the record reveals the legal fact that the district does receive a benefit because of the improvement in question and is assessable therefor, and when there is no proof by complainant that the said statutory basis is not the equivalent of benefits.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Ward v Board, 214-1162; 241 NW 26

Assessment under repealed statute. An apportionment or assessment of drainage improvement costs under a statute which fixed "volume-of-water-discharged" as a basis, but which, before the improvement in question had been initiated, had been repealed and supplanted by a statute which fixed "benefits" as a basis, is prejudicially erroneous unless the prejudice is obviated by a showing that an apportionment or assessment on either basis would be the same.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Assessment—remodeling common outlet. The cost consequent on the cleaning out, enlarging, deepening, or widening of a public drain or ditch which receives the combined waters from two or more such districts must be assessed against the lands in all of said districts in the ratio provided by statute. (Holding under 38th GA, ch. 332.)

Mayne v Board, 208-987; 223 NW 904; 225 NW 953

Assessments—for common outlet—constitutionality. Whether statutes authorizing the cost of certain improvements on the common outlet of several districts to be apportioned by the board doing the work to each of said districts in the ratio of water discharged by each district, are unconstitutional because said statutes fail to provide interested parties, in districts other than the district embracing the common outlet, with notice of and opportunity to contest said apportionment, quare. But said interested parties may not complain of the absence of such notice and opportunity when they admit that the apportionment in question was correctly made in accordance with the said statutory ratio.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Assessments for common outlet—basis of benefits. Ample basis for assessing lands within a public drainage district for benefits in order to defray the cost of maintaining or enlarging an outlet which is the common outlet of said district and of other districts, is found in the fact that, by the statutory establishment of said district, the landowners within the district acquire an extraordinary right which they could not acquire under any other statute or have under the common law, to wit: The right to gather together the surface waters on said lands, and to cast them, through a materially shortened and straightened ditch, and in abnormally increased volume, and with abnormally increased velocity, upon the servient lands of lower districts; to the substantial damage of said latter lands.

Ward v Board, 214-1162; 241 NW 26

Assessments for after-accruing benefits. A statute authorizing certain improvements on the common outlet of several districts and the apportionment of the cost thereof among said several districts receiving the benefit of such improvements, is applicable to a district organized prior to the enactment of said statute, and is not unconstitutional in failing to provide for notice to the landowners of the latter district before said improvements are made.

Ward v Board, 214-1162; 241 NW 26

Judgment—nonparty and nonprivy. A judgment to the effect that drainage improvement costs (designed ultimately to be apportioned among several separate districts) must be assessed in accordance with a specified statute, is not conclusive in a subsequent proceeding against a district which was not a party to the first proceedings and which was not privy to any party to said first proceeding.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14
Ward v Board, 214-1162; 241 NW 26

Nonpresumption of benefits. There is no presumption that improvements within a drainage district confer any benefit on the lands within an adjoining district, even tho said improvements are made in the vicinity of the common outlet of both districts. It follows that no assessment, on account of such an improvement, can be legally made against another district in the absence of proof of benefit to such other district.

Mayne v Board, 215-221; 241 NW 29

Contribution—statute of limitation. The legal right of the governing body of a drainage district located in one county to compel a drainage district located in another county, thru its governing body, to contribute to the cost of cleaning out, deepening, enlarging, extending or straightening of the outlet which is common to both of said districts, accrues when the actual cost of said work is legally apportionable to the different districts; and action to enforce said right, unless instituted within five years after said accrual, is barred by the statute of limitation. And the making of an erroneous apportionment will not toll said statute.

Board v Board, 221-337; 264 NW 702

7567 Levy under original classification.

Common outlet costs—mandatory duty. Principle reaffirmed that when the cost of cleaning out or enlarging the common outlet of two or more drainage districts has been properly apportioned among the several districts, a mandatory duty rests on the governing bodies of the several districts to make the proper levies in their respective counties.

7569 Removal of obstructions.

7571 Outlet for lateral drains—specifications.

Statutory right to use. A landowner who has been assessed for the cost of a drainage improvement may construct, wholly upon his own land, ditches for the purpose of carrying his surface waters into a lateral which has been located upon his land, even tho said lateral may be overtaxed by said surface waters, to the damage of lower landowners.

Dullard v Phelan, 204-716; 215 NW 965

7576 Procedure.

Public improvements—estimated quantities as basis for contract—variation with specifications not fatal. In awarding a contract, the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of "unit prices", as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities, indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

Interstate Co. v City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

7585 Employment of counsel.

Implied power. Boards acting on behalf of public drainage districts have implied power to contract with attorneys to appear before the legislature and by proper means seek to induce the legislature to so legislate that a moral obligation on the part of the state with reference to the district will be fulfilled.

Kemble v Weaver, 200-1333; 206 NW 83

Illegal employment of attorneys, etc. The board of supervisors after refusing to establish a proposed drainage improvement because such establishment would not be conducive to public benefit, utility, health, convenience, and welfare, has no power to employ attorneys and an engineer to defend on appeal the action of the board. Such employment being a nullity, the resulting expense may not be taxed to the petitioners.

7589 Purchase at tax sale.

Inadequacy of bid. A bona fide sale of land at "scavenger" sale for delinquent tax will not be deemed void as against public policy because of inadequacy of the bid, in view of the fact (1) that the public authorities have a legal right to bid at said sale, and (2) that the treasurer is under a mandatory duty to sell.

Board v Stone, 212-660; 237 NW 478

7590 Tax deed—sale or lease.

Drainage district bondholder—permissible purchaser at tax sale. Bondholders of a drainage district, by virtue of their ownership of such bonds, do not have an interest in such drainage district land sold for taxes which will disqualify them from becoming purchasers at tax sale.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

7590.1 Purchase of tax certificate.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 256

Tax sale—nonduty of supervisors to purchase certificate. The statutory provision, that the board of supervisors or the drainage trustees "may" purchase an outstanding certificate evidencing a sale of land for the nonpayment of drainage assessments, simply invests the board or trustees with discretion so to purchase. No mandatory duty so to purchase in order to protect the bondholder is imposed, even tho the bondholder must look solely to assessments for payment of his bond.

7590.2 Terms of redemption.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 256; AG Op May 18, '39, May 19, '39

7590.7 Purchase by bondholder.

Tax sales—who may purchase. Under the statutes of this state any person may become a purchaser at tax sale, and the only statutory exception is found in §7261, C., '39.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Drainage district bondholder—permissible purchaser at tax sale. Bondholders of a drainage district, by virtue of their ownership of such bonds, do not have an interest in such drainage district land sold for taxes which will disqualify them from becoming purchasers at tax sale.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

7597 Drainage record.

Drainage record book admissible. In action to cancel tax sale certificate for an unpaid drainage assessment, to enjoin issuance of treasurer's deed therefor, and to further enjoin the collection of remaining assessments on ground that drainage district was not legally established because of defective notice and failure to file proof of service, the drainage record book kept by auditor showing compliance with statutory requirements was admissible, and failure to give correct name of mortgagee in proceeding to establish the district was not a jurisdictional defect where proposed ditch did not extend through or abut upon land covered by the mortgage. (§1989-a3, S., '13.)

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

Purchase by drainage district bondholder. The statute relating to fraudulent tax sales does not entitle the owner of the property to quiet title against holders of tax deeds on the grounds that tax deeds are void because purchasers are owners and holders of drainage bonds issued by drainage district in which land is situated without tender of taxes paid, when no claim is asserted that there is any fraud or collusion or conspiracy to defraud, and the question submitted is purely a legal question as to whether bondholders are under a legal disability to acquire title.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

CHAPTER 354

INTERCOUNTY LEVEE OR DRAINAGE DISTRICTS

7599 Petition and bond.

Jurisdictional facts. The filing of a petition and bond with the county auditor of each county is mandatory, in order to confer jurisdiction to establish an intercounty drainage improvement.

Glenn v County, 201-1033; 206 NW 802

7614 Levies—certificates and bonds.

Unallowable item of expense. The boards of supervisors in charge of an intercounty drainage improvement are wholly without jurisdiction to include in a deficiency assessment on all the lands within the district an item of expense which had been contracted in one county by the board of supervisors thereof in the employment of a fiscal agent to sell the bonds which had been issued in such particular county.

Haferman v District, 204-936; 216 NW 257

Impressing unpaid warrant on excess assessment—necessary parties. Where two counties, by contract between both boards of supervisors and the contractors, issued warrants for construction of an intercounty drain and one county had a balance remaining from its assessments after paying all its drainage warrants but the other county after exhausting all funds from its assessments still owed outstanding unpaid warrants, an action in equity by an assignee of one of the unpaid warrants of the latter county to impress a trust for the amount of his warrant on the excess balance of the assessment in the former county, cannot be maintained against the former county alone because the other unpaid warrant holders and the landowners who paid the excess assessment are necessary parties.

Straub v Board, 223-1099; 274 NW 84

7623 Transfer to district court.

Applicability of statute. This section has no application to an intracounty drain.

Glenn v County, 201-1033; 206 NW 802

7626 Law applicable.

Nonpermissible annexation. The power of joint boards of supervisors to annex lands to an existing intercounty drainage district does not extend to lands which are embraced in an existing intracounty drainage district.

Held v Board, 201-418; 205 NW 529

7649 Removal of trees from highway.

Improvement — special restrictive statutes not controlling general law. Statutes relating to hedges and drainage, which for such purposes restrict authorities as to molesting ornamental trees and windbreaks, have no application to the general law on improvements of secondary roads.

MANAGEMENT OF DRAINAGE OR LEVEE DISTRICTS BY TRUSTEES

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Feb. 28, '40

7674 Trustees authorized.

Drainage levies as ordinary taxes—treasurer as drainage district officer. A county treasurer is not an ex officio officer of a drainage district, so individuals paying drainage levies to him are classed as ordinary taxpayers, and as such cannot be compelled to pay such taxes twice.

Western Assn. v Barrett, 223-932; 274 NW 55

Trustees taking control of district. County supervisors in their statutory capacity as representatives of a drainage district had right to employ attorneys and issue drainage warrants to them for services to be rendered in the trial and appeal of an action brought by property owners to enjoin collection of assessments levied to meet cost of work done for the district, and fact that elected drainage trustees took over management of the district before services were fully performed in supreme court did not render void the warrant previously issued for such service.

7699 Organization.

7700 Power and duties of trustees.

Good faith presumption. Acts of county supervisors concerning work done by them in their statutory capacity as representatives of a drainage district to maintain the efficiency and durability of a drainage system was presumed to have been done in good faith, and they had an absolute right on behalf of the district to stand behind the contract under which the work was done in the interest of the district.

Kilpatrick v Mills County, 227-721; 288 NW 871

Trustees taking control of district—effect. County supervisors in their statutory capacity as representatives of a drainage district had right to employ attorneys and issue drainage warrants to them for services to be rendered in the trial and appeal of an action brought by property owners to enjoin collection of assessments levied to meet cost of work done for the district, and fact that elected drainage trustees took over management of the district before services were fully performed in supreme court did not render void the warrant previously issued for such service.

INDIVIDUAL DRAINAGE RIGHTS

7723 Appeal—notice.

Proper service. A statute which distinctly provides that a notice, e. g., a notice of appeal, shall be "served as an original notice", authorizes a service on the designated party by leaving a copy of said notice at the usual place of residence of said party with some member of his family over fourteen years of age—when said party is not present in the county at the time of said service. So held as to the service of a notice of appeal under §7133.

In re Sioux City Yards, 222-323; 268 NW 18

7736 Drainage in course of natural drainage.

Surface waters, city's power to regulate. See under §5752

Scope of section. This section has no reference to, nor does it purport to limit, the right of contract for private drainage.

Salinger v Winthouser, 200-755; 205 NW 309

Right of discharge. Principle asserted that a landowner may freely avail himself of the topography of his land, and may discharge his surface waters wherever gravitation naturally carries them, without further concern or obligation on his part.

Thompson v Board, 201-1099; 206 NW 624

Private drainage—pleadings. On the issue whether a dominant estate holder may maintain a tile drainage system on his land, and by means thereof discharge waters on the land of a servient estate holder, a plea should not be stricken which asserts, in substance, that the tile system in question was constructed at large cost, under an agreement with a former owner of the servient estate, and was open, visible, and notorious to all subsequent purchasers of the latter estate.

Salinger v Winthouser, 200-755; 205 NW 309

Relative rights of dominant and servient landowners. Principle reaffirmed that the owner of servient lands may not substantially interfere with the natural passage of water from dominant lands, but that, after such water has passed upon the servient lands, the owner of such latter lands may handle the water as he pleases, so long as no damage results to the dominant land.

Miller v Perkins, 204-782; 216 NW 27

Natural watercourses—duty to maintain. It is the duty of the owner of a servient estate to maintain free from obstruction the natural watercourses even tho they have no well defined banks.

Heinse v Thorborg, 210-435; 230 NW 881

Unlawful diversion on one's own land. The owner of a dominant estate may not legally divert material quantities of surface waters from one natural watercourse on his land to another natural watercourse on his land, and thereby ultimately cast such diverted waters upon a public highway at a point where they would not naturally flow, nor may the board of supervisors, in order to dispose of said diverted waters, legally construct and maintain a culvert in said highway at said point of diversion, and thereby cause said diverted waters to pass through the highway and upon the land of the servient estate (to its substantial damage), at places where it would not naturally flow.

Anton v Stanke, 217-166; 251 NW 153

Damages by surface waters—flowage increased by tile. Surface water collected by one landowner and drained by tile to the land of another's servient estate, where it is there conveyed by the latter's tile to the lands of a second servient estate, all through the natural course of drainage, is not such subject of damages as to entitle the third estate owner to equitable relief; especially when it is not shown that he was substantially damaged thereby.

Johannsen v Otto, 225-976; 282 NW 334

Artificial channel—maintenance on own land. A landowner cannot be enjoined from maintaining a ditch constructed wholly upon his own land and which expedites flow of water and discharges it at practically the same point where the water was discharged under its natural course.

Fennema v Nolin, (NOR); 212 NW 702

Diverting surface water—injunction. In equity action to enjoin defendant from diverting surface water from its alleged natural course onto lands of plaintiff, evidence held to show that plaintiff failed to sustain burden of establishing case by preponderance of evidence, in that he failed to establish that water from defendant's land, judged from the natural topography of said land, would flow onto the land of plaintiff.

Schemmel v Kramer, (NOR); 228 NW 561

Surface waters—dominant and servient estates—artificial ditch—injunction. The owner of the dominant estate has the right to have the surface waters accumulating thereon flow unobstructed in the usual and natural course of drainage upon the adjoining lower or subservient estate, but he may not create an artificial ditch on the servient estate, nor enjoin the servient owner from filling such artificial ditch.

Clark v Pierce, 224-1068; 277 NW 711

Obstruction of tile—damages. Evidence held insufficient to establish a claim for damages consequent on the obstruction of a drainage tile.

Besler v Greenwood, 202-1330; 212 NW 120

Enjoining obstructed tile. A landowner who lays his tile in the general course of natural drainage and discharges the same at his boundary line into a natural watercourse, may enjoin the adjoining landowner from so obstructing said natural watercourse as to impede the flow of water from the tile.

Besler v Greenwood, 202-1330; 212 NW 120

Obstructions—mandatory removal—limitations. A mandatory injunction requiring the removal of obstructions from a watercourse should be limited to removal of what the enjoined party placed therein.

Fennema v Nolin, (NOR); 212 NW 702

Obstructions—effect. Principle recognized that the appreciable raising of the water level of streams by dams constitutes an invasion of the rights of an injured landowner.

Whittington v City, 202-442; 210 NW 460

Indemnity for operation of dam. A contract which provides that one joint owner of a dam to whom it is turned over for joint mutual use shall hold the other joint owner harmless from any damages arising from the "operation" thereof imposes upon the operator of the dam, as between said joint owners, liability for damages to overflowed property owners, consequent on the general maintenance of the dam above the authorized level, even tho the other joint owner does reserve some control over the movable parts of said dam in order to avoid such damages.

Ellis Co. v Iowa Co., 204-1325; 217 NW 262

Injunction. Highway authorities may cause a property owner to be enjoined from maintaining on his premises a dam which obstructs the free flow of surface waters in their natural course across the highway.

Herman v Drew, 216-315; 249 NW 277

Levee construction—injunction denied—evidence. Evidence justified denying to landowner a decree for injunction against construction and maintenance by private persons of levee on adjoining property when landowner's claims were that levee would result in essential interference with flood waters or appreciably increase their volume or height along owner's property or, that levee would prevent any flood water overflowing the dike protecting landowner's property, from running back to river when flood waters receded.

Kellogg v Hottman, 226-1256; 286 NW 415

Repair of dike—estoppel. In an action to enjoin the repair of a dike originally constructed in connection with drainage system created jointly by adjoining landowners, including plaintiff's predecessor in title, and used with knowledge of plaintiff for over 20 years without objection, principles reaffirmed (1) that where there is proof of more than mere user, the statute providing that an easement cannot be established by proof of mere user alone does not apply, and (2) that the owner of a dominant estate may by consent, express or implied, estop himself from insisting upon adherence to the principle that the owner of a servient estate has no right to interfere with the natural flow of water in a well-defined course so as to cast it back upon the dominant estate.

Dodd v Aitken, 227-679; 288 NW 898

Interference with surface drainage. The maintenance of a dike along lands for the purpose of warding off backwater from a river may not be enjoined by an adjoining landowner unless he shows (1) that his lands constitute the dominant estate and the diked lands the servient estate, and (2) that the dike materially and substantially interferes with surface drainage; and high lands which are last covered by backwater from the river are not servient to adjoining low lands which are first covered by such backwater.

Downey v Phelps, 201-826; 208 NW 499

Perpetuation of unlawful drainage by bridge. The board of supervisors may not, by the construction and maintenance of a culvert in the public highway, supplement, continue and perpetuate an unlawful and material diversion of surface waters by a dominant estate holder, all to the substantial damage of the servient estate holder.

Anton v Stanke, 217-166; 251 NW 153

Drainage of surface waters. Road authorities will not be held estopped from carrying surface waters across a public highway in the course of natural drainage because of the fact that for more than ten years they have unsuccessfully attempted to divert such waters from said natural course of drainage, the landowner affected not having changed his position because of such unsuccessful efforts.

Schwartz v County, 208-1229; 227 NW 91

Damages—original or continuing. Where a bridge which spanned a natural watercourse or drain across a public highway was removed and replaced by the public authorities with a solid and permanent earth embankment, the injury or hurt to nearby lands, from flood water consequent on said change in the highway, must be deemed original damages which mature upon completion of the embankment—or at least on the occurrence of substantial damages consequent on the change. It follows that the maintenance of said embankment may not be legally questioned by action commenced after the lapse of five years from the maturity of said damages.

Thomas v Cedar Falls, 223-229; 272 NW 79

Nonestoppel to abandon artificial course of drainage. A railway company which, for a great number of years, has unsuccessfully attempted to drain surface waters along the line of its right of way (which was slightly counter to the natural course of drainage) is under no legal obligation to continue to maintain such unsuccessful drain, but may abandon it, and conduct such waters under its tracks in the natural course of drainage.

Hinkle v Railway, 208-1366; 227 NW 419

Overflow damage. In landowner's action against railroad for damage to crops, resulting from overflow, where record showed plans and specifications for drainage ditch did not require railroad to lengthen bridge span, railroad's full compliance with requirements barred recovery.

Kellogg v Railway, (NOR); 239 NW 557

Natural flow—contract to change. Adjoining landowners, as between themselves, may validly contract for ditches and dikes which will free the servient estate from the burden of natural drainage, and the right, if not abandoned, to have such ditches and dikes maintained will pass to subsequent owners of the land. But he who alleges such contract must establish the same by clear and satisfactory evidence.

Young v Scott, 216-1253; 250 NW 484

Increased flowage consequent on nonnegligent execution of expert plans. Damages to a property owner from an increased flowage of water consequent on the nonnegligent execution of concededly expert plans for paving and surface-water intakes therein, and for curbing, is damnum absque injuria; especially when the damage occurs at the converging point of natural watercourses.

Cole v City, 212-1270; 232 NW 800

Eminent domain—compensation—allowable elements. In the condemnation of a portion of a farm in order to create a reservoir on a natural stream for waterworks purposes, the following elements may be taken into consideration in fixing the value of the remaining portion of the farm immediately after the condemnation, to wit:

1. The extent to which the uncondemned land will be detrimentally affected by the percolation of water;

2. The detrimental effect on livestock of hunting and shooting on the condemned land, it appearing that the municipality had authorized such acts;

3. The limitation which will to a reasonable certainty be placed upon the landowner's former right to cast drainage from feed lots directly into said stream.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 213-1187; 240 NW 628

Assessments for common outlet—basis of benefits. Ample basis for assessing lands within a public drainage district for benefits in order to defray the cost of maintaining or enlarging an outlet which is the common outlet of said district and of other districts, is found in the fact that, by the statutory establishment of said district, the landowners within the district acquired an extraordinary right which they could not acquire under any other statute or have under the common law, to wit: The right to gather together the surface waters on said lands, and to cast them, through a materially shortened and straightened ditch, and in abnormally increased volume, and with abnormally increased velocity, upon the servient lands of lower districts, to the substantial damage of said latter lands.

Ward v Board, 214-1162; 241 NW 26

Laterals—statutory right to use. A landowner who has been assessed for the cost of a drainage improvement may construct, wholly upon his own land, ditches for the purpose of carrying his surface waters into a lateral which has been located upon his land, even tho said lateral may be overtaxed by said surface waters to the damage of lower landowners.

Dullard v Phelan, 204-716; 215 NW 965

Creation by ancient grantors—effect. An owner of land may not, except with the consent of all interested parties, question a visible and permanent drainage easement imposed upon the land by his ancient grantors.

Ehler v Stier, 205-678; 216 NW 637

Pollution—limitation on right. Principle recognized that the right of a riparian owner to cast refuse into a natural stream may be quite materially limited after a portion of his land has been condemned for a public purpose.

Wheatley v City, 213-1187; 240 NW 628

Surface waters—damages—evidence. Evidence held to justify the court in submitting to the jury the question of damages resulting from the seepage of surface waters into the wall of a building.

Dravis v Sawyer, 218-742; 254 NW 920

7737 Drainage connection with highway.

Obstructions. Principle reaffirmed that a property owner may not legally place obstructions within a public highway and thereby interfere with the drainage of surface waters across such highway.

Scott v Price Bros. Co., 207-191; 217 NW 75

7787 Oath—assessment of damages—costs.

Indemnity for operation of dam. A contract which provides that one joint owner of a dam to whom it is turned over for joint mutual use, shall hold the other joint owner harmless from any damages arising from the "operation" thereof, imposes upon the operator of the dam, as between said joint owners, liability for damages to overflowed property owners consequent on the general maintenance of the dam above the authorized level, even tho the other joint owner does reserve some control over the movable parts of said dam, in order to avoid such damages.

Conveyance in lieu of condemnation. A deed given to a railroad for a strip of land to be used as a right of way, and deeds of a like kind, given by the landowner when condemnation may be imminent if he refuses to convey, should be given such liberal construction as will effectuate the intention of the parties and fully protect the rights of the grantor and his assigns.

CHAPTER 365

EMINENT DOMAIN

7803 Exercise of power by state.

Discussion. See 17 ILR 374—Public building construction

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 667

Condemnation by state highway commission. The state highway commission has no authority to condemn for primary road purposes the ornamental grounds or orchard of an owner, without his consent.

Hoover v Highway Com., 207-56; 222 NW 438

Construction of wharf—paramount right of state. The construction by the state of a wharf below high watermark on a navigable lake (to the bed of which the state has title), in aid of navigation, and without compensation to the riparian owner, is but the exercise of a right and the execution of a trust which is paramount to any right of ingress and egress of said riparian owner.

Peck v Const. Co., 216-519; 245 NW 131; 89 ALR 1132

Compensation — abutting tract — connected farming operation—instruction. In a condemnation action where an 80-acre tract abutting and farmed in connection with, but only partly owned by the owner of the farm involved in condemnation, an instruction that no damage to the abutting 80 acres could be assessed, but that the jury could consider the farming control advantage of the two tracts, while not approved, held not prejudicial.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

Liberal condemnation verdict — supporting evidence—finality on appeal. A verdict of $4,000, in condemnation of a small tract of land, including the buildings, improvements, and shade trees, for purpose of rounding a highway corner, while perhaps liberal, will not, when evidence exists to support it, be interfered with on appeal as excessive.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

Compensation—instructions—jurors' experience. An instruction in eminent domain proceedings that jurors have the right to weigh the testimony of experts as to values in the light of their own experience is not subject to the vice that they were told to substitute their own knowledge of values.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

Instructions—condemnation—highway used for lawful purpose—unsupported issue. A requested instruction to the effect that in arriving at compensation the law presumes that the highway to be built would be used for a lawful purpose is properly refused when there is no claim that the highway would be unlawfully used.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

Necessity for condemnation — instructions. In the absence of an issue thereon, there is no occasion whatever for the court, in eminent domain proceedings, to instruct on the subject of the necessity for such condemnation.

Hoelt v State, 221-694; 266 NW 571; 104 ALR 1008

Highway construction — interference with easement. When a highway was established through a city, taking the larger part of land over which the plaintiff had been granted an easement, a property right belonging to the plaintiff was thereby destroyed, and when she was compelled to sell the property at a loss because of its impaired value, she was entitled to a writ of mandamus against the highway commission to compel the assessment of the damages sustained.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Conveyances in lieu of condemnation. A deed given to a railroad for a strip of land to be used as a right of way, and deeds of a like kind, given by the landowner when condemnation may be imminent if he refuses to convey, should be given such liberal construction as will effectuate the intention of the parties and fully protect the rights of the grantor and his assigns.

7806 Right conferred.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 100

Public property taken for public use. The public property of the state may, under proper circumstances, constitute private property within the meaning of the federal constitution prohibiting the taking of private property for public use without just compensation; and it does not matter that the taking is by one exclusively engaged in interstate commerce. Whether the mere "use" of such public property is "a taking", quare.

State v Pipe Line, 216-436; 249 NW 366

Highway construction — interference with easement. When a highway was established through a city, taking the larger part of land over which the plaintiff had been granted an easement, a property right belonging to the plaintiff was thereby destroyed, and when she was compelled to sell the property at a loss because of its impaired value, she was entitled to a writ of mandamus against the highway commission to compel the assessment of the damages sustained.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Keokuk County v Reinier, 227-499; 288 NW 676

7807 Right to purchase.

Compromise settlement. The acceptance by a property owner, after condemnation and assessment, and while the amount of damages was in controversy, and before the public authorities had taken possession of the land, of an amount less than had been assessed, and the execution of a deed to the right of way, in which deed the amount received is itemized as to (1) right of way, (2) fences, and (3) damages, constitute a full settlement, and preclude recovery of the difference between the assessment and the amount so accepted.

7808 Railways.

ANALYSIS

I CONDEMNATION OR ACQUISITION IN GENERAL

II RIGHTS ACQUIRED AND NATURE THEREOF

I CONDEMNATION OR ACQUISITION IN GENERAL

Deed—effect as to subsequently laid out streets. An ordinary railroad right of way deed simply grants to the railroad an easement, and works no impediment to the vesting in a municipality, subject to such easement, of streets subsequently laid out across such right of way; and especially so when the railroad company acquiesces in and recognizes the statutory dedication to the public.

Ackley v Elec. Co., 206-533; 220 NW 315

II RIGHTS ACQUIRED AND NATURE THEREOF

Nonreversion of right of way obtained by deed. A railway right of way obtained from the owner by full warranty deed and not by condemnation does not, by nonuser for the statutory eight years, revert to the owner of the tract from which such right of way was taken.

Montgomery County v Case, 212-73; 232 NW 150

Conveyances in lieu of condemnation. A deed given to a railroad for a strip of land to be used as a right of way, and deeds of a like kind, given by the landowner when condemnation may be imminent if he refuses to convey, should be given such liberal construction as will effectuate the intention of the parties and fully protect the rights of the grantor and his assigns.

PROCEDURE UNDER POWER OF EMINENT DOMAIN

7822 Procedure provided.

ANALYSIS

- I CONDEMNATION IN GENERAL
- II PROPERTY SUBJECT TO CONDEMNATION
- III PROCEDURE IN GENERAL

I CONDEMNATION IN GENERAL

Power not subject of contract. A municipal arm of the government may not deprive itself by contract,—even on a valid consideration,—of the right of eminent domain duly vested in it.

Herman v Board, 200-1116; 206 NW 35

Inadvertent but harmless misdescription of land. Inadvertently omitting from instructions, in eminent domain proceedings, a minor portion of the land involved, does not constitute reversible error when otherwise the entire integral tract was consistently and persistently treated throughout the trial as the land in controversy, and when it is obvious that the jury never discovered the inadvertent error of the court.

Sherwood v Reynolds, 213-539; 239 NW 137

Materially destroying access to property. A substantial interference by a city with access to property by means of a public street constitutes a taking of private property for public use, even tho no part of the physical property of the property owner is taken, and the city must respond in damages for such taking.

Nalon v City, 216-1041; 250 NW 166

Trespass not a "taking". A landowner may not say that his land was taken for public use because in cleaning out a public ditch as a repair thereof, the contractor wrongfully distributed the dirt beyond the right of way line of the ditch as originally constructed.

Payne v Drainage Dist., 223-634; 272 NW 618

II PROPERTY SUBJECT TO CONDEMNATION

Highway establishment—removal of building. A "small" privy is not a "substantial, permanent, and valuable building" such as to render property exempt from condemnation.

Junkin v Knapp, 205-184; 217 NW 834

III PROCEDURE IN GENERAL

Appeal—transfer to equity. In a condemnation proceeding where two separate tracts of land under separate ownerships were treated as being jointly owned, and where, on appeal from a lump sum award covering both tracts, the owners in one count of their petition sought dismissal of the condemnation proceeding, and, where issues of waiver and estoppel as to such irregularity were joined, it was proper to transfer said count to equity so that such issues could be determined in advance of the trial to a jury on question of damages.

Newby v City, 227-382; 288 NW 399

7824 Application for condemnation.

Joint application. A joint application by different owners is allowable when the municipality seeking to condemn does not object to such joinder on appeal. (Under §1999, C., '97.)

Longstreet v Town, 200-723; 205 NW 343

"Owner" defined. The purchaser of land under an executory contract is an "owner".

Millard v Mfg. Co., 200-1063; 205 NW 979

Person entitled to compensation—burden to show title. A party who claims title to land and consequently the right to compensation for its appropriation to a public use, must establish good title in himself irrespective of the weakness of the title of the appropriating municipality which also claims title to the land.

Montgomery County v Case, 212-73; 232 NW 150

7825 Commission to assess damages.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 184

Protection of right—injunction. Injunction will lie to enjoin the construction of a dam and the consequent taking by overflow of private property for the public use, until the damages are paid; and this is true even tho the taker is solvent.

Scott v Price Bros., 207-191; 217 NW 75

Compensation—excessive verdict. Evidence held to reveal a grossly excessive verdict on a condemnation for highway purposes.

Jenkins v Highway Com., 208-620; 224 NW 66

7829 Notice of assessment.

Taking of new land—who entitled to notice. If in the repair of a public ditch or drain, new land be taken for use by the public, the owners thereof only need to be served with notice of condemnation proceedings.

Payne v Drainage Dist., 223-634; 272 NW 618

7830 Form of notice.

Timely claim. A landowner who, in eminent domain proceeding for a public road, is entitled to a specified time after notice in which to file his claim for damages, and who appears in said proceeding in response to a fatally defective notice, is entitled to said specified time after he so appears, in which to file his claim for damages.

I ASSESSMENTS IN GENERAL

Governmental agency to be treated as individual.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Assessment rolls as evidence. In eminent domain proceedings, the duly signed assessment roll of the property in question is admissible for the purpose of showing the assessed value.

Duggan v State, 214-230; 242 NW 98

Presumptively lawful use—instructions. Damages in eminent domain proceedings for a public road must be assessed on the presumption that the highway will be lawfully used, and the court should, on request, so instruct.

Duggan v State, 214-230; 242 NW 98

Sworn assessment roll competent for impeaching purposes.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Duggan v State, 214-230; 242 NW 98

II DAMAGES IN GENERAL

Location of crossing. Whether an underground crossing placed in a grade was placed at the only feasible point is quite immaterial on the issue of damages in condemnation proceedings.

Kemmerer v Highway Com., 214-136; 241 NW 693

Inadequacy of crossing. In eminent domain proceedings for a public highway, the inadequacy of an underground cattleway placed in the grade, by the condemnor, may be shown.

Kemmerer v Highway Com., 214-136; 241 NW 693

Instructions in re speculative damages. Instructions in eminent domain proceedings held not subject to the vice that they emphasized evidence tending to prove speculative damages.

Kemmerer v Highway Com., 214-136; 241 NW 693

Finality of award. An award of damages in condemnation proceedings is conclusively presumed to include all damages, present and future, which may be sustained by reason of the proper use of the condemned land.

Wheatley v City, 213-1187; 240 NW 628

Improper addition of interest. It is improper for the court in the trial of an appeal in eminent domain proceedings to direct the jury to add to their verdict interest from the date of the taking, such direction being an assumption by the court that the jury would return a verdict for damages in excess of the damages awarded by the condemnation jury.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Compensation—dual methods to determine. Damages (or compensation) for land condemned under eminent domain, and belonging to the same person, are determinable:

1. When the condemnation is from one distinct tract, on the basis of the difference between the reasonable market value of said entire tract immediately before and after the condemnation.

2. When the condemnation is from two (the contiguous) tracts, each of which is used independently of the other and for a purpose not common to both, on the same basis except that the damage to each independent tract is determined separately.

Hoelt v State, 221-694; 266 NW 571; 104 ALR 1008

Nonexcessive verdict. Verdict of $5,733 in eminent domain proceedings held nonexcessive.

Sherwood v Reynolds, 213-539; 239 NW 137

Compensation—nonexcessive verdict. In a condemnation proceeding where the evidence shows a strip of land containing 8.12 acres lying parallel and adjacent to a railroad running diagonally across a quarter section of land is taken for highway right of way and which strip includes a well, part of a feed lot, and other improvements, a verdict for damages in the sum of $4,750 cannot be held excessive by the supreme court without substituting its judgment for that of the jury.

Moran v Highway Com., 223-936; 274 NW 59

Taking gravel—injury to mortgage security—measure of damages. A mortgagee, being a lienholder, may not maintain trespass against third persons but must sue for injury to his security, and in taking gravel from mortgaged premises the measure of damages is not the value of the gravel taken but the difference in the value of the premises before and after the taking.

Bates v Humboldt County, 224-841; 277 NW 715

Assessment of damage. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire ground for highway purposes, the question of damages to be assessed for the land appropriated is peculiarly one for the jury.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Verdict not excessive for ground and ornamental trees. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire a strip of ground for highway purposes 17 feet wide on each side of an existing highway which divided an 80-acre farm, where the land appropriated comprised 1.2 acres and included 19 trees in front of plaintiff's home, some of them being very large, hardwood, slow growing, ornamental trees, planted in connection with carefully planned landscaping, held, verdict of $2,000 was not excessive.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Proceedings to take property—power of court. The verdict of a common-law jury in eminent domain proceedings is subject to the same review by the court for inadequacy or excessiveness as other verdicts in other proceedings. Record in highway condemnation proceedings reviewed, and held verdict so grossly excessive as to evidence passion and prejudice.

Campbell v Highway Com., 222-544; 269 NW 20

Highway construction—interference with easement. When a highway was established through a city, taking the larger part of land over which the plaintiff had been granted an easement, a property right belonging to the plaintiff was thereby destroyed, and when she was compelled to sell the property at a loss because of its impaired value, she was entitled to a writ of mandamus against the highway commission to compel the assessment of the damages sustained.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

III RECOVERABLE ELEMENTS OF DAMAGES

Discussion. See 12 ILR 286—Attorney fees as just compensation

Compensation—allowable elements. In the condemnation of a portion of a farm in order to create a reservoir on a natural stream for waterworks purposes, the following elements may be taken into consideration in fixing the value of the remaining portion of the farm immediately after the condemnation, to wit:

1. The extent to which the uncondemned land will be detrimentally affected by the percolation of water.

2. The detrimental effect on livestock of hunting and shooting on the condemned land, it appearing that the municipality had authorized such acts.

3. The limitation which will to a reasonable certainty be placed upon the landowner's former right to cast drainage from feed lots directly into said stream.

Wheatley v City, 213-1187; 240 NW 628

"Inconvenience" as element. The inconvenience of driving stock across a highway, consequent of the condemnation of said highway through the farm, is an element which should be given due consideration in determining the market value of the farm as a whole immediately following the condemnation.

Cory v State, 214-222; 242 NW 100

Disturbance of peace and quiet as element. In condemnation proceeding to acquire ground for highway purposes where trees taken from plaintiff were left standing along highway, testimony showing that peace and quiet of plaintiff's home was disturbed by passers-by who stopped under trees, was not incompetent on the ground that it was not a proper element of damage, it being a well-settled rule that the landowner may show all detrimental elements affecting value and that he may also show the condition the property would be in after the condemned strip had been appropriated and used for the purposes for which it was taken.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Cost of driving stock across highway. While a claimant for damages in eminent domain proceedings for the widening of an existing highway may show the fact, if it be a fact, that an additional burden will be cast on the land in the difficulty of driving stock across the highway, yet he may not show a definite sum which this additional burden will annually entail as cost in the future.

Randell v Highway Com., 214-1; 241 NW 685

Cost of removing weeds from highway. While a claimant for damages in eminent domain proceedings for the condemnation of a highway may show the fact that there will be an additional burden on the land arising from the statutory duty to destroy the weeds on the highway, yet he may not show, without any foundation therefor, a definite sum which in his opinion represents the cost of removing such weeds from the highway in the future.

Randell v Highway Com., 214-1; 241 NW 685

Verdict not excessive for ground and ornamental trees. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire a strip of ground for highway purposes 17 feet wide on each side of an existing highway which divided an 80-acre farm, where the land appropriated comprised 1.2 acres and included 19 trees in front of plaintiff's home, some of them being very large, hardwood, slow growing, ornamental trees, planted in connection with carefully planned landscaping, held, verdict of $2,000 was not excessive.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

IV NONRECOVERABLE ELEMENTS OF DAMAGES

Noncontiguous tracts as one farm. In the condemnation of land for highway purposes, the record may be such as to present a jury question whether noncontiguous tracts are being used as one farm, so that the damages resulted to it as an entirety, or whether the land was in such separate tracts that the damages should be assessed to each tract separately.

Paulson v Highway Com., 210-651; 231 NW 296

Diversely owned tracts. In condemnation of land for a right of way solely through land owned by two parties jointly, the damages must not be computed on the basis of treating as one farm said jointly owned tract and another adjoining tract owned by one of the parties, individually, even tho both of said tracts are then, and for a number of years have been, leased and used as one farm.

Duggan v State, 214-230; 242 NW 98

Evidence of amount and cost of fencing incompetent. In establishing the damages for the taking of part of a farm for highway purposes, evidence of the amount of fencing which the landowner claims will be necessary because of the taking and the original and maintenance cost of such fencing is incompetent.

Dean v State, 211-143; 233 NW 36

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Randell v Highway Com., 214-1; 241 NW 685

Cost of removing and rebuilding existing fence. A claimant for damages in eminent domain proceedings for a public highway may show the reasonable cost of removing and rebuilding a definitely described existing fence when such removal and rebuilding is made necessary by the condemnation; but the jury must be distinctly told that the evidence of such costs is in the case solely (1) to indicate, if it does, that the damages to the land are substantial, and (2) to assist, if it will, in explaining, supporting, or denying the estimates made of the value of the property, and not to be added to the damages otherwise found by the jury as the difference between the value of the farm as a whole before and after the condemnation.

Randell v Highway Com., 214-1; 241 NW 685

Destruction of, or necessity to build, fences. Instructions to the effect that the destruction of fences, and the necessity to build new fences consequent on eminent domain proceedings are proper elements to be considered in determining the market value of the remaining farm, are not subject to the construction that the jury is thereby given the right to add to the otherwise determined market value some sum as compensation for the destruction of fences and for the necessity to build new fences.

Cory v State, 214-222; 242 NW 100

Inconvenience resulting from taking—unallowable damages. The jury must be instructed, on request, in eminent domain proceedings for highway purposes, that damages must not be allowed on the theory that the highway through the landowner's farm will be used illegally, with resulting inconvenience to the landowner; likewise an instruction to the effect that the jury must assess the damages on the presumption that the use would be lawful.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

V MEASURE OF DAMAGES

Excessive award. An award of damages in condemnation proceedings will not be disturbed on appeal from the trial court unless such award is so extravagant as to be wholly unfair and unreasonable.

Longstreet v Town, 200-723; 205 NW 343

Wheatley v City, 213-1187; 240 NW 628

Excessive allowance — evidence. Evidence held insufficient to justify a holding that an allowance of $11,755 as damages for land taken for highway purposes was the result of passion and prejudice.

Shimerda v Highway Com., 210-154; 230 NW 335

Compromise settlement. The acceptance by a property owner, after condemnation and assessment, and while the amount of damages was in controversy, and before the public authorities had taken possession of the land, of an amount less than had been assessed, and the execution of a deed to the right of way, in which deed the amount received is itemized as to (1) right of way, (2) fences, and (3) damages, constitute a full settlement, and preclude recovery of the difference between the assessment and the amount so accepted.

Burrow v County, 200-787; 205 NW 460

Verdict—conclusiveness. In condemnation proceedings, a verdict for damages which is fairly within the range of the legitimate testimony is ordinarily conclusive on the appellate court, even tho the amount is concededly larger than a court itself would have granted, and even tho it appears that the jury substantially split the difference between the witnesses in their estimate of damages.

Cory v State, 214-222; 242 NW 100

Measure of damages. The measure of damages for injury resulting from the exercise of the right of eminent domain is the difference in value of the land as a whole immediately before and immediately after the injury occurs.

Millard v Mfg. Co., 200-1063; 205 NW 979

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Wheatley v City, 213-1187; 240 NW 628

Condemnation—measure of damages. Principle reaffirmed that the measure of damages for land condemned for right of way for an electric power line is the difference in the market value of the tract from which the land is taken, before and after the condemnation.

Evans v Iowa Co., 205-283; 218 NW 66

Compensation—measure of. The recoverable measure of damages to a farm, consequent on the condemnation of a highway right of way therethrough, is the difference in value of the farm as a whole before condemnation and the value immediately thereafter. It follows that the trial court on appeal cannot limit the jury solely to a consideration of the items of damages specifically alleged by the landowner in the petition filed under §7841-c1, C., '35 [§7841.1, C., '39].

Maxwell v Highway Com., 223-159; 271 NW 883; 118 ALR 862

Taking gravel—injury to mortgage security—measure of damages. A mortgagee, being a lienholder, may not maintain trespass against third persons but must sue for injury to his security, and in taking gravel from mortgaged premises the measure of damages is not the value of the gravel taken but the difference in the value of the premises before and after the taking.

Bates v Humboldt Co., 224-841; 277 NW 715

Excessive condemnation award—jury verdict—reviewability. Generally the question of compensation in an eminent domain case is for the jury, but the supreme court will not hesitate to reverse where the record clearly shows excessive damages.

Luthi v Highway Com., 224-678; 276 NW 586

Liberal condemnation verdict—supporting evidence—finality on appeal. A verdict of $4,000, in condemnation of a small tract of land, including the buildings, improvements, and shade trees, for purpose of rounding a highway corner, while perhaps liberal, will not, when evidence exists to support it, be interfered with on appeal as excessive.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

Disturbance of peace and quiet as element. In condemnation proceedings to acquire ground for highway purposes where trees taken from plaintiff were left standing along highway, testimony showing that peace and quiet of plaintiff's home was disturbed by passers-by who stopped under trees, was not incompetent on the ground that it was not a proper element of damage, it being a well settled rule that the landowner may show all detrimental elements affecting value and that he may also show the condition the property would be in after the condemned strip had been appropriated and used for the purposes for which it was taken.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Advantage not considered. In condemnation proceeding where land was taken for highway purposes, under the principle that advantage resulting from improvement of property taken by condemnation may not be taken into consideration in determining amount of plaintiff's damage, the defendant had no right to plead and prove matters relating to the manner of construction of the improvement which would tend to ameliorate damages.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Jury considering cost of bridges. Instruction on measure of damages for constructing drainage ditch, which instruction permitted jury to consider cost of bridges where such ditch bisects claimant's land, was not erroneous, and an allowance of $1,050 damages from construction of such ditch to a farm of 55 acres held not excessive.

Kerr v Tysseling, (NOR); 239 NW 233

Highway construction—interference with easement. When a highway was established through a city, taking the larger part of land over which the plaintiff had been granted an easement, a property right belonging to the plaintiff was thereby destroyed, and when she was compelled to sell the property at a loss because of its impaired value, she was entitled to a writ of mandamus against the highway commission to compel the assessment of the damages sustained.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

VI EVIDENCE AND WITNESSES IN GENERAL

Conflicting evidence. The depreciation in the value of a farm as a whole because of the condemnation of a right of way thereover is necessarily a matter of estimation, and a verdict on supporting and conflicting testimony will not be disturbed. The amount of land taken is by no means the sole criterion.

Besco v Mahaska County, 200-684; 205 NW 459

Jurisdiction—insufficient showing of estoppel. Record reviewed, in eminent domain proceedings, and held insufficient to show that the county, through its board of supervisors, was estopped to assert that it had jurisdiction over an objector.

Witham v Union County, 202-557; 210 NW 535

Accessibility of farm to market. The defendant in eminent domain proceedings has the legal right, on the cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses as to value, to show the distance of plaintiff's farm from the market and the kind of roads leading to such market.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

VI EVIDENCE AND WITNESSES IN GENERAL—concluded

Evidence—distance to markets. In a condemnation action, evidence as to distance from market centers and condition of old roads not admissible in determining damages.

Moran v Highway Com., 223-936; 274 NW 59

Evidence of value of separate parcels of single farm incompetent. A landowner will not be permitted, when part of his farm is being taken for highway purposes, to prove the value of different parcels of his farm before and after the taking.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Evidence—benefits to mitigate damages. Where a strip of land lying parallel and adjacent to a railroad diagonally across a quarter section of land was condemned for highway right of way purposes, it was not error to exclude evidence of the beneficial final condition of the construction with reference to culverts, drains and water pipes from a well, offered for the purpose of mitigating damages, especially when such evidence proves only a favor of uncertain tenure granted to the landowner rather than a matter of absolute right.

Moran v Highway Com., 223-936; 274 NW 59

Examination of witness—form of question—valuation without benefits. In a condemnation proceeding, question propounded by landowner as to valuation immediately after condemnation, without referring in the question to benefits, is not prejudicial to condemnor and not erroneous, especially when court states correct measure of damages.

Moran v Highway Com., 223-936; 274 NW 59

Evidence—similar land sale prices. In a condemnation action, excluding evidence from one witness as to similar land sale prices but admitting the like evidence from another witness held not reversible error where both had testified as to values generally.

Moran v Highway Com., 223-936; 274 NW 59

Evidence—driving stock across highway. In condemnation proceeding to acquire ground to widen highway which divided plaintiff's farm, a hypothetical question asked of one witness as to whether the additional trouble experienced by plaintiff in driving his stock across highway, since it had been widened, would affect the values of the farm—although being a question of doubtful propriety, was related to a matter so simple and self-evident that the opinion of the witness could add no force or prejudicial effect thereto.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Witnesses—need for fence. In a condemnation action, denial of cross-examination of landowner by condemnor as to necessity of fencing held not reversible error when plat of property already in evidence settled question.

Moran v Highway Com., 223-936; 274 NW 59

Assessment as commissioner's personal judgment—cross-examination. In a condemnation action, permitting landowner to cross-examine a condemnation commissioner regarding the sworn assessment of damages as expressing his personal judgment held not error. (Distinguishing Winkelmans v Des Moines N.W. Ry. Co., 62 Iowa 11.)

Moran v Highway Com., 223-936; 274 NW 59

7839 Appeal.

ANALYSIS

- I APPEAL IN GENERAL
- II PARTIES TO APPEAL
- III NOTICE

I APPEAL IN GENERAL

Consolidation of appeals. Separate appeals to the district court in eminent domain proceedings relative to the same award are properly consolidated.

Cenco v Northwestern Co., 203-1390; 214 NW 545

Appeal—transfer to equity. In a condemnation proceeding where two separate tracts of land under separate ownerships were treated as being jointly owned, and where, on appeal from a lump sum award covering both tracts, the owners in one count of their petition sought dismissal of the condemnation proceeding, and, where issues of waiver and estoppel as to such irregularity were joined, it was proper to transfer said count to equity so that such issues could be determined in advance of the trial to a jury on question of damages.

Newby v City, 227-382; 288 NW 399

II PARTIES TO APPEAL

Defendants—eminent domain—bringing in necessary parties. In eminent domain proceedings on appeal from the award of the sheriff's jury, the court may permit the appellant landowner to amend, and bring in, and join equitable issue of ownership as to a portion of the property involved, with a stranger to the proceedings, and to try out such issue prior to trying out the issue of damages.

McCall v Highway Com., 217-1054; 252 NW 546

III NOTICE

Sufficiency of notice. A written notice of appeal from an award in eminent domain proceedings is sufficient, under this section, if it is addressed to the condemnor and to the sheriff and simply states that the landowner has taken an appeal to the district court of the county in question from the award of the appraisers. The particularity required in an original notice of suit is by no means required.

O'Neal v State, 214-977; 243 NW 601

7841 Appeals—how docketed and tried.

Filing petition not jurisdictional. On appeal from an award in condemnation proceedings, the filing of a petition in the appellate court, at the time required by statute, is not jurisdictional.

Wilcox & Sons v Omaha, 220-1131; 264 NW 5

Erroneous docketing—effect. An applicant for condemnation of realty who erroneously causes its appeal from the award of the sheriff's jury to be docketed in the name of itself as plaintiff, and in the name of the landowner as defendant, and files petition, and thereby induces the landowner to file answer thereto, is in no position, after causing its own error to be corrected by a proper redocketing, either to demand the entry of judgment in accordance with its own offer to confess judgment, or to object to the action of the court in granting to the landowner (the proper plaintiff) a continuance over the term in which to file a proper petition.

Wilcox & Sons v Omaha, 220-1131; 264 NW 5

Appeal—transfer to equity. In a condemnation proceeding where two separate tracts of land under separate ownerships were treated as being jointly owned, and where, on appeal from a lump sum award covering both tracts, the owners in one count of their petition sought dismissal of the condemnation proceeding, and, where issues of waiver and estoppel as to such irregularity were joined, it was proper to transfer said count to equity so that such issues could be determined in advance of the trial to a jury on question of damages.

Newby v City, 227-382; 288 NW 399

Burden of proof. A claimant for damages in eminent domain proceedings, who appeals to the district court from the award of the appraisers, has the burden of proof to establish his damages, and reversible error results from a failure so to instruct.

Randell v Highway Com., 214-1; 241 NW 685

Proceedings to take property—instructions in re benefits. In eminent domain proceedings, an instruction that the compensation allowed should not leave the landowner "poorer off or worse off or better off" because of the taking, is not subject to the vice of leading the jury to understand that in computing compensation, benefits accruing to the landowner because of the taking should be deducted, when the jury is repeatedly and explicitly told elsewhere in the instructions that they should not consider benefits.

Witt v State, 223-156; 272 NW 419

Assessment of damage—jury question. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire ground for highway purposes, the question of damages to be assessed for the land appropriated is peculiarly one for the jury.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Disputed fact questions as to value. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire ground for highway purposes, the right of the jury to decide disputed fact questions as to value will not be interfered with by the supreme court, if there is evidence upon which the jury could reach the verdict it did reach.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

7841.1 Pleadings on appeal.

Requirements. The petition need not state, on the subject of damages, anything more than the total amount of damages claimed.

Maxwell v Highway Com., 223-159; 271 NW 883; 118 ALR 862

Filing petition not jurisdictional. The filing by an appellant in eminent domain proceedings "on or before the first day of the term to which the appeal is taken" of a petition specifying the items of damages claimed and the amount thereof is purely procedural and, therefore, not jurisdictional.

O'Neal v State, 214-977; 243 NW 601

Filing petition not jurisdictional. On appeal from an award in condemnation proceedings, the filing of a petition in the appellate court, at the time required by statute, is not jurisdictional.

Wilcox & Sons v Omaha, 220-1131; 264 NW 5

Appeal to district court—damages pleaded specifically. In an appeal to district court from award of condemnation jury, the plaintiff must state specifically the items of damage and the amount thereof.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Right to amend pleading. A claimant for damages in condemnation proceedings may amend his pleadings and increase his demand for damages as in other actions.

Kemmerer v Highway Com., 214-136; 241 NW 693

Erroneous docketing—effect. An applicant for condemnation of realty who erroneously causes its appeal from the award of the sheriff's jury to be docketed in the name of itself as plaintiff, and in the name of the landowner as defendant, and files petition, and thereby induces the landowner to file answer thereto, is in no position, after causing its own error to be corrected by a proper redocketing, either to demand the entry of judgment in accordance with its own offer to confess judgment, or to object to the action of the court in granting to the landowner (the proper plaintiff) a continuance over the term in which to file a proper petition.

Wilcox & Sons v Omaha, 220-1131; 264 NW 5

Compensation — measure of. The recoverable measure of damages to a farm, consequent on the condemnation of a highway right of way therethrough, is the difference in value of the farm as a whole before condemnation and the value immediately thereafter. It follows that the trial court on appeal cannot limit the jury solely to a consideration of the items of damages specifically alleged by the landowner in the petition.

Maxwell v Highway Com., 223-159; 271 NW 883; 118 ALR 862

7842 Question determined.

Verdict—passion and prejudice. A verdict in eminent domain proceedings will not be disturbed, even tho the amount suggests excessiveness, if it is well within the supporting evidence.

Kemmerer v Highway Com., 214-136; 241 NW 693

Judgment—insufficiency. Record entry in proceedings relative to eminent domain proceedings reviewed, and held, notwithstanding its recitals, not to constitute a judgment for damages, but to specify the conditions under which the plaintiff property owner would be entitled to a provisional injunction.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 221-66; 264 NW 906

Matters actually and potentially in issue. Two proceedings were consolidated for trial only, viz:

1. An action for injunction, general equitable relief, and specifically enumerated damages consequent on a trespass by a city in overflowing plaintiff's land, and

2. An appeal from an award in proceedings by the city to condemn said land. On the trial, plaintiff was awarded no judgment for the damages claimed by him in his equitable action because he made no attempt to establish them—probably on the assumption that he would be made whole by the payment of the final award in the condemnation proceedings.

But the city refused to pay the final award in the condemnation proceeding and abandoned said proceeding.

Plaintiff then commenced a new action for damages, including, inter alia, the identical damages formerly claimed in said equitable action. Held, all damages which plaintiff had suffered prior to the trial of said equitable action, whether they were then in issue or not, were res judicata.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 221-66; 264 NW 906

Value of land—selling price as evidence. The value of farm land, through which a highway right of way is sought to be condemned, cannot be competently shown by evidence of the recent sale price of similar land in a nearby community.

Maxwell v Highway Com., 223-159; 271 NW 883; 118 ALR 862

Value of land — amount of insurance. The amount of insurance carried on farm improvements, situated on a farm through which a highway right of way is sought to be condemned, does not constitute substantive evidence of the value of said farm, and is quite inadmissible for such purpose.

Maxwell v Highway Com., 223-159; 271 NW 883; 118 ALR 862

Disputed fact questions as to value. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire ground for highway purposes, the right of the jury to decide disputed fact questions as to value will not be interfered with by the supreme court, if there is evidence upon which the jury could reach the verdict it did reach.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Instruction—inadvisable but harmless. An instruction in eminent domain proceedings that the real right of which the property owner is deprived, and for which he is entitled to compensation, is the right to remain in undisturbed possession of his property, while ill-advised, may be quite harmless.

Maxwell v Highway Com., 223-159; 271 NW 883; 118 ALR 862

Condemnation — highway used for lawful purpose—unsupported issue. A requested instruction to the effect that in arriving at compensation the law presumes that the highway to be built would be used for a lawful purpose is properly refused when there is no claim that the highway would be unlawfully used.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

Assessment of damage. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire ground for highway purposes, the question of damages to be assessed for the land appropriated is peculiarly one for the jury.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Excessive condemnation award—jury verdict—reviewability. Generally the question of compensation in an eminent domain case is for the jury, but the supreme court will not hesitate to reverse where the record clearly shows excessive damages.

Luthi v Highway Com., 224-678; 276 NW 586

Compensation — abutting tract — connected farming operation—instruction. In a condemnation action where an 80-acre tract abutting and farmed in connection with, but only partly owned by the owner of the farm involved in condemnation, an instruction that no damage to the abutting 80 acres could be assessed, but that the jury could consider the farming control advantage of the two tracts, while not approved, held not prejudicial.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

Excessive award—farm already bisected. A $6,000 verdict, being one-fourth the value of a 212-acre farm, for taking 9.63 acres of land for highway purposes, at least part of which was permanently pasture land, from a farm already bisected by a railroad, is so grossly excessive as to indicate passion and prejudice, and when so appearing will, in condemnation proceedings, as in negligence cases, be set aside.

Luthi v Highway Com., 224-678; 276 NW 586

Liberal condemnation verdict—supporting evidence—finality on appeal. A verdict of $4,000, in condemnation of a small tract of land, including the buildings, improvements, and shade trees, for purpose of rounding a highway corner, while perhaps liberal, will not, when evidence exists to support it, be interfered with on appeal as excessive.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

Compensation—instructions—jurors' experience. An instruction in eminent domain proceedings that jurors have the right to weigh the testimony of experts as to values in the light of their own experience is not subject to the vice that they were told to substitute their own knowledge of values.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

Appeal—transfer to equity. In a condemnation proceeding where two separate tracts of land under separate ownerships were treated as being jointly owned, and where, on appeal from a lump sum award covering both tracts, the owners in one count of their petition sought dismissal of the condemnation proceeding, and, where issues of waiver and estoppel as to such irregularity were joined, it was proper to transfer said count to equity so that such issues could be determined in advance of the trial to a jury on question of damages.

7844 Right to take possession of lands.

Right to interest. In eminent domain proceedings where the property owner recovers on appeal more than was awarded by the sheriff's jury, interest should be allowed on the verdict from the date when the condemnor takes possession of the land.

Beal v Highway Com., 209-1308; 230 NW 302; 36 NCCA 196

7847 Deposit pending appeal.

Time deposit works conversion. A sheriff is guilty of instant conversion and a breach of his bond when he deposits in a bank funds properly coming into his hands in unadjudicated condemnation proceedings and takes from the bank a certificate of deposit which is payable at a definite time in the future, because he thereby fails so to "hold" said funds as commanded by statute as to enable himself to account for such funds whenever the proceedings are finally determined; and in such case the question of due care or negligence in making the deposit is quite immaterial.

7851 Removal of condemnor.

Injunction—conditional order for—compliance—effect. When a decree provides (1) that defendant shall pay an award in condemnation proceedings, or (2) that in event defendant appeals from said award he shall give a supersedeas bond, and (3) that in event he fails to pay or appeal, injunction shall issue enjoining defendant's use of the condemned land, then the taking of an appeal and the giving of the supersedeas bond by defendant nullifies the authority under the decree to issue an injunction. In other words, after the decree is affirmed on appeal without any provision relative to injunction, the trial court has no jurisdiction on motion to enter an injunction on the basis of the affirmed decree. (The reasoning is that the decree constituted a final decree and that the decree as drawn authorized an injunction only on condition that defendant failed to appeal and give the supersedeas bond.)

Fairfield v Dashiell, 217-474; 249 NW 236

7852 Costs and attorney fees.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 240

ANALYSIS

I COSTS IN GENERAL II ATTORNEY FEES

I COSTS IN GENERAL No annotations in this volume

II ATTORNEY FEES

Attorney fees. A statutory provision for the taxation, in eminent domain proceedings, of attorney fees in favor of a successful party, is no authority for such taxation in another like proceeding under a separate and different statute which makes no provision for such taxation.

Nichol v Neighbour, 202-406; 210 NW 281

Prejudicial error—affirmative showing. Affirmative prejudicial error appears from a record which shows that the trial court, acting without a jury, in a law action involving the allowance of attorney fees, received evidence of both allowable and unallowable services.

Iowa Co. v Scott, 206-1217; 220 NW 333

II ATTORNEY FEES—concluded

Prohibition of taxation of attorney fees—retroactive application. A statute prohibiting the taxation of attorney fees in eminent domain proceedings instituted by the state applies to a proceeding pending but undetermined at the time of the enactment.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Condemnation by state—attorney fees unallowable. Attorney fees are unallowable in eminent domain proceedings instituted by the state.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Attorney fees not allowable against state. Attorney fees cannot be taxed against the state in any eminent domain proceedings wherein the state is an applicant.

Fitzgerald v State, 220-547; 260 NW 681

7853 Refusal to pay final award.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 240

Attorney fees—limitation. One who seeks to condemn private property for a public use, but who, after appeals are taken from the award of the sheriff's jury, and before trial thereof, dismisses his condemnation proceedings and abandons all claim to the property, remains liable to a taxation of reasonable attorney's fees in favor of property owners; but such fees must be based solely on services rendered on the appeal.

Iowa Elec. v Scott, 206-1217; 220 NW 333

Injunction—conditional order for—compliance—effect. When a decree provides (1) that defendant shall pay an award in condemnation proceedings, or (2) that in event defendant appeals from said award he shall give a supersedeas bond, and (3) that in event he fails to pay or appeal, injunction shall issue enjoining defendant's use of the condemned land, then the taking of an appeal and the giving of the supersedeas bond by defendant nullifies the authority under the decree to issue an injunction. In other words, after the decree is affirmed on appeal without any provision relative to injunction, the trial court has no jurisdiction on motion to enter an injunction on the basis of the affirmed decree. (The reasoning is that the decree constituted a final decree and that the decree as drawn authorized an injunction only on condition that defendant failed to appeal and give the supersedeas bond.)

Fairfield v Dashiell, 217-474; 249 NW 236

Abandonment of proceedings—attorney fees as damages—recovery. A condemnor who appeals from the district court award, and, on affirmance, refuses to pay the award and take the property, may very properly be held liable to the property owner for the latter's reasonable attorney fees in the supreme court as a part of the actual damages suffered by the landowner because of the futile procedure.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 221-66; 264 NW 906

Abandonment of proceedings—acts constituting. Proceedings by a city for the condemnation of privately owned lands, which the city had overflowed by the erection of a dam on its own property, must be deemed wholly abandoned by the acts of the city, (1) in refusing to pay the adjudged damages, (2) in passing a resolution of abandonment, and (3) in ordering the water drained from said land.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 221-66; 264 NW 906

CHAPTER 367

REVERSION

7861 Relocation of railway.

Statutory reversion. Where a deed conveyed a strip of land to a railroad company "to have and to hold for all purposes incident and necessary to the construction and operation of a railroad * * * thereon", and where the statute provides that if a railway right of way is abandoned for railway purposes by relocation of the line of railway, it shall revert to the persons who, at the time of the abandonment, are owners of the tract from which such abandoned right of way was taken, and tho a railway under such circumstances deeded the property to an individual, such conveyance by the railway company conveyed nothing to the grantee and the fee title reverted to the owners of the land from which right of way was originally taken, and such owners may quiet title in themselves.

Keokuk County v Reinier, 227-499; 288 NW 676

Conveyances in lieu of condemnation. A deed given to a railroad for a strip of land to be used as a right of way, and deeds of a like kind, given by the land owner when condemnation may be imminent if he refuses to convey, should be given such liberal construction as will effectuate the intention of the parties and fully protect the rights of the grantor and his assigns.

Keokuk County v Reinier, 227-499; 288 NW 676

7862 Failure to operate or construct railway.

Nonreversion of right of way obtained by deed. A railway right of way obtained from the owner by full warranty deed and not by condemnation does not, by nonuser for the statutory eight years, revert to the owner of the tract from which such right of way was taken.

Montgomery Co. v Case, 212-73; 232 NW 150

Conveyances in lieu of condemnation. A deed given to a railroad for a strip of land to be used as a right of way, and deeds of a like kind, given by the landowner when condemnation may be imminent if he refuses to convey, should be given such liberal construction as will effectuate the intention of the parties and fully protect the rights of the grantor and his assigns.

Keokuk County v Reinier, 227-499; 288 NW 676

7863 Quasi-public roads and rights of way.

Conveyances in lieu of condemnation. A deed given to a railroad for a strip of land to be used as a right of way, and deeds of a like kind, given by the landowner when condemnation may be imminent if he refuses to convey, should be given such liberal construction as will effectuate the intention of the parties and fully protect the rights of the grantor and his assigns.

Conveyances in lieu of condemnation. IOWA STATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

7869 Rules, forms, and service.

Delegating powers to nonlegislative board. While the legislature may not delegate its power to make laws, yet when it had declared a policy which is definite in describing the subject to which it relates and the character of the regulation intended to be imposed, it may delegate to nonlegislative board the power to make rules and regulations for effectuating such policy.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

7873 Free transportation.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 143

7874 General jurisdiction.

Discussion. See 8 ILB 12—A study of the railroad commission in the state of Iowa

Powers given to state commerce commission—limitation. The state commerce commission (board of railroad commissioners) has no powers except those expressly given and those incidental to or implied in the power given.

Huxley v Conway, 226-268; 284 NW 136

Injunction. Injunction will lie by the state on the relation of the board of railroad commissioners to enjoin the operation of a motor carrier over the public highways, contrary to the orders of said board.

State v Holdcroft, 207-564; 221 NW 191

Continuing shipment. An order requiring a railway to accept in this state loaded cars which have arrived from another state through a terminated interstate shipment, and to transport said cars without reloading, is valid and enforceable. 152 Iowa 317 affirmed.

Chicago, Mil. Ry. Co. v State, 233 US 334

State commerce commission abandoning overhead crossing—street change resulting—excess of jurisdiction. The state commerce commission has no power to order the abandonment of an overpass or overhead crossing over a railroad in a city or town, which results in altering the streets thereof. Jurisdiction of its streets is a city function which may not be invaded by the state commerce commission, regardless of its good-faith motives, and certiorari will lie to prevent such invasion.

7875 Inspection—notice to repair.

Huxley v Conway, 226-268; 284 NW 136

State commerce commission abandoning overhead crossing—street change resulting—excess of jurisdiction. The state commerce commission has no power to order the abandonment of an overpass or overhead crossing over a railroad in a city or town, which results in altering the streets thereof. Jurisdiction of its streets is a city function which may not be invaded by the state commerce commission, regardless of its good-faith motives, and certiorari will lie to prevent such invasion.

Huxley v Conway, 226-268; 284 NW 136

7877 Changes in operation and improvements.

Liability for negligence generally. See also under §8156

I STATUTE IN GENERAL

Negligence per se in failing to stop. A traveler who knows that a railway crossing is so badly obstructed that he will not be able, by looking and listening, to know of the approach of a train until he is substantially on the tracks, is guilty of negligence per se if he does not stop.

Dean v Ry. Co., 211-1347; 229 NW 223

Driving into side of train—proximate cause. Evidence which is solely to the effect that, on a misty and foggy night, a freight train was standing across a public railway crossing without any visible warning whatever of its presence, except the train itself, reveals no negligence (if it be deemed negligence) on the part of the railway company or its employees which can be deemed the proximate cause of an accident to a motorist who drove his car along the public highway and into the side of said train.

Dolan v Bremner, 220-1143; 263 NW 798

Guest in automobile—contributory negligence—jury question. Evidence that a guest riding in an automobile, when 100 feet from a railway crossing, observed, and called the attention of the operator to, an approaching train, and that thereupon the operator of the car commenced to reduce and continued to reduce the speed of the car until it was hit by the oncoming locomotive, precludes the court from saying that the guest was guilty of contributory negligence per se.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

Driving upon crossing negligence per se. The operator of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se when he drives upon an open, city, railway crossing, with which he is familiar, and with timely knowledge that a moving train is in the immediate vicinity and that the said crossing may at any moment be occupied by said train or another train.

Miller v Railway, 223-316; 272 NW 96

Contributory negligence as matter of law—motorist not looking. A motorist, who approaches a railroad crossing on a clear day, over a good road, with no obstructions and no diverting circumstances, and who, had he looked, must have seen but nevertheless is struck and killed by an approaching train which from a point 141 feet from the crossing was visible 2500 feet down the track, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, and the defendant railroad is entitled to a directed verdict.

Meier v Railway, 224-295; 275 NW 139

Crossing railroad in front of oncoming train—contributory negligence—directed verdict. It is error to overrule a motion for a directed verdict when, after considering all the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, there is no doubt but what he drove in front of a train with the view entirely unobstructed and with the train plainly to be seen had he looked, or if he looked, he did so negligently.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

Operation—frost on train—visibility—when jury question on plaintiff's care. Plaintiff's contention, that a snowy landscape and frost on a train so camouflaged it that the question of his negligence in driving upon an unobstructed crossing in front of the train was for the jury, is not substantiated by a record devoid of any evidence of frost on the front of the engine or that he was in any way blinded by the sun or glare of the sun on the snow.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

Judicial notice—change in mode of transportation. Court will take judicial notice of the changes in the mode of transportation occurring during the last preceding twenty-five years.

Harris v Railway, 224-1319; 278 NW 338

II CATTLE GUARDS

Maintenance of dangerous cattle guard—negligence. A railway company is not negligent in maintaining at a private crossing on its track a cattle guard which is actually dangerous to the feet of stock which persist in going upon it. Evidence held quite insufficient to show that the guard in question was unnecessarily dangerous.

Harsch v Railway, 211-1377; 232 NW 144; 75 ALR 927

Open gates—negligence. Evidence (1) that a railway company maintained a gate in its right-of-way fence with attachments suitable for securely keeping the gate closed, (2) that late in the afternoon the gate was closed after being used, (3) that on the following morning the gate was found open, and (4) that certain animals from the adjoining field were then found dead on the railway right of way, having evidently been killed by a passing train, is insufficient to establish any negligence on the part of the railway company.

Hughes v Ry. Co., 215-741; 246 NW 769

III CROSSINGS

Accidents at crossings—negligence—evidence. Evidence reviewed in law action for damages tried to the court alone, and held to support a finding of negligence in the maintenance of a railway crossing; that said negligence was the proximate cause of an injury; and that plaintiff's negligence, if any, did not contribute to said injury.

Warren v Railway, 219-723; 259 NW 115

Accidents at crossings—"cupped out" depression as negligence. Proof that a three or four inch "cupped out" depression existed in a railway crossing over a public road, does not, in and of itself, present a jury question on the issue of the negligent maintenance of said railway crossing.

Gable v Kriege, 221-852; 267 NW 86; 105 ALR 539

Accident at crossing—proximate negligence not superseded by concurrent negligence. If the jury might justifiably find that the defendant railway company operated its train over one of its crossings at an excessive and unlawful rate of speed and that said speed was the proximate cause of the collision of the train with an automobile and of the injury to an occupant of the automobile, the court must not so instruct as to permit the jury to find that the negligence of the driver of the automobile in approaching and driving upon the crossing was an intervening cause which wholly superseded the said negligence of the defendant railway company.

Dedina v Railway, 220-1336; 264 NW 566

Operation of automobile without brakes—proximate cause. Record reviewed and held that the proximate cause of an accident was not the condition in which a railway crossing was maintained, but was the speed at which an overloaded truck was operated without brakes.

Gable v Kriege, 221-852; 267 NW 86; 105 ALR 539

Accidents at crossings—duty to construct crossing—scope. The statutory duty of a railway company to construct and maintain a "good, sufficient and safe crossing" at all points where its tracks cross public roads, is fully complied with when, in crossing a level public road, the railway ties and rails and the proper planking between said rails and on the ends of the ties immediately outside said rails, are so placed that the level of the public road is maintained.

Gable v Kriege, 221-852; 267 NW 86; 105 ALR 539

Crossings—safe condition controlled by transportation needs. It is the duty of railways and municipalities to keep pace with the changes in transportation methods and to keep highways and railroad crossings in a reasonably safe condition, inasmuch as a type of crossing construction, considered safe when built, might be unsafe for a later changed method of use by the public.

Harris v Railway, 224-1319; 278 NW 338

Railway crossing—injuries from jolting—causal negligence necessary. Plaintiff has the burden to show wherein a railway was negligent in maintaining a viaduct crossing, since jury's verdict may not rest upon surmise, speculation, or guess, and this burden is not met when plaintiff fails to show that injuries received from being thrown against top of car while going over viaduct were caused by a condition of the viaduct resulting from negligence.

Harris v Railway, 224-1319; 278 NW 338

Railroad crossing construction. Since character and extent of street improvements are within responsible discretion of city authorities and because city council's determination of question of desirability of proposed improvements is conclusive except for want of authority or fraud, and where ordinance granting franchise to railroad gave city council authority to require construction of crossing, damage claim for refusal to construct crossing could not be maintained by owner seeking access to property, when owner instead of requesting council to direct railroad to build crossing, merely made such request by personal letter to railroad official.

Call Bond Co. v Railway, 227-142; 287 NW 832

IV WARNING SIGNS

Warnings additional to statutory warnings—duty to furnish. Conceded, arguendo, that a public railway crossing may be attended by such danger as to impose on the railway company, in the exercise of reasonable care, the duty to furnish to the highway traveler warnings in addition to those required by statute, but such duty does not arise when the danger is avoidable by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the traveler. So held, inter alia, as to a fog-shrouded crossing, the danger attending which could be avoided by the traveler so driving as to be able to stop within the range of his vision.

Dolan v Bremner, 220-1143; 263 NW 798

Accident at crossing—absence of signs and signals—nonproximate cause. The failure of a railway company to erect statutory warning signs on both sides of a railway crossing (assuming such duty to exist) or the failure of its engineer, when approaching a crossing, to give the statutory signals, becomes quite inconsequential where the operator of an automobile and his guest saw the crossing and the immediately approaching train when they were 100 feet from said crossing, and while they were traveling at a speed not exceeding 25 miles per hour.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

8005 Failure to fence.

Absence of cattle guard—scope of statute. This section contemplates injuries caused by the operation of trains, not injuries caused by the manner in which a cattle guard may be constructed and maintained.

Harsch v Ry. Co., 211-1377; 232 NW 144; 75 ALR 927

Injuries to animals—open gate—negligence. Evidence (1) that a railway company maintained a gate in its right-of-way fence with attachments suitable for securely keeping the gate closed, (2) that late in the afternoon the gate was closed after being used, (3) that on the following morning the gate was found open, and (4) that certain animals from the adjoining field were then found dead on the railway right of way, having evidently been killed by a passing train, is insufficient to establish any negligence on the part of the railway company.

Hughes v Railway, 215-741; 246 NW 769

Cow killed by interurban—entry where fence down—evidence sufficiency. Railroads being required by statute to fence right of way against livestock, where judgment was rendered for loss of cow killed by an interurban, evidence, that cow was kept in pasture along right of way and that right-of-way fence was down near place where cow was killed, justified a finding that cow entered right of way at such place.

McSweyn v Railway, (NOR); 288 NW 898

8008 Depot grounds—speed limit.

Proximate negligence not superseded by concurrent negligence. If the jury might justifiably find that the defendant railway company operated its train over one of its crossings at an excessive and unlawful rate of speed and that said speed was the proximate cause of the collision of the train with an automobile and of the injury to an occupant of the automobile, the court must not so instruct as to permit the jury to find that the negligence of the driver of the automobile in approaching and driving upon the crossing was an intervening cause which wholly superseded the said negligence of the defendant railway company.

I PRIVATE CROSSINGS IN GENERAL

Flag protection—instructions. Error does not result from instructing that plaintiff, in moving machinery across a private crossing, would not be negligent in failing to request flag protection unless he knew that a rule of the company required the section foreman to furnish such protection when requested.

Graves v Railway, 207-30; 222 NW 344

Speed as basis for negligence. Reversible error results from so instructing as to permit the jury to base negligence on the speed of a train at a private farm crossing, irrespective of the safe or dangerous condition of such crossing.

Graves v Railway, 207-30; 222 NW 344

Nonduty to maintain flagmen. A railroad company is under no obligation to maintain a flagman at a private farm crossing.

Graves v Railway, 207-30; 222 NW 344

Adequacy—jury question. Evidence held to create a jury question on the issue whether a railroad company had constructed and was maintaining a safe and adequate private farm crossing.

Graves v Railway, 207-30; 222 NW 344

Private crossings—nonduty to maintain. A railway company is under no legal duty to construct and maintain in a city or town a crossing or roadway over its right of way, or under its tracks in order to afford to a landowner access from his nonfarm land abutting one side of the right of way to his nonfarm land of trifling quantity and value abutting the other side of the right of way.

Chicago, Mil. Ry. v Cross, 212-218; 234 NW 569

I PRIVATE CROSSINGS IN GENERAL—concluded

State commerce commission abandoning overhead crossing—street change resulting—excess of jurisdiction. The state commerce commission has no power to order the abandonment of an overpass or overhead crossing over a railroad in a city or town, which results in altering the streets thereof. Jurisdiction of its streets is a city function which may not be invaded by the state commerce commission, regardless of its good-faith motives, and certiorari will lie to prevent such invasion.

Huxley v Conway, 226-268; 284 NW 136

II GATES AT PRIVATE CROSSINGS

Maintenance of dangerous cattle guard—negligence. A railway company is not negligent in maintaining at a private crossing on its track a cattle guard which is actually dangerous to the feet of stock which persist in going upon it. Evidence held quite insufficient to show that the guard in question was unnecessarily dangerous.

Harsch v Railway, 211-1377; 232 NW 144; 75 ALR 927

III ACCIDENTS AT CROSSINGS

Contributory negligence per se. The driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se when, upon entering during the daytime a private crossing over much-used interurban railway tracks located on a curve, he knows when some 25 feet from the track in question that his view of an apprehended approaching car is limited to 300 feet, and when he avails himself of such view and sees no approaching car, and thereupon proceeds to attempt, under no diverting circumstances, to cross the tracks at a rate of three miles per hour without looking or listening for the apprehended car, tho his view of the track materially enlarged as he proceeded.

Rosenberg v Railway, 213-152; 238 NW 703

Inapplicability of speed ordinance. A city ordinance which limits the speed of railway trains under given conditions is properly excluded, in the absence of any evidence that the ordinance was violated.

Newman v Railway, 202-1059; 206 NW 831

Negligence—nondiverting circumstance. The fact that a party in crossing railway tracks was compelled, owing to the coldness of the weather, to manipulate the choke on the automobile cannot be deemed a diverting circumstance such as to excuse him from exercising his senses of sight and hearing.

Rosenberg v Railway, 213-152; 238 NW 703

Contributory negligence—nonexcuse. A party will not be permitted to excuse his contributory negligence consequent on his attempt to cross streetcar tracks without using his senses of sight and hearing, by the simple assumption that the streetcars will not be negligently operated.

Rosenberg v Railway, 213-152; 238 NW 703

8015 Stopping of trains.

Sleeping passenger—duty to awaken—jury question. Where trainmen know that a passenger is asleep as the train is closely approaching the passenger's destination, the question whether, under all the circumstances, the carrier owes the sleeping passenger the duty to awaken him in time to enable him to leave the train at the station is for the jury.

Vanderbeck v Railway, 210-230; 230 NW 390

Trespasser—failure to leave train—effect. A passenger does not become a trespasser and subject to rightful expulsion from the train from the naked fact that he failed to leave the train at his destination.

Vanderbeck v Railway, 210-230; 230 NW 390

Failure to leave train—tender of fare—judicial notice. A passenger failing to leave the train at his destination does not render himself subject to immediate ejection from the train because he fails to tender the fare to another destination. Judicial notice is taken of the fact that it is the duty of the conductor to demand the fare.

Vanderbeck v Railway, 210-230; 230 NW 390

8018 Signals at road crossings.

ANALYSIS

- I STATUTE IN GENERAL
- II PROXIMATE CAUSE
- III CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE
- IV EVIDENCE AND INSTRUCTIONS

Accidents at private crossings. See under §8011

I STATUTE IN GENERAL

Absence of flagmen, gates, etc. The failure of a railway company to maintain flagmen, gates, or warning devices at crossings does not constitute negligence, in the absence of proof that the crossing is unusually dangerous and hazardous.

O'Brien v Railway, 203-1301; 214 NW 608

No warning signal at crossing—statute violations—negligence. The failure of compliance with a statutory standard of care is negligence. In an action for personal injuries sustained by an automobile passenger in collision in Illinois between an automobile and railway motorcar, where petition alleged that railway employees failed to ring bell or sound whistle of motorcar while approaching a crossing, as required by Illinois statute, such allegations were sufficient to state a cause of action based on negligence of employees of defendant railroad.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

View obstructed—duty to give timely warning. Where a railroad motorcar, which had been standing still, obscured from view of motorist by shrubbery at the side of a crossing, gave no warning that it was about to cross the intersection, resulting in the motorist's automobile colliding with front end of motorcar, the presence of motorcar near the crossing was not sufficient warning to motorist that crossing was occupied. There must not only be a warning, but it must be timely.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

Damages—total destruction. The measure of damages for the total destruction of an article is the reasonable market value of the article immediately before its destruction.

Bush v Railway, 216-788; 247 NW 645

"Flying switch." Principle recognized that the act of making a "flying switch" does not necessarily constitute negligence.

Love v Railway, 207-1278; 224 NW 815

Insufficient assignment of negligence. A general plea that a railway was negligent in surveying, building, maintaining and operating its railway at the place of an accident, without pleading or proving any standard by which to determine negligence, is quite insufficient.

Lenning v Railway, 209-890; 227 NW 828

Recklessness of railway employees—insufficient pleading to establish. In action for personal injuries sustained by automobile passenger in collision between automobile and railway motorcar, where petition alleged that railway motorcar had been standing a short distance from crossing, obscured from view of motorist by shrubbery along railway right of way, and was driven onto crossing and into the course of oncoming automobile without warning, and that railway motorcar could have been stopped by applying brakes, such allegations were insufficient to state a cause of action based upon recklessness of employees of defendant railroad.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

No-eyewitness rule—nonapplicability. The presumption of care which may be indulged in case of an accident of which there is no eyewitness has no application when the record affirmatively shows that the accident would not have happened, had the injured party exercised reasonable care.

Tegtmeyer v Byram, 204-1169; 216 NW 613
Lenning v Railway, 209-890; 227 NW 828

"Physical fact" rule—inapplicability. The so-called "physical fact" rule which is often applied in negligence cases—the rule that when the operator of a vehicle at a known railroad crossing possesses ordinary sense of sight he is conclusively presumed, in the absence of diverting circumstances, to have seen an approaching train which was in plain view—necessarily has no application when the train is not in plain view, owing to a temporary obstruction which the railroad company has interposed to his view, e. g., freight cars on a side track.

Bush v Railway, 216-788; 247NW 645

Positive and negative testimony. Witnesses may testify, on the issue whether a train in approaching a crossing gave the statutory signals, that they could have heard such signals, had such signals been given, and that none were given, it appearing that the witnesses were in a mental attitude to hear such signals.

Anderson v Railway, 203-715; 211 NW 872

Standing railroad motorcar obscured from view—motorist rightfully entering crossing. Where railroad motorcar was standing still, obscured from view of motorist by shrubbery along railroad right of way, motorist was within his rights in attempting to pass over the crossing.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

Presumption arising from human instinct. The presumption that the instinct of self-preservation caused a traveler who was killed by a train at a crossing to look for a train before he went upon the crossing has no application when it affirmatively appears that, had he looked at any time while he was in the zone of danger, he must have seen the train.

Wasson v Railway, 203-705; 213 NW 388

Ring of bell—limit of duty. The statutory requirement that after the whistle on a railway engine is sounded and approaching a crossing, the bell shall be rung "continuously until the crossing is passed," imposes no duty after the engine has passed over the crossing to continue the ringing of the bell until the entire train has passed the crossing.

Butters v Railway, 214-700; 243 NW 597

Signals irrespective of statute. The failure of train operators in nearing a public crossing to signal the approach of the train may constitute negligence, irrespective of any statute so requiring.

Anderson v Railway, 203-715; 211 NW 872

Trestle as licensed place. It will not be lightly inferred that a railway company knowingly consented to the use of its trestle as a footway for pedestrians when such use, under the peculiar circumstances existing, was not only perilous but literally foolhardy.

Brimeyer v Railway, 213-1289; 241 NW 409

II PROXIMATE CAUSE

Avoiding contributory negligence. A street car motorman who plainly sees that the driver of another conveyance is negligently placing himself in a position of danger on the tracks, or is about to do so, and by ordinary care can avoid an accident and fails to do so, must be deemed guilty of negligence which is the prox-

II PROXIMATE CAUSE—concluded

imate cause of the accident, irrespective of the negligence of the injured party.

Lynch v Railway, 215-1119; 245 NW 219

Concurrent negligence—effect. If the jury might properly find that the concurrent negligence of defendant and of a third party caused the injury or death of a nonnegligent person, the court cannot properly direct a verdict for defendant on the theory that the negligence of said third party was an intervening negligence which wholly supplanted and superseded the negligence of the said defendant. So held where the concurring negligence was (1) that of defendant in operating its train over a crossing at an unlawful rate of speed, and (2) that of the operator of an automobile in driving upon said crossing.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

Driving into side of train—proximate cause. Evidence which is solely to the effect that, on a misty and foggy night, a freight train was standing across a public railway crossing without any visible warning whatever of its presence, except the train itself, reveals no negligence (if it be deemed negligence) on the part of the railway company or its employees which can be deemed the proximate cause of an accident to a motorist who drove his car along the public highway and into the side of said train.

Dolan v Bremner, 220-1143; 263 NW 798

Failure to ring bell—proximate cause. Tho a traveler on a public street has timely knowledge that an engine and a couple of cars are standing immediately outside the curb line of said street, and on a track which crosses said street, yet the failure to ring the bell on said engine may be the proximate cause of an injury to said traveler should the train be suddenly backed into the street without ringing said bell.

Hanrahan v Sprague, 220-867; 263 NW 514

Absence of nonproximate cause. The failure of a railway company to erect statutory warning signs on both sides of a railway crossing (assuming such duty to exist) or the failure of its engineer, when approaching a crossing, to give the statutory signals, becomes quite inconsequential where the operator of an automobile and his guest saw the crossing and the immediately approaching train when they were 100 feet from said crossing, and while they were traveling at a speed not exceeding 25 miles per hour.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

Pleading negligence of employees operating railway motorcar—sufficiency. In action for personal injuries sustained by an automobile passenger in collision between automobile and railroad motorcar, where petition alleged that motorcar had been standing at crossing obscured from view of motorist by shrubbery along railroad right of way, and was driven into course of the oncoming automobile without any warning and that it could have been stopped by applying the brakes, such allegations were sufficient to state a cause of action based upon negligence of railroad employees.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

Failure to give signals as nonproximate cause. Failure of a train crew to give the statutory signals on approaching a public crossing is manifestly not the proximate cause of an accident (1) when the driver on the public highway intended, regardless of the absence of signals, to stop before entering upon the crossing and reconnoiter for approaching trains, and (2) when he discovered the approaching train in ample time to make an ordinary stop, but was unable to do so because his brakes, tho successfully applied, did not sufficiently retard the momentum of his car in the loose gravel on the highway.

Pifer v Railway, 215-1258; 247 NW 625

Non-working signal device—effect. The presence and silence, at a railway crossing, of an automatic railway signaling device may be quite influential in saving a traveler from the imputation of negligence per se in approaching and going upon the crossing, when he is faced by two closely adjacent parallel tracks, and when the immediate possible danger is on the first track, tho he was actually injured on the second track.

Crowley v Railway, 204-1385; 213 NW 403; 53 ALR 964; 27 NCCA 618

Proximate negligence not superseded by concurrent negligence. If the jury might justifiably find that the defendant railway company operated its train over one of its crossings at an excessive and unlawful rate of speed and that said speed was the proximate cause of the collision of the train with an automobile and of the injury to an occupant of the automobile, the court must not so instruct as to permit the jury to find that the negligence of the driver of the automobile in approaching and driving upon the crossing was an intervening cause which wholly superseded the said negligence of the defendant railway company.

Dedina v Railway, 220-1336; 264 NW 566

III CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

Absence of signals—effect. The failure of trainmen to give the required statutory signals when approaching and passing over a public highway crossing may have material bearing on the issue whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

Rastede v Railway, 203-430; 212 NW 751

Accident at crossing. The operator of a vehicle is guilty of negligence in driving upon a railway crossing in front of an approaching train (1) when he knows the train is approaching the crossing, (2) when the train is in plain sight for a material distance from the crossing, and (3) when his failure to see the train, at best, was because of a known obstruction on his own vehicle.

Sodemann v Railway, 215-827; 244 NW 865

Nonrequired precautions. Principle recognized that a traveler is not, as a matter of law, required to stop and alight from his conveyance at a railroad crossing and make observations as to possible danger.

Love v Railway, 207-1278; 224 NW 815

Erroneous definition. Defining contributory negligence as including only acts of omission does not necessarily constitute reversible error, especially when such definition is in harmony with the trial theory.

Williams v Railway, 205-446; 214 NW 692

Contributory negligence—jury question. Record relative to conduct, conditions, and circumstances attending an injured party at a railroad crossing reviewed, and held, in view of obstructions and distracting circumstances, to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Williams v Railway, 205-446; 214 NW 692

Jury question. Evidence tending to show that the driver of a vehicle stopped some twelve feet from a railroad crossing, and reconnoitered for an approaching train, and saw none, owing to a string of cars on a side track, and heard no warning signals of an approaching train, and thereupon drove upon the crossing, presents a jury question on the issue of his negligence.

Bush v Railway, 216-788; 247 NW 645

Jury question. Evidence tending to show that the driver of a vehicle stopped some ten or fifteen feet from a railroad crossing and reconnoitered for an approaching train and saw none because of dirt elevations and weeds along the side of the track, and heard no warning signals of an approaching train, and thereupon drove upon the crossing, presents a jury question on the issue of his negligence, even tho, had he stopped some few feet nearer the track he would have seen the approaching train.

Darden v Ry. Co., 213-583; 239 NW 531

Sodemann v Ry. Co., 215-827; 244 NW 865

Railroads—negligence per se—fog and mist-obscured track. An occupant of an automobile is not necessarily guilty of negligence per se in not seeing a railroad track which intersected the highway until the automobile was entering upon the track, when the presence of the tracks was unknown to him, and when the windshield was covered with fog and mist, even tho he testifies to the opinion that objects could be seen for a distance of from 50 to 75 feet in front of the automobile.

Gilliam v Railway, 206-1291; 222 NW 12

Contributory negligence per se. A traveler in approaching a railway crossing with which he is familiar, and while he is beset by no diverting circumstance, is guilty of negligence in failing to look at some place from where he knows he can see approaching trains and thus avoid injury. It will avail him nothing to look when at places where he knows his view will be largely obstructed.

Glessner v Railway, 216-850; 249 NW 138

Negligence per se in colliding with traffic signal. An experienced driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se when, near midnight, while traveling in the center of a 26-foot wide, brilliantly lighted, paved street, with which he was familiar, he drives squarely head-on in the center of the street against a railroad traffic signal consisting of a concrete base 4 feet wide, 2 feet high, and 5 feet long, surmounted by an iron pole several feet high and noticeably painted with black and white diagonal stripes, on which pole at the time were crossarms bearing in large letters the words "railroad crossing" and two burning lights.

Van Gorden v City, 216-209; 245 NW 736; 4 NCCA (NS) 291

Driving upon crossing negligence per se. The operator of an automobile is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law when he drives upon an open, city, railway crossing, with which he is familiar, and with timely knowledge that a moving train is in the immediate vicinity and that the said crossing may at any moment be occupied by said train or another train.

Miller v Railway, 223-316; 272 NW 96

Contributory negligence per se. A traveler who, when some fifteen feet from a railway crossing, looks for but fails to see a train which is in plain sight on a straight track, and rapidly approaching the crossing from a point some 230 feet distant, and thereupon drives upon the crossing, is guilty of contributory negligence.

Cashman v Railway, 217-469; 250 NW 111

Crossing railroad in front of oncoming train—contributory negligence—directed verdict. It is error to overrule a motion for a directed verdict when, after considering all the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, there is no doubt but what he drove in front of a train with the view entirely unobstructed and with the train plainly to be seen had he looked, or, if he looked, he did so negligently.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

Failure to stop. A traveler who knows that a railway crossing is so badly obstructed that he will not be able, by looking and listening, to know of the approach of a train until he is substantially on the tracks is guilty of negligence per se if he does not stop.

Dean v Railway, 211-1347; 229 NW 223

Failure to see or hear. Principle reaffirmed that he who failed either to see what was plainly visible or to hear what was clearly audible must be deemed not to have looked or listened at all.

Sodemann v Railway, 215-827; 244 NW 865

Contributory negligence—crossing railroad with train in view. A motorist approaching a railroad crossing has a duty to look for trains and to see a train if it is in plain sight, and, if he goes upon a crossing in front of a train that was in plain view as he approached and is struck thereby, he is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

Contributory negligence as matter of law—motorist not looking. A motorist, who approaches a railroad crossing on a clear day, over a good road, with no obstructions and no diverting circumstances, and who, had he looked, must have seen but nevertheless is struck and killed by an approaching train which from a point 141 feet from the crossing was visible 2500 feet down the track, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, and the defendant railroad is entitled to a directed verdict.

Meier v Railway, 224-295; 275 NW 139

Contributory negligence of guest as jury question. Evidence that a guest riding in an automobile, when 100 feet from a railway crossing, observed and called the attention of the operator to an approaching train, and that thereupon the operator of the car commenced to reduce and continued to reduce the speed of the car until it was hit by the oncoming locomotive, precludes the court from saying that the guest was guilty of contributory negligence per se.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

Contributory negligence—guest's lookout at railroad crossing—jury question. A guest in a motor vehicle is not, as a reasonably prudent person, under the same obligation as the driver to keep a lookout, but whether or not, under the circumstances, a guest was lacking in ordinary care in committing his safety to the motor vehicle driver while crossing a railroad is a question for the jury.

Finley v Lowden, 224-999; 277 NW 487

Imputed negligence—instructions construed. In an unsuccessful action against a railway company for negligently causing the death of a guest riding in a truck, an instruction, as to what acts of the said driver would constitute negligence, cannot be deemed to impute the negligence, if any, of said driver to the guest when other instructions specifically state, in effect, that the negligence of the driver would be no defense if the negligence of the defendant was found to be the sole proximate cause of said death.

Reidy v Railway, 220-1386; 258 NW 675

Diverting circumstances. The operator of an automobile when entering upon a known railway crossing is held to know that he is entering a zone of danger; yet (1) the absence of statutory signals, (2) the obscured nature of the crossing, and (3) the distracting influence of other passing vehicles and of nearby objects, may save the operator from the imputation of contributory negligence per se.

Nederhiser v Railway, 202-285; 208 NW 856; 27 NCCA 86

Nondiverting circumstance. The fact that a party in crossing railway tracks was compelled, owing to the coldness of the weather, to manipulate the choke on the automobile cannot be deemed a diverting circumstance such as to excuse him from exercising his senses of sight and hearing.

Rosenberg v Railway, 213-152; 238 NW 703

Driving into side of train. Evidence which is solely to the effect that, on a misty and foggy night, a freight train was standing across a public railway crossing without any visible warning whatever of its presence, except the train itself, reveals no negligence (if it be deemed negligence) on the part of the railway company or its employees which can be deemed the proximate cause of an accident to a motorist who drove his car along the public highway and into the side of said train.

Dolan v Bremner, 220-1143; 263 NW 798

Emergency—attempt to avoid train. The driver of a conveyance who, in an emergency, attempts to pass in front of an immediately approaching railway train is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence.

Anderson v Railway, 203-715; 211 NW 872; 27 NCCA 155; 27 NCCA 304; 31 NCCA 221

Failure to slow down or stop train. When a railway train and a traveler on the public highway are approaching a railway crossing in the country at the same time, and the train is within the unobstructed view of the traveler for a distance of several hundred feet before he reaches the crossing, the engineer of the train may not be said to be negligent in failing to slow down or stop the train when he has no reason to suppose that the traveler is unaware of the approaching train.

Lenning v Railway, 209-890; 227 NW 828

Red light on tender. The fact that an engine was, in the nighttime, and at the time of an accident, running backwards, and across a public crossing, with a red light on the tender may quite persuasively demonstrate that the injured party was not guilty of contributory negligence per se.

Rastede v Railway, 203-430; 212 NW 751

Snow glare affecting visibility. Where a passenger riding in a truck was killed in a crossing collision between truck and train, a contention that sun shining on snow and reflecting into truck constituted such obstruction to view of oncoming train that it raised a jury question on issue of deceased's contributory negligence in failing to see approaching train held not established by his evidence.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

Warnings additional to statutory warnings. Conceded, arguendo, that a public railway crossing may be attended by such danger as to impose on the railway company, in the exercise of reasonable care, the duty to furnish to the highway traveler warnings in addition to those required by statute, but such duty does not arise when the danger is avoidable by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the traveler. So held, inter alia, as to a fog-shrouded crossing, the danger attending which could be avoided by the traveler so driving as to be able to stop within the range of his vision.

Dolan v Bremner, 220-1143; 263 NW 798

IV EVIDENCE AND INSTRUCTIONS

Accidents at crossings—inapplicability of speed ordinance. A city ordinance which limits the speed of railway trains under given conditions is properly excluded, in the absence of any evidence that the ordinance was violated.

Newman v Railway, 202-1059; 206 NW 831

Habitual negligence of engineer. On the issue of the negligence of an engineer in operating his train on a certain occasion, evidence of his conduct on prior and similar occasions, is inadmissible.

Darden v Railway, 213-583; 239 NW 531

Frost on train—visibility—when jury question on plaintiff's care. Plaintiff's contention that a snowy landscape and frost on a train so camouflaged it that the question of his negligence in driving upon an unobstructed crossing in front of the train was for the jury is not substantiated by a record devoid of any evidence of frost on the front of the engine or that he was in any way blinded by the sun or glare of the sun on the snow.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

Jury question. Evidence reviewed and held that a traveler whose view was somewhat obstructed was not guilty of negligence per se in driving upon railway tracks after the passage of a train and after the crossing watchman had lowered his "stop" sign and started in the direction of his station abode.

Love v Railway, 207-1278; 224 NW 815

Last clear chance—justifiable submission. The mere fact that a train operator on the rear of a backing train saw a party approaching a public crossing, at a time when the party was 100 or more feet distant, affords no basis for submitting to the jury the issue of the "last clear chance"; but such basis is furnished by testimony tending to show (1) that, to the knowledge of the operator, the party continued to approach said crossing and was in a position of peril when 30 feet therefrom, and (2) that the train could have been stopped within 20 feet.

Williams v Railway, 205-446; 214 NW 692; 27 NCCA 666

Negative testimony. Testimony that certain witnesses "did not hear" any warning signals from an approaching train is intrinsically without probative value when unaccompanied by any proof that such witnesses were in a position and mental attitude to have heard such signals, had they been given.

Chilcote v Railway, 206-1093; 221 NW 771

Negligence—evidence. Evidence reviewed in law action for damages tried to the court alone, and held to support a finding of negligence in the maintenance of a railway crossing; that said negligence was the proximate cause of an injury; and that plaintiff's negligence, if any, did not contribute to said injury.

Warren v Railway, 219-723; 259 NW 115

"No-eyewitness" rule—inapplicability under direct evidence. Where a motorist and other eyewitnesses testify as to deceased's conduct just prior to his driving into the side of a moving train, it is error to instruct on the presumption that defendant's natural instinct of self-preservation would prompt him not to run into a moving train, when direct evidence as to his conduct is obtainable.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

Obstructions—evidence pro and con. On the issue whether the view of a railway track was so obstructed at the time of an accident that an approaching train could not be seen, testimony by an eyewitness is manifestly admissible, to the effect that he immediately stationed himself at the point of accident and could plainly see the entire track over which a train would approach.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356

Positive and negative evidence. Testimony of witnesses to the effect that they did not hear or notice any signals, when the witnesses were in no mental attitude to hear or notice such signals, creates no conflict with positive testimony that such signals were given.

Lenning v Railway, 209-890; 227 NW 828

IV EVIDENCE AND INSTRUCTIONS—concluded

Precautions in addition to statute. A railway crossing may be so unusually dangerous as to justify a jury in finding that the railway company was negligent in not providing warnings and safeguards in addition to those required by statute. But record reviewed and held wholly insufficient to justify the submission of such issue to the jury.

Butters v Railway, 214-700; 243 NW 597

Warning unheard—negative evidence not valueless as matter of law. In an action involving an automobile railroad crossing accident, statements of witnesses as to not hearing a bell nor whistle warning were not as a matter of law of such negative character as to lack all probative force.

Finley v Lowden, 224-999; 277 NW 487

Instruction without basis in evidence. An instruction authorizing a finding of negligence on the part of a railroad company if an employee thereof discovered the danger of an approaching vehicle and did not, in the exercise of ordinary care, report such danger to the engineer is wholly inapplicable to a record which clearly reveals the fact that, when the employee aforesaid discovered the danger, no ordinary care could have prevented the accident.

Gilliam v Railway, 206-1291; 222 NW 12

Absence of flagman or signal device. The submission to the jury of the issue of negligence, based on the absence at a railway crossing of a flagman or signaling device, tho not required by ordinance, is justified when the crossing is more than ordinarily dangerous.

Williams v Railway, 205-446; 214 NW 692

Duty to look and listen. An instruction to the effect that, in determining the care exercised by a traveler at a railroad crossing, the jury should consider whether obstructions to one's view were such as to require the traveler to look and listen, is quite harmless when the jury was elsewhere correctly instructed as to the duty to look and listen.

Love v Railway, 207-1278; 224 NW 815

Failure to stop and look. Instructions are properly refused when they impute contributory negligence to the driver of a vehicle in approaching and going upon a materially obstructed railway crossing without stopping and looking, when it is conceded that the obstructions were such that no stopping and looking would have discovered the approaching train except substantially at the point of collision.

Anderson v Railway, 203-715; 211 NW 872

Absence of lookout. Instructions held properly to authorize the jury to consider the absence of a lookout and other lack of warning on the question of negligence.

Love v Railway, 207-1278; 224 NW 815

Accident at crossing—maintaining lookout—unsustained issue. Reversible error results from submitting the issue whether the engineer of a railway train was negligent in not maintaining a proper lookout for automobiles approaching a public crossing, when the evidence shows to the contrary and that the approaching automobile was discovered at the earliest reasonable opportunity, which was too late to prevent the accident.

Simmons v Railway, 217-1277; 252 NW 516

"Physical fact" rule. A requested instruction should be given, when the testimony is supporting, to the effect that, if the view of a railway track is unobstructed for a long distance while a traveler is knowingly approaching it, he will be held to have seen the train approaching thereon, there being no diverting circumstance.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356; 27 NCCA 68; 27 NCCA 69

Sodemann v Railway, 215-827; 244 NW 865

8020 Railway and highway crossing at grade.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 369

State commerce commission abandoning overhead crossing—street change resulting—excess of jurisdiction. The state commerce commission has no power to order the abandonment of an overpass or overhead crossing over a railroad in a city or town, which results in altering the streets thereof. Jurisdiction of its streets is a city function which may not be invaded by the state commerce commission, regardless of its good-faith motives, and certiorari will lie to prevent such invasion.

8024 Repairs—aid by court.

Crossings—safe condition controlled by transportation needs. It is the duty of railways and municipalities to keep pace with the changes in transportation methods and to keep highways and railroad crossings in a reasonably safe condition, inasmuch as a type of crossing construction, considered safe when built, might be unsafe for a later changed method of use by the public.

Harris v Railway, 224-1319; 289 NW 338

CHAPTER 373

REGULATION OF CARRIERS

GENERAL PROVISIONS

8038 Duty to furnish cars and transport freight.

Noninsurer of perishable goods. A carrier is not, under the common law, an insurer against the freezing of articles which are subject to being frozen.

Dye Co. v Davis, 202-1008; 209 NW 744

Ignoring specific allegations of negligence and relying on breach of contract. In an action against a common carrier for damages to a shipment of stock, plaintiff may ignore his specific allegations of negligence, and rely on his general allegation of breach of contract to carry safely.

McCoy v Railway, 210-1075; 231 NW 353

Cause of death as question of law. Evidence reviewed, and held that the court could not say as a matter of law that the expert theory that hogs died of hog cholera after the termination of a shipment was more reasonable than the theory that they died because of the negligence of the carrier during shipment.

Brower v Railway, 218-317; 252 NW 755

Overloading cars. The court is in error in holding as a matter of law that a carrier of livestock knew or ought to have known that the cars were overloaded, when the testimony shows that the agent of the carrier was necessarily compelled to inspect the cars after dark, and with a flash light, and when he could not clearly see the animals.

Wiersma v Railway, 213-223; 238 NW 579

Presumption from good and bad delivery. A showing that goods were in good condition when received by a carrier and in bad condition when delivered, presumptively establishes, in and of itself, the carrier's negligence. Error necessarily results from instructing that the shipper must show specific acts of negligence on the part of the carrier.

Dye Co. v Davis, 202-1008; 209 NW 744

Delivery in good condition—presumption—jury question. Evidence that animals were in good condition when delivered to a carrier; that an unusual number died during the shipment; that the surviving hogs were in good condition at the end of the shipment; coupled with uncertain testimony as to the amount of water furnished by the carrier to the animals for drinking purposes in very hot weather, presents a jury question on the issue whether the said deaths were the result of human agency.

McCoy v Railway, 210-1075; 231 NW 353

Prima facie case for recovery. Evidence tending to show that stock (1) was delivered to a carrier in good, healthy condition, (2) was turned over to the consignee in a damaged condition, (3) was insufficiently fed and watered during the shipment, and (4) was unaccompanied by a caretaker, makes a jury question on the issue of the carrier's liability for the damage.

Brower v Railway, 218-317; 252 NW 755

See Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

Unfrozen condition—jury question. A jury question is made on the issue whether goods were unfrozen when delivered to the carrier by testimony tending to show (1) that no freezing temperature had existed at the place of initial shipment at and for some substantial time prior to the delivery, and (2) that the goods near the doorway, along the sides, and at the ends of the car were frozen when delivered.

Dye Co. v Davis, 202-1008; 209 NW 744

Rule requiring written orders for cars. The rule of a carrier requiring orders by a shipper for cars to be in writing, and being a part of its freight-rate schedules on file with the board of railroad commissioners, is mandatory, and compliance therewith is not shown by evidence that the station agent, upon receiving an oral order, made a written memorandum thereof for his own convenience. Such rule is manifestly admissible as evidence in a proper case.

Jackson v Railway, 213-365; 238 NW 912

Continuing shipment. An order requiring a railway to accept in this state loaded cars which have arrived from another state through a terminated interstate shipment, and to transport said cars without reloading, is valid and enforceable. 152 Iowa 317 affirmed.

Chicago, Mil. Ry. Co. v State, 233 US 334

Special damages. A carrier is not liable for special damages consequent on its negligent delay in delivering a shipment unless, at or before the time of shipment, the carrier is notified of the special purpose for which the shipment is intended and of the necessity for prompt shipment. So held as to a shipment of cans by the consignor to itself, followed by damages to corn which the ultimate consignee was unable to can, owing to negligent delay in delivering shipment.

Percy v Railway, 207-889; 223 NW 879; 28 NCCA 717

When mistaken delivery absolves carrier. A carrier is not responsible for a loss which results from delivering a shipment to a person who is not the agent of the consignee for the purpose of such shipment, when the carrier justifiably believed such person to be such agent, and when such person was the very person to whom the consignor intended delivery to be made, because of a like belief on his part as to such agency.

8039 Cars of connecting roads.

Liability of initial and connecting carriers. See under §10980

8042 Limitation on liability.

ANALYSIS

- I LIMITATIONS IN GENERAL
- II INTERSTATE COMMERCE

I LIMITATIONS IN GENERAL

Carrier's "burden of proof"—instruction—nonprejudicial error. In an action for damages against a railroad for the value of a stallion which died in transit, where the court clearly defined those matters and facts as to which the burden of proof was on plaintiff, and in substance charged the jury that, upon plaintiff having successfully carried this burden, the "burden of proof" would be on defendant to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, the excepted cause, held, the use of the phrase "burden of proof" as quoted in second instruction was not error.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Damages—condition of livestock at end of route—no determination of recovery. In an action against railroad ex contractu for value of livestock shipped, whether animal's condition at the end of the route would lead a reasonable man to believe that such condition was caused by railroad's act was not determinative of recovery.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Delay of shipment—special damages. A carrier is not liable for special damages consequent on its negligent delay in delivering a shipment unless at or before the time of shipment the carrier is notified of the special purpose for which the shipment is intended and of the necessity for prompt shipment. So held as to a shipment of cans by the consignor to itself, followed by damages to corn which the ultimate consignee was unable to can, owing to negligent delay in delivering shipment.

Percy v Railway, 207-889; 223 NW 879; 28 NCCA 717

Instruction—"act or omission"—not erroneous. In an action for damages against a railroad for value of stallion which died in transit, an instruction placing on the railroad the burden of proving that its failure to transport stallion to destination "was not due to any act or omission upon the part of the railway company" will not be erroneous because of failure to use the words "negligent act or omission".

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Liability as insurer. In an action for damages against a carrier for loss of livestock, the liability of carrier is not only that of bailee, but as insurer against all risks incident to the transportation, save such losses as might result from the act of God or some other excepted cause.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Newsboys as passengers. Newsboys on railway passenger trains are, in a legal sense, passengers, even tho they travel on free transportation furnished by the railway company for a consideration under a contract between their employer and the said company, which contract, unbeknown to them, stipulates that they shall not be considered passengers.

Shaddock v Railway, 218-281; 252 NW 772

When person not "passenger". A person while walking in the street toward a street car for the purpose of entering the car for passage thereon cannot be deemed a "passenger", and the carrier operating the car owes such person that degree of care only, which it owes to all people in the street, to wit, ordinary care.

Moss v Railway, 217-354; 251 NW 627

Pleading affirmative defense—instruction on preponderance of evidence. In an action to recover damages from a railroad for value of stallion which died during transportation, wherein an excepted cause of death is pleaded and relied on as an affirmative defense, railroad will be entitled only to instruction that verdict must be for railroad if such cause should appear from a preponderance of the evidence.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Injuries to livestock—directed verdict—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence that injury to cow was caused by negligence of alleged common carrier was insufficient to make a jury question when the injury was not discovered until 3 hours after the cow was delivered and there was no showing of any injury at the time the cow was unloaded.

Mountain v Albaugh, 227-1282; 290 NW 693

Shipment unaccompanied—action ex contractu—affirmatively showing negligence unnecessary. In an action against a railroad for damages, where plaintiff does not accompany shipment, he will not be bound to support his action, brought ex contractu, by affirmative showing of negligence by the carrier, nor will he be bound by a showing that a human agency caused the loss since this would merely establish negligence.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

II INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Discussion. See 2 ILB 194—Sale and delivery as interstate commerce; 12 ILR 30—The "local transaction" in interstate commerce

Applicability. This section is not applicable to interstate commerce. 153 Iowa 103 reversed. Chicago, RI Ry. Co. v Cramer, 232 US 490

Interstate commerce—unallowable burden on. A foreign corporation seeking to operate in this state an exclusive interstate pipe-line system may not be constitutionally required by a state statute, as a condition precedent to the construction of its line and to the transacting of its said business, even on its own private right of way:

1. To apply for, obtain, and pay for a permit to carry on said business, and pay all expenses attending the hearing on said application; or

2. To consent to any and all statutes then or thereafter in force regulatory of said business; or

3. To consent that the state may levy on it such general property taxes and/or taxes on gross receipts, and/or taxes on net income as the general assembly may thereafter prescribe; or

4. To consent to and pay an annual license fee.

Reason: Each of said requirements imposes an unallowable burden on interstate commerce.

8049 Long and short haul—fair rate.

Shipping over long route—recovery of excess charge. Where a carrier on his own motion and without proffering any reason therefor carries an interstate shipment over the longer of two routes and collects the published rate for said longer route, the shipper may, without resort to the interstate commerce commission, recover of the carrier the freight rates paid by him in excess of the published rate for the shorter route.

Rule requiring written orders for cars. The rule of a carrier requiring orders by a shipper for cars to be in writing, and being a part of its freight-rate schedules on file with the board of railroad commissioners, is mandatory, and compliance therewith is not shown by evidence that the station agent, upon receiving an oral order, made a written memorandum thereof for his own convenience. Such rule is manifestly admissible as evidence in a proper case.

ANALYSIS

I LIABILITY IN GENERAL

II DELAY IN SHIPMENT

Liability of initial and connecting carriers. See under §10980

I LIABILITY IN GENERAL

Action ex contractu—affirmatively showing negligence unnecessary. In an action against a railroad for damages, where plaintiff does not accompany shipment, he will not be bound to support his action, brought ex contractu, by affirmative showing of negligence by the carrier, nor will he be bound by a showing that a human agency caused the loss since this would merely establish negligence.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Carrier's "burden of proof." In an action for damages against a railroad for the value of a stallion which died in transit, where the court clearly defined those matters and facts as to which the burden of proof was on plaintiff, and in substance charged the jury that, upon plaintiff having successfully carried this burden, the "burden of proof" would be on defendant to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, the excepted cause, held, the use of the phrase "burden of proof" as quoted in second instruction was not error.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Cause of death as question of law. Evidence reviewed, and held that the court could not say as a matter of law that the expert theory that hogs died of hog cholera after the termination of a shipment was more reasonable than the theory that they died because of the negligence of the carrier during shipment.

Brower v Railway, 218-317; 252 NW 755

Construction of statute. This section does not justify an instruction which, in effect, submits to the jury the question of the reasonableness of a freight train schedule. These statutes contemplate the fixing of livestock-shipping schedules by the railroad commission, with the attending presumption that such schedules will be reasonable.

Siegel v Railway, 201-712; 208 NW 78

Damages—condition of livestock. In an action against railroad ex contractu for value of livestock shipped, whether animal's condition at the end of the route would lead a reasonable man to believe that such condition was caused by railroad's act was not determinative of recovery.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Injuries—directed verdict—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence that injury to cow was caused by negligence of alleged common carrier was insufficient to make a jury question when the injury was not discovered until 3 hours after the cow was delivered and there was no showing of any injury at the time the cow was unloaded.

Mountain v Albaugh, 227-1282; 290 NW 693

Speculative verdict for damages. A verdict for damages consequent on the death from congestion of the lungs of stock during shipment will not be permitted to stand when, on the record, the cause of said congestion can be equally attributed either (1) to the act of the shipper in unduly exerting the hogs prior to the complete loading of the stock, or (2) to the rough handling of the train while the stock was being transported.

Wiederin v Railway, 212-1103; 237 NW 344

Delivery in good condition—presumption—jury question. Evidence that animals were in good condition when delivered to a carrier; that an unusual number died during the shipment; that the surviving hogs were in good condition at the end of the shipment; coupled with uncertain testimony as to the amount of water furnished by the carrier to the animals for drinking purposes in very hot weather, presents a jury question on the issue whether the said deaths were the result of human agency.

McCoy v Railway, 210-1075; 231 NW 353

Ignoring specific allegations of negligence and relying on breach of contract. In an action against a common carrier for damages to a shipment of stock, plaintiff may ignore his specific allegations of negligence, and rely on his general allegation of breach of contract to carry safely.

McCoy v Railway, 210-1075; 231 NW 353

Instruction—"act or omission." In an action for damages against a railroad for value of stallion which died in transit, an instruction placing on the railroad the burden of proving that its failure to transport stallion to destination "was not due to any act or omission upon the part of the railway company" will not be erroneous because of failure to use the words "negligent act or omission".

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Liability as insurer. In an action for damages against a carrier for loss of livestock, the liability of carrier is not only that of bailee, but as insurer against all risks incident to the transportation, save such losses as might result from the act of God or some other excepted cause.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Negligence—burden of proof. Shipper of livestock who accompanies shipment as caretaker has burden to establish the negligence alleged to have injured the stock.

Wiederin v Railway, 212-1103; 237 NW 344

Overloading cars—jury question. The court is in error in holding as a matter of law that a carrier of livestock knew or ought to have known that the cars were overloaded, when the testimony shows that the agent of the carrier was necessarily compelled to inspect the cars after dark, and with a flashlight, and when he could not clearly see the animals.

Wiersma v Railway, 213-223; 238 NW 579

Pleading affirmative defense. In an action to recover damages from railroad for value of stallion which died during transportation, wherein an excepted cause of death is pleaded and relied on as an affirmative defense, railroad will be entitled only to instruction that verdict must be for railroad if such cause should appear from a preponderance of the evidence.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Prima facie case for recovery. Evidence tending to show that stock (1) was delivered to a carrier in good, healthy condition, (2) was turned over to the consignee in a damaged condition, (3) was insufficiently fed and watered during the shipment, and (4) was unaccompanied by a caretaker, makes a jury question on the issue of the carrier's liability for the damage.

Brower v Railway, 218-317; 252 NW 755
See Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

II DELAY IN SHIPMENT

Damages—double measure. A shipper may be entitled to recover of a carrier for a delayed shipment damages measured by the difference in value of the shipment immediately after the transportation, and such value as it would have been if the transportation had been without negligence; but he is not entitled, in addition, to any amount for care, feed, or medical services expended in order to render the shipment fit for the market.

Siegel v Railway, 201-712; 208 NW 78

Nonrecoverable damages. In an action against a common carrier for damages to livestock, based solely on the claim that the carrier had been guilty of negligent delay in the shipment and that the delay had resulted in sickness of the stock, recovery may not be had for damages to other stock, strangers to the shipment, because such other stock contracted the same sickness by intermingling with the stock which had been shipped.

Siegel v Railway, 201-712; 208 NW 78

Assumed burden of proof. A carrier which pleads that, as to a shipment of livestock, it was under the necessity to keep, hold, and feed the stock under the shipper's direction, and that it made every effort to discharge that duty, may not, on appeal, contend that the shipper should be held to the burden of showing that the injury did not result from his negligence.

Riddle v Railway, 203-1232; 210 NW 770

Instructions—correct but inexplicit. A correct instruction as to the responsibility of a carrier for the acts of its different agencies employed in transporting and delivering a shipment is sufficient, in the absence of a request for particular limitations thereon.

Riddle v Railway, 203-1232; 210 NW 770

Negligence in unloading. A carrier is not negligent in unloading and caring for stock at a station specially equipped for such service, even tho it might have carried the stock to a more distant point on the line of its destination before unloading, and thereby have avoided a washout on its line and a resulting delay, when to have so done would have been likely to involve the carrier in a violation of the federal stock-shipping law.

Canady v Railway, 203-12; 212 NW 322

Strike as defense. The plea that a carrier of livestock was prevented from making delivery because of a strike among stockyards employees must fail when the jury might well find that, if the carrier had exercised reasonable diligence, delivery would have been made notwithstanding the strike.

Riddle v Railway, 203-1232; 210 NW 770

Value of livestock. Competent oral testimony of the value of livestock is admissible even tho a recognized market journal is in evidence showing such values.

Riddle v Railway, 203-1232; 210 NW 770

CLASSIFICATION AND PASSENGER RATES

8126 Passenger rates—limitation.

Limitation on interstate ticket. A passenger in the use of an interstate excursion ticket, issued under a schedule filed with and approved by the interstate commerce commission, is conclusively held to know that he has no right to travel on any train except on the train specified in said schedule, even tho he has been otherwise informed by the carrier's agent, has never seen the schedule, and even the ticket itself shows no limitation to any particular train. It follows that damages consequent on being ejected from the train on which the passenger has no right to ride are nonrecoverable, whether the action sound in contract or tort.

Foley v Railway, 205-72; 217 NW 563

8128 Exceptions.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 20

WEIGHING OF COAL

8137 Coal in car lots.

Loss by evaporation. In an action against a carrier for a shortage in the shipment of coal, the trial court may very properly refuse to deduct from the apparent weight any percentage or amount for evaporation, when the testimony relative thereto simply consists of federal bulletins of the department of mines, tending to show that in such shipments there is, at times, and under different conditions, a variable loss of weight by evaporation.

Smith v Railway, 202-292; 209 NW 465

8138 Where weighed—bills of lading.

Bills of lading—identification. A bill of lading is amply identified as issued by the initial carrier by a showing that it was in the hands of the consignee and was by him delivered to and accepted by the delivering carrier when the consignee received the goods.

Smith v Railway, 202-292; 209 NW 465

8141 Prima facie evidence.

Measure of damages. In an action against a carrier for a shortage in the delivery of a shipment of coal, the value of the shortage at the point of shipment is not an improper measure of damages.

Smith v Railway, 202-292; 209 NW 465

Value at distant market. A coal dealer who has for a long time purchased coal at points in a foreign state is competent to testify to the value of such commodity at said foreign points.

Smith v Railway, 202-292; 209 NW 465

Variation in scale weights. In an action against a carrier for a shortage in the shipment of coal, the weights at the point of shipment and destination are presumptively correct, and the trial court may very properly disregard testimony tending to show, in substance, that scales frequently disagree as to the weight of such commodity.

I STATUTE IN GENERAL

Carrier—state (?) or interstate (?). An employee is not engaged in interstate commerce while working for an interstate carrier in the construction of an entirely new, incomplete, and wholly unused telegraph line.

Chi. RI Ry. v Lundquist, 206-499; 221 NW 228; 30 NCCA 255

Interstate carrier—lex loci contractus. A contract of employment for and on behalf of an interstate commerce carrier is consummated in this state when the conditional offer of employment is accepted in this state by a resident thereof, even tho the offer is made in a foreign state.

Chi. RI Ry. v Lundquist, 206-499; 221 NW 228

"Last clear chance." The doctrine of "last clear chance" can have no possible application when the danger of the injured person was discovered at a time when manifestly nothing could be done to prevent the injury.

Albright v Railway, 200-678; 205 NW 462; 27 NCCA 176; 27 NCCA 651

Recklessness of railway employees—insufficient pleading to establish. In action for personal injuries sustained by automobile passenger in collision between automobile and railway motorcar, where petition alleged that railway motorcar had been standing a short distance from crossing, obscured from view of motorist by shrubbery along railway right of way, and was driven onto crossing and into the course of oncoming automobile without warning, and that railway motorcar could have been stopped by applying brakes, such allegations were insufficient to state a cause of action based upon recklessness of employees of defendant railroad.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

II LIABILITY IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 9 ILB 291—Clauses giving carrier the benefit of shipper's insurance; 10 ILB 322—Liability of carrier for delay License—revocation. An implied license to pedestrians on a railway right of way to use a path alongside a railway track is impliedly repealed by the act of the railway in substantially obstructing such path.

Radenhausen v Railway, 205-547; 218 NW 316

Damage to privately owned car. An action by a shipper to recover of an initial carrier damages to the shipper's own car which had been delivered to the said carrier, fully loaded, for transportation to a connecting carrier, and injured by the connecting carrier while returning the car to the initial carrier, cannot be maintained in the absence of some showing as to the contract or arrangement governing the return of the car.

Bott Co. v Railway, 215-16; 244 NW 679

Injury not reasonably to be anticipated. A carrier is not liable in damages to a passenger for failure to guard against an injury or occurrence which human foresight would not reasonably anticipate. So held where a passenger fainted in the toilet room of a coach and was severely burned by falling on uncovered steam pipes near the wall.

Hauser v Railway, 205-940; 219 NW 60; 58 ALR 687

Limitation on interstate ticket. A passenger, in the use of an interstate excursion ticket issued under a schedule filed with and approved by the interstate commerce commission, is conclusively held to know that he has no right to travel on any train except on the train specified in said schedule, even tho he has been otherwise informed by the carrier's agent, has never seen the schedule, and even tho the ticket itself shows no limitation to any particular train. It follows that damages consequent on being ejected from the train on which the passenger has no right to ride are nonrecoverable, whether the action sound in contract or tort.

Foley v Railway, 205-72; 217 NW 563

Starting streetcar. Question whether conductor started streetcar when passenger, who was injured by being thrown to the floor of car, was in position of peril and such fact was apparent to the conductor, held for jury determination.

Havens v Railway, (NOR); 207 NW 677; 32 NCCA 680

Carriage of passengers—termination of relation. Principle reaffirmed that a passenger on a streetcar ceases to be such the moment he completes his step from the car into the street.

MacLearn v Utilities Co., 212-555; 234 NW 851; 2 NCCA (NS) 551

Trestle as licensed place. It will not be lightly inferred that a railway company knowingly consented to the use of its trestle as a footway for pedestrians when such use, under the peculiar circumstances existing, was not only perilous but literally foolhardy.

Brimeyer v Railway, 213-1289; 241 NW 409

Failure to maintain lookout. Failure of the operatives of a train to keep a lookout for pedestrians near the tracks does not constitute negligence when such failure had nothing whatever to do with the resulting accident.

Radenhausen v Railway, 205-547; 218 NW 316

III NEGLIGENCE IN GENERAL

Safe tools and place to work—reasonable care required. A master is required to exercise reasonable care to furnish reasonably safe tools, appliances, and instrumentalities for use in the work which the servant is expected to perform and the same degree of care in furnishing a reasonably safe place in which to work.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Attractive nuisance. Evidence that cinders were piled along a railroad track, and that a 7-year-old boy was suffered to walk thereon in going on an errand for his mother, furnishes no possible application for the doctrine of "attractive nuisances".

Radenhausen v Railway, 205-547; 218 NW 316; 37 NCCA 15

Railroad turntable. A turntable, owned by the defendant, which was situated within four or five hundred feet of its depot, near a public highway, and in the vicinity of a ball ground, and a stream of water to which boys were accustomed to resort for fishing and skating, was fastened by a pair of iron clamps, connecting the ends of the rails on the table, by means of a loop and pin, with the corresponding ends of the rails on the embankment adjacent thereto. After a number of boys, under 12 years of age, had removed said fastenings, and had set the table in motion by pushing, they were joined by the plaintiff, a lad of 13 years, who jumped upon the table while in motion, lay down thereon with his head toward the center, and his legs projecting over the end, and was immediately injured by having his legs caught between the table and the embankment. In an action to recover for such injury, the plaintiff admitted that he knew that the space between the ends of the table and the embankment was but one and one-half inches, and that if his leg was caught between them it would be crushed, and that if he had thought of the danger he could and would have avoided it, but that he did not think of it because he was having fun. Held, that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury, and the evidence being uncontroverted, the court properly instructed the jury to find for the defendant.

Merryman v Railway, 85-634; 52 NW 545

Contributory negligence. A boy 12 years old, of good ability and usually well informed, who is injured by catching his foot between the end of a moving turntable and the side of the pit while attempting to step from it on a dark night, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Carson v Railway Co., 96-583; 65 NW 831

Turntable in neighborhood of street—negligence. A railroad company maintaining a turntable on an unfenced lot, near a public alley, and which was from 80 to 300 feet from the street, is liable for injuries received by a seven-year-old child while playing thereon, caused by the company's failure to use reasonable care to so guard and fasten the turntable as to prevent injuries to children tempted to play on it.

Edgington v Railway Co., 116-410; 90 NW 95

Sufficiency of fastening turntable. Where, in an action against a railroad company for injuries received by a child while playing on defendant's turntable, it was shown that the turntable was unfastened by one of the children with plaintiff, the question of the sufficiency of the fastening used was one of fact for the jury.

Edgington v Railway Co., 116-410; 90 NW 95

Capacity to appreciate danger. A child seven years and eight months old cannot be considered, as a matter of law, of sufficient age and

III NEGLIGENCE IN GENERAL—continued intelligence to appreciate the danger to which she exposed herself in playing on a railroad turntable, and such question was properly left to the jury in determining the question of contributory negligence.

Edgington v Railway Co., 116-410; 90 NW 95

Contribution of playmates to injury. The fact that injuries received by a child while playing on a railroad turntable were immediately caused by the child's playmates unfastening and operating the turntable, does not relieve the company from liability, the gist of the action being the keeping of a dangerous machine in a place where children might reasonably be expected to resort and to play thereon.

Edgington v Railway Co., 116-410; 90 NW 95

Trespassing boy—jumping from freight car to building. There are cases where the owner of premises will be held liable for injury to a child too young to understand the fact or meaning of trespass, or to care for his own safety when attracted to the premises by some act or omission of the owner which he knows, or as a reasonably prudent person ought to apprehend, would render the premises dangerous. But where, as in this case, a boy 13 years of age climbed upon a freight car standing at defendant's railway station and from there jumped to the roof of a storage building for electric cars, and when about to jump back to the car was injured by contact with an un-insulated power wire passing above the roof of the building, and it appeared that plaintiff knew he was a trespasser, that the railway was operated by electricity and that electric wires were dangerous; that the roof could only be reached by climbing the cars; that this was the first incident of the kind and no necessity for guards or signs had been indicated to the owner, the plaintiff was guilty of such negligence as to preclude recovery for the injury.

Anderson v Railway, 150-465; 130 NW 391

Railroad wreck—not attractive nuisance. An owner or occupant of premises owes no duty to an infant who, without the knowledge or invitation, express or implied, of such owner or occupant, goes, out of idle curiosity, upon such premises, and is injured by some dangerous agency. And the existence of a railway wreck, consisting of two overturned box cars and promiscuously interwoven trackage, does not constitute such a known, attractive and dangerous agency as to amount to an implied invitation to children to come upon the premises, out of idle curiosity, to view it, and thus bring the child within the "law of attractive agencies".

Wilmes v Railway, 175-101; 156 NW 877

Artificial pond—nonattractive nuisance. An ordinary pond of water, unguarded and unfenced, within the corporate limits of a city, and entirely within a railway right of way, and formed by natural drainage from surrounding land, which settled into a borrow pit, and around which children habitually played, is not an attractive nuisance, in such sense as to render the railway company liable in damages because an immature child met death by falling therein.

Blough v Railway, 189-1256; 179 NW 840

Plank shelf along cofferdam—not attractive nuisance. A plank shelf along the side of a cofferdam, adjacent to a bridge abutment which was securely inclosed by a substantial barbed wire fence, located in the open country and fairly removed from habitation, is not an "attractive nuisance" in such sense as to render the owner responsible for the death of an immature child, who, as a mere licensee, at the best, went upon the shelf and fell therefrom into the water.

Massingham v Railway, 189-1288; 179 NW 832

Accident at crossing—habitual negligence of engineer. On the issue of negligence of an engineer in operating his train on a certain occasion, evidence of his conduct on prior and similar occasions, is inadmissible.

Darden v Railway, 213-583; 239 NW 531

Action ex contractu—affirmatively showing negligence unnecessary. In an action against a railroad for damages, where plaintiff does not accompany shipment, he will not be bound to support his action, brought ex contractu, by affirmative showing of negligence by the carrier, nor will he be bound by a showing that a human agency caused the loss since this would merely establish negligence.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Alighting from moving train. Negligence may be found in the act of a brakeman of a train in advising a passenger to alight from a moving train, and it is not necessarily negligence for the passenger to follow the advice.

Bersie v Railway, 202-1090; 211 NW 250

Baggage in aisle—negligence. Negligence on the part of a carrier may not be predicated on the presence of baggage in the aisle of a passenger coach when there is no evidence that the carrier knew, or ought in reason to have known, of the presence of such baggage.

Costello v Railway, 205-1077; 217 NW 434; 28 NCCA 82

Carriage of livestock—overloading cars—jury question. The court is in error in holding as a matter of law that a carrier of livestock knew or ought to have known that the cars were overloaded, when the testimony shows that the agent of the carrier was necessarily compelled to inspect the cars after dark, and with a flash light, and when he could not clearly see the animals.

Wiersma v Railway, 213-223; 238 NW 579

Injuries to livestock—directed verdict—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence that injury to cow was caused by negligence of alleged common carrier was insufficient to make a jury question when the injury was not discovered until 3 hours after the cow was delivered and there was no showing of any injury at the time the cow was unloaded.

Mountain v Albaugh, 227-1282; 290 NW 693

Exoneration of servant—effect on master's liability. When a master is liable, if at all, because of the negligence of his servant, a verdict exonerating the servant from the alleged negligence, and a judgment of dismissal entered thereon, from which no appeal is taken, necessarily exonerates the master.

Lahr v Railway, 212-544; 234 NW 223

Hall v Miller, 212-835; 235 NW 298

Pleading negligence of employees operating railway motorcar—sufficiency. In action for personal injuries sustained by an automobile passenger in collision between automobile and railroad motorcar, where petition alleged that motorcar had been standing at crossing obscured from view of motorist by shrubbery along railroad right of way, and was driven into course of the oncoming automobile without any warning and that it could have been stopped by applying the brakes, such allegations were sufficient to state a cause of action based upon negligence of railroad employees.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

Instruction without basis in evidence. An instruction authorizing a finding of negligence on the part of a railroad company if an employee thereof discovered the danger of an approaching vehicle and did not, in the exercise of ordinary care, report such danger to the engineer is wholly inapplicable to a record which clearly reveals the fact that, when the employee aforesaid discovered the danger, no ordinary care could have prevented the accident.

Gilliam v Railway, 206-1291; 222 NW 12

Injuries to persons on tracks—no-eyewitness rule. In an action against a railway company for damages for negligently running over and killing, during the nighttime, and within its switching yard, a pedestrian, the all-important and indispensable fact that said pedestrian was, when hit, on a nearby public sidewalk—where he had a right to be—will not be presumed from the fact that there was no eyewitness to the fatal accident, the “no-eyewitness rule” having no such function.

Young v Railway, 223-773; 273 NW 885

“Last clear chance” doctrine—applicability. The “last clear chance” doctrine has no application except in those cases only where defendant actually discovers plaintiff's position of peril in time to prevent injury by the exercise of ordinary care, and fails to exercise such care.

Graves v Railway, 207-30; 222 NW 344

“Last clear chance” doctrine—applicability. The “last clear chance” doctrine can have no application unless it be found that defendant discovered the negligence of the plaintiff at a time such that, by the exercise of reasonable care, defendant might have avoided injuring plaintiff.

Steele v Brada, 213-708; 239 NW 538

“Last clear chance”—evidence—insufficiency. The doctrine of “last clear chance” is not applicable unless peril of injured party is actually discovered and appreciated in time to prevent his injury by the exercise of ordinary care. So where plaintiff drives his truck at a speed of 4 or 5 miles per hour onto a railroad track, and is struck by a train going 4 or 5 miles per hour, and it is shown engineer of train felt a jar and, looking out of cab, saw some object in front of locomotive and immediately applied brakes and placed locomotive in reverse, held, evidence insufficient to submit to jury, and a motion for directed verdict was rightfully sustained.

Kinney v Railway, 17 F 2d, 708

“Last clear chance”—justifiable submission. The mere fact that a train operator on the rear of a backing train saw a party approaching a public crossing, at a time when the party was 100 or more feet distant, affords no basis for submitting to the jury the issue of the “last clear chance”; but such basis is furnished by testimony tending to show (1) that, to the knowledge of the operator, the party continued to approach said crossing and was in a position of peril when 30 feet therefrom, and (2) that the train could have been stopped within 20 feet.

Williams v Railway, 205-446; 214 NW 692; 27 NCCA 666

See Brimeyer v Railway, 213-1289; 241 NW 409

Licenser and licensee. A railway company may not be said to be guilty of actionable negligence because it habitually permits or suffers pedestrians on its right of way to use a path alongside, but well removed from the rails of its track.

Radenhausen v Railway, 205-547; 218 NW 316; 39 NCCA 36

Negligence—failure of coemployee to do his share of lifting. A coemployee is not shown to have been negligent by proof that while loading heavy rails upon a flat car he lifted less at times than at other times.

Kempe v Railway, 211-812; 232 NW 657; 74 ALR 148

Nonapprehended danger. Negligence may not be predicated on the failure of the operatives of a train to stop and remove a 7-year-old child from a pile of cinders near the track when there is no occasion to apprehend danger to the child.

Radenhausen v Railway, 205-547; 218 NW 316

Person under car—contributory negligence. A person who seeks shelter from a rain by going under a stationary railroad car, with full knowledge that the car might be moved at any time, is guilty of negligence; and it is no answer that he relied on a train crew sounding the engine whistle and ringing the engine bell before moving the car, the train crew having no reason to anticipate that anyone was under the car.

Anderson v Railway, 216-230; 249 NW 256

Private crossing—speed as basis for negligence. Reversible error results from so instructing as to permit the jury to base negligence on the speed of a train at a private farm crossing, irrespective of the safe or dangerous condition of such crossing.

Graves v Railway, 207-30; 222 NW 344

Proximate cause of injury—noncausal relation. Principle reaffirmed that negligence becomes quite inconsequential when it has no causal relation to the accident in question.

Simmons v Railway, 217-1277; 252 NW 516

Remand—right to amend. A plaintiff manifestly does not set up a new and different cause of action when, after remand on appeal in a law action based on negligence, he, by allowable pleadings, rephrases and elaborates an unadjudicated ground of negligence which was embraced in his pleadings at the time of the original trial.

Lahr v Railway, 218-1155; 252 NW 525

Remand—utilizing unadjudicated ground of negligence. Plaintiff, in an action based on negligence, who fails on appeal to sustain a verdict in his favor against an employer based solely on the doctrine of respondeat superior, may, on remand and retrial, avail himself of a ground of negligence which was alleged by him on the original trial, but which was unadjudicated, and which, if established, would render the defendant liable irrespective of the doctrine of respondeat superior.

Lahr v Railway, 218-1155; 252 NW 525

Res ipsa loquitur—applicability. Principle recognized that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is, under appropriate facts, applicable to common carriers.

Preston v Railway, 214-156; 241 NW 648

Res ipsa loquitur—scope. The full limit of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is that the peculiar facts of the occurrence warrant or permit the jury to draw the inference of negligence, not that such facts compel the jury to draw such inference in the absence of explanatory evidence. The doctrine does not in the slightest degree change the burden of proof on the issue of negligence.

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151; 3 NCCA(NS) 547

Preston v Railway, 214-156; 241 NW 648

Street railway—contributory negligence—alighting from moving streetcar. Alighting from a slowly moving streetcar is not necessarily negligence per se.

Fitzgerald v Railway, 201-1302; 207 NW 602; 2 NCCA(NS) 540

Concurrent or intervening cause. Record reviewed, relative to a passenger's alighting from a moving streetcar and being almost immediately hit or touched by a passing automobile, and held to present a jury question on the issues whether the injury was caused (1) solely by the operation of the streetcar, or (2) solely by the operation of the automobile, or (3) by the concurrent movement of both the streetcar and the automobile.

Fitzgerald v Railway, 201-1302; 207 NW 602

Excessive speed—lack of control—jury question. Evidence held to present jury questions on the issues whether a motorman was, in view of the presence of children in the street, operating his streetcar at an excessive rate of speed; also whether he had his car under proper control.

Allen v Railway, 218-286; 253 NW 143

Failure to give warning—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a motorman in the operation of a streetcar failed to give warning of the approach of the car.

Allen v Railway, 218-286; 253 NW 143

Failure to maintain lookout—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a motorman in the operation of a streetcar maintained a proper lookout for pedestrians.

Allen v Railway, 218-286; 253 NW 143

No warning signal at crossing—statute violations—negligence. The failure of compliance with a statutory standard of care is negligence. In an action for personal injuries sustained by an automobile passenger in collision in Illinois between an automobile and railway motorcar, where petition alleged that railway employees failed to ring bell or sound whistle of motorcar while approaching a crossing, as required by Illinois statute, such allegations were sufficient to state a cause of action based on negligence of employees of defendant railroad.

Smith v Railway, 227-1404; 291 NW 417

Injury to person near tracks—"oversweep" of car turning corner. The operator of a streetcar may not assume that a pedestrian who is intercepted by a streetcar at intersecting streets will avoid being hit by the "oversweep" of the car as it passes around the corner, when such operator has reason to know that the pedestrian is unaware of the impending danger.

Mangan v Railway, 200-597; 203 NW 705; 41 ALR 368

Injury from "oversweep" of streetcar turning corner. A jury question on the issue of negligence of a streetcar company and the contributory negligence of an injured plaintiff-pedestrian is presented by evidence tending to show that the plaintiff, in crossing a streetcar track at a point where streets intersected, and where the general traffic was congested, was intercepted by a passing streetcar, and, not knowing that the car was going to turn at said intersection, took up a position for his own safety within the limits of a safety zone marked out by the company on the street pavement immediately adjacent to the tracks, and used exclusively for taking on and discharging passengers; and that the motorman, knowing the position of plaintiff, and without any warning of danger to him, turned the car into the intersecting street, with resulting injury to plaintiff by being hit by the "oversweep" of the rear end of the car.

Mangan v Railway, 200-597; 203 NW 705; 41 ALR 368; 28 NCCA 622

Streetcar intersection—negligence per se. The operator of an automobile cannot be said to be negligent per se in driving into an intersection on a dark night in front of a rapidly oncoming streetcar with no headlight and with the entire front end of the streetcar unlighted, when, immediately before entering the intersection, he stops and listens, and looks both ways for streetcars, and sees none (so he testifies) because of the glare of oil station lights immediately to his left from which side the streetcar was approaching, and especially when there is evidence that the streetcar was approaching without audible signals.

Deiling v Railway, 217-687; 251 NW 622

Opening streetcar door as invitation to alight. Evidence that the conductor of a streetcar called the street, and, at a point very close to the customary place for discharging passengers, opened the exit door, after a stop signal had been given, and after he saw the passenger standing in front of the closed door, presents a jury question on the issue whether the opening of the door was an invitation to the passenger forthwith to alight, even tho unknown to the passenger, the car had not fully stopped.

Fitzgerald v Railway, 201-1302; 207 NW 602; 2 NCCA(NS) 540

Opinion evidence—unallowable questions. Whether a motorman could have done anything which would have stopped his streetcar sooner than it was stopped is properly excluded because the question calls for an unallowable conclusion, and also invades the province of the jury.

Allen v Railway, 218-286; 253 NW 143

Stopping streetcar in intersection and failure to warn. The operator of a streetcar is not negligent (1) in stopping, on signal, the car in the middle of a smoothly paved street intersection rather than at the near side thereof, and (2) in failing to warn a passenger that he might encounter peril in the street from passing vehicles.

MacLearn v Utilities Co., 212-555; 234 NW 851; 2 NCCA(NS) 551

Sudden stopping of streetcar. Evidence that a street railway car was put in motion in order to carry it around a corner at two intersecting streets, and was momentarily thereafter brought to a sudden stop because of the unexpected act of an automobile driver in attempting to pass the streetcar and in being caught by the overswing of the rear end of the streetcar, presents no jury question on the issue of negligence in operating the streetcar.

Wheeler v Railway, 205-439; 215 NW 950; 55 ALR 473

Tracks creating hidden danger. A jury question as to the negligent operation of a streetcar and as to the contributory negligence of the driver of an automobile is presented by evidence (1) that the streetcar tracks were so laid that, as they approached a turn at a street intersection, they imperceptibly approached the street curb until, near the intersection, insufficient space remained for the passage of an automobile between a passing streetcar and the curb, and (2) that the driver of the automobile, without knowledge of such condition of the tracks, and without warning from the streetcar employee who was present, was caught at said point of danger, and was not only "wedged in" between the streetcar and curb by the front end of the streetcar, but was crushed by the oversweep of the rear end of the car as it turned away from the auto at the intersection.

Knudson v Railway, 209-429; 228 NW 470

IV EMPLOYEES PROTECTED

Assumption of risk—failure of co-employee to do his share of lifting. An experienced railway employee who knows or learns during the work of loading heavy railway rails upon a flat car that a co-employee was in the habit of lifting less at times than at other times, and who understood and appreciated that in working under such conditions he might be compelled at any time to carry or lift an increased load with danger of injury to himself, must quit the work, or he will be deemed to have assumed the appreciated and understood danger.

Kempe v Railway, 211-812; 232 NW 657; 74 ALR 148; 31 NCCA 768

IV EMPLOYEES PROTECTED—concluded

Assumption of risk—overtaxing oneself. An employee assumes the risk of overtaxing himself by lifting.

Kempe v Railway, 211-812; 232 NW 657; 74 ALR 148

Fraudulent release. A written release of all damages suffered by an injured party is fraudulent and void when it was in fact mutually intended as a receipt for wages only, and was signed by the injured party without negligence on his part; and the failure of the injured person, who was himself unable to read, to have such instrument read to him does not necessarily constitute negligence per se.

Farwark v Railway, 202-1229; 211 NW 875

Inadvertent self-inflicted injury. One may not recover damages for an injury arising out of his own act, and under circumstances under his exclusive control. So held where the party in removing a prop under a loading chute was injured by the prop falling against his face.

Rogers v Railway, 214-1018; 243 NW 351

V FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT

Applicability of state and federal acts. Injuries received by an employee of a common carrier, engaged in the transportation of both intrastate and interstate freight, are compensable under the state workmen's compensation act, and not under the corresponding federal act, when the employment, in the course of which and out of which the injuries arose, consists solely of the duty to patrol the railroad yards of the employer against thieves, trespassers, and fires.

Califore v Railway, 220-676; 263 NW 29

Assumption of risk incident to nature of work. Under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, a sectionman while inspecting a railway track assumes the risk of danger from passing trains.

Hamilton v Railway, 211-924; 234 NW 810; 31 NCCA 762

Fellow servants—nonassumption of risk. Under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, an employee does not assume the risk of an injury due to the negligence of a fellow servant.

Farwark v Railway, 202-1229; 211 NW 875; 26 NCCA 231; 31 NCCA 759

Contributory negligence by violating rule. The deliberate violation by a section foreman of a rule that, while inspecting his track on a motor car, he should cause one of his men to face to the rear and look for trains constitutes negligence.

Hamilton v Railway, 211-924; 234 NW 810

Injuries to servant—assumption of risk and negligence. In an action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act for damages for the death of a sectionman run down by a fast mail train, the plaintiff must affirmatively show (1) that the defendant was proximately negligent, and (2) that the plaintiff's decedent was not guilty of contributory negligence. Evidence held to show that plaintiff had failed on both fundamental requirements.

Hamilton v Railway, 211-924; 234 NW 810; 31 NCCA 762

Negligence—loading rails by hand. Record held to show that a railway company was not negligent, under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, in causing rails to be loaded by hand rather than by a hoisting machine or derrick.

Kempe v Railway, 211-812; 232 NW 657; 74 ALR 148

Negligence of fellow servant—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held insufficient to establish negligence on the part of a fellow servant.

Baird v Railway, 209-1026; 229 NW 759

Rapid speed in open country. In an action for the death of a section foreman while inspecting a railway track in the open country, the rapid speed of the train may not be assigned as negligence upon the part of the railway company.

Hamilton v Railway, 211-924; 234 NW 810

8159 Unallowable pleas.

Assumption of risk defined. It is an implied term of the servant's contract of employment that he assume the risk which naturally pertains to his work, but he is under no contract or legal obligation to assume any risk which is occasioned by a failure of duty on the part of his employer.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

"Vice-principal" or "fellow servant"—master's liability. Evidence held to warrant conclusion that owner of apparatus used to tear down silo, and who was actively engaged in such work, was a fellow servant; and, if he was a vice-principal, he was such only to the extent of being required to furnish plaintiff proper equipment and a safe place to work. The mere fact that one employee has authority over others does not make him a vice-principal or superior so as to charge the master with his negligence.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

8160 Damages by fire.ANALYSIS

- I STATUTE IN GENERAL
- II EVIDENCE
- III DAMAGES AND MEASURE THEREOF

I STATUTE IN GENERAL

Presumption of negligence. To instruct that a railroad company must overcome a presumption of negligence in setting out a fire "by negating every fact that would justify a finding of negligence on defendant's part" is not misleading when defendant is, by the instructions, fully exempted from liability on proof that its engine was properly equipped and properly operated.

Stickling v Railway, 215-1312; 247 NW 642

II EVIDENCE

Burden of proof. Evidence reviewed and held quite insufficient to show that the fire which destroyed plaintiff's property was set out by a railway company.

Beck v Railway, 214-628; 243 NW 154

See Stickling v Railway, 215-1312; 247 NW 642

Evidence of other fires set by other engines. In an action to recover damages consequent on a fire alleged to have been set out by a certain passing engine, evidence of other fires set out by other engines on other occasions near the place in question may be admissible, not on the issue of negligence, but on the issue as to how far an engine would throw burning embers.

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

Fire damage—evidence sufficiency. In an action against a railroad for loss of property by fire, the state court's construction of statute, respecting presumption against railroad causing fire damage, is binding on federal courts. So where a prima facie case is established by plaintiff and no rebuttal thereto is offered, evidence held sufficient to make case for jury.

Turner v Bremner, 40 F 2d, 368

III DAMAGES AND MEASURE THEREOF

Damages—unallowable evidence. On the issue as to the general damage to meadow land consequent on a fire set out by a passing railroad engine, evidence of the amount of grass seed which would have been realized had the grass been threshed instead of being used as hay, is wholly inadmissible,—the measure of damages in such case being the difference in value of the affected land before and after the fire.

Baird v Railway, 214-611; 243 NW 515

Other fires at time in question. Plaintiff in an action for damages consequent on a fire alleged to have been set by a passing engine, may show that the engine in question emitted sparks and burning embers which set fire to other combustible materials immediately preceding the fire in question.

Stickling v Railway, 212-149; 232 NW 677

8161 Baggage—liability.

Discussion. See 2 ILB 34—Liability for baggage

CHAPTER 374RELOCATION OF LINE*8164 Conditions.

Abandonment and dismantlement—claims of donors. In proceedings for the abandonment and dismantlement of a railway, the measure of recovery by those who have made donations for the construction of the road cannot be less than the value of the railway when dismantlement was begun, if said claims equal such value.

State v Beaton, 209-1291; 228NW 111

Appointment of receiver. The fact that a party purchases property at a receiver's sale does not exhaust the power of the court to appoint a second receiver of the property so purchased, in order to protect rights relative to said property which accrued after said sale and by reason of the wrongful acts of said purchaser.

State v Beaton, 205-1139; 217 NW 255

8165 Order of court.

Abandonment and dismantlement—claims—judgment defendants. In the determination of claims against the owner of a railroad preliminary to the dismantlement of the road, judgment should be rendered against both the original purchaser and against his vendee when the original purchase was made with the purpose in view of immediate dismantlement and when said original purchaser and his vendee have, during the entire proceedings, treated themselves as owners.

State v Beaton, 209-1291; 228 NW 111

CHAPTER 375

PRIVATE BUILDINGS AND SPUR TRACKS

8169 Buildings on railroad lands.

Right of way for private business site. The board of railroad commissioners has no constitutional power to order a railway company to furnish a private party with a site on its right of way, and to fix the rental for such site, in order to enable such party to erect and maintain on such site a coal shed in which he may store his coal and from which he may sell his coal for private gain.

Ferguson v Railway, 202-508; 210 NW 604; 54 ALR 1

8170 Destruction of buildings.

Entire or severable contract. A contract provision which is valid when standing alone is not necessarily rendered invalid by the fact that in the contract in question it is interwoven with other contract provisions which may be violative of a statute. So held where a lease sought to exempt the lessor, a railroad company, from liability to the lessee for negligence, but provided that, if such exemption legally failed, "the lessor shall have full benefit of any insurance effected by the lessee on structures erected on the premises".

Queen Ins. v Railway, 201-1072; 206 NW 804

8171 Spur tracks.

Spur track to state institution—maintenance cost. After a contract placed the burden on the state to pay the cost of construction, maintenance, and operation of a spur track to the industrial school for boys at Eldora, a state institution, and in a later clause required the railway company to maintain the spur track, the contract as a whole was construed and the apparent ambiguity resolved in a finding that the railroad should do the maintenance work, but that the state should pay the cost.

State v Sprague, 225-766; 281 NW 349

INTERURBAN RAILWAYS

8201 Definition.

Discussion. See 1 ILB 40—Status of interurban railways

8211 Franchises.

Valuation for rate-making purposes.

United Railways v West, 280 US 234

When franchise must yield to statute. A street-railway franchise ordinance which specifies, in effect, that, until the state statutes otherwise provide, the obligation of the company to construct and reconstruct paving between and outside the rails of its tracks shall be thus and so, manifestly must yield to such later enacted state statute.

In re Walnut St. Bridge, 220-55; 261 NW 781

Street railway granted relief—city's confiscatory rates. Under the statute, §767, C., '97 [§§6191, 6192, C., '39], granting cities and towns the power to authorize street railways where it is shown that under ordinance a contract was entered into providing maximum rates to be charged for carrying passengers, which limited the city to change of rates not oftener than once in 15 years, a sufficient showing was made in the court of original jurisdiction to warrant the granting of a temporary injunction against the city preventing a confiscation of property on account of low rate, and such temporary injunction will not be disturbed by appellate court until after the matter has been fully heard and determined in the lower court, unless an abuse of discretion is shown. The fact the railroad operated on the same rate for 20 years did not amount to an estoppel to secure relief from confiscatory rates by reason of long acquiescence.

City v Railway, 9 F 2d, 246

8212 Contracts and rates.

Street railway granted relief—city's confiscatory rates. Under the statute, §767, C., '97, [§§6191, 6192, C., '39], granting cities and towns the power to authorize street railways where it is shown that under ordinance a contract was entered into providing maximum rates to be charged for carrying passengers, which limited the city to change of rates not oftener than once in 15 years, a sufficient showing was made in the court of original jurisdiction to warrant the granting of a temporary injunction against the city preventing a confiscation of property on account of low rate, and such temporary injunction will not be disturbed by appellate court until after the matter has been fully heard and determined in the lower court, unless an abuse of discretion is shown. The fact the railroad operated on the same rate for 20 years did not amount to an estoppel to secure relief from confiscatory rates by reason of long acquiescence.

CHAPTER 382

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE LINES AND COMPANIES

8300 Right of way.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 364

Franchise—intentional abandonment. Evidence held quite insufficient to establish an intention to abandon a legislative-acquired franchise.

Osceola v Utilities, 219-192; 257 NW 340

Perpetual franchise—grantees. A telephone company which, prior to October 1, 1897 (when the Code of 1897 took effect), had constructed a toll line and local telephone system in a city or town, thereby acquired a perpetual legislative franchise subject to the reserved power of the state, and said franchise necessarily passes to the holder's grantee.

Osceola v Utilities, 219-192; 257 NW 340

8304 Equal facilities—delay.

Physical connection. This section does not require a telephone company to permit another like company to physically connect the lines of the two companies.

State v Tel. Co., 214-1100; 240 NW 252

Physical connection. A telephone company that has contracted for and is maintaining physical connection with the lines of another telephone company is under no common law obligation to contract on the same terms, or on any terms, with another telephone company for physical connection with the lines of the latter. (The doctrine that a public utility is under a common law obligation to furnish equal facilities to the public contemplates no one except those who see fit to become the subscribers or patrons of the company.)

State v Tel. Co., 214-1100; 240 NW 252

RECIPROCAL SERVICE

8308.2 Facilities to local exchange.

Duty to furnish service—physical connection. A telephone company that has contracted for and is maintaining physical connection with the lines of another telephone company is under no common law obligation to contract on the same terms, or on any terms, with another telephone company for physical connection with the lines of the latter. (The doctrine that a public utility is under a common law obligation to furnish equal facilities to the public contemplates no one except those who see fit to become the subscribers or patrons of the company.)

State v Tel. Co., 214-1100; 240 NW 252

Physical connection between lines. A telephone company is not under statutory obligation to permit its lines to be physically connected with the lines of another company, by a statute (§8304, C., '31) which withdraws from the company certain legal rights if it "refuses to furnish equal facilities to the public and to all connecting lines for the transmission of communications * * *"

State v Tel. Co., 214-1100; 240 NW 252

CHAPTER 383

ELECTRIC TRANSMISSION LINES

8309 Franchise.

Scope of statute. This chapter applies solely to electric transmission lines outside cities and towns.

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151

Location of line—power of county engineer. A franchise issued by the board of railroad commissioners to operate an electric transmission line "over, along, and across" a specified highway, under specifications calling for cross arms at the top of the poles, carries the right and power in the grantee so to erect its line that all parts thereof, including the superstructure, will be wholly within the lines of said highway. It follows that the general power of the county engineer, under §4838, C., '27, to locate such lines does not embrace the power so to locate the line that part of the superstructure will overhang land outside the highway.

Iowa Corp. v. Lindsey, 211-544; 231 NW 461

8310 Petition for franchise.

Extra-territorial extension of municipal light and power lines—constitutional taxation. Sections 6142 and 8310, C., '31, are constitutional insofar as they authorize cities and towns to levy taxes for extending, beyond their corporate limits, the transmission lines of their municipally owned electric light and power plants.

Carroll v Cedar Falls, 221-277; 261 NW 652

8313 Objections—hearing.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 122

8315 Valuation of franchise.

Valuation for rate-making purposes.

United Railways v West, 280 US 234

8319 Acceptance of franchise.

Location of line—power of county engineer. A franchise issued by the board of railroad commissioners to operate an electric transmission line "over, along, and across" a specified highway, under specifications calling for a cross-arm at the top of the poles, carries the right and power in the grantee so to erect its line that all parts thereof, including the superstructure, will be wholly within the lines of said highway. It follows that the general power of the county engineer, under section 4838, C., '27, to locate such lines does not embrace the power so to locate the line that part of the superstructure will overhang land outside the highway.

Iowa Corp. v Lindsey, 211-544; 231 NW 461

8322 Eminent domain—procedure.

Elements bearing on market value. The fact that the condemnor of an electric power line in maintaining the line would be compelled to go upon the land, and might cause damages to crops, etc., may have proper bearing on the issue of market value of the tract of land, even tho the statutes give the landowner a right of action for damages to crops and the like.

Evans v Utilities Co., 205-283; 218 NW 66

Measure of damages. Principle reaffirmed that the measure of damages for land condemned for right of way for an electric power line is the difference in the market value of the tract from which the land is taken, before and after the condemnation.

Evans v Utilities Co., 205-283; 218 NW 66

Trial theory as to right of way. The condemnor of land for an electric power line may not complain that witnesses on the issue of damages assumed that the right of way would be 100 feet in width, when such assumption was in harmony with the condemnor's petition for such right of way.

Evans v Utilities Co., 205-283; 218 NW 66

Value on condemnation proceedings. A landowner who knows the value of land sought to be condemned for an electric power line is competent to testify to the amount of damages caused to the tract by such condemnation, even tho he does not qualify as an electrical expert.

Evans v Utilities Co., 205-283; 218 NW 66

8323 Injury to person or property.

Electricity generally, liability. See under Ch 484, note 2 (VIII)

Admissibility of contract in action sounding in tort. In an action sounding in tort only, against alleged joint tort-feasors, a contract entered into by one of the defendants with a third party and conversations between said parties relative to matters arising under said contract, may be material, not for the purpose of permitting plaintiff to recover on the contract, but for the purpose of showing the defendant's relation to a certain subject matter, and thereby establishing a basis for the applicable law of tort.

Hanna v Electric Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

Instructions—correct but not elaborate.

Hanna v Elec. Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

Negligence—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to show negligence in the installation of electrical fixtures.

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151

Contributory negligence per se. A person is guilty of contributory negligence per se when, knowing that a wire at the top of a pole carries a very dangerous voltage of electricity, and faced by no emergency requiring or excusing a relaxation of due care, he attempts to get another wire out of his way by swinging it upward in the form of a rainbow, in order to hook it over a spike which had been driven into the pole some two feet below the dangerously charged wire.

Murphy v Electric Co., 206-567; 220 NW 360

See Russell v Gas & Elec. Co., 215-1405; 245 NW 705

Contributory negligence of 11-year-old boy—jury question. In an action for personal injuries sustained by an 11-year-old boy, who, while playing in a tree in a public street fell into wires of public utility company, sustaining severe burns, the question of contributory negligence of the boy together with question of whether defendant company had knowledge of the use of the tree by the boys in the neighborhood in playing, and the question of proximate cause of the injury should have been submitted to the jury.

Reynolds v Iowa Utilities Co., 21 F 2d, 958

Person knowing of danger—handling broken wire—contributory negligence. It is well settled as a general rule that where a person with knowledge of the dangerous character of an electric wire purposely comes in contact with it, he is guilty of contributory negligence and cannot recover for the resulting injury. So where plaintiff, with knowledge of the danger and using a table napkin as insulator, picks up an electric wire lying in the street where there is no imminent danger to others, a finding that he was contributorily negligent as a matter of law was not erroneous.

Barnett v D. M. Elec. Co., 10 F 2d, 111

Contributory negligence nullifies statutory presumption—transmission line injuries. When a person is injured by transmission line, the statutory presumption of defendant's negligence need not be rebutted when plaintiff fails to establish freedom from contributory negligence.

Aller v Iowa Elec. Co., 227-185; 288 NW 66

Drawing wire cable against power line. Farmer attempting to connect wire cable from hay carrier on barn to pole 50 or 55 feet distant is contributorily negligent in drawing cable against power line when he saw or should have seen the power line and knew that it was not insulated.

Aller v Iowa Elec. Co., 227-185; 288 NW 66

Limb hanging over wire—failure to remove.
Porter v Elec. Co., 228- ; 292 NW 231

Electric poles and wires—not inherently attractive nuisance. An electric power pole and wires and a fence of ten strands of barbed wire around the same are not agencies or instrumentalities reasonably calculated or likely to attract small children, and are not attractive agencies, such as to make the owner of the premises liable for the death of a child who climbed on the fence and reached over and touched one of the electric wires.

Davis v Malvern L. & P. Co., 186-884; 173 NW 252

Sagging wires on highway after storm—knowledge. In a case where a woman is burned by contacting a high tension electric line, sagging over a highway after a storm, and who testifies she had no knowledge it was there, newly discovered evidence to show that she was seen stepping over the broken poles prior to the accident, is not cumulative but tends directly to establish a material fact affecting the result of the case on retrial.

Wilbur v Iowa P. & L. Co., 223-1349; 275 NW 43

Noninsulated wires. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of the negligence of a utility company in maintaining noninsulated electric wiring in close proximity to machinery.

Beman v Electric Co., 205-730; 218 NW 343

Noninsulated wires—trespassers. The owner of a high voltage electric transmission line may not be said to be negligent in failing to cover the wires with an insulating material when its said line is constructed in full compliance with the law, and is guarded from injury therefrom by every practical device and expedient known and recognized by those who are expert in such construction and use; and one who unwittingly and wrongfully places himself in contact with such a line must be held to be the sole author of the resulting injury.

Dilley v Service Co., 210-1332; 227 NW 173

Presumption. An allegation of negligent construction or maintenance of an electrical transmission line is unnecessary, and if made, need not be proved, in an action for damages caused by fire set out by such line. Proof that fire was communicated to property by said line, and proof of the amount of damages resulting, plus the statutory presumption of negligence on the part of the operator of the line, make a prima facie case for recovery.

Walters v Elec. Co., 203-471; 212 NW 884; 38 NCCA 551

Proximate cause — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to show that certain acts of omission and commission were the proximate cause of an excess voltage of electricity reaching and entering a building.

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151; 3 NCCA(NS) 547

Res ipsa loquitur—scope. The full limit of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is that the peculiar facts of the occurrence warrant or permit the jury to draw the inference of negligence; not that such facts compel the jury to draw such inference. The doctrine does not in the slightest degree change the burden of proof on the issue of negligence.

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151; 3 NCCA(NS) 547

Preston v Railway, 214-156; 241 NW 648

Res ipsa loquitur. Evidence tending to show that decedent came to his death from an electric shock consequent on handling an ordinary electric lighting fixture, charged with electricity by the defendant, and that the ordinary lighting voltage was harmless, even tho there is evidence to the contrary as to the last proposition, furnishes basis for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and creates a jury question on the issue of the defendant's negligence.

Orr v Elec. Co., 213-127; 238 NW 604

Trespassers and "attractive nuisances". An owner of property may so negligently use it as to become liable in damages for a resulting injury to a trespasser. A jury question, both as to negligence and contributory negligence, is presented by testimony tending to show that an owner, without full compliance with city ordinance requirements, erected and maintained, on his own uninclosed, populously surrounded, and promiscuously frequented premises, which abutted upon an uninclosed and much frequented public park and fishing resort, a pole with a ladder thereon in the form of spikes driven therein, and with a cross-arm on the pole, some 25 feet from the ground, carrying wires heavily charged with electricity, and that a trespassing boy of 14 years of age, and of ordinary intelligence, climbed the pole and, upon reaching the cross-arm, was killed by an electric shock.

McKiddy v Elec. Co., 202-225; 206 NW 815; 29 NCCA 886

Trespassing as defense. The fact that a person injured by coming in contact with a high-voltage wire was a trespasser on the land of a third party upon whose land the wire was erected, is no defense to an action for damages for said injury.

Lipovac v Iowa Co., 202-517; 210 NW 573
Cox v Elec. Co., 209-931; 229 NW 244; 36 NCCA 160

Waiver of presumption. A litigant who in the trial court relies solely on specific acts of negligence as a basis for his cause of action, may not be heard on appeal to assert that he has a right to rely on a statutory presumption of negligence.

Dilley v Service Co., 210-1332; 227 NW 173

Waiver of presumption. Failure to instruct on the statutory presumption of negligence in an action for wrongful injury from electricity, is not erroneous (1) when plaintiff has seemingly ignored such presumption by alleging and attempting to prove specific acts of negligence, and (2) when plaintiff requests no such instruction.

Hanna v Electric Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

8325 Supervision of construction—location.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Aug. 29, '39

Location of line—power of county engineer. A franchise issued by the board of railroad commissioners to operate an electric transmission line "over, along, and across" a specified highway, under specifications calling for cross arms at the top of the poles, carries the right and power in the grantee so to erect its line that all parts thereof, including the superstructure, will be wholly within the lines of said highway. It follows that the general power of the county engineer, under §4838, C., '27, to locate such lines does not embrace the power so to locate the line that part of the superstructure will overhang land outside the highway.

Iowa Corp. v Lindsey, 211-544; 231 NW 461

8326 Manner of construction.

Manner of construction of lines—pleading violation of statute or ordinance—insufficiency. In an action against an electric company whose transmission line was so close to plaintiff's building that firemen could not throw water on a fire until current was turned off, which delay caused destruction of building and contents, a complaint alleging violation of town ordinance and a state statute respecting construction of transmission lines held insufficient to state a cause of action.

Bowen v Iowa Public Service, 35 F 2d, 616

8327 Distance from buildings.

Agreement. Statute requiring transmission lines to be 100 feet from building except by agreement held not to be violated when line was constructed 17 feet above ground and 18 or 19 feet from barn by agreement with the farm owner and former tenant.

Aller v Iowa Elec. Co., 227-185; 288 NW 66

8328 Lines along or crossing highway—danger label.

Danger signs—posting—sufficient evidence. Evidence sufficient to justify finding that electric company had complied with statute requiring danger signs to be posted on poles or towers along highway.

8329 Nonuser.

CHAPTER 383.2

AERIAL TRANSPORTATION

8338.20 Rules.

Discussion. See 16 ILR 169—Ownership of air above land

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 521

Governmental functions—nonliability in performance. The statutory-prescribed rules of the state governing aerial navigation have no application to the state in its sovereign capacity, nor to its governmental agencies, nor to the officials of said agencies when exclusively engaged in performing the duties of said agencies.

De Votie v Cameron, 221-354; 265 NW 637

State fair board as defendant. The Iowa state fair board is an arm or agency of the state, and, therefore, not suable.

De Votie v Board, 216-281; 249 NW 429

CHAPTER 383.3

PIPE LINES

8338.24 Conditions attending operation.

Interstate commerce—unallowable burden on. A foreign corporation seeking to operate in this state an exclusive interstate pipe line system may not be constitutionally required by a state statute, as a condition precedent to the construction of its line and to the transacting of its said business, even on its own private right of way,

3. To consent that the state may levy on its such general property taxes and/or taxes on gross receipts, and/or taxes on net income as the general assembly may thereafter prescribe, or

4. To consent to and pay an annual license fee.

Reason: Each of said requirements imposes an unallowable burden on interstate commerce.

State v Pipe Line, 216-436; 249 NW 366

Interstate commerce—unconstitutional control—auxiliary provisions. When sections of a statute seeking to control interstate commerce are unconstitutional because imposing unallowable burdens on such commerce, all auxiliary sections of the same statute which prescribe the procedure thru which said unconstitutional control is sought to be attained, are likewise unconstitutional. (So held as to §§8338-d4 to 8338-d11, inclusive, C., '31 [§§8338.27-8338.34, C., '39].)

State v Pipe Line, 216-436; 249 NW 366

8338.41 Limitation on grant.

Strip mining—coal lease subject to pipe-line easement—lateral support. Where a pipe-line company has an easement across land and an option to buy a designated strip of land along the pipe line if a strip coal mine should be opened on the land, a subsequent strip mine coal lease, subject to the pipe-line easement and option, gives the coal lessee no rights to strip mine coal on the land covered by the purchase option and thus destroy the lateral support of the pipe line, nor is such lessee entitled to any part of the purchase price for such strip of land.

Penn v Pipe Line Co., 225-680; 281 NW 194

8338.46 Eminent domain.

Compensation—fixtures on mortgaged premises—res judicata. In a proceeding to condemn right of way for a gas pipe line, the fact that the pipe was already installed under an easement which was held in a foreclosure action to be inferior to a prior mortgage, did not thereby give the mortgagee through his foreclosure decree title and ownership of the pipe and fixtures installed on the mortgaged premises, nor is such foreclosure decree res judicata as to title to such pipe and fixtures without trying the issue thereon.

Titus Co. v Natural Gas, 223-944; 274 NW 68

8338.47 Damages.

Liability of principal and independent contractors. A contract granting the right of way over land for an underground pipe line, on payment of a certain sum per rod, and on payment of "damages to growing crops, fences, or improvements occasioned in laying, repairing, or removing lines", does not constitute an agreement by grantee that he will pay damages consequent on the negligent act—tort—of an independent contractor in injuring grantor's private bridge which was located wholly outside said right of way.

Asher v Construction Co., 216-977; 250 NW 179

Compensation rate—conflicting contracts.

Vorthmann v Pipe Line, 228- ; 289 NW 746

TITLE XIX

CORPORATIONS

CHAPTER 384

CORPORATIONS FOR PECUNIARY PROFIT

8339 Who may incorporate.

De facto corporations. See under §8401
Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 4

Related presentation of illegal incorporation.

The objection or point that an alleged incorporation never became such in fact may not be presented for the first time on appeal.

State v Packing Co., 206-405; 220 NW 6

Collateral attack as unallowable defense to action. A foreign de facto corporation cannot be defeated in its action to prevent an injury to its property by the plea that it has no valid corporate existence, in that it has attempted in its incorporation to effect a combination of powers prohibited by the laws of the state of its attempted incorporation.

First T. & S. Co. v Gypsum Co., 211-1019; 233 NW 137; 73 ALR 1196

Corporate entity—unallowable disregard of.

Where collaterally secured bonds, owned by a corporation, were depreciated in value by the wrongful act of the collateral-holding trustee in permitting worthless collaterals to be substituted for valuable collaterals, the resulting damages belong solely to the corporation. In other words, a stockholder may not maintain an action against the trustee for alleged special damages suffered by said stockholder consequent on the fact that said depreciation so impaired the capital of the corporation that an assessment on the corporate shares became necessary, and that the stockholder was unable to pay said assessment and thereby lost his said stock.

Grimes v Brammer, 214-405; 239 NW 550

Corporate governmental agencies—immunity from legal process and taxation. Immunity of corporate governmental agencies from suits and judicial process, and their incidents, is less readily implied than immunity from taxation.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Incorporation denied by state—partnership formed—agreement to furnish stock not excused. Promoters of a corporation are liable to an investor for money received as the agreed purchase price for stock in a corporation, even tho the failure to deliver stock occurred because the state denied the right to incorporate, and they are not relieved by a partnership agreement, signed by the investor, who nowhere waives nor abandons the agreement for delivery of the corporate stock.

Smith v Secor, 225-650; 281 NW 178

De facto corporation defined. Principle reaffirmed that a de facto corporation is one formed and acting as such under an authorizing statute, tho its incorporation may be defective.

First T. & S. Co. v Gypsum Co., 211-1019; 233 NW 137; 73 ALR 1196

Dentistry—practice by corporation. A corporation, being incapable of receiving a license to practice dentistry, cannot legally practice such profession, and is, therefore, subject to injunction if it attempts so to do.

State v Bailey Co., 211-781; 234 NW 260

Proof of incorporation. A copy of the articles of incorporation of a banking corporation, duly certified by the secretary of state, is sufficient proof of such incorporation.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

Unpaid stock subscription—nonliability. A subscriber for corporate stock who is not a promoter of the purported corporation is not liable on his fraud-induced, unpaid stock subscription contract in an action by the receiver of the corporation when the charter of the corporation has been judicially annulled, subsequent to the subscription contract, by the state, for fraud perpetrated on the state in obtaining the charter; in other words, the so-called English "Equitable Trust Fund Doctrine" does not apply to such a condition.

Fundamental reason. Such purported corporation, having been conceived, born, and nurtured in fraud, was never, in truth or in fact, a corporation de jure or de facto, in a business sense.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

Water company in which city owns stock—not "governmental agency"—exempt from federal tax. A private corporation furnishing water to city under arrangement whereby dividends and financial expenditures were limited, and city owned one-third of voting stock with right of representation on board of directors, right of purchase, and right to compel retirement of preferred stock from surplus earnings, held not immune from federal taxation as "governmental agency", since surplus earnings from water tax did not become property of city.

I POWERS IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 17 ILR 83—Practice of law

Articles—statutes as part of. The statutes and constitutional provisions of a state relative to corporations must be deemed a part of the articles of incorporation of a corporation tho not physically copied therein.

Ontjes v Bagley, 217-1200; 250 NW 17

Statutes and articles as part of contracts. The corporation charter and the statutes of the state of domicile of the corporation become a part of any contract between the corporation and a purchaser of its stock.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

Acting through agent—apparent authority. A corporation must act through an agent and as to third parties is bound by acts within the apparent scope of the agent's authority.

Wright v Iowa P. & L. Co., 223-1192; 274 NW 892

Action on insurance policy—real party in interest—authority to make admission in pleading. A defendant corporation, formed to underwrite reciprocal insurance contracts of its unincorporated group of subscribers, is the real party in interest in an action to enforce a judgment against the corporation. The group of subscribers is not a legal entity, and when the corporation is the only legal entity of the two, an admission of an important fact by the corporation made in a counterclaim in the action in which judgment was obtained is binding on it in the later action.

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

Assignment of rents by dummy corporation. On the issue, in mortgage foreclosure, whether an assignment of the rents of the mortgaged premises placed the rents beyond the power of the receiver, if one were appointed, evidence reviewed and held insufficient, in the absence of any showing of fraud, to justify the court in holding that the assignor corporation and the assignee corporation were in fact one corporation,—that the assignor corporation was a mere dummy.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Galagan, 220-173; 261 NW 920

Corporation judgment compromised—former stockholder—no authority. Stockholders who had sold their stock after the corporation had recovered a judgment no longer had an interest in the judgment which remained the property of the corporation even when its name was changed, so a compromise settlement of the judgment had no validity when made by attorneys with consent given by one former stockholder, as only the corporation could authorize such settlement.

Glenwood Lbr. Co. v Hammers, 226-788; 285 NW 277

Discretion in re managerial expenses. An insurance company which is conducting the business of assessment and level premium life insurance will not be controlled by the courts in its allotment between the two classes of insurance, of the managerial expenses, so long as such allotment is not violative of law, is reasonable, and is not arbitrary.

Wall v Bankers Life, 208-1053; 223 NW 257

Injunction—"balance-of-convenience" rule. The consummation of a perfectly legal reorganization of a corporation will not be held up by injunction pending the determination of the value of the interest of a dissenting stockholder when said stockholder can be amply protected by a deposit of money or bond by the corporation.

Ontjes v Bagley, 217-1200; 250 NW 17

Life insurance—insurable interest—corporation as beneficiary of policy on officer. A corporation which, for its own general benefit, is the beneficiary in a policy of life insurance on the life of one of its officers, is unconditionally entitled to the proceeds of the policy, even tho the insured had, at the time of his death, severed his official relation with the corporation.

Reilly v Ins. Co., 201-555; 207 NW 583

Reorganization—authorized method. The stockholders of a corporation, or a part thereof, may, in good faith, reorganize it (1) by causing its entire assets and liabilities to be transferred to a newly formed corporation, and (2) by surrendering their old stock and in lieu thereof receiving stock of the new corporation—provided the laws of the states under which the corporations are organized sanction and authorize such reorganization.

Ontjes v Bagley, 217-1200; 250 NW 17

Reorganization—dissenting stockholder—arbitrary determination of value of stock. The plans for the reorganization of a corporation may not arbitrarily fix the value of the stock of a dissenting stockholder.

Ontjes v Bagley, 217-1200; 250 NW 17

Sale of assets (?) or consolidation (?). Record relative to the transfer of corporate assets reviewed, and held legally to constitute but a sale of the assets of certain existing

I POWERS IN GENERAL—concluded corporations to a newly formed corporation, and not a consolidation at common law.

Graeser v Finance Co., 218-1112; 254 NW 859

Sale of entire assets—effect. A sale of the entire assets of different corporations to a newly formed corporation, and consummated in good faith and in conformity with the articles of incorporation of said corporations, and with the laws of the state under which said incorporations were effected, is binding and conclusive on the selling and buying corporations and on the stockholders thereof.

Graeser v Finance Co., 218-1112; 254 NW 859

Seal—duty to affix—scope of requirement. A writing granting to a party a mere option to repurchase land from a corporation within a named time and at a named price, is not an instrument such as is contemplated by the statute which requires the corporate seal to be affixed to instruments “conveying, incumbering or affecting real estate”, nor as is contemplated by substantially similar requirements in articles of incorporation.

Shanda v Clutier Bank, 220-290; 260 NW 841

Stock—wrongful issuance—cancellation in equity. Where a corporation which succeeds to the business of two partners agrees to pay all outstanding debts of the partnership, a hypothecation of corporate stock of one of the two stockholders as security for one of said debts, manifestly works no transfer of title to said stock to the corporation, and where the debt is paid with corporate funds, and the stock certificate is returned, the wrongful act of the nonhypothecating stockholder in causing a new stock certificate to be issued to himself for one-half of the returned shares will be canceled by proper action in equity.

Petersen v Heywood, 212-1174; 236 NW 63

Ultra vires acts. Where corporation directors borrowed money from bank to purchase stock in manufacturing corporation, taking over of such indebtedness by corporation was ultra vires, and where bank participated therein with knowledge, corporation indebtedness to bank and directors' notes to corporation should be canceled, and new notes delivered to bank by directors.

Waters v Disbrow & Co., 70 F 2d, 572

Ultra vires acts. Borrowing of money from manufacturing corporation by directors to purchase stock from others, and switching of indebtedness from corporation to bank and from bank to corporation with knowledge of bank, held ultra vires for which directors were liable to corporation for advancements with interest made within period of limitation for money received, but increase of corporation indebtedness to bank should stand where money obtained from bank was used by corporation.

Waters v Disbrow & Co., 70 F 2d, 572

II PARTICULAR POWERS AND OBLIGATIONS

Action on behalf of corporation—when demand unnecessary. Demand on an incorporated fraternal order to institute an action against a former officer of the order to recover money belonging to the order and unlawfully expended by such officer, is not a condition precedent to the commencement of such action by a member of the order, when the record reveals the fact that such demand if made would have been met by a preemptory refusal.

Outing v Plum, 212-1169; 235 NW 559

Agreement as to dividends—want of consideration—effect. An agreement that one of two stockholders shall draw all dividends up to a certain time, unsupported by any consideration, is properly canceled in an action in equity.

Petersen v Heywood, 212-1174; 236 NW 63

Consolidation, merger, and sale of assets distinguished. Consolidation of corporations, merger of corporations, and sale of assets of one corporation to another defined and distinguished.

Graeser v Finance Co., 218-1112; 254 NW 859

Disposal of assets. Principle recognized that, at common law, neither the board of directors of a corporation nor a majority of the stockholders thereof, can, against the dissent of a single stockholder, dispose of all the assets of the corporation when the corporation is conducting a prosperous business.

Graeser v Finance Co., 218-1112; 254 NW 859

Sale of entire assets. The board of directors of an insolvent banking corporation which is on the verge of a complete financial collapse has power to sell en masse the assets of the corporation without the consent of the stockholders, especially when the directors own a majority of the stock.

Oskaloosa Bk. v Bank, 205-1351; 219 NW 530; 60 ALR 1204

Equitable estoppel—ultra vires in re corporate accommodation note. A corporation is not estopped to plead ultra vires in becoming the maker of an accommodation promissory note, from the fact that its officers knew that the payee (who was not the accommodated party) was making advances to the party actually accommodated, when the payee knew (1) that the note was an accommodation solely to the party receiving the advances, and (2) that the note was not executed in conformity with the authority which the corporation had granted to its officers.

Black Hawk Bk. v Monarch Co., 201-240; 207 NW 121

Partnership—mutual rights, duties and liabilities of partners. The members of a partnership (or the stockholders of a corporation) may validly authorize a partner (or an officer of the corporation as the case may be) to privately engage in the same business for the transaction of which the partnership (or corporation) was formed, and in such cases no partner (or stockholder) will be permitted to lay claim, on behalf of the partnership (or corporation), to any profits accruing under such private contracts,—no rights of third parties being involved.

Anderson v Dunnegan, 217-672; 250 NW 115

Officers—resolution deferring delinquent salary—contractual validity. Where a father and son, the sole owners of a corporation, as officers, and having delinquent salary due them, pass a resolution deferring payment until after death of both, such resolution became a contract, supported by a consideration and accepted by and binding upon both the corporation and the executing officers, who having personally conducted the transaction are bound thereby and estopped from denying its validity.

Bankers Trust v Economy Coal, 224-36; 276 NW 16

Stock—limitation on transfer. A provision in the duly recorded articles of incorporation of a corporation for profit to the effect that the corporate shares of stock shall not be transferred to persons who are not then owners of stock, unless the proposed new stockholder is recommended by two directors, is neither violative of statute nor of public policy.

Mason v Tel. Co., 213-1076; 240 NW 671

Issuance of unpaid stock—pledge to innocent party—estoppel. A corporation which issues and delivers its corporate shares of stock, without receiving payment therefor, estops itself to question such issuance and delivery after the stock has been pledged by the holder thereof to a good-faith pledgee for value and without notice of the fact of non-payment.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

Stock—rights of equitable owner. The legal rights of an equitable owner of corporate shares of stock (stock not duly transferred to him on the books of the corporation) are, in many respects, very limited, but, among such rights, is the right to maintain an action against the corporation to establish and protect the interest of such equitable owner in the corporate property.

Graeser v Finance Co., 218-1112; 254 NW 859

Stock—restricting sale—corporation having first option to buy. Provisions in articles of incorporation requiring stockholders to give the corporation opportunity to purchase, before selling to outsiders, are generally held to be valid and apply to investment stock as well as voting stock.

McDonald v Farley et al. Co., 226-53; 283 NW 261

Stock—corporation having first option to buy—no restriction on judicial sale—mandamus to transfer. Sale of assets of insolvent national bank made in obedience to an order of court is not a voluntary but a judicial sale; therefore, a corporation whose stock was sold thereunder is not entitled to notice thereof, even tho its articles of incorporation required notice of proposed sale of stock, and mandamus will lie to compel the transfer of said stock on its records.

McDonald v Farley et al. Co., 226-53; 283 NW 261

Water company in which city owns stock—not “governmental agency”—exempt from federal tax. A private corporation furnishing water to city under arrangement whereby dividends and financial expenditures were limited, and city owned one-third of voting stock with right of representation on board of directors, right of purchase, and right to compel retirement of preferred stock from surplus earnings, held not immune from federal taxation as “governmental agency”, since surplus earnings from water tax did not become property of city.

Citizens Water Co. v Com. of Int. Rev., 87 F 2d, 874

III RIGHT TO SUE AND BE SUED

Contract to repurchase stock—equitable issues not presented—no review. On appeal from a ruling sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to answer of a foreign corporation, in suit for breach of contract to repurchase from plaintiff its own stock, setting up defense that such purchase would impair its capital, which was prohibited under the statute of the state of its domicile, the supreme court could not exercise its inherent equitable power or give consideration to estoppel, ratification, implied contract, or theory that contract was loan, when proper pleading or proof relating thereto was lacking.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

Libel—corporation as plaintiff. A corporation may maintain an action for libel.

Shaw Cleaners v Dress Club, 215-1130; 245 NW 231; 86 ALR 839

Corporate entity—unallowable disregard of. Where collaterally secured bonds, owned by a corporation, were depreciated in value by the wrongful act of the collateral-holding trustee in permitting worthless collaterals to be substituted for valuable collaterals, the resulting damages belong solely to the corporation. In other words, a stockholder may not maintain an action against the trustee for alleged special damages suffered by said stockholder consequent on the fact that said depreciation so impaired the capital of the corporation that an assessment on the corporate shares became necessary, and that the stockholder was unable to pay said assessment and thereby lost his said stock.

Grimes v Brammer, 214-405; 239 NW 550

Court control in lieu of corporate control. Where the officers and directors of a corporation settle and compromise a dispute in which the corporation is involved, and the settlement is intra vires, minority stockholders will not be permitted to displace corporate authority and control by substituting court control, except in plain cases of fraud or maladministration.

Independent Order v Scott, 223-105; 272NW 68

Decisions reviewable—misjoinder of corporate parties—ruling on motion to strike—non-reviewable fact question. On appeal from an order overruling a motion to strike on ground that there was misjoinder of a principal corporation and its subsidiary, where question to be determined was whether the corporate entity of the subsidiary could be disregarded because it was so organized, controlled, and conducted as to make it a mere instrumentality of the principal corporation, which question being one of fact determinable only after a hearing of the evidence, the supreme court would not decide the matter on basis of the pleadings.

Wade v Central Co., 227-427; 288 NW 441

Foreign corporation—interference with internal affairs. Where a foreign corporation receives, as a consideration for the legal sale of its entire assets, a certain amount in money and the balance in the bonds, and in the preferred and participating stock of the purchaser, the courts of this state will not, in an action against the corporation, adjudicate the question whether a dissenting stockholder should be paid in cash the value of his stock, as such adjudication would be an unallowable interference with the internal affairs of said foreign corporation.

Graeser v Finance Co., 218-1112; 254 NW 859

Foreign corporation without business permit—action on contract barred. A foreign stock corporation which, through its president while personally present in Iowa, sells on contract, accepts payment, part in cash and part in notes, and makes delivery of a machine, is doing business in the state, and not having first secured a permit to do business may not maintain an action on such contract.

Actino Lab. v Lamb, 224-573; 278 NW 234

Fraud—joinder of corporations and officers. Two corporations, each organized by the same promoters, for identically the same purpose, and officered by the same officers, may be joined with the common president, in an action based upon a single joint transaction wherein the said president in the sale of corporate stock of both corporations made false representations in the interest of and for the benefit of both corporations.

McCarthy v Dixon, 219-15; 257 NW 327

Joint stock land banks—legal status. Joint stock land banks, tho organized under federal statutes, are privately owned corporations, organized for profit to their stockholders through the business of making loans on farm mortgages, are not governmental instrumentalities, and are suable in the proper state courts.

Higdon v Lincoln JSL Bk., 223-57; 272 NW 93

Judgment—fatal inadequacy of proof. The court has no legal right to enter judgment against a corporation on promissory notes purporting to be signed by the corporation by its president (1) when there is no proof as to the actual or apparent authority of the president, and (2) no evidentiary explanation as to the nature of the transaction.

Schooler v Avon Lakes Corp., 216-1419; 250 NW 629

Optometry—corporation practicing through employee-physician. A corporation is practicing optometry when it employs a physician—a licensed optometrist—to carry on his business under the company's control, and such practice may be enjoined.

State v Ritholz, 226-70; 283 NW 268

Restraint of vexatious suits. Restraint by injunction of one claiming to have cause of action against another should be granted only when the purpose of it is shown clearly to have been in bad faith and for the purpose of vexation and annoyance. Rule applied where successive actions were brought by stockholders against corporation.

Strasburger v Witousek, (NOR); 211 NW 713

Ultra vires and lack of authority—ratification. A corporation is estopped to plead that the contract of its vice president on behalf of the corporation to repurchase a note and mortgage, at face value, was neither expressly nor impliedly authorized and was ultra vires, when the corporation with full knowledge of all the facts elects to retain the consideration paid it for the paper.

Hawkeye Ins. v Tr. Co., 210-284; 227 NW 637

Unauthorized expenditures—ratification. A member of a fraternal order may not maintain an action against a former officer of the order to recover, on behalf of the order, money belonging to the order and expended by said officer for unauthorized purposes, when the governing body of the order has formally and explicitly ratified such expenditures.

Outing v Plum, 212-1169; 235 NW 559

IV EXEMPTION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY

Authorization of corporate indebtedness—effect. The stockholders of a legal incorporation do not, by authorizing their board of directors to incur corporate obligations, render themselves personally liable to contribute to the loss suffered by the directors who incurred personal liability by executing their personal notes.

Fulton v Farmers Exch., 207-371; 222 NW 889

V BYLAWS

Authority of president—insufficient showing. A contract is not binding on a corporation, tho entered into in its name by its president, to the effect that the corporation shall be and remain liable on promissory notes negotiated by it without recourse, when authority to the president to enter into such contract cannot be found in the articles of incorporation, in the bylaws, in the proceedings of the directors in any act of corporate ratification, or in the customs and practices of the corporation.

First N. Bk. v Prod. Co., 209-358; 227 NW 908

Employment under delegated authority. The board of directors of a corporation, when not prohibited from so doing by the articles of incorporation or bylaws, may delegate in good faith to the corporate manager power to hire employees and to fix and pay salaries; and under such delegation, the manager may, in good faith, legally employ a director to perform duties which are separate and distinct from those of a director.

Schulte v Ideal Co., 208-767; 226 NW 174

8342 Index book.

Landlord's contractual lien—recording articles and assignments—constructive notice to trustee. Where a lease provided for lien in favor of lessors for taxes and other money paid by lessors under provisions of lease, and when assignments of lease to corporations, articles of incorporation of bankrupt lessee under its original name, and amendment changing its name to that of bankrupt had all been recorded, that record gave constructive notice to trustee in bankruptcy and all subsequent lienors of lessor's prior lien.

Ginsberg v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 721

8343 Articles adopted and recorded.

De facto corporations. See under §8401

Articles—statutes as part of. The statutes and constitutional provisions of a state relative to corporations must be deemed a part of the articles of incorporation of a corporation tho not physically copied therein.

Ontjes v Bagley, 217-1200; 250 NW 17

Statutes and articles as part of contracts. The corporation charter and the statutes of the state of domicile of the corporation become a part of any contract between the corporation and a purchaser of its stock.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

Mutual rights. The members of a partnership (or the stockholders of a corporation) may validly authorize a partner (or an officer of the corporation as the case may be) to privately engage in the same business for the transaction of which the partnership (or corporation) was formed, and in such cases no partner (nor a stockholder) will be permitted to lay claim, on behalf of the partnership (or corporation), to any profits accruing under such private contracts,—no rights of third parties being involved.

Anderson v Dunnegan, 217-672; 250 NW 115

Brokers compensation—insufficient proof. It is a far-fetched proposition that a broker employed to effect a sale of all the capital stock of a corporation has established his right to a commission by proof that he contacted a party in the effort to effect such sale but was unsuccessful, and that some two years later, without any further effort on his part, the party so contacted and said corporation effected a reorganization of the corporation on the basis of a stock issue entirely different than that formerly existing.

Jackley-Wiedman Co. v Washer Co., 220-486; 262 NW 97; 101 ALR 1216

Preferred stockholders' rights—subject to general creditors' claims. Rights of preferred stockholders in a bankrupt corporation's assets are subject to all debts of the corporation, including general creditors, and instruments having attributes commonly attached to preferred stock are construed as stock unless contrary intention clearly appears, in which respect the articles of incorporation are held competent to prove meaning and legal effect of certificates purporting to be issued under such articles.

Stock—limitation on transfer. A provision in the duly recorded articles of incorporation of a corporation for profit to the effect that the corporate shares of stock shall not be transferred to persons who are not then owners of stock unless the proposed new stockholder is recommended by two directors, is neither violative of statute nor of public policy.

8351 Limit of indebtedness. (Repealed)

Debts beyond lawful limit—status. A debt contracted by a corporation in excess of the maximum limitation prescribed by law is not void.

German Bk. v Bank, 203-276; 211 NW 386

Noncreation of debt. A corporation which sells its holdings and receives in payment a transfer of junior mortgages on other property, without agreement to pay the senior mortgages, necessarily creates no indebtedness against itself.

Boyd v Bank, 205-465; 218 NW 321

Authorization of corporate indebtedness—effect. The stockholders of a legal incorporation do not, by authorizing their board of directors to incur corporate obligations, render themselves personally liable to contribute to the loss suffered by the directors who incurred personal liability by executing their personal notes.

Fulton v Exchange, 207-371; 222 NW 889

8357 Notice of incorporation.

ANALYSIS

- I NOTICE
- II OFFICERS IN GENERAL
- III CORPORATE STOCK IN GENERAL

I NOTICE

Notice—sufficiency. A notice of incorporation sufficiently states the time of the commencement and termination of the corporation, and the amount of capital stock authorized, and the time and conditions in which it is to be paid in, (1) by a recital that the business should begin on the date of the issuance of the official certificate of incorporation and continue for a named time, and (2) by a recital of the amount of capital stock, and that it should be fully paid before the corporation began business.

Comstock v Wood, 204-1027; 216 NW 640

Landlord's contractual lien—recording articles and assignments—constructive notice to trustee. Where a lease provided for lien in favor of lessors for taxes and other money paid by lessors under provisions of lease, and when assignments of lease to corporations, articles of incorporation of bankrupt lessee under its original name, and amendment changing its name to that of bankrupt had all been recorded, that record gave constructive notice to trustee in bankruptcy and all subsequent lienors of lessor's prior lien.

Ginsberg v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 721

II OFFICERS IN GENERAL

Identity of partnership and corporation. A bona fide corporation which is engaged in one business, and a bona fide partnership which is engaged in a different business may not, even in equity, be deemed identical—one and the same entity—even tho the corporate stock of the corporation is owned entirely by the partnership entity and by the individual partners, and even tho the individual partners of the partnership constitute the board of directors of the corporation. So held on the plea that a contract of the corporation worked a change in a former contract of the partnership, and thereby released the surety.

Weitz v Guar. Co., 206-1025; 219 NW 411

Partner's (or stockholder's) right to compete with partnership (or corporation). The members of a partnership (or the stockholders of a corporation) may validly authorize a partner (or an officer of the corporation as the case may be) to privately engage in the same business for the transaction of which the partnership (or corporation) was formed, and in such cases no partner (or stockholder) will be permitted to lay claim, on behalf of the partnership (or corporation), to any profits accruing under such private contracts,—no rights of third parties being involved.

Anderson v Dunnegan, 217-672; 250 NW 115

Apparent authority of manager sufficient to bind corporation to tenancy. Corporation held liable for rent as tenant at will, based on correspondence and telephone conversations with corporation's manager, as against contention that manager was not authorized to enter into arrangement made—principal being bound by apparent authority of its agent.

Daly Co. v Brunswick Co., (NOR); 263 NW 234

Directors—nonimputed knowledge. Actual knowledge of the business transactions of a corporation is not imputable to a director simply because of such directorship.

Commercial Bank v Kietges, 206-90; 219 NW 44

Knowledge of insolvency of bank—not imputable to nonactive director. Knowledge that a bank is insolvent is not imputed to one who is a director and minor stockholder of the bank, when he takes no active part in its management and has no actual knowledge of the insolvency.

In re Smith, 228- ; 289 NW 694

Liability of officer for corporate tort. The managing officer of a corporation who causes the corporation of which he is such officer wrongfully to withhold personal property from a person who is entitled to the immediate possession of said property, is guilty of a tort, and is personally liable for said tort along with his said corporation.

Luther v Investment Co., 222-305; 268 NW 589

Nonpermissible joinder. An action against a corporation on its obligation and an action against the directors to enforce a statutory liability relative to such obligation may not be joined.

McPherson v Commercial Co., 206-562; 218 NW 306

Sales contract—offer or order—insufficient acceptance by corporation. A contract for the purchase of an article from a corporation is not established by the simple, naked showing that the purported buyer signed an order addressed to the corporation for the article, and that said order carries an acceptance signed individually by a person who was, in fact, the vice president and general manager of the corporation.

Birum-Olson Co. v Johnson, 213-439; 239 NW 123

Check—indorsement by corporate payee. An indorsement on a negotiable check payable to the "order of" a corporate payee, tho consisting simply of the name of said corporation, effects a prima facie transfer of absolute ownership of the check to the bank to which the check is delivered by the said corporation as a deposit; and especially so when it appears that said indorsement is in the handwriting of a general, managerial officer of the corporation.

Bureau Service v Lewis, 220-662; 263 NW 7

Corporate president's authority to write checks—burden of proof. In action by payee of check drawn by president of corporation for interest on officer's note, it was held that payee had burden to prove check was executed by the corporation, that president had no implied authority to give check for interest on officer's personal debt, that president's check on corporation for officer's debt was without consideration as to the corporation, and that payee could not recover on the check as a matter of law without proof of president's authority or benefit received by the corporation.

Smoltz v Meat Co., (NOR); 224 NW 536

Good faith holdership of note—calling officers. The corporate holder of a promissory note sufficiently establishes its holdership in good faith and for value by calling those of its officers only who participated in the purchase of said note.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 213-969; 236 NW 418

Payment of mortgage—authority of president. Principle reaffirmed that the president of an investment corporation has no implied authority to agree on behalf of the company that a real estate mortgage held by the company shall be considered as an absolute deed, and that the company will accept the equity of redemption of the mortgagors as full payment of the mortgage debt.

Central Co. v Estes, 206-83; 218 NW 480

Release or subordination of mortgage—authority of president. A corporation is bound by the act of its president in subordinating its mortgage to another mortgage (1) when the president is expressly authorized by the articles of incorporation to release and satisfy such mortgages, (2) when the president first executed, on adequate consideration, a written release and subordination without the corporate seal being attached, and later confirmed said act by a new release and subordination with said seal attached, and (3) when the corporation at all times intended so to subordinate its mortgage.

Homesteaders Life v Salinger, 212-251; 235 NW 485

Right as bondholder. An officer of a corporation who, as surety, signs a corporate note for borrowed money which the corporation employs in its business, and in good faith receives bonds of the corporation to indemnify him in case he is compelled to pay the note, will, upon payment of the note, be accorded the same rights under a trust deed or mortgage executed to secure the payment of said bonds as will be accorded to good-faith purchasers of other portions of said bonds.

Gunn v Gould Co., 206-172; 218 NW 895; 220 NW 127

III CORPORATE STOCK IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 17 ILR 313—Minority stockholder

Authority of depositary—assessment on corporate stock. The holder in escrow of corporate stock has no implied authority to pay an assessment on said stock.

Harris v Bills, 203-1034; 213 NW 929

Divorced stockholders—disposition of property—nonallowable subsequent modification. Where parties to a divorce proceeding owned the entire capital stock of a corporation, and said stock was decreed to the parties in equal shares, a subsequent modification of the decree will not be entered because of the doing of acts in the course of the corporate management in which each acquiesced, nor because one of the parties now apprehends that said equal division of stock will ultimately result in a deadlock in corporate management.

Parker v Parker, 214-1327; 241 NW 497

Issuance of unpaid stock—pledge to innocent party—estoppel. A corporation which issues and delivers its corporate shares of stock without receiving payment therefor, estops itself to question such issuance and delivery after the stock has been pledged by the holder thereof to a good-faith pledgee for value and without notice of the fact of non-payment.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

Oral contract to repurchase. An oral contract by one who effects a sale of corporate shares of stock as agent of the owner thereof, that he will repurchase the shares on demand of the purchaser, is within the statute of frauds.

Thomas v Elec. Co., 220-850; 263 NW 499

Preferred stock—lien—nature of. Where articles of an incorporation for the purchase and sale of real estate grant to the holders of preferred stock a first lien on all the assets of the incorporation, the lien is a blanket lien upon all the assets, whatever their form, and not a lien upon particular items of property.

Boyd v Bank, 205-465; 218 NW 321

8360 Amendments—fees.

Amendment to articles—inaccurate designation—effect. Amended articles of incorporation of a farm bureau association will be given the effect manifestly intended notwithstanding the fact that they are inaccurately designated.

Appanoose Co. Bureau v Board, 218-945; 256 NW 687

Collateral attack on corporate existence after change of name. When a corporation changed its name by amending its articles of incorporation, and published notice of the amendment only one week instead of four, as required by statute, it continued to exist as either a de jure or de facto corporation, and its corporate existence could be attacked only by direct action, and not collaterally.

Glenwood Lbr. Co. v Hammers, 226-788; 285 NW 277

Landlord's contractual lien—recording articles and assignments—constructive notice to trustee. Where a lease provided for lien in favor of lessors for taxes and other money paid by lessors under provisions of lease, and when assignments of lease to corporations, articles of incorporation of bankrupt lessee under its original name, and amendment changing its name to that of bankrupt had all been recorded, that record gave constructive notice to trustee in bankruptcy and all subsequent lienors of lessor's prior lien.

ANALYSIS

- I PERSONAL LIABILITY IN GENERAL
- II WHEN PERSONAL LIABILITY ATTACHES
- III WHEN PERSONAL LIABILITY DOES NOT ATTACH

I PERSONAL LIABILITY IN GENERAL

Burden of proof. Persons who are in good faith contracted with and extended credit as partners are personally liable for the resulting debt, in the absence of evidence by them that they are stockholders in a corporation which is at least a de facto corporation.

Wilkin Co. v Co-op., 208-921; 223 NW 899

Substantial failure to effect incorporation. This section has no application to a case where no steps whatever are taken to effect an incorporation beyond securing subscriptions for stock in the contemplated incorporation and assuming to issue such stock, there being no holding out of an incorporation.

Kinney v Bank, 213-267; 236 NW 31

Waiver of statutory right—public policy. A waiver by a corporate creditor of his statutory right (now repealed) to hold officers and directors personally responsible for prohibited excess corporate indebtedness is not violative of public policy.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140

II WHEN PERSONAL LIABILITY ATTACHES

Liability of stockholders—burden of proof. Persons who are in good faith contracted with and extended credit as partners are personally liable for the resulting debt, in the absence of evidence by them that they are stockholders in a corporation which is at least a de facto corporation.

Wilkin Co. v Co-op., 208-921; 223 NW 899

Personal liability of stockholder who appropriates corporate assets. A stockholder who appropriates to his own personal use substantially all the assets of the corporation becomes personally liable for the taxes therefore levied against the corporation, the appropriation being in excess of said taxes.

Manning v Ottumwa Auto Co., 210-1182; 232 NW 501

Corporate resolution deferring delinquent salary—contractual validity. Where a father and son, the sole owners of a corporation, as officers, and having delinquent salary due them, pass a resolution deferring payment until after death of both, such resolution became a contract, supported by a consideration and accepted by and binding upon both the corporation and the executing officers, who having personally conducted the transaction are bound thereby and estopped from denying its validity.

Bankers Trust v Economy Coal, 224-36; 276 NW 16

III WHEN PERSONAL LIABILITY DOES NOT ATTACH

Authorization of corporate indebtedness—effect. The stockholders of a legal incorporation do not, by authorizing their board of directors to incur corporate obligations, render themselves personally liable to contribute to the loss suffered by the directors who incurred personal liability by executing their personal notes.

Fulton v Exch., 207-371; 222 NW 889

Liability for excess corporate debts—waiver. The purchaser of a corporate bond effectively waives his statutory right (now repealed) to hold the officers and directors personally liable for a prohibited excess indebtedness of the corporation, when he accepts the bond with an agreement therein consenting to all the terms of an indenture of trust securing said bond, and when he had full opportunity to discover that said indenture specifically embraced such waiver.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140

Liability for excess indebtedness—waiver—consideration. Ample consideration for a contract waiver by the purchaser of corporate bonds, of his statutory right (now repealed) to hold the officers and directors personally liable for a prohibited excess indebtedness of the corporation, may be found in the fact that the corporation has withdrawn a large amount of its assets and specifically pledged them with a trustee for the purpose of paying said bonds.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140

Liability of stockholders—de facto corporation. A creditor who knowingly contracts with, and extends credit to, a corporation as such tho it is only a de facto corporation, may not, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, hold the stockholders personally liable for the resulting debt.

Wilkin Co. v Co-op., 208-921; 223 NW 899

Nonpersonal liability under defective notice. The fact that a published notice of amendment to the articles of incorporation of a validly organized corporation does not state the terms and conditions upon which an issue of increased capital stock is to be paid, does not render a stockholder personally liable for the corporate debts, as regards a creditor who, at the time of extending credit, had explicit knowledge of such terms and conditions.

Arbitrary determination of value of stock. The plans for the reorganization of a corporation may not arbitrarily fix the value of the stock of a dissenting stockholder.

Ontjes v Bagley, 217-1200; 250 NW 17

Collateral holder of stock—nonpermissible contract. A national bank which holds as collateral to an individual loan a majority of the corporate stock of a manufacturing corporation has no power to enter into a contract with minority stockholders to the effect that said minority stockholders shall, under the renewal of said corporation, hold certain lucrative positions with the said renewed corporation.

Clark v Bank, 219-637; 259 NW 211

Contracts—waiver by inconsistent conduct. When minority and majority stockholders agree that the former will withdraw their objections to the renewal of the corporation and the latter will vote for such directors as will employ the minority in certain corporate positions, the minority waives all rights under the contract by subsequently joining with all the other stockholders in the adoption of renewal articles which wholly ignore the said contract.

Clark v Bank, 219-637; 259 NW 211

Franchise renewal — purchase of objecting stockholders' stock — no corporate obligation nor lien. Statute requiring majority stockholders, voting for renewal of corporate franchise, to purchase objecting stockholders' stock creates no liability against the corporation nor lien on its assets.

Terrell v Ringgold Tel. Co., 225-994; 282 NW 702

Franchise renewal statute—objecting stockholders selling to majority—action within 3 years premature—dismissal. At the termination of a mutual telephone company franchise, stockholders voting against renewal of franchise may not maintain an action against the majority stockholders to require purchase of their stock by such stockholders voting in favor thereof, until after 3 years from date of voting, under this section, permitting such franchise renewal, if the majority stockholders voting renewal purchase the stock of those voting against renewal within 3 years from date of voting, and an action commenced within such 3-year period, being premature, will be dismissed on motion.

Terrell v Ringgold Tel. Co., 225-994; 282 NW 702

Constitutional question—first raised on appeal—no review. Constitutionality of statute requiring majority stockholders voting for franchise renewal to purchase stock of those voting against renewal, within three years from date of voting, will not be considered on appeal when such question has not been raised in the lower court.

Terrell v Ringgold Tel. Co., 225-994; 282 NW 702

Reorganization — authorized method. The stockholders of a corporation, or a part thereof, may, in good faith, reorganize it (1) by causing its entire assets and liabilities to be transferred to a newly formed corporation, and (2) by surrendering their old stock and in lieu thereof receiving stock of the new corporation—provided the laws of the states under which the corporations are organized sanction and authorize such reorganization.

Collateral attack on corporate existence after change of name. its corporate existence could be attacked only by direct action, and not collaterally.

Glenwood Lbr. Co. v Hammers, 226-788; 285 NW 277

8376 Legislative control.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 64

Mutual assessment company — statutory change—constitutionality. Article VIII, §12, Constitution of Iowa, and this section are constitutional and statutory authority for a legislative act authorizing the board of directors of a mutual benefit life assessment company to transform said company into a legal reserve or level premium company, even tho such transformation results in leaving the old assessment certificate holders to carry their own assessments for death losses without further addition to their membership.

Wall v Bankers Life, 208-1053; 223 NW 257

8377 Fraud—penalty for.

Discussion. See 20 ILR 808—Director as fiduciary

Compensation — unallowable determination. A corporate director may not have his salary fixed by his own deciding vote.

Bennett v Klipto Co., 201-236; 207 NW 228

Contracting against one's own wrong. Corporate officers will not be permitted to write into a trust deed provisions which will shield them from personal responsibility for their illegal conversion of corporate property in their charge, or for any other willful wrong.

Walker v Howell, 209-823; 226 NW 85

Dissolution by state—corporate officer's lien denied—mining property. In an action by the state for dissolution of a mining corporation, a chattel mortgage and conditional sale contract covering the mine property are fraudulently invalid and may not be established as first liens when held and asserted by a defendant who, among other things, as an incorporator, director, president, and general manager of the corporation, secured such instruments while acting in his fiduciary capacity for the purpose of insuring payment to himself of debts previously created, thus serving his personal interests, rather than as fiduciary, preserving the assets for the creditors and stockholders.

State v Exline Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Dissipation of assets—liability. The act of the directors of a financially embarrassed corporation in selling their individually owned corporate shares of stock to a third party, and in receiving pay therefor out of the partly frozen bank deposits of the corporation under an understanding that said third party would replace said dissipated deposits with securities of equal value, is per se fraudulent, and necessarily violative of the law-imposed trust relationship of the directors to existing and future contemplated corporate creditors; and this is true irrespective of the plea that the directors in good faith believed that said third party would carry out the said understanding. It follows that the receiver of the corporation may repudiate such transaction and recover the dissipated assets from the directors.

Hoyt v Hampe, 206-206; 214 NW 718; 220 NW 45

Employment under delegated authority. The board of directors of a corporation, when not prohibited from so doing by the articles of incorporation or bylaws, may delegate in good faith to the corporate manager power to hire employees and to fix and pay salaries; and under such delegation the manager may, in good faith, legally employ a director to perform duties which are separate and distinct from those of a director.

Schulte v Ideal Co., 208-767; 226 NW 174

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held ample to sustain a charge of conspiracy on the part of the officers of a corporation in the sale of the shares of stock.

Pullan v Struthers, 201-1179; 207 NW 235

Fraudulent stock issue. The consent of stockholders to fraudulent issuance of bonds by corporation, which consent is obtained without disclosure of circumstances, does not excuse or ratify the fraud.

First Tr. Bank v Bridge Co., 98 F 2d, 416

Nonliability for naked nonfeasance. The director of a corporation is not liable, to a person dealing with the corporation, for mere nonfeasance—naked inaction as a director. So held where the director of a bank took no action with reference to the practice of the bank in commingling trust funds with the general funds of the corporation.

Proksch v Bettendorf, 218-1376; 257 NW 383; 38 NCCA 292

Purchase of corporate stock by officers—fiduciary relation. Principle recognized that an officer or director of a corporation occupies a fiduciary relation towards a fellow stockholder in the purchase of the latter's corporate stock, and is under duty to disclose to the selling stockholder evidence which has bearing on the value of the stock and which has come to him as such officer or director. Held, principle not applicable under certain facts.

Humphrey v Baron, 223-735; 273 NW 856

Responsibility for worthless loans. The president of a bank is personally liable to the bank for loaning the funds of the bank to persons known by him to be financially irresponsible, and especially so when he secures the approval of the directors as to such loans on the repeated assurance that he is back of said loans and will see that they are paid.

Farmers Bk. v Kaufmann, 201-651; 207 NW 764

Unauthorized transfer of collateral—conversion. The act of a trustee, holding collateral as security for a particular bond issue, in transferring, without authority, the collateral so held to another and different series of bonds, in order that the said latter bonds may be better secured, or the transfer of such collateral to any other foreign purpose, constitutes a conversion, and renders the trustee and the corporate officers who connive thereat personally responsible to the bondholders for the loss suffered by them.

Walker v Howell, 209-823; 226 NW 85

8378 Diversion of funds — unlawful dividends.

Discussion. See 18 ILR 516—Recovery of dividends

Corporate president's authority to write checks—burden of proof. In action by payee of check drawn by president of corporation for interest on officer's note it was held that payee had burden to prove check was executed by the corporation, that president had no implied authority to give check for interest on officer's personal debt, that president's check on corporation for officer's debt was without consideration as to the corporation, and that payee could not recover on the check as a matter of law without proof of president's authority or benefit received by the corporation.

Smoltz v Meat Co., (NOR); 224 NW 536

Dissolution by state—corporate officer's lien denied—mining property. In an action by the state for dissolution of a mining corporation, a chattel mortgage and conditional sale contract covering the mine property are fraudulently invalid and may not be established as first liens when held and asserted by a defendant who, among other things, as an incorporator, director, president, and general manager of the corporation, secured such instruments while acting in his fiduciary capacity for the purpose of insuring payment to himself of debts previously created, thus serving his personal interests, rather than as fiduciary, preserving the assets for the creditors and stockholders.

State v Exline Fuel Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

General manager—power to deposit and withdraw funds. The general manager of an incorporated, cooperative, dairy company who, for years, and to the general knowledge of the banking and business interest of the locality in question, is in unrestricted management of the entire business of the company, must be deemed to have both actual and ostensible authority to select banks of deposit for the corporate funds, and like authority to withdraw said funds—an authority as to which, both as to the making of deposits and as to the withdrawal thereof, the bank need ask no questions, assuming, of course, it acts at all times in perfect good faith.

Fidelity Co. v Bank, 223-446; 273 NW 141

Liability of capital stock not considered—lawful payment of dividends—presumption. Under the statute providing for the remedy of a creditor who is damaged by the wrongful diversion of funds of a corporation, it is held, the word "liability", as used in the statute, of a corporation on its capital stock is not an indebtedness to be considered in determining whether or not a corporation may lawfully pay dividends. In the absence of a showing to the contrary the presumption is that the payment of dividends is lawful.

Majestic Co. v Orpheum Circuit, 21 F 2d, 720

Nonobligation of stockholder to return. Stockholders who, while their corporation is solvent and so remains, in good faith receive dividends which, unbeknown to them, are paid from corporate capital and not from corporate profits or surplus, are not, in case the corporation subsequently becomes insolvent, liable, in an action at law, to corporate creditors for the amount of such dividends. And it is quite immaterial whether the claimed liability is predicated on the statutes (§§8377, 8378, C., '35) or on and under the so-called corporate "trust fund" doctrine of the common law.

Bates v Brooks, 222-1128; 270 NW 867; 109 ALR 1371

Policyholder as creditor.

Hoyt v Hampe, 206-206; 214 NW 718; 220 NW 45

Trust fund doctrine. The transfer by an insolvent bank, while in the hands of a receiver, of all or of a part of its assets to another bank which pays nothing therefor, but assumes the payment of certain liabilities of the insolvent's, does not deprive a judgment creditor of the insolvent's of the right to follow said assets into the hands of the transferee and to impress a lien thereon on the basis of the pro-rata value of the assets transferred; and this is true tho the transferee bank had no knowledge of the creditor's claim when it accepted the transfer.

German Bk. v Bank, 203-276; 211 NW 386

8380 Liability on excessive indebtedness. (Repealed.)

Excess indebtedness—basis of liability. A statute (now repealed) placing personal liability on the officers and directors of a corporation for prohibited excess indebtedness of the corporation, "knowingly consented to" by them, necessarily excludes liability (1) on mere proof that the officers or directors were negligent in performing their duties, and (2) as to corporate debts contracted after the officer or director ceased to be such.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140; 38 NCCA 133

Liability for excess corporate debts—waiver. The purchaser of a corporate bond effectively waives his statutory right (now repealed) to hold the officers and directors personally liable for a prohibited excess indebtedness of the corporation, when he accepts the bond with an agreement therein consenting to all the terms of an indenture of trust securing said bond, and when he had full opportunity to discover that said indenture specifically embraced such waiver.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140

Liability for excess indebtedness—waiver—consideration. Ample consideration for a contract waiver by the purchaser of corporate bonds, of his statutory right (now repealed) to hold the officers and directors personally liable for a prohibited excess indebtedness of the corporation, may be found in the fact that the corporation has withdrawn a large amount of its assets and specifically pledged them with a trustee for the purpose of paying said bonds.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140

Procedure against officers and directors. The personal and individual liability imposed by this statute is a liability which is enforceable, not by action at law by each creditor in piecemeal, and against one or more or all offending officers and directors, but by an action in equity for and on behalf of all creditors, wherein may be adjudicated, once for all, the extent of liability of each defendant and the extent of right of each creditor.

Platner v Hughes, 200-1363; 206 NW 268; 43 ALR 1141

Recovery on excess corporate indebtedness—proper party plaintiff. A trustee in bankruptcy of a corporate bankrupt cannot maintain an action against the directors and officers of the corporation to enforce the statutory individual liability attaching to such directors and officers consequent on their act in knowingly consenting to a corporate indebtedness in excess of that permitted by law; such right of action never, in any sense, belongs to the corporation, but on the contrary is a right extended to the corporate creditors, and is enforceable solely by such creditors, if necessary, irrespective of the bankruptcy proceedings.

Hicklin v Cummings, 211-687; 234 NW 530; 72 ALR 822

Statute of limitation—statutory liability. A cause of action to enforce the statutory-declared personal liability of corporate officers and directors for prohibited, excess corporate indebtedness (now repealed) is barred after the lapse of five years from the creation of the indebtedness.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140

Stock—rights of equitable owner. The legal rights of an equitable owner of corporate shares of stock (stock not duly transferred to him on the books of the corporation) are, in many respects, very limited, but, among such rights, is the right to maintain an action against the corporation to establish and protect the interest of such equitable owner in the corporate property.

Graeser v Finance Co., 218-1112; 254 NW 859

Waiver of statutory right—public policy. A waiver by a corporate creditor of his statutory right (now repealed) to hold officers and directors personally responsible for prohibited excess corporate indebtedness is not violative of public policy.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140

8382 Bylaws posted.

Bylaws—insufficient proof. A bylaw may not be deemed established by the mere introduction in evidence of the minute book of the corporation which reveals the presence of the alleged bylaw on pages of the book prior to the commencement of the official minutes of the corporation, which minutes contain no reference to bylaws.

Home Bk. v Ratcliffe, 206-201; 220 NW 36

8384 Stockholders entitled to names of stockholders.

Issuance of unpaid stock—pledge to innocent party—estoppel. A corporation which issues and delivers its corporate shares of stock, without receiving payment therefor, estops itself to question such issuance and delivery after the stock has been pledged by the holder thereof to a good-faith pledgee for value and without notice of the fact of nonpayment.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

Right to examine books and records. An administrator and the heirs at law of a deceased stockholder in a corporation, when refused an examination by the corporation, have the right, without any plea of good faith, to an order of court, in an appropriate proceeding, permitting them and their necessary assistants to examine the books and records of the corporation in order to determine the financial condition of the corporation and the value of its stock.

Becker v Trust Co., 217-17; 250 NW 644

Right to examine records. A stockholder of a corporation has a right, solely on the basis of his stockholdership, in good faith to inspect, examine, and copy the corporate stock records and records pertaining to the financial condition of the corporation, and if his application for such purpose is not in good faith, the corporation must so allege and prove.

Ontjes v Harrer, 208-1217; 227 NW 101

8385 Stock book and transfers.

Discussion. See 16 ILR 430—Mandamus to inspect books

Arbitrary determination of value of stock. The plans for the reorganization of a corporation may not arbitrarily fix the value of the stock of a dissenting stockholder.

Ontjes v Bagley, 217-1200; 250 NW 17

Banks—surrender of management to superintendent—scope of act. The right of a stockholder in a bank, or his representative, to have or make an examination of the books and records of the bank in order to determine its financial condition and the value of its corporate stock, is not negated or suspended by an emergency act of the legislature providing for the taking over of the bank and of its management by the superintendent of banking on application of the bank directors and suspending legal and equitable remedies during the time of such management.

Becker v Trust Co., 217-17; 250 NW 644

Dissolution—receiver's general sale power in decree without further order—validity—stock transfer compelled. A receiver in a partnership dissolution, while having no inherent powers but only those conferred by the appointing decree and subsequent orders, may, nevertheless, under a decree definitely granting general power to sell property without prior application to the court, make a sale of stock at an adequate price involving no bad faith, which sale, being by an officer of the court requiring court approval, is, when set out in and approved as part of an annual report, a completed valid sale entitling purchaser to a stock transfer on the proper corporation records.

Van Alstine v Bank, 224-1311; 278 NW 604

Evidence—competency. The duly identified stock book and stubs thereof of a corporation are admissible on the issue whether the person to whom the stock was issued was, in fact, a stockholder.

Gruetzmacher v Quevli, 208-537; 226 NW 5

Failure to transfer bank stock—estoppel to deny ownership. The appearance on the corporate stock record of a person's name as owner will not of itself estop such person to deny ownership of stock to escape a "double liability" assessment.

Bates v Bank, 223-1215; 275 NW 91

Genuineness of corporate records. In an action against the secretary of a corporation individually, the record proceedings of the corporation are admissible against him, when material, upon an admission by such secretary that he believed them to be such records, even tho he states such belief as a conclusion, or bases his belief on hearsay, and even tho he states that he does not know that they were correctly kept.

Helberg v Zuck, 201-860; 208 NW 209

Knowledge of falsity—opportunity to learn truth. The purchaser of corporate shares of stock will not be permitted to say that he relied to his damage on false representations as to the assets of the corporation and the value thereof, and as to amount originally paid in on the stock and the dividends declared, when, at the time the representations were made, he personally knew that some of the representations were false, and when, at said time, he had equal opportunity with the seller to know and learn the actual truth of the remaining representations but did not avail himself of said opportunity.

Wead v Ganzhorn, 216-478; 249 NW 271

Right to examine. Principle reaffirmed that a person has no right to examine the stock books and transfer records of a corporation in furtherance of a purpose which is inimical to the corporation.

Drennan v Ins. Co., 200-931; 205 NW 735

Mandamus—proper party plaintiff. One who, as an attorney in fact (tho not an attorney at law), is in good faith interested on behalf of his principal in a transfer of corporate stock, and who will become entitled to a compensation if he succeeds in collecting his client's claim, has such interest as will enable him to maintain mandamus to compel the corporation to permit an examination of the stock books and transfer records of the corporation.

Drennan v Ins. Co., 200-931; 205 NW 735

Right to examine records. A stockholder of a corporation has a right, solely on the basis of his stockholdership, in good faith to inspect, examine, and copy the corporate stock records and records pertaining to the financial condition of the corporation, and if his application for such purpose is not in good faith, the corporation must so allege and prove.

Ontjes v Harrer, 208-1217; 227 NW 101

Order for examination. An order by the trial court commanding a corporation to permit an examination of its "stock books and records" will be modified on appeal by expunging the reference to the "records".

Drennan v Ins. Co., 200-931; 205 NW 735

Partnership—corporation as part of assets. Where a corporation is the exclusive property of a partnership, its affairs are subject, in an accounting between the surviving partners and the representatives of a deceased partner, to investigation, correction, and review.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Stock—wrongful issuance—cancellation in equity. Where a corporation which succeeds to the business of two partners agrees to pay all outstanding debts of the partnership, a hypothecation of corporate stock of one of the two stockholders as security for one of said debts manifestly works no transfer of title to said stock to the corporation, and where the debt is paid with corporate funds and the stock certificate is returned, the wrongful act of the nonhypothecating stockholder in causing a new stock certificate to be issued to himself for one-half of the returned shares will be cancelled by proper action in equity.

Petersen v Heywood, 212-1174; 236 NW 63

Subscriptions—burden of proof. In an action by a corporation on a stock subscription contract for stock in an unorganized but contemplated corporation, plaintiff has the burden to establish every nonadmitted fact entitling it to recover, even tho defendant, in addition to a limited general denial, pleads in great detail that plaintiff's corporate organization was wholly beyond the contemplation of his subscription contract.

Cedar R. Amu. Assn. v Wymer, 213-1012; 240 NW 644

8386 Transfer of shares.

Effect on other stockholders. Transaction reviewed wherein the majority stockholder of a bank in good faith purchased certain frozen assets of the bank in the form of preferred and common corporate stock, and wherein the remaining stockholders of the bank likewise purchased the bank stock of the majority stockholder, and held in no manner to prejudice the rights of other holders of like preferred stock or to furnish any grounds for judgment either against the bank or against the majority stockholder in favor of such other preferred stockholders.

Boyd v Bank, 205-465; 218 NW 321

Assessment—when estate beneficiary liable. One who, in the final settlement of an estate, receives the corporate bank stock of the deceased intestate as his or her share of the estate, becomes a "stockholder", and is subject to assessment like other stockholders, even tho the stock has not been transferred on the stock books of the bank.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

Bank official's wife—stock transfer to husband. Where a wife transfers her bank stock to her husband, a bank officer, who informed other bank officials thereof, who contributed to the insolvent bank on a basis including this stock and who personally, instead of by proxy as previously, voted this stock, he was in fact the actual owner of bank stock, even tho it had not been transferred to him on the bank's books, and the double liability assessment is not recoverable from the wife.

Bates v Bank, 223-1215; 275 NW 91

Contract for equality in stock holdings—violation—injunction. Equity will, by injunction and other proper orders, protect a stockholder of a corporation from a violation of his contract with another stockholder under which equality of stockholdings of the two stockholders was clearly intended.

Holsinger v Herring, 207-1218; 224 NW 766

Disposal of assets. Principle recognized that, at common law, neither the board of directors of a corporation nor a majority of the stockholders thereof, can, against the dissent of a single stockholder, dispose of all the assets of the corporation when the corporation is conducting a prosperous business.

Graeser v Finance Co., 218-1112; 254 NW 859

Failure to transfer bank stock—estoppel to deny ownership. The appearance on the corporate stock record of a person's name as owner will not of itself estop such person to deny ownership of stock to escape a "double liability" assessment.

Bates v Bank, 223-1215; 275 NW 91

Former stockholder—no authority. Stockholders who had sold their stock after the corporation had recovered a judgment no longer had an interest in the judgment which remained the property of the corporation even when its name was changed, so a compromise settlement of the judgment had no validity when made by attorneys with consent given by one former stockholder, as only the corporation could authorize such settlement.

Glenwood Lbr. Co. v Hammers, 226-788; 285 NW 277

Limitation on transfer. A provision in the duly recorded articles of incorporation of a corporation for profit to the effect that the corporate shares of stock shall not be transferred to persons who are not then owners of stock, unless the proposed new stockholder is recommended by two directors, is neither violative of statute nor of public policy.

Mason v Tel. Co., 213-1076; 240 NW 671

Notice to agent—effect. The fact that an officer of a bank, during the administration of an estate, acted as an appraiser of corporation shares of stock standing in the name of the deceased is no notice to him or to the bank that corporate stock of the same kind hypothecated to the bank several years later belonged to the estate, and not to the corporate record owner thereof.

Klatt v Bank, 206-252; 220 NW 318

Officers—purchase of corporate stock by officers—fiduciary relation. Principle recognized that an officer or director of a corporation occupies a fiduciary relation towards a fellow stockholder in the purchase of the latter's corporate stock, and is under duty to disclose to the selling stockholder evidence which has bearing on the value of the stock and which has come to him as such officer or director. Held, principle not applicable under certain facts.

Humphrey v Baron, 223-735; 273 NW 856

Pledgee of stock and foreclosure purchaser entitled to record transfer. A good-faith pledgee of corporate shares of stock, for value and without notice that the pledgor has not paid the corporation for the stock, and the purchaser of said stock on foreclosure of the pledge, are both entitled to have said stock transferred on the records of the corporation in order to show their respective ownership.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

Right to corporate transfer of stock — laches—effect. Delay of some seven years, by a pledgee of corporate shares of stock, to enforce his right to have the stock transferred on the corporate stock records, will not bar the enforcement of said right when there are no unprotected rights of third parties intervening, and when the corporation has not been harmed by the delay.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

Right to corporate transfer of stock—when barred. The right of the pledgee of corporate shares of stock to have said stock transferred on the corporate stock records is based on a written contract arising out of the articles of incorporation, bylaws, certificates of stock, and statute, and consequently such right may be enforced at any time within the ten-year period following a written demand for such transfer, unless the enforcement of such right is barred by laches.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

Statutes and articles as part of contracts. The corporation charter and the statutes of the state of domicile of the corporation become a part of any contract between the corporation and a purchaser of its stock.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

Stock—assignment without delivery of certificate. A written assignment by the owner of corporate shares of stock of all his right, title and interest therein conveys good title, (1) even tho the owner places the assignment in escrow and causes it, together with the stock certificate, to be delivered to the assignee after his death, and (2) even tho the assignor, prior to his death, pledges the said stock certificate as security for a personal loan, which his estate later paid.

Leedham v Leedham, 218-767; 254 NW 61

Stock—corporation having first option to buy—no restriction on judicial sale—mandamus to transfer. Sale of assets of insolvent national bank made in obedience to an order of court is not a voluntary but a judicial sale; therefore, a corporation whose stock was sold thereunder is not entitled to notice thereof, even tho its articles of incorporation required notice of proposed sale of stock, and manda-mus will lie to compel the transfer of said stock on its records.

McDonald v Farley, 226-53; 283 NW 261

Stock—restraint on transfer—strictly construed. Restraints on powers to transfer corporate stock, or to assign leases, must be strictly construed.

McDonald v Farley, 226-53; 283 NW 261

Stockholder — who is — wholly inadequate evidence. In an equitable action to enforce, against an estate, "double" liability on bank stock, a finding and decree (based almost exclusively on the testimony of the record owner of said stock), that the deceased had actually owned said stock for some thirty years and was such owner at the time of his death, will (notwithstanding the deference accorded to the trial court in judging of the credibility of witnesses) be annulled on appeal as without adequate support in the evidence when the actions and conduct of said record owner during substantially all of said time in asserting exclusive ownership in himself, even after the death of the deceased, is wholly at war with his present testimony that he had never owned said stock and that the deceased had always owned it.

Andrew v Citizens Bank, 220-219; 261 NW 810

Transfer of shares — bona fide purchaser pending litigation. A purchaser in good faith and for value of corporate shares of stock will be protected in his ownership even tho the purchase was made pending litigation over the stock, when at the time of purchase there was no lien on or against the stock, and when the purchaser had no knowledge of said pending litigation.

Hewitt v Cas. Co., 212-316; 232 NW 835

Transfer of stock after expiration of charter—effect. When the charter of a bank expires, the legal existence of the corporation terminates; likewise terminates the legal right to transfer the stock in such sense that the transferer ceases to be a stockholder.

Andrew v Bank, 211-649; 234 NW 542

8387 Transfer of shares as collateral.

Belated notice. A levy on corporate shares of stock is not affected by the fact that, shortly after the levy was made, an officer of the corporation orally informed the levying officer that the stock had been transferred as collateral security.

Reimers v Tonne, 207-1011; 221 NW 574

Collateral holder of stock—nonpermissible contract. A national bank which holds as collateral to an individual loan a majority of the corporate stock of a manufacturing corporation has no power to enter into a contract with minority stockholders to the effect that said minority stockholders shall, under the renewal of said corporation, hold certain lucrative positions with the said renewed corporation.

Clark v Bank, 219-637; 259 NW 211

Failure to give notice. One who holds corporate shares of stock as collateral must, in order to preserve his lien on the stock, give to the secretary of the corporation whose stock is so held the statutory written notice of the fact that he holds said stock as collateral security; and it is quite immaterial that the secretary has acquired knowledge of such collateral holding from sources other than from the collateral holder.

Maloney v Storjohann, 206-721; 221 NW 208
Reimers v Tonne, 207-1011; 221 NW 574

Improper payments—assessment on bank stock. An executor will not be given credit for estate funds voluntarily used by him in discharging an assessment on bank stock which is held by the estate solely as collateral security.

In re Moe, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

Ineffectual notice. Writing reviewed, and held wholly insufficient to constitute written notice to the secretary of a corporation that certain of its corporate stock had been collaterally hypothecated.

Reimers v Tonne, 207-1011; 221 NW 574

Pledge of stock—practical construction of parties. A pledge of corporate shares of stock as collateral security will not be deemed novated into subsequently taken security and by an agreement in connection therewith, when such novation was never discussed between the parties, when the collateral holder never intended such novation, when pledgor's claim of novation was very belated, and when the parties had by their practical conduct negated such novation.

Winfield Bk. v Snell, 208-1086; 226 NW 774

Sale of pledge—legality. A good faith sale by a pledgee to his son of corporate stock pledged as collateral security for a debt is valid, no relation of principal and agent existing.

Williams v Herman, 216-499; 249 NW 215

8390 Liability of collateral holder.

Authority of depositary — assessment on corporate stock. The holder in escrow of corporate stock has no implied authority to pay an assessment on said stock.

Harris v Bills, 203-1034; 213 NW 929

8392 Expiration and closing of business.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 368

Receivership. The court has a discretion as to the appointment of a receiver to close up the affairs of the corporation.

McCarthy Co. v Dist. Ct., 201-912; 208 NW 505

8394 Liability of stockholders.

Discussion. See 2 ILB 1—Stockholder's liability; 3 ILB 130—Issuance of corporate stock for property; 19 ILR 101—Rescission by subscriber

ANALYSIS

I LIABILITY IN GENERAL
II LIABILITY TO CREDITORS

I LIABILITY IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 11 ILR 369—Liability of subscribers to corporate stock

Accommodation and interested guarantors distinguished. Principle reaffirmed that guarantors, who become such solely as an accommodation, occupy a very materially different position in the law than guarantors who become such in order to protect matters in which they have a financial interest. Stockholders, for instance, in guaranteeing payment of the debts of the corporation are not favorites of the law.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exc., 221-1382; 268 NW 155

Assessment—nonpower of superintendent. The superintendent of banking has no power to order an assessment on the stockholders of an insolvent bank.

Home Bank v Berggren, 211-697; 234 NW 573

Assessment on stockholders—allowance of claims—conclusiveness. On appeal from an order of assessment on stockholders who have not paid for their stock, the court will not, on the plea of the nonappealing receiver, determine whether the allowance of a claim against the corporation is conclusive on the said stockholders.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Assessment on unpaid stock subscriptions—“incorporation” as basis for order. An incorporation apparently effected by legal and regular steps, but actually permeated from its very inception by gross fraud, nevertheless creates a “corporation” in the sense that an assessment by the court on unpaid stock subscription contracts will not be set aside on the ground that there never was a corporation de jure or de facto.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Authorization of corporate indebtedness—effect. The stockholders of a legal incorporation do not, by authorizing their board of directors to incur corporate obligations, render themselves personally liable to contribute to the loss suffered by the directors who incurred personal liability by executing their personal notes.

Fulton v Farmers Exch., 207-371; 222 NW 889

Double liability—credit by amount of former assessment unallowable. One who purchases corporate bank stock by paying an existing assessment thereon (and but little in addition thereto) will not be permitted, after the bank has become insolvent, to assert that said assessment was coercive as to him, and that the amount of such assessment should be credited on his “double liability.”

Andrew v Bank, 211-649; 234 NW 542

Payment in property other than money. Where due authorization is obtained to pay for corporate stock with personal property other than money, the unquestioned assumption by the corporation, upon the issuance of stock, of full ownership of such personal property is equivalent to a formal bill of sale of such property.

Comstock v Wood, 204-1027; 216 NW 640

Personal liability of stockholder who appropriates corporate assets. A stockholder who appropriates to his own personal use substantially all the assets of the corporation becomes personally liable for the taxes theretofore levied against the corporation, the appropriation being in excess of said taxes.

Manning v Auto Co., 210-1182; 232 NW 501

Knowledge of insolvency of bank—not imputable to nonactive director. Knowledge that a bank is insolvent is not imputed to one who is a director and minor stockholder of the bank, when he takes no active part in its management and has no actual knowledge of the insolvency.

In re Smith, 228- ; 289 NW 694

Stockholders—acts constituting. One who buys corporate bank stock necessarily becomes a stockholder even tho the bank officials in good faith, but mistakenly, represented that such purchase would rehabilitate the impaired capital of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 211-649; 234 NW 542

Subscriptions—burden of proof. In an action by a corporation on a stock subscription contract for stock in an unorganized but contemplated corporation, plaintiff has the burden to establish every nonadmitted fact entitling it to recover, even tho defendant, in addition to a limited general denial, pleads in great detail that plaintiff's corporate organization was wholly beyond the contemplation of his subscription contract.

Cedar Rapids Co. v Wymer, 213-1012; 240 NW 644

Subscription—liability. A subscriber for corporate stock on specified terms of payment is liable on his contract of subscription (except in those cases where the defensive plea of fraud is available), even tho no certificate of stock has been or can be legally issued to him until payment has been made in full,

I LIABILITY IN GENERAL—concluded and even tho he is not deemed a “stockholder” until he has paid in full; and this is true irrespective of the statute which declares the stockholder’s liability for unpaid installments on stock “owned by him”.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Subscriptions—unexecuted rescission. A subscriber for corporate shares of stock who, while the corporation is a going concern, enters into a bona fide agreement with the corporation for the complete rescission of the stock-subscription contract, will be entitled to judgment against a subsequently appointed receiver for the amount of the stock-subscription notes executed by him and transferred by the corporation and not returned to him as provided in the contract of rescission.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Unallowable plea of satisfaction. A subscriber for corporate shares of stock may not avoid a judgment for the amount due on his subscription by a showing that he had indorsed to the corporation the note of a third party under an agreement that the corporation would collect the note and pay to the subscriber the balance remaining after satisfying the stock-subscription contract.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

II LIABILITY TO CREDITORS

Determination of corporate debts—conclusiveness. For the purpose of determining the probable debts of an insolvent corporation as a basis for an assessment on unpaid stock subscriptions, the allowance of a claim is conclusive on the receiver of the corporation.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Foreign receiver—comity. A foreign receiver may maintain in this state an action to recover of a corporate stockholder a statutory liability on stockholdings.

Gruetzmacher v Quevli, 208-537; 226 NW 5

Fraud in incorporation—effect on title of receiver. Even tho the court in proceedings for the dissolution of a so-called corporation found and decreed, in effect, that the concern was conceived, born, and nurtured in fraud, nevertheless, in receivership proceedings for the ordering of an assessment on those who had contracted for stock in the concern and had not paid therefor, the receiver will be deemed to have prima facie title to such contracts of subscriptions.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Fraud pleadable against corporate creditors. One who is fraudulently induced to subscribe for corporate stock and to execute his negotiable promissory note in payment therefor may plead said fraud against a creditor of the corporation who, by indorsement, became a collateral security holder of the note, with full knowledge that it was given in payment for stock, (1) whether the creditor sues on the note or (2) whether the creditor sues on the theory (conceding, arguendo, its legal permissibility) that the indorsement of the note worked an assignment to him of the corporation’s right of action against the subscriber for unpaid installments of stock.

Arnd v Grell, 200-1272; 206 NW 613

Fraudulent subscriptions—belated rescission. A party who has been fraudulently induced to subscribe for corporate shares of stock may not, after the corporation has been dissolved, and after a receiver has been appointed to close up its affairs, have his contract of subscription cancelled and rescinded and the status quo restored by the court in the receivership proceedings.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586
State v Packing Co., 206-405; 220 NW 6

Subscriptions—fraud in avoidance. A subscriber for corporate shares of stock whose contract of subscription has been fraudulently induced by the corporation or by its agents may avail himself of such fraud and avoid all liability on such contract:

1. By properly and with due diligence rescinding such contract while the corporation is a going concern, tho insolvent, or

2. By pleading said fraud (assuming due diligence) as a complete defense to an action by the receiver of the insolvent corporation to recover on such contract for the benefit of corporate creditors, unless the receiver avoids the plea by proof of the existence of unpaid corporate debts contracted subsequent to the said contract of subscription.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586
State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Issuance of stock—estoppel to question. One, who has explicit knowledge of the facts under which corporate shares of stock were issued to him and later accepts and retains a dividend paid on the stock, will not, at least as against creditors of the corporation, be heard to say that the stock was improperly issued to him.

Andrew v Bank & Trust, 219-939; 258 NW 925

Merger and bar of defenses—nonbar or estoppel. A decree that a subscriber for corporate stock could not recover of the corporate receiver the amount already paid to the corporation on his subscription contract—such being the sole issue—does not estop the subscriber, when sued by the receiver for the unpaid amount of said contract, from pleading in defense that the purported corporation never had any corporate existence.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

Order for assessment—limitation of action. The power of the court to enter an order of assessment on unpaid written contracts of subscription for corporate stock in a corporation which has become insolvent and is under receivership, is not barred from and after the lapse of five years from the time the attorney general brought the action for dissolution and alleged the insolvency of the corporation, nor from and after the lapse of five years from the time when the insolvency of the corporation was definitely determined.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Subscription contract—when rescission unallowable. Principle reaffirmed that a contract of subscription for corporate shares of stock cannot be rescinded after the insolvency of the corporation, there being corporate creditors who became such after the subscription was executed.

Andrew v Bank & Trust Co., 219-921; 258 NW 911

“Trust fund doctrine”—applicability to dissolved corporation. The “Trust Fund Doctrine”—the equitable rule that the entire property of a corporation, including unpaid subscriptions to its capital stock, becomes a trust fund in the hands of the receiver for the payment of the claims of innocent creditors, applies to cases or instances where the corporation has been dissolved because of fraud, as well as to cases or instances where the corporation has simply become insolvent.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Unpaid stock subscription—nonliability. A subscriber for corporate stock who is not a promoter of the purported corporation is not liable on his fraud-induced unpaid stock subscription contract in an action by the receiver of the corporation when the charter of the corporation has been judicially annulled, subsequent to the subscription contract, by the state, for fraud perpetrated on the state in obtaining the charter; in other words, the so-called English “Equitable Trust Fund Doctrine” does not apply to such a condition.

Fundamental reason: Such purported corporation, having been conceived, born, and nurtured in fraud, was never, in truth or fact, a corporation de jure or de facto, in a business sense.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

Unpaid subscriptions—enforcement by receiver. The statutory liability of a corporate stockholder on the unpaid installments of his stock is not enforceable, after the corporation has passed into the hands of a trustee in bankruptcy, by an individual corporate creditor for his own sole benefit, but by an appropriate action for the benefit of all creditors.

Arnd v Grell, 200-1272; 206 NW 613

Unpaid subscriptions—law (?) or equity (?). An action by a receiver of a dissolved corporation to collect on the unpaid stock subscriptions of various parties must be by separate, ordinary proceedings at law, and not jointly in equity, when the demand is solely for a money judgment; and this is true even tho in equity a multiplicity of suits would be avoided.

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 211 NW 878; 215 NW 261

Unpaid stock subscriptions—duty of receiver. A receiver who has so far acted in behalf of all creditors and against all parties adversely interested to the creditors, may proceed, and will be permitted to proceed, under an order of court, against stockholders who have not paid for their stock, notwithstanding the possibility that at some time in the future it may become necessary for the court to adjust the conflicting rights and equities between creditors or between creditors and stockholders.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Voidable subscription contract. A stock-subscription contract to the effect that the corporation will accept, in payment for its stock, future services of undetermined value to be rendered by the subscriber is voidable by the corporate receiver who is seeking to recover for the benefit of creditors the amount due on the stock subscription.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Wrongful payment of dividends—nonobligation to return. Stockholders who, while their corporation is solvent and so remains, in good faith receive dividends which, unbeknown to them, are paid from corporate capital and not from corporate profits or surplus, are not, in case the corporation subsequently becomes insolvent, liable, in an action at law, to corporate creditors for the amount of such dividends. And it is quite immaterial whether the claimed liability is predicated on the statutes (§§8377, 8378, C., '35) or on and under the so-called corporate “trust fund” doctrine of the common law.

Bates v Brooks, 222-1128; 270 NW 867; 109 ALR 1371

8398 Indemnity—contribution.

Right to contribution. Corporate stockholders who have fully paid for their stock may, upon the insolvency of the corporation, maintain an action for contribution against stockholders who have not fully paid for their stock, in order that, in the final settlement of the corporate affairs, the burden of discharging corporate obligations may rest upon all stockholders in proportion to their respective stock holdings or obligations; and it is immaterial that all the stockholders were fraudulently induced by the corporation to subscribe for the stock.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

8400 Production of books.

See annotations under §11316 et seq.

Essential purposes of writ of certiorari. On certiorari to review an order of the district court relative to the production of books and papers, the sole inquiry is whether the lower court had jurisdiction to enter the order in question, not whether the lower court made errors in exercising its jurisdiction which were correctible on appeal.

Independent Order v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Foreign corporations—visitatorial power of state. A foreign corporation transacting business within this state is subject to all the remedies available against a domestic corporation. So held under an application for an order for the production of papers and documents.

Independent Order v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Insufficient authentication. A purported financial statement of a corporation is manifestly inadmissible, in the absence of testimony as to its authenticity or as to the author thereof and the circumstances of its preparation.

Helberg v Zuck, 201-860; 208 NW 209

Minority stockholders—right to inspect books. The minority stockholders of a dissolved corporation have the right, (in an action for an accounting against another corporation which has succeeded to the business, assets, books, and papers of the dissolved corporation) on a proper petition therefor, to an order for the production and inspection of the material books, records, and papers of the dissolved corporation and of the succeeding corporation.

National Co. v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

Order on strangers to action. The jurisdiction of the court, on a proper petition, to order a party to an action to produce books, papers, etc., does not embrace the jurisdiction to enter such order against one who is not a party to the litigation. And an amendment to the petition for such order which does no more than to insert in the caption the names of various parties as defendants does not make such parties defendants in the statutory sense.

National Co. v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

Order for production—inability to enforce—effect. That a foreign corporation doing business in this state may not comply with an order for the production of documents and papers and that the court may be unable to enforce its order, is no adequate reason for refusing the order or for annulling such order when made.

Independent Order v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Place of inspection—balance of convenience. A foreign corporation, doing business in this state, has no absolute right to demand that its documents and papers be inspected at its home office in the foreign state. So held as to documents and papers which did not pertain to the daily operations of a foreign insurance company.

Independent Order v Scott, 223-105; 272 NW 68

Place of inspection of books. One ordered to produce books for inspection may have the right to insist that said inspection be made at his principal place of business, and not at a place where said books will pass, temporarily, entirely out of his possession.

National Co. v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

Protection of private papers. A party defendant may not be required to expose to his adversary or the public, his private business affairs which have no relation to the matters in litigation. If his books contain matters relevant to the litigation, and also purely nonrelevant personal matters, the order for the production and inspection of the books must, by some proper provision, protect the latter.

National Co. v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

Relevancy—determination of issue. The affidavit of one against whom an order for the production of books is sought, to the effect that said books are wholly irrelevant to the matter in litigation, will be deemed presumptively true.

National Co. v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

Subpoena duces tecum—office. The remedy of a party to an action who desires the production of books, papers, etc., in the possession of a stranger to the action is to cause to be issued and served a subpoena duces tecum.

National Co. v Dist. Court, 214-960; 243 NW 727

8401 Estoppel.

Assessment on unpaid stock subscriptions—"incorporation" as basis for order. An incorporation apparently effected by legal and regular steps, but actually permeated from its very inception by gross fraud, nevertheless creates a "corporation" in the sense that an assessment by the court on unpaid stock subscription contracts will not be set aside on the ground that there never was a corporation de jure or de facto.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Burden of proof. Persons who are in good faith contracted with and extended credit as partners are personally liable for the resulting debt, in the absence of evidence by them that they are stockholders in a corporation which is at least a de facto corporation.

Wilkin Co. v Co-op. Assn., 208-921; 223 NW 899

Cancellation of deed—statements to attorney subsequent to execution—incapacity. In an action by a grantor to set aside deed, testimony as to the contents of statements made by grantor to his attorneys eight days after execution of deed, was incompetent and inadmissible.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Collateral attack as unallowable defense to action. A foreign de facto corporation cannot be defeated in its action to prevent an injury to its property by the plea that it has no valid corporate existence in that it has attempted in its incorporation to effect a combination of powers prohibited by the laws of the state of its attempted incorporation.

First T. & S. Co. v U. S. Gypsum, 211-1019; 233 NW 137; 73 ALR 1196

Collateral attack on corporate existence after change of name. When a corporation changed its name by amending its articles of incorporation, and published notice of the amendment only one week instead of four, as required by statute, it continued to exist as either a de jure or de facto corporation, and its corporate existence could be attacked only by direct action, and not collaterally.

Glenwood Lbr. Co. v Hammers, 226-788; 285 NW 277

De facto corporation defined. A de facto corporation is one formed and acting as such under an authorizing statute, tho its incorporation may be defective.

First T. & S. Co. v U. S. Gypsum, 211-1019; 233 NW 137; 73 ALR 1196

De facto corporation. A de facto corporation results from (1) the good-faith execution of articles of incorporation under an authorizing statute, (2) the filing of said articles with the officer designated by the statute, (3) the imperfect certification of said articles by the secretary of state to the recording officer, (4) the due recording of said articles, (5) the due issuance of a permit to transact business as a corporation, and (6) the actual transaction of such business.

Wilkin Co. v Co-op. Assn., 208-921; 223 NW 899

De jure corporation. A statute which provides that "no corporation shall have legal existence until such [certified] articles be left for record", does not mean that a failure to strictly comply with the statute prevents a de facto corporation from coming into existence.

Wilkin Co. v Co-op. Assn., 208-921; 223 NW 899

Liability of stockholders—de facto corporation. A creditor who knowingly contracts with and extends credit to a corporation as such, tho it is only a de facto corporation, may not, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, hold the stockholders personally liable for the resulting debt.

Wilkin Co. v Co-op. Assn., 208-921; 223 NW 899

Discrimination as to permissible defense to action. The statute prohibiting the defensive plea of want of legal incorporation to collateral actions by or against an acting corporation is not unconstitutional on the ground that it is arbitrary and discriminatory.

First T. & S. Co. v U. S. Gypsum Co., 211-1019; 233 NW 137; 73 ALR 1196

Estoppel to plead invalidity—scope of statute. This statute applies to all corporations, domestic or foreign.

First T. & S. Co. v U. S. Gypsum Co., 211-1019; 233 NW 137; 73 ALR 1196

Joint stock land banks—legal status. Joint stock land banks, tho organized under federal statutes, are privately owned corporations, organized for profit to their stockholders through the business of making loans on farm mortgages, are not governmental instrumentalities, and are suable in the proper state courts.

Higdon v Lincoln JSL Bk., 223-57; 272 NW 93

Unincorporated association—validity of contracts—estoppel. One who contracts with an association as a legal entity capable of transacting business, and receives money or other valuable consideration therefrom, may not deny the validity of the contract on the ground that the association has no legal existence.

Lamm v Stoen, 226-622; 284 NW 465

Unpaid stock subscription—nonliability. A subscriber for corporate stock who is not a promoter of the purported corporation is not liable on his fraud-induced unpaid stock subscription contract in an action by the receiver of the corporation when the charter of the corporation has been judicially annulled, subsequent to the subscription contract, by the state, for fraud perpetrated on the state in obtaining the charter; in other words, the so-called English "Equitable Trust Fund Doctrine" does not apply to such a condition.

Fundamental reason: Such purported corporation, having been conceived, born, and nurtured in fraud, was never, in truth or fact, a corporation de jure or de facto, in a business sense.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

8402 Dissolution—receivership.

Discussion. See 19 ILR 95—Power of equity; 20 ILR 113—Foreign assets; 22 ILR 60—Tort claims in receiverships “Corporation” defined. The filing of articles of incorporation and the due issuance by the secretary of state of a certificate of incorporation, constitutes a “corporation” within the meaning of this section.

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 211 NW 878; 215 NW 261

Attorney general as “adverse party”. A liquidator (or receiver) was appointed in a foreign state to liquidate an insolvent insurance company chartered in said state, and doing business in Iowa. The attorney general of Iowa, in his official capacity, at once instituted ancillary receivership proceedings in Iowa, and, in time, certain claims were duly allowed, in said ancillary proceedings, in favor of creditors of the insolvent. The Iowa court later ruled, on intervention by the foreign liquidator, that funds in the hands of the ancillary receiver should be retained by him and distributed under the ancillary receivership.

Held, an appeal by the foreign liquidator from said latter ruling imperatively necessitated service of notice of appeal on the attorney general or on his successor in office.

State v Southern Surety, 223-558; 273 NW 129

Claims—lapsed time for hearing—reopening discretionary. Trial court administering receiverships has a discretion dependent upon equitable circumstances and not a mandatory duty to permit a claim to be presented and heard after the time fixed therefor.

Headford Co. v Associated Co., 224-1364; 278 NW 624

Claims—order approving disallowance construed. An order of court in an insolvent corporation receivership proceedings in the language, “The claims filed * * * be and the same are hereby allowed as classified by the receiver herein * * *”, construed to mean an approval of the disallowance of a claim by the receiver.

Headford Co. v Associated Co., 224-1364; 278 NW 624

Cross-petition defense—state as proper party—belated objections. In an action to dissolve a mining corporation, question whether state, not being stockholder or creditor of the mining corporation, was proper party to make defense to a cross petition, which question not having been raised in the trial court, may not be raised for the first time and reviewed on appeal.

State v Exline Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Dissolution and annulment of incorporation—effect. Even tho a so-called incorporation is dissolved and its life wholly annulled, nevertheless, the receiver appointed for the purpose of winding up its affairs must be deemed to represent the corporation for said purpose.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Dissolution by state—corporate officer’s lien denied—mining property. In an action by the state for dissolution of a mining corporation, a chattel mortgage and conditional sale contract covering the mine property are fraudulently invalid and may not be established as first liens when held and asserted by a defendant who, among other things, as an incorporator, director, president, and general manager of the corporation, secured such instruments while acting in his fiduciary capacity for the purpose of insuring payment to himself of debts previously created, thus serving his personal interests, rather than as fiduciary, preserving the assets for the creditors and stockholders.

State v Exline Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Effect on pending actions. A duly rendered decree of dissolution of a foreign corporation, at the instance of the state under the laws of which said corporation was organized, is, in effect, an executed sentence of death; being such, said decree ipso facto works an abatement, (1) of an unadjudicated action in rem pending in this state against said dissolved corporation, and (2) of garnishment proceeding pending in connection with said action. Under such circumstances, the garnishee may properly move for and be granted an order of discharge.

Peoria Co. v Streator Co., 221-690; 266 NW 548

Existing garnishment—priority over receivership. The receiver of a defunct corporation takes the property of the corporation subject to the prior positive rights acquired by a creditor under a duly perfected garnishment of the admitted debtors of the corporation.

Watts v Surety Co., 216-150; 248 NW 347

Federal income tax on operating receiverships—nature of business. The federal statute requiring operating receiverships to pay income tax applies to a receiver, where a substantial part of business both before and after the appointment was the investment of corporation funds in securities and the collection of rents and profits, even tho the receiver was appointed to liquidate the business.

State v American B. & C. Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

Foreign corporations—dissolution and receivership—effect. A foreign decree of dissolution of a corporation, and an order appointing a receiver to wind up its affairs, do not abate an action aided by attachment in this state, because the claim of the receiver of a foreign corporation to its property in this state will not be recognized as against the valid claims of resident attaching creditors.

Watts v Surety Co., 216-150; 248 NW 347

Fraud-induced subscriptions for stock—liability of subscribers. Principle reaffirmed that, under the "Trust Fund Doctrine," the receiver of an insolvent corporation may recover on an unpaid contract of subscription for stock of the corporation fraudulently obtained from the subscriber, provided that the receiver shows the existence of unpaid corporate debts which were contracted subsequent to the said contract of subscription.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Good cause. "Good cause" for total ouster may consist of any grounds which would support quo warranto.

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 211 NW 878; 215 NW 261

Material considerations. On the issue whether a temporary receiver should be appointed, in an action by minority stockholders to liquidate the affairs of a corporation whose charter had expired, the court, always proceeding cautiously, will, inter alia, give due consideration to the following matters: (1) The fact that ordinarily such liquidation is effected through the corporate organization; (2) the relative financial holdings of the contending parties; (3) the fact that the parties agree that the inherent nature of the business requires a temporary continuation of the business as a part of the liquidation; (4) whether, from the nature of the business, the court would be practically compelled to choose a receiver from the management which is under attack; (5) the integrity of the past and present corporate management; (6) whether liquidation has been unduly delayed, in view of general economic conditions; (7) the probability of loss or impairment of assets under the present corporate management; (8) the solvency or insolvency of the corporation.

McCarthy Co. v Coal Co., 204-207; 215 NW 250; 54 ALR 1116

Optional remedies. When the state demands the complete ouster of a corporation, it may proceed in equity under this section, or at law in the form of quo warranto under §12417.

Kosman v Thompson, 204-1254; 211 NW 878; 215 NW 261

Order of payment. Serial bonds of different maturity dates must, in case of insolvency of the issuing company, be paid pro rata, and not pro tanto, when they are issued under a trust agreement under which the issuing company is obligated to keep on deposit with the trustee collateral securities to the full amount and value of the entire issue of that particular series.

Central Bank v Commercial Co., 206-75; 218 NW 622

Permissible defendants. All stockholders of a corporation are proper parties to an action by the state to dissolve the corporation.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Preferred stockholder may not complain. A preferred stockholder whose stock has fully matured has no legal interest in the continuation of the corporation, provided his right of priority to the assets be protected.

Boyd v Bank, 205-465; 218 NW 321

Receivers—dissolution of corporation—federal income tax liability. The state, not owning the property, has no such interest in a corporation under receivership as to prevent the federal government from collecting income tax therefrom, even tho the receivership arose out of the state's action in its governmental capacity for a dissolution of the corporation.

State v American B. & C. Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

Right of minority stockholders. A receiver may, in an action by minority stockholders, very properly be appointed for a solvent corporation which is no longer a going concern, and is in process of liquidation, on a showing that the management is inefficient, negligent, and fraudulent, to the manifest detriment of the plaintiffs.

Crow v Bond & M. Co., 202-38; 209 NW 410

Right to question corporate management. The corporate management of a corporation may not be questioned by stockholders who became such subsequent to the acts in question.

Pomeroy v Bank, 203-524; 211 NW 219

"Trust Fund Doctrine"—applicability. The "Trust Fund Doctrine"—the equitable rule that the entire property of a corporation, including unpaid subscriptions to its capital stock, becomes a trust fund in the hands of the receiver, for the payment of the claims of innocent creditors—applies to cases or instances where the corporation has been dissolved because of fraud, as well as to cases or instances where the corporation has simply become insolvent.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Unpaid stock subscriptions—liability determined in receivership proceedings. An ancillary bill by a receiver of insolvent corporation to enforce collection upon unpaid stock subscriptions cannot be maintained in equity in the same court where receivership proceedings are pending, since the stockholders are not necessary parties to the receivership action as they are represented by the corporation, itself, which is a party to the action, and the liability of such stockholders can be determined in the receivership action after which the receiver may proceed by action at law against the various subscribers for the unpaid stock subscriptions.

Britton v Andrews, 8 F 2d, 950

8404 False statements or pretenses.

Fidelity insurance—construction. The conduct of an officer of a bank in intentionally and deceitfully omitting to make any entry on the books of the bank of payments made on the bills receivable of the bank (other than a memorandum slip, hung on a spindle), with resulting loss to the bank, is covered by a bond or policy of insurance which guarantees indemnity against "dishonest or criminal acts or omissions" of said officers.

Andrew v Ind. Co., 207-652; 223 NW 529

Opinion evidence—assets of bank. A qualified expert accountant is competent to testify that certain proven payments of money to a bank "did not come into the assets of the bank as shown by the books and records of the bank".

Andrew v Ind. Co., 207-652; 223 NW 529

CHAPTER 385 CAPITAL STOCK

8408 Indorsement of amount paid.

Capital stock—money paid for stock—hemp production—effect of joint promotion. The only one of two persons jointly interested in processing hemp holds from a foreign corporation a contract for certain hemp production rights in Iowa and they induce another person to invest money for stock in an Iowa hemp corporation to be formed, the money will be considered as paid to both.

Smith v Secor, 225-650; 281 NW 178

Certificate reciting absolute ownership of stock—effect. A certificate of corporate stock which certifies that the holder "is the owner" of said stock cannot be deemed to give the transferee notice that the holder has not paid the corporation for the stock, even tho the certificate carries no indorsement as to "what amount or portion of the par value has been paid to the corporation issuing the same, and whether such payment has been in money or property".

Bankers Tr. Co. v Rood, 211-289; 233 NW 794; 73 ALR 1421

Money advanced on joint representations—suing jointly. Where money is invested with several persons representing themselves to be jointly interested in a hemp production scheme, such joint promoters may be sued jointly, notwithstanding one of them asserts that he was not in fact so interested,—he is estopped from denying his interest.

Smith v Secor, 225-650; 281 NW 178

Payment—trust relation. One who subscribes for corporate shares of stock, pays therefor, and receives a valid receipt evidencing such payment may not claim that he continued to retain title to the money because no certificate of stock was issued to him.

Andrew v Bk. & Tr. Co., 219-921; 258 NW 911

Rescission by stockholder unallowable. A stockholder may not rescind a contract entered into by the corporation of which he is a stockholder and another corporation.

Andrew v Bk. & Tr. Co., 219-921; 258 NW 911

Unpaid stock subscription—nonliability. A subscriber for corporate stock who is not a promoter of the purported corporation is not liable on his fraud-induced unpaid stock subscription contract in an action by the receiver of the corporation when the charter of the corporation has been judicially annulled, subsequent to the subscription contract, by the state, for fraud perpetrated on the state in obtaining the charter; in other words, the so-called English "Equitable Trust Fund Doctrine" does not apply to such a condition.

Fundamental reason: Such purported corporation, having been conceived, born, and nurtured in fraud, was never, in truth or fact, a corporation de jure or de facto, in a business sense.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

Voidable subscription contract. A stock-subscription contract to the effect that the corporation will accept, in payment for its stock, future services of undetermined value to be rendered by the subscriber is voidable by the corporate receiver who is seeking to recover for the benefit of creditors the amount due on the stock subscription.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

8409 Effect of violation.

Issuance of unpaid stock—pledge to innocent party—estoppel. A corporation which issues and delivers its corporate shares of stock without receiving payment therefor estops itself to question such issuance and delivery after the stock has been pledged by the holder thereof to a good-faith pledgee for value and without notice of the fact of nonpayment.

Liability on unpaid installments. A subscriber for corporate shares of stock who executes to the corporation his negotiable promissory note therefor may not be said to owe an "unpaid installment" on his stock after the corporation has negotiated the note to a holder in due course.

Arnd v Grell, 200-1272; 206 NW 613

Subscription to stock—liability. A subscriber for corporate stock on specified terms of payment is liable on his contract of subscription (except in those cases where the defensive plea of fraud is available), even tho no certificate of stock has been or can be legally issued to him until payment has been made in full, and even tho he is not deemed a "stockholder" until he has paid in full; and this is true irrespective of the statute (§8394, C., '24) which declares the stockholder's liability for unpaid installments on stock "owned by him".

Payment in property other than money. Where due authorization is obtained to pay for corporate stock with personal property other than money, the unquestioned assumption by the corporation, upon the issuance of stock, of full ownership of such personal property is equivalent to a formal bill of sale of such property.

CHAPTER 386

PERMITS TO FOREIGN CORPORATIONS

8420 Application for permit.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 404; '34 AG Op 209, 334

Certificate of authority. A foreign life insurance company which holds an annual certificate from the commissioner of insurance authorizing it to transact its business in this state (§8657, C., '31) is not subject to the provision of chapter 386, C., '31, requiring foreign corporations generally to obtain a permit from the secretary of state in order to transact business in this state. It is not the intent to require two permits.

John Hancock Ins. v Lookingbill, 218-373; 253 NW 604

Doing business in state—no absolute right. A foreign insurance company has no absolute right to come into the state and do business.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Foreign corporation doing business without permit—actions barred—presumptions from nature of business. A necessary statutory prerequisite, to the right of a foreign corporation for pecuniary profit to sue on an Iowa contract, is that it first have a permit to transact business in Iowa, and the very nature of its business may raise the presumption that such corporation is one for pecuniary profit.

Johnson Co. v Hamilton, 225-551; 281 NW 127-

Testamentary power. A statute which limits the power of corporations which are organized under the laws of this state to take a testamentary devise will not be extended by the courts to include foreign corporations.

Ross v Seminary, 204-648; 215 NW 710

8421 Details of application—secretary of state as process agent.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 334

Discharged employee. Service of an original notice on a foreign corporation which has wholly withdrawn from the state may not be legally made on one who was never an officer or acting officer of the corporation, and who, at the time of service, was simply a discharged former employee.

Reliance Co. v Craig, 206-804; 221 NW 499

Implied process agent. Whether a foreign corporation which enters the state and transacts business therein without obtaining a permit so to do is subject to service of an original notice on the secretary of state, quaere.

Reliance Co. v Craig, 206-804; 221 NW 499

Nonpermissible personal judgment on foreign service. A corporation organized under federal law, with its principal place of business or domicile in a foreign state, does not become a "resident" of this state by doing business in this state. It follows that service outside this state of an original notice on the corporation, it having no officer or agent in this state, does not authorize the entry in this state of a personal judgment against the corporation.

Van Gilder v Bank, 210-531; 231 NW 671; 69 ALR 1340

Service on soliciting agent. A foreign corporation which has no permit from this state to transact business in this state, and which maintains no office in this state, is not subjected to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state by service in this state of process on the corporation's traveling agent whose authority begins and ends in soliciting and receiving at his own expense in this state orders for goods, and in forwarding said orders to the corporation in the foreign state for approval or disapproval.

Burnham Co. v Stove Works, 214-112; 241 NW 405

Foreign corporations—doing business—original notice—quashing service. A foreign corporation that has no office, no representative, and at most only one transaction in Iowa is not "doing business" in the state so as to give Iowa courts jurisdiction thereof by service of original notice on the secretary of state and a motion to quash the service was properly sustained.

Foreign corporation's contract to install pipe organ—interstate commerce. In an action on contract by a Connecticut corporation doing business in New Jersey to build, deliver, and install a pipe organ in a theater in Iowa, held, the transaction was in "interstate commerce", and therefore local statutes governing foreign corporations doing business within this state were inapplicable.

Palmer v Aeolian Co., 46 F 2d, 746

Foreign corporation doing business without permit—actions barred—presumptions from nature of business. A necessary statutory prerequisite, to the right of a foreign corporation for pecuniary profit to sue on an Iowa contract, is that it first have a permit to transact business in Iowa, and the very nature of its business may raise the presumption that such corporation is one for pecuniary profit.

Johnson Co. v Hamilton, 225-551; 281 NW 127

8427 Denial of right to sue.

Discussion. See 14 ILR 372—Actions by foreign corporations

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 130; '34 AG Op 209, 390

Absence of permit—individual liability. Individuals are personally liable on contracts entered into by them in the name of a foreign corporation which they know has not been authorized by the state to transact business in this state.

Peacock Co. v Coal Co., 206-1228; 219 NW 24

Answer—foreign corporation—right to sue raised by general denial. A general denial will put in issue a foreign corporation's right to sue in Iowa when so alleged, dependent upon securing the statutory permit therefor.

Johnson Co. v Hamilton, 225-551; 281 NW 127

Foreign corporation doing business without permit—actions barred—presumptions from nature of business. A necessary statutory prerequisite, to the right of a foreign corporation for pecuniary profit to sue on an Iowa contract, is that it first have a permit to transact business in Iowa, and the very nature of its business may raise the presumption that such corporation is one for pecuniary profit.

Johnson Co. v Hamilton, 225-551; 281 NW 127

Foreign corporation's permit to do business—burden of proof—directing verdict. A for-foreign corporation for pecuniary profit, suing on an Iowa contract, has the burden to plead and prove its compliance with the statutes requiring permit to do business herein, without which a directed verdict in its favor is error.

Johnson Co. v Hamilton, 225-551; 281 NW 127

Foreign corporation without business permit—action on contract barred. A foreign stock corporation which, through its president while personally present in Iowa, sells on contract, accepts payment, part in cash and part in notes, and makes delivery of a machine, is doing business in the state, and not having first secured a permit to do business may not maintain an action on such contract.

Actino Lab. v Lamb, 224-573; 278 NW 234

Nonretroactive effect.

Foster v Bellows, 204-1052; 216 NW 956

Order in this state and acceptance in foreign state. The execution in this state by a proposed vendee of a naked order for goods, and the oral acceptance of such order by the vendor at his place of business in a foreign state, does not constitute the making of a contract in this state.

Anderson Bros. v Monument Co., 210-1226; 232 NW 689

Parol evidence to show acceptance. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a naked order for goods was accepted and, when material, that such acceptance was at a certain place.

Anderson Bros. v Monument Co., 210-1226; 232 NW 689

Right to sue. A foreign corporation which has not complied with the laws of this state and obtained a permit to transact business herein, may nevertheless maintain an action in this state on a contract which was consummated in a foreign state.

Service Sys. v Johns, 206-1164; 221 NW 777
Standard Co. v Detroit, F. & S. Co., 207-619; 223 NW 365

Ryerson v Schraag, 211-558; 229 NW 733

Shipment by foreign corporation to its officer—interstate character lost. A machine sold by a foreign corporation to an Iowa resident, when shipped to the corporation president, temporarily in Iowa, to be delivered to the purchaser, loses its interstate character upon delivery in Iowa to such president.

Actino Lab. v Lamb, 224-573; 278 NW 234

“Transacting business” defined. A foreign corporation, even tho it has no permit to do business in this state, and even tho neither it nor its agents maintain an office in this state, is, nevertheless, “transacting business” within this state, and subject to service of notice of suit on its resident agent, when, as a continuous and systematic course of business, it, in part at its own expense, maintains in this state an agent with powers limited strictly to the solicitation of orders which the corporation approves or disapproves, and on which, in case of approval, it makes its own collections.

American Corp. v Shankland, 205-862; 219 NW 28; 60 ALR 986

When “doing business” in this state. A foreign corporation which, by mail, enters into a contract in this state with a party, and performs the contract wholly outside this state, may not be said, because of said acts, to be “doing business” in this state.

Internat. Transp. v Morris Plan, 215-268; 245 NW 244

When offer becomes contract. An unconditional offer by mail to enter into a specified contract becomes a contract in fact at the time and place at which a duly stamped and addressed acceptance is mailed.

Internat. Transp. v Morris Plan, 215-268; 245 NW 244

8429 Powers denied.

De jure corporation. A statute which provides that "no corporation shall have legal existence until such [certified] articles be left for record", does not mean that a failure to strictly comply with the statute prevents a de facto corporation from coming into existence.

Wilkin Co. v Co-op. Assn., 208-921; 223 NW 899

Liability of stockholders—de facto corporation. A creditor who knowingly contracts with and extends credit to a corporation as such, tho it is only a de facto corporation, may not, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, hold the stockholders personally liable for the resulting debt.

Wilkin Co. v Co-op. Assn., 208-921; 223 NW 899

8463 Board of directors.

General manager—power to deposit and withdraw funds. The general manager of an incorporated, cooperative, dairy company who, for years, and to the general knowledge of the banking and business interest of the locality in question, is in unrestricted management of the entire business of the company, must be deemed to have both actual and ostensible authority to select banks of deposit for the corporate funds, and like authority to withdraw said funds—an authority as to which, both as to the making of deposits and as to the withdrawal thereof, the bank need ask no questions, assuming, of course, it acts at all times in perfect good faith.

NONPROFIT-SHARING COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS

8486 Organization.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 81, 383; '36 AG Op 226

Corporate powers—practice of profession. An incorporation which purports to be a cooperative association may not legally practice the profession of embalming by furnishing its so-called members with the services of a licensed embalmer when, under its organization, no restriction is placed on its membership except that said members must reside within 35 miles of the association's place of business. Whether the association could so practice were its membership reasonably restricted, quaere.

8503 Power to compel sales and purchases—liquidated damages.

Class legislation. This section is not violative of Art. I, §6, of the Constitution, no element of arbitrary or unreasonable classification or discrimination being discernible therein.

Clear Lake Co-op. v Weir, 200-1293; 206 NW 297

Ambiguous contract—mutual interpretation. A cooperative marketing association, which, by written contract separately binds each member of the association to sell and deliver exclusively to the association the milk produced by the member—impliedly from day to day—or “pay as liquidated damages $25 for each and every such failure and breach of contract”, will not be permitted to recover from a member said amount for each and every day there is a failure so to deliver, when such interpretation is absolutely contrary to the uniform, mutual interpretation theretofore placed on the contract during a long series of years. Especially is this true because otherwise the court would be compelled to construe the said damage clause as a penalty.

Fort Dodge Assn. v Ainsworth, 217-712; 251 NW 85

Cumulative and exclusive remedy. A contract provision to the effect that, if damages accrue to one party, he may apply to the payment thereof any money in his hands belonging to the other party, is permissive only, and additional to the usual remedy by action in court.

Clear Lake Co-op. v Weir, 200-1293; 206 NW 297

Implied repeal because of repugnancy. It may not be successfully contended that a statute is invalid because repugnant to a prior and existing statute, since, as between repugnant statutes, the later in enactment must prevail. So held as to an alleged repugnancy between ch. 390 and §9915, C., '24.

Clear Lake Co-op. v Weir, 200-1293; 206 NW 297

Liquidated damages—contract—sufficiency. A contract for liquidated damages is sufficient if the contract provides for such damages and the bylaws of the association provide the schedule therefor.

Authorized purposes and powers—generating electricity. Where several purposes were listed in the articles of incorporation of a cooperative association, the first being the primary purpose to manufacture electricity and to sell it, with the others only powers incidental to the primary purpose, there was compliance with a statute enumerating purposes for which associations could be formed, when the statute used the terms “purposes” and “powers” interchangeably and allowed the association to exercise any power necessary or incidental to accomplish its purpose.

State v Hardin County Co-op., 226-896; 285 NW 219

Conjunctive or disjunctive use of “or”—technical rules disregarded. Under a statute permitting the formation of associations to conduct a manufacturing business or to construct or operate electric transmission lines, the words “or to construct or operate * * * electric transmission lines” could be eliminated where the manufacturing business was the operation of an electric power plant, as the right to use such lines is implied as essential to the manufacture of electricity, so whether “or” was used in a conjunctive or disjunctive sense made no difference, as courts will disregard technical rules of grammar and punctuation to arrive at the intent of a statute.

State v Hardin County Co-op., 226-896; 285 NW 219

Generating electricity as “manufacturing or mechanical business”. The generation or production of electricity is a manufacturing or mechanical business within the scope of a statute permitting the formation of cooperative associations to conduct a manufacturing or mechanical business.

State v Hardin County Co-op., 226-896; 285 NW 219

Liberal construction of powers after incorporation. Statutes under which a cooperative association was organized to manufacture electricity for rural use should be liberally construed, in view of recent promotion of rural electrification and under the principle that statutes should be liberally construed to find the intent of the legislature, this being especially true as to statute under which corporations are formed, and when it is necessary to sustain the legality of a corporation which has gone into operation after being organized in good faith for a legitimate purpose.

State v Hardin County Co-op., 226-896; 285 NW 219

Power to manufacture electricity—implied power to purchase current. A cooperative association organized for the purpose of generating and distributing electricity to county cooperative associations and their members has the right to purchase electricity as a necessary adjunct to its main purpose, as in case of emergency it is necessary to purchase current in order to supply customers with uninterrupted service.

IOWA SECURITIES ACT

8581.01 Title.

Constitutionality. The "Blue Sky Law" is not subject to the constitutional objection that it (1) deprives citizens of their property without due process, (2) denies equal protection of the law, (3) takes property without just compensation, (4) grants special privileges and immunities, or (5) denies an accused the right to be advised of the nature of the charge preferred against him.

Information required of license applicant. An applicant for a license to promote an investment trust was properly required, by the state department which issues such licenses, to furnish information concerning the financial status of the foreign trustee who was to hold the trust assets, as it would have been a neglect of duty to assume that the condition of the foreign trustee did not require investigation.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 214

Delegation of powers by legislature—Iowa securities act. Because the Iowa securities act covers such a broad field of transactions that it cannot cover each particular case in detail, it was proper for the legislature to delegate to an officer certain discretionary powers in administering the statute and in making such rules as were necessary to carry out the purposes of the law within the general policy set forth by the legislature.

Ind. Fund v Miller, 226-1101; 285 NW 629

Information required of license applicant. An applicant for a license to promote an investment trust was properly required by the state department which issued such licenses to furnish information concerning the financial status of the foreign trustee who was to hold the trust assets, as it would have been a neglect of duty to assume that the condition of the foreign trustee did not require investigation.

Ind. Fund v Miller, 226-1101; 285 NW 629

Registration refusal based on issuing officer's rule. Statutory authority granted to a state officer to find out whether the sale of a security would tend to work a fraud and to forbid sales of securities which would be unfair to purchasers, was sufficient authority to justify an order made by him limiting the percentage of “loading charges” on investment trusts, when his restriction was based on the computations of a statistician, and for his refusal to register securities which violated this order.

Ind. Fund v Miller, 226-1101; 285 NW 629

8581.08 May limit price and commission.

Compensation—unallowable defense. In an action by a broker for a commission, it is no defense that the plaintiff had an arrangement with another broker for the sharing of the commission in return for services rendered in effecting a sale for defendant.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 59

False representations—liability under Iowa securities act. A corporation's false representations and statements made to the secretary of state and purchasers are within provision of the Iowa securities act, and evidence of such false representations supported a judgment for plaintiff in an action to set aside sales of corporate stock and to recover amounts paid, with attorney's fees, for violation of such act.

Associated Mfr. Corp. v De Jong, 64 F 2d, 64

Information not furnished by applicant upon request. When an applicant for a license failed to furnish information when so ordered by the officer issuing the license, there was no waiver of the right to object to the failure to furnish such information when additional demands for it were not made.

Ind. Fund v Miller, 226-1101; 285 NW 629

Registration refusal based on issuing officer's rule. Statutory authority granted to a state officer to find out whether the sale of a security would tend to work a fraud and to forbid sales of securities which would be unfair to purchasers, was sufficient authority to justify an order made by him limiting the percentage of “loading charges” on investment trusts, when his restriction was based on the computations of a statistician, and for his refusal to register securities which violated this order.

Ind. Fund v Miller, 226-1101; 285 NW 629

Security dealer's license refusal. An “issuer-dealer's” license to deal in securities should not have been refused on the ground that the affairs of the applicant corporation were in an unsound condition due to previous financial losses, when additional capital had later been secured to make the applicant apparently solvent and the securities to be issued were not those of the applicant, which was to be manager of an investment trust, with a third party to have possession of the assets invested.

8581.18 Bond and conditions.

Action on bond—joinder of causes. An action on a bond, brought against both the principal and surety, presents no question of misjoinder of causes of action. So held as to a bond given under this section.

Kellogg v Bell, 222-510; 268 NW 534

Bond—dual liability. Statutory bonds under the Iowa securities act cover a dual liability, viz:

1. A failure properly to account for any moneys or securities received from or belonging to another, and

2. A failure to pay any judgment against the dealer in consequence of unlawfully sold securities.

Dickson v Fidelity Co., 223-518; 273 NW 102

Breach of condition—judgment as condition precedent. A bond executed under the Iowa securities act, and conditioned to "pay * * * any judgment * * * that may be rendered against such dealer" is not breached until the injured party first obtains a judgment against the principal in the bond—the dealer in securities—and until said dealer fails to pay said judgment.

Kellogg v Bell, 222-510; 268 NW 534

Maximum liability. The surety on the bond of a dealer in securities under the Iowa securities act (Ch 393-C1, C., '31 [Ch 393.1, C., '39]) is not liable beyond the statutory amount of the bond—$5,000—irrespective of the number or amount of the claims sought to be enforced against it. Order impounding a bond as a trust fund for the pro rata benefit of numerous claimants affirmed.

Witter v Ins. Co., 215-1322; 247 NW 831; 89 ALR 1065

Unallowable action by stranger. A bond which, in effect, is limited to the indemnification of the obligee only, for pecuniary loss sustained by the obligee through the dishonest acts of his officers or employees, is a contract of indemnity. In other words, such bond does not cover liability to a third party for loss sustained by said third party through the dishonesty of the officers or employees of the said obligee.

Allen v Bonding Co., 218-294; 253 NW 498

8581.19 Burden of proof.

Indictment—requisites and sufficiency—negating exceptions—nonnecessity. An indictment charging violation of securities act is not defective on ground that it fails to negate exceptions legalized by the act.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

Negating exceptions in indictment—lack of basis for attack on validity. As respects statute providing that exceptions to securities act need not be negated in an indictment thereunder, a contention that such statute deprived defendant of information as to the nature of charge against him, and was therefore unconstitutional, could not be sustained on record showing that defendant was in fact provided with such information when summary of evidence to be introduced at trial was served on him.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

Burden of proving exceptions—lack of basis for attack on validity. In prosecution for violation of securities act wherein defendant attacked validity of statute requiring that burden of proving exceptions to the act shall be on party seeking benefit thereof, and contended that such burden should be placed on state, held, defendant's contention was without merit in view of trial court's instructions which in fact did place such burden on the state.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

8581.23 Remedies.

Concert of action—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to present a jury question on the issue of concert of action between the officers and directors of a corporation for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff in the purchase of stock, except as to two defendants.

Stambaugh v Haffa, 217-1161; 253 NW 137; 38 NCCA 114

False representations—liability under Iowa securities act. A corporation's false representations and statements made to the secretary of state and purchasers are within provision of the Iowa securities act, and evidence of such false representations supported a judgment for plaintiff in an action to set aside sales of corporate stock and to recover amounts paid, with attorney's fees, for violation of such act.

Assoc. Mfr. Corp. v De Jong, 64 F 2d, 64

Recovery of purchase price—sales in violation of securities law—tender of securities necessary. Purchaser suing to recover price paid for securities sold in violation of Iowa securities law must at least tender to seller securities equivalent in value to those purchased.

Huglin v Byllesby, 72 F 2d, 341

8581.26 False statements, entries, and representations.

Evidence—corporate books and records. In a prosecution, under the securities act, of an officer of a corporation for having made, before the secretary of state, a false statement relative to the financial condition of the corporation, the corporate books and a tabulated statement and summary thereof, properly identified, are admissible, even tho there is no showing (1) that said books were made in the ordinary course of business, or (2) that they were true or correct, or (3) that they were books of original entry, or (4) that the accused made or directed their making,—it appearing that the examination of the books was made in the office of the corporation and largely in the immediate presence of the accused.

State v Dobry, 217-858; 250 NW 702

False representations—liability under Iowa securities act. A corporation's false representations and statements made to the secretary of state and purchasers are within provision of the Iowa securities act, and evidence of such false representations supported a judgment for plaintiff in an action to set aside sales of corporate stock and to recover amounts paid, with attorney's fees, for violation of such act.

Assoc. Mfr. Corp. v De Jong, 64 F 2d, 64

Fraud in incorporation—effect on title of receiver. Even tho the court, in proceedings for the dissolution of a so-called corporation, found and decreed, in effect, that the concern was conceived, born, and nurtured in fraud, nevertheless, in receivership proceedings for the ordering of an assessment on those who had contracted for stock in the concern and had not paid therefor, the receiver will be deemed to have prima facie title to such contracts of subscriptions.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

When knowledge immaterial. Under the Iowa securities act, the provision that the making of a "false" statement before the secretary of state relative to the financial condition of a corporation is a felony, renders immaterial testimony that the accused did not know that the statement was false.

Reason: The legislature may declare an act criminal irrespective of the knowledge or intent of the doer.

State v Dobry, 217-858; 250 NW 702

8581.28 False representations.

False representations—liability under Iowa securities act. A corporation's false representations and statements made to the secretary of state and purchasers are within provision of the Iowa securities act, and evidence of such false representations supported a judgment for plaintiff in an action to set aside sales of corporate stock and to recover amounts paid, with attorney's fees, for violation of such act.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 205

Charitable institutions liable to strangers, invitees, or employees. Public policy has never demanded nor has the legislature adopted any immunity to charitable institutions from liability to strangers, invitees, or employees arising because of negligence of the servants of such institutions, and the court will not grant such immunity.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186; 5 NCCA(NS) 335

Charitable institutions—nonliability to beneficiaries for employees' negligence—WPA worker not beneficiary. Tho as between benefactor and beneficiary, an institution conducted solely for doing charity may not be liable for the negligence of its employees to a person receiving the benefits of that charity; however, a WPA worker doing work on the premises of a Y. M. C. A. was not a beneficiary of the charitable work of the institution, so as to be within this rule.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186; 5 NCCA(NS) 335

Constructing a grotto for charitable organization. Since a license is a permission to do particular acts on another's land without possessing an interest therein, revocable at licensor's pleasure except where coupled with an expenditure of money or labor, an individual constructing a grotto on the land of a charitable organization under an agreement containing a provision for entry on the land for purposes of the agreement, has a personal privilege of going on the land to complete the undertaking.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Cy pres doctrine invoked by state in equity court. A public charity, created by trust, about to fail, is properly represented in court of equity to invoke jurisdiction to apply cy pres doctrine by the state or some authorized agency thereof.

Schell v Leander Clark College, 10 F 2d, 542

Contributory negligence—WPA worker crushed in Y. M. C. A. elevator shaft—place of danger—elevator operator violating instructions. When, in order to make repairs, a WPA carpenter descended to the bottom of an elevator shaft in a Y. M. C. A. while the superintendent of the building assisted him, and when the superintendent had twice repeated an instruction to the elevator operator in the presence of the carpenter, that the elevator was not to go below the first floor, the carpenter, who died because the elevator descended on him, was not required to anticipate that the elevator operator would negligently violate the instructions. Under these facts, contributory negligence was a jury question.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186

Negligence—immunity rule—basis. Such immunity as is granted a public charity institution for its negligence has been sustained by the courts on (1) the trust fund theory, or (2) the nonapplicability of the rule of respondeat superior, or (3) the waiver theory, or (4) the public policy theory.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186; 5 NCCA(NS) 335

Y. M. C. A.—charitable institution. The Young Men's Christian Association is a charitable institution.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186

Inheritance tax—exemptions—public charities. A trust for the purpose of aiding young men and women of the Protestant faith in obtaining an education in the colleges or universities of this state is a public charity, within the meaning of the statute which exempts such charities from an inheritance tax.

Heald v Johnson, 204-1067; 216 NW 772

County fair associations—negligence. It may not be said, as a matter of law, that a county fair association is under a legal duty to erect a fence along its race track sufficiently high to prevent a horse from jumping over such fence. The association is not an insurer. Reasonable care under varying circumstances is the full measure of its duty.

Clark v Fair Assn., 203-1107; 212 NW 163; 33 NCCA 40

County fair associations—liability for negligence. Nonpecuniary incorporated county fair associations are not such governmental agencies as are exempt from liability for negligence.

Clark v Fair Assn., 203-1107; 212 NW 163

Offer of reward by nonlegal entity—liability of members. An incorporated bank which, in effect, represents that it is a member of an association which is offering a reward for information leading to the conviction of bank robbers, thereby obligates itself to pay the reward when, in truth, the association is but a voluntary, unincorporated association.

Carr v Mahaska Assn., 222-411; 269 NW 494; 107 ALR 1080

Property—right of possession. A religious organization is not entitled to the unconditional possession of real property of which it is the equitable owner, but the legal title of which is vested in trustees, when the property and the income therefrom are being used and employed, and the property improved, by a duly organized federation of different churches, all with the knowledge, approval, and express authorization of the said equitable owner.

Church v Gardner, 204-907; 215 NW 970

Race associations—powers. Articles, rules, and regulations of a horse-racing association reviewed, and held to invest no power in the secretary to suspend members or to revoke the licenses of drivers.

Davis v Howard Soc., 208-957; 226 NW 90

8583 Powers—duration.

"Church purposes". A broad and comprehensive meaning must be accorded to the term "church purposes" in a conveyance of land to trustees "so long as used for church purposes".

Presbyterian Church v Johnson, 213-49; 238 NW 456

Express trusts—validity. A testamentary trust will be sustained when the intent of testator is evident, even tho the bequest runs to an unincorporated entity.

Meeker v Lawrence, 203-409; 212 NW 688

Plaintiffs—trustees of unincorporated association. The trustees of a voluntary unincorporated association, and not the association itself, are proper plaintiffs in an action to quiet title to real estate of which the association is the beneficial owner.

Presbyterian Church v Johnson, 213-49; 238 NW 456

8587 When society deemed extinct.

Extinct society—legal control of property. When a local church organization becomes extinct, the larger organization of which the local organization is a part may assume control over the property of the defunct church, and validly cause to be issued conveyances and assignments of said property.

Board v Rader, 210-482; 231 NW 329

8589 Trustees or managers.

Vacancies—power to fill—majority of quorum. Vacancies on an official board (which is empowered to fill vacancies) may be filled by a majority of a quorum, in the absence of a statute which requires a majority of the entire membership of the board.

Cowles v School Dist., 204-689; 216 NW 83

8599 Contract and rights not affected.

Abandoned property—right of mother church. The statutory authorization to a mother church organization to take over the abandoned property of a local church organization of the same denomination has no application to cases in which property rights in the property have been acquired prior to the passage of the statute.

CHAPTER 397

EXAMINATION OF INSURANCE COMPANIES

8634 Suspension or revocation of certificate—receivership.

Allowance and payment of claims by receiver—unallowable claims. Attorney fees, disbursements, and costs incurred by a policyholder on his own behalf with reference to a policy of insurance, after the insurer had passed into the hands of a receiver, are not allowable against the receiver.

State v Cas. Co., 213-197; 238 NW 731

Commissioner—power of suspension denied. The commissioner of insurance is not empowered to suspend the business of a fraternal beneficiary association for failure to comply with commissioner's order to pay a gross premium tax, such order being based on his interpretation of a statute in controversy.

Homesteaders Life v Murphy, 224-173; 275 NW 146

Dissipation of assets—liability. The act of the directors of a financially embarrassed corporation in selling their individually owned corporate shares of stock to a third party and in receiving pay therefor out of the partly frozen bank deposits of the corporation, under an understanding that said third party would replace said dissipated deposits with securities of equal value, is per se fraudulent and necessarily violative of the law-imposed trust relationship of the directors to existing and future-contemplated corporate creditors; and this is true irrespective of the plea that the directors in good faith believed that said third party would carry out the said understanding. It follows that the receiver of the corporation may repudiate such transaction and recover the dissipated assets from the directors.

8657 Annual certificate of authority.

Certificate of authority. A foreign life insurance company which holds an annual certificate from the commissioner of insurance authorizing it to transact its business in this state is not subject to the provision of chapter 386, C., '31, requiring foreign corporations generally to obtain a permit from the secretary of state in order to transact business in this state. It is not the intent to require two permits.

John Hancock Ins. v Lookingbill, 218-373; 253 NW 604

Foreign corporations—doing business in state—no absolute right. A foreign insurance company has no absolute right to come into the state and do business.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

8658 Violation by domestic company.

Commissioner—power of suspension denied. The commissioner of insurance is not empowered to suspend the business of a fraternal beneficiary association for failure to comply with commissioner's order to pay a gross premium tax, such order being based on his interpretation of a statute in controversy.

Homesteaders Life v Murphy, 224-173; 275 NW 146

8663 Securities.

Insolvency—assets transferred to obtain reinsurance—propriety. The trial court has power to cause assets of insolvent insurance company to be transferred and used to obtain reinsurance for policyholders without subjecting assets to judicial sale, and under proceedings where it is shown that it is impossible for company to function any longer, the trial court is justified in finding that value of assets upon a fair basis of valuation was insufficient to pay its obligations, and that the interest of policyholders would best be served by obtaining reinsurance.

Royal Ins. v Gross, 76 F 2d, 219

8666 Discriminations—rebates.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 279; '34 AG Op 432; '36 AG Op 4; '38 AG Op 262

Forfeiture of policy—nonpayment premium lien note—discriminatory provisions. In an action by beneficiary to recover insurance on a policy which, at the expiration of an extension permitted by a premium lien note, the insured had allowed to lapse, and which policy contained certain provisions as to "cash surrender value" and "participating paid up insurance" granting to an insured three months after default in any premium payment to elect to surrender his policy for cash, thereby contains an unlawful discrimination providing longer insurance in favor of a more delinquent insured, and under above circumstances the failure to pay the premium lien note resulted in cancelling the policy subject to the terms of the policy itself, which giving insured a specified amount of insurance for a limited time, which having expired at the time of his death, it follows that the policy having lapsed, a recovery should be denied.

Clausen v Ins. Co., 224-802; 276 NW 427

Permissible collateral agreements. The act of an insurer in granting to the insured through the medium of a promissory note an extension of time in which to pay an accrued annual premium on condition that the nonpayment of the note at maturity shall ipso facto void the policy, is not violative of this statute.

Diehl v Ins. Co., 204-706; 213 NW 753; 53 ALR 1528

Reinstatement revives lapsed policy—suicide clause. Reinstatement of an insurance policy four years after it was originally written does not create a new contract as of date of reinstatement but revives the lapsed policy, and a clause in the original policy excluding liability for suicide for two years from date of contract is not revived to mean two years from date of reinstatement.

Johnson v Ins. Co., 224-797; 276 NW 595

Self-adjusting benefit provisions—effect. Where a policy of accident insurance, which has lapsed because of the nonpayment of premiums, is self-adjusting as regards death benefits in case death occurs while the insured is pursuing an occupation which is more hazardous than the one specified in the policy, such self-adjusting provisions are in no manner changed by the act of the insurer in reinstating the policy by accepting and retaining the past due premium with full knowledge that the insured was then pursuing a more hazardous occupation than the one specified in the policy. Especially is this true if a contrary construction would result in a discrimination between policyholders which is prohibited by statute.

Stephan v Ins. Co., 209-576; 221 NW 57

8668 Policy forms—approval.

Construction—ambiguity. A clause in a life insurance policy which is ambiguous, in that insanity (1) might not, under a given state of facts, release the insurer from liability, or (2) might, under the same state of facts, very materially reduce the insurer's liability, will be given that construction which is most favorable to the insured.

Crowe v Cas. Co., 202-43; 209 NW 406

Inconsistent and repugnant provisions. A provision in a health policy that sick benefits will be paid provided the sickness is contracted thirty days after the date of the policy, and a distinct and separate provision that said benefits will be paid for every sickness contracted subsequent to the issuance of the policy, are so inconsistent and repugnant that the court will reject the first provision and apply the latter.

Schmith v Cas. Co., 216-936; 247 NW 655

Incontestability and suicide clauses compared. A clause, in an insurance reinstatement agreement, providing for incontestability after two years from reinstatement, is a limitation on contestability and on the company's rights and is opposite in character to a suicide clause which affords additional contestability and adds to the company's rights.

Johnson v Ins. Co., 224-797; 276 NW 595

Nonpayment of premium—effect of custom. An insured cannot excuse the nonpayment of his premium on the plea that the insurer customarily notified the policyholder of the maturity date, but failed so to do in his case when said policyholder did not know of the custom at the time in question and necessarily did not rely thereon.

Wall v Ins. Co., 217-1106; 253 NW 46

Forfeiture of policy—nonpayment premium lien note—discriminatory provisions. In an action by beneficiary to recover insurance on a policy which, at the expiration of an extension permitted by a premium lien note, the insured had allowed to lapse, and which policy contained certain provisions as to "cash surrender value" and "participating paid up insurance" granting to an insured three months after default in any premium payment to elect to surrender his policy for cash, thereby contains an unlawful discrimination providing longer insurance in favor of a more delinquent insured, and under above circumstances the failure to pay the premium lien note resulted in canceling the policy subject to the terms of the policy itself, which giving insured a specified amount of insurance for a limited time, which having expired at the time of his death, it follows that the policy having lapsed, a recovery should be denied.

Clausen v Ins. Co., 224-802; 276 NW 427

"Void" for nonpayment of premiums means "voidable". An insurance policy written as a unilateral contract, containing a provision that the policy will be void upon default in premium payment, means in effect that the policy is "voidable"—said clause being for the exclusive benefit of the insurer.

Pennebaker v Ins. Co., 226-314; 284 NW 147

Waiver—no release by insured without consideration. A purported release by one party to a contract of the other party's obligations is without effect unless duly supported by a consideration. So held where an insured accepted the return of his premium upon the statement that the policy had lapsed and thereupon the insurer claimed a waiver of its obligations.

Pennebaker v Ins. Co., 226-314; 284 NW 147

8671 Policy provision for medical examination.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 41

Conditions precedent to taking effect of policy. The insurer and insured in a life policy may validly contract that the policy shall not take effect unless, during the continuance in good health of the insured,

1. The policy has been delivered, and
2. The first premium has been paid,— and such agreement imposes on the insured, as conditions precedent to any recovery, affirmative proof that the policy was delivered, and the first premium paid.

Range v Ins. Co., 216-410; 249 NW 268

8673 Liability.

Failure to pay premium—effect. A combined life and accident policy of insurance becomes void in accordance with its terms, to wit:

Wall v Ins. Co., 217-1106; 253 NW 46

See Federal Bank v Ins. Assn., 217-1098; 253 NW 52

Premium—application of dividends. An insured is not entitled to notice from the insurer as to the amount of dividends due under the policy in order to determine how much cash, in addition, is necessary to pay his premium when, under the policy, the condition does not yet exist under which he would have the right to apply the dividends on the premium.

Wall v Ins. Co., 217-1106; 253 NW 46

Waiver—no release by insured without consideration. A purported release by one party to a contract of the other party's obligations is without effect unless duly supported by a consideration. So held where an insured accepted the return of his premium upon the statement that the policy had lapsed and thereupon the insurer claimed a waiver of its obligations.

Pennebaker v Ins. Co., 226-314; 284 NW 147

8673.1 Annuities.

Annuity contract as “wager.” An annuity contract, entered into in good faith, under which the annuitant, for a lump sum payment determined by skilled actuaries, is promised a definite annual payment during the lifetime of the annuitant, does not offend against public policy—is not a “wager” contract.

Hult v Ins. Co., 213-890; 240 NW 218

Death of annuitant—balance due. The executor of a deceased annuitant is entitled to recover the balance of the annuity due at the time of the annuitant's death.

Peterson v Floberg, 214-1398; 242 NW 18

When annuity vests. A testamentary life annuity becomes vested on the date when the annuity becomes due.

In re Hekel, 205-521; 218 NW 297

Release of dower for annuity—fraud—evidence. Evidence held insufficient to show that a contract by which a surviving spouse accepted an annuity in lieu of distributive share was fraudulently obtained.

In re Silkett, 209-417; 227 NW 905

Unambiguous life income trust—annuity policy substitution nonpermissible. Under a clear, unambiguous will setting up a trust fund and providing for a $30 a month bequest to be paid therefrom to a beneficiary as long as she lived, a different method of paying said bequest, by purchase of an annuity for said beneficiary, not permitted.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

CHAPTER 399.1

GROUP INSURANCE

8684.05 Life policy—requirements.

Group insurance—construction in re employment. A provision in a group life insurance policy to the effect that the insurance on an employee shall terminate when the employment terminates is, of course, valid and enforceable, but when the policy also provides that the employer may elect that any insured employee temporarily laid off shall be considered in his (the employer's) employment, the beneficiary of a deceased employee may show that a summary and unconditional written dismissal of the employee from the service of the employer was intended by the employer as a “temporary lay-off”.

Zeigler v Assur. Soc., 219-872; 259 NW 769

8684.13 Exemption.

Discussion. See 21 ILR 153—Property purchased with proceeds

Statutes—applicability. Exemption statutes are applicable to residents and nonresidents unless the benefits thereof are confined to residents.

Stark v Stark, 203-1261; 213 NW 235

CHAPTER 400

ASSESSMENT LIFE INSURANCE

8686 Assessment plan of life insurance defined.

Assessment accident insurance—rules of life insurance inapplicable. The statute defining assessment plan of life insurance does not require that the rules applicable to life insurance shall be applicable to accident insurance.

Rainsbarger v Acc. Assn., 227-1076; 289 NW 908

8688 Articles—approval.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 64

Acts of administrative officers. Certiorari may be the proper remedy to review the action of the commissioner of insurance and attorney general in refusing to approve amended articles of incorporation of an assessment association.

National Assn., v Murphy, 222-98; 269 NW 15

Judgment in certiorari—improper form. Upon sustaining a writ of certiorari relative to the alleged illegal act of the commissioner of insurance in refusing to approve amended articles of incorporation of an insurance company, the trial court has no authority by its judgment to decree such approval, other than to substantially direct the defendant to take such action as will give full force and effect to the decision of the court.

National Assn. v Murphy, 222-98; 269 NW 15

8693 Assessments—diversion of funds.

Assessments in fraternal organizations. See under §8784

Change to level premium—assessment—estoppel. A mutual benefit life assessment company has no legal right, after transforming itself, under statutory authority, into a legal reserve or level premium company, to represent or state to the public insurance authorities or to its old assessment members that such members would not be placed in a class by themselves and compelled to pay their own death losses without future acquisition to their membership, but that both the old assessment members and the level premium members would be treated as one class for the purpose of arriving at the basis of mortality costs; and the making of such representations furnishes no basis for an estoppel against the transformed company to deny its right to levy assessment on level premium policyholders for the benefit of the old assessment members. Such representations cannot be deemed a plan for the handling of "operating expenses".

Wall v Life Co., 208-1053; 223 NW 257

8694 Insurable age—beneficiary and change thereof—assignment.

See also annotations under §8785, et seq., Vol I

Assignment of policy as collateral—effect on beneficiary. Reservation in a policy of life insurance of right in the insured to change the beneficiary prevents the vesting, during the lifetime of the insured, of any interest in the designated beneficiary, and arms the insured with power to assign the policy as security for a pre-existing indebtedness, and it is quite immaterial whether the designated beneficiary joins or fails to join with the insured in said assignment.

Potter v Ins. Co., 216-799; 247 NW 669

Assignment of policy—estoppel. The beneficiary of a legal reserve life insurance policy who, without fraud, joins with the insured in an assignment of all right, title, and interest in the policy in order to collaterally secure a debt due from each of said assignors, is estopped, after the death of the insured, from asserting any interest in the policy except as the same may exceed the said secured indebtedness, it appearing that the policy reserved to the insured both the right to assign the policy and to change the beneficiary.

Andrew v Life Co., 214-573; 240 NW 215

Change in beneficiary—justifiable and unjustifiable payment. An insurer who, in compliance with the policy-authorized demand of the insured, changes the beneficiary of a life insurance policy, and, on the death of the insured, makes full payment to said substituted beneficiary, must be deemed to have discharged the obligation of the policy, unless said insurer knew, or ought to have known, when payment was made, that, notwithstanding the provision of the policy authorizing a change of beneficiary, the first-named beneficiary had such interest or ownership in the policy as entitled him to receive said payment. Petition in equity held subject to motion to dismiss (equitable demurrer) because not sufficiently alleging such interest or ownership and the insurer's knowledge thereof.

Bennett v Ins. Co., 220-927; 263 NW 25

Change of beneficiaries. A policy method of changing beneficiaries under life insurance policies is admittedly exclusive; but a testamentary bequest of the proceeds of such policies, payable to the estate of the insured or to his executors or administrators, does not constitute a "change of beneficiaries", but constitutes a disposal of that much of the estate left by the insured.

Miller v Miller, 200-1070; 205 NW 870; 43 ALR 567

Changing beneficiary—following policy—exceptions—effect of death. Death vests interests in insurance, and the method provided in a benefit certificate to change a beneficiary during lifetime of insured is exclusive, except (1) where the company has waived strict compliance and issued a new certificate, (2) where it is beyond the power of insured to comply literally, equity will consider the change made, and (3) where insured has performed all necessary prerequisites, but dies before a new certificate is actually issued. Held in instant case beneficiary change not accomplished.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Changing beneficiary—mere "clear intention" ineffectual. Insured's actions merely indicating a "clear intention to change the beneficiary" are not sufficient. Required acts to effect a change are neither directory nor ministerial but essential, subject only to equitable exceptions.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Changing beneficiary—where policy silent. Where a benefit certificate is silent as to the manner of change, such change of beneficiary may be effected in any manner clearly indicating insured's intention.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Conclusiveness—insurance rights—beneficiaries not parties. A decree establishing rights to insurance does not adjudicate rights of a beneficiary not a party to the action.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Contract provision—effect. The rule of law that when the insured in a policy of life insurance makes a series of changes of beneficiary, and the last beneficiary is legally ineligible, the next preceding, designated, eligible beneficiary is entitled to the proceeds of the policy, does not apply when the policy, by bylaw or otherwise, distinctly provides who, in such circumstances, shall be entitled to the proceeds.

Farrens v Benefit Dept., 213-608; 239 NW 544

Fraternal benefit certificate—changing beneficiary—complying with certificate—necessity. A change of beneficiary on a fraternal benefit society certificate, executed by insured on the day of her death, delivered to an attorney and kept until the next day, then delivered to the company's agent and forwarded to the company, not being in compliance with the certificate requirement, was ineffective.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Right to change beneficiary. The insured in a policy of life insurance, who has the right, under the policy, to change the beneficiary, does not deprive himself of said right by delivering the policy to the beneficiary therein named accompanied by the statement or assurance that he is thereby making a "gift" to said named beneficiary, such policy not being the subject matter of a completed gift inasmuch as it simply proffers an expectancy, and an expectancy does not constitute property.

Penn Ins. v Mulvaney, 221-925; 265 NW 889

8695 Business year—annual report—fees.

Discretion in re managerial expenses. An insurance company which is conducting the business of assessment, and level premium life insurance will not be controlled by the courts in its allotment between the two classes of insurance, of the managerial expenses so long as such allotment is not violative of law, is reasonable and is not arbitrary.

Wall v Life Co., 208-1058; 223 NW 257

8716 Distribution of surplus.

Default—no duty to apply surrender value. Under a policy which provides that default in the payment of a premium shall forfeit the policy, the insurer is under no obligation, upon the happening of such default, to apply the cash surrender value to the payment of such premium, when, under the policy and governing statutes, the insured controlled the disposition of such surrender value and had never exercised any option with reference thereto.

Rogers v Ins. Co., 204-804; 213 NW 757

8718 Assessment associations prohibited.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 205, '38 AG Op 64

Act in excess of title—effect. A legislative act entitled "An act to provide a method whereby assessment life associations may be reincorporated as legal reserve life insurance companies", is void insofar as said act assumes to cover an additional subject matter not mentioned or referred to in the title, e.g., provisions prohibiting designated insurance companies or associations from writing life insurance on the assessment plan. (This section re-enacted by 47 GA, ch 217.)

National Assn. v Murphy, 222-98; 269 NW 15

8724 Reincorporation.

Act in excess of title. A legislative act entitled "An act to provide a method whereby assessment life associations may be reincorporated as legal reserve life insurance companies", is void insofar as said act assumes to cover an additional subject matter not mentioned or referred to in the title, e.g., provisions prohibiting designated insurance companies or associations from writing life insurance on the assessment plan.

National Assn. v Murphy, 222-98; 269 NW 15

Change to level premium—assessment—estoppel. A mutual benefit life assessment company has no legal right, after transforming itself, under statutory authority, into a legal reserve or level premium company, to represent or state to the public insurance authorities or to its old assessment members that such members would not be placed in a class by themselves and compelled to pay their own death losses without future acquisition to their membership, but that both the old assessment members and the level premium members would be treated as one class for the purpose of arriving at the basis of mortality costs; and the making of such representations furnishes no basis for an estoppel against the transformed company to deny its right to levy assessment on level premium policyholders for the benefit of the old assessment members. Such representations cannot be deemed a plan for the handling of "operating expenses".

Wall v Life Co., 208-1053; 223 NW 257

Change to level premium plan—right of assessment. A statute which authorizes the directors of a mutual benefit life assessment company to transform the company into a legal reserve or level premium company, and which declares that, after such transformation, the company "shall incur the obligations and enjoy the benefits thereof, the same as though originally thus incorporated", clearly eliminates any legislative intention to incur the level premium policyholders with any assessments to pay death losses of the old assessment certificate holders, even tho the statute does provide that such transformation "shall not affect existing rights or contracts", because the perpetual existence of the assessment insurance scheme is not a contractual right of the assessment certificate holders'.

Wall v Life Co., 208-1053; 223 NW 257

Mutual assessment company—change to level premium—right of policyholder. Where the certificate of a mutual benefit life assessment company provides that the contribution made by the holder to a guarantee fund shall, if he dies in good standing, be repaid to his beneficiary, but be forfeited to the assessment emergency reserve fund if he does not so die, and where the company is, under statutory authority, transformed into a legal reserve or level premium company, and assessment certificate holder and the transformed company may validly contract for the cancellation and surrender of the assessment certificate and for the substitution of a level premium policy in lieu thereof, and may therein validly contract as was formerly contracted in the assessment certificate, to wit: that, if the new policyholder dies in good standing, his former contribution to said guarantee fund will be repaid to the beneficiary, and if he does not so die, said contribution shall be forfeited to the old assessment emergency reserve fund.

Wall v Life Co., 208-1053; 223 NW 257

Statutory change—constitutionality. Article VIII, §12, Constitution of Iowa and §1090, C., '73 (§8376, C., '27), are constitutional and statutory authority for a legislative act authorizing the board of directors of a mutual benefit life assessment company to transform said company into a legal reserve or level premium company, even tho such transformation results in leaving the old assessment certificate holders to carry their own assessments for death losses without further addition to their membership.

Wall v Life Co., 208-1053; 223 NW 257

CHAPTER 401

PROVISIONS APPLYING TO LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES AND ASSOCIATIONS

Life insurance generally. See Note 1 at end of chapter

8728. Annual statement of foreign companies.

Gross premiums tax—when payable—legislative intent. Legislative intent being the cardinal rule of statutory construction, the plain intent of statute taxing gross premiums of foreign corporations is a tax computed on and payable at the end of the year.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

8731. Advertisements — who deemed agent.

Service on foreign insurer—physician not agent. An Iowa accident insurance association which has not been licensed to transact its business in a foreign state (in which it has neither office, agent, nor property), and whose certificates of insurance are strictly Iowa contracts, cannot be deemed to have subjected itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of such foreign state (1) because a very large number of its certificate holders reside in said foreign state, or (2) because said association, from time to time and by mail from its Iowa office, requests a physician in said foreign state to examine claimants and to report as to accidental injuries received by claimants,—it appearing that said physician was under no contract obligation to comply with said requests and to make such examinations tho he had done so for several years and had received a stated fee for each separate examination.

Held, the foreign court, in an action on a certificate, acquired no jurisdiction under process served on said physician.

Saunders v Trav. Assn., 222-969; 270 NW 407

8732. Agent's certificate to act.

Unlicensed agents—noneffect on insurer—statements regarding effective date of policy. Where an accident policy is to become effective at 12 o'clock noon on date of delivery to insured, the application having been made on August 24, 1937, providing (1) it should not bind insurer until accepted nor (2) until policy was accepted by insured, while in good health and free from injury, and where policy, issued September 17, was delivered to insured September 22, while insured was in hospital as result of injuries sustained on August 26, insured could not recover on policy notwithstanding insurance agent's statements to insured that policy would be effective August 26. The fact that agent was unlicensed did not thereby make him a general agent of the insurer, the burden of proving which would be on insured. While an unlicensed agent may be criminally punished, this does not enlarge his authority to bind insurer.

Rainsbarger v Acc. Assn., 227-1076; 289 NW 908

8737 Investment of funds.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 449; '30 AG Op 129, 158, '32 AG Op 79, 280; '34 AG Op 601

8739 Real estate as deposit of legal reserve.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 147

8741 Securities deposited.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 40; '32 AG Op 117

Mistaken view of law. Securities deposited by an insurance company with the commissioner of insurance for the specific purpose of protecting the policyholders constitute a trust fund for said specified purpose, both in the hands of the commissioner and, in case of insolvency, in the hands of the receiver of the company, even tho said deposit was made on demand of the commissioner, acquiesced in by the company, in the mutually mistaken but good-faith belief that the statute required such deposit before a license to transact business could legally issue to the company.

State v Cas. Co., 206-988; 221 NW 585

8744 Purpose of withdrawal.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 147

8756 Contracts void—recovery—damages—attorney fees.

Misrepresentation—when unallowable as a defense. False and fraudulent representations on the part of an insured, in his original application for a policy of insurance, are not available as a defense to an action on the policy, when the policy provides that it is incontestable except as provided in named paragraphs which, on examination, reveal no grounds of contest whatever, but only matters of which the insurer could avail himself in the enforcement of the contract.

Wilson v Ins. Co., 220-321; 262 NW 525

8757 Fraud in procuring insurance.

Avoidance of policy. The insurer in an accident insurance policy has the burden of proof to establish the defense that the policy is wholly avoided because the insured, in obtaining the policy, had falsely represented that his habits of life were "correct and temperate", and had thereby intentionally deceived the insurer.

Olson v Surety Co., 201-1334; 208 NW 213

Unallowable cancellation in equity of insurance policy. Equity will not, after the death of the insured in a life insurance policy, entertain jurisdiction to cancel the policy unless exceptional circumstances render cancellation necessary for the protection of the insurer. The fact that the policy becomes incontestable after two years does not constitute such circumstance when said time has not yet elapsed.

Bankers Life v Bennett, 220-922; 263 NW 44

8766 Commissioner as process agent.

Original notice—service—deputy commissioner may accept. Valid service of an original notice of suit against a foreign insurance company doing business in this state, is made by the act of the deputy commissioner of insurance in accepting, in writing and in the name of said commissioner, service of said notice for and on behalf of said company, tho the authority filed by the company only authorized the commissioner to accept such service.

Woodmen v Dist. Court, 219-1326; 260 NW 713; 98 ALR 1431

8769 Intoxication as defense.

Avoidance of policy. The insurer in an accident insurance policy has the burden of proof to establish the defense that the policy is wholly avoided because the insured, in obtaining the policy, had falsely represented that his habits of life were "correct and temperate", and had thereby intentionally deceived the insurer.

Olson v Surety Co., 201-1334; 208 NW 213

8770 Physician's certificate—conclusiveness.

Nonapplicability of statute. This section relative to the conclusiveness on a life insurance company or association of a certificate of insurability issued by its own physician, is not applicable to fraternal societies acting under chapter 402 of the code.

Bukowski v Security Assn., 221-416; 265 NW 132

Accident insurance—estoppel by conclusiveness of physician's certificate—nonapplicability. The statute which provides for the conclusiveness of a physician's certificate of health or declaring an applicant a fit subject for life insurance after medical examination, and thereafter estops an insurance company from setting up as a defense to an action on policy, that insured was not in the condition of health required by policy, unless policy was procured by fraud, is not applicable to an accident insurance policy, since the characteristics of the risks are so different that it would not seem reasonable, nor would there be any necessity for any such rule in cases where the provisions of the policy are solely as to injury by accident.

Rainsbarger v Acc. Assn., 227-1076; 289 NW 908

Nonestoppel to question insurability. This section does not apply when there has been no delivery of the policy because of the insured's noninsurability.

Range v Ins. Co., 216-410; 249 NW 268

Certification of health or insurability—what constitutes. The questions which an insurer requires his own medical examiner to answer relative to an applicant for life insurance, and the answers of said examiner thereto, may, in connection with the questions put by said examiner to said applicant and the latter's answers thereto, constitute a "certificate of health" or "declaration of applicant's insurability", within the meaning, purpose, and intent of this section.

Faber v Ins. Co., 221-740; 265 NW 305

Delivery—estoppel to question. The actual delivery of a policy of life insurance after the insured has, without fraud, been examined by the insurer's medical examiner and reported insurable, precludes the insurer from questioning the effectiveness of such delivery, on the ground that, after the said examination and report, and before the delivery of the policy, the insured had, unbeknown to the insurer, contracted a fatal disease; and this is true even tho the application distinctly provides that the policy shall not take effect unless the insured is in good health at the time of delivery.

Mickel v Ins. Co., 204-1266; 213 NW 765

Estoppel to question. An insurer against total, permanent disability is, in the absence of plea and proof of fraud on the part of the insured, conclusively bound by a certificate of the health insurability of the insured issued by the insurer's examining physician as a basis for the issuance of the policy.

Foy v Ins. Co., 220-628; 263 NW 14

False answers to medical examiner—effect. The giving to a medical examiner by an applicant for insurance of absolutely false answers relative to the past medical history of the applicant, will not avoid the conclusive effect of the physician's favorable certificate unless the physician was deceived and misled by the false answers into issuing a certificate which he would not have issued, had true answers been given. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on this latter issue.

Boos v Ins. Co., 205-653; 216 NW 50

Fraud—jury question. Fraud or deceit in obtaining from the medical examiner of an insurance company a certificate of life insurability is not established per se by proof that the applicant for insurance, in response to an all-inclusive and comprehensive question, omitted any reference to the fact that, on one occasion, a physician had prescribed a tonic for him, and that on another occasion an oculist had prescribed glasses for him as a corrective of a defect of vision.

Colver v Continental Co., 220-407; 262 NW 791

Fraud and false warranty—evidence—insufficiency. An insurer who, in an action on a policy of insurance, presents the intermingled defense of fraud and false warranty has the burden to establish such defense. Evidence reviewed and held to present no jury question.

Post v Lodge, 211-786; 232 NW 140

Medical examination—effect. There may be a valid compromise and settlement of liability under a life insurance policy, prior to the death of the insured, even tho the policy was issued on a medical examination made by the insurer.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Misrepresentation—jury question. On the issue whether a policy of life insurance had been obtained by the insured by means of false and fraudulent representations relative to the prior and present state of health of the insured, record reviewed in detail and held to present a jury question.

Getsinger v Ins. Co., 216-610; 247 NW 260

Misrepresentation—in re sanity. Presumptively, a person is sane from and after such person is discharged from an asylum for the insane to which the person has been committed for treatment for insanity. Evidence, expert and nonexpert, reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether an insured was sane at the time a policy of insurance was issued notwithstanding the conceded fact that said insured had, some four years prior to the issuance of the policy, been adjudged insane and committed to an asylum for the insane and had remained there some three years before being granted a discharge.

Foy v Ins. Co., 220-628; 263 NW 14

Physician's certificate—conclusiveness—estoppel—absence of fraud. An Iowa statute providing that medical examiner's certificate of health issued to insured would estop insurer from setting up in defense of action on policy that insured was not in condition of health required by policy at time of issuance or delivery thereof, unless certificate was procured by fraud of insured, had the effect of changing contract through estoppel. A statute of this character does not limit the equitable jurisdiction of federal court and is enforceable therein, whether statute had been construed by Iowa supreme court as being rule of substantive law passing into contract, or as being merely a remedial right.

Mutual Ins. v Cunningham, 87 F 2d, 842

Statements by medical examiner. The positive testimony of a medical examiner that he, in the examination of an applicant (now deceased) for life insurance, correctly recorded the answers of the applicant, may be so weakened on cross-examination and by the attending circumstances, as to present a jury question whether the examiner did, in fact, correctly record said answers. So held where the examiner, (1) had no independent recollection of the answers given, (2) did not in all instances record the answers in the exact words of the applicant, and (3) in at least one instance, himself inserted his own answer to a question not stated to the applicant.

Faber v Ins. Co., 221-740; 265 NW 305

Willful deception as to health—jury question. Record reviewed on the issue whether an insured had knowingly deceived the insurer in stating his condition of health during the preceding five years, and held to present a jury question.

Parker v Ins. Co., 218-145; 254 NW 31

8772 Application for insurance—duty to attach to policy.

Similar provisions. See under §8974

Application—failure to attach—burden of proof. In an action, not on a policy of insurance, but for damages consequent on an alleged fraud-induced contract of settlement of the amount due on the policy, the burden of proof to show that the application for the insurance was not attached to or indorsed on the policy is on the insured when he pleads that the insurer may not avail itself of representations contained in the application.

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156; 237 NW 886

Application attached to policy—illegibly reduced photo copy—not “true copy.” In action on life policies, where defense was based on false representations in application for policy, and it is shown original application is plainly printed in legible letters of fair size, while copy furnished and attached to policy is so reduced in size and so dim or blurred that it can only be read by persons with normal vision by use of a strong magnifying glass, the statute requiring “true copy” of application to be attached to policy is not complied with, and the submission of question to the jury as to legibility under an instruction that a true copy must be readable was not erroneous.

New York Ins. v Miller, 73 F 2d, 350

Delivery date of policy—other evidence competent. In an action on a life policy to which insurance company pleads a general denial and further pleads a release and settlement, where in the delivery date of the policy is in dispute, and the insurance company assigns, as error, the exclusion of testimony of an officer of the company concerning underwriting practices of the company and a letter written by the company to its agent, upon which the agent's reply was indorsed, concerning the date of delivery of the policy, such evidence should have been admitted, and was competent to show that the company honestly believed it had a defense to the policy and explained why the company had the right to rely upon the date appearing upon the receipt for the policy.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Delivery date—evidence—admissibility. In an action to recover on a life policy of a daughter, an exhibit showing that a son's policy was delivered on September 14 was admissible to contradict testimony of father and mother that the daughter's policy was delivered August 23 and that son's policy was delivered previously.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Fraud in securing release—burden of proof. In an action on a life policy where the insurance company pleads a release, the burden of proof is on the company to show the execution and delivery of the release and payment of amount due thereunder, and where failure of consideration or fraud is alleged in obtaining the release, the burden of proof is on the party making the allegation, so where the court excluded such a release from evidence on account of insurance company's failure to establish consideration for the execution of such release, it placed a burden on the company which the company should not have been required to sustain, and the ruling was clearly erroneous.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Nondelivery because of death. A life insurance policy which, pursuant to an application, is promptly prepared (prior to the death of the insured), and delivered to the agent of the insurer, who forthwith returned the policy to the insurer because the insured was then dead, cannot be deemed in effect when the application distinctly provided that no obligation should exist against the insurer until the policy was delivered to the insured.

Hruska v Ins. Co., 203-1165; 211 NW 858

Presumption. It will be presumed that a copy of the application was attached to the policy or certificate, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

Foley v Brotherhood, 203-39; 210 NW 585

Right to deduct unpaid annual premium. An insurer has the right, when discharging his liability under a policy of life insurance, to deduct the amount of one full annual premium, even tho, when the insured died, only the first quarterly installment of the premium for the insurance year was due, the policy providing for such deduction and in addition providing that all premiums for an insurance year were due and payable in advance, with option to pay quarterly.

Andrews v Ins. Co., 220-719; 263 NW 255

8773 Failure to attach — defenses — estoppel.

Similar provisions. See §§8794, 8975

Application—failure to attach—burden of proof. In an action, not on a policy of insurance, but for damages consequent on an alleged fraud-induced contract of settlement of the amount due on the policy, the burden of proof to show that the application for the insurance was not attached to or indorsed on the policy is on the insured when he pleads that the insurer may not avail itself of representations contained in the application.

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156; 237 NW 886

8774 Limitation on proofs of loss.

Inapplicability. This section is not applicable to a certificate of insurance issued by a fraternal beneficiary association under §8777, C., '24.

Peters v Order, 203-428; 212 NW 576

Letters tending to prove inquiry. On the issue whether due and proper inquires as to the whereabouts of an insured person had been made, evidence in the form of identified letters replying to such inquiries are admissible.

Rodskier v Ins. Co., 216-121; 248 NW 295

Cause of death—testimony of attending physician nonconclusive. The testimony of a physician as to the cause of death of a person whom the physician personally attended shortly prior to said death is not conclusive, especially when the physician was, at the time of the examination, uncertain as to the cause of death. In other words, expert testimony, on proper hypothetical facts, is admissible to show a cause of death other than that testified to by the attending physician.

Dawson v Life Ins. Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

Proofs of loss—estoppel. Statements of fact in proofs of loss are rebuttable so long as the insurer has not acted thereon.

Harrington v Surety Co., 206-925; 221 NW 577

Proofs of loss—statements rebuttable. Statements made by the insured in making a proof of loss under a policy, and also statements made by the beneficiary of the policy who testified as an eyewitness, could be relied on by the insurer, but were only prima facie proof and were subject to contradiction or explanation.

Dykes v Ins. Co., 226-771; 285 NW 201

Loss—proofs—estoppel. An insurer may not complain that proofs of loss were fatally lacking in definiteness when the proofs were on a blank furnished by the insurer and were in compliance with such blank.

Elmore v Surety Co., 207-872; 224 NW 32

Inapplicable provisions of policy. The provisions in a policy of insurance (a) that "no agent has authority to change this policy or to waive any of its provisions", and (b) that "no change shall be made in the policy unless approved by an executive officer of the insurer and the approval be indorsed hereon", have application to the provisions of the policy relating to the formation and continuance of the contract and not to the conditions which are to be performed after loss, e.g., the giving of notice of loss.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

Ineffective proof by executrix. Under a policy providing for the payment, (1) of total disability benefits to the insured himself, and (2) of death benefits to another, the disability benefits alleged to have accrued to the insured prior to his death may not be recovered by the executrix of the insured when the insured, tho physically and mentally able so to do, failed to furnish during his lifetime, to the insurer, proofs of such disability, the furnishing of such proofs being clearly contemplated and required by the policy as a condition precedent to the attaching of liability on the part of the insurer.

Kantor v Ins. Co., 219-1005; 258 NW 759

Mental incapacity to furnish proofs—effect. A clear and unequivocal contract that an insured shall furnish due proofs of disability, as a condition precedent to the attaching of any liability on the part of the insurer, must be construed as assuming mental and physical capacity to furnish the proofs when due. It follows that the furnishing of such proofs will be excused if, when the disability occurs, and the policy is in force, the insured is insane, and, therefore, wholly unable to furnish said proofs.

McCoy v Ins. Co., 219-514; 258 NW 320

Notice and proof of loss—waiver. An insurer who is furnished proofs showing death from disease, and later, and within the time for furnishing proofs, is furnished amended proofs showing death from accident, waives all further proofs by refusing to furnish blanks on which to make additional proof and by peremptorily denying all liability for death by accident.

Dawson v Life Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

Notice and proof of loss—waiver. Failure of an insured to file written proofs of loss, becomes inconsequential when, commencing with the loss and for a long time thereafter, the insurer had promised to pay the loss.

Mortimer v Ins. Assn., 217-1246; 249 NW 405

Waiver—sufficient plea. An allegation, in an action on a policy of insurance, that plaintiff, within the contract time, orally notified a general agent of the insurer of his injury, and that said agent agreed that he would give proper and timely notice to the insurer, is a sufficient plea of waiver of the insured's duty to give written notice of the loss, and sufficient to support the admission of evidence that the agent had sufficient power to waive said written notice.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

Privileged communication—waived in proof of loss. In an action on a life policy where the beneficiary signed a proof of loss which contained an express waiver of the statute protecting communications in professional confidence, the testimony of a nurse who attended deceased-insured should not have been excluded, as such testimony was within the scope of the waiver.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Proof of loss—waiver by denying liability. A life insurance company's denial of liability, on grounds other than failure to furnish proofs of loss, is a waiver of their right to require proofs, if the policy was in force and proofs could have been furnished at the time of such denial, but insured, relying on the company's notice, believed the policy had lapsed.

Wood v Ins. Co., 224-179; 277 NW 241

Result of inquiries. On the issue whether due and proper inquiries as to the whereabouts of an insured person had been made, a person may testify as to the inquiries made by him and as to the results of such inquiries.

Rodskier v Ins. Co., 216-121; 248 NW 295

8775 Limitation under health and accident.

Contract limitation—validity. An agreement in a policy of insurance against total and permanent disability, specifically providing that all claim shall be forfeited if proof of such disability is not furnished the insurer "within ninety days after the happening of the total and permanent disability", is valid and enforceable, such time limit being more favorable to the insured than the statutory limit.

Fairgrave v Ins. Assn., 211-329; 233 NW 714

Inconsistent and repugnant provisions—construction against insurer. A provision in a health policy that sick benefits will be paid provided the sickness is contracted thirty days after the date of the policy, and a distinct and separate provision that said benefits will be paid for every sickness contracted subsequent to the issuance of the policy, are so inconsistent and repugnant that the court will reject the first provision and apply the latter.

Schmith v Cas. Co., 216-936; 247 NW 655

Cause of death—undue burden to establish. Expert medical opinions that an insured died from an intra-cranial, fatty embolus resulting from an external, violent and accidentally suffered injury, met by the same class of expert opinions positively to the contrary, may generate a jury question, determinable by the jury, like any other disputed question of fact, on the preponderance of testimony, the facts on which such conflicting, expert opinions are based being of such nature that the jurors could not therefrom deduce a proper opinion. So held where the court erroneously instructed that "No mere weight of evidence is sufficient to establish the cause of assured's death unless it excludes every other reasonable hypothesis as to the cause of death"—in effect requiring the theory of death by means of an embolus to be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

Aldine Co. v Acc. Assn., 222-20; 268 NW 507

Death by accident (?) or suicide (?)—directed verdict. In an action on a policy of insurance covering death by accident but excluding liability in case of suicide, the court, in view of the legal presumption against suicide, cannot properly direct a verdict on the theory of suicide unless the record is such as to conclusively establish the fact of suicide.

Jovich v Benefit Assn., 221-945; 265 NW 632

Denial of liability not constituting waiver. A denial of liability on a policy of insurance does not constitute a waiver of proofs of loss when the validity of the claim under the policy depends solely on the furnishing of proofs of loss within a specified contract time, and when said denial of liability was made long after said time had expired.

Fairgrave v Life Assn., 211-329; 233 NW 714

"Driving," "adjusting," or "explosion of" automobile—jury question. Evidence that a party successively ran two automobiles into his garage, leaving the motor of the first car running, and thereupon closed the garage doors, and was later found dead on the running board of the second car, is wholly insufficient to establish that the deceased met his death "while driving," or "while adjusting," or "by an explosion of," an automobile, it appearing that the direct cause of the death was the inhalation of carbon monoxide gas.

Field v Sur. Co., 211-1239; 235 NW 571

Riding or driving motor vehicle—insured on running board. In an action on an insurance policy, there was sufficient evidence for a jury question on whether an accident came within terms of the policy insuring against injuries received in an accident of a vehicle in which the insured was riding or driving, when it was shown that the car started moving down a grade, and the insured was thrown to the ground from a position partly in the car and partly on the running board, while attempting to stop the car.

Dykes v Ins. Co., 226-771; 285 NW 201

Notice and proof of loss—extent and sufficiency. A policy of insurance which, inter alia, provides for indemnity "if the insured shall furnish satisfactory proof that he has been wholly disabled * * * for a period of not less than sixty days, and that such disability is presumably permanent, and that he will be wholly and continuously prevented thereby from pursuing any gainful occupation", does not require the proofs for initial indemnity to show that the disability is and will remain absolutely permanent and continuous.

Kurth v Ins. Co., 211-736; 234 NW 201

"As soon as practicable". A policy requirement that written notice of an accident shall be given "as soon as practicable" means that said notice shall be given within a reasonable length of time under all the facts and circumstances. So held in a case where the insured inadvertently lost his policy and forgot the name of the insurer until some five months after liability accrued on the policy.

Gifford v Cas. Co., 216-23; 248 NW 235

"Immediate" notice—jury question. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether preliminary notice to an insurer, of death, was "immediate" within the meaning of the policy.

Nelson v Acc. Soc., 212-989; 237 NW 341

Ineffective proof by executrix. Under a policy providing for the payment, (1) of total disability benefits to the insured himself, and (2) of death benefits to another, the disability benefits alleged to have accrued to the insured prior to his death may not be recovered by the executrix of the insured when the insured, tho physically and mentally able so to do, failed to furnish during his lifetime, to the insurer, proofs of such disability, the furnishing of such proofs being clearly contemplated and required by the policy as a condition precedent to the attaching of liability on the part of the insurer.

Kantor v Ins. Co., 219-1005; 258 NW 759

Proof of inability to pursue gainful occupation. Policy of insurance construed and held that proof of absolute helplessness was not necessary in order to show that the insured had been prevented by his disabilities "from pursuing any gainful occupation".

Kurth v Ins. Co., 211-736; 234 NW 201

Statements rebuttable. Statements made by the insured in making a proof of loss under a policy, and also statements made by the beneficiary of the policy who testified as an eyewitness, could be relied on by the insurer, but were only prima facie proof and were subject to contradiction or explanation.

Dykes v Ins. Co., 226-771; 285 NW 201

"Permanent" disability. A policy which provides for benefits if the insured becomes "wholly and permanently disabled" does not embrace recovery for a disability which has been total for years, but which has terminated at the time action for recovery is instituted.

Hawkins v Ins. Co., 205-760; 218 NW 313

Permanent disability—scope. Under a policy providing monthly disability benefits if insured becomes, and remains for ninety days, so physically incapacitated as to be wholly and permanently unable to engage in any occupation or work for profit, the insured, in order to recover, need carry his proofs on the issue of permanency of disability no farther than to establish (1) present permanency, and (2) a reasonable presumption that such disability will continue for an indefinite period of time. (The policy herein provides for future proofs of continuance of disability.)

Garden v Ins. Co., 218-1094; 254 NW 287

Permanent disability—ascertainment by comparative standard in policy. In weighing the evidence as to a permanent disability claim, heed must be given to the other policy provisions wherein the company of its own volition has set a comparative standard for measuring total and permanent disability as respects the insured's ability to pursue any gainful occupation, and, being so measured, the question is for the jury.

Wood v Ins. Co., 224-179; 277 NW 241

Total and permanent disability—proofs. Preliminary proofs of total and permanent disability are sufficient when prepared and furnished by the insured on and in accordance with blank forms furnished by the insurer for such purpose.

Garden v Ins. Co., 218-1094; 254 NW 287

8776 Policy exempt from execution.

Discussion. See 21 ILR 153—Property purchased with proceeds

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 161

Exemption statutes—applicability. Exemption statutes are applicable to residents and nonresidents unless the benefits thereof are confined to residents.

Stark v Stark, 203-1261; 213 NW 235

Avails of life insurance. The avails of a life or accident policy of insurance inuring or passing to the surviving wife of the insured are exempt from her prior debts, even tho she was not designated in the policy as a beneficiary, and received such avails by operation of law only.

Scott v Wamsley, 218-670; 253 NW 524

Computation of amount of exemption. Where a widow as beneficiary in life insurance policies on her husband received some $11,200 and disposed of some $7,300 before any proceedings were commenced to subject said fund in excess of the $5,000 statutory exemption to the payment of a debt of the widow antedating the death of the husband, the said statutory exemption of $5,000 must be computed on the basis of the unexpended fund. In other words, her exemption cannot be deemed to be embraced within the $7,300 expenditure.

Booth v Propp, 214-208; 242 NW 60; 81 ALR 919

Funeral expenses nonallowable against insurance proceeds. Claims for funeral expenses consequent on the burial of the intestate deceased are not allowable against funds in the hands of the administrator when said funds constitute the proceeds of insurance on the life of deceased, the latter being survived by a minor son.

In re Galloway, 222-159; 269 NW 7

Life insurance to widow—termination of exemption by death. The unexpended proceeds of a policy of life insurance payable to a surviving widow are not exempt, after her death, from liability for debts contracted by her prior to the death of the insured husband. In other words, the exemption accorded to her does not survive her death.

In re Tellier, 210-20; 230 NW 545

Testamentary power over life insurance. A testator may validly dispose by will of the proceeds of life insurance payable to his estate, and make such proceeds subject to the payment of his debts. Such result is effected by a will (1) which provides for the payment of testator's debts, and (2) which devises the life insurance proceeds subject to such debt proviso.

In re Caldwell, 204-606; 215 NW 615

See Miller v Miller, 200-1070; 205 NW 870; 43 ALR 567

Testamentary power over life insurance. The formal statement in a will that testator's debts shall be paid out of his estate, is wholly insufficient to justify the conclusion that testator intended to appropriate to the payment of his debts the avails of life insurance payable to his personal representatives or to his estate, even tho as a matter of law such avails do become a part of his estate.

In re Grilk, 210-587; 231 NW 327

Construction—exemption—disposal of insurance payable to estate—specific legacy. When life insurance is payable to an insured's estate, he may specifically dispose of the proceeds other than as provided by statute, but there must be an agreement or assignment to contrary; however, a specific disposition of insurance proceeds by terms of a will, satisfies such requirement.

In re Clemens', 226-31; 282 NW 730

Dead man statute—failure to prosecute claim or disclaimer of interest ineffective. A divorced wife of a deceased may not become a competent witness to an oral contract made jointly between herself, her mother, and the deceased, in order to subject his insurance to payment of her mother's valid probate claim, merely by failing to prosecute a similar claim of her own and disclaiming any interest in the claim in litigation, since she still has her claim and may enforce payment if the contract is established.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Deceased's insurance as security—oral contract—original holder incompetent witness tho debt assigned. Altho having assigned his claim and altho the claim is duly allowed in probate, the original party to an oral contract with a deceased is incompetent as a witness, when the assignee of such contract seeks to subject the proceeds of the deceased's life insurance to payment thereof by reason of an oral contract claimed to have been entered into with the deceased.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Proceeds payable to estate—trusteed for statutory beneficiaries—exemption. Where a testator willed to his second wife all of his property requiring legal transmission but made no mention of his life insurance, payable to his second wife if she survived him, otherwise to his estate; and, when testator's second wife predeceased him, then upon his death, his surviving children, being a daughter by his first marriage and a son by his second marriage, became entitled under the statute to the proceeds of the insurance, and such proceeds passed into the hands of his personal representative or estate, only as a trust fund, to be distributed equally to such daughter and son.

In re Clemens', 226-31; 282 NW 730

Subjecting insurance to probate claim—dismissing as to policy in foreign court not allowable. A claimant in probate, alleging an oral contract assigning all decedent's insurance, may not split this single cause of action by dismissing part of his claim and attempting to establish it in a foreign state where one policy was held as security for the performance of a prior contract of decedent made therein.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Life policy payable in Iowa pledged in another state—Iowa jurisdiction. Tho a life policy payable to the estate of a deceased Iowa resident is deposited in a foreign state, as security for a debt, the proceeds are not beyond the jurisdiction of the Iowa probate court, inasmuch as the right to such proceeds depends, not upon their location, but upon the terms of the policy, supplemented by any contract relating thereto.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Proceeds of insurance. In mortgage receivership proceedings, and on the issue whether a wife, one of the obligated mortgagors, is solvent, no consideration can be given to the proceeds of life insurance (up to $5,000) on the life of the husband, and in the hands of the wife as a beneficiary, the mortgage debt antedating the death of the husband.

Interstate Acc. Assn. v Nichols, 213-12; 238 NW 435

Proceeds inure to separate use of beneficiaries independently of creditors. Proceeds of life insurance policy deposited by insurer in registry of federal district court and awarded to administrator appointed by Iowa court were not subject to claims of creditors under Iowa statute.

Cramer v Phoenix Mut. Life, 91 F 2d, 141

Right to proceeds—estate as beneficiary—exempt as to creditors. Policies of life insurance made payable to insured's estate, or to the administrator thereof, are not subject to the claims of creditors, unless the insured during his lifetime agreed, orally or in writing, to the contrary.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Right to proceeds—assignment by deceased—convincing evidence necessary. An oral contract assigning insurance, made with a deceased, must be established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence and leave no doubt as to the sufficiency of the consideration.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

I LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES GENERALLY

(a) IN GENERAL

Contract in general—what law governs. A policy of insurance issued in Iowa to a resident thereof is an Iowa contract, even tho the insurer, as a matter of practice, collects the premiums in a foreign state.

Ragan v Ins. Co., 209-1075; 229 NW 702

Negligence—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed in an action for damages consequent on the alleged negligence of an insurer in passing on, prior to the death of the applicant, an application for industrial insurance, and held quite insufficient to establish such negligence.

Winn v Ins. Co., 216-1249; 250 NW 459

Negligence in passing on application—damages. In an action for damages consequent on the alleged negligence of an insurer in passing on an application for insurance, the plaintiff must fail, irrespective of his evidence of negligence, unless he establishes, to the extent of furnishing a measure for his damages, the substance of the contract into which he was prevented from entering.

Winn v Ins. Co., 216-1249; 250 NW 459

Presumption attending possession. Possession by an insured, at the time of his death, of a policy of life or accident insurance creates a presumption, born of necessity and based on the experience of mankind, that the policy was delivered to the insured as an effective instrument; and this presumption prevails until the court can say, as a matter of law, that the presumption has been conclusively negated by other evidence. Applied where the issue was whether the first premium had been paid.

Beggs v Ins. Co., 219-24; 257 NW 445; 95 ALR 863

(b) WHEN POLICY BECOMES EFFECTIVE

Conditions precedent to taking effect of policy. The insurer and insured in a life policy may validly contract that the policy shall not take effect unless, during the continuance in good health of the insured,

1. The policy has been delivered, and
2. The first premium has been paid,—and such agreement imposes on the insured, as conditions precedent to any recovery, affirmative proof that the policy was delivered, and the first premium paid.

Range v Ins. Co., 216-410; 249 NW 268

Nondelivery because of death. A life insurance policy which, pursuant to an application, is promptly prepared (prior to the death of the insured), and delivered to the agent of the insurer, who forthwith returned the policy to the insurer because the insured was then dead, cannot be deemed in effect when the application distinctly provided that no obligation should exist against the insurer until the policy was delivered to the insured.

Hruska v Ins. Co., 203-1165; 211 NW 858

Premiums—payment mailed—nonreceipt—jury question. Evidence that an insurance premium had been mailed, against a claim of nonreceipt by the company, raises a jury question, especially when the company admits that in its office routine it made no note of the contents of envelopes until after they had passed through the hands of several clerks.

Wood v Ins. Co., 224-179; 277 NW 241

Unlicensed agent—noneffect on insurer—statements regarding effective date of policy. Where an accident policy is to become effective at 12 o'clock noon on date of delivery to insured, the application having been made on August 24, 1937, providing (1) it should not bind insurer until accepted nor (2) until policy was accepted by insured, while in good health and free from injury, and where policy, issued September 17, was delivered to insured September 22, while insured was in hospital as result of injuries sustained on August 26, insured could not recover on policy notwithstanding insurance agent's statements to insured that policy would be effective August 26. The fact that agent was unlicensed did not thereby make him a general agent of the insurer, the burden of proving which would be on insured. While an unlicensed agent may be criminally punished, this does not enlarge his authority to bind insurer.

Rainsbarger v Acc. Assn., 227-1076; 289 NW 908

II BENEFICIARIES AND INSURABLE INTEREST

(a) IN GENERAL

Forfeiture of policy for breach of warranty, covenant, or condition subsequent—statutory notice of nonpayment of premium—applicability. The statute (§8959, C., '27) requiring the insurer to give 30 days notice of his purpose to forfeit a policy for the nonpayment of a premium applies to a policy of accident insurance which specifies no exact date for the payment of the premium.

Ragan v Ins. Co., 209-1075; 229 NW 702

Performance by beneficiary—vested interest. The named beneficiary in a policy of life insurance acquires a vested interest in the proceeds of said policy when said beneficiary is so named in consideration of an agreement on the part of said beneficiary, (1) to furnish life-support to her parents (which she thereafter performed), and (2) to act as trustee for the protection of an acknowledged interest of said parents in said proceeds; and said vested interest must prevail over the subsequently acquired interest of another person, especially when such latter interest is based on a past consideration and evidenced by no change in the policy, but by simply a manual delivery thereof.

Aetna Ins. v Morlan, 221-110; 264 NW 58

(b) INSURABLE INTEREST

Corporation as beneficiary of policy on officer. A corporation which, for its own general benefit, is the beneficiary in a policy of life insurance on the life of one of its officers, is unconditionally entitled to the proceeds of the policy, even tho the insured had, at the time of his death, severed his official relation with the corporation.

Reilly v Ins. Co., 201-555; 207 NW 583

(c) BENEFICIARIES GENERALLY

Assignment of policy as collateral—effect on beneficiary. Reservation in a policy of life insurance of right in the insured to change the beneficiary prevents the vesting, during the lifetime of the insured, of any interest in the designated beneficiary, and arms the insured with power to assign the policy as security for a pre-existing indebtedness, and it is quite immaterial whether the designated beneficiary joins or fails to join with the insured in said assignment.

Potter v Ins. Co., 216-799; 247 NW 669

Assignment of policy—estoppel. The beneficiary of a legal reserve life insurance policy who, without fraud, joins with the insured in an assignment of all right, title, and interest in the policy in order to collaterally secure a debt due from each of said assignors, is estopped, after the death of the insured, from asserting any interest in the policy except as the same may exceed the said secured indebtedness, it appearing that the policy reserved to the insured both the right to assign the policy and to change the beneficiary.

Andrew v Bankers Life, 214-573; 240 NW 215

Change of beneficiaries. A policy method of changing beneficiaries under life insurance

II BENEFICIARIES AND INSURABLE INTEREST—continued

(c) BENEFICIARIES GENERALLY—concluded policies is admittedly exclusive; but a testamentary bequest of the proceeds of such policies, payable to the estate of the insured or to his executors or administrators, does not constitute a "change of beneficiaries", but constitutes a disposal of that much of the estate left by the insured.

Miller v Miller, 200-1070; 205 NW 870; 43 ALR 567

Change in beneficiary—justifiable and unjustifiable payment. An insurer who, in compliance with the policy-authorized demand of the insured, changes the beneficiary of a life insurance policy, and, on the death of the insured, makes full payment to said substituted beneficiary, must be deemed to have discharged the obligation of the policy, unless said insurer knew, or ought to have known, when payment was made, that, notwithstanding the provision of the policy authorizing a change of beneficiary, the first-named beneficiary had such interest or ownership in the policy as entitled him to receive said payment. Petition in equity held subject to motion to dismiss (equitable demurrer) because not sufficiently alleging such interest or ownership and the insurer's knowledge thereof.

Bennett v Ins. Co., 220-927; 263 NW 25

Right to change beneficiary. The insured in a policy of life insurance, who has the right, under the policy, to change the beneficiary, does not deprive himself of said right by delivering the policy to the beneficiary therein named accompanied by the statement or assurance that he is thereby making a "gift" to said named beneficiary, such policy not being the subject matter of a completed gift inasmuch as it simply proffers an expectancy, and an expectancy does not constitute property.

Penn Ins. Co. v Mulvaney, 221-925; 265 NW 889

Changing beneficiary—where policy silent. Where a benefit certificate is silent as to the manner of change, such change of beneficiary may be effected in any manner clearly indicating insured's intention.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Changing beneficiary—mere "clear intention" ineffectual. Insured's actions merely indicating a "clear intention to change the beneficiary" are not sufficient. Required acts to effect a change are neither directory nor ministerial but essential, subject only to equitable exceptions.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Changing beneficiary—following policy—exceptions—effect of death. Death vests interests in insurance, and the method provided in a benefit certificate to change a beneficiary during lifetime of insured is exclusive, except (1) where the company has waived strict compliance and issued a new certificate, (2) where it is beyond the power of insured to comply literally, equity will consider the change made, and (3) where insured has performed all necessary prerequisites, but dies before a new certificate is actually issued. Held in instant case beneficiary change not accomplished.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Conclusiveness—insurance rights—beneficiaries not parties. A decree establishing rights to insurance does not adjudicate rights of a beneficiary not a party to the action.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Contract provision—effect. The rule of law that when the insured in a policy of life insurance makes a series of changes of beneficiary, and the last beneficiary is legally ineligible, the next preceding, designated, eligible beneficiary is entitled to the proceeds of the policy, does not apply when the policy, by bylaw or otherwise, distinctly provides who, in such circumstances, shall be entitled to the proceeds.

Farrens v Benefit Dept., 213-608; 239 NW 544

Corporation as beneficiary of policy on officer. A corporation which, for its own general benefit, is the beneficiary in a policy of life insurance on the life of one of its officers, is unconditionally entitled to the proceeds of the policy, even tho the insured had, at the time of his death, severed his official relation with the corporation.

Reilly v Ins. Co., 201-555; 207 NW 583

Pledge of collateral—consideration. The naming of a surety as beneficiary in a life insurance policy and the pledging of the policy in order to indemnify the said surety on signing a renewal note are supported by a sufficient consideration.

Beed v Beed, 207-954; 222 NW 442

Surety as beneficiary—secret change—effect. A debtor who, pursuant to an agreement with his surety, makes the surety a beneficiary in a life policy in order to indemnify the surety against loss on the suretyship, and agrees not to change such beneficiary during the life of the suretyship, may not later secretly change such beneficiary and endow such new beneficiary with right to the proceeds of the policy, when the new beneficiary knew at all times of the suretyship and of the pledging of the policy as indemnity; and it matters not that the new beneficiary actually kept the policy alive by paying the premium.

Beed v Beed, 207-954; 222 NW 442

(d) RIGHT TO PROCEEDS

Discussion. See 16 ILR 419—Minor beneficiary Assignment after loss. Principle reaffirmed that after a loss occurs under a policy of insurance, the beneficiary may assign his right of action against the insurer without the consent of the insurer.

Welch v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

Assignment of policy—estoppel. The beneficiary of a legal reserve life insurance policy who, without fraud, joins with the insured in an assignment of all right, title, and interest in the policy in order to collaterally secure a debt due from each of said assignors, is estopped, after the death of the insured, from asserting any interest in the policy except as the same may exceed the said secured indebtedness, it appearing that the policy reserved to the insured both the right to assign the policy and to change the beneficiary.

Andrew v Life Co., 214-573; 240 NW 215

Beneficiary with vested interest—effect. The named beneficiary in a policy of life insurance acquires a vested interest in the proceeds of said policy when said beneficiary is so named in consideration of an agreement on the part of said beneficiary (1) to furnish life-support to her parents (which she thereafter performed), and (2) to act as trustee for the protection of an acknowledged interest of said parents in said proceeds; and said vested interest must prevail over the subsequently acquired interest of another person, especially when such latter interest is based on a past consideration and evidenced by no change in the policy, but by simply a manual delivery thereof.

Aetna Ins. v Morlan, 221-110; 264 NW 58

Ineligible beneficiary—contract provision—effect. The rule of law that when the insured in a policy of life insurance makes a series of changes of beneficiary, and the last beneficiary is legally ineligible, the next preceding, designated, eligible beneficiary is entitled to the proceeds of the policy, does not apply when the policy, by bylaw or otherwise, distinctly provides who, in such circumstances, shall be entitled to the proceeds.

Farrens v Ben. Dept., 213-608; 239 NW 544

Life policy payable in Iowa pledged in another state—Iowa jurisdiction. Tho a life policy payable to the estate of a deceased Iowa resident is deposited in a foreign state, as security for a debt, the proceeds are not beyond the jurisdiction of the Iowa probate court, inasmuch as the right to such proceeds depends, not upon their location, but upon the terms of the policy, supplemented by any contract relating thereto.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Notice—claim in probate—legatees unnecessary parties. In an appeal from a holding that a claim in probate was not payable from life insurance funds, notice of appeal is all-sufficient when served solely on the executor, the legatees not being parties to the controversy.

In re Caldwell, 204-606; 215 NW 615

Surety as beneficiary—secret change—effect. A debtor who, pursuant to an agreement with his surety, makes the surety a beneficiary in a life policy in order to indemnify the surety against loss on the suretyship, and agrees not to change such beneficiary during the life of the suretyship, may not later secretly change such beneficiary and endow the new beneficiary with right to the proceeds of the policy, when the new beneficiary knew at all times of the suretyship and of the pledging of the policy as indemnity; and it matters not that the new beneficiary actually kept the policy alive by paying the premium.

Beed v Beed, 207-954; 222 NW 442

Testamentary power—proceeds of life insurance. A testator may validly dispose by will of the proceeds of life insurance payable to his estate and make such proceeds subject to the payment of his debts. Such result is effected by a will (1) which provides for the payment of testator's debts, and (2) which devises the life insurance proceeds subject to such debt proviso.

In re Caldwell, 204-606; 215 NW 615

III CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF POLICIES

Ambiguous language—construction. Ambiguous language employed in an insurance policy must be construed most strongly against the insurer and in favor of the beneficiary of the policy.

Umbarger v Ins. Co., 218-203; 254 NW 87; 36 NCCA 733

Ambiguity against insurer. Principle reaffirmed that, in the construction of a policy of insurance, the court will look to all parts thereof and, guarding against making a new contract for the parties, will construe ambiguous parts thereof most strongly against the insurer who dictated the language of the instrument.

Kantor v Ins. Co., 219-1005; 258 NW 759

Discriminations, etc.—permissible collateral agreements. The act of an insurer in granting to the insured, through the medium of a promissory note, an extension of time in which to pay an accrued annual premium, on condition that the nonpayment of the note at maturity shall ipso facto void the policy, is not violative of the statutes (1) which prohibit discriminations among policyholders, (2) which require the entire contract to be inserted in the policy, and (3) which require all forms of policy or contracts of insurance to be filed with and approved by the commissioner of insurance.

Diehl v Ins. Co., 204-706; 213 NW 753; 53 ALR 1528

Liberal construction—reformation.

Wall v Ins. Co., 228- ; 289 NW 901

Equivocal provision. A policy of insurance is equivocal in providing for double indemnity if the insured dies while "a passenger within a passenger elevator" because the term "elevator" may mean:

1. The platform or cage on which or in which the passenger rides; or

2. The entire structure, including the cage or platform, hoisting machinery and shaft in which the cage or platform operates.

The insurer being responsible for this equivocation, that construction must prevail which is most favorable to the insured. Held, therefore, that the insured was "a passenger within a passenger elevator" when, intending to be a passenger, he stepped into the elevator shaft and was killed.

Boles v Ins. Co., 219-178; 257 NW 386; 96 ALR 1400

New policy for old—conclusiveness.

Knott v Ins. Co., 228- ; 290 NW 91

Extending period for insurance. A recording or policy-issuing agent has authority to agree to an extension of the life of a policy, as written, in order to cover an additional period equal to that during which the insurer claimed the policy stood suspended and for which the insured had paid the premium.

Fillgraf v Ins. Co., 218-1335; 256 NW 421

Forfeiture of policy—nonpayment premium lien note—discriminatory provisions. In an action by beneficiary to recover insurance on a policy which, at the expiration of an extension permitted by a premium lien note, the insured had allowed to lapse, and which policy contained certain provisions as to "cash surrender value" and "participating paid up insurance" granting to an insured three months after default in any premium payment to elect to surrender his policy for cash, thereby contains an unlawful discrimination providing longer insurance in favor of a more delinquent insured, and under above circumstances the failure to pay the premium lien note resulted in cancelling the policy subject to the terms of the policy itself, which giving insured a specified amount of insurance for a limited time, which having expired at the time of his death, it follows that the policy having lapsed a recovery should be denied.

Clausen v Ins. Co., 224-802; 276 NW 427

Inapplicable provisions of policy. The provisions in a policy of insurance (a) that "no agent has authority to change this policy or to waive any of its provisions", and (b) that "no change shall be made in the policy unless approved by an executive officer of the insurer and the approval be indorsed hereon", have application to the provisions of the policy relating to the formation and continuance of the contract and not to the conditions which are to be performed after loss, e.g., the giving of notice of loss.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

Unlicensed agent—noneffect on insurer—statements regarding effective date of policy.

Where an accident policy is to become effective at 12 o'clock noon on date of delivery to insured, the application having been made on August 24, 1937, providing (1) it should not bind insurer until accepted nor (2) until policy was accepted by insured while in good health and free from injury, and where policy, issued September 17, was delivered to insured September 22 while insured was in hospital as result of injuries sustained on August 26, insured could not recover on policy notwithstanding insurance agent's statement to insured that policy would be effective August 26. The fact that agent was unlicensed did not thereby make him a general agent of the insurer, the burden of proving which would be on insured. While an unlicensed agent may be criminally punished, this does not enlarge his authority to bind insurer.

Rainsbarger v Acc. Assn., 227-1076; 289 NW 908

Nonpayment of premium. In case of ambiguity, a policy of insurance will be construed most strongly against the insurer who, of course, wrote the policy. So held on the question whether a provision granting a period of grace in the payment of premiums applied to both death and disability benefits provided for in the policy.

Murphy v Ins. Co., 219-609; 258 NW 749

"Passenger"—construction of term. Principle recognized and reasserted that there is a vast difference between the facts which constitute a person a passenger in a common carrier conveyance and what facts constitute a person a passenger on an ordinary elevator.

Boles v Ins. Co., 219-178; 257 NW 386; 96 ALR 1400

"Permanent" disability. A policy which provides for benefits if the insured becomes "wholly and permanently disabled" does not embrace recovery for a disability which has been total for years, but which has terminated at the time action for recovery is instituted.

Hawkins v Ins. Co., 205-760; 218 NW 313

Premiums—default—"paid-up" insurance as automatic result. A policy of insurance may not be deemed a policy for extended insurance upon the happening of a default in the payment of a premium (1) when, under the terms of the policy and governing statutes, such default automatically rendered the policy a policy for paid-up insurance, unless the insured elected to take extended insurance, and (2) when the insured had never exercised any such election, and moreover had, long after the default, ineffectually attempted to pay the premium.

Rogers v Ins. Co., 204-804; 213 NW 757

Varying contract by evidence of custom. Principle recognized that a clearly expressed and unambiguous contract cannot be varied by evidence of a custom.

Wall v Ins. Co., 217-1106; 253 NW 46

IV PREMIUMS, DUES AND ASSESSMENTS

Failure to pay premium—effect. A combined life and accident policy of insurance becomes void in accordance with its terms, to wit: "on failure to pay the premium at maturity", without any notice from the insurer that the premium is due or when it will be due. In other words, section 8959, as supplemented by section 8673, has no application to such a policy.

Wall v Ins. Co., 217-1106; 253 NW 46

See Federal Bank v Ins. Assn., 217-1098; 253 NW 52

Forfeiture of policy—nonpayment of premium. An insured will not be deemed in default in the payment of premiums at the time of his death (1) when the premium is payable in installments, (2) when no specified date is fixed for payment, (3) when the policy provides that the payment of an installment shall continue the policy in force for a stated time, and (4) when the insured dies prior to the expiration of said stated time after the last payment; and this is true tho the premiums earned exceed the premiums paid.

Ragan v Ins. Co., 209-1075; 229 NW 702

Premiums—maturity—date of policy governs. In computing the future accruing premium paying periods under a policy of life insurance, the date of the policy as voluntarily selected by the insured, governs, (1) even tho said date is an antedate representing the date of the application for the insurance, and (2) even tho the policy provides that it shall be effective only from date of delivery to the insured.

Timmer v Ins. Co., 222-1193; 270 NW 421; 111 ALR 1412

Premium payable from wages—quitting service—effect. Where a premium is payable in installments and from the wages of the insured earned with a named employer, the abandonment of said service by the insured does not constitute a breach of the contract, when the policy provides for just such a contingency.

Ragan v Ins. Co., 209-1075; 229 NW 702

Policy date for premiums—time of lapse.

Wall v Ins. Co., 228- ; 289 NW 901

Nonpayment of premium—effect of custom. An insured cannot excuse the nonpayment of his premium on the plea that the insurer customarily notified the policyholder of the maturity date, but failed so to do in his case when said policyholder did not know of the custom at the time in question and necessarily did not rely thereon.

Wall v Ins. Co., 217-1106; 253 NW 46

Failure to pay note—lapse of policy. A policy of insurance unqualifiedly lapses upon the failure of the insured to pay at maturity a promissory note which he has given for an annual premium, such effect being expressly provided for in the application and in the policy and in the said note, and the note clearly providing that it was not given as payment.

Diehl v Ins. Co., 204-706; 213 NW 753; 53 ALR 1528

Nonright to grace in payment of note. An insured who has the policy right to 30 days grace in which to pay a premium after its maturity, before the policy lapses, but who applies for and is granted a much longer time, through the medium of a promissory note, in which to pay may not insist that the 30-day policy grace shall be added to the maturity date of the note.

Diehl v Ins. Co., 204-706; 213 NW 753; 53 ALR 1528

Nonpayment of premium. In case of ambiguity, a policy of insurance will be construed most strongly against the insurer who, of course, wrote the policy. So held on the question whether a provision granting a period of grace in the payment of premiums applied to both death and disability benefits provided for in the policy.

Murphy v Ins. Co., 219-609; 258 NW 749

Nonpayment of premium—period of grace. A policy of life insurance, in providing that a failure to pay a premium shall not void the policy until a thirty days notice is mailed to the last known address of the insured, contemplates and requires, not a notice that a premium will become due at a named date in the future, but a thirty days notice that a premium is due and unpaid; and until the thirty days have fully elapsed after the mailing of a proper notice, the policy continues in force.

Andrews v Ins. Co., 220-719; 263 NW 255

Payment in disregard of contract—waiver. A provision in the constitution and bylaws of an insurer to the effect that the failure of the insured, for three months, to pay the required monthly dues shall, without notice, automatically terminate his membership and deprive him of all benefits must be deemed to have been waived in favor of an insured who, for many years and up to the time of his death, fully paid his dues, but not in accordance with said constitutional requirement,—the insurer necessarily having knowledge of said method of payment, and having accepted and retained said payments without objection.

Sawyer v Union, 220-806; 263 NW 236

Liability of insurer—premium check received as "cash"—no lapse by nonpayment. Where an insurer notifies its insured that his premium lien note is due, but his new note and remittance mailed on or before a certain Saturday on which his policy lapses, will prevent any such lapse, the insurer knowing that

IV PREMIUMS, DUES AND ASSESSMENTS—concluded thereby payment could not reach its office in another city before the policy lapse date, but, nevertheless, when the payment check arrives, receipts for it as cash, and when the insured shortly thereafter dies, and the check meanwhile being returned unpaid, and the insured altho then dead being notified that the policy had lapsed, is a situation justifying a finding that the check was received as payment and a repudiation of such payment to escape liability on the policy will not be permitted.

Hockert v Ins. Co., 224-789; 276 NW 422

“Void” for nonpayment of premiums means “voidable”. An insurance policy written as a unilateral contract, containing a provision that the policy will be void upon default in premium payment, means in effect that the policy is “voidable”—said clause being for the exclusive benefit of the insurer.

Pennebaker v Ins. Co., 226-314; 284 NW 147

Premium—application of dividends. An insured is not entitled to notice from the insurer as to the amount of dividends due under the policy in order to determine how much cash, in addition, is necessary to pay his premium when, under the policy, the condition does not yet exist under which he would have the right to apply the dividends on the premium.

Wall v Ins. Co., 217-1106; 253 NW 46

Unpaid premiums—nonright to apply dividends. The insurer in a dividend-participating policy has no right on his own initiative—let alone being under a duty—to so apply a cash dividend belonging to the insured and in the possession of the insurer, as to furnish extended insurance and prevent a lapse of the policy, the policy granting no such right to the insurer, and vesting the insured, under the exercise of his own option, with absolute control over said dividend.

Baker v Ins. Co., 222-184; 268 NW 556

Conditionally delivered note—purchaser with knowledge not “holder in due course”. Where insurance agent takes an application for life insurance, and as a part of the same transaction notes are executed and delivered conditionally, or for specific purpose of paying insurance premium, and a party takes the notes, as security for a loan to the agent, with knowledge that application has not been approved, such party is not a “holder in due course” and cannot enforce payment of the note after application has been rejected.

Economy Co. v Ins. Co., 227-1123; 290 NW 82

Conversion of premium by agent—liability of insurer. Where insurance agent taking an application for life insurance had authority to collect premiums on behalf of the insurer and where proceeds of check given with application for payment of premium were partly converted while in authorized possession of insurer’s agent, and the application was thereafter rejected by insurer, the conversion was an act for which the insurer was liable.

Economy Co. v Ins. Co., 227-1123; 290 NW 82

Deceased insurance agent’s liability for insurance premium. In action to cancel insurance premium notes where evidence, clearly admissible against administrator of deceased insurance agent, established that check and two notes were delivered to agent for payment of premium and that insurer rejected application for insurance, such evidence warranted cancellation of the notes and established agent’s liability for the unaccounted part of the check as against administrator of the agent’s estate.

Economy Co. v Ins. Co., 227-1123; 290 NW 82

V ASSIGNMENT OR TRANSFER

Absence of consideration. An assignment of the proceeds of a life insurance policy is a nullity when not supported by a consideration.

Mutual Ins. v Schubert, 201-697; 207 NW 741

Assignment of policy—estoppel. The beneficiary of a legal reserve life insurance policy who, without fraud, joins with the insured in an assignment of all right, title, and interest in the policy in order to collaterally secure a debt due from each of said assignors, is estopped, after the death of the insured, from asserting any interest in the policy except as the same may exceed the said secured indebtedness, it appearing that the policy reserved to the insured both the right to assign the policy and to change the beneficiary.

Andrew v Life Co., 214-573; 240 NW 215

Assignment as collateral—effect on beneficiary. Reservation in a policy of life insurance of right in the insured to change the beneficiary prevents the vesting, during the lifetime of the insured, of any interest in the designated beneficiary, and arms the insured with power to assign the policy as security for a pre-existing indebtedness, and it is quite immaterial whether the designated beneficiary joins or fails to join with the insured in said assignment.

Potter v Ins. Co., 216-799; 247 NW 669

Consideration—assignment to trustee. A written assignment of a fractional interest in a life insurance policy to a trustee, made for the purpose of protecting the attorneys for the agreed value of their services in prosecuting an action on the policy, is supported by adequate consideration, especially when it appears that the trustee was to receive compensation for his services.

Welch v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

Assignee of policy—venue. The assignee of a fractional interest in a life insurance policy may, in conjunction with the original beneficiary (who retains the remaining fractional interest), maintain an action on the policy in the county of which the assignee is a resident, even tho said county is not the county of which the original beneficiary is a resident.

Welch v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

Right to proceeds—assignment after loss. Principle reaffirmed that after a loss occurs under a policy of insurance, the beneficiary may assign his right of action against the insurer without the consent of the insurer.

Welch v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

Insurable interest—corporation as beneficiary of policy on officer. A corporation which, for its own general benefit, is the beneficiary in a policy of life insurance on the life of one of its officers, is unconditionally entitled to the proceeds of the policy, even tho the insured had, at the time of his death, severed his official relation with the corporation.

Reilly v Ins. Co., 201-555; 207 NW 583

Subjecting insurance to probate claim—dismissing as to policy in foreign court not allowable. A claimant in probate, alleging an oral contract assigning all decedent's insurance, may not split this single cause of action by dismissing part of his claim and attempting to establish it in a foreign state where one policy was held as security for the performance of a prior contract of decedent made therein.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

VI CANCELLATION, SURRENDER, RESCISSION AND REFORMATION

Cancellation in equity. Equity will not, after the death of the insured in a life insurance policy, entertain jurisdiction to cancel the policy unless exceptional circumstances render cancellation necessary for the protection of the insurer. The fact that the policy becomes incontestable after two years does not constitute such circumstance when said time has not yet elapsed.

Bankers Life v Bennett, 220-922; 263 NW 44

Fraud as defense in law action. A defendant in an action at law on a policy of insurance is not entitled to a transfer of the action to the equity calendar simply because he pleads fraudulent representation as a defense and prays a cancellation of the policy.

Beeman v Life Co., 215-1163; 247 NW 673

Reformation—age when policy exchanged—mutual mistake

Knott v Ins. Co., 228- ; 290 NW 91

Date of lapse—construction—reformation.

Wall v Ins. Co., 228- ; 289 NW 901

VII RENEWAL, REVIVAL AND REINSTATEMENT

Belated receipt of check—effect. Under a policy providing that the nonpayment of a premium shall forfeit the policy, but that the insured may be reinstated, the receipt by the insurer thru the mail, long after the maturity of a premium, of insured's check for the premium, does not constitute payment, when the insurer promptly replied by mail that the insured must first be reinstated, and when, without effort to collect the check, the insurer made proper tender thereof; and it matters not that the insured died before the insurer's letter reached him.

Rogers v Ins. Co., 204-804; 213 NW 757

Incontestability and suicide clauses compared. A clause, in an insurance reinstatement agreement, providing for incontestability after two years from reinstatement, is a limitation on contestability and on the company's rights and is opposite in character to a suicide clause which affords additional contestability and adds ● the company's rights.

Johnson v Ins. Co., 224-797; 276 NW 595

Ipso facto lapse of policy—formal forfeiture unnecessary. Under an ordinary life insurance policy, a provision that default in payment of a premium shall forfeit the policy requires no formal notice of forfeiture in case of such default.

Rogers v Ins. Co., 204-804; 213 NW 757

Reinstatement revives lapsed policy—suicide clause. Reinstatement of an insurance policy four years after it was originally written does not create a new contract as of date of reinstatement but revives the lapsed policy, and a clause in the original policy excluding liability for suicide for two years from date of contract is not revived to mean two years from date of reinstatement.

Johnson v Ins. Co., 224-797; 276 NW 595

Self-adjusting benefit provisions—effect. Where a policy of accident insurance, which has lapsed because of the nonpayment of premiums, is self-adjusting as regards death benefits in case death occurs while the insured is pursuing an occupation which is more hazardous than the one specified in the policy, such self-adjusting provisions are in no manner changed by the act of the insurer in reinstating the policy by accepting and retaining the past due premium with full knowledge that the insured was then pursuing a more hazardous occupation than the one specified in the policy. Especially is this true if a contrary construction would result in a discrimination between policyholders which is prohibited by statute.

Stephan v Ins. Co., 209-576; 221 NW 57

VIII AVOIDANCE AND FORFEITURE OF POLICIES

(a) IN GENERAL

Directed verdict on defensive plea. A defendant insurance company is entitled to a directed verdict on its defensive plea that the policy sued on had, because of the nonpayment of premiums, etc., become forfeited prior to the death of the insured, when, at the close of

VIII AVOIDANCE AND FORFEITURE OF POLICIES—continued

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

all testimony, the record reveals clear and convincing proof of such forfeiture by competent and satisfactory testimony which is wholly uncontradicted and unimpeached, directly or indirectly, by any fact, circumstance, or condition. And this is true tho it be assumed that defendant has the burden to establish his said plea.

Baker v Ins. Co., 222-184; 268 NW 556

Misrepresentation in re sanity. Presumptively, a person is sane from and after such person is discharged from an asylum for the insane to which the person has been committed for treatment for insanity. Evidence, expert and nonexpert, reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether an insured was sane at the time a policy of insurance was issued notwithstanding the conceded fact that said insured had, some four years prior to the issuance of the policy, been adjudged insane and committed to an asylum for the insane and had remained there some three years before being granted a discharge.

Foy v Ins. Co., 220-628; 263 NW 14

Bylaws part of policy—nonwaiver.

Richardson v Trav. Assn., 228- ; 291 NW 408

(b) MISREPRESENTATION AND CONCEALMENT

Actions on policies—law of case—directed verdict. An insurer may not have a directed verdict on the ground that the insured had, in his application, incorrectly stated his occupation (1) when, on a former appeal, the law of the case had been settled to the effect that recovery might be had if the insurer had full knowledge of such occupation notwithstanding such incorrect statement, and (2) when the record presents a jury question on such issue of knowledge.

Murray v Ins. Co., 204-1108; 216 NW 702

False answers to medical examiner—effect. The giving to a medical examiner by an applicant for insurance of absolutely false answers relative to the past medical history of the applicant, will not avoid the conclusive effect of the physician's favorable certificate unless the physician was deceived and misled by the false answers into issuing a certificate which he would not have issued, had true answers been given. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on this latter issue.

Boos v Ins. Co., 205-653; 216 NW 50

Fraud and false warranty—evidence—insufficiency. An insurer who, in an action on a policy of insurance, presents the intermingled defense of fraud and false warranty has the burden to establish such defense. Evidence reviewed and held to present no jury question.

Post v Lodge, 211-786; 232 NW 140

Fraud—jury question. Fraud or deceit in obtaining from the medical examiner of an insurance company a certificate of life insurability is not established per se by proof that the applicant for insurance, in response to an all-inclusive and comprehensive question, omitted any reference to the fact that, on one occasion, a physician had prescribed a tonic for him, and that on another occasion an oculist had prescribed glasses for him as a corrective of a defect of vision.

Colver v Continental Co., 220-407; 262 NW 791

Misrepresentation—jury question. On the issue whether a policy of life insurance had been obtained by the insured by means of false and fraudulent representations relative to the prior and present state of health of the insured, record reviewed in detail and held to present a jury question.

Getsinger v Ins. Co., 216-610; 247 NW 260

Misrepresentation—when unallowable as a defense. False and fraudulent representations on the part of an insured, in his original application for a policy of insurance, are not available as a defense to an action on the policy, when the policy provides that it is incontestable except as provided in named paragraphs which, on examination, reveal no grounds of contest whatever, but only matters of which the insurer could avail himself in the enforcement of the contract.

Wilson v Equitable Life, 220-321; 262 NW 525

Willful deception as to health—jury question. Record reviewed on the issue whether an insured had knowingly deceived the insurer in stating his condition of health during the preceding five years, and held to present a jury question.

Parker v Ins. Co., 218-145; 254 NW 31

(c) NONFULFILLMENT OF WARRANTIES AND CONDITIONS

Contract remedies for collection—failure to comply with. The beneficiary (and his assignee), in a certificate of insurance of a mutual benefit association, is bound by the bylaws which provide that no resort shall be had to the courts to enforce payment of said certificate until said beneficiary has first exhausted the contract remedies provided by the bylaws for the allowance and payment of said claim.

Ater v Ben. Dept., 222-1390; 271 NW 517

Incapacity excusing payment. Evidence reviewed, and held insufficient to establish that an insured was "wholly and permanently" disabled within the meaning of a policy which excused nonpayment of the annual premium in case of such incapacity.

Corsuat v Assur. Soc., 203-741; 211 NW 222; 51 ALR 1035

Nonpayment of dues—automatic forfeiture. A policy or certificate holder in a fraternal insurance society who, at different times, and in violation of his contract of insurance, has escaped an automatic forfeiture of his policy by having his policy dues or assessments paid and accepted after they were wholly delinquent, must comply with a due and timely notice from the society that said practice will no longer be tolerated and that said dues and assessments must be paid strictly within the time provided by the policy contract.

If he does not so comply, and dies while in arrears, his beneficiary will not be permitted to avoid the automatic forfeiture of the policy by a then tender of the dues.

Wry v Woodmen, 222-1179; 271 NW 300

Premiums—default—no duty to apply surrender value. Under a policy which provides that default in the payment of a premium shall forfeit the policy, the insurer is under no obligation, upon the happening of such default, to apply the cash surrender value to the payment of such premium when, under the policy and governing statutes, the insured controlled the disposition of such surrender value and had never exercised any option with reference thereto.

Rogers v Ins. Co., 204-804; 213 NW 757

IX WAIVER AND ESTOPPEL

Discussion. See 13 ILR 129—Waiver

Assignment of policy. The beneficiary of a legal reserve life insurance policy who, without fraud, joins with the insured in an assignment of all right, title, and interest in the policy in order to collaterally secure a debt due from each of said assignors, is estopped, after the death of the insured, from asserting any interest in the policy except as the same may exceed the said secured indebtedness, it appearing that the policy reserved to the insured both the right to assign the policy and to change the beneficiary.

Andrew v Life Co., 214-573; 240 NW 215

Delivery of policy. The actual delivery of a policy of life insurance after the insured has, without fraud, been examined by the insurer's medical examiner and reported insurable precludes the insurer from questioning the effectiveness of such delivery on the ground that after the said examination and report, and before the delivery of the policy, the insured had, without the knowledge of the insurer, contracted a fatal disease; and this is true even though the application distinctly provides that the policy shall not take effect unless the insured is in good health at the time of delivery, such proviso being ineffective under §8770, C., '24, in those cases where the insurer makes delivery.

Mickel v Ins. Co., 204-1266; 213 NW 765

Estoppel to dispute power of agent. An insurance company estops itself from asserting that its agent is other than a recording or policy-issuing agent when it furnishes the agent with all blanks and supplies necessary for the actual execution and issuance by him of policies and otherwise recognizes his broad powers, and when a policyholder has relied on the agreement and representation of said agent.

Fillgraf v Ins. Co., 218-1335; 256 NW 421

Estoppel to avoid or forfeit policy—medical examination—effect. There may be a valid compromise and settlement of liability under a life insurance policy, prior to the death of the insured, even tho the policy was issued on a medical examination made by the insurer. (§8770, C., '31.)

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Nonestoppel to question insurability. The statutory provision (§8770, C., '31) which estops an insurer from questioning the insurability of an insured after the insurer's medical examiner has certified to the insurability of the insured, does not apply when there has been no delivery of the policy because of the insured's noninsurability.

Range v Ins. Co., 216-410; 249 NW 268

Forfeiture of policy—nonpayment of premiums. The plea that the nonpayment of premiums on a policy was waived because the policy provided for such waiver in case the insured became "wholly and permanently disabled" is manifestly not established by proving that the insured was only partially disabled.

Corsuat v Assur. Soc., 203-741; 211 NW 222; 51 ALR 1035

Proof of loss—denial of liability not constituting waiver. A denial of liability on a policy of insurance does not constitute a waiver of proofs of loss when the validity of the claim under the policy depends solely on the furnishing of proofs of loss within a specified contract time, and when said denial of liability was made long after said time had expired.

Fairgrave v Life Assn., 211-329; 233 NW 714

Privileged communications—waiver of statute—scope of. A waiver, in a policy of accident insurance, of the statute which forbids a physician when testifying to reveal a professional or privileged communication, is operative whether the particular communication be favorable or unfavorable to the insurer.

Miser v Trav. Assn., 223-662; 273 NW 155

Bylaws part of policy—nonwaiver.

Richardson v Trav. Assn., 228- ; 291 NW 408

Waiver—no release by insured without consideration. A purported release by one party to a contract of the other party's obligations is without effect unless duly supported by a consideration. So held where an insured accepted the return of his premium upon the statement that the policy had lapsed and thereupon the insurer claimed a waiver of its obligations.

Pennebaker v Ins. Co., 226-314; 284 NW 147

X CAUSES OF DEATH AS AFFECTING RECOVERY

(a) IN GENERAL

Assault to rob—jury question. The limited liability provided in a policy of insurance in case of "injuries intentionally inflicted upon the insured by another person except in the perpetration of a robbery," cannot be deemed established as a matter of law by evidence which would justify a finding either (1) that the assault was not made in the perpetration of a robbery, or (2) that it was made in the perpetration of a robbery, or (3) that the assault was the result of mistaken identity—and, therefore, not intentional within the meaning of the policy.

Carpenter v Trav. Assn., 213-1001; 240 NW 639

(b) ACCIDENTAL DEATH AND DOUBLE INDEMNITY

Drinking liquor as "accidental means". Proof that an insured drank liquor of some nature, and died from the effects thereof, without any evidence that the liquor was taken (1) unintentionally, or (2) under a mistaken notion as to amount taken, or (3) under a mistaken notion as to the character of the liquor, does not establish that the death was caused by accidental means.

Naggy v Provident Ins., 218-694; 255 NW 526

Accidental cause producing death—evidence. Evidence held sufficient to present a jury question on the issue whether an insured became accidentally infected with gas bacillus at the time of an injury to his hand, and whether said infection resulted in his death.

Martin v Bankers Life, 216-1022; 250 NW 220

"Accident" and "accidental means" defined. An "accident" is an event which, under the circumstances, is unusual and unexpected by the person to whom it happens; the happening of an event without the concurrence of the will of the person by whose agency it was caused.

The term "accidental means" signifies those means, the effect of which does not ordinarily follow, and cannot be reasonably anticipated from the use of those means, an effect which the actor did not intend to produce and which he cannot be charged with the design of producing.

Miser v Trav. Assn., 223-662; 273 NW 155

Accidental death—proof of exact manner unnecessary. In an action at law by beneficiary to recover upon a policy of life insurance containing provision for an additional benefit in event of death of insured by accidental means, it is not necessary that beneficiary set up or prove any particular theory of the exact manner of the insured's accidental death.

Waddell v Ins. Co., 227-604; 288 NW 643

Discharge of firearms. Proof by an insurer that the insured was murdered by being shot by some unknown person does not establish the defense that a limited liability is provided by the policy if the insured is killed by the discharge of firearms and there is no actual witness to the transaction "except the insured himself", because such proof establishes that there was an eyewitness other than the insured, to wit, the assailant.

Carpenter v Trav. Assn., 213-1001; 240 NW 639

Death by accident (?) or suicide (?)—directed verdict. In an action on a policy of insurance covering death by accident but excluding liability in case of suicide, the court, in view of the legal presumption against suicide, cannot properly direct a verdict on the theory of suicide unless the record is such as to conclusively establish the fact of suicide.

Jovich v Benefit Assn., 221-945; 265 NW 632

Death following disease caused by injury. A physical injury to a person must, within the meaning of the ordinary accident insurance policy, be deemed the proximate cause of the death of said person, even tho said person actually dies of bronchial pneumonia, provided said disease was precipitated or caused by said physical injury. Evidence held to present jury question.

Dewey v Ins. Co., 218-1220; 257 NW 308

Death by accidental means. In a law action by beneficiary to recover for death of insured on a policy containing additional benefits for death resulting from accidental means, the defendant insurer complaining that the court erred in submitting to the jury the question of whether or not plaintiff had successfully carried her burden of proof that death resulted from accidental means, held, there being circumstantial evidence tending to establish that the discharge of a gun was accidental, creating a presumption having probative value in favor of the theory of accident, the question was properly submitted to the jury.

Waddell v Ins. Co., 227-604; 288 NW 643

Parachute jump—"in aerial conveyance"—not covered by policy.

Richardson v Trav. Assn., 228- ; 291 NW 408

Inhaling "gas"—scope of term. An unambiguous policy provision which exempts the insurer from liability when death ensues from inhaling "any gas" embraces a death from inhaling a combination or collection of gases as well as death from inhaling a single gas.

Lamar v Traveling Men, 216-371; 249 NW 149; 92 ALR 159

"Immediate" disablement. A policy of accident insurance which provides for a death loss only when the accident "immediately, continuously, and wholly disables the insured from the date of the accident" does not cover a loss for death where the insured, after being injured, continued to perform the usual and ordinary labors of his occupation for some twenty days, before total disablement took place as a result of the accidental injury.

Walters v Acc. Assn., 208-894; 224 NW 494

Disablement of automobile—condition constituting. Insurance against accidental loss of life from “disablement” of an automobile embraces such loss consequent on the carburetor of the car being in such defective condition that gas is ignited from the engine, and forced into the cab, with fatal results to the operator of the car.

Thomas v Ins. Co., 223-761; 273 NW 862

“Freight” elevator as “passenger” elevator. Under a policy of insurance providing double indemnity for death while the insured is “a passenger within a passenger elevator”, a jury question may arise whether an ordinary freight elevator may not also be a passenger elevator within the meaning of the policy and in view of the use of said elevator for the carrying of passengers.

Boles v Ins. Co., 219-178; 257 NW 386; 96 ALR 1400

Contractor as passenger. On the question whether an insured under an accident insurance policy was a “passenger” in an elevator at the time of his death, the fact that he was an independent contractor of the work then being carried on is quite immaterial.

Boles v Ins. Co., 219-178; 257 NW 386; 96 ALR 1400

“Passenger”—construction of term. Principle recognized and reasserted that there is a vast difference between the facts which constitute a person a passenger in a common carrier conveyance and what facts constitute a person a passenger on an ordinary elevator.

Boles v Ins. Co., 219-178; 257 NW 386; 96 ALR 1400

“Riding in” or “driving” automobile—proof—sufficiency. On the issue (under an insurance policy) whether an insured died while “riding in”, or while “driving” an automobile, no recovery can be had on proof only that the insured, shortly after he was expecting to start on a journey, was found dead in his securely closed garage and in his automobile (the engine of which had manifestly been very recently running) and behind the steering wheel, with the left front door partly open, and his left foot resting on the running board and his right foot near the accelerator; and especially is this true when the attending circumstances clearly indicate that before the car could be put into actual motion other acts must be done which would necessitate the absence of the deceased from the car.

Mould v Cas. Co., 219-16; 257 NW 349

Equivocal provision. A policy of insurance is equivocal in providing for double indemnity if the insured dies while “a passenger within a passenger elevator” because the term “elevator” may mean:

1. The platform or cage on which or in which the passenger rides, or

2. The entire structure, including the cage or platform, hoisting machinery and shaft in which the cage or platform operates.

The insurer being responsible for this equivocation, that construction must prevail which is most favorable to the insured. Held, therefore, that the insured was “a passenger within a passenger elevator” when, intending to be a passenger, he stepped into the elevator shaft and was killed.

Boles v Ins. Co., 219-178; 257 NW 386; 96 ALR 1400

Directed verdict—war of expert testimony. Whether a death resulted from an accident “independent of all other causes” is necessarily a jury question under a war of conflicting and contradictory expert testimony.

Martin v Life Co., 216-1022; 250 NW 220

Finding by court—conclusiveness. The finding of the court in a trial to the court on supporting evidence on the issue whether an insured died “solely through external, violent, and accidental means” or from disease, is conclusive on the appellate court. And it is immaterial that the court determines its findings by sustaining a motion to dismiss at the close of all the evidence or by overruling such motion and later dismissing the action on its own motion.

Cherokee v Ins. Co., 215-1000; 247 NW 495

Forfeiture of policy—violation of law as sole or proximate cause of death. A policy of accident insurance which provides, in effect, that it does not cover or embrace loss “resulting from or in consequence of” any act of the insured’s while engaged in any violation of law, does not justify an instruction to the effect that the violation of law must be the sole cause of the loss. Proximate cause, not sole cause, is the legal test.

Whyte v Cas. Co., 209-917; 227 NW 518

Mending hold. Answer reviewed in an action for recovery of double benefits on a life insurance policy, and held not stricken on motion on the alleged ground that defendant was thereby changing his defensive position after action had been brought on the policy.

Wenger v Assur. Soc., 222-1269; 271 NW 220

(c) DISEASE

Death following disease caused by injury. A physical injury to a person must, within the meaning of the ordinary accident insurance policy, be deemed the proximate cause of the death of said person, even tho said person actually dies of bronchial pneumonia, provided said disease was precipitated or caused by said physical injury. Evidence held to present jury question.

Dewey v Ins. Co., 218-1220; 257 NW 308

X CAUSES OF DEATH AS AFFECTING RECOVERY—concluded(d) SUICIDE

Certificate of death—admissibility. In an action to recover on a policy of insurance, a certificate of death of the insured, tho duly and legally executed by a coroner, is inadmissible as evidence insofar as said certificate assumes to state the cause of death as "suicide by hanging", said stated cause of death being simply the opinion or conclusion of the coroner and not a statement of fact.

Morton v Ins. Co., 218-846; 254 NW 325; 96 ALR 315

Directed verdict. An insurer is not entitled to a directed verdict on its defensive plea of suicide unless the facts and circumstances preclude every reasonable hypothesis except that of suicide. Evidence held insufficient to overcome presumption of nonsuicide.

Wilkinson v Life Assn., 203-960; 211 NW 238

Accidental death—presumption against suicide. Under a policy providing for additional payment in case of death from accidental means, the beneficiary has burden of showing that insured shot himself accidentally, which need not be proved by direct evidence, but may be proved by proper inferences and presumptions from facts, and the beneficiary is aided in carrying this burden of proof by the presumption that death was not the result of suicide. Such presumption, however, is a rebuttable one and ordinarily a question of fact to be determined by the jury. So where evidence on a fact matter is of such character that reasonable men, in an impartial and fair exercise of their judgment, may honestly reach different conclusions, the question was properly held for the jury.

Mutual Ins. v Hatten, 17 F 2d, 889

Presumption as basis of jury question. The common law presumption that a death was not a suicide does not necessarily create a jury question, because the presumption may be wholly negated by the attending facts and circumstances.

Warner v Ins. Co., 219-916; 258 NW 75

Death by accident (?) or suicide (?)—directed verdict. In an action on a policy of insurance covering death by accident but excluding liability in case of suicide, the court, in view of the legal presumption against suicide, cannot properly direct a verdict on the theory of suicide unless the record is such as to conclusively establish the fact of suicide.

Jovich v Benefit Assn., 221-945; 265 NW 632

Evidence of suicide as affirmative defense. In a law action by a beneficiary to recover for the death of the insured on a policy containing additional benefits on account of accidental death, to which defendant insurer pleaded an affirmative defense of suicide and at the close of testimony moved for a directed verdict in favor of plaintiff beneficiary for amount of premiums paid, such motion was properly overruled where the question decided was that the results of insured's own actions, as reconstructed from the circumstances and surroundings, may have been intentional or may have been accidental, the evidence not being of such weight as to make it appear conclusively on the whole record that insured died by suicide.

Waddell v Ins. Co., 227-604; 288 NW 643

XI ADJUSTMENT, SETTLEMENT, PAYMENT AND DISCHARGE OF LOSS

Discussion. See 21 ILR 642—Undue influence to secure release

Application—failure to attach—burden of proof. In an action, not on a policy of insurance, but for damages consequent on an alleged fraud-induced contract of settlement of the amount due on the policy, the burden of proof to show that the application for the insurance was not attached to or indorsed on the policy is on the insured when he pleads that the insurer may not avail itself of representations contained in the application.

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156; 237 NW 886

Change of occupation—self-adjusting benefit provisions—effect. Where a policy of accident insurance which has lapsed because of the nonpayment of premiums is self-adjusting as regards death benefits in case death occurs while the insured is pursuing an occupation which is more hazardous than the one specified in the policy, such self-adjusting provisions are in no manner changed by the act of the insurer in reinstating the policy by accepting and retaining the past-due premium with full knowledge that the insured was then pursuing a more hazardous occupation than the one specified in the policy. Especially is this true if a contrary construction would result in a discrimination between policyholders, which is prohibited by statute.

Stephan v Ins. Co., 209-576; 221 NW 57

Compromise and settlement—fraud. Evidence reviewed on the issue of fraud in the settlement of the amount due under a life insurance policy and held to present a jury question.

Colver v Assur. Co., 220-407; 262 NW 791

Executory contracts—bona fide dispute. A policy of life insurance may, prior to the death of the insured, be validly compromised, settled, and released irrespective of the existence or nonexistence of any bona fide dispute or controversy between the parties. After the death of the insured, the rule is otherwise.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Impeachment—burden of proof. He who seeks to avoid a duly proven compromise, settlement and release must establish:

1. That the release was procured by fraud, or

2. That the contention or claim on which the compromise and settlement was based was wholly unfounded, and, therefore, could not support a compromise and settlement.

Evidence reviewed and held wholly insufficient to impeach a compromise and settlement of liability under a policy of life insurance.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Medical examination—effect. There may be a valid compromise and settlement of liability under a life insurance policy, prior to the death of the insured, even tho the policy was issued on a medical examination made by the insurer.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Right to deduct unpaid annual premium. An insurer has the right, when discharging his liability under a policy of life insurance, to deduct the amount of one full annual premium, even tho, when the insured died, only the first quarterly installment of the premium for the insurance year was due, the policy providing for such deduction and in addition providing that all premiums for an insurance year were due and payable in advance, with option to pay quarterly.

Andrews v Ins. Co., 220-719; 263 NW 255

XII ACTIONS ON POLICIES

Assignee of policy—venue. The assignee of a fractional interest in a life insurance policy may, in conjunction with the original beneficiary (who retains the remaining fractional interest), maintain an action on the policy in the county of which the assignee is a resident, even tho said county is not the county of which the original beneficiary is a resident.

Welch v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

Enjoining action in foreign state. A defendant who is a resident of this state may, even after he has filed formal answer, enjoin a plaintiff who is a resident of this state from maintaining in a foreign state an action on a contract arising in this state, when said action is sought to be maintained for the purpose of vexatiously harassing the defendant and subjecting him to unnecessary costs, part of which are untaxable as costs.

Bankers Life v Loring, 217-534; 250 NW 8

Right to interpleader. The pre-code, equitable action of "Interpleader" is available to an insurer who is faced by different, mutually hostile claimants to the amount due under the policy, which amount the insurer admits less deduction provided by the policy. And said insurer will be entitled to an injunction restraining the institution or further prosecution against him of separate actions on the policy by said warring parties.

Equitable v Johnston, 222-687; 269 NW 767; 108 ALR 257

Delivery date—evidence. In an action to recover on a life policy of a daughter, an exhibit showing that a son's policy was delivered on September 14 was admissible to contradict testimony of father and mother that the daughter's policy was delivered August 23, and that son's policy was delivered previously.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Delivery date of policy—other evidence competent. In an action on a life policy to which insurance company pleads a general denial and further pleads a release and settlement wherein the delivery date of the policy is in dispute, and the insurance company assigns, as error, the exclusion of testimony of an officer of the company concerning underwriting practices of the company and a letter written by the company to its agent, upon which the agent's reply was indorsed, concerning the date of delivery of the policy, such evidence should have been admitted, and was competent to show that the company honestly believed it had a defense to the policy and explained why the company had the right to rely upon the date appearing upon the receipt for the policy.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Unlicensed agent—noneffect on insurer—statements regarding effective date of policy. Where an accident policy is to become effective at 12 o'clock noon on date of delivery to insured, the application having been made on August 24, 1937, providing (1) it should not bind insurer until accepted nor (2) until policy was accepted by insured, while in good health and free from injury, and where policy, issued September 17, was delivered to insured September 22, while insured was in hospital as result of injuries sustained on August 26, insured could not recover on policy notwithstanding insurance agent's statement to insured that policy would be effective August 26. The fact that agent was unlicensed did not thereby make him a general agent of the insurer, the burden of proving which would be on insured. While an unlicensed agent may be criminally punished, this does not enlarge his authority to bind insurer.

Rainsbarger v Acc. Assn., 227-1076; 289 NW 908

Application attached to policy—illegibly reduced photo copy—not "true copy". In action on life policies, where defense was based on false representations in application for policy, and it is shown original application is plainly printed in legible letters of fair size, while copy furnished and attached to policy is so reduced in size and so dim or blurred that it can only be read by persons with normal vision by use of a strong magnifying glass,

XII ACTIONS ON POLICIES—continued
the statute requiring “true copy” of application to be attached to policy is not complied with, and the submission of question to the jury as to legibility under an instruction that a true copy must be readable was not erroneous.

New York Ins. v Miller, 73 F 2d, 350

Directed verdict for insurer. In an action on a fraternal life insurance policy, when evidence did not show complete payment of premiums, and there was no waiver of terms of the policy providing for lapse for nonpayment of premiums, nor reinstatement after lapse of the policy, a motion for a directed verdict for the insurer should have been sustained.

Craddock v Fidelity Life, 226-744; 285 NW 169

Suicide—directed verdict. An insurer is not entitled to a directed verdict on its defensive plea of suicide unless the facts and circumstances preclude every reasonable hypothesis except that of suicide. Evidence held insufficient to overcome presumption of nonsuicide.

Wilkinson v Life Assn., 203-960; 211 NW 238

Fraud and false warranty—evidence—insufficiency to generate jury question. An insurer who, in an action on a policy of insurance, presents the intermingled defense of fraud and false warranty has the burden to establish such defense. Evidence reviewed, and held to present no jury question on such issue.

Post v Grand Lodge, 211-786; 232 NW 140

Fraud in securing release—burden of proof. In an action on a life policy where the insurance company pleads a release, the burden of proof is on the company to show the execution and delivery of the release and payment of amount due thereunder, and where failure of consideration or fraud is alleged in obtaining the release, the burden of proof is on the party making the allegation, so where the court excluded such a release from evidence on account of insurance company's failure to establish consideration for the execution of such release, it placed a burden on the company which the company should not have been required to sustain, and the ruling was clearly erroneous.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Future payments—total disability. In action on life insurance policy for total disability payments, where supreme court ordered insurance company in prior case decided in 1931 to pay annual benefits up to that time, the decision of the trial court in a subsequent action on the same policy ordering payments up to 1937 and thereafter, was erroneous as to that part requiring future payments, particularly since opinion in first appeal is binding not only under the doctrine of stare decisis, but also under the rule of res adjudicata, when the first opinion held that “continuance of such disability must be established by later proofs”.

Kurth v Ins. Co., 227-242; 288 NW 90

Liability of insurer—total and permanent disability. A policy which provides for compensation, only in the event of total and permanent disability, necessarily excludes compensation for a disability which is total for the time being but not permanent.

Petersen v Ins. Co., 217-1122; 253 NW 63

Negligence—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed in an action for damages consequent on the alleged negligence of an insurer in passing on, prior to the death of the applicant, an application for industrial insurance, and held quite insufficient to establish such negligence.

Winn v Ins. Co., 216-1249; 250 NW 459

Negligence in passing on application. In an action for damages consequent on the alleged negligence of an insurer in passing on an application for insurance, the plaintiff must fail, irrespective of his evidence of negligence, unless he establishes, to the extent of furnishing a measure for his damages, the substance of the contract which he was prevented from entering into.

Winn v Ins. Co., 216-1249; 250 NW 459

Proof of loss—contract limitation—validity. An agreement in a policy of insurance against total and permanent disability, specifically providing that all claim shall be forfeited if proof of such disability is not furnished the insurer “within 90 days after the happening of the total and permanent disability,” is valid and enforceable, such time limit being more favorable to the insured than the statutory limit.

Fairgrave v Life Assn., 211-329; 233 NW 714

Proof of loss—extent and sufficiency under “permanent disability” clause. A policy of insurance which, inter alia, provides for indemnity “if the insured shall furnish satisfactory proof that he has been wholly disabled * * * for a period of not less than 60 days, and that such disability is presumably permanent, and that he will be wholly and continuously prevented thereby from pursuing any gainful occupation” does not require the proofs for initial indemnity to show that the disability is and will remain absolutely permanent and continuous.

Kurth v Ins. Co., 211-736; 234 NW 201

Risks and causes of loss—violation of law. Proof that an insured, at the time of his death, was riding in a railroad freight car reveals no violation of a statute against “climbing upon or holding to” a moving railroad freight car.

Ragan v Ins. Co., 209-1075; 229 NW 702

Time of lapse—construction—reformation.

Wall v Ins. Co., 228- ; 239 NW 901

Service on foreign insurer—physician not agent. An Iowa accident insurance association which has not been licensed to transact its business in a foreign state (in which it has neither office, agent nor property), and whose certificates of insurance are strictly Iowa contracts, cannot be deemed to have subjected itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of such foreign state (1) because a very large number of its certificate holders reside in said foreign state, or (2) because said association, from time to time and by mail from its Iowa office, requests a physician in said foreign state to there examine claimants and to report as to accidental injuries received by claimants,—it appearing that said physician was under no contract obligation to comply with said requests and to make such examinations tho he had done so for several years and had received a stated fee for each separate examination.

Held, the foreign court, in an action on a certificate, acquired no jurisdiction under process served on said physician.

Saunders v Trav. Assn., 222-969; 270 NW 407

CHAPTER 402

FRATERNAL BENEFICIARY SOCIETIES, ORDERS, OR ASSOCIATIONS

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 146

GENERAL PROVISIONS

8777 Definition.

"Homestead" as lodge—Brotherhood of American Yeomen. Where the Brotherhood of American Yeomen used the word "homestead" to denote a local lodge, had no capital stock, no dividends from earnings, and established a home for orphans of members, held to be a fraternal beneficiary association.

Yeomen Ins. v Murphy, 223-1315; 275 NW 127

Violations of statutory requirements—non-effect on organizational character—premium tax. A fraternal beneficiary association organized under this chapter "not for profit" is not subject to a tax on gross premiums under §7025, C., '35, even tho such association does accumulate a surplus and a profit. Violations of this chapter by any such association are punishable as provided but such offenses do not change its organizational character.

Lutheran Soc. v Murphy, 223-1151; 274 NW 907

Homesteaders Life v Murphy, 224-173; 275 NW 146

Gross premium tax inapplicable. Fraternal benefit societies doing business in this state including one organized under foreign nation are not subject to gross premium tax levied on foreign insurance companies, in view of executive and departmental construction of taxing statute and acquiesced in by legislature.

State v Ind. Foresters, 226-1339; 286 NW 425

Certificates—not taxable after reorganization. A fraternal beneficiary association may reorganize into an old line company, but the amounts the new organization collects under the original certificates, which it has assumed, are not taxable under the gross premium tax provision of §7025, C., '35.

Yeomen Ins. v Murphy, 223-1315; 275 NW 127

Manager's promise—association not bound.

A personal promise by the district manager of a fraternal benefit association that he would take care of premiums on the life policy of a member of the society was not binding on the association and did not excuse the failure of the insured to pay such premiums.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Automatic suspension of members. A provision in a policy of fraternal insurance that the insured member "shall stand suspended" in case he, in effect, violates a specified policy agreement, is self-executing. Such violation automatically works a suspension of membership without further action on the part of the association.

Smith v Bagmen Fund, 222-958; 270 NW 13

Nonpayment of premiums—automatic suspension. When fraternal beneficiary association bylaws, which were part of a policy of insurance, provide that on failure to pay monthly premiums the policy shall "be and stand suspended" without notice or action by the association, the failure to pay premiums works an automatic suspension of the policy.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Violation of membership agreement. No recovery can be had on the life policy of a benefit association when the insured has violated his agreement in his application for the policy and in the policy itself to continuously maintain his membership in a named other association.

Smith v Bagmen Fund, 222-958; 270 NW 13

Suspension from membership—validity. The members of a fraternal insurance association are bound by the method provided in the articles of incorporation and bylaws for the suspension of the membership of the members. Record reviewed and held to show a proper suspension for nonpayment of dues.

Smith v Bagmen Fund, 222-958; 270 NW 13

Lapse of policy waived by accepting premiums. Provisions of a policy and the bylaws of a fraternal insurance association that the policy shall lapse if premiums are not paid on time, are for the benefit of the association and may be waived by the acceptance of further premiums after the insured has defaulted in his payments.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Forfeiture—nonwaiver by accepting premiums. A fraternal insurance association by accepting premiums due on a forfeited policy does not waive its right to plead the forfeiture when, at the time of accepting said premiums, it had no knowledge of said acts of forfeiture.

Smith v Bagmen Fund, 222-958; 270 NW 13

Lapsed policy—reinstatement—pleading and proof. When a fraternal life insurance policy had lapsed for nonpayment of premiums and there was no waiver of the lapse by the company, there could be no recovery on the policy without both pleading and proving that it had been reinstated.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Mistake in date of lapse. When the terms of a fraternal life insurance policy provided for ipso facto suspension of the policy for failure to pay dues timely, a mistake of one or two months by the association in naming the date when lapse occurred because of nonpayment, did not waive the provisions and estop the insurer from asserting the lapse.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Actions on policies—shifting defense not permitted. An insurance company which asserts a specific defense which it has to a claim on a policy, and has knowledge of another defense, will not be permitted thereafter to shift its ground and assert the other defense after expense of suit has been incurred.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Action on life policy—directed verdict for insurer. In an action on a fraternal life insurance policy when evidence did not show complete payment of premiums and there was no waiver of terms of the policy providing for lapse for nonpayment of premiums, nor reinstatement after lapse of the policy, a motion for a directed verdict for the insurer should have been sustained.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Limitation of action. Section 8774, C., '24, which nullifies the provisions of a policy or contract of insurance insofar as it limits the time to less than one year in which notice or proofs of death or the occurrence of other contingency may be given, is not applicable to a certificate of insurance issued by a fraternal beneficiary association under this section.

Peters v Order, 203-428; 212 NW 576

Right to proceeds—change of beneficiary. The original beneficiary, interpleaded in an action on a fraternal insurance policy, acquires no vested interest in benefit as against the subsequent beneficiary designated as such in accordance with bylaws of insurer and statute of this state, notwithstanding insured member's agreement with such original beneficiary that she should remain beneficiary.

Kohler v Kohler, 104 F 2d, 38

8778 Death, sick, and disability benefits.

Insurance premiums accepted by lodge. When a grand lodge accepted insurance premiums from a member, leading him to believe that he would receive death benefits, the grand lodge was estopped to deny the effects of its acts.

Phillips v Brotherhood Ry. Clerks, 226-864; 285 NW 159

Secretary of local lodge as agent of grand lodge in collecting premiums. A secretary of a local lodge who accepted insurance premiums from a lodge member who was ill during a time when dues were suspended because of the illness, and forwarded the full amount of dues and premium to the grand lodge without informing it of the illness, acted as agent of the grand lodge, charging it with acceptance of the premiums, with knowledge of the illness, and with knowledge that the member had not applied for membership in the lodge's "death benefit department".

Phillips v Brotherhood Ry. Clerks, 226-864; 285 NW 159

Nonextension of term. A certificate or policy of insurance in a fraternal association, providing for benefits in case death occurs prior to the insured's attaining the age of sixty years, cannot be deemed extended beyond the contracted termination date, because of the fact that the association had received a premium for the full year during which the insured attained the age of sixty years, it appearing that the excess part of said premium had been duly tendered back.

Pierce v Life Assn., 223-211; 272 NW 543

Limited term insurance—burden of proof. In an action on a fraternal, beneficiary certificate which promises benefits in case of death, "provided death occurs prior to the member attaining the age of sixty years", plaintiff must plead and prove, as a condition precedent to any recovery, that the insured had not attained the age of sixty years at the time of death.

Pierce v Life Assn., 223-211; 272 NW 543

Policy limitation on actions not condition precedent. An insurance certificate issued by a mutual benefit society, containing a statement, that any action thereon shall be barred unless commenced within 6 months from final rejection of the claim by the highest tribunal of the brotherhood, is purely a clause of limitation and not a condition precedent to commencing action.

Duncan v Brotherhood, 225-539; 281 NW 121

Mutual benefit—"applicant" in constitution not equivalent to "beneficiary". In a fraternal insurance association's constitution, incorporated by reference in its beneficiary certificate, the word "applicant", when used in a paragraph limiting such applicant's right to sue after disapproval of a claim without first exhausting his remedy of appeal to the highest tribunal of the brotherhood, construed as not equivalent to the word "beneficiary".

Duncan v Brotherhood, 225-539; 281 NW 121

Actions on policies—failure of lodge member to apply for death benefits as defense. In an action to collect death benefits, a lodge which maintained a death benefit department into which lodge members were admitted on written application, but collected insurance premiums as well as dues from all members whether or not they had made such application, was entitled to use the defense of failure to apply for membership in the department in the absence of avoidance of the defense by the plaintiff.

Phillips v Brotherhood Ry. Clerks, 226-864; 285 NW 159

8780 Sick and funeral benefits only.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 205

8781 Certificates permitted.

Additional annotations. See under §8688

Presumption attending possession of policy. Possession by an insured, at the time of his death, of a policy of life or accident insurance creates a presumption, born of necessity and based on the experience of mankind, that the policy was delivered to the insured as an effective instrument; and this presumption prevails until the court can say, as a matter of law, that the presumption has been conclusively negated by other evidence.

Beggs v Ins. Co., 219-24; 257 NW 445; 95 ALR 863

Dues—payment to authorized agent. The requirement of a certificate of insurance, that premium dues shall be paid to a named officer of the local camp, is not a limitation on the insured's right to pay to some other officer who has been authorized by the association to receive such dues.

Forrest v Sovereign Camp, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Dues—application of payments—right of debtor to control. An insured in paying his premium dues to an officer authorized to receive them may direct that the money be applied on said dues, and arbitrarily enforce such direction.

Forrest v Sovereign Camp, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Premiums on life policy—nonpayment—automatic suspension. When fraternal beneficiary association bylaws, which were part of a policy of insurance, provide that on failure to pay monthly premiums the policy shall "be and stand suspended" without notice or action by the association, the failure to pay premiums works an automatic suspension of the policy.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Lapse of policy waived by accepting premiums. Provisions of a policy and the bylaws of a fraternal insurance association that the policy shall lapse if premiums are not paid on time, are for the benefit of the association and may be waived by the acceptance of further premiums after the insured has defaulted in his payments.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Mistake in stating date of lapse—no estoppel. When the terms of a fraternal life insurance policy provided for ipso facto suspension of the policy for failure to pay dues timely, a mistake of one or two months by the association in naming the date when lapse occurred because of nonpayment, did not waive the provisions and estop the insurer from asserting the lapse.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

"Legal reserve" not available to carry certificate after failure to pay assessments. The statutory "legal reserve" on a fraternal beneficiary certificate of insurance is not available for carrying the certificate past forfeiture consequent on the nonpayment of assessment and dues.

Plumley v Ins. Co., 210-1104; 229 NW 727

Mutual benefit—"applicant" in constitution not equivalent to "beneficiary". In a fraternal insurance association's constitution, incorporated by reference in its beneficiary certificate, the word "applicant", when used in a paragraph limiting such applicant's right to sue after disapproval of a claim without first exhausting his remedy of appeal to the highest tribunal of the brotherhood, construed as not equivalent to the word "beneficiary".

Duncan v Brotherhood, 225-539; 281 NW 121

Evidentiary effect of disappearance—validity. An agreement in a mutual benefit insurance certificate to the effect that the unexplained disappearance or long continued absence of the insured from his family or place of residence, shall not be regarded as evidence of the death of the insured, or of any right to recover under the certificate, until after the expiration of the life expectancy of the insured, is reasonable, valid, and binding on the beneficiary.

Lunt v Grand Lodge, 209-1138; 229 NW 323

Findings of fraud—conclusiveness. Supported findings by the court of material facts, in a law action submitted to the court under a waiver of jury, are as conclusive as like findings by the jury. So held as to findings relative to fraud and misrepresentation in obtaining a policy of life insurance.

Bukowski v Security Assn., 221-416; 265 NW 132

8782 Benefits.

Exercise of option—effect. Where the insured in a fraternal beneficiary policy of insurance is limited to the exercise of one of several options, and elects to take the option known as "loan value", and thereafter is automatically suspended because of the nonpayment of assessment and dues, the beneficiary may not claim that the policy was kept in force under another option which the insured might have elected to take.

Plumley v Ins. Co., 210-1104; 229 NW 727

8784 Assessments.

Additional annotations. See under §8693

Prompt payment of dues—waiver. The contract right of an insurer to demand prompt payment of dues and to avail himself of an automatic suspension of the insured in case such payment is not made, is waived by habitually accepting such dues after the insured has become delinquent in making payment.

Clark v Council, 200-699; 205 NW 355

Nonpayment—automatic suspension. When fraternal beneficiary association bylaws, which were part of a policy of insurance, provide that on failure to pay monthly premiums the policy shall "be and stand suspended" without notice or action by the association, the failure to pay premiums works an automatic suspension of the policy.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Nonpayment—automatic forfeiture—non-avoidance. A policy or certificate holder in a fraternal insurance society who, at different times, and in violation of his contract of insurance, has escaped an automatic forfeiture of his policy by having his policy dues or assessments paid and accepted after they were wholly delinquent, must comply with a due and timely notice from the society that said practice will no longer be tolerated and that said dues and assessments must be paid strictly within the time provided by the policy contract.

If he does not so comply, and dies while in arrears, his beneficiary will not be permitted to avoid the automatic forfeiture of the policy by a then tender of the dues.

Wry v Modern Woodmen, 222-1179; 271 NW 300

Acceptance of premiums—waiver of insurance application. A lodge which collected insurance premiums from all members but required a written application for admission into its death benefit department waived the requirement for such application by repeated acceptance of monthly premiums from a member.

Phillips v Brotherhood Ry. Clerks, 226-864; 285 NW 159

Payment in disregard of contract—waiver. A provision in the constitution and bylaws of an insurer to the effect that the failure of the insured, for three months, to pay the required monthly dues shall, without notice, automatically terminate his membership and deprive him of all benefits must be deemed to have been waived in favor of an insured who, for many years and up to the time of his death, fully paid his dues, but not in accordance with said constitutional requirement,—the insurer necessarily having knowledge of said method of payment, and having accepted and retained said payments without objection.

Sawyer v Iowa Conference, 220-806; 263 NW 236

Lapse of policy waived by accepting premiums. Provisions of a policy and the bylaws of a fraternal insurance association that the policy shall lapse if premiums are not paid on time, are for the benefit of the association and may be waived by the acceptance of further premiums after the insured has defaulted in his payments.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Mistake in date of lapse—no estoppel. When the terms of a fraternal life insurance policy provided for ipso facto suspension of the policy for failure to pay dues timely, a mistake of one or two months by the association in naming the date when lapse occurred because of nonpayment, did not waive the provisions and estop the insurer from asserting the lapse.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Unpaid dividends and advance interest on loan not available to avoid forfeiture. Unpaid dividends on a fraternal certificate of insurance, and interest paid in advance on a loan on the certificate are not available to carry the certificate past a forfeiture consequent on the nonpayment of assessments.

Plumley v Ins. Co., 210-1104; 229 NW 727

"Arrearages" not available to carry certificate after failure to pay assessments. Arrearages in assessments paid by a suspended insured in a fraternal certificate of insurance in order to effect a reinstatement, even though such assessments covered a period when the certificate was wholly suspended, are not available for carrying the certificate past a subsequent forfeiture consequent on the nonpayment of assessments.

Plumley v Ins. Co., 210-1104; 229 NW 727

Ineffective payment of assessment. The payment of an assessment on a fraternal certificate of insurance does not avoid a forfeiture of the certificate when the assessment was paid on an application for reinstatement which was not granted, the insured then being on her death bed, and the bylaws providing there could be no reinstatement unless the insured was in good health.

Plumley v Ins. Co., 210-1104; 229 NW 727

Reinstatement of member on payment of arrearages. A fraternal beneficiary insurance association may validly provide, by bylaw, that the reinstatement of a suspended member shall be conditioned upon payment of all arrearages in assessments and dues, even though such assessments and dues cover a period when the certificate was wholly suspended.

Plumley v Ins. Co., 210-1104; 229 NW 727

8789.2 Beneficiaries—vested interest.

Right to change. The insured in a policy of life insurance, who has the right, under the policy, to change the beneficiary, does not deprive himself of said right by delivering the policy to the beneficiary therein named accompanied by the statement or assurance that he is thereby making a "gift" to said named beneficiary, such policy not being the subject matter of a completed gift inasmuch as it simply proffers an expectancy, and an expectancy does not constitute property.

Penn Ins. v Mulvaney, 221-925; 265 NW 889

Changing beneficiary—complying with certificate—necessity. A change of beneficiary on a fraternal benefit society certificate, executed by insured on the day of her death, delivered to an attorney and kept until the next day, then delivered to the company's agent and forwarded to the company, not being in compliance with the certificate requirement, was ineffective.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Changing beneficiary where policy silent. Where a benefit certificate is silent as to the manner of change, such change of beneficiary may be effected in any manner clearly indicating insured's intention.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Changing beneficiary—mere "clear intention" ineffectual. Insured's actions merely indicating a "clear intention to change the beneficiary" are not sufficient. Required acts to effect a change are neither directory nor ministerial but essential, subject only to equitable exceptions.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Changing beneficiary—effect of death. Death vests interests in insurance, and the method provided in a benefit certificate to change a beneficiary during lifetime of insured is exclusive, except (1) where the company has waived strict compliance and issued a new certificate, (2) where it is beyond the power of insured to comply literally, equity will consider the change made, and (3) where insured has performed all necessary prerequisites, but dies before a new certificate is actually issued. Held in instant case beneficiary change not accomplished.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Change of beneficiaries by will. A policy method of changing beneficiaries under life insurance policies is admittedly exclusive; but a testamentary bequest of the proceeds of such policies, payable to the estate of the insured or to his executors or administrators, does not constitute a "change of beneficiaries", but constitutes a disposal of that much of the estate left by the insured.

Miller v Miller, 200-1070; 205 NW 870; 43 ALR 567

Assignment as collateral—effect on beneficiary. Reservation in a policy of life insurance of right in the insured to change the beneficiary prevents the vesting, during the lifetime of the insured, of any interest in the designated beneficiary, and arms the insured with power to assign the policy as security for a pre-existing indebtedness, and it is quite immaterial whether the designated beneficiary joins or fails to join with the insured in said assignment.

Potter v Ins. Co., 216-799; 247 NW 669

Assignment of policy—estoppel. The beneficiary of a legal reserve life insurance policy who, without fraud, joins with the insured in an assignment of all right, title, and interest in the policy in order to collaterally secure a debt due from each of said assignors, is estopped, after the death of the insured, from asserting any interest in the policy except as the same may exceed the said secured indebtedness, it appearing that the policy reserved to the insured both the right to assign the policy and to change the beneficiary.

Andrew v Life Co., 214-573; 240 NW 215

Ineligible beneficiary—contract provision—effect. The rule of law that when the insured in a policy of life insurance makes a series of changes of beneficiary, and the last beneficiary is legally ineligible, the next preceding, designated, eligible beneficiary is entitled to the proceeds of the policy, does not apply when the policy, by bylaw or otherwise, distinctly provides who, in such circumstances, shall be entitled to the proceeds.

Farrens v Benefit Dept., 213-608; 239 NW 544

Mutual benefit—"applicant" in constitution not equivalent to "beneficiary". In a fraternal insurance association's constitution, incorporated by reference in its beneficiary certificate, the word "applicant", when used in a paragraph limiting such applicant's right to sue after disapproval of a claim without first exhausting his remedy of appeal to the highest tribunal of the brotherhood, construed as not equivalent to the word "beneficiary".

Duncan v Brotherhood, 225-539; 281 NW 121

Conclusiveness — insurance rights — beneficiaries not parties. A decree establishing rights to insurance does not adjudicate rights of a beneficiary not a party to the action.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

8792 Change in beneficiary notwithstanding contract.

Beneficiary — right to change. A contract between the insured and one of two beneficiaries in a fraternal policy of life insurance to the effect that said contracting beneficiary will pay the future accruing assessments, and that in consideration of such payments the insured will not make any change in said beneficiary, does not deprive the insured of his statutory right subsequently to change his beneficiary and exclude the contracting beneficiary from all benefit under the policy, even tho the excluded beneficiary has, for many years, paid the said assessments.

Sovereign Camp v Russell, 214-39; 241 NW 395

Change in beneficiary—justifiable and unjustifiable payment. An insurer who, in compliance with the policy-authorized demand of the insured, changes the beneficiary of a life insurance policy, and, on the death of the insured, makes full payment to said substituted beneficiary, must be deemed to have discharged the obligation of the policy, unless said insurer knew, or ought to have known, when payment was made, that, notwithstanding the provision of the policy authorizing a change of beneficiary, the first-named beneficiary had such interest or ownership in the policy as entitled him to receive said payment. Petition in equity held subject to motion to dismiss (equitable demurrer) because not sufficiently alleging such interest or ownership and the insurer's knowledge thereof.

Bennett v Ins. Co., 220-927; 263 NW 25

Agreement not to change—effect. The original beneficiary, interpleaded in an action on a fraternal insurance policy, acquires no vested interest in benefit as against the subsequent beneficiary designated as such in accordance with bylaws of insurer and statute of this state, notwithstanding insured member's agreement with such original beneficiary that she should remain beneficiary.

Kohler v Kohler, 104 F 2d, 38

Beneficiary with vested interest — change nonallowable. The named beneficiary in a policy of life insurance acquires a vested interest in the proceeds of said policy when said beneficiary is so named in consideration of an agreement on the part of said beneficiary, (1) to furnish life-support to her parents (which she thereafter performed), and (2) to act as trustee for the protection of an acknowledged interest of said parents in said proceeds; and said vested interest must prevail over the subsequently acquired interest of another person, especially when such latter interest is based on a past consideration and evidenced by no change in the policy, but by simply a manual delivery thereof.

Aetna Ins. v Morlan, 221-110; 264 NW 58

8793 Duty to attach copy of application.

Similar provisions. See under §§8772, 8974

Applicability. The duty of an insurer to attach to a beneficiary certificate a copy of the insured's application, or lose the right to plead fraudulent representations in the certificate or application, applies to a policy issued by a foreign beneficiary association, as well as to a domestic association.

Baldwin v Tribe, 203-198; 212 NW 562

Presumption. It will be presumed that a copy of the application for insurance was attached to the policy or certificate, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

Foley v Brotherhood, 203-39; 210 NW 585

8794 Failure to attach.

Similar provisions. See under §§8773, 8975, Vol I

Failure to attach—effect. An insurer who fails to attach to a beneficiary certificate of insurance a copy of the insured's application may not prove fraudulent representations in the application or certificate as a basis for the cancellation of the certificate.

Baldwin v Tribe, 203-198; 212 NW 562

Failure to attach—burden of proof. In an action, not on a policy of insurance, but for damages consequent on an alleged fraud-induced contract of settlement of the amount due on the policy, the burden of proof to show that the application for the insurance was not attached to or indorsed on the policy is on the insured when he pleads that the insurer may not avail itself of representations contained in the application.

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156; 237 NW 886

Misrepresentation—when unallowable as a defense. False and fraudulent representations on the part of an insured, in his original application for a policy of insurance, are not available as a defense to an action on the policy, when the policy provides that it is incontestable except as provided in named paragraphs which, on examination, reveal no grounds of contest whatever, but only matters of which the insurer could avail himself in the enforcement of the contract.

Wilson v Ins. Co., 220-321; 262 NW 525

Settlement—impeachment. A plaintiff who attacks a compromise settlement of the amount due under a policy of insurance on the ground that it was fraud induced has the burden to show that the representations inducing the settlement were knowingly false, and that he innocently relied thereon.

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156; 237 NW 886

8795 Where suable.

Contract remedies for collection—failure to comply with—fatal effect. The beneficiary (and his assignor), in a certificate of insurance of a mutual benefit association, is bound by the bylaws which provide that no resort shall be had to the courts to enforce payment of said certificate until said beneficiary has first exhausted the contract remedies provided by the bylaws for the allowance and payment of said claim.

Ater v Mutual Dept., 222-1390; 271 NW 517

8796 Exemption of proceeds.

Exemption of proceeds of other insurance. See under §§8776, 11919

Discussion. See 21 ILR 153—Property purchased with proceeds

Applicability to nonresidents. Exemption statutes are applicable to residents and nonresidents unless the benefits thereof are confined to residents.

Stark v Stark, 203-1261; 213 NW 235

Computation of amount of exemption. Where a widow as beneficiary in life insurance policies on her husband received some $11,200 and disposed of some $7,300 before any proceedings were commenced to subject said fund in excess of the $5,000 statutory exemption to the payment of a debt of the widow antedating the death of the husband, the said statutory exemption of $5,000 must be computed on the basis of the unexpended fund. In other words, her exemption cannot be deemed to be embraced within the $7,300 expenditure.

Booth v Propp, 214-208; 242 NW 60; 81 ALR 919

Funeral expenses nonallowable against insurance proceeds. Claims for funeral expenses consequent on the burial of the intestate deceased are not allowable against funds in the hands of the administrator when said funds constitute the proceeds of insurance on the life of deceased, the latter being survived by a minor son.

In re Galloway, 222-159; 269 NW 7

Proceeds payable to estate—trusteed for beneficiaries. Where a testator willed to his second wife, all of his property requiring legal transmission but made no mention of his life insurance, payable to his second wife if she survived him, otherwise to his estate; and, when testator's second wife predeceased him, then upon his death, his surviving children, being a daughter by his first marriage and a son by his second marriage, became entitled under the statute, to the proceeds of the insurance, and such proceeds passed into the hands of his personal representative or estate, only as a trust fund, to be distributed equally to such daughter and son.

In re Clemens, 226-31; 282 NW 730

8801 Commissioner as process agent.

Relevant annotations. See under §§8766, 8767

8808 Permit—fees.

Commissioner—power of suspension denied. The commissioner of insurance is not empowered to suspend the business of a fraternal beneficiary association for failure to comply with commissioner's order to pay a gross premium tax, such order being based on his interpretation of a statute in controversy.

Homesteaders Life v Murphy, 224-173; 275 NW 146

8812 Employment of agents.

Manager's promise to take care of premiums—association not bound. A personal promise by the district manager of a fraternal benefit association that he would take care of premiums on the life policy of a member of the society was not binding on the association and did not excuse the failure of the insured to pay such premiums.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

8816 Delinquency reported—injunction.

Violations of statutory requirements—effect. A fraternal beneficiary association organized under chapter 402, C., '35, "not for profit" is not subject to a tax on gross premiums under §7025, C., '35, even tho such association does accumulate a surplus and a profit. Violations of chapter 402 by any such association are punishable as provided but such offenses do not change its organizational character.

Exemptions—"accumulations and funds" of beneficiary association. The statutory exemption from taxation of the "accumulations and funds" of a fraternal beneficiary association does not embrace an exemption from taxation of lands acquired by such association through a mortgage foreclosure deed, even tho loan in question was made from the "funds" of the association.

Grand Lodge v Madigan, 207-24; 222 NW 545

Conspiracy—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to sustain a conviction for conspiracy to defraud a fraternal beneficiary society by making fraudulent loans of its funds.

State v Blackledge, 216-199; 243 NW 534

Conspiracy — evidence — nature and sufficiency. Conspiracy may be established by circumstantial evidence only. Evidence held sufficient to support a verdict of guilt of conspiracy to defraud a fraternal beneficiary society of its funds.

State v Lowenberg, 216-222; 243 NW 538

BENEFITS ON LIVES OF CHILDREN

8845 No vested interest in new certificate.

Additional annotations. See under §§8789.2, 8792

Right to change beneficiary. The insured in a policy of life insurance, who has the right, under the policy, to change the beneficiary, does not deprive himself of said right by delivering the policy to the beneficiary therein named accompanied by the statement or assurance that he is thereby making a "gift" to said named beneficiary, such policy not being the subject matter of a completed gift inasmuch as it simply proffers an expectancy, and an expectancy does not constitute property.

Penn Ins. v Mulvaney, 221-925; 265 NW 889

Assignment of policy as collateral—effect on beneficiary. Reservation in a policy of life insurance of right in the insured to change the beneficiary prevents the vesting, during the lifetime of the insured, of any interest in the designated beneficiary, and arms the insured with power to assign the policy as security for a pre-existing indebtedness, and it is quite immaterial whether the designated beneficiary joins or fails to join with the insured in said assignment.

Potter v Ins. Co., 216-799; 247 NW 669

8880 Conditions precedent.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 79

8881 Effect of reorganization—officers.

Certificates—not taxable after reorganization. A fraternal beneficiary association may reorganize into an old line company, but the amounts the new organization collects under the original certificates, which it has assumed, are not taxable under the gross premium tax provision of §7025, C., '35.

Yeomen Ins. v Murphy, 223-1315; 275 NW 127

EXAMINATION AND RECEIVERSHIP

8888 Revocation or suspension of authority—action by attorney general.

Commissioner—power of suspension denied. The commissioner of insurance is not empowered to suspend the business of a fraternal beneficiary association for failure to comply with commissioner's order to pay a gross premium tax, such order being based on his interpretation of a statute in controversy.

Homesteaders Life v Murphy, 224-173; 275 NW 146

CHAPTER 404

INSURANCE OTHER THAN LIFE

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 86, 220, 285; '36 AG Op 115

8896 Incorporation.

Policyholder as creditor. The policyholders of an insurance company organized on the stock plan are "creditors" of the corporation from the date of their policies, within the meaning of the legal principle that an unlawful dissipation of the funds of the corporation is constructively fraudulent as to existing creditors.

Hoyt v Hampe, 206-206; 214 NW 718; 220 NW 45

8907 Membership in mutuals.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 42; '36 AG Op 115

8909 Maximum premium.

Contract basis for recovery. In an action by an insurer to recover of the insured premiums under a policy indemnifying the insured against injury to his workmen, there is a total failure of proof when the premium is, by contract, computable at a certain rate on the amount paid by the insured to his workmen in a limited and specified class of work, and the insurer wholly fails to present any evidence as to the amount so paid.

Globe Ind. Co. v Anderson-Deering Co., 200-1035; 205 NW 845

Action to recover—proof of condition precedent. In an action by an insurer to recover premiums due on an insurance rider which by its terms is valid only "when signed by an authorized representative", a failure of proof results from the failure of the insurer to prove that the rider was signed as required.

Globe Ind. Co. v Anderson-Deering Co., 200-1035; 205 NW 845

8915 Existing companies.

Refusal to approve articles. Certiorari may be the proper remedy to review the action of the commissioner of insurance and attorney general (§8688, C., '35) in refusing to approve amended articles of incorporation of an assessment association.

National Assn. v Murphy, 222-98; 269 NW 15

8918 Directors.

Dissipation of assets—liability. The act of the directors of a financially embarrassed corporation in selling their individually owned corporate shares of stock to a third party, and in receiving pay therefor out of the partly frozen bank deposits of the corporation, under an understanding that said third party would replace said dissipated deposits with securities of equal value, is per se fraudulent, and necessarily violative of the law-imposed trust relationship of the directors to existing and future contemplated corporate creditors; and this is true irrespective of the plea that the directors in good faith believed that said third party would carry out the said understanding. It follows that the receiver of the corporation may repudiate such transaction and recover the dissipated assets from the directors.

Hoyt v Hampe, 206-206; 214 NW 718; 220 NW 45

8927 Investments.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 645; AG Op Feb. 28, '39

8937 Reserve fund required.

Unearned premiums—trust fund—construction. A trust fund "for the protection of policyholders" is for the protection of the claims of policyholders for unearned premiums under their policies, equally with the claims of policyholders for loss under their policies.

State v Cas. Co., 206-988; 221 NW 585

Unearned premiums—unallowable theory of damages. A policyholder's claim, under the express terms of his policy, for unearned premiums consequent on the legal termination of his policy may not be deemed damages for breach of the contract.

State v Cas. Co., 206-988; 221 NW 585

Nonexistent reserve to pay—effect. The statutory requirement that an insurance company shall, before declaring a dividend, set aside a specified reserve for the purpose of paying unearned premiums, is no impediment to a stockholder enforcing his claim for unearned premiums against a special trust fund created, inter alia, for the payment of such claims against a company which never had occasion to set aside such reserve because it had never made a dollar of profit.

I CONTRACT OF INSURANCE AND POLICY GENERALLY

Assessment accident insurance—rules of life insurance inapplicable. The statute defining assessment plan of life insurance does not require that the rules applicable to life insurance shall be applicable to accident insurance.

Rainsbarger v Acc. Assn., 227-1076; 289 NW 908

Voluntary insertion of nonrequired agreement. The fact that one class of insurance companies is required, by statute, to insert in its policies a provision that an injured third party shall have a right of action against the insurer, does not prevent other insurance companies from inserting such provision in their policies even tho they are not required so to do, and when the provision is so inserted the company is bound thereby.

Venz v Ins. Assn., 217-662; 251 NW 27

Delivery—presumption attending possession. Possession by an insured, at the time of his death, of a policy of life or accident insurance creates a presumption, born of necessity and based on the experience of mankind, that the policy was delivered to the insured as an effective instrument; and this presumption prevails until the court can say, as a matter of law, that the presumption has been conclusively negated by other evidence.

Beggs v Ins. Co., 219-24; 257 NW 445; 95 ALR 863

Insurance policy admitted by pleadings. In an action to recover on a policy of fire insurance where the plaintiff's petition, a petition of intervention, and the answer to the petition of intervention all agreed that the policy was issued on a certain date and that it covered the same property that was covered by the mortgage and by another insurance contract issued by the intervenor, the record was not fatally deficient when it contained no evidence of the execution of the policy.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

Acceptance of policy—acts constituting. A provision in a delivered policy of insurance giving the insured a named time in which to accept and retain the policy, or to reject and return it, is for the sole benefit of the insured; and when the insured not only retains the policy after the lapse of said time, but forwards his check for the premium (which the insurer retains), the said act of the insured in so retaining the policy and the act of the insurer in retaining the check render the policy effective from the date thereof.

Schmith v Cas. Co., 216-936; 247 NW 655

Implied authority of agent. An insurance company which, in the issuance of policies against loss by hail, customarily dates said policies from the date of the insured's written application therefor, and not from the date of the acceptance by the company of such applications, must, notwithstanding provisions in said applications to the contrary, be deemed to have impliedly authorized its soliciting agents, on taking such applications, to validly enter into oral, preliminary contracts of insurance covering the period from the date of said applications to the date of their acceptance or rejection.

Boever v Ins. Co., 221-566; 266 NW 276

Agent's cancellation of policy—nonconsenting insured unaffected. Under an agreed statement of facts tried to the court, an insured, by transferring his insurance from one company to another at the former's request, cannot, as a matter of law, be said to have mutually consented that his first insurance be canceled before he received his insurance from the second company, when there is evidence he contemplated continued protection, altho the agent for both companies notified the first to cancel as of a certain date, which was before the second policy was issued and before a loss occurred.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

Accident insurance—estoppel by conclusiveness of physician's certificate—nonapplicability. The statute which provides for the conclusiveness of a physician's certificate of health or declaring an applicant a fit subject for life insurance after medical examination, and thereafter estops an insurance company from setting up as a defense to an action on policy, that insured was not in the condition of health required by policy, unless policy was procured by fraud, is not applicable to an accident insurance policy, since the characteristics of the risks are so different that it would not seem reasonable, nor would there be any necessity for any such rule in cases where the provisions of the policy are solely as to injury by accident.

Rainsbarger v Acc. Assn., 227-1076; 289 NW 908

Construction—absence of ambiguity. When the terms employed in a policy of insurance are plain and unambiguous, there is no room for the application of the oft-quoted rule that the policy must be construed most strongly against the insurer.

Field v Sur. Co., 211-1239; 235 NW 571

Ambiguities construed against insurer. Ambiguous language employed in an insurance policy will generally be construed most strongly against the insurer.

Githens v Ins. Co., 201-266; 207 NW 243; 44 ALR 863

Umbarger v Ins. Co., 218-203; 254 NW 87; 36 NCCA 733

Kantor v Ins. Co., 219-1005; 258 NW 759

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Iowa Bond. Co. v Cram, 209-424; 228 NW 24

Word applicable to either insurer or insured—not strictly construed. Word, e.g., "representative", in an insurance policy, not wholly for the insurer's benefit, should not be strictly construed against the insurer.

Eller v Guthrie, 226-467; 284 NW 412

"Total disability" clauses—liberal construction required. In policies of insurance against loss of time consequent on accidentally inflicted injuries, "total disability" clauses must be given a liberal construction in favor of the insured. So held where the policy required the injuries to be such as to "totally disable and prevent the insured from transacting any and every duty pertaining to any and every business and occupation". Evidence held to present jury question on the issue of the insured's total disablement.

Prusiner v Ins. Co., 221-572; 265 NW 919; 2 NCCA(NS) 87

"Burning or explosion of automobile". Insurance against injury "caused by the burning or explosion of an automobile" does not embrace injury caused by the inhalation of carbon monoxide gas thrown off by the ordinary explosion of motor vehicle fuel in the engine of the car.

Field v Sur. Co., 211-1239; 235 NW 571

Title insurance—refusal by insurer to defend—effect. An insurer who gives a bond to indemnify against loss consequent on defect of title (with certain exceptions), and agrees to defend actions which attack the title, and is given the opportunity to defend, and refuses to defend, on the mistaken ground that the defect alleged is not covered by the bond, thereby authorizes the insured to conduct the defense in good faith and to make any reasonable compromise of the action, with resultant liability on the part of the insurer for the damages suffered and for the value of the services rendered by insured's attorneys.

Jones v Sur. Co., 210-61; 230 NW 381

Title insurance—burden of proof. A title insurer has the burden to show that a defect of title is within the exceptions provided by the policy.

Jones v Sur. Co., 210-61; 230 NW 381

Exemption from liability—burden of proof. The insurer has the burden to establish a contract exception which exempts him from liability.

Lamar v Trav. Assn., 216-371; 249 NW 149; 92 ALR 159

II INSURABLE INTEREST

Discussion. See 8 ILB 181—Purchaser's insurable interest in stolen automobile; 12 ILR 235—Insurance of interests—conditional sales; 15 ILR 431—Interest in property of spouse

Naked titleholder. One who holds the legal title to land in trust for another, and who personally executes his note and secures it by mortgage on the land for the benefit of such other person, has an insurable interest in the buildings on the land.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Crop insurance—landlord's interest. A statement in an application for crop insurance to the effect that applicant has "full interest in the crop" when his only interest was in the cash rentals due him as a landlord, furnishes no basis for avoiding liability when both the insurer and its agent had full knowledge, from a prior application which was in their possession, that applicant's interest was that of landlord only.

Boever v Ins. Co., 221-566; 266 NW 276

Right to redeem from foreclosure. A mortgagor's insurable interest in the mortgaged property does not terminate until the period for redemption has expired.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

III PREMIUMS, DUES, AND ASSESSMENTS

Quarterly periods—nonretroactive premium. A policy of accident insurance which provides a scheme for quarterly periods of insurance and for quarterly payments of premiums in advance, but provides that the acceptance of a premium after it is due shall reinstate the policy only as to injuries received after such acceptance, does not cover an injury received after the beginning of a quarterly period and before payment of premium for that quarter is made.

Hiatt v Cas. Co., 208-974; 224 NW 53

IV ASSIGNMENT OF POLICY AND RIGHT TO PROCEEDS

Discussion. See 16 ILR 419—Proceeds payable to minor

Assignment after loss—effect. The assignment of a policy after loss, without the consent of the insurer, does not invalidate a policy under the usual policy provision prohibiting assignments.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Right to proceeds—defaulting vendor (?) or nondefaulting purchaser (?). The vendor of real estate (and necessarily his assignee of the contract) has no basis for claiming the proceeds of a noncontested policy of fire insurance taken out on the property by the non-defaulting purchaser in his own name long after the vendor was in hopeless default under the contract of sale, even tho the said contract provided that the purchaser should take out insurance for the benefit of the vendor.

Reason: Neither the vendor nor his assignee can, under the circumstances, enforce the contract clause for insurance for their benefit.

Martinsen v Ins. Assn., 217-335; 251 NW 503

V NOTICE AND PROOFS OF LOSS

"Immediate" notice—jury question. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a preliminary notice of death, to an insurer, was "immediate" within the meaning of the policy.

Nelson v Acc. Soc., 212-989; 237 NW 341

"As soon as practicable" construed. A policy requirement that written notice of an accident shall be given "as soon as practicable" means that said notice shall be given within a reasonable length of time under all the facts and circumstances. So held in a case where the insured inadvertently lost his policy and forgot the name of the insurer until some five months after liability accrued on the policy.

Gifford v Cas. Co., 216-23; 248 NW 235

Delay—effect. Even tho it be conceded that particular facts and circumstances may excuse delay on the part of an insured policyholder in making proofs of loss, yet such facts and circumstances cannot excuse the total failure to make any such proofs.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Mental incapacity to furnish proofs—effect. A clear and unequivocal contract that an insured shall furnish due proofs of disability, as a condition precedent to the attaching of any liability on the part of the insurer, must be construed as assuming mental and physical capacity to furnish the proofs when due. It follows that the furnishing of such proofs will be excused if, when the disability occurs, and the policy is in force, the insured is insane, and, therefore, wholly unable to furnish said proofs.

McCoy v Ins. Co., 219-514; 258 NW 320

Inapplicable provisions of policy. The provisions in a policy of insurance (a) that "no agent has authority to change this policy or to waive any of its provisions", and (b) that "no change shall be made in the policy unless approved by an executive officer of the insurer and the approval be endorsed hereon", have application to the provisions of the policy relating to the formation and continuance of the contract and not to the conditions which are to be performed after loss, e. g., the giving of notice of loss.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

Insufficient proof. The letter of an insured to an insurer may not be deemed to constitute proof of loss when there is no evidence that insured so intended the letter, and, on the contrary, inquired therein as to what proof he should make.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Total and permanent disability—proofs. Preliminary proofs of total and permanent disability are sufficient when prepared and furnished by the insured on and in accordance with blank forms furnished by the insurer for such purpose.

Garden v Ins. Co., 218-1094; 254 NW 287

Waiver by denial of liability. An insurer who is furnished proofs showing death from disease, and later, and within the time for furnishing proofs, is furnished amended proofs showing death from accident, waives all further proofs by refusing to furnish blanks on which to make additional proof and by peremptorily denying all liability for death by accident.

Dawson v Life Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

Denial of liability—waiver. An insurer who, upon the happening of a loss, promptly asserts that the policy has been cancelled long prior to the loss, thereby denies all liability, and waives proofs of loss.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Denial of liability—waiver. A policy provision to the effect that when a partial loss of a crop is occasioned by hail, the insured shall, by a certain date, furnish the insurer an account or statement of the crop harvested, is waived when, before the date in question, the insurer unequivocally denies liability under the policy.

Richardson v Ins. Assn., 214-30; 241 NW 414

Examination of premises after loss—effect. The act of the insurer in examining the insured premises after loss and thereupon denying all liability, constitutes a waiver of proofs of loss, even tho the insurer makes an offer of settlement.

Lee v Ins. Co., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Waiver of bylaw. Section 9045, C., '27, fixing the requirements of notice and proof of loss under mutual insurance policies, does not prevent the company from waiving in its by-laws such notice and proof except when it may see fit to demand them.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Insufficient waiver. The letter of an insured to an insurer, making inquiry as to what proof of loss he should make, and the letter of the insurer in reply, in which the insured is referred to the requirements of the policy, will not constitute a waiver of proof of loss, the insured not claiming that he was misled by the correspondence or that he in any manner changed his position by reason thereof.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Waiver—pleading—sufficiency. Waiver of proofs of loss is sufficiently presented by pleading the facts constituting waiver, even tho the pleader does not allege the legal conclusion of waiver; and especially so when the pleadings are unquestioned in the trial court.

Lee v Ins. Co., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Waiver—sufficient plea. An allegation, in an action on a policy of insurance, that plaintiff, within the contract time, orally notified a general agent of the insurer of his injury, and that said agent agreed that he would give proper and timely notice to the insurer, is a sufficient plea of waiver of the insured's duty to give written notice of the loss, and sufficient to support the admission of evidence that the agent had sufficient power to waive said written notice.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

VI SURRENDER, RESCISSION AND REFORMATION OF POLICY

Inconsistent and repugnant provisions—construction against insurer. A provision in a health policy that sick benefits will be paid provided the sickness is contracted thirty days after the date of the policy, and a distinct and separate provision that said benefits will be paid for every sickness contracted subsequent to the issuance of the policy, are so inconsistent and repugnant that the court will reject the first provision and apply the latter.

Schmith v Cas. Co., 216-936; 247 NW 655

Nonpayment of premiums — "suspension" and "cancellation" of policy distinguished. Section 9054, C., '24, providing that a policy of insurance issued by an assessment insurance association may be canceled by the association on a five-day notice to the insured, has no application to a policy provision which suspends the membership of the policyholder and denies him right of recovery for loss while he is delinquent in the payment of assessments.

Early v Ins. Assn., 201-263; 207 NW 117

Knowledge of agent. The knowledge of a soliciting agent that the insured understood that he was to receive a policy which would permit additional insurance will, on the issue of reformation, be imputed to the insurer, even tho not communicated to the latter.

Smith v Ins. Co., 201-363; 207 NW 334

Indemnity converted into liability. A policy of insurance which is otherwise strictly a contract of indemnity against loss is converted into a contract of indemnity against liability by the insertion therein of a provision which, in effect, provides that the policy shall, under named conditions, inure to the benefit of an injured third party.

Venz v Ins. Assn., 217-662; 251 NW 27

VII RENEWAL, REVIVAL AND REINSTATEMENT

Accident insurance—quarterly periods—nonretroactive premium. A policy of accident insurance which provides a scheme for quarterly periods of insurance and for quarterly payments of premiums in advance, but provides that the acceptance of a premium after it is due shall reinstate the policy only as to injuries received after such acceptance, does not cover an injury received after the beginning of a quarterly period and before payment of premium for that quarter is made.

Hiatt v Cas. Co., 208-974; 224 NW 53

Suspension—unliquidated set-off in favor of insured—effect. Whether the existence of an unliquidated disputed right of set-off may be made use of by an insured to obviate the suspension of a policy of insurance due to non-payment of premiums or assessments, quaere.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1020; 226 NW 777

Change in title—nonassignment of policy—waiver. An insurer who knows, through his agent, that the property covered by the policy has been transferred to another, and continues to treat the policy as in force by collecting and retaining the premiums, may not thereafter defensively assert such change of title or that no formal transfer of the policy had been made.

Neiman v Ins. Co., 202-1172; 211 NW 710

VIII AVOIDANCE OF POLICIES, MISREPRESENTATION

False statement as to responsibility. An insured may not recover on an indemnity bond which is given for the performance of a building contract when, in or in connection with the application for the bond, he willfully gives the insurer a false statement relative to the contractor's financial responsibility, and the insurer innocently relies thereon. This is especially true when the insured is, at the time, acting as the agent of the insurer.

Cook v Heinbaugh, 202-1002; 210 NW 129

VIII AVOIDANCE OF POLICIES, MISREPRESENTATION—concluded

Failure to reveal mortgages. A policy of insurance is not invalidated because the insured did not, in his written application, reveal the existence of mortgages on the property when he was not questioned concerning the mortgages.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Reinsurance—disclosure of material facts—duties—presumptions. In an action on a reinsurance contract against reinsurer, held, not breached on account of original insurer's failure to retain full amount of liability agreed upon where original insurer was liable on another contract with the same principal and the evidence was insufficient to show any wrongful or fraudulent concealment of material facts, since the same principles of law as to false representations and concealments govern in reinsurance as in original insurance. Altho insured and reinsured have duty to exercise good faith and disclose all material facts, a presumption must be based on facts, not upon other presumptions. The mere nondisclosure of facts possibly known is not fraudulent concealment of facts, so reinsurer, to establish concealment of facts, must show intentional concealment or bad faith in ascertaining facts.

General Reins. v Surety Co., 27 F 2d, 265

IX WAIVER AND ESTOPPEL

Discussion. See 13 ILR 129—Waiver

Company's waiver of provision—insured's burden of proof. In action against an insurance company to recover on a policy covering tractors destroyed by fire, where defense was that plaintiff's ownership was not unconditional and that the property was not kept on the described location as the policy required, plaintiff was required to prove that, with full knowledge of facts disclosed to its agent by plaintiff, the defendant admitted its liability and waived those provisions of policy.

Buettner v Ins. Assn., 225-847; 282 NW 733

Maintenance of status quo—effect. A stipulation entered into by an insured and insurer relative to the employment of attorneys by the insurer to defend an action brought against the insured by a third party, and designed to maintain the status quo of the stipulating parties, cannot be deemed to have any bearing on a waiver of a policy provision already effected by the insurer.

Venz v Ins. Assn., 217-662; 251 NW 27

Bylaws part of policy—nonwaiver.

Richardson v Trav. Assn., 228- ; 291 NW 408

Notice and proof of loss—waiver by denial of liability. An insurer who is furnished proofs showing death from disease, and later, and within the time for furnishing proofs, is furnished amended proofs showing death from accident, waives all further proofs by refusing to furnish blanks on which to make additional proof and by peremptorily denying all liability for death by accident.

Dawson v Life Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

Retention of premiums—effect. Where an automobile insurance policy exempts the insurer from liability while the car is being operated by a person under 16 years of age and where the monthly premiums are based on a named sum for each trip of the car occurring during the preceding month, the act of the insurer in demanding, receiving and retaining the premium for a particular trip with knowledge that the car on the trip in question had been operated by a person under 16 years of age, works a waiver of said exemption as to said trip.

Venz v Ins. Assn., 217-662; 251 NW 27

X ADJUSTMENT, SETTLEMENT, PAYMENT AND DISCHARGE OF LOSS

Discussion. See 21 ILR 642—Undue influence to secure release.

Compromise and settlement—justifiable representation of defense. An officer of an insurance company is amply justified in believing that his company has a good defense to an action on a policy and in so stating to the insured in negotiations for a compromise settlement when the application for the insurance contained false representations of a material nature and an agreement that "the right to recover * * * should be barred" if any of the statements in the application "material either to the acceptance of the risk or the hazard assumed by the company is false and made with the intent to deceive."

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156

Check not necessarily payment. A check issued by an insurer for the amount of an adjusted loss and payable to a mortgagor and mortgagee, jointly, and never cashed because the mortgagor refused to indorse it, cannot be deemed a payment of the loss when there was no express or implied agreement to that effect—when the insurer-drawer first asserted such claim after the bank on which the check was drawn failed.

Union Ins. v Ins. Co., 216-762; 249 NW 653

Breach of condition subsequent—indemnity policy—failure to cooperate. An insured in an automobile indemnity policy of insurance has no right arbitrarily or unreasonably to refuse to substantially comply with his policy agreement to cooperate in specified ways with the insurer in protecting the rights of said insurer, but any default in so cooperating must be such as to prejudice the insurer in order to absolve him from liability.

Glade v Ins. Assn., 216-622; 246 NW 794

XI SUBROGATION AND CONTRIBUTION

Discussion. See 9 ILB 291—Clauses giving carrier the benefit of shipper's insurance

Subrogation contract by carrier. A contract provision to the effect that a lessor railway company "shall have full benefit of any insurance effected by the lessee on structures erected on the leased premises" is valid and enforceable if the lessor has an insurable interest in the property.

Queen Ins. Co. v Railway, 201-1072; 206 NW 804

Rule for prorating. Between coinsurers, the liability of each under the standard pro rata clause is not the amount which he may pay the insured by way of settlement, but is such fractional part of the loss as the total amount of his policy bears to the total amount of all the valid and collectible coinsurance policies.

Globe Ins. v Bonding & Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Pro rata clause—valid and collectible insurance. In the application of the standard pro rata clause, the validity and collectibility of a policy are prima facie established by evidence that the insurer was solvent, did not question the validity of the policy, and, after suit, compromised the action and paid the judgment.

Globe Ins. v Bonding & Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Pro rata clause—effect on reinsurers. The lessened liability which an insurer automatically acquires (as regards a coinsurer) under the standard pro rata coinsurance clause, automatically works a pro rata reduction in the liability of his reinsurers who have contracted that the total loss under the policy shall likewise be prorated among the reinsurers.

Globe Ins. v Bonding & Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Action based on forged indorsement of checks and drafts. Where an employee wrongfully possessed himself of checks and drafts belonging to his employer, and by forged indorsements caused a bank to pay them, the act of a surety company in paying the employer the amount of his loss does not discharge the bank from its liability to the employer for having paid the checks and drafts on forged indorsements. The employer, upon being so indemnified, may assign his cause of action against the bank to the surety, and the surety may maintain the action against the bank.

National Surety Co. v Bankers Tr. Co., 210-323; 228 NW 635

XII ACTIONS ON POLICIES GENERALLY

Insured's remedy—law (?) or equity (?)—law action on contract proper. An insured under an accident policy has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, to wit: action on the contract, and, unless the insurer makes unreasonable and bad-faith demands on insured, he is not entitled to relief in equity.

Eller v Guthrie, 226-467; 284 NW 412

Avoidance of multiplicity of law actions. A strict action at law may not be brought and maintained in equity on the mere allegation that thereby a multiplicity of actions will be avoided. So held where plaintiff sought, in equity, to recover not only presently accrued but future possibly accruing weekly total disability benefits under a policy of accident insurance.

Gephardt v Ins. Co., 213-354; 239 NW 235

Multiple actions—multiple defenses and physical examinations proper. An insured, under an accident policy, who elects to try his disputed claims in a multiple series of suits, may not complain if the insurer prepares his defense in the same way and requires a separate physical examination before each suit.

Eller v Guthrie, 226-467; 284 NW 412

Premature action—defect cured. Defendant's right to complain because an action on a policy of insurance was prematurely commenced is lost by delaying the complaint until a time when an action, if then commenced, would not have been premature and when the action stood for trial on a substituted petition.

Slinger v Ins. Assn., 219-329; 258 NW 101

Nonpremature action. An action brought some eleven months after loss is not premature when the insurer has by his conduct waived proofs of loss.

Lee v Ins. Co., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Special appearance and motion to dismiss. In an action against insurance company to recover value of property destroyed by fire, in which action a special appearance attacked only one count of petition, the overruling of the special appearance and motion to dismiss was proper, inasmuch as jurisdiction that may be attacked by special appearance is jurisdiction of court over the entire action, and not jurisdiction of court as to part of such action.

Sanford Co. v Ins. Co., 225-1018; 282 NW 771

Specific performance. An action to compel the specific issuance of a policy of insurance against loss of income on a named occasion and for judgment on the policy, or in lieu, for judgment for damages, must be dismissed when it is made to appear that, in view of the amount of income actually received by the plaintiff on the occasion in question, and in view of the conditions of the usual and ordinary policy had one been issued, no recovery could have been had on the policy.

Amer. Legion v Ins. Co., 212-1371; 238 NW 458

Wrongful refusal to defend—attorney fees. A title insurer who wrongfully refuses to comply with his contract to defend an action hostile to the title is liable to the insured for

XII ACTIONS ON POLICIES GENERALLY—concluded reasonable attorney fees, whether such fees have or have not been paid by the insured.

Jones v Sur. Co., 210-61; 230 NW 381

Burden of proof—affirmative elaboration of general denial—effect. The beneficiary in an accident insurance policy has the burden of proof to establish that the insured was killed under the particular condition covered by the policy and alleged in the petition, notwithstanding elaborate affirmative assertions by the defendant in addition to a general denial.

Nelson v Acc. Soc., 212-989; 237 NW 341

Exemption from liability—burden of proof. The insurer has the burden to establish a contract exception which exempts him from liability.

Lamar v Trav. Assn., 216-371; 249 NW 149; 92 ALR 159

Accidental death—burden of proof. In order to recover on the ordinary accident insurance policy, claimant must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the injury or death resulted solely from bodily injury received through accidental means. Evidence held to present a jury question.

Dawson v Life Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

Evidence—accidental cause producing death. Evidence held sufficient to present a jury question on the issue whether an insured became accidentally infected with gas bacillus at the time of an injury to his hand, and whether said infection resulted in his death.

Martin v Life Co., 216-1022; 250 NW 220

Accidental means—allowable inference. Evidence that an insured in passing through an opening in a building knocked a piece of skin from his hand, coupled with the legal presumption that he did not intend such injury (there being no evidence tending to negative such presumption) justifies the inference or conclusion that the injury was caused by accidental means.

Martin v Life Co., 216-1022; 250 NW 220

Cause of death—testimony of attending physician nonconclusive. The testimony of a physician as to the cause of death of a person whom the physician personally attended shortly prior to said death is not conclusive, especially when the physician was, at the time of the examination, uncertain as to the cause of death. In other words, expert testimony, on proper hypothetical facts, is admissible to show a cause of death other than that testified to by the attending physician.

Dawson v Life Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

Causes of loss—explosion—evidence. Under a policy of insurance against damages "caused by explosion occurring in the structure, provided the explosion results from the hazard inherent in the occupancy", a judgment against the insurer has ample support in evidence that an ordinary furnace was refueled and left in a normal condition with the feed door closed, the pipe to the chimney intact and in place and the fire burning; that during the following two and one-half hours no person was in the house; that upon the return of the owner the furnace door was open, the smoke pipe on the floor and the house filled with smoke and soot; and that there was no fire outside the furnace.

Sargent v Ins. Co., 216-688; 247 NW 267

Excluding evidence of fraud. Excluding a letter offered by a defendant insurer, in connection with a claim of fraud, is harmless error when all question of fraud was withdrawn from the jury.

Eller v Ins. Co., 226-474; 284 NW 406

Directed verdicts—function of court. It is not the function of the court to determine which of a series of irreconcilable theories of experts, as to the death of a person, is correct. All the court can do or is permitted to do is (1) to consider the war of testimony in the permissible light most favorable to the party on whom rests the burden of proof, and (2) to determine whether a verdict in favor of such party would be adequately supported by the testimony.

Martin v Life Co., 216-1022; 250 NW 220

Directed verdict—war of expert testimony. Whether a death resulted from an accident "independent of all other causes" is necessarily a jury question under a war of conflicting and contradictory expert testimony.

Martin v Life Co., 216-1022; 250 NW 220

Partial disability—jury question. Evidence held to justify the submission to the jury of the issue of partial disability.

Vorpahl v Surety Co., 208-348; 223 NW 366

Reversal with order to dismiss—when justifiable. The appellate court, on entering an order of reversal in a law action, may, in the exercise of its broad statutory discretion, terminate long protracted litigation, by ordering the trial court to dismiss plaintiff's action. So ordered where an action on a policy of insurance had been four times tried and had been three times reversed on defendant's appeal.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 220-984; 263 NW 46

XIII RISKS AND CAUSES OF LOSS

(a) IN GENERAL

Indemnity converted into liability. A policy of insurance which is otherwise strictly a contract of indemnity against loss is converted into a contract of indemnity against liability by the insertion therein of a provision which, in effect, provides that the policy shall, under named conditions, inure to the benefit of an injured third party.

Venz v Ins. Assn., 217-662; 251 NW 27

"No action clause"—effect. A policy of insurance indemnifying the insured from damages resulting from the holding of a hazardous automobile racing contest on a race track at a county fair, and which policy specifies that "No action shall be brought against the insurer * * * unless brought by and in the name of the insured for loss actually sustained and paid in money by the assured in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issues," is a contract of indemnity against loss, and not a contract of indemnity against liability, and gives no right of action on the policy to a person who was wrongfully injured as a result of holding said race; and this is true notwithstanding subsec. 5-e, §8940, C., '24, '27, '31, giving, under certain conditions, an injured person a right of action on an automobile accident policy issued to the wrongdoer, said statute having application solely to automobiles used in the usual course on highways, and not to use on race tracks in racing contests.

Zieman v Ins. Co., 214-468; 238 NW 100

Explosion—evidence. Under a policy of insurance against damages "caused by explosion occurring in the structure, provided the explosion results from the hazard inherent in the occupancy", a judgment against the insurer has ample support in evidence that an ordinary furnace was refueled and left in a normal condition with the feed door closed, the pipe to the chimney intact and in place and the fire burning; that during the following two and one-half hours no person was in the house; that upon the return of the owner the furnace door was open, the smoke pipe on the floor and the house filled with smoke and soot; and that there was no fire outside the furnace.

Sargent v Ins. Co., 216-688; 247 NW 267

(b) ACCIDENT OR HEALTH INSURANCE

Discussion. See 10 ILB 64—Total disability in accident policies; 16 ILR 251—Anticipatory breach

Acceptance of policy—acts constituting. A provision in a delivered policy of insurance giving the insured a named time in which to accept and retain the policy, or to reject and return it, is for the sole benefit of the insured; and when the insured not only retains the policy after the lapse of said time, but forwards his check for the premium (which the insurer retains), the said act of the insured in so retaining the policy and the act of the insurer in retaining the check render the policy effective from the date thereof.

Schmith v Cas. Co., 216-936; 247 NW 655

Nonretroactive premium. A policy of accident insurance which provides a scheme for quarterly periods of insurance and for quarterly payments of premiums in advance, but provides that the acceptance of a premium after due shall reinstate the policy only as to injuries received after such acceptance, does not cover an injury received after the beginning of a quarterly period and before payment of premium for that quarter is made.

Hiatt v Cas. Co., 208-974; 224 NW 53

Prorating clause. Divers accident insurance policies issued to the same insured may not be deemed to cover the "same loss", within the meaning of an attempted prorating clause concerning death benefits, when the recipients of said benefits under each policy are different from the recipients under any other policy.

Wahl v Acc. Assn., 201-1355; 207 NW 395; 50 ALR 1374

Death benefit not proratable. A death benefit is not proratable, under a policy of accident insurance against death, specified injuries, loss of time, surgeon's fees, etc., which contains a clause (violated by the insured) that, if the insured, without written notice to the insurer, carry other insurance in other companies, covering the same loss, the insurer "shall be liable only for such portion of the indemnity promised as said indemnity bears to the total amount of like indemnity in all policies covering such loss".

Wahl v Acc. Assn., 201-1355; 207 NW 395; 50 ALR 1374

Health insurance—liberal construction of policy. Principle reaffirmed that a health insurance policy must be construed liberally in favor of the insured.

Garvin v Cas. Co., 207-977; 222 NW 25; 61 ALR 633

Health insurance—confinement "within the house". An agreement by an insurer to pay sick benefits during such time as the insured "shall be strictly and continuously confined within the house" embraces time spent in hospitals on advice of physicians; also, necessary time spent in going to and from said physicians and hospitals if the sickness of the insured is, during said time, of such grave and serious nature that the time so spent is purely incidental to the necessary resumption of confinement "within the house". But said agreement does not embrace time spent by the insured in traveling about the country on his own motion in quest of health.

Garvin v Cas. Co., 207-977; 222 NW 25; 61 ALR 633

Inconsistent and repugnant provisions. A provision in a health policy that sick benefits will be paid provided the sickness is contracted 30 days after the date of the policy, and a distinct and separate provision that said benefits will be paid for every sickness contracted subsequent to the issuance of the policy, are so inconsistent and repugnant that the court will reject the first provision and apply the latter.

Schmith v Cas. Co., 216-936; 247 NW 655
Carpenter v Trav. Assn., 213-1001; 240 NW 639

XIII RISKS AND CAUSES OF LOSS—continued

(b) ACCIDENT OR HEALTH INSURANCE—continued

Certificate of health insurability—effect. An insurer against total, permanent disability is, in the absence of plea and proof of fraud on the part of the insured, conclusively bound by a certificate of the health insurability of the insured issued by the insurer's examining physician as a basis for the issuance of the policy.

Foy v Ins. Co., 220-628; 263 NW 14

"Accident" and "accidental means" defined. An "accident" is an event which, under the circumstances, is unusual and unexpected by the person to whom it happens; the happening of an event without the concurrence of the will of the person by whose agency it was caused.

The term "accidental means" signifies those means, the effect of which does not ordinarily follow, and cannot be reasonably anticipated from the use of those means, an effect which the actor did not intend to produce and which he cannot be charged with the design of producing.

Miser v Trav. Assn., 223-662; 273 NW 155

"Accidental means" defined. An injury caused by the intentional lifting of a log upon a wagon is one resulting from "accidental means" when such resulting injury was unexpected, undesigned, and not the usual or natural result of such an act.

Clarkson v Cas. Co., 201-1249; 207 NW 132

Accidental means—allowable inference. Evidence that an insured in passing through an opening in a building knocked a piece of skin from his hand, coupled with the legal presumption that he did not intend such injury (there being no evidence tending to negative such presumption) justifies the inference or conclusion that the injury was caused by accidental means.

Martin v Life Co., 216-1022; 250 NW 220

Accidental discharge of firearm. A requirement in a policy of accident insurance that the accidental cause of the discharge of a firearm shall be proven by a particular class of witnesses "who saw the cause in operation at the time of the discharge" simply requires the testimony of witnesses of such class who, by reason of their presence, can personally speak of such competent and attending facts and circumstances as will fairly justify the jury in finding from such testimony and from the inferences justifiably deducible therefrom, that the cause of the discharge was accidental.

Pride v Acc. Assn., 207-167; 216 NW 62; 62 ALR 31

Ballplayer sliding to base. Proof tending to show that a ballplayer was internally injured by sliding to a base, with proof that such act is ordinarily attended by no serious consequences, justifies a finding that the injury was accidental.

Dawson v Life Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

"Burning or explosion of automobile." Insurance against injury "caused by the burning or explosion of an automobile" does not embrace injury caused by the inhalation of carbon monoxide gas thrown off by the ordinary explosion of motor vehicle fuel in the engine of the car.

Field v Sur. Co., 211-1239; 235 NW 571

"Driving," "adjusting," or "explosion of" automobile—jury question. Evidence that a party successively ran two automobiles into his garage, leaving the motor of the first car running, and thereupon closed the garage doors, and was later found dead on the running board of the second car, is wholly insufficient to establish that the deceased met his death "while driving," or "while adjusting," or "by an explosion of," an automobile, it appearing that the direct cause of the death was the inhalation of carbon monoxide gas.

Field v Sur. Co., 211-1239; 235 NW 571

Air travel—forced jump—risk not covered. Richardson v Trav. Assn., 228- ; 291 NW 408

Horse not a "vehicle." A horse, saddled and bridled, and being used as a means of conveyance or transportation, is not a "vehicle" within the meaning of a policy of insurance which provides indemnity "sustained by the wrecking or disablement of any vehicle or car * * * in which the insured is riding, or by being accidentally thrown therefrom".

Riser v Ins. Co., 207-1101; 224 NW 67; 63 ALR 292

Inhaling "gas"—scope of term. An unambiguous policy provision which exempts the insurer from liability when death ensues from inhaling "any gas" embraces a death from inhaling a combination or collection of gases as well as a death from inhaling a single gas. Such is the ordinary and popular understanding of the term "gas" and so the term must be construed.

Lamar v Trav. Assn., 216-371; 249 NW 149; 92 ALR 159

Policy—construction—"train wreck". The smashing in of a portion of one side of a passenger coach by swinging a loading bucket against the coach as it was passing constitutes a "train wreck" within the meaning of a policy of accident insurance, even tho the coach (the only one injured) was not derailed, and was not taken from the train for repairs until a division point on the line was reached.

Mochel v Trav. Assn., 203-623; 213 NW 259; 51 ALR 1327

Violation of law. A policy of accident insurance which provides, in effect, that it does not cover or embrace loss "resulting from or in consequence of" any act of the insured while engaged in any violation of the law, does not justify an instruction to the effect that the violation of law must be the sole cause of the loss. Proximate cause, not sole cause, is the legal test.

Whyte v Cas. Co., 209-917; 227 NW 518

Presumption that injuries are accidental. In the absence of direct or circumstantial evidence to the contrary, physical injuries to a person are presumed accidental.

Dewey v Ins. Co., 218-1220; 257 NW 308

Intentionally inflicted injuries. The limited liability provided in a policy of insurance in case of "injuries intentionally inflicted upon the insured by another person except in the perpetration of a robbery", cannot be deemed established as a matter of law by evidence which would justify a finding either (1) that the assault was not made in the perpetration of a robbery, or (2) that it was made in the perpetration of a robbery, or (3) that the assault was the result of mistaken identity—and, therefore, not intentional within the meaning of the policy.

Carpenter v Trav. Assn., 213-1001; 240 NW 639

Intentional acts—presumption. Under a policy of accident insurance which exempts the insurer from liability for injuries sustained by the insured by reason of "intentional" acts, the presumption will be indulged that injuries inflicted upon the insured by another person were not intentional.

Olson v Surety Co., 201-1334; 208 NW 213

Declarations of insured. Declarations, not part of the res gestae, of an insured under an accident policy of insurance, tending to prove that an injury to the insured was self-inflicted, are not admissible against the beneficiary of the policy.

Pride v Acc. Assn., 207-167; 216 NW 62; 62 ALR 31

Accident as jury question. Evidence reviewed and held properly to present a jury question on the issue whether an injury was caused by accidental means.

Miser v Trav. Assn., 223-662; 273 NW 155

Injuries resulting from accident complained of—jury question. Record held replete with evidence that an insured's injuries and loss of time were caused directly and exclusively by the accident in issue and held to justify a refusal to direct a verdict for insurer on the ground that there was no competent evidence that the injuries were caused by the accident.

Eller v Ins. Co., 226-474; 284 NW 406

Noncausal relation. In an action on a policy of accident insurance covering death "by being accidentally thrown from a wrecked or disabled horsedrawn vehicle", plaintiff must, in order to present a prima facie case for recovery, show (1) that the vehicle was a "wrecked or disabled" vehicle when the insured was thrown therefrom, and (2) that said wreckage or disablement bore some causal relation to the accidental throwing of the insured from the vehicle. In other words, plaintiff fails to show a cause of action by establishing a disablement which had nothing to do with throwing the insured from the vehicle.

Slaughter v Ins. Co., 214-451; 240 NW 229

Total and permanent disability. A policy which provides for compensation, only in the event of total and permanent disability, necessarily excludes compensation for a disability which is total for the time being but not permanent.

Petersen v Ins. Co., 217-1122; 253 NW 63

Permanent disability—scope. Under a policy providing monthly disability benefits if insured becomes, and remains for 90 days, so physically incapacitated as to be wholly and permanently unable to engage in any occupation or work for profit, the insured, in order to recover, need carry his proofs on the issue of permanency of disability no further than to establish (1) present permanency, and (2) a reasonable presumption that such disability will continue for an indefinite period of time. (The policy herein provides for future proofs of continuance of disability.)

Garden v Ins. Co., 218-1094; 254 NW 287

Permanent disability—ascertainment by comparative standard in policy. In weighing the evidence as to a permanent disability claim, heed must be given to the other policy provisions wherein the company of its own volition has set a comparative standard for measuring total and permanent disability as respects the insured's ability to pursue any gainful occupation, and, being so measured, the question is for the jury.

Wood v Ins. Co., 224-179; 277 NW 241

Permanent disability—when recovery denied. A policy which provides, (1) for stated benefits in event insured becomes "wholly and permanently disabled", and (2) that "such total disability shall be presumed to be permanent when it is present and has existed continuously for not less than 3 months," does not authorize recovery for a disability which has been total for a continuous period of some 10 months, but which, when action for recovery of said benefits is commenced, has proven to be only temporary.

Graham v Assur. Soc., 221-748; 266 NW 820

Total disability clauses—liberal construction required. In policies of insurance against loss of time consequent on accidentally inflicted injuries, "total disability" clauses must be given a liberal construction in favor of the insured. So held where the policy required the injuries to be such as to "totally disable and prevent the insured from transacting any and every duty pertaining to any and every business and occupation". Evidence held to present jury question on the issue of the insured's total disablement.

tinued

Prusiner v Ins. Co., 221-572; 265 NW 919; 2 NCCA(NS) 87

Total disability—reasonable construction. "Total disability" as used in accident insurance policies does not mean a state of absolute helplessness but, rather, inability to do all the substantial and material acts necessary to the prosecution of the business or occupation of the insured, or some other business or occupation which he might enter, in a customary and usual manner.

Eller v Ins. Co., 226-474; 284 NW 406

Total disability—reasonable construction. Where a life insurance policy provides for monthly payments as disability benefits to an insured, total disability, which was defined therein as disability preventing insured "from engaging in any occupation or performing any work for compensation of financial value", does not mean a state of absolute helplessness, but, rather, inability to do all the substantial and material acts necessary to the prosecution of the business or occupation of the insured, or some other business or occupation which he might enter, in a customary and usual manner.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 225-1034; 282 NW 781

Disability benefits—conditional payment. A policy which provides that total disability benefits are payable "on each anniversary (of the policy) during the lifetime and continued disability of the insured", imposes no obligation to pay such benefits, or any part thereof, when the insured dies prior to such anniversary date. And this is true when the annual premium is payable in advance, but when it is impossible to determine what part of such premium is the consideration for the agreement to pay disability benefits.

Peek v Ins. Co., 206-1237; 219 NW 487

Instructions—disability continuing to time of trial. When an insurance policy provides that, in order to recover permanent disability benefits, an insured must be disabled "for life", an instruction that the jury must find insured disabled at the time of trial is correct.

Wood v Ins. Co., 224-179; 277 NW 241

Permanent disability—jury question. In an action on a life insurance policy providing against "total and permanent disability", evidence that insured, afflicted with an incurable condition of osteomyelitis of the vertebrae, was able to do a few hours bookkeeping, drive an automobile occasionally and enrolled in the State University for a short time, will not necessarily negative permanent disability but presents a question properly submitted to the jury.

Wood v Ins. Co., 224-179; 277 NW 241

Total disability—jury question. Where the insured, a farmer afflicted with arthritis, brings an action on a life insurance policy providing monthly payments for total disability, which was defined as disability preventing insured "from engaging in any occupation or performing any work for compensation of financial value", and where the insured farmer was unable to perform the labor on his farm, but still was able to direct the farming operations of his hired men, it was a jury question whether or not insured was totally and permanently disabled under terms of policy.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 225-1034; 282 NW 781

Total disability—evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held to show that plaintiff was "immediately, continuously and wholly disabled" by an accident, and from the date thereof.

Harrington v Surety Co., 206-925; 221 NW 577

Adjudication of physical condition—not binding in later action. Where an insured's claim is embodied in a series of suits, an adjudication of a plaintiff-insured's physical condition, determined in one action, does not adjudicate said condition in a subsequent independent action.

Eller v Guthrie, 226-467; 284 NW 412

Accepting payment for partial disability but reserving claim for total. An insured by accepting payment under an accident policy for three weeks total disability and two weeks partial disability, does not preclude himself from claiming further total disability when the payment was accepted with the distinct understanding with the insurer that such acceptance was without prejudice to any future claim for total disability.

Eller v Ins. Co., 226-474; 284 NW 406

Hospital expense—confinement in different hospitals permissible. A requirement in an accident policy, that in order for an insured to recover for hospitalization he must be confined in a hospital within 90 days of the accident, does not require that he must be confined in the same hospital for the entire time pending his recovery.

Eller v Ins. Co., 226-474; 284 NW 406

Pleading special limitations. Special limitations on the right to recover under a policy of accident insurance, inserted in the policy after the general insurance clause, must be pleaded and established by the insurer.

Carpenter v Trav. Assn., 213-1001; 240 NW 639

Accident insurance—burden of proof. Under an accident policy against bodily injury through accidental means, resulting directly, independently, and exclusively of all other causes, the insured must necessarily meet the burden of showing that the injuries received resulted solely from accidental means. Evidence held insufficient.

Michener v Cas Co., 200-476; 203 NW 14

Burden of proof. In order to recover on the ordinary accident insurance policy, claimant must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the injury or death resulted solely from bodily injury received through accidental means.

Dawson v Life Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

Avoidance of policy—burden of proof. The insurer in an accident insurance policy has the burden of proof to establish the defense that the policy is wholly avoided because the insured, in obtaining the policy, had falsely represented that his habits of life were "correct and temperate", and had thereby intentionally deceived the insurer.

Olson v Surety Co., 201-1334; 208 NW 213

Avoidance—burden of proof. An accident insurance policy (against injury sustained solely through external, violent, and accidental means) which provides, in effect, that it does not cover injuries sustained by reason of the intentional act of any person except assaults upon the insured by a person committing or attempting to commit robbery, casts upon the insurer the burden to establish (1) that the insured was injured by the intentional acts of another person, (2) that the injury was intentional, and (3) that such other person was not committing or attempting to commit robbery.

Olson v Surety Co., 201-1334; 208 NW 213

Cause of death—undue burden to establish. Expert medical opinions that an insured died from an intracranial, fatty embolus resulting from an external, violent and accidentally suffered injury, met by the same class of expert opinions positively to the contrary, may generate a jury question, determinable by the jury, like any other disputed question of fact, on the preponderance of testimony, the facts on which such conflicting, expert opinions are based being of such nature that the jurors could not therefrom deduce a proper opinion. So held where the court erroneously instructed that "No mere weight of evidence is sufficient to establish the cause of assured's death unless it excludes every other reasonable hypothesis as to the cause of death"—in effect requiring the theory of death by means of an embolus to be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

Aldine Co. v Acc. Assn., 222-20; 268 NW 507

Ineffective proof by executrix. Under a policy providing for the payment, (1) of total disability benefits to the insured himself, and (2) of death benefits to another, the disability benefits alleged to have accrued to the insured prior to his death may not be recovered by the executrix of the insured when the insured, tho physically and mentally able so to do, failed to furnish during his lifetime, to the insurer, proofs of such disability, the furnishing of such proofs being clearly contemplated and required by the policy as a condition precedent to the attaching of liability on the part of the insurer.

Kantor v Ins. Co., 219-1005; 258 NW 759

Finding by court—conclusiveness. The finding of the court in a trial to the court on supporting evidence on the issue whether an insured died "solely through external, violent, and accidental means" or from disease is conclusive on the appellate court; and it is immaterial that the court determines its findings by sustaining a motion to dismiss at close of all the evidence, or by overruling such motion and later dismissing the action on its own motion.

Cherokee v Ins. Co., 215-1000; 247 NW 495

(c) AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

Discussion. See 9 ILB 196—Collision insurance—protection; 15 ILR 73—Recovery from insurer

Scope of policy. Insurance on a distinctly described automobile does not, of course, cover any other automobile.

Chambers v Ins. Assn., 214-1353; 242 NW 30

Merger of prior oral contracts. An oral contract that a policy on an automobile should automatically apply to any other car which the insured might subsequently acquire, entered into at the time the policy was applied for, will not support an action—said contract not being inserted in the policy.

Chambers v Ins. Assn., 214-1353; 242 NW 30

Oral contract—estoppel. Even tho the agent of an insurer, when receiving an application for insurance on an automobile, represents that the insured will have a policy automatically applicable to any car which the insured may acquire in the future, yet the insurer is not estopped to deny the existence of any such oral contract when the policy delivered and accepted contained no such provision.

Chambers v Ins. Assn., 214-1353; 242 NW 30

Transfer—prima facie effect. An insurer against the theft of an automobile, defending on the ground that the insured was not the "unconditional and sole" owner, may not complain that the jury is instructed that a transfer of the certificate of registration is only prima facie evidence of change of title.

Abraham v Ins. Co., 215-1; 244 NW 675

Transfer—right to contradict. On the issue whether plaintiff, in an action on a policy of insurance covering the theft of an automobile, was the "unconditional and sole" owner of the vehicle, plaintiff may testify to facts attending a written transfer of the certificate of registration tending to show that he, in fact, remained the owner of the vehicle notwithstanding said transfer.

(c) AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE—continued

Abraham v Ins. Co., 215-1; 244 NW 675

Company knowledge of automobile conditional sale—instructions. Where claim is made against an automobile insurance company under the collision clause of a policy transferred from one automobile to another on which a conditional sale is outstanding, knowledge of which conditional sale is denied by the company, instructions reviewed and held to properly submit question of company's knowledge and waiver of the conditional sale lien.

Mougin v Ins. Assn., 224-1202; 278 NW 336

Wrong motor numbers not invalidating liability policy. Motor numbers in an automobile insurance policy are only for the purpose of aiding in identifying the car, and, tho the numbers be wrong, a liability policy will not be invalidated if the car is otherwise properly identified, for which purpose other evidence may be resorted to, and, if sufficient, will cure the error without resort to a proceeding in equity to reform the policy.

Fucaloro v Cas. Co., 225-437; 280 NW 605

Indemnity insurance—law governing. A policy of insurance issued under subsec. 5-e of this section, insuring the ordinary operation of an automobile necessarily embraces the statutory provision that said policy shall inure to the benefit of a party who obtains a judgment against the insured, even tho said policy purports to be an indemnity policy only. (Zieman case, 214 Iowa 468 overruled in part.)

Schmid v Underwriters, 215-170; 244 NW 729

Indemnity (?) or liability (?)—legality. Either indemnity or liability insurance covering the operation of an automobile may be validly written by mutual associations under §9029 or by reciprocal or interinsurance concerns under §9083, C., '31, even tho subsec. 5-e, §8940, of said code prohibits the companies there designated from writing anything but liability insurance, the latter section not controlling the two former sections.

Schmid v Underwriters, 215-170; 244 NW 729

Indemnity policy—right of injured party. When the owner or operator of a motor vehicle has insured his liability for damages consequent on the operation of his vehicle, an injured party may not sue directly on the policy which indemnifies the wrongdoer—the insured—until he has obtained a judgment against the wrongdoer—the insured—and until an execution on the judgment has been returned unsatisfied. There is one exception to this statutory rule, to wit: When the policy is one obtained by a motor vehicle carrier as a mandatory statutory condition precedent to obtaining a certificate to operate as such carrier, an injured party may maintain an action on the policy when service of notice of suit cannot be had on the carrier within this state. (§5105-a26, C., '31 [§5100.26, C., '39]).

Ellis v Bruce, 215-308; 245 NW 320

Evidence of insurance—failure to strike not cured by instructions. Evidence that the owner of an automobile had stated that he did not go out to the scene of the accident after a collision in which the automobile was involved because the car was insured and he would let the insurance company take care of it, improperly injected the question of insurance in an action for damages resulting from the collision. The failure to strike such evidence was error which was not cured by the court's direction to the jury to disregard it.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-154; 289 NW 905

Indemnity policy—failure to cooperate. An insured in an automobile indemnity policy of insurance has no right arbitrarily or unreasonably to refuse to substantially comply with his policy agreement to cooperate in specified ways with the insurer in protecting the rights of said insurer, but any default in so cooperating must be such as to prejudice the insurer in order to absolve him from liability.

Glade v Ins. Assn., 216-622; 246 NW 794

Retention of premiums—effect. Where an automobile insurance policy exempts the insurer from liability while the car is being operated by a person under 16 years of age and where the monthly premiums are based on a named sum for each trip of the car occurring during the preceding month, the act of the insurer in demanding, receiving and retaining the premium for a particular trip with knowledge that the car on the trip in question had been operated by a person under 16 years of age, works a waiver of said exemption as to said trip.

Venz v Ins. Assn., 217-662; 251 NW 27

Chauffeur defined. An employee of a business who is not known as a chauffeur, and who is solely employed and paid for services wholly distinct from the operation of a delivery truck, does not become a "chauffeur" within the meaning of §4943, C., '27, by operating the truck during the time the regular chauffeur operator is temporarily absent.

Des Moines Co. v Underwriters, 215-246; 245 NW 215

"Driving", "adjusting", or "explosion" of automobile. Evidence that a party successively ran two automobiles into his garage, leaving the motor of the first car running, and thereupon closed the garage doors, and was later found dead on the running board of the second car, is wholly insufficient to establish that the deceased met his death "while driving", or "while adjusting" or "by an explosion", of an automobile, it appearing that the direct cause of the death was the inhalation of carbon monoxide gas.

Field v Surety Co., 211-1239; 235 NW 571

"Riding in" or "driving" automobile—proof—sufficiency. On the issue (under an insurance policy) whether an insured died while "riding in", or while "driving" an automobile, no recovery can be had on proof only that the insured, shortly after he was expecting to start on a journey, was found dead in his securely closed garage and in his automobile (the engine of which had manifestly been very recently running) and behind the steering wheel, with the left front door partly open, and his left foot resting on the running board and his right foot near the accelerator; and especially is this true when the attending circumstances clearly indicate that before the car could be put into actual motion other acts must be done which would necessitate the absence of the deceased from the car.

Mould v Cas. Co., 219-16; 257 NW 349

Riding or driving motor vehicle—insured on running board. In an action on an insurance policy, there was sufficient evidence for a jury question on whether an accident came within terms of the policy insuring against injuries received in an accident of a vehicle in which the insured was riding or driving, when it was shown that the car started moving down a grade, and the insured was thrown to the ground from a position partly in the car and partly on the running board, while attempting to stop the car.

Dykes v Ins. Co., 226-771; 285 NW 201

"Person of same household"—scope of term. Where an insurance policy insured the assured against liability arising or resulting from automobile accidents, but excepted liability for injuries to "the assured or persons of the same household as the assured", held that a married woman who furnished the assured a room and board for a stated compensation could not be deemed a "person of the same household as the assured."

Umbarger v Ins. Co., 218-203; 254 NW 87; 36 NCCA 733

Fire as proximate cause of breakage. If an automobile takes fire while traveling upon the highway, and said fire is the proximate cause of the car's swerving and going into the ditch and overturning, then a policy of insurance against direct loss or damage from fire covers not only the parts of the car actually burned by the fire, but the parts of the car which were broken or injured by the overturning.

Tracy v Ins. Co., 207-1042; 222 NW 447; 1 NCCA(NS) 313, 319

Action on insurance policy—real party in interest—authority to make admission in pleading. A defendant corporation formed to underwrite reciprocal insurance contracts of its unincorporated group of subscribers is the real party in interest in an action to enforce a judgment against the corporation. The group of subscribers is not a legal entity and, when the corporation is the only legal entity of the two, an admission of an important fact by the corporation made in a counterclaim in the action in which judgment was obtained is binding on it in the later action.

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

"No action clause"—effect. A policy of insurance indemnifying the insured from damages resulting from the holding of a hazardous automobile racing contest on a race track at a county fair, and which policy specifies that "No action shall be brought against the insurer * * * unless brought by and in the name of the insured for loss actually sustained and paid in money by the assured in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issues," is a contract of indemnity against loss, and not a contract of indemnity against liability, and gives no right of action on the policy to a person who was wrongfully injured as a result of holding said race; and this is true notwithstanding subsec. 5-e of this section, giving, under certain conditions, an injured person a right of action on an automobile accident policy issued to the wrongdoer, said statute having application solely to policies on automobiles used on race tracks in racing contests.

Zieman v Fidelity Co., 214-468; 238 NW 100

Joinder—tort of one and contract of another. A joint action (1) against a wrongdoer upon his tort consequent on the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, and (2) against a surety company upon its policy to indemnify the wrongdoer from loss because of said tort, even tho but one recovery is sought, presents two different causes of action, and the joinder thereof is wholly unallowable. And this is true whether the policy is simply a private, optional contract between the insured and insurer, or a policy mandatorily required by statute to be filed with and approved by the railroad commission as a condition precedent to the obtaining of a permit to operate said vehicle.

Ellis v Bruce, 215-308; 245 NW 320

Pleading—sufficiency. An unpleaded claim that an oral contract existed for the transfer of a policy of insurance on one automobile to a subsequently acquired automobile amounts to nothing.

Chambers v Ins. Assn., 214-1353; 242 NW 30

Inadequate instructions. In an action on a policy of insurance against theft, the court, after properly placing the burden on plaintiff to show that the taker intended to steal the insured property, must also instruct that plain-

(c) AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE—concluded tiff supplies that element of proof, prima facie, by testimony that the insured property disappeared from the place where plaintiff left it, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff or of any other person having control of the property.

Tullar v Ins. Co., 214-166; 239 NW 534

Contract measure of damages—effect. A contract measure of damages in case of loss under a policy of insurance against theft precludes the court from instructing as to another and different measure of damages.

Salinger v Ins. Corp., 214-1021; 243 NW 183

Extent of loss—collision damage to automobile. In an action on an automobile collision insurance policy, the measure of damages is (1) the reasonable cost to repair or replace the damaged parts with others of like kind and quality, if the evidence shows it can be so repaired, or (2) if the evidence shows it cannot be repaired, then the difference between the fair and reasonable market value before and such value after the collision—and fact that insured advantageously traded the wrecked automobile to a dealer on a new automobile does not affect the measure of damage.

Kellogg v Ins. Co., 225-230; 280 NW 485

Judgment against insured — conclusive against insurer. A judgment determining liability of insured for damages for death resulting from use of automobile was conclusive against liability insurance company as to its liability on policy where there was no fraud or collusion in obtaining the judgment and insurance company had timely notice of suit and elected to make no defense, in view of provision of policy and of statute permitting injured person to maintain action against insurance company for amount of judgment against insured after return of execution unsatisfied, irrespective of insured's insolvency.

International Co. v Steil, 30 F 2d, 654

(d) FIDELITY INSURANCE

Fidelity insurance—construction. The conduct of an officer of a bank in intentionally and deceitfully omitting to make any entry on the books of the bank of payments made on the bills receivable of the bank (other than a memorandum slip, hung on a spindle), with resulting loss to the bank, is covered by a bond or policy of insurance which guarantees indemnity against "dishonest or criminal acts or omissions" of said officers.

Andrew v Ind. Co., 207-652; 223 NW 529

Fidelity insurance—loss to bank—construction. Proof that an officer of a bank received money of the bank and made no entry of the receipt on the books of the bank necessarily presents a prima facie showing of financial loss to the bank.

Andrew v Ind. Co., 207-652; 223 NW 529

Unallowable action by stranger. A bond which, in effect, is limited to the indemnification of the obligee only, for pecuniary loss sustained by the obligee through the dishonest acts of his officers or employees, is a contract of indemnity. In other words, such bond does not cover liability to a third party for loss sustained by said third party through the dishonesty of the officers or employees of the said obligee. (See §8581-c14, C., '31 [§8581.18, C., '39], for bonds covering liability.)

Allen v Ins. Co., 218-294; 253 NW 498

(e) HAIL INSURANCE

Avoidance of policy for misrepresentation, etc.—knowledge of insurer and agent—effect. A statement in an application for crop insurance to the effect that applicant has "full interest in the crop" when his only interest was in the cash rentals due him as a landlord furnishes no basis for avoiding liability when both the insurer and its agent had full knowledge, from a prior application which was in their possession, that applicant's interest was that of landlord only.

Boever v Ins. Co., 221-566; 266 NW 276

Computation of damages—instructions. Instructions relative to the computation of damages to crops by hail reviewed, and held sufficiently clear in view of the ambiguous provision of the policy.

Richardson v Ins. Assn., 214-30; 241 NW 414

Damage by hail—improper measure. The percentage of crop destruction due to hail cannot be measured by a comparison between the ultimate crop after damage by hail, and the amount of yield in an average year, when the record affirmatively shows that the year in which the damage occurred was not, because of drought conditions, an average year.

Slinger v Ins. Assn., 219-329; 258 NW 101

Notice and proof of loss—waiver. A policy provision to the effect that when a partial loss of a crop is occasioned by hail, the insured shall, by a certain date, furnish the insurer an account or statement of the crop harvested, is waived when, before the date in question, the insurer unequivocally denies liability under the policy.

Richardson v Ins. Assn., 214-30; 241 NW 414

(f) THEFT INSURANCE

Impossible performance—when no excuse. A person is not legally excused from performing an act which he has unconditionally contracted to perform, but is prevented from performing because of the happening of a contingency of which he had knowledge when he contracted, and against which he might have protected himself. For instance, an insurer may not rely on a contract that he will, in full satisfaction of his liability, repossess a stolen automobile and properly repair it, and return it to the insured, when such return to the insured was prevented by the act of the seller of the car rightfully seizing the car, while it was in the possession of the insurance company, for nonpayment of installments due on the car, such possible seizure being well known to the insurance company when it so contracted.

Salinger v Ins. Corp., 217-560; 250 NW 13

Theft—prima facie showing—shifting of burden. In an action on a policy of insurance against theft, plaintiff generates a prima facie showing for recovery by testimony that the insured automobile disappeared from the place where plaintiff had left it, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff or of any other person having control over said vehicle. Defendant must then overcome the presumption, if he can, that the taker took the car with intent to steal it.

Tullar v Ins. Co., 214-166; 239 NW 534

Evidence—sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed, in an action on a policy of insurance against theft, that the possession of recently stolen property may be sufficient to establish the larceny of the property.

Tullar v Ins. Co., 214-166; 239 NW 534

Unauthorized taking of motor vehicle—presumption of theft. When an owner of a motor vehicle establishes that his car was taken without his knowledge or consent from the place he left it, he has made a prima facie case of theft. The law raises a rebuttable presumption that the taking was with intent to steal the same.

Whisler v Ins. Co., 224-201; 276 NW 606

Intoxication subsequent to automobile theft—inadmissibility. Exclusion of evidence offered by an insurance company, in an effort to escape liability on a theft policy, as to a thief's intoxicated condition an hour after the alleged theft of motor vehicles, as bearing on his condition at the time of the taking, held not prejudicial.

Whisler v Ins. Co., 224-201; 276 NW 606

Relevancy of insured's settlement offer—inadmissibility. A letter written by plaintiff's attorney before trial offering settlement without expense of litigation is inadmissible in a trial on the merits seeking recovery on an automobile theft insurance policy.

Whisler v Ins. Co., 224-201; 276 NW 606

(g) TORNADO AND WINDSTORM INSURANCE

Notice and proof of loss. Proof of loss under a policy of insurance is all-sufficient when executed and furnished to the insurer by the insured's duly appointed receiver.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

8941. Limitation on risks.

Loss—rule for prorating. Between coinsurers, the liability of each under the standard pro rata clause is not the amount which he may pay the insured by way of settlement, but is such fractional part of the loss as the total amount of his policy bears to the total amount of all the valid and collectible coinsurance policies.

Globe Ins. v Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Coinsurance—solvent and insolvent insurers. Separate insurers of the same loss are coinsurers, even tho one of the insurers issued his policy at a time when the other insurers had gone into the hands of a receiver and the extent of their ability to pay losses had become problematical.

Globe Ins. v Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

8943 Execution of policies.

Delivery—presumption attending possession. Possession by an insured, at the time of his death, of a policy of life or accident insurance creates a presumption, born of necessity and based on the experience of mankind, that the policy was delivered to the insured as an effective instrument; and this presumption prevails until the court can say, as a matter of law, that the presumption has been conclusively negated by other evidence.

Beggs v Ins. Co., 219-24; 257 NW 445; 95 ALR 863

8952 Commissioner as process agent.

Original notice—service—deputy commissioner may accept. Valid service of an original notice of suit against a foreign insurance company doing business in this state, is made by the act of the deputy commissioner of insurance in accepting, in writing and in the name of said commissioner, service of said notice for and on behalf of said company, tho the authority filed by the company only authorized the commissioner to accept such service.

Woodmen v Dist. Court, 219-1326; 260 NW 713; 98 ALR 1431

8958 Notes taken for insurance.

Discussion. See 15 ILR 389—Statement that note is given for insurance

"Unless". The term "unless", as employed in this section, is used in the sense of "if it be not a fact that".

Plunkett v Hopley, 208-1042; 226 NW 772

Noncollectibility. A promissory note which is given for the premium on a policy of life insurance is not void or noncollectible because such fact is not stated upon the face of the note.

Plunkett v Hopley, 208-1042; 226 NW 772

Failure to pay note—lapse of policy. A policy of insurance unqualifiedly lapses upon the failure of the insured to pay at maturity a promissory note which he has given for an annual premium, such effect being expressly provided for in the application and in the policy and in the said note, and the note clearly providing that it was not given as payment.

Diehl v Ins. Co., 204-706; 213 NW 753; 53 ALR 1528

8959 Forfeiture of policies—notice.

Applicability. The statute requiring the insurer to give 30 days notice of his purpose to forfeit a policy for the nonpayment of a premium applies to a policy of accident insurance which specifies no exact date for the payment of the premium.

Ragan v Ins. Co., 209-1075; 229 NW 702

Dual statutes governing. Cancellation of an insurance policy for nonpayment of premium is governed by this section; other cancellations by §9018, par. XI, C., '31.

Ryerson v Ins. Co., 213-524; 239 NW 64

Reciprocal insurance contracts not controlled by general statutes. The specific provisions of an application for a policy of reciprocal insurance, of which provisions the applicant had notice, to the effect that the policy will not be in force, (1) until the application is approved by the insurer, and (2) until the premium is paid, cannot be waived by the insurer's agent entering into a different arrangement relative to said acceptance and payment of premium; this section and section 9004, C., '31, relative to the power of agents, not being applicable to reciprocal insurance contracts.

Gisin v Ins. Exch., 219-1373; 261 NW 618

Nonapplicable procedure. The procedure for the forfeiture or suspension of a nonmutual fire insurance policy of insurance is not applicable to policies issued by mutual assessment companies. (Ch. 406, C., '27.)

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1020; 226 NW 777

Nonstatutory cancellation of policy. A reciprocal or interinsurance policy of insurance is effectively canceled by complying with the contract method for cancellation even tho such method is materially different than the statutory method provided by this section, because this section does not apply to such policies.

Schmid v Underwriters, 215-170; 244 NW 729

Attempted cancellation contrary to bylaws. A mutual insurance company which, in its bylaws, provides for the cancellation of a policy by giving notice "in person or by registered letter", and which in its attempt to cancel a policy ignores its own bylaws and attempts to give notice by an unregistered letter, must prove that said letter actually reached the insured, and the presumption of delivery attending the mailing of such letter and the positive testimony that such letter was never received by the insured are of equal probative force; therefore, the insurer has not established the receipt of said notice by the insured.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Ipsa facto lapse of policy. Under an ordinary life insurance policy, a provision that default in payment of a premium shall forfeit the policy requires no formal notice of forfeiture in case of such default.

Rogers v Ins. Co., 204-804; 213 NW 757

Failure to pay illegal assessment—nonforfeiture. An assessment on the policyholders of a mutual insurance association, made by the board of directors at a duly called meeting, is not a legal assessment and no forfeiture of a policy can be based on the nonpayment of such assessment, when the articles of incorporation provide that an executive committee consisting of the president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer shall meet quarterly (and specially on call of the president) and make all assessments; and this is true even tho all said officers were present at said directors' meeting but as directors.

Maasdam v Ins. Assn., 222-162; 268 NW 491

Nonpayment of premium. An insured will not be deemed in default in the payment of premiums at the time of his death (1) when the premium is payable in installments, (2) when no specified date is fixed for payment, (3) when the policy provides that the payment of an installment shall continue the policy in force for a stated time, and (4) when the insured dies prior to the expiration of said stated time after the last payment; and this is true tho the premiums earned exceed the premiums paid.

Ragan v Ins. Co., 209-1075; 229 NW 702

Failure to pay premium—effect. A combined life and accident policy of insurance becomes void in accordance with its terms, to wit: "on failure to pay the premium at maturity", without any notice from the insurer that the premium is due or when it will be due. In other words, this section, as supplemented by section 8673, C., '31, has no application to such a policy.

Wall v Ins. Co., 217-1106; 253 NW 46
See Federal Bank v Ins. Assn., 217-1098; 253 NW 52

Premiums—payment mailed—nonreceipt—jury question. Evidence that an insurance premium had been mailed, against a claim of nonreceipt by the company, raises a jury question, especially when the company admits that in its office routine it made no note of the contents of envelopes until after they had passed through the hands of several clerks.

Wood v Ins. Co., 224-179; 277 NW 241

Premium—application of dividends. An insured is not entitled to notice from the insurer as to the amount of dividends due under the policy in order to determine how much cash, in addition, is necessary to pay his premium when, under the policy, the condition does not yet exist under which he would have the right to apply the dividends on the premium.

Wall v Ins. Co., 217-1106; 253 NW 46

Belated receipt of check—effect. Under a policy providing that the nonpayment of a premium shall forfeit the policy, but that the insured may be reinstated, the receipt by the insurer through the mail, long after the maturity of a premium, of insured's check for the premium does not constitute payment when the insurer promptly replied by mail that the insured must first be reinstated, and when, without effort to collect the check, the insurer made proper tender thereof; and it matters not that the insured died before the insurer's letter reached him.

Rogers v Ins. Co., 204-804; 213 NW 757

Ineffectual notice. A policy of fire insurance, silent as to the post-office address of the insured, is not canceled, for nonpayment of a premium note, by a registered notice of cancellation addressed to the insured at the post-office address employed in dating the policy, when such place had never been the post-office address of the insured, and when, owing to no fault of the insured, said notice was never delivered to him; and this is true tho the postal authorities forwarded said mail matter to the post office through which the insured received mail by rural delivery.

Ryerson v Ins. Co., 213-524; 239 NW 64

Fatally defective notice. A notice of forfeiture of a policy of insurance for nonpayment of a premium note is fatally defective when it infers that the payment of the customary short rates is necessary if the insured wished to cancel the policy, but wholly fails to state the amount of such rates; and this is true even tho at said time the unearned premium is less in amount than the sum already paid by the insured.

Nolte v Ins. Co., 208-716; 224 NW 50

Proof of loss—waiver by denying liability. A life insurance company's denial of liability, on grounds other than failure to furnish proofs of loss, is a waiver of their right to require proofs, if the policy was in force and proofs could have been furnished at the time of such denial, but insured, relying on the company's notice, believed the policy had lapsed.

Wood v Ins. Co., 224-179; 277 NW 241

Suspension of policy—waiver—effect. Conceding, arguendo, that the levy of an assessment on a policy of insurance worked a waiver of the suspension of the policy for nonpayment of a prior assessment, yet such waiver becomes immaterial when the policy is legally suspended for nonpayment of the last assessment.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1020; 226 NW 777

8960 Cancellation of policy.

Mutual cancellation by parties—policy method not exclusive. An insurance policy may be canceled by mutual consent of the parties, without resorting to the method provided in the policy.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

Unallowable in equity. Equity will not, after the death of the insured in a life insurance policy, entertain jurisdiction to cancel the policy unless exceptional circumstances render cancellation necessary for the protection of the insurer. The fact that the policy becomes incontestable after two years does not constitute such circumstance when said time has not yet elapsed.

Bankers Life v Bennett, 220-922; 263 NW 44

Agent's cancellation of policy—nonconsenting insured unaffected. Under an agreed statement of facts tried to the court, an insured, by transferring his insurance from one company to another at the former's request, cannot, as a matter of law, be said to have mutually consented that his first insurance be canceled before he received his insurance from the second company, when there is evidence he contemplated continued protection, altho the agent for both companies notified the first to cancel as of a certain date, which was before the second policy was issued and before a loss occurred.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

Hail insurance—failure to read settlement—cancellation—nonestoppel. An insurer may not cancel a hail insurance policy nor avoid payment for a second hail loss by predicating an estoppel upon the negligent failure of the insured to read a written settlement where the insured reposed confidence in the agent who, on a busy threshing day, negotiated the settlement for the first hail damage and then added a policy cancellation clause not discussed in settlement.

Conrad v Ins. Assn., 223-828; 273 NW 913

Cancellation—burden of proof on insurer. The burden of proving cancellation of a fire insurance policy is on the insurer who denies liability thereunder.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

Notice and proof of loss—waiver by cancellation. An insurer who, after a loss occurs, assumes to cancel the policy, and denies all liability, waives his right to formal notice and proofs of loss.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Unearned premiums—establishment against trust fund. A policyholder who has actually paid the premium under an Iowa standard form of insurance policy has a right, upon the insolvency of the company, and upon the conceded cancellation of the policy by the appointment of a permanent receiver, to have his claim for unearned premiums established against a trust fund which has been created "for the protection of policyholders".

State v Cas. Co., 206-988; 221 NW 585

8964 Examination—dissolution.

Consolidation—right of creditors. Where a domestic consolidated insurance company unconditionally assumed the obligations of both a domestic and a foreign company, and where the courts of the foreign state ordered that certain assets of the foreign company be administered on by receivership proceedings in said foreign state, the creditors of the foreign company have the right, after establishing their claims in the foreign receivership and being paid a percentage of their claims, to establish the balance of their claims against the assets in the hands of the domestic consolidated company (it having become insolvent) even tho a portion of said assets consists of a trust fund originally deposited with the state by the original domestic company "for the protection of its policyholders"; but dividends must be equalized by the domestic receiver among all creditors of the same class.

State v Cas. Co., 213-200; 238 NW 726

Unearned premiums—establishment against trust fund. A policyholder who has actually paid the premium under an Iowa standard-form-of-insurance policy has a right, upon the insolvency of the company, and upon the conceded cancellation of the policy by the appointment of a permanent receiver, to have his claim for unearned premiums established against a trust fund which has been created "for the protection of policyholders".

State v Cas. Co., 206-988; 221 NW 585

8974 Copy of application—duty to attach.

Attaching copy of premium note—insufficiency. A premium note for $100 which does not show the policy number is not a true copy of a premium note for $128 which does show the policy number, even tho the maker of the note was entitled to and was given a credit on the note for $28.

Nolte v Ins. Co., 208-716; 224 NW 50

Unauthorized mortgage. A standard fire insurance policy is wholly voided as to a subject matter therein covered by the policy, if said subject matter is, subsequent to the issuance of the policy, voluntarily mortgaged by the insured without the consent of the insurer; and in such case it is quite immaterial that the insured made no formal, written application for the policy.

Greco v Ins. Co., 219-150; 257 NW 201

8975 Failure to attach—effect.

Application—failure to attach—burden of proof. In an action, not on a policy of insurance, but for damages consequent on an alleged fraud-induced contract of settlement of the amount due on the policy, the burden of proof to show that the application for the insurance was not attached to or indorsed on the policy is on the insured when he pleads that the insurer may not avail itself of representations contained in the application.

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156; 237 NW 886

Misrepresentation—when unallowable as a defense. False and fraudulent representations on the part of an insured, in his original application for a policy of insurance, are not available as a defense to an action on the policy, when the policy provides that it is incontestable except as provided in named paragraphs which, on examination, reveal no grounds of contest whatever, but only matters of which the insurer could avail himself in the enforcement of the contract.

Wilson v Ins. Co., 220-321; 262 NW 525

8976 Presumption as to value.

See annotations under §9018

8977 Value of building—liability.

See annotations under §9018

8978 Prima facie right of recovery.

Inapplicable provisions of policy. The provisions in a policy of insurance (a) that "no agent has authority to change this policy or to waive any of its provisions", and (b) that "no change shall be made in the policy unless approved by an executive officer of the insurer and the approval be indorsed hereon", have application to the provisions of the policy relating to the formation and continuance of the contract and not to the conditions which are to be performed after loss, e. g., the giving of notice of loss.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

Hail insurance—failure to read settlement—cancellation—nonestoppel. An insurer may not cancel a hail insurance policy nor avoid payment for a second hail loss by predicating an estoppel upon the negligent failure of the insured to read a written settlement where the insured reposed confidence in the agent who, on a busy threshing day, negotiated the settlement for the first hail damage and then added a policy cancellation clause not discussed in settlement.

Conrad v Ins. Assn., 223-828; 273 NW 913

Notice and proof of loss—"as soon as practicable". A policy requirement that written notice of an accident shall be given "as soon as practicable" means that said notice shall be given within a reasonable length of time under all the facts and circumstances. So held in a case where the insured inadvertently lost his policy and forgot the name of the insurer until some five months after liability accrued on the policy.

Gifford v Cas. Co., 216-23; 248 NW 235

Notice by receiver adequate. Proof of loss under a policy of insurance is all-sufficient when executed and furnished to the insurer by the insured's duly appointed receiver.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Mental incapacity to furnish proofs—effect. A clear and unequivocal contract that an insured shall furnish due proofs of disability, as a condition precedent to the attaching of any liability on the part of the insurer, must be construed as assuming mental and physical capacity to furnish the proofs when due. It follows that the furnishing of such proofs will be excused if, when the disability occurs, and the policy is in force, the insured is insane, and, therefore, wholly unable to furnish said proofs.

McCoy v Ins. Co., 219-514; 258 NW 320

Insufficient proof. The letter of an insured to an insurer may not be deemed to constitute proof of loss when there is no evidence that insured so intended the letter, and, on the contrary, inquired therein as to what proof he should make.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Proofs of loss—waiver. Statutory proof of loss need not be furnished by an insured when the policy provides a definite and ample scheme for determining the actual loss, and the insured complies therewith.

Glandon v Ins. Assn., 207-1068; 224 NW 65

Waiver. The act of an insurer in receiving and taking under advisement proofs of loss after the time for filing such proofs had expired may, with other facts of an equivocal nature, constitute a waiver by the insurer of formal, timely filing of such proofs.

Jack v Ins. Assn., 205-1294; 217 NW 816

Insufficient waiver. The letter of an insured to an insurer, making inquiry as to what proof of loss he should make, and the letter of the insurer in reply, in which the insured is referred to the requirements of the policy, will not constitute a waiver of proof of loss, the insured not claiming that he was misled by the correspondence, or that he in any manner changed his position by reason thereof.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Waiver—sufficient plea. An allegation, in an action on a policy of insurance, that plaintiff, within the contract time, orally notified a general agent of the insurer of his injury, and that said agent agreed that he would give proper and timely notice to the insurer, is a sufficient plea of waiver of the insured's duty to give written notice of the loss, and sufficient to support the admission of evidence that the agent had sufficient power to waive said written notice.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

Waiver—declaration of apparent adjuster. When evidence would warrant the jury in finding that an employee of an insurer had apparent authority to adjust a loss, the statement of such employee to a fellow employee and communicated to parties interested in the loss as claimants, to the effect that the insurer "would pay the loss", is admissible on the issue whether the insurer had waived proofs of loss.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Waiver by denying liability. An insurer who, after a loss occurs, assumes to cancel the policy, and denies all liability, waives his right to formal notice and proofs of loss.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Denial of liability as waiver. A denial by the insurer of all liability under a policy of insurance operates as a waiver of notice and proof of loss.

Green v Ins. Co., 218-1131; 253 NW 36

Nonexcuse for failure to give. The requirement of a statutory form of fire insurance policy that proof of loss shall be given in a specified time and manner is not abrogated by a statute which declares that the policy shall be deemed a valued policy,—that is, a policy on which, in case of loss, the entire amount of the policy is collectible.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Delay—effect. Even tho it be conceded that particular facts and circumstances may excuse delay on the part of an insured policyholder in making proofs of loss, yet such facts and circumstances cannot excuse the total failure to make any such proofs.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Proofs of loss—estoppel. Statements of fact in proofs of loss are rebuttable so long as the insurer has not acted thereon.

Harrington v Surety Co., 206-925; 221 NW 577

Reliance on waiver. On the issue of waiver of proofs of loss under a fire insurance policy, a party who had been directed by the insured to attend to the collection of the loss may testify that he learned from a soliciting agent of the insurer the fact that the company's adjuster had stated that the loss would be paid, and that he relied on such statement and took no further steps toward presenting proofs of loss.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Affidavit of fact—waiver. Failure of an insured to accompany his notice of loss with an affidavit as to the facts of loss becomes quite immaterial if the insurer waives such affidavit.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 215-665; 246 NW 615

Waiver—jury question. A promise by an adjuster of an insurance company, made after he had investigated the loss, that the loss would be paid, coupled with other conduct on the part of the insurer indicating a purpose not to require proofs of loss, creates a jury question on the issue of waiver of such proof.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Pleading—construction. Answer held to plead properly the total failure of an insured to furnish proofs of loss.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Forfeiture of policy for breach of condition subsequent—burden of proof. The grantee of property insured under a statutory, standard policy of fire insurance (§9018, C., '35) and the assignee of said policy, before loss, has the burden, in an action on the policy in his own behalf, to prove that said conveyance of the property and assignment of the policy were consented to or acquiesced in by the insurer thru some agent of the insurer who had authority so to consent or acquiesce.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 220-984; 263 NW 46

Incendiary fire—jury question. Circumstantial evidence reviewed at length, and held to present a jury question both, (1) on the incendiary nature of a fire, and (2) on the insured's connection therewith.

Natalini v Ins. Co., 219-806; 259 NW 577

8979 Proofs of loss of personal property.

Proofs of loss—estoppel. Statements of fact in proofs of loss are rebuttable so long as the insurer has not acted thereon.

Harrington v Surety Co., 206-925; 221 NW 577

Proofs—estoppel. An insurer may not complain that proofs of loss were fatally lacking in definiteness when the proofs were on a blank furnished by the insurer and were in compliance with such blank.

Elmore v Surety Co., 207-872; 224 NW 32

Waiver. Failure of an insured to file written proofs of loss, becomes inconsequential when, commencing with the loss and for a long time thereafter, the insurer had promised to pay the loss.

Mortimer v Ins. Assn., 217-1246; 249 NW 405

Waiver. The act of the insurer in examining the insured premises after loss and thereupon denying all liability, constitutes a waiver of proofs of loss, even tho the insurer makes an offer of settlement.

Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Waiver. A policy provision to the effect that when a partial loss of a crop is occasioned by hail, the insured shall, by a certain date, furnish the insurer an account or statement of the crop harvested, is waived when, before the date in question, the insurer unequivocally denies liability under the policy.

Richardson v Ins. Assn., 214-30; 241 NW 414

Offer and acceptance—effect. An agreement of settlement of a loss under a policy of insurance, consummated thru an offer by the insured in his proofs of loss, and by an acceptance of the offer by the insurer, and relied and acted on by the latter, is conclusive on the parties in the absence of fraud or mistake.

Williams v Ins. Assn., 204-991; 216 NW 269

Waiver—pleading. Waiver of proofs of loss is sufficiently presented by pleading the facts constituting waiver, even tho the pleader does not allege the legal conclusion of waiver; and especially so when the pleadings are unquestioned in the trial court.

Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Sufficiency of proofs. Proofs of loss held sufficient; also the manner in which accounts of loss were kept even tho not wholly accurate.

Hansell v Ins. Assn., 209-378; 228 NW 88

8980 Invalidating stipulations—avoidance.

Transfer of property. In equitable action against mutual insurance association where defendant admitted that property in question was insured under a fire policy, defendant's contention that a certain transfer of the property had invalidated the policy, having not been pleaded as a special defense, was not in issue under the pleadings.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 288 NW 868

Change of title. A conveyance, without consideration, by a husband to his wife of a stock of insured goods with the intent to place the goods beyond the reach of his apprehended creditors, without any actual change of possession or use taking place, followed later by a reconveyance, without consideration, by the wife to the husband, constitutes no such change in the interest or title of the insured as will void the policy, the wife never having had any financial interest in the property.

McVay v Ins. Co., 218-402; 252 NW 548

Change in location—negligence. An insurer may estop himself from pleading nonliability on the policy, because of a change in location of the insured property, by negligently delaying (until after the fire, and after an authorized and favorable examination) the execution of the written consent to such change in location.

Bemisdarfer v Ins. Assn., 217-770; 252 NW 551

Concealment of unrecorded mortgage. The concealment by the insured, in his application for fire insurance on property, of the existence of an unrecorded mortgage on the property, of which mortgage the insurer had no knowledge, is fatal to recovery on the policy in case of loss.

Moore v Ins. Assn., 221-953; 266 NW 12

Knowledge of insurer and agent—effect. A statement in an application for crop insurance to the effect that applicant has "full interest in the crop" when his only interest was in the cash rentals due him as a landlord, furnishes no basis for avoiding liability when both the insurer and its agent had full knowledge, from a prior application which was in their possession, that applicant's interest was that of landlord only.

Boever v Ins. Co., 221-566; 266 NW 276

Waiver. Forfeiture clauses and conditions against transfer of title, encumbrance, and assignment of policies are for the protection of the insurance company against increase of hazard without their knowledge and consent, and therefore may be waived.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 288 NW 868

Estoppel—recognizing transfer. In equitable action against a mutual insurance association to require the completion of an assignment of a policy and to recover for fire loss, the association was, under the evidence, estopped from asserting that policy was not properly assigned, where plaintiff's grantor delivered policy to office of association's secretary for purpose of having the assignment completed and where the association recognized transfer of property to plaintiff and his ownership in the policy by mailing to him a notice of assessment thereon.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 288 NW 868

Condition subsequent—burden of proof. In an action on a policy of fire insurance which excepts loss "by theft or neglect", the burden to establish the theft or neglect is on the insurer.

Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

8981 Conditions invalidating policy.

Conditions invalidating fire insurance. See under §9018

Strict construction required. Principle applied that forfeiture provisions in a policy of insurance must be strictly construed against the insurer.

Kiser v Ins. Assn., 216-928; 249 NW 753

Sale—what constitutes. A policy provision to the effect that any "selling or transferring" of the insured property shall, in the absence of a specified notice to the insurer "after transfer of the property", automatically cancel the insurance is not violated by the mere execution of a contract of sale of said property providing for delivery of possession at a specified future date—the loss occurring prior to said date.

Kiser v Ins. Assn., 216-928; 249 NW 753

Sale and assignment of policy—consent of insurer. The grantee of property insured under a statutory, standard policy of fire insurance (§9018, C., '35) and the assignee of said policy, before loss, has the burden, in an action on the policy in his own behalf, to prove that said conveyance of the property and assignment of the policy were consented to or acquiesced in by the insurer through some agent of the insurer who had authority so to consent or acquiesce.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 220-984; 263 NW 46

Sale by partner—effect. Assuming that one partner has no authority to sell the partnership property without the consent of the other partner, and thereby invalidate the insurance, yet where such sale was not rescinded it must necessarily be deemed a legally completed sale.

Larsen & Son v Ins. Co., 212-943; 237 NW 468

Appointment of receiver not "sale". The appointment of a receiver of the property of an insured, and the possession of the property by the receiver, does not constitute a "sale" of the property within the meaning of a clause invalidating the policy in case of a sale.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Assignment after loss—effect. The assignment of a policy after loss, without the consent of the insurer, does not invalidate a policy under the usual policy provision prohibiting assignments.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Misrepresentation—mortgages. A truthful representation in an application for insurance as to the mortgages existing on the specifically described land on which the insured building is located, is not rendered a misrepresentation by showing the existence of other mortgages on other and separately described tracts on the same farm.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Failure to reveal mortgages when not asked. A policy of insurance is not invalidated because the insured did not, in his written application, reveal the existence of mortgages on the property when he was not questioned concerning the mortgages.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Recordation of mortgage—effect. The due recordation of a mortgage on insured property does not, in and of itself, carry to the insurer any notice or knowledge which can thereafter have any bearing on the acceptance of premiums on the insurance.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Renewal of mortgage. As to how far an insured may go in allowing interest and taxes to accumulate on a mortgage and in executing a new mortgage in renewal of the old mortgage without thereby increasing the hazard of carrying the insurance and avoiding the policy, quaere.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Renewing existing mortgage—burden of proof. A policyholder who claims that a mortgage executed on the insured property subsequent to the issuance of the policy was but a renewal of a smaller mortgage mentioned in the application for insurance must, in his evidence, so account for the increased amount of the mortgage as to show that there was no increase of hazard in carrying the insurance.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Company knowledge of automobile conditional sale. Where claim is made against an automobile insurance company under the collision clause of a policy transferred from one automobile to another on which a conditional sale is outstanding, knowledge of which conditional sale is denied by the company, instructions reviewed and held to properly submit question of company's knowledge and waiver of the conditional sale lien.

Mougin v Ins. Assn., 224-1202; 278 NW 336

Increase of hazard. The provision of a fire insurance policy providing invalidation "if there be a change in the occupancy or use of the property, making the risk more hazardous", is not violated if the building becomes vacant and the hazard is thereby increased.

Danels v Ins. Assn., 213-352; 239 NW 24

Insurable interest—right to redeem from foreclosure. A mortgagor's insurable interest in the mortgaged property does not terminate until the period for redemption has expired.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Waiver. Forfeiture clauses and conditions against transfer of title, encumbrance, and assignment of policies are for the protection of the insurance company against increase of hazard without their knowledge and consent, and therefore may be waived.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 288 NW 868

Estoppel, waiver, or agreement affecting right to forfeit policy. The retention by an insurer of the unearned premium paid on a fire insurance policy does not estop the insurer from pleading the invalidity of the policy consequent on the sale of the insured property and the assignment of the policy before loss without the knowledge of the insurer, when such knowledge came to the insurer only after loss had occurred.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 220-984; 263 NW 46

Estoppel—recognizing transfer. In equitable action against a mutual insurance association to require the completion of an assignment of a policy and to recover for fire loss, the association was, under the evidence, estopped from asserting that policy was not properly assigned, where plaintiff's grantor delivered policy to office of association's secretary for purpose of having the assignment completed and where the association recognized transfer of property to plaintiff and his ownership in the policy by mailing to him a notice of assessment thereon.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 288 NW 868

Cancellation in equity. Equity will not, after a claim has arisen on an insurance policy, entertain jurisdiction to cancel the policy unless exceptional circumstances render cancellation necessary for the protection of the insurer.

Bankers Life v Bennett, 220-922; 263 NW 44

Invalidating conditions—specially pleaded. In equitable action against mutual insurance association where defendant admitted that property in question was insured under a fire policy, defendant's contention that a certain transfer of the property had invalidated the policy, having not been pleaded as a special defense, was not in issue under the pleadings.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 288 NW 868

8982 Arbitration agreements.

Agreement for appraisal. See under §8976, Vol I

Optional arbitration—nonpremature action. When the provision for arbitration in a policy of insurance is purely optional, an action on the policy, brought immediately after the arbitrators have failed to agree as to the loss, is not premature even tho the bylaws provide that the loss is not payable until 30 days after the arbitrators have rendered their decision.

Hansell v Ins. Assn., 209-378; 228 NW 88

Inadequate award—fraud—effect. Equity will vacate a grossly inadequate award by arbitrators, especially when an element of fraud exists in the appointment and proceedings of the arbitrators.

Koopman v Ins. Assn., 209-958; 229 NW 221

8983 Right to rebuild.

Election to rebuild—effect. Principle reaffirmed that an insurer converts a fire insurance policy into a building contract by electing, under the policy, to rebuild the damaged property.

Cocklin v Ins. Assn., 207-4; 222 NW 368

Default in rebuilding—measure of damages. An insurer who elects to rebuild a fire-damaged building, and so substantially fails to restore the building to its condition just prior to the fire that the insured must tear down and rebuild the structure, must respond in damages to the extent of the difference between the value of the structure before the fire and its value as defectively reconstructed; but the insurer may not, in addition, be mulcted in damages for loss of rentals.

Cocklin v Ins. Assn., 207-4; 222 NW 368

Substantial replacement—evidence. On the issue whether an insurance company, in rebuilding a fire-damaged building, had substantially restored it to the condition existing before the fire, evidence of the condition of the building just prior to the fire is manifestly material.

Cocklin v Ins. Assn., 207-4; 222 NW 368

8984 Pleadings.

Insurance policy admitted by pleadings. In an action to recover on a policy of fire insurance where the plaintiff's petition, a petition of intervention, and the answer to the petition of intervention all agreed that the policy was issued on a certain date and that it covered the same property that was covered by the mortgage and by another insurance contract issued by the intervenor, the record was not fatally deficient when it contained no evidence of the execution of the policy.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

8986 Notice and proof of loss—limitation of actions.

Contract limitations—unreasonableness. A provision in a contract of insurance which prohibits the bringing of an action earlier than 60 days or later than 90 days after loss is unreasonable per se and void.

Page Co. v Deposit Co., 205-798; 216 NW 957

Inapplicable provisions of policy. The provisions in a policy of insurance (a) that "no agent has authority to change this policy or to waive any of its provisions", and (b) that "no change shall be made in the policy unless approved by an executive officer of the insurer and the approval be indorsed hereon", have application to the provisions of the policy relating to the formation and continuance of the contract and not to the conditions which are to be performed after loss, e. g., the giving of notice of loss.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

Nonpremature action. An action brought some 11 months after loss is not premature when the insurer has by his conduct waived proofs of loss.

Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Notice and proof of loss—"as soon as practicable". A policy requirement that written notice of an accident shall be given "as soon as practicable" means that said notice shall be given within a reasonable length of time under all the facts and circumstances. So held in a case where the insured inadvertently lost his policy and forgot the name of the insurer until some five months after liability accrued on the policy.

Gifford v Cas. Co., 216-23; 248 NW 235

Notice and proof of loss—waiver. When evidence would warrant the jury in finding that an employee of an insurer had apparent authority to adjust a loss, the statement of such employee to a fellow employee and communicated to parties interested in the loss as claimants, to the effect that the insurer "would pay the loss", is admissible on the issue whether the insurer had waived proofs of loss.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Waiver. Failure of an insured to file written proofs of loss, becomes inconsequential when, commencing with the loss and for a long time thereafter, the insurer had promised to pay the loss.

Mortimer v Ins. Assn., 217-1246; 249 NW 405

Waiver. The act of the insurer in examining the insured premises after loss and thereupon denying all liability, constitutes a waiver of proofs of loss, even tho the insurer makes an offer of settlement.

Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Waiver. A policy provision to the effect that when a partial loss of a crop is occasioned by hail, the insured shall, by a certain date, furnish the insurer an account or statement of the crop harvested, is waived when, before the date in question, the insurer unequivocally denies liability under the policy.

Larsen & Son v Ins. Co., 212-943; 237 NW 468
Richardson v Ins. Assn., 214-30; 241 NW 414

Reliance on waiver. On the issue of waiver of proofs of loss under a fire insurance policy, a party who had been directed by the insured to attend to the collection of the loss may testify that he learned from a soliciting agent of the insurer the fact that the company's adjuster had stated that the loss would be paid, and that he relied on such statement and took no further steps toward presenting proofs of loss.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Waiver—pleading. Waiver of proofs of loss is sufficiently presented by pleading the facts constituting waiver, even tho the pleader does not allege the legal conclusion of waiver; and especially so when the pleadings are unquestioned in the trial court.

Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Waiver — sufficient plea. An allegation, in an action on a policy of insurance, that plaintiff, within the contract time, orally notified a general agent of the insurer of his injury, and that said agent agreed that he would give proper and timely notice to the insurer, is a sufficient plea of waiver of the insured's duty to give written notice of the loss, and sufficient to support the admission of evidence that the agent had sufficient power to waive said written notice.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

Waiver — jury question. A promise by an adjuster of an insurance company, made after he had investigated the loss, that the loss would be paid, coupled with other conduct on the part of the insurer indicating a purpose not to require proofs of loss, creates a jury question on the issue of waiver of such proof.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Delay in pleading—abatement. Defendant's right to plead in abatement is wholly lost when delayed until the plaintiff might legally have brought his action.

Larsen & Son v Ins. Co., 212-943; 237 NW 468

8994 Signing of rider.

Unsigned rider. A coinsurance rider which is not signed by the insured is a nullity though it is attached to the policy.

Neiman v Ins. Co., 202-1172; 211 NW 710

8996 Stipulation as to prorating.

Proration of fire losses. See under §9018 (XVI)

Burden of proof on insurer to show right to prorate.

Cole v Ins. Co., 201-979; 205 NW 3

Accident insurance—death benefit not proratable. A death benefit is not proratable, under a policy of accident insurance against death, specified injuries, loss of time, surgeon's fees, etc., which contains a clause (violated by the insured) that, if the insured, without written notice to the insurer, carry other insurance in other companies, covering the same loss, the insurer "shall be liable only for such portion of the indemnity promised as said indemnity bears to the total amount of like indemnity in all policies covering such loss".

Wahl v Acc. Assn., 201-1355; 207 NW 395;
50 ALR 1374

Accident insurance—prorating clause—"same loss" negatively defined. Divers accident insurance policies issued to the same insured may not be deemed to cover the "same loss", within the meaning of an attempted prorating clause concerning death benefits, when the recipients of said benefits under each policy are different from the recipients under any other policy.

Wahl v Acc. Assn., 201-1355; 207 NW 395;
50 ALR 1374

9002 "Soliciting agent" defined.

Implied authority. The act of an insurance company at its policy-issuing office, and in response to the request of its soliciting agent, in attaching a "loss payable" clause to a theretofore issued policy of fire insurance, and in returning said policy to its said agent with said clause unsigned, impliedly authorizes said agent to sign said clause on behalf of said insurer.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 220-984; 263 NW 46

Authority of agent—burden. Plaintiff as the assignee before loss of a policy of fire insurance has the burden, in case of loss and action on the policy, to show that the insurer consented to the assignment. If the consent is in the form of a writing signed by a purported agent of the insurer said assignee must show the agent's authority. Of course, the insurer may negative such showing of authority.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 215-665; 246 NW 615

Authority—evidence. Evidence held to show that the authority of an agent ceased upon the delivery of a policy, and that his subsequent knowledge of the execution of a mortgage on the insured premises would not be imputed to the insurer.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Knowledge of agent. The knowledge of a soliciting agent that the insured understood that he was to receive a policy which would permit additional insurance will, on the issue of reformation, be imputed to the insurer, even tho not communicated to the latter.

Smith v Ins. Co., 201-363; 207 NW 334

Agents—imputable and nonimputable knowledge. Knowledge on the part of a mere soliciting agent of an insurance company is imputable to his principal when such knowledge is acquired in connection with an application for insurance. Knowledge acquired by such agent subsequent to the issuance of the policy, and relative to an act which invalidates the policy, is not so imputable.

Green v Ins. Co., 215-1220; 247 NW 660

Nonimputed knowledge and promises. The knowledge and promises of an agent employed, paid by, and working for a general agent of an insurance company, with no authority except to solicit insurance for his principal, the general agent, may not be imputed to the insurance company.

Neiman v Ins. Co., 205-119; 217 NW 258

When knowledge imputed to insurer. The information imparted to the soliciting agent of an insurer by the applicant for insurance, as to the particular kind of insurance required by the applicant, will be imputed to the insurer.

Green v Ins. Co., 218-1131; 253 NW 36

Removal of property to new location. A standard policy of insurance on personal property at a specified location, issued in strict accord with the application for such insurance, does not cover a loss of the same property at another location to which it is removed without the consent of the insurer; and testimony that the soliciting agent through whom the policy was obtained orally promised that he would have the policy so issued as to cover the property at either location is wholly inadmissible.

Garton v Ins. Co., 215-1213; 247 NW 639

Sale and assignment of policy—consent of insurer. The grantee of property insured under a statutory, standard policy of fire insurance (§9018, C., '35) and the assignee of said policy, before loss, has the burden, in an action on the policy in his own behalf, to prove that said conveyance of the property and assignment of the policy were consented to or acquiesced in by the insurer through some agent of the insurer who had authority so to consent or acquiesce.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 220-984; 263 NW 46

Extending period for insurance. A recording or policy-issuing agent has authority to agree to an extension of the life of a policy, as written, in order to cover an additional period equal to that during which the insurer claimed the policy stood suspended and for which the insured had paid the premium.

Fillgraf v Ins. Co., 218-1335; 256 NW 421

Oral application. An oral application for additional insurance under an existing policy and the payment of the premium for such additional insurance to an agent whose authority is limited to the taking and forwarding of applications do not render the additional insurance effective until the insurer in the orderly and timely course of its business approves the said application.

Fenley v Ins. Co., 215-1369; 245 NW 332; 247 NW 635

9003 Agent—general definition.

License—admissibility. The written request of an insurance company to the commissioner of insurance for a license for a named agent "to transact its authorized business" is admissible for the purpose of showing that said person was the company's agent, but not for the purpose of showing the scope of the powers of such agent.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 218-720; 253 NW 821

9004 Agent—specific definition.

Oral contract—authority. The statutory provision that a soliciting agent of an insurer shall be deemed to have authority to transact all business within the scope of his employment, does not render the insurer liable on an oral contract which said agent, in fact, had no authority to make.

Chambers v Ins. Assn., 214-1353; 242 NW 30

Oral contract—implied authority of agent. An insurance company which, in the issuance of policies against loss by hail, customarily dates said policies from the date of the insured's written application therefor, and not from the date of the acceptance by the company of such applications, must, notwithstanding provisions in said applications to the contrary, be deemed to have impliedly authorized its soliciting agents, on taking such applications, to validly enter into oral, preliminary contracts of insurance covering the period from the date of said applications to the date of their acceptance or rejection.

Boever v Ins. Co., 221-566; 266 NW 276

Assignment of policy—notice to company—consent. Where owner transferred insured property and fire policy to trustee for creditors, the insurance company was not liable to trustee for fire loss on mere notice to insurer of change of ownership, and while the insurance company may consent to carry risk notwithstanding change of ownership or may waive right to assert forfeiture of its policy, its soliciting agent is not authorized to waive terms or conditions of policy, and insurance company must consent to assignment of policy to be liable for loss.

Neiman v Ins. Co., (NOR); 215 NW 244

Effect of agent's mistake or negligence. In negotiations an insured may ordinarily rely upon the integrity of the agent and the insurer cannot take advantage of mistakes or the negligence of its agent not involving fraud or bad faith on the part of the insured.

Conrad v Ins. Assn., 223-828; 273 NW 913

Failure to repudiate unauthorized act. An insurer is bound by the unauthorized act of his agent when he fails to repudiate such act promptly when it comes to his knowledge, and permits and invites the insured to act upon the assumption that the policy is in force.

Terry v Ins. Co., 202-1291; 211 NW 716

Estoppel to dispute power of agent. An insurance company estops itself from asserting that its agent is other than a recording or policy-issuing agent when it furnishes the agent with all blanks and supplies necessary for the actual execution and issuance by him of policies and otherwise recognizes his broad powers, and when a policyholder has relied on the agreement and representation of said agent.

Fillgraf v Ins. Co., 218-1335; 256 NW 421

Authority to waive policy provisions. An insurer which permits its agents to issue a policy in the name of the insurer, to collect the premiums, and to attach riders to the policy, under which it claims advantages, may not say that said agent did not have authority to waive policy provisions.

Neiman v Ins. Co., 202-1172; 211 NW 710

Waiver—declaration of apparent adjuster. When evidence would warrant the jury in finding that an employee of an insurer had apparent authority to adjust a loss, the statement of such employee to a fellow employee and communicated to parties interested in the loss as claimants, to the effect that the insurer "would pay the loss", is admissible on the issue whether the insurer had waived proofs of loss.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Reliance on waiver. On the issue of waiver of proofs of loss under a fire insurance policy, a party who had been directed by the insured to attend to the collection of the loss may testify that he learned from a soliciting agent of the insurer the fact that the company's adjuster had stated that the loss would be paid, and that he relied on such statement and took no further steps toward presenting proofs of loss.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Waiver per se. Whether an insurance company has waived the unauthorized act of its agent becomes a question of law, on nonconflicting testimony.

Terry v Ins. Co., 202-1291; 211 NW 716

Waiver—jury question. A promise by an adjuster of an insurance company, made after he had investigated the loss, that the loss would be paid, coupled with other conduct on the part of the insurer indicating a purpose not to require proofs of loss, creates a jury question on the issue of waiver of such proof.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Enlarged power—jury question. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question whether an insurance company had held out its purported soliciting agent as really having the powers of a recording agent.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 218-720; 253 NW 821

Nonimputed knowledge and promises. The knowledge and promises of an agent employed, paid by, and working for, a general agent of an insurance company, with no authority except to solicit insurance for the general agent, may not be imputed to the insurance company.

Neiman v Ins. Co., 205-119; 217 NW 258

Dual agency—effect. In an action on a policy, a defensive plea that the agent who issued the policy was, without the knowledge of the insurer, interested in the property insured, becomes quite immaterial when it appears that, subsequent to the issuance of the policy and at a time when the issuing agent had been discharged, the insured, for a new consideration, materially modified the contract.

Hawkeye Works v Ins. Co., 202-1270; 211 NW 860

Reciprocal insurance contracts. The specific provisions of an application for a policy of reciprocal insurance, of which provisions the applicant had notice, to the effect that the policy will not be in force, (1) until the application is approved by the insurer, and (2) until the premium is paid, cannot be waived by the insurer's agent entering into a different arrangement relative to said acceptance and payment of premium; §8959 with reference to the procedure in case of nonpayment of premiums and this section not being applicable to reciprocal insurance contracts.

Gisin v Ins. Exch., 219-1373; 261 NW 618

Service on foreign insurer—physician not agent. An Iowa accident insurance association which has not been licensed to transact its business in a foreign state (in which it has neither office, agent, nor property), and whose certificates of insurance are strictly Iowa contracts, cannot be deemed to have subjected itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of such foreign state (1) because a very large number of its certificate holders reside in said foreign state, or (2) because said association, from time to time and by mail from its Iowa office, requests a physician in said foreign state to examine claimants and to report as to accidental injuries received by claimants—it appearing that said physician was under no contract obligation to comply with said requests and to make such examinations tho he had done so for several years and had received a stated fee for each separate examination.

Held, the foreign court, in an action on a certificate, acquired no jurisdiction under process served on said physician.

I PAR. I OF POLICY

(a) FIRE INSURANCE IN GENERAL

Construction of policy—construction against insurer. Principle reaffirmed that an insurance policy will, speaking generally, be construed most favorably to the insured.

Githens v Ins. Co., 201-266; 207 NW 243; 44 ALR 863

Ambiguous language—construction. Ambiguous language employed in an insurance policy must be construed most strongly against the insurer and in favor of the beneficiary of the policy.

Umbarger v Ins. Co., 218-203; 254 NW 87; 36 NCCA 733

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Burning of property by insured—effect on loss-payable clause of mortgage. A condition in a policy of fire insurance that the insurer shall not be liable for loss caused by the design of the insured applies to a mortgagee and prevents recovery by him when his loss-payable clause is made subject to all the conditions of the policy, and when the insured designedly sets fire to the buildings and destroys them.

Carlile v Ins. Assn., 218-248; 254 NW 805

Incendiary fire—jury question. Circumstantial evidence reviewed at length, and held to present a jury question both, (1) on the incendiary nature of a fire, and (2) on the insured's connection therewith.

Natalini v Ins. Co., 219-806; 259 NW 577

"Friendly fires." Insurance against loss and damage "by fire" does not cover loss and damage to eggs consequent on the wick of an oil heating stove in the storage room burning too high, and thereby throwing off a quantity of smoke and soot, and generating excess heat in the storage room—nothing in the room being burned except said wick.

Sigourney Prod. Co. v Ins. Co., 211-1203; 235 NW 284

Waiver of conditions generally. Forfeiture clauses and conditions against transfer of title, encumbrance, and assignment of policies are for the protection of the insurance company against increase of hazard without their knowledge and consent, and therefore may be waived.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 288 NW 868

Details of conversation—legal limits. Details of a conversation between the soliciting agent of an insurance company and the insured, after the issuance of the policy, with reference to a letter to be written by the agent

I PAR. I OF POLICY—concluded

(a) FIRE INSURANCE IN GENERAL—concluded to the company concerning a loss, are not competent when they extend beyond reference to the subject-matter of the letter.

Miller v Fire Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

Right to proceeds—sheriff's deed holder. A second mortgagee who forecloses, and, after redeeming from a first mortgage foreclosure, takes a sheriff's deed, is entitled to the proceeds of a fire insurance policy taken out by the mortgagor for the benefit of the first mortgagee; and this is true even tho the fire occurred during the period for redemption from the second mortgage.

In re Hackbart, 203-763; 210 NW 544; 52 ALR 895

Right to proceeds—title holder (?) or mortgagee (?). A title holder who, for his own personal protection, and at his own expense, takes out insurance, and who is in no manner a party to a mortgage on the premises, except that he has, by deed in escrow, conveyed the property to the mortgagee, on condition that the deed be surrendered to him if he pays the mortgage by a named date, is entitled, in case of loss prior to said named date, to the proceeds of the policy, even tho, subsequent to the loss, he fails to pay the mortgage, and thereby loses the property to the mortgagee.

Canavan v Coleman, 204-901; 216 NW 292

Application of proceeds. The proceeds of fire insurance under a policy payable to the vendor and purchaser of real estate, "as their interests may appear", is not payable to the vendor when, at the time of the loss, the purchaser is in no manner in default on his contract. Such proceeds may be impounded and utilized, on the application of the purchaser, in the rebuilding of the burned structure.

Hatch v Ins. Co., 216-860; 249 NW 164

"Real party in interest"—partial loss paid—insurer's rights. The circuit court of appeals is bound by decisions of federal court in construing a state statute, in the absence of state court's construction on similar facts, so on question of construction of statute providing for the prosecution of an action in the name of the "real party in interest" held, an insurer cannot maintain an action against a defendant causing loss for amount paid insured, after a judgment has been rendered against defendant and in favor of insured for total amount of loss less insurance received, since the right of action for the entire loss is single and cannot be split and separately maintained by the owner and the various insurers who have paid parts of the loss.

Fireman's Ins. v Bremner, 25 F 2d, 75

Negligence in issuing policy. An insurance company, even tho it be a mutual association which resorts to assessments on its members for funds with which to pay losses "and necessary expenses", must respond in damages for its tort in negligently failing to issue a policy which had been duly contracted for.

Mortimer v Ins. Assn., 217-1246; 249 NW 405; 35 NCCA 134

(b) PROPERTY INSURED

Property covered. Under a policy which provides that it covers a stock of merchandise "consisting chiefly of groceries", it may be shown that certain articles which were not groceries were carried as part of the stock, and that such carrying was customary in like stores in the locality in question.

Larsen v Ins. Co., 212-943; 237 NW 468

Location of property—evidence. When the description of the location of insured personal property as inserted in a fire insurance policy is wholly indefinite, evidence is admissible as to the location contemplated by the parties when the policy was executed.

Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

(c) ADDITIONAL INSURANCE

"Additional" and "existing" insurance. A policy which stipulates for its invalidity in case the insured without permission obtains additional insurance is rendered void by the issuance of a second policy which stipulates for its invalidity in case there is existing insurance on the property, when it is made to appear that the second insurer had knowledge of the existence of the first policy when the second policy was issued.

Cornett v Ins. Assn., 208-450; 224 NW 524

Commencement of risk—oral application. An oral application for additional insurance under an existing policy and the payment of the premium for such additional insurance to an agent whose authority is limited to the taking and forwarding of applications do not render the additional insurance effective until the insurer in the orderly and timely course of its business approves the said application.

Fenley v Ins. Co., 215-1369; 245 NW 332; 247 NW 635

II PAR. II OF POLICY(a) LIABILITY LIMITED TO CASH VALUE OF PROPERTY

Fire as proximate cause of breakage. If an automobile takes fire while traveling upon the highway, and said fire is the proximate cause of the car's swerving and going into the ditch and overturning, then a policy of insurance against direct loss or damage from fire covers not only the parts of the car actually burned by the fire, but the parts of the car which were broken or injured by the overturning.

Tracy v Ins. Co., 207-1042; 222 NW 447; 1 NCCA (NS) 313, 319

Damages—evidence supporting trial court's finding. In action on fire insurance policy to recover for damages to dwelling, evidence supported trial court's finding as to amount of damages allowed.

Horn v Ins. Co., 227-1045; 290 NW 8

Water between plastered and outer walls—judicial notice of wood deterioration. It is a matter of common knowledge and one of which the court has a right to take judicial notice, that, when water is confined in a space as between the plastered and outer walls of a building where the air cannot circulate, many times the water will cause a deterioration of the lumber and sometimes cause rotting of the wood.

Horn v Ins. Co., 227-1045; 290 NW 8

(b) TIME OF PAYMENT FOR LOSS

No annotations in this volume

III PAR. III MISREPRESENTATION OR CONCEALMENT

Misrepresentation—mortgages. A truthful representation in an application for insurance as to the mortgages existing on the specifically described land on which the insured building is located, is not rendered a misrepresentation by showing the existence of other mortgages on other and separately described tracts of the same farm.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Concealment of unrecorded mortgage. The concealment by the insured, in his application for fire insurance on property, of the existence of an unrecorded mortgage on the property, of which mortgage the insurer had no knowledge, is fatal to recovery on the policy in case of loss.

Moore v Ins. Assn., 221-953; 266 NW 12

Knowledge of agent. The knowledge of a soliciting agent that the insured understood that he was to receive a policy which would permit additional insurance will, on the issue of reformation, be imputed to the insurer, even tho not communicated to the latter.

Smith v Ins. Co., 201-363; 207 NW 334

Agent—when knowledge imputed to insurer. The information imparted to the soliciting agent of an insurer by the applicant for insurance, as to the particular kind of insurance required by the applicant, will be imputed to the insurer.

Green v Ins. Co., 218-1131; 253 NW 36

Agents—imputable and nonimputable knowledge. Knowledge on the part of a mere soliciting agent of an insurance company is imputable to his principal when such knowledge is acquired in connection with an application for insurance. Knowledge acquired by such agent subsequent to the issuance of the policy, and relative to an act which invalidates the policy, is not so imputable.

Green v Ins. Co., 215-1220; 247 NW 660

IV PAR. IV OF POLICY

Discussion. See 11 ILR 73—Third party rights—fire insurance

(a) OTHER INSURANCE

Other or double insurance. The prohibition in a liability insurance policy against other or double insurance applies to additional insurance on the same interest in the same property.

Amer. Alliance Ins. v Brady Co., 101 F 2d, 144

Additional and existing insurance. A policy which stipulates for its invalidity in case the insured without permission obtains additional insurance is rendered void by the issuance of a second policy which stipulates for its invalidity in case there is existing insurance on the property, when it is made to appear that the second insurer had knowledge of the existence of the first policy when the second policy was issued.

Cornett v Ins. Assn., 208-450; 224 NW 524

Policy of insurance and contract with mortgagee—construed together. A contract by which an insurance company agreed to insure all property on which a mortgagee held mortgages, and a certificate issued by the company when a policy was issued in compliance with the contract, when both referred to an open policy, must be construed together with the open policy so that a statutory provision of the open policy preventing the insured from obtaining additional insurance on his property becomes a part of his contract of insurance.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

Insurance obtained by mortgagee—assignment to insurer when policy voided by insured—mortgage not extinguished. When an insurance company, in addition to insuring property mortgaged to a certain mortgagee, agreed that if any property owner should by any act void the insurance as to himself, the insurance company would purchase from the mortgagee the note and mortgage on the property and obtain an assignment of the mortgagee's rights against the property owner, the company's payment of the amount of a note and mortgage to the mortgagee to obtain an assignment according to the agreement did not extinguish the note and mortgage.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

Validity of policies. Where property was covered by fire insurance policy containing a clause that the policy would be void if other insurance on the property was procured, and where, after obtaining a second policy, the insured sustained a fire loss which the second company compromised and paid the amount thereof into court, the second policy was valid as to the insured to the extent of the amount paid into court, and the first policy which had been obtained to protect a mortgagee was valid as to an assignee of the mortgagee to the extent of the amount paid to obtain an assignment of the mortgage.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

IV PAR. IV OF POLICY—continued

(a) OTHER INSURANCE—concluded

Additional insurance obtained without insurer's consent. An insurance policy containing statutory standard fire policy clause providing that if the insured obtains other insurance the first policy is void, was voided as to the insured when he obtained other insurance on the property without the consent of the insurer, even tho the act of the insured was not an intentional breach of the policy.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

Insurance to protect mortgagee—assignee of mortgagee has no right to proceeds of second policy. When a mortgagor complied with the terms of a mortgage and obtained insurance on property to protect the mortgagee, and then procured another policy, in the absence of a provision in the mortgage or in the second policy making its proceeds payable to the mortgagee, the mortgagee had no interest in funds paid into court as a compromise payment of a fire loss on the second policy. So an assignee from the mortgagee could not collect from the fund the amount paid in obtaining the assignment, as the assignee's rights could rise no higher than those of the assignor.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

Other insurance—invalidity as to one policy, validity as to other. When there are two policies on the same property, and one policy is voided because of prohibited incumbrance, the remaining policy containing no such provision must pay the entire loss.

Mosher v Ins. Co., 212-85; 235 NW 743

Existing, known insurance—waiver. Principle reaffirmed that an insurer may not predicate the invalidity of a policy on the existence of other insurance of which he had knowledge through his agents.

Cornett v Ins. Assn., 208-450; 224 NW 524

(b) NONOPERATION OF MANUFACTURING PLANT

Failure to operate plant. Policy provision reviewed, and held clearly to avoid the effect of the nonoperation of a manufacturing plant.

Hawkeye Works v Ins. Co., 202-1270; 211 NW 860

(c) VACANT OR UNOCCUPIED BUILDING

Policy clause—vacancy—increase of hazard. The provision of a fire insurance policy providing invalidation "if there be a change in the occupancy or use of the property, making the risk more hazardous", is not violated if the building becomes vacant and the hazard is thereby increased.

Danels v Ins. Assn., 213-352; 239 NW 24

(d) UNCONDITIONAL AND SOLE OWNERSHIP

Insurable interest. One who holds the legal title to land in trust for another, and who personally executes his note and secures it by mortgage on the land for the benefit of such other person, has an insurable interest in the buildings on the land.

Boyce v Ins. Assn., 209-11; 227 NW 523
Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Insurable interest—right to redeem from foreclosure. A mortgagor's insurable interest in the mortgaged property does not terminate until the period for redemption has expired.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Change of title—undelivered or void deed. The unconditional and sole ownership of insured property is not changed by the execution and recording by the insured and his wife of a deed of conveyance which is never delivered to the grantee or followed by any change in possession or dominion; nor by the execution and delivery by the said grantee to the insured and to his wife jointly, of a deed of conveyance to the insured property which was executed without consideration and therefore void.

Mosher v Ins. Co., 212-85; 235 NW 743

Evidence of ownership in insured—nominal title in wife. In an action on a fire policy to recover for damages to dwelling where the uncontradicted evidence shows the contract for the purchase of the property was with insured and that he was grantee in the deed and he and his wife substituted her name in the deed to enable them to secure a loan on the premises, there being personal taxes against the insured, and where insured paid the entire purchase price and the wife never claimed to be the owner, the title of the wife being merely nominal, held, there being no change in title in fact, the provision in policy requiring unconditional sole ownership in the insured was not violated.

Horn v Ins. Co., 227-1045; 290 NW 8

Negating presumptive effect of conveyance. Any "presumption" that all "insurable interest" in property is terminated by a conveyance of the property by the insured by warranty deed, tho the consideration named be nominal, is wholly overcome by uncontradicted testimony which is explanatory of the transaction, to wit: that at said time a mortgage debt which had matured on the property was renewed, and that the deed was then executed and delivered, with an oral agreement that the mortgagor-grantor should remain in possession and have a stated time in which to redeem. Especially is this true inasmuch as the law would, under such circumstances, create a presumption substantially equivalent to the said oral agreement.

Morton Ins. v Farquhar, 200-1206; 206 NW 123

Title—waiver and estoppel. An insured is estopped to plead that a policy issued to an administrator was void for lack of insurable interest when such insurer knew, when the policy was issued, and when the premiums were paid, that the policy was for the sole benefit of the estate.

Jack v Ins. Assn., 205-1294; 217 NW 816

Ownership—inadvertent plea. An inadvertent pleading to the effect that a person other than plaintiff had an interest in the insured property, becomes of no consequence when the pleading was duly corrected and when the proofs conclusively establish sole ownership in plaintiff.

Havirland v Ins. Co., 204-335; 213 NW 762

Subrogation—contract for by carrier. A contract provision to the effect that a lessor railway company "shall have full benefit of any insurance effected by the lessee on structures erected on the leased premises" is valid and enforceable if the lessor has an insurable interest in the property.

Queen Ins. v Railway, 201-1072; 206 NW 804

(e) NONINTEREST OF INSURED IN REALTY

Change in title—nullifying effect. A standard fire insurance policy is wholly voided by a conveyance of the insured property by the owner thereof, after the execution of the policy, and without the knowledge or consent of the insurer, even tho the conveying owner had no knowledge of said insurance. So held in an action at law on a policy taken out in the name of the owner by a mortgagee on his own motion to protect said mortgagee's interest.

Green v Ins. Co., 215-1220; 247 NW 660

Contract of sale not sale. A policy provision to the effect that any "selling or transferring" of the insured property shall, in the absence of a specified notice to the insurer "after transfer of the property", automatically cancel the insurance is not violated by the mere execution of a contract of sale of said property providing for delivery of possession at a specified future date—the loss occurring prior to said date.

Kiser v Ins. Assn., 216-928; 249 NW 753

Change in ownership—failure to give notice—effect. The contract duty of a mortgagee under a so-called standard or New York mortgage payment clause (attached to a policy of fire insurance) to give the insurer notice of a "change in ownership" of the insured property has no application to a transaction wherein the mortgagee takes absolute deed to the insured property in satisfaction of the secured debt. Such deed works no "change in ownership" but simply an increase in the mortgagee's interest.

Union Ins. Co. v County Assn., 222-964; 270 NW 398

Appointment of receiver not "sale". The appointment of a receiver of the property of an insured, and the possession of the property by the receiver, do not constitute a "sale" of the property within the meaning of a clause invalidating the policy in case of a sale.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Insurable interest—right to redeem from foreclosure. A mortgagor's insurable interest in the mortgaged property does not terminate until the period for redemption has expired.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

(f) CHANGE IN INTEREST, TITLE, POSSESSION, OR USE

Forfeiture—strict construction required. Principle applied that forfeiture provisions in a policy of insurance must be strictly construed against the insurer.

Kiser v Ins. Assn., 216-928; 249 NW 753

Increase of hazard. The provision of a fire insurance policy providing invalidation "if there be a change in the occupancy or use of the property, making the risk more hazardous", is not violated if the building becomes vacant and the hazard is thereby increased.

Danels v Ins. Assn., 213-352; 239 NW 24

Change in title—nullifying effect. A standard fire insurance policy is wholly voided by a conveyance of the insured property by the owner thereof, after the execution of the policy, and without the knowledge or consent of the insurer, even tho the conveying owner had no knowledge of said insurance. So held in an action at law on a policy taken out in the name of the owner by a mortgagee on his own motion to protect said mortgagee's interest.

Green v Ins. Co., 215-1220; 247 NW 660

Conveyance and reconveyance—noninvalidating. A conveyance, without consideration, by a husband to his wife of a stock of insured goods with the intent to place the goods beyond the reach of his apprehended creditors, without any actual change of possession or use taking place, followed later by a reconveyance, without consideration, by the wife to the husband, constitutes no such change in the interest or title of the insured as will void the policy, the wife never having had any financial interest in the property.

McVay v Ins. Co., 218-402; 252 NW 548

Sale of part of property—effect. The sale of a part of the stock of insured goods does not invalidate the insurance on the part not sold.

Larsen v Ins. Co., 212-943; 237 NW 468

Sale by partner—effect. Assuming that one partner has no authority to sell the partnership property without the consent of the other partner, and thereby invalidate the insurance, yet where such sale was not rescinded it must necessarily be deemed a legally completed sale.

Larsen v Ins. Co., 212-943; 237 NW 468

IV PAR. IV OF POLICY—continued

(f) CHANGE IN INTEREST, TITLE, POSSESSION, OR USE—continued

Change in ownership—failure to give notice—effect. The contract duty of a mortgagee under a so-called standard or New York mortgage payment clause (attached to a policy of fire insurance) to give the insurer notice of a “change in ownership” of the insured property has no application to a transaction wherein the mortgagee takes absolute deed to the insured property in satisfaction of the secured debt. Such deed works no “change in ownership” but simply an increase in the mortgagee’s interest.

Union Ins. v Ins. Assn., 222-964; 270 NW 398

Change of ownership—deed to mortgagee not such change. In a fire insurance policy with an attached uniform standard Iowa mortgage clause providing for loss payment to a mortgagee as such interest appears, a provision requiring notice to the insurer of a “change of ownership” of the insured property has no application when the mortgagor quitclaims to the mortgagee in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, for such deed is not an ownership change but only an increase in mortgagee’s interest.

Guaranty Ins. v Ins. Assn., 224-1207; 278 NW 913

Change in title—nonassignment of policy. An insurer who knows, through his agent, that the property covered by the policy has been transferred to another, and continues to treat the policy as in force by collecting and retaining the premiums, may not thereafter defensively assert such change of title or that no formal transfer of the policy had been made.

Neiman v Ins. Co., 202-1172; 211 NW 710

Executory contract of sale. A policy provision to the effect that any “selling or transferring” of the insured property shall, in the absence of a specified notice to the insurer “after transfer of the property”, automatically cancel the insurance is not violated by the mere execution of a contract of sale of said property providing for delivery of possession at a specified future date—the loss occurring prior to said date.

Kiser v Ins. Assn., 216-928; 249 NW 753

Nonintent to pass title. Proof that an insured, after the issuance of a policy, and without notice to the insurer, executed, physically delivered, and permitted to be recorded an unqualified warranty deed to the insured property, establishes, prima facie, an automatic forfeiture of the policy when the policy provides that such forfeiture shall follow any “sale or transfer” of the property without notice; but evidence is admissible, under proper plea, in avoidance of the apparent forfeiture, to show that there was no completed sale or transfer in fact—that the insured-grantor and grantee mutually understood and agreed that such execution, delivery, and recording should not have the effect to pass title until a future date; but ordinarily such evidence can only generate a jury question on the issue of intent to pass title.

Kiser v Ins. Assn., 213-18; 237 NW 328

Appointment of receiver not “sale”. The appointment of a receiver of the property of an insured, and the possession of the property by the receiver, do not constitute a “sale” of the property within the meaning of a clause invalidating the policy in case of a sale.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Transfer to creditors’ trustee. Where owner transferred insured property and fire policy to trustee for creditors, the insurance company was not liable to trustee for fire loss on mere notice to insurer of change of ownership, and while the insurance company may consent to carry risk notwithstanding change of ownership or may waive right to assert forfeiture of its policy, its soliciting agent is not authorized to waive terms or conditions of policy, and insurance company must consent to assignment of policy to be liable for loss.

Neiman v Ins. Co., (NOR); 215 NW 244

Change in title—nonimputed knowledge and promises. The knowledge and promises of an agent employed, paid by, and working for, a general agent of an insurance company, with no authority except to solicit insurance for his principal, the general agent, may not be imputed to the insurance company.

Neiman v Ins. Co., 205-119; 217 NW 258

Waiver of conditions generally. Forfeiture clauses and conditions against transfer of title, encumbrance, and assignment of policies are for the protection of the insurance company against increase of hazard without their knowledge and consent, and therefore may be waived.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 238 NW 868

Estoppel—recognizing transfer. In equitable action against a mutual insurance association to require the completion of an assignment of a policy and to recover for fire loss, the association was, under the evidence, estopped from asserting that policy was not properly assigned, where plaintiff’s grantor delivered policy to office of association’s secretary for purpose of having the assignment completed and where the association recognized transfer of property to plaintiff and his ownership in the policy by mailing to him a notice of assessment thereon.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 238 NW 868

Pursuing noninconsistent remedies. A policyholder who, in an action at law, pleads that the insurer has waived that provision of the policy which invalidates the insurance in case of a change in the title to the insured property, and is unsuccessful on appeal in sustaining said plea, does not thereby make such an election of remedies as will prevent him, after remand, from amending and praying in equity that the policy be so reformed as to eliminate the invalidating provision.

Green v Ins. Co., 218-1131; 253 NW 36

Transfer of property—specially pleaded. In equitable action against mutual insurance association where defendant admitted that property in question was insured under a fire policy, defendant's contention that a certain transfer of the property had invalidated the policy, having not been pleaded as a special defense, was not in issue under the pleadings.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 288 NW 868

Conveyance—retention of premiums—effect. The retention by an insurer of all premiums paid on a policy of fire insurance does not work a waiver of, or estoppel to plead, the defense that the policy was invalidated by a conveyance of the insured property without the knowledge of the insurer until after loss had occurred.

Green v Ins. Co., 215-1220; 247 NW 660

(g) INCUMBRANCES OR LIENS PROHIBITED

Unauthorized mortgage. A standard fire insurance policy is wholly voided as to a subject matter therein covered by the policy, if said subject matter is, subsequent to the issuance of the policy, voluntarily mortgaged by the insured without the consent of the insurer; and in such case it is quite immaterial that the insured made no formal, written application for the policy.

Greco v Ins. Co., 219-150; 257 NW 201

Mortgage—noninvalidating effect. A provision to the effect that a policy shall be invalidated by the creation of a lien on the insured property without the consent of the insurer is not violated by the execution of a mortgage as security for claims which are already liens on the property by operation of statutory law.

Jack v Ins. Assn., 205-1294; 217 NW 816

Recordation of mortgage—effect. The due recordation of a mortgage on insured property does not, in and of itself, carry to the insurer any notice or knowledge which can thereafter have any bearing on the acceptance of premiums on the insurance.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Renewal of mortgage. As to how far an insured may go in allowing interest and taxes to accumulate on a mortgage and in executing a new mortgage in renewal of the old mortgage without thereby increasing the hazard of carrying the insurance and avoiding the policy, quaere.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Renewal of mortgage—effect on forfeiture. The fact that a mortgage executed on the subject-matter of the insurance after the policy was issued was a renewal of a former mortgage is, on the question of forfeiture of the policy, quite immaterial when the insurer has no knowledge of either mortgage.

Greco v Ins. Co., 219-150; 257 NW 201

Renewing existing mortgage—burden of proof. A policyholder who claims that a mortgage executed on the insured property subsequent to the issuance of the policy was but a renewal of a smaller mortgage mentioned in the application for insurance must, in his evidence, so account for the increased amount of the mortgage as to show that there was no increase of hazard in carrying the insurance.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

Failure to reveal mortgages when not asked. A policy of insurance is not invalidated because the insured did not, in his written application, reveal the existence of mortgages on the property when he was not questioned concerning the mortgages.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Concealment of unrecorded mortgage. The concealment by the insured, in his application for fire insurance on property, of the existence of an unrecorded mortgage on the property, of which mortgage the insurer had no knowledge, is fatal to recovery on the policy in case of loss.

Moore v Ins. Assn., 221-953; 266 NW 12

Delivery of mortgage—actual or constructive delivery. The delivery of a mortgage on insured property, in order to have the effect of invalidating the insurance on the property, may be actual or constructive, and reversible error results from requiring the jury to find an actual delivery when the record might justify a finding of constructive delivery.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 218-559; 255 NW 705

Delivery of mortgages—jury question. Record held to present a jury question whether mortgages, alleged to have voided a policy of insurance, had been delivered.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 218-559; 255 NW 705

Invalidating mortgage—burden of proof. Proof by an insurer that a mortgage on the insured property was, without his consent, signed and recorded subsequent to the issuance of the policy presumptively establishes the execution and delivery of said mortgage, yet, the insurer is not entitled to an instruction that the burden of proof is, by such proof, shifted to the insured; but the insurer would, on request, be entitled to an instruction that, in view of such proof, the insured would not be entitled to recover unless he proceeds to negative the presumption aforesaid.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 218-559; 255 NW 705

IV PAR. IV OF POLICY—concluded

(g) INCUMBRANCES OR LIENS PROHIBITED—concluded

Mortgage — instruction — amplification. Instruction as to the effect of knowledge, on the part of an insurance agent, of an existing mortgage on the insured property held correct as far as it went, and to impose on defendant the obligation to request amplification relative to the effect of knowledge acquired by the agent when he was not transacting the business of defendant.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 218-559; 255 NW 705

(h) REMOVAL OF PROPERTY PROHIBITED

Removal of property to new location. A standard policy of insurance on personal property at a specified location, issued in strict accord with the application for such insurance, does not cover a loss of the same property at another location to which it is removed without the consent of the insurer; and testimony that the soliciting agent through whom the policy was obtained orally promised that he would have the policy so issued as to cover the property at either location is wholly inadmissible.

Garton v Ins. Co., 215-1213; 247 NW 639

Change in location—negligence. An insurer may estop himself from pleading nonliability on the policy, because of a change in location of the insured property, by negligently delaying (until after the fire, and after an authorized and favorable examination) the execution of the written consent to such change in location.

Bemisdarfer v Ins. Assn., 217-770; 252 NW 551

(i) ASSIGNMENT OF POLICY

Oral assignment—validity. An oral assignment of a policy of fire insurance is valid (especially when the insurer consents thereto) and is prior in right to a subsequent assignment.

Boyce v Ins. Assn., 209-11; 227 NW 523

Sale and assignment of policy—consent of insurer—burden of proof. The grantee of property insured under a statutory, standard policy of fire insurance and the assignee of said policy, before loss, has the burden, in an action on the policy in his own behalf, to prove that said conveyance of the property and assignment of the policy were consented to or acquiesced in by the insurer thru some agent of the insurer who had authority so to consent or acquiesce.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 215-665; 246 NW 615

Stoner v Ins. Co., 220-984; 263 NW 46

Notice to company—consent. Where owner transferred insured property and fire policy to trustee for creditors, the insurance company was not liable to trustee for fire loss on mere notice to insurer of change of ownership, and while the insurance company may consent to carry risk notwithstanding change of ownership or may waive right to assert forfeiture of its policy, its soliciting agent is not authorized to waive terms or conditions of policy, and insurance company must consent to assignment of policy to be liable for loss.

Neiman v Ins. Co., (NOR); 215 NW 244

Assignment after loss—effect. Principle reaffirmed that after a loss occurs under a policy of insurance, the beneficiary may assign his right of action against the insurer without the consent of the insurer.

Welch v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Sheriff's deed holder — mortgagor's insurance. A second mortgagee who forecloses and, after redeeming from a first mortgage foreclosure, takes a sheriff's deed, is entitled to the proceeds of a fire insurance policy taken out by the mortgagor for the benefit of the first mortgagee; and this is true even tho the fire occurred during the period for redemption from the second mortgage.

In re Hackbart, 203-763; 210 NW 544; 53 ALR 895

Retention of premium may work no estoppel. The retention by an insurer of the unearned premium paid on a fire insurance policy does not estop the insurer from pleading the invalidity of the policy consequent on the sale of the insured property and the assignment of the policy before loss without the knowledge of the insurer, when such knowledge came to the insurer only after loss had occurred.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 220-984; 263 NW 46

V PAR. V OF POLICY

Damage "by fire"—expanding force of ignited gas. A policy of insurance against damage by fire (and which does not except damage by explosion) covers a damage resulting solely from the expanding force of a sheet of flame caused by the accidental ignition of inflammable gas in the basement of the insured building. And this is true tho no part of the building itself was burned.

Scully v Ins. Assn., 215-368; 245 NW 280

Unpleaded defense—evidence. In an action on policy of fire insurance, evidence that the fire was of incendiary origin and that the property was, at the time of the fire, being used for an unlawful purpose, is inadmissible in the absence of a defensive plea to that effect.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

VI PAR. VI OF POLICY

(a) ACTS OF VIOLENCE, WAR, OR THEFT

Condition subsequent—burden of proof. In an action on a policy of fire insurance which excepts loss "by theft or neglect", the burden to establish the theft or neglect is on the insurer.

Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

(b) NEGLECT OF INSURED

No annotations in this volume

(c) EXPLOSION OR LIGHTNING

Explosion caused by hostile fire. Damages resulting solely from an explosion which is caused by a hostile fire in an insured building are recoverable under a policy which insures "against all direct loss or damages by fire", even tho the policy exempts the insurer from "loss caused directly or indirectly by explosion of any kind unless fire ensues, and in that event for damages by fire only".

Githens v Ins. Co., 201-266; 207 NW 243; 44 ALR 863

Actions on policies—evidence. Evidence that partly burned garments were found in a room adjoining that part of the building injured by an explosion may be admissible as bearing on the issue whether a fire existed in the attic of the injured building and whether such fire caused the explosion in question.

Githens v Ins. Co., 201-266; 207 NW 243; 44 ALR 863

VII PAR. VII PREMIUMS, FAILURE TO PAY

Additional annotations. See under §8959

Unliquidated set-off in favor of insured—effect. Whether the existence of an unliquidated disputed right of set-off may be made use of by an insured to obviate the suspension of a policy of insurance due to nonpayment of premiums or assessments, quaere.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1020; 226 NW 777

Evidence of levy and nonpayment. Evidence held insufficient to establish either that an assessment had been levied or that the assessment had not been paid, if levied.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

VIII PAR. VIII FALLING BUILDINGS

No annotations in this volume

IX PAR. IX PERSONAL PROPERTY—COVERAGE

Location of property—evidence. When the description of the location of insured personal property as inserted in a fire insurance policy is wholly indefinite, evidence is admissible as to the location contemplated by the parties when the policy was executed.

Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

X PAR. X COPIES REFERRED TO IN POLICY—REPRESENTATION—NONWARRANTY

Attaching copy of premium note—insufficiency. A premium note for $100 which does not show the policy number is not a true copy of a premium note for $128 which does show the policy number, even tho the maker of the note was entitled to and was given a credit on the note for $28.

Nolte v Ins. Co., 208-716; 224 NW 50

XI PAR. XI CANCELLATION, SURRENDER, RESCISSION, OR REFORMATION

Additional annotations. See under §§8959, 8960

Reformation—evidence to be clear and satisfactory. A court of equity will only reform a written instrument when it is moved to do so by clear and satisfactory evidence of a mutual mistake or other reason for reformation.

Knott v Ins. Co., 228- ; 290 NW 91

Forfeiture of policy—dual statutes governing. Cancellation of an insurance policy for nonpayment of premium is governed by §8959, C., '31; other cancellations by this section.

Ryerson v Ins. Co., 213-524; 239 NW 64

Burden of proof. The burden of proving cancellation of a fire insurance policy is on the insurer who denies liability thereunder.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

Mutual cancellation by parties—policy method not exclusive. An insurance policy may be canceled by mutual consent of the parties, without resorting to the method provided in the policy.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

Cancellation contrary to bylaws. A mutual insurance company which, in its bylaws, provides for the cancellation of a policy by giving notice "in person or by registered letter", and which in its attempt to cancel a policy ignores its own bylaws and attempts to give notice by an unregistered letter, must prove that said letter actually reached the insuree, and the presumption of delivery attending the mailing of such letter and the positive testimony that such letter was never received by the insuree are of equal probative force; therefore, the insurer has not established the receipt of said notice by the insuree.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Cancellation—ineffectual notice. A policy of fire insurance, silent as to the post-office address of the insured, is not canceled, for nonpayment of a premium note, by a registered notice of cancellation addressed to the insured at the post-office address employed in dating

XI PAR. XI CANCELLATION, SURRENDER, RESCISSION, OR REFORMATION—continued

the policy, when such place had never been the post-office address of the insured, and when, owing to no fault of the insured, said notice was never delivered to him; and this is true tho the postal authorities forwarded said mail matter to the post office through which the insured received mail by rural delivery.

Ryerson v Ins. Co., 213-524; 239 NW 64

Cancellation—10-day requirement—shorter demand on mortgagee ineffectual. As affecting a mortgagee's interest in a fire insurance policy containing a cancellation clause upon 10 days notice, the insurer's written request upon mortgagee to return the policy, occurring less than 10 days before a fire loss, is not a cancellation barring recovery thereunder.

Guaranty Ins. v Ins. Assn., 224-1207; 278 NW 913

Failure to pay illegal assessment—nonforfeiture. An assessment on the policyholders of a mutual insurance association, made by the board of directors at a duly called meeting, is not a legal assessment and no forfeiture of a policy can be based on the nonpayment of such assessment, when the articles of incorporation provide that an executive committee consisting of the president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer shall meet quarterly (and specially on call of the president) and make all assessments; and this is true even tho all said officers were present at said directors' meeting but as directors.

Maasdam v Ins. Assn., 222-162; 268 NW 491

Status after termination of policy. Upon the insolvency of an insurance company, and upon the cancellation of its policies by the permanent appointment of a receiver, the policyholders remain policyholders as to every right then accrued to them under their policies.

State v Cas. Co., 206-988; 221 NW 585

Unearned premiums—establishment against trust fund. A policyholder who has actually paid the premium under an Iowa standard form of insurance policy has a right, upon the insolvency of the company, and upon the conceded cancellation of the policy by the appointment of a permanent receiver, to have his claim for unearned premiums established against a trust fund which has been created "for the protection of policyholders".

State v Cas. Co., 206-988; 221 NW 585

"Suspension" and "cancellation" compared. The suspension of a policy of insurance is not synonymous with cancellation of the policy.

Federal Bank v Ins. Assn., 217-1098; 253 NW 52

Suspension — nonpayment of assessment — waiver. Evidence held insufficient to establish waiver of the suspension of a policy because of nonpayment of an assessment.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1020; 226 NW 777

Nonpayment of premiums—effect. A policy of fire insurance for a named period in a mutual company is not automatically suspended by the nonpayment of an assessment when the policy contains no provision for suspension, but simply a declaration that the association shall not be liable for any loss if the insured fails to pay any assessment when due "provided the association shall give the insured notice as required by law". In other words, the insurer, in order to escape liability because of such nonpayment, must cancel the policy under §9054, C., '31.

Federal Bank v Ins. Assn., 217-1098; 253 NW 52

Agents—extending period for insurance. A recording or policy-issuing agent has authority to agree to an extension of the life of a policy, as written, in order to cover an additional period equal to that during which the insurer claimed the policy stood suspended and for which the insured had paid the premium.

Fillgraf v Ins. Co., 218-1335; 256 NW 421

Policy reformable. A mutual mistake as to the location of insured buildings is reformable.

Jack v Ins. Assn., 205-1294; 217 NW 816

Reformation of policy—knowledge of agent. The knowledge of a soliciting agent that the insured understood that he was to receive a policy which would permit additional insurance will, on the issue of reformation, be imputed to the insurer, even tho not communicated to the latter.

Smith v Ins. Co., 201-363; 207 NW 334

Reformation for mutual mistake. Proof that in the execution of two policies of insurance the insurer and insured intended one policy to cover a set of farm buildings on one tract of land, and the other policy to cover a set of farm buildings on another tract of land, but that in the execution of the policies the descriptions of the two sets of buildings were inadvertently interchanged, establishes mutual mistake with resulting right to a reformation of the policies, even after loss.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Evidence — sufficiency. Evidence held to clearly and convincingly show a mutual mistake in the execution of a policy of insurance.

Sargent v Ins. Co., 218-430; 253 NW 613

Evidence — sufficiency. Evidence held to justify the reformation of a policy of fire insurance by eliminating therefrom the provision which invalidated the insurance in case of a change in the title to the insured property.

Green v Ins. Co., 218-1131; 253 NW 36

Absence of required plea. A plea of fraud, accident, or mistake, is a condition precedent to the right to reform any written instrument.

Sargent v Ins. Co., 217-225; 251 NW 71

Moot questions. Questions with reference to the reformation of a policy of insurance will not be reviewed on appeal when it appears that the policy has expired by its own terms, and without loss.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

XII PAR. XII INTEREST OF THIRD PARTY IN PROPERTY

Covenant for insurance does not run with land. A covenant by a mortgagor to keep the buildings on the mortgaged premises insured for the benefit of the mortgagee is entirely personal in character, and does not run with the land. Where a mortgagor obtained a policy payable to himself, and later sold the premises to one who did not assume the mortgage, and assigned the policy, held that the grantee, upon discovering that the policy had lapsed because of nonpayment of premiums, might reinstate the policy by paying the premiums, and henceforth carry the policy solely for his own benefit, and free from any equitable claim of the mortgagee.

First JSL Bk. v Duroe, 212-795; 237 NW 319

Vendor and purchaser—application of proceeds. The proceeds of fire insurance under a policy payable to the vendor and purchaser of real estate, "as their interests may appear", is not payable to the vendor when, at the time of the loss, the purchaser is in no manner in default on his contract. Such proceeds may be impounded and utilized, on the application of the purchaser, in the rebuilding of the burned structure.

Hatch v Ins. Co., 216-860; 249 NW 164; 249 NW 824

Defaulting vendor (?) or nondefaulting purchaser (?). The vendor of real estate (and necessarily his assignee of the contract) has no basis for claiming the proceeds of a noncontested policy of fire insurance taken out on the property by the nondefaulting purchaser in his own name long after the vendor was in hopeless default under the contract of sale, even tho the said contract provided that the purchaser should take out insurance for the benefit of the vendor.

Reason: Neither the vendor nor his assignee can, under the circumstances, enforce the contract clause for insurance for their benefit.

Martinsen v Ins. Assn., 217-835; 251 NW 503

Quitclaim to avoid foreclosure—effect of existing junior liens—insurance unaffected. A mortgagee's status as such, as affecting his rights under a fire insurance policy, is not lost by merger when he takes a quitclaim deed from mortgagor, agreeing to dismiss his foreclosure action only in event no junior liens existed against the property, when thereafter it is found that such liens do exist the presence of which would cause a merger to be against the interest and inconsistent with the intention of the mortgagee.

Guaranty Ins. v Ins. Assn., 224-1207; 278 NW 913

XIII PAR. XIII PROPERTY ENDANGERED BY FIRE—REMOVAL—COVERAGE

No annotations in this volume

XIV PAR. XIV NOTICE OF LOSS—DUTIES OF INSURED

Notice and proof of loss—failure to give. The requirement of a statutory form of fire insurance policy that proof of loss shall be given in a specified time and manner is not abrogated by a statute which declares that the policy shall be deemed a valued policy,—that is, a policy on which, in case of loss, the entire amount of the policy is collectible.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Mental incapacity to furnish proofs—effect. A clear and unequivocal contract that an insured shall furnish due proofs of disability, as a condition precedent to the attaching of any liability on the part of the insurer, must be construed as assuming mental and physical capacity to furnish the proofs when due. It follows that the furnishing of such proofs will be excused if, when the disability occurs, and the policy is in force, the insured is insane, and, therefore, wholly unable to furnish said proofs.

McCoy v Ins. Co., 219-514; 258 NW 320

Delay—effect. Even tho it be conceded that particular facts and circumstances may excuse delay on the part of an insured policyholder in making proofs of loss, yet such facts and circumstances cannot excuse the total failure to make any such proofs.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Pleading in re proofs. Answer reviewed, and held to plead properly the total failure of an insured to furnish proofs of loss.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Notice and proof of loss—insufficiency. The letter of an insured to an insurer may not be deemed to constitute proof of loss when there is no evidence that insured so intended the letter, and, on the contrary, inquired therein as to what proof he should make.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Notice by receiver adequate. Proof of loss under a policy of insurance is all-sufficient when executed and furnished to the insurer by the insured's duly appointed receiver.

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

XIV PAR. XIV NOTICE OF LOSS — DUTIES OF INSURED—continued

Notice of loss without affidavit of fact—waiver. Failure of an insured to accompany his notice of loss with an affidavit as to the facts of loss becomes quite immaterial if the insurer waives such affidavit.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 215-665; 246 NW 615

Waiver—apparent authority to waive—instructions. Instructions relative to the duty of an insured to furnish proofs of loss, and to the burden resting on him in case he relied on a waiver of such proofs; also relative to the actual or apparent authority of the insurer's agent to bind the company by a waiver, reviewed and held correct.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Waiver of bylaw. Section 9045, C., '27, fixing the requirements of notice and proof of loss under mutual insurance policies does not prevent the company from waiving in its by-laws such notice and proof except when it may see fit to demand them.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Waiver of statutory proof. Statutory proof of loss need not be furnished by an insured when the policy provides a definite and ample scheme for determining the actual loss, and the insured complies therewith.

Glandon v Ins. Assn., 207-1068; 224 NW 65

Waiver by denying liability. An insurer who, after a loss occurs, assumes to cancel the policy, and denies all liability, waives his right to formal notice and proofs of loss.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Larsen v Ins. Co., 212-943; 237 NW 468

Green v Ins. Co., 218-1131; 253 NW 36

Parker v Ins. Assn., 220-262; 260 NW 844

Proofs of loss—waiver. The act of an insurer in receiving and taking under advisement proofs of loss after the time for filing such proofs had expired may, with other facts of an equivocal nature, constitute a waiver by the insurer of formal, timely filing of such proofs.

Jack v Ins. Assn., 205-1294; 217 NW 816

Waiver—promise to pay loss. Failure of an insured to file written proofs of loss, becomes inconsequential when, commencing with the loss and for a long time thereafter, the insurer had promised to pay the loss.

Mortimer v Ins. Assn., 217-1246; 249 NW 405

Waiver—letter of inquiry. The letter of an insured to an insurer, making inquiry as to what proof of loss he should make, and the letter of the insurer in reply, in which the insured is referred to the requirements of the policy, will not constitute a waiver of proof of loss, the insured not claiming that he was misled by the correspondence or that he in any manner changed his position by reason thereof.

Woodard v Ins. Co., 201-378; 207 NW 351

Waiver—declaration of apparent adjuster. When evidence would warrant the jury in finding that an employee of an insurer had apparent authority to adjust a loss, the statement of such employee to a fellow employee and communicated to parties interested in the loss as claimants, to the effect that the insurer "would pay the loss", is admissible on the issue whether the insurer had waived proofs of loss.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Waiver—jury question. Evidence to the effect that an insured, in a talk with the adjuster of the insurance company, was informed that the loss was being investigated by the state fire marshal, and that there was nothing for the insured to do until she heard from the company, is sufficient to present a jury question on the issue of waiver of sworn proofs of loss, especially when the adjuster was somewhat evasive in his talk with the insured.

Havirland v Ins. Co., 204-335; 213 NW 762

Waiver—jury question. A promise by an adjuster of an insurance company, made after he had investigated the loss, that the loss would be paid, coupled with other conduct on the part of the insurer indicating a purpose not to require proofs of loss, creates a jury question on the issue of waiver of such proof.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Insufficient basis for waiver. Conceded arguendo, that an insurance company through its adjuster promised to pay a claim under a policy, yet such promise furnishes no support whatever for a plea that the company waived the sworn proofs of loss required both by the statutes and the policy, when such promise (if made) was made after the insured was in hopeless default in furnishing said sworn proofs.

Miller v Fire Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

Inapplicable provisions of policy. The provisions in a policy of insurance (a) that "no agent has authority to change this policy or to waive any of its provisions", and (b) that "no change shall be made in the policy unless approved by an executive officer of the insurer and the approval be indorsed hereon", have application to the provisions of the policy relating to the formation and continuance of the contract and not to the conditions which are to be performed after loss, e.g., the giving of notice of loss.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

Silence of insurer—insufficient basis for waiver. The fact that an insurance company failed to answer letters from the insured, notifying the company in a general way that he had suffered a loss under a policy, furnishes no support whatever for the plea that the company had waived the sworn proofs of loss required both by the statutes and by the policy.

Miller v Fire Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

Reliance on waiver. On the issue of waiver of proofs of loss under a fire insurance policy, a party who had been directed by the insured to attend to the collection of the loss may testify that he learned from a soliciting agent of the insurer the fact that the company's adjuster had stated that the loss would be paid, and that he relied on such statement and took no further steps toward presenting proofs of loss.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Submission of unsupported issue. The submission, in an action on a policy of insurance, of the insured's pleaded claim that he had "offered to furnish additional proofs of loss", is erroneous when said claim was wholly without support in the evidence.

Miller v Fire Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

XV PAR. XV EXAMINATION OF LOSS OR DAMAGE

Water between plastered and outer walls—judicial notice of wood deterioration. It is a matter of common knowledge and one of which the court has a right to take judicial notice, that, when water is confined in a space as between the plastered and outer walls of a building where the air cannot circulate, many times the water will cause a deterioration of the lumber and sometimes cause rotting of the wood.

Horn v Ins. Co., 227-1045; 290 NW 8

XVI PAR. XVI APPORTIONMENT OF LOSS BY INSURERS

Rule for prorating. Between coinsurers, the liability of each under the standard pro rata clause is not the amount which he may pay the insured by way of settlement, but is such fractional part of the loss as the total amount of his policy bears to the total amount of all the valid and collectible coinsurance policies.

Globe Ins. v Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Prorating loss—burden of proof. An insurer who pleads that the loss should be prorated with another policy must assume the burden to show indubitably that such other policy was "valid and collectible".

Cole v Ins. Co., 201-979; 205 NW 3

Pro rata clause—valid and collectible insurance. In the application of the standard pro rata clause, the validity and collectibility of a policy are prima facie established by evidence that the insurer was solvent, did not question the validity of the policy, and, after suit, compromised the action and paid the judgment.

Globe Ins. v Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Pro rata clause—effect on reinsurers. The lessened liability which an insurer automatically acquires (as regards a coinsurer) under the standard pro rata coinsurance clause, automatically works a pro rata reduction in the liability of his reinsurers who have contracted that the total loss under the policy shall likewise be prorated among the reinsurers.

Globe Ins. v Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Reinsurance—insolvency of original insurer—effect on pro rata clause. The fact that an original insurer becomes insolvent after he has, in part, reinsured his risk, does not deprive his reinsurers of the benefit of the pro rata clause in their contract.

Globe Ins. v Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Facts provable since trial. No procedure exists under which an insurance company may show, on appeal from a judgment against it on a policy, that since the appeal was taken judgment on another policy issued by another company on the same loss has been affirmed by the supreme court and paid, and that, therefore, appellant should be granted a reversal so that the loss may be prorated on the basis of all valid and collectible insurance.

Sargent v Ins. Co., 218-430; 253 NW 613

XVII PAR. XVII LIMITATION OF ACTION

Amendment for new relief after action barred. A timely action to set aside the cancellation of a policy of insurance may be amended by asking for a reformation of the policy even tho the amendment is filed at a time which would have barred the original action.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Action—amendments after expiration of allowable period. The right to reform a policy of insurance (if such right exists) and to recover on it as reformed, is incident to the right to recover on the instrument in its original form. It follows that where plaintiff is unsuccessful on appeal in his effort to recover on the instrument in its original form, he may, after remand, amend and tender the issue of reformation, even tho when the amendment is filed an original action would have been barred by the statute of limitation.

Green v Ins. Co., 218-1131; 253 NW 36

XVIII PAR. XVIII DEFINITIONS, "INSURED"—"LOSS"

Proximate loss. Proximate loss includes not only losses which are directly caused by the

XVIII PAR. XVIII DEFINITIONS, "INSURED"—"LOSS"—concluded fire itself, but also losses of which the fire is the efficient cause, by setting in motion other agencies.

Tracy v Ins. Co., 207-1042; 222 NW 447

Scope of insurance—"friendly fires". Insurance against loss and damage "by fire" does not cover loss and damage to eggs consequent on the wick of an oil heating stove in the storage room burning too high, and thereby throwing off a quantity of smoke and soot, and generating excess heat in the storage room—nothing in the room being burned except said wick.

Sigourney Prod. Co. v Ins. Co., 211-1203; 235 NW 284

Explosion caused by hostile fire. Damages resulting solely from an explosion which is caused by a hostile fire in an insured building are recoverable under a policy which insures "against all direct loss or damages by fire", even tho the policy exempts the insurer from "loss caused directly or indirectly by explosion of any kind unless fire ensues, and in that event for damages by fire only".

Githens v Ins. Co., 201-266; 207 NW 243; 44 ALR 863

Damage "by fire"—expanding force of ignited gas. A policy of insurance against damage by fire (and which does not except damage by explosion) covers a damage resulting solely from the expanding force of a sheet of flame caused by the accidental ignition of inflammable gas in the basement of the insured building. And this is true tho no part of the building itself was burned.

Scully v Ins. Assn., 215-368; 245 NW 280

XIX PAR. XIX PROVISIONS, AGREEMENTS, OR CONDITIONS

Immaterial rearrangement of provisions. The provisions of the statutory standard fire insurance policy need not necessarily be arranged in the policy in the same consecutive form as set forth in the statute. It is all-sufficient to set forth the major portion of said form on the reverse side of the policy proper, with proper reference in said policy to the reverse provisions as part of the policy as a whole.

Green v Ins. Co., 215-1220; 247 NW 660

CHAPTER 404.1

LIABILITY POLICIES—UNSATISFIED JUDGMENTS

9024.1 Inurement of policy.

Discussion. See 15 ILR 73—Torts—recovery from insurer

Judgment against insured — conclusive against insurer. A judgment determining liability of insured for damages for death resulting from use of automobile was conclusive against liability insurance company as to its liability on policy where there was no fraud or collusion in obtaining the judgment and insurance company had timely notice of suit and elected to make no defense, in view of provision of policy and of statute permitting injured person to maintain action against insurance company for amount of judgment against insured after return of execution unsatisfied, irrespective of insured's insolvency.

International Co. v Steil, 30 F 2d, 654

Wrong motor numbers not invalidating liability policy. Motor numbers in an automobile insurance policy are only for the purpose of aiding in identifying the car, and, tho the numbers be wrong, a liability policy will not be invalidated if the car is otherwise properly identified, for which purpose other evidence may be resorted to, and, if sufficient, will cure the error without resort to a proceeding in equity to reform the policy.

Fucaloro v Cas. Co., 225-437; 280 NW 605

Consent to operate vehicle — admission in pleading. In an action against an insurance carrier to collect an unsatisfied judgment arising out of an automobile collision, and where the insurance carrier raises the question of consent to operate the vehicle, its admission of this fact in a pleading in a previous action is sufficient to carry to the jury such question of consent to operation.

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

Automobile policy—evidence sufficient for jury and to sustain verdict. In action against automobile liability insurer to recover on judgment previously obtained against insured who owned two trucks, evidence that truck which struck plaintiff was the truck which was covered by defendant's policy held to be jury question and to sustain verdict for plaintiff.

Cunningham v Cas. Co., (NOR); 258 NW 681

CHAPTER 406

MUTUAL FIRE, TORNADO, HAILSTORM AND OTHER ASSESSMENT INSURANCE ASSOCIATIONS

9029 Organization—purpose and powers.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 294; '36 AG Op 115

Indemnity (?) or liability (?)—legality. Either indemnity or liability insurance covering the operation of an automobile may be validly written by mutual associations under this section or by reciprocal or interinsurance concerns under §9083, C., '31, even tho subsec. 5-e, §8940, of said code prohibits the companies there designated from writing anything but liability insurance, the latter section not controlling the two former sections.

Schmid v Underwriters, 215-170; 244 NW 729

Indemnity insurance—law governing. A policy of insurance issued under subsec. 5-e, §8940, C., '31, insuring the ordinary operation of an automobile necessarily embraces the statutory provision that said policy shall inure to the benefit of a party who obtains a judgment against the insured, even tho said policy purports to be an indemnity policy only. (Zieman case, 214 Iowa, 468 overruled in part.)

Schmid v Underwriters, 215-170; 244 NW 729

Negligence in issuing policy. An insurance company, even tho it be but a mutual association which resorts to assessments on its members for funds with which to pay losses "and necessary expenses", must respond in damages for its tort in negligently failing to issue a policy which had been duly contracted for.

Mortimer v Ins. Assn., 217-1246; 249 NW 405; 35 NCCA 134

Special appearance and motion to dismiss—attacking only part of jurisdiction improper. In an action against insurance company to recover value of property destroyed by fire, in which action a special appearance attacked only one count of petition, the overruling of the special appearance and motion to dismiss was proper, inasmuch as jurisdiction that may be attacked by special appearance is jurisdiction of court over the entire action, and not jurisdiction of court as to part of such action.

Sanford Co. v Ins. Co., 225-1018; 282 NW 771

9036 Approval by commissioner.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op. 649

9037 Allowable assessments and fees.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 294

Assessments—validity. An assessment by a mutual hail association may be valid even tho the minutes of the board of directors do not affirmatively show compliance with all requirements of the articles and bylaws relating to assessments.

Hauge v Ins. Assn., 205-1099; 212 NW 473

Illegal assessment. An assessment on the policyholders of a mutual insurance association, made by the board of directors at a duly called meeting, is not a legal assessment and no forfeiture of a policy can be based on the nonpayment of such assessment, when the articles of incorporation provide that an executive committee consisting of the president, vice president, secretary and treasurer shall meet quarterly (and specially on call of the president) and make all assessments; and this is true even tho all said officers were present at said directors' meeting but as directors.

Maasdam v Ins. Assn., 222-162; 268 NW 491

Oral evidence. Oral testimony may be admissible as to the manner in which an assessment was made when such testimony bears on matters not revealed by the minutes of the board of directors or is explanatory of such minutes.

Hauge v Ins. Assn., 205-1099; 212 NW 473

Evidence of levy and nonpayment. Evidence held insufficient to establish either that an assessment had been levied, or that the assessment had not been paid, if levied.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1030; 226 NW 781

9040 Emergency fund.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 294

9041 Policies with fixed premiums.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 379; '30 AG Op 294

9043 Hail assessments—payment of losses.

Assessments—validity. An assessment by a mutual hail association may be valid even tho the minutes of the board of directors do not affirmatively show compliance with all requirements of the articles and bylaws relating to assessments.

Hauge v Ins. Assn., 205-1099; 212 NW 473

Agent signing in representative capacity—nonliability. In an action to recover hail insurance premium under a policy to which was attached an application with a promise to pay and signed by defendant, alleged to be a member of a partnership, and who used the symbol “%” in signing partnership name, such defendant is not liable individually where it is shown that defendant received commission for selling property and merely acted as agent for the partnership.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Gabrielson, 226-1242; 286 NW 514

9045 Proof of loss—sixty-day limit.

Contract limitation—validity. An agreement in a policy of insurance against total and permanent disability, specifically providing that all claim shall be forfeited if proof of such disability is not furnished the insurer “within ninety days after the happening of the total and permanent disability”, is valid and enforceable, such time limit being more favorable to the insured than the statutory limit.

Fairgrave v Life Assn., 211-329; 233 NW 714

Inapplicable provisions of policy. The provisions in a policy of insurance (a) that “no agent has authority to change this policy or to waive any of its provisions”, and (b) that “no change shall be made in the policy unless approved by an executive officer of the insurer and the approval be indorsed hereon”, have application to the provisions of the policy relating to the formation and continuance of the contract and not to the conditions which are to be performed after loss, e.g., the giving of notice of loss.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

Sufficiency of proofs. Proofs of loss held sufficient; also the manner in which accounts of loss were kept even tho not wholly accurate.

Hansell v Ins. Assn., 209-378; 228 NW 88

Notice and proof of loss—“as soon as practicable”. A policy requirement that written notice of an accident shall be given “as soon as practicable” means that said notice shall be given within a reasonable length of time under all the facts and circumstances. So held in a case where the insured inadvertently lost his policy and forgot the name of the insurer until some five months after liability accrued on the policy.

Gifford v Cas. Co., 216-23; 248 NW 235

Waiver of statutory proof. Statutory proof of loss need not be furnished by an insured when the policy provides a definite and ample scheme for determining the actual loss, and the insured complies therewith.

Glandon v Ins. Assn., 207-1068; 224 NW 65

Bylaw waiver. This section does not prevent the company from waiving, in its bylaws, such notice and proof except when it may see fit to demand them.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Waiver—denial of liability—effect. An insurer who, upon the happening of a loss, promptly asserts that the policy had been canceled long prior to the loss thereby denies all liability and waives proofs of loss.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Denial of liability as waiver. A denial by the insurer of all liability under a policy of insurance operates as a waiver of notice and proof of loss.

Green v Ins. Co., 218-1131; 253 NW 36

Denial of liability for crop loss—waiver. A policy provision to the effect that when a partial loss of a crop is occasioned by hail, the insured shall, by a certain date, furnish the insurer an account or statement of the crop harvested, is waived when, before the date in question, the insurer unequivocally denies liability under the policy.

Larsen & Son v Ins. Co., 212-943; 237 NW 468

Richardson v Ins. Assn., 214-30; 241 NW 414
Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Denial of liability not constituting waiver. A denial of liability on a policy of insurance does not constitute a waiver of proofs of loss when the validity of the claim under the policy depends solely on the furnishing of proofs of loss within a specified contract time, and when said denial of liability was made long after said time had expired.

Fairgrave v Life Assn., 211-329; 233 NW 714

Promise to pay claim—insufficient basis for waiver. Conceded arguendo, that an insurance company through its adjuster promised to pay a claim under a policy, yet such promise furnishes no support whatever for a plea that the company waived the sworn proofs of loss required both by the statutes and the policy, when such promise (if made) was made after the insured was in hopeless default in furnishing said sworn proofs.

Miller v Fire Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

Waiver—promise to pay loss. Failure of an insured to file written proofs of loss, becomes inconsequential when, commencing with the loss and for a long time thereafter, the insurer had promised to pay the loss.

Mortimer v Ins. Assn., 217-1246; 249 NW 405

Silence of insurer—insufficient basis for waiver. The fact that an insurance company failed to answer letters from the insured, notifying the company in a general way that he had suffered a loss under a policy, furnishes no support whatever for the plea that the company had waived the sworn proofs of loss required both by the statutes and by the policy.

Miller v Fire Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

Waiver—declaration of apparent adjuster. When evidence would warrant the jury in finding that an employee of an insurer had apparent authority to adjust a loss, the statement of such employee to a fellow employee and communicated to parties interested in the loss as claimants, to the effect that the insurer "would pay the loss", is admissible on the issue whether the insurer had waived proofs of loss.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Reliance on waiver. On the issue of waiver of proofs of loss under a fire insurance policy, a party who had been directed by the insured to attend to the collection of the loss may testify that he learned from a soliciting agent of the insurer the fact that the company's adjuster had stated that the loss would be paid, and that he relied on such statement and took no further steps toward presenting proofs of loss.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Waiver—pleading—sufficiency. Waiver of proofs of loss is sufficiently presented by pleading the facts constituting waiver, even tho the pleader does not allege the legal conclusion of waiver; and especially so when the pleadings are unquestioned in the trial court.

Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Waiver—sufficient plea. An allegation, in an action on a policy of insurance, that plaintiff, within the contract time, orally notified a general agent of the insurer of his injury, and that said agent agreed that he would give proper and timely notice to the insurer, is a sufficient plea of waiver of the insured's duty to give written notice of the loss, and sufficient to support the admission of evidence that the agent had sufficient power to waive said written notice.

Carver v Ins. Co., 218-873; 256 NW 274

When allegation and proof unnecessary. There need be no allegation or proof of the furnishing of proofs of loss under a policy which by its terms waives such proofs.

Glandon v Ins. Assn., 211-60; 232 NW 804

Waiver—jury question. A promise by an adjuster of an insurance company, made after he had investigated the loss, that the loss would be paid, coupled with other conduct on the part of the insurer indicating a purpose not to require proofs of loss, creates a jury question on the issue of waiver of such proof.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

9048 Limitation of action.

Limitation of nonlife actions generally. See under §8986

Premature action—action prior to due date of loss. The statutory command that no action shall be brought on a policy until the date when the loss is due in accordance with the articles of incorporation or bylaws of the insurer, has no application when the said articles and bylaws contain no provision as to the date when the loss is due.

Hansell v Ins. Assn., 209-378; 228 NW 88

Nonpremature action. An action brought some 11 months after loss is not premature when the insurer has by his conduct waived proofs of loss.

Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403

9051 Value of personal property—value of crops.

Computation of damages—instructions. Instructions relative to the computation of damages to crops by hail, reviewed, and held sufficiently clear in view of the ambiguous provision of the policy.

Richardson v Ins. Assn., 214-30; 241 NW 414

Damage by hail—improper measure. The percentage of crop destruction due to hail cannot be measured by a comparison between the ultimate crop after damage by hail, and the amount of yield in an average year, when the record affirmatively shows that the year in which the damage occurred was not, because of drouth conditions, an average year.

Slinger v Ins. Assn., 219-329; 258 NW 101

Interest recoverable. Interest is allowable, on the amount recovered under a hail insurance policy, from the date when the loss occurred.

Glandon v Ins. Assn., 211-60; 232 NW 804

Similar facts—competency. A witness should not be permitted to testify to the crop yield of his land as bearing on the probable yield of another farm in the same vicinity unless it appears that the two farms possess similar soil conditions.

Slinger v Ins. Assn., 219-329; 258 NW 101

9051.1 Arbitration.

Inadequate award — fraud — effect. Equity will vacate a grossly inadequate award by arbitrators, especially when an element of fraud exists in the appointment and proceedings of the arbitrators.

Koopman v Ins. Assn., 209-958; 229 NW 221

9054 Cancellation by association — notice.

"Suspension" and "cancellation" of policy distinguished. The statutory provision that a policy of insurance issued by an assessment insurance association may be canceled by the association on a five-day notice to the insured has no application to a policy provision which suspends the membership of the policyholder and denies him right of recovery for loss while he is delinquent in the payment of assessments.

Early v Ins. Assn., 201-263; 207 NW 117

"Suspension" and "cancellation" compared. The suspension of a policy of insurance is not synonymous with cancellation of the policy.

Federal Bank v Ins. Assn., 217-1098; 253 NW 52

Suspension — nonapplicable procedure. The procedure for the forfeiture or suspension of a nonmutual fire insurance policy of insurance (§8959, C., '27) is not applicable to policies issued by mutual assessment companies.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1020; 226 NW 777

Cancellation in equity. Equity will not, after the death of the insured in a life insurance policy, entertain jurisdiction to cancel the policy unless exceptional circumstances render cancellation necessary for the protection of the insurer. The fact that the policy becomes incontestable after two years does not constitute such circumstance when said time has not yet elapsed.

Bankers Life v Bennett, 220-922; 263 NW 44

Cancellation—statutory and contract provisions. In an action on an insurance policy to recover damages for loss by hail, held, that statutory provisions for benefit of insured cannot be contracted away and terms of contract are only binding upon the insured if not contrary to applicable statutes. A policy is construed to give the insured his indemnity in questions of cancellation or forfeiture.

Sorensen v Ins. Assn., 226-1316; 286 NW 494

Actions—bylaws and statutes in conflict. In an action to recover damages for loss by hail, bylaws of mutual hail insurance association which are inconsistent with statute relating to notice of cancellation must give way to statute.

Sorensen v Ins. Assn., 226-1316; 286 NW 494

Attempted cancellation contrary to bylaws—effect. A mutual insurance company which, in its bylaws, provides for the cancellation of a policy by giving notice "in person or by registered letter", and which in its attempt to cancel a policy ignores its own bylaws and attempts to give notice by an unregistered letter, must prove that said letter actually reached the insured, and the presumption of delivery attending the mailing of such letter and the positive testimony that such letter was never received by the insured are of equal probative force; therefore, the insurer has not established the receipt of said notice by the insured.

Travelers Ins. v Ins. Assn., 211-1051; 233 NW 153

Notice of cancellation—sufficiency. In an action on an insurance policy for damages as a result of hail, on appeal from ruling sustaining a demurrer to defendant's answer, in which one defense is cancellation of the policy in accordance with the terms of the contract, by giving five days notice, "mailed to the address of the assured", and the statute provides notice may be given, "by the association giving five days written notice thereof to the insured", held that the statute leaves the parties free to meet its requirements in such manner as to them seem best adapted to their purpose and the policy provided a reasonable way of termination. It was a method to which both parties agreed and not being in conflict with the statute, the court was in error in sustaining the demurrer.

Sorensen v Ins. Assn., 226-1316; 286 NW 494

Mailing notice of cancellation—presumption of receipt by addressee. In an action on an insurance policy to recover damages for loss by hail and where the answer alleges cancellation of policy by mailing five days written notice to insured, receipt of which notice plaintiff denies, it may be presumed or inferred by the supreme court in reviewing a decision on demurrer, that the letter properly addressed and mailed reached the plaintiff in due time.

Sorensen v Ins. Assn., 226-1316; 286 NW 494

Refusal to accept and failure to cancel—effect. A policy of hail insurance (issued by a mutual association) once in force remains in force even tho the insured refuses to accept it, and the association fails to cancel the policy in the manner provided by statute.

Murchison v Ins. Co., 204-528; 215 NW 598

Nonpayment of premium—effect. A policy of fire insurance for a named period in a mutual company is not automatically suspended by the nonpayment of an assessment when the policy contains no provision for suspension, but simply a declaration that the association shall not be liable for any loss if the insured fails to pay any assessment when due "provided the association shall give the insured notice as required by law". In other words, the insurer, in order to escape liability because of such nonpayment, must cancel the policy under this section.

Federal Bank v Ins. Assn., 217-1098; 253 NW 52

See Wall v Ins. Co., 217-1106; 253 NW 46

Waiver—effect. Even if it be conceded, arguendo, that the levy of an assessment on a policy of insurance worked a waiver of the suspension of the policy for nonpayment of a prior assessment, yet such waiver becomes immaterial when the policy is legally suspended for nonpayment of the last assessment.

Hart v Ins. Assn., 208-1020; 226 NW 777

Acquiescence. A statement by the insured to the insurer to the effect that he (the insured) did not like the steps taken by the insurer in canceling a policy does not constitute an acquiescence in such cancellation, the truth being that the cancellation was a nullity, tho this fact was unknown to the insured.

Harrington v Ins. Assn., 203-282; 211 NW 383

Hail insurance—failure to read settlement—cancellation—nonestoppel. An insurer may not cancel a hail insurance policy nor avoid payment for a second hail loss by predicating an estoppel upon the negligent failure of the insured to read a written settlement where the insured reposed confidence in the agent who, on a busy threshing day, negotiated the settlement for the first hail damage and then added a policy cancellation clause not discussed in settlement.

Conrad v Ins. Assn., 223-828; 273 NW 913

9057 When pro rata assessment retained.

Abortive attempt to cancel. An attempted cancellation by the insurer of a policy of insurance in a mutual fire insurance association is a nullity when the insurer neither returns nor tenders to the insured all advance assessments less the insurer's pro rata part thereof.

Harrington v Ins. Assn., 203-282; 211 NW 383

CHAPTER 407

LIABILITY INSURANCE—CERTAIN PROFESSIONS

9077 Cancellation of policy.

Attempted cancellation contrary to bylaws—effect. A mutual insurance company which, in its bylaws, provides for the cancellation of a policy by giving notice "in person or by registered letter", and which in its attempt to cancel a policy ignores its own bylaws and attempts to give notice by an unregistered letter, must prove that said letter actually reached the insured, and the presumption of delivery attending the mailing of such letter and the positive testimony that such letter was never received by the insured are of equal probative force; therefore, the insurer has not established the receipt of said notice by the insured.
