Andrew v Bank, 220-219; 261 NW 810

III PRACTICE IN TRIALS DE NOVO

Review de novo. The appellate court may review all legal propositions presented by the record in an equitable action even tho the trial court considered only one proposition which it deemed controlling.

Geil v Babb, 214-263; 242 NW 34

Dismissal—total absence of evidence. An appeal in an equitable action must be dismissed

when the only questions raised depend on the facts, and such facts are not presented.

Union County v Bank, 202-652; 210 NW 769

Abstract—incompleteness—effect. An appeal in an equitable action will not necessarily be dismissed nor a de novo hearing be refused, because all the evidence is not embraced in the abstract. So held where only one of several defendants was affected by the appeal.

State v Baker, 212-571; 235 NW 313

Equity cause tried on exceptions. When a cause in equity is tried on exceptions to the report of a referee, and the appeal is from the judgment rendered on said exceptions, the review on appeal is limited to the exceptions presented to the trial court and to the record there made.

Hogan v Perkins, 213-1175; 238 NW 608

Unallowable addition to record. On appeal, even in an equity case, the record as made in the trial court cannot be added to by the filing of affidavits bearing on the fact situation.

McDaniel v McDaniel, 218-772; 253 NW 803

Limited appeal in equity limits de novo hearing. The de novo hearing on appeal in an equitable action is necessarily limited to the particular part of the decree from which the appeal is taken; and, under such an appeal, appellee cannot have a de novo hearing on some other part of the decree unless he perfects a cross-appeal.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 220-1295; 264 NW 696

Review, scope of—ruling adverse to appellee. A part of a decree on which no appeal is taken by the party adversely affected is not before the supreme court for review.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

Judgment solely on plaintiff's testimony. It is not true, in an equity case submitted solely on plaintiff's testimony, that the testimony must, on appeal, be accepted in the most favorable light which can be given to it. On the other hand, such an appeal must be heard de novo and on its merits.

Coen & Conway v Bank, 205-483; 218 NW 325

Judgment solely on plaintiff's evidence. A defendant in an equitable action who, at the close of plaintiff's evidence, successfully moves for a directed verdict against plaintiff, must, on appeal, submit to a final trial de novo solely on plaintiff's evidence.

Hirtz v Koppes, 212-536; 234 NW 854

Accounting — trial de novo — record. The defendant, in an equitable action for an accounting, unsuccessfully moves at the close of plaintiff's testimony for a dismissal of the action, yet the final determination of the action must be determined, in the trial court and on appeal, on the entire record testimony including that introduced by said unsuccessful movant.

Economy Co. v Honett, 222-894; 270 NW 842

Judgment solely on plaintiff's testimony—effect. A defendant in an equitable action who, at the close of plaintiff's testimony, successfully moves for a dismissal, and who suffers a reversal, on trial de novo on appeal, may not, after general remand, resume the trial in the lower court and attempt to establish his defenses, on the sole claim that when he made the motion to dismiss, he had not rested his case.

Haggin v Derby, 209-939; 229 NW 257

Motion to dismiss on plaintiff's evidence. A motion to dismiss an action in equity, made at the close of plaintiff's testimony, being without statutory recognition, simply constitutes an announcement by defendant that he rests his case without further testimony.

Vogt v Vogt, 208-1329; 227 NW 107

Absence of evidence in equity. An appeal in an action brought and tried in equity will not be dismissed because the appellant fails to include the evidence in his abstract when the record reveals everything necessary for the court to decide the narrow question of law presented by appellant.

Carlson v Layman, 214-114; 241 NW 457

Inferences drawn from record. The trier of facts is entitled to draw such legitimate inferences as the record will warrant.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Presumption as to evidence legally inadmissible. In a trial to the court, it will be presumed that testimony which is inadmissible as a matter of law was not considered by the court tho actually admitted in evidence.

James v Sch. Twp., 210-1059; 229 NW 750

Postponed rulings—presumption. The judgment of the trial court will be presumed to have been based solely on competent testimony when the court so certifies at the time of passing on postponed rulings and excluding certain testimony thereunder.

In re O'Hara, 204-1331; 217 NW 245

Incompetent evidence in equity. It must be presumed on appeal in an equity proceeding that the court disregarded incompetent testimony which was received under proper objection.

State v Dietz, 202-1202; 211 NW 727

Disregarding improper testimony. On trial de novo on appeal in equity cases, testimony given by incompetent witnesses, as to transactions and communications with a deceased person, will be disregarded.

Flint v Varney, 220-1241; 264 NW 277

De novo hearing regardless of decretal recitals. A recital in a mortgage foreclosure decree that of two defensive pleas one had been established, and one had not been established, does not prevent the appellate court on review de novo from adjudging that both said defensive pleas have been established, even tho the prevailing party—the appellee—does not assume to appeal from the one adverse court finding of fact against him.

Northwest. Ins. v Blohm, 212-89; 234 NW 268

Presumption attending unduly abbreviated abstract. When the complete record on which the trial court reached its conclusion on a fact proposition is not before the court on a de novo trial, and where the contrary does not appear, the presumption must be indulged that the trial court properly performed its duty and reached a proper conclusion.

Harrington v Foster, 220-1066; 264 NW 51

Certification of evidence. Evidence taken in an equitable action need not be certified by the trial judge and reporter until there exists a necessity for such certification. Conceding, arguendo, that the certification should be made within a reasonable time after such necessity arises, then the presence or absence of prejudice will materially control the question as to what is such reasonable time.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1368; 222 NW 553

Rent advanced as cost of administration. A stockholder of a clay products company in receivership, having advanced the rent due from the company on its clay pit lease, may not recover this rent as a cost of administration, especially when he advances this theory for the first time on appeal.

Parks v Carlisle Co., 224-1024; 277 NW 731

Family transaction—careful scrutiny for fraud. A transaction wherein an insolvent mortgagor, also in arrears on interest and taxes, makes an assignment to his father-in-law of a lease on his mortgaged premises, being a family transaction, will be carefully scrutinized for fraud; but without specific evidence indicating an incorrect conclusion by the lower court, its decision validating such transaction will not be disturbed on appeal.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Ver Steeg, 223-1165; 274 NW 883

Equitable and law issues in probate—appellate practice. In appeals involving claims in probate, frequent practice of supreme court has been to review equitable issues by trial de novo, while considering alleged errors assigned in the law action.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Appeal de novo—weight given decision of lower court. Altho a divorce action, being in equity, is triable de novo on appeal, yet the supreme court will give serious consideration to the decision of the lower court when there is a conflict in the testimony. Evidence reviewed and held to justify award of separate maintenance to the wife and to deny divorce to the husband.

Blew v Blew, 225-832; 282 NW 361

Determining preponderance. Where one witness' word was against that of another, the supreme court, on appeal in an equity action, looked to the conduct of the parties and surrounding circumstances to determine the preponderance of the evidence.

Webber v Ins. Assn., 227-793; 288 NW 868

11434 Abstracts in equity causes.

Dismissal—total absence of evidence. An appeal in an equitable action must be dismissed when the only questions raised depend on the facts, and such facts are not presented.

Union County v Bank, 202-652; 210 NW 769

11435 Finding of facts by court.

Court findings reviewed, conclusiveness. See also under §11581

Jury findings, reviewability. See under §11429 (III)

Most favorable evidence rule. See under §11508 (VI)

Special interrogatories. See under §11513

Trial to court. See also under §11581

Discussion. See 22 ILR 609—Trial technique

Conflicting evidence—findings conclusive. Findings of the court in a law action on conflicting evidence, like a jury verdict, are conclusive upon appeal. In such cases the supreme court may not determine facts but merely decide what the court was warranted in finding them to be.

Jefferies v Prall, 215-763; 246 NW 816

In re Canterbury, 226-586; 284 NW 807

In re Fisher, 226-596; 284 NW 821

School District v Ida County, 226-1237; 286 NW 407

Armstrong v Smith, 227-450; 288 NW 621

Fed. Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Supported findings of court in law actions inviolable. It is beyond the power of the appellate court in a law action tried solely to the court to disturb the findings of the court on conflicting but supporting evidence, or to disturb the judgment based on such findings.

Eilers v Frieling, 211-841; 234 NW 275

Presumption attending general findings. A defendant-appellee may not have an affirmance on appeal on the theory that the general findings of the trial court in his favor imply a finding in his favor on every material and defensive issue, when the record shows that the issues in question were abandoned by defendant in the trial court.

Schaffer v Acklin, 205-567; 218 NW 286

Grounds presentable by appellee. When the lower court in an equity cause sustains plaintiff's action on one presented ground, but overrules all other presented grounds, the appellee on appeal may very properly argue the correctness of the overruled grounds.

Reason: The appellate court must affirm the decree of the lower court if it is sustainable on any ground properly presented in the lower court, irrespective of the findings of the lower court.

Wyatt v Manning, 217-929; 250 NW 141

Findings on conflicting evidence—conclusiveness. Where different inferences reasonably may be drawn from undisputed facts and circumstances, the drawing of any one of such inferences by the court in a trial without a jury is a final finding which will not be disturbed on appeal.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

Supported findings in probate. Supported findings of fact by the probate court have the force and effect of a verdict of a jury and will not be reviewed on appeal.

In re Fish, 220-1328; 264 NW 542

Preservation of estate funds—findings in probate. A supported finding by the probate court that an administrator had failed to exercise ordinary care to preserve the funds of the estate is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Foster, 218-1202; 256 NW 744

Loss to estate—certificate of deposit not collected from insolvent bank—executor a bank director. A finding by the trial court that loss to an estate through the failure to collect on a certificate of deposit belonging to the estate was not caused by the fault of the executor was sustained by evidence that the executor who was a director of the bank on which the certificate was drawn, but took no active part in the management of the bank and did not know it was insolvent, had properly presented the certificate for payment and had been refused because of the insolvency of the bank.

In re Smith, 228- ; 289 NW 694

Removal of administrator—failure to hear evidence. An order by the court removing an administrator will not necessarily be deemed invalid because the court did not formally receive any testimony.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Court findings—effect on trial de novo. In an equitable proceeding where there is conflict in evidence, the supreme court must give weight to findings of trial court altho case is tried de novo.

Horn v Ins. Co., 227-1045; 290 NW 8

Probate orders—non de novo hearing. An appeal from an order adjudging the final liability of an administrator is not heard de novo. In other words, the supported findings of the trial court are conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Enfield, 217-273; 251 NW 637

Findings on objections to administrator's final report. Trial court's ruling on objection to administrator's final report will not be disturbed on appeal where fact question was involved, as supreme court would not substitute its judgment for that of court below.

In re Windhorst, 227-808; 288 NW 892

Probate proceedings not triable de novo. A ruling by the lower court approving the final report of an executor and overruling objections thereto is not triable de novo on appeal and will be affirmed if substantial support is found in the record.

In re Smith, 228- ; 289 NW 694

Probate findings. The supported finding of the court in probate on the issue whether funds received by a person were received by him as guardian or as trustee (bond in each case having been given) is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Baldwin, 217-279; 251 NW 696

Allowance of claims—conclusiveness. The allowance of a claim by the probate court on supporting testimony is conclusive on the appellate court, even tho the supporting testimony is not wholly satisfactory to the judicial mind.

Olson v Roberts, 218-410; 255 NW 461

Disallowance of claims. A supported finding in probate that a claim should be disallowed is conclusive on appeal.

In re Anderson, 216-1017; 250 NW 183

Advancements—how issue tried. A proceeding in probate on the issue whether a conveyance by a father to his son constituted an advancement is triable, both in the trial and appellate court, as an action at law. It follows that a supported finding by the trial court is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re O'Hara, 204-1331; 217 NW 245

Court findings upheld. In proceedings to establish a lost will, the loss of the will and the search for it were proved by evidence that the will could not be found altho the home of the deceased and other places where the will might have been kept were thoroughly searched. The conclusion of the trial judge on the sufficiency of such evidence will not be disturbed unless discretion is abused.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Supported findings in law action—conclusiveness. The finding and judgment of trial court on claim against decedent's estate has the effect of a jury verdict and may not be set aside if it finds any substantial support in the record.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

When reviewable. Findings of the trial court in a law action (under §11972, C., '35) that plaintiff was not entitled, on the facts, to be relieved from his failure to make timely filing of a claim against an estate, will not be disturbed on appeal when substantially supported by the record.

Bates v Remley, 223-654; 273 NW 180

Assignment of errors—fatal insufficiency. Assignments of error which make no reference to any part of the record other than to the exceptions to the rulings of the court, with no specific complaint or reason assigned why the court was in error, must be deemed omnibus in form and fatally insufficient.

Rogers v Davis, 223-373; 272 NW 539

Malicious prosecution—questions for jury. Evidence reviewed in action for damages for false arrest and malicious prosecution (padlocked schoolhouse case), and held such as to preclude the court from determining the question of want of probable cause, malice, and good-faith reliance on the advice of counsel.

Gripp v Crittenden, 223-240; 271 NW 599

Cashing of check—conclusiveness of findings. Whether the facts and circumstances attending the receipt by a creditor from a debtor of a check for an amount less than claimed by the creditor, and the cashing of the check by the creditor, constituted an accord and satisfaction may be a question of fact; and the findings of the court thereon in a law action tried to the court, on conflicting and supporting testimony, are necessarily conclusive on the appellate court.

Barth Co. v Kelly, 211-1154; 235 NW 471

Fraudulent acts by bank cashier—repudiation of only part of transaction. Where the cashier of the plaintiff bank obtained credit with the defendant bank in order to conceal a shortage in the accounts of the plaintiff, giving unauthorized drafts on the plaintiff and crediting the plaintiff with the amounts, it was erroneous for the court to find that the cashier had borrowed from the defendant to pay the plaintiff and then paid the defendant with the drafts, with the result that the defendant then held assets of the plaintiff equal to the amount of the drafts. To hold thus would permit the plaintiff bank to accept payment of the shortage through the unauthorized acts of its agent, the cashier, and at the same time repudiate the remainder of the transaction and deny the right of the defendant to use the unauthorized drafts.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Evidence supporting oral lease for year. In action for conversion by landlord against purchaser of tenant's buckwheat, the findings of trial court that tenant leased premises for one year rather than being a share cropper held supported by evidence and conclusive on appeal.

Schaper v Farmers' Exch., (NOR); 239 NW 134

Redemption of mortgage—extension of time—rent—reasonableness. An order fixing the rent to be paid by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, during a granted extension of time in which to redeem, may be conclusive on the appellate court, in view of the nature of the very meager testimony presented.

Union Ins. v Waddell, 218-1367; 257 NW 319

Homestead abandonment. A finding by the trial court, in a law action, on conflicting but supporting testimony that a homestead had been abandoned, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Crail v Jones, 206-761; 221 NW 467

When conclusive. A finding by the trial court on supporting testimony that a wife signed both the note and mortgage of her husband solely for the purpose of waiving her dower interest, and received no actual consideration herself, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Bates v Green, 219-136; 257 NW 198

Directed verdict—failure to rule on motion. Error, if any, in trial court's failure in replevin action to rule on defendant's motion to direct verdict at close of plaintiff's evidence is not prejudicial where case is tried to court.

Prehn v Kindig, (NOR); 232 NW 812

Conclusiveness of court's finding. The finding of the court in a trial to the court on supporting evidence on the issue whether an insured died "solely through external, violent, and accidental means" or from disease is conclusive on the appellate court; and it is immaterial that the court determines its findings by sustaining a motion to dismiss at the close of all the evidence, or by overruling such motion and later dismissing the action on its own motion.

Cherokee v Ins. Co., 215-1000; 247 NW 495

Judgment on bail bond—conclusiveness. A finding by the court, on conflicting and supporting testimony, in a proceeding to set aside a judgment on a bail bond, that the surety had, at his own expense, caused the principal in the bond to be delivered to the sheriff, is not reviewable on appeal.

State v Robinson, 205-1055; 218 NW 918

Electric plant earnings—fact findings in trial to court. Where an injunction wrongfully restrained and delayed, for 11 months, construction of a municipal light plant and in an action on the injunction bonds, tried without a jury, where the trial court had evidence to determine the plant's net earnings for first year of operation and there was sufficient evidence to support his findings that earnings during 11 months lost by delay would have been substantially same, damages in that amount for such period are not too speculative, remote, and uncertain, and such findings are conclusive on appeal.

Corning v Iowa-Nebr. L. & P. Co., 225-1380; 282 NW 791

Social welfare board—findings of fact—non-interference by court. The provisions as to powers and authority of the court on appeal, under the provisions of the social welfare law as to old-age assistance, are somewhat analogous to those of the workmen's compensation law, under which the holdings of our court have always been that, when supported by competent evidence, the findings of fact by the commission will not be interfered with by the court.

Schneberger v Board, 228- ; 291 NW 859

Probate claim denied—no bar in subsequent equity action. A prior judgment in a law action tried on the merits is conclusive as to a subsequent action in equity between the same parties and the same facts, but where a widow is bequeathed a life estate in realty with the right to dispose of such realty for her necessary support, a probate adjudication on the merits that her claim for widow's support could not be established against husband's estate, is not such an adjudication as bars a later equity proceeding to establish such support claim as a lien on such realty.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Attorney fee allowance. Tho a presumption of correctness exists in favor of trial court's decision fixing compensation for administrator's attorney, yet, where objection is made to application for allowance, and no evidence is introduced as to the services other than a bare statement in the applicant's affidavit, the trial court is not warranted in making a finding involving both nature and value of services.

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

Findings of fact in probate. The appellate court will review an attorney's allowance for ordinary or extraordinary services to an estate where it appears from the record that the allowance is excessive or the claim therefor is not supported by sufficient evidence.

11437 Separate trials.

Joint tort-feasors.

McDonald v Robinson, 207-1293; 224 NW 820; 62 ALR 1419; 34 NCCA 306

Denial of separate trial. An order refusing a separate trial to one of two joint defendants is appealable when it materially affects the "final decision".

Manley v Paysen, 215-146; 244 NW 863; 84 ALR 1330

Separate trial—right to. Reversible error results from refusing a separate trial to a defendant who is sued jointly with another for damages consequent on his alleged negligence, and on the alleged recklessness of his co-defendant, the defensive issues of the two defendants being wholly hostile to each other, and the opportunity existing for collusion between the plaintiff and such other defendant.

Manley v Paysen, 215-146; 244 NW 863; 84 ALR 1330

Joint tort-feasors with different defenses. Altho joint tort-feasors may be joined in one action, a petition charging two colliding motorists generally with negligence and recklessness and only alleging that plaintiff was riding in one of the vehicles with no averment as to his status as a guest or otherwise, presents to the jury such complex and confusing issues as to entitle defendants to separate trials.

11438 Trial notice.

Order of court in lieu of notice. No necessity exists for the filing of a trial notice in a cause when the court enters an order placing the cause on the trial calendar under conditions which operated exactly as a trial notice would have operated.

Fidelity Inv. v White, 212-782; 237 NW 518

Default for nonappearance—trial to court. Where an action on a promissory note had been assigned for trial, continued to the next day because of defendant's nonappearance for trial, and at such time called for trial a second time with defendant still not appearing until after the jury panel had been dismissed, a default having been entered, and plaintiff being allowed to prove up his case to the court, held on defendant's belated appearance and demand for jury trial, an offer by the court to require plaintiff to reintroduce his evidence but requiring a trial to the court without a jury, otherwise, permitting default and judgment thereon to stand, was not error.

Vaux v Hensal, 224-1055; 277 NW 718

Want of prosecution—court rules construed with statute. A district court rule, providing for dismissal of actions for want of prosecution if not noticed for trial within one year, must be construed in conjunction with statute requiring trial notices to be filed.

Thoreson v Central States Co., 225-1406; 283 NW 253

Reinstating dismissed action. One seeking to reinstate an action which has been dismissed must do more than establish his ground for vacating the judgment; he must show that he has a valid cause of action or defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered. Held that the failure of plaintiffs to make a prima facie showing of a valid cause of action was fatal to their proceedings.

11439 Assignments—hearing of motions, etc.

Court's discretion. Assignment of causes rests largely within discretion of trial court. Collings v Gibson, (NOR); 220 NW 338

Assignment before issues joined. The assignment of a case for trial before the issues are fully made up does not constitute error. Bliss v Watson, 208-1199; 227 NW 108

Effect of assignment to certain judge. When a cause is assigned to, and tried by, a judge of the district court, all other judges of the same court are thereby deprived of jurisdiction to dismiss the cause while it is pending before said trial judge.

Dunkelbarger v Myers, 211-512; 233 NW 744

11440 Docketing appeals.

Bond not required. No appeal bond is required in an appeal to the district court from the judgment of an election contest court by a party who is not an incumbent of the office in question, this section having no application to such a case.

Donlan v Cooke, 212-771; 237 NW 496

Expunging clerk's judgment entry after court's dismissal. An appeal from justice court, perfected and docketed, is in the district court as tho it had been commenced there; the justice's judgment is completely annulled; the appeal brings up the action for trial on its merits; and it is the duty of the plaintiff to prosecute the action. So where a district court, under its rule providing for dismissal of all actions remaining on the court calendar for over one year without being noticed for trial, dismissed such an appeal under its rule, and the clerk of court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount recovered in justice court together with interest and against appealing defendant, the defendant's motion to expunge the clerk's entry and correct the record was well-grounded and should have been sustained.

11441 Calendar.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 93

Dropping action from calendar—reinstatement. The district court has jurisdiction to reinstate a cause which, under order of court, has been "dropped from the calendar" if such dropping was not with the intent to dismiss.

Bankers Tr. v Dist. Court, 209-879; 227 NW 536

See Dunkelbarger v Myers, 211-512; 233 NW 744

Appeal from order noted on calendar. A party may not appeal from an order in the form of a mere notation on the judge's calendar, which order is later incorporated into the final decree.

Brotherhood v Ressler, 216-983; 250 NW 169

Entry—necessity. Principle reaffirmed that the oral rendition by the court of his decision, the entry of such decision on the court calendar, and the transcribing of such entry into the appearance docket and fee book do not constitute a judgment.

State v Wieland, 217-887; 251 NW 757

Extending time to file motion—journal entry valid. A statute requiring that an application for a new trial must be made within five days after the verdict is rendered unless the court grants an extension of time, contemplates orders which are only temporary and incidental to the case, and an order extending the time for such application was effective to extend the time beyond the five-day limit, when it was entered on the judge's calendar before the five days were up, even tho not entered on the record book until seven days after judgment was rendered.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Calendar entry as judgment. From a statute requiring that all judgments and orders must be entered in the record book, it may be inferred that the judge's calendar is in the nature of a memorandum book ordinarily used by the judge to guide the clerk in entering judgments and orders in the record book which is their final place of repose, and that the clerk's entry in the record book is the legal evidence of a judgment or order.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Competent evidence of judgment—journal entry. As a general rule, a judgment must be entered of record in order to be of any validity, but for many purposes the court's decision is effective from the time it is actually pronounced, or when the judge writes in his calendar a statement of the decision, but there is no competent evidence of the rendition until the memorandum is entered in the court record, and, after recording, the judgment may for some purposes relate back to the time when it was actually ordered.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Curing erroneous docketing. The erroneous docketing on the equity side of the calendar of an action of forcible entry and detainer becomes inconsequential when subsequent pleadings put title in issue and thereby convert the original law action into an equitable action.

Suiter v Wehde, 218-200; 254 NW 33

11442 Continuances—application for.

Discretion of court. When no continuance was asked, trial court held not to have abused discretion in refusing new trial on ground that defendant was not present at trial.

Bergen v Baker, (NOR); 205 NW 327

Death of absent witness. An order refusing a continuance which was asked for because of the absence of a witness will be sustained when it appears that the absent witness has died since the trial.

Suiter v Wehde, 218-200; 254 NW 33

Continuance under financial emergency. The legislative power of the state may, for the purpose of ameliorating an existing, public, financial emergency, constitutionally grant to a mortgagor, on equitable conditions, the right, in an action to foreclose the mortgage, to a continuance which is very materially in excess of that ordinarily permitted or sanctioned by law. (For fundamental reason see Des Moines Bank v Nordholm, 217 Iowa 1319.)

Craig v Waggoner, 218-876; 256 NW 285
Tusha v Eberhart, 218-1065; 256 NW 740

Dismissal for want of prosecution. The dismissal of an action for want of prosecution is eminently proper (1) when plaintiff knew that defendant was insisting on immediate trial, (2) when the cause was twice assigned for trial at the same term, and (3) when defendant failed to appear at the time finally set for trial and filed no motion for continuance.

Pride v Kittrell, 218-1247; 257 NW 204

Foreclosure—continuance under emergency act. The emergency act for the continuance of mortgage foreclosure proceedings (Ch 182, 45th GA) was not designed to grant a continuance to a mortgagor of nonhomestead property who is so hopelessly insolvent that a continuance would, manifestly, work no benefit to him but would work material harm to the mortgagee.

Reed v Snow, 218-1165; 254 NW 800

11443 Causes for.

Continuances in criminal cases. See under §13843
Mortgage moratorium continuances. See under §12372 (VII)

Discussion. See 12 ILR 182—Continuance—constitutional right

Arbitrary refusal. The refusal of the board of medical examiners (§2578-a, S., '13), in proceedings for the revocation of the license of a physician, to grant a continuance until the accused had finished serving a sentence in the penitentiary is not necessarily arbitrary.

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

Justifiable refusal. Reversible error does not result from the action of the court in permitting a belated nonissue-changing amendment to the petition to stand, and in refusing defendant a continuance until all his attorneys can be present at the opening of the trial.

Newland v McClelland, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Unsustained grounds. Refusal of a continuance will not be deemed error when movant's ground of surprise is wholly unfounded.

Cochran v Sch. Dist., 207-1385; 224 NW 809

Wide discretion of court. An order overruling a motion for a continuance will not be interfered with on appeal in the absence of a showing that the order has resulted in grave injustice.

Twaites v Bailly, 210-783; 231 NW 332

Useless amendment. An amendment to a petition in a real estate mortgage foreclosure to the effect "that the mortgagor was the owner of the land when the mortgage was executed" is unnecessary and, if made, furnishes no basis for a continuance on the ground of surprise.

Fitz v Forbes, 208-970; 226 NW 117

Intervenor as applicant—rule for determination. Whether an intervenor has a right to a continuance, even on account of his own sickness and consequent inability to be present at the trial and testify, must be determined by giving due consideration to the fact that, by statute (§11175, C., '35) he "has no right to delay".

Flood v City N. Bank, 220-935; 263 NW 321

Labor union injunction—state as party. A continuance requested on the ground that the state had been made a party to proceedings involving the violation of an injunction by labor union officers was properly refused when the petition of the state alleged the same matter and sought the same relief as the petition of the plaintiff.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 286

Continuance—refusal to sick litigant—denial of day in court—discretion reviewed. A motion for a continuance in a will contest, addressed to the sound discretion of the court, should have been sustained when it is properly shown that one of the proponents was seriously ill, and through no fault or negligence on her part, would be unable to attend the trial. Depriving a party in this manner of his day in court is abuse of discretion.

In re Rogers, 226-183; 283 NW 906

Receiver — application — continuance. A plaintiff in a mortgage foreclosure, who enters upon the hearing of his application for the appointment of a receiver, may very properly be denied (1) a continuance in order to enable him to secure the note and mortgage as evidence, (2) the right to dismiss his application with the option to refile the same after execution sale, and (3) the right so to withdraw the application that the court would retain jurisdiction thereover, and act thereon after the result of the execution sale became known.

Des Moines JSL Bank v Danson, 206-897; 220 NW 102; 221 NW 542

Curing erroneous denial. If it be error for the trial court in the midst of a jury trial to refuse a 24-hour continuance to enable plaintiff to produce absent testimony rendered necessary by a sudden and unexpected ruling of the court, said error is cured or avoided by the action of the court in offering to permit plaintiff to dismiss his action without prejudice, and by the plaintiff's rejection of said offer, there being no showing that plaintiff would suffer loss on account of a dismissal.

Putnam v Bussing, 221-871; 266 NW 559

Guardianship proceedings. A motion for a continuance, even in proceedings for the appointment of a guardian, is addressed, peculiarly, to the sound legal discretion of the court, and the order overruling such motion is conclusive on the appellate court unless it clearly appears that the trial court has abused its discretion and thereby perpetrated an injustice.

11444 Absence of evidence.

ANALYSIS

- I THE AFFIDAVIT
- II NAME, RESIDENCE, AND ATTENDANCE OF WITNESS
- III DILIGENCE
- IV FACTS SOUGHT TO BE PROVED

Continuances in criminal cases. See under §13843

I THE AFFIDAVIT

Insufficient showing. A motion for a continuance because of the absence of witnesses, with an affidavit in support thereof, is properly overruled when they fail to set forth the facts to which such witnesses will testify.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

II NAME, RESIDENCE, AND ATTENDANCE OF WITNESS

Negligence. The trial court manifestly does not abuse its discretion in overruling a motion for a continuance because of the absence of a witness when movant's predicament is directly traceable to his own fault and negligence.

Temple Lbr. v Latner, 211-465; 233 NW 522

Death of absent witness. An order refusing a continuance which was asked for because of the absence of a witness will be sustained when it appears that the absent witness has died since the trial.

Suiter v Wehde, 218-200; 254 NW 33

III DILIGENCE

Continuance—absence of witnesses. The refusal of the court to continue a cause in order to enable counsel to obtain a witness will not be deemed error when there is no showing as to diligence or as to the time in which the witness might have been produced.

Miller v Hurburgh, 212-970; 235 NW 282

IV FACTS SOUGHT TO BE PROVED

Insufficient showing—failure to set forth facts. A motion for a continuance because of the absence of witnesses, with an affidavit in support thereof, is properly overruled when they fail to set forth the facts to which such witnesses will testify.

State v Candler, 204-1355; 217 NW 233

11445 Admission by opposite party.

Continuances in criminal cases. See under §13843

Avoidance by admission. An intervenor is properly denied a continuance because of his own sickness and consequent inability to be present and testify at the trial, (1) when his intervention was delayed until after the action in question had been reversed and remanded on appeal and until the very eve of the retrial, and (2) when it is admitted that intervenor, if present, would testify to the alleged facts set forth in his application.

11450 Appeal.

Election of remedies generally. See under §10939 (II)

Prosecution—several offenses—election at close of direct evidence. In a statutory rape prosecution, where several acts of intercourse are shown, the state need not, before the close of the direct evidence, elect on which act it relies.

State v Beltz, 225-155; 279 NW 386

Petition in two counts—(1) guest and (2) not a guest. A passenger in an automobile receiving injuries in a collision may not be required to elect between counts when his petition contains (1) a count alleging recklessness based on theory he was a guest, and (2) a count alleging negligence based on theory he was not a guest.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

New party but same relief—no election of remedies. In an action to compel certain heirs to contribute a share of a judgment arising out of a decedent's ownership of bank stock, a petition that alleges defendants' liability as individuals is not an election of remedies so as to prevent an amendment thereto setting up liability against an estate as an additional party, since there was no change in the nature of relief asked and no choice was made between inconsistent remedies at the time of the election.

Daniel v Best, 224-1348; 279 NW 374

Action by teacher for compensation—pleading—intervention by taxpayer. In a teacher's action to recover compensation against a school district, where a taxpayer files a defensive petition of intervention after a demurrer to the answer had been sustained, but before defendant had made any election to stand on its answer, before any demand to make such election had been made, before default or judgment had been entered, or any demand therefor—the petition of intervention being unquestioned and raising an issue on the additional defensive matter—the court erred in sustaining a motion to strike the petition of intervention and entering judgment against the school district.

Schwartz v School Dist., 225-1272; 282 NW 754

Plea and answer—reply inconsistent with petition—election. Plaintiff's petition alleged a cause of action against defendant as a peace officer. Plaintiff filed a reply in which he denied that the defendant was acting as a peace officer. Such departure did not change, add to, or enlarge the cause of action alleged in the petition. The function of a reply is to avoid matters alleged in the answer or make an issue when a counterclaim is alleged. Plaintiff having alleged but one cause of action, the trial court did not err in refusing to require plaintiff to elect between causes of action.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Erroneous docketing—effect. An applicant for condemnation of realty who erroneously causes its appeal from the award of the sheriff's jury to be docketed in the name of itself as plaintiff, and in the name of the landowner as defendant, and files petition, and thereby induces the landowner to file answer thereto, is in no position, after causing its own error to be corrected by a proper redocketing, either to demand the entry of judgment in accordance with its own offer to confess judgment, or to object to the action of the court in granting to the landowner (the proper plaintiff) a continuance over the term in which to file a proper petition.

Wilcox & Sons v Omaha, 220-1131; 264 NW 5

11456 Detailed report of trial.

Correction of reporter's notes. See under §10803 (III)
Reporter's notes as evidence. See under §§11353, 11354

Record—nonnecessity for demand. A litigant need not formally demand that the “whole proceedings” be reported in the form of a complete record, when such record is being made in the presence of all the parties in pursuance of a general custom of the court and reporter.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1368; 222 NW 553

Failure to preserve record. Tho a motion to vacate a final decree for erroneous proceedings which preceded the decree, be treated in the appellate court as a motion for a new trial, yet movant cannot prevail when he deliberately permitted such proceedings to take place in the trial court without any record preservation, and seeks in his motion proceedings to establish them by mere affidavit and extraneous testimony.

Radle v Radle, 204-82; 214 NW 602

Record—proceedings after judgment. On an appeal from a judgment in mortgage foreclosure, the fact that execution has been issued and the property so sold as to leave a deficiency judgment is not properly made a part of the appellate record by including the same in an amendment to the abstract, and such amendment will be stricken on motion.

John Hancock Ins. v Linnan, 205-176; 218 NW 46

11457 Certification—ipso facto bill.

ANALYSIS

- I CERTIFICATION AND FILING
- II DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE

I CERTIFICATION AND FILING

Certification of evidence—absence of time limit—effect. Evidence taken in an equitable action need not be certified by the trial judge and reporter until there exists a necessity for such certification. Conceding, arguendo, that the certification should be made within a reasonable time after such necessity arises, then the presence or absence of prejudice will materially control the question as to what is such reasonable time.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1368; 222 NW 553

Correction of certificate to shorthand notes. A purported certificate of the trial reporter to the correctness of the shorthand notes, which certificate is fatally defective because not signed by the reporter, may be corrected by said reporter by the subsequent execution of a new and duly signed certificate.

Melman Co. v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

Filing abstract when notes and transcript not with clerk. An abstract filed with the clerk of the supreme court within the time provided by statute (§12847, C., '31) is a proper and valid abstract notwithstanding the fact that, at the time of said filing, the shorthand notes had not been returned to, nor had the transcript been filed with, the clerk of the trial court.

Melman Co. v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

Necessary corrections in trial court. An attack on the record as duly certified to the supreme court on appeal cannot be originated in the supreme court. If the record in the trial court is incorrect it must be there corrected by amendment on proper application.

Melman Co. v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

Documentary evidence in general. See under §11254 (II)

Nonjudicial record of foreign state—effect of federal statute. The admissibility of evidence relating to a nonjudicial public record of a foreign state (foreclosure of mortgage by "advertisement and sale") is not restricted by the federal statutes relating to the form of authentication of such record.

11468 Peremptory.

Interest in insurance companies. The wide discretion of the trial court to permit counsel to ask jurors on their voir dire whether they are stockholders, officers, or directors in any insurance company writing automobile liability insurance will not be interfered with in the absence of an abuse of such discretion. But the purpose of such questions must be solely to guide counsel in exercising his peremptory challenges.

Raines v Wilson, 213-1251; 239 NW 36
Holub v Fitzgerald, 214-857; 243 NW 575

Questioning jurors as insurance stockholders—when proper. Counsel, when actuated by good faith and the sole purpose of acquiring information which will control the exercise of his peremptory challenges, may very properly be permitted, in a personal injury action, to ask a juror on his voir dire whether he or any member of his family is a stockholder in any insurance company.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Improper reference to insured liability. The rule of law, in actions for personal injuries, that reversible error results from the willful injection, by plaintiff, into the record and before the jury, of the fact that defendant is carrying insurance against the liability sued on, is not violated:

1. By asking, in good faith, a juror on voir dire whether he is interested in any such insurance company, or

2. By asking a witness, in good faith, for legitimate testimony, and receiving an answer which, inter alia, reveals the fact of such insurance. (And especially when defendant's cross-examination accentuates the objectionable answer.)

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

11469 Challenges—number—striking.

Overruled challenge—waiver. A party may not predicate error on the overruling of his challenge for cause to a juror when he fails to utilize his unused peremptory challenges.

General provisions in re jurors. See under §§10842-10847, Vol I

I CHALLENGE FOR CAUSE GENERALLY

Rejection of competent juror. The rejection by the court of a qualified juror does not constitute reversible error in the absence of a showing that, because of such rejection, the complainant did not have a fair trial.

Boston v Elec. Co., 206-753; 221 NW 508

Competency—excusing for insufficient cause—effect. It is suggested that it is not reversible error to exclude a juror for an insufficient cause if an impartial jury is afterwards obtained.

State v Kendall, 200-483; 203 NW 806

Competency—discretion of court. Whether a juror shall be excused on an issue as to his competency rests in the sound legal discretion of the court.

State v Kendall, 200-483; 203 NW 806

Competency—friendliness with defendant—no cause for challenge. Friendliness of a prospective juror with the defendant is not a cause for challenging his competency, when he states on examination that he would try the case on the evidence, the court's instructions, and render a fair and impartial verdict.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

II QUALIFICATIONS

Competency—waiver. The fact that a juror was an election judge at the election at which the jury list was selected and certified, is not a ground for challenge for cause even though his name is certified as a juror in violation of the statute. In any event, any tenable objection to the juror is waived by not discovering the incompetency until after the verdict.

II QUALIFICATIONS—concluded

State v Burch, 202-348; 209 NW 474

Competency—waiver. Incompetency of a juror because of deafness is waived (1) by failing to examine the juror as to such condition, or (2) by so examining him and accepting him without objection.

Tollackson v City, 203-696; 213 NW 222

III FIDUCIARY, CONFIDENTIAL AND OTHER SPECIAL RELATIONS

Acquaintance and relationship between jurors and witnesses. It is quite proper for counsel upon the voir dire to ascertain by proper questions the acquaintance and relationship existing between prospective jurors and prospective witnesses.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Attorney and client. The relation of attorney and client is not established by the simple showing that the attorney in question had, at one time in the past, examined an abstract of title for the juror.

V OPINION OR BIAS

Jury—competency—friendliness with defendant—no cause for challenge. Friendliness of a prospective juror with the defendant is not a cause for challenging his competency, when he states on examination that he would try the case on the evidence, the court's instructions, and render a fair and impartial verdict.

Injecting insurance in motor vehicle accident cases. See under §5037.09 (VII)

Discussion. See 12 ILR 433—Judicial examination of jurors; 17 ILR 501—Informing of defendant's insurance

Conduct of jurors—false answers on voir dire. False answers by a juror on his voir dire do not constitute grounds for new trial unless shown to be prejudicial.

Elmore v Railway, 207-862; 224 NW 28

Voir dire examination—permissible range. The act of the county attorney, in a prosecution for maintaining a liquor nuisance, in asking a proposed juror (whose business was transporting beer) whether he would vote to convict the accused if the accused was proven guilty beyond all reasonable doubt, will not, in and of itself, be deemed prejudicial error.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Interest of juror in insurance company. The good faith asking on voir dire whether a prospective juror is a policyholder or in any way interested in a certain insurance association, is not reversible error.

Kaufman v Borg, 214-293; 242 NW 104

Motor vehicle collision—injecting insurance on voir dire—discretion of court. Control of voir dire examination on the subject of liability insurance is largely within the discretion of the trial court, and will not be interfered with without a showing of prejudicial abuse.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

Voir dire examination. In an action for damages arising out of a collision between automobiles, plaintiff, in the selection of the jury, has the right, in a proper manner, to ask each prospective juror whether he is in any manner interested in any liability insurance company.

Olson v Tyner, 219-251; 257 NW 538

Voir dire examination as to insurance—motor vehicle case. In examining jurors for an automobile accident case, where counsel asked two or three jurors if they had insurance in a certain company, and the court then learned that the plaintiff was not insured in a mutual company and so informed the counsel, such allowance of questions was not an abuse of discretion of the trial court, when no improper motive or bad faith was shown, and no other mention of insurance was made.

Kiesau v Vangen, 226-824; 285 NW 181

11479 Drawing.

Jury drawn from part of panel. An accused in a criminal cause who fails to show that he exercised any or all of his peremptory challenges, or that he did not obtain a fair and impartial jury, may not complain that he was denied the right to have the jury drawn from the entire jury panel.

"Burden of proof" or "burden of issue". See under §11487

Cross-examination of witnesses. See under §11254

Reopening case—oversight or mistake corrected. See under §11505

I TRIAL GENERALLY

Examination by several counsel. The act of the court in permitting more than one counsel to cross-examine witnesses does not necessarily constitute error, especially when there are several defendants in the case.

Williamson v Craig, 204-555; 215 NW 664

Discretion as to nonrelevant matter. The court, having exercised its discretion to permit a litigant to introduce testimony of a somewhat nonrelevant nature, may very well permit the opposite party to counter with opposing testimony on the same point.

Nigut v Hill, 200-748; 205 NW 312

Conduct of trial—leading questions. Perhaps trial court should refrain from objecting on his own motion to leading questions, but no prejudice resulted where court's views as to weight of evidence were not disclosed and trial court must be allowed some latitude in supervising trials.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

Unnecessary assumption of burden. A plaintiff may assume the burden of showing that the signature to an instrument, defensively pleaded against him by the defendant, is not genuine, even tho he might have availed himself of a statutorily implied denial of the answer, or might have definitely cast the burden as to genuineness upon the defendant by a denial under oath. And if he successfully establishes the aforesaid negative he will be accorded the same protection as tho the defendant had failed to establish the affirmative.

McFerren v Bank, 214-198; 238 NW 914

Fraud—burden of proof. Principle reaffirmed that (barring fiduciary relationships) the burden of proof rests on the party who alleges fraud, undue influence, or mental incompetency as the basis for invalidating a deed of conveyance.

Kramer v Leinbaugh, 219-604; 259 NW 20

Striking allegation (?) or withdrawal of issue (?). It is not proper practice, at the close of all the evidence, to move to strike from the petition unsupported or legally insufficient allegations of negligence. The proper practice is to move to withdraw such issues from the jury.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Collateral issue. The right to pursue a collateral issue developed on cross-examination is in distinct disfavor in our law, especially when the evidence in support thereof is ambiguous, remote from all proper issues, and otherwise incompetent.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

Unallowable scope. Reversible error results in permitting a cross-examination to develop testimony which is highly prejudicial to the party calling the witness, and which has no relation to the testimony developed on the direct examination.

McNeely v Conlon, 216-796; 248 NW 17

Cross-examination—broad discretion of court—abuse. Principle reaffirmed that the court has broad discretion in determining the proper limits of a cross-examination,—a discretion which will not be interfered with except in case of clear abuse.

Laudner v James, 221-863; 266 NW 15

Cross-examination—fatal undue limitation. Undue limitation on the cross-examination of a witness may constitute reversible error. So held where the examining party offered to prove, on cross-examination, material matter which went to the heart of the controversy.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exchange, 221-1382; 268 NW 155

Evidence offered covered by other testimony. Where an offer of evidence was made during cross-examination, and was covered by other testimony, there was no prejudice in sustaining an objection to the offer.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Opportunity to cross-examine—necessity. When a recess was taken after the cross-examination of a witness for the defendants had begun, and through no fault of the defendants the witness did not re-appear for further cross-examination, his testimony was properly stricken on the ground that the plaintiff had been denied the right of full cross-examination.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Question read by reporter—repeating objection unnecessary—answer stricken. An answer to a question should not be permitted to stand, even without objection, when it came as the result of the reporter reading the question previously given and objected to, which objection was sustained.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Belated nonrebuttal testimony. The reception of nonrebuttal testimony after parties have rested will not be deemed reversible error unless it affirmatively appears that the court abused its discretion.

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787

II ORDER OF EVIDENCE

Reception of evidence—proffer in presence of jury—discretion of court. The court has discretionary power to refuse to permit counsel to state, in the presence of the jury, the controversial facts which he expects to prove by a proffered witness.

State v Teager, 222-392; 269 NW 348

Consideration and delivery—proof by presumptions—instructions. The questions of want of consideration and nondelivery of a note, supported only by presumptions, need not be submitted to the jury when such presumptions are not overcome by evidence, and when the only conflict arises over the genuine-

II ORDER OF EVIDENCE—concluded ness of the signature, the submission of this single question was proper.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Improper rebuttal evidence—motion to strike necessary for review. If the answer of a witness does not properly constitute rebuttal evidence, it should be attacked by a motion to strike, and the court commits no reversible error in permitting it to stand in the absence of objection.

Churchill v Briggs, 225-1187; 282 NW 280

Gifts—inter vivos—consideration. Altho a promissory note for which there is no consideration is an unenforceable promise to make a future gift, nevertheless in an action against an executor on a note the presumption that the note imports a consideration, if negatived, must be overcome by evidence and this burden is on the maker or his representatives.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Malicious prosecution—evidence. In action for damages for malicious prosecution, plaintiff has burden to show (1) the prosecution; (2) instigation or procurement by defendant; (3) acquittal or discharge of plaintiff; (4) want of probable cause; (5) malice.

Bair v Schultz, 227-193; 288 NW 119

III NUMBER OF WITNESSES

Cross-examination—limiting to matter covered in direct examination. Cross-examination was properly limited to matters brought out on direct examination in an automobile accident case in which the witness was a defendant taxicab driver with whom the plaintiff was riding, when such witness might be regarded as hostile to the plaintiff's cause.

I ARGUMENT IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 6 ILB 193—Oral argument

Right to open and close. It is erroneous to refuse to a party, who has the burden of the issue, the right to open and close the argument, but not necessarily reversible error.

Schipfer v Stone, 206-328; 218 NW 568

Right to open and close. The right to open and close argument is properly given to the defendant when the issues are such that plaintiff must recover unless defendant establishes his affirmative defenses.

First Bk. v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767

Burden of issues. The opening and closing argument is properly accorded to a defendant who admits the allegations of the petition but avoids them by an affirmative defense.

Early v Ins. Assn., 201-263; 207 NW 117

Party having full burden of issues. A defendant is properly accorded the right to open and close the argument when he pleads that, when he executed a renewal note to an indorsee, he had knowledge of the fraud in the original note, but that he executed the renewal note because of the false and fraudulent representation of the indorsee that he was a holder of the note in due course.

Continental Bank v Greene, 200-568; 203 NW 9

Latitude allowed. Counsel has the right to draw his own conclusions from the testimony even tho his logic may be faulty, or the opinions expressed or conclusions drawn may be unjust, so long as he keeps within the record and does not appeal to passion and prejudice rather than to reason.

Lawyer v Stansell, 217-111; 250 NW 887

Curing error in argument. An oral admonition by the court to the jury, during argument not to consider a certain statement by counsel, ordinarily cures any error resulting from the making of the statement.

Stingley v Crawford, 219-509; 258 NW 316

Improper argument. An argument to the effect that plaintiff could not have known at the time of an accident of the existence of an ordinance relative to rear signal lights on vehicles, because defendant's counsel did not know such fact until long after the accident, is improper.

DeMoss v Cab Co., 218-77; 254 NW 17

Trial—prosecutor's misconduct—admonition. In a prosecution for operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, where misconduct was alleged because of prosecutor's argument to jury that defendant had admitted his intoxication, and, if other statements of prosecutor were not true, defendant's counsel would not jump up and squeal like a pig under a gate, and when timely admonitions to the jury are given, coupled with the discretion of the trial court in controlling arguments, no reversal should follow as supreme court will not interfere unless such misconduct results in prejudice and deprives a defendant of a fair trial.

State v Dale, 225-1254; 282 NW 715

Arguments and conduct of counsel. An opening statement in the presence of and not objectionable to the court cannot be an erroneous violation of attorney's privilege of argument since the control thereof rests largely with the trial court.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

II "BURDEN OF PROOF" AND "BURDEN OF ISSUE"

Plaintiff's burden—proving negligence allegations. A plaintiff's failure to carry the burden of proving at least some of his allegations of negligence properly results in a directed verdict against him.

King v Gold, 224-890; 276 NW 774

Dual meaning term "burden of proof". Burden of proof has two meanings: (1) a named litigant must establish a given proposition to succeed and (2) at a given stage in the trial it becomes the duty of one of the parties to go forward with the evidence.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Admissions require no proof—binding effect. An admission in a pleading raises no issue, requires no proof, and the pleader is bound thereby.

Blezek v Blezek, 226-237; 284 NW 180

Confession and avoidance—assault and battery. In an action for injuries inflicted upon the plaintiff when he was forcibly ejected from the home of the defendant, where the defendant's answer assumed the burden of proof by admitting the assault and battery, but by way of justification and confession and avoidance asserted that the plaintiff had been ejected after refusing to leave, the evidence was not sufficient to compel the court to direct a verdict for the defendant on the issue of whether the defendant had used more force than was necessary to accomplish the ejection.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Unnecessary allegation. A pleader need not prove an unnecessary allegation.

Malcolm Bank v Mehlin, 200-970; 205 NW 788

Superfluous allegation. An allegation in mortgage foreclosure that the mortgagor was, when the mortgage was executed, a fee simple owner of the property need not be proven.

Colby v Forbes, 207-9; 216 NW 722

Right to ignore one's own allegation. A plaintiff in making his proof may ignore a negative allegation which he need not have made, when defendant pleads, as was his legal duty, an affirmative allegation as to the same subject matter.

Wilson v Fortune, 209-810; 229 NW 190

Undue influence—burden of proof. Burden of proving undue influence, and its invalidating effect on a transaction, rests on him who makes the allegation.

Penn Ins. v Mulvaney, 221-925; 265 NW 889

Answer—unnecessary plea. A defendant who specifically pleads certain matter as a defense in addition to his defense of general denial thereby invites the court so to instruct as to impose on defendant the burden to prove said specially pleaded defense, even tho said defendant might have rested on his general denial.

Jordison v Jordison Bros., 215-938; 247 NW 491

Burden to sustain jurisdiction. On special appearance directly attacking the jurisdiction of the court because of a defect in the original notice or in the service thereof, the burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff to sustain the jurisdiction by proof of an adequate notice and the service thereof; and such burden is not met by the production of a captionless, unaddressed, and unsigned notice.

Pendy v Cole, 211-199; 233 NW 47

Proving material fact—inference from isolated fact insufficient. Proof of a material fact is not accomplished by inference from one isolated incident or circumstance, but from the aggregation of all related circumstances that appear.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Ownership of claim. One need not affirmatively prove that he is the owner of a cause of action which arose in his favor out of the very transaction on which he is sued.

Williams v Burnside, 207-239; 222 NW 413

City ordinance—burden to show inadmissibility. The burden of pointing out wherein city ordinance regulating train's speed is defective, either in substance or method of adoption, is on the party objecting to its admissibility.

Meier v Railway, 224-295; 275 NW 139

Burden to prove invalidity of statutes. One who attacks the constitutionality of a statute must show its invalidity beyond a reasonable doubt.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Husband—nonsupport. In a prosecution for failure of a husband to support his wife and child, it is not incumbent on the accused to show that he was "without fault", and reversible error results from so instructing.

II "BURDEN OF PROOF" AND "BURDEN OF ISSUE"—continued

State v Gude, 201-4; 206 NW 584

Divorce—desertion—insanity. When it appears that the defendant in an action for divorce based on desertion has been judicially declared insane, plaintiff must overcome the presumption that such insanity continued. In other words, plaintiff must establish a return to sanity on the part of defendant—must establish a mental condition such as would enable defendant to form an intent to desert.

Carr v Carr, 209-160; 225 NW 948

Antenuptial conveyance—fraud. A wife who pleads that her deceased husband fraudulently disposed of his property prior to marriage, in order to deprive her of the interest which she would take as a wife, must establish (1) an existing contract of marriage between herself and the deceased at the time of the conveyance by the deceased, and (2) that she had no knowledge of such conveyance prior to her marriage.

In re Mann, 201-878; 208 NW 310

Elections—contests—preserving and guarding ballots. Ballots cast at an election are not admissible as evidence in a subsequent contest unless the contestant first establishes the fact that the officer legally charged with the custody of said ballots has preserved, guarded, and protected them in such manner as to reasonably preclude the opportunity of unauthorized persons to tamper with them.

Traeger v Meskel, 217-970; 252 NW 108

Execution—levy—return—presumption—burden to overcome. A party who claims that the various entries of the acts done under an execution and constituting the officers "return" were not entered at the time the various acts were done, has the burden to so show. In the absence of such showing, it must be presumed that the officer did his duty and made the entries at the time required by statute. (§11664, C., '31.)

Northwestern Ins. v Block, 216-401; 249 NW 395

Replevin—strength of title. Plaintiff in replevin, in order to recover, must show, by the strength of his own title, that, when the writ was issued, he was entitled to the possession of the property in question. Evidence held quite insufficient so to show.

Chorpening v Nickerson, 223-791; 273 NW 843

Requiring defendant to prove allegations of co-defendant. In damage action by one riding in an automobile against a truck driver and his employer where defense was conducted jointly and where, in respect to negligence, the question was whether negligence of the automobile driver or the negligence of the truck driver was the sole proximate cause of the accident, it was not prejudicial error to instruct jury that burden was upon both defendants to prove negligence of automobile driver, affirmatively alleged by the employer alone.

Usher v Stafford, 227-443; 288 NW 432

Injury from motor vehicle—fraud in settlement—burden. A plaintiff, injured when the automobile in which she is riding in a snowstorm is struck from the rear by another automobile, and who, in the presence of her husband and sister, makes a written settlement with the insurance company for such injuries, and who delays two years thereafter before attacking as fraudulent the validity of such settlement, does not meet her burden to overcome the written instruments by giving her own self-contradictory testimony with no proof of actual fraud or misrepresentations.

Mosher v Snyder, 224-896; 276 NW 582; 4 NCCA(NS) 132

Requiring excessive proof. An instruction is erroneous when it requires negligence to be established "in the respects charged in the petition", and the negligence so charged is (1) excessive speed, (2) excessive speed after warning, and (3) excessive speed while traveling on loose gravel.

Codner v Stowe, 201-800; 208 NW 330

Substituted service on nonresident corporation—plaintiff's burden. In a motor vehicle accident action, wherein plaintiff obtained service of notice upon a nonresident corporation by serving the commissioner of motor vehicles, and wherein the defendant attacked such service by special appearance on the ground that it was not a person within the purview of the statute, the burden was on the plaintiff to make such showing that defendant was a person under the statute. Held burden not met.

Jermaine v Graf, 225-1063; 283 NW 428

Burden—railway crossing—injuries from jolting—causal negligence necessary. Plaintiff has the burden to show wherein a railway was negligent in maintaining a viaduct crossing, since jury's verdict may not rest upon surmise, speculation, or guess, and this burden is not met when plaintiff fails to show that injuries received from being thrown against top of car while going over viaduct were caused by a condition of the viaduct resulting from negligence.

Harris v Milwaukee Ry., 224-1319; 278 NW 338

Contributory negligence—minors. An instruction, in a personal injury action, that the burden of proof is on plaintiff to establish his freedom from contributory negligence is not nullified by an instruction that the plaintiff, if of the age of eight years only, is presumed to be incapable of such negligence, and that, to find to the contrary, defendant must so show.

Stutzman v Younkerman, 204-1162; 216 NW 627

Personal injury—contributory negligence. A definite instruction that plaintiff has the burden of proof to show that he was not guilty of any negligence contributing to his injury is in no degree overcome by later instructions wherein the court, with reference to contributory-fact issues, uses the expression "if you find." In other words, such expression does not have the effect of impliedly placing the burden of proof as to contributory negligence upon the defendant.

Dean v Koolish, 212-238; 234 NW 179

Res ipsa loquitur—scope. The full limit of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is that the peculiar facts of the occurrence warrant or permit the jury to draw the inference of negligence, not that such facts compel the jury to draw such inference in the absence of explanatory evidence. The doctrine does not in the slightest degree change the burden of proof on the issue of negligence.

Preston v D. M. Ry. Co., 214-156; 241 NW 648

Assumption of risk—burden on pleader. The jury, in a personal injury or death claim action where the defendant pleads "assumption of risk," should be plainly instructed that one pleading an affirmative defense must assume the burden of proving it.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Death of animals—proof of cause. Proof that a preparation was fed to animals and that immediately, or shortly thereafter, some of them died, and the others became permanently stunted in growth, does not justify a presumption that the said preparation caused the deaths or stunting.

Hildebrand v Oil Co., 205-946; 219 NW 40

Falsity of statement by seller. A vendee who, in defense to an action for the purchase price of hogs, alleges that he purchased under a representation that the stock had been doubly vaccinated, and that the representation was false, has the burden to establish not only (1) the representation, but (2) the falsity thereof.

Co-operative Sales Co. v Van der Beek, 219-974; 259 NW 586

Affirmative defense—instruction on preponderance of evidence. In an action to recover damages from railroad for value of stallion which died during transportation, wherein an excepted cause of death is pleaded and relied on as an affirmative defense, railroad will be entitled only to instruction that verdict must be for railroad if such cause should appear from a preponderance of the evidence.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Carrier's "burden of proof." In an action for damages against a railroad for the value of a stallion which died in transit, where the court clearly defined those matters and facts as to which the burden of proof was on plaintiff, and in substance charged the jury that, upon plaintiff having successfully carried this burden, the "burden of proof" would be on defendant to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, the excepted cause, held, the use of the phrase "burden of proof" as quoted in second instruction was not error.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Contributory negligence nullifies statutory presumption. When a person is injured by transmission line, the statutory presumption of defendant's negligence need not be rebutted when plaintiff fails to establish freedom from contributory negligence.

Aller v Iowa Elec. Co., 227-185; 238 NW 66

Reasonably safe street. An injured person suing for damages consequent upon the dangerous condition of ice and snow on a public street between the curb lines has the burden of proof to show what reasonable action the city might have taken to avoid the said dangerous condition.

Ritchie v Des Moines, 211-1026; 233 NW 43

Proof justifying recovery—conspiracy. Under a plea of (1) conspiracy to commit a wrongful act, and (2) joint participation in the wrongful act, recovery may be had on proof of the latter allegation only.

De Bruin v Studer, 206-129; 220 NW 116

Malicious prosecution—elements of proof. In action for damages for malicious prosecution, plaintiff has burden to show (1) the prosecution; (2) instigation or procurement by defendant; (3) acquittal or discharge of plaintiff; (4) want of probable cause; (5) malice.

Bair v Schultz, 227-193; 288 NW 119

Death of partner, and surviving partners—accounting. In an accounting between the representative of a deceased partner and the surviving partners, the burden of the accounting is upon the surviving partners.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Corporate president's authority to write checks. In action by payee of check drawn by president of corporation for interest on officer's note it was held that payee had burden to prove check was executed by the corporation, that president had no implied authority to give check for interest on officer's personal debt, that president's check on corporation for officer's debt was without consideration as to the corporation, and that payee could not recover on the check as a matter of law without proof of president's authority or benefit received by the corporation.

Smoltz v Meat Co., (NOR); 224 NW 536

Agent's authority to indorse check. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks upon indorsement by payee's attorney, the burden of proof is upon defendant bank to establish apparent, ostensible, or implied authority in the attorney to indorse the checks as the basis for estoppel against payee to assert lack of authority on part of attorney.

Federal Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Debts—liability of stockholders. Persons who are in good faith contracted with and extended credit as partners are personally liable for the resulting debt, in the absence of evidence by them that they are stockholders in a corporation which is at least a de facto corporation.

Wilkin Co. v Assn., 208-921; 223 NW 899

Equitable estoppel—unrecorded conveyance—pleader's burden. One alleging an equitable estoppel must prove it by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, hence in asserting in a fraudulent conveyance action, an equitable estoppel against the wife of a bank stockholder, because she withheld from record, for many years, a deed to herself from her husband, the creditors of the bank have not sustained the burden of proving estoppel when they admit that they did not deposit their money on the wife's representation, nor upon their belief in, the husband's ownership of the land.

Bates v Kleve, 225-255; 280 NW 501

Foreign corporation's permit to do business—burden of proof. A foreign corporation for pecuniary profit, suing on an Iowa contract, has the burden to plead and prove its compliance with the statutes requiring permit to do business herein, without which a directed verdict in its favor is error.

Johnson Co. v Hamilton, 225-551; 281 NW 127

Accounting—burden on plaintiff. In action for accounting plaintiff has burden to prove account and show balance and amount due.

Palmer v Manville, (NOR); 228 NW 20

Account stated. A bank which furnishes its customer periodical statements of the condition of his debits and credits which are acquiesced in by the long silence of the customer is under no burden of proof to disprove the subsequent claim of the customer that certain specified items of the account were incorrect. The burden rests on the customer to establish his allegation of incorrectness.

State Bank v Cooper, 201-225; 205 NW 333

Value of goods. In an action on an account, the plaintiff must necessarily fail when he wholly fails to establish either the reasonable value of the goods or the agreed price therefor, such being the issues in the case.

Cutino Co. v Weeks, 203-581; 213 NW 413

Tender—must be kept good. Tender will not discharge a debt, and is of no avail unless kept good, and the burden of proving affirmatively that it has been kept good is on the party relying thereon.

Hill v Rolfsema, 226-486; 284 NW 376

Contract for repayment of money. One seeking to recover money loaned must prove a contract express or implied for its repayment.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Breach of warranty. Burden of proof in action on contract providing for delivery of drain tile was upon seller to show that tile were "sound and true", and evidence held to show that breakage was due to neglect of buyer.

Graettinger Works v Gjellefald, (NOR); 214 NW 579

Nondelivery of abstract company records—plaintiff's burden. Plaintiff had burden of proving defendant did not deliver all of property of abstract company as provided in contract whereby assets of abstract company were to be turned over to plaintiff, in that all "take-offs" were not delivered.

Mills Co. v Otis, (NOR); 228 NW 47

Consideration—implied in written contracts. The presumption created by statute providing that all contracts in writing, signed by the party to be bound, should import consideration is sufficient to cast burden upon defendant asserting lack of consideration to overcome such presumption.

Beal v Milliron, (NOR); 267 NW 83

Rescission of contract. To sustain a cause of action for rescission proof of fraud must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing, and a mere preponderance is not sufficient.

Wiley v Bank, (NOR); 257 NW 214

Chattel mortgage—subsequent purchaser. In replevin by a chattel mortgagee, if the defendant is (1) a subsequent purchaser for value, and (2) without notice, he must so allege and prove.

Manbeck Co. v Garside, 208-656; 226 NW 9

Subsequent purchaser—mortgaged chattels. A mortgagee in an action for the conversion of the mortgaged chattels need only allege the existence of his unsatisfied mortgage. The defendant must allege and prove, not only (1) that he is a subsequent purchaser, but (2) that he became such purchaser without notice of the plaintiff's mortgage.

Loranz & Co. v Smith, 204-35; 214 NW 525; 53 ALR 662

Conditional sales—replevin of automobile conditionally sold under "trust receipt". Trust receipt for automobile delivered by a finance company was in effect conditional sale when accompanied by promissory note and agreement to return the automobile on demand. Held, in a replevin action the finance company sustained its burden to prove its right to immediate possession by a showing of default in payment, which gave the right to possession.

General Motors v Koch, 225-897; 281 NW 728

Pledges—sale. Merely showing that the relation of pledgor and pledgee existed does not cast on the pledgee the burden of proving that his sale of the pledge was bona fide.

Williams v Herman, 216-499; 249 NW 215

Alteration of instrument. He who alleges a material alteration of an instrument has the burden to prove his allegation. No presumption exists that the alteration was made after the execution of the instrument.

Council Bluffs Bank v Wendt, 203-972; 213 NW 599

Payment of note—burden on defendant. In an action in probate to establish claim based on promissory note, the burden of proving payment is upon defense.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Payment of note—burden of proof. Defendants, claiming payment on note which plaintiff denied, had burden to prove such payment by a preponderance of evidence, whether payment was made as partial payment on note or on property purchased, and question was for jury.

Sager v Skinner, (NOR); 229 NW 846

Execution of promissory notes. The burden to prove payment never shifts from the litigant who pleads it—not even when he creates by his evidence a presumption of payment on which he may safely rely, in the absence of counter evidence. So held where the pleader established the execution of promissory notes by his debtor, and thereby generated the rebuttable presumption that all prior claims between the parties had been settled and paid.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

Husband's management of wife's property. In an action against a husband and wife on a promissory note signed only by the husband, and involving the wife on a theory that both were engaged in a joint adventure for which the money was used, liability of the wife may be predicated only upon a joint adventure contract, either express or implied, and plaintiff has the burden to prove the existence of such contract.

Valley Bank v Staves, 224-1197; 278 NW 346

Shifting defense after denial of directed verdict. In an action on a note, when the defendant asked for a directed verdict on the grounds of lack of consideration, he was not in a position to complain of the refusal to direct the verdict when he later shifted his defense admitting the signature on the note and setting up affirmative defenses, thereby placing the burden of proof on himself.

Ballard v Ballard, 226-699; 285 NW 165

Consideration and delivery of note—proof by presumptions. The questions of want of consideration and nondelivery of a note, supported only by presumptions, need not be submitted to the jury when such presumptions are not overcome by evidence, and when the only conflict arises over the genuineness of the signature, the submission of this single question was proper.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Bills and notes—payment. One who pays his promissory note has a duty to know and the burden to prove that (1) an agent to whom he makes payment has authority to receive on behalf of the holder, or that (2) the holder received the payment; and without proving one or the other the note is not discharged.

Fisher v Pride, 225-6; 280 NW 492

Holder in due course—burden to show. Where a check is issued on a condition, placing limitations on payee's right to negotiate it, in spite of which defective title the check is negotiated to a bank, after which payment is refused by drawee bank because payment stopped, the burden, in an action between the bank to whom check was negotiated and the maker, is on the bank to show that it was a holder in due course and had no notice of payee's defective title.

Newton Bank v Strand Co., 224-536; 277 NW 491

Unreasonable time. Where payee returned check to maker on account of a debt owing to maker, but by some unknown means again obtained possession of the check, which had not been put in a place of safety, and negotiated it to plaintiff eight days after execution, burden was on defendant-maker to prove plaintiff's lack of good faith in acquiring the check, and lapse of eight days was not such an unreasonable time within the statute as to rebut presumption that plaintiff was a holder in due course. What constitutes such an unreasonable time must be determined on facts of each particular case.

Clarinda Sales Co. v Radio Sales, 227-671; 288 NW 923

II "BURDEN OF PROOF" AND "BURDEN OF ISSUE"—continued

Genuineness of signature—unnecessary assumption of burden—effect. A plaintiff may assume the burden of showing that the signature to an instrument, defensively pleaded against him by the defendant, is not genuine, even tho he might have availed himself of a statutorily implied denial of the answer, or might have definitely cast the burden as to genuineness upon the defendant by a denial under oath. And if he successfully establishes the aforesaid negative he will be accorded the same protection as tho the defendant had failed to establish the affirmative.

McFerren v Bank, 214-198; 238 NW 914

Alteration of bond. The burden of proof to establish a material alteration of a depositary bond is on the sureties who allege such alteration. Evidence held insufficient to show such alteration, notwithstanding its numerical strength.

Plymouth County v Schulz, 209-81; 227 NW 622

Public funds—payment by depositaries. Proof that a municipality had deposited public funds to a named amount in an authorized public depositary casts the burden on the depositary, or on the receiver therefor, to show what payments were made from such deposits and the legality of such payments. And such burden is not met by the introduction of unexplained ledger entries.

Winnebago County v Horton, 204-1186; 216 NW 769

Bonds—possession and ownership—evidence—insufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to establish, prima facie, (1) that certain government bonds were in a certain bank of deposit when said bank was robbed, or (2) that said bonds belonged to an alleged owner.

State Bank v Bank, 223-596; 273 NW 160

Real estate commission. In an action by a real estate broker for commission he has burden to prove that he was the efficient and procuring cause of the sale.

Donahoe v Denman, 223-1273; 275 NW 154

Liability—shortage in shipment. A commission merchant, in an action against his principal for a balance due for advances, must adequately account for all goods consigned to him.

Blanchard v Wood Co., 204-255; 214 NW 583

Independent contractor. One who claims that labor and services accepted by him were performed by an independent contractor has the burden to prove such claim.

Buescher v Schmidt, 209-300; 228 NW 26

Employment—wrongful discharge—prima facie measure of damages. The prima facie measure of damages for the wrongful discharge of a servant is the contract wage. The master has the burden to show the extent to which this prima facie measure should be reduced.

Breen v Power Co., 207-1161; 224 NW 562

Consent of automobile owner—inference. An inference arises from the ownership of an automobile that it was operated with the owner's consent, or under his direction, and the owner has the burden of establishing that such was not the case.

McCann v Downey, 227-1277; 290 NW 690

Powers of agent. A defendant who meets an action of quantum meruit for the use of machinery with the defense that he used the machinery under a contract for an agreed rental, entered into with one of the employees of plaintiff, must establish the authority of the employee to enter into such contract.

Des Moines Paving Co. v Lincoln Co., 201-502; 207 NW 563

Workmen's compensation act—review for additional compensation. An employee under the workmen's compensation act, allowed and paid compensation for an injury, has the burden of proof, on his application for review and compensation for additional consequences of said injury, to establish by a preponderance of evidence that said additional consequences are such as would naturally and proximately follow said original injury,—were not the result of intervening accidents or other causes.

Oldham v Scofield, 222-764; 266 NW 480; 269 NW 925

Exception to workmen's compensation. One relying on an exception to the workmen's compensation act, providing that no compensation shall be allowed for an injury caused by the employee's willful intent to injure himself or to willfully injure another, has the burden of establishing the facts which bring the matter within the exception.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Exception to workmen's compensation—burden of proof not sustained. The defendant in an action for workmen's compensation who relied on an exception to the law failed to sustain the burden of proving the exception when there was an entire lack of evidence tending to prove or disprove the exception.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Workmen's compensation exception—confession and avoidance. Under a claim for workmen's compensation, a defense alleging that the injuries sustained by the claimant were caused by the willful act of a third person is in the nature of a confession and avoidance and places the burden of proving it to be true upon the defendant.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Fact of employment—claimant's burden of proof. The general rule that an employee is entitled to compensation for injuries arising in the course of his employment places upon him the burden of proving himself to be an employee within the meaning of the statute and proving that he received an injury which arose in the course of his employment.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Compromise and settlement—impeachment. Fraud, in impeachment of a compromise and settlement, must be established by the pleader who alleges it.

Coffman v Brenton, 214-185; 239 NW 9

Fraud—elements and degree of proof. An action to set aside a contract of compromise and settlement because of alleged fraudulent representations must be supported by proof which clearly, satisfactorily and convincingly establishes (1) the actual making of the material representations, (2) the falsity thereof, (3) the defendant's knowledge of the falsity, (4) the plaintiff's ignorance of the falsity, and (5) plaintiff's reliance thereon. If plaintiff fails to show by the required amount of proof the actual making of the representations, the court, of course, need proceed no further, except to enter a dismissal.

Kilts v Read, 216-356; 249 NW 157

Compromise and settlement—impeachment. He who seeks to avoid a duly proven compromise, settlement and release must establish:

1. That the release was procured by fraud, or
2. That the contention or claim on which the compromise and settlement was based was wholly unfounded, and, therefore, could not support a compromise and settlement.

Evidence reviewed and held wholly insufficient to impeach a compromise and settlement of liability under a policy of life insurance.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Compromise settlement—fraud. A plaintiff who attacks a compromise settlement of the amount due under a policy of insurance on the ground that it was fraud-induced has the burden to show that the representations inducing the settlement were knowingly false and that he innocently relied thereon; and plaintiff must, of course, fail on a record showing that the representations were true, and that he knew they were true.

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156

Release — avoidance for fraud — indirectly imposing. The burden of proof to avoid a written release of damages, on the ground that said release was obtained by fraud, rests on the party who alleges the fraud. Instructions reviewed and held adequately to impose such burden in substance tho not in words, assuming ordinary intelligence on the part of the jury.

Engle v Ungles, 223-780; 273 NW-879; 4 NCCA(NS) 92

Note as future gift—presumption—burden. Altho a promissory note for which there is no consideration is an unenforceable promise to make a future gift, nevertheless in an action against an executor on a note the presumption that the note imports a consideration, if negated, must be overcome by evidence and this burden is on the maker or his representatives.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Gifts inter vivos—mother to son gift for mother's life support — fiduciaries — donee's burden. The donee of a gift inter vivos, when holding a fiduciary relationship with the donor, has the burden to rebut the presumption that the transaction was fraudulent and voidable, but this does not apply to testamentary gifts. So held where a mother first willed, and later assigned, all her property to one son, in consideration of a contract that he should support her as long as she lived—the result being to disinherit another son.

Reed v Reed, 225-773; 281 NW 444

Gift causa mortis—burden of proof. The burden to establish a gift causa mortis rests on the donee claiming thereunder. Evidence reviewed, and held that said burden had been successfully met.

Flint v Varney, 220-1241; 264 NW 277

Gifts inter vivos—presumption of fraud. A gift of a deed to one who stands in a confidential or fiduciary relationship to the donor raises a presumption of constructive fraud, and the burden is on the donee to make such showing of fact as to overcome the presumption.

Jensen v Phippen, 225-302; 280 NW 528

Replevin to recover property held as gift. In a replevin action for property held under claim of gift, plaintiff has the burden throughout the trial to establish right to immediate possession.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Execution of release. The burden of proof that a release was executed rests on the party alleging the release.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Fraud—presumption and burden of proof. Fraud is never presumed. He who alleges its existence must establish it by clear, convincing and satisfactory evidence. Principle applied in an equitable action to set aside and cancel certain financial obligations allegedly obtained by fraud.

Eckhardt v Trust Co., 223-471; 273 NW 347

II "BURDEN OF PROOF" AND "BURDEN OF ISSUE"—continued

Fraud—remedies of creditors. A creditor, seeking to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance which recites a consideration which is apparently valid and substantial tho indefinite in amount, must carry his proof beyond showing that the grantor and grantee were husband and wife and that the grantor was insolvent when he delivered the conveyance. In other words, such proof does not cast upon grantee the burden (1) to sustain the adequacy of the consideration, and (2) to negative bad faith in the transaction, or (3) to show that the grantor at the time retained sufficient other property to pay his creditors.

First N. Bank v Currier, 218-1041; 256 NW 734

Transfers and transactions invalid—voluntary conveyance—proof showing validity. Principle reaffirmed that a voluntary conveyance is constructively fraudulent as to existing creditors of the grantor unless the grantee establishes the fact that the grantor at the time of the conveyance retained sufficient property to pay his creditors.

First N. Bank v Currier, 218-1041; 256 NW 734

Fraudulent conveyance—debtor's burden. A debtor who voluntarily conveys his property to others has the burden to prove that he retained sufficient other property to pay his debts and failing this, it follows that the conveyance was fraudulent as to existing creditors.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

Setting aside conveyance. In an action to set aside a deed and an assignment of a mortgage executed by mother to stepson, burden was on plaintiff to establish the existence of confidential relationship raising presumption of fraud.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Transfers and transactions invalid—right of wife. A wife as a bona fide creditor of her husband has the legal right to take from her husband a conveyance of all his real and personal property provided she is actuated by the sole purpose of obtaining payment of her claim. And if the property received is out of proportion to the debt, the party questioning the conveyance has the burden to so show.

Farmers Bank v Ringgenberg, 218-86; 253 NW 826

Fraudulent conveyances—wages of minor as consideration. A deed from a father to a son, of a $2,500 town property for admittedly no consideration, and a deed of a $12,000, partly encumbered farm, in fulfillment of an alleged contract that the son (at the time of contract an unemancipated, unmarried, nineteen-year-old minor) should, when married, be given said farm if he remained on, and helped in the management of said farm, are, irrespective of any actual fraud, constructively fraudulent as to a prior existing creditor of the grantor, because of want of or grossly inadequate consideration,—it appearing that the son married within a month after attaining majority; and grantee must, in order to sustain said deeds, prove that grantor still continued to retain sufficient property to pay his said creditor.

Commercial Bank v Balderston, 219-1250; 260 NW 728

Fraudulent conveyance—family relationship. A creditor, seeking to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance from a father to son, is not aided, from the family relationship alone, by any presumption of fraud, but, on the contrary, must clearly, satisfactorily, and convincingly establish the fraudulent character of the conveyance by proof that more than preponderates over counterproof. Evidence held insufficient to show fraud.

Royer v Erb, 219-705; 259 NW 584

Fiduciary relationship—burden of proof. Principle reaffirmed (1) that no presumption of fiduciary relationship arises from the fact of kinship, and (2) that in the absence of proof of such relationship, plaintiff in an action to set aside a conveyance because of undue influence, has the burden to establish such fraud by convincing evidence. Evidence held quite insufficient.

Craig v Craig, 222-783; 269 NW 743

Setting aside deed. A delivered deed carries a presumption in favor of its validity, so one suing to set aside a deed has the burden of proving that at the time of execution of deed, grantor was incapable of understanding her property and her relations thereto, or understanding natural objects of her bounty or nature and effect of instrument.

Bishop v Leighty, (NOR); 237 NW 251

Confidential relationship—showing grantor's freedom of action—grantee's burden. One who stands in a confidential relationship to another may not retain advantages of a transaction with the cestui when they may reasonably be the result of the confidence reposed, unless he shows that the cestui acted with freedom, intelligence, and with full knowledge of the facts.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Gift—confidential relations—presumption of fraud. The act of a mother, in causing a certificate of deposit to be changed from her own name to that of a son who, it is made to appear, occupied a very close and confidential relation with his mother, is presumptively fraudulent, and will be sustained only on proof by the son that the transfer was free from all undue influence and fraud.

Roller v Roller, 201-1077; 203 NW 41

Fiduciary relation between husband and wife. Whether in an action by an heir to set aside a conveyance by a wife to her husband on the ground of undue influence the burden of disproof of said ground shifts to the defendant-husband, quaere.

Browne v Johnson, 218-498; 255 NW 862

Conflict of duty with personal interest—fiduciary's burden. A fiduciary may not appropriate funds to himself without consent of the beneficiary having full knowledge of the facts and any act by the fiduciary wherein personal interest and duty conflict is voidable at the mere option of the beneficiary. Fiduciary has the burden of showing his utmost good faith and fairness.

State v Exline Fuel Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Fiduciary relation. No confidential relation may be said to exist between the officers of a mortgagee and the mortgagor because of the fact that on a few occasions the officers had aided the mortgagor in closing ordinary business transactions.

Charlson v Bank, 201-120; 206 NW 812

Fiduciary relations—elements—bona fides of transaction—shifting burden. One asserting the existence of a fiduciary relationship must prove it by (1) a reposal of confidence, and (2) positions of dominance and subservience, respectively, occupied by the repository and cestui, before he can shift the burden of proving the bona fides of the transaction to the other party.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Surviving spouse—failing to plead and prove election. An adopted son, defending a contribution action growing out of expenditures made by his mother as tenant in common in inherited real estate, and in his answer admitting that his mother possessed by right of dower, but nowhere claiming or assuming his burden to prove that the widow elected to take a life estate in lieu of other dower rights, is estopped to raise such point on appeal or matters corollary thereto.

Yagge v Tyler, 225-352; 280 NW 559

Homestead—voluntary conveyance. The principle that the grantee in a voluntary conveyance of a homestead may sustain the conveyance against the claims of the creditors of the grantor necessarily imposes on the grantee the burden of showing the homestead character of the property.

Dolan v Newberry, 200-511; 202 NW 545; 205 NW 205

Abandonment of homestead—intent to return. In order to preserve the homestead character of property when the owner goes to live elsewhere, it is necessary that said owner have a fixed, specific, and abiding intent to return and burden of proving same is on the owner.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

Nonhomestead character of land. A creditor who is seeking to set aside the deed of his debtor as fraudulent need not prove the non-homestead character of the land even tho he alleges such fact, because the homestead character of the land is an affirmative defense, pleadable and provable by the grantee.

Malcolm Bk. v Mehlin, 200-970; 205 NW 788

Purchase-money mortgage—burden to establish. A real estate mortgage may not be deemed a purchase-money mortgage and have extended to it the pre-eminence right of priority over all other liens and claims arising through the mortgagor unless the holder distinctly establishes the fact that the money secured by the mortgage was advanced for the express purpose of paying the purchase price of the land. Evidence held insufficient to show such fact.

Ely Bank v Graham, 201-840; 208 NW 312

Instructions—improper shifting of burden of proof. Plaintiff who bases his claim for damages on the alleged execution and breach by defendant of a specified contract to convey various tracts of land is not relieved of the burden of establishing said alleged contract by the fact that defendant, after pleading a general denial, sees fit, unnecessarily, to plead, in defense, the contract as he claims it to be. Instruction held erroneous as violative of this principle.

Chismore v Bank, 221-1256; 268 NW 137

Delivery of deed—presumption from recording—evidence to overcome. The recording of a real estate deed constitutes prima facie proof that the grantor has made full delivery of the deed to grantee; but, on the issue that the grantee fraudulently obtained possession of the deed and recorded it, the grantor must, against a subsequent good-faith purchaser for value from the grantee, show (on the facts of the instant case) (1) that the deed was actually put in escrow by agreement of the parties, and later wrongfully delivered to the grantee without the direct or indirect fault of the grantor, and (2) that the wrongful delivery to the grantee was not the result of any act on the part of the grantor's own agents.

Tutt v Smith, 201-107; 204 NW 294; 48 ALR 394

Confidential relation—grantor and grantee. The mere showing that the grantor and grantee in a deed of conveyance are related by blood creates no presumption of confidential relationship such as to cast upon the grantee the burden to establish the bona fides of the transaction.

Osborn v Fry, 202-129; 209 NW 303

II "BURDEN OF PROOF" AND "BURDEN OF ISSUE"—continued

Deeds—confidential relations—presumption. The law presumes that a deed of conveyance is fraudulent and void whenever it is made to appear that, when the deed was executed, the grantee occupied a position of trust and confidence as regards the grantor, or held a dominating and controlling influence over the grantor. It follows that the grantee must overthrow the presumption by a showing of the eminent fairness and legality of the transaction. Evidence held insufficient to overthrow the presumption.

McNeer v Beck, 205-196; 217 NW 825

Deeds—validity—fraud—evidence—sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that testimony sufficient to overthrow a duly acknowledged deed of conveyance must amount to more than a preponderance—must be clear, satisfactory and convincing. Record held insufficient to meet said rule of law.

Richardson v Richardson, 216-1205; 250 NW 481

Deeds—validity—evidence necessary to invalidate. A deed is presumed to express the intention of the grantor and one who attempts to set it aside on the ground of undue influence or insanity has the burden of proof to present evidence that is clear, satisfactory and convincing.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Burden on plaintiff to show delivery of deed. In a replevin action against an administrator for possession of a deed found in the safety deposit box of the deceased, the burden is on the plaintiffs to show a valid delivery of the deed effective to pass title.

Orris v Whipple, 224-1157; 280 NW 617

Deeds—invalidity. Principle reaffirmed that (barring fiduciary relationships) the burden of proof rests on the party who alleges fraud, undue influence, or mental incompetency as the basis for invalidating a deed of conveyance.

Kramer v Leinbaugh, 219-604; 259 NW 20

Deeds—mental incompetency—undue influence. The mental incompetency of a grantor to execute a deed of conveyance, or the obtaining of said conveyance by the grantee by undue influence, when assigned as ground for setting aside said conveyance, must be established by plaintiff and by clear, satisfactory and convincing evidence—there being no proof that a confidential relationship existed. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to meet said burden of proof.

Foster v Foster, 223-455; 273 NW 165

Remedies of purchaser—enforcement of vendee's lien. A vendee who rescinds, and seeks to establish a lien on the land for his proper advancements, need not show that a subsequent titleholder had knowledge of his (vendee's) rights. The subsequent titleholder must show his want of knowledge.

Larson v Metcalf, 201-1208; 207 NW 382; 45 ALR 344

Resulting trust—convincing proof by administrator necessary. A deceased wife's administrator seeking to impress a resulting trust on her surviving second husband's realty, held by him for more than 30 years, has the burden to prove the trust, not by a mere preponderance, but by clear, satisfactory evidence. Evidence held insufficient where alleged funds of wife came from wife's land, whose value arose largely from husband's improvements thereon, and which funds were turned over by wife to husband, commingled with his money and used to purchase realty, later exchanged for the property upon which a trust impression is sought.

Keshlear v Banner, 225-471; 280 NW 631

Interest in real estate. A defendant in an action to recover real estate who claims an interest in the land derived from a source other than the plaintiff must plead and prove such interest.

O'Connor v Hassett, 207-155; 222 NW 530

Quieting title—rule governing recovery. Principle reaffirmed that plaintiff in an action to quiet title to realty must assume the burden of proof and must recover on the strength of his own title and not on the weakness of that of the defendant.

Lockie v White, 221-1044; 267 NW 671

Surface waters—natural flow—contract to change. Adjoining land owners, as between themselves, may validly contract for ditches and dikes which will free the servient estate from the burden of natural drainage, and the right, if not abandoned, to have such ditches and dikes maintained will pass to subsequent owners of the land. But he who alleges such contract must establish the same by clear and satisfactory evidence.

Young v Scott, 216-1253; 250 NW 484

Surface waters—interference by dikes. The maintenance of a dike along lands for the purpose of warding off backwater from a river may not be enjoined by an adjoining landowner unless he shows (1) that his lands constitute the dominant estate and the diked lands the servient estate, and (2) that the dike materially and substantially interferes with surface drainage. High lands which are last covered by backwater from a river are not servient to adjoining low lands which are first covered by such backwater.

Downey v Phelps, 201-826; 208 NW 499

Lease of minable coal—breach. In an action to recover minimum royalties under a lease of coal lands because of defendant's breach of contract to mine all minable, workable and merchantable coal underlying said lands, plaintiff has the burden to establish the existence of such coal, especially when plaintiff assumed such burden by his pleadings. Evidence exhaustively reviewed and held insufficient to generate a question for the jury.

Scovel v Coal Co., 222-354; 269 NW 9

Quasi-mechanics' liens—public improvement—use of materials. A subcontractor on a public improvement is not entitled to have his claim established against the retained portion of the contract price due the contractor unless he establishes the fact that the materials furnished by him were actually used "in the construction" of the improvement, that is, were used in some proper way in connection with said construction work.

Rainbo Oil Co. v McCarthy Co., 212-1186; 236 NW 46

Moratorium—mortgagee's burden—cause for refusing—failure of proof. Trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting an extension of redemption, under the moratorium of the 47th General Assembly, where the mortgagee did not prove mortgagor's lack of possibility and good faith efforts to refinance, nor insolvency, nor inadequacy of the security, thereby failing to maintain his burden of showing good cause for denying the extension.

Larson v Ronan, 224-1248; 278 NW 641

Moratorium continuance—burden to prevent. Mortgagors, as a matter of law and equity, are entitled to moratorium continuances unless good cause is shown to the contrary, the burden of which showing is upon the mortgagee.

Prudential Ins. v Schaefer, 224-1243; 278 NW 602

Power of city to acquire property—defense. A municipality as defendant in an action for specific performance of its alleged contract for the purchase of land, has the burden to establish its plea that its attempted purchase of said land was for a purpose not authorized by law. Record reviewed and held said burden had not been met.

Golf View Co. v Sioux City, 222-433; 269 NW 451

Adjudication of insanity—presumption. One judicially held to be insane has the burden to overthrow the presumption that such insane condition continues.

Hazen v Donahoe, 208-582; 226 NW 33

Validity of contract—demand by guardian of insane person for accounting. In an action by the guardian of an insane ward to compel defendant to account for property paid or delivered by the ward to defendant, without consideration, and at various periods of time prior to the time the ward was adjudged insane, the guardian must establish the insanity of the ward at each particular transaction, or must establish such fact condition as compels an accounting. Evidence held insufficient to meet the burden of proof as to one transaction.

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

Signature and verification—denial by guardian—effect. The guardian of an insane person may, by sworn answer, put in issue the genuineness of the purported signature of his ward as indorser of a nonnegotiable certificate of deposit, and thereby throw upon the holder-plaintiff the burden of proving the genuineness of such signature.

Farmers Bank v Bank, 201-73; 204 NW 404

Mental capacity to contract—existence—burden to disprove. Mental weakness from disease does not deprive a person of capacity to dispose of property until the power of intelligent action is destroyed, and executor relying thereon to recover gift made by decedent to sister has burden of proof.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Testamentary capacity—proponents' burden. In an action to contest a will under which one son receives over eight times as much property as the children of his deceased brother and evidence discloses dispute as to testator's understanding of English language in which the will is written and such circumstances lead the court to suspect testator may have been imposed upon, an additional burden is imposed upon proponents of will to show testator was acquainted with the provisions of the will.

In re Younggren, 226-1377; 286 NW 467

Will contest—testamentary capacity—how determined. In a will contest, after proponent's formal proofs, the burden of showing lack of mental capacity of testatrix is on contestant. Mere deterioration in physical or mental powers does not destroy testamentary capacity until the mental decline reaches such stage that the person is unable to intelligently comprehend the estate of which he is possessed and the natural objects of his bounty and to intelligently exercise judgment and discretion in the disposition of his property.

In re Behrend, 227-1099; 290 NW 78

Actions on policies—exemption from liability. The insurer has the burden to establish a contract exception which exempts him from liability.

Lamar v Trav. Assn., 216-371; 249 NW 149; 92 ALR 159

Insurance—prorating loss. An insurer who pleads that the loss should be prorated with another policy must assume the burden to show indubitably that such other policy was "valid and collectible".

Cole v Ins. Co., 201-979; 205 NW 3

Accident insurance—avoidance of policy. The insurer in an accident insurance policy has the burden of proof to establish the defense that the policy is wholly avoided because the insured, in obtaining the policy, had falsely represented that his habits of life were "correct and temperate", and had thereby intentionally deceived the insurer. Evidence held insufficient to establish such defense, as a matter of law.

II "BURDEN OF PROOF" AND "BURDEN OF ISSUE"—continued

Olson v Surety Co., 201-1334; 208 NW 213

Accident insurance—avoidance of policy. An accident insurance policy (against injury sustained solely through external, violent, and accidental means) which provides, in effect, that it does not cover injuries sustained by reason of the intentional act of any person except assaults upon the insured by a person committing or attempting to commit robbery, casts upon the insurer the burden to establish (1) that the insured was injured by the intentional acts of another person, (2) that the injury was intentional, and (3) that such other person was not committing or attempting to commit robbery. Evidence held insufficient to sustain such defense, as a matter of law.

Olson v Surety Co., 201-1334; 208 NW 213

Actions on policies—accidental death—burden of proof. In order to recover on the ordinary accident insurance policy, claimant must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the injury or death resulted solely from bodily injury received through accidental means. Evidence held to present a jury question.

Dawson v Life Co., 216-586; 247 NW 279

Accident insurance—burden of proof. Under an accident policy against bodily injury through accidental means, resulting directly, independently, and exclusively of all other causes, the insured must necessarily meet the burden of showing that the injuries received resulted solely from accidental means. Evidence held insufficient.

Michener v Cas. Co., 200-476; 203 NW 14

Fraud in securing release—burden of proof. In an action on a life policy where the insurance company pleads a release, the burden of proof is on the company to show the execution and delivery of the release and payment of amount due thereunder, and where failure of consideration or fraud is alleged in obtaining the release, the burden of proof is on the party making the allegation, so where the court excluded such a release from evidence on account of insurance company's failure to establish consideration for the execution of such release, it placed a burden on the company which the company should not have been required to sustain, and the ruling was clearly erroneous.

Accidental death—burden of proof—presumption against suicide—jury question. Under a policy providing for additional payment in case of death from accidental means, the beneficiary has burden of showing that insured shot himself accidentally, which need not be proved by direct evidence, but may be proved by proper inferences and presumptions from facts, and the beneficiary is aided in carrying this burden of proof by the presumption that death was not the result of suicide. Such presumption, however, is a rebuttable one and ordinarily a question of fact to be determined by the jury. So where evidence on a fact matter is of such character that reasonable men, in an impartial and fair exercise of their judgment, may honestly reach different conclusions, the question was properly held for the jury.

Mutual Life Ins. v Hatten, 17 F 2d, 889

Actions on policies—condition subsequent. In an action on a policy of fire insurance which excepts loss "by theft or neglect", the burden to establish the theft or neglect is on the insurer.

Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

Liability insurance—destruction of property—evidence of value. In motor carrier's action on liability insurance policy for loss of property destroyed by fire in freight terminal, plaintiff has burden of proof as to its "custody and control" of goods within policy provisions, also as to value thereof, and stipulation as to value of certain goods on which claims had been paid by insured does not admit value of other goods in absence of competent proof thereof.

American Ins. v Brady Co., 101 F 2d, 144

Insurance—cancellation of fire policy—burden of proof on insurer. The burden of proving cancellation of a fire insurance policy is on the insurer who denies liability thereunder.

Home Ins. v Ins. Co., 225-36; 279 NW 425

Action on policy—insured's burden of proof. In action against an insurance company to recover on a policy covering tractors destroyed by fire, where defense was that plaintiff's ownership was not unconditional and that the property was not kept on the described location as the policy required, plaintiff was required to prove that, with full knowledge of facts disclosed to its agent by plaintiff, the defendant admitted its liability and waived those provisions of policy.

Buettner v Le Mars Assn., 225-847; 282 NW 733

Insurance policy admitted by pleadings. In an action to recover on a policy of fire insurance where the plaintiff's petition, a petition of intervention, and the answer to the petition of intervention all agreed that the policy was issued on a certain date and that it covered the same property that was covered by the mortgage and by another insurance contract issued by the intervenor, the record was not fatally deficient when it contained no evidence of the execution of the policy.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

Mailing notice of cancellation—presumption. In an action on an insurance policy to recover damages for loss by hail and where the answer alleges cancellation of policy by mailing five days written notice to insured, receipt of which notice plaintiff denies, it may be presumed or inferred by the supreme court in reviewing a decision on demurrer, that the letter properly addressed and mailed reached the plaintiff in due time.

Sorensen v Ins. Ass'n., 226-1316; 286 NW 494

Insurance policy—invalidating mortgage—burden of proof and shifting thereof. Proof by an insurer that a mortgage on the insured property was, without his consent, signed and recorded subsequent to the issuance of the policy presumptively establishes the execution and delivery of said mortgage, yet, the insurer is not entitled to an instruction that the burden of proof is, by such proof, shifted to the insured; but the insurer would, on request, be entitled to an instruction that, in view of such proof, the insured would not be entitled to recover unless he proceeds to negative the presumption aforesaid.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 218-559; 255 NW 705

Limitation of actions—mistake tolling statute. A mortgagee, seeking to reform his mortgage to correct an error in the real estate description and escape the statute of limitations on the ground of mutual mistake which tolled the statute until discovered, has the burden of showing he did not discover the error until a time within five years before bringing action, and without which proof the statute operates as a bar.

Beerman v Beerman, 225-48; 279 NW 449; 118 ALR 997

Fraudulent concealment—statute of limitations. To overcome the defense of statute of limitations on the ground of fraudulent concealment, the burden to both plead and prove such fraudulent concealment is on the party relying thereon.

Smith v Middle States Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

Fraudulent concealment as tolling statute—burden of proof on pleader. After a defendant raises the defense of statute of limitations, plaintiff, alleging that because of defendant's fraud or fraudulent concealment the cause of action was not barred, has the burden of establishing such facts which he claims avoid the statute of limitations.

Carroll v Arts, 225-487; 280 NW 869

Injunction against tax sales—tax deed as evidence. An injunction restraining a county treasurer from selling real estate at tax sale for special assessments could not be sustained on the ground that tax deeds issued at a sale for general taxes extinguished the lien of the special assessments when the tax deeds were never introduced in evidence to enable the court to rule on whether the statutory requirements had been properly performed to make the tax deed valid.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Correctness of assessment—burden of proof. One who complains of a tax assessment has burden of proof of overcoming the presumption of correctness of assessments.

Crary v Board, 226-1197; 286 NW 428

Assessor's valuation—burden of proof. The presumption is that the valuation placed by the assessor upon any particular property is correct, and the burden of proof is upon the person challenging that estimate to prove otherwise, as provided by statute, yet the opinion of the assessor is not conclusive, but when properly based and apparently not erroneous, excessive, or out of proportion, it is to be held as the true value of the property.

Trustees of Flynn's Estate v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

Federal income tax from receiver—burden of sustaining deductions. In an action involving a claim for federal income tax from an insolvent corporation, the assessment by the internal revenue collector must be treated as prima facie evidence of the amount due, and the state statutes do not control the matter of deduction for attorney fees, referee fees, court costs, and other expenses, but the burden is on the receiver to establish these deductions.

State v American B. & C. Co., 225-638; 281 NW 172

Rights of heirs—collateral heirs—burden of proof. Collateral heirs, belonging as they do under the law of inheritance to a deferred class, must, in order to inherit, affirmatively negative by the greater weight of evidence, the existence, at the time the inheritance was cast, of any other heir belonging to a more favored class. Held that collateral heirs had failed to negative the independent existence of twins after they had been taken, by a Caesarian operation, from the womb of a dead mother.

Wehrman v Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

Administrator's report—nonprejudicial nature. An administrator has the burden of proof to establish the nonprejudicial nature of his irregular report.

In re Eschweiler, 202-259; 209 NW 273

Attorney fees for services to estate. The burden of proof is on attorney claiming fees for services, whether ordinary or extraordinary, and, while court may to a certain extent use its own judgment, claim should be based on evidence.

II "BURDEN OF PROOF" AND "BURDEN OF ISSUE"—concluded

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

Probate claim—payment specially pleaded—burden of proof—jury question. In probate action to establish claim for services rendered to decedent under an express agreement, where defendant specially pleaded a defense of payment as a part of a different contract of employment, the burden rested upon defendant to establish such different contract, including payment, and, if evidence justified, it was the duty of the court to submit the issue to the jury, but, where defendant's evidence is also consistent with and does not negative plaintiff's claim as to her express contract, it is admissible and proper to be considered by the jury as tending to show that the present claim was an afterthought, or that claimant had failed under suitable circumstances to advance the demand now relied upon, and as tending to support defendant's theory of the nature of her employment. However, such evidence failed to establish the specially pleaded defense of payment, and the court's failure to submit the question of payment to the jury was not erroneous.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Administrator's debt to decedent—burden of proof. In proceeding on objection to administrator's final report, burden of proof was on the administrator to show why he should not be held accountable for full value of property inventoried by him, which inventory included his own debt to decedent. He was liable on such debt to the extent of his ability to pay at any time during administration, and everything above his statutory exemptions should have been so utilized, and there being no evidence in the record from which the extent of his nonexempt property or income could be ascertained, such question would be remanded to lower court for determination.

In re Windhorst, 227-808; 288 NW 892

Lost will—proof necessary to establish. To establish a lost will, the evidence must be clear, satisfactory and convincing, but need not be free from doubt.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Lost will—presumption of revocation rebutted. In the establishment of a lost will, there is a presumption that a will which was in the custody of the testator at his death, and which cannot be found, was destroyed by him with the intention of revoking it. The presumption may be rebutted or strengthened by proof of declarations of the testator, his circumstances, or his relations to the persons involved.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Directing verdict generally on several grounds—appellant's burden to reverse. Before the supreme court can reverse the trial court's ruling in sustaining generally a motion for directed verdict, which contained several grounds, appellant must show that no one of such grounds was sufficient to support such ruling.

Lotz v United Food Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Notice of appeal—nonserved parties. The burden is on an appellant to show—should the question arise—that parties not served with notice of appeal are not necessary parties to the appeal—that they will not be prejudiced or adversely affected in any manner by any order or decree of the appellate court.

State v Sur. Co., 223-558; 273 NW 129

Death—burden of proof to show self-defense. A peace officer, in attempting an arrest for a misdemeanor, has no legal right, unless he acts in legal self-defense, to kill the offender. It follows that, if he does kill, and is sued for damages consequent on the death, he has the burden to prove self-defense, especially so (1) when death was effected by a deadly weapon used in a deadly manner, (2) when the defendant distinctly pleaded self-defense as a defense, and (3) when plaintiff neither by plea nor proof presented the question of self-defense.

Klinkel v Saddler, 211-368; 233 NW 538

Rape—mental condition. In a prosecution for unlawfully having carnal knowledge of an imbecile, the state must establish the imbecility of the prosecutrix beyond all reasonable doubt. Testimony held to present a jury question.

State v Patrick, 201-368; 207 NW 393

Arrest without warrant—justification. A party who instigates an arrest without warrant and without later filing an information against the accused must, in an action for false imprisonment, assume the burden to legally justify his action.

Fox v McCurnin, 205-752; 218 NW 499

III PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE

Alibi as defense. See under §13897 (XVI)
Bastardy proceedings. See under §12663 (II)
Insanity as defense. See under §13897 (XV)

Taking case from jury. The fact that the testimony of a plaintiff in support of his cause of action is met by positive testimony to the contrary by the defendant, both witnesses being of equal credibility, does not, of itself, show that plaintiff has failed to establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence.

Reichenbach v Bank, 205-1009; 218 NW 903

Negligence and proximate cause. Both negligence and proximate cause are questions of fact for the jury if the evidence is of sufficient weight and character to warrant their submission, and plaintiff has burden to establish them by a preponderance of the evidence, whether the evidence be direct or circumstantial.

Whetstine v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Absence of preponderance of evidence. A party who has the burden of proof must fail when the record per se reveals no preponderance of evidence in his favor.

Waxmonsky v Hoskins, 216-476; 249 NW 195

Preponderance of evidence definition held nonprejudicial. Instruction when construed in its entirety defining preponderance of evidence as that evidence which "appeals most forcibly to your judgment and is most satisfactory to your minds in determining upon which side of the issues is the truth and the right", held non-prejudicial.

Moran v Kean, 225-329; 280 NW 543

Instructions—defining "preponderance of evidence". In defining "preponderance of evidence" as evidence which is "more convincing as to its truth", the court does not, in effect, say that evidence cannot constitute a preponderance unless the jury is satisfied that it is true.

Priest v Hogan, 218-1371; 257 NW 403

Instructions—interchange of synonymous terms. In instructing on the subject of "preponderance of the evidence", it is not erroneous to interchange the terms "evidence" and "testimony".

In re Burcham, 211-1395; 235 NW 764

Acknowledgment—impeachment—sufficiency. Principle recognized that testimony sufficient to overthrow the probative force of a certificate of acknowledgment must amount to more than a preponderance in the balancing of probabilities.

Perry v Reinertson, 208-739; 224 NW 489

Overcoming presumption from possession. A mere preponderance of the evidence is not sufficient to overcome the presumption arising from the possession of the legal title to real property. The evidence for that purpose must be clear, convincing, and satisfactory.

Wagner v Wagner, (NOR); 224 NW 583

Prima facie proof of title to note. The payee in possession of a promissory note the execution of which is not denied makes a prima facie case for recovery by the simple introduction of the note in evidence.

Henderson v Holt, 201-1017; 206 NW 134

Mortgages—payment. A plaintiff who alleges the nonpayment of the note and mortgage which he is seeking to foreclose, must prove such nonpayment even tho defendant pleads payment. Evidence held insufficient to show nonpayment.

Larson v Ames Church, 213-930; 239 NW 921

Electric plant payable out of earnings—contract not "debt" prohibited by constitution or statute. A contract for municipal electric plant payable out of earnings does not create a "debt" within meaning of constitutional inhibition where, although plant was constructed on site owned by town, it was not shown that furnishing of site was part of consideration nor that site had a substantial value. In an action to enjoin the carrying out of such contract, the burden of proof to show that contract created a debt within the meaning of such constitutional inhibition was on the plaintiff electric company.

Iowa So. Utilities v Cassill, 69 F 2d, 703

Cause of death—undue burden to establish. Expert medical opinions that an insured died from an intra-cranial, fatty embolus resulting from an external, violent and accidentally suffered injury, met by the same class of expert opinions positively to the contrary, may generate a jury question, determinable by the jury, like any other disputed question of fact, on the preponderance of testimony, the facts on which such conflicting, expert opinions are based being of such nature that the jurors could not therefrom deduce a proper opinion. So held where the court erroneously instructed that "No mere weight of evidence is sufficient to establish the cause of assured's death unless it excludes every other reasonable hypothesis as to the cause of death"—in effect requiring the theory of death by means of an embolus to be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

Aldine Co. v Acc. Assn., 222-20; 268 NW 507

Burden of proof—public official's receipt of money as issue—plea of full accounting—not affirmative defense. A city seeking to recover from its clerk water rents, allegedly received and unaccounted for, must go forward with the evidence and prove by a preponderance thereof, the receipt of such funds by the clerk, the clerk's answer denying receipt of such funds, and asserting that all money received was accounted for. Such answer is not an affirmative defense requiring defendant to prove payment, but raises the receipt of funds as a controverted fact or issue submissible to a jury.

Carroll v Arts, 225-487; 280 NW 869

Real estate commission—issues correctly submitted. In a suit for breach of oral commission contract, instructions plainly stating that burden was on plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of evidence, (1) the terms of his contract, and (2) that through his efforts a sale was "effected, obtained, and procured", reviewed and held to correctly submit the issues under the pleadings.

Maher v Breen, 224-8; 276 NW 52

Oral contract to devise—evidence to establish—duty of court. Evidence to establish an alleged oral contract between a father and son, that the father would leave to the son a farm

III PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE—concluded

when he died, must be established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence and it is the duty of the court to subject the evidence to every fair test which may tend to weaken its credibility.

Blezek v Blezek, 226-237; 284 NW 180

Oral contract to devise—convincing evidence necessary. An alleged oral contract between a childless couple and a neighbor, that such couple would leave all their property to the neighbor's minor son when he became of age, if he would live with them until that time, must be established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, and when so established, along with proof of compliance by the son, entitled the son to specific performance of the contract.

Ford v Young, 225-956; 282 NW 324

Unnecessary allegation of negligence. An allegation of negligent construction or maintenance of an electrical transmission line is unnecessary, and if made, need not be proved, in an action for damages caused by fire set out by such line. Proof that fire was communicated to property by said line, and proof of the amount of damages resulting, plus the statutory presumption of negligence on the part of the operator of the line, make a prima facie case for recovery.

Walters v Elec. Co., 203-471; 212 NW 884; 38 NCCA 551

Instructions—law of case. An instruction to the effect that no damage for the flooding of land could be recovered if such damages resulted partly from the wrongful act of the defendant in erecting an embankment and partly from the natural overflow of a natural stream constitutes the law of the case, and a verdict for the plaintiff must be set aside if the evidence conclusively shows that the damages were caused in part by the natural overflow of the stream.

Pfannebecker v Railway, 208-752; 226 NW 161

Burden which complainant must carry. An instrument will not be reformed on the ground of mutual mistake unless the supporting testimony is clear, satisfactory, and convincing beyond a mere preponderance of the evidence, nor will such reformation be granted if the complainant has been guilty of inexcusable neglect in not having the instrument read; and especially is this true when a reformation will detrimentally affect the intervening rights of innocent third parties.

Galva Bank v Reed, 205-7; 215 NW 732

Reformation of instruments—evidence—sufficiency. To justify the reformation of an instrument in the language of a bill of sale so it will stand as a chattel mortgage, the supporting evidence must be more than a preponderance. It must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Scott v Menin, 216-1211; 250 NW 457

Defense. In an action for libel, based on a defamatory publication, that the plaintiff could not tell the truth when on the witness stand, in which action defendant offered to show that plaintiff perjured himself in a previous foreclosure hearing, as to the existence of a certain fence, the court errs in withdrawing this evidence from the jury on the ground of indefiniteness, since in this civil action the defendant was not required to prove perjury beyond a reasonable doubt.

McCuddin v Dickinson, 226-304; 283 NW 886

Determining preponderance. Where one witness' word was against that of another, the supreme court, on appeal in an equity action, looked to the conduct of the parties and surrounding circumstances to determine the preponderance of the evidence.

I REQUESTED INSTRUCTIONS

- (a) NECESSITY FOR REQUEST IN GENERAL

Stating who asked instructions. Stating in instructions that certain instructions were given at the request of a named party does not constitute reversible error, but such practice should be avoided.

Johnson v McVicker, 216-654; 247 NW 488

Nominal damages. Instructions as to nominal damages need not be given, in the absence of a request.

Schultz v Enlow, 201-1083; 205 NW 972

Exemplary damages. Failure of the court to submit to the jury the question of exemplary damages is not error, even the plaintiff's pleading was broad enough to embrace such damages, when the plaintiff neither claimed such damages in the pleading nor requested the court to submit such issue.

Morrow v Scoville, 206-1134; 221 NW 802

Future pain. An instruction to the effect that a recovery would be limited to "the fair and reasonable compensation for personal injury, pain and suffering, past and future * * * as shown by the evidence", is all-sufficient on the subject of future pain and suffering in the absence of a request for elaboration.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Limiting damages—issue not raised in trial. Where an action in replevin by one claiming an automobile under a conditional sales contract was brought against a chattel mortgagee who had given some cash and extended credit in return for his mortgage, the plaintiff, having permitted the trial to be concluded on the issue of possession without raising any other issue or requesting instructions on any other issue, could not complain that the mortgagee's recovery should have been limited to the amount of actual cash given for the mortgage.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Impeaching testimony. The ordinary instructions as to the credibility of witnesses is all-sufficient in the absence of a request for a specific instruction as to the effect of impeaching testimony.

Altfilisch v Wessel, 208-361; 225 NW 862

Presentation of particular theory. Comprehensive and correct instructions by the court render unnecessary, in the absence of a request, the submission of defendant's particular theory of the case.

State v Dillard, 205-430; 216 NW 610

Duty to request amplification. Instruction as to the effect of knowledge, on the part of an insurance agent, of an existing mortgage on the insured property, held correct as far as it went, and to impose on defendant the obligation to request amplification relative to the effect of knowledge acquired by the agent when he was not transacting the business of defendant.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 218-559; 255 NW 705

Third party nondefendant—instructions. Where, under the pleadings and evidence, the jury might find that plaintiff's injuries were caused (1) by defendant's negligence, or (2) solely by the negligence of a third party nondefendant, the court must, on proper request, fully instruct as to the negligence of said third party.

Dennis v Merrill, 218-1259; 257 NW 322

Striking testimony in absence of jury. Failure of the court to inform the jury that certain testimony had, in the absence of the jury, been stricken from the record does not necessarily constitute reversible error. So held where complainant neither orally nor by requested instruction asked that the jury be so informed.

Justis v Cas. Co., 219-213; 257 NW 581

Question first raised on appeal. Questions as to possible errors of the trial court, not properly raised by motion for directed verdict, nor by request for instructions, nor by exceptions to instructions, cannot be considered on appeal.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Undenied statement as admission—cautionary instruction—failure to request. Court did not err in failing to give a cautionary instruction concerning evidence of damaging statements against defendant, made in his presence, to which he failed to reply or deny, when no such instruction was requested, nor when such claimed error was not raised in the trial court.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Failure to testify. Defendant's failure to be a witness in his own behalf need not be covered by an instruction, in the absence of a request.

State v Reid, 200-892; 205 NW 517

Failure to define offense—effect. The failure specifically to define an offense, in the absence of a request, does not constitute error when the elements of the offense are accurately set forth in the instructions.

State v Grimm, 212-1193; 237 NW 451

Issues in criminal cases. An accused waives nothing by failing to request the court adequately to cover all the material allegations in the indictment or information.

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

Inviting court to err—not permitted. A litigant will not be permitted to entrap the court by an invitation to commit error.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

(b) FURTHER AND MORE SPECIFIC INSTRUCTIONS

Amplification—failure to request. A party cannot successfully assert that a correct instruction lacks amplification when he failed in the trial court to request such amplification.

Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352

When all-sufficient. Instructions which fairly present the issues to the jury are all-sufficient, and, if defendant wishes some particular theory presented, he must make request therefor.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Correct but inexplicit—responsibility of carrier. A correct instruction as to the responsibility of a carrier for the acts of its different agencies employed in transporting and delivering a shipment is sufficient, in the absence of a request for particular limitations thereon.

Riddle v Railway, 203-1232; 210 NW 770

Correct but not elaborate. Instructions which are correct as far as they go are sufficient, in the absence of a request for further elaboration.

State v Peacock, 201-462; 205 NW 738
 Clarkson v Cas. Co., 201-1249; 207 NW 132
 State v Speck, 202-732; 210 NW 913

 State v Bourgeoise, 210-1129; 229 NW 231
 Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442
 McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442
 State v Griffin, 218-1301; 254 NW 841

Care in handling electricity. In an action for damages for wrongful death from electricity, the usual correct instructions given in negligence cases relative to "ordinary care" are all-sufficient. If plaintiff desires to have the attention of the jury called to the exceptional danger attending the handling of electricity and to the fact that "ordinary care" must be in keeping with such danger, he must request such additional instruction.

Hanna v Electric Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

Correct but not detailed—damages. An instruction relative to the measure of damages which is correct as far as it goes will be deemed all-sufficient, in the absence of a request for elaboration as to the detailed method to be followed in determining the present worth of the damages.

Rastede v Railway, 203-430; 212 NW 751

Correct but not elaborate—damages. Correct instructions relative to the allowance of damages generally, rather than on the basis of present worth, are all-sufficient, in the absence of a request for elaboration as to such present worth.

Cuthbertson v Hoffa, 205-666; 216 NW 733

Non-presented theory—guarding excavation. Correct instructions relative to the duty of the defendant to guard an excavation made by him are all-sufficient in the absence of a request by defendant that there be presented to the jury his claim that he had properly covered the excavation and that some one had, unbeknown to him, wrongfully removed such covering.

McKee v Iowa Co., 204-44; 214 NW 564

Failure to request simplification. An instruction which embraces complainant's theory of the case may be all-sufficient, in the absence of a request for a simplification of the language therein employed.

Clarkson v Cas. Co., 201-1249; 207 NW 132

Failure to elaborate defendant's theory. When instructions as given are fair and correct, defendant may not, in the absence of a request, complain that his particular theory was not elaborated and specifically stated to the jury.

State v Christensen, 205-849; 216 NW 710

Waiver of elaboration—mental anguish. An instruction which directs the jury to allow a party damages for the "mental anguish she has suffered as a direct result of such injuries" is all-sufficient, in the absence of any request for a more specific statement of the elements which may in the particular case constitute mental anguish.

Strayer v O'Keefe, 202-643; 210 NW 761

Nonrequest for elaboration. An instruction to the effect, in substance, that plaintiff must prove he fully carried out the contract sued on, necessarily embraces and covers defendant's contention that the plaintiff had abandoned the contract. If the defendant desires elaboration of the idea of abandonment, he must request an additional instruction.

Hornish v Overton, 206-780; 221 NW 483

Amount deceased would have spent—reducing verdict. An instruction in a personal injury action held not prejudicially objectionable on the ground that it did not specifically tell the jury that the amount the deceased plaintiff would have spent should be considered only for the purpose of reducing the amount to be recovered.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186

Will contestants bound by own theory. Contestants alleging that a will was not duly and legally executed may not amplify their claim thereunder after requesting instructions proceeding solely on the theory that their construction of their claim was that the signatures of the testator and one witness, now deceased, were not genuine. In such case it is not error, when otherwise unobjected to, for the court on its own motion to add an instruction which in effect limits the case to the theory propounded in contestants' requested instructions.

(c) REQUESTS OTHERWISE COVERED

Covering requested instructions. A requested instruction need not be given when the requested material is covered by another instruction.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Covering requested instructions. Instructions given in lieu of requested instructions and on the same subject-matter are all-sufficient when they fairly embody the law applicable to the case, even tho such given instructions might very properly have been amplified.

In re Anderson, 203-985; 213 NW 567
 Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477
 Duncan v Rhomborg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171
 State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917
 Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Covering requested instructions. When three similar instructions were requested, it was not error to refuse to give two of them, and give but one embodying the propositions of the other two.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Balancing request—handwriting testimony. A party who requests an instruction which emphasizes the superiority of positive over expert testimony as to the genuineness of handwriting, may not complain that the court gave an instruction which fully embodied the idea of the requested instruction, but which more sharply but correctly emphasized the inferiority of expert testimony generally.

Keeney v Arp, 212-45; 235 NW 745

Disregard of testimony. Reversal of a cause will not be ordered because the court refused to instruct as to the conditions under which the jury might entirely reject the testimony of a witness for falsely testifying, when the court otherwise sufficiently guides the jury as to the credibility of witnesses.

Burke v Town, 207-585; 223 NW 397

Requests otherwise covered. In condemnation proceeding for highway purposes, refusal to give all of defendant's requested instructions was proper, where on the whole, instructions given were more favorable to defendant than it was by right entitled and most of the matters contained in the requested instructions that could be properly included were covered by the instructions given.

Stoner v Hy. Comm., 227-115; 287 NW 269

(d) JUSTIFIABLE REFUSALS IN GENERAL

Failure to give promised instruction. Failure of the court to instruct as promised during the course of the trial will not be reviewed in the absence of an exception to such failure.

Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Refusal of incorrect instruction. Instructions which assert a person's right to use, manage, and dispose of his property as he sees fit, without the qualifying clause "if of sound mind", are properly refused, when the instructions given embrace the instructions asked, insofar as they are correct.

Zander v Cahow, 200-1258; 206 NW 90

Absence of evidence. Instructions which are without support in the evidence are properly refused.

Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151
 Minks v Stenberg, 217-119; 250 NW 883

Undue emphasis on one theory of case. Requested instructions which place special emphasis on a party's theory of the case are properly refused.

Beardmore v New Albin, 203-721; 211 NW 430

Request which ignores defense. An instruction is properly refused when it ignores a pleaded and supported defense.

Merchants Bk. v Roline, 200-1059; 205 NW 863

Requiring disregard of evidence. Instructions are properly refused when, if given, the jury would be compelled to render a verdict in disregard of relevant and supporting testimony on a material issue.

Kiser v Ins. Assn., 216-928; 249 NW 753

Failure to plead want of consideration. Refusal to instruct as to the want of consideration in the signing of a promissory note is proper when defendant (1) causes plaintiff's plea of consideration to be stricken, and (2) does not himself plead want of consideration.

Conner v Henry, 205-95; 215 NW 506

Undue emphasis. An instruction which places undue emphasis on some particular fact or feature of a case is properly refused.

Farwark v Railway, 202-1229; 211 NW 875

Unduly comprehensive request. Instructions which are so comprehensive as to authorize and direct a verdict in favor of all defendants are properly rejected when one of the defendants would be liable in any event.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Nonapplicability to pleadings. Requested instructions are properly rejected when they go beyond any tendered issue.

Bilharz v Martinsen, 209-296; 228 NW 268

Confusing instruction refused. The prolixity of a technically correct, requested instruction and the fact that the instruction is so grammatically framed as to require a parsing of it by the jury, in order to understand it, furnish reasons for its refusal in addition to the fact that the court's instruction adequately covers the same subject matter.

(d) JUSTIFIABLE REFUSALS IN GENERAL—concluded

Instructions carrying improper inference. An instruction carrying the possible inference that the court did not believe that plaintiff was entitled to recover damages is properly refused by the court.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Invading province of jury. An instruction which deprives the jury of the right to pass on a jury question is, of course, unthinkable.

Stingley v Crawford, 219-509; 258 NW 316

Refusal of inapplicable instruction not error. It is not error to refuse a requested instruction that has no applicability to the facts of the case.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 282 NW 895

Condemnation—highway used for lawful purpose—unsupported issue. A requested instruction to the effect that in arriving at compensation the law presumes that the highway to be built would be used for a lawful purpose is properly refused when there is no claim that the highway would be unlawfully used.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

Relative to nonpleaded negligence. Instructions that the jury should not consider the failure to ring a bell on a street car as a ground of negligence, are properly refused (1) when plaintiff pleads no such ground of negligence, (2) when no such ground was submitted to the jury, and (3) when the testimony relative to such failure was received without objection.

Watson v Railway, 217-1194; 251 NW 31

Instruction requested—loan to be approved by loan committee—properly refused. In action on fidelity bond of a bank cashier, a request that the court inform jury that statute required that loans be made by executive officer and not by a loan committee was properly refused, since requirement that loan be approved by loan committee was lawful.

Fidelity Co. v Bates, 76 F 2d, 160

Assuming issuable facts. When it assumes disputed questions of fact as established, a requested instruction may be properly refused, even tho the request embodies a correct statement of the law.

Usher v Stafford, 227-443; 288 NW 432

Right to possession of note. The court very properly refuses to instruct that a surety on a promissory note has a right to the possession of the note when it is paid by the principal maker.

Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

(e) UNJUSTIFIABLE REFUSALS IN GENERAL

Speculative damages—condemnation proceedings. Instructions cautioning the jury in condemnation proceedings against allowing damages based on speculative matters should, on request, be given.

Dugan v State, 214-230; 242 NW 98

Eminent domain—inconvenience resulting from taking. The jury must be instructed, on request, in eminent domain proceedings for highway purposes, that damages must not be allowed on the theory that the highway through the landowner's farm will be used illegally, with resulting inconvenience to the landowner; likewise an instruction to the effect that the jury must assess the damages on the presumption that the use would be lawful.

Welton v Hy. Comm., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Right of governmental agency to be treated as individual. A governmental agency has a right, in eminent domain proceedings, to have the jury instructed that such agency is entitled to have the cause tried and determined precisely as tho said agency was an individual.

Welton v Hy. Comm., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Malpractice—new condition subsequent to discharge. If, after the discharge of a patient, new conditions arise which are not the natural result of the previously existing condition of the patient, the physician must have due notification of such condition and an opportunity to treat it, and the jury must be so instructed, if an instruction is requested.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393

Neutralizing effect of immaterial testimony. Letters written by the son of a testator twenty years prior to a will contest, and requesting financial help from the parent, (while admissible as bearing on the issue of unequal distribution of the estate) are wholly immaterial to the issue of want of testamentary capacity and undue influence, and a refusal to so instruct constitutes error.

In re Thompson, 211-935; 234 NW 841

Specific elements of fraud. An abstract instruction defining fraudulent representations is not adequate when there is a request for a specific instruction covering the elements of falsity, scienter, deception, and injury.

Gray v Shell Corp., 212-825; 237 NW 460

Hypothetical question based on untrue statement. The jury should be plainly instructed, at least on request, that it must give no weight or consideration to an answer to a hypothetical question if it finds that any assumed fact embodied in the question is not, in fact, true.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

"Physical fact" rule—diverting circumstance. A requested instruction should be given, when the testimony is supporting, to the effect that, if the view of a railway track is unobstructed for a long distance while a traveler is knowingly approaching it, he will be held to have seen the train approaching thereon, there being no diverting circumstance.

Langham v Ry. Co., 201-897; 208 NW 356

(f) INCORRECT REQUEST SUGGESTING CORRECT PRINCIPLE

Trial—instructions—refusal of incorrect instruction. Instructions which assert a person's right to use, manage, and dispose of his property as he sees fit, without the qualifying clause "if of sound mind", are properly refused, when the instructions given embrace the instructions asked, insofar as they are correct.

Zander v Cahow, 200-1258; 206 NW 90

(g) ESTOPPEL BY REQUESTING INSTRUCTIONS

Requesting instructions — waiver. A litigant who has suffered prejudicial error and is unable to get it out of the record, may adjust himself to the condition thus brought about, and seek to neutralize the error by requested instructions, and in so doing he does not estop himself to insist on the error.

Miller v Kooker, 208-687; 224 NW 46

Requested instruction as waiver of objections. A party whose objections to the submission of a subject matter to the jury have been erroneously overruled by the court does not waive his objections by asking an instruction which is in harmony with his objections as to said subject matter.

Ballinger v Demo. Co., 207-576; 223 NW 375

Instructions on trial theory—nonduty of court on other theories and necessity of requests. In an action by pedestrian who fell on ice which had formed on a sloping portion of sidewalk, an instruction to jury requiring, as prerequisite to recovery, a finding of knowledge or constructive notice by city of icy condition of sidewalk, was not erroneous where plaintiff failed to request an instruction that such notice was unnecessary, where action was tried on theory expressed in the instruction. A trial court is not required to instruct on theory not in the case as tried, and appellant, who invited instruction given and failed to request different instruction, could not, on appeal, complain of such instruction.

Leonard v Muscatine, 227-1381; 291 NW 446

Estoppel to allege error. A party may not predicate error on the giving of an instruction which he has requested.

Keeney v Arp, 212-45; 235 NW 745

Estoppel to object. A party is not estopped to object to the giving of an erroneous instruction because he requested it in part, when his request was for the purpose of presenting to the jury an entirely different conclusion than the one actually presented to the jury.

Cooley v Killingsworth, 209-646; 228 NW 880

Error not waived by requesting instruction. Where motion for a directed verdict is erroneously overruled, the defeated party does not waive said error by asking instructions which correctly state the law of the case as fixed by the ruling of the court on the motion. (Overruling Martens v Martens, 181 Iowa 350, and McDermott v Ida County, 186 Iowa 736)

Heavilin v Wendell, 214-844; 241 NW 654; 83 ALR 872

(h) APPELLATE REVIEW OF REFUSAL

Witnesses — credibility — instructions — refusal. Reversal of a cause will not be ordered because the court refused to instruct as to the conditions under which the jury might entirely reject the testimony of a witness for falsely testifying, when the court otherwise sufficiently guides the jury as to the credibility of witnesses.

Burke v Town of Lawton, 207-585; 223 NW 397

11492 Duty as to instructions asked.

Precautionary unbalanced instructions. The court may very properly correct a requested precautionary instruction relative to the consideration by the jury of admissions by a deceased, by balancing the instruction, and making it applicable to the admissions of all parties to the action, including the deceased.

Halstead v Rohret, 212-837; 235 NW 293

Different phraseology but same meaning. A requested instruction, tho couched in proper and accurate language, need not necessarily be given in the exact language requested.

Malcor v Johnson, 223-644; 273 NW 145

Interrogatory seeking more than statutory requirements—proper refusal. In a guest's personal injury action against a father and son, owner and driver, respectively, of the motor vehicle, where the petition alleges the son was driving with the "knowledge and consent" of the father, court's refusal to submit to the jury defendant-appellant's special interrogatory as to finding that son was driving car with "knowledge and consent" of father was not error, as it required an element not contained in the statute—proof under the statute need go no further than to show "consent", even tho allegation of knowledge was in the petition.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

11493 Instructions by the court.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 609—Trial technique

I PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY

(a) ASSUMPTION IN RE ISSUABLE FACTS IN CIVIL CASES

Measure of damages. An instruction which is a technically incorrect statement of the measure of damages is harmless when, if a correct instruction had been given, the verdict of the jury must have been the same as found by the jury under the incorrect instruction.

Farmers Bank v Planters Elev., 200-434; 204 NW 298

"Alibi" in civil cause—burden of proof. Where a defendant in a civil case enters a general denial to a charge of having committed a tort, and in support thereof testifies that, at the time in question, he was at his home, not far from the scene of the alleged tort, the court has no right to instruct (1) that defendant's defense is that of an "alibi," and (2) that defendant has the burden to establish such alibi by evidence which will outweigh the evidence tending to show that defendant did commit the tort.

Gregory v Sorensen, 208-174; 225 NW 342

Assumption that note was partnership business.

Maxfield v Heishman, 209-1061; 229 NW 681

Avoiding assumption of fact—use of "if any". The submission of a nonpleaded element of damages, or the submission of a non-proven element of damages, will be deemed harmless when the instruction carries the limitation "if any".

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177
Kisling v Thierman, 214-911; 243 NW 552

Inferential assumption of fact negated. An inferential assumption of fact in instructions may manifestly be wholly negated by other instructions.

State v Harding, 204-1135; 216 NW 642

Unallowable assumption of fact. The court may not assume as a fact that a bill of sale was intended to convey title and not to act as a mortgage, such matter being in issue.

First N. Bk. v Schram, 202-791; 211 NW 406

Treating receipt as contract. A court must carefully refrain from stating or even inferring that a naked receipt for money constitutes a contract, the issue of contract being sharply in dispute.

Bremhorst v Coal Co., 202-1251; 211 NW 898

Wills—undue influence—presumption of testamentary capacity. When the sole issue in a will contest is that of undue influence, the court is not in error in instructing that the jury should consider as an established fact that the testator was possessed of testamentary capacity at the time of the execution of the will.

In re Muhr, 218-867; 256 NW 805

Malpractice—nonassumption of fact—improper definition. In an action based on malpractice in sewing up in a wound a piece of gauze, instruction reviewed and held not subject to the objections, (1) that it assumed the existence of an issuable fact, and that such fact constituted negligence per se, and (2) that ordinary care was improperly defined.

Forrest v Abbott, 219-664; 259 NW 238

Unwarranted assumption of fact. Assumption of the truth of an issue, as to which the testimony is in conflict, constitutes reversible error.

Millard v Mfg. Co., 200-1063; 205 NW 979
Boston v Elec. Co., 206-753; 221 NW 508
Pascuzzi v Pierce, 208-1389; 227 NW 409
Tullar v Ins. Co., 214-166; 239 NW 534

Existence of contract. Instructions must not assume the existence of a contract the existence of which is distinctly in issue.

Bremhorst v Coal Co., 202-1251; 211 NW 898
Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

Improper assumption of fact. Prejudicial error results from directing the jury, on conficting evidence, that a claim sued on was an "open, current, and running" account.

Seddon v Richardson, 200-763; 205 NW 307

Unallowable assumption. Instructions must not assume that a resolution of a board of directors of a corporation was adopted in good faith when the good-faith adoption was distinctly in issue.

Schulte v Ideal Co., 208-767; 226 NW 174

Family relations — compensation. On the issue whether services were rendered as a member of the family, and with the mutual expectation of paying and receiving compensation therefor, the court must not assume, in his instructions, that a statement by the recipient that he would pay for the services would necessarily establish the expectation of the party rendering the services to receive compensation.

Seddon v Richardson, 200-763; 205 NW 307

Assuming truth of fact. It is inaccurate (but not necessarily reversible error) for instructions to refer to "admitted" signatures when the testimony only tended to show that the accused had, prior to the trial, admitted their genuineness.

State v Debner, 202-150; 209 NW 404

Emergency — jury question. Instructions reviewed and held not to be subject to the vice of foreclosing the jury from passing upon the issue whether an injured party was guilty of negligence in what she did under an emergency.

Elmore v Railway, 207-862; 224 NW 28

Cooley v Killingsworth, 209-646; 228 NW 880

See In re Davis, 217-509; 248 NW 497

Assuming issuable facts—refusal. When it assumes disputed questions of fact as established, a requested instruction may be properly refused, even tho the request embodies a correct statement of the law.

Usher v Stafford, 227-443; 288 NW 432

Nonassumption of fact. Instructions reviewed as a whole and held not to assume the existence of a fact contrary to defendant's contention.

Baker v Davis, 217-509; 248 NW 497

(b) ASSUMPTION IN RE UNCONTROVERTED FACTS IN CIVIL CASES

Assumption of truth of conceded fact. Instructions may very properly assume the truth of conceded or unquestionably established facts.

Eves v Littig Co., 202-1338; 212 NW 154

Assumption of truth. The court may, in its instructions, very properly assume the truth of an admitted or unquestionably proven fact.

Rosander v Knee, 222-1164; 271 NW 292

Proper assumption of fact. An instruction may properly assume as true a fact which the record unquestionably reveals.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Omission of conclusively established fact. The erroneous omission from an instruction of a fact element which stands conclusively established in the testimony, is harmless.

Schipfer v Stone, 206-328; 218 NW 568; 219 NW 933

McClary v Ry. Co., 209-67; 227 NW 646

Error to submit admitted fact. Error results from submitting to the jury the question of the existence of a fact unquestionably admitted by both parties.

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

Failure to submit uncontroverted fact. An issue of fact is properly withheld from the jury when the record presents no controversy as to said fact.

Morris Co. v Braverman, 210-946; 230 NW 356

Submitting established fact. Instructions may not properly require a defendant to prove the truth of that which plaintiff solemnly admits to be true. Juries must not be permitted to find a material fact contrary to the clear admission of a party.

Booton v Metcalfe, 201-311; 207 NW 386

Inferential submission of uncontroverted fact—avoidance. The definite and proper assumption, by the court in its instructions, of the truth of an unquestioned fact, renders quite harmless any mere inference, in other parts of the instructions, that the truth of such fact was submitted to the jury.

In re Willmott, 215-546; 243 NW 634

Allowable assumption of fact. It is not of material consequence that instructions to a jury refer to the conceded president of a corporation as "a duly authorized agent" of the corporation.

Mortimer v Ins. Assn., 217-1246; 249 NW 405

Assumption of abandonment of project. Instructions may assume that a building project was admittedly abandoned when both parties concede throughout the trial that such was the fact.

Shockley v Davis Co., 200-1094; 205 NW 966

Real party at interest—noncontested question. The question whether plaintiff was the real party in interest need not be submitted as a jury question when such question is not raised in the trial court.

Weinhart v Smith, 211-242; 233 NW 26

Instructing on basis of counsel's admissions. The court is not in error in peremptorily instructing in an action of replevin that plaintiff

I PROVINCE OF COURT AND JURY—continued

(b) ASSUMPTION IN RE UNCONTROVERTED FACTS IN CIVIL CASES—concluded is entitled to the immediate possession of all property claimed by him (except specifically enumerated articles) when said instruction is in strict accord with the explicit admission in court of defendant's counsel, tho no such admission appears in defendant's answer.

Luther v Investment Co., 222-305; 268 NW 589

Eyewitnesses—improper submission of issue. When the record affirmatively shows the absence of all eyewitnesses to a fatal accident because the sole survivor was not observing the deceased persons immediately preceding the accident, the court should peremptorily instruct that there were no such witnesses; but the defendant may not, in such case, be prejudiced if the existence of such witnesses is submitted to the jury.

Rastede v Railway Co., 203-430; 212 NW 751

(c) ASSUMPTION IN RE ISSUABLE FACTS IN CRIMINAL CASES

See annotations under §13876

(d) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE AND CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES

Fallibility of testimony. A jury need not be told that testimony as to the identity of a party who did a named thing is "exceedingly fallible".

State v Flory, 203-918; 210 NW 961

Preponderance of evidence definition held nonprejudicial. Instruction when construed in its entirety defining preponderance of evidence as that evidence which "appeals most forcibly to your judgment and is most satisfactory to your minds in determining upon which side of the issues is the truth and the right", held nonprejudicial.

Moran v Kean, 225-329; 280 NW 543

Weight of evidence for jury—duty of court. The weight of the evidence is for jury, and the duty of court is to carefully instruct jury so as to furnish them a guide insofar as possible in attempting to arrive at truth.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Circumstantial evidence—force and effect. A jury may be told that, if they find circumstantial evidence to be strong and satisfactory, they should so treat it.

Ferber v Railway, 205-291; 217 NW 880

Absence of applicable evidence precludes review. The appellate court cannot review an instruction to the jury when the correctness of such instrument depends on the contents of exhibits not embraced in the abstract.

Forrest v Woodmen, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Employment contract—oral cancellation. In action by ballplayer to recover for services under written contract which could be terminated by defendant at any time, an instruction that oral notice of termination given by any of the members of the defendant baseball club would cancel the contract was not prejudicial when in fact all members of the club were present and in complete accord at the meeting at which the contract was cancelled.

Jacobs v Vander Wicken, (NOR); 218 NW 147

Fraudulent representations—notes and lease. Competent evidence of fraud in the execution of a lease and promissory notes, tho not free from inconsistencies, and contradicted in part, generates a jury question.

Ottumwa Bk. v Starns, 202-412; 210 NW 455

Malicious prosecution—jury question. A question for the jury and not for the court is generated when the defendant in an action for damages for malicious prosecution makes substantial proof that, prior to commencing the prosecution, he made a full, fair, and good-faith recital of the facts to his attorney and was advised to commence the prosecution.

Beard v Wilson, 211-914; 234 NW 802

Credibility of witness—rule as to presumption. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where defendant complains of the court's instruction which stated in part, "it being presumed in law that a man whose general reputation for truth and veracity is bad would be less likely to tell the truth than one whose reputation is good", such instruction did not tell the jury that defendant had been impeached, that he would not tell the truth, or that they could disregard his testimony (they were only informed of a rule applicable in everyday business transactions)—it being more a statement of the reason for such a rule in impeachment than any direction to the jury, and was in no sense a presumption of guilt, but could only be applied to defendant as a witness. The weight of defendant's testimony was left entirely for the jury.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Expert testimony—nonright of jurors to substitute their own knowledge. Jurors may use and employ their own knowledge as to values in determining the weight and effect of expert testimony as to such values, but they must not be instructed in effect, that they may disregard such expert testimony and substitute their own knowledge as evidence.

State v Brown, 215-600; 246 NW 258

Expert testimony as to insanity. Instructions to the effect that certain expert testimony might be found quite reliable and satisfactory, or the reverse, and entitled to little, if any, consideration, reviewed and held quite nonprejudicial.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

Unallowable contrasting of testimony of physicians. The court may not say to a jury, as a matter of law, that the testimony of regular attending physicians of a deceased has greater weight than the testimony of experts based solely on hypothetical questions.

Blakely v Cabelka, 203-5; 212 NW 348

Cause of death—undue burden to establish. Expert medical opinions that an insured died from an intra-cranial, fatty embolus resulting from an external, violent and accidentally suffered injury, met by the same class of expert opinions positively to the contrary, may generate a jury question, determinable by the jury, like any other disputed question of fact, on the preponderance of testimony, the facts on which such conflicting, expert opinions are based being of such nature that the jurors could not therefrom deduce a proper opinion. So held where the court erroneously instructed that "No mere weight of evidence is sufficient to establish the cause of assured's death unless it excludes every other reasonable hypothesis as to the cause of death"—in effect requiring the theory of death by means of an embolus to be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

Aldine Trust v Accident Assn., 222-20; 268 NW 507

Life tables—effect. Life tables are not conclusive on the subject of life expectancy, and instructions should carefully elucidate such fact.

Drouillard v Rudolph, 207-367; 223 NW 100
Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

Mortality tables. Instructions held not subject to the vice of treating mortality tables as conclusive on the jury.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

Value of services—judgment of jurors. It is proper for the court, irrespective of §11471-d1, C., '31 [§11471.1, C., '39], to instruct the jurors that they are not compelled to rely wholly on the opinions of witnesses as to the value of services, but that in connection with such opinions they may use and be guided by their own judgment in such matters.

In re Stencil, 215-1195; 248 NW 18

Unallowable assumption — nonsupport of wife. Record reviewed, and held reversible error for the court to instruct that, as a matter of law, an accused had failed to show any conduct on the part of his wife which would justify him in refusing to support her.

State v Gude, 201-4; 206 NW 584

Preponderance of evidence erroneously defined. It is error to define "preponderance of the credible evidence" as the testimony which best satisfies the juror's mind "that it is true", because it implies that the jury must be fully convinced of the truth of the testimony which controls the decisions on an issue.

Heacock v Baule, 216-311; 245 NW 753; 249 NW 437; 93 ALR 151; 36 NCCA 25

"Net value". The issue of the "net value" of an estate is properly submitted on evidence showing the gross value, all contested and pending claims and the facts attending the same, and the amount of the debts.

In re Anderson, 203-985; 213 NW 567

Effect of "improbabilities". "Improbabilities" in certain features of the testimony relative to a party's claim do not constitute a defense, and the court must not so instruct.

In re Dolmage, 204-231; 213 NW 380

Verbal admissions — balanced instruction. The ordinary practice in balancing an instruction relative to the weight to be given to verbal admissions is to say to the jury, in substance, that when such admissions are voluntarily, freely, and understandingly made and clearly and correctly remembered and stated they are often most satisfactory evidence. But the omission of the qualifying word "most" is not necessarily erroneous.

Abraham v Ins. Co., 215-1; 244 NW 675

Admissions—attempt to suppress testimony. While an attempt by the defendant to keep an adverse witness from testifying is not necessarily an admission by him that his claim or defense is false, yet such attempt is in effect an admission by the defendant that the testimony sought to be suppressed is unfavorable to his cause; and instructions to this effect, on supporting evidence, are proper.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Circumstantial evidence. Principle reaffirmed that a theory may not be said to be established by circumstantial evidence unless the facts upon which the theory is predicated are of such a nature and so related to each other that the conclusion sought to be drawn therefrom is the only conclusion that fairly and reasonably arises.

Hogan v Nesbit, 216-75; 246 NW 270

Limiting jury to testimony. An instruction which limits the jury to the testimony produced and submitted does not necessarily constitute reversible error.

Dahna v Fun House Co., 204-922; 216 NW 262

Time of execution of note immaterial. When the one narrow issue is whether the defendant signed the note in question, the court may very properly instruct the jury that the time of signing is immaterial.

Conner v Henry, 205-95; 215 NW 506

Interlocutory reference. It is not error for the court to refer to the testimony of a witness as a "fact" when such reference is man-

(d) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE AND CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES—concluded ifestly for the purpose of correcting counsel in the assertion that the testimony was an "opinion" or "conclusion".

State v Bourgeoise, 210-1129; 229 NW 231

Fatal assumption of fact. Prejudicial error results (1) from the mistaken assumption by the court that a named witness had remained in the court room during the taking of testimony, in violation of the orders of the court to the contrary, and (2) from instructing that the jury might consider such conduct in determining the weight to be given to the testimony of said named witness.

State v McCook, 206-629; 221 NW 59

Opinion evidence—harmless exclusion. Error in striking testimony is harmless when the facts sought are otherwise in the record, and when if admitted the record would still present a jury question.

In re Willer, 225-606; 281 NW 155

(e) DETERMINATION OF QUESTIONS OF LAW

Incorrect statement of law—conclusive presumption. It will be conclusively presumed that the jury followed an incorrect rule of law as stated to it by the court in its instructions.

Aldine Trust v Accident Assn., 222-20; 268 NW 507

Theories of equal probability. Circumstantial evidence relative to the loss of a diamond reviewed, and held that the court could not say as a matter of law that the theories of loss by theft or by fire were of equal probability.

See Brower v Ry. Co., 218-317; 252 NW 755

Public improvements — acceptance — fraud — instructions required. In an action by a city as representative of the assessed property owners for damages consequent on the failure of the contractor to construct a pavement of the thickness required by the contract, the court must instruct on the issues as to the effect of an acceptance by the city council of the work, and as to the fraud which would overcome the estoppel because of said acceptance.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Ice on sloping portion of sidewalk—recovery refused on evidence and trial theory. In an action by a pedestrian against a city to recover for personal injuries received from fall on sidewalk where it is shown that pedestrian slipped on smooth, slippery ice, unaffected by artificial causes, on sloping portion of a sidewalk which was lifted by the roots of a tree, the refusal to permit a recovery on either of the following grounds of alleged negligence, to wit, (1) in failing to remove ice, or (2) in failing to repair slope in sidewalk, without the concurrence of the other, was not error under the evidence and the trial theory of plaintiff, consequently, the court could not properly submit such propositions to the jury as independent grounds of negligence.

Leonard v Muscatine, 227-1381; 291 NW 446

When question of law. When the relationship of parties is fixed by a written contract, the question whether they occupy the relation of master and servant (employer and employee) is one of law to be determined by the court and not one of fact to be determined by the jury.

Page v Const. Co., 215-1388; 245 NW 208

Materiality of testimony. An instruction is prejudicially erroneous which directs the jury to disregard expert opinion testimony elicited through hypothetical questions which contain material statements which are not proved or which fail to contain material facts which are proved.

Blakely v Cabelka, 203-5; 212 NW 348

Materiality of facts. An instruction which permits a jury to determine the materiality of the facts assumed in a hypothetical question, preliminary to determining the value of the opinion expressed in the answer to the question, is prejudicially erroneous.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393

Limiting one's legal right. Where a defendant-employer in paying his employee deducted an amount which the employee was owing the employer, and, when sued, based his right so to do (1) on an oral contract that he might so deduct, and (2) on his right to so deduct irrespective of such oral contract, the court prejudicially errs, in its instructions, in making the right to deduct dependent on proof of the oral contract.

Jorgensen v Cocklin, 219-1103; 260 NW 6

Submitting issue notwithstanding negligence per se. It is not necessarily reversible error for the court to fail to instruct the jury that the defendant was negligent as a matter of law, even tho had the court so instructed, the appellate court would not reverse because of such instruction.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Law question submitted to jury—when non-prejudicial. No prejudice can result when court submits to the jury a law question upon which the court could well have ruled adversely to complainant as a matter of law.

Central B. & T. Co. v Squires & Co., 225-416; 280 NW 594

Assault and battery—directing jury to award damages to plaintiff. Undisputed evidence held to establish that plaintiff and de-defendant mutually consented to engage in a fight, and that defendant unlawfully committed an assault and battery on plaintiff, warranting an instruction to the jury to return a verdict for plaintiff in some amount.

Schwaller v McFarland, 228- ; 291 NW 852

(f) VERDICT-URGING OR COERCIVE INSTRUCTIONS

Invading province of jury. Instruction held not to direct a verdict of guilt of one or the other of two offenses.

State v Shannon, 214-1093; 243 NW 507

When prejudicial. A so-called verdict-urging instruction must be deemed prejudicial when it appears from the entire record that it did have a coercive effect on some of the jurors. (It is quite pointedly suggested that, irrespective of the foregoing, reversible error will be deemed to follow the further insertion in instructions by trial courts of the idea that "If any of the jurors differ in their view of the evidence from a larger number of their fellow jurors, such difference of opinion should induce the minority to doubt the correctness of their own judgment and cause them to scrutinize the evidence more closely and re-examine the grounds of their opinions.")

Middle States Co. v Telephone Co., 222-1275; 271 NW 180; 109 ALR 66

Ignoring defense. An instruction which mandatorily requires a verdict for plaintiff upon proof of the allegations as to which he has the burden of proof, without reference to a pleaded and supported defense, is manifestly erroneous.

Schulte v Ideal Co., 208-767; 226 NW 174

II FORM, REQUISITES, AND SUFFICIENCY

(a) WRITTEN INSTRUCTIONS

Oral statements to jury. Material statements of fact must not be orally given to the jury.

Alley Co. v Creamery Co., 201-621; 207 NW 767

Colloquy with jury. A colloquy between the court and the foreman of the jury, in the presence of the jury, relative to the instructions already given, reviewed and held not to constitute oral instructions and, therefore, not improper.

State v Mullenix, 212-1043; 237 NW 483

(b) FORM AND LANGUAGE IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 19 ILR 603—Statement by court

Inadvertent use of words. The inadvertent use in instructions of a word which could not have misled the jury, will be treated as harmless.

State v Hughey, 208-842; 226 NW 371

Harmless misdescription of land. Inadvertently omitting from instructions, in eminent domain proceedings, a minor portion of the land involved, does not constitute reversible error when otherwise the entire integral tract was consistently and persistently treated throughout the trial as the land in controversy, and when it is obvious that the jury never discovered the inadvertent error of the court.

Sherwood v Reynolds, 213-539; 239 NW 137

Ill-advised but harmless use of term. Error may not be predicated on the ill-advised use of the word "rapid" as applied to the descent of an elevator when the evidence conclusively shows that the elevator had, mechanically, but one speed and that such speed never varied.

Dean v Koolish, 212-238; 234 NW 179

Harmless inaccuracy. A reference in instructions to the amount to be allowed plaintiff on his claim as "made in the petition" instead of as "shown by the evidence" is harmless when, from the instructions as a whole, the latter was manifestly intended.

Ashby v Nine, 218-953; 256 NW 679

Harmless inaccuracy in use of terms. Instruction relative to acquiring negotiable promissory notes by "assignment", instead of by "indorsement", is quite harmless when complainant does not claim the rights of a holder in due course.

First Bk. v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767

Nonmisleading terms. A grantee of land who, in buying the land, does not agree or intend to agree to assume an existing mortgage on the land, yet accepts a deed which provides for such assumption, and subsequently discovers such fact, and thereupon recognizes and accepts such obligation as binding upon him, is bound thereby; and it is not prejudicially erroneous for the court in instructions to refer to such "recognition and acceptance" as a ratification.

Carney v Jacobson, 210-485; 231 NW 436

Interrogatories—stated or agreed amount—services rendered to decedent. In probate action to establish a claim for services rendered to decedent, wherein the court submitted two interrogatories to the jury to determine (1) amount per month, if any, decedent agreed to pay claimant out of his estate at his decease, and (2) whether amount per month was to be paid for 9 or 12 months of each year, the interrogatories being submitted under an instruction to be answered in event jury found for claimant and not to be answered if verdict was for defendant, such instruction was not erroneous since, before interrogatories could be answered, the jury must have found under the evidence that there was a stated or agreed amount, and the findings therein conformed to the verdict.

II FORM, REQUISITES, AND SUFFICIENCY—continued

(b) FORM AND LANGUAGE IN GENERAL—concluded

Inconsequential error. The erroneous designation of a count by giving the wrong number thereof becomes inconsequential when the subject-matter is such that the jury could not have been misled.

Cox v Const. Co., 208-458; 223 NW 521

Interchange of synonymous terms. In instructing on the subject of “preponderance of the evidence” it is not erroneous to interchange the terms “evidence” and “testimony”.

In re Burcham, 211-1395; 235 NW 764

Interchange of conjunctions. An objection to the use, in instructions, of the conjunction “but” instead of “and” is quite hypercritical when the same objection could, with equal plausibility, be lodged against the instruction had the term “and” been used.

State v Davis, 212-131; 235 NW 759

Use of “and” and “or”. An instruction to the effect that a litigant must establish the contract in question “substantially as alleged and testified to by him” cannot be deemed to mean that the contract must be established “substantially as alleged or testified to by him”.

Blakesburg Bank v Blake, 207-843; 223 NW 895

Indiscriminative use of “may”. An instruction to the effect that ordinary care may be in proportion to the danger that is reasonably to be feared or anticipated is not necessarily erroneous when the instructions as a whole employ the word “must” in reference to the same principle.

Thompson v City, 212-1348; 237 NW 366

Instructions—paraphrasing “legal excuse”. The phrase “explained or justified by the evidence” used as a substitute in instructions for the term “legal excuse” should be avoided as possibly permitting the jury to consider evidence which would not constitute a legal excuse as defined in another instruction, but under the evidence and considered with other instructions held not reversible error.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Popular designation of offense. Designating an offense in instructions by its popular name is quite unobjectionable when the specific elements of the offense are correctly set forth.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Evidence “produced and submitted”. It is not reversible error to limit a jury in the consideration of the case to the evidence “produced and submitted”.

State v Speck, 202-732; 210 NW 913
State v Halley, 203-192; 210 NW 749

“Lack of evidence.” It is not improper to instruct the jury in a civil case that in arriving at a verdict it should consider the “lack of evidence”, if any.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Mortgaged chattels—description—jury question. When the sufficiency of a description of mortgaged chattels to impart constructive notice becomes a jury question, it is quite inaccurate for the court to instruct that “the recording gave notice of what its terms contained, but nothing more than its terms contained.”

Wertheimer v Parsons, 209-1241; 229 NW 829

(c) REPETITIONS

Repetitions unnecessary—proximate cause. A definite and correct instruction as to proximate cause of an injury need not be repeated in other instructions.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Reasonable doubt — repetition unnecessary. An instruction which clearly instructs the jury of its right to find a reasonable doubt, because of the lack or want of evidence, need not be repeated.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Instructions—embodying substance of request. Where the trial court gives an instruction which is similar to or embodies all the principles of a requested instruction, it is not error to refuse the requested instruction.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 234 NW 171

(d) STATEMENT OF ISSUES IN GENERAL

Omitting issue. The omission from instructions of a material issue necessarily constitutes reversible error.

Whyte v Cas. Co., 209-917; 227 NW 518

Correct but not amplified. Concise instructions which are correct and which fairly present the issues, are all-sufficient in the absence of a request for amplification.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

State v Sampson, 220-142; 261 NW 769

Abstract statements of law. The inclusion in instructions of abstract statements of the law does not necessarily constitute material error.

Birmingham Sav. Bank v Keller, 205-271; 215 NW 649; 217 NW 874

Statement of issues. It is fundamental that instructions must clearly place before the jury the conflicting contentions of the party litigants.

Bremhorst v Coal Co., 202-1251; 211 NW 898

State v Hixson, 205-1321; 217 NW 814

Unnecessary issue. The submission of an unnecessary issue will not constitute error when it is one closely interwoven with the all-controlling issue, and when the instructions as a whole fairly place the controlling issues before the jury.

Conway v Alexander, 200-705; 205 NW 351

Stating withdrawn issue. It is not necessarily prejudicial error for the court, in outlining the issues, to refer to withdrawn issues, when the jury is specifically directed to disregard them.

Reinertson v Struthers, 201-1186; 207 NW 247

General statement of issue. The submission by the court to the jury of the controlling issue in the case is all-sufficient, even though the court did not literally and technically follow the pleadings.

Yaus v Egg Co., 204-426; 213 NW 230

Recital of issuable facts. The court may very properly recite in its instructions the material and record facts which they may consider in arriving at the reasonable value of services.

Olson v Shuler, 208-70; 221 NW 941

Inferential departure from issues. Reversible error does not result from so instructing in one paragraph as to seemingly depart from the particular act of negligence alleged as a basis for recovery, when the instructions as a whole clearly remove any possible confusion or misunderstanding on the part of the jury.

Azeltine v Lutterman, 218-675; 254 NW 854

Mutually agreed theory. A trial and submission of a cause on a theory mutually agreed on by both parties, precludes a change of theory on appeal.

Roch v Dairy, 204-391; 214 NW 685

Trial theory. The submission of a cause on the theory of common-law negligence will not be disturbed on appeal when such submission appears to have been acquiesced in in the trial court, even though the petition would justify the submission of the cause on the theory of the "attractive nuisance" doctrine.

Eves v Littig Co., 202-1338; 212 NW 154

Trial theory. One of two defendants may not complain that the court, in the submission of various forms of verdicts, adopted his trial theory of nonjoint liability.

Zieman v Amusement Assn., 209-1298; 228 NW 48

Limiting jury to evidence and instructions. An instruction that the jury should not consider anything except the evidence and the instructions, and that all statements and suggestions from any other source should be discarded, cannot (under the present record) be deemed a direction to disregard the arguments and reasoning of the attorneys.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Erroneous limitation of jury on consideration of evidence. Instructions which limit the jury on the issue of the existence of a wrongful act (which is the very gist of the action) to a consideration of transactions occurring "on or about" a certain date "or at any time thereafter" is prejudicially erroneous when the record reveals the fact that the jury might have found the existence of said wrongful act from transactions occurring some four months prior to the limiting date set by the court.

Newcomer v Ament, 214-307; 242 NW 82

Implied withdrawal of unsupported count. No affirmative withdrawal of an unsupported count is necessary in instructing the jury when the court in the instructions wholly ignored said count.

Spicer v Administrator, 201-99; 202 NW 604

Performance or breach—justifiable abandonment. Instructions held adequately to present the issue whether the performance of a contract was justifiably abandoned.

Goben v Paving Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

Eminent domain—compensation. It is erroneous for the court to instruct that a condemnation is for the purpose of appropriating the land, when the real purpose is to determine compensation for an incidental injury.

Millard v Mfg. Co., 200-1063; 205 NW 979

Inadvisable but harmless. An instruction in eminent domain proceedings that the real right of which the property owner is deprived, and for which he is entitled to compensation, is the right to remain in undisturbed possession of his property, while ill-advised, may be quite harmless.

Maxwell v Highway Com., 223-159; 271 NW 883; 118 ALR 862

Suretyship—want of consideration. A plea of want of consideration, interposed by a gratuitous surety on a promissory note may be very properly ignored in the instructions of the court when the record shows (1) that the surety signed the note without fraud imposed upon him, and (2) that there was a consideration between the principal and the payee.

Granner v Byam, 218-535; 255 NW 653

Inadequate enumerations of elements. Instructions which direct the jury to convict on proof of named elements of an offense are prejudicially erroneous when not all the elements of such offense are enumerated.

State v Sipes, 202-173; 209 NW 458; 47 ALR 407

Undue burden—claim against estate. A claim against an estate triable at law is established by a fair preponderance of the testimony, and reversible error results from instructing that such claim must be established only by "strict and satisfactory" proof.

(d) STATEMENT OF ISSUES IN GENERAL—continued

In re Dolmage, 204-231; 213 NW 380

Inadequate presentation of issues. When issue is joined both (1) on the terms of the contract alleged by plaintiff and (2) on the defendant's plea of fraud, error necessarily results from instructing that the verdict must be for plaintiff if defendant fails to establish his plea of fraud.

Augustine-Stalker v Bracha, 204-253; 212 NW 936

Failure to instruct on material issue. Failure to instruct on the pleaded and supported material issue of fraud in the adoption of a resolution by the board of directors of a corporation necessarily constitutes reversible error.

Schulte v Ideal Co., 208-767; 226 NW 174

Failure to submit issue—payment. Failure to submit a pleaded and supported plea of payment is necessarily prejudicial, even the defendant makes no request for such submission.

Baker v Davis, 212-1249; 235 NW 749

Failure to submit issue—partnership. Failure to submit an issue of partnership is harmless when such failure does not change the result, especially when the evidence supporting the issue is indefinite.

First N. Bank v Schram, 202-791; 211 NW 406

Justifiable omission to instruct. The action of the court in omitting a certain subject matter from the instructions must be deemed justifiable when, after a consultation with the litigants, the court understood that such omission was requested, and when complainant entered no exception when the instructions were given, and made no objections to such omission.

McLain v Risser, 207-490; 223 NW 162

Assault and battery—self-defense. Where defendant voluntarily participated in a fight, not in his own defense, the court did not err in failing to instruct the jury on self-defense as, under such circumstances, self-defense was not available as a defense.

Schwaller v McFarland, 228- ; 291 NW 852

Waiver—apparent authority. Instructions relative to the duty of an insured to furnish proofs of loss, and to the burden resting on him in case he relied on a waiver of such proofs; also relative to the actual or apparent authority of the insurer's agent to bind the company by a waiver, reviewed and held correct.

Basta v Ins. Assn., 217-240; 252 NW 125

Harmless failure to submit. Failure to submit a plea of estoppel to rely on an alleged agreement may be quite harmless in view of the full and explicit instructions on the subject of waiver of the right to rely on the said alleged agreement.

Adamson v McKeon, 208-949; 225 NW 414; 65 ALR 817

Nonspecific withdrawal of counts. The submission of one count of a petition may in effect work a withdrawal of all other counts.

Hill v City, 203-1392; 214 NW 592

Instruction favorable to complainant. An instruction that certain testimony is not "necessarily" conclusive on a named issue cannot constitute error when the use of the term was intended to be and was favorable to complainant.

Carney v Jacobson, 210-485; 231 NW 436

Inaccurate limitation on recovery. Where a plaintiff itemized his general and particular damages in a personal injury action, the failure of the court to specifically say to the jury that it must not allow more on any item than the amount as stated in the petition, nor more than the aggregate of said items, is nonprejudicial when the evidence would not support a greater verdict on any particular item than as itemized, and when the verdict was materially less than the claim for general damages, and when the court specifically instructed the jury that it could not allow any item of damages in a greater sum than "established by the evidence".

Wosoba v Kenyon, 215-226; 243 NW 569

Failure to limit findings. An instruction which directs the jury, in determining the damages to an article, "to consider" its value before the injury and its value after injury is erroneous, because it fails to confine the jury in its findings of damages.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356; 26 NCCA 938

Stating amount of plaintiff's claim. Instructions in actions for unliquidated damages are not erroneous because they state to the jury the amount of plaintiff's claim, yet preferably such statement ought not to be made.

Cory v State, 214-222; 242 NW 100

Damages—failure to limit. Reversible error results from the failure of the court in its instructions to limit the jury in its return of damages, on various items of claimed damages, to the amount claimed in the pleadings; and limiting damages "as shown by the evidence" does not necessarily cure the error.

Desmond v Smith, 219-83; 257 NW 543

Limiting recovery to sum of separate claims. Limiting a recovery of damages to the sum of one amount claimed for present and future physical pain, and one amount claimed for mental pain will not be deemed erroneous when the verdict demonstrates that less was allowed than claimed.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

Submission of excess recovery. The submission to the jury of a possible amount of recovery slightly in excess of what is legally recoverable does not constitute error when the final result is not affected thereby.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Erroneous limitation on verdict. A general instruction, in a personal injury case, to the effect that the jury must not return a verdict in excess of the sum total of all the damages claimed by plaintiff is prejudicially erroneous when the plaintiff has alleged a particular amount of damages for each element of damages.

Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442

See Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Supported assignments of negligence. Plead- ed and supported assignments of negligence, which the jury might find was the proximate cause of the accident and resulting injury, must necessarily be submitted to the jury.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Grouping distinct grounds of negligence. Reversible error results from grouping separate and distinct grounds of negligence, and so instructing as to lead the jury to understand that plaintiff, before he can recover, must establish the truth of an entire group.

Leete v Hays, 211-379; 233 NW 481

Proximate cause. The court must submit to the jury, without request, the respective claims of each party as to the proximate cause of an accident.

Towberman v Ry. Co., 202-1299; 211 NW 854

Clark v Fair Assn., 203-1107; 212 NW 163

Insufficient presentation—negligence of outsider. The court must submit to the jury the supported plea that the proximate cause of an accident was the negligence of an outsider—a person not a party to the action.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Unnecessary amplification. Instructions which fully and correctly instruct the jury as to negligence and proximate cause need not (especially in the absence of a request) be amplified by the specific submission of defendant's plea that some certain act or failure to act on the part of plaintiff was the proximate cause of the injury—said latter matters having been otherwise adequately presented to the jury.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

(e) VOLUNTARY OR NONPAPER ISSUES

Applicability to pleading—voluntary issues. The court may very properly instruct on non-paper issues voluntarily and mutually litigated by the parties.

Farmers Bank v Planters Elev., 200-434; 204 NW 298

Sufficiency. In an action to recover quantum meruit for the use of machinery, the court, in submitting defendant's nonpaper issue (acquiesced in by plaintiff) whether the use was under a contract for an agreed rental entered into with plaintiff's employee, must submit the question of the authority of the employee to enter into such a contract, there being evidence of the lack of such authority.

Des M. Pav. Co. v Lincoln Co., 201-502; 207 NW 563

Unnecessary plea—burden of proof. A defendant who specifically pleads certain matter as a defense in addition to his defense of general denial, thereby invites the court so to instruct as to impose on defendant the burden to prove said specially pleaded defense, even tho said defendant might have rested on his general denial.

Johnson v McVicker, 216-654; 247 NW 488

Agreed issue conclusive. A plaintiff is bound by his concession, in open court and at the close of his evidence, that of several pleaded grounds of negligence a certain one only should be submitted to the jury.

Gorham v Richard, 223-364; 272 NW 512

Instruction foreign to record. Instruction reviewed in an action involving the issue as to the making of a gift, and held not subject to the vice of submitting to the jury a matter wholly foreign to the record.

Malcor v Johnson, 223-644; 273 NW 145

Fraud—prejudice not presumed. Prejudice will not be presumed from instructions readily reconciled and understood by the jury as not conflicting, but in an action for damages on account of fraud where the defense was the statute of limitations it is prejudicial error to instruct on the elements of fraud as a basis for recovery without requiring consideration of the defense of the statute of limitations.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

Submitting doubtful issue to jury. In a damage action for fraud, the submission to the jury of an issue as to a repurchase contract held not error under the pleadings and tactics of the parties.

II FORM, REQUISITES, AND SUFFICIENCY—continued

(f) READING, USING, OR REFERRING TO PLEADINGS

Copying pleadings. The practice of stating the issues by copying the pleadings is condemned.

Dunnegan & Briggs v Ry. Co., 202-787; 211 NW 364

Copying brief and concise pleadings. No error results from copying into the instructions portions of the pleadings which are relevant to the issues, and which are concise, brief, and noninflammatory.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33
McDonald v Robinson, 207-1293; 224 NW 820; 62 ALR 1419

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346
Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787
Forrest v Sovereign Camp, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Copying involved pleadings. Issues susceptible of brief condensation should not be presented to the jury through the easy expedient of copying long, involved, and complicated pleadings.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274
Peet Stock Co. v Bruene, 210-131; 230 NW 327

Copying verbose pleadings. The presentation of issues to the jury by copying verbose pleadings may constitute reversible error.

Veith v Cassidy, 201-376; 207 NW 328
Granette v Neumann, 208-24; 221 NW 197
Balik v Flacker, 212-1381; 238 NW 467
Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

Copying pleadings containing questions of law. Copying the pleadings into the instructions and instructing that such were the issues constitutes error when pure questions of law are intermingled in such pleadings.

In re Dolmage, 204-231; 213 NW 380

Copying pleadings—curing error. The appellate court again, quite pointedly, expresses its surprise that occasionally some trial courts, in attempting to state the issues to the jury, do not recognize the impropriety of copying verbose pleadings into the instructions.

But error and the resulting confusion in copying pleadings will be deemed cured by the later action of the court in the instructions, in clearly and definitely confining the jury to the proper issues.

Hammer v Liberty Baking Co., 220-229; 260 NW 720

Copying pleadings not always erroneous. Copying pleadings in instructions is generally bad practice; however, where the pleadings concisely and clearly state the issues, the court may adopt them and use them.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

Copying pleadings—when nonprejudicial. Practice of stating case in language of pleadings, except where pleadings concisely and clearly state the substance of the controversy, condemned by court.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Copying defendant's answer improper. Instructions should not substantially copy defendant's answer as jury may easily be confused and misled thereby.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Copying pleadings and stating issues. Instructions which set forth plaintiff's claim in accordance with the petition which is somewhat at variance with the evidence are not erroneous when in later paragraphs the issues are distinctly stated.

Goben v Paving Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

Use of synonymous terms. The fact that the court in its instructions employs not only the terms employed in the petition but additional synonymous terms is quite inconsequential.

Klass v Ins. Co., 210-78; 230 NW 314

Interpretation of uncertain and indefinite plea. An indefinite and uncertain plea of negligence may very properly be given an interpretation by the court that is not inconsistent with the plea and which is consistent with the way or manner in which both parties have treated it.

Dean v Koolish, 212-238; 234 NW 179

Paraphrasing grounds of negligence. An accurate paraphrase of various grounds of recovery is all-sufficient for submission to the jury.

Fleming v Thornton, 217-183; 251 NW 158

Copying pleadings and paraphrasing them. The fact that pleadings are copied at length into the instructions does not constitute error when such pleadings are later so paraphrased by the court as to definitely submit the controlling issues.

Elmore v Ry. Co., 207-862; 224 NW 28

Justifiable paraphrase of grounds. Both of two grounds of negligence are properly submitted to the jury (1) when the pleadings fairly justify such action, (2) when the court so paraphrased the pleadings, and (3) when the cause was tried on the theory that both grounds were involved.

Buchanan v Cream. Co., 215-415; 246 NW 41

Paraphrasing allegations of injuries. The court, in stating the issues to the jury, may very properly paraphrase an allegation as to the injuries which plaintiff claims to have suffered.

McCoy v Cole, 216-1320; 249 NW 213
See Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

Permissible paraphrasing of issue—fraud. A plea that the signing of a promissory note was induced by trickery and fraud (1) in that the note was misread, and (2) in that the payee misstated the note which was being signed may very properly be paraphrased in the instruction as a defense of “fraud.”

State Bank v Deal, 200-490; 203 NW 293

Paraphrasing assignment of negligence. The court may very properly paraphrase in his own language one or more assignments of negligence, and if such paraphrasing is correctly done no claim will lie, of course, that an issue was submitted aside the pleadings.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

Statement of issues—copying pleadings. A statement of issues to jury by trial court in a condemnation case was not open to the charge that it was a mere copy of the pleading where such statement of the case was as succinctly stated as could well be done and at the same time give an intelligent and understandable resume of the elements upon which plaintiffs based their claim for damages and the amount thereof.

Stoner v Hy. Comm., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Undue submission of issues. A preliminary recital in the language of an unquestioned pleading, of an issue of negligence in maintaining a sidewalk, which embraces statements of the method by which and the source from which the alleged nuisance was created on the walk, reveals no error when the definite legal issue was alone actually submitted to the jury.

Fosselman v City, 211-1213; 233 NW 491

Copying censorious and inflammatory pleading—effect. A censorious and somewhat inflammatory pleading of grounds of contest of a will should, if the context presents support for such action, be so paraphrased in the instructions as to present the simple issues of (1) want of testamentary capacity and (2) undue influence. To copy the entire pleading into the instructions constitutes reversible error.

In re Thompson, 211-935; 234 NW 841

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

(g) DEFINING AND EXPLAINING TERMS

Failure to define “issues”. It is not erroneous for the court to fail to define the term “issue”.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Failure to define “prescribe”. Instructions which defined “prescribe” reviewed, and held unobjectionable.

State v Hueser, 205-132; 215 NW 643

“Family” defined. Instructions which define a “family” as “a collection or collective body of persons who live under one roof and under one head or management” are all-sufficient.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

Instruction on “stated” amount for alleged services rendered to decedent. In probate claimant's action reciting decedent's agreement to pay to claimant for services from decedent's estate an amount more than claimant could expect to make teaching school, a reference by trial court in its instructions to decedent's agreement to pay a “stated amount per month” was not objectionable where, under allegations of claim there could be no recovery unless jury found that there was an agreement to pay a stated amount, and where there was evidence as to amount stated or fixed by decedent. The word “stated” means no more than determined, fixed, or settled, and was properly used in the instruction.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Superfluous definition—“burden of proof”. A nonmisleading but superfluous definition of “burden of proof” cannot be prejudicial.

State v Matthes, 210-178; 230 NW 522

“Probable cause”—negative definition. It is not necessarily erroneous to define want of probable cause in a negative form instead of in an affirmative form.

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177

Negligence—erroneous definition. A definition of “negligence” which is so broad as to permit the jury to predicate a finding of negligence on the violation of a statute law of the road when the facts rendering such statute applicable are neither pleaded nor proven, is necessarily erroneous and prejudicial.

Gross v Bakery, 209-40; 227 NW 620

Definition of negligence approved. Instruction defining “negligence” and otherwise correct is not rendered erroneous because it includes the statement that “such care is proportionate to the apparent danger involved; where the apparent danger is great, a greater care is required than where such apparent danger is slight”. So held against the contention that degrees of negligence are not recognized in this state.

Wolfe v Decker, 221-600; 266 NW 4

Injuries from operation — negligence — correct definition. Instruction reviewed and held to constitute a correct definition of actionable negligence.

Wolfe v Decker, 221-600; 266 NW 4

Obscure definition of “ordinary care.” An instruction which, somewhat obscurely, defines ordinary care as such care as is commensurate with the danger to be apprehended from the circumstances surrounding or facing the actor may nevertheless be adequate.

(g) DEFINING AND EXPLAINING TERMS—concluded

Ordinary care—definition reaffirmed. The standard definition of ordinary care need not be augmented by adding an extra word “ordinarily” to the phrases “would do” or “would not do under the circumstances”.

Schalk v Smith, 224-904; 277 NW 303
Johnston v Johnson, 225-77; 279 NW 139;
118 ALR 233

Contributory negligence—degree of. No particular or fixed phraseology is required in conveying to a jury, in a case founded on negligence, the idea that plaintiff cannot recover if he has, by his own negligence, contributed in any degree to his own injury.

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

Contributory negligence—adequate definition. An instruction which defines “contributory negligence” as such negligence as “helps” to produce the injury complained of is not erroneous when accompanied by a correct definition of negligence generally.

Swan v Auto Co., 221-842; 265 NW 143

Negligence must “directly” contribute. Instruction reaffirmed requiring plaintiff’s negligence to contribute “directly” to the injuries before it will defeat recovery.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489;
118 ALR 1186

“Inevitable accident”—failure to define. Failure to define the term “inevitable accident” does not result in error when the instruction is correct as far as it goes and when a request for a definition is not made.

Hamilton v Boyd, 218-885; 256 NW 290

“Notice” and “means of knowledge.” Instructions defining “notice” and “means of knowledge” and concretely applying such definitions to the evidence, reviewed, and held adequate without further elaboration.

General Motors v Whiteley, 217-998; 252 NW 779

Failure to define “prima facie.” An instruction characterizing certain acts of omission and commission, if found by the jury, as prima facie evidence of negligence, is not necessarily rendered erroneous because the court failed to define said term “prima facie”.

Wolfe v Decker, 221-600; 266 NW 4

“Preponderance of evidence” defined. A definition of “preponderance of evidence” is meaning the greater weight of evidence” is not rendered erroneous because of the additional phrase “the evidence of superior influence or efficacy”.

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

“Preponderance of evidence.” In defining “preponderance of evidence” as evidence which is “more convincing as to its truth”, the court does not, in effect, say that evidence cannot constitute a preponderance unless the jury is satisfied that it is true.

Priest v Hogan, 218-1371; 257 NW 403

Preponderance of evidence erroneously defined. It is error to define “preponderance of the credible evidence” as the testimony which best satisfies the juror’s mind “that it is true”, because it implies that the jury must be fully convinced of the truth of the testimony which controls the decision on an issue.

Heacock v Baule, 216-311; 249 NW 437; 93 ALR 151; 36 NCCA 25

Duress—inadequate instructions. On the issue whether a settlement was invalid because of duress in the form of threats to arrest and imprison, it is not sufficient to define “duress” as “compulsion or restraint by which a person is illegally forced to do an act”. The jury must be told, in effect, that the duress must be such as to deprive the party of the power to enter into a contract.

Gray v Shell Corp., 212-825; 237 NW 460

Instructions—evidence defined. Instruction that “evidence is whatever is admitted in the trial of a case as part of the record, whether it be an article or document marked as exhibit, other matter formally introduced and received, stipulation, or testimony of witnesses, in order to enable jury to pronounce with certainty, concerning the truth of any matter in dispute”, considered with other instructions, and while not approved, could not have prejudicially misled the jury.

O’Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

Abstract definition of “evidence.” An abstract definition of “evidence” which, standing alone, might possibly invite the jury to consider matters not received in evidence is rendered harmless by other instructions which definitely limit the jury to the evidence submitted to it.

State v Speck, 202-732; 210 NW 913

Supposed computation illustrating rule. A mathematical rule for the computation of different elements of damages is not rendered erroneous by an accompanying, nonmisleading, supposed computation illustrating the application of the rule.

Gladon v Ins. Assn., 211-60; 232 NW 804

(h) SUFFICIENCY AS TO PARTICULAR SUBJECT-MATTERS

Verbal admissions—unbalanced instruction. An instruction to the effect that verbal admissions should be received by the jury with caution as they are subject to much imperfection and mistake, is reversibly erroneous unless balanced with further instruction to the effect that "when such admissions are deliberately made, or often repeated, and are correctly given, they are often the most satisfactory evidence."

Davis v City, 209-1324; 230 NW 421
Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638
Abraham v Ins. Co., 215-1; 244 NW 675

Unbalanced instructions. Failure of the court to balance an instruction,—to state the negative of a proposition as well as the affirmative,—does not necessarily constitute reversible error.

Kline v Transfer Co., 215-943; 247 NW 215

Balancing illustration. The court, after instructing that the taking of indecent liberties with the person of a woman may constitute an assault, and after employing an illustration descriptive of indecent liberty, need not balance the illustration by giving the converse thereof.

Ransom v McDermott, 215-594; 246 NW 266

Testamentary capacity of individual. Principle reaffirmed that mere weakness of the mental faculties is insufficient to invalidate a will if the testator knew and comprehended the natural objects of his bounty, the nature and extent of his property, and the disposition he desired to make of it.

In re Shields, 208-607; 224 NW 69

Testamentary capacity. Instructions reviewed generally, and held to properly present the rules for weighing the testimony on the issue of testamentary capacity.

In re Shields, 208-607; 224 NW 69

Civil liability—self-defense properly submitted. In an assault and battery case an instruction setting out elements of plaintiff's proof without referring to "self-defense" is not erroneous when "self-defense" is sufficiently explained to the jury in other instructions.

Hauser v Boever, 225-1; 279 NW 137

Self-defense—permissible degree of force. The degree of force which a defendant may employ in order to prevent injury to himself from an assault by one person is not necessarily the measure of defendant's permissible resistance when, at the same instant of time, he is menacingly threatened by several other persons in his immediate presence. This important fact must not be overlooked by the instructions.

Booton v Metcalfe, 201-311; 207 NW 386

Action for causing death—force in repelling assault. A defendant in repelling an assault upon his person has a right to use such force as appeared to him, as a reasonably prudent, courageous, and cautious man, to be necessary under the circumstances, and the trial court's words "reasonably appeared necessary to him as a cautious, courageous man", while inaccurate in an instruction, are not prejudicially erroneous, the trial court having correctly stated the rule in other paragraphs of the instruction of which complaint is made.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Elements of self-defense—action for wrongful death. In a death action against a merchant policeman for shooting an alleged robber, the plea of self-defense being an affirmative one required defendant to prove (1) that the assailant was attempting to rob him; (2) that he was reasonably apprehensive of peril; (3) that he was acting as a reasonably cautious and courageous man; and (4) that he had reasonable grounds to believe it necessary to use the force he did use, and the court commits no error in so instructing.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

"Alibi" in civil cause—burden of proof. Where a defendant in a civil case enters a general denial to a charge of having committed a tort, and in support thereof testifies that at the time in question he was at his home not far from the scene of the alleged tort, the court has no right to instruct (1) that defendant's defense is that of an "alibi", and (2) that defendant has the burden to establish such alibi by evidence which will outweigh the evidence tending to show that defendant did commit the tort.

Gregory v Sorensen, 208-174; 225 NW 342

Duty owing to licensee. When a material issue is whether a person, injured in a public store because of a defect in the maintenance of the store, was at the time of the injury an invitee or a mere licensee, the court must plainly tell the jury that if the injured party was a mere licensee when injured he cannot recover even tho the operator of the store was negligent in maintaining the store unless the injured party shows that he was injured by some willful or affirmative action of the said operator.

Nelson v Woolworth, 211-592; 231 NW 665

Legal opinion as false representation. A representation, tho false, that a bank and the directors thereof are personally liable, as a matter of law, on certain paper rediscounted by the bank, cannot constitute a fraud when the parties concerned stand on equal footing as to all the material facts; otherwise, when such equality does not exist, and when the statement is made for the purpose of being relied on as a statement of fact, and is justifiably so relied on by the party to whom made; and instructions must make this distinction clear to the jury.

Commercial Bk. v Keitges, 206-90; 219 NW 44

IF FORM, REQUISITES, AND SUFFICIENCY—continued

(h) SUFFICIENCY AS TO PARTICULAR SUBJECT-MATTERS—continued

"Payment" as issue. Instructions which, as a whole, plainly submit the plea of payment as pleaded, are all-sufficient.

Blakesburg Bk. v Blake, 207-843; 223 NW 895

Multiple quantum meruit counts. No error results from instructing fully as to the issues under each of several quantum meruit counts, all pertaining to the same transaction, when the court properly protects the defendant from a double liability.

Olson v Shuler, 208-70; 221 NW 941

Quantum meruit—-independent judgment of jurors. A jury may be instructed that, in determining the reasonable value of services rendered, they may give due heed to their own knowledge and experience on the subject at issue.

Northrup v Herrick, 206-1225; 219 NW 419

Quantum meruit. A denied plea of quantum meruit, for services rendered must be established, or plaintiff must fail, irrespective of whether the defendant does or does not establish his defensive plea that the contract of employment was different, and that thereunder the plaintiff had been paid. Instructions are necessarily erroneous when to the effect that defendant is entitled to the verdict only in case he establishes his claim as to the contract.

Olson v Shuler, 203-518; 210 NW 453

Nominal damages—right to recover more. The court is not in error in instructing that a plaintiff is entitled to more than nominal damages ("such as one dollar or less") consequent on a wholly unjustified assault and battery resulting in admittedly substantial physical injury to plaintiff.

Ashby v Nine, 218-953; 256 NW 679

Damages—contract basis. Where parties have contracted that contemplated damages shall not exceed a certain amount, a particular measure of damages which will give practical effect to the agreement will be approved.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

Present worth of estate—inadequate instructions. In an action for damages to the estate of a 17-year-old minor consequent on his wrongful death, the court should instruct that the present worth of said estate must be based on the minor's expectancy at the time of his majority.

Hart v Hinkley, 215-915; 247 NW 258

Sale of stock—damages as affected by 1929 depression. In an action for damages on account of false representations inducing the purchase of stock and under an instruction giving the correct measure of damages as the difference between the actual value of the stock and its value if it had been as represented, both values as of the time of purchase which was prior to the depression of 1929, it follows that the reduction of the stock's value because of the depression did not cause plaintiff's damage and defendant's motion for a directed verdict thereon was properly denied.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

Frozen condition of shipment. An allegation that the frozen condition of a shipment was negligently caused by the delivering carrier (who was in court) is properly presented by an instruction substantially so directing the jury, even tho the plaintiff has alleged that the shipment was unfrozen when received by the initial carrier (who was not in court), and even tho the instructions made no mention of such latter allegation.

Dye Co. v Davis, 202-1008; 209 NW 744

Fraudulent representations—opinion (?) or fact (?). A representation may be one of fact per se, or it may be one of opinion per se, or it may be neither per se. In the latter case, whether the representation or statement be of fact or of opinion depends essentially on the subject-matter of the transaction and on all the material attending facts and circumstances thereof; and the court must, in its instructions, clearly differentiate between the two questions.

Boysen v Petersen, 203-1073; 211 NW 894

Mitigation—libel action. In an action for libel and defamation of character, the court should clearly differentiate between the purpose and effect of evidence (1) tending to show a good-faith belief in the truth of the charges in question, and (2) tending to show the actual truth of such charges.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274

False imprisonment—elements. The jury should be definitely instructed that there cannot be false imprisonment unless the imprisonment is against the will of the person imprisoned.

Kelley v Gardner, 213-16; 238 NW 470

Uncertain or speculative testimony. The court should instruct the jury on request, in eminent domain proceedings, that it should not, on the issue of value, take into consideration anything which is remote, or imaginary, or uncertain or speculative even tho testified to by witnesses.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Contract measure of damages—effect. A contract measure of damages in case of loss under a policy of insurance against theft precludes the court from instructing as to another and different measure of damages.

Salinger v Ins. Corp., 214-1021; 243 NW 183

Enticing and alienating—measure of damages. A husband's right of action for the wrongful alienation and enticing of his wife is based on the loss of her consortium,—not alone on the loss of her love. Instructions held inadequate.

McGlothlen v Mills, 221-204; 265 NW 117

Equal degree of care. Any basis in the instructions for claiming that a greater degree of care was required of one party than of the other, is fully effaced when the court otherwise instructs definitely to the contrary.

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

No-eyewitness rule. Instructions relative to the permissible inference of care which the law authorizes when there are no eyewitnesses to an accident reviewed and held correct.

Azeltine v Lutterman, 218-675; 254 NW 854

Intermingling general and specific allegations. Instructions which refer the jury to the general allegations of negligence and not to the specific allegations are of harmless consequence when the latter are simply an elaboration of the former.

Tissue v Durin, 216-709; 246 NW 806

Failure to instruct on general negligence. There was no prejudicial error in failing to instruct that an action was based on general negligence when, in assigning this alleged error, the defendant stated that the court set out the substance of the petition in stating the issues, but did not show in what manner the jury would have better understood the issues had the court instructed as to general negligence.

Porter v Elec. Co., 228- ; 292 NW 231

Proximate cause—requiring excessive proof. Instructions reviewed and held not subject to the objections that plaintiff was required to prove (1) not only that the negligence of defendant was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, but (2) that said negligence was the sole cause of said injuries.

Rainey v Riese, 219-164; 257 NW 346

Proximate cause of injury — concurrent negligence. The fact that the negligence of two parties is concurrent does not render improper an instruction which states what acts of one of the parties would constitute negligence.

Reidy v Ry. Co., 220-1386; 258 NW 675

Contributory negligence — sufficiency. Instructions reviewed and held properly to present the issue of contributory negligence.

Becvar v Batesole, 218-858; 256 NW 297

Contributory negligence — inadequate submission. Defendant's specific allegations as to contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff should be specifically submitted to the jury when they have adequate support in the evidence.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

Contributory negligence — burden of proof. A definite instruction that plaintiff has the burden of proof to show that he was not guilty of any negligence contributing to his injury, is in no degree overcome by later instructions wherein the court, with reference to contributory-fact issues, uses the expression "if you find"; in other words, such expression does not have the effect of impliedly placing the burden of proof as to contributory negligence upon the defendant.

Dean v Koolish, 212-238; 234 NW 179

Contributory negligence—model instruction. Courts, in instructing as to contributory negligence which will bar recovery, should employ the model instruction approved by the appellate court, viz: "If the injured party contributed in any way or in any degree directly to the injury complained of there can be no recovery", but it is not erroneous to substitute "coöperated" or an equivalent term for "contributed".

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787

Contributory negligence—fundamental error. An unobjectionable definition of contributory negligence is converted into fundamental error by the addition of the clause "and but for such negligence on the part of the person injured the injury would not have occurred".

Ryan v Rendering Wks., 215-363; 245 NW 301

Third party negligence as defense—burden of proof. A defendant who pleads that the sole and proximate cause of an injury was the negligence of a third party cannot complain that the court instructs that the negligence of said third person is immaterial unless defendant establishes that such negligence was the sole and proximate cause of said injury.

Jordison v Jordison Brs., 215-938; 247 NW 491

Presumption of negligence. To instruct that a railroad company must overcome a presumption of negligence in setting out a fire "by negating every fact that would justify a finding of negligence on defendant's part" is not misleading when defendant is, by instructions, fully exempted from liability on proof that its engine was properly equipped and properly operated.

Stickling v Railway, 215-1312; 247 NW 642

Statutory presumption of negligence. Failure to instruct on the statutory presumption of negligence in an action for wrongful injury from electricity, is not erroneous (1) when plaintiff has seemingly ignored such presumption by alleging and attempting to prove specific acts of negligence, and (2) when plaintiff requests no such instruction.

Hanna v Elec. Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

Recklessness particulars unchallenged before answer. Error may not be predicated on the submission of certain particulars alleging recklessness when their sufficiency is not raised before answer filed and when evidence exists to sustain them.

Claussen v Johnson's Est., 224-990; 278 NW 297

Limiting impeaching evidence. The failure of the court on its own motion in its instructions to specifically limit impeaching testimony to that particular purpose is not erroneous when the testimony in question is of such a nature that it could not be considered for any other purpose.

State v Brewer, 218-1287; 254 NW 834

Expert testimony. Instructions to the effect that a jury is not necessarily compelled to give controlling effect to expert testimony, reviewed and held correct.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 210-849; 231 NW 323; 38 NCCA 81

Compensation—instructions—jurors' experience. An instruction in eminent domain proceedings that jurors have the right to weigh the testimony of experts as to values in the light of their own experience is not subject to the vice that they were told to substitute their own knowledge of values.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

Personal injury—reducing verdict. An instruction in a personal injury action held not prejudicially objectionable on the ground that it did not specifically tell the jury that the amount the deceased plaintiff would have spent should be considered only for the purpose of reducing the amount to be recovered.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 284 NW 186

Future and anticipatory damages. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from an automobile collision where petition alleged damages for future medical expenses and the evidence showed plaintiff received severe permanent injuries to his back and spine, suffered intense pain, and received two hernias, together with other injuries, an instruction on future and anticipatory expenses was held proper and supported by the evidence.

Kramer v Henely, 227-504; 288 NW 610

Statute of limitation—unnecessary instructions. There is no occasion to instruct relative to the statute of limitation when the parties join no issue thereon.

Dravis v Sawyer, 218-742; 254 NW 920

Instructions on trial theory—nonduty of court on other theories and necessity of requests. In an action by pedestrian who fell on ice which had formed on a sloping portion of a sidewalk, an instruction to jury requiring, as prerequisite to recovery, a finding of knowledge or constructive notice by city of icy condition of sidewalk, was not erroneous where plaintiff failed to request an instruction that such notice was unnecessary, where action was tried on theory expressed in the instruction. A trial court is not required to instruct on theory not in the case as tried, and appellant, who invited instruction given and failed to request different instruction, could not, on appeal, complain of such instruction.

Leonard v Muscatine, 227-1381; 291 NW 446

Disability continuing to time of trial—insurance benefits. When an insurance policy provides that, in order to recover permanent disability benefits, an insured must be disabled "for life", an instruction that the jury must find insured disabled at the time of trial is correct.

Wood v Federal Life Ins., 224-179; 277 NW 241

Proofs of loss under policy—comprehensive-ness. Instructions relative to the inconsistency between the testimony of plaintiff and her statements in her proofs of loss under an accident policy of insurance reviewed, and held to be sufficiently comprehensive properly to present the matter to the jury.

Harrington v Surety Co., 206-925; 221 NW 577

Theft insurance—inadequate instructions. In an action on a policy of insurance against theft, the court, after properly placing the burden on plaintiff to show that the taker intended to steal the insured property, must also instruct that plaintiff supplies that element of proof, prima facie, by testimony that the insured property disappeared from the place where plaintiff left it, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff or of any other person having control of the property.

Tullar v Ins. Co., 214-166; 239 NW 534

Application attached to policy—illegibly reduced photo copy—not "true copy". In action on life policies, where defense was based on false representations in application for policy, and it is shown original application is plainly printed in legible letters of fair size, while copy furnished and attached to policy is so reduced in size and so dim or blurred that it can only be read by persons with normal vision by use of a strong magnifying glass, the statute requiring "true copy" of application to be attached to policy is not complied with, and the submission of question to the jury as to legibility under an instruction that a true copy must be readable was not erroneous.

New York Ins. v Miller, 73 F 2d, 350

Delivery of mortgage—actual or constructive delivery. The delivery of a mortgage on insured property, in order to have the effect of invalidating the insurance on the property, may be actual or constructive, and reversible error results from requiring the jury to find an actual delivery when the record might justify a finding of constructive delivery.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 218-559; 255 NW 705

All elements of offense charged. Comprehensive and correct instructions as to all elements of a charged offense render unnecessary, in the absence of a request, an elaborate exposition of defendant's particular theory of the case.

State v Kendall, 200-483; 203 NW 806

(i) ARGUMENTATIVE INSTRUCTIONS

Instructions—argumentative language—issues stated. The court should not instruct the jury in argumentative language, but the issues should be fairly stated without undue repetition, undue emphasis, or minimization of specific facts or circumstances.

Vance v Grohe, 223-1109; 274 NW 902; 116 ALR 332

(j) READING OR QUOTING STATUTES

Contributory negligence—instructions—error in quoting statute only. In submitting specifications of alleged contributory negligence, the court commits error in simply quoting the statute relating to these grounds without defining just what acts of plaintiff, under the evidence, would constitute contributory negligence, and without applying the law to the facts.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

(k) CONFUSED OR MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS

Conflicting instructions—when reversible error. When read as a whole, if instructions are conflicting, confusing, and misleading to the jury, they are reversibly erroneous.

Tallmon v Larson, 226-564; 284 NW 367

Cured by construction as whole. Tho an instruction standing alone may be confusing, yet it may be all-sufficient if, when the instructions are viewed and construed as a whole, the confusion necessarily disappears.

Hanrahan v Sprague, 220-867; 263 NW 514

Copying defendant's answer improper. Instructions should not substantially copy defendant's answer as jury may easily be confused and misled thereby.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

"Testimony" used instead of "evidence"—jury not confused. Use of the word "testimony" in an instruction in place of the word

"evidence" held nonprejudicial in that the jury could not have been misled.

Moran v Kean, 225-329; 280 NW 543

Grounds for new trial. The granting of a new trial will not be interfered with by the appellate court when probably granted by the court in the belief that its withdrawal of certain issues and its unfortunate references to these defenses at inopportune times in the instructions were prejudicial.

Christensen v Bank, 218-892; 256 NW 687; 255 NW 520

Hopeless confusion—credibility of witnesses. A hopelessly confusing instruction as to what matters the jury might take into consideration in determining the credibility of witnesses, constitutes error.

Starry v Starry, 208-228; 225 NW 268

Hopeless confusion—validity of instrument. To base the validity of an instrument on the manner in which a party thereto treated it, and on the attitude which he maintained toward it, may result in such confusion on the part of the jury as to constitute reversible error.

Cornett v Ins. Assn., 208-450; 224 NW 524

Hopeless conflict—street maintenance. An instruction from which the jury would be wholly unable to determine whether a city was bound to maintain a reasonably safe traveled way to the full width of the street, or to the full width of the graded portion of the street, is prejudicially erroneous.

Morse v Town, 213-1225; 241 NW 304

Fatally confusing—action on note. An instruction may, manifestly, be so confusing as to constitute reversible error. So held as to an instruction relative to the execution of a promissory note and the renewal thereof and the consideration therefor.

Suntken v Suntken, 228-347; 272 NW 132

Hopeless conflict—duty of carrier. Hopelessly conflicting instructions relative to the duty owing by a carrier to a passenger constitute reversible error.

Boston v Elec. Co., 206-753; 221 NW 508

Confusedly worded. An unfortunately worded instruction does not constitute reversible error if its meaning is fairly discernible.

Olson v Tyner, 219-251; 257 NW 538

Reciting claims and then withdrawing them. Instructions which recite or paraphrase all the claims made in the pleadings and later withdraw certain of the claims will not be deemed erroneous when it can be said that the jury was not misled.

Ryerson v Roth Bros., 210-1179; 232 NW 500

Confused use of word "accident". The use in instruction of the word "accident", both (1)

(k) CONFUSED OR MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS—concluded in the sense of an occurrence that was inevitable, and (2) in the sense of an occurrence happening because of negligence, is not necessarily confusing.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Correct and incorrect instructions. In an action for damages consequent on malpractice in sewing up a sponge in a wound, instructions which, in part, definitely confine the jury to the one ground of negligence alleged, and which, in part, fail so to confine them, constitute reversible error.

Forrest v Abbott, 219-664; 259 NW 238; 38 NCCA 315

Ordinary care—unallowable standard. Error results from instructing that a party would not be guilty of negligence if he moved machinery across a railroad track in the manner in which he usually so moved it, unless he knew such manner to be dangerous.

Graves v Railway, 207-30; 222 NW 344

Liability of defendants—conspiracy. An instruction to the effect that, in order to render defendants individually liable, it must be found that they were parties to the conspiracy charged, or that they "personally participated" in making the representations which were the basis of the conspiracy, is not erroneous when the record reveals ample testimony of the "personal participation" of all of the defendants in the making of the said representations.

Pullan v Struthers, 201-1179; 207 NW 235

Statute of limitations—tolled by fraudulent concealment. In an action for damages for fraud in the sale of stock where the defense was the statute of limitations, an instruction that fails to tell the jury that the statute of limitations would run unless tolled by some affirmative act of fraudulent concealment on the part of the fraud perpetrator is prejudicially erroneous.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

(l) INCONSISTENT OR CONTRADICTORY INSTRUCTIONS

Correct and incorrect instruction on same subject matter. A correct and an incorrect instruction on the same subject matter presents a hopeless contradiction to the jury.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Contributory negligence—minors. An instruction, in a personal injury action, that the burden of proof is on plaintiff to establish his freedom from contributory negligence is not nullified by an instruction that the plaintiff, if of the age of eight years only, is presumed to be incapable of such negligence, and that, to find to the contrary, defendant must so show.

Stutzman v Younkerman, 204-1162; 216 NW 627

Inconsistent instructions—genuineness of signature. Inconsistent instructions on a material issue furnish grounds for a new trial. So held where the court instructed that the only issue submitted to the jury was the genuineness of an indorsing signature on a note, but later instructed that the jury must determine the genuineness of the signature to the note itself.

In re Richardson, 202-328; 208 NW 374

Fatal inconsistency—liability of warehouseman. A definite and unqualified instruction which, in effect, holds a warehouseman to liability as an insurer, and an additional instruction holding him to liability for negligence only, presents a fatal inconsistency.

Kline v Transfer Co., 215-943; 247 NW 215

Fatal contradiction—malicious prosecution. In an action for damages consequent on a malicious prosecution, instructions to the effect, (1) that plaintiff must negative good faith on the part of defendant in instituting the prosecution, and (2) that good faith on the part of defendant constituted no defense, are prejudicially erroneous in that they are mutually conflicting.

Dobbins v Todd & Kraft, 218-878; 256 NW 232

Conflicting instructions—proof in will contest. Instructions relative to what proponent in a will contest must establish reviewed, and held not conflicting.

In re Merrill, 202-837; 211 NW 361

Contradictory instructions—defense on note. Contradictory and misleading instructions may be ground for new trial. So held where the court unequivocally instructed that a defense to a promissory note was waived by the act of the maker in executing a renewal with full knowledge of the defense, and later instructed, in effect, that such waiver did not occur unless the holder of the new note had changed his position by reason thereof.

Fisher v Tullar, 209-35; 227 NW 580

Recoverable and nonrecoverable damages—failure to differentiate. In an action for malpractice in that, after performing a successful operation except that the defendant negligently left a piece of gauze in the wound, which negligence necessitated a second operation, instructions relative to damages arising from, (1) scars, (2) bodily and mental pain, and (3) expenses paid for household servants, must clearly differentiate, in view of the two operations, between such damages as are, under each heading, recoverable, and those that are not recoverable.

Forrest v Abbott, 219-664; 259 NW 238; 38 NCCA 315

(m) CAUTIONARY INSTRUCTIONS

Cautionary instructions—discretion of court. The giving or refusal of cautionary instructions designed to allay prejudice or sympathy on the part of the jury is discretionary with the court.

Siesseger v Puth, 211-775; 234 NW 540

Orwig v Railway, 217-521; 250 NW 148; 90 ALR 258

Precautionary instructions—recovery of rents. A jury may very properly be told not to allow a recovery of rents prior to a specified time, even tho no claim is made in the pleadings for such prior rents, when it is manifest the court was simply guarding against possible confusion, because of the state of the record.

Bigelow v Ins. Co., 206-884; 221 NW 661

Duty of jury to arrive at verdict. After jury had been out several hours it was not improper to call them for cautionary instruction that it was their duty, if possible, to arrive at an agreement.

Nelson v Hemminger, (NOR); 224 NW 49

Provisional or conditional admission of evidence. Evidence provisionally or conditionally received on a pending issue may require a cautionary instruction to the jury to disregard such evidence if the issue is removed from the case.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 215-665; 246 NW 615

Undenied statement as admission—cautionary instruction—failure to request. Court did not err in failing to give a cautionary instruction concerning evidence of damaging statements against defendant, made in his presence, to which he failed to reply or deny, when no such instruction was requested, nor when such claimed error was not raised in the trial court.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Instructions considered as a whole. A cautionary instruction to the jury that court did not attempt to embody all applicable law in any one instruction, but in considering any one instruction jury should consider each in light of and in harmony with all other given instructions and apply them as a whole to the evidence would be proper; however, a failure to do so would not be reversible error.

Churchill v Briggs, 225-1187; 282 NW 280

“Guarded” judgment of jurors. Instructions which require jurors to exercise a “guarded” judgment in finding a fact are not necessarily and prejudicially erroneous.

Ferber v Railway, 205-291; 217 NW 880

Undue limitation—harmless error. An instruction as to the caution with which proof of certain alleged statements and declarations of an alleged donor (and tending to establish an executed gift) should be considered by the jury, is not erroneous because unduly limited; neither may it be deemed harmful when analogous statements and declarations tending to show the nonmaking of said gift and to which said instruction was not made applicable, were fully, properly and correctly covered by another and separate instruction.

Malcor v Johnson, 223-644; 273 NW 145

(n) UNDUE PROMINENCE TO PARTICULAR MATTERS

Undue prominence to certain evidence. Instruction containing recitations of facts or circumstances which have probative force upon issues tendered, or which militate against one party, without a recitation of facts favorable to his contention, are improper and erroneous; as also are instructions which give undue prominence to evidentiary facts to be determined by the jury.

State v Proost, 225-628; 281 NW 167

Undue particularization or emphasis. Instructions should not attempt to marshal the evidence, or to emphasize particular phases or circumstances, and thereby by silence minimize or obscure other phases or circumstances. Instructions working such results are properly refused, especially when the instructions fairly and comprehensively cover the subject matters in such requests.

State v Blair, 209-229; 223 NW 554

State v Martin, 210-376; 228 NW 1

Undue elaboration on nonsubmitted issues.

Seddon v Richardson, 200-763; 205 NW 307

Estoppel to object. Defendant may not successfully claim that an instruction given at his request unduly magnified the importance of certain evidence.

State v Brown, 216-538; 245 NW 306

Speculative damages. Instructions in eminent domain proceedings held not subject to the vice that they emphasized evidence tending to prove speculative damages.

Kemmerer v Highway Com., 214-136; 241 NW 693

See In re Davis, 217-509; 248 NW 497

III APPLICABILITY TO PLEADINGS AND EVIDENCE

(a) APPLICABILITY TO PLEADINGS AND ISSUES

Instructions coordinated with pleadings and evidence. Instructions must always be coordinated with and limited to the pleadings and evidence.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Necessity for pleadings as basis. It is quite elementary that issues should not be submitted

III APPLICABILITY TO PLEADINGS AND EVIDENCE—continued

(a) APPLICABILITY TO PLEADINGS AND ISSUES—continued

unless there is an appropriate pleading as a basis therefor.

Harrington v Surety Co., 206-925; 221 NW 577

Hart v Hinkley, 215-915; 247 NW 258

Plea and proof as basis. Instructions without plea or proof, as a basis thereof, are erroneous.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Applicability to pleadings—nonviolation of rule. The rule which condemns instruction on nonpleaded issues is not violated by instructions which are responsive to the testimony and relative to the bona fides of an affirmative defense—instructions which really go to the heart of the question whether the defense has been established.

Cary v Waybill, 200-432; 203 NW 8

Unrevealed theory not covered. A theory not brought to the attention of the court need not, of course, be covered by the instructions.

Sutton v Moreland, 214-337; 242 NW 75

Unpleaded issue. The submission to the jury of an issue, and the placing of the burden on a party to prove the affirmative thereof, when the party was in no manner presenting such issue, constitute reversible error.

Grantee v Thompson, 203-127; 208 NW 497
In re Stencil, 215-1195; 248 NW 18

Unpleaded defense. Reversible error results from submitting to the jury and requiring it to make a finding on a possible defense not presented by the defendant.

State v Dunn, 202-1188; 211 NW 850

Submission of nonpleaded issues. The submission of a nonpleaded issue of negligence constitutes reversible error.

Morse v Town, 213-1225; 241 NW 304
Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442

Inaccurate submission of issue. Slight inaccuracy in submitting a pleaded item of damages will not be deemed the submission of an unpleaded issue when the jury could not have been misled.

Siesseger v Puth, 211-775; 234 NW 540

Submission of noncontested issue. It is not erroneous to submit to the jury an issue actually made by the pleadings even tho in a practical sense there was no dispute during the trial as to said issue.

Glass v Hutchinson Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

Abstract statement of law. Instructions stating an abstract proposition of law, not wholly applicable to the subject matter on trial, are not erroneous when a later paragraph concretely applies the law to the facts.

Goben v Paving Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

Inferential withdrawal of count. Failure of the court to instruct on a pleaded count constitutes an effectual withdrawal of the count from the jury.

Cox v Fleisher Co., 208-458; 223 NW 521

Pleadings not supported by proof. A plaintiff who has failed to establish the material allegations of his petition, and is therefore not entitled to recover in any event, cannot be deemed harmed by the failure of the court adequately to present to the jury his pleaded cause of action; nor may he be deemed harmed by an inadequate verdict.

Comparet v Metz Co., 222-1328; 271 NW 847

Reasonable value—admissions from pleadings. In action to recover price of corn sold to elevator, an instruction injecting element of reasonable value was erroneous where the pleading alleged express agreement on price, and a further erroneous instruction stating what defendant's answer admitted, but omitting qualification in defendant's pleadings, was not cured by instruction referring to a substituted oral agreement.

Hartwig v Elev. Co., (NOR); 226 NW 116

Submitting fact not in issue. The submission of the issue of mistake in a duly pleaded settlement of partnership affairs without plea of such mistake constitutes reversible error.

Tabler v Evans, 202-1386; 212 NW 161

Injecting unpleaded issue. On the one duly joined issue whether plaintiff was orally employed to render services for defendant in a certain matter, the court commits reversible error by injecting into the instructions the unpleaded issue whether defendant knew that plaintiff was performing services for defendant and accepted the benefits of such services.

Graeser v Jones, 217-499; 251 NW 162

Evidence on stricken plea. After striking from a pleading a claim for damages, error necessarily results from receiving evidence as to the claim and leaving the instructions in such form that the jury may give consideration to such evidence in arriving at their verdict.

Bremhorst v Coal Co., 202-1251; 211 NW 898

Justifiable submission without plea. The unpleaded mitigating fact that a plaintiff knew of a fire at the time it was wrongfully set out upon his premises, and made no effort to put out the fire, or to lessen his damages, is properly presented to the jury when plaintiff's own testimony tended to prove such fact. (§11173.)

Ferber v Railway, 205-291; 217 NW 880

"Assault" admitted in pleadings—use of term permitted. In an action for damages in which the defendant's answer admitted an assault and battery but attempted to justify the act, he could not complain that the court, in its statement of the issues, said that he admitted the assault, as the word "assault" did not admit all that the plaintiff contended, but only the same act upon which the action was based.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Estoppel to question submission of issue. A claimant in probate who advantages himself of the very liberal rules of pleadings recognized in the probate court and who files a claim, which, if established, will justify a recovery on the basis of either an express contract or implied contract, may not complain that the court submitted to the jury the issue of express contract, especially when the verdict was in his favor.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

Recital of nonissuable matter—effect. The mere recital in the preamble to instructions of an immaterial fact allegation of an answer does not constitute a submission of the truth or falsity of such alleged fact, when the actual charging part of the instructions studiously ignores such immaterial allegation.

Wheeler v Woods, 205-1240; 219 NW 407

Unpleaded issue of general negligence. Instruction injecting unpleaded and unproved specification of general negligence is reversible error.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Variation between allegation and instruction. Prejudicial error may not be predicated on instructions which incidentally refer to the negligence of a city in "constructing" a walk, when the assigned negligence is in "maintaining" the walk.

Greenlee v City, 204-1055; 216 NW 774

Inadequate submission of grounds of negligence. Prejudicial error results from failure to submit to the jury all well-pleaded, separate specifications of negligence which have been established as jury questions and as the alleged compound negligence attending a given transaction, it appearing that the plaintiff has been defeated on an inadequate submission.

Hanson v Manning, 213-625; 239 NW 793

Real estate commission—issues correctly submitted. In a suit for breach of oral commission contract, instructions plainly stating that burden was on plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of evidence, (1) the terms of his contract, and (2) that through his efforts a sale was "effected, obtained, and procured", reviewed and held to correctly submit the issues under the pleadings.

Maher v Breen, 224-8; 276 NW 52

Chattel mortgages—notice only issue—unnecessary instructions. Where the plaintiff claimed the right to possession of an automobile under a conditional sales contract and the defendant claimed under two chattel mortgages acquired subsequent to the conditional sale but recorded first, instructions which submitted only the issue of whether the chattel mortgagee had notice of the prior conditional sale were not erroneous in failing to define "subsequent purchaser" as used in recording statutes and in failing to require the jury to determine whether the defendant gave value so as to constitute himself a "subsequent purchaser".

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Improper shifting of burden of proof. Plaintiff who bases his claim for damages on the alleged execution and breach by defendant of a specified contract to convey various tracts of land is not relieved of the burden of establishing said alleged contract by the fact that defendant, after pleading a general denial, sees fit, unnecessarily, to plead, in defense, the contract as he claims it to be. Instruction held erroneous as violative of this principle.

Chismore v Marion Bank, 221-1256; 268 NW 137

Master's liability for injuries—assumption of risk. Instructions to the effect that an employee may not recover damages sustained or resulting from the ordinary and inherent hazards and dangers of an employment are wholly insufficient to submit the pleaded and supported defensive issue that plaintiff had knowledge of the defects in the instrumentalities used by him and of the deficiencies and faults in the methods of using such instrumentalities and that he fully appreciated the danger which might arise therefrom.

McClary v Railway, 209-67; 227 NW 646

Justifiable ignoring of negligence. Grounds of negligence which, if proven, would not establish a cause of action, are properly withheld from the jury.

Fleming v Thornton, 217-183; 251 NW 158

Dual proximate liability. The court, manifestly, cannot properly instruct, in a personal injury action based on negligence, that defendant would not be liable if the injuries were caused by the negligence of a third party, when, under the pleadings and evidence, the jury could find that both defendant and said third party were proximately liable.

Dennis v Merrill, 218-1259; 257 NW 322; 1 NCCA (NS) 175

Acts not constituting submission of issue. It may not be said that an unsustainable or unsustainable allegation of negligence is submitted to the jury because the court briefly, tho unfortunately, mentioned such allegation in a preliminary recital of plaintiff's allegations, it appearing that such objectionable grounds of recovery were thereafter studiously ignored in the instructions.

Williams v Railway, 205-446; 214 NW 692

Governmental immunity—law question raised in reply—recognizing issue—when proper. The defense of “governmental immunity” of an employee, in a personal injury action, should properly be assailed by motion or demurrer. However, if the law question of sufficiency of this defense is raised in the reply and not challenged by the defendant, and the case tried on that theory, then the court is correct in recognizing the issue and instructing on the inadequacy of that defense.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Pleaded but unsupported damages—instruction as a whole. No error results from instructing that no recovery can be allowed plaintiff in excess of the pleaded amount for a named element of damages (the evidence concededly showing that plaintiff had not suffered said maximum amount) when other instructions definitely charged the jury to base damages solely on the evidence.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

Failure to limit damages—fatal error. An instruction which fails to limit the jury in its return of damages (1) to the amount claimed for each item of damages, and (2) to such amount only as shown by the evidence, is prejudicially erroneous.

Andersen v Christensen, 222-177; 268 NW 527

Future pain—sufficiency. Damages for “future” physical and mental pain may not be submitted to the jury under a pleading (1) which makes no specific reference to such damages, and (2) which expressly pleads that such pain continued for a stated period, to wit, three weeks. This is true even though the pleading alleges that the injury alleged resulted in permanent, visible scars upon the “arm and wrist”.

Pettijohn v Halloran, 200-1355; 206 NW 631

Measure of damages—instruction following rescission theory. In vendee’s action for damages for fraudulent representations of value in the sale of real estate, no rescission being asked, it is error to instruct that the measure of damages is the amount paid less the reasonable rental value for the time occupied, which error, however, is without reversible prejudice to the vendor, when the amount of recovery is so small that the hope for a more favorable verdict on a retrial is, under the evidence, too remote.

Neal v Miller, 225-252; 280 NW 499

Limiting damages—issue not raised in trial. Where an action in replevin by one claiming an automobile under a conditional sales contract was brought against a chattel mortgagee who had given some cash and extended credit in return for his mortgage, the plaintiff, having permitted the trial to be concluded on the issue of possession without raising any other issue or requesting instructions on any other issue, could not complain that the mortgagee’s recovery should have been limited to the amount of actual cash given for the mortgage.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Trespassers—abortive issue. The plea in an action for personal injury that plaintiff was a trespasser on defendant’s property presents no jury question when defendant neither pleads nor proves (1) that he had requested plaintiff to depart and that plaintiff had refused to do so, or (2) that any force was necessary to remove plaintiff,—in short, when defendant does not plead or show that he was ejecting plaintiff as a trespasser.

Pettijohn v Halloran, 200-1355; 206 NW 631

Preliminary statement of controversy—effect. An issue or controversial fact is not necessarily submitted to the jury because embraced within the court’s preliminary statement of the contentions of the parties.

Persia Bk. v Wilson, 214-993; 243 NW 581

Submission of unsupported issue. The submission of a material but wholly unsupported issue constitutes reversible error.

Parrack v McGaffey, 217-368; 251 NW 871

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Shaw v Carson, 218-1251; 257 NW 194; 38 NCCA 192

Deweese v Transit Lines, 218-1327; 256 NW 428

Bebensee v Blumer, 219-261; 257 NW 768

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Miller v Mutual Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

Dougherty v McFee, 221-391; 265 NW 176

State v Johnston, 221-933; 267 NW 698

Porter v Decker, 222-1109; 270 NW 897

Unsupported issue. Nonsupported issues must not be submitted to the jury.

Seddon v Richardson, 200-763; 205 NW 307

State v Wright, 200-772; 205 NW 325

Millard v Mfg. Co., 200-1063; 205 NW 979

Veith v Cassidy, 201-376; 207 NW 328

Graves v Ry. Co., 207-30; 222 NW 344

Dickeson v Lzicar, 208-275; 225 NW 406

Balik v Flacker, 212-1381; 238 NW 467

Kuhn v Kjose, 216-36; 248 NW 230

Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Supported issue—failure to submit. Error results from a refusal, especially on a request, to submit a material issue having substantial support in the record.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

In re unsupported or immaterial issues. Reversible error results from the giving of instructions on a wholly unsupported issue, or on a supported immaterial issue.

Chismore v Bank, 221-1256; 268 NW 137

Unsupported charge of negligence. Unsupported charges of negligence should not be submitted to the jury.

Wilkinson v Lbr. Co., 203-476; 212 NW 682

Unsupported theory. The court must not instruct on a theory which the record affirmatively shows has no support whatever.

Klinkel v Saddler, 211-368; 233 NW 538

Submission of unsupported issue. Error results in stating in instructions to the jury a material, unsupported claim of one of the parties, without stating that such claim is unsupported.

Miller v Fire Assn., 219-689; 259 NW 572

Unsupported issue of permanent injury. Instructions reviewed, and held not subject to the vice of submitting an unsupported issue of permanent injury.

Groshens v Lund, 222-49; 268 NW 496

Withdrawn issue. The court having once withdrawn from the jury an unsupported issue by sustaining a motion to that effect, need not in its instructions repeat the withdrawal.

Sutton v Moreland, 214-337; 242 NW 75

Taking case from jury—failure to present objection. Error may not be predicated on the submission to the jury of a supported issue when complainant failed to request the withdrawal of said issue.

Rosenstein v Smith, 218-1381; 257 NW 397

Eminent domain—necessity for condemnation. In the absence of an issue thereon, there is no occasion whatever for the court, in eminent domain proceedings, to instruct on the subject of the necessity for such condemnation.

Hoelt v State, 221-694; 266 NW 571; 104 ALR 1008

Instructions in re benefits in eminent domain. In eminent domain proceedings, an instruction that the compensation allowed should not leave the landowner "poorer or worse off or better off" because of the taking, is not subject to the vice of leading the jury to understand that in computing compensation, benefits accruing to the landowner because of the taking should be deducted, when the jury is repeatedly and explicitly told elsewhere in the instructions that they should not consider benefits.

Witt v State, 223-156; 272 NW 419

Failure to submit all issues. Reversible error results in the submission of only part of several pleaded and issuable fact questions, any one of which, if affirmatively found to exist, would justify a landlord in re-entering leased land.

Durfinger v Heaton, 219-528; 258 NW 543

Unpleaded and unsupported issue. On the narrow issue whether a defendant personally signed the promissory note sued upon, it is error for the court to submit the additional and unsupported issue whether the note was signed by someone other than the defendant, but under authority from him.

Conner v Henry, 201-253; 207 NW 119

Instructing on immaterial, nonprejudicial evidence. A will contestant's contention that it was error to instruct regarding a nonmaterial exhibit—a memorandum by a deceased attorney, who drew the will—although well founded, held to be error without prejudice when the paper and the conversation connected therewith were not necessary for proponents to make a prima facie case of the due and legal execution of the will and the genuineness of the signatures.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Requested instructions—will contestants bound by own theory. Contestants alleging that a will was not duly and legally executed may not amplify their claim thereunder after requesting instructions proceeding solely on the theory that their construction of their claim was that the signatures of the testator and one witness, now deceased, were not genuine. In such case it is not error, when otherwise unobjected to, for the court on its own motion to add an instruction which in effect limits the case to the theory propounded in contestants' requested instructions.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Submission of withdrawn issue. The submission to the jury in a will contest of the issue of testamentary capacity, when said issue had been wholly withdrawn by the contestant, (even tho in the presence of the jury) is necessarily erroneous and prejudicial.

In re Narber, 211-713; 234 NW 185

Nonissuable matters. In an action by an attorney for services based on an express contract to assist in the settlement of an appeal, the court, in its instructions, should not make plaintiff's recovery dependent on proof that defendant was apprised of just what efforts plaintiff was making to effect a settlement.

Graeser v Jones, 220-354; 261 NW 439

Attorney—contract of employment. Instructions reviewed, in an action by an attorney on a contract of employment, and held to adequately protect every right of the defendant.

Coughlon v Pedelty, 211-138; 233 NW 63

Establishing agency. The thought that a plaintiff must establish the authority of an alleged agent of the defendant's before the de-defendant can be bound by what the alleged agent says and does is sufficiently expressed in an instruction which requires the jury to find that defendant acted "by their duly authorized agent."

III APPLICABILITY TO PLEADINGS AND EVIDENCE—continued

Farmers Bank v Planters Elev., 200-434; 204 NW 298

(b) APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE

Applicability to evidence. An instruction applicable to no evidence in the record is erroneous.

Millard v Mfg. Co., 200-1063; 205 NW 979

Presumption of supporting evidence. Presumptively an instruction has support in testimony not abstracted to the appellate court.

State v Metcalfe, 203-155; 212 NW 382

Unsupported issue of negligence. Reversible error results from submitting several different allegations of negligence, one of which is without support in the evidence.

Graves v Ry. Co., 207-30; 222 NW 344

Unsupported negligence. Reversible error results from so instructing that the jury may base negligence not on proof of an ultimate fact, but on proof of a simple item of evidence bearing on such ultimate fact.

Graves v Ry. Co., 207-30; 222 NW 344

Contributory negligence—lack of evidence—effect. An instruction which properly directs the jury, in determining the issue of contributory negligence of an injured party, to take into consideration certain enumerated matters as shown by the evidence, is not necessarily erroneous because it makes no reference to the effect of a lack of evidence on the subject.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Non-issue as to signature. When it is practically conceded, under the evidence, that a party did not himself sign a promissory note (tho his name is signed thereto), the fact that the record contains an admitted signature of the party imposes no obligation on the court to permit the jury, by a comparison of signatures, to find that the party did, himself, sign the note.

West Chester Bank v Dayton, 217-64; 250 NW 695

Performance of contract—burden of proof. The defendant in an action to recover for materials furnished under a building contract may not complain of instructions which clearly impose on plaintiff the burden to show that he has complied with the contract.

Granette v Neumann, 208-24; 221 NW 197

Nonapplicability to evidence—nonsupport. An instruction to the effect that a husband would not be guilty of failure to support his wife if he procured a home at a named place and if the wife without good cause refused to live at said place is erroneous when the applicable evidence was solely to the effect that the husband offered to procure such home and that the wife refused such offer.

State v Wright, 200-772; 205 NW 325

Nonapplicability to evidence—horse worried by dog. Reversible error results from so instructing that the jury may wander afield and base its verdict on a fact of which there is no evidence. So held where, in an action for being thrown from a horse because of its fright from the barking of a dog, the evidence was confined solely to the act of the dog in worrying the horse, but the instructions permitted a verdict for plaintiff if the dog did anything that would justify the killing of the dog.

Luick v Sondrol, 200-728; 205 NW 331

Recovery on unsupported condition. Instructions which permit a recovery on a condition which the evidence affirmatively shows never existed, constitute error, and the error must be deemed prejudicial when numerous items are in dispute and it is quite impossible to determine what various items were allowed by the jury.

Tabler v Evans, 202-1386; 212 NW 161

Unsupported ratification. Instruction authorizing a finding of ratification by partners of a nonpartnership obligation, is fundamentally erroneous when there is no sufficient evidence to support a finding of ratification.

Maxfield v Heishman, 209-1061; 229 NW 681

Unsupported issue of partnership. In an action of replevin for two articles, of which plaintiff was the absolute owner of one and the holder of a chattel mortgage on the other, defendant's issue of partnership is properly rejected when supported only by a showing that the parties had temporarily shared equally in the net earnings of the two articles.

Dieter v Coyne, 201-823; 208 NW 359

Permitting recovery not shown by evidence. Instructions which permit a recovery in excess of that shown by the evidence are erroneous.

Looney v Parker, 210-85; 230 NW 570

Failure of court to limit return of damages. Reversible error results from the failure of the court in its instructions to limit the jury in its return of damages, on various items of claimed damages, to the amount claimed in the pleadings; and limiting damages "as shown by the evidence" does not necessarily cure the error.

Desmond v Smith, 219-83; 257 NW 543

Unsupported issues of permanent injuries. Instructions relative to damages for permanent injuries are improper where there is no testimony tending to show permanent injuries.

Shuck v Keefe, 205-865; 218 NW 31

Permitting return of unproven damages. Reversible error results from so instructing as to allow the jury to find damages on account of a loss not shown by the evidence, when the amount of the verdict, viewed in the light of the evidence, quite clearly shows that the jury made allowance for such unproven loss.

Herring Motor v Myerly, 207-990; 222 NW 1

Unsupported matters of illustration. An instruction which is couched in the form of an illustration to the jury is not prejudicially erroneous because there is no evidence bearing on the subject-matter of the illustration.

Eves v Littig Co., 202-1338; 212 NW 154

Measure of damages—unsupported element. Instructions to the effect that a measure of damages would be the difference between the value of property as it actually was when a party received it, and its value had it been as represented, are manifestly erroneous when the record contains no testimony of the latter value.

Vanarsdol v Farlow, 200-495; 203 NW 794

Submitting earning capacity of child. Elements of damage not sustained by evidence should not be submitted, which applies to the earning capacity of a 10-year-old school girl in the absence of supporting evidence, but, in the instant case, the error was harmless, as the jury's possibility of considering such element was very remote.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Fatal contradiction. An instruction which directs the jury, (1) to determine the value of land solely on the testimony introduced, and (2) to determine said value in the light of "your experience and knowledge concerning such valuation", is fundamentally erroneous, (1) because authorizing the jurors to become silent witnesses in the case, and (2) because of the fatal contradiction therein contained.

Hoelt v State, 221-694; 266 NW 571; 104 ALR 1008

Damages limited by evidence. Instructions which permit the jury to find damages in the form of profits lost, without limiting such findings "as shown by the evidence", are prejudicially erroneous.

Smith v Standard Oil, 218-709; 255 NW 674

Direct damages only recoverable. It is mandatory on the court to instruct that damages recoverable because of a defendant's negligence are limited to those damages which the evidence shows directly resulted from such negligence.

Schelldorf v Cherry, 220-1101; 264 NW 54

Exemplary damages—malice as essential basis. The submission of the question of exemplary damages, without supporting evidence of malice, is prejudicially erroneous. (See also under §11216.)

Sokolowske v Wilson, 211-1112; 235 NW 80

Nonapplicability to pleading or evidence. Reversible error results from instructing a jury that plaintiff, in an action against a city for damages consequent on a defect in a sidewalk, need not show that the city had actual knowledge of the defect if the defect resulted from the original defective construction of the walk, when neither pleading nor evidence presented such issue.

Ritter v City, 212-564; 234 NW 814

Unsafe place in partially opened street. Reversible error results from submitting whether a city was negligent in not filling depressions and tamping soft places in a street (1) when, owing to an unusual unfitness of the street for travel, the city had opened it only to the extent of a narrow roadway and there is no evidence that the failure to fill and tamp said opened roadway was the cause of the injury and (2) when, under the evidence, the injury may have occurred at a place in the street where the city was under no duty to fill and tamp—at a place which the city had never assumed to put in condition for use.

McKeehan v City, 213-1351; 242 NW 42

Submission of pleaded but unsupported amount. In condemnation proceeding for highway purposes, instruction that verdict could not be more than the amount claimed in petition which was over $5,000 whereas the plaintiff's witnesses fixed damage at $4,455, was not prejudicial, since verdict was for only $2,000.

Stoner v Hy. Comm., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Undue burden—estoppel. A litigant may not claim that instructions place an undue burden upon him when the instructions are strictly in harmony with his pleadings and evidence.

Nigut v Hill, 200-748; 205 NW 312

Belated and unsupported amendment. It is doubly erroneous for the court, after argument has closed, (1) to permit an amendment assigning a new ground of negligence which is without support in the evidence, and (2) to submit such alleged negligence to the jury.

Peckinpaugh v Engelke, 215-1248; 247 NW 822

Emergency as legal excuse—evidentiary support. Question of emergency as being legal excuse should not be submitted to the jury without competent evidence to support it.

III APPLICABILITY TO PLEADINGS AND EVIDENCE—concluded

(b) APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE—concluded

Held, instruction amply supported in instant case.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Sustaining verdict for either party. Where, under proper instructions and supporting testimony, the jury may properly find for either party, the supreme court will not disturb the verdict.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6; 3 NCCA (NS) 184

Photographs—essentials for admission. Within the sound discretion of the court, a photograph is admissible in evidence when taken under conditions similar to those material to the inquiry to which it relates, and an instruction may call the jury's attention to the difference in lighting conditions at time an injury occurred, and at the time the picture was taken.

Riggs v Pan-American Co., 225-1051; 283 NW 250

In re "inevitable accident". Instructions with reference to an "inevitable" accident and defendant's nonliability therefor are wholly out of place when there is no applicable evidence in the record.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

(c) ABSTRACT INSTRUCTIONS

Abstract statements of law. The inclusion in instructions of abstract statements of the law does not necessarily constitute material error.

Birmingham Bank v Keller, 205-271; 215 NW 649

IV CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION

Reasonable construction of phraseology. Phraseology of instructions must receive, not a strained or forced construction, but a reasonable construction, in view of all the circumstances.

Henriott v Main, 225-20; 279 NW 110

Construction of single instruction. An instruction which contains a statement which, standing alone, would be incorrect may be rendered perfectly proper by a subsequent limiting statement in the same instruction.

Blakely v Cabelka, 203-5; 212 NW 348
Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352

Construction as a whole. Instructions are all-sufficient if, when construed as a whole, they fairly present the issues to the jury.

Cuthbertson v Hoffa, 205-666; 216 NW 733
Cox v Const. Co., 208-458; 223 NW 521

Complete as a whole. It is not required that each and every paragraph of instructions be complete in itself. They are all-sufficient if they are complete as a whole.

Elmore v Railway, 207-862; 224 NW 28
Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352

Construction as a whole—technical errors inconsequential. Technical errors, in single paragraphs of instructions, which lose any prejudicial significance when the instructions are construed as a whole, will not justify a reversal.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Instructions construed as a whole. Instructions will be considered in their entirety.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

Instructions construed together when reviewed. Supreme court in construing an instruction will consider the other instructions given.

Tallmon v Larson, 226-564; 284 NW 367

Confusing instructions not cured. An instruction may be so manifestly erroneous and confusing as to be incurable under the rule that the instructions must be construed as a whole.

McAdams v Railway, 200-732; 205 NW 310

Error cured by instructions as a whole. Different instructions may, when construed together, so fairly present the real issue to the jury as to cure a material inaccuracy which exists in one of the instructions when viewed by itself.

Dahna v Fun House, 204-922; 216 NW 262

Omitting reference to defendant's omission to act. An instruction that the jury, in determining an issue of negligence, should take into consideration "what the defendant did", need not be accompanied by any instruction for the jury to consider what the defendant omitted to do, when the jury is fully instructed to consider all the facts and circumstances bearing on the issue.

Leete v Hays, 211-379; 233 NW 481

Negligence directly contributing to injury. Instructions are correct which, as a whole, direct the jury that plaintiff must show that he did not by any negligence on his part directly contribute in any degree to his injury, even tho one of the instructions does not carry the limiting clause, "in any degree".

O'Hara v Chaplin, 211-404; 233 NW 516

Covering different elements in separate instructions. An instruction relative to a master's plea of assumption of risk by his servant will not be deemed to deprive the master of his plea of contributory negligence on the part of the servant when the latter element is correctly covered by a separate instruction.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229

Correct as a whole. On defendant's issue that plaintiff was working on an agreed salary and not on quantum meruit, as contended by plaintiff, the court commits no error against defendant by instructing, in effect, that if plaintiff in cashing checks did not know, as the memorandum thereon indicated, that they were tendered in full payment to date, then such checks might be treated as payment on account, the other instructions fully protecting the defendant.

Olson v Shuler, 208-70; 221 NW 941

Inaccurate use of words corrected. The inaccurate use of a word or term in one instruction may wholly disappear when the instructions are viewed as a whole. So held as to the terms "value" and "fair and reasonable market value".

Hoeft v State, 221-694; 266 NW 571; 104 ALR 1008

"Assault" admitted in pleadings—use of term permitted. In an action for damages in which the defendant's answer admitted an assault and battery but attempted to justify the act, he could not complain that the court, in its statement of the issues, said that he admitted the assault, as the word "assault" did not admit all that the plaintiff contended, but only the same act upon which the action was based.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Presumption that jury obeyed. It will be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, that the jury obeyed an explicit instruction not to allow on an item of damages more than was claimed by plaintiff.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Separating personal injury damage claims. Instructions limiting the amount of total recovery which could be allowed the plaintiff, but not advising how much was claimed for pain and suffering and for permanent disability, were erroneous, and, being erroneous, prejudice is presumed unless the record is such as to overcome the presumption.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Assault and battery—excessive force used to eject—instructions limiting recovery. When the jury was told that if it found that the defendant used more force than was reasonably necessary to eject the plaintiff from his home, they must find the defendant liable for the injuries caused by the excessive force, the instructions, when considered as a whole, were not subject to the objection that the right of recovery was not limited in the event that the injuries were due to the excessive force.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Compensation in eminent domain—abutting tract. In a condemnation action where an 80-acre tract abutting and farmed in connection with, but only partly owned by the owner of the farm involved in condemnation, an instruction that no damage to the abutting 80 acres could be assessed, but that the jury could consider the farming control advantage of the two tracts, while not approved, held not prejudicial.

Cutler v State, 224-686; 278 NW 327

V QUESTIONS PRESENTABLE BY INSTRUCTIONS

Validity of release—avoidance for fraud—burden of proof. The burden of proof to avoid a written release of damages, on the ground that said release was obtained by fraud, rests on the party who alleges the fraud. Instructions reviewed and held adequately to impose such burden in substance tho not in words, assuming ordinary intelligence on the part of the jury.

Engle v Ungles, 223-780; 273 NW 879

VI CURING ERROR BY ORAL OR WRITTEN INSTRUCTIONS

(a) IN RE MISCONDUCT OR ERROR GENERALLY

Conduct of counsel in argument. A reference in argument to the corporate capacity of one of the parties to the action tho manifestly improper may not be reversible error when objection is promptly sustained, when the error is not repeated, and when the jury is promptly instructed to wholly disregard the reference.

Henriksen v Stages, Inc., 216-643; 246 NW 913

Misleading statement of fact cured by clearly stated issues. The erroneous insertion into the court's preliminary statement of the issues, of a statement (copied from the pleadings) which conceivably might confuse and mislead the jury, may be quite fully effaced by the subsequent very concise statement of the real issues.

Forrest v Sovereign Camp, 220-478; 261 NW 802

Arguments and conduct of counsel—curing error by instruction. Argument and ruling thereon briefly reviewed and held to reveal no error, but, if error, that the same was effectively cured by an instruction to disregard the matter referred to by counsel.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exc., 221-1382; 268 NW 155

Improper argument cured by instructions. A quite pointed and positive instruction to the jury to the effect that it must take and act solely on the law given by the court, cures, ordinarily, any error of counsel in argument in asserting what is the applicable law of the case.

Wolfson v Lumber Co., 210-244; 227 NW 608

Curing error in argument. An oral admonition by the court to the jury, during argument

(a) IN RE MISCONDUCT OR ERROR GENERALLY—concluded

not to consider a certain statement by counsel, ordinarily cures any error resulting from the making of the statement.

Stingley v Crawford, 219-509; 258 NW 316
West Branch Bank v Farmers Exc., 221-1382; 268 NW 155

Curing error. Error consequent on improper argument is ordinarily cured or negated by a ruling striking the improper remarks and directing the jury to disregard them.

State v Dobry, 217-858; 250 NW 702

Curing error by remittitur.

Shockley v Davis Co., 200-1094; 205 NW 966
Starry v Hanold, 202-1180; 211 NW 696
In re Anderson, 203-985; 213 NW 567
In re Willmott, 215-546; 243 NW 634

Remittitur of nonrecoverable damages. Error in including nonrecoverable damages in a verdict is not cured by the subsequent filing of a remittitur in a named sum, when the instructions are framed in such form that no one can determine what amount the jury allowed for nonrecoverable damages.

Gardner v Boland, 209-362; 227 NW 902
See Cocklin v Ins. Assn., 207-4; 222 NW 368

Subjects of damages—elements in mental anguish—curing by remittitur. Humiliation and mortification being included in mental anguish, an instruction in an assault and battery case allowing one recovery for mental anguish and another recovery for humiliation and mortification is erroneous as allowing for double damages for the element of mental anguish; however, the defect is cured by requiring the plaintiff to remit the entire amount allowed for humiliation and mortification.

Hauser v Boever, 225-1; 279 NW 137

Remittitur—entry on combination docket—effect. The indorsement and signing on the combination docket of the court of a remittitur constitutes a “filing” of a remittitur within the meaning of a court order to the effect that a new trial would automatically follow the failure “to file” such remittitur.

Fox v McCurnin, 210-429; 228 NW 582

Striking supported issue. Error in striking, at the close of all the evidence, an adequate and supported allegation of negligence, is cured by adequately submitting the issue notwithstanding the striking order.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Contributory negligence—incurable error. An instruction which summarizes all the elements that plaintiff must prove to make a case, and directs the jury that if these elements and conditions existed, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, is fatally defective when no reference whatever is made to plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. And, in such case, the error is not cured by the fact that in other instructions the jury is instructed that plaintiff must be free from contributory negligence.

Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Error cured by verdict. Instructions which, in stating the issues, give the plaintiff a chance for a recovery to which he was not entitled are harmless when the jury finds that plaintiff was not entitled to recover in any event.

Ferber v Ry. Co., 205-291; 217 NW 880

Inaccurate remark by court cured by instructions. A remark by the court in the presence of the jury and during the argument as to the issues involved, even tho somewhat inaccurate, is rendered inconsequential by the subsequent giving of full and explicit instructions as to the issues.

State v Heeron, 208-1151; 226 NW 30

Unpleaded element of damages. The submission of a nonpleaded element of damages is erroneous, but the error will be cured by deducting from the amount of the verdict the highest amount which the jury could have allowed, under the record, on such element.

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177

Undue burden. An error in imposing an undue burden on a litigant may become inconsequential in view of the record and in view of the fact that the instruction is unduly favorable to complainant.

Ryan v Cooper, 201-220; 205 NW 302

Curing error in later instruction. Error in failing, in one instruction, to impose on plaintiff the necessity of proving a certain all-essential fact, before he will be entitled to a verdict, may be wholly effaced by other instructions which definitely supply the former erroneous omission.

Foy v Metropolitan Life, 220-628; 263 NW 14

Estoppel to question. A party may not question an instruction which gives him a chance for a verdict to which he is not entitled; and especially when such instruction was not excepted to in the trial court.

Granette v Neumann, 208-24; 221 NW 197
Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442

(b) IN RE RECEIPT OF TESTIMONY

Assignment of error. Error, if any, of the court, during the trial, in striking evidence or tendered issues cannot be reached by an assignment of error to the effect that the court erred in failing to instruct on said stricken matters. The assignment must be on the original alleged erroneous striking of said matters.

Reidy v Railway, 220-1386; 258 NW 675

Improper admission of testimony. An error in the reception of testimony is cured by instructions which protect the adverse party from an unauthorized recovery.

Tabler v Evans, 202-1386; 212 NW 161

Improper reception of conclusions. Error in receiving in evidence the improper conclusions of a witness may be cured by striking the same from the record and by specifically cautioning the jurors to wholly disregard the same.

State v Folger, 204-1296; 210 NW 580

McKee v Iowa Co., 204-44; 214 NW 564

Withdrawal of incompetent evidence. Error in receiving incompetent testimony which is not inherently prejudicial is rendered harmless by the subsequent withdrawal of such testimony by the court, and by the court's admonition to the jury to disregard it.

McDonald v Robinson, 207-1293; 224 NW 820; 62 ALR 1419

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

Evidence res inter alios. Evidence res inter alios will ordinarily be regarded as harmless when the court specifically directs the jury to disregard it.

Olson v Shuler, 203-518; 210 NW 453

Oral admonitions. The oral admonition of the court to the jury not to consider withdrawn testimony, and the giving of later pointed instructions to the same effect, are quite effective in removing and curing any error in the original reception of the testimony.

Dewey v Ins. Co., 218-1220; 257 NW 308

Striking evidence—jury admonition—curing error. If evidence, erroneously admitted during the progress of a trial, is distinctly withdrawn by the court, the error is cured, except where it is manifest that the prejudicial effect on the jury remained despite its exclusion. Testimony by a handwriting expert, who referred to notes, which were merely the basis or reason for his opinion as to the genuineness of signatures to a will, held not within the exception.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 230 NW 579

Error in admission of evidence cured by instructions. In an action on a note given by the defendant for the purchase of lands under partition, any error in allowing the referee to testify that he did not recollect sending to the plaintiff any money received, was cured by instructions that payment to the referee would relieve the defendant from liability on the notes.

Ballard v Ballard, 226-699; 285 NW 165

Unsupported instruction—error cured by limitation. An instruction without evidence to support it may be so guarded as to remove all prejudicial error.

Ferber v Ry. Co., 205-291; 217 NW 880

Improper evidence excluded by proper submission. In an action for damages resulting solely from the "inconvenience and discomfort in the occupancy and enjoyment of property" because of a nuisance, evidence tending to show that the nuisance was unsanitary and might be injurious to health, becomes harmless when the court submits the issues strictly in accordance with the pleadings.

Chase v City, 203-1361; 214 NW 591; 37 NCCA 228

Error cured by testimony. A party's admissions and testimony may render an inaccurate instruction quite harmless.

Heflen v Brown, 203-325; 223 NW 763

Error cured by testimony. Where an indorser of a promissory note pleaded an estoppel as consisting (1) of a mere promise by the payee to collect the note from the maker and a prior indorser, and (2) of a later statement by the payee that the note had been paid, the submission of said pleaded promise in one instruction, and of said statement as to payment in another instruction, thereby inferentially indicating that there were two estoppels, will not be deemed reversible error when the record reveals the fact that the maker and prior indorser both remained solvent up to and after the statement as to payment was made.

Birmingham Sav. Bank v Keller, 205-271; 215 NW 649; 217 NW 874

Error cured by jury finding. On the issue whether total disability resulted "immediately" upon the occurrence of an accident, an instruction that "immediate" means "within twenty-four hours" is harmless (even tho it be conceded to be erroneous) when the jury has found on clearly supporting testimony that the disability was total from the very day of the accident.

Harrington v Sur. Co., 206-925; 221 NW 577

Erroneous instruction cured by verdict. The erroneous exclusion of testimony bearing on damages suffered by a party, or the giving of an erroneous instruction relative to proof of sole ownership of the injured property, is quite harmless when it is manifest that the jury found that the party in question was not entitled to recover in any event, because of his own negligence.

Wiley v Dobbins, 204-174; 214 NW 529; 62 ALR 432

VII LAW OF CASE

Inapplicable instructions. Instructions relative to a rule of law which is inapplicable to the facts of the case should not be given.

Hamilton v Boyd, 218-885; 256 NW 290

Misconduct of jury—disregarding instructions. It is the duty of the jury to follow the instructions of the court, and where it clearly appears that the jury, in arriving at its verdict, disregarded the instructions, a new trial must be granted.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

Disregard of instruction. Record reviewed, and held insufficient to show that the jury disregarded the instruction in question.

Love v Railway, 207-1278; 224 NW 815

Disregard of instructions. An instruction to the effect that no damage for the flooding of land could be recovered if such damages resulted partly from the wrongful act of the defendant in erecting an embankment and partly from the natural overflow of a natural stream, constitutes the law of the case, and a verdict for the plaintiff must be set aside if the evidence conclusively shows that the damages were caused in part by the natural overflow of the stream.

Pfannebecker v Railway, 208-752; 226 NW 161

Instructions as law of case—disregard of. A clear disregard by the jury of instructions—the law of the case whether they be right or wrong—necessitates a disregard by the court of the verdict returned. So held where a verdict was returned for plaintiff under instructions which rendered such a verdict legally impossible.

In re Stevens, 223-369; 272 NW 426

Verdict contrary to instructions—verdict illegal—setting aside. Where the court instructs the jury to base their verdict solely on the evidence and, guided by the instructions, to arrive at the very truth of the matter and base their conclusions solely on evidence and instructions and not to indulge in speculations or conjectures, and at hearing on motion for new trial it is shown that it was agreed in advance that the jury would be bound by a majority vote, such verdict was illegal and it was the duty of the court to set the verdict aside.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

Unexcepted instructions. If there be no exceptions to instructions, the verdict is final if it has support in the evidence. In such case no inquiry can be made whether the instructions are right or wrong.

Commer. Credit v Hazel, 214-213; 242 NW 47

11495 Exceptions to instructions.

ANALYSIS

- I FORMER STATUTE RULE
- II NECESSITY FOR EXCEPTIONS
- III SUFFICIENCY OF EXCEPTIONS
- IV TIMELY EXCEPTIONS

Instructions in criminal cases. See under §13876
Motion for new trial. See under §11551

I FORMER STATUTE RULE

Failure to enter exceptions. Failure to enter exceptions to instructions before argument to the jury (statute now repealed) precludes review on appeal.

Beardmore v New Albin, 203-721; 211 NW 430

II NECESSITY FOR EXCEPTIONS

Failure to except. Failure to except to an instruction which submits an unsupported issue is fatal to the right of review on appeal.

Lange v Bedell, 203-1194; 212 NW 354
Chase v City, 203-1361; 214 NW 591
First Bank v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767
State v Dunham, 206-354; 220 NW 77
Southall v Berry, 207-605; 223 NW 480
State v Bamsey, 208-796; 223 NW 873
State v Bourgeois, 210-1129; 229 NW 231
State v Phillips, 212-1332; 236 NW 104
Wood v Branning, 215-59; 244 NW 658

Failure to present defect. The objection that an instruction withdrew from the jury matter which bore on the credibility of a witness is waived if not specifically raised in the trial court in the exceptions to the instructions.

Conner v Henry, 205-95; 215 NW 506

Estoppel to question. A party may not question an instruction which gives him a chance for a verdict to which he is not entitled; and especially when such instruction was not excepted to in the trial court.

Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442

Instructions unexcepted to as law of case. If there be no exceptions to instructions, the verdict is final if it has support in the evidence. In such case no inquiry can be made as to whether the instructions are right or wrong.

Commer. Credit v Hazel, 214-213; 242 NW 47

Incomplete record—instructions—presumed correct. Where the record on appeal does not contain all the instructions necessary to determine the questions raised, the supreme court must presume their correctness.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6

Law of case—guest—evidence—sufficiency. An instruction to the effect that claimant under the "guest statute" in order to recover must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that his decedent was a guest, when unobjected to and not appealed from, remains the law of the case, and evidence that automobile trip, like similar prior trips, with operator as host to friends for purpose of attending a school function, was sufficient to sustain jury finding that passenger was a "guest".

Claussen v Johnson's Estate, 224-990; 278 NW 297

Verdict contrary to evidence—preserving question in lower court—no review if first raised on appeal. In an action to establish a claim against an estate for serum, virus, and veterinary supplies furnished to decedent over a term of eight years, argument on appeal that the verdict denying the claim was contrary to the evidence and should be set aside, cannot be considered when not raised by appropriate procedure in the lower court.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Question first raised on appeal. Questions as to possible errors of the trial court, not properly raised by motion for directed verdict, nor by request for instructions, nor by exceptions to instructions, cannot be considered on appeal.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

III SUFFICIENCY OF EXCEPTIONS

Exceptions—sufficiency. Exceptions to instructions must specifically and definitely point out the error complained of, and no others will be considered.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33
State v Grigsby, 204-1133; 216 NW 678
Duncan v Rhomborg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Indefinite exceptions. Objections to instructions will be disregarded unless they specify the part of the instruction objected to and the grounds of the objection.

State v Burch, 202-348; 209 NW 474
State v Derry, 202-352; 209 NW 514
Farwark v Railway, 202-1229; 211 NW 875
State v Dillard, 207-831; 221 NW 817

Fatal indefiniteness. Exceptions to instructions on ground that they are incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial and contrary to law and prejudicial, are not sufficiently specific.

Hackley v Robinson, (NOR); 219 NW 398

Failure to specify grounds. An exception to an instruction must specify the grounds of such exception. This requirement is in no degree complied with by simply referring to the instruction by number and by asserting that "the court erred" in refusing to give it.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229

Grounds for exception not stated—nonreviewability. No error may be predicated on rejected proposed instructions when the grounds for the exceptions to the court's ruling are not specified.

Thomas v Charter, 224-1278; 278 NW 920

Fatal indefiniteness. An exception to the effect that instructions "are contrary to the law", or "do not clearly state the rules of law applicable to this case" presents no question to either the trial or appellate court.

State v Shearer, 206-397; 220 NW 13
Bodholdt v Townsend, 208-1350; 227 NW 404

Inadequate exceptions. Plaintiff who fails, in his exceptions to a charge as given, to point out the fact that the court has omitted a certain element of his cause of action does not raise such point by a general exception to the refusal to give a requested instruction which, inter alia, does embrace such omission.

Whitmore v Herrick, 205-621; 218 NW 334

Failure to obtain ruling. The filing of exceptions to instructions and a motion for a new trial, after the entry of judgment on the verdict, is rendered wholly abortive by the failure to call the exceptions or the motion to the attention of the court, and to obtain a ruling thereon.

Linn v Kendall, 213-33; 238 NW 547

Naked exception to refusal to give. The mere entry of a naked, unelaborated exception to the failure to give a requested instruction presents no question either to the trial or appellate court, even tho counsel argues certain grounds on appeal.

Humphrey v Muscatine, 217-795; 253 NW 57

Fatal generality. The general assertion that "The court erred in giving instruction No. 2 to the jury" is, in legal effect, no exception whatever, and presents no question to the court.

Iowa Corp. v Credit Co., 217-1243; 253 NW 23

IV TIMELY EXCEPTIONS

Belated exceptions without authorizing order. When no extension of time in which to file exceptions to instructions appears of record, the appellant may not supply such essential record by the simple expedient of alleging in his abstract that his exceptions were filed "within the time fixed by the court."

State v Ivey, 200-649; 203 NW 38

Belated filing. A motion for new trial and objections to instructions will be ignored on appeal when filed after the time fixed by the court.

Lein v Morrell & Co., 207-1271; 224 NW 576

Belated exceptions disregarded. Exceptions to instructions in criminal cases must be made within the time provided by law or they will be disregarded.

State v Kirkpatrick, 220-974; 263 NW 52

Belated motion for new trial. A motion for new trial and exceptions to instructions filed 16 days after verdict, where no extension is secured, are filed too late, and questions raised therein cannot be considered on appeal. In such case when extension of time has been granted, such fact should be shown in abstract.

Roggensack v Ahlstrom, (NOR); 209 NW 429

Nongermane amendment. An amendment to an exception to an instruction will not be considered when not filed within the time fixed by the statute or the court, and when said amendment is not germane to the original exception.

In re Dvorak, 213-250; 236 NW 66

11496 View of premises.

Unauthorized view of premises. It is reversible error for a juror on his own motion to visit the scene of an accident and to make estimates of the ability of witnesses to see the accident as they had testified, and otherwise to make measurements in order to determine how the accident happened.

Skinner v Cron, 206-338; 220 NW 341

Juror visiting accident location—misconduct not shown. It is not misconduct for a juror to stop at a gasoline station near the scene of the accident in litigation, when there is no evidence that he discussed with other jurors what he saw there.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

View of premises—instructions. Instructions relative to the purpose for which the jury had been permitted to view the scene of an accident reviewed, and held neither contradictory nor inconsistent.

Sloan v City, 205-823; 218 NW 301

Exhibiting wounds to jury. During the final arguments in a personal injury case, the court may permit the plaintiff to seat himself alongside the jury in order that the jury may have a close-up view of wounds which, during the taking of testimony have been fully described and exhibited to the jurors while some of them were 20 feet from the witnesses.

Mizner v Lohr, 213-1182; 238 NW 584

View and inspection of object in controversy. It is proper to permit a jury, under proper supervision, to view and inspect an object which is the subject of the action, e. g., a monument.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

View of object by jurors—instructions. Principle reaffirmed that when jurors are permitted to view an object which is the subject of the action, they must be instructed that they must base their verdict solely on the evidence received judged in the light of their observation of the object.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144

11497 Rules as to jury—deliberation—kept together.

Coercion of jury. Requiring the jury in a civil case to continue their deliberations for a period of some 46 hours, including two nights, reveals no abuse of discretion on the part of the court.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exch., 221-1382; 268 NW 155

Custody of jury—bailiff's witticism not prejudicial. Bailiff's remark that jury might be kept for 30 days before the court would accept a verdict that they had "agreed to disagree" is not prejudicial when the jury themselves treated the remark as a joke.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

Unauthorized communication with jurors. Statements by a bailiff to jurors to the effect that they must remain in session until they had agreed on a verdict, coupled with the refusal by the bailiff either to conduct the jury to the court, or to deliver any message to the court, constitute such misconduct as to require the granting of a new trial, it appearing that said conduct had such controlling and coercive influence on certain jurors as caused them to change their views as to the merits of the case.

State v Terpstra, 206-408; 220 NW 357

Juror advocating his belief—not misconduct. It is neither misconduct nor ground for new trial for a juror to advocate his conclusions in the jury room, even tho he emphatically and persistently favors one party or the other.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

Jurors substituting own knowledge for evidence—effect. In an action for injuries resulting from a collision on a bridge between a truck and an automobile, where the record discloses that one juror injected into the discussion her own observation of the fast-driving habits of the motorist with whom plaintiff was riding, and where other jurors at the scene of the accident noticed and commented on the fact that most drivers, in rounding the same curve where plaintiff approached the scene of the accident, were across the center of the highway, when coupled with the short time taken to arrive at a verdict in view of the voluminous evidence, held no abuse of discretion in granting a new trial.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-1138; 281 NW 790

Juror's affidavit of conduct while deliberating—effect. Verdicts and trials cannot be destroyed ordinarily by an affidavit of a juror as to what took place during deliberations in the jury room.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Juror visiting accident location—misconduct not shown. It is not misconduct for a juror to stop at a gasoline station near the scene of the accident in litigation, when there is no evidence that he discussed with other jurors what he saw there.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

Appellant's jury examination inducing insurance discussion—review. Jury room discussion of liability insurance suggested by plaintiff's examination of the jurors is not misconduct of which plaintiff can complain.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

11499 Discharge of juror.

Illness of juror—held nonprejudicial. Evidence held to show that illness of a juror was not prejudicial to defendants.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

11500 Discharge of jury.

Deliberations of jury—coercion of. Requiring the jury in a civil case to continue their deliberations for a period of some 46 hours, including two nights, reveals no abuse of discretion on the part of the court.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exch., 221-1382; 268 NW 155

11503 What jury may take with them.

Use of unauthorized evidence. Prejudicial error results from permitting a jury to take with them to their jury room and to consider the entire sheet of a letter when only the signature thereon was introduced in evidence, and when the unIntroduced matter is materially prejudicial to complainant.

In re Merrill, 202-837; 211 NW 361

Improper reception—effect. The improper reception in evidence of a written notice to an accused to produce a written instrument or to submit to secondary evidence of its contents, and the possession of such notice by the jury, do not necessarily work prejudicial error.

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Failure to send exhibit to jury room. The fact that a duly introduced exhibit in a criminal case was not given to the jury when it first retired, but was sent to the jury some hours before the verdict was returned, reveals no prejudicial error; especially when the contents of the exhibit were fully revealed to the jury by both parties during the arguments.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

Taking plat to jury room. The court may permit a plat of the scene of an accident to be taken by the jury upon its retirement when the plat contains nothing that could mislead or prejudice the jury.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

11505 Further testimony to correct mistake.

Order of proof. See under §11485

Reopening cause. The court may at the close of plaintiff's testimony, and in the exercise of a fair discretion, reopen the case and permit a witness to be recalled for further examination.

State v Andrioli, 216-451; 249 NW 379

Reopening case. The trial court has a large discretion in reopening a cause for the reception of additional testimony.

Fair v Ida Co., 204-1046; 216 NW 952
Seeger v Manifold, 210-683; 231 NW 479
Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403
State v Andrioli, 216-451; 249 NW 379
Shultz v Shultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562

Discretion in reopening—new trial for abuse. Granting or refusing a motion to reopen a case to admit further evidence is within the sound discretion of the court, but if a refusal to reopen is an abuse of discretion, a new trial should be granted on appeal.

In re Canterbury, 224-1080; 278 NW 210

Refusal to open for omitted testimony. The refusal of the court to open a cause, after submission, in order to receive omitted testimony will not be disturbed except on a showing that the court abused its discretion.

In re Fetterman, 207-252; 222 NW 872

Unjustifiable refusal to reopen case. A cause should be reopened for the reception of additional testimony which the court has throughout the trial held unnecessary, but on account of the absence of which the court finally renders judgment against the party who was under a duty to produce such testimony.

Simpson College v Executors, 203-447; 212 NW 684

Refusal to reopen—when error. Refusal to open up a cause in order that a party to the action may be cross examined as to highly material documentary evidence in order to lay the foundation for impeachment, is reversible error when the party asking for such reopening has been persistently diligent to discover the whereabouts of such documents, and was successful only during the evening following the resting by both parties and prior to the convening of court on the next day, at which latter time the application to reopen the case was made.

Schipfer v Stone, 206-328; 218 NW 568

Wills—construction — identifying legatee — reopening for widow's testimony. In an action to construe a will to determine which of two similarly named churches the testator intended to designate as a beneficiary, the evidence being closed when discovery is made that testator's widow, though present in court but not testifying, had knowledge as to which church was intended to be designated, the trial court abuses its discretion by refusing to reopen to admit her testimony.

In re Canterbury, 224-1080; 278 NW 210

Final submission to court. When defendant's motion for a directed verdict in his favor on plaintiff's evidence is argued and submitted to the court, and the court orally and by appropriate entry on the docket sustains said motion, it is too late for plaintiff to assert that there has been no final submission of the action to the court. It necessarily follows, under such circumstances, that plaintiff has lost his right to voluntarily dismiss his action without prejudice.

Marion v Ins. Assn., 205-1300; 217 NW 803

Setting aside for retrial on new theory. After a cause has been fully tried on the theory that intervenors are entitled to recover from plaintiff the amount for which their property had been sold on execution by the sheriff, and after the resulting judgment has been entered and paid, and the proceeds accepted by intervenors, it is quite too late to reopen the case and try it anew on the theory that intervenors are entitled to recover the reasonable value of the property so sold.

 Directed verdicts, criminal cases. See under §13915
 Directing verdict as new trial ground. See under §11550
 Motor vehicle cases. See under §5037.09

I SUFFICIENCY IN GENERAL

Noninconsistent verdict. A verdict against two of three defendants may not be said to be inconsistent with itself when the record reveals the fact that the testimony against the exonerated defendant was less persuasive than that against the other two defendants.

Pullan v Struthers, 201-709; 207 NW 794

Construction in light of record. The certain and unmistakable data furnished by the trial record may quite clearly point out the intention of a jury in returning a somewhat indefinite verdict.

Reinertson v Struthers, 201-1186; 207 NW 247

Inferences drawn from record. The trier of facts is entitled to draw such legitimate inferences as the record will warrant.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Conflicting evidence—conclusiveness of verdict. A jury verdict on competent but conflicting testimony, relative to the consideration, if any, for a chattel mortgage, is conclusive on the appellate court.

McDonald v Webb, 222-1402; 271 NW 521

Verdict sustainable for either party—finality on appeal. Where, under proper instructions and supporting testimony, the jury may properly find for either party, the supreme court will not disturb the verdict.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6; 3 NCCA (NS) 184

Jury verdict—reasonable minds differing—finality. If testimony and a fact question exist upon which reasonable minds may fairly differ, the supreme court will not review the result reached by the jury.

Finley v Lowden, 224-999; 277 NW 487

Responsive to issues—sufficiency. A verdict, in an action on promissory notes, for "$5,000 and interest dollars" is all-sufficient to authorize the court to compute the interest, add it to the principal, and enter judgment accordingly.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 213-969; 236 NW 418; 36 NCCA 205

Nonexcessive damages—death of 54-year-old WPA carpenter. Verdict for $21,886.50 to a 54-year-old WPA carpenter who was crushed beneath a descending elevator, and who lived thereafter for 14 months in excruciating pain and suffering, which verdict was reduced by the trial court to $15,000, held not excessive nor the result of passion and prejudice.

Andrews v Y. M. C. A., 226-374; 234 NW 186

Speculative verdict for damages. A verdict for damages consequent on the death from congestion of the lungs of stock during shipment will not be permitted to stand when, on the record, the cause of said congestion can be equally attributed either (1) to the act of the shipper in unduly exerting the hogs prior to the complete loading of the stock, or (2) to the rough handling of the train while the stock was being transported.

Wiederin v Railway, 212-1103; 237 NW 344

Causal connection with injury—conjecture and speculation. There must be causal connection between an injury caused by falling from a fire escape because of an alleged defect in the top step. When the allegation is not substantiated by the evidence, any more than by the plaintiff's testimony, stating that "something moved", that he "caught his heel on the step", it would be mere conjecture and speculation to base a verdict thereon, and verdicts must rest on something more substantial.

Gowing v Field Co., 225-729; 281 NW 281

Railway viaduct—injuries—burden of proof—causal negligence. Plaintiff has the burden to show wherein a railway was negligent in maintaining a viaduct crossing, since jury's verdict may not rest upon surmise, speculation, or guess, and this burden is not met when plaintiff fails to show that injuries received from being thrown against top of car while going over viaduct were caused by a condition of the viaduct resulting from negligence.

Harris v Railway, 224-1319; 278 NW 338

Cause of death—undue burden to establish. Expert medical opinions that an insured died from an intra-cranial, fatty embolus resulting from an external, violent and accidentally suffered injury, met by the same class of expert opinions positively to the contrary, may generate a jury question, determinable by the jury, like any other disputed question of fact, on the preponderance of testimony, the facts on which such conflicting, expert opinions are based being of such nature that the jurors could not therefrom deduce a proper opinion. So held where the court erroneously instructed that "No mere weight of evidence is sufficient to establish the cause of assured's death unless it excludes every other reasonable hypothesis as to the cause of death"—in effect requiring the theory of death by means of an embolus to be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

Aldine Trust v Acc. Assn., 222-20; 268 NW 507

Action for causing death—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence as to the cause of death reviewed and held ample to support the verdict.

Groves v Webster City, 222-849; 270 NW 329

Double recovery. The submission to the jury of duplicate counts—counts praying recovery on the same elements of damages—and permitting recovery on both such counts is clearly erroneous.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144

Unallowable verdicts. In a joint action for damages against the driver and owner of an automobile, based, as to the driver, on his negligence, and as to the owner, on his consent to the driving (as to which consent the proof is substantially conclusive), there cannot legally be separate verdicts, one holding the driver liable, and one holding the owner nonliable.

Hoqver v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Verdict sustaining part of gift as establishing mental competency. In a replevin action by executor to recover property held under claim of gift inter vivos from decedent, a jury verdict validating part of the gift made on a later date, from which part of the verdict no appeal is taken, also establishes the donor's mental competency to consummate that part of the gift made on an earlier date.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

II QUOTIENT VERDICTS

Nonquotient verdict. The executed agreement of the jurors to each vote the amount of damages to be allowed, and to divide the sum total by twelve, with no agreement to be bound by the result, followed by further fair and open discussion, and the return of a verdict accordingly, does not constitute a quotient verdict.

Peak v Rhyno, 200-864; 205 NW 515

Conflicting evidence. A finding by the trial court on conflicting evidence that a verdict was a quotient verdict, and the entry of an

II QUOTIENT VERDICTS—concluded order for a new trial, will not be disturbed on appeal.

Thornton v Boggs, 213-849; 239 NW 514

Insufficient evidence. The fact that a verdict is less than the amount authorized under instruction is not in itself evidence that it is a quotient or compromise verdict, or that it is result of passion or prejudice.

Jackson v Kubias, (NOR); 211 NW 245

III CORRECTION BY COURT

Unallowable reduction by court. The court has no power to reduce the verdict of a jury in an action for unliquidated damages, and to render judgment for a less amount, unless the party in whose favor the verdict was rendered consents to such reduction.

Crawford v Emerson Co., 222-378; 269 NW 334

Reckless operation of automobile—unsustainable verdict. A verdict finding, in effect, that defendant (with whom a guest was riding) was operating his automobile in a reckless manner cannot be sustained when the testimony tending to establish recklessness, when tested in the light of the admitted physical facts and verities revealed in the record, cannot be true; and this is true notwithstanding plaintiff's conceded right to the benefit of the most-favorable-view-of-evidence rule.

Bowermaster v Universal Co., 221-831; 266 NW 503

IV CORRECTION BY JURY

No annotations in this volume

V IMPEACHMENT OF VERDICT

Evidentiary support required. Verdicts will not be allowed to stand unless they have support in the evidence.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Unallowable impeachment. A juror may not impeach his verdict by a showing that he was influenced by a calculation supported by no evidence in the case.

Conway v Alexander, 200-705; 205 NW 351

Unallowable impeachment. In a personal injury action, a verdict may not be impeached by the affidavits of jurors to the effect that a certain allowance was made for an element of damages as to which there was no evidence.

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Misconduct of jurors—facts admissible for determination. On a motion for new trial, jurors may not impeach their own verdict by evidence of jury-room discussion which influenced but inheres in their verdict. However, misconduct prejudicially affecting the result may be shown, and the court may hear all the facts to determine if misconduct exists.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Trucker's statutory insurance requirement—jurors' discussion not misconduct. Jurors' discussion of statutory requirement that certain truckers carry liability insurance—being a discussion of law that all were presumed to know—is neither misconduct nor justification for a new trial.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

VI MOTION FOR DIRECTED VERDICT

Refusal to direct verdict as new trial ground. See under §11550 (I)

(a) MOTION IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 9 ILB 169—Direction of verdicts; 9 ILB 131—Statutes prohibiting directed verdicts

Motion sustained generally—showing necessary on appeal. On appeal from trial court's action in sustaining generally a motion for directed verdict predicated on several grounds, it is incumbent upon appellants to establish that the motion was not good upon any ground thereof before error can be predicated upon the sustaining of such motion.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Motion generally sustained—reversal on appeal. The plaintiff is not entitled to a reversal on an appeal from a ruling generally sustaining the defendant's motion for directed verdict containing several grounds unless it is established that the motion was not good on any ground.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Most favorable view. In reviewing the action of the trial court in overruling the defendant's motion for a directed verdict, the supreme court must consider the evidence, determining, not what the facts were, but what the jury was warranted in finding them to be, viewing the record in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Motion for—effect. The overruling of defendant's motion for a directed verdict at the close of plaintiff's evidence, in a cause tried solely to the court, is inconsequential when the final decision of the court is correct.

Pressley v Stone, 214-449; 239 NW 567

Failure to rule on motion. Error, if any, in trial court's failure in replevin action to rule on defendant's motion to direct verdict at close of plaintiff's evidence is not prejudicial where case is tried to court.

Prehn v Kindig, (NOR); 232 NW 812

Unsuccessful motion—failure to renew. When defendant at the close of plaintiff's evidence unsuccessfully moves for a directed verdict, and does not thereafter renew his motion, the state of the evidence at the close of the entire trial is the criterion for the purpose of assignment of error.

De Bruin v Studer, 206-129; 220 NW 116

Absence of jurors—effect. When the court sustains a motion for a directed verdict, it is quite immaterial that all the jurors were not present.

Nyswander v Gonser, 218-136; 253 NW 829; 36 NCCA 1

Belated motion for directed verdict. An overruled motion to direct the jury to return a verdict for movant, filed long subsequent to the return of verdict by the jury, will be given no review on appeal.

Luther v Investment Co., 222-305; 268 NW 589

Trial by jury—waiver—hostile motions for verdict. Hostile motions for a directed verdict, made by plaintiff and defendant at the close of all the evidence, do not, in and of themselves, constitute a waiver of the jury; otherwise, when such motions are followed by a stipulation of record, by the parties, "that the court may render a decision of said case during term time or vacation".

Bukowski v Security Assn., 221-416; 265 NW 132

Appeal delayed beyond 60 days. An appeal from a directed verdict in favor of defendant cannot be considered by the supreme court where it appears that the appeal from the directed verdict was not perfected within 60 days after the entry of an order overruling a motion for new trial.

Lotz v United Food Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

By court sua sponte. When a judgment rests solely on a question of law, the court may preemptorily enter it, without mandatory direction to the jury to return a formal verdict.

Dubuque Fruit Co. v Emerson, 201-129; 206 NW 672

Direction on questions of law only. Directed verdicts have no place in jury trials unless the record clearly presents controlling questions of law. Record evidence held wholly insufficient to justify a directed verdict against plaintiff on the ground that as a matter of law the contract for damages for assault—on which plaintiff sued—was based in part (1) on an agreement by plaintiff to compound or conceal the commission of a public offense, or (2) on an agreement by plaintiff as an employee to refrain from circulating scandalous information concerning his employer.

In re Cuykendall, 223-526; 273 NW 117

Law of case—directed verdict. An insurer may not have a directed verdict on the ground that the insured had, in his application, incorrectly stated his occupation, (1) when, on a former appeal, the law of the case had been settled to the effect that recovery might be had if the insurer had full knowledge of such occupation notwithstanding such incorrect statement, and (2) when the record presents a jury question on such issue of knowledge.

Murray v Ins. Co., 204-1108; 216 NW 702

Evidence overcome by physical facts and circumstances—effect. While, on defendant's motion for a directed verdict, plaintiff is entitled to have his evidence viewed in the light as favorable to his contention as reasonably possible, and while it is the province of the jury, generally speaking, to weigh the credibility of witnesses, yet, on such motion, the court must determine whether a verdict for plaintiff would be legally sustainable, and in so determining will, if necessary, pass on the question whether plaintiff's evidence is wholly overcome by the undisputed physical facts and circumstances attending the transaction.

Reid v Brooke, 221-808; 266 NW 477

Isolated testimony. In ruling on a motion for a directed verdict the court should not look alone to some isolated statement in the testimony of a witness but should treat it as a whole.

Faust v Parker, 204-297; 213 NW 794

Presumption as basis of jury question. The common-law presumption that a death was not a suicide does not necessarily create a jury question, because the presumption may be wholly negated by the attending facts and circumstances.

Warner v Ins. Co., 219-916; 258 NW 75

Establishing "efficient and procuring cause"—rebutting presumption. In an action by a real estate broker for commission, on the theory that he was the efficient and procuring cause for a sale, his showing that he was authorized to sell and had contacted a buyer who afterwards purchased directly from the owner, raises no jury question but only a rebuttable presumption which defendant successfully rebuts by direct evidence to the contrary.

Donahoe v Denman, 223-1273; 275 NW 154

Witness' conclusion without direct testimony—no jury question. Conclusion of a lay witness, without other direct testimony, that water through percolation or washing caused damage to building is not sufficient probative evidence of the cause of the damage to create a jury question.

Covell v Sioux City, 224-1060; 277 NW 447

Sale contract—time indefinite. A contract for storage and sale of corn, "seller's option as to time", being indefinite as to what constitutes a reasonable time, the trial court's exclusion of defendants' proffered evidence on this point and direction of a verdict for the plaintiff was error.

Andreas v Hempy, 224-561; 276 NW 791

Consent of automobile owner—evidence—jury question. Evidence that 15-year-old son, who often drove family car, had permission to drive the car to choir practice and also to a high school pep meeting, raised a jury question as to whether or not the son was driving with his father's consent at the time of the accident which occurred after the pep meeting.

McCann v Downey, 227-1277; 290 NW 690

Sidewalk defect—city's negligence—jury question. Where a woman sustains injuries by falling on pavement at intersection, when her heel caught in crevice, between the sidewalk and curb, as she stepped off sidewalk, a jury question on the liability of the city was created under evidence showing the injuries were sustained in nighttime while plaintiff was slowly and carefully walking in a strange part of city, and when this condition of the street had been created by the city 10 years before and never remedied, altho considered so unsafe by pedestrians in neighborhood that beaten paths were formed on either side in avoiding it.

Thomas v Ft. Madison, 225-822; 281 NW 748

Negligence—res ipsa loquitur. An action for loss of an eye caused by the sudden opening of a taxicab door as plaintiff stopped on the sidewalk to engage the cab, and when plaintiff made no move toward opening the door, the exclusive control of which was lodged in the driver inside the cab, presents a case to which the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies. In such case defendant's motion for a verdict is properly overruled.

Peterson v De Luxe Co., 225-809; 281 NW 787

Evidence insufficient for jury. Where recovery is sought because a minute particle of metal, apparently chipped off of operator's hammer, flew into plaintiff's eye while his truck tire was being repaired by filling station operator, and where there was no showing that tools and methods used by the operator were not those ordinarily used, motion for directed verdict should have been sustained.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Employee injured by falling derrick—evidence. Evidence that employee engaged in tearing down silo was injured when derrick fell on him did not warrant submission of case to jury on issues of employer's negligence, negligence of fellow servant, and assumption of risk, where the employee was acting on the request of fellow servant or limited vice-principal in charge of the work, where steel pins which gave way were of harder steel than that blacksmiths ordinarily use and were of a type successfully used on derrick in the past, but were not scientifically tested for tensile strength or secured from a manufacturer.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Concurrent negligence—effect. If the jury might properly find that the concurrent negligence of defendant and of a third party caused the injury or death of a nonnegligent person, the court cannot properly direct a verdict for defendant on the theory that the negligence of said third party was an intervening negligence which wholly supplanted and superseded the negligence of the said defendant. So held where the concurring negligence was (1) that of defendant in operating its train over a crossing at an unlawful rate of speed, and (2) that of the operator of an automobile in driving upon said crossing.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

Negligence of different agencies—proximate cause—jury question. Where the evidence demonstrates that an injury resulted from the negligence of two agencies, the question of proximate cause is peculiarly one for the jury.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 858

Payment of rent—sufficiency of evidence. Direction of verdict in action to recover on rent note from tenant was erroneous when there was sufficient evidence of payment by tenant in turning over proceeds of crop to warrant submission of the case to jury.

McCann v McCann, (NOR); 226 NW 922

Claims against deceased. On the question whether a verdict should be directed in favor of a claimant, the record may present such circumstances that some consideration should be given to the fact that the claim is against the estate of a deceased.

In re Talbott, 204-363; 218 NW 779

Fraud in sale of stock—damages as affected by 1929 depression. In an action for damages on account of false representations inducing the purchase of stock and under an instruction giving the correct measure of damages as the difference between the actual value of the stock and its value if it had been as represented, both values as of the time of purchase which was prior to the depression of 1929, it follows that the reduction of the stock's value because of the depression did not cause plaintiff's damage, and defendant's motion for a directed verdict thereon was properly denied.

Smith v Utilities Co., 224-151; 275 NW 158

Manslaughter—elements of self-defense. In a prosecution for murder under a plea of self-defense, the accused must (1) not be the aggressor, (2) retreat as far as possible, (3) have an actual honest belief in imminent danger and (4) have reasonable grounds for such belief, in view of which a motion for a directed verdict was properly denied under evidence enabling jury to reject a self-defense plea in arriving at a verdict of manslaughter.

State v Johnson, 223-962; 274 NW 41

Willful destruction of property. Evidence tending to show that a garnishee had, subsequent to garnishment, willfully destroyed the property in his possession belonging to the defendant in garnishment, generates a jury question as to the liability of the garnishee.

Schooley v Efnor, 202-141; 209 NW 408

(b) DEFECTIVE PLEADING

Denial of motion based on stricken pleadings—nonreviewable. Denying a directed verdict based on a general standing offer of settlement, made by posted signs to all patrons of a beauty shop in the event of injury, pleaded in answer but stricken on motion by an order not alleged as error, cannot be reviewed on appeal.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65; 2 NCCA (NS) 613

(c) FAILURE OF PROOF OF ESSENTIAL ELEMENT

Directed verdicts—constitutionality. Principle reaffirmed that the constitutional right of trial by jury is not infringed by the action of the court in directing a verdict for defendant whenever the evidence is such that the court would not hesitate to set aside a verdict against defendant.

Cashman v Railway, 217-469; 250 NW 111

Improbability of testimony. A jury question may exist even tho material portions of plaintiff's testimony strongly suggest improbability.

Ransom v McDermott, 215-594; 246 NW 266

Rescission of contract—plaintiff's burden. The failure of a party seeking to rescind a contract to plead or prove a restoration of the fruits of the contract received by him may very properly be presented by a motion for a directed verdict.

Continental Bank v Greene, 200-568; 203 NW 9

Guardianship of insane—nonjury question. In an action for the appointment of a guardian of the property of an alleged mental incompetent, the court may direct a verdict for the defendant if the evidence fails to show that the mental incompetency of defendant deprives him of the ability to care for his property, and to understand the nature and effect of what he does.

Richardson v Richardson, 217-127; 250 NW 897

Dismissal of prima facie case. The court, in trying an action, in lieu of a jury, may be fully justified in dismissing it on motion because of the inconclusive and unsatisfactory character of the evidence, even tho the plaintiff has, technically, made a prima facie case for recovery. So held in an action for money had and received.

Griffith v Arnold, 204-1216; 216 NW 728

Confession and avoidance—assault and battery. In an action for injuries inflicted upon the plaintiff when he was forcibly ejected from the home of the defendant, where the defendant's answer assumed the burden of proof by admitting the assault and battery, but by way of justification and confession and avoidance asserted that the plaintiff had been ejected after refusing to leave, the evidence was not sufficient to compel the court to direct a verdict for the defendant on the issue of whether the defendant had used more force than was necessary to accomplish the ejection.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Burden of proof—necessity to meet. Proof that a preparation was fed to animals and that immediately, or shortly thereafter, some of them died, and the others became permanently stunted in growth, does not justify a presumption that the said preparation caused the deaths or stunting.

Hildebrand v Oil Co., 205-946; 219 NW 40

Justifiable dismissal of counterclaim. An unsupported counterclaim for damages consequent on the negligent handling of a claim by an attorney who sued for fees due him, is, of course, properly dismissed by the court.

Hunt, etc. v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Fraud—insufficiency of evidence. In an action against the incorporators of an investment company for damages for fraud in the sale of bonds, a directed verdict in favor of the incorporators was proper when the evidence, other than the outlawed printed representations on the back of the bonds, showed the fraud, if any, was committed by a bank trustee of the securities.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

Fraud — evidence — insufficiency — directed verdict warranted. In a damage action arising out of fraudulent procurement of plaintiff's signature to note and conditional sale contract, where plaintiff predicates error on granting defendant a directed verdict on the ground that defendant's fraud was not proved—the evidence showing that plaintiff could read and write English language but failed to read instruments while having an opportunity to do so—and where plaintiff's reasons for not reading instruments were (1) he did not have his glasses, and (2) he thought he was signing an ordinary order for automobile, held, plaintiff's conduct precludes him from asserting fraud, and the ruling on the motion was warranted.

Griffiths v Brooks, 227-966; 289 NW 715

Malpractice—root of tooth in lung. In a malpractice action against dentist, the court erroneously directed a verdict for defendant on

VI MOTION FOR DIRECTED VERDICT—

(c) FAILURE OF PROOF OF ESSENTIAL ELEMENT—
continued

the ground that there was no showing that the presence of the root of a tooth in plaintiff's right lung was the proximate cause of the injury to plaintiff, under evidence that plaintiff was given a general anesthetic, was completely unconscious at time six teeth were extracted, and that plaintiff lost 60 pounds between the day of the extractions and the day he expectorated, after a violent spasm of coughing, a quantity of sputum, mucus and blood containing the root of a tooth.

Whetstine v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Plaintiff's burden—proving negligence allegations. A plaintiff's failure to carry the burden of proving at least some of his allegations of negligence properly results in a directed verdict against him.

King v Gold, 224-890; 276 NW 774

Negligence wholly unproved. In an action for personal injuries, where plaintiff fails to prove any of the grounds of negligence alleged in his petition, defendant's motion for directed verdict should be granted, but this rule is confined to cases where plaintiff fails to introduce evidence tending to show defendant's negligence; however, where there is evidence in the record sufficient to make conflict on the question, an entirely different rule applies.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-1138; 281 NW 790

Malicious prosecution—malice—want of probable cause. In action for malicious prosecution malice may be inferred from want of probable cause for the prosecution.

Bair v Schultz, 227-193; 288 NW 119

Defense—directing verdict. In action for malicious prosecution, whether the defendant acted on advice of the county attorney is generally a question for the jury, and assuming he so acted, if he failed to make a full disclosure of the facts, he did not so conclusively establish this defense as to sustain a directed verdict.

Bair v Schultz, 227-193; 288 NW 119

Foreign corporation—compliance with statutes—burden of proof. A foreign corporation for pecuniary profit, suing on an Iowa contract, has the burden to plead and prove its compliance with the statutes requiring permit to do business herein, without which a directed verdict in its favor is error.

Johnson Co. v Hamilton, 225-551; 281 NW 127

Gratuitously loaned corn shredder—injury in use of—nonliability of owner. Directing a verdict is proper against a plaintiff, a farm machinery mechanic and salesman, seeking recovery for an injury sustained when his hand was caught in a corn shredder which had been gratuitously loaned by defendant to a neighbor on whose farm plaintiff was operating the machine, the evidence showing plaintiff was an adult familiar with such machinery and in full possession of his faculties, and that there was no negligence attributable to defendant.

Davis v Sanderman, 225-1001; 282 NW 717

Public contracts under Simmer law—no general judgment for cost. Simmer law prohibits payment of construction cost of a municipal electric plant from taxation, and precludes rendering a general judgment for such cost, including a judgment for cost of engineering services in preparing plans and specifications for construction of such public utility, when such services were performed under contract, subsequent to the election and passage of the ordinance providing for construction payment from future earnings. Consequently, in an action by the engineers against a city to recover compensation for their services, a directed verdict for the city was proper.

Burns v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

Personal injuries—evidence reviewed—motion sustainable. Under the evidence and record in a law action for personal injuries to an independent contractor, case reversed and remanded with instructions to direct a verdict for defendant.

Gowing v Field Co., 225-729; 281 NW 281

Error which becomes inconsequential. Error in overruling a motion for a directed verdict at the close of plaintiff's evidence when certain all-essential testimony was not then in the record becomes inconsequential when, at the time of renewing the motion at the close of all the evidence, such testimony is in the record.

Newland v McClelland, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Action for compensation—purchaser obtained by real estate agent. Where the defendant had sent circular letters to real estate agents, listing farms for sale and stating the commission to be paid for any farm sold, and the plaintiff obtained a prospective buyer for a certain farm, but the sale was consummated by another real estate agent to whom the commission was paid, the defendant was entitled to a directed verdict in an action to collect the commission.

Santee v Lutheran Society, 226-1109; 285 NW 685

Contract unenforceable—directed verdict proper. In buyer's action on an oral contract for sale of a business college where there was no competent evidence taking case out of statute of frauds, a directed verdict for defendant was proper.

Patterson v Beard, 227-401; 288 NW 414

Insufficiency of evidence. In an action to recover from an oil company for injuries allegedly caused by operator of company's filling station, evidence failed to establish relation of employer and employee. Hence, company's motion for directed verdict should have been sustained.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Unproved master and servant relation. In a damage action arising out of a collision between the defendant's truck and a motorcycle upon which plaintiff was riding as a guest, in which action it was alleged that the corporation-defendant's truck was being driven by a person "in the course of his employment for * * * his employer"—the employer denying both this allegation and his consent to use of truck, and when the evidence showed that the corporation employed the truck driver for making deliveries during the week, excluding Sunday, on which day the collision occurred while the truck driver was assisting a personal friend tow a stalled car, held, after plaintiff alleged liability under the master and servant theory rather than under the statute making the owner of the motor vehicle liable, a directed verdict for the corporation was proper when plaintiff's evidence failed to support his theory.

Alcock v Kearney, 227-650; 288 NW 785

Directed verdict for insurer. In an action on a fraternal life insurance policy, when evidence did not show complete payment of premiums, and there was no waiver of terms of the policy providing for lapse for nonpayment of premiums, nor reinstatement after lapse of the policy, a motion for a directed verdict for the insurer should have been sustained.

Craddock v Life Assn., 226-744; 285 NW 169

Insufficiency for directed verdict. In a law action by a beneficiary to recover for the death of the insured on a policy containing additional benefits on account of accidental death, to which defendant insurer pleaded an affirmative defense of suicide and at the close of testimony moved for a directed verdict in favor of plaintiff beneficiary for amount of premiums paid, such motion was properly overruled where the question decided was that the results of insured's own actions, as reconstructed from the circumstances and surroundings, may have been intentional or may have been accidental, the evidence not being of such weight as to make it appear conclusively on the whole record that insured died by suicide.

Waddell v Ins. Co., 227-604; 288 NW 643

(d) UNDISPUTED TESTIMONY

Direction of verdict—positive testimony. A jury question is presented on the issue whether an oral contract was entered into when the record reveals: (1) positive testimony that it was entered into; (2) no direct testimony that it was not entered into; but (3) collateral circumstances justifying the inference that it was not entered into. Especially is this true when from the very nature of the transaction no direct contradictory testimony is available to the party who denies the contract.

Schulte v Ideal Co., 203-676; 213 NW 431

Nonliability per se. Unquestioned evidence that an automobile was loaned by the owner to a party for a specific purpose, and that said party wrongfully used said car for a specifically different purpose, and that the injury in question occurred in the operation of the car while it was being so wrongfully used, establishes the nonliability of the owner as a matter of law.

Heavilin v Wendell, 214-844; 241 NW 654; 83 ALR 872

Unimpeached and uncontradicted testimony. The positive and wholly uncontradicted testimony of an unimpeached and disinterested witness that he saw the purported maker of a promissory note sign it, plus the unqualified opinion of a competent and unimpeached witness to the effect that the signature to the note was genuine, justifies a directed verdict when the genuineness of the signature is the sole issue.

In re Work, 212-31; 233 NW 28

When necessarily granted. Plaintiff is necessarily entitled to verdict on motion when his claim is established by uncontradicted testimony.

Kern v Keifer, 204-490; 215 NW 607

Hunt, etc. v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Assault and battery—directing jury to award damages to plaintiff. Undisputed evidence held to establish that plaintiff and defendant mutually consented to engage in a fight, and that defendant unlawfully committed an assault and battery on plaintiff, warranting an instruction to the jury to return a verdict for plaintiff in some amount.

Schwaller v McFarland, 228- ; 291 NW 852

Defensive plea of forfeited policy. A defendant insurance company is entitled to a directed verdict on its defensive plea that the policy sued on had, because of the nonpayment of premiums, etc., become forfeited prior to the death of the insured, when, at the close of all testimony, the record reveals clear and convincing proof of such forfeiture by competent and satisfactory testimony which is wholly uncontradicted and unimpeached, directly or indirectly, by any fact, circumstance, or condition. And this is true tho it be assumed that defendant has the burden to establish his said plea.

Baker v Life Ins. Co., 222-184; 268 NW 556

Mental competency and elements of gift inter vivos—when jury question. In a replevin action by executor against decedent's sister to recover property held under claim of gift inter vivos from decedent, where clear, cogent, definite, and convincing evidence conclusively established mental competency and all the essential elements of a completed gift inter vivos appear without conflict, no jury question is presented.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

VI MOTION FOR DIRECTED VERDICT—continued

(e) "SCINTILLA OF EVIDENCE" RULE

Directing verdict—amount of evidence—rule. Court in directing a verdict is guided by not whether there is literally no evidence, but whether there is any evidence which ought reasonably to satisfy the jury that the fact is established.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Scintilla of evidence rule. In this state a mere scintilla of evidence will not raise a jury question and the trial court will be upheld in directing a verdict where, if the case were submitted and a verdict returned against the moving party, it would be the trial court's duty to set it aside.

Donahoe v Denman, 223-1273; 275 NW 154

Physical facts—exception to most favorable evidence rule. On appeal from an order overruling defendant's motion for directed verdict, the supreme court need not follow the most favorable evidence rule, as urged by plaintiff, to the exclusion of the physical facts and other uncontradicted matters which plaintiff not only conceded, but affirmatively and intentionally established.

Scott v Hansen, 228- ; 289 NW 710

(f) CONFLICTING TESTIMONY

Conflicting evidence. The fact that the testimony of a plaintiff in support of his cause of action is met by positive testimony to the contrary by the defendant, both witnesses being of equal credibility, does not, of itself, show that plaintiff has failed to establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence.

Reichenbach v Bank, 205-1009; 218 NW 903

Conflicting evidence. The court, manifestly, has no right to direct a verdict on an issue which is, under the evidence, a question for the jury.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229

Central Shoe v Kraft, 213-445; 239 NW 238

Donahoe v Gagen, 217-88; 250 NW 892

War of expert testimony. Whether a death resulted from an accident "independent of all other causes" is necessarily a jury question under a war of conflicting and contradictory expert testimony.

Martin v Life Co., 216-1022; 250 NW 220

Unjustifiable direction. A party may not have a directed verdict in his favor on the assumption that his testimony is truthful and that all testimony to the contrary is untruthful.

Olson v Shafer, 207-1001; 221 NW 949

Directed verdicts—function of court. It is not the function of the court to determine which of a series of irreconcilable theories of experts, as to the death of a person, is correct. All the court can do or is permitted to do is (1) to consider the war of testimony in the permissible light most favorable to the party on whom rests the burden of proof, and (2) to determine whether a verdict in favor of such party would be adequately supported by the testimony.

Martin v Life Co., 216-1022; 250 NW 220

Holdership in due course—jury question. The court has no right to say that the holder of a negotiable note is a holder in due course and to direct a verdict accordingly when conflicting inferences may be drawn from the facts, whether viewed individually or collectively.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 204-322; 213 NW 798

Clear evidentiary conflict. Where a clear conflict of evidence exists as to a defendant motorist's negligence and as to plaintiff's contributory negligence, so that the jury could have found for either, the court cannot direct a verdict for either party.

Thomas v Charter, 224-1273; 278 NW 920

Positive vs. negative evidence. Positive evidence of the existence of lights in full operation on a parked automobile is in no degree detracted from by evidence of a witness that he did not see any lights at a material time when his view was obstructed by an intervening object.

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660

Fraudulent representations. Competent evidence of fraud in the execution of a lease and promissory notes, though not free from inconsistencies, and contradicted in part, generates a jury question.

Ottumwa Bank v Starns, 202-412; 210 NW 455

Gifts inter vivos—unallowable directed verdict. An alleged donee of bonds may not, as defendant in replevin proceedings, have a verdict directed in her favor, (1) on the strength of her claimed exclusive possession, or (2) on the strength of lack of evidence of ownership in the alleged donor, when the jury might properly find that the possession of the alleged donee was not exclusive, and when the alleged donor was manifestly the owner of the bonds if the jury found there had been no gift.

Malcor v Johnson, 223-644; 273 NW 145

Loss on fidelity bond—recovery by surety. In action against a person covered by a fidelity bond, to indemnify plaintiff, as surety, for a loss sustained because it executed the bond, a direct evidentiary conflict precludes a directed verdict for plaintiff.

Fidelity Dep. Co. v Ryan, 225-1260; 282 NW 721

Oral contract of sale—disputed facts—jury question. Disputed evidence in buyer's action against seller over oral contract to deliver corn makes a jury question requiring a motion for directed verdict to be overruled.

Willers v Flanley Co., 224-409; 275 NW 474

(g) MOTION TO DIRECT AS ADMISSION

Most-favorable-view-of-evidence rule. On motion to direct verdict, evidence must be viewed in its strongest reasonable aspect in favor of adverse party.

Gipp v Lynch, 226-1020; 285 NW 659
Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823
O'Neill v Keeling, 227-754; 288 NW 887
McCann v Downey, 227-1277; 290 NW 690
Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290
NW 702

Most-favorable-view-of-evidence rule. On motion for directed verdict in determining whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to him.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

Most-favorable-view-of-evidence rule — no showing of negligence. While, on a motion for directed verdict, plaintiff is entitled to the most favorable view of the evidence, yet, if the evidence and physical facts show that defendant is not guilty of any negligence which is the proximate cause of, or contributed to, plaintiff's injury, then the motion should be sustained.

McDaniel v Stitsworth, 224-289; 275 NW 572

Crossing railroad in front of oncoming train—contributory negligence. It is error to overrule a motion for a directed verdict when, after considering all the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, there is no doubt but what he drove in front of a train with the view entirely unobstructed and with the train plainly to be seen had he looked, or if he looked, he did so negligently.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

(h) GENERAL RULES IN RE DIRECTION OF VERDICTS

Question first raised on appeal. Questions as to possible errors of the trial court, not properly raised by motion for directed verdict, nor by request for instructions, nor by exceptions to instructions, cannot be considered on appeal.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Court indicating directed verdict—dismissal motion properly denied. A motion to dismiss, made after court indicated an intention to sustain defendant's motion for directed verdict, held properly denied.

Yarn v Railway, 31 F 2d, 717

Submission to court. Parties will not be permitted to deny that an action was fully submitted to the court (1) when, at the close of all the evidence, motions were made by both parties for a directed verdict; (2) when the jury was excused, but not discharged; and (3) when the court, without objection, took the motions under advisement, and at a later term, without objection, sustained one of the motions and entered judgment accordingly.

Hart v Wood, 202-58; 209 NW 430

Multifarious motion. The sustaining, generally, of a multifarious motion for a directed verdict requires the appellate court to determine whether any one of the grounds is sustainable.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

Sustainable and unsustainable grounds. Principle reaffirmed that the sustaining of a motion to direct a verdict must be upheld if one of the grounds is legally good though other grounds may be legally unsustainable.

Phillips v Briggs, 215-461; 245 NW 720

Direction sustained on any good ground. Trial court's direction of a verdict must be sustained if any of the grounds of the motion are good.

Dodds v West Liberty, 225-506; 281 NW 476

Directing verdict generally on several grounds—appellant's burden to reverse. Before the supreme court can reverse the trial court's ruling in sustaining generally a motion for directed verdict, which contained several grounds, appellant must show that no one of such grounds was sufficient to support such ruling.

Lotz v United Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Directing verdict—motion generally sustained—reversal on appeal. The plaintiff is not entitled to a reversal on an appeal from a ruling generally sustaining the defendant's motion for directed verdict containing several grounds unless it is established that the motion was not good on any ground.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

(h) GENERAL RULES IN RE DIRECTION OF VERDICTS—continued

Mental competency and elements of gift—when jury question. In a replevin action by executor against decedent's sister to recover property held under claim of gift inter vivos from decedent, where clear, cogent, definite, and convincing evidence conclusively established mental competency, and all the essential elements of a completed gift inter vivos appear without conflict, no jury question is presented.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Actions on policies—suicide. An insurer is not entitled to a directed verdict on its defensive plea of suicide unless the facts and circumstances preclude every reasonable hypothesis except that of suicide. Evidence held insufficient to overcome presumption of non-suicide.

Wilkinson v Life Assn., 203-960; 211 NW 238

Death by accident (?) or suicide (?). In an action on a policy of insurance covering death by accident but excluding liability in case of suicide, the court, in view of the legal presumption against suicide, cannot properly direct a verdict on the theory of suicide unless the record is such as to conclusively establish the fact of suicide.

Jovich v Benefit Assn., 221-945; 265 NW 632

Direction improper when fact questions exist. In an action against an automobile insurance company to collect under the collision clause of a policy after transferring the original policy to another automobile on which a conditional sale was outstanding, a directed verdict is properly refused when fact questions exist as to the company's knowledge of the outstanding conditional sale at time of transfer.

Mougin v Ins. Assn., 224-1202; 278 NW 336

Granting after defendant's evidence. If there is sufficient evidence to take a case to a jury at the close of the plaintiff's testimony, a defendant cannot claim at the close of his evidence that there is nothing for the jury to determine, except when the testimony by the party having the burden of proof is in conflict with undisputed facts, or is such that under the circumstances it cannot be true, or shows that the witnesses must have been mistaken.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Conflicting evidence—directed verdict precluded. In an action against a railroad to recover the value of a stallion which died during transportation, conflict in evidence may preclude directing of verdict for the railroad on the ground that human agency causing stallion's death was not shown, irrespective of special finding by jury indicating that stallion died of an inherent propensity or weakness.

Vander Beek v Railway, 226-1363; 286 NW 452

Duty to direct verdict for defendant. The court should exclude the issues from the jury and direct a verdict for defendant whenever the record is such that the court would be compelled to set aside a verdict for plaintiff.

Raible v Bernstein, 209-1083; 229 NW 753

Will—directed verdict—when required. When the real issue is as to testator's mental competency, the court should sustain the will, by a directed verdict, when a contrary jury verdict would be without adequate evidentiary support, or, in other words, when contestant has failed to show that testator was so mentally deficient that he did not comprehend the nature and purpose of the instrument, the extent of his property, the distribution he wanted to make, or those who had claim on his bounty. (Directed verdict held proper.)

In re Fitzgerald, 219-988; 259 NW 455

Evidence—direct and circumstantial—record facts. Circumstantial evidence, supplemented by oral and written confessions of guilt may be such as to have the weight of direct evidence, and the court was right in overruling defendant's motion for directed verdict when, under the record, the established facts and circumstances were not only consistent with defendant's guilt but were inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis.

State v Heinz, 223-1241; 275 NW 10; 114 ALR 959

One conclusion by all reasonable men—court question. Ordinarily the questions of proximate cause and contributory negligence are matters for the jury, and it is only where the facts are such that all reasonable men must draw the same conclusion, that these questions become of law for the court.

Gowing v Field Co., 225-729; 281 NW 281

Reasonable minds differing as to conclusions. If reasonable men may differ as to conclusions drawn from the evidence, the question is one for the jury.

Yale v Hanson, 227-813; 288 NW 905

Contributory negligence per se. Where the facts disclose contributory negligence as a matter of law, the court must direct a verdict against the plaintiff on his own proof.

Denny v Augustine, 223-1202; 275 NW 117

Contributory negligence—when evidence conclusive. Contributory negligence is for the jury, and a directed verdict should be denied except in cases where the facts are clear and undisputed and the cause and effect so apparent to every candid mind that but one conclusion may be fairly drawn.

In re Green, 224-1268; 278 NW 285

Proximate cause of injury—when jury question. Whether certain negligence was the proximate cause of a certain injury is always a jury question when different minds might reasonably reach different conclusions.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785.

Finding as to proximate cause conclusive on court. A finding by the jury, on supporting testimony, that the negligence of one of two alleged joint tort-feasors was the sole proximate cause of the injury in question, is necessarily conclusive on the court.

Hanna v Elec. Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

Railroad crossing — motorist's contributory negligence per se. A motorist, who approaches a railroad crossing on a clear day, over a good road, with no obstructions and no diverting circumstances, and who, had he looked, must have seen but nevertheless is struck and killed by an approaching train which from a point 141 feet from the crossing was visible 2,500 feet down the track, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, and the defendant railroad is entitled to a directed verdict.

Meier v Railway, 224-295; 275 NW 139

Person thrown from one caterpillar tractor under another. Where plaintiff, standing on the endless track, filling the gas tank of one of defendant's caterpillar tractors used in road construction, was thrown, by a sudden movement of the tractor, in front of another oncoming tractor, an allegation attributing the injury sustained to the negligence of both drivers was not too general nor indefinite as to warrant a directed verdict and an instruction thereon was proper.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

Errors against prevailing party. While a defendant, on an appeal from an order granting plaintiff a new trial, may not ordinarily show that he was sinned against by the adverse and erroneous rulings of the trial court, yet he may assign error on the refusal of the trial court at the close of all the evidence to sustain his motion for a directed verdict, because, if he was legally entitled to a directed verdict, such fact would ordinarily be fatal to plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

Subsequent errors harmless after refusal to direct verdict. Where the court should have directed a verdict for the defendant at the completion of testimony, subsequent errors on rulings or orders were not prejudicial and could not be relied on by the plaintiff as grounds for a new trial, after a verdict was rendered for the defendant.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

Erroneous denial—jury question revealed. When plaintiff, at the close of his evidence, has not made a jury question for recovery, the erroneous overruling of defendant's motion for a directed verdict will not be deemed reversible error when, at the close of all the evidence, the evidence does reveal such jury question.

Carr v Mahaska Assn., 222-411; 269 NW 494; 107 ALR 1080

Unreasonableness of contract—effect. It would require a very clear showing which would justify the court in holding as a matter of law that a contract was not entered into because some of its terms were unreasonable.

Goben v Paving Co., 214-834; 239 NW 62

Last clear chance—evidence—insufficiency. The doctrine of "last clear chance" is not applicable unless peril of injured party is actually discovered and appreciated in time to prevent his injury by the exercise of ordinary care. So where plaintiff drives his truck at a speed of four or five miles per hour onto a railroad track, and is struck by a train going four or five miles per hour, and it is shown engineer of train felt a jar and, looking out of cab, saw some object in front of locomotive and immediately applied brakes and placed locomotive in reverse, held, evidence insufficient to submit to jury, and a motion for directed verdict was rightfully sustained.

Kinney v Railway, 17 F 2d, 708

Shifting defense after denial of directed verdict. In an action on a note, when the defendant asked for a directed verdict on the grounds of lack of consideration, he was not in a position to complain of the refusal to direct the verdict when he later shifted his defense admitting the signature on the note and setting up affirmative defenses, thereby placing the burden of proof on himself.

Ballard v Ballard, 226-699; 285 NW 165

(D) WAIVER OF ERROR IN OVERRULING MOTION

Giving evidence after denial of directed verdict. Introduction of testimony by defendant after motion for directed verdict is overruled, and failure to renew motion at close of evidence, waive error in denying directed verdict.

Hackley v Robinson, (NOR); 219 NW 398

Motion for—waiver. Error in refusing a directed verdict at the close of part of the testimony is waived by the failure to renew the motion at the close of all the testimony.

Yaus v Egg Co., 204-426; 213 NW 230

Linn v Kendall, 213-33; 238 NW 547

Commercial Co. v Hazel, 214-213; 242 NW 47

Motion for—error waived by nonrenewal at close of evidence. If a defendant's motion for a directed verdict at close of plaintiff's evidence is denied and not renewed at the close of all the evidence, the error, if any, in overruling the motion is deemed waived.

Newton Bank v Strand Co., 224-536; 277 NW 491

Error not waived by requesting instruction. Where a motion for a directed verdict is erroneously overruled, the defeated party does

VI MOTION FOR DIRECTED VERDICT—concluded

(i) WAIVER OF ERROR IN OVERRULING MOTION—concluded

not waive said error by asking instructions which correctly state the law of the case as fixed by the ruling of the court on the motion. (Overruling Martens v Martens, 181-350, and McDermott v Ida County, 186-736)

Heavilin v Wendell, 214-844; 241 NW 654; 83 ALR 872

Motion based on stricken pleading of settlement—nonreview. Since a settlement must be pleaded, the overruling of a motion for directed verdict alleging a settlement of the action is not reviewable when the pleading setting forth the settlement has been ordered stricken and such order stands unchallenged.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65

Exception to rule. The rule of law (206 Iowa 1263) that the trial court should not set aside the verdict of the jury and grant a new trial, when such verdict is the verdict which the court erroneously refused to direct at the close of the evidence, is not applicable when the grounds for new trial are predicated solely on the grounds of, (1) misconduct of the jury, and (2) exceptions to the instructions.

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

11510 Sealed verdict.

Correction of verdict generally. See under §11508 (III, IV), Vol I

By agreement. Permitting the jury to return a sealed verdict and to separate and re-assemble when the verdict is opened, is proper when the state and the defendant have agreed in writing to that effect. Nor is it erroneous for the court to read such agreement to the jury.

State v Ferro, 211-910; 232 NW 127

11511 General or special.

General verdict on multiple issues—presumption. The court will not, the rights of third parties being involved, assume that a general verdict, unaided by any special findings, was based on one of several different and permissible grounds.

Eclipse Lbr. v Davis, 201-1283; 207 NW 238

11512 “Special” defined.

Discussion. See 8 ILB 1—Special verdicts

Right to confine jury to special verdict. The court has the right to confine the jury to a special verdict when the answer to a special interrogatory will reveal the ultimate fact in accordance with the pleadings and evidence, and leave nothing for the court to do but to draw the proper conclusion of law and to enter judgment accordingly.

Bobbitt v Van Eaton, 208-404; 226 NW 79

Special finding of fact as special verdict. A special finding by a jury must be of ultimate, not evidentiary, facts which determine some issue of the case, and if the interrogatory presents to the jury all the ultimate facts or issues so that the answer is decisive of the case, it may constitute a special verdict which will be in lieu of a general verdict.

Olinger v Tiefenthaler, 226-847; 285 NW 137

I POWER OF JURY

Jury verdict—reasonable minds differing—finality. If testimony and a fact question exist upon which reasonable minds may fairly differ, the supreme court will not review the result reached by the jury.

Finley v Lowden, 224-999; 277 NW 487

Inferences drawn from record. The trier of facts is entitled to draw such legitimate inferences as the record will warrant.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

II POWER OF COURT

Inferences drawn from record. The trier of facts is entitled to draw such legitimate inferences as the record will warrant.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

III SPECIAL FINDINGS IN GENERAL

Negligence of host—proximate cause. The submission to the jury of interrogatories bearing on the negligence of the driver of a conveyance (in an action by a guest against a third party for damages) is not erroneous when the negligence of the driver was material on, and strictly confined to, the issue of proximate cause.

Schlinkert v Skaalia, 203-672; 213 NW 219

Proximate cause of injury—inconsistent findings by jury. Findings by the jury, in response to special interrogatories, (1) that the negligence of the operator of an automobile was the proximate cause of an accident, and (2) that the recklessness of said operator was the proximate cause of the accident, are fatally inconsistent.

Stanbery v Johnson, 218-160; 254 NW 303

Special interrogatories — whether plaintiff employee. Whether plaintiff was an employee (or guest) of defendant, when injured in defendant's automobile, held improperly refused submission to the jury.

Porter v Decker, 222-1109; 270 NW 897

Special finding of fact as special verdict. A special finding by a jury must be of ultimate, not evidentiary, facts which determine some issue of the case, and if the interrogatory presents to the jury all the ultimate facts or issues so that the answer is decisive of the case, it may constitute a special verdict which will be in lieu of a general verdict.

Olinger v Tiefenthaler, 226-847; 285 NW 137

IV TIME OF REQUEST

No annotations in this volume

V SUBMISSION TO COUNSEL

Lump sum verdict on several counts—waiver. The defendant may not predicate error on the fact that the jury returned a lump sum as the amount allowed on different counts, when he failed to avail himself of special interrogatories to the jury, and sought to accomplish the same object by requested instructions which embodied certain findings, but failed to submit his substitute for interrogatories to the opposing attorneys before argument.

Ransom v McDermott, 215-594; 246 NW 266

VI FORM OF INTERROGATORIES

Harmless error—submission of dual controlling propositions. In an action for services rendered a deceased, prejudicial error does not result from submitting to the jury the interrogatories (1) whether there was an express contract for payment, and (2) whether there was a mutual expectation between the parties to pay and receive pay for the services, even tho the express contract was established beyond doubt.

In re Willmott, 215-546; 243 NW 634

Improper submission of interrogatories. The submission to the jury, at the request of the defendant, of special interrogatories improper in form and without prior submission to counsel for plaintiff, does not constitute prejudicial error, when the jury was told to answer the interrogatories only in case it found for plaintiff, and when the jury found for defendant.

Baron v Indemnity Co., 218-305; 255 NW 496

VII EVIDENTIARY AND ULTIMATE FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

Submission of ineffectual question to jury—effect. No error results from submitting to the jury a question which calls for a fact already conceded by the parties, and which is answered by the jury in accordance with said concession.

Foy v Ins. Co., 220-628; 263 NW 14

Inferences drawn from record. The trier of facts is entitled to draw such legitimate inferences as the record will warrant.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Interrogatories—stated or agreed amount—services rendered to decedent. In probate action to establish a claim for services rendered to decedent, wherein the court submitted two interrogatories to the jury to determine (1) amount per month, if any, decedent agreed to pay claimant out of his estate at his decease, and (2) whether amount per month was to be paid for 9 or 12 months of each year, the interrogatories being submitted under an instruction to be answered in event jury found for claimant and not to be answered if verdict was for defendant, such instruction was not erroneous, since, before interrogatories could be answered, the jury must have found under the evidence that there was a stated or agreed amount, and the findings therein conformed to the verdict.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

VIII ANSWERS

Estoppel. One who causes a special interrogatory to be submitted to the jury is estopped thereafter to claim that the record contains no sufficient evidence to support the answer.

Tigue Sales v Motor Co., 207-567; 221 NW 514

11515 Assessment of recovery.

Automobile cases, damages. See under §§5037.09, 5037.10

Libel and slander cases, damages. See under §12412

Nuisances, damages. See under §12395

Sales, nonacceptance of goods, damages. See under §9933

Discussion. See 9 ILB 187—Quantity and value in damages; 14 ILR 94—Damages in cases of accession; 18 ILR 366—Liability for freight; 18 ILR 404—Damages reduced by trial court

Torts—fundamental laws govern liability. The fundamental and underlying law of torts is that he who does injury to the person or property of another is civilly liable in damages for the injuries inflicted.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Action based on fraud. In an action based on a conspiracy to defraud, the issue of conspiracy is not determinative, the important factor being that in order to be granted relief, it is necessary that the plaintiff establish the necessary elements of actionable fraud, the amount of recovery being dependent upon the extent of damage resulting from the fraudulent conduct.

Community Sav. Bank v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Instruction as to allowable damages. Instruction specifying that damages should be such as were rendered necessary by the injuries as disclosed by the evidence and which the evidence shows that plaintiff sustained and endured, sufficiently informed the jury that only such damages could be allowed as were caused by, and the direct result of, injuries sustained because of defendant's negligence.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Harmless error—curing erroneous submission of damages. The submission of a non-pleaded element of damages or the submission of an unproven element of damages will be deemed harmless when the instruction carries the limitation "if any".

Hepker v Schmickle, 209-744; 229 NW 177

Harmless error—erroneous submission of unsupported damages. The submission to the jury, in an action for damages, of an unsupported measure of damages constitutes error, but record reviewed and held harmless to the complaining defendant.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 273 NW 169

$2,500 increase in damages on retrial of personal injury case—nonexcessiveness. A verdict of $10,000 on second trial of automobile accident case, altho $2,500 larger than first verdict, did not under the circumstances indicate passion or prejudice and was not excessive.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Remittitur of nonrecoverable damages—effect. Error in including nonrecoverable damages in a verdict is not cured by the subsequent filing of a remittitur in a named sum, when the instructions are framed in such form that no one can determine what amount the jury allowed for nonrecoverable damages.

Gardner v Boland, 209-362; 227 NW 902

Permitting return of unproven damages. Reversible error results from so instructing as to allow the jury to find damages on account of a loss not shown by the evidence, when the amount of the verdict, viewed in the light of the evidence, quite clearly shows that the jury made allowance for such unproven loss.

Herring Co. v Myerly, 207-990; 222 NW 1

Instructions—nonapplicability to evidence. Instructions which permit the jury to find damages in the form of profits lost, without limiting such findings "as shown by the evidence", are prejudicially erroneous.

Smith v Oil Co., 218-709; 255 NW 674

Damages—failure to limit. Reversible error results from the failure of the court in its instructions to limit the jury in its return of damages, on various items of claimed damages, to the amount claimed in the pleadings; and limiting damages "as shown by the evidence" does not necessarily cure the error.

Desmond v Smith, 219-83; 257 NW 543

Measure of damages—failure to limit findings. An instruction which directs the jury, in determining the damages to an article, "to consider" its value before the injury and its value after injury is erroneous, because it fails to confine the jury in its findings of damages.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356; 26 NCCA 938

Loss of buildings. The measure of damages for the wrongful destruction of buildings is their fair, reasonable value at the time of destruction.

Walters v Iowa Co., 203-471; 212 NW 884

Measure of damages—wrongful act without profit to wrongdoer. The lessee of coal lands who seeks to recover damages consequent on the wrongful act of the owner of the land in taking coal from the land, need not show that the defendant-owner made any profit from his wrongful operations. Plaintiff need only show wherein and to what extent he was damaged.

Hartford Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 263 NW 269

Loss of grove. The measure of damages for the wrongful destruction of a grove on a farm is the difference between the value of the farm immediately before and immediately after the destruction.

Walters v Iowa Co., 203-471; 212 NW 884

Carriage of goods—failure to deliver. In an action against a carrier for a shortage in the delivery of a shipment of coal, the value of the shortage at the point of shipment is not an improper measure of damages.

Smith v Railway, 202-292; 209 NW 465

Delay in shipment—special damages. A carrier is not liable for special damages consequent on its negligent delay in delivering a shipment unless at or before the time of shipment the carrier is notified of the special purpose for which the shipment is intended and of the necessity for prompt shipment. So held as to a shipment of cans by the consignor to itself, followed by damages to corn which the ultimate consignee was unable to can, owing to negligent delay in delivering shipment.

Percy v Railway, 207-889; 223 NW 879; 28 NCCA 717

Contracts—breach of part not destructive of whole. Generally, where contracts are severable and divisible, and the consideration justly apportioned to part of the contract, a breach of that part does not destroy the contract in toto, but the defendant may only recoup himself in damages.

Paramount Pictures v Maxon, 226-308; 284 NW 119

Measure of damages—contract basis. Where parties have contracted that contemplated damages shall not exceed a certain amount, a particular measure of damages which will give practical effect to the agreement will be approved.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

Loss of commissions on sales—price raised after orders taken. Where a manufacturer contracted with a dealer who was to take orders for twine at a certain price and the manufacturer later refused to fill the orders taken except at a higher price, in an action by the dealer for loss of commissions, damages were sufficiently proven by evidence that the dealer had incurred expenses in taking the orders, and that only about 25 percent of the orders were accepted by customers because of the increased price, while normally 95 percent of the orders would have been accepted.

Lee v Sundberg, 227-1375; 291 NW 146

Sale of real estate—error without prejudice under evidence. In vendee's action for damages for fraudulent representations of value in the sale of real estate, no rescission being asked, it is error to instruct that the measure of damages is the amount paid less the reasonable rental value for the time occupied, which error, however, is without reversible prejudice to the vendor, when the amount of recovery is so small that the hope for a more favorable verdict on a retrial is, under the evidence, too remote.

Neal v Miller, 225-252; 230 NW 499

Real estate without rental value—use as measure of damages. When real property has no rental value, upon dissolution of a wrongful injunction restraining erection of a municipal light plant thereon, the measure of damages is the use value, including net profits.

Corning v Iowa-Nebr. Co., 225-1380; 282 NW 791

Fraud—measure of damages. Principle reaffirmed that the measure of damages for fraudulent representations as to the condition of land sold is the difference between the reasonable value of the land at the time in question and what would have been said value had the land been as represented.

Fry Co. v Gould, 214-983; 241 NW 666

Subject matter—wholly unallowable counterclaim. The amount which a vendee of land claims to have expended on land foisted upon him because of fraudulent representations by the vendor, in order to render the land "suitable, productive, and usable," is wholly unallowable as a counterclaim because said amount as a measure of damages for the wrong suffered is unknown to the law.

Fry Co. v Gould, 214-983; 241 NW 666

Mutual assumptions on exchange of lands—repudiation—effect. When two parties exchange lands, and each assumes the mortgage of the other on the land received by him in the exchange, and one of them is sued on his assumption, he may, by proper plea and proof, reduce his liability on his assumption to the extent of the damages suffered by him consequent on the act of his co-assumptor in repudiating his assumption by obtaining a discharge therefrom in bankruptcy.

Johnston v Grimm, 209-1050; 229 NW 716

Breach of covenant—improper measure of damages. In an action for damages consequent on a breach of the covenant of warranty of title contained in a mortgage, the amount of the mortgage is not the proper measure of damages when the mortgagor received no consideration for executing the mortgage, and when the mortgagee parted with no consideration, except to forbear the enforcement of his judgment against a third party.

Churchman v Wilson, 204-1017; 216 NW 726

Indemnity bond as tantamount to covenant of seizin. An indemnity bond conditioned to hold the obligee harmless from any loss which he may sustain by reason of a defect of title to certain real estate is equivalent to a covenant of seizin and governed by the same rule, to wit: no action for substantial damages is maintainable on the bond until a hostile, paramount title is asserted.

Duke v Tyler, 209-1345; 230 NW 319

Employer paying doctor bills—negligent person still liable for damages. Payment of an injured truck driver's doctor bills, by his employer, whether the motive be philanthropy or contract, constitutes a bounty from which a negligent defendant motorist can derive no benefit in reduction of his liability, inasmuch as he owes compensation for all damages as to which his negligence was the proximate cause.

Clark v Seed Co., 225-262; 230 NW 505

Hospital expense—board and lodging—when allowable. In personal injury action, allowance of board and lodging in hospital is not error where such items are inseparably tied up with treatment.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Pain, suffering, etc.—judgment of jurors. Jurors must necessarily rely on their own fair and unbiased judgment as to the amount of damages recoverable for pain and suffering and for disability as a wife and homekeeper.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

Future disability—submission not erroneous when permanent injury alleged. When petition, alleging that plaintiff was permanently injured, contained a general allegation for damages, an instruction on damages for future disability was not objectionable on the ground that the petition did not ask for such damages, and it was not necessary for plaintiff to specifically plead such elements of damage.

Schwaller v McFarland, 228- ; 291 NW 852

Nervous injury—evidence—sufficiency. There may be a recovery of damages consequent upon nervous injury even tho there is no medical testimony showing the connection between the injury and the nervous disturbance.

McDougal v Bormann, 211-950; 234 NW 807

Aggravation of disease—liability in general. One who is predisposed to disease which is aggravated or accelerated by negligence is entitled to recover damages necessarily and proximately resulting from such aggravation or acceleration.

Hackley v Robinson, (NOR); 219 NW 398

Humiliation, insult or indignity—proximate cause. The act of a party in proposing marriage to a married woman at a time when the husband was supposed to be on his death bed, and the act of said party in abusing the said wife, both verbally and physically, when she rejected said proposal, will not enable the husband to predicate damages on allegation and proof that when his wife recited the aforesaid occurrence to him several months later he was much distressed in mind and suffered a relapse in health.

Manning v Spees, 216-670; 246 NW 603

Mental pain and anguish. An injured plaintiff may recover for mental pain resulting from personal physical injury, even tho no special claim for such recovery is made in the petition; especially may he so recover when the petition fairly presents such claim.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

Nominal damages—right to recover more. The court is not in error in instructing that a plaintiff is entitled to more than nominal damages ("such as one dollar or less") consequent on a wholly unjustified assault and battery resulting in admittedly substantial physical injury to plaintiff.

Ashby v Nine, 218-953; 256 NW 679

Duty to minimize damages—instructions. The duty of a physically injured person to do all those reasonable things which will reduce and minimize his damages does not require that he submit to a surgical operation which, while simple in itself, would entail large expense and be attended by possible danger. Instructions relative to such duty reviewed, and held correct.

Updegraff v Ottumwa, 210-382; 226 NW 928

Malpractice—recoverable and nonrecoverable damages. In an action for malpractice in that, after performing a successful operation except that the defendant negligently left a piece of gauze in the wound, which negligence necessitated a second operation, instructions relative to damages arising from (1) scars, (2) bodily and mental pain, and (3) expenses paid for household servants, must clearly differentiate, in view of the two operations, between such damages as are, under each heading, recoverable, and those that are not recoverable.

Forrest v Abbott, 219-664; 259 NW 238; 38 NCCA 315

Malpractice—pain incident to injury. No recovery may be had, in an action for malpractice, for pain (1) incident to an injury, or (2) incident to the usual and ordinary treatment of an injury; and, on request, the court must clearly differentiate, in its instructions, between such pain and pain caused by the negligence of the physician.

Lermon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393

Permanent cripple—future pain. In a personal injury action arising from a motor vehicle collision, an allegation that plaintiff has been crippled for life, sustained by some evidence, justifies an instruction that the jury may allow such sum as in their judgment will fairly compensate plaintiff for future pain and for being crippled.

Clark v Berry Seed Co., 225-262; 280 NW 505

Employment—wrongful discharge—prima facie measure of damages. The prima facie measure of damages for the wrongful discharge of a servant is the contract wage. The master has the burden to show the extent to which this prima facie measure should be reduced.

Breen v Power Co., 207-1161; 224 NW 562

Separate occupation of wife—decreased earning capacity. In an action by an injured married woman to recover for decreased earning capacity in her separate occupation, it is of no consequence that, after she was injured, she removed from the place where she was employed when injured, to another locality.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

Wrongful discharge—duty to seek employment. A teacher wrongfully discharged is under obligation to exercise reasonable diligence to secure like employment in the same locality,—not like employment at distant places, or similar employment of a lower or different grade.

Shill v School Twp., 209-1020; 227 NW 412

Insurance—negligence in passing on application. In an action for damages consequent on the alleged negligence of an insurer in passing on an application for insurance, the plaintiff must fail, irrespective of his evidence of negligence, unless he establishes, to the extent of furnishing a measure for his damages, the substance of the contract which he was prevented from entering into.

Winn v Ins. Co., 216-1249; 250 NW 459

Insurance—collision damage to automobile. In an action on an automobile collision insurance policy, the measure of damages is (1) the reasonable cost to repair or replace the damaged parts with others of like kind and quality, if the evidence shows it can be so repaired, or (2) if the evidence shows it cannot be repaired, then the difference between the fair and reasonable market value before and such value after the collision—and fact that insured advantageously traded the wrecked automobile to a dealer on a new automobile does not affect the measure of damage.

Kellogg v National Ins., 225-230; 280 NW 485

Fully reparable injury. If the injury to an article is fully reparable, then the measure of damages is the reasonable cost of the repairs, not the difference between the reasonable value of the article before and after the injury.

Looney v Parker, 210-85; 230 NW 570

Reparable injury to article. The measure of damages for negligent injury to an article is the reasonable cost of restoring the article to the condition it was in immediately before the injury, not exceeding in any case the reasonable value of the article at the time of injury.

Laizure v Railway, 214-918; 241 NW 480

Article of personalty—reparable and irreparable injury. The measure of damages for injury to an article is: (1) for total destruction, the reasonable value at the time of destruction; (2) for a fully reparable injury, the reasonable cost of the repairs, plus the reasonable value of the use of the article during a reasonable time for repair; (3) for a partially reparable injury, the difference in the reasonable value of the article before and after the injury.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356; 26 NCCA 938

Failure to make repairs. The measure of damages for breach of a contract to make all necessary repairs to a pavement is the fair and reasonable cost of such repairs, and not the difference in value of the real estate with and without said repairs.

Armstrong Inc. v Nielsen, 215-238; 245 NW 278

Bank collections — negligence — measure of damages. The measure of damages consequent on the negligent failure of a collecting bank to notify the payee of deposited checks of their nonpayment, is not, prima facie, the amount of the checks, but such sum or amount as the payee-plaintiff may be able to prove to a reasonable degree of probability he has lost because he was not promptly notified of the nonpayment—not exceeding the amount of said checks. Substantial but conflicting testimony reviewed and held to present a jury question.

Schooler Motor Co. v Trust Co., 216-1147; 247 NW 628; 38 NCCA 361

Corporate stock—no market value—net value of assets. If there is no evidence of the market value of corporate stock, in an action for damages consequent on a fraudulently induced sale, said value must be determined by ascertaining the net value of the assets of the corporation.

Humphrey v Baron, 223-735; 273 NW 856

Municipal light plant earnings—anticipated profits neither nominal nor speculative. In a city's action on a public utility's injunction bond indemnifying city's loss on account of delayed construction of a municipal light plant, even tho plant had not been in operation, loss of profits and loss of use of the plant not in being, are not too speculative nor nominal, and anticipated profits, if established with reasonable certainty, may be recovered as damages.

Corning v Iowa-Nebr. Co., 225-1380; 282 NW 791

Sick and unhealthy animals. Evidence of the fair, reasonable value of sound, healthy, marketable hogs is not admissible to prove the value of admittedly unhealthy and sick hogs.

Tracy v Oil Co., 208-882; 226 NW 178

Thoroughbred cow served by nonthoroughbred bull. Principle reaffirmed that the measure of damages resulting from the serving of a thoroughbred cow by a nonthoroughbred bull is the difference between the value of said cow for breeding purposes before and after such serving.

Madison v Hood, 207-495; 223 NW 178

Surface water damages—flowage increased by tile. Surface water collected by one landowner and drained by tile to the land of another's servient estate, where it is there conveyed by the latter's tile to the lands of a second servient estate, all through the natural course of drainage, is not such subject of damages as to entitle the third estate owner to equitable relief, especially when it is not shown that he was substantially damaged thereby.

Johannsen v Otto, 225-976; 282 NW 334

Exemplary damages—purpose. Punishment of the defendant is one of the purposes in permitting an allowance of exemplary damages in a proper case; and it is proper for the court so to instruct the jury.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Exemplary damages—recovery permissive only. Reversible error results from instructing, in substance and in effect, that the jury is under obligation to return a verdict for exemplary damages in case it finds that plaintiff has suffered actual damages.

Boom v Boom, 206-70; 220 NW 17

Exemplary damages—nonexcessive verdict. A verdict for exemplary damages which is fairly in proportion to the actual damages will not be disturbed by the court.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

Exemplary damages—malice as essential basis. The submission of the question of exemplary damages without supporting evidence of malice is prejudicially erroneous.

Sokolowske v Wilson, 211-1112; 235 NW 80

Exemplary damages—failure to submit—effect. Failure of the court to submit to the jury the question of exemplary damages is not error, even tho plaintiff's pleading was broad enough to embrace such damages, when the plaintiff neither claimed such damages in the pleadings nor requested the court to submit such issue.

Morris v Scoville, 206-1134; 221 NW 802

Assault and battery—nonexcessive damages—exemplary damages. In an assault and battery case verdict for $1,680, reduced by remittitur to $1,180, held not so excessive as to evince passion and prejudice, when verdict included exemplary damages.

Hauser v Boever, 225-1; 279 NW 137

Assault—loss of earnings. In an action for injuries received in an assault and battery, evidence that the plaintiff had been incapacitated for 41 days and that his earnings prior to the injury were about $10 per day, was sufficient to submit to the jury an issue of loss of earnings.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Instructions—assault and battery—directing jury to award damages to plaintiff. Undisputed evidence held to establish that plaintiff and defendant mutually consented to engage in a fight, and that defendant unlawfully committed an assault and battery on plaintiff, warranting an instruction to the jury to return a verdict for plaintiff in some amount.

Schwaller v McFarland, 228- ; 291 NW 852

Taxation of attorney fees as matter of right. A defendant in attachment who counterclaims on the bond and recovers both actual and exemplary damages is entitled to a taxation of reasonable attorney fees as a matter of right, even tho the sureties on the bond are not made parties to the counterclaim.

Mogler v Nelson, 211-1288; 234 NW 480

11516 Joint or several verdicts.

Allowable joint verdict. A joint verdict in an action for an unlawful arrest and false imprisonment is allowable against those shown to be acting in concert.

Schultz v Enlow, 201-1083; 205 NW 972

Justifiable submission. The submission to the jury of a joint verdict against joint defendants is proper when the evidence supports such submission.

Sokolowske v Wilson, 211-1112; 235 NW 80

Unallowable joint verdict. In a joint action against the driver of an automobile and the owner of the vehicle, wherein necessity arises so to instruct as to limit the effect of the driver's admissions to the question of his liability, and the effect of the owner's admissions to the question of his liability, separate forms of verdict must be submitted, if requested.

Broderick v Barry, 212-672; 237 NW 481

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393; 75 ALR 1530

Submission of separate forms. In an action against the driver and owner of a truck, held, the omission to submit separate forms of verdict for each defendant was not prejudicial error, the court having specifically and correctly instructed the jury as to separate liability of each defendant.

Carlson v Decker, 218-54; 253 NW 923

11517 Form.

Correction of verdict. See under §§11503, 11510, Vol I

Form on single issue. One form of verdict only need be submitted when but one question is at issue: i. e., damages.

Millard v Mfg. Co., 200-1063; 205 NW 979

Improper form. A form of verdict submitted to the jury is seriously defective when framed in such a manner as to lead the jury to understand that, if such form were returned, it would absolve a party who was not contesting his liability.

Starry v Starry, 208-228; 225 NW 268

Adoption of trial theory. One of two defendants may not complain that the court, in the submission of various forms of verdicts, adopted his trial theory of nonjoint liability.

Zieman v Amusement Assn., 209-1298; 228 NW 48

11518 Entered of record.

Sufficiency of verdicts and correction thereof. See under §11503

11519 Waiver of jury trial.

Waiver of jury trial. See also Const Art I, §9; §§11435, 11531

Deprivation of jury—constitutionality. An action by the receiver of an insolvent bank against stockholders for the purpose of determining the necessity for an assessment on stock holdings, and adjudicating the amount of such assessment, is not inherently a law action and, therefore, the legislature may provide that the action shall be brought in equity.

Broulik v Henderson, 218-640; 254 NW 63

Party in default. A party in default may not complain that he was deprived of a jury trial.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

Default as jury waiver. Failure to appear for trial is a waiver of the right to trial by jury and a consent to trial by the court.

Vaux v Hensal, 224-1055; 277 NW 718

Waiver by agreement of attorneys—validity. A written agreement or stipulation, duly signed and filed by opposing attorneys in a law action and approved of record by the court, agreeing to waive a jury and to try the action to the court is, in the absence of fraud or proof that an attorney had no authority so to agree, binding on the parties to the action for at least one trial to the court, even tho, after the stipulation was entered into, the pleadings be amended and the cause be continued to a later term.

Shores Co. v Chemical Co., 222-347; 268 NW 581; 106 ALR 198

Hostile motions for verdict—nonwaiver. Hostile motions for a directed verdict, made by plaintiff and defendant at the close of all the evidence, do not, in and of themselves, constitute a waiver of the jury; otherwise, when such motions are followed by a stipulation of record, by the parties, "that the court may render a decision of said case during term time or vacation".

Bukowski v Security Assn., 221-416; 265 NW 132

Inferences drawn from record. The trier of facts is entitled to draw such legitimate inferences as the record will warrant.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Submission to court. Parties will not be permitted to deny that an action was fully submitted to the court (1) when, at the close of all the evidence, motions were made by both parties for a directed verdict; (2) when the jury was excused, but not discharged; and (3) when the court, without objection, took the motions under advisement, and at a later term, without objection, sustained one of the motions and entered judgment accordingly.

Hart v Wood, 202-58; 209 NW 430

Finding equivalent to jury verdict—conclusiveness on appeal. In a law action tried to the court without a jury, its finding on the fact question as to whether a check was accepted for collection or as payment has the same effect as a verdict of the jury, and cannot be disturbed on appeal if there is evidence to support it.

Hockert v Ins. Co., 224-789; 276 NW 422

Findings of trial court in law action. The finding and judgment of trial court on claim against decedent's estate has the effect of a jury verdict and may not be set aside if it finds any substantial support in the record.

11520 Reference—by consent.

Inaccurate judgment—correction without new trial. When parties to an action voluntarily (tho irregularly) submit to a referee certain counts only of the petition, and later judgment is entered on the report of the referee in such form as to indicate that all counts of the petition had been so submitted, the court, on proper proof, is under mandatory duty, during the term at which the judgment was entered, to exercise its statutory and inherent power and, itself, correct said inaccuracy.

Watters v Knutsen, 223-225; 272 NW 420

11521 Without consent.

Condition precedent. A party may not have an accounting unless he first pleads and proves that something is due him.

Oskaloosa Bk. v Bank, 205-1351; 219 NW 530; 60 ALR 1204

Unavoidable preliminary issue. The court has no authority, in an action for an accounting, to appoint, without the consent of the defendant, a referee to take the accounting, until defendant's plea that he is under no legal duty to account is first determined adversely to the defendant.

Benson v Weitz, 211-489; 231 NW 431

Accounting—appealable order. An order appointing a referee to take an accounting without first determining defendant's plea that he was under no legal duty to account, is appealable.

Benson v Weitz, 211-489; 231 NW 431

11526 Report—judgment.

ANALYSIS

I REFEREES AND PROCEEDINGS II REPORT AND FINDINGS

I REFEREES AND PROCEEDINGS

Stipulations—indefiniteness as to time—effect accorded. An oral agreement or understanding between opposing counsel that one of them should have time, additional to that specified by statute, in which to file exceptions to the report of a referee, tho the extent of such additional time is quite indefinite, will be construed and recognized by the court in the spirit and to the extent reasonably contemplated by the parties.

Holdorf et al. v Miller, 220-1380; 264 NW 602

II REPORT AND FINDINGS

Failure to except to report. The filing of exceptions to the report of a referee within the time permitted by statute, or by order of

II REPORT AND FINDINGS—concluded the trial court, is a condition precedent to the right to an appellate review of said report.

State v Cas. Co., 213-200; 238 NW 726

Equity cause tried on exceptions to referee's report. When a cause in equity is tried on exceptions to the report of a referee, and the appeal is from the judgment rendered on said exceptions, the review on appeal is limited to the exceptions presented to the trial court and to the record there made.

Hogan v Perkins Co., 213-1175; 238 NW 608

11534 Acceptance by referee.

Reference—procedure—justifiable findings. Whether a referee in probate must accept the appointment, qualify, hold hearings, make a timely report and accompany the same by affidavit as required of referees appointed in ordinary civil cases (§11530, et seq. C., '31), quaere; but the court may well find that such requirements (if they are such) were complied with when an unquestioned amended report of the referee recites such compliance.

In re Cochran, 220-33; 261 NW 514

11535 Proceed as court.

Accounting—trial de novo—limitation. An appeal from a ruling on objections to a referee's report must be tried de novo on the objections specified to such report.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Equity cause tried on exceptions to referee's report. When a cause in equity is tried on exceptions to the report of a referee, and the appeal is from the judgment rendered on said exceptions, the review on appeal is limited to the exceptions presented to the trial court and to the record there made.

Exceptions generally. See under §11548

I NECESSITY FOR EXCEPTIONS

(a) IN GENERAL

Assenting to action complained of. A party who, in one part of the record, permits the introduction of testimony without objection, may not predicate error on the reception in another part of the record, over his objection, of testimony of substantially the same nature.

Lewis v Grain Co., 214-143; 241 NW 469

Necessity for. Error (if it be error) in dismissing an action (1) without prejudice, (2) in the absence of the defendant, (3) without notice to him, and (4) without taking evidence thereon, will not be considered on appeal when the record shows that no exception was entered to the ruling in the trial court.

Gotsch v Schoenjahn, 201-1317; 207 NW 567

Necessity for. Failure to except to an adverse ruling on a motion for new trial precludes appellate review of exception embodied in the motion.

Pullan v Struthers, 201-709; 207 NW 794

Exception necessary. Rulings relative to the transfer of a cause from law to equity, or vice versa, will not be reviewed in the absence of exceptions to the rulings.

Hogan v Perkins Bros., 213-1175; 238 NW 608

Van Dyck v Abramsohn, 214-87; 241 NW 461

Failure to reserve error. The appellate court may not review the reception of testimony which is admissible against a part of the defendants only, when the testimony was received without objection, and no instruction limiting the application of the testimony was requested.

Weyer v Vollbrecht, 208-914; 224 NW 568

Belated filings. A party, on appeal, may not predicate error on the belated filing of a pleading to which he interposes no exception.

Royal Ins. v Hughes, 205-563; 218 NW 251

Failure to except to report of referee. The filing of exceptions to the report of a referee within the time permitted by statute, or by order of the trial court, is a condition precedent to the right to an appellate review of said report.

State v Cas. Co., 213-200; 238 NW 726

Failure to except. Failure to except to rulings on the introduction of evidence and to the giving of instructions precludes review on appeal.

State v Jackson, 205-592; 218 NW 273

Wood v Branning, 215-59; 244 NW 658

Unexcepted instructions as law of case. If there be no exceptions to instructions, the verdict is final if it has support in the evidence. In such case no inquiry can be made whether the instructions are right or wrong.

Commer. Credit v Hazel, 214-213; 242 NW 47

Failure to give promised instruction. Failure of the court to instruct as promised during the course of the trial will not be reviewed in the absence of an exception to such failure.

Lee v Ins. Assn., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Exception by noncomplainant. Defendant may not predicate error on an exception entered by the plaintiff.

Mizner v Lohr, 213-1182; 238 NW 584

Dead man statute—failure to object. Failure to object to testimony as to a personal transaction between an interested party and a deceased precludes assignment of error, on appeal, in receiving such testimony.

In re Willmott, 215-546; 243 NW 634

Total absence of exceptions—necessary affirmance. If the record on appeal is barren of any exception to the rulings complained of, the appellate court will affirm the judgment of the lower court.

Garner v Cherokee County, 223-712; 273 NW 842

Constitutionality of statute not raised in lower court. When a district court order, granting an extension of the time for redemption of land on which a mortgage had been foreclosed, contained a provision that if the statute under which the extension was granted were repealed or held invalid the order would be terminated, such provision did not warrant an appeal challenging the constitutionality of the statute when the question of constitutionality was not raised in the lower court.

N. Y. Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

(b) IN RE MISCONDUCT

Misconduct of court. Failure to except to alleged misconduct of court precludes review on appeal.

State v Johnson, 210-167; 230 NW 513

Extension of time for new trial motion—canvass of jury as to misconduct of court. An extension of time for filing a motion for new trial to enable counsel to canvass the jury and learn the prejudicial effect of remarks made by the court during the trial was properly refused when there was attached to the motion an affidavit by a juror that the remarks of the court had led the jury to disbelieve a witness, the affidavit not supporting its conclusion, and when no exceptions were taken to the remarks by the court.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Error waived by failure to object. Where an attorney testified that he had talked with the defendant with reference to a certain car before preparing a mortgage on the car, and the court questioned him in order to decide whether there had been an attorney-client relationship on which the testimony should be excluded, when no objections were made or exceptions taken to the examination by the court, it was proper to refuse a new trial on the ground that the court had made misleading statements of the law and was guilty of misconduct in discrediting the testimony.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Misconduct in argument. Misconduct in argument is waived by a failure to except thereto.

Pullan v Struthers, 201-709; 207 NW 794
State v Myers, 207-555; 223 NW 166

Objections—sufficiency. An objection to a flagrantly improper argument by the county attorney may be all-sufficient even though not couched in specific language; a priori, when the attorney and court cannot but know the very subject matter to which reference is made.

State v Voelpel, 213-702; 239 NW 677

Arguments and conduct of counsel—curing error by instruction. Argument and ruling thereon briefly reviewed and held to reveal no error, but, if error, that the same was effectively cured by an instruction to disregard the matter referred to by counsel.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exch., 221-1382; 268 NW 155

(c) EXCEPTION TO JUDGMENT

Failure to except. Failure to have exception to a judgment properly noted precludes review on appeal.

Des M. Marble v Seevers, 201-642; 207 NW 743

Leach v Bank, 201-1323; 207 NW 326

Stork v Stork, 202-196; 209 NW 276

Continental Bk. v Railway, 202-579; 210 NW 787; 50 ALR 139

Campfield v Rutt, 211-1077; 235 NW 59

State v Phillips, 212-1332; 236 NW 104

Judgment record clarified by later entry. When the court stated in its entry of judgment: "The defendant excepts to said judgment. Exceptions allowed and granted.", and in ruling on a motion for a new trial, made an entry that the above-quoted was intended to save an exception for the defendant, the court was correct in its action to clarify the record, and on appeal the defendant could not contend that the entry could only be interpreted to mean that the exception to the judgment was sustained.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

(d) EXCEPTIONS IN EQUITY

No annotations in this volume

(e) WAIVER OF EXCEPTIONS

Requested instruction nonwaiver of objections. A party whose objections to the submission of a subject matter to the jury have been erroneously overruled by the court does not waive his objections by asking an instruction which is in harmony with his objections as to said subject matter.

Ballinger v Democrat Co., 207-576; 223 NW 375

Reservation of grounds—objectionable argument. Failure to have an objectionable argument made of record and to except thereto constitutes a waiver of the error, if any.

Schram v Johnson, 208-222; 225 NW 369

11537 Time to except.

II TIME FOR OBJECTIONS IN GENERAL

I TIMELY EXCEPTIONS

Presentation of grounds of review—prerequisite for appeal. A ruling and exception thereto in the lower court, or a showing of a request for a ruling and a refusal, are necessary prerequisites to a review in the appellate court.

In re Scholbrock, 224-593; 277 NW 5

Argument not made of record. Error may not be based on alleged misconduct of counsel in argument unless the specific misconduct is made of record, and exceptions entered thereto.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Stipulation indefinite as to time—effect accorded. An oral agreement or understanding between opposing counsel that one of them should have time, additional to that specified by statute, in which to file exceptions to the report of a referee, tho the extent of such additional time is quite indefinite, will be construed and recognized by the court in the spirit and to the extent reasonably contemplated by the parties.

Holdorf v Miller, 220-1380; 264 NW 602

II TIME FOR OBJECTIONS IN GENERAL

Objections first made on appeal. Objections to evidence must be made when it is offered, not for the first time on appeal.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Belated objections to evidence. A party may not, on a motion for a new trial, interpose objections to testimony, other than the objections interposed at the trial.

State v Ostby, 203-333; 210 NW 934; 212 NW 550

Larceny — value — competency of witness — fatal delay in objecting. Objections to the competency of a witness to testify to the value of stolen articles must be made when the witness is asked as to said values, not later when the articles are offered in evidence.

State v Endorf, 219-1321; 260 NW 678

Fatal delay. The court may very properly refuse to strike testimony when it has been received without objection, and when the motion to strike is delayed until after the entire testimony is in the record.

Greco v Ins. Co., 219-150; 257 NW 201

Belated objections. The objection that a petition does not state a cause of action may be deemed waived when made for the first time in a motion for a new trial.

Clarkson v Cas. Co., 201-1249; 207 NW 132

Gambling on answer. A party will not be permitted to withhold his objection to a question until he discovers that the answer is unfavorable to him.

State v Plew, 207-624; 223 NW 362

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

Lewis v Grain Co., 214-143; 241 NW 469

Stipulations in re evidence and objections thereto. Litigants may validly agree of record (at least with the consent of the court) that, in the taking of testimony, objections thereto need not be made at the time of offer, but that such testimony shall be deemed objected to on "all grounds known to the law".

Lindburg v Engster, 220-1073; 264 NW 31; 116 ALR 591

Performance of contract—merchantable title—belated objections. Objections to a land title as shown by the abstract introduced at the trial, not made until after the entry of the decree, will be ignored.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

11538 Bill of exceptions.

Report of trial and certification. See under §§11456, 11457

Absence of time limit. Evidence taken in an equitable action need not be certified by the trial judge and reporter until there exists a necessity for such certification. Conceding, arguendo, that the certification should be made within a reasonable time after such necessity arises, then the presence or absence of prejudice will materially control the question as to what is such reasonable time.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1368; 222 NW 553

Ex-judge's affidavit—no part of record. A judge's affidavit made after termination of his office, and three months after perfection of the appeal, is no part of the record and cannot be considered against the appellant as a basis for an alleged waiver.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Improper argument. Improper argument by the county attorney, which argument has not been taken down by the reporter as part of the record, but as to which proper exception has been entered, may be made part of the record by a bill of exceptions signed by the judge.

State v Voelpel, 213-702; 239 NW 677

Unreported trial to court—bill of exceptions—belated filing—effect. Where a law action is tried to the court without a reporter's record being made—appellant electing to preserve the necessary record in the form of a bill of exceptions, but failing to file exceptions within statutory time—errors relating to rulings on and as to sufficiency of the evidence cannot be considered on appeal. The lack of an extension of time and the failure to properly preserve the record leave nothing for consideration, and an affirmance necessarily follows.

Berner v Jordan, 227-1106; 290 NW 53

11539 When bill unnecessary.

Failure to preserve record. Tho a motion to vacate a final decree for erroneous proceedings which preceded the decree be treated in the appellate court as a motion for a new trial, yet movant cannot prevail when he deliberately permitted such proceedings to take place in the trial court without any record preservation, and seeks in his motion proceedings to establish them by mere affidavit and extraneous testimony.

Radle v Radle, 204-82; 214 NW 602

Nonnecessity in equity. The fact that the record on appeal in an equitable action fails to disclose any exception by the appellant is not grounds for dismissing the appeal.

Roeper v Danese, 206-964; 221 NW 506

Necessary corrections in trial court. An attack on the record as duly certified to the supreme court on appeal cannot be originated in the supreme court. If the record in the trial court is incorrect it must be there corrected by amendment on proper application.

Melman Fruit v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

Correction of certificate to shorthand notes. A purported certificate of the trial reporter to the correctness of the shorthand notes, which certificate is fatally defective because not signed by the reporter, may be corrected by said reporter by the subsequent execution of a new and duly signed certificate.

Melman Fruit v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

Abstract—filing when notes and transcript not with clerk. An abstract filed with the clerk of the supreme court within the time provided by statute (§12847, C., '31) is a proper and valid abstract notwithstanding the fact that, at the time of said filing, the shorthand notes had not been returned to, nor had the transcript been filed with, the clerk of the trial court.

Melman Fruit v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

11541 Certification by successor.

Time for certification.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1368; 222 NW 553

11542 Form and grounds of exception.

ANALYSIS

- I EXCLUSIVENESS OF OBJECTION
- II OBJECTIONS—SUFFICIENCY
 - (a) GENERAL GROUNDS—INCOMPETENT, IR-RELEVANT, IMMATERIAL
 - (b) SPECIFIC GROUNDS

I EXCLUSIVENESS OF OBJECTION

Evidence—motorcycle automobile collision—speed remote from accident—admissibility. Where a motorcycle coming over a viaduct at high speed collides with an automobile leaving and making a left-hand turn at the foot of the viaduct, speed of the motorcycle at the instant of or immediately before the collision is admissible, but, with nothing to indicate to the trial court the materiality of speed some distance away, the exclusion of such evidence will not be disturbed.

Thomas v Charter, 224-1278; 278 NW 920

Waiver by introducing exhibit. Objections made by the defendant to testimony given by the plaintiff's witness on direct examination were not waived when the defendant introduced an exhibit containing written statements made by the witness which tended to weaken his oral testimony. But objections by the defendant to other testimony in the direct examination were waived by statements in the exhibit supporting the testimony to which objections had been made.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

II OBJECTIONS—SUFFICIENCY

(a) GENERAL GROUNDS—INCOMPETENT, IR-RELEVANT, IMMATERIAL

Withholding objection—effect. An objection to the reception of hearsay evidence will be given scant consideration when made for the first time at the conclusion of the testimony and then in the form of a motion so couched as to be practically impossible of application by the court.

Walker v Speeder Corp., 213-1134; 240 NW 725

Dragnet objection. An overruled objection in the trial court to the effect that certain expert testimony was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial" does not raise on appeal the point that the qualification of the witness was not shown.

McCull v Jordan, 200-961; 205 NW 838

Dragnet objection. The all-inclusive objection that a question is "incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant" is insufficient to present the point that the question invades the province of the jury.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

Dragnet objection. A dragnet objection to an exhibit is properly overruled when the exhibit is clearly admissible in part, and when the objector makes no effort to separate the admissible from the inadmissible or to expunge from the record the inadmissible part.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Presentation and reservation of grounds of review—motion to strike—omnibus motion. A blanket motion to strike intermingled competent and incompetent testimony is improper, and will not be reviewed on appeal.

Koopman v Ins. Assn., 209-958; 229 NW 221

General reputation—sufficiency. The point that a question calls for testimony of the "reputation" of a witness, instead of testimony of the general reputation, is not raised by the objection of incompetency and immateriality.

State v Dillard, 205-430; 216 NW 610

Fraudulent banking—insolvency—evidence—other deposits. Upon a prosecution for receiving deposits while insolvent, testimony of deposits other than that alleged in the indictment is admissible, over the objection of incompetency, irrelevancy, immateriality, and failure to lay proper foundation.

State v Ostby, 203-333; 210 NW 934; 212 NW 550

Relevancy, materiality, and competency—quantum meruit. On the issue of quantum meruit for services rendered, a former contract between the same parties for similar services performed under like conditions, and specifying the compensation, is admissible as a circumstance for the jury's consideration.

Olson v Shuler, 203-518; 210 NW 453

Reception of evidence—waiver of incompetency. Error may not be predicated on the reception of irrelevant and incompetent testimony relative to the condition of a nuisance at a place remote from the place in controversy when the complainant fails to avail himself of a later indicated willingness on the part of the court to strike such testimony.

Chase v Winterset, 203-1361; 214 NW 591

Cancellation of indorsements. On the issue whether indorsements of payments on a note had been improperly canceled, evidence by the maker of the payments to the effect that he had never authorized such cancellation is manifestly relevant, competent, and material.

First St Bank v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767

"Incompetent and immaterial". The objection that evidence is "incompetent and immaterial" is all-sufficient when such grounds are perfectly obvious, and especially so when the objector specifically calls the attention of the court to the fact that the offered testimony "does not tend to prove any issue in the case".

State v Cordaro, 211-224; 233 NW 51

Triple objection—sufficiency. Ordinarily an objection to the introduction of testimony on ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial does not constitute a proper basis for reversal unless objectionable nature of the evidence is also specified. However, such general objection is sufficient where grounds of the objection are discernible or where the evidence could not have been made competent.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-149; 287 NW 829

Objections to evidence—immateriality apparent. Where the immateriality of evidence objected to is plainly discernible and no further particularity is required to apprise the trial court of grounds of objections, it is not necessary that these same identical matters be again presented to trial court by way of motion for new trial before they may be considered by supreme court.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-149; 287 NW 829

Poor practice—admitting evidence on promise to amend. In a law case, especially, it is poor practice to permit evidence, objected to as incompetent, to be admitted on the promise that amendments would later be filed to meet the proof. Such objections coming after the witness has answered should be followed by motions to strike.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

(b) SPECIFIC GROUNDS

Specific objections. Objections to testimony in criminal cases must be as specific as is required in civil cases, in order to receive review on appeal.

State v Vandewater, 203-94; 212 NW 339

Correct ruling on faulty objection. The exclusion of incompetent evidence on an insufficient objection will not be deemed error.

Kent Bank v Campbell, 208-341; 223 NW 403

Scope of objection. The objection that a question calls for an unallowable conclusion of the witness is quite different than the objection that no foundation had been laid for the testimony in question.

Lane v Varlamos, 213-795; 239 NW 689

Minutes of testimony—nonimpeachable. The minutes of testimony taken before grand jury and filed with indictment constitute the record basis for finding of the indictment, and this record may not be added to by calling on the grand jurors in the trial of a case to give additional testimony tending to impeach the indictment, such as that given in false arrest case where grand jurors testified in effect that plaintiff was in truth and in fact the person indicted. Any rule permitting grand jurors to impeach their own record would be contrary to public policy.

O'Neill v Keeling, 227-754; 288 NW 887

11545 Signing by judge or bystanders.

Bystanders' bill. Misconduct in argument may not be made of record by a writing which is not presented to or signed by the judge, and which is signed solely by the counsel for the complaining party.

Rudd v Jackson, 203-661; 213 NW 428

Affidavit (?) or bill of exceptions (?). Misconduct of an attorney in argument (not taken down and made of record) must be presented by bill of exceptions and not by affidavit attached to the motion for new trial.

Hornish v Overton, 206-780; 221 NW 483

Appellant not "bystander". A bill of exceptions signed by appellant as a "bystander" is a nullity.

Music v DeLong, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

11548 Must be on material point.

Assignment of error. See under §12869
Necessity of exceptions. See under §11536
Variance between allegation and proof. See under §11177 et seq.

I PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY AND CORRECTNESS

Presumption as to sustaining facts. On appeal in an action involving the title to real estate, it will be assumed, in support of the judgment, that the plaintiffs were the proper parties in interest, though the record is indefinite, when they were so treated without objection in the trial below.

Bullock v Smith, 201-247; 207 NW 241

Executors and administrators—attorney fee allowance—evidentiary support required. Tho a presumption of correctness exists in favor of trial court's decision fixing compensation for administrator's attorney, yet, where objection is made to application for allowance, and no evidence is introduced as to the services other than a bare statement in the applicant's affidavit, the trial court is not warranted in making a finding involving both nature and value of services.

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

Attorney fee for extraordinary probate services. Tho a presumption of regularity exists as to an unassailed allowance of attorney fees for extraordinary services, and tho ex parte orders fixing such fees without introduction of evidence are not uncommon, yet such orders are always open to review on final settlement.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

II AFFIRMATIVE SHOWING OF PREJUDICIAL ERROR

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 18 ILR 304—Offer of testimony

Presentation of grounds of review—prerequisite for appeal. A ruling and exception thereto in the lower court, or a showing of a request for a ruling and a refusal, are necessary prerequisites to a review in the appellate court.

In re Scholbrock, 224-593; 277 NW 5

Dead man statute—failure to object. Failure to object to testimony as to a personal transaction between an interested party and a deceased precludes assignment of error on appeal in receiving such testimony.

In re Willmott, 215-546; 243 NW 634

Persistent objections. The act of counsel in persistently but unsuccessfully objecting to the cross-examination of an expert witness (who has testified to the genuineness of a signature) to the effect that what was being called for by the examination was as evident to the jury as to the witness, does not, in and of itself, constitute prejudicial misconduct.

Keeney v Arp, 212-45; 235 NW 745

Cross-examination—unallowable scope. Reversible error results in permitting a cross-examination to develop testimony which is highly prejudicial to the party calling the witness, and which has no relation to the testimony developed on the direct examination. So held where a direct examination was strictly confined to that which the witness observed at the time and place of an accident, while the cross-examination developed the fact that the witness declared at the time of the accident that the defendant was not to blame for the accident.

McNeely v Conlon, 216-796; 248 NW 17

Repetition of misconduct. Repeated attempts in the cross-examination of a defendant in a personal injury action to show that he had, on prior occasions, run over people constitute prejudicial error.

Shuck v Keefe, 205-365; 218 NW 31

Refusal to strike testimony. Failure to strike testimony which has been received with out objection does not constitute reversible error when ruling on the motion to strike was reserved, when no ruling was subsequently requested, and when the said testimony was so similar to other properly received testimony as to negative prejudice.

II AFFIRMATIVE SHOWING OF PREJUDICIAL ERROR—continued(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

State v Hughey, 208-842; 226 NW 371

Dismissal of issue—striking evidence. The court should not permit testimony bearing on a dismissed issue to remain in the record when it has no material bearing on any remaining issue.

In re Muhr, 218-867; 256 NW 305

Allowable and unallowable services. Affirmative prejudicial error appears from a record which shows that the trial court, acting without a jury in a law action involving the allowance of attorney fees, received evidence of both allowable and unallowable services.

Iowa Co. v Scott, 206-1217; 220 NW 333

Abstract statements of law. The inclusion in instructions of abstract statements of the law does not necessarily constitute material error.

Birmingham Sav. Bank v Keller, 205-271; 215 NW 649; 217 NW 874

Failure to send exhibit to jury room. The fact that a duly introduced exhibit in a criminal case was not given to the jury when it first retired, but was sent to the jury some hours before the verdict was returned, reveals no prejudicial error.

State v Twine, 211-450; 233 NW 476

Assessment under repealed statute. An apportionment or assessment of drainage improvement costs under a statute which fixed "volume of water discharged" as a basis, but which, before the improvement in question had been initiated, had been repealed and supplanted by a statute which fixed "benefits" as a basis, is prejudicially erroneous unless the prejudice is obviated by a showing that an apportionment or assessment on either basis would be the same.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Facts provable by witness—absence—prejudice not presumed. Where the record fails to show the facts to be proved by a witness and prejudice resulting therefrom, none will be presumed and no reviewable error is preserved.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65

(b) EXCLUSION OF QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Exclusion of nonexplanatory question. No reviewable error results from excluding a question which does not, in and of itself, reveal that which the questioner is seeking to show, and the court is not, by proper offer, otherwise enlightened.

Schooley v Efnor, 202-141; 209 NW 408

Antes v Coal Co., 203-485; 210 NW 767

First Bank v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767

Fox v McCurnin, 205-752; 218 NW 499

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151

In re Johnson, 217-891; 232 NW 282

Morrow v Downing, 210-1195; 232 NW 483

Thielen v Schechinger, 211-470; 233 NW 750

Campfield v Rutt, 211-1077; 235 NW 59

Birum-Olson v Johnson, 213-439; 239 NW 123

No review without proffer of testimony. Sustaining objection to a question creates no reviewable error when no proffer of testimony was made and the record is bare as to what the answers would have been.

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

Failure to make offer of proof. Where objection to the offer of testimony was sustained, the court is unable to say whether such ruling is prejudicial error when no offer of proof was made indicating what was expected to be proved.

In re Wagner, 226-667; 284 NW 485

Exception to rule. The rule that the exclusion of questions which in no manner indicate the prospective answer is presumptively without prejudice has little, if any, application to the cross-examination of a witness.

Schulte v Ideal Co., 203-676; 213 NW 431

Exception to rule. The rule that the appellate court will not review the exclusion of questions which do not reveal what is proposed to be proven, has no application to a question and answer appearing in a deposition.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Appeal—hopelessly deficient record. Errors predicated on the exclusion of evidence tending to prove nonperformance of the contract sued on cannot be considered on appeal when appellant has not included in the abstract any part of such proffered evidence or the objections or rulings thereon.

McManus v Kucharo, 219-865; 259 NW 926

Authority of agent—evidence—refusal. Prejudicial error results from the exclusion of evidence tending to show the authority of an agent to sell a promissory note under a qualified indorsement only, such authority being material under the issues.

Falcon v Falcon, 208-8; 222 NW 869

Reservation of grounds—insufficient record. The exclusion of a transcript of the testimony of a witness on a former trial may not be reviewed on a record which fails to show affirmatively that the transcript was offered in evidence, or what matter was contained therein.

Blakely v Cabelka, 203-5; 212 NW 348

Nonprejudicial exclusion of question. A witness who is incompetent to testify to material conversations with a deceased person may be asked and permitted to answer the general question whether he had a conversation with the deceased on a certain occasion on the subject matter in issue; but the exclusion of such question is nonprejudicial.

Southhall v Berry, 207-605; 223 NW 480

Self-illuminating questions. The rule has no application when the questions themselves manifestly indicate what the witness would have testified to, had he been permitted to answer.

Falcon v Falcon, 208-8; 222 NW 869

III PRESUMPTION OF PREJUDICE

Conflicting and unfair rulings. Reversible error results from (1) receiving incompetent testimony over plaintiff's objection, (2) striking such testimony at the close of defendant's testimony, and (3) reinstating such testimony, without warning to plaintiff, after plaintiff had dismissed his witnesses and made his opening argument.

Braverman v Naso, 203-1297; 214 NW 574

Presumption as to action of court. The exclusion by the court in an action tried solely to the court, of material testimony, on the ground that it was wholly inadmissible, generates the presumption that the court must have disregarded other identical testimony received without objection.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Allowable and unallowable recovery. Instructions which permit a recovery of an allowable and an unallowable element of damages cannot be said to be harmless as to the unallowable part when the court cannot determine whether the jury did or did not return anything on the unallowable element.

Cocklin v Ins. Assn., 207-4; 222 NW 368
See Gardner v Boland, 209-362; 227 NW 902

Error both prejudicial and harmless—procedure on appeal. It may happen that an error by the court in the rejection of evidence is presumptively prejudicial as to one subject matter, and quite harmless as to another subject matter; and if the record reveals the amount of the presumptive prejudice, the appellate court may give the prevailing party the option to omit the amount of presumptive prejudice or suffer a reversal.

Lantz v Goodwin, 210-605; 231 NW 331

Exclusion of nonexplanatory question. The erroneous refusal of the court, in a prosecution for assault to rape, to permit a witness, proffered by the defendant, to answer a question whether the witness knew the general reputation of the prosecutrix as to truth and veracity in the community where she lived, cannot be deemed harmless error on the ground that the question did not reveal whether the witness would answer "yes" or "no", when, in connection with the proffer of the witness, defendant offered to show that said prosecutrix was "wholly unreliable in her word and statements".

State v Teager, 222-392; 269 NW 348

Facts provable by witness—absence—prejudice not presumed. Where the record fails to show the facts to be proved by a witness and prejudice resulting therefrom, none will be presumed and no reviewable error is preserved.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65

IV HARMLESS ERROR

(a) IN GENERAL

Striking legal conclusion only.

Merchants Bk. v Roline, 200-1059; 205 NW 863

Refusal to compel election. Record reviewed, and held that the refusal to compel a defendant to elect whether he would proceed on tort or on contract was quite harmless.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

Misconduct of jury. Misconduct of the jury is not ground for a new trial when the prevailing party is entitled, as a matter of law, to the judgment accorded to him.

Butler Co. v Elliott, 211-1068; 233 NW 669

Slightly excessive recovery. The reception in evidence in a personal injury action of a hospital bill which includes a charge for "board" for the patient, is not reversible error when the amount of the nonrecoverable item is not shown, and when, apparently, the matter was not called to the attention of the trial court.

Sutton v Moreland, 214-337; 242 NW 75

(b) ERRORS NOT AFFECTING RESULT

Improper fixing of value in replevin. The fact that in replevin the court fixes the value of the property, instead of submitting such issue to the jury, becomes of no consequence when the plaintiff avails himself of the right to take the actual property.

Schmoller Co. v Smith, 204-661; 215 NW 628

Incompetent evidence—effect. In an equitable proceeding for the revocation of the license of a physician, the reception of immaterial or incompetent evidence will be deemed harmless, because it will be presumed that all such testimony was rejected in arriving at the final decision.

State v Knight, 204-819; 216 NW 104

Failure to submit issue. Failure to submit an issue of partnership is harmless when such failure does not change the result, especially

(b) ERRORS NOT AFFECTING RESULT—concluded when the evidence supporting the issue is indefinite.

First N. Bank v Schram, 202-791; 211 NW 406

Failure to enter formal judgment on collateral order. The failure of the court, following a dismissal of a quantum meruit count by plaintiff, to enter a formal judgment of dismissal of the said count cannot possibly detrimentally affect the defendant on his appeal from a judgment against him on the remaining count.

Hunt, etc. v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Failure to enter formal judgment of dismissal. Failure of the court, following its order dismissing a counterclaim, to enter a formal judgment of dismissal of said counterclaim, cannot possibly prejudice the appellant in his appeal from the final judgment on the merits.

Hunt, etc. v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Subsequent errors harmless after refusal to direct verdict. Where the court should have directed a verdict for the defendant at the completion of testimony, subsequent errors on rulings or orders were not prejudicial and could not be relied on by the plaintiff as grounds for a new trial, after a verdict was rendered for the defendant.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

Striking of material allegation. No injury results from striking a material allegation from a pleading when the record shows that in the trial the matter stricken was treated as at issue, was duly tried out, and was properly submitted to the jury.

Insull v McDaniels, 201-533; 207 NW 533

Main v Brown, 202-924; 211 NW 232

Rudd v Jackson, 203-661; 213 NW 428

Fraud—instruction following rescission theory. In vendee's action for damages for fraudulent representations of value in the sale of real estate, no rescission being asked, it is error to instruct that the measure of damages is the amount paid less the reasonable rental value for the time occupied, which error, however, is without reversible prejudice to the vendor, when the amount of recovery is so small that the hope for a more favorable verdict on a retrial is, under the evidence, too remote.

Neal v Miller, 225-252; 280 NW 499

Remarks of court. Remarks of the trial court during examination of a witness, which the court might well have refrained from making, are not prejudicially erroneous, when the subject matter appearing in the record at this point would not change the result.

King v Gold, 224-890; 276 NW 774

(c) ERROR AFFECTING PARTY NOT ENTITLED TO RECOVER

Error against party not entitled to recover.

Dye Co. v Davis, 202-1008; 209 NW 744

Wiley v Dobbins, 204-174; 214 NW 529; 62 ALR 432

Anderson Co. v Reinking, 204-239; 213 NW 775

Whitmore v Herrick, 205-621; 218 NW 334

McLain v Risser, 207-490; 223 NW 162

Blakely v Cabelka, 207-959; 221 NW 451

Foley v Mathias, 211-160; 233 NW 106; 71 ALR 696

Butler v Elliott, 211-1068; 233 NW 669

Unjustifiable chance for recovery. Instructions which, in stating the issues, give the plaintiff a chance for a recovery to which he was not entitled are harmless when the jury finds that plaintiff was not entitled to recover in any event.

Ferber v Railway, 205-291; 217 NW 880

Error against noncomplainant.

Klass v Ins. Co., 210-78; 230 NW 314

Unnecessary proof of a negative. Incompetent proof of the negative of a proposition cannot be deemed prejudicial to a party who cannot recover under any circumstances unless he proves the affirmative of the same proposition, and proffers no such proof.

Range v Ins. Co., 216-410; 249 NW 268

Nonright to recover—inadequate instructions. A plaintiff who has failed to establish the material allegations of his petition, and is therefore not entitled to recover in any event, cannot be deemed harmed by the failure of the court adequately to present to the jury his pleaded cause of action; nor may he be deemed harmed by an inadequate verdict.

Comparet v Metz Co., 222-1328; 271 NW 847

Erroneous instructions cured where directed verdict proper. Errors in instructions made by the trial court are not prejudicial to the appellant when appellee is entitled to a directed verdict.

Young v Clark, 226-1066; 285 NW 633

(d) ERRORS FAVORABLE TO PARTY COMPLAINING

Unprayed-for relief.

Conn v Heaps, 205-248; 216 NW 73

Error in favor of complainant.

Morrow v Scoville, 206-1134; 221 NW 802

Judd v Rudolph, 207-113; 222 NW 416; 62 ALR 1174

Striking proper testimony. A party who seeks, on cross-examination, to secure from the witness an admission of facts derogatory to the credibility of the witness, and is met by a positive denial, may not be deemed prejudiced by the striking out of such denials, tho the cross-examination was proper.

Glass v Hutchinson Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

Exclusion of unnecessary evidence. An appellant cannot be deemed harmed by the rejection of proof of a fact which the instructions relieve appellant from proving.

Faber v Ins. Co., 221-740; 265 NW 305

Instructions favorable to complainant. Error may not be predicated on the giving of an instruction which is favorable to the complainant.

Rosenstein v Smith, 218-1381; 257 NW 397

Appellant not adversely affected by error. If the appellant is not adversely affected by the lower court's decision, even if erroneous, nothing is left for review by the appellate court on that appeal.

In re Keeler, 225-1349; 282 NW 362

(e) NATURE OR FORM OF REMEDY

Equity (?) or law (?)—refusal to transfer.
Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

Refusal to transfer action.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Premature consolidation of actions.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Premature appointment of receiver.

Farmers Bk. v Miller, 203-1380; 214 NW 546

Irregular but manifestly correct adjudication. Where the record reveals that a judgment creditor legally acquired a landlord's lien through garnishment proceedings against a tenant, the appellate court will not be inclined to inquire into the strict regularity of the proceedings whereby such adjudication was had.

Kinart v Churchill, 210-72; 230 NW 349

(f) PLEADING

Refusal to strike pleading.

Dean v Atkinson, 201-818; 208 NW 301

Overruling plea.

Gotsch v Schoenjahn, 201-1317; 207 NW 567

Denial of right to implead.

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533

Establishing immaterial reply.

Hiller v Felton, 208-291; 225 NW 452

Receiving pleadings in evidence.

Kemmerer v Highway Com., 214-136; 241 NW 693

Belated reply. A reply filed without leave of court and after the trial is concluded, and purporting to conform to the pleadings to the evidence, may be considered, notwithstanding its untimeliness, when neither party is deprived thereby of any testimony.

McDonald Co. v Morrison, 211-882; 228 NW 878

Technical inaccuracy in plea.

Cochran v Sch. Dist., 207-1385; 224 NW 809

Striking of superfluous count. The striking by the court of one of several counts of a petition must be deemed quite harmless when the matter stricken is substantially repeated in an unstricken count.

McGlothlen v Mills, 221-204; 265 NW 117

Striking plea under which pleader could not recover.

Johnson Co. Bank v Creston, 212-929; 231 NW 705; 237 NW 507; 84 ALR 926

(g) SELECTION AND IMPANELING OF JURORS

Challenges overruled—waiver. A party may not predicate error on the overruling of his challenge for cause to a juror when he fails to utilize his unused peremptory challenges.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

(h) CONDUCT OF TRIAL OR HEARING IN GENERAL

Refusal of postponement of trial.

Farmers Bank v Bunge, 211-1357; 231 NW 651

Error which becomes inconsequential. Error in overruling a motion for a directed verdict at the close of plaintiff's evidence when certain all-essential testimony was not then in the record, becomes inconsequential when, at the time of renewing the motion at the close of all the evidence, such testimony is in the record.

Newland v McClelland, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Custody of jury. Bailiff's remark, that jury might be kept for 30 days before the court would accept a verdict that they had "agreed to disagree", is not prejudicial when the jury themselves treated the remark as a joke.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

(i) RULINGS AS TO EVIDENCE IN GENERAL

Reception of non res gestae statement.

State v Ayles, 205-1024; 219 NW 41

Inconsequential testimony. The reception of immaterial and inconsequential testimony is not ground for reversal.

Graeser v Jones, 217-499; 251 NW 162

Refusal to exclude testimony otherwise in record.

Eilers v Frieling, 211-841; 234 NW 275

Conclusion of witness.

State v Thomlinson, 209-555; 228 NW 80

Erroneous striking of counterclaim.

Harriman v Roberts, 211-1372; 235 NW 751

Error as to abandoned pleading.

Butler Co. v Elliott, 211-1068; 233 NW 669

Exclusion of inconsequential photographs.

State v Smith, 215-374; 245 NW 309

(i) RULINGS AS TO EVIDENCE IN GENERAL—concluded

Striking paragraph of pleading without change of issues.

Cleophas v Walker, 211-122; 233 NW 257

Withdrawal of specific ground of negligence. The withdrawal by the court from the jury of an allegation of a specific act of negligence cannot be deemed harmful when the court submits the case to the jury under the "res ipsa loquitur" rule.

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151

Offer of evidence—discrimination. Permitting one party to introduce opinion evidence on a certain point and denying to the opposing party the right to counter with like evidence do not necessarily constitute reversible error.

Slinger v Ins. Assn., 219-329; 258 NW 101

(j) RULINGS ON QUESTIONS TO WITNESSES

Mathematical calculation.

Zabawa v Osman, 202-561; 210 NW 602

Striking hypothetical question.

Blakely v Cabelka, 203-5; 212 NW 348

Striking preliminary question.

Blakely v Cabelka, 203-5; 212 NW 348

Excluding question—record demonstrating nonerror. No error results from excluding a question as to what a party to the action said during a named conversation, when the record otherwise shows that said party was not present at said conversation.

Nortman v Lally, 204-638; 215 NW 713

Competency—probate claimant's wife. In proceeding on claim against a decedent's estate for an alleged loan, trial court erred in holding that claimant's wife was an incompetent witness as to conversation with decedent wherein he stated that "they should get around to make a note for the $500 he gave him". However, since court also found in effect that such evidence would not have been sufficiently definite to establish the claim, such error was not prejudicial.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Unanswered question.

State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636

(k) ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE

Undue license as to evidence.

State v Speck, 202-732; 210 NW 913

Conclusion answers. Error may not be predicated on the fact that a witness was permitted to give a conclusion answer when the witness had, prior thereto, without objection, stated the facts relative to said matter.

First St. Bank v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767

Conclusions—nonfatal admission. Admission of conclusions of witnesses that they sawed lumber according to instructions, that the logs of appellee were better than others, and other similar conclusions held not prejudicial when the same testimony was elicited by proper questions and answers.

Waterman v Gaynor, (NOR); 215 NW 641

Exclusion of exhibits but not of related testimony. The action of the court in withdrawing from the record certain exhibits, but refusing to withdraw the oral testimony relating thereto, does not necessarily constitute reversible error.

Githens v Ins. Co., 201-266; 207 NW 243; 44 ALR 863

Erroneous but harmless evidence. Tho the cause of death of a deceased was a question for the jury to decide, yet permitting a physician to testify that death resulted from certain injuries must be deemed harmless when the cause of death never was in issue,—when the jury would necessarily have found in accordance with said testimony had it not been received.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Reception of immaterial evidence. In an action for damages consequent on a nuisance, evidence to the effect that a septic tank has the power to destroy disease germs reviewed and, in view of the record, held immaterial, but nonprejudicial.

Hill v Winterset, 203-1392; 214 NW 592

Reception of improper evidence.

Kness v Kommes, 207-137; 222 NW 436
O'Hara v Chaplin, 211-404; 233 NW 516

Proper question with improper answer—effect. A properly framed question on a relevant and material matter is not rendered improper by the contents of the answer which is in no manner attacked, and as to which no relief is asked.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

Incompetent testimony harmless.

Nortman v Lally, 204-638; 215 NW 713

Incompetent evidence of value. Conceding, arguendo, that certain received evidence of value was incompetent, yet the error becomes inconsequential when the parties stipulate as to the value and the court adopts the stipulation.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Competent and incompetent evidence.

Olson v Shuler, 208-70; 221 NW 941

Incompetent testimony on otherwise competently proven fact. The reception of incompetent testimony in proof of a fact becomes quite harmless when the said fact is otherwise unquestionably established by competent testimony.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30
Crawford v Emerson, 222-378; 269 NW 334

Professional memorandum by deceased—incompetent when stating no fact. Brief notations on a slip of paper, identified by a deceased attorney's stenographer as made by him at the time a testator conferred with him about the drawing of the will, are incompetent as evidence when the notes do not state any fact. However, their admission in evidence is harmless when the witness had previously testified without objection to the whole of the conversation.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Incidentally received matter. Incidentally received testimony relative to the scattering of salt on an icy sidewalk after an accident does not constitute reversible error.

Burke v Lawton (Town), 207-585; 223 NW 397

Inconsequential testimony. Error in receiving wholly inconsequential testimony must be treated as harmless.

Diesing v Spencer, 221-1143; 266 NW 567

Reception of nonprejudicial testimony.

Comparet v Coal Co., 200-922; 205 NW 779

Unapplied evidence. Evidence tending to prove that a defendant-sheriff was attempting to make an arrest for an offense committed in his presence is harmless when no such issue was presented to the jury.

Lawyer v Stansell, 217-111; 250 NW 887

Reception of evidence already in record.

State v Plew, 207-624; 223 NW 362

Evidence received with and without objection.

Legler v Clinic, 207-720; 223 NW 405

Procedure in governmental office.

Farmers Bk. v Bunge, 211-1357; 231 NW 651

Reception of belated nonrebuttal testimony. The reception of nonrebuttal testimony after parties have rested will not be deemed reversible error unless it affirmatively appears that the court abused its discretion.

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787

Undue particularity of proof. Needless or unjustifiable particularity in proving just when a public sale took place—said date being material—does not necessarily constitute error.

Moen v Fry, 215-344; 245 NW 297

(1) EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE

Correct decision notwithstanding excluded evidence.

In re Work, 212-31; 233 NW 28

Loss of business—nonprejudicial exclusion. Exclusion of testimony that plaintiff's business fell off after his injury, if improper, was not prejudicial when favorable answer would not have permitted plaintiff's recovery.

Rauch v Dengle, (NOR); 218 NW 470

Exclusion of relevant and material evidence.

Butler Co. v Elliott, 211-1068; 233 NW 669

Exclusion of material evidence. The exclusion of a part of the testimony offered to show a material fact will not constitute error when in the further progress of the case the fact in question is treated as fully established.

Van Gorden v City, 216-209; 245 NW 736

Rejection of inconsequential testimony.

Insell v McDaniels, 201-533; 207 NW 533

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

State v Smith, 207-1345; 224 NW 594

Darden v Railway, 213-583; 239 NW 531

Glessner v Railway, 216-850; 249 NW 138

Exclusion of noncontrolling testimony. The exclusion of noncontrolling testimony held harmless.

Valentine v Morgan, 207-232; 222 NW 412

Refusing cumulative evidence. Refusal to admit testimony, which at the best is merely cumulative, is not prejudicially erroneous.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

Exclusion of evidence on established fact.

State v Troy, 206-859; 220 NW 95

Ankeney v Brenton, 214-357; 238 NW 71

Rodskier v Ins. Co., 216-121; 248 NW 295

Striking defensive matter.

In re Carpenter, 210-553; 231 NW 376

Withdrawal of incompetent evidence.

McDonald v Robinson, 207-1293; 224 NW 820; 62 ALR 1419

Remote speed—materiality first presented on appeal. Defendant's claim that plaintiff's speed remote from the collision was material as showing that at the time defendant looked back before making a left turn, plaintiff was too distant to be seen over a viaduct, may not, when such evidence is excluded, be urged first on appeal as ground for reversal when such purpose for introducing such evidence was not stated to the trial court.

Thomas v Charter, 224-1278; 278 NW 920

(m) SAME OR SIMILAR EVIDENCE OTHERWISE ADMITTED

Unallowable opinion on otherwise established fact.

Walters v Elec. Co., 203-467; 212 NW 836

Opinion evidence—harmless exclusion—evidence otherwise in record making jury question. Error in striking testimony is harmless when

(m) SAME OR SIMILAR EVIDENCE OTHERWISE ADMITTED—concluded

the facts sought are otherwise in the record, and when if admitted the record would still present a jury question.

In re Willer, 225-606; 281 NW 155

Exclusion of evidence otherwise received.

First Bank v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767

Amick v Montross, 206-51; 220 NW 51; 58 ALR 1147

Ankeney v Brenton, 214-357; 238 NW 71

Excluded testimony otherwise received.

Parties charged with conspiracy may not predicate error on the exclusion of documentary evidence tending to show the lawfulness of their purposes when the essential facts revealed in the excluded evidence are otherwise shown in their testimony.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

Rejection and reception of same evidence.

Handlon v Henshaw, 206-771; 221 NW 489

Exclusion and subsequent reception of evidence.

Norton v Lally, 204-638; 215 NW 713

State v McCook, 206-629; 221 NW 59

Olson v Shafer, 207-1001; 221 NW 949

Morrow v Downing, 210-1195; 232 NW 483

West Chester Bank v Dayton, 217-64; 250 NW 695

Excluding facts otherwise shown. Sustaining an objection to a question is harmless and nonreviewable when the matter involved is otherwise in evidence from the same witness.

Mosher v Snyder, 224-896; 276 NW 582

Other competent proof. The supreme court was not required to pass on the soundness of sustained objections to evidence that a certain road was a county trunk highway when there was other competent proof of the point, and no offer of controverting testimony was made.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Cross-examination—evidence previously covered. Where an offer of evidence was made during cross-examination, and was covered by other testimony, there was no prejudice in sustaining an objection to the offer.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Refusal to admit all of conversation. Error in refusing to permit a witness to fully detail a conversation with another party is harmless when the excluded part is otherwise brought out by other witnesses.

Baehr-Shive Co. v Stoner-McCray, 221-1186; 268 NW 53

Curtailed cross-examination. Conceding that a cross-examination was unduly curtailed, yet no error results when the complaining party offered the witness as his own witness, and brought out the testimony excluded on cross-examination.

Goben v Pav. Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

Oral testimony as to foreign statutes. No reversible error occurs in permitting a layman (without objection to his competency) to testify relative to the statute laws of a foreign state when such statutes, relative to the subject matter in question, were ultimately introduced in evidence.

Richmond v Whitaker, 218-606; 255 NW 681

(n) JUDGMENT OR ORDER

Refusal of proportional distribution on sale.

Hedges Co. v Holland, 203-1149; 212 NW 480

Error affecting only co-party.

Fellers v Sanders, 202-503; 210 NW 530

Form of judgment. Where a trustee under a trust agreement sues the maker of promissory notes on a series of notes the beneficial interest of which is in different parties, the defendant may not complain that a separate judgment is rendered on each count, and an aggregate judgment for the sum of all the separate judgments, the defendant being amply protected, by the terms of the judgments, from a double liability.

Iowa Co. v Clark, 215-929; 247 NW 211

Disregard of incompetent evidence. A competently supported judgment will not be reversed because of incompetent evidence.

Koht v Dean, 220-86; 261 NW 491

Schoolhouse site—permissible order of court.

An order of court commanding the school board forthwith to erect a schoolhouse on a specified site is unobjectionable when such site had already been legally selected by the board.

Sanderson v Board, 211-768; 234 NW 216

Failure to enter formal order for foreclosure.

In the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage and of a chattel mortgage clause embraced therein, the fact that the lower court failed to enter an order for the formal foreclosure of the chattel mortgage is quite inconsequential when the court did appoint a receiver of said mortgaged chattels and properly ruled that plaintiff's lien was superior to that of appellant's.

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

(o) ERRONEOUS SUBMISSION OF ISSUES TO JURY

Interpretation of contract by jury.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

Submission of dual controlling propositions.

In an action for services rendered a deceased, prejudicial error does not result from submitting to the jury the interrogatories, (1) whether there was an express contract for payment, and (2) whether there was a mutual expectation between the parties to pay and receive pay for the services; even tho the express contract was established beyond doubt.

In re Willmott, 215-546; 243 NW 634

Verdicts—submission of separate forms. In an action against the driver and owner of a truck, held, the omission to submit separate forms of verdict for each defendant was not prejudicial error, the court having specifically and correctly instructed the jury as to separate liability of each defendant.

Carlson v Decker, 218-54; 253 NW 923

Submitting unpleaded issue. Slight inaccuracy in submitting a pleaded item of damages will not be deemed the submission of an unpleaded issue when the jury could not have been misled.

Siesseger v Puth, 211-775; 234 NW 540

Erroneous submission of unsupported damages. The submission to the jury, in an action for damages, of an unsupported measure of damages constitutes error, but record reviewed and held harmless to the complaining defendant.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 273 NW 169

Improper submission of interrogatories. The submission to the jury, at the request of the defendant, of special interrogatories improper in form and without prior submission to counsel for plaintiff, does not constitute prejudicial error, when the jury was told to answer the interrogatories only in case it found for plaintiff, and when the jury found for defendant.

Baron v Indemnity Co., 218-305; 255 NW 496

Will contests—contract of settlement—fraud and undue influence. In action to set aside contract for settlement of will contest, representations that "lawyers would get all the property" and that devisee "did not need a lawyer" were not fraudulent representations, and failure of court to submit issue of undue influence and constructive fraud was not error under the evidence.

Smith v Smith, (NOR); 230 NW 401

(D) INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY

Harmless error—stating who asked instructions. Stating in instructions that certain instructions were given at the request of a named party does not constitute reversible error, but such practice should be avoided.

Johnson v McVicker, 216-654; 247 NW 488

Failure to find conclusively proven fact.

Schipfer v Stone, 206-328; 218 NW 568

Hypercritical objection.

State v Joy, 203-536; 211 NW 213

Submission of unsupported issue.

State v Lamberti, 204-670; 215 NW 752

Instructions as regards note not in issue.

Farmers Bk. v DeWolf, 212-312; 233 NW 524

Omission of conclusively established fact. The erroneous omission from an instruction of a fact element which stands conclusively established in the testimony is harmless.

State v Cordaro, 206-347; 218 NW 477

McClary v Railway, 209-67; 227 NW 646

Obviating error by construction as a whole. Inferential error in one instruction may be wholly removed by construing the instructions as a whole.

Cuthbertson v Hoffa, 205-666; 216 NW 733

Nonprejudicial instructions. An instruction to the effect that if the defendant failed to yield to another motorist one-half of the traveled way, the jury, "in the absence of justifiable excuse", might find the defendant negligent, cannot be deemed prejudicial to a defendant who established no excuse whatever.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Imputed negligence. Instruction on the subject of imputed negligence held nonprejudicial.

Sutton v Moreland, 214-337; 242 NW 75

Probate claim—agreement with decedent—claimant incompetent to testify. In probate action to establish a claim based upon an express agreement of decedent that claimant's services should be paid for from decedent's estate, an instruction that claimant was not permitted to testify as to agreement between her and decedent, and that if any agreement was in fact made between the parties, it must be proved by testimony other than that of claimant, was not prejudicial to defendant in that jury would believe that it applied to the communication of the contract to claimant through her father, who had been informed by decedent as to the nature of the agreement—there being other testimony of the communication, and the trial court having excluded the testimony of the father after objection of defendant.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Instruction on immaterial, nonprejudicial evidence. A will contestant's contention that it was error to instruct regarding a nonmaterial exhibit—a memorandum by a deceased attorney, who drew the will—although well founded, held to be error without prejudice when the paper and the conversation connected therewith were not necessary for proponents to make a prima facie case of the due and legal execution of the will and the genuineness of the signatures.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Fraud of one defendant only. An instruction to the effect that, if any of several defendants by fraudulent concealment prevented the plaintiff from discovering an original fraud

IV HARMLESS ERROR—concluded
(p) INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY—concluded perpetrated upon him, the statute of limitation would thereby be tolled, is harmless (if erroneous) when the record quite conclusively established the wrongful connection of all of the defendants with such fraudulent concealment.

Pullan v Struthers, 201-1179; 207 NW 235

Harmless inaccuracy. Instructions relative to acquiring negotiable promissory notes by "assignment," instead of by "indorsement," are quite harmless, when complainant does not claim the rights of a holder in due course.

First St. Bank v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767

Inadvertent use of words in instructions.

State v Hughey, 208-842; 226 NW 371

Undue burden on appellee.

Lange v Bedell, 203-1194; 212 NW 354

V CURING ERROR

Curing error by oral or written instructions. See under §§11491-11493, 13944 (VI)

Error cured by granting new trial. An erroneous ruling against a party necessarily becomes harmless when he is granted a new trial.

Murray v Ins. Co., 204-1108; 216 NW 702

Curing erroneous docketing. The erroneous docketing on the equity side of the calendar of an action of forcible entry and detainer becomes inconsequential when subsequent pleadings put title in issue and thereby convert the original law action into an equitable action.

Suiter v Wehde, 218-200; 254 NW 33

Error cured by verdict. Error in instructions relative to manslaughter is inconsequential when the jury convicts the accused of first degree murder.

State v Troy, 206-859; 220 NW 95

Erroneous instructions rendered harmless by verdict.

Rawleigh Co. v Moel, 215-843; 246 NW 782

Remittitur. An erroneous and manifestly inadvertent instruction as to damages may be such as to be curable by a remittitur.

Lee v Ins. Co., 214-932; 241 NW 403

Error harmless because of remittitur. Error in instructions relative to the computation of the amount of a verdict may be cured by a remittitur.

In re Willmott, 215-546; 243 NW 634

Remittitur cures error. In an action against an estate to recover a money judgment for one-third of the value thereof (tried prior to the closing of the estate), any error in submitting to the jury the question of the net value of the estate is rendered harmless by the action of the plaintiff in stipulating to remit from the judgment a proportional amount of the ultimate costs of administration.

In re Anderson, 203-985; 213 NW 567

Dual judgments—remittitur. When two separate judgments are entered in the same action—one on the return of the verdict, and one on the ruling for new trial—the formal remitting of the prior judgment removes all error.

Lynch v Railway, 215-1119; 245 NW 219

Motion to direct verdict—curing erroneous denial. When plaintiff, at the close of his evidence, has not made a jury question for recovery, the erroneous overruling of defendant's motion for a directed verdict will not be deemed reversible error when, at the close of all the evidence, the evidence does reveal such jury question.

Carr v Bankers Assn., 222-411; 269 NW 494; 107 ALR 1080

Excessive damages. Error in instructions which might authorize an excessive recovery may be conclusively negated by special jury findings.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

Inaccurate limitation on recovery cured by instruction. Where a plaintiff itemized his general and particular damages in a personal injury action, the failure of the court to specifically say to the jury that it must not allow more on any item than the amount as stated in the petition, nor more than the aggregate of said items, is nonprejudicial when the evidence would not support a greater verdict on any particular item than as itemized, and when the verdict was materially less than the claim for general damages, and when the court specifically instructed the jury that it could not allow any item of damages in a greater sum than "established by the evidence."

Wosoba v Kenyon, 215-226; 243 NW 569

Abstract curing error. Error of the court in improperly taking judicial notice of the pendency of another action becomes quite harmless when the appellant demonstrates by his abstract of the record that said other action was actually pending.

Benjamin v Jackson, 207-581; 223 NW 383

Inaccurate instruction cured by testimony. A party's admissions and testimony may render an inaccurate instruction quite harmless.

Hefen v Brown, 208-325; 223 NW 763

Nullifying error. The act of the court in wholly withdrawing the issue of "reckless" operation of an automobile nullifies any former error of the court in refusing to direct a verdict on the ground of absence of evidence of reckless operation.

Thompson v Farrand, 217-160; 251 NW 44

Curing error in argument. An oral admonition by the court to the jury, during argument, not to consider a certain statement by counsel, ordinarily cures any error resulting from the making of the statement.

Stingley v Crawford, 219-509; 258 NW 316

Improper evidence excluded by proper submission. In an action for damages resulting solely from the "inconvenience and discomfort in the occupancy and enjoyment of property" because of a nuisance, evidence tending to show that the nuisance was unsanitary, and might be injurious to health, becomes harmless when the court submits the issues strictly in accordance with the pleadings.

Chase v Winterset, 203-1361; 214 NW 591; 37 NCCA 228

Reception of evidence. Error in the reception of incompetent testimony relative to the physical condition of an injured party is ordinarily nullified by striking the testimony and specifically admonishing the jury to disregard such stricken testimony.

McKee v Iowa Co., 204-44; 214 NW 564

Errors against prevailing party. While a defendant, on an appeal from an order granting plaintiff a new trial, may not ordinarily show that he was sinned against by the adverse and erroneous rulings of the trial court, yet he may assign error on the refusal of the trial court, at the close of all the evidence, to sustain his motion for a directed verdict, because, if he were legally entitled to a directed verdict, such fact would ordinarily be fatal to plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

See Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

Death of absent witness. An order refusing a continuance which was asked for because of the absence of a witness will be sustained when it appears that the absent witness has died since the trial.

Suiter v Wehde, 218-200; 254 NW 38

Handwriting expert—jury admonition. If evidence, erroneously admitted during the progress of a trial, is distinctly withdrawn by the court, the error is cured, except where it is manifest that the prejudicial effect on the jury remained despite its exclusion. Testimony by a handwriting expert, who referred to notes, which were merely the basis or reason for his opinion as to the genuineness of signatures to a will, held not within the exception.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Points presentable by nonappellant. An appellee, without presentation of error points, may show, if he can, that he was so erred against as to entirely neutralize any errors against appellant.

Ford v Dille, 174-243; 156 NW 513

Taylor v Sch. Dist., 181-544; 164 NW 878

State v Sch. Dist., 188-959; 176 NW 976

Finley v Thorne, 209-343; 226 NW 103

Miller v Surety Co., 209-1221; 229 NW 909

See Voorhees v Arnold, 108-77; 78 NW 795

Satisfaction of unlawfully taxed costs. Error in taxing attorney fees when the instrument sued on does not provide therefor is fully cured by a statement in the written argument on appeal by the attorney in whose favor the taxation was had to the effect that he had fully released and satisfied the judgment for such fees, such statement, tho irregularly presented, being irrevocably binding on the attorney.

Koontz v Clark Bros., 209-62; 227 NW 584

Withdrawn testimony. Testimony, in an action for malicious prosecution, relative to the return of an indictment against plaintiff but without proof that defendant was connected therewith, reveals no prejudicial error when the court ultimately withdrew said testimony in toto.

Richmond v Whitaker, 218-606; 255 NW 681

Instructions—reasonable value—admissions from pleadings. In action to recover price of corn sold to elevator, an instruction injecting element of reasonable value was erroneous where the pleading alleged express agreement on price, and a further erroneous instruction stating what defendant's answer admitted, but omitting qualification in defendant's pleadings, was not cured by instruction referring to a substituted oral agreement.

Hartwig v Elevator Co., (NOR); 226 NW 116

VI INVITED ERROR

Inviting court to err—not permitted. A litigant will not be permitted to entrap the court by an invitation to commit error.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Nonreviewable subject matter—invited rulings of court. A litigant who moves to strike a pleading or to require it to be made more specific may not have the rulings on his motion reviewed on certiorari; and this is necessarily true even tho it be conceded, arguendo, that the pleading in question was not legally on the calendar.

Holcomb v Franklin, 212-1159; 235 NW 474

Party entitled to allege error. A party may not lodge a complaint against the reception in evidence of matter which he himself caused to be introduced.

In re O'Hara, 204-1331; 217 NW 245

Estoppel to allege error. A defendant may not question the action of the court in sustaining his motion to withdraw allegations of specific negligence and to submit the cause on a general allegation of negligence.

Anderson v Railway, 208-369; 226 NW 151

Estoppel to allege error. Counsel will not be permitted to equivocate relative to proper and material questions asked him by the court and thereupon base error on the ensuing colloquy.

State v Woodmansee, 212-596; 233 NW 725

VI INVITED ERROR—concluded

Hearsay testimony—reception—inviting error. Defendant who, on cross-examination of the state's witness, first enters the forbidden field of hearsay testimony on a certain point, is not in an advantageous position to object when the state, on redirect, follows into the same field of inquiry, especially when the testimony erroneously received is not inherently prejudicial and is practically that which was brought out by defendant on cross-examination.

State v Philpott, 222-1334; 271 NW 617

Instructions inviting excess recovery.

Siesseger v Puth, 211-775; 234 NW 540

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442

Claims — statute of limitations — equitable avoidance by court. Whether the "peculiar circumstances" pleaded as an excuse for not presenting a claim before the expiration of the statutory one year are sufficient to justify the granting of equitable relief is a question for the court, but claimant may not acquiesce in trying the issue to the jury and then predicate thereon.

 Verdict-urging or coercive instructions. See under §11493 (I)

Dismissal of part of defendants. Under a plea that the affections of a wife had been alienated by the joint and several acts and conduct of several defendants, the court may, on a motion for a new trial, sustain the motion as to certain defendants and dismiss the action as to such defendants.

Weyer v Vollbrecht, 208-914; 224 NW 568

Remand—right to amend. A plaintiff manifestly does not set up a new and different cause of action when, after remand on appeal in a law action based on negligence, he, by allowable pleadings, rephrases and elaborates an adjudicated ground of negligence which was embraced in his pleadings at the time of the original trial.

Lahr v Railway, 218-1155; 252 NW 525

Remand—utilizing adjudicated ground of negligence. Plaintiff, in an action based on negligence, who fails on appeal to sustain a verdict in his favor against an employer based solely on the doctrine of respondeat superior, may, on remand and retrial, avail himself of a ground of negligence which was alleged by him on the original trial, but which was unadjudicated, and which, if established, would render the defendant liable irrespective of the doctrine of respondeat superior.

I NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY

(a) IN GENERAL

Decisions reviewable—restricting appeal to matters in notice. A notice of appeal specifying only the overruling of a motion for a new trial restricts the appeal to such matters as were raised in the trial court on said motion.

Shultz v Shultz, 224-205; 275 NW 562

Appellant bound by election of remedies. A litigant who chooses to move for a new trial, and is granted such, and therefore allows the time for appeal from the judgment against him to elapse without action, and thereafter suffers an adverse order setting aside the order for a new trial, may not, in appealing from said latter order, so frame his appeal as to secure a review of any question except the question of the correctness of said latter order.

Selby v McDonald, 219-823; 259 NW 485

Objections to evidence—re-raising unnecessary. Where the immateriality of evidence objected to is plainly discernible and no further particularity is required to apprise the trial court of grounds of objections, it is not necessary that these same identical matters be again presented to trial court by way of motion for new trial before they may be considered by supreme court.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-149; 287 NW 829

Granting on untenable grounds—appeal by appellee. Whether on appeal from an order granting a new trial on an untenable ground, appellee may save the ruling by taking a cross-appeal, and show that the trial court erred in not sustaining the motion for a new trial on grounds assigned by him that were tenable, quaere. (See State v School Dist., 188-959.)

Kessel v Hunt, 215-117; 244 NW 714

Administrator—liability on bond—existing judgment—when new trial improper. Under the general rule that a judgment against an administrator is conclusive against the surety on his bond, where a judgment against an administrator for misappropriation of funds stands unreversed, it is error to set aside judgment on a bond and give the surety a new trial, since such order would not ipso facto vitiate a former order fixing the administrator's liability.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Rendering judgment on appeal instead of new trial. Where appeal is not only from order denying new trial but from all other erroneous rulings and where evidence as to completed gift inter vivos would not change on retrial, the supreme court may render such judgment as inferior court should have done.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Nonliability of city—reversible error. It is reversible error to grant a new trial because the court had omitted to submit to the jury the question whether the city was negligent in permitting an alley crossing to remain in a slightly sunken saucer-shaped condition, and in permitting water to accumulate in the depression and to freeze in a smooth condition, such acts, if done, not being such as to render the city liable in case of an accident.

Turner v Winterset, 210-458; 229 NW 229; 37 NCCA 524

(b) POWER AND DUTY OF COURT IN GENERAL

Grounds for ruling—correction of order. The trial court has power to so correct an order for a new trial as to show the grounds upon which the order was made.

Euclid Bank v Nesbit, 201-506; 207 NW 761

Record required. An order for a new trial entered on the motion of the court must (at least on the demand of the adverse party) be accompanied by a record showing of the facts which caused the court so to act.

Euclid Bank v Nesbit, 201-506; 207 NW 761

Order for new trial—effect. An order, on appeal, for a new trial on the ground of a conceded mutual mistake in entering into a written stipulation for judgment necessarily works a setting aside, not only of the judgment, but of the stipulation; and, after procedendo, the trial court does not exceed its jurisdiction in entering a formal order to said effect.

Hall v Dist. Court, 206-179; 215 NW 606

Refusal to direct verdict as ground. The rule of law (206 Iowa 1263) that the trial court should not set aside the verdict of the jury and grant a new trial, when such verdict is the verdict which the court erroneously refused to direct at the close of the evidence, is not applicable when the trial court, under the record, properly denied a directed verdict.

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

Verdict set aside—criminal more readily than civil. Where the verdict is clearly against the weight of evidence, a new trial should be granted, and the appellate court will interfere more readily in a criminal case than in a civil one.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

Taking case from jury—scintilla evidence rule. In this state a mere scintilla of evidence will not raise a jury question and the trial court will be upheld in directing a verdict where, if the case were submitted and a verdict returned against the moving party, it would be the trial court's duty to set it aside.

Donahoe v Denman, 223-1273; 275 NW 155

Lower court's discretion—reviewability. Action of district court in passing on motion for new trial is largely a discretionary matter, and, unless abuse of discretion is shown, such ruling will not be disturbed on appeal.

Meyer v Noel, (NOR); 206 NW 290

Court mistakenly directing verdict—new trial proper. Ordinarily the question of contributory negligence, being peculiarly for the jury, where the trial court mistakenly directs a verdict for defendant on the ground of plaintiff's negligence, the court does not err in later granting a new trial.

Williams v Kearney, 224-1006; 278 NW 180

I NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY—
continued

(b) POWER AND DUTY OF COURT IN GENERAL—
concluded

Verdict for plaintiff allowable under evidence. A defendant truck driver's contention, in a case involving a truck and passenger automobile collision on a bridge, that under the evidence a verdict should have been directed for him and that therefore when a verdict was returned in his favor, the granting of a new trial was error, is a contention without merit, when the evidence was such that the jury could have found the defendant negligent, that his negligence was the proximate cause of the accident, and that neither plaintiff nor plaintiff's driver was contributorily negligent.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-1138; 281 NW 790

Municipal court—filing motions after verdict—extending time—jurisdiction. The municipal court has jurisdiction to enter an order extending the time to file a motion for a new trial and exceptions to instructions and judgment non obstante veredicto. Such order is reviewable by appeal, not by certiorari.

Eller v Municipal Ct., 225-501; 281 NW 441

(c) NUMEROUSLY POINTED MOTION

Numerously pointed motion. An order which grants a new trial on a numerously pointed motion therefor will not be interfered with on appeal when one of the grounds is that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, and the record shows the testimony is in serious conflict.

Lange v Nissen, 204-1080; 216 NW 697

Hawkins v Burton, 225-1138; 281 NW 790

Numerously pointed motion. A numerously pointed motion for a new trial, sustained generally by the trial court, will not be reviewed on appeal, especially when the basis of the alleged errors in sustaining the motion does not appear in the record.

Hanna v Ins. Co., 202-1351; 212 NW 114

Numerously pointed motion. The sustaining generally of a many-pointed motion for a new trial will be affirmed if any of the grounds are meritorious.

In re Richardson, 202-328; 208 NW 374

Dunnegan v Railway, 202-787; 211 NW 364

Many-pointed motion. Principle reaffirmed that the sustaining, generally, of a many-pointed motion for a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is made to appear that the motion could not have been properly sustained on any of the assigned grounds.

Jelsma v English, 210-1065; 231 NW 304

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

Doty v Jamison, 214-1321; 243 NW 359

Duty to contest. Where several grounds were stated in a motion for a new trial, there could be no reversal of the order granting such new trial when the appellant made no attempt to show that none of the grounds were good.

Olinger v Tiefenthaler, 226-847; 285 NW 137

Order for new trial—when conclusive on appellate court. An order granting a new trial will not be disturbed when any one of several grounds therefor appears to be well founded, or when, conceding the insufficiency of any one ground, all the grounds when viewed collectively, fairly justify the conclusion that the party granted a new trial has not had a fair trial.

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

(d) DISCRETION OF COURT

False testimony. The granting of a new trial because of the false testimony of the prevailing party will not be disturbed in the absence of a strong showing of abuse of discretion by the court.

Moore v Goldberg, 205-346; 217 NW 877

Discretion of court. Principle reaffirmed that the discretion of the trial court to order a new trial is greater than that of the appellate court.

Lewellen v Haynes, 215-132; 244 NW 701

Court's inherent power to set aside verdict. Where a party has not received a fair and impartial trial, the trial court has inherent power to set aside the verdict.

Brunssen v Parker, 227-1364; 291 NW 535

Abuse of discretion needed for review. A broad discretion is lodged in the trial court in the matter of granting a new trial, which order, in the absence of abuse, will not be disturbed on appeal.

McQuillen v Meyers, 211-388; 233 NW 502

Eby v Sanford, 223-805; 273 NW 918

Williams v Kearney, 224-1006; 278 NW 180

Hawkins v Burton, 225-1138; 281 NW 790

Granting new trial—sustained unless discretion abused. It must clearly appear that there has been an abuse of the discretion lodged in the trial court before the supreme court will interfere with the ruling granting a new trial.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

Abuse of discretion necessary for reversal. Where evidence is conflicting, the granting of a new trial because the verdict is contrary to the evidence will not be reversed unless an abuse of discretion by the trial court appears.

Brunssen v Parker, 227-1364; 291 NW 535

Inconsistent and improbable evidence. A new trial was properly granted by lower court when defendant secured a verdict on evidence that abounded with inconsistencies and improbabilities, and ruling cannot be disturbed on appeal unless new trial could not have been sustained on any of the grounds urged, or abuse of discretion by court.

Christensen v Howson, (NOR); 226 NW 34

Discretion of court. A large discretion is lodged in the trial court in determining whether a new trial should be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, since the trial court has a much better opportunity for seeing and judging how the testimony given, and that afterward discovered, bears upon the issues, and for determining whether the facts offered are similar or dissimilar.

Larson v Meyer, 227-512; 288 NW 663

Order for new trial—reviewability. Principles reaffirmed that:

1. A trial court order for a new trial upon a definite question of law, is reversible, if erroneous, like every other erroneous ruling at law, if prejudicial, is reversible, while,

2. A trial-court order in general terms for a new trial will be deemed discretionary and reversible only when the trial court has abused its discretion.

Kessel v Hunt, 215-117; 244 NW 714

Manders v Dallam, 215-137; 244 NW 724

Piper v Brickley, 220-1090; 264 NW 29

Refusing new trial reviewed more readily than granting. While error may arise in granting a new trial, appellate court will more readily interfere when a refusal than when a grant of new trial occurs.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Order overruling motion—case scanned more closely. Supreme court scans cases on appeal from order overruling motion for new trial more closely than where such motion is sustained.

Meyer v Noel, (NOR); 206 NW 290

Granting new trial—review on appeal. A ruling by the trial court granting a new trial will be reviewed on appeal and, if erroneous, will be reversed, altho the supreme court will interfere more readily when the new trial is refused than when it is granted.

Hupp v Doolittle, 226-814; 285 NW 247

Lower court's discretion—reviewability—retrial. Unless there is an abuse of discretion by lower court in granting motion for new trial, the supreme court will not interfere with such ruling on appeal, and when new trial is granted the case stands for trial the same as it did when issues were joined.

Upp v Walker, (NOR); 212 NW 114

Deference to trial court. An order for a new trial will not be disturbed on an imperfect appellate record which, however, reveals the fact (1) that the court was not satisfied with his submission of the cause, and (2) that the instruction did not clearly present the outstanding issue.

Turner v Motor Co., 204-421; 213 NW 765

Granting new trial—noninterference without abuse of discretion. The trial court's conclusion that it erred in giving instructions and therefore grants a new trial will not, except in a clear case of abuse of its broad discretion, be disturbed on appeal.

Bletzer v Wilson, 224-884; 276 NW 836

Discretion in reopening—new trial for abuse. Granting or refusing a motion to reopen a case to admit further evidence is within the sound discretion of the court, but if a refusal to reopen is an abuse of discretion, a new trial should be granted on appeal.

In re Canterbury, 224-1080; 278 NW 210

Nonabuse of discretion. In action for forcible entry and detainer, where there was evidence of error in instructions, in that court assumed that an alleged lease was made with agent of plaintiff with authority to make an oral lease, and that court did not specifically define to jury necessary elements of an oral lease, and there was also question that verdict was not supported by evidence, granting new trial held not an abuse of discretion.

Holman v Rook, (NOR); 271 NW 612

Verdict contrary to evidence—setting aside—nonabuse of discretion. In an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in a head-on automobile collision occurring at night near a crest of a hill on a narrow paved country highway, where the vehicle in which plaintiff was riding was then on the left-hand side of the highway attempting to pass another car traveling in the same direction, the setting aside of the verdict for plaintiff on the ground that verdict was contrary to the evidence, and granting a new trial, was not an abuse of discretion.

Brunssen v Parker, 227-1364; 291 NW 535

Absence of defendant at trial. When no continuance was asked, trial court held not to have abused discretion in refusing new trial on ground that defendant was not present at trial.

Bergen v Baker, (NOR); 205 NW 327

(e) NEW TRIAL AS TO PART OF ISSUES OR PARTIES

Denial of new trial—appeal—questions reviewable. A party who appeals from an adverse ruling on his motion for a new trial may have a review of the grounds specifically assigned by him in his said motion even tho he does not appeal from the main or final judgment.

Spaulding v Miller, 216-948; 249 NW 642

Granting—as to some of parties—as to one or more counts. A new trial may be granted as to some defendants and denied as to others, and may be awarded as to one or more counts and refused as to other counts where this can be done without danger of confusion of prejudice.

Olinger v Tiefenthaler, 226-847; 285 NW 137

I NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY—concluded

(f) ESTOPPEL, WAIVER, OR AGREEMENTS AFFECTING RIGHT

Time of application—fatal delay. A defendant is very properly denied a new trial when she had knowledge of the entry of the default judgment almost simultaneously with its entry, and negligently delayed filing her petition for a new trial until after the lapse of nine months and the passing of three terms of court, especially when her petition presents no fact coming to her knowledge since the entry of the judgment complained of.

Anderson v Anderson, 209-1143; 229 NW 694

Waiver of motion—insufficient showing. A party will not be deemed to waive his motion for a new trial by having his motion non obstante veredicto sustained when both motions were prepared, filed, and treated as one motion, and where the motion for new trial was properly sustained, and the motion non obstante veredicto was improperly sustained.

Pomerantz v Cement Corp., 212-1007; 237 NW 443

(g) SUCCESSIVE APPLICATIONS

No annotations in this volume

II GENERAL ERRORS AND IRREGULARITIES

Failure of justice in general. The broad discretion lodged in the trial court to grant a new trial embraces the right to grant a new trial because of a series of errors against the defeated party, even tho no one of said errors would, in and of itself, justify such order.

Morton v Ins. Co., 218-846; 254 NW 325; 96 ALR 315

Inconsistent and improbable evidence. A new trial was properly granted by lower court when defendant secured a verdict on evidence that abounded with inconsistencies and improbabilities, and ruling cannot be disturbed on appeal unless new trial could not have been sustained on any of the grounds urged, or abuse of discretion by court.

Christensen v Howson, (NOR); 226 NW 34

Conclusion of witness usurping jury function. Prejudicial error results from permitting the question whether a party to an action had ever "agreed" to accept a named sum in satisfaction of his claim, and permitting a negative answer, when the existence of such agreement is the sole question before the jury.

Strand v Bleakley, 214-1116; 243 NW 306

Control of car—undue degree of care. An instruction, which, in effect, imposes upon the operator of an automobile an absolute duty to have his car under such control as to avoid injury to others, under all circumstances, is fundamentally erroneous because imposing an undue degree of care, and necessarily justifies an order for new trial.

Gregory v Suhr, 221-1283; 268 NW 14

Instructions ignoring grounds of negligence. The trial court is within its legal discretion in granting a new trial to plaintiff because the instructions, in fact, ignored a material allegation by the plaintiff as to the speed of defendant's car.

Lewellen v Haynes, 215-132; 244 NW 701

Reference to speed—granting new trial. A reference in an instruction to a motor vehicle speed of 60 miles per hour when the allegation in the petition of such speed was coerced by a ruling of the court, while not in itself sufficient to warrant a reversal, still justifies the trial court in granting a new trial when considered along with other alleged errors.

White v Zell, 224-359; 276 NW 76

Conflicting and unfair rulings. Reversible error results from (1) receiving incompetent testimony over plaintiff's objection, (2) striking such testimony at the close of defendant's testimony, and (3) reinstating such testimony, without warning to the plaintiff, after plaintiff had dismissed his witnesses and made his opening argument.

Braverman v Naso, 203-1297; 214 NW 574

Errors of commission and omission. The granting of a new trial, generally, will not be disturbed on appeal, when the record reveals the giving of instructions which were erroneous, and the failure to give instructions which the court was under duty to give without request.

Flickinger v Phillips, 221-837; 267 NW 101

Failure to submit nominal damages. Grounds for a new trial may not be predicated on a failure to submit to the jury the question of nominal damages.

Whittington v Bedford, 202-442; 210 NW 460

Erroneous direction of verdict. An order for a new trial is, of course, proper when the judgment entered was ordered by the court on an erroneous theory of the law on a material point. So held where the court treated both plaintiff and defendant as joint adventurers and directed a verdict against plaintiff on the erroneous theory that defendant's negligence was imputable to the plaintiff.

Thompson v Farrand, 217-160; 251 NW 44; 34 NCCA 398

Court mistakenly directing verdict. Ordinarily the question of contributory negligence, being peculiarly for the jury, where the trial court mistakenly directs a verdict for defendant on the ground of plaintiff's negligence, the court does not err in later granting a new trial.

Williams v Kearney, 224-1006; 278 NW 180

Cross-examination—discretion of court. The discretionary power of the trial court over cross-examinations will not be interfered with by the appellate court except in cases of clear abuse.

Rawleigh Co. v Bane, 218-154; 254 NW 18

Errors against prevailing party. While a defendant, on an appeal from an order granting plaintiff a new trial, may not, ordinarily, show that he was sinned against by the adverse and erroneous rulings of the trial court, yet he may assign error on the refusal of the trial court, at the close of all the evidence, to sustain his motion for a directed verdict because, if he was legally entitled to a directed verdict, such fact would ordinarily be fatal to plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

Election bribery—electric rate reduction—fulfillment after trial immaterial. When the court, after hearing an election contest, finds that candidates to municipal office did not participate in an illegal bribe by a local electric company offering a rate reduction and a rebate of impounded charges if the municipal ownership opponents were elected, the fact that, after the trial, the council repeals the municipal ownership ordinance and the company does reduce rates and repay impounded funds to consumers, adds nothing new to the proof of participation and does not warrant a new trial.

Van Der Zee v Means, 225-871; 281 NW 460; 121 ALR 558

III CONDUCT OF PARTIES

Talking with juror. A naked showing that a party to an action was seen talking to a juror in the court room and during a recess of the court is quite insufficient on which to base an order for a new trial.

Blakely v Cabelka, 207-959; 221 NW 451

Improper remarks in presence of jurors. Misconduct of a proponent of a will in the form of improper remarks in the presence of jurors must be shown to have been heard by said jurors.

Blakely v Cabelka, 207-959; 221 NW 451

Undue association of party and juror. The fact that the defendant in an action and one of the jurors, during a noon recess in the trial, rode together to the home of the defendant and had dinner together, and looked over the defendant's premises and then returned to the court without mentioning the action then on trial, furnishes plaintiff against whom verdict was rendered absolute grounds for a new trial.

Lynch v Kleindolph, 204-762; 216 NW 2; 55 ALR 745

Intimidation of witness. Misconduct of a proponent of a will in so intimidating a witness as to cause her to forget to testify to unstated and unrevealed matters is too indefinite to justify an order for a new trial.

Blakely v Cabelka, 207-959; 221 NW 451

Eavesdropping by witness. Misconduct of a proponent of a will in that after being excluded from the courtroom during the trial he attempted to listen to the testimony through a doorway must, at the least, be accompanied by a showing that proponent was successful in his attempt.

Blakely v Cabelka, 207-959; 221 NW 451

Exhibiting wounds to jury. During the final arguments in a personal injury case, the court may permit the plaintiff to seat himself alongside the jury in order that the jury may have a close-up view of wounds which, during the taking of testimony, have been fully described and exhibited to the jurors while some of them were twenty feet from the witnesses.

Mizner v Lohr, 213-1182; 238 NW 584

Exhibition of injured body. An injured party, in an action for damages, has a right to disrobe and exhibit to the jury his actual injury and the result thereof tho they present a most pitiable sight.

Olson v Tyner, 219-251; 257 NW 538

Fraud, etc. Evidence held insufficient to set aside a decree of divorce and to grant a new trial on the grounds of fraud and unavoidable casualty and misfortune.

McAtlin v McAtlin, 205-339; 217 NW 864

Inhering fraud. A final order of discharge of an administrator may not be set aside, opened up, or otherwise questioned on a showing of fraud which inheres in said order of discharge.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

Perjury. Perjury as to any intrinsic matter in an action is not a ground for a new trial.

Hewitt v Blaise, 202-1114; 211 NW 481

Perjury. Perjury on a material issue in a cause will not be recognized in an equitable action as sufficient ground to vacate a judgment or decree and to grant a new trial after the expiration of one year from the entry thereof.

Abell v Partello, 202-1236; 211 NW 868

False testimony. The granting of a new trial because of the false testimony of the prevailing party will not be disturbed in the absence of a strong showing of abuse of discretion by the court.

Moore v Goldberg, 205-346; 217 NW 877

Justifiable refusal of new trial. Refusal to grant a new trial on the ground that testi-

III CONDUCT OF PARTIES—concluded
mony on behalf of the prevailing party was perjured will not be overruled on appeal on a record showing that the perjury, if any, was not committed by the prevailing party himself or with his knowledge.

Weinhart v Smith, 211-242; 233 NW 26

Offer of false testimony. The fact that a party to an action has made a statement out of court inconsistent with his statements in court does not, manifestly, justify the conclusion that his statements in court are false and perjured.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

IV CONDUCT OF COUNSEL

Curing errors by instructions. See under §11493.

Finding of fact by trial court conclusive. A finding of fact by the trial court on a motion for new trial that alleged misconduct on the part of an attorney did not occur is conclusive on appeal.

Kessel v Hunt, 215-117; 244 NW 714

Discretion of court. The matter of granting a new trial for alleged misconduct of counsel is peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Revealing offer of compromise. Statements by plaintiff's counsel in his opening statement to the jury to the effect that defendant had offered to compromise the claim sued on, together with testimony by plaintiff to the same effect, constitutes reversible error, even tho said testimony is stricken from the record and the jury is admonished not to consider it.

Hoover v Ins. Co., 218-559; 255 NW 705

Persistent offer of immaterial matter. Persistent and flagrant efforts to inject immaterial and inflammatory matters into the record for the purpose of prejudicing the jury may constitute reversible error.

Vanarsdol v Farlow, 200-495; 203 NW 794

Reference to corporate capacity of party. A reference in argument to the corporate capacity of one of the parties to the action tho manifestly improper may not be reversible error when objection is promptly sustained, when the error is not repeated, and when the jury is promptly instructed to wholly disregard the reference.

Henriksen v Crandic Stages, 216-643; 246 NW 913

Voir dire examination as to casualty insurance. Asking jurors, in a personal damage action, whether any of them were directly or indirectly interested in any casualty insurance company is not necessarily prejudicially erroneous.

Tissue v Durin, 216-709; 246 NW 806

Improper reference to insured liability. The rule of law, in actions for personal injuries, that reversible error results from the willful injection, by plaintiff, into the record and before the jury, of the fact that defendant is carrying insurance against the liability sued on, is not violated:

1. By asking in good faith a juror on voir dire whether he is interested in any such insurance company; or

2. By asking a witness, in good faith, for legitimate testimony, and receiving an answer which, inter alia, reveals the fact of such insurance. (And especially when defendant's cross-examination accentuates the objectionable answer.)

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

Injecting liability insurance. In an automobile accident case where, in argument to jury, plaintiff's counsel developed an idea that the only party interested in preventing a verdict was the insurance company, the court recognized such tactics as being misconduct on the part of counsel.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-149; 287 NW 829

Persistent improper examination. Repeated attempts in the cross-examination of a defendant in a personal injury action to show that he had, on prior occasions, run over people, constitutes prejudicial error.

Shuck v Keefe, 205-365; 218 NW 31

Argument. Parading before the jury the poverty of the plaintiff and the riches of the defendant constitutes, in and of itself, reversible error.

Vanarsdol v Farlow, 200-495; 203 NW 794

Belittling injuries—retaliatory statements. Counsel who, in argument, belittles the personal injuries of the opposing party, may not complain if opposing counsel in reply figuratively magnifies said injuries.

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787

Asking improper (?) questions on cross-examination. Questions asked and excluded on an unjustifiably curtailed cross-examination reviewed, and held to reveal no misconduct on the part of the counsel in merely asking the questions.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Figure of speech. The employment in an argument of quite vivid figures of speech does not necessarily constitute prejudicial error.

Starry v Hanold, 202-1180; 211 NW 696

Responsive argument. Error may not be predicated on an argument which is responsive to the argument made by complainant, and especially so when the trial court affirmatively found that the argument was responsive.

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

Argument—latitude allowed. Counsel has the right to draw his own conclusions from the testimony even tho his logic may be faulty, or the opinions expressed or conclusions drawn may be unjust, so long as he keeps within the record and does not appeal to passion and prejudice rather than to reason.

Lawyer v Stansell, 217-111; 250 NW 887

Improper argument—presumptive cure. A party, whose objection to the argument of his opponent to the jury is sustained, must, in the absence of any additional demand, be presumed fully satisfied with the curative effect of the ruling of the court.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

V CONDUCT OF COURT

Absence of judge—effect. A defendant may not predicate error on the sole fact that the judge was absent from the courtroom during defendant's argument, when it appears the judge was at all times within call, and when nothing happened detrimental to the defendant.

State v Dobry, 217-858; 250 NW 702

Unjustifiable refusal to call jurors. When jurors are present in court when a motion for a new trial comes on for hearing, it is reversible error for the court to refuse to order their personal examination as to specified misconduct which, if established, would reveal grounds for a new trial; and especially so when it appears that the jurors had refused to make their personal affidavits as to the facts.

Skinner v Cron, 206-338; 220 NW 341

Assumption of fact. It is not error for the court to refer to the testimony of a witness as a "fact" when such reference is manifestly for the purpose of correcting counsel in the assertion that the testimony was an "opinion" or "conclusion".

State v Bourgeoise, 210-1129; 229 NW 231

Examination by court. An impartial examination of a witness by the court is proper.

State v Weber, 204-137; 214 NW 531

Examination by court—error waived by failure to object. Where an attorney testified that he had talked with the defendant with reference to a certain car before preparing a mortgage on the car, and the court questioned him in order to decide whether there had been an attorney-client relationship on which the testimony should be excluded, when no objections were made or exceptions taken to the examination by the court, it was proper to refuse a new trial on the ground that the court had made misleading statements of the law and was guilty of misconduct in discrediting the testimony.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Cross-examination—fatal undue limitation. Undue limitation on the cross-examination of a witness may constitute reversible error. So held where the examining party offered to prove, on cross-examination, material matter which went to the heart of the controversy.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exchange, 221-1382; 268 NW 155

Withdrawal of material and competent testimony. The action of the court in withdrawing from the jury material and competent testimony relative to the limited facilities of a carrier necessarily furnishes ground for a new trial.

Dunnegan v Railway, 202-787; 211 NW 364

Exclusion of relevant and material evidence. The exclusion of relevant and material evidence offered by an appellant is quite harmless when a review of the entire record, including the rejected evidence, reveals the fact that appellee was legally entitled to the judgment rendered in his favor.

Butler Co. v Elliott, 211-1068; 233 NW 669

Court's own conclusion of error. The granting of a new trial on the ground that the court was convinced that it had made error, prejudicial to the defeated party, in summarily withdrawing from the jury, without explanation, material exhibits, will not be interfered with by the appellate court.

White v Walker, 212-1100; 237 NW 499

Undue advantage to party. On the issue whether an oral contract was in fact entered into, the court must not allow one party to testify to his intention and understanding and refuse the other party the same right.

Bremhorst v Coal Co., 202-1251; 211 NW 898

Recital of unsupported issue. The inclusion, in the court's recital of the issues, of the defendant's wholly unsupported allegation that the deceased was intoxicated at the time of the collision in question, without any withdrawal of said issue, justifies the court in granting plaintiff, against whom verdict was rendered, a new trial.

Fort v Ferguson, 218-756; 255 NW 501

Confused instructions. The granting of a new trial will not be interfered with by the appellate court when probably granted by the court in the belief that its withdrawal of certain issues and its unfortunate references to these defenses at inopportune times in the instructions were prejudicial.

Christensen v Bank, 213-892; 255 NW 520

New trial—overruling order. Notwithstanding the deference due the trial court when it grants a new trial, nevertheless, if the direction of a verdict for the defendant was right as a matter of law, the action of the court in setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial will be reversed.

Hart v Stence, 219-55; 257 NW 434; 97 ALR 535; 36 NCCA 716

V-a1 CONDUCT OF BAILIFF

Unsworn bailiff—effect. Where a jury is ordered kept together during the trial of a criminal case, the fact that the court bailiff who accompanied the jurors on the first adjournment of court was not specially sworn as required (§13861, C., '31), does not constitute reversible error when it appears the bailiff protected the jurors exactly as he would have protected them had he been so sworn and had respected his oath.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

Bailiff's witticism not prejudicial. Bailiff's remark, that jury might be kept for 30 days before the court would accept a verdict that they had "agreed to disagree", is not prejudicial when the jury themselves treated the remark as a joke.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

VI CONDUCT OF JURORS

Discussion. See 11 ILR 268—Jurors' affidavits as to misconduct

False answers on voir dire. False answers by a juror on his voir dire do not constitute grounds for new trial unless shown to be prejudicial.

Elmore v Railway, 207-862; 224 NW 28

Disregarding instructions. It is the duty of the jury to follow the instructions of the court, and where it clearly appears that the jury, in arriving at its verdict, disregarded the instructions, a new trial must be granted.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

Misconduct of jurors not appearing of record. Argument based on the alleged misconduct of jurors, when such misconduct does not appear of record, will be wholly ignored.

McDonald v Webb, 222-1402; 271 NW 521

Discretion of court. The discretion of the trial court in granting a new trial because of the conduct of a juror will not be interfered with in the absence of a showing of abuse.

Chicago JSL Bank v Eggers, 214-710; 243 NW 193

Harmless error. Misconduct of the jury is not ground for a new trial when the prevailing party is entitled, as a matter of law, to the judgment accorded to him.

Butler Co. v Elliott, 211-1068; 233 NW 669

New trial—overruling motion to strike amendment—no prejudice. Even tho the overruling of a motion to strike an amendment to plaintiff's motion for new trial was error, there was no prejudice to defendant where motion for new trial was sustained generally, and where grounds of original motion, to wit: that verdict was not sustained by evidence and that plaintiff did not receive a fair and impartial trial, were good—in which case there can be no reversal.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

Arbitrary rejection of evidence. A new trial must be granted when the jury, in a case in which plaintiff is legally entitled to recover substantial damages, arbitrarily ignores and rejects the uncontroverted evidences as to damages.

Mendenhall v Struck, 207-1094; 224 NW 95

Ignoring unquestioned evidence and instructions. Grounds for a new trial result from the action of the jury in returning a "no damage" verdict in the face of an unquestioned instruction as to the measure of damages, and in the face of definite and undisputed testimony of substantial damages.

Madison v Hood, 207-495; 223 NW 178; 39 NCCA 393

Use of unauthorized evidence. Prejudicial error results from permitting a jury to take with them to their jury room and to consider the entire sheet of a letter when only the signature thereon was introduced in evidence, and when the unintroduced matter is materially prejudicial to complainant.

In re Merrill, 202-837; 211 NW 361

Allegations stricken from motion—not supported by affidavit. There was no prejudicial error in striking on motion, from a motion for new trial in a criminal case, allegations that the jury had considered matters not in evidence, when the only affidavit in support of the allegations was by an attorney who said no more than that he believed the allegations to be true, and there was no request that the jurors be called for examination.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Juror riding with county attorney. Action of trial juror in riding with county attorney to and from place of trial, while not intentional misconduct and even tho no actual wrong resulted, casts suspicion on jury's verdict, is against public policy, and is ground for a new trial.

State v Neville, 227-329; 288 NW 83

Illness of juror—held nonprejudicial. Evidence held to show that illness of a juror was not prejudicial to defendants.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Conflicting affidavits. The findings by the trial court on conflicting affidavits, relative to alleged misconduct of jurors, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787

Juror as jury-room witness. It is not necessarily ground for a new trial that a juror proffers in the jury room a statement of fact of which there is no evidence. Complainant must show prejudice.

Conway v Alexander, 200-705; 205 NW 351

Evidence proffered by juror. The assertion by a juror during the deliberations of the jury that one of the interested litigants had "approached" him and attempted to "influence" him may constitute prejudicial error.

In re Merrill, 202-837; 211 NW 361

Assertion of prejudicial facts outside record. A defeated party is entitled to a new trial as a matter of right when he establishes that different jurors during their deliberations and for the purpose of inducing the adverse verdict gave utterance to prejudicial and inflammatory statements of fact, derogatory to said party, and wholly outside of any evidence before the jury.

Farmers Bk. v Smith, 212-529; 234 NW 798

Juror as jury-room witness. A juror who, during the deliberations of the jury, asserts statements of fact which are vitally material on the pending issues and which are wholly outside the record, and which are, in some degree, relied on by other jurors, is guilty of such misconduct as to require a new trial.

City N. Bank v Steele, 220-736; 263 NW 233

Verdict impeachable for misconduct—facts admissible for determination. On a motion for new trial, jurors may not impeach their own verdict by evidence of jury-room discussion which influenced but inheres in their verdict. However, misconduct prejudicially affecting the result may be shown, and the court may hear all the facts to determine if misconduct exists.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Juror advocating his belief—not misconduct. It is neither misconduct nor ground for new trial for a juror to advocate his conclusions in the jury room, even though he emphatically and persistently favors one party or the other.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

Juror's affidavit of conduct while deliberating—effect. Verdicts and trials cannot be destroyed ordinarily by an affidavit of a juror as to what took place during deliberations in the jury room.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Misconduct of jury—insufficiency of evidence. In prosecution for subornation of perjury, where defendant complains of the denial of his motion for new trial involving the misconduct of the jury, where evidence, by juror examined on the subject, of matters discussed by jury related to defendant's father's estate and a school controversy in which defendant had been engaged, both of which were referred to in cross-examination of certain character witnesses in the trial and which were admitted by the court, and where juror admitted she agreed to verdict and did not consider anything said by anyone which was not admitted in evidence, there was nothing to indicate any misconduct on the part of the jury, and the court's ruling was correct.

State v Hartwick, 228- ; 290 NW 523

Order for personal examination. When jurors are present in court when a motion for a new trial comes on for hearing, it is reversible error for the court to refuse to order their personal examination as to specified misconduct which, if established, would reveal grounds for a new trial; and especially so when it appears that the jurors had refused to make their personal affidavits as to the facts.

Skinner v Cron, 206-338; 220 NW 341

Visiting locus in quo. The conduct of jurors in visiting, on their own motion, the locus in quo of an accident, and in taking certain measurements therein, and in asserting in argument in the jury room opinions contrary both to the record measurements and to their own measurements, may constitute reversible error.

Johnson v Railway, 201-1044; 207 NW 984

Skinner v Cron, 206-338; 220 NW 341

Visiting scene of accident. The court on motion for new trial may properly refuse to hear testimony to the effect that a juror during the trial visited the scene of an accident, and verified a fact conceded by both parties to the litigation to be true.

Elmore v Railway, 207-862; 224 NW 28

Visiting locus in quo. The fact that during the trial of an action some of the jurors pass by the place where the accident (which is the subject of the action) occurred, constitutes no prejudicial misconduct when the jurors testified that they based their verdict solely on the introduced testimony, and when no dispute whatever existed relative to said place, its location and surroundings.

Liddle v Hyde, 216-1311; 247 NW 827

Juror visiting accident location—misconduct not shown. It is not misconduct for a juror to stop at gasoline station near the scene of the accident in litigation, when there is no evidence that he discussed with other jurors what he saw there.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

Jurors substituting own knowledge for evidence—effect. In an action for injuries resulting from a collision on a bridge between a truck and an automobile, where the record discloses that one juror injected into the discussion her own observation of the fast-driving habits of the motorist with whom plaintiff was riding, and where other jurors at the scene of the accident noticed and commented on the fact that most drivers, in rounding the same curve where plaintiff approached the scene of the accident, were across the center of the highway, when coupled with the short time taken to arrive at a verdict in view of the voluminous evidence, held no abuse of discretion in granting a new trial.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-1138; 281 NW 790

VII VERDICTS CONTRARY TO EVIDENCE OR LAW

Sustaining verdict for either party. Where, under proper instructions and supporting testimony, the jury may properly find for either party, the supreme court will not disturb the verdict.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6; 3 NCCA(NS) 184

Directed verdict refused—findings by jury reviewed. In determining whether or not the court erred in overruling a motion for a directed verdict at the close of the testimony and in overruling a motion for a new trial on the ground that the evidence did not sustain the verdict, the supreme court is not to determine the facts, but is limited to a consideration of what the jury is warranted in finding the facts to be.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Disregard of instructions. A verdict against a common carrier for damages growing out of a shipment of animals is necessarily contrary to an instruction to the effect that the carrier would not be liable if the animals were infected with disease prior to and at the time of shipment, when the record testimony unquestionably shows that the animals were so infected.

Siegel v Railway, 201-712; 208 NW 78

Verdict contrary to instructions—verdict illegal—setting aside. Where the court instructs the jury to base their verdict solely on the evidence and, guided by the instructions, to arrive at the very truth of the matter and base their conclusions solely on evidence and instructions and not to indulge in speculations or conjectures, and at hearing on motion for new trial it is shown that it was agreed in advance that the jury would be bound by a majority vote, such verdict was illegal and it was the duty of the court to set the verdict aside.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

Instructions—law of case. An instruction to the effect that no damage for the flooding of land could be recovered if such damages resulted partly from the wrongful act of the defendant in erecting an embankment and partly from the natural overflow of a natural stream constitutes the law of the case, and a verdict for the plaintiff must be set aside if the evidence conclusively shows that the damages were caused in part by the natural overflow of the stream.

Pfannebecker v Railway, 208-752; 226 NW 161

Contradictory instructions. Contradictory and misleading instructions may be ground for new trial. So held where the court unequivocally instructed that a defense to a promissory note was waived by the act of the maker in executing a renewal with full knowledge of the defense, and later instructed, in effect, that such waiver did not occur unless the holder of the new note had changed his position by reason thereof.

Euclid Bank v Nesbit, 201-506; 207 NW 761

Inconsistent instructions. Inconsistent instructions on a material issue furnish grounds for a new trial. So held where the court instructed that the only issue submitted to the jury was the genuineness of an indorsing signature on a note, but later instructed that the jury must determine the genuineness of the signature to the note itself.

In re Richardson, 202-328; 208 NW 374

Conflicting instructions. Doubt and uncertainty consequent on conflicting instructions relative to the right of the operator of an automobile to assume that another operator would not use the highway unlawfully, presents ample justification for granting the prejudiced party a new trial.

Jelsma v English, 210-1065; 231 NW 304

Unsupported issue. Instructions on unsupported material issues constitute grounds for a new trial.

Dunnegan v Railway, 202-787; 211 NW 364

Sustaining untenable grounds. Granting a new trial on the ground that a jury question had not been presented, when the contrary is true, under the record, constitutes an abuse of discretion.

Euclid Bank v Nesbit, 201-506; 207 NW 761

Evidentiary support required. Verdicts will not be allowed to stand unless they have support in the evidence.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Evidence—insufficiency. Evidence held such, on the issue of negligence, as to justify the court in refusing a new trial on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict.

Miller v Kooker, 208-687; 224 NW 46

New trial refused. Where evidence was sufficient to take a case to the jury on the question of whether the injury of the insured came within the terms of his policy, and it was submitted under proper instructions, there was no error in overruling a motion for new trial made on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence.

Dykes v Washington Co., 226-771; 285 NW 201

Affirmatively nonsupported issue. A new trial must necessarily be granted when the court refuses to direct a verdict, and the jury finds in favor of plaintiff's essential issue, and the record affirmatively shows that the contrary of such issue is true.

Pease v Bank, 204-70; 214 NW 486

Omission of defensive and supported issue. New trial is necessarily proper when based on the established ground that the court failed to submit a defensive issue as to which the testimony makes a jury question.

Goben v Paving Co., 204-466; 215 NW 508

Nonsupported issue. The court cannot be deemed to have abused its discretion in granting a new trial in an action on two promissory notes when, in the first instance, it directed a verdict for plaintiff (1) when, as to one note, there was no evidence on the duly joined issue of the genuineness of defendant's signature, and (2) when, as to the other note, the evidence on said issue was by no means conclusive, and (3) when there was evidence of want of consideration for both of said notes.

Wilhite v Sterrett, 222-770; 269 NW 860

Unjust verdict. The granting of a new trial will not be interfered with when there is reasonable ground to believe that an unjust verdict has been returned, and that the injustice may be avoided on a retrial.

Rupp v Kohn, 210-969; 232 NW 174

Unsustained verdict. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to sustain a jury finding that defendant was a partner, and, as a consequence, that the trial court properly set aside the verdict and ordered a new trial.

Spurway v Milling Co., 207-1332; 224 NW 564

Allowance of future medical expenses without evidence. A quite modest verdict for future necessary medical expenses will not be disturbed, even tho there is no evidence bearing on the amount, when, in the nature of the case, the amount cannot but be an estimate.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

Quotient verdict—conflicting evidence. A finding by the trial court on conflicting evidence that a verdict was a quotient verdict, and the entry of an order for a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal.

Thornton v Boggs, 213-849; 239 NW 514

Rendering judgment on appeal instead of new trial. Where appeal is not only from order denying new trial but from all other erroneous rulings and where evidence as to completed gift inter vivos would not change on retrial, the supreme court may render such judgment as inferior court should have done.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

VIII EXCESSIVE VERDICTS

Showing required. A quite clear showing of error, improper bias, influence, or prejudice must be made before the court will declare excessive a verdict for damages for malicious prosecution.

Kness v Kommes, 207-137; 222 NW 436

Excessiveness indicating passion and prejudice. Unless a verdict is so excessive as to indicate clearly, passion and prejudice on the part of the jury, it should not be disturbed.

Stoner v Hy. Comm., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Accident insurance. Verdict held excessive under a policy of accident insurance which guaranteed indemnity for injuries which prevented the insured from performing "each and every kind of duty" pertaining to his occupation.

Elmore v Surety Co., 207-872; 224 NW 32

Eminent domain—compensation. Evidence held to reveal a grossly excessive verdict on a condemnation for highway purposes.

Jenkins v Hy. Comm., 208-620; 224 NW 66

Conclusiveness. In condemnation proceedings, a verdict for damages which is fairly within the range of the legitimate testimony is ordinarily conclusive on the appellate court, even tho the amount is concededly larger than a court itself would have granted, and even tho it appears that the jury substantially split the difference between the witnesses in their estimate of damages.

Cory v State, 214-222; 242 NW 100

Inadequate or excessive verdicts in eminent domain—control power of court. The verdict of a common-law jury in eminent domain proceedings is subject to the same review by the court for inadequacy or excessiveness as other verdicts in other proceedings. Record in highway condemnation proceedings reviewed, and held verdict so grossly excessive as to evidence passion and prejudice.

Campbell v Hy. Comm., 222-544; 269 NW 20

Remittitur cures error. In an action against an estate to recover a money judgment for one-third of the value thereof (tried prior to the closing of the estate), any error in submitting to the jury the question of the net value of the estate is rendered harmless by the action of the plaintiff in stipulating to remit from the judgment a proportional amount of the ultimate costs of administration.

In re Anderson, 203-985; 213 NW 567

Remittitur—effect on prior judgment entry. A duly entered judgment, followed by an unexcepted order for a new trial unless a remittitur be filed, automatically becomes a judgment in the lesser amount immediately upon the due filing of the remittitur.

Fox v McCurnin, 210-429; 228 NW 582

Instructions—computation of amount. Error in instructions relative to the computation of

VIII EXCESSIVE VERDICTS—concluded the amount of a verdict may be cured by a remittitur.

In re Willmott, 215-546; 243 NW 634

Unsupported or excessive verdict—conditional order. The court may, on the duly presented grounds that a verdict is unsupported or excessive, grant a new trial, even tho the evidence is conflicting, unless a specified amount of the verdict is remitted, such motion presenting a question peculiarly addressed to the sound discretion of the court—not a legal proposition only.

Manders v Dallam, 215-137; 244 NW 724

Option to remit excessive part of verdict. It is proper for the court to give plaintiff the option to remit that portion of a verdict which the court deems excessive, and refuse a new trial (on that ground) if the remittitur is filed.

Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Excessive and exemplary damages—remittitur or new trial. Excessive damages showing passion and prejudice vitiate the entire verdict. A remittitur will not cure the error and a new trial should be granted. Where the jury returned a verdict of $1,500 actual damages and $2,500 exemplary damages, held the total amount of damages awarded and the difference between the actual damages and punitive damages were not so excessive as to show passion and prejudice; and, the entire verdict not being vitiated, the verdict for $1,500 actual damages was not affected by the erroneous submission of the question of exemplary damages and such error was cured by remittitur of all such punitive damages.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-142; 275 NW 479

Wrongful death of wife. In an action for the wrongful death of a wife, the statutory power to allow "such sum as the jury may deem proportionate to the injury" is not an unbridled discretion. Evidence reviewed and held that a verdict of $10,000 was excessive to the extent of $4,000. The deceased was childless and illiterate, had accumulated no property, was a beet weeder for a small part of the year at small wages, and also operated a boarding house, but whether at a profit did not appear.

Hanna v Elec. Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

IX VERDICTS HELD EXCESSIVE

Discussion. See 18 ILR 405—Reduction by trial court; 18 ILR 561—Prejudicial verdict—remittitur

Unallowable reduction by court. The court has no power to reduce the verdict of a jury in an action for unliquidated damages, and to render judgment for a less amount, unless the party in whose favor the verdict was rendered consents to such reduction.

Crawford v Emerson Co., 222-378; 269 NW 334

$2,130 for personal injuries. Verdict for $2,130 for personal injuries held excessive and conditionally reduced to $1,850.

Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151

$2,500 for personal injury.

Tissue v Durin, 216-709; 246 NW 806

$3,500 for indecent assault. Verdict of $1,500 actual and $2,000 punitive damages held excessive as to the actual damages.

Ransom v McDermott, 215-594; 246 NW 266

$3,600 for personal injury.

McKee v Iowa Co., 204-44; 214 NW 564

$5,000 for libel in filing an information charging insanity.

Plecker v Knottnerus, 201-550; 207 NW 574

Aged man with small earning capacity. In a personal injury action, evidence reviewed relative to past and future pain, loss of time, and decreased earning capacity, of a 67-year old plaintiff, and held, a verdict of $5,000 was excessive and should be reduced to $4,000.

Johnson v Sioux City, 220-66; 261 NW 536

Death—excessiveness. Verdict for damages in the sum of $5,750 for the death of an eight-year-old boy held excessive, and reduced conditionally to $4,500.

Allen v Railway, 218-286; 253 NW 143

$6,000 for death of 10-year-old child. Verdict of $6,000 for death of 10-year-old school girl held excessive and conditionally reduced on appeal to $4,500.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

$7,500 for fatal personal injury. Verdict for $7,500 for fatal personal injury held excessive and conditionally reduced to $4,000.

Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220

$10,000 for death of wife.

Hanna v Elec. Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

$15,000 fatal personal injury. Verdict for $15,000 for death of a 17-year-old boy, reduced by trial court to $10,000, held subject to a further reduction to $7,500.

Hart v Hinkley, 215-915; 247 NW 258

$16,750 in an action for criminal conversation and alienating the affections of a wife.

Peak v Rhyno, 200-864; 205 NW 515

$17,000 for wrongful death.

Cerny v Secor, 211-1232; 234 NW 193

$27,000 for wrongful death. Verdict for $27,000 for wrongful death reduced by trial court to $17,000 and by appellate court to $14,500.

Scott v Hinman, 216-1126; 249 NW 249

$30,000 conditionally reduced to $12,000. Verdict of $30,000 for wrongful death reduced by the trial court to $21,000, and by the appellate court, on condition, to $12,000.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

$40,000 for libel and defamation of character.

Mowry v Reinking, 203-628; 213 NW 274

X VERDICTS HELD NONEXCESSIVE

$500 for assault and battery. Verdict for $500 for assault and battery held nonexcessive.

Ashby v Nine, 218-953; 256 NW 679

$1,000 for personal injury.

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787

$1,000 for injury to an automobile and to the person.

Comparet v Coal Co., 200-922; 205 NW 779

$1,680 for assault and battery—exemplary damages. In an assault and battery case verdict for $1,680, reduced by remittitur to $1,180, held not so excessive as to evince passion and prejudice, when verdict included exemplary damages.

Hauser v Boever, 225-1; 279 NW 137

Nonexcessive damages. Evidence held to support a verdict of $1,500 for personal injuries.

Sutcliffe v Fort Dodge Co., 218-1386; 257 NW 406

Personal injuries—award. Verdict for $1,800 for personal injuries sustained.

Beardmore v New Albin, 203-721; 211 NW 430

$2,000 as actual damages for libel, reduced one-half by the trial court.

Taylor v Hungerford, 205-1146; 217 NW 83

Eminent domain—$2,000 for ground and ornamental trees. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire a strip of ground for highway purposes 17 feet wide on each side of an existing highway which divided an 80-acre farm, where the land appropriated comprised 1.2 acres and included 19 trees in front of plaintiff's home, some of them being very large, hardwood, slow growing, ornamental trees, planted in connection with carefully planned landscaping, held, verdict of $2,000 was not excessive.

Stoner v Hy. Comm., 227-115; 287 NW 269

$1,328 for personal injury and property loss. Verdict for $1,328 for personal injury and property loss held manifestly nonexcessive.

Wolfe v Decker, 221-600; 266 NW 4

$1,500 for assault and false imprisonment.

Schultz v Enlow, 201-1083; 205 NW 972

$1,500 for personal injury.

Stutzman v Younkerman, 204-1162; 216 NW 627

$2,175 for personal injuries. Verdict of $2,175 for personal injuries, held not excessive.

Shadduck v Railway, 218-281; 252 NW 772

$2,800 for personal injuries.

O'Hara v Chaplin, 211-404; 233 NW 516

$2,989 for personal injuries.

Burke v Town, 207-585; 223 NW 397

$3,250 for personal injuries reduced conditionally by the trial court to $2,250.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

$3,500 for personal injury.

Raines v Wilson, 213-1251; 239 NW 36

Personal injuries—$3,750 not excessive. Damages are generally within the province of the jury and an appellate court hesitates to interfere with the amount unless it is so grossly excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice, or some other reason appears, and ordinarily the trial court's granting or refusing a new trial on the ground of excessiveness of a verdict will not be disturbed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is shown. Held, a $3,750 personal injury verdict was not excessive when based on a fracture of the skull, broken left shoulder, four broken ribs, eye and ear injuries, unconsciousness for five days, and severe headaches.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

$5,000 for personal injury.

Nederhiser v Railway, 202-285; 208 NW 856

$5,000 for personal injury. A visible and lifelong personal disfigurement is necessarily a very persuasive element of damages. Verdict held nonexcessive.

Siesseger v Puth, 216-916; 248 NW 352

Excessive damages—$5,170. Verdict of $5,170 for injury to person and property reviewed and held nonexcessive.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

$5,733 in eminent domain proceedings.

Sherwood v Reynolds, 213-539; 239 NW 137

$5,950 for personal injuries.

Mizner v Lohr, 213-1182; 238 NW 584

$7,500 for services rendered to a decedent during a series of years.

Halstead v Rohret, 212-837; 235 NW 293

$8,000 for personal injury.

Starry v Hanold, 202-1180; 211 NW 696

McCoy v Cole, 216-1320; 249 NW 213

X VERDICTS HELD NONEXCESSIVE—
concluded

$10,000 for grave personal injuries, reduced to $6,500.

Wolfson v Lbr. Co., 210-244; 227 NW 608

$10,000 for personal injuries.

Elmore v Railway, 207-862; 224 NW 28

$10,000 on retrial of personal injury case. A verdict of $10,000 on second trial of automobile accident case, altho $2,500 larger than first verdict, did not under the circumstances indicate passion or prejudice and was not excessive.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

$11,755 as damages for land taken for highway purposes.

Shimerda v Hy. Comm., 210-154; 230 NW 335

$12,000 for personal injury.

Henriksen v Stages, Inc., 216-643; 246 NW 913

$13,400 for personal injuries.

Dean v Koolish, 212-238; 234 NW 179

$20,000 for personal injury consequent on the malpractice of a physician.

Legler v Clinic, 207-720; 223 NW 405

$20,000 for personal injuries. A verdict of $20,000 for personal injuries of an extraordinary nature and largely permanent held non-excessive.

Engle v Ungles, 223-780; 273 NW 879

$22,500 for death, reduced by the trial court to $14,500.

Rastede v Railway, 203-430; 212 NW 751

When court will interfere. It is not the province of a court to interfere with the amount of a verdict in a personal injury action unless it is clearly made to appear that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice or of a palpable disregard of the evidence. Verdict of $10,000 held nonreviewable.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Exemplary damages. A verdict for exemplary damages which is fairly in proportion to the actual damages will not be disturbed by the court.

Gregory v Sorenson, 214-1374; 242 NW 91

XI INADEQUATE VERDICTS

Inadequacy of verdict. The court has a very large discretion in ruling on a motion for a new trial on the ground of the inadequacy of a verdict for personal injuries.

Strayer v O'Keefe, 202-643; 210 NW 761

Herrman v O'Connor, 209-1277; 227 NW 584

Inadequate verdict for wrongful death. The sustaining of plaintiff's motion for a new trial, because of a verdict of $150 for the wrongful death of an active young man of substantial earning power, is eminently proper.

Leake v Azinger, 214-927; 243 NW 196

Manifestly inadequate verdict. A manifestly inadequate verdict demands a new trial.

DeMoss v Cab Co., 218-77; 254 NW 17

Ignoring unquestioned evidence and instructions. Grounds for a new trial result from the action of the jury in returning a "no damage" verdict in the face of an unquestioned instruction as to the measure of damages, and in the face of definite and undisputed testimony of substantial damages.

Madison v Hood, 207-495; 223 NW 178; 39 NCCA 393

Arbitrary rejection of evidence. A new trial must be granted when the jury, in a case in which plaintiff is legally entitled to recover substantial damages, arbitrarily ignores and rejects the uncontroverted evidence as to damages.

Mendenhall v Struck, 207-1094; 224 NW 95

XII PASSION OR PREJUDICE

Excessive verdict—presumption. An apparently excessive verdict does not necessarily show that it is the result of passion and prejudice.

Peak v Rhyno, 200-864; 205 NW 515

$2,500 increase in damages on retrial of personal injury case. A verdict of $10,000 on second trial of automobile accident case, altho $2,500 larger than first verdict, did not under the circumstances indicate passion or prejudice and was not excessive.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Abuse of discretion. The granting of a new trial on the ground of passion and prejudice, and as contrary to law and the instructions, will not be disturbed unless the record shows an abuse of the wide discretion of the court.

Utilities Corp. v Chapman, 210-994; 232 NW 116

Moving considerations. The inconsistencies, contradictions, variations, and improbabilities of plaintiff's testimony, coupled with the amount of the verdict, may quite certainly point to the fact that the verdict was the result of passion and prejudice.

Kelley v Gardner, 213-16; 238 NW 470

Eminent domain proceedings. A verdict in eminent domain proceedings will not be disturbed, even tho the amount suggests excessiveness, if it is well within the supporting evidence.

Kemmerer v Highway Com., 214-136; 241 NW 693

XIII SURPRISE, ACCIDENT, INADVERTENCE, OR MISTAKE

Inadvertently misleading counsel. The court may grant a new trial on the ground that it inadvertently misled counsel, prior to the argument, as to the nature of the instructions which would be given to the jury.

Printy v Reimbold, 200-541; 202 NW 122; 205 NW 211

Surprise—waiver. A litigant is not entitled to a new trial because he was surprised by the testimony of his adversary when he asked for no continuance or for time in which to produce counter testimony.

Southhall v Berry, 207-605; 223 NW 480

Surprise—ruling on objection to exhibit. In action on written contract, a new trial is not justified on the ground of surprise based on a ruling as to the admissibility of an exhibit when that ruling is not shown to be erroneous.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

XIV NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE

(a) POWER AND DUTY OF COURT IN GENERAL

Inability to discover evidence. The discretion of the court is abused in denying a new trial to a defeated party who diligently sought, during the trial, to learn the truth as to a material and issuable claim, but was prevented from so doing until after the trial.

Millard v Mfg. Co., 200-1063; 205 NW 979

Reception of evidence—discretion in reopening—new trial for abuse. Granting or refusing a motion to reopen a case to admit further evidence is within the sound discretion of the court, but if a refusal to reopen is an abuse of discretion, a new trial should be granted on appeal.

In re Canterbury, 224-1080; 278 NW 210

Amendments allowable after reversal and remand. Defendant, in an action at law, may, after reversal and remand on plaintiff's appeal, amend his answer by pleading new and additional grounds of defense.

Flood v Bank, 220-935; 263 NW 321

Discretion of court. A large discretion is lodged in the trial court in determining whether a new trial should be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, since the trial court has a much better opportunity for seeing and judging how the testimony given, and that afterward discovered, bears upon the issues, and for determining whether the facts offered are similar or dissimilar.

Larson v Meyer, 227-512; 288 NW 663

Defense arising or discovered since judgment entered. The fact that a claim, when judgment was entered thereon, had been discharged in bankruptcy is not a "defense which has arisen or been discovered since the judgment was rendered", and therefore within the power of a court of equity to annul or modify.

Harding v Quilan, 209-1190; 229 NW 672

(b) DILIGENCE IN PROCURING EVIDENCE

Due diligence rule. On the ground of newly discovered evidence, where due diligence has been exercised in attempting to discover the evidence before trial, a new trial should be granted, but, in the absence of due diligence, refused.

Wilbur v Iowa Co., 223-1349; 275 NW 43

Finding as to diligence. The conclusion of the trial court that due diligence was exercised in the discovery of new testimony will not ordinarily be disturbed on appeal.

Moore v Goldberg, 205-346; 217 NW 877
Utseth v Pratt, 208-1324; 227 NW 115

Finding of nonnegligence. The appellate court is very reluctant to overturn the holding of the trial court that a mover for a new trial has not been negligent in discovering or obtaining testimony and that such testimony, if produced, would have some force with the jury.

Doty v Jamieson, 214-1321; 243 NW 359

Due diligence—wholesale search unnecessary. With nothing to suggest its propriety or necessity, a party is not required to interrogate all persons living within five or six miles of an accident in order to have exercised due diligence as a prerequisite for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

Wilbur v Iowa Co., 223-1349; 275 NW 43

Forgotten deed. A new trial will, in some instances, be granted because of newly discovered evidence even tho the applicant might have discovered such evidence before trial and decree. So held where a party in partition proceedings, soon after trial and an adverse decree, discovered a forgotten deed which apparently confirmed her title.

Mills v Hall, 202-340; 209 NW 291

Negligent discovery. A new trial will not be granted because of the discovery of testimony which the movant might readily have discovered at the trial already had, especially when such testimony does not carry any reasonable probability of bringing about a different result if the cause is retried.

Southhall v Berry, 207-605; 223 NW 480

Lack of diligence. A new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence when such evidence was manifestly easily obtainable during the trial, especially when such evidence is for impeaching purposes.

Elmore v Railway, 207-862; 224 NW 28

XIV NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE —continued

(b) DILIGENCE IN PROCURING EVIDENCE—concluded

Lack of diligence. Lack of diligence in the discovery of new testimony justifies the overruling of the motion.

First Bank v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767
North Amer. Ins. v Holstrum, 208-722; 217 NW 239; 224 NW 492

Anderson v Railway, 216-230; 249 NW 256
Heintz v Packing Co., 222-517; 268 NW 607

Lack of diligence. An applicant for a new trial may not be held to have exercised diligence in discovering evidence which he might, in reason and from the inception of the action, have known or supposed was in existence and easily obtainable, but as to which he took no action until after the verdict had been rendered against him; especially is this true in view of the broad discretionary powers of the court in such proceedings.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

(c) RELEVANCY, MATERIALITY, AND COMPETENCY

Evidence bearing on nonissue. New trial because of newly discovered evidence is properly denied when there is no issue to which the newly discovered evidence could apply.

Andrew v Bank, 204-570; 215 NW 807

Immateriality. Manifestly, newly discovered evidence cannot constitute grounds for a new trial when it is not material to the controlling issue in the case.

Gilmore v Moulton, 216-618; 246 NW 601

Sagging wires on highway after storm—knowledge. In a case where a woman is burned by contacting a high tension electric line, sagging over a highway after a storm, and who testifies she had no knowledge it was there, newly discovered evidence to show that she was seen stepping over the broken poles prior to the accident, is not cumulative but tends directly to establish a material fact affecting the result of the case on retrial.

Wilbur v Iowa Co., 223-1349; 275 NW 43

(d) CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE

Cumulative evidence. Newly discovered evidence which is purely cumulative is not a ground for new trial.

Cuthbertson v Hoffa, 205-666; 216 NW 733
Rauch v Elec. Co., 206-1155; 221 NW 788
Simons v Harris, 215-479; 245 NW 875

Negligence and cumulateness. Evidence in the form of office records, and claimed to have been newly discovered, is properly rejected as sufficient ground for new trial (1) when said records are simply cumulative to testimony already introduced by the applicant, and (2) when said records have been in the exclusive possession of the applicant and to his knowledge since the inception of the suit.

Warren v Railway, 219-723; 259 NW 115

Cumulative evidence not ground. Claimed newly discovered evidence, in the nature of statements of a highway patrolman bearing on his observation of wheel tracks of an automobile, as tending to show where the car left the highway, being merely cumulative, when the sheriff of the county had testified at the trial as to said tracks, is not ground for new trial.

Moran v Kean, 225-329; 280 NW 543

Cumulative evidence—insufficient ground. Where a jury returned a verdict in favor of payee in an action on a note executed by a partnership wherein the defense of payment was pleaded and evidence was introduced to show a tender of payment by the partnership to payee, but with payee's consent the money was retained by one partner as a personal loan from payee to such partner, defendants' motion for new trial based on newly discovered evidence consisting of other admissions at different times of the same facts presented at the trial was properly overruled, as such evidence of the same kind and to the same point was merely cumulative.

Larson v Meyer, 227-512; 288 NW 663

Well drilling—casing damage—discovery. In action on oral contract to recover for drilling well where, more than four months after judgment, defendant discovered damage to casing caused by plaintiff in digging the well, and thereupon moved for new trial, held that newly discovered evidence was not cumulative, and that under peculiar circumstances existing, the defendant was not guilty of lack of diligence in making such discovery.

Ross v Fahey, (NOR); 205 NW 855

(e) IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESS

Newly discovered impeaching evidence. Newly discovered evidence, in an action for damages for personal injury, which tends to show that the length of plaintiff's disability was much less than as claimed by plaintiff on the trial, is impeaching in character and consequently not ground for new trial.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

Extrinsic and collateral fraud—impeachment of witnesses. Evidence newly discovered after trial and verdict, and apparently demonstrating that the verdict was obtained by extrinsic and collateral fraud, is ground for new trial within the time limit and conditions provided by the statute; and it is no objection that said evidence also tends to impeach witnesses. So held where the newly discovered evidence tended strongly to show that the stamp "Paid", as it appeared on an obligation sued on, had been willfully fabricated.

Bates v Carter, 222-1263; 271 NW 307

Inviting perjury—improper offer of money or property. A new trial must be granted when, after a verdict adverse to proponent in a will contest, the fact is promptly discovered and shown to the court that the contestant, during said first trial, and on condition that he win the contest, had made, to divers of the witnesses testifying at the trial, offers of a substantial part of the estate as an inducement for said witnesses to testify in behalf of contestant; and this is true even tho it be conceded that said contestant in making said offers was not intending thereby actually to bribe said witnesses to commit perjury.

In re Whitehouse, 223-91; 272 NW 110

(f) SUFFICIENCY AND PROBABLE EFFECT

Affidavits—statutory denial. Affidavits relative to newly discovered evidence as grounds for new trial (on petition) are denied by operation of law. (§12789, C., '31.)

Anderson v Railway, 216-230; 249 NW 256

Newly discovered evidence—sufficiency and probable effect. If a different result is not reasonably probable on account of newly discovered evidence, a new trial should not be granted.

Larson v Meyer, 227-512; 288 NW 663

Sufficiency and probable effect. Newly discovered evidence will not be deemed sufficient to justify an order for a new trial when its competency is questionable, and when it can throw but little light on the issues joined.

Mill Owners v Petley, 210-1085; 229 NW 736

XV MAKING ERROR OR MISCONDUCT OF RECORD

Nonrecord matter. Litigants may not, on appeal, avail themselves of a nonrecord matter bearing on their motion for new trial.

Besco v Mahaska County, 200-684; 205 NW 459

Failure to preserve record. Tho a motion to vacate a final decree for erroneous proceedings which preceded the decree, be treated in the appellate court as a motion for a new trial, yet movant cannot prevail when he deliberately permitted such proceedings to take place in the trial court without any record preservation, and seeks in his motion proceedings to establish them by mere affidavit and extraneous testimony.

Radle v Radle, 204-82; 214 NW 602

Improper showing. Misconduct of the county attorney in argument cannot be presented by motion for new trial supported by affidavits.

State v Phillips, 212-1332; 236 NW 104

New trial—overruling motion to strike amendment. Even tho the overruling of a motion to strike an amendment to plaintiff's motion for new trial was error, there was no prejudice to defendant where motion for new trial was sustained generally, and where grounds of original motion, to wit: that verdict was not sustained by evidence and that plaintiff did not receive a fair and impartial trial, were good—in which case there can be no reversal.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

XVI PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE NEW TRIAL

Fatally delayed motion. A motion for a new trial must be made within the five-day statutory period.

State v Brennan, (NOR); 215 NW 615

Failure to obtain ruling—effect. The filing of exceptions to instructions and a motion for a new trial, after the entry of judgment on the verdict, is rendered wholly abortive by the failure to call to the attention of the court, the exceptions or the motion, and to obtain a ruling thereon.

Linn v Kendall, 213-33; 238 NW 547

Lack of specification. Motions for new trial must be specific, in criminal as well as in civil cases, as to the grounds, or they will not be reviewable.

State v Vandewater, 203-94; 212 NW 339

Omnibus assignment. An omnibus assignment of error in a motion for new trial presents nothing to the trial court or to the appellate court.

Liddle v Salter, 180-840; 163 NW 447

In re Kahl, 210-903; 232 NW 133

What considered on appeal. Where an appeal is merely from an order overruling a motion for new trial, only such questions as were raised by such motion for new trial can be considered on appeal.

Lotz v United Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

Belated presentation. The overruling of a motion for new trial will not be disturbed on appeal when such motion was filed after appeal and issuance of procedendo, and on the ground that the applicant inadvertently overlooked in the trial of the case certain available testimony. (See §12255, C., '24.)

Tutt v Smith, 202-1389; 212 NW 127

Fatally delayed motion. A court-directed verdict (in a jury trial) is the verdict of the jury within the meaning of the statute limiting applications for new trial to five days "after the verdict is rendered" and the court has no jurisdiction to grant an application made after said time irrespective of the time when formal judgment was entered on the verdict. (Verdict rendered in 1916; judgment entered in 1930.)

Selby v McDonald, 219-823; 259 NW 485

11551 Application—use of affidavits.

ANALYSIS

- I MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL IN GENERAL
- II TIMELY AND UNTIMELY MOTIONS
- III AMENDMENTS
- IV AFFIDAVITS

Motion for new trial not always necessary to obtain review. See under §12828

I MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL IN GENERAL

Motion—what constitutes. A motion which requests the court to reconsider a certain order theretofore made, and to enter a different order, constitutes a motion for a new trial, within the meaning of statute pertaining to the time of taking appeals. Especially is this true when the motion was so treated by the court and by the parties.

Home Bank v Klise, 205-1103; 216 NW 109

Objections to evidence—reraising in motion unnecessary. Where the immateriality of evidence objected to is plainly discernible and no further particularity is required to apprise the trial court of grounds of objections, it is not necessary that these same identical matters be again presented to trial court by way of motion for new trial before they may be considered by supreme court.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-149; 287 NW 829

Unallowable combination of motions.

Miller v Surety Co., 209-1221; 229 NW 909

Jurors as witnesses—refusal to call. On a motion for a new trial in a criminal case, the court may very properly refuse to permit the oral examination of jurymen for the purpose of establishing misconduct which the defendant induced—for which he was responsible.

State v Mutch, 218-1176; 255 NW 643

Extension of time for motion—canvass of jury as to misconduct of court. An extension of time for filing a motion for new trial to enable counsel to canvass the jury and learn the prejudicial effect of remarks made by the court during the trial was properly refused when there was attached to the motion an affidavit by a juror that the remarks of the court had led the jury to disbelieve a witness, the affidavit not supporting its conclusion, and when no exceptions were taken to the remarks by the court.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Matter of discretion—matter of law—when reviewable. An order phrased in general terms granting a new trial will be deemed discretionary and not reviewable except for an abuse of discretion, but where granted on specific legal grounds it is reviewable like any other error of law.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Correct ruling on erroneous grounds—valid grounds existing—effect. An error in sustaining a motion for new trial on two particular grounds cannot be prejudicial if other grounds exist on which it should be sustained, all of which will be considered on appeal.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Verdict contrary to evidence—preserving question in lower court—no review if first raised on appeal. In an action to establish a claim against an estate for serum, virus, and veterinary supplies furnished to decedent over a term of eight years, argument on appeal that the verdict denying the claim was contrary to the evidence, and should be set aside, cannot be considered when not raised by appropriate procedure in the lower court.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

II TIMELY AND UNTIMELY MOTIONS

Verdict—scope of term—fatally delayed motion. A court-directed verdict (in a jury trial) is the verdict of the jury within the meaning of the statute limiting applications for new trial to five days “after the verdict is rendered” and the court has no jurisdiction to grant an application made after said time irrespective of the time when formal judgment was entered on the verdict. (Verdict rendered in 1916; judgment entered in 1930.)

Selby v McDonald, 219-823; 259 NW 485

Setting aside default judgment—time limit five days. A motion to set aside a default judgment in the district court must be made within five days after rendition of the judgment, unless the time is extended by the court.

Vaux v Hensal, 224-1055; 277 NW 718

Belated motion and exceptions to instructions—effect. A motion for new trial and exceptions to instructions filed 16 days after verdict, where no extension is secured, are filed too late, and questions raised therein cannot be considered on appeal. In such case, when extension of time has been granted, such fact should be shown in abstract.

Roggensack v Ahlstrom, (NOR); 209 NW 429

Journal entry extending time valid. A statute requiring that an application for a new trial must be made within five days after the verdict is rendered unless the court grants an extension of time, contemplates orders which are only temporary and incidental to the case, and an order extending the time for such application was effective to extend the time beyond the five-day limit, when it was entered on the judge’s calendar before the five days were up, even tho not entered on the record book until seven days after judgment was rendered.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Waiver of belated filing. The right to object to a motion for a new trial because not filed within the time provided by statute is waived by failing to interpose such objection in the trial court.

Home Bank v Klise, 205-1103; 216 NW 109

Belated presentation. The overruling of a motion for new trial will not be disturbed on appeal when such motion was filed after appeal and issuance of procedendo, and on the ground that the applicant inadvertently overlooked in the trial of the case certain available testimony. (See §12255, C., '24.)

Tutt v Smith, 202-1389; 212 NW 127

Belated filing. A motion for a new trial and objections to instructions will be ignored on appeal when filed after the time fixed by the court.

Lein v Morrell, 207-1271; 224 NW 576

Motion delayed more than five days. A motion for new trial when not based on newly discovered evidence is properly overruled when made more than five days after the verdict.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Belated filing—effect on appeal—waiver of lateness. The belated filing of a motion for new trial and exceptions to instructions is fatal thereto and precludes consideration on appeal, but the lateness may be waived and the matters heard on their merits.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Motion not germane to non obstante verdicto. A motion for new trial is not germane to a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and cannot be considered if made after a lapse of five days from the verdict.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Nunc pro tunc order for more time—ineffective after five days from verdict. An application for a nunc pro tunc order for an extension of time to file motion for new trial is properly overruled when made more than five days after the verdict.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

III AMENDMENTS

Belated amendment to exception to an instruction. An amendment to an exception to an instruction will not be considered when not filed within the time fixed by the statute or the court, and when said amendment is not germane to the original exception.

Reif v Beese, 213-250; 236 NW 66

Amendment to motion after extended time for filing—when permitted. An amendment to a motion for a new trial may be filed after the statutory or extended time for filing the motion if it is germane to the original motion.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

Amendment to motion after extended time—majority verdict as germane matter. Where a motion for a new trial is based on the grounds, among others, that verdict was contrary to law, was not the result of due deliberation by the jury, and was contrary to court's instructions, an amendment, alleging that the verdict was illegal and was the result of an agreement made in advance that jury would be bound by a majority vote, was germane to original motion and could be considered altho filed after extended time for filing motion for new trial.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

Motion for new trial—overruling motion to strike amendment. Even tho the overruling of a motion to strike an amendment to plaintiff's motion for new trial was error, there was no prejudice to defendant where motion for new trial was sustained generally, and where grounds of original motion, to wit: that verdict was not sustained by evidence and that plaintiff did not receive a fair and impartial trial, were good—in which case there can be no reversal.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

IV AFFIDAVITS

Hearsay affidavit. An unattacked and unchallenged affidavit may be sufficient in some cases to establish such misconduct on the part of jurors as to demand a new trial, even tho the contents of the affidavit may be hearsay.

Skinner v Cron, 206-338; 220 NW 341

Optional methods of proof. The grounds for a new trial need not necessarily be established by affidavits. In proper cases, such grounds may be established by the testimony of witnesses.

Skinner v Cron, 206-338; 220 NW 341

Unjustifiable refusal to call jurors. When jurors are present in court when a motion for a new trial comes on for hearing, it is reversible error for the court to refuse to order their personal examination as to specified misconduct which, if established, would reveal grounds for a new trial; and especially so when it appears that the jurors had refused to make their personal affidavits as to the facts.

Skinner v Cron, 206-338; 220 NW 341

Ineffectual affidavits. A new trial will not be granted on the basis of affidavits by jurors relative to the consideration of extraneous and improper testimony when the affidavits signal fail to show that the jurors were in any manner influenced by such testimony.

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

11553 Judgment notwithstanding verdict.

Criminal law—unrecognized practice. Motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict are not recognized in our practice governing criminal cases.

State v Stennett, 220-388; 260 NW 732

Judgment notwithstanding verdict—scope of. A motion for judgment non obstante veredicto is based wholly on a defective pleading, in that it omits to aver some material fact necessary to complete a cause of action or defense, and the motion must clearly point out the omission.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Arrest of judgment—motion goes to sufficiency of petition. A motion in arrest of judgment raises only the question of whether the petition wholly fails to state a cause of action, not whether the petition should have been more specific.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Pleadings complete—motion overruled. Where pleadings of the successful party averred all material facts necessary to a complete cause of action or defense, a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly overruled.

Lee v Sundberg, 227-1375; 291 NW 146

Untimely motion. A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is not germane to a motion for new trial, and cannot be considered if filed as an amendment to the motion for new trial after the lapse of five days from verdict.

Miller v Surety Co., 209-1221; 229 NW 909

Motion for new trial not germane to non obstante veredicto. A motion for new trial is not germane to a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and cannot be considered if made after a lapse of five days from the verdict.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Untenable motion. A motion for judgment non obstante veredicto will not lie to a petition which recites the facts out of which plaintiff's injury arose, and contains a general allegation of negligence on the part of the defendant.

Pomerantz v Cement Corp., 212-1007; 237 NW 443

Unallowable procedure. Plaintiff against whom a verdict has been rendered in an action on a promissory note may not so avail himself of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the adverse verdict, or of a motion in arrest of judgment, as to obtain a judgment in his favor on a theory of estoppel neither pleaded nor proven.

Millard v Herges, 213-279; 236 NW 89; 238 NW 604

Proper rejection. Plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding a verdict for defendant, because defendant's answer failed to plead want of consideration for the signing of the note sued on, is properly overruled when defendant's answer impliedly pleaded want of consideration, and when plaintiff so construed the answer throughout the trial.

Persia Bk. v Wilson, 214-993; 243 NW 581

Waiver. The right of plaintiff to file a motion for judgment notwithstanding a verdict in favor of defendant, on the ground that defendant's answer fails to plead a defense, is not waived by plaintiff because of his failure to demur to said answer.

Persia Bk. v Wilson, 214-993; 243 NW 581

Verdict contrary to evidence—preserving question—when nonreviewable. In an action to establish a claim against an estate for serum, virus, and veterinary supplies furnished to decedent over a term of eight years, argument on appeal that the verdict denying the claim was contrary to the evidence, and should be set aside, cannot be considered when not raised by appropriate procedure in the lower court.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Question first raised on appeal. Questions as to possible errors of the trial court, not properly raised by motion for directed verdict, nor by request for instructions, nor by exceptions to instructions, cannot be considered on appeal.

11554 Arrest of judgment.

Unallowable procedure. Plaintiff against whom a verdict has been rendered in an action on a promissory note may not so avail himself of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the adverse verdict, or of a motion in arrest of judgment, as to obtain a judgment in his favor on a theory of estoppel neither pleaded nor proven.

Millard v Herges, 213-279; 236 NW 89

Facts alleged generally—arrest of judgment not tenable. A motion in arrest of judgment will not lie to a petition which recites the facts out of which plaintiff's injury arose, and which contains a general allegation of negligence on the part of the defendants.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Motion goes to sufficiency of petition. A motion in arrest of judgment raises only the question of whether the petition wholly fails to state a cause of action, not whether the petition should have been more specific.

Kirchner v Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

11555 Filing of motion.

Waiver of motion—insufficient showing. A party will not be deemed to waive his motion for a new trial by having his motion non obstante veredicto sustained when both motions were prepared, filed, and treated as one motion, and where the motion for new trial was properly sustained, and the motion non obstante veredicto was improperly sustained.

Pomerantz v Cement Corp., 212-1007; 237 NW 443

11556 Time of filing.

Untimely motion. A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is not germane to a motion for new trial, and cannot be considered if filed as an amendment to the motion for new trial after the lapse of five days from verdict.

Miller v Surety Co., 209-1221; 229 NW 909

Belated nunc pro tunc order for extension.

An application for a nunc pro tunc order for an extension of time to file motion for new trial is properly overruled when made more than five days after the verdict.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Motion for new trial not germane to non obstante veredicto. A motion for new trial is not germane to a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and cannot be considered if made after a lapse of five days from the verdict.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

11557 Curative amendments—time of filing.

Conforming pleadings to proof. Amendments which conform the pleadings to the proofs are allowable.

State v Carney, 208-133; 217 NW 472

Henriott v Main, 225-20; 279 NW 110

11561 Conditions.

Conditions in re excessive verdicts. See under §11550 (VIII)

11562 Dismissal of action.

ANALYSIS

- I DISMISSAL IN GENERAL
- II BY PLAINTIFF BEFORE SUBMISSION
- III BY THE COURT FOR NONPROSECUTION
- IV DISMISSAL WITHOUT PREJUDICE
- V REINSTATING DISMISSED CAUSE

I DISMISSAL IN GENERAL

Wrong venue—motion to transfer as sole remedy. An action commenced on due and proper service, and concerning a subject matter of which the court has jurisdiction, should not be dismissed because commenced in the wrong county. Motion to transfer to the proper county is the sole remedy.

Baker v Bank, 205-1259; 217 NW 621

Dismissal of prima facie case. The court, in trying an action, in lieu of a jury, may be fully justified in dismissing it on motion because of the inconclusive and unsatisfactory character of the evidence, even tho the plaintiff has technically made a prima facie case for recovery. So held in an action for money had and received.

Griffith v Arnold, 204-1216; 216 NW 728

Dismissal before court sustains motion.

When, at the close of plaintiff's testimony, the court orally states that defendant's motion for a directed verdict would be sustained, and plaintiff thereupon announces in open court his dismissal of the action without prejudice, the court may treat plaintiff's announcement as a motion to dismiss without prejudice and sustain such motion over the objection of defendant.

Rush v Barnhill, 218-425; 255 NW 491

Court indicating directed verdict—dismissal motion properly denied. A motion to dismiss, made after court indicated an intention to sustain defendant's motion for directed verdict, held properly denied.

Yarn v Railway, 31 F 2d, 717

Dismissal after death of party. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Nonjurisdiction to dismiss. When a cause is assigned to, and tried by, a judge of the district court, all other judges of the same court are thereby deprived of jurisdiction to dismiss the cause while it is pending before said trial judge.

Dunkelbarger v Myers, 211-512; 233 NW 744

Dismissal because of lack of subject matter. An action is properly dismissed when by the lapse of time no issue remains for trial.

Peoples Bank v McCarthy, 210-952; 231 NW 487

Dismissal—effect. The dismissal of an action solely for injunctive relief necessarily dissolves the temporary injunction issued therein.

Peoples Bank v McCarthy, 210-952; 231 NW 487

Dismissal of issue—striking evidence. The court should not permit testimony bearing on a dismissed issue to remain in the record when it has no material bearing on any remaining issue.

In re Muhr, 218-867; 256 NW 305

I DISMISSAL IN GENERAL—concluded

Involuntary—failure of service. The dismissal of an action is proper when it appears that no defendant has been legally served with the original notice.

Thompson v Butler, 214-1123; 243 NW 164

Dismissal of partnership suit. A partnership action cannot be legally dismissed by one half of the partners against the wishes of the remaining half of the partners when such dismissal would be materially injurious to the partnership.

Lunt Co. v Hamilton, 217-22; 250 NW 698

Nonrecord dismissal. An application by the surety on the bond of an administrator wherein the prayer was (1) for the removal of the administrator or (2) for the filing of a report, may not be deemed dismissed, insofar as the prayer for removal is concerned, simply because the surety informed the administrator that he (the surety) would not insist on an order of removal, such matter not being made a matter of record.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Motion to dismiss equitable action. There is no statutory authority for a motion to dismiss an equitable action at the close of plaintiff's testimony.

Appanoose Bureau v Board, 218-945; 256 NW 687

Motion to dismiss—operation and effect. A defendant who, at the close of plaintiff's testimony in an equitable action, makes and stands on a motion for judgment in his own favor, and for dismissal of plaintiff's petition, in effect announces that he rests his case.

Haggin v Derby, 209-939; 229 NW 257

More specific statement—order—impossible compliance. A plaintiff who is ordered to make his petition more specific in certain particulars which he is actually or reasonably unable to state, and so demonstrates in a good-faith effort to comply with the order, must be deemed to have complied with the order, and must not be disciplined by a dismissal of his action.

Lamp v Williams, 222-298; 268 NW 543

Failure to enter formal judgment of dismissal. Failure of the court, following its order dismissing a counterclaim, to enter a formal judgment of dismissal of said counterclaim, cannot possibly prejudice the appellant in his appeal from the final judgment on the merits.

Hunt v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Failure to enter formal judgment on collateral order. The failure of the court, following a dismissal of a quantum meruit count by plaintiff, to enter a formal judgment of dismissal of the said count cannot possibly detrimentally affect the defendant on his appeal from a judgment against him on the remaining count.

Hunt v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Certiorari—when writ lies—illegal setting aside of dismissal. Certiorari is a proper remedy to review the action of a trial court in illegally setting aside the dismissal, prior to the return day, of an action, and in proceeding with the cause as tho no dismissal had been filed.

Lyon v Craig, 213-36; 238 NW 452

Pleadings unamendable after dismissal. When the trial court abates an equitable action (e. g., mandamus) by dismissing it on the ground of misjoinder both of parties plaintiffs and of causes of action, and plaintiff makes no effort to avoid the abatement by pruning out of his pleading the objectionable misjoinders, but stands on his pleadings, and on appeal suffers an affirmance of said order of dismissal, he may not thereafter amend his pleadings in the dismissed action by then pruning out said objectionable matter. The pleadings of a finally dismissed action are, manifestly, not subject to amendment.

First N. Bank v Board, 221-348; 264 NW 281; 104 ALR 566

Neglect to file cost bond within time ordered—effect. The nonwillful neglect to file a cost bond by the time ordered by the court will not justify a dismissal of the action when the bond is filed prior to the ruling on the motion to dismiss.

Arthaud v Griffin, 205-141; 217 NW 809

Splitting action—subjecting insurance to probate claim—establishing one policy in foreign court. A claimant in probate, alleging an oral contract assigning all of decedent's insurance, may not split this single cause of action by dismissing part of his claim and attempting to establish it in a foreign state where one policy was held as security for the performance of a prior contract of decedent made therein.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

II BY PLAINTIFF BEFORE SUBMISSION

Necessary loss of jurisdiction. The voluntary dismissal of an action by plaintiff prior to the return day, and the record entered by the clerk of such dismissal, necessarily deprives the court of all jurisdiction to proceed with said cause.

Lyon v Craig, 213-36; 238 NW 452

Dismissal—effect. Principle recognized that while a plaintiff may dismiss his own action, such dismissal cannot affect defendant's properly pleaded cross-petition.

Randolph v Ins. Co., 216-1414; 250 NW 639

Dismissal before trial—effect. The dismissal of an action by plaintiff before trial, even tho it is an equitable action which involves the liability of a defendant city relative to various claimants for work and materials on a public improvement, deprives the court of all jurisdiction thereafter to proceed with the trial and adjudicate any right of the dismissing plaintiff, when the pleadings of the defendant are solely defensive.

Eclipse Lbr. v City, 204-278; 213 NW 804
Eclipse Lbr. v Kepler, 204-286; 213 NW 809

Final submission to court. When defendant's motion for a directed verdict in his favor on plaintiff's evidence is argued and submitted to the court, and the court orally and by appropriate entry on the docket sustains said motion, it is too late for plaintiff to assert that there has been no final submission of the action to the court. It necessarily follows, under such circumstances, that plaintiff has lost his right to voluntarily dismiss his action without prejudice.

Marion v Ins. Assn., 205-1300; 217 NW 803

Final submission withheld by order for briefs. When at the close of the evidence in an action tried to the court, time is given each party, at the request of the defendant, in which to file briefs, no final submission to the court takes place until the briefs are filed, or until the time for such filing has expired. It follows that in such circumstances a plaintiff may dismiss his action at any time before the time for filing briefs has expired.

Crane v Leclere, 204-1037; 216 NW 622

Insufficient showing to overcome. A judgment recital that a plaintiff appeared and requested the dismissal of the action will not be expunged on motion on testimony which is in equipoise on the issue whether such recital is correct.

Sullivan v Coakley, 205-225; 217 NW 820

Implied dismissal. The dropping of an action from the court calendar for some 25 years without explanation from the plaintiff, coupled with conduct on the part of the plaintiff inconsistent with the further pendency of such neglected action, clearly justifies the court in treating such action as dismissed.

Benjamin v Jackson, 207-581; 223 NW 383

III BY THE COURT FOR NONPROSECUTION

Rules in re failure to prosecute action. Rules of the district court for the dismissal of actions, for want of reasonable prosecution thereof, are proper.

Workman v Dist. Court, 222-364; 269 NW 27

Want of prosecution—court rules construed with statute. A district court rule, providing for dismissal of actions for want of prosecution if not noticed for trial within one year, must be construed in conjunction with statute requiring trial notices to be filed.

Thoreson v Elec. Co., 225-1406; 283 NW 253

Refusal to reinstate action. A dismissal of plaintiff's action is properly ordered when plaintiff fails to appear at the time the action is assigned for trial; and the refusal of the court to reinstate the action will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing of manifest abuse of discretion.

Bliss v Watson, 208-1199; 227 NW 108

Court acting on own motion contrary to agreement of counsel. Consolidated actions, dismissed by the court on its own motion in the absence of counsel, for want of prosecution, are properly reinstated on a showing of "unavoidable casualty and misfortune" in that there was no negligence on the part of plaintiffs or their counsel and that they were relying on an agreement between counsel that certain motions would not be made nor issues made up until convenient to all counsel.

Thoreson v Elec. Co., 225-1406; 283 NW 253

Jurisdiction to dismiss pending appeal. An appeal from the municipal court to the supreme court from an interlocutory order involving part of an answer (order striking pleaded set-offs from part of the divisions of the answer), without supersedeas bond in, or stay order by, the appellate court, does not deprive the municipal court of jurisdiction to dismiss the action, in accordance with its rules, for want of attention.

DM & CI Ry. v Powers, 215-567; 246 NW 274

Notice—sufficiency. A rule of court to the effect that the court may dismiss nonprosecuted actions after prescribed published notice of the proposed dismissal has been had is not invalid because the rule provides that the docket number only shall be stated in the publication.

Scott v Cas. Co., 217-390; 252 NW 85

Want of prosecution—negligence. Negligence of plaintiff, in prosecuting his action after commencing it, furnishes ample justification for the action of the court in refusing to set aside a dismissal of the action for want of prosecution.

Scott v Cas. Co., 217-390; 252 NW 85

Dismissal for want of prosecution. The dismissal of an action for want of prosecution is eminently proper (1) when plaintiff knew that defendant was insisting on immediate trial, (2) when the cause was twice assigned for trial at the same term, and (3) when defendant failed to appear at the time finally set for trial and filed no motion for continuance.

Pride v Kittrell, 218-1247; 257 NW 204

Justifiable dismissal. An unsupported counterclaim for damages consequent on the negligent handling of a claim by an attorney who sued for fees due him, is, of course, properly dismissed by the court.

Hunt, etc. v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

IV DISMISSAL WITHOUT PREJUDICE

Dismissal for nonappearance—effect. The dismissal of an action by the court solely because of the nonappearance of the plaintiff at the time of trial must be deemed a dismissal without prejudice to the bringing of a new action.

Galloway v Hobson, 206-507; 220 NW 74

Nonadjudication of merits. The dismissal of an action because of a failure to comply with a rule of court respecting the filing of trial notice does not constitute an adjudication of the action.

Fryman v McCaffrey, 208-531; 222 NW 19; 224 NW 95

Dismissal with and without prejudice. A plaintiff has the unqualified right to dismiss a part of his cause of action with prejudice, and the remaining part without prejudice, and later maintain an action on the part dismissed without prejudice.

Hall v Ins. Co., 217-1005; 252 NW 763

V REINSTATING DISMISSED CAUSE

Reinstatement. The district court has jurisdiction to reinstate a cause which, under order of court, has been "dropped from the calendar" if such dropping from the calendar was not with the intent to dismiss.

Bank. Tr. Co. v Dist. Ct., 209-879; 227NW536

Voluntary dismissal—jurisdiction to set aside. The voluntary dismissal of an action may not, even during the same term, be set aside and the action reinstated when such dismissal was brought about by the negligence of the dismissing party and such negligence is wholly unexplained and unexcused. Whether the court has jurisdiction in any case to set aside a voluntary dismissal, quaere.

Ryan v Ins. Co., 204-655; 215 NW 749

Nonjurisdiction to set aside dismissal. A municipal court having entered a valid order of dismissal of an action has no jurisdiction, seven months later, to set aside said order and reinstate said action without notice to the defendant.

DM & CI Ry. v Powers, 215-567; 246NW274

Setting aside—insufficient grounds. A party who compromises and settles his claim for damages consequent on an alleged fraudulent sale, and voluntarily and under no additional fraud does so on the basis of his then knowledge of the claimed fraud, may not have the compromise set aside on the claim that he later discovered an additional element of fraud in the sale not known to him when he compromised.

Williams v Herman, 216-499; 249 NW 215

Reinstatement justified. When an action for death benefits was dismissed for failure to prosecute, reinstatement was not an abuse of discretion when it was shown that: there was a valid cause of action; witnesses were difficult to obtain; there was a change in the plaintiff's counsel; the court records erroneously showed an amended answer which might have misled the new counsel; there was no personal neglect on the part of the plaintiff; and a dismissal at that time, under the terms of the policy, prevented having any trial on the merits of the case.

Nickerson v Iowa Assn., 226-840; 285 NW 162

Refusal to reinstate—discretion.

Bliss v Watson, 208-1199; 227 NW 108

Setting aside dismissal. When an action to collect death benefits was dismissed for want of prosecution, the court was justified in setting aside the dismissal when the petition for reinstatement showed the fact of the accident resulting in death, and that witnesses had been located, and the order of the court complied with a statute in making an adjudication that the plaintiff had a valid cause of action.

Nickerson v Iowa Assn., 226-840; 285 NW 162

Justifiable setting aside. The court is, manifestly, within its discretion in setting aside the dismissal of an action when the dismissal was entered by the plaintiff's counsel at a time when he had been discharged.

Pilcher Co. v Clark, 218-150; 253 NW 907

Setting aside—time limit. The time limit for filing petition to vacate an order dismissing an action for want of prosecution, on the ground of unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing a party from prosecuting the action, is not limited to a time on or before the second day of the term succeeding the entry of the order.

Seiders, Inc., v Adel Clay, 218-612; 255 NW 656

Judgment of dismissal—nonjurisdiction to set aside. The district court, having at one term entered a judgment of dismissal of an action for want of prosecution of the action as required by the rules of the court, has no jurisdiction at a subsequent term, tho the judgment entry remains unsigned, to set aside said judgment under §10801, C., '35, and reinstate the action. The governing procedure, under such circumstances, is provided by §12787 et seq., C., '35.

Workman v Dist. Court, 222-364; 269 NW 27

Dismissal after death of party. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

No reinstatement of nol-prossed indictment. An indictment against a corporation for maintaining a liquor nuisance, nol-prossed, without fraud at the sole instance of the county attorney, on the mistaken assumption that defendant was not a corporation and, therefore, could not be held to answer, may not later be reinstated when it is discovered that defendant is in fact a corporation. (Keokuk v Schultz, 188 Iowa 937, overruled in part.)

State v Veterans, 223-1146; 274 NW 916; 112 ALR 383

11563 Decision on the merits.

Discretion of court—trial on merits preferred. The law favors trial on merits, and the trial court exercises considerable discretion in setting aside default judgments so as to give preference to trial of causes on merits.

Lemley v Hopson, (NOR); 232 NW 811

11564 Counterclaim tried.

Effect on cross-petition. An executor who institutes an authorized action against a corporate receiver in the county of the receiver's appointment, for relief against an alleged fraud-induced contract by the deceased, and (1) is met by a cross-petition for judgment on the said contract, and (2) has his action properly consolidated with divers other actions under duly joined issues which might have been the basis of an original action against the executor in said county of suit, may not thereupon, after dismissing his action, have all proceedings against himself and the estate dismissed on the claim that the probate court which appointed him had sole jurisdiction to render a judgment against him or against the estate.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Splitting action—dismissal of part of claim—effect on cross-petition. A claimant in probate who seeks to have proceeds of life policies subjected to payment of claim does not, by dismissal as to a part of amendment to his claim, deprive the court of jurisdiction to adjudicate the rights to such proceeds as claimed by cross-petitioner.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

11566 Dismissal in vacation.

Necessary loss of jurisdiction. The voluntary dismissal of an action by plaintiff prior to the return day, and the record entered by the clerk of such dismissal, necessarily deprives the court of all jurisdiction to proceed with said cause.

Lyon v Craig, 213-36; 238 NW 452

TRIAL AND JUDGMENT §§11563-11567

11567 Judgment—final adjudication.

I NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 2 ILB 142—Federal courts following state court decisions; 7 ILB 31—The declaratory judgment; 12 ILR 62—The declaratory judgment—its application to constitutional controversies Judgment as debt. A judgment, whether based on contract or tort, is a "debt" within the meaning of the exemption statutes.

Ohio Ins. v Galvin, 222-670; 269 NW 254; 108 ALR 1036

Admissions—plea of guilty in criminal prosecution. A plea of guilty in a criminal prosecution may be admissible as an admission when the judgment entered thereon would not be admissible.

In re Johnston, 220-328; 261 NW 908; 262 NW 488

Necessary allegation and proof. In order to defeat, under §12032, C., '31, the application of a surviving widow for an allowance out of her husband's estate, the objector must distinctly allege and prove that the widow feloniously took, or feloniously caused or procured another to take, the life of her said husband, and must so do irrespective of the outcome or result of any criminal proceedings against said widow.

In re Johnston, 220-328; 261 NW 908; 262 NW 488

Amount in controversy—pleadings determinative. In determining the amount in controversy under the statute limiting supreme court appeals to cases involving over $100, the allegations of the pleadings are controlling, and where the propriety of the judgment is the only issue, interest or costs will not be considered in determining the amount in controversy, but where defendant's motion attacked purported judgment of district court confirming justice's judgment in sum of $74, together with accrued interest of $35, amount of interest would be added to judgment in determining whether amount involved was sufficient to authorize appeal to supreme court.

I NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL—continued

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

General inequity—nonmutuality—innocent third parties. A decree awarding specific performance cannot be justified (1) when the party awarded such performance has neither tendered performance nor specifically shown his ability to perform, (2) when the decree contains mandates on parties over whom the court has no jurisdiction, (3) when the decree awards such performance both in favor of and against parties who are not and never have been parties to the contract in question, and (4) when the decree compels parties who are strangers to the contract in question to change their position to their possible financial loss.

Anders v Crown, 210-469; 229 NW 744

Judgment against insane person—validity. The validity of a judgment obtained in a law action against an insane defendant is not affected by such insanity, or by fact that a guardian had been appointed for his property.

In re Simpson, 225-1194; 282 NW 283

Findings by court. Whether a mere finding by the court as to the extent of the administrator's liability to the estate, entered on an application by the surety to remove the administrator, is an adjudication binding on the surety on the bond, quære.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Dismissal before trial—effect. The dismissal of an action by plaintiff before trial, even tho it is an equitable action which involves the liability of a defendant city relative to various claimants for work and materials on a public improvement, deprives the court of all jurisdiction thereafter to proceed with the trial and adjudicate any right of the dismissing plaintiff, when the pleadings of the defendant are solely defensive.

Eclipse Lbr. v City, 204-278; 213 NW 804

Eclipse Lbr. v Kepler, 204-286; 213 NW 809

Loss of right to equitable relief. A duly entered judgment against plaintiff on the merits in a law action, and affirmed on appeal, constitutes a final judgment, and §11017, C., '31, furnishes no authority to plaintiff thereafter to file in the adjudicated law action a "substituted petition in equity" (and motion to transfer to equity) involving the same subject matter, and no authority or jurisdiction to the court to entertain such attempted action.

Phoenix Ins. Co. v Fuller, 216-1201; 250 NW 499

Motion to dismiss—pleading over in equity. Plaintiff, in an action triable in equity, who has his action dismissed on motion because of defenses in point of law appearing on the face of the petition, must be accorded the right (1) to plead over, or (2) to elect to stand upon the ruling of the court.

Marcovis v Inv. Co., 223-801; 273 NW 888

Insufficient showing to overcome recital. A judgment recital that a plaintiff appeared and requested the dismissal of the action will not be expunged on motion on testimony which is in equipoise on the issue whether such recital is correct.

Sullivan v Coakley, 205-225; 217 NW 820

Collateral attack—nonpermissible impeachment. The judgment of a court having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter cannot be collaterally impeached.

King City v Surety Co., 212-1230; 238 NW 93

Unallowable collateral attack. In the foreclosure of a mortgage, executed by an administrator on lands of the deceased and on due order and authorization of the court, the defending heirs, who were parties to the order and authorization for the mortgage, will not be permitted to collaterally attack the validity of the mortgage on the ground that part of the land was the homestead of the deceased and therefore descended to the heirs exempt from the debts of the deceased.

Reinsurance Life v Houser, 208-1226; 227 NW 116

Appointment of administrator—collateral attack. In an action by an administrator, an answer alleging that plaintiff is not a legal administrator because he is a nonresident and secured his appointment by concealing that fact from the court is properly stricken because (1) the plaintiff's nonresidence did not render the appointment void, and, therefore, (2) the answer is but an unallowable attempt to collaterally attack the probate order of appointment.

Reidy v Railway, 216-415; 249 NW 347

Unserved and nonappearing parties. In rendering a decree the court may very properly insert a precautionary clause to the effect that the decree is not binding on unserved and nonappearing parties.

Gunn v Gould Co., 206-172; 218 NW 895

Partition proceedings—unborn child. A statute empowering the court in partition proceedings (1) to assume, through a guardian ad litem, jurisdiction over the contingent interest of an unborn child as a possible cotenant of the land, (2) to order a sale of the land, and (3) to exercise a continuing jurisdiction over the resulting fund insofar as such possible child may have an interest, is violative of neither the federal nor state constitution relative to depriving persons of property without due process.

Mennig v Howard, 213-936; 240 NW 473

Judgment after death of defendant. Principle recognized that the court having taken a cause under advisement, and delayed decision until after the death of the defendant, may validly render judgment as of the date of the submission.

Chariton Bk. v Taylor, 213-1206; 240 NW 740

Involved matters—broad power under general prayer for relief. A court of equity, in dealing with and adjusting involved and complicated matters of fact, has exceptionally broad power to effect equity and justice when both parties pray for general equitable relief. Illustrated where defendant, who was the owner of coal lands, and those working in conjunction with him, had wrongfully interfered with the rights of lessees, and were held liable in a reasonable amount for permanent improvements placed in the mine by lessees, even tho said improvements became worthless—it appearing that defendant's misconduct had materially contributed to said latter condition.

Hartford Coal Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 263 NW 269

Primary jurisdiction of equity in personam—decree affecting status of bank deposit. Primarily and fundamentally, courts of equity act only in personam, and it is only by statute that they have acquired jurisdiction to act directly in rem. The fact that a decree determines the rights of parties to a bank deposit from insurance proceeds, and indirectly affects the status thereof, does not make the proceeding one in rem.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Collateral attack—judgment on defective notice. Principle reaffirmed that a judgment rendered on notice such as to give the court jurisdiction, tho the notice may be defective, cannot be collaterally attacked.

Bauer v Bauer, 221-782; 266 NW 531

Void decree—collateral attack. A decree of divorce, wheresoever rendered, is always open to collateral attack by proof that the court was without jurisdiction to render it.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Collateral attack—orders in bankruptcy. An order in federal bankruptcy proceedings for the sale of the bankrupt's equity of redemption in land sold under foreclosure proceedings is immune from collateral attack on the ground that the land embraced the bankrupt's homestead.

Lincoln Bank v Brown, 219-630; 258 NW 770

Void probate order. Void orders of the probate court may be attacked collaterally.

Irwin v Bank, 218-477; 255 NW 671

Ruling on motion as adjudication. An order overruling plaintiff's motion (1) to strike an answer, and (2) for judgment nil dicit (assuming the propriety of such procedure) constitutes an adjudication that plaintiff has no legal right to a judgment on the pleadings as they then stand; and plaintiff has no right later to present, to another judge of the same court, a motion for judgment on the same pleadings, and said latter judge has no right to review the rulings of the former judge by sustaining said latter motion.

Taylor v Canning Corp., 218-1281; 257 NW 353

Ruling on motion as adjudication. Whether a ruling sustaining a motion to strike a pleading on the ground that it improperly joins causes of action and party defendants constitutes (in the absence of an appeal) a final adjudication in the further progress of the cause, quare.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Motion to dismiss—ruling as adjudication. The overruling of a motion to dismiss a petition in an equitable action does not amount to an adjudication unless the defendant stands on his motion and allows judgment to be entered against him.

Frazier v Wood, 219-36; 255 NW 647; 257 NW 768

Absence of issues. A decree quieting title in certain defendants against other defendants cannot be rendered when no issues whatever were joined between said defendants.

Grandy v Adams, 219-51; 256 NW 684

Nonlitigated issue. A judgment or decree cannot be deemed an adjudication of an issue which was not expressly or impliedly embraced in the proceedings leading up to the judgment.

Wunder v Schram, 217-920; 251 NW 762

Appeal—dismissal on technical grounds—noneffect as adjudication. The dismissal, by the supreme court, of an appeal, and the affirmance by said court of the judgment appealed from, on the technical ground that appellant had failed to make timely filing of an abstract of the record, cannot be deemed an adjudication of the jurisdictional legality of the judgment so affirmed. In other words, while the appeal has proven abortive, the said judgment is nevertheless subject to an action for its cancellation on the ground that the trial court was wholly without jurisdiction to enter it.

Dallas v Dallas, 222-42; 268 NW 516

I NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL—concluded

Public utility contracts under Simmer law—engineering cost—no general judgment. Simmer law prohibits payment of construction cost of a municipal electric plant from taxation, and precludes rendering a general judgment for such cost, including a judgment for cost of engineering services in preparing plans and specifications for construction of such public utility, when such services were performed under contract, subsequent to the election and passage of the ordinance providing for construction payment from future earnings. Consequently, in an action by the engineers against a city to recover compensation for their services, a directed verdict for the city was proper.

Burns Co. v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

Refunding erroneous tax—administrative remedies exhausted before resorting to court. Under the statute providing for refunding erroneous tax, stockholders of a national bank are not entitled to money judgment in alternative of statute. All adequate administrative remedies must be exhausted to recover tax illegally collected before resorting to the courts.

First Nat. Bk. v Harrison County, 57 F 2d, 56
Hammerstrom v Toy Nat. Bk., 81 F 2d, 628

II EVIDENCE OF JUDGMENT

Competent evidence of judgment. As a general rule, a judgment must be entered of record in order to be of any validity, but for many purposes the court's decision is effective from the time it is actually pronounced, or when the judge writes in his calendar a statement of the decision, but there is no competent evidence of the rendition until the memorandum is entered in the court record, and, after recording, the judgment may for some purposes relate back to the time when it was actually ordered.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Parol to explain judgment. The use of ambiguous words in a judgment or decree of court may open the door to parol evidence to establish what the court actually decided.

Hawkeye Ins. v Inv. Co., 217-644; 251 NW 874

Evidence available against vouchee. In an action for breach of warranty because of an existing mortgage on the property, the foreclosure proceedings and judgment entry therein are admissible against the covenantor-defendant to prove the plaintiff's measure of damages, it appearing that the covenantor had been duly vouched into said foreclosure proceedings.

Kellar v Lindley, 203-57; 212 NW 360

Decree of dissolution. A decree of dissolution of a corporation based on the fraud of the corporation is admissible, on the issue of fraud and want of consideration, against an alleged bona fide holder of a negotiable promissory note which was given to the corporation as the purchase price for its corporate stock, even tho neither of the parties to the action on the note were parties to the dissolution suit.

Andrew v Peterson, 214-582; 243 NW 340

Admissibility against stranger. A final decree and the pleadings relating thereto may, in some cases, be admissible in a subsequent action to prove an ultimate fact, even tho the party against whom the decree is offered was not a party to the decree. So held where the decree was received to prove the judicial cancellation of a contract of sale upon which cancellation depended the validity of a promissory note sued on.

Pierce v Lichtenstein, 214-315; 242 NW 59

Divorce—former decree—effect. In a second action for divorce, evidence of events antedating the first decree and including the history of the parties and their relations is not objectionable insofar as such evidence throws light upon the conduct of the parties subsequent to the former decree.

Garside v Garside, 208-534; 224 NW 586

III ON MOTION

Additional annotations. See under §11603

Motion to strike and judgment on pleadings. A motion to strike an answer and for judgment on the pleadings manifestly cannot be properly sustained when the answer, both by general and specific denials, puts in issue the very gist of plaintiff's cause of action.

Ind. School Dist. v School Dist., 216-1013; 250 NW 192

Nonallowable. Motions for judgment on the pleadings are not allowable.

Perry-Fry Co. v Gould, 217-958; 251 NW 142

Judgment on pleadings—motion for—permissibility. The practice of entertaining motions for judgment on the pleadings will be recognized, on appeal, not as a matter of right in movant, but as a matter of mutual agreement between litigants.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Judgment on pleadings denied. Where an unverified petition is filed in action on a written agreement, the contents of which are challenged by general and specific denials under oath, plaintiff is not entitled to judgment on pleadings, even tho genuineness of signature is not properly challenged.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

IV FINAL JUDGMENTS

Decree after remand from appeal—finality. The decree entered by the district court in conformity to an opinion of the supreme court is the final adjudication in the case.

Goltry v Relfh, 224-692; 276 NW 614

Will—acceptance of bequest—unappealed order extending testator's limitation. Where testator directed his executors to purchase, for a daughter, good Iowa land of the value of $15,600, such daughter having refused to accept partial distribution of realty to heirs prior to testator's death, but the testator also provided such bequest should lapse if daughter failed to select land within one year from testator's death, and where within one year the daughter filed application for extension of time on the ground that estate did not have funds to purchase such land, which extension was granted after due notice to executors and heirs, held, district court had jurisdiction to grant extension of time and, no appeal having been taken therefrom, the order became "final" and the heirs were bound by the decision.

In re Holdorf, 227-977; 289 NW 756

Failure to appeal—effect. A defendant who fails to appeal from any part of a decree which (1) established certain claims for labor (as contended for by plaintiff), but (2) held that such claims were not liens on certain property (as contended for by defendant), may not question the decretal establishment of said claims on a successful appeal by the plaintiff from the latter part of the decree.

Soodhalter v Coal Co., 203-688; 213 NW 213

Decretal portion inconsistent with recital of facts. The decretal portion of a decree, when in conflict with recital of facts, takes precedence, and the decree is not void because of the inconsistency, and appeal lies only on the decretal portion of the decree that is final judgment.

Higley v Kinsman, (NOR); 216 NW 673

Conclusiveness. An order of court confirming a deed in partition, approving the final report of the referee and discharging him and his bondsman from further responsibility, coupled with a recital and finding that the referee had made full distribution of the purchase price and had fully complied with all orders of the court (one of which was to the effect that the purchase price must be paid in cash) is final and conclusive until set aside by a direct proceeding, even tho as a matter of fact no money ever actually passed from the purchaser to the referee.

State Bank v Uglow, 208-1241; 227 NW 118

Foreclosure — decree — nonjurisdiction to amend. The district court has no jurisdiction, long after a duly rendered decree in mortgage foreclosure has become final, to amend said decree by striking therefrom a provision for redemption from execution sale, and by substituting therefor a provision directing the sheriff to issue deed forthwith upon making such sale. So held where the judgment plaintiff sought such amendment on the theory that the judgment defendant had lost his right to redeem because of a stay of execution obtained by him pending ineffectual bankruptcy proceedings.

Nibbelink v DeVries, 221-581; 265 NW 913

Judgment on remand for amount confessed. A plaintiff-appellant who, on appeal, is unsuccessful in his effort to establish liability in excess of defendant's offer to confess judgment, is entitled on remand to procedendo directing the trial court to enter judgment in his favor for the amount of said offer and for costs to date of said offer.

Fenley v Ins. Co., 215-1369; 245 NW 332; 247 NW 635

Harmless error—form of judgment. Where a trustee under a trust agreement sues the maker of promissory notes on a series of notes, the beneficial interest of which is in different parties, the defendant may not complain that a separate judgment is rendered on each count, and an aggregate judgment for the sum of all the separate judgments—the defendant being amply protected, by the terms of the judgments, from a double liability.

Iowa Co. v Clark, 215-929; 247 NW 211

Permanent injunction—conditional order for—compliance—effect. When a decree provides (1) that defendant shall pay an award in condemnation proceedings, or (2) that in event defendant appeals from said award he shall give a supersedeas bond, and (3) that in event he fails to pay or appeal, injunction shall issue, enjoining defendant's use of the condemned land, then the taking of an appeal and the giving of the supersedeas bond by defendant nullifies the authority under the decree to issue an injunction. In other words, after the decree is affirmed on appeal without any provision relative to injunction, the trial court has no jurisdiction on motion to enter an injunction on the basis of the affirmed decree. (The reasoning is that the decree constituted a final decree and that the decree as drawn authorized an injunction only on condition that defendant failed to appeal and give the supersedeas bond.)

Fairfield v Dashiell, 217-474; 249 NW 236

Scope of—potentially litigated question. A duly rendered judgment of a court of bankruptcy that its trustee has no interest in or title to an article of personal property because said article belongs to one who sold it to said bankrupt under a conditional sale contract which has been duly forfeited, constitutes in legal effect, inter alia, a final adjudication that said bankrupt had no redeemable interest in said article—conceding, arguendo, that he might, under some circumstances, have had such right.

Smith v Russell, 223-123; 272 NW 121

IV FINAL JUDGMENTS—concluded

Custodial order as adjudication. An order in divorce proceedings awarding to the mother, without fraud on her part, the unconditional custody of her children, constitutes a final adjudication in her favor of each and every fact then bearing on her fitness for such custody.

Wood v Wood, 220-441; 262 NW 773

Ruling on demurrer—when an adjudication. Timely filing of an amendment to an answer by party entitled so to amend, after a demurrer to the answer was sustained, deprived the ruling on the demurrer of all effect as a final adjudication. Such ruling on demurrer in and of itself settles nothing and it becomes an adjudication only if defeated party chooses to make it such.

Schwartz v School Dist., 225-1272; 282 NW 754

V ENTRY, RECORD, AND DOCKETING

Entry all-essential.

State v Wieland, 217-887; 251 NW 757

Confession of judgment—clerk's mandatory duty. A "statement of confession", or "cognovit" oftentimes referred to as a "power of attorney" or simply as a "power", is the written authority of the debtor and his direction to the clerk of the district court, or justice of the peace, to enter judgment against him as stated therein and the statutory provision that "the clerk shall thereupon make an entry of judgment" is definite and mandatory, so the mere recording by the clerk of the debtor's admission of indebtedness, confession of judgment, and authorization to the clerk to enter judgment was not the "entry of judgment by confession" required by statute. Execution issued thereon was properly annulled and decree quieting title to land in owners as against execution levy and making permanent a temporary injunction enjoining execution sale was proper.

Blott v Blott, 227-1108; 290 NW 74

Competent evidence of judgment. As a general rule, a judgment must be entered of record in order to be of any validity, but for many purposes the court's decision is effective from the time it is actually pronounced, or when the judge writes in his calendar a statement of the decision, but there is no competent evidence of the rendition until the memorandum is entered in the court record, and, after recording, the judgment may for some purposes relate back to the time when it was actually ordered.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Entry—calendar and record book. From a statute requiring that all judgments and orders must be entered in the record book, it may be inferred that the judge's calendar is in the nature of a memorandum book ordinarily used by the judge to guide the clerk in entering judgments and orders in the record book which is their final place of repose, and that the clerk's entry in the record book is the legal evidence of a judgment or order.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Record of judgment clarified by later entry. When the court stated in its entry of judgment: "The defendant excepts to said judgment. Exceptions allowed and granted.", and in ruling on a motion for a new trial, made an entry that the above-quoted was intended to save an exception for the defendant, the court was correct in its action to clarify the record, and on appeal the defendant could not contend that the entry could only be interpreted to mean that the exception to the judgment was sustained.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Filing for record after term time—effect. A judgment is not rendered erroneous because signed, filed, and entered of record after the adjournment of the trial term when the decision was rendered in term time and then noted on the court calendar and on the appearance docket, with directions to the attorneys to prepare a decree in accordance with the decision.

Andrew v Bank, 209-1149; 229 NW 819

Inaccurate judgment — correction without new trial. When parties to an action voluntarily (tho irregularly) submit to a referee certain counts only of the petition, and later judgment is entered on the report of the referee in such form as to indicate that all counts of the petition had been so submitted, the court, on proper proof, is under mandatory duty, during the term at which the judgment was entered, to exercise its statutory and inherent power and, itself, correct said inaccuracy.

Watters v Knutsen, 223-225; 272 NW 420

Validity of long-delayed entry. The duty of the clerk of the district court, without any direction from the court, to enter judgment on the general verdict of the jury,—no contrary order being made by the court,—is imperative and continues without limitation as to time. So held where the judgment was entered 14 years after return of the verdict.

Selby v McDonald, 219-823; 259 NW 485

Judgment on note—entry before surrender of note. The purpose of a statute providing that the clerk shall not enter upon the records any judgment based on a note unless the note is first delivered to the clerk, being to retire the instrument from circulation so that the maker and others will not be subjected to other suits, was accomplished altho a judgment was entered eight days before the note was surrendered. When two years elapsed before an action was brought to set aside the judgment because of noncompliance with the statute, and no defense to the note was shown, the action should be dismissed.

Jensen v Martinsen, 228- ; 291 NW 422

Judgment entry in eminent domain—insufficiency. Record entry in proceedings relative to eminent domain reviewed, and held, notwithstanding its recitals, not to constitute a judgment for damages, but to specify the conditions under which the plaintiff property owner would be entitled to a provisional injunction.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 221-66; 264 NW 906

What constitutes judgment—entry in record book essential. Neither the mental conclusion of the judge presiding at a trial, nor the oral announcement of such conclusion, nor his written memorandum entered in his calendar, nor the abstract entered in the judgment docket, constitutes a judgment. A judgment cannot be said to be entered until it is spread by the clerk upon the record book.

Lotz v United Markets, 225-1397; 283 NW 99

VI CONSTRUCTION

General verdict on multiple issues—presumption. The court will not, the rights of third parties being involved, assume that a general verdict, unaided by any special findings, was based on one of several different and permissible grounds.

Eclipse Co. v Davis, 201-1283; 207 NW 238

Conflicting findings. An unappealed decree which is sustainable only on a finding of a certain fact must prevail over a contrary finding of fact in the decree.

Leach v Bank, 202-265; 209 NW 422

Recitals accompanying decree—effect. A recital in a so-called judgment entry in real estate mortgage foreclosure that plaintiff "shall have a lien against all property kept on said premises" and that said lien shall be superior to a named chattel mortgage, when not carried into the decree which follows the recital, is no part of the decree, and is not binding on anyone, a fortiori when such recital finds no support in the pleadings or in the stipulation filed in the case.

Van Alstine v Hartnett, 210-999; 231 NW 448

Record of judgment clarified by later entry. When the court stated in its entry of judgment: "The defendant excepts to said judgment. Exceptions allowed and granted.", and in ruling on a motion for a new trial, made an entry that the above-quoted was intended to save an exception for the defendant, the court was correct in its action to clarify the record, and on appeal the defendant could not contend that the entry could only be interpreted to mean that the exception to the judgment was sustained.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Decretal portion inconsistent with recital of facts. The decretal portion of a decree, when in conflict with recital of facts, takes precedence, and the decree is not void because of the inconsistency, and appeal lies only on the decretal portion of the decree that is final judgment.

Higley v Kinsman, (NOR); 216 NW 673

Recital of facts—effect on nonparty. The recital of facts in a decree cannot have binding force on a nonparty to the proceedings.

State v Packing Co., 210-754; 227 NW 627; 71 ALR 91

Invalid stipulation. A stipulation in divorce proceedings, even tho carried into the decree, is a nullity in so far as it seeks to render land exempt from the claims of creditors of the fee title owner.

Putensen v Dreeszen, 206-1242; 219 NW 490

Accrued and unpaid installments of alimony unchangeable. While the court, in divorce proceedings, has ample power, on a showing of change of conditions of the parties, to modify a former order or judgment for alimony or support money, yet the court is wholly without jurisdiction to cancel installments which have accrued and which remain unpaid under said former order or judgment.

Horn v Horn, 221-190; 265 NW 148

Enjoining proceedings—unallowable venue. An action will not lie in one county to enjoin proceedings on a judgment rendered in another court in another county, even tho plaintiff's action is based on the claim that the judgment is wholly void.

Ferris v Grimes, 204-587; 215 NW 646

Inconsistent remedies—irrevocable election—effect. A judgment creditor who, instead of satisfying his judgment (1) by enforcing his lien on personal property which his judgment debtor had assigned to him as security, satisfies said judgment, (2) by buying in the same property under a general execution levy and sale under his said judgment, must be deemed to have irrevocably waived all right under his said assignment as security, it appearing that after said levy but before the sale thereunder, the said judgment creditor learned that the judgment defendant had also assigned said property to another party.

Zimmerman v Horner, 223-149; 272 NW 148

Remittitur—effect on prior judgment entry.

Fox v McCurnin, 210-429; 228 NW 582

Unauthorized contracts. A judicial holding that municipal warrants issued for the erection of a municipal waterworks are void because the erection had not been authorized by the voters, is necessarily a holding that the contract under which the warrants are issued is also void.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

VI CONSTRUCTION—concluded

When lien effective. A decree which establishes in plaintiff a lien on real estate "subject to the payment" of a named claim, and which provides for a sale of the land subject to said claim, cannot properly be construed as requiring plaintiff to pay and discharge said claim as a condition precedent to the attaching of plaintiff's lien.

Farber v Ritchie, 212-1396; 238 NW 436

Judgment not contract. A judgment is not a contract in the ordinary sense of said latter term.

Berg v Berg, 221-326; 264 NW 821

Reservation of unpleaded issue. In an action to enjoin a public utility company from maintaining an electric light and power plant within a city, the reservation in the final decree of the question of the right of the company to maintain a similar plant running through the city and supplying points outside the city—a plant distinct from the company's city plant—is proper when the pleadings do not fairly embrace said latter plant.

Iowa Co. v Town, 217-291; 251 NW 609

Where reasonable minds disagree—judgment affirmed. In action for damages to plaintiff's automobile, judgment will be affirmed, on appeal, where reasonable minds might reasonably disagree on the fact issues.

Schenk v Moore, 226-1313; 286 NW 445

Construction and operation—decree as entirety for res judicata. A mortgage foreclosure decree will be construed in its entirety to determine the precise matter adjudicated.

Titus Co. v Natural Gas, 223-944; 274 NW 68

Construction as entirety—resort to pleadings. A decree is construed in its entirety, and obscurity or ambiguity may be clarified by resort to the pleadings and proceedings.

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

Approval of executor's report not construction of will. The fact that the court had approved an executor's report, wherein he had attempted to relieve an estate of inheritance tax on the ground that all devises in the will were contingent, does not mean that such holding is a construction of the will, since the construction of the will was not in issue.

Flanagan v Spalti, 225-1231; 282 NW 347

Conclusiveness—nonadjudication. It is quite captious to claim that a decree adjudicates a matter which is specifically left open for future determination.

Lehr v Switzer, 213-658; 239 NW 564

Granting unallowable relief. The court may not decree the cancellation of an unquestioned judgment or decree a reconveyance of land when the validity of the original conveyance was not properly in issue.

Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Quieting title—relief—decree beyond issues. In a quiet title action by grantee against grantor's heir and successor in interest, a decree based on a deed containing a declaration of purpose (educational and religious use), goes beyond the issues when it finds the grantee to be the "sole and absolute owner, in fee simple", the effect being to adjudicate the rights of persons, not before the court, who may have trust interests under the terms in the deed.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Land subjected to bank's judgment—attorney lien—belated cost modification. Where an action was instituted to set aside conveyances and to subject land to a judgment, and an attorney having a lien on such judgment intervenes, establishes and gets an adjudication of priority in the decree, which made no provision for payment of costs but later was invalidly modified under guise of a motion to retax costs, the trial court being without jurisdiction to modify the decree (1) after an appeal therefrom had been perfected and (2) because the modification was not made during the term the decree was entered, certiorari will lie to correct the lower court's excess of jurisdiction, and fact that plaintiff is a banking corporation no longer in existence will not defeat the certiorari, since corporation must be regarded as existing to the degree necessary to wind up its affairs.

Grimes Bank v Jordan, 224-28; 276 NW 71

Right of subrogation—deducting set-off. A vendor who is compelled to discharge a judgment lien on real estate after the amount of the judgment has been deducted from the purchase price is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment plaintiff against a subsequent purchaser who is not a purchaser for value and without notice, subject to any indebtedness owed by the vendor to the vendee, and growing out of the same transaction.

Home Co. v Burrows, 207-1071; 224 NW 72

Deception constituting fraud—requisites to nullify judgment. Fraud as will invalidate a duly entered decree must be perpetrated by or in some manner connected with the opposing party or his attorney.

Ware v Eckman, 224-783; 277 NW 725

Enforcement—void judgment always subject to attack. A void judgment may be attacked in any proceeding in which it is sought to be enforced.

Gohring v Koonce, 224-1186; 278 NW 283

Corporation judgment compromised—former stockholder—no authority. Stockholders who had sold their stock after the corporation had recovered a judgment no longer had an interest in the judgment which remained the property of the corporation even when its name was changed, so a compromise settlement of the judgment had no validity when made by attorneys with consent given by one former stockholder, as only the corporation could authorize such settlement.

Glenwood Lbr. Co. v Hammers, 226-788; 285 NW 277

VII ACTIONS AND DEFENSES MERGED, BARRED, AND CONCLUDED

Splitting causes—pleading. See under §11111 (II)

Matters concluded which might have been litigated. An adjudication operates as an estoppel not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim, but as to every other matter which might with propriety have been litigated and determined in that action.

In re Christensen, 227-1028; 290 NW 34

Conclusiveness—unappealed judgment. Principle reaffirmed that an unappealed judgment for fraud is conclusive on the fraud-doer as to all elements of the fraud.

Breza v Federal Soc., 200-507; 205 NW 206

Reversal as to one count—effect on adjudicated counts.

Pease v Bank, 210-331; 228 NW 83

Recitals not an adjudication. Recitals in the nondecretal portions of a foreclosure decree that the wife of the maker of the note in question was an accommodation maker are not evidence in a subsequent hearing in probate on the wife's claim against the estate that she was such accommodation maker, especially when the foreclosure order left such question open for future determination.

In re Cohen, 216-649; 246 NW 780

Bid for full amount of claim—effect on pre-existing fire loss. A mortgagee who forecloses after a fire loss, but who therein makes no claim to an insurance fund paid to the titleholder on account of said loss, and who bids in the property for the full amount of his judgment, interest, and costs, and later receives a sheriff's deed, must be deemed to have irrevocably waived all claim to said insurance fund, even though the titleholder received said fund under an agreement to rebuild the burned buildings.

Union Ins. v Bracewell, 209-802; 229 NW 185

Vendor's agreement with mortgagee adjudicated in foreclosure—no effect on purchaser. When the mortgagor of a tract of land had an agreement with the mortgagee to release a lot, which was part of the tract, after the buyer of that lot had paid a certain part of the price, and in an action to foreclose the mortgage, the agreement was adjudicated adversely to the mortgagor who had not obtained the release, in a later action to recover payments the buyer could not be affected by such agreement to which he was not a party.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Matter excluded from judgment. Tho a subject matter is fully covered by pleading, yet there can be no adjudication thereof if the court specifically excludes said subject matter from its final determination—reserves said matter for future determination.

Central Bank v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

Insufficient plea. A naked showing that plaintiff had at a former time brought an action against another party on the same subject matters and that such action had been "settled", affords no basis for a plea of res judicata.

Goben v Akin, 208-1354; 227 NW 400

Plea—technical inaccuracy. The pleading of an adjudication in a reply instead of in the petition, does not necessarily constitute an error of consequence, even tho it be conceded that the technical rules of pleading are violated.

Cochran v School Dist., 207-1385; 224 NW 809

Plea—sufficiency. An informal and defective plea of a former adjudication may be sufficient, in the absence of a proper attack thereon.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

Special plea required. He who relies on a prior adjudication must plead it.

Andrew v Bank, 205-237; 216 NW 12

Prior adjudication—pleading prerequisite to proof. A prior adjudication must be pleaded before evidence thereof is admissible. Rule applicable to interpleaders.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132

Unpleaded homestead exemption. A decree to the effect that a conveyance was fraudulent as to a judgment plaintiff and that plaintiff's judgment was a lien on the land is immune from subsequent attack on the ground that the land was, at the time of the conveyance, the homestead of the grantor and grantee, such fact not being pleaded in the action.

Reining v Nevison, 203-995; 213 NW 609

Adjudication of homestead status. An unquestioned order in bankruptcy setting off to a bankrupt certain land as a homestead is, as to all parties to the proceedings, a final adjudication that said land was then a homestead.

Bracewell v Hughes, 214-241; 242 NW 66

Unpleaded discharge in bankruptcy. A decree to the effect that a conveyance was fraudulent as to a judgment plaintiff is immune from subsequent attack on the ground that, when the decree was rendered, the judgment in question had been discharged in bankruptcy, such fact not having been pleaded in said action.

Reining v Nevison, 203-995; 213 NW 609

Setting aside conveyance—res judicata. An adjudication in bankruptcy trustee's action to set aside conveyance, as constituting unlawful preference in bankruptcy, bars a subsequent action for the same purpose based on lack of consideration and fraud upon creditors.

Bagley v Bates, 223-836; 273 NW 924

Ruling on motion to dismiss—res judicata. A ruling on a motion to dismiss garnishment proceedings on the grounds that the property was in custodia legis and not subject to garnishment was not premature and was res judicata even tho made before the garnishee was examined and the garnishment proceedings completed, when the court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Matters concluded—issue raised by rejected amendment. An application to amend the petition offered after submission of the case, tho overruled by the court, makes the issue raised by the amendment res judicata when the identical issue is raised in a subsequent action, especially when no appeal is taken from the ruling on such application.

Bagley v Bates, 223-836; 273 NW 924

Title to nonlitigated lands. An adjudication in partition that a wife did not take under her husband's will, and a due accounting in that action by the widow of all sums received by her, may constitute a full adjudication of the title to property purchased with said proceeds, even tho such property was not specifically involved in said partition proceedings.

Roquette v Marr, 200-751; 205 NW 359

Preliminary and interlocutory injunctions—inevitable dissolution. A temporary injunction in an untried action in one county should be dissolved when it is made to appear that, since the commencement of the action, the right to such injunction has been determined adversely to the plaintiff by the supreme court in an action instituted in another county involving, inter alia, the same subject matter.

Bratt v Life Co., 209-881; 226 NW 724

Judgment in rem—nonmerger of debt sued on. In an action aided by attachment, the entry, on service on defendant by publication, of a judgment in rem against property of the defendant in the hands of a garnishee, does not work a merger in said judgment of the obligation sued on, and thereby deprive the holder of said obligation of the right to proceed against defendant, at a later time, for the recovery of the balance due on said obligation,—if there be such balance.

Strand v Halverson, 220-1276; 264 NW 266; 103 ALR 835

Conclusiveness—attachment proceedings. An unappealed holding in attachment proceedings that plaintiff, tho entitled to judgment against defendant, had acquired no lien on certain real estate is a finality. In other words, plaintiff may not, years afterwards, between other parties dispute said adjudication.

Nagl v Hermsen, 219-223; 257 NW 583

Actually litigated matters concluded. In proceedings on executor's application for authority to mortgage real estate for purpose of paying claims and administration expense, objections as to validity of claims which had been finally adjudicated adversely to objectors in former proceedings wherein the objectors all appeared, filed claims, and were represented by counsel, could not be relitigated, and likewise objectors' right to an accounting against executor in such proceedings could not be relitigated since it had been previously adjudicated that such matter had no proper place therein.

In re Christensen, 227-1028; 290 NW 34

Ruling on demurrer conclusive. A ruling sustaining a demurrer in mortgage foreclosure proceeding on the ground that the estate of the mortgagor is not personally liable on the mortgage because of the failure of the mortgagee to file said claim against the estate within the time provided by statute, constitutes a final adjudication of such nonliability when plaintiff neither pleads over nor appeals from the ruling.

Oates v College, 217-1059; 252 NW 783

Demurrer—ruling as adjudication. In an action at law on a money demand, aided by attachment on the ground that defendant had fraudulently conveyed his land, the overruling of defendant's demurrer based on the ground that the action was barred because not brought within five years after the recording of said deed, cannot be deemed an adjudication of the ground of said demurrer so as to prevent defendant from asserting the same ground against a later-brought action in equity to set aside said alleged fraudulent deed.

Bristow v Lange, 221-904; 266 NW 808

Inhering subject matters. A final opinion of the supreme court in an equitable action is conclusive as to all inhering subject matters except such as the court may and does specifically except therefrom.

Globe Ins. v Cas. Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Conclusiveness—adjudication as to legal effect of contract. A final holding on appeal that a certain agreement between a corporation and a purchaser of its corporate shares constituted an absolute rescission of a contract of purchase of such shares, becomes the law of the case and precludes the after-presented contention that such agreement was a contract of indemnity only.

In re Selway Co., 211-89; 232 NW 831

Adjudication of validity of sale. An adjudication to the effect that the foreclosure sale of a railroad was valid, bars, needless to say, subsequent proceedings based on the assumption or allegation that such sale was wholly void.

Beaton v Town, 209-1254; 228 NW 109

Dual presentation of same issue in same action. A hearing on the merits of a motion to dissolve an attachment on the grounds that movant, and not the principal defendant, was the absolute owner of the property, does not necessarily preclude the movant from again presenting and trying out, in the same action, his claim of ownership, on a petition of intervention.

Citizens Bank v Haworth, 208-1100; 222 NW 428

Nondual presentation. A decree that a subscriber for corporate stock could not recover of the corporate receiver the amount already paid to the corporation on his subscription contract—such being the sole issue—does not estop the subscriber, when sued by the receiver for the unpaid amount of said contract, from pleading in defense that the purported corporation never had any corporate existence.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

Judgment for installment as adjudication. A judgment for the amount of one installment and interest on a promissory note, being all that was then due on the note, is not an adjudication of an action to recover a future maturing installment and interest, the note not containing an accelerating clause maturing the entire indebtedness in case of a default.

Andrew v Stearns, 215-5; 244 NW 670

Acquittal—nonbar to injunction. A verdict of “not guilty” under an indictment charging the keeping of an intoxicating liquor nuisance on certain property is no bar to an action to enjoin the same defendant from maintaining a liquor nuisance on the same property, and based on the same transaction on which the indictment was based.

State v Osborne, 207-636; 223 NW 363

Setting aside for retrial on new theory. After a cause has been fully tried on the theory that intervenors are entitled to recover from plaintiff the amount for which their property had been sold on execution by the sheriff, and after the resulting judgment has been entered and paid and the proceeds accepted by intervenors, it is quite too late to reopen the case and try it anew on the theory that intervenors are entitled to recover the reasonable value of the property so sold.

Peoples Bk. v McCarthy, 211-40; 231 NW 482

Evidence necessary for res judicata. Without evidence as to extent and value of extraordinary services, an allowance therefor to executor and his attorney is not res judicata as to factual matters, and the attorney’s statement which fails to separate time spent in courtroom from time spent in briefing and consultation will not furnish proper legal basis for any final adjudication.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 239 NW 739

Iowa judgment for death damages under compensation act—effect in foreign state. Where a judgment fixing the compensation for a railroad employee’s death, due to an accident in Iowa, was rendered by an Iowa court under the Iowa compensation act, it may be pleaded by the railroad in an action brought against it for the same cause in Minnesota under the Federal Employers’ Liability Act, since both courts had jurisdiction to decide whether deceased was engaged in intrastate or interstate commerce, and that the Iowa judgment, being the earlier one rendered, was res judicata in the other action, altho the other action was brought first.

Chicago RI Ry. v Schendel, 270 US 611

Splitting actions—res judicata—persons and matters concluded. Under the doctrine of res judicata a party must try his entire cause without splitting the issues or defenses, and so a former judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction rendered on the merits between the same parties or privies and on the same cause of action estops and bars relitigation of, not only matters raised, but also matters which might properly have been raised.

Bagley v Bates, 223-836; 273 NW 924

VIII JUDGMENTS OPERATIVE AS BAR

Acquittal as bar to civil action—penalties—forfeitures. The general rule is that a defendant’s acquittal in a criminal prosecution is neither a bar to a civil action against him, nor evidence in such action of his innocence; but, when the subsequent action, altho civil in form, is quasi criminal in nature, as to recovering penalties or declaring forfeitures, the second action may be barred by the former.

Bates v Carter, 225-893; 281 NW 727

Splitting action. A party to a continuing, executory contract may, notwithstanding the wrongful repudiation of the contract by the other party, insist on the contract and sue and recover the matured installments to date; and such action is no bar to a subsequent action to recover henceforth for the wrongful breach of the contract.

Collier v Rawson, 202-1159; 211 NW 704

Splitting actions—res judicata—persons and matters concluded. Under the doctrine of res judicata a party must try his entire cause without splitting the issues or defenses, and so a former judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction rendered on the merits between the same parties or privies and on the same cause of action estops and bars relitigation of, not only matters raised, but also matters which might properly have been raised.

Bagley v Bates, 223-836; 273 NW 924

Liability of bank superintendent for failure to collect claims. When there was no evidence of wrongdoing on the part of the superintendent of banking in his capacity as bank receiver, nor sufficient evidence to show negligence on the part of the bank examiner, a previous decision that the superintendent was negligent in not filing claims within the statutory time for filing in order to collect them, does not control when an objection was made because there was no accounting of these claims in the final report of the receiver when neither the issues nor parties are identical with the previously decided case.

Bates v Niles, 226-1077; 285 NW 626

Conclusiveness — bank stock assessment claim. State superintendent of banking, who in a final decree in equity was denied right of recovery on stock assessment against executor and beneficiaries under will of decedent, could not thereafter recover the same assessment by way of a claim filed in the estate, even tho in the latter instance he acted in statutory capacity as receiver. So held in reaffirming principles that one not a party to a suit, who assumes control of the litigation, employs counsel and has a right to control and conduct the same, is bound by the judgment, and that a judgment is conclusive as to all parties to a suit and all parties in privity.

In re Lyman, 227-1191; 290 NW 537

Adjudication of insured's physical condition—not binding in later action. Where an insured's claim is embodied in a series of suits, an adjudication of a plaintiff-insured's physical condition, determined in one action, does not adjudicate said condition in a subsequent independent action.

Eller v Guthrie, 226-467; 284 NW 412

Future payments—total disability. In action on life insurance policy for total disability payments, where supreme court ordered insurance company in prior case decided in 1931 to pay annual benefits up to that time, the decision of the trial court in a subsequent action on the same policy ordering payments up to 1937 and thereafter, was erroneous as to that part requiring future payments, particularly since opinion in first appeal is binding not only under the doctrine of stare decisis, but also under the rule of res adjudicata, when the first opinion held that "continuance of such disability must be established by later proofs".

Kurth v Ins. Co., 227-242; 288 NW 90

Matters subsequent to decree. A judgment is not res judicata of matters subsequent thereto.

Crow v Mtg. Co., 202-38; 209 NW 410

Adjudication of present conditions. An adjudication which goes no further than to adjudicate conditions as they exist at the date of the decree, necessarily constitutes no adjudication of subsequent conditions attending the same subject matter; and especially so when the decree retains jurisdiction in the court to review subsequent conditions.

In re Cool, 210-30; 230 NW 353

Probate claim denied—no bar in subsequent equity action. A prior judgment in a law action tried on the merits is conclusive as to a subsequent action in equity between the same parties and the same facts, but where a widow is bequeathed a life estate in realty with the right to dispose of such realty for her necessary support, a probate adjudication on the merits that her claim for widow's support could not be established against husband's estate, is not such an adjudication as bars a later equity proceeding to establish such support claim as a lien on such realty.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Retention of jurisdiction to administer trust—effect. A decree of the trial court to the effect that a conveyance was not fraudulent as to creditors, but that the court should retain jurisdiction of the action for the sole purpose of administering a trust therein involved, all of which was duly affirmed on appeal, constitutes a final adjudication of all matters save the administration of said trust.

Central Shoe v Rashid, 210-415; 229 NW 171

Decisions involving former assessments not res judicata. Taxes do not arise out of contract and each years taxes constitute a separate cause of action. Therefore, a decision or judgment involving assessments on the same property in former years cannot be res judicata as to future assessments.

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

Former assessments not res judicata. The assessment of property for taxation is separate for each year, being based on a separate valuation, and an adjudication for one year cannot definitely fix the value for succeeding years.

Trustees v Board, 226-1353; 286 NW 483

"Finding of fact" and "judgment" contrasted. A proceeding in which the trial court makes a finding of fact only, but in which no judgment is entered may not be deemed an adjudication of a pending proceeding between the same parties which does result in a judgment in conformity with an appellate order.

State v Beaton, 205-1139; 217 NW 255

Issues specifically withheld. The rights of a party necessarily cannot be adjudicated by a decree which specifically excludes such rights from the scope of the decree.

Parkinson v Fleming, 208-345; 223 NW 685
Central Bank v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

Issues specifically withheld. Parties, in agreeing to a compromise, may specifically withhold or exclude certain issues or questions from the adjudication. Needless to say that such issues are not adjudicated.

Jones v Surety Co., 210-61; 228 NW 98

Lack of opportunity to litigate issue.

Tutt v Smith, 201-107; 204 NW 294; 48 ALR 394

Withdrawal of intervention—effect on adjudication.

Tutt v Smith, 201-107; 204 NW 294; 48 ALR 394

Abortively tendered issue. An action by a mechanic's lien claimant against the owner of the premises to recover for the work done and for the material furnished, is necessarily not barred because the same issues were abortively tendered in a former action and not tried out.

Matthews v Quaintance, 200-736; 205 NW 361

Nonadjudicated issues. A decree which grants plaintiff's prayer for a rescission of a contract of purchase of land and fixes the terms of accounting by the vendor is not an adjudication of an issue of accounting by other prior vendors and purchasers to whom part of plaintiff's money was paid by mistake or inadvertence, said other parties having appeared only as intervenors, and tendered issues foreign to any accounting by them.

Winn v Williams, 200-905; 205 NW 541

Nonpleaded claim. The right of a purchaser of real estate to recover the purchase price paid will not, in the absence of a plea therefor, be deemed adjudicated in an action in which the vendor is seeking specific performance.

Benedict v Nielsen, 204-1373; 215 NW 658

Boundary line. A decree that a specified portion of a line between adjoining landowners is a boundary line by acquiescence is not an adjudication of the true location of the remaining portion of said boundary line.

Turner v Sandhouse, 205-1151; 216 NW 58

Scope of decree. A decree to the effect that a contract between a contractor and a city was void, and enjoining the city from in any manner making any further payment under the contract, is not an adjudication of another action then pending at law wherein the contractor was seeking to recover on the same subject matter irrespective of the contract. Especially is this true when the decree shows that the court excluded such pending action from the scope of its decree.

Hargrave v City, 208-559; 223 NW 274

Decree as to special assessment not adjudication of damages. A decree fixing the amount of special assessment on property consequent on a street improvement, cannot be deemed an adjudication of the damages suffered by the property owner consequent on the improvement's cutting off the owner's ingress to and egress from the property even tho the decree markedly reduced the assessment made by the city council.

Ashman v City, 209-1247; 228 NW 316; 229 NW 907

Equitable action—adjudication. The general equitable action authorized by section 10313, C., '31, in favor of any party interested under a public improvement contract, may be utilized for two purposes, to wit: (1) to adjudicate the rights of the various parties to the contract funds retained by the public corporation, and (2) to adjudicate the liability, to said parties, of the surety on the contractor's bond to the municipality; but a decree in such action is not an adjudication of the right of the municipality to recover on the said bond when such issue was in no manner presented in such action.

Waukon v Surety Co., 214-522; 242 NW 632

Judgment against maker of note—effect on indorser. A judgment obtained by the indorsee of a promissory note solely against the maker thereof, does not adjudicate or affect any right or obligation of the indorser.

Callaway v Hauser, 211-307; 233 NW 506

Ownership of note—effect. A judgment in an action between the payee of a promissory note and a former collateral holder to the effect that the latter had become and was the unqualified owner of the note precludes the maker of the note, when sued on the note by the adjudged owner, from readjudicating the ownership of the note on the basis of the same facts existing in the former action.

Commercial Bank v Allaway, 207-419; 223 NW 167

VIII JUDGMENTS OPERATIVE AS BAR —continued

Judgment on note alone—mortgage unaffected. A separate judgment on a note does not discharge the mortgage securing it.

Beckett v Clark, 225-1012; 282 NW 724

Different fraud in same transaction. A decree in an action for fraudulent representation in the sale of the corporate stock of one corporation is not an adjudication of an action for materially different fraudulent representations in the sale of the corporate stock of another and different corporation; and this is true tho said actions grew out of the same written contract of purchase.

Reinertson v Prod. Co., 205-417; 216 NW 68

Dismissal of temporary injunction not adjudication. Dismissal of a temporary injunction even after answer is not an adjudication of the cause, as ordinarily a plaintiff asking a permanent injunction is entitled to a trial on the merits.

McMurray v Faust, 224-50; 276 NW 95

Judgment on account stated. A judgment of dismissal rendered strictly on the issue whether there was an account stated is not res judicata of a subsequent action on open account involving the same items.

Hanson v Drug Co., 203-384; 212 NW 731

Eminent domain—compensation—fixtures on mortgaged premises—res judicata. In a proceeding to condemn right of way for a gas pipe line, the fact that the pipe was already installed under an easement which was held in a foreclosure action to be inferior to a prior mortgage, did not thereby give the mortgagee through his foreclosure decree title and ownership of the pipe and fixtures installed on the mortgaged premises, nor is such foreclosure decree res judicata as to title to such pipe and fixtures without trying the issue thereon.

Titus Co. v Natural Gas, 223-944; 274 NW 68

Reformation of deed. A decree in mortgage foreclosure that the mortgagee is not entitled to the reformation of a deed from the mortgagor to a subsequent purchaser so as to show an assumption by such purchaser of the mortgage debt is not an adjudication that the mortgagor is not entitled to such reformation, even tho the mortgagor was a party to the foreclosure, but not a party to the mortgagee's petition for reformation.

American Bank v Borcharding, 205-633; 216 NW 719

All available issues. The purchaser of mortgaged property, duly made a party to the foreclosure of the mortgage, may not afterwards relitigate any issue which was tendered in the foreclosure proceedings or which was available to the parties therein; otherwise, of course, as to nonavailable issues, e. g., whether the purchaser had been credited with all the payments made by him on his contract of purchase.

Heppe v Bank, 209-1017; 227 NW 334

Foreclosure — rents — adjudication against chattel mortgage. On the issue, in real estate mortgage foreclosure, whether an outstanding lease between the owner and his tenant (parties to the action) was superior to the mortgagee's right to a receiver for said premises and for the rents thereof, an unappealed decree which orders the appointment of such receiver works an eviction of said tenant and the consequent nullification of a chattel mortgage by the landlord on his share of the crop rent under said lease, it appearing that the real estate mortgagee had no notice or knowledge of such chattel mortgage until after the entry of his decree of foreclosure.

Keenan v Jordan, 204-1338; 217 NW 248

Failure to enforce all security—res judicata. A mortgagee who, without changing his position in any degree, receives the written agreement of a junior incumbrancer to pay the interest on the mortgage, and the taxes on the mortgaged property, simply acquires a new and additional security for his existing mortgage debt; and if he forecloses his mortgage by personal service on the mortgagor and on said junior incumbrancer (even for a sum less than is due) without asking any relief on said additional security, he will be absolutely precluded from maintaining further action on such agreement. (A fortiori is this true when it otherwise appears that the mortgagee was fully satisfied by his foreclosure.)

Schnuettgen v Mathewson, 207-294; 222 NW 893

Adjudging priority on publication service. A decree, rendered on service by publication, in the foreclosure of a second mortgage, adjudging that said second mortgage is senior and superior to a first mortgage, in accordance with a definite pleading and prayer to said effect based on a good faith but mistaken belief that said first mortgage had been paid, is binding and conclusive on the holder of said first mortgage, and may not be collaterally assailed by said first mortgagee in an action to foreclose his mortgage. (It appears that said first mortgagee had allowed the time to elapse in which to attack said decree under §11595, C., '27.)

Lyster v Brown, 210-317; 228 NW 3

Foreclosure—sale—delinquent taxes paid by mortgagee omitted from judgment—effect. A mortgagee who bids in the property at foreclosure sale, without protecting himself by adding thereto the delinquent taxes he had previously paid under a clause in the mortgage, may not, after he is appointed receiver during the redemption year, collect and apply the rents and profits to reimburse himself for such delinquent taxes. The owner when redeeming, by paying the judgment and costs, takes title free from the lien of such taxes.

Monroe v Busick, 225-791; 281 NW 486

Appointment of receiver. An unappealed decree appointing a receiver of real estate and of the rents and profits thereof must, in a subsequent intervention in the cause, be deemed an adjudication against the owner, of all the issues involved in said appointment.

Canfield v Sec. Co., 216-747; 249 NW 646

Order fixing fiduciary's liability binding on surety. An unappealed order of court, entered on the objections of a beneficiary to the report of a fiduciary, fixing the amount of liability of the fiduciary, is conclusive (in the absence of fraud) on the surety and those claiming under said surety.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Matters litigated in prior action. In an action by heirs of intestate against a son of intestate to have property received by such son decreed to be an advancement and be deducted from the son's interest in the estate, wherein it is shown that such son had instituted a prior action in partition to have his interest in realty determined, held that such issue of advancement should have been raised as an affirmative defense and litigated in the prior partition action, and therefore is now res judicata.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Enjoining action in foreign state. When a claim or cause of action has been fully and finally adjudicated between residents of this state, injunction will lie to enjoin the attempt of the defeated party to relitigate the issue in a foreign jurisdiction.

Oates v College, 217-1059; 252 NW 783; 91 ALR 563

Unappealed but erroneous order dismissing party defendant. In an action of certiorari against the state executive council, and the custodian of public buildings and grounds, to review the legality of the discharge of an employee of the latter department, an unappealed order of court dismissing said custodian as an improper party defendant, tho unqualifiedly erroneous, becomes the law of said particular action, and precludes said plaintiff from thereafter proceeding against said custodian for the relief sought.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

Collateral attack—immunity from. Conceding, arguendo, that the municipal court was in error in overruling defendant's motion for change of venue to the county of his conceded residence, yet the court manifestly had jurisdiction to rule on the motion, and defendant having failed to seek correction of the error by appeal or other appropriate direct proceedings, the ruling becomes a finality, and the subject matter thereof cannot properly be injected into subsequent collateral proceedings wherein the judgment entered on the merits is sought to be enforced. So held where the collateral proceeding was an action to recover on a stay bond.

Educational Film v Hansen, 221-1153; 266 NW 487

Partition sale not subject to collateral attack. A partition sale, regular on its face, cannot be collaterally attacked in a subsequent proceeding on objections to a guardian's final report.

In re Delaney, 227-1173; 290 NW 530

Identity of issues, parties, and subject matter. An adjudication that plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction restraining the condemnation of land for highway purposes, necessarily precludes the subsequent relitigation of the same issue, between the same parties, and concerning the same land.

Hoover v Highway Com., 210-1; 230 NW 561

Lack of identity in res and parties. In injunction action involving title to real estate, the rights of the parties could not be affected by decrees in previous litigation concerning other lands or other parties not connected in interest with present parties or their predecessors in title.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Matters actually and potentially in issue. Two proceedings were consolidated for trial only:

1. An action for injunction, general equitable relief, and specifically enumerated damages consequent on a trespass by a city in overflowing plaintiff's land, and
2. An appeal from an award in proceedings by the city to condemn said land.

On the trial, plaintiff was awarded no judgment for the damages claimed by him in his equitable action because he made no attempt to establish them—probably on the assumption that he would be made whole by the payment of the final award in the condemnation proceedings. But the city refused to pay the final award in the condemnation proceeding and abandoned said proceeding.

Plaintiff then commenced a new action for damages, including, inter alia, the identical damages formerly claimed in said equitable action. Held, all damages which plaintiff had suffered prior to the trial of said equitable action, whether they were then in issue or not, were res judicata.

Wheatley v Fairfield, 221-66; 264 NW 906

Setting aside conveyance—res judicata. An adjudication in bankruptcy trustee's action to set aside conveyance, as constituting unlawful preference in bankruptcy, bars a subsequent action for the same purpose based on lack of consideration and fraud upon creditors.

Bagley v Bates, 223-836; 273 NW 924

Matter incidental to ruling on motion not res judicata. In a libel action brought against a newspaper and others as joint tort-feasors, when affiants testified as to the matter of agency at a hearing on a motion to strike part of the petition, a ruling by the court denying the motion was not res judicata on the question of agency, as agency question was only incidental to the question of misjoinder raised by the motion to strike and could be raised in a subsequent trial on the merits of the case.

Cooper v Gazette Co., 226-737; 285 NW 147

Decree denying injunction decisive on bond liability. A bankruptcy trustee's injunction action against a bankrupt, which action effectuated a dispossession of certain land to which the bankrupt's wife held title, and such action, after appeal, being finally determined adversely to the trustee's claimed right to possession, under which possession he had sold the crops, becomes an adjudication decisive on the issues in a subsequent action on the injunction bond for damages for wrongful issuance of the writ of injunction.

Goltry v Relph, 224-692; 276 NW 614

Necessarily involved but unpleaded issue. A vendor of real estate who seeks specific performance of a written contract without asserting any oral modification of the contract, and is decreed not entitled to such performance, may not, when sued for a return of the purchase price, plead in defense that said written contract was orally modified by the parties and that the purchaser refused to carry out such modified contract. This is true because the subject matter of this latter plea was necessarily adjudicated in the action for specific performance.

Benedict v Nielsen, 204-1373; 215 NW 658

Conclusiveness—jurisdiction of court. Where a court adjudicates the nature and scope of a bond, in an action praying (1) for a money judgment on the bond, and (2) for reformation of the bond and a money judgment thereon, it may not be said that the adjudication of the nature and scope of the bond is not res judicata because beyond the jurisdiction of the court, when the record shows that the nature and scope of said bond was the very keystone in the arch of plaintiff's alleged cause of action, and that the prayer for reformation was only incidental thereto.

King City v Sur. Co., 212-1230; 238 NW 93

Partition — conclusiveness of proceeding. Where testator devised real estate to certain wards on condition that they pay $8,000 into decendent's estate within one year after his death and where, in a partition proceeding to which the wards were parties, court found such condition was not met and that devise had lapsed and the land was sold for $7,200, the wards could not in a subsequent proceeding on objections to guardian's final report maintain position that they still owned the land and were entitled to rents and profits therefrom, since the partition proceedings constituted an adjudication as to every matter there in issue and as to all questions necessarily in issue.

In re Delaney, 227-1173; 290 NW 530

Adjudication and loss of right. The right to foreclose a mechanic's lien is wholly lost by the act of the claimant, when made a party to mortgage foreclosure, (1) in filing a cross-petition for foreclosure of his lien without service of notice of such filing and of hearing thereon; (2) in filing an answer which, in effect, repeats all the allegations of the cross-petition; (3) in allowing the proceedings to go to decree, which omitted any foreclosure of the mechanic's lien, but determined the status and priority of all parties, and which ordered a sale of the premises and foreclosed all subordinate parties of all rights after sale, except the right of redemption; and (4) in failing to appeal from said decree.

Matthews v Quaintance, 200-736; 205 NW 361

Conclusiveness of adjudication—lost junior mechanic's lien—no revivor by judgment. A junior mechanic's lien extinguished by failure to redeem from the senior mechanic's lien foreclosure action is not revived by later reducing the junior mechanic's lien to judgment.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 275 NW 21

Enjoining proceedings—proper court. An action to enjoin proceedings on a judgment rendered in a municipal court cannot be maintained in the district court, even tho both courts are located in the same county.

Keeling v Priebe, 219-155; 257 NW 199

Equitable relief—fraud—burden of proof. A judgment regular on its face must prevail when directly attacked by a stranger thereto unless the latter clearly and satisfactorily establishes his charge of fraud; and until the latter has so established the fraud, the judgment plaintiff is under no obligation to establish the validity of the indebtedness underlying the judgment.

Yungclas v Yungclas, 213-413; 239 NW 22

Mandamus to compel calling of election. A judicial holding to the effect that a petition for the calling of an election to vote on the question of granting an electric light and power franchise was in due form and substance, and that mandamus should issue to compel the calling of such election, is res judicata of a subsequent petition by the same petitioner for the same relief.

Iowa Co. v Tourgee, 208-198; 225 NW 372

Motion to quash execution—when timely—dead judgment creditor. When innocent third parties are not involved, a motion to quash an execution for nonconformity to statutes prescribing procedure after death of judgment creditor, is not too late, though filed four months after the entry of a garnishment judgment to which only two of the eight heirs interested therein were parties. Such garnishment judgment is an incomplete adjudication and not sufficient to warrant payment by the judgment debtor to the two represented heirs.

Gohring v Koonce, 224-1186; 278 NW 283

Muniment of title. In an action by a son against a bank to recover funds which the son claimed his father had deposited for him, a previous adjudication that the funds belonged to the father and not to the son, rendered in an action by the father against the bank and the son, was not res judicata, but constituted a muniment of title showing that the son had no title to the funds, and barred the present action.

Bennett v Bank, 226-705; 285 NW 266

Pensions—findings and orders. An unquestioned, nonfraudulent order or finding by the board of trustees of the policemen's pension fund, on a due application for retirement on a pension, that the applicant was not entitled to such pension, constitutes a conclusive adjudication of the right to such pension, even tho the board did not act on the advice of a physician as required by statute, and even tho the board otherwise acted irregularly.

Riley v Board, 210-449; 228 NW 578

IX PARTIES CONCLUDED

Discussion. See 12 ILR 426—Judgment against indemnitors and persons liable over.

Substituted service—presumption. A return of service of an original notice which reveals service on defendant by service on a proper member of his family is presumed correct, and judgment rendered thereon is valid tho defendant never learned of the notice. Evidence held insufficient to overcome said presumption.

Dickerson v Utterback, 202-255; 207 NW 752

Conclusiveness as to all parties in privity—bank stock assessment claim. State superintendent of banking, who in a final decree in equity was denied right of recovery on stock assessment against executor and beneficiaries under will of decedent, could not thereafter recover the same assessment by way of a claim filed in the estate, even tho in the latter instance he acted in statutory capacity as receiver. So held in reaffirming principles that one not a party to a suit, who assumes control of the litigation, employs counsel and has a right to control and conduct the same, is bound by the judgment, and that a judgment is conclusive as to all parties to a suit and all parties in privity.

In re Lyman, 227-1191; 290 NW 537

Nonparty to action. As a general rule, a party is not bound by an adjudication to which he is not a party.

Citizens Bank v Martens, 204-1378; 215 NW 754

Conclusiveness—insurance rights—beneficiaries not parties. A decree establishing rights to insurance does not adjudicate rights of a beneficiary not a party to the action.

Jacobs v Ins. Co., 223-1157; 274 NW 879

Reversal—decree does not inure to nonappellant. Where an equitable decree adjudged (1) that one of two assignees of the same fund took priority over the other assignee, but (2) that certain mechanics and dealers had lienable claims on said fund prior to both of said assignees, and where, on appeal solely by the defeated assignee, it was adjudged not only (1) that the appellant-assignee took priority over the appellee-assignee, but (2) that said mechanics and dealers had no lienable claims on said fund, held that the judgment on appeal that the mechanics and dealers had no lienable claims on said fund did not inure to the benefit of the appellee-assignee. In other words, the appellee-assignee was still bound by the decree of the trial court because he did not appeal therefrom.

Ottumwa Works v O'Meara, 208-80; 224 NW 803

Defendant by implication. A third party who is not a party defendant in an action legally submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court by directing the actual defendant to appear for and on behalf of said third party and to protect his interest.

Davis v Agr. Soc., 208-957; 226 NW 90

Bad-faith defense by vouchee. One who is vouched by a defendant into an action and assumes exclusive charge of the defense, and in the trial pursues a course distinctly hostile to the defendant and distinctly favorable to himself, may thereby make himself, in legal effect, a codefendant, and be conclusively bound by the judgment against the defendant. So held where the vouchee, knowing that he was vouched into the action by the defendant on the theory that the negligence charged was primary as to the vouchee and secondary as to the defendant, actively attempted to establish that he (the vouchee) was not negligent and that the defendant was negligent.

Hoskins v Hotel, 203-1152; 211 NW 423; 65 ALR 1125

Conclusiveness on personal representative. A decree that a defendant is the absolute owner of certain personal property is conclusive on the personal representative of the plaintiff.

Howell v Howell, 211-70; 232 NW 816

Nonparty to action. A decree or order to the effect that a deposit in an insolvent bank belonged to a municipality but was not entitled to an equitable preference in the liquidation of the assets of the bank is not binding on a party who actually made the deposit, but who was in no manner made a party to, or had any control over, the proceedings which resulted in said decree or order, tho he had requested the municipality and its treasurer to apply to the court for an order granting said preference.

Leach v Bank, 206-265; 217 NW 865

Nonidentity of parties. An adjudication (in mortgage foreclosure) solely between the mortgagee and the grantee of the premises, that the grantee had not assumed the mortgage debt, is no bar to a subsequent independent action by the mortgagor-grantor against said grantee so to reform the deed to grantee as to embrace such assumption, and to recover of said grantee the deficiency which resulted from the foreclosure sale, said deficiency having been paid by said mortgagor-grantor. And this is true even tho the mortgagor-grantor was a party to said foreclosure.

Betzenderfer v Wilson, 206-879; 221 NW 497

Different parties and issues. A decree in an action between a residuary legatee and the donee of a gift, on the issues whether donor was mentally competent to make the gift, and whether he had been fraudulently imposed upon, cannot act as an adjudication of an action by the executor of the donor to set aside said gift as a fraud on the creditors of the donor.

Chamberlain v Fay, 205-662; 216 NW 700

Lack of identity in res and parties. In injunction action involving title to real estate, the rights of the parties could not be affected by decrees in previous litigation concerning other lands or other parties not connected in interest with present parties or their predecessors in title.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Persons not parties or privies. A party who purchases a municipal improvement certificate, lienable on certain property, is not privy to (and therefore not bound by) a subsequently instituted action to quiet title, and the decree entered therein, when he is not made a party to said action.

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-Des Moines Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

Nonparty and nonprivy. A judgment to the effect that drainage improvement costs (designed ultimately to be apportioned among several separate districts) must be assessed in accordance with a specified statute is not conclusive in a subsequent proceeding against a district which was not a party to the first proceedings and which was not privy to any party to said first proceeding.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Ward v Board, 214-1162; 241 NW 26

Appeal—effect on assignee of prematurely issued certificates. The assignee of paving assessment certificates who takes his assignment during the pendency of an appeal to the district court by the property owners (the certificates being prematurely issued) is bound, as far as the property owners are concerned, by the final decree on appeal, even though said assignee was not a party to such appeal.

Western Corp. v City, 203-1324; 214 NW 687

Conclusiveness on contractor. A decree which sustains objections of property owners to a proposed drainage assessment on the assigned ground that certain specified contracts are illegal and void is conclusive on the contractor and his assignees, even tho they are not in fact represented at such hearing, because in law the board of supervisors is, in such proceeding, made the representative, not only of the district, but of every interested party except the adversary parties.

First N. Bk. v County, 204-720; 216 NW 8

Successive actions by several beneficiaries. A recovery on a statutory bond by one beneficiary constitutes no bar to an action by another beneficiary to the extent of the unexhausted penalty of the bond.

Philip Carey v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Estoppel to relitigate adjudicated fact. A judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction that a bond given to a municipality inured solely to the benefit of the municipality—in other words, that the bond was not a statutory bond, and therefore, did not inure to the benefit of materialmen—works an estoppel on the defeated party to ever thereafter relitigate said issue between the same parties relative to the same bond.

King City v Sur. Co., 212-1230; 238 NW 93

Taxpayer protected by decree. An unappealed decree, in litigation between a city and its contractor, wholly invalidating a compromise agreement relative to the amount which should be paid the contractor on a public improvement, is conclusive on the contractor in subsequent litigation between the contractor and taxpayers of the city involving said compromise.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Conclusiveness against rent claimant. A party who intervenes in a real estate mortgage foreclosure, after final decree and after the appointment of a receiver of the rents, and lays claim to said rents as a trustee under an assignment and chattel mortgage thereof antedating the foreclosure, has no standing when it is made to appear that said "trustee" has no personal interest in said rents and is a "trustee" only in the sense that he is the agent of a party who was duly made a party to the foreclosure, and whose rights were fully adjudicated by the final decree.

Virtue v Teget, 209-157; 227 NW 635

Foreclosure—decree in re rents—effect on nonparty. A decree in mortgage foreclosure that the receiver therein appointed is entitled to the rents of the mortgaged premises, during the redemption period, is not an adjudication binding on one who is not a party to the foreclosure and who holds prior executed rent obligations for the same premises and for the same period.

White v Peterson, 222-720; 269 NW 878

Holding on appeal in receivership proceedings. A holding on appeal in foreclosure proceedings that a deficiency judgment debtor will be entitled to credit on the deficiency judgment in the full amount of funds realized in the receivership proceedings, is necessarily conclusive on all parties to the appeal.

Hansen v Bowers, 211-931; 234 NW 839

Order without issue joined. An order of court approving the report of the receiver of an insolvent bank as to the amount of various deposits owing by the bank does not constitute an adjudication against the receiver precluding him from later setting off against a particular deposit the amount owing by the depositor to the bank, it appearing that the approving order was entered without the joining of any issue as to the right of set-off.

Andrew v Bank, 218-489; 255 NW 871

Administrators—liabilities on bonds—existing judgment against executor—surety's new trial improper. Under the general rule that a judgment against an administrator is conclusive against the surety on his bond, where a judgment against an administrator for misappropriation of funds stands unreversed, it is error to set aside judgment on a bond and give the surety a new trial, since such order would not ipso facto vitiate a former order fixing the administrator's liability.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Amount necessary to effect tax redemption. A holding on appeal as to the amount which the owner of land must pay in order to effect redemption from tax sale is necessarily conclusive on the parties.

Fidelity Inv. v White, 212-782; 237 NW 518

Judgment against insured — conclusive against insurer. A judgment determining liability of insured for damages for death resulting from use of automobile was conclusive against liability insurance company as to its liability on policy where there was no fraud or collusion in obtaining the judgment and insurance company had timely notice of suit and elected to make no defense, in view of provision of policy and of statute permitting injured person to maintain action against insurance company for amount of judgment against insured after return of execution unsatisfied, irrespective of insured's insolvency.

International Co. v Steil, 30 F 2d, 654

Judgment of illegality of election — effect. The judgment of a contest court holding the election in question illegal is valid and conclusive upon both parties to the contest, unless appealed from and reversed.

Leslie v Barnes, 201-1159; 208 NW 725

Private bank depositors—claims against estate—property available for payment. Where an estate consists of two general classes of assets, to wit: (1) assets employed by decedent in operating his exclusively owned private bank, and (2) lands and other assets not so employed, and where, under the will, the bank is temporarily continued after the death of the decedent, an unappealed order of the probate court, entered on due notice and service, to the effect that bank depositors be paid from the general assets of the estate, precludes devisees and legatees from thereafter successfully asserting that depositors could only be paid from the assets employed in the operation of the bank, and that, as a consequence, the said lands could not be legally mortgaged in order to effect such payment. Especially should this be true when it appears that large sums of money employed in carrying on the bank have been used by the executors in paying claims not connected with the operation of the bank.

In re Griffin, 220-1028; 262 NW 473

Privity—heirs and administrator. The heirs of an intestate, as parties to an action to partition the lands of said intestate, must be deemed to stand in privity with the administrator of the estate who files a cross-petition in said action and thereon obtains a decree that an insolvent heir has no interest in said lands because of his unpaid indebtedness to said estate.

Bauer v Bauer, 221-782; 266 NW 531

Quieting title — virtual representation. All living members of a class, when properly brought into court in an action to quiet title, are deemed (under the doctrine of virtual representation) to represent all after-born persons who would belong to that class.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

"Equitable representation" — limit to doctrine. The rule that in some instances a person may, on the principle of "equitable representation", be bound by an adjudication bearing on the title to realty, tho said person is not a party to the action in which the adjudication is had, cannot be extended to include persons who are in being and subject to being brought under the jurisdiction of the court, and who are entitled to notice and hearing as to the matter in question.

IX PARTIES CONCLUDED—concluded

Skelton v Cross, 222-262; 268 NW 499; 109 ALR 129

Unborn contingent remaindermen. The contingent interest in land of the unborn children of a life tenant, arising out of the terms of a testamentary devise, is not cut off by a decree in an action to quiet title by making the life tenant a party defendant as a "representative" of such unborn children; especially so when said life tenant assumes a hostile attitude toward said unborn children.

Mennig v Graves, 211-758; 234 NW 189

Inheritance taker as "representative" of contingent remainderman. A decree setting aside the probate of a will and cancelling said will (the action being instituted in good faith and so tried by all parties thereto) is, on the principle or doctrine of representation, conclusive on remote, contingent remaindermen, even tho they are not parties to the action or are not served with notice of the action, when those persons are legally before the court who would take the first estate of inheritance under the will; especially is this true when parties of the same class to which the omitted parties belong are also legally before the court.

Harris v Randolph, 213-772; 236 NW 51

Decree for attorney fees in divorce—nonadjudication as to attorney. A decree in divorce proceedings awarding plaintiff (in addition to a divorce) a specified sum as attorney fees is not an adjudication as to the amount owing by plaintiff to her attorney for services rendered in the action,—the attorney, of course, not being a party to the action.

Duke v Park, 220-889; 262 NW 799

Maddy v Park, 220-899; 262 NW 796

Jones v Park, 220-894; 262 NW 797

Attempt by party to intervene—effect. A judgment quieting title in plaintiff on the ground that the defendant had fraudulently obtained the possession of a deed by plaintiff to defendant and had recorded the same, is not an adjudication of the right of a subsequent purchaser from said defendant because said purchaser attempted to intervene in said action, the record revealing the fact that the intervention was denied on grounds not going to the merits of said purchaser's rights.

Tutt v Smith, 201-107; 204 NW 294; 48 ALR 394

Quieting title—relief—decree beyond issues. In a quiet title action by grantee against grantor's heir and successor in interest, a decreed based on a deed containing a declaration of purpose (educational and religious use), goes beyond the issues when it finds the grantee to be the "sole and absolute owner, in fee simple", the effect being to adjudicate the rights of persons, not before the court, who may have trust interests under the terms in the deed.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

X ASSIGNMENT

Double liability assessments—judgment non-assignable. An assessment against a holder of corporate bank stock in an insolvent bank, ordered by the court under the so-called "double liability" statute (§9251, C., '31), even tho said assessment is in the form of a judgment, is nonassignable by the receiver, even under an authorizing order of court, and if formally assigned, is nonenforceable by the assignee, said attempted assignment being for a purpose other than the payment of creditors.

Roe v King, 217-213; 251 NW 81

XI COMPETENT EVIDENCE AS BASIS

Evidence supporting verdict—judgment finality. Where competent evidence exists to support the verdict, the judgment is final.

State v De Kraai, 224-464; 276 NW 11

Allowance of claim in probate—calculating administrator's assets—conclusiveness. Altho based upon calculations, the finding of a probate court in a claim allowance hearing, based upon evidence that an administrator has or should have sufficient funds to pay a claim, is an adjudication conclusive against attack that the calculations were wrong.

In re Davie, 224-1177; 278 NW 616

Court findings in law action—conclusive on appeal. Findings of trial court in a law action, when supported by the evidence, are conclusive on appeal.

Younkin v Rubio Bank, 226-843; 284 NW 151

XII FOREIGN JUDGMENTS

Discussion. See 5 ILB 230—Foreign equitable decree; 22 ILR 461—Full faith and credit

Divorce—void decree—collateral attack. A decree of divorce, wheresoever rendered, is always open to collateral attack by proof that the court was without jurisdiction to render it.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Divorce—"full faith and credit"—comity. The "full faith and credit" clause of the federal constitution does not compel the courts of this state to recognize as valid a default decree of divorce against a defendant domiciled in this state, rendered in a foreign state in appropriate proceedings in rem; but such a decree, when valid on its face, will, as a matter of reciprocal comity between the states, be recognized as valid in this state, in the absence of allegation and proof of fraud in obtaining it.

Miller v Miller, 200-1193; 206 NW 262

Custody of child—foreign decree—res judicata. A foreign decree of divorce fixing the custody of a child is not res judicata of the rights of a third party in this state to such custody. In any event, such third party may show that, by statute in such foreign state, the custodial decree is not conclusive and unalterable; or he may rest on the presumption that the foreign statute is the same as in this state, relative to such decree's being non res judicata as to subsequent changed conditions.

Barnett v Blakley, 202-1; 209 NW 412

Foreign divorce—when not recognized. A foreign decree of divorce will not be recognized in this state when it is made to appear that the defendant (1) was at all times domiciled in this state, the matrimonial domicile, (2) was never subject to the jurisdiction of such foreign court, and (3) had never consented to, or justified by misconduct, the acquisition by plaintiff of a domicile in such foreign country. Especially is this true when there is no showing that the plaintiff ever acquired a domicile in such foreign country.

Bonner v Reandrew, 203-1355; 214 NW 536

Foreign court refusing to enforce judgment. The full faith and credit clause requires the courts of one state to give to the judgment of a court of another the same effect that is accorded such judgment in the latter state, but, where an Iowa judgment has been adjudicated to be valid in Iowa, an Indiana court should have enforced such judgment, and where it refuses to do so there is no authority to support the proposition that an Iowa court must then follow the example of the Indiana court and also refuse to enforce such judgment in Iowa.

Martin Bros. v Fritz, 228- ; 292 NW 143

Foreign judgment—full faith and credit clause. An unmodified judgment in personam in a court of competent jurisdiction of a foreign state which is then the matrimonial domicile of both husband and wife, for the maintenance of the wife, payable in monthly installments, is entitled to the full faith and credit clause of the federal constitution as to all matured installments, even tho, subsequent to the entry of such judgment, the judgment defendant departs from the matrimonial domicile and obtains in this state a naked decree of divorce on service by publication.

Bennett v Tomlinson, 206-1075; 221 NW 837

Fraudulent decree—new trial. An unappealed decree of a court of competent jurisdiction of a sister state, granting separate maintenance to a wife on the ground of desertion, and dismissing the husband's cross-petition for divorce on the same ground, constitutes a final adjudication that the husband was not entitled to a divorce on any ground (the laws of the two states being the same), and is binding on the courts of this state, and a decree of divorce subsequently obtained in this state by the husband on service by publication and on the ground of desertion, and without revealing the foreign decree, will be deemed fraudulent and will be set aside on timely petition by the wife and a new trial granted on her prayer.

Bowen v Bowen, 219-550; 258 NW 882

Foreign judicial records—improper certification first raised on appeal. Admission of improperly certified judicial records of Texas and Michigan bearing on issue of defendant's sanity in trial of default action to annul marriage is not ground for reversal of court's action in refusing to set aside the default annulment when lower court was not given opportunity to pass upon the competency of the records. The rule is that a party is not to be surprised on appeal by new objections and issues, nor as to defects within his power to remedy had he been advised in the proper time and manner.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 636

Nonright to relitigate issue. A defendant who, when sued in a foreign state, litigates the issue that he was immune from the service of process in said state because he was then temporarily and involuntarily therein as a military officer of the federal government and on land owned and used exclusively by said government for military purposes, and who fails to appeal from a ruling denying his claimed immunity, may not relitigate said issue when sued in this state on the foreign judgment.

Northwest. Cas. Co. v Conaway, 210-126; 230 NW 548; 68 ALR 1465

Merger of note in foreclosure decree. The fact that a promissory note sued on has been merged in a foreclosure decree in a foreign state on good personal service, must be specifically pleaded.

Pfeffer v Corey, 211-203; 233 NW 126

Foreclosure—land situated wholly in foreign state. A mortgage on land situated wholly within a foreign state may not be foreclosed in this state, tho the mortgagee may maintain, in this state, an action at law on the note so secured.

Beach v Youngblood, 215-979; 247 NW 545

Matters inhering in judgment. A defendant sued in this state on a nonfraudulent judgment rendered in a foreign state, on the assumption of a mortgage on land, may not counterclaim for damages based on the plea that said assumption was fraudulently imposed upon him.

Perry Fry v Gould, 214-983; 241 NW 666

Insurance—actions on policies—submission to foreign courts—insufficient showing. An Iowa accident insurance association which has not been licensed to transact its business in a foreign state (in which it has neither office, agent, nor property), and whose certificates of insurance are strictly Iowa contracts, cannot be deemed to have subjected itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of such foreign state (1) because a very large number of its certificate holders reside in said foreign state, or (2) because said association, from time to time and by mail from its Iowa office, requests a physician in said foreign state to there examine claimants and to report as to accidental injuries received by claimants,—it appearing that said physician was under no contract obligation to comply with said requests and to make such examinations tho he had done so for several years and had received a stated fee for each separate examination.

Held, the foreign court, in an action on a certificate, acquired no jurisdiction under process served on said physician.

Saunders v Iowa Assn., 222-969; 270 NW 407

11569 Pleading in abatement and bar.

Necessity for plea. There can be no abatement or stay of an action until another action has been determined, when there is no pleading requesting such abatement or stay.

Music v DeLong, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

Delay in pleading—effect. Defendant's right to plead in abatement is wholly lost when delayed until the plaintiff might legally have brought his action.

Larsen v Ins. Co., 212-943; 237 NW 468

Modification of judgment to avoid apparent bar. A judgment which is essentially in abatement, but which on its face purports to be in bar, will be so modified on appeal as to show that it is in abatement.

Platner v Hughes, 200-1363; 206 NW 268; 43 ALR 1141

Other action pending. A motion or proceeding for the abatement of an action of forcible entry and detainer, because an equitable action by movant is pending in the district court for relief consequent on the alleged fraud of plaintiff in the forcible detention action, is properly overruled.

Music v DeLong, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

Remand when basis of dismissal uncertain. When the appellate court is quite uncertain whether the trial court dismissed the cause on the erroneous basis of matter in bar or on the basis of insufficiency of evidence to sustain the action in any event, a remand for new trial must be entered.

Bonner v Reandrew, 203-1355; 214 NW 536

Want of demand. Replevin will not be abated for want of demand on defendants for possession prior to the institution of the action (1) when one defendant had incapacitated himself from complying with a demand, and (2) when the other defendant asserted unqualified title against the plaintiff.

Hart v Wood, 202-58; 209 NW 430

Receivership—effect. An action for specific performance is not abated by the subsequent appointment of a receiver for the defendant.

Hawkeye Ins. v Trust Co., 210-284; 227 NW 637

Nonabatement of action by receivership. The appointment of a receiver for an insolvent corporation does not abate an action by the corporation as a judgment creditor to set aside conveyances as fraudulent; and if the receiver be not substituted as plaintiff the action may be continued by the corporation in its corporate name.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 217-636; 251 NW 51

Abatement of authorized action. A court having ordered its receiver in partnership to begin action against the partners, in order to collect funds with which to pay creditors, has discretionary power, after such action has been commenced, and on a showing that the receiver has in his possession a very large amount of unliquidated partnership assets, to abate the action until such assets are liquidated.

Day v Power, 219-138; 257 NW 187

Foreign corporations—dissolution and receivership—effect. A foreign decree of dissolution of a corporation, and an order appointing a receiver to wind up its affairs, do not abate an action aided by attachment in this state, because the claim of the receiver of a foreign corporation to its property in this state will not be recognized as against the valid claims of resident attaching creditors.

Watts v Surety Co., 216-150; 248 NW 347

Foreign corporations—dissolution—effect on pending actions. A duly rendered decree of dissolution of a foreign corporation, at the instance of the state under the laws of which said corporation was organized, is, in effect, an executed sentence of death; being such, said decree ipso facto works an abatement, (1) of an unadjudicated action in rem pending in this state against said dissolved corporation, and (2) of garnishment proceeding pending in connection with said action. Under such circumstances, the garnishee may properly move for and be granted an order of discharge.

Peoria Co. v Streater Co., 221-690; 266 NW 548

11570 Special execution—pleading.

Lien—nonwaiver by taking general judgment. The plaintiff in landlord's attachment by failing to ask for a special execution for the sale of the attached property, and by taking a general judgment against the lessee, does not thereby waive his landlord's lien. On the contrary, the lien follows the general judgment upon which a special execution may issue notwithstanding the failure to pray therefor, and notwithstanding the failure of the judgment to provide therefor.

Wunder v Schram, 217-920; 251 NW 762

11571 Several judgment.

Judgment against vouchee. Judgment may be rendered not only against the defendant in an action, but against one who has been vouched into the action and who has assumed exclusive charge of the defense, and whose conduct of the defense has been such as to render him, in legal effect, a codefendant.

11572 Judgment against one of joint defendants.

Rendition of judgment against party—effect. The fact that judgment has been rendered against one of two defendants, on the pleaded cause of action, does not render said judgment-defendant a competent witness to testify, on behalf of the remaining defendant, against an administrator as to a personal transaction with the deceased, said transaction being vital to the defensive plea of said remaining defendant.

Stookesherry v Burgher, 220-916; 262NW820

Submission of separate forms. In an action against the driver and owner of a truck, held, the omission to submit separate forms of verdict for each defendant was not prejudicial error, the court having specifically and correctly instructed the jury as to separate liability of each defendant.

Carlson v Decker, 218-54; 253 NW 923

11573 What relief granted.

ANALYSIS

- I RELIEF IN GENERAL
- II CONFORMITY TO PROCESS
- III CONFORMITY TO PLEADING
- IV CONFORMITY TO PROOF

Limitations on judgments by default. See under §11587

I RELIEF IN GENERAL

Void sale—venue. A proceeding wherein relief is sought on the theory that the petitioner bought property at a void judicial sale and received nothing for his purchase price must be brought in the court and in the proceedings out of which the execution arose.

State v Beaton, 205-1139; 217 NW 255

Defective pleading. A defendant may not ignore a suit against him and allow judgment to be entered, and then have the judgment set aside for want of jurisdiction because of merely defective pleading, as distinguished from absence of pleading and prayer.

Nelson v Higgins, 206-672; 218 NW 509

Defect of parties—effect. In mandamus to obtain an order cancelling a tax sale and the certificate issued thereunder (assuming the propriety of such action) the court manifestly cannot disturb the certificate holder when he is not a party to the action.

Wren v Berry, 214-1191; 243 NW 375

Excessive decree. A motion to set aside an award as a statutory award does not empower the court to decree the legal effect and conclusiveness of the award as a common-law award.

Bureker v County, 201-251; 207 NW 115

Accounting—proper form of judgment. Where an accounting proceeding instituted by the widow of a deceased partner in order to determine her dower interest in the partnership property is tried on the mutual theory that her interest when determined should be impressed as a trust on the entire partnership property, a judgment in rem against the partnership property should be entered, and not a personal judgment against the surviving partners.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Jurisdiction—accounting—opening de novo—exceptions. In some cases of gross fraud, mistake, or disadvantage, equity will open the whole accounting de novo, but if all items are not so affected, equity may (1) allow the account to stand except to the extent invalidated by the opposing party, who has the burden to prove errors, or (2) open the account to contest as to such items as are specified to be erroneous; otherwise the accounting is conclusive.

Clark v Iowa-D. M. Bank, 223-1176; 274 NW 919

Relief notwithstanding partial failure of recovery. A subcontractor on a public improvement who, in an equitable action, establishes a contract right of recovery against the principal contractor, is entitled to judgment accordingly, notwithstanding the fact that, because of his noncompliance with the statute, he is denied recovery either against the surety for the principal contractor, or against the municipality, or against the undistributed funds in the hands of the municipality.

Zeidler Co. v Ryan, 205-37; 215 NW 801

Recovery for partial performance. Principle reaffirmed that if the failure to fully perform a contract by one party thereto is caused by the breach of that contract by the other party thereto, the nonbreaching party may recover for his partial performance at the contract rate.

Goben v Paving Co., 214-834; 239 NW 62

I RELIEF IN GENERAL—concluded

Trust property—personal liability. Individuals who voluntarily associate themselves in a business venture in the form of a trust are each personally liable for the authorized acts of their agent.

Daries v Hart, 214-1312; 243 NW 527

Right of trustee. The decree in an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside a conveyance by the bankrupt as fraudulent, should be, not that the trustee is the owner in fee of the property, but that the trustee has a superior lien on the property to the amount of the lienable claims in his hands as such trustee.

Hoskins v Johnston, 205-1333; 219 NW 541

Unallowable procedure. The probate court on entering an order, on due application, modifying a former order relative to the compensation of an executor, has no authority to recognize judicially, on its own motion, the pendency in said court of a petition to remove said executor, and peremptorily and on its own motion, to enter an order suspending or removing the executor on the basis of the testimony already received in the proceedings relative to compensation.

Gray v Mann, 208-1193; 225 NW 261

II CONFORMITY TO PROCESS

Absence of any issue. The court may not decree who is principal in a transaction and who is surety, and render a personal judgment in favor of the surety and against the principal for sums paid by the surety, when the original notice and petition are silent as to such matters, and when there is no other pleading which prays such relief.

Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

Equivocal wording of original notice. An original notice will not justify a personal judgment on default when it is so drawn that a person would naturally and ordinarily conclude that the relief demanded was simply to establish the mortgage sued on as a lien paramount to the defendant's junior lien; much less would it justify such personal judgment if intentionally drawn to mislead.

Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

Unallowable personal judgment. A personal judgment cannot legally be entered against a defaulting defendant (1) when no claim is made against him in the original notice, (2) when no cause of action is alleged against him in the petition, and (3) when the prayer of the petition simply asks that defendant's alleged lien be declared inferior to plaintiff's lien; and it is immaterial that defendant was present during the trial and to some extent participated therein, and that after the trial plaintiff, by a belated amendment, injected into the petition a prayer for personal judgment.

Manassa v Garland, 200-1129; 206 NW 33

III CONFORMITY TO PLEADING

Default—amount confined to averments of petition. When a defendant defaults, he is still protected by the law, and plaintiff's recovery must be confined and responsive to the averments in his petition.

Rayburn v Maher, 227-274; 288 NW 136

Failure to limit recovery to specifically pleaded amounts.

Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442

Albert v Maher, 215-197; 243 NW 561

Wosoba v Kenyon, 215-226; 243 NW 569

Unpleaded theory. Appellant's demand, on appeal, for judgment on an unpleaded theory will be ignored.

Forsberg v Const. Co., 218-818; 252 NW 258

Unallowable relief. The court may not decree the cancellation of an unquestioned judgment or decree a reconveyance of land when the validity of the original conveyance was not properly in issue.

Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Teachers' pension—employment prerequisite—no relief outside issues. A public-school teacher, after 30 years service and while lacking only six months more service to be entitled to a pension, cannot mandamus the school board to compel her re-employment and, such re-employment being the relief sought, a court may not go outside the pleaded issues and grant such a pension as the school board may have given.

Driver v School Dist., 224-393; 276 NW 37

Amendment after default. A personal judgment may not be validly entered on an amendment filed after default, of which amendment the defendant has no notice.

Chandler v Sinaiko, 201-791; 208 NW 323

Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

Recovery dependent on pleading. In an action on a nonnegotiable promissory note, by a transferee thereof, defendant's plea that he be given a set-off in a stated sum because of an account held by defendant against the original payee will not be construed as embracing a demand for interest on said "stated sum".

Lewis v Grain Co., 214-143; 241 NW 469

Conclusiveness of one's own plea. A plaintiff who, in an action on a promissory note, specifically pleads a definite consideration, must stand or fall thereon. Having fallen, he will not be permitted to advantage himself of a consideration possibly reflected in the record, but not embraced within his own chosen plea.

Persia Bk. v Wilson, 214-993; 243 NW 581

Multifarious theories in one count. A cause of action which is not barred until 10 years after the execution and delivery of a deed is shown by a pleading which (1) pleads a contract of purchase of land by the acre, and the deed in fulfillment thereof, (2) shows payment for the acreage represented in the deed, and (3) alleges actual material shortage in the said acreage; and this is true even tho the pleading does allege "mutual mistake" of the parties as to the acreage, and asks for the reformation of a mortgage for the purchase price.

Mahrt v Mann, 203-880; 210 NW 566

Indivisible transaction. A party who is entitled to judgment for the return of a promissory note is necessarily entitled, on proper prayer, to a judgment for the return of another note which grew out of the same transaction and was attended by the same conditions.

Breza v Loan Soc., 200-507; 205 NW 206

Issues, proof, and variance—proof justifying recovery. Under a plea of (1) conspiracy to commit a wrongful act and (2) joint participation in the wrongful act, recovery may be had on proof of the latter allegation only.

De Bruin v Studer, 206-129; 220 NW 116

Decree appropriate to facts proven. A court of equity having acquired jurisdiction of an action praying the setting aside of a conveyance because actually fraudulent, may, on proof of constructive fraud only, enter a decree appropriate to said proven facts.

McFarland v Johnston, 219-1108; 260 NW 32

Scope of relief. In equitable action where pleading "was not as clear as it might have been", yet prayed for general equitable relief, court enforced express provisions of legal contract to preserve rents and profits under the rule that where general equitable relief is prayed, any relief may be granted consistent with the pleadings and the evidence.

Wagner v Securities Co., 226-568; 284 NW 461

General equitable relief prayed. In equity action seeking the appointment of a receiver, defendant's contention, that a receiver could not be appointed because no main cause of action was stated, was without merit, since plaintiff was in fact seeking to foreclose a lien on rents and had asked for general equitable relief, the rule being that "equity does not deal in technicalities, but rather it seeks to ascertain the true intent of the pleading filed".

Wagner v Securities Co., 226-568; 284 NW 461

Duty to set aside fraud-induced deed. When a deed has been manifestly obtained by the fraud of the grantee, and without consideration, a court of equity must set it aside, on a distinct prayer for such relief, and not assume to reform it, without any prayer therefor, and decree a life interest in the defrauded grantor.

Guenther v Kurtz, 204-732; 216 NW 39

Petition—statutory requirements—prayer limits relief. Statute specifies the component parts of a petition, and the relief permitted thereunder is limited by the prayer therein.

In re Collicott, 226-106; 283 NW 869

Absence of prayer—effect. No decree of injunction should be rendered against an intervenor when plaintiff answered the petition of intervention but prayed for no relief.

Red Top v McGlashing, 204-791; 213 NW 791

Insufficient prayer. A personal judgment without a specific prayer therefor is erroneous, and a prayer for "other and further relief" is not such prayer.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Unprayed-for relief. A surviving spouse who, in a contest with an heir of the intestate, claims absolute ownership of the entire homestead, and who is decreed to own only an undivided fractional part thereof, may be decreed the right to elect to occupy the homestead for life, even tho there is no prayer for such relief.

Myrick v Bloomfield, 202-401; 210 NW 428

Relief limited by pleading. A chattel mortgagor who, in foreclosure proceedings, pleads a counterclaim against the mortgagee for conversion of one of two separate articles covered by the mortgage, with no prayer for general equitable relief, may not have like relief as to the second article, tho conversion thereof is made to appear; and especially when the mortgagor fails to prove the value of such second article.

Wetmore v Wooster, 212-1365; 237 NW 430

Judgment in equitable action. The holder of unquestioned, matured promissory notes, secured by a real estate mortgage, is entitled to judgment on the notes, on a proper prayer in an equitable proceeding, even tho the proceeding is not for the foreclosure of the mortgage.

Iowa Bank v Young, 214-1287; 244 NW 271; 84 ALR 1400

Injunction decree not justified by pleadings. When the petition asked for an injunction restraining the county treasurer from selling at tax sale, lands upon which Polk county holds tax deeds, it was error to grant an injunction restraining tax sales for special assessments regardless of who the owner of the tax deed might be, even tho other general relief was asked by the petition, the petitions of intervention, and the answer, as the court should not render a judgment which has no foundation in the pleading and is not justified by the

III CONFORMITY TO PLEADING—concluded evidence, issues, or theory upon which the case was tried.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Divorce in lieu of separate maintenance. The court has no right to decree a divorce on a cross-petition which alleges cruel and inhuman treatment but specifically prays for separate maintenance only; and this is true tho there is also a prayer for general equitable relief, it appearing that cross-petitioner's attitude on the trial was in strict accord with said prayer.

Davis v Davis, 209-1186; 229 NW 855

IV CONFORMITY TO PROOF

Common-law rule for recovery—modification. Principle reaffirmed that the common-law rule that there can be no recovery on a written contract without a showing that it has been strictly performed has been modified in this state.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

Failure to prove damages. No relief can be granted in a law action because of fraud unless there be proof of damages.

Rawleigh v Cook, 200-412; 205 NW 57

Contract price (?) or quantum meruit (?). A plaintiff who pleads that he partially performed an express contract for services, and thereupon abandoned the work because of a breach of the contract by defendant, must not be permitted to recover the contract price for the work actually performed unless he establishes his pleaded justifiable abandonment; and if he fails to establish justifiable abandonment, he may not recover on the basis of a quantum meruit which does not exceed the contract price when he neither pleads nor proves a quantum meruit.

See Goben v Pav. Co., 214-834; 239 NW 62

Conversion. Plaintiff in an action for the conversion of bonds may recover on proof of the conversion, and of the value, of the bonds. Proof that bonds found in the possession of the conversioner or of his executor are the identical bonds converted is material only in case plaintiff elects to recover the bonds in kind.

Annis v Morgan, 210-478; 231 NW 457

Fatal inadequacy of proof. The court has no legal right to enter judgment against a corporation on promissory notes purporting to be signed by the corporation by its president (1) when there is no proof as to the actual or apparent authority of the president, and (2) no evidentiary explanation as to the nature of the transaction.

Schooler v Avon Corp., 216-1419; 250 NW 629

Scope of relief. In equitable action where pleading "was not as clear as it might have been", yet prayed for general equitable relief, court enforced express provisions of legal contract to preserve rents and profits under the rule that where general equitable relief is prayed, any relief may be granted consistent with the pleadings and the evidence.

Wagner v Securities Co., 226-568; 284 NW 461

Conditional sales—unallowable foreclosure. In an action to foreclose a conditional sales contract on a specifically described article, foreclosure may not be decreed on another and different article but of the same general nature, in the absence of allegation and proof that the latter article had been mutually substituted for the former.

Des M. Music v Lindquist, 214-117; 241 NW 425

No quiet title decree on unsworn evidence—burden. In an action to quiet title against paving assessment certificate holders, an unsworn petition supported by unsworn written statements showing, as contention for invalidity of assessments, the nonconformity of plat to statutory requirements, is not the sufficient evidence as in equity will support a judgment by default and, the burden of proof thereof being on the plaintiff, the petition was properly dismissed.

Neilan v Lytle Co., 223-987; 274 NW 103

11575 Judgment on verdict.

Directed verdicts—constitutionality. Principle reaffirmed that the constitutional right of trial by jury is not infringed by the action of the court in directing a verdict for defendant whenever the evidence is such that the court would not hesitate to set aside a verdict against defendant.

Cashman v Railway, 217-469; 250 NW 111

Verdict—scope of term—fatally delayed motion. A court-directed verdict (in a jury trial) is the verdict of the jury within the meaning of the statute limiting applications for new trial to five days "after the verdict is rendered" and the court has no jurisdiction to grant an application made after said time irrespective of the time when formal judgment was entered on the verdict. (Verdict rendered in 1916; judgment entered in 1930.)

Selby v McDonald, 219-823; 259 NW 485

Duty of clerk. It is the duty of the clerk, in the absence of a court order to the contrary, to enter judgment immediately upon the return of the verdict.

Cox v Surety Co., 208-1252; 226 NW 114

Entry—validity of long delayed entry. The duty of the clerk of the district court, without any direction from the court, to enter judgment ment on the general verdict of the jury, no contrary order being made by the court, is imperative and continues without limitation as to time. So held where the judgment was entered 14 years after return of the verdict.

Selby v McDonald, 219-823; 259 NW 485

Right to formal judgment. A verdict which denies one of several plaintiffs a right of recovery necessarily arms the defendant with right to a formal judgment dismissing the petition of such unsuccessful claimant.

Eclipse Lbr. v Davis, 201-1283; 207 NW 238

Judgment against partners only—effect. A joint, personal judgment solely against the members of a partnership, on a partnership transaction, does not constitute a judgment against the partnership itself.

Bankers Trust v Knee, 222-988; 270 NW 438

Remittitur—effect on prior judgment entry. A duly entered judgment which is followed by an unexcepted order for a new trial unless a remittitur be filed, automatically becomes a judgment in the lesser amount immediately upon the due filing of the remittitur. It is not necessary to formally cancel the old judgment entry and to enter a new one for the lesser amount.

Fox v McCurnin, 210-429; 228 NW 582

Dual judgments—remittitur. When two separate judgments are entered in the same action—one on the return of the verdict, and one on the ruling for new trial—the formal remitting of the prior judgment removes all error.

Lynch v Railway, 215-1119; 245 NW 219

11576 When verdict is special.

Judgment on inconsistent findings. See under §11514, Vol I

Reversal as to one count—effect on other adjudicated counts. While a general reversal in a law action ordinarily gives the parties a retrial on all issues, yet where plaintiff is successful as to one count and defeated as to all other counts, and does not appeal, a general reversal on defendant's appeal as to the one count on which plaintiff was successful does not give plaintiff a right to a retrial of any of the counts on which he was defeated. Plaintiff's defeats stand as a final adjudication even tho the formal judgment of dismissal of plaintiff's unsuccessful counts was not entered until after the issuance of procedendo on the reversal.

11577 Principal and surety—order of liability.

I GUARANTY AND SURETYSHIP GENERALLY

Discussion. See 7 ILB 1—Notice to the guarantor

Contracts—delivery on secular day. A written guaranty executed on Sunday but delivered on a secular day under express or implied authority of the guarantor is perfectly valid.

Simmons v Simmons, 215-654; 246 NW 597

Strict construction against paid surety. A contract of suretyship will be most strongly construed against the surety who is paid a consideration for entering into the contract.

Iowa Bank v Soppe, 215-1242; 247 NW 632

Suretyship—want of consideration. A plea of want of consideration, interposed by a gratuitous surety on a promissory note may be very properly ignored in the instructions of the court when the record shows (1) that the surety signed the note without fraud imposed upon him, and (2) that there was a consideration between the principal and the payee.

Granner v Byam, 218-535; 255 NW 653

Signing guaranty in blank—effect. One who signs a guaranty in blank and entrusts it to his own agent for the purpose of filling in the amount of the guaranty, and for the purpose of making delivery, is bound by the instrument as delivered to the innocent guaratee, even tho the agent fills in a larger amount than the agent represented necessary at the time of the signing.

Simmons v Simmons, 215-654; 246 NW 597

Surety—authority of agent. A surety company will not, in an action on a bond issued in its name by its agent, be permitted to dispute the authority which it has specifically conferred on said agent in a written power of attorney filed with the clerk of the district court and relied on by said clerk in approving the bond, the obligee in the bond having no knowledge of any limitation on the authority of the agent.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

I GUARANTY AND SURETYSHIP GENERALLY—concluded

Oral guaranty by bank of payment of director's mortgage. Testimony that a bank, acting through its board of directors, orally guaranteed the payment of the personal mortgage of one of said directors, is incompetent under the statute of frauds.

Lindburg v Engster, 220-1073; 264 NW 31; 116 ALR 591

Form and sufficiency between sureties. Judgment entry as to sureties reviewed, construed, and held proper.

School Dist. v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Long-continued mutual construction. The mutual construction which parties have for years placed on a guaranty against loss on bank stock, arising from the uncollectibility of bank loans, is very, very influential with the court, especially when the definite and comprehensive terms of the guaranty support said mutual construction.

Nelson v Hamilton, 213-1231; 240 NW 738

Guaranty of described bank notes—erroneous description—effect. An officer of a bank who, on demand of the state banking department, guarantees in writing the payment of certain separately described bills receivable belonging to the bank, is not liable on a bill receivable which does not strictly correspond to that described in the guaranty. So held where the difference between the bill receivable in the bank and that described in the guaranty was (1) as to the amount, or (2) as to name of debtor, or (3) as to the aggregate amount of several bills receivable.

Andrew v Austin, 213-963; 232 NW 79

Parol as affecting writings—varying written description of notes guaranteed. In an action on a written guaranty of payment of separately and unambiguously described notes, parol evidence is inadmissible to show what notes were intended, and that they are different from those described in the guaranty.

Andrew v Austin, 213-963; 232 NW 79

Identification of instrument guaranteed. Plaintiff in an action on a guaranty of payment of a promissory note, which guaranty is separate from the note, manifestly cannot recover unless he clearly shows that the note in question is the very note that is guaranteed.

Andrew v Overbeck, 214-578; 241 NW 435

Signing—evidence. In an action on a written guaranty which plaintiff introduces in evidence, the fact that plaintiff dismisses his action, without prejudice, as to one alleged signer, does not render said dismissed defendant incompetent to testify that he never signed said guaranty.

Rawleigh Co. v Moel, 215-843; 246 NW 782

Insufficient showing—imputation of knowledge. The fact that the payee of two promissory notes signed by the same maker but by different sureties caused the maker to be consulted relative to which of the notes should be indorsed with a certain payment, and then made the indorsement in accordance with the maker's wishes, cannot have the effect of creating any agency and thereby charging said payee with knowledge of an agreement between the maker and one of the sureties for a different application of the payment.

Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

Mortgage of director—guaranty by bank. Evidence quite exhaustively reviewed and held insufficient to establish a contract of guaranty of payment by a bank of the personal mortgage of a director.

Lindburg v Engster, 220-1073; 264 NW 31; 116 ALR 591

II CREATION AND EXISTENCE OF RELATION

Creation of relation—effect. The implied promise of a principal to reimburse his surety if the surety is compelled to pay the debt, brings into existence the relation of debtor and creditor between the principal and surety immediately upon the execution of the contract of suretyship.

Leach v Bassman, 208-1374; 227 NW 339

Immateriality of receipt under issues. On the issue whether defendant had contracted to indemnify plaintiff against liability as surety on an appeal bond in a criminal case, and whether defendant had received funds from the accused with which to perform such indemnity contract, evidence is wholly inadmissible that defendant had received funds from the father or brother of the accused for a purpose wholly foreign to said indemnity contract.

State v Cordaro, 211-224; 233 NW 51

Assumption of mortgage—recovery by mortgagor—surety. As between a mortgagor and a subsequent purchaser who assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage, the purchaser becomes the primary debtor, and the prior mortgagor the secondary debtor; but in case foreclosure and sale reveal a deficiency judgment the mortgagor may not recover the amount thereof from the assuming purchaser until he, the mortgagor, has paid such deficiency.

Thomsen v Kopp, 204-1176; 216 NW 725

Writing construed as guaranty. A dealer who transfers without recourse a note and mortgage which represents the unpaid purchase price of an automobile, nevertheless becomes a guarantor of payment of said note by agreeing in writing with the transferee that if the latter is compelled to repossess the car because of default in payment of installments thereon and delivers said repossessed car to the dealer, the latter will repurchase the car and pay the balance due on said note.

Securities Corp. v Noltze, 222-678; 269 NW 866

Nature and extent of liability of surety. Where a creditor agrees with his debtor on two conditions to cancel and surrender a large amount of indebtedness, viz, (1) that the debtor pay a stated amount by a stated time, and (2) that the debtor then deliver certain notes signed by a stated surety, the creditor may, without affecting the surety, legally waive compliance with the first condition and cancel and surrender the specified indebtedness and receive legal delivery of the notes signed by the surety, the surety having full knowledge of all said facts and interposing no objection to delivery of the notes until sued.

North Side Bank v Schreiber, 219-380; 258 NW 690

When indorser primarily liable. A vendor of land who negotiates the purchase-price note received by him, and later either acquiesces in the abandonment of the contract by the purchaser or himself rescinds the contract and conveys the land to a new purchaser, thereby becomes primarily liable on the negotiated note, as between himself and a surety on said note.

First N. Bank v LeBarron, 201-853; 208 NW 364

Conditional signing—nonestoppel. A surety on a promissory note who signs and delivers the note on the condition that another named party also signs, is not bound because he makes no response to a later notification from the payee that other parties have been substituted as signers in lieu of the one named and specified by the surety.

Andrew v Hanson, 206-1258; 222 NW 10

Stockholders' assessment to replace impaired capital—jury question. Conflicting evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether an assessment on bank stockholders was for the purpose of making good the impaired capital of bank or whether it was a voluntary arrangement among the stockholders to form a pool and purchase from the bank certain assets of doubtful value and thereby to relieve, in part, the individual guarantors thereon.

Andrew v Austin, 213-963; 232 NW 79

Cross-examination—whole of writing—admissibility. A surety who denies in toto the execution, delivery, and consideration of the promissory note in question, but sees fit to cross-examine his co-defendant principal with reference to a letter written by the principal to the payee with reference to said denied matter, may not complain of the reception in evidence of said letter as a part of his own cross-examination.

Granner v Byam, 218-535; 255 NW 653

Appearance by vouchee. A vouchee who has voluntarily taken over the defense of an action may not file a special appearance to a motion for judgment against him on the judgment rendered against the defendant.

Hoskins v Hotel, 203-1152; 211 NW 423; 65 ALR 1125

Bad-faith defense by vouchee. One who is vouched by a defendant into an action, and assumes exclusive charge of the defense, and in the trial pursues a course distinctly hostile to the defendant and distinctly favorable to himself, may thereby make himself, in legal effect, a co-defendant, and be conclusively bound by the judgment against the defendant. So held where the vouchee, knowing that he was vouched into the action by the defendant on the theory that the negligence charged was primary as to the vouchee and secondary as to the defendant, actively attempted to establish that he (the vouchee) was not negligent and that the defendant was negligent.

Hoskins v Hotel, 203-1152; 211 NW 423; 65 ALR 1125

III NATURE AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY

Conditional guaranty—when absolute. A written guaranty of a loan on condition that the guarantee will renew the loan from time to time provided the borrower pays the accrued interest each six months must be construed as imposing an absolute liability on the guarantor when six months interest matures and is not paid.

In re Shangle, 222-442; 269 NW 428

Guaranty—absolute (?) or conditional (?). Guaranty of the payment of a claim construed and held conditional and not absolute.

Commercial Bank v Crissman, 214-217; 242 NW 355

Finding of fact in re suretyship. The finding of the court as to the amount of the liability of a surety on a bond, not based on a mathematical computation, but on a determination of disputed questions of fact, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Iowa Bank v Soppe, 215-1242; 247 NW 632

Surety bound by adjudication. The surety on the bond of an administrator is conclusively bound by the nonfraudulent adjudication of the amount of the administrator's liability, even tho the surety had no notice of the hearing preceding such adjudication.

In re Jackson, 217-1046; 252 NW 775; 91 ALR 937

Equitable estoppel—pleading one's own wrong. In an action on a bond given by a bank as principal and by its directors as sureties to secure a trust fund which was in the possession of the bank, the defensive plea that plaintiff was estopped from prosecuting the action by his laches in so doing, is not available to the sureties when they at all times, before the bank became insolvent, had unhampered opportunity to compel compliance with the bond, and thus protect themselves, but, on the contrary, manifestly connived at a continuous breach of the bond in order to conserve the interest of their bank.

III NATURE AND EXTENT OF LIABILITY—continued

Olin Assn. v Bank, 222-1053; 270 NW 455; 112 ALR 1205

Cross-complaint. In an action on the bonds of a public officer and his bondsmen to recover a shortage, one surety may not cross-petition against a party who he alleges wrongfully received the funds resulting in the shortage, said latter party not being a party to the bond sued on.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30 *

Indemnification of one of two sureties—effect. In an action against a public officer and his bondsmen to recover a shortage in public funds, it is quite immaterial, as far as plaintiff is concerned, that one of the sureties has received property from the public officer as partial indemnity.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Unallowable defense. It is no defense on the part of one of two sureties on the bond of a public officer that said officer, while so acting, was also acting as cashier of a bank; that, as cashier, he was short in his account with the bank; that said other surety was also surety on the private bond of the cashier; and that said other surety and said cashier conspired to use and did use the public funds with which to make good the cashier's shortage to the bank.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Liability on official bond. In an action on the bond of a school treasurer to recover a shortage in his accounts, it is no defense that the plaintiff district has a cause of action against a third party who is unlawfully in possession of the funds constituting the shortage.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Bonds—enforcement against heirs et al. The bond of a fiduciary, under the terms of which a surety purports to bind "his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives", is not revoked by the death of the surety, and binds the estate of the surety in the hands of his heirs, devisees, or personal representative.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

When enforceable against heir. A claim arising under a bond wherein the surety binds "his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives", and arising after the death of said surety and the due settlement of his estate, is enforceable:

1. Against the property received by an heir, as such, from said ancestor-surety, and

2. Against the property passing from said ancestor and owned by said heir under conveyance for which he paid nothing, and

3. Against the heir, personally, for the value of the property so received if he has consumed it. And this is true even tho, necessarily, said claim was not filed against the estate of said surety.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Nonpermissible credit. A surety is not entitled to a credit, on the penalty carried by the bond, to the extent that the contract guaranteed has been carried out. He is liable for the full delinquency which remains, not exceeding the amount of the bond.

Weitz v Guar. Co., 206-1025; 219 NW 411

Bond—statutory amount—maximum liability. The surety on the bond of a dealer in securities under the Iowa securities act (Ch 393-C1, C., '31) is not liable beyond the statutory amount of the bond—$5,000—irrespective of the number or amount of the claims sought to be enforced against it. Order impounding a bond as a trust fund for the pro rata benefit of numerous claimants affirmed.

Witter v Ins. Co., 215-1322; 247 NW 831; 89 ALR 1065

Discharge of surety—statutory bond—failure to make timely filing of claim. Under a statute making the liability of a surety on a statutory bond for the performance of a public contract dependent on the filing by the claimant of a verified statement of the goods sold within a specified time after the goods are "furnished," it is not necessarily sufficient to file such statement within the time specified by the statute after the goods are "used" by the buyer, even tho the goods were bought under a contract providing that the buyer might return such portion as he did not use.

Queal Co. v Anderson, 211-210; 229 NW 707

Discharge of surety—consideration for extension of time of payment. An express or implied agreement by the payee and principal debtor in a promissory note to the effect that the time of paying the note shall be extended for one year is supported by ample consideration, in that the payee forbears suit for one year, and in that the maker secures the benefit of the forbearance.

Eilers v Frieling, 211-841; 234 NW 275

Signature of surety obtained by fraudulent representations—nonliability. Extension of mortgage debt would be sufficient consideration to support signature of mortgagor's daughter to extension agreement if extension were granted on condition that such daughter sign, but where such signature of the daughter is obtained by fraudulent misrepresentations, it is without consideration and void as to the daughter.

Beal v Milliron, (NOR); 267 NW 83

Extension to principal available to surety—abatement of action. An order of a court of bankruptcy granting, to a maker of a negotiable promissory note, an extension of time in which to make payment, is not personal to said maker only, but inures, under USC, title 11, §204, to the benefit of another maker of said note who in fact signed said note as surety only, but without so indicating on the face of the note; and said latter maker, when sued alone by the original payee, may, for the purpose of abating the action, establish his suretyship and consequent secondary liability.

Benson v Alleman, 220-731; 263 NW 305

Cross-defendant. In mandamus action by county treasurer to obtain salary warrant where county board of supervisors answered, alleging indebtedness on part of treasurer to county for which set-off was claimed, and where county board brought treasurer's surety into the action as a cross-defendant, held, allegation in surety's answer, indicating that shortage in treasurer's office was due to the embezzlement by a third party, was not binding on board in view of its affirmative allegation that treasurer was indebted to the county.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

IV DISCHARGE

Exceeding limit on credit. A guarantor who guarantees a credit to a named amount is released from all liability if the amount of the credit is exceeded.

Dewey Works v Ryan, 206-1100; 221 NW 800

Extension of time of payment. An extension of time of payment of a promissory note will not work a release of the surety when the note contains the consent of all parties to all such extensions.

Johnson v Hollis, 205-965; 218 NW 615

Extension of time of payment. One who, in buying land, assumes a mortgage (and thereby becomes a principal debtor) and who, without the consent of the party who has become secondarily liable on the mortgage debt, assigns to the mortgagee a lease on the land, under an agreement that the mortgagee will collect the rent and apply it on the debt, does not thereby work such an extension of time of payment as will release the party secondarily liable, especially (1) when there was no consideration for such so-called extension, and (2) when there was no fixed time of extension.

Union Ins. v Mitchell, 206-45; 218 NW 40

Extension of time of payment—effect. An extension of time of payment granted to an assumptor of a note and mortgage does not release the maker of the note and mortgage, and prior assumptors, even tho the extension was granted without their knowledge or consent.

Koontz v Clark, 209-62; 227 NW 584

Royal Ins. v Wagner, 209-94; 227 NW 599

Transfer of mortgaged property—assumption by vendee of debt—extension of time—effect. The principle that the holder of an obligation releases the surety on the obligation by granting an extension of time of payment to the principal without the consent of the surety has no application to a case where the maker of a mortgage-secured promissory note sells the mortgaged property to a vendee who assumes and agrees to pay the note, and where the holder of the note subsequently grants an extension of time of payment to the assuming grantee without the consent of the original maker of the note.

Herbold v Sheley, 209-384; 224 NW 781

Extension of time of payment. The surety on a promissory note is released from all liability whenever the payee makes a binding agreement with the principal debtor, without the consent of the surety, to extend the time of payment to a certain definite time.

Eilers v Frieling, 211-841; 234 NW 275

Disaffirmance by minor of promissory note and contract—release of surety. The disaffirmance by a minor of his contract of purchase and of his negotiable promissory note given in connection therewith, before the property is delivered to him, releases the surety on the note of all liability to the payee, even tho the surety signed the note because of the known minority of the principal. In case the note has passed to a holder in due course by indorsement by the payee, the liability of the indorser becomes primary and the liability of the surety becomes secondary.

Lagerquist v Guaranty Co., 201-430; 205 NW 977; 43 ALR 585

Discharge of surety. The repeal of a statute which gives the state, when it is a depositor in a bank, a preferential right to be paid in full if the bank passes into the hands of a receiver does not constitute a release of security in such sense as to release a surety on a bond which secures said deposit.

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

When assignment constitutes payment. One who secures title to land under foreclosure of a second mortgage may not then take an assignment of the first mortgage and enforce it against the maker thereof who has become a surety thereon. Such purchase constitutes a payment of the mortgage debt as to the maker-surety.

Hult v Temple, 201-663; 208 NW 70; 46 ALR 317

IV DISCHARGE—concluded

Discharge of surety—subsequent compromise and satisfaction—effect. The surety on a bond staying the collection of judgments is wholly released by the subsequent acts of the trustee in bankruptcy for the judgment defendant and the receiver for the insolvent judgment plaintiff entering into a legally authorized compromise settlement and satisfaction of the judgment, in order to avoid threatened and doubtful litigation growing out of the execution of said stay bond, and the subsequent insolvency of all the parties thereto.

State v Cas. Co., 213-211; 238 NW 709

Release of principal, etc.—effect. The obligee in a joint appeal bond is not entitled to judgment on the bond when, pending the appeal, and without notice to or knowledge of the surety, he (1) releases some of the principals in the bond, (2) extends the time of payment of the judgment, and (3) accepts in part the obligation of a new party as part payment of the judgment.

Warman v Ranch Co., 202-198; 207 NW 532

Nonmaterial changes—effect on surety. A surety on a bond executed by a trustee and conditioned to carry out a specified trust is not discharged by changes and alterations in the trust agreement which work no legal change in the liability of the trustee or surety.

Throp v Chaloupka, 202-360; 208 NW 299

Identity of partnership and corporation. A bona fide corporation which is engaged in one business, and a bona fide partnership which is engaged in a different business may not, even in equity, be deemed identical—one and the same entity—even tho the corporate stock of the corporation is owned entirely by the partnership entity and by the individual partners, and even tho the individual partners of the partnership constitute the board of directors of the corporation. So held on the plea that a contract of the corporation worked a change in a former contract of the partnership, and thereby released the surety.

Weitz v Guar. Co., 206-1025; 219 NW 411

Failure to sue all sureties—effect. In an action by an executor against a surety on the bond of a former executor, the failure of the executor to file a claim against the estate of a co-surety does not work a discharge of the defendant surety.

In re Carpenter, 210-553; 231 NW 376

Nonpayment—failure to notify surety. A surety may not complain that he was not notified of the nonpayment of the note by the principal when the surety had expressly waived notice of nonpayment.

Davenport v Mullins, 200-836; 205 NW 499

Failure to file claim in probate. Failure of a ward to file a claim against the estate of an embezzling guardian works no release of the surety on the bond of the guardian.

Armon v Craig, 203-1338; 214 NW 556

Violation of agreement. A surety who signs a note to a bank in order to enable his principal to obtain a loan, with the specific agreement that no part of the loan will be used to pay the principal's then existing indebtedness to the bank, is (in a suit by the bank on the note) wholly released by the action of the bank in applying part of the loan contrary to the agreement.

Lindquist v Bank, 206-1131; 221 NW 845

Nonrelease by conduct of guarantee. The guarantor of the payment of the amount due on a contract of sale of land is not relieved of his contract of guaranty because the assignee-guarantee of the contract failed to control the action of the purchaser of the land in disbursing building funds, when the assignee-guarantee had no knowledge of the wrongful disbursement.

Buser v Land Co., 211-659; 234 NW 241

Forfeiture of contract—effect on surety. The surety on a promissory note given as part of the contract price of land, ceases, as a matter of law, to be liable thereon to the original payee-vendor whenever the latter legally forfeits the contract.

Smith v Tullis, 219-712; 259 NW 202

V RIGHTS AND REMEDIES

(a) IN GENERAL

Ambiguity—intent—conduct of parties as evidence. In searching for the actual intention of both parties to an ambiguous written guaranty—in other words, in searching for the proper construction to place on such contract—the court may receive evidence of the conduct of the party to whom the guaranty was given, tending to show that said party, shortly after the time the guaranty was executed, and contrary to his present attitude, was placing the same construction thereon as contended for by the guarantor.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exch., 221-1382; 263 NW 155

Permissible plea of counterclaim. In an action against the principal and surety on an attachment bond for damages consequent on the alleged wrongful issuance of the writ, the principal in said bond may plead a counterclaim which neither arises out of or is connected with the transaction on which plaintiff sues, nor in which the surety has any personal ownership (§11151, C., '35). A surety is not primarily liable on the bond and the principal who is primarily liable should be permitted to defeat recovery on the bond if he can so do.

Imes v Hamilton, 222-777; 269 NW 757

Decisions reviewable—order refusing judgment against vouchee. An order refusing a judgment against a vouchee (who was, in substance, a party) is appealable.

Hoskins v Hotel, 203-1152; 211 NW 423; 65 ALR 1125

Action—condition. A bond of indemnity to hold the obligee free of any loss which he may sustain is not broken, and no right of action accrues, until a loss has been suffered against which the covenant runs.

Duke v Tyler, 209-1345; 230 NW 319

Removal of administrator—surety as applicant. A surety on the bond of an administrator has such "interest in the estate" as empowers him to make application for the removal of the administrator, even tho such surety has taken steps to terminate his future suretyship.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

(b) GUARANTOR AND SURETY

Accommodation and interested guarantors distinguished. Principle reaffirmed that guarantors, who become such solely as an accommodation, occupy a very materially different position in the law than guarantors who become such in order to protect matters in which they have a financial interest. Stockholders, for instance, in guaranteeing payment of the debts of the corporation are not favorites of the law.

West Branch Bank v Farmers Exch., 221-1382; 268 NW 155

Application of payment prejudicial to surety. The fact that the common maker of two promissory notes signed by different sureties and payable to the same payee was aided by a loan by one of the sureties in order to enable the common maker to make up the amount of a payment to the payee, with the understanding that the total payment would be applied—indorsed—on the note on which said surety was obligated, does not estop or prevent the payee long afterwards (five years) from applying said payment (in accordance with the wishes of the common maker) on the note on which said surety was not obligated, the payee having no knowledge of said agreement. And this is true tho the common maker, and the surety on the note receiving the application, had, in the meantime, become insolvent.

Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

Notes—delivery as nonjury question. The plea of a surety (1) of want of consideration for, and (2) of improper delivery of, the notes sued on, is wholly ineffective:

1. When the surety signed and forwarded the notes for delivery on the prearranged and contracted condition that the payee would receive delivery only, on condition that he—payee—would first cancel and surrender specified indebtedness held by him against the principal maker of the notes; and

2. When the surety knew that the payee had complied with said condition and had received delivery of the notes; and

3. When the surety thereafter, until sued, interposed no objection of illegality in the notes or improper delivery thereof, but on the contrary promised to pay them and negotiated for additional time in which to pay.

North Side Bank v Schreiber, 219-380; 258 NW 690

Equitable estoppel—evidence—degree of proof required. The plea of a surety on a promissory note that he, under an arrangement with the principal maker, furnished a portion of the funds with which to make full payment of the note, but that the payee wrongfully applied said payment on another note owing by said maker, and that, therefore, said payee is estopped to maintain an action against him, must be supported by clear, convincing and satisfactory evidence that said payee had full knowledge of said arrangement before he made application of said payment.

Reason: Fundamentally, estoppel is not a favorite of the law.

Stookesberry v Burgher, 220-916; 262 NW 820

Surety as beneficiary—secret change—effect. A debtor who, pursuant to an agreement with his surety, makes the surety a beneficiary in a life policy in order to indemnify the surety against loss on the suretyship, and agrees not to change such beneficiary during the life of the suretyship, may not later secretly change such beneficiary and endow such new beneficiary with right to the proceeds of the policy, when the new beneficiary knew at all times of the suretyship and of the pledging of the policy as indemnity; and it matters not that the new beneficiary actually kept the policy alive by paying the premium.

Beed v Beed, 207-954; 222 NW 442

Pledge of collateral—consideration. The naming of a surety as beneficiary in a life insurance policy, and the pledging of the policy in order to indemnify the said surety on signing a renewal note, are supported by a sufficient consideration.

Beed v Beed, 207-954; 222 NW 442

Removal of administrator—jurisdiction. Jurisdiction to remove an administrator is furnished by an application by the surety on the bond wherein he prays for an order (1) removing the administrator or (2) requiring the filing of a report and the making of distribution, when notice of the application is duly served on all interested parties and when no part of the prayer has been withdrawn of record. The filing of a report under a mutual arrangement between the parties does not exhaust the jurisdiction of the court.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Unsigned notice to creditor to sue—effect. A written notice by a surety to a creditor re-

V RIGHTS AND REMEDIES—concluded

quiring the creditor to sue on the obligation or to permit the surety to do so in the name of the creditor is valid and effective though wholly unsigned, (1) when it is addressed to the creditor, (2) when the context thereof suggests that it is being given by the surety, and (3) when the surety personally delivers the notice to the creditor.

Cleophas v Walker, 211-122; 233 NW 257

Income tax paid by surety. A surety whose bond was held for a compromise of corporate federal income taxes holds no lien upon the corporate assets, but has merely a right to be paid from assets held by receiver before payment to other claimants, and a receiver authorized to continue a business is not personally liable to such surety for diminishment of assets during receivership, tho such assets at the time of receiver's appointment would have been sufficient to pay the surety.

Miller Co. v Silvers Co., 227-1000; 289 NW 699

Judgment against vouchee. Judgment may be rendered not only against the defendant in an action, but against one who has been vouched into the action and who has assumed exclusive charge of the defense, and whose conduct of the defense has been such as to render him, in legal effect, a co-defendant.

Hoskins v Hotel, 203-1152; 211 NW 423; 65 ALR 1125

(c) CREDITOR

Remedies of creditors—pleading—prima facie sufficiency. A prima facie cause of action against guarantors is presented by a pleading based on an instrument which purports to reveal a principal debtor and a guaranty of the promise of such debtor and an allegation that the debtor has defaulted.

Foundation Press v Bechler, 211-1217; 233 NW 666

Application of partnership assets and assets of partners. Where partnership property and the individual property of all the partners are in the hands of the partnership receiver, a creditor whose claim is against the partnership because of a partnership transaction, and also against an individual partner because the partner has individually guaranteed the claim, may have the assets so marshaled that he will share in the partnership property along with the other partnership creditors, and then resort to the individual property of the guaranteeing partner to the exclusion of partnership creditors.

Simmons v Simmons, 215-654; 246 NW 597

11578 Judgment on counterclaim—affirmative relief.

Unquestioned establishment—proper procedure. A duly pleaded counterclaim which is unquestionably established by the evidence should not be submitted to the jury, but should be summarily allowed by the court; and in a personal injury action the court should direct the jury how to proceed if plaintiff's recovery be more than the amount of the counterclaim; likewise how to proceed if plaintiff's recovery be less than the amount of the counterclaim.

Forrest v Abbott, 219-664; 259 NW 238; 38 NCCA 315

11579 Judgment by agreement.

Consent by adversely interested party. One of two adversely interested defendants may not, as a matter of law, appear in court on behalf of such other defendant. It follows that a consent decree entered on such appearance may be set aside.

Graettinger Tile v Paine, 202-804; 211 NW 366

Consent decree—insufficient showing. The mere fact that a defendant in divorce proceedings makes, during the trial, certain concessions of fact, does not render the decree a consent decree.

Radle v Radle, 204-82; 214 NW 602

Consent decree—authority of attorney. While counsel cannot exceed their authority in making contract or settlement affecting their clients' rights, an attorney having full charge of client's action for mandatory injunction is authorized to consent to decree substantially complying with supreme court order.

Vaughan v Dist. Court, (NOR); 226 NW 49

Vacation—consent decree. Equity will not set aside a consent judgment for attorney fees for both parties in divorce proceedings, against the defeated party and his land, when no fraud is shown, and when the court had personal jurisdiction over both parties to the proceeding.

Coulter v Smith, 201-984; 206 NW 827

Written stipulation for decree—effect. The signing, by a plaintiff and defendant in an action for separate maintenance, of an agreement which specifies the amount and terms of such maintenance, and provides for the entry of decree in accordance therewith, and the filing of such stipulation in the action, constitute an appearance by the defendant to said action.

Kalde v Kalde, 207-121; 222 NW 351

Stipulation—enforceability. The court will enforce a duly filed stipulation by the parties to an action of forcible entry and detainer to the effect that if defendant fails to comply with specified conditions judgment shall be entered against defendant for the possession of said premises.

Peak v Mulvaney, 215-1400; 245 NW 748

Judgment after death of defendant. Principle recognized that the court having taken a cause under advisement, and delayed decision until after the death of the defendant, may validly render judgment as of the date of the submission.

Chariton Bk. v Taylor, 213-1206; 240 NW 740

11581 Court acting as jury.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 609—Trial technique Findings of court as jury verdict. See also under §11435
Jury findings, reviewability. See under §11429 (III)
Special interrogatories. See under §11513

Findings of court. The findings of the trial court, in a law action, under waiver of a jury, and on supporting but conflicting testimony, are conclusive on the appellate court.

Frum v Kueny, 201-327; 207 NW 372 (Maturing of crops)

Crail v Jones, 206-761; 221 NW 467 (Abandonment of homestead)

First N. Bank v McCartan, 206-1036; 220 NW 364 (Accommodation note—intention)

Staton v Vernon, 209-1123; 229 NW 763; 67 ALR 1200 (Exemptions)

Eilers v Frieling, 211-841; 234 NW 275 (Release of surety on note)

Barth Co. v Kelly, 211-1154; 235 NW 471 (Quality of eggs)

Miller v Hurburgh, 212-970; 235 NW 282 (Oral contract to operate hotel)

Jefferies v Prall, 215-763; 246 NW 816 (Oral contract for commission)

Law actions tried to court—when findings final on appeal. In law actions tried without a jury, supported court findings of fact have the same force and effect as like findings by the jury, and are consequently nonreviewable on appeal.

Maddy v Park, 220-899; 262 NW 796

Duke v Park, 220-889; 262 NW 799

Jones v Park, 220-894; 262 NW 797

Younkin v Bank, 226-343; 284 NW 151

Crouse v Cadwell, 226-1083; 285 NW 623

Findings of fact by court—conclusiveness. In an action at law tried to the court without a jury, the court's decision on disputed questions of fact has the same effect as jury verdict, and findings of fact may be set aside only if there is no substantial supporting evidence. In such cases the supreme court may not determine facts but merely decide what the court was warranted in finding them to be.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Weight given to findings. The finding of the lower court is a circumstance to be considered in dealing with questions of fact.

Matalone v Bank, 226-1031; 285 NW 648

Presumption as to evidence legally inadmissible. In a trial to the court, it will be presumed that testimony which is inadmissible as a matter of law was not considered by the court, tho actually admitted in evidence.

James v School Twp., 210-1059; 229 NW 750

Review of findings. On an appeal from a judgment granted by the lower court in an action tried without a jury, the evidence will not be weighed except for the purpose of determining whether the findings of fact are supported by the record.

Crouse v Cadwell, 226-1083; 285 NW 623

Conflicting testimony—scope of review. When the trial court, acting as a jury, finds, on conflicting testimony, that the truth lies with the defendant, the court, on appeal can review no further than to determine whether the judgment of the trial court has support in such testimony.

Macksburg Bank v Lillard, 206-950; 221 NW 505

Court findings—effect on trial de novo. In an equitable proceeding where there is conflict in evidence, the supreme court must give weight to findings of trial court altho case is tried de novo.

Horn v Ins. Co., 227-1045; 290 NW 8

Appeals—weight of court's findings. In the trial of an equity case where the credibility of the witnesses is in issue, great weight will be given to the findings of the trial court.

Panama Bank v Arkfeld, 228- ; 291 NW 182

Directed verdict—motion for—effect. The overruling of defendant's motion for a directed verdict at the close of plaintiff's evidence in a cause tried solely to the court is inconsequential when the final decision of the court is correct.

Pressley v Stone, 214-449; 239 NW 567

Jury—waiver—hostile motions for verdict. Hostile motions for a directed verdict, made by plaintiff and defendant at the close of all the evidence, do not, in and of themselves, constitute a waiver of the jury; otherwise, when such motions are followed by a stipulation of record, by the parties, "that the court may render a decision of said case during term time or vacation".

Bukowski v Sec. Assn., 221-416; 265 NW 132

Misconduct of attorney—finding by trial court. A finding of fact by the trial court on a motion for new trial that alleged misconduct on the part of an attorney did not occur is conclusive on appeal.

Kessel v Hunt, 215-117; 244 NW 714

Discretion and findings of court. An order setting aside the dismissal of an action for want of prosecution will be set aside by the appellate court only on a clear showing of abuse of discretion. In fact, supported legal findings as a basis for such an order are conclusive on the appellate court.

Seiders v Adel Co., 218-612; 255 NW 656

Findings. The appellate court will not overrule a finding by the trial court that the claimant of an automobile did not know that the car was being used in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors, if there is substantial testimony in the record supporting such finding.

State v Sedan, 209-791; 229 NW 173

Finding by court. A finding by the court on conflicting and supporting testimony, in a proceeding to set aside a judgment on a bail bond, that the surety had, at his own expense, caused the principal in the bond to be delivered to the sheriff, is not reviewable on appeal.

State v Robinson, 205-1055; 218 NW 918

Finding by court. A finding by the trial court on supporting testimony in an action tried to it that a nondrawee bank was not, and that the drawee bank was, negligent in cashing a check, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Bank of Pulaski v Bank, 210-817; 232 NW 124

Conclusiveness of findings. Whether the facts and circumstances attending the receipt by a creditor from a debtor of a check for an amount less than claimed by the creditor, and the cashing of the check by the creditor, constituted an accord and satisfaction, may be a question of fact, and the findings of the court thereon in a law action tried to the court, on conflicting and supporting testimony, is necessarily conclusive on the appellate court.

Barth Co. v Kelly, 211-1154; 235 NW 471

Finding by court—conclusiveness. The finding of the court in a trial to the court on supporting evidence on the issue whether an insured died "solely through external, violent, and accidental means" or from disease, is conclusive on the appellate court. And it is immaterial that the court determines its findings by sustaining a motion to dismiss at the close of all the evidence rather than by overruling such motion and later dismissing the action on its own motion.

Cherokee v Ins. Co., 215-1000; 247 NW 495

Supported findings of fact. On the issue whether the indebtedness of a municipal corporation exceeded the constitutional limit, the supported finding of the trial court that a certain indebtedness was created prior to the indebtedness in question, or that the indebtedness in question "did not precede" said other indebtedness, is not reviewable by the appellate court.

Trepp v School Dist., 213-944; 240 NW 247

Wholly inadequate evidence. In an equitable action to enforce against an estate "double" liability on bank stock, a finding and decree (based almost exclusively on the testimony of the record owner of said stock) that the deceased had actually owned said stock for some 30 years and was such owner at the time of his death, will (notwithstanding the deference accorded to the trial court in judging of the credibility of witnesses) be annulled on appeal as without adequate support in the evidence when the actions and conduct of said record owner during substantially all of said time in asserting exclusive ownership in himself, even after the death of the deceased, is wholly at war with his present testimony that he had never owned said stock and that the deceased had always owned it.

Andrew v Bank, 220-219; 261 NW 810

Eminent domain—award—conclusiveness. An award in condemnation proceedings is conclusive on the appellate court when it has support in the evidence and does not appear to be wholly unfair and unreasonable.

Wheatley v Fairfield (town), 213-1187; 240 NW 628

Paving assessments over 25 per cent—reduction. In an appeal by a city from a ruling by the trial court that an assessment for paving was more than 25 per cent of the value of the adjoining lot and from the resulting order reducing the assessment, evidence reviewed and held that the court's finding was sustained by the weight of the evidence.

Lee v Ames, 225-1061; 283 NW 427

Electric plant earnings—fact findings in trial to court—conclusive on appeal. Where an injunction wrongfully restrained and delayed, for 11 months, construction of a municipal light plant and in an action on the injunction bonds, tried without a jury, where the trial court had evidence to determine the plant's net earnings for first year of operation and there was sufficient evidence to support his findings that earnings during 11 months lost by delay would have been substantially same, damages in that amount for such period are not too speculative, remote, and uncertain, and such findings are conclusive on appeal.

Corning v Iowa-Neb. Co., 225-1380; 282 NW 791

Finding of fact in re suretyship. The finding of the court as to the amount of the liability of a surety on a bond, not based on a mathematical computation, but on a determination of disputed questions of fact, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Iowa Bank v Soppe, 215-1242; 247 NW 632

Special proceedings—findings. A finding of fact by the court, on supporting testimony, on a motion for judgment against an officer for money in his hands, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Andresen v Andresen, 219-434; 258 NW 107

Finding equivalent to jury verdict—conclusiveness on appeal. In a law action tried to the court without a jury, its finding on the fact question as to whether a check was accepted for collection or as payment has the same effect as a verdict of the jury and cannot be disturbed on appeal if there is evidence to support it.

Hockert v Ins. Co., 224-789; 276 NW 422

Supported court findings — conclusiveness. Supported findings by the court of material facts, in a law action submitted to the court under a waiver of jury, are as conclusive as like findings by the jury. So held as to findings relative to fraud and misrepresentation in obtaining a policy of life insurance.

Bukowski v Security Assn., 221-416; 265 NW 132

Joint enterprise — accounting — oral agreement between attorney and promoter. An attorney who, in an action against a promoter for an accounting, alleges that he acted with the promoter to establish a corporation for conducting "sales contests", which corporation was later dissolved, and that the promoter alone then formed a similar second corporation from which by oral agreement the attorney was to share in the profits, properly has his petition for accounting dismissed, when he fails to establish the alleged oral agreement upon which his action was based.

Davies v Stayton, 226-79; 283 NW 436

Evidence supporting oral lease for year. In action for conversion by landlord against purchaser of tenant's buckwheat, the findings of trial court that tenant leased premises for one year rather than being a sharecropper held supported by evidence and conclusive on appeal.

Schaper v Farmers' Exch., (NOR); 239 NW 134

Divorce—appeal de novo—weight given decision of lower court. Altho a divorce action, being in equity, is triable de novo on appeal, yet the supreme court will give serious consideration to the decision of the lower court when there is a conflict in the testimony. Evidence reviewed and held to justify award of separate maintenance to the wife and to deny divorce to the husband.

Blew v Blew, 225-832; 282 NW 361

Waiver of dower interest — findings — when conclusive. A finding by the trial court on supporting testimony that a wife signed both the note and mortgage of her husband solely for the purpose of waiving her dower interest, and received no actual consideration herself, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Bates v Green, 219-136; 257 NW 198

Grounds presentable by appellee. When the lower court in an equity cause sustains plaintiff's action on one presented ground, but overrules all other presented grounds, the appellee on appeal may very properly argue the correctness of the overruled grounds.

Reason: The appellate court must affirm the decree of the lower court if it is sustainable on any ground properly presented in the lower court, irrespective of the findings of the lower court.

Wyatt v Manning, 217-929; 250 NW 141

Supported findings in probate. Supported findings of fact by the probate court have the force and effect of a verdict of a jury and will not be reviewed on appeal.

In re Fish, 220-1247; 264 NW 123

In re Fish, 220-1328; 264 NW 542

Findings of fact in probate. The findings of the probate court, on supporting testimony, as to the amount of the excess charges made by a guardian for the support and education of the ward, is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Nolan, 216-903; 249 NW 648

Court findings as jury verdict. When jury trial is waived in action to terminate guardianship, facts found by court have same binding effect as verdict of jury.

In re Hawk, 227-232; 288 NW 114

Guardian—accounting—findings by court—conclusiveness. The hearing upon the report of a guardian is in probate, and the finding of facts of a probate judge in such case have force and effect of a jury verdict, and trial court in such case may properly exercise a degree of sound discretion in regard to the nature and extent of expenditures which may be properly approved.

McBurney v McBurney, (NOR); 210 NW 568

Findings in probate. A supported finding by the probate court that an administrator had failed to exercise ordinary care to preserve the funds of the estate is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Foster, 218-1202; 256 NW 744

Findings in probate. The finding by the trial court, on supporting testimony, that a transfer of real property was made "in contemplation of death" will not be disturbed on appeal.

In re Mann, 219-597; 258 NW 904

Execution of will—findings of court. The supported findings of the court relative to the facts attending the formal execution of a will have the same force and effect as the verdict of a jury.

In re Droge, 216-331; 249 NW 209

Establishment of lost will. Proceedings to establish a lost will are within the jurisdiction of the court to act without a jury, as first the court must determine whether the proof is sufficient to establish the terms of the lost instrument and, if the court finds it to be properly proved and established, then the matter stands as do all wills when offered for probate and, if contested, may be tried to a jury.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Court findings upheld. In proceedings to establish a lost will, the loss of the will and the search for it were proved by evidence that the will could not be found altho the home of the deceased and other places where the will might have been kept were thoroughly searched. The conclusion of the trial judge on the sufficiency of such evidence will not be disturbed unless discretion is abused.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Allowance of claims — conclusiveness. The allowance of a claim by the probate court on supporting testimony is conclusive on the appellate court, even tho the supporting testimony is not wholly satisfactory to the judicial mind.

Olson v Roberts, 218-410; 255 NW 461

Findings in re homestead. On an application by an executor for an order to sell real estate to pay debts, a finding by the court that certain land was not the homestead of the deceased is conclusive on appeal (1) unless such finding is without substantial support in the evidence, or (2) unless the court erroneously applied the law to conceded facts.

In re McClain, 220-638; 262 NW 666

Findings of fact in probate. A supported finding of fact by trustees that the beneficiary of a testamentary bequest had fulfilled the conditions imposed on the payment of said bequest is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Sams, 219-374; 258 NW 682

Hearings in probate. Where the issue whether a trustee should be credited with a loss of trust funds was heard by the probate court without a jury (as a continuation of the probate proceedings out of which the trust arose), the holding of the court, granting such credit, will be sustained if the evidence pro and con would have presented a jury question had the hearing been before a jury.

In re Moylan, 219-624; 258 NW 766

11582 Judgments and orders entered.

Record entry necessary. Orders for publication of notice of hearings in probate must be entered of record.

In re Durham, 203-497; 211 NW 358

Competent evidence of judgment. As a general rule, a judgment must be entered of record in order to be of any validity, but for many purposes the court's decision is effective from the time it is actually pronounced, or when the judge writes in his calendar a statement of the decision, but there is no competent evidence of the rendition until the memorandum is entered in the court record and, after recording, the judgment may for some purposes relate back to the time when it was actually ordered.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Calendar and record book. From a statute requiring that all judgments and orders must be entered in the record book, it may be inferred that the judge's calendar is in the nature of a memorandum book ordinarily used by the judge to guide the clerk in entering judgments and orders in the record book which is their final place of repose, and that the clerk's entry in the record book is the legal evidence of a judgment or order.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Entry—surrender of notes as condition precedent. When a statute required that notes on which a judgment was based be delivered to the clerk of court before he entered the judgment on record, if a foreclosure of a trust deed given to secure notes was void for violation of the statute, it could not affect the validity of a previous court order appointing a receiver.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Form and sufficiency between sureties. Judgment entry as to sureties reviewed, construed, and held proper.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Recitals accompanying decree — effect. A recital in a so-called judgment entry in real estate mortgage foreclosure that plaintiff "shall have a lien against all property kept on said premises" and that said lien shall be superior to a named chattel mortgage, when not carried into the decree which follows the recital, is no part of the decree, and is not binding on anyone, a fortiori when such recital finds no support in the pleadings or in the stipulation filed in the case.

Van Alstine v Hartnett, 210-999; 231 NW 448

Form of decree—nonassignment of error—no consideration on appeal. Form of decree, complained of in appellant's brief, will not be considered when not assigned as error.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

Extending time to file motion—journal entry valid. A statute requiring that an application for a new trial must be made within five days after the verdict is rendered unless the court grants an extension of time, contemplates orders which are only temporary and incidental to the case, and an order extending the time for such application was effective to extend the time beyond the five-day limit, when it was entered on the judge's calendar before the five days were up, even tho not entered on the record book until seven days after judgment was rendered.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Calendar memorandum—superseded by subsequent decree. Where trial judge made calendar memorandum of findings of fact which he did not sign, and the clerk's record thereof was not signed, the signing of the recorded entry of a subsequent decree was convincing proof that the subsequent decree and not the memorandum was the final decree.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Moratorium—denial order cancels restraining order on sheriff. An order restraining the sheriff from issuing a deed, pending a hearing on a moratorium application for extension of period for redemption, is automatically dissolved when the application is denied, and a deed issued is valid when a nunc pro tunc order places the moratorium denial order on record as of a date prior to the issuance of deed.

Lincoln Bk. v Brown, 224-1256; 278 NW 294

Pleas—arbitrary right to withdraw. An accused under an indictment has an arbitrary right to withdraw a plea of guilty at any time before the oral sentence passed upon him has taken the form of a final judgment by entry in the record book of the court. This is true, irrespective of any other entries in the court records.

State v Wieland, 217-887; 251 NW 757

11582.1 Surrender of written obligations.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op July 17, '39

Entry—surrender of note as condition precedent. The statutory direction to the clerk of the district court not to enter judgment on a promissory note, unless said note is first surrendered to him, will be presumed to have been complied with when the record shows the introduction of said note as an exhibit and that a transcript of the evidence was filed with said clerk.

Selby v McDonald, 219-823; 259 NW 485

Condition precedent to judgment entry. Evidence held to establish a surrender of notes to the clerk of the district court under the provisions of this section prior to the entry of judgment.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

Entry—surrender of notes as condition precedent. When a statute required that notes on which a judgment was based be delivered to the clerk of court before he entered the judgment on record, if a foreclosure of a trust deed given to secure notes was void for violation of the statute, it could not affect the validity of a previous court order appointing a receiver.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Judgment on note—entry before surrender of note. The purpose of a statute providing that the clerk shall not enter upon the records any judgment based on a note unless the note is first delivered to the clerk, being to retire the instrument from circulation so that the maker and others will not be subjected to other suits, was accomplished altho a judgment was entered eight days before the note was surrendered. When two years elapsed before an action was brought to set aside the judgment because of noncompliance with the statute, and no defense to the note was shown, the action should be dismissed.

Jensen v Martinsen, 228- ; 291 NW 422

11583 Satisfaction of judgment.

Damages for failure to satisfy. Damages for failure to enter a record satisfaction of a paid judgment are properly denied when there is no evidence of such damages.

Taylor v Heiny, 210-1320; 232 NW 695

Irretrievable nullification of lien. The filing by an insolvent judgment defendant of his petition in bankruptcy, within four months following the entry of judgment, discharges the judgment (it not being based on fraud or willful injuries) and irretrievably nullifies an execution levy on property, whether the property be exempt or nonexempt. In other words, the judgment plaintiff may not thereafter proceed in equity in the state court and have his discharged judgment enforced against property set aside to the judgment defendant as exempt, even tho, were it not for the bankruptcy proceedings, plaintiff would be able to show that said property was not exempt from levy under plaintiff's particular judgment.

McMains v Cunningham, 214-300; 233 NW 129; 242 NW 106

11585 Discharge on motion.

Ruling on motion to set aside default. Where court entered default judgment on November 15, 1937, and overruled a motion to set aside the default on February 24, 1938, an appeal taken June 20, 1938, from the order overruling the motion was timely, since the appeal was not taken on the default judgment, but on the ruling on the motion, which was appealable.

Rayburn v Maher, 227-274; 288 NW 136

Motion to set aside default—errors in proving damages. Where appeal is taken from an order overruling a motion to set aside a default judgment, errors in the trial in determining damages are reviewable even tho no appeal is taken on the judgment itself, the situation being directly analogous to an appeal from an order overruling a motion for a new trial based upon errors in the trial.

ANALYSIS

- I DEFAULTS IN GENERAL
- II DEFAULT IN PLEADING
- III RELIEF AWARDED ON JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT

I DEFAULTS IN GENERAL

Default—definition. “Default” is a term signifying failure to appear for trial, as well as failure to answer.

Vaux v Hensal, 224-1055; 277 NW 718

Default as jury waiver. Failure to appear for trial is a waiver of the right to trial by jury and a consent to trial by the court.

Vaux v Hensal, 224-1055; 277 NW 718

Default no admission of cause of action. Principle reaffirmed that a default is not an admission of a valid cause of action where none is pleaded.

Neilan v Lytle Co., 223-987; 274 NW 103

Quiet title—equity—proof. Being in equity, a default judgment in a quiet title action must by statute be based upon both pleadings and testimony (§11592, C., '35).

Neilan v Lytle Co., 223-987; 274 NW 103

Setting aside default judgment—effect—failure to secure stay order. Fact that proceedings in district court could have been stayed pending appeal will not, on the ground that misfortune was avoidable, preclude setting aside a default judgment rendered pending appeal without customary notice between counsel.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

Notice of taking default—attorneys' custom. Defendants may have a default judgment set aside, where two reputable attorneys, one of which resided in the county where the action was brought, were employed, and where such attorneys rely on a practice among the attorneys in that county to inform opposing counsel of intention to take default, and where a default without notice pending appeal would not have been anticipated.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

Setting aside default—“practice of court” includes practices of attorneys. Expression “practice of this court” fairly includes more than acts of presiding judge and means practices characteristic of the proceedings when attorneys appear for litigants therein, including practice of attorneys of informing opposing counsel of intention to take default, and evidence of such practice of attorneys was admissible under a petition to set aside a default judgment, altho petition alleged practice of this court.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

Default judgment—custom of giving notice—setting aside for failure. Practice of attorneys of informing opposing counsel of intention to take default is not repugnant nor void under this section, providing for default judgment upon failure to file or amend pleadings within required time, and such practice may be considered under petition to set aside default judgment rendered without such notice.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

II DEFAULT IN PLEADING

Amendment after default. A personal judgment may not be validly entered on an amendment filed after default, and of which amendment the defendant has no notice.

Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

Judgment by default—improper entry when cause at issue. When an unquestioned answer is on file, self-evidently no default can be properly entered for want of a plea, and no default can thereafter be properly entered for want of appearance until the case is regularly assigned for trial or comes on for hearing in accordance with the rules of the court.

La Forge v Cooter, 220-1258; 264 NW 268

III RELIEF AWARDED ON JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT

When fraud no defense. When fraud in obtaining a judgment is not available to have the judgment set aside (because of the lapse of time), such fraud necessarily ceases to be a defense to an auxiliary proceeding to enforce the judgment.

Wade v Swartzendruber, 206-637; 220 NW 67

Setting aside judgment—discretion of court. Refusals to set aside defaults will not be interfered with on appeal in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion on the part of the court. So held where the entry of default, in an action for partition, and the refusal to set the default aside, appear to have been harmless to defendant.

Bleakley v Long, 222-76; 268 NW 152

Quieting title—no decree on unsworn evidence—burden. In an action to quiet title against paving assessment certificate holders, an unsworn petition supported by unsworn written statements showing, as contention for invalidity of assessments, the nonconformity of plat to statutory requirements, is not the sufficient evidence as in equity will support a judgment by default and, the burden of proof thereof being on the plaintiff, the petition was properly dismissed.

11588 Failure to appear.

Equivocal wording of original notice. An original notice will not justify a personal judgment on default when it is so drawn that a person would naturally and ordinarily conclude that the relief demanded was simply to establish the mortgage sued on as a lien paramount to the defendant's junior lien; much less would it justify such personal judgment if intentionally drawn to mislead.

Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

Partition—adopting pleading stating valid defense—default set aside. A default order unaccompanied by any judgment may be validly set aside at a subsequent term. So held in a partition suit where defendant, an 84-year-old mother holding a life estate, after defaulting, adopted the answer and cross-petition of the defendant children, which pleadings, if true, would effectually prevent partition—a sound reason for setting aside the default.

- III TIMELY APPLICATION
- IV EXCUSE FOR DEFAULT
- V MERITORIOUS CAUSE OF ACTION OR DEFENSE
- VI PLEADING ISSUABLY AND FORTHWITH

- VIII REVIEW ON APPEAL

I NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY

Inherent power of court. The district court has inherent power to set aside a judgment during the term at which it was rendered on proof that the judgment was obtained by fraud, extrinsic and collateral to the judgment, even tho there was no default.

Cedar Rapids Co. v Bowen, 211-1207; 233 NW 495

Setting aside by court sua sponte. A judge of the municipal court has no jurisdiction to set aside, on his own motion, a duly rendered and journalized order of another judge of the same court sustaining a motion to set aside a default; and equally without jurisdiction, thereupon, to overrule said motion.

Denman v Sawyer, 211-56; 232 NW 819

Errors in proving damages—reviewability. Where appeal is taken from an order overruling a motion to set aside a default judgment, errors in the trial in determining damages are reviewable even tho no appeal is taken on the judgment itself, the situation being directly analogous to an appeal from an order overruling a motion for a new trial based upon errors in the trial.

Rayburn v Maher, 227-274; 288 NW 136

Collateral attack—irregular petition for appointment of guardian. Irregularities in the form of a petition for the appointment of a guardian, while perhaps subject to direct attack, were not sufficient to justify a collateral attack in an action to set aside a default judgment obtained by the guardian.

Jensen v Martinsen, 228- ; 291 NW 422

Peremptory cancellation of judgment. Principle reaffirmed that a default judgment against a party over whom the court has no jurisdiction may be peremptorily set aside.

Dewell v Suddick, 211-1352; 232 NW 118

Personal jurisdiction assumed when unchallenged. Where the jurisdiction of the person is not challenged in an action to set aside a default judgment, it must be assumed that the court had such jurisdiction and, if it also had jurisdiction of the subject matter, it was warranted in entering judgment.

Jensen v Martinsen, 228- ; 291 NW 422

Nonjurisdiction over surety. The court acquires no jurisdiction of a surety on a bond to discharge an attachment when the bond is executed after the sheriff has levied the writ and made return thereon to the clerk, and the bond is not approved by said clerk, as required by statute. It follows that a default judgment against the surety, under such circumstances, is properly set aside, on timely motion.

Brenton v Lewiston, 204-892; 216 NW 6

Default against county treasurer. A default judgment entered against a county treasurer who had been substituted as defendant in lieu of a former treasurer, in an action to enjoin the sale of land for taxes, must be set aside when the substitution is made without the service of original notice upon him, and without knowledge on his part, even tho the former treasurer had been negligent in not entering an appearance; and especially is this true when the application to set aside is timely, and accompanied by an affidavit of merit and an apparently good answer.

Dewell v Suddick, 211-1352; 232 NW 118

II DISCRETION OF COURT

Trial on merits preferred. The law favors trial on merits, and the trial court exercises considerable discretion in setting aside default judgments so as to give preference to trial of causes on merits.

Lemley v Hopson, (NOR); 232 NW 811

Discretion of court. Ordinarily the appellate court will not interfere with the action of the trial court in refusing to set aside a default.

Standard v Marvill, 201-614; 206 NW 37

Discretion of court. The action of the municipal court, on timely motion, in vacating a judgment for irregularity in obtaining the

II DISCRETION OF COURT—concluded judgment will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a clear showing of abuse on the part of the court.

Mitchell v Brennan, 213-1375; 241 NW 408

Bank receivership classification. The court in bank receivership proceedings has discretionary power to set aside an order relative to the classification of claims as general or preferential.

Leach v Bank, 207-1254; 219 NW 496; 224 NW 583

Local customs and practices. In passing upon a motion to set aside a default judgment, the court may give due consideration to the customs and practices of the local bar relative to pending actions.

Chandler Co. v Sinaiko, 201-791; 208 NW 323

Discretion of court. The action of the trial court in setting aside a default judgment and granting a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal when, on the record, the trial court could find that defendant apparently had a good defense, honestly intended to present such defense, and justifiably supposed he had arranged for such presentation.

Tate v Delli, 222-635; 269 NW 871

Setting aside default. Refusals to set aside defaults will not be interfered with on appeal in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion on the part of the court. So held where the entry of default, in an action for partition, and the refusal to set the default aside, appear to have been harmless to defendant.

Bleakley v Long, 222-76; 268 NW 152

Nonservice of notice—disregarding bailiff's return of service—receivability. Where the defendant and his witnesses testify that he was out of the state on the day of purported service of original notice, the discretion of the trial court in setting aside a default will not be reviewed without a showing of abuse, even tho a court bailiff testified that he obtained personal service on that day.

Brunswick Co. v Dillon, 226-244; 283 NW 872

Affirmative abuse of discretion. The court abuses its discretion in refusing to set aside a calendar entry ordering judgment for plaintiff because (owing to a misunderstanding between counsel) defendant did not, after the issues were all made up, appear on the day set for trial.

Rounds v Butler, 208-1391; 227 NW 417

III TIMELY APPLICATION

Setting aside default judgment—time limit five days. A motion to set aside a default judgment in the district court must be made within five days after rendition of the judgment, unless the time is extended by the court.

Vaux v Hensal, 224-1055; 277 NW 718

Ruling on motion—timeliness of appeal. Where court entered default judgment on November 15, 1937, and overruled a motion to set aside the default on February 24, 1938, an appeal taken June 20, 1938, from the order overruling the motion was timely, since the appeal was not taken on the default judgment, but on the ruling on the motion, which was appealable.

Rayburn v Maher, 227-274; 288 NW 136

Fatal delay. A defendant is very properly denied a new trial when she had knowledge of the entry of the default judgment almost simultaneously with its entry, and negligently delayed filing her petition for a new trial until after the lapse of nine months and the passing of three terms of court, and especially when her petition presents no fact coming to her knowledge since the entry of the judgment complained of.

Anderson v Anderson, 209-1143; 229 NW 694

Right to set aside after term. An order declaring that defendant is in default for want of appearance—in other words, a “simple” or “naked” default unaccompanied by any judgment on the claim sued on—may be validly set aside at a subsequent term on proper showing.

Weinhart v Meyer, 215-1317; 247 NW 811

Adopting pleading stating valid defense—default against aged defendant. A default order unaccompanied by any judgment may be validly set aside at a subsequent term. So held in a partition suit where defendant, an 84-year-old mother holding a life estate, after defaulting, adopted the answer and cross-petition of the defendant children, which pleadings, if true, would effectually prevent partition—a sound reason for setting aside the default.

Redding v Redding, 226-327; 284 NW 167

Fatal delay. A delay of over five months in instituting proceedings to set aside a default judgment in municipal court bars relief.

Harding v Quinlan, 209-1190; 229 NW 672

Municipal courts—defaults—nonapplicable statutes. The statute requiring applications to set aside defaults in the district court, to be made “at the term” in which default is entered, is not applicable to defaults in municipal courts because said latter courts have no terms.

La Forge v Cooter, 220-1258; 264 NW 268

IV EXCUSE FOR DEFAULT

Inexcusable default. A party to a divorce proceeding who knows that an attorney consulted by him will not appear unless paid a retainer fee, and who makes no such payment, will not be heard to assert that the resulting default worked a fraud upon him.

McNary v McNary, 206-942; 221 NW 580

Effect of neglect. In the absence of culpable neglect, a party is entitled to set aside a default on "a prima facie showing".

Hatt v McCurdy, 223-974; 274 NW 72

Unexpected withdrawal of appearance. The sudden and unexpected withdrawal by an attorney of his appearance in a case, attended by no fault or negligence on the part of the client, necessitates a setting aside, on proper showing, of the resulting default.

Ferris v Wulf, 216-289; 249 NW 156

Sickness of counsel. Default judgment in mortgage foreclosure may be set aside on a showing that it was entered without fault on the part of defendant but solely because of the sickness of his attorney.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

Showing—day in court. Where a case is set for trial and counsel tho notified by letter is out of the state when the case is called for trial and a default is entered, the court erred in refusing to set aside the default since reputable counsel were employed, the parties themselves were not negligent, and they should "have had their day in court".

Hatt v McCurdy, 223-974; 274 NW 72

Setting aside default—no rule obtainable. In setting aside a default judgment, each case must rest upon its own facts.

Hatt v McCurdy, 223-974; 274 NW 72

Oral agreements. Oral agreements between litigants or their attorneys when not brought to the attention of the court are entitled to little favor on hearings to set aside default judgments.

Standard Oil v Marvill, 201-614; 206 NW 87

Notice of taking default—attorneys' custom. Defendants may have a default judgment set aside where two reputable attorneys, one of which resided in the county where the action was brought, were employed, and where such attorneys rely on a practice among the attorneys in that county to inform opposing counsel of intention to take default, and where a default without notice pending appeal would not have been anticipated.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

"Practice of court" includes practices of attorneys. Expression "practice of this court" fairly includes more than acts of presiding judge and means practices characteristic of the proceedings when attorneys appear for litigants therein, including practice of attorneys of informing opposing counsel of intention to take default, and evidence of such practice of attorneys was admissible under a petition to set aside a default judgment, altho petition alleged practice of this court.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

Inexcusable negligence. The refusal of the trial court, in divorce proceedings, to set aside a default decree, resulting from the inexcusable negligence of the applicant, will not be interfered with.

Bossenberger v Bossenberger, 210-825; 229 NW 833

Double recovery on one claim. Even where defendant failed to plead after being thrice ordered to do so after his special appearance was overruled, and tho he had not excused his default or stayed the proceedings, defendant seeking to set aside the default was entitled to relief when the record showed that plaintiff was allowed to recover two commissions on the same 2,000 cases of 7up under duplicate averments in his petition.

Rayburn v Maher, 227-274; 288 NW 136

V MERITORIOUS CAUSE OF ACTION OR DEFENSE

Affidavit of merit necessary. Defaults will not be set aside in the absence of an affidavit of merit.

Bates v Ely Bank, 219-1356; 261 NW 614

Affidavit of merit. Defaults in municipal courts may not be set aside in the absence of an affidavit which specifically sets forth the facts relied on as a defense to the action sued on.

Boody v Sawyer, 201-496; 207 NW 589

Belated motion—absence of affidavit of merit. Judgments by default in municipal courts, after proper service, may not be set aside in the absence of an affidavit of merit, nor may such judgments be set aside on a motion filed more than ten days after the default is entered, nor are such defects remedied by renewing the motion, after the ruling of the court, with an affidavit of merit.

Borden v Voegtlin, 215-882; 245 NW 331

When affidavit of merit unnecessary. A default may be legally set aside tho the mover therefor files no affidavit of merit, when the court, in entering the default, stated that he would set aside the default if a motion so asking be filed, and when the applicant for the default then affirmatively acquiesced in such purpose of the court.

Wagoner v Ring, 213-1123; 240 NW 634

Insufficient showing. A default judgment will not be set aside on a motion and affidavit of merit which assert that the applicant will plead a specified defense when certain matters

V MERITORIOUS CAUSE OF ACTION OR DEFENSE—concluded

then pending on appeal in the supreme court have been finally determined.

Wade v Swartzendruber, 206-637; 220 NW 67

Falsity of testimony. Motion to vacate a judgment on the ground that the testimony on which the judgment was rendered was false is properly overruled.

Genco v Mfg. Co., 203-1390; 214 NW 545

Setting aside because of unauthorized amendment. A default judgment is very properly set aside on the ground that plaintiff, after the entry of default, amended his pleadings by increasing the amount of his claim, and took judgment on such amended pleadings.

VII TERMS

Nonappearance—trial to court. Where an action on a promissory note had been assigned for trial, continued to the next day because of defendant's nonappearance for trial, and at such time called for trial a second time with defendant still not appearing until after the jury panel had been dismissed, a default having been entered, and plaintiff being allowed to prove up his case to the court, held on defendant's belated appearance and demand for jury trial, an offer by the court to require plaintiff to reintroduce his evidence but requiring a trial to the court without a jury, otherwise, permitting default and judgment thereon to stand, was not error.

Vaux v Hensal, 224-1055; 277 NW 718

VIII REVIEW ON APPEAL

Annulment of marriage—insanity. Evidence reviewed and held sufficient to authorize default decree annulling marriage on ground of insanity at time of marriage.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

Order setting aside unappealable. An order setting aside a default judgment is inherently unappealable.

Barber v Shattuck, 207-842; 223 NW 864
Baker v Ry. Exp., 207-1350; 224 NW 513
Welty v Ins. Assn., 211-1135; 235 NW 80
Wagoner v Ring, 213-1123; 240 NW 634

Double recovery on one claim. Even where defendant failed to plead after being thrice ordered to do so after his special appearance was overruled, and tho he had not excused his default or stayed the proceedings, defendant seeking to set aside the default was entitled to relief when the record showed that plaintiff was allowed to recover two commissions on the same 2,000 cases of 7up under duplicate averments in his petition.

Rayburn v Maher, 227-274; 288 NW 136

Foreign judicial records—improper certification first raised on appeal. Admission of improperly certified judicial records of Texas and Michigan bearing on issue of defendant's sanity in trial of default action to annul marriage is not ground for reversal of court's action in refusing to set aside the default annulment when lower court was not given opportunity to pass upon the competency of the records. The rule is, that a party is not to be surprised on appeal by new objections and issues, nor as to defects within his power to remedy had he been advised in the proper time and manner.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

11590 Amount of judgment—how determined.

Amount confined to averments of petition. When a defendant defaults, he is still protected by the law, and plaintiff's recovery must be confined and responsive to the averments in his petition.

Rayburn v Maher, 227-274; 288 NW 136

Errors in proving damages—reviewability. Where appeal is taken from an order overruling a motion to set aside a default judgment, errors in the trial in determining damages are reviewable even tho no appeal is taken on the judgment itself, the situation being directly analogous to an appeal from an order overruling a motion for a new trial based upon errors in the trial.

Rayburn v Maher, 227-274; 288 NW 136

11592 Default in equitable proceeding.

Relief in default cases. See under §11587

Equivocal wording of original notice. An original notice will not justify a personal judgment on default when it is so drawn that a person would naturally and ordinarily conclude that the relief demanded was simply to establish the mortgage sued on as a lien paramount to the defendant's junior lien; much less would it justify such personal judgment if intentionally drawn to mislead.

Sutton v Rhodes, 205-227; 217 NW 626

Quieting title—proof. Being in equity, a default judgment in a quiet title action must by statute be based upon both pleadings and testimony.

Neilan v Lytle Co., 223-987; 274 NW 103

Quieting title—insufficiency of evidence—burden. In an action to quiet title against paving assessment certificate holders, an unsworn petition supported by unsworn written statements showing, as contention for invalidity of assessments, the nonconformity of plat to statutory requirements, is not the sufficient evidence as in equity will support a judgment by default and, the burden of proof thereof being on the plaintiff, the petition was properly dismissed.

11593 Setting aside, if on notice by publication.

Estoppel to question submission of issue. A claimant in probate who advantages himself of the very liberal rules of pleading recognized in the probate court, and who files a claim which, if established, will justify a recovery on the basis of either an express contract or implied contract, may not complain that the court submitted to the jury the issue of express contract, especially when the verdict was in his favor.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

Non-service of notice—disregarding bailiff's return of service—receivability. Where the defendant and his witnesses testify that he was out of the state on the day of purported service of original notice, the discretion of the trial court in setting aside a default will not be reviewed without a showing of abuse, even tho a court bailiff testified that he obtained personal service on that day.

Brunswick Co. v Dillon, 226-244; 283 NW 872

11595 New trial after judgment, on publication.

Nonapplicability of statute. The statutory provision for a new trial for a defaulting defendant served by publication only does not apply to divorce proceedings.

Girdey v Girdey, 213-1; 238 NW 432

Minor served by publication only. A non-appearing, nonresident minor, defendant in partition, and served by due publication only, is entitled to a new trial on timely and sufficient application therefor, even tho, on the original trial, a guardian ad litem was duly appointed for him, and the issue of his interest in the property was fully adjudicated.

Clark v Robinson, 206-712; 221 NW 217

Computation of period. The two years within which a nonresident, nonappearing defendant served by publication may appear and have an action in partition retried, commences to run from the date of the judgment which confirms the partition and apportions the costs, and not from the date when the court approves the referee's report of distribution.

Tracy v McLaughlin, 207-793; 223 NW 475

Decree adjudging superiority of second mortgage. A decree, rendered on service by publication in the foreclosure of a second mortgage, adjudging that said second mortgage is senior and superior to a first mortgage, in accordance with a definite pleading and prayer to said effect based on a good faith but mistaken belief that said first mortgage had been paid, is binding and conclusive on the holder of said first mortgage, and may not be collaterally assailed by said first mortgagee in an action to foreclose his mortgage. (It appears that said first mortgagee had allowed the time to elapse in which to attack said decree under §11595, C., '27.)

Lyster v Brown, 210-317; 228 NW 3

Fraudulent decree—new trial. An unappealed decree of a court of competent jurisdiction of a sister state, granting separate maintenance to a wife on the ground of desertion, and dismissing the husband's cross-petition for divorce on the same ground, constitutes a final adjudication that the husband was not entitled to a divorce on any ground (the laws of the two states being the same), and is binding on the courts of this state, and a decree of divorce subsequently obtained in this state by the husband on service by publication and on the ground of desertion, and without revealing the foreign decree, will be deemed fraudulent and will be set aside on timely petition by the wife and a new trial granted on her prayer.

11596 Judgment on retrial.

Default for nonappearance—trial to court. Where an action on a promissory note had been assigned for trial, continued to the next day because of defendant's nonappearance for trial, and at such time called for trial a second time with defendant still not appearing until after the jury panel had been dismissed, a default having been entered, and plaintiff being allowed to prove up his case to the court, held on defendant's belated appearance and demand for jury trial, an offer by the court to require plaintiff to reintroduce his evidence but requiring a trial to the court without a jury, otherwise, permitting default and judgment thereon to stand, was not error.

Vaux v Hensal, 224-1055; 277 NW 718

11600 Judgment on publication service.

Garnishment, in rem judgments. See under §12169

Judgment in rem as basis for creditor's bill. A judgment in rem against the real estate of a nonresident furnishes sufficient basis for the institution of an action in the nature of a creditor's bill to set aside a fraudulent transfer of the property and to subject the property to the payment of the judgment.

Porter v Wingert, 200-1371; 206 NW 295

Judgment in rem. An in rem judgment cannot affect personal property in the possession of a nonresident who is not personally served in Iowa and who is located in another state.

McGaffin v Helmts, 210-108; 230 NW 532

Garnishment—proceedings to support or enforce—judgment in rem. In an action aided by attachment, the entry, on service on defendant by publication, of a judgment in rem against property of the defendant in the hands of a garnishee, does not work a merger in said judgment of the obligation sued on, and thereby deprive the holder of said obligation of the right to proceed against defendant, at a later time, for the recovery of the balance due on said obligation,—if there be such balance.

Strand v Halverson, 220-1276; 264 NW 266; 103 ALR 835

Deceased partner and surviving partners—accounting. Where an accounting proceeding instituted by the widow of a deceased partner, in order to determine her dower interest in the partnership property, is tried on the mutual theory that her interest, when determined, should be impressed as a trust on the entire partnership property, a judgment in rem against the partnership property should be entered, and not a personal judgment against the surviving partners.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

Mortgage foreclosure—deficiency judgment in rem. A receiver may, on a proper showing, be appointed to collect pledged rents, and thereby discharge a deficiency judgment, whether the deficiency arises on a judgment in personam or in rem.

Inter-State Assn. v Nichols, 213-12; 238 NW 435

Foreclosure decree—construction—application of rents. A foreclosure decree which covers a first and second mortgage, and which is in rem only, and which appoints a receiver, with direction to pay the final balance of rents "on deficiency judgment", entitles the second mortgagee to such final balance of rents in preference to the then owner of the land, the first mortgagee being fully satisfied by the foreclosure sale.

Union Bank v Lyons, 206-441; 220 NW 43

Foreclosure action in rem—state court—not stayed by bankruptcy proceedings. Where mortgagees on foreclosure did not ask personal judgment, but only a judgment in rem, and trustee in bankruptcy for mortgagors had secured an order releasing and discharging the real estate as assets in bankruptcy matter, state court was justified in proceeding with foreclosure and in not staying proceedings until adjudication of mortgagors as bankrupts, bankruptcy act, §11 [11 USC, §29], contemplating only suits in personam and from which a discharge in bankruptcy would be a release.

Mayer v Imig, (NOR); 227 NW 328

11601 Personal judgment—when authorized.

Personal judgment—insufficient prayer. A personal judgment without a specific prayer therefor is erroneous, and a prayer for "other and further relief" is not such prayer.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Nature and essentials—nonparty to action. Personal judgment may not be rendered against one who is not a party defendant.

Tracey v Judy, 202-646; 210 NW 793

Personal judgment unallowable. A nonresident minor may, in a proper case, be made a party to litigation in this state, by service in this state on the foreign guardian, but such service will not confer jurisdiction on the court to enter a personal judgment against the minor.

Irwin v Bank, 218-474; 255 NW 670

Service outside state—effect. Jurisdiction in personam of an Iowa corporation is constitutionally obtained by proper service of a proper original notice in a foreign state on one of the last known or acting officers of the corporation, as shown by the last statutory annual report of the corporation on file with the secretary of state of this state.

Bennett v Coal Co., 201-770; 208 NW 519

Nonpermissible personal judgment on foreign service. A corporation organized under federal law, with its principal place of business or domicile in a foreign state, does not become a "resident" of this state by doing business in this state. It follows that service outside this state of an original notice on the corporation, it having no officer or agent in this state, does not authorize the entry in this state of a personal judgment against the corporation.

Fisher & Van Gilder v Bank, 210-531; 231 NW 671; 69 ALR 1340

11602 Liens of judgments.

- VII PRIORITY

Judgment creditors as nonpurchasers. See under §10105 (III), Vol I Lien of judgment on homestead. See under §10155

I LIEN IN GENERAL

Displacement of liens. Railway companies which knowingly permit the receiver of an insolvent railway to collect interline freight charges may not, as intervenors in an action to foreclose a mortgage on the receiver's road, have their claims established as prior to judgment liens on the naked showing that said freight charges were used by the receiver in operating his railway.

Continental Bk. v Railway, 202-579; 210 NW 787; 50 ALR 139

Junior mortgagee—loss of rights. A junior mortgagee who makes no redemption from the sale under senior foreclosure to which he and the common mortgagor were parties may not, after the sale under such senior decree, obtain a judgment on his junior mortgage note and enforce it against the land in the hands of the mortgagor's grantee who has redeemed, or in the hands of a party who claims under said grantee.

Stiles v Bailey, 205-1385; 219 NW 537

Superintendent of banking as receiver—extent of lien. A judgment against the superintendent of banking as receiver of a particular bank becomes a lien only on land held for that bank in the county wherein the judgment is rendered or to which transcribed and does not become a lien on land held as receiver of some other bank.

Bates v Nichols, 223-878; 274 NW 32

Guardian and ward—disposing of solvent estate—not intended by statute. The statutes providing for guardians for property of incompetents do not contemplate disposition of ward's assets, except in instances where ward's estate is insolvent, or probably will be insolvent. The statutes intend that the business of the ward shall be conducted by a guardian instead of by the ward himself.

In re Simpson, 225-1194; 282 NW 283; 119 ALR 1208

II COMMENCEMENT OF LIEN

Effective from recorded date. A judgment lien is effective from the recorded date thereof, not from the date when the court, in some subsequent proceedings, has occasion to, and does, confirm said lien.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361

When lien effective. A decree which establishes in plaintiff a lien on real estate "subject to the payment" of a named claim, and which provides for a sale of the land subject to said claim, cannot properly be construed as requiring plaintiff to pay and discharge said claim as a condition precedent to the attaching of plaintiff's lien.

Farber v Ritchie, 212-1396; 238 NW 436

Levy under invalid attachment—subsequent personal judgment—effect. While plaintiff obtains no lien on realty by virtue of a levy under an invalid attachment, yet, if he obtains personal judgment on the claim sued on, he will, from the entry of such judgment, have a lien notwithstanding the futility of the attachment proceedings.

Andrew v Miller, 221-316; 263 NW 845

III DURATION OF LIEN

Voluntary payment by stranger. One who, solely on his own volition, intentionally pays and discharges a judgment as to which he is a legal stranger, may not (1) have the lien of the judgment plaintiff re-established on land and be subrogated to the rights of said lien, nor (2) may he be given a personal judgment against the judgment defendant who was benefited by such voluntary payment and discharge.

Wragg v Wragg, 208-939; 226 NW 99; 64 ALR 1292

Four months liens. A judgment lien is in no manner displaced or affected by bankruptcy proceedings instituted by the judgment defendant more than four months after the lien attached.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361

Irrevocable termination. A judgment rendered on May 28, 1926, in favor of a state bank, and later assigned by the receiver of said bank, absolutely ceases to exist on January 1, 1934, for any purpose whatsoever, except as a counterclaim, unless, prior to said latter date, the holder of said judgment and the judgment debtor file in said cause a written stipulation continuing the life of said judgment. (§11033-e1, C., '35 [§11033.1, C., '39])

Johnson v Keir, 220-69; 261 NW 792

IV PROPERTY OR INTEREST AFFECTED

Judgment is debt—action thereon is ex contractu. A judgment procured upon a judgment creates a lien of the same force and effect upon the real estate of the judgment debtor as does any other judgment of the district court.

Chader v Wilkins, 226-417; 284 NW 183

Lien on real property—attaches by operation of law. A judgment on a judgment is a lien on the real property of the debtor for ten years and where debtor's father died, leaving real estate to the debtor-son's wife, who then in turn died intestate, the lien attaches to the debtor's one-third interest therein, even though he quitclaimed his interest to his daughter within ten days after his wife's death and before execution on the judgment issued.

Chader v Wilkins, 226-417; 284 NW 183

Judgment creditor of devisee. A demurrer to objections to the probate of a will should have been overruled when it admitted as facts that the contestant held judgments against the devisee who was a son and heir of the decedent who died seized of real estate, that the judgments were liens against any real estate the son would inherit as heir, and that the decedent was of unsound mind when the will was made, as, if the decedent were incompetent, the will was void and he died intestate. So the title to the son's share in the real estate vested at the father's death, and,

IV PROPERTY OR INTEREST AFFECTED—concluded at the same instant, the judgments became liens on his share of the real estate.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Judgment creditor of heir. Judgments held against a son and heir of the decedent and recorded where real estate owned by the decedent was located became liens upon the real estate at the time the title thereto vested in the son, and were a beneficial interest entitling the creditor to contest the probate of a will which would deprive him of that interest.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Contest of will by judgment creditor. The creditor of an heir who holds a judgment against him which would be a lien upon any real estate which he would inherit from an ancestor has an interest which entitles him to contest the ancestor's will.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Sale—motion to set aside by stranger to proceeding. The owner of land which has been levied upon and sold under execution as the property of the judgment defendant on the theory that the judgment became a lien on the land before said owner acquired the land may maintain a motion to set aside the sale on the ground that said judgment was not, and never had been, a lien on the land. (§11734, C., '27)

Dorsey v Bentzinger, 209-883; 226 NW 52

Mortgage foreclosure—decree fixing lien on other assets in different court. Court may authorize a mortgagee's foreclosure action against the receiver in a county where the property is located, tho different from county where receivership is pending and such court, after hearing the foreclosure proceeding, has the right, where such relief is proper, not only to foreclose but to impose a lien for a deficiency judgment on the other receivership assets in the other court.

Klages v Freier, 225-586; 281 NW 145

General and partnership creditors. The equity of partnership creditors is superior to the lien of a judgment against an individual partner.

Lefebure v Lefebure Sons, 202-1053; 208 NW 853

Equitable conversion precluding lien. A judgment is not a lien on real estate which has been equitably converted by a will into personalty prior to the date of the judgment.

Dever v Turner, 200-926; 205 NW 755

Reformation of mortgage against judgment creditors. A mortgage may be so reformed as to correct the mutual mistake of mortgagor and mortgagee in omitting certain lands from the mortgage, even against a judgment creditor of the mortgagor who became such since the mortgage was executed.

Davis v Bunnell, 207-1181; 225 NW 6

Quasi-judgment subsequent to death of party. An order growing out of a proceeding instituted after the death of a party, and declaring a contingent liability against the estate of the deceased party, is not a lien on the real estate of which the deceased died seized.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Divorce—alimony—nonlienable decree for money. A decree (in divorce proceedings) which, inter alia, simply "orders" defendant to pay to the clerk for the use of plaintiff a stated sum each month, but renders against defendant no present judgment for money, but authorizes the clerk to enter such judgment for payments in default, neither becomes a lien on defendant's lands, nor authorizes the issuance of an execution.

Millisack v O'Brien, 223-752; 273 NW 875

Superintendent of banking as receiver—extent of lien. A judgment against the superintendent of banking as receiver of a particular bank becomes a lien only on land held for that bank in the county wherein the judgment is rendered or to which transcribed, and does not become a lien on land held as receiver of some other bank.

Bates v Nichols, 223-878; 274 NW 32

V PARTIES AFFECTED

Judgment against insane person—validity. The validity of a judgment obtained in a law action against an insane defendant is not affected by such insanity, or by fact that a guardian had been appointed for his property.

In re Simpson, 225-1194; 282 NW 283; 119 ALR 1208

VI DEATH OF JUDGMENT DEBTOR

Discussion. See 22 ILR 557—Limitations and claims against estate

Substitution of administrator—judgment—effect. A plaintiff who, upon the death of the defendant, prosecutes his claim to judgment by substituting the defendant's administrator as defendant, simply accomplishes a legal adjudication of his claim against the estate. Plaintiff, by such procedure, does not obtain any lien on the real property belonging to the estate.

Marion Bank v Smith, 205-203; 217 NW 857

Judgment against insane person—priority in estate—lien. A judgment rendered against an insane person at a time when the guardianship was entirely insolvent, with no proceedings then pending nor contemplated relative to dissolution or distribution of assets of guardianship, becomes a lien upon his realty, and upon his death the district court could properly order administrator of his estate to pay the judgment prior to payment of claims against the estate.

In re Simpson, 225-1194; 282 NW 283; 119 ALR 1208

VII PRIORITY

Mortgage for future advancements. A mortgage on realty actually given to secure future advances of money to the mortgagor is prior in right to subsequently rendered judgments against the mortgagor as to advances made after the rendition of the judgments, it not appearing that the mortgagee had actual knowledge of said judgments.

Everist v Carter, 202-498; 210 NW 559

Priority of mortgage. One who holds an absolute deed as a mortgage and, under agreement with the mortgagor, sells the property, may not, as against a subsequent judgment lienholder, enforce priority to the proceeds of the sale, except to the amount or extent that he applies the proceeds on his mortgage debt.

Everist v Carter, 202-498; 210 NW 559

Right of subrogation—deducting set-off. A vendor who is compelled to discharge a judgment lien on real estate after the amount of the judgment has been deducted from the purchase price is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment plaintiff against a subsequent purchaser who is not a purchaser for value and without notice, subject to any indebtedness owed by the vendor to the vendee, and growing out of the same transaction.

Home Loan Co. v Burrows, 207-1071; 224 NW 72

Right to offset debt of devisee. The amount which an insolvent testamentary devisee is owing to a solvent estate may, in partition proceedings, be offset against his interest in the real estate of testator, and such right is superior to the right of a judgment creditor who obtained his judgment against the devisee subsequent to the death of the testator.

Schultz v Locke, 204-1127; 216 NW 617

Offsetting debt of insolvent heir against realty—creditors. Where an heir, as a defendant in a partition action, admits insolvency and an indebtedness to parents' estate in excess of his interest in parents' realty, decree was proper holding heir had no interest in such realty and, accordingly, heir's creditors who obtain judgments after commencement of partition action but before entry of decree, and making no claim of fraud in securing the decree, have no interest in any of funds received from sale of realty.

Petty v Hewlett, 225-797; 281 NW 731

Antagonistic judgments—priority. The lien of a judgment obtained by an executor against an insolvent devisee for sums owed by the devisee to the estate (obtained in order to avoid unfairness to other equally-sharing devisees) is superior to the lien of a prior judgment against said devisee obtained by a general creditor, on lands acquired by the estate subsequent to both judgments.

Johnson v Smith, 210-591; 231 NW 470

Lienable judgment during receivership. A judgment rendered against a debtor at a time when he is under temporary receivership for purposes other than the winding up of the affairs of the debtor (even tho the receiver is not a party to the action) is valid and lienable on the lands of the debtor in preference to other creditors, even tho, subsequent to the rendition of such judgment, the said receivership is converted into a proceeding for the winding up of the affairs of the debtor.

Britten v Oil Co., 205-147; 217 NW 800

Equitable mortgage—priority. Where one who stands in the position of a vendor of land assigns his interest in the contract of sale as security, and the court subsequently decrees a cancellation of the contract, but also decrees that such cancellation shall be without prejudice to the rights of said assignee, said assignee will be deemed to hold an equitable mortgage on the land reverting to the vendor, superior to the lien of a judgment against the vendor obtained subsequent to the original assignment.

Johnson v Smith, 210-591; 231 NW 470

Equitable ownership superior to judgment lien. An actual bona fide oral agreement between a debtor and creditor, that the debtor will convey to the creditor certain lands in part satisfaction of the debt, creates in the creditor an equitable ownership in the land (especially when the creditor is already in possession of the land) which is superior to the rights of a subsequent judgment creditor of said debtor. It follows that delay in making delivery of the deed, or even the loss of the deed, will not elevate the subsequent judgment creditor into priority.

Richardson v Estle, 214-1007; 243 NW 611

11603 When judgment lien attaches.

Nunc pro tunc entry—effect. The recital in a judgment entry of the date on which a cause came on for trial does not, in and of itself, constitute a nunc pro tunc order that a subsequently entered judgment shall be a lien from said recited date of trial.

Andrew v Winegarden, 205-1180; 219 NW 326

Special assessment—when lien or incumbrance. A special assessment for a street improvement which has been undertaken by the city without the letting of a contract does not become a lien or incumbrance on the land from the point of time when the assessment is finally approved by the council.

Frankel v Blank, 205-1; 213 NW 597

Assignment by heir—effect. A written assignment by an heir “of all interest of every kind and nature” in the estate works a complete conveyance of the heir’s interest in the real estate of the estate, as against a subsequently rendered judgment against the assignor.

Berg v Shade, 203-1352; 214 NW 513
Funk v Grulke, 204-314; 213 NW 608

Judgment in vacation. Where a cause is tried, submitted, and taken under advisement under a stipulation that judgment may be entered “during term time or vacation”, a subsequently rendered judgment becomes a lien on the defendant’s land from the date of its actual entry, and not from the date of actual trial and submission under said stipulation, even tho the judgment entry recites such day of trial and submission.

Andrew v Winegarden, 205-1180; 219 NW 326

Burden of proof. A judgment creditor who claims that his transcript of judgment was filed prior to the delivery of a deed of conveyance by the judgment debtor has the burden of so showing.

Richardson v Estle, 214-1007; 243 NW 611

Superintendent of banking as receiver—extent of lien. A judgment against the superintendent of banking as receiver of a particular bank becomes a lien only on land held for that bank in the county wherein the judgment is rendered or to which transcribed and does not become a lien on land held as receiver of some other bank.

Bates v Nichols, 223-878; 274 NW 32

Homestead—liabilities enforceable against—subsequent loan to pay prior debt. A judgment on a loan made to the owners of a homestead long after the acquisition of the homestead is not a lien on the homestead, because of the fact that said loan was made and used for the specific purpose of paying off a debt antedating the acquisition of said homestead.

Brauch v Freking, 219-556; 258 NW 892

11608 Judgments on motion.

Additional annotations. See under §11567 (III) Judgments generally. See under §11567 Suretyship generally. See under §11577

Summary proceedings—non de novo hearing. A summary proceeding by a client against his attorney will be heard on appeal only on errors assigned—not de novo.

Norman v Bennett, 216-181; 246 NW 378

Summary proceedings—findings conclusive. In a summary proceeding by a client against his attorney, the finding by the trial court on conflicting testimony is conclusive on the appellate court.

Norman v Bennett, 216-181; 246 NW 378

Nonapplicability of summary remedy. The statutory remedy of summary judgments on motion against attorneys for property collected by attorneys for clients cannot be employed as the basis of an action to require performance of a contract between an attorney and a client not involving collection of property.

Bradford v Dawson, 214-130; 241 NW 420

Rights and remedies of surety—contribution—nonestoppel. A surety who unsuccessfully contends, when sued on bond, that he is not liable for any defalcation occurring prior to the bond—that said bond is a substitute for a prior bond of the same guardian—does not thereby estop himself from enforcing contribution from the sureties on said prior and contemporary bond.

Federal Co. v France, 212-1403; 238 NW 460

Findings of trial court. A finding of fact by the court, on supporting testimony, on a motion for judgment against an officer for money in his hands, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Andresen v Andresen, 219-434; 258 NW 107

Insurance contract—construction—effect of reinsurance. A contract performance bond which, in effect, binds the insured to reimburse the insurer and any reinsurer for any loss which the insurer or reinsurer may be compelled to pay is not multiplied or divided by a subsequent reinsurance contract. In other words, the liability of the original insured remains a single liability, and the risk carried by both insurers remains as one risk.

Iowa Cas. Co. v Wagner Co., 203-179; 210 NW 775

11612 No written pleadings.

Unnecessary pleadings. In summary proceedings against a clerk of the court for judgment for funds collected by the clerk, the filing of an answer by the clerk does not cast any greater burden on the plaintiff.

Prudential v Hart, 205-801; 218 NW 529

Belated presentation of defense. In summary proceedings between an attorney and a client, the defense that a contract between the parties was champertous, or against public policy, must be presented in some manner in the trial court, even tho such summary proceedings are heard by the trial court without written pleadings.

Norman v Bennett, 216-181; 246 NW 378

11613 Conveyance by commissioner.

Wrongful release of conditionally cancelled mortgage. Where, in rescission proceedings, a decree in effect provided that a promissory note and recorded real estate mortgage given for the purchase price of goods should be null and void from and after the return of the goods by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and where the goods were never so returned, and where the mortgage was wrongfully released of record by a court-appointed commissioner, the mortgage may be foreclosed against a purchaser of the land who innocently bought in reliance on the wrongful release. This is true because, while both the mortgagee and the subsequent purchaser were innocent, yet the purchaser had the means of knowing whether the goods had been returned to the mortgagee,—the very act which, under the decree, would work a nullification of the mortgage and note and justify a release.

Moore v Crawford, 210-632; 231 NW 363

11621 Satisfaction of judgment—penalty.

Damages for failure to satisfy. Damages for failure to enter a record satisfaction of a paid judgment are properly denied when there is no evidence of such damages.

Taylor v Heiny, 210-1320; 232 NW 695

Agreement to release judgment—costs included. Under a settlement in which a judgment debtor agreed to deed certain real estate to his judgment creditor in consideration for release and satisfaction of a judgment, where the debtor performed his part of the agreement and the creditor released the judgment, but refused to satisfy two items consisting of attorney fees and court costs, the debtor, who became primarily liable for said items upon rendition of the judgment, was, on his counterclaim in action brought by creditor, entitled to a decree compelling creditor to satisfy said fees and costs.

Cooke v Harrington, 227-145; 287 NW 837

CHAPTER 497

COSTS

11622 Recoverable by successful party.

ANALYSIS

- I COSTS IN GENERAL
- II LIABILITY IN GENERAL
- III PROBATE PROCEEDINGS
- IV TAXATION AGAINST DEFENDANT
- V TAXATION AGAINST PLAINTIFF

Costs, criminal cases. See under §13964

I COSTS IN GENERAL

Contempt—imprisonment for costs. Imprisonment for nonpayment of costs in contempt proceedings is unauthorized.

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 552

No inherent right to tax costs. Principle reaffirmed that the court has no inherent right to tax costs.

Hensen v Hensen, 212-1226; 238 NW 83

Taxation—apportionment—showing on appeal. The discretion of the trial court in apportioning costs will not be disturbed on appeal, in the absence of some fairly definite showing of the items entering into the total taxation and the responsibility of each party therefor.

Parks & Co. v Howard Co., 200-479; 203 NW 247

Agreement to release judgment—costs included. Under a settlement in which a judgment debtor agreed to deed certain real estate to his judgment creditor in consideration for release and satisfaction of a judgment, where the debtor performed his part of the agreement and the creditor released the judgment, but refused to satisfy two items consisting of attorney fees and court costs, the debtor, who became primarily liable for said items upon rendition of the judgment, was, on his counterclaim in action brought by creditor, entitled to a decree compelling creditor to satisfy said fees and costs.

Cooke v Harrington, 227-145; 287 NW 837

Voluntary compliance with costs judgment—review. A voluntary payment of an entire judgment prior to appeal by the superintendent of banking tho such judgment be only for costs, entered against him by the court, and not merely taxed by the clerk, is such an acquiescence and submission to the judgment as precludes an appeal thereon. (Distinguishing Boone v Boone, 160 Iowa 284.)

Bates v Nichols, 223-878; 274 NW 32

II LIABILITY IN GENERAL

Persons acting officially. Costs should not be taxed against a county auditor in a matter in which he acts officially, in good faith, and on the advice of counsel.

Northwest. Bk. v Van Roekel, 202-237; 207 NW 345

Submission without action. When the issues in a controversy are made up by pleadings and the pleadings then abandoned and the matter submitted to the court on a stipulation of fact, the costs are properly taxed against the wholly unsuccessful party.

Chambers v Bank, 218-63; 254 NW 309

Agreement to release judgment—costs included. Under a settlement in which a judgment debtor agreed to deed certain real estate to his judgment creditor in consideration for release and satisfaction of a judgment, where the debtor performed his part of the agreement and the creditor released the judgment, but refused to satisfy two items consisting of attorney fees and court costs, the debtor, who became primarily liable for said items upon rendition of the judgment, was, on his counterclaim in action brought by creditor, entitled to a decree compelling creditor to satisfy said fees and costs.

Cooke v Harrington, 227-145; 287 NW 837

III PROBATE PROCEEDINGS

Unsuccessful will contestant. Costs accruing in an unsuccessful contest of a will should be taxed to the contestant.

Schroeder v Cable, 211-1107; 235 NW 63

Against losing party in probate. Costs in probate consequent on objections filed to an intermediate report of an executor, and on a trial on such objections before a referee, are properly taxed to the objector if the objections be overruled.

In re Cochran, 220-33; 261 NW 514

Property in probate—equity action. There being no statutory authority therefor, costs and expenses of litigation are not allowable to a plaintiff in an equitable action to determine ownership of property involved in probate, even tho the action was begun in the interests of all persons interested in the estate.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

IV TAXATION AGAINST DEFENDANT

Successful party — statutory rule. Costs must be taxed to the defendant when the plaintiff is successful on his demand.

Burghardt v Burghardt, 209-1171; 229 NW 761

Nonparties and parties not liable. Costs cannot be taxed to a defendant against whom plaintiff has established no liability, and necessarily not to a party who is not a party to the action.

Commercial Bk. v Broadhead, 212-688; 235 NW 299

V TAXATION AGAINST PLAINTIFF

Fence-viewing proceedings. Costs in certiorari proceedings to annul the void proceedings of fence viewers are properly taxed to the party who initiated the proceedings before the fence viewers, such party being a party to the certiorari proceedings by consolidation of other actions therewith.

Sinnott v Dist. Court, 201-292; 207 NW 129

Mistrial. When a mistrial is declared for no fault of plaintiff, the accrued costs may not be taxed to plaintiff but must abide the final determination of the case.

Slinger v Ins. Assn., 219-329; 258 NW 101

11623 Witness fees—limitation.

Taxation of witness fees. See under §§11330, 13880, Vol I

11624 Apportionment generally.

Insufficient grounds. In an action by the vendor of land for the purchase price, the defendant is not entitled to an apportionment of the court costs, because the vendor had not described the land by metes and bounds, when the defendant did not, prior to suit, demand such description, and would have been furnished such description by simply asking for it.

Elliott v Horton, 205-156; 217 NW 829

Nonright to apportionment. The naked fact that defendant was awarded a general verdict, but with no recovery on his counterclaim, does not entitle plaintiff to an apportionment of the cost.

Priest v Hogan, 218-1371; 257 NW 403

Equity court's discretion—apportionment between bankruptcy trustee and heirs—renounced devise. In equity, the court has a wide discretion in taxing costs, which will not be interfered with except in case of manifest injustice; so, where a sister renounced benefits under her father's will and conveyed realty to her brother before she took bankruptcy, in action by the bankruptcy trustee to set aside renunciation and the conveyance as fraudulent, the apportionment of one half of costs against trustee and other half against sister and brother was proper.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

11626 Liability of successful party.

Remedies for collection—motion to retax—special proceeding. A motion by a city to retax unpaid clerk's costs against the plaintiff is a special proceeding.

Great West. Ins. v Saunders, 223-926; 274 NW 28

11630 Referee fees.

11633 Dismissal of action or abatement.

Effect on taxation of attorney fees. The action of plaintiff in divorce proceedings in dismissing his action pending defendant's application for suit money, deprives the court of jurisdiction thereafter to tax to plaintiff, as costs, any allowance to compensate defendant for attorney fees for services performed prior to said dismissal.

Dallas v Dallas, 222-42; 268 NW 516

11634 Between coparties.

Right to contribution. Principle recognized that a coparty paying all the costs taxed against coparties may enforce contribution from other coparties.

Read v Gregg, 215-792; 247 NW 199

11636 Costs taxable.

Unliquidated demand set off against court costs. On a motion by an administrator to tax court costs against a defeated claimant in probate, the latter may not have a duly filed but unliquidated claim in his favor and against the estate adjudicated and set off against said costs and a judgment rendered against the estate for the excess.

In re Nairn, 215-920; 247 NW 220

Rents — wrongful application on costs. While rents of mortgaged premises in the hands of a receiver are properly applicable solely to the discharge of a deficiency judgment, yet, manifestly, the mortgagor may validly consent to their application in discharge of the costs taxed in the foreclosure proceedings.

Wenstrand v Kiddoo, 222-284; 268 NW 574

Amount in controversy—including interest on judgment. In determining the amount in controversy under the statute limiting supreme court appeals to cases involving over $100, the allegations of the pleadings are controlling, and where the propriety of the judgment is the only issue, interest or costs will not be considered in determining the amount in controversy, but where defendant's motion attacked purported judgment of district court confirming justice's judgment in sum of $74, together with accrued interest of $35, amount of interest would be added to judgment in determining whether amount involved was sufficient to authorize appeal to supreme court.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

11638 Retaxation.

Motions generally. See under §11229

Motion to retax—exclusive function. The exclusive function of a motion to retax costs is to reach and correct errors of the court's own officer—its clerk—in taxing costs, not to reach and correct errors of the court in adjudging the right to recover an item of costs or the amount thereof, e.g., in re attorney fees as costs. (Bankers Iowa State Bank v Jordan, 111 Iowa 324, Rogers v Crandall, 143 Iowa 249, insofar as inconsistent, overruled.) Appeal is the proper procedure for the correction of the errors of the court.

Wenstrand v Kiddoo, 222-284; 268 NW 574

Motion to retax—limited applicability. A motion to retax costs can reach only errors of the clerk and not errors inhering in a judgment.

Grimes Bank v Jordan, 224-28; 276 NW 71

Attorney fees. Error in the taxation of attorney fees may be reached by motion to retax.

Everist v Carter, 202-498; 210 NW 559

Sufficient ground. Retaxation of costs will not, manifestly, be ordered because of proceedings had as to which no costs were incurred.

Webber v King, 205-612; 218 NW 282

Motion to retax—laches as bar. A delay of some six years on the part of a defendant in moving for a retaxation of costs, held not such laches as to bar the motion, defendant having moved as soon as assured of the illegality in the taxation, and no one being materially prejudiced by the delay.

Wenstrand v Kiddoo, 222-284; 268 NW 574

Supersedeas bond — retaxation of costs — effect. The surety on a supersedeas bond by executing the bond makes himself a party to the record, and is bound by an unappealed order retaxing the costs entered by the court on motion of principal in the bond after the appeal had been dismissed by the appellate court and after said principal had paid a part of the costs.

Springer v Ins. Co., 216-1333; 249 NW 226

Land subjected to bank's judgment—attorney lien—belated cost modification—review. Where an action was instituted to set aside conveyances and to subject land to a judgment, and an attorney having a lien on such judgment intervenes, establishes and gets an adjudication of priority in the decree, which made no provision for payment of costs but later was invalidly modified under guise of a motion to retax costs, the trial court being without jurisdiction to modify the decree (1) after an appeal therefrom had been perfected and, (2) because the modification was not made during the term the decree was entered, certiorari will lie to correct the lower court's excess of jurisdiction, and fact that plaintiff is a banking corporation no longer in existence will not defeat the certiorari, since corporation must be regarded as existing to the degree necessary to wind up its affairs.

Grimes Bank v Jordan, 224-28; 276 NW 71

11641 Costs in supreme court.

Taxation of costs on appeal. See under §12374

11643 Interest.

Interest generally. See under §§9404-9409

Amount in controversy—including interest on judgment. In determining the amount in controversy under the statute limiting supreme court appeals to cases involving over $100, the allegations of the pleadings are controlling, and where the propriety of the judgment is the only issue, interest or costs will not be considered in determining the amount in controversy, but where defendant's motion attacked purported judgment of district court confirming justice's judgment in sum of $74, together with accrued interest of $35, amount of interest would be added to judgment in determining whether amount involved was sufficient to authorize appeal to supreme court.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

11644 Attorney's fees.

Att'y. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 186

Nonpermissible allowance by court. The allowance by the court of attorney fees to a party not contemplated by the statute is manifestly erroneous.

Teget v Drain. Ditch, 202-747; 210 NW 954

See Nichol v Neighbour, 202-406; 210 NW 281

Harmless error—taxation of attorney fees. Error in taxing attorney fees when the instrument sued on does not provide therefor is fully cured by a statement in the written argument on appeal by the attorney in whose favor the taxation was had, to the effect that he had fully released and satisfied the judgment for such fees, such statement, tho irregularly presented, being irrevocably binding on the attorney.

Koontz v Clark Bros., 209-62; 227 NW 584

Fee recoverable only when damage shown. An attorney's fee paid by the insured could not be recovered when evidence of the value of the services rendered by the attorney was not shown as a basis for establishing the measure of damages.

Gipp v Lynch, 226-1020; 285 NW 659

Unjust enrichment not shown. In an action by the insured to recover a retainer fee paid to an attorney, the evidence was insufficient to sustain a verdict based on unjust enrichment when it was not shown that the insurer was obligated to pay such attorney fee.

Gipp v Lynch, 226-1020; 285 NW 659

Breach of covenant of warranty. Attorney fees may be a proper element of recovery in an action for breach of a covenant of warranty.

Kellar v Lindley, 203-57; 212 NW 360

Corporate notes—state's nonliability in dissolution proceeding. Where dissolution of a mining corporation is sought, a partial cost judgment against the state of Iowa including statutory attorney fees to a cross petitioner on notes secured by chattel mortgage and signed by the corporation is erroneous.

State v Fuel Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Action on divorce settlement stipulation—fees unallowable. A stipulation or contract of settlement in a divorce action as a basis for a money recovery is in no different category from any other contract and, unless provided for therein, attorney fees are not taxable in an action based thereon.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

Insolvency proceedings. Attorney fees are properly allowed under a chattel mortgage which stipulates for such fees and which is filed as a claim in assignment proceedings for the benefit of creditors.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 204-739; 212 NW 573; 54 ALR 527

Nonallowable attorney fees. An attorney who, under employment by a debtor whose property is under receivership, successfully defends an attempt to throw the debtor into bankruptcy, may not have his attorney fees paid from the receivership funds, when the receiver and his attorney, under order of court, also appeared and successfully contested said bankruptcy proceeding.

Cook v McHenry, 208-442; 223 NW 377

Persons liable—assignee of written lease. Attorney fees may be taxed as costs under a written lease so providing, when the action for rent is against the written assignee of the lease who orally accepted the assignment.

Central Bk. v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

Grantee of mortgaged premises. An attorney fee may not be taxed in mortgage foreclosure proceedings against a subsequent grantee who has not assumed the payment of the mortgage debt.

Cooper v Marsh, 201-1262; 207 NW 403

When not allowable. Attorney fees, tho provided in a note and mortgage, are not taxable on foreclosure on that part of the debt which the mortgagee, by bringing suit, has matured under authority of an acceleration clause in the mortgage, unless the mortgagee shows that the mortgagor had reasonable notice of the intended acceleration, and reasonable opportunity to pay the debt before suit, even tho the note is payable at a named place.

Federal Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

Improper attorney fees. Tho the lien of a materialman may, in a certain case, be superior to the lien of a prior mortgage on the land, yet the court is in error in computing interest at a rate in excess of 6% and in allowing an attorney's fee and taxing it as costs and decreeing a lien for such excess interest and costs, even tho the claim of the materialman is evidenced by a promissory note calling for such excess interest and attorney fees.

Spieker v Fair Assn., 216-424; 249 NW 415

Recovery of fraudulently induced fee. Ordinarily, one who has paid an attorney for services and seeks to recover the entire fee on the ground that payment was fraudulently induced, must show that the services were of no value, and the evidence is fatally deficient if services are performed, but their value is not shown, as the plaintiff thereby fails to establish the amount of his damage.

Gipp v Lynch, 226-1020; 285 NW 659

Land subjected to bank's judgment—attorney lien—belated cost modification—review. Where an action was instituted to set aside conveyances and to subject land to a judgment, and an attorney having a lien on such judgment intervenes, establishes and gets an adjudication of priority in the decree, which made no provision for payment of costs but later was invalidly modified under guise of a motion to retax costs, the trial court being without jurisdiction to modify the decree (1) after an appeal therefrom had been perfected and (2) because the modification was not made during the term the decree was entered, certiorari will lie to correct the lower court's excess of jurisdiction, and fact that plaintiff is a banking corporation no longer in existence will not defeat the certiorari, since corporation must be regarded as existing to the degree necessary to wind up its affairs.

Grimes Bank v Jordan, 224-28; 276 NW 71

Injunction—nonallowable attorney fees. In a successful action to enforce plaintiff's right to redeem from execution sale, the fact that plaintiff secured a temporary injunction to protect his possession (and solely as a collateral remedy) furnishes no justification for the taxation against plaintiff of an attorney fee in favor of defendant, especially when the said injunction was ordered dissolved only in event plaintiff failed to exercise his right to redeem.

Werner v Hammill, 219-314; 257 NW 792

Simultaneously executed notes — proper computation. In a single action by a trustee on several promissory notes, each containing an agreement to pay attorney fees, and all simultaneously executed as part of one transaction, to wit, the financing of a mortgage loan, the attorney fees must be computed as tho there were but one note for the total amount due on all the notes sued on. And this is true tho the different notes actually belong to different parties.

Wenstrand v Kiddoo, 222-284; 268 NW 574

Wrongful refusal to defend—attorney fees. A title insurer who wrongfully refuses to comply with his contract to defend an action hostile to the title is liable to the insured for reasonable attorney fees, whether such fees have or have not been paid by the insured.

Jones v Surety Co., 210-61; 228 NW 98

Action to recover fee. A company which had insured only civil liability was not bound to pay the attorney fees in a criminal action arising from an automobile accident of the insured because of a statement of the company's own attorney that it would pay such fees, when there was no proof to show any authority for the company's attorney to impose such obligation on the company.

Gipp v Lynch, 226-1020; 285 NW 659

Agreement to release judgment—attorney fee included. Under a settlement in which a judgment debtor agreed to deed certain real estate to his judgment creditor in consideration for release and satisfaction of a judgment, where the debtor performed his part of the agreement and the creditor released the judgment, but refused to satisfy two items consisting of attorney fees and court costs, the debtor, who became primarily liable for said items upon rendition of the judgment, was, on his counterclaim in action brought by creditor, entitled to a decree compelling creditor to satisfy said fees and costs.

Cooke v Harrington, 227-145; 287 NW 837

Dissolution of partnership—accounting—unallowable credits. In an accounting between the representative of a deceased partner and the surviving partners, who continued the partnership business as tho no dissolution had occurred, attorney fees in the accounting proceedings, and personal, family, and household expenses of the surviving partners, are properly rejected by the referee as a credit.

Fleming v Fleming, 211-1251; 230 NW 359

11646 Affidavit required.

Improper allowance. Attorney fees cannot be properly allowed in the absence of the required statutory affidavit.

Temple Lbr. v Lattner, 211-465; 233 NW 522

Affidavit subsequent to service. Right to taxation of attorney fee is not lost by filing the petition in the action and the statutory affidavit, after the service of the original notice.

Equitable v Cole, 214-235; 242 NW 58

Absence of affidavit—effect. In proceedings by an executor for an order for the sale of lands devised to an insolvent devisee, in order to effect collection of the amount owing the estate by said devisee on promissory notes, attorney fees may not be taxed (tho the notes provide for such) in the absence of the affidavit required by statute.

In re Flannery, 221-265; 264 NW 68

11647 Opportunity to pay.

Presumption. The taxation of an attorney fee under a contract provision therefor will not be disturbed on appeal unless complainant presents a record which affirmatively shows facts which render the taxation unauthorized.

Fellers v Sanders, 202-503; 210 NW 530

When not allowable. Attorney fees, tho provided in a note and mortgage, are not taxable on foreclosure on that part of the debt which the mortgagee, by bringing suit, has matured under authority of an acceleration clause in the mortgage, unless the mortgagee shows that the mortgagor had reasonable notice of the intended acceleration, and reasonable opportunity to pay the debt before suit, even tho the note is payable at a named place.

Federal Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

First Trust v Kruse, 219-1229; 260 NW 665

CHAPTER 498

EXECUTIONS

11648 Enforcement of judgments and orders.

Nature. Execution constitutes judicial process.

Heesel v Bank, 205-508; 218 NW 298

Execution before but sale after judgment barred—validity. If execution proceedings are instituted and levy made during the lifetime of the judgment, a sale thereunder is valid, tho held after the judgment is barred by the statute of limitations.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

Impressment of lien in equity—special execution. A court of equity upon impressing a lien on property should order the issuance of a special execution for the sale of the property and the satisfaction of the lien.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Alimony—nonlienable decree for money. A decree (in divorce proceedings) which, inter alia, simply "orders" defendant to pay to the clerk for the use of plaintiff a stated sum each month, but renders against defendant no present judgment for money, but authorizes the clerk to enter such judgment for payments in default, neither becomes a lien on defendant's lands, nor authorizes the issuance of an execution.

Millisack v O'Brien, 223-752; 273 NW 875

Mortgages—2-year limitation on foreclosure judgments—statute construed. Statutory provision that no judgment rendered in foreclosure proceedings "shall be enforced and * * * no force or vitality given thereto for any purpose" after two years from entry thereof, means that after two years, no action could be brought on judgment, no execution could issue thereon, the judgment would not be lien, no proceedings to enforce the judgment could be commenced by issuance of an execution; and, generally, the judgment would be without force or effect.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

Void judgment—subject to attack. A void judgment may be attacked in any proceeding in which it is sought to be enforced.

Gohring v Koonce, 224-1186; 278 NW 283

Specific performance—allowable relief under general prayer. In bank receiver's specific performance action to compel heirs to perform contract to purchase receiver's interest in estate property, a prayer for general equitable relief warrants a decree establishing vendor's lien, ordering a special execution sale of the receiver's interest, and a general execution for any deficiency.

Utterback v Stewart, 224-1135; 277 NW 735

Continuing jurisdiction of lower court. An appeal simply from an order appointing a receiver in auxiliary proceedings to enforce a judgment leaves all other portions of said proceedings within the jurisdiction of the district court.

Wade v Swartzendruber, 206-637; 220 NW 67

11649 Within what time—to what counties.

Nunc pro tunc entries. See under §10803

Execution before but sale after judgment barred—validity. If execution proceedings are instituted and levy made during the lifetime of the judgment, a sale thereunder is valid, tho held after the judgment is barred by the statute of limitations.

Deaton v Hollingshead, 225-967; 282 NW 329

11650 Limitation on number.

Plurality of writs prohibited. The issuance of an execution at a time when another execution on the same judgment is in existence, is unlawful, and all proceedings under such unlawfully issued execution are void.

Richardson v Rusk, 215-470; 245 NW 770

Amendment valid when nonprejudicial to third parties. Even after sale under a second execution, the return on the first execution, when third persons are not prejudiced, may be amended by the sheriff to show the true facts that the first execution had been returned and was not in existence when the second execution was issued.

Luke v Bank, 224-847; 278 NW 230

Moratorium application—waiver of sale irregularities. Mortgagor's application under the mortgage moratorium acts to extend the period of redemption from an execution sale is a waiver of any right to attack the validity of such sale made under a second special execution the validity of which is challenged because of the alleged existence of another and prior execution.

11659 Form of execution.

Erroneous entry of amount. The inadvertent entry on the appearance docket of the amount of a judgment, followed by the issuance of an execution in the erroneous amount, sale thereunder, and issuance of sale certificate, must, on proper motion, be corrected by expunging the erroneous entry, recalling the execution, setting aside the sale, and canceling the certificate, no rights of third parties having intervened.

Equitable v Carpenter, 202-1334; 212 NW 145

11660 Property in hands of others.

Levy on property of deceased. See under §§11736, 11753

Right to income from trust dependent on election or demand by cestui—effect. A trust which provides that the income therefrom shall be paid to a named beneficiary "from time to time as she may elect during her lifetime" effectually places said income beyond the reach of the creditors of said beneficiary so long as said beneficiary makes no such election.

Ober v Dodge, 210-643; 231 NW 444

Creditor's rights in trust proceeds. When the testator's will created a trust for his son, providing that the proceeds of the trust be paid to the son "yearly or oftener if collected for shorter periods," and contained no words showing an intent to place the trust income beyond the reach of the son's creditors, a debt due the son from the trustee was created, which was a vested right which could be assigned and was subject to claims of creditors.

Standard Chemical v Weed, 226-882; 285 NW 175

Spendthrift trusts. If the terms of a trust provide that the income be applied to the cestui at the discretion of the trustee, or the income is payable to the cestui at his demand, or the trust is for a special purpose, or in general where no debt is owed the cestui by the trustee, the creditors of the cestui cannot appropriate the benefaction.

Standard Chemical v Weed, 226-882; 285 NW 175

11663 Receipt and return.

Return—fatal insufficiency. The delivery, by plaintiff's attorney to the clerk, of an execution and the indorsement thereon, by the clerk, of the words "Returned not satisfied" does not constitute a legal return.

Richardson v Rusk, 215-470; 245 NW 770

Delayed return — intervening mortgage — priority. Even tho an officer physically performs all the acts which would constitute a valid levy on chattels if said acts were embodied at the time of the acts in a return indorsed on or attached to the execution, yet where the officer delays making said return for six days after said acts were performed, and in the meantime a chattel mortgage on said chattels is executed and recorded, the mortgage will be superior in right to the belated (and alleged) levy.

Farmers Bk. v Mallicoat, 209-335; 228 NW 272

Insolvency—preferable proof. Principle reaffirmed that in an action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, the preferable proof of the grantor's insolvency at the time of the conveyance is the return nulla bona on a duly issued execution.

Williams Bk. v Murphy, 219-839; 259 NW 467

Amendment valid when nonprejudicial to third parties. Even after sale under a second execution, the return on the first execution, when third persons are not prejudiced, may be amended by the sheriff to show the true facts that the first execution had been returned and was not in existence when the second execution was issued.

Luke v Bank, 224-847; 278 NW 230

Moratorium application—waiver of sale irregularities. Mortgagor's application under the mortgage moratorium acts to extend the period of redemption from an execution sale is a waiver of any right to attack the validity of such sale made under a second special execution the validity of which is challenged because of the alleged existence of another and prior execution.

Luke v Bank, 224-847; 278 NW 230

11664 Indorsement by officer.

Sales legalized. See §10383.1

Curative acts—omissions of levying officer. The failure of an officer to indorse on an execution the procedural matters required by statute may be legalized by an act of the legislature.

Francis v Todd, 219-672; 259 NW 249
Nelson v Hayes, 222-701; 269 NW 861

Sale—validity approved. Record, relative to the sale under special execution of personal property, reviewed and held to reveal no invalidating fact.

McFerrin v Grain Co., 220-1086; 264 NW 45

Indorsements—presumption. Undated but duly signed indorsements on an execution (1) that the execution was received by the sheriff on a named date, and (2) that on a named date the sheriff levied on certain described property, carries the presumption, in the absence of contrary evidence, that the indorsement relative to the receipt was made when the execution was received, and that the indorsement relative to the levy was made when the levy was made.

Ebinger v Wahrer, 213-84; 238 NW 587
Cramer v McDonald, 213-454; 239 NW 101

Presumption—burden to overcome. A party who claims that the various entries of the acts done under an execution and constituting the officers "return" were not entered at the time the various acts were done, has the burden to so show. In the absence of such showing, it must be presumed that the officer did his duty and made the entries at the time required by statute.

Northwestern Ins. v Block, 216-401; 249 NW 395

Return—noninvalidating irregularity. The return on a real estate mortgage foreclosure execution is not, as a basis of the title conveyed, invalidated by the fact that the recital in the return (1) of the receipt of the execution, and (2) of the levy thereunder, and (3) of the date of such receipt and levy, is signed by a deputy sheriff in his own name with the added designation of "deputy sheriff" (instead of in the name of the sheriff by said deputy), when the entire return embracing a timely recital of the doing of every required act thereunder (including that recited by said deputy), is signed by the sheriff in his official capacity.

Nelson v Hayes, 222-701; 269 NW 861

Permissible amendment. The return of the levy of an attachment may be so amended as (1) to definitely locate the property levied on, and (2) to specifically describe the kind of property levied on.

Salinger v Elev. Co., 210-668; 231 NW 866

Correcting inadvertent error. An inadvertent error in the return of a mortgage foreclosure sale may be corrected by an amendment by the sheriff after the land has gone to sheriff's deed, provided the judgment plaintiff and defendant are the only persons affected. In such case oral testimony showing the error is quite unnecessary.

Equitable v Ryan, 213-603; 239 NW 695

Belated amendment. An application to amend the return on an execution, so as to show the essential facts constituting a levy, is properly denied when the application is made four months after the attempted levy, and is hostile to a stranger with a prior interest in the property sought to be levied on.

Cramer v McDonald, 213-454; 239 NW 101

Essentials of levy. An attempted levy on corporate shares of stock is, as to a stranger with a prior interest in the property, a nullity (1) unless the president of the company or other officer designated by the statute is notified in writing that the stock has been levied on, and (2) unless the return on the writ states that such notice was given. (§§11676, 12098, C., '31.)

Cramer v McDonald, 213-454; 239 NW 101

Return—fatal insufficiency. A narrative statement in the form of a return, and purporting to state what had been done under an execution, and indorsed thereon after a purported sale thereunder, and signed by the sheriff who succeeded the sheriff who made the sale, is a nullity.

Richardson v Rusk, 215-470; 245 NW 770

Return as "unsatisfied"—effect. The return of a writ of execution as wholly unsatisfied deprives the execution plaintiff of all basis for impressing a trust on the proceeds of property on the theory that the property was once validly levied on under the said returned writ.

Whitaker v Tiedemann, 200-901; 205 NW 468

11665 Principal and surety—order of liability.

Extension to principal available to surety—abatement of action. An order of a court of bankruptcy granting, to a maker of a negotiable promissory note, an extension of time in which to make payment, is not personal to said maker only, but inures, under USC, title 11, §204, to the benefit of another maker of said note who in fact signed said note as surety only, but without so indicating on the face of the note; and said latter maker, when sued alone by the original payee, may, for the purpose of abating the action, establish his suretyship and consequent secondary liability.

Benson v Alleman, 220-731; 263 NW 305

Permissible plea of counterclaim. In an action against the principal and surety on an attachment bond for damages consequent on the alleged wrongful issuance of the writ, the principal in said bond may plead a counterclaim which neither arises out of or is connected with the transaction on which plaintiff sues, nor in which the surety has any personal ownership (§11151, C., '35). A surety is not primarily liable on the bond and the principal who is primarily liable should be permitted to defeat recovery on the bond if he can so do.

Imes v Hamilton, 222-777; 269 NW 757

11667 Surety subrogated.

I SUBROGATION IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 2 ILB 86—Subrogation to government claim for taxes

Origin and theory. The doctrine of subrogation is purely of equitable origin and grew out of the need, in aid of natural justice, in placing a burden where it of right ought to rest.

HOLC v Rupe, 225-1044; 283 NW 108

Creation of relation—effect. The implied promise of a principal to reimburse his surety if the surety is compelled to pay the debt, brings into existence the relation of debtor and creditor between the principal and surety immediately upon the execution of the contract of suretyship.

Leach v Bassman, 208-1374; 227 NW 339

Legal and conventional subrogation distinguished. Legal subrogation exists only in favor of one who, to protect his own rights, pays the debt of another. Conventional subrogation arises only upon agreement, between the lender and the debtor or old creditor, that the lender shall be subrogated to the old lien.

HOLC v Rupe, 225-1044; 283 NW 108

Conventional subrogation in favor of indorser.

Callaway v Hauser Bros., 211-307; 233 NW 506

Conventional subrogation. A conventional subrogation takes place when a debtor expressly or impliedly agrees that one paying a claim shall stand in the creditor's shoes.

Mains v Barnhouse, 209-963; 229 NW 218

Subrogation of paid surety. The right of a surety to be subrogated to the rights of his principal against a third party is not affected by the fact that he is a paid surety.

American Co. v Bank, 218-1; 254 NW 338

Garnishor subrogated to statutory lien.

Kinart v Churchill, 210-72; 230 NW 349

Surety on guardian's bond. The surety on a guardian's bond who is compelled to pay the amount due on a mortgage held by the guardian for his ward, because of the breach of official duty by the guardian in releasing the mortgage without payment and without authority of court so to do, is, by such payment, subrogated, as a matter of course, to all the rights of the guardian and ward in such mortgage, and may foreclose such mortgage even against purchasers of the land subsequent to the release.

Randell v Fellers, 218-1005; 252 NW 787

Fraud—tracing proceeds. The drawer of a fraud-induced check who traces the check and the proceeds thereof immediately and directly into the satisfaction of a mortgage may, against the wrongdoer and against all others who necessarily profit by the satisfaction without parting with value, be subrogated to the former right of the satisfied mortgage.

Bogle v Goldsworthy, 202-764; 211 NW 257

Wife's suretyship for husband—effect in husband's bankruptcy. Where land owned jointly by husband and wife is mortgaged and the wife signs the note and mortgage on her separate interest to secure the loan to the husband who received and used the loan for his own personal debts and later conveyed his one-half interest in the land to his wife, then, in an action by the husband's trustee in bankruptcy to set aside the conveyance as in fraud of creditors, the wife, as surety, is entitled to have the husband's interest in the land applied first to the satisfaction of the mortgage debt in preference to the claims of the trustee in bankruptcy, and the conveyance accomplishing her subrogation thereto was valid.

Clindinin v Graham, 224-142; 275 NW 475

Repeal of preferential deposit law. Sureties on a bank depositary bond conditioned to hold the state harmless on deposit of state funds in said bank, and given at a time when the state possessed a statutory preferential right, in case the bank was thrown into receivership, to be paid in full prior to the payment of general depositors, are not entitled, upon the payment of a loss, in case of such receivership, to be subrogated to such right on the part of the state when, prior to such payment, the statute giving such right has been repealed. This is on the principle that a surety is entitled to subrogation only upon payment of the principal's debt, and only to the rights then possessed by the creditor.

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

Reimbursement from co-surety. A surety who has paid a note given for the accommodation of the corporation of which he is an officer may not be defeated in his action to compel a co-surety to make proper reimbursement, by the fact that the plaintiff allowed or permitted or directed the corporate funds to be applied on other corporate obligations, and not on the accommodation note.

Brown v Conway, 201-117; 206 NW 665

Stockholder's advance of clay pit rent—extent of priority. After a clay products company has gone into receivership, neither delinquent nor accruing rent on its clay pit, advanced by a stockholder taking an assignment of the clay pit lease, is collectible in full from the receiver as expenses of administration nor as a rent obligation to which the stockholder became subrogated, when the sale price of the clay pit lease was less than the claim for rent advanced thereon, but an order allowing priority for the rent claim to the extent of the sale price of the clay pit lease and establishing the balance of the advanced rent as a general claim was correct.

Parks v Carlisle Co., 224-1024; 277 NW 731

I SUBROGATION IN GENERAL—concluded

Identification of instrument guaranteed. Plaintiff in an action on a guaranty of payment of a promissory note, which guaranty is separate from the note, manifestly cannot recover unless he clearly shows that the note in question is the very note that is guaranteed.

Andrew v Overbeck, 214-578; 241 NW 435

Application of payment prejudicial to surety. The fact that the common maker of two promissory notes signed by different sureties and payable to the same payee was aided by a loan by one of the sureties in order to enable the common maker to make up the amount of a payment to the payee, with the understanding that the total payment would be applied—indorsed—on the note on which said surety was obligated, does not estop or prevent the payee long afterwards (five years) from applying said payment (in accordance with the wishes of the common maker) on the note on which said surety was not obligated, the payee having no knowledge of said agreement. And this is true tho the common maker, and the surety on the note receiving the application, had, in the meantime, become insolvent.

Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

Want of consideration. A plea of want of consideration, interposed by a gratuitous surety on a promissory note, may be very properly ignored in the instructions of the court when the record shows (1) that the surety signed the note without fraud imposed upon him, and (2) that there was a consideration between the principal and the payee.

Granner v Byam, 218-535; 255 NW 653

Subrogation—filing claim against estate. A surety who, in a foreclosure suit which was personal as to himself, but solely in rem as to the estate for which he was surety, pays off a deficiency judgment, must file his claim against the estate in order to render effective his right of subrogation.

In re Angerer, 202-611; 210 NW 810

Administrator's wrongful payments—right of surety. When an administrator of an estate wrongfully pays out estate funds to one who has no right whatever to receive them, and the surety for the administrator is compelled to make good the loss, the legal right of the estate to compel the wrongful recipient to repay the funds because of his primary liability is, as a matter of equity, presumed to continue in order to enable a court of equity to subrogate the said surety to the same right.

American Co. v Bank, 218-1; 254 NW 338

Assumption of mortgage—recovery by mortgagor-surety. As between a mortgagor and a subsequent purchaser who assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage, the purchaser becomes the primary debtor, and the prior mortgagor the secondary debtor; but, in case foreclosure and sale reveal a deficiency judgment, the mortgagor may not recover the amount thereof from the assuming purchaser until he, the mortgagor, has paid such deficiency.

Thomsen v Kopp, 204-1176; 216 NW 725

Protection and loss of right of subrogee. When the holder of a certificate of sale under a junior mortgage foreclosure discharges (in order to protect his interest) an interest payment falling due on the senior mortgage, by taking an assignment of said interest installment, he thereby impliedly acquires a pro tanto interest in said senior mortgage, and may foreclose it accordingly against a subsequent purchaser for value of the land; but when said certificate holder simply pays such interest installment, he wholly loses his claim as to a subsequent purchaser who purchased for value, and without notice that the interest installment had been paid by the junior certificate holder.

Miller Bank v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550

Mortgagee suing for delinquent taxes omitted from foreclosure judgment—splitting actions. A mortgagee who had paid delinquent taxes on the mortgaged land, according to a provision of the mortgage that if taxes were not paid the mortgagee could pay them and obtain repayment, should have taken care of his claim for taxes in the foreclosure proceedings and was not permitted by Ch 501, C., '35, to split his cause of action and bring an action for the taxes after the mortgagor had redeemed.

Monroe v Busick, 225-791; 281 NW 486

Prior sureties as party defendants. Defendant in an action on a guardian's bond has no right to demand that a surety on a prior bond of the guardian be made a party defendant on the theory that the defendant has a right to demand contribution from such prior surety.

Brooke v Bank, 207-668; 223 NW 500

Surety — recoupment. A bank, which acts as a collection agency for a trustee in bankruptcy in gathering in the funds belonging to the bankrupt's estate and in good faith accounts to the trustee for the collections, is not a "depositor" of said funds within the meaning of the federal statutes and rules of court governing depositors of bankrupt funds. So held where a surety who had paid the amount embezzled by the trustee sought recoupment from the said collecting bank on the theory that the bank had violated such federal statutes and rules.

Southern Sur. Co. v Bank, 207-910; 223 NW 865

Voluntary payment of judgment by stranger. One who, solely on his own volition, intentionally pays and discharges a judgment as to which he is a legal stranger, may not (1) have the lien of the judgment plaintiff re-established on land and be subrogated to the rights of said lien, nor (2) may he be given a personal judgment against the judgment defendant who was benefited by such voluntary payment and discharge.

Wragg v Wragg, 208-939; 226 NW 99; 64 ALR 1292

II SURETIES—SUBROGATION RIGHTS

Discussion. See 10 ILB 249—Surety's subrogation

Subrogation of paid surety. The right of a surety to be subrogated to the rights of his principal against a third party is not affected by the fact that he is a paid surety.

American Sur. Co. v Bank, 218-1; 254 NW 338

Conditional order. An order subrogating a surety to all the rights of his principal—a trustee—in unauthorized investments of trust funds is properly conditioned on payment being first made of all sums due the trust.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Payment of obligation. One who, in the sale of commercial paper, guarantees its payment to the extent of a named percentage of its face value becomes the owner of such paper to the extent that he subsequently discharges his guaranty.

Liscomb Bk. v Leise, 201-353; 207 NW 330

Surety holding indemnity. An officer of a corporation who as surety signs a corporate note for borrowed money which the corporation employs in its business, and in good faith receives bonds of the corporation to indemnify him in case he is compelled to pay the note, will, upon payment of the note, be accorded the same rights under a trust deed or mortgage executed to secure the payment of said bonds as will be accorded to good-faith purchasers of other portions of said bonds.

Gunn v Gould Co., 206-172; 218 NW 895; 220 NW 127

Equitable set-off by surety of insolvent. In an action by the receiver of an insolvent, the defendant may set off, against the obligation sued on, the amount which the defendant, as surety for the insolvent, has been compelled to pay on the contract of suretyship.

Leach v Bassman, 208-1374; 227 NW 339

Deducting set-off. A vendor who is compelled to discharge a judgment lien on real estate after the amount of the judgment has been deducted from the purchase price, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the judgment plaintiff against a subsequent purchaser who is not a purchaser for value and without notice, subject to any indebtedness owing by the vendor to the vendee and growing out of the same transaction.

Home Co. v Burrows, 207-1071; 224 NW 72

Subrogation as affecting junior mortgagee. Where tenants in common of land as principal and surety jointly mortgaged their undivided interests in order to secure the debt of the principal, the surety may, after the land is partitioned and set off in severalty, compel the satisfaction of the mortgage as far as possible out of the lands assigned in severalty to the principal, and be subrogated to all the rights of the mortgagee in case he is compelled to pay the principal's debt; and this right is enforceable against a subsequent mortgagee of the principal's undivided interest alone, when such mortgagee takes his mortgage with actual knowledge that the mortgagors in the prior mortgage occupied the relation of principal and surety.

Toll v Toll, 201-38; 206 NW 117

Right of junior mortgagee to pay interest on senior mortgage. The common-law right of a junior mortgagee, in order to protect his own lien, to pay the interest on a senior mortgage, and thereby to be subrogated by proper action to the rights of a senior mortgagee under said senior mortgage to the extent of said payment, has not been abrogated by the enactment of Ch 501.

Miller Bank v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550
Jones v Knutson, 212-268; 234 NW 548

Subrogation. If a second mortgagee uses his own funds in discharging a first mortgage in order to save the property, he will be subrogated to the rights of said first mortgagee; on the other hand, if funds are obtained through a new mortgage, and used in the discharge of said first mortgage, then the new mortgagee will acquire said right of subrogation, and in either case, the homestead character of part of the mortgaged property is quite immaterial.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Subrogation of second mortgagee. A second mortgagee whose mortgage represents money advanced for the specific purpose of discharging prior mortgages, or in redeeming from foreclosure of prior mortgages, will, in order to effect the ends of justice, be subrogated to all the rights and remedies of said former mortgagees.

Burmeister v Walz, 216-265; 249 NW 197

Loan to discharge mortgage—subsequent mortgage subrogated to former's rights. A governmental loaning agency, set up to meet an emergency, by making loans to save homes from foreclosure, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee, when it discovers that there is an heir of one of the original mortgagors who has an interest in the title and who did not join in the mortgage it holds, and when through no fault or negligence on its part, said heir's interest was not discovered and he was not prejudiced by this latter mortgage, but was given the right to redeem in the event of foreclosure.

HOLC v Rupe, 225-1044; 283 NW 108

Grantee of mortgaged land—assumption default—effect. The grantee of land who, in the deed and as part of the consideration therefor, assumes and agrees to pay all unsatisfied mortgages theretofore placed on the land by the grantor, becomes, as between himself and said grantor, the principal debtor on said mortgages, and should the grantor be compelled as surety to pay said indebtedness, he will thereupon be entitled to be subrogated to all the prior rights of said mortgagees to enforce said mortgages against said grantee.

Monticello Bk. v Schatz, 222-335; 268 NW 602

Receiver's certificates — subrogation. The holder of certificates of indebtedness issued and sold by the receiver of an insolvent bank in order to raise funds with which to pay the debts of the bank will, in an action by the receiver to enforce an assessment on corporate stock in order to pay the certificates, be deemed to stand in the shoes of the original creditors of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Depositor by subrogation. In settling and adjusting the affairs of an insolvent bank, a claimant who is not a depositor in fact may not be decreed to be subrogated to the rights of certain depositors who are not parties to the controversy over the claim in question.

Leach v Bank, 207-471; 220 NW 10

Co-sureties—rights. Accommodation and nonaccommodation sureties on bonds given to secure public funds on deposit in banks are co-sureties and each, in case of payment by him, is entitled to contribution from the others, and to be subrogated to the rights of the municipality.

Andrew v Bank, 205-878; 219 NW 34

Leach v Bank, 205-975; 213 NW 612

Surety on guardian's bond. The surety on a guardian's bond who is compelled to pay the amount due on a mortgage held by the guardian for his ward, because of the breach of official duty by the guardian in releasing the mortgage without payment and without authority of court so to do, is, by such payment, subrogated, as a matter of course, to all the rights of the guardian and ward in such mortgage, and may foreclose such mortgage even against purchasers of the land subsequent to the release.

Randell v Fellers, 218-1005; 252 NW 787

Contribution—nonestoppel. A surety who unsuccessfully contends, when sued on the bond, that he is not liable for any defalcation occurring prior to the bond—that said bond is a substitute for a prior bond of the same guardian—does not thereby estop himself from enforcing contribution from the sureties on said prior and contemporary bond.

Fed. Sur. Co. v France, 212-1403; 238 NW 460

Co-sureties—obligations constituting. When an administrator gives bond on his original appointment, and later is ineffectually discharged, and at once reappointed, and gives a new bond, the two bonds will be treated as cumulative, and the sureties thereon as co-sureties, with the sole right in each to enforce proportional contribution from the other.

In re Donlon, 203-1045; 213 NW 781

Contribution enforceable against surety on separate bond. Where an executor has executed and filed two separate bonds for the faithful discharge of his duties, the surety who pays a devastavit in full may enforce contribution from the other surety; and it is immaterial that the surety enforcing contribution signed the bond for a consideration and that the other surety signed as an accommodation.

New Amst. Cas. Co. v Bookhart, 212-994; 235 NW 74; 76 ALR 897

Right of subrogation. When an administrator of an estate wrongfully pays out estate funds to one who has no right whatever to receive them, and the surety for the administrator is compelled to make good the loss, the legal right of the estate to compel the wrongful recipient to repay the funds because of his primary liability is, as a matter of equity, presumed to continue in order to enable a court of equity to subrogate the said surety to the same right.

American Sur. Co. v Bank, 218-1; 254 NW 338

Remedies of surety — attacking conveyance. The surety on an administrator's bond who has paid the shortage of the administrator consequent on the failure of the private bank in which the estate funds were deposited, may not, in an action to recoup his loss, question a conveyance by a former partner in the bank when, prior to the giving of the bond, the said partner had, in good faith and to the full knowledge of the administrator, sold his interest in the bank at a time when the bank had ample funds with which to pay the administrator's deposit.

Fidelity Co. v Bank, 218-1083; 255 NW 713

Statutory bonds — surety (?) or assignee (?). A surety who takes over the work of a defaulting public drainage contractor and proceeds to pay off claims which are statutorily lienable against the funds due under the contract acquires a right of subrogation superior to that of a prior assignee of said funds.

Ottumwa Works v O'Meara, 206-577; 218 NW 920

Statutory bond—subrogation of surety. A surety on a statutory bond for the performance of a public improvement contract who has performed his statutory contract at an expense which exceeds the balance on hand and due under the contract is ipso facto subrogated to the right of the principal contractor to such balance, in preference to subcontractors who hold claims which arise out of contract obligations which are not contemplated by the statute, but which were, nevertheless, inserted into the contract.

Monona Co. v O'Connor, 205-1119; 215 NW 803

Salary of public officer exempt. The salary—the “personal earnings”—of a public officer is exempt from liability on a judgment obtained against him and his surety, by the public body, because of the failure of the officer to account for public funds coming into his hands. The court cannot, on the plea of public policy, rule into the statute an exception which the legislature has not seen fit to declare. So held where the surety having paid the judgment, and thereby subrogated to the rights of the county, sought reimbursement from the officer's salary.

Ohio Cas. Co. v Galvin, 222-670; 269 NW 254; 108 ALR 1036

Discharge of surety. The repeal of a statute which gives the state, when it is a depositor in a bank, a preferential right to be paid in full if the bank passes into the hands of a receiver does not constitute a release of security in such sense as to release a surety on a bond which secures said deposit.

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517
Andrew v Bank, 205-883; 213 NW 531

Discharge of surety—forfeiture of contract. The surety on a promissory note given as part of the contract price of land, ceases, as a matter of law, to be liable thereon to the original payee-vendor whenever the latter legally forfeits the contract.

Smith v Tullis, 219-712; 259 NW 202

Loss of right. Where on appeal in an equitable action the money judgment of the trial court against the appealing judgment defendant is ordered “superseded and set aside”, and a new money judgment is entered against appellant “in lieu, place, and stead of that entered in the district court”, the surety on the supersedeas bond on payment of the new judgment is not subrogated to the lien which the judgment plaintiff had under the old or first entered judgment.

Eland v Carter, 212-777; 237 NW 520; 77 ALR 448

11668 Levy—how made and indorsed.

Abuse of process.

Myers v Watson, 204-635; 215 NW 634

Contingent remainder. A contingent remainder—contingent because of the uncertainty of the person who will take the property—is not subject to attachment or execution levy and sale.

Saunders v Wilson, 207-526; 220 NW 344; 60 ALR 786

Immature crops. Immature crops are not leviable.

Rodgers v Oliver, 200-869; 205 NW 513

Crops raised during redemption period. The right of the owner of land after mortgage foreclosure to the possession of the property during the 12 months redemption period does not embrace the right to hold exempt from levy under the mortgage deficiency judgment the harvested grain which has been raised on the premises during said redemption period, and which constitutes the said owner's share as rent.

Starits v Avery, 204-401; 213 NW 769
See Goldstein v Mundon, 202-381; 210 NW 444

Rents and profits after foreclosure. The holder of a general deficiency judgment resulting from a foreclosure sale may not have a receiver appointed to take possession of the premises so sold and to apply the rents and profits thereof during the redemption period to the satisfaction of his deficiency judgment.

Howe v Briden, 201-179; 206 NW 814

Debtor's right of possession. A debtor's statutory “right of possession” of real estate during the year given for redemption from sale on execution is not, in and of itself, leviable.

Sayre v Vander Voort, 200-990; 205 NW 760; 42 ALR 880

Renounced and rejected gift.

Gottstein v Hedges, 210-272; 228 NW 93; 67 ALR 1218

Lehr v Switzer, 213-658; 239 NW 564

Renunciation of legacy. The act of a testamentary beneficiary in executing and making of record an unconditional and final renunciation of all benefits granted him under the will legally places such benefits beyond the reach of his creditors.

Berg v Shade, 203-1352; 214 NW 513
Funk v Grulke, 204-314; 213 NW 608

Right to renounce devise or bequest. The legal right of a beneficiary under a will to file an unconditional and final renunciation of all benefits granted him by the will, and thereby exclude his creditor from acquiring any right to the devised property, may be exercised even after a creditor of said beneficiary has levied upon, sold, and obtained a sheriff's deed to the land devised to said beneficiary, it appearing that the renouncing beneficiary had in no manner misled the creditor.

Lehr v Switzer, 213-658; 239 NW 564

Beneficiary's right to renounce benefits under will—effect on creditors. A beneficiary under a will has the right to renounce all benefits granted him under will, and creditors cannot complain of such renunciation; but such rule is limited to cases where no acceptance of provisions of will has been made by beneficiary.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Income from trust dependent on election or demand by cestui. A trust which provides that the income therefrom shall be paid to a named beneficiary "from time to time as she may elect during her lifetime", effectually places said income beyond the reach of the creditors of said beneficiary so long as said beneficiary makes no such election. Evidence held to show an election as to one monthly payment.

Ober v Dodge, 210-643; 231 NW 444

Sale—validity approved. Record relative to the sale under special execution of personal property reviewed and held to reveal no invalidating fact.

McFerrin v Grain Co., 220-1086; 264 NW 45

Irretrievable nullification of lien. The filing by an insolvent judgment defendant of his petition in bankruptcy, within four months following the entry of judgment, discharges the judgment (it not being based on fraud or willful injuries) and irretrievably nullifies an execution levy on property, whether the property be exempt or nonexempt. In other words, the judgment plaintiff may not thereafter proceed in equity in the state court and have his discharged judgment enforced against property set aside to the judgment defendant as exempt, even tho, were it not for the bankruptcy proceedings, plaintiff would be able to show that said property was not exempt from levy under plaintiff's particular judgment.

11669 Acts necessary.

Essential acts necessary. Principle reaffirmed that, to make a valid levy on personal property, the officer must do something which will amount to a change of possession, or which is equivalent to a claim of dominion over the property, coupled with the power to enforce it.

Whitaker v Tiedemann, 200-901; 205 NW 468

Sufficiency. A sufficient levy is made by the act of the officer in invoicing the property and leaving it in the possession of his agent.

First N. Bk. v Schram, 202-791; 211 NW 405

Insufficient levy. An officer makes no legal levy on a truck by simply looking it over, noting a levy on the execution, and allowing the owner to drive away with the truck under a promise to deliver it to the execution plaintiff at a future time.

City Fuel Co. v Roof. Co., 207-860; 223 NW 751

Wrongful levy—damages. One who seeks a money judgment for the value of property wrongfully levied on may not also recover for the loss of the use of the property.

Wertz v Hale, 202-305; 208 NW 859

Void sale—relief—venue. A proceeding wherein relief is sought on the theory that the petitioner bought property at a void judicial sale and received nothing for his purchase price must be brought in the court and in the proceedings out of which the execution arose.

State v Beaton, 205-1139; 217 NW 255

11670 Selection of property.

Life estate. When judgment creditor of a life tenant, by virtue of execution, levies upon a life estate and purchases the life estate on execution sale, he assumes all the duties of a life tenant and is obligated to pay delinquent taxes, or else lose the advantage of the life estate.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

11671 Lien on personalty.

Delayed return—intervening mortgage—priority. Even tho an officer physically performs all the acts which would constitute a valid levy on chattels if said acts were embodied, at the time of the acts, in a return indorsed on or attached to the execution, yet, where the officer delays making said return for six days after said acts were performed, and in the meantime a chattel mortgage on said chattels is executed and recorded, such mortgage will be superior in right to the belated (and alleged) levy.

Farmers Bk. v Mallicoat, 209-335; 228 NW 272

11672 Choses in action.

Unadjudicated cause of action. The statute which provides for execution levy on "things in action" authorizes a levy on an unadjudicated cause of action which the judgment defendant is prosecuting against the judgment plaintiff for breach of contract.

Brenton Bros. v Dorr, 213-725; 239 NW 808

Execution sale of promissory note — purchase by maker — effect. The maker of a promissory note and mortgage may, by himself or through others, validly purchase said note and mortgage at execution sale against the payee or holder thereof, and thereby completely discharge the same.

Buter v Slattery, 212-677; 237 NW 232

Execution—action to set aside—incompetent appraisers. Where a cause of action for alleged wrongful attachment was sold under execution after an appraisal of "no value", held that the incompetency of the appraisers to justly appraise such property would not be assumed because one was an attorney of somewhat limited experience and one was the editor of a newspaper devoted to the publication of court proceedings.

Francis v Todd, 219-672; 259 NW 249

Grossly inadequate price. Where a cause of action for alleged wrongful attachment was levied on under execution and, after an appraisal of "no value", was sold for substantially $100, held that the record on appeal did not reveal a sale at such a grossly inadequate price as to warrant the setting aside of the sale.

Francis v Todd, 219-672; 259 NW 249

Stay under inherent power of court. If the sale under execution of a cause of action is liable to be inequitable to, or oppressive on, the judgment defendant, e.g., where the cause of action may be such as to practically defy a just appraisal, it is suggested that relief may be had, in a proper case, by resorting to the inherent discretionary power of the court to order a stay.

Francis v Todd, 219-672; 259 NW 249

11674 Persons indebted may pay officer.

Payment to officer by garnishee. See under §12167, Vol I

11676 Corporation stock—debts—property in hands of third persons.

Corporate shares — essentials of levy. An attempted levy on corporate shares of stock is, as to a stranger with a prior interest in the property, a nullity (1) unless the president of the company or other officer designated by the statute is notified in writing that the stock has been levied on, and (2) unless the return on the writ states that such notice was given. (§12098, C., '31.)

Cramer v McDonald, 213-454; 239 NW 101

Appeal does not vacate or affect judgment. A judgment which releases and discharges an execution levy on corporate shares of stock is a self-executing judgment, and is in full force and effect from the date thereof to the time the judgment is reversed on appeal and the execution levy reinstated, and one who purchases said stock after the entry of said judgment and before the reversal thereof, (from the owners thereof as shown by the corporate stock books) will be protected in his ownership when he purchased in good faith, for value, and without knowledge of said litigation.

Hewitt v Cas. Co., 212-316; 232 NW 835

Failure to serve notice on defendant—effect. Failure of the officer making the levy to serve notice on judgment defendant of the levy on a chose in action furnishes ample grounds for quashing the writ and staying sale thereunder.

Brenton v Dorr, 213-725; 239 NW 808

11677 Garnishment.

Garnishment carries landlord's lien. A judgment creditor, by perfecting a garnishment of the tenant of the judgment debtor, legally steps into the shoes of the latter, armed with full power, if the tenant-garnishee's debt is for rent, to enforce, by appropriate action, the landlord's lien theretofore held by the judgment debtor.

Kinart v Churchill, 210-72; 230 NW 349

Unadjudicated cause of action. The statute (§11672, C., '31) which provides for execution levy on "things in action", authorizes a levy on an unadjudicated cause of action which the judgment defendant is prosecuting against the judgment plaintiff for breach of contract.

Brenton v Dorr, 213-725; 239 NW 808

Beneficiaries' interest in estate funds. Where a casualty company secured a judgment against beneficiaries under a will, and issued an execution under which the administrator with will annexed was attached as garnishee, attorneys for the beneficiaries could properly intervene in the garnishment proceedings to assert a claim to the garnished fund for legal services rendered to beneficiaries, in connection with the action by casualty company, which claim was based on written assignment of interests of beneficiaries under said will.

New Amsterdam Co. v Bookhart, 227-1150; 290 NW 61

11679 Return of garnishment—action docketed.

Proceedings under attachment applicable. The statute providing, where parties have been garnished under an execution, the officer shall return to the next term thereafter a copy of the execution, and that thereafter the proceedings shall conform to proceedings in garnishments under attachments, permits the claimants of liens upon or interests in money or property held by garnishment on execution to intervene and proceed under statute permitting intervention in attachment proceedings.

New Amsterdam Co. v Bookhart, 227-1150; 290 NW 61

Right to docket action. A judgment creditor after perfecting a garnishment of the tenant of the judgment debtor has a right to have an action docketed, without fee, for the purpose of enforcing the landlord's lien theretofore held by said judgment debtor, and such action may not be deemed a "creditor's bill" in the ordinary sense.

Kinart v Churchill, 210-72; 230 NW 349

Beneficiaries' interest in estate funds—attorney's lien—intervention. Where a casualty company secured a judgment against beneficiaries under a will, and issued an execution under which the administrator with will an-nexed was attached as garnishee, attorneys for the beneficiaries could properly intervene in the garnishment proceedings to assert a claim to the garnished fund for legal services rendered to beneficiaries, in connection with the action by casualty company, which claim was based on written assignment of interests of beneficiaries under said will.

New Amsterdam Co. v Bookhart, 227-1150; 290 NW 61

11680 Joint or partnership property.

Levies on partnership realty — procedure. Holding reaffirmed that this section applies solely to levies on personal property.

Bankers Tr. v Knee, 222-988; 270 NW 438

Jointly owned property. No enforceable lien can be created by levy on execution against property owned jointly, unless the property is inventoried and appraised as provided by statute with a view to determining the interest of the individual execution defendant.

Whitaker v Tiedemann, 200-901; 205 NW 468

Judgment lien on partner's interest—limitation. A judgment decreeing to a judgment-creditor a lien on the uncertain interest of the judgment-debtor in a private banking partnership in process of voluntary liquidation, must not exceed the interest which the said partner would be entitled to after final partnership accounting.

Anthony v Heiny, 215-1347; 244 NW 902

Unincorporated association. An association name may be regarded as designating the individuals which it represents, altho the members own no proportionate share of its property. Such members have joint use and enjoyment of the property, which right ceases upon termination of membership.

Lamm v Stoen, 226-622; 284 NW 465

11681 Lien—equitable proceeding—receiver.

Mortgage on rents—right to receiver to protect. A mortgagee of the rents and income of real estate is entitled to have a receiver appointed to protect his right to said rents and income when said right is jeopardized by the unauthorized acts of an impecunious mortgagor.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

11682 Mortgaged personal property—payment of mortgage.

Sale—validity approved. Record, relative to the sale under special execution of personal property, reviewed and held to reveal no invalidating fact.

McFerrin v Grain Co., 220-1086; 264 NW 45

11689 Sale—costs—surplus.

Sale—appraisal. A sale under execution will not be deemed invalidated because one of the appraisers did not inspect the property at the very time the appraisal was made—it appearing that he was familiar with the property and had shortly theretofore inspected it.

McFerrin v Grain Co., 220-1086; 264 NW 45

11695 Other remedies.

Order discharging levy under execution—attachment procedure inapplicable. The statutory provision for preserving a lien under attachment notwithstanding an order discharging the attachment by announcing an appeal and perfecting the same within two days (§12141) has no application to an order discharging a levy under execution.

Hewitt v Cas. Co., 212-316; 232 NW 835

11698 Duty to levy—notice of ownership or exemption.

- II INDEMNIFYING BOND
- III NOTICE OF OWNERSHIP
- IV EXEMPT PROPERTY

I INDEMNITY IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 12 ILR 426—Judgment against indemnitors and persons liable over

Indemnification of one of two sureties—effect. In an action against a public officer and his bondsmen to recover a shortage in public funds, it is quite immaterial, as far as plaintiff is concerned, that one of the sureties has received property from the public officer as partial indemnity.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Possession by execution defendant — presumption — instructions. In an action against a sheriff for the wrongful sale of plaintiff's machinery as the property of an execution defendant, no error results from the failure to instruct that the finding of the property on the premises of the execution defendant raised a presumption of ownership in the latter when the court specifically placed the burden on plaintiff to prove his ownership of said property. (No request for the instruction was made.)

Rosander v Knee, 222-1164; 271 NW 292

II INDEMNIFYING BOND

Notice of ownership—sufficiency. The sworn, written notice of ownership, which is given an officer who has levied on the property, is sufficient in form and contents if it actually enables the officer to secure an indemnifying bond.

Capital Loan Co. v Keeling, 219-969; 259 NW 194

III NOTICE OF OWNERSHIP

Defective notice of ownership—effect. The fact that the notice to an attaching officer of the interest of a chattel mortgagee in attached property is defective becomes of no consequence when it is made to appear that the mortgagee was in open and undisputed possession of the mortgaged chattels and was proceeding to foreclose the mortgage when the officer levied the attachment.

Smith Co. v Goldberg, 204-816; 215 NW 956

Chattel mortgagee—allowable procedure. A chattel mortgagee may, when the property is levied on by an attaching creditor of the mortgagor, serve notice of his interest, on the levying officer, and thereafter, if the property is not released, maintain an action for conversion against the attaching plaintiff and the levying officer.

Capital Loan Co. v Keeling, 219-969; 259 NW 194

Notice of ownership—sufficiency. Notice of ownership of machinery, wrongfully levied on, held quite sufficient and sustained by the evidence.

Rosander v Knee, 222-1164; 271 NW 292

IV EXEMPT PROPERTY

Tools employed as capital. Tools which comprise the equipment of an automobile machine shop, operated by the owner through his employed mechanics as a side line to the owner's principal business of an automobile salesman, are not exempt to the owner as a mechanic.

First N. Bk. v Larson, 213-468; 239 NW 134

11702 Indemnifying bond—sale and return.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 270

Replevin in lieu of action for conversion. A plaintiff, it is true, may not employ an action of replevin in order to recover for a conversion, but plaintiff may maintain a good-faith action in replevin against a levying officer when the officer had possession of the property when plaintiff served his notice of ownership and when the officer received an indemnifying bond, even tho the officer had parted with possession under an order of court before the replevin action was actually commenced.

Dvorak v Avery, 208-509; 225 NW 947

11703 Failure to give bond.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 270

11706 Stay of execution—exceptions.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 236

Inherent power of court to stay. The district court has inherent, discretionary power, in order to prevent injustice, to order a reasonable stay of execution, even without bond if it be made to appear that the judgment plaintiff will not be prejudiced by the order. But if said order is made because the chose or thing in action, which has been already levied on, has not been adjudicated, the order should be conditional on a reasonably prompt adjudication of said chose or thing in action.

Brenton v Dorr, 213-725; 239 NW 808

Stay bond—subsequent compromise and satisfaction—effect. The surety on a bond staying the collection of judgments is wholly released by the subsequent acts of the trustee in bankruptcy for the judgment defendant and the receiver for the insolvent judgment plaintiff entering into a legally authorized compromise settlement and satisfaction of the judgment, in order to avoid threatened and doubtful litigation growing out of the execution of said stay bond, and the subsequent insolvency of all the parties thereto.

State v Cas. Co., 213-211; 238 NW 709

Stay under inherent power of court. If the sale under execution of a cause of action is liable to be inequitable to, or oppressive on, the judgment defendant, e. g., where the cause of action may be such as to practically defy a just appraisalment, it is suggested that relief may be had, in a proper case, by resorting to the inherent discretionary power of the court to order a stay.

Francis v Todd, 219-672; 259 NW 249

11712 Execution against principal and sureties.

Extension to principal available to surety — abatement of action. An order of a court of bankruptcy granting to a maker of a negotiable promissory note, an extension of time in which to make payment, is not personal to said maker only, but inures, under USC, title 11, §204, to the benefit of another maker of said note who in fact signed said note as surety only, but without so indicating on the face of the note; and said latter maker, when sued alone by the original payee, may, for the purpose of abating the action, establish his suretyship and consequent secondary liability.

Benson v Alleman, 220-731; 263 NW 305

Permissible plea of counterclaim. In an action against the principal and surety on an attachment bond for damages consequent on the alleged wrongful issuance of the writ, the principal in said bond may plead a counterclaim which neither arises out of or is connected with the transaction on which plaintiff sues, nor in which the surety has any personal ownership (§11151, C., '35). A surety is not primarily liable on the bond and the principal who is primarily liable should be permitted to defeat recovery on the bond if he can so do.

Imes v Hamilton, 222-777; 269 NW 757

11717 Labor claims preferred.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 160; '30 AG Op 268

Construction — preferred labor claim act. This section does not embrace a seizure under execution at the instance of the labor claimant. In other words, the labor claimant may not base a preference on an execution seizure instigated by himself.

Heesel v Bank, 205-508; 218 NW 298

Labor claims—extent of priority. Under a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors, all claims for personal service rendered to the assignor within ninety days next preceding the assignment are payable in full irrespective of the amount (§12732, C., '31), and irrespective of the rights of a landlord who asserts his lien simply under his lease and not under a levy. This is true because the rights of parties to a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors are exclusively controlled by the chapter pertaining to such assignment, and, consequently, this section, limiting the priority of labor claims to $100 in case property is seized under proceeding not voluntary on the part of the creditor, does not apply.

In re Brady, 216-320; 249 NW 344

11722 Notice of sale.

Unnecessary recitals as to absence of right to redeem. A notice of sale of land under special foreclosure execution need not recite that the land will be sold without any right of redemption in a named defendant (because he has appealed), when the right of redemption from the sale exists in other party defendants.

Ebinger v Wahrer, 213-84; 238 NW 587

Unnecessary recital as to foreclosed rights of parties. A notice of sale of land under special foreclosure execution need not recite that the land will be sold free and clear from the "right, title, interest, liens, or claims" of party defendants.

Ebinger v Wahrer, 213-84; 238 NW 587

11727 Setting aside sale.

Venue in action to set aside sale.

Brownell v Bank, 201-781; 208 NW 210

Inadequacy of bid—estoppel to object. A debtor cannot have an execution sale set aside on the ground that the accepted bid was inadequate when such inadequacy was brought about by the conduct of the debtor, or his attorney, in reading to the assembled bidders at the time of sale a disquieting notice relative to the title which a successful bidder would receive.

Ebinger v Wahrer, 213-84; 238 NW 587

11728 Time and manner.

ANALYSIS

- I SALES IN GENERAL
- II MISTAKE
- III FRAUD
- IV INADEQUACY OF PRICE
- V OPENING OR VACATING SALE
- VI TITLE AND RIGHTS OF PURCHASER

I SALES IN GENERAL

Presumption of compliance with statute. A sheriff in making a sale under execution will be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, to have complied with the statutes governing such sales.

Ebinger v Wahrer, 213-84; 238 NW 587

Bid—cancellation. A bid at a sale in partition is effectually canceled by the act of the bidder in accepting a return of his required cash deposit, even tho such deposit is returned under the order of the court.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 204-724; 215 NW 946

Inconsistent remedies—irrevocable election—effect. A judgment creditor who, instead of satisfying his judgment (1) by enforcing his lien on personal property which his judgment debtor had assigned to him as security, satisfies said judgment, (2) by buying in the same property under a general execution levy and sale under his said judgment, must be deemed to have irrevocably waived all right under his said assignment as security, it appearing that after said levy but before the sale thereunder, the said judgment creditor learned that the judgment defendant had also assigned said property to another party.

Zimmerman v Horner, 223-149; 272 NW 148

II MISTAKE

Vacation—insufficient ground. A sale on execution will not be set aside solely on the plea of the purchaser that he made a mistake in the amount of his bid.

Aronson v Hoskins, 201-389; 207 NW 389

Right to withdraw bid because of mistake. A plaintiff in execution, who bids at the sale the full amount of the judgment and costs in the honest belief that he was bidding on two separate tracts of land, when only one tract was being offered, may, on the discovery of his mistake, withdraw his bid, and the levying officer has discretion, without the consent of the defendant in execution, to accede to said withdrawal and to treat the sale as a nullity, and to resell, if there be time enough, and if there be not time enough, to return the execution in accordance with said facts. And in such latter case plaintiff may order out a new execution.

Van Rheeney v Windell, 220-211; 262 NW 120

III FRAUD

Improper procedure. An execution sale will not, in a collateral proceeding, be set aside as invalid, even on a showing of inadequacy of price and fraud.

Coburn v Davis, 206-649; 221 NW 186

Cancellation of fraudulently acquired deed. A person who secretly buys up a certificate of execution sale and takes a sheriff's deed in his own name, in violation of his agreement with the judgment defendant to pay off the judgment in question and thereby satisfy his own debt to the judgment defendant, has no standing to contest an action by the latter for the cancellation of said deed.

Swearingen v Neff, 204-1167; 216 NW 621

IV INADEQUACY OF PRICE

Inadequacy of price. Record reviewed and held insufficient to show that a mortgage-secured note was sold on execution for such an inadequate amount as to equitably invalidate the sale.

Buter v Slattery, 212-677; 237 NW 232

Inadequacy of bid—effect. An execution sale of personal property will not be set aside simply because of the inadequacy of the accepted bid, when all inference of fraud is affirmatively disproven, and especially when the inadequate bid was owing to some extent to the fault of the execution defendant.

Coburn v Davis, 206-649; 221 NW 186

Inadequacy of bid—estoppel to object. A debtor cannot have an execution sale set aside on the ground that the accepted bid was inadequate when such inadequacy was brought about by the conduct of the debtor, or his attorney, in reading to the assembled bidders at the time of sale a disquieting notice relative to the title which a successful bidder would receive.

Ebinger v Wahrer, 213-84; 238 NW 587

Grossly inadequate price. Where a cause of action for alleged wrongful attachment was levied on under execution and, after an appraisal of "no value", was sold for substantially $100, held that the record on appeal did not reveal a sale at such a grossly inadequate price as to warrant the setting aside of the sale.

Francis v Todd, 219-672; 259 NW 249
See Adams v Morrison, 219-852; 259 NW 582

V OPENING OR VACATING SALE

Sale en masse—validity. The sale en masse of several tracts of land (after unsuccessfully offering the tracts separately) without adjourning the sale, furnishes no ground for setting aside the sale.

Adams v Morrison, 219-852; 259 NW 582

Sale en masse of lienable and nonlienable property. A sale en masse, under execution, of several tracts of land belonging to the execution defendant, along with other tracts in which said defendant had no interest, is illegal, and will be set aside in a proper action.

Adams v Morrison, 219-852; 259 NW 582

Setting aside. Where a cause of action for alleged wrongful attachment was levied on under execution and, after an appraisal of "no value", was sold for substantially $100, held that the record on appeal did not reveal a sale at such a grossly inadequate price as to warrant the setting aside of the sale.

Francis v Todd, 219-672; 259 NW 249
See Adams v Morrison, 219-852; 259 NW 582

Right to withdraw bid because of mistake. A plaintiff in execution, who bids at the sale the full amount of the judgment and costs in the honest belief that he is bidding on two separate tracts of land, when only one tract is being offered, may, on the discovery of his mistake, withdraw his bid, and the levying officer has discretion, without the consent of the defendant in execution, to accede to said withdrawal and to treat the sale as a nullity, and to resell, if there be time enough, and if there be not time enough, to return the execution in accordance with said facts. And in such latter case plaintiff may order out a new execution.

Van Rheen v Windell, 220-211; 262 NW 120

VI TITLE AND RIGHTS OF PURCHASER

Highest bid—confirmation. Highest bidder at public sale is not entitled as a matter of right to have the sale confirmed by the court, and where a higher substantial bid is made, even tho tardy, a large discretion lies with the court as to which bid shall be accepted.

Criswell v Criswell, 227-212; 288 NW 130

Status of highest bidder. In partition action where property was sold at public auction in regular manner for $4,600, the court did not abuse its discretion in amending referee's report and accepting a higher bid made subsequently to the public sale, the uniform holding in Iowa being that the high bidder at judicial sales, other than at sales under execution or by a trustee under a power, acquires no absolute or vested right, since the sale must be approved by the court and is considered merely a preferred bidder until such approval is given.

Criswell v Criswell, 227-212; 288 NW 130

11729 Sale postponed.

Inadequate bid—failure to continue sale. The sheriff in conducting a levy en masse on land under an execution abuses his discretion in not continuing the sale when the bid is grossly inadequate, e.g., about one-seventh of the value of the land. Deeds issued under such circumstances will be set aside.

McCann v McCann, 207-610; 223 NW 393

Sale en masse—validity. The sale en masse of several tracts of land (after unsuccessfully offering the tracts separately) without adjourning the sale furnishes no ground for setting aside the sale.

Adams v Morrison, 219-852; 259 NW 582

11730 Overplus.

Homestead and nonhomestead property—sale en masse—appropriation of surplus. A junior execution creditor who, at a senior mortgage foreclosure sale, buys in property which, in accordance with the mortgagor's agreement to that effect, is sold en masse, and regardless of the homestead character of part of the property, and who, in so buying, bids an amount in excess of the senior mortgage debt, on the express condition that said excess be indorsed on his junior execution (which is done), and who, with the full knowledge of the mortgagor, and without objection by him, complies with his bid, and after a year for redemption takes a deed is not thereafter liable to the mortgagor for the amount of said excess on the theory that such excess represents the mortgagor's homestead, on which the junior execution creditor admittedly had no lien.

Phoenix Co. v Vaught, 201-450; 205 NW 792

Homestead and nonhomestead property—sale en masse—apportionment of surplus. The to be conceded, arguendo, that, where mortgaged property is sold on foreclosure en masse, and regardless of the homestead character of part of the property, to a junior execution creditor on an indivisible bid in excess of the mortgage debt, the mortgagor would have a recoverable interest in the excess on the theory that it represented his homestead, on which the junior creditor had no lien, nevertheless the mortgagor would not be entitled to recover the entire excess, because equity would require the bid to be apportioned between the homestead and the nonhomestead property, in order that the homestead should bear its just proportion of the mortgage debt.

Phoenix Co. v Vaught, 201-450; 205 NW 792

11732 Plan of division of land.

Inadequate bid—failure to continue sale. The sheriff in conducting a levy en masse on land under an execution abuses his discretion in not continuing the sale when the bid is grossly inadequate, e. g., about one-seventh of the value of the land. Deeds issued under such circumstances will be set aside.

McCann v McCann, 207-610; 223 NW 393

Return—correcting inadvertent error. An inadvertent error in the return of a mortgage foreclosure sale may be corrected by an amendment by the sheriff after the land has gone to sheriff's deed, provided the judgment plaintiff and defendant are the only persons affected. In such case oral testimony showing the error is quite unnecessary. Especially is this true when complainant shows no injury consequent on such correcting amendment.

Equitable v Ryan, 213-603; 239 NW 695

Homestead—exhausting other property. A sheriff in selling a homestead forty, and a nonhomestead forty (under special mortgage-foreclosure execution) may very properly call for and receive, in turn, separate, substantial, and good faith bids, (1) on the nonhomestead forty, (2) on the homestead forty, and (3) on the two forties en masse, and, over the objections of the debtor, may accept the bid en masse and sell thereunder when said bid en masse is substantially in excess of the aggregate of the other two bids, tho insufficient to completely satisfy the execution.

Prudential v Westfall, 219-1119; 260 NW 344
American Bk. v Davis, 221-1183; 268 NW 9

11733 Failure of purchaser to pay—optional procedure.

Nonright to withdraw bid. The purchaser at a judicial sale in partition has no right arbitrarily to withdraw his bid prior to confirmation of the sale.

Reece v Cartwright, 209-706; 228 NW 641

Sale—right to withdraw bid because of mistake. A plaintiff in execution, who bids at the sale the full amount of the judgment and costs in the honest belief that he was bidding on two separate tracts of land, when only one tract was being offered, may, on the discovery of his mistake, withdraw his bid, and the levying officer has discretion, without the consent of the defendant in execution, to accede to said withdrawal and to treat the sale as a nullity, and to resell, if there be time enough, and if there be not time enough, to return the execution in accordance with said facts. And in such latter case plaintiff may order out a new execution.

11734 Sales vacated for lack of lien.

Nonright to have sale set aside. A judgment plaintiff in mortgage foreclosure who levies upon the mortgaged premises after the expiration of six months, and before the expiration of nine months from a sale under a foreclosure of a prior mortgage, and bids in the property, subject to the rights of the first mortgage, for the full amount of his judgment, may not, after his right to redeem has expired, have his sale set aside and canceled and his judgment reinstated, on the mistaken claim that his judgment was not a lien on the land at the time of the levy.

Home Bk. v Klise, 205-1103; 216 NW 109

Motion to set aside by stranger to proceeding. The owner of land which has been levied upon and sold under execution as the property of the judgment defendant on the theory that the judgment became a lien on the land before said owner acquired the land, may maintain a motion to set aside the sale on the ground that said judgment was not and never had been a lien on the land.

Dorsey v Bentzinger, 209-883; 226 NW 52

11736 Real estate of deceased judgment debtor.

Quasi-judgment subsequent to death of party. An order growing out of a proceeding instituted after the death of a party, and declaring a contingent liability against the estate of a deceased party, is not a lien on the real estate of which the deceased died seized.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

11740 Mutual judgments—set-off.

Set-off of judgments — effect on lien of attorney. The offsetting of the larger against the smaller of two mutual judgments wholly terminates an unadjudicated attorney's lien duly noticed in the judgment docket of the smaller judgment, when the indebtedness represented by the larger judgment antedates the indebtedness represented by the smaller judgment.

McIntosh v McIntosh, 211-750; 234 NW 234

Unliquidated demand set off against court costs. On a motion by an administrator to tax court costs against a defeated claimant in probate, the latter may not have a duly filed but unliquidated claim in his favor and against the estate adjudicated and set off against said costs and a judgment rendered against the estate for the excess.

In re Nairn, 215-920; 247 NW 220

11741 Personal property and leasehold interests—appraisal.

Sale — appraisal — noninvalidating circumstance. A sale under execution will not be deemed invalidated because one of the appraisers did not inspect the property at the very time the appraisal was made, it appearing that he was familiar with the property and had shortly theretofore inspected it.

McFerrin v Grain Co., 220-1086; 264 NW 45

Incompetent appraisers. Where a cause of action for alleged wrongful attachment was sold under execution after an appraisal of "no value", held that the incompetency of the appraisers to justly appraise such property would not be assumed because one was an attorney of somewhat limited experience and one was the editor of a newspaper devoted to the publication of court proceedings.

Francis v Todd, 219-672; 259 NW 249

11743 Deed or certificate.

Att. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 84

Life estate — interest acquired. Judgment creditor of a life tenant in purchasing a life estate at execution sale cannot acquire any greater interest than that held by the life tenant.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

Redemption by interloper — effect. The holder of a certificate of sale under execution may not question a timely redemption made by an interloper, in the name of the person who had the right to redeem; especially is this true when the person paying the redemption money had contracted for a deed, and when the certificate holder has once surrendered his certificate and accepted the redemption money.

Dixon Lbr. v Cole, 213-554; 239 NW 131

Equitable assignment—sheriff's certificate—homestead—redemption by judgment creditor. Where judgment creditor redeemed from foreclosure sale and secured an assignment of the sheriff's certificate from the mortgagee, and appellant-owners failed to make a statutory redemption, the judgment creditor was an equitable assignee of the sheriff's certificate entitled to deed, even assuming that he had no right to redeem because of the homestead character of the land, since it made no difference to appellant-owners whether the mortgagee or judgment creditor was the holder of the certificate.

Ackerman v Bank, 228- ; 291 NW 150

Expiration of redemption—effect on nonredeeming junior lienholder—sale certificate assignment. In a mortgage foreclosure action where a defendant junior lienholder fails to redeem, an assignment by the mortgagee of his foreclosure sale certificates to the defendant mortgagor after expiration of the period of redemption, vests in the mortgagor all of mortgagee's rights unburdened by the claims of any party to the suit.

Bates v Mullins, 223-1000; 274 NW 117

Transfer—expiration of redemption—mortgagor's acquisition of sale certificates—non-merger with fee. Where a mortgagor-defendant after the expiration of the right of redemption took by assignment the sale certificates from the mortgagee-plaintiff in foreclosure, no merger of the mortgage and the fee title occurred thereby to reinstate or give priority to junior liens, and mortgagor could sell to a third party free and clear of all claims of parties to the foreclosure.

Bates v Mullins, 223-1000; 274 NW 117

Sheriff's certificate passing as personalty. A sheriff's certificate under foreclosure proceedings, in which the period of redemption had not yet expired, was personal property and, upon the death of the certificate holder-owner, passed to the person inheriting the personal property under the will.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

Delinquent taxes—purchaser's duty to pay. When judgment creditor of a life tenant, by virtue of execution, levies upon a life estate and purchases the life estate on execution sale, he assumes all the duties of a life tenant and is obligated to pay delinquent taxes, or else lose the advantage of the life estate.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

11744 Deed.

Notice of homestead right. The holder of a sheriff's deed under execution sale necessarily takes the deed subject to the homestead rights of the execution defendant of which he had actual or constructive notice.

Frum v Kueny, 201-327; 207 NW 372

Deed carries unaccrued rents. Principle reaffirmed that unaccrued rents pass to the grantee in a sheriff's deed.

Wilson v Wilson, 220-878; 263 NW 830

Rent—implied obligation. Proof that the holder of a first mortgage on real estate was himself in occupancy of the premises, and continued such occupancy after the issuance of a sheriff's deed under a junior lien, generates the presumption that such occupancy was with the assent of the said occupant and the said deedholder, with consequent obligation of the occupant to pay reasonable rental to said deedholder until such time as a deed might be executed under foreclosure of the first mortgage.

Norman v Dougan, 201-923; 208 NW 366

Ownership of existing crops. On the issue whether the holder of a sheriff's deed was the owner of a crop of corn grown on the land, or whether the crop had matured, and therefore belonged to the tenant, the court will not take judicial notice that corn will mature on any particular date. The holding of the trial court on clearly competent and conflicting testimony is final.

Frum v Kueny, 201-327; 207 NW 372

Homestead—noncontiguous tracts. One-half of a double garage, situated on property used by the owner solely for rental purposes, may not be deemed an appurtenance of the said owner's homestead, composed of a nearby, separate, independent and wholly different tract, noncontiguous to the rental property. So held in an action involving the validity of a sheriff's deed based on a sale en masse—a sale without platting.

Van Law v Waud, 223-208; 272 NW 523

When deedholder deemed trustee. The original mortgagee in a third mortgage who fraudulently redeems in his own name from the foreclosure of the second mortgage and obtains a sheriff's deed, when in fact he had, long prior thereto, assigned said third mortgage, must be deemed to hold said deed as a trustee for his assignee, but he will not be deemed also to hold said deed as trustee for the first mortgagee who has suffered an adverse foreclosure of his mortgage because of the fraud of said redemptioner.

Lyster v Brown, 210-317; 228 NW 3

Judgment creditor's deed after mortgage foreclosure—insufficiency. A sheriff's deed issued under execution sale to a judgment creditor, after expiration of the judgment creditor's right of redemption as a defendant junior lienholder in a mortgage foreclosure, is a nullity and will not sustain an action to quiet title thereon.

Bates v Mullins, 223-1000; 274 NW 117

Staying deed under moratorium act—loss of right. A defendant in mortgage foreclosure may not, after execution sale, have an order under the emergency moratorium act (45 GA, Ch 179) staying the execution of sheriff's deed and extending the period for redemption, when, at the time of the application for the order, the defendant, on his own application, has been adjudged a bankrupt, and his equity of redemption in the land in question has been sold under an order issued out of the bankruptcy court.

Lincoln Bank v Brown, 219-630; 258 NW 770

Denying moratorium cancels restraining order on sheriff. An order restraining the sheriff from issuing a deed, pending a hearing on a moratorium application for extension of period for redemption, is automatically dissolved when the application is denied, and a deed issued is valid when a nunc pro tunc order places the moratorium denial order on record as of a date prior to the issuance of deed.

Lincoln Bk. v Brown, 224-1256; 278 NW 294

Execution sale of life estate—remainderman unaffected. Where a judgment creditor purchases a life estate at execution sale and then purchases tax certificates outstanding against such life estate, he is merely redeeming the taxes and cannot acquire any interest adverse to the remainderman.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

11747 Damages for injury to property.

Subsequent damages to land. A mortgagee who purchases the land at foreclosure sale for the full amount of his judgment is entitled, after he obtains the sheriff's deed, to the proceeds of gravel wrongfully removed from the premises after the sale, and before the issuance of the deed.

LeValley v Buckles, 206-550; 221 NW 202

Waste—recovery for, when mortgage satisfied. While a mortgagee of land may maintain an action to protect his security against waste, yet after he has foreclosed and bought in the property for the full amount of the debt, he cannot maintain an action for gravel and standing timber removed from the land during the time the mortgage was being foreclosed.

Kulp v Trustees, 217-310; 251 NW 703

Rights to unaccrued rents. The principle that one who receives a sheriff's deed is entitled to unaccrued rents under an outstanding lease, can have no application when the lease had terminated immediately prior to the issuance of said sheriff's deed.

Kerr v Horn, 211-1093; 232 NW 494

Deed carries unaccrued rents. Principle reaffirmed that unaccrued rents pass to the grantee in a sheriff's deed.

Wilson v Wilson, 220-878; 263 NW 830

11749 Death of holder of judgment.

Judgment creditor dead—when garnishment judgment void. Where, after the testate death of a judgment creditor, two of his eight beneficiaries secure an execution on the judgment, garnish the judgment debtor's interest in an estate, and take a judgment under the garnishment proceedings applying the proceeds to the original judgment, an order thereafter quashing the execution and the return thereon for nonconformity to statute also invalidates the garnishment judgment.

11752 Execution quashed.

Motion—when timely—dead judgment creditor. When innocent third parties are not involved, a motion to quash an execution for nonconformity to statutes, prescribing procedure after death of judgment creditor, is not too late, tho filed four months after the entry of a garnishment judgment to which only two of the eight heirs interested therein were parties. Such garnishment judgment is an incomplete adjudication and not sufficient to warrant payment by the judgment debtor to the two represented heirs.

Gohring v Koonce, 224-1186; 278 NW 283

Judgment creditor dead—when garnishment judgment void. Where, after the testate death of a judgment creditor, two of his eight beneficiaries secure an execution on the judgment, garnish the judgment debtor's interest in an estate, and take a judgment under the garnishment proceedings applying the proceeds to the original judgment, an order thereafter quashing the execution and the return thereon for nonconformity to statute also invalidates the garnishment judgment.

Gohring v Koonce, 224-1186; 278 NW 283

11753 Death of part of defendants.

Judgment claims against deceased. See under §§11957-11959

Judgment after death of defendant. Principle recognized that the court having taken a cause under advisement, and delayed decision until after the death of the defendant, may validly render judgment as of the date of the submission.

Chariton Bk. v Taylor, 213-1206; 240 NW 740

11754 Fee bill execution.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 193

Costs—remedies for collection—motion to retax—special proceeding. A motion by a city to retax unpaid clerk's costs against the plaintiff is a special proceeding.

Great West. Ins. v Saunders, 223-926; 274 NW 28

Limitation of actions—clerk's costs barred after five years. Clerk's costs inuring to the general fund when collected are no part of the judgment to which they are incident, but are only a debt, not necessarily arising out of a governmental function, which costs are such debts as become outlawed at the expiration of five years and may not then be retaxed and collected.

CHAPTER 499

EXEMPTIONS

11755 "Family" defined.

Persons entitled to exemptions. See under §11760

Discussion. See 23 ILR 215—Legal controls in family law

Family relation. Instructions which define a "family" as a "collection or collective body of persons who live under one roof and under one head or management" are all-sufficient.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

11756 Who deemed resident.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 270, 442

11757 Failure to claim exemption.

Estoppel. A debtor who makes a selection of exempt property in compliance with a proper demand therefor by the levying officer may not, after the officer has acted thereon, change such selection.

Wertz v Hale, 202-305; 208 NW 859

Necessity for proof. A chattel mortgagor who pleads that the mortgage covers exempt property and that the mortgage is void because his wife did not join therein, can be given no relief in the absence of proof of the facts upon which exemption can be based.

Citizens Bank v Scott, 217-584; 250 NW 626

11758 Absconding debtor.

Right of spouse to sell. The statutory provision which, in effect, provides that if a debtor "absconds", the property exempt to him shall be exempt to his wife and children, does not deprive the debtor, who is about to be sentenced to the penitentiary, of his legal right validly to sell, in good faith, his exempt property without the consent of his wife.

Brayman v Brayman, 215-1183; 247 NW 621

11759 Purchase money.

Payment by indorser revests original rights. The payee of a promissory note who indorses with recourse, necessarily continues to be a party to the note and if he pays the note when due because of the default of the maker, he thereby re-acquires his original rights under the note. It follows that if the note was originally given for the purchase price of property, the indorser may enforce said note against such property, and it is quite immaterial that he does so under a duly assigned judgment obtained by the indorsee against the maker.

Callaway v Hauser, 211-307; 233 NW 506

Purchase of car—wife not joining in chattel mortgage—payment by employer. Where defendant was unable to meet payments on car, and employer, under an agreement with defendant, made delinquent and future payments to the finance company and took an assignment of the note and chattel mortgage, the employer was entitled to the possession of the car as against contentions that intervenor (defendant's wife) did not join in the execution of the chattel mortgage, that the assignment to employer did not create any right or lien sufficient to sustain writ of replevin, and that the payments made by the employer constituted a satisfaction and payment and not a purchase of the chattel mortgage.

Simpson v McConnell, 228- ; 291 NW 862

Exempt property—debts enforceable against—unallowable procedure. After a court of bankruptcy has adjudged a debtor to be a bankrupt and after the court has set off a homestead to said debtor, a creditor holding a duly scheduled, unliquidated, and unsecured debt has no right to proceed in equity in the state court, and have his debt adjudicated and enforced as a lien on the said homestead because said debt antedates the acquisition of said homestead. And it is immaterial that the creditor, preceding his action in the state court, obtained an order staying the final discharge of the bankrupt.

Bracewell v Hughes, 214-241; 242 NW 66

11760 General exemptions.

Att. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 628

 Notice of ownership. See under §11698 (III)

I NATURE IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 12 ILR 167—Set-off or counterclaim against exemptions

Purely statutory. Exemptions being purely statutory, one may not base his claim to exemption on the doctrine of public policy, but must come within the statutory requirements.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

Binding on state and municipalities. Exemption statutes are binding on the state and on the municipalities thereof.

Ohio Cas. Co. v Galvin, 222-670; 269 NW 254; 108 ALR 1036

Signing chattel mortgage—effect. The mere signing of a chattel mortgage in a partnership name does not, in and of itself, estop the signer from denying that the mortgaged property is partnership property.

Citizens Bank v Scott, 217-584; 250 NW 626

II PERSONS ENTITLED

Applicability. Exemption statutes are applicable to residents and nonresidents unless the benefits thereof are confined to residents.

Stark v Stark, 203-1261; 213 NW 235

Owner of automobile not "other laborer". A person whose principal occupation is selling automobiles, and who operates for profit an automobile machine shop through employed mechanics, cannot be deemed an "other laborer" within the meaning of the statute rendering vehicles exempt in certain cases.

First N. Bk. v Larson, 213-468; 239 NW 134

Ownership of automobile. Evidence that the head of a family bought an automobile, paid for it, used it for the purpose of making a living, and has never parted with the possession, is sufficient to prove his ownership on the question of exemption.

Shepard v Findley, 204-107; 214 NW 676

Chattel mortgage—jury question. In replevin action by assignee of alleged chattel mortgage to recover possession of mortgaged property, whether mortgage had ever been executed or whether property was exempt to alleged mortgagor who claimed he was a married man, the head of a family, and that he made his living with such property, held to be jury question.

Brown v Heising, (NOR); 282 NW 345

Administrator's debt to decedent—exemptions. In proceeding on objection to administrator's final report, burden of proof was on the administrator to show why he should not be held accountable for full value of property inventoried by him, which inventory included his own debt to decedent. He was liable on such debt to the extent of his ability to pay at any time during administration, and everything above his statutory exemptions should have been so utilized, and there being no evidence in the record from which the extent of his nonexempt property or income could be ascertained, such question would be remanded to lower court for determination.

In re Windhorst, 227-808; 288 NW 892

III PROPERTY AND RIGHTS EXEMPT

Discussion. See 15 ILR 244—Radio

Radio receiving set. The statutory exemption from execution of "musical instruments" does not embrace a radio receiving set.

Dunbar v Spratt-Snyder, 208-490; 226 NW 22; 63 ALR 1016

Barber chairs as "tools". The exemption term "proper tools" of a mechanic presents always a question of fact. The term is not necessarily limited to the precise tools which the mechanic personally handles or ordinarily himself uses alone, nor does it embrace tools which are in effect capital owned and used for the purpose of profit. Held, on instant record, that more than one barber chair and a "gum" machine were not exempt, while other miscellaneous paraphernalia designed for carrying on the business and caring for customers were exempt, tho some of the separate articles were physically larger than necessary.

Hoyer v McBride, 202-1278; 211 NW 847

Automobile in addition to team and harness. A debtor, a resident of this state and the head of a family, may not hold exempt from execution an automobile in addition to a team and harness.

Wertz v Hale, 212-294; 234 NW 534

Rentals during redemption period. The rental of land for the statutory redemption period following sale on mortgage foreclosure is not exempt from attachment levy at the instance of creditors other than the foreclosing mortgagee.

Clouse v Reeves, 205-154; 217 NW 833

Tools of mechanic—conclusion affidavit. A debtor who seeks to have tools released from levy does not meet the burden of proof resting upon him by simply asserting the conclusion "that he is a mechanic" and "that said tools are exempt". The facts showing that he is, in fact, a mechanic and the facts showing consequent exemption must be stated.

First N. Bk. v Larson, 213-468; 239 NW 134

Tools employed as capital. Tools which comprise the equipment of an automobile machine shop, operated by the owner through his employed mechanics as a side line to the owner's principal business of an automobile salesman, are not exempt to the owner as a mechanic.

First N. Bk. v Larson, 213-468; 239 NW 134

IV TRANSFER OR INCUMBRANCE OF EXEMPT PROPERTY

Mortgage of exempt personal property. See under §10013

Proceeds of exempt property. Judgment may not be rendered against a garnishee for the proceeds of exempt personal property fraudulently mortgaged by the mortgagor-owner.

Northwestern Bk. v Muilenburg, 209-1223; 229 NW 813

Rent and advances—unrecorded contract lien. An unrecorded lease giving the landlord a lien on exempt property kept on the premises is not effective against a purchaser of the exempt property without notice of the written lease.

Sparks v Flesher, 217-1086; 252 NW 529

Rent and advances—purchaser of nonexempt property. Pigs farrowed on leased premises but removed from said premises before they were six months old, and not thereafter returned to said premises, are not subject to the landlord's lien for rent.

Sparks v Flesher, 217-1086; 252 NW 529

Bankruptcy—effect on existing liens. The discharge in bankruptcy of the mortgagor of exempt chattels does not discharge the lien of such mortgage.

Schwanz v Co-op. Co., 204-1273; 214 NW 491; 55 ALR 644

See McMains v Cunningham, 214-300; 233 NW 129; 242 NW 106

V PROTECTION AND ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHT

Federal jurisdiction in bankruptcy. The jurisdiction of the federal bankruptcy court over the exempt property of the bankrupt extends no further than to enter an order setting off such property to the bankrupt. Irrespective of the proceedings in such court, the right to the exempt property, as between the owner and a mortgagee thereof, must be determined in the state court.

V PROTECTION AND ENFORCEMENT OF RIGHT—concluded

Eckhardt v Hess, 200-1308; 206 NW 291
 Bracewell v Hughes, 214-241; 242 NW 66
 See Drees v Armstrong, 180-29; 161 NW 40

Wrongful levy—damages. One who seeks a money judgment for the value of property wrongfully levied on may not also recover for the loss of the use of the property.

Wertz v Hale, 202-305; 208 NW 859

Duty of guardian. The guardian of a mentally incompetent is under duty to plead the exemptions of the ward.

Appanoose Co. v Henke, 207-835; 223 NW 876

Presumption as to expenditures. Presumptively a guardian in making expenditures for the ward will use nonexempt funds rather than exempt funds.

Appanoose Co. v Henke, 207-835; 223 NW 876

Automobile—insufficient showing of exemption. An automobile is not shown to be exempt to the head of a family and a resident of this state on the naked assertion "that it is necessary for the owner to use an automobile in the earning of a livelihood".

First N. Bk. v Larson, 213-468; 239 NW 134

Rent and advances—burden of proof to show lien. A landlord seeking to enforce a landlord's lien on pigs must show that they were kept on the leased premises after they became six months old.

Sparks v Flesher, 217-1086; 252 NW 529

11760.1 Motor vehicle.

Bankruptcy — irretrievable nullification of lien. The filing by an insolvent judgment defendant of his petition in bankruptcy within four months following the entry of judgment, discharges the judgment (it not being based on fraud or willful injuries) and irretrievably nullifies an execution levy on property whether the property be exempt or nonexempt. In other words, the judgment plaintiff may not thereafter proceed in equity in the state court and have his discharged judgment enforced against property set aside to the judgment defendant as exempt, even tho, were it not for the bankruptcy proceedings, plaintiff would be able to show that said property was not exempt from levy under plaintiff's particular judgment.

McCains v Cunningham, 214-300; 233 NW 129

11761 Pension money.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 338, 340; '34 AG Op 699

Interest on pension money. The principal of pension money is exempt from seizure by creditors, but not the interest thereon when the amount of interest is determinable, notwithstanding the commingling of principal and interest.

Appanoose Co. v Henke, 207-835; 223 NW 876

Pension funds in hands of administrator. Original federal pension funds in the hands of an administrator are not exempt, under either state or federal statutes, from sequestration by the creditors of the pensioner. [Revised Statutes, §4747 (38 USC §54); 38 USC §96.]

Appanoose Co. v Carson, 210-801; 229 NW 152

Preference in payment. The fact that the subject matter of a time certificate of deposit in a bank is the depositor's pension money furnishes no legal basis for a preference in payment in settling up the affairs of the insolvent bank, even tho the federal and state statutes exempt pension money from seizure for the debts of the pensioner.

Andrew v Bank, 205-872; 219 NW 62

Compensation of guardian. Section 454, title 38, USC, providing that federal funds granted to a World War veteran "shall not be subject to the claims of creditors", does not prohibit the courts of this state from allowing the guardian of such veteran and from such funds, compensation not only for ordinary services but for extraordinary services rendered the ward,—the guardian not being a "creditor" within the meaning of said statute.

Hines v McKenzie, 216-1388; 250 NW 687

11763 Personal earnings.

"Head of family". See under §11760

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 546, 699; '36 AG Op 611

Purely statutory. Exemptions being purely statutory, one may not base his claim to exemption on the doctrine of public policy, but must come within the statutory requirements.

Briley v Board, 227-55; 287 NW 242

Fact findings of trial court. The findings of the trial court, on supporting testimony, as to the fact bearing on a question of exemptions is conclusive on the appellate court.

Staton v Vernon, 209-1123; 229 NW 763; 67 ALR 1200

Divorce — effect. A man loses his family headship, and consequently his right of exemption of personal earnings, by the rendition of a divorce decree against him which gives the wife absolute custody of all the minor children, permanent alimony, and continuing alimony through future payments.

Sparks v East, 202-718; 210 NW 969

Personal earnings represented by bank deposit. A joint bank deposit in the name of a husband and wife, which represents the earnings of the husband for his personal services at any time within ninety days preceding a levy, is exempt from an execution against both husband and wife, the wife being made a joint depositor as a matter of convenience in the payment of bills.

Staton v Vernon, 209-1123; 229 NW 763; 67 ALR 1200

Salary of public officer. The salary—the “personal earnings”—of a public officer is exempt from liability on a judgment obtained against him and his surety, by the public body, because of the failure of the officer to account for public funds coming into his hands. The court cannot, on the plea of public policy, rule into the statute an exception which the legislature has not seen fit to declare. So held where the surety having paid the judgment, and thereby subrogated to the rights of the county, sought reimbursement from the officer's salary.

Ohio Cas. Co. v Galvin, 222-670; 269 NW 254; 108 ALR 1036

Judgment as “debt”. A judgment, whether based on contract or tort, is a “debt” within the meaning of the exemption statutes.

Ohio Cas. Co. v Galvin, 222-670; 269 NW 254; 108 ALR 1036

11764 Exception under divorce decree.

Overruled case. The opinion in Schooley v Schooley, 184-835; 169 NW 56, is hereby overruled.

Malone v Moore, 212-58; 236 NW 100

11766 Workmen's compensation.

Exemption from debts of testator. Workmen's compensation, already collected as the result of a commutation settlement and in the hands of testator's attorney, is subject to the debts of the employee's estate.

CHAPTER 500

REDEMPTION

11773 When sale absolute.

Unity of ownership and right of redemption. Ownership of land and the right of redemption are inseparable.

Central Life v Spangler, 204-995; 216 NW 116

11774 Redemption by debtor.

ANALYSIS

- I REDEMPTION IN GENERAL
- II NATURE OF RIGHT
- III PERIOD OF REDEMPTION
- IV RIGHTS ATTENDING REDEMPTION

Moratorium on issuance of sheriff's deed—mortgage foreclosures. See under §12372 (VII)
Redemption in mortgage foreclosures. See under §12376 (IV)

I REDEMPTION IN GENERAL

Voluntary conveyance—insufficient showing. A conveyance by a husband to his wife will not be deemed voluntary solely on the ground that the conveyance was (1) by quitclaim, and (2) in consideration “of $1.00 and other valuable consideration”.

Tirrill v Miller, 206-426; 218 NW 303

Quieting title—judgment creditor's deed after mortgage foreclosure—insufficiency. A sheriff's deed issued under execution sale to a judgment creditor, after expiration of the judgment creditor's right of redemption as a defendant junior lienholder in a mortgage foreclosure, is a nullity and will not sustain an action to quiet title thereon.

Bates v Mullins, 223-1000; 274 NW 117

Nonallowable attorney fees. In a successful action to enforce plaintiff's right to redeem from execution sale, the fact that plaintiff secured a temporary injunction to protect his possession (and solely as a collateral remedy) furnishes no justification for the taxation against plaintiff of an attorney fee in favor of defendant, especially when the said injunction was ordered dissolved only in event plaintiff failed to exercise his right to redeem.

Werner v Hammill, 219-314; 257 NW 792

II NATURE OF RIGHT

Conclusiveness of adjudication—lost junior mechanic's lien—no revivor by judgment. A junior mechanic's lien extinguished by failure to redeem from the senior mechanic's lien foreclosure action is not revived by later reducing the junior mechanic's lien to judgment.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 276 NW 21

“Matured crops” defined. Crops are matured whenever they have reached such a stage of maturity that they no longer draw sustenance from the soil.

Goldstein v Mundon, 202-381; 210 NW 444

Receiver—unauthorized appointment. Upon a sale of land on execution under an ordinary judgment at law, the court has no authority to appoint a receiver to collect the rents and profits of the land during the period of redemption.

Anthony v Heiny, 215-1347; 244 NW 902

III PERIOD OF REDEMPTION

Time of redemption—extension prohibited. Neither the court nor the clerk may grant an extension of time in which to redeem and thereby amend the statute.

Paulsen v Hanson, (NOR); 216 NW 762

IV RIGHTS ATTENDING REDEMPTION

Amount for redemption—taxes—deficiency judgment. The amount necessary to redeem land after sheriff's sale properly included the amount of taxes paid by the purchaser, but did not include the amount of the deficiency judgment, notwithstanding an agreement that the deficiency judgment should be included in the amount.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

11775 Redemption prohibited.

Redemption in mortgage foreclosures. See under §12376 (IV)

Redemption — nonforfeiture of right. The right to redeem from an execution sale of a life interest in real estate under a judgment at law from which no appeal is taken, is not forfeited by the taking of an appeal from a decree in an equitable action which is auxiliary to and in aid of said judgment at law.

Anthony v Heiny, 215-1347; 244 NW 902

11776 Redemption by creditors.

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II TIME FOR REDEMPTION
- III REDEMPTION PERMITTED
- IV REDEMPTION DENIED

Redemption in mortgage foreclosures. See under §12376 (IV)

I IN GENERAL

Statutory rights cannot be enlarged. Redemption from sheriff's sale under execution must meet statutory requirements to be effectual, and statutory rights cannot be enlarged.

Paulsen v Hanson, (NOR); 216 NW 762

Redemption of homestead by judgment creditor. A judgment creditor who was made a defendant in a foreclosure action against appellant's 120-acre farm is a junior lienholder under the statute, not a stranger nor interloper, and is entitled to redeem from sheriff's sale, even tho the judgment was not a lien on the 40 acres constituting appellant's homestead.

Ackerman v Bank, 228- ; 291 NW 150

Homestead—sheriff's certificate—equitable assignment to judgment creditor. Where judgment creditor redeemed from foreclosure sale and secured an assignment of the sheriff's certificate from the mortgagee, and appellant-owners failed to make a statutory redemption, the judgment creditor was an equitable assignee of the sheriff's certificate entitled to deed, even assuming that he had no right to redeem because of the homestead character of the land, since it made no difference to appellant-owners whether the mortgagee or judgment creditor was the holder of the certificate.

Ackerman v Bank, 228- ; 291 NW 150

Redemption — who may question. Whether any person other than the execution-purchaser is in a position to complain of the right of redemption exercised by a junior creditor, quaere.

Quinn v Bank, 200-1384; 206 NW 271

Mechanic's lien debtor's right of redemption. A mechanic's lien debtor's right of redemption and right of possession are not subject to levy nor to junior mechanic's lien judgments obtained more than nine months after the sale, but within the year for redemption.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 275 NW 21

Failure of junior mortgagee to redeem. The holder of a junior mortgage on both homestead and nonhomestead property of a bankrupt, who is not satisfied out of the proceeds of a "free-from-lien" sale of the nonhomestead property by the trustee in bankruptcy, does not lose his lien on the homestead property by failing to redeem from the foreclosure of senior mortgages which are satisfied out of said proceeds, because the satisfaction of said senior mortgages left nothing from which redemption could be made.

First Bank v Kleih, 201-1298; 205 NW 843

Conclusiveness of adjudication—lost junior mechanic's lien—no revivor by judgment. A junior mechanic's lien extinguished by failure to redeem from the senior mechanic's lien foreclosure action is not revived by later reducing the junior mechanic's lien to judgment.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 275 NW 21

II TIME FOR REDEMPTION

Fatal delay. The act of a junior creditor in attempting to redeem after the expiration of nine months from the sale of land on execution is a nullity especially when his lien (assuming it to be such) was acquired after the expiration of said nine months.

Pierce v White, 204-1116; 216 NW 764

"Subject to liens of record." The expression "subject to liens of record", when embraced in the habendum clause of a deed of conveyance does not have the effect of continuing the lien of a judgment after the holder thereof had failed to exercise his right to redeem.

Paulsen v Jensen, 209-453; 228 NW 357

III REDEMPTION PERMITTED

Execution—sale—redemption—appeal by junior creditor—effect. The statutory provision that "no party" who has appealed from the district court shall be entitled to redeem (§11775, C., '24), does not embrace a junior creditor in a mortgage foreclosure. Especially is this true (1) when the appeal by the junior creditor was on the issue of priority between him and another junior creditor, and (2) when the appeal was perfected after the execution sale.

Quinn v Bank, 200-1384; 206 NW 271

IV REDEMPTION DENIED

Wife joining to release dower forfeits redemption right. Redemption being purely statutory, a wife who joins in executing a note and mortgage for the sole purpose of relinquishing her dower interest, and being decreed not a debtor, is therefore not within the prescribed class of redemptioners.

Fitch v Cornelison, 224-1252; 278 NW 309

Junior mechanic's lien—loss of right—lien debtor's grantee. A person holding both senior and junior mechanics' liens, who forecloses only the senior lien, loses his junior lien when he fails to reduce his junior lien to judgment and redeem under it within the statutory nine months. The mechanic's lien debtor's quitclaim grantee, who does redeem, takes the property free from said junior liens.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 275 NW 21

11777 Mechanic's lien before judgment.

Nonright of mechanic's-lien claimant. Principle recognized that a mechanic's-lien claimant whose claim has not gone to judgment may not redeem from a mortgage foreclosure.

Magnesite Products Co. v Bensmiller, 207-1303; 224 NW 514

Cochran v Ory, 222-772; 269 NW 764

Lost junior mechanic's lien—no revivor by judgment. A junior mechanic's lien extinguished by failure to redeem from the senior mechanic's lien foreclosure action is not revived by later reducing the junior mechanic's lien to judgment.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 275 NW 21

Junior mechanic's lien—loss of right—lien debtor's grantee. A person holding both senior and junior mechanics' liens, who forecloses only the senior lien, loses his junior lien when he fails to reduce his junior lien to judgment and redeem under it within the statutory nine months. The mechanic's lien debtor's quitclaim grantee, who does redeem, takes the property free from said junior liens.

11778 Probate creditor.

Redemption by probate creditor. The holder of a legally established claim in probate need not rely on his right to be paid from the funds—if sufficient—arising from the administration of the estate, but may become a redemptioner of the real estate of the decedent which has been sold on execution and which is yet subject to redemption by creditors.

Aronson v Hoskins, 201-389; 207 NW 389

Order to sell real estate in auxiliary citation proceedings. Where an administrator after a citation proceeding instituted by an assignee of a probate claim is directed to file an application to sell real estate to pay a claim on a promissory note, long recognized and partly paid from other funds by a former administrator, the granting of the order to sell real estate held by the heirs is erroneous when the heirs were not made parties to the citation application and when, in resistance to the application, the heirs show that no timely notice of hearing on the claim was served and no excuse given for such failure.

In re Jackson, 225-359; 280 NW 563

11779 Redemption by creditors from each other.

Who entitled—holder of barred lien. The owner of a judgment which has ceased to be a lien has no right to redeem from a sale under a mortgage lien prior to his judgment.

Johnson v Leese, 223-480; 273 NW 111

11782 Terms.

Redemption under mortgage foreclosure. See under §12376

Amount for redemption—taxes—deficiency judgment. The amount necessary to redeem land after sheriff's sale properly included the amount of taxes paid by the purchaser, but did not include the amount of the deficiency judgment, notwithstanding an agreement that the deficiency judgment should be included in the amount.

11784 By holder of title.

Voluntary, unnecessary payments not recoverable back. One who acquires title to premises theretofore sold under foreclosure for the nonpayment of installments of a mortgage debt, and who, with full knowledge of all relevant fact conditions, and as a purely voluntary act on his part, redeems from said foreclosure sale (evidently with the belief that by so doing he would acquire an absolutely unincumbered title), may not, after the mortgagee has established his legal right again to foreclose on said premises for the balance of the mortgage debt, recover back from the mortgagee items of taxes on the premises paid in effecting said redemption.

Gronstal v Van Druff, 219-1385; 261 NW 638

11789 Mode of redemption.

Statutory rights cannot be enlarged. Redemption from sheriff's sale under execution must meet statutory requirements to be effectual, and statutory rights cannot be enlarged.

Paulsen v Hanson, (NOR); 216 NW 762

Fatally defective affidavit. An attempt by a junior lienholder to redeem on an affidavit which materially and misleadingly misstates the amount of his lien claim is a nullity as to another junior lienholder who had no knowledge as to the actual amount of said first lien.

Green Bay Lbr. v Leitzen, 204-594; 215 NW 639

Redemption by creditor of one of two separate owners—apportionment of mortgage debt. Where separate owners of separate tracts of land jointly mortgage their lands for the debt of one of them, and on foreclosure, the sale is made en masse, and redemption is made by a judgment creditor of one of the owners, the other owner may, after paying to the clerk the entire amount necessary to effect redemption, maintain an equitable action to have the mortgage debt apportioned between the different tracts.

Hansen v Bank, 209-1352; 230 NW 415

Equitable assignment—sheriff's certificate—homestead—redemption by judgment creditor. Where judgment creditor redeemed from foreclosure sale and secured an assignment of the sheriff's certificate from the mortgagee, and appellant-owners failed to make a statutory redemption, the judgment creditor was an equitable assignee of the sheriff's certificate entitled to deed, even assuming that he had no right to redeem because of the homestead character of the land, since it made no difference to appellant-owners whether the mortgagee or judgment creditor was the holder of the certificate.

Ackerman v Bank, 228- ; 291 NW 150

11792 Contest determined.

Cancellation of sheriff's certificate—issuance of deed restrained. An action to enjoin issuance of sheriff's deed and to cancel certificate held properly brought in equity as against contention that this section furnished exclusive remedy.

Paulsen v Hanson, (NOR); 216 NW 762

Mortgage—amount for redemption—taxes—deficiency judgment. The amount necessary to redeem land after sheriff's sale properly included the amount of taxes paid by the purchaser, but did not include the amount of the deficiency judgment, notwithstanding an agreement that the deficiency judgment should be included in the amount.

New York Ins. v Breen, 227-738; 289 NW 16

11794 Redemption of part of property.

Unallowable partial redemption by heirs. After a mortgage which secures the debt of a husband, and which covers different tracts belonging to the husband and wife separately, is legally foreclosed, and sale made en masse (no other method being required by the debtors), and after junior lienholders on the husband's land have redeemed from the entire sale, the guardian of the wife's heirs may not redeem the lands which belonged to the wife by depositing with the clerk a proportional amount of the mortgage debt, costs, and expense on the theory that the mortgage was on an acreage basis.

Northwestern Ins. v Hansen, 205-789; 218 NW 502

11795 Interest of tenant in common.

Redemption by cotenant. One who, during the period for redemption from mortgage foreclosure and sale en masse, purchases, by quitclaim, the undivided interests in the land of a part of the personal judgment defendants, can redeem only by paying the full amount of the sheriff's certificate of purchase plus interest and costs, the remedy of such redemptioner being to enforce contribution from his cotenants.

Kupper v Schlegel, 207-1248; 224 NW 813

11796 Transfer of debtor's right.

Effect on prior judgment creditor. The grantee of premises which have been sold under mortgage foreclosure for the full amount of the judgment, even tho such grantee was a debtor in the foreclosure proceedings, may redeem, and will take the property unless redemption is made from him by a prior judgment creditor of the grantor.

Tirrill v Miller, 206-426; 218 NW 303

Failure of junior judgment holder to redeem—effect. A sale under general execution on a senior judgment frees the land in the hands of the grantee of the judgment debtor (even tho he bought "subject to liens of record") from the lien of a junior judgment, when the holder of such junior judgment fails to redeem within the nine months following the sale. The same rule would apply if the sales were under a special execution under mortgage foreclosure, and the junior judgment were obtained after the date of the foreclosure decree.

Paulsen v Jensen, 209-453; 228 NW 357

Junior mechanic's lien—loss of right—lien debtor's grantee. A person holding both senior and junior mechanics' liens, who forecloses only the senior lien, loses his junior lien when he fails to reduce his junior lien to judgment and redeem under it within the statutory nine months. The mechanic's lien debtor's quitclaim grantee, who does redeem, takes the property free from said junior liens.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 275 NW 21

Redemption by vendee's quitclaim grantee from real estate forfeiture. An assignee of mechanics' liens who, after foreclosing thereon, purchases the real estate contract covering part of the land subject to the mechanics' liens, and who then forfeits the real estate contract, but fails to file the statutory proof of service, cannot prevent a redemption from the foreclosure sale by a person taking a quitclaim deed from the vendee, such quitclaim owner having neither actual nor constructive knowledge of the claimed forfeiture.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 275 NW 21

Mechanic's lien debtor's right of redemption. A mechanic's lien debtor's right of redemption and right of possession are not subject to levy nor to junior mechanic's lien judgments obtained more than nine months after the sale, but within the year for redemption.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 275 NW 21

CHAPTER 501

PROTECTION OF ADVANCEMENTS

11797 Lienholder's advancements protected—affidavit filed.

Statute remedy not exclusive. The common-law right of a junior mortgagee, in order to protect his own lien, to pay the interest on a senior mortgage, and thereby to be subrogated by proper action to the rights of a senior mortgagee under said senior mortgage to the extent of said payment, has not been abrogated by the enactment of this chapter.

Miller Bk. v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550
Jones v Knutson, 212-268; 234 NW 548

Second mortgagee—subrogation. If a second mortgagee uses his own funds in discharging a first mortgage in order to save the property, he will be subrogated to the rights of said first mortgagee; on the other hand, if funds are obtained through a new mortgage, and used in the discharge of said first mortgage, then the new mortgagee will acquire said right of subrogation, and in either case, the homestead character of part of the mortgaged property is quite immaterial.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Protection and loss of right of subrogee. When the holder of a certificate of sale under a junior mortgage foreclosure discharges (in order to protect his interest) an interest payment falling due on the senior mortgage, by taking an assignment of said interest installment, he thereby impliedly acquires a pro tanto interest in said senior mortgage, and may foreclose it accordingly against a subsequent purchaser for value of the land; but when said certificate holder simply pays such interest installment, he wholly loses his claim as to a subsequent purchaser who purchased for value, and without notice that the interest installment had been paid by the junior certificate holder.

Miller Bk. v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550

Mortgagee suing for delinquent taxes omitted from foreclosure judgment—splitting actions. A mortgagee who had paid delinquent taxes on the mortgaged land, according to a provision of the mortgage that if taxes were not paid the mortgagee could pay them and obtain repayment, should have taken care of his claim for taxes in the foreclosure proceedings and was not permitted by this chapter to split his cause of action and bring an action for the taxes after the mortgagor had redeemed.

Monroe v Busick, 225-791; 281 NW 486

Redemption—tacking on delinquent taxes paid. The act of the assignor of a certificate of sale, subsequent to said assignment, in paying delinquent taxes on the premises and in causing said payment to be entered on the records in the clerk's office as a part of the amount necessary to redeem, inures to the benefit of said assignee, it appearing that said procedure by the assignor was for the purpose of protecting said assigned certificate.

Gronstal v Van Druff, 219-1385; 261 NW 638

Lost junior mechanic's lien—no revivor by judgment. A junior mechanic's lien extinguished by a failure to redeem from the senior mechanic's lien foreclosure action is not revived by later reducing the junior mechanic's lien to judgment.

11798 Redemption—payment of advances.

Voluntary, unnecessary payments not recoverable back. One who acquires title to premises theretofore sold under foreclosure for the nonpayment of installments of a mortgage debt, and who, with full knowledge of all relevant fact conditions, and as a purely voluntary act on his part, redeems from said foreclosure sale (evidently with the belief that by so doing he would acquire an absolutely unincumbered title), may not, after the mortgagee has established his legal right again to foreclose on said premises for the balance of the mortgage debt, recover back from the mortgagee items of taxes on the premises paid in effecting said redemption.

Gronstal v Van Druff, 219-1385; 261 NW 638

CHAPTER 502
PROCEEDINGS AUXILIARY TO EXECUTION

11800 Debtor examined.

Order nonappealable. An order in proceedings auxiliary to execution, for the appearance and examination of the execution defendant and his wife, is not appealable, even tho the wife is not an execution defendant.

Lehigh Co. v Gjellefald, 205-778; 218 NW 475

11802 By whom order granted.

Ex parte orders. An order for the appearance and examination of an execution defendant in proceedings auxiliary to execution is ex parte.

Lehigh Co. v Gjellefald, 205-778; 218 NW 475

11805 Disposition of property.

Discovery proceedings—extent of jurisdiction. In a discovery proceeding against a person suspected of taking wrongful possession of decedent's property, where a dispute arises as to ownership of property, neither the trial nor appellate court has authority to order delivery of the property to the executor or administrator unless it appears beyond controversy that the person examined has wrongful possession of the property.

I TRANSFERS AND TRANSACTIONS
ATTACKED

(a) IN GENERAL

Gifts — incompetency of donor — evidence. Evidence held insufficient to establish the mental incompetency of a donor.

Humphrey v Norwood, 213-912; 240 NW 232

Mental unsoundness — fraud — degree of proof. A deed of conveyance will be set aside on the ground of fraud or grantor's mental unsoundness, only on clear and convincing evidence in support of the charge. Evidence held insufficient.

Ellis v Allman, 217-483; 250 NW 172

Secret trust as badge of fraud. A secret trust for a grantor's benefit is a badge of fraud.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

Estoppel to dispute husband's title. A wife who permits her husband to take and record title to her lands, and for a long series of years to exercise the usual and customary indicia of ownership, is estopped to assert her title against the claims of the husband's creditors who have extended credit to him in reliance on his apparent title.

Farmers Bk. v Pugh, 204-580; 215 NW 652

Wife's deed for husband's debt—cancellation—consideration—estoppel. Wife who was not illiterate, and who deeded her land in payment of husband's notes, and who, by placing deed in husband's hands, clothed him with apparent authority to deliver the deed, thereby inducing creditors to surrender other land owned by the husband, is estopped from questioning the validity of the deed. The consideration to wife was advantage to husband and detriment to creditors.

Allen v Hume, 227-1224; 290 NW 687

Nonestoppel against wife. One who purchases a promissory note without any consultation whatever with the maker or the maker's wife, may not successfully assert that the wife is estopped to lay claim to lands which stood in the name of the husband-maker at the time of said purchase.

Jordan v Sharp, 204-11; 214 NW 572

Marriage settlements—validity. A marriage settlement, duly and in good faith executed, and confirmed by the subsequent marriage of the parties, is valid against the creditors of the husband when not grossly out of proportion to the husband's station and circumstances.

Benson v Burgess, 214-1220; 243 NW 188

Termination of property interest regardless of creditors. No present title to land passes under a contract to the effect (1) that a daughter, so long as she outlived her father and paid certain annual rentals and other charges, should have the possession and profits of named lands, (2) that title should remain in the father, but at the death of the father she should receive an absolute deed to the land, which deed was put in escrow under the control of the father during his lifetime, (3) that if she defaulted in said payments the contract could be forfeited on notice, and (4) that all her interest terminated instantly on her death prior to that of the father. It follows that upon the insolvency of the daughter and her default on said payments, the father and daughter may voluntarily cancel said contract regardless of the creditors of the daughter.

Tilton v Klingaman, 214-67; 239 NW 83

Fraudulent claim to rents. Record reviewed and held that the claim that rents had been transferred prior to proceedings for the appointment of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure was fraudulent.

First N. Bk. v Murtha, 212-415; 236 NW 433

Fraudulent rescission of contract. A rescission of a contract of purchase of real estate between a vendor and a bankrupt vendee is voidable by the trustee in bankruptcy when the rescission is made immediately preceding the bankruptcy proceedings, and when it is in fraud of the rights of the bankrupt's creditor or works a preference to the vendor-creditor.

Wilson v Holub, 202-549; 210 NW 593; 58 ALR 646

Mortgagee's knowledge of contemplated exchange—not innocent purchaser. Where mortgagee knew that mortgagor had contracted to exchange city property for farm at time mortgage covering city property was executed, mortgagee was not "innocent purchaser", and his mortgage was subject to rights of holder of contract to city property.

Bandemer v Benson, (NOR); 270 NW 353

Priority to diligent creditor. A creditor who obtains title to land by virtue of his judgment and a creditor's bill under which an existing mortgage was decreed to be fraudulent will not, on the theory of superior diligence, be given priority over a known prior attaching creditor who levied on the land regardless of the said mortgage and because he deemed the mortgage fraudulent, and who, prior to the decree under the creditor's bill, obtained the same result obtained under the creditor's bill, by securing from the fraudulent mortgagee, not only a verbal promise to release the mortgage, but an actual release of said mortgage.

Elson v Clayton, 200-935; 205 NW 745

Creditor's right to be diligent. The act of a creditor in doing no more than to be swift, and thereby securing his claim by a conveyance from his debtor, is not deemed fraudulent.

Van Pelt v Willemsen, 208-1326; 227 NW 110

Right of insolvent partnership to prefer creditor. A partnership engaged in the operation of a private bank may, in good faith, validly pledge promissory notes belonging to it, as collateral security for its outstanding obligations, even tho the partnership is insolvent.

Second N. Bk. v Millbrandt, 211-1299; 235 NW 577

Special assignment for particular creditors. An assignment by an insolvent debtor of all his property to a trustee for the purpose of securing and paying in a named order the claims of certain named existing bona fide creditors and providing for the payment of any balance to the assignor-debtor does not constitute a general assignment for the benefit of creditors (and invalid because of the preference) when executed pursuant to an agreement with said creditors, or when ratified by said creditors prior to the acquisition of rights by others; and this is true even tho there probably will be no balance to pay to the assignor-debtor.

Eicher v Baird, 204-188; 215 NW 236

Assignments for benefit of creditors—validity—no showing of knowledge and fraud participation. A debtor may prefer creditors; and an assignment to preferred creditors is not invalid because hindering, delaying, or defeating other creditors when there is no evidence that the preferred creditors knew of and participated in a fraud in making the assignment.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Action by trustee—fraudulent conveyance—sufficiency of evidence. Trustee in bankruptcy who introduces testimony given on examination in bankruptcy court is bound thereby, and evidence was insufficient to sustain trustee's claim that transfer of note by bankrupt to sister was in fraud of creditors.

Cooney v Graves, (NOR); 230 NW 407

(b) FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES GENERALLY

Actual or constructive fraud required. A court of equity is not warranted in setting aside an executed contract such as a warranty deed in the absence of actual or constructive fraud.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Deed from parent to child—constructive fraud—presumption. The doctrine of constructive fraud arises from the existence of a fiduciary relationship, and equity raises a presumption against the validity of a transaction where the superior party obtains a possible benefit, as in a case where a parent has become the dependent person in his relationship with a child, trusting his interests to the advice and guidance of the child, and has deeded his land to the child.

Stout v Vesely, 228- ; 290 NW 116

Evidence insufficient to show fraud. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a judgment refusing to set aside a conveyance of realty by devisee thereof to claimant against estate on ground of lack of consideration or fraud in making conveyance.

First N. Bank v Adams, (NOR); 266 NW 484

Evidence—insufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held wholly insufficient to support a conveyance.

Ransom v Lochmiller, 207-1315; 224 NW 469

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held sufficient to establish the fraudulent nature of a conveyance of real estate.

Porter v Wingert, 200-1371; 206 NW 295

Hansen v Richter, 208-179; 225 NW 361

Fraud—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence held to show that conveyance by judgment debtor was with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditor in collection of judgment.

Phillips v McIlrath, (NOR); 237 NW 212

Indebtedness—evidence. Evidence held to show that the grantor in an alleged fraudulent conveyance was indebted at the time of the execution of the conveyance.

Scovel v Pierce, 208-776; 226 NW 133

Evidence—insufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to show that transfer of a promissory note was fraudulent.

Hoyer v Jordan, 208-1256; 224 NW 574

Transfers reviewed—fraud—insufficiency. Series of transfers reviewed, and held insufficient, in and of themselves, to justify the imputation of fraud.

Citizens Bank v Hamilton, 209-626; 227 NW 112

Fraud—evidence—sufficiency. On the issue of receivership for the rents and profits of real estate under mortgage foreclosure, evidence held to establish the fraudulent nature of a lease of said premises.

Webber v King, 205-612; 218 NW 282

Quitclaim deed to avoid judgment against grantor—effect. Evidence reviewed, and held to show that a quitclaim deed to plaintiff was a mere subterfuge to avoid defendant's judgment against the grantor.

Rogers v Rutherford, 210-1313; 232 NW 720

Transfer without advantage or injury. A deed and trust agreement may not be deemed fraudulent when the good-faith beneficiaries thereunder acquire substantially no greater advantage than formerly possessed by them, and when creditors who are not parties thereto suffer no substantial diminution in their rights.

Central Shoe v Rashid, 203-1103; 212 NW 559

Nonfraudulent conveyance. A conveyance under which the grantor neither accomplishes anything for himself, nor prejudices his general creditors, cannot be deemed fraudulent or to constitute a preference under the federal bankruptcy act.

Hoynes v Iowa T. & L. Co., 219-278; 257 NW 799

Conveyance harmless to creditors. Equity will not set aside a conveyance, irrespective of its nature as regards fraud, when it appears (1) that a 40-acre tract was the homestead of the grantor, and (2) that the remainder of the land was, at the time of the conveyance, already mortgaged beyond its value.

Hagge v Gonder, 222-954; 270 NW 371

Mutual intent. An action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent necessitates proof of a mutual intent to defraud.

Newman v Callahan, 212-1003; 237 NW 514

Intent of grantor. A mortgage by an insolvent debtor on nonexempt real estate and on certain other real estate, on the condition that the court finds it not to constitute a homestead, does not reveal such a distinctive badge of fraud as to condemn the entire instrument as fraudulent, it not appearing that the mortgagees joined in any fraudulent intent (if any) of the mortgagor.

Corn Belt Bk. v Burnett, 203-271; 211 NW 217

Knowledge and intent of grantee. A bona fide creditor may in satisfaction of his debt, take a conveyance from his debtor at a fair valuation, even though such creditor knows that the debtor is otherwise financially involved, and that the conveyance will work a preference against other creditors. The all-essential requisite is that the creditor participates in no fraud.

Com. Bk. v McLaughlin, 203-1368; 214 NW 542

Good-faith grantee. Principle reaffirmed that a conveyance will be sustained in favor of a grantee who in good faith paid an adequate consideration, without participating in the fraudulent purpose, if any, of the grantor.

First N. Bk. v Currier, 218-1041; 256 NW 734

Knowledge and intent of grantee. A conveyance to a creditor in payment of a bona fide debt is unassailable so long as the creditor moves solely for his own protection.

Hewitt v Blaise, 202-1109; 211 NW 479

Acquiescence of creditor — evidence. Evidence held insufficient to show that a creditor had advised and acquiesced in the execution of the very deed which he was seeking to set aside.

Dolan v Newberry, 200-511; 202 NW 545; 205 NW 205

Personal property of other partner—liability. In equity action to subject junior partner's personal property to payment of judgment against senior partner, evidence held insufficient to show that former acted fraudulently or that he was estopped as against partner's senior judgment creditors to claim such personal property.

Creston Bk. v Wessels, (NOR); 232 NW 496

Material considerations. On a charge of fraud, the fact that the alleged defrauded party himself initiated the transaction and absolutely dictated the terms thereof is influential and persuasive that no fraud existed.

Crawford v Raible, 206-732; 221 NW 474

Creditor's nonparticipation in fraud. A creditor will be protected in taking a conveyance from his debtor when the creditor acts solely for his own protection and not to aid the debtor in defrauding other creditors.

Jordan v Sharp, 204-11; 214 NW 572

Badges of fraud—effect. The inference of fraud which arises from the taking of an absolute deed as security only, and the unreasonable withholding of such deed from record, must yield to proof that the grantee was actuated by no purpose except to protect himself on a bona fide indebtedness due him from the insolvent grantor.

Hanneman v Olson, 209-372; 222 NW 566

Concealment. An heir may not predicate fraud in the sale of his share in an estate on the claim that his stepmother, the purchaser, concealed from him the amount of the estate, when the inventory was on file, when the uncertainty attending the existence of debts and a possible will was equally known to all parties, and when the heir possessed the same opportunity to learn the full amount of the estate as was possessed by the stepmother.

Ward v Ward, 207-647; 223 NW 369

Open and unconcealed transaction — effect. The fact that a conveyance is made openly and without concealment, and with the aid of those who later question the conveyance, has material bearing on the issue of fraud.

McCloud v Bates, 220-252; 261 NW 766

Wife as nonparticipant in fraud.

Malcolm Bk. v Mehlin, 200-970; 205 NW 788

Wife as noncreditor. A husband who takes title to land paid for by the wife, without any agreement to repay the wife, may not later, by a conveyance to the wife, validly prefer the wife over his creditors on the theory that the wife was a creditor.

Farmers Bk. v Pugh, 204-580; 215 NW 652

Defeating creditors as admitted purpose—debt to wife unavailing. A transfer of property from husband to wife, admittedly made to defeat a judgment creditor, even where the husband owed the wife a debt of long standing but the wife never surrendered the note nor considered it paid, fails in the two essentials necessary to avoid the badge of fraud, to wit: (1) that there was a consideration, or (2) that the wife had no notice of the fraud.

Martin v Langfitt, 224-633; 276 NW 594

Wife's suretyship for husband. Where land owned jointly by husband and wife is mortgaged and the wife signs the note and mortgage on her separate interest to secure the loan to the husband who received and used the loan for his own personal debts and later conveyed his one-half interest in the land to his wife, then, in an action by the husband's trustee in bankruptcy to set aside the conveyance as in fraud of creditors, the wife, as surety, is entitled to have the husband's interest in the land applied first to the satisfaction of the mortgage debt in preference to the claims of the trustee in bankruptcy, and the conveyance accomplishing her subrogation thereto was valid.

Clindinin v Graham, 224-142; 275 NW 475

Estoppel to question transfer. Where a judgment creditor holds, or has converted to his own use, securities to the full amount of his judgment, he may not maintain an action to set aside a conveyance by the debtor even tho the conveyance was made with the mutual intent on the part of both the debtor and the grantee to defraud said judgment creditor.

Steckel v Million, 210-1139; 231 NW 387

Original parties — right of grantor. The principle that a grantor may not question a conveyance made by him for the purpose of placing his property beyond the reach of his creditors has no application when the conveyance was made because of an unfounded fear that an action might be brought, and when there is no showing that the grantor ever had a creditor.

Warner v Tullis, 206-680; 218 NW 575

Constructive trust—secret intent not to perform condition attending conveyance. A grantee of land who receives the conveyance on the oral condition that the land will be reconveyed to grantor on the happening of a named event, e. g., on return from a trip abroad, and who secretly intends not to comply with said condition, will be deemed in equity a trustee ex maleficio.

Carlson v Smith, 213-231; 236 NW 387; 80 ALR 186

I TRANSFERS AND TRANSACTIONS
ATTACKED—continued(b) FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES GENERALLY—
continued

Equitable estoppel—fraud as essential element. If there be no fraud, actual or constructive, in the execution and delivery of a deed of conveyance, there can be no estoppel against the grantee.

McCloud v Bates, 220-252; 261 NW 766

Insolvency — evidence — insufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to establish the insolvency of a partner in a private bank at the time of the execution of conveyances by him.

Anthony v Heiny, 215-1347; 244 NW 902

Overthrowing consideration or solvency of grantor. A judgment creditor does not prima facie establish the fraudulent character of a transfer by his judgment debtor when he fails to disprove the testimony of the grantee (called as a witness by himself) that there was a consideration, and also fails to establish the insolvency of the grantor or that the grantee participated in the fraud of the grantor.

Meredith v Schmidt, 205-841; 216 NW 634

Remedies of creditors — evidence — sufficiency. Proof (1) that the vendee of personal property did not record or file his bill of sale as required by law, (2) that there was no change of possession following the bill of sale, and (3) that the vendee actively aided the vendor in disposing of the property as the property of the vendor, furnishes ample justification for the holding that the rights of a good-faith and innocent attaching creditor of the vendor were superior to the asserted rights of the vendee.

Beno Co. v Perrin, 221-716; 266 NW 539

Burden of proof. A creditor, seeking to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance which recites a consideration which is apparently valid and substantial tho indefinite in amount, must carry his proof beyond showing that the grantor and grantee were husband and wife and that the grantor was insolvent when he delivered the conveyance. In other words, such proof does not cast upon grantee the burden, (1) to sustain the adequacy of the consideration, and (2) to negative bad faith in the transaction, or (3) to show that the grantor at the time retained sufficient other property to pay his creditors.

First N. Bk. v Currier, 218-1041; 256 NW 734

Burden of proof. In an action to set aside as fraudulent a deed of conveyance which recites an apparently valid, substantial consideration, tho indefinite in amount, the burden rests on plaintiff to impeach the deed.

Williams Bk. v Murphy, 219-839; 259 NW 467

Adverse party as witness—contradictory testimony—court's discretion. Where plaintiff calls adverse party as witness he vouches for his competency, credibility, and truthfulness; however, he is entitled to the benefit of any conflict, inconsistency, or incongruity which might be found in his testimony and is not precluded from calling other witnesses to contradict testimony or if the testimony of the adverse party appears to be inherently improbable or lacking in credit or made to appear so by the testimony of other witnesses, the court is not bound by the language in which the witnesses frame their answers, and may enter a decree setting aside a conveyance as fraudulent, notwithstanding that husband and wife, as adverse witnesses called by creditor, testified to sustain conveyances.

Goeb v Bush, 226-1224; 286 NW 492

Property conveyed — ownership not paramount title at issue. In an action between a creditor and a grantee to set aside a deed, ownership by the grantor being the question in issue rather than recovery by virtue of a superior title, an uncontradicted public record showing ownership in grantor at time the deeds were made is conclusive on that issue.

Bagley v Bates, 224-637; 276 NW 797

Insolvency—preferable proof. Principle reaffirmed that in an action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, the preferable proof of the grantor's insolvency at the time of the conveyance is the return nulla bona on a duly issued execution.

Williams Bk. v Murphy, 219-839; 259 NW 467

Discharge in bankruptcy. A decree to the effect that a conveyance was fraudulent as to a judgment plaintiff is immune from subsequent attack on the ground that, when the decree was rendered, the judgment in question had been discharged in bankruptcy, such fact not having been pleaded in said action.

Reining v Nevison, 203-995; 213 NW 609

Testator's contract to devise to son—will changed after loan relying thereon. A bank, after contracting with debtor's father to wait until father's death for payment of the son's debt from his share in father's estate, under existing devise in will, has a right to impress an equitable lien on the land when it discovers that the father had changed his will and was fraudulently, without consideration, transferring his property to others than the debtor-son.

Emerson Bk. v Cole, 225-281; 280 NW 515

Consideration—earnings of minor. The fact that a parent has received the earnings of his unemancipated minor child will not support a conveyance to the minor when the conveyance leaves the parent without property sufficient to pay his debts.

Scovel v Pierce, 208-776; 226 NW 133

Conveyance by father to son—indefinite evidence of debt to son. On application of a creditor bank, a father's conveyance of real property to his son a few days after title vested in the father by the law of descent was properly set aside when the evidence, reviewed by the supreme court, contains an abundance of vague and uncertain testimony by both father and son as to an alleged debt owed by the father to the son, but which evidence is wholly insufficient to establish such debt.

Brunskill v Wallace, 224-629; 276 NW 598

Withholding from record. The withholding of a mortgage from record until after the mortgagor became involved in litigation is not, in and of itself, sufficient to justify an inference of fraud, in the face of unquestioned evidence that the debt secured was genuine.

Citizens Bk. v Hamilton, 209-626; 227NW112

(c) CONFIDENTIAL OR FIDUCIARY RELATIONS

Fiduciary and confidential relations defined—synonymous use. Tho the terms are used synonymously, a fiduciary relation exists when one person is under a duty to act for the benefit of another as to matters within the scope of the relation, while a confidential relation may exist without a fiduciary relation and arises when one person has gained the confidence of another and purports to act or advise with the other's interest in mind.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Trust—what constitutes. A person is said to receive money in a fiduciary capacity when it does not belong to him or for his benefit, but is received for the benefit of another person to whom the receiver stands in a relation implying great confidence and trust on the one part and a high degree of good faith on the other.

Vertman v Drayton, 223-380; 272 NW 438

Undue influence—evidence. Influence, to be undue, within the meaning of the law, must be such as to substitute the will of the person exercising the influence for the will of the party upon whom the influence is brought to bear.

Arndt v Lapel, 214-594; 243 NW 605

Presumption—burden of proof. The law presumes that a deed of conveyance is fraudulent and void whenever it is made to appear that, when the deed was executed, the grantee occupied a position of trust and confidence as regards the grantor, or held a dominating and controlling influence over the grantor. It follows that the grantee must overthrow the presumption by a showing of the eminent fairness and legality of the transaction. Evidence held insufficient to overthrow the presumption.

McNeer v Beck, 205-196; 217 NW 825

Fraud—confidential relationship established—grantee's failure to sustain burden. In an action to set aside a deed from a deceased mother, 83 years of age and ill at the time of execution of the deed, to her daughter, who had handled her mother's business for a number of years, who had the deed prepared by an attorney, and who was the only person present when mother signed the deed, evidence held to establish that there was a confidential relationship between mother and daughter, thus placing burden of proof on daughter to show that deed was not procured by fraud and, such burden not having been met, the deed could not be sustained.

Tiernan v Brulport, 227-1152; 290 NW 53

Deed—fiduciary relation. When a deed of conveyance is attacked because of the mental incompetency of the grantor, or because of fraud and duress, the burden rests on the grantee to sustain the deed, provided a fiduciary relation existed between grantor and grantee when the deed was executed; otherwise the burden rests on plaintiff to invalidate the deed.

Ellis v Allman, 217-483; 250 NW 172

Pleading and proof. The rule that a party who claims under an instrument executed by one to whom he occupies a fiduciary relation must establish the absolute good faith of the transaction has no application in the absence of plea and proof of such relation.

Steenhoek v Schoonover Co., 205-1379; 219 NW 492

Fraud—cancellation—grounds. When a grantee in securing a deed to land acquires an unconscionable and inequitable advantage over the grantor, equity will infer fraud; likewise when the grantee obtains the deed through a promise which he intends to breach in the future.

Bruner v Myers, 212-308; 233 NW 505; 235 NW 726

Undue influence—abuse of confidence forfeits gain. Where a confidential relationship results in one gaining an influence over another, and the one gaining the influence abuses it to the disadvantage of the other, he will not be permitted to retain the fruits of his advantage. Held, no abuse of confidence.

Reeves v Lyon, 224-659; 277 NW 749

Bona fides of transaction—shifting burden. One asserting the existence of a fiduciary relationship must prove it by (1) a reposal of confidence and (2) positions of dominance and subservience, respectively, occupied by the repository and cestui, before he can shift the burden of proving the bona fides of the transaction to the other party.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Burden of proof. The mere showing that the grantor and grantee in a deed of conveyance are related by blood creates no presumption of confidential relationship such as to cast upon the grantee the burden to establish the bona fides of the transaction.

Osborn v Fry, 202-129; 209 NW 308

Absence of presumption. A fiduciary relationship will not be presumed. It must be established by direct evidence or by the established circumstances and condition of the parties.

O'Neil v Morrison, 211-416; 233 NW 708

Gifts—fiduciary relation—evidence. A fiduciary relationship is not established or even presumed from the naked fact that the parties are closely related by blood, or live and reside in the same house.

Humphrey v Norwood, 213-912; 240 NW 232

Family transactions scrutinized. Transactions between members of family are not fraudulent when made in good faith and for the purpose of securing a bona fide indebtedness, but are carefully scrutinized where interests of creditors are involved.

Citizens Bk. v Arndt, (NOR); 205 NW 466

Burden of proof—fiduciary relation. A fiduciary relationship is not predicable solely on family relationship.

Scott v Seabury, 220-655; 262 NW 804

Confidential or fiduciary relationship—presumption of fraud. A gift of a deed to one who stands in a confidential or fiduciary relationship to the donor raises a presumption of constructive fraud, and the burden is on the donee to make such showing of fact as to overcome the presumption.

Jensen v Phippen, 225-302; 280 NW 528

Conveyances between relatives. A conveyance between relatives on an actual, bona fide, and adequate consideration without intent on the part of either grantor or grantee to defraud anyone, is unassailable, even tho the transaction results in giving one creditor a preference over another.

Erusha v Wisnewski, 207-1187; 224 NW 517

Conveyance — consideration — proof—sufficiency. Evidence held to establish a contract between a father and son sufficient to support a conveyance.

Williams Bk. v Murphy, 219-839; 259 NW 467

Constructive fraud not inevitable from blood relationship. As to constructive fraud arising from the gift of real property to one standing in a confidential or fiduciary relationship to the grantor, the rule placing the burden of proof on the grantee, to show the bona fides of the transaction, is of necessity applied according to the peculiar circumstances of each particular case, and not necessarily applied because mere blood relationship exists.

Jensen v Phippen, 225-302; 280 NW 528

Family relationship — effect. Principle reaffirmed that on the issue whether a conveyance is fraudulent the family relationship of the parties is a circumstance to be considered.

Schulein Co. v Lipschutz, 208-1315; 227 NW 141

Fiduciary relation between husband and wife. A fiduciary relation within the meaning of the law is not established by a showing that the parties were husband and wife and that the wife frequently aided her husband in the transaction of his business,—it appearing that the husband was physically infirm.

Arndt v Lapel, 214-594; 243 NW 605

Fiduciary relation between husband and wife. Whether in an action by an heir to set aside a conveyance by a wife to her husband on the ground of undue influence the burden of disproof of said ground shifts to the defendant-husband, quaere.

Browne v Johnson, 218-498; 255 NW 862

Confidential relations. A conveyance by a husband to his wife, executed and received for the sole purpose of paying an actual bona fide debt of the husband to the wife, is beyond the reach of other creditors provided the property conveyed is not substantially in excess of the debt.

Johnson v Warrington, 213-1216; 240 NW 668

Madison v Phillips, 216-1399; 250 NW 598

Husband and wife—knowledge of fraud. Principle reaffirmed that a wife may validly take a conveyance from her husband for the sole purpose of securing payment of her claim, even tho she knows of the fraudulent purpose of her husband.

Harris v Carlson, 201-169; 205 NW 202

Securing wife against loss on homestead mortgage. A bona fide conveyance of personal property by a husband to his wife, to secure her from liability on a mortgage on her homestead, executed for the purpose of raising money to discharge a debt of the husband, is prior in right to subsequently rendered judgments against the husband and levies thereunder on the said conveyed property; but the security will be sustained only insofar as will make the wife whole.

Sherman v Linderson, 204-532; 215 NW 501

Nonimpeachable transfer to wife. A non-excessive conveyance by a husband to his wife in satisfaction of an actual and good-faith indebtedness owing by him to her is unimpeachable when in taking the conveyance the wife is motivated by the sole purpose of obtaining payment of her claim; and this is true irrespective of her knowledge of the financial condition of her husband.

Steffy v Schultz, 215-837; 246 NW 910

Between husband and wife. A wife who has a bona fide claim against her husband may, when actuated by the sole and good-faith purpose of obtaining payment, take a nonexcessive conveyance of property from her husband, even tho she knows at the time that the husband is financially embarrassed and that he intends by the conveyance to circumvent another of his creditors.

Clark v Clark, 209-1179; 229 NW 816

Johnson v Warrington, 213-1216; 240 NW 668

Preference to wife. A conveyance of land by a husband to his wife for the sole purpose on his part of repaying, and for the sole purpose on her part of receiving, that which he is actually owing to her, (no question of adequacy of consideration being raised) is unassailable, even tho such conveyance works a direct preference in favor of the wife; and especially is this true when the party attacking the conveyance fails to plead and prove that the conveyance left the husband insolvent.

Bartlett v Webber, 218-632; 252 NW 892

Husband and wife—allowable preference. A wife who permits her husband to use her personal funds in payment for land purchased by him in his own name, and so permits under circumstances fairly justifying the inference that said use was as a loan and not as a gift, may thereafter (some 20 years in present case) validly take from the husband a conveyance of said land at a fair valuation and for the sole and only purpose of satisfying said loan; and this is true tho such conveyance works a preference in her favor over other creditors of the husband. (No issue of estoppel in the case.)

Bates v Maiers, 223-183; 272 NW 444

Right of wife—burden of proof. A wife as a bona fide creditor of her husband has the legal right to take from her husband a conveyance of all his real and personal property provided she is actuated by the sole purpose of obtaining payment of her claim. And if the property received is out of proportion to the debt, the party questioning the conveyance has the burden to so show.

Farmers Bank v Ringgenberg, 218-86; 253 NW 826

Andrew v Martin, 218-19; 254 NW 67

Evidence—sufficiency. Record reviewed and held that a deed from a husband to his wife was executed for the sole purpose of repaying the wife a bona fide indebtedness, and was without any intent to defraud the husband's creditors.

Farmers Bk. v Skiles, 220-462; 261 NW 643

Actual fraud—evidence. Evidence held insufficient to establish actual fraud in the execution of a deed by a father to a son.

Williams Bk. v Murphy, 219-839; 259 NW 467

Confidential relations. A conveyance between parent and child generates no presumption of fraud, but necessarily invites critical examination of the attending circumstances. Circumstances indicative of fraud reviewed, and held to outweigh positive testimony tending to show good faith.

First N. Bk. v Hartsock, 202-603; 210 NW 919

Confidential relations—presumption of fraud. The act of a mother, in causing a certificate of deposit to be changed from her own name to that of a son who, it is made to appear, occupied a very close and confidential relation with his mother, is presumptively fraudulent, and will be sustained only on proof by the son that the transfer was free from all undue influence and fraud.

Roller v Roller, 201-1077; 203 NW 41

Confidential relations of parties. A conveyance of land by an insolvent mother to her daughter for a fair and adequate consideration in hand paid is unassailable when the daughter had no knowledge of her mother's financial condition, and did not participate in any fraudulent purpose or design of the mother.

Pike v Coon, 217-1068; 252 NW 888

Fiduciary relationship—required proof. In an action to set aside a trust agreement executed to a son and attorney by plaintiff, evidence held to support decree dismissing plaintiff's petition. The existence of a confidential relationship or facts giving rise thereto must be proved before doctrine of fiduciary relationship can be applied—the mere relationship of parent and child does not create fiduciary relationship.

Hatt v Hatt, (NOR); 265 NW 640

Confidential relations. A conveyance by an insolvent son to his parent for a valid and adequate consideration will not be decreed fraudulent if the parent acted with the one intent to protect himself on his claim against the son, even tho the son was known to be insolvent, and even tho the son was actuated by a fraudulent purpose.

Hogeboom v Milliman, 202-817; 211 NW 396

Undue influence—parent and child. There was sufficient evidence to warrant setting aside a deed on the ground of undue influence when it was made by an aged, eccentric father who was not in the best of health and had a limited business experience and had a kindly feeling toward all his children, the deed to the farm, which consisted of almost all his property, being made to a son, without the father having an independent adviser, seven days after the father had gone to live with the son who handled his business affairs and to whom he had at one time sold the farm, receiving a reconveyance when the payments were not kept up.

Stout v Vesely, 228- ; 290 NW 116

Undue influence — claim not supported by evidence. When two daughters had cared for their aged mother for about 20 years while the mother was in good health, neat in appearance, mentally alert, and did much reading in a foreign language altho she could not read English, and the daughters went with the mother to a lawyer's office, but remained outside while deeds were drawn up by which the mother granted property to them to be effective after her death, there was no showing of mental weakness, fraud, or undue influence upon which to base a decree setting aside the deeds.

Tedemandson v Morris, 227-774; 289 NW 1

Mother to son gift for mother's life support —donee's burden. The donee of a gift inter vivos, when holding a fiduciary relationship with the donor, has the burden to rebut the presumption that the transaction was fraudulent and voidable, but this does not apply to testamentary gifts. So held where a mother first willed, and later assigned, all her property to one son, in consideration of a contract that he should support her as long as she lived—the result being to disinherit another son.

Reed v Reed, 225-773; 281 NW 444

Right to prefer creditor. A debtor, in paying his valid, bona fide debts, may legally prefer his own child as a creditor over other creditors by conveying to the child property of a value substantially equal to the debt owing to the child.

Andrew v Nabholz, 219-75; 257 NW 587

Williams Bk. v Murphy, 219-839; 259 NW 467

Conveyance by father to son. Record reviewed at length and held that an ancient indebtedness of father to son was bona fide; that certain badges of fraud were satisfactorily negated, and that a conveyance by the father to the son in satisfaction of the indebtedness was a valid conveyance, even tho it worked a preference over other creditors.

Jeffries v Teale, 218-582; 255 NW 636

Gift to daughter — no fiduciary relation. Where a daughter, receiving a real estate gift from her parents, did not transact, nor advise concerning, her parents' business, nor dominate nor support them but, on the contrary, was more or less dependent upon them, such gift does not present a case of fiduciary or confidential relationship sufficient to nullify the deed on the ground of constructive fraud.

Jensen v Phippen, 225-302; 280 NW 528

Burden of proof—relationship. A creditor, seeking to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance from a father to son, is not aided, from the family relationship alone, by any presumption of fraud, but, on the contrary, must clearly, satisfactorily, and convincingly establish the fraudulent character of the conveyance by proof that more than preponderates over counterproof.

Royer v Erb, 219-705; 259 NW 584

Conveyance and assignment to stepson. Where an elderly but unusually self-willed woman executed a deed to her stepson during time in which she managed her own affairs, and relationship with grantee was only that which ordinarily exists between a mother and son, evidence in action to set aside the deed did not warrant finding that confidential relationship existed so as to raise presumption of fraud, but as to the assignment of a mortgage procured by this stepson after he came to live with her and had taken over management of her affairs, evidence justified finding that such relationship did exist.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Burden of proof. In an action to set aside a deed and an assignment of a mortgage executed by mother to stepson, burden was on plaintiff to establish the existence of confidential relationship raising presumption of fraud.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Evidence required to establish fraud. Principle reaffirmed that fraud, actual or constructive, duress, and undue influence must be established by clear, convincing and satisfactory evidence. Evidence held wholly insufficient to show such fraud in the assignment by a grandmother to a grandson of a note and mortgage.

Scott v Seabury, 220-655; 262 NW 804

Family transaction — careful scrutiny for fraud. A transaction wherein an insolvent mortgagor, also in arrears on interest and taxes, makes an assignment to his father-in-law of a lease on his mortgaged premises, being a family transaction, will be carefully scrutinized for fraud, but without specific evidence indicating an incorrect conclusion by the lower court, its decision validating such transaction will not be disturbed on appeal.

First JSL Bk. v Ver Steeg, 223-1165; 274 NW 883

Confidential relations—brothers and sisters. It will not be presumed that a confidential relation exists between parties on the simple showing that they are brothers and sisters.

Stonewall v Danielson, 204-1367; 217 NW 456

Impeaching recited consideration. The general recital in a deed of conveyance of a valuable consideration may be impeached, in an action to cancel the deed for fraud, by showing that no consideration passed, and by showing that the only relation of grantor and grantee was that of aunt and niece.

Guenther v Kurtz, 204-732; 216 NW 39

Gifts inter vivos—joint (?) bank account. Where during her lifetime decedent permitted defendant, for years her confidential advisor, to sign with her the bank's signature card applying to decedent's personal bank account, whereupon the bank added the defendant's name thereto as a joint bank account, but decedent kept her passbook and an interest in and control over the account, then under these circumstances, defendant, whose custody of the account during decedent's lifetime was never inconsistent with decedent's sole ownership, cannot after her death claim a gift of the deposit on the sole basis of the signature card.

Taylor v Grimes, 223-821; 273 NW 898

Burden of proof. No confidential relation may be said to exist between the officers of a mortgagee and the mortgagor because of the fact that on a few occasions the officers had aided the mortgagor in closing ordinary business transactions.

Charlson v Bank, 201-120; 206 NW 812

Confidential relation—insufficient showing. The ordinary relation between a banker and a depositor affords no basis for the claim of confidential relation.

Klatt v Bank, 206-252; 220 NW 318

Fiduciary relation—burden of proof. Plaintiff, in an action to avoid a deed of conveyance, makes a prima facie case of constructive fraud by proof that, when the deed was executed, the grantor, tho mentally competent, was, in the transaction of his business and in his conduct generally, under the absolute domination of the grantee. After such proof, the grantee must take on the burden of affirmatively showing the complete bona fides of the transaction. Proof that the deed left grantor practically penniless, that grantee paid no consideration and was aggressively active in obtaining the deed, accentuates the presumption of fraud instead of overcoming it.

Ennor v Hinsch, 219-1076; 260 NW 26

(d) CONSIDERATION IN GENERAL

Transfer by solvent grantor. A conveyance of property by a solvent grantor without consideration therefor may not be questioned by creditors. A like conveyance by an insolvent grantor is presumptively fraudulent, and may be set aside in the interest of creditors.

Chamberlain v Fay, 205-662; 216 NW 700

Bona fide consideration. A conveyance by an insolvent as security for a bona fide indebtedness which is largely in excess of the value of the property conveyed is unassailable.

Anthony v Heiny, 215-1347; 244 NW 902

Agreement as to dividends—want of consideration—effect. An agreement that one of two stockholders shall draw all dividends up to a certain time, unsupported by any consideration, is properly canceled in an action in equity.

Petersen v Heywood, 212-1174; 236 NW 63

Partially valid consideration. A fraud-participating grantee will not be permitted to hold the title because a portion of the consideration was bona fide.

Leach v Edgerton, 203-512; 211 NW 538

Consideration—value of homestead. On the issue whether a creditor took a conveyance of real property at a fair valuation, the value of that part of the land which represented the debtor's homestead must be excluded from the computation.

Com. Bank v McLaughlin, 203-1368; 214 NW 542

Value of property—conflicting evidence. In determining the value of property, the court is often compelled to fix an amount which is intermediate between values which are presumptively exaggerated and presumptively over-conservative.

Cover v Wyland, 205-915; 218 NW 915

Love and affection—when not consideration. A conveyance of property in consideration of love and affection is voluntary as against existing creditors.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

Future support—when not consideration. A conveyance of property in consideration of future support is voluntary as to existing creditors.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

Future promises—voluntary consideration negated by full performance. Conveyances in consideration of future support and medical bills are purely voidable and prima facie voidable as to existing creditors, except that, to the extent the consideration has been subsequently paid, the conveyance will be upheld.

Rummel v Zeigler, 225-613; 281 NW 159

Voluntary conveyance by insolvent. Evidence reviewed and held, a conveyance by an insolvent was voluntary—without consideration—and therefore void as to creditors.

Biddle v Worthington, 216-102; 248 NW 301

Banker's conveyance—balancing sister's false entries—no consideration. Transfers of land to the superintendent of banking as receiver of an insolvent bank by a banker in order to balance false entries made by sister, as cashier, on the bank books, are, in an action by trustee in bankruptcy to set the deeds aside, fraudulent as to creditors of the banker because lacking consideration, when it is shown that the banker's sister and not the banker himself was personally indebted to the bank on account of the false entries.

I TRANSFERS AND TRANSACTIONS ATTACKED—continued

Bagley v Bates, 224-637; 276 NW 797

Consideration—inadequacy at time of transfer. Inadequacy of consideration, such as will suffice to set aside a deed on the petition of an executor as in fraud of creditors, is inadequacy at the time of execution of the deed and not at some time subsequent thereto.

Rummel v Zeigler, 225-613; 281 NW 159

Inadequacy of price paid—presumption. Principle reaffirmed that a material disproportion between the price paid for, and the value of, property conveyed renders the conveyance constructively fraudulent as to existing creditors, with consequent burden on the grantee to overthrow the presumption by showing that the deed did not render the grantor-debtor insolvent.

Savings Bk. v Mehlin, 200-970; 205 NW 788

Adequate consideration. A conveyance in liquidation of the indebtedness of the grantor to the grantee, not fraudulent in fact, will not be set aside at the instance of other creditors if the consideration is adequate.

Wood Co. v Cordle, 201-593; 207 NW 576

Honest but inadequate consideration. Even tho a conveyance of land by an insolvent father to his son may not be actually fraudulent, yet it may be constructively fraudulent to the extent of the substantial difference between the actual value of the land and the lesser price paid therefor by the son; and in such case a court of equity may make such order as will protect both the grantee and the complaining creditor.

Williams Bk. v Murphy, 219-839; 259 NW 467

Inadequate consideration—constructive fraud. A creditor may be unable to prove actual fraud in a conveyance carrying substantially all of the debtor's property, but may be able to prove a constructive fraud in said conveyance, to wit: that the consideration paid by the grantee was substantially inadequate in view of the value of the property conveyed. And, on such proof, the power of a court of equity is so boundless as to justify the entry of most any decree which will equitably protect both the grantee in the conveyance, the complaining creditor, and all other parties involved.

McFarland v Johnston, 219-1108; 260 NW 32

Good-faith conveyance to daughter. Land conveyed to daughter and recorded eight months before judgment against father-grantor cannot be subjected to the payment of the judgment when the daughter paid a complete and good-faith consideration for the conveyance.

Witousek & Co. v Holt, (NOR); 224 NW 530

Conveyance by husband to wife—"$.00 and other valuable consideration"—sufficiency. A deed from husband to wife, executed two years prior to the rendition of a judgment against the husband and which deed recites a consideration of "$1.00 and other valuable consideration", is not fraudulent as against such judgment creditor of the grantor-husband, when it is shown that the "other consideration" consisted of $3,000 actually paid by the wife.

Donovan v White, 224-138; 275 NW 889

Wages of minor as consideration—burden of proof. A deed from a father to a son of a $2,500 town property for admittedly no consideration, and a deed of a $12,000, partly encumbered farm, in fulfillment of an alleged contract that the son (at the time of contract, an unemancipated, unmarried, 19-year-old minor) should, when married, be given said farm if he remained on, and helped in the management of said farm, are, irrespective of any actual fraud, constructively fraudulent as to a prior existing creditor of the grantor, because of want of, or grossly inadequate, consideration, it appearing that the son married within a month after attaining majority; and grantee must, in order to sustain said deeds, prove that grantor still continued to retain sufficient property to pay his said creditor.

Com. Bank v Balderston, 219-1250; 260 NW 728

Assignments—consideration—adequacy. Evidence reviewed relative to an assignment of a note and mortgage for $5,000, and held that a life annuity of $200 per year to the assignor was sufficiently adequate to prevent any imputation of fraud, actual or constructive.

Scott v Seabury, 220-655; 262 NW 804

Barred claim. A conveyance by a husband to his wife will not be set aside on the sole ground that the conveyance was in satisfaction of an indebtedness against which the statute of limitations had fully run.

Cover v Wyland, 205-915; 218 NW 915

Burden on wife. In a creditor's suit, a wife, in order to sustain a conveyance to herself from her husband, must show (1) that she parted with a fair and valuable consideration, and (2) that the husband, at the time of the conveyance, had sufficient property remaining to pay his debts.

Burgess v Stinson, 207-1; 222 NW 362

Continued solvency of grantor. The grantee in a conveyance which is voluntary and without consideration has the burden to show that the conveyance in question did not render the grantor insolvent.

Hansen v Richter, 208-179; 225 NW 361

Impeachment by inconsistencies. Positive testimony tending to show that a conveyance was on a supporting consideration and not a mere gift may be effectually overthrown by the circumstances and inconsistencies attending the transaction, and by the contradictions running through the testimony as a whole.

Lietz v Grieme, 212-1305; 236 NW 395

(e) VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCES

Voluntary conveyance. Principle reaffirmed that a voluntary conveyance is constructively fraudulent as to existing creditors of the grantor unless the grantee establishes the fact that the grantor at the time of the conveyance retained sufficient property to pay his creditors.

First N. Bk. v Currier, 218-1041; 256 NW 734

Transfer of exempt property. Evidence held to show that the property in question was, at the time of a conveyance by a husband to his wife, the homestead of the grantor and grantee, and therefore not fraudulent as to creditors.

Hansen v Richter, 208-179; 225 NW 361

Validity of deed—age of grantor—insufficient to invalidate deed. Before the supreme court will set aside a deed executed by a person advanced in years, there must be evidence that such individual was not capable of carrying on his business transactions, and that he did not understand the nature of the transaction into which he was entering.

Gilligan v Jones, 226-86; 283 NW 434

Voluntary conveyance—presumption. Principle reaffirmed that a voluntary conveyance by an insolvent is presumptively fraudulent.

Browning v Kanno, 202-465; 210 NW 596

Voluntary conveyance. A conveyance by a husband to his wife will not be deemed voluntary solely on the ground that the conveyance was (1) by quitclaim, and (2) in consideration "of $1.00 and other valuable consideration".

Tirrill v Miller, 206-426; 218 NW 303

Voluntary conveyance. Voluntary conveyances between husband and wife or between parent and child are presumptively fraudulent.

Dolan v Newberry, 200-511; 202 NW 545; 205 NW 205

Evans v Evans, 202-493; 210 NW 564

See Leach v Sorenson, 202-919; 211 NW 540

Shaffer v Zubrod, 202-1062; 208 NW 294

Forfeiture of policy for breach of condition subsequent—change of title. A conveyance, without consideration, by a husband to his wife of a stock of insured goods with the intent to place the goods beyond the reach of his apprehended creditors, without any actual change of possession or use taking place, followed later by a reconveyance, without consideration, by the wife to the husband, constitutes no such change in the interest or title of the insured as will void the policy, the wife never having had any financial interest in the property.

McVay v Ins. Co., 218-402; 252 NW 548

Voluntary conveyance. A voluntary conveyance by a parent to his child which leaves the parent without property sufficient to discharge his debts is constructively fraudulent.

Scovel v Pierce, 208-776; 226 NW 133

Collection of estate—setting aside deed—future care as consideration—burial expense.

In an action by administrator to set aside as voluntary a deed given by parents to their sons,—in return for certain agreed future care and expense,—burial and medical expenses furnished to parents as agreed were properly allowed by the court to the sons.

Rummel v Zeigler, 225-613; 281 NW 159

Knowledge of creditor. When land, which was part of an estate, was purchased by decedent's two sons, who paid no cash consideration, but occupied, paying rent to the other heirs, and who later, in order to protect the land from creditors, deeded it to two sisters who did not know of the indebtedness of the brothers, and when the sons made a contract with the sisters at the time of the deed protecting the other heirs in case the land were sold, a creditor of one of the brothers who knew of the rent payments and knew of the deed, but made no objection, could neither have it set aside as a fraudulent conveyance nor have the real estate subjected to a judgment against the debtor-brother, as the deed and contract conveyed the mere legal title to the sisters in trust for the heirs who were the persons entitled to the property.

Lakin v Eittreim, 227-882; 289 NW 433

Other sufficient property—debtor's burden to show. A debtor who voluntarily conveys his property to others has the burden to prove that he retained sufficient other property to pay his debts and failing this, it follows that the conveyance was fraudulent as to existing creditors.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

II RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES

Seeker for equity must do equity. The full equitable titleholder of land held under a dry trust who asks equity to invest him with the full legal title must do equity to the extent of reimbursing the trustee for good-faith expenditures made by him at the request or with the consent and acquiescence of the equitable titleholder in improving or preserving the property, even tho the trustee's claims for such expenditures are barred at law by the statute of limitations.

II RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES—continued

Warner v Tullis, 206-680; 218 NW 575

Consideration—who may not question. A plaintiff has no standing to attack a conveyance of land for want of consideration when, if he be successful, his only interest in the land would be that of an heir of the grantor.

O'Neil v Morrison, 211-416; 233 NW 708

Naked legal titleholder as real party in interest. A judgment plaintiff may maintain an action to set aside conveyances as fraudulent even tho he has transferred the equitable title to the judgment and holds only the legal title.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 217-636; 251 NW 51

Attorney's lien as assignment—effect. The duly perfected lien of an attorney with reference to the judgment obtained by him for his client, is tantamount to an assignment of an interest in the judgment. It follows that the attorney has such interest in the judgment as to support an intervention by him in an action by the judgment plaintiff to set aside certain conveyances as fraudulent.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 217-636; 251 NW 51

Different parties and issues. A decree in an action between a residuary legatee and the donee of a gift, on the issues whether the donor was mentally competent to make the gift and whether he had been fraudulently imposed upon, cannot act as an adjudication of an action by the executor of the donor to set aside said gift as a fraud on the creditors of the donor.

Chamberlain v Fay, 205-662; 216 NW 700

Good-faith grantee for value. A good-faith grantee for value will be protected irrespective of the fraudulent purpose and intent of the grantor; and this is true even tho such grantee will thereby be given a preference over other creditors.

Cherokee Auto v Stratton, 210-1236; 232 NW 646

Oelke v Howey, 210-1296; 232 NW 666

Protection of nonfraudulent grantee. A wife who takes a deed from her husband without actual intent to defraud will, even tho the deed is constructively fraudulent, be protected to the extent to which she has become surety for her husband and has secured such debt by mortgage on the land.

Burgess v Stinson, 207-1; 222 NW 362

Credit to grantee. The grantee in a deed of conveyance which is taken on an inadequate consideration and which is voluntary because it leaves the grantor insolvent, will, in an action to subject the land to the claim of an existing creditor of the grantor, be credited with the amount in good faith paid or assumed by the grantee for the land.

Peoples Bk. v Prettyman, 209-462; 227 NW 900

Assignment pending action—right of grantee. One who becomes an assignee of a real estate mortgage after the commencement of a successful action to set aside the mortgage as fraudulent (the action being legally lis pendens by proper index), and who, during the trial of said action, to which he had been made a party, redeems the land from tax sale, must be deemed a mere volunteer payer of taxes with no right to have the amount paid by him made a lien on the land.

Clarkson v McCoy, 215-1008; 247 NW 270

Disallowance of interest. Where, in setting aside a conveyance as fraudulent, the court decrees grantee a lien for the amount which grantor was owing grantee, the failure of the court to allow interest on the claim will not be disturbed on a record showing that grantee has been in possession of the land for some two years without accounting to grantor for the rents, and that the trial court deemed said rents as ample to meet the said interest,—said interest being a matter of future adjustment on any balance remaining after satisfying the creditor's claim.

Lietz v Grieme, 212-1305; 236 NW 395

Charging vendee with exempt property. When a conveyance of real estate from a husband to his wife is sustained as nonfraudulent to the extent of the balance which the husband was owing his wife for money loaned, the wife may not complain that in arriving at such balance the court charged her with the value of exempt property received by her from her husband.

Citizens Bk. v Frank, 212-707; 235 NW 30

Setting aside fraudulent deed on condition. The grantee in a deed of conveyance executed for the primary purpose of preserving a means of support for the aged grantor (tho not so expressed in the deed) has a right, in an equitable action by grantor's executor to set aside the deed, to demand that his reasonable claim for furnishing the grantor a very substantial support be first paid as a condition precedent to any judgment setting aside the deed; and this is true tho said deed would have been declared fraudulent and invalid had it been attacked by the grantor's existing creditors.

Meyers v Schmidt, 220-370; 261 NW 502

Nongood-faith purchaser. The purchaser of land from a fraudulent grantee will not be protected as a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration when, at the time notice of the fraud is brought home to him, the purchase-price note was in the hands of the grantor, and unpaid.

Reining v Nevison, 203-995; 213 NW 609

Equitable garnishment—school district as defendant. A judgment plaintiff may not, as a matter of public policy, maintain against a school district an equitable proceeding to subject to the satisfaction of the judgment funds in the hands of such corporation and belonging to the judgment defendant.

Julander v Reynolds, 206-1115; 221 NW 807

State as creditor. A plea of guilty in a criminal prosecution does not create the relation of creditor and debtor between the state and the accused, and a transfer of property by the accused after such plea and before the entry of judgment for a fine is not necessarily fraudulent as to the state.

State v Malecky, 202-307; 210 NW 121; 48 ALR 603

Stock—wrongful issuance—cancellation in equity. Where a corporation which succeeds to the business of two partners agrees to pay all outstanding debts of the partnership, a hypothecation of corporate stock of one of the two stockholders as security for one of said debts manifestly works no transfer of title to said stock to the corporation, and where the debt is paid with corporate funds, and the stock certificate is returned, the wrongful act of the nonhypothecating stockholder in causing a new stock certificate to be issued to himself for one-half of the returned shares will be canceled by proper action in equity.

Petersen v Heywood, 212-1174; 236 NW 63

Fraud—when wife not creditor. A wife does not, against her husband's creditors, become the creditor of her husband by turning over to him her money for indiscriminate use in the family, and without any agreement for or expectation of repayment.

Harris v Carlson, 201-169; 205 NW 202

Defense of noncreditorship. The grantee in a conveyance which is attacked as fraudulent by an alleged creditor of the grantor may, even tho the grantor makes no defense, defend on the ground that the attacking plaintiff is not in fact a creditor of the grantor.

Fidelity Co. v Bank, 218-1083; 255 NW 713

Nonabatement of action by receivership. The appointment of a receiver for an insolvent corporation does not abate an action by the corporation as a judgment creditor to set aside conveyances as fraudulent; and if the receiver be not substituted as plaintiff the action may be continued by the corporation in its corporate name.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 217-636; 251 NW 51

Discharge of bankrupt—effect on liens. The fact that a bankrupt has been discharged presents no legal obstacle to proceedings by the bankrupt's trustee to enforce lien against property which is legally a part of the bankrupt's estate but as to which the bankrupt wrongfully disclaims any interest.

Bogenrief v Law, 222-1303; 271 NW 229

Creditor—effect of securing lien. A creditor who has his claim decreed a lien on land voluntarily transferred by the debtor for an inadequate price, but subject to the amount actually paid by the transferee, does not, by operation of law, become personally obligated to pay said superior lien.

Bond v Bank, 201-1175; 207 NW 233

Fraudulent conveyances—participation with knowledge—loss of rights. A party knowing conveyances were executed to him for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding creditors, is not entitled to a lien or interest in the property involved to the extent of the value of services rendered before the debt was contracted.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

III REMEDIES OF CREDITORS AND PURCHASERS

Novation—substitution of new debtor—consent. A creditor may, by his actions and conduct, consent to the substitution of a new debtor.

Andrew v Trust Co., 219-1059; 258 NW 921

Decree appropriate to facts proven. A court of equity having acquired jurisdiction of an action praying the setting aside of a conveyance because actually fraudulent, may, on proof of constructive fraud only, enter a decree appropriate to said proven facts.

McFarland v Johnston, 219-1108; 260 NW 32

Equitable interest—procedure. Plaintiff does not, by alleging (under authority of §12106, C., '24), in an action on a promissory note, that the maker had fraudulently conveyed his property, and by praying for an attachment on the property and for a decree subjecting the property to plaintiff's judgment, thereby eliminate the necessity of equitable proceedings to reach said property.

Federal Bank v Geannoulis, 203-1385; 214 NW 576

Equitable ownership superior to judgment lien. An actual bona fide oral agreement between a debtor and creditor, that the debtor will convey to the creditor certain lands in part satisfaction of the debt, creates in the creditor an equitable ownership in the land (especially when the creditor is already in possession of the land) which is superior to the rights of a subsequent judgment creditor of said debtor. It follows that delay in making delivery of the deed, or even the loss of the deed, will not elevate the subsequent judgment creditor into priority.

III REMEDIES OF CREDITORS AND PURCHASERS—continued

Curing misjoinder. Any claim of misjoinder of causes of action as to defendants and of misjoinder of parties-defendant because plaintiff joined an action at law on bonds against one defendant with an action in equity to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance against the other defendant is effectually effaced by an order of court dismissing the action as to the equitably charged defendant.

Minnesota Co. v Hannan, 215-1060; 247 NW 536

Objection first presented on appeal. In equitable proceedings supplementary to execution, the defendant may not for the first time on appeal present the objection that plaintiff has not reduced his claim to judgment.

Ober v Dodge, 210-643; 231 NW 444

Defensive matter specially pleadable. The defense that a waiver by a wife of her asserted right to a divorce constitutes a valid consideration for a conveyance by the husband to the wife must be specially pleaded.

Burgess v Stinson, 207-1; 222 NW 362

Copy of petition. In an action to subject real estate to the lien of plaintiff's personal judgment, brought against the alleged fraudulent titleholder and alleged equitable owner only, no copy of the petition need be served on the defendants in order to acquire jurisdiction.

Lawrence v Stanton, 212-949; 237 NW 512

Judgment in rem as basis. A judgment in rem against the real estate of a nonresident furnishes sufficient basis for the institution of an action in the nature of a creditor's bill, to set aside a fraudulent transfer of the property and to subject the property to the payment of the judgment.

Porter v Wingert, 200-1371; 206 NW 295

Nonnecessity for judgment.

Mallow v Walker, 115-238; 88 NW 452

Necessity for judgment. The obtaining of a judgment against a purported partner in an insolvent private bank is a condition precedent to the right of the receiver to maintain a general equitable action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance by the partner.

Cooper v Erickson, 213-448; 239 NW 87

Attacking conveyance — conditions precedent. The surety on an administrator's bond who has paid the shortage of the administrator consequent on the failure of the private bank in which the estate funds were deposited, may not, in an action to recoup his loss, question a conveyance by a former partner in the bank when, prior to the giving of the bond, the said partner had, in good faith and to the full knowledge of the administrator, sold his interest in the bank at a time when the bank had ample funds with which to pay the administrator's deposit.

Fidelity Co. v Bank, 218-1083; 255 NW 713

Claims against estate—filing—right to enforce all security. The filing of a claim against the estate of the deceased debtor does not preclude claimant from maintaining an equitable action to enforce said claim against lands which were made liable for the payment of said claim by the probated will of another decedent.

Diagonal Bank v Nichols, 219-342; 258 NW 700

Diligent creditor. The creditor of an estate may not, for his own exclusive benefit, attack a fraudulent conveyance by the deceased.

Marion Bank v Smith, 205-203; 217 NW 857

Right to set aside conveyance—condition precedent—laches. The right of a creditor to have the fraudulent conveyance of his debtor judicially set aside is not a matured right—a matured cause of action—until the creditor obtains, by judgment or attachment, a lien on the land in question. But the creditor will not be permitted negligently to delay maturing his own cause of action, and if he does so delay for a period equal to or greater than the five years allowed by statute for bringing the action, he will be deemed guilty of such laches as will completely bar his action, even tho it be conceded that, strictly speaking, the action is not barred by the statute of limitation.

Bristow v Lange, 221-904; 266 NW 808

Creditor's right to follow assets. A creditor of a banking corporation may, for the satisfaction of his claim, follow the assets of the corporation into the hands of another like corporation which has bodily taken over said assets and paid therefor by an issuance of its corporate shares of stock, it appearing that the latter corporation had assumed the liabilities of the former but had become insolvent.

Andrew v Bank & Trust, 219-1059; 258 NW 921

Absence of equity—effect. A fraudulent conveyance will not be set aside at the instance of a judgment creditor of the grantor's when there is no equity in the property over and above the unquestioned incumbrances thereon.

Imholt v McCoy, 202-679; 210 NW 906

Hewitt v Blaise, 202-1109; 211 NW 479

Recovery of money against innocent third party. One who is defrauded of his money may not recover the same of an innocent third party to whom the wrongdoer paid it in discharge of the bona fide debt of the wrongdoer to the innocent third party.

Bogle v Bank, 203-203; 212 NW 547

Right of trustee in bankruptcy. A trustee in bankruptcy who, in the interest of creditors, seeks to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the bankrupt, is entitled to the same relief as the creditor would have been entitled to, had he (the creditor) prosecuted the action.

Crowley v Brower, 201-257; 207 NW 230

Persons entitled to assert invalidity. An actual, nonfraudulent, but voluntary conveyance may not be impeached by a trustee in bankruptcy on behalf of subsequent creditors.

Crowley v Brower, 201-257; 207 NW 230

Nonright to question. A creditor may not have his claim decreed a lien on the property of a nonfraudulent trust which the debtor has created for the specific purpose of discharging an obligation as to which the said creditor is a stranger; and especially is this true when the said creditor fails to show that he was injured by the creation of said trust.

Clark v Langerak, 205-748; 218 NW 280

Extent of relief. An actual, nonfraudulent, voluntary conveyance should not, in an action by a trustee in bankruptcy on behalf of creditors, be wholly set aside and the title vested in the trustee, but a lien on the land may be decreed in favor of antecedent creditors.

Crowley v Brower, 201-257; 207 NW 230

Form of judgment in favor of trustee. The decree in an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside a conveyance by the bankrupt as fraudulent, should be, not that the trustee is the owner in fee of the property, but that the trustee has a superior lien on the property to the amount of the lienable claims in his hands as such trustee.

Hoskins v Johnston, 205-1333; 219 NW 541

Preferences by bankrupt—right to set aside. The right of a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside a fraudulent conveyance is equal to the right of a creditor of the bankrupt to set aside the same conveyance, even tho said conveyance was not made within the four months preceding the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.

Scovel v Pierce, 208-776; 226 NW 133

Remedy of trustee. Where property sold under a conditional sale contract is replevined by the vendor and thereafter bankruptcy proceedings are instituted against the vendee, the trustee in bankruptcy necessarily has notice of the rights and claims of the vendor, and occupies, as to such property, the legal position of a judgment creditor holding an execution duly returned unsatisfied.

Internat. Harv. v Poduska, 211-892; 232 NW 67; 71 ALR 973

Action by trustee to set aside—conditions. A trustee in bankruptcy may not maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the bankrupt unless he pleads and proves that such setting aside is necessary in order to pay claims allowed in the bankruptcy proceedings.

Newman v Callahan, 212-1003; 237 NW 514

Action by trustee—conditions. A trustee in bankruptcy has no right to maintain an action to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance by the bankrupt unless he shows that claims have been filed and allowed against the bankrupt, and that he as trustee has not sufficient funds with which to pay said claims.

Shaw v Plaine, 218-622; 255 NW 686

Unallowable action for damages. A trustee in bankruptcy cannot maintain an action at law against a grantee of the bankrupt to recover the value of property collusively and fraudulently transferred to said grantee in fraud of creditors. This is not saying that the trustee may not treat the property in the hands of the grantee as belonging to the bankrupt, or impress a trust on the proceeds of the property if grantee has disposed of it.

Lambert v Reisman, 207-711; 223 NW 541

Unallowable action for damages. A judgment plaintiff may not maintain an action at law for damages against the fraudulent grantee of land transferred by the judgment defendant, even tho the action is aided by an allegation of conspiracy to defraud plaintiff.

McKay v Barrick, 207-1091; 224 NW 84

Unallowable counterclaim. A fraudulent grantee of land may not, in an action by the judgment creditor of the grantor to set aside the conveyance, set up a counterclaim for money due to said grantee from said judgment creditor.

Evans v Evans, 202-493; 210 NW 564

Nonright to personal judgment. A judgment creditor upon securing a decree setting aside a fraudulent conveyance of the judgment defendant's interest in a partnership to the co-partners, is not entitled to a personal judgment against the vendee-partners for the amount of his judgment.

Schulein Co. v Lipschutz, 208-1315; 227 NW 141

Evidence. Evidence held to establish a fraudulent transfer.

Dimick v Munsinger, 207-354; 223 NW 115
Northwest. Bank v Muilenburg, 209-1223; 229 NW 813

Schnurr v Miller, 211-439; 233 NW 699

Evidence. Evidence held insufficient to establish fraud in a conveyance.

Aldrich v Van Hemert, 205-460; 218 NW 311
Cass v Ney, 209-17; 227 NW 512
Holliday v Hepler, 213-488; 239 NW 66

Evidence — sufficiency. A showing that a conveyance by a debtor is attended by a mere suspicion of fraud is not sufficient foundation for decreeing its invalidity. Fraud must be clearly and satisfactorily established.

III REMEDIES OF CREDITORS AND PURCHASERS—continued

First N. Bk. v Lynch, 202-795; 211 NW 381

See County Bk. v Jacobson, 202-1263; 211 NW 864

Self-impeaching evidence. The court cannot say, at least ordinarily, that wholly undisputed testimony tending to show that a conveyance was bona fide and for value, is so self-impeaching as to establish the very contrary.

Hawkins v Vermeulen, 211-1279; 231 NW 361

Evidence—failure of grantor to list indebtedness. Failure of the grantor in a conveyance to list, in an application for credit, any of the indebtedness which he claims was satisfied by the conveyance, is material on the issue of fraud.

Oelke v Howey, 210-1296; 232 NW 666

Evidence—failure to return notes for assessment. Failure of the alleged grantee in a conveyance to list for assessment the notes which he claims were satisfied by the conveyance is material on the issue of fraud.

Oelke v Howey, 210-1296; 232 NW 666

Connected transactions. Fraudulent transactions may be so related, connected, and interwoven that evidence thereof may be admissible against a party who was not present at the transaction.

Leach v Edgerton, 203-512; 211 NW 538

Conclusiveness on party calling witness. A party who calls a witness is not necessarily bound by the testimony of the witness, yet, when a party calls a witness on the issue of fraud and want of consideration in a conveyance, he will not be permitted to say that affirmative, uncontradicted, and positive testimony of the witness that there was no fraud and that there was a consideration establishes the direct contrary.

Pike v Coon, 217-1068; 252 NW 888

Evidence—consideration—disregard of testimony. A creditor who is seeking to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance by his debtor may not have testimony disregarded which he alone has introduced, and which tends to show the consideration paid by the grantee for the deed.

Savings Bk. v Mehlin, 200-970; 205 NW 788

Pro tanto cancellation. An absolute deed for which grantee parts with no consideration except to assume a mortgage indebtedness on which he was theretofore liable, but only secondarily, as between himself and the grantor, will be deemed (no actual fraud being charged) constructively fraudulent to the extent that the value of the land exceeds the amount of the said assumed mortgage, unless grantee shows that the grantor had sufficient property remaining to pay his existing creditors.

Buell v Waite, 200-1021; 205 NW 974

Disparity in values. The disparity between $2,600, at which a creditor-grantee took conveyance of real estate and $3,200, the highest value placed on the property, is not so great as to constitute a badge of fraud.

Van Pelt v Willemsen, 208-1326; 227 NW 110

Husband and wife—decree warranted allocating property to wife and creditor. In an action in equity by creditor to set aside as fraudulent husband's conveyances to wife allegedly made in satisfaction of indebtedness, a decree is warranted which, in view of court's valuations of the realty, allocated enough property to wife to compensate her for what husband was able to recall of the alleged indebtedness, and allocated enough to judgment creditor to satisfy his claim.

Goeb v Bush, 226-1224; 286 NW 492

Wife's deed for husband's debt—cancellation—consideration—estoppel. Wife who was not illiterate, and who deeded her land in payment of husband's notes, and who, by placing deed in husband's hands, clothed him with apparent authority to deliver the deed, thereby inducing creditors to surrender other land owned by the husband, is estopped from questioning the validity of the deed. The consideration to wife was advantage to husband and detriment to creditors.

Allen v Hume, 227-1224; 290 NW 687

Fraud—personal liability of grantee. A wife who, knowing that her husband intended to hinder and delay his creditors, accepts a voluntary transfer of his bank deposit is, nevertheless, not personally liable to the husband's subsequently appointed trustee in bankruptcy for that part of the deposit which is expended prior to the bankruptcy proceedings in carrying on in good faith the ordinary business of the husband.

Barks v Kleyne, 201-308; 207 NW 329

Mortgage by grantee to undo wrong. A creditor, on learning that his debtor has made a voluntary conveyance of his property, may validly secure his debt by taking mortgage security from the voluntary grantee on the voluntarily conveyed property, and will thereby secure a right which will be superior to the right of another creditor who, subsequent to the mortgage, and after the death of the common debtor, reduces his claim to a so-called judgment against the latter, and, for his own exclusive benefit, levies on the voluntarily conveyed property.

Marion Co. Bk. v Smith, 205-203; 217 NW 857

Renounced gift. The act of the life beneficiary of an annual interest charge imposed as a gift in her favor in a deed (which the grantee duly accepted) in formally and unconditionally renouncing and rejecting all benefits "which do, may, or might accrue" to her under the deed, legally places such interest charge beyond the reach of a judgment creditor who duly institutes an equitable action to subject such interest charge to the satisfaction of his judgment, even tho the said renunciation was not made until long after the said action was duly instituted.

Gottstein v Hedges, 210-272; 228 NW 93; 67 ALR 1218

Fraudulent conveyances — termination of property interest regardless of creditors. No present title to land passes under a contract to the effect (1) that a daughter, so long as she outlived her father and paid certain annual rentals and other charges, should have the possession and profits of named lands, (2) that title should remain in the father, but at the death of the father she should receive an absolute deed to the land, which deed was put in escrow under the control of the father during his lifetime, (3) that if she defaulted in said payments the contract could be forfeited on notice, and (4) that all her interest terminated instantly on her death prior to that of the father. It follows that upon the insolvency of the daughter and her default on said payments, the father and daughter may voluntarily cancel said contract regardless of the creditors of the daughter.

Tilton v Klingaman, 214-67; 239 NW 83

Right to reach income from trust depending on cestui electing to take income.

Ober v Dodge, 210-643; 231 NW 444

Establishing trust to defeat heir's judgment creditors. When a will devised all of testatrix's property to daughter in trust, directing trustee to make a monthly payment to a third party and to transfer a one-fourth interest in the trust estate to each of two grandchildren when they reached a certain age, and providing that daughter should have a one-half interest in the estate during her life only in the event obligations to her judgment creditors were barred or satisfied, such will established a trust, and did not repose entire beneficial interest in daughter. Nor was the trust extinguished by a merger of daughter's legal and equitable estate so that property could be subjected to satisfaction of creditor's judgments, because in equity the doctrine of merger will not be invoked if it would frustrate the testatrix's expressed intentions or if there is some other reason for keeping the estates separate.

Freier v Longnecker, 227-366; 288 NW 444

Voluntary, nonfraudulent conveyance—valid against judgment on subsequent bank stock assessment. Altho wholly voluntary, a conveyance executed when the grantor has no fraudulent intent cannot be impeached by a subsequent creditor, so a real estate conveyance by a husband to his wife many years before he becomes a bank stockholder cannot be invalidated by the creditors of the bank, seeking to collect a judgment on stock liability assessment.

Bates v Kleve, 225-255; 280 NW 501

Withholding deed from record. Principle reaffirmed that the mere withholding of a deed from record is not in itself evidence of a fraudulent intent, and that a creditor who has not been misled thereby to his damage cannot complain.

Crowley v Brower, 201-257; 207 NW 230

Will—necessity to construe. In an equitable proceeding by a judgment creditor to discover property belonging to the judgment defendant, and to subject said property to the satisfaction of said judgment, the court, on the issue of ownership of property in question, may be called upon, and properly so, to construe a will—all necessary parties being before the court.

Bankers Tr. v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Debt-encumbered remainder—equitable action to enforce. Where a testator devises to his wife a life estate in all his property (which estate she accepts), with remainder to his children, a provision of the will to the specific effect that "all just debts and funeral expenses" of said wife shall be paid out of testator's estate, will enable the wife's creditor, who became such subsequent to the probating of the will and the closing of the estate, and shortly prior to the death of the wife some 30 years later, to maintain an action in equity to establish the debt, and to subject the lands, passing under the will and in the hands of remaindermen, to the satisfaction of said debt.

Diagonal Bank v Nichols, 219-342; 258 NW 700

Intestate property—void remainders. Property embraced in a void, testamentary limitation—void because prohibited by the statute relating to perpetuities—passes to those persons who would have been entitled thereto under the laws of intestacy had the limitation been omitted from the will, and a judgment creditor may, by proper procedure, have a lien established thereon.

11817 Lien created.

Lis pendens—service of action. The filing and due indexing of a petition to subject real estate to the lien of a personal judgment creates a lis pendens, and personal service of the action on the defendants outside the state establishes jurisdiction in rem, even tho the petition may be subject to a corrective motion or to a demurrer.

Lawrence v Stanton, 212-949; 237 NW 512

Remedies of creditors and purchasers—jurisdiction—copy of petition. In an action to subject real estate to the lien of plaintiff's personal judgment, brought against the alleged fraudulent titleholder and alleged equitable owner only, no copy of the petition need be served on the defendants in order to acquire jurisdiction.

Lawrence v Stanton, 212-949; 237 NW 512

Impressment of lien—special execution. A court of equity upon impressing a lien on property should order the issuance of a special execution for the sale of the property and the satisfaction of the lien.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Effect of securing lien. A creditor who has his claim decreed a lien on land voluntarily transferred by the debtor for an inadequate price, but subject to the amount actually paid by the transferee, does not, by operation of law, become personally obligated to pay said superior lien.

Bond v Bank, 201-1175; 207 NW 233

11818 Surrender of property enforced.

Scope of inquisitorial proceedings. In strictly inquisitorial proceedings for the discovery of assets belonging to an estate, the court has no authority to order property turned over to the administrator when the title to such property is in dispute; especially is this true when the property apparently does not belong to the estate.

In re Brown, 212-1295; 235 NW 754

Collection of estate—discovery of assets—scope of jurisdiction. In inquisitorial proceedings for the discovery of assets belonging to an estate, the jurisdiction of the court to continue said proceedings abruptly terminates at the point of time when it is actually made to appear that an actual controversy exists as to the title to the property in question.

Findley v Jordan, 222-46; 268 NW 515

Title dispute—extent of jurisdiction. In a discovery proceeding against a person suspected of taking wrongful possession of decedent's property, where a dispute arises as to ownership of property, neither the trial nor appellate court has authority to order delivery of the property to the executor or administrator unless it appears beyond controversy that the person examined has wrongful possession of the property.

In re Hoffman, 227-973; 289 NW 720

TITLE XXXII

PROBATE

CHAPTER 503

PROBATE COURT

11819 Probate court always open.

Findings by probate court—conclusiveness. Findings of fact by a probate court are conclusive on the appellate court when they are fairly supported by competent testimony.

In re Fish, 220-1247; 264 NW 123

Findings on objections to administrator's final report. Trial court's ruling on objection to administrator's final report will not be disturbed on appeal where fact question was involved, as supreme court would not substitute its judgment for that of court below.

In re Windhorst, 227-808; 288 NW 892

Lost will—probate jurisdiction exclusive. An action to establish a lost will must be brought in the probate court.

Coulter v Petersen, 218-512; 255 NW 684

Ordinary probate proceedings—noninterference by equity court. An equity court may not interfere with the ordinary proceedings of the probate court in exercising its exclusive jurisdiction in the administration of estates. Rule applies when probate court is following the manner and the method provided by the testator in the will.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Calendars—application for order. Applications for orders in probate which necessitate a construction of a will have no place on the jury calendar, and reversible error results from a refusal to exclude them from such calendar on application of an interested litigant.

In re Watters, 201-884; 208 NW 281

Proceedings — continuance and dismissal — legality. An order in partition proceedings brought by the guardian of an incompetent to the effect that the cause "be continued until certain conditions are complied with, which being fulfilled the cause should be dismissed", and a later order dismissing said cause on a recital that said "conditions" had been fulfilled, cannot be said to be illegal, and beyond the jurisdiction of the court, even tho such "conditions" were not recited in the record, it appearing that the court had personal knowledge of them.

Salomon v Newby, 210-1023; 228 NW 661

Supported findings in probate. Supported findings of fact by the probate court have the force and effect of a verdict of a jury and will not be reviewed on appeal.

In re Fish, 220-1328; 264 NW 542

11820 Time and place of hearings.

Notice—essential requirements. Notices of hearings in probate must specify both the time and the place of hearings, in order to confer jurisdiction.

In re Durham, 203-497; 211 NW 358

Orders—record entry necessary. Orders for publication of notice of hearings in probate must be entered of record.

In re Durham, 203-497; 211 NW 358

11822 Notice.

Collateral attack. The sufficiency of a notice of hearing on an application for the appointment of an administrator de bonis non (assuming the necessity for such notice) cannot be questioned in a purely collateral proceeding.

Giberson v Henness, 219-359; 258 NW 708

Appointment without notice. When a probate record simply shows that the final report of an executor "was approved and the executor discharged", the court may, at a later time, and irrespective of the statutory limitation of five years for appointment for original administration, appoint, without notice to interested parties, an administrator de bonis non for the purpose of selling property of the estate and purchasing and erecting a monument which was required by the will and not provided and erected by the original executor.

Giberson v Henness, 219-359; 258 NW 708

Guardianship — nonadversary proceedings. The good-faith compromise by a guardian with the approval of the court, of pending litigation to which the minor is a party, is not a proceeding adversary to the minor.

Kreamer v Wendel, 204-20; 214 NW 712

Proceedings by guardian—legality. The dismissal of an action in partition brought by the permanent guardian of an incompetent, in accordance with a compromise and settlement at which neither the guardian ad litem nor his attorney was present, may not be said to be illegal.

Salomon v Newby, 210-1023; 228 NW 661

11825 Extent of jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction in probate. See under §10763

Presumption. Orders in probate appointing guardians are presumptively regular.

Marsh v Hanna, 219-682; 259 NW 225

Exclusive jurisdiction to first court acquiring. The first court of competent jurisdiction to acquire jurisdiction of the subject matter of a case does so to the exclusion of all other courts of coordinate authority.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Probate application by trustee—transfer to equity. Where an application in probate brought by a trustee under a will asking for directions of the court was transferred to equity on a motion by intervenors after a hearing at which all parties appeared and submitted arguments but did not except to the transfer, it was proper for the court to refuse a motion made eight months later asking that the transfer be canceled, when it was not shown that the rights of the parties could be better determined in probate than in equity, the question being a matter of forum rather than of jurisdiction.

In re Proestler, 227-895; 289 NW 436

Nature of probate proceedings. Probate proceedings by which jurisdiction of a probate court is asserted over the estate of a decedent for the purpose of administering the same is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, and is one as to which all the world is charged with notice.

In re Harsh, 207-84; 218 NW 537

Jurisdiction when will exists. The appointment of an administrator cannot be said to be without jurisdiction even tho a will existed.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

Presumption—collateral attack. The record of the appointment in a county of an administrator and his due qualification is a finality and beyond collateral attack, even tho the record fails affirmatively to show the existence of the facts upon which the jurisdiction of the court depends; otherwise if the record affirmatively reveals want of jurisdiction.

Ferguson v Connell, 210-419; 230 NW 859

Ordinary probate proceedings—noninterference by equity court. An equity court may not interfere with the ordinary proceedings of the probate court in exercising its exclusive jurisdiction in the administration of estates. Rule applies when probate court is following the manner and the method provided by the testator in the will.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Jurisdiction of nonprobate court. An executor who institutes an authorized action against a corporate receiver in the county of the receiver's appointment, for relief against an alleged fraud-induced contract by the deceased, and (1) is met by a cross-petition for judgment on the said contract, and (2) has his action properly consolidated with divers other actions under duly joined issues which might have been the basis of an original action against the executor in said county of suit, may not thereupon, after dismissing his action, have all proceedings against himself and the estate dismissed on the claim that the probate court which appointed him had sole jurisdiction to render a judgment against him or against the estate.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Application to continue business—jurisdiction. A lessor who voluntarily appears in probate and successfully objects to the application of the lessee's administrators for an order authorizing the continuation of the business covered by the lease may not thereafter assert that the refusal of the court to grant the application was discretionary with the probate court, and that, in any view, the court had no jurisdiction to grant the application.

In re Grooms, 204-746; 216 NW 78

Unauthorized satisfaction of bequest. An order of the probate court authorizing an executor to discharge a cash bequest to a minor by transferring to the father of the minor as natural guardian a note and mortgage, belonging to the estate, is wholly void when said order is entered without the appearance of any guardian, regular or ad litem, for the minor.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-477; 255 NW 671

Title — nonpermissible adjudication. When, in the settlement of an estate in probate, a contract of sale of land belonging to the estate is fully consummated by payment and deed, and the sale and conveyance duly approved by the court as by contract required, the purchaser, who is an entire stranger to the estate except as such purchaser, is not a proper, necessary or permissible party to a proceeding in said probate court, instituted by the residuary legatee, to set aside the probate order approving said sale and conveyance.

Reason: The probate court cannot, even in piecemeal, adjudicate the validity of the title of said purchaser.

In re Doherty, 222-1352; 271 NW 609

Objections to executrix's report—real estate title issue not misjoinder—statewide jurisdiction. Where an executrix after resigning files her reports, objections thereto asking that she account for land in another county allegedly purchased with estate money does not misjoin equitable action to impose trust on or establish title in land, but is special probate proceeding to compel executrix to account for assets over which probate court has statutory jurisdiction coextensive with the state.

Finnerty v Shade, 210-1338; 228 NW 886
Reidy v Railway, 216-415; 249 NW 347

Presumption—collateral attack. The record of the appointment in a county of an administrator and his due qualification is a finality and beyond collateral attack, even tho the record fails affirmatively to show the existence of the facts upon which the jurisdiction of the court depends; otherwise if the record affirmatively reveals want of jurisdiction.

Ferguson v Connell, 210-419; 230 NW 859
Reidy v Railway, 216-415; 249 NW 347

Allowance and payment of claims—clerk's or executor's allowance not final adjudication. The allowance of a claim against an estate by the clerk of the probate court does not result in a final adjudication at the end of a year under a statute permitting objections to the clerk's orders to be filed within a year, as there is no adjudication of a claim against an estate allowed by the clerk or an executor or administrator until it has been passed upon by the court.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 641

11834 Clerk's actions reviewed.

Administrator—appointment by clerk—review—burden of proof. When the appointment of an administrator by the clerk is attacked by motion under the statute, the appointee has the burden to sustain his appointment.

Moreland v Lowry, 213-1096; 241 NW 31

Attacking allowance of probate claim—assignment of error necessary. An application by an executor to set aside the clerk's allowance of a claim against an estate is a law case requiring assignments of error upon appeal.

In re Baker, 226-690; 285 NW 143

Clerk's or executor's allowance not final adjudication. The allowance of a claim against an estate by the clerk of the probate court does not result in a final adjudication at the end of a year under a statute permitting objections to the clerk's orders to be filed within a year, as there is no adjudication of a claim against an estate allowed by the clerk or an executor or administrator until it has been passed upon by the court.

11835 Docketing and hearing.

Appointment by clerk — burden of proof. When the appointment of an administrator by the clerk is attacked by motion under the statute, the appointee has the burden to sustain his appointment.

Moreland v Lowry, 213-1096; 241 NW 31

Collateral attack. Probate proceedings cannot be collaterally attacked until it is shown that fraud was perpetrated on the court inducing it to take jurisdiction.

Ferguson v Connell, 212-1155; 237 NW 354

11842 Probate record.

Record as evidence. Where a will provides that the residue of the estate shall pass to an educational institution of this state as a part of its endowment fund, exemption from taxation on lands will not be granted except on the production in evidence of the probate records showing judicially (1) that the estate has been fully settled, and (2) that the lands in question constitute part of the residue of said estate, and, as a consequence, belong, legally or equitably, to said institution.

Wapello Bank v County, 209-1127; 229 NW 721

Constructive knowledge of record. One who takes a mortgage from a mortgagor who, under the recording acts, appears to be the sole owner of the fee is not charged with constructive knowledge of matter which appears in the "probate record" and which suggests or implies that some person other than the apparent fee owner has an interest in the property.

Booth v Cady, 219-439; 257 NW 802

Private bank depositors—property available for payment of estate claims. Where an estate consists of two general classes of assets, to wit: (1) assets employed by decedent in operating his exclusively owned private bank, and (2) lands and other assets not so employed, and where, under the will, the bank is temporarily continued after the death of the decedent, an unappealed order of the probate court, entered on due notice and service, to the effect that bank depositors be paid from the general assets of the estate, precludes devisees and legatees from thereafter successfully asserting that depositors could only be paid from the assets employed in the operation of the bank, and that, as a consequence, the said lands could not be legally mortgaged in order to effect such payment. Especially should this be true when it appears that large sums of money employed in carrying on the bank have been used by the executors in paying claims not connected with the operation of the bank.

I TESTAMENTARY POWER IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 3 ILB 170—Conveyances to take effect on death of grantor; 14 ILR 1, 172, 283, 428—Statute law of wills

Owner's right of disposal. Under ordinary circumstances one has the absolute right to dispose of his property as he pleases.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

When will speaks. Principle reaffirmed that a will speaks only from the time of the death of testator and that if, at said time, testator owns no property—because the descent of his property has been fixed and determined by prior contract—there will be nothing to which the will can be applied.

Conlee v Conlee, 222-561; 269 NW 259

Devise and bequest identical with statute of descent—effect. A will is a nullity which devises and bequeaths to a devisee and legatee the same quantity and quality of real and personal property which the devisee and legatee would take under the law of descent. So held where a spouseless and childless son devised all his property to his sole surviving parent.

In re Warren, 211-940; 234 NW 835

Authority to sell real estate. A testator may unconditionally authorize and empower his executor to make full conveyances of testator's real estate.

In re Wicks, 207-264; 222 NW 843

Conversion under will—effect. In probate proceedings where testator directs the executor of his estate to sell all of the property of the estate, including realty, as soon as convenient after his death and distribute proceeds, while the executor has some discretion as to the time and manner of the sale, the direction is mandatory, and effects an equitable conversion of the real estate into personalty at the instant of testator's death, and thereafter the real estate is to be treated as personalty, and be subject to the rules governing personal property.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Agreement—effect. An agreement between an aged mother and her heirs that a named person should act as attorney in fact for the mother, coupled with an agreement between the heirs that none of them should borrow from or obtain advancements from the mother, presents no impediment to the mother's conveying her property to certain of her heirs in order to equalize the distribution of her property.

Rollins v Jarrett, 207-183; 222 NW 365

Descent—when determinable by contract. Tenants in common of real estate who embark their holdings, and the personal property used in connection therewith, in a partnership violate no rights of heirship or testamentary rights of their brothers and sisters by including in their partnership contract an agreement that upon the death of one of the partners the survivor shall become the absolute owner of all the partnership property.

Conlee v Conlee, 222-561; 269 NW 259

Appointment of nominated executor required unless disqualified. Altho a certain discretion lies with the probate court in the appointment of personal representatives, nevertheless an executor named in a will as the one in testator's judgment best fitted to administer his estate should be appointed by the court in the absence of disqualification, which must be more than the objections of collateral relatives.

In re Schneider, 224-598; 277 NW 567

Proceeds of life insurance. The proceeds of life insurance payable to the estate of the insured or to his executors or administrators may be disposed of by will. Section 8776, C., '24, which in substance provides that insurance so payable "shall inure to the separate use" of the surviving spouse and children, supplements said right, because said section simply directs in legal effect who shall take the avails of life insurance so payable when there is no will.

Miller v Miller, 200-1070; 205 NW 870; 43 ALR 567

Proceeds of life insurance. A testator may validly dispose by will of the proceeds of life insurance payable to his estate, and make such proceeds subject to the payment of his debts. Such result is effected by a will (1) which provides for the payment of testator's debts, and (2) which devises the life insurance proceeds subject to such debt proviso.

In re Caldwell, 204-606; 215 NW 615

Prohibiting incumbrance—legality. A testator who makes an absolute devise, of a certain interest in property, may not validly prohibit the devisee from thereafter incumbering the property.

Bogenrief v Law, 222-1303; 271 NW 229

Intention to render homestead subject to debts. A testator in devising a homestead will not be deemed to have intended to render it subject to his debts—even to his funeral expenses—unless such intention is clearly and unequivocally expressed in the will.

Buck v MacEachron, 209-1168; 229 NW 693

Inheritance tax on bequest—right of testator to pay. A testator may validly provide that the inheritance tax on a specific devise or bequest made by him in his will shall be paid from the residuary part of his estate, provided he clearly expresses his intention to that effect. Will construed and held clearly so to provide.

In re Johnson, 220-424; 262 NW 811

Payment of taxes. Will construed, and held properly to justify an order directing the testamentary trustee to pay certain taxes on the trust property.

Turner v Ryan, 223-191; 272 NW 60; 110 ALR 554

Limitations void ab initio. Testamentary attempts by means of limitations to create in property contingent interests or estates, which will not necessarily become vested within the period of time prescribed by the statute prohibiting perpetuities, are futile, all such limitations being void ab initio. (§10127, C., '35.)

Bankers Tr. v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Repugnant limitation following devise of property in fee—void. Principle reaffirmed that a testator cannot make an absolute devise of his property in fee and in a subsequent clause destroy or place a limitation on such title. The subsequent limitation is void for repugnancy.

In re Bigham, 227-1023; 290 NW 11

Bequest for paving roads. In an action by a taxpayer to obtain an injunction restraining a county from accepting a bequest to be used for paving roads, the injunction was refused where a will and two codicils provided for the bequest, as when all papers were construed together a valid gift to the county was found to have been created which the county had the authority to accept.

Anderson v Board, 226-1177; 286 NW 735

Lack of education. In an action to contest a will under which a son receives eight times as much property as the children of a deceased son and the evidence is disputed as to whether testator had sufficient understanding of English that when will was read over to her in English, unexplained, she fully understood its contents, a jury question is presented.

In re Younggren, 226-1377; 286 NW 467

II CONTRACTS TO DEVISE OR BEQUEATH

General principles. A parol contract on due consideration to devise or leave property to another, if shown by clear and convincing testimony, is enforceable, especially when the contract is corroborated by declarations of the alleged grantor against his own interest, and when the equities are strongly in favor of the alleged grantee.

Kisor v Litzenberg, 203-1183; 212 NW 343

Mutual wills enforced as contract. Clear and satisfactory evidence that husband and wife entered into a mutual contract, and in accordance therewith executed mutual and reciprocal wills providing for the disposition of all their property to each other and to certain named beneficiaries upon the death of survivor, entitles beneficiaries to specific performance thereof and to restrain probating of another will, executed by husband after the wife's death, making provision contrary thereto.

Child v Smith, 225-1205; 282 NW 316

Mutual wills—enforcement in equity. Mutual wills are those made as separate wills of two people which are reciprocal in provision. Such wills may be enforced in equity.

Child v Smith, 225-1205; 282 NW 316

Antenuptial contract. An antenuptial contract under which the wife agrees to accept a named fractional part of the husband's property in case she survives does not have the legal effect of depriving her of her statutory right to occupy the homestead, free of all rent, until her share is actually set off to her or otherwise actually disposed of.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 201-1311; 207 NW 772

Irrevocability of contract. A will in the form of a contract to devise property in return for care and support of the testator during his lifetime is irrevocable except by the mutual action of the parties.

Burmeister v Hamann, 208-412; 226 NW 10

Irrevocableness of will based on contract. A will is irrevocable when executed in compliance with a contract which is (1) in writing, and (2) contains mutual promises then and there executed by the parties; nor is such a will rendered revocable by the death of the beneficiary therein prior to the death of the testator.

Powell v McBlain, 222-799; 269 NW 883

Evidence—sufficiency. Proof of an oral contract to will property must be so clear and convincing as to leave nothing to be supplied by the court.

In re Shinn, 207-103; 222 NW 569

Requisites and degree of proof. An oral contract to leave, devise, or bequeath property must, in the first place, be so certain and definite as to leave nothing to conjecture or to be supplied by the court, and, in the second place, must be supported by such clear, satisfactory, and convincing testimony as establishes such contract, for all practical purposes, beyond a reasonable doubt.

Brewer v King, 212-665; 237 NW 508

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held wholly insufficient to establish the genuineness of an alleged written contract to will property.

Shisler v Cemetery Assn., 207-306; 222 NW 838

II CONTRACTS TO DEVISE OR BEQUEATH—continued

Failure of proof of material allegation. A fatal failure of proof results from a failure to prove an allegation to the effect that services were to be paid for at the time of the death of the promisor, and where the court instructs to such effect.

Ballard v Miller, 210-1144; 229 NW 159

Condition precedent—general allegation of performance — denial — effect. The statutory rule that a general allegation of performance of a condition precedent is not put in issue by a general denial (§11208, C., '27), has no application to a general allegation of performance of a promise or agreement which was the consideration for the promise or agreement sued on. So held where plaintiff's promise was to discharge a certain promissory note, and in return the promisee agreed to make a will in favor of plaintiff.

In re Fetterman, 207-252; 222 NW 872

Ownership of property. A contract which provides, in effect, that a child shall become owner of all the property possessed by its foster parents at the time of their death is necessarily not confined to the property possessed by the foster parents at the time the contract was entered into.

Kisor v Litzenberg, 203-1183; 212 NW 343

Oral contract to devise or convey. An oral offer to convey or devise land in consideration of services to be performed for the offerer, and an oral acceptance thereof by the offeree, are specifically enforceable when both the execution of the contract and the performance thereof are established by clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence, and when the acts of performance are referable exclusively to such contract.

Houlette v Johnson, 205-687; 216 NW 679

Oral agreement to devise realty—insufficiency of evidence to set aside. In an equity action to recover a sum of money alleged to be the share of plaintiff's intestate in the estate of his father, where evidence shows the mother of plaintiff's intestate was left with five minor children, and that she filed a partition proceeding involving 400 acres of land owned by her husband, who died intestate, and she thereafter was the successful purchaser at a sale of the land, and that, as a part of the purchase price, she executed a note and mortgage on the land to a guardian appointed for the minor children to secure their respective shares in the father's estate, and that, as the children became of age, there were no guardianship funds to pay their respective shares and that it was orally agreed that the children would receipt for their respective shares, in cash, to the guardian (altho no cash was received), and the mother agreed to, and did, execute a will leaving the land to the children in equal shares, the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to set aside the agreement, and the trial court's order, affirming the agreement and impounding the mother's will until her death, was affirmed.

Baumann v Willemsen, 228- ; 292 NW 77

Compensation through bequest — breach — effect. An agreement that compensation for services shall, in part, be made through or by means of a testamentary bequest implies that the bequest shall be in an amount which will afford reasonable compensation for the services rendered.

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

Measure of damages—contract to give, deed, or will personal property. The measure of damages for breach of a contract to give, deed, or will all of the personal property of the promisor in payment of services must be computed on the basis of the gross personal property in kind, as of the death of the promisor.

Ballard v Miller, 210-1144; 229 NW 159

Parol contract to will or deed land. A parol contract to will or deed land, followed by possession of the land by the contemplated devisee or grantee, and by the making of valuable improvements on the land by the latter, in reliance on the contract, is specifically enforceable if the proof is sufficient, in the light of all the circumstances, to carry conviction to the mind of its essential credibility.

Ozias v Scarcliff, 200-1078; 205 NW 986

Acceptance — conclusive presumption. It must be presumed that an advantageous contract, entered into by an uncle for and on behalf of his motherless and paternally abandoned infant nephew and niece, has been accepted by the beneficiaries, when for some 40 years they have been fulfilling their part of the contract.

Kisor v Litzenberg, 203-1183; 212 NW 343

Abandonment—presumption. The abandonment of a contract which is, in effect, a contract to devise property, and which is highly advantageous to the party who is alleged to have done the abandonment, must be established by very clear and cogent testimony.

Kisor v Litzenberg, 203-1183; 212 NW 343

Agreement to give, deed or will property—constructive breach. One who orally contracts that upon his death he will pay for certain services by "giving, deeding or willing" certain real property to the promisee, constructively breaches his contract by failing to either give, deed or will the property as promised, and thereby opens the door to the promisee to maintain an action at law for damages; and especially is this true when the promisee establishes the contract by the same degree of proof as would be required in equity, and moreover, offers to accept a deed to the property in lieu of damages allowed for the breach.

Ballard v Miller, 210-1144; 229 NW 159

Agreement as to right to inherit. A provision in an antenuptial contract to the effect that the children of the husband shall have the same right of inheritance in the property of the wife as they would have if they were her own children is effective as a contract of inheritance.

Kalsem v Froland, 207-994; 222 NW 3

Testator's contract to devise to son—will changed after loan relying thereon. A bank, after contracting with debtor's father to wait until father's death for payment of the son's debt from his share in father's estate, under existing devise in will, has a right to impress an equitable lien on the land when it discovers that the father had changed his will and was fraudulently, without consideration, transferring his property to others than the debtor son.

Emerson Bank v Cole, 225-281; 280 NW 515

Contract not to change will—not guaranty of son's debt. A son being indebted to a bank in the sum of $10,000, the father entered into a contract with the bank, that he would not alter his will wherein said son was bequeathed that sum, in consideration of which the bank would not press payment while the father lived. Held that such contract was not an absolute guarantee that the son was to have $10,000 from his father's estate regardless of its condition at the father's death, nor an undertaking that would nullify other provisions of the will.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Love and affection — consideration — sufficiency. In an action to enforce grandfather's oral promise to will property to grandson in return for naming grandson after him, court held that love and affection, while being a "good" consideration, was not a sufficient consideration when unsupported by a pecuniary or material benefit, and created, at most, a bare moral obligation.

Lanfier v Lanfier, 227-258; 288 NW 104

Assignment of property—will—contract to support. The donee of a gift inter vivos, when holding a fiduciary relationship with the donor, has the burden to rebut the presumption that the transaction was fraudulent and voidable, but this does not apply to testamentary gifts. So held where a mother first willed, and later assigned, all her property to one son, in consideration of a contract that he should support her as long as she lived—the result being to disinherit another son.

Reed v Reed, 225-773; 281 NW 444

Survivor of dual beneficiaries. An executed contract which provides, in effect, that two infant children shall enter the home of foster parents and there remain as tho they were the natural-born children of such parents, and in return shall become the owners of the property of such parents at the death of the latter, casts upon the survivor of said beneficiaries the entire property in case one beneficiary dies prior to the death of the foster parents.

Kisor v Litzenberg, 203-1183; 212 NW 343

Allowance of claims—partnership checks not showing payment. In proving a claim against an estate, by showing an oral contract to pay for services extending over a period of many years, neither the lapse of time nor checks payable to claimant drawn by decedent during the fourteen years just preceding his death, when a partnership existed between them for those years, raises a presumption of payment in view of decedent's admission of the debt shortly before his death.

Gardner v Marquis, 224-458; 275 NW 493

Settlement of claim—adding additional burden. An unambiguous written stipulation and agreement, duly filed in a will contest, providing in effect that defendant will pay, and plaintiff will accept, a named sum of money in full settlement of any and all claims which plaintiff may have against the estate cannot be added to by proof of an oral contemporaneous agreement to the effect that defendant would also execute a will devising and bequeathing all his property to plaintiff.

In re Simplot, 215-578; 246 NW 396

Codicil as deed. A duly signed, acknowledged, and recorded contract to the effect that a specified devise in the will of one of the parties to the contract should act as a deed to the other party to the contract will prevail over a subsequent conveyance of the property by the testator, especially when the grantee had actual notice of the contents of the will and of the contract in reference thereto.

Krcmar v Krcmar, 202-1166; 211 NW 699

Disposal during lifetime—validity. A contract that one will make a will and devise and bequeath to the promisee "all property which I may own at the time of my death" and the due execution of a will of the same scope, leaves the promisor (testator) free to use, control and dispose of his property in his lifetime, and nonfraudulent transfers and conveyances by him before his death are valid.

Powell v McBlain, 222-799; 269 NW 883

III TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY

(a) DEGREE OF MENTAL CAPACITY REQUIRED

General standard of competency. One who has an intelligent knowledge and understanding (1) of the act of executing a will, (2) of the property he possesses, (3) of the disposition which he desires to make of his property, and (4) of those who are the natural objects of his bounty, is competent to execute

(a) DEGREE OF MENTAL CAPACITY REQUIRED—concluded

a will, even tho he is physically and mentally weak.

Cookman v Bateman, 210-503; 231 NW 301

Validity of deeds—mental incompetency. Courts must be zealous to guard the right of every man to dispose of his own property as he sees fit, so long as he has the mental capacity (1) to know what property he possesses, (2) to know what he desires to do with it, and (3) to exercise his free and voluntary will in such disposition.

Coughlin v Church, 201-1268; 203 NW 812

Physical and mental deterioration. Mere old age or some deterioration in physical or mental power or peevishness, childishness, and eccentricity are not sufficient to carry to the jury the issue of mental unsoundness.

In re Koll, 200-1122; 206 NW 40

In re Johnson, 201-687; 207 NW 748

Albright v Moeckly, 202-565; 210 NW 813

In re Paczoch, 202-849; 211 NW 500

In re Ramsdell, 215-1374; 244 NW 744

Mere mental weakness. Mere weakness of the mental faculties is insufficient to invalidate a will if the testator knew and comprehended the natural objects of his bounty, the nature and extent of his property, and the disposition he desired to make of it.

In re Shields, 208-607; 224 NW 69

Mental capacity to contract—existence—burden to disprove. Mental weakness from disease does not deprive a person of capacity to dispose of property until the power of intelligent action is destroyed, and executor relying thereon to recover gift made by decedent to sister has burden of proof.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Demurrer to will contest—fatal admission. A demurrer to objections to the probate of a will should have been overruled when it admitted as facts that the contestant held judgments against the devisee who was a son and heir of the decedent who died seized of real estate, that the judgments were liens against any real estate the son would inherit as heir, and that the decedent was of unsound mind when the will was made, as, if the decedent were incompetent, the will was void and he died intestate. So the title to the son's share in the real estate vested at the father's death, and, at the same instant, the judgments became liens on his share of the real estate.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Monomania—essential requirements. Monomania in the form of a belief on the part of a testator that his child was immoral, in order to be a sufficient basis on which to set aside a will, must be shown to have been without any evidence to support it. In a case where the testator asserted that he possessed such evidence, but never revealed it, held that no jury question was created.

Firestine v Atkinson, 206-151; 218 NW 293

Insane delusion—evidence—sufficiency. An insane delusion sufficient to overthrow and invalidate a will, is, generally speaking, a wholly unfounded belief to which testator clings in spite of all disproving evidence, and which controls the making of the will.

Lockie v Baker, 208-1293; 227 NW 160

Hult v Ins. Co., 213-890; 240 NW 218

(b) PRESUMPTION AND BURDEN OF PROOF

Burden of proof. Evidence held insufficient to cast upon proponents of a will the burden of establishing testamentary capacity.

In re Shields, 208-607; 224 NW 69

Mental incapacity — evidence — sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that the courts will zealously guard the right of every person to make such legal disposition of his property as he sees fit, and to that end will demand the production of very convincing evidence in support of the plea of mental incapacity interposed by strangers to the transaction.

Keating v Augustine, 213-1336; 241 NW 429

Guardianship—presumption. One who is under guardianship because of mental defect is presumptively incapable of executing a valid will. Evidence pro and con held to sustain the presumption.

Brogan v Lynch, 204-260; 214 NW 514

Drunkard guardianship—incapacity not presumed—fact question. One under guardianship is not necessarily incompetent to make a will; for instance, as to a drunkard under guardianship incapacity is not presumed. Evidence failed to establish that testator was intoxicated when he made his will, and his competency, being a fact question when decided in his favor by the court after waiver of a jury, will not be disturbed on appeal.

In re Willer, 225-606; 281 NW 155

Negating presumption of continued insanity. A testator will not be presumed insane at the time he executed his will because of the production of a finding some 26 years prior thereto by the commissioners of insanity that he was insane and "a fit subject for treatment in the hospital for the insane", (1) when there is no showing that his condition at said remote time was one of general and settled unsoundness of mind, and (2) when it appears that he was then confined in a private hospital for some seven months, and left the hospital in a state of mental soundness, and thereafter at all times managed his business as a normal man.

Waters v Waters, 201-586; 207 NW 598

Burden of proof—failure to meet. In an action to set aside the probate of a will, and to cancel a deed (1) on the ground of the mental incapacity of the testator-grantor, and (2) on the ground of the undue influence of the devisee-grantee, the burden rests on plaintiff to establish at least one of said grounds. Evidence quite elaborately reviewed and held, plaintiff had failed to meet the burden of proof resting upon him.

Walters v Heaton, 223-405; 271 NW 310

Will contest—burden of proof—testamentary capacity—how determined. In a will contest, after proponent's formal proofs, the burden of showing lack of mental capacity of testatrix is on contestant. Mere deterioration in physical or mental powers does not destroy testamentary capacity until the mental decline reaches such stage that the person is unable to intelligently comprehend the estate of which he is possessed and the natural objects of his bounty and to intelligently exercise judgment and discretion in the disposition of his property.

In re Behrend, 227-1099; 290 NW 78

Assignment of property and will—mother to son transfer—burden of proof. In an action by one son to set aside an assignment of his mother's property, based on a contract for her support made with another son, which assignment was paralleled by a similar provision in her will, duly probated, an answer and general denial of the donee son, to the effect that the disinherited son had no rights thereto under the will, placed on the disinherited son, in order to establish his right to relief, the burden of showing the invalidity of the will on account of mental incapacity or undue influence.

Reed v Reed, 225-773; 281 NW 444

Lack of education—proponents' burden. In an action to contest a will under which one son receives over eight times as much property as the children of his deceased brother and evidence discloses dispute as to testator's understanding of English language in which the will is written, and such circumstances lead the court to suspect testator may have been imposed upon, an additional burden is imposed upon proponents of will to show testator was acquainted with the provisions of the will.

In re Younggren, 226-1377; 286 NW 467

(c) EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY, WEIGHT, AND SUFFICIENCY

1 Mental Capacity in General

Distribution of property—mental weakness. Mere weakness of mental power will not constitute mental incapacity if the person retains mind enough to know and comprehend in a general way the nature and extent of his estate, the natural objects of his bounty, and the distribution he desires to make of his property.

Penn Ins. v Mulvaney, 221-925; 265 NW 889

Jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of testamentary capacity.

In re Shields, 208-607; 224 NW 69

Lack of education. In an action to contest a will under which a son receives eight times as much property as the children of a deceased son and the evidence is disputed as to whether testator had sufficient understanding of English that when will was read over to her in English, unexplained, she fully understood its contents, a jury question is presented.

In re Younggren, 226-1377; 286 NW 467

Mental competency and undue influence. Evidence held to present no jury question in a will contest as to the mental competency of the testator, or as to any undue influence in the execution of the will.

Woodman v Morgan, 200-500; 203 NW 298

Evidence—insufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to make a jury question on the issue of testamentary capacity.

Green v Ellsworth, 221-1098; 267 NW 714

Evidence—sufficiency—jury question. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue of mental competency to execute a will.

Diesing v Spencer, 221-1143; 266 NW 567

Jury question. The mere fact that there is some testimony of mental unsoundness does not necessarily require the question to be submitted to the jury.

In re Diver, 214-497; 240 NW 622

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient per se to establish testamentary incapacity.

Walkington v Ide, 206-645; 220 NW 5

In re Kenney, 213-360; 239 NW 44; 78 ALR 1189

White v White, 213-1244; 241 NW 1

Bishop v Scharf, 214-644; 241 NW 3

Unsound mind and undue influence. In proceeding to probate a will, where the will was set aside on ground testatrix was of unsound mind and acted under undue influence, and proponent did not seek to withdraw issue of undue influence from jury, verdict could not be set aside, tho evidence was insufficient to sustain verdict on ground of undue influence alone.

In re Hepp, (NOR); 249 NW 129

Instructions. Instructions reviewed generally, and held to properly present the rules for weighing the testimony on the issue of testamentary capacity.

In re Shields, 208-607; 224 NW 69

Directed verdict. When the real issue is as to testator's mental competency, the court

1. Mental capacity in general—concluded should sustain the will, by a directed verdict, when a contrary jury verdict would be without adequate evidentiary support.

In re Fitzgerald, 219-988; 259 NW 455

Evidence of unsound mind—jury question. Evidence tending to show a lessening of testator's physical and mental powers, eccentricities, childishness, forgetfulness, unclean personal habits, and inability to transact business generally, is not necessarily sufficient to generate a jury question on the issue of a testator's mental competency to execute a will. Evidence reviewed at length and held insufficient.

In re Johnson, 222-787; 269 NW 792

Lack of testamentary capacity—evidence sufficiency—jury question. On appeal from directed verdict against contestant in a will contest where the evidence shows, by testimony of physician who attended testatrix over a period of years, that testatrix was a woman prematurely old at 66, suffering from toxic goiter and other ailments which prevented proper nutrition of her organs and kept her body poisoned, that such ailments were of progressive nature resulting in rapid increase of her apparent age and accelerated physical and mental decline and that in his opinion testatrix's mentality was impaired to such extent at time of execution of will she was of unsound mind, held, that evidence of lack of testamentary capacity was sufficient to support a verdict for contestant, if jury so found, and refusal to submit case to the jury was erroneous.

In re Behrend, 227-1099; 290 NW 78

Drunkness. Evidence held insufficient to establish mental incompetency owing to drunkenness.

Matthewson v Fahnestock, 217-348; 251 NW 643

Assumption of capacity. When the sole issue in a will contest is that of undue influence, the court is not in error in instructing that the jury should consider as an established fact that the testator was possessed of testamentary capacity at the time of the execution of the will.

In re Muhr, 218-867; 256 NW 305

Mental incapacity and undue influence—evidence insufficient. Evidence reviewed, as to the mental capacity of a 90-year-old mother who, to the exclusion of one son, willed and assigned her property to another son, in exchange for life support and care, and held that she still was sane and that the charge of undue influence was not substantiated.

Reed v Reed, 225-773; 281 NW 444

Will contest—burden of proof—testamentary capacity—how determined. In a will contest, after proponent's formal proofs, the burden of showing lack of mental capacity of testatrix is on contestant. Mere deterioration in physical or mental powers does not destroy testamentary capacity until the mental decline reaches such stage that the person is unable to intelligently comprehend the estate of which he is possessed and the natural objects of his bounty and to intelligently exercise judgment and discretion in the disposition of his property.

In re Behrend, 227-1099; 290 NW 78

Mental capacity to contract—existence—burden to disprove. Mental weakness from disease does not deprive a person of capacity to dispose of property until the power of intelligent action is destroyed, and executor relying thereon to recover gift made by decedent to sister has burden of proof.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Adjudication of insanity. An adjudication or finding by the commissioners of insanity is admissible on the issue of testator's testamentary capacity, but is subject to explanation.

Waters v Waters, 201-586; 207 NW 598

Instructions—“comprehending legal form”. The court should not say to a jury that “testator need not be able to comprehend the provisions of his will in their legal form”.

Blakely v Cabelka, 203-5; 212 NW 348

Neutralizing effect of immaterial testimony—refusal—effect. Letters written by the son of a testator 20 years prior to a will contest, and requesting financial help from the parent, (while admissible as bearing on the issue of unequal distribution of the estate) are wholly immaterial to the issue of want of testamentary capacity and undue influence, and a refusal to so instruct constitutes error.

In re Thompson, 211-935; 234 NW 841

2 Opinion Evidence

Opinion evidence—usurping jury function. No witness, expert or otherwise, in testifying to matters bearing on the soundness or unsoundness of mind of the testator, must be permitted to testify to the existence or non-existence of the very facts which the jury must determine.

Hann v Hann, 202-807; 211 NW 495

Nonexpert opinion. A nonexpert may base his opinion that a testator is sane on a recital of his acquaintance and knowledge of the testator. A nonexpert must base his opinion of insanity on a recital of facts which indicate insanity.

In re Mott, 200-948; 205 NW 770

Zander v Cahow, 200-1258; 206 NW 90

In re Diver, 214-497; 240 NW 622

Nonexpert opinion—insufficient basis. A nonexpert witness may not express an opinion that a testator was of unsound mind on a recital of facts which pertain solely to his physical condition.

Hann v Hann, 202-807; 211 NW 495
In re Paczoch, 202-849; 211 NW 500

Nonexpert opinions—credibility. The opinion of a nonexpert witness that a testator was of unsound mind is no stronger than the facts testified to by the witness as a basis for such opinion.

Bailey v Bank, 208-1265; 227 NW 129

Nonexpert opinion as to insanity—necessary foundation. Nonexpert opinion as to unsoundness of mind is inadmissible unless the nonexpert witness first details such facts as tend, in the judgment of the court, to show an abnormal state of mind of the person whose mentality is under investigation; and the discretion of the court will not be interfered with unless there is a clear showing of abuse of such discretion.

Campfield v Rutt, 211-1077; 235 NW 59

Unqualified expert. A physician may not testify that a person was, in his opinion, mentally unsound, on the sole basis that he had at times casually noticed the person on the street, but had paid no attention to, or ever made any examination of, his mental condition.

In re Cooper, 200-1180; 206 NW 95

Hypothetical question—fundamentally required instructions. Expert testimony tending to show that a party is of unsound mind, based solely on a hypothetical state of fact, is wholly without value unless the jury finds that the assumed state of fact is true, and fundamental error results in failure so to instruct.

Anspach v Littler, 215-873; 245 NW 304

Harmless error—noninjurious ruling. In an attempt to prove the unsoundness of mind of a testator, the striking of portions of a hypothetical question becomes inconsequential when the witness answers that, in his opinion, the testator was of unsound mind.

Blakely v Cabelka, 203-5; 212 NW 348

Examination of expert—questions—form and sufficiency. On the trial of the issue whether a deceased was mentally competent to execute a will, counsel has the right to shape his hypothetical questions to his expert witnesses in accordance with his (counsel's) theory of the case,—the right to embrace in said questions such proven facts as he deems relevant and material to said theory and the right to omit all other facts, provided his questions as finally framed furnish adequate basis for an expert opinion as to mental soundness.

Diesing v Spencer, 221-1143; 266 NW 567

Evidence—erroneous exclusion. On the contest of a will, it is error, on the issue of testamentary capacity, to exclude the opinions of qualified witnesses as to the mental soundness of testator and testimony tending to show increasing feebleness and childishness with advancing years; but such error becomes quite immaterial when the testimony admitted and rejected fails to warrant a finding that testator was so lacking in mental capacity when the will was executed that he did not (1) intelligently know the property possessed by him, (2) intelligently know the natural objects of his bounty, and (3) intelligently exercise judgment and discretion in the disposition of his said property.

In re Cooper, 200-1180; 206 NW 95

Harmless exclusion—evidence otherwise in record making jury question. Error in striking testimony is harmless when the facts sought are otherwise in the record, and when if admitted the record would still present a jury question.

In re Willer, 225-606; 281 NW 155

3 Mental Condition Prior or Subsequent to Execution of Will Unusual life history—contest. Testimony relative to testator's unusual life history, involving inter alia two commitments to and discharges from an asylum for the insane, and events subsequent thereto, held insufficient to show that testator was lacking in capacity to execute a valid will.

In re Haga, 222-1313; 271 NW 296

Adjudication of insanity—parol explanation. An adjudication of insanity on the part of a testator which is silent as to the character of the insanity may not, of course, be contradicted, but may be explained by showing the nature and extent of testator's affliction at the time of such adjudication.

Waters v Waters, 201-586; 207 NW 598

Insufficient evidence. When two daughters had cared for their aged mother for about 20 years while the mother was in good health, neat in appearance, mentally alert, and did much reading in a foreign language altho she could not read English, and the daughters went with the mother to a lawyer's office, but remained outside while deeds were drawn up by which the mother granted property to them to be effective after her death, there was no showing of mental weakness, fraud, or undue influence upon which to base a decree setting aside the deeds.

Tedemandson v Morris, 227-774; 289 NW 1

4 Unjust, Unnatural, or Unreasonable Disposition

Unreasonableness of will. On the issue whether a deceased was mentally competent to execute the will in question, evidence of the property owned by the principal beneficiaries under said alleged will may be admissible as

(c) EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY, WEIGHT, AND SUFFICIENCY—concluded an item of evidence having some bearing on the allowable query whether the deceased had failed (and if so, why she had failed) to distinguish between the relative needs of those having claims on her bounty.

Diesing v Spencer, 221-1143; 266 NW 567

5 Declarations of Testator

Declarations — rejection. Written memoranda made by a witness which it is claimed were dictated by the testatrix and which pertained to her expressions concerning the making of a will are properly rejected.

Bailey v Bank, 208-1265; 227 NW 129

Declarations by testator — general admissibility. Great latitude is permitted in will contests in the introduction of statements made by a testator, and they are admissible, not as proof of the facts alleged therein, but as tending to throw light on the condition and attitude of mind of the person making them and as bearing on the question of the mental capacity of such person to execute a valid will.

Diesing v Spencer, 221-1143; 266 NW 567

6 Declarations of Proponents, Devisees, Legatees, and Contestants

Exclusion of hearsay. Testimony by a will contestant to the effect that a subscribing witness to the will had told him that testator had stated to the subscribing witness that she (testator) did not want contestant about her premises is properly excluded.

Bailey v Bank, 208-1265; 227 NW 129

IV UNDUE INFLUENCE

(a) UNDUE INFLUENCE IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 12 ILR 430—Proof and presumptions of undue influence

Definition. Influence, to be “undue”, within the meaning of the law of wills, must be equivalent to moral coercion, must operate at the very time the will is made, and must dominate and control the making of it.

Wackman v Wiegold, 202-1391; 212 NW 122

Rule of sufficiency. Undue influence, in order to be sufficient to overthrow a will, must take such form and be of such nature that the will of the wrongdoer is substituted for the will of the testator. The mere presence of the devisee (a husband) in the room when the will was executed, and the fact that the testator had made a former will, more advantageous to the contestant, are not sufficient to establish undue influence.

Hann v Hann, 202-807; 211 NW 495

Wolfe v Shroyer, 206-1021; 221 NW 546

Worth v Pierson, 208-353; 223 NW 752

Cookman v Bateman, 210-503; 231 NW 301

In re Diver, 214-497; 240 NW 622

In re Ramsdell, 215-1374; 244 NW 744

Mental competency and undue influence—evidence. Evidence held to present no jury question in a will contest as to the mental competency of the testator, or as to any undue influence in the execution of the will.

Woodman v Morgan, 200-500; 203 NW 298

Free agency destroyed. Influence, to become “undue”, must in some degree destroy testator’s free agency. Opportunity and disposition to employ undue influence, and mere persuasion and importunity, are insufficient.

In re Mott, 200-948; 205 NW 770

Insufficient proof. Principle reaffirmed that opportunity and disposition to exercise undue influence, plus persuasion and importunity as to the disposition of testator’s property, are not sufficient, in and of themselves, to establish undue influence.

In re Muhr, 218-867; 256 NW 305

Insufficient evidence. When two daughters had cared for their aged mother for about 20 years while the mother was in good health, neat in appearance, mentally alert, and did much reading in a foreign language altho she could not read English, and the daughters went with the mother to a lawyer’s office, but remained outside while deeds were drawn up by which the mother granted property to them to be effective after her death, there was no showing of mental weakness, fraud, or undue influence upon which to base a decree setting aside the deeds.

Tedemandson v Morris, 227-774; 289 NW 1

Solicitation, etc. Mere solicitation, request, or importunity is not sufficient to invalidate a will unless it takes such form that the will of the wrongdoer is substituted for the will of the testator.

In re Paczoch, 202-849; 211 NW 500

Undue influence as phase of fraud. Undue influence, a phase of actual fraud, will invalidate a transaction between persons in a confidential relationship.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Abuse of confidence forfeits gain. Where a confidential relationship results in one gaining an influence over another, and the one gaining the influence abuses it to the disadvantage of the other, he will not be permitted to retain the fruits of his advantage. Held, no abuse of confidence.

Reeves v Lyon, 224-659; 277 NW 749

(b) PRESUMPTION AND BURDEN OF PROOF

Burden of proof. Burden of proving undue influence, and its invalidating effect on a transaction, rests on him who makes the allegation.

Penn Ins. v Mulvaney, 221-925; 265 NW 889

Burden of proof. He who alleges that a will was the result of undue influence must establish (1) the undue influence, and (2) that the undue influence operated on the mind of the testator at the very time the will was executed,—in fact, that the will was the will of the undue influencer, and not the will of testator.

In re Cooper, 200-1180; 206 NW 95
Hult v Ins. Co., 213-890; 240 NW 218

Burden of proof. A party alleging undue influence in the execution of a will must not only establish it, but must show that it operated on the mind of the testator at the very time the will was executed, and to such an extent that the will was the result thereof.

Bailey v Bank, 208-1265; 227 NW 129

Assignment of property and will—mother to son transfer—burden of proof. In an action by one son to set aside an assignment of his mother's property, based on a contract for her support made with another son, which assignment was paralleled by a similar provision in her will, duly probated, an answer and general denial of the donee son, to the effect that the disinherited son had no rights thereto under the will, placed on the disinherited son, in order to establish his right to relief, the burden of showing the invalidity of the will on account of mental incapacity or undue influence.

Reed v Reed, 225-773; 281 NW 444

Proponents' burden. In an action to contest a will under which one son receives over eight times as much property as the children of his deceased brother and evidence discloses dispute as to testator's understanding of English language in which the will is written and such circumstances lead the court to suspect testator may have been imposed upon, an additional burden is imposed upon proponents of will to show testator was acquainted with the provisions of the will.

In re Younggren, 226-1377; 286 NW 467

(c) EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY, WEIGHT, AND SUFFICIENCY

Insufficient evidence.

White v White, 213-1244; 241 NW 1
In re Diver, 214-497; 240 NW 622

Unsound mind and undue influence. In proceeding to probate a will, where the will was set aside on ground testatrix was of unsound mind and acted under undue influence, and proponent did not seek to withdraw issue of undue influence from jury, verdict could not be set aside, tho evidence was insufficient to sustain verdict on ground of undue influence alone.

In re Hepp, (NOR); 249 NW 129

Opportunity, etc. Neither disposition and opportunity to exercise undue influence nor persuasion and importunity will generate a jury question on the issue of undue influence in the execution of a will.

In re Johnson, 201-687; 207 NW 748

Fraud constituting undue influence. Whether a will induced by fraudulent representations may be set aside because of fraud, altho the evidence is insufficient to constitute undue influence, quaere. Conceding the affirmative, evidence held insufficient to show such fraud.

Worth v Pierson, 208-353; 223 NW 752

Duress. The fact that a devisee furnished a home to testator, and at times counseled with him in a general way, is quite insufficient to justify the court in submitting the issue of duress.

In re Haga, 222-1313; 271 NW 296

Age of grantor. In an action contesting deeds on the ground of undue influence, the age of the grantor is an important consideration, but it is not conclusive.

Tedemandson v Morris, 227-774; 289 NW 1

2 Unequal, Unreasonable, or Unnatural Disposition

Lack of education or physical defects. In an action to contest a will under which one son receives over eight times as much property as the children of his deceased brother and evidence discloses dispute as to testator's understanding of English language in which the will is written and such circumstances lead the court to suspect testator may have been imposed upon, an additional burden is imposed upon proponents of will to show testator was acquainted with the provisions of the will.

In re Younggren, 226-1377; 286 NW 467

3 Declarations of Testator

Declarations of testator. Declarations of a testator that he intended to make disposition of his property in a manner different than that provided in the subsequently executed will are inadmissible on the issue of undue influence.

In re Diver, 214-497; 240 NW 622

Statements of intention to devise to others. Statements by a person of his intention to leave his property to persons other than to the beneficiaries named in his will, are not admissible, as tending to establish undue influence in the execution of the will, but, undue influence being established, prima facie, such statements may be admissible as tending to show testator's susceptibility to such influence and his capacity to resist it.

In re Johnson, 222-787; 269 NW 792

4 Declarations of Proponents, Devisees, Legatees, and Contestants

Declarations of beneficiary. Declarations of a testamentary beneficiary which tend to show that he employed undue influence on testator in order to secure the execution of the will are inadmissible when the will carries separate

 Wackman v Wiegold, 202-1391; 212 NW 122

Insufficient showing. The fact that prior to the execution of a manifestly inequitable will the chief beneficiary thereof was a chronic complainer to the effect that testator had done nothing for her, but had done much for her brother, and that she would see to it that she got all of testator's property, is not, in and of itself (in view of the provisions of the will), sufficient to make a prima facie case of undue influence in the execution of the will.

McCollister v Showers, 216-108; 248 NW 363

(d) JOINT SUBMISSION OF MENTAL INCAPACITY AND UNDUE INFLUENCE

Submission of dual issues. Testimony which supports the issue of undue influence necessarily has material bearing on the supported issue of the testamentary capacity of an aged and infirm person, but both issues are properly submitted on supporting testimony.

Brogan v Lynch, 204-260; 214 NW 514

Burden of proof—failure to meet. In an action to set aside the probate of a will, and to cancel a deed (1) on the ground of the mental incapacity of the testator-grantor, and (2) on the ground of the undue influence of the devisee-grantee, the burden rests on plaintiff to establish at least one of said grounds.

Walters v Heaton, 223-405; 271 NW 310

V CONSTRUCTION OF WILLS

(a) CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 15 ILR 361—"Die without issue"; 16 ILR 195—Decree determining heirs, distribution; 21 ILR 552—Equity jurisdiction; 22 ILR 543—Renunciation of life estate

Probate court—jurisdiction. Where a clear and unambiguous will is admitted to probate and administration is being had thereon in probate court, the jurisdiction of such court to determine any rights thereunder, and to administer and direct the disposition of the property involved, cannot be interfered with by a court of equity.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

Nonnecessity to construe. In equitable action for construction of wills of deceased husband and wife, where husband's will provided for payment of debts and funeral expenses and devised to his wife all his estate, and where wife's will contained certain specific bequests and directed that remainder and after-acquired property be divided into equal shares for distribution, held, both wills to be clear and unambiguous and therefore not open to construction. Actions for that purpose are entertained by a court of equity or probate only when there is uncertainty or ambiguity.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

Absence of necessary parties bar to construction.

Windsor v Barnett, 201-1226; 207 NW 362

Disinterested party without standing. One who is adjudged to have no interest under a will may not object to a construction placed thereon by the court.

Schroeder v Cable, 211-1107; 235 NW 63

Lex rei sitae. The title to real estate in this state under a will must be determined by the courts of this state, and under the law of this state.

Scofield v Hadden, 206-597; 220 NW 1

What law governs—lex rei sitae. Whether a legatee has the legal right to elect to take real estate instead of the proceeds of said real estate will be determined by the lex rei sitae.

In re Warner, 209-948; 229 NW 241

Conflict of laws—reaching majority—law of testator's domicile controls. When the property is situated and the testator was domiciled in Iowa, provisions of the will as to real and personal property and question as to named devisee attaining majority are to be determined according to the law of testator's domicile.

Boehm v Rohlfs, 224-226; 276 NW 105

Time from which will speaks—value of realty bequest determined as of date of testator's death. Where, prior to his death, testator had given land of the value of $15,600 to 4 of his 5 children and directed his executors to purchase, for a daughter who had rejected partial distribution before his death, good Iowa land of the value of $15,600, the will, which was clear and definite as to the intention of testator, spoke as of date of testator's death, and the value of $15,600 fixed for land to be purchased for daughter was required to be determined as of the date of testator's death.

In re Holdorf, 227-977; 289 NW 756

Devise identical with statute of descent—effect. A testamentary devise is inoperative when the property devised is exactly identical with the property which the statute law of descent grants in the absence of a will. If there be not such identity, the devise is operative.

Wehrman v Farmers & M. Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

Survivorship and substitution. The heirs of a devisee cannot be deemed to be substituted for the devisee (§11861, C., '24) when it appears that the testator and the devisee perished in a common disaster, and that there is no evidence that the devisee died before the testator died.

Carpenter v Severin, 201-969; 204 NW 448; 43 ALR 1340

Devise to class individually named. A devise to a class, the members of which are individually named, is presumptively a separate devise to each separate individual.

Friederichs v Friederichs, 205-505; 218 NW 271

Named beneficiaries—not "gift to a class". Where a will makes a gift to beneficiaries by name, the gift is not one to a class, even though the individuals named possess some quality or characteristic in common.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Disinheriting not favored by court. In construing wills the court will not look favorably upon a construction tending to disinherit those who would take under the law had there been no will.

Hudnutt v Ins. Co., 224-430; 275 NW 581

Intestacy avoided when possible. Courts will construe wills so as to avoid intestacy if possible. However, where the will is plain and the meaning of the testator free from doubt, and property is conveyed for lifetime only, without any gift over, the will can be construed only so as to make the remainder over intestate property.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Intestacy because of erroneous adjudication. An unappealed adjudication, tho erroneous, that one clause of a will conveyed no personal property except the "household goods and effects" of testator necessarily results in intestacy as to all other forms of personal property when the residuary clause is specifically confined to a conveyance of testator's "real or mixed" property.

In re Scheiner, 215-1101; 247 NW 532

Failure of specific legacy. The general rule is that the failure of a specific legacy to vest or become effective causes the amount so released to fail.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Construction. In a will where father devised realty to surviving spouse for life, then to three named children for life with remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, and one of such children died without lawful issue, after mother's death, remainder over of her share, being a one-third of said realty, became intestate property and through the father passed to the two remaining children in fee, subject to payment of taxes and debts against estate of deceased child to the extent of one-third interest in the lapsed estate.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Rule as to vesting. The use of the word "surviving" or an expression akin to it, in a will, to describe a class who are to take after an intervening life estate, refers to the termination of such life estate and not to the death of the testator. Such use indicates the testator intended to postpone the vesting of the gift over to the time when the life estate would end. However, this is not a rule of substantive law but one of interpretation and therefore will never be used to defeat a contrary intention where one appears with reasonable certainty.

Smith v Harris, 227-127; 287 NW 255

Title under will (?) or law of descent (?)—attending rights. Devisees whose shares under a will are, both in quantity and quality, exactly the shares which they, in the absence of a will, would take under the statute law of descent, are deemed to take title, not under the will, but under the said statutes of descent—the worthier title—and so taking they necessarily take the statutory exemptions, if any, attending the property.

Luckenbill v Bates, 220-871; 263 NW 811; 103 ALR 252

Issue of ownership—will—necessity to construe. In an equitable proceeding by a judgment creditor to discover property belonging to the judgment defendant, and to subject said property to the satisfaction of said judgment, the court, on the issue of ownership of property in question, may be called upon, and properly so, to construe a will—all necessary parties being before the court.

Bankers Tr. v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Devises—uncertainty—how cured. A devise for charitable purposes though apparently uncertain will be enforced if the court can from extrinsic evidence discover the testator's meaning.

In re Durham, 203-497; 211 NW 358

Uncertainty of titles not favored. Uncertainty as to titles to property is not favored and, when not in violation of the manifest intention of a testator, the court will construe a remainder to be vested rather than contingent, and will hold a lesser estate to be merged with the larger, or an estate for years to be merged with a remainder.

Hudnutt v Ins. Co., 224-430; 275 NW 581

Devisees' or legatees' title under will—non-necessity to file claim. A controversy over the ownership of property devised or bequeathed in a will is properly determinable in equity, and devisees or legatees of such property need not file claims against the estate therefor.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

Fee devised but alienation restricted—co-existence impossible. The fee simple title to real property cannot be devised coupled

V CONSTRUCTION OF WILLS—continued
(a) CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL—concluded with a restriction on alienation of said property.

Hudnutt v Ins. Co., 224-430; 275 NW 581

Probate—what adjudicated—nonestoppel to construe will after final report. Probate of a will being conclusive only as to its due execution and publication, a petition to construe a will is not a collateral attack on the order of probate; and such petition may be filed after the executor's final report, before which the petitioners were not aware of the construction which the executor would place on the will and therefore no estoppel arises from permitting executor to proceed with administration of the estate.

Maloney v Rose, 224-1071; 277 NW 572

Subscribing witnesses—sufficiency of request to sign. A will, to be valid, must be witnessed at the request of testator; however, the request need not be spoken but may be by acquiescence, by act or motion, or even by his silence when he knows that the witnesses are signing, though at the request of another, and he makes no objections, but the question of due execution should be left to the jury when it develops from testimony that one witness signed at the request of a beneficiary and that testator may not have, in any manner, requested the witnesses to sign.

Burgan v Kinnick, 225-804; 281 NW 734

Property and rights exempt—life insurance. The formal statement in a will that testator's debts shall be paid out of his estate is wholly insufficient to justify the conclusion that testator intended to appropriate to the payment of his debts the avails of life insurance payable to his personal representatives or to his estate, even tho, as a matter of law, such avails do become a part of his estate.

In re Grilk, 210-587; 231 NW 327

Disposal of insurance payable to estate—specific legacy. When life insurance is payable to an insured's estate, he may specifically dispose of the proceeds other than as provided by statute, but there must be an agreement or assignment to contrary; however, a specific disposition of insurance proceeds by terms of a will satisfies such requirement. (§8776, C., '35.)

In re Clemens, 226-31; 282 NW 730

When annuity vests. A testamentary life annuity becomes vested on the date when the annuity becomes due.

In re Hekel, 205-521; 218 NW 297

Testamentary provision in re guardianship. A testamentary request that "the court" appoint a guardian of the property devised to minors does not give the presiding judge a personal power to appoint, but contemplates an appointment by the court acting as a judicial tribunal.

Hodgen's Executors v Sproul, 221-1104; 267 NW 692

Establishing claim against deceased's realty—not action to construe will. In an equity action to establish a claim against deceased's real estate for services rendered deceased's widow to whom deceased devised such realty for life, with right to dispose of real estate for her necessary support, held, such action was not a "suit for construction" of will, merely because trial court's opinion mentioned word "construction", but not in such manner as to indicate that trial court held action to be for that purpose. A will which in plain and uncertain terms makes disposition of property is one which needs no construction.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Codicil—improper delegation of duties to executor. A first codicil devising an estate to trustees to be administered under county supervision in building roads, and a second codicil appointing one executor to aid the county in building roads, created a lawful charitable trust with the county as trustee and taxpayers as beneficiaries which was not necessarily invalid because the executor was given administrative duties in the road construction in violation of statute.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Approval of executor's report not construction of will. The fact that the court had approved an executor's report, wherein he had attempted to relieve an estate of inheritance tax on the ground that all devises in the will were contingent, does not mean that such holding is a construction of the will, since the construction of the will was not in issue.

Flanagan v Spalti, 225-1231; 282 NW 347

(b) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF CONSTRUCTION

Discussion. See 13 ILR 90—Individuals named in class gifts

Intention of testator. Intention of testator governs construction of will when not in contravention of some established rule of law or public policy.

Bell v Bell, 223-874; 273 NW 906

Smith v Harris, 227-127; 287 NW 255

General rule. In the construction of a will every provision thereof must be given effect, if possible, in order that the actual intention of the testator—the pole star of all construction—may govern.

In re Dodge, 207-374; 223 NW 106

Intention of testator. In construing provisions of a will, precedents and principles of interpretation are nothing more than aids employed as a means of ascertaining the expressed intent of the testator.

Smith v Harris, 227-127; 287 NW 255

Testator's intention. In construing a will the principal concern will be to ascertain and determine the intention of the testator, and it is the duty of the court, if it be reasonably possible, to give effect to all of the will's provisions.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Construction—when unnecessary. It is not necessary to construe a will where the intention of the testator is expressed in clear and unequivocal language.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Court's duty—testator's plain intention—technical words. Where the plain meaning of a will is to devise a life estate only, the supreme court will be bound by the plainly expressed intention of the testator—technical words being used in their technical sense.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Testator's intention. When the language of a will specifically devises a life estate to three named children of the testator as tenants in common, and the intention of the testator is clearly and unequivocally expressed that each of said children was entitled under the will to an undivided one-third interest for life only, it is unnecessary to resort to other parts of the will for further construction of such provision.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Testator's intention—ascertainment. The intentions of a testator must be ascertained from the terms of the will and such intentions must prevail. In a matter of doubtful construction, circumstances surrounding the execution of the will may be shown to aid in determining what the testator meant by the language used. The conduct of a testamentary trustee is not such a circumstance and is therefore not a material, evidential matter in determining testator's intention.

Freier v Longnecker, 227-366; 288 NW 444

Language plain and unequivocal—rules of construction inapplicable. It is a fundamental doctrine in the construction of wills that where language is plain and unequivocal, both in expression and meaning, there is no reason for construction and the rules of construction are inapplicable.

In re Holdorf, 227-977; 289 NW 756

Testator's intention—rules of construction—when used. Intention of testator will be determined from the actual language of the entire will, but if this is not possible, then rules of construction will be employed, not including rule in Shelley's case abrogated by statute.

Hudnutt v Ins. Co., 224-430; 275 NW 581

Intention of testator—derived from entire instrument. The provisions of a will should be construed, not as standing alone, but as related to all other provisions of the will, so that the intent of the testator may be gathered from the entire instrument.

Smith v Harris, 227-127; 287 NW 255

Unqualified provision needs no construction.

A testatrix who, in her original will devises:

1. Separate specific bequests to named nephews and nieces, and
2. The remainder of her estate to nine named nephews and nieces,

And later, by codicil, not only names four additional nephews and nieces as residuary legatees, but declares "it being my intention to divide my estate among all my nephews and nieces", must be deemed to have intended that nephews and nieces not named in the will or codicil should share in the residuary estate along with those named in the will or codicil as residuary legatees.

Reason: A will and a codicil constitute but one instrument. Every clause in a will must be given a meaning. No construction is necessary as to clause which is perfectly clear in expression and meaning.

In re Thomas, 220-50; 261 NW 622

Unambiguous will. Parol evidence bearing on the intent of a testator in an unambiguous will is wholly inadmissible.

Mann v Seiber, 209-76; 227 NW 614

Unambiguous will needs no construction. There is no occasion for an equity court to construe a will unless it appears that the will is ambiguous or uncertain in its terms.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Nonnecessity to construe. In equitable action for construction of wills of deceased husband and wife, where husband's will provided for payment of debts and funeral expenses and devised to his wife all his estate, and where wife's will contained certain specific bequests and directed that remainder and after-acquired property be divided into equal shares for distribution, held, both wills to be clear and unambiguous and therefore not open to construction. Actions for that purpose are entertained by a court of equity or probate only when there is uncertainty or ambiguity.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

Unambiguous terms—residuary legacy. The words "rest, residue, and remainder" are plain, unambiguous terms in a will providing a residuary legacy and need no construction.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

Punctuation as evincing intention. A comma may be so employed in a will as to be the fair equivalent of the words, "and also".

Buck v MacEachron, 209-1168; 229 NW 693

Informal will revealing animus testandi. An instrument, duly signed and witnessed, which is ambulatory in character and revocable at pleasure, and passes an interest only upon the death of the maker, is a valid will.

In re White, 209-1210; 229 NW 705

Intention controlling as of time will is made. The rule of intention in construing wills has reference to intention at time of execution of will, interpreted in light of facts and circumstances existing at time will is made.

In re Keeler, 225-1349; 282 NW 362

Death—presumption as to time. A provision in a will as to how property shall pass in case of the death of a devisee or legatee, presumptively refers to a death which occurs prior to the death of the testator.

Moore v Dick, 208-693; 225 NW 845

Daughter's interest under will—intent of testator considered. In a suit in equitable attachment against the interest of a daughter under her father's will, the intent of the testator is to be considered in determining whether he intended the daughter to have any right other than to part of the income.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Surrounding circumstances—when used. In construing a will, the intention of the testator as it appears from the will must control and, if the language be doubtful, surrounding circumstances may be shown to aid in determining what the testator intended by the language used.

Starr v Newman, 225-901; 281 NW 830

Parol or extrinsic evidence—children, grandchildren, nephews—testator's meaning admissible. Where such terms as children, grandchildren, or nephews are used in a will or a deed, and there are both legitimates and illegitimates and the testator has full knowledge of such fact, and the intention of the testator is not clearly expressed in the will, the use of such words creates no presumption, but the word is a neutral one and an ambiguity exists, and the intention of the testator or grantor must be determined not only from the provisions of will, but also in the light of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the will, and parol evidence is admissible to prove the intent of the testator or grantor.

In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

Misdescription of church as legatee—evidence supporting judgment. In probate proceedings where testator made bequests to the "First Adventis Church located on Bigley avenue in Charleston, West Virginia", whereas such church was located on Randolph street in Charleston, and Elmore Memorial Adventist Church was located on Bigley avenue, evidence sustained judgment that testator designated the First Adventis Church as legatee.

In re Canterbury, 226-586; 284 NW 807

Transposing clauses in order to ascertain intent. Where the residuary clause of a will grants a fee title, and is later followed by a clause empowering a third party to buy, on named terms, certain corporate shares of stock belonging to the deceased, the court will construe the will as tho the residuary clause were transferred to the end of the will, when such transposition clearly reflects the intent of the testator, and will avoid the claim that testator has granted an absolute fee and then, later, attempted the unallowable thing of controlling or clogging such fee.

In re Richter, 212-38; 234 NW 285

Partial invalidity—effect on valid part. The invalidity of a testamentary limitation—invalid because prohibited by the statute against perpetuities—will not affect the validity of preceding limitations which are otherwise valid, when it is manifest from the will that testator had no intent to make said preceding limitations dependent on said subsequent limitations—ultimately rejected as void.

Bankers Tr. v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Partial intestacy avoided. Will is to be construed if possible to avoid partial intestacy when language is uncertain or ambiguous, but where there is no ambiguity there is no room for construction.

Starr v Newman, 225-901; 281 NW 830

Intestacy avoided when possible. Courts will construe wills so as to avoid intestacy if possible. However, where the will is plain and the meaning of the testator free from doubt, and property is conveyed for lifetime only, without any gift over, the will can be construed only so as to make the remainder over intestate property.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Failure of specific legacy. The general rule is that the failure of a specific legacy to vest or become effective causes the amount so released to fail.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Identifying legatee—reopening for widow's testimony. In an action to construe a will to determine which of two similarly named churches the testator intended to designate as a beneficiary, the evidence being closed when discovery is made that testator's widow, who though present in court but not testifying, had knowledge as to which church was intended to be designated, the trial court abuses its discretion by refusing to reopen to admit her testimony.

In re Canterbury, 224-1080; 278 NW 210

Devise to class—predeceased children—intention from antenuptial contract. A testator's intention, when ascertainable is controlling, and the general rule which limits a devise to a class to only such devisees as are alive at testator's death, is not applicable where a contrary intent appears. So held in construing a will dividing the residue "among my children" where an antenuptial contract mentioned in the will, altho an extrinsic matter, was admitted to show testator's intention to include the heirs of his predeceased children among his children.

In re Huston, 224-420; 275 NW 149

Remainder to class—rule as to vesting. When there is an immediate gift to a class of persons, the gift vests in the members of that class who are existent at the time testator dies, unless a different intention appears from the context of the will. So held where the gift was "to the children living of my brothers and sisters living or dead".

In re Gordon, 213-6; 236 NW 37

Gift to a class. Where testator devised property to his wife and provided that "after the death of my said wife * * * I hereby give * * * said remaining property to my surviving children, but if there be no surviving children then said property shall go to my heirs at law * * *" and where the widow of testator's son, who predeceased the testator's wife, brought partition action and claimed interest in property through testator's son under said provision of testator's will, held, that the remainder "to my surviving children" constituted a gift to a class and did not refer to those children surviving the testator but instead referred only to those children surviving his wife, hence it followed that the son, who outlived the testator but predeceased testator's wife, took no part of the remainder and that upon the son's death intestate no interest therein passed to his widow.

Smith v Harris, 227-127; 287 NW 255

Named beneficiaries. Where a will makes a gift to beneficiaries by name, the gift is not to a class, even though the individuals named possess some quality or characteristic in common.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Intention of testator—remainders—"surviving grandchildren" interpreted. Where a will giving life estates to testatrix's surviving spouse and children provides on termination of the life estates that fee title shall pass "to the surviving grandchildren", this means surviving grandchildren of testatrix as a class and does not mean that in each separate tract the surviving children of that respective life tenant take the remainder, nor do testatrix's heirs take as a whole under rules of descent as in cases of intestacy.

Bell v Bell, 223-874; 273 NW 906

Construction—joint life tenants. In a will where father devised realty to surviving spouse for life, then to three named children for life with remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, and one of such children died without lawful issue, after mother's death, remainder over of her share, being a one-third of said realty, became intestate property and through the father passed to the two remaining children in fee, subject to payment of taxes and debts against estate of deceased child to the extent of one-third interest in the lapsed-estate.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Demurrer admitting paternity of illegitimate child. In an application in probate to construe the word "grandchild" in a will which left the residuary estate to children and grandchildren of testatrix's deceased brother-in-law, and a contention that an illegitimate child of brother-in-law's son was included in such word "grandchild", a demurrer to the petition admitted allegations that brother-in-law's son was father of such illegitimate, and that testatrix knew of such relationship at time will was executed.

In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

Named legatees surviving testator—legatee dead when will executed—heirs excluded. A will giving the residuary estate "unto those of the following named persons who are living at my death" will not be construed to include the heirs of one of those named persons on the ground that such particular named person was known by the testator to be dead at the time he made the will. This situation is not such a latent ambiguity as will warrant court in disregarding plainly expressed intent of testator to bequeath to named persons surviving testator.

In re Kubbernus, 224-1077; 277 NW 717

"Heirs" not synonymous with "children"—intention controlling. The word "heirs" when used in a will cannot be construed to mean "children" unless that was the manifest intention of testator gathered from a reading of the will as a whole.

Hudnutt v Ins. Co., 224-430; 275 NW 581

"Heirs"—inaccurate use of term—intent controls. A testamentary provision that testator's "heirs" shall participate in a specified trust fund will be deemed to include a granddaughter, even tho under the then existing circumstances she is not, technically, an heir, it appearing that testator had in other parts of his will listed his heirs and had therein included his said granddaughter.

Slavens v Bailey, 222-1091; 270 NW 367

Limitation on term "lawful heirs". A devise to "my lawful heirs", followed immediately by a specific enumeration of named children of testator, may, in view of the circumstances surrounding testator, necessitate a construction that testator intended to exclude all his children except those specifically named.

Westerfelt v Smith, 202-966; 211 NW 380

“Death without heirs”. Will construed and, in view of the environment of the testator and of the facts concededly known to him, held (1) that a provision to the effect that, if the beneficiary of a trust “dies without leaving any heirs”, the remainder shall go to some old ladies’ home, embraced a death either before or after the death of testator; and (2) that the term “heirs” must be construed as tho followed by the words “of his body”.

In re Clifton, 207-71; 218 NW 926

Adopted child not direct heir. A devise to “my heirs”, naming two sons and a daughter, with proviso that if the daughter die “without direct heirs”, the property should be divided between the two named sons, carries no interest to an adopted daughter of the deceased daughter, the will clearly evincing testator’s intention to devise his property to his own blood.

Cook v Underwood, 209-641; 228 NW 629

Residuary devise to “estate” of another. A clause in a will devising the residuary part of testator’s estate “to the estate of my mother” passes nothing to the heirs of the mother.

Cookman v Lindsay, 215-564; 246 NW 268

Deed (?) or will (?). A warranty deed subject to a life estate in grantor’s surviving spouse will not be deemed testamentary because of a clause wherein grantor ineffectually attempted to restrain the alienation of the land by the grantee.

Goodman v Andrews, 203-979; 213 NW 605

Deed (?) or will (?). An executed and delivered deed of conveyance in the ordinary form conveys an interest in praesenti—is not testamentary—even tho it provides (1) that “it shall not take effect until after the death” of the grantor, and (2) that the grantor does not “give up possession” to the grantee during the life of the grantor, and (3) that the grantor “reserves the use and income of the premises as long as he lives”.

Hall v Hall, 206-1; 218 NW 35

Bardsley v Spencer, 215-616; 244 NW 275

“May”—“must”. “May” cannot, manifestly, be given the imperative meaning of “must”, unless there be substantial warrant for such construction.

Brickson v Schwabach, 219-1368; 261 NW 518

Precatory words. The provision of a will to the effect that the executor shall “see” that a named legacy is invested in a home for the legatee at a named place creates no trust, and must be deemed precatory only.

Davenport v Sandeman, 204-927; 216 NW 55

Precatory words—ineffectiveness and repugnancy. When property, real and personal, is absolutely and unconditionally devised, the subsequent expression by the testator of a naked “wish” that the devisee will make a named disposition of certain of the property will be treated as nugatory, both because the expression is a mere wish, binding on no one, and because, if it be deemed more than a mere wish it is repugnant to the absolute devise.

In re Campbell, 209-954; 229 NW 247

Trusts—precatory statements—legal effect. The construction of a testamentary trust cannot be controlled by a written, precatory statement made by the testatrix subsequent to the execution of the will and not even made a part thereof.

In re Whitman, 221-1114; 266 NW 28

Trust—precatory words as basis. Expression in a will, following an absolute devise of property, of an apparent wish that said devisee will, on his death, distribute said property among named persons, cannot be deemed to create a trust on behalf of said persons unless it is clear from the will as a whole that said so-called wish was not, in fact, a wish, but a mandatory direction.

In re Hellman, 221-552; 266 NW 36

Trusts—rent-free occupancy by beneficiary. A testamentary trust manifestly cannot be construed to authorize one of the beneficiaries to occupy a portion of the trust estate free of rent when the trust instrument contains no such authorization, but clearly provides that the net income of the entire trust estate shall be divided in a stated manner among named beneficiaries.

In re Whitman, 221-1114; 266 NW 28

Trusts—“net income” defined. “Net income” does not mean the general income of the estate without provision for the payment of just charges, taxes, and reasonable repair and upkeep. On the contrary, it means the income remaining, if any, after such charges and expenses are taken care of. (So held as to a testamentary trust which provided for the keeping of the trust estate intact and for the annual distribution of the net income.)

In re Whitman, 221-1114; 266 NW 28

Power of sale—repugnancy. There is no repugnancy between a testamentary provision to the effect that the executor may freely sell the testator’s real estate and a provision to the effect that testator’s wife shall be given the balance of the estate after certain charges are paid.

In re Wicks, 207-264; 222 NW 843

Equitable conversion and right to reconvert. When a testator directs that named real estate be sold by his executor and the entire proceeds be paid to a legatee, said legatee may make and enforce an election to take the real estate, instead of the proceeds, especially when such election does not interfere with the rights and duties imposed on the executor.

In re Warner, 209-948; 229 NW 241

Absolute devise with subsequent limitation—nonapplicability of rule. The rule of construction to the effect that a devise of property in fee is unaffected by a subsequent clause which seeks to limit the fee, has no application to a will which in one clause devises property without specifying any particular estate which the devisee shall take, and in a subsequent clause provides that the devised property shall be placed in trust for the benefit of the devisee and pass to named remaindermen on the death of the devisee.

In re McCauley, 213-262; 235 NW 738

Contradictory devises. An unconditional devise and bequest by testator to his wife of all of testator's property "in case she survives" testator necessarily renders nugatory all subsequent contrary devises and bequests in said will, when the wife survives testator.

Phillips v Phillips, 217-374; 251 NW 511

Absolute bequest—later repugnant provision disregarded. Where a codicil made an absolute bequest of a residuary estate to a county to be used in paving a highway, and a later provision in the codicil gave certain directions to the executor and imposed conditions for acceptance of the bequest by the county, such later conditions were repugnant and would defeat the purpose of the testator and must be disregarded when void in delegating power to the executor in violation of statute, and the intention of the testator as expressed in the first provision must be given effect to prevent intestacy.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Repugnant limitation following devise of property in fee—void. Principle reaffirmed that a testator cannot make an absolute devise of his property in fee and in a subsequent clause destroy or place a limitation on such title. The subsequent limitation is void for repugnancy.

In re Bigham, 227-1023; 290 NW 11

Irreconcilable provisions—controlling force of codicil. As between two irreconcilable provisions,—one in the will as originally executed, and the other in a codicil to said will,—the provision in the codicil must control as the last expression of the intent of the testator. So held where the irreconcilable provisions related to the right of a legatee and devisee to take his legacy and devise free from his debts to the estate.

In re Flannery, 221-265; 264 NW 68

Will and two codicils construed together—equivocal expressions of revocation. A will and first codicil were not revoked by a second codicil providing that it should prevail in case of conflict between it and the two previous instruments, and the three instruments stood as the final testamentary disposition of the testator with the second codicil displacing the others only insofar as it was clearly inconsistent with them, altho the second codicil was referred to as a "last will and testament" and declared the previous will and codicil to be revoked, as the revocation of a will depends on intent to be gathered from all the papers and attending circumstances and cannot be overridden by equivocal expressions of revocation.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Dependent relative revocation. Where a conflict exists between a second codicil and the will and first codicil, the second codicil prevails, but under the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, if the later codicil contains an invalid provision, such provision does not revoke the provisions with which it conflicts in the earlier will and codicil. Where a will and two codicils left property to a county for use in building roads, even if a provision in the second codicil was invalid in improperly delegating county powers to the executor, the doctrine prevented a complete revocation of the previous documents, but they were revoked only to give effect to the second codicil, as there was no change in the purpose of the will, but only a change in the manner of effectuating the gift.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Devise subject to unenforceable debts—requirements. The will of a spouseless testator will not be held to devise testator's homestead to his children subject to debts which could not be otherwise enforced against said homestead, unless the intent so to do is evidenced by testamentary language which is unequivocal and imperative. The usual and formal paragraph in the preliminary part of a will directing the payment of "all my just debts" is quite insufficient to evince such intent.

Luckenbill v Bates, 220-871; 263 NW 811; 103 ALR 252

Devise of unidentified property—effect on residuary clause. A definite residuary clause in a will must be given effect as testator wrote it, even tho other paragraphs of the will make bequests of property which cannot be identified, and thereby the residuary legatee is unintentionally enriched.

In re Spahr, 210-17; 230 NW 434

Equitable conversion—reconversion. Real estate which has once been theoretically converted into personal property ipso facto by the terms of a will (which directed that the property be sold and the proceeds divided) is not necessarily reconverted into real estate by

(b) GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF CONSTRUCTION—concluded

the institution of partition proceedings for a sale of the land and a division of the proceeds, nor by an agreement in such proceedings, signed by the attorney of an heir whose interest was involved, to the effect that the land should be sold and the "interest" of such heir be held to abide the determination of such interest.

Dever v Turner, 200-926; 205 NW 755

Equitable conversion—nonapplicability of doctrine. The doctrine of "equitable conversion" will not be applied to a will (1) from a naked, nonmandatory power to sell the real estate; (2) when no absolute necessity to sell exists in order to execute the will; (3) when there is no such blending in the will of realty and personalty as to evince an intention by testator to create a fund out of both realty and personalty and to bequeath the same as money; and (4) when residuary beneficiaries will be detrimentally affected by the application of such doctrine, contrary to the intent of the testator.

In re Dodge, 207-374; 223 NW 106

Equitable conversion as necessity. The distribution provided in a will may conclusively imply a purpose on the part of testator to convert his real estate into money.

Emmack v Tish, 214-794; 243 NW 517

Equitable conversion under will. The proceeds of foreign real estate sold by an administrator with the will annexed, under explicit direction of the will, and for the purpose of making distribution under the will, must be deemed personalty with resulting consequence that the administrator is responsible therefor; and it is quite immaterial that he did not probate the will in said foreign state.

In re Jackson, 217-1046; 252 NW 775; 91 ALR 937

Equitable conversion—when doctrine applicable. A will which provides that "all (my) real estate * * * shall be divided as follows: $1,000 shall go to my son John, and the balance shall be divided equally among my other nine children" (naming them) works no equitable conversion of said real estate into personalty. Said provision in favor of John creates no absolute necessity to sell said real estate in order to execute the will.

Grady v Grady, 221-561; 266 NW 285

Equitable conversion—deduction from share. Tho testator's lands are, from the moment of testator's death, deemed equitably converted into personalty by a mandatory, testamentary direction to the executor to sell and divide the proceeds among testator's children, yet the rentals of said lands, accruing prior to an actual sale of the lands, belong to the estate, and in case the lessee be a legatee and fails to pay said rentals, the amount thereof may be deducted by the executor from the share of said legatee, a right which is superior to the right of one who, with knowledge of said rental proceedings, acquires an equitable lien of said legatee's share in the estate.

Ihle v Ihle, 222-1086; 270 NW 452

Equitable conversion—absolute necessity for required. A testator may, in his will, effect an equitable conversion as to his realty, or personalty, or both, (1) by explicitly directing the sale of the property and a division of the money thus and so, or (2) by so blending and treating both classes of property as to reveal an intention to effect such conversion, but if he does neither, no equitable conversion will be implied unless absolutely necessary in order to execute the will.

Brickson v Schwebach, 219-1368; 261 NW 518

Shares—mathematical formula for computing. When a will provides that twenty devisees shall share equally in the residue of the estate except that a named devisee shall have "a share and a half", the said residue must be divided by twenty and one-half. The quotient will represent the share of each of nineteen devisees, and the balance of the total residue will represent the share of the favored devisee.

In re Thomas, 220-50; 261 NW 622

Nondisposition of property—effect. An instrument which purports to be a will, but which not only neglects to make any disposition of property but specifically disclaims any intent to make such disposition, is not a valid will.

In re Manatt, 214-432; 239 NW 524

Nontestamentary instrument. A declaration of trust in and over real estate for the benefit of the trustor and named beneficiaries and a contemporaneously executed and delivered warranty deed to the same property to the trustee cannot be deemed a will even tho the trustor-grantor reserves in the declaration of trust complete control, management, and dominion over the property during his lifetime, even to the power to revoke the trust and to demand a reconveyance, or to dispose of the property by testament.

Keck v McKinstry, 206-1121; 221 NW 851

Joint and mutual wills. Will construed and held to be an individual will.

Mann v Seiber, 209-76; 227 NW 614

(c) NATURE OF ESTATE OR INTEREST CREATED

1 Estates in General

Discussion. See 1 ILB 87—Power of disposal

Perpetuities—limitations void ab initio. Testamentary attempts by means of limitations to create in property contingent interests or estates, which will not necessarily become vested within the period of time prescribed by the statute prohibiting perpetuities, are futile, all such limitations being void ab initio. (§10127, C., '35.)

Bankers Tr. v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Share of devisee—per capita (?) or per stirpes (?). A devise which makes provision in a named amount for all the heirs of a known deceased daughter of testator's, and an identical provision in the same amount for each of several named living children, and then provides that the remainder of the estate shall be "equally divided between my above named children, their heirs or assigns share and share alike", precludes the heirs of the deceased daughter from taking per capita.

Canfield v Jameson, 201-784; 208 NW 369

Devise requiring taking per stirpes. A devise to testator's unnamed grandchildren by a living son; also to testator's unnamed grandchildren by a deceased son; and also to certain other of testator's individually named and living children, "share and share alike", will be deemed to devise to each set of grandchildren one child's share or portion. In other words, each set of grandchildren takes per stirpes and not per capita, such being the general indicated intent of the will as a whole; especially is this true in view of the law's favor for such result in case of doubt.

Claude v Schutt, 211-117; 233 NW 41; 78 ALR 1375

Conveyance and devise of same property. A deed of conveyance in the ordinary form and placed in proper escrow for delivery immediately after the death of grantor conveys full title even tho the grantor a few days after the execution of the deed devises the same property to the same grantee.

In re Champion, 206-6; 218 NW 37

Life estate (?) or fee (?). A devise of testator's entire estate to his wife, "for and during all the term of her natural life in fee simple", conveys an absolute estate—one in fee simple. (It is noted that the will makes no mention of a "remainder", and that no children had been born to the parties.)

Luitjens v Larson, 222-1320; 271 NW 239

Fee (?) or life (?). A testamentary devise, to testator's wife of specified real estate "to be and become the absolute property" of said wife, must be deemed to convey a fee simple estate unless accompanied by some other valid and enforceable provision manifesting a contrary intent. So held where the contrary intent was sought to be drawn from other provisions of the will which were either (1) precatory, or (2) repugnant to the granted fee.

Baker v Elder, 223-395; 272 NW 153

Equal standing of specific devisees. Neither of two different, specific devisees of real estate, irrespective of their particular location or position in the will, can be deemed junior or inferior to the other when neither is made subject to the other.

In re Glandon, 219-1094; 260 NW 12

Specific devise—liability for debts. A specific devise of real estate which not only devises the property, but requires the testator's estate to discharge the mortgage thereon, cannot, in case the estate and all nonspecific devisees are insufficient to pay said mortgage and other debts, be construed as casting upon another specific devise of real estate which is not made subject to the former devise, the entire burden of discharging said mortgage and other debts. Each of said specific devisees must bear said burden in the ratio of their separate value to their combined value.

In re Glandon, 219-1094; 260 NW 12

Particular estate. A "particular estate" is an estate for life or for years for the reason that it is only a small part or portion of the inheritance.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Words "to own"—conveying absolute title. A devise of "one-half of all property I may own at the time of my death" to testator's wife "to own, hold and enjoy as her own", conveys an absolute title to one half of testator's estate.

In re Bigham, 227-1023; 290 NW 11

Prohibiting incumbrance. A testator who makes an absolute devise, of a certain interest in property, may not validly prohibit the devisee from thereafter incumbering the property.

Bogenrief v Law, 222-1303; 271 NW 229

Devise for charity—power of municipality to take. Devises and bequests for charitable purposes are such favorites of the law that "they will not be construed void if, by law, they can be made good". Will construed and held that the conditions attending a devise and bequest to a municipality of a charitable trust in the form of a free public library were conditions subsequent and not conditions precedent to the vesting of said trust, and that said conditions were within the legal power of the municipality to accept—under prescribed statutory procedure—and perform.

In re Nugen, 223-428; 272 NW 638

Estate "to heirs of father at death of husband"—vested interest. A will devising a portion of an estate "to the legal heirs of my father to be distributed * * * at the death of my husband" vests this portion in such heirs of the father as were living at the time of testatrix's death—the father being dead at that time.

Flanagan v Spalti, 225-1231; 282 NW 347

Devisee predeceasing testator—rights of devisee's heirs. Where testator devised to his wife one half of all the property he should own at time of his death, "to own, hold and enjoy as her own", and when the wife predeceased him, her heirs inherited one half of all the property of the testator in fee simple, under the anti-lapse statute.

In re Bigham, 227-1023; 290 NW 11

Paragraph limiting devise to specific heirs—noneffect on devise to wife in preceding paragraph. Where, in a will, a testator devised to his wife one half of all the property owned at the time of his death, "to own, hold and enjoy as her own", and when, in subsequent paragraph "subject to clauses one and two of this will", he devised all of his property to named devisees or their children "in case of the death of any of the beneficiaries named herein" and, if no children, then to the other beneficiaries "named in this clause of the will equally", then, even tho devise to wife was not absolute, it was neither limited nor modified by the language bequeathing estate to named devisees, since the wife was excluded from such paragraph.

In re Bigham, 227-1023; 290 NW 11

Selling homestead for debts—necessity of election between will and dower. An order of court to an executrix to sell real estate, to pay claims, is erroneous where the only real estate was the homestead, and the surviving husband, who was willed one third of the estate, had never been required to make an election as to whether or not he took under the will. In such case the presumption remains that he took his distributive share.

In re Dyer, 225-1238; 282 NW 359

Trusts which vest no inheritable interest in beneficiary. A testator who bequeaths directly to his wife a specific fund in trust, with directions to the wife to pay to their daughter for the latter's "care and support" such part of the accruing interest on said fund as the wife "shall deem advisable", and such part of the principal of said fund as the wife "shall deem advisable", will not be deemed to have intended to vest in the daughter any interest in said fund which would survive her death, it appearing as side lights that the daughter was debt-ridden, was possessed of an impecunious, inefficient, and likewise debt-ridden husband, and that the testator, prior to his death, had supported said daughter.

In re Bunting, 220-186; 261 NW 922

Unambiguous life income trust—annuity policy substitution nonpermissible. Under a clear, unambiguous will setting up a trust fund and providing for a $30-per-month bequest to be paid therefrom to a beneficiary as long as she lived, a different method of paying said bequest, by purchase of an annuity for said beneficiary, not permitted.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Establishing trust to defeat heir's judgment creditors. When a will devised all of testatrix's property to daughter in trust, directing trustee to make a monthly payment to a third party and to transfer a one-fourth interest in the trust estate to each of two grandchildren when they reached a certain age, and providing that daughter should have a one-half interest in the estate during her life only in the event obligations to her judgment creditors were barred or satisfied, such will established a trust, and did not repose entire beneficial interest in daughter. Nor was the trust extinguished by a merger of daughter's legal and equitable estate so that property could be subjected to satisfaction of creditor's judgments, because in equity the doctrine of merger will not be invoked if it would frustrate the testatrix's expressed intentions or if there is some other reason for keeping the estates separate.

Freier v Longnecker, 227-366; 288 NW 444

2 Qualified, Defeasible, or Conditional Fee

Distinction between a vested and a contingent interest. In an action to partition land, it is not uncertainty of time of enjoyment in the future, but the uncertainty of the right to that enjoyment, which marks difference between a vested and a contingent interest.

Flanagan v Spalti, 225-1231; 282 NW 347

Restraint of marriage. That part of a devise to a testator's widowed daughter-in-law which provides that the property shall pass to her children upon her remarriage is not void because in undue restraint of marriage.

Anderson v Crawford, 202-207; 207 NW 571; 45 ALR 1216

Devise of conditional ownership. Where a will created a trust, and provided, in legal effect, that, if the beneficiary died without heirs of his body, the corpus of the trust should pass in trust to another designated beneficiary, the interest which the first beneficiary takes is a conditional or determinable ownership, and is wholly terminated by the death of the said first beneficiary unsurvived by any heir of his body.

In re Clifton, 207-71; 218 NW 926

Conditional limitation—obligation to pay taxes. A testamentary proviso which provides that if the life tenant "neglects to pay the taxes on said real estate within six months after they become delinquent", the life estate shall automatically terminate, must be deemed to refer to all the taxes payable during a given year, and not to an installment thereof. It follows that a six months delinquency on the first yearly installment of taxes works no forfeiture.

Churchill v Bank, 211-1168; 235 NW 480

Conditional designation of beneficiaries. A will which is executed when the testator is an unmarried man and which, in one paragraph, appoints as his beneficiaries (1) testator's mother if she be living at the time of his death, (2) testator's nephews and nieces, if the mother be not living at the time of his death, and (3) testator's wife if testator be married at the time of his death,—carries the entire estate to testator's wife even tho testator's mother survives him.

In re Pottorff, 216-1370; 250 NW 463

Conditional bequest. A testamentary bequest payable on condition that the beneficiary shall "abstain from all those things that lead him into a dissipated life and make him an undesirable citizen" and that at a named age he shall be "a reasonable good citizen" must be construed as vesting the trustees with a fair and good-faith discretion in determining whether the conditions have been complied with. Evidence held not to show an abuse of such discretion.

In re Sams' Est., 219-374; 258 NW 682

Conditional bequest. A testamentary bequest payable on condition that the beneficiary "go on and complete his education through the high school and four years of college course", coupled with a provision that the "substantial" fulfillment of such condition is left to the "fair judgment and opinion" of the trustees, must be construed as authorizing the trustees, in good faith, to find a fulfillment on the basis of an acquired education other than that acquired under a regular and established high school and college curriculum, but, in their fair judgment, equal thereto.

In re Sams' Est., 219-374; 258 NW 682

Nature of estate—conditional fee. Altho a person has, under a bequest, only a conditional fee in certain property, it is nonetheless a fee which gives complete right of ownership to the grantee until the condition arises under which the fee is broken. It follows that, if there is a reverter, only the original sum received is returnable to the estate of the testator.

Frazier v Wood, 219-36; 255 NW 647; 257 NW 768

Remainder over—absence of issue—no lapse. In a will where father devised realty to surviving spouse for life, then to three named children for life with remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, the fact that there were no grandchildren in being at the time of mother's death did not lapse the remainder so as to cause it to descend intestate and merge with life estate in children, since, at mother's death, the life estate in children was a "particular estate" supporting the contingent remainder, which was not required to vest until termination of such life estate.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

3 Life Estates

Shelley's case—intent of testator to nullify rule. While the rule in Shelley's case applied to wills as well as deeds, yet, wills being construed more liberally than deeds, if the intent of the testator appears to create a life estate, the rule did not apply.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Life estate (?) or fee (?). An unambiguous will of property for the devisee's "perfectly free use during his lifetime", without any gift over, conveys a life estate only. It is not permissible to construe such a will as conveying the fee simply to avoid intestacy.

Horak v Stanley, 216-318; 249 NW 166

Life estate (?) or fee, in effect (?). A bequest of "the annual income from $7,000 invested in securities and held by my executor for this purpose", construed and, in view of the entire will, and the various bequests therein contained, held, to grant a life estate only of the income, and not an absolute grant of the $7,000.

In re Vail, 223-551; 273 NW 107

Life estate (?) or fee (?). A clear grant of a life estate, with remainder over, is not converted into a fee because of the addition of a power in the life tenant to dispose of the property.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

Life estates—remainder over in fee per stirpes to lawful issue. When a will provides for a devise of realty to wife for life, then to three named children for life as tenants in common and remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, held, life estate vested in children after wife's death with contingent remainder over in fee, as provided by statute—the life estates being the particular estate supporting the contingent estate which would vest, upon death of each of testator's named children, in that child's lawful issue, if any.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Life estate with remainder over—absence of issue. In a will where father devised realty to surviving spouse for life, then to three named children for life with remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, the fact that there were no grandchildren in being at the time of mother's death did not lapse the remainder so as to cause it to descend intestate and merge with life estate in children, since, at mother's death, the life estate in children was a "particular estate" supporting the contingent remainder, which was not required to vest until termination of such life estate.

V CONSTRUCTION OF WILLS—continued
(c) NATURE OF ESTATE OR INTEREST CREATED—continued

3. Life Estates—concluded

Power to dispose of during lifetime only. A will, giving a widow a life estate and in the same clause giving her “full power to dispose of any and all property,” and containing other bequests to remaindermen, does not authorize widow as life tenant to dispose of the property by her will.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

Life estate with power of disposal. A devise of property to a wife “for * * * life with power to dispose of and pass clear title to * * * said property during her lifetime, if she so elects”, with remainder over, does not create an estate in fee, but creates a life estate, with unqualified power in the wife, during her lifetime, to dispose of said property for any purpose, even without receiving value therefor.

In re Cooksey, 203-754; 208 NW 337

Power to convey. A will which couples a life estate with substantially unlimited power in the life tenant to dispose of the corpus of the estate for the support of testator's daughter arms the life tenant with power to execute a legal conveyance of the entire estate to the daughter.

Karolusson v Paonessa, 207-127; 222 NW 431

Life estate with power to sell. A life estate coupled with a superadded power to sell, and to reinvest, and to use any of the property or income, construed and held to authorize the life tenant to sell only for the purpose of her maintenance, and that any unconsumed income remained in the estate of the testator and passed to the remainderman.

Brown v Brown, 213-998; 240 NW 910

Life use with power to convey—scope of power. A devise by a husband to his wife of the “absolute use and control” of all his property, with power to “dispose of the same in such manner as she may see fit”, with devise to his children of “whatever of my property may be left”, at the wife's death, arms the wife with power absolutely to convey the property for purposes other than her support and maintenance.

Volz v Kaemmerle, 211-995; 234 NW 805

Life estate with power to sell not devise in fee. The devise of a life estate with broad power in the devisee to sell any or all the property as he may see fit, free from any duty to account for the proceeds, does not constitute a devise of a fee simple estate when the testator clearly manifests in her will an intent to devise, and does devise, as a remainder that part of the property which the life devisee does not sell.

Mann v Seibert, 209-76; 227 NW 614

Power to dispose of property—transfer to self. A widow as life tenant, under a will permitting her to “dispose” of property, may not transfer to herself, as such transaction would be receiving instead of disposing of such property.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

Life estate—right to rents and profits. A devise of real estate to testator's wife “she to have the use, benefit and rents from the same during her lifetime, it being my intention to give her a life estate in all of my property only”, conveys to the remaindermen no right to the rents and profits of the land accruing after the death of testator and before the death of the wife.

Whitehill v Whitehill, 211-475; 233 NW 748

Right of possession—lease. A will (1) containing the usual provisions relative to debts, funeral expenses, etc., (2) devising the “revenue” derived from the remainder of the property, partly real estate, to a named beneficiary, and (3) appointing an executor and delegating to him full power to administer the estate “in the best manner that his judgment shall dictate in the interest of my beneficiary”, gives to the executor, and not to the beneficiary, the right to the possession of the property. It follows that a lease of the real estate, executed by the executor, is valid.

In re Jensen, 216-15; 247 NW 392

Life tenant as remainderman. A devise of land for life, and of the remainder under a condition which may wholly fail, may very clearly evince an intent that, in case the devise of the remainder does fail, the life tenant shall take not only the life estate, but the remainder, as well; and under such circumstances, it is quite immaterial whether this result be deemed to come about through devise by implication or by descent of an intestate estate, the life tenant being testator's sole heir.

Harvey v Clayton, 206-187; 220 NW 25

4 Remainders

Discussion. See 7 ILB 111—Remainder created by direction to divide on death of life tenant; 9 ILB 313—Acceleration of vested remainders by renunciation

Void remainders. Property embraced in a void, testamentary limitation—void because prohibited by the statute relating to perpetuities—passes to those persons who would have been entitled thereto under the laws of intestacy had the limitation been omitted from the will, and a judgment creditor may, by proper procedure, have a lien established thereon.

Bankers Tr. v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Vested remainder—transfer and alienation. Remainders, whether vested or contingent, may be transferred, alienated, or incumbered.

Bogenrief v Law, 222-1303; 271 NW 229

Rights of children—devise of remainder. Homestead property passing by will to testator's children by way of remainder after the termination of a life estate in the surviving spouse is not exempt from the antecedent debts of such children.

Arispe Bank v Werner, 201-484; 207 NW 578

Will subjecting homestead to debts of life tenant. A provision in a will, setting up a life estate with remainder over to certain devisees, after all indebtedness and funeral expenses of the life tenant are paid, subjects the estate to a claim for funeral expenses of the life tenant, even if it was his homestead, such provision being a condition upon the devise to the remaindermen.

De Cook v Johnson, 226-246; 284 NW 118

Vested or contingent estates. The estate of a remainderman must be deemed vested upon the probate of a will devising a life estate to testator's wife with remainder to testator's children.

Diagonal Bank v Nichols, 219-342; 258 NW 700

Remainders—vested (?) or contingent (?)—general rule. A remainder must be deemed vested, generally speaking, when a designated taker is living and ready to go into possession instantly upon the termination of the preceding estate, even tho such person may, in the course of time, die prior to the preceding life tenant.

Bogenrief v Law, 222-1303; 271 NW 229

Remainders—vested (?) or contingent (?). A vested remainder is an estate which passes by will or other conveyance with possession and enjoyment postponed until a particular preceding estate terminates—an estate which is invariably fixed by the will or other conveyance "to remain to certain determinate persons". A remainder is not vested when it is dependent on the grantee being alive when the preceding life tenant dies or remarries.

Skelton v Cross, 222-262; 268 NW 499; 109 ALR*129

Intention of testator—remainders—"surviving grandchildren" interpreted. Where a will giving life estates to testatrix's surviving spouse and children provides on termination of the life estates that fee title shall pass "to the surviving grandchildren", this means surviving grandchildren of testatrix as a class and does not mean that in each separate tract the surviving children of that respective life tenant take the remainder, nor do testatrix's heirs take as a whole under rules of descent as in cases of intestacy.

Bell v Bell, 223-874; 273 NW 906

Gift to a class. Where testator devised property to his wife and provided that "after the death of my said wife * * * I hereby give * * * said remaining property to my surviving children, but if there be no surviving children then said property shall go to my heirs at law * * *" and where the widow of testator's son, who predeceased the testator's wife, brought partition action and claimed interest in property through testator's son under said provision of testator's will, held, that the remainder "to my surviving children" constituted a gift to a class and did not refer to those children surviving the testator but instead referred only to those children surviving his wife, hence it followed that the son, who outlived the testator but predeceased testator's wife, took no part of the remainder and that upon the son's death intestate no interest therein passed to his widow.

Smith v Harris, 227-127; 287 NW 255

Remainder to class—rule as to vesting. The use of the word "surviving" or an expression akin to it, in a will, to describe a class who are to take after an intervening life estate, refers to the termination of such life estate and not to the death of the testator. Such use indicates the testator intended to postpone the vesting of the gift over to the time when the life estate would end. However, this is not a rule of substantive law but one of interpretation and therefore will never be used to defeat a contrary intention where one appears with reasonable certainty.

Smith v Harris, 227-127; 287 NW 255

Equalizing devises. Will construed and held to devise a remainder to devisees equally, and to require one devisee to take a designated property at a stated price.

In re Bowman, 209-49; 227 NW 510

Remainder—contingent (?) or vested (?). The remainder is contingent in a devise of a life estate to a daughter with the remainder to the "surviving children", if any, of the life tenant at the time of her death; otherwise to certain designated devisees.

Saunders v Wilson, 207-526; 220 NW 344; 60 ALR 786

Vested (?) or contingent (?) remainder—postponement of enjoyment. A will which provides that "At the death of my said wife I devise and bequeath" to a named person "the balance of my estate", creates a remainder which vests absolutely upon the death of the testator.

In re Phearman, 211-1137; 232 NW 826; 82 ALR 674

Remainder to nephew—death after majority by marriage—vested (?) or contingent (?) estate. A will giving a life estate to a sister and the remainder to a nephew receivable immediately upon sister's death if nephew had reached majority, or if he had not attained majority, providing for a guardianship during minority, creates not a contingent but a vested remainders with only the enjoyment postponed, and as such, on the death of the nephew after reaching majority by marriage, goes to his widow rather than as residuary property in the estate.

Boehm v Rohlf, 224-226; 276 NW 105

Right to possession on expiration of life estate—vested remainder. A person in being who, under a will, would have an immediate right to possession of the lands devised upon the termination of a life tenancy therein provided, has a vested remainder.

Flanagan v Spalti, 225-1231; 282 NW 347

Devise with remainder over—remaindermen eligible. The rule that survivorship refers to the death of the testator is confined to those cases in which there is no other period to which survivorship can be referred, and where a devise is preceded by a life estate or other prior interest it takes effect in favor of only those who survive the period of distribution.

Smith v Harris, 227-127; 287 NW 255

Remainders—absurd results. A testator who has, in one clause of his will, clearly devised a vested remainder will not, by a later clause, be deemed to have devised a contingent remainder only, when such construction would lead to absurd results.

Moore v Dick, 208-693; 225 NW 845

Devise of remainder “at”, “upon”, or “from” named event. The rule that, when a devise is to a remainderman “at”, “upon”, or “from” the death of the life tenant, such words ordinarily are employed as indicating the time when the estate is to be enjoyed, and not to the time of the vesting of the estate, cannot have application in the construction of a will which manifestly indicates that such terms are used for the purpose of fixing the time when the estate shall vest.

Scofield v Hadden, 206-597; 220 NW 1

Devise of remainder “at time of death” of life tenant. A will which provides that “at the time of the death” of a life tenant, the property shall pass in fee to the children of the life tenant, but if the life tenant “shall die without issue”, the property shall descend to specified devisees, conveys to the children of the life tenant a contingent remainder which will ripen into a vested remainder only in the event they outlive their parent, the life tenant.

Scofield v Hadden, 206-597; 220 NW 1

Life estate—title vests on termination. Will bequeathing income of property to widow for life with remainder equally to (1) his then living brothers and sisters, (2) a woman not related to testator, and (3) a business associate also not related, construed to vest title at widow's death rather than at death of testator so as to entitle unrelated legatees to take entire remainder as against heirs of brothers and sisters all of whom predeceased widow.

Rice v Yockey-Klein, 227-175; 288 NW 63

Devise to son—termination—no contingent remainder. A devise of land to a son for his use until son's youngest child becomes 20 years old, or if such child dies before such age, then until January 1, 1940, is neither uncertain as to time nor persons so as to make the remainder contingent.

Hudnutt v Ins. Co., 224-430; 275 NW 581

Devise to class—equal taking. Where testator devised a trust fund to an incompetent daughter for life, with remainder over to his heirs “having the care and actual keeping” of said daughter, held, that the remainder would be taken by said heirs in equal shares and not in proportion to the number of weeks which each had cared for said daughter,—it appearing that compensation for such care had been paid to said heirs prior to the death of said life tenant.

Slavens v Bailey, 222-1091; 270 NW 367

Remainder over in fee per stirpes to lawful issue. When a will provides for a devise of realty to wife for life, then to three named children for life as tenants in common and remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, held, life estate vested in children after wife's death with contingent remainder over in fee, as provided by statute—the life estates being the particular estate supporting the contingent estate which would vest, upon death of each of testator's named children, in that child's lawful issue, if any.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Death of joint life tenant without issue—remainder over in fee. In a will where father devised realty to surviving spouse for life, then to three named children for life with remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, and one of such children died without lawful issue, after mother's death, remainder over of her share, being a one third of said realty, became intestate property and through the father passed to the two remaining children in fee, subject to payment of taxes and debts against estate of deceased child to the extent of one-third interest in the lapsed estate.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Remainder over—absence of issue. In a will where father devised realty to surviving spouse for life, then to three named children for life with remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, the fact that there were no grandchildren in being at the time of mother's death did not lapse the remainder so as to cause it to descend intestate and merge with life estate in children, since, at mother's death, the life estate in children was a "particular estate" supporting the contingent remainder, which was not required to vest until termination of such life estate.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Inheritance taker as representative of contingent remaindermen. A decree setting aside the probate of a will and canceling said will (the action being instituted in good faith and so tried by all parties thereto) is, on the principle or doctrine of representation, conclusive on remote, contingent remaindermen, even though they are not parties to the action or are not served with notice of the action, when those persons are legally before the court who would take the first estate of inheritance under the will; especially is this true when parties of the same class to which the omitted parties belong are also legally before the court.

Harris v Randolph, 213-772; 236 NW 51

Quieting title—virtual representation. All living members of a class, when properly brought into court in an action to quiet title, are deemed (under the doctrine of virtual representation) to represent all after-born persons who would belong to that class.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

Renunciation of devise. The devisee of a cash remainder does not per se renounce said remainder by executing, with other devisees, a writing under which the signers severally contribute to the augmentation of said life devise and explain their action by stating their belief that the life beneficiary (an incompetent) should have said augmented sum "as his own".

Bare v Cole, 220-338; 260 NW 338

(d) LAPSING OF DEVISES AND BEQUESTS

1 In General

Prohibited devise as intestate property. Property devised to one who is prohibited by law from taking becomes intestate property when the will provides no remainderman or provision for reversion.

Karolusson v Paonessa, 207-127; 222 NW 431

Death of legatee. A bequest, even though in terms directly to an infant legatee, "to be used to further his education, said amount to be placed in a savings account and be allowed to run until he has arrived at the age of 18 years when it shall be used for that purpose," reveals an intention to let the bequest lapse in case the legatee dies before the testator dies.

In re Best, 206-786; 221 NW 369

Nonlapse of devise. A devise to one whom the testator knows to be dead when the will is executed does not lapse on the death of the testator, the will not manifesting a contrary intent.

Friederichs v Friederichs, 205-505; 218 NW 271

Legacy lapsing by death of legatee. A contingent legacy in favor of a daughter is created by a will which, after devising a life estate to testator's wife, devises certain land to a son on condition that "within one year" after the death of the wife the son shall pay his sister a named sum of money. In other words, the legacy to the daughter lapses by her death prior to the death of the mother.

In re Phearman, 211-1137; 232 NW 826; 82 ALR 674

Residuary clause—effect. The naked expression or clause in a will, viz: "the remaining land to" (a named person) may not be sufficient to create a residuary estate within the meaning of the rule that lapsed devises fall into the residuary estate.

Nichols v Swickard, 211-957; 234 NW 846

Offsetting debt against devisee. When a devisee dies in the lifetime of the testator, and is then indebted to the testator, the executor may retain the devise, to apply on the indebtedness.

In re Mikkelsen, 202-842; 211 NW 254

Lapsing of legacy. A condition in a charitable bequest, that if the legatee takes no steps within a named time to augment said bequest the same shall revert to testator's estate, must be deemed a condition precedent and not a condition subsequent. It follows that said bequest lapses upon the expiration of said time if the legatee, with actual knowledge of the bequest, fails to signify any acceptance of the bequest, and fails to take any steps to augment said bequest.

In re Hillis, 215-1015; 247 NW 499

Action to determine ownership. When property fails to pass under a will to nonpecuniary corporations because the devise is in excess of the amount permitted by statute, any person may maintain an action to establish his claimed interest therein.

Karolusson v Paonessa, 207-127; 222 NW 431

Life estate—remainder over—fee per stirpes—absence of issue—nonlapse. In a will where father devised realty to surviving spouse for life, then to three named children for life with remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, the fact that there were no grandchildren in being at the time of mother's death did not lapse the remainder so as to cause it to descend intestate and merge with life estate in children, since, at mother's death, the life estate in children was a "particular estate" supporting the contingent remainder,

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Acceptance of bequest—court's extension of testator's time limitation—effect of unappealed order. Where testator directed his executors to purchase, for a daughter, good Iowa land of the value of $15,600, such daughter having refused to accept partial distribution of realty to heirs prior to testator's death, but the testator also provided such bequest should lapse if daughter failed to select land within one year from testator's death, and where within one year the daughter filed application for extension of time on the ground that estate did not have funds to purchase such land, which extension was granted after due notice to executors and heirs, held, district court had jurisdiction to grant extension of time and, no appeal having been taken therefrom, the order became "final" and the heirs were bound by the decision.

2 Ademption

Discussion. See 25 ILR 290—Ademption—history

"Ademption" and "satisfaction" distinguished. Where a thing or fund which is the subject of a specific legacy has been extinguished, an "ademption" has occurred, whereas doctrine of "satisfaction" applies when the legacy is general, and depends largely, if not entirely, on the intent of the testator.

In re Keeler, 225-1349; 282 NW 362

Ademption. A testator who, subsequent to the execution of his will, turns over to a devisee property of the same general nature as that devised to the devisee in the will, thereby works an ademption or pro tanto satisfaction of the testamentary devise, provided such was the intention of the testator.

Rodgers v Reinking, 205-1811; 217 NW 441
Heileman v Dakan, 211-344; 233 NW 542

Testator—payment of debt of legatee. A testator who bequeaths his property in equal shares to his children will be presumed to have intended to effect an ademption by voluntarily and on his own motion paying off, subsequent to the execution of his will, a debt owed wholly by one of the legatees; and in a proper proceeding, the amount of such payment may be ordered set off against the share of said legatee.

Russell v Smith, 210-563; 231 NW 468

Ademption—real estate for note and mortgage. A bequest is specific in a will where a note and real estate mortgage securing it were bequeathed to a son of testatrix, and the residuary estate was bequeathed to such son and her grandson; and cancellation by testatrix of the note and mortgage and the taking of title to such real estate in lieu thereof adeems the bequest as respects son's claim that subject matter of bequest still existed but was only changed in form.

VI RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF LEGATEES AND DEVISEES . . .

Discussion. See 5 ILB 253—Bequests for masses

Survivorship—absence of presumption. When a testator and his devisee die in a common disaster, there is no presumption at common law either (1) that one died before the other, or (2) that they died simultaneously.

Carpenter v Severin, 201-969; 204 NW 448; 43 ALR 1340

Owner. The term "owner" may be used in a sense other than absolute and unconditional title.

Bare v Cole, 220-338; 260 NW 338

Words "to own"—conveying absolute title. A devise of "one-half of all property I may own at the time of my death" to testator's wife "to own, hold and enjoy as her own", conveys an absolute title to one half of testator's estate.

In re Bigham, 227-1023; 290 NW 11

Rights of devisees—statutes controlling. The rights of devisees are controlled by the statutes which exist at the time the will is probated.

In re Culbertson, 204-473; 215 NW 761

Devise with remainder over—remaindermen eligible. The rule that survivorship refers to the death of the testator is confined to those cases in which there is no other period to which survivorship can be referred, and where a devise is preceded by a life estate or other prior interest it takes effect in favor of only those who survive the period of distribution.

Smith v Harris, 227-127; 287 NW 255

Named legatees surviving testator—legatee dead when will executed—heirs excluded. A will giving the residuary estate "unto those of the following named persons who are living at my death" will not be construed to include the heirs of one of those named persons on the ground that such particular named person was known by the testator to be dead at the time he made the will. This situation is not such a latent ambiguity as will warrant court in disregarding plainly expressed intent of testator to bequeath to named persons surviving testator.

In re Kubbernus, 224-1077; 277 NW 717

When annuity vests. A testamentary life annuity becomes vested on the date when the annuity becomes due.

In re Hekel, 205-521; 218 NW 297

Dower—nonforfeiture by taking foreign homestead. A wife, who is legally disinherited by her husband's will executed in a foreign state where the parties had their domicile, is not deprived of her dower or distributive share in the husband's Iowa real estate because of the fact that in said foreign state the homestead there situated was set off to her by the probate court or her application. In other words, the Iowa statute according to a wife the right to take the homestead in lieu of dower applies solely to an Iowa homestead.

Ehler v Ehler, 214-789; 243 NW 591

Election by spouse—nonestoppel. The heirs of a surviving wife are not estopped to insist that the wife took her dower interest, and did not take under the will, by the fact that, separately and apart from the will, and prior to its execution, the husband had turned over certain funds to a society, under an agreement that the society should pay interest on the funds to him and to the wife during their lifetime, and that the wife received such interest after the death of the husband.

In re Culbertson, 204-473; 215 NW 761

Rights of surviving spouse—homestead or distributive share—election. The distributive share being the primary and more worthy right of the surviving spouse, evidence that the survivor elected to take the homestead right in lieu thereof should be clear and satisfactory.

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Probate claim—no bar to subsequent equity action. A prior judgment in a law action tried on the merits is conclusive as to a subsequent action in equity between the same parties and the same facts, but where a widow is bequeathed a life estate in realty with the right to dispose of such realty for her necessary support, a probate adjudication on the merits that her claim for widow's support could not be established against husband's estate, is not such an adjudication as bars a later equity proceeding to establish such support claim as a lien on such realty.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Settlement between devisees. An alleged oral agreement between widow and other devisees, vesting in widow the right to certain personalty, was superseded by a subsequent written agreement between the same parties for partition and settlement of the estate providing that it should not affect the personalty which should remain in the hands of the executrix until final settlement.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

Right of devisee—estoppel. An heir who, upon the death of his mother, becomes entitled to a fractional part of a promissory note in which the mother and father are joint payees does not estop himself from asserting such right by subsequently taking, under the father's will, a portion of the father's interest in said note.

Hoffman v Hoffman, 205-1194; 219 NW 311

Declarations and admissions of heirs and devisees. Where there are several devisees or legatees whose interests are several and not joint, the declarations of one are not admissible for the reason that they might operate to the prejudice of the others. In general, the admissions of an heir are not admissible to prove a claim against an estate unless he is the only heir interested upon that side of the action.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Devisees and heirs joining in deed. A conveyance of land carries the entire fee when properly joined in (1) by all those who could take under the probated will of the fee owner, and (2) by all those who would take the property under the laws of inheritance in case said property proved to be intestate property.

Bahls v Dean, 222-1291; 270 NW 861

Consideration—benefit to third person. A written agreement between devisees to divide the devised property in such proportions that certain nondevisees will also share in the property is supported by a sufficient consideration in that the agreeing devisees suffer a detriment by relinquishing part of the devise and the nondevisees acquire a benefit.

Clayman v Bibler, 210-497; 231 NW 334

Settlement without administration—agreement of heirs binding. An agreement by heirs to settle estate without administration and providing for payment of legacies is legal and binding, and a widow of one of such heirs in a subsequent partition action cannot complain of denial of legacy to deceased heir where legacies due to other heirs were larger and such heirs received no part of their legacies.

Meeker v Meeker, (NOR); 283 NW 873

Renunciation of devise. The devisee of a cash remainder does not per se renounce said remainder by executing, with other devisees, a writing under which the signers severally contribute to the augmentation of said life devise and explain their action by stating their belief that the life beneficiary (an incompetent) should have said augmented sum "as his own".

Bare v Cole, 220-338; 260 NW 338

Devise and bequest—consideration unnecessary—resulting trust not created. Heirs and devisees are not required to give a consideration for devises and bequests to them; consequently, a resulting trust cannot be impressed on property conveyed to them, on the theory that they are not bona fide purchasers, when the property was not subject to the lien before conveyed.

VI RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF LEGATEES AND DEVISEES—continued

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Establishing trust to defeat heir's judgment creditors. When a will devised all of testatrix's property to daughter in trust, directing trustee to make a monthly payment to a third party and to transfer a one-fourth interest in the trust estate to each of two grandchildren when they reached a certain age, and providing that daughter should have a one-half interest in the estate during her life only in the event obligations to her judgment creditors were barred or satisfied, such will established a trust, and did not repose entire beneficial interest in daughter. Nor was the trust extinguished by a merger of daughter's legal and equitable estate so that property could be subjected to satisfaction of creditor's judgments, because in equity the doctrine of merger will not be invoked if it would frustrate the testatrix's expressed intentions or if there is some other reason for keeping the estates separate.

Freier v Longnecker, 227-366; 288 NW 444

Truthful answer to inquiry. The holder of a mortgage on the individual share of an heir does not estop himself from insisting on his mortgage because, upon receiving a subsequent inquiry whether there was any incumbrance on the estate, he truthfully answered in the negative.

Halbert v Halbert, 204-1227; 214 NW 535

Establishing claim against realty—not action to construe will. In an equity action to establish a claim against deceased's real estate for services rendered deceased's widow to whom deceased devised such realty for life, with right to dispose of real estate for her necessary support, held, such action was not a "suit for construction" of will, merely because trial court's opinion mentioned word "construction", but not in such manner as to indicate that trial court held action to be for that purpose. A will which in plain and uncertain terms makes disposition of property is one which needs no construction.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Devisee takes homestead exempt from testator's debts. Homestead may be devised exempt from the debts of the testator contracted subsequent to its acquisition. (See In re Schultz, 192 Iowa 436.)

Long v Northup, 225-132; 279 NW 104; 116 ALR 1475

Payment of claims—specific devises—when resorted to. Specific devises cannot be resorted to for the payment of debts, in the settlement of an estate, until all other property of the estate has been resorted to and exhausted.

In re Glandon, 219-1094; 260 NW 12

Homestead—liability for debts of children. Children who take a homestead under the will of their spouseless parent, take it subject to their own debts created subsequent to the acquisition of the homestead by their parent.

Luglan v Lenning, 214-439; 239 NW 692

Homestead—purchase (?) or descent (?). A homestead cannot be deemed to descend under the laws of descent to the children of a spouseless parent when the parent leaves a will which provides that no child contesting the will shall take anything under the will, altho the will otherwise gives to the children the identical shares which the laws of descent would give.

Luglan v Lenning, 214-439; 239 NW 692

Satisfaction of legacy prior to death of testator. A general legacy provided for in a will is satisfied in toto when the testator, subsequent to the making of the will, pays to the legatee a lesser sum with intent to effect such satisfaction; and such payment and satisfaction may be established by extrinsic evidence.

Rodgers v Reinking, 205-1311; 217 NW 441
Heileman v Dakan, 211-344; 233 NW 542

Advancement (?) or gift (?). The cancellation by a testator, after making his will, of notes held by him against a legatee, and the surrender of said notes to the legatee (after carefully computing the amount due thereon), are not sufficient to overcome the presumption of an advancement, in view of the declaration in the will (1) that testator intended an equal division between his legatees, and (2) that all loans to legatees, as shown by testator's account book (made part of the will) should be deemed part of his estate, and in view of the fact that said account book listed the notes in question as loans, and not as gifts.

In re Francis, 204-1237; 212 NW 306

Contesting will and claiming property as gift. The fact that a daughter contests the probate of her father's will does not estop her from later claiming as a gift a portion of the devised property; nor does the judgment admitting the will to probate constitute an adjudication against her of her claim of gift.

Rapp v Losee, 215-356; 245 NW 317

Advancements—nonapplicability of doctrine. The doctrine of advancements applies only in cases where the decedent dies intestate, unless specifically provided for by language in the will.

In re Manatt, 214-432; 239 NW 524
In re Morgan, 225-746; 281 NW 346

Advancements to part of residuary legatees—deduction—when improper. Without special provision in the will therefor, an executor is in error in paying to himself, as a residuary legatee, $1,000 on the theory that the four other such legatees had each received advancements in that sum and that such payment was equivalent to charging off such advancements against the shares of the other legatees.

In re Morgan, 225-746; 281 NW 346

Rights of legatees—sheriff's certificate passing as personalty. A sheriff's certificate under foreclosure proceedings, in which the period of redemption had not yet expired, was personal property and, upon the death of the certificate holder-owner, passed to the person inheriting the personal property under the will.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

Rights of beneficiaries—contingent legacy—effect. Where a will provided that testator's niece should receive $1,000 (1) if the wife survived and did not take under will, or (2) if wife did not survive, and when the widow accepted the provisions of will giving her the personal property and a life estate in real estate, niece took nothing thereunder, since neither contingency arose.

Starr v Newman, 225-901; 281 NW 830

Right to offset debt of devisee. The amount which an insolvent testamentary devisee is owing to a solvent estate may, in partition proceedings, be offset against his interest in the real estate of testator, and such right is superior to the right of a judgment creditor who obtained his judgment against the devisee subsequent to the death of the testator.

Schultz v Locke, 204-1127; 216 NW 617

Substituted legatees—offsetting debts. Unless a will provides otherwise, a legacy to one who predeceases the testator passes to the heirs of the deceased legatee subject to the right of the executor to apply the legacy on the unpaid debt of the deceased legatee to the estate. It follows that if the debt equals or exceeds the legacy the heirs take nothing.

In re Rueschenberg, 213-639; 239 NW 529

Lien for debts of devisee. A mortgage on real estate executed during the settlement of an estate, by the insolvent devisee of the land, is subject to the prior lien of the estate for the debts owing by the devisee to testator and contracted subsequent to the execution of the will.

Bell v Bell, 216-837; 249 NW 137

Refund to pay debts. The heirs of an estate who unconditionally purchase the interest of their mother in the estate have no legal right, thereafter, to compel the mother to contribute any sum toward the discharge of unpaid debts of the estate, unpaid taxes against the estate, or unpaid probate costs and fees.

In re Jones, 217-288; 251 NW 651

Debt-encumbered remainder—equitable action to enforce. Where a testator devises to his wife a life estate in all his property (which estate she accepts), with remainder to his children, a provision of the will to the specific effect that "all just debts and funeral expenses" of said wife shall be paid out of testator's estate, will enable the wife's creditor, who became such subsequent to the probating of the will and the closing of the estate, and shortly prior to the death of the wife some 30 years later, to maintain an action in equity to establish the debt, and to subject the lands, passing under the will and in the hands of remaindermen, to the satisfaction of said debt.

Diagonal Bank v Nichols, 219-342; 258 NW 700

Formal direction to "pay debts"—no priority over other testamentary dispositions. The usual, formal, first paragraph of a will directing the payment of "all my just debts", held, being a mere recitation of an executor's duty, does not alone give priority and subject the property of the estate to all claims allowed irrespective of other provisions directing the disposition of the corpus of the estate.

Long v Northup, 225-132; 279 NW 104; 116 ALR 1475

Bequests payable from "cash assets"—not charge on realty. Bequests payable from "cash assets", in the absence of a statement or implication in the will to the contrary, are payable from personal estate only and are no charge on the realty.

Boehm v Rohlfs, 224-226; 276 NW 105

Interest of remainderman passes to trustee in bankruptcy.

Noonan v Bank, 211-401; 233 NW 487

Accounting by life tenant. A life tenant with testamentary power to encroach upon the principal, with remainder over, may be compelled to make full disclosure to a trustee in bankruptcy of a possible remainderman, of the property received by her under the will (the probate records not revealing such fact), but may not be compelled to account to such trustee as to her use of the property, in the absence of any allegation and proof of waste, fraud, or improper use or disposal.

Nelson v Horsford, 201-918; 208 NW 341; 45 ALR 515

Income—gradual increase in value of corporate assets. A legatee who is unconditionally given for life the income arising from corporate stock is not entitled to receive, as income, any part of the principal of a liquidating dividend arising from the final dissolution of the corporation and sale of its assets, when said liquidating dividend reveals a very material increase in value of the original stock investment due to the gradual increase in value of corporate assets during the life of the corporation. Such liquidating dividend constitutes a part of the corpus of the estate, and passes to the remainderman, subject to the right of the life tenant to receive the income

VI RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF LEGATEES AND DEVISEES—continued thereon—such being the manifest intent of the testator.

In re Etzel, 211-700; 234 NW 210

Allowable failure to collect rents. A widow who is entitled to receive during life from the executor the annual rents accruing on lands belonging to residuary devisees may allow such devisee to occupy the land free of rent, and objections to the executor's final report will not lie because of such action.

In re Murphy, 209-679; 228 NW 658

Rent—incident to land—passes to heirs. General rule is that rents accruing after the owner's death belong to the heirs or devisees, as an incident to the ownership of the land which descends to them.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

Withholding distribution. Where certain devisees were holding rents belonging to estate, trial court properly ordered that no distribution be made to them until such rents were turned over to the executrix.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

Trusts—nontermination by beneficiaries. The beneficiaries of a testamentary trust may not, by mutual agreement, even tho approved and confirmed by the court, terminate the trust and accelerate the final vesting of the corpus of the trust, when the testator has clearly demonstrated a contrary intent.

Windsor v Barnett, 201-1226; 207 NW 362

Trust estate—nonvested interest. Lands which are under testamentary trusteeship for a stated or discretionary time are not subject to partition by the ultimate beneficiary until his interest becomes vested. Trust construed, and held to clearly empower the trustee to continue the trust.

Schaal v Schaal, 203-667; 213 NW 207

Devise in fee in connection with trusteeship—effect. An unqualified devise in fee arms the devisee with power and right to mortgage the premises even tho the testator sees fit to embody in his will a provision for a trustee and to grant power in such trustee to execute mortgages.

First N. Bk. v Torkelson, 209-659; 228 NW 655

Trustee and beneficiary as same person—conveyance to self-quieting title. A sister, as the only heir in her brother's estate, who conveys by a trust instrument to a nonrelated person her entire interest in such estate, in exchange for the trustee providing her life support, and upon fulfillment of which the trustee became the beneficiary and was directed to convey the balance of the property from himself, as a trustee, to himself, individually, evidence, in trustee-beneficiary's quieting title action against settlor's heirs, held to establish soundness of mind and freedom of action by settlor in executing the trust instrument.

Goodman v Bauer, 225-1086; 281 NW 448

Renunciation of trust by one beneficiary—effect.

Windsor v Barnett, 201-1226; 207 NW 362

Renunciation of legacy. The act of a testamentary beneficiary in executing and making of record an unconditional and final renunciation of all benefits granted him under the will legally places such benefits beyond the reach of his creditors.

Funk v Grulke, 204-314; 213 NW 608

Right to renounce devise or bequest. The legal right of a beneficiary under a will to file an unconditional and final renunciation of all benefits granted him by the will, and thereby exclude his creditor from acquiring any right to the devised property, may be exercised even after a creditor of said beneficiary has levied upon, sold, and obtained a sheriff's deed to, the land devised to said beneficiary, it appearing that the renouncing beneficiary had in no manner misled the creditor.

Lehr v Switzer, 213-658; 239 NW 564

Renounced devise as intestate property. Where one of several residuary devisees wholly renounces his interest under the will, the portion so renounced becomes intestate property, and necessarily descends under the statutory rules of descent. In other words, the nonrenouncing residuary devisees do not necessarily take said renounced portion.

Lehr v Switzer, 213-658; 239 NW 564

Renunciation of devise—loss of right. A devisee or legatee who, by unequivocal conduct, has once accepted the devise or bequest, may not thereafter renounce it to the detriment of his creditors. So held where the devisee had mortgaged or pledged the devise as security for his debts.

Bogenrief v Law, 222-1303; 271 NW 229

Renunciation of gift—no control by creditors—not a conveyance. A creditor has no control over a beneficiary's right to refuse or accept a gift, as a renunciation is not equivalent to a conveyance.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Beneficiary's right to renounce benefits under will—creditors—no complaint. A beneficiary under a will has the right to renounce all benefits granted him under will and creditors cannot complain of such renunciation; but such rule is limited to cases where no acceptance of provisions of will has been made by beneficiary.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Costs—equity court's discretion—renounced devise. In equity, the court has a wide discretion in taxing costs, which will not be interfered with except in case of manifest injustice; so, where a sister renounced benefits under her father's will and conveyed realty to her brother before she took bankruptcy, in action by the bankruptcy trustee to set aside renunciation and the conveyance as fraudulent, the apportionment of one half of costs against trustee and other half against sister and brother was proper.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Distribution of estate—erroneous payments—recovery. Funds paid to legatees under an interlocutory but erroneous order for distribution may be recovered from the legatees to whom paid.

Dillinger v Steele, 207-20; 222 NW 564

Recovery of unpaid legacy—bringing in parties. In an action by a testamentary legatee against an executor to recover an unpaid legacy, the executor, who has already distributed the estate and wishes to bring a third party into the action for recoupment purposes, must, at least, allege that said third party has received some portion of the estate in question.

Irwin v Bank, 218-961; 256 NW 681

Settlement of estate—estoppel. A residuary legatee who causes the executor to obtain a new mortgage as security for an indebtedness due the estate, and thereupon to cancel a pre-existing mortgage which secured the same debt, is necessarily precluded from holding the executor personally liable in case the new mortgage proves inadequate as a security.

Wilson v Norris, 204-867; 216 NW 46

Objections—compromise and settlement—conclusiveness. A residuary devisee may not object to an accounting by an executor on a ground theretofore fully compromised and settled by such devisee.

In re Murphy, 209-679; 228 NW 658

Irretrievably abandoned contract. An irretrievably abandoned contract necessarily cannot be specifically enforced. So held where the heirs of an estate sought specific performance of an alleged contract by the donee of a deceased donor to reconvey the gift to the donor's estate and to take the share of a general heir, and where it developed that said heirs had, regardless of said alleged contract, fully settled the estate among themselves to the exclusion of the said donee.

McGaffin v Helmts, 210-108; 230 NW 532

Delay in closing estate. Devisees could not complain of delay in closing estate where no loss resulted and delay was due in part to their own failure to pay inheritance taxes and their share of administration costs and rental mon-neys due the estate, and where they took no action to require executrix to close the estate altho their attorney, who was also a devisee, was aware of the facts.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

Sale and conveyance—compromise of litigation. The statutory provision (§12587, C., '24) that the real property of a minor may be mortgaged or sold "when not in violation of the terms of a will by which the minor holds" it, has no application to a compromise by the guardian in a will contest, under which compromise the minor receives incumbered real property in lieu of unincumbered real property devised by the will.

Kreamer v Wendel, 204-20; 214 NW 712

Assignment of expectancy—effect. An assignment by a debtor to his creditor of the debtor's expectancy in an estate, as collateral security to the debt, with a proviso that, if the debtor does not pay within a stated time, the assignment shall operate as a "full receipt" against said expectancy, simply extends to the creditor an option to so treat the proviso. The creditor may ignore the proviso and maintain an action on his claim.

Smoley v Smoley, 203-685; 213 NW 229

Assignment of share—construction. A written assignment by an heir "of all interest of every kind and nature" in the estate works a complete conveyance of the heir's interest in the real estate of the estate, as against a subsequently rendered judgment against the assignor. (See Funk v Grulke, 204-314.)

Berg v Shade, 203-1352; 214 NW 513

Assignment of testamentary interest—ratification by certain creditors—no general assignment. An assignment of the interest of beneficiary of a testamentary trust for the benefit of certain creditors, ratified by the creditors benefited, is not a general assignment and need not be for the benefit of all creditors.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Assignments for benefit of creditors—requirements. Where the interest of a beneficiary of a testamentary trust is assigned for the benefit of creditors, such assignment need not be recorded to be valid against existing creditors without notice.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Father promising son's creditor not to change son's legacy—property transfers—other legatees. Simply because a testator contracts with a bank not to change his will bequeathing $10,000 to a son who was indebted to the bank, and when the father did not contract to pay the son's debt, there is no "unjust enrichment" of devisees and legatees who accept property willed to them, altho father during his lifetime had depleted his estate by property transfers and conveyances to his other children.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Agreement not to probate. Beneficiaries under a will may validly agree, and have their agreement confirmed by an order of court, that the will shall not be probated, and that the property shall be shared on a basis different than that provided by the rejected instrument—no question as to the right of trust beneficiaries or of estate creditors being involved.

In re Murphy, 217-1291; 252 NW 523

Contract not to change son's legacy—creditor-bank estopped as to other legacies. Where a son is indebted to a bank, and his father contracts with the bank to make no change in his will respecting a $10,000 bequest to the son, and bank seeks liability against all of father's property, there is no estoppel against the other heirs claiming the son's indebtedness be deducted from any bequest payable to him.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Father-son partnership—probate of father's estate—son's partnership rights. A son's rights as a partner in a partnership with his father and mother, which partnership was continued with mother after father's death, were not adjudicated by the probate of his father's will and mother's discharge as executrix, since son was not a party to such proceeding as a partner, and since the probate court administered only the property owned by the father at the time of his death.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

Exemption to educational institution—essential proof. Where a will provides that the residue of the estate shall pass to an educational institution of this state as a part of its endowment fund, exemption from taxation on lands will not be granted except on the production in evidence of the probate records, showing judicially (1) that the estate has been fully settled, and (2) that the lands in question constitute part of the residue of said estate, and, as a consequence, belong, legally or equitably, to said institution.

Wapello Bank v Keokuk Co., 209-1127; 229 NW 721

Indefinitely named charitable beneficiary. A testamentary devise in trust to "some old ladies' home" in a named locality necessarily implies a substantial institution devoted to said purposes, and manifestly the court will not be compelled to bestow such bounty only on one of those who apply for such bounty.

In re Clifton, 207-71; 218 NW 926

Indefinite description of devise—devisee's right to select. A devise by a testator of "160 acres" of land, without other designation or description, by a testator who was seized of some 2,000 acres, may impliedly authorize the devisee to make a selection of the land. Held, certain acts of the devisee constituted such selection.

Nichols v Swickard, 211-957; 234 NW 846

Equitable conversion—right to reconvert—consent of spouse. The right of a legatee to make and enforce an election to take real estate in lieu of a devise of the proceeds thereof does not depend in any degree on the consent of the spouse of such legatee.

In re Warner, 209-948; 229 NW 241

Equitable conversion—nonapplicability of doctrine. An assignment by an heir of all his interest in the "personal property" of an estate carries to the assignee the assignor's interest in funds derived from the sale of real estate for the purpose of paying debts and remaining in the hands of the administrator as an unused balance. The doctrine of equitable conversion has no application to such a state of facts.

In re Wilson, 218-368; 255 NW 489

Treating realty as personalty—sale required. Land acquired by an executor through foreclosure on a note and mortgage coming into his hands as part of the estate, will be treated as personalty for the purpose of making a final division of the estate; and the court is in error in refusing to order a sale for said purpose—especially when all existing testamentary beneficiaries so request.

Langfitt v Langfitt, 223-702; 273 NW 93; 110 ALR 1390

"Worthier title" rule nonapplicable. In probate proceedings, before the "worthier title" rule can be applied where property is left to testator's heirs by will in the same manner and proportion in which they would have taken were there no will, it must definitely appear that there is exact identity in every way, and where testator definitely directs that real estate be converted into personalty and then divided equally among his children, each beneficiary receiving all personalty and no real estate, held, a beneficiary of such estate did not take her interest by "worthier title" so as to preclude executor from exercising the right of retainer against the beneficiary's interest which is assigned as security for a note for purchase of real estate by beneficiary—it being immaterial whether beneficiary is solvent or insolvent.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

"Worthier title" rule.

In re Davis, 204-1231; 213 NW 395

In re Warren, 211-940; 234 NW 835

Mutual wills in nature of contract—survivor and third-party rights fixed. In joint or mutual wills for benefit of survivor or third parties, there is an element of contract, and if there be no revocation before death of one of testators, the rights of the survivor or third parties are thereby fixed and determined according to terms of the mutual will.

Child v Smith, 225-1205; 282 NW 316

Partition (?) or sale and division under will (?). One of several devisees in common of real property (the estate being fully settled) may maintain partition, even tho the will specifically authorizes the executor to sell the property and divide the proceeds.

Ruggles v Powers, 201-284; 207 NW 116

Stock dividend issued on previously earned surplus—conflicting claims. A legacy of "one thousand dollars par value of the capital stock" of a named corporation (being a part of the stock holding of the estate) entitles the legatee to a stock dividend declared and issued by the corporation subsequent to the death of testator on surplus earnings accumulated by the corporation prior to the death of testator; also to an ordinary cash dividend declared on the stock subsequent to testator's death and subsequent to the formal transfer of said stock to the legatee.

In re Etzel, 211-700; 234 NW 210

Father-son partnership—no claim in father's estate—no estoppel. Estoppel would not prevent a son from maintaining an action against his mother for an accounting and dissolution of a partnership which was established between son and father and mother and upon father's death was continued with mother, theory being that estoppel arose on account of son's acquiescence in mother's taking possession of and disposing of certain partnership assets as executrix and sole beneficiary of her husband's estate under his will. Son, having no claim against estate of his father, and not knowing of mother's claim that she was sole partner with her husband, could not be estopped thereby.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

11847 Presumption attending devise to spouse.

Election between will and dower. See under §12007

Presumption negated. No election by a surviving spouse between the will and the dower right is required when the will shows on its face that its provisions for the surviving spouse were not intended to be in lieu of dower rights. So held where the will devised to the wife the sum of one dollar.

Fay v Smiley, 201-1290; 207 NW 369

Widow as devisee—nonallowance. Since widow of decedent was a devisee under his will, an order allowing her exempt property of decedent under §11918, C., '39, was improper in view of this §11847, C., '39, providing that a devise to a spouse is presumed to be in lieu of exemptions unless contrary intention is clearly and explicitly shown.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

Lapse of devise to spouse. A devise by a husband to his wife is deemed to lapse upon his death when the devise is identical in quality and quantity with what the wife would have taken under the statute, had there been no will; but not so of a devise which gives the wife one-third of his entire estate (1) after converting all real estate, including homestead, into personalty and (2) after paying all debts.

In re Davis, 204-1231; 213 NW 395

See In re Warren, 211-940; 234 NW 835

Total failure of surviving spouse to elect—effect. A surviving wife who is willed by her deceased husband all his property, real and personal, after the payment of all his debts, including the expense of his last sickness and burial, and who dies some three days later without doing anything affirmatively indicating her acceptance of the terms of said will, must be held to have taken her distributive one-third share only.

Hahn v Dunn, 211-678; 234 NW 247; 82 ALR 1503

Renunciation by daughter as beneficiary—effect on rights in intestate property. Where a father's will left property in equal shares to a son and daughter, subject to a life estate in their mother, and where the daughter renounced all benefits under the will, as heir she took undivided one half of one-half portion of estate that became intestate property as result of renunciation, subject to life estate.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

11848 Limitation on disposal by will.

Law governing. The right of a surviving spouse to take under the will of the deceased spouse, or to take a distributive one-third share, is governed by the statutes existing at the time of the death of the testate spouse; likewise, the right of a corporation to take under a will.

Ross v Seminary, 204-648; 215 NW 710

Restriction on corporations. A statute which limits the power of corporations which are organized under the laws of this state to take a testamentary devise will not be extended by the courts to include foreign corporations.

Ross v Seminary, 204-648; 215 NW 710

Devise or bequest to corporation—limitation. A bequest to trustees for the perpetual maintenance of testator's burial lot is not violative of the statute limiting devises and bequests to a nonpecuniary corporation tho the lot in question is located in a cemetery owned by such a corporation.

Hipp v Hibbs, 215-253; 245 NW 247

Prohibited devise as intestate property. Property devised to one who is prohibited by law from taking becomes intestate property when the will provides no remainderman or provision for reversion.

Karolusson v Paonessa, 207-127; 222 NW 431

Who may question. No one can question the validity of a devise to a nonpecuniary corporation in excess of one-fourth of testator's property except testator's surviving spouse, child, child of a deceased child, or parent.

Karolusson v Paonessa, 207-127; 222 NW 431

Action to determine ownership. When property fails to pass under a will to nonpecuniary corporations because the devise is in excess of the amount permitted by statute, any person may maintain an action to establish his claimed interest therein.

Karolusson v Paonessa, 207-127; 222 NW 431

11849 After-acquired property.

Discussion. See 23 ILR 380—After-acquired property

11850 Verbal wills.

Gift—causa mortis—essential elements. A gift causa mortis is a gift of personal property, intentionally made, even orally, by the mentally competent owner of said property, in expectation of his or her imminent death from an impending disorder or peril (tho not necessarily so imminent as to exclude the opportunity to execute a will), and made and delivered by the donor to the donee on the essential condition that, if the gift be not in the meantime revoked, the property shall belong to the donee in case the donor dies, as anticipated, of the disorder or peril, leaving said donee surviving.

- III SIGNATURE OR SUBSCRIPTION BY OR FOR TESTATOR
- IV ATTESTATION AND SUBSCRIPTION BY WITNESSES

I VALIDITY AND SUFFICIENCY IN GENERAL

Findings of court. The supported findings of the court relative to the facts attending the formal execution of a will have the same force and effect as the verdict of a jury.

In re Droge, 216-331; 249 NW 209

Waiver of right to dispute. A contestant may not question the admissibility or sufficiency of testimony tending to show the due execution of a will when he proffers no issue as to such execution.

In re Mott, 200-948; 205 NW 770

Revival and reinstatement of revoked will. Even tho a second will unquestionably revokes a first will, nevertheless said first will is revived and reinstated by the due and formal testamentary execution of a later instrument wherein testator declares that "my will and wish as expressed in my will and testament under date of January 29, 1914" (the first will) "is the only will and testament I have ever knowingly and willingly made, and I wish it to be so considered after my death," said last instrument being, in itself, a will.

In re Cameron, 215-63; 241 NW 458

Evidence — sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held not to establish per se the legal execution of a will.

In re Wood, 213-254; 237 NW 237

What adjudicated—nonestoppel to construe will after final report. Probate of a will being conclusive only as to its due execution and publication, a petition to construe a will is not a collateral attack on the order of probate; and such petition may be filed after the executor's final report, before which the petitioners were not aware of the construction which the executor would place on the will and therefore no estoppel arises from permitting executor to proceed with administration of the estate.

Maloney v Rose, 224-1071; 277 NW 572

Requested instructions — will contestants bound by own theory. Contestants alleging that a will was not duly and legally executed may not amplify their claim thereunder after requesting instructions proceeding solely on the theory that their construction of their claim was that the signatures of the testator and one witness, now deceased, were not genuine. In such case it is not error, when otherwise unobjected to, for the court on its own motion to add an instruction which in effect limits the case to the theory propounded in contestants' requested instructions.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Professional memorandum by deceased—incompetent when stating no fact. Brief notations on a slip of paper, identified by a deceased attorney's stenographer as made by him at the time a testator conferred with him about the drawing of the will, are incompetent as evidence when the notes do not state any fact. However, their admission in evidence is harmless when the witness had previously testified without objection to the whole of the conversation.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Harmless error—instructing on immaterial, nonprejudicial evidence. A will contestant's contention that it was error to instruct regarding a nonmaterial exhibit—a memorandum by a deceased attorney, who drew the will—alho well founded, held to be error without prejudice when the paper and the conversation connected therewith were not necessary for proponents to make a prima facie case of the due and legal execution of the will and the genuineness of the signatures.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

II FORM AND CONTENTS OF INSTRUMENT

(a) WILL DISTINGUISHED FROM OTHER DISPOSITIONS OF PROPERTY

Deed—requisites and validity—delivery—evidence—sufficiency. On the issue of delivery of a deed, the recitals in the will of the grantor that he was then deeding the property to said grantee, and other oral statements of the purported grantor to the same effect, may have material and influential bearing.

Arndt v Lapel, 214-594; 243 NW 605

Deed (?) or will (?). A warranty deed subject to a life estate in grantor's surviving spouse will not be deemed testamentary because of a clause wherein grantor ineffectually attempted to restrain the alienation of the land by the grantee.

Goodman v Andrews, 203-979; 213 NW 605

Deed (?) or will (?). An executed and delivered deed of conveyance in the ordinary form conveys an interest in praesenti—is not testamentary—even tho it provides (1) that "it shall not take effect until after the death" of the grantor, and (2) that the grantor does not "give up possession" to the grantee during the life of the grantor, and (3) that the grantor "reserves the use and income of the premises as long as he lives".

Hall v Hall, 206-1; 218 NW 35

Deed (?) or will (?). An instrument which passes the title to real estate in praesenti, tho the right to its possession and enjoyment is deferred to a future time, is a deed of conveyance and not a testamentary instrument.

Bardsley v Spencer, 215-616; 244 NW 275

Trust—construction—nontestamentary instrument. A declaration of trust in and over real estate for the benefit of the trustor and named beneficiaries, and a contemporaneously executed and delivered warranty deed to the same property to the trustee, cannot be deemed a will, even tho the trustor-grantor reserves in the declaration of trust complete control, management, and dominion over the property during his lifetime, even to the power to revoke the trust and to demand a reconveyance, or to dispose of the property by testament.

Keck v McKinstry, 206-1121; 221 NW 851

(b) JOINT WILLS

Discussion. See 4 ILB 189—Right to revoke mutual wills

Joint and mutual wills. Will construed, and held to be an individual will.

Mann v Seibert, 209-76; 227 NW 614

Mutual wills defined. Mutual wills are those executed pursuant to an agreement between two or more persons to dispose of their property in a particular manner, each in consideration of the other. Such wills, if they contain no provisions for third persons, constitute a single will, and is the will of the first to die, and have no further existence as the will of the survivor.

Maurer v Johansson, 223-1102; 274 NW 99
Maloney v Rose, 224-1071; 277 NW 572

Separate or same instrument—revocation. Principle reaffirmed that mutual wills may be in the same or separate instruments, and either party, while both are living, may validly revoke the will by giving notice of the revocation to the other party.

Maurer v Johansson, 223-1102; 274 NW 99

Mutual wills ipso facto establish prior contract—other evidence unnecessary. Where wills of husband and wife, each acting with knowledge of other, are drawn at substantially same time, at their joint request, and each contains reciprocal provisions, such wills and circumstances are sufficient to establish prior contract to make mutual wills, even when the wills contain no memorandum of the agreement.

Maurer v Johansson, 223-1102; 274 NW 99
Child v Smith, 225-1205; 282 NW 316

III SIGNATURE OR SUBSCRIPTION BY OR FOR TESTATOR

Discussion. See 14 ILR 323—Location of signature

Signing by "mark". A mentally competent testator may validly sign his will by "his mark".

In re Burcham, 211-1395; 235 NW 764

Place of signature immaterial. A testator signs his will if he places his signature at any place thereon with the intention of authenticating the writing as his last will and testament. Will held properly signed.

In re Johnson, 209-757; 229 NW 261

Fatal defect. A written instrument purporting to be a last will and testament is not admissible to probate when it appears that the purported testator, (1) did not sign the instrument in the presence of the subscribing witnesses, and (2) did not in any manner adopt or confirm said signature in the presence of said witnesses.

In re McElderry, 217-268; 251 NW 610

III SIGNATURE OR SUBSCRIPTION BY OR FOR TESTATOR—concluded

Handwriting expert—striking evidence—jury admonition—curing error. If evidence, erroneously admitted during the progress of a trial, is distinctly withdrawn by the court, the error is cured, except where it is manifest that the prejudicial effect on the jury remained despite its exclusion. Testimony by a handwriting expert, who referred to notes, which were merely the basis or reason for his opinion as to the genuineness of signatures to a will, held not within the exception.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

IV ATTESTATION AND SUBSCRIPTION BY WITNESSES

Attestation by witnesses. An attestation of a will by competent witnesses with the full knowledge and approval of the testator is all-sufficient.

In re Burcham, 211-1395; 235 NW 764

Execution—sufficiency. Proof that a will was signed by the testatrix in the presence of one of the subscribing witnesses who thereupon, in her presence, signed as a witness, and that the other witness signed as a witness in the presence of both the testatrix and the first witness under circumstances clearly justifying the implication that testatrix was acknowledging her signature and requesting the second witness so to sign, establishes the due execution of the will.

In re Droge, 216-331; 249 NW 209

Witnessing—fatal defect. A will is not “witnessed by two competent persons” when one of the two persons signing as witnesses has no personal knowledge that the instrument was signed by testator.

In re Pike, 221-1102; 267 NW 680

Sufficiency of request to sign. A will, to be valid, must be witnessed at the request of testator; however, the request need not be spoken but may be by acquiescence, by act or motion, or even by his silence when he knows that the witnesses are signing, tho at the request of another, and he makes no objections, but the question of due execution should be left to the jury when it develops from testimony that one witness signed at the request of a beneficiary and that testator may not have, in any manner, requested the witnesses to sign.

Burgan v Kinnick, 225-804; 281 NW 734

Witnesses signing in testator’s presence—quaere. Whether attesting witnesses must sign will in testator’s presence, quaere.

Burgan v Kinnick, 225-804; 281 NW 734

11853 Defect cured by codicil.

Will and codicil as one instrument. A testatrix who, in her original will devises:

1. Separate specific bequests to named nephews and nieces, and

2. The remainder of her estate to nine named nephews and nieces,

And later, by codicil, not only names four additional nephews and nieces as residuary legatees, but declares “it being my intention to divide my estate among all my nephews and nieces”, must be deemed to have intended that nephews and nieces not named in the will or codicil should share in the residuary estate along with those named in the will or codicil as residuary legatees.

Reasons: A will and a codicil constitute but one instrument. Every clause in a will must be given a meaning. No construction is necessary as to a clause which is perfectly clear in expression and meaning.

In re Thomas, 220-50; 261 NW 622

Dependent relative revocation—codicil with invalid provision. Where a conflict exists between a second codicil and the will and first codicil, the second codicil prevails, but under the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, if the later codicil contains an invalid provision, such provision does not revoke the provisions with which it conflicts in the earlier will and codicil. Where a will and two codicils left property to a county for use in building roads, even if a provision in the second codicil was invalid in improperly delegating county powers to the executor, the doctrine prevented a complete revocation of the previous documents, but they were revoked only to give effect to the second codicil, as there was no change in the purpose of the will, but only a change in the manner of effectuating the gift.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Absolute bequest—later repugnant provision disregarded. Where a codicil made an absolute bequest of a residuary estate to a county to be used in paving a highway, and a later provision in the codicil gave certain directions to the executor and imposed conditions for acceptance of the bequest by the county, such later conditions were repugnant and would defeat the purpose of the testator and must be disregarded when void in delegating power to the executor in violation of statute, and the intention of the testator as expressed in the first provision must be given effect to prevent intestacy.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Codicil creating charitable trust. A first codicil devising an estate to trustees to be administered under county supervision in building roads, and a second codicil appointing one executor to aid the county in building roads, created a lawful charitable trust with the county as trustee and taxpayers as beneficiaries which was not necessarily invalid because the executor was given administrative duties in the road construction in violation of statute.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Equivocal expressions of revocation. A will and first codicil were not revoked by a second codicil providing that it should prevail in case of conflict between it and the two previous instruments, and the three instruments stood as the final testamentary disposition of the testator with the second codicil displacing the others only insofar as it was clearly inconsistent with them, altho the second codicil was referred to as a "last will and testament" and declared the previous will and codicil to be revoked, as the revocation of a will depends on intent to be gathered from all the papers and attending circumstances and cannot be overridden by equivocal expressions of revocation.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Bequest for paving roads. In an action by a taxpayer to obtain an injunction restraining a county from accepting a bequest to be used for paving roads, the injunction was refused where a will and two codicils provided for the bequest, as when all papers were construed together a valid gift to the county was found to have been created which the county had the authority to accept.

Anderson v Board, 226-1177; 286 NW 735

Revocation of codicil by tearing. A codicil to a will is completely revoked when the testator, with the intent to revoke it, directs the custodian thereof to destroy it, and when said custodian, in the absence of testator, complies with said direction by tearing said codicil into many pieces, of which act the testator had knowledge before her death; and this is true tho the custodian preserves said pieces and later physically reconstructs said instrument by pasting the same on another piece of paper.

In re Nish, 220-45; 261 NW 521; 100 ALR 1516

11855 Revocation—cancellation.

- III DESTRUCTION, CANCELLATION, OBLITERATION, OR ALTERATION

Birth of child after execution of will. See under §11858, Vol I

I REVOCATION BY SUBSEQUENT WILL OR CODICIL

Cancellation by subsequent, lost will—evidence required. A prior will is not shown to be revoked by evidence which tends to prove the execution of a subsequent will containing a clause revoking the prior will, but which is, otherwise, wholly indefinite as to the contents of such subsequent will and as to the witnesses thereto, and as to its whereabouts.

In re Rutledge, 210-1256; 232 NW 674

Revival and reinstatement of revoked will. Even tho a second will unquestionably revokes a first will, nevertheless said first will is revived and reinstated by the due and formal testamentary execution of a later instrument wherein testator declares that "my will and wish as expressed in my will and testament under date of January 29, 1914" (the first will) "is the only will and testament I have ever knowingly and willingly made, and I wish it to be so considered after my death," said last instrument being, in itself, a will.

In re Cameron, 215-63; 241 NW 458

Equivocal expressions of revocation. A will and first codicil were not revoked by a second codicil providing that it should prevail in case of conflict between it and the two previous instruments, and the three instruments stood as the final testamentary disposition of the testator with the second codicil displacing the others only insofar as it was clearly inconsistent with them, altho the second codicil was referred to as a "last will and testament" and declared the previous will and codicil to be revoked, as the revocation of a will depends on intent to be gathered from all the papers and attending circumstances and cannot be overridden by equivocal expressions of revocation.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Dependent relative revocation—codicil with invalid provision. Where a conflict exists between a second codicil and the will and first codicil, the second codicil prevails, but under the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, if the later codicil contains an invalid provision, such provision does not revoke the provisions with which it conflicts in the earlier will and codicil. Where a will and two codicils left property to a county for use in building roads, even if a provision in the second codicil was invalid in improperly delegating county powers to the executor, the doctrine prevented a complete revocation of the previous documents, but they were revoked only to give effect to the second codicil, as there was no change in the purpose of the will, but only a change in the manner of effectuating the gift.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Codicil creating charitable trust. A first codicil devising an estate to trustees to be administered under county supervision in building roads, and a second codicil appointing one executor to aid the county in building roads, created a lawful charitable trust with the county as trustee and taxpayers as beneficiaries which was not necessarily invalid because the executor was given administrative duties in the road construction in violation of statute.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Mutual will of surviving spouse—failure to revoke—anti-lapse statute. Inasmuch as mutual wills constitute in law but one will, the will of the first to die, and the will of the survivor, being a nullity, has no existence such as to require revocation by the surviving spouse under this section, nor as to permit the heirs of the surviving spouse to inherit under §11861, C., '35.

Maurer v Johansson, 223-1102; 274 NW 99

II REVOCATION BY OPERATION OF LAW

Mutual wills ipso facto establish prior contract—other evidence unnecessary. Where wills of husband and wife, each acting with knowledge of other, are drawn at substantially same time, at their joint request, and each contains reciprocal provisions, such wills and circumstances are sufficient to establish prior contract to make mutual wills, even when the wills contain no memorandum of the agreement.

Child v Smith, 225-1205; 282 NW 316

Mutual wills defined. Mutual wills are those executed pursuant to an agreement between two or more persons to dispose of their property in a particular manner, each in consideration of the other. Such wills, if they contain no provisions for third persons, constitute a single will, and is the will of the first to die, and have no further existence as the will of the survivor.

Maurer v Johansson, 223-1102; 274 NW 99
Maloney v Rose, 224-1071; 277 NW 572

Mutual—separate or same instrument—revocation. Principle reaffirmed that mutual wills may be in the same or separate instruments, and either party, while both are living, may validly revoke the will by giving notice of the revocation to the other party.

Maurer v Johansson, 223-1102; 274 NW 99

III DESTRUCTION, CANCELLATION, OBLITERATION, OR ALTERATION

Discussion. See 8 ILB 52—Later will destroyed—first will revived

Revocation of codicil by tearing—reconstructing pieces—effect. A codicil to a will is completely revoked when the testator, with the intent to revoke it, directs the custodian thereof to destroy it, and when said custodian, in the absence of testator, complies with said direction by tearing said codicil into many pieces, of which act the testator had knowledge before her death; and this is true tho the custodian preserves said pieces and later physically reconstructs said instrument by pasting the same on another piece of paper.

In re Nish, 220-45; 261 NW 521; 100 ALR 1516

Lost will—required proof. In proceedings to establish a lost will, the proponent must prove (1) the due execution and existence of the instrument; (2) that it has been lost and could not be found through diligent search; (3) that the presumption of its destruction by the testator with intention to revoke it, arising from its absence on his death, has been rebutted, and (4) the contents or provisions of the will.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Lost will—presumption of revocation rebutted. In the establishment of a lost will, there is a presumption that a will which was in the custody of the testator at his death, and which cannot be found, was destroyed by him with the intention of revoking it. The presumption may be rebutted or strengthened by proof of declarations of the testator, his circumstances, or his relations to the persons involved.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

11857 Executors.

Supplanting resident appointee. A duly appointed foreign executor, even tho nominated as such in the will, has no arbitrary right to supplant an executor appointed in this state, where part of the estate is situated.

In re Gray, 201-876; 208 NW 358

Appointment of nominated executor required unless disqualified. Altho a certain discretion lies with the probate court in the appointment of personal representatives, nevertheless an executor named in a will as the one in testator's judgment best fitted to administer his estate should be appointed by the court in the absence of disqualification, which must be more than the objections of collateral relatives.

In re Schneider, 224-598; 277 NW 567

Codicil giving executor highway construction powers. Where a conflict exists between a second codicil and the will and first codicil, the second codicil prevails, but under the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, if the later codicil contains an invalid provision, such provision does not revoke the provisions with which it conflicts in the earlier will and codicil. Where a will and two codicils left property to a county for use in building roads, even if a provision in the second codicil was invalid in improperly delegating county powers to the executor, the doctrine prevented a complete revocation of the previous documents, but they were revoked only to give effect to the second codicil, as there was no change in the purpose of the will, but only a change in the manner of effectuating the gift.

11858 After-born children.

Discussion. See 3 ILB 128—Rights of unborn infants

11859 Claims in disregard of will.

Specific devise — liability for debts. A specific devise of real estate which not only devises the property, but requires the testator's estate to discharge the mortgage thereon, cannot, in case the estate and all nonspecific devises are insufficient to pay said mortgage and other debts, be construed as casting upon another specific devise of real estate which is not made subject to the former devise, the entire burden of discharging said mortgage and other debts. Each of said specific devises must bear said burden in the ratio of their separate value to their combined value.

In re Glandon, 219-1094; 260 NW 12

11860 Devise—legacy—bequest.

Designation of devisee. The fact that the name of the beneficiary of a religious or charitable trust as specified in the will is different than the name of the claimant of the devise becomes unimportant, in the face of ample testimony that the designated beneficiary and the claimant are one and the same institution.

Ross v Seminary, 204-648; 215 NW 710

Equal standing of specific devises. Neither of two different, specific devises of real estate, irrespective of their particular location or position in the will, can be deemed junior or inferior to the other when neither is made subject to the other.

In re Glandon, 219-1094; 260 NW 12

11861 Heirs of devisee.

Discussion. See 19 ILR 1—Anti-lapse problems

“Death without heirs.” Will construed and, in view of the environment of the testator and of the facts concededly known to him, held (1) that a provision to the effect that, if the beneficiary of a trust “dies without leaving any heirs,” the remainder shall go to some old ladies’ home, embraced a death either before or after the death of testator; and (2) that the term “heirs” must be construed as though followed by the words “of his body.”

In re Clifton, 207-71; 218 NW 926

Death in common disaster. The heirs of a devisee cannot be deemed to be substituted for the devisee when it appears that both the testator and devisee perished in a common disaster and there is no evidence that the devisee died before the testator died.

Carpenter v Severin, 201-969; 204 NW 448; 43 ALR 1340

Lapse of devise to spouse. A devise by a husband to his wife is deemed to lapse upon his death when the devise is identical in quality and quantity with what the wife would have taken under the statute, had there been no will; but not so of a devise which gives the wife one third of his entire estate (1) after converting all real estate, including homestead, into personalty and (2) after paying all debts.

In re Davis, 204-1231; 213 NW 395

Devise and bequest identical with statute of descent. A will is a nullity which devises and bequeaths to a devisee and legatee the same quantity and quality of real and personal property which the devisee and legatee would take under the law of descent. So held where a spouseless and childless son, devised all his property to his sole surviving parent.

In re Warren, 211-940; 234 NW 835

Prior death of devisee. A devise to a devisee who dies prior to the testator passes to the heirs of the deceased devisee, in the absence of a contrary intent, as expressed in the will.

Rodgers v Reinking, 205-1311; 217 NW 441

Devisee predeceasing testator—rights of devisee's heirs. Where testator devised to his wife one-half of all the property he should own at time of his death, “to own, hold and enjoy as her own”, and when the wife predeceased him, her heirs inherited one half of all the property of the testator in fee simple, under the anti-lapse statute.

In re Bigham, 227-1023; 290 NW 11

Nonlapse of devise. A devise to one whom the testator knows to be dead when the will is executed does not lapse on the death of the testator, the will not manifesting a contrary intent.

Friederichs v Friederichs, 205-505; 218 NW 271

Intended lapse. A bequest, even tho in terms directly to an infant legatee, “to be used to further his education, said amount to be placed in a savings account and be allowed to run until he has arrived at the age of 18 years when it shall be used for that purpose”, reveals an intention to let the bequest lapse in case the legatee dies before the testator dies.

In re Best, 206-786; 221 NW 369

Substituted legatees — offsetting debts. Unless a will provides otherwise, a legacy to one who predeceases the testator passes to the heirs of the deceased legatee subject to the right of the executor to apply the legacy on the unpaid debt of the deceased legatee to the estate. It follows that if the debt equals or exceeds the legacy the heirs take nothing.

In re Mikkelsen, 202-842; 211 NW 254

In re Rueschenberg, 213-639; 239 NW 529

Collateral heirs — burden of proof. Collateral heirs, belonging as they do under the law of inheritance to a deferred class, must, in order to inherit, affirmatively negative by the greater weight of evidence, the existence, at the time the inheritance was cast, of any other heir belonging to a more favored class. Held that collateral heirs had failed to negative the independent existence of twins after they had been taken, by a Caesarean operation, from the womb of a dead mother.

Wehrman v Farmers Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

Devise to class and individuals thereof. A devise to a class of persons lapses as to all devisees who die prior to the testator; but when the devise is to a class and the persons in that class are individually named, the devise is presumptively a devise to each individual, and the death of a devisee prior to the death of testator does not cause that devise to lapse; and a proviso that the devise shall be held jointly does not overthrow said presumption.

In re Carter, 203-603; 213 NW 392

Devise to class individually named. A devise to a class, the members of which are individually named, is presumptively a separate devise to each separate individual.

Friederichs v Friederichs, 205-505; 218 NW 271

Devise to class—predeceased children—intention from antenuptial contract. A testator's intention when ascertainable is controlling and the general rule which limits a devise to a class to only such devisees as are alive at testator's death, is not applicable where a contrary intent appears. So held in construing a will dividing the residue "among my children" where an antenuptial contract mentioned in the will, altho an extrinsic matter, was admitted to show testator's intention to include the heirs of his predeceased children among his children.

In re Huston, 224-420; 275 NW 149

Mutual will of surviving spouse—failure to revoke—anti-lapse statute. Inasmuch as mutual wills constitute in law but one will, the will of the first to die, and the will of the survivor, being a nullity, has no existence such as to require revocation by the surviving spouse under §11855, C., '35, nor as to permit the heirs of the surviving spouse to inherit under §11861, C., '35.

Maurer v Johansson, 223-1102; 274 NW 99

Settlement without administration—agreement of heirs binding. An agreement by heirs to settle estate without administration and providing for payment of legacies is legal and binding, and a widow of one of such heirs in a subsequent partition action cannot complain of denial of legacy to deceased heir where legacies due to other heirs were larger and such heirs received no part of their legacies.

Meeker v Meeker, (NOR); 283 NW 873

11862 Custodian—filing—penalty.

Lost will—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence to establish a lost will and the contents thereof must be very clear and satisfactory.

ANALYSIS

- I PROBATE IN GENERAL
- II NECESSITY OF PROBATE
- III PLEADINGS, EVIDENCE, AND TRIAL

I PROBATE IN GENERAL

Remand with order to dismiss. A holding on appeal that an instrument is not admissible to probate as a last will and testament necessitates a remand to the trial court with direction to dismiss the petition for probate.

In re McElderry, 217-268; 251 NW 610

Lost will. An action to establish a lost will must be brought in the probate court.

Coulter v Petersen, 218-512; 255 NW 684

Lost will—required evidence. Evidence sufficient to probate a lost will must clearly and satisfactorily establish (1) the due execution, and (2) the contents, of such will; and such rule is not relaxed by the fact that such will was last seen in the possession of the testator's wife. Evidence held insufficient.

Miller v Miller, 203-888; 210 NW 537

In re Delaney, 207-448; 223 NW 484

Cancellation by subsequent, lost will—clear and convincing evidence required. A prior will is not shown to be revoked by evidence which tends to prove the execution of a subsequent will containing a clause revoking the prior will, but which is otherwise wholly indefinite as to the contents of such subsequent will and as to the witnesses thereto and as to its whereabouts.

In re Rutledge, 210-1256; 232 NW 674

Mutual wills—probating one nullifies second—evidence—no jury question. Where mutual wills have been executed and one previously admitted to probate, the remaining will being a nullity, an order denying it to probate is proper, and indefinite evidence of testator's statements offered in an attempt to create validity was speculative, properly stricken, and raised no jury question.

Maurer v Johansson, 223-1102; 274 NW 99

Approval of executor's report not construction of will. The fact that the court had approved an executor's report, wherein he had attempted to relieve an estate of inheritance tax on the ground that all devises in the will were contingent, does not mean that such holding is a construction of the will, since the construction of the will was not in issue.

Flanagan v Spalti, 225-1231; 282 NW 347

II NECESSITY OF PROBATE

Agreement not to probate. Beneficiaries under a will may validly agree, and have their agreement confirmed by an order of court, that the will shall not be probated, and that the property shall be shared on a basis different than that provided by the rejected instrument—no question as to the right of trust beneficiaries or of estate creditors being involved.

In re Murphy, 217-1291; 252 NW 523

III PLEADINGS, EVIDENCE, AND TRIAL

Petition to probate unnecessary. A person having the custody of a will must file it with the clerk, and a petition to probate the will is no part of our probate practice.

In re Young, 224-419; 275 NW 558

Lost will. Evidence sufficient to probate a lost will must clearly and satisfactorily establish (1) the due execution, and (2) the contents, of such will; and such rule is not relaxed by the fact that such will was last seen in the possession of the testator's wife.

Miller v Miller, 203-888; 210 NW 537

In re Delaney, 207-448; 223 NW 484

Lost will—required proof. In proceedings to establish a lost will, the proponent must prove (1) the due execution and existence of the instrument; (2) that it has been lost and could not be found through diligent search; (3) that the presumption of its destruction by the testator with intention to revoke it, arising from its absence on his death, has been rebutted, and (4) the contents or provisions of the will.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Establishment of lost will. Proceedings to establish a lost will are within the jurisdiction of the court to act without a jury, as first the court must determine whether the proof is sufficient to establish the terms of the lost instrument, and, if the court finds it to be properly proved and established, then the matter stands as do all wills when offered for probate, and, if contested, may be tried to a jury.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Hostile petitions—refusal to consolidate. Possibly the hearing on different petitions for the probate of hostile wills might be consolidated and the validity of said wills tried out in one action, yet an order which refuses such consolidation is not erroneous when the rights of all parties are fully protected by the order.

In re Fitzgerald, 219-988; 259 NW 455

Undue influence—insufficient proof. Principle reaffirmed that opportunity and disposition to exercise undue influence, plus persuasion and importunity as to the disposition of testator's property, are not sufficient, in and of themselves, to establish undue influence. Record reviewed and held wholly insufficient to support the submission of the issue.

In re Muhr, 218-867; 256 NW 305

Directed verdict—when required. When the real issue is as to testator's mental competency, the court should sustain the will, by a directed verdict, when a contrary jury verdict would be without adequate evidentiary support, or, in other words, when contestant has failed to show that testator was so mentally deficient that he did not comprehend the nature and purpose of the instrument, the extent of his property, the distribution he wanted to make, or those who had claim on his bounty. (Directed verdict held proper.)

In re Fitzgerald, 219-988; 259 NW 455

Grounds—verdict contrary to evidence. Where proponents of a will move for a new trial, setting up five specific grounds, one being that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, as to which ground the record shows a conflict in the testimony, an order granting a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal.

In re Younggren, 225-348; 280 NW 556

11864 Contest—jury trial.

ANALYSIS

I CONTESTS IN GENERAL

II COSTS

I CONTESTS IN GENERAL

Burden of proof—testamentary capacity—how determined. In a will contest, after proponent's formal proofs, the burden of showing lack of mental capacity of the testatrix is on contestant. Mere deterioration in physical or mental powers does not destroy testamentary capacity until the mental decline reaches such stage that the person is unable to intelligently comprehend the estate of which he is possessed and the natural objects of his bounty and to intelligently exercise judgment and discretion in the disposition of his property.

In re Behrend, 227-1099; 290 NW 78

Lack of testamentary capacity—evidence sufficiency—jury question. On appeal from directed verdict against contestant in a will contest where the evidence shows, by testimony of physician who attended testatrix over a period of years, that testatrix was a woman prematurely old at 66, suffering from toxic goiter and other ailments which prevented proper nutrition of her organs and kept her body poisoned, that such ailments were of progressive nature resulting in rapid increase of her apparent age and accelerated physical and mental decline and that in his opinion testatrix's mentality was impaired to such extent at time of execution of will she was of unsound mind, held, that evidence of lack of testamentary capacity was sufficient to support a verdict for contestant, if jury so found, and refusal to submit case to the jury was erroneous.

I CONTESTS IN GENERAL—continued

In re Behrend, 227-1099; 290 NW 78

Administration in general—irregular and improper. The fact that, in a will contest, verdict has been returned and judgment entered thereon to the effect that the alleged will in question is not a valid will, does not, in and of itself, legally justify the court in terminating an existing special administratorship and in appointing a general administrator. Said latter appointment would probably be void.

In re Whitehouse, 223-91; 272 NW 110

Establishment of lost will. Proceedings to establish a lost will are within the jurisdiction of the court to act without a jury, as first the court must determine whether the proof is sufficient to establish the terms of the lost instrument, and, if the court finds it to be properly proved and established, then the matter stands as do all wills when offered for probate, and, if contested, may be tried to a jury.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

False representations. A representation to the effect that if a will is contested the property of the estate must be divided equally among the heirs, interwoven inter alia with the statement that the testator "had no business (right)" to will all the property to a particular heir, and a false statement as to the expense attending such contest, constitute a legal fraud if made for the purpose of inducing action, and if justifiably believed and justifiably relied on by the party to whom made to his detriment.

Smith v Smith, 206-606; 219 NW 512

Contract of settlement—fraud and undue influence. In action to set aside contract for settlement of will contest, representations that "lawyers would get all the property" and that devisee "did not need a lawyer" were not fraudulent representations, and failure of court to submit issue of undue influence and constructive fraud was not error under the evidence.

Smith v Smith, (NOR); 230 NW 401

Copying censorious and inflammatory pleading. A censorious and somewhat inflammatory pleading of grounds of contest of a will should, if the context presents support for such action, be so paraphrased in the instructions as to present the simple issues of (1) want of testamentary capacity and (2) undue influence. To copy the entire pleading into the instructions constitutes reversible error.

In re Thompson, 211-935; 234 NW 841

Submission of withdrawn issue. The submission to the jury in a will contest of the issue of testamentary capacity, when said issue had been wholly withdrawn by the contestant (even tho in the presence of the jury), is necessarily erroneous and prejudicial.

In re Narber, 211-713; 234 NW 185

Unallowable contestant — assignee of expectancy. An assignee—even for value—of the interest which an heir expects to inherit in the property of his parent, may not contest the will of the parent in case the assignor-heir be disinherited by the last will and testament of the parent.

Burk v Morain, 223-399; 272 NW 441; 112 ALR 79

Judgment creditor of devisee-heir. When a father's will left property to a son and heir in trust so that it could not be subjected to the son's debts, a judgment creditor of the son was an interested person who had a beneficial and pecuniary interest in the estate of the deceased and in the son's share therein, of which he would be deprived to his prejudice if the will were probated.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Judgment creditor of heir. The creditor of an heir who holds a judgment against him which would be a lien upon any real estate which he would inherit from an ancestor has an interest which entitles him to contest the ancestor's will.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Judgment creditor of heir. Judgments held against a son and heir of the decedent and recorded where real estate owned by the decedent was located became liens upon the real estate at the time the title thereto vested in the son, and were a beneficial interest entitling the creditor to contest the probate of a will which would deprive him of that interest.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Mutual wills—probating one nullifies second—evidence—no jury question. Where mutual wills have been executed and one previously admitted to probate, the remaining will being a nullity, an order denying it to probate is proper, and indefinite evidence of testator's statements offered in an attempt to create validity was speculative, properly stricken, and raised no jury question.

Maurer v Johansson, 223-1102; 274 NW 99

Nonconfusing instruction. Instructions reviewed in a will contest and held not subject to the vice of being inconsistent or confusing.

In re Wood, 213-254; 237 NW 237

Harmless error—structuring on immaterial, nonprejudicial evidence. A will contestant's contention that it was error to instruct regarding a nonmaterial exhibit—a memorandum by a deceased attorney, who drew the will—although well founded, held to be error without prejudice when the paper and the conversation connected therewith were not necessary for proponents to make a prima facie case of the due and legal execution of the will and the genuineness of the signatures.

In re Iwers, 225-389; 280 NW 579

Will contest—immaterial and prejudicial matter. In a will contest, evidence that the wife of a witness gave birth to a child materially earlier than the ordinary period of gestation is quite improper and immaterial.

In re Thompson, 211-935; 234 NW 841

Newly discovered evidence—inviting perjury—improper offer of money or property. A new trial must be granted when, after a verdict adverse to proponent in a will contest, the fact is promptly discovered and shown to the court that the contestant, during said first trial, and on condition that he win the contest, had made, to divers of the witnesses testifying at the trial, offers of a substantial part of the estate as an inducement for said witnesses to testify in behalf of contestant; and this is true even tho it be conceded that said contestant in making said offers was not intending thereby actually to bribe said witnesses to commit perjury.

In re Whitehouse, 223-91; 272 NW 110

Instituting noninconsistent action. The commencement by the proponents of a will of an action in partition after the return of a verdict holding the will invalid is not a waiver of the right to appeal from the adverse verdict denying probate of the will, when the petition in partition definitely asserted the intent and right to appeal, and assumed to make the outcome of the partition proceedings dependent on the outcome of said appeal.

In re Narber, 211-713; 234 NW 185

II COSTS

Taxation — unsuccessful will contestant. Costs accruing in an unsuccessful contest of a will should be taxed to the contestant.

Schroeder v Cable, 211-1107; 235 NW 63

11865 Notice of hearing.

Sufficiency. The probate clerk, under his discretionary statutory powers, may order less than ten days notice of the probate of a will, and may also vary the ordinary statutory method of giving the notice.

In re McKinstry, 204-487; 215 NW 497

11866 Proof—depositions.

Lost will—proof necessary to establish. To establish a lost will, the evidence must be clear, satisfactory and convincing, but need not be free from doubt.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Lost will—required proof. In proceedings to establish a lost will, the proponent must prove (1) the due execution and existence of the instrument; (2) that it has been lost and could not be found through diligent search; (3) that the presumption of its destruction by the testator with intention to revoke it, arising from its absence on his death, has been rebutted, and (4) the contents or provisions of the will.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Proof of state of mind. Decedent's statements, made to the person who drew a will for him, that he wished to make a will and that he wished a certain person to have all his property, were admissible after his death as an exception to the hearsay rule to prove his existing state of mind at the time and to show that his plan was put into effect by making such a will.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

State of mind. When a person who had talked with the decedent shortly before decedent's death testified that the decedent told him that he had made a will, where it was made, and who were witnesses to the will, the testimony, when not objected to, could be given its full probative effect, and came under an exception to the hearsay rule to show the then state of mind of the decedent, tending to prove the prior execution of the will.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Court findings upheld. In proceedings to establish a lost will, the loss of the will and the search for it were proved by evidence that the will could not be found altho the home of the deceased and other places where the will might have been kept were thoroughly searched. The conclusion of the trial judge on the sufficiency of such evidence will not be disturbed unless discretion is abused.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Lost will—presumption of revocation rebutted. In the establishment of a lost will, there is a presumption that a will which was in the custody of the testator at his death, and which cannot be found, was destroyed by him with the intention of revoking it. The presumption may be rebutted or strengthened by proof of declarations of the testator, his circumstances, or his relations to the persons involved.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Lost will—contents shown by subscribing witness. The contents of a lost will were sufficiently established by testimony of a subscribing witness who heard the testator tell the scrivener how he wanted to dispose of his property, and heard the will read aloud to the testator who signed it without suggesting any change in the contents, when the testimony met all the requirements justifying an exception to the hearsay rule.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

Proof of testamentary intentions. Testimony by a witness to a will that the will was read aloud in the presence of himself and the testator, and that the testator signed it and did not object to the contents, was proper to show that the instrument was executed with the belief that it disposed of the testator's property in accordance with his intentions.

Goodale v Murray, 227-843; 289 NW 450

11876 Trustees to give bond.

Trusts generally. See under §10049

Discussion. See 21 ILR 651—Relation of resulting trusts to partial intestacy

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 225

Successive bonds. Principle reaffirmed that successive, unreleased bonds of the same administrator for the same estate remain in force.

Varga v Guar. Co., 215-499; 245 NW 765

Bonds—necessary conditions. It seems that the official bonds of executors, administrators, court-appointed trustees, and similar officers are necessarily conditioned as the bonds of public officers are conditioned. (§1059, C., '31.)

Whisler v Estes, 216-491; 249 NW 264

Powers of trustee. Principle reaffirmed that the power of a trustee to dispose of trust property is limited to the powers granted in the trust agreement.

In re Barnett, 217-187; 251 NW 59

Trustees — powers — execution of notes. Power in a testamentary trustee to invest and reinvest the subject matter of the trust and generally to do substantially whatever the testator might do, were he alive, necessarily embraces the power to purchase lands and to execute promissory notes therefor.

Arnette v Watson, 203-552; 213 NW 270

Devise in fee in connection with trusteeship—effect. An unqualified devise in fee arms the devisee with power and right to mortgage the premises even tho the testator sees fit to embody in his will a provision for a trustee and to grant power in such trustee to execute mortgages.

First Bank v Torkelson, 209-659; 228 NW 655

No failure of trust for want of trustee. A trust estate will not fail for want of a trustee. So held where the bank, named as trustee in a will, failed.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Death of trustee—revesting of title. Upon the death of a trustee, the title to the trust property vests in the beneficiary of the trust.

Copple v Morrison, 221-183; 264 NW 113

Trusts — property held by administrator. Where trust property in the possession of an administrator is identifiable and not affected by rights of innocent third parties, equity may impress a trust therein.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

Testamentary trustee's conduct. The intentions of a testator must be ascertained from the terms of the will and such intentions must prevail. In a matter of doubtful construction, circumstances surrounding the execution of the will may be shown to aid in determining what the testator meant by the language used. The conduct of a testamentary trustee is not such a circumstance and is therefore not a material, evidential matter in determining testator's intention.

Freier v Longnecker, 227-366; 288 NW 444

Validity. A testamentary trust will be sustained when the intent of testator is evident, even tho the bequest runs to an unincorporated entity.

Meeker v Lawrence, 203-409; 212 NW 688

Trustee by contract—jurisdiction of court. A trustee who is such by contract between himself and the beneficiaries, but who applies to the district court for formal appointment, who is so appointed, who qualifies as such trustee under order of court, and who, in compliance with a prayer therefor, is authorized to take possession of, and manage the property in question under "orders of court", is subject to the jurisdiction of the court in the matter of reports, the rejection thereof, and final accounting.

In re Skinner, 215-1021; 247 NW 484

Establishing trust to defeat heir's judgment creditors. When a will devised all of testatrix's property to daughter in trust, directing trustee to make a monthly payment to a third party and to transfer a one-fourth interest in the trust estate to each of two grandchildren when they reached a certain age, and providing that daughter should have a one-half interest in the estate during her life only in the event obligations to her judgment creditors were barred or satisfied, such will established a trust, and did not repose entire beneficial interest in daughter. Nor was the trust extinguished by a merger of daughter's legal and equitable estate so that property could be subjected to satisfaction of creditor's judgments, because in equity the doctrine of merger will not be invoked if it would frustrate the testatrix's expressed intentions or if there is some other reason for keeping the estates separate.

Freier v Longnecker, 227-366; 288 NW 444

Findings of fact in probate—conclusiveness. A supported finding of fact by trustees that the beneficiary of a testamentary bequest had fulfilled the conditions imposed on the payment of said bequest is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Sams, 219-374; 258 NW 682

Execution of trust. The discretion of a trustee in carrying out the purposes of the trust is always subject to review by the court.

In re Cool, 210-30; 230 NW 353

Conditional bequest—fulfillment—discretion of trustees. A testamentary bequest payable on condition that the beneficiary shall "abstain from all those things that lead him into a dissipated life and make him an undesirable citizen" and that at a named age he shall be "a reasonable good citizen" must be construed as vesting the trustees with a fair and good-faith discretion in determining whether the conditions have been complied with. Evidence held not to show an abuse of such discretion.

In re Sams, 219-374; 258 NW 682

Conditional bequest—fulfillment—discretion of trustees. A testamentary bequest payable on condition that the beneficiary "go on and complete his education through the high school and four years of college course", coupled with a provision that the "substantial" fulfillment of such condition is left to the "fair judgment and opinion" of the trustees, must be construed as authorizing the trustees, in good faith, to find a fulfillment on the basis of an acquired education other than that acquired under a regular and established high school and college curriculum, but, in their fair judgment, equal thereto.

In re Sams, 219-374; 258 NW 682

Execution of trust—trustees (?) or receiver (?). A court of equity may not terminate or violate a trust agreement between the issuer of bonds and trustees to the effect that the former will transfer to the latter securities for the benefit of bondholders, and that if the issuer defaults in the payment of interest on, or principal of, the bonds, the trustees, on notice from the unpaid bondholders, shall liquidate said securities and apply the proceeds to the payment of the bonds. It follows that, if the issuer of the bonds becomes insolvent, the trustees, in the absence of any counterwish of the bondholders, have a right, superior to that of the receiver, to liquidate the securities, the securities being less than the outstanding bonds; and this is true even tho the securities in question are not actually transferred to the trustees but only delivered to them.

In re Trusteeship, 214-884; 241 NW 308

Action against joint parties. Two or more persons acting jointly in a fiduciary capacity in relation to the same property for the same beneficiary, are properly made joint defendants in an action to enforce the trust.

Burger v Krall, 211-1160; 235 NW 318

Reports—burden of proof. A trustee has the burden to justify his own reports.

In re Bartholomew, 207-109; 222 NW 356

Reports—disapproval. A trustee who, in his acceptance of a nontestamentary trust, agrees to report annually to the district court, and does so report, and who invokes the jurisdiction of the probate court to pass upon his reports, may not thereafter question the power and right of such court to act upon such reports.

In re Bartholomew, 207-109; 222 NW 356

Preservation of property by administrator. In proceeding to recover from surety on administrator's bond, principle held applicable that a trustee is presumed to have preserved the property and that such presumption stands until overcome by evidence. Fact that such proceeding is at law does not preclude application of equitable principles.

In re Willenbrock, 228- ; 290 NW 503

Loss of trust funds. Where the issue whether a trustee should be credited with a loss of trust funds was heard by the probate court without a jury (as a continuation of the probate proceedings out of which the trust arose), the holding of the court, granting such credit, will be sustained if the evidence pro and con would have presented a jury question had the hearing been before a jury.

In re Moylan, 219-624; 258 NW 766

Credit for overpayment of income. On final accounting, a trustee will be credited with an overpayment to the beneficiary of income even tho such payment was made in advance of the actual receipt of the income.

In re Siberts, 216-336; 249 NW 196

Receipt of funds. Where a party was guardian of minors and also trustee for said minors (bond in each case having been given), his written receipt showing the receipt of funds as guardian is not necessarily conclusive on the issue whether he received said funds as trustee.

In re Baldwin, 217-279; 251 NW 696

Self-enrichment of trustee. A testamentary trustee of a coal mining company who, personally or in connection with employees of the company, with their own funds, buys up lands or mining rights in lands, and leases to the company the right to mine coal from said lands under a royalty, will not be compelled, long afterward, to account to the legatees and devisees for the royalties so received and for salary drawn during said time, (1) when the trustee had been vested under the will with substantially the same power over the business as the deceased possessed when living, (2) when the policy of operating on leases was but a continuance of the life-long policy of the deceased, (3) when the royalties paid were the royalties ordinarily and customarily paid in said locality, and (4) when the existence and history of said transactions were carried openly on the books of the company, and were either personally known or capable of being easily known by all the legatees and devisees.

In re Evans, 212-1; 232 NW 72

Investments without authorizing order — subsequent confirmation. Assuming, arguendo, that an authorizing order of court is absolutely necessary in order to render legal an investment of trust funds, yet a trustee, who, without such order, has made an investment in good faith, and without loss to the estate, may, subsequently, on a full showing of the controlling facts, and at a time when the estate has suffered no loss, be granted a valid order confirming said investment. (But see §12772, C., '31.)

In re Lawson, 215-752; 244 NW 739; 88 ALR 316

Adjudication of liability. An unappealed order of court adjudicating the amount of the liability of a trustee to the beneficiary is conclusive on the trustee and ipso facto on his surety.

Dodds v Cartwright, 209-835; 226 NW 918

Fraud of trustee. It is of no concern to a surety on the bond of a trustee whether the beneficiary affirms or disaffirms the fraudulent conduct of the trustee.

Dodds v Cartwright, 209-835; 226 NW 918

Liability on trustee's bond. A court-appointed trustee of cemetery funds and the sureties on his bond are liable for said funds deposited, without authority of court, in a bank of which both the trustee and the sureties were officers, and lost because of the insolvency of said bank.

Belmond Assn. v Luick, 217-805; 253 NW 521

Voluntarily augmented funds. A court-appointed, testamentary trustee and the surety on his official, statutory bond are liable not only for the money which comes into his hands as specifically required by the will, but for additional amounts of the testamentary funds which come into the hands of the trustee, as such, consequent on the generous action of the devisees, generally, in voluntarily augmenting said trust funds from the testamentary funds.

Whisler v Estes, 216-491; 249 NW 264

Commingle funds. Where trust funds are deposited in the individual account of the trustee, the cestui que trust has the right to elect to sue the trustee for the conversion, or he may pursue the trust funds and establish a preference thereto if they can be traced.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Trustee borrowing from himself—accounting in cash (?) or in investments (?). A trustee, duly appointed by the court to execute a contract trusteeship, who loans the trust funds to himself, and uses the same in the purchase and improvement of various properties, without any authorizing order of court and without the knowledge or consent of the beneficiaries of the trust, will, on final report, be ordered to account in cash for said funds, and not in the physical properties bought by him, especially when said properties are inferior to the standard of investments required by said contract.

In re Skinner, 215-1021; 247 NW 484

Trustee buying property from himself. The act of a trustee in transferring his individually owned bonds and mortgages to himself as trustee and charging the trust funds with the amount thereof is wholly void even when authorized by an order of court. A fortiori is this true when the order was not obtained in good faith.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Nonpermissible purchase by trustee. A trustee of property may not sell trust property to himself, nor to a co-trustee, nor to his or her spouse, without the consent of all beneficiaries of the trust, nor may the court authorize or approve such a sale without the consent of said beneficiaries.

In re Holley, 211-77; 232 NW 807

Negligence—evidence. Evidence held to support a finding that a trustee had failed to exercise a fair and sound discretion in investing trust funds.

In re Bartholomew, 207-109; 222 NW 356

Unauthorized investments. Trust funds invested by a trustee in questionable or worthless securities without an authorizing order of court must, on settlement, be accounted for in cash, such securities not being "securities approved" as provided by section 12772, C., '31.

Whisler v Estes, 216-491; 249 NW 264

Unauthorized investment—advice of counsel. An illegal and unauthorized investment by a trustee will not, on an accounting, be treated as legal and authorized on a showing that the investment was made on the advice of an attorney.

In re Skinner, 215-1021; 247 NW 484

Unallowable investments. The court may charge a court-appointed trustee with the amount of an investment purchased by the trustee from himself at a profit and without an authorizing order of court.

In re Siberts, 216-336; 249 NW 196

Right to impeach action of trustee. The act of a trustee in individually buying in property at tax sale and in receiving a tax sale certificate when a mortgage on the property constituted part of the trust fund is unimpeachable except by the cestui que trust; in other words, the subsequent purchaser of said property at foreclosure sale may not impeach such act, especially when such purchaser had both actual and constructive knowledge when he purchased that the taxes had not been paid.

Eyres v Koehler, 212-1290; 237 NW 351

Redemption from tax sale. The act of a testamentary trustee in individually buying in property at tax sale and receiving a tax sale certificate when a mortgage on the property constituted a part of the trust funds cannot be deemed a redemption of the property from the taxes for the benefit of a subsequent purchaser of the property at mortgage foreclosure sale.

Eyres v Koehler, 212-1290; 237 NW 351

Improper allowance of attorney fees. A trust created by a legislative appropriation act, solely for the "education, care, and keep" of a designated person, may not be depleted by the allowance by the court of attorney fees for services rendered, not in the administration of the trust, but in inducing the legislature to make the appropriation.

In re Gage, 208-603; 226 NW 64

Receivership for insolvent trustee creates vacancy—power to fill. A judicial finding that a banking institution is insolvent and the appointment of a receiver to liquidate its affairs, ipso facto, (1) transfers, to the custody of the law, trust property held by said insolvent as a duly appointed testamentary trustee, (2) deprives said insolvent trustee of power further to act in said trusteeship, and (3) necessarily creates a vacancy in the office of said trust,—which vacancy the probate court has legal power to fill by appointing a successor in trust, (1) on the sworn application therefor supplemented by the professional statement of counsel, (2) at an ex parte hearing and without notice to interested parties, and (3) without any formal proceedings whatever for the termination of said former trusteeship; and especially is this true when said former trustee, formally and by its conduct, abandons its said trusteeship and all right and interest therein.

In re Strasser, 220-194; 262 NW 137; 102 ALR 117

In re Carson, 221-367; 265 NW 648

Trustee—disqualification—effect. Equity will not permit a trust to fail simply because a particular trustee is disqualified from acting.

State v Cas. Co., 206-988; 221 NW 585

Trustees—control and removal by court. Trustees are subject to control or removal by the court.

In re Sexauer's Trust, (NOR); 287 NW 247

Termination or removal of trustee by court. Evidence sustained trial court's refusal to terminate a spendthrift trust, or discharge trustees, upon application of beneficiary who alleged mismanagement and lack of cooperation on part of trustees, and also that bene-fiary was not a spendthrift and that trust was not accomplishing purpose intended.

In re Sexauer's Trust, (NOR); 287 NW 247

11878 Foreign wills—procedure.

Jurisdiction to appoint nonresident administrator. The clerk of the district court has ample power to appoint a nonresident as administrator.

Setting aside probate, limitation of action. See under §11007 (XIX)

I EFFECT OF PROBATE

Discussion. See 16 ILR 195—Decree determining heirs, distribution

Findings by probate court—conclusiveness. Findings of fact by a probate court are conclusive on the appellate court when they are fairly supported by competent testimony.

In re Fish, 220-1247; 264 NW 123

What adjudicated—nonestoppel to construe will after final report. Probate of a will being conclusive only as to its due execution and publication, a petition to construe a will is not a collateral attack on the order of probate; and such petition may be filed after the executor's final report, before which the petitioners were not aware of the construction which the executor would place on the will and therefore no estoppel arises from permitting executor to proceed with administration of the estate.

Maloney v Rose, 224-1071; 277 NW 572

Father-son partnership—probate of father's estate—son's partnership rights not adjudicated. A son's rights as a partner in a partnership with his father and mother, which partnership was continued with mother after father's death, were not adjudicated by the probate of his father's will and mother's discharge as executrix, since son was not a party to such proceeding as a partner, and since the probate court administered only the property owned by the father at the time of his death.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

II SETTING ASIDE PROBATE BY APPELLATE OR ORIGINAL PROCEEDINGS

Inheritance taker as representative of contingent remainderman. A decree setting aside the probate of a will and canceling said will (the action being instituted in good faith and so tried by all parties thereto) is, on the prin-

Harris v Randolph, 213-772; 236 NW 51

Statute of limitation — creditor's suit. Record involving an equitable proceeding to discover property belonging to a judgment defendant, and to subject said discovered property to the satisfaction of said judgment, reviewed, and held not barred by §§10378, 11007, C., '35, nor by this section.

Bankers Tr. v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Management in general—employment of counsel—extraordinary expense. An executor is under duty to defend a will after it is duly probated, and may employ counsel at the expense of the estate to contest an action to set aside the probate and to contest the will, even tho he has already employed counsel to advise him in his ordinary duties, and even tho he is personally interested in sustaining the will; and the court should, irrespective of the amount which the executor has agreed to pay, make a reasonable allowance to the executor for such expense when it is extraordinary.

In re Jewe, 201-1154; 208 NW 723

Burden of proof — failure to meet. In an action to set aside the probate of a will and to cancel a deed on the grounds (1) of the mental incapacity of the testator-grantor, and (2) of the undue influence of the devisee-grantee, the burden rests on plaintiff to establish at least one of said grounds. Evidence quite elaborately reviewed and held, plaintiff had failed to meet the burden of proof resting upon him.

Walters v Heaton, 223-405; 271 NW 310

11883 Administration granted.

ANALYSIS

I GRANTING OF ADMINISTRATION IN GENERAL
II PREFERENCE AND QUALIFICATION OF AP-POINTEES

Right of testamentary nominee. See under §11857

I GRANTING OF ADMINISTRATION IN GENERAL

Jurisdiction—appointment—recital of residence in petition. The district court of the county in which deceased resided at time of his death has exclusive jurisdiction to appoint an administrator and petition for appointment need not recite the place of residence of the deceased.

Crawford County v Kock, 227-1235; 290 NW 682

Jurisdiction—domicile of deceased—evidence. Evidence reviewed and held to warrant finding that deceased was resident of Boone county at time of death, giving the district court of that county exclusive jurisdiction to appoint an administrator for his estate.

Crawford County v Kock, 227-1235; 290 NW 682

Appointment—jurisdiction. The district court of the county in which an unsatisfied judgment was rendered has jurisdiction to appoint administration upon the estate of the nonresident judgment plaintiff.

Edwards v Popham, 206-149; 220 NW 16

Appointment—petitioning creditor indebted to estate—effect. A county asserting a claim and an individual claimant were "creditors" of the estate, and appointment of an administrator on their petition was valid even tho the individual might owe the estate more than the amount of his claim, since the validity of claims was not before the court.

Crawford County v Kock, 227-1235; 290 NW 682

Presumption. The record of the appointment in a county of an administrator and his due qualification is a finality and beyond collateral attack, even tho the record fails affirmatively to show the existence of the facts upon which the jurisdiction of the court depends; otherwise if the record affirmatively reveals want of jurisdiction.

Ferguson v Connell, 210-419; 230 NW 859

Collateral attack. Probate proceedings cannot be collaterally attacked until it is shown that fraud was perpetrated on the court inducing it to take jurisdiction.

Ferguson v Connell, 212-1155; 237 NW 354

Settlement without administrator. The act of those legally entitled to an estate, consisting solely of personal property, in paying all debts of the deceased and claims against the estate, and dividing the balance among themselves, all without the appointment of an administrator, renders improper the subsequent appointment of an administrator; and if such be appointed he will be without legal power because he will have nothing on which to administer.

Heinz v Vawter, 221-714; 266 NW 486

II PREFERENCE AND QUALIFICATION OF APPOINTEES

Application—sufficient showing. Application for appointment of administrator de bonis non held sufficient in form and contents.

Giberson v Henness, 219-359; 258 NW 708

Discretion as to appointee. The court may, in view of the relation which a nominee as executor holds to the estate and to the heirs, refuse to appoint him, even tho personally highly qualified, and appoint some other fit, proper and qualified person.

In re Tracey, 214-881; 243 NW 309

Next of kin—no degrees of nearness. "Next of kin" within the meaning of this statute, embraces those persons who take the personal property of the deceased, and there are no degrees of nearness in said class. For instance, a sister of the deceased has no necessarily preferential right over a niece of the deceased.

In re Wright, 210-25; 230 NW 552

Qualification—effect of adoption of deceased. Adopting parent's second wife held to be a proper administratrix in contest between the heirs of adopting parents and the natural parents.

In re Smith, 223-817; 273 NW 891

Collateral attack. In an action by an administrator, an answer alleging that plaintiff is not a legal administrator because he is a nonresident and secured his appointment by concealing that fact from the court is properly stricken because (1) the plaintiff's nonresidence did not render the appointment void, and, therefore, (2) the answer is but an unallowable attempt to collaterally attack the probate order of appointment.

Reidy v Railway, 216-415; 249 NW 347

Nonresident alien. A nonresident alien is not necessarily disqualified from acting as an administrator.

In re Rugh, 211-722; 234 NW 278

Reidy v Railway, 216-415; 249 NW 347

Superior right to make application and receive appointment. An alien, nonresident half-sister of a deceased, as next of kin, has the statutory right, superior to that of the resident paternal grandmother, during the 20 days following the burial of the deceased, to make application for the appointment (1) of herself, or (2) of any other suitable person as administrator, and an order of the probate court appointing a suitable person on the half-sister's application, and discharging the paternal grandmother who has in the meantime caused herself to be appointed, will not be disturbed.

In re Rugh, 211-722; 234 NW 278

Judgment creditor of heir. A judgment creditor of an heir of an intestate is a proper person to make application for the appointment of an administrator even tho the judgment is pending on appeal under a supersedeas bond, it appearing that the deceased left several heirs and a small quantity of real and personal property.

Moreland v Lowry, 213-1096; 241 NW 31

Application by agent—estoppel to object. An application for the appointment of an administrator made by a proper party, but made apparently by or through an agent or representative, must be deemed the application of said proper party and not by the agent or representative, when the latter claim is manifestly a belated afterthought of those hostile to the application.

Moreland v Lowry, 213-1096; 241 NW 31

Ex parte revocation. A peremptory, ex parte court order to the effect that the appointment of an administrator is revoked and the simultaneous reappointment of the same administrator and the execution of another bond, does not effect a legal revocation, and consequently does not operate as a discharge of the bond given pursuant to the original appointment.

In re Donlon, 203-1045; 213 NW 781

11884 Time allowed.

Right of heirs—absence of administration. When administration is not granted during the five years following the death, in this state, of an intestate, an heir may maintain an action to foreclose a mortgage to the extent of his vested interest therein as an heir; and especially so when the absence of any debts is made to appear.

Hoffman v Hoffman, 205-1194; 219 NW 311

Nonpremature application. When there is no surviving spouse (class No. 1), and when the "next of kin" (class No. 2) have made no application for the appointment of an administrator within the preferred time given them by statute, and when there are no creditors of the estate (class No. 3), a creditor of an heir of the intestate (class No. 4) has the legal right immediately to make said application.

Moreland v Lowry, 213-1096; 241 NW 31

11885 Special administrators.

Administration in general—irregular and improper. The fact that, in a will contest, verdict has been returned and judgment entered thereon to the effect that the alleged will in question is not a valid will, does not, in and of itself, legally justify the court in terminating an existing special administratorship and in appointing a general administrator. Said latter appointment would probably be void.

In re Whitehouse, 223-91; 272 NW 110

Administrator de bonis non—when authorized. When a probate record simply shows that the final report of an executor "was approved and the executor discharged", the court may, at a later time, and irrespective of the statutory limitation of five years for appointment for original administration, appoint, without notice to interested parties, an administrator de bonis non for the purpose of selling property of the estate and purchasing and erecting a monument which was required by the will and not provided and erected by the original executor.

Giberson v Henness, 219-359; 258 NW 708

Appointment—constructive notice—peculiar circumstances—equitable relief. When an administrator gives proper notice of his appointment, claimants are held to have constructive notice thereof, and a claim filed nearly two years after notice of publication may be properly dismissed in the absence of any showing of peculiar circumstances entitling claimant to equitable relief.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

Appointment—lack of actual knowledge not peculiar circumstances. When a claim in probate is not filed until two years after notice of appointment of administrator has been published, the fact that claimant did not have actual knowledge of the appointment of the administrator is not a peculiar circumstance entitling claimant to equitable relief under the statute barring claims not filed within the required time.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

11886 Inventory—preservation of property.

Special administrators. The authority to proceed further under an order granted under special administration ceases upon the appointment of a general executor.

Malone v Moore, 208-1300; 227 NW 169

Corporate shares of stock. The heirs of an intestate may not be said to own the corporate shares of stock of the intestate, and may not, therefore, be said to be stockholders, (1) when they have never held themselves out as such owners, (2) when there has been no administration on the estate, and (3) when there is no showing as to the extent or distribution of the estate, or as to the debts and the discharge thereof.

Andrew v Dunn, 202-364; 210 NW 425

Improper order to turn over funds. A special administrator cannot be legally ordered to turn over the funds in his hands to a subsequently appointed general executor of the estate, when the said special administrator is a party to an unadjudicated action in equity by the administrator de bonis non of another and different estate, in which action claim is made to all the funds in the hands of said special administrator.

ANALYSIS

- I LIABILITY OF ADMINISTRATORS AND EXECUTORS
- II NECESSITY, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY OF BONDS
- III ACTIONS ON THE BOND
- I LIABILITY OF ADMINISTRATORS AND EXECUTORS

Preservation of property by administrator. In proceeding to recover from surety on administrator's bond, principle held applicable that a trustee is presumed to have preserved the property and that such presumption stands until overcome by evidence. Fact that such proceeding is at law does not preclude application of equitable principles.

In re Willenbrock, 228- ; 290 NW 503

Execution of unauthorized contract—effect. An executor or administrator who signs a contract of subscription in the name of the estate and by himself as such officer, without authority so to do, thereby personally binds and obligates himself.

Y. M. C. A. v Caward, 213-408; 239 NW 41

Liability—devastavit. A claim of devastavit will not be deemed established on the mere showing that an administrator upon making a collection on behalf of the estate gave the estate his promissory note therefor.

In re Donlon, 203-1045; 213 NW 781

Deposits in banks—negligence.

In re Enfield, 217-273; 251 NW 637
In re Rorick, 218-107; 253 NW 916
In re Foster, 218-1202; 256 NW 744

Liability—lost bank deposits. The principle that an administrator is not liable for estate funds which have been lost because of the failure of a bank in which he has in good faith and without negligence deposited them has no application to deposits made by an administrator in his own private bank.

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533

Disobeying order of court. An administrator and the surety on his bond are liable for a shortage in estate funds occasioned by the failure of the administrator's own private bank in which the funds were deposited, the administrator having been ordered by the court prior to the insolvency of said bank to remove the funds to another depository, and, while able to comply with said order, had neglected so to do.

In re Kendrick, 214-873; 243 NW 168

Disobeying order of court—unallowable defense. An administrator who disobeys an order of court as to the bank in which he should deposit estate funds, may not, in case of loss, plead in defense that, had he complied with the order, his own private bank in which the funds in fact were on deposit, would have been rendered insolvent.

In re Kendrick, 214-873; 243 NW 168

Disbursement by administrator for bond. An administrator is properly given credit for the reasonable amount paid by him to a surety company for his official bond even tho he is agent for the company signing the bond.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Expenditures—premium on bond. The reasonable premium paid by an executor or administrator for his official bond is a proper charge against the estate, even tho the settlement of the estate be delayed but without willful or fraudulent purpose on the part of said officer.

In re Paulson, 221-706; 266 NW 563

Father-administrator not accounting to daughter—effect of inheritance from father. Where administrator for his deceased spouse died without accounting for funds belonging to their daughter, an only child, who nevertheless received through the administration of her father's estate an amount larger than the amount she was entitled to in her mother's estate, held, in a proceeding brought by an administrator de bonis non against the sureties on bond of the deceased administrator, that there could be no recovery for the daughter's share in the mother's estate since that obligation had been satisfied.

In re Willenbrock, 228- ; 290 NW 503

Voluntarily augmented funds. A court-appointed, testamentary trustee and the surety on his official, statutory bond are liable not only for the money which comes into his hands as specifically required by the will, but for additional amounts of the testamentary funds which come into the hands of the trustee, as such, consequent on the generous action of the devisees, generally, in voluntarily augmenting said trust funds from the testamentary funds.

Whisler v Estes, 216-491; 249 NW 264

Equitable conversion under will. The proceeds of foreign real estate sold by an administrator with the will annexed, under explicit direction of the will, and for the purpose of making distribution under the will, must be deemed personalty with resulting consequence that the administrator is responsible therefor; and it is quite immaterial that he did not probate the will in said foreign state.

In re Jackson, 217-1046; 252 NW 775; 91 ALR 937

Receipt of funds. Where a party was guardian of minors and also trustee for said minors (bond in each case having been given), his written receipt showing the receipt of funds as guardian is not necessarily conclusive on the issue whether he received said funds as trustee.

In re Baldwin, 217-279; 251 NW 696

Probate findings. The supported finding of the court in probate on the issue whether funds received by a person were received by him as guardian or as trustee (bond in each case having been given) is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Baldwin, 217-279; 251 NW 696

Findings in probate. A supported finding by the probate court that an administrator had failed to exercise ordinary care to preserve the funds of the estate is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Foster, 218-1202; 256 NW 744

Finding as to executor's shortage. A finding by the probate court in the settlement of the estate of a deceased executor that said deceased executor had failed to account in a named sum to the estate of which he was executor, is binding on the sureties of the deceased executor in the absence of fraud or mistake, even tho the sureties are not parties to the proceedings in which the court makes the finding.

In re Carpenter, 210-553; 231 NW 376

Adjudicating shortage without notice to surety. The sureties on the bond of an administrator are not entitled to notice of the proceedings wherein the probate court determines the amount the administrator is short in his accounts.

In re Kessler, 213-633; 239 NW 555

In re Holman, 216-1186; 250 NW 498; 93 ALR 1363

Surety bound by adjudication. The surety on the bond of an administrator is conclusively bound by the nonfraudulent adjudication of the amount of the administrator's liability, even tho the surety had no notice of the hearing preceding such adjudication.

In re Jackson, 217-1046; 252 NW 775; 91 ALR 937

Adjudicating administrator's liability—surety not necessary party. A surety on an administrator's bond, neither being entitled to notice nor being a necessary party in the probate proceeding to determine the administrator's shortage and liability, the adjudication thereon determining the administrator's liability, in the absence of fraud or mistake, is binding on the surety.

In re Davie, 224-1177; 278 NW 616

Removal of executor—surety as applicant. A surety on the bond of an administrator has such "interest in the estate" as empowers

I LIABILITY OF ADMINISTRATORS AND EXECUTORS—concluded

him to make application for the removal of the administrator, even tho such surety has taken steps to terminate his future suretyship.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Removal of administrator — jurisdiction. Jurisdiction to remove an administrator is furnished by an application by the surety on the bond wherein he prays for an order (1) removing the administrator or (2) requiring the filing of a report and the making of distribution, when notice of the application is duly served on all interested parties and when no part of the prayer has been withdrawn of record. The filing of a report under a mutual arrangement between the parties does not exhaust the jurisdiction of the court.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Liability on bond—improvident order not adjudication. An order of court, in an insolvent estate, authorizing, without notice to creditors, the executrix (she being the surviving widow) to pay to herself the proceeds of a sale of the exempt property of the deceased, based solely on an agreement to that effect between the widow and heirs, is a mistake, an improvident act, and therefore a nullity and not an adjudication binding on creditors, when the testator made his exempt property liable for the payment of his debts and the widow elected to take under the will.

In re Durey, 215-257; 245 NW 236

II NECESSITY, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY OF BONDS

Successive bonds by administrator. Principle reaffirmed that successive, unreleased bonds of the same administrator for the same estate remain in force.

Varga v Guar. Co., 215-499; 245 NW 765

Necessary conditions. It seems that the official bonds of executors, administrators, court-appointed trustees, and similar officers are necessarily conditioned as the bonds of public officers are conditioned. (§1059, C., '31.)

Whisler v Estes, 216-491; 249 NW 264

Executor's bond as statutory bond. Sureties who sign the bond of an executor in order to save the expense of a surety company bond, necessarily execute a statutory bond.

New Amst. Cas. Co. v Bookhart, 212-994; 235 NW 74; 76 ALR 897

Illegal release of surety. Where the court without jurisdiction assumed to release the surety on the bond of an executor, and to substitute a newly filed bond in lieu of such former bond, the formal cancellation of such illegal order of release does not affect the liability of the so-called substituted surety.

New Amst. Cas. Co. v Bookhart, 212-994; 235 NW 74; 76 ALR 897

III ACTIONS ON THE BOND

Pleadings in probate—informality. Pleadings in probate do not require the particularity and formality of pleadings in actions generally.

In re Willenbrock, 228- ; 290 NW 503

Liability on bond—reduction of widow's allowance—effect. Where the amount allowed a widow for her support for the year following the death of the husband is taken by her from the funds of the estate (she being executrix) and spent, a subsequent order, in an adversary proceeding, reducing said former amount is conclusive on the surety—and, of course, on the executrix—and in an action against the principal and surety the reduced amount is the limit of the allowable credit.

In re Durey, 215-257; 245 NW 236

Void release of surety. The release of a surety on the bond of an executor or administrator is a nullity unless made in strict compliance with the statute governing such release. So held where the release was entered on the ex parte application of the executor, instead of the surety.

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533
Brooke v Bank, 207-668; 223 NW 500

Ordering accounting and suit on bond. Where an executor of an executor filed in the first estate a final report, as the deceased executor ought to have done, the court, on hearing on such report, may fix the amount for which the deceased executor should have accounted, and require accounting from his estate, and provide, in case of default, that action shall be brought against his estate, and on his bond.

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

Liability—insufficient proof. No liability is shown in an action on the bond of an administrator by evidence (1) that the petition for the appointment of the administrator alleged the value of the estate in a named amount, and (2) that while the deceased was under guardianship certain of his property was sold for a definite amount which had been embezzled by the custodian thereof.

Sheridan v Guar. Co., 204-397; 213 NW 784

Liability—presentable issues. In a controversy solely between an administrator and his bondsmen, the court will not, on the issue of a bondsmen's liability, determine whether there has been a binding settlement between the administrator and an heir.

In re Donlon, 203-1045; 213 NW 781

Liability for prior defalcation. The surety on a guardian's bond, conditioned as provided by statute, is liable for the defalcation of the guardian occurring prior to the execution of the bond, whether the bond be a "substitute" bond or simply security in addition to a prior existing bond.

Brooke v Bank, 207-668; 223 NW 500

Liability on bond—existing judgment against executor—surety's new trial improper. Under the general rule that a judgment against an administrator is conclusive against the surety on his bond, where a judgment against an administrator for misappropriation of funds stands unreversed, it is error to set aside judgment on a bond and give the surety a new trial, since such order would not ipso facto vitiate a former order fixing the administrator's liability.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Adjudication of liability—avoidance by fraud. Sureties on the bond of a deceased executor are liable for a shortage in the latter's accounts, even tho no claim for said shortage is made against the estate of said deceased executor. It follows that if claim is made against the estate of the deceased executor, and the amount of the shortage is adjudicated (but not paid), the sureties are bound thereby, even tho the administrator of the deceased executor's estate failed to plead that the claim was barred by the statute of limitation, such failure to so plead not being a fraud as to said sureties.

In re Kessler, 213-633; 239 NW 555

Failure to file claim—when enforceable against heir. A claim arising under a bond wherein the surety binds "his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives", and arising after the death of said surety and the due settlement of his estate, is enforceable:

1. Against the property received by an heir, as such, from said ancestor-surety, and
2. Against the property passing from said ancestor and owned by said heir under conveyance for which he paid nothing, and
3. Against the heir, personally, for the value of the property so received if he has consumed it. And this is true even tho, necessarily, said claim was not filed against the estate of said surety.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Enforcement against heirs et al. The bond of a fiduciary, under the terms of which a surety purports to bind "his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives", is not revoked by the death of the surety, and binds the estate of the surety in the hands of his heirs, devisees, or personal representative.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Co-sureties. When an administrator gives bond on his original appointment, and later is ineffectually discharged and at once reappointed and gives a new bond, the two bonds will be treated as cumulative, and the sureties thereon as co-sureties with the sole right in each to enforce proportional contribution from the other.

In re Donlon, 203-1045; 213 NW 781

Contribution enforceable against surety on separate bond. Where an executor has executed and filed two separate bonds for the faithful discharge of his duties, the surety who pays a devastavit in full may enforce contribution from the other surety; and it is immaterial that the surety enforcing contribution signed the bond for a consideration and that the other surety signed as an accommodation.

New Amst. Cas. Co. v Bookhart, 212-994; 235 NW 74; 76 ALR 897

Right of surety. When an administrator of an estate wrongfully pays out estate funds to one who has no right whatever to receive them, and the surety for the administrator is compelled to make good the loss, the legal right of the estate to compel the wrongful recipient to repay the funds because of his primary liability, is, as a matter of equity, presumed to continue in order to enable a court of equity to subrogate the said surety to the same right.

I LETTERS TESTAMENTARY OR OF ADMINISTRATION IN GENERAL

Conflicting appointments—domestic and foreign administrators. As between a domestic and a foreign administrator of the same estate, an asset will (without passing on the question of principal administratorship) be ordered paid to the domestic administrator when the only claims against the estate are on file with the Iowa administrator, when the latter has funds to pay them, when some of the distributees reside in this state, and when the general convenience of all parties will be subserved by such order.

Andrew v Bank, 205-237; 216 NW 12

II ASSETS OF ESTATE

Administrator holds estate as trustee. An administrator of an intestate estate takes possession of and holds the same, as an express trustee thereof, for the claimant creditors of

II ASSETS OF ESTATE—concluded

the decedent and of the estate, the heirs, the surviving spouse, and any others who may have a proper interest in the property.

In re Willenbrock, 228- ; 290 NW 503

Collections—presumptions. All funds coming into the hands of an administrator will, in the absence of a counter showing, be presumed to be in the form of cash.

Leach v Bank, 205-114; 213 NW 414; 217 NW 437; 56 ALR 801

Conflicting appointments. As between a domestic and a foreign administrator of the same estate, an asset will (without passing on the question of principal administratorship), be ordered paid to the domestic administrator when the only claims against the estate are on file with the Iowa administrator, when the latter has funds to pay them, when some of the distributees reside in this state, and when the general convenience of all parties will be subserved by such order. (See annos. under §11894.)

Andrew v Bank, 205-237; 216 NW 12

Administrator's bank account—decedent's debt—no offset. Receiver of insolvent bank held unauthorized to set off amount of checking account standing in name of administrator against indebtedness owing to bank by in-estate where, immediately on appointment of administrator, checking account passed to administrator who added to account by deposits at various times and drew checks against account until closing of bank.

In re Schwarting, (NOR); 257 NW 189

III MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE(a) AUTHORITY IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 3 ILB 175—Power of representative to bind estates to creditors

Trustee for beneficiaries. The administrator is a trustee for the benefit of persons interested in the estate.

Goodman v Bauer, 225-1086; 281 NW 448

Personal property—right of heirs to protect. Tho the title to the personal property of a deceased does not pass directly to his heirs, they may, in the absence of any administration, maintain an action to protect or recover such property.

Powell v McBlain, 222-799; 269 NW 883

Accounting and settlement—credits—disbursements to protect assets of estate. An administrator who, in good faith, pays a valid debt owed by the estate in order to redeem valuable securities belonging to the estate and held by the creditor as collateral in an amount far in excess of the debt, will be credited as for a prudent expenditure, irrespective of the subsequent claims of general creditors, and irrespective of the fact that the administrator did not wait for the filing of the claim or secure the authority of the court to make such payment.

Elliott v Bank, 209-1258; 228 NW 274

Payment of unfiled claims. Principle reaffirmed that an executor may voluntarily pay valid claims against the estate tho they are not filed.

In re Plendl, 218-103; 253 NW 819

Investments without authorizing order—subsequent confirmation. Assuming, arguendo, that an authorizing order of court is absolutely necessary in order to render legal an investment of trust funds, yet a trustee, who, without such order, has made an investment in good faith, and without loss to the estate, may, subsequently, on a full showing of the controlling facts, and at a time when the estate has suffered no loss, be granted a valid order confirming said investment.

In re Lawson, 215-752; 244 NW 739; 88 ALR 316

Execution of unauthorized contract. An executor or administrator who signs a contract of subscription in the name of the estate and by himself as such officer, without authority so to do, thereby personally binds and obligates himself.

Y. M. C. A. v Caward, 213-408; 239 NW 41

Sales and conveyances—application and order—implied authority to pay debt. An order of court granting an application by an administrator to borrow money on real estate mortgage security in order to pay a specified debt owed by the estate impliedly carries authority and direction to use the money in the payment of said debt.

Elliott v Bank, 209-1258; 228 NW 274

Releasing mortgage without order. An executor, upon receiving payment of a note and mortgage belonging to the estate, has authority, without an authorizing order of court, to release the mortgage even tho the payment is in the form of a new note and mortgage executed by new parties.

Steffy v Schultz, 215-831; 246 NW 907

Unauthorized bank deposit. An executor who, on his own motion and without any authorizing order of court, deposits the funds of the estate in a financially embarrassed bank of which he was president and in which he was heavily interested, and which later failed, must account to the estate in cash for the loss. The president of a bank must be held to have knowledge of the general financial condition of the bank.

In re Rorick, 218-107; 253 NW 916

Depositor's agreement—conditions. An order of the probate court, authorizing a national bank acting as executor of an estate to execute a depositor's agreement relative to the estate funds, should specifically provide that said order is entered on the condition that the same shall not prejudice the right of the heirs, (1) to a lien upon any securities in possession of the executor, (2) to the right of action against the executor to recover the amount due, and (3) to any existing rights under federal law.

In re McElfresh, 218-97; 254 NW 84

Death of guardian—duty of personal representative. The surety on the bond of a guardian has no right, on the death of the guardian, to take possession of the ward's estate and administer it. Such property passes in trust to the guardian's personal representative who should report the situation to the probate court and await instructions.

Kies v Brown, 222-54; 268 NW 910

Property in controversy—refusal of receivership—presumption. The refusal of a receivership for property in controversy in the probate court, even tho the petition for said appointment is strictly in compliance with the statute and is supported by affidavits, and is resisted only orally and informally, is presumptively correct. Appellant must negative the presumption.

Frazier v Wood, 214-237; 242 NW 78

(b) AUTHORITY AS TO REAL PROPERTY

Testamentary capacity. Principle reaffirmed that a testator may unconditionally authorize and empower his executor to make full conveyances of testator's real estate. Will held to grant such authority.

In re Wicks, 207-264; 222 NW 843

Unlawful delivery of deed. An administrator who has in his possession a deed of conveyance purporting to have been executed by the deceased, has no authority to deliver said deed to the grantee in said deed without an authorizing order of court.

Blain v Blain, 215-69; 244 NW 827

Power to sell passes to subsequent appointee. The power of an executor to convert real estate into money for the purpose of making testamentary distribution, arising under explicit testamentary direction so to do, passes to an administrator with will annexed.

In re Jackson, 217-1046; 252 NW 775; 91 ALR 937

IV ACTIONS

(a) ACTIONS BY ADMINISTRATORS

Actions by heirs to set aside conveyances of decedent. See under §11927
Fraudulent conveyances generally. See under §11815

Pleadings in probate—informality. Pleadings in probate do not require the particularity and formality of pleadings in actions generally.

In re Willenbrock, 228- ; 290 NW 503

Pleading—verification. Plaintiff suing as an administrator need not verify his pleadings.

Markworth v Bank, 217-341; 251 NW 857

Who may appeal—executors. An executor or administrator may very properly maintain an appeal from an order for the payment of legacies, such order directly affecting residuary legatees.

Packer v Overton, 200-620; 203 NW 307

Defect not remedied by appearance. Lack of capacity to act as party plaintiff cannot be remedied by the appearance of the defendant in the action.

Pearson v Anthony, 218-697; 254 NW 10

Unauthorized action. An action by a plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of a deceased, to recover damages for the wrongful death of the deceased, when plaintiff was not such administrator, is a nullity, and, therefore, does not toll the statute of limitation on the said cause of action. And in case plaintiff is appointed administrator after the statute has fully run, an ex parte order of the probate court assuming to ratify, confirm, and adopt such former proceeding is likewise a nullity.

Pearson v Anthony, 218-697; 254 NW 10

Father-administrator not accounting to daughter—effect of inheritance from father. Where administrator for his deceased spouse died without accounting for funds belonging to their daughter, an only child, who nevertheless received through the administration of her father's estate an amount larger than the amount she was entitled to in her mother's estate, held, in a proceeding brought by an administrator de bonis non against the sureties on bond of the deceased administrator, that there could be no recovery for the daughter's share in the mother's estate since that obligation had been satisfied.

In re Willenbrock, 228- ; 290 NW 503

Death of party without substitution. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Appeal in name of deceased party. Altho plaintiff died during pendency of action below, supreme court took jurisdiction of appeal taken in name of such decedent, because parties treated cause as one properly before the court

(a) ACTIONS BY ADMINISTRATORS—concluded and because it was a case where court's constitutional authority could be invoked.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Collection and management—inconsistent attitude. One who is administrator of different estates should not be permitted to appear in the dual and inconsistent capacity as administrator of both estates in a matter wherein the interests of the separate estates are absolutely hostile.

In re Clark, 203-224; 212 NW 481

Setting aside fraudulent conveyance—authority. Authority to an administrator to institute an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance need not also contain authority to sell the land in order to pay the debts of the estate, when the record clearly shows the existence of the debts, and insufficient property with which to pay them.

Level v Church, 217-317; 251 NW 709

Fraudulent conveyance—sufficient showing. A deed from a mother to her son will be set aside as fraudulent, in a proper action by the administrator of the mother, on a showing that the mother, when the deed was executed, was in serious financial embarrassment, of which the son had full knowledge, and that the son, who then occupied a close fiduciary relation to his mother, presented no competent evidence of any consideration for the deed, or evidence overcoming the presumption of fraud and bad faith.

Howell v Howell, 211-70; 232 NW 816

Fraudulent conveyance—insufficient showing. An action by an administrator to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance by the testate must be dismissed (1) when the property conveyed was grantor's homestead, and the accrual date of the unpaid claim against the estate is not shown; (2) when the grantor is not shown to have been insolvent when the deed was executed; and (3) when there is no showing that the probate court has either authorized the action or judicially ordered the sale of real estate to pay debts.

Richman v Ady, 211-101; 232 NW 813

Transfers and transactions invalid—homestead. Evidence held to show that a residence was not the homestead of a deceased at the time of a fraudulent conveyance thereof.

Level v Church, 217-317; 251 NW 709

Deed—fiduciary relation. When a deed of conveyance is attacked because of the mental incompetency of the grantor, or because of fraud and duress, the burden rests on the grantee to sustain the deed, provided a fiduciary relation existed between grantor and grantee when the deed was executed; otherwise the burden rests on plaintiff to invalidate the deed.

Ellis v Allman, 217-483; 250 NW 172

Deeds—fiduciary relation—burden of proof. Executor, in an action to avoid a deed of conveyance, makes a prima facie case of constructive fraud by proof that, when the deed was executed, the grantor, tho mentally competent, was, in the transaction of his business and in his conduct generally, under the absolute domination of the grantee. After such proof, the grantee must take on the burden of affirmatively showing the complete bona fides of the transaction. Proof that the deed left grantor practically penniless, that grantee paid no consideration and was aggressively active in obtaining the deed, accentuates the presumption of fraud instead of overcoming it.

Ennor v Hinsch, 219-1076; 260 NW 26

Corporations—right to examine books and records. An administrator and the heirs at law of a deceased stockholder in a corporation, when refused an examination by the corporation, have the right, without any plea of good faith, to an order of court, in an appropriate proceeding, permitting them and their necessary assistants to examine the books and records of the corporation in order to determine the financial condition of the corporation and the value of its stock.

Becker v Trust Co., 217-17; 250 NW 644

Enforcement of legacy—laches. The fact that a legatee deferred the enforcement of the legacy pending the outcome of pending litigation over other identical claims is material on the issue of laches.

Packer v Overton, 200-620; 203 NW 307

Insurance policy—recovery on. Under a policy providing for the payment, (1) of total disability benefits to the insured himself, and (2) of death benefits to another, the disability benefits alleged to have accrued to the insured prior to his death may not be recovered by the executrix of the insured when the insured, tho physically and mentally able so to do, failed to furnish during his lifetime, to the insurer, proofs of such disability, the furnishing of such proofs being clearly contemplated and required by the policy as a condition precedent to the attaching of liability on the part of the insurer.

Kantor v Ins. Co., 219-1005; 258 NW 759

(b) ACTIONS AGAINST ADMINISTRATORS

Pleadings in probate—informality. Pleadings in probate do not require the particularity and formality of pleadings in actions generally.

In re Willenbrock, 228- ; 290 NW 503

Change of venue—action against executor as such. An action at law against an executor as such, in the county in which he was appointed such officer, for damages for personal injuries inflicted by the deceased, is, in legal effect, but an action in rem against the assets of the estate. It follows that the executor is not entitled to demand a change of place of trial to another county of which he is a legal resident.

Van Iperen v Hays, 219-715; 259 NW 448

Management in general—employment of counsel—extraordinary expense. An executor is under duty to defend a will after it is duly probated, and may employ counsel at the expense of the estate to contest an action to set aside the probate and to contest the will, even tho he has already employed counsel to advise him in his ordinary duties, and even tho he is personally interested in sustaining the will; and the court should, irrespective of the amount which the executor has agreed to pay, make a reasonable allowance to the executor for such expense when it is extraordinary.

In re Jewe, 201-1154; 208 NW 723

Recovery of unpaid legacy—bringing in parties. In an action by a testamentary legatee against an executor to recover an unpaid legacy, the executor, who has already distributed the estate and wishes to bring a third party into the action for recoupment purposes, must, at least, allege that said third party has received some portion of the estate in question.

Irwin v Bank, 218-961; 256 NW 681

Special administrator—improper order to turn over funds. A special administrator cannot be legally ordered to turn over the funds in his hands to a subsequently appointed general executor of the estate when the said special administrator is a party to an unadjudicated action in equity by the administrator de bonis non of another and different estate in which action claim is made to all the funds in the hands of said special administrator.

In re Wood, 214-867; 243 NW 347

(e) COUNTERCLAIMS

Cross-complaint—when allowable. In an action by an administrator for damages consequent on the alleged negligent killing by defendant of the intestate in a collision between automobiles, the defendant may cross-petition for damages against the administrator personally under the allegation that the deceased at the time of said collision was negligently operating an automobile which was personally owned by said administrator and was so doing with the consent of said owner. And this is true irrespective of the personal residence of the administrator.

Ryan v Amodeo, 216-752; 249 NW 656

Debts due decedent from heir—retainer or offset against realty. General rule recognized that real estate passes to devisee direct from testator, and not through executor, and that title vests in devisee immediately upon death of testator, and as a general rule, there is no right of retainer or offset for debt of devisee to estate, as against devisee of real estate; but there may be cases where, on account of the insolvency of the debtor, or other cause, equity will interfere for protection of the estate.

Petty v Hewlett, 225-797; 281 NW 731

Administrator's funds set off against insolvent bank holding secured note. An estate's deposit in an insolvent bank may be set off against a secured note held by bank, and contention that debts lacked mutuality was ineffective.

First Natl. Bk. v Malone, 76 F 2d, 251

11890 Notice of appointment.

Failure to give notice—effect.

Spicer v Administrator, 201-99; 202 NW 604

Notice—effect. After an executor has given due notice of his appointment, all parties interested in the settlement of the estate must be deemed in court for all purposes incident to such settlement.

Dillinger v Steele, 207-20; 222 NW 564

Constructive notice. When an administrator gives proper notice of its appointment, claimants are held to have constructive notice thereof, and a claim filed nearly two years after notice of publication may be properly dismissed in the absence of any showing of peculiar circumstances entitling claimant to equitable relief.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

Proof of service. Parol evidence of the posting, as officially directed, of a notice of the appointment of an executor is admissible, and positive evidence to such effect will not be overcome by evidence of witnesses to the effect that they had not "observed" such posted notice.

Peterson v Johnson, 205-16; 212 NW 138

Notice to creditors—order—record required. An order or direction of the probate clerk as to the manner in which an administrator or executor shall give notice of his appointment, after being entered at length on the letters testamentary or letters of administration, need not also be entered at length on the probate docket. An abstract or notation of such order on said docket is all-sufficient.

Anthony v Wagner, 216-571; 246 NW 748

Lack of actual knowledge not peculiar circumstances. When a claim in probate is not filed until two years after notice of appointment of administrator has been published, the fact that claimant did not have actual knowledge of the appointment of the administrator is not a peculiar circumstance entitling claimant to equitable relief under the statute barring claims not filed within the required time.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

Filing "within twelve months". Conceding, arguendo, that in the settlement of an estate, the statute of limitation commences to run from the date of the last newspaper publication, yet, when the last publication was on April 16, 1931, a claim filed April 16, 1932, is not filed "within 12 months from the giving of the notice" as provided by §11972, C., '31.

First JSL Bank v Terbell, 217-624; 252 NW 769

11891 Limitation on administration.

Right of heirs. When administration is not granted during the five years following the death, in this state, of an intestate, an heir may maintain an action to foreclose a mortgage to the extent of his vested interest therein as an heir; and especially so when the absence of any debts is made to appear.

Hoffman v Hoffman, 205-1194; 219 NW 311

Administrator de bonis non—when authorized. When a probate record simply shows that the final report of an executor "was approved and the executor discharged", the court may, at a later time, and irrespective of the statutory limitation of five years for appointment for original administration, appoint, without notice to interested parties, an administrator de bonis non for the purpose of selling property of the estate and purchasing and erecting a monument which was required by the will and not provided and erected by the original executor.

11892 Exception—newly discovered personalty.

Unallowable opening of settled estate. The holder of a court-established claim which is legally enforceable against property which passed to an heir, on the settlement of the estate of the person primarily liable on said claim, has no occasion, and no right, in the absence of any showing of fraud or mistake, to have the settlement of said estate opened up for the re-establishment in probate of said claim.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

APPOINTMENT OF FOREIGN ADMINISTRATOR

11894 Authorization.

Supplanting resident appointee. A duly appointed foreign executor, even tho nominated as such in the will, has no arbitrary right to supplant an executor appointed in this state, where part of the estate is situated.

In re Gray, 201-876; 208 NW 358

Conflicting domestic and foreign appointments.

Andrew v Bank, 205-237; 216 NW 12

CHAPTER 506

ESTATES OF ABSENTEES

11901 Administration authorized—petition.

Discussion. See 6 ILB 236—Waiver of presumption of death

Unexplained absence—presumption. A rebuttable presumption of death arises from the unexplained disappearance of a person for seven years from his usual place of living.

McCoid v Norton, 207-1145; 222 NW 390

Presumption—evidence. Evidence that an insured, thirty years of age, and in fair health, went to a distant part of the country and obtained employment, and corresponded solely with his mother, of whom he was especially fond, but made no response to a message informing him of her death, is, in and of itself, insufficient to create a presumption of death at any particular time short of seven years.

Hicks v Woodmen, 203-596; 213 NW 236

Presumption—fugitive from justice. Seven years of continued and unexplained absence of an insured, notwithstanding efforts of relatives to locate him, create a jury question on the issue of death, even tho the original disappearance was at a time when the insured was a defaulter to a large amount.

Axen v Ins. Co., 203-555; 213 NW 247

Rodskier v Ins. Co., 216-121; 248 NW 295

Mutual benefit insurance—contract in re evidentiary effect of disappearance—validity. An agreement in a mutual benefit insurance certificate to the effect that the unexplained disappearance or long-continued absence of the insured from his family or place of residence shall not be regarded as evidence of the death of the insured or of any right to recover under the certificate until after the expiration of the life expectancy of the insured is reasonable, valid, and binding on the beneficiary.

Lunt v Grand Lodge, 209-1138; 229 NW 323

Residence—presumption. The fact that an adult person had been a resident, from birth, of a county in this state and had there accumulated property of substantial value and left it and gone on a visit to a distant state, and was not thereafter heard from or heard of for seven years, justifies the presumption that he remained a resident of the county aforesaid.

In re Schlicht, 218-114; 253 NW 847

11909 Decree as to heirs.

Heirs of absentee. The heirs of an absentee who, without known cause, has absented himself from his usual place of residence for a period of seven years, are those persons who are his heirs on the day when the law first indulges the presumption that said absentee is dead, to wit, on the day which marks the end of said absence of seven years.

In re Schlicht, 221-889; 266 NW 556

CHAPTER 507SETTLEMENT OF ESTATES*11913 Inventory and report.

Fraud in concealing personal liability of executrix. An executrix, in inventorying a promissory note and mortgage as assets of the estate, is guilty of no fraud in failing to mention or indicate the fact that she personally signed said instruments, when such signing was for the sole purpose of waiving her dower interest.

Albright v Albright, 209-409; 227 NW 913

Administrator's debt to decedent—extent of liability. In proceeding on objection to administrator's final report, burden of proof was on the administrator to show why he should not be held accountable for full value of property inventoried by him, which inventory included his own debt to decedent. He was liable on such debt to the extent of his ability to pay at any time during administration, and everything above his statutory exemptions should have been so utilized, and there being no evidence in the record from which the extent of his nonexempt property or income could be ascertained, such question would be remanded to lower court for determination.

In re Windhorst, 227-808; 288 NW 892

Reports as evidence against administrator. Statements in the various interlocutory reports of an administrator, relative to the items of assets belonging to the estate, may be persuasive evidence against the administrator on the final accounting.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Joint payees—rebuttable presumption of equal ownership. The presumption, that joint payees of a promissory note and of a mortgage securing the same are equal, must yield to evidence establishing the actual interest of each. So held in the settlement of an estate.

In re Morrison, 220-42; 261 NW 436

Fact findings in probate not triable de novo on appeal. Findings of fact by the trial court in a probate proceeding involving objections to an executor's report and payment of certain claims cannot be reviewed on appeal, such not being triable de novo.

In re Scholbrock, 224-593; 277 NW 5

Rights of legatees—sheriff's certificate passing as personalty. A sheriff's certificate under foreclosure proceedings, in which the period of redemption had not yet expired, was personal property and, upon the death of the certificate holder-owner, passed to the person inheriting the personal property under the will.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

Rent—incident to land—passes to heirs. General rule is that rents accruing after the owner's death belong to the heirs or devisees, as an incident to the ownership of the land which descends to them.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

Proceeds payable to estate—trusted for statutory beneficiaries—exemption. Where a testator willed to his second wife all of his property requiring legal transmission, but made no mention of his life insurance, payable to his second wife if she survived him, otherwise to his estate, and, when testator's second wife predeceased him, then upon his death, his surviving children, being a daughter by his first marriage and a son by his second marriage, became entitled under the statute, to the proceeds of the insurance, and such proceeds passed into the hands of his personal representative or estate, only as a trust fund, to be distributed equally to such daughter and son. (§8776, C., '35.)

In re Clemens, 226-31; 282 NW 730

11917 Qualification—duties.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 263

11918 Exempt personal property.

Pension funds in hands of administrator. Original federal pension funds in the hands of an administrator are not exempt, under either state or federal statutes, from sequestration by the creditors of the pensioner. [Revised Statutes, §4747 (38 USC §54); 38 USC §96.]

Appanoose Co. v Carson, 210-801; 229 NW 152

Waiver by surviving spouse. A surviving spouse waives her right to her husband's exempt property when she, apparently in furtherance of her own personal interest, allows the property to be sold and the proceeds applied on the debts of the deceased.

In re Angerer, 202-611; 210 NW 810

Widow as devisee—nonallowance. Since widow of decedent was a devisee under his will, an order allowing her exempt property of decedent under this section was improper in view of §11847, C., '39, providing that a devise to a spouse is presumed to be in lieu of exemptions unless contrary intention is clearly and explicitly shown.

In re David, 227-352; 238 NW 418

Improvident order not adjudication. An order of court, in an insolvent estate, authorizing, without notice to creditors, the executrix (she being the surviving widow) to pay to herself the proceeds of a sale of the exempt property of the deceased, based solely on an agreement to that effect between the widow and heirs, is a mistake, an improvident act, and, therefore, a nullity and not an adjudication binding on creditors, when the testator made his exempt property liable for the payment of his debts and the widow elected to take under the will.

In re Durey, 215-257; 245 NW 236

Cemetery lot. The interest of an intestate in a burial lot in a cemetery (he dying without issue and survived only by his widow and mother) may not be set aside as exempt property to the widow. The interest,—the right to use said lot for burial purposes,—passes in such a case in equal shares to the widow and mother.

In re Paulson, 221-706; 266 NW 563

Refund to pay debts. The heirs of an estate who unconditionally purchase the interest of their mother in the estate have no legal right, thereafter, to compel the mother to contribute any sum toward the discharge of unpaid debts of the estate, unpaid taxes against the estate, or unpaid probate costs and fees.

In re Jones, 217-288; 251 NW 651

Workmen's compensation—nonexempt from debts of testator. Workmen's compensation, already collected as the result of a commutation settlement and in the hands of testator's attorney, is subject to the debts of the employee's estate.

Long v Northup, 225-132; 279 NW 104; 116 ALR 1475

11919 Proceeds of insurance.

Discussion. See 21 ILR 153—Property purchased with proceeds

Exemption statutes—applicability. Exemption statutes are applicable to residents and nonresidents unless the benefits thereof are confined to residents.

Stark v Stark, 203-1261; 213 NW 235

Receiver—solvency of mortgagor. In mortgage receivership proceedings, and on the issue whether a wife, one of the obligated mortgagors, is solvent, no consideration can be given to the proceeds of life insurance (up to $5,000) on the life of the husband, and in the hands of the wife as a beneficiary, the mortgage debt antedating the death of the husband.

Interstate Assn. v Nichols, 213-12; 238 NW 435

Life insurance to widow—termination of exemption by death. The unexpended proceeds of a policy of life insurance payable to a surviving widow are not exempt, after her death, from liability for debts contracted by her prior to the death of the insured husband. In other words, the exemption accorded to her does not survive her death.

In re Tellier, 210-20; 230 NW 545

Proceeds of life insurance. A testator may validly dispose by will of the proceeds of life insurance payable to his estate, and make such proceeds subject to the payment of his debts. Such result is effected by a will (1) which provides for the payment of testator's debts, and (2) which devises the life insurance proceeds subject to such debt proviso.

In re Caldwell, 204-606; 215 NW 615

Testamentary subjects. The proceeds of life insurance payable to the estate of the insured or to his executors or administrators may be disposed of by will. Section 8776, C., '24, which in substance provides that insurance so payable "shall inure to the separate use" of the surviving spouse and children, supplements said right, because said section simply directs in legal effect who shall take the avails of life insurance so payable when there is no will.

Miller v Miller, 200-1070; 205 NW 870; 43 ALR 567

Life insurance. The formal statement in a will that testator's debts shall be paid out of his estate, is wholly insufficient to justify the conclusion that testator intended to appropriate to the payment of his debts the avails of life insurance payable to his personal representatives or to his estate, even tho as a matter of law such avails do become a part of his estate.

In re Grilk, 210-587; 231 NW 327

See Buck v MacEachron, 209-1168; 229 NW 693

Estate as beneficiary—exemption. Policies of life insurance made payable to insured's estate, or to the administrator thereof, are not subject to the claims of creditors, unless the insured during his lifetime agreed, orally or in writing, to the contrary.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Assignment by deceased—convincing evidence necessary. An oral contract assigning insurance, made with a deceased, must be established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence and leave no doubt as to the sufficiency of the consideration.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Deceased's insurance as security—oral contract—original holder incompetent witness the debt assigned. Altho having assigned his claim and altho the claim is duly allowed in probate, the original party to an oral contract with a deceased is incompetent as a witness, when the assignee of such contract seeks to subject the proceeds of the deceased's life insurance to payment thereof by reason of an oral contract claimed to have been entered into with the deceased.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Dead man statute—failure to prosecute claim or disclaimer of interest ineffective. A divorced wife of a deceased may not become a competent witness to an oral contract made jointly between herself, her mother, and the deceased, in order to subject his insurance to payment of her mother's valid probate claim, merely by failing to prosecute a similar claim of her own and disclaiming any interest in the claim in litigation, since she still has her claim and may enforce payment if the contract is established.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Proceeds payable to estate—trusteed for statutory beneficiaries. Where a testator willed to his second wife, all of his property requiring legal transmission but made no mention of his life insurance, payable to his second wife if she survived him, otherwise to his estate; and, when testator's second wife predeceased him, then upon his death, his surviving children, being a daughter by his first marriage and a son by his second marriage, became entitled under the statute to the proceeds of the insurance, and such proceeds passed into the hands of his personal representative or estate only as a trust fund, to be distributed equally to such daughter and son. (§8776, C., '35.)

In re Clemens, 226-31; 282 NW 730

Life policy payable in Iowa pledged in another state—jurisdiction. Tho a life policy payable to the estate of a deceased Iowa resident is deposited in a foreign state, as security for a debt, the proceeds are not beyond the jurisdiction of the Iowa probate court, inasmuch as the right to such proceeds depends, not upon their location, but upon the terms of the policy, supplemented by any contract relating thereto.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Subjecting insurance to probate claim—splitting action. A claimant in probate, alleging an oral contract assigning all of decedent's insurance, may not split this single cause of action by dismissing part of his claim and attempting to establish it in a foreign state where one policy was held as security for the performance of a prior contract of decedent made therein.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Computation of amount of exemption. Where a widow as beneficiary in life insurance policies on her husband received some $11,200 and disposed of some $7,300 before any proceedings were commenced to subject said fund in excess of the $5,000 statutory exemption to the payment of a debt of the widow antedating the death of the husband (§8776, C., '31), the said statutory exemption of $5,000 must be computed on the basis of the unexpended fund. In other words, her exemption cannot be deemed to be embraced within the $7,300 expenditure.

Booth v Propp, 214-208; 242 NW 60; 81 ALR 919

Funeral expenses nonallowable against insurance proceeds. Claims for funeral expenses consequent on the burial of the intestate deceased are not allowable against funds in the hands of the administrator when said funds constitute the proceeds of insurance on the life of deceased, the latter being survived by a minor son. (§8776, C., '35.)

In re Galloway, 222-159; 269 NW 7

11920 Damages for wrongful death.

Administrator as real party in interest. In an action by an administrator for damages consequent on the wrongful death of the deceased, the defendant may not raise the issue whether the plaintiff is the real party in interest.

Reidy v Railway, 216-415; 249 NW 347

Measure of damages. The measure of damages for death is the reasonable present value of the life of the deceased to his estate.

Drouillard v Rudolph, 207-367; 223 NW 100

Damages for death—evidence. In an action for damages for wrongful death, evidence is admissible of the recent purchase, solely on credit, by decedent, of a business, and of the marked reduction by decedent of his indebtedness subsequent to such purchase, together with evidence of his ability, health, and other kindred matters.

Scott v Hinman, 216-1126; 249 NW 249

Submitting earning capacity of child—no evidence introduced. Elements of damage not sustained by evidence should not be submitted, which applies to the earning capacity of a 10-year-old school girl in the absence of supporting evidence, but, in the instant case, the error was harmless, as the jury's possibility of considering such element was very remote.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Intemperate habits bearing on damages. In an action for damages consequent on wrongful death, evidence is admissible tending to show the intemperate habits of the deceased.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Verdicts—amount—when court will interfere. It is not the province of a court to interfere with the amount of a verdict in a personal injury action unless it is clearly made to appear that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice or of a palpable disregard of the evidence. Verdict of $10,000 held non-reviewable.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Verdict—excessiveness. Verdict of $30,000 for wrongful death reduced by the trial court to $21,000, and by the appellate court, on condition, to $12,000.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

Occupation and earnings of parent. The occupation and earnings of the father of a minor child may be shown in an action for the wrongful death of the child, as an element to be considered by the jury on the issue of damages to the child's estate.

McDowell v Oil Co., 212-1314; 237 NW 456

Interest on funeral expenses. The measure of damages for wrongful death, while not including reasonable funeral expenses, does include simple interest at a legal rate on such expenses for the time intervening between the premature death and the time when, in the ordinary course of events, the deceased would have died.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Measure of damages—before and after death—exemplary damages. The measure of damages in an action commenced during the lifetime of an injured person is what will right the wrong done, including exemplary damages, which are still recoverable if he dies during the pendency of the action; but if commenced by the administrator after death, the measure is the reasonable present value of his life without recovery for pain and suffering or exemplary damages.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Excessive and exemplary damages—remittitur. Excessive damages showing passion and prejudice vitiate the entire verdict. A remittitur will not cure the error and a new trial should be granted. Where the jury returned a verdict of $1,500 actual damages and $2,500 exemplary damages, held the total amount of damages awarded and the difference between the actual damages and punitive damages were not so excessive as to show passion and prejudice; and, the entire verdict not being vitiated, the verdict for $1,500 actual damages was not affected by the erroneous submission of the question of exemplary damages and such error was cured by remittitur of all such punitive damages.

Boyle v Bornholtz, 224-90; 275 NW 479

Workmen's compensation — nonexemption from testator's debts. Workmen's compensation, already collected as the result of a commutation settlement and in the hands of testator's attorney, is subject to the debts of the employee's estate.

Long v Northup, 225-132; 279 NW 104; 116 ALR 1475

Bastards—rights of inheritance. In Iowa, illegitimate children have inheritable blood. In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

11923 Allowance to widow and children.

Additional allowance. The court may, in a proper case, increase an allowance already made to a surviving spouse.

Crouse v Ashford, 208-333; 223 NW 510

Reduction of widow's allowance—effect. Where the amount allowed a widow for her support for the year following the death of the husband is taken by her from the funds of the estate (she being executrix) and spent, a subsequent order, in an adversary proceeding, reducing said former amount is conclusive on the surety—and, of course, on the executrix—and in an action against the principal and surety the reduced amount is the limit of the allowable credit.

In re Durey, 215-257; 245 NW 236

Widow's groceries—nonliability of administrator. Administrator, who has paid testator's widow more than amount to which she was entitled prior to alleged promise to pay for groceries furnished to widow, held not authorized to make payment out of estate for such groceries.

Yoss v Sampson, (NOR); 269 NW 22

Interest on security. A widow to whom support allowance is awarded in the form of a bond or security, belonging to the estate, is under no duty as administratrix to account for the interest subsequently accruing on said bond.

In re Paulson, 221-706; 266 NW 563

Fatally delayed application. A widow may not be granted an allowance from her husband's estate for her support during the year following the death of her husband when application for such allowance is not made until after the estate is duly closed.

In re Weidman, 209-603; 228 NW 571

Antenuptial contract—effect on homestead occupancy. An antenuptial contract under which the wife agrees to accept a named fractional part of the husband's property in case she survives, does not have the legal effect of depriving her of her statutory right to occupy the homestead, free of all rent, until her share is actually set off to her or otherwise actually disposed of.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 201-1311; 207 NW 772

Expense attending hostile litigation. A surviving spouse is not, especially on the theory of necessities, entitled to an allowance from the estate to reimburse her for expenses suffered by her (because of the hostile litigation of the heirs) in defending her rights as a surviving spouse.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Death of bankrupt after adjudication—widow's rights. On the death of a bankrupt after adjudication and qualification of trustee, surviving wife is held entitled to distributive share in his realty under state statute providing dower rights, and also entitled to sufficient of bankrupt's property of such kind as is appropriate to her support for 12 months from bankrupt's death under state statute providing allowance to widow.

In re Payne, 20 F 2d, 665

Death of bankrupt—widow's rights—allowance and dower. Where a husband secures a receiver for his property in a state court and, with his wife, makes a conveyance of property to such receiver, and thereafter is adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, but dies before the disposition of his property by the trustee, and application is made for widow's allowance in the bankruptcy proceeding, held, that the bankruptcy adjudication and vesting of realty was not such "other judicial sale" as will defeat her right of dower, and her relinquishment by deed to husband's receiver of her contingent rights in his property became void by bankruptcy proceedings. In construing statutes for allowance to widows and children, equity court should be careful to do them no injustice.

Johnson v Payne, 26 F 2d, 450

Defeating because of felonious homicide—necessary allegation and proof. In order to defeat, under §12032, C., '31, the application of a surviving widow for an allowance out of her husband's estate, the objector must distinctly allege and prove that the widow feloniously took, or feloniously caused or procured another to take, the life of her said husband, and must so do irrespective of any previous conviction of said widow of manslaughter.

In re Johnston, 220-328; 261 NW 908

11925 Discovery of assets.

Scope of inquisitorial proceeding. In strictly inquisitorial proceedings for the discovery of assets belonging to an estate, the court has no authority to order property turned over to the administrator when the title to such property is in dispute, especially when the property apparently does not belong to the estate.

In re Brown, 212-1295; 235 NW 754

Collection of estate—scope of jurisdiction. In inquisitorial proceedings for the discovery of assets belonging to an estate, the jurisdiction of the court to continue said proceedings abruptly terminates at the point of time when it is actually made to appear that an actual controversy exists as to the title to the property in question.

Findley v Jordan, 222-46; 268 NW 515

Jurisdiction terminated by title dispute. When in the statutory summary proceedings in probate for discovery of estate assets it appears that title to the property sought is in dispute, the probate court is without jurisdiction to order the delivery of the property to the estate.

In re Enright, 224-603; 276 NW 839

Discovery proceedings—extent of jurisdiction. In a discovery proceeding against a person suspected of taking wrongful possession of decedent's property, where a dispute arises as to ownership of property, neither the trial nor appellate court has authority to order delivery of the property to the executor or administrator unless it appears beyond controversy that the person examined has wrongful possession of the property.

In re Hoffman, 227-973; 289 NW 720

Failure of discovery proceedings. In probate discovery proceedings where controversy arose as to ownership of property involved, the court rightly denied relief because of insufficiency of evidence to establish ownership in the estate, such denial being without prejudice to administrator's right to bring other appropriate proceeding to determine ownership.

In re Hoffman, 227-973; 289 NW 720

Bills and notes—requisites and validity—joint payees—rebuttable presumption of equal ownership. The presumption, that joint payees of a promissory note and of a mortgage securing the same are equal, must yield to evidence establishing the actual interest of each. So held in the settlement of an estate.

In re Morrison, 220-42; 261 NW 436

Setting aside fraudulent deed on condition. The grantee in a deed of conveyance executed for the primary purpose of preserving a means of support for the aged grantor (tho not so expressed in the deed) has a right, in an equitable action by grantor's executor to set aside the deed, to demand that his reasonable claim for furnishing the grantor a very substantial support be first paid as a condition precedent to any judgment setting aside the deed; and this is true tho said deed would have been declared fraudulent and invalid had it been attacked by the grantor's existing creditors.

Meyers v Schmidt, 220-370; 261 NW 502

Rights of legatees—sheriff's certificate passing as personalty. A sheriff's certificate under foreclosure proceedings, in which the period of redemption had not yet expired, was personal property and, upon the death of the certificate holder-owner, passed to the person inheriting the personal property under the will.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

Rent—incident to land—passes to heirs. General rule is that rents accruing after the owner's death belong to the heirs or devisees, as an incident to the ownership of the land which descends to them.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

Collection of estate—discovery—automobile replevied after testator's death. An automobile finance company, as conditional seller, may not replevy automobiles immediately after the death of conditional buyer having absolute ownership and possession at the time of his death, since the right to possession of all personal property for administration purposes passed to executor, who in a proceeding to discover probate assets may recover the automobiles or their value from such conditional seller, whose proper remedy should have been the filing of a claim against the administrator.

In re Sweet, 224-589; 277 NW 712

11927 Recovering transferred real estate.

Actions by administrators. See under §11889
Fraudulent conveyances generally. See under §11815

Setting aside deed—when action will not lie. A nonfraudulent deed, even tho without consideration, executed and delivered by a mentally competent grantor, cannot be set aside either by the grantor or, after his death, by an heir.

Stauffer v Milner, 207-776; 223 NW 686

Title not impeached by subsequent declarations of grantor. The title conveyed by a warranty deed could not be impeached by testimony of sisters of the grantee that after the execution of the deed the wife of the grantor had said that she intended that all the children should share in the land, especially when the declarations were not made in the presence of the grantee.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Warranty deed and contemporaneous trust. A warranty deed which absolutely and unconditionally conveys real estate to the grantee and to "his heirs and assigns forever" will, in equity, be restricted, in its apparently limitless legal effect and operation, to such extent as will bring it into harmony with the terms of a contemporaneously executed instrument of trust covering the same property, which trust the grantee has acquiesced in and agreed to carry out as trustee.

Keck v McKinstry, 206-1121; 221 NW 851

Deed (?) or will (?). A warranty deed subject to a life estate in grantor's surviving spouse will not be deemed testamentary because of a clause wherein grantor ineffectually attempted to restrain the alienation of the land by the grantee.

Goodman v Andrews, 203-979; 213 NW 605

Deed of conveyance (?) or will (?). An executed and delivered deed of conveyance in the ordinary form conveys an interest in praesenti—is not testamentary—even tho it provides (1) that "it shall not take effect until after the death" of the grantor, and (2) that the grantor does not "give up possession" to the grantee during the life of the grantor, and (3) that the grantor "reserves the use and income of the premises as long as he lives".

Hall v Hall, 206-1; 218 NW 35

Deed (?) or will (?). An instrument which passes the title to real estate in praesenti, tho the right to its possession and enjoyment is deferred to a future time, is a deed of conveyance and not a testamentary instrument.

Bardsley v Spencer, 215-616; 244 NW 275

Creation of vested interest—invulnerability. A deed, (1) which is conditioned on grantee paying, after the death of grantor, named sums to each of grantee's two sisters, and (2) which is executed and delivered by grantor and accepted by grantee in accordance with a plan entered into by all of said parties for the settlement of their inherited interests in said land, creates, instantaneously, in said sisters a vested landed interest which is immune from change without their consent. So held where the grantor, later, erroneously assumed the right to treat the deed as testamentary and, by a new deed, to reduce the payments to the sisters.

Carlson v Hamilton, 221-529; 265 NW 906

Delivery—presumption attending acceptance. Principle reaffirmed that the acceptance of a deed of conveyance implies an agreement by the grantee to perform legal conditions imposed on him by the deed, e. g., the payment of stated sums to named persons.

Carlson v Hamilton, 221-529; 265 NW 906

Homestead. Evidence held to show that a residence was not the homestead of a deceased at the time of a fraudulent conveyance thereof.

Level v Church, 217-317; 251 NW 709

Fraudulent assignment—evidence—failure of proof. In an action by heirs of an intestate against a son and heir of intestate to set aside a transfer of a note and mortgage from intestate to said son, evidence held insufficient to show signatures of aged mother are not the genuine signatures of intestate on assignments.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Diligent creditor. The creditor of an estate may not, for his own exclusive benefit, attack a fraudulent conveyance of the deceased.

Marion Bk. v Smith, 205-203; 217 NW 857

Undue influence—degree of proof. A deed to land is not to be disturbed on the ground of undue influence unless the proof clearly and convincingly establishes that the said instrument is not the free and voluntary act of the grantor, but is the will and purpose of the grantee.

Hess v Pittman, 214-269; 242 NW 113

Undue influence—evidence to negative. On the issue of undue influence in the execution of a deed to land, it seems that the grantee may show that the grantor, subsequent to the execution of the deed, repeatedly expressed his full satisfaction with, and approval of, said deed.

Hess v Pittman, 214-269; 242 NW 113

Gift—fiduciary relation—constructive fraud not inevitable from blood relationship. As to constructive fraud arising from the gift of real property to one standing in a confidential or fiduciary relationship to the grantor, the rule placing the burden of proof on the grantee, to show the bona fides of the transaction, is of necessity applied according to the peculiar circumstances of each particular case, and not necessarily applied because mere blood relationship exists.

Jensen v Phippen, 225-302; 280 NW 528

Gift to daughter—no fiduciary relation—no fraud. Where a daughter, receiving a real estate gift from her parents, did not transact, nor advise concerning, her parents' business, nor dominate nor support them but, on the contrary, was more or less dependent upon them, such gift does not present a case of fiduciary or confidential relationship sufficient to nullify the deed on the ground of constructive fraud.

Jensen v Phippen, 225-302; 280 NW 528

Gift inter vivos—confidential or fiduciary relationship—presumption of fraud. A gift of a deed to one who stands in a confidential or fiduciary relationship to the donor raises a presumption of constructive fraud, and the burden is on the donee to make such showing of fact as to overcome the presumption.

Jensen v Phippen, 225-302; 280 NW 528

Devise and bequest—consideration unnecessary—resulting trust not created. Heirs and devisees are not required to give a consideration for devises and bequests to them; consequently, a resulting trust cannot be impressed on property conveyed to them, on the theory that they are not bona fide purchasers, when the property was not subject to the lien before conveyed.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

11928 Compounding claims.

Compounding claim. An application in probate by a national bank as executor of an estate for authority to execute a depositor's agreement on behalf of the estate presents no question of the compounding of a claim against a debtor of the estate within the meaning of this section.

In re McElfresh, 218-97; 254 NW 84

11929 Mortgage as assets—satisfaction.

Real estate and personalty distinguished. Principle reaffirmed that upon the sale of land through the medium of a contract for a deed, the purchaser acquires "land" while the vendor acquires "personal property".

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Treating realty as personalty—sale required. Land acquired by an executor through foreclosure on a note and mortgage coming into his hands as part of the estate will be treated as personalty for the purpose of making a final division of the estate; and the court is in error in refusing to order a sale for said purpose—especially when all existing testamentary beneficiaries so request.

Langfitt v Langfitt, 223-702; 273 NW 93; 110 ALR 1390

Authority to release without order. An executor, upon receiving payment of a note and mortgage belonging to the estate, has authority, without an authorizing order of court, to release the mortgage even tho the payment is in the form of a new note and mortgage executed by new parties.

Steffy v Schultz, 215-831; 246 NW 907

11931 Funds collected—paid out.

Collections—presumptions. All funds coming into the hands of an administrator will, in the absence of a counter showing, be presumed to be in the form of cash.

Leach v Bank, 204-1083; 216 NW 748; 65 ALR 679

Leach v Bank, 205-114; 213 NW 414; 217 NW 437; 56 ALR 801

Pension funds in hands of administrator. Original federal pension funds in the hands of an administrator are not exempt, under either state or federal statutes, from sequestration by the creditors of the pensioner. [§11761, C., '27; Revised Statutes, §4747 (38 USC §54); 38 USC §96.]

Appanoose Co. v Carson, 210-801; 229 NW 152

Joint payees—rebuttable presumption of equal ownership. The presumption that joint payees of a promissory note and of a mortgage securing the same are equal must yield to evidence establishing the actual interest of each. So held in the settlement of an estate.

In re Morrison, 220-42; 261 NW 436

Replevin—testator's gift inter vivos to sister—object of bounty. In a case where decedent, an unmarried man 60 years of age, a physician and capable business man, high in public affairs, is starting on a vacation trip, his gift of all his property to his mother and sister, they being the natural objects of his bounty, cannot be said to be unreasonable or contrary to public policy when in a replevin action the validity of the gift is challenged by decedent's executor at the instance of decedent's second wife whom he married during the vacation trip and just ten days before his death.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Action to recover. An executor is the proper party to maintain an action against his predecessor and his bondsmen to recover the funds of the estate, even tho such funds ultimately belong to testamentary devisees.

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533

Death of annuitant—balance due. The executor of a deceased annuitant is entitled to recover the balance of the annuity due at the time of the annuitant's death.

Peterson v Floberg, 214-1398; 242 NW 18

Nonestoppel to enforce claim. An executor is not estopped to enforce a liability against a surety on the bond of a former executor by reason of the fact that his attorney has represented to such surety that the estate intends to enforce said liability solely against the estate of another surety, even tho said surety acted on such representation and did not file any contingent claim against the estate of the other surety.

In re Carpenter, 210-553; 231 NW 376

Breach of contract. An executor may maintain an action for the breach of a contract between the deceased and an heir of deceased by which the latter agreed to pay, as part of the estate, a named sum to another heir.

Rodgers v Reinking, 205-1311; 217 NW 441

Election of remedy. An administrator who has credible information for the belief and does believe that a wrongdoer has caused bank certificates of deposit belonging to the deceased to be paid by the bank on forged indorsements, and who, in an action between said wrongdoer and himself involving the estate, cross-petitions for judgment for the amount of the proceeds of said certificates, and who successfully prosecutes said cross-petition to judgment against the wrongdoer, thereby makes an election of remedies which precludes said administrator from subsequently maintaining an action against the bank on said certificates.

Sackett v Bank, 209-487; 228 NW 51

Failure to compel contribution—effect. An administrator is properly given credit for payments made by him on promissory obligations on which the deceased was a guarantor, even tho he has not yet compelled co-guarantors to make their proper contribution to such payment.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Erroneous payments—recovery. Funds paid to legatees under an interlocutory but erroneous order for distribution may be recovered from the legatees to whom paid.

Dillinger v Steele, 207-20; 222 NW 564

Indorsement of note. An executor may, for a proper consideration, and under a duly authorized permissive order by the court, indorse a promissory note belonging to the estate, and bind the estate to liability on the indorsement.

University Bank v Johnson, 202-654; 210 NW 785

Authority to release mortgage without order. An executor, upon receiving payment of a note and mortgage belonging to the estate, has authority, without an authorizing order of court, to release the mortgage even tho the payment is in the form of a new note and mortgage executed by new parties.

Steffy v Schultz, 215-831; 246 NW 907

Unauthorized action. An action by a plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of a deceased, to recover damages for the wrongful death of the deceased, when plaintiff was not such administrator, is a nullity, and, therefore, does not toll the statute of limitation on the said cause of action. And in case plaintiff is appointed administrator after the statute has fully run, an ex parte order of the probate court assuming to ratify, confirm, and adopt such former proceeding is likewise a nullity.

Pearson v Anthony, 218-697; 254 NW 10

Inconsistent attitude. One who is administrator of different estates should not be permitted to appear in the dual and inconsistent capacity as administrator of both estates in a matter wherein the interests of the separate estates are absolutely hostile.

In re Clark, 203-224; 212 NW 481

Preference to protect estate. A president or director of an insolvent banking corporation will not be permitted to surrender his personal deposits in the bank and to take the good assets of the bank in payment therefor; otherwise if the deposits represent the funds of an estate of which the bank official is administrator, and the exchange involves no element of personal gain to the administrator.

Leach v Beazley, 201-337; 207 NW 374

Right to offset debt of devisee. The amount which an insolvent testamentary devisee is owing to a solvent estate may be set off against the testamentary devise to said devisee.

Rodgers v Reinking, 205-1311; 217 NW 441

Insolvent heir's debts offset against share in real estate. The right to offset debts of an heir against his share of real estate exists only when the heir is insolvent. Evidence held insufficient to show heirs were insolvent.

Wilson v Wilson, 226-199; 283 NW 893

Lien for debts of devisee. A mortgage on real estate executed during the settlement of an estate by the insolvent devisee of the land is subject to the prior lien of the estate for the debts owing by the devisee to testator and contracted subsequent to the execution of the will.

Bell v Bell, 216-837; 249 NW 137

Insolvent heir's unpaid debt to estate—jurisdiction of court to offset. The court has jurisdiction, in an equitable action to partition the lands of an intestate (to which action all heirs are parties), to entertain a cross-petition by one of the heirs as administrator of said estate, and, under proper pleading and proof:

1. To decree that a certain insolvent heir has no interest in said land because his unpaid indebtedness to said estate equals or exceeds the value of the share in said lands which he would take were he not so indebted, and

Bauer v Bauer, 221-782; 266 NW 531

Offsetting debts of devisee or legatee. A legacy due an insolvent legatee, and the proceeds of lands devised to an insolvent devisee may, in the settlement of the estate, be retained by the executor to the extent that the insolvent legatee or devisee is indebted to the estate; and, if necessary, the devised lands may, under appropriate application, be sold and the proceeds applied on said indebtedness, and the resulting costs, and on the inheritance tax, if any, due the state from the insolvent.

In re Flannery, 221-265; 264 NW 68

Bankruptcy of heir—debt to estate remains—offset. A discharge in bankruptcy of a legatee puts an end to the remedy on the debt of said heir to the estate and affords a complete defense to an action on the debt; however, the debt remains an asset of the estate and the discharge does not affect the right of retainer or offset.

In re Morgan, 226-68; 283 NW 267

Distributees—offsetting debts against share in estate. The amount of the indebtedness of a distributee, solvent or insolvent, to an estate, may be set off against his share in the personal property. If the personal property is insufficient, his share of the real estate may be set off against the debt, if the heir is insolvent.

In re Morgan, 226-68; 283 NW 267

Allowable payment by administrator to himself. An administrator is properly given credit for a just claim paid to himself with the approval and at the request of all adversely interested parties, and after due consultation with a co-administrator, even though no formal written claim was ever filed.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Payment of voluntary assessment on bank stock owned by estate. An administrator is properly given credit for paying a voluntary assessment on bank stock owned by the estate when such payment was in the interest of the estate and was necessary in order to reorganize the bank and to maintain it as a going concern.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Widow's support denied—no bar to subsequent equity action. A prior judgment in a law action tried on the merits is conclusive as to a subsequent action in equity between the same parties and the same facts, but where a widow is bequeathed a life estate in realty with the right to dispose of such realty for her necessary support, a probate adjudication on the merits that her claim for widow's support could not be established against husband's estate, is not such an adjudication as bars a later equity proceeding to establish such support claim as a lien on such realty.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

11932 Sale of personal property.

Sale of lease which prohibits sale. The probate court may validly order the administrator of an insolvent estate to sell and assign a lease of realty of which the deceased was lessee, notwithstanding the fact that the lease prohibits the lessee from assigning the lease without the lessor's consent, and provides that the terms of the lease are binding on the heirs, executors, and administrators of the parties, but contains no provision specifically applicable to a sale or assignment by operation of law.

I SALES OF REAL ESTATE IN GENERAL

Authority to sell real estate. A testator may unconditionally authorize and empower his executor to make full conveyances of testator's real estate.

In re Wicks, 207-264; 222 NW 843

I SALES OF REAL ESTATE IN GENERAL —concluded

Mortgage—noninvalidating effect. A provision to the effect that a policy of insurance shall be invalidated by the creation of a lien on the insured property without the consent of the insurer is not violated by the execution of a mortgage as security for claims which are already liens on the property by operation of statutory law.

Jack v Ins. Assn., 205-1294; 217 NW 816

Power to sell passes to subsequent appointee. The power of an executor to convert real estate into money for the purpose of making testamentary distribution, arising under explicit testamentary direction so to do, passes to an administrator with will annexed.

In re Jackson, 217-1046; 252 NW 775; 91 ALR 937

Bid—cancellation. A bid at a sale in partition is effectually canceled by the act of the bidder in accepting a return of his required cash deposit, even tho such deposit is returned under the order of the court.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 204-724; 215 NW 946

Voluntary conveyance to persons entitled to property. When land which was part of an estate was purchased by decedent's two sons who paid no cash consideration, but occupied, paying rent to the other heirs, and who later, in order to protect the land from creditors, deeded it to two sisters who did not know of the indebtedness of the brothers, and when the sons made a contract with the sisters at the time of the deed protecting the other heirs in case the land were sold, a creditor of one of the brothers who knew of the rent payments and knew of the deed, but made no objection, could neither have it set aside as a fraudulent conveyance nor have the real estate subjected to a judgment against the debtor-brother, as the deed and contract conveyed the mere legal title to the sisters in trust for the heirs who were the persons entitled to the property.

Lakin v Eittrheim, 227-882; 289 NW 433

Sale of mortgaged lands—basis for computing compensation. Compensation to an administrator for the sale of incumbered land is properly computed by figuring the statutory percentage on the expressed consideration less the amount of the existing incumbrance.

In re Lindell, 220-431; 262 NW 819

II APPLICATION AND ORDER OF SALE

Sales and conveyances—approval as interlocutory order. The approval by the probate court of a sale and conveyance of land belonging to an estate, must be deemed an interlocutory order.

In re Doherty, 222-1352; 271 NW 609

Order to sell real estate in auxiliary citation proceedings. Where an administrator after a citation proceeding instituted by an assignee of a probate claim is directed to file an application to sell real estate to pay a claim on a promissory note, long recognized and partly paid from other funds by a former administrator, the granting of the order to sell real estate held by the heirs is erroneous when the heirs were not made parties to the citation application and when, in resistance to the application, the heirs show that no timely notice of hearing on the claim was served and no excuse given for such failure.

In re Jackson, 225-359; 280 NW 563

III TIME FOR MAKING APPLICATION FOR SALE

Timely application. An application for the sale of the real estate of a deceased in order to pay debts is timely if presented within a reasonable time after the necessity for such action is apparent. Especially is this true when the necessity for such action has been long delayed by the litigation carried on by the party who objects to the sale.

In re Spicer, 203-393; 212 NW 689

IV DETERMINATION OF NECESSITY FOR SALE

Inaccurate listing of debts—effect. An order for the sale by an administrator of lands belonging to the estate is not rendered illegal because the petition for the order listed as debts of the estate not only debts for which the estate was personally liable, but unpaid special assessments for street improvements for which the estate was not personally liable.

In re Oelwein, 217-1137; 251 NW 694

Setting aside fraudulent conveyance—authority. Authority to an administrator to institute an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance need not also contain authority to sell the land in order to pay the debts of the estate, when the record clearly shows the existence of the debts, and insufficient property with which to pay them.

Level v Church, 217-317; 251 NW 709

V PROPERTY OR INTEREST SUBJECT TO SALE

Property subject to levy. Lands which belong to an estate and which have been ordered sold in probate in order to pay debts, are not subject to attachment in actions against heirs.

In re Collins, 207-1074; 224 NW 82

Specific devise—liability for debts. A specific devise of real estate which not only devises the property, but requires the testator's estate to discharge the mortgage thereon, cannot, in case the estate and all nonspecific devises are insufficient to pay said mortgage and other debts, be construed as casting upon another specific devise of real estate which is not made subject to the former devise, the entire burden of discharging said mortgage and other debts. Each of said specific devises must bear said burden in the ratio of their separate value to their combined value.

In re Glandon, 219-1094; 260 NW 12

Findings in re homestead — conclusiveness. On an application by an executor for an order to sell real estate to pay debts, a finding by the court that certain land was not the homestead of the deceased is conclusive on appeal (1) unless such finding is without substantial support in the evidence, or (2) unless the court erroneously applied the law to conceded facts.

In re McClain, 220-638; 262 NW 666

Private bank depositors—property available for payment. Where an estate consists of two general classes of assets, to wit: (1) assets employed by decedent in operating his exclusively owned private bank, and (2) lands and other assets not so employed, and where, under the will, the bank is temporarily continued after the death of the decedent, an unappealed order of the probate court, entered on due notice and service, to the effect that bank depositors be paid from the general assets of the estate, precludes devisees and legatees from thereafter successfully asserting that depositors could only be paid from the assets employed in the operation of the bank, and that, as a consequence, the said lands could not be legally mortgaged in order to effect such payment. Especially should this be true when it appears that large sums of money employed in carrying on the bank have been used by the executors in paying claims not connected with the operation of the bank.

In re Griffin, 220-1028; 262 NW 473

Rights of legatees—sheriff's certificate passing as personalty. A sheriff's certificate under foreclosure proceedings, in which the period of redemption had not yet expired, was personal property and, upon the death of the certificate holder-owner, passed to the person inheriting the personal property under the will.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

Treating realty as personalty—sale required. Land acquired by an executor through foreclosure on a note and mortgage coming into his hands as part of the estate, will be treated as personalty for the purpose of making a final division of the estate; and the court is in error in refusing to order a sale for said purpose—especially when all existing testamentary beneficiaries so request.

Langfitt v Langfitt, 223-702; 273 NW 93; 110 ALR 1390

Rent—incident to land—passes to heirs. General rule is that rents accruing after the owner's death belong to the heirs or devisees, as an incident to the ownership of the land which descends to them.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

11935 Time, place of hearing, and service.

Order to sell real estate in auxiliary citation proceedings. Where an administrator after a citation proceeding instituted by an assignee of a probate claim is directed to file an application to sell real estate to pay a claim on a promissory note, long recognized and partly paid from other funds by a former administrator, the granting of the order to sell real estate held by the heirs is erroneous when the heirs were not made parties to the citation application and when, in resistance to the application, the heirs show that no timely notice of hearing on the claim was served and no excuse given for such failure.

In re Jackson, 225-359; 280 NW 563

11937 Method of sale.

Shortage in acreage—evidence. Where lands of an estate are ordered sold for a lump sum, parol evidence is admissible to show that the land was, in realty, sold at a certain price per acre and that the acreage fell short of what was supposed to be the acreage, and that the administrator properly made a deduction for said shortage.

In re Oelwein, 217-1137; 251 NW 694

Order to sell real estate in auxiliary citation proceedings. Where an administrator after a citation proceeding instituted by an assignee of a probate claim is directed to file an application to sell real estate to pay a claim on a promissory note, long recognized and partly paid from other funds by a former administrator, the granting of the order to sell real estate held by the heirs is erroneous when the heirs were not made parties to the citation application and when, in resistance to the application, the heirs show that no timely notice of hearing on the claim was served and no excuse given for such failure.

In re Jackson, 225-359; 280 NW 563

Realty values—evidence. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report, evidence supported trial court's fixing value of farm land at $125 per acre for the purpose of accounting.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

11940 Borrowing money.

Court's discretion in authorizing mortgage to pay claims. The granting of authority to an executor to mortgage real estate to pay claims is discretionary with district court.

In re Christensen, 227-1028; 290 NW 34

Previously litigated matters concluded. In proceedings on executor's application for authority to mortgage real estate for purpose of paying claims and administration expense, objections as to validity of claims which had been finally adjudicated adversely to objectors in former proceedings wherein the objectors all appeared, filed claims, and were represented by counsel, could not be relitigated, and likewise objectors' right to an accounting against executor in such proceedings could not be relitigated since it had been previously adjudicated that such matter had no proper place therein.

In re Christensen, 227-1028; 290 NW 34

Unallowable collateral attack. In the foreclosure of a mortgage, executed by an administrator on lands of the deceased and on due order and authorization of the court, the defending heirs, who were parties to the order and authorization for the mortgage, will not be permitted to collaterally attack the validity of the mortgage on the ground that part of the land was the homestead of the deceased and therefore descended to the heirs exempt from the debts of the deceased.

Reinsurance Life v Houser, 208-1226; 227 NW 116

Implied authority to pay debt. An order of court granting an application by an administrator to borrow money on real estate mortgage security in order to pay a specified debt owed by the estate, impliedly carries authority and direction to use the money in the payment of said debt.

Elliott v Bank, 209-1258; 228 NW 274

11946 Approval by court required.

Approval as interlocutory order. The approval by the probate court of a sale and conveyance of land belonging to an estate, must be deemed an interlocutory order.

In re Doherty, 222-1352; 271 NW 609

Approval by court—estoppel. A vendee who contracts for the purchase of the real estate of an estate "subject to the approval of the court" may not deny the power of the court to reject such contract, even though the executor was vested by the will with ample power to make a sale without the approval of the court.

In re Wicks, 207-264; 222 NW 843

Title—nonpermissible adjudication. When, in the settlement of an estate in probate, a contract of sale of land belonging to the estate is fully consummated by payment and deed, and the sale and conveyance duly approved by the court as by contract required, the purchaser, who is an entire stranger to the estate except as such purchaser, is not a proper, necessary or permissible party to a proceeding in said probate court, instituted by the residuary legatee, to set aside the probate order approving said sale and conveyance.

Reason: The probate court cannot, even in piecemeal, adjudicate the validity of the title of said purchaser.

In re Doherty, 222-1352; 271 NW 609

Bidder at sale of trust property—nonaggrieved party. In the sale of the personal property assets of an insolvent bank by the liquidating receiver, a bidder who is not a creditor of the bank, or interested in any manner in the trust property except as a proposed buyer, has no such standing or interest as authorizes him to appeal from an order of the court rejecting his bid for an item of said assets, and approving a lesser bid of another party for the same item. Nor will the court, under such circumstances, order a remand when the difference between the two bids is slight. (This is not suggesting (1) that the unsuccessful bidder may not very properly call the attention of the court to the disparity in bids, or (2) that the court has unbridled discretion to reject high bids and to approve low bids.)

Dean v Clapp, 221-1270; 268 NW 56

11951 Limitation of action.

Similar provision in re guardianship. See §12596, Vol I

11952 Possession of real property.

Real estate—custodia legis. Lands and the rents and profits thereof may not be said to be in the custody of the executor of the deceased owner (1) when the will does not so provide, (2) when the executor has never taken possession, and (3) when the rents have never been treated as belonging to the estate.

First N. Bk. v Murtha, 212-415; 236 NW 433

Rent—incident to land—passes to heirs. General rule is that rents accruing after the owner's death belong to the heirs or devisees, as an incident to the ownership of the land which descends to them.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

Fire insurance premiums—proper allowance. An administrator is properly given credit for fire insurance premiums paid out by him, in proper amount, for insurance on farm buildings, there being no heirs or devisees present to take possession.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Rights of legatees—sheriff's certificate passing as personalty. A sheriff's certificate under foreclosure proceedings, in which the period of redemption had not yet expired, was personal property and, upon the death of the certificate holder-owner, passed to the person inheriting the personal property under the will.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

11953 Proceeds—account.

Taxes—duty to pay. Taxes are a charge against an estate and must be paid by the administrator.

In re Oelwein, 217-1137; 251 NW 694

Division of rents. A surviving wife is not entitled to one third of the gross rents accumulating in the estate prior to the setting off of her distributive share, but to one third after deducting taxes, proper charges for upkeep and receivership charges, if any.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

11954 Minor heirs—payment of taxes.

Inheritance tax on bequest—right of testator to pay. A testator may validly provide that the inheritance tax on a specific devise or bequest made by him in his will shall be paid from the residuary part of his estate, provided he clearly expresses his intention to that effect. Will construed and held clearly so to provide.

In re Johnson, 220-424; 262 NW 811

11955 Procedure prescribed by will.

Whether will or statute controls. A statute which specifies the securities and the nature thereof in which trust funds may be invested (§12772, C., '27) does not control the investment of testamentary trust funds created under a will which—no rights of creditors being involved—clearly directs investments to be made in more lucrative securities.

In re Lawson, 215-752; 244 NW 739; 88 A.L.R. 316

Testator's intention. In construing a will the principal concern will be to ascertain and determine the intention of the testator, and it is the duty of the court, if it be reasonably possible, to give effect to all of the will's provisions.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Ordinary probate proceedings—noninterference by equity court. An equity court may not interfere with the ordinary proceedings of the probate court in exercising its exclusive jurisdiction in the administration of estates. Rule applies when probate court is following the manner and the method provided by the testator in the will.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Acceptance of bequest—extension of testator's limitation—effect. Where testator directed his executors to purchase, for a daughter, good Iowa land of the value of $15,600, such daughter having refused to accept partial distribution of realty to heirs prior to testator's death, but the testator also provided such bequest should lapse if daughter failed to select land within one year from testator's death, and where within one year the daughter filed application for extension of time on the ground that estate did not have funds to purchase such land, which extension was granted after due notice to executors and heirs, held, district court had jurisdiction to grant extension of time and, no appeal having been taken therefrom, the order became "final" and the heirs were bound by the decision.

In re Holdorf, 227-977; 289 NW 756

Equitable conversion under will. In probate proceedings where testator directs the executor of his estate to sell all of the property of the estate, including realty, as soon as convenient after his death and distribute proceeds, while the executor has some discretion as to the time and manner of the sale, the direction is mandatory, and effects an equitable conversion of the real estate into personalty at the instant of testator's death, and thereafter the real estate is to be treated as personalty, and be subject to the rules governing personal property.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Absolute bequest—later repugnant provision disregarded. Where a codicil made an absolute bequest of a residuary estate to a county to be used in paving a highway, and a later provision in the codicil gave certain directions to the executor and imposed conditions for acceptance of the bequest by the county, such later conditions were repugnant and would defeat the purpose of the testator and must be disregarded when void in delegating power to the executor in violation of statute, and the intention of the testator as expressed in the first provision must be given effect to prevent intestacy.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1133; 286 NW 735

Appointment of nominated executor required unless disqualified. Altho a certain discretion lies with the probate court in the appointment of personal representatives, nevertheless an executor named in a will as the one in testator's judgment best fitted to administer his estate should be appointed by the court in the absence of disqualification, which must be more than the objections of collateral relatives.

In re Schneider, 224-598; 277 NW 567

11956 Business continued—inventory.

Order—validity. An order in probate authorizing an administrator to continue the private banking business of the deceased is not void because entered without notice to creditors.

In re Harsh, 207-84; 218 NW 537

Continuing partnership. An administrator, without an authorizing order of court, has no power to bind the estate by continuing a partnership of which the deceased was a member or by creating a new partnership. And under such circumstances the ex parte statements or pretenses of the surviving partners are quite inconsequential.

Williams v Schee, 214-1181; 243 NW 529

Implied authority to continue partnership. Where a deceased had been a member of a banking partnership, an order in probate allowing a claim against the estate, consequent on a defalcation of a former employee of the bank, cannot be deemed an implied authorization to the administrator to continue the partnership after the death of the deceased.

II CLAIMS CHARGEABLE AGAINST THE ESTATE

Funeral expenses. See under §11969

I PRESENTATION AND PRESERVATION OF CLAIMS—PLEADINGS

Executor may file own claim. Executrix of estate may file her own claim against the estate, or proceed for the appointment of a temporary administrator, as provided by statute.

In re Dunn, (NOR); 224 NW 38

Substitution of administrator—judgment—effect. A plaintiff who, upon the death of the defendant, prosecutes his claim to judgment by substituting the defendant's administrator as defendant, simply accomplishes a legal adjudication of his claim against the estate. Plaintiff, by such procedure, does not obtain any lien on the real property belonging to the estate.

Marion Bank v Smith, 205-203; 217 NW 857

Findings—conclusiveness. A supported finding in probate that a claim should be disallowed is conclusive on appeal.

Chamberlain v Fay, 205-662; 216 NW 700

Appeal—non de novo hearing. Claims against an estate are triable at law. Consequently, on appeal, an allowance by the probate court will not be disturbed if it is not excessive and has support in the evidence.

In re Anderson, 216-1017; 250 NW 183

Fact findings in probate not triable de novo on appeal. Findings of fact by the trial court in a probate proceeding involving objections to an executor's report and payment of certain claims cannot be reviewed on appeal, such not being triable de novo.

In re Scholbrock, 224-593; 277 NW 5

Probate claims—not triable de novo. Probate claims are not triable de novo in the supreme court, as credibility of witnesses and weight of testimony are involved.

In re Martens, 226-162; 283 NW 885

Claims—strict pleading unnecessary—prayer not required. Claims in probate, not being subject to strict rules of pleading, require no specific form or prayer.

In re Davie, 224-1177; 278 NW 616

Presentation form—technicalities not required. Technical accuracy and fullness of allegation, or that degree of particularity of pleading and conformity of pleading to proof required in ordinary actions, are not required in the presentation of claims in probate.

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

In re Onstot, 224-520; 277 NW 563

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Contract binding "heirs"—claim in estate necessary. A contract with a decedent, altho binding on his heirs, executors, and administrators, must be enforced by filing a claim in the estate as provided by law.

In re Sterner, 224-617; 278 NW 216

Filing excused. One who holds a promissory note under the authorized indorsement of the executor of the estate to which the note once belonged, need not file his claim against the estate.

University Bank v Johnson, 202-654; 210 NW 785

Dual filing of same claim unnecessary. When a collaterally secured promissory note against an estate is duly filed with and approved by the administrator and by the court and, with the approval of the court, is taken up and merged into a new note signed by the administrator and accompanied by the same collateral, no necessity exists for the filing of the new note as a claim against the estate.

Elliott v Bank, 209-1258; 228 NW 274

Notes of deceased—prima facie case. In an action in probate by payees of notes to establish notes as claims against maker's estate, the conceded signature of deceased and admission of the notes in evidence establish a prima facie case for claimants.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Execution and delivery of notes—consideration presumed. In an action in probate to establish notes of deceased as claims, proof of the execution and delivery being established, it is presumed that notes were issued for a valuable consideration and the burden of showing lack of consideration is on the defense.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Premature filing. The filing of a claim against an estate prior to the doing of some act which is necessary to fully mature the claim, i.e., a demand for payment, will not render the filing premature when such act is done prior to the hearing.

In re Prunty, 201-670; 207 NW 785

Bank officers' duty to protect assets—filing probate claim. A duty is imposed on bank officers and directors to file a claim against the estate of a deceased bank director when the bank's bills receivable are covered by a guaranty agreement executed by such deceased director.

In re Sterner, 224-617; 278 NW 216

Belated filing—equitable proceeding. While establishing a probate claim is a law proceeding, the determination of the existence of peculiar circumstances relieving the failure to file a probate claim within the statutory period is an equitable proceeding.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Peculiar circumstances relieving limitation on filing claim. Statute being liberally construed, peculiar circumstances to afford relief from the one-year limitation on filing probate claims, and to permit thereafter the superintendent of banking to file a claim on decedent's guaranty of bank's bills receivable, exist when decedent was a director in the bank, when his son and executor had been a bookkeeper and cashier in the bank, knowing bank's financial condition, and as such officer had a duty to file a claim on the guaranty against the estate, and when the financial condition of the bank at the time the receiver took control was so concealed in the books and records that the receiver was unable to learn at once the necessity for filing such claim.

In re Sterner, 224-617; 278 NW 216

Fatally belated claim to estate. A surviving widow (who is administratrix of her husband's estate) may not, in her final report and on the hearing thereof, present for the first time, and litigate, the claim that the estate left by her husband was the result of the joint earnings of herself and her husband during his lifetime, and that she is entitled to half of the estate either as earnings or as joint owner.

In re Paulson, 221-706; 266 NW 563

Action in lieu of filing in probate. Principle reaffirmed that the bringing of an action at law against an estate is equivalent to filing the claim in probate.

Van Iperen v Hays, 219-715; 259 NW 448

Claims overlooked. A claim against an estate, duly verified and filed, and not allowed or disallowed by the administrator, cannot be deemed adjudicated by an order approving the final report of the administrator when the claim, the claimant and his representative were, by mistake and oversight, wholly overlooked both in said final report and in the notice of hearing thereon. It follows that an equitable action will lie, subsequent to said approval, to open up the estate and to allow the claim.

Harding v Troy, 217-775; 252 NW 521

Conversion by guardian—failure to file claim. Failure of a ward to file a claim against the estate of an embezzling guardian works no release of the surety on the bond of the guardian.

Armon v Craig, 203-1338; 214 NW 556

Subrogation. A surety who, in a foreclosure suit which was personal as to himself, but solely in rem as to the estate for which he was surety, pays off a deficiency judgment, must file his claim against the estate in order to render effective his right of subrogation.

In re Angerer, 202-611; 210 NW 810

Defect of parties in re objections to accounting. A guardian, after purchasing a residence property for his ward at a price authorized by the court, paid the vendor a trifling part of the contract price and obtained a deed from the vendor to the ward who thereafter for years remained in undisturbed possession of the property. The guardian in a later report credited himself with the full amount of the contract price. Later, the deception being discovered, the ward filed objections to the report. The guardian dying, his administrator appeared in re said objections.

Held, the court was in error in establishing a claim in favor of the ward and against the guardian's estate in the amount of the credit improperly taken by the guardian, on condition that the ward reconvey the property to the unpaid vendor,—that the court was per se without jurisdiction to adjudicate said controversy in the absence of said unpaid vendor as a party to said proceedings.

In re Bennett, 221-518; 266 NW 6

Right to enforce all security. The filing of a claim against the estate of the deceased debtor does not preclude claimant from maintaining an equitable action to enforce said claim against lands which were made liable for the payment of said claim by the probated will of another decedent.

Diagonal Bank v Nichols, 219-342; 258 NW 700

Probate claim denied—no bar to subsequent equity action. A prior judgment in a law action tried on the merits is conclusive as to a subsequent action in equity between the same parties and the same facts, but where a widow is bequeathed a life estate in realty with the right to dispose of such realty for her necessary support, a probate adjudication on the merits that her claim for widow's support could not be established against husband's estate, is not such an adjudication as bars a later equity proceeding to establish such support claim as a lien on such realty.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Widow's support—equity allowing more than probate claim. In an equity action to establish a claim for support of testator's widow, the increasing of amount of such claim in excess of a claim for the same services filed in testator's estate, which was disallowed, held, not important or showing of bad faith, where evidence of witnesses is uncontradicted and claim is reasonable. It is not unusual in actions at law or in equity to increase the amount claimed by amendment or on a second trial.

I PRESENTATION AND PRESERVATION OF CLAIMS—PLEADINGS—continued

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Equitable set-off. Where an insolvent bank in the hands of a receiver owes an estate on a deposit, an heir who owes the bank, tho he is the executor of the estate, may have his interest in the deposit set off against his indebtedness to the bank, subject, of course, to claims which may be filed against the estate.

Andrew v Bank, 216-240; 249 NW 154; 93 ALR 1156

Debt-encumbered remainder — equitable action to enforce. Where a testator devises to his wife a life estate in all his property (which estate she accepts), with remainder to his children, a provision of the will to the specific effect that "all just debts and funeral expenses" of said wife shall be paid out of testator's estate, will enable the wife's creditor, who became such subsequent to the probating of the will and the closing of the estate, and shortly prior to the death of the wife some 30 years later, to maintain an action in equity to establish the debt, and to subject the lands, passing under the will and in the hands of remaindermen, to the satisfaction of said debt.

Diagonal Bank v Nichols, 219-342; 258 NW 700

Probate — claim payable "on or before" death. An oral contract to pay for services, payable "on or before" the death of the promisor, matures at his death and therefore is not barred by the statute of limitations, even tho the claim was running for over 20 years.

Gardner v Marquis, 224-458; 275 NW 493

Mutual expectation. One suing for the value of services rendered need not show that he expected to receive payment and that the decedent expected to make payment, when the claimant was not a member of the decedent's family.

Nortman v Lally, 204-638; 215 NW 713

Pleading express contract and proving quantum meruit. A claim in probate "for personal services performed by claimant for and in behalf of decedent at her special instance and request" is sufficiently supported by proof that personal services of a certain value were rendered by claimant for decedent and accepted by decedent, without any proof of an express oral or written contract.

In re Walton, 213-104; 238 NW 577

Evidence—competency. On a claim for services rendered to a deceased during his lifetime, evidence is inadmissible as to what claimant did relative to the funeral of decedent.

In re Walton, 213-104; 238 NW 577

Presumptive credits. In an action against an estate on a contract by deceased to pay for services rendered to her, payments of money by deceased to claimant are, presumptively, credits on the contract.

In re Willmott, 211-34; 230 NW 330; 71 ALR 1018

Defense of payment—burden on defendant. In an action in probate to establish claim based on promissory note, the burden of proving payment is upon defense.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Admissions of wife against husband. Admissions by a wife in the absence of the husband, tending to show that a claimant in probate had been employed in the business and had not been paid, are admissible against the estate of the husband when it appears that the wife was both the general manager of the business in question, and a partner therein with her husband.

Nortman v Lally, 204-638; 215 NW 713

Contracts—consideration—claim in probate. On a wife's claim against her deceased, divorced husband's estate, a promissory note expressly stating a consideration, which, however, is invalid to support the claim, will not, under §9440, C., '35, import a valid consideration, so as to generate a jury question. Section 9440, C., '35, was not intended to furnish the consideration but only import it when not stated, which in any event could not be different than that stated in the contract.

In re Straka, 224-109; 275 NW 490

Defense—lack of consideration. In probate action to establish as claims notes signed by deceased, evidence submitted by defense to show lack of consideration, was properly held to be insufficient to present a jury question.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Self-serving declarations. Self-serving declarations of a husband or wife during their lifetime are inadmissible to negative a claim in probate against the estate of the husband.

Nortman v Lally, 204-638; 215 NW 713

Oral contract to convey land at death—absence of strong equities. Absence of strong equities in favor of the plaintiff, a son trying to establish an oral contract with his father, since deceased, does not tend to weaken his corroborating testimony.

Blezek v Blezek, 226-237; 284 NW 180

Oral contract to devise—evidence to establish—duty of court. Evidence to establish an alleged oral contract between a father and son, that the father would leave to the son a farm when he died, must be established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, and it is the duty of the court to subject the evidence to every fair test which may tend to weaken its credibility.

Blezek v Blezek, 226-237; 284 NW 180

Oral contract to devise—convincing evidence necessary. An alleged oral contract between a childless couple and a neighbor, that such couple would leave all their property to the neighbor's minor son when he became of age, if he would live with them until that time, must be established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, and when so established, along with proof of compliance by the son, entitles the son to specific performance of the contract.

Ford v Young, 225-956; 282 NW 324

Partnership checks not showing payment. In proving a claim against an estate, by showing an oral contract to pay for services extending over a period of many years, neither the lapse of time nor checks payable to claimant drawn by decedent during the 14 years just preceding his death, when a partnership existed between them for those years, raises a presumption of payment in view of decedent's admission of the debt shortly before his death.

Gardner v Marquis, 224-458; 275 NW 493

Transactions with deceased. A claimant in probate must not be permitted to testify that he relied and acted on statements made by the deceased to a third party in a conversation in which claimant took part; otherwise as to statements made by deceased in conversation in which claimant did not take part.

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

Collection of estate—discovery—automobile replevied after testator's death. An automobile finance company, as conditional seller, may not replevy automobiles immediately after the death of conditional buyer having absolute ownership and possession at the time of his death, since the right to possession of all personal property for administration purposes passed to executor, who in a proceeding to discover probate assets may recover the automobiles or their value from such conditional seller, whose proper remedy should have been the filing of a claim against the administrator.

In re Sweet, 224-589; 277 NW 712

Redemption in lieu of payment from estate. The holder of a legally established claim in probate need not rely on his right to be paid from the funds—if sufficient—arising from the administration of the estate, but may become a redemptioner of the real estate of the decedent which has been sold on execution and which is yet subject to redemption by creditors, (1) by pursuing, within the statutory period, the course prescribed for redemption by creditors in general, and (2) by applying during said period to the district court (or to a judge thereof) of the county wherein the land is situated, for an order, on due notice and hearing, permitting and confirming such right of redemption.

Aronson v Hoskins, 201-389; 207 NW 389

Action against executor as such. An action at law against an executor as such, in the county in which he was appointed such officer, for damages for personal injuries inflicted by the deceased, is, in legal effect, but an action in rem against the assets of the estate. It follows that the executor is not entitled to demand a change of place of trial to another county of which he is a legal resident.

Van Iperen v Hays, 219-715; 259 NW 448

Appearance and continuance in state court—nonwaiver of federal jurisdiction. Agreed postponements of a probate hearing in the state court will not prevent the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, a party authorized by act of Congress to sue in the federal courts, from thereafter commencing action thereon in the federal courts.

RFC v Dingwell, 224-1172; 278 NW 281

Federal courts—probate claims—jurisdiction from diversity of citizenship. Tho proceedings for settlement of an estate may be pending in a state court, the federal courts may on account of diversity of citizenship assume jurisdiction to determine the validity of claims against the estate.

RFC v Dingwell, 224-1172; 278 NW 281

State and federal courts—comity—certiorari coercing state court's release of jurisdiction. The necessity for comity between state and federal courts demands that controversies shall not arise concerning their respective jurisdictional powers on account of unsubstantial considerations, and certiorari from the supreme court of Iowa will lie to require a district court of the state to relinquish jurisdiction over a probate matter after the federal court, through diversity of citizenship, has assumed jurisdiction.

RFC v Dingwell, 224-1172; 278 NW 281

II CLAIMS CHARGEABLE AGAINST THE ESTATE

Rebutting presumption of gratuity.

Spicer v Administrator, 201-99; 202 NW 604

Contract for repayment—burden of proof. One seeking to recover money loaned must prove a contract express or implied for its repayment.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Transaction with deceased—expectation of payment. A claimant for services rendered as a member of the family of a decedent is incompetent to testify against the executor that she expected to receive compensation for the services performed.

In re Docius, 215-1193; 247 NW 796

II CLAIMS CHARGEABLE AGAINST THE ESTATE—continued

“Family” defined. Instructions which define a “family” as “a collection or collective body of persons who live under one roof and under one head or management” are all-sufficient.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

Persons in family relation. The existence of a family relation in a legal sense creates a presumption that services performed in the family by the members thereof were gratuitous; but the fact that a mother “lived in the house” occupied by a daughter and “ate at the same table” does not per se establish such family relation.

In re Butterbrodt, 201-871; 208 NW 297

Family relation — presumption. Services rendered in a family by one member thereof to another member are presumptively gratuitous; but claimant may overthrow the presumption by proof of an express contract to pay for such services, or by proof of such circumstances as will justify a finding that the member rendering the services expected to be paid therefor, and that the member receiving the services expected to pay therefor.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

Persons in family relation. The rendition on one hand and the acceptance on the other of valuable services (board and lodging) for a series of years generates a presumption that the one rendering was to receive pay and that the one receiving was to pay; and this is true tho the receiver and the giver were lifelong associates and related, but were not members of the same family.

Peterson v Johnson, 205-16; 212 NW 138

Services rendered for decedent—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held sufficient to support a verdict of $7,500 for services rendered to a decedent during a series of years.

Halstead v Rohret, 212-837; 235 NW 293

Services in family—presumption. There can be no presumption that services performed for a deceased were gratuitous when claimant and deceased were not related and not members of the same family.

In re Walton, 213-104; 238 NW 577

Persons in family relation. A daughter-in-law who enters the home of her father-in-law and cares for him for many years while performing the duties of a housewife, as had formerly been done by other relatives, cannot recover from the estate of the father-in-law for said services in the absence of an express or implied contract; and an implied contract is not established by proof that on occasions the father-in-law expressed appreciation for the personal care rendered him, and a purpose to pay therefor.

In re Unangst, 213-1064; 240 NW 618

Wife’s claim for services—public policy. When necessarily including compensation for purely domestic duties, a wife’s claim against the estate of her deceased, divorced husband, furnishes in itself sufficient ground for denying it, under the rule that agreements that a wife be compensated for the performance of obligations incident to the marital relation violate public policy and are void.

In re Straka, 224-109; 275 NW 490

Widow’s groceries—nonliability of administrator. Administrator, who has paid testator’s widow more than amount to which she was entitled prior to alleged promise to pay for groceries furnished to widow, held not authorized to make payment out of estate for such groceries.

Yoss v Sampson, (NOR); 269 NW 22

Probate claim—nonfraudulent allowance—conclusiveness. A daughter’s claim on promissory notes against her father’s estate upon which there was a hearing to the court, at which hearing the administrator, her brother, appeared personally and by counsel, and at the conclusion of which judgment was entered allowing the claim, altho it was apparent to the court from the face of the notes that the statute of limitations had run, is a situation where the allowance will not be disturbed on appeal without a showing of fraud upon the court. Held, fraud not shown.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Living with and caring for parents at their request — nongratuitous services. Reciprocal services rendered by and between members of a family are presumed to be gratuitous, yet, the court, a jury being waived, may find that a married daughter, who with her family, returns to the home of her aged parents at their request to care for them, for which she expected to receive and the parents expected to pay remuneration, did not reestablish a family relationship with her parents so as to raise the presumption of gratuitous services. Such finding will be binding on the appellate court.

Clark v Krogh, 225-479; 280 NW 635

Note found in decedent’s safe—no delivery. In spite of a mother’s declarations as to the existence of a note and her instructions to her daughter to get it after the mother’s death, a promissory note executed by a mother, with her daughter as payee, in repayment of money allegedly borrowed from the daughter, and found by said daughter in the mother’s safe after her death, is not a valid claim against the estate of the mother—there having been no sufficient delivery thereof to payee. Quaere, as to validity of claim if based on the debt independent of the note.

In re Martens, 226-162; 283 NW 885

Rents from dower interest — nonliability. Rents arising from the distributive share of a surviving spouse, during the time when such share is being held in common with the shares of other owners, are not liable for the debts of the estate or of the costs of administration.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Share of heir as mere contract claim—how paid. Where the share or interest of a child in the estate of his or her alleged parent takes the form of a mere contract obligation against the estate, the child becomes a mere claimant against the estate and is payable as such, and not from the mere residue of the estate. So held where the parentage was in issue and was compromised by a court-approved agreement wherein the executor agreed, on behalf of the estate, (1) to set up a specified trust fund, the annuity of which was to be payable to said child during its lifetime, and (2) annually to pay said annuity to said child until the trust fund was actually set up.

In re Griffin, 220-1028; 262 NW 473

Premium on bond—refusal to allow. The probate court is clearly within its discretion in refusing to allow against an estate and to the surety on an executor's bond (the executor being deceased and his estate insolvent) the amount of unpaid premiums on the bond, especially when such allowance would burden the estate with a double charge for premiums consequent on the mismanagement of the estate by the executor.

In re Mowrey, 218-992; 255 NW 511

Allowable payment by administrator to himself. An administrator is properly given credit for a just claim paid to himself with the approval and at the request of all adversely interested parties, and after due consultation with a co-administrator, even tho no formal written claim was ever filed.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Allowance of credit—review on appeal. An order of the probate court granting an executor credit on his final report for the amount paid by him on his own motion, on a claim against the estate, is conclusive on the appellate court if the record reveals supporting testimony as to the genuineness of the claim.

In re Plendl, 218-103; 253 NW 819

Payment of unfiled claims. Principle reaffirmed that an executor may voluntarily pay valid claims against the estate tho they are not filed.

In re Plendl, 218-103; 253 NW 819

Administrator's claim—ex parte allowance—correction before final settlement. A personal claim of an administrator allowed on an ex parte hearing without a special administrator, without a hearing, without notice, and containing a joint obligation of administrator and decedent, is subject to correction any time before final settlement and should be disallowed until it appears sufficient funds exist to pay all other claims and costs of administration.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Conditional rejection of item in interlocutory report. The court may, very properly, in ruling upon an item in an interlocutory report, allow part of the item and continue the remainder for more adequate showing in the administrator's final report.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Interest on antenuptial-contract allowance. A provision in an antenuptial contract that the wife shall be paid a named sum within a named time after the death of the husband contemplates interest on said sum from the maturity date, even tho said contract also provides that the widow shall be paid a monthly sum until the former main sum is paid.

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Husband's breach of antenuptial contract—wife's heirs' claim against husband's estate. An antenuptial contract preserving the respective property rights of the parties will support a claim in favor of the wife's collateral heirs against the estate of the husband who appropriated his deceased wife's separate property that otherwise and rightfully should have gone to such collateral heirs.

In re Onstot, 224-520; 277 NW 563

Harmless error. In proceeding on claim against a decedent's estate for an alleged loan, trial court erred in holding that claimant's wife was an incompetent witness as to conversation with decedent wherein he stated that "they should get around to make a note for the $500 he gave him". However, since court also found in effect that such evidence would not have been sufficiently definite to establish the claim, such error was not prejudicial.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Instruction on "stated" amount for alleged services rendered to decedent. In probate claimant's action reciting decedent's agreement to pay to claimant for services from decedent's estate an amount more than claimant could expect to make teaching school, a reference by trial court in its instructions to decedent's agreement to pay a "stated amount per month" was not objectionable where, under allegations of claim there could be no recovery unless jury found that there was an agreement to pay a stated amount, and where there was evidence as to amount stated or fixed by decedent. The word "stated" means no more than determined, fixed, or settled, and was properly used in the instruction.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Finding of duplication in claims. Since appellant-claimant failed to challenge finding of trial court that two claims against a decedent's

II CLAIMS CHARGEABLE AGAINST THE ESTATE—concluded estate based on a note and a loan were a duplication, the sufficiency of other grounds of judgment disallowing claim for the loan was immaterial.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Setting aside fraudulent deed on condition. The grantee in a deed of conveyance executed for the primary purpose of preserving a means of support for the aged grantor (tho not so expressed in the deed) has a right, in an equitable action by grantor's executor to set aside the deed, to demand that his reasonable claim for furnishing the grantor a very substantial support be first paid as a condition precedent to any judgment setting aside the deed; and this is true tho said deed would have been declared fraudulent and invalid had it been attacked by the grantor's existing creditors.

Meyers v Schmidt, 220-370; 261 NW 502

Declarations and admissions of heirs and devisees. Where there are several devisees or legatees whose interests are several and not joint, the declarations of one are not admissible for the reason that they might operate to the prejudice of the others. In general, the admissions of an heir are not admissible to prove a claim against an estate unless he is the only heir interested upon that side of the action.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Heir's assignment of interest subject to estate claims—rights of assignee. In a probate proceeding where one of the heirs, who is indebted to the estate, purchases a farm from the executor and assigns her one-tenth interest in the estate as security for a purchase note to the executor, who in turn assigns the note to a third party, held, that such assignment of interest is taken subject to the estate claims, and whatever interest remains should be paid to the holder of the note irrespective of the fact the executor is also indebted to the estate on his final account.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Refund to pay debts. The heirs of an estate who unconditionally purchase the interest of their mother in the estate have no legal right, thereafter, to compel the mother to contribute any sum toward the discharge of unpaid debts of the estate, unpaid taxes against the estate, or unpaid probate costs and fees.

In re Jones, 217-288; 251 NW 651

Formal direction in will to "pay debts"—no priority over other testamentary dispositions. The usual, formal, first paragraph of a will directing the payment of "all my just debts", held, being a mere recitation of an executor's duty, does not alone give priority and subject the property of the estate to all claims allowed irrespective of other provisions directing the disposition of the corpus of the estate.

Long v Northup, 225-132; 279 NW 104; 116 ALR 1475

Administrator's funds set off against insolvent bank holding secured note. An estate's deposit in an insolvent bank may be set off against a secured note held by bank, and contention that debts lacked mutuality was ineffective.

First Natl. Bk. v Malone, 76 F 2d, 251

Bank stockholder—double liability—how enforced against estate. A claim by the receiver of an insolvent state bank for the statutory, superadded, contingent liability on capital stock (§9251, C., '35) need not, as to the liability of a stockholder who has died prior to the insolvency of the bank, be filed as a claim against the stockholder's estate. Such claim may be enforced by action against the executor or administrator as such.

Bates v McGill, 223-62; 272 NW 535

Loss of improperly created trust fund—reimbursement. Where an executor is devised a named sum of money in trust for a named person, and where the executor assumes to set aside or hold certain bank stock as said trust fund, which stock becomes worthless by the failure of the bank, the estate must make good the resulting loss (or pro rata if the estate is insufficient to pay all legacies) less any payments made to the cestui que trust.

Mills v Manchester, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

Monument ordered by heirs. The court may allow the purchase price of a monument against a solvent estate even tho the contract therefor was entered into by one heir with the approval of all other heirs, and not by the administrator.

In re McMath, 209-414; 228 NW 11

Trust property held by ward. A contract by the guardian of an incompetent, for the sale of land owned by the ward solely as trustee, tho approved by the court, cannot, in any sense, be deemed the contract of the ward; therefore, such contract cannot, in the event of the death of the ward, be deemed to create any indebtedness against the estate of the ward.

Copple v Morrison, 221-183; 264 NW 113

11958 Verification and filing.

Payment of unfiled claims. Principle reaffirmed that an executor may voluntarily pay valid claims against the estate tho they are not filed.

In re Plendl, 218-103; 253 NW 819

Payment of unfiled but valid claims. An executor will be credited with the amount of valid, enforceable claims paid by him even tho such claims were not formally filed against the estate.

In re Bourne, 210-883; 232 NW 169

Payment of valid unfiled claim without court authorization. The administrator of an apparently large estate (of which he is the sole beneficiary) has the right, without waiting for the formal filing of a claim, and without obtaining authority from the court, to forthwith make a partial payment on the only debt then existing against the estate, when such payment effects (1) a pro tanto reduction in interest on the debt, and (2) a pro tanto redemption of apparently valuable securities belonging to the estate, and held by the creditor in an amount far in excess of the debt. The administrator having the right to pay, the creditor has the right to receive.

Elliott v Bank, 209-1258; 228 NW 274

"Equitable" filing and allowance. Equity will treat and regard a valid claim against an estate as having been presented to, and approved and allowed by, the administrator, as of the date when the administrator paid said claim, even tho there has been no formal statutory filing and approval.

Elliott v Bank, 209-1258; 228 NW 274

Bank depositors—nonnecessity to file claims. A probate order which authorizes, generally, an administrator to continue the private banking business of the deceased in the same manner in which deceased carried on the business ipso facto constitutes (1) an approval by the court of the claims of depositors as they, on the bank records, ostensibly or indisputably exist, from time to time, and (2) an authority to pay such claims, and renders the formal filing of such claims with the administrator wholly unnecessary.

In re Harsh, 207-84; 218 NW 537

Mistake—effect. The filing of a claim against an estate will not estop the party from abandoning such claim and instituting an action for a partnership accounting with deceased when such latter proceeding was his sole allowable remedy.

Hull v Padgett, 207-430; 223 NW 154

11959 Notice of hearing—exceptions.

ANALYSIS

I NOTICE

II ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS BY ADMINISTRATOR

I NOTICE

Service by attorney. Notice of hearing of claims against an estate may be served by the attorney for claimants.

Schroeder v Dist. Court, 213-814; 239 NW 806

Unauthorized acceptance of notice. An unauthorized but good-faith acceptance by an attorney of notice of hearing on a claim in probate, is ratified by the conduct of the administratrix (1) in making no objection to said acceptance when informed thereof, (2) in negotiating for a settlement of the claim, and (3) in causing the hearing to be twice continued.

Story Co. Bk. v Youtz, 199-444; 200 NW 700

Insufficient notice. A notice of hearing on a duly filed claim in probate is insufficient when no copy of the claim accompanies the said notice.

Lucas v Ruden, 220-494; 260 NW 60

County's claim for insane support—notice of hearing. County's maintenance claim against estate of deceased who was inmate of state insane hospital is a general claim, and notice of hearing thereon must be served on the administrator within 12 months after notice of his appointment as provided by statute.

In re Wagner, 226-667; 284 NW 485

Barred claim—negligence precludes equitable relief. Negligence of a fourth-class claimant in probate in filing his claim and serving notice of hearing thereon bars all equitable relief even tho no element of estoppel accompanies such negligence.

Lucas v Ruden, 220-494; 260 NW 60

Fatal delay. Failure of a claimant against an estate to offer any evidence of any peculiar circumstance equitably excusing his failure to serve timely and legal notice of hearing on his duly filed but unallowed fourth class claim, deprives him of all right to be relieved from the resulting bar of the statute of limitation.

Meier v Briggs' Est., 221-482; 265 NW 189

Death of claimant's attorney—peculiar circumstances relieving barred claim. Where an attorney files a probate claim for a nonresident claimant, but dies one day before the expiration of the year and without serving a notice of hearing on such claim—claimant not learning of his attorney's death until later, and tho then delaying several months while his new attorney negotiated with the estate, held to have shown peculiar circumstances entitling him to equitable relief considering the estate was still unsettled and solvent.

Hagen v Nielsen, 225-127; 279 NW 94; 281 NW 356

II ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS BY ADMINISTRATOR

Payment of valid unfiled claim without court authorization—effect. The administrator of an apparently large estate (of which he is the sole beneficiary) has the right, without waiting for the formal filing of a claim, and without obtaining authority from the court, to forthwith make a partial payment on the only debt then existing against the estate, when such payment effects (1) a pro tanto reduction in in-

II ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS BY ADMINISTRATOR—concluded

interest on the debt and (2) a pro tanto redemption of apparently valuable securities belonging to the estate and held by the creditor in an amount far in excess of the debt. The administrator having the right to pay, the creditor has the right to receive.

Elliott v Bank, 209-1258; 228 NW 274

Advance by executor—repayment and interest. An executor who, because of a temporary shortage in estate funds, advances sums from his own private funds and therewith pays legal claims against the estate, rather than to sell, on a poor market, assets of the estate, is properly allowed interest on the amount so advanced.

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Personal advancements by executor—preference. When an executor, owing to a temporary shortage of estate funds, advances from his personal funds and pays to a widow sums of money in the nature of monthly support (provided for in an antenuptial contract), he will not only be reimbursed but will be given a preference in repayment over payment to the widow of other sums due her under said contract.

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Insolvent estates—unallowable payment in full. The act of the administratrix of an insolvent estate in applying estate funds to the full payment of a debt, which is the personal obligation of both the deceased and the administratrix, is fundamentally unallowable. It follows that the creditor, by receiving such payment, becomes a trustee of the fund for the use and benefit of the estate, especially when he knew that the estate was insolvent.

Reason: The administratrix could not legally make such payment, even on an authorizing order of the court.

Andrew v Bank, 217-69; 251 NW 23

Pleading fraud. An allegation that an administrator "fraudulently and collusively" caused the allowance of a claim against the estate is wholly insufficient to constitute a good plea of fraud.

In re Kessler, 213-633; 239 NW 555

Administrator's settlement of unenforceable lien—homestead's nonliability. Although a settlement agreement was made between a claimant and an administrator, a decedent's homestead may not be subjected to a mortgage or judgment which has never become a lien thereon, which was not filed or allowed against the estate, which was not enforced within two years after judgment entry, and when such settlement was never approved by the probate court.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

11961 Claims deemed denied.

Nonnecessity for administrator to deny claims. Failure of the court to sustain a motion non obstante veredicto made on the ground that administrator failed to plead any defense to a claim against the estate was not error, since under the statute the administrator was not required to plead any defense.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Delivery of note by decedent—validity—dead man statute. In the absence of contrary evidence, a valid delivery was proved by the statutory presumption of delivery arising from possession of a note, aided by evidence, secured without violating the dead man statute, to the effect that the note was in decedent maker's hands while visiting payee during an illness and after decedent left, the note was reposing on payee's bed.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Consideration and delivery of note—proof by presumptions—instructions. The questions of want of consideration and nondelivery of a note, supported only by presumptions, need not be submitted to the jury when such presumptions are not overcome by evidence, and when the only conflict arises over the genuineness of the signature, the submission of this single question was proper.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Defense of payment—burden on defendant. In an action in probate to establish claim based on promissory note, the burden of proving payment is upon defense.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Plea of payment. In an action in probate to establish a claim based upon a promissory note, a plea of payment must be based upon something done after the execution of the instrument, and a note being merely evidence of indebtedness cannot be paid prior to its execution. Evidence submitted held insufficient for jury's consideration.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Gifts inter vivos—consideration—note as future gift—presumption—burden. Altho a promissory note for which there is no consideration is an unenforceable promise to make a future gift, nevertheless in an action against an executor on a note, the presumption that the note imports a consideration, if negated, must be overcome by evidence and this burden is on the maker or his representatives.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

11962 Burden of proof.

Burden of proof. An executor must sustain his plea of payment of a claim filed in probate.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

Defense of payment—burden on defendant. In an action in probate to establish claim based on promissory note, the burden of proving payment is upon defense.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Payments applied on debts due—presumption. In a probate action to establish claim for housekeeping services rendered to decedent, where decedent promised to pay claimant small amounts from time to time to cover cost of her clothing and personal expenses, with an additional amount upon his death out of his estate, it would be presumed that small payments made by decedent in his lifetime were to be applied on debts which were due for such expenses, no showing having been made to the contrary.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Burden to prove payment. A claimant in probate who prima facie establishes his claim is entitled to judgment, in the absence of proof by the administrator of payment.

Kern v Kiefer, 204-490; 215 NW 607

Payment. The burden of proof to establish payment of an obligation is not met by testimony which goes no further than to create an inference of payment.

Slezak v Krisinger, 202-422; 210 NW 436

Plea of payment. In an action in probate to establish a claim based upon a promissory note, a plea of payment must be based upon something done after the execution of the instrument, and a note being merely evidence of indebtedness cannot be paid prior to its execution. Evidence submitted held insufficient for jury's consideration.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Contract for repayment—burden of proof. One seeking to recover money loaned must prove a contract express or implied for its repayment.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Notes of deceased—prima facie case. In an action in probate by payees of notes to establish notes as claims against maker's estate, the conceded signature of deceased and admission of the notes in evidence establish a prima facie case for claimants.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Plea of mutual mistake in execution of notes. In an action in probate to establish as claims against estate two notes signed by deceased, a plea that notes were executed as result of mutual mistake is held to be insufficient for jury's consideration, where the maker does not dispute the validity of the notes and pays interest on them for a long period of time.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Defense—lack of consideration. In probate action to establish as claims notes signed by deceased, evidence submitted by defense to show lack of consideration was properly held to be insufficient to present a jury question.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Sufficient consideration. In an action in probate to establish a claim against the estate based upon a note which was the third renewal of a note originally given as the result of an accounting and settlement between deceased and claimants in 1913, such note is supported by consideration.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Payment of claim—erroneous instructions. In an action against an estate on a claim for services, reversible error results from instructing that the defendant has the burden to establish payment of the claim when there is no issue of payment.

In re Stencil, 215-1195; 248 NW 18

Allowance of claims—conclusiveness. The allowance of a claim by the probate court on supporting testimony is conclusive on the appellate court, even tho the supporting testimony is not wholly satisfactory to the judicial mind.

Olson v Roberts, 218-410; 255 NW 461

Examination of claimant. No error can result to a claimant in probate by an instruction which simply recites the statutory right of an administrator to examine a claimant on the subject of payment of the claim.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

Partnership checks not showing payment. In proving a claim against an estate, by showing an oral contract to pay for services extending over a period of many years, neither the lapse of time nor checks payable to claimant drawn by decedent during the 14 years just preceding his death, when a partnership existed between them for those years, raises a presumption of payment in view of decedent's admission of the debt shortly before his death.

Gardner v Marquis, 224-458; 275 NW 493

Administrator supporting sister's claim—not fraud. Testimony by an administrator in support of a sister's claim against estate does not amount to fraud.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Improper joinder of claims. One who files a claim for a simple money demand against the estate of a deceased may not join in the probate proceedings actions against other parties for the same claim for which the estate is alleged to be liable.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

11963 Hearing—trial by jury.

ANALYSIS

I JURISDICTION OF CLAIMS
II TRIAL AND ALLOWANCE BY COURT

Counterclaims. See under §11889, Vol I Court findings as jury verdict generally. See under §11435, 11531

I JURISDICTION OF CLAIMS

Proper transfer to equity. A claim in probate is properly transferred to the equity docket for trial on a showing that a confidential relation existed between claimant and the deceased, and that deceased had fraudulently concealed from claimant the existence of certain trust funds belonging to claimant, and had failed to account therefor.

In re Sibert, 220-971; 263 NW 5

Nontransferability to equity. A simple, unsecured claim for money, filed against an estate by the surviving widow, is not, against the objections of the administrator, transferable to equity for trial. So held as to a claim due the widow under an alleged antenuptial contract.

In re Mason, 223-179; 272 NW 88

Belated filing—equitable proceeding. While establishing a probate claim is a law proceeding, the determination of the existence of peculiar circumstances relieving the failure to file a probate claim within the statutory period is an equitable proceeding.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Federal courts—probate claims—jurisdiction from diversity of citizenship. Tho proceedings for settlement of an estate may be pending in a state court, the federal courts may on account of diversity of citizenship assume jurisdiction to determine the validity of claims against the estate.

RFC v Dingwell, 224-1172; 278 NW 281

II TRIAL AND ALLOWANCE BY COURT

Claims—form and contents—technical rules of pleading nonapplicable. Probate claims need not be stated with the same degree of care required in ordinary pleading, nor conform to the technical rules of pleading.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Weight and sufficiency—testimony incapable of direct contradiction—credibility tested. Where the only person who can deny the testimony of a witness is dead, it is incumbent on the court to look upon such testimony with great jealousy and to weigh it in the most scrupulous manner to see what is the character and position of the witness generally, and whether he is corroborated to such an extent as to secure confidence that he is telling the truth.

Peterson v Citizens Bank, 228- ; 290 NW 546

Pleading—burden of proof. An executor must sustain his plea of payment of a claim filed in probate.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

Amount of proof. A claim against an estate triable at law is established by a fair preponderance of the testimony, and reversible error results from instructing that such claim must be established only by "strict and satisfactory" proof.

In re Dolmage, 204-231; 213 NW 380

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

Appeal — non de novo hearing. Claims against an estate are triable at law. Consequently, on appeal, an allowance by the probate court will not be disturbed if it is not excessive and has support in the evidence.

Anderson Est. v Stason, 216-1017; 250 NW 183

Equity proceeding to establish heirs—triable de novo. In a probate proceeding to assist administrator to determine heirs of intestate, it being determined upon appeal from (1) the form of the pleadings as prescribed in equity (2) the record of proceedings indicating use of equitable powers, (3) the reception of evidence under equitable procedure, and (4) rulings of the court reserved as in equity, that such proceeding, having been conducted in a manner wholly foreign to procedure at law, was tried in equity and therefore was triable de novo on appeal.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Allowance of claims—conclusiveness. The allowance of a claim by the probate court on supporting testimony is conclusive on the appellate court, even tho the supporting testimony is not wholly satisfactory to the judicial mind.

Olson v Roberts, 218-410; 255 NW 461

Supported findings of trial court. The finding and judgment of trial court on claim against decedent's estate has the effect of a jury verdict and may not be set aside if it finds any substantial support in the record.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Payments applied on debts due—presumption. In a probate action to establish claim for housekeeping services rendered to decedent, where decedent promised to pay claimant small amounts from time to time to cover cost of her clothing and personal expenses, with an additional amount upon his death out of his estate, it would be presumed that small payments made by decedent in his lifetime were to be applied on debts which were due for such expenses, no showing having been made to the contrary.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Payment specially pleaded—burden of proof—jury question. In probate action to establish claim for services rendered to decedent under an express agreement, where defendant specially pleaded a defense of payment as a part of a different contract of employment, the burden rested upon defendant to establish such different contract, including payment, and, if evidence justified, it was the duty of the court to submit the issue to the jury, but, where defendant's evidence is also consistent with and does not negative plaintiff's claim as to her express contract, it is admissible and proper to be considered by the jury as tending to show that the present claim was an after-thought, or that claimant had failed under suitable circumstances to advance the demand now relied upon, and as tending to support defendant's theory of the nature of her employment. However, such evidence failed to establish the specially pleaded defense of payment, and the court's failure to submit the question of payment to the jury was not erroneous.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Services rendered to decedent—evidence of agreement admissible—jury question. In probate action where a claimant seeks to recover for services rendered to decedent under an express contract, the performance of such services must have been induced by a proposal and must have been in accordance therewith. Testimony by a witness to a conversation with decedent, who stated that he intended to see that claimant was properly cared for, that he would give her spending money (the little she would need), and at the end of his life he would leave her a home, was admissible and proper evidence for the jury to consider on question of whether or not there was any such arrangement or agreement. What the parties agreed to must be determined by the jury.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Substitution of administrator—judgment—effect. A plaintiff who, upon the death of the defendant, prosecutes his claim to judgment by substituting the defendant's administrator as defendant, simply accomplishes a legal adjudication of his claim against the estate. Plaintiff, by such procedure, does not obtain any lien on the real property belonging to the estate.

Marion Bank v Smith, 205-203; 217 NW 857

Judgment—recitals not an adjudication. Recitals in the nondecretal portions of a foreclosure decree that the wife of the maker of the note in question was an accommodation maker are not evidence in a subsequent hearing in probate on the wife's claim against the estate that she was such accommodation maker, especially when the foreclosure order left such question open for future determination.

In re Cohen, 216-649; 246 NW 780

Clerk's or executor's allowance not final adjudication. The allowance of a claim against an estate by the clerk of the probate court does not result in a final adjudication at the end of a year under a statute permitting objections to the clerk's orders to be filed within a year, as there is no adjudication of a claim against an estate allowed by the clerk or an executor or administrator until it has been passed upon by the court.

In re Baker, 226-1071; 285 NW 641

Final report—claims overlooked. A claim against an estate, duly verified and filed, and not allowed or disallowed by the administrator, cannot be deemed adjudicated by an order approving the final report of the administrator when the claim, the claimant and his representative were, by mistake and oversight, wholly overlooked both in said final report and in the notice of hearing thereon. It follows that an equitable action will lie, subsequent to said approval, to open up the estate and to allow the claim.

Harding v Troy, 217-775; 252 NW 521

Unimpeached and uncontradicted testimony. The positive and wholly uncontradicted testimony of an unimpeached and disinterested witness that he saw the purported maker of a promissory note sign it, plus the unqualified opinion of a competent and unimpeached witness to the effect that the signature to the note was genuine, justifies a directed verdict when the genuineness of the signature is the sole issue.

In re Work, 212-31; 233 NW 28

Directed verdict. On the question whether a verdict should be directed in favor of a claimant, the record may present such circumstances that some consideration should be given to the fact that the claim is against the estate of a deceased.

In re Talbott, 204-363; 213 NW 779

Evidence of express contract for services—jury question. In probate action to establish claim against estate based on express contract, where evidence that claimant acted as housekeeper, assisted with clerical work, and performed other duties about the farm for decedent, pursuant to his agreement to pay her a small amount sufficient to cover cost of her clothing and other personal expenses, and in addition thereto to compensate her out of his estate at his decease in such amount as would be in excess of any amount she could earn teaching school, a jury question was presented as to the existence of an enforceable contract and as to its nature.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Submission of issue. The issue of the "net value" of an estate is properly submitted on evidence showing the gross value, all contested and pending claims and the facts attending the same, and the amount of the debts.

In re Anderson, 203-985, 213 NW 567

Assets sufficient tho dissipated—immediate payment order proper. Probate hearing disclosing that administrator should possess funds sufficient to pay, among other things, all third-class claims justifies not only allowance of a bona fide third-class claim, but an order for its immediate payment.

In re Davie, 224-1177; 278 NW 616

Valid probate claim—no duty to interpose limitation statute. An administrator is not required to resist a valid existing claim nor interpose the statute of limitations against a claim he believes is just.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Claim based on book of accounts. Where claimant's evidence of loan of $1,000 based on book of accounts is held inadmissible, testimony of payment of interest and admission of existence of loan by decedent standing alone, held insufficient to prove all facts necessary to establish claim against estate of decedent, as required by statute.

In re Cummins, 226-1207; 286 NW 409

Finding of duplication in claims. Since appellant-claimant failed to challenge finding of trial court that two claims against a decedent's estate based on a note and a loan were a duplication, the sufficiency of other grounds of judgment disallowing claim for the loan was immaterial.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Probate claimant for services—incompetency as witness. In probate action to establish a claim against an estate based on an express contract for services rendered to decedent, claimant could not testify as to existence of contract.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Instruction—agreement with decedent—claimant incompetent to testify. In probate action to establish a claim based upon an express agreement of decedent that claimant's services should be paid for from decedent's estate, an instruction that claimant was not permitted to testify as to agreement between her and decedent, and that if any agreement was in fact made between the parties, it must be proved by testimony other than that of claimant, was not prejudicial to defendant in that jury would believe that it applied to the communication of the contract to claimant through her father, who had been informed by decedent as to the nature of the agreement—there being other testimony of the communication, and the trial court having excluded the testimony of the father after objection of defendant.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Instruction on "stated" amount for alleged services rendered to decedent. In probate claimant's action reciting decedent's agreement to pay to claimant for services from decedent's estate an amount more than claimant could expect to make teaching school, a reference by trial court in its instructions to decedent's agreement to pay a "stated amount per month" was not objectionable where, under allegations of claim there could be no recovery unless jury found that there was an agreement to pay a stated amount, and where there was evidence as to amount stated or fixed by decedent. The word "stated" means no more than determined, fixed, or settled, and was properly used in the instruction.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Harmless error. In proceeding on claim against a decedent's estate for an alleged loan, trial court erred in holding that claimant's wife was an incompetent witness as to conversation with decedent wherein he stated that "they should get around to make a note for the $500 he gave him". However, since court also found in effect that such evidence would not have been sufficiently definite to establish the claim, such error was not prejudicial.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

Harmless error—submission of dual controlling propositions. In an action for services rendered a deceased, prejudicial error does not result from submitting to the jury the interrogatories (1) whether there was an express contract for payment, and (2) whether there was a mutual expectation between the parties to pay and receive pay for the services, even tho the express contract was established beyond doubt.

In re Willmott, 215-546; 243 NW 634

Interrogatories—stated or agreed amount—services rendered to decedent. In probate action to establish a claim for services rendered to decedent, wherein the court submitted two interrogatories to the jury to determine (1) amount per month, if any, decedent agreed to pay claimant out of his estate at his decease, and (2) whether amount per month was to be paid for 9 or 12 months of each year, the interrogatories being submitted under an instruction to be answered in event jury found for claimant and not to be answered if verdict was for defendant, such instruction was not erroneous, since, before interrogatories could be answered, the jury must have found under the evidence that there was a stated or agreed amount, and the findings therein conformed to the verdict.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Improper joinder in probate. One who files a claim for a simple money demand against the estate of a deceased may not join in the probate proceedings actions against other parties for the same claim for which the estate is alleged to be liable.

Ontjes v McNider, 218-1356; 256 NW 277

Administrator supporting sister's claim—not fraud. Testimony by an administrator in support of a sister's claim against estate does not amount to fraud.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Nonfraudulent allowance — conclusiveness. A daughter's claim on promissory notes against her father's estate upon which there was a hearing to the court, at which hearing the administrator, her brother, appeared personally and by counsel, and at the conclusion of which judgment was entered allowing the claim, altho it was apparent to the court from the face of the notes that the statute of limitations had run, is a situation where the allowance will not be disturbed on appeal without a showing of fraud upon the court. Held, fraud not shown.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Proof—legal conclusion of fraud—no defense. In an action on an administrator's bond, the surety's pleading of a legal conclusion of fraud between administrator and a claimant will not constitute a defense.

In re Davie, 224-1177; 278 NW 616

Peculiar circumstances excusing service of notice of hearing. Altho claimant is executor's wife, peculiar circumstances excusing a claimant's failure to serve notice of hearing may be found in evidence showing that the claim was filed within six months from executor's appointment, that executor told claimant he had knowledge of the matters upon which the claim was based, and that it would be unnecessary to serve notice. Suspicious circumstances surrounding the claim are to be considered in the trial of the claim on its merits.

In re Hill, 225-527; 281 NW 500

Consideration—claim in probate. On a wife's claim against her deceased, divorced husband's estate, a promissory note expressly stating a consideration, which, however, is invalid to support the claim, will not under §9440, C., '35, import a valid consideration, so as to generate a jury question. Section 9440, C., '35, was not intended to furnish the consideration but only import it when not stated, which in any event could not be different than that stated in the contract.

In re Straka, 224-109; 275 NW 490

Allowance — unallowable setting aside. An allowance by the court of a claim in probate, after issue is joined thereon and after due hearing, becomes a final adjudication in the absence of fraud or collusion and may not thereafter be set aside without hearing or evidence.

Distribution of estate—disaffirmance by minor. A void order of the probate court authorizing the executor to satisfy a cash bequest to a minor by transferring a note and mortgage to the father of the minor as the latter's natural guardian may be disaffirmed and repudiated by the minor on reaching his majority.

Irwin v Bank, 218-477; 255 NW 671

Payment of claim after final report. Instead of opening up an estate, after final report and discharge, for the allowance and payment of an overlooked claim, the court may accomplish the same result by allowing the claim and ordering it paid from funds derived from the sale of lands under pending partition proceedings.

Harding v Troy, 217-775; 252 NW 521

Calculating administrator's assets—conclusiveness. Altho based upon calculations, the finding of a probate court in a claim allowance hearing, based upon evidence, that an administrator has or should have sufficient funds to pay a claim, is an adjudication conclusive against attack that the calculations were wrong.

In re Davie, 224-1177; 278 NW 616

Verdict contrary to evidence—no review if first raised on appeal. In an action to establish a claim against an estate for serum, virus, and veterinary supplies furnished to decedent over a term of eight years, argument on appeal that the verdict denying the claim was contrary to the evidence and should be set aside cannot be considered when not raised by appropriate procedure in the lower court.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Unliquidated demand set off against court costs. On a motion by an administrator to tax court costs against a defeated claimant in probate, the latter may not have a duly filed but unliquidated claim in his favor and against the estate adjudicated and set off against said costs and a judgment rendered against the estate for the excess.

Declarations of heirs and devisees—admissibility. Where there are several devisees or legatees whose interests are several and not joint, the declarations of one are not admissible for the reason that they might operate to the prejudice of the others. In general, the admissions of an heir are not admissible to prove a claim against an estate unless he is

Heir's assignment of interest subject to estate claims—rights of assignee. In a probate proceeding where one of the heirs, who is indebted to the estate, purchases a farm from the executor and assigns her one-tenth interest in the estate as security for a purchase note to the executor, who in turn assigns the note to a third party, held, that such assignment of interest is taken subject to the estate claims, and whatever interest remains should be paid to the holder of the note irrespective of the fact the executor is also indebted to the estate on his final account.

Foreclosure against estate. In an equity foreclosure action on a realty note and mortgage, where administrators were defendants and the petition prayed for judgment and for general equitable relief, and where the foreclosure decree established a claim against administrators of the estate of deceased owner, to which decree objection was made that the relief granted in establishing such claim was greater than the prayer of petition, held, judgment against the administrators, if proper, could have been in no other form than as a claim established against the estate, and could not be enforced by execution.

Federal Bank v Ditto, 227-475; 288 NW 618

11966 Referees.

Set-off or retainer against beneficiary. In probate proceedings wherein a beneficiary is indebted to the estate, the right of set-off or retainer is not restricted to a court of equity, but rests upon wholesome principles of right and justice which can be administered in probate courts without the aid of a court of conscience.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Set-off or retainer—executor's equitable right—nonstatutory. In probate proceedings the right which the executor or an administrator has, in the nature of a right of retainer, to set off debts owing by a beneficiary of an estate against his share therein, is an equitable right of its own nature, and not at all dependent upon any statute.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

"Worthier title" rule re executor's set-off or retainer. In probate proceedings, before the "worthier title" rule can be applied where property is left to testator's heirs by will in the same manner and proportion in which they would have taken were there no will, it must definitely appear that there is exact identity in every way, and where testator definitely directs that real estate be converted into personality and then divided equally among his children, each beneficiary receiving all personality and no real estate, held, a beneficiary of such estate did not take her interest by "worthier title" so as to preclude executor from exercising the right of retainer against the beneficiary's interest which is assigned as security for a note for purchase of real estate by beneficiary—it being immaterial whether beneficiary is solvent or insolvent.

11969 Expenses of funeral—allowance to widow.

Funeral expenses—priority. Funeral expenses of a deceased are accorded a preference in payment from the estate of the deceased over all other claims except the expense of administering the estate. No such preference is accorded to the funeral expenses of other members of the family.

In re Porter, 212-29; 236 NW 108

Nonallowable against insurance proceeds. In re Galloway, 222-159; 269 NW 7

Priority of widow. In the distribution of the proceeds of real estate sold in order to pay the debts and charges against an estate, the widow must be first paid (1) the amount personally advanced by her as expenses of administration (she being executrix), (2) the amount of her distributive share in the land sold, and (3) the amount allowed by the court for the maintenance of herself and children for the statutory year.

Carlson v Layman, 214-114; 241 NW 457

Marriage settlements—sum payable not a preferred claim. The parties to an antenuptial contract which simply and generally provides that the wife shall, on the death of the husband, "be paid" a named sum by the latter's personal representative, will not be deemed to have intended that in the settlement of the estate of the husband, the said sum to be paid the wife should have priority over third and fourth class claims. In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Share of heir as mere contract claim—how paid. Where the share or interest of a child in the estate of his or her alleged parent takes the form of a mere contract obligation against the estate, the child becomes a mere claimant against the estate and is payable as such, and not from the mere residue of the estate. So held where the parentage was in issue and was compromised by a court-approved agreement wherein the executor agreed, on behalf of the estate, (1) to set up a specified trust fund, the annuity of which was to be payable to said child during its lifetime, and (2) annually to pay said annuity to said child until the trust fund was actually set up.

ANALYSIS

I SCOPE AND NATURE OF LIMITATION II EQUITABLE RELIEF AGAINST STATUTORY BAR

Claims against estate generally. See under §11957

I SCOPE AND NATURE OF LIMITATION

Trial—proper transfer to equity. A claim in probate is properly transferred to the equity docket for trial on a showing that a confidential relation existed between claimant and the deceased, and that deceased had fraudulently concealed from claimant the existence of certain trust funds belonging to claimant, and had failed to account therefor.

In re Sibert, 220-971; 263 NW 5

Belated filing—equitable proceeding. While establishing a probate claim is a law proceeding, the determination of the existence of peculiar circumstances relieving the failure to file a probate claim within the statutory period is an equitable proceeding.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Ruling on equitable circumstances—not appealable. In probate on a hearing to determine whether or not peculiar circumstances exist to relieve claimant of the bar of the statute for failure to file claim within statutory period, an order finding the existence of such circumstances and entitling claimant to a trial on the merits of such claim is not appealable as a "final order" nor "an intermediate order involving the merits or materially affecting the final decision."

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Filing—when unnecessary. A specific direction by a testator that his estate pay a mortgage on property devised by him works a dual result, to wit: first, that the mortgage becomes a claim against the estate, and second, renders unnecessary a filing of a claim by the mortgagee.

In re Glandon, 219-1094; 260 NW 12

Heirs' title under will—nonnecessity to file claim. A controversy over the ownership of property devised or bequeathed in a will is properly determinable in equity, and devisees or legatees of such property need not file claims against the estate therefor.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

Failure to file—when enforceable against heir. A claim arising under a bond wherein the surety binds "his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives", and arising after the death of said surety and the due settlement of his estate, is enforceable:

1. Against the property received by an heir, as such, from said ancestor-surety, and
2. Against the property passing from said ancestor and owned by said heir under conveyance for which he paid nothing, and
3. Against the heir, personally, for the value of the property so received if he has consumed it. And this is true even tho, necessarily, said claim was not filed against the estate of said surety.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Premature filing—curing defect.

In re Prunty, 201-670; 207 NW 785

Belated filing—neglect. A claim against a solvent and unsettled estate is absolutely barred when not filed, because of the mere neglect of the claimant or his attorney, until after the lapse of the statutory 12 months.

Simpson v Burnham, 209-1108; 229 NW 679
New London Bk. v McKee, 213-1248; 238 NW 464

Fatally delayed presentation. A claim arising out of a partnership is wholly barred against the solvent and unsettled estate of one of the partners when in no manner presented against said estate until several years after the expiration of the year for the presentation of such claims, and no explanation or reason is given for such delay.

Williams v Schee, 214-1181; 243 NW 529

Filing "within 12 months". Conceding, arguing, that in the settlement of an estate, the statute of limitation commences to run from the date of the last newspaper publication, yet, when the last publication was on April 16, 1931, a claim filed April 16, 1932, is not filed "within 12 months from the giving of the notice" as provided by this section.

First JSL Bank v Terbell, 217-624; 252 NW 769

County's claim for insane support. County's maintenance claim against estate of deceased who was inmate of state insane hospital is a general claim, and notice of hearing thereon must be served on the administrator within 12 months after notice of his appointment as provided by statute.

In re Wagner, 226-667; 284 NW 485

Amendment setting up new cause of action—statute of limitation. A claim in probate bottomed on a judgment on a bond, and a so-called amendment thereto bottomed on the bond itself, present different causes of action, and if the amended claim is filed after the statute of limitation has run it is barred notwithstanding the original filing.

In re Skiles, 210-935; 229 NW 235

Contingent liabilities. A contingent claim based on a guaranty by a deceased of payment of an unmaturred promissory note is barred if not filed against the estate within 12 months from the giving of notice of the appointment of administrator.

Nichols v Harsh, 202-117; 209 NW 297

Escheat proceedings—notice to claimants—nonwaiver of required filing time. Administrator's notice to possible claimants and heirs in escheat proceedings given in pursuance to court order did not, in effect, amount to a waiver of statute of limitations as to filing claims in probate nor constitute a new invitation to creditors to file claims.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

Independent action reopening estate—judgment appealable. A judgment for plaintiff in a separate, independent action in equity brought, not against an administrator but against the surviving spouse and heir, seeking to set aside the order in probate approving the final report and closing the estate, is such final judgment as will entitle the defendant to appeal.

Federal Bk. v Bonnett, 226-112; 284 NW 97

I SCOPE AND NATURE OF LIMITATION
—concluded

Erroneously reopened estate—belated claim allowed—reversal. A judgment allowing a claim against a reopened estate must be reversed on appeal when it develops that the court was in error in reopening the estate and allowing the claim to be filed after it was barred by the statute. The defendant-administratrix was not a party to the action reopening the estate.

Federal Bk. v Bonnett, 226-126; 284 NW 105

Demurrer conclusive as to liability. A ruling sustaining a demurrer in mortgage foreclosure proceeding on the ground that the estate of the mortgagor is not personally liable on the mortgage because of the failure of the mortgagee to file said claim against the estate within the time provided by statute, constitutes a final adjudication of such nonliability when plaintiff neither pleads over nor appeals from the ruling.

Oates v College, 217-1059; 252 NW 783; 91 ALR 563

Discrediting own witness—claimant against estate. A claimant against an estate who puts the administratrix on the stand as his witness may not discredit her by attempting to show that she tried to deceive him as to the fact of decedent's death so that his claim against the estate would be barred.

Federal Bk. v Bonnett, 226-112; 284 NW 97

Liabilities on bonds—avoidance by fraud. Sureties on the bond of a deceased executor are liable for a shortage in the latter's accounts, even tho no claim for said shortage is made against the estate of said deceased executor. It follows that if claim is made against the estate of the deceased executor, and the amount of the shortage is adjudicated (but not paid) the sureties are bound thereby, even tho the administrator of the deceased executor's estate failed to plead that the claim was barred by the statute of limitation, such failure to so plead not being a fraud as to said sureties.

In re Kessler, 213-633; 239 NW 555

Notice of hearing when claimant dies. When service of notice of hearing of a fourth-class claim in probate is not had within the required 12 months because of the death of claimant, then claimant's estate may cause said service to be made but must do so within a reasonable time after it has an executor or administrator who can act; and such reasonable time will, ordinarily, be limited to a time not longer than that which claimant had when he died.

Lucas v Ruden, 220-494; 260 NW 60

Order to sell real estate in auxiliary citation proceedings. Where an administrator after a citation proceeding instituted by an assignee of a probate claim is directed to file an application to sell real estate to pay a claim on a promissory note, long recognized and partly paid from other funds by a former administrator, the granting of the order to sell real estate held by the heirs is erroneous when the heirs were not made parties to the citation application and when, in resistance to the application, the heirs show that no timely notice of hearing on the claim was served and no excuse given for such failure.

In re Jackson, 225-359; 280 NW 563

Stockholder in bank—double liability—how enforced. A claim by the receiver of an insolvent state bank for the statutory, superadded, contingent liability on capital stock (§9251, C., '35) need not, as to the liability of a stockholder who has died prior to the insolvency of the bank, be filed as a claim against the stockholder's estate. Such claim may be enforced by action against the executor or administrator as such.

Bates v McGill, 223-62; 272 NW 535

II EQUITABLE RELIEF AGAINST STATUTORY BAR

Equitable relief. Whether equitable relief will be granted is a question for the court.

Peterson v Johnson, 205-16; 212 NW 138

Failure to give notice of appointment of administrator—effect.

Spicer v Administrator, 201-99; 202 NW 604

Constructive notice—peculiar circumstances. When an administrator gives proper notice of its appointment, claimants are held to have constructive notice thereof, and a claim filed nearly two years after notice of publication may be properly dismissed in the absence of any showing of peculiar circumstances entitling claimant to equitable relief.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

Ex parte hearing—jurisdiction. The probate court has no jurisdiction, on an ex parte hearing, to find and order that a belated claimant against an estate has an equitable excuse for not having filed the claim until long after the year for filing claims has expired, and that the executor is estopped to question such belated filing.

Storie v Dist. Court, 204-847; 216 NW 25

Statute liberally construed. The statute bars claims filed against an estate more than one year after the administrator serves notice of appointment, but being remedial, and liberally construed to effectuate justice, belated filing of claims is permitted on a showing of peculiar circumstances.

Federal Bk. v Bonnett, 226-112; 284 NW 97

Noticing claim for hearing—fatal delay. Failure of a claimant against an estate to offer any evidence of any peculiar circumstance equitably excusing his failure to serve timely and legal notice of hearing on his duly filed but unallowed fourth-class claim, deprives him of all right to be relieved from the resulting bar of the statute of limitation.

Meier v Briggs' Est., 221-482; 265 NW 189

Negligence precludes equitable relief. Negligence of a fourth-class claimant in probate in filing his claim and serving notice of hearing thereon bars all equitable relief even tho no element of estoppel accompanies such negligence.

Lucas v Ruden, 220-494; 260 NW 60

Claimant's excuse for want of diligence. Claimant, on failure to file claim in probate within the limited period prescribed by statute, can only be granted equitable relief by pleading and showing adequate excuse for want of diligence.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

Equitable relief denied. A claim not filed against an estate within 12 months as provided by statute is wholly barred notwithstanding the fact (1) that the estate is solvent, and (2) that the estate will suffer no legal prejudice because of the belated filing, when claimant had actual knowledge of the administration some three months prior to the expiration of the year provided for the filing of claims.

First JSL Bk. v Terbell, 217-624; 252 NW 769

Allowance and payment of claims—solvent and unsettled condition as factor. Where a claim is sought to be filed against an estate after the lapse of one year after the administrator gives notice of his appointment, the fact that the estate is then solvent and unsettled is material to show that no one will be injured provided claimant can establish the statutory special circumstances justifying the belated filing.

Chicago NW Ry. v Moss, 210-491; 231 NW 344; 71 ALR 936

Belated filing of claim. Fact that estate is solvent and not yet closed does not constitute such peculiar circumstances as to entitle claimant to equitable relief for failure to file claim within 12 months as required by statute.

In re Wagner, 226-667; 284 NW 485

Peculiar circumstances. That an estate is open and solvent, and that the claim is just, are not "peculiar circumstances" within the meaning of the statute prescribing the time within which probate claims must be filed.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

Equitable circumstances—solvency of estate. The peculiar circumstances which will entitle a claimant against an estate to the equitable relief of filing and prosecuting his claim after the year for settling the estate has expired, must be something more than the circumstance that the estate is solvent and unsettled tho said latter fact is material as showing that other creditors will not be prejudiced by the belated filing.

Anthony v Wagner, 216-571; 246 NW 748

Unsettled estate. The fact that an estate is solvent and unsettled does not constitute, in and of itself, such peculiar circumstances as will entitle a creditor to file his claim against the estate after the expiration of the statutory 12 months period for filing claims in probate. There must be a showing of diligence in the matter or a showing of permissible excuse for the want of such diligence.

Anderson v Storie, 208-1172; 227 NW 93; 66 ALR 1410

Claim barred tho estate solvent. The fact that an estate is closed and solvent, while entitled to consideration, is not of itself sufficient to warrant the court in allowing a claim barred for want of timely notice of hearing on the claim; diligence must appear.

In re Jackson, 225-359; 280 NW 563

Fatally delayed filing. The fact that the holder of an unpaid draft, voluntarily and on his own motion, first files his claim with the receiver of the insolvent drawer-bank (commendably but secretly intending thereby to lessen the damages to a guarantor of the payment of the draft), presents no statutory special circumstance justifying claimant in filing his claim against the estate of said guarantor four years after the administrator had given due notice of his appointment, even tho the estate is then unsettled and solvent.

Chicago NW Ry. v Moss, 210-491; 231 NW 344; 71 ALR 936

Equitable relief—insufficient showing. The fact that a claimant in probate neglected or failed to discover the requirements of the law of this state relative to the time of filing claims until the statutory time had expired is wholly insufficient as a basis for equitable relief,—said claimant not being misled in any manner by those managing the estate.

In re Palmer, 212-21; 236 NW 58

Belated filing—insufficient justification. A claimant in probate must justify his neglect to file and serve notice of his claim within the statutory one year. He signally fails by showing (1) that his claim is just, (2) that the estate is solvent and unsettled, (3) that he expected the deceased to satisfy his claim by a testamentary provision and consequently was searching for a will, and (4) that he also relied on an indefinite talk with the administrator as to when the year expired and as to the administrator formally preparing the claim.

Taylor v Jackson, 213-844; 239 NW 519

Belated filing as afterthought. A showing that the filing of a claim against an estate

II EQUITABLE RELIEF AGAINST STATUTORY BAR—continued

long after the time fixed by statute is an afterthought based on a change of attitude by claimant as to the adequacy of the security held by him, is quite conclusive against his right to make such belated filing; and it is quite immaterial that the claim is just and the estate solvent.

Doyle v Jennings, 210-853; 229 NW 853

Belated presentation. An application to file a claim against an estate long after the expiration of the time provided by statute is properly denied (1) when claimant at all times knew that the estate was being settled, and (2) when claimant manifestly intended, at one time, to rely solely on his security, and sought to file his claim as the result of a belated afterthought.

Schram v Kissinger, 201-324; 207 NW 355

Barred claim—death of claimant—effect. Where claimant duly filed his fourth-class claim in probate, and, without having served any notice of hearing, died shortly before the expiration of the year in which said notice should have been served, and where said year expired shortly before claimant's executor was appointed, held, that whatever force and effect the death of claimant might otherwise have had as a peculiar circumstance entitling claimant to equitable relief on his barred claim, was wholly lost by the negligence of claimant's executor, for at least 10 months, in failing to serve the omitted notice of hearing or to take any action relative to the claim.

Lucas v Ruden, 220-494; 260 NW 60

Belated filing—insufficient excuse for delay. A depositor in a private bank will not be permitted to file and prosecute his claim against the estate of a deceased partner, after the lapse of four years after notice of administration was given, on a showing that the executor soon after his appointment believed the bank as continued by the surviving partners was insolvent, and stipulated for the possible filing, at a later period, by the surviving partners, of a contingent claim against the estate, said stipulation not being shown to be fraudulent and not deceiving said depositor; especially is this true when the attempt of the depositor to file his claim was evidently an afterthought.

Anthony v Wagner, 216-571; 246 NW 748

Delayed filing—relief—insufficient showing. The liquidating receiver of an insolvent bank who makes no timely filing of a claim against the estate of a deceased debtor of the bank, presents no peculiar circumstances entitling him to equitable relief from said delay, by proof (1) that the property of said debtor had for years been under guardianship, (2) that he, the receiver, did not actually know that said debtor had died, and that said former guardian had been appointed administrator and had given due notice of his appointment and was settling the estate of his former ward, but, on the contrary, (3) that said receiver supposed that said debtor was alive, and supposed that said guardian was continuing to act as guardian, it appearing that the receiver was in no manner misled by the administrator—that the predicament of the receiver was due to his own lack of due diligence.

Bates v Remley, 223-654; 273 NW 180

Tardy claimant—insufficient showing. Peculiar circumstances entitling a tardy claimant to have a closed estate reopened are not found in (1) solvency of the estate, (2) traceability of assets, (3) diligence after receiving notice of decedent's death, (4) lack of knowledge of the death, (5) validity and justness of the claim when claimant had an agent living in the same small town with decedent and who had known him intimately for 40 years.

Federal Bk. v Bonnett, 226-112; 284 NW 97

Lack of actual knowledge not peculiar circumstances. When a claim in probate is not filed until two years after notice of appointment of administrator has been published, the fact that claimant did not have actual knowledge of the appointment of the administrator is not a peculiar circumstance entitling claimant to equitable relief under the statute barring claims not filed within the required time.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

County's claim for insane support—negligence in filing. Where county officials opened estate as creditor to collect county's claim against estate for maintenance of deceased in state insane hospital, and the county auditor was appointed administrator, the county's negligence in not filing the claim for more than four and one-half years did not constitute such peculiar circumstances as to entitle county to equitable relief for failure to file claim within 12 months under statute requiring filing within such time, in absence of peculiar circumstances excusing it.

In re Wagner, 226-667; 284 NW 485

Improper setting aside of bar. The peculiar circumstances which will justify the probate court in setting aside the one-year bar of the statute of limitation, on a claim in probate, must be such as to establish a preponderating equity in favor of the claimant. In other words, the equities of the estate of deceased must be considered as well as the equities of the claimant. So held where the claim was one secured by mortgage on property which, during the period of claimant's delay, had markedly decreased in value.

Berends v Brady, 219-522; 258 NW 752

Not entitled to hotchpot. A claimant against an estate who, by grace of the statute and by grace of the court, is permitted because of peculiar circumstances to file and prove his claim after the expiration of the 12 months given for the filing of claims, has no right, when the estate is found to be insolvent, to pursue other fourth-class claimants who have filed and had their claims allowed within said 12 months, and to recapture and to put in hotchpot the payments legally made to them in order that a new distribution may be made.

Elliott v Bank, 209-1258; 228 NW 274

Assessment on bank stock—liability of assets of settled estate. An assessment on corporate bank stock standing on the corporate bank books in the name of a deceased stockholder may, by an action in equity, be enforced against the assets comprising the estate of the deceased stockholder, tho the estate has been legally settled and closed, and the said assets have passed into the hands of a testamentary devisee, when the necessity for, and right to said assessment arose, and the assessment was made, long after the settlement of said estate.

Andrew v Bank, 219-1244; 260 NW 849

Operation of limitation bar—continuing liability accruing after death. For the liability of a decedent accruing against his estate on account of ownership of a bank, an action thereon, commenced within 5 years after the closing of the bank and appointment of a receiver, is neither barred by the general statute of limitation nor by the one-year limitation on filing claims against an estate, when peculiar circumstances concealed the estate's liability thereon.

Daniel v Best, 224-1348; 279 NW 374

Death of claimant's attorney—peculiar circumstances relieving barred claim. Where an attorney files a probate claim for a nonresident claimant, but dies one day before the expiration of the year and without serving a notice of hearing on such claim—claimant not learning of his attorney's death until later, and tho then delaying several months while his new attorney negotiated with the estate, held to have shown peculiar circumstances entitling him to equitable relief considering the estate was still unsettled and solvent.

Hagen v Nielsen, 225-127; 279 NW 94; 281 NW 356

False promise of payment. Failure to file a claim against a solvent and unsettled estate within the statutory one year is amply excused on a showing that the executor paid part of the claim and stated to claimant that the filing of the claim was unnecessary because the balance of the claim would be paid.

Smallwood v O'Bryan, 208-785; 225 NW 848

Misconduct of administrator—promise to pay. Failure to serve notice of hearing on a fourth-class claim on an administrator, within the 12 months period, bars the claim unless peculiar circumstances exist tending to excuse the failure. Alleged, but unproven fraud, collusion, and misconduct of the administrator and heirs do not constitute such peculiar circumstances, nor does a mere promise by the administrator to pay excuse the failure to serve the notice of hearing on the claim.

In re Jackson, 225-359; 280 NW 563

Ignorance of death. The fact that a claimant against an unsettled and solvent estate does not know, and has no reason to know, that the debtor has died, is such peculiar statutory circumstance as justifies (1) the prompt filing of the claim after learning of the death, and (2) the granting of equitable relief.

In re Helmts, 203-503; 211 NW 234

Ill health. Ill health will not necessarily constitute such peculiar circumstances as will justify the granting of equitable relief from failure to file claims within the statutory one-year period.

Peterson v Johnson, 205-16; 212 NW 138

Misleading circumstances. The holder of a claim against an unsettled and solvent estate will be permitted to file and prove his claim after the expiration of 12 months from the giving of notice by the administrator (1) when he had never visited the place where the deceased did business, and lived a great distance therefrom, (2) when his claim is "contingent", (3) when he justifiably believed, and was led to believe, that his claim was against a banking corporation, and (4) when he finally discovered that the assumed bank was only a "trade name", and that the deceased was the sole owner of the business, and the real contingent debtor.

Nichols v Harsh, 202-117; 209 NW 297

Supported allowance conclusive. Support for an order allowing, against an estate, a fourth-class claim filed after the expiration of the year for such filing, is found in a showing that, until shortly prior to said filing, the creditor was laboring under an apparently excusable mistake as to the identity of his debtor. Therefore, said allowance, being in a proceeding at law and having support in the record, cannot be set aside by the appellate court.

In re Turner, 219-30; 257 NW 443

Peculiar circumstances excusing service of notice of hearing. Altho claimant is executor's wife, peculiar circumstances excusing a claimant's failure to serve notice of hearing may be found in evidence showing that the claim was filed within six months from executor's appointment, that executor told claimant he had knowledge of the matters upon which the claim was based, and that it would be unnecessary to serve notice. Suspicious circumstances surrounding the claim are to be considered in the trial of the claim on its merits.

In re Hill, 225-527; 281 NW 500

II EQUITABLE RELIEF AGAINST STATUTORY BAR—concluded

Claim against proceeds of realty. An equity petition which alleged that widow elected to take under will devising to her a life estate, with the right to dispose of realty for her necessary support, and which prayed that a claim for support of widow, pursuant to a contract with her, be established and declared a lien against the realty, was held to plead sufficient facts, and, together with the evidence in the case, was sufficient to warrant its submission.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Escheat proceedings—notice to claimants—nonwaiver of required filing time for claims. Administrator's notice to possible claimants and heirs in escheat proceedings given in pursuance to court order did not, in effect, amount to a waiver of statute of limitations as to filing claims in probate nor constitute a new invitation to creditors to file claims.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

11973 Payment of claims—classes.

Payment to clerk—effect. Payment by an administrator to the clerk of the district court of the amount of an allowed claim is an authorized and legal payment and discharges the estate from further liability.

In re Nairn, 209-52; 227 NW 585

Specific devises—when resorted to. Specific devises cannot be resorted to for the payment of debts, in the settlement of an estate until all other property of the estate has been resorted to and exhausted.

In re Glandon, 219-1094; 260 NW 12

Payment of unfilled but valid claims. An executor will be credited with the amount of valid, enforceable claims paid by him, even tho such claims were not formally filed against the estate.

In re Bourne, 210-883; 232 NW 169

11976 Order of payment—dividends.

Unallowable payment in full. The act of the administratrix of an insolvent estate in applying estate funds to the full payment of a debt which is the personal obligation of both the deceased and the administratrix, is fundamentally unallowable. It follows that the creditor, by receiving such payment, becomes a trustee of the fund for the use and benefit of the estate, especially when he knew that the estate was insolvent.

Andrew v Bank, 217-69; 251 NW 23

Delivery of note an essential element—re-statement of common law. Section 9476, C., '35, providing that every contract on a negotiable instrument is incomplete and revocable until delivery of the instrument for the purpose of giving effect thereto, is a restatement of the common-law rule.

In re Martens, 226-162; 283 NW 885

11978 Delivery of specific legacies—security.

Property available for payment. Personal property of an estate will be first resorted to for the payment of the cost of administration; specific devises will be last resorted to.

In re Engels, 210-36; 230 NW 519

Specific devises. Specific devises cannot be resorted to for the payment of debts, in the settlement of an estate, until all other property of the estate has been resorted to and exhausted.

In re Glandon, 219-1094; 260 NW 12

Equal standing of specific devises. Neither of two different, specific devises of real estate, irrespective of their particular location or position in the will, can be deemed junior or inferior to the other when neither is made subject to the other.

In re Glandon, 219-1094; 260 NW 12

"Ademption" and "satisfaction" distinguished. Where a thing or fund which is the subject of a specific legacy has been extinguished, an "ademption" has occurred, whereas doctrine of "satisfaction" applies when the legacy is general, and depends largely, if not entirely, on the intent of the testator.

In re Keeler, 225-1349; 282 NW 362

Ademption—real estate for note and mortgage. A bequest is specific in a will where a note and real estate mortgage securing it were bequeathed to a son of testatrix, and the residuary estate was bequeathed to such son and her grandson; and cancellation by testatrix of the note and mortgage and the taking of title to such real estate in lieu thereof adeems the bequest as respects son's claim that subject matter of bequest still existed but was only changed in form.

In re Keeler, 225-1349; 282 NW 362

Contingent legacy—effect. Where a will provided that testator's niece should receive $1,000 (1) if the wife survived and did not take under will, or (2) if wife did not survive, and when the widow accepted the provisions of will giving her the personal property and a life estate in real estate, niece took nothing thereunder, since neither contingency arose.

Starr v Newman, 225-901; 281 NW 830

Trusts—construction—gift "when funds are available"—when due. Where a will and trust instrument, designed to support two trustors as long as either one of them lived, contains also a $5,000 gift for each of two named beneficiaries, payable as soon as funds are available, such gifts may not be paid until after the death of last trustor, when it appears uncertain from the encumbered status of the trusted property whether or not the property is adequate to provide the required support for last surviving trustor, and even then the gifts or legacies with interest thereon are not due until one year after death of the last trustor.

In re Jeffrey, 225-316; 280 NW 536

Realty bequest—value determined as of date of testator's death. Where, prior to his death, testator had given land of the value of $15,600 to four of his five children and directed his executors to purchase, for a daughter who had rejected partial distribution before his death, good Iowa land of the value of $15,600, the will, which was clear and definite as to the intention of testator, spoke as of date of testator's death, and the value of $15,600 fixed for land to be purchased for daughter was required to be determined as of the date of testator's death.

In re Holdorf, 227-977; 289 NW 756

Bequest—acceptance—district court's power to extend testator's limitation—effect. Where testator directed his executors to purchase, for a daughter, good Iowa land of the value of $15,600, such daughter having refused to accept partial distribution of realty to heirs prior to testator's death, but the testator also provided such bequest should lapse if daughter failed to select land within one year from testator's death, and where within one year the daughter filed application for extension of time on the ground that estate did not have funds to purchase such land, which extension was granted after due notice to executors and heirs, held, district court had jurisdiction to grant extension of time and, no appeal having been taken therefrom, the order became "final" and the heirs were bound by the decision.

In re Holdorf, 227-977; 289 NW 756

Offsetting debts of devisee or legatee. A legacy due an insolvent legatee, and the proceeds of lands devised to an insolvent devisee may, in the settlement of the estate, be retained by the executor to the extent that the insolvent legatee or devisee is indebted to the estate; and if necessary, the devised lands may, under appropriate application, be sold and the proceeds applied on said indebtedness, on the resulting costs, and on the inheritance tax, if any, due the state from the insolvent.

In re Flannery, 221-265; 264 NW 68

Withholding distribution. Where certain devisees were holding rents belonging to estate, trial court properly ordered that no distribution be made to them until such rents were turned over to the executrix.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

Bankruptcy of heir—remedy extinguished—debt to estate—offset. A discharge in bankruptcy of a legatee puts an end to the remedy on the debt of said heir to the estate and affords a complete defense to an action on the debt; however, the debt remains an asset of the estate and the discharge does not affect the right of retainer or offset.

In re Morgan, 226-68; 283 NW 267

11979 Money.

Legacy lapsing by death of legatee. A contingent legacy in favor of a daughter is created by a will which, after devising a life estate to testator's wife, devises certain land to a son on condition that "within one year" after the death of the wife the son shall pay his sister a named sum of money. In other words, the legacy to the daughter lapses by her death prior to the death of the mother.

In re Phearman, 211-1137; 232 NW 826; 82 ALR 674

Lapsing of legacy. A condition in a charitable bequest, that if the legatee takes no steps within a named time to augment said bequest the same shall revert to testator's estate, must be deemed a condition precedent and not a condition subsequent. It follows that said bequest lapses upon the expiration of said time if the legatee, with actual knowledge of the bequest, fails to signify any acceptance of the bequest, and fails to take any steps to augment said bequest.

In re Hillis, 215-1015; 247 NW 499

Ademption — presumption. A testator who bequeaths his property in equal shares to his children will be presumed to have intended to effect an ademption by voluntarily and on his own motion paying off, subsequent to the execution of his will, a debt owed wholly by one of the legatees, and in a proper proceeding the amount of such payment may be ordered set off against the share of said legatee.

In re Smith, 210-563; 231 NW 468

Satisfaction of legacy prior to death of testator. A general legacy provided for in a will is satisfied in toto when the testator, subsequent to the making of the will, pays to the legatee a lesser sum with intent to effect such satisfaction; and such payment and satisfaction may be established by extrinsic evidence.

Heileman v Dakan, 211-344; 233 NW 542

Equitable conversion and right to reconvert. When a testator directs that named real estate be sold by his executor and the entire proceeds be paid to a legatee, said legatee may make and enforce an election to take the real estate instead of the proceeds, especially when such election does not interfere with the rights and duties imposed on the executor.

In re Warner, 209-948; 229 NW 241

Stock dividend issued on previously earned surplus—conflicting claims. A legacy of "one thousand dollars par value of the capital stock" of a named corporation (being a part of the stock holding of the estate) entitles the legatee to a stock dividend declared and issued by the corporation subsequent to the death of testator on surplus earnings accumulated by the corporation prior to the death of testator; also to an ordinary cash dividend declared on the stock subsequent to testator's death and subsequent to the formal transfer of said stock to the legatee.

In re Etzel, 211-700; 234 NW 210

Gradual increase in value of corporate assets. A legatee who is unconditionally given for life the income arising from corporate stock is not entitled to receive, as income, any part of the principal of a liquidating dividend arising from the final dissolution of the corporation and sale of its assets, when said liquidating dividend reveals a very material increase in value of the original stock investment due to the gradual increase in value of corporate assets during the life of the corporation. Such liquidating dividend constitutes a part of the corpus of the estate, and passes to the remainderman, subject to the right of the life tenant to receive the income thereon—such being the manifest intent of the testator.

In re Etzel, 211-700; 234 NW 210

Right to offset debt of devisee. The amount which an insolvent testamentary devisee is owing to a solvent estate may, in partition proceedings, be offset against his interest in the real estate of testator, and such right is superior to the right of a judgment creditor who obtained his judgment against the devisee subsequent to the death of the testator.

Schultz v Locke, 204-1127; 216 NW 617

Right to offset debt of devisee. The amount which an insolvent testamentary devisee is owing to a solvent estate may be set off against the testamentary devisee to said devisee.

In re Mikkelsen, 202-842; 211 NW 254
Rodgers v Reinking, 205-1311; 217 NW 441
See Lusby v Wing, 207-1287; 224 NW 554
In re Rueschenberg, 213-639; 239 NW 529

Offsetting debts of insolvent heirs. The right to have the debts of an insolvent heir to an estate set off against his share in the estate is available against the insolvent's share of real estate as well as against his share of personal property.

Yungclas v Yungclas, 213-413; 239 NW 22

Setting off debt against heir's share. The right to have the debts of an insolvent heir to an estate set off against his share in the estate is available against the insolvent's share in real estate as well as against his share of personal property, when the share of the insolvent in the personal property of the estate is insufficient to discharge said debt.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361

Distributees—offsetting debts against share in estate. The amount of the indebtedness of a distributee, solvent or insolvent, to an estate, may be set off against his share in the personal property. If the personal property is insufficient, his share of the real estate may be set off against the debt, if the heir is insolvent.

In re Morgan, 226-68; 283 NW 267

Insolvent heir's debts offset against share in realty. The right to offset debts of an heir against his share of real estate exists only when the heir is insolvent. Evidence held insufficient to show heirs were insolvent.

Wilson v Wilson, 226-199; 283 NW 893

Lien for debts of devisee. A mortgage on real estate executed during the settlement of an estate, by the insolvent devisee of the land, is subject to the prior lien of the estate for the debts owing by the devisee to testator and contracted subsequent to the execution of the will.

Bell v Bell, 216-837; 249 NW 137

Liability of devisee to estate—antagonistic judgments—priority. The lien of a judgment obtained by an executor against an insolvent devisee for sums owing by the devisee to the estate (obtained in order to avoid unfairness to other equally-sharing devisees) is superior to the lien of a prior judgment against said devisee obtained by a general creditor, on lands acquired by the estate subsequent to both judgments.

Johnson v Smith, 210-591; 231 NW 470

Advancements to part of residuary legatees—deduction. Without special provision in the will therefor, an executor is in error in paying to himself, as a residuary legatee, $1,000 on the theory that the four other such legatees had each received advancements in that sum and that such payment was equivalent to charging off such advancements against the shares of the other legatees.

In re Morgan, 225-746; 281 NW 346

Loss of improperly created trust fund—reimbursement. Where an executor is devised a named sum of money in trust for a named person, and where the executor assumes to set aside or hold certain bank stock as said trust fund, which stock becomes worthless by the failure of the bank, the estate must make good the resulting loss (or pro rata if the estate is insufficient to pay all legacies) less any payments made to the cestui que trust.

In re Moe, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

Interest on unpaid legacy. An executor may be chargeable with interest on an unpaid cash legacy to a minor, even tho his actions have been in perfect good faith.

Irwin v Bank, 218-477; 255 NW 671

Renunciation of devise. The devisee of a cash remainder does not per se renounce said remainder by executing, with other devisees, a writing under which the signers severally contributed to the augmentation of said life devise and explain their action by stating their belief that the life beneficiary (an incompetent) should have said augmented sum "as his own".

Bare v Cole, 220-338; 260 NW 338

Unauthorized satisfaction of bequest. An order of the probate court authorizing an executor to discharge a cash bequest to a minor by transferring to the father of the minor as natural guardian a note and mortgage, belonging to the estate, is wholly void when said order is entered without the appearance of any guardian, regular or ad litem, for the minor.

Irwin v Bank, 218-477; 255 NW 671

Disaffirmance by minor. A void order of the probate court authorizing the executor to satisfy a cash bequest to a minor by transferring a note and mortgage to the father of the minor as the latter's natural guardian, may be disaffirmed and repudiated by the minor on reaching his majority.

Irwin v Bank, 218-477; 255 NW 671

Recovery of unpaid legacy. In an action by a testamentary legatee against an executor to recover an unpaid legacy, the executor, who has already distributed the estate and wishes to bring a third party into the action for recoupment purposes, must, at least, allege that said third party has received some portion of the estate in question.

Irwin v Bank, 218-961; 256 NW 681

Erroneous payments — recovery. Funds paid to legatees under an interlocutory but erroneous order for distribution may be recovered from the legatees to whom paid.

Dillinger v Steele, 207-20; 222 NW 564

Accrual of action. An action to recover estate funds paid out by an executor under an interlocutory but erroneous order for distribution accrues when the erroneous order is set aside and the executor is ordered to proceed to recover the erroneous payments.

Dillinger v Steele, 207-20; 222 NW 564

11980 Legacies—payment after twelve months.

Interest on unpaid legacy. Interest, but not compound interest, should be allowed on a legacy not paid when due.

In re Mann, 212-17; 235 NW 733

Interest. An estate is not liable to interest on a legacy when the legatee acquiesces in an agreed long delay in probating the will and accepts a collateral agreement for the payment of his legacy, and when no undue delay in probating the will under the agreement is made to appear.

In re Sharpless, 202-386; 210 NW 528

Designation of devisee. The fact that the name of the beneficiary of a religious or charitable trust as specified in a will is different from the name of the claimant of the devise becomes unimportant in the face of ample testimony that the designated beneficiary and the claimant are one and the same institution.

Ross v Seminary, 204-648; 215 NW 710

Renounced devise as intestate property. Where one of several residuary devisees wholly renounces his interest under the will, the portion so renounced becomes intestate property and necessarily descends under the statutory rules of descent. In other words, the non-renouncing residuary devisees do not necessarily take said renounced portion.

Lehr v Switzer, 213-658; 239 NW 564

Trusts—construction—trustor's life support—gift "when funds are available"—when due. Where a will and trust instrument, designed to support two trustors as long as either one of them lived, contains also a $5,000 gift for each of two named beneficiaries, payable as soon as funds are available, such gifts may not be paid until after the death of last trustor, when it appears uncertain from the encumbered status of the trusted property whether or not the property is adequate to provide the required support for last surviving trustor, and even then the gifts or legacies with interest thereon are not due until one year after death of the last trustor.

In re Jeffrey, 225-316; 280 NW 536

11981 Order of paying legacies.

Pro rata distribution—procedure. In determining the pro rata payments to be made on legacies in an estate which proves insufficient to pay all legacies in full, the amounts owing by legatees to testator at the time of the death of testator, and deducted by the executor in paying legacies, must be taken into consideration.

In re Moe, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

Legacy paid out of order. Interest on an unpaid legacy should not be ordered paid out of its legal order.

In re Mann, 212-17; 235 NW 733

11983 Estate insufficient.

Overpayment on legacy—refund. The appellate court may, it seems, authorize and direct an executor to proceed to recover an overpayment on a legacy.

In re Moe, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

11984 Failure to pay claims.

Suretyship generally. See under §11577

Summary judgment. Summary judgment (on 10 days notice) may be rendered against sureties on the bond of an executor after the probate court, in a proper proceeding, has determined the amount of the executor's shortage.

In re Carpenter, 210-553; 231 NW 376

Administrator's failure to pay claim—summary judgment against surety. After administrator's noncompliance with an order for immediate payment of a probate claim based on a finding that the administrator should have sufficient assets to pay the same, a summary judgment may be entered against his bond under this section and section 11985, C., '35.

In re Davie, 224-1177; 278 NW 616

Adjudicating administrator's liability—surety not necessary party. A surety on an administrator's bond, neither being entitled to notice nor being a necessary party in the probate proceeding to determine the administrator's shortage and liability, the adjudication thereon determining the administrator's liability, in the absence of fraud or mistake, is binding on the surety.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION OF INTESTATE'S PROPERTY

11986 Personal property.

ANALYSIS

- I PERSONAL ESTATE IN GENERAL
- II LAW GOVERNING DISTRIBUTION OF PERSONALTY
- III INTEREST OF SURVIVING SPOUSE
- IV INTEREST OF HEIRS
 - (a) RIGHT TO POSSESSION
 - (b) SETTLEMENT OF ESTATE WITHOUT ADMINISTRATION

Advancements. See under §12029

I PERSONAL ESTATE IN GENERAL

Rents. Principle reaffirmed that rents accruing on land after the death of the owner are chattels real and distributable as land is distributed.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Setting off debt against heir's share. The right to have the debts of an insolvent heir to an estate set off against his share in the estate is available against the insolvent's share in real estate as well as against his share of personal property, when the share of the insolvent in the personal property of the estate is insufficient to discharge said debt.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361

Insolvency of bank—assessment—when heir not liable. An heir is not liable to a statutory assessment on state bank stock owned by his deceased, intestate ancestor when, in the final settlement of the ancestor's estate, said heir, under contract with other heirs, receives his share solely in property other than said stock.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

Insolvency of bank—assessment—when estate beneficiary liable. One who, in the final settlement of an estate, receives the corporate bank stock of the deceased intestate as his or her share of the estate, becomes a "stockholder", and is subject to assessment like other stockholders, even tho the stock has not been transferred on the stock books of the bank.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

II LAW GOVERNING DISTRIBUTION OF PERSONALTY

Inheritance—creature of statute. The right to take property by descent or inheritance is strictly a statutory right.

In re Fitzgerald, 223-141; 272 NW 117

Advancements as rule of intestate descent. The doctrine of advancements applies only in cases where the decedent dies intestate, unless specifically provided for by language in the will.

In re Morgan, 225-746; 281 NW 346

Simultaneous death of spouses—effect.

Carpenter v Severin, 201-969; 204 NW 448; 43 ALR 1340

War-risk insurance. Unaccumulated installments of war-risk insurance which exist at the time of the death of the beneficiary and which, under congressional act, are payable to the estate of the soldier, must be distributed, in case of intestacy, to the soldier's heirs who exist at the time the soldier dies.

In re Pivonka, 202-855; 211 NW 246; 55 ALR 570

III INTEREST OF SURVIVING SPOUSE

Right of surviving spouse. The right of the surviving spouse of an intestate deceased to a balance of rentals accruing during redemption period and remaining after satisfaction of mortgage foreclosure judgment cannot exceed one third of such balance.

In re Angerer, 202-611; 210 NW 810

Lapse of devise to spouse. A devise by a husband to his wife is deemed to lapse upon his death when the devise is identical in quality and quantity with what the wife would have taken under the statute had there been no will; but not so of a devise which gives the wife one-third of his entire estate (1) after converting all real estate, including homestead, into personalty and (2) after paying all debts.

In re Davis, 204-1231; 213 NW 395

IV INTEREST OF HEIRS

(a) RIGHT TO POSSESSION

Administrator holds estate as trustee. An administrator of an intestate estate takes possession of and holds the same as an express trustee thereof for the claimant creditors of the decedent and of the estate, the heirs, the surviving spouse, and any others who may have a proper interest in the property.

In re Willenbrock, 228- ; 290 NW 503

Instant vesting of realty at death—possession and disposal by heirs. The title to real estate of which a decedent dies seized, upon his death, descends to and vests immediately in his heirs with the quantity to each definitely ascertained, and from that instant, subject to the debts of the deceased, they may dispose of the property as owners and are entitled to the possession and to the rents and profits.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Debts due decedent from heir—retainer or offset against realty. General rule recognized that real estate passes to devisee direct from testator, and not through executor, and that title vests in devisee immediately upon death of testator and, as a general rule, there is no right of retainer or offset for debt of devisee to estate, as against devisee of real estate; but there may be cases where, on account of the insolvency of the debtor, or other cause, equity will interfere for protection of the estate.

Petty v Hewlett, 225-797; 281 NW 731

(b) SETTLEMENT OF ESTATE WITHOUT ADMINISTRATION

Agreement—effect. An agreement between an aged mother and her heirs that a named person should act as attorney in fact for the mother, coupled with an agreement between the heirs that none of them should borrow from or obtain advancements from the mother, presents no impediment to the mother's conveying her property to certain of her heirs in order to equalize the distribution of her property.

Rollins v Jarrett, 207-183; 222 NW 365

Agreement of heirs binding. An agreement by heirs to settle estate without administration and providing for payment of legacies is legal and binding, and a widow of one of such heirs in a subsequent partition action cannot complain of denial of legacy to deceased heir where legacies due to other heirs were larger and such heirs received no part of their legacies.

Meeker v Meeker, (NOR); 283 NW 873

Right of heirs to protect. Tho the title to the personal property of a deceased does not pass directly to his heirs, they may, in the absence of any administration, maintain an action to protect or recover such property.

Powell v McBlain, 222-799; 269 NW 883

11987 Payment of shares.

Withholding distribution. Where certain devisees were holding rents belonging to estate, trial court properly ordered that no distribution be made to them until such rents were turned over to the executrix.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

Acceptance of bequest—extension of testator's limitation—effect. Where testator directed his executors to purchase, for a daughter, good Iowa land of the value of $15,600, such daughter having refused to accept partial distribution of realty to heirs prior to testator's death, but the testator also provided such bequest should lapse if daughter failed to select land within one year from testator's death, and where within one year the daughter filed application for extension of time on the ground that estate did not have funds to purchase such land, which extension was granted after due notice to executors and heirs, held, district court had jurisdiction to grant extension of time and, no appeal having been taken therefrom, the order became "final" and the heirs were bound by the decision.

In re Holdorf, 227-977; 289 NW 756

11988 In kind—proceeds distributed.

Heirs' rights—evidence of shares. Where a farm, comprising a part of an estate which is settled without administration by vesting control in one of the heirs under a trust agreement, is sold, and several first and second mortgages are taken in part payment and divided among the heirs, and title subsequently reverts to trustee without foreclosure, the mortgages, altho losing their effect as liens, serve as evidencing respective share of each heir.

Meeker v Meeker, (NOR); 283 NW 873

Withholding distribution. Where certain devisees were holding rents belonging to estate, trial court properly ordered that no distribution be made to them until such rents were turned over to the executrix.

I POWER OF LEGISLATURE TO ALTER DOWER RIGHT

Dower interest determined by law at time of spouse's death. The dower interest of a widow is determined by the law in force at the time of the husband's death.

Bullock v Smith, 201-247; 207 NW 241

II EXTENT AND NATURE OF THE DOWER INTEREST

Discussion. See 11 ILR 97—Specific performance and dower rights

Law governing. The right of dower, or what under our law is designated as "distributive share" in Iowa real estate, is not governed by a marriage contract entered into in a foreign state where the parties have their domicile, but is governed by the law of this state.

Ehler v Ehler, 214-789; 243 NW 591

Law governing. The distributive share or dower interest of a widow in the estate of her deceased husband is determined by the law in force at the time of his death.

Bullock v Smith, 201-247; 207 NW 241

Property rights determinable after death. Principle reaffirmed that the mutual property rights of a husband and wife may be determined after the death of one of the parties.

Melvin v Lawrence, 203-619; 213 NW 420

Fraudulent conveyance—inchoate right of dower nonexistent. Where a debtor, as grantor, made a conveyance to sister-in-law without consideration in order to escape payment of judgment which he feared would be rendered against him, and where 25 days after settlement of claim for which grantor was being sued she reconveyed without consideration, sister-in-law obtained no beneficial interest in the property. Hence, her husband could not claim a one-third interest in property upon her death, altho he signed deed of reconveyance only as a witness.

Renne v Tumbleson, 227-159; 287 NW 839

Tenants in common—surviving spouse and children. Upon the death of the owner of land, the surviving spouse and children become tenants in common of said land.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Vesting and divesting. Principle reaffirmed that instantly upon the death of the intestate owner of land the surviving spouse and children, as tenants in common, become vested with the title to said land in the proportion of one third in the spouse and two thirds in the children, which vesting may later be divested by the action of the spouse in the exercise of his or her optional rights.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Jackson v Grant, 224-579; 278 NW 190

Interest of surviving spouse—time of vesting—divesting. Principle reaffirmed that interest of surviving spouse in property vests immediately upon death of other spouse altho subsequently defeasible by an election to take under the will, if any, or to take a homestead right.

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Homestead—no presumption of election from mere occupancy. Surviving spouse's occupancy of the homestead will not alone, unless inconsistent with every other right, raise a presumption of an election to occupy the homestead for life.

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Surviving spouse's occupancy not conclusive on taking homestead. Inasmuch as the surviving spouse's occupancy of the homestead may be as a tenant in common, as a life tenant, or under the statute pending administration, such occupancy, altho being evidence, is not conclusive of her election to take the homestead right, but the true character of the occupancy is determinable from all the surrounding facts and circumstances.

Jackson v Grant, 224-579; 278 NW 190
Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Rents—proper charges against surviving spouse. A surviving wife is not entitled to one third of the gross rents accumulating in the estate prior to the setting off of her distributive share, but to one third after deducting taxes, proper charges for upkeep and receivership charges, if any.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Rents from dower. Rents arising from the distributive share of a surviving spouse, during the time when such share is being held in common with the shares of other owners, are not liable for the debts of the estate or of the costs of administration.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Homestead—right to free occupancy. In case rents accumulate in an estate prior to the setting off of the wife's distributive share, the wife, in the division of said rents with the other tenants in common, cannot be charged with the rental value of the homestead occupied by her. Moreover, if the other tenants have wrongfully ousted the wife for a time from her said occupancy, they must account to her for the rentals received. Reason: The right of the wife to the free occupancy of the homestead until otherwise disposed of, is independent of, and is in addition to, her right to a distributive share.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Exemption from debt. Principle reaffirmed that a homestead, set aside to the widow as her dower or distributive share, passes to her free from the debts of the husband-owner.

Southwick v Strong, 218-435; 255 NW 523
Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Selling homestead for debts—necessity of election between will and dower. An order of court to an executor to sell real estate, to pay claims, is erroneous where the only real estate was the homestead, and the surviving husband, who was willed one third of the estate, had never been required to make an election as to whether or not he took under the will. In such case the presumption remains that he took his distributive share.

In re Dyer, 225-1238; 282 NW 359

Not subject to mechanic's lien. A mechanic's lien filed after the death of the title holder is not a lien on the unassigned dower, of the surviving spouse, in the property in question.

Fullerton Lbr. Co. v Miller, 217-630; 252 NW 760

III PROPERTY SUBJECT TO DOWER RIGHT

Death of bankrupt after adjudication—widow's rights. On the death of a bankrupt after adjudication and qualification of trustee, surviving wife is held entitled to distributive share in his realty under state statute providing dower rights, and also entitled to sufficient of bankrupt's property of such kind as is appropriate to her support for 12 months from bankrupt's death under state statute providing allowance to widow.

In re Payne, 20 F 2d, 665

Nonforfeiture by taking foreign homestead. A wife, who is legally disinherited by her husband's will executed in a foreign state where the parties had their domicile, is not deprived of her dower or distributive share in the husband's Iowa real estate because of the fact that in said foreign state the homestead there situated was set off to her by the probate court on her application. In other words, the Iowa statute according to a wife the right to take the homestead in lieu of dower applies solely to an Iowa homestead.

Ehler v Ehler, 214-789; 243 NW 591

Lands subject to — gifts. A surviving wife has no interest in lands which the husband bought and paid for, and which he, without working any fraud upon the wife and without intending such fraud, caused to be conveyed directly by his vendor to grantees other than himself, as a gift.

Grout v Fairbairn, 204-727; 215 NW 963

Devise identical with statute of descent. A testamentary devise is inoperative when the property devised is exactly identical with the property which the statute law of descent grants in the absence of a will.

Wehrman v Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

IV BAR, WAIVER, OR RELINQUISHMENT OF DOWER

(a) ANTENUPTIAL AGREEMENTS

Antenuptial contract—proof. Record held to establish, by copy, an antenuptial contract, the original being lost.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 201-1311; 207 NW 772

Antenuptial contract — consideration. The consideration for an antenuptial contract necessarily inheres in the resulting marriage.

Kalsem v Froland, 207-994; 222 NW 3

Validity. Antenuptial contracts, the same as other contracts, if fair and free from fraud, are valid, binding, and enforceable, being based upon the consideration of marriage which is of the very highest known to the law.

In re Onstot, 224-520; 277 NW 563

Sufficiency of evidence. Evidence held sufficient to show execution of antenuptial agreement precluding widow from dower share.

In re Dunn, (NOR); 224 NW 38

IV BAR, WAIVER, OR RELINQUISHMENT OF DOWER—continued

(a) ANTENUPTIAL AGREEMENTS—concluded

Antenuptial contract—validity. When from the evidence it is found that an antenuptial contract was in fact entered into before the marriage, it is valid and binding on the parties.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

Acknowledgment — when unnecessary. A simple antenuptial contract, not involving the conveyance of real property, needs no acknowledgment to be valid.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

Antenuptial contract—homestead rights. An antenuptial contract will not be construed to embrace a waiver of homestead rights in the absence of plain and unmistakable language to that effect. Such waiver must have a more secure basis than a mere inference from broad and sweeping language referable to waiver of right to dower or distributive share.

Mill Owners Ins. v Petley, 210-1085; 229 NW 736

Antenuptial contract. A written instrument purporting to be an antenuptial contract waiving all interest which each of the contracting parties would have after marriage in the property of the other, but shown to have been actually signed after marriage, will not bar such property interest when the instrument neither recites (1) that it was executed for the purpose of furnishing evidence of a previous antenuptial oral contract nor (2) that it was executed in consideration of a previous oral antenuptial contract.

Battin v Bank, 202-976; 208 NW 343

Antenuptial contract—validity. Antenuptial contract reviewed and held not invalid on the grounds of unfairness, unconscionableness, and nonmutuality or because it contained an invalid provision in relation to property interest and the right to children which in no manner affected the consideration actually received by the wife.

Kalsem v Froland, 207-994; 222 NW 3

Marriage settlements — sum payable to wife not preferred claim. The parties to an antenuptial contract which simply and generally provides that the wife shall, on the death of the husband, "be paid" a named sum by the latter's personal representative, will not be deemed to have intended that in the settlement of the estate of the husband, the said sum to be paid the wife should have priority over third and fourth class claims. (Holding based on the intent of the parties as reflected in the contract and surrounding circumstances.)

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Husband's breach of antenuptial contract—wife's heirs' claim against husband's estate. An antenuptial contract preserving the spective property rights of the parties will support a claim in favor of the wife's collateral heirs against the estate of the husband who appropriated his deceased wife's separate property that otherwise and rightfully should have gone to such collateral heirs.

(b) GRANT OR CONVEYANCE

Discussion. See 17 ILR 245—Note signed with husband

Warranty deed—effect. A warranty deed duly signed by both husband and wife necessarily constitutes a complete subordination and waiver of all the rights of both husband and wife, including homestead and dower.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Signing to release. A promissory note and mortgage for the pre-existing debt of a husband are without consideration as to the wife who signs the same for the sole purpose of releasing her dower interest.

Gorman v Sampica, 202-802; 211 NW 429

Fraudulent antenuptial conveyance. A wife who pleads that her deceased husband fraudulently disposed of his property prior to marriage in order to deprive her of the interest which she would take as a wife must establish (1) an existing contract of marriage between herself and the deceased at the time of the conveyance by the deceased, and (2) that she had no knowledge of such conveyance prior to her marriage.

In re Mann, 201-878; 208 NW 310

Lien of mortgage executed by husband only. A real estate mortgage executed by the husband, but not by the wife, becomes a lien upon the entire mortgaged premises instantly upon the subsequent execution by the husband and wife of a conveyance of the property to a third party.

Louisa County v Grimm, 203-23; 212 NW 324

Refund to pay debts. The heirs of an estate who unconditionally purchase the interest of their mother in the estate have no legal right, thereafter, to compel the mother to contribute any sum toward the discharge of unpaid debts of the estate, unpaid taxes against the estate, or unpaid probate costs and fees.

In re Jones, 217-288; 251 NW 651

Fraudulent conveyance — inchoate right of dower nonexistent. Where a debtor, as grantor, made a conveyance to sister-in-law without consideration in order to escape payment of judgment which he feared would be rendered against him, and where 25 days after settlement of claim for which grantor was being sued she reconveyed without consideration, sister-in-law obtained no beneficial interest in the property. Hence, her husband could not claim a one-third interest in property upon her death, altho he signed deed of reconveyance only as a witness.

Renne v Tumbleson, 227-159; 287 NW 839

(d) FORECLOSURE AND PAYMENT OF MORTGAGES

Wife signing mortgage and note to release dower. Evidence to the effect that a wife signed not only the mortgage of her husband, but also the promissory note, and did so in order to enable the husband to obtain the loan and complete the deal, does not establish that the note was without consideration as to her, even tho she asserts that she signed solely to release her dower interest.

Des Moines JSL Bank v Allen, 220-448; 261 NW 912

Mortgage on unadmeasured dower. A mortgage executed by a surviving wife on her unadmeasured distributive share attaches to the subsequently admeasured lands.

In re Caylor, 208-1208; 227 NW 103

Setting off free from existing joint mortgage. A distributive share cannot be set off to a surviving wife free from a mortgage on the land when the evidence indicates that the mortgage debt was the debt of the wife equally with that of the deceased husband who owned the land.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

Existing liens. The distributive share of a surviving husband or wife in lands must bear its pro rata amount of a mortgage executed by the deceased and the survivor.

In re Caylor, 208-1208; 227 NW 103

(e) JUDICIAL SALE

Death of bankrupt—widow's rights—allowance and dower. Where a husband secures a receiver for his property in a state court and, with his wife, makes a conveyance of property to such receiver, and thereafter is adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, but dies before the disposition of his property by the trustee, and application is made for widow's allowance in the bankruptcy proceeding, held, that the bankruptcy adjudication and vesting of realty was not such "other judicial sale" as will defeat her right of dower, and her relinquishment by deed to husband's receiver of her contingent rights in his property became void by bankruptcy proceedings. In construing statutes for allowance to widows and children, equity court should be careful to do them no injustice.

Johnson v Payne, 26 F 2d, 450

(f) ESTOPPEL

Election of spouse under Code of 1873. The fact that a surviving husband to whom the wife had devised a life estate in lands which had long been their home accepted the administratorship of his wife's estate and for a long series of years continued his possession of the lands and paid taxes and repairs on the land, without being called upon to account to anyone, is not sufficient, under §2452, C., '73, to estop the husband from asserting a one-third distributive share interest in the property, in lieu of said life interest.

Ross v Seminary, 204-648; 215 NW 710

Vesting and divesting. The unadmeasured distributive share (dower) of a surviving spouse vests immediately upon the death of the other spouse, subject to being divested by the subsequent election of the surviving spouse to take under the will, if there be one, or to take homestead rights in lieu of distributive share.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

Mortgage on life estate changed to cover "undivided one-third" interest—effect on lien. Where a bank has knowledge of an arrangement whereby a mother had a life estate in the entire property and makes a mortgage accordingly, but in a later mortgage attempts to change its position by a mortgage on her interest as an "undivided one-third", its answer, admitting this allegation in the petition, estops the bank from claiming the mother had a greater interest, and, when her interest develops to be a life estate, the bank's mortgage attaches only to an undivided one third of this life estate.

Redding v Redding, 226-327; 284 NW 167

Surviving spouse—failing to plead and prove election. An adopted son, defending a contribution action growing out of expenditures made by his mother as tenant in common in inherited real estate, and in his answer admitting that his mother possessed by right of dower, but nowhere claiming or assuming his burden to prove that the widow elected to take a life estate in lieu of other dower rights, is estopped to raise such point on appeal or matters corollary thereto.

Yagge v Tyler, 225-352; 280 NW 559

Election—dower (?) or will (?). A widow who, with full knowledge of every material fact affecting the extent of her husband's estate, freely and voluntarily accepts the provisions of her husband's will in her behalf is estopped to change her election. So held where the material fact was that the husband had, prior to marriage, incorporated his landed holdings and distributed his corporate stock to his children.

In re Mann, 201-878; 208 NW 310

Estoppel to dispute election. A widow who is given a life estate, subject to the payment of debts, and whose conduct for some three years following the probate of the will is unmistakably on the theory that she was taking under

IV BAR, WAIVER, OR RELINQUISHMENT OF DOWER—concluded

the will, is estopped to then shift her position to the prejudice of creditors and deny the effect of her acts; and this is true tho she made no formal election under the statute.

Phillips v Phillips, 204-78; 214 NW 548

(g) MISCELLANEOUS BARS AND WAIVERS

Rights of devisees—election between will and dower. A widow will not be held, under §2452, C., '73, to have elected to accept a life estate devised to her in her husband's will, in lieu of her statutory dower or distributive share, from the naked fact (1) that, for some 26 years following the death of her husband, and until her death, she occupied, took charge of, and managed the real estate in which the said will gave her a life interest, and (2) that, shortly after her husband's death, she released all possible dower or testamentary right in a portion of the property.

Bullock v Smith, 201-247; 207 NW 241

Admeasurement—nonestoppel. A widow is not estopped to demand the admeasurement of her distributive share by the fact (1) that she, as executrix, procures an order for the sale of an "undivided two thirds" of the land in question in order to pay the debts of the estate, or (2) that she individually mortgages an "undivided one third" of the land and that said mortgage has not been foreclosed.

In re Caylor, 208-1208; 227 NW 103

Wife signing husband's notes—unallowable defense. Assuming that a wife was advised, when she signed promissory notes evidencing the husband's sole indebtedness, that her signature would have no other effect than to release her dower interest in the husband's land (which was embraced in the accompanying mortgage which she signed), yet that constitutes no defense to a personal judgment against her on the notes when there is no issue or proof of fraud or conditional delivery, no prayer for reformation or proof supporting such prayer, and when the notes are wholly bare of any reference to dower interest.

Reason: The application of such theory would nullify the notes for any purpose.

First N. Bk. v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

Life estate—proof—mortgage recitals—sufficiency. A series of mortgages accepted by a bank describing the undivided third interest of a son subject to the life estate of the mother, together with other evidence, held to establish an alleged oral contract of the heirs and their mother to create such life estate in the property of a deceased intestate husband and father; consequently, partition of the realty was properly denied against the mother.

Redding v Redding, 226-327; 284 NW 167

11991 Coextensive right of husband.

Nonright of husband to exempt personalty. See under §11918

Husband of title holder as improper plaintiff in partition. A husband may not maintain an action to partition lands of which his wife holds the legal title, and in which he has no interest except the contingent interest of a husband.

Jones et al. v Park, 220-903; 262 NW 801

Selling homestead for debts—necessity of election between will and dower. An order of court to an executrix to sell real estate to pay claims is erroneous where the only real estate was the homestead, and the surviving husband, who was willed one third of the estate, had never been required to make an election as to whether or not he took under the will. In such case the presumption remains that he took his distributive share.

11992 Dower to embrace homestead.

Additional citations. See under §§10145, 10146

Nonright to claim particular lands. The surviving husband or wife has no right, in an application to have a distributive share admeasured, to demand that certain nonhomestead lands be included in the admeasurement.

In re Caylor, 208-1208; 227 NW 103

Impossibility of including homestead. The distributive share cannot be so set off as to include the dwelling house and other buildings used in connection therewith and the land which is appurtenant to such buildings, when the value of such buildings and land exceeds the value of the allowable distributive share.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

Reservation of homestead right—evidence. Where a form book used for the recordation of warranty deeds in the office of the recorder of deeds contained a printed relinquishment by a spouse of "dower and homestead", the fact that in a certain instance the word "homestead" has been erased furnishes no evidence that the grantors had orally reserved a homestead right in the conveyed property.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Antenuptial contract specifying manner of property descent—dower lost. An antenuptial contract, preserving the property of each party for the benefit of their respective heirs, operates to extinguish the homestead right, and, in the absence of children to the union, the property of each descends to his heirs as though no marriage existed.

I ADMEASUREMENT IN GENERAL

Nonestoppel. A widow is not estopped to demand the admeasurement of her distributive share by the fact (1) that she, as executrix, procures an order for the sale of an "undivided two thirds" of the land in question in order to pay the debts of the estate, or (2) that she, individually, mortgages an "undivided one third" of the land and that said mortgage has not been foreclosed.

In re Caylor, 208-1208; 227 NW 103

Homestead—undue length of occupation. The heirs of an intestate will not be heard to complain of the extreme length of time the surviving spouse has maintained the free occupancy of the homestead when they were the direct cause of delaying the admeasurement of the spouse's distributive share.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

II PROCEEDINGS FOR ADMEASUREMENT OF DOWER

Recognized methods. The statutory provisions for admeasurement of dower do not exclude the setting off of dower by an action in equity, by partition, or by any other appropriate action.

Ehler v Ehler, 214-789; 243 NW 591

Conclusive bar to admeasurement. A final order in probate, entered on due notice, including notice to the wife of the deceased, wherein, inter alia, provision is made for carrying out the terms of an antenuptial contract in favor of the wife (wherein she waived her distributive share) is a complete bar to a subsequent action by the wife to recover said distributive share.

Weidman v Money, 205-1062; 219 NW 39

Antenuptial agreement precluding dower. Evidence held sufficient to show execution of antenuptial agreement precluding widow from dower share.

In re Dunn, (NOR); 224 NW 38

III APPORTIONMENT OF LIENS

Setting off free from existing joint mortgage. A distributive share cannot be set off to a surviving wife free from a mortgage on the land when the evidence indicates that the mortgage debt was the debt of the wife equally with that of the deceased husband who owned the land.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

12001 Sale—division of proceeds.

Dower—impossibility of including homestead. The distributive share cannot be so set off as to include the dwelling house and other buildings used in connection therewith and the land which is appurtenant to such buildings, when the value of such buildings and land exceeds the value of the allowable distributive share.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

12006 Dower right unaffected by will.

Law governing. The right of a surviving spouse to take under the will of the deceased spouse, or to take a distributive one-third share, is governed by the statutes existing at the time of the death of the testate spouse; likewise the right of a corporation to take under a will.

Ross v Seminary, 204-648; 215 NW 710

Devise in lieu of dower—acceptance from conduct. A surviving spouse, tho she has made no formal, record acceptance of a devise to her by her husband of a life estate in real and personal property in lieu of distributive share (dower), must be deemed to have accepted said devise when, for some 16 years following the probate of her husband's will, she has, without question, accepted the full benefit of said devise of a life estate.

ANALYSIS

- I RIGHT OF ELECTION IN GENERAL
- II NOTICE AND RECORD
- III PROOF OF ELECTION
- IV DEVISE IN LIEU OF DOWER
- V EFFECT OF ELECTION

Devise presumed to be in lieu of dower, homestead, and exemption. See under §11847

I RIGHT OF ELECTION IN GENERAL

Nonstatutory election. The statutory method for a surviving wife to elect to take under her husband's will does not prevent her from so electing by some other method. A wife may, by the act of making a will during the two days intervening between the death of her husband and her own death, and by the circumstances and incidents attending the making of such will, clearly effect an election, even tho she did not know that an election was necessary.

Hahn v Dunn, 216-637; 247 NW 672

Vesting and divesting. The unadmeasured distributive share (dower) of a surviving spouse vests immediately upon the death of

I RIGHT OF ELECTION IN GENERAL—concluded

the other spouse, subject to being divested by the subsequent election of the surviving spouse to take under the will, if there be one, or to take homestead rights in lieu of distributive share.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

Dower—when vested—divesting by choosing homestead. Instantly on the death of a married intestate, an undivided one-third interest and estate in his real estate vests in the surviving spouse as tenant in common, which vested estate is subject to being divested by a later election to take the homestead for life in lieu of such distributive share.

Jackson v Grant, 224-579; 278 NW 190

Interest of surviving spouse—time of vesting—divesting. Principle reaffirmed that interest of surviving spouse in property vests immediately upon death of other spouse altho subsequently defeasible by an election to take under the will, if any, or to take a homestead right.

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Selling homestead for debts—necessity of election between will and dower. An order of court to an executrix to sell real estate to pay claims is erroneous where the only real estate was the homestead, and the surviving husband, who was willed one third of the estate, had never been required to make an election as to whether or not he took under the will. In such case the presumption remains that he took his distributive share.

In re Dyer, 225-1238; 282 NW 359

Total failure to elect. A surviving wife who dies prior to the probate of her husband's will without having made, or been notified to make, any election either (1) to take the life estate devised to her "in lieu of dower and statutory right", or (2) to take her distributive share under the statute, will be deemed to have taken her primary right, to wit, her distributive share.

Peckenschneider v Schnede, 210-656; 227 NW 335

Total failure of surviving spouse to elect. A surviving wife who is willed by her deceased husband all his property, real and personal, after the payment of all his debts, including the expense of his last sickness and burial, and who dies some three days later without doing anything affirmatively indicating her acceptance of the terms of said will, must be held to have taken her distributive one-third share only.

Hahn v Dunn, 211-678; 234 NW 247; 82 ALR 1503

Failure to elect during lifetime. In a probate proceeding where husband's will gives the widow a life estate in property with a right to dispose of property for her necessary support, and where widow takes charge of estate as administratrix, without closing the estate during her lifetime and without making an election to take under such will, held, she elected to take under the will.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

II NOTICE AND RECORD

Election by spouse. A surviving wife who, for two years following the death of her testate husband, and until her death, actively participates as executor in the settlement of the estate, who has full knowledge of the provisions of the will in her behalf, who expresses a desire and intention to abide by the will, and who treats herself as a beneficiary under the will, must be deemed to have elected to take under the will and not her distributive share, even tho no notice to elect is ever served on her.

In re Culbertson, 204-473; 215 NW 761

III PROOF OF ELECTION

Code, '73—election between will and dower. A widow will not be held, under §2452, C., '73, to have elected to accept a life estate devised to her in her husband's will, in lieu of her statutory dower or distributive share, from the naked fact (1) that, for some 26 years following the death of her husband, and until her death, she occupied, took charge of, and managed the real estate in which the said will gave her a life interest, and (2) that, shortly after her husband's death, she released all possible dower or testamentary right in a portion of the property.

Bullock v Smith, 201-247; 207 NW 241

Election of spouse under C., '73. The fact that a surviving husband to whom the wife had devised a life estate in lands which had long been their home, accepted the administration of his wife's estate and for a long series of years continued his possession of the lands and paid taxes and repairs on the land, without being called upon to account to anyone, is not sufficient, under §2452, C., '73, to estop the husband from asserting a one-third distributive share interest in the property, in lieu of said life interest.

Ross v Seminary, 204-648; 215 NW 710

Homestead or distributive share—election—evidence necessary. The distributive share being the primary and more worthy right of the surviving spouse, evidence that the survivor elected to take the homestead right in lieu thereof should be clear and satisfactory.

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Surviving spouse's occupancy not conclusive on taking homestead. Inasmuch as the surviving spouse's occupancy of the homestead may be as a tenant in common, as a life tenant, or under the statute pending administration, such occupancy, although being evidence, is not conclusive of her election to take the homestead right, but the true character of the occupancy is determinable from all the surrounding facts and circumstances.

Jackson v Grant, 224-579; 278 NW 190

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

No presumption of election from mere occupancy by spouse. Surviving spouse's occupancy of the homestead will not alone, unless inconsistent with every other right, raise a presumption of an election to occupy the homestead for life.

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Election by spouse—nonestoppel. The heirs of a surviving wife are not estopped to insist that the wife took her dower interest, and did not take under the will, by the fact that, separate and apart from the will, and prior to its execution, the husband had turned over certain funds to a society, under an agreement that the society should pay interest on the funds to him and to the wife during their lifetime, and that the wife received such interest after the death of the husband.

In re Culbertson, 204-473; 215 NW 761

Release of dower for annuity—fraud—evidence. Evidence held insufficient to show that a contract by which a surviving spouse accepted an annuity in lieu of distributive share was fraudulently obtained.

Silkett v Silkett, 209-417; 227 NW 905

Surviving spouse—failing to plead and prove election. An adopted son, defending a contribution action growing out of expenditures made by his mother as tenant in common in inherited real estate, and in his answer admitting that his mother possessed by right of dower, but nowhere claiming or assuming his burden to prove that the widow elected to take a life estate in lieu of other dower rights, is estopped to raise such point on appeal or matters corollary thereto.

Yagge v Tyler, 225-352; 280 NW 559

IV DEVISE IN LIEU OF DOWER

When election not required. No election by a surviving spouse between the will and the dower right is required when the will shows on its face that its provisions for the surviving spouse were not intended to be in lieu of dower rights. So held where the will devised to the wife the sum of one dollar.

Fay v Smiley, 201-1290; 207 NW 369

V EFFECT OF ELECTION

Discussion. See 24 ILR 714—Effect of election

Claims — attorney fees — employment for partisan purpose. An executrix who, as widow, has renounced the will and elected to take her statutory distributive share may not, at the expense of the estate, employ attorneys to take a partisan attitude in a rival contest as to heirship.

In re Leighton, 210-913; 224 NW 543

Devise (?) or dower (?). Long acquiescence by a surviving spouse in the testamentary provisions made for her may constitute an irrevocable election to waive her statutory distributive share.

Pabbeldt v Schroeder, 202-689; 210 NW 958

Dower (?) or will (?). A widow who, with full knowledge of every material fact affecting the extent of her husband's estate, freely and voluntarily accepts the provisions of her husband's will in her behalf, is estopped to change her election. So held where the material fact was that the husband had, prior to marriage, incorporated his landed holdings and distributed his corporate stock to his children.

In re Mann, 201-878; 208 NW 310

Estoppel to dispute election. A widow who is given a life estate subject to the payment of debts, and whose conduct for some three years following the probate of the will is unmistakably on the theory that she was taking under the will, is estopped to then shift her position to the prejudice of creditors and deny the effect of her acts; and this is true tho she made no formal election under the statute.

Phillips v Phillips, 204-78; 214 NW 548

Renunciation of trust by wife—effect. A testamentary trust embracing all of testator's property, and for the benefit of the testator's wife and other named beneficiaries in named proportions, is not terminated by the renunciation of the will by the wife. The trust will proceed as to two thirds of the property, for the benefit of the remaining beneficiaries.

Windsor v Barnett, 201-1226; 207 NW 362

12010 Election by law—exception.

Election by spouse—inapplicability of statute. The statutory provision to the effect that a surviving spouse of a deceased testator, when executor of the estate, shall be conclusively presumed to consent to the provisions of the will in his or her behalf unless a refusal so to consent is filed within six months after the will is probated, has no application under a will which was probated before the enactment of such statutory provision.

In re Culbertson, 204-473; 215 NW 761

Homestead or distributive share—election—evidence necessary. The distributive share being the primary and more worthy right of the surviving spouse, evidence that the survivor elected to take the homestead right in lieu thereof should be clear and satisfactory.

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Total failure of surviving spouse to elect—effect. A surviving wife who is willed by her deceased husband all his property real and personal after the payment of all his debts, including the expense of his last sickness and burial, and who dies some three days later, without doing anything affirmatively indicating her acceptance of the terms of said will, must be held to have taken her distributive one-third share only.

Hahn v Dunn, 211-678; 234 NW 247; 82 ALR 1503

Failure to elect during lifetime. In a probate proceeding where husband's will gives the widow a life estate in property with a right to dispose of property for her necessary support, and where widow takes charge of estate as administratrix, without closing the estate during her lifetime and without making an election to take under such will, held, she elected to take under the will.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Notice—right of wife as cestui to ignore. A wife who ignores a notice requiring her to elect whether she would take under her husband's will, does not estop herself from alleging and proving that the property which the husband assumed to devise was held by him in trust for her.

Spring v Spring, 210-1124; 229 NW 147

12012 Election between dower and homestead occupancy—notice.

Election between homestead and dower. See under §10146

Life occupancy—unprayed-for relief. A surviving spouse who, in a contest with an heir of the intestate's, claims absolute ownership of the entire homestead, and who is decreed to own only an undivided fractional part thereof, may be decreed the right to elect to occupy the homestead for life, even tho there is no prayer for such relief.

Myrick v Bloomfield, 202-401; 210 NW 428

Antenuptial contract specifying manner of property descent—dower lost. An antenuptial contract, preserving the property of each party for the benefit of their respective heirs, operates to extinguish the homestead right and, in the absence of children to the union, the property of each descends to his heirs as tho no marriage existed.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

12015 Setting off dower.

Exemption from debt. Principle reaffirmed that a homestead, set aside to the widow as her dower or distributive share, passes to her free from the debts of the husband-owner.

Southwick v Strong, 218-435; 255 NW 523

12016 Descent to children.

Fiduciary relations, wills. See under §11846
Gifts causa mortis. See under Ch 445, Note 1

Discussion. See 4 ILB 280—Rights of widow as heir; 7 ILB 251—Breaking descent; 16 ILR 244—Child born prior to execution; 20 ILR 626—Descent and distribution

Inheritable existence—criterion. An infant acquires existence capable of taking an inheritance only when it acquires an independent circulation of its blood after being fully separated from the body of the mother.

Wehrman v Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

Purchase (?) or descent (?). A homestead cannot be deemed to descend under the laws of descent to the children of a spouseless parent when the parent leaves a will which provides that no child contesting the will shall take anything under the will, altho the will otherwise gives to the children the identical shares which the laws of descent would give.

Luglan v Lenning, 214-439; 239 NW 692

Title under will (?) or law of descent (?)—attending rights. devisees whose shares under a will are, both in quantity and quality, exactly the shares which they, in the absence of a will, would take under the statute law of descent, are deemed to take title, not under the will, but under the said statutes of descent—the worthier title—and so taking they necessarily take the statutory exemptions, if any, attending the property.

Luckenbill v Bates, 220-871; 263 NW 811; 103 ALR 252

Instant vesting of realty at death—possession and disposal by heirs. The title to real estate of which a decedent dies seized, upon his death, descends to and vests immediately in his heirs with the quantity to each definitely ascertained, and from that instant, subject to the debts of the deceased, they may dispose of the property as owners and are entitled to the possession and to the rents and profits.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Tenants in common—surviving spouse and children. Upon the death of the owner of land, the surviving spouse and children become tenants in common of said land.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Dower or distributive share—vesting and divesting. Principle reaffirmed that instantly upon the death of the intestate owner of land the surviving spouse and children, as tenants in common, become vested with the title to said land in the proportion of one third in the spouse and two thirds in the children, which vesting may later be divested by the action of the spouse in the exercise of his or her optional rights.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Substitution of heirs. Upon the death of an intestate parent subsequent to the death of his child, the law, for the purpose of descent, substitutes the heirs of the predeceased child in lieu of such child. It necessarily follows that the property descending to these substituted heirs never in any sense becomes a part of the estate of said predeceased child.

In re Rees, 204-610; 215 NW 726

Agreement as to right to inherit. A provision in an antenuptial contract to the effect that the children of the husband shall have the same right of inheritance in the property of the wife as they would have if they were her own children is effective as a contract of inheritance.

Kalsem v Froland, 207-994; 222 NW 3

Antenuptial contract specifying manner of property descent. An antenuptial contract, preserving the property of each party for the benefit of their respective heirs, operates to extinguish the homestead right and, in the absence of children to the union, the property of each descends to his heirs as tho no marriage existed.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

Heirs of absentee. The heirs of an absentee who, without known cause, has absented himself from his usual place of residence for a period of seven years, are those persons who are his heirs on the day when the law first indulges the presumption that said absentee is dead, to wit, on the day which marks the end of said absence of seven years.

In re Schlicht, 221-889; 266 NW 556

Declarations and letters as to paternity. Ante litem motam declarations and letters of deceased parties relating to the parentage of a certain person, even tho they are not related to such person by blood or marriage, are admissible on the issue of parentage when such declarants and writers stood in such relation to the person in question as to give assurance that they would know the real truth as to such parentage and could not be mistaken. For a stronger reason, similar declarations and letters of those related by blood or marriage to the person in question are admissible.

In re Frey, 207-1229; 224 NW 597

Creation of vested interest—invulnerability. A deed, (1) which is conditioned on grantee paying, after the death of grantor, named sums to each of grantee's two sisters, and (2) which is executed and delivered by grantor and accepted by grantee in accordance with a plan entered into by all of said parties for the settlement of their inherited interests in said land, creates, instantaneously, in said sisters a vested interest which is immune from change without their consent. So held where the grantor, later, erroneously assumed the right to treat the deed as testamentary and, by a new deed, to reduce the payments to the sisters.

Carlson v Hamilton, 221-529; 265 NW 906

Heirs' rights—evidence of shares. Where a farm, comprising a part of an estate which is settled without administration by vesting control in one of the heirs under a trust agreement, is sold, and several first and second mortgages are taken in part payment and divided among the heirs, and title subsequently reverts to trustee without foreclosure, the mortgages, altho losing their effect as liens, serve as evidencing respective share of each heir.

Meeker v Meeker, (NOR); 283 NW 873

Share of heir as mere contract claim—how paid. Where the share or interest of a child in the estate of his or her alleged parent takes the form of a mere contract obligation against the estate, the child becomes a mere claimant against the estate and is payable as such, and not from the mere residue of the estate. So held where the parentage was in issue and was compromised by a court-approved agreement wherein the executor agreed, on behalf of the estate, (1) to set up a specified trust fund, the annuity of which was to be payable to said child during its lifetime, and (2) annually to pay said annuity to said child until the trust fund was actually set up.

In re Griffin, 220-1028; 262 NW 473

Prohibited devise as intestate property. Property devised to one who is prohibited by law from taking becomes intestate property when the will provides no remainderman or provision for reversion.

Karolusson v Paonessa, 207-127; 222 NW 431

Renounced devise as intestate property. Where one of several residuary devisees wholly renounces his interest under the will, the portion so renounced becomes intestate property, and necessarily descends under the statutory rules of descent. In other words, the non-renouncing residuary devisees do not necessarily take said renounced portion.

Lehr v Switzer, 213-658; 239 NW 564

Will—renunciation by daughter—effect. Where a father's will left property in equal shares to a son and daughter, subject to a life estate in their mother, and where the daughter renounced all benefits under the will, as heir she took undivided one half of one-half portion of estate that became intestate property as result of renunciation, subject to life estate.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Assignment of expectancy.

Jones v Jones, 46-466

Mally v Mally, 121-169; 96 NW 735

Richey v Rowland, 130-523; 107 NW 423

Betts v Harding, 133-7; 109 NW 1074

Assignment of expectancy as security. An assignment of an expectancy in a contemplated estate as security for a debt is supported by adequate consideration.

Gannon v Graham, 211-516; 231 NW 675; 73 ALR 1050

Assignment of expectancy. Principle reaffirmed that while an assignment of an expectancy is not a favorite of the law, yet if, after careful scrutiny, it appears to have been made in good faith, for an adequate consideration, without fraud, and is not unconscionable or otherwise invalid, equity will sustain and enforce it.

Gannon v Graham, 211-516; 231 NW 675; 73 ALR 1050

Burk v Morain, 223-399; 272 NW 441

Assignment of expectancy as collateral security. An assignment by a debtor to his creditor of the debtor's expectancy in an estate, as collateral security to the debt, with a proviso that, if the debtor does not pay within a stated time, the assignment shall operate as a "full receipt" against said expectancy, simply extends to the creditor an option to so treat the proviso. The creditor may ignore the proviso and maintain an action on his claim. (See Funk v Grulke, 204-314.)

Smoley v Smoley, 203-685; 213 NW 229

Assignment of expectancy—construction. A written assignment by an heir "of all interest of every kind and nature" in the estate works a complete conveyance of the heir's interest in the real estate of the estate, as against a subsequently rendered judgment against the assignor. (See Funk v Grulke, 204-314.)

Berg v Shade, 203-1352; 214 NW 513

Discharge of bankrupt—effect on assignment. When a debtor assigns his expectancy in an estate as security for the payment of the debt, a subsequent discharge of the debt in bankruptcy ipso facto discharges said assignment and all unadjudicated equitable rights thereunder, even tho the ancestor creates a legacy for the debtor, and dies after the debtor is adjudged a bankrupt, and before the debtor is decreed a final discharge.

Gannon v Graham, 211-516; 231 NW 675; 73 ALR 1050

Burk v Morain, 223-399; 272 NW 441

Ineffectual assignment. A mortgage which recites that the mortgagor "sells and conveys her undivided interest and all future rents, issues and profits" in named lands (in which the mortgagor then has no interest whatever) speaks solely in the present tense, and is wholly ineffectual to convey the mortgagor's future expectant interest in the land as an heir.

Lee v Lee, 207-882; 223 NW 888

Fraudulent assignment. In an action by heirs of an intestate against a son and heir of intestate to set aside a transfer of a note and mortgage from intestate to said son, evidence held insufficient to show signatures of aged mother are not the genuine signatures of intestate on assignments.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Action to set aside conveyance. In an action by heirs to set aside an assignment of note and mortgage and transfer of realty by an intestate to a son, who had lived with and cared for her a number of years, on ground of mother's mental incapacity, evidence which tended to show preference to son is insufficient to support claim of mental incapacity.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Advancements. In an action by heirs of intestate against a son of intestate to have property received by such son decreed to be an advancement and be deducted from the son's interest in the estate, wherein it is shown that such son had instituted a prior action in partition to have his interest in realty determined, held that such issue of advancement should have been raised as an affirmative defense and litigated in the prior partition action, and therefore is now res judicata.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Advancements—deduction—when improper. Without special provision in the will therefor, an executor is in error in paying to himself, as a residuary legatee, $1,000 on the theory that the four other such legatees had each received advancements in that sum and that such payment was equivalent to charging off such advancements against the shares of the other legatees.

In re Morgan, 225-746; 281 NW 346

Insolvency of bank—assessment—when heir not liable. An heir is not liable to a statutory assessment on state bank stock owned by his deceased, intestate ancestor when, in the final settlement of the ancestor's estate, said heir, under contract with other heirs, receives his share solely in property other than said stock.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

Offsetting debts of insolvent heir.

Lusby v Wing, 207-1287; 224 NW 554

Johnson v Smith, 210-591; 231 NW 470

Yungclas v Yungclas, 213-413; 239 NW 22

Insolvent heir's debts offset against share in real estate. The right to offset debts of an heir against his share of real estate exists only when the heir is insolvent. Evidence held insufficient to show heirs were insolvent.

Wilson v Wilson, 226-199; 283 NW 893

Setting off debt against heir's share. The right to have the debts of an insolvent heir to an estate set off against his share in the estate is available against the insolvent's share in real estate as well as against his share of personal property, when the share of the insolvent in the personal property of the estate is insufficient to discharge said debt.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361

Offsetting debts against share in estate. The amount of the indebtedness of a distributee, solvent or insolvent, to an estate, may be set off against his share in the personal property. If the personal property is insufficient, his share of the real estate may be set off against the debt, if the heir is insolvent.

In re Morgan, 226-68; 283 NW 267

Insolvent heir's unpaid debt to estate—jurisdiction of court to offset. The court has jurisdiction, in an equitable action to partition the lands of an intestate (to which action all heirs are parties), to entertain a cross-petition by one of the heirs as administrator of said estate, and, under proper pleading and proof:

1. To decree that a certain insolvent heir has no interest in said land because his unpaid indebtedness to said estate equals or exceeds the value of the share in said lands which he would take were he not so indebted, and

Bauer v Bauer, 221-782; 266 NW 531

Offsetting debt of insolvent heir against realty—creditors—judgments. Where an heir, as a defendant in a partition action, admits insolvency and an indebtedness to parents' estate in excess of his interest in parents' realty, decree was proper holding heir had no interest in such realty and, accordingly, heir's creditors who obtain judgments after commencement of partition action but before entry of decree, and making no claim of fraud in securing the decree, have no interest in any of funds received from sale of realty.

Petty v Hewlett, 225-797; 281 NW 731

Fiduciary relationship—intestate and heir receiving property. In an action by heirs of intestate to set aside a conveyance of realty made by intestate to son, on the ground of an alleged fiduciary relationship existing between aged intestate and son, held, that evidence was insufficient to establish such relationship, and even though such relationship existed, whatever property the son received from his mother was by her voluntary and intelligent act, and without duress, dominance, or overreaching on his part.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Fiduciary or confidential relationship. In an action by heirs of an intestate against a son and heir of intestate, to recover money allegedly wrongfully obtained while acting in a fiduciary and confidential capacity, evidence held insufficient to show such relationship or that son wrongfully withdrew money from testate's bank account and misappropriated the same, together with rentals obtained from farm land, where the son lived with his aged mother and attended to her business and property affairs.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

12017 Absence of issue.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 145—Inheritance by adopted children

Infants—inheritable existence—criterion. An infant acquires existence capable of taking an inheritance only when it acquires an independent circulation of its blood after being fully separated from the body of the mother.

Wehrman v Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

Collateral heirs. Collateral heirs, belonging as they do under the law of inheritance to a deferred class, must, in order to inherit, affirmatively negative by the greater weight of evidence, the existence, at the time the inheritance was cast, of any other heir belonging to a more favored class. Held that collateral heirs had failed to negative the independent existence of twins after they had been taken, by a Caesarean operation, from the womb of a dead mother.

Wehrman v Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

Status of children of adopted child. The legal status of children of an adopted child is, inter alia, that of grandchildren of their foster grandparents.

Shaw v Scott, 217-1259; 252 NW 237

Articles of adoption—liberal construction against collateral heirs. Articles of adoption, executed under §3251, C., '97, will not, in an action involving the right of the alleged adopted child to inherit from the alleged foster parents in preference to collateral heirs, be held invalid simply because the name of the father of said child is not stated in said articles, the said section literally requires such statement.

Eggimann-Eckard v Evans, 220-762; 263 NW 328

Adoption—collateral heirs over natural parents. The estate of a legally adopted, intestate, spouseless and issueless person whose adopting parents are both dead leaving surviving collateral heirs only, descends to said collateral heirs and not to the surviving natural parents or parent of said adopted person. (See also §10501-b6 [§10501.6, C., '39], §12027, C., '35.)

In re Fitzgerald, 223-141; 272 NW 117

Devise identical with statute of descent—effect. A testamentary devise is inoperative when the property devised is exactly identical with the property which the statute law of descent grants in the absence of a will.

Wehrman v Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

Descent—when determinable by contract. Tenants in common of real estate who embark their holdings, and the personal property used in connection therewith, in a partnership violate no rights of heirship or testamentary rights of their brothers and sisters by including in their partnership contract an agreement that upon the death of one of the partners the survivor shall become the absolute owner of all the partnership property.

Conlee v Conlee, 222-561; 269 NW 259

Assignees. An assignment by an heir of all his interest in the "personal property" of an estate carries to the assignee the assignor's interest in funds derived from the sale of real estate for the purpose of paying debts and remaining in the hands of the administrator as an unused balance. The doctrine of equitable conversion has no application to such a state of facts.

In re Wilson, 218-368; 255 NW 489

War-risk insurance. Congress has power, after the issuance of war-risk insurance, to provide that unaccumulated installments which exist at the time of the death of the beneficiary shall be paid to the estate of the insured soldier.

In re Pivonka, 202-855; 211 NW 246; 55 ALR 570

War-risk insurance. Unaccumulated installments of war-risk insurance which exist at the time of the death of the beneficiary and which, under congressional act, are payable to the estate of the soldier, must be distributed, in case of intestacy, to the soldier's heirs who exist at the time the soldier dies.

12025 Heirs of parents.

Heirs of spouseless, childless, and parentless intestate. In the search for an heir of a spouseless, childless, and parentless intestate, the quest along any line of ascending ancestors and their issue must necessarily terminate at the place where inheritable blood disappears.

In re Bradley, 210-1013; 231 NW 661

Collateral heirs. Collateral heirs, belonging as they do under the law of inheritance to a deferred class, must, in order to inherit, affirmatively negative by the greater weight of evidence, the existence, at the time the inheritance was cast, of any other heir belonging to a more favored class. Held that collateral heirs had failed to negative the independent

Wehrman v Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

Status of children of adopted child. The legal status of children of an adopted child is, inter alia, that of grandchildren of their foster grandparents.

Shaw v Scott, 217-1259; 252 NW 237

Adopting or natural parents—widow. The heirs as a class of each adopting parent, each class receiving one half, rather than the natural parents or their heirs, inherit the estate of an adopted child dying intestate to the exclusion of adopting father's surviving second wife who was decreed no part of the estate and did not appeal—but, quare, if surviving second wife had claimed a dower interest.

In re Smith, 223-817; 273 NW 891

Adoption—right of inheritance. The legally adopted child of the deceased brother of an intestate, parentless, spouseless and childless sister inherits from said sister just as he would were he the actual child of his adopting parent.

McCune v Oldham, 213-1221; 240 NW 678

"Surviving grandchildren" interpreted. Where a will giving life estates to testatrix's surviving spouse and children provides on termination of the life estates that fee title shall pass "to the surviving grandchildren", this means surviving grandchildren of testatrix as a class and does not mean that in each separate tract the surviving children of that respective life tenant take the remainder, nor do testatrix's heirs take as a whole under rules of descent as in cases of intestacy.

Bell v Bell, 223-874; 273 NW 906

Surviving spouse. No part of the property of an unmarried and issueless deceased who survived both his parents and his issueless and only sister passes to the surviving spouse of such sister.

In re Farrell, 205-331; 217 NW 876

12026 Spouse and heirs.

Equity proceeding to establish heirs—triable de novo. In a probate proceeding to assist administrator to determine heirs of intestate, it being determined upon appeal from (1) the form of the pleadings as prescribed in equity, (2) the record of proceedings indicating use of equitable powers, (3) the reception of evidence under equitable procedure, and (4) rulings of the court reserved as in equity, that such proceeding, having been conducted in a manner wholly foreign to procedure at law, was tried in equity and therefore was triable de novo on appeal.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Heirs of spouse—evidence to establish. In probate proceeding, certain heirs, who are claiming under statute providing "If heirs are not thus found, the portion uninherited shall go to the spouse of the intestate, or heirs of such spouse if dead, according to like rules * * *", having established they were heirs of deceased spouse of intestate, cannot be required to go further and establish by proof that no heirs of such intestate exist, since the statute places no such burden upon them, nor is it reasonable to suppose that the legislature so intended. The degrees of heirship are without limit in Iowa.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Census report—evidence of heirs. In probate proceedings to establish heirship of certain claimants through the deceased spouse of an intestate (who died without issue), the trial court erroneously disregarded a census enumerator's report which showed that intestate was married and that she had no children. While such record was a hearsay statement, yet because of circumstances under which it was made, and because it is a part of a public record, it would have been admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Evidence of marriage—heirs claiming estate. In probate proceedings by heirs claiming under the deceased spouse of intestate, the evidence was sufficient to establish the marriage between the intestate and deceased spouse, tho the trial court found that there was insufficient evidence to establish heirship and rendered judgment that the property escheat to the state as uninherited property.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Unmarried and issueless deceased. No part of the property of an unmarried and issueless deceased who survives both his parents and his issueless and only sister passes to the surviving spouse of such sister.

In re Farrell, 205-331; 217 NW 876

Denial of escheat—distribution to heirs. In probate proceeding, tried as in equity, wherein the trial court wholly disregarded the finding of fact by a referee, who was also administrator, that no heirs of intestate had been found, and wherein judgment was rendered for the property to escheat to the state, as against certain heirs claiming heirship through the deceased spouse of intestate, upon trial de novo on appeal, the findings of the trial court were found to be without support in the evidence, and judgment was reversed with instructions to enter a decree for a division of the property among the heirs as their interests may appear in the record.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Heirship under spouse—denial of escheat. In probate proceedings where judgment was rendered for property to escheat to state, findings of the trial court that intestate might have left a husband from whom she had not been divorced, and if she left a daughter a point was raised whether the daughter might have children of her own who would inherit under our laws, on trial de novo on appeal, were determined to be mere speculations of the court, without any factual or evidential basis, and the evidence of the heirs claiming under a deceased spouse of intestate definitely established that heirs of the intestate's own family and lineage, either through blood or marriage, had not been found.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Persons entitled and their respective shares—cemetery lot. The interest of an intestate in a burial lot in a cemetery (he dying without issue and survived only by his widow and mother) may not be set aside as exempt property to the widow. The interest, the right to use said lot for burial purposes, passes in such a case in equal shares to the widow and mother.

How issue tried. A proceeding in probate on the issue whether a conveyance by a father to his son constituted an advancement is triable, both in the trial and appellate court, as an action at law. It follows that a supported finding by the trial court is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re O'Hara, 204-1331; 217 NW 245

Advancements—nonapplicability of doctrine. Principle reaffirmed that the doctrine of "advancements" has no application to the settlement of an estate under a will.

In re Manatt, 214-432; 239 NW 524

Advancements as rule of intestate descent. The doctrine of advancements applies only in cases where the decedent dies intestate, unless specifically provided for by language in the will.

In re Morgan, 225-746; 281 NW 346

Set-off or retainer—executor's equitable right—nonstatutory. In probate proceedings the right which the executor or an administrator has, in the nature of a right of retainer, to set off debts owing by a beneficiary of an estate against his share therein, is an equitable right of its own nature, and not at all dependent upon any statute.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Set-off or retainer against beneficiary. In probate proceedings wherein a beneficiary is indebted to the estate, the right of set-off or retainer is not restricted to a court of equity, but rests upon wholesome principles of right and justice which can be administered in probate courts without the aid of a court of conscience.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Presumption—weakness of. Substantial gifts of money, made by a parent during his lifetime to his children, are presumed to be advancements, but the presumption is not strong and must yield to slight evidence of a contrary intent.

In re Wiese, 222-935; 270 NW 380

Advancements to child—when gift—intestacy rule. In cases of intestacy where a parent advances money or property to a child, or pays debts for the child, the law presumes it is a gift by advancement, unless otherwise competently shown as intended to be held as a debt against the child.

Yagge v Tyler, 225-352; 280 NW 559

Heir's assignment of interest subject to estate claims—rights of assignee. In a probate proceeding where one of the heirs, who is indebted to the estate, purchases a farm from the executor and assigns her one-tenth interest in the estate as security for a purchase note to the executor, who in turn assigns the note to a third party, held that such assignment of interest is taken subject to the estate claims, and whatever interest remains should be paid to the holder of the note irrespective of the fact the executor is also indebted to the estate on his final account.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

"Worthier title" rule nonapplicable to prevent executor's set-off or retainer. In probate proceedings, before the "worthier title" rule can be applied where property is left to testator's heirs by will in the same manner and proportion in which they would have taken were there no will, it must definitely appear that there is exact identity in every way, and where testator definitely directs that real estate be converted into personalty and then divided equally among his children, each beneficiary receiving all personalty and no real estate, held, a beneficiary of such estate did not take her interest by "worthier title" so as to preclude executor from exercising the right of retainer against the beneficiary's interest which is assigned as security for a note for purchase of real estate by beneficiary—it being immaterial whether beneficiary is solvent or insolvent.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Gift—renunciation—no control by creditors—not a conveyance. A creditor has no control over a beneficiary's right to refuse or accept a gift, as a renunciation is not equivalent to a conveyance.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Verdict sustaining part of gift as establishing mental competency. In a replevin action by executor to recover property held under claim of gift inter vivos from decedent, a jury verdict validating part of the gift made on a later date, from which part of the verdict no appeal is taken also establishes the donor's mental competency to consummate that part of the gift made on an earlier date.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

II WHAT CONSTITUTES AN ADVANCEMENT

Advancement (?) or gift (?).

In re Francis, 204-1237; 212 NW 306

Advancement (?) or debt (?)—interest. An ordinary promissory note executed by an heir to his ancestor, and representing money received by the heir from the ancestor, must, in the settlement of the estate, be deemed, presumptively, a debt and not an advancement; consequently, interest is chargeable as provided in the note.

In re Manatt, 214-432; 239 NW 524

Essential elements of gift. A gift causa mortis is a gift of personal property, intentionally made, even orally, by the mentally competent owner of said property, in expectation of his or her imminent death from an impending disorder or peril (tho not necessarily so imminent as to exclude the opportunity to execute a will), and made and delivered by the donor to the donee on the essential condition that, if the gift be not in the meantime revoked, the property shall belong to the donee in case the donor dies, as anticipated, of the disorder or peril, leaving said donee surviving.

Flint v Varney, 220-1241; 264 NW 277

Burden of proof. An irrevocable gift by a parent to a child is presumptively an advancement, but the child may show, by any competent evidence, that the parent did not intend the gift to be an advancement. Evidence held to overthrow the presumption.

Fell v Bradshaw, 205-100; 215 NW 595

Difference between value of property and amount paid. An advancement to an heir may consist of the substantial difference which may exist between the actual money consideration paid by the heir for property and its actual value at the time of the conveyance, but not necessarily so when, as part of the consideration, the grantor-ancestor reserves a room on the premises for life, and when the grantee-heir agrees to pay the funeral expenses of said grantor and adequately to support him for life.

In re O'Hara, 204-1331; 217 NW 245

Tenant in common paying mortgage to protect undivided interest—not gift to cotenant. Payment, by a mother, of a mortgage on property she holds as a tenant in common with her adopted son, held to be for the preservation and protection of her share in the property, when otherwise unexplained.

Yagge v Tyler, 225-352; 280 NW 559

Debts due decedent from heir—retainer or offset against realty. General rule recognized that real estate passes to devisee direct from testator, and not through executor, and that title vests in devisee immediately upon death of testator and, as a general rule, there is no right of retainer or offset for debt of devisee to estate, as against devisee of real estate; but there may be cases where, on account of the insolvency of the debtor, or other cause, equity will interfere for protection of the estate.

Petty v Hewlett, 225-797; 281 NW 731

Setting off debt against heir's share. The right to have the debts of an insolvent heir to an estate set off against his share in the estate is available against the insolvent's share in real estate as well as against his share of personal property, when the share of the insolvent in the personal property of the estate is insufficient to discharge said debt.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361

Pro rata distribution—procedure. In determining the pro rata payments to be made on legacies in an estate which proves insufficient to pay all legacies in full, the amounts owing by legatees to testator at the time of the death of testator, and deducted by the executor in paying legacies, must be taken into consideration.

Mills v Manchester, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

Mental competency and elements of gift—when jury question. In a replevin action by executor against decedent's sister to recover property held under claim of gift inter vivos from decedent, where clear, cogent, definite, and convincing evidence conclusively established mental competency and all the essential elements of a completed gift inter vivos appear without conflict, no jury question is presented.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Equitable conversion—deduction from share. Tho testator's lands are, from the moment of testator's death, deemed equitably converted into personalty by a mandatory, testamentary direction to the executor to sell and divide the proceeds among testator's children, yet the rentals of said lands, accruing prior to an actual sale of the lands, belong to the estate, and in case the lessee be a legatee and fails to pay said rentals, the amount thereof may be deducted by the executor from the share of said legatee, a right which is superior to the right of one who, with knowledge of said rental proceedings, acquires an equitable lien on said legatee's share in the estate.

Ihle v Ihle, 222-1086; 270 NW 452

Offsetting executor's debt against compensation. A debt due from an executor to the estate may not be set off against the amount allowed the executor for services as such executor when the will provides that such debt shall be treated as an advancement. So held where assignees of the compensation were making claim thereto.

In re Bourne, 210-883; 232 NW 169

Advancements—deduction—when improper. Without special provision in the will therefor, an executor is in error in paying to himself, as a residuary legatee, $1,000 on the theory that the four other such legatees had each received advancements in that sum and that such payment was equivalent to charging off such advancements against the shares of the other legatees.

In re Morgan, 225-746; 281 NW 346

Insolvent heir's debts offset against share in real estate. The right to offset debts of an heir against his share of real estate exists only when the heir is insolvent. Evidence held insufficient to show heirs were insolvent.

Wilson v Wilson, 226-199; 283 NW 893

Matters which may have been litigated in prior action—res judicata. In an action by heirs of intestate against a son of intestate to have property received by such son decreed to be an advancement and be deducted from the son's interest in the estate, wherein it is shown that such son had instituted a prior action in partition to have his interest in realty determined, held that such issue of advancement should have been raised as an affirmative defense and litigated in the prior partition action, and therefore is now res judicata.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

12030 Illegitimate children—inheritor from mother.

Bastards—rights of inheritance. In Iowa, illegitimate children have inheritable blood.

In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

Illegitimate children. Tho at common law an illegitimate child, or filius nullius, could not inherit because he was son of nobody, the statutes permitting illegitimate to inherit from mother and father abrogate common-law concept that child born out of wedlock is child of nobody, and without inheritable blood.

In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

Rights of recognized illegitimate child. Under the statutes, a duly recognized illegitimate child has all the rights of inheritance of a legitimate child. The reason for denying inheritable blood is gone and remains a fiction only.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Meaning of "children"—legitimate or illegitimate—rule. At common law, the word "children", when used in wills, deeds, or other conveyances, means legitimate children unless will reveals a clear intention to use the generic term "children" so as to include an illegitimate child, or it is impossible under the circumstances that legitimate children could take.

In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

Legitimate children of illegitimate child. In probate proceedings, where it is shown that intestate died without issue and the intestate's deceased husband was an illegitimate child of the same mother through whom claimants seek to establish heirship, the evidence was sufficient to definitely establish the relationship as to both intestate's deceased husband and intestate.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Children, grandchildren, nephews—parol evidence to determine meaning. Where such terms as children, grandchildren, or nephews are used in a will or a deed, and there are both legitimates and illegitimates and the testator has full knowledge of such fact, and the intention of the testator is not clearly expressed in the will, the use of such words creates no presumption, but the word is a neutral one and an ambiguity exists, and the intention of the testator or grantor must be determined not only from the provisions of will, but also in the light of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the will, and parol evidence is admissible to prove the intent of the testator or grantor.

In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

12031 From father.

Recognition—sufficiency. Evidence held to show such recognition of the paternity of an illegitimate child as to entitle the child to inherit.

Schermerhorn v Snell, 206-939; 221 NW 567

Birth during lawful wedlock—presumption. The presumption of legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock is so strong that it will yield only to clear, satisfactory and practically conclusive proof that the husband was:

1. Impotent, or
2. Entirely absent so as to have no access to the mother, or
3. Entirely absent from the mother at the period during which the child must have been begotten, or
4. Present with the mother under circumstances negating sexual intercourse with her.

Craven v Selway, 216-505; 246 NW 821

Unknown pregnancy—evidence. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to rebut the presumption of legitimacy which attends a child born in lawful wedlock.

Heath v Heath, 222-660; 269 NW 761

Child begotten out of, but born in, wedlock. A child manifestly begotten out of wedlock but born during wedlock is presumed to be the child of such intermarried persons.

Ryke v Ream, 212-126; 234 NW 196

Adjudication of bastardy—effect on child. That part of a decree of divorce which adjudges that a child of the wife is not the child of the husband is a nullity as far as the child is concerned.

Ryke v Ream, 212-126; 234 NW 196

Nonallowable evidence. The illegitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock, without proof that the husband was impotent or had no sexual access to the mother, cannot be established by the declarations of the mother, or of the putative father, or of said child, nor by proof of the mother's adultery.

(This does not imply that after illegitimacy has been made to appear, by competent proof, the declarations of the putative father and of the mother are not admissible to identify the actual father.)

Craven v Selway, 216-505; 246 NW 821

Declarations of mother admissible. Declarations of the deceased mother of a child born out of lawful wedlock, as to who was the father of said child, are admissible on the issue of paternity; also like declarations of other members of the family as a matter of family history. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to establish plaintiff's paternity.

Hopp v Petkin, 222-609; 269 NW 758

Recognition by father—heirs of child's spouse. In probate proceedings by claimants to establish heirship through the father of an illegitimate son, the evidence established such mutual recognition between the father and such son, during their lifetime, that entitled the heirs, as grandchildren of the father, to inherit from the illegitimate son's deceased widow, who died intestate and without issue.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Illegitimate children — common-law rule. Tho at common law an illegitimate child, or filius nullius, could not inherit because he was son of nobody, the statutes permitting illegitimate to inherit from mother and father abrogate common-law concept that child born out of wedlock is child of nobody, and without inheritable blood.

In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

Bastards—rights of inheritance. In Iowa, illegitimate children have inheritable blood.

In re Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758; 120 ALR 975

Rights of recognized illegitimate child. Under the statutes, a duly recognized illegitimate child has all the rights of inheritance of a legitimate child. The reason for denying inheritable blood is gone and remains a fiction only.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Share of heir as mere contract claim—how paid. Where the share or interest of a child in the estate of his or her alleged parent takes the form of a mere contract obligation against the estate, the child becomes a mere claimant against the estate and is payable as such, and not from the mere residue of the estate. So held where the parentage was in issue and was compromised by a court-approved agreement wherein the executor agreed, on behalf of the estate, (1) to set up a specified trust fund, the annuity of which was to be payable to said child during its lifetime, and (2) annually to pay said annuity to said child until the trust fund was actually set up.

In re Griffin, 220-1028; 262 NW 473

12032 Feloniously causing death.

Discussion. See 7 ILB 111—Profiting through murder

Forfeiture by causing death. Evidence which is insufficient to show, even by a preponderance, that a wife caused the death of her husband by involuntary manslaughter, manifestly, is insufficient to exclude her from participating in his estate.

Crouse v Crouse, 214-725; 240 NW 213

Homestead occupancy—duty of court to protect. The court is under an affirmative duty to protect a widow, especially when she is insolvent, in her presumptive right to occupy the homestead until her distributive share is set aside to her, and until a charge that she feloniously killed her husband has been established.

Crouse v Crouse, 210-508; 229 NW 850

Forfeiture of right by surviving spouse. Evidence reviewed, in an action to quiet title to real estate, and held insufficient to establish the guilt of a surviving wife of manslaughter in the death of her husband.

Crouse v Crouse, 217-814; 253 NW 122

Allowance to surviving spouse — defeating because of felonious homicide. In order to defeat, under this section, the application of a surviving widow for an allowance out of her husband's estate, the objector must distinctly allege and prove that the widow feloniously took, or feloniously caused or procured another to take, the life of her said husband, and must so do irrespective of any previous conviction of said widow of manslaughter.

In re Johnston, 220-328; 261 NW 908

12035 Escheat.

Escheat proceeding — striking allegations asking for new administrator—not appealable. Where the state of Iowa in an estate proceeding files an application for the escheat to the state of the property in the estate and includes in its application extensive allegations dealing with the selection of a new administrator, a motion to strike those portions of the pleading dealing with the new administrator, when sustained, does not present an interlocutory order from which an appeal will lie, and, if taken, the appeal will be dismissed on motion.

In re Bannon, 225-839; 282 NW 287

Possibility of heirs — speculation — escheat denied. In probate proceedings where judgment was rendered for property to escheat to state, findings of the trial court that intestate might have left a husband from whom she had not been divorced, and if she left a daughter a point was raised whether the daughter might have children of her own who would inherit under our laws, on trial de novo on appeal, were determined to be mere speculations of the court, without any factual or evidential basis, and the evidence of the heirs claiming under a deceased spouse of intestate definitely established that heirs of the intestate's own family and lineage, either through blood or marriage, had not been found.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Heirship established—proof of marriage. In probate proceedings by heirs claiming under the deceased spouse of intestate, the evidence was sufficient to establish the marriage between the intestate and deceased spouse, tho the trial court found that there was insufficient evidence to establish heirship and rendered judgment that the property escheat to the state as uninherited property.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

12036 Proceedings for escheat.

Notice to claimants—nonwaiver of required filing time for claims. Administrator's notice to possible claimants and heirs in escheat proceedings given in pursuance to court order did not, in effect, amount to a waiver of statute of limitations as to filing claims in probate nor constitute a new invitation to creditors to file claims.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

Denial of escheat—distribution to heirs. In probate proceeding, tried as in equity, wherein the trial court wholly disregarded the finding of fact by a referee, who was also administrator, that no heirs of intestate had been found, and wherein judgment was rendered for the property to escheat to the state, as against certain heirs claiming heirship through the deceased spouse of intestate, upon trial de novo on appeal, the findings of the trial court were found to be without support in the evidence, and judgment was reversed with instructions to enter a decree for a division of the property among the heirs as their interests may appear in the record.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

12037 Notice to persons interested.

Notice to claimants—nonwaiver of required filing time for claims. Administrator's notice to possible claimants and heirs in escheat proceedings given in pursuance to court order did not, in effect, amount to a waiver of statute of limitations as to filing claims in probate nor constitute a new invitation to creditors to file claims.

Joy v Bank, 226-1251; 286 NW 443

CHAPTER 509

ACCOUNTING OF EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS

12041 Reference—examination of accounts—fees.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 252; '34 AG Op 308; '38 AG Op 208; AG Op Jan. 10, '39

Reference—procedure—justifiable findings. Whether a referee in probate must accept the appointment, qualify, hold hearings, make a timely report and accompany the same by affidavit as required of referees appointed in ordinary civil cases (§11530, et seq. C., '31), quare; but the court may well find that such requirements (if they are such) were complied with when an unquestioned amended report of the referee recites such compliance.

In re Cochran, 220-33; 261 NW 514

Costs. Costs in probate consequent on objections filed to an intermediate report of an executor, and on a trial on such objections before a referee, are properly taxed to the objector if the objections be overruled.

In re Cochran, 220-33; 261 NW 514

Excessive allowance to referee. Allowance to referee in probate reviewed and held excessive to the extent of fifty per cent thereof.

In re Cochran, 220-33; 261 NW 514

12043 Additional reports.

Accounting by life tenant. A life tenant with testamentary power to encroach upon the principal, with remainder over, may be compelled to make full disclosure to a trustee in bankruptcy of a possible remainderman, of the property received by her under the will (the probate records not revealing such fact), but may not be compelled to account to such trustee as to her use of the property, in the absence of any allegation and proof of waste, fraud, or improper use or disposal.

Nelson v Horsford, 201-918; 208 NW 341; 45 ALR 515

Conditional rejection of item. The court may, very properly, in ruling upon an item in an interlocutory report, allow part of the item and continue the remainder for more adequate showing in the administrator's final report.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Evidence against administrator. Statements in the various interlocutory reports of an administrator, relative to the items of assets belonging to the estate, may be persuasive evidence against the administrator on the final accounting.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Executor trust company in receivership—court accountable to. Failure of the probate court to appoint a successor-executor for an insolvent trust company which had been a co-executor in a pending estate and which trust company had been placed in receivership, does not cause the receiver of such insolvent trust company to be accountable to probate court—a court not appointing him.

Bates v Evans, 226-438; 284 NW 385

Receiver of insolvent executor bank—not accountable to probate court—duty. Where the Scott county district court appoints a receiver to take charge of an insolvent trust company, which company had been previously appointed by the Johnson county district court as co-executor in an estate pending in the Johnson county district court, such receiver did not become an officer accountable to the Johnson county district court but was an officer of the Scott county district court having possession of the property and his duty was only to deliver such property under direction of the Scott county district court to the person entitled thereto.

Bates v Evans, 226-438; 284 NW 385

Reference—procedure—justifiable findings. Whether a referee in probate must accept the appointment, qualify, hold hearings, make a timely report and accompany the same by affidavit as required of referees appointed in ordinary civil cases (§11530 et seq., C., '31), quaere; but the court may well find that such requirements (if they are such) were complied with when an unquestioned amended report of the referee recites such compliance.

In re Cochran, 220-33; 261 NW 514

Costs—against losing party. Costs in probate consequent on objections filed to an intermediate report of an executor, and on a trial on such objections before a referee, are properly taxed to the objector if the objections be overruled.

In re Cochran, 220-33; 261 NW 514

12044 Final settlement—time limit.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 310

Long continued delay—effect. Objections by a devisee on final report that an estate was not closed within the statutory three years are quite futile when made for the first time long subsequent to the expiration of said period; and it is immaterial that the estate has been held open for a materially longer period without an authorizing court order when the court finds on final report that such delayed settlement was advisable.

In re Bourne, 210-883; 232 NW 169

Compensation—wrongful conduct—effect. An executor who not only inexcusably fails to close an estate at the end of the statutory three-year period, and to turn the unexpended funds over to a designated testamentary trustee, but continues wrongfully, for a series of years, to act as executor, is very properly denied a right to the compensation which the testamentary trustee would have been entitled to during said years.

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

Indefinite maturity. A promissory note which is payable "on settlement of William Dagel estate after date" is nonnegotiable because the final settlement of estates within three years is not a certainty.

Scott v Dagel, 200-1090; 205 NW 859

Delay in closing estate. Devisees could not complain of delay in closing estate where no loss resulted and delay was due in part to their own failure to pay inheritance taxes and their share of administration costs and rental moneys due the estate, and where they took no action to require executrix to close the estate altho their attorney, who was also a devisee, was aware of the facts.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

12045 Examination of executor.

Expert audit—expense not chargeable to trustee. A testamentary trustee of a going concern will not, on hearing on his final report, be charged with the expense of an expert audit of the books of the concern when such books are in the exclusive possession of the objectors together with expert annual audits thereof, the correctness of which is not questioned.

In re Evans, 212-1; 232 NW 72

12046 Accounting at inventoried value.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 310

Sale price of property. The court cannot do less than to charge an executor with the amount which he admits he received on a sale of estate property.

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

Realty values. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report, evidence supported trial court's fixing value of farm land at $125 per acre for the purpose of accounting.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Surety bound by adjudication. The surety on the bond of an administrator is conclusively bound by the nonfraudulent adjudication of the amount of the administrator's liability, even tho the surety had no notice of the hearing preceding such adjudication.

In re Jackson, 217-1046; 252 NW 775; 91 ALR 937

Objections to report—conversion issue not misjoinder. Where an executrix after resigning files her reports, objections thereto asking that she report and account for certain alleged estate assets claimed by executrix as individual property do not misjoin in probate an action against executrix for conversion, and such objections are not subject to motion to strike.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Fact findings in probate not triable de novo. Findings of fact by the trial court in a probate proceeding involving objections to an executor's report and payment of certain claims cannot be reviewed on appeal, such not being triable de novo.

In re Scholbrock, 224-593; 277 NW 5

Liability on bond—existing judgment against executor. Under the general rule that a judgment against an administrator is conclusive against the surety on his bond, where a judgment against an administrator for misappropriation of funds stands unreversed, it is error to set aside judgment on a bond and give the surety a new trial, since such order would not ipso facto vitiate a former order fixing the administrator's liability.

In re Sterner, 224-605; 277 NW 366

Executor's indebtedness to estate—interest charged. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report, where the executor owed a note to the estate bearing interest which was not added to principal, held, interest should be charged in the absence of any evidence to warrant a finding for the principal only.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Administrator's debt to decedent—extent of liability. In proceeding on objection to administrator's final report, burden of proof was on the administrator to show why he should not be held accountable for full value of property inventoried by him, which inventory included his own debt to decedent. He was liable on such debt to the extent of his ability to pay at any time during administration, and everything above his statutory exemptions should have been so utilized, and there being no evidence in the record from which the extent of his non-exempt property or income could be ascertained, such question would be remanded to lower court for determination.

In re Windhorst, 227-808; 288 NW 892

12047 Presumption from appraisalment.

Realty values—sufficiency of evidence. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report, evidence supported trial court's fixing value of farm land at $125 per acre for the purpose of accounting.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

12048 Profit and loss.

Self-enrichment of trustee—insufficient evidence.

In re Evans, 212-1; 232 NW 72

Nonchargeable with interest. Evidence reviewed and held that a testamentary trustee, vested with unusually broad managerial powers, was not chargeable with interest on bank deposits, even tho he was a stockholder in the bank.

In re Evans, 212-1; 232 NW 72

Distribution of estate—interest on unpaid legacy. An executor may be chargeable with interest on an unpaid cash legacy to a minor, even tho his actions have been in perfect good faith.

Irwin v Bank, 218-477; 255 NW 671

Executor's indebtedness to estate—interest charged. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report, where the executor owed a note to the estate bearing interest which was not added to principal, held, interest should be charged in the absence of any evidence to warrant a finding for the principal only.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Losses—when not liable. A testamentary trustee of a business, especially when it is a hazardous one, is not chargeable with a loss attending operations which were in keeping with the general practices of the business.

In re Evans, 212-1; 232 NW 72

Funds lost in bank closing. Evidence sustained finding of trial court that executrix was not negligent and therefore exonerated from personal liability for estate funds lost by closing of bank in which decedent had also kept funds during his lifetime, where there was no showing as to bank's insolvency prior to receivership, nor that executrix had any knowledge of its failing condition.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

Estoppel. The devisees of an estate who cause the executor to withdraw estate funds from the bank in which the deceased had them on deposit are estopped thereafter to complain of a loss of said funds resulting from the subsequent insolvency of the new depository, the executor having acted in good faith and with due prudence.

In re Olson, 206-706; 219 NW 401

Shortage in acreage. Where lands of an estate are ordered sold for a lump sum, parol evidence is admissible to show that the land was, in reality, sold at a certain price per acre and that the acreage fell short of what was supposed to be the acreage, and that the administrator properly made a deduction for said shortage.

In re Oelwein, 217-1137; 251 NW 694

Non de novo hearing. An appeal from an order adjudging the final liability of an administrator is not heard de novo. In other words, the supported findings of the trial court are conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Enfield, 217-273; 251 NW 637

Findings in probate. A supported finding by the probate court that an administrator had failed to exercise ordinary care to preserve the funds of the estate is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Foster, 218-1202; 256 NW 744

Chargeable with compound interest. An executor who wrongfully fails to close an estate within the statutory 3-year period and uses the estate funds for his personal enrichment, is properly charged with interest at 6 percent with annual rests from the expiration of said 3 years, even tho the net interest would only have been 4 percent had the executor closed the estate within the time required by statute and turned the remaining assets over to a trustee, as directed by the will.

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

Reduction of widow's allowance—effect. Where the amount allowed a widow for her support for the year following the death of the husband is taken by her from the funds of the estate (she being executrix) and spent, a subsequent order, in an adversary proceeding, reducing said former amount is conclusive on the surety—and, of course, on the executrix—and in an action against the principal and surety the reduced amount is the limit of the allowable credit.

In re Durey, 215-257; 245 NW 236

Keeping funds in insolvent bank. An executor or administrator who, on his own motion and authority, deposits and keeps estate funds in an insolvent bank of which he is cashier, must account for the resulting loss.

In re Foster, 218-1202; 256 NW 744

Unauthorized bank deposit. An executor who, on his own motion and without any authorizing order of court, deposits the funds of the estate in a financially embarrassed bank of which he was president, and in which he was heavily interested, and which later failed, must account to the estate in cash for the loss. The president of a bank must be held to have knowledge of the general financial condition of the bank.

In re Rorick, 218-107; 253 NW 916

Funds used by executor—interest. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report where it is shown that the estate funds were intermingled with executor's funds and used by him with no attempt being made to reinvest such funds, executor is held chargeable with interest at 6 percent a year with annual rests.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

12049 Mistakes corrected.

Intermediate accounts. Mistakes in ex parte orders, made during settlement of an estate, are subject to correction at any time before final settlement of the estate.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 239 NW 739

Finding as to executor's shortage—conclusiveness.

In re Carpenter, 210-553; 231 NW 376

Adjudicating shortage without notice to surety. The sureties on the bond of an administrator are not entitled to notice of the proceedings wherein the probate court determines the amount the administrator is short in his accounts. It follows that such adjudication, in the absence of fraud or mistake, is final as to said sureties.

In re Kessler, 213-633; 239 NW 555

Accounting—burden of proof. One who demands an accounting of a finally discharged administrator must assume the burden of establishing his claim.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

Burden of proof. Principle reaffirmed that when there are inconsistencies between the final report of an administrator and his previous reports he has the burden of proof to sustain his final report.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Setting aside final report. The final report of an executor or administrator, after due approval and discharge, will be set aside only on a clear and satisfactory showing of fraud, mistake, or other equitable grounds.

Becker v Becker, 202-7; 209 NW 447

Inhering fraud. A final order of discharge of an administrator may not be set aside, opened, or otherwise questioned on a showing of fraud which inheres in said order of discharge.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

Reports—self-impeachment by administrator. An administrator will not be heard to say that he did not have notice of his own verified reports. It follows that he has frail ground upon which to impeach his own reports, especially when all other heirs and interested parties acquiesce therein.

In re Olson, 213-784; 239 NW 527

Final discharge—effect. A final order of discharge of an administrator is not conclusive as to property fraudulently omitted by him from his accounts.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

Fraudulent allowance—annulment. The fraudulent allowance of the claim that certain property belongs to claimant, and not to the estate, may be set aside on proper application at any time before the estate is finally settled, and especially so when the applicant was not a party to the original allowance.

In re Sarvey, 206-527; 219 NW 318

Correction—erroneous advice of attorney. The fact that the attorney for an administrator, without fraud, erroneously advised the widow of the deceased that she was not entitled to an allowance for her support owing to the fact that an antenuptial agreement existed, and the fact that the widow relied on such advice, does not constitute a "mistake in settlement" such as will allow the widow, after the estate is closed, to make application for such allowance.

In re Weidman, 209-603; 228 NW 571

Mistakes—right of heirs to disregard administration. Notwithstanding the fact that in the administration of an estate the tangible interest of the deceased in a partnership has been sold to the surviving partners under order of court, and the proceeds accounted for, and the administrator discharged, the heirs may maintain, against the surviving partners, an action for an accounting as to the share of said deceased in elements of partnership property other than the tangible property, such, for instance, as profits, and going concern and good-will values. And especially is this true when the surviving partners fraudulently concealed said latter elements of value at the time of the administration aforesaid.

Anderson v Droge, 216-159; 248 NW 344

Improvident order not adjudication. An order of court, in an insolvent estate, authorizing, without notice to creditors, the executrix (she being the surviving widow) to pay to herself the proceeds of a sale of the exempt property of the deceased, based solely on an agreement to that effect between the widow and heirs, is a mistake, an improvident act, and, therefore, a nullity and not an adjudication binding on creditors, when the testator made his exempt property liable for the payment of his debts and the widow elected to take under the will.

In re Durey, 215-257; 245 NW 236

Claims overlooked. A claim against an estate, duly verified and filed, and not allowed or disallowed by the administrator, cannot be deemed adjudicated by an order approving the final report of the administrator when the claim, the claimant and his representative were, by mistake and oversight, wholly overlooked both in said final report and in the notice of hearing thereon. It follows that an equitable action will lie, subsequent to said approval, to open up the estate and to allow the claim.

Harding v Troy, 217-775; 252 NW 521

Failure to list debt owed. When two sons, as executors of their deceased father's estate, in their final report failed to list as an asset of the estate a note and mortgage owed by one son to the father, altho both sons knew of the debt, in an action in which the other son as heir to half the estate sought to collect the note and foreclose the mortgage, the court's adjudication that all property in the estate had been administered estopped him from obtaining relief when the final settlement was not attacked on the grounds of fraud or mistake.

Joor v Joor, 227-870; 289 NW 463

Payment of claim after final report. Instead of opening up an estate, after final report and discharge, for the allowance and payment of an overlooked claim, the court may accomplish the same result by allowing the claim and ordering it paid from funds derived from the sale of lands under pending partition proceedings.

Harding v Troy, 217-775; 252 NW 521

Unallowable setting aside. An allowance by the court of a claim in probate, after issue is joined thereon and after due hearing, becomes a final adjudication in the absence of fraud or collusion and may not thereafter be set aside without hearing or evidence.

ANALYSIS

I CONTESTING SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS II FINAL SETTLEMENT AND DISCHARGE

I CONTESTING SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS

Burden of proof. One who demands an accounting of a finally discharged administrator must assume the burden of establishing his claim.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

Administrator—fraudulent omission. A final order of discharge of an administrator is not conclusive as to property fraudulently omitted by him from his accounts.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

Burden of proof. An administrator has the burden of proof to establish the nonprejudicial nature of his irregular report.

In re Eschweiler, 202-259; 209 NW 273

Inconsistent reports. Principle reaffirmed that when there are inconsistencies between the final report of an administrator and his previous reports, he has the burden of proof to sustain his final report.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Evidence against administrator. Statements in the various interlocutory reports of an administrator, relative to the items of assets belonging to the estate, may be persuasive evidence against the administrator on the final accounting.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Irregular expenditures. Irregular but non-fraudulent disbursements by an administrator may be sustained on a showing that neither the estate nor the creditors thereof have been prejudiced.

In re Eschweiler, 202-259; 209 NW 273

Trustee borrowing from himself—accounting in cash (?) or in investments (?). A trustee, duly appointed by the court to execute a contract trusteeship, who loans the trust funds to himself, and uses the same in the purchase and improvement of various properties, without any authorizing order of court and without the knowledge or consent of the beneficiaries of the trust, will, on final report, be ordered to account in cash for said funds, and not in the physical properties bought by him, especially when said properties are inferior to the standard of investments required by said contract.

In re Skinner, 215-1021; 247 NW 484

Improper payments—assessment on bank stock. An executor will not be given credit for estate funds voluntarily used by him in discharging an assessment on bank stock which is held by the estate solely as collateral security.

In re Moe, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

Executor's indebtedness to estate—interest charged. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report, where the executor owed a note to the estate bearing interest which was not added to principal, held, interest should be charged in the absence of any evidence to warrant a finding for the principal only.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Funds used by executor—interest chargeable. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report where it is shown that the estate funds were intermingled with executor's funds and used by him with no attempt being made to reinvest such funds, executor is held chargeable with interest at 6 percent a year with annual rests.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Collection and management of estate—depositing funds in bank—negligence. An executor or administrator, while not an insurer of the safety of estate funds, must exercise ordinary care and prudence in preserving such funds. Evidence reviewed in detail, and held to support a finding and order that the administrator had been negligent in depositing and keeping the estate funds in a bank of which he was cashier.

In re Enfield, 217-273; 251 NW 637

Compromise and settlement. A residuary devisee may not object to an accounting by an executor on a ground theretofore fully compromised and settled by such devisee.

In re Murphy, 209-679; 228 NW 658

Estoppel. A residuary legatee who causes the executor to obtain a new mortgage as security for an indebtedness due the estate, and thereupon to cancel a pre-existing mortgage which secured the same debt, is necessarily precluded from holding the executor personally liable in case the new mortgage proves inadequate as a security.

Wilson v Norris, 204-867; 216 NW 46

Attorney fee for extraordinary services—review. Tho a presumption of regularity exists as to an unassailed allowance of attorney fees for extraordinary services, and tho ex parte orders fixing such fees without introduction of evidence are not uncommon, yet such orders are always open to review on final settlement.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Objections in probate—securities ownership issue. The probate court having jurisdiction to compel executrix to account for all assets, and the burden to sustain her accounts being on executrix, objections to her accounts raising the issue of ownership of certain securities are triable in probate without a jury.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Striking objections in probate—affidavits improper. A motion to strike objections to probate accounts on the grounds of misjoinder of actions is determinable only on the contents of the pleading attacked without aid of affidavits.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

Objections—conversion issue not misjoinder. Where an executrix after resigning files her reports, objections thereto asking that she report and account for certain alleged estate assets claimed by executrix as individual property do not misjoin in probate an action against executrix for conversion, and such objections are not subject to motion to strike.

In re Rinard, 224-100; 275 NW 485

II FINAL SETTLEMENT AND DISCHARGE

Burden of proof. An executor carries the burden to sustain his final report.

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

In re Moe, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

Final report of administrator—hearing. Hearings on final reports of administrators are not reviewed de novo in the appellate court.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Reports not reviewed de novo on appeal. The trial court's findings in probate proceedings relating to executor's reports are not triable or reviewable de novo on appeal to the supreme court. If the findings have support in the record, they cannot be disturbed.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

In re Smith, 228- ; 289 NW 694

Enforcing claim against executor on final report. A claim in favor of the estate and against an executor may be enforced on hearing on the executor's final report.

In re Bourne, 210-883; 232 NW 169

II FINAL SETTLEMENT AND DISCHARGE—continued

Final order—conclusiveness. A final order in probate, entered on due notice, including notice to the wife of the deceased, wherein, inter alia, provision is made for carrying out the terms of an antenuptial contract in favor of the wife (wherein she waived her distributive share) is a complete bar to a subsequent action by the wife to recover said distributive share.

Weidman v Money, 205-1062; 219 NW 39

Decisions—conclusiveness. The decision of the probate court is conclusive on the appellate court when the record reveals evidentiary support for such decision. So held where the court on objections to the final report of an executor held that a certain promissory note was not an asset of the estate because testatrix came into possession thereof by payment and not by purchase.

In re Finarty, 219-678; 259 NW 112

Improper vacation of order. An order approving the final report of an executor and discharging him, on due notice to all parties interested, cannot be later set aside on the ex parte application of the former executor.

In re Brockmann, 207-707; 223 NW 473

Payment of claim after final report. Instead of opening up an estate, after final report and discharge, for the allowance and payment of an overlooked claim, the court may accomplish the same result by allowing the claim and ordering it paid from funds derived from the sale of lands under pending partition proceedings.

Harding v Troy, 217-775; 252 NW 521

Unallowable credit. An administrator is properly refused credit for a claim due the administrator when the claim has never been filed against the estate, and when there is no evidence sustaining the claim.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Credit for unauthorized expenditures. An executor who is sole testamentary devisee (the widow having ultimately elected to claim her statutory distributive share) should be given credit on his final report for proper sums in good faith paid by him as repairs, taxes, and interest on incumbrances on the real estate of the deceased, in order to protect and preserve such real estate, even tho such payments were not authorized by the court; and this is true even tho the mortgages ultimately absorbed all of said real estate.

In re Clark, 203-224; 212 NW 481

Co-executors—failure to list debt owed by one—other estopped. When two sons, as executors of their deceased father's estate, in their final report failed to list as an asset of the estate a note and mortgage owed by one son to the father, altho both sons knew of the debt, in an action in which the other son as heir to half the estate sought to collect the note and foreclose the mortgage, the court's adjudication that all property in the estate had been administered estopped him from obtaining relief when the final settlement was not attacked on the grounds of fraud or mistake.

Joor v Joor, 227-870; 289 NW 463

Accounting and settlement—compensation—supported allowances. Allowances made by the court as compensation to the executor and to his assistants and attorney, which have ample support in the evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal.

In re Mann, 217-1134; 251 NW 83

Fees for extraordinary services. An executor has the burden to prove the extraordinary services and the reasonableness of additional compensation.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Disbursements to protect assets of estate. An administrator who in good faith pays a valid debt owing by the estate in order to redeem valuable securities belonging to the estate, and held by the creditor as collateral in an amount far in excess of the debt, will be credited as for a prudent expenditure irrespective of the subsequent claims of general creditors, and irrespective of the fact that the administrator did not wait for the filing of the claim, or secure the authority of the court to make such payment.

Elliott v Bank, 209-1258; 228 NW 274

Payment of unfiled but valid claims. An executor will be credited with the amount of valid, enforceable claims paid by him even tho such claims were not formally filed against the estate.

In re Bourne, 210-883; 232 NW 169

Allowance of credit. An order of the probate court granting an executor credit on his final report for the amount paid by him on his own motion, on a claim against the estate, is conclusive on the appellate court if the record reveals supporting testimony as to the genuineness of the claim.

In re Plendl, 218-103; 253 NW 819

Allowable failure to collect rents. A widow who is entitled to receive during life from the executor the annual rents accruing on lands belonging to residuary devisees, may allow such devisee to occupy the land free of rent, and objections to the executor's final report will not lie because of such action.

In re Murphy, 209-679; 228 NW 658

Certificate of deposit not collected from insolvent bank—executor a bank director. A finding by the trial court that loss to an estate through the failure to collect on a certificate of deposit belonging to the estate was not caused by the fault of the executor was sustained by evidence that the executor who was a director of the bank on which the certificate was drawn, but took no active part in the management of the bank and did not know it was insolvent, had properly presented the certificate for payment and had been refused because of the insolvency of the bank.

In re Smith, 228- ; 289 NW 694

Delay in closing estate. Devisees could not complain of delay in closing estate where no loss resulted and delay was due in part to their own failure to pay inheritance taxes and their share of administration costs and rental moneys due the estate, and where they took no action to require executrix to close the estate altho their attorney, who was also a devisee, was aware of the facts.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

Withholding distribution until devisee's debt to estate paid. Where certain devisees were holding rents belonging to estate, trial court properly ordered that no distribution be made to them until such rents were turned over to the executrix.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

Justifiable refusal to discharge. The surety on the bond of an executor may not complain of an order of court which simply refuses a discharge of the executor and his bond because of the possession by the executor of a sum of money received by him for one who is not a party to the proceeding.

In re Clark, 203-224; 212 NW 481

Taxation—exemption to educational institution—essential proof. Where a will provides that the residue of the estate shall pass to an educational institution of this state as a part of its endowment fund, exemption from taxation on lands will not be granted except on the production in evidence of the probate records, showing judicially (1) that the estate has been fully settled, and (2) that the lands in question constitute part of the residue of said estate, and, as a consequence, belong, legally or equitably, to said institution.

Wapello Bank v Keokuk Co., 209-1127; 229 NW 721

12051 Opening settlement.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 310

Absence of adverse party. An order approving the final report of an executor may be set aside on application of a party adversely interested when such party was never made a party to the hearing on said order.

In re Durham, 203-497; 211 NW 358

Failure of state to observe statute—effect. When the state allows an estate to be fully settled, and the executor to be duly and finally discharged without the payment of an inheritance tax, and makes no application to open up the accounts of the executor, it may not thereafter enforce the statutory personal liability of the executor to pay said tax.

In re Meinert, 204-355; 213 NW 938

Negligence. A delay of some three years after entry of an order discharging an administrator before instituting an action to open up an estate, for the correction of a mistake, does not necessarily constitute such negligence as to bar the action.

Harding v Troy, 217-775; 252 NW 521

Adjudication of liability—conclusiveness. An unappealed order of court adjudicating the amount of the liability of a trustee to the beneficiary is conclusive on the trustee and ipso facto on his surety.

Dodds v Cartwright, 209-835; 226 NW 918

Surety bound by adjudication. The surety on the bond of an executrix is not entitled to notice of the hearing on the final report of the executrix. It follows that said surety is not necessarily entitled to have the final order adjudging the liability of the executrix set aside "within 3 months" of its entry, and to have said liability readjudicated, especially when no fraud or mistake is charged.

Reason: The surety is in privity with the executrix and is legally in the probate court when the liability of the executrix is determined.

In re Holman, 216-1186; 250 NW 498; 93 ALR 1363

Ex parte order—review. A ruling on a motion to vacate ex parte order allowing executor's and attorney's fees for extraordinary services does not constitute res judicata and, on objections to final report, is not a bar to a review of question of reasonableness of charges for such services.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Unallowable opening of settled estate. The holder of a court-established claim which is legally enforceable against property which passed to an heir, on the settlement of the estate of the person primarily liable on said claim, has no occasion, and no right, in the absence of any showing of fraud or mistake, to have the settlement of said estate opened up for the re-establishment in probate of said claim.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

12052 Discharge.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 310

Probate orders. An order approving the final report of an administrator is not, on appeal, reviewable de novo.

In re Oelwein, 217-1137; 251 NW 694

In re Mann, 217-1134; 251 NW 83

In re Fish, 220-1328; 264 NW 542

Setting aside — conditions. Principle reaffirmed that an order discharging an executor may be impeached only for fraud or mistake extrinsic or collateral to the questions tried and inhering in the order or judgment assailed.

In re Holman, 216-1186; 250 NW 498; 93 ALR 1363

Failure of executor to pay tax. When the state allows an estate to be fully settled and the executor to be duly and finally discharged without the payment of an inheritance tax, and makes no application to open up the accounts of the executor, it may not thereafter enforce the statutory personal liability of the executor to pay said tax. This is true on two fundamental propositions, to wit: (1) that the court, being prohibited by statute from discharging the executor until the tax is paid, must be presumed, in entering such discharge, to have found that no tax was due; and (2) that the state, by designating the court as its special statutory representative, will not be permitted to deny such presumption.

In re Meinert, 204-355; 213 NW 938

Subsequent demand for accounting. An administrator may not, after the lapse of more than 5 years from his final discharge, be compelled to account for funds claimed to have been fraudulently withheld by him, when the evidence of such withholding was accessible to the complainant at and prior to the time the order of discharge was entered.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

12057 Failure to account.

Funds lost in bank closing. Evidence sustained finding of trial court that executrix was not negligent and therefore exonerated from personal liability for estate funds lost by closing of bank in which decedent had also kept funds during his lifetime, where there was no showing as to bank's insolvency prior to receivership, nor that executrix had any knowledge of its failing condition.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

12058 Executor of executor.

Ordering accounting and suit on bond. Where an executor of an executor filed in the first estate a final report as the deceased executor ought to have done, the court, on hearing on such report, may fix the amount for which the deceased executor should have accounted, and require accounting from his estate, and provide, in case of default, that action shall be brought against his estate, and on his bond.

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

Trust property held by ward. A contract by the guardian of an incompetent, for the sale of land owned by the ward solely as trustee, tho approved by the court, cannot, in any sense, be deemed the contract of the ward; therefore, such contract cannot, in the event of the death of the ward, be deemed to create any indebtedness against the estate of the ward.

Copple v Morrison, 221-183; 264 NW 113

12059 Executors in their own wrong.

Discussion. See 6 ILB 65, 7 ILB 40—Executor of his own wrong

Wrongfully acting executor chargeable with interest. An executor who wrongfully fails to close an estate within the statutory three-year period, and uses the estate funds for his personal enrichment, is properly charged with interest at 6 percent, with annual rests, from the expiration of said three years, even tho the net interest would only have been 4 percent, had the executor closed the estate within the time required by statute and turned the remaining assets over to a trustee, as directed by the will.

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

Improper handling of estate—action to recover loss. In an action to recover against the estate of a deceased executor for losses caused by improper handling of an estate, the plaintiffs had no right to appeal from a ruling sustaining a demurrer filed by the defendants when the plaintiffs did not elect to stand on the pleadings nor suffer final judgment to be entered against them.

Hayes v Selzer, 227-693; 289 NW 25

Executors de son tort—liability. A legatee of a strictly personal-property, debt-free estate who, with the approval of all other legatees, distributes the entire estate in strict accord with the will of the testator is thereafter under no obligation to account to a subsequently appointed executor who does not question the correctness of her distribution. Especially is this true when such legatee offers to pay the cost of such unnecessary administration.

Davenport v Sandeman, 204-927; 216 NW 55

Heirs as trustees—nonliability. Heirs who held property of deceased as trustees under an agreement by heirs to settle estate without administration could not be held administrators de son tort, in absence of any misconduct toward trust.

Meeker v Meeker, (NOR); 283 NW 873

Right to appoint successor. An order of the probate court appointing an executor in place of an executor ordered removed, is perfectly valid and such new appointee after qualifying is not an intermeddler even tho the order of removal is subsequently reversed on appeal, when the order of removal was in no manner stayed pending the appeal.

In re Mann, 217-1134; 251 NW 83

12061 Specific performance—how enforced.

Specific performance generally. See under Ch 420, Note 1 (X)

Conditions precedent. Principle reaffirmed that a contract may not be specifically enforced (1) unless the execution is established by very clear and definite proof, and (2) unless the terms of the contract as established are equally clear and definite.

Lockie v Baker, 206-21; 218 NW 483

Oral contract to devise or convey lands. An oral offer to convey or devise land in consideration of services to be performed for the offerer, and an oral acceptance thereof by the offeree, are specifically enforceable when both the execution of the contract and the performance thereof are established by clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence, and when the acts of performance are referable exclusively to such contract. Evidence held ample to establish such a contract and the performance thereof.

Houlette v Johnson, 205-687; 216 NW 679

Compulsory deed. The court will order an executor to execute a deed to real property, and to the proper person, on proof that the deceased personally owned no interest in the property and was holding the legal title in consequence of a resulting trust; but the evidence must be so explicit and decisive as to leave the existence of no essential fact to conjecture, or to remote and uncertain inference.

In re Moore, 211-804; 232 NW 729

Contracts enforceable. The fractional owner of property who quitclaims his interest to his co-owner in order to enable the co-owner to mortgage the entire property for his own purpose, and who receives from the co-owner an agreement to reconvey, free of incumbrance, within a named time or to pay a named sum, may not, after the mortgage is executed, and after the mortgagee has in good faith agreed to take over the property in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, obtain specific performance of the agreement to reconvey, even tho the mortgagee, before the deal was fully closed, had notice of the agreement to reconvey.

Clarkson v Bank, 218-326; 253 NW 25

Past consideration for contract to will property. Altho past services or past indebtedness may be a lawful consideration for an agreement, the parol evidence of such past services or indebtedness will not establish a contract by which the debtor agrees to sell or transfer his property by will in satisfaction of such services or debt.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Oral contract to will property. Where the plaintiff had done work for a woman who was ill, and had been promised that she would give him certain property in her will in return for the services, and plaintiff seeks specific performance of the agreement, claiming as consideration his oral agreement not to file a claim against the estate for the services until after such claim had been barred by the statute of limitations, such oral agreement was only the manner adopted for extinguishing the claim for the past services and the consideration for the oral agreement was the cancellation of the claim for the services and the discharge and compromise of the obligation which had accrued.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

12063 Compensation.

Compensation and attorney fees. The court has a discretion to allow attorney fees and compensation to an executor in a less sum than the statutory maximum.

Albright v Albright, 209-409; 227 NW 913

Traveling expenses. An administrator is properly given credit for his reasonable traveling expenses necessitated by the discharge of his official duties.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Maximum percentage allowable for ordinary services. An administrator is not necessarily entitled, for ordinary services, to the maximum percentage provided by the statute.

In re Lindell, 220-431; 262 NW 819

Statutory fees as limit. Record held to support the action of the trial court in confining the compensation of an executor to the statutory percentage, he having rendered no extraordinary services.

In re Moe, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 233 NW 718

Excessive allowance to referee. Allowance to referee in probate reviewed and held excessive to the extent of fifty percent thereof.

In re Cochran, 220-33; 261 NW 514

Supported allowances. Allowances made by the court as compensation to the executor and to his assistants and attorney, which have ample support in the evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal.

In re Mann, 217-1134; 251 NW 83

Evidence supporting allowance. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's report, evidence held sufficient to support allowance of fee of $750 where executor was required to look after several hundred acres of land, collecting rents, attending to the digging of two wells, making repairs, and attempting to find purchasers for land at a time when it was almost impossible to sell land or collect rents.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Ex parte allowance of executor's and attorney's fees. Tho unsupported by affidavits, every material allegation in a verified motion attacking an ex parte order allowing executor's and attorney's fees for extraordinary services will, in the absence of attack thereon or resistance thereto, be taken as true.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Offsetting executor's debt against compensation. A debt due from an executor to the estate may not be set off against the amount allowed the executor for services as such executor, when the will provides that such debt shall be treated as an advancement. So held where assignees of the compensation were making claim thereto.

In re Bourne, 210-883; 232 NW 169

Drawing fees in partial payments. It is not improper for an administrator to draw a portion of the fees due him and to use the same in retiring an obligation due from himself to the estate.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Forfeiture of compensation. An executor who not only inexcusably fails to close an estate at the end of the statutory three-year period, and to turn the unexpended funds over to a designated testamentary trustee, but continues wrongfully, for a series of years, to act as executor, is very properly denied a right to the compensation which the testamentary trustee would have been entitled to during said years.

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

Forfeiture of compensation. The failure of an executor to keep the estate funds separate from his personal funds, and the failure to keep reasonably complete and accurate accounts, may justify the court in denying the executor any compensation.

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

Sale of mortgaged lands—basis for computing compensation. Compensation to an administrator for the sale of incumbered land is properly computed by figuring the statutory percentage on the expressed consideration less the amount of the existing incumbrance.

In re Lindell, 220-431; 262 NW 819

12064 Attorney fee.

Permissible employment. The good-faith employment by an executor of two firms to handle, in a large estate, proceedings for the construction of a cumbersome and involved will is not necessarily improper.

In re Leighton, 210-913; 224 NW 543

Burden of proof. The burden of proof is on attorney claiming fees for services, whether ordinary or extraordinary, and, while court may to a certain extent use its own judgment, claim should be based on evidence.

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

Determining factors. The court's allowance of administrator's attorney fees is largely discretionary, yet discretion must be reasonable, and the allowance should represent the fair and reasonable value of services rendered, taking into consideration the character of the services, the amount and extent of estate, and other pertinent matters.

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

Evidentiary support required. Tho a presumption of correctness exists in favor of trial court's decision fixing compensation for administrator's attorney, yet, where objection is made to application for allowance, and no evidence is introduced as to the services other than a bare statement in the applicant's affidavit, the trial court is not warranted in making a finding involving both nature and value of services.

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

Review. The appellate court will review an attorney's allowance for ordinary or extraordinary services to an estate where it appears from the record that the allowance is excessive or the claim therefor is not supported by sufficient evidence.

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

Review of order on appeal. On appeal from an order approving a referee's report in probate, the appellate court will not review an ex parte order of the probate court made two days after the making of the order appealed from, and pertaining to the amount of attorney fees allowed to the attorneys for the executor in said reference proceedings.

In re Cochran, 220-33; 261 NW 514

Employment for partisan purpose. An executrix who, as widow, has renounced the will, and elected to take her statutory distributive share, may not, at the expense of the estate, employ attorneys to take a partisan attitude in a rival contest as to heirship.

In re Leighton, 210-913; 224 NW 543

Allowable practice. An attorney may present his claim for services rendered to an administrator directly to the court.

In re Leighton, 210-913; 224 NW 543

Attorney fees charge against estate. An attorney who, in good faith, performs services in the probate of a will and in the appointment of the executrix with the knowledge and active assistance of the widow who was nominated executrix by the will and appointed by the court, has a claim against the estate for the value of said services.

In re Anderson, 216-1017; 250 NW 183

Services to trustee. While the statute seems to make no provision for the allowance of attorney fees for services rendered to trustees, yet such allowance is proper when the settlement of the estate and the carrying on of the trust is one integral and interwoven matter.

In re Leighton, 210-913; 224 NW 543

Improper allowance of attorney fees. A trust created by a legislative appropriation act solely for the "education, care, and keep" of a designated person may not be depleted by the allowance by the court of attorney fees for services rendered not in the administration of the trust, but in inducing the legislature to make the appropriation.

In re Gage, 208-603; 226 NW 64

Partial payment. An administrator is properly given credit for an apparently reasonable sum advanced to the attorney for the estate as partial payment for services rendered.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Irregular payment—approval. Fees to an attorney for an administrator may, within safe limits, be allowed under interlocutory orders pending the administration; but if such fees are irregularly paid, e. g., paid without the advance approval of the court, nevertheless the court will, on a proper application, approve such payments if they are shown to be reasonable and legally authorizable.

In re Olson, 213-784; 239 NW 527

Fee fixed by agreement of heirs—when conclusive. The fee of an administrator's attorney may be fixed by agreement of the heirs and the amount is of no concern to anyone else, where no rights of creditors are involved.

In re Schropfer, 225-576; 281 NW 139

Revoking allowance—material evidence withheld from court. An executor being an officer of the court, the matter of his expenses is at all times subject to revision, so an order fixing his attorney's fees should be set aside when it appears that material matters were not before the court at the hearing.

In re Schropfer, 225-576; 281 NW 139

12065 Expenses and extraordinary services.

Burden of proof. An executor has the burden to prove the extraordinary services and the reasonableness of additional compensation.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Extraordinary services—burden. The court may not in probate proceedings make an allowance to attorneys for "extraordinary" services in the absence of allegation and proof that they were such.

In re Murphy, 209-679; 228 NW 658

Extra fees—substantial showing required. An indefinite and unsubstantial showing of extraordinary services rendered by an executor will not permit an award of additional compensation.

In re Morgan, 225-746; 281 NW 346

Fees for extraordinary services. Without evidence as to extent and value of extraordinary services, an allowance therefor to executor and his attorney is not res judicata as to factual matters, and the attorney's statement which fails to separate time spent in court room from time spent in briefing and consultation will not furnish proper legal basis for any final adjudication.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Extraordinary services. While court may take judicial notice of its own records in same case, this does not obviate necessity for proof of services and the reasonable value as to an attorney fee claim for extraordinary services to estate.

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

Evidence supporting allowance. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's report, evidence held sufficient to support allowance of fee of $750 where executor was required to look after several hundred acres of land, collecting rents, attending to the digging of two wells, making repairs, and attempting to find purchasers for land at a time when it was almost impossible to sell land or collect rents.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Statutory fees as limit. Record held to support the action of the trial court in confining the compensation of an executor to the statutory percentage, he having rendered no extraordinary services.

Mills v Manchester, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

Attorney fees—extraordinary services. It was not error to allow attorneys for executrix twice the statutory fee where record showed that substantial extraordinary legal services were rendered and that the allowance was reasonable and proper.

In re David, 227-352; 288 NW 418

Allowance by court—conclusiveness. An allowance by the court to an executor for ordinary and extraordinary services is conclusive on the appellate court when supported by competent and sufficient testimony.

In re Conkling, 221-1332; 268 NW 67

Ex parte allowance—proper attack by motion. While an estate is being administered, an ex parte order allowing executor's and attorney's fees for ordinary and extraordinary services is properly attacked by motion.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Extraordinary services. Proceedings (1) for the construction of a will, (2) for the determination of a contested heirship, and (3) for the adjustment of the federal inheritance tax, are all in the nature of extraordinary matters within the meaning of this statute.

In re Leighton, 210-913; 224 NW 543

Appeal from the construction of a will. A reasonable allowance of attorney fees for services rendered on a good-faith appeal by the executor from an order of the trial court construing a cumbersome and involved will, is proper.

In re Leighton, 210-913; 224 NW 543

Extraordinary expense. An executor is under duty to defend a will after it is duly probated, and may employ counsel at the expense of the estate to contest an action to set aside the probate and to contest the will, even tho he has already employed counsel to advise him in his ordinary duties, and even tho he is personally interested in sustaining the will; and the court should, irrespective of the amount which the executor has agreed to pay, make a reasonable allowance to the executor for such expense when it is extraordinary.

In re Jewe, 201-1154; 208 NW 723

Inheritance tax claim—extraordinary services. Ordinarily, service rendered by attorney in settlement of inheritance tax claim is part of usual service in settlement of estate, but where litigation arises, or is likely to arise, apart from ordinary computation of tax, payment for extraordinary services may be allowed.

Glynn v Bank, 227-932; 289 NW 722

Traveling expenses. An administrator is properly given credit for his reasonable traveling expenses necessitated by the discharge of his official duties.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Disbursement for protection of interest in failing bank. An administrator may be given credit for estate funds paid out by him for notes purchased of a bank in which the estate was materially interested, in order to enable the bank to realize sufficient cash successfully to overcome a run on the bank, it appearing that the estate had reimbursed or could reimburse itself by collecting the notes so purchased.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Payment of voluntary assessment on bank stock. An administrator is properly given credit for paying a voluntary assessment on bank stock owned by the estate, when such payment was in the interest of the estate, and necessary in order to reorganize the bank and to maintain it as a going concern.

In re Atkinson, 210-1245; 232 NW 640

Justifiable advance by executor of his own funds. An executor who, because of a temporary shortage in estate funds, advances sums from his own private funds and therewith pays legal claims against the estate, rather than to sell, on a poor market, assets of the estate, is properly allowed interest on the amount so advanced.

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Compensation — attorney fees — temporary guardianship. An allowance of reasonable compensation to a temporary guardian and to his attorney in conserving and caring for the estate of the ward is proper, even tho no permanent guardian is appointed.

In re Barner, 201-525; 207 NW 613

Premium on bond—refusal to allow. The probate court is clearly within its discretion in refusing to allow against an estate and to the surety on an executor's bond (the executor being deceased and his estate insolvent) the amount of unpaid premiums on the bond, especially when such allowance would burden the estate with a double charge for premiums consequent on the mismanagement of the estate by the executor.

In re Mowrey, 218-992; 255 NW 511

12066 Removal of executor.

Surety as applicant. A surety on the bond of an administrator has such "interest in the estate" as empowers him to make application for the removal of the administrator, even though such surety has taken steps to terminate his future suretyship.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Grounds. Jurisdiction to remove an administrator is furnished by an application by the surety on the bond wherein he prays for an order (1) removing the administrator, or (2) requiring the filing of a report and the making of distribution, when notice of the application is duly served on all interested parties, and when no part of the prayer has been withdrawn of record. The filing of a report under a mutual arrangement between the parties does not exhaust the jurisdiction of the court.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Removal discretionary—inadvertency insufficient grounds. The removal of an executor being, under the statute, discretionary with the court, no abuse in refusing is shown where the evidence is entirely lacking in proof of waste, maladministration, disobedience of court orders, or misappropriation of funds by an executrix, a housewife, not familiar with the statutory requirements, and where her inadvertent failure to list certain assets and sell certain property caused no loss to estate.

In re Amick, 225-829; 281 NW 786

Removal for neglect—burden of proof. In an action by a testamentary beneficiary to remove an executor from office on the alleged ground of neglect to fully collect the assets of the estate, the plaintiff has the burden to establish (1) negligence on the part of the executor, and (2) resulting damage to the estate,—it appearing that the executor's purported final report is then on file and undisposed of.

In re Smith, 223-172; 271 NW 888

Petition to remove—nonpermissible adjudication. In an action in probate for the purpose, primarily, of removing an executor from office, substantially on the ground of alleged neglect to fully collect the amount of a bank certificate of deposit belonging to the estate, the court may not, after refusing an order of removal, properly enter an order releasing said executor from the duty further to account for said certificate.

In re Smith, 223-172; 271 NW 888

Future conduct (?) or invalidating former acts (?) as removal ground. A proper petition for removal of an administrator pursuant to the provisions of this section contemplates action incident to the future handling of the estate and future accounting as to past transactions. It does not contemplate an invalidation of previous handling of the estate, and, such relief being improper in a petition under this section, such petition is properly stricken on motion.

In re Collicott, 226-106; 283 NW 869

Superior right to make application and receive appointment. An alien, nonresident half-sister of a deceased, as next of kin, has the statutory right, superior to that of the resident paternal grandmother, during the 20 days following the burial of the deceased, to make application for the appointment (1) of herself, or (2) of any other suitable person as administrator, and an order of the probate court appointing a suitable person on the half-sister's application, and discharging the paternal grandmother who has in the meantime caused herself to be appointed, will not be disturbed.

In re Rugh, 211-722; 234 NW 278

Right to appoint successor. An order of the probate court appointing an executor, in place of an executor ordered removed, is perfectly valid and such new appointee after qualifying is not an intermeddler, even tho the order of removal is subsequently reversed on appeal, when the order of removal was in no manner stayed pending the appeal.

In re Mann, 217-1134; 251 NW 83

Unallowable procedure. The probate court on entering an order, on due application, modifying a former order relative to the compensation of an executor, has no authority to recognize judicially, on its own motion, the pendency in said court of a petition to remove said executor, and peremptorily, and on its own motion, to enter an order suspending or removing the executor on the basis of the testimony already received in the proceedings relative to compensation.

Gray v Mann, 208-1193; 225 NW 261

Ex parte revocation—effect. A peremptory, ex parte court order to the effect that the appointment of an administrator is revoked, and the simultaneous reappointment of the same administrator and the execution of another bond, does not effect a legal revocation, and consequently does not operate as a discharge of the bond given pursuant to the original appointment.

In re Donlon, 203-1045; 213 NW 781

Vacation of removal order. An order removing an administrator will not be vacated (1) when there is no showing that the administrator has any defense to the order, (2) when the extent of his liability to the estate as found by the court is admitted to be correct, (3) when he has held the estate open beyond the time contemplated by law, and (4) when he is largely indebted to the estate and is financially embarrassed.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Failure to hear evidence. An order by the court removing an administrator will not necessarily be deemed invalid because the court did not formally receive any testimony.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Petition for removal—when not demurrable. When the allegations of a petition for removal of an administrator are sufficient to warrant a hearing on the application because of a showing of a tangible and substantial reason to believe that damage will accrue to the estate, the petition is not vulnerable to a demurrer.

In re Arduser, 226-103; 283 NW 879

Receivership for insolvent trustee creates vacancy—power to fill. A judicial finding that a banking institution is insolvent and the appointment of a receiver to liquidate its affairs, ipso facto, (1) transfers, to the custody of the law, trust property held by said insolvent as a duly appointed testamentary trustee, (2) deprives said insolvent trustee of power further to act in said trusteeship, and (3) necessarily creates a vacancy in the office of said trust,—which vacancy the probate court has legal power to fill by appointing a successor in trust, (1) on the sworn application therefor supplemented by the professional statement of counsel, (2) at an ex parte hearing and without notice to interested parties, and (3) without any formal proceedings whatever for the termination of said former trusteeship; and especially is this true when said former trustee, formally and by its conduct, abandons its said trusteeship and all right and interest therein.

In re Carson, 221-367; 265 NW 648

Final report by trustee after receivership. The filing of a final report by a trust company as trustee of an estate after the company had gone into receivership and could no longer perform any duty as active trustee was not an act in administering the trust, but was the performance of its duty to make such final report upon its removal as trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Findings as to liability. Whether a mere finding by the court as to the extent of the administrator's liability to the estate, entered on an application by the surety to remove the administrator, is an adjudication binding on the surety on the bond, quaere.

12067 Petition.

Petition failing to state grounds. A petition, challenging the appointment of an administrator with will annexed and the correctness of the report filed on behalf of the deceased executrix, concluding with a prayer that the letters of administration be set aside, is insufficient inasmuch as it fails to state any ground for such removal as contemplated by §12066, C., '35.

In re Collicott, 226-106; 283 NW 869

12070 Probate reports—accounts.

Burden of proof. An administrator has the burden of proof to establish the nonprejudicial nature of his irregular report.

In re Eschweiler, 202-259; 209 NW 273

Self-impeachment by administrator. An administrator will not be heard to say that he did not have notice of his own verified reports. It follows that he has frail ground upon which to impeach his own reports, especially when all other heirs and interested parties acquiesce therein.

In re Olson, 213-784; 239 NW 527

Findings by court—conclusiveness. The hearing upon the report of a guardian is in probate, and the finding of facts of a probate judge in such case has force and effect of a jury verdict, and trial court in such case may properly exercise a degree of sound discretion in regard to the nature and extent of expenditures which may be properly approved.

McBurney v McBurney, (NOR); 210 NW 568

Care of property—standard required—accounting methods. A property guardian must exercise degree of care commensurate with responsibilities of the position and, while infallibility of judgment is not required, accurate accounts and self-explanatory vouchers should be kept.

McBurney v McBurney, (NOR); 210 NW 568

Order fixing fiduciary's liability. An unappealed order of court, entered on the objections of a beneficiary to the report of a fiduciary, fixing the amount of liability of the fiduciary, is conclusive (in the absence of fraud) on the surety and those claiming under said surety.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

12071 Final report.

In re Oelwein, 217-1137; 251 NW 694

Notice of appeal—administrator failing to serve all objectors—effect. Notice of appeal from a judgment sustaining objections to an administrator's final report must be served on all heirs objecting to the report, and a failure will result in a dismissal of the appeal.

Kelley's Est. v Kelley, 226-156; 284 NW 133

Lien—unauthorized order. An order establishing the heirship of persons to an estate and, without notice, decreeing a lien in favor of the attorney on the cash shares of certain heirs for whom the attorney has never appeared, is a nullity, insofar as the order establishing the lien and the amount thereof is concerned.

In re Lear, 204-346; 213 NW 240

Reports not reviewed de novo on appeal. The trial court's findings in probate proceedings relating to executor's reports are not triable or reviewable de novo on appeal to the supreme court. If the findings have support in the record, they cannot be disturbed.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

In re Smith, 228- ; 289 NW 694

Presumption of regularity—review. Tho a presumption of regularity exists as to an unassailed allowance of attorney fees for extraordinary services, and tho ex parte orders fixing such fees without introduction of evidence are not uncommon, yet such orders are always open to review on final settlement.

In re Metcalf, 227-985; 289 NW 739

Findings on objections to final report. Trial court's ruling on objection to administrator's final report will not be disturbed on appeal where fact question was involved, as supreme court would not substitute its judgment for that of court below.

In re Windhorst, 227-808; 288 NW 892

Final report—effect—not decree of heirship or adjudication of interests. Altho a final report indicated names of devisees and legatees, the order approving it did not determine anything except that the executor had made a proper accounting and was entitled to be discharged; and, moreover, it did not establish rights and interests of all persons in estate's property.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Administrator's debt to decedent—extent of liability. In proceeding on objection to administrator's final report, burden of proof was on the administrator to show why he should not be held accountable for full value of property inventoried by him, which inventory included his own debt to decedent. He was liable on such debt to the extent of his ability to pay at any time during administration, and everything above his statutory exemptions should have been so utilized, and there being no evidence in the record from which the extent of his nonexempt property or income could be ascertained, such question would be remanded to lower court for determination.

In re Windhorst, 227-808; 288 NW 892

Renunciation by beneficiary—receipt and waiver of notice—no estoppel. A daughter was not estopped from renouncing benefits under father's will, even after approval of the final report in father's estate, merely because she signed an instrument called "receipt and waiver of notice" of the hearing on the final report, altho such instrument acknowledged receipt of all money and property due her as her father's heir, when she actually had received nothing and when creditors were not shown to have been misled to their injury.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Executor trust company in receivership—court accountable to. Failure of the probate court to appoint a successor-executor for an insolvent trust company which had been a co-executor in a pending estate and which trust company had been placed in receivership, does not cause the receiver of such insolvent trust company to be accountable to probate court—a court not appointing him.

Bates v Evans, 226-438; 284 NW 385

Final report by trustee after receivership. The filing of a final report by a trust company as trustee of an estate after the company had gone into receivership and could no longer perform any duty as active trustee, was not an act in administering the trust, but was the performance of its duty to make such final report upon its removal as trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Maladministration by executor or trustee—definiteness of allegation. When the final report of an executor and trustee of an estate was objected to on the ground of maladministration, the objection was sufficient tho it did not state whether the alleged wrongful acts were performed while the trustee was acting in its official capacity as executor or trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Objections to final report—failure to dispose of securities. Objections to the final report of a trust company are not subject to a motion for more specific statement when officers of the trust company have equal or better knowledge of the facts called for by the motion, especially where the motion calls for evidentiary facts. Held, also, that trustee was charged with maladministration and not fraud.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Wrongful retention of securities by executor or trustee. An objection to the final report of a trust company acting as trustee and executor of an estate is sufficient in alleging generally that the trust company wrongfully retained securities which it should have disposed of altho it does not state on what dates the securities should have been sold and what their values were on those dates.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Wrongful purchase of securities by executor or trustee. An objection to the final report of a trust company acting as trustee and executor was sufficient in alleging that securities were purchased without the approval of the court, altho the date of each purchase was not stated, and it was not stated whether the purchases were made as executor or trustee.

12072 Orders in probate—applications.

Removal of executor—unallowable procedure. The probate court, on entering an order, on due application, modifying a former order relative to the compensation of an executor, has no authority to recognize judicially, on its own motion, the pendency in said court of a petition to remove said executor and peremptorily and on its own motion to enter an order suspending or removing the executor on the basis of the testimony already received in the proceedings relative to compensation.

In re Mann, 208-1193; 225 NW 261

Notice of appeal—sufficiency of recitals. A notice of appeal which describes the proceeding by proper title and the order appealed from by proper date of rendition is all-sufficient, and brings up for review each and every feature of the order. So held where the final determination of the court embraced two orders, one germane to the proceeding before the court and one wholly non-germane.

In re Andrews, 221-818; 265 NW 187

Improper vacation of order. An order approving the final report of an executor and discharging him, on due notice to all parties interested, cannot be later set aside on the ex parte application of the former executor.

In re Brockmann, 207-707; 223 NW 473

Discharge—setting aside—conditions. Principle reaffirmed that an order discharging an executor may be impeached only for fraud or mistake extrinsic or collateral to the questions tried and inhering in the order or judgment assailed.

In re Holman, 216-1186; 250 NW 498; 93 ALR 1363

Burden of proof. Principle reaffirmed that when there are inconsistencies between the final report of an administrator and his previous reports he has the burden of proof to sustain his final report.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Absence of notice. The approval of the final report of a receiver in foreclosure proceedings and the discharge of the receiver, when entered without prior notice to the mortgagee, may be set aside on a showing that the receiver made an unauthorized distribution of the funds in his hands; and a delay of some four years by the mortgagee will not necessarily bar relief, especially when no one has changed his position because of the delay.

Farmers Bank v Pomeroy, 211-337; 233 NW 488

Absence of notice. Notice to the beneficiary of a trust, of the hearing on an application by the trustee for an order of court confirming an investment already made by the trustee, is not necessary, such application not being an adversary proceeding, and the record revealing the perfect good faith of the trustee.

In re Lawson, 215-752; 244 NW 739; 88 ALR 316

Surety bound by adjudication. The surety on the bond of an executrix is not entitled to notice of the hearing on the final report of the executrix. It follows that said surety is not necessarily entitled to have the final order adjudging the liability of the executrix set aside "within three months" of its entry (§12051, C., '31) and to have said liability readjudicated, especially when no fraud or mistake is charged.

Reason: The surety is in privity with the executrix and is legally in the probate court when the liability of the executrix is determined.

In re Holman, 216-1186; 250 NW 498; 93 ALR 1363

Excluding reports as evidence. Reports of an administrator are properly excluded in toto as evidence in his behalf when they contain self-serving declarations and recitals of personal transactions with the deceased as to which the administrator would be incompetent to testify, and when there is no offer to separate the competent matter from the incompetent matter.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Incompetent ex parte statements. On hearing on final report of an administrator, an ex parte statement of a claim against the estate is properly excluded when the statement is apparently wholly immaterial, and when no effort is made to enlighten the court as to its materiality.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Unallowable credit. An administrator is properly refused credit for a claim due the administrator when the claim has never been filed against the estate, and when there is no evidence sustaining the claim.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

12077.1 Small legacies to minors—payment.

TITLE XXXIII

PARTICULAR ACTIONS AND SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS

CHAPTER 510 ATTACHMENT

12078 Method.

Statutory origin. Principle reaffirmed that proceedings in attachment are of statutory origin only, and in derogation of the common law.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Equity jurisdiction. A court of equity has no general jurisdiction to order an attachment without bond.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Unallowable attachment. An attachment cannot be legally issued in an action against a ward and his property guardian. Not being legally issuable, the writ cannot be legally levied on the property of the ward, and must be discharged on proper motion.

Reason: The ward's property is in custodia legis.

Shumaker v Bohrofen, 217-34; 250 NW 683; 92 ALR 914

Federal conservator—authority. The federal statute that the conservator of a national bank shall act "under the direction" of the comptroller of the currency does not require the conservator to secure specific authority from the comptroller for the bringing of an attachment and the execution of a bond on behalf of the bank.

Ross v Long, 219-471; 258 NW 94

12079 Proceedings auxiliary.

Levy under invalid attachment—subsequent personal judgment—effect. While plaintiff obtains no lien on realty by virtue of a levy under an invalid attachment, yet, if he obtains personal judgment on the claim sued on, he will, from the entry of such judgment, have a lien notwithstanding the futility of the attachment proceedings.

Andrew v Miller, 221-316; 263 NW 845

Separate petition—when required. In order to convert an action which is unaided by attachment into an action which is aided by attachment, the filing of a separate petition is mandatorily required in order to furnish a jurisdictional basis for the attachment.

Fletcher v Gordon, 219-661; 259 NW 204

12080 Grounds.

ANALYSIS

- I PETITION IN GENERAL
- II STATEMENT OF GROUNDS

I PETITION IN GENERAL

Daughter's interest under will—intent of testator considered. In a suit in equitable attachment against the interest of a daughter under her father's will, the intent of the testator is to be considered in determining whether he intended the daughter to have any right other than to part of the income.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

II STATEMENT OF GROUNDS

Remedies of creditors—evidence—sufficiency. Proof (1) that the vendee of personal property did not record or file his bill of sale as required by law, (2) that there was no change of possession following the bill of sale, and (3) that the vendee actively aided the vendor in disposing of the property as the property of the vendor, furnishes ample justification for the holding that the rights of a good-faith and innocent attaching creditor of the vendor were superior to the asserted rights of the vendee.

Beno Co. v Perrin, 221-716; 266 NW 539

12083 On contract—amount due.

Nonwaiver of unknown right to equitable lien. Where a father had orally contracted with a bank to pledge his son's share in his estate as security for a note executed by his son, later a bankrupt, on the understanding that payment from the father would not be sought while he lived, and where the father's copy of the contract contained an additional notation, made by a bank officer, that the bank would seek payment only from the son's share in the estate, which notation was unknown to the succeeding officers of the bank at the time of commencing an attachment action based on the father's attempted disposal of the pledged real estate, the bank's equitable lien on the real estate was not waived by the proceeding in attachment.

Emerson Bank v Cole, 225-281; 280 NW 515

12085 Allowance of value in other cases.

Unauthorized attachment. The statutory power of a judge of the district court in action for divorce to order an attachment, with or without bond, does not authorize him to enter such order in an action for separate maintenance.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

12086 For debts not due—grounds.

Nonwaiver of unknown right to equitable lien. Where a father had orally contracted with a bank to pledge his son's share in his estate as security for a note executed by his son, later a bankrupt, on the understanding that payment from the father would not be sought while he lived, and where the father's copy of the contract contained an additional notation, made by a bank officer, that the bank would seek payment only from the son's share in the estate, which notation was unknown to the succeeding officers of the bank at the time of commencing an attachment action based on the father's attempted disposal of the pledged real estate, the bank's equitable lien on the real estate was not waived by the proceeding in attachment.

Emerson Bank v Cole, 225-281; 280 NW 515

Testator's contract to devise to son—will changed after loan relying thereon—lien impressed. A bank, after contracting with debtor's father to wait until father's death for payment of the son's debt from his share in father's estate, under existing devise in will, has a right to impress an equitable lien on the land when it discovers that the father had changed his will and was fraudulently, without consideration, transferring his property to others than the debtor-son.

Emerson Bank v Cole, 225-281; 280 NW 515

12088 Bond.

Equity jurisdiction. A court of equity has no general jurisdiction to order an attachment without bond.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Substituting new bond. A new bond, sufficient in amount, may, after levy, be substituted for an original bond which was insufficient in amount.

Carson & Co. v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

Presumption. A bond executed in the name of a plaintiff in attachment, by the attorney appearing for such plaintiff, is presumptively valid.

Carson & Co. v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

12089 Additional security.

Substituting new bond. A new bond, sufficient in amount, may, after levy, be substituted for an original bond which was insufficient in amount.

Carson & Co. v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

12090 Action on bond.

Attorney fee—improper allowance. Attorney fees may not be allowed both by the jury and by the court.

Siegel Mkt. v Billings, 203-190; 210 NW 749

Attorney fees as matter of right. A defendant in an attachment who counterclaims on the bond and recovers both actual and exemplary damages is entitled to a taxation of reasonable attorney fees as a matter of right, even tho the sureties on the bond are not made parties to the counterclaim.

Mogler v Nelson, 211-1288; 234 NW 480

Counterclaim on deficiency judgment. In suit on attachment bond for damages, principal on bond could file counterclaim based on deficiency judgment obtained in foreclosure action although counterclaim was not in favor of surety on bond, since principal was primarily liable.

Imes v Hamilton, 222-777; 269 NW 757

Liability on bond—attorney's fee as costs. In an action for money due on a written instrument aided by attachment, to which a counterclaim on the bond was filed, and under an instruction providing that both plaintiff and defendant could recover, one against the other in equal amounts, the jury found for the defendant and of necessity that the attachment was wrongful thereby as a matter of law entitling defendant to a reasonable attorney's fee taxable as part of the costs.

Rodman v Ladwig, 223-884; 274 NW 1

Unallowable damages. A defendant in attachment who does not question plaintiff's claim, and who has never been disturbed or injured by the levy on his land, or sought to have the attachment levy discharged, may not, in an action on the bond, recover for loss of time and expense in securing attorneys to bring suit on the bond; neither may he recover such attorney fees.

Thielen v Schechinger, 211-470; 233 NW 750

12091 Remedy for falsely suing out—counterclaim.

Nonright to question grounds of attachment. An intervenor in attachment proceedings may not question the truthfulness of the grounds on which the attachment was issued. His statutory right to question the "validity" of the attachment (§12136) extends no further than to show that it is invalid as to him because he has an interest in the property superior to the attachment.

Thielen v Schechinger, 210-224; 230 NW 516

Incompetent testimony as to damage. In an action on an attachment bond, plaintiff will not be permitted to testify to his opinion as to the effect which the attachment had on a possible sale of the land upon which levy was made, there having been theretofore no negotiations whatever for such sale.

Thielen v Schechinger, 211-470; 233 NW 750

12092 Writ to sheriff.

Change in writ. A change in a writ of attachment as to the county in which it may be served, made at the direction of the clerk issuing the writ and prior to levy, is valid.

Carson & Co. v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

12093 Several writs to different counties.

Subsequent writs authorized. When a landlord's attachment is timely in that it was commenced within six months after the expiration of the lease, and the writ is improperly levied on property in a foreign county, a new writ may issue, even after the six months has expired, and a valid levy made thereunder on the same property if it has, in the meantime, been brought into the county of suit.

Welch v Welch, 212-1245; 238 NW 81

12094 Surplus levy.

Burden of proof. Burden to show that a levy is excessive rests on complainant.

Carson & Co. v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

12095 Property attached.

ANALYSIS

- I LEVY IN GENERAL
- II PROPERTY SUBJECT TO LEVY
- III VALIDITY OF LEVY
- IV RIGHTS AND PRIORITIES
- V WRONGFUL LEVY

Sufficiency of levy. See under §12102, Vol I

I LEVY IN GENERAL

Abuse of process. The fact that a tenant's creditor is present at a public sale of the tenant's property and threatens to levy an attachment on said property does not constitute such abuse of process as will invalidate a check given by the landlord to the creditor in payment of his claim and to prevent such levy.

Myers v Watson, 204-635; 215 NW 634

II PROPERTY SUBJECT TO LEVY

Property under administration. Lands which belong to an estate and which have been ordered sold in probate in order to pay debts, are not subject to attachment in actions against heirs.

In re Collins, 207-1074; 224 NW 82

Custodia legis—burden of proof. If property is not subject to attachment or garnishment because undergoing partition, and, therefore, in the custody of the law, the mover for dissolution must show that no order for distribution has been entered in the partition proceedings.

Carson & Co. v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

Guardian and ward—unallowable attachment. An attachment cannot be legally issued in an action against a ward and his property guardian. Not being legally issuable, the writ cannot be legally levied on the property of the ward, and must be discharged on proper motion.

Reason: The ward's property is in custodia legis.

Shumaker v Bohrofen, 217-34; 250 NW 683; 92 ALR 914

Trust funds—exempt from trustee's creditors. In an attachment action against a defendant, engaged in business of selling grain on commission, funds received by defendant from sale of such third parties' grain and deposited in a bank are held in trust for payment to seller and not subject to garnishment by depositor's creditors.

Fidelity & Dep. Co. v Seward, 226-1216; 286 NW 528

Rentals—lease assignment—father-in-law's loan as consideration. Where an assignment of a lease on mortgaged lands is given to mortgagor's father-in-law as payment on a pre-existing, bona fide, unpaid loan, altho the notes evidencing such loan had been returned by the father to the daughter with the understanding that the debt would, if possible, be paid during his lifetime, such an assignment is a payment on the debt to the extent of the rentals and is supported by ample consideration.

First JSL Bank v Ver Steeg, 223-1165; 274 NW 883

III VALIDITY OF LEVY

Levy—sufficiency. A sufficient levy is made by the act of the officer in invoicing the property and leaving it in the possession of his agent.

First N. Bk. v Schram, 202-791; 211 NW 405

Return—belated amendment. An application to amend the return on an execution, so as to show the essential facts constituting a levy, is properly denied when the application is made four months after the attempted levy, and is hostile to a stranger with a prior interest in the property sought to be levied on.

Cramer v McDonald, 213-454; 239 NW 101

Jurisdiction as sole question. Jurisdiction of the court is the only question which can be tried out on special appearance. So held where attempt was made, on such appearance, to try out the question whether attached property was exempt from attachment or execution levy.

Scott v Wamsley, 215-1409; 245 NW 214

IV RIGHTS AND PRIORITIES

Priority to diligent creditor. A creditor who obtains title to land by virtue of his judgment and a creditor's bill under which an existing mortgage was decreed to be fraudulent will not, on the theory of superior diligence, be given priority over a known prior attaching creditor who levied on the land regardless of the said mortgage, and because he deemed the mortgage fraudulent, and who, prior to the decree under the creditor's bill, obtained the same result obtained under the creditor's bill, by securing from the fraudulent mortgagee, not only a verbal promise to release the mortgage, but an actual release of said mortgage.

Elson v Clayton, 200-935; 205 NW 745

Mortgage by grantee. A creditor, on learning that his debtor has made a voluntary conveyance of his property, may validly secure his debt by taking mortgage security from the voluntary grantee on the voluntarily conveyed property, and will thereby secure a right which will be superior to the right of another creditor who, subsequent to the mortgage, and after the death of the common debtor, reduces his claim to a so-called judgment against the latter, and, for his own exclusive benefit, levies on the voluntarily conveyed property.

Marion Bank v Smith, 205-203; 217 NW 857

V WRONGFUL LEVY

Liability on bond—instruction—attorney's fee as costs. In an action for money due on a written instrument aided by attachment, to which a counterclaim on the bond was filed, and under an instruction providing that both plaintiff and defendant could recover, one against the other in equal amounts, the jury found for the defendant and of necessity that the attachment was wrongful, thereby as a matter of law entitling defendant to a reasonable attorney's fee taxable as part of the costs.

Rodman v Ladwig, 223-884; 274 NW 1

12098 Corporation stock.

Appeal does not vacate or affect judgment. A judgment which releases and discharges an execution levy on corporate shares of stock is a self-executing judgment, and is in full force and effect from the date thereof to the time the judgment is reversed on appeal and the execution levy reinstated, and one who purchases said stock after the entry of said judgment and before the reversal thereof, from the owners thereof as shown by the corporate stock books, will be protected in his ownership when he purchased in good faith, for value, and without knowledge of said litigation.

Hewitt v Cas. Co., 212-316; 232 NW 835

Essentials of levy. An attempted levy on corporate shares of stock is, as to a stranger with a prior interest in the property, a nullity (1) unless the president of the company or other officer designated by the statute is notified in writing that the stock has been levied on, and (2) unless the return on the writ states that such notice was given. (§11676, C., '31.)

Cramer v McDonald, 213-454; 239 NW 101

12099 Judgments—money—things in action.

Unadjudicated cause of action. The statute (§11672, C., '31) which provides for execution levy on "things in action" authorizes a levy on an unadjudicated cause of action which the judgment defendant is prosecuting against the judgment plaintiff for breach of contract.

Brenton v Dorr, 213-725; 239 NW 808

Failure to serve notice on defendant. Failure of the officer making the levy to serve notice on judgment defendant of the levy, on a chose in action, furnishes ample grounds for quashing the writ and staying sale thereunder.

Brenton v Dorr, 213-725; 239 NW 808

12100 Property in possession of another.

Property in possession of another. See under §12095

Right to income from trust dependent on election or demand by cestui—effect. A trust which provides that the income therefrom shall be paid to a named beneficiary "from time to time as she may elect during her lifetime", effectually places said income beyond the reach of the creditors of said beneficiary so long as said beneficiary makes no such election.

Ober v Dodge, 210-643; 231 NW 444

Spendthrift trust. If the terms of a trust provide that the income be applied to the cestui at the discretion of the trustee, or the income is payable to the cestui at his demand, or the trust is for a special purpose, or in general where no debt is owed the cestui by the trustee, the creditors of the cestui cannot appropriate the benefaction.

Standard Chemical v Weed, 226-882; 285 NW 175

Spendthrift trust—creditor's rights. When the testator's will created a trust for his son, providing that the proceeds of the trust be paid to the son "yearly or oftener if collected for shorter periods," and contained no words showing an intent to place the trust income beyond the reach of the son's creditors, a debt due the son from the trustee was created, which was a vested right which could be assigned and was subject to claims of creditors.

Standard Chemical v Weed, 226-882; 285 NW 175

12101 Garnishment.

Garnishment. See under Ch 513

Unadjudicated cause of action. The statute (§11672, C., '31) which provides for execution levy on "things in action" authorizes a levy on an unadjudicated cause of action which the judgment defendant is prosecuting against the judgment plaintiff for breach of contract.

Brenton Bros. v Dorr, 213-725; 239 NW 808

Spendthrift trust. If the terms of a trust provide that the income be applied to the cestui at the discretion of the trustee, or the income is payable to the cestui at his demand, or the trust is for a special purpose, or in general where no debt is owed the cestui by the trustee, the creditors of the cestui cannot appropriate the benefaction.

Standard Chemical v Weed, 226-882; 285 NW 175

Spendthrift trust—creditor's rights. When the testator's will created a trust for his son, providing that the proceeds of the trust be paid to the son "yearly or oftener if collected for shorter periods," and contained no words showing an intent to place the trust income beyond the reach of the son's creditors, a debt due the son from the trustee was created, which was a vested right which could be assigned and was subject to claims of creditors.

Standard Chemical v Weed, 226-882; 285 NW 175

Trust funds—exempt from trustee's creditors. In an attachment action against a defendant, engaged in business of selling grain on commission, funds received by defendant from sale of such third parties' grain and deposited in a bank are held in trust for payment to seller and not subject to garnishment by depositor's creditors.

Fidelity & Dep. Co. v Seward, 226-1216; 286 NW 528

Discharge on motion. The statute authorizing the discharge of an attachment upon motion before trial is summary in character and the showing in support of a motion filed thereunder should be made clear and entirely satisfactory, but the legislative intent in providing proceedings under attachment that will be expeditious should not be overlooked nor in any casual manner thwarted.

Fidelity & Dep. Co. v Seward, 226-1216; 286 NW 528

12102 When property bound.

Levy in general. See under §12095

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Feb. 28, '39

12103 Real estate.

Execution debtor's "right of possession". A debtor's statutory "right of possession" of real estate during the year given for redemption from sale on execution is not, in and of itself, leviable.

Sayre v Vander Voort, 200-990; 205 NW 760; 42 ALR 880

Contingent remainder. A contingent remainder—contingent because of the uncertainty of the person who will take the property—is not subject to attachment or execution levy and sale.

Saunders v Wilson, 207-526; 220 NW 344; 60 ALR 786

Crops raised during redemption period.

Howe v Briden, 201-179; 206 NW 814

Goldstein v Mundon, 202-381; 210 NW 444

Starits v Avery, 204-401; 213 NW 769

Immature crops.

Rodgers v Oliver, 200-869; 205 NW 513

Renunciation of legacy—effect.

Funk v Grulke, 204-314; 213 NW 608

Right to renounce devise or bequest. The legal right of a beneficiary under a will to file an unconditional and final renunciation of all benefits granted him by the will, and thereby exclude his creditor from acquiring any right to the devised property, may be exercised even after a creditor of said beneficiary has levied upon, sold, and obtained a sheriff's deed to, the land devised to said beneficiary, it appearing that the renouncing beneficiary had in no manner misled the creditor.

Lehr v Switzer, 213-658; 239 NW 564

Attachment—nonwaiver of unknown right to equitable lien. Where a father had orally contracted with a bank to pledge his son's share in his estate as security for a note executed by his son, later a bankrupt, on the understanding that payment from the father would not be sought while he lived, and where the father's copy of the contract contained an additional notation, made by a bank officer, that the bank would seek payment only from the son's share in the estate, which notation was unknown to the succeeding officers of the bank at the time of commencing an attachment action based on the father's attempted disposal of the pledged real estate, the bank's equitable lien on the real estate was not waived by the proceeding in attachment.

Emerson Bank v Cole, 225-281; 280 NW 515

Testator's contract to devise to son—will changed after loan relying thereon—lien impressed. A bank, after contracting with debtor's father to wait until father's death for payment of the son's debt from his share in father's estate, under existing devise in will, has a right to impress an equitable lien on the land when it discovers that the father had changed his will and was fraudulently, without consideration, transferring his property to others than the debtor-son.

Emerson Bank v Cole, 225-281; 280 NW 515

12104 Lien.

When levy, lien, and notice effected. A levy on real estate under a writ of attachment is made and a lien is created and notice to third parties effected by the proper signed entry of the sheriff on the incumbrance book in the office of the clerk of the district court.

(Prior to the Code of 1897, the levy was made and lien was created by the proper signed return of the sheriff on the writ of attachment, and notice to third parties was effected by the proper signed entry of the sheriff on the incumbrance book. §§3010, 3022, C., '73.)

First N. Bk. v Kindwall, 201-82; 206 NW 241

Sufficiency of entry. A lien on real estate is effected under a writ of attachment by a duly signed entry in the incumbrance book wherein the land is described as "SE¼, Sec. 8-91-38 in Buena Vista County, Iowa."

First N. Bk. v Kindwall, 201-82; 206 NW 241

Denial of lien—conclusiveness. An unappealed holding in attachment proceedings that plaintiff, tho entitled to judgment against defendant, had acquired no lien on certain real estate is a finality. In other words, plaintiff may not, years afterwards, between other parties dispute said adjudication.

Nagl v Hermsen, 219-223; 257 NW 583

12105 Levy on equitable interest.

Life estate—delinquent taxes. When judgment creditor of a life tenant, by virtue of execution, levies upon a life estate and purchases the life estate on execution sale, he assumes all the duties of a life tenant and is obligated to pay delinquent taxes, or else lose the advantage of the life estate.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

Daughter's interest under will—intent of testator considered. In a suit in equitable attachment against the interest of a daughter under her father's will, the intent of the testator is to be considered in determining whether he intended the daughter to have any right other than to part of the income.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

12106 Lands fraudulently conveyed.

Fraudulently conveyed property. See under §§11815, 12095

Mutual intent. An action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent necessitates proof of a mutual intent to defraud.

Newman v Callahan, 212-1003; 237 NW 514

Equitable interest—procedure. Plaintiff by alleging under this section in an action on a promissory note that the maker had fraudulently conveyed his property, and by praying for an attachment on the property, and for a decree subjecting the property to plaintiff's judgment, does not thereby eliminate the necessity of equitable proceedings to reach said property.

Fed. Res. Bank v Geannoulis, 203-1385; 214 NW 576

Right to set aside conveyance—condition precedent—laches. The right of a creditor to have the fraudulent conveyance of his debtor judicially set aside is not a matured right—a matured cause of action—until the creditor obtains, by judgment or attachment, a lien on the land in question. But the creditor will not be permitted negligently to delay maturing his own cause of action, and if he does so delay for a period equal to or greater than the 5 years allowed by statute for bringing the action, he will be deemed guilty of such laches as will completely bar his action, even tho it be conceded that, strictly speaking, the action is not barred by the statute of limitation.

Bristow v Lange, 221-904; 266 NW 808

Setting aside—limitation of actions—laches. A suit in equity by trustee in bankruptcy to set aside deed by bankrupt to husband on grounds of want of consideration, fraud, and failure to take possession of land, brought more than 6 years after recording of deed, is barred by laches under statute of limitations where only one creditor secured allowance of claim, which claim was based on note past due when deed was recorded.

Monroe v Ordway, 103 F 2d, 813

Fraudulent conveyance—action by trustee to set aside. A trustee in bankruptcy may not maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the bankrupt unless he pleads and proves that such setting aside is necessary in order to pay claims allowed in the bankruptcy proceedings.

Newman v Callahan, 212-1003; 237 NW 514

Void remainders created by will. Property embraced in a void, testamentary limitation—void because prohibited by the statute relating to perpetuities—passes to those persons who would have been entitled thereto under the laws of intestacy had the limitation been omitted from the will, and a judgment creditor may, by proper procedure, have a lien established thereon.

Bankers Tr. v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Voluntary, nonfraudulent conveyance—valid against judgment on subsequent bank stock assessment. Altho wholly voluntary, a conveyance executed when the grantor has no fraudulent intent cannot be impeached by a subsequent creditor, so a real estate conveyance by a husband to his wife many years before he becomes a bank stockholder cannot be invalidated by the creditors of the bank, seeking to collect a judgment on stock liability assessment.

Bates v Kleve, 225-255; 280 NW 501

Testator's contract to devise to son—will changed after loan relying thereon—lien impressed. A bank, after contracting with debtor's father to wait until father's death for payment of the son's debt from his share in father's estate, under existing devise in will, has a right to impress an equitable lien on the land when it discovers that the father had changed his will and was fraudulently, without consideration, transferring his property to others than the debtor-son.

Emerson Bank v Cole, 225-281; 280 NW 515

12107 Notice to defendant—return.

Failure to serve notice. Failure of the officer making the levy to serve notice on judgment defendant of the levy, on a chose in action, furnishes ample grounds for quashing the writ and staying sale thereunder.

Brenton v Dorr, 213-725; 239 NW 808

Failure to give notice. The failure of the levying officer to give the defendant in attachment notice of the levy on a judgment does not necessarily work any invalidating effect on the levy.

Edwards v Tracy, 203-1083; 212 NW 317

Waiver of notice. The failure of the levying officer to notify the defendant in attachment of a levy on a judgment is waived when the duly served original notice gave defendant such notice and he did not question such levy until some two months thereafter.

Edwards v Tracy, 203-1083; 212 NW 317

12108 Notice to party in possession.

Notice to clerk. The clerk of the court is not in possession of a judgment in such sense that notice of a levy thereon need be served on such clerk.

Edwards v Tracy, 203-1083; 212 NW 317

12110 Examination of defendant.

Discovery proceedings—extent of jurisdiction. In a discovery proceeding against a person suspected of taking wrongful possession of decedent's property, where a dispute arises as to ownership of property, neither the trial nor appellate court has authority to order delivery of the property to the executor or administrator unless it appears beyond controversy that the person examined has wrongful possession of the property.

In re Hoffman, 227-973; 289 NW 720

12114 Lien acquired—action to determine interest.

Right to set aside conveyance—condition precedent—laches. The right of a creditor to have the fraudulent conveyance of his debtor judicially set aside is not a matured right—a matured cause of action—until the creditor obtains, by judgment or attachment, a lien on the land in question. But the creditor will not be permitted negligently to delay maturing his own cause of action, and if he does so delay for a period equal to or greater than the 5 years allowed by statute for bringing the action, he will be deemed guilty of such laches as will completely bar his action, even tho it be conceded that, strictly speaking, the action is not barred by the statute of limitation.

Bristow v Lange, 221-904; 266 NW 808

12116 Mortgaged personal property.

Levies on mortgaged personalty. See §11682, Vol. I

12117 Indemnifying bond.

Indemnifying bonds. See under §11702

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 270

Notice of ownership—sufficiency. The sworn, written notice of ownership, which is given an officer who has levied on the property, is sufficient in form and contents if it actually enables the officer to secure an indemnifying bond.

Capital Loan Co. v Keeling, 219-969; 259 NW 194

Defective notice of ownership. The fact that the notice to an attaching officer of the interest of a chattel mortgagee in attached property is defective becomes of no consequence when it is made to appear that the mortgagee was in open and undisputed possession of the mortgaged chattels and was proceeding to foreclose the mortgage when the officer levied the attachment.

Smith v Goldberg, 204-816; 215 NW 956

Chattel mortgagee—allowable procedure. A chattel mortgagee may, when the property is levied on by an attaching creditor of the mortgagor, serve notice of his interest, on the levying officer, and thereafter, if the property is not released, maintain an action for conversion against the attaching plaintiff and the levying officer.

Capital Loan Co. v Keeling, 219-969; 259 NW 194

12118 Bond to discharge.

Failure of clerk to approve—effect. The court acquires no jurisdiction of a surety on a bond to discharge an attachment when the bond is executed after the sheriff has levied the writ and made return thereon to the clerk, and the bond is not approved by said clerk, as required by statute. It follows that a default judgment against the surety, under such circumstances, is properly set aside on timely motion.

Brenton v Lewiston, 204-892; 216 NW 6

12121 Delivery bond.

Breach. A statutory delivery bond is breached by the failure to redeliver the attached property or its appraised value to the sheriff within 20 days after the entry of the judgment upon the verdict, irrespective of the subsequent entry of orders denying a new trial.

Cox v Surety Co., 208-1252; 226 NW 114

12122 Appraisalment.

Bond—measure of damages. The measure of recovery on a delivery bond is the appraised value of the property, not exceeding, however, the amount of the judgment recovered in the main action.

Cox v Surety Co., 208-1252; 226 NW 114

12127 Sheriff's return.

Amendment of return. See under §12143

Permissible amendment. The return of the levy of an attachment may be so amended as (1) to definitely locate the property levied on and (2) to specifically describe the kind of property levied on.

Salinger v Elev. Co., 210-668; 231 NW 366

Fatal insufficiency. The delivery, by plaintiff's attorney to the clerk, of an execution and the indorsement thereon, by the clerk, of the words "Returned not satisfied" does not constitute a legal return.

Richardson v Rusk, 215-470; 245 NW 770

12132 Judgment—satisfaction—special execution.

Execution sale of promissory note—purchase by maker. The maker of a promissory note and mortgage may, by himself or through others, validly purchase said note and mortgage at execution sale against the payee or holder thereof, and thereby completely discharge the same.

Buter v Slattery, 212-677; 237 NW 232

Lien—nonwaiver by taking general judgment. The plaintiff in landlord's attachment by failing to ask for a special execution for the sale of the attached property, and by taking a general judgment against the lessee, does not thereby waive his landlord's lien. On the contrary, the lien follows the general judgment upon which a special execution may issue notwithstanding the failure to pray therefor, and notwithstanding the failure of the judgment to provide therefor.

Wunder v Schram, 217-920; 251 NW 762

Voluntary conveyance—knowledge of creditor. When land, which was part of an estate, was purchased by decedent's two sons, who paid no cash consideration, but occupied, paying rent to the other heirs, and who later, in order to protect the land from creditors, deeded it to two sisters who did not know of the indebtedness of the brothers, and when the sons made a contract with the sisters at the time of the deed protecting the other heirs in case the land were sold, a creditor of one of the brothers who knew of the rent payments and knew of the deed, but made no objection, could neither have it set aside as a fraudulent conveyance nor have the real estate subjected to a judgment against the debtor-brother, as the deed and contract conveyed the mere legal title to the sisters in trust for the heirs who were the persons entitled to the property.

Lakin v Eittem, 227-882; 289 NW 433

Sale—right to withdraw bid because of mistake. A plaintiff in execution, who bids at the sale the full amount of the judgment and costs in the honest belief that he was bidding on two separate tracts of land, when only one tract was being offered, may, on the discovery of his mistake, withdraw his bid, and the levying officer has discretion, without the consent of the defendant in execution, to accede to said withdrawal and to treat the sale as a nullity, and to resell, if there be time enough, and if there be not time enough, to return the execution in accordance with said facts. And in such latter case plaintiff may order out a new execution.

Van Rheenen v Windell, 220-211; 262 NW 120

12135 Surplus.

Excessive levy—burden of proof. Burden to show that a levy is excessive rests on complainant.

Carson & Co. v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

12136 Intervention—petition.

Proceedings applicable to garnishment on execution. The statute providing, where parties have been garnished under an execution, the officer shall return to the next term thereafter a copy of the execution, and that thereafter the proceedings shall conform to proceedings in garnishments under attachments, permits the claimants of liens upon or interests in money or property held by garnishment on execution to intervene and proceed under statute permitting intervention in attachment proceedings.

New Amsterdam Co. v Bookhart, 227-1150; 290 NW 61

When allowable. In an equitable action aided by attachment, a party claiming the attached property may present his claim by petition of intervention, even tho he has been made a defendant in the main action.

Citizens Bank v Haworth, 208-1100; 222 NW 428

Unallowable plea. An intervenor who claims recovery for property seized by plaintiff on an attachment, may not, after so recovering, inject into his intervention another and separate demand for property wholly disconnected with said attachment.

Peoples Bk. v McCarthy, 211-40; 231 NW 482

Nonright to question grounds of attachment. An intervenor in attachment proceedings may not question the truthfulness of the grounds on which the attachment was issued. His statutory right to question the "validity" of the attachment extends no further than to show that it is invalid as to him because he has an interest in the property superior to the attachment.

Thielen v Schechinger, 210-224; 230 NW 516

Irrevocable abandonment of action. An intervenor who pleads a personal claim to specific attached property but later joins with other intervenors in a joint demand for judgment for all the property seized on the attachment belonging to all the intervenors, and receives a part of the resulting judgment when it is paid, must be held to have irrevocably abandoned her formerly pleaded personal claim.

Peoples Bk. v McCarthy, 211-40; 231 NW 482

Motion to discharge attachment—rights asserted by fiduciary of funds. Defendant engaged in business of selling grain on commission for his customers and depositing money in a bank, properly files a motion to discharge attachment by garnishment of such funds as against contention that such motion urged third parties' claims which should have been raised by them in intervening petitions, where defendant asserts his rights, duties, and liabilities as trustee or custodian of funds garnished.

Fidelity & Dep. Co. v Seward, 226-1216; 286 NW 528

Garnishment—attorney's lien against estate funds. Where a casualty company secured a judgment against beneficiaries under a will, and issued an execution under which the administrator with will annexed was attached as garnishee, attorneys for the beneficiaries could properly intervene in the garnishment proceedings to assert a claim to the garnished fund for legal services rendered to beneficiaries, in connection with the action by casualty company, which claim was based on written assignment of interests of beneficiaries under said will.

New Amsterdam Co. v Bookhart, 227-1150; 290 NW 61

12137 Hearing and orders.

Proceedings applicable to garnishment on execution. The statute providing, where parties have been garnished under an execution, the officer shall return to the next term thereafter a copy of the execution, and that thereafter the proceedings shall conform to proceedings in garnishments under attachments, permits the claimants of liens upon or interests in money or property held by garnishment on execution to intervene and proceed under statute permitting intervention in attachment proceedings.

New Amsterdam Co. v Bookhart, 227-1150; 290 NW 61

Garnishment—attorney's lien against estate funds. Where a casualty company secured a judgment against beneficiaries under a will, and issued an execution under which the administrator with will annexed was attached as garnishee, attorneys for the beneficiaries could properly intervene in the garnishment proceedings to assert a claim to the garnished fund for legal services rendered to beneficiaries, in connection with the action by casualty company, which claim was based on written assignment of interests of beneficiaries under said will.

New Amsterdam Co. v Bookhart, 227-1150; 290 NW 61

12138 Costs.

Attorney's fee as costs. In an action for money due on a written instrument aided by attachment, to which a counterclaim on the bond was filed, and under an instruction providing that both plaintiff and defendant could recover, one against the other in equal amounts, the jury found for the defendant and of necessity that the attachment was wrongful thereby as a matter of law entitling defendant to a reasonable attorney's fee taxable as part of the costs.

Rodman v Ladwig, 223-884; 274 NW 1

12139 Discharge on motion.

ANALYSIS

- I MOTION TO DISCHARGE IN GENERAL
- II AVAILABILITY OF MOTION
- III NONAVAILABILITY OF MOTION

I MOTION TO DISCHARGE IN GENERAL

Motion—fatally delayed presentation. The objection that a motion to discharge an attachment was not timely may not be raised for the first time on appeal.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Statute construed. The statute authorizing the discharge of an attachment upon motion before trial is summary in character and the showing in support of a motion filed thereunder should be made clear and entirely satisfactory, but the legislative intent in providing proceedings under attachment that will be expeditious should not be overlooked nor in any casual manner thwarted.

Fidelity & Dep. Co. v Seward, 226-1216; 286 NW 528

Motion confesses petition. Defendant who moves to dissolve an attachment, because of want of authority in plaintiff to maintain the action, must be deemed to confess the truth of the well-pleaded allegations of the petition.

Ross v Long, 219-471; 258 NW 94

Motion — adjudication. A hearing on the merits of a motion to dissolve an attachment

I MOTION TO DISCHARGE IN GENERAL
—concluded

on the grounds that movant, and not the principal defendant, was the absolute owner of the property does not necessarily preclude the movant from again presenting and trying out, in the same action, his claim of ownership, on a petition of intervention.

Citizens Bank v Haworth, 208-1100; 222 NW 428

Conclusion affidavit. A debtor who seeks to have tools released from levy does not meet the burden of proof resting upon him by simply asserting the conclusion "that he is a mechanic" and "that said tools are exempt". The facts showing that he is, in fact, a mechanic and the facts showing consequent exemption must be stated.

First N. Bk. v Larson, 213-468; 239 NW 134

Insufficient showing of exemption. An automobile is not shown to be exempt to the head of a family and a resident of this state on the naked assertion "that it is necessary for the owner to use an automobile in the earning of a livelihood".

First N. Bk. v Larson, 213-468; 239 NW 134

Loss of appeal. No appeal will lie from an order discharging a garnishee unless the purpose or intent to appeal is announced at the time of the discharge, even tho the motion to discharge has been taken under advisement by the court, and even tho the garnishing creditor is not present when the order is made; and especially is this true when the garnishing creditor had fair warning of the adverse ruling.

Woods v Brown, 207-944; 223 NW 868

Time to perfect appeal—procedure. Under mandatory statute, a garnishing creditor whose levy is discharged by court order must, when such order is made, announce his intention to appeal therefrom followed by perfection of the appeal within two days, and his noncompliance therewith is fatal.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 224-655; 277 NW 284

Motion to dismiss garnishee—burden of sustaining on appeal. On an appeal from an order overruling a motion to dismiss a garnishee, the burden of sustaining the motion was on the garnishee.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Foreign corporations—dissolution and receivership—effect. A foreign decree of dissolution of a corporation, and an order appointing a receiver to wind up its affairs, do not abate an action aided by attachment in this state, because the claim of the receiver of a foreign corporation to its property in this state will not be recognized as against the valid claims of resident attaching creditors.

Watts v Surety Co., 216-150; 248 NW 347

Foreign corporations — dissolution — effect on pending actions. A duly rendered decree of dissolution of a foreign corporation, at the instance of the state under the laws of which said corporation was organized, is, in effect, an executed sentence of death; being such, said decree ipso facto works an abatement, (1) of an unadjudicated action in rem pending in this state against said dissolved corporation, and (2) of garnishment proceeding pending in connection with said action. Under such circumstances, the garnishee may properly move for and be granted an order of discharge.

Peoria Co. v Streator Co., 221-690; 266 NW 548

II AVAILABILITY OF MOTION

Ruling on motion to dismiss—res judicata. A ruling on a motion to dismiss garnishment proceedings on the grounds that the property was in custodia legis and not subject to garnishment was not premature and was res judicata even tho made before the garnishee was examined and the garnishment proceedings completed, when the court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Rights asserted by fiduciary of funds. Defendant engaged in business of selling grain on commission for his customers and depositing money in a bank, properly files a motion to discharge attachment by garnishment of such funds as against contention that such motion urged third parties' claims which should have been raised by them in intervening petitions, where defendant asserts his rights, duties, and liabilities as trustee or custodian of funds garnished.

Fidelity & Dep. Co. v Seward, 226-1216; 286 NW 528

Rents and profits not garnishable. A motion to dismiss a garnishment against a receiver should have been sustained on the ground that the receiver was not subject to garnishment for rents and profits when the record showed that the receiver acted under court order in renting property for the benefit of holders of notes against the company in receivership.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Unallowable attachment. An attachment cannot be legally issued in an action against a ward and his property guardian. Not being legally issuable, the writ cannot be legally levied on the property of the ward, and must be discharged on proper motion.

Reason: The ward's property is in custodia legis.

Shumaker v Bohrofen, 217-34; 250 NW 683; 92 ALR 914

III NONAVAILABILITY OF MOTION

Oral motion at close of testimony. Oral motion to dismiss attachment at close of testimony held properly overruled where no motion to discharge was made as provided in this section.

Collings v Gibson, (NOR); 220 NW 338

12141 Perfecting appeal from order of discharge.

Loss of appeal. No appeal will lie from an order discharging a garnishee unless the purpose or intent to appeal is announced at the time of the discharge, even tho the motion to discharge has been taken under advisement by the court, and even tho the garnishing creditor is not present when the order is made; and especially is this true when the garnishing creditor had fair warning of the adverse ruling.

Woods v Brown, 207-944; 223 NW 868

Timely appeal. Where, under stipulation, a garnishment proceeding is transferred to equity along with the controversy between different parties as to the ownership of the money sought to be condemned, and the entire matter there tried as an equity cause, an appeal from the final decree need not be perfected within two days as provided by statute in attachment proceedings.

Hoyer v Jordan, 208-1256; 224 NW 574

Execution—attachment procedure inapplicable. The statutory provision for preserving a lien under attachment notwithstanding an order discharging the attachment by announcing an appeal and perfecting the same within two days, has no application to an order discharging a levy under execution.

Hewitt v Cas. Co., 212-316; 232 NW 835

Garnishment—uncontested order—appeal requirements not waived. The fact that a receiver in a foreclosure proceeding does not resist an order, directing him to withhold sufficient funds to satisfy a judgment creditor, will not amount to an adjudication of creditors' rights in the funds nor constitute a waiver of the statute regulating time to appeal from a release of a garnishment, nor confer jurisdiction on the appellate court to review the dismissal of the garnishment proceedings, since such jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of the parties.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Field Co., 224-655; 277 NW 284

Garnishment—dissolution—perfection of appeal. Under mandatory statute, a garnishing creditor whose levy is discharged by court order must, when such order is made, announce his intention to appeal therefrom followed by perfection of the appeal within two days, and his noncompliance therewith is fatal.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Field Co., 224-655; 277 NW 284

12143 Liberal construction—amendments.

Statutory origin—common law. Principle reaffirmed that proceedings in attachment are of statutory origin only, and in derogation of the common law.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Substituting new bond. A new bond, sufficient in amount, may, after levy, be substituted for an original bond which was insufficient in amount.

Carson & Co. v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

- V SERVICE
- VI RETURN
- VII LIEN OF GARNISHMENT
- VIII LIABILITY OF GARNISHEE
- IX CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS
- X OPERATION AND EFFECT OF GARNISHMENT, JUDGMENT, OR PAYMENT

I JURISDICTION

Special appearance—jurisdiction as sole question. Jurisdiction of the court is the only question which can be tried out on special appearance. So held where attempt was made, on such appearance, to try out the question whether attached property was exempt from attachment or execution levy.

Scott v Wamsley, 215-1409; 245 NW 214

Judgment—equitable relief—erroneous finding against garnishee. Concede that a finding by the court that the garnishee was indebted to the defendant in attachment was erroneous, nevertheless such fact furnishes no basis for enjoining the enforcement of the judgment entered on such finding, when the court was proceeding under fully acquired jurisdiction.

Farmers Union Exch. v Iowa Adj. Co., 201-78; 203 NW 283

II PERSONS AND PROPERTY SUBJECT TO GARNISHMENT

Discussion. See 13 ILR 164—Garnishment of alimony

Unmatured and contingent debt. Principle reaffirmed that a person is not garnishable on a debt which is not due and payable and which, under a certain contingency, will never be payable.

Malone v Moore, 208-1300; 227 NW 169

Alimony not debt "to become due". The defendant in a decree for alimony (assuming such decree to create a "debt") is not garnishable on an installment which is unmatured on the date of the garnishment, and the maturity of which will be wholly defeated by the death of the plaintiff in alimony before the maturity date as provided by the decree.

Malone v Moore, 204-625; 215 NW 625; 55 ALR 356

Decree for alimony. A decree for alimony in fixed monthly payments does not create a "debt". It follows that the defendant in alimony cannot be legally garnished for unpaid installments as a debtor of the plaintiff in alimony, even tho the claim on which the garnishment is based is for necessities sold to the plaintiff in alimony since the entry of the decree and in reliance on said decree.

Malone v Moore, 212-58; 236 NW 100

Allowance for children. Money awarded to a mother in a decree of divorce "for the support and maintenance" of her minor children, is not subject to process of garnishment under a personal judgment against the mother.

Peck v Peck, 207-1008; 222 NW 534

Special deposit superior to garnishment. Money deposited or caused to be deposited by a depositor in a bank for the sole use and benefit of a bona fide creditor of the depositor, and under an agreement to that effect between the depositor and said creditor, of which arrangement the bank had full knowledge, constitutes a special deposit. It follows that a subsequent garnishment of the fund is subject to the prior rights of the creditor for whom the deposit was made.

Hamilton v Imes, 216-855; 249 NW 135

Deposits—changing into special trust deposit. A seizure by garnishment proceedings of a general bank deposit, followed (1) by a direction by the garnishing plaintiff to the garnishee bank to hold said deposit in a named amount (which was 150% of the amount sued for), and (2) by an answer by the garnishee in accordance with said direction, does not have the legal effect of changing said sum from the status of a general deposit to the status of a special deposit—to the status of a trust fund—with consequent right to preferential payment in case the bank becomes insolvent.

Andrew v Bank, 220-712; 263 NW 495

Property in custodia legis. Property in custodia legis is not garnishable in the absence of an authorizing statute.

Malone v Moore, 208-1300; 227 NW 169

Custodia legis. A ruling on a motion to dismiss garnishment proceedings on the grounds that the property was in custodia legis and not subject to garnishment was not premature and was res judicata even tho made before the garnishee was examined and the garnishment proceedings completed, when the court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Garnishment of receivers. A receiver is ordinarily exempt from garnishment because the funds in his possession are in custodia legis, but if he has funds which he is not authorized to possess under the order appointing him or which are not the property of the estate for the preservation of which he was appointed, such property is subject to garnishment.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Creditor's rights against receiver. When a company in receivership had no right to property in the possession of the receiver at the time of a garnishment, the rights of the garnishing creditor against the receiver-garnishee could be no greater than the rights of the company.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Rents and profits. A motion to dismiss a garnishment against a receiver should have been sustained on the ground that the receiver was not subject to garnishment for rents and profits when the record showed that the receiver acted under court order in renting property for the benefit of holders of notes against the company in receivership.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Trustees and trust funds. A trustee cannot be made a garnishee by a creditor of the cestui que trust when, at the time of garnishment, the net income only of the trust is (under the terms of the trust) payable to the cestui, and then only on his optional demand, and when such net income was not only then undeterminable, but the cestui had not exercised his option to demand it.

Darling v Dodge, 200-1303; 206 NW 266

Trustee without funds. Where an estate was, under a decree of divorce, owing a divorcee on the last day of a month an installment of alimony payable through a trustee, and where the executor failed to make a deposit with the trustee to meet said payment, held, that the trustee was not garnishable as a debtor of the divorcee, even tho such trustee had on hand estate funds which had been deposited for another purpose, but out of which the trustee had no right to make such payment of alimony.

Malone v Moore, 208-1300; 227 NW 169

Wrongful payment by trustee — effect.

Where an estate was, under a decree of divorce, owing a divorcee on the last of a month an installment of alimony payable through a trustee, and where the executor failed to make a deposit with the trustee to meet said payment, nevertheless the executor is not garnishable as a debtor of the divorcee when the trustee, without authority, had, prior to the garnishment of the executor, paid the divorcee in full out of other estate funds in his possession, such wrongful payment having been ratified by the executor.

Malone v Moore, 208-1300; 227 NW 169

Matured debt due from trustee. Where an order of court directed a special administrator to deposit with a trustee on the last day of each month, a stated sum and directed the trustee to pay said sum forthwith to the former wife of the deceased if she be then living, held that the trustee was garnishable on the last day of a month as a debtor of the wife, she being then alive; and in such case it is of no consequence that the special administrator had made a premature and excessive deposit with the trustee, for the purpose of complying with the order.

Malone v Moore, 208-1300; 227 NW 169

Right to income from trust dependent on election or demand by cestui. A trust which provides that the income therefrom shall be paid to a named beneficiary "from time to time as she may elect during her lifetime" effectually places said income beyond the reach of the creditors of said beneficiary so long as said beneficiary makes no such election. Evidence held to show an election as to one monthly payment.

Ober v Dodge, 210-643; 231 NW 444

Spendthrift trusts. If the terms of a trust provide that the income be applied to the cestui at the discretion of the trustee, or the income is payable to the cestui at his demand, or the trust is for a special purpose, or in general where no debt is owed the cestui by the trustee, the creditors of the cestui cannot appropriate the benefaction.

Standard Chemical v Weed, 226-882; 285 NW 175

Spendthrift trust — creditor's rights in. When the testator's will created a trust for his son, providing that the proceeds of the trust be paid to the son "yearly or oftener if collected for shorter periods," and contained no words showing an intent to place the trust income beyond the reach of the son's creditors, a debt due the son from the trustee was created, which was a vested right which could be assigned and was subject to claims of creditors.

Standard Chemical v Weed, 226-882; 285 NW 175

Renounced legacy. The act of a testamentary beneficiary in executing and making of record an unconditional and final renunciation of all benefits granted him under the will legally places such benefits beyond the reach of his creditors.

Funk v Grulke, 204-314; 213 NW 608

Special administrator. A special administrator is not subject to garnishment on a general claim due from the estate to the defendant in garnishment.

Malone v Moore, 208-1300; 227 NW 169

Administrator—income from life estate. Administrator who was garnished by judgment creditor of decedent's widow, who was life tenant, held liable only for property constituting income of life estate which was in his hands at time of service of notice of garnishment, and not for such income that might come into his hands thereafter.

Yoss v Sampson, (NOR); 269 NW 22

Judgment creditor dead—when garnishment judgment void. Where, after the testate death of a judgment creditor, two of his eight beneficiaries secure an execution on the judgment, garnish the judgment debtor's interest in an estate, and take a judgment under the garnishment proceedings applying the proceeds to the original judgment, an order thereafter quashing the execution and the return thereon for nonconformity to statute also invalidates the garnishment judgment.

Gohring v Koonce, 224-1186; 278 NW 283

III WRIT

IV NOTICE

Insufficiency cured by appearance. The appearance of a garnishee in response to a pleading controverting his answer renders the sufficiency of the notice of garnishment quite immaterial.

V SERVICE

VI RETURN

Return of answer—jurisdiction—notice unnecessary. A garnishee who makes answer to the garnishing officer, even tho all indebtedness is unequivocally denied, is in court, on due return of said answer, and is not entitled to notice of the controverting of said answer by the execution plaintiff and of the hearing on said controverting pleading.

Iowa Stock Remedy Co. v Broderson, 201-1039; 203 NW 386

VII LIEN OF GARNISHMENT

Unmatured crops. A judgment creditor of a landlord by garnishing the tenant acquires no lien on the crop share which, after the maturity of the crop, will belong to the landlord.

Rodgers v Oliver, 200-869; 205 NW 513

Garnishment carries statutory lien. A judgment creditor, by perfecting a garnishment of the tenant of the judgment debtor, legally steps into the shoes of the latter, armed with full power, if the tenant-garnishee's debt is for rent, to enforce, by appropriate action, the landlord's lien theretofore held by the judgment debtor.

Kinart v Churchill, 210-72; 230 NW 349

Mortgage on crop-share rent superior to garnishment of tenant. The lien of a chattel mortgage on a landlord's share of crops reserved as rent, but in the possession of the tenant, is, as to matured crops actually set aside to the landlord or otherwise actually determined as belonging to the landlord, superior to a subsequent garnishment of the tenant by a judgment creditor of the landlord.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

No lien acquired. No lien is acquired by a garnishment.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

Priority over receivership. The receiver of a defunct corporation takes the property of the corporation subject to the prior positive rights acquired by a creditor under a duly perfected garnishment of the admitted debtors of the corporation.

Watts v Surety Co., 216-150; 248 NW 347

Proceeds from sale under chattel mortgage. A chattel mortgagee who consents to a sale of the mortgaged property on condition that the proceeds be paid to him acquires a right to such proceeds superior to the rights of the garnishing creditor of the mortgagor.

Scurry v Quaker Oats Co., 201-1171; 208 NW 860

VIII LIABILITY OF GARNISHEE

No presumption of liability. The liability of a garnishee must not be presumed, and the right of the garnishing creditor cannot be superior to those of the principal defendant.

Davis v Paul, 205-491; 218 NW 276

Corporation as garnishee—procedure. A corporation may be validly garnished by serving the notice of garnishment on an agent employed in the office of the corporation in the general management of the corporation's business, e. g., on one employed as a book-keeper and for general office work, and who looks after the office when the manager is absent, who signs as "cashier" checks issued by the corporation, and who has on occasions, to the knowledge of, and without objection by, the corporation, accepted notice of garnishment on the corporation.

Waterloo Co. v Court, 214-1169; 243 NW 287

Unharvested crop—evidence. On the theory, unquestioned in the trial court, that a tenant-garnishee was liable as garnishee for the value of crops which he willfully refused to harvest in accordance with his contract obligation, no error results from permitting witnesses to testify to the value of the crops if harvested.

Schooley v Efnor, 202-141; 209 NW 408

Rental value—evidence. On the issue whether a tenant-garnishee was liable for the reasonable rental value of land, the reception of evidence of such value will not constitute prejudicial error even tho the record reveals the fact that the rent was fixed by written lease, when the reasonable rental value was fixed at a sum less than that fixed by the lease.

Schooley v Efnor, 202-141; 209 NW 408

IX CLAIMS BY THIRD PERSONS

Beneficiaries' interests in estate funds—attorney's lien—intervention. Where a casualty company secured a judgment against beneficiaries under a will, and issued an execution under which the administrator with will annexed was attached as garnishee, attorneys for the beneficiaries could properly intervene in the garnishment proceedings to assert a claim to the garnished fund for legal services rendered to beneficiaries, in connection with the action by casualty company, which claim was based on written assignment of interests of beneficiaries under said will.

New Amsterdam Co. v Bookhart, 227-1150; 290 NW 61

Mortgagee's right to proceeds. The sale and converting into money of incumbered chattels under agreement between the lienholder, the debtor, and a third party, under which the third party agrees to collect the proceeds and apply the same on the existing lien, create in the lienholder a right to said proceeds which is superior to garnishments of said third party by the creditors of the debtor.

Korner v McKirgan, 202-515; 210 NW 562

Assignee of claim—priority. An assignment of a bank deposit in an insolvent bank, with notice thereof to the receiver, is prior in right to a subsequent garnishment of the receiver, assuming that the receiver is subject to garnishment.

Newell v Edwards, 208-1214; 227 NW 151

X OPERATION AND EFFECT OF GARNISHMENT, JUDGMENT, OR PAYMENT

Sale under chattel mortgage—proceeds—lien. An agreement between chattel mortgagees and the chattel mortgagor that the mortgaged property shall be sold at public sale and the proceeds turned over to the mortgagees in the order of their liens is valid and enforceable in equity. In other words equity, in order to enforce the agreement, will impress a trust on said proceeds in favor of said mortgagees, even tho the occasion so to do arises in a proceeding at law, to wit, a garnishment.

Jasper Bank v Klauenberg, 218-578; 255 NW 884

Quashing execution—motion—when timely. When innocent third parties are not involved, a motion to quash an execution for nonconformity to statutes, prescribing procedure after death of judgment creditor, is not too late, tho filed four months after the entry of a garnishment judgment to which only two of the eight heirs interested therein were parties. Such garnishment judgment is an incomplete adjudication and not sufficient to warrant payment by the judgment debtor to the two represented heirs.

Gohring v Koonce, 224-1186; 278 NW 283

12158 Who may be garnished.

See annotations under §12157 (II)

Discussion. See 21 ILR 641—Safety deposit boxes

12159 Municipal corporations.

Equitable garnishment against municipality—school district as defendant. A judgment plaintiff may not, as a matter of public policy, maintain against a school district an equitable proceeding to subject to the satisfaction of the judgment funds in the hands of such corporation and belonging to the judgment defendant.

Julander v Reynolds, 206-1115; 221 NW 807

12160 Fund in court.

Custodia legis — burden of proof. If property is not subject to attachment or garnishment because undergoing partition, and, therefore, in the custody of the law, the mover for dissolution must show that no order for distribution has been entered in the partition proceedings.

Carson v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

12168 Answer controverted.

Unknown ownership of property. A garnishee who does not know whether the property held by him belongs to the attachment or execution debtor has a right to deny ownership in such debtor and thereby force the garnishing creditor to prima facie proof of such ownership. So held where the property held by the garnishee was cash bail.

Simmons v Beeson, 201-144; 206 NW 667

Declarations of defendant in garnishment. Declarations made by the attachment defendant after the garnishee has been duly served, are not admissible in favor of the garnishee and against the attaching plaintiff.

Schooley v Efnor, 202-141; 209 NW 408

12168.1 Notice of controverting pleadings.

Contrary holding under prior statute.

Iowa Rem. Co. v Broderson, 201-1039; 203 NW 386

Insufficient notice cured by appearance. The appearance of a garnishee in response to a pleading controverting his answer renders the sufficiency of the notice of garnishment quite immaterial.

Farmers Exch. v Iowa Co., 201-78; 203 NW 283

12169 Judgment against garnishee.

Liability of garnishee. See under §12157 (VIII)

Erroneous finding that garnishee was indebted—effect.

Farmers Exch. v Iowa Co., 201-78; 203 NW 283

Fraudulent conveyance—effect. Judgment may not be rendered against a garnishee for the proceeds of exempt personal property fraudulently mortgaged by the mortgagor-owner.

Northwest. Bk. v Muilenburg, 209-1223; 229 NW 813

Judgment in rem—nonmerger of debt sued on. In an action aided by attachment, the entry, on service on defendant by publication, of a judgment in rem against property of the defendant in the hands of a garnishee, does not work a merger in said judgment of the obligation sued on, and thereby deprive the holder of said obligation of the right to proceed against defendant, at a later time, for the recovery of the balance due on said obligation, if there be such balance.

Strand v Halverson, 220-1276; 264 NW 266; 103 ALR 835

Foreign corporations — dissolution — effect on pending actions. A duly rendered decree of dissolution of a foreign corporation, at the instance of the state under the laws of which said corporation was organized, is, in effect, an executed sentence of death; being such, said decree ipso facto works an abatement (1) of an unadjudicated action in rem pending in this state against said dissolved corporation, and (2) of garnishment proceeding pending in connection with said action. Under such circumstances, the garnishee may properly move for and be granted an order of discharge.

Peoria Co. v Streator Co., 221-690; 266 NW 548

Willful destruction of property. Evidence tending to show that a garnishee had, subsequent to garnishment, willfully destroyed the property in his possession belonging to the defendant in garnishment, generates a jury question as to the liability of the garnishee.

Schooley v Efnor, 202-141; 209 NW 408

12170 Notice.

Waiver of notice. When judgment debtors appear in garnishment proceeding and file pleadings, voluntary appearance invoking jurisdiction renders it unnecessary to serve statutory notice of garnishment.

Bookhart v New Amsterdam Co., 226-1186; 286 NW 417

12171 Pleading by defendant—discharge of garnishee.

Foreign corporations — dissolution — effect on pending actions. A duly rendered decree of dissolution of a foreign corporation, at the instance of the state under the laws of which said corporation was organized, is, in effect, an executed sentence of death; being such, said decree ipso facto works an abatement (1) of an unadjudicated action in rem pending in this state against said dissolved corporation, and (2) of garnishment proceeding pending in connection with said action. Under such circumstances, the garnishee may properly move for and be granted an order of discharge.

Peoria Co. v Streator Co., 221-690; 266 NW 548

Rents and profits not garnishable. A motion to dismiss a garnishment against a receiver should have been sustained on the ground that the receiver was not subject to garnishment for rents and profits when the record showed that the receiver acted under court order in renting property for the benefit of holders of notes against the company in receivership.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Henry Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

12172 When debt not due.

Contingent debt. A garnishee is properly discharged when he is a trustee holding funds for the payment of a debt which has not matured at the time of garnishment, and which, under a certain contingency will never mature and be payable to the defendant in execution.

Malone v Moore, 208-1300; 227 NW 169

Nonmatured debt — liability of garnishee. On a judgment against a garnishee on a debt not yet due, execution must be suspended until the debt is due.

Popofsky v Wearmouth, 216-114; 248 NW 358

12174 Judgment conclusive.

Judgment conclusive. See under §12157

12175 Docket to show garnishments.

Judgment in rem—nonmerger of debt sued on. In an action aided by attachment, the entry, on service on defendant by publication, of a judgment in rem against property of the defendant in the hands of a garnishee, does not work a merger in said judgment of the obligation sued on, and thereby deprive the holder of said obligation of the right to proceed against defendant, at a later time, for the recovery of the balance due on said obligation, if there be such balance.

Strand v Halverson, 220-1276; 264 NW 266; 103 ALR 835

12176 Appeal.

Loss of right to appeal. No appeal will lie from an order discharging a garnishee unless the purpose or intent to appeal is announced at the time of the discharge, even tho the motion to discharge has been taken under advisement by the court, and even tho the garnishing creditor is not present when the order is made; and especially is this true when the garnishing creditor had fair warning of the adverse ruling.

Woods v Brown, 207-944; 223 NW 868

Dissolution—time to perfect appeal—procedure. Under mandatory statute, a garnishing creditor whose levy is discharged by court order must, when such order is made, announce his intent to appeal therefrom followed by perfection of the appeal within two days, and his noncompliance therewith is fatal.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Field Co., 224-655; 277 NW 284

Motion to dismiss garnishee—burden on appeal. On an appeal from an order overruling a motion to dismiss a garnishee, the burden of sustaining the motion was on the garnishee.

Sioux Falls Assn. v Field Co., 226-874; 285 NW 155

Estate funds—attorney's lien—intervention. Where a casualty company secured a judgment against beneficiaries under a will, and issued an execution under which the administrator with will annexed was attached as garnishee, attorneys for the beneficiaries could properly intervene in the garnishment proceedings to assert a claim to the garnished fund for legal services rendered to beneficiaries, in connection with the action by casualty company, which claim was based on written assignment of interests of beneficiaries under said will.

Replevin conditioned on notice. See under §§11698, 12117, Vol I

I REPLEVIN IN GENERAL

Replevin in lieu of action for conversion. A plaintiff, it is true, may not employ an action of replevin in order to recover for a conversion, but plaintiff may maintain a good-faith action in replevin against a levying officer when the officer had possession of the property when plaintiff served his notice of ownership, and when the officer received an indemnifying bond, even tho the officer had parted with possession under an order of court before the replevin action was actually commenced.

Dvorak v Avery, 208-509; 225 NW 947

Noninconsistent remedies. The commencement of an action of replevin to recover the possession of promissory notes does not constitute the election of a remedy which will preclude the subsequent filing of a substituted petition presenting the controversy in the form of an action in equity.

Pickford v Smith, 215-1080; 247 NW 256

Foreclosure—replevin pending. The right of a mortgagee to foreclose a chattel mortgage by notice and sale (1) under the statute (Ch 523, C., '31), or (2) under the terms of the mortgage itself, may not be transferred to the district court on the application of the mortgagor on the ground of fraud and want of consideration in obtaining the mortgage, when an action of replevin involving the mortgaged chattels, and pending against the mortgagor furnishes him ample opportunity to test the mortgagee's right to foreclose by interposing said plea of fraud and want of consideration.

McDonald v Johnston, 218-1352; 256 NW 676

II PROPERTY SUBJECT TO REPLEVIN

Sale of goods—unenforceable contracts. Replevin for the possession of an existing article of personal property cannot be maintained when the action is based solely on an oral contract of purchase which is clearly within the statute of frauds, and under which contract title necessarily did not pass.

Lockie v McKee, 221-95; 264 NW 918

Absence of annexation or connection of fixtures—effect. An oil tank buried entirely in the parking of a public street and covered with cement, and a pump connected with said tank and bolted into said cement, tho wholly used in connection with the operation of an automobile service garage on a lot abutting said street and adjacent to said tank and pump, do not become fixtures to said lot (1) when said tank and pump are in no manner in contact with said lot or with any building thereon or fixture thereof, and (2) when the parties to the original installation distinctly intended that the title to said tank and pump should remain in the party installing them, the latter not being the owner of said lot.

McCoun v Drews, 221-227; 265 NW 160

Collection of estate—discovery—automobile replevied after testator's death. An automobile finance company, as conditional seller, may not replevy automobiles immediately after the death of conditional buyer having absolute ownership and possession at the time of his death, since the right to possession of all personal property for administration purposes passed to executor, who, in a proceeding to discover probate assets, may recover the automobiles or their value from such conditional seller, whose proper remedy should have been the filing of a claim against the administrator.

In re Sweet, 224-589; 277 NW 712

Deed deliverable after death. Whether replevin is the proper remedy to recover a deed executed but not deliverable until after grantor's death, quaere.

Orris v Whipple, 224-1157; 280 NW 617

Constructive severance doctrine inapplicable to movable chattel. When a tenant purchases an electric lighting plant on agreement with the landlord that he may take it with him upon termination of the tenancy, and when, at the termination of such tenancy, the tenant

II PROPERTY SUBJECT TO REPLEVIN—concluded purchases the reversion, there is no occasion to apply the doctrine of constructive severance, because the plant maintained at all times its character as a movable chattel.

Equitable v Chapman, 225-988; 282 NW 355

Fixtures—farm light plant—not part of realty. In a replevin action for a lighting plant placed on a concrete block in the basement of a farm house, such electric plant is not essential to the main business of operating the farm, but is a mere convenience, and is not a part of the realty when it is easily removable, along with the batteries resting on a shelf, and without damage to the house, the wiring being capable of use with any other electrical installation, and when there is no evidence of an intent that it be permanently fixed.

Equitable v Chapman, 225-988; 282 NW 355

Purchase of car—wife not joining in chattel mortgage—payment by employer. Where defendant was unable to meet payments on car, and employer, under an agreement with defendant, made delinquent and future payments to the finance company and took an assignment of the note and chattel mortgage, the employer was entitled to the possession of the car as against contentions that intervenor (defendant's wife) did not join in the execution of the chattel mortgage, that the assignment to employer did not create any right or lien sufficient to sustain writ of replevin, and that the payments made by the employer constituted a satisfaction and payment and not a purchase of the chattel mortgage.

Simpson v McConnell, 228- ; 291 NW 862

Repossessed motor vehicles—no retaking on ground that conditional sale usurious. A replevin action to retake a motor vehicle covered by, and repossessed under, a conditional bill of sale, is not maintainable on the ground that the conditional bill of sale was allegedly usurious. The debt in the conditional bill of sale is valid and still exists even tho a usury penalty attaches.

Hill v Rolfsema, 226-486; 284 NW 376

III DEMAND, PAYMENT, OR TENDER

Want of demand. Replevin will not be abated for want of demand on defendants for possession prior to the institution of the action (1) when one defendant had incapacitated himself from complying with a demand, and (2) when the other defendant asserted unqualified title against the plaintiff.

Hart v Wood, 202-58; 209 NW 430

When tender unnecessary. In an action of replevin based on a conditional sale contract which provides for possession by the vendor in case of condition broken, tender of payments already made is not a condition precedent to the institution of the action.

Schmoller Piano v Smith, 204-661; 215 NW 628

Continued tender—materiality. Plaintiff in replevin action may elect to take money judgment in lieu of return of property. A continued tender of defendant can be material only on question of cost or right to judgment for value of property.

Prehn v Kindig, (NOR); 232 NW 812

IV JURISDICTION, VENUE, AND PARTIES

Collection of estate—discovery—automobile replevied after testator's death. An automobile finance company, as conditional seller, may not replevy automobiles immediately after the death of conditional buyer having absolute ownership and possession at the time of his death, since the right to possession of all personal property for administration purposes passed to executor, who in a proceeding to discover probate assets may recover the automobiles or their value from such conditional seller, whose proper remedy should have been the filing of a claim against the administrator.

In re Sweet, 224-589; 277 NW 712

Justices of the peace—exceeding amount—replevin a nullity. Under the statute allowing an enlarged jurisdiction for a justice of the peace up to $300 by written agreement, he is without authority to issue a writ of replevin for automobiles whose value exceeds such amount limiting his jurisdiction.

In re Sweet, 224-589; 277 NW 712

V PETITION

Replevin—substituted petition in equity—mandatory transfer. A plaintiff who, as the maker of promissory notes, brings an action of replevin against the holder, and obtains possession of the notes on the ground of fraudulent representations and want and failure of consideration in the inception of the notes, and who, without his legal right so to do being questioned, thereupon files an amended and substituted petition in equity praying the cancellation of the notes on the grounds pleaded in the replevin action, is entitled to a transfer to the equity docket and to a trial in equity. This is true because of the favorable rule in equity that fraudulent representations may be established without proof of scienter.

Pickford v Smith, 215-1080; 247 NW 256

VI ANSWER

General denial—chattel mortgage not admissible thereunder in replevin action. General denial puts in issue only facts pleaded in the petition. So, under a general denial to a replevin action for an automobile, evidence of a prior mortgage is properly excluded, when not pleaded, inasmuch as, under a general denial, the court is not called upon to decide which lien is first but only the question of whether plaintiff is entitled to possession.

General Motors v Koch, 225-897; 281 NW 728

VII ISSUE, PROOF, AND VARIANCE

Unsupported issue of partnership. In an action of replevin for two articles, of which plaintiff was the absolute owner of one and the holder of a chattel mortgage on the other, defendant's issue of partnership is properly rejected when supported only by a showing that the parties had temporarily shared equally in the net earnings of the two articles.

Dieter v Coyne, 201-823; 208 NW 359

Pleading and evidence. Plaintiff in replevin, in order to recover, must show, by the strength of his own title, that, when the writ was issued, he was entitled to the possession of the property in question. Evidence held quite insufficient so to show.

Chorpening v Nickerson, 223-791; 273 NW 843

Decedent's gift to sister—executor's burden. In a replevin action for property held under claim of gift, plaintiff has the burden throughout the trial to establish right to immediate possession.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

VIII EVIDENCE

Allegation of ownership. Evidence reviewed, and held, plaintiff's allegation of unqualified ownership in himself of the property involved in an action of replevin was sufficiently proven.

Luther v Inv. Co., 222-305; 268 NW 589

Mental competency and elements of gift—when jury question. In a replevin action by executor against decedent's sister to recover property held under claim of gift inter vivos from decedent, where clear, cogent, definite, and convincing evidence conclusively established mental competency and all the essential elements of a completed gift inter vivos appear without conflict, no jury question is presented.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Conditional sales—replevin of automobile conditionally sold under "trust receipt". Trust receipt for automobile delivered by a finance company was in effect conditional sale when accompanied by promissory note and agreement to return the automobile on demand. Held, in a replevin action the finance company sustained its burden to prove its right to immediate possession by a showing of default in payment, which gave the right to possession.

General Motors v Koch, 225-897; 281 NW 728

Election to take money judgment or property—tender by defendant. Plaintiff in replevin action may elect to take money judgment in lieu of return of property. A continued tender of defendant can be material only on question of cost or right to judgment for value of property.

Prehn v Kindig, (NOR); 232 NW 812

IX TRIAL

Nonright to directed verdict. A plaintiff in replevin claiming possession under a chattel mortgage and met by the mortgagor defendant with a plea of (1) general denial and (2) fraud in the execution of the mortgage is not entitled to a directed verdict upon the withdrawal by the court of the plea of fraud, the record revealing evidence that the defendant never had title to the property. Plaintiff must proceed and recover on the strength of his own title.

Conway v Alexander, 200-705; 205 NW 351

Instructing on basis of counsel's admissions. The court is not in error in peremptorily instructing in an action of replevin that plaintiff is entitled to the immediate possession of all property claimed by him (except specifically enumerated articles) when said instruction is in strict accord with the explicit admission in court of defendant's counsel, tho no such admission appears in defendant's answer.

Luther v Inv. Co., 222-305; 268 NW 589

Decedent's gift to sister—executor's burden to recover. In a replevin action for property held under claim of gift, plaintiff has the burden throughout the trial to establish right to immediate possession.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Limiting damages—issue not raised in trial. Where an action in replevin by one claiming an automobile under a conditional sales contract was brought against a chattel mortgagee who had given some cash and extended credit in return for his mortgage, the plaintiff, having permitted the trial to be concluded on the issue of possession without raising any other issue or requesting instructions on any other issue, could not complain that the mortgagee's recovery should have been limited to the amount of actual cash given for the mortgage.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Res judicata—acquittal of crime—nonconclusive as to payment in civil action. Where a contract for bailment of cattle provided for their purchase at a stipulated price and also provided for their surrender on demand if not paid for, and where defendant had been acquitted of a forgery charge based on a forged "Paid" stamp giving the appearance the contract price had been paid, his acquittal, when interposed in a replevin action for the cattle, was not res judicata on the issue of payment and did not bar the replevin action.

Bates v Carter, 225-893; 281 NW 727

12178 Ordinary proceedings—joinder or counterclaim.

Replevin nontransferable. An action in replevin, insofar as plaintiff claims a lien on the property replevied may not be transferred to equity.

Commer. Credit v Hazel, 214-213; 242 NW 47

Replevin—unallowable transfer to equity. An action of replevin involving mortgaged chattels, and wherein the only issue joined is that of fraud and want of consideration in the execution of the mortgage, cannot be legally transferred to equity for the equitable foreclosure of the mortgage.

McDonald v Johnston, 218-1352; 256 NW 676

12183 Writ issued.

Abuse of process.

Myers v Watson, 204-635; 215 NW 634

Justices of the peace—exceeding amount—replevin a nullity. Under the statute allowing an enlarged jurisdiction for a justice of the peace up to $300 by written agreement, he is without authority to issue a writ of replevin for automobiles whose value exceeds such amount limiting his jurisdiction.

In re Sweet, 224-589; 277 NW 712

12191 Return of writ.

Belated return. Failure to make timely return does not invalidate the writ.

Gibson v Collings, 200-721; 205 NW 304

12192 Assessment of value and damages—right of possession.

Demand and refusal—evidence—jury question. The innocent possessor of personal property is not, because of such possession, liable in damages to one who is entitled to the immediate possession of said property unless he refuses, on demand of the latter, to surrender the property. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue of demand and refusal.

Luther v Inv. Co., 222-305; 268 NW 589

Verdict—forms on submission. Forms of verdict reviewed and held unobjectionable.

Luther v Inv. Co., 222-305; 268 NW 589

12193 Judgment.

Failure to fix value. An unsuccessful defendant in replevin who, under a delivery bond, has retained the property in his possession, may insist that the judgment show the value of the property, provided that he is prejudiced by the failure of the judgment to so show.

Hart v Wood, 202-58; 209 NW 430

Officers and agents—liability for corporate tort. The managing officer of a corporation who causes the corporation of which he is such officer wrongfully to withhold personal property from a person who is entitled to the immediate possession of said property, is guilty of a tort, and is personally liable for said tort along with his said corporation.

Luther v Inv. Co., 222-305; 268 NW 589

12195 Plaintiff's option.

When money judgment effective. That part of a judgment in replevin which provides a money judgment in event that the possession of the property cannot be obtained, becomes immediately effective (or at least authorizes the judgment plaintiff to so treat it) (1) when a demand for possession is made and refused, or (2) when the judgment defendant has by his own acts incapacitated himself from returning the property in a substantially undepreciated condition, compared with the condition when he took it.

Brown Co. v Motor Co., 200-913; 205 NW 841

Election to take money judgment or property—tender by defendant. Plaintiff in replevin action may elect to take money judgment in lieu of return of property. A continued tender of defendant can be material only on question of cost or right to judgment for value of property.

Prehn v Kindig, (NOR); 232 NW 812

Improper fixing of value. The fact that in replevin the court fixes the value of the property, instead of submitting such issue to the jury, becomes of no consequence when the plaintiff availed himself of the right to take the actual property.

Schmoller Piano v Smith, 204-661; 215 NW 628

Absence of annexation or connection of fixtures—effect. An oil tank buried entirely in the parking of a public street and covered with cement, and a pump connected with said tank and bolted into said cement, tho wholly used in connection with the operation of an automobile service garage on a lot abutting said street and adjacent to said tank and pump, do not become fixtures to said lot (1) when said tank and pump are in no manner in contact with said lot or with any building thereon or fixture thereof, and (2) when the parties to the original installation distinctly intended that the title to said tank and pump should remain in the party installing them, the latter not being the owner of said lot.

LOST PROPERTY

12204 Lost goods or money.

Noninconsistent statutes. The statutory provision that the finder of lost goods shall make restitution to the owner if known is not inconsistent with the statutory provision that the finder shall be paid a stated compensation for making restitution. (§12211, C., '31)

Flood v Bank, 218-898; 253 NW 509; 95 ALR 1168

Buried money—unknown ownership. Money found buried on land of another is not "lost property" within the meaning of this chapter, when the true owner cannot be found, but comes within the doctrine of "treasure-trove", which doctrine is not merged into our statutes, and the finder is entitled to possession as against everyone except the true owner.

Zornes v Bowen, 223-1141; 274 NW 877

12205 When owner unknown.

Buried money—finder entitled. Money found buried on land of another is not "lost property" within the meaning of this chapter, when the true owner cannot be found, but comes within the doctrine of "treasure-trove", which doctrine is not merged into our statutes, and the finder is entitled to possession as against everyone except the true owner.

Zornes v Bowen, 223-1141; 274 NW 877

12206 Advertisement.

Buried money—unknown ownership. Money found buried on land of another is not "lost property" within the meaning of this chapter, when the true owner cannot be found, but comes within the doctrine of "treasure-trove", which doctrine is not merged into our statutes, and the finder is entitled to possession as against everyone except the true owner.

Zornes v Bowen, 223-1141; 274 NW 877

12211 Compensation.

Compensation for finding lost property. The statutory provision that the finder of lost goods shall be paid a named compensation is not violative of the due process clause of the constitution.

Flood v Bank, 218-898; 253 NW 509; 95 ALR 1168

"Lost" goods defined. Money taken from the owner thereof by robbery, and the whereabouts of which money is thereafter unknown to said owner until it is returned to him by one who found it, where the robber had hidden it, constitutes "lost" money within the meaning of the statute which provides compensation to the finder of "lost" money and other property.

Flood v Bank, 218-898; 253 NW 509; 95 ALR 1168

Noninconsistent statutes. The statutory provision that the finder of lost goods shall make restitution to the owner if known (§12204, C., '31) is not inconsistent with the statutory provision that the finder shall be paid a stated compensation for making restitution.

Flood v Bank, 218-898; 253 NW 509; 95 ALR 1168

Noninconsistent statutes. The statutory provision that the finder of lost goods shall be paid a named compensation when he makes restitution to the owner is not inconsistent with the statutory provision that he who unlawfully converts found property to his own use is guilty of larceny. (§13018, C., '31.)

Flood v Bank, 218-898; 253 NW 509; 95 ALR 1168

Statutory reward applicable to national banks. The statute which obligates the owner of lost goods, money, etc., to compensate the finder of such property, is applicable to a national bank as owner, even though the federal statutes are silent on the subject, as said statute does not impair the efficiency of said bank as a federal, governmental agency.

Flood v Bank, 220-935; 263 NW 321

Offer of reward — insufficient revocation. Where an unincorporated bankers association offered, in the form of a printed poster, a reward for facts leading to the conviction of bank robbers, the act of the cashier of a member bank in removing said poster from his bank and destroying it, and in declining, for his bank, to pay further dues to the association, will not, in and of itself, constitute a revocation of the offered reward, the evident intent of the offerer being to continue the offer for a reasonable time, and the offer being acted on within such time.

Carr v Mahaska Assn., 222-411; 269 NW 494; 107 ALR 1080

Offer by nonlegal entity — liability of members. An incorporated bank which, in effect, represents that it is a member of an association which is offering a reward for information leading to the conviction of bank robbers, thereby obligates itself to pay the reward when, in truth, the association is but a voluntary, unincorporated association.

Carr v Mahaska Assn., 222-411; 269 NW 494; 107 ALR 1080

CHAPTER 517

RECOVERY OF REAL PROPERTY

12230 Ordinary proceedings—joinder—counterclaim.

Fraudulent representations—unavailing inspection—effect. The plea that the party complaining of false and fraudulent representations in an exchange of land had inspected the land prior to accepting it, and had full opportunity to learn all relevant facts, must necessarily fall when it is shown that an inspection at said time would not reveal the falsity of the particular representations relied on.

Baumhover v Gerken, 200-551; 203 NW 15

Unallowable counterclaim. A defendant in an action for the recovery of real property whose possession originated in a contract of purchase which has been formally and legally forfeited may not counterclaim for rescission of the contract and for judgment against plaintiff for the amount paid on the contract, and for the value of improvements placed on the property; especially when plaintiff was never a party to said contract.

Detmers v Russell, 212-767; 237 NW 494

Trust in real estate — jurisdictional venue. An action by the beneficiaries of a trust in real estate (located in this state) to compel the trustee holding title to convey the land, in accordance with the terms of the trust agreement, to a newly designated trustee, must be brought and litigated in the county in which the land, or some part thereof, is located. If not so brought, the court is under mandatory duty, on motion for change of venue, to transfer the action to a proper county.

Titus Co. v Kelsey, 221-1368; 268 NW 23

Deed deliverable after death. Whether replevin is the proper remedy to recover a deed executed but not deliverable until after grantor's death, quare.

Orris v Whipple, 224-1157; 280 NW 617

Deed to ancestor—previous and subsequent chain of title lacking—title not established as against tax deed. In a quiet title action, stipulated evidence that an ancestor of defendant received and recorded a deed to the land from another is insufficient to overthrow plaintiff's tax deed without a further showing of the previous and subsequent chain of title.

Inter-Ocean v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Secondary evidence. Where title to real estate is not in issue, secondary evidence of title is admissible when proper foundation for its introduction has been laid; otherwise, if title is in issue.

Inter-Ocean v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

12231 Parties.

Quieting title (?) or action for possession (?). The vendor of lands who has effected a complete forfeiture of a contract of sale may institute action in equity to quiet title, even tho he might have instituted an action at law for possession.

Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

Right of possession. A religious organization is not entitled to the unconditional possession of real property of which it is the equitable owner, but the legal title of which is vested in trustees, when the property and the income therefrom are being used and employed, and the property improved, by a duly organized federation of different churches, all with the knowledge, approval, and express authorization of the said equitable owner.

Church v Gardner, 204-907; 215 NW 970

Injunction nonavailable in lieu of possessory action at law. One who claims the possession of realty against another who is in actual possession as a tenant at will may not resort to injunction proceedings to adjudicate his claimed right of possession.

Austin v Perry, 219-1344; 261 NW 615

12232 Title.

Title—nonnecessity to plead. The vendor in an executory contract of sale of land in an action against the vendee to recover possession of the land after the contract has been forfeited need not plead or prove that he has good title to the land.

O'Connor v Hassett, 207-155; 222 NW 530

Right of action and defenses — estoppel. A recorded titleholder who learns that his grantor, without authority, has contracted to sell the property, and thereupon consents that the contract may be consummated provided he—the titleholder—receives the purchase price, is not estopped to insist on his title and right to possession thereunder, by receiving part of said sale price, it appearing that the contracting purchaser had no knowledge of such consent and made no payment in reliance on such consent.

Fitch v Stephenson, 217-458; 252 NW 130

12233 Tenant in common.

Purchase of outstanding lease, etc. One of several tenants in common of the fee to land who, on his own behalf, purchases of a lessee both an outstanding long-time lease on the said land and the building thereon, erected and owned by the lessee under said lease, may not enforce contribution from his co-tenants for his outlay; nor may said co-tenants legally demand the right to make contribution to the purchasing tenant and become tenants in common of the building.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

12236 Abstract of title.

Abstract of title. The holder of a tax deed need not, in an action to recover the property, attach to his petition an abstract of title showing the chain of title which antedated the tax deed.

Shaffer v Marshall, 206-336; 218 NW 292

12239 Answer.

Burden of proof. A defendant in an action to recover real estate who claims an interest in the land derived from a source other than the plaintiff must plead and prove such interest.

O'Connor v Hassett, 207-155; 222 NW 530

12242 Purchase pending suit.

Lis pendens. See under §11093

12243 Order to enter and survey.

Official survey on court order—evidence sufficient to support confirming report. In an action for reformation of description by metes and bounds in realty mortgages and for their foreclosure, evidence held sufficient to support judgment confirming surveyor's report, where surveyor is permitted to testify, without objection, that he was qualified to make the survey and that the plat of survey prepared by him is a true and correct survey showing the property in question and made in accordance with a previous order of court and such plat, after identification, was introduced in evidence without objection.

State Bank v Mapel, 226-1328; 286 NW 517

12247 Judgment for damages.

Torts—fundamental laws govern liability. The fundamental and underlying law of torts is that he who does injury to the person or property of another is civilly liable in damages for the injuries inflicted.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

12248 Use and occupation.

Rents as set-off. See under §10128

12249 Improvements set off.

Occupying claimant—loss of remedy. An unsuccessful defendant in an action for the recovery of real property who is afforded no opportunity therein to interpose a claim for permanent improvements (§§12235, 12249, C., '27), must necessarily resort to the occupying claimants' act (§10128 et seq., C., '27) for relief, and when he fails to resort to such remaining and exclusive remedy, and quits and surrenders the premises, he will not be permitted, when subsequently sued on a super-sedeas bond growing out of the litigation, to interpose a claim for such improvements as a set-off.

Bigelow v Ins. Co., 206-884; 221 NW 661

12252 Growing crops—bond.

"Matured crops" defined. Crops are matured whenever they have reached such a stage of maturity that they no longer draw sustenance from the soil.

Goldstein v Mundon, 202-381; 210 NW 444

12255 New trial.

New trial generally. See under §11550

Belated presentation. The overruling of a motion for new trial will not be disturbed on appeal when such motion was filed after appeal and issuance of procedendo, and on the ground that the applicant inadvertently overlooked in the trial of the case certain available testimony.

Tutt v Smith, 202-1389; 212 NW 127

Nonapplicability of statute. The statutory provision for new trial in actions for the recovery of real property by ordinary proceedings can have no application to an equitable proceeding to have a deed decreed a mortgage and for an accounting of rents and profits.

Hinman v Sage, 213-1320; 241 NW 406

CHAPTER 519

FORCIBLE ENTRY OR DETENTION OF REAL PROPERTY

12263 Grounds.

ANALYSIS

- I FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER IN GENERAL
- II PRIOR POSSESSION BY PLAINTIFF
- III HOLDING OVER
- IV POSSESSION AFTER EXECUTION SALE
- V NONPAYMENT OF RENT

I FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER IN GENERAL

Dual forfeitures. A vendor who has initiated a forfeiture of his vendee's contract for an existing default, and commenced an action of forcible entry and detainer, may, pending such proceedings, initiate a forfeiture of the contract for a new and subsequently accruing default, and proceed thereon if he is unsuccessful in the first proceeding.

Cassiday v Adamson, 208-417; 224 NW 508

Vendor and vendee. A vendee who has agreed (1) to pay for the property in monthly installments, and (2) to have the paid installments treated as payment for the use of the property in case the contract is forfeited, becomes, in case of forfeiture, the tenant of the vendor, and may be removed through an action of forcible entry and detainer.

Cassiday v Adamson, 208-417; 224 NW 508
Music v De Long, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

Enjoining action. Injunction will lie to enjoin an action of forcible entry and detention only on a very clear showing that a certain and manifestly irreparable injury will result unless the writ is issued.

Farber v Ritchie, 212-1396; 238 NW 436

Foreclosure (?) or forcible entry and detainer (?). Tho a mortgage extension agreement provides for the execution by the mortgagor to the mortgagee of an absolute deed to the mortgaged premises and for the delivery of the deed and the possession of the premises to the grantee in case of default, yet if the agreement as a whole reveals the intent simply to furnish additional security, it must follow that the relation of landlord and tenant is not created, and that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee is continued. It follows that, at the expiration of the extension time, forcible entry and detainer will not lie to obtain possession of the premises.

Mickelson v Rehnstrom, 215-1056; 247 NW 275

Appeal—nonright to maintain. Defendant in an action involving the sole question whether he was wrongfully detaining possession of premises after a refusal to pay rent, may not, after voluntarily surrendering possession in compliance with an order of removal, maintain an appeal from said order.

Sherman v Moore, 222-1359; 271 NW 606

Landlord's title—estoppel to dispute. A tenant who remains in undisturbed possession of realty under a lease with an executor, and refuses to quit and surrender said premises at the termination of said lease, may not defend his wrongful possession by or under the plea that the executor had no legal right to lease the land.

Wright v Zachgo, 222-1368; 271 NW 512

Tenancies at will—termination. In a forcible entry and detainer action where the petition alleged a notice dated January 12th terminating a tenancy at will "within 30 days from the date of this notice", such notice being served on January 13th, a demurrer should have been sustained, as only 29 and not the statutory 30 days written notice was given.

Murphy v Hilton, 224-199; 275 NW 497

Lease—husband's oral termination invalid. An oral agreement between the landlord and the tenant-husband, to terminate a joint lease of the husband and wife will not terminate their homestead rights in 40 acres of the land, so as to permit a forcible entry and detainer action, since a homestead can be terminated only in writing by both husband and wife signing the same joint instrument containing a legal description of the homestead.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

Nonabuse of discretion. In action for forcible entry and detainer, where there was evidence of error in instructions, in that court assumed that an alleged lease was made with agent of plaintiff with authority to make an oral lease, and that court did not specifically define to jury necessary elements of an oral lease, and there was also question that verdict was not supported by evidence, granting new trial held not an abuse of discretion.

Holman v Rook, (NOR); 271 NW 612

Involuntary surrender preserves right of appeal. An involuntary surrender of premises by execution or to avoid forcible removal does not constitute an acquiescence in, and performance of, the judgment such as to waive the right of appeal; however, a voluntary surrender would constitute a voluntary performance of the judgment so that there would be no detainer; the case would be moot; and an appeal would be dismissed.

Schuldt v Lee, 226-189; 284 NW 89

Remedy statutory—injunctive interference by equity limited. The summary remedy of forcible entry and detainer, and an appeal from a decision therein, are statutory and a court of equity will not interfere in the absence of fraud or mistake or a showing of manifest irreparable injury.

Schuldt v Lee, 226-189; 284 NW 89

Title involved—waiver of right to transfer. A defendant in an action of forcible entry and detainer waives his right to have said action transferred to the district court, on the ground that title to real estate is involved, when, after the commencement of the action and before answer, he enters into a stipulation, as a part of the files in the case, to the effect that if he fails to make specified payments on the real estate in question judgment shall be entered against him for the possession of said premises; likewise he waives such right when, after answer, he moves for such transfer but obtains no ruling on the motion.

Peak v Mulvaney, 215-1400; 245 NW 748

Review—scope and extent—moot case. An appeal from a judgment in forcible entry and detainer proceedings will be dismissed when it is manifest on the record that the lease under which appellant claims has expired, and that he has no further interest in the premises, and that nothing is involved except a matter of costs.

Manning v Heath, 206-952; 221 NW 560

Striking definitely pleaded defense. Definitely pleaded defensive matter should not, manifestly, be stricken from an answer. So held where defendant in forcible entry and detainer definitely pleaded that nothing was due under the contract which plaintiff had assumed to forfeit on the alleged ground that defendant was in arrears on payments.

Meredith v Miller, 209-849; 228 NW 14

II PRIOR POSSESSION BY PLAINTIFF

Injunction nonavailable in lieu of possessory action at law. One who claims the possession of realty against another who is in actual possession as a tenant at will may not resort to injunction proceedings to adjudicate his claimed right of possession.

Austin v Perry, 219-1344; 261 NW 615

III HOLDING OVER

Oral agreement to surrender. A so-called demurrer, to a defendant-lessee's answer of lack of consideration for an oral agreement to surrender the premises, which does not admit the truth of the answer, but in effect denies it, is properly overruled. Such application is not the function of demurrer.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

IV POSSESSION AFTER EXECUTION SALE

Repurchase option after foreclosure—no defense in forcible entry action. After foreclosure of a mortgage and just prior to the expiration of the period of redemption, a lease and contract giving the mortgagor's heirs then in possession an option to buy the property but providing for monthly rentals to be applied on the purchase price in the event the option is exercised, being neither in the nature of a new mortgage nor re-establishment of the foreclosed mortgage, is subject to demurrer when interposed as a defense to a forcible entry and detainer action.

Wallerstein v Palmer, 224-260; 276 NW 605

V NONPAYMENT OF RENT

Landlord and tenant—rent—writ of attachment—legality. The issuance of a landlord's writ of attachment for rent admittedly due is not rendered unlawful because the tenant subsequently pleads and establishes a counterclaim which cancels the landlord's admitted claim for rent.

Kelp v McManus, 218-226; 253 NW 813

12265 Notice to quit.

Sufficiency. A notice by a landlord to his tenant (whose tenancy has expired) to vacate and surrender the premises forthwith is a sufficient preliminary notice on which to base an action of forcible entry and detainer.

Ashpole v Delaney, 217-792; 253 NW 30

Undue length of service — effect. The written notice to the tenant, to quit and surrender the premises at the expiration of the lease, is not rendered invalid because served on the tenant some seven months prior to the expiration of said lease.

Wright v Zachgo, 222-1368; 271 NW 512

12267 Jurisdiction—transfer—appeal.

Justice assuming jurisdiction. A justice of the peace who, after an action of forcible entry and detainer has been returned to him on a writ of error, enters an authorized order of dismissal, has no jurisdiction, so long as said order of dismissal remains on the docket, to enter in said assumed proceedings "The decision of Justice Jones reversed. Order of removal cancelled."; moreover, assuming jurisdiction, the form of such entry is quite nugatory.

Rasmussen v Alberts, 215-644; 246 NW 620

Involuntary surrender preserves right of appeal. An involuntary surrender of premises by execution or to avoid forcible removal does not constitute an acquiescence in, and performance of, the judgment such as to waive the right of appeal; however, a voluntary surrender would constitute a voluntary performance of the judgment so that there would be no detainer; the case would be moot; and an appeal would be dismissed.

Schuldt v Lee, 226-189; 284 NW 89

Remedy statutory — injunctive interference by equity limited. The summary remedy of forcible entry and detainer, and an appeal from a decision therein, are statutory, and a court of equity will not interfere in the absence of fraud or mistake or a showing of manifest irreparable injury.

Schuldt v Lee, 226-189; 284 NW 89

12268 Petition.

Former conflict with municipal court act.

Owens v Smith, 200-261; 204 NW 439

Necessity for plea. There can be no abatement or stay of an action until another action has been determined, when there is no pleading requesting such abatement or stay.

Music v De Long, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

Other action pending. A motion or proceeding for the abatement of an action of forcible entry and detainer, because an equitable action by movant is pending in the district court for relief consequent on the alleged fraud of plaintiff in the forcible detention action, is properly overruled.

Music v De Long, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

12274 Title in issue.

Necessity for issue. A defendant in forcible entry and detainer who tenders therein no issue of title to the property may not contend that title is nevertheless involved because of the pendency of another action separate and different than the action of forcible entry and detainer.

Music v De Long, 209-1068; 229 NW 673

Title—when not in issue. The issue of title is not involved in an action of forcible entry and detainer when admittedly the plaintiff held the legal title, and when the sole controversy centered around the question whether plaintiff had legally forfeited the contract under which defendant was in possession.

Cassiday v Adamson, 208-417; 224 NW 508

Waiver of right to transfer. A defendant in an action of forcible entry and detainer waives his right to have said action transferred to the district court, on the ground that title to real estate is involved, when, after the commencement of the action and before answer, he enters into a stipulation, as a part of the files in the case, to the effect that if he fails to make specified payments on the real estate in question judgment shall be entered against him for the possession of said premises; likewise he waives such right when, after answer, he moves for such transfer but obtains no ruling on the motion.

Peak v Mulvaney, 215-1400; 245 NW 748

12275 Transfer to district court.

Improper transfer from municipal court. In an action in the municipal court to obtain possession of premises after the expiration of the lease between plaintiff as landlord and defendants as tenants, title to the premises cannot properly be injected into the case, as a basis for transfer of the action to the district court, by a plea by an intervenor to the effect that he owns said premises and has an action then pending in the district court to quiet his title.

Braga v Stowell, 219-855; 259 NW 767

Unexercised option to buy real property—title issue unavailable. After foreclosure, a lease and an unexercised repurchase contract option providing for rentals to be applied on the purchase price in the event the option is exercised do not as a defense to a forcible entry and detainer action put title in issue, nor necessitate transfer of the cause to the district court.

Wallerstein v Palmer, 224-260; 276 NW 605

12276 How title tried.

Curing erroneous docketing. The erroneous docketing on the equity side of the calendar of an action of forcible entry and detainer becomes inconsequential when subsequent pleadings put title in issue and thereby convert the original law action into an equitable action.

Suiter v Wehde, 218-200; 254 NW 33

Borrowed defense. It is no defense to an action of forcible entry and detainer that the defendant was holding under a contract for the purchase of the real estate, and that the plaintiff, in assuming to forfeit the contract, had not served notice of the forfeiture on a third party who held an assignment from defendant of the contract as security.

Votruba v Hanke, 202-658; 210 NW 753

12280 No joinder or counterclaim.

Non-allowable counterclaim. A counterclaim has no place in an action of forcible entry and detainer.

Votruba v Hanke, 202-658; 210 NW 753

12282 Appeal or writ of error.

Futility when possession surrendered. It is futile for defendant in an action of forcible entry and detainer to sue out a writ of error after he has been found guilty, and after he has surrendered possession of the premises in controversy.

Rasmussen v Alberts, 215-644; 246 NW 620

Involuntary surrender preserves right of appeal. An involuntary surrender of premises by execution or to avoid forcible removal does not constitute an acquiescence in, and performance of, the judgment such as to waive the right of appeal; however, a voluntary surrender would constitute a voluntary performance of the judgment so that there would be no detainer; the case would be moot; and an appeal would be dismissed.

Schuldt v Lee, 226-189; 284 NW 89

Remedy statutory—injunctive interference by equity limited. The summary remedy of forcible entry and detainer, and an appeal from a decision therein, are statutory, and a court of equity will not interfere in the absence of fraud or mistake or a showing of manifest irreparable injury.

Schuldt v Lee, 226-189; 284 NW 89

12283 Judgment.

Dismissal—effect. A justice of the peace who, after an action of forcible entry and detainer has been returned to him on a writ of error, enters an authorized order of dismissal, has no jurisdiction, so long as said order of dismissal remains on the docket, to enter in said assumed proceedings "The decision of Justice Jones reversed. Order of removal canceled."; moreover, assuming jurisdiction, the form of such entry is quite nugatory.

Rasmussen v Alberts, 215-644; 246 NW 620

Stipulations—enforceability. The court will enforce a duly filed stipulation by the parties to an action of forcible entry and detainer to the effect that if defendant fails to comply with specified conditions judgment shall be entered against defendant for the possession of said premises.

Peak v Mulvaney, 215-1400; 245 NW 748

Appeal—nonright to maintain. Defendant in an action involving the sole question whether he was wrongfully detaining possession of premises after a refusal to pay rent, may not, after voluntarily surrendering possession in compliance with an order of removal, maintain an appeal from said order.

Sherman v Moore, 222-1359; 271 NW 606

Order of removal—when completely executed. An order of removal issued on a judgment rendered in forcible entry and detainer proceedings cannot be deemed fully executed so long as the officer has in his possession on the premises in question personal property of the defendant upon which the officer has levied in order to collect the costs. And this is true tho the defendant has personally been removed from the premises. So held on the question whether the perfecting of an appeal and the obtaining of a stay order by the defendant were timely.

Usailis v Jasper, 222-1360; 271 NW 524

Repeated trespasses on realty—dissolution of injunction. Injunction will lie to restrain a party from trespassing upon and wrongfully resuming possession of real estate from which he has been removed under and by virtue of an order of removal duly issued in forcible entry and detainer proceedings; but if appeal be perfected from said order of removal and stay order obtained, before the said order has been completely executed, the court may properly dissolve the temporary writ.

Usailis v Jasper, 222-1360; 271 NW 524

12284 Restitution.

Writ of error—order of restitution. The district court has no jurisdiction, on writ of error, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, to enter an order restoring the defendant to the possession of the premises in question.

Rasmussen v Alberts, 215-644; 246 NW 620

Government ownership. Government lands lose by erosion and gain by accretion.

Bigelow v Herrink, 200-830; 205 NW 531

When possession not notice of adverse claim.

Tutt v Smith, 201-107; 204 NW 294; 48 ALR 394

Dual grounds. A party in an action to quiet title may rely both on a will and on an executed oral contract for the land.

Kisor v Litzenberg, 203-1183; 212 NW 343

Broad scope of remedy. An action in equity to quiet title to real estate and for an order ousting defendant from the possession, may be maintained tho the defendants claim no right, title or interest adverse to plaintiff other than possession as tenants.

I REMEDY IN GENERAL—concluded

Davis v Niemann, 219-620; 258 NW 761

Accretions. The owner of land along the bank of a navigable stream is entitled to accretions to the land even tho such accretions extend over the exact spot where another person formerly owned land eroded by the river, because the complete erosion of land works a complete destruction of the title and of all governmental descriptions pertaining thereto.

Bone v May, 208-1094; 225 NW 367

Accretion — apportionment — estoppel. Riparian land owners interested in accretions to their lands may by agreement, acquiescence, or other conduct, apportion the accretion in a manner and way different than the law would apportion it, and thereby estop themselves, in an action to quiet title, from asserting that land did not pass under their deed because it was not accretion land.

Haynie v May, 217-1233; 252 NW 749

Action to cancel trust deed. An action to cancel a trust deed (which in legal effect is a mortgage), and the lien thereof, and to quiet plaintiff's title to the land is strictly local, and is properly brought in the county in which the land is situated, even tho plaintiff also prays for the cancellation of the promissory notes—a proceeding which would be transitory if separately brought.

Eckhardt v Trust Co., 218-983; 249 NW 244; 252 NW 373

Recovery of realty — jurisdictional venue. An action by the beneficiaries of a trust in real estate (located in this state) to compel the trustee holding title to convey the land, in accordance with the terms of the trust agreement, to a newly designated trustee, must be brought and litigated in the county in which the land, or some part thereof, is located. If not so brought, the court is under mandatory duty, on motion for change of venue, to transfer the action to a proper county.

Titus Co. v Kelsey, 221-1368; 268 NW 23

Strength of plaintiff's title. Principle reaffirmed that plaintiff in an action to quiet title to realty must assume the burden of proof and must recover on the strength of his own title and not on the weakness of that of the defendant.

Lockie v White, 221-1044; 267 NW 671

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Statutes of limitations—nonapplicability to nonaccepted street. In a quiet title action where land was dedicated but never accepted as street in unincorporated village, the rule that statute of limitations will not run against a municipality exercising a governmental function, does not apply.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Admission by nominal defendant not binding on principal defendant—guardianship. A wife seeking to quiet title in herself by virtue of a deed from her deceased husband, recorded by a trustee after the husband's death, must prevail on the strength of her own title as opposed by her insane son's title, obtained through a deed from her, also in the hands of the trustee, the two deeds being executed at the same time; but she gains nothing because the trustee concedes her title, when the real party in interest, the son, through his guardian, made no such admission in his separate answer.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Statutory presumption of validity to tax deeds—no abandonment by pleading later corrective deeds. A defendant in a quiet title action may not claim that the plaintiff by first pleading title by invalid tax deeds, and then amending by pleading second corrective tax deeds, had abandoned the statutory presumption of their validity, nor must he, therefore, resort to the common law to prove his title.

Inter-Ocean v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

II WHO MAY MAINTAIN ACTION

Right of election. The vendor of lands who has effected a complete forfeiture of a contract of sale may institute action in equity to quiet title, even tho he might have instituted an action at law for possession.

Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

Protection of remainder from execution sale. Principle reaffirmed that a contingent remainderman may maintain an action to protect his contingent interest from execution sale.

Skelton v Cross, 222-262; 268 NW 499; 109 ALR 129

Deed to trustees—grantor's subsequent land contract invalid. An absolute warranty deed subject only to a trust created therein precludes the grantor from later contracting to sell the property to another and will support an action to quiet title in the trustees.

Beemer v Challas, 224-411; 276 NW 60

Supplemental petition after answer—pleading valid second tax deed—first deed defective. Even after answer, a plaintiff relying on tax deeds in a quiet title action, may, after discovering the deeds are invalid, obtain and plead second tax deeds without reserving notice of expiration of redemption, especially when the answer contained, at most, only a conditional offer to pay the taxes and redeem.

Inter-Ocean v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

III WHO MAY NOT MAINTAIN ACTION

Bona fide purchaser—who is not. A grantee of land who buys, receives, and goes into possession of the exact land and acreage which he intended to buy cannot be deemed a bona fide purchaser of another tract of which he has never been in possession even tho such other tract was originally an integral part of the land actually purchased.

Taylor v Lindenmann, 211-1122; 235 NW 310

Judgment creditor's deed after mortgage foreclosure. A sheriff's deed issued under execution sale to a judgment creditor, after expiration of the judgment creditor's right of redemption as a defendant junior lienholder in a mortgage foreclosure, is a nullity and will not sustain an action to quiet title thereon.

Bates v Mullins, 223-1000; 274 NW 117

Purchase by drainage district bondholder—validity. The statute relating to fraudulent tax sales does not entitle the owner of the property to quiet title against holders of tax deeds on the grounds that tax deeds are void because purchasers are owners and holders of drainage bonds issued by drainage district in which land is situated without tender of taxes paid, when no claim is asserted that there is any fraud or collusion or conspiracy to defraud, and the question submitted is purely a legal question as to whether bondholders are under a legal disability to acquire title.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

IV PARTIES

Substitution—irregular practice. A plaintiff who permits his action to quiet title to lie dormant until the defendants are all dead is guilty of very irregular practice in his attempt to obtain a substitution of defendants by filing a purported amendment, not under the title of his pending action, but under a new title, in which the heirs of the deceased defendants are for the first time enumerated and named as the defendants, and, under such title, moving for a substitution of defendants in the old action.

Benjamin v Jackson, 207-581; 223 NW 383

Inheritance taker as "representative" of contingent remainderman. A decree setting aside the probate of a will and canceling said will (the action being instituted in good faith and so tried by all parties thereto) is, on the principle or doctrine of representation, conclusive on remote, contingent remaindermen, even tho they are not parties to the action, or are not served with notice of the action, when those persons are legally before the court who would take the first estate of inheritance under the will; especially is this true when parties of the same class to which the omitted parties belong are also legally before the court.

Harris v Randolph, 213-772; 236 NW 51

See Mennig v Graves, 211-758; 234 NW 189

Separate owners of separate tracts. Various parties, each of whom claims exclusive ownership in separate and different tracts of land formerly held by a railway company as right of way, may join as plaintiffs in an equitable action against said railway company to quiet title in each separate party to the particular tract owned by him.

Duggleby v Railway, 214-776; 243 NW 198

Creditor of estate as intervenor. In an action by an heir against an executor to quiet title in himself to land which the testator purported to devise, a general creditor of the estate has no standing as an intervenor.

Rapp v Losee, 215-356; 245 NW 317

Municipal improvement certificate holder. A party who purchases a municipal improvement certificate, lienable on certain property is not privy to (and therefore not bound by) a subsequently instituted action to quiet title, and the decree entered therein, when he is not made a party to said action.

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-Des Moines Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

Purchaser from estate. When, in the settlement of an estate in probate, a contract of sale of land belonging to the estate is fully consummated by payment and deed, and the sale and conveyance duly approved by the court as by contract required, the purchaser, who is an entire stranger to the estate except as such purchaser, is not a proper, necessary or permissible party to a proceeding in said probate court, instituted by the residuary legatee, to set aside the probate order approving said sale and conveyance.

Reason: The probate court cannot, even in piecemeal, adjudicate the validity of the title of said purchaser.

In re Doherty, 222-1352; 271 NW 609

V DEFENSES

Avoidance of matter first appearing in reply. An answer to a reply seems to be unknown to our practice. But when the defendant in an action to quiet title answers that he is the owner of the property, and is met by a reply that defendant is estopped by his own contract from claiming title, and defendant wishes to plead that said contract was obtained from him by fraud and without consideration, quære: must defendant plead his said defense (a) by way of amendment to his answer, or (b) does the law impliedly supply such plea?

Carr v McCauley, 215-298; 245 NW 290

Tax sale—notice to redeem—necessity of service on wife of tenant. In action to quiet title acquired under tax deed, statute requiring that notice of expiration of right to redeem from tax sale must be served on the "person in possession" of such real estate before tax deed can issue is not complied with by serving the husband only, where husband and wife are tenants, the evidence disclosing that wife was also working and that she paid the rent out of her separate wages.

V DEFENSES—concluded

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Nonpermissible plea by tenant. In an action to quiet title to lands, a defendant who is in peaceable possession of the premises under a lease from plaintiff will not be permitted to assert that plaintiff had no title when the lease was executed.

McKenney & Seabury v Nelson, 220-504; 262 NW 101

Action against state. Allegations in a petition to quiet title to land and to obtain a writ of possession for said land, (1) that defendants constitute the entire membership of the state board of control—an agency of the state—and (2) that said defendants are wrongfully withholding said possession from plaintiff, furnish no sufficient basis for the holding that said action, in truth and fact, is against the state in its sovereign capacity.

Ia. Elec. Co. v Board, 221-1050; 266 NW 543

Issues under general denial—question of delivery. In an action to quiet title where plaintiff's claim of ownership arose out of a deed deposited with a bank for delivery, and delivered to plaintiff after grantor's death, a general denial puts in issue both the execution and the delivery of the deed.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

VI EVIDENCE

Uncontroverted evidence may be insufficient unless corroborated. Positive evidence of the truth of an all-controlling fact may be insufficient to establish such fact when such evidence is, from its very nature, incapable of contradiction by any other witness, and when, if the evidence be true, corroborative facts necessarily exist, and are not shown. So held where it was sought to trace title through a secret trust.

Nehring v Hamilton, 210-1292; 232 NW 655

Dead man statute—contract with deceased. In an action against an administrator and against a devisee, to quiet title to real estate, plaintiff is wholly incompetent to testify with respect to a contract between the plaintiff and the deceased.

Black v Nichols, 213-976; 240 NW 261

Failure to prove title—effect. A plaintiff in an action to quiet title must necessarily fail when he bases his title both on (1) accretion, and (2) adverse possession and establishes neither; and this, too, irrespective of the weakness of defendant's title.

McFerrin v Wiltse, 210-627; 231 NW 438

See Dubuque v Fischer, 215-433; 245 NW 758

Tax deed—prima facie case. Plaintiff in quiet title action, claiming under tax deed issued by county treasurer, establishes a prima facie case when the tax deed is received in evidence.

Tesdell v Greenwalt, 228- ; 290 NW 676

Deed to ancestor—chain of title lacking—title not established as against tax deed. In a quiet title action, stipulated evidence that an ancestor of defendant received and recorded a deed to the land from another is insufficient to overthrow plaintiff's tax deed without a further showing of the previous and subsequent chain of title.

Inter-Ocean v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Trustee and beneficiary as same person—conveyance to self. A sister, as the only heir in her brother's estate, who conveys by a trust instrument to a nonrelated person her entire interest in such estate, in exchange for the trustee providing her life support, and upon fulfillment of which the trustee became the beneficiary and was directed to convey the balance of the property from himself, as a trustee, to himself, individually, evidence, in trustee-beneficiary's quieting title action against settlor's heirs, held to establish soundness of mind and freedom of action by settlor in executing the trust instrument.

Goodman v Bauer, 225-1086; 281 NW 448

Acquiescence in title by grantor. When the grantor of a warranty deed had acquiesced for five years in the title of the grantee, he could not set aside the deed and quiet title in himself without establishing a plain, clear, and decisive case.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Permissible cross-examination. In quiet title action brought by the husband of the former owner of land who had continued in possession after her mother had obtained the tax deed under an agreement with the daughter, it was proper to cross-examine the plaintiff as to whether he recalled the time the mother-in-law gave him certain bonds, because of the inference which might be drawn from such testimony as to the purpose for which the mother-in-law acquired the tax deed.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

Conclusion—material covered in other testimony. In a quiet title action it was not prejudicial to sustain an objection to a question asking the plaintiff if the defendant had made any claim to land at, or prior to, a certain time, when the question asked for a conclusion of the witness, and the witness had answered the question in other testimony.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

Overcoming presumption from possession—amount of proof. A mere preponderance of the evidence is not sufficient to overcome the presumption arising from the possession of the legal title to real property. The evidence for that purpose must be clear, convincing, and satisfactory.

Wagner v Wagner, (NOR); 224 NW 583

VII SCOPE AND EXTENT OF RELIEF

Appointment of receiver pending action to quiet title.

Korf v Howerton, 201-428; 205 NW 323

Mere inference of invalidity. A mere alleged inference of fraud or illegality cannot overthrow a deed of conveyance.

Carr v McCauley, 215-298; 245 NW 290

Undecided issue. When plaintiff in an action to quiet title is unable to establish the deed of conveyance and the delivery thereof under which he claims, it is quite immaterial that the court did not decide plaintiff's tendered issue whether defendant was the wife of the alleged grantor.

Blain v Blain, 215-69; 244 NW 827

Parties—fatal defect in parties. In an action by the purchaser of land to quiet title against certain claims for mechanics' liens, the decree confirmed the claims as liens on the land, and ordered said land sold for the payment—at least pro tanto—of said liens, and, in addition, entered personal judgments against a former owner of the land for the amount of each of said claims. Plaintiff appealed from the decree insofar as it established said claims as liens.

Held, the appeal could not be maintained without service of notice of appeal on said former owner.

Gordon-Van Tine Co. v Ideal Co., 223-313; 271 NW 523

Judgment—illegal confession—execution lien—rights of property owners. A "statement of confession", or "cognovit" oftentimes referred to as a "power of attorney" or simply as a "power", is the written authority of the debtor and his direction to the clerk of the district court, or justice of the peace, to enter judgment against him as stated therein and the statutory provision that "the clerk shall thereupon make an entry of judgment" is definite and mandatory, so the mere recording by the clerk of the debtor's admission of indebtedness, confession of judgment, and authorization to the clerk to enter judgment was not the "entry of judgment by confession" required by statute. Execution issued thereon was properly annulled and decree quieting title to land in owners as against execution levy and making permanent a temporary injunction enjoining execution sale was proper.

Blott v Blott, 227-1108; 290 NW 74

VIII DECREE AND ENFORCEMENT THEREOF

Reformation of deed—refusal to surrender advantage. The grantee in a deed of conveyance who has obtained a decree quieting his title on the plea that the deed was in satisfaction of the grantor's prior mortgage on the land may not, while insisting on all the advantages accruing to him under the decree, have the deed so reformed as to include the grantor's homestead, on the claim that the homestead was mistakenly or fraudulently omitted from the deed.

Galvin v Taylor, 203-1139; 212 NW 709

Pendency of another action. Indefinite evidence of the pendency of an action by the defendant as an occupying claimant presents no obstacle to the entry of a decree quieting title in the plaintiff.

Korf v Howerton, 205-534; 218 NW 274

Improvements. In an action to quiet title the court may, on proper pleading and proof, decree a lien on the land in defendant's favor for improvements made in good faith on the property.

Rainsbarger v Rainsbarger, 208-764; 224 NW 45

Persons concluded by decree — unborn contingent remaindermen. The contingent interest in land of the unborn children of a life tenant, arising out of the terms of a testamentary devise, is not cut off by a decree in an action to quiet title by making the life tenant a party defendant as a "representative" of such unborn children; especially so when said life tenant assumes a hostile attitude toward said unborn children.

Mennig v Graves, 211-758; 234 NW 189

See Harris v Randolph, 213-772; 236 NW 51
Mennig v Howard, 213-936; 240 NW 473

Ineffectual reversal. On an appeal from a decree quieting title, the appellant has no standing to ask a reversal when the record reveals the fact that the decree deprived the appellant of nothing, and that a reversal could award him nothing.

Duggleby v Railway, 214-776; 243 NW 198

Absence of issues. A decree quieting title in certain defendants against other defendants cannot be rendered when no issues whatever were joined between said defendants.

Grandy v Adams, 219-51; 256 NW 684

Accretions — construction of decree. A decree quieting title to accretions, and based on adverse possession, will be deemed to quiet title up to the high-water mark of the river in question, even tho when literally and hypercritically construed it seemingly quiets title only to the high-water mark as it existed when

VIII DECREE AND ENFORCEMENT THEREOF—concluded

the action to quiet title was commenced. So held where, pending the action, trial and entry of decree, the river continued to recede.

Harrington v Foster, 220-1066; 264 NW 51

Inadequate pleadings — effect. Title to realty cannot be quieted in a party litigant in the absence of adequate pleadings as a basis for such decree.

Foote v Soukup, 221-1218; 266 NW 904

Reversal — fact theory controlling. On reversal in the supreme court of an equitable action to quiet title, the successful appellant will not be permitted to take decree other than in strict accord with the fact theory on which the action was commenced and prosecuted by appellant, and reversed by the appellate court. This may require the withholding of final decree until appellant returns property which he has received and in which he admittedly has no interest under the fact theory of his action.

McCloud v Bates, 222-1047; 270 NW 373

Virtual representation. All living members of a class, when properly brought into court in an action to quiet title, are deemed (under the doctrine of virtual representation) to represent all after-born persons who would belong to that class.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

Relief—decree beyond issues. In a quiet title action by grantee against grantor's heir and successor in interest, a decree based on a deed containing a declaration of purpose (educational and religious use), goes beyond the issues when it finds the grantee to be the "sole and absolute owner, in fee simple"; the effect being to adjudicate the rights of persons, not before the court, who may have trust interests under the terms in the deed.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Defaulted contract—vendee's deed before decree—invalidity. In a quieting title action against a real estate contract vendee, the decree ends all rights of the vendee under a defaulted contract, and if he deeds to another before the decree, the grantee takes nothing.

Forrest v Otis, 224-63; 276 NW 102

Decree should describe real estate. A description of the real estate should appear in a decree quieting title.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

IX FACT CASES

Navigable waters—ownership of lands—accretions. The owner of land along the bank of a navigable stream is entitled to accretions to the land even tho such accretions extend over the exact spot where another person formerly owned land eroded by the river, because the complete erosion of land works a complete destruction of the title and of all governmental descriptions pertaining thereto.

Bone v May, 208-1094; 225 NW 367

Riparian rights — islands — accretion. An island in a navigable stream cannot be deemed an accretion to another island when the surface of said islands at the point where they connect is not visible even at ordinary stage of the water, let alone being visible when the water is at its high-water mark.

Meeker v Kautz, 213-370; 239 NW 27

X ADVERSE POSSESSION

Boundary dispute on fenced land—adverse possession. In a dispute involving title to a strip of land between two town lots which were separated by a fence, where there was no acquiescence in the fence as the true boundary line, and one party had no intent to claim beyond the true boundary line, held that title was acquired by the other party by adverse possession when he claimed both title and possession to the strip irrespective of the location of the fence.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

Possession which will bar action. Under a statute limiting the time in which an action may be brought for the recovery of real estate sold for taxes, the possession by the owner necessary to bar an action by the tax title holder is ordinarily not the possession required under the general statute of limitations and need not be adverse, but need be only such possession as would entitle the tax titleholder to maintain an action against the owner.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

Presumption in favor of tax deed holder. When land belonging to a daughter was sold for taxes and the tax deed was issued to her mother under an agreement between them, there was a presumption that the continuing possession of the land by the daughter was subordinate to the mother's tax deed, and to defeat the tax title, the presumption had to be overcome and the daughter's possession proven to be adverse. Adverse possession was not established by the continued possession of the daughter under a lease to a tenant, from whom the daughter collected rents and paid taxes, when she made no open claim that the land was her own and that she was asserting her title in hostility to the title under the tax deed.

McCormick v Anderson, 227-888; 289 NW 440

12286 Petition.

See annotations under §12285

12288 Disclaimer—costs.

Belated disclaimer. A belated and long delayed disclaimer by a defendant of any interest in the subject matter of an action to quiet title may not absolve him from liability for the costs of the action.

Korf v Howerton, 205-534; 218 NW 274

Disclaimer filed—confused description. In an action foreclosing a mortgage and also asking for the reformation of the description of land in said mortgage in which one of the defendants by way of answer denies that plaintiff is entitled to reformation of description because of confusion as to the property covered by said mortgage as a result of a shifting river channel between the mortgaged land and the defendant's adjoining land, and alleging the plaintiff is estopped from asserting any interest in such adjoining land on account of a disclaimer filed by plaintiff's predecessor in a prior foreclosure action involving said adjoining land, held that such estoppel and disclaimer in the present action is ineffective in the absence of any evidence of any confusion or encroachment upon the adjoining land.

State Bank v Mapel, 226-1328; 286 NW 517

12289 Demand for quitclaim—attorney's fees.

Att. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 125

Banking superintendent as good-faith plaintiff. The superintendent of banking as a good-faith, tho unsuccessful, plaintiff in a quiet title action is not liable to the defendant for attorney fees.

Bates v Mullins, 223-1000; 274 NW 117

12290 Equitable proceedings.

See also annotations under §12285

Guiding principles. In an action to quiet title, the court of equity will view the case in the broad aspect of the equitable rights of the parties, rather than upon narrow and technical legal grounds.

Eckert v Sloan, 209-1040; 229 NW 714

Seeker for equity must do equity. The full equitable titleholder of land held under a dry trust who asks equity to invest him with the full legal title must do equity to the extent of reimbursing the trustee for good-faith expenditures made by him at the request, or with the consent and acquiescence of the equitable titleholder, in improving or preserving the property, even tho the trustee's claims for such expenditures are barred at law by the statute of limitations.

Warner v Tullis, 206-680; 218 NW 575

Mortgage without exceptions—effect. A municipality which mortgages an integral body of land owned by it without excepting any part thereof, necessarily loses all interest in all the land under a proper foreclosure without redemption, even tho in conveyances subsequent to the mortgage certain reservations were made.

Dubuque v Fischer, 215-433; 245 NW 758

Repudiating one's own chain of title. A titleholder who, by contract, repudiates the deeds under which he claims title and agrees that they shall be deemed null and void, thereby estops himself from asserting said deeds against parties who subsequently acquire title in reliance on said repudiation.

Carr v McCauley, 215-298; 245 NW 290

Prayer for writ of possession. An equitable action (1) to quiet title, and (2) in addition, to obtain a writ ousting defendant from the premises is proper.

McKenney & Seabury v Nelson, 220-504; 262 NW 101

Transaction with deceased—intervenor—competency. In equity action to quiet title and to declare a trust in realty, an intervenor who claims same relief as plaintiff may not testify to alleged oral agreement between parties, some of whom are deceased.

Wagner v Wagner, (NOR); 224 NW 583

Dismissal—improper notice of appeal. In appeal from decree quieting title in city to streets and alleys, but continuing hearing as to park, it was necessary to serve notice of appeal on city's attorney, and notice of appeal served on attorneys for cross-petitioners joining in prayer of appellee's petition was not binding on the city and entitled city to a dismissal.

Iowa City v Balluff, (NOR); 225 NW 942

CHAPTER 521

DISPUTED CORNERS AND BOUNDARIES

12298 Specific issues—acquiescence.

Burden of proof—hearsay. A property owner who repudiates the line of a division fence as the true boundary line has the burden to prove the true line to be other than the division line of the fence; and he may not make such proof by a recital of what a surveyor told him.

Sorenson v Mosbacher, 210-156; 230 NW 656

12299 Commission.

Disqualification. An engineer who, unbeknown to one of the parties to a boundary line controversy, has already surveyed and located the line for the other party under private employment, is disqualified to act as a commissioner under an order of the court for the purpose of surveying and locating said line.

Kraft v Tennigkeit, 204-15; 214 NW 562

12301 Hearing.

Government monuments. Duly identified government survey monuments are controlling, and will override every call of the field notes for measurements.

Cooper v Horridge, 200-711; 205 NW 454

Burden to show government line. A landowner who concedes that a long existing highway was by agreement to be located equally upon both sides of the government line between adjoining tracts, but who disputes the accuracy of the location, has the burden to show the actual location of the government line.

Sedore v Turner, 202-1373; 212 NW 61

Federal survey conclusive. A section corner established by a government survey is conclusive.

Fair v Ida Co., 204-1046; 216 NW 952

Testimony without notice. A commissioner appointed to survey and locate a disputed boundary line and to report thereon to the court may not legally take the testimony of one of the parties to the controversy without notice to the other party.

Kraft v Tennigkeit, 204-15; 214 NW 562

12302 Finding as to acquiescence.

Elements. On the issue of acquiescence by both parties to a boundary line, the intention of the parties is important. Acquiescence is consent inferred from silence, involving notice or knowledge of the claim of the other party, and occurs where one who is entitled to impeach a transaction or enforce a right neglects to do so, from which the other party may infer that he has abandoned such right.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

Boundary dispute on fenced land. In a dispute involving title to a strip of land between two town lots which were separated by a fence, where there was no acquiescence in the fence as the true boundary line, and one party had no intent to claim beyond the true boundary line, held that title was acquired by the other party by adverse possession when he claimed both title and possession to the strip irrespective of the location of the fence.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

12304 Exceptions—hearing in court.

Official surveys—manner of making. In an action for reformation of description in realty mortgage and for foreclosure, wherein a surveyor or civil engineer is appointed by the court to make a survey of property covered by mortgages, and no objections are made to his appointment nor exceptions taken thereto, objection to the surveyor's report on appeal cannot be predicated on alleged failure to strictly follow the statutory provisions applicable to the reference of an equity case to a referee when the parties have agreed to procedure.

State Bank v Mapel, 226-1328; 286 NW 517

12305 Decree conclusive.

Decree based on acquiescence—conclusiveness. A decree that a specified portion of a line between adjoining landowners is a boundary line by acquiescence is not an adjudication of the true location of the remaining portion of said boundary line.

Turner v Sandhouse, 205-1151; 216 NW 58

Official survey on court order—evidence sufficient to support confirming report. In an action for reformation of description by metes and bounds in realty mortgages and for their foreclosure, evidence held sufficient to support judgment confirming surveyor's report, where surveyor is permitted to testify, without objection, that he was qualified to make the survey and that the plat of survey prepared by him is a true and correct survey showing the property in question and made in accordance with a previous order of court and such plat, after identification, was introduced in evidence without objection.

State Bank v Mapel, 226-1328; 286 NW 517

Official surveys—objections. In an action for reformation of description in realty mortgage and for foreclosure, wherein a surveyor or civil engineer is appointed by the court to make a survey of property covered by mortgages, and no objections are made to his appointment nor exceptions taken thereto, objection to the surveyor's report on appeal cannot be predicated on alleged failure to strictly follow the statutory provisions applicable to the reference of an equity case to a referee when the parties have agreed to procedure.

State Bank v Mapel, 226-1328; 286 NW 517

12306 Boundaries by acquiescence established.ANALYSIS

- I BOUNDARY LINES IN GENERAL
- II ACQUIESCENCE
- III ADVERSE POSSESSION AND ACQUIESCENCE
- IV MISTAKE

Adverse possession generally. See under §11007 (XXVIII)

I BOUNDARY LINES IN GENERAL

Part of single ownership conveyed—implied easement or reservation—clear intent of parties necessary. Principle reaffirmed that, where real estate has been used under single ownership and as a unity, one part of it may be burdened with a use which is largely or entirely for the benefit of another part of it, and when divided by devise, descent or sale, one part may be burdened or benefited by an implied reservation or granting of an easement right if it is apparent and necessary, but such implied grant or reservation must be clearly within the intention of the parties.

Dyer v Knowles, 227-1038; 289 NW 911

Recorded plat—conclusiveness. The recorded plat of an addition must be held to control boundary lines, in the absence of evidence sufficient to establish the acquiescence of the interested parties in other boundary lines.

Jackson v Snyder, 202-262; 208 NW 321

Lands under water—high watermark. The high watermark of a navigable river is that upper line which ordinary floods permanently mark along the course of the river.

Curtis v Schmidt, 212-1279; 237 NW 463

Homestead—noncontiguous tracts. One-half of a double garage, situated on property used by the owner solely for rental purposes, may not be deemed an appurtenance of the said owner's homestead, composed of a nearby, separate, independent and wholly different tract, noncontiguous to the rental property. So held in an action involving the validity of a sheriff's deed based on a sale en masse—a sale without platting.

Van Law v Waud, 223-208; 272 NW 523

Evidence insufficient to establish boundary by agreement. In special action, tried as in equity, to determine boundaries, evidence was insufficient to support a finding that grantor and grantee had agreed that a line just north of buildings should be taken and established as the south boundary line of land being conveyed.

Dyer v Knowles, 227-1038; 289 NW 911

Boundary line between farm buildings—grantor's alleged use and occupancy of buildings denied. In a special action to determine the true location of an east and west half-section line, where the grantor, owning the entire west half of the section, sells the north-west quarter, thinking his barn and corncrib were situated south of the half-section line, whereas a survey showed the buildings to be situated north of the half-section line, grantor's claim of a reservation of the use and occupancy of the barn and cornerib and ground appurtenant thereto under an implied easement on the theory that the barn and cornerib were necessary to the use and enjoyment of the land retained by grantor, could not be sustained, since the use of such buildings was just as essential, to the part sold, in proportion to the acreage, as it was to the part retained.

Dyer v Knowles, 227-1038; 289 NW 911

Estoppel—disclaimer filed—foreclosure of adjoining property in prior action. In an action foreclosing a mortgage and also asking for the reformation of the description of land in said mortgage in which one of the defendants by way of answer denies that plaintiff is entitled to reformation of description because of confusion as to the property covered by said mortgage as a result of a shifting river channel between the mortgaged land and the defendant's adjoining land, and alleging the plaintiff is estopped from asserting any interest in such adjoining land on account of a disclaimer filed by plaintiff's predecessor in a prior foreclosure action involving said adjoining land, held that such estoppel and disclaimer in the present action is ineffective in the absence of any evidence of any confusion or encroachment upon the adjoining land.

State Bank v Mapel, 226-1328; 286 NW 517

II ACQUIESCENCE

Discussion. See 16 ILR 409—Doctrine of acquiescence

Acquiescence for ten years. A boundary line marked by a fence and mutually acquiesced in by the property owners for more than ten years becomes irrevocable.

Downing v Glassburner, 200-715; 205 NW 354

Taylor v Olmstead, 201-760; 206 NW 88
Norton v Ferguson, 203-317; 211 NW 417

Pleading governmental descriptions—effect. A landowner who seeks to enjoin interference with a boundary line by acquiescence, irrespective of the true governmental line, will not be held to abandon his claim to a line by acquiescence from the mere fact that in his petition for injunction he describes the different tracts of land involved by their governmental descriptions.

Norton v Ferguson, 203-317; 211 NW 417

Acquiescence—immaterial matters. If landowners have, in truth and in fact, acquiesced for more than ten years in a fence as the boundary line between their adjoining lands, it becomes quite immaterial (1) who built the fence, or (2) to what extent the parties are assessed on their lands, or (3) whether, on a government survey, one of the parties would have more acreage and the other less acreage.

Brown v Bergman, 204-1006; 216 NW 731

Acquiescence in erroneous line. A fence which is acquiesced in as the true boundary line for the proper period of time and accompanied by possession of the land in accordance therewith becomes the true boundary line, even tho the time reveals the fact that an error occurred in the original location of the fence.

Stone v Richardson, 206-419; 218 NW 332

Recognition and acquiescence. Adjoining owners of land who, for ten years or more, recognize and acquiesce in a line as marking the boundary between the two tracts, are bound thereby, notwithstanding such line is not the line fixed by government survey.

Kotze v Sullivan, 210-600; 231 NW 339

Acquiesced-in line. A line between adjoining tracts of land, definitely marked by a fence

II ACQUIESCENCE—concluded which, for ten years, has been acquiesced in and recognized by the owners of the tracts as the division line, becomes, as between the parties, the conclusive line irrespective of the true line in fact; and this is true altho neither party intended to claim more than his deed calls for. It follows that either party has a legal right to build in reliance on said acquiesced-in line.

Minear v Furnace Co., 213-663; 239 NW 584

Effect after ten years. Adjoining landowners who, for ten years, acquiesced in a fence as marking the boundary line between their lands, are bound thereby and the claim of a subsequent owner of one of the properties that, when he bought, the fence had largely disappeared, is not of controlling importance, especially when the fact is manifest that the two properties had been improved with reference to said acquiesced-in line.

Mullahey v Serra, 220-1177; 264 NW 63

Acquiescence in line—effect. Where plaintiffs for over 10 years and plaintiffs and their grantors for over 20 years acquiesced in a certain fence as the boundary of defendant's property and acquiesced in the use of the land south of the fence as a traveled highway, the fence becomes the boundary altho it may not be the true line.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Street between properties. In controversies between private owners over boundaries, the fact that a highway is between their respective properties does not affect the doctrine of acquiescence.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Elements. On the issue of acquiescence by both parties to a boundary line, the intention of the parties is important. Acquiescence is consent inferred from silence, involving notice or knowledge of the claim of the other party and occurs where one, who is entitled to impeach a transaction or enforce a right, neglects to do so, from which the other party may infer that he has abandoned such right.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

III ADVERSE POSSESSION AND ACQUIESCENCE

Time of adverse possession. A division line between adjoining lands becomes the true line when maintained adversely for ten years, or when acquiesced in by the parties for the same period.

Kraft v Tennigkeit, 210-81; 230 NW 333

Failure to object to erection. A real estate property owner who, in erecting a valuable and expensive improvement on his property, places it on a line which he in good faith believes to be the true boundary line, cannot be thereafter disturbed in his improvement by an adjoining property owner who, during all the time of the erection, stood by and made no objection tho he knew the improvement maker was acting in perfectly good faith.

Minear v Furnace Co., 213-663; 239 NW 584

Accretions. A decree quieting title to accretions, and based on adverse possession, will be deemed to quiet title up to the high watermark of the river in question, even tho when literally and hypercritically construed it seemingly quiets title only to the high watermark as it existed when the action to quiet title was commenced. So held where, pending the action, trial and entry of decree, the river continued to recede.

Harrington v Foster, 220-1066; 264 NW 51

Boundary dispute on fenced land. In a dispute involving title to a strip of land between two town lots which were separated by a fence, where there was no acquiescence in the fence as the true boundary line, and one party had no intent to claim beyond the true boundary line, held that title was acquired by the other party by adverse possession when he claimed both title and possession to the strip irrespective of the location of the fence.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

IV MISTAKE

Adverse possession—nature and requisites—hostile character of possession—mistake—effect. One may not be said to be in the adverse possession of land beyond the governmental line when, during his entire possession, he never intended to claim beyond the true line. Evidence reviewed, and principle held inapplicable in the instant case.

Kotze v Sullivan, 210-600; 231 NW 339

12309 Boundaries by agreement.

Oral agreement—statute of frauds. An oral agreement to change a long established boundary fence is enforceable when taken out of the statute of frauds (1) by the mutual taking of a new survey, (2) by the building of a new fence in accordance with the said survey, and (3) by taking possession of the lands inclosed by such new fence.

Cheshire v McCoy, 205-474; 218 NW 329

Oral agreement to change. A naked oral agreement to change an established boundary line is unenforceable.

Stone v Richardson, 206-419; 218 NW 332

Estoppel to dispute. A naked oral agreement to resurvey an established boundary line will not work an estoppel to insist on the old established boundary.

Stone v Richardson, 206-419; 218 NW 332

CHAPTER 522

PARTITION

12310 Nature of action.

ANALYSIS

- I PARTITION IN GENERAL
- II PROPERTY SUBJECT TO PARTITION
- III PERSONS ENTITLED TO SUE
- IV TIME TO SUE

I PARTITION IN GENERAL

Proceedings strictly statutory. A proceeding to partition real estate in Iowa is strictly statutory.

Criswell v Criswell, 227-212; 288 NW 130

Scope of proceeding. Where all the parties are before the court in a partition proceeding, equity has jurisdiction to adjudicate all matters and rights of the respective parties.

In re Delaney, 227-1173; 290 NW 530

Conclusiveness of proceeding. Where testator devised real estate to certain wards on condition that they pay $8,000 into decedent's estate within one year after his death and where, in a partition proceeding to which the wards were parties, court found such condition was not met and that devise had lapsed and the land was sold for $7,200, the wards could not in a subsequent proceeding on objections to guardian's final report maintain position that they still owned the land and were entitled to rents and profits therefrom, since the partition proceedings constituted an adjudication as to every matter there in issue and as to all questions necessarily in issue.

In re Delaney, 227-1173; 290 NW 530

Recovery of real property (?) or partition (?). An action for the partition of real property by parties who are in possession of the property, and who claim to be co-owners thereof, may not be deemed an action for the recovery of real property, within the meaning of the statute of limitation, because an intervenor pleads a recorded deed which would deprive plaintiffs of all title, but which deed plaintiffs by reply claim was never delivered.

Gibson v Gibson, 205-1285; 217 NW 852

Dower—assignment or setting off—recognized methods. The statutory provisions for admeasurement of dower do not exclude the setting off of dower by an action in equity, by partition, or by any other appropriate action.

Ehler v Ehler, 214-789; 243 NW 591

Resulting trust denied—deed from father to son—conduct of parties. In a partition action involving a decedent's property, tried on issues raised by defendant's cross-petition, alleging that another property of decedent, which had been deeded by decedent to one of his sons, should be included in the partition action—in the absence of fraud—such deed therefor will not be set aside on the theory of a resulting trust in favor of the decedent's estate, when there is no evidence that either the grantor or grantee so considered it altho they both lived several years after the deed was made.

Gilligan v Jones, 226-86; 283 NW 434

Joint tenancies not favored—strict construction. The rule of joint tenancy with right of survivorship is not favored in public policy, and the mere inclusion of the words in a deed "said real estate being taken jointly" will not be sufficient to establish a joint tenancy, especially when followed by words tending to negative such assumption, such as, "to the grantees, their assigns, heirs, and devisees forever".

Albright v Winey, 226-222; 284 NW 86

Parol partition of common interest. Parol partition by persons competent so to do, holding land in common, may effect a partition of the same so as to enjoy their respective shares in severalty, but this cannot be done where other interests intervene.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

II PROPERTY SUBJECT TO PARTITION

Trust estate—nonvested interest. Lands which are under testamentary trusteeship for a stated or discretionary time are not subject to partition by the ultimate beneficiary until his interest becomes vested. Trust construed, and held to clearly empower the trustee to continue the trust.

Schaal v Schaal, 203-667; 213 NW 207

Co-existing estates in fee. In an action in partition of realty in which two brothers each own an undivided one-third for life and an undivided one-sixth in fee, partition will not be allowed when it involves interests in remainder over after termination of life estates.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Realty in probate. In rare instances on a showing of extreme necessity the right of partition of realty may be allowed where the preservation of an estate of a decedent depends upon it.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Parol partition of common interest. Parol partition by persons competent so to do, holding land in common, may effect a partition of the same so as to enjoy their respective shares in severalty; but this cannot be done where other interests intervene.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

III PERSONS ENTITLED TO SUE

Devisees of estate. One of several devisees in common of real property (the estate being

III PERSONS ENTITLED TO SUE—concluded fully settled) may maintain partition, even tho the will specifically authorizes the executor to sell the property and divide the proceeds.

Ruggles v Powers, 201-284; 207 NW 116

Life tenant. A life tenant is not entitled to partition against a nonconsenting minor reversioner of the fee (even tho he has also acquired the interest of a like reversioner) in the absence of pleading and proof that such partition will not be to the detriment of such minor.

Farmers Mtg. Co. v Walker, 207-696; 223 NW 497

Duplicate actions—priority. When two actions involving the same subject matter are commenced by different parties (e. g., partition of land), the action in which completed service is first made on all necessary parties must be deemed first commenced even tho the other action was first formally filed with the clerk, unless said first action was commenced by an unauthorized plaintiff.

Jones v Park, 220-903; 262 NW 801

Husband of titleholder as improper plaintiff. A husband may not maintain an action to partition lands of which his wife holds the legal title, and in which he has no interest except the contingent interest of a husband.

Jones v Park, 220-903; 262 NW 801

Administrator and heirs as plaintiffs. Tho an administrator may have no authority, as such, to maintain an action for the partition of the lands of his intestate, yet the fact that he joins as plaintiff, along with some of the actual owners of the land as plaintiffs, is quite harmless.

Bleakley v Long, 222-76; 268 NW 152

Several interests. Partition may be maintained only when the parties plaintiff and defendant are entitled to the present possession of their several interests.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Death of party without substitution. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

IV TIME TO SUE

Right of action when interest becomes vested. Lands which are under testamentary trusteeship for a stated or discretionary time are not subject to partition by the ultimate beneficiary until his interest becomes vested. Trust construed, and held to clearly empower the trustee to continue the trust.

Schaal v Schaal, 203-667; 213 NW 207

12311 Joinder and counterclaims.

Adjustments of all rights. In the equitable action of partition the court has ample power to adjust and settle the rights of the various parties pertaining to and growing out of the subject matter of the action, and thereby avoid a multiplicity of suits. In other words, the general rule as to separate actions does not apply.

Creger v Fenimore, 216-273; 249 NW 147

Duplicate actions—which abatable. While an action in partition in which service of the original notice is incomplete in whole or in part is deemed pending in the sense that said action constitutes a lis pendens from the time the clerk properly indexes it as a lis pendens, yet, until completed service of the original notice of said action is made, said action cannot be deemed "commenced" or "pending" in the sense that it bars another subsequently instituted action in partition between the same parties and involving the same real estate.

It follows that when duplicate actions in partition, involving the same parties and the same real estate, are brought, that action only is abatable in which said service was last completed.

Ohden v Abels, 221-544; 266 NW 24

Insolvent heir's unpaid debt to estate—jurisdiction of court to offset. The court has jurisdiction, in an equitable action to partition the lands of an intestate (to which action all heirs are parties), to entertain a cross-petition by one of the heirs as administrator of said estate, and, under proper pleading and proof:

1. To decree that a certain insolvent heir has no interest in said land because his unpaid indebtedness to said estate equals or exceeds the value of the share in said lands which he would take were he not so indebted, and

Bauer v Bauer, 221-782; 266 NW 531

Claim for widow's support—lien on proceeds of partition. In an equity action to establish claim for the support of a widow as lien against real estate devised to the widow for life with right of disposal of realty for her necessary support, held, plaintiff entitled to decree establishing claim as a lien against net proceeds of such realty, which had been partitioned and sold under contract, but not to decree establishing claim as a lien against proceeds of realty before payment of costs and expenses of partition proceeding.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

12312 Petition.

Unrecorded conveyance—burden of proof. Where children, holding undivided interests in lands as heirs, vest their mother, by an unrecorded instrument, with actual possession of the lands during her widowhood, a subsequent deedholder of the interest of one of the children may not have partition of the land, unless he pleads and proves (1) his subsequent purchase, (2) that he paid value therefor, and (3) that he had no notice of said unrecorded instrument.

Young v Hamilton, 213-1163; 240 NW 705

Substituted petition constituting new action. The filing, by plaintiff in partition, of an amended and substituted petition, in which the name of his wife is omitted as a defendant and appears as a joint plaintiff, must be deemed the commencement of an entirely new action.

Jones v Park, 220-903; 262 NW 801

Cross-petition—notice of—sufficiency. In an action for the partition of lands, a notice by one co-defendant to another co-defendant of the filing by the former of a cross-petition, denying all interest of the latter in the lands in question, is not a nullity because said notice fails to specifically describe or identify said lands, when said notice makes proper reference to the original petition in the action for a correct description of said lands.

Bauer v Bauer, 221-782; 266 NW 531

Explanatory allegations—nonappealable motion to strike. In a partition action the overruling of a motion to strike various explanatory allegations of a petition, being interlocutory and not going to the merits, is not appealable.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 224-4; 275 NW 579

12314 Lien creditors.

Failure to distribute funds to lienholders. Assuming that the failure of a referee in partition to make distribution to claimants of funds in his possession, as ordered by the court, may be excused as to claimants whose shares are encumbered by liens or garnishments, yet such excuse manifestly cannot be recognized as to claimants whose shares are not so encumbered.

Peterson v Younker, 219-32; 257 NW 442

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Offsetting debt of insolvent heir against realty—creditors—judgments. Where an heir, as a defendant in a partition action, admits insolvency and an indebtedness to parents' estate in excess of his interest in parents' realty, decree was proper holding heir had no interest in such realty and, accordingly, heir's creditors who obtain judgments after commencement of partition action but before entry of decree, and making no claim of fraud in securing the decree, have no interest in any of funds received from sale of realty.

Petty v Hewlett, 225-797; 281 NW 731

12315 Party defendants.

"Necessary parties"—failure to join. In a partition action, on appeal from a decree fixing parties' interest in a cemetery lot, the widow and children of one of the original grantees are "necessary parties" in whose absence the supreme court cannot consider such appeal.

Paulson v Paulson, 226-1290; 286 NW 431

12316 Jurisdiction over property.

Custodia legis—burden of proof. If property is not subject to attachment or garnishment because undergoing partition, and, therefore, in the custody of the law, the mover for dissolution must show that no order for distribution has been entered in the partition proceedings.

Carson v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

Lien on proceeds of partition subject to costs. In an equity action to establish claim for the support of a widow as lien against real estate devised to the widow for life with right of disposal of realty for her necessary support, held, plaintiff entitled to decree establishing claim as a lien against net proceeds of such realty, which had been partitioned and sold under contract, but not to decree establishing claim as a lien against proceeds of realty before payment of costs and expenses of partition proceeding.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

Service by publication—jurisdiction. In partition proceedings, service by publication only, on a nonresident, nonappearing defendant, arms the court with jurisdiction to adjudicate the title to the property.

Clark v Robinson, 206-712; 221 NW 217

12319 Issues—trial—costs.

Mortgage reciting life estates. A series of mortgages accepted by a bank describing the undivided third interest of a son subject to the life estate of the mother, together with other evidence, held to establish an alleged oral contract of the heirs and their mother to create such life estate in the property of a deceased intestate husband and father; consequently, partition of the realty was properly denied against the mother.

Redding v Redding, 226-327; 284 NW 167

Lien on proceeds of partition subject to costs. In an equity action to establish claim for the support of a widow as lien against real estate devised to the widow for life with right of disposal of realty for her necessary support, held, plaintiff entitled to decree establishing claim as a lien against net proceeds of such realty, which had been partitioned and sold under contract, but not to decree establishing claim as a lien against proceeds of realty before payment of costs and expenses of partition proceeding.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

12320 Reference to ascertain incumbrances.

Belated filing of judgment transcript. A referee in partition who, after sale, reports, in accordance with an order of court, all incumbrances then appearing against the share of a party to the proceeding, is under no legal obligation to withhold distribution of the proceeds of sale in favor of the holder of a subsequently filed transcript of judgment of which said referee has no notice or knowledge.

Ferguson v Hamilton, 206-1285; 221 NW 947

12323 Lien on undivided interests.

Subrogation as affecting junior mortgagee. Where tenants in common of land as principal and surety jointly mortgage their undivided interests in order to secure the debt of the principal, the surety may, after the land is partitioned and set off in severalty, compel the satisfaction of the mortgage as far as possible out of the lands assigned in severalty to the principal, and be subrogated to all the rights of the mortgagee in case he is compelled to pay the principal's debt; and this right is enforceable against a subsequent mortgagee of the principal's undivided interest alone, when such mortgagee takes his mortgage with actual knowledge that the mortgagors in the prior mortgage occupied the relation of principal and surety.

Toll v Toll, 201-38; 206 NW 117

Tenants in common—accounting. Between tenants in common, the statute of limitation does not commence to run on a claim of one of the tenants for the amount individually paid by him on a mortgage on the common property, until there has been a demand for an accounting.

Creger v Fenimore, 216-273; 249 NW 147

Offsetting debt of insolvent heir against realty. Where an heir, as a defendant in a partition action, admits insolvency and an indebtedness to parents' estate in excess of his interest in parents' realty, decree was proper holding heir had no interest in such realty and, accordingly, heir's creditors who obtain judgments after commencement of partition action but before entry of decree, and making no claim of fraud in securing the decree, have no interest in any of funds received from sale of realty.

Petty v Hewlett, 225-797; 281 NW 731

Lien on proceeds of partition subject to costs. In an equity action to establish claim for the support of a widow as lien against real estate devised to the widow for life with right of disposal of realty for her necessary support, held, plaintiff entitled to decree establishing claim as a lien against net proceeds of such realty, which had been partitioned and sold under contract, but not to decree establishing claim as a lien against proceeds of realty before payment of costs and expenses of partition proceeding.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

12324 Not to delay distribution.

Failure to distribute funds—excuse. Assuming that the failure of a referee in partition to make distribution to claimants of funds in his possession, as ordered by the court, may be excused as to claimants whose shares are encumbered by liens or garnishments, yet such excuse manifestly cannot be recognized as to claimants whose shares are not so encumbered.

Peterson v Younker, 219-32; 257 NW 442

12325 Confirmation.

ANALYSIS

- I ADJUSTING EQUITIES
- II DECREE

I ADJUSTING EQUITIES

Contribution for taxes, interest, repairs, and tiling. A surviving mother, in partition of lands left by the deceased husband, is entitled to proper contribution from the children for money paid by her for taxes, interest on mortgages, and necessary repairs, but not (under certain facts) for tiling of the land.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

II DECREE

Allowance to co-tenant for improvements. A co-tenant who, in good faith, makes valuable and beneficial improvements upon the common property, even without the knowledge or consent of the other co-tenant, will, on final decree in partition, be protected to the extent which the improvements have enhanced the sale value of the land.

Nelson v Pratt, 212-441; 230 NW 324; 236 NW 386

Co-tenants—nonduty to account for rents. A surviving wife is under no legal obligation, in partition proceedings, to account to her children for the rent of their shares of the land left by the deceased husband and father, when, upon the death of the latter, the wife and children continued to jointly occupy and farm the land in the usual way, and to apply the resulting profits and products to their joint maintenance and education.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

12326 Referees to partition—sale.

Appointing referees—division in kind inequitable. Proper and better practice in partition is to appoint referees following a showing and judicial determination that a division of the property in kind cannot be equitably made.

Murphy v Bates, 224-389; 276 NW 29

Sale (?) or division in kind (?). On the question whether certain property should be in part divided in kind and in part sold, due weight must be given to the judgment of disinterested referees, especially when the testimony is in hopeless conflict.

Town v Town, 203-254; 212 NW 471

Division in kind depreciating value—sale justified. Uncontradicted evidence in partition tending to establish that land, if divided, will have a less aggregate value, justifies the court in ordering the property sold as a unit.

Murphy v Bates, 224-389; 276 NW 29

Impracticable and ill-advised division. A tract of land will not, in partition proceedings, be divided into small tracts when such division will substantially depreciate the value of the shares of the several owners.

Snyder v Snyder, 211-445; 233 NW 498

Setting off in kind—burden of proof. A plaintiff in partition who owns a small fractional unincumbered interest in land while the major interest is owned by heirs whose interest has been ordered sold in probate to pay the debts of the estate, may not successfully complain that his fractional interest is not set off to him in kind when he fails to show that such setting off would not unduly impair the value of the remaining land.

Nehls v Walker, 215-167; 244 NW 850

Rights and obligations of bidder and court. Highest bidder at partition sale makes proposed contract from which he cannot arbitrarily withdraw, and is obligated to complete the contract if sale is approved, nor can the court arbitrarily refuse confirmation, the bidder having become possessed of a right which can be extinguished only by refusing confirmation in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion.

Criswell v Criswell, 227-212; 288 NW 130

Public auction—status of highest bidder. In partition action where property was sold at public auction in regular manner for $4,600, the court did not abuse its discretion in amending referee's report and accepting a higher bid made subsequently to the public sale, the uniform holding in Iowa being that the high bidder at judicial sales, other than at sales under execution or by a trustee under a power, acquires no absolute or vested right, since the sale must be approved by the court and is considered merely a preferred bidder until such approval is given.

Criswell v Criswell, 227-212; 288 NW 130

Public sale—highest bid. Highest bidder at public sale is not entitled as a matter of right to have the sale confirmed by the court, and where a higher substantial bid is made, even tho tardy, a large discretion lies with the court as to which bid shall be accepted.

Criswell v Criswell, 227-212; 288 NW 130

Reopening sale for further bids. Where $4,600 was bid at public sale in partition, the trial court was within its jurisdiction in opening the sale for further offers when a subsequent higher bid was made, provided all active and present bidders were treated fairly and without discrimination, particularly when one of the bidders was an owner of the property, part of which was his homestead.

Criswell v Criswell, 227-212; 288 NW 130

Partition deed—assuming mortgage. Where a referee in partition sells at private sale for an amount in excess of an only existing mortgage, and the deed, referring to the report of sale, recites an assumption and agreement to pay the mortgage, the purchaser is prima facie liable.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Thomas, 223-1018; 274 NW 11, 275 NW 392

Referees—removal. The court, in partition proceedings, has wide discretionary power to discharge a referee for cause and to appoint his successor.

Humphrey v Ralls, 223-770; 273 NW 865

Proceeds — distribution — improper form of check. A referee in partition who, in making distribution of the proceeds of a sale, makes a check payable to an "estate" must account for such share in case the money never reaches said estate. Payment should be made to the administrator.

Albright v Moeckley, 209-1304; 230 NW 351

12330 Report of referees.

Unallowable procedure. A hearing on objections to the report of a referee in partition, without any reference to the question of approving or disapproving said report, seems to be a procedure unknown to our practice.

Peterson v Younker, 219-32; 257 NW 442

Partition deed—assuming mortgage. Where a referee in partition sells at private sale for an amount in excess of an only existing mortgage, and the deed, referring to the report of sale, recites an assumption and agreement to pay the mortgage, the purchaser is prima facie liable.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Thomas, 223-1018; 274 NW 11; 275 NW 392

12332 Partition of part.

Partition in kind (?) or by sale (?). A partition partly in kind and partly by sale will not be permitted when some of the parties would be prejudiced thereby.

Clayman v Bibler, 210-497; 231 NW 334

12333 Report set aside.

Vacating order. An order approving the distribution made by a referee in partition must be set aside, on timely and proper application, when it is made to appear that distribution was made to the wrong party, and it is quite immaterial that the applicant may have an action against the bank for the improper payment of the check by means of which distribution was attempted.

Albright v Moeckley, 209-1304; 230 NW 351

New report releasing purchaser's assumption of mortgage—validity. After foreclosure has been started on land previously partitioned, it is improper to re-open the partition and file a new report relieving the purchaser of an assumption and agreement to pay the mortgage on the land partitioned, therefore any order granting such release is void as against the rights of a foreclosure plaintiff relying on such assumption and agreement to pay.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Thomas, 223-1018; 274 NW 11; 275 NW 392

Order overruling objections to referee's report. An order overruling objections to the report of a referee in partition seems to be appealable.

Peterson v Younker, 219-32; 257 NW 442

Questions first raised on appeal. Whether an action to set aside an order of approval of the distribution report of a referee in partition is proper in form or timely cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

Albright v Moeckley, 209-1304; 230 NW 351

12334 Decree.

Retrial—computation of period. The two years within which a nonresident, nonappearing defendant served by publication may appear and have an action in partition retried commences to run from the date of the judgment which confirms the partition and apports the costs, and not from the date when the court approves the referee's report of distribution.

Tracy v McLaughlin, 207-793; 223 NW 475

Objections to referee's report—unallowable procedure. A hearing on objections to the report of a referee in partition, without any reference to the question of approving or disapproving said report, seems to be a procedure unknown to our practice.

Peterson v Younker, 219-32; 257 NW 442

Incidental relief—unallowable claim. In an action to partition the remainder in real estate after the termination of a preceding testamentary life estate—which had existed for some 16 years—the court may not allow and decree as payable out of the proceeds of the partition sale, a claim against the former estate in probate out of which the life estate arose when there is no proof of said claim (1) either in the former probate proceedings, or (2) in said partition proceedings.

Kinnett v Ritchie, 223-543; 273 NW 175

Adjustment of equities—paving assessments—fatally indefinite proof. On the issue whether certain parties to an action to partition land should be equitably reimbursed for paving assessments paid for the common betterment of the common property, record evidence reviewed and held entirely too indefinite and uncertain to justify the allowance of the claimed reimbursement.

Kinnett v Ritchie, 223-543; 273 NW 175

Conclusiveness of proceeding. Where testator devised real estate to certain wards on condition that they pay $8,000 into decedent's estate within one year after his death and where, in a partition proceeding to which the wards were parties, court found such condition was not met and that devise had lapsed and the land was sold for $7,200, the wards could not in a subsequent proceeding on objections to guardian's final report maintain position that they still owned the land and were entitled to rents and profits therefrom, since the partition proceedings constituted an adjudication as to every matter there in issue and as to all questions necessarily in issue.

In re Delaney, 227-1173; 290 NW 530

12339 Costs generally.

Lien on proceeds of partition subject to costs. In an equity action to establish claim for the support of a widow as lien against real estate devised to the widow for life with right of disposal of realty for her necessary support, held, plaintiff entitled to decree establishing claim as a lien against net proceeds of such realty, which had been partitioned and sold under contract, but not to decree establishing claim as a lien against proceeds of realty before payment of costs and expenses of partition proceeding.

Hoskin v West, 226-612; 284 NW 809

12340 Attorney's fees.

Attorney fees—when unallowable. Principle reaffirmed that when the title of property involved in partition proceedings is put in issue, and all parties are represented by counsel, neither may have attorney fees taxed at the expense of the common property.

Kinnett v Ritchie, 223-543; 273 NW 175

12341 Sale—referees to give bond—removal.

Referees—liability. A referee in partition may place himself in a very precarious position by depositing and retaining partition funds in his own bank which is in a failing condition.

Peterson v Younker, 219-32; 257 NW 442

Surety—agreement to indemnify—joint and several liability. A written agreement in an application for a surety bond by two duly appointed referees in partition to the effect and in the language of "we hereby agree" to indemnify said surety for any damage suffered by him because of said bond, is jointly and severally binding on both principals even tho one of them received no part of the funds covered by the bond and was guilty of no personal failure to account.

Ind. Co. v Opdycke, 223-502; 273 NW 373

Validity of bond—estoppel to question. A duly appointed referee in partition will not be permitted to question the authorized execution in his name of a bond as such referee, when, subsequent to the said execution and filing of said bond, he reports to the court and under oath, that he had given said bond and had effected a sale of said property.

Ind. Co. v Opdycke, 223-502; 273 NW 373

12343 Private sale—appraisal.

Failure to file appraisal report—effect. When partition proceedings have progressed through all the various steps up to and including the surrender of possession of the land to the purchaser, the sale will not be set aside on the sole ground that, while the land was appraised and report thereof made before the sale, the said report was not formally filed before said sale.

Dickson v Dickson, 220-882; 262 NW 803

Partition deed—assuming mortgage. Where a referee in partition sells at private sale for an amount in excess of an only existing mortgage, and the deed, referring to the report of sale, recites an assumption and agreement to pay the mortgage, the purchaser is prima facie liable.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Thomas, 223-1018; 274 NW 11; 275 NW 392

Consideration and acceptance. Where a note was sent for the purchase price of land in partition, and tho objections were made to it because the signature was not in ink, a judgment for the plaintiff on the note was warranted when there was evidence on which the jury could have found consideration for the note and that it was later accepted by the plaintiff after learning that the penciled signature was valid.

Ballard v Ballard, 226-699; 285 NW 165

12344 Report of sale.

Discretion to reject report and re-offer property. The court has a legal discretion, in partition proceedings, to reject the referee's report of sale to the highest bidder, and, in open court, to call for and accept and confirm a materially larger bid than that received by the referee.

Dyer v Dyer, 220-405; 262 NW 671

Approval—refusal to set aside—discretion. The refusal of the court to set aside the referee's report of sale and the court's approval thereof will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a showing that the court abused its discretion.

Bleakley v Long, 222-76; 268 NW 152

Amending report to accept higher bid. In partition action where property was sold at public auction in regular manner for $4,600, the court did not abuse its discretion in amending referee's report and accepting a higher bid made subsequently to the public sale, the uniform holding in Iowa being that the high bidder at judicial sales, other than at sales under execution or by a trustee under a power, acquires no absolute or vested right, since the sale must be approved by the court and is considered merely a preferred bidder until such approval is given.

Criswell v Criswell, 227-212; 288 NW 130

Increased bids for small amounts not accepted after sale. While the general rule is that the court will not approve acceptance of a bid which has been increased by only a small, proportionate amount over a previously accepted bid, yet where a tardy bidder had lived on the tract for many years as a homesteader, and where the money involved was of secondary importance, the court exceeded its jurisdiction in not accepting the higher bid, altho the trial court would have been affirmed if the bidder had been anyone other than the owner, and under the latter circumstance this case is not to be considered as a precedent.

Criswell v Criswell, 227-212; 288 NW 130

New report releasing purchaser's assumption of mortgage—validity. After foreclosure has been started on land previously partitioned, it is improper to re-open the partition and file a new report relieving the purchaser of an assumption and agreement to pay the mortgage on the land partitioned, therefore any order granting such release is void as against the rights of a foreclosure plaintiff relying on such assumption and agreement to pay.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Thomas, 223-1018; 274 NW 11; 275 NW 392

Partition plaintiff as purchaser assuming mortgage—parol evidence. A plaintiff in a partition action, becoming the purchaser, who accepts, from the referee with knowledge of its contents, a deed reciting an assumption of a mortgage together with a reference to the referee's report of sale, and who also retains an amount equal to the mortgage, does thereby assume and agree to pay such mortgage. Such a reference incorporates the report into the deed and the actual consideration may be shown by parol evidence.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Thomas, 223-1018; 274 NW 11; 275 NW 392

Sale—bid—cancellation. A bid at a sale in partition is effectually canceled by the act of the bidder in accepting a return of his required cash deposit, even tho such deposit is returned under an order of the court.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 204-724; 215 NW 946

Distribution—improper form of check. A referee in partition who, in making distribution of the proceeds of a sale, makes a check payable to an "estate" must account for such share in case the money never reaches said estate. Payment should be made to the administrator.

Albright v Moeckley, 209-1304; 230 NW 351

Appeal—inadequacy of bid. The approval by the trial court of a referee's sale in partition will not be disturbed on appeal on the ground of inadequacy of bid, even tho the bid is substantially lower than the bid made at a former, rejected sale, when only a minority of the interested parties (all of whom are adults) object to confirmation, and when there is no prospect that a more advantageous bid can be received.

Fallers v Latimer, 217-261; 251 NW 612

Questions first raised on appeal. Whether an action to set aside an order of approval of the distribution report of a referee in partition is proper in form or timely cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

Albright v Moeckley, 209-1304; 230 NW 351

12345 Conveyance.

Deed pending appeal—effect. The vendee in a referee's deed in partition who takes his deed pending an appeal from the order for the deed takes at his peril.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 204-724; 215 NW 946

Approval of deed—conclusiveness. An order of court confirming a deed in partition, approving the final report of the referee and discharging him and his bondsman from further responsibility, coupled with a recital and finding that the referee had made full distribution of the purchase price and had fully complied with all orders of the court (one of which was to the effect that the purchase price must be paid in cash) is final and conclusive until set aside by a direct proceeding, even tho as a matter of fact no money ever actually passed from the purchaser to the referee.

State Bank v Uglow, 208-1241; 227 NW 118

Foreclosure — deficiency judgment — purchaser from partition referee. Where the referee's deed and report of sale recite an assumption of a mortgage, a deficiency judgment may in a proper case be rendered against one who purchases from a referee in partition.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Thomas, 223-1018; 274 NW 11; 275 NW 392

Partition deed—assuming mortgage. Where a referee in partition sells at private sale for an amount in excess of an only existing mortgage, and the deed, referring to the report of sale, recites an assumption and agreement to pay the mortgage, the purchaser is prima facie liable.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Thomas, 223-1018; 274 NW 11; 275 NW 392

Sale not subject to collateral attack. A partition sale, regular on its face, cannot be collaterally attacked in a subsequent proceeding on objections to a guardian's final report.

In re Delaney, 227-1173; 290 NW 530

12348 Sales disapproved.

Right to impose additional terms. An order of court to the effect that a very belated bidder at a referee's sale in partition make a deposit or down payment greater than was required of regular bidders is presumptively within the discretion of the court.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 204-724; 215 NW 946

Bid—cancellation. A bid at a sale in partition is effectually canceled by the act of the bidder in accepting a return of his required cash deposit, even tho such deposit is returned under the order of the court.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 204-724; 215 NW 946
