EDITOR'S INTRODUCTION to Volume II of the Annotations to the Code of Iowa

Contents. The annotations contained in this volume are a continuation of the annotations in Volume I and cover all of the decisions of the Iowa Supreme Court from the September, 1925, term, reported in Volume 200 of the Iowa Reports, to the May, 1940, term of the court, reported in Volume 227 of the Iowa Reports, insofar as the opinions have been released to the Reporter by the Supreme Court, together with a few released opinions which, when published in the Iowa Reports, will appear in Volume 228. Certain earlier cases scattered herein dealing with criminal matters were furnished to the Code Editor several years ago by Professor Rollin M. Perkins of the State University.

There have been added brief notes showing Attorney General Opinions and Iowa Law Review citations. In order to save space these citations have been condensed, e.g., '38 AG Op 67, 72, 115. A citation such as this is an equivalent of three separate citations and the searcher should inspect each of the pages cited. This is likewise true of the Iowa Law Review and Negligence and Compensation Cases, Annotated, citations in many instances.

The ALR and NCCA citations have been added to the respective annotations instead of using a table at the back of the book as was done in Volume I. It is believed that the insertion of these citations following the respective annotations, together with the other citations, will facilitate the use of this volume and save the searcher time used in referring to a table at the back of the book.

Former system followed. As was stated in the preface to Volume I, "Judge McClain was quite liberal in the preparation of his annotations. In other words, many annotations were inserted by him, not because they constituted direct constructions of the section of law in question, but because they had some fair relation to the subject matter of the section. The bar is familiar with this system and it has not been deemed wise to depart from it." The plan as thus stated has been continued in this volume.

Catchwords. The catchwords inserted at the beginning of each annotation follow the plan inaugurated in Volume I.

Folio lines. Folio lines in heavy black type at the top of the pages appear in a manner similar to the folio lines in the Code.

Analyses. The analyses under the various sections in Volume I have been used as nearly verbatim as possible in Volume II, both to aid the searcher and to provide continuity of the annotations between the two volumes. Because of extensive material in certain places, a number of new analyses have been added. For example, in the motor vehicle law, an entirely new motor vehicle act and the extensive number of cases applicable to certain sections therein required new analyses. In a few instances an analysis has been placed at the end of a chapter under a note covering cases generally applicable to the subject matter of the chapter, e.g., "Note 1 Contracts generally" at the end of chapter 420. The purpose of all these analyses is to expedite the searcher's use of this volume. In instances where the annotations under a particular analysis extend over several pages, the analysis entry has been repeated at the top of each page in order that the searcher will not be required to return to the page where the analysis is printed, and then tediously follow through several pages in order to determine the location of subject matter under a desired portion of the analysis—as is now necessary in certain parts of Volume I. Clear, black, distinct type has been used in connection with the analysis entries distinguishing the code section catchwords and the analysis entries. In the larger analyses page numbers in parentheses have been added to indicate the beginning page of the annotations under that portion of the analysis.

Cross references. Under various sections and with many of the analyses, cross references have been added to indicate places in this volume where related matters may be found, and cross references also show many instances where the same or similar subjects may be found in Volume I of the Annotations, altho it is assumed the searcher will usually refer to the material in Volume I where the section numbers are identical.

Cases. The cases covered in Volume II of the Annotations are as follows:
Iowa Reports, Volumes 200 to 227, inclusive (some cases from Volume 228)
North Western Reporter, Volumes 204 to 291
American Law Reports, Annotated, Volumes 39 to 120

Negligence and Compensation Cases, Annotated, Volumes 25 to 39, inclusive Negligence and Compensation Cases, Annotated, New Series, Volumes 1 to 5, inclusive
Federal Reporter 2d, Volumes 8 to 109, inclusive
United States Supreme Court Reports, Volumes 269 to 307, inclusive
(covers only such cases as either directly or indirectly involve Iowa statutes)
Iowa Law Review, Volumes 1 to 25 (No. 1 and No. 2)
Attorney General Opinions, 1925 to 1940

Annotations to Supreme Court Rules. Since the Rules of the Supreme Court appear at the end of the Code, such annotations as apply to those rules have been added to this volume, beginning on page 2574.

Tables. At the back of this volume and just preceding the index are two tables inserted as a convenience to the users hereof. The first table is an abridged table of equivalent sections from the Code of 1935 to the Code of 1939 covering only those sections formerly carrying a combination figure-letter number and now carrying a decimal number. The other table is a corresponding section table from the Code of 1897 to the Code of 1939. Thus, if the searcher finds in the annotations either a section number referring to the Code of 1897 or a combination figure-letter number, he can immediately, by reference to one or the other of these tables, determine what is the equivalent section in the Code of 1939. The tables of corresponding sections covering the codes before 1897 are still available in the volume entitled "Tables of Corresponding Sections of Iowa Statutes", published in 1925.

Index. Due to the fact that many common-law subjects are covered by the cases in this volume, as well as in Volume I—such subjects being very difficult, if not impossible, to locate in the annotations through the code index—a short annotation index to general common-law subjects has been added at the end of this volume. Its use is explained by a note preceding the index.

Future annotations. It is planned to follow this volume with cumulative supplements which will keep these annotations up to date.

Volume II

CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF IOWA

Preamble—Boundaries.

Jurisdiction in civil cases. See under §§ Jurisdiction in criminal cases. See under §13449

Ownership of lands—accretions. The owner of land along the bank of a navigable stream is entitled to accretions to the land even tho such accretions extend over the exact spot where another person formerly owned land eroded by the river.

Bone v May, 208-1094; 225 NW 367
See Meeker v Kautz, 213-370; 239 NW 27

Boundaries—Missouri river—accretion and avulsion—presumptions. In an action involving title to land affected by changes in course of Missouri river, court recognized principles that boundaries established in the middle of the main channels vary as channels change by accretion, but that boundaries are unaffected where change takes place suddenly by avulsion; that land on Iowa side of Missouri river is presumed to be in Iowa, and that land left by recession of the river is presumed to be the result of accretion rather than avulsion.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Change in boundary. The boundary line between Iowa and Nebraska changes by gradual erosion or accretion, but not by avulsion.

Bigelow v Herrink, 200-830; 205 NW 531

Dams—new high-water mark—title of state. The state of Iowa by erecting a permanent dam in the bed of its navigable river, and by maintaining said dam peaceably and uninterruptedly for a period of ten years, legally extends its title to the new high-water mark resulting from the erection of the dam; and especially may a private deedholder not complain when his deed, executed after the dam was erected, simply calls for land "up to the river".

State v Sorenson, 222-1248; 271 NW 234

Lands under water—continuing ownership of land in place. The mere fact that land may disappear for a time, because river water enters a slough and spreads over it, will not destroy the ownership thereto as lands in place after the water recedes.

Sheldon v Chambers, 225-716; 281 NW 438

Sudden shifting of boundary river—effect. Principle applied that the sudden shiftings of boundary rivers do not change state boundary lines.

Dermit v School Dist., 220-344; 261 NW 636

BILL OF RIGHTS

Rights of persons. SECTION 1.

Discussion. See 15 ILR 162—Police power and commerce clause

ANALYSIS

- I GUARANTY OF INDIVIDUAL OR PERSONAL RIGHTS
- II LIMITING INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS
- III FREEDOM OF CONTRACT
- IV DISCRIMINATION
- V CERTAIN ACTS HELD CONSTITUTIONAL
- VI PROPERTY RIGHTS

Invitees, licensees, and trespassers. See under Ch 484, Note 1
Negligence liability in general. See under Ch 484, Note 1
Railroads. See under §§8005, 8156
Uniform operation of laws. See under Art I, §6; Art III, §30

I GUARANTY OF INDIVIDUAL OR PERSONAL RIGHTS

Appointment of nominated executor required unless disqualified. Altho a certain discretion lies with the probate court in the appointment of personal representatives, nevertheless an executor named in a will as the one in testator's judgment best fitted to administer his estate should be appointed by the court in the absence of disqualification, which must be more than the objections of collateral relatives.

In re Schneider, 224-598; 277 NW 567

Automobile cases. See under §5037.09
Cities. See under §§5739, 5945
Due process of law. See under Art I, §9

I GUARANTY OF INDIVIDUAL OR PERSONAL RIGHTS—concluded

Separate trials—right to waive. The statutory right of jointly indicted parties to have separate trials is not such a right that it cannot be voluntarily waived.

State v Moore, 217-872; 251 NW 737

II LIMITING INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS

Individual rights subservient to public welfare. The sanctity of the home and the right of every free man to occupy and enjoy the same unmolested is subject, as are all other individual rights, to the higher and greater right known as the public welfare.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Private property—use subservient to ordinary incidents of city or village life. A person who lives in a city, town, or village must, of necessity, submit himself to the consequences and obligations of the occupations which may be carried on in his immediate neighborhood, which are necessary for trade and commerce, and also for the enjoyment of property and the benefits of the inhabitants of the place, and matters which, altho in themselves annoying, are in the nature of ordinary incidents of city or village life and cannot be complained of as nuisances.

Casteel v Afton (Town), 227-61; 287 NW 245

Regulation of business—price fixing. Legislative authority to municipalities to adopt ordinances which provide for "fair competition" in personal service trades—trades in which services are rendered upon the person of an individual without necessarily involving the sale of merchandise—cannot constitutionally embrace authority to include in such ordinances a provision fixing the minimum price which may be charged for said services, because neither the state nor the municipality has constitutional power to fix such charges in view of Amendment XIV, federal constitution and of Art. I, §9, Constitution of Iowa. So held as to the business of barbering. And this is true tho the trade in question be subject to the police power of the state.

Duncan v Des Moines, 222-218; 268 NW 547

Regulation of profession—limitation on advertising. The right of the state, under its police power to regulate, in the interest of the public health, morals, and welfare, a medical profession, e.g., the practice of dentistry, embraces the right to place stringent limitations on the form and style of advertisement which the practitioner may legally employ in carrying on his said profession, even the right to prohibit the use of advertisements which, in themselves, are truthful. But the state must not act arbitrarily.

Craven v Bierring, 222-613; 269 NW 801

Right to practice mere privilege. The right to practice law is not a constitutional right—not a vested right—but a mere privilege.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Police power—medicine and surgery. The practice of medicine and surgery is a proper exercise of the police power.

State v Hueser, 205-132; 215 NW 643

Cosmetology schools—charges for services of students. A statute defining cosmetologists as being persons who receive compensation for services and which provides that no person or corporation shall use any person as a practitioner of cosmetology unless the person is an apprentice or licensed cosmetologist, is an unconstitutional exercise of police power in requiring that students of cosmetology schools do gratuitous work while obtaining practical experience, as such requirement would be an arbitrary interference with private business and the right to contract and would impose unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations in violation of due process of law.

State v Thompson's School, 226-556; 285 NW 133

Police power—scientific difference as to efficiency of health measure. When it appears that there is a difference of scientific opinion as to the efficiency, desirability and reliability of a proposed public health measure, e.g., the tuberculin test for bovine tuberculosis, it necessarily follows that the door is open to the legislative department to adopt the theory to which it will apply its police power.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633
Loftus v Dept., 211-566; 232 NW 412
Panther v Dept., 211-868; 234 NW 560

Police power—due process as limitation. The due process clause of the federal constitution is no limitation on a legitimate and reasonable exercise by the state of its police powers. So held as to the statute requiring the testing of herds of breeding cattle and providing for the destruction of cattle found to be tubercular.

Pevevill v Board, 208-94; 222 NW 535

Police power—regulation of curative agencies. The state may, under its police power, validly control the sale, distribution, and administration of an agency (e.g., tuberculin) which is the basis upon which rest the efforts of the state to eradicate bovine tuberculosis.

Fevold v Board, 202-1019; 210 NW 139

Police power—extending redemption period. Neither the federal nor state constitutional prohibitions against (a) the impairment of the obligations of contracts, or (b) the deprivation of vested property rights without due process of law, is violated by a statute (1) which is enacted during, and for the purpose of ameliorating, an existing public financial emergency, (2) which grants to the owner of real estate during the existence of said emergency the right to possession and a time, very materially in excess of that otherwise granted by law, in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale—even tho the sale precedes the passage of the emergency act—and (3) which sequesters the rents during said extended time and fairly and reasonably applies them to the protection of the mortgagee and his security. (45 GA, ch 179.)

Reason: Contract rights and vested interests must reasonably yield to the paramount right of the state, through the reservoir of its reserved police power, to protect, by appropriate legislation, its sovereignty, its government, its people and their general welfare, against exigencies arising out of a great emergency.

Des Moines JSL Bank v Nordholm, 217-1319; 253 NW 701

Moratorium acts of 47th GA—emergency must be temporary—judicial notice. An emergency, in order to justify legislation in contravention of the constitution on the theory of an exercise of the reserve police power, must be temporary or it cannot be called an emergency, but becomes an established status. In determining this question, the supreme court may take judicial notice of conditions existing at the time of enactment and whether or not they constitute an emergency.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Arp, 225-1331; 283 NW 441; 120 ALR 932

John Hancock Ins. v Egglund, 225-1073; 283 NW 444

Metropolitan v McDonald, 225-1075; 283 NW 445

Mortgage continuance—moratorium acts of 47th GA—unconstitutionality. Moratorium acts of the 47th GA extending foreclosure of mortgages, and extending time in which to redeem, are unconstitutional as an impairment of the obligation of contract, when such acts are not based on an actual existing emergency calling for an exercise of the reserve police power of the state.

Metropolitan v McDonald, 225-1075; 283 NW 445

Police power—restricted residence district—valid regulation. An ordinance, based upon a statute valid under the police power of the state, authorizing establishment of restricted residence districts is not a prohibition but a regulation and as such is a legitimate and reasonable exercise of the city's police power.

Scott v Waterloo, 223-1169; 274 NW 897

Police power—state monopoly over importation. In view of the Wilson Act, and of the Webb-Kenyon Act (27 USC, §§121, 122) and of the decisions of the federal supreme court thereunder, and especially in view of the 21st Amendment to the federal constitution (effective Dec. 5, 1933), it is futile to contend that the state, by investing the Iowa liquor control commission with the sole and exclusive right to import into the state alcoholic liquors, has transcended its police powers and thereby violated the due process, equal protection, and interstate commerce clauses of the federal constitution.

State v Arluno, 222-1; 268 NW 179

III FREEDOM OF CONTRACT

Cosmetology schools—charges for services of students. A statute defining cosmetologists as being persons who receive compensation for services and which provides that no person or corporation shall use any person as a practitioner of cosmetology unless the person is an apprentice or licensed cosmetologist, is an unconstitutional exercise of police power in requiring that students of cosmetology schools do gratuitous work while obtaining practical experience, as such requirement would be an arbitrary interference with private business and the right to contract and would impose unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations in violation of due process of law.

State v Thompson's School, 226-556; 285 NW 133

Motor fuel and fuel oil—price-posting statute—non-infringement on contract right—non-discriminatory. The statute providing that every seller of motor vehicle fuel or fuel oil shall post prices and sell at not less than such prices does not infringe on right of contract or unjustly discriminate against motor vehicle fuel dealers.

State v Woitha, 227-1; 287 NW 99

State v Hardy, 227-12; 287 NW 104

IV DISCRIMINATION

Corporations—tax discrimination. See under Art VIII, §2

Discussion. See 22 ILR 736—Legislation favoring economic groups

Discrimination against nonresident alien. The state, in the imposition of an inheritance tax, may validly discriminate in favor of a resident alien and against a nonresident alien.

In re Anderson, 205-324; 218 NW 140

Restricted residence districts—discrimination—exemption to existing business. An ordinance establishing a restricted residence district and prohibiting the subsequent erection and maintenance therein of gasoline filling stations without a permit is not unconstitutional because the ordinance exempts from its operation an already established and maintained gasoline filling station.

Marquis v Waterloo, 210-439; 228 NW 870

Keeping liquor where beer is sold.
State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

Motor vehicle fuel tax act.
Monamotor Oil Co. v Johnson, 292 US 86

VI PROPERTY RIGHTS

Discussion. See 7 ILB 232—Legal status of American Indian and his property

Owner's right of disposal. Under ordinary circumstances one has the absolute right to dispose of his property as he pleases.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Reasonable use permitted. The owner of property may always put his property to reasonable use, dependent upon the locality and other conditions.

Casteel v Afton (Town), 227-61; 287 NW 245

Use not to injure others. The ownership of property carries with it the obligation to so use the property that injuries to others will not result therefrom.

Casteel v Afton (Town), 227-61; 287 NW 245

Building permit for dog hospital—not license—revocability. A duly issued building permit is more than a mere "license"; and after a building permit is issued under a city's zoning ordinance to a veterinary surgeon who made full disclosure to the city of his plans to build a "dog hospital", with his own living quarters on the second floor in a "hospital" zoned district, and after the building inspector consulted the city attorney, and after veterinary surgeon had spent considerable money toward constructing the building, an order revoking the permit was illegal and reviewable by certiorari.

Crow v Board, 227-324; 288 NW 145

Right to kill animals—limitation. The statutory authority to kill a dog for which a license is required, when such dog is not wearing a collar with license tag attached, does not embrace the right to invade the premises and residence of the owner of the dog in order to effect such killing.

Mendenhall v Struck, 207-1094; 224 NW 95

Temporary obstruction of access to property—damages. Conceding that a city in changing the course of a stream may, temporarily, substantially obstruct a property owner's access to his property, without liability in damages, yet the maintenance of such obstruction for two years is per se not a temporary obstruction, and evidence tending to exculpate the city is inadmissible.

Graham v Sioux City, 219-594; 258 NW 902

Citizens—challenging officers' official acts. Public welfare lodges in citizens of a community the right to challenge the validity of an electric plant construction contract and to enjoin a municipal corporation and its officers from violating their duties and abusing corporate powers, if such construction contract is consummated without competitive bidding, made mandatory by statute.

Miller v Milford, 224-753; 276 NW 826

Officers—salary—power to change. The general assembly has plenary power to reduce the salary of any public officer unless such reduction is prohibited by the constitution—a public office not being property.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Injunction against labor union—no denial of freedom of speech and assembly. An injunction against officers of a trade union was not void on its face as a denial of the right of freedom of speech and assembly because it prohibited unlawful interference with a company's business, mass picketing, intimidation and coercion, and going upon the company's premises without consent.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Political power. SEC. 2.

Additional citations. See under Art I, §25, Vol I; Art III, §1 (first)

Corporate governmental agencies—immunity from legal process and taxation. Immunity of corporate governmental agencies from suits and judicial process, and their incidents, is less readily implied than immunity from taxation.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Nonviolation. A statute which requires a favorable vote equal to 60 percent of all the votes cast for and against a proposal to issue bonds in order to authorize them is not violative of the principle that political power is inherent in the people.

Waugh v Shirer, 216-468; 249 NW 246

Federal instrumentality—congress determines immunity from state laws. It is within discretion of congress to determine in what respects and to what extent its instrumentalities, for their proper functioning, shall be immune from legislation of state origin.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Continuance under financial emergency. The legislative power of the state may, for the purpose of ameliorating an existing, public, financial emergency, constitutionally grant to a mortgagor, on equitable conditions, the right, in an action to foreclose the mortgage, to a continuance which is very materially in excess of that ordinarily permitted or sanctioned by law. (For fundamental reasons see Des Moines Bank v Nordholm, 217 Iowa 1319.)

ANALYSIS

I EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW—CLASSIFICATIONS

II UNIFORMITY OF OPERATION

III SPECIAL PRIVILEGES

I EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW—CLASSIFICATIONS

Additional citations. See under Art III, §30

Equal protection—allowable classifications. The general assembly in the enactment of the chain store tax act (46 GA, ch 75; C., '35, ch 329-G1) did not go beyond its concededly broad power to classify:

1. By classifying chain stores, generally, as proper subjects for an occupational tax.

2. By classifying certain of said stores as not subject to said tax.

3. By classifying the tax-paying stores into groups of ten or multiples thereof and graduating the tax progressively on each group—it appearing that none of said classifications were arbitrary—that the reason for each was manifest or reasonably discernible—that all owners of chain stores similarly situated were treated alike.

Tolerton et al. v Board, 222-908; 270 NW 427

Classification based on population. The general assembly may constitutionally make a law applicable to cities having a certain population and not applicable to cities having a lesser population, provided the subject matter of the law suggests some reasonable necessity for said distinction. So held as to an act providing for the government and management of municipal parks by a park board of ten members.

State v Darling, 216-553; 246 NW 390; 88 ALR 218

Bank shares—taxing officers acting contrary to law. The taxation of state and national bank shares at a higher rate than the shares of competing domestic corporations is violative of the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment and in excess of permission conferred by federal statute for the taxation of national bank stock.

Munn v D. M. Nat. Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

Knowles v First Nat. Bank, 58 F 2d, 232

First Nat. Bk. v Anderson, 269 US 341

Iowa Bank v Stewart, 214-1229; 232 NW 445; 284 US 239

Taxation of national banks—illegal change by auditor of assessment—effect. The act of a county auditor, on his own motion, and without the connivance of any other official charged with duties pertaining to taxation, in changing a duly made and approved assessment of corporate stock of concerns competing with national, state, and savings banks from its proper classification of "corporate stock" to the classification of "moneys and credits" and computing the tax thereon as provided for moneys

I EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW—CLASSIFICATIONS—concluded and credits is absolutely void, and furnishes no basis for the claim by national, state, and savings banks that they have been discriminated against, in that the consolidated levy has been applied to 20 percent of the value of their stock, while the favored concerns have been taxed on the basis of 5 mills on the dollar of the actual value of their stock. (Reversed by U. S. Sup. Ct.)

Iowa Bank v Stewart, 214-1229; 232 NW 445; 284 US 239

Cooperative selling associations. The provision of the nonprofit-sharing cooperative agricultural act (Ch 390, C., '24) (1) authorizing an association organized thereunder to require its members to sell all or a stipulated part of their produce through the association, (2) providing the form of the contract in such cases, and (3) empowering the collection of liquidated damages for a violation of the contract, is not violative of this section, no element of arbitrary or unreasonable classification or discrimination being discernible therein.

Clear Lake Co-op. v Weir, 200-1293; 206 NW 297

Due process of law—denial of permit. When the legislature enacts a regulatory measure requiring a permit to transact a business which it has the constitutional right, under its police power, to absolutely prohibit, a party who has been refused a permissible or optionable permit may not successfully contend that he has been (1) denied the equal protection of the law, or (2) deprived of his property and rights without due process and without compensation.

Ford Hopkins v City, 216-1286; 248 NW 668

Sales tax—shoe repairmen as consumers—taxation uniformity. Taxation uniformity, being an equal distribution of taxation burdens upon all persons of a given class, is impossible of perfect application, and a sales tax rule promulgated under valid legislative authority classifying shoe repairmen as consumers of materials used in shoe repairing, within the meaning of the sales tax act, is not arbitrary but uniform and consistent with the law imposing the tax and not a delegation of power.

Sandberg Co. v Board, 225-103; 278 NW 643; 281 NW 197

II UNIFORMITY OF OPERATION

Additional citations. See under Art III, §30

Arbitrary classification. An ordinance which provides safety regulations over tanks wherein inflammable oils are stored for sale, is null and void when in the same municipality there are large numbers of other tanks identical with those embraced in the ordinance and used for the same purpose except the stored oil is not for sale.

Edwards & B. v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Class legislation—legalization of tax levies. The legalization of all taxes "heretofore assessed, levied and collected by any municipality" is not a local or special law without uniform operation throughout the state.

Chicago RI Ry. v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

Class legislation—venue. The legislature may validly classify the subject of insurance into (1) life insurance and (2) nonlife insurance and validly enact that actions to recover assessments under nonlife insurance contracts shall be brought in the county of the defendant's residence, without applying the same statutory rule to life insurance companies.

Midwest Ins. v DeHoet, 208-49; 222 NW 548

Constitutional uniformity. A statute which applies equally to all of a specifically described class is constitutionally uniform.

Loftus v Department, 211-566; 232 NW 412

Governmental functions—nonliability in performance. The statutory-prescribed rules of the state governing aerial navigation (§8338-c7, C., '35 [§8338.20, C., '39]) have no application to the state in its sovereign capacity, nor to its governmental agencies, nor to the officials of said agencies when exclusively engaged in performing the duties of said agencies.

De Votie v Cameron, 221-354; 265 NW 637

Permissible classification for purpose of legislation. The legislative act (§11033-e1 et seq. C., '35 [§11033.1 et seq., C., '39]) which singles out four classes of judgments only, and markedly reduces the period of time theretofore granted by statute for their enforcement, does not constitute prohibited class legislation because the court will judicially take notice of the fact that the enumerated judgments and the claims out of which they arise are generally, if not uniformly, attended by such superior facilities and opportunities for collection as to justify a statute of limitation applicable to them alone.

Berg v Berg, 221-326; 264 NW 821

Uniform operation—arbitrary administration. An act will not be held unconstitutional because of the possibility that the administering officer will, by arbitrary administration, give the act a nonuniform operation.

State v Manning, 220-525; 259 NW 213

County testing units. This section is not violated by the bovine tuberculosis act because it operates through the medium of county testing units. (See Book of Anno., Vol. I, Const Art III, §30)

Fevold v Board, 202-1019; 210 NW 139

Income tax—discriminations—absence of evidence. The state income tax act (Ch. 329-F1, C., '35 [Ch. 329.3, C., '39]) will not be declared unconstitutionally discriminatory (1) because it exempts domestic corporations and not individuals, partnerships, and fiduciaries from paying a tax on that part of their income derived from activities carried on outside the state of Iowa, or (2) because the graduate rate of tax (§6943-f5, C., '35 [§6943.037, C., '39]) is not uniform between corporations, individuals, and partnerships. Courts will not assume in the absence of competent evidence that no state of facts could reasonably be conceived which could afford a rational basis for distinguishing, for purpose of taxation, between income of an individual and that of a domestic corporation derived from business carried on outside the state.

Vilas v Board, 223-604; 273NW 338

Itinerant drug vendor act. The statutes requiring a license of an itinerant vendor of drugs (§§3148, 3149, C., '31) are not discriminatory, do not effect double taxation, are not class legislation, were not enacted for any effect on trade or to remove competition, and are of uniform operation.

State v Logsdon, 215-1297; 248 NW 4

Motor fuel and fuel oil—price-posting statute—non-infringement on contract right—non-discriminatory. The statute, providing that every seller of motor vehicle fuel or fuel oil shall post prices and sell at not less than such prices, does not infringe on right of contract or unjustly discriminate against motor vehicle fuel dealers.

State v Woitha, 227-1; 287 NW 99

State v Hardy, 227-12; 287 NW 104

III SPECIAL PRIVILEGES

Class legislation. One who concedes that the bovine tuberculosis act is a general health measure may not contend for the unconstitutionality of the act because of the unwisdom of the legislature in limiting the realization of the benefits of the act to the initiative of a certain class, to wit, to the owners of breeding cattle.

Lausen v Board, 204-30; 214 NW 682

Class legislation—chain store act—equal protection—ruling of federal court—conclusiveness. The chain store tax act (46 GA, ch 75; C., '35, ch 329-G1 [C., '39, ch 329.5]) is in violation of the equal protection clause of the federal constitution insofar as it attempts to levy an annual tax solely on the basis of the gross receipts of said stores, such being the holding of the federal supreme court and such holding necessarily being conclusive on the courts of this state.

Tolerton et al. v Board, 222-908; 270 NW 427

Class legislation—municipal utilities—discrimination against privately owned plants. Statutory authority to municipalities to erect, in their proprietary capacity, electric light and power plants, and to pay the entire initial cost thereof from the net profits of said plants, and to this end to fix such rates as will effect such payment, is not void as an unconstitutional discrimination against privately owned plants of the same kind.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Permit to sell cigarettes. The cigarette permit act which provides that certain governmental bodies "may" grant permits for the sale of cigarettes (§1557, C., '31) arms said bodies with power to exercise at least a legal discretion to grant or refuse a permit.

Ford Hopkins v City, 216-1286; 248 NW 668

Class legislation—reduction of official salaries. An act readjusting or reducing the salaries of various public officers cannot be deemed unconstitutional class legislation.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Charitable institutions liable to strangers, invitees, or employees. Public policy has never demanded nor has the legislature adopted any immunity to charitable institutions from liability to strangers, invitees, or employees arising because of negligence of the servants of such institutions, and the court will not grant such immunity.

Andrews v Y.M.C.A., 226-374; 284 NW 186; 5 NCCA (NS) 335

Corporate governmental agencies—immunity from legal process and taxation. Immunity of corporate governmental agencies from suits and judicial process, and their incidents, is less readily implied than immunity from taxation.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Liberty of speech and press. SEC. 7.

Slander and libel. See under §§12412, 13256

Libel not avoided because published as an opinion. A published attack on a person, otherwise libelous per se, is not rendered nonlibelous because it only stated what the publisher thought.

McCuddin v Dickinson, 225-304; 283 NW 886

Newspaper attack on attorney—requisites for libel per se. A newspaper attack upon attorneys stating, among other things, that they were attempting "to stall off" an appeal, tho ill-natured, vexatious, and untrue, yet is not libelous per se, since it lacks one essential element as such, to wit, malicious defamation, and unless special damages are pleaded, is not actionable.

Boardman et al. v Gazette Co., 225-533; 281 NW 118

Injunction against labor union—no denial of freedom of speech and assembly. An injunction against officers of a trade union was not void on its face as a denial of the right of freedom of speech and assembly because it prohibited unlawful interference with a company's business, mass picketing, intimidation and coercion, and going upon the company's premises without consent.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Injunction violation by labor union officials. There was no denial of the right of freedom of speech in holding officers of a trade union in contempt of court for violating an injunction, when they counseled, aided, abetted, and assisted in the violation of the injunction.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

ANALYSIS

- I LAWFUL SEARCHES AND SEIZURES
- II SEARCH OF ARRESTED PERSONS
- III ILLEGAL OR UNAUTHORIZED SEARCHES
- IV DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY OR PLACE OF SEARCH

I LAWFUL SEARCHES AND SEIZURES

Presumption of legality. Search warrant proceedings, regular on their face, and shown to have been issued on a sworn information, and a separate oral examination of the informant, will, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, be presumed legal, even tho the facts or evidence showing probable cause do not actually appear in any of the proceedings leading up to the issuance of the warrant.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Determining probable cause—affidavit together with testimony. An affidavit for a search warrant, to comply with the Iowa Constitution, need not contain a recital of facts showing probable cause, as the magistrate may also examine witnesses in determining the existence of probable cause.

Krueger v Mun. Court, 223-1363; 275 NW 122

Probable cause for issuance of warrant—determination—sufficiency. The existence of "probable cause" for the issuance of a search warrant is to be determined by the magistrate issuing such warrant and does not have to be shown in the information itself but may be shown by affidavit attached thereto or by sworn testimony taken before the magistrate prior to the issuance of the warrant; hence, warrant to search for gambling devices was not issued without "probable cause" where state agent who signed and swore to information was also examined under oath.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Information—sufficiency. A sworn information which makes distinct allegations of facts showing illegal possession of intoxicating liquors may not be said to be an affidavit of belief only.

State v Friend, 206-615; 220 NW 59

Validity. A recital in a search warrant that "the court finds from the evidence that there is in fact sufficient ground and reason that a search warrant issue" conclusively shows that the warrant was not issued on mere belief.

State v Friend, 206-615; 220 NW 59

John Doe warrant—when valid. Unless a person is to be searched or is known to be in possession of the premises, a John Doe warrant sufficiently describing the premises is valid as basis to search for intoxicating liquor.

Krueger v Mun. Court, 223-1363; 275 NW 122

Unreasonable searches and seizures—what is not. The unreasonable search and seizure clause of the Iowa Constitution is not violated by the Iowa income tax act arming the state board with power to examine, under judicial procedure, the books and papers of the taxpayer in order to determine the correctness or fraudulent nature of the taxpayer's return of income.

II SEARCH OF ARRESTED PERSONS

Compulsory examination of defendant's person. An examination of the defendant's person, while in jail, by a physician, cannot be said to have been compulsory, where the only evidence of compulsion was that the sheriff accompanied the physician, but it was not shown that he did or said anything in respect to the examination.

State v Struble, 71-11; 32 NW 1

III ILLEGAL OR UNAUTHORIZED SEARCHES

Unlawfully obtained evidence, admissibility. See under §13897 (I)

Evidence illegally obtained—admissibility. Evidence otherwise admissible is not rendered inadmissible because it was illegally obtained.

State v Rollinger, 208-1155; 225 NW 841

Forcible repossession of property. That part of a conditional sale contract which provides that the vendor, in case of default under the contract, may repossess himself of the property "forcibly and without process of law" is void because violative of public policy.

Girard v Anderson, 219-142; 257 NW 400;
4 NCCA (NS)203

IV DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY OR PLACE OF SEARCH

John Doe warrant—when valid. Unless a person is to be searched or is known to be in possession of the premises, a John Doe warrant sufficiently describing the premises is valid as basis to search for intoxicating liquor.

Krueger v Mun. Court, 223-1363; 275 NW 122

Information—description of gambling devices—sufficiency. Description of gambling devices as "cards, dice, faro, roulette tables, and other devices" in information to obtain issuance of search warrant held sufficient.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

I NATURE OF RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL IN CIVIL CASES

Presence of party in court—important privilege. A party's privilege to be present in court at the trial of his cause should not be denied without weighty reasons therefor.

In re Rogers, 226-183; 283 NW 906

Equal protection—litigant's day in court. Every litigant is entitled to his day in court.
 Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 748

New trial—grounds sustained generally—effect on appeal. Even tho the overruling of a motion to strike an amendment to plaintiff's motion for new trial was error, there was no prejudice to defendant where motion for new trial was sustained generally, and where grounds of original motion, to wit: that verdict was not sustained by evidence and that plaintiff did not receive a fair and impartial trial, were good—in which case there can be no reversal.

Mitchell v Heaton, 227-1071; 290 NW 39

Directed verdicts. Principle reaffirmed that the constitutional right of trial by jury is not infringed by the action of the court in directing a verdict for defendant whenever the evidence is such that the court would not hesitate to set aside a verdict against defendant.

Cashman v Ry. Co., 217-469; 250 NW 111

Excessive verdict—unallowable reduction by court. The court has no power to reduce the verdict of a jury in an action for unliquidated damages, and to render judgment for a less amount, unless the party in whose favor the verdict was rendered consents to such reduction.

Crawford v Emerson Co., 222-378; 269 NW 334

Agent's authority—when jury question. Questions as to the nature or extent of an agent's authority, determinable or implied from the facts, are for the jury.

Wright v Iowa P. & L. Co., 223-1192; 274 NW 892

Attorneys for juveniles—compensation—jury question. An action by an attorney against a county for compensation for defending a juvenile delinquent is not demurrable but presents a jury question.

Ferguson v Pottawattamie Co., 224-516; 278 NW 223

Right to jury when reasonable men differ—injury from street defect. When a street defect is of such character that reasonable and prudent men may reasonably differ as to whether an accident could or should have been reasonably anticipated from its existence or not, the question of city's liability for injuries caused thereby is generally one for jury.

Thomas v Ft. Madison, 225-822; 281 NW 748

II JURY TRIALS IN INFERIOR COURTS

Jury of six. The trial of a nonindictable misdemeanor may legally be had in municipal court before a jury of six persons.

State v Porter, 206-1247; 220 NW 100

Jury of six. The municipal court act is not unconstitutional because, in the absence of a demand for a jury of twelve, it compels a defendant residing outside the city in which the court is established to submit to a trial by a jury of six which are drawn from the city and not from the county at large.

Kinsey v Clark, 215-765; 246 NW 840

III DENIAL OF TRIAL BY JURY

Deprivation of jury. An action by the receiver of an insolvent bank against stockholders for the purpose of determining the necessity for an assessment on stock holdings, and adjudicating the amount of such assessment, is not inherently a law action and, therefore, the legislature may provide that the action shall be brought in equity.

Broulik v Henderson, 218-640; 254 NW 63

Insanity appeal—noncriminal—nonjury—constitutionality. No constitutional rights are violated in trying an appeal from the insanity commission to the court without a jury, since this is not in any way a criminal proceeding.

In re Brewer, 224-773; 276 NW 766

III DENIAL OF TRIAL BY JURY—concluded

Municipal court jury trial. Where plaintiff requested jury trial and later withdrew such request, municipal court's refusal to allow defendant trial by jury was error.

Metier v Brewer, (NOR); 205 NW 734

IV WAIVER OF JURY TRIAL

Waiver by agreement of attorneys—validity. A written agreement or stipulation, duly signed and filed by opposing attorneys in a law action and approved of record by the court, agreeing to waive a jury and to try the action to the court is, in the absence of fraud or proof that an attorney had no authority so to agree, binding on the parties to the action for at least one trial to the court, even tho, after the stipulation was entered into, the pleadings be amended and the cause be continued to a later term.

Shores Co. v Chemical Co., 222-347; 268 NW 581; 106 ALR 198

Exemption from self-incrimination—non-waiver. A witness who voluntarily appears before a grand jury, and, without duress or compulsion, testifies to matters which tend to render himself criminally liable for an offense as to which he is not given absolute immunity from prosecution (§11269, C., '35), does not thereby waive his natural, common law, statutory, and constitutional right to refuse to testify to said matters on the subsequent trial of another party under an indictment returned in whole or in part on the original testimony of said witness.

Duckworth v Dist. Court, 220-1350; 264 NW 715

V JURY TRIAL IN EQUITY CASES

Bank stock assessments. An action by the receiver of an insolvent bank against stockholders for the purpose of determining the necessity for an assessment on stock holdings, and adjudicating the amount of such assessment, is not inherently a law action and, therefore, the legislature may provide that the action shall be brought in equity.

Broulik v Henderson, 218-640; 254 NW 63

Law issues determined in equity. An action in equity by one school district to enjoin another school district and the county treasurer from transferring, to the defendant school, certain funds claimed to be due from the plaintiff school as tuition, remains in equity altho the defendant school files a cross-petition raising issues at law as to determination of the amount due, if any, and for judgment accordingly, since equity, acquiring jurisdiction, may determine all issues.

Lincoln Dist. v Redfield Dist., 226-298; 283 NW 881

VI DUE PROCESS OF LAW GENERALLY

Due process not limitation on police power. Peverill v Board, 208-94; 222 NW 535

Appeal—no constitutional right.

Chic., Burl. Ry. v Board, 206-488; 221 NW 223

Van der Burg v Bailey, 207-797; 223 NW 515
Wissnburg v Bradley, 209-813; 229 NW 205; 67 ALR 1075

Donlan v Cooke, 212-771; 237 NW 496

Due process—test—equal operation on all. The test, with respect to requirements of due process of law, is simply whether the law operates equally upon all who come within class to be affected, embracing all persons who are, or may be, in like situation or circumstances.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 282 NW 728

Trial on merits—litigant's day in court. It is the policy of the law that every cause of action should be tried upon its merits and that every party to an action shall have his day in court.

Western Grocer v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

Judgment by default—day in court. Where a case is set for trial and counsel tho notified by letter is out of the state when the case is called for trial and a default is entered, the court erred in refusing to set aside the default since reputable counsel were employed, the parties themselves were not negligent and they should "have had their day in court".

Hatt v McCurdy, 223-974; 274 NW 72

New trial—court's inherent power to set aside verdict. Where a party has not received a fair and impartial trial, the trial court has inherent power to set aside the verdict.

Brunssen v Parker, 227-1364; 291 NW 535

Judgment—setting aside unaffected by failure to secure stay order. Fact that proceedings in district court could have been stayed pending appeal will not, on the ground that misfortune was avoidable, preclude setting aside a default judgment rendered pending appeal without customary notice between counsel.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

Due process of law—short form indictment valid. A short form indictment is valid and the statute providing therefor is constitutional.

State v Keturokis, 224-491; 276 NW 600

Rape—amending indictment—form only—validity. In a prosecution for rape, adding the words, "a female, by force and against her will," as an amendment to an already valid indictment is an amendment affecting not substance but form only, and being merely surplusage, is not prejudicial and not error.

State v Keturokis, 224-491; 276 NW 600

Failure of accused to testify—allowable reference—due process not violated. County attorney, during the trial of a criminal case, may properly refer to the fact that the accused has not testified in his own behalf, and constitutional due process is not thereby violated.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

Inference from accused's failure to testify—due process unaffected. Any resulting inference or presumption of guilt arising from an accused's choice not to testify in his own behalf is not involved in the due process clause of the constitution.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

Sentence—right to revoke without notice. A defendant granted a suspension of sentence must take it with the statutory burden accompanying it, to wit: the right of the court to revoke the suspension at any time without notice or opportunity to be heard.

Pagano v Bechly, 211-1294; 232 NW 798

Venue—change on application of state. The legislature may constitutionally grant to the state the right to a change of venue in a criminal prosecution.

State v Dist. Court, 213-822; 238 NW 290

Power to punish. Contempt proceedings which are in accordance with that provided by Ch. 536, C., '35, are not violative of the due process clauses of the federal and state constitutions.

State v Baker, 222-903; 270 NW 359

"Notice" implied in context of statute. A statute is not unconstitutional because it does not expressly provide for notice to an interested party. A clear implication of notice, duly complied with, is sufficient.

Chehock v Sch. Dist., 210-258; 228 NW 585

Absence of notice. The fact that a stockholder in an insolvent bank was not made a party to proceedings which resulted in the issuance of receiver's certificates becomes immaterial when, in an action by the receiver to enforce an assessment to pay said certificates, the stockholder is afforded full opportunity to question the legality of such certificates.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Absence of notice. Notice to the beneficiary of a trust, of the hearing on an application by the trustee for an order of court confirming an investment already made by the trustee, is not necessary, such application not being an adversary proceeding, and the record revealing the perfect good faith of the trustee.

In re Lawson, 215-752; 244 NW 739; 88 ALR 316

Absence of notice. The statutes (§1989-a24, S., '13; 38 GA, ch 332 [§7563, C., '39]), authorizing certain improvements on the common outlet of two or more drainage districts, and an apportionment of the cost thereof among the several districts by means of assessments on the basis of water discharged by each district, are not unconstitutional because said statutes fail to provide for notice to interested parties prior to the making of said improvements, said improvements being analogous to repairs on ditches generally, subsequent to their construction.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Absence of statutory provision for notice—power of court. When due process necessitates notice to a party and the statute makes no provision for such notice, the court may validly prescribe a notice which is reasonably calculated to give the interested party knowledge of the proceeding and opportunity to be heard.

McKinstry v Dewey, 192-753; 185 NW 565

Franklin v Bonner, 201-516; 207 NW 778

In re Barner, 201-525; 207 NW 613

Notice unnecessary. The enlargement of the boundaries of a municipality by a city council under an enabling statute, without any notice to the property owners within the territory annexed, and without any opportunity on the part of such owners to vote on the question, is not violative of this section.

Wertz v City, 201-947; 208 NW 511

Notice unnecessary. Due process does not require that notice to the owners of breeding cattle and hearing thereon be provided on an application to have a county enrolled under the county-accredited-area plan for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis.

Fevold v Board, 202-1019; 210 NW 139

Service outside state. Jurisdiction in personam of an Iowa corporation is constitutionally obtained by proper service of a proper original notice in a foreign state on one of the last known or acting officers of the corporation, as shown by the last statutory annual report of the corporation on file with the secretary of state of this state.

Bennett v Coal Co., 201-770; 208 NW 519

Substituted service on nonresident individual. The statute (§11079, C., '31) which provides, in effect, that when a corporation, company, or individual maintains in this state an agency "in any county" other than that in which said principal resides, service of original notice of any action growing out of or connected with said agency may be personally had on the principal in this state by serving in this state an agent employed in said agency, applies to a nonresident individual maintaining an agency in this state, and when so applied does not deny to said defendant (1) due process of law, (2) the equal protection of the law, (3) any privilege or immunity granted to citizens of this state, or (4) any privilege or immunity possessed by said defendant as a citizen of the United States.

Davidson v Doherty & Co., 214-739; 241 NW 700; 91 ALR 1308

—continued

Adjudicating shortage without notice to surety. The sureties on the bond of an administrator are not entitled to notice of the proceedings wherein the probate court determines the amount the administrator is short in his accounts.

In re Kessler, 213-633; 239 NW 555

Due process of law—inapplicable to power of taxation. The due process clause of the federal constitution has no relation whatever to the lawful exercise of the sovereign power of taxation.

Carroll v Cedar Falls, 221-277; 261 NW 652

Assessments without notice. Whether statutes authorizing the cost of certain improvements on the common outlet of several districts to be apportioned by the board doing the work to each of said districts in the ratio of water discharged by each district, are unconstitutional because said statutes fail to provide interested parties in districts other than the district embracing the common outlet, with notice of and opportunity to contest said apportionment, quare. But said interested parties may not complain of the absence of such notice and opportunity when they admit that the apportionment in question was correctly made in accordance with the said statutory ratio.

Board v Board, 214-655; 241 NW 14

Reduction in assessed valuation without notice. It is inferentially suggested that the statute which authorizes the state board of assessment and review to order a reduction in the assessed valuation of property, is not unconstitutional because the statute assumed to grant such power without notice.

State v Board, 211-1116; 235 NW 303

Decreeing lien without notice. An order establishing the heirship of persons to an estate and, without notice, decreeing a lien in favor of the attorney on the cash shares of certain heirs for whom the attorney has never appeared, is a nullity, insofar as the order establishing the lien and the amount thereof is concerned.

In re Lear, 204-346; 213 NW 240

Due process of law—removal from office without notice. There is, in a constitutional sense, no element of property in a public office. It follows that the statutory power conferred on the state executive council to investigate and remove appointive state officers, without making provision for notice and hearing, will not be held to violate the due process clause of the constitution as to an officer to whom the council has voluntarily given ample written notice and opportunity to be heard.

Clark v Herring, 221-1224; 260 NW 436

Regulation of business—price fixing. Legislative authority to municipalities to adopt ordinances which provide for "fair competition" in personal service trades—trades in which services are rendered upon the person of an individual without necessarily involving the sale of merchandise—cannot constitutionally embrace authority to include in such ordinances a provision fixing the minimum price which may be charged for said services, because neither the state nor the municipality has constitutional power to fix such charges in view of the federal constitution and of the Constitution of Iowa. So held as to the business of barbering. And this is true tho the trade in question be subject to the police power of the state.

Duncan v Des Moines, 222-218; 268 NW 547

Due process—ordinance requiring weighing of loads. A municipal ordinance requiring that merchandise sold in load lots by weight for delivery within the city be weighed by a public weighmaster whose certificate stating the gross, tare, and net weight must be delivered to the purchaser, such ordinance, altho it necessitates that a person trucking coal into the city unload and reload, is not so unreasonable as to violate the due process clause of the constitution.

Huss v Creston, 224-844; 278 NW 196; 116 ALR 242

Revocation of license. A physician is not denied his constitutional right to "due process" by being denied a jury trial in proceedings before the board of medical examiners to revoke his license.

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

Enjoining criminal acts—constitutionality. The statute authorizing the entry of a permanent injunction against a person practicing medicine without a license even tho said person may be prosecuted criminally for so practicing, is not unconstitutional on the theory that injunction proceeding is simply a method of punishing the defendant for a crime without the intervention of a trial jury, and consequently denies the defendant due process of law.

State v Howard, 214-60; 241 NW 682

Professions—deprivation of certificate. The holder of a duly issued certificate to practice a profession, e. g., dentistry, cannot be deprived of said certificate without due process, to wit: notice, hearing, and right to appeal to the courts. Statutes reviewed and held ample to protect such holder.

Craven v Bierring, 222-613; 269 NW 801

Denial of permit. When the legislature enacts a regulatory measure requiring a permit to transact a business which it has the constitutional right, under its police power, to absolutely prohibit, a party who has been refused a permissible or optionable permit may not successfully contend that he has been (1) denied the equal protection of the law, or (2) deprived of his property and rights without due process and without compensation.

Ford Hopkins v City, 216-1286; 248 NW 668

Extending redemption period. Neither the federal nor state constitutional prohibitions against (a) the impairment of the obligations of contracts, or (b) the deprivation of vested property rights without due process of law, is violated by a statute (1) which is enacted during, and for the purpose of ameliorating, an existing public financial emergency, (2) which grants to the owner of real estate during the existence of said emergency the right to possession and a time, very materially in excess of that otherwise granted by law, in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale—even tho the sale precedes the passage of the emergency act—and (3) which sequesters the rents during said extended time and fairly and reasonably applies them to the protection of the mortgagee and his security. (45 GA, ch 179.)

Reason: Contract rights and vested interests must reasonably yield to the paramount right of the state, through the reservoir of its reserved police power, to protect, by appropriate legislation, its sovereignty, its government, its people and their general welfare, against exigencies arising out of a great emergency.

Des M. JSL Bank v Nordholm, 217-1319; 253 NW 701

Moratorium acts of 47th GA—unconstitutionality. Moratorium acts of the 47th GA extending foreclosure of mortgages, and extending time in which to redeem, are unconstitutional as an impairment of the obligation of contract, when such acts are not based on an actual existing emergency calling for an exercise of the reserve police power of the state.

Metropolitan v McDonald, 225-1075; 283 NW 445

Moratorium acts of 47th GA—emergency must be temporary—judicial notice. An emergency, in order to justify legislation in contravention of the constitution on the theory of an exercise of the reserve police power, must be temporary or it cannot be called an emergency, but becomes an established status. In determining this question, the supreme court may take judicial notice of conditions existing at the time of enactment and whether or not they constitute an emergency.

Metropolitan v McDonald, 225-1075; 283 NW 445

Unborn child. A statute empowering the court in partition proceedings (1) to assume through a guardian ad litem, jurisdiction over the contingent interest of an unborn child as a possible co-tenant of the land, (2) to order a sale of the land, and (3) to exercise a continuing jurisdiction over the resulting fund insofar as such possible child may have an interest, is violative of neither the federal nor the state constitution relative to depriving persons of property without due process.

Mennig v Howard, 213-936; 240 NW 473

Juvenile delinquents. The juvenile court act (Chs. 179, 180, C., '27) is not violative of the due process clause of the federal and state constitutions because no provision is made for a jury trial of juvenile delinquents.

Wissensburg v Bradley, 209-813; 229 NW 205; 67 ALR 1075

Granting discretionary power to administrative officer. The statutory grant of discretionary power to the superintendent of banking in re reorganization of banks is not a violation of due process.

Timmons v Sec. Bank, 221-102; 264 NW 708

Ascertainable standard of guilt or innocence. The statute which prohibits banks and bankers from receiving deposits when they know they are insolvent, and the interpretation by the courts and by the legislature of the term insolvency to mean "inability to pay, through their own agencies, all liabilities within a reasonable time, and in the ordinary course of business" presents no instance of prescribing or fixing an unascertainable standard of guilt or innocence, violative of the due process clauses of the federal and state constitutions.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Liability of bailor of automobile. The statute which renders the bailor of an automobile liable to third persons for damages consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the bailee is not violative of the due process clause of the constitution.

Robinson v Bruce Co., 205-261; 215 NW 724; 61 ALR 851

Submission to foreign courts—insufficient showing. An Iowa accident insurance association which has not been licensed to transact its business in a foreign state (in which it has neither office, agent, nor property), and whose certificates of insurance are strictly Iowa contracts, cannot be deemed to have subjected itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of such foreign state (1) because a very large number of its certificate holders reside in said foreign state, or (2) because said association, from time to time and by mail from its Iowa office, requests a physician in said foreign state to there examine claimants and to report as to accidental injuries received by claimants, it appearing that said physician was under no contract obligation to comply with said requests and to make such examinations tho he had done so for several years and had received a stated fee for each separate examination.

VI DUE PROCESS OF LAW GENERALLY—concluded

Held, the foreign court, in an action on a certificate, acquired no jurisdiction under process served on said physician.

Saunders v Trav. Assn., 222-969; 270 NW 407

Foreign employer—adjudication on registered mail service. The workmen's compensation act, in the absence of a statutory rejection thereof, becomes a part of a contract of employment which is performable by the employee wholly within this state, and entered into between a resident employee of this state and a foreign nonresident employer doing business in this state without a state permit; but in case the employee dies from an injury compensable under said act, the industrial commissioner acquires no jurisdiction to determine and adjudicate the compensation due on account of said death by simply sending, by registered mail, notices of said proceedings to said employer in said foreign state, tho, concededly, the addressee received said notices. An adjudication on such service does not constitute due process.

Elk River Co. v Funk, 222-1222; 271 NW 204; 110 ALR 1415

Destruction of property. The constitutional requirement of due process of law—notice and hearing—is fully met by the bovine tuberculosis act (1) in depriving the owner of all notice and hearing prior to the destruction of cattle actually infected with tuberculosis, and (2) in impliedly and necessarily giving to said owner a right of action for damages against persons destroying his cattle when they are not so infected.

Loftus v Dept., 211-566; 232 NW 412

Displacing liens. The right of a judgment creditor of an insolvent railway to due process on the issue whether the receiver shall continue the operation of the road and whether the operating expenses shall be given priority over existing judgments is not satisfied by giving the creditor a hearing on the issue whether such priority shall be ordered as to expenses already incurred without any authorizing order therefor.

Continental Bank v Railway, 202-579; 210 NW 787; 50 ALR 139

Reducing statute of limitation on judgments. A legislative act which reduces the existing statutory period of time in which existing judgments may be enforced, yet accords to the holders of such judgments a reasonable time in which to enforce said judgments before the reduced time becomes an absolute bar, is not violative of the due process clause of the federal constitution.

Berg v Berg, 221-326; 264 NW 821

Blue Sky Law. The "Blue Sky Law" (Ch. 393-C1, C., '31) is not subject to the constitutional objection that it (1) deprives citizens of their property without due process, (2) denies equal protection of the law, (3) takes property without just compensation, (4) grants special privileges and immunities, or (5) denies an accused the right to be advised of the nature of the charge preferred against him.

State v Soeder, 216-815; 249 NW 412

Compensation for finding lost property. The statutory provision that the finder of lost goods shall be paid a named compensation is not violative of the due process clause of the constitution.

Flood v Bank, 218-898; 253 NW 509; 95 ALR 1168

Discharge of school teacher. A written contract between a teacher and a school board is necessarily accompanied by all the statutory provisions which govern the original and appellate procedure for the discharge of such teacher. Having by the very act of contracting, legally consented to such procedure, the teacher may not assert that it does not afford him due process in a constitutional sense.

Chehock v Sch. Dist., 210-258; 228 NW 585

VII PERSONS AND PROPERTY ENTITLED TO PROTECTION

Contempt. A party charged with contempt is not entitled to a jury trial.

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 522

Civil service—fair and impartial hearing. A city employee who has been removed from office cannot be said to have had a fair and impartial hearing before the civil service commission under a record disclosing that the commission, after investigation, unsuccessfully sought to have the employee indicted, that charges against the employee were filed by the commission itself, which then proceeded to "hear and determine" the case, and that a member of the commission stated "We had Paul Sandahl convicted before he ever went before us for trial."

Sandahl v Des Moines, 227-1310; 290 NW 697

Enlargement of boundaries—constitutional objections. The enlargement of the boundaries of a municipality by a city council, under an enabling statute, without any notice to the property owners within the territory annexed, and without any opportunity on the part of such owners to vote on the question, is not violative of the due process clause of the constitution.

Wertz v Ottumwa, 201-947; 208 NW 511

School not "person"—statutory tuition reimbursement without notice—due process. The statute providing for the collection of tuition fees by one school district from another is not unconstitutional under the due process clause because not requiring a notice and hearing, because a school district is not a person, as contemplated by the constitution. It is purely a creature of statute, having no power except that granted by the legislature, and so its funds are under legislative control.

Lincoln Dist. v Redfield Dist., 226-298; 283 NW 881

Cosmetology schools—charges for services of students. A statute defining cosmetologists as being persons who receive compensation for services and which provides that no person or corporation shall use any person as a practitioner of cosmetology unless the person is an apprentice or licensed cosmetologist, is an unconstitutional exercise of police power in requiring that students of cosmetology schools do gratuitous work while obtaining practical experience, as such requirement would be an arbitrary interference with private business and the right to contract and would impose unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations in violation of due process of law.

State v Thompson's School, 226-556; 285 NW 133

Trees in highway not property of adjoining owner. A property owner abutting and occupying a part of a highway has no rights in trees growing on such part of the highway, no matter how long his occupancy of the highway continued before public convenience and necessity required appropriation of the full highway width.

Rabiner v Humboldt Co., 224-1190; 278 NW 612; 116 ALR 89

VIII DEPRIVATION OF PROPERTY WITHOUT DUE PROCESS

Compensation for finding lost property—constitutional. The statutory provision that the finder of lost goods shall be paid a named compensation is not violative of the due process clause of the constitution.

Flood v Bank, 218-898; 253 NW 509; 95 ALR 1168

Gasoline license revocation without hearing—valid. Provision in statute imposing tax on motor vehicle fuel, authorizing revocation of license, without hearing, on failure of distributor to make reports or pay license fees held not invalid as taking property of distributor without due process of law.

Monamotor Oil Co. v Johnson, 3 F Supp 189; 292 US 86

IX TAXATION AND DUE PROCESS OF LAW

Drains—assessments for after-accruing benefits. A statute authorizing certain improvements on the common outlet of several districts and the apportionment of the cost thereof among said several districts receiving the benefit of such improvements, is applicable to a district organized prior to the enactment of said statute, and is not unconstitutional in failing to provide for notice to the landowners of the latter district before said improvements are made.

Ward v Board, 214-1162; 241 NW 26

Income tax act. Iowa income tax act reviewed and held not subject to the vice of taking private property without due process of law.

Vilas v Board, 223-604; 273 NW 338

Rights of persons accused. SEC. 10.

I WHAT IS A CRIMINAL PROSECUTION

Short form of indictment. The plea that the short form indictment act does not provide for apprising the defendant of the offense with which he is charged, and is therefore unconstitutional, is unteppable in view of the right of the defendant under said act to a bill of particulars.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

Penal ordinance void for uncertainty. An ordinance which requires storage tanks for inflammable oils and the accessories of such tanks to "be kept and operated in compliance with law, the building code, and other city ordinances, and in a safe and proper manner, and the same shall not be permitted to become or remain defective, hazardous or dangerous" (sic), and penalizing violations, is void for uncertainty and unenforceability.

See State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Regulatory ordinance—absence of specifications. An ordinance purporting to safeguard the public by regulating storage tanks for inflammable oils must, in order to be valid and enforceable, contain such rules and specifications as will enable the property owner to know, definitely, just what is required of him in order to comply with the ordinance and thereby safeguard himself. It is quite insufficient to enact the dragnet command that said tanks and appurtenant accessories "must be kept and operated in compliance with law, the building code, and other city ordinances, and in a safe and proper manner, and the same shall not be permitted to become or remain defective, hazardous or dangerous."

Edwards & B. v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

II SPEEDY AND PUBLIC TRIAL BY IMPARTIAL JURY

Time of trial—mandatory discharge for delay. The court, on proper motion therefor, is under mandatory duty to dismiss an indictment which, during the first term of court following its return, was, on motion for change of venue, transferred to another county, and was not there tried during the term pending when the transfer was ordered, nor during the following term—lasting two months—because of the very large assignment of equity cases and matters local to said county.

And this is true tho the defendant during said delay made no demand for a trial.

Davison v Garfield, 221-424; 265 NW 645

Time of trial and continuance—when court loses jurisdiction. An indictment which has neither been continued on defendant's application, nor brought to trial at the first regular term of court following its return, is, on a motion to dismiss, subject to a showing explaining and excusing the delay in trial, but the continuance of such an indictment beyond the third term following the return of the indictment, ipso facto deprives the court, after the expiration of said third term, of all jurisdiction over said indictment except to formally dismiss it.

Davison v Garfield, 219-1258; 257 NW 432; 260 NW 667

Dismissal of indictment—right to speedy trial—waiver. An accused may not have an indictment dismissed because he was not tried at the first regular term succeeding the return of the indictment, when, at said succeeding term, the court in open session offered to summon a jury if any accused was insisting on trial, and defendant's counsel, who was present, made no request for trial at said term.

State v Ellington, 200-636; 204 NW 307

Speedy trial not denied—delay by defendant occasioned by appellate review. In a larceny prosecution, a defendant may not complain that he has been denied a speedy trial, where a procedendo was recalled because of a rehearing in the supreme court, and, after the second procedendo was issued, the trial was delayed by defendant's writ of certiorari.

Delays complained of occurred at the instance of the defendant himself.

State v Ferguson, 226-361; 283 NW 917

Delay by defendant—certiorari to require dismissal denied. One convicted of larceny, who on appeal is granted a reversal, and who, then, each time thereafter as his case is assigned for retrial, delays trial on the merits by dilatory moves such as request for rehearing and change of venue, may not complain that he has been denied a speedy trial as provided by law, and certiorari will not lie to require dismissal of the indictment.

Ferguson v Bechly, 224-1049; 277 NW 755

Accused in state hospital—term for trial after release. An indictment not brought to trial because of accused's confinement in a state hospital as an inebriate is not subject to dismissal because accused was not immediately tried upon his release, when such was impossible because the release came at a time when the term was well under way and the assigned cases completely filled the court's time for that term.

Maher v Brown, 225-341; 280 NW 553

Inebriate in state hospital—delay in trial—no dismissal. Criminal courts have no right to force an inebriate inmate of a state hospital to stand trial on an indictment for driving while intoxicated, and such confinement is good cause for refusing to dismiss for delay in prosecution.

Maher v Brown, 225-341; 280 NW 553

Female jurors—house of ill fame case—no presumption of prejudice. Contention that a fair trial was not obtained on account of female jurors, a majority of which were on the jury, having an inborn prejudice against a woman accused of keeping a house of ill fame, denied because, in absence of a contrary showing, jurors regardless of sex are presumed to follow instructions and determine guilt upon the evidence.

State v Hathaway, 224-478; 276 NW 207

III RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY

Instructions in criminal cases. See under §13876

Jury trial on appeal in civil cases. See under Art I, §9

Waiver of jury trial in civil cases. See under Art I, §9; §§11519, 11531

Insane persons—inquisitions—appeal—special proceeding—no jury. An appeal to the district court from the finding of the county insanity commission is a special proceeding, and, since the legislature did not provide for a jury trial, the issue is triable to the court.

In re Brewer, 224-773; 276 NW 766

Insanity appeal—noncriminal—nonjury—constitutionality. No constitutional rights are violated in trying an appeal from the insanity commission to the court without a jury, since this is not in any way a criminal proceeding.

In re Brewer, 224-773; 276 NW 766

IV RIGHT TO BE CONFRONTED WITH WITNESSES

Confronting witnesses—violation of constitutional right. The constitutional right of an accused in a criminal case to be confronted by the witnesses against him is violated, in a criminal case wherein the value of various items of property is material, by an instruction to the effect that the jurors "have the right to use their own knowledge of values * * * in connection with the testimony as to values which have been given by the different witnesses".

State v Henderson, 217-402; 251 NW 640

Successive offenses — proof by certified copies. Statutes which authorize proof of former convictions of crime to be made by duly authenticated copies of said judgments of convictions are constitutional.

State v Murray, 222-925; 270 NW 355

Testimony of accomplice at former trial. The transcript of the testimony of an accomplice given at a former trial of the defendant in a criminal prosecution, is admissible on a retrial when the accomplice is found by the court to be out of the state and therefore beyond the reach of a subpoena.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

V RIGHT TO COPY OF INDICTMENT

Informing accused of accusation. The constitutional right of an accused "to be informed of the accusation against him"—formerly accorded to him through a technically and elaborately drawn indictment—is now, under the short form indictment act, fully accorded to him through a bill of particulars, to which he is arbitrarily entitled.

State v Engler, 217-138; 251 NW 88

Due process of law—short form indictment valid. A short form indictment is valid and the statute providing therefor is constitutional.

State v Keturokis, 224-491; 276 NW 600

VI RIGHT TO COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES

Accomplice out of state—testimony at former trial used. The transcript of the testimony of an accomplice given at a former trial of the defendant in a criminal prosecution, is admissible on a retrial when the accomplice is found by the court to be out of the state and therefore beyond the reach of a subpoena.

State v Clay, 222-1142; 271 NW 212

VII RIGHT TO ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL

Neglect to procure counsel—no showing of prejudice. When the counsel for accused had withdrawn after a trial in which the jury disagreed, and the accused failed to secure new counsel until three days before retrial altho she had two months to do so, and the court denied her motion for continuance, on appeal she could not complain of the ruling in the absence of showing an injury resulting from the ruling.

State v Hathaway, 224-478; 276 NW 207

VIII WAIVER OF RIGHTS IN GENERAL

Bovine eradication—hearing and notice unnecessary. A statute for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis which provides (1) for the filing with the board of supervisors of a petition of "51 percent of the owners of breeding cattle within the county" as a basis for the designation of the county as a "county testing unit", and (2) for the forwarding by the board of said petition to the commission of animal health for action thereon, is not unconstitutional because it wholly fails to provide for any hearing and notice thereof before the board on the sufficiency of the said petition, when the statute demonstrates that no one can be affected except those who have signed the petition.

Peeverill v Board, 201-1050; 205 NW 543

When indictment necessary. SEC. 11.

I NONINDICTABLE OFFENSES: TRIALS IN INFERIOR COURTS

Indictment for nonindictable offense. A prosecution may not be maintained under an indictment which simply charges a nonindictable offense, and such contention may be presented for the first time on appeal.

State v Wyatt, 207-319; 222 NW 866

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

Nonindictable misdemeanor. A nonindictable misdemeanor may be prosecuted under an information filed and sworn to by a private individual.

State v Porter, 206-1247; 220 NW 100

I NONINDICTABLE OFFENSES: TRIALS IN INFERIOR COURTS—concluded

False check—amount of check determines grade of offense—jurisdiction. In a prosecution for false uttering of a bank check, it is the amount of the check that determines the grade of the offense and not the amount received, provided something of value is received for it. Where a check was $20 or more, but only $2 in cash was received, the district court was in error in directing a verdict for defendant on the ground that the offense should be prosecuted in the justice of peace court.

State v Dillard, 225-915; 281 NW 842

II INDICTMENTS

Federal amendments—applicability. Principle reaffirmed that the fifth amendment to the federal constitution, relating to criminal procedure, has no application to state courts and their proceedings.

State v Hawks, 213-698; 239 NW 553

Rape—amending indictment—form only—validity. In a prosecution for rape, adding the words “a female, by force and against her will” as an amendment to an already valid indictment, is an amendment affecting not substance but form only, and being merely surplusage, is not prejudicial and not error.

State v Keturokis, 224-491; 276 NW 600

III RIGHT OF APPEAL FROM INFERIOR COURTS

Discontinuance—death of defendant—effect. The death of a defendant in a criminal prosecution, even after trial, conviction, judgment and appeal, but before the final determination of the latter proceeding, works a complete abatement of the proceeding ab initio.

State v Kriechbaum, 219-457; 258 NW 110; 96 ALR 1317

- IV RIGHT TO BAIL

I LEGAL JEOPARDY

False pretense and conspiracy. A conviction on an indictment charging the obtaining, by an officer of a fraternal beneficiary society, of funds of the society, by means of false and fraudulent representations, is not a bar to an indictment for conspiracy based on the identical acts charged in the former indictment—the two charges not being sustainable by the same evidence.

State v Blackledge, 216-199; 243 NW 534

Former jeopardy—necessary identification of offense. Instructions that a defendant may be found guilty of maintaining a liquor nuisance if he committed the offense within three years prior to the return of the indictment will not be deemed to put the defendant on trial for an alleged liquor offense on which the defendant was acquitted within said three years when the specific nature of the latter offense is not made to appear.

State v Kelly, 217-1305; 253 NW 49

Former jeopardy—proof of several supporting transactions—election—effect. When, upon the trial of a public officer for embezzlement charged in one count and in a lump sum, the state supports the charge by evidence of several different transactions, any one of which was sufficient to support the charge, and, on order of the court, elects to rely on one certain transaction, the defendant, after being convicted and after being granted a new trial, may not successfully contend that he has been put in jeopardy on all the transactions except the transaction on which the state elected to rely on the first trial, it appearing that the nonelected transactions were allowed to remain in the record as evidentiary matter bearing on the issue of fraudulent intent.

State v Huff, 217-41; 250 NW 581

Former jeopardy—state’s appeal from directed verdict—defendant unaffected by reversal. Where the state appeals from a ruling sustaining motion for directed verdict for defendant in a criminal case, defendant will not be affected by reversal on appeal.

State v Dillard, 225-915; 281 NW 842

II OFFENSES AGAINST TWO JURISDICTIONS

Conviction of nonindictable offense bar to indictable offense embraced in former. The conviction of an accused in the court of a justice of the peace of the nonindictable offense of transporting intoxicating liquors without properly labeling the same (§1936, C., '27), is a bar to a subsequent prosecution based on the same transaction for the indictable offense of transporting intoxicating liquors (§1945-a1 et seq., C., '27), the latter offense being necessarily embraced in the former.

Statutory guarantee against dual jeopardy. See under §13807

Acquittal of crime—nonconclusive as to payment in civil action. Where a contract for bailment of cattle provided for their purchase at a stipulated price and also provided for their surrender on demand if not paid for, and where defendant had been acquitted of a forgery charge based on a forged “Paid” stamp giving the appearance the contract price had been paid, his acquittal, when interposed in a replevin action for the cattle, was not res judicata on the issue of payment and did not bar the replevin action.

Bates v Carter, 225-893; 281 NW 727

Acquittal of larceny—felonious receiving. An acquittal under an indictment charging larceny from a building in the nighttime constitutes no bar to a subsequent indictment charging the felonious receiving of the stolen property.

State v Smith, 219-168; 256 NW 651

Acquittal as bar to civil action—penalties—forfeitures. The general rule is that a defendant's acquittal in a criminal prosecution is neither a bar to a civil action against him, nor evidence in such action of his innocence; but, when the subsequent action, altho civil in form, is quasi-criminal in nature, as to recovering penalties or declaring forfeitures, the second action may be barred by the former.

Bates v Carter, 225-893; 281 NW 727

Former jeopardy—manslaughter by negligent act. The unintentional killing, by one act of negligence, of two or more persons cannot constitute more than one manslaughter. It follows that an acquittal under an indictment charging manslaughter in the killing of one deceased is a bar to a further prosecution for manslaughter for the killing of another deceased.

State v Wheelock, 216-1428; 250 NW 617

Criminal prosecution and contempt. A criminal prosecution for a violation of the intoxicating liquor statutes is not a bar to contempt proceedings based on the same act.

Touche v Bonner, 201-466; 205 NW 751

Criminal prosecution and injunction. A verdict of "not guilty" under an indictment charging the keeping of an intoxicating liquor nuisance on certain property is no bar to an action to enjoin the same defendant from maintaining a liquor nuisance on the same property, and based on the same transaction on which the indictment was based.

State v Osborne, 207-636; 223 NW 363

Different offenses in same act. An acquittal on an indictment which charges the maintenance of an intoxicating liquor nuisance does not constitute a bar to an indictment which charges the unlawful possession of such liquors, even tho the same liquors may appear as evidence in both cases.

State v Boever, 203-86; 210 NW 571

Conviction for assault and battery—effect on higher offense. A conviction in municipal court for assault and battery constitutes no bar to a subsequent prosecution under an indictment charging assault and battery, with intent to commit great bodily injury, based on the same act.

State v Smith, 217-825; 253 NW 130

Embezzlements by agent and bailee. An acquittal on an indictment which charges the defendant, as agent, with the embezzlement of the proceeds of grain delivered to him (§13031, C., '24) is no bar to an indictment which charges the defendant, as bailee, with the embezzlement of the same grain. (§13030, C., '24.)

State v Folger, 204-1296; 210 NW 580

Subsequent overlapping charge. When the state bases an indictment for nuisance on a series of acts occurring during a specified period of time, it thereby segregates such acts from all subsequent acts, and irrevocably identifies and stamps said acts as one complete offense; and if it suffers an acquittal, it may not thereafter maintain an indictment based (1) on said segregated acts and (2) on other acts subsequent thereto; and the exclusion of said segregated acts on the trial of the last indictment will not avoid the bar resulting from the first acquittal.

State v Reinhard, 202-168; 209 NW 419

Transporting intoxicating liquors. The conviction of an accused in the court of a justice of the peace of the nonindictable offense of transporting intoxicating liquors without properly labeling the same (§1936, C., '27), is a bar to a subsequent prosecution based on the same transaction for the indictable offense of transporting intoxicating liquors (§1945-a1 et seq., C., '27 [§1945.1 et seq., C., '39]) the latter offense being necessarily embraced in the former.

State v Purdin, 206-1058; 221 NW 562

IV RIGHT TO BAIL

No annotations in this volume

Habeas corpus. SEC. 13.

Defectively drawn indictment. The writ of habeas corpus will not lie to test the legality of imprisonment under an indictment or trial information of which the court has jurisdiction, even tho such indictment or information is defectively drawn.

Conkling v Hollowell, 203-1374; 214 NW 717

Appeal excludes habeas corpus. Habeas corpus will not lie to test the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain a judgment of conviction by a justice of the peace under an information which actually charges an offense the punishment for which does not exceed either a fine of $100 or imprisonment for 30 days.

Hallway v Byers, 205-936; 218 NW 905

Failure to determine degree of murder. A judgment of life imprisonment for murder rendered by the district court under a proper charge and on a plea of guilty of such crime, is not rendered void by the failure of the court, before imposing such judgment, to call witnesses and determine the degree of said crime, and enter said determination on the record. It follows that such failure, tho it be conceded to be error and reversible on appeal, furnishes no ground for release under a writ of habeas corpus.

Bail—punishments. SEC. 17.

Cruel and unusual punishment. An accused who has been fined $100 and ordered imprisoned in the county jail for 60 days may not question the constitutionality of the statute under which he was convicted, on the ground that the statute imposed cruel and unusual punishment.

State v Dowling, 204-977; 216 NW 271

Cruel and inhuman punishment. Sentence of six months at hard labor for maintaining liquor nuisance held not such "cruel and inhuman punishment" as to violate Amendment 8 of the United States Constitution, when the maximum punishment for the offense was one year at hard labor.

State v Gasparia, (NOR); 214 NW 550

Imprisonment for contempt as cruel and unusual punishment. Statutes providing for commitment to jail for contempt, upon default in payment of support money awarded in bastardy proceedings, without citation, charge, or hearing and without allowing defendant an opportunity to purge himself of any alleged contempt, contravene the constitutional prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment.

State v Devore, 225-815; 281 NW 740; 118 ALR 1104

Drastic and invalidating penalties. Drastic penalties may, in view of the nature of the acts punished, and in view of the circumstances attending the commission of such acts, nullify an entire ordinance. So held where each day's continuance of each of various acts was declared a separate offense and punished by fine or imprisonment.

Edwards & B. v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Excessive fines. A fine of $1,000 and, in default of payment, commitment to the county jail for ten months for the second offense of violating an injunction against the sale of intoxicating liquors is not constitutionally excessive.

Touche v Bonner, 201-466; 205 NW 751

Excessive fines. A fine of $1,000 on the operator of an automobile for driving the same on the highway while intoxicated is not a "cruel and unusual punishment."

State v Rayburn, 213-396; 238 NW 908

Indeterminate sentence as excessive. The appellate court may not say that an indeterminate sentence is excessive when the record reveals justification for a penitentiary sentence.

State v Overbay, 201-758; 206 NW 634

Eminent domain. SEC. 18.

- I NATURE OF POWER OF EMINENT DOMAIN
- II WHAT IS A PUBLIC PURPOSE
- III COMPENSATION AND SECURITY
- IV METHOD OF ASSESSING DAMAGE
- V EXTENT OF RIGHT ACQUIRED
- VI ACTS WHICH DO NOT CONSTITUTE TAKING OF PROPERTY BY EMINENT DOMAIN

I NATURE OF POWER OF EMINENT DOMAIN

Municipal light and power lines—extra-territorial extension—constitutional taxation.

Premise No. 1. The state may, inter alia, constitutionally authorize its governmental agencies to tax for any purpose which justifies the exercise of the power of eminent domain.

Premise No. 2. The power of eminent domain may be exercised only for public purposes.

Premise No. 3. The construction, operation, renewal and extension of electric light and power plants are for public purposes.

Premise No. 4. The power of eminent domain has, by statute, been conferred on cities and towns for all the purposes last above named.

Conclusion: Sections 6142, and 8310, C., '31, are constitutional insofar as they authorize cities and towns to levy taxes for extending, beyond their corporate limits, the transmission lines of their municipally owned electric light and power plants.

Carroll v Cedar Falls, 221-277; 261 NW 652

II WHAT IS A PUBLIC PURPOSE

Construction of wharf—paramount right of state. The construction by the state of a wharf below high-water mark on a navigable lake (to the bed of which the state has title), in aid of navigation, and without compensation to the riparian owner, is but the exercise of a right and the execution of a trust which is paramount to any right of ingress and egress of said riparian owner.

Peck v Const. Co., 216-519; 245 NW 131; 89 ALR 1132

Materially destroying access to property. A substantial interference by a city with access to property by means of a public street constitutes a taking of private property for public use, even tho no part of the physical property of the property owner is taken, and the city must respond in damages for such taking.

Nalon v City, 216-1041; 250 NW 166

Public property as private property. The public property of the state may, under proper circumstances, constitute private property within the meaning of the federal constitution prohibiting the taking of private property for public use without just compensation; and it does not matter that the taking is by one exclusively engaged in interstate commerce.

State v Pipe Line, 216-436; 249 NW 366

Railway right of way for private business site. The board of railroad commissioners has no constitutional power to order a railway company to furnish a private party with a site on its right of way, and to fix the rental for such site, in order to enable such party to erect and maintain on such site a coal shed in which he may store his coal and from which he may sell his coal for private gain, §8169, C., '24, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Ferguson v Railway, 202-508; 210 NW 604; 54 ALR 1

III COMPENSATION AND SECURITY

Drainage. For annotations on compensation and security in drainage improvements, see under Amendment of 1908, p. 69 of Vol. I; also under §7451, Vol. I

Discussion. See 12 ILR 286—Attorney fees as just compensation

Compensation — measure of. The recoverable measure of damages to a farm, consequent on the condemnation of a highway right of way therethrough, is the difference in value of the farm as a whole before condemnation and the value immediately thereafter. It follows that the trial court on appeal cannot limit the jury solely to a consideration of the items of damages specifically alleged by the landowner in the petition filed under §7841-c1, C., '35 [§7841.1, C., '39].

Maxwell v Highway Com., 223-159; 271 NW 883; 118 ALR 862

Measure of damages — general rules — disturbance of peace and quiet as element. In condemnation proceeding to acquire ground for highway purposes where trees taken from plaintiff were left standing along highway, testimony showing that peace and quiet of plaintiff's home was disturbed by passers-by who stopped under trees, was not incompetent on the ground that it was not a proper element of damage, it being a well-settled rule that the landowner may show all detrimental elements affecting value and that he may also show the condition the property would be in after the condemned strip had been appropriated and used for the purposes for which it was taken.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Measure of damages—advantage not considered. In condemnation proceeding where land was taken for highway purposes, under the principle that advantage resulting from improvement of property taken by condemnation may not be taken into consideration in determining amount of plaintiff's damage, the defendant had no right to plead and prove matters relating to the manner of construction of the improvement which would tend to ameliorate damages.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Evidence—driving stock across highway. In condemnation proceeding to acquire ground to widen highway which divided plaintiff's farm, a hypothetical question asked of one witness as to whether the additional trouble experienced by plaintiff in driving his stock across highway, since it had been widened, would affect the values of the farm—altho being a question of doubtful propriety—was related to a matter so simple and self-evident that the opinion of the witness could add no force or prejudicial effect thereto.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Verdict not excessive for ground and ornamental trees. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire a strip of ground for highway purposes 17 feet wide on each side of an existing highway which divided an 80 acre farm, where the land appropriated comprised 1.2 acres and included 19 trees in front of plaintiff's home, some of them being very large, hardwood, slow growing, ornamental trees, planted in connection with carefully planned landscaping, held, verdict of $2,000 was not excessive.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Inadequate or excessive verdicts—control power of court. The verdict of a common-law jury in eminent domain proceedings is subject to the same review by the court for inadequacy or excessiveness as other verdicts in other proceedings. Record in highway condemnation proceedings reviewed, and held verdict so grossly excessive as to evidence passion and prejudice.

Campbell v Highway Com., 222-544; 269 NW 20

Protection of right. Injunction will lie to enjoin the construction of a dam and the consequent overflow of private property for the public use until the damages are paid; and this is true even tho the taker is solvent.

Scott v Price Bros. Co., 207-191; 217 NW 75

IV METHOD OF ASSESSING DAMAGE

Assessment of damage—jury question. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire ground for highway purposes, the question of damages to be assessed for the land appropriated is peculiarly one for the jury.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Disputed fact questions as to value—when jury findings control. In a condemnation proceeding to acquire ground for highway purposes, the right of the jury to decide disputed fact questions as to value will not be interfered with by the supreme court, if there is evidence upon which the jury could reach the verdict it did reach.

Stoner v Highway Com., 227-115; 287 NW 269

Instructions in re benefits. In eminent domain proceedings, an instruction that the compensation allowed should not leave the landowner "poorer or worse off or better off" because of the taking, is not subject to the vice of leading the jury to understand that in computing compensation, benefits accruing to the landowner because of the taking should be deducted, when the jury is repeatedly and explicitly told elsewhere in the instructions that they should not consider benefits.

Witt v State, 223-156; 272 NW 419

Drains—trespass not taking. A landowner may not say that his land was taken for public use because in cleaning out a public ditch as a repair thereof, the contractor wrongfully distributed the dirt beyond the right of way line of the ditch as originally constructed.

Payne v Drain. Dist., 223-634; 272 NW 618

V EXTENT OF RIGHT ACQUIRED

Compensation—protection of right by injunction until damages paid. Injunction will lie to enjoin the construction of a dam and the consequent taking by overflow of private property for the public use until the damages are paid; and this is true even tho the taker is solvent.

Scott v Price Bros. Co., 207-191; 217 NW 75

VI ACTS WHICH DO NOT CONSTITUTE TAKING OF PROPERTY BY EMINENT DOMAIN

"Taking" defined. The enlargement of the boundaries of a municipality does not constitute a "taking" of private property for a public use, in a constitutional sense.

Wertz v City, 201-947; 208 NW 511

VII EMINENT DOMAIN AND TAXATION

No annotations in this volume

Imprisonment for debt. SEC. 19.

Imprisonment for criminal costs. See under §13984

Imprisonment for contempt. A defendant who is decreed to pay alimony and who willfully secretes his property for the purpose of avoiding compliance with said order, may be imprisoned as for a contempt of court, an award of alimony not being a "debt" in the sense of the constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for "debt".

Mason v Dist. Court, 209-774; 229 NW 168
Roberts v Fuller, 210-956; 229 NW 163
Roach v Oliver, 215-800; 244 NW 899

Imprisonment for costs. Imprisonment for nonpayment of costs in contempt proceedings is unauthorized.

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 552

Jail sentence as imprisonment for debt—unconstitutional. Proceeding to establish paternity and to provide support money, being a civil proceeding, the statutory punishment by commitment to jail for nonpayment contravenes the constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for debt.

Right of assemblage—petition. SEC. 20.

Injunction violation by labor union officials. There was no denial of the right of freedom of speech in holding officers of a trade union in contempt of court for violating an injunction, when they counseled, aided, abetted, and assisted in the violation of the injunction.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Injunction against labor union—no denial of freedom of speech and assembly. An injunction against officers of a trade union was not void on its face as a denial of the right of freedom of speech and assembly because it prohibited unlawful interference with a company's business, mass picketing, intimidation and coercion, and going upon the company's premises without consent.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Right of petition—construction. The constitutional right of the people to petition their legislature for a redress of grievances is no impediment in the way of a board of supervisors, acting for a public drainage district, in entering into a proper and unobjectionable contract with attorneys to secure legislation which will carry out a moral obligation on the part of the state.

Kemble v Weaver, 200-1333; 206 NW 83

ANALYSIS

- I EX POST FACTO LAWS
- II RETROACTIVE LAWS IN GENERAL
- III LEGALIZING ACTS AS RETROACTIVE LAWS
- IV IMPAIRMENT OF CONTRACTS
- V IMPAIRMENT OF VESTED RIGHTS

I EX POST FACTO LAWS

Aggravated punishment. A statute is not ex post facto because it attaches to a crime an increased punishment because of former convictions, even tho such former convictions were had prior to the enactment of the statute.

State v Norris, 203-327; 210 NW 922

Increasing punishment. A statute which increases the punishment for an existing offense is not applicable to a violation occurring prior to the enactment of the punishment-increasing act.

State v Marx, 200-884; 205 NW 518

Requisites and sufficiency — applicability of short form act. The sufficiency of the charging part of an indictment will be determined by the short form of indictment act, tho said act was enacted after the return of the indictment but before the sufficiency thereof was formally questioned; said act not being an ex post facto act.

State v Johnson, 212-1197; 237 NW 522

Redemption from tax sale — law governing. The time in which redemption may be made from tax sale is absolutely governed by the law in force at the time of the sale. It follows that a legislative amendment shortening the redemption period cannot apply to pre-existing sales.

Lockie v Hammerstrom, 222-451; 269 NW 507

II RETROACTIVE LAWS IN GENERAL

Foreclosure—continuance under emergency act. The emergency act for the continuance of mortgage foreclosure proceedings (45 GA, ch 182) was not designed to grant a continuance to a mortgagor of nonhomestead property who is so hopelessly insolvent that a continuance would, manifestly, work no benefit to him but would work material harm to the mortgagee.

Reed v Snow, 218-1165; 254 NW 800

Judicial functions outside legislative powers. A statute which provided that service in any action could be made on a nonresident criminal defendant while he was within the state, was unconstitutional in providing that the statute legalized such service where it had been made in cases pending, as after the commencement of an action, the question of determining jurisdiction is a judicial function which the legislature is without power to control.

Frink v Clark, 226-1012; 285 NW 681

Mechanics' liens. Chapter 452, C., '24, relative to labor and material on public improvements has no retroactive effect—applies only to claims arising after it took effect, to wit, October 28, 1924.

Francesconi v School Dist., 204-307; 214 NW 882

Shortening limitation on action—constitutional condition. Principle reaffirmed that the legislature may constitutionally shorten the time within which an existing cause of action may be barred if a reasonable time is given for the commencement of an action before the bar takes effect.

Johnson v Leese, 223-480; 273 NW 111

III LEGALIZING ACTS AS RETROACTIVE LAWS

Legalizing acts as special legislation. See under Art III, §30

Curative and legalizing acts. Principle recognized that the legislature may validate that which the judiciary has invalidated, especially in matters of public right.

Peverill v Board, 201-1050; 205 NW 543

Legalization of invalid tax. The legislature may validly legalize a levy of taxes made under a supposedly legal statute but which was invalid because its title was constitutionally insufficient. (See also Const., Art. III, §30 (VI))

Chi. RI Ry. v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

Legalization of illegal acts. When an act is done in a certain manner and under certain conditions, but in violation of an existing statute, the legislature may constitutionally validate the act, when it might constitutionally have originally ordered the act done in the manner and under the conditions in which it was done.

Peverill v Board, 201-1050; 205 NW 543

Legalizing tax levy after invalidating ruling by court. A legislative act which legalizes a tax levy after the appellate court has ruled (but before entry of judgment) that the taxpayer is entitled to a refund of the tax paid because the tax levy was void owing to the absence of an authorizing statute, neither disturbs any vested interest of the taxpayer, nor constitutes an unconstitutional interference with the judiciary.

Chi. RI Ry. v Streepy, 211-1334; 236 NW 24

III LEGALIZING ACTS AS RETROACTIVE LAWS—concluded

Permissible legalization. The legislature may validly legalize the act of the secretary of agriculture in enrolling a county under the accredited area plan for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis when the illegality of such enrollment is predicated on the doubt whether the petitions as a basis for such action contained the statutory number of signatures.

Peverill v Board, 208-94; 222 NW 535

Retroactive laws. The legalization of a tax levy made by a county under an optional and supposedly legal statute, but which was in fact originally invalid because of a fatal defect in the title, does not constitute a levying by the general assembly of a retroactive tax on the county.

Chi. RI Ry. v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

Reducing time in which to appeal. The time allowed for an appeal cannot be reduced by legislative enactment after judgment.

Davis v Robinson, 200-840; 205 NW 520
Insell v McDaniels, 201-533; 207 NW 533

IV IMPAIRMENT OF CONTRACTS

Impairment—essential nature of clause. Principle recognized that the constitutional provision relative to impairment of contracts is not an absolute one and is not to be read with literal exactness like a mathematical formula.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Existing statutes. An insurance company may not complain that its contracts are impaired by an unrepealed statute which was enacted prior to its incorporation and which provides that actions on assessments shall be brought in the county in which the defendant resides.

Midwest Ins. v DeHoet, 208-49; 222 NW 548

Valid statutes read into contracts. Principle affirmed that contracts are conclusively presumed to have been entered into in view of the valid statutes then existing and controlling the subject matter.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Judgment not contract. A judgment is not a contract in the ordinary sense of said latter term.

Berg v Berg, 221-326; 264 NW 821

Repeal of statute. A party may not complain that a statute impairs his contract rights when the statute in question is repealed before his complaint is heard.

Peverill v Board, 208-94; 222 NW 535

Change in venue of action. A legislative change in the venue of an action may be validly applied to an existing contract.

Grain Belt Ins. v Gentry, 208-21; 222 NW 855

Assessment against stockholder—additional remedy to enforce. A statutory assessment against a holder of bank stock in order to restore the impaired capital of the bank creates a personal liability on the part of the stockholder, and the statutory remedy for enforcing such personal liability by a sale of the stockholder's stock may, after the stockholder acquires his stock, be constitutionally supplemented by an additional statutory remedy, to wit, an action at law to recover of the stockholder the balance due on said assessment after selling said stock. The granting of such additional remedy does not impair the stockholder's contract in a constitutional sense.

Woodbine Bk. v Shriver, 212-196; 236 NW 10

Certificate of deposit—permissible impairment. A bank depositor may not successfully claim that his certificate of deposit was unconstitutionally impaired by a later, state-approved, good-faith bank reorganization (in which he did not join) under which all claimants (claims over $10) were given equal but less favorable terms of payment than their contracts originally contemplated, when, at the time of his deposit, the statute law contemplated and substantially provided for such reorganization and change in terms of payment; and if the actual reorganization was effected under later statutes amplifying the said former ones, the answer is that he was dealing with a quasi-public corporation, and that his contract of deposit must reasonably yield to the police power in the interest of the public generally, especially in an emergency resulting from a great financial depression.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Repeal of preferential deposit law. The repeal of a statute which gives the state a preferential right, as a depositor of state funds, to be first paid in full in those cases only where the bank is placed in the hands of a receiver, does not impair the contract obligation of an existing surety on a bond conditioned, in effect, to pay the state all loss on such deposit whether the bank was or was not placed in the hands of a receiver.

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

Income tax—interest on tax-exempt securities. Interest on tax-exempt municipal securities is not exempt from state income tax, tho the securities themselves are, by statute, exempt from general property tax. The statutory declaration that said securities "shall not be taxed" has reference solely to general property tax, and not to an excise tax—an income tax—on the interest collected on such securities.

Hale v Board, 223-321; 271 NW 168; 302 US 95

Reducing statute of limitation on judgments. A legislative act which reduces the existing statutory period of time in which existing judgments may be enforced, yet accords to the holders of such judgments a reasonable time in which to enforce such judgments before the reduced time becomes an absolute bar, is not violative of the federal constitutional prohibition of the impairment of contracts by legislation.

Berg v Berg, 221-326; 264 NW 821

Foreclosure—economic conditions and fluctuations in values. Equity cannot refuse to foreclose a mortgage because of a depressed economic condition existing throughout the country, nor, in foreclosing, may it assume to adjust the judgment to the fluctuating value of the legal tender as declared by the federal government.

Federal Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

Continuance under financial emergency. The legislative power of the state may, for the purpose of ameliorating an existing, public, financial emergency, constitutionally grant to a mortgagor, on equitable conditions, the right, in an action to foreclose the mortgage, to a continuance which is very materially in excess of that ordinarily permitted or sanctioned by law. (For fundamental reason see Des Moines Bank v Nordholm, 217 Iowa 1319.)

Craig v Waggoner, 218-876; 256 NW 285

Extending redemption period. Neither the federal nor state constitutional prohibitions against (a) the impairment of the obligations of contracts, or (b) the deprivation of vested property rights without due process of law, is violated by a statute (1) which is enacted during, and for the purpose of ameliorating, an existing public financial emergency, (2) which grants to the owner of real estate during the existence of said emergency the right to possession and a time, very materially in excess of that otherwise granted by law, in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale—even tho the sale precedes the passage of the emergency act—and (3) which sequesters the rents during said extended time and fairly and reasonably applies them to the protection of the mortgagee and his security. (45 GA, ch 179.)

Reason: Contract rights and vested interests must reasonably yield to the paramount right of the state, through the reservoir of its reserved police power, to protect, by appropriate legislation, its sovereignty, its government, its people and their general welfare, against exigencies arising out of a great emergency.

Tusha v Eberhart, 218-1065; 256 NW 740

Connecticut Ins. v Clingan, 218-1213; 257 NW 213

Moratorium act—unauthorized continuance. The mortgage moratorium act does not, and constitutionally could not, authorize a continuance thereunder to a mortgagor when the record affirmatively shows (1) that the mortgaged land is of a value substantially less than the mortgage debt, and (2) that, irrespective of the foregoing fact, the mortgagor-owner is in such financial condition as to exclude any possible redemption by him.

John Hancock Ins. v Schlosser, 222-447; 269 NW 485

Moratorium acts of 47th GA—emergency must be temporary—judicial notice. An emergency, in order to justify legislation in contravention of the constitution on the theory of an exercise of the reserve police power, must be temporary or it cannot be called an emergency, but becomes an established status. In determining this question, the supreme court may take judicial notice of conditions existing at the time of enactment and whether or not they constitute an emergency.

Metropolitan v McDonald, 225-1075; 283 NW 445

Police power—mortgage continuance—moratorium acts of 47th GA—unconstitutionality. Moratorium acts of the 47th GA extending foreclosure of mortgages, and extending time in which to redeem, are unconstitutional as an impairment of the obligation of contract, when such acts are not based on an actual existing emergency calling for an exercise of the reserve police power of the state.

John Hancock Ins. v Egglund, 225-1073; 283 NW 444

Metropolitan v McDonald, 225-1075; 283 NW 445

V IMPAIRMENT OF VESTED RIGHTS

Abolition of common law. The legislature may, against a surety on a bond to secure state deposits in a bank, constitutionally abolish any preferential right in the state at common law to demand payment of its deposits in full—the existence of such right being assumed.

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

Attorney—right to practice mere privilege. The right to practice law is not a constitutional right—not a vested right—but a mere privilege.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Political rights—nonviolation. A statute which requires a favorable vote equal to 60 percent of all the votes cast for and against a proposal to issue bonds in order to authorize them is not violative of the principle that political power is inherent in the people.

Waugh v Shirer, 216-468; 249 NW 246

continued

Noninjured complainant. A party may not question the constitutionality of a statute when he fails to show that he has been or will be injured by the statute. In other words, he may not borrow an objection from one who could complain, but does not complain. So held where a noninjured party predicated unconstitutionality upon the statute which reduced the public compensation for animals slaughtered by the state in the eradication of bovine tuberculosis.

Peverill v Board, 201-1050; 205 NW 543

Vested rights—not acquirable in remedy. Principle reasserted that, ordinarily, no one acquires, in a statutory remedy for the collection of a debt, such vested interest as can be properly denominated "property".

Berg v Berg, 221-326; 264 NW 821

Nonvested right in decree affecting public right. A plaintiff who (while furnishing electric light and power to a municipality and to the inhabitants thereof) obtains a judicial decree which adjudges invalid (for a statutory defect) certain proceedings for the erection by the municipality of an electric light and power plant, acquires by said decree no such right as will prevent the general assembly from constitutionally legalizing said proceeding, it appearing that when the legalizing act was enacted said plaintiff had, by final judicial decree, been wholly ousted, as a public utility, from said municipality.

Iowa E. L. & P. Co. v Grand Junction, 221-441; 264 NW 84

Decree—unauthorized modification. A decree in divorce proceedings to the effect that the wife should, until a named date, have the possession of certain property belonging to the husband, and that the husband, in the meantime, should pay off an existing mortgage and accruing taxes on the property, works a vested interest in the husband when he complies with the decree—an interest which the court has no jurisdiction to disturb by a subsequent order conferring the property absolutely on the wife.

Guisinger v Guisinger, 201-409; 205 NW 752

Interest on public deposits—power to divert. The general assembly has ample authority to divert from the county general fund to the state sinking fund for public deposits interest accruing on deposits of public funds in the hands of the county treasurer.

Scott Co. v Johnson, 209-213; 222 NW 378

See State v Bartlett, 207-208; 222 NW 529

See Boyd v Johnson, 212-1201; 238 NW 61

Repeal of preferential deposit law. A statute which gives to the state, when it has public funds on deposit in a bank, the preferential right to be paid in full if the bank passes into the hands of a receiver does not confer on a surety on a bond to secure said deposit any such vested right to be subrogated to the said right of the state as will constitutionally prevent the legislature from repealing the statute.

Andrew v U. S. Bank, 205-883; 213 NW 531
Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

Priority in payment of deposits. The general assembly has constitutional power by legislative act to deprive a county or municipal corporation of an existing right of preference in a deposit of money belonging to the county in an insolvent bank.

Kuhl v Farmers Bank, 203-71; 212 NW 337

Priority in payment of deposits. A municipal corporation which, at the time an insolvent bank is placed under receivership, is entitled, under a statute as construed by the supreme court, to a priority in the payment of its municipal deposit, is not deprived of such priority by a subsequently enacted statute which denies such priority.

Murray v Bank, 202-281; 208 NW 212

Moratorium act—unallowable apportionment of rent. When the security for a debt is a combination (1) of a mortgage on the land, and (2) of a chattel mortgage on the rents and crops of the said land, the court, on granting under the moratorium act a continuation of foreclosure proceedings, has no authority under said act (nor could it constitutionally be given such authority) to apportion or set off to the mortgagor any portion of said rents.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

Right to rents in mortgage foreclosure. The statutory provision, which provides, in substance, that a pledge in a mortgage of the rents of the land shall carry the same priority of right over said rents as the mortgage carries over the land itself, cannot constitutionally apply to a mortgagee who, prior to the enactment of the statute, had fully acquired priority of right to the rents under the law then prevailing, to wit, the law which granted priority to the mortgagee who first filed petition for foreclosure and first prayed for a receiver.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Smith, 219-658; 259 NW 192

Curtailing right of mortgagee. Whether a mortgagee of unimproved land may constitutionally be deprived of a lien on future-erected and permanent improvements on the land, quaere.

Crawford-Fayram Co. v Mann, 203-748; 211 NW 225

Municipal bonds—accelerating maturity. The holder of a municipal bond which is, in effect, payable "on or before" a specified date, is deprived of no vested right by the enactment of a statute subsequent to the issuance of the bond, under which enactment the city is enabled to exercise its option to accelerate the date of payment.

ANALYSIS

- I THE TRIPARTITE SYSTEM
- II DELEGATION AND USURPATION OF LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY
- III DELEGATION AND USURPATION OF EXECUTIVE AUTHORITY
- IV DELEGATION AND USURPATION OF JUDICIAL AUTHORITY

I THE TRIPARTITE SYSTEM

Legislature—sole power to legislate. The sole power of making laws resides in the legislative branch of government.

State v Woitha, 227-1; 287 NW 99

Legislature's power—felony for third conviction—liquor violation. Legislature possesses full authority to enact statute making third and subsequent offense of violating liquor law a felony.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 282 NW 728

Statutes—duty of court to make effective. It is the duty of the court in construing statutes to seek the object and purpose of the law and then give it force and effect if not contrary to established legal precedents.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Social welfare board. Social welfare board's determination of eligibility for old-age assistance is administrative duty. Judicial review is limited.

Schneberger v Board, 228- ; 291 NW 859

II DELEGATION AND USURPATION OF LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY

Delegation of legislative powers. See under Art III, §1 (second)

Power to declare legislative acts unconstitutional. See under Art XII, §1

Discussion. See 17 ILR 239—Delegation to the people

Legislative authority—delegation. The statutory direction that the secretary of agriculture shall, in the administration of the bovine tuberculosis act, certify to the county auditor the facts which render unnecessary a tax levy in the county, constitutes no delegation to an individual of discretionary legislative power.

Fevold v Board, 202-1019; 210 NW 139

Nondelegation of authority. The statutory provision (§2930, C., '31) which requires the board of supervisors, under named conditions, to appropriate from the county general fund money to, and in aid of, a farm bureau organization, cannot be deemed a delegation to the said organization of the power to levy a tax on the public.

II DELEGATION AND USURPATION OF LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY—concluded

Blume v Crawford Co., 217-545; 250 NW 733

Delegation of powers—liberal interpretation. The constitutional prohibition against delegating legislative powers to administrative boards is given a liberal interpretation in favor of constitutionality of legislation.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Delegation of legislative power. The legislature has no constitutional right to delegate to an administrative department, e. g., the conservation commission, the strictly and exclusively legislative power to formulate a policy and make regulations restricting angling. It may, however, make such declaration of policy, definitely describing the subject, the field, and the character of regulations intended to be imposed and leave to the department the manner in which that policy shall apply.

See Goodlove v Logan, 217-98; 251 NW 39

Delegation of powers by legislature—Iowa securities act. Because the Iowa securities act covers such a broad field of transactions that it cannot cover each particular case in detail, it was proper for the legislature to delegate to an officer certain discretionary powers in administering the statute and in making such rules as were necessary to carry out the purposes of the law within the general policy set forth by the legislature.

Independence Fund v Miller, 226-1101; 285 NW 629

Delegating powers to nonlegislative board. While the legislature may not delegate its power to make laws, yet when it had declared a policy which is definite in describing the subject to which it relates and the character of the regulation intended to be imposed, it may delegate to nonlegislative board the power to make rules and regulations for effectuating such policy.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Sales tax—shoe repairmen as consumers—delegation of power. Taxation uniformity, being an equal distribution of taxation burdens upon all persons of a given class, is impossible of perfect application, and a sales tax rule promulgated under valid legislative authority classifying shoe repairmen as consumers of materials used in shoe repairing, within the meaning of the sales tax act, is not arbitrary but uniform and consistent with the law imposing the tax and not a delegation of power.

Sandberg Co. v Board, 225-103; 278 NW 643; 281 NW 197

Powers given to state commerce commission—limitation. The state commerce commission (board of railroad commissioners) has no powers except those expressly given and those incidental to or implied in the power given.

Huxley v Conway, 226-268; 284 NW 136

Combining administrative and judicial powers. The vesting of certain discretion and judgment in ministerial and administrative officers does not necessarily lead to unconstitutionality. So held as to the bovine tuberculosis act.

Loftus v Dept., 211-566; 232 NW 412

District court's power in soldiers preference appeals. A soldiers preference law provision giving the district court the power to review the evidence and find whether the applicant is qualified, and to direct the appointing board as to further action to be taken, is not an unconstitutional delegation of power, as the finding of facts is often a judicial function, and the power of appointment is not exclusively a legislative or executive right.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Supreme court—no encroachment on legislative function. Supreme court may not write into a statute words that are not there.

Mathewson v Board, 226-61; 283 NW 256

Usurpation of authority. The supreme court usurps no legislative function when it declares and determines the legislative intent of a statute.

Galvin v Citizens Bank, 217-494; 250 NW 729

III DELEGATION AND USURPATION OF EXECUTIVE AUTHORITY

Zoning ordinance—vesting permit power in council. An ordinance establishing a restricted residence district and prohibiting the erection and maintenance therein of gasoline filling stations without obtaining a permit therefor is not unconstitutional because the power to grant or refuse the permit is lodged in the city council—the same body which enacted the ordinance.

Marquis v Waterloo, 210-439; 228 NW 870

IV DELEGATION AND USURPATION OF JUDICIAL AUTHORITY

Usurpation of judicial authority. Principle recognized that the legislature cannot reverse, vacate, or overrule the judgment of a court.

Wilcox v Miner, 201-476; 205 NW 847

Legalizing act noninvasion of judiciary. The validation by the legislative department of a municipal contract which the judicial department has invalidated, because of noncompliance with statutory requirements, does not constitute an unconstitutional invasion of the powers of the judiciary.

Iowa Elec. Co. v Grand Junction, 221-441; 264 NW 84

Nonjudicial review. A determination by the board of railroad commissioners, on supporting evidence, that the operation of a motor carrier line would promote the public convenience and necessity is constitutionally beyond review by the courts.

In re Beasley Bros., 206-229; 220 NW 306

Judicial functions outside legislative powers. A statute which provided that service in any action could be made on a nonresident criminal defendant while he was within the state, was unconstitutional in providing that the statute legalized such service where it had been made in cases pending, as after the commencement of an action, the question of determining jurisdiction is a judicial function which the legislature is without power to control.

Frink v Clark, 226-1012; 285 NW 681

Nonjudicial review of arbitrary act. The extension of the limits of a municipal corporation in strict compliance with a constitutional statute is conclusive on the courts, even tho the statute is, to a degree, arbitrary.

State v Altoona, 201-730; 207 NW 789

Legalizing tax levy after invalidating ruling by court. A legislative act which legalizes a tax levy after the appellate court has ruled (but before entry of judgment) that the taxpayer is entitled to a refund of the tax paid because the tax levy was void owing to the absence of an authorizing statute, neither disturbs any vested interest of the taxpayer, nor constitutes an unconstitutional interference with the judiciary.

Chi. RI Ry. v Streepy, 211-1334; 236 NW 24

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT

General assembly. SECTION 1.

ANALYSIS

- I GENERAL SCOPE OF POWER
- II DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER
- III JUDICIAL REVIEW OF LEGISLATIVE ACTION

I GENERAL SCOPE OF POWER

Limitation on legislative power. See also under Art I, §25, Vol. I

Discussion. See 18 ILR 129—Administrative law symposium; 19 ILR 583—Recovery legislation.

Comprehensive power of general assembly. The general assembly has power to enact any legislation it sees fit, provided such legislation is not plainly in violation of the state or federal constitution.

Carroll v Cedar Falls, 221-277; 261 NW 652

Definition of terms—power of general assembly. The general assembly in exercising its constitutional power over an authorized subject matter, may be its own lexicographer—may use its own terms and declare what entities shall be embraced therein. So held where in the enactment of a statute (Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, ch 251-F1, C., '35 [ch 251.3, C., '39]) it defined the term "person" and, in effect, declared such term to include a municipal corporation.

State v Des Moines, 221-642; 266 NW 41

Public policy of statute. The public policy of a valid statute is solely for the legislature to determine, not the courts.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 223-487; 272 NW 624

When criminal intent immaterial. Under the Iowa securities law, the provision that the making of a "false" statement before the secretary of state relative to the financial condition of a corporation is a felony, renders immaterial testimony that the accused did not know that the statement was false.

Reason: The legislature may declare an act criminal irrespective of the knowledge or intent of the doer.

State v Dobry, 217-858; 250 NW 702

Legislature's power—felony for third conviction—liquor violation. Legislature possesses full authority to enact statute making third and subsequent offense of violating liquor law a felony.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 282 NW 728

Curative acts—omissions of levying officer. The failure of an officer to indorse on an execution the procedural matters required by statute may be legalized by an act of the legislature.

Francis v Todd & Kraft, 219-672; 259 NW 249

Nelson v Hayes, 222-701; 269 NW 861

Salary—power to change. The general assembly has plenary power to reduce the salary of any public officer unless such reduction is prohibited by the constitution—a public office not being property.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Police power—prohibition of sales of cigarettes. Power of legislature to prohibit sale of cigarettes reaffirmed.

Ford Hopkins Co. v Iowa City, 216-1286; 248 NW 668

I GENERAL SCOPE OF POWER—conclud'd

Unallowable irrevocable pledge. The general assembly has no power to render its enactment irrevocable and unrepealable by a future general assembly, even in an enactment which has been approved under the constitution by a direct vote of the people. So held where the act sought to irrevocably pledge certain indirect taxes to the payment of state bonds.

State v Council, 207-923; 223 NW 737

Interest on public deposits—power to divert. The general assembly has ample authority to divert from the county general fund to the state sinking fund for public deposits interest accruing on deposits of public funds in the hands of the county treasurer.

Scott Co. v Johnson, 209-213; 222 NW 378

Qualifications for office sufficiently set out in statute. The soldiers preference law is not unconstitutional for failure to provide standards of qualifications for office when it requires that the applicant be an honorably discharged soldier, that he be a citizen and a resident of the place of appointment, and that his qualifications be equal with those of the nonveteran applicant.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Legislative regulation—soldiers preference appointments. The soldiers preference law cannot be objected to on the grounds that it deprives the city of self-government when the powers of the municipality are derived solely from the legislature which has power under the constitution and under statute to prescribe rules governing municipalities.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

II DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER

Delegation and usurpation of legislative authority. See also §1 under "Of the Distribution of Powers" in this Article.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 684—Administrative commissions

Permissible agencies. The legislature may, generally speaking, choose any agency for the initiative and realization of the benefits of a public health measure.

Lausen v Board, 204-30; 214 NW 682

Legislative powers—no delegation to executive. Powers which can be exercised solely by the legislative branch of government may not be delegated to an administrative board which is a part of the executive branch of government.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Nondelegation of authority. The statutory provision (§2930, C., '31) which requires the board of supervisors, under named conditions, to appropriate from the county general fund money to, and in aid of, a farm bureau organization, cannot be deemed a delegation to the said organization of the power to levy a tax on the public.

Blume v Crawford County, 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92 ALR 757

Budget act—nondelegation of legislative authority. The broad, sweeping, and apparently unguarded discretion granted by statute (§388, C., '31) to the director of the budget (now state comptroller) to grant or refuse permission to a municipality to make a transfer of its funds, does not constitute an unconstitutional grant of legislative power.

State v Manning, 220-525; 259 NW 213

Legislative power—nondelegation. The general assembly will not be deemed to delegate its legislative authority by authorizing its administrative body or board, in carrying out a law, to adopt rules and regulations which are not inconsistent with the law as the general assembly has enacted it.

Vilas v Board, 223-604; 273 NW 338

Criminal penalty in departmental rule. The mere fact that a rule or regulation of an administrative department, promulgated under valid legislative authority, imposes a criminal penalty for its violation will not invalidate it.

State v Van Trump, 224-504; 275 NW 569

Delegation of powers to executive. A statute, which delegates to the state banking board authority to determine and fix by regulation such maximum rate of interest or charges upon each class of small loans as will induce efficiently managed commercial capital to enter such business in sufficient amounts to make available adequate credit facilities to persons without the security usually required by commercial banks, is not an invalid delegation of legislative power because the standards fixed by the legislature are sufficiently definite and carefully defined to warrant conferring on such board the power to adopt rules and regulations and give effect to the legislative policy.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Unallowable delegation. The general assembly cannot, for the protection of the highways or for the safety of the traffic thereon, constitutionally delegate to the state highway commission power to adopt rules and regulations which shall have the force and effect of law.

Goodlove v Logan, 217-98; 251 NW 39

Delegation of legislative power. The legislature has no constitutional right to delegate to an administrative department, e. g., the conservation commission, the strictly and exclusively legislative power to formulate a policy and make regulations restricting angling. It may, however, make such declaration of policy, definitely describing the subject, the field, and the character of regulations intended to be imposed and leave to the department the manner in which that policy shall apply.

See Goodlove v Logan, 217-98; 251 NW 39

Sales tax rule for undertakers—reasonableness. Rule 49 of the board of assessment and review, applying to sales tax collectible from undertakers, is clearly reasonable and valid, being promulgated under proper legislative authority and containing alternate methods of computing the tax to fit varying methods of conducting such business.

Kistner v Board, 225-404; 280 NW 587

III JUDICIAL REVIEW OF LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Constitutionality of laws. See also under Art XII, §1

Determination of constitutional question only when necessary. The supreme court will not pass upon the constitutionality of a statute unless it is necessary to do so in the determination of a given case.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

Ambiguous statute—conditions existing—occasion and necessity of statute considered. Where language of statute is ambiguous, it is proper to consider conditions with reference to subject matter that existed when statute was adopted, occasion and necessity for statute, and causes which induced its enactment.

Jones v Dunkelberg, (NOR); 260 NW 717

Statutes—duty of court to make effective. It is the duty of the court in construing statutes to seek the object and purpose of the law and then give it force and effect if not contrary to established legal precedents.

Enrollment of bill conclusive. The enrollment of a legislative bill and the due authentication of such enrollment by the signatures of the speaker of the house, president of the senate, and governor, constitute an unimpeachable attestation of what the legislative department has done.

Davidson v Mulock, 212-730; 235 NW 45

Presumption. An enrolled act which carries the signatures required by the constitution is presumed to have become a law, pursuant to the requirements of the constitution.

Dayton v Ins. Co., 202-753; 210 NW 945

Passage of bills. SEC. 17.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 50, 52; '36 AG Op 38, 139; AG Op Aug. 4, '39

Fatally deficient journal entries. The mandatory constitutional requirement that a bill shall, in each house, be put on passage by a yea and nay vote, and such vote entered on the journal, is not shown to have been complied with by a journal which simply shows the adoption by a yea and nay vote of a conference report proposing certain amendments to the bill.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Readings and entry of vote. Legislative record reviewed and held to reveal full compliance with the constitutional requirements in re reading of the bill and the entry of the yeas and nays.

Witmer v Polk County, 222-1075; 270 NW 323

Adoption by house of senate amendments. The due passage of a bill by the house, and the amendment and due passage of the same bill by the senate, and the due concurrence of the house in said senate amendments, reveal a constitutional passage by the general assembly of the bill.

State v Woodbury Co., 222-488; 269 NW 449

Adoption of conference report—effect. When the general assembly is in deadlock over the final form and contents of a bill, the due adoption by both houses of the report of a joint conference committee and of the amendments therein proposed as an adjustment of existing differences, terminates all necessary legislative proceedings on said bill—other than enrollment and due signing. In other words, no necessity exists for a further or additional reading and passage of the bill as modified by said newly adopted amendments, when it is made to appear that, prior to the time said differences arose, each house had duly passed the bill immediately following the last reading thereof in said houses.

[The conference report and amendments therein proposed were adopted by a ye and nay vote equal to that constitutionally required for the passage of a bill and said vote was duly entered on the journals of each house.]

Scott v Board, 221-1060; 267 NW 111
Brown v West, 222-331; 268 NW 525

Enrollment — when conclusive — when not conclusive. The text of the official enrollment of a legislative act will be treated by the courts as an absolute verity, but the courts will go behind such enrollment on the question whether the house or senate complied with the mandatory constitutional requirement that the bill be put on passage by a ye and nay vote and such vote be entered on the legislative journal.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Nonconclusiveness of enrollment. Principle reaffirmed that the enrollment of a bill is not conclusive that constitutional requirements have been complied with in its passage.

Scott v Board, 221-1060; 267 NW 111

Constitutional enactment—sufficiency. The statute regulating the small loan business is not invalid on ground that in its enactment the legislature failed to comply with mandatory provisions of the constitution.

Appropriations. SEC. 24.

State comptroller—money payable by appropriation only. State disbursing officer is bound by the constitutional provision that no money shall be drawn from the treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

Compensation of members. SEC. 25.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 73, 102, 616; '36 AG Op 645

Constitutional basis. The compensation of the lieutenant governor and members of the general assembly cannot be constitutionally fixed on any basis except on the basis of "per diem and mileage".

Gallarno v Long, 214-805; 243 NW 719

Reimbursement for personal expenses. The legislature cannot constitutionally reimburse its members or the lieutenant governor for an expense incurred by said officers unless said expense is a governmental or legislative expense—an expense necessary to enable said officers to perform their duties.

Gallarno v Long, 214-805; 243 NW 719

Time laws to take effect. SEC. 26.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 142, 479

Existing but noneffective statute—effect. A city, in acquiring jurisdiction to construct a public improvement, need only comply with existing effective statutes. In other words, it need not comply with a statute which then exists, but which has not yet taken effect.

Butters v City, 202-30; 209 NW 401

Acts of special session. Acts of a special session of the general assembly, in the absence of any contrary direction therein, take effect ninety days after final adjournment, the time being computed on the basis of excluding the day of adjournment and including the ninetieth day.

Clingingsmith v Dairy Co., 202-773; 211 NW 413

Danbury v Riedmiller, 208-879; 226 NW 159

Lotteries. SEC. 28.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 226; '34 AG Op 741; '36 AG Op 19, 544; AG Op Jan. 9, '39

Consideration for chance—indispensable element. A scheme for the distribution, by lot or chance, of valuable prizes does not constitute a lottery when the recipient of the prize neither pays nor hazards anything of value for the chance to obtain said prize. And it is quite immaterial that the donor of such prizes expects such distribution of prizes will work a financial betterment of his business.

ANALYSIS

- I SUBJECT MATTER OF ACTS
- II TITLES OF ACTS

I SUBJECT MATTER OF ACTS

Presumption of constitutionality—strong case to invalidate. In passing upon constitutionality of acts of the legislature a presumption exists in favor of constitutionality, and an act will be invalidated only when it is clearly, plainly, and palpably unconstitutional, and it is the duty of the courts to give such a construction to an act that, if possible, this necessity is avoided and the act upheld.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

Unity of object. A statute which simply fixes the vote sufficient to authorize the issuance of bonds cannot be said to contain more than one subject.

Waugh v Shirer, 216-468; 249 NW 246

Multifarious provisions with unity of object. A legislative title which expresses a general and outstanding legislative object justifies the inclusion in the act itself of any number of provisions, howsoever multifarious, which have a unity of object in accord with that expressed in the title.

Davidson Co. v Mulock, 212-730; 235 NW 45

Nonduality in subject matter. Neither is the title of an act nor the act itself dual in subject matter in a constitutional sense:

1. When the title declares a purpose, (a) to amend a section of an existing statutory chapter governing the acquisition by cities and towns of named public utilities, (b) to provide additional methods of paying for said plants, and (c) outlines in a general way said proposed additional methods; and,

2. When the text of the act follows the title with congruous provisions.

Iowa-Neb. Co. v Villisca, 220-238; 261 NW 423

Joining germane matters. The constitutional requirement that a legislative act "shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith" is not violated by an act (1) authorizing different offenses to be charged in the same indictment, and (2) regulating peremptory challenges under such charge, the latter being germane to the former.

State v Miller, 217-1283; 252 NW 121

Amendment, revision, and codification. In the amendment, revision, and codification of the statutes which resulted in the Code of 1924, a reference in the code revision acts to a section number of the compiled code or of the supplements thereto effected the same result as tho the reference had been to the corresponding official section number of the statute as it existed when it was carried into the compiled code or supplements.

Rains v Bank, 201-140; 206 NW 821

Amendment, revision, and codification. The amendment, revision, and codification of a section of the Compiled Code of 1919 "to read as follows" worked an effectual repeal of the same section as it appeared in the Code of 1897.

Dayton v Ins. Co., 202-753; 210 NW 945

II TITLES OF ACTS

Construction. Legislative acts must be construed consistently with their titles. Nor can they be given any broader scope than their titles.

Siegel v Railway, 201-712; 208 NW 78

Liberal construction for constitutionality. The decisions involving the sufficiency of titles to legislative enactments lay down certain general rules. It is held the constitution should be liberally construed so as to embrace all matters reasonably connected with the title and which are not incongruous, unconnected, or unrelated thereto.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

Title embracing one subject—rules for determination. Constitutional provision that title to legislative acts shall embrace but one subject and matters connected therewith was designed to prevent surprise in legislation, but the title need not be an index or epitome of the act or its details. The subject of the bill need not be specifically or exactly expressed in the title, nor is it necessary that each thought or step toward the accomplishment of object be embodied in a separate act, nor is it important that it contains matters usually expressed in separate acts when they are germane to the general subject.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

Legislative intent expressed in enactments. The act of placing a section under a particular chapter of the code and the wording of the headings of the section, have little, if any, weight as official interpretations.

State v Oge, 227-1094; 290 NW 1

Amendment, revision, and codification. A bill for "an act to amend, revise, and codify" enumerated sections of law embracing the former law governing the requisites and sufficiency of indictments, furnishes a sufficient title to support what is now known as the short form indictment act.

State v Henderson, 215-276; 243 NW 289

Simmer law—bond statutes not included.

Weiss v Woodbine, 228- ; 289 NW 469

Short form indictment act. An act to amend, revise and codify specifically named sections of law "relating to the form, contents, and sufficiency of indictments, and to provide for bills of particulars in aid of indictments", is a perfectly good title to the act commonly known as the short form indictment act.

II TITLES OF ACTS—continued

Title omnibus in form. A title which declares a purpose to amend a multitude of specifically named sections of the statutes which are described as "all relating to statutory salaries and compensation of state, county and city officers" complies with the constitutional requirement that an act shall embrace "but one subject".

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Sufficiency of title. A title which recites that the act "creates a park board in cities having a population of 125,000 or more" sufficiently indicates that the act is designed to apply to cities subsequently acquiring the required population.

State v Darling, 216-553; 246 NW 390; 88 ALR 218

Different but related matters. This section is not violated by the title preceding §9253, C., '31, to wit: "Action by creditor", even tho said section does provide for action by three different parties, viz: action by an assignee, action by a receiver, and action by a creditor.

Andrew v Bank, 216-244; 249 NW 377

Title amendatory of existing section. A title to a legislative act which declares a purpose to amend a named section of existing school law "relating to attaching and detaching territory to and from adjoining corporations", justifies the inclusion in the act of provisions for a new and additional plan for attaching and detaching territory.

Rural Sch. Dist. v McCracken, 212-1114; 233 NW 147

Title—dual subject matter. A legislative act which is supported by a title which declares a purpose to amend a named section "relating to receivership of banks" is not subject to the vice of containing more than one subject matter because the said amendatory act impliedly works a repeal of another section of law which gave to the state, in case a receiver was appointed for a bank in which it was a depositor, the preferential right to be paid in full prior to other depositors.

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

Dual subjects. An act "relating to procedure in the supreme court and qualifications for admission to the bar" does not embrace two subjects, the latter enumeration being by statute embraced in the former.

Dayton v Ins. Co., 202-753; 210 NW 945

Sufficiency—keeping liquor where beer is sold. Section 1921.126, C., '39, forbidding the keeping of intoxicating liquor where beer is sold, is not unconstitutional as violating constitutional provision requiring that the title of every legislative act embrace but one subject, since such subject is germane to an act relating to the sale of 4 percent beer.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

Noncompliance with title. The fact that the text of an act contains no repeal or amendments of certain statutory sections which the title declares a purpose to amend or repeal, does not invalidate the act.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Subject not embraced in title. When the general assembly sees fit specifically to enumerate in the title to an act the particular sections of the statutes which it proposes to repeal or amend, in order to effect a readjustment or reduction in the salaries of state, county and city officers, it may not constitutionally insert in the act a reduction in the salary of officers whose salaries are fixed by sections not so specifically enumerated in the title.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Act in excess of title—effect. A legislative act entitled "An act to provide a method whereby assessment life associations may be reincorporated as legal reserve life insurance companies", is void insofar as said act assumes to cover an additional subject matter not mentioned or referred to in the title, e. g., provisions prohibiting designated insurance companies or associations from writing life insurance on the assessment plan.

National Assn. v Murphy, 222-98; 269 NW 15

Co-operative selling agencies. An act "to provide for the organization of associations without capital stock and not for pecuniary profit" is broad enough to justify the inclusion of a provision (1) authorizing a co-operative selling association to require its members to sell all or a stipulated part of their products through the association, (2) providing for the form of the contract in such cases, and (3) empowering the association to provide for and collect liquidated damages for a violation of such contract.

Co-operative Assn. v Weir, 200-1293; 206 NW 297

Titles of acts—"to suppress" obscene literature—criminal penalty not intimated. The title, "An act to 'suppress' obscene literature," fails to intimate that a criminal penalty was provided for a violation.

State v Chenoweth, 226-217; 284 NW 110

Incongruous matter. A provision for the suspension of the license of a physician because of a conviction of a violation of the federal statutes relating to narcotics cannot be validly enacted under a title which professes "to amend, revise, and codify" certain statutes "relating to the sale and transportation of intoxicating liquors under permits".

In re Breen, 207-65; 222 NW 426

Incongruous matter. A title which gives notice of the creation of the office of state budget director and provides for a state and local budget, for the examination of public accounts, and for review of public contracts and bonds, is not broad enough to justify the inclusion of a provision creating a new fund and power in local municipalities to levy a tax for such fund.

Chi. RI Ry. v Streepy, 207-851; 224 NW 41

Legalization of invalid tax levy. A title, "An act to legalize any and all tax levies heretofore made and collected" supports the legalization of "All taxes heretofore assessed, levied or collected", when the intent of the legislature will be carried out by construing "made and collected" as "made or collected".

Chi. RI Ry. v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

Legalization of invalid tax. The legislature may validly legalize a levy of taxes made under a supposedly legal statute which, however, was invalid because its title was constitutionally insufficient.

Chicago, RI Ry. v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

Nonretroactive tax. The legalization of a tax levy made by a county under an optional and supposedly legal statute, which, however, was in fact originally invalid because of a fatal defect in the title, does not constitute a levying by the general assembly of a retroactive tax on the county.

Chicago, RI Ry. v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

Nonreference to tax. A tax may validly be authorized by an act even tho no mention of a tax be made in the title, if the tax is fairly calculated to effect the object covered by the title.

Fevold v Board, 202-1019; 210 NW 139

Nonreference to chapter amended. The provisions of the so-called "Public Bidder Law" (46 GA, ch 83; §7255.1 et seq., §10260.1 et seq., C., '39) were properly classified in the title to the act as "relating to taxes and the collection thereof" without any reference in the title to Ch 449 of the Code, tho the act itself did make reference to and did effect some change in said chapter.

Witmer v Polk County, 222-1075; 270 NW 323

Local or special laws—general and uniform—boundaries of counties. SEC. 30.

Uniform operation. See also under Art I, §6

I GENERAL AND SPECIAL LAWS DISTINGUISHED

Constitutional uniformity. A statute which applies equally to all of a specifically described class is constitutionally uniform.

Loftus v Dept., 211-566; 232 NW 412

Uniform operation. This section is not violated by the bovine tuberculosis act because it operates through the medium of county testing units.

Fevold v Board, 202-1019; 210 NW 139

Applicability to all under same conditions. A statute which provides the appellate procedure for all property owners who claim to be overassessed, is manifestly not lacking in constitutional uniformity.

Davidson v Mulock, 212-730; 235 NW 45

Bond election. A statute requiring a favorable vote equal to 60 percent of all the votes cast for and against a proposal to issue bonds, in lieu of former provisions requiring a majority vote only, is not violative of the constitutional prohibition against nonuniformity of operation.

Waugh v Shirer, 216-468; 249 NW 246

Class legislation—venue. The legislature may validly classify the subject of insurance into (1) life insurance and (2) nonlife insurance, and validly enact that actions to recover assessments under nonlife insurance contracts shall be brought in the county of the defendant's residence, without applying the same statutory rule to life insurance companies.

Midwest Ins. v DeHoet, 208-49; 222 NW 548

Municipal utilities—discrimination against privately owned plants. Statutory authority to municipalities to erect, in their proprietary capacity, electric light and power plants, and to pay the entire initial cost thereof from the net profits of said plants, and to this end to fix such rates as will effect such payment, is not void as an unconstitutional discrimination against privately owned plants of the same kind.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Discrimination as to defense to action. The statute (§8401, C., '27) prohibiting the defensive plea of want of legal incorporation to collateral actions by or against an acting corporation, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it is arbitrary and discriminatory.

First T&S Co. v U.S. Gyp. Co., 211-1019; 233 NW 137; 73 ALR 1196

I GENERAL AND SPECIAL LAWS DISTINGUISHED—concluded

Permit to sell cigarettes—discretion. The cigarette permit act which provides that certain governmental bodies "may" grant permits for the sale of cigarettes (§1557, C., '31) arms said bodies with power to exercise at least a legal discretion to grant or refuse a permit. For example, a city council may, in the interest of the public as it may view the matter, validly fix the maximum number of permits that will be issued, and may refuse to issue more, and in so refusing it may not be said that the council acts arbitrarily, capriciously, or discriminatively.

Ford Hopkins v City, 216-1286; 248 NW 668

Arbitrary classification. An ordinance which provides safety regulations over tanks wherein inflammable oils are stored for sale, is null and void when in the same municipality there are large numbers of other tanks identical with those embraced in the ordinance and used for the same purpose except the stored oil is not for sale.

Edwards & B. v City, 213-1027; 240 NW 711

Governmental functions—nonliability in performance. The statutory-prescribed rules of the state governing aerial navigation (§8338-c7, C., '35 [§8338.20, C., '39]) have no application to the state in its sovereign capacity, nor to its governmental agencies, nor to the officials of said agencies when exclusively engaged in performing the duties of said agencies.

De Votie v Cameron, 221-354; 265 NW 637

III CLASSIFICATION OF CITIES AND TOWNS

IV TAXATION

Assessment—discrimination. No unallowable discrimination is worked by a statute which, in the assessment of the stock of an incorporated bank, authorizes a deduction for certain liabilities and does not allow such deduction in the assessment of the bank assets of a private banker.

Mannings Bk. v Armstrong, 204-512; 211 NW 485

Collection—special method—when followed. A special statutory method for collecting a special tax must be followed, but in the absence of such method, the right which inheres in sovereignty to enforce collection of taxes would apply.

State v National Ins., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Income tax—power to classify. The legislature had the power, in enacting the income tax act, to classify the residents of this state according to their income.

Vilas v Board, 223-604; 273 NW 338

Allowable classifications—not special. The general assembly in the enactment of the chain store tax act (46 GA, ch 75; C., '35, ch 329-G1 [C., '39, ch 329.5]) did not go beyond its concededly broad power to classify:

1. By classifying chain stores, generally, as proper subjects for an occupational tax.

2. By classifying certain of said stores as not subject to said tax.

3. By classifying the taxpaying stores into groups of ten or multiples thereof and graduating the tax progressively on each group—it appearing that none of said classifications were arbitrary—that the reason for each was manifest or reasonably discernible—that all owners of chain stores similarly situated were treated alike.

Tolerton et al v Board, 222-908; 270 NW 427

Permissible classification. The motor vehicle carrier taxation act is not clearly, plainly, and palpably arbitrary, unreasonable, and unlawfully discriminatory because it provides that those who shall pay the tax shall be those only who operate motor vehicles not upon fixed rails, and as common carriers of freight and passengers, over regular routes, on scheduled trips and between fixed termini.

Iowa Motor v Board, 207-461; 221 NW 364; 75 ALR 1

Ruling of federal court—conclusiveness. The chain store tax act (46 GA, ch 75; C., '35, ch 329-G1 [C., '39, ch 329.5]) is in violation of the equal protection clause of the federal constitution insofar as it attempts to levy an annual tax solely on the basis of the gross receipts of said stores, such being the holding of the federal supreme court and such holding necessarily being conclusive on the courts of this state.

Tolerton et al v Board, 222-908; 270 NW 427

Assessment at less than actual value—justification. Tho the statute directs property to be assessed at its actual value, it should not be so assessed if other property of a like or similar kind in the same assessment district is assessed at less than its actual value.

Talbott v Des Moines, 218-1397; 257 NW 393

V VALIDITY OF CERTAIN TAX LAWS

Itinerant drug vendor act. The statutes requiring a license of an itinerant vendor of drugs (§§3148, 3149, C., '31) are not discriminatory, do not effect double taxation, are not class legislation, were not enacted for any effect on trade or to remove competition, and are of uniform operation.

State v Logsdon, 215-1297; 248 NW 4

VI LEGALIZING ACTS

Legalizing acts as retrospective legislation. See under Art I, §21

Allowable "local and special" legalizing act. The general assembly has plenary constitutional power to validate, by a strictly local and special act, the proceedings under which a municipal electric light and power plant (payable from plant earnings) has been constructed and placed in operation—it appearing that the contract under which said proceedings were had, had been judicially declared void because said contract was not let on competitive bids as mandatorily required by statute—the constitution ex vi termini clearly recognizing the inapplicability of a general validating act to meet such a situation.

Class legislation—legalization of tax levies. The legalization of all taxes "heretofore assessed, levied and collected by any municipality" is not a local or special law without uniform operation throughout the state.

Chicago RI Ry. v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

Void municipal warrants. A legalizing act purporting to legalize specified void municipal warrants then in litigation, but which act was held in said litigation inapplicable to said warrants because of a proviso in said act that it should not affect pending litigation, is not subject to the construction in later litigation that the act is applicable to the extent of legalizing the contract under which said former warrants were issued even tho the warrants were not legalized.

Roland Co. v Carlisle (Town), 215-82; 244 NW 707

VII SPECIAL LAWS

Special act—what is not. A legislative act which first makes a permissible classification of those who must pay the tax (one not arbitrary, unreasonable, and unlawfully discriminatory) and then provides that the resulting tax shall, inter alia, be used for the maintenance and repair of certain public highways, is not a "special law for road purposes".

Myers v United States, 272 US 52

Good cause for continuing tax sale—economic emergency—governor's proclamation. Good cause for continuing a tax sale is shown by the General and local acts contrasted. Assuming that a supportable reason exists for classifying on the basis of population, a statute applicable to cities "now or hereafter having a population of" a named number, cannot be deemed "a local or special law" even tho when enacted it can apply to only one city, and even tho the creation of the official machinery for putting the act into effect in cities thereafter attaining said population is only implied.

State v Darling, 216-553; 246 NW 390; 88 ALR 218

Highway legislation. The constitutional provision that local or special laws for laying out, opening, and working highways shall not be passed, applies solely to ordinary legislation,—has no application to an act submitted to the electorate and designed to effect an improvement of specified state primary highways.

State v Council, 207-923; 223 NW 737

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 52; '34 AG Op 734; '36 AG Op 139, 548; '38 AG Op 461

Additional compensation after performance of contract—prohibition. Section 31, Const., Art. III, is a limitation upon the general assembly and upon every city council, and the final clause thereof conditionally withdraws the said limitation only as to particular claims pending before the general assembly, but grants no authority to the general assembly to legislate generally on the subject matter of a bonus or its equivalent for services after the services are performed.

Love v Des Moines, 210-90; 230 NW 373

Illegal reimbursement of contractor for loss. A municipal corporation has no legal authority, and can be given no constitutional legal authority, to pay or contract to pay its contractor, after performance of a contract and after settlement therefor, an added sum to reimburse the contractor for loss sustained by him because the federal government commandeered him and his equipment as a war measure, and thereby delayed the performance of the contract in question.

Vacancy—when fillable by election. The statutory provision (§1157, C., '31) that if a vacancy occurs in an elective state office thirty days prior to a general election the vacancy shall be filled at said election, in legal effect prohibits the filling of such vacancy at said election when the vacancy occurs less than thirty days prior to said election.

Term—compensation of lieutenant governor. SEC. 15.

Governmental powers—legislators—reimbursement for personal expenses. The legislature cannot constitutionally reimburse its members or the lieutenant governor for an expense incurred by said officers unless said expense is a governmental or legislative expense—an expense necessary to enable said officers to perform their duties.

Gallarno v Long, 214-805; 243 NW 719

Basis for compensation. The compensation of the lieutenant governor and members of the general assembly cannot be constitutionally fixed on any basis except on the basis of "per diem and mileage". It follows that one general assembly may not increase the compensation of future members by reimbursing them for their personal living expenses incurred while in attendance at a session of the legislature.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 395

Attorney—disbarment by special court—constitutionality. The act of the supreme court in appointing three district court judges as a special court to hear and determine disbarment proceedings against an attorney is necessarily a holding that the statute providing for such appointment is constitutional.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Disbarment proceedings—special court. The legislature has ample constitutional power to create a special court to hear and determine disbarment proceedings against an attorney, and the fact that said special court is composed of three district court judges appointed by the supreme court does not constitute an attempt by the legislature to create a district court of three judges in violation of §5, Art. V, of the constitution.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Nonusurpation of authority. The supreme court usurps no legislative function when it declares and determines the legislative intent of a statute.

Galvin v Citizens Bank, 217-494; 250 NW 729

Supreme court—no encroachment on legislative function. Supreme court may not write into a statute words that are not there.

Mathewson v Board, 226-61; 233 NW 256

Legalizing act noninvasion of judiciary. The validation by the legislative department of a municipal contract which the judicial department has invalidated, because of noncompliance with statutory requirements, does not constitute an unconstitutional invasion of the powers of the judiciary.

Jurisdiction of supreme court. SEC. 4.ANALYSIS

- I LAW AND EQUITY IN GENERAL
- II EQUITY JURISDICTION
- III LAW JURISDICTION
- IV APPEAL IN GENERAL
- V SUPERVISORY AND IMPLIED POWERS

I LAW AND EQUITY IN GENERAL

Methods of trial on appeal. See under §§11431, 11433

"Jurisdiction" defined. Jurisdiction means the power of a court to take cognizance of and to decide a case and carry its judgment and decree into execution.

Western Grocer v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

Without original jurisdiction. The supreme court has no original jurisdiction.

School Dist. v Samuelson, 220-170; 262 NW 169

II EQUITY JURISDICTION

Equitable action — insufficient record. A quite manifest duty rests on appellant in an equitable action to present the record with such affirmative fullness as will enable the appellate court to intelligently try the cause de novo.

Northrup v Mikkleson, 222-1046; 270 NW 401

Treating improperly stricken plea as in record. Upon appeal in an equity cause, the court, upon discovering from the record that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitation, will treat an improperly stricken plea of such statute as still in the record, and enter judgment accordingly.

Lawrence v Melvin, 202-866; 211 NW 410

Equitable proceedings—trial de novo. An action which plaintiff denominates when commenced as "In equity", and which is fully tried "In equity" without objection or effort to transfer to law, will, on appeal by defendant, be treated as "In equity" and tried de novo, without assignment of error.

Bates v Seeds, 223-70; 272 NW 515

Limited appeal in equity limits de novo hearing. The de novo hearing on appeal in an equitable action is necessarily limited to the particular part of the decree from which the appeal is taken; and, under such an appeal, appellee cannot have a de novo hearing on some other part of the decree unless he perfects a cross-appeal.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 220-1295; 264 NW 696

Trial de novo—custody of child. An appeal in habeas corpus proceedings involving the custody and best welfare of a child, necessarily and unavoidably gravitates to a review de novo; obviously such review is proper when distinctly equitable issues are involved.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

De novo hearing regardless of decretal recitals of fact. A recital in a mortgage foreclosure decree that of two defensive pleas one had been established, and one had not been established, does not prevent the appellate court on review de novo from adjudging that both said defensive pleas have been established, even tho the prevailing party—the appellee—does not assume to appeal from the one adverse court finding of fact against him.

Northwest Ins. v Blohm, 212-89; 234 NW 268

Habeas corpus proceedings—custody of child. An appeal in habeas corpus proceedings—a law action—involving the custody and best welfare of a child necessarily and unavoidably gravitates to a review de novo.

Adair v Clure, 218-482; 255 NW 658

Taxation—levy and assessment—board of supervisors as objectors—trial de novo. The board of supervisors as objectors to the assessment of a stockyards company may properly appeal to the supreme court from an order sustaining a motion to dismiss their appeal to the district court, and the case in the supreme court is triable de novo.

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

III LAW JURISDICTION

Law (?) or equity (?)—mutual treatment of action. An action mutually treated as a law action, from its inception in the trial court to and including its presentation on appeal, must be treated on appeal as a law action.

Garden v Ins. Co., 218-1094; 254 NW 287

Law action tried by equity procedure—errors must be assigned. Where an essentially law action to recover a money judgment is brought and recognized as such by the parties and the court, it is not, without a record entry transferring it to equity, converted to an equity action because the parties with the consent of the court use an equity procedure, and appeal therefrom will be dismissed when no errors are assigned.

Petersen v New York Ins., 225-293; 280 NW 521

Transfer from equity to law—effect. A law action, e. g., quo warranto, commenced as an equitable action and properly transferred by the court to law, will, on appeal, be disposed of as a law action.

State v Murray, 219-108; 257 NW 553

Power to require assignments of error. The supreme court has both constitutional and statutory right and power to require such adequate assignments of error in appeals in law actions as will concisely inform the appellate court and appellee of the definite action of the trial court sought to be reviewed.

Siesseger v Puth, 211-775; 234 NW 540

III LAW JURISDICTION—concluded

Final report of administrator — hearing. Hearings on final reports of administrators are not reviewed de novo in the appellate court.

In re Manning, 215-746; 244 NW 860

Fact findings in probate not triable de novo on appeal. Findings of fact by the trial court in a probate proceeding involving objections to an executor's report and payment of certain claims cannot be reviewed on appeal, such not being triable de novo.

In re Scholbrock, 224-593; 277 NW 5

Statutory punishment excessive—legislature not controlled by court. The punishment is believed excessive, supreme court has no power to change punishment fixed by specific enactment of legislature for third and subsequent offense of violating liquor law.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 282 NW 728

IV APPEAL IN GENERAL

Method of trial on appeal. See §§11431, 11433
Right of appeal as due process. See under Art I, §9

Right of review—statutes govern appeal. The right of appeal, being purely statutory, is controlled by the statutes in effect at the time the judgment appealed from was rendered.

Ontjes v McNider, 224-115; 275 NW 328

Consent to jurisdiction—effect. Parties to litigation cannot, by agreement, confer jurisdiction upon the supreme court.

Hampton v Railway, 216-640; 249 NW 436

Original judgment by supreme court. The supreme court has no constitutional, statutory, implied, or inherent jurisdiction to enter an original judgment on a stay bond given by an appellee in compliance with an order of a judge of said court pending an application by appellee to the supreme court of the United States for a writ of certiorari to review a decision of the supreme court of this state.

Hoskins v Hotel, 206-932; 221 NW 442

Findings by probate court—conclusiveness. Findings of fact by a probate court are conclusive on the appellate court when they are fairly supported by competent testimony.

In re Fish, 220-1247; 264 NW 123

Findings of fact in probate. A supported finding of fact by trustees that the beneficiary of a testamentary bequest had fulfilled the conditions imposed on the payment of said bequest is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Sams' Est., 219-374; 258 NW 682

Hearings in probate. Where the issue whether a trustee should be credited with a loss of trust funds was heard by the probate court without a jury (as a continuation of the probate proceedings out of which the trust arose) the holding of the court, granting such credit, will be sustained if the evidence pro and con would have presented a jury question had the hearing been before a jury.

In re Moylan, 219-624; 258 NW 766

Accounting and settlement. Supported findings and orders of the probate court on the hearing on the final report of a guardian are conclusive on the appellate court, the proceedings being at law.

In re Jefferson, 219-429; 257 NW 783

Accounting and settlement. An order of the probate court granting an executor credit on his final report for the amount paid by him on his own motion, on a claim against the estate, is conclusive on the appellate court if the record reveals supporting testimony as to the genuineness of the claim.

In re Plendl, 218-103; 253 NW 819

Appeal in name of deceased party. Altho plaintiff died during pendency of action below, supreme court took jurisdiction of appeal taken in name of such decedent, because parties treated cause as one properly before the court and because it was a case where court's constitutional authority could be invoked.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Appeal from unrecorded order—no complaint by appellant. After the unsuccessful termination of his appeal, an appellant may not later challenge the jurisdiction of the supreme court to entertain the appeal because the order appealed from was not spread upon the district court records.

Lincoln Bank v Brown, 224-1256; 278 NW 294

Procedendo—competency as evidence. The supreme court, by virtue of its constitutional powers to issue writs necessary to the exercise of its powers, has power to provide, without the aid of a statute, for the writ of procedendo, in order to furnish the trial court with competent evidence of its final decision and of its release of jurisdiction.

State v Banning, 205-826; 218 NW 572

Dual remedies—appeal or mandatory order. Where, after reversal and remand in an equity cause, the trial court, on procedendo, enters a judgment which it has no discretion to enter, the defendant may apply directly to the appellate court for a mandatory order to the trial court to obey the procedendo, even tho defendant might accomplish the same result by appealing from the entry of said judgment.

Ronna v Bank, 215-806; 246 NW 798

Unconstitutionality must be clearly shown. Courts are reluctant to declare legislation unconstitutional, and will do so only when the violation is clear, palpable, and practically free from doubt.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

V SUPERVISORY AND IMPLIED POWERS

Certiorari—limited jurisdiction of supreme court. Neither a judge of the supreme court, nor the court itself, has jurisdiction to issue a writ of certiorari to other than an inferior judicial tribunal. So held where the writ was inadvertently issued to the superintendent of public instruction and to a county superintendent of schools.

School Dist. v Samuelson, 220-170; 262 NW 169

Writ of prohibition—state as plaintiff. An original action in the supreme court, for a writ of prohibition directed to a district court and prohibiting further action by said latter court in private actions pending therein, may be brought in the name of the state ex rel its attorney general; especially is this true when said private actions arose out of proceedings instituted by the state through the governor thereof.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

Writs of prohibition. The supreme court has original jurisdiction, under the constitution, to issue common-law writs of prohibition; but, when the application is for a writ directed to a district court and commanding it to discontinue further jurisdiction over named actions pending in said lower court, the supreme court must act solely on the established facts as revealed in the proceedings in said district court, and, if material disputed issues of fact arise, the writ will be refused, as the supreme court has no power to take testimony on disputed questions of fact dehors said district court records.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

District court and judge. SEC. 5.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 616; '38 AG Op 739

Disbarment proceedings—special court. The legislature has ample constitutional power to create a special court to hear and determine disbarment proceedings against an attorney, and the fact that said special court is composed of three district court judges appointed by the supreme court does not constitute an attempt by the legislature to create a district court of three judges in violation of §5, Const., Art. V.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Nondisqualifying interest of judge. A judge of the district court does not, by signing a petition to a city council for an election to vote on the proposition whether the city shall erect a specified public utility plant, thereby disqualify himself from fully presiding over litigation questioning the legal sufficiency of said petition.

Piuser v Sioux City, 220-308; 262 NW 551; 100 ALR 1298

Jurisdiction of district court. SEC. 6.

Delegation of judicial authority. See under Art III, §1 (first); §10761

Discussion. See 20 ILR 83—Jurisdiction—Federal receiverships

Jurisdiction defined. Jurisdiction means the power of a court to take cognizance of and to decide a case and carry its judgment and decree into execution.

Western Grocer v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

Rules of procedure—power to prescribe by order. Under the recognized rule that courts have the inherent power to prescribe such rules of practice and rules to regulate their proceedings in order to expedite the trial of cases, to keep their dockets clear, and to facilitate the administration of justice, the judges of a judicial district could adopt and enforce a general order requiring parties to cause each case to be finally determined within two years from date of filing petition and providing upon failure to comply with such order the clerk should enter upon the record, "Dismissed without prejudice for want of prosecution".

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Dismissal of cases for want of prosecution—validity of general order. The fact that an order of the judges of a judicial district, requiring the parties to cause each case to be finally determined within two years from date of filing petition, was a general order applicable to all cases or proceedings pending or to come before the courts of the district did not invalidate such order.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Prosecution and termination—retention of jurisdiction—effect. In a judicial proceedings to accomplish a certain purpose, e. g., the proper and legal protection of both life tenants and remaindermen in the matter of preserving the estate for all the parties, the record retention by the court of jurisdiction over the proceedings and parties thereto, will enable the court subsequently to make valid and supplementary orders in furtherance of the said purpose.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

Contempt of court—legislative limitation on punishment. While the general assembly has no power to wholly deprive a constitutionally created court of its inherent power to inflict punishment for acts which are in contempt of such court, yet it may constitutionally impose a reasonable limitation on such courts as to the punishment which may be imposed.

Eicher v Tinley, 221-293; 264 NW 591

Correction—inherent power of court. The district court is but exercising its inherent power when, on motion, it corrects by nunc pro tunc order, and regardless of the one-year limitation imposed by §12791, C., '35, the unquestionably established error of its own clerk in entering a judgment against a judgment defendant for a less amount than theretofore ordered by the court, it appearing that the judgment plaintiff had not, by laches, forfeited the right to demand such correction against the judgment defendant.

Murnan v Schuldt, 221-242; 265 NW 369

Federal appointment—effect on state courts. The mere pendency of federal receivership proceedings over a party does not necessarily oust the jurisdiction of the state courts over the party and over his property.

Lippke v Milling Co., 215-134; 244 NW 845

Federal courts—probate claims—jurisdiction from diversity of citizenship. The proceedings for settlement of an estate may be pending in a state court, the federal courts may on account of diversity of citizenship assume jurisdiction to determine the validity of claims against the estate.

Reconstruction F. Corp. v Dingwell, 224-1172; 278 NW 281

State and federal courts—comity—certiorari coercing state court's release of jurisdiction. The necessity for comity between state and federal courts demands that controversies shall not arise concerning their respective jurisdictional powers on account of unsubstantial considerations, and certiorari from the supreme court of Iowa will lie to require a district court of the state to relinquish jurisdiction over a probate matter after the federal court, through diversity of citizenship, has assumed jurisdiction.

Reconstruction F. Corp. v Dingwell, 224-1172; 278 NW 281

Mortgagee suing receiver—decree fixing lien on other assets in different court. Court may authorize a mortgagee's foreclosure action against the receiver in a county where the property is located, tho different from county where receivership is pending and such court, after hearing the foreclosure proceeding, has the right, where such relief is proper, not only to foreclose but to impose a lien for a deficiency judgment on the other receivership assets in the other court.

Klages v Freier, 225-586; 281 NW 145

Injunction—constitutionality. The statute authorizing injunction to restrain the practice of medicine and surgery without a license is constitutional for the reason that such practice constitutes a nuisance under the general law of the state, and chancery has, from time immemorial, possessed jurisdiction to enjoin nuisances; and this is true irrespective of the question whether the district court may be constitutionally vested with an equitable jurisdiction not possessed by chancery courts when the state constitution was adopted.

STATE DEBTS

Credit not to be loaned. SECTION 1.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 80

Assumption of county bonds. The state may validly assume the payment of road bonds issued by counties, a county not being a corporation, within the meaning of this section.

Losses to school funds. SEC. 3.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 104; AG Op March 16, '39

School fund mortgage—state property—permanent school fund. A school fund mortgage is state property and the state has recognized its right to maintain a permanent school fund intact and inviolate for purpose to which dedicated.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

School fund mortgage foreclosure—defenses. In an action to foreclose a school fund mortgage, where the court decreed that plaintiff made no demand nor attempt to collect the mortgage until 11 years after it became due, held, that the defendant-holder of the certificate of tax sale was charged with knowledge of plaintiff's lien, and that it was unpaid, and he could not rely on lapse of time, laches or negligence, as against the state.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

Tax sale—school fund mortgage—paramount. The statutes providing that where real estate is incumbered to school fund, the interest of the person holding the fee shall alone be sold for taxes, and that lien of state shall not be affected by the tax sale will be construed as meaning that lien of mortgage given to the state for land bought on credit and lien of a real estate mortgage to school fund will be paramount to a tax lien.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

Tax sale—school, agricultural college, or university land—construing statute—catchwords. In construing statute which provides in substance that in the sale of school, agricultural college, or university land sold on credit, which is sold for taxes, the purchaser shall acquire only the interest of the person holding the fee and that the state's lien shall not be affected by such sale, the supreme court will not construe the catchwords for such statute to show legislative intent to omit school fund mortgages, as the catchwords are no part of the law enacted and are not to be considered in construing the statute.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

Tax sale—school fund mortgage unpaid—purchaser charged with knowledge. Where a mortgage securing the permanent school fund is on the realty purchased at tax sale, the purchaser is charged with knowledge of the rights of the county holding such mortgage and that the debt secured by the mortgage is unpaid.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

Contracting debt—submission to the people. SEC. 5.

Discussion. See 12 ILR 272—Amendment of acts approved by the people; 13 ILR 293—Banking clauses in Iowa Constitution

Unallowable state debt.

Hubbell v Herring, 216-728; 249 NW 430

Direct tax—nonpermissible substitution. The general assembly has no power to pledge or to substitute indirect taxes for the direct tax required by the constitution for the payment and discharge of a state bonded indebtedness approved by the people.

State v Council, 207-923; 223 NW 737

State debt—mandatory maturity. The constitutional requirement that a state debt be paid "within twenty years from the time of the contracting thereof" means, when the total debt is divided into installments, within twenty years from the contracting of the first installment of the debt.

State v Council, 207-923; 223 NW 737

Legislature may repeal. SEC. 6.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Aug. 4, '39

Tax imposed distinctly stated. SEC. 7.

Uniformity of taxation. See under Art III, §30

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 902

Nonapplicability. This section applies only to a legislative enactment which in and of itself "imposes, continues or revives a tax"—not to the legalization of a tax levy already made under an optional and supposedly legal statute which was, in fact, fatally defective in its title.

Chicago RI Ry. v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

License fee as nonproperty tax. A substantial charge placed by the legislature on motor trucks operated on the public highways, graduated on the weight of the load carried, conceding the same to be a tax, tho termed a "license fee", is not a property tax but a tax imposed for the privilege of using the highways as a place of business, and therefore not within the meaning of this section.

Solberg v Davenport, 211-612; 232 NW 477

Reference to other law to fix tax. Section 7005, C., '31, which provides that "moneyed capital" within the meaning of §5219 of the federal statutes shall be assessed in a named manner and at the same rate as imposed on the stock of certain banks (§7003, C., '31), does not violate the constitutional requirement that in the imposition of a tax "it shall not be sufficient to refer to any other law to fix such tax".

Ballard-Hassett Co. v Board, 215-556; 246 NW 277

ARTICLE VIII

CORPORATIONS

How created. SECTION 1.

Municipal corporations. Local or special laws for incorporation of cities and towns prohibited, see Art III, §30, Anno Vol I, and annotations thereunder

Taxation of corporations. SEC. 2.

Uniformity of taxation. See annotations under Art III, §30

Income tax—corporation provision inapplicable. The constitutional provision that “the property of all corporations for pecuniary profit, shall be subject to taxation the same as that of individuals” has no application to the state income tax act—an excise tax.

Vilas v Board, 223-604; 273 NW 338

Corporate governmental agencies—immunity from legal process and taxation. Immunity of corporate governmental agencies from suits and judicial process, and their incidents, is less readily implied than immunity from taxation.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Bank stock taxed in excess of other moneyed capital—illegal and void. A tax levy on bank stock in excess of that on other moneyed capital used in competition with bank capital, held, to be a denial of equal protection, illegal and void.

Munn v D. M. Nat. Bank, 18 F 2d, 269

Bank shares—discrimination—violating constitutional rights—taxing officers acting contrary to law. The taxation of state and national bank shares at a higher rate than the shares of competing domestic corporations is violative of the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment and in excess of permission conferred by federal statute for the taxation of national bank stock.

Iowa-D. M. Nat. Bk. v Bennett, 284 US 239

Banking associations. SEC. 5.

Discussion. See 13 ILR 293—Banking clauses in Iowa Constitution

General banking law. SEC. 8.

Banking affected with public interest. Principle affirmed that the business of banking is affected with a public interest.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Moratorium act—no interference with federal land bank as governmental agency. There was no substantial or direct interference with accomplishment of purposes for which congress created joint stock land banks, by reason of the moratorium act of the 47th GA providing for continuance of foreclosure of real estate mortgage actions.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Stockholders' responsibility. SEC. 9.

Applicability. Principle reaffirmed that the above section has reference solely to banks of issue.

Leach v Bank, 203-1052; 213 NW 772

Andrew v Bank, 204-243; 213 NW 925; 56 ALR 521

Andrew v Bank, 205-42; 217 NW 431; 57 ALR 767

Superadded double liability—improper plaintiff. An insolvent bank may not maintain an action against its stockholders to enforce and collect the superadded double liability imposed by §9251, C., '27.

Home Bank v Berggren, 211-697; 234 NW 573

Credit by amount of former assessment unallowable. One who purchases corporate bank stock by paying an existing assessment thereon (and but little in addition thereto) will not be permitted, after the bank has become insolvent, to assert that said assessment was coercive as to him, and that the amount of such assessment should be credited on his “double liability.”

Amendment or repeal of laws—exclusive privileges. SEC. 12.

Statutory change—constitutionality. This section and §1090, C., '73 (§8376, C., '27), are constitutional and statutory authority for legislative act authorizing the board of directors of a mutual benefit life assessment company to transform said company into a legal reserve or level premium company, even tho such transformation results in leaving the old assessment certificate holders to carry their own assessments for death losses without further addition to their membership.

Wall v Life Co., 208-1053; 223 NW 257

Sale of stock for payment of assessment—common-law or statutory right of action. As to a stockholder who acquired his stock prior to the enactment of a statute permitting the sale of stock to enforce payment of a stockholder's assessment to reimburse an impairment of the bank capital, such statute does not necessarily exclude a common-law remedy by action when not so construed by the highest state court, and such statute declaring that the stockholder shall be liable for any deficiency after applying the proceeds of such sale, and providing for its collection by suit, is not a deprivation of property without due process by impairing a contract obligation.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

rights of the county holding such mortgage and that the debt secured by the mortgage is unpaid.

Monona County v Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

School fund mortgage foreclosure—defenses. I WHAT CONSTITUTES INDEBTEDNESS

(a) IN GENERAL

Debt—payment out of earnings. The expenditure which is necessary to establish a municipal electric light and power plant and which is to be paid solely from the earnings of the said plant, is not a "debt" within the constitutional and statutory limitation on indebtedness.

Wyatt v Town, 217-979; 250 NW 141

Electric plant payable out of earnings—contract not "debt" prohibited by constitution or statute. A contract for municipal electric plant payable out of earnings does not create a "debt" within meaning of constitutional inhibition where, altho plant was constructed on site owned by town, it was not shown that furnishing of site was part of consideration nor that site had a substantial value. In an action to enjoin the carrying out of such contract, the burden of proof to show that contract created a debt within the meaning of such constitutional inhibition was on the plaintiff-electric company.

Iowa So. Utilities v Cassill, 69 F 2d, 703

(b) PARTICULAR KINDS OF OBLIGATIONS

Contract with architect. A contract between an architect and a municipal corporation, which contract imposes a financial obligation on the corporation only in case the corporation enters into a further contract for the erection of the building which the architect has planned, is properly classified as a liability of the corporation's from the moment the building contract was entered into.

Holst v Sch. Dist., 203-288; 211 NW 398

(c) OBLIGATIONS MATURING BY INSTALLMENTS

Municipal light plant—payable out of earnings. In contract for construction of municipal electric plant, payable solely out of net earnings of plant, provision defining "net earnings" as balance of gross receipts after payment solely of necessary expenses of operation and maintenance, without provision for deduction of depreciation reserve, held not violative of statute providing that city should not be liable because of insufficiency of "net earnings".

Iowa So. Utilities v Cassill, 69 F 2d, 703

Waterworks extension—installment payments—future earnings. The trustees of a municipally owned and established waterworks plant may, without an authorizing election, validly contract for improving and extending said plant, and may obtain the funds therefor by issuing bonds payable solely out of the future net earnings of the plant and secured by a lien on said earnings and on said improvements and extensions.

Chitwood v Lanning, 218-1256; 257 NW 345

(d) OBLIGATIONS PAYABLE FROM EXISTING FUNDS OR ANTICIPATED REVENUES

Electric plant payable out of earnings—contract not "debt" prohibited by constitution or statute. A contract for municipal electric plant payable out of earnings does not create a "debt" within meaning of constitutional inhibition where, altho plant was constructed on site owned by town, it was not shown that furnishing of site was part of consideration nor that site had a substantial value. In an action to enjoin the carrying out of such contract, the burden of proof to show that contract created a debt within the meaning of such constitutional inhibition was on the plaintiff-electric company.

Iowa So. Utilities v Cassill, 69 F 2d, 703

Bonds payable from anticipated taxes.

Brunk v Des Moines, 228- ; 291 NW 395

(e) FUNDING BONDS

Exchanging bonds for valid indebtedness. Even tho a county, because of a sudden drop in the value of its taxable property, may find itself indebted beyond the constitutional limit, yet it may fund or refund its valid outstanding indebtedness by an issue of bonds in exchange for such indebtedness.

Hibbs v Fenton, 218-553; 255 NW 688

Funding bonds create no additional debt. A county whose valid bonded indebtedness is beyond the constitutional limitation (because of a drop in property valuations) may, under an authorizing statute, validly refund said bonds, without creating any additional indebtedness in a constitutional sense, by issuing and selling at par and for cash, refunding bonds, and by irrevocably placing the proceeds of said sale in a separate and distinct trust fund which is also irrevocably pledged for the sole purpose of discharging the particularly designated bonds which are being refunded.

Banta v Clarke County, 219-1195; 260 NW 329

(f) TAXATION AS AN INDEBTEDNESS

No annotations in this volume

II COMPUTING INDEBTEDNESS

"Taxable property" defined. "Taxable property" embraces "moneys and credits", within the meaning of this section.

Mack v Sch. Dist., 200-1190; 206 NW 145

Tax list conclusive. On the issue whether the indebtedness of a municipal corporation exceeds the constitutional limitation, the court cannot add other property to the "last state and county tax list".

Trepp v Sch. Dist., 213-944; 240 NW 247

Tax as asset. In marshaling the assets and liabilities of a municipal corporation on the issue whether the debts of the corporation are in excess of the constitutional limitation, a duly levied and collectible tax must be deemed a municipal asset in the absence of proof showing the definite purpose of the tax and, if for current expenses, that legal obligations have been or necessarily will be created, sufficient to offset said tax fund.

Holst v Sch. Dist., 203-288; 211 NW 398

Computation of assets and liabilities. In the marshaling of the assets and liabilities of a municipal corporation on the issue whether the debts of the corporation are in excess of constitutional limitation, collected and uncollected taxes and tuition due the municipality cannot be deemed an asset when it is shown that the current expenses of the municipality will consume the entire amount of said taxes and tuition; otherwise as to municipal property available for sale.

Trepp v Sch. Dist., 213-944; 240 NW 247

Construction of contract. The specific amount for which a municipal corporation obligates itself in a written contract for the construction of a schoolhouse in return for the contractor's agreement to "provide all the material and perform all of the work," etc., is in no wise lessened by a contract clause that said price "includes five thousand dollar figure for millwork".

Holst v Sch. Dist., 203-288; 211 NW 398

III INVALIDITY OF PORTION OF INDEBTEDNESS

Unconstitutional municipal indebtedness not curable. The legislature has no constitutional power to authorize a tax levy or a bond issue to pay, in whole or in part, a constitutionally prohibited indebtedness. More concretely, if a municipality creates an indebtedness which is in part valid, and in part constitutionally invalid, the invalid part may not be cured (1) by the voting of a tax to pay or reduce the indebtedness, or (2) by the issuance of bonds, and the application of the proceeds thereof to the same purpose.

Trepp v Sch. Dist., 213-944; 240 NW 247

IV RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF HOLDERS OF MUNICIPAL OBLIGATIONS

Public debt—valid authorization. The legislature may authorize municipalities to incur, with or without an election, a debt when the debt does not exceed constitutional limitations.

Chitwood v Lanning, 218-1256; 257 NW 345

School warrants—validity. School warrants which are in form the general obligations of the district, and issued under a purported contract of the district providing for such unconditional issuance, are void if in excess of the constitutional limit of indebtedness, notwithstanding the fact that the said contract carries the inference that the warrants will be paid from a special fund arising from the sale of bonds.

Carstens Bros. v Sch. Dist., 218-812; 255 NW 702

Partly void warrants. There can be no recovery on municipal warrants given in payment of part of a total purported indebtedness, part of which is void because in excess of constitutional debt limitation. In other words, recovery, insofar as permissible, must be had in some proceedings other than on said warrants.

Trepp v Sch. Dist., 213-944; 240 NW 247

VI CORPORATIONS INCLUDED

School districts—computation of assets and liabilities. In the marshaling of the assets and liabilities of a municipal corporation on the issue whether the debts of the corporation are in excess of constitutional limitation, collected and uncollected taxes and tuition due the municipality cannot be deemed an asset when it is shown that the current expenses of the municipality will consume the entire amount of said taxes and tuition; otherwise as to municipal property available for sale.

Official acts—presumption of regularity. In the absence of contrary evidence, presumption obtains as to legality and regularity of official acts of sworn public officials.

Krueger v Mun. Court, 223-1363; 275 NW 122

Motives immaterial when following lawful procedure. The motives of public officials when proceeding according to law, to submit the question of municipal ownership of a public utility, are not fit subjects for judicial inquiry.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

How vacancies filled. SEC. 6.

Statute supplementing constitution. The constitutional provision that appointees to fill vacancies in office shall hold until the next general election, is not self-executing, and therefore has been properly supplemented by §1157, C., '31.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

Election to fill vacancy. The statutory provision (§1155, C., '31) that an officer filling a vacancy in an elective office shall hold until the next regular election at which such vacancy can be filled, means the "next regular election" at which such vacancy can be legally filled.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

Vacancy—when fillable by election. The statutory provision (§1157, C., '31) that if a vacancy occurs in an elective state office thirty days prior to a general election the vacancy shall be filled at said election, in legal effect prohibits the filling of such vacancy at said election when the vacancy occurs less than thirty days prior to said election.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

Title to office—estoppel and waiver. Where, on the erroneous assumption that a vacancy existed in a public office, two persons are formally nominated, by different political parties, to fill the supposed vacancy and are voted on at the ensuing election, the failure of the candidate who is already serving under a valid appointment to withdraw his nomination and legally to question the nominations made, furnishes no basis for the claim that he thereby waived his right longer to hold the office, and estopped himself from objecting to the result of the election.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

District court clerk—vacancy filled by board. The district court has neither exclusive nor concurrent authority with the board of supervisors to fill a vacancy in the office of clerk of the court (a county office) by appointment; the court's power is confined to the appointment of a temporary clerk until the board fills the vacancy as provided by law.

State v Larson, 224-509; 275 NW 566

Seat of government established—state university. SEC. 8.

I IN GENERAL

Valid statutes read into contracts. Principle affirmed that contracts are conclusively presumed to have been entered into in view of the valid statutes then existing and controlling the subject matter.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Editorial arrangement of statutes changes no law. A mere rearrangement of statutes in code revision, or dividing one section into several sections, does not without legislative intention change the purpose, operation, and effect thereof.

Jones v Mills Co., 224-1375; 279 NW 96

Acts held constitutional. See under Art I, §1 (V)
Construction of statutes generally. See under §63

Statutes — construction — unambiguous language. The word "or" in a statute cannot be judicially construed to mean "and" when the language of the section is too clear and unambiguous to admit of judicial construction.

State v Best, 225-338; 280 NW 551

Constitutionality of expired act — nonnecessity to determine. Courts will not, ordinarily at least, find any necessity to pass on the constitutionality of a statute which has expired ex vi termini.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

Trustee's liability for taxes—determined by state law as construed by courts. A trustee in bankruptcy takes title to all property of bankrupt by operation of law, and has the rights of an execution creditor, with legal or equitable lien, and whether or not the city and county treasurer's claim for taxes is a lien, or whether or not it is "due and owing", must be determined according to the laws of Iowa, as construed by its highest court.

In re Davenport Dry Goods Co., 9 F 2d, 477

Nonjudicial review. The extension of the limits of a municipal corporation in strict compliance with a constitutional statute is conclusive on the courts, even tho the statute is, to a degree, arbitrary.

State v Altoona, 201-730; 207 NW 789

Disbarment by special court. The act of the supreme court in appointing three district court judges as a special court to hear and determine disbarment proceedings against an attorney is necessarily a holding that the statute providing for such appointment is constitutional.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

Assessments — unconstitutional basis—burden of proof. The court will not declare a drainage statute unconstitutional because it fixes a ratio of water discharged as the basis for computing assessments between districts, when the record reveals the legal fact that the district does receive a benefit because of the improvement in question and is assessable therefor, and when there is no proof by complainant that the said statutory basis is not the equivalent of benefits.

Ward v Board, 214-1162; 241 NW 26

Class legislation—sale of drugs and medicines. Whether the statute (1) which defines "drugs and medicines" as including all substances and preparations for external or internal use recognized in the United States Pharmacopoeia or National Formulary, and (2) which prohibits the sale of "drugs and medicines" except by or under the supervision of a licensed pharmacist, is unconstitutional on the ground that said publications embrace many harmless substances that are of common and domestic use, quaere.

State v Jewett Co., 209-567; 228 NW 288

Nullity because of unworkableness. Whether the purchase of electrical energy by a city or town may be financed under §6134-d1, C., '31 [§6134.01, C., '39], or whether the provisions of §§6134-d5 and 6134-d6 of said code [§§6134.09, 6134.10, C., '39], relative to competitive bidding for furnishing electrical energy are a nullity because of indefiniteness, uncertainty, or unworkableness, quaere.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 218-1073; 256 NW 914

II POWER TO PASS UPON CONSTITUTIONALITY OF LAWS

Public policy of statute. The public policy of a valid statute is solely for the legislature to determine, not the courts.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 223-487; 272 NW 624

Determination of constitutional question only when necessary. The supreme court will not pass upon the constitutionality of a statute unless it is necessary to do so in the determination of a given case.

State v Dunley, 227-1085; 290 NW 41

Waiver of statutory right—public policy. A waiver by a corporate creditor of his statutory right to hold officers and directors personally responsible for prohibited excess corporate indebtedness is not violative of public policy.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140

III CONSTRUCTION OF THE CONSTITUTION

Title embracing one subject—rules for determination. Constitutional provision that title to legislative acts shall embrace but one subject and matters connected therewith was designed to prevent surprise in legislation, but the title need not be an index or epitome of the act or its details. The subject of the bill need not be specifically or exactly expressed in the title, nor is it necessary that each thought or step toward the accomplishment of object be embodied in a separate act, nor is it important that it contains matters usually expressed in separate acts when they are germane to the general subject.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

Title of act—sufficiency—keeping liquor where beer is sold. Section 1921.126, C., '39, forbidding the keeping of intoxicating liquor where beer is sold, is not unconstitutional as violating constitutional provision requiring that the title of every legislative act embrace but one subject, since such subject is germane to an act relating to the sale of 4 percent beer.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

IV PLEADING OF CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ISSUES

Particularity required. A pleading assailing the constitutionality of a statute must (1) point out specifically the clause or section of the constitution which it is claimed is violated, and (2) designate the specific grounds upon which the asserted violation is based.

Pevevill v Board, 201-1050; 205 NW 543

Particularity—criminal case. If procedure in a criminal case violates a constitutional provision, the complainant must specifically set forth wherein or in what manner said provision has been violated.

State v Hawks, 213-698; 239 NW 553

Presumption of constitutionality. Before the supreme court will declare an act of the legislature unconstitutional, the person assailing the statute must be able to point out the particular provision that he claims has been violated. In other words, there is a presumption in favor of the constitutionality of the statute.

State v Woitha, 227-1; 287 NW 99

Determination of question—necessity. The court will not at the instance of an amicus curiae search for or pass upon constitutional grounds of invalidity of a statute not presented by the parties.

State v Martin, 210-207; 230 NW 540

Constitutionality—necessity for determination. The court will not, on an order dissolving a temporary injunction pending the trial of the main action, pass upon the constitutionality of the statute under attack.

Iowa Mot. v Board, 202-85; 209 NW 511

Nonpresented constitutional questions. Constitutional questions not presented in the trial court will not be considered on appeal.

State v Johnson, 204-150; 214 NW 594

Talarico v City, 215-186; 244 NW 750

Andrew v Bank, 215-1150; 247 NW 797

Constitutional question first raised on appeal—no review. Constitutionality of statute requiring majority stockholders voting for franchise renewal to purchase stock of those voting against renewal, within three years from date of voting, will not be considered on appeal when such question has not been raised in the lower court.

Terrell v Tel. Co., 225-994; 282 NW 702

Unallowable amendment after remand. A party who attacks the constitutionality of a statute on specified grounds, and on appeal is defeated in his contentions, will not, after remand to the trial court, be permitted to file an amendment to his pleading attacking the constitutionality of the law on new and additional grounds.

Rural Dist. v McCracken, 215-55; 244 NW 711

V CONSTRUCTION IN FAVOR OF CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTES

Construction favoring constitutionality. Principle reaffirmed that statutes are presumed to be constitutional, and will not be declared unconstitutional unless such unconstitutionality is apparent beyond reasonable doubt.

Gallarno v Long, 214-805; 243 NW 719
State v Darling, 216-553; 246 NW 390; 88 ALR 218

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

State v Manning, 220-525; 259 NW 213

Berg v Berg, 221-326; 264 NW 821

Craven v Bierring, 222-613; 269 NW 801

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Burden to prove invalidity. One who attacks the constitutionality of a statute must show its invalidity beyond a reasonable doubt.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Presumption of constitutionality. Before the supreme court will declare an act of the legislature unconstitutional, the person assailing the statute must be able to point out the particular provision that he claims has been violated. In other words, there is a presumption in favor of the constitutionality of the statute.

State v Woitha, 227-1; 287 NW 99

Presumption of constitutionality—strong case to invalidate. In passing upon constitutionality of acts of the legislature a presumption exists in favor of constitutionality, and an act will be invalidated only when it is clearly, plainly, and palpably unconstitutional, and it is the duty of the court to give such a construction to an act that, if possible, this necessity is avoided and the act upheld.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

Titles of acts—liberal construction for constitutionality. The decisions involving the sufficiency of titles to legislative enactments lay down certain general rules. It is held the constitution should be liberally construed so as to embrace all matters reasonably connected with the title and which are not incongruous, unconnected, or unrelated thereto.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

Doubtful constitutionality. Principle reaffirmed that when the court is in doubt as to the constitutionality of a statute, the statute must be declared constitutional.

Vilas v Board, 223-604; 273 NW 338

Doubt as to unconstitutionality—effect. Cities and towns need no statutory authority in order validly to sell the excess products of their municipally owned utility plants. It follows that the unconstitutionality of a statute which authorizes a city having 7,500 people and owning its electric light plant, to furnish electricity to a town of 400 people is, at the least, very doubtful, and, being doubtful, the statute must be deemed constitutional.

Carroll v Cedar Falls, 221-277; 261 NW 652

Construction—necessity. The court will not, in order to save the constitutionality of a statute, declare a construction which, in effect, amends the statute.

New York Ins. v Burbank, 209-199; 216 NW 742

VI PART OF STATUTE UNCONSTITUTIONAL

Partial invalidity—effect. A legislative act which is constitutional in part and unconstitutional in part, and unaccompanied by any saving clause, must fall as a whole when the act reveals but a single object or purpose, which object or purpose will not be fully carried out by retaining the constitutional part only.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Unconstitutional in part. An unconstitutional amendment to a statute will not carry down the entire legislative structure on the subject in question unless it is very manifest that the legislature would have abrogated the entire statute, had it foreseen the unconstitutionality of its amendment.

Peverill v Board, 201-1050; 205 NW 543

Attacking particular part of act. A party contesting the validity of a legislative act may avail himself of the invalidity of a part of the act which does not directly affect himself, provided said part affects the validity of the entire act.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Invalid amendment—effect. An invalid amendment to a valid section of the statute leaves the section in the form in which it existed before the attempt to amend was made, unless a contrary intent on the part of the legislature is made to appear.

Talbott v Des Moines, 218-1397; 257 NW 393

Amendment—invalidity in whole (?) or part (?). When a statutory enactment for the taking of appeals in tax-adjustment proceedings turns out to be wholly invalid, such invalidity necessarily carries down all amendments which were an inseparable part of the enactment and which were designed to harmonize other statutes with the new enactment.

Talbott v Des Moines, 218-1397; 257 NW 393

Partial unconstitutionality—effect. That part of the state road bond act of 1928 which irrevocably pledged the primary road funds to the payment of the bonds, was necessarily such a persuasive inducement to the approval of the act by the people, as to invalidate the entire act upon its being adjudged that said pledge was invalid.

See State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Auxiliary provisions. When sections of a statute seeking to control interstate commerce are unconstitutional because they impose unallowable burdens on such commerce, all auxiliary sections of the same statute which prescribe the procedure through which said unconstitutional control is sought to be attained, are likewise unconstitutional. (So held as to §§8338-d4-8338-d11, C., '31.)

State v Pipe Line, 216-436; 249 NW 366

Unconstitutional application of valid statute—banks and banking. The holding by the federal supreme court that the statute of this state (§§9279, 9280, C., '27) prohibiting receipt of deposits by insolvent banks and bankers generally was constitutionally inapplicable to national banks and bankers did not have the effect of carrying down the statute in toto—did not have the effect of thereafter rendering said statute inapplicable to state banks and bankers, even tho the state legislature did not, after said holding, re-enact said sections.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Equal protection—ruling of federal court. The chain store tax act (46 GA, ch 75; C., '35, ch 329-G1 [C., '39, ch 329.5]) is in violation of the equal protection clause of the federal constitution insofar as it attempts to levy an annual tax solely on the basis of the gross receipts of said stores, such being the holding of the federal supreme court and such holding necessarily being conclusive on the courts of this state.

Tolerton & Co. v Board, 222-908; 270 NW 427

VII RIGHT TO CHALLENGE CONSTITUTIONALITY

Noninjured complainant. A party may not question the constitutionality of a statute when he fails to show that he has been or will be injured by the statute. In other words, he may not borrow an objection from one who could complain, but does not complain.

Peverill v Board, 201-1050; 205 NW 543
State v Terpstra, 206-408; 220 NW 357
State v Soeder, 216-815; 249 NW 412

Invalid part of act not affecting contestant—allowable attack. A party contesting the validity of a legislative act may avail himself of the invalidity of a part of the act which does not directly affect himself, provided said part affects the validity of the entire act.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Member of class favored by act. The claim that the bovine tuberculosis act is unconstitutional because it grants to the owners of breeding cattle the right to initiate or bring into existence the benefits of the act, may not be asserted by one who belongs to such favored class.

Lausen v Board, 204-30; 214 NW 682

VII RIGHT TO CHALLENGE CONSTITUTIONALITY—concluded

Statutory gratuity—unallowable complaint. A party may not complain as to the terms on which a mere gratuity is given to him.

Loftus v Department, 211-566; 232 NW 412

Public corporation. A county has no standing to question the constitutionality of a legislative act relative to its governmental powers.

Scott Co. v Johnson, 209-213; 222 NW 378

School district or taxpayer—diversion of school fund interest. Neither a school district nor a taxpayer thereof has any standing to question the constitutionality of the act which diverts the future-accruing interest on school funds to the state sinking fund for public deposits (Ch. 352-A1, C., '31) for the reason that they have no such thing as a vested right in said interest.

Boyd v Johnson, 212-1201; 238 NW 61

County supervisors—raising constitutionality of statutes not permitted. In an action in equity for mandamus to compel board of supervisors to remit taxes on capital stock of failed bank, held, board of supervisors could not raise issue of constitutionality of statute providing for such remission, either in that it contravened the state or the federal constitution, as counties and other municipal corporations are creatures of the legislature, existing by reason of statutes enacted within the power of the legislature, and the board may not question that power which brought it into existence and set the bounds of its capacities.

Brunner v Floyd Co., 226-583; 284 NW 814

Tax statute—no challenge by public official. A county auditor or a board of supervisors as ministerial officers or public officials may not challenge the constitutionality nor the competency of the legislature to pass a statute under which they act.

Hewitt & Sons v Keller, 223-1372; 275 NW 94

Fine and jail sentence not cruel punishment. An accused who has been fined $100 and ordered imprisoned in the county jail for 60 days may not question the constitutionality of the statute under which he was convicted, on the ground that the statute imposed cruel and unusual punishment.

State v Dowling, 204-977; 216 NW 271

VIII EMERGENCY LEGISLATION GENERALLY

Prohibited laws—emergency cannot justify. No legislative declaration or recital of the existence of an emergency can justify the enactment of a statute which is clearly prohibited by the constitution. So held as to an act fixing prices.

Duncan v Des Moines, 222-218; 268 NW 547

Extending redemption period. Neither the federal nor state constitutional prohibitions against (a) the impairment of the obligations of contracts, or (b) the deprivation of vested property rights without due process of law, is violated by a statute (1) which is enacted during, and for the purpose of ameliorating, an existing public financial emergency, (2) which grants to the owner of real estate during the existence of said emergency the right to possession and a time, very materially in excess of that otherwise granted by law, in which to redeem from mortgage foreclosure sale—even tho the sale precedes the passage of the emergency act—and (3) which sequesters the rents during said extended time and fairly and reasonably applies them to the protection of the mortgagee and his security. (45 GA, ch 179)

Reason: Contract rights and vested interests must reasonably yield to the paramount right of the state, through the reservoir of its reserved police power, to protect, by appropriate legislation, its sovereignty, its government, its people and their general welfare, against exigencies arising out of a great emergency.

Des Moines JSL Bank v Nordholm, 217-1319; 253 NW 701

Moratorium act of 47th General Assembly—extension of redemption period—unconstitutionality. Moratorium act of the 47th GA extending the period of redemption from foreclosure is unconstitutional as an impairment of the obligation of contract, when such act is not based on an actual existing emergency calling for an exercise of the reserve police power of the state.

John Hancock Ins. v Egglund, 225-1073; 283 NW 444

Moratorium act of 47th General Assembly—emergency must be temporary—judicial notice. An emergency, in order to justify legislation in contravention of the constitution on the theory of an exercise of the reserve police power, must be temporary or it cannot be called an emergency, but becomes an established status. In determining this question, the supreme court may take judicial notice of conditions existing at the time of enactment and whether or not they constitute an emergency.

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION

AMENDMENT 2 OF 1884

See annotations under Art V, §§5, 10, Vol I

AMENDMENT 3 OF 1884

Prosecution under trial information. The fifth amendment to the federal constitution (requiring infamous crimes to be presented by indictment) is no limitation upon the power of the state to provide for prosecution of infamous crimes without an indictment by a grand jury.

State v Ostby, 203-333; 210 NW 934; 212 NW 550

TITLE I

SOVEREIGNTY AND JURISDICTION OF THE STATE, AND THE LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT

CHAPTER 1

SOVEREIGNTY AND JURISDICTION OF THE STATE

1 State boundaries.

Sudden shifting of boundary river—effect. Principle applied that the sudden shiftings of boundary rivers do not change state boundary lines.

Dermit v School Dist., 220-344; 261 NW 636

2 Sovereignty.

 - (b) GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS
- III FEDERAL SOVEREIGNTY
 - (a) IN GENERAL
 - (b) FEDERAL INSTRUMENTALITIES

I IN GENERAL

State fair board. The Iowa state fair board is an arm or agency of the state, and, therefore, not suable.

De Votie v Board, 216-281; 249 NW 429

II STATE SOVEREIGNTY

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 10 ILB 297—State rights

State—power and means of existence—policy not to limit. It is not the policy of this state or sovereign to place limitations upon the power and means of maintaining its own existence.

Teget v Lambach, 226-1346; 286 NW 522

Enjoining state highway commission. An action against the state highway commission to enjoin it from relocating a primary road, unaccompanied by any allegation of wrongful acts, is, in effect, an action against the state, and nonmaintainable.

Long v Highway Com., 204-376; 213 NW 532

(b) GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS

Government nonliability for employee's tort—respondeat superior—exception. The exemption accorded counties and other governmental bodies and their officers from liability for torts growing out of the negligent acts of their agents or employees is a limitation or exception to the rule of respondeat superior, and in no way affects the fundamental principle of torts that one who wrongfully inflicts injury upon another is individually liable to the injured person.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Governmental employees—personal liability for torts—no governmental immunity. A governmental employee committing a tortious act which causes injury to another in violation of a duty owed to the injured person becomes, as an individual, personally liable in damages therefor. (Hibbs v School Dist., 218 Iowa 841, overruled.)

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Doherty v Edwards, 226-249; 284 NW 159

Nonliability in performance. The statutory-prescribed rules of the state governing aerial navigation (§8338-c7, C., '35 [§8338.20, C., '39]) have no application to the state in its sovereign capacity, nor to its governmental agencies, nor to the officials of said agencies

II STATE SOVEREIGNTY—concluded
(b) GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS—concluded when exclusively engaged in performing the duties of said agencies.

De Votie v Cameron, 221-354; 265 NW 637

Action against board of control. Allegations in a petition to quiet title to land and to obtain a writ of possession for said land, (1) that defendants constitute the entire membership of the state board of control, an agency of the state, and (2) that said defendants are wrongfully withholding said possession from plaintiff, furnish no sufficient basis for the holding that said action, in truth and fact, is against the state in its sovereign capacity.

Iowa Elec. Co. v Board, 221-1050; 266 NW 543

Employee—action against state or its agent. An employee of a state hospital for the insane may not maintain an action for salary against the executive officer thereof, as such action is, in effect, an action against the state.

Cross v Donohoe, 202-484; 210 NW 532

Enjoining state highway commission. An action against the state highway commission to enjoin it from relocating a primary road, unaccompanied by any allegation of wrongful acts, is, in effect, an action against the state, and nonmaintainable.

Long v Highway Com., 204-376; 213 NW 532

Employee performing governmental function—jurisdiction through original notice. A liquor commission enforcement officer as a state employee performing a governmental function is, nevertheless, subject to the jurisdiction of the courts by proper service of an original notice.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Special appearance—nondeterminable matters. Whether an action is, in truth and fact, an action against the state in its sovereign capacity is a question which cannot be tried out on a special appearance—the petition not showing on its face that the action is such.

Iowa Elec. Co. v Board, 221-1050; 266 NW 543

Government employee's automobile collision—immunity as a defense. In a damage action for injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, defendant's claim that he was a state employee performing a governmental function is a matter of defense not properly raised by special appearance.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Injuries from operation of municipally owned automobiles. The statutory declaration that the owner of a "car" is liable for damages done by it when it is operated with the consent of said owner, does not embrace the ownership of public property used solely for governmental purposes.

Bateson v Marshall County, 213-718; 239 NW 803

Sinking fund—actions—waiver. The state, after reimbursing a county for the loss of county deposits in an insolvent bank, may validly prohibit an action in its own favor on the depositary bond to which it was legally subrogated by the process of reimbursing the county.

State v Bartlett, 207-208; 222 NW 529

Deposits—payment on forged indorsement—negligence not imputable to state. Negligence and laches of public officers in the handling of state funds are not imputable to the state; for instance, in an action to recover from a drawee bank the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement of a check drawn by a county treasurer against state school funds on deposit with said drawee, it is no defense that the county treasurer was negligent in drawing or delivering the check, or that county officers generally were negligent in not making early discovery of the forged indorsement and notifying the drawee accordingly.

New Amsterdam Co. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Proceedings against violators of labor union injunction—state as party.

Carey v Dist. Ct., 226-717; 285 NW 236

III FEDERAL SOVEREIGNTY

Discussion. See 22 ILR 39—State taxation and federal agencies

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 16 ILR 391, 504—Sovereignty and amending power

Foreign judgments—immunity from process—nonright to relitigate issue. A defendant who, when sued in a foreign state, litigates the issue that he was immune from the service of process in said state because he was then temporarily and involuntarily therein as a military officer of the federal government, and on land owned and used exclusively by said government for military purposes, and who fails to appeal from a ruling denying his claimed immunity, may not relitigate said issue when sued in this state on the foreign judgment.

Northwestern Ins. v Conaway, 210-126; 230 NW 548; 68 ALR 1465

(b) FEDERAL INSTRUMENTALITIES

Federal instrumentality—congress determines immunity from state laws. It is within discretion of congress to determine in what respects and to what extent its instrumentalities, for their proper functioning, shall be immune from legislation of state origin.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Moratorium act—no interference with federal land bank as governmental agency. There was no substantial or direct interference with accomplishment of purposes for which congress created joint stock land banks, by reason of the moratorium act of the 47th GA, providing for continuance of foreclosure of real estate mortgage actions.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Foreclosure—state control over federal agencies. In proceedings instituted by a federal agency for the foreclosure of a mortgage, the state court, manifestly, cannot compel such agency to come to the relief of the debtor, even tho the federal government has advanced funds to the said agency for the primary purpose of relieving debtors.

Federal Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

Corporate governmental agencies—immunity from legal process and taxation. Immunity of corporate governmental agencies from suits and judicial process and their incidents is less readily implied than immunity from taxation.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Land banks as nonpreferential litigants in state courts. There is nothing to show that congress contemplated that land banks should occupy a preferential status as litigants in the state courts.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Lehman, 225-1309; 283 NW 96

Representative capacity. The conservator of a national bank may, in an action instituted by him, allege generally his official capacity and authority.

Ross v Long, 219-471; 258 NW 94

Statutory reward applicable to national banks. The statute which obligates the owner of lost goods, money, etc., to compensate the finder of such property, is applicable to a national bank as owner, even tho the federal statutes are silent on the subject, as said statute does not impair the efficiency of said bank as a federal, governmental agency.

Flood v Bank, 220-935; 263 NW 321

Federal conservator—authority. The federal statute that the conservator of a national bank shall act "under the direction" of the comptroller of the currency does not require the conservator to secure specific authority from the comptroller for the bringing of an attachment and the execution of a bond on behalf of the bank.

Ross v Long, 219-471; 258 NW 94

3 Concurrent jurisdiction.

Discussion. See 1 ILB 107—Federal control of navigable rivers

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 458; '38 AG Op 748

Accretions—formation of sand bars. Land by accretions is not established by showing that sand bars formed in the bed of the stream beyond high watermark and became visible as the waters of the river receded.

McFerrin v Wiltse, 210-627; 231 NW 438

Accretion passes by ordinary deed. Accretion to land passes by a deed of the upland owner unless expressly excepted.

Haynie v May, 217-1233; 252 NW 749

Accretion—apportionment—estoppel. Riparian land owners interested in accretions to their lands may by agreement, acquiescence, or other conduct, apportion the accretion in a manner and way different than the law would apportion it, and thereby estop themselves, in an action to quiet title, from asserting that land did not pass under their deed because it was not accretion land.

Haynie v May, 217-1233; 252 NW 749

Dams—new high watermark—title of state. The state of Iowa by erecting a permanent dam in the bed of its navigable river, and by maintaining said dam peaceably and uninterruptedly for a period of ten years, legally extends its title to the new high watermark resulting from the erection of the dam; and especially may a private deedholder not complain when his deed, executed after the dam was erected, simply calls for land "up to the river".

State v Sorenson, 222-1248; 271 NW 234

Fishing regulations on boundary river—rights within territorial limits. The grant of concurrent jurisdiction to two states over a river, the middle of the channel of which is the boundary line between them, does not preclude one of them, without concurrence of the other, from regulating fishing by its own residents in that part of the river that is within its own territorial limits.

17-c1 (1935 Code) Expenses. [Section omitted from code after being held invalid]

Reimbursement for personal expenses. The legislature cannot constitutionally reimburse its members or the lieutenant governor for an expense incurred by said officers unless said expense is a governmental or legislative expense—an expense necessary to enable said officers to perform their duties. It follows that the monetary allowance to said officers under this section, as purported reimbursement for their personal living expenses incurred while in attendance at a session of the legislature, must be deemed added compensation.

Gallarno v Long, 214-805; 243 NW 719

Compensation of legislators — basis. The compensation of the lieutenant governor and members of the general assembly cannot be constitutionally fixed on any basis except on the basis of "per diem and mileage".

Directory statute. This statute is directory only.

Waugh v Shirer, 216-468; 249 NW 246

Noncompliance with title. The fact that the text of an act contains no repeal or amendments of certain statutory sections which the title declares a purpose to amend or repeal, does not invalidate the act.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Legislative reference to compiled code. In the amendment, revision, and codification of the statutes which resulted in the Code of 1924, a reference in the code revision acts to a section number of the compiled code or of the supplements thereto effected the same result as tho the reference had been to the corresponding official section number of the statute as it existed when it was carried into the compiled code or supplements.

Rains v First Nat. Bank, 201-140; 206 NW 821

Nonconclusiveness of enrollment. Principle reaffirmed that the enrollment of a bill is not conclusive that constitutional requirements have been complied with in its passage.

Scott v Board, 221-1060; 267 NW 111

Adoption of conference report—effect. When the general assembly is in deadlock over the final form and contents of a bill, the due adoption by both houses of the report of a joint conference committee and of the amendments therein proposed as an adjustment of existing differences terminates all necessary legislative proceedings on said bill—other than enrollment and due signing. In other words, no necessity exists for a further or additional reading and passage of the bill as modified by said newly adopted amendments when it is made to appear that, prior to the time said differences arose, each house had duly passed the bill immediately following the last reading thereof in said houses.

[The conference report and amendments therein proposed were adopted by a yea and nay vote equal to that constitutionally required for the passage of a bill and said vote was duly entered on the journals of each house.]

Code editor's catchwords—no part of law. Code section catchwords, prepared by code editor, are no part of the law.

State v Chenoweth, 226-217; 284 NW 110

Tax sale—school, agricultural college, or university land—construing statute. In construing statute which provides in substance that in the sale of school, agricultural college, or university land sold on credit, which is sold for taxes, the purchaser shall acquire only the interest of the person holding the fee, and that the state's lien shall not be affected by such sale, the supreme court will not construe the catchwords for such statute to show legislative intent to omit school fund mortgages, as the catchwords are no part of the law enacted and are not to be considered in construing the statute.

I STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 12 ILR 276—Genuine and spurious interpretation; 15 ILR 485—Substitution of words; 16 ILR 99—Severability of words; 24 ILR 744—Repeal of criminal statute; 25 ILR 736—Extrinsic aids in the federal court

Construction—canons of. Principles recognized that in the construction of statutes:

1. The province of construction lies wholly within the domain of ambiguity, and that prior acts may be resorted to, to solve, but not to create an ambiguity.
2. A thing is within a statute if it is within the intention, tho not within the letter; a thing which is within the letter of a statute is not within the statute unless it is within the intention of the makers.
3. All statutes in pari materia should be construed irrespective of the time of their enactment.

4. Statutes should be so construed that the intent and purpose thereof cannot be eluded.

Smith v Sioux City Yards, 219-1142; 260 NW 531

Fitzgerald v State, 220-547; 260 NW 681

General principles. Principles reaffirmed that:

1. A plain, unambiguous statute admits of no construction.
2. Legislative intent must be arrived at from the words used, construed in accordance with their context and ordinary meaning.
3. The particular procedure for acquiring a statutory right, not existing under the common law must be strictly pursued.
4. The term "shall" is generally construed as a command.

Jefferson v Sherman, 208-614; 226 NW 182

Unquestioned pronouncement of court. Scant consideration will be given to the claim that a pronouncement of the court was pure dictum when it has stood unchallenged and been acted on for half a century.

Schoenwetter v Oxley, 213-528; 239 NW 118

Statutes in pari materia. The rule that statutes in pari materia shall be construed together applies with peculiar force to statutes passed at the same legislative session or appearing in the same chapter.

Iowa Motor v Board, 207-461; 221 NW 364
Dikel v Mathers, 213-76; 238 NW 615

Statutes in pari materia—amendment to clear ambiguity. Statutes in pari materia being construed together, a later statute may be used to clear up an ambiguity, such as in the moratorium statutes where an amending act was passed at the same session of the legislature.

Prudential v Lowry, 225-60; 279 NW 132

Statutes construed together.

Durst v Board, 228- ; 292 NW 73

Elections—statutes in pari materia. The statutes relative (1) to vacancies in nominations, (2) to the placing of names of candidates on the official ballot, (3) to the sufficiency of a certificate of nomination, and (4) to the eligibility of candidates, all presuppose (and properly so) the existence of statutory authorization to hold an election, and therefore can have no controlling bearing on the construction of the statute which does authorize an election. Such former series of statutes are not strictly in pari materia with the latter statute.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

General and special statute on same subject—avoiding conflict. Principle recognized that where a general statute, if standing alone, would include the same matter as a special statute, and thus conflict with it, the special act will be deemed an exception to the general statute.

Workman v Dist. Court, 222-364; 269 NW 27

Sentence—dual statutes. If there be two statutes defining an offense in such language that the accused may be sentenced under either, and one of them is general in its terms, and the other limited and particular, and imposing a lesser penalty, the particular should be construed as an exception to the general, and the lesser penalty prescribed thereby imposed. (So held under §§13140, 13144, C., '27.)

Drazich v Hollowell, 207-427; 223 NW 253

Guest statute—exceptions not to supplant general rule. Interpretation of automobile guest statute should be consistent with the intention of the legislature and its mandate in making a host not liable for injuries to guest except under exceptions of driver being reckless or intoxicated, and the statute should not be so interpreted as to supplant the general rule with the exceptions.

Crabb v Shanks, 226-589; 284 NW 446

General statutes—when applicable to governmental agencies. A general statute will not be construed to embrace a governmental agency in the absence of a definite legislative declaration that such agency is included.

Leckliter v City, 211-251; 233 NW 58

General statutes—when applicable to governmental agencies. General words of a statute will not be construed as applicable to the government or to its agencies unless such construction is clearly and indisputably required by the text of the act.

State v Des Moines, 221-642; 266 NW 41

Ambiguity as prerequisite to construction. A statute is not to be read as tho open to construction as a matter of course; but construction is invoked only when a statute contains such ambiguities or obscurities that reasonable minds may disagree as to their meaning.

Palmer v Board, 226-92; 283 NW 415

Plain meaning given in interpretation.

Green v Brinegar, 228- ; 292 NW 229

Plainness of meaning excluding construction. There can be no construction of a statute which is expressed in such plain and simple language that he who runs may read and understand it. So held as to that clause of the moratorium act which declares: "The provisions of this act shall not apply to any mortgage * * * executed subsequent to January 1, 1934 * * *"

Home Owners Corp. v District Court, 223-269; 272 NW 416

Ambiguous statute — conditions existing — occasion and necessity of statute considered. Where language of statute is ambiguous, it is proper to consider conditions with reference to subject matter that existed when statute was adopted, occasion and necessity for statute, and causes which induced its enactment.

Jones v Dunkelberg, (NOR); 260 NW 717

Income tax—rent received on the land in another state taxable. Income tax statutes held to be so plain and certain as to require no construction and to patently indicate a legislative intent to tax all personal income whether originating in the state or without the state, and to plainly include rent received in the state from property located in another state.

Palmer v Board, 226-92; 283 NW 415

Strict construction rule nonapplicable. Strict construction of statutes granting exemptions from taxation, altho being the rule, has no application to a plain, clear, and unambiguous statute affording no room for construction.

State v Griswold, 225-237; 280 NW 489

Judicial notice of conditions—effect. While the court should, in a proper case, in construing a statute, take judicial notice of the state-wide condition surrounding the subject matter covered by the statute, yet such condition will not warrant the court in overthrowing the clear and concise language of the statute.

Andrew v Bank, 214-204; 242 NW 80

Division of sections—effect. The mere act of dividing an existing section of law and printing its parts in the code as separate sections works no change in the meaning of the law. So held as to §4840, C., '97.

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Statutes—editorial arrangement changes no law. A mere rearrangement of statutes in code revision, or dividing one section into several sections, does not without legislative intention change the purpose, operation, and effect thereof.

Jones v Mills Co., 224-1375; 279 NW 96

Placement of section in code—catchwords—effect on interpretation. The act of placing a section under a particular chapter of the code and the wording of the headings of the section, have little, if any, weight as official interpretations.

State v Oge, 227-1094; 290 NW 1

Legislative titles. Legislative acts must be construed consistently with their titles. Nor can they be given any broader scope than their titles.

Siegel v Railway, 201-712; 208 NW 78

Subjects and titles of acts—co-operative selling agencies. An act "to provide for the organization of associations without capital stock and not for pecuniary profit" is broad enough to justify the inclusion of a provision (1) authorizing a co-operative selling association to require its members to sell all or a stipulated part of their products through the association, (2) providing for the form of the contract in such cases, and (3) empowering the association to provide for and collect liquidated damages for a violation of such contract.

I STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL—continued

Titles of acts—sufficiency—applicability of act. A title which recites that the act "creates a park board in cities having a population of 125,000 or more" sufficiently indicates that the act is designed to apply to cities subsequently acquiring the required population.

State v Darling, 216-553; 246 NW 390; 88 ALR 218

Titles of acts—section relating to different but related matters. The constitutional provision (Art. III, §29) which provides that "Every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title" is not violated by the title preceding §9253, C., '31, to wit, "Action by creditor", even tho said section does provide for action by three different parties, viz: action by an assignee, action by a receiver, and action by a creditor.

Andrew v Bank, 216-244; 249 NW 377

Construing statute—catchwords. In construing statute which provides in substance that in the sale of school, agricultural college, or university land sold on credit, which is sold for taxes, the purchaser shall acquire only the interest of the person holding the fee, and that the state's lien shall not be affected by such sale, the supreme court will not construe the catchwords for such statute to show legislative intent to omit school fund mortgages, as the catchwords are no part of the law enacted and are not to be considered in construing the statute.

Monona County v. Waples, 226-1281; 286 NW 461

Statutes—duty of court to make effective. It is the duty of the court in construing statutes to seek the object and purpose of the law and then give it force and effect if not contrary to established legal precedents.

Keokuk Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Giving effect to all provisions. Statutes must be so construed, if possible, as to give effect to every provision thereof.

Rhoades v Allyn, 220-474; 262 NW 788

Giving effect to entire statute. In the construction of a statute, words will never be treated as surplusage if a construction can be legitimately found which will give force to and preserve all the words of the statute.

Dorsey v Bentzinger, 209-883; 226 NW 52

Duty to harmonize statutes. On the claim that statutes are inconsistent, the court must preserve both statutes, if reasonably possible.

Ryerson v Ins. Co., 213-524; 239 NW 64

Legislative intent derived from entire act. In construing a particular statute to arrive at the legislative intention, the court should consider the entire act, and, so far as possible, construe its various provisions in the light of their relation to the whole.

Ahrweiler v Board, 226-229; 283 NW 889

Literal words limited by intent. Tho a thing is within the literal words of a statute, it will not be deemed in the statute when it is clearly not within the intention of the statute. Applied in the construction of the statute (§5026, C., '35) relative to the liability of the owner of an automobile who consents to its operation by another.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Criminal law—soliciting for prostitution—soliciting for personal gratification not included. The statute providing a penalty for any person who solicits another to have carnal knowledge is intended to punish for the solicitation for purpose of prostitution and not to punish a defendant in soliciting by mail a female to have carnal knowledge with him for his personal gratification.

State v Oge, 227-1094; 290 NW 1

Gross premiums tax—when payable—legislative intent. Legislative intent being the cardinal rule of statutory construction, the plain intent of a statute taxing gross premiums of foreign corporations is a tax computed on and payable at the end of the year.

State v Ins. Co., 223-1301; 275 NW 26

Punctuation a fallible standard.

Seeger v Maniford, 210-683; 231 NW 479

Punctuation as evincing intention. A comma may be so employed in a will as to be the fair equivalent of the words "and also".

Buck v MacEachron, 209-1168; 229 NW 693

Codification of dual definition of same term. A legislative codification of two different statutory definitions of a term, e. g., "dog", into one definition, needless to say, is conclusive on the courts.

Bigelow v Saylor, 209-294; 228 NW 279

Legislative definition binding on court—"sale"—"retail sale". The legislature having defined certain terms, the court will follow that definition. So held as to "sale" and "retail sale" used in the sales tax act.

Kistner v Board, 225-404; 280 NW 587

Legislative construction—court's consideration. A legislative construction of a statute is entitled to consideration by the courts, but when it appears that an act may have been passed for the purpose of removing doubt from previous statutes, the court should so consider it.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

Former statute revised—legislative construction. When the motor vehicle statutes were completely revised, and exempted the vendor of a motor vehicle under a conditional sales contract from liability for negligent operation of the vehicle, such revision did not create a legislative construction that a former statute defining "owner" as the person with the use or control of a vehicle included such vendor within its definition, as a general revision of the law creates no presumption of an intent to change the law as is created when a particular section or a limited part of an act is re-enacted.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

Amended statute. An amended statute will be interpreted as if it had read from the beginning as amended.

State v Local Board, 225-855; 283 NW 87

Amendment—presumption. The enactment of a statutory rule of procedure in lieu of one which the supreme court has held to be of doubtful meaning carries a presumption that the change was made in view of the criticism aimed at the old statute.

Dayton v Ins. Co., 202-753; 210 NW 945

Amendment—unallowable construction. The theory that an amended statute will be construed as tho the original act had been wholly repealed and re-enacted in its amended form, cannot, manifestly, be entertained when the amended statute, as a whole, reflects a contrary intent. So held where the amendment injected into the original statute a superfluous limiting date.

Metropolitan v Reeve, 222-255; 268 NW 531

Illogically placed amendment—effect. An act, additional to existing statutes on the same subject, is not invalid simply because it is declared to be an amendment to a section which, tho on the same subject, is not, perhaps, the most logical section to carry such amendment.

Iowa-Neb. Co. v Villisca, 220-238; 261 NW 423

Invalid amendment—effect. An invalid amendment to a valid section of the statute leaves the section in the form in which it existed before the attempt to amend was made, unless a contrary intent on the part of the legislature is made to appear.

Talbott v Des Moines, 218-1397; 257 NW 393

Amendment—invalidity in whole (?) or part (?). When a statutory enactment for the taking of appeals in tax-adjustment proceedings turns out to be wholly invalid, such invalidity necessarily carries down all amendments which were an inseparable part of the enactment and which were designed to harmonize other statutes with the new enactment.

Talbott v Des Moines, 218-1397; 257 NW 393

Amendment of tax sale statute—no implied amendment of special assessment sale statute. When a statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the sale of property against which the county held tax sale certificates, the amendment did not apply to other statutes requiring the county treasurer to sell property for delinquent special assessments, as an act amending a specified statute cannot be construed as amending an unmentioned statute, and repeal of statutes by implication is not favored.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Tax sale—redemption—liberal construction. The right of redemption from a sale will be liberally construed in favor of the taxpayer.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Tax sale—statutory notice to redeem—strict compliance mandatory. The requirements of §7279, C., '35, providing for steps necessary to cut off right of redemption from tax sale, are absolute, and the court is without power or authority to dispense with these positive requirements on the ground that they are unnecessary.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

Application to things subsequently coming into existence. It is a rule of statutory construction that legislative enactments in general and comprehensive terms, prospective in operation, apply alike to all persons, subjects, and business within their general purview and scope coming into existence subsequent to their passage.

Bruce Transfer Co. v Johnston, 227-50; 287 NW 278

Public policy of statute. The public policy of a valid statute is solely for the legislature to determine, not the courts.

Brutsche v Coon Rapids, 223-487; 272 NW 624

Comprehensive power of general assembly. The general assembly has power to enact any legislation it sees fit, provided such legislation is not plainly in violation of the state or federal constitution.

Carroll v Cedar Falls, 221-277; 261 NW 652

Delegating powers to nonlegislative board. While the legislature may not delegate its power to make laws, yet when it had declared a policy which is definite in describing the subject to which it relates and the character of the regulation intended to be imposed, it may delegate to nonlegislative board the power to make rules and regulations for effectuating such policy.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Necessity for determination. The court will not, on an order dissolving a temporary injunction pending the trial of the main action, pass upon the constitutionality of the statute under attack.

Iowa Assn. v Board, 202-85; 209 NW 511

I STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL—continued

Due process of law—“notice” implied in context of statute. A statute is not unconstitutional because it does not expressly provide for notice to an interested party. A clear implication of notice, duly complied with, is all-sufficient.

Chehock v School Dist., 210-258; 228 NW 585

Absence of statutory provision for notice—power of court to prescribe. When due process necessitates notice to a party and the statute makes no provision for such notice, the court may validly prescribe a notice which is reasonably calculated to give the interested party knowledge of the proceeding and opportunity to be heard.

Franklin v Bonner, 201-516; 207 NW 778

Temporary appointment of guardian—validity. The appointment of a temporary guardian on proper and sufficient notice to the person sought to be placed under guardianship is valid, even tho the statute authorizing such appointment is silent as to notice.

In re Barner, 201-525; 207 NW 613

Constitutionality—borrowed objection. A party may not have a portion of a legislative act, which does not affect him, declared unconstitutional.

State v Soeder, 216-815; 249 NW 412

Statutory gratuity—unallowable complaint. A party may not complain as to the statutory terms on which a mere gratuity is given to him.

Loftus v Department, 211-566; 232 NW 412

Burden to prove invalidity. One who attacks the constitutionality of a statute must show its invalidity beyond a reasonable doubt.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Doubt as to unconstitutionality—effect. Cities and towns need no statutory authority in order validly to sell the excess products of their municipally owned utility plants. It follows that the unconstitutionality of a statute which authorizes a city, having 7,500 people and owning its electric light plant, to furnish electricity to a town of 400 people is, at the least, very doubtful, and, being doubtful, the statute must be deemed constitutional.

Carroll v Cedar Falls, 221-277; 261 NW 652

Amendment by construction nonpermissible. The court will not, in order to save the constitutionality of a statute, declare a construction which, in effect, amends the statute.

New York Ins. v Burbank, 209-199; 216 NW 742

Uncertainty of meaning—effect. A statute should not be held invalid because of uncertainty of meaning unless such holding is reasonably unavoidable.

Tolerton et al. v Board, 222-908; 270 NW 427

Partial invalidity—effect. The invalidity of a portion of a statute will not carry down the entire statute when the invalid portion is so severable from the valid part that the valid part remains as an effective statute.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865
Davidson Co. v Mulock, 212-730; 235 NW 45
See State v Council, 207-923; 223 NW 737

Partial unconstitutionality. The holding by the federal supreme court that the statute of this state (§§9279, 9280, C., '27) prohibiting the receipt of deposits by insolvent banks and bankers generally, was constitutionally inapplicable to national banks and bankers did not have the effect of carrying down the statute in toto—did not have the effect of thereafter rendering said statute inapplicable to state banks and bankers, even tho the state legislature did not, after said holding, re-enact said sections.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865
See State v Council, 207-923; 223 NW 737

Nonconclusiveness of enrollment. Principle reaffirmed that the enrollment of a bill is not conclusive that constitutional requirements have been complied with in its passage.

Scott v Board, 221-1060; 267 NW 111

Adoption of conference report—effect. When the general assembly is in deadlock over the final form and contents of a bill, the due adoption by both houses of the report of a joint conference committee and of the amendments therein proposed as an adjustment of existing differences, terminates all necessary legislative proceedings on said bill—other than enrollment and due signing. In other words, no necessity exists for a further or additional reading and passage of the bill as modified by said newly adopted amendments when it is made to appear that, prior to the time said differences arose, each house had duly passed the bill immediately following the last reading thereof in said houses.

[The conference report and amendments therein proposed were adopted by a ye and nay vote equal to that constitutionally required for the passage of a bill and said vote was duly entered on the journals of each house.]

Scott v Board, 221-1060; 267 NW 111

Liberal construction—workmen's compensation act. The workmen's compensation act is to be liberally construed.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Delegation of powers—liberal interpretation. The constitutional prohibition against delegating legislative powers to administrative boards is given a liberal interpretation in favor of constitutionality of legislation.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Form of bills. A statute providing the form of bills can have no force or effect other than as a directory provision.

Waugh v Shirer, 216-468; 249 NW 246

Statute invalid because unworkable. A statute may be invalid because the legislature has enacted it in such indefinite and uncertain form that it is unworkable. So held as to that part of chapter 205, Acts 43GA, relating to appeals from over-assessments of taxes.

Davidson Co. v Mulock, 212-730; 235 NW 45

Nullity because of unworkableness. Whether the purchase by a city or town of electrical energy may be financed under §6134-d1, C., '31 [§6134.01, C., '39], or whether the provisions of §§6134-d5, 6134-d6 [§§6134.09, 6134.10, C., '39] of said code relative to competitive bidding for furnishing electrical energy are a nullity because of indefiniteness, uncertainty, or unworkableness, quaere.

Brutsche v Town, 218-1073; 256 NW 914

Seeming contradiction—effect. The fact that the so-called Simmer law provides (§6134-d2, C., '35 [§6134.06, C., '39]) that no part of the cost of light and power plants erected thereunder (1) shall be payable by taxation, yet also provides, (2) that the city shall pay for current used by it—which payment necessarily must be made from funds derived from taxation—presents no such contradiction or unworkable condition as to invalidate the law.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Self-nullification. A legislative act which purports to legalize specified municipal warrants, the legality of which are then being litigated, is completely nullified, so far as said question of legality is concerned, by the insertion in the act of a proviso that "nothing in this act shall affect any pending litigation".

Mote v Town, 211-392; 233 NW 695

Reinsertion of stricken words. Principle reaffirmed that the courts will not read into a statute words which have long since been legislatively stricken from the act.

Gardner v Trustees, 217-1390; 250 NW 740

Executive construction. Principle recognized that great weight should be given to the construction placed upon statutes by those charged with their administration. But held principle not applicable under facts of present case.

State v Standard Oil, 222-1209; 271 NW 185

Administrative construction — effect. An administrative construction of a statute which has been fully acquiesced in for more than half a century by those vitally and continuously interested therein, will not be disturbed except for a very compelling reason.

New York Ins. v Burbank, 209-199; 216 NW 742

Executive construction. The long-continued and unquestioned construction placed upon a statute by the state executive department charged with its enforcement will be given great weight by the courts.

John Hancock Ins. v Lookingbill, 218-373; 253 NW 604

Executive construction—weight given. State departmental executive's construction of statutes to be given much weight.

State v Ind. Foresters, 226-1339; 286 NW 425

Construction by executive departments—legislative intent—presumption. The legislature is presumed to know the construction of its statutes by the executive departments, and when legislature indicates no dissatisfaction with such construction, the court may conclude such construction followed legislative intent.

State v Ind. Foresters, 226-1339; 286 NW 425

Carriage of livestock. The statutory provisions to the effect (1) that livestock shall be shipped at the highest practicable speed, etc., (2) that proof that the shipment was made according to timetables will not show prima facie compliance with the statute, and (3) that the railroad commissioners shall prescribe the speed of such shipment (§§8114 to 8118, inclusive, C., '24), do not justify an instruction which, in effect, submits to the jury the question of the reasonableness of a freight train schedule. These statutes contemplate the fixing of livestock shipping schedules by the railroad commission, with the attending presumption that such schedules will be reasonable.

Siegel v Railway, 201-712; 208 NW 78

Jurisdiction—existing but noneffective statute. A city, in acquiring jurisdiction to construct a public improvement, need only comply with existing effective statutes. In other words, it need not comply with a statute which then exists, but which has not yet taken effect.

Butters v Des Moines, 202-30; 209 NW 401

Retroactive effect. Statutes are not, ordinarily, given retroactive effect.

In re Culbertson, 204-473; 215 NW 761
Foster v Bellows, 204-1052; 216 NW 956

Retroactive application. A statute prohibiting the taxation of attorney fees in eminent domain proceedings instituted by the state applies to a proceeding pending but undetermined at the time of the enactment.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Nonretrospective statute. A statute which provides that "the superintendent of banking henceforth shall be the sole and only receiver" for state banks and trust companies in no manner displaces a then qualified and acting receiver.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Nonretroactive statute. The statute limiting the right of a guest riding in an automobile to recover damages consequent on the conduct of the operator has no application to an accident occurring prior to the passage of the statute.

Thomas v Disbrow, 208-873; 224 NW 36

Nonretroactive tax. The legalization of a tax levy made by a county under an optional and supposedly legal statute, which, however, was in fact originally invalid because of a fatal defect in the title, does not constitute a levying by the general assembly of a retroactive tax on the county.

Chicago, RI Ry. v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

Retroactive operation—venue. A plaintiff may avail himself of a statute which regulates the venue of the action, and which is in force when the action is brought, irrespective of the fact that the statute was not in force when the cause of action accrued.

Goben v Akin, 208-1354; 227 NW 400

Payment of tuition—retroaction. Statute enacted in 1937 providing for payment of tuition of wards of charitable institution attending public schools held not retroactive in action involving liability for tuition incurred for years prior to that date.

School Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

Legalization of invalid tax. The legislature may validly legalize a levy of taxes made under a supposedly legal statute which, however, was invalid because its title was constitutionally insufficient.

Chicago, RI Ry v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

Statutes defining crime. Principle reaffirmed that statutes definitive of crime are strictly construed and all doubt resolved in favor of the accused.

State v Cooper, 221-658; 265 NW 915

Adding new element of criminal offense. The amendment of a criminal statute by adding a new and additional element of the offense does not, because of the saving clause in subsec. 1 of this section, have the effect of pardoning all unconvicted violators of the statute as it existed prior to the enactment of the additional element, unless the act which adds the new element evinces an intent to pardon.

State v Brown, 215-600; 246 NW 258

Indictment—fatal insufficiency. An indictment which alleges that a member of the Iowa liquor control commission knowingly and willfully permitted a named person unlawfully to possess intoxicating liquors (other than beer), charges no offense under §1921-f92, C., '35 [§1921.092, C., '39], in the absence of an allegation that said possessor was a member, or secretary, or officer, or employee of said commission. The term "such violation" in said section refers solely to violation by members, by the secretary, by officers, or by employees, of the commission.

State v Cooper, 221-658; 265 NW 915

Continuing appropriation statute—biennial appropriation paramount. A statute, altho in the code because of its general and permanent nature, which sets the salary of the attorney general, a state officer, is not a continuing appropriation for that officer, when the biennial appropriation act appropriates a different and smaller amount for such officer for the biennium and declares "all salaries provided for in this act are in lieu of all existing statutory salaries". Mandamus will not lie to require payment of the larger salary.

O'Connor v Murtagh, 225-782; 281 NW 455

Sale of bank stock for payment of assessment—common-law or statutory right of action. As to a stockholder who acquired his stock prior to the enactment of a statute permitting the sale of stock to enforce payment of a stockholder's assessment to reimburse an impairment of the bank capital, such statute does not necessarily exclude a common-law remedy by action when not so construed by the highest state court, and such statute declaring that the stockholder shall be liable for any deficiency after applying the proceeds of such sale, and providing for its collection by suit, is not a deprivation of property without due process by impairing a contract obligation.

Shriver v Woodbine Bk., 285 US 467

National bank directors—violation of duty—state statute invoked—construction. State statutes of limitation apply and may be invoked by directors of national bank in respect to liability for violation of duty, but two-year limitation in respect to personal reputation, held, inapplicable under such circumstances. The plain, obvious, and rational meaning of statute is always to be preferred to any curious, narrow, hidden sense, and, in case of substantial doubt, longer rather than shorter period of limitation is to be preferred.

Payne v Ostrus, 50 F 2d, 1039

Bastardy proceedings—repeal of statute—effect. The repeal of the former statutes relative to establishing the paternity of an illegitimate child and charging the father with the support of such child (41 GA, ch 81) did not in any manner affect an existing right to institute such proceeding, even tho no proceedings were pending at the time of the appeal.

State v Shepherd, 202-437; 210 NW 476

Bovine tuberculosis law—nonrequired bond by examiner. In applying the bovine tuberculosis test, the examiner need not, nor may he be required to, post a bond to indemnify the owner against loss in case cattle are wrongfully destroyed, because the statute does not expressly or impliedly require such bond.

Peverill v Department, 216-534; 245 NW 334

De jure corporation. A statute which provides that "no corporation shall have legal existence until such [certified] articles be left for record" does not mean that a failure to strictly comply with the statute prevents a de facto corporation from coming into existence.

Wilkin Co. v Assn., 208-921; 223 NW 899

Restriction on corporations. A statute which limits the power of corporations which are organized under the laws of this state to take a testamentary devise will not be extended by the courts to include foreign corporations.

Ross v Seminary, 204-648; 215 NW 710

Foreign corporations—dissolution—effect on pending actions. A duly rendered decree of dissolution of a foreign corporation, at the instance of the state under the laws of which said corporation was organized, is, in effect, an executed sentence of death; being such, said decree ipso facto works an abatement (1) of an unadjudicated action in rem pending in this state against said dissolved corporation, and (2) of garnishment proceeding pending in connection with said action. Under such circumstances, the garnishee may properly move for and be granted an order of discharge.

Peoria Co. v Streator Co., 221-690; 266 NW 548

Foreign remedial statute—nonapplicability. The remedial statutes of a foreign state, authorizing an action in said state against a corporation which has been dissolved at the instance of said state, do not and cannot control the procedure when the action is sought to be maintained in this state; and especially is this true when said authorized foreign procedure is contrary to the procedural law of this state.

Peoria Co. v Streator Co., 221-690; 266 NW 548

Preferred labor claim act. The preferred labor claim act, providing that, when the property of a person is "seized upon by any process of any court," claims for labor shall be preferred over other claims, does not embrace a seizure under execution at the instance of the labor claimant. In other words, the labor claimant may not base a preference on an execution seizure instigated by himself.

Heessel v Bank, 205-508; 218 NW 298

Legalizing act re void warrants—construction. A legalizing act purporting to legalize specified void municipal warrants then in litigation, but which act was held in said litigation inapplicable to said warrants because of a proviso in said act that it should not affect pending litigation, is not subject to the construction in later litigation that the act is applicable to the extent of legalizing the contract under which said former warrants were issued even tho the warrants were not legalized.

Roland Co. v Town, 215-82; 244 NW 707

Mandatory procedure. The statutory requirement that the county treasurer shall pay collected municipal taxes to the city treasurer only on a written order signed by the mayor and city clerk or auditor is mandatory. (§6229, C., '27)

State v Hanson, 210-773; 231 NW 428

Nonmandatory procedure. The statutory command that the county auditor shall, after each assessment in his county, certify to the secretary of agriculture the number of owners of breeding cattle in his county for the purpose of enabling the said secretary to determine the numerical sufficiency of petitioners to agreements for the enrollment of the county under the accredited area plan for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis, is directory only.

Peverill v Board, 201-1050; 205 NW 543

Nonduty of supervisors to purchase certificate. The statutory provision, that the board of supervisors or the drainage trustees "may" purchase an outstanding certificate evidencing a sale of land for the nonpayment of drainage assessments, simply invests the board or trustees with discretion so to purchase. No mandatory duty so to purchase in order to protect the bondholder is imposed, even tho the bondholder must look solely to assessments for payment of his bond.

Bechtel v Board, 217-251; 251 NW 633

Nonresident with securities office in state—statute authorizing service on agent—constitutional. A state statute permitting the service of process on any agent or clerk employed in an office or agency maintained in the state by a nonresident in all actions growing out of, or connected with, the business of such office or agency does not abridge the privileges and immunities to which he is entitled by Art. IV, §2, of the federal constitution, or deprive him of the equal protection of the laws.

Doherty & Co. v Goodman, 294 US 623

Ordinances—construction as to employment of assistants. The superintendent of a department of municipal government under the so-called commission plan (Ch 326, C., '24) may

I STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL—concluded himself validly employ authorized and necessary employees to carry on the work of his department (1) when an existing ordinance in effect grants such power, and (2) when an existing ordinance makes an appropriation of funds for such department and fixes the number of employees and the separate salaries thereof; and this is true notwithstanding an additional existing ordinance which provides, in effect, that all contracts shall be entered into or approved by the council as a whole, it being held that the latter ordinance is not a limitation on the former.

Loran v Des Moines, 201-543; 207 NW 529

Personal earnings—salary of public officer. The salary—the “personal earnings”—of a public officer is exempt from liability on a judgment obtained against him and his surety, by the public body, because of the failure of the officer to account for public funds coming into his hands. The court cannot, on the plea of public policy, rule into the statute an exception which the legislature has not seen fit to declare. So held where the surety having paid the judgment, and thereby subrogated to the rights of the county, sought reimbursement from the officer's salary.

Ohio Ins. v Galvin, 222-670; 269 NW 254; 108 ALR 1036

Return of execution fees. An action to enforce the statutory liability of a county to return mortgage foreclosure execution fees to the certificate holder (when the debtor does not redeem) is barred from and after the expiration of five years from the enactment of the statute giving the right to such return.

Liljedahl v Montgomery Co., 212-951; 237 NW 523

Tax statute—construed against taxing body. A proviso or exemption in a taxing statute in derogation of its general enacting clause must be strictly construed. However, as to contention that an income tax statute does not include out-of-state rent, not because of an exception, but by its terms, if open to construction at all, must fall within the general rule that tax statutes are construed strictly against the taxing body.

Palmer v Board, 226-92; 283 NW 415

Trustee's liability for taxes—determined by state law as construed by courts. A trustee in bankruptcy takes title to all property of bankrupt by operation of law, and has the rights of an execution creditor, with legal or equitable lien, and whether or not the city and county treasurer's claim for taxes is a lien, or whether or not it is “due and owing”, must be determined according to the laws of Iowa, as construed by its highest court.

In re Davenport Dry Goods Co., 9 F 2d, 477

Motor vehicle fuel tax—constitutional. The Iowa motor vehicle fuel tax was obviously not intended to reach transactions in interstate commerce, but to tax the use of motor fuel after it came to rest in Iowa, and the requirement that the distributor as shipper into Iowa shall, as agent of the state, report and pay the tax on the gasoline thus coming into the state for use by others on whom the tax falls, imposes no unconstitutional burden, either upon interstate commerce or upon the distributor.

Monamotor Oil Co. v Johnson, 292 US 86

Vacancy in office—statute supplementing constitution. The constitutional provision (Const. Art. XI, §6) that appointees to fill vacancies in office shall hold until the next general election, is not self-executing, and therefore has been properly supplemented by §1157, C., '31.

II PAR. 1. REPEAL

Standing saving clause. The statutory provision that “the repeal of a statute does not * * * affect any right which has accrued, any duty imposed, any penalty incurred, or any proceeding commenced, under or by virtue of the statute repealed”, constitutes a standing saving clause which, in effect, accompanies all repealing statutes.

State v Shepherd, 202-437; 210 NW 476

Repeals by implication. Repeals by implication are not favorites of the law.

Ogilvie v City, 212-117; 233 NW 526
Neessen v Armstrong, 213-378; 239 NW 56
Schoenwetter v Oxley, 213-523; 239 NW 118
Fowler v Board, 214-395; 238 NW 618
Towns v City, 214-76; 241 NW 658

Repeal by implication. Principle reaffirmed that in order to work the repeal by implication of an old statute by a new statute, there must be an absolute repugnancy between the two statutes.

Hahn v County, 218-543; 255 NW 695

Inferential repeal—when recognized. The court will not declare a statute repealed, or even modified, on the basis of a mere inference arising from the enactment of a later statute, unless such declaration is unavoidable.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Repugnant statutes—implied repeal. When two statutes are repugnant and cannot be reconciled, the last in time of enactment must prevail.

Waugh v Shirer, 216-468; 249 NW 246

Implied repeal—statutes not in pari materia. A statute cannot be deemed impliedly repealed by other statutes which are not in pari materia. As an illustration, statutes dealing merely with the procedure to be followed in making nominations for office, and in filling vacancies in such nominations, or in determining the eligibility of candidates, cannot be held to impliedly repeal a statute which authorizes the holding of an election.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

Municipal license of trucks—nonrepeal by state law. The legislature by the enactment of Ch 252-C1, C., '31 [Ch 252.3, C., '39], and thereby requiring of truck operators a privilege or occupation tax when not operating between fixed termini nor over a regular route, on any and all highways of the state, did not impliedly repeal that part of §5970, C., '31, which empowers cities and towns to license a truck operator whose business is limited to the municipality—there being no substantial conflict between said statutes.

Towns v Sioux City, 214-76; 241 NW 658

Holdership in due course—amount of recovery. The former statutory rule (§3070, C., '97) to the effect that when a note has its inception in fraud a holder in due course could recover only the amount which he paid for the note was impliedly repealed by the enactment of the negotiable instruments law, §9517, C., '24.

Sword v Spry, 205-266; 215 NW 737

Contiguous corporations combined by respective boards without submission to vote. In view of its legislative history and the apparent intention of the legislature, the enactment of §4191, C., '35, requiring that proposals to add territory to an existing district be approved separately by majority of voters in each territory affected, did not modify or repeal §4133, C., '35, providing that " * * * boundary lines of contiguous school corporations may be changed by the concurrent action of the respective boards of directors * * * so * * * that one corporation shall be included with the other as a single corporation" hence, respective boards of directors of contiguous school corporations had authority to combine such school corporations without approval of voters.

Peterson v Sch. Dist., 227-110; 287 NW 275

III PAR. 1. EFFECT OF REPEAL

"Right" and "privilege" contrasted. The statutory provision to the effect that "the repeal of a statute does not affect any right which has accrued" does not protect a mere privilege.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Effect on existing action. The repeal of the former statutes relative to establishing the paternity of an illegitimate child and charging the father with the support of such child (41GA, ch 81 [§§12667-a1-12667-a54, C., '27]) did not in any manner affect an existing right to institute such proceedings, even tho no proceedings were pending at the time of repeal.

State v Shepherd, 202-437; 210 NW 476

Preservation of accrued right. An action to recover damages for negligently causing the death of a married woman survives the repeal of the statute authorizing such action, and the measure of recovery in such cases is governed by the repealed statute, not by the measure of recovery provided in a later and substituted statute on the same subject.

Azeltine v Lutterman, 218-675; 254 NW 854

Repeal of source of payment—effect. The repeal of a statute which provides the funds with which to retire duly authorized bonds as they are issued, without providing any new source of payment, necessarily precludes the further issuance of such bonds.

Dee v Tama Co., 209-1341; 230 NW 337

Mulet tax—void. A mulet tax certified and levied some two years after a violation of the intoxicating liquor statutes, and after the repeal of the statutes authorizing the levy of such tax, and after the property affected had passed into the hands of an innocent party, is void as to such latter party. (This on the assumption that the repeal of a statute does not affect any right which has accrued, any duty imposed, or any penalty incurred.)

Shriver v Polk County, 203-529; 212 NW 718

Violation of replaced statute.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Subrogation—repeal of preferential deposit law. Sureties on a bank depository bond conditioned to hold the state harmless on deposit of state funds in said bank, and given at a time when the state possessed a statutory preferential right, in case the bank was thrown into receivership, to be paid in full prior to the payment of general depositors, are not entitled, upon the payment of a loss, in case of such receivership, to be subrogated to such right on the part of the state when, prior to such payment, the statute giving such right has been repealed. This is on the principle that a surety is entitled to subrogation only upon payment of the principal's debt, and only to the rights then possessed by the creditor.

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

Discharge of surety—repeal of preferential bank deposit law. The repeal of a statute which gives the state, when it is a depositor in a bank, a preferential right to be paid in full if the bank passes into the hands of a receiver does not constitute a release of security in such sense as to release a surety on a bond which secures said deposit.

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

IV PAR. 2. WORDS AND PHRASES

Motor vehicle words and phrases. See under §5000.01

Discussion. See 12 ILR 280—The constituents of “chastity”; 17 ILR 87—“Void” and “voidable”—statute of frauds; 17 ILR 254—Marriage consanguinity; 17 ILR 402—Usury; 17 ILR 524—Gambling; 20 ILR 483—“Domicile” and “residence”

General rules. In the construction of statutes words and phrases will, if possible, be given their ordinary and usual meaning, and that construction will be adopted, if possible, which will give force and effect to every part of the statute.

Des M. Ry. v City, 205-495; 216 NW 284

General and specific words. Principle “Expressio unius est exclusio alterius” applied.

In re Barnett, 217-187; 251 NW 59

“About November first.” A contract to deliver a commercial product “about November first” requires a delivery substantially on said date or near approximation thereto.

North Am. Gin. Co. v Gilbertson, 200-1349; 206 NW 610

“Accidental means” defined. An injury caused by the intentional lifting of a log upon a wagon is one resulting from “accidental means” when such resulting injury was unexpected, undesigned, and not the usual or natural result of such an act.

Clarkson v Cas. Co., 201-1249; 207 NW 132

Acquiescence—elements. On the issue of acquiescence by both parties to a boundary line, the intention of the parties is important. Acquiescence is consent inferred from silence, involving notice or knowledge of the claim of the other party, and occurs where one who is entitled to impeach a transaction or enforce a right neglects to do so, from which the other party may infer that he has abandoned such right.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

Filing information—“actually in session” defined. The statutory right of the county attorney to file a trial information “at any time when the grand jury is not actually in session” does not mean that he is prohibited from filing such information at any time of any day on which the grand jury was in session. So held where the information was filed on the day on which the grand jury was duly convened, but at a time on said day when said jury was not “actually” in session.

Thrasher v Haynes, 221-1137; 264 NW 915

Adverse possession — requirements — intention. For adverse possession there must be occupancy taken with the intention to assert title beyond the true boundary line under a claim of right which must be as broad as the possession, whereas, occupancy taken by mistake beyond the true line with claim of right only up to the true line will not acquire title.

Patrick v Cheney, 226-853; 285 NW 184

“Advertisement for bids”—irregular compliance with mandatory duty. The irregularity of municipal authorities in advertising for, receiving, and opening, bids for the construction of a municipal light and power plant before instead of after the director of the budget had, on appeal, overruled objections to the plans, specifications, and proposed form of contract, (§357, C., '31) does not invalidate the contract entered into after said ruling and specifically approved by said director. But the duty to “advertise for bids” is mandatory in case an appeal is taken to the budget director.

Johnson v Town, 215-1033; 247 NW 552

“And” may be both conjunctive and disjunctive. The word “and”, used in the homestead exemption act allowing an owner credit on his taxes “for the 1936 taxes payable in 1937 and for the 1937 taxes payable in 1938”, construed to be used as a conjunctive with reference to a homestead eligible to benefits for both of said years; and when used with reference to a homestead not eligible in both years, to be used as a disjunctive, equivalent to the word “or”.

Ahrweiler v Board, 226-229; 283 NW 889

“And” as “or”. A title, “An act to legalize any and all tax levies heretofore made and collected” supports the legalization of “All taxes heretofore assessed, levied or collected,” when the intent of the legislature will be carried out by construing “made and collected” as “made or collected”.

Chicago, RI Ry. v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

“And shall also.” When interpreting the words “and shall also” consideration must be given to the harmony of the entire statute in which the words appear.

Brutsche v Town, 218-1073; 256 NW 914

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Insurance—notice and proof of loss—“as soon as practicable”. A policy requirement that written notice of an accident shall be given “as soon as practicable” means that said notice shall be given within a reasonable length of time under all the facts and circumstances. So held in a case where the insured inadvertently lost his policy and forgot the name of the insurer until some five months after liability accrued on the policy.

Gifford v Cas. Co., 216-23; 248 NW 235

“Between fixed termini.” A truck operator who, under a permit duly granted under chapter 252-C1, C., '31 [Ch 252.3, C., '39], and by means of his motor truck, transports for hire freight from place to place, at irregular times, and on no schedule of service, and only when he receives unsolicited and acceptable calls to do such transporting, is not operating "between fixed termini or over a regular route" within the meaning of chapters 252-A1, or 252-A2, C., '31 [Chs 252.1, or 252.2, C., '39], and, therefore, is under no obligation to obtain a certificate of necessity or convenience or to pay the tax required by said chapters.

State v Transfer, 213-1269; 239 NW 125

"Bi-monthly payments." A contract for services providing for payments each two weeks is obligatory, even tho the party rendering the service has not worked two full weeks.

Goben v Pav. Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

"Building." A schoolhouse is a "building," within the definition of statutory burglary. (§13001, C., '27.)

State v Burzette, 208-818; 222 NW 394

"Buildings"—intent of parties. The word "building" as used in restrictive covenants in deeds of conveyance will be so construed as to give effect to the manifest intention and purposes of the parties. Held, inter alia, that structures for screening sand, and a derrick with hoisting machinery were "buildings" within the meaning of restrictive covenants against the erection of buildings which would cut off a view.

Curtis v Schmidt, 212-1279; 237 NW 463

"Bushel" construed. The admeasurement to a landlord by an agreed arbitrator of a certain number of bushels of corn as rent for a certain year will not be construed as calling for that number of bushels of "shelled" corn when the parties knew at all times that the admeasurement was on the basis of crib measurement; and when the landlord receives in shelled corn all that was set aside to him "on the cob," the rent must be deemed fully paid.

Salinger v Elev. Co., 210-668; 231 NW 366

"Car." A caterpillar road grader belonging to a county, and operated on the public highway, is not a "car" within the meaning of the statutory declaration that the owner of a "car" is liable for damages done by the car when it is operated with his consent.

Bateson v County, 213-718; 239 NW 803

"Chose or thing in action."

Brenton Bros. v Dorr, 213-725; 239 NW 808

"Car"—"line"—"stage" — common carrier venue statute. The terms, "line", "stage", "car" and "other line of coaches and cars" as defined at the time of the enactment of the statute specifying venue of actions against carriers are comprehensive enough to include the operations of a transfer company as a common carrier using motor vehicles, and a damage action against such motor vehicle carrier is properly brought in a county where an automobile collided with one of the carrier's trucks while traveling over its regular route, altho company had no office in such county.

Bruce Co. v Johnston, 227-50; 287 NW 278

"Church purposes." A broad and comprehensive meaning must be accorded to the term "church purposes" in a conveyance of land to trustees "so long as used for church purposes".

Presbyterian Church v Johnson, 213-49; 238 NW 456

"Commissioner" as agent for process.

Green v Brinegar, 228- ; 292 NW 229

Compensable "injury"—workmen's compensation.

Sachleben v Gjellefald, 228- ; 290 NW 48

"Compensation." Title 38, §454, USC, providing that federal funds granted to a World War veteran, "shall not be subject to the claims of creditors", does not prohibit the courts of this state from allowing the guardian of such veteran and from such funds, compensation not only for ordinary services but for extraordinary services rendered the ward—the guardian not being a "creditor" within the meaning of said statute.

Hines v McKenzie, 216-1388; 250 NW 687

"Confidential relations." The position of head bookkeeper in the office of the state treasurer involves "strictly confidential relations" with the head of said office, within the meaning of §1165, C., '31.

Allen v Wegman, 218-801; 254 NW 74

"Consolidated" defined. A "consolidated" school district is an "independent school district," within the meaning of §4230, C., '24, authorizing the school board to elect a superintendent for a period not exceeding three years.

Consolidated Dist. v Griffin, 201-63; 206 NW 86

"Construction" as imposing continuous duty. An ordinance which requires all rain spouts on buildings to be so "constructed" that water will not be cast upon sidewalks imposes a continuing duty upon the property owner—a duty not only to "construct" the spouting as required but to maintain the spouting in such required condition.

Updegraff v City, 210-382; 226 NW 928

Cigarettes—retailer not "consumer." The statute requiring packages of cigarettes sold to a "consumer" to have the tax stamps affixed thereto does not apply to a sale by a wholesaler to a retailer, the latter not being a consumer, within the meaning of §1570, C., '24.

State v Lagomarcino-Grupe Co., 207-621; 223 NW 512

Sales tax—shoe repairman as "consumer or user". A shoe repairman is a "consumer or user" of the material used in repairing shoes within the legislative definition of those terms in the sales tax act, and in charging for such repair he is not primarily reselling those materials, but selling his services; wherefore, the one from whom he buys those materials makes the retail sale subject to the tax.

IV Par. 2. WORDS AND PHRASES—continued

“Conveyance.” A valid prohibition against the “conveyance” of real property embraces a mortgage.

Iowa Corp. v Halligan, 214-903; 241 NW 475

Distinction between “court” and “judge”. Statutes providing for the prosecution of injunction violators which do not prohibit the “court” from trying the defendant forthwith should be construed as consistent with statutes providing punishment for contempt, which allow the court to try the defendant forthwith, when both statutes recognize the distinction between the terms “judge” and “court”, so that when acting in the capacity of “court” rather than as “judge”, the court could try the defendants for an injunction violation during the same term in which the precept to punish them for contempt was issued.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

“Debt.” The meaning of the term “debt” is largely dependent on its context.

Smith v Andrew, 209-99; 227 NW 587

“Debt.” A decree for alimony in fixed monthly payments does not create a debt in the sense of the garnishment statutes.

Malone v Moore, 212-58; 236 NW 100

“Debt.” Schooley v Schooley, 184-835; 169 NW 56, overruled.

Malone v Moore, 212-58; 236 NW 100

Judgment as “debt”. A judgment, whether based on contract or tort, is a “debt” within the meaning of the exemption statutes.

Ohio Ins. v Galvin, 222-670; 269 NW 254; 108 ALR 1036

“Indebtedness”—future taxes to pay bonds.

Brunk v Des Moines, 228- ; 291 NW 395

Mortgage redemption—“debtor” defined. The grantee of land who buys subject to an existing mortgage is a “debtor,” within the meaning of the redemption statutes; and the original mortgagor is not entitled to the possession of the land or to the value of such possession during the redemption period following foreclosure, even tho such mortgagor is the only “debtor” who is personally liable for the mortgage debt.

Marx v Clark, 201-1219; 207 NW 357

“Donations” defined. Funds received by a court-appointed trustee “for the perpetual care” of a named cemetery are “donations” within the meaning of the statute requiring a bond securing such funds.

Belmond Assn. v Luick, 217-805; 253 NW 521

“Dues” and “subscription” defined. The terms “dues” and “subscriptions” are by no means necessarily synonymous.

Jefferson, etc. v Sherman, 208-614; 226 NW 182

“Dues and pledges.” The statutory provision that a farm bureau organization shall be entitled to financial aid from the county when the “yearly membership dues and pledges” amount to a certain sum, authorizes such aid when the “dues” alone amount to the required sum.

Blume v Crawford Co., 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92 ALR 757

Easements and tenements—relation. An easement is a privilege or right without profit which the owner of one piece of realty may have in another, or conversely, it is a service which one tract of land owes to another. The land entitled to the easement is the dominant tenement, and the land burdened with the servitude is the servient tenement, neither the easement nor servitude being personal, but accessory, running with the land.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

“Engaged in business.” A person is “engaged in the business” of selling a drug when he has such drug for sale to any person who may apply for it for the seller’s profit, irrespective of any other business carried on by the said seller.

State v Market Co., 209-567; 228 NW 288

“Fellow servant” and “vice-principal”. Evidence held to warrant conclusion that owner of apparatus used to tear down silo, and who was actively engaged in such work, was a fellow servant; and, if he was a vice-principal, he was such only to the extent of being required to furnish plaintiff proper equipment and a safe place to work. The mere fact that one employee has authority over others does not make him a vice-principal or superior so as to charge the master with his negligence.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

“Filing.” What constitutes.

Peterson v Barnett, 213-514; 239 NW 77

“Filing within twelve months”. Conceding, arguendo, that in the settlement of an estate, the statute of limitation commences to run from the date of the last newspaper publication, yet, when the last publication was on April 16, 1931, a claim filed April 16, 1932, is not filed “within twelve months from the giving of the notice” as provided by §11972, C., ’31.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Terbell, 217-624; 252 NW 769

“Final decision.” A statutory declaration that a decision of the court shall be “final” may carry the clear meaning that such decision is not an appealable decision.

State v Webster County, 209-143; 227 NW 595

“Forthwith.” The term “forthwith” does not necessarily mean “immediately”.

Ashpole v Delaney, 217-792; 253 NW 30

Franchise. A franchise is a privilege or authority vested in certain persons by grant of the sovereign to exercise powers or to do or perform acts which, without such grant, they could not legally do or perform.

Mapleton v Iowa Co., 206-9; 216 NW 683

Gambling devices—punch boards and slot machines. Legislature has specifically recognized punch boards and slot machines as gambling devices and they are subject to forfeiture when seized under a valid search warrant, unless the person named in the information or claiming an interest in the property shows cause why they should not be so forfeited.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Gifts causa mortis—essential elements. A gift causa mortis is a gift of personal property, intentionally made, even orally, by the mentally competent owner of said property, in expectation of his or her imminent death from an impending disorder or peril (tho not necessarily so imminent as to exclude the opportunity to execute a will), and made and delivered by the donor to the donee on the essential condition that, if the gift be not in the meantime revoked, the property shall belong to the donee in case the donor dies, as anticipated, of the disorder or peril, leaving said donee surviving.

Flint v Varney, 220-1241; 264 NW 277

"Guest." Under the rule that passenger is neither a guest nor a mere invitee when he is riding with driver for the mutual, tangible, and definite benefit of both parties, a passenger in an automobile driven by a representative of the Federal Resettlement Administration is not a "guest" when both parties are on their way to a bank to secure a temporary loan for passenger until such time as a loan could be completed with the Federal Resettlement Administration.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

"Hear and determine". In certiorari to determine the legality of proceedings of civil service commission in removing a city employee, the commission's statutory duty to "hear and determine" is an essential ingredient of jurisdiction, and the quoted words refer to a judicial investigation and settlement of an issue of fact, which implies the weighing of testimony by both sides, from a consideration of which the relief sought by the moving party is either granted or denied.

Sandahl v Des Moines, 227-1310; 290 NW 697

"High watermark." The high watermark of a navigable river is that upper line which ordinary floods permanently mark along the course of the river.

Curtis v Schmidt, 212-1279; 237 NW 463

"Horse" as vehicle. A horse, saddled and bridled, and being used as a means of conveyance or transportation is not a "vehicle" within the meaning of a policy of insurance which provides indemnity "sustained by the wrecking or disablement of any vehicle or car * * * in which the insured is riding or by being accidentally thrown therefrom".

Riser v Ins. Co., 207-1101; 224 NW 67; 63 ALR 292

Illegal transportation. The word "transportation" in the intoxicating liquor statutes is employed in its ordinary sense: that is, to convey from one place to another—any real carrying about.

State v Canalle, 206-1169; 221 NW 847

"In." The preposition "in" may be used in the sense of "for" or "on behalf of".

Willis v Sch. Dist., 210-391; 227 NW 532

"In aerial conveyance"—parachute jump.

Richardson v Assn., 228- ; 291 NW 408

"Inebriacy" defined. Inebriacy is the state of drunkenness or habitual intoxication.

Maher v Brown, 225-341; 280 NW 553

"Interested person"—party to probate.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

"Intersection" of highways—definition. In a damage action arising from a collision of motor vehicles at a highway intersection, where the question of negligence centered largely around the rights of the parties within the intersection, it was prejudicial error to instruct the jury that "intersection" is the area within the fence lines, if such fence lines were extended across the road, when a statute defines "intersection" as being the area within the lateral boundary lines of highways which join.

Hupp v Doolittle, 226-814; 285 NW 247

"Invitee"—"licensee". An invitee to a place of business is one who goes there, either at the express or implied invitation of the owner or occupant, on business of mutual interest to both, or in connection with the business of the owner or occupant. A licensee is one who goes upon the property of another, either at the invitation, or with the implied acquiescence, of the owner or occupant, for a purpose purely personal to himself.

Wilson v Goodrich, 218-462; 252 NW 142

"Judicial capacity". In adopting plans for pavement of alley intersection, the city was acting in a "judicial capacity" and was not liable for defects in engineer's plans unless as a matter of law the plans were obviously defective.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

"Knowingly consenting." A statute (now repealed) placing personal liability on the officers and directors of a corporation for prohibited excess indebtedness of the corporation, "knowingly consented to" by them, necessarily excludes liability (1) on mere proof that the officers or directors were negligent in performing their duties, and (2) as to corporate debts contracted after the officer or director ceased to be such.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140; 38 NCCA 133

"Legally bound" persons. Where a county has maintained in a state hospital an insane person who was a member of an incorporated religious and communistic society the county's statutory right (§3595, C., '31) to recover the resulting expense from any person "legally liable" for the support of such insane person does not entitle it to recover such expense from the said society simply on proof that the society had obligated itself by contract to support said member for life. "Legal" liability under the statute is confined strictly to "common-law" liability.

Iowa Co. v Amana Soc., 214-893; 243 NW 299

"Lost" goods defined. Money taken from the owner thereof by robbery, and the whereabouts of which money is thereafter unknown to said owner until it is returned to him by one who found it, where the robber had hidden it, constitutes "lost" money within the meaning of the statute which provides compensation to the finder of "lost" money and other property.

Flood v Bank, 218-898; 253 NW 509; 95 ALR 1168

Generating electricity as "manufacturing or mechanical business". The generation or production of electricity is a manufacturing or mechanical business within the scope of a statute permitting the formation of co-operative associations to conduct a manufacturing or mechanical business.

State v Hardin County Co-op., 226-896; 285 NW 219

"May." The primary meaning of the word "may" is permissive and discretionary.

Bernstein v City, 215-1168; 248 NW 26; 86 ALR 782

"May"—"must". "May" cannot, manifestly, be given the imperative meaning of "must", unless there be substantial warrant for such construction.

Brickson v Schwebach, 219-1368; 261 NW 518

Owner of auto salesroom—neither "mechanic" nor "other laborer". Proprietor of auto salesroom with separate department where repairing is done by employee held not a "mechanic", and therefore tools are not exempt from levy; nor is such proprietor an "other laborer" within vehicle exemption.

First N. Bank v Larson, 213-468; 239 NW 134

"Mistake"—mistake of law—statute not tolled. Where a sheriff collects fees under a mistake of law, the failure to discover the mistake of law will not toll the running of the statute of limitations. The word "mistake" in §11010, C., '35, means mistake of fact.

George v Webster County, 211-164; 233 NW 49

Morgan v Jasper County, 223-1044; 274 NW 310; 111 ALR 634

"Mortgagor" defined. A "mortgagor" is he who holds title to the premises mortgaged. A wife who joins in a mortgage of the husband's land for the purpose of releasing her distributive share is not a mortgagor.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Municipal light rates. A reasonable rate for electric light, duly fixed by a municipality under §6143, C., '27, is both a maximum and a minimum rate. In other words, a public utility may not legally charge more nor less than the prescribed rate.

Mapleton v Iowa Co., 209-400; 223 NW 476; 68 ALR 993

"Net income"—what constitutes. "Net income" does not mean the general income of the estate without provision for the payment of just charges, taxes, and reasonable repair and upkeep. On the contrary, it means the income remaining, if any, after such charges and expenses are taken care of. (So held as to a testamentary trust which provided for the keeping of the trust estate intact and for the annual distribution of the net income.)

In re Whitman, 221-1114; 266 NW 28

"Newspaper." An agreement not to engage in the publication or circulation of a "newspaper" in a named locality is violated by the publication and circulation in said locality, without charge, of a so-called "Shopper's Guide" of eight pages arranged in the form of an ordinary newspaper, and containing much advertisement, some current news, serial stories, editorial comment, and newspaper clippings.

Henry & Sons v Rhinesmith, 219-1088; 260 NW 9

"Next regular election." The statutory provision (§1155, C., '31) that an officer filling a vacancy in an elective office shall hold until the next regular election at which such vacancy can be filled, means the "next regular election" at which such vacancy can be legally filled.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

"Operation upon public highway."

Des M. Co. v Johnson, 213-594; 239 NW 575

"On or about." The phrase "on or about" a specified date permits of some variation from the date specified, but no date in July is "on or about" the last of October of the same year.

Newcomer v Ament, 214-307; 242 NW 82

"Or"—"and". Statute construed and held, not permissible to substitute "and" for "or".

Ballard-Hassett Co. v Miller, 219-1066; 260 NW 65

Unambiguous language—"or" cannot mean "and". The word "or" in a statute cannot be judicially construed to mean "and" when the language of the section is too clear and unambiguous to admit of judicial construction.

State v Best, 225-338; 280 NW 551

Simmer law ballot showing "electric light or power"—"or" synonymous with "and". Since an electric plant produces energy which may be used for either light or power, a ballot which states the question as to whether a city should establish an "electric light or power plant" would be readily understood by the voters that the city was seeking to establish an "electric light and power plant".

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

Conjunctive or disjunctive use of "or"—technical rules disregarded. Under a statute permitting the formation of associations to conduct a manufacturing business or to construct or operate electric transmission lines, the words "or to construct or operate * * * electric transmission lines" could be eliminated where the manufacturing business was the operation of an electric power plant, as the right to use such lines is implied as essential to the manufacture of electricity; so whether "or" was used in a conjunctive or disjunctive sense made no difference, as courts will disregard technical rules of grammar and punctuation to arrive at the intent of a statute.

State v Hardin County Co-op., 226-896; 285 NW 219

"Orchard" defined. A group of some 65 bearing fruit trees of different varieties, maintained by continued replanting, constitutes an "orchard", within the meaning of the statute which prohibits the laying out of highways through orchards without the owner's consent.

Junkin v Knapp, 205-184; 217 NW 834

"Order" as "final judgment". Where court entered an order reciting that the court "finds that said demurrer should be sustained and indictment dismissed", altho such order is not in the form of a judgment, it was in legal effect a "final judgment" from which an appeal can be taken by the state under §13995, C., '39. Every final adjudication of the rights of the parties is a judgment.

State v Talerico, 227-1315; 290 NW 660

"Orders." An "order" of court, speaking broadly, is any direction by the court in a proceeding, not including the judgment or decree.

Blunk v Walker, 206-1389; 222 NW 358

"Owner." The term "owner" may be used in a sense other than absolute and unconditional title.

Bare v Cole, 220-338; 260 NW 338

"Owner" defined. The legal titleholder of real estate and a prospective purchaser for whose benefit and use an improvement is erected upon the real estate, may both be considered "owners" of the property within the meaning of the mechanics lien law.

American Bank v West, 214-568; 243 NW 297

Moratorium act—receiver as "owner". The duly qualified and acting receiver of an insolvent private bank is the "owner" of the mortgaged real estate of said bank within the meaning of the moratorium statute (46 GA, ch 110) relative to extension of time in which to redeem from foreclosure sale.

Metropolitan v Van Alstine, 221-763; 266 NW 514

Moratorium act—"owner" defined. An "owner" within the meaning of the moratorium foreclosure act may be such tho his interest is less than a fee ownership.

Prudential v Kraschel, 222-128; 266 NW 550

"Paper" defined. A laboratory analysis, duly reduced to writing, of an organ of the human body and of the contents thereof is a "paper", within the meaning of the statute relative to the compulsory production of "papers or books" (§11316, C., '24), and the party to an action who has the exclusive possession thereof may be compelled to produce it for the inspection of the other party when such inspection is material to the issue whether the deceased died by accident or by suicide by means of poison; but the production of private correspondence or memoranda relative to the analysis may not be coerced.

Travelers Ins. v Jackson, 201-43; 206 NW 98

"Party" and "witness". The terms "party" to an action, and "witness" are not synonymous within the meaning of §11358, C., '31.

Bagley v Dist. Court, 218-34; 254 NW 26

"Person." The general assembly in exercising its constitutional power over an authorized subject matter, may be its own lexicographer—may use its own terms and declare what entities shall be embraced therein. So held where in the enactment of the motor vehicle fuel tax law, Ch 251-F1, C., '35 [Ch 251.3, C., '39], it defined the term "person" and, in effect, declared such term to include a municipal corporation.

IV PAR. 2. WORDS AND PHRASES—continued

"Person in possession". In action to quiet title acquired under tax deed, statute requiring that notice of expiration of right to redeem from tax sale must be served on the "person in possession" of such real estate before tax deed can issue is not complied with by serving the husband only, where husband and wife are tenants, the evidence disclosing that wife was also working and that she paid the rent out of her separate wages.

Murphy v Hatter, 227-1286; 290 NW 695

"Person of same household"—scope of term. Where an insurance policy insured the assured against liability arising or resulting from automobile accidents, but excepted liability for injuries to "the assured or persons of the same household as the assured", held that a married woman who furnished the assured a room and board for a stated compensation could not be deemed a "person of the same household as the assured".

Umbarger v Ins. Co., 218-203; 254 NW 87; 36 NCCA 733

"Premium." The term "premium", tho used in connection with insurance contract, may embrace a consideration received by an insurance company in payment of an annuity contract, even tho the annuity contract in question is not an insurance contract.

Northwestern Ins. v Murphy, 223-333; 271 NW 899; 109 ALR 1054

Presumption (?) or assumption (?) of malice. The court may, under applicable evidence, instruct that the jury has a right, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to presume the existence of malice from the use of a deadly weapon in a deadly manner; and in so instructing it is quite immaterial that the court employs the term "assume" instead of the term "presume".

State v Berlovich, 220-1288; 263 NW 853

Provisional remedy. A provisional remedy is one which is provided for present needs, or for the occasion; that is, one adapted to meet a particular exigency, e. g., the appointment of a receiver in mortgage foreclosure. It follows that an order granting such remedy is appealable.

Davenport v Thompson, 206-746; 221 NW 347

"Public place" includes bridge. The term "public place", as used in the statute relative to the obligation of streetcar companies to construct, reconstruct, and maintain paving between and outside the rails of their tracks, embraces a public bridge. (§6051-c1, C., '31 [§6051.1, C., '39]).

In re Walnut Bridge, 220-55; 261 NW 781

"Reasonably safe place" defined. The operator of a filling station was under a legal obligation to exercise reasonable and ordinary care to see that his place of business was reasonably safe for an invitee who was having a truck tire repaired. The phrase "reasonably safe" meaning safe according to the usage, habits, and ordinary risks of the business.

Reynolds v Skelly Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

"Recklessness". Recklessness goes beyond mere negligence and means proceeding without concern for consequences, with a heedless disregard for the rights of others. Recklessness under the motor vehicle guest statute is not found from evidence that the driver of a car went to sleep, where there was little evidence that he was conscious of the approach of sleep.

Paulson v Hanson, 226-858; 285 NW 189

"Refund." Under a contract to pay an accountant a percentage of the amount "refunded" by the federal government as excess payment for certain years of income and war-profit taxes, the percentage must be computed on the actual amount returned by the government, even tho the government arrived at said amount by deducting from what would otherwise have been the refund the amount of tax inadequately paid in a certain year.

Gregerson v Cherry, 210-538; 231 NW 350

"Renew." The term "renew," as applied to a contract, means a re-establishment of an existing contract for another period of time.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

Repairs may incidentally benefit adjacent road. Work on a drainage ditch which prevented erosion and prevented an overflow on reclaimed lands was "repair" work within the statutory authority of the board of supervisors to repair drainage ditches even tho there was an incidental benefit to bridges and to a township road at the side of the ditch.

Baldozier v Mayberry, 226-693; 285 NW 140

"Resulting from." An injury to a passenger on a motor vehicle bus may not be said to "result from" the operation of the bus, when the proximate cause of such injury was the negligence of a third party.

Crozier v Stages, 209-313; 228 NW 320

Child on sled being towed not "riding" in vehicle. A person to be within the provisions of the Iowa guest statute must be "riding" in the motor vehicle, which excludes a child on a sled hooked to the rear of a moving automobile.

Samuelson v Sherrill, 225-421; 280 NW 596

"Rounding corner." The statutory provision that no ground shall be taken for a primary road "for the rounding of a corner" where certain named improvements are located, is violated by locating a primary road through a 40-acre tract on an arc which extends substantially from the southeast to the northwest corner of the tract, and which so bends convexly to the northeast corner of the tract as to leave approximately 4 acres at said corner where the said improvements are located.

Butterworth v Com., 210-1231; 232 NW 760

"Shall." Under statute providing that county board of supervisors "shall" select three official newspapers, and there were only three applicants, the board had no discretionary power, and petitioner-applicant was entitled to maintain mandamus action to compel the selection of his newspaper.

Bredt v Franklin County, 227-1230; 290 NW 669

"Shall" as nonmandatory. Even tho the statute (§2668, C., '31) declares that "before being tested, such animals shall be appraised, etc.", nevertheless, an examination of the entire bovine tuberculosis act clearly demonstrates that "shall" is not used in a mandatory sense.

Peeverill v Dept., 216-534; 245 NW 334

"Shall" and "may" used conversely. Rule reaffirmed that word "may" is construed to mean "shall" when the rights of the public or third person depend upon the exercise of the power or performance of the duty referred to, and conversely, the word "shall" is merely directory when no advantage is lost, right destroyed, or benefit sacrificed by giving it such construction.

School Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

"Shall"—when synonymous with "may". Statute providing that person applying for admission to high school shall present affidavit of parent or guardian construed to be directory rather than mandatory, the rule being that the word "shall" is generally construed to be mandatory, but where no right or benefit depends on its imperative use it may be, and often is, treated as synonymous with "may".

School Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

"Subject to liens of record." The expression "subject to liens of record" when embraced in the habendum clause of a deed of conveyance does not have the effect of continuing the lien of a judgment after the holder thereof had failed to exercise his right to redeem.

Paulsen v Jensen, 209-453; 228 NW 357

"Suspension" and "cancellation" compared. The suspension of a policy of insurance is not synonymous with cancellation of the policy.

Federal Bank v Ins. Assn., 217-1098; 253 NW 52

Taxes and special assessments. There is a distinction between taxes and special assessments—a tax being a general contribution imposed upon property, while a special assessment is a payment for special benefits conferred upon the property by an improvement.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

"Thereon" and "thereof."

Brenton Bros. v Dorr, 213-725; 239 NW 808

"To take care of" claim. An agreement by one party to a compromise and settlement that he will "take care of" the claim of a named third party may not, in view of the circumstances attending the parties, be equivalent to an agreement to pay said claim.

Southern Sur. v Railway, 215-525; 245 NW 864

"Train wreck." The smashing in of a portion of one side of a passenger coach by swinging a loading bucket against the coach as it was passing, constitutes a "train wreck," within the meaning of a policy of accident insurance, even though the coach (the only one injured) was not derailed, and was not taken from the train for repairs until a division point on the line was reached.

Mochel v Iowa Assn., 203-623; 213 NW 259; 51 ALR 1327

"Unless." The term "unless" as employed in §8958, C., '27, is used in the sense of "if it be not a fact that."

Plunkett v Hopley, 208-1042; 226 NW 772

"Unliquidated." An "unliquidated claim" is one the amount of which has not been ascertained and agreed upon by the parties, or has not been fixed by law.

State v Naumann, 213-418; 239 NW 93; 81 ALR 483

"Vacation" of court. The term "vacation" as employed in the county attorney information act (§13667, C., '31) means the interim which commences immediately after the expiration of a term of court and ends at the commencement of the next term of court. The court is not in vacation while it is in a recess.

Dayton v Bechly, 213-1305; 241 NW 416

"Vibrolithic pavement." In action by pedestrian for injuries sustained in fall on paving, evidence that the paving was a "vibrolithic" type composed of granite and concrete chips, that the pavement was dry, that there had been no rain or mist, and that there was no foreign substance on the paving does not present a question for the jury on issue of city's negligence in construction, even tho the pavement was "pretty smooth", the smoothness being a quality inherent in the material.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

"Volenti non fit injuria" defined. The maxim "volenti non fit injuria" means: "That to which a person assents is not esteemed in law an injury" or "He who consents cannot receive an injury".

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

IV PAR. 2. WORDS AND PHRASES—concluded

“Wantonness” or “recklessness”. Wantonness is something more than recklessness and recklessness is something more than negligence.

Sanburn v Rollins Mills, 217-218; 251 NW 144

“Warrant.” A plain, unambiguous statutory declaration that a claim shall be filed “with the officer authorized by law to issue warrants in payment of such improvement” must be strictly construed in accordance with the usual and ordinary meaning of the word “warrant”.

Missouri Gravel v Surety Co., 212-1322; 237 NW 635

“Warrant-issuing officer.” Claims of laborers and materialmen, under a contract for the paving of a primary highway, entered into by the state highway commission must be filed with the state auditor and not with the said commission, the auditing and approving of claims by said commission not constituting the issuance of a “warrant” within the meaning of §10305, C., '27. (Statute now changed.)

Missouri Gravel v Surety Co., 212-1322; 237 NW 635

“Willful” defined. The term “willful” in the statute specifying grounds for removal from office, when applied to “neglect to perform the duties of his office,” or to “misconduct or maladministration in office,” means knowingly, intentionally, deliberately, “with a bad or evil purpose.”

State v Naumann, 213-418; 239 NW 93; 81 ALR 483

Misleading terms. The expression “yielding to the embraces” is not synonymous with “sexual intercourse”; likewise, the expression “wrongful acts” is not synonymous with the term “seduction”.

Gardner v Boland, 209-362; 227 NW 902

V PAR. 3. NUMBER AND GENDER

“Person”—political subdivisions not included. The statutory provision that in the construction of statutes “the word ‘person’ may be extended to bodies corporate” does not embrace political subdivisions of the state.

Julander v Reynolds, 206-1115; 221 NW 807

VI PAR. 5. HIGHWAY—ROAD

Highway traversing city street—highway law applicable. Where a statute requires pedestrians to walk on left side of a highway, the word “highway” is applicable to a through highway traversing a street within a city, especially in view of other sections in the motor vehicle act concerning highways.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825; 5 NCCA (NS) 724

“Construction of highway.” Subgrading a street preparatory to putting down curbing and guttering constitutes “construction of a highway improvement,” within the meaning of §11042, C., '27, and the contractor is suable by the subcontractor in any county where the contract is made or performed, irrespective of the residence of the defendant.

VII PAR. 6. INSANE

Adjudication of insanity — nonretroactive presumption. An adjudication of insanity creates no presumption that the person in question was insane at any particular period of time prior to said adjudication.

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

VIII PAR. 7. ISSUE

Wills—construction—“heirs”—inaccurate use of term—intent controls. A testamentary provision that testator’s “heirs” shall participate in a specified trust fund will be deemed to include a granddaughter, even tho under the then existing circumstances she is not, technically, an heir, it appearing that testator had in other parts of his will listed his heirs and had therein included his said granddaughter.

Slavens v Bailey, 222-1091; 270 NW 367

IX PAR. 8. LAND—REAL ESTATE

No annotations in this volume

X PAR. 9. PERSONAL PROPERTY

“Property” defined. The term “property” embraces both personal and real property unless the contrary is shown; similarly the term “property owners” embraces the owners of personal as well as real property.

Groenendyke v Fowler, 204-598; 215 NW 718

Real estate and personalty distinguished. Principle reaffirmed that upon the sale of land through the medium of a contract for a deed, the purchaser acquires “land” while the vendor acquires “personal property.”

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Matured crops. Principle reaffirmed that matured corn, standing in the field, is personal property and therefore subject to conversion.

Durflinger v Heaton, 219-528; 258 NW 543

XI PAR. 10. PROPERTY

Municipal corporations—telephone franchise —“property owners” defined. The term “property owners” in the statute relative to calling elections for the purpose of voting on the granting of telephone and other franchises (§5905, C., '24), embraces owners of personal property, as well as owners of real property.

Groenendyke v Fowler, 204-598; 215 NW 718

Judgment as property. A judgment is "property" within the purview of this section, and gives jurisdiction to the district court of the county in which the judgment is entered to appoint an administrator of the deceased judgment creditor's estate.

Edwards v Popham, 206-149; 220 NW 16

XII PAR. 11. MONTH—YEAR—A.D.

Limitation of rent lien—computation of six-months period. In computing the six months during which a landlord's lien survives the expiration of the lease, the count must commence with the first day following the said expiration. The statutory rule to exclude the first day and to include the last day has no application.

Welch v Welch, 212-1245; 238 NW 81

Statutes—time of taking effect—act of special session. Acts of a special session of the general assembly, in the absence of any contrary direction therein, take effect 90 days after final adjournment, the time being computed on the basis of excluding the day of adjournment and including the 90th day.

Clingingsmith v Jackson Dairy, 202-773; 211 NW 413

XIII PAR. 13. PERSON

"Person"—municipality not included. The statutory provision that in the construction of statutes "the word person may be extended to bodies corporate" does not embrace political subdivisions of the state.

XIV PAR. 16. TOWN

Constitutional law—classification of municipalities by population. Assuming that a supportable reason exists for classifying on the basis of population, a statute applicable to cities "now or hereafter having a population of" a named number, cannot be deemed "a local or special law" even tho when enacted it can apply to only one city, and even tho the creation of the official machinery for putting the act into effect in cities thereafter attaining said population is only implied.

State v Darling, 216-553; 246 NW 390; 88 ALR 218

Constitutional law—privileges and immunities and class legislation. The general assembly may constitutionally make a law applicable to cities having a certain population and not applicable to cities having a lesser population, provided the subject matter of the law suggests some reasonable necessity for said distinction. So held in sustaining the constitutionality of an act providing for the government and management of municipal parks by a park board of 10 members.

XV PAR. 19. SHERIFF

Original notice—service—return by deputy. When service of an original notice is made by a deputy sheriff, the return is all-sufficient when made in the name of the sheriff by the deputy in his name.

Thompson Bros. v Phillips, 198-1064; 200 NW 727

XVI PAR. 20. DEED—BOND—INDENTURE—UNDERTAKING

Construction and operation of contract for deed. Principles reaffirmed that under a contract for a deed:

1. The purchaser acquires the full equitable title to the land, while the vendor continues to hold the legal title as security for the performance of the contract, and

2. That, for the purpose of foreclosure, the purchaser will be deemed a mortgagor and the vendor a mortgagee.

Junkin v McClain, 221-1084; 265 NW 362

Motor carrier's bond to pay taxes "incurred"—scope. A bond, (1) reciting that the principal therein had been licensed as a motor carrier under named statutes of the state, and (2) conditioned to pay "the taxes and penalties incurred" under said statutes—a positive liability—embraces liability to pay taxes and penalties incurred before, as well as after, the date of said bond.

Board v U.S.F. & G. Co., 221-880; 266 NW 501

XVII PAR. 21. EXECUTOR—ADMINISTRATOR

Special and general administrators. The fact that, in a will contest, verdict has been returned and judgment entered thereon to the effect that the alleged will in question is not a valid will, does not, in and of itself, legally justify the court in terminating an existing special administratorship and in appointing a general administrator. Said latter appointment would probably be void.

In re Whitehouse, 223-91; 272 NW 110

Executor and executor de son tort. A legatee of a strictly personal property, debt-free estate, who, with the approval of all other legatees, distributes the entire estate in strict accord with the will of the testator, is thereafter under no obligation to account to a subsequently appointed executor who does not question the correctness of her distribution. Especially is this true when such legatee offers to pay the cost of such unnecessary administration.

Davenport v Sandeman, 204-927; 216 NW 55

XVIII PAR. 22. NUMERALS—FIGURES

No annotations in this volume

XIX PAR. 23. COMPUTING TIME

Fractions of a day—when recognized. Principle recognized that the fiction, often encountered in the law, that a day is an individual period of time—that the law will not take cognizance of fractions of a day—is subject to many exceptions.

Thrasher v Haynes, 221-1137; 264 NW 915

Notice—insufficient publication. A notice of the hearing before the board of supervisors on a petition for the enrollment of a county under the county area eradication plan relating to bovine tuberculosis is a nullity when the last newspaper publication was on August 13th, and when the hearing was had on August 17th.

Phelps v Thornburg, 206-1150; 221 NW 835

Timely motion to set aside. Where judgment is entered in a municipal court on April 9th, a motion filed on April 19th following, to set aside the default, is timely.

Service System v Johns, 206-1164; 221 NW 777

Landlord's lien—computation of six months period. In computing the six months during which a landlord's lien survives the expiration of the lease, the count must commence with the first day following the said expiration. The statutory rule to exclude the first day and to include the last day has no application.

Welch v Welch, 212-1245; 238 NW 81

Acts of special session of legislature.

Clingingsmith v Dairy Co., 202-773; 211 NW 413

Danbury v Riedmiller, 208-879; 226 NW 159

Nugatory or ineffective amendments. The mortgage foreclosure redemption act (45 GA, ch 179), which became a law March 19, 1933, and which provided that "In any action * * * which has been commenced" for the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage, the court should, under named conditions, grant an extension of time in which to redeem from sale, manifestly, ex vi termini, had no application to mortgages executed on or after January 1, 1934. It follows that the later amendment (45 Ex. GA, ch 137) which specifically declared the inapplicability of said moratorium act to mortgages executed "on or after January 1, 1934" was nugatory—took naught from, and added naught to, said original moratorium act.

Metropolitan v Reeve, 222-255; 268 NW 531

Redemption from tax sale—law governing. The time in which redemption may be made from tax sale is absolutely governed by the law in force at the time of the sale. It follows that a legislative amendment shortening the redemption period cannot apply to pre-existing sales.

Lockie v Hammerstrom, 222-451; 269 NW 507

Verdict—scope of term—fatally delayed motion. A court-directed verdict (in a jury trial) is the verdict of the jury within the meaning of the statute limiting applications for new trial to five days "after the verdict is rendered" and the court has no jurisdiction to grant an application made after said time irrespective of the time when formal judgment was entered on the verdict. (Verdict rendered in 1916; judgment entered in 1930.)

Selby v McDonald, 219-823; 259 NW 485

Failure to file abstract—"second term" defined. The statutory provision that an appeal may be dismissed if the abstract is not filed "30 days before the second term" after the taking of the appeal, means "30 days before the second term at which the appeal can be submitted," in view of other provisions of the statute. (§§12847, 12848, C., '24.)

Mullenix v Bank, 201-137; 206 NW 670

XX PAR. 24. CONSANGUINITY AND AFFINITY

"Sister" contemplates "half-sister". The statute (§10445, C., '27) which declares void a marriage between a man and his sister's daughter, embraces a marriage between a man and his half-sister's daughter.

State v Lamb, 209-132; 227 NW 830

Status of children of adopted child. The legal status of children of an adopted child is, inter alia, that of grandchildren of their foster grandparents.

Shaw v Scott, 217-1259; 252 NW 237

Administrator—next of kin—no degrees of nearness. "Next of kin", within the meaning of the statute regulating the preferential right to apply for administration, embraces those persons who take the personal property of the deceased; and there are no degrees of nearness in said class. For instance, the sister of the deceased has no necessarily preferential right over the niece of the deceased.

In re Wright, 210-25; 230 NW 552

Inheritable existence—criterion. An infant acquires existence capable of taking an inheritance only when it acquires an independent circulation of its blood after being fully separated from the body of the mother.

In re Van Vechten, 218-229; 251 NW 729

Sullivan v Harris, 224-345; 276 NW 88

Statutory remedies not necessarily exclusive. A statutory remedy will not be construed as abrogating an existing common-law remedy unless the statute affirmatively indicates an intention to make the statutory remedy exclusive.

Jones v Knutson, 212-268; 234 NW 548

Attachment. Principle reaffirmed that proceedings in attachment are of statutory origin only, and in derogation of the common law.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Quasi-mechanic's lien statute. The statutes relative to materialmen and laborers on public improvements have always been strictly construed.

Aetna Cas. Co. v Kimball, 206-1251; 222 NW 31

Missouri Gravel v Surety Co., 212-1322; 237 NW 635

Tax statute—construed against taxing body. A proviso or exemption in a taxing statute in derogation of its general enacting clause must be strictly construed. However, as to contention that an income tax statute does not include out-of-state rent, not because of an exception, but by its terms, if open to construction at all, must fall within the general rule that tax statutes are construed strictly against the taxing body.

Palmer v Board, 226-92; 283 NW 415

Premises and enjoyment and use thereof— injury to tenant. The housing law (Ch 323, C., '31) providing that "Every dwelling and all the parts thereof shall be kept in good repair by the owner" (§6392, C., '31) does not change the common-law rule of tort liability of the lessor to the lessee.

Johnson v Carter, 218-587; 255 NW 864; 93 ALR 774

Insurance—bylaws and statutes in conflict— statute prevails. In an action to recover damages for loss by hail, bylaws of mutual hail insurance association which are inconsistent with statute relating to notice of cancellation must give way to statute.

Sorensen v Ins. Assn., 226-1316; 286 NW 494

Insurance—cancellation—statutory and contract provisions—construction. In an action on an insurance policy to recover damages for loss by hail, held, that statutory provisions for benefit of insured cannot be contracted away and terms of contract are only binding upon the insured if not contrary to applicable statutes. A policy is construed to give the insured his indemnity in questions of cancellation or forfeiture.

Sorensen v Ins. Assn., 226-1316; 286 NW 494

Highway traversing city street—highway law applicable. Where a statute requires pedestrians to walk on left side of a highway, the word "highway" is applicable to a through highway traversing a street within a city, especially in view of other sections in the motor vehicle act concerning highways.

O'Connor v Murtagh, 225-782; 281 NW 455

Continuing appropriation statute—biennial appropriation paramount — mandamus. A statute, altho in the code because of its general and permanent nature, which sets the salary of the attorney general, a state officer, is not a continuing appropriation for that officer, when the biennial appropriation act appropriates a different and smaller amount for such officer for the biennium and declares "all salaries provided for in this act are in lieu of all existing statutory salaries". Mandamus will not lie to require payment of the larger salary.

O'Connor v Murtagh, 225-782; 281 NW 455

Limitation on claims for unpaid salary. Claims for back salary for the attorney general, a state officer, must be made within six months after said salary was due.

O'Connor v Murtagh, 225-782; 281 NW 455

Deposits—payment on forged indorsement—negligence not imputable to state. Negligence and laches of public officers in the handling of state funds are not imputable to the state; for instance, in an action to recover from a drawee bank the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement of a check drawn by a county treasurer against state school funds on deposit with said drawee, it is no defense that the county treasurer was negligent in drawing or delivering the check, or that county officers generally were negligent in not making early discovery of the forged indorsement, and notifying the drawee accordingly.

Appeal—attorney general as "adverse party". A liquidator (or receiver) was appointed in a foreign state to liquidate an insolvent insurance company chartered in said state, and doing business in Iowa. The attorney general of Iowa, in his official capacity, at once instituted ancillary receivership proceedings in Iowa, and, in time, certain claims were duly allowed, in said ancillary proceedings, in favor of creditors of the insolvent. The Iowa court later ruled, on intervention by the foreign liquidator, that funds in the hands of the ancillary receiver should be retained by him and distributed under the ancillary receivership.

Held, an appeal by the foreign liquidator from said latter ruling imperatively necessitated service of notice of appeal on the attorney general or on his successor in office.

State v Sur. Co., 223-558; 273 NW 129

Cy pres doctrine invoked by state in equity court. A public charity, created by trust, about to fail, is properly represented in court of equity to invoke jurisdiction to apply cy pres doctrine by the state or some authorized agency thereof.

Schell v Leander Clark College, 10 F 2d, 542

Writ of prohibition—state as plaintiff. An original action in the supreme court, for a writ of prohibition directed to a district court and prohibiting further action by said latter court in private actions pending therein, may be brought in the name of the state ex rel its attorney general; especially is this true when said private actions arose out of proceedings instituted by the state through the governor thereof.

State v Dist. Court, 219-1165; 260 NW 73; 99 ALR 967

Gross premiums tax—attorney general's opinion—not precedent. Attorney general's opinion that payment of gross premiums tax is "condition precedent to a foreign corporation's obtaining any recognition" is not precedent binding on supreme court.

Code editor's catchwords—no part of law. Code section catchwords, prepared by code editor, are no part of the law.

State v Chenoweth, 226-217; 284 NW 110

Catchwords—noneffect on interpretation. The act of placing a section under a particular chapter of the code and the wording of the headings of the section, have little, if any, weight as official interpretations.

State v Oge, 227-1094; 290 NW 1

169 Editorial work.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 360

Division of sections—effect. The mere act of dividing an existing section of law and printing its parts in the code as separate sections works no change in the meaning of the law. So held as to §4840, C., '97.

State v Gardiner, 205-30; 215 NW 758

Editorial arrangement changes no law. A mere rearrangement of statutes in code revision, or dividing one section into several sections, does not without legislative intention change the purpose, operation, and effect thereof.

CUSTODIAN OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS

272 Appointment and tenure.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 141

Yardman at state capitol. An honorably discharged veteran of the war with Germany, appointed for no stated time to the position of "yard man" on the statehouse grounds, is not removable by the executive council except on duly preferred charges of incompetency or misconduct, he not being a deputy of the state custodian of public grounds, tho working under the supervision of said latter officer, and his "term" not expiring on the legal removal of said custodian.

273 Duties.

Employees—power to discharge. The custodian of public buildings and grounds (at the seat of government) must, in view of this section, be deemed vested with the sole authority legally to discharge the employees of said department, no statute to the contrary appearing; especially is this true when other legislation, tho it has expired ex vi termini, clearly demonstrates such to have been the intent of the general assembly.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

Certiorari to review discharge of state employee. The custodian of public buildings and grounds (at Des Moines) is the sole, proper defendant in an action of certiorari to review the legality, under the soldiers preference act, of the discharge of an employee of said department.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

Certiorari—dismissal re custodian—res judicata. In an action of certiorari against the state executive council, and the custodian of public buildings and grounds, to review the legality of the discharge of an employee of the latter department, an unappealed order of court dismissing said custodian as an improper party defendant, tho unqualifiedly erroneous, becomes the law of said particular action, and precludes said plaintiff from thereafter proceeding against said custodian for the relief sought.

276 Membership.

Certiorari—dismissing party defendant. In an action of certiorari against the state executive council, and the custodian of public buildings and grounds, to review the legality of the discharge of an employee of the latter department, an unappealed order of court dismissing said custodian as an improper party defendant, tho unqualifiedly erroneous, becomes the law of said particular action, and precludes said plaintiff from thereafter proceeding against said custodian for the relief sought.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

Certiorari—reinstatement of discharged employee—unallowable order. The court, in certiorari, is manifestly without authority to order the state executive council to reinstate, in a department of the state government, a discharged state employee, when said council has no legal authority to employ or discharge employees in said department.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 61, 110; '28 AG Op 330, 373; '38 AG Op 338

School property—assessability. A school district having lots assessable under a city contract for paving and curbing cannot be deemed a "municipality" entering "into a contract" within the meaning of the state budget law (Ch 23, C., '31). In such circumstances, the district is simply a property owner.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 61, 105, 119, 336; '28 AG Op 190, 330, 378; '34 AG Op 365; '38 AG Op 731

Inapplicability of budget act. This section has no application to a contract entered into by a city for street grading on a per diem basis and under a contract legally terminable by the council at any time, even tho the per diem compensation ultimately exceeds $5,000.

Carlson v City, 212-373; 236 NW 421

Public improvements — nonjurisdiction of budget director. A contract for street improvement, e. g., paving and curbing, to be paid for by special assessments, is entirely outside the purview and purpose of this section.

Schumacher v City, 214-34; 239 NW 71

School property — assessability. A school district having lots assessable under a city contract for paving and curbing cannot be deemed a "municipality" entering "into a contract" within the meaning of this section. In such circumstances, the district is simply a property owner.

Fatally defective service. Appeal to the director of the budget from the action of the city council in overruling objections to a proposal for paving is not effected by simply delivering to the city clerk a notice which purports to be a copy of an unproduced original, but which was not such copy, in that only twenty-four of the twenty-seven signatures affixed to the original were affixed to the notice served; and this is true even tho the city appears, and moves to dismiss the appeal.

Casey (Town) v Hogue, 204-3; 214 NW 729

357 Hearing and decision.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 61, 119, 480; '30 AG Op 69, 129; '38 AG Op 38

Advertisement for bids—irregular compliance with mandatory duty. The irregularity of municipal authorities in advertising for, receiving, and opening bids for the construction of a municipal light and power plant before instead of after the director of the budget had, on appeal, overruled objections to the plans, specifications, and proposed form of contract, does not invalidate the contract entered into after said ruling and specifically approved by said director. But the duty to "advertise for bids" is mandatory in case an appeal is taken to the budget director.

Johnson v Town, 215-1033; 247 NW 552

Competitive bidding—unallowable contract. When a contract for the construction of a proposed public improvement is required by statute to be let on competitive bids, such contract cannot be legally entered into on the basis and in accordance with a bid which fails in any material respect to respond to the proposal for bids. Held, contract illegal because based on, and in accordance with, a bid which failed to respond to the legal proposals:

1. In re time of commencing and completing the work, and
2. In re testing the improvement as a condition to acceptance.

CHAPTER 24

LOCAL BUDGET LAW

368 Short title.

Incongruous matter. A title which gives notice of the creation of the office of state budget director and provides for a state and local budget, for the examination of public accounts, and for review of public contracts and bonds, is not broad enough to justify the inclusion of a provision creating a new fund and power in local municipalities to levy a tax for such fund.

Chi. RI Ry. v Streepy, 207-851; 224 NW 41

369 Definition of terms.

School district vs. state appeal board—action where school district located—propriety. An action against the state appeal board to review its rulings affecting a school district under the local budget law is properly brought in the county where the school district was located and where proceedings on the levy involved were held from which resulted the board's ruling.

Board v Dist. Court, 225-296; 280 NW 525

School fund estimates under local budget law omitting money on hand—taxes valid—no refund. School districts, in submitting their budgets for their fiscal year beginning July first, are not required to include money on hand derived from taxes levied and estimated two years before and collected a year later to be expended during the current school year, and taxes collected accordingly will not be refunded in a mandamus action.

Lowden v Woods, 226-425; 284 NW 155

Budget—invulnerability. After the due adoption and entry by a city council of a financial budget for an ensuing year, on the basis of estimated receipts from (1) taxable sources, and (2) nontaxable sources, the council may not later, in its appropriating ordinance, legally increase the municipal expenditures for said year by the simple expedient of revising and increasing its former estimated receipts from nontaxable sources.

Legalization of invalid tax. The legislature may validly legalize a levy of taxes made under a supposedly legal statute but which was invalid because its title was constitutionally insufficient. (See also Const., Art. I, §21; Art. III, §30)

Chicago, RI Ry. v Rosenbaum, 212-227; 231 NW 646

Legalizing tax levy after invalidating ruling by court. A legislative act which legalizes a tax levy after the appellate court has ruled (but before entry of judgment) that the taxpayer is entitled to a refund of the tax paid, because the tax levy was void, owing to the absence of an authorizing statute, neither disturbs any vested interest of the taxpayer's nor constitutes an unconstitutional interference with the judiciary.

Taxation—source of power. The power of a city to tax is strictly statutory—never implied.

Clark v Des Moines, 222-317; 267 NW 97

Budget—invulnerability of. Budget act—nondelegation of legislative authority. The broad, sweeping, and apparently unguarded discretion granted by statute to the director of the budget (now state comptroller) to grant or refuse permission to a municipality to make a transfer of its funds, does not constitute an unconstitutional grant of legislative power.

State v Manning, 220-525; 259 NW 213

Arbitrary administration. An act will not be held unconstitutional because of the possibility that the administering officer will, by arbitrary administration, give the act a non-uniform operation.

State v Manning, 220-525; 259 NW 213

Removal of officer—proof of evil design—when not required. In an action to remove a public official from office, the principle that a corrupt or evil design or purpose must be shown under a charge of “wilful misconduct or maladministration in office”, does not apply when the official is charged with the violation of a statute which specifically declares that such violation shall be sufficient ground for removal from office.

State v Manning, 220-525; 259 NW 213

389 Supervisory power of state board.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 471

Appeal from local budget—statute directory as to time. The statutory requirement, that the state appeal board in ruling on local budget matters shall render final disposition of all appeals by October 15th of each year, should be obeyed. However, being directory rather than mandatory in its nature, a mere delay of a few days will not invalidate the action of the board or defeat the purposes sought to be obtained.

Woodbury Conference v Carr, 226-204; 284 NW 122

Collateral attack on budget appeal board—illegality on face of petition necessary—certiorari proper remedy. A suit in mandamus, to compel the county auditor to ignore the decision of the state board of appeal in local budget matters on the ground that such decision was made after the board had ceased to exist, is a collateral attack on the board's action—certiorari being the method for a direct attack; and if the mandamus suit is dismissed by the lower court, the supreme court, on appeal, will determine, only, if the acts of the board show on their face by their dates alone that they were illegal acts because the board had ceased to exist as such.

Woodbury Conference v Carr, 226-204; 284 NW 122

Appeal board—decisions modified. The state appeal board has power to modify its decisions.

State v Manning, 220-525; 259 NW 213

390.1 State appeal board.

Suing state appeal board—ruling on venue—appeal sole remedy. Certiorari will not lie to review the action of the trial court in overruling a motion by the state appeal board for a change of venue of a trial questioning a decision of such board.

Board v Dist. Court, 225-296; 280 NW 525

390.7 Decision certified to county.

However, being directory rather than mandatory in its nature, a mere delay of a few days will not invalidate the action of the board or defeat the purposes sought to be obtained.

592 State canvass conclusive.

Effect of conclusiveness. The fact that the state canvass of primary election returns is final and conclusive has no relevancy to the question whether a convention had the right to make a nomination for an office for which concededly no nomination was made at the primary.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 236

Right of convention to nominate. The county convention of a political party may legally make a nomination for an office when no candidate of said party for said office had his name printed on the primary ballot of said party, and when the "written in" names at said primary election for said office did not effect a nomination because the candidate receiving a majority of the votes cast did not receive a vote equal to the 10 percent required by statute.

Zellmer v Smith, 206-725; 221 NW 220

598 Delivery of certificates.

Presumption. It will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that the state board of canvassers has duly performed its duty to certify the result of a primary election to the various chairmen of political parties.

Statutes—construction and operation—elections—statutes in pari materia. The statutes relative (1) to vacancies in nominations, (2) to the placing of names of candidates on the official ballot, (3) to the sufficiency of a certificate of nomination, and (4) to the eligibility of candidates, all presuppose (and properly so) the existence of statutory authorization to hold an election, and therefore can have no controlling bearing on the construction of the statute which does authorize an election. Such former series of statutes are not strictly in pari materia with the latter statute.

610 Vacancies in office of congressman or state senator.

Statutes—construction and operation—elections—statutes in pari materia. The statutes relative (1) to vacancies in nominations, (2) to the placing of names of candidates on the official ballot, (3) to the sufficiency of a certificate of nomination, and (4) to the eligibility of candidates, all presuppose (and properly so) the existence of statutory authorization to hold an election, and therefore can have no controlling bearing on the construction of the statute which does authorize an election. Primary elections—right of convention to nominate. The fact that the state canvass of primary election returns is final and conclusive (§592, C., '27), has no relevancy to the question whether a convention had the right to make a nomination for an office for which concededly no nomination was made at the primary.

METHOD OF CONDUCTING ELECTIONS

719 Elections included.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 253; '38 AG Op 248, 659

Call by unauthorized body. An election which is called by an unauthorized body is a nullity.

Leslie v Barnes, 201-1159; 208 NW 725

Irregularities—effect. A school election will not be held invalid (in the absence of any showing of prejudice) because all the members of the board acted as judges of election, instead of only the president, secretary, and one director, as provided by statute.

Mack v Sch. Dist., 200-1190; 206 NW 145

Failure to initial ballot. Ballots not initialed by the judges of election as required by statute must be counted if otherwise unobjectionable.

Donlan v Cooke, 212-771; 237 NW 496

Elections—public canvass in private room—incomplete election. Until legislative mandates are obeyed, an election is not complete.

Steeves v New Market, 225-618; 281 NW 162

Improper conduct of election—no validation by successors. Statutory requirements as to conducting elections, violated by one set of officials, cannot be validated by their successors in office a year later.

Granting franchise — when ordinance not necessary. The passage of an ordinance and the printing of the same on the ballots are not necessary in those cases where the proposal to grant a franchise to a private party for the erection and operation of an electric light and power franchise is not initiated by the city or town council, but is initiated by the voters, through a statutory petition addressed to the mayor. (See §6555, C., '27.)

Mapleton v Iowa Co., 206-9; 216 NW 683

Contents of ballot. At an election called by a city council on its own motion on the question whether the city shall erect an electric light and power plant and pay for the same out of the earnings of the plant, the ballot need only contain (1) the main proposition, and (2) a statement of the maximum amount to be expended. Manifestly, the law does not contemplate the setting forth of a contract which can only be entered into after the election grants the authority for such a contract.

Hogan v City, 217-504; 250 NW 134

Ballots — validity of form — Simmer law — municipal electric plant. In an election to establish a municipal electric plant under the Simmer law, the ballot held to comply with statute.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Substantial compliance with statutory ballot. Form of ballot used in election for establishment of a municipal electric light or power plant reviewed, and held to substantially comply with statute and to be unambiguous.

Lahn v Primghar, 225-686; 281 NW 214

Fatally defective ballot. A ballot is fatally defective when it fails to clearly indicate to the voter whether a proposed municipal electric light and power plant is to be financed, (1) by ordinary taxation or, (2) by pledging the plant and the net earnings thereof; and this is true tho the ballot states the maximum amount of money to be expended.

Pennington v Fairbanks, M. & Co., 217-1117; 253 NW 60

Light and power plant—form of ballot. This section has no application when the question submitted is whether a municipality shall erect an electric light and power plant and pay for the same solely from the earnings thereof.

Pennington v Sumner, 222-1005; 270 NW 629; 109 ALR 355

Sufficient reference to statute in ballot.

Weiss v Woodbine, 228- ; 289 NW 469

Power to pledge plant. Due authorization to a municipality by the electors thereof to establish and erect an electric light and power plant at a stated maximum cost payable only out of the earnings of said newly acquired plant without the municipality itself incurring any indebtedness legally invests the council with power to pledge both the plant and its earnings as security for the payment of the resulting cost.

Greaves v City, 217-590; 251 NW 766

762 Form of ballot.

Unallowable impeachment. Evidence of voters, at an election to establish a consolidated school district, that they did not intend to include in said proposed district certain lands described in the petition for said district, and in the ballot used at said election, is wholly immaterial.

Dermit v School Dist., 220-344; 261 NW 636

763 General form of ballot.

Form of petition. A petition for the submission of a proposition to the electors must substantially contain every matter required by the statute in order that from the petition the ballot may be so framed that the entire proposition will be submitted to the electors.

O'Keefe v Hopp, 210-398; 230 NW 876

Substantial compliance with statutory ballot. Form of ballot used in election for establishment of a municipal electric light or power plant reviewed, and held to substantially comply with statute and to be unambiguous.

Elections—statutes in pari materia. The statutes relative (1) to vacancies in nominations, (2) to the placing of names of candidates on the official ballot, (3) to the sufficiency of a certificate of nomination, and (4) to the eligibility of candidates, all presuppose (and properly so) the existence of statutory authorization to hold an election, and therefore can have no controlling bearing on the construction of the statute which does authorize an election. Willis v Sch. Dist., 210-391; 227 NW 532

Invalidating identification marks. Ballots which bear an indorsement of the name of the voter, or foreign writing such as "Let's have it wet", or numbers, or markings deliberately defacing the printed squares, must be classed as identified and void.

851 Return and preservation of ballots.

Preserving and guarding ballots—burden of proof. Ballots cast at an election are not admissible as evidence in a subsequent contest unless the contestant first establishes the fact that the officer legally charged with the custody of said ballots has preserved, guarded, and protected them in such manner as to reasonably preclude the opportunity of unauthorized persons to tamper with them.

Matzdorff v Thompson, 217-961; 251 NW 867

Traeger v Meskel, 217-970; 252 NW 108

Tyler v Klaver, 220-1124; 264 NW 37

Stamos v Gray, 221-145; 264 NW 919

Ballots — preservation — showing required. While in an election contest it must be shown that the ballots have been preserved with meticulous care against tampering yet such showing need not go to the point of excluding all possibility of such tampering.

Donlan v Cooke, 212-771; 237 NW 496

Ballots — preservation—showing required—admissibility. Ballots must be "carefully preserved" after the election, and without such showing they are not admissible in evidence.

Steeves v New Market, 225-618; 281 NW 162

Count of votes — directory provisions. Principle reaffirmed that the statutory direction relative to the folding and wiring of ballots which have been counted is not mandatory.

CONTESTING ELECTIONS—GENERAL PROVISIONS

981 Grounds of contest.

Electioneering by judges—effect. A judge of election who, while conducting an election, electioneers for a particular candidate is guilty of such misconduct as to furnish basis for a contest as to the office involved.

Brooks v Fay, 206-845; 220 NW 30

Election bribery by third person—disqualifying effect. A candidate having been elected to office is not disqualified, merely because some third person may have given or offered a bribe to the voters for the purpose of securing the election of said candidate, unless the candidate actually participated in and approved thereof.

Van Der Zee v Means, 225-871; 281 NW 460; 121 ALR 558

Electric company offering rate reduction—not candidates' bribery—election valid. Evidence held insufficient to establish bribery and an illegal election in that candidates for municipal office acquiesced in or ratified an advertised plan by which the local electric company offered to reduce its rates, and pay back to its subscribers an accumulating sum as a rebate, in the event the voters would elect council members opposed to municipal ownership.

Van Der Zee v Means, 225-871; 281 NW 460; 121 ALR 558

Election bribery—electric rate reduction—fulfillment after trial immaterial. When the court, after hearing an election contest, finds that candidates to municipal office did not participate in an illegal bribe by a local electric company offering a rate reduction and a rebate of impounded charges if the municipal ownership opponents were elected, the fact that, after the trial, the council repeals the municipal ownership ordinance and the company does reduce rates and repay impounded funds to consumers, adds nothing new to the proof of participation and does not warrant a new trial.

Van Der Zee v Means, 225-871; 281 NW 460; 121 ALR 558

Improper absent voting—inmates of county home—remedy not in equity. Absent voters' ballots from Polk county home inmates who do not expect to be absent from the county or prevented by illness from going to the polls should be challenged for cause, and, this being a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, equity will not enjoin the county auditor from doing his statutory duty in delivering the ballots to the judges of election.

Drennen v Olmstead, 224-85; 275 NW 884

Sufficient party contestee. When at an election in a judicial district several judges of the district court are to be elected for a full term, the candidate who, according to the official canvass of the returns, received the highest number of votes among those not officially declared elected, may legally institute a contest solely against him who, among those officially declared elected, received the lowest number of votes.

Haas v Contest Court, 221-150; 265 NW 373

Defect of party contestees—effect. Whether, in an election contest, a defect of party contestees is jurisdictional, quaere.

Haas v Contest Court, 221-150; 265 NW 373

Ballots — preservation — showing required. Ballots must be "carefully preserved" after the election, and without such showing they are not admissible in evidence.

983 Incumbent.

Sufficient party contestee. When at an election in a judicial district several judges of the district court are to be elected for a full term, the candidate who, according to the official canvass of the returns, received the highest number of votes among those not officially declared elected, may legally institute a contest solely against him who, among those officially declared elected, received the lowest number of votes.

Haas v Contest Court, 221-150; 265 NW 373

Defect of party contestees—effect. Whether, in an election contest, a defect of party contestees is jurisdictional, quaere.

984 Change of result.

Misconduct—effect of. In an election contest over a county office, the entire vote of a precinct will not be thrown out because of the misconduct of the judges of election unless the contestant shows that the number of votes affected by such misconduct was such as to change the result in the county as to that office.

Brooks v Fay, 206-845; 220 NW 30

985 Recanvass in case of contest.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 662

Preserving and guarding ballots—burden of proof. Ballots — preservation — showing required. Ballots must be “carefully preserved” after the election, and without such showing they are not admissible in evidence.

Steeves v New Market, 225-618; 281 NW 162

1008 Statement filed.

Premature filing and subsequent refileing — effect. The filing of a “statement of contest” some ten days before the official declaration of election of the party whose election is sought to be contested, followed promptly, after such declaration of election, by the filing by contestant of a written assertion of refileing of said prematurely filed statement “and each and every allegation thereof”, is not such irregularity as will deprive the subsequently selected court of contest of jurisdiction to proceed with said contest.

Haas v Contest Court, 221-150; 265 NW 373

1017 Judgment filed—execution.

Jurisdiction — certiorari to review. Certiorari will lie to review the alleged unauthorized exercise of jurisdiction by a contest court selected for the purpose of deciding who had been elected to a state office, even tho it be true that the decree of said contest court is final under the statute.

Premature filing and subsequent refileing — effect. The filing of a “statement of contest” some ten days before the official declaration of election of the party whose election is sought to be contested, followed promptly, after such declaration of election, by the filing by contestant of a written assertion of refileing of said prematurely filed statement "and each and every allegation thereof", is not such irregularity as will deprive the subsequently selected court of contest of jurisdiction to proceed with said contest.

Haas v Contest Court, 221-150; 265 NW 373

City office—place of filing contest and bond. In an election contest over a city office, the written statement of intention to contest and bond are properly filed with the county auditor.

Jenkins v Furgeson, 212-640; 233 NW 741

1025 Bond.

Premature filing—effect. The fact that the statutory bond required in an election contest was prematurely filed with and accepted by the proper officer—prematurely because said filing and acceptance was had some ten days before the official declaration of the election of the party whose election is sought to be contested—constitutes no such irregularity as will deprive the subsequently selected court of contest of jurisdiction to proceed with such contest, it appearing that said bond was, within 30 days after said declaration of election, officially marked filed by the clerk of the contest court.

Haas v Contest Court, 221-150; 265 NW 373

Belated filing—effect. The statutory requirement, that the contestant in an election contest shall file a prescribed bond, is complied with if such bond is filed at any time within the time provided for the filing of the statement of contest, even tho said bond be filed subsequent to the filing of the statement of contest.

Haas v Contest Court, 221-150; 265 NW 373

City office—place of filing contest and bond. In an election contest over a city office, the written statement of intention to contest and bond are properly filed with the county auditor.

Haas v Contest Court, 221-150; 265 NW 373

1037 Judgment.

Judgment—effect. The judgment of a contest court holding the election in question illegal is valid and conclusive upon both parties to the contest, unless appealed from and reversed.

1039 Appeal.

Consent judgment—appeal. An election contestant may not appeal from the judgment of the contest board holding the election in question illegal and providing for the calling of a new election by said board, when he consented to the entry of such judgment.

Leslie v Barnes, 201-1159; 208 NW 725

Appeal by nonincumbent—bond not required. No appeal bond is required in an appeal to the district court from the judgment of an election contest court by a party who is not an incumbent of the office in question, §11440, C., '31, having no application to such a case.

1057 Approval conditioned.

Requalification as own successor—presumption. The fact that a county treasurer who succeeds himself, requalifies, and gives a new bond for his second term, creates no conclusive presumption that the liability which attached to him during the first term has been carried over to his new bond.

Not insurer of official funds. The clerk of the district court is not liable for loss of official funds coming into his hands and lost because of the failure of the bank in which they were deposited, when, at the time of deposit, he in good faith justifiably believed the bank to be solvent.

Prudential v Hart, 205-801; 218 NW 529

Andrew v Bank, 214-105; 241 NW 412

Liability on official bonds—misuse of funds. A county treasurer breaches his official bond by using county funds in paying drainage district bonds, and the county cannot be deemed estopped to insist on said breach, or be held to have waived said breach, because of the fact that the treasurer acted with the knowledge and consent of, or in obedience to the express direction of the board of supervisors.

Mitchell County v Odden, 219-793; 259 NW 774

Excessive bank deposits. A resolution of a city council to the effect that all city funds shall be deposited in a named bank is no authority to the city treasurer to make deposits in excess of the amount of the bond given by the bank to secure said deposits, and the treasurer and the surety on his official bond are liable for such excess, even tho the treasurer was not guilty of any negligence in depositing such excess.

State v Carney, 208-133; 217 NW 472

Deposits—liability of county treasurer. Even tho the county treasurer deposits public funds in a depository bank in an amount authorized by a resolution of the board of supervisors, yet if the board later, by resolution, reduces the amount authorized to be deposited, the treasurer and his surety are liable for a loss resulting from the failure of the treasurer to exercise reasonable diligence to reduce his deposit to the amount authorized in the latter resolution.

State v Surety Co., 210-215; 230 NW 308

When conditions broken. It may not be said that a county treasurer who succeeds himself in office is not harmed by the nonpayment of bank deposits which were made during his first term, even tho he has requalified and given a new bond to cover his second term.

Dallas County v Bank, 205-672; 216 NW 119

Unallowable deposits.

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533

Delivery of funds to successor—effect. An outgoing sheriff and his bondsmen are absolved from all liability as to funds held by the sheriff in unadjudicated condemnation proceedings by delivering said funds to his successor in office.

Northwestern Mfg. Co. v Bassett, 205-999; 218 NW 932

Time deposit works conversion. A sheriff is guilty of instant conversion and a breach of his bond when he deposits in a bank funds properly coming into his hands in unadjudicated condemnation proceedings and takes from the bank a certificate of deposit which is payable at a definite time in the future, and in such case the question of due care or negligence in making the deposit is quite immaterial.

Northwestern Mfg. Co. v Bassett, 205-999; 218 NW 932

Good-faith and nonnegligent deposit in bank—effect. Principle reaffirmed that, generally speaking, a public officer, for instance, a sheriff, is not liable for public funds properly coming into his hands and deposited by him in good faith and without negligence in a bank which subsequently fails, with resultant loss of said funds.

Northwestern Mfg. Co. v Bassett, 205-999; 218 NW 932

Nonentertainable defense. In an action on the bond of a school treasurer to recover a shortage in his accounts, it is no defense that the plaintiff district has a cause of action against a third party who is unlawfully in possession of the funds constituting the shortage.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Indemnification of one of two sureties—effect. In an action against a public officer and his bondsmen to recover a shortage in public funds, it is quite immaterial, as far as plaintiff is concerned, that one of the sureties has received property from the public officer as partial indemnity.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Rejected defensive plea. In an action on the bond of a school treasurer, the defensive plea (if it is a defense) that the treasurer was the innocent victim of another party's wrongdoing will be given no consideration when the wrongdoing of the treasurer is manifest.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Prima facie liability. Proof that a school treasurer drew a check upon the school district bank account in favor of another bank; that the check was duly cashed; that the payee bank did not credit the amount to any account of the school district; and that said treasurer, on demand, did not deliver said money to the district, constitutes prima facie evidence of the latter's default and of liability on his bond.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Unallowable limitation on liability. A statutory bond which is given for the express purpose of securing public deposits in a bank may not be limited in liability to less than the liability called for by the statute; and any such attempt will be deemed nugatory, even tho such bond is approved by the public governing board. (See also §10300; §10982, Anno. 20.)

Leach v Bank, 205-1154; 213 NW 517

Demand on surety. In an action on the bond of a public officer to recover funds unaccounted for, no demand on the surety is necessary before commencing the action, when proper demand has been made on the principal.

State v Carney, 208-133; 217 NW 472

Holding under former statutes. The general bond of a guardian of property must be deemed to embrace liability for the proceeds of a promissory note which is in the hands of the guardian when he gives such bond and which represents the sale price of real estate sold under order of court, but without a sale bond being given by the guardian.

Iowa Bank v Soppe, 215-1242; 247 NW 632

1060 Liability of surety.

Additional annotations. See under §7408, Vol I
Att. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 174, 282;
'38 AG Op 72

Holding under former statute. The surety on the bond of a public officer is not an insurer or guarantor of the funds coming into the hands of the principal.

Danbury v Riedmiller, 208-879; 226 NW 159

Scope of liability. The liability of the surety on the bond of a public officer is not limited solely to the failure of the official to make proper accounting for all public money and property officially coming into his possession, but embraces liability for the failure of said officer to "faithfully and impartially, without fear, favor, fraud, or oppression, discharge all duties * * * required of his office by law".

Brown v Cochran, 222-34; 268 NW 585

Continuing liability. The liability of a surety on a statutory depository bond conditioned "to hold the county treasurer harmless" because of authorized deposit of public funds in a bank continues for a reasonable time after the expiration of the authorized period as to the undrawn balance of all deposits made during said period.

Dallas County v Bank, 205-672; 216 NW 119

Requalification as own successor—presumption. The fact that a county treasurer who succeeds himself, requalifies, and gives a new bond for his second term, creates no conclusive presumption that the liability which attached to him during the first term has been carried over to his new bond.

Dallas County v Bank, 205-672; 216 NW 119

Unallowable deposits. The principle that an administrator is not liable for estate funds which have been lost because of the failure of a bank in which he has, in good faith, and without negligence, deposited them, has no application to deposits made by an administrator in his own private bank.

Bookhart v Younglove, 207-800; 218 NW 533

Parties plaintiff. An action on a statutory bond is properly brought by the entity to which the bond runs.

Belmond Assn. v Luick, 217-805; 253 NW 521

Unallowable defense. It is no defense on the part of one of two sureties on the bond of a public officer that said officer, while so acting, was also acting as cashier of a bank; that, as cashier, he was short in his account with the bank; that said other surety was also surety on the private bond of the cashier; and that said other surety and said cashier conspired to use and did use the public funds with which to make good the cashier's shortage to the bank.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Cross-complaint. In an action on the bonds of a public officer and his bondsmen to recover a shortage, one surety may not cross-petition against a party who he alleges wrongfully received the funds resulting in the shortage, said latter party not being a party to the bond sued on.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Taking assignment of claim. Where, because of the peculations of a county auditor, a depository bank pays a forged check on school funds, the county, on effecting settlement with the surety on the auditor's official bond, may assign to the said surety its cause of action against the bank, and the assignee may enforce the said assigned action as the county might have enforced it.

New Amsterdam Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Contract limitations. Whether parties to a statutory bond will be permitted by contract to specify the time before which or after which an action can be maintained, quare.

Page County v Fidelity Co., 205-798; 216 NW 957

Evidence—unsigned copy of fidelity bond—inadmissible. In action by a surety company against defendant, who was covered by a fidelity bond and who agreed to indemnify plaintiff against loss sustained by reason of its executing fidelity bond in his behalf, it was error to admit in evidence instrument purporting to be a certified copy of the bond, but containing no signatures and which was admittedly no true and genuine copy of original bond.

Fidelity Deposit Co. v Ryan, 225-1260; 282 NW 721

Authority of agent. A surety company will not, in an action on a bond issued in its name by its agent, be permitted to dispute the authority which it has specifically conferred on said agent in a written power of attorney filed with the clerk of the district court and relied on by said clerk in approving the bond, the obligee in the bond having no knowledge of any limitation on the authority of the agent.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Reduction of widow's allowance—effect. Where the amount allowed a widow for her support for the year following the death of the husband is taken by her from the funds of the estate (she being executrix) and spent, a subsequent order, in an adversary proceeding, reducing said former amount is conclusive on the surety—and, of course, on the executrix—and in an action against the principal and surety the reduced amount is the limit of the allowable credit.

In re Durey, 215-257; 245 NW 236

Voluntarily augmented funds. A court-appointed, testamentary trustee and the surety on his official, statutory bond are liable not only for the money which comes into his hands as specifically required by the will, but for additional amounts of the testamentary funds which come into the hands of the trustee, as such, consequent on the generous action of the devisees, generally, in voluntarily augmenting said trust funds from the testamentary funds.

Whisler v Estes, 216-491; 249 NW 264

Salary of public officer. The salary—the “personal earnings”—of a public officer is exempt from liability on a judgment obtained against him and his surety, by the public body, because of the failure of the officer to account for public funds coming into his hands. The court cannot, on the plea of public policy, rule into the statute an exception which the legislature has not seen fit to declare. So held where the surety having paid the judgment, and thereby subrogated to the rights of the county, sought reimbursement from the officer's salary.

Ohio Ins. v Galvin, 222-670; 269 NW 254; 108 ALR 1036

Failure to file claim—when enforceable against heir. A claim arising under a bond wherein the surety binds “his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives”, and arising after the death of said surety and the due settlement of his estate, is enforceable:

1. Against the property received by an heir, as such, from said ancestor-surety, and
2. Against the property passing from said ancestor and owned by said heir under conveyance for which he paid nothing, and
3. Against the heir, personally, for the value of the property so received if he has consumed it. And this is true even tho, necessarily, said claim was not filed against the estate of said surety.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

1061 Conditions of other bonds.

Necessary conditions. It seems that the official bonds of executors, administrators, court-appointed trustees, and similar officers are necessarily conditioned as the bonds of public officers are conditioned.

Whisler v Estes, 216-491; 249 NW 264

Fraud of trustee—affirmance or disaffirmance. It is of no concern to a surety on the bond of a trustee whether the beneficiary affirms or disaffirms the fraudulent conduct of the trustee.

Dodds v Cartwright, 209-835; 226 NW 918

Adjudication of liability—conclusiveness. An unappealed order of court adjudicating the amount of the liability of a trustee to the beneficiary is conclusive on the trustee and ipso facto on his surety.

Dodds v Cartwright, 209-835; 226 NW 918

Holding under prior statutes. The general bond of a guardian of property must be deemed to embrace liability for the proceeds of a promissory note which is in the hands of the guardian when he gives such bond and which represents the sale price of real estate sold under order of court, but without a sale bond being given by the guardian.

Iowa Bank v Soppe, 215-1242; 247 NW 632

When nonterminable by death—enforcement against heirs et al. The bond of a fiduciary, under the terms of which a surety purports to bind “his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives”, is not revoked by the death of the surety, and binds the estate of the surety in the hands of his heirs, devisees, or personal representative.

1062 Want of compliance—effect.

Omission of penalty—effect.

Attempt to limit liability.

Monona Co. v O'Connor, 205-1119; 215 NW 803

Andrew v Bank, 205-878; 219 NW 84

Statutory bonds—estoppel to deny. A bond given for the performance of a public building contract, and containing some of the conditions which the statute mandatorily prescribes for such a bond, anything in any contract to the contrary notwithstanding, will be deemed a statutory bond, with all the statutory conditions impliedly inserted therein.

Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Statutory bond—scope. Principle reaffirmed that a statutory bond always carries the obligations imposed by the statute, even tho said obligations are not written into said bond.

Ottumwa Boiler v O'Meara, 206-577; 218 NW 920

Inclusion and exclusion. Statutory requirements will be read into a statutory bond, and nonstatutory requirements will be read out of such bond.

Chas. City v Rasmussen, 210-841; 232 NW 137; 72 ALR 638

Acts constituting breach. A statutory bond conditioned to secure the prompt paying over to the proper authorities of public funds on deposit in a bank is breached on the failure to promptly make such payment, and not from the time when the authorities suffer an actual loss.

CHAPTER 55

ADDITIONAL SECURITY AND DISCHARGE OF SURETIES

1081 New bond.

Release—strict compliance with statute. The release and discharge of the surety on a guardian's bond under any judicial procedure other than that prescribed by statute is a nullity, and, in such case, a new bond cannot be deemed a "substitute bond", but must be deemed additional security.

REMOVAL FROM OFFICE

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 381; '38 AG Op 300

1091 Removal by court.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 336; '36 AG Op 381; '38 AG Op 290, 300

Pleadings. Allegations that a public officer drew statutory mileage on account of official journeys when the travel (1) was without cost to himself, or (2) was by means of a conveyance owned and supplied by the public, do not state facts constituting grounds for removal from office. (See §1225-d3, C., '31 [1225.03, C., '39].)

State v Naumann, 213-418; 239 NW 93; 81 ALR 483

Fundamentally required proof. In the absence of willful misconduct and corrupt motives on the part of a public officer, mere error of judgment either as to law or fact will not justify his removal from office.

State v Canning, 206-1349; 221 NW 923
State v Naumann, 213-418; 239 NW 93
State v Missildine, 215-663; 245 NW 303

Systematic disregard of law. The conduct of a member of the board of supervisors in systematically disregarding, or by subterfuges avoiding, the law which requires estimates by the county engineer and advertisement of public contracts for work and supplies evinces such "willfulness" as to render such acts ample ground for removal from office.

State v Garretson, 207-627; 223 NW 390

Using public funds for private use. The acts of a county treasurer in wrongfully and repeatedly taking and using, for his own private purposes, public funds in his possession, ipso facto constitutes "willful misconduct and maladministration in office", notwithstanding the fact (1) that prior to the commencement of an action to remove him from office, he returns to the public treasury the amount of his peculations, and (2) that his bondsmen are liable for his wrongdoing; a priori is this true when he also knowingly connives at and permits like conduct by his official employee.

State v Smith, 219-5; 257 NW 181

Proof of evil design—when not required. In an action to remove a public official from office, the principle that a corrupt or evil design or purpose must be shown under a charge of "willful misconduct or maladministration in office", does not apply when the official is charged with the violation of a statute which specifically declares that such violation shall be sufficient ground for removal from office.

1111 Effect of dismissal.

Allowance of attorney fees—nullification on appeal. An allowance against the county of attorney fees in favor of a county officer unsuccessfully sought to be removed from office will, on reversal in the supreme court on appeal, be set aside.

State v Smith, 219-5; 257 NW 181

1112 Want of probable cause.

Dismissal of proceeding—costs. When citizens, with apparently good cause, and with reason to believe that the complaint is justified, initiate proceedings for the removal of a party from office, they should not be taxed with the costs in case the proceedings are dismissed by the court.

State v Canning, 206-1349; 221 NW 923

Unallowable taxation to relator. In a proceeding to remove a public officer, proof that the officer had drawn fees in a material amount to which he had no legal claim, precludes the court from taxing the costs to the relator, even tho the court, under the evidence, properly exonerates said officer from corrupt motive in drawing said fees.

State v Missildine, 215-663; 245 NW 303

1114 Appointive state officers.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 381

Constitutional power to remove officer. The President of the United States is vested by the federal constitution with the right to remove, without the consent of the senate, any federal executive officer appointed by him, even tho said officer was appointed "by and with the advice and consent of the senate".

Myers v United States, 272 US 52

Due process of law—removal from office without notice. There is, in a constitutional sense, no element of property in a public office. It follows that the statutory power conferred on the state executive council to investigate and remove appointive state officers, without making provision for notice and hearing, will not be held to violate the due process clause of the constitution as to an officer to whom the council has voluntarily given ample written notice and opportunity to be heard.

VACANCIES IN OFFICE

1145 Holding over.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 503; '28 AG Op 43; '34 AG Op 67; '38 AG Op 701

Resignation—when effective. Three members of a board of school directors of five members constitute a legal quorum to elect a successor to one of said three members who had theretofore resigned with the intent (shared in by his fellow members) that the resignation would not take effect until his successor had been elected and had qualified.

Cowles v Sch. Dist., 204-689; 216 NW 83

County supervisor-elect—death before qualifying—vacancy. The death of a duly elected member to the board of supervisors, before qualifying, creates a vacancy in that office to be filled in the manner provided by subsec. 5, §1152, C., '35.

State v Best, 225-338; 280 NW 551

1146 What constitutes vacancy.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 439, 502; '28 AG Op 89; '32 AG Op 1, 51; '34 AG Op 81, 383; '38 AG Op 1, 136, 415, 679, 701; AG Op Feb. 21, '39, April 4, '39, July 26, '39

County supervisor-elect—death before qualifying. The death of a duly elected member to the board of supervisors, before qualifying, creates a vacancy in that office to be filled in the manner provided by subsec. 5, §1152, C., '35.

State v Best, 225-338; 280 NW 551

Unambiguous language—"or" cannot mean "and". The word "or" in a statute cannot be judicially construed to mean "and" when the language of the section is too clear and unambiguous to admit of judicial construction.

State v Best, 225-338; 280 NW 551

Negotiation for other office—effect. A mayor may not be deemed to have vacated his office on a simple showing that he had requested an appointment as justice of the peace, and had executed a bond as such justice but was never appointed.

Meijerink v Lindsay, 203-1031; 213 NW 934

Incompatible offices. The office of constable is ipso facto vacated when the incumbent qualifies as marshal of a city which is coextensive with the township in which the constable was elected.

1147 Possession of office.

Vacancy—when fillable by election. The statutory provision (§1157, C., '31) that if a vacancy occurs in an elective state office thirty days prior to a general election the vacancy shall be filled at said election, in legal effect prohibits the filling of such vacancy at said election when the vacancy occurs less than thirty days prior to said election.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

Power to fill—majority of quorum. Vacancies on an official board (which is empowered to fill vacancies) may be filled by a majority of a quorum, in the absence of a statute which requires a majority of the entire membership of the board.

Cowles v Sch. Dist., 204-689; 216 NW 83

De facto officers. Members of a school board who are, in supposed compliance with the law, and in good faith, elected to fill vacancies caused by resignations, and who in good faith act as such members, are at least directors de facto, and their official actions may not be collaterally assailed.

Cowles v Sch. Dist., 204-689; 216 NW 83

District court clerk—vacancy filled by board. The district court has neither exclusive nor concurrent authority with the board of supervisors to fill a vacancy in the office of clerk of the court (a county office) by appointment; the court's power is confined to the appointment of a temporary clerk until the board fills the vacancy as provided by law.

State v Larson, 224-509; 275 NW 566

County supervisor-elect—death before qualifying. The death of a duly elected member to the board of supervisors, before qualifying, creates a vacancy in that office to be filled in the manner provided by subsec. 5 of this section.

1154 Appointments.

Officers—qualification—failure to file commission—effect. The appointee to a vacancy in a public office derives his legal authority to act from the duly executed written appointment. Failure to file the appointment with the officer with whom the qualifying oath is required to be filed is but an irregularity.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

1155 Tenure of vacancy appointee.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 414; '32 AG Op 1, 114; '38 AG Op 701

Election to fill vacancy. The statutory provision that an officer filling a vacancy in an elective office shall hold until the next regular election at which such vacancy can be filled, means the "next regular election" at which such vacancy can be legally filled.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

District court clerk—vacancy filled by board. The district court has neither exclusive nor concurrent authority with the board of supervisors to fill a vacancy in the office of clerk of the court (a county office) by appointment; the court's power is confined to the appointment of a temporary clerk until the board fills the vacancy as provided by law.

State v Larson, 224-509; 275 NW 566

1156 Officers elected to fill vacancies—tenure.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 414

1157 Vacancies—when filled.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 155; '38 AG Op 701

Statute supplementing constitution. The constitutional provision (Art. XI, §6) that appointees to fill vacancies in office shall hold until the next general election, is not self-executing, and therefore has been properly supplemented by this section.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

Estoppel and waiver. Where, on the erroneous assumption that a vacancy existed in a public office, two persons are formally nomiinated, by different political parties, to fill the supposed vacancy and are voted on at the ensuing election, the failure of the candidate who is already serving under a valid appointment to withdraw his nomination and legally to question the nominations made, furnishes no basis for the claim that he thereby waived his right longer to hold the office, and estopped himself from objecting to the result of the election.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

Implied repeal—statutes not in pari materia. A statute cannot be deemed impliedly repealed by other statutes which are not in pari materia. As an illustration, statutes dealing merely with the procedure to be followed in making nominations for office, and in filling vacancies in such nominations, or in determining the eligibility of candidates, cannot be held to impliedly repeal a statute which authorizes the holding of an election.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

Statutes in pari materia. The statutes relative (1) to vacancies in nominations, (2) to the placing of names of candidates on the official ballot, (3) to the sufficiency of a certificate of nomination, and (4) to the eligibility of candidates, all presuppose (and properly so) the existence of statutory authorization to hold an election, and therefore can have no controlling bearing on the construction of the statute which does authorize an election. Such former series of statutes are not strictly in pari materia with the latter statute.

State v Claussen, 216-1079; 250 NW 195

Vacancy—when fillable by election. The statutory provision that if a vacancy occurs in an elective state office 30 days prior to a general election the vacancy shall be filled at said election, in legal effect prohibits the filling of such vacancy at said election when the vacancy occurs less than thirty days prior to said election.

CHAPTER 60SOLDIERS PREFERENCE LAW

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 157; '36 AG Op 538; '38 AG Op 190

1159 Appointments and promotions.

Discussion. See 21 ILR 135—General review of legislation

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 538; '38 AG Op 190

Qualifications for office sufficiently set out in statute. The soldiers preference law is not unconstitutional for failure to provide standards of qualifications for office when it requires that the applicant be an honorably discharged soldier, that he be a citizen and a resident of the place of appointment, and that his qualifications be equal with those of the nonveteran applicant.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Police judge appointment—no implied repeal by statute which merely limits. A statute providing that in certain cities the council shall appoint a police judge is not impliedly repealed by the soldiers preference law, which merely places a limitation on the power of appointment.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Purpose of act. The intent of the soldiers preference law is to make veterans secure in their positions in public service and to prevent their removal except for misconduct, and it is not intended for the purpose of retaining in office one who violates his duty.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Justifiable discharge. An order of a city council to reduce the number of employees in a named department justifies the discharge of an ex-soldier employee whose duties are apparently inseparably connected with said department.

Rounds v City, 213-52; 238 NW 428

Good-faith abolishment of position—evidence sustaining. In an action by world war veteran, claiming to be within soldiers preference law, to compel reinstatement to position in city street cleaning department, finding of trial court that position had been abolished in good faith by city council held sustained by evidence.

Hamilton v MacVicar, (NOR); 269 NW 750

Legislative regulation—soldiers preference appointments. The soldiers preference law cannot be objected to on the grounds that it deprives the city of self-government when the powers of the municipality are derived solely from the legislature which has power under the constitution and under statute to prescribe rules governing municipalities.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Yardman at state capitol. An honorably discharged veteran of the war with Germany, appointed for no stated time to the position of "yardman" on the statehouse grounds, is not removable by the executive council except on duly preferred charges of incompetency or misconduct, he not being a deputy of the state custodian of public grounds, tho working under the supervision of said latter officer, and his "term" not expiring on the legal removal of said custodian.

Statter v Herring, 217-410; 251 NW 715

1161 Duty to investigate and appoint.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '88 AG Op 190

Investigation in re qualification. The general statutory requirement of the soldiers preference act that the appointing board or officer shall "make an investigation" relative to the qualifications of a soldier applicant, necessarily leaves to said board or officer the determination of the nature and kind of investigation to be made.

Miller v Hanna, 221-56; 265 NW 127

Soldiers preference law—findings on qualifications of applicants. In an action to compel the appointment of the plaintiff war veteran as city police judge, where it was shown that both the plaintiff and the nonveteran appointed by the city council were qualified for the position, a finding by the district court in favor of the veteran should not be disturbed.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Investigation of qualifications. An investigation of the comparative qualifications of applicants is a good faith investigation even tho there was no public hearing or formal taking of evidence, when record shows that supervisors made inquiries concerning and had personal knowledge of qualifications of applicants and were influenced by fact that petitioner had at one time been convicted of assault with intent to commit rape.

McLaughlin v Board, 227-267; 288 NW 74

Investigation—evidence—abuse of discretion. Evidence of past conduct and employment, coupled with appointing board's personal knowledge from having heard of and observed applicant's work held not to show a clear abuse of discretion warranting interference by the court.

McLaughlin v Board, 227-267; 288 NW 74

Grounds for refusing appointment—filing. Failure of appointing board to file the required statutory statement of grounds for refusing appointment does not invalidate another's appointment and under the circumstances of the case held not to be evidence that the board acted arbitrarily and unwarrantedly.

McLaughlin v Board, 227-267; 288 NW 74

Employees—power to discharge. The custodian of public buildings and grounds (at the seat of government) must, in view of §273, C., '85, be deemed vested with the sole authority legally to discharge the employees of said department, no statute to the contrary appearing; especially is this true when other legislation, tho it has expired ex vi termini, clearly demonstrates such to have been the intent of the general assembly.

1162 Mandamus.

Nonreview of discretion. The legal freedom of the board of supervisors to determine according to its own judgment, in other words, its discretion to determine, that an applicant who is not an honorably discharged soldier has qualifications for the position of steward of the county home superior to the qualifications of an applicant who is such soldier, will not be reviewed in an action of mandamus unless the record is such as to clearly show that the board abused its discretion—acted in bad faith.

Miller v Hanna, 221-56; 265 NW 127

Refusal—narrow issue. On mandamus to right the alleged wrong in refusing to grant to an ex-soldier a preference in a public appointment or employment, the sole and only issue before the court is whether the appointing officer or board was justified, within the range of fair discretion, in finding on the law-required investigation as to relative qualifications that the qualifications of the ex-soldier were not equal to the qualifications of the non-soldier appointee.

Bender v Iowa City, 222-739; 269 NW 779

Extent of court's power—soldiers preference. In mandamus action to compel county supervisors to employ war veteran as courthouse janitor and discharge incumbent non-veteran, court cannot control the appointment but can only direct and require the appointing body to make investigation of the comparative qualifications of the applicants, and when such investigation is made court cannot interfere unless it is plainly apparent from the testimony that the board acted arbitrarily and capriciously.

1162.1 Appeals.

District court's power in soldiers preference appeals. A soldiers preference law provision giving the district court the power to review the evidence and find whether the applicant is qualified, and to direct the appointing board as to further action to be taken, is not an unconstitutional delegation of power, as the finding of facts is often a judicial function, and the power of appointment is not exclusively a legislative or executive right.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Soldiers preference law—findings on qualifications of applicants. In an action to compel the appointment of the plaintiff war veteran as city police judge, where it was shown that both the plaintiff and the nonveteran appointed by the city council were qualified for the position, a finding by the district court in favor of the veteran should not be disturbed.

Maddy v City Council, 226-941; 285 NW 208

Findings by district court. In an appeal under the soldiers preference law, the district court may direct a city council to appoint a war veteran to the position of police judge and to cancel all action taken in appointing a nonveteran with the same qualifications for the office, rather than remand the case for further consideration by the city council.

1163 Removal—certiorari to review.

Purpose of act. The intent of the soldiers preference law is to make veterans secure in their positions in public service and to prevent their removal except for misconduct, and it is not intended for the purpose of retaining in office one who violates his duty.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Civil service and soldiers preference laws—purpose. Civil service and soldiers preference laws were not intended as a cloak or shield to cover misconduct, incompetency, or failure to perform official duties, but to provide protection and safeguard against arbitrary action of superior officers in removing such employees for reasons other than those named in the statutes.

Anderson v Board, 227-1164; 290 NW 493

Employment for definite time—effect. An honorably discharged soldier who is employed by the board of supervisors, under a written contract for a definite period of time as janitor of the courthouse, does not, by serving said contract period of time, acquire a legal right, even tho his competency and conduct are unquestioned, to continue in said position in preference to another honorably discharged soldier of equal qualifications.

Sorenson v Andrews, 221-44; 264 NW 562

Reduction of employees. The city council has plenary power by appropriate resolution to order a good-faith reduction in the number of employees in a municipal department operating under civil service regulations, and may validly delegate to the chief officer of such department the administrative duty to designate, on the basis of efficiency, competency, and length of service, and without the preferring of charges the employees who shall be discharged; and this is true tho the employees be ex-soldiers.

Lyon v Com., 203-1203; 212 NW 579

Right to discharge. A municipality may, in good faith, validly discharge an ex-soldier employee when the emergency under which he was employed has ceased, and at any time when the city has no funds with which to pay such employee.

Douglas v City, 206-144; 220 NW 72

Discharge—conflicting statutes. A duly appointed county engineer, who is an honorably discharged soldier, may not be summarily discharged by the board of supervisors prior to the end of the term for which appointed, even tho the statute authorizing the appointment of such engineer provides that the "tenure of office may be terminated at any time by the board".

Hahn v County, 218-543; 255 NW 695

Hearing prior to discharge—waiver. Tho the soldiers preference act requires a hearing, prior to discharge, on charges of misconduct against a public employee as grounds for discharge, yet, where no such hearing is held, and the parties join issue on certiorari on the issue of misconduct, they must be held thereby to have presented the issue to the court.

Allen v Wegman, 218-801; 254 NW 74

Hearing before discharge—waiver. Tho the soldiers preference law requires, as grounds for and prior to discharge, a hearing on charges of misconduct against a public employee, yet, when no such hearing is held and in a certiorari action the parties join issue on misconduct, they waive this hearing provided by the soldiers preference law. Evidence held to establish such misconduct.

Butler v Curran, 224-1339; 279 NW 89

Policeman assaulting prisoner—discharge justifiable. In an action in certiorari brought under soldiers preference law to review a ruling of civil service commission sustaining the discharge of a police officer for violation of civil service rules, providing for the dismissal of a policeman who clubs or mistreats a prisoner merely because such prisoner makes derogatory remarks concerning the officer, held, evidence sufficient to sustain findings of the commission.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Discharge of policeman for nonpayment of debts—nonpermissibility. Civil service commission's removal of police officer, an honorably discharged soldier, on sole ground that he failed to pay his creditors, held arbitrary and void despite fact that police department suffered inconvenience because of creditor's demands for assistance in collection, where such officer made good-faith efforts to meet his obligations which accrued as result of sickness in family.

Anderson v Board, 227-1164; 290 NW 493

Soldier employee—license fee retention. Retention of license fees collected for a state department is not "trivial and inconsequential" but is misconduct and incompetency sufficient to discharge a public employee having a soldier's preference.

Butler v Curran, 224-1339; 279 NW 89

When charges unnecessary. Charges against an ex-soldier employee as a condition precedent to his discharge are unnecessary when the office or position has been necessarily abolished.

Rounds v City, 213-52; 238 NW 428

Legislative abolishment of position—effect. The position known as "clerk of the state employment bureau" was, in legal effect, abolished by the act of the general assembly in accepting the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act (29 USC, §49 et seq.) and by the subsequent joint adoption by the federal and state governments of a system under which all employees of the state employment bureau were placed on a civil service basis after competitive examination administered by the federal employment service. It follows that he who was holding the said position of "clerk" at the time the position was legally abolished, tho an honorably discharged soldier, was not entitled to have charges preferred and a hearing had thereon.

Holmes v Reese, 221-52; 265 NW 384

Non-good-faith discharge. The summary discharge by a municipal department superintendent of an honorably-discharged soldier employee cannot be justified on the plea that the position occupied by said employee was in good faith abolished, when, immediately following said discharge, several other persons of no qualifications superior to that of the discharged employee were employed in the same department to do the same work which the discharged employee had done.

Dickey v King, 220-1322; 263 NW 823

Definite tenure of employment—removal.

Durst v Board, 228- ; 292 NW 73

Tenure—removal—yardman at state capitol. An honorably discharged veteran of the war with Germany, appointed for no stated time to the position of "yardman" on the state-house grounds, is not removable by the executive council except on duly preferred charges of incompetency or misconduct, he not being a deputy of the state custodian of public grounds, tho working under the supervision of said latter officer, and his "term" not expiring on the legal removal of said custodian.

Statter v Herring, 217-410; 251 NW 715

Defendants. The custodian of public buildings and grounds (at Des Moines) is the sole, proper defendant in an action of certiorari to review the legality, under the soldiers preference act, of the discharge of an employee of said department.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

Certiorari—dismissal re custodian—res judicata. In an action of certiorari against the state executive council, and the custodian of public buildings and grounds, to review the legality of the discharge of an employee of the latter department, an unappealed order of court dismissing said custodian as an improper party defendant, tho unqualifiedly erroneous, becomes the law of said particular action, and precludes said plaintiff from thereafter proceeding against said custodian for the relief sought.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

Evidence in addition to return. On certiorari, to review the action of a municipality in declining longer to continue the employment of an employee, evidence in addition to the "return" may be received.

Douglas v City, 206-144; 220 NW 72

Failure of proof. Writ of certiorari, to review discharge of ex-soldier from a public appointive position, cannot be sustained when plaintiff predicates his right to relief solely on the unproven allegation that he was discharged by defendant.

Johnson v Herring, 222-1126; 271 NW 175

Reinstatement—unallowable order. The court, in certiorari, is manifestly without authority to order the state executive council to reinstate, in a department of the state government, a discharged state employee, when said council has no legal authority to employ or discharge employees in said department.

Pittington v Herring, 220-1375; 264 NW 712

Certiorari to review veteran's discharge—scope. Under soldiers preference law affording veterans the right of hearing and review by certiorari, in the event of discharge from public employment, the scope of the review is not, as in ordinary cases of certiorari, limited to evidence on question of jurisdiction or other illegality, but is enlarged to allow a review of all proceedings had before a civil service commission.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Civil service commission findings—conclusiveness. The ruling of a civil service commission as to the discharge of a veteran under soldiers preference law, altho not conclusive, should not be lightly set aside, it being the general rule that where there is compliance in good faith with all requirements as to hearings, the courts will not usually interfere to direct or control the discretion of the commission.

Edwards v Civil Service, 227-74; 287 NW 285

Discharge by civil service commission—findings—reviewability. Supreme court will not review findings of civil service commission which are supported by competent evidence, where commission has jurisdiction and has otherwise acted legally; but, where evidence is entirely lacking to support the findings, the question becomes one of law and the action of the commission would not only be erroneous, but would amount to an illegality reviewable by certiorari.

Anderson v Board, 227-1164; 290 NW 493

No waiver by taking civil service examination. A war veteran holding a continuing position for a city does not waive his rights under the soldiers preference law by taking a civil service examination as to the position he holds. He is secure in the position so long as he is capable and efficient altho he may fail in the examination.

Jones v Des Moines, 225-1342; 283 NW 924

Soldiers preference law—not superseded by civil service law. Where a position occupied by a war veteran, such as license collector for a city, was treated by the council as a continuing one and not for a definite term, the fact that the city conducted a civil service examination (which the veteran failed to pass) will not permit the city to oust the veteran and appoint another without charges, notice, and hearing, as provided by the soldiers preference law.

1164 Burden of proof.

Civil service employee's discharge—burden of proof. Burden is on civil service commission to prove statutory grounds for removal of police officer who is entitled to soldiers preference.

Smith v Thompson, 219-888; 258 NW 190

Compensation—acceptance in part—effect. An officer who accepts part of a statutory compensation does not thereby estop himself from enforcing payment of the balance.

Broyles v County, 213-345; 239 NW 1

Inequitable demand for legal salary. A city officer who has not, for a series of months, received his full salary as legally fixed by ordinance, may not, in an equitable action, compel the city to pay him the deficiency when during said time he has properly received an unknown amount of fees belonging to the city (or county) but has illegally retained them as salary and makes no offer to return said fees.

King v Eldora, 220-568; 261 NW 602

Personal earnings exempt. The salary—the “personal earnings”—of a public officer is exempt from liability on a judgment obtained against him and his surety, by the public body, because of the failure of the officer to account for public funds coming into his hands. The court cannot, on the plea of public policy, rule into the statute an exception which the legislature has not seen fit to declare. So held where the surety, having paid the judgment and thereby subrogated to the rights of the county, sought reimbursement from the officer's salary.

Strip mining—coal lease subject to pipe-line easement—lateral support. Where a pipe-line company has an easement across land and an option to buy a designated strip of land along the pipe line if a strip coal mine should be opened on the land, a subsequent strip mine coal lease, subject to the pipe-line easement and option, gives the coal lessee no rights to strip mine coal on the land covered by the purchase option and thus destroy the lateral support of the pipe line, nor is such lessee entitled to any part of the purchase price for such strip of land.

Penn v Pipe Line Co., 225-680; 281 NW 194

Lease of mineable coal—breach—burden of proof. 1336 Double damages.

Failure to quitclaim mineral rights—damages. The measure of damages for breach of contract to quitclaim to the surface owner of lands "the right to coal and minerals" under the lands is not the difference between the value of the land with and without the coal and mining rights existing against the land as an incumbrance, when the unit fee has theretofore been separated into (1) a fee to the surface, (2) a fee to the minerals, and (3) a fee to the right to vertical support, and the two latter fees have been conveyed to other parties and paid for.

Bremhorst v Coal Co., 202-1251; 211 NW 898

Measure of damages—wrongful act without profit to wrongdoer. The lessee of coal lands who seeks to recover damages consequent on the wrongful act of the owner of the land in taking coal from the land, need not show that the defendant-owner made any profit from his wrongful operations. Plaintiff need only show wherein and to what extent he was damaged.

Hartford Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 263 NW 269

Opinion evidence—examination of experts—improper form. In an action against a mine owner for damages consequent on an injury to the surface of the soil which he did not own, hypothetical questions calling for values should not be framed on the erroneous theory that the mine owner had no right to use the surface of the soil to any extent.

Grell v Lumsden, 206-166; 220 NW 123

Torts—liability of mere employee. The mere employee of a tort-feasor is not necessarily liable for the damage resulting from the tort. So held in an action by the lessee of coal lands for damages consequent on the wrongful removal of coal by the owner of the leased land.

Hartford Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 263 NW 269

Decree—broad power under general prayer for relief. A court of equity, in dealing with and adjusting involved and complicated matters of fact, has exceptionally broad power to effect equity and justice when both parties pray for general equitable relief. Illustrated where defendant, who was the owner of coal lands, and those working in conjunction with him, had wrongfully interfered with the rights of lessees, and were held liable in a reasonable amount for permanent improvements placed in the mine by lessees, even tho said improvements became worthless—it appearing that defendant's misconduct had materially contributed to said latter condition.

1353 Separate maps.

Sale of gypsum lands—compensation—jury question. Evidence that defendant orally agreed to pay plaintiff a commission to assist in the sale of gypsum lands upon which plaintiff held drill plats, that agents of purchaser conferred with plaintiff and examined the plats, coupled with a denial by defendant that plaintiff accepted the offer or assisted in consummating the sale, presents a question precisely determinable by the jury.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Constitutionality.

Hawkins v Bleakly, 243 US 210

Liberal construction—workmen's compensation act. The workmen's compensation act is to be liberally construed.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Maintenance of residence not "trade or business". Testimony which simply shows that a home owner maintains on his residential grounds an additional residence which is occupied by his son, establishes no such "trade or business" as renders the home owner liable under the workmen's compensation act to an employee who is injured in the course of his employment while repairing the equipment of the house occupied by the son; and this is true even tho the employee was not a casual employee.

Tunnichliff v Bettendorf, 204-168; 214 NW 516

Casual employment—dual provision. The provision of the workmen's compensation act that "persons whose employment is of a casual nature" shall not be under the act (subsec. 2, this section), and the further provision that "A person whose employment is purely casual, and not for the purpose of the employer's trade or business," shall not be deemed an "employee" (§1421, subsec. 3a, C., '31), when construed together, have but one meaning, to wit, the full meaning of the last provision.

Gardner v Trustees, 217-1390; 250 NW 740

Employees within and without the act. If an employee is not engaged in work of a "purely casual nature" he is entitled to the benefits of the compensation act altho the employment was "not for the purpose of the employer's trade or business"; and vice versa, if his employment is "for the purpose of the employer's trade or business," he is entitled to the benefits of the act tho his employment is of a "purely casual nature". In other words, in order to put the employee outside the workmen's act it must appear that the employment was both "purely casual" and "not for the purpose of the employer's trade or business".

Gardner v Trustees, 217-1390; 250 NW 740

Casual employment "for the purpose of the employer's trade or business". An employment to wash the kitchen walls of a restaurant is "for the purpose of the employer's trade or business", even tho the employment is purely casual.

Dial v Coleman's Lunch, 217-945; 251 NW 33

Noncasual employment.

Eddington v Tel. Co., 201-67; 202 NW 374

Operator of sorghum mill not within act. The employee of a farmer is "engaged in an agricultural pursuit" while engaged in operating a sorghum mill on the farm, and therefore is not within the benefits of the workmen's compensation act.

Taverner v Anderson, 220-151; 261 NW 610

Employees within acts—excludes farm supervisors—agricultural pursuit. An employee whose duties consisted of repairing buildings and fences on some 20 farms and who occasionally advised as to crops was engaged in an agricultural pursuit within the meaning of §1361, C., '35, and when fatally injured on the highway while going from one farm to another, his estate is not entitled to workmen's compensation.

Criger v Mustaba Co., 224-1111; 276 NW 788

Scope of employment—jury question. The scope of a servant's duties is to be determined by what he was employed to perform, and by what, with knowledge and approval of his master, he actually did perform. Evidence held to present a jury question whether a general farm hand was, at the time of his injury, within the scope of his employment.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

Nonagricultural pursuit. A workman who is employed by a county as a member of the county highway department, and is paid by the county an hourly wage for driving a heavy tractor road grader in the construction and maintenance of county roads—for which work said grader was exclusively designed—is not, as regards the county, the employer, deprived of the benefits of the workmen's compensation act because, when injured in the operation of said grader, he was, under the orders from the board of supervisors, engaged in the construction on a farm and for the benefit of the owner thereof, of a trench silo, such construction not being an engagement by said workman "in an agricultural pursuit or any operation immediately connected therewith" within the meaning of subsec. 5 of this section.

Trullinger v Fremont Co., 223-677; 273 NW 124

Civil Works Administration employee—status. Workmen who are (1) employed, (2) directed when and where to work, and (3) paid for their services, by the federal Civil Works Administration, are not, while engaged in re-decorating a public school building, employees of the school corporation owning said building, within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act.

Hoover v Sch. Dist., 220-1364; 264 NW 611; 39 NCCA 271; 3 NCCA (NS) 741

Township not employer. A civil township is not an "employer" within the meaning of this chapter, such township being but an unincorporated district. It necessarily follows that a township road superintendent is not an "employee."

Hop v Brink, 205-74; 217 NW 551.

Wife as employee of husband. A husband who is the sole owner of a printing plant may validly employ his wife as a linotype and press operator in said plant and the wife may legally accept such employment and collect therefor, because such services are wholly outside of, and foreign to, the usual and ordinary marital duties of a wife. It follows that the wife is entitled to compensation under the workmen's compensation act for injuries arising out of and in the course of said employment.

Reid v Reid, 216-882; 249 NW 387

Policemen not within act. The minor children of a deceased policeman who was a member of an organized police department and contributing to the statutory pension fund of said department, and who was killed while attempting to effect an arrest and at a time when he was not actually "pensioned", are not entitled to compensation under this chapter.

Ogilvie v Des Moines, 212-117; 233 NW 526

Iowa judgment for death damages—effect in foreign state. Where a judgment fixing the compensation for a railroad employee's death due to an accident in Iowa was rendered by an Iowa court under the Iowa compensation act, it may be pleaded by the railroad in an action brought against it for the same cause in Minnesota under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, since both courts had jurisdiction to decide whether deceased was engaged in intrastate or interstate commerce; and the Iowa judgment, being the earlier one rendered, was res judicata in the other action, altho the other action was brought first.

Chicago, RI Ry. v Schendel, 270 US 611

Policemen under coverage. Section 1422, C., '27, providing for coverage under the workmen's compensation act for policemen killed or injured in effecting an arrest, embraces, in view of §1361, subsec. 4, those policemen only who are not members of an organized police department.

Ogilvie v Des Moines, 212-117; 233 NW 526

1362 Compulsory when.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 286, 477; '28 AG Op 122, 435; '34 AG Op 649; '36 AG Op 274; '38 AG Op 6

Nonemployee of city. One may not be said to be in the employ of a city, and therefore within the benefits of this chapter, when, at the time of his injury, he was performing work which he had donated, in furtherance of a plan of public-spirited citizens to beautify a plot of municipally owned land as a city park, which plan the city council had approved, provided it be carried out without expense to the city.

Norman v City, 206-790; 221 NW 481; 28 NCCA 831

Indigents on work-relief. An indigent who, through federal, state, and county unemployment relief agencies is given work on county roads and is injured while performing such work, must, in order to hold the county liable under the workmen's compensation act, show that the legal relation between him and the county was, at the time of injury, that of employer and employee.

Oswalt v Lucas Co., 222-1099; 270 NW 847; 3 NCCA (NS) 742

1363 Acceptance presumed.

Employer's failure to insure liability—employee's option—presumption. In workmen's compensation case where employer fails to insure his liability, as required under Iowa law, thereby giving employee election to proceed under the act or collect damages at common law, election to proceed under act will be presumed in absence of filing of his election within required time.

Severson v Hanford Air Lines, 105 F 2d, 622

Applicability of state and federal acts. Injuries received by an employee of a common carrier, engaged in the transportation of both intrastate and interstate freight, are compensable under the state workmen's compensation act, and not under the corresponding federal act, when the employment, in the course of which and out of which the injuries arose, consists solely of the duty to patrol the railroad yards of the employer against thieves, trespassers, and fires.

Califore v Railway, 220-676; 263 NW 29

Extra-territorial effect. The workmen's compensation act of this state, when not formally rejected, becomes a part of a contract of employment entered into in this state by a resident employer and a nonresident employee, tho the contract requires almost exclusive execution of the contract by the employee in the foreign state—where the employee was injured.

Cullamore v Groneweg & S., 219-200; 257 NW 561

Consent of owner-employer to operation of automobile—effect. An employer, whose automobile is being operated with his consent, is not liable, under §5026, C., '35, to his own employee for an injury suffered by said employee in consequence of the actionable negligence of said operator of the car, provided said injury is compensable under the workmen's compensation act.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Injury not occurring from accident. A personal injury may be compensable even tho it did not arise out of an accident, or special incident or unusual occurrence. So held where a workman ruptured his stomach consequent on the physical strain of his ordinary work.

Almquist v Nurseries, 218-724; 254 NW 35; 94 ALR 573; 35 NCCA 432

Traumatic injury to diseased organ. A traumatic injury to an organ of the human body is not rendered noncompensable because the organ was already in a weakened condition because of a disease, and, therefore, more susceptible to an injury than a normal organ.

Almquist v Nurseries, 218-724; 254 NW 35; 94 ALR 573; 35 NCCA 432

Injury aggravating disease. In workmen's compensation case where the injury aggravates or accelerates a disease with which the workman is afflicted, it is compensable if death results from or is hastened by the injury.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Lead poisoning to auto mechanic—occupational disease—nonconclusive finding. As to lead poisoning suffered by an automobile mechanic from using a blowtorch negligently filled with tetraethyl lead gasoline, industrial commissioner's finding it to be an occupational disease was not conclusive on the courts.

Black v Creston Auto Co., 225-671; 281 NW 189

Garage mechanic—lead poisoning from blowtorch not occupational. An occupational disease is a usual or unavoidable incident or result of the particular employment. Lead poisoning suffered by a garage mechanic over a period of time resulting from using a blowtorch containing tetraethyl lead gasoline negligently furnished by the employer is a disease outside the ordinary diseases that follow the usual business of an automobile mechanic, and is compensable as an injury in the course of his employment.

Black v Creston Auto Co., 225-671; 281 NW 189

Fatal sunstroke—when noncompensable. A fatal sunstroke cannot be said to "arise out of" an employment and, therefore, be compensable, when the facts attending the injury fail to reveal any causal connection between the employment and the said injury.

Wax v Des M. Corp., 220-864; 263 NW 333; 38 NCCA 621

Death from lightning—noncompensable. The death of an employee from a fatal stroke of lightning, tho occurring "in the course of" his employment, cannot be deemed to "arise out of" said employment, and therefore be compensable under the workmen's compensation act, unless, by a preponderance of the evidence, a causal connection is established between (1) the circumstances and conditions attending said employment and (2) said death, i. e., that a person engaged in said employment is more susceptible to such an injury than other persons in the same locality. Evidence held insufficient.

Mincey v Dultmeier Co., 223-252; 272 NW 430

Heat exhaustion. In workmen's compensation action it is essential, in order to recover an award for death from heat exhaustion, that natural heat be intensified by artificial heat.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Exhaustion from artificial heat. Exhaustion from artificial heat in a bakeshop, which caused the death of a workman in the course of his employment, creates a compensable injury.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Excessive heat caused artificially. In workmen's compensation action to recover for death of workman caused by intensified or artificial heat, held, evidence sufficient to sustain finding that there was excessive heat in a bakeshop, caused artificially.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Causal connection between injury and death. In workmen's compensation action to recover for death of workman allegedly caused by intensified or artificial heat, wherein testimony of physician shows that some of the symptoms of heat exhaustion are that patient perspires freely, has an increased thirst, flushed face, increasing weakness and chills, and where workman manifested substantially all of the symptoms enumerated, such testimony supplied evidence that workman suffered heat exhaustion which hastened his death and thus provided the causal connection between his death and injury.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Act of courtesy resulting in injury. An injury to an employee may be said to "arise out of and in the course of his employment" when received at the employer's plant during working hours in extending, as a matter of courtesy, helpful assistance to a nonemployee who is rightfully on the premises for a purpose advantageous to the owner of the plant, provided the employee, from all the facts and circumstances attending his employment and work, believed and had reasonable grounds to believe that his employment embraced and contemplated the giving of such assistance under such circumstances.

Yates v Humphrey, 218-792; 255 NW 639; 35 NCCA 541

Hunting pheasants—course of employment—supported findings. The evidence leading up to and attending the injury of a salesman of steel culverts, while hunting pheasants with a son of a prospective customer, may be such as to support a finding of the industrial commissioner that the salesman was injured in the course of his employment and entitled to compensation accordingly.

Fintzel v Stoddard Co., 219-1263; 260 NW 725; 37 NCCA 799; 4 NCCA (NS) 694

1364 Rejection.

Failure to reject—effect. The neglect of an employer specifically to reject the workmen's compensation act in the manner provided automatically and conclusively places such employer under said act; and his neglect to insure his liability does not take him out from under said act.

Van Gorkom v O'Connell, 201-52; 206 NW 637

1367 Defenses when employee rejects.

Torts—fundamental laws govern liability. The fundamental and underlying law of torts is that he who does injury to the person or property of another is civilly liable in damages for the injuries inflicted.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Safe place to work—no warranty by master—reasonable care only. In no event is a master held to warrant or insure the servant's safety, but he is held to the exercise of reasonable care to eliminate those elements of danger to the life and limb of the servant which are not the usual and natural incidents of the service when the master has exercised reasonable care.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Negligence—reasonable care—test. If, in the performance of his duties, the master has exercised that degree of care ordinarily exercised by other reasonably prudent persons acting under the same or similar circumstances, he has met the standard of care the law requires and it cannot be said he is guilty of negligence.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

"Vice-principal" or "fellow servant"—master's liability. Evidence held to warrant conclusion that owner of apparatus used to tear down silo, and who was actively engaged in such work, was a fellow servant; and, if he was a vice-principal, he was such only to the extent of being required to furnish plaintiff proper equipment and a safe place to work. The mere fact that one employee has authority over others does not make him a vice-principal or superior so as to charge the master with his negligence.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

1368 Certain defenses not available.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 395

Assumption of risk defined. It is an implied term of the servant's contract of employment that he assume the risk which naturally pertains to his work, but he is under no contract or legal obligation to assume any risk which is occasioned by a failure of duty on the part of his employer.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Safe tools and place to work—reasonable care required. A master is required to exercise reasonable care to furnish reasonably safe tools, appliances, and instrumentalities for use in the work which the servant is expected to perform and the same degree of care in furnishing a reasonably safe place in which to work.

1375 Defenses not available when employer rejects.

"Vice-principal" or "fellow servant"—master's liability. Evidence held to warrant conclusion that owner of apparatus used to tear down silo, and who was actively engaged in such work, was a fellow servant; and, if he was a vice-principal, he was such only to the extent of being required to furnish plaintiff proper equipment and a safe place to work. The mere fact that one employee has authority over others does not make him a vice-principal or superior so as to charge the master with his negligence.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Safe tools and place to work—reasonable care required. A master is required to exercise reasonable care to furnish reasonably safe tools, appliances, and instrumentalities for use in the work which the servant is expected to perform and the same degree of care in furnishing a reasonably safe place in which to work.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Negligence—reasonable care—test. If, in the performance of his duties, the master has exercised that degree of care ordinarily exercised by other reasonably prudent persons acting under the same or similar circumstances, he has met the standard of care the law requires and it cannot be said he is guilty of negligence.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Assumption of risk defined. It is an implied term of the servant's contract of employment that he assume the risk which naturally pertains to his work, but he is under no contract or legal obligation to assume any risk which is occasioned by a failure of duty on the part of his employer.

1376 Willful injury—intoxication.

Liberal construction—workmen's compensation act. The workmen's compensation act is to be liberally construed.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Willful injuries. A claim for workmen's compensation for injuries received by an employee who was attacked by another employee who had recently been discharged was sustainable as not within an exception to the workmen's compensation law providing that no compensation be allowed for injuries caused by an employee's willful intent to injure another, when the commissioner inferred from the evidence that the attack was "willful", meaning "governed by will but without yielding to reason", and was not the result of personal ill will, when the relations between the two men had always been friendly, but that any hostile feelings were against the former employer.

Fact of employment—claimant's burden of proof. The general rule that an employee is entitled to compensation for injuries arising in the course of his employment places upon him the burden of proving himself to be an employee within the meaning of the statute and proving that he received an injury which arose in the course of his employment.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Confession and avoidance. Under a claim for workmen's compensation, a defense alleging that the injuries sustained by the claimant were caused by the willful act of a third person is in the nature of a confession and avoidance and places the burden of proving it to be true upon the defendant.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Burden of proof on one asserting exception. One relying on an exception to the workmen's compensation act, providing that no compensation shall be allowed for an injury caused by the employee's willful intent to injure himself or to willfully injure another, has the burden of establishing the facts which bring the matter within the exception.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Burden of proof not sustained. The defendant in an action for workmen's compensation who relied on an exception to the law failed to sustain the burden of proving the exception when there was an entire lack of evidence tending to prove or disprove the exception.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Employee attacked by discharged employee—course of employment. When a hotel clerk, while on duty, was attacked by a recently discharged employee of the hotel, injuries received in the attack arose out of and in the course of the employment.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Supported findings of fact by commissioner on workmen's compensation claim. In an appeal from the commissioner's allowance of a claim for workmen's compensation, the order of the commissioner should be sustained when the record contains evidence to support his findings of fact.

1377 Implied acceptance.

Foreign employer—adjudication on registered mail service. The workmen's compensation act, in the absence of a statutory rejection thereof, becomes a part of a contract of employment which is performable by the employee wholly within this state, and entered into between a resident employee of this state and a foreign nonresident employer doing business in this state without a state permit; but in case the employee dies from an injury compensable under said act, the industrial commissioner acquires no jurisdiction to determine and adjudicate the compensation due on account of said death by simply sending, by registered mail, notices of said proceedings to said employer in said foreign state, tho, concededly, the addressee received said notices. An adjudication on such service does not constitute due process.

1378 Contract to relieve not operative.

Contract in avoidance of liability—effect. A contract must be wholly rejected insofar as it appears to be a mere device resorted to by the employer in order to relieve himself of liability under the workmen's compensation act.

Mallinger v Oil Co., 211-847; 234 NW 254

Invalid agreement—approval by commissioner—effect. The approval by the industrial commissioner of an agreement between the employer and the dependent of a deceased employee, providing for a less compensation than that required by statute, is invalid, and therefore no obstacle to the later entry by the commissioner of a valid order.

Forbes v Sand Co., 216-292; 249 NW 399

Primary liability of employer. The employer is primarily liable for the payment of the compensation provided by the workmen's compensation act, irrespective of any agreement which the dependent may enter into with the employer's insurer.

Biggs v Bank, 218-48; 254 NW 331

1379 Negligence presumed.

Fact of employment—claimant's burden of proof. The general rule that an employee is entitled to compensation for injuries arising in the course of his employment places upon him the burden of proving himself to be an employee within the meaning of the statute and proving that he received an injury which arose in the course of his employment.

1380 Rights of employee exclusive.

Action for damages—jurisdiction. The district court has no jurisdiction to try and determine an original action against an employer for damages consequent on the alleged negligence of the employer resulting in the death of an employee, when both the employer and employee are under the terms and conditions of the workmen's compensation act.

Hlas v Quaker Co., 211-348; 233 NW 514

Compensation bars action for malpractice. A workman who, on receiving an injury which is compensable under the workmen's compensation act, demands and receives (or is receiving) compensation under said act for said injury, may not maintain an action against the attending physician for damages consequent on the aggravation of said injury by the unskillful treatment of said physician.

Paine v Wyatt, 217-1147; 251 NW 78; 39 NCCA 586

1382 Liability of others—subrogation.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 388

Action against third party wrongdoer—foreign statute—effect. Under the workmen's compensation act of Illinois, when an employer pays his employee compensation for an injury, said employer is thereby subrogated to the employee's right to maintain an action against a third party wrongdoer who caused the injury, provided all three said parties are operating under said act. Said Illinois act will not be given, in this state, the effect of depriving an employee who renders services in Illinois for his Iowa employer, but who was injured in this state by a wrongdoer resident of this state, of the right to maintain in his own name in this state an action for damages against said wrongdoer, even tho said employer has paid, in Illinois, said employee the compensation called for by the Illinois act, and even tho wrongdoer's general business extended into the state of Illinois.

Henriksen v Stages, Inc., 216-643; 246 NW 913; 32 NCCA 602

Recovery by surety against third party. An insurer who pays compensation to an injured employee of an employer operating under the workmen's compensation act, but who neither (1) demands action by the employee against a third party out of whose operations the injury occurred, nor (2) serves on said third party any notice of his lien in an action voluntarily brought by the employee against said third party, may not, after the employee has settled with said third party and dismissed his action, maintain an action against said third party to recover the sums paid by said insurer to said employee; and especially when said insurer produces no showing that said third party was legally liable for the injury to said employee, or had ever admitted such liability.

Southern Sur. v Railway, 215-525; 245 NW 864

Compensation bars action for malpractice. A workman who, on receiving an injury which is compensable under the workmen's compensation act, demands and receives (or is receiving) compensation under said act for said injury, may not maintain an action against the attending physician for damages consequent on the aggravation of said injury by the unskillful treatment of said physician.

Paine v Wyatt, 217-1147; 251 NW 78; 39 NCCA 586

Discharge of employer's liability—effect on third party wrongdoer. Where an injury, which is mandatorily compensable under the workmen's compensation act, is received by an employee in consequence of the actionable negligence of the operator of an automobile owned by, and operated with the consent of, the employer, the fact that the employer fully discharges his statutory liability to the employee does not ipso facto discharge the legal liability of the said negligent operator to said employee.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

1383 Notice of injury—failure to give.

Discussion. See 1 ILB 137—Procedure

Computation of period. The ninety-day period within which an employer must receive notice of an injury (in order to fix liability in any event) commences to run from the date of the accident, and not from the date when the causal relation between the accident and the resulting disability is revealed.

Mueller v U. S. Gyp. Co., 203-1229; 212 NW 577

Proceedings—notice to employer—commissioner's finding conclusive. A conflict in the evidence in a workmen's compensation case as to whether the employer had notice of the injury within the statutory 90-day period, is a question whose determination by the industrial commissioner is conclusive on the courts.

Fritz v Rath Co., 224-1116; 278 NW 208

1386 Limitation of actions.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 144; '36 AG Op 395

Nonretroactive effect. This section has no application to an injury received prior to the enactment of the section.

Hinricks v Locomotive Wks., 203-1395; 214 NW 585

Judgment on agreement—time limit. The two-year statute of limitation for instituting original proceedings for compensation under the workmen's compensation act has no application whatever to proceedings instituted in the district court to obtain judgment on a valid agreement as to compensation, even tho such proceedings were instituted more than two years after the agreement was executed and approved.

Biggs v Bank, 218-48; 254 NW 331

1387 Professional and hospital services.

Discussion. See 1 ILB 80—Rights of a physician

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 435; '34 AG Op 379

Medical services—condition to allowance. Upon reversing the order of the industrial commissioner that certain injuries were not compensable, the court may not make an allowance for medical services in the absence of a showing that a request was made to the commissioner or to the court for such services.

Almquist v Nurseries, 218-724; 254 NW 35; 94 ALR 573

Compromise—paying medical expense—no third party contract for physician. In a workmen's compensation case a stipulation of settlement including "all medical expense incurred" does not make a contract for the benefit of third persons so as to permit an action to be maintained by the physician who rendered medical services to the injured employee.

Casey v Creamery Co., 224-1094; 278 NW 214

1389 Liability in case of no dependents.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 87, 271

Exemption from debts of testator. Workmen's compensation, already collected as the result of a commutation settlement and in the hands of testator's attorney, is subject to the debts of the employee's estate.

Long v Northup, 225-132; 279 NW 104; 116 ALR 1475

1390 Compensation schedule.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 251; '33 AG Op 6

Deficient earnings—computation. When a fatally injured, adult employee earns less than 300 times the usual daily wage in the same line of industry in the locality, the yearly wage must be computed under §1397, subsec. 5, C., '31, and not under this section.

Shuttleworth v Power Co., 217-398; 251 NW 727

1391 Maturity date and interest.

Tender—effect. A tender by an employer of the proper amount of compensation payments, and for the proper compensation period, absolves the employer from all obligation to pay interest on such payments pending an unsuccessful attempt by the employee to secure an increase in the compensation period.

Pappas v Tile Co., 201-607; 206 NW 146

Nonallowable interest. Interest on a long delayed award of compensation will not be allowed when the delay was consequent on the applicant's neglect to perfect her petition for review of the decision of the board of arbitration.

Bushing v Light Co., 208-1010; 226 NW 719

1392 Death cases—dependents.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 437; '28 AG Op 344; '30 AG Op 271

What causes of action survive. While the right of an injured employee to compensation under the workmen's compensation act is based on disability, and the right of his dependents to compensation in event of his death is based on loss of support, nevertheless the facts maturing each right are substantially the same, and therefore, in case the injured employee dies while his application for compensation is pending, the cause of action survives to his dependents, they being his "successors in interest" within the meaning of the statute.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

"Weekly compensation" defined. The "weekly compensation" provided by this section for injuries resulting in death is computed by taking 60 percent of the "average weekly earnings" referred to in §1390, C., '31.

Almquist v Nurseries, 218-724; 254 NW 35; 94 ALR 573

200 weeks payment—nonapplicability. Compensation for death under the workmen's compensation act is not limited to payments for 200 weeks simply because the workman happened to be working at the time of his death in a department which "shuts down and ceases operation during a season of each year", when the employer's business as a whole continues throughout the year in other departments, and the deceased employee is a general employee working in all departments.

Forbes v Sand Co., 216-292; 249 NW 399

Leg injury causing pneumonia—failure of proof—claimant's burden. A workmen's compensation claimant fails to maintain her burden to establish a compensable claim sustained in the course of employment when only hearsay evidence is offered to show that a leg injury to her husband occurred during his employment and when the producing cause of subsequent death from lobar pneumonia is under the conflicting medical testimony a matter of uncertainty.

Featherson v Continental-Keller Co., 225-119; 279 NW 432

1395 Permanent total disability.

"Disability" defined. An employee may be permanently and totally "disabled" within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act, and entitled to compensation accordingly, even tho a large percentage of his physical powers remain intact. In other words, the disability for which the law makes compensation is industrial disability—disability from carrying on a gainful occupation—inability to earn wages.

1396 Permanent partial disabilities.

Rule of computation. The legal formula, under the workmen's compensation act, for computing the weekly compensation due an employee consequent on a fractional, permanent disability not involving the loss of any physical part of the body is: Average weekly wage times 60 percent times the fraction representing the extent of the disability.

Oldham v Scofield et al., 222-764; 266 NW 480, 269 NW 925

"Disability" defined. An employee may be permanently and totally "disabled" within the meaning of the workmen's compensation law, and entitled to compensation accordingly, even tho a large percentage of his physical powers remain intact. In other words, the disability for which the law makes compensation is industrial disability—disability from carrying on a gainful occupation—inability to earn wages.

Conclusiveness of compensation schedule. An employee under the workmen's compensation act was, under an agreement, paid compensation for a supposedly temporary injury to the employee's foot. On review of said agreement, the deputy industrial commissioner found, on supporting evidence, that the foot had been permanently disabled to the extent of 50 percent of its normal functions, and ordered additional compensation paid according to the statute fixing compensation for permanent partial disabilities.

Soukup v Shores Co., 222-272; 268 NW 598

Loss of less than arm—compensation period. Inasmuch as the workmen's compensation act does not definitely fix the compensation period for the loss of more than a hand but less than two-thirds of the arm, such period must, in case of dispute, be determined by arbitration, or by the industrial commissioner, in case arbitration is waived, and must, even tho the arm is the only arm possessed by the employee at the time of the injury, be determined by adding to the compensation period of 150 weeks for the loss of a hand, such period as will equitably adjust the compensation between the loss of a hand and the loss of an arm, such total period not to equal, however, 225 weeks—the statutory period for the loss of an arm.

Pappas v Tile Co., 201-607; 206 NW 146

Compensation—acceptance—effect. The acceptance by an employee of tendered compensation payments cannot prejudice him when the sole dispute between the employer and employee is as to the time the payments should continue.

Pappas v Tile Co., 201-607; 206 NW 146

Payment for former injury not deductible. A claimant for industrial compensation for loss of a member is entitled to full payment even tho previously he had been paid for permanent partial disability, if at the time of the last injury he was not receiving compensation under the act for the former injury.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

"Loss of more than one phalange." The provision that "the loss of more than one phalange shall equal the loss of the entire finger" is not subject to any qualifying terms as to the extent of the loss.

Starcevich v Fuel Co., 208-790; 226 NW 138

Loss of one eye. The compensation for the loss of an eye is limited to weekly compensation for one hundred weeks, even tho, at the time of such loss and prior thereto, the employee had lost three-fourths of the normal vision of his remaining eye.

Daugherty v Coal Co., 206-120; 219 NW 65

Loss of subnormal eye—useful industrial vision. The workmen's compensation act makes no requirement that an eye lost in an industrial accident must be a normal one. If there was useful industrial vision, as shown by the facts, and such vision is lost, there is a "loss of an eye" under the act.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Vision—evidence refuting commissioner's decision. Evidence in a workmen's compensation case that the injured employee had from 33 to 50 percent vision in an eye before it was lost in a second industrial accident, leaves the decision of the industrial commissioner, that there was no loss, without support in the evidence, and the trial court was right in reversing the commissioner's decision.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

1397 Basis of computation.

Computation of award. Rule of Richards v Central Iowa Fuel Co., 184 Iowa, 1378, relative to the computation of awards, reaffirmed.

Clingingsmith v Dairy, 202-773; 211 NW 413

Degree of proof. A claimant must establish his right to compensation by a preponderance of the evidence.

Susich v Coal Co., 207-1129; 224 NW 86

Payment for former injury not deductible. A claimant for industrial compensation for loss of a member is entitled to full payment even tho previously he had been paid for permanent partial disability, if at the time of the last injury he was not receiving compensation under the act for the former injury.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Compensation—when determined by earnings of fellow employee. When at the time an employee is fatally injured, he has not been in the employment and work in question for a full year, compensation may be properly computed on the basis of the annual earnings of a fellow employee who has been engaged in the same employment and in the same class of work for a full year. In such case the formula is as follows:

Average daily earnings of the fellow employee multiplied by 300 divided by 52 multiplied by 60 percent equals compensation per week.

Marley v Johnson & Co., 215-151; 244 NW 833; 85 ALR 969

Deficient earnings — computation. When a fatally injured, adult employee earns less than 300 times the usual daily wage in the same line of industry in the locality, the yearly wage must be computed under subsec. 5 of this section and not under §1390, C., '31.

Shuttleworth v Power Co., 217-398; 251 NW 727

200 weeks payment—nonapplicability. Compensation for death under the workmen's compensation act is not limited to payments for 200 weeks simply because the workman happened to be working at the time of his death in a department which "shuts down and ceases operation during a season of each year", when the employer's business as a whole continues throughout the year in other departments, and the deceased employee is a general employee working in all departments.

Forbes v Sand Co., 216-292; 249 NW 399

Seasonal employment—determination. Under a workmen's compensation statute, providing that the basis of computation for compensation for employees in a business or enterprise "which customarily shuts down and ceases operation during a season of each year" shall be the customary number of working days, with a minimum of 200 days, the nature of the business conducted by claimant's employer shall be determined without regard to the operations of other employers engaged in like activities, and it is not necessary to establish that the general industry or business of which the enterprise is a unit is recognized as a seasonal one.

Polich v Anderson-Robinson Coal Co., 227-553; 288 NW 650

"Operation" — seasonal business — construction. Under workmen's compensation statute, providing that the basis of computation for compensation for employees in a business or enterprise "which customarily shuts down and ceases operation during a season of the year" shall be the customary number of working days, with a minimum of 200 days, a corporation operating a wagon mine for production of coal, which ceased to produce coal between months of April and September of each year, but at one time during such period constructed an air shaft, and at other times pumped water from mine for the purpose of preservation of such mine, was not conducting "operation" of the mine within the statute because of such work to preserve the mine.

Polich v Anderson-Robinson Coal Co., 227-553; 288 NW 650

"Customarily"—seasonal employment—construction. Under workmen's compensation statute providing that the basis of computation for compensation for employees in a business or enterprise "which customarily shuts down and ceases operation during a season of the year" shall be the customary number of working days, with a minimum of 200 days, the word "customarily" was not intended to be a custom which takes the place of law. It is only necessary that the custom or habit exist for such a period that it can be said to be the custom or habit of the particular employer to operate on a seasonal basis. So, where coal mining corporation organized in 1936 ceased the production of coal each season between the months of April and September, the requirements of statute were met, and since the mine operated less than 200 days a year, the 200-day rule applied in computing compensation.

Polich v Anderson-Robinson Coal Co., 227-553; 288 NW 650

"Customarily" — seasonal employment — failure to establish. Under workmen's compensation statute providing that the basis of computation of compensation for employees in an enterprise "which customarily shuts down and ceases operation during a season of each year" shall be based on the customary number of working days, with a minimum of 200 days, the word "customarily" as used in statute applies only to the custom of the particular employer involved, and the custom of other employers engaged in like activity is immaterial. Where employer voluntarily assumes the burden of showing that claimant was engaged in a business which customarily shut down and ceased operation during a season of each year, and fails to sustain such burden, it is not error to calculate compensation on a basis of 300 days.

Schraver v McLaughlin, 227-580; 288 NW 657

Death of party—what causes of action survive. While the right of an injured employee to compensation under the workmen's compensation law is based on disability, and the right of his dependents to compensation in event of his death is based on loss of support, nevertheless the facts maturing each right are substantially the same, and therefore, in case the injured employee dies while his application for compensation is pending, the cause of action survives to his dependents, they being his "successors in interest" within the meaning of the statute.

1398 Contributions from employees.

Consent of owner-employer to operation of automobile — effect. An employer whose automobile is being operated with his consent, is not liable, under §5026, C., '35, to his own employee for an injury suffered by said employee in consequence of the actionable negligence of said operator of the car, provided said injury is compensable under the workmen's compensation act.

1399 Examination of injured employees.

Refusal to submit to examination. Before an injured employee will be denied compensation because of his refusal to submit to a medical examination, it must appear that the proposed examining physician was authorized to practice, under the laws of this state.

Smith v Ice Co., 204-1348; 217 NW 264

Evidence — competency — confidential communications. The statutory rule of evidence (§11263, C., '35) that information obtained by a physician from his patient is inadmissible does not apply to workmen's compensation cases (§1441, C., '35).

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

1402 Conclusively presumed dependent.

Concubine not dependent.

Baldwin v Sullivan, 201-955; 204 NW 420; 208 NW 218

Conclusive dependency of stepchildren. The statutory conclusive presumption, that stepchildren of specified ages are wholly dependent upon the stepfather must prevail even tho, shortly prior to the death of the stepfather, the wife of the stepfather permanently deserted the latter, and took her children with her.

Robinson v Eaves, 203-902; 210 NW 578

Commutation—when allowable. Compensation is "definitely determinable", within the meaning of the statute (§1405, subsec. 1, C., '24), and is therefore commutable, when the compensation is for the death of an employee who leaves a widow and a stepchild under 16 years of age, even tho the widow remarries.

Reeves v Mfg. Co., 202-136; 209 NW 289

1403 Payment to spouse.

Instituting new action pending appeal—effect. An appeal by a surviving spouse, in workmen's compensation proceedings, from a judgment that she had no right as surviving spouse to be substituted as plaintiff in a proceeding for compensation commenced by her husband in his lifetime, cannot be deemed abandoned by the act of said appealing spouse in subsequently filing with the industrial commissioner her formal application for compensation as a dependent, when said latter filing was for the sole purpose of avoiding the running of the statute of limitation and preserving her rights as a dependent in the event she, on the merits, lost her pending appeal.

1405 Commutation.

Allowable commutation. Compensation is "definitely determinable", within the meaning of the statute and is therefore commutable, when the compensation is for the death of an employee who leaves a widow and a stepchild under 16 years of age, even tho the widow remarries.

Reeves v Mfg. Co., 202-136; 209 NW 289

Unapproved commutation. An agreement between an employer and one who was dependent upon a deceased employee, as to commutation of future payments, is not enforceable unless approved by the industrial commissioner.

Reeves v Mfg. Co., 202-136; 209 NW 289

1406 Proceedings for commutation.

Approval by commissioner. A petition for the commutation of compensation must carry the indorsement of the approval of the industrial commissioner; but this requirement is complied with by attaching to the petition a copy of the actual written approval of the commissioner.

1415 Waivers prohibited.

Invalid agreement—approval by commissioner—effect. The approval by the industrial commissioner of an agreement between the employer and the dependent of a deceased employee, providing for a less compensation than that required by statute, is invalid, and therefore no obstacle to the later entry by the commissioner of a valid order.

Forbes v Sand Co., 216-292; 249 NW 399

1417 Employees in interstate commerce.

Discussion. See 2 ILB 82—Third party rights—Federal Employers' Liability Act

Interstate commerce. A contract of employment for and on behalf of an interstate commerce carrier is consummated in this state when the conditional offer of employment is accepted in this state by a resident thereof, even tho the offer is made in a foreign state.

Chi. RI Ry. v Lundquist, 206-499; 221 NW 228

Interstate commerce. A railway employee who, upon the stopping of an interstate train, proceeds to remove intrastate freight therefrom is engaged in interstate commerce; and if he is injured he must resort to the federal employers' liability act for relief.

Johnston v Railway, 208-202; 225 NW 357; 30 NCCA 268

Interstate commerce. An employee is not engaged in interstate commerce while working for an interstate carrier in the construction of an entirely new, incomplete, and wholly unused telegraph line.

Chicago RI Ry. v Lundquist, 206-499; 221 NW 228; 30 NCCA 255

Iowa judgment for death damages—effect in foreign state. Where a judgment fixing the compensation for a railroad employee's death, due to an accident in Iowa, was rendered by an Iowa court under the Iowa compensation act, it may be pleaded by the railroad in an action brought against it for the same cause in Minnesota under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, since both courts had jurisdiction to decide whether deceased was engaged in intrastate or interstate commerce; and the Iowa judgment, being the earlier one rendered, was res judicata in the other action, altho the other action was brought first.

I EMPLOYER

Township not employer. A civil township is not an "employer", such township being but an unincorporated district.

Hop v Brink, 205-74; 217 NW 551

Church as employer. A voluntary church association may, in the work attending the erection of its church edifice, be an "employer" under the workmen's compensation act.

Reason: An "employer" need not, as formerly, be a person or concern engaged in a business "for the sake of pecuniary gain".

Gardner v Trustees, 217-1390; 250 NW 740

"Business" of church organization. A workman who is employed by a voluntary church association in work attending the erection of a church edifice is, within the meaning of subsec. 3a, of this section, employed "for the purpose of the employer's trade or business"—the business of erecting a church.

Gardner v Trustees, 217-1390; 250 NW 740

II WORKMAN OR EMPLOYEE

Discussion. See 18 ILR 525—Test of employee; 19 ILR 450—Public dependents

Employer-employee relation—test — control of work. The test of the relationship between employer and employee is the right of the employer to exercise control of the details and method of performing the work.

State v Ritholz, 226-70; 283 NW 268

Fact of employment—claimant's burden of proof. The general rule that an employee is entitled to compensation for injuries arising in the course of his employment places upon him the burden of proving himself to be an employee within the meaning of the statute and proving that he received an injury which arose in the course of his employment.

Employees within and without the act. If an employee is not engaged in work of a "purely casual nature" he is entitled to the benefits of the compensation act altho the employment was "not for the purpose of the employer's trade or business"; and vice versa, if his employment is "for the purpose of the employer's trade or business", he is entitled to the benefits of the act tho his employment is of a "purely casual nature". In other words, in order to put the employee outside the workmen's compensation act it must appear that the employment was both "purely casual" and "not for the purpose of the employer's trade or business".

Gardner v Trustees, 217-1390; 250 NW 740

Boy scout not an "employee". A boy scout while voluntarily attending a summer camp for recreation, pleasure, and self-development, without expense to himself, and while assisting other boy scouts in their activities as boy scouts in fulfillment of his voluntarily imposed duty as a boy scout, is not, within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act, an "employee" of the duly incorporated boy scout organization under whose auspices the camp is being held.

Stiles v Council, 209-1235; 229 NW 841

Indigents on work-relief. An indigent who, through federal, state and county unemployment relief agencies is given work on county roads and is injured while performing such work, must, in order to hold the county liable under the workmen's compensation act, show that the legal relation between him and the county was, at the time of injury, that of employer and employee.

Oswalt v Lucas County, 222-1099; 270 NW 847; 3 NCCA (NS) 742

Civil Works Administration employee — status. Workmen who are (1) employed, (2) directed when and where to work, and (3) paid for their services, by the federal Civil Works Administration, are not, while engaged in re-decorating a public school building, employees of the school corporation owning said building, within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act.

Hoover v Sch. Dist., 220-1364; 264 NW 611; 39 NCCA 271; 3 NCCA (NS) 741

Nonemployee of city. One may not be said to be in the employ of a city, and therefore within the benefits of the workmen's compensation act, when, at the time of his injury, he was performing work which he had donated, in furtherance of a plan of public-spirited citizens to beautify a plot of municipally owned land as a city park, which plan the city council had approved, provided it be carried out without expense to the city.

Norman v City, 206-790; 221 NW 481; 28 NCCA 831

City fireman as "employee". This definition of the term "employee" is quite immaterial on the issue whether a fireman is an employee under §6519, C., '24.

Murphy v Gilman, 204-58; 214 NW 679

Contractor (?) or employee (?). A carpenter who, in repairing an ice house, is subject to the direction of the master as to the manner and means of doing the work may properly be found to be a "workman" or "employee," within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act, even tho the master, because of confidence in the employee, does not exercise such power.

Smith v Ice Co., 204-1348; 217 NW 264

Employee (?) or partner (?). One who has no control over the management of a business, and makes no contribution thereto except his personal services, and has no interest therein except to receive a portion of the profits thereof as compensation for his services, is an employee and not a partner.

Butz v Hahn Co., 220-995; 263 NW 257

Employee (?) or independent contractor (?) —test. One who is employed to do a certain work is a servant of the employer and not an independent contractor, when he—the one doing the work—is subject to the direction and control of the employer as to the details and method to be followed in the performance of the work. So held as to one operating an automobile oil truck, on commission.

Lembke v Fritz, 223-261; 272 NW 300

Road building contractor—truck driver—"employee" rather than "independent contractor". In workmen's compensation proceeding where it is shown that a road builder's contract provided that his own organization, with the assistance of workmen under his immediate superintendence, should perform not less than 80 percent of all work embraced in the contract, and that no portion of the contract should be sublet except with the written consent of contracting officer or his authorized representative, and where claimant, not being a

II WORKMAN OR EMPLOYEE—concluded subcontractor, was injured while driving a truck which belonged to a person who was not a subcontractor, held, the claimant was an "employee" and not an "independent contractor" as respects the road building contractor's liability for compensation.

Schrivver v McLaughlin, 227-580; 288 NW 657

Relation of parties — employee (?) or independent contractor (?). The relation of master and servant, and not of independent contractorship, exists:

1. When one party, as his sole business, enters into a bonded contract, mutually terminable on ten days' notice, with a dealer in oils, and therein agrees (a) to sell and deliver said dealer's oils to said dealer's rated customers and others, in a prescribed territory, at wholesale and retail, for cash or on credit, at said dealer's prices, and on a bi-monthly commission basis, (b) to protect and properly operate the mechanical outfit coming into his possession, (c) to handle said oils as provided by law, (d) to account for all property coming into his hands, and (e) to share in certain losses and expenses, and

2. When said dealer agrees (a) to furnish a mechanical outfit of substantial value and the motor fuel and lubricants to operate it, (b) to keep said outfit in repair in his own shops, and (c) to share with the other party in repair costs and certain losses on collections.

Mallinger v Oil Co., 211-847; 234 NW 254

Relation of parties—"employee" or "independent contractor"—recognized tests. Principle reaffirmed that, on the question whether a party is an "employee" or an "independent contractor," a material consideration is whether the party represents the employer as to the results or only as to the means; also, whether the right exists to terminate the contract instantaneously, without involving liability for the breach of the contract; also, the extent of the control which one party exercises over the methods and details of the work.

Arthur v School Dist., 209-280; 228 NW 70; 66 ALR 718

Oil company and filling station operator—evidence insufficiency—directing verdict. In an action to recover from an oil company for injuries allegedly caused by operator of company's filling station, evidence that operator conducted the station before approval of lease just as if it had been accepted, that he bought merchandise for cash from this company and others and kept the profits, that he received no remuneration from company, that although company suggested things to help him, it exercised no supervision, that he took out state permits in own name, and personally arranged for utility service, failed to establish relation of employer and employee. Hence company's motion for directed verdict should have been sustained.

Reynolds v Skelly Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Wife as employee of husband. A husband who is the sole owner of a printing plant may validly employ his wife as a linotype and press operator in said plant and the wife may legally accept such employment and collect therefor, because such services are wholly outside of, and foreign to, the usual and ordinary marital duties of a wife. It follows that the wife is entitled to compensation under the workmen's compensation act for injuries arising out of and in the course of said employment.

Reid v Reid, 216-882; 249 NW 387

Termination of employment. An employee who gives the master notice of the termination of his employment, surrenders to his successor in employment the key to the work place, removes from the residence furnished to him as part of his employment, and leaves the master's premises, will not be heard to say that his employment continued during that part of the following day during which he, for the sole purpose of obtaining his tools, returned to the master's works, and during which he voluntarily proceeded to assist his successor in operating the said works.

Johnson v City, 203-1171; 212 NW 419

Maintenance of residence not "trade or business". Testimony which simply shows that a home owner maintains on his residential grounds an additional residence which is occupied by his son, establishes no such "trade or business" as renders the home owner liable under the workmen's compensation act to an employee who is injured in the course of his employment while repairing the equipment of the house occupied by the son; and this is true even tho the employee was not a casual employee.

Tunncliff v Bettendorf, 204-168; 214 NW 516

County highway maintenance workman—no representative capacity. A county highway maintenance workman stands in no representative capacity for the employer-county when his duties are ministerial only and when he could possess no authority to act for nor bind the county as its representative, since board of supervisors and county engineer cannot delegate their powers and duties to maintain roads except as those duties are ministerial in character.

Schroyer v Jasper Co., 224-1391; 279 NW 118

III EXCLUDED PERSONS

(a) CASUAL EMPLOYMENT

Casual employment—dual provision—construction. The provision of the workmen's compensation act that "Persons whose employment is of a casual nature" shall not be under the act (§1361, subsec. 2, C., '31), and the further provision that "A person whose employment is purely casual, and not for the purpose of the employer's trade or business," shall not be deemed an "employee" (subsec. 3a, this section), when construed together, have but one meaning, to wit, the full meaning of the last provision.

Gardner v Trustees, 217-1390; 250 NW 740

Employees within and without the act. If an employee is not engaged in work of a "purely casual nature" he is entitled to the benefits of the compensation act altho the employment was "not for the purpose of the employer's trade or business"; and vice versa, if his employment is "for the purpose of the employer's trade or business", he is entitled to the benefits of the act tho his employment is of a "purely casual nature". In other words, in order to put the employee outside the workmen's compensation act it must appear that the employment was both "purely casual" and "not for the purpose of the employer's trade or business".

Gardner v Trustees, 217-1390; 250 NW 740

Employment in emergency. An employee who is employed by another employee under implied authority which arises under an emergency must be deemed a "casual" employee.

Johnson v City, 203-1171; 212 NW 419

Emergency noncasual employment.

Eddington v Tel. Co., 201-67; 202 NW 374

"Casual employment." An employment to wash the kitchen walls of a restaurant is "for the purpose of the employer's trade or business", even tho the employment is purely casual.

Dial v Lunch, 217-945; 251 NW 33

Noncasual employment—findings of commissioner. Evidence that a person was employed for the full term of two months which was the contemplated period for the performance of the work, and that he worked continuously for some eighteen days before being injured, supports the finding of the industrial commissioner that the employment was not "purely casual".

Gardner v Trustees, 217-1390; 250 NW 740

(b) CLERICAL WORK

"Clerical work only" defined. A stenographer and typist employed in the office of an insurance company in caring for and sending out supplies to agents, looking up information, making up lists of losses, and generally performing in the office other miscellaneous duties of a like or similar kind, is engaged in "clerical work only", and therefore not within the benefits of the workmen's compensation act, even tho she is, of course, subject to the hazards of her clerical position.

Crooke v Ins. Assn., 206-104; 218 NW 513; 62 ALR 342

Clerical employee. An injury to a strictly clerical employee is compensable when proximately caused by walking down an open stairway from his place of work and tripping over a scale which in part projected through the stairway and across his pathway.

Kent v Kent, 202-1044; 208 NW 709

(c) INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR

"Independent contractor" defined. An independent contractor in fact under the common law is an independent contractor under the workmen's compensation act, and may be defined as one who carries on an independent business and contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods, subject to the employer's control only as to results.

Arthur v School Dist., 209-280; 228 NW 70; 66 ALR 718

Burns v Eno, 213-881; 240 NW 209

Relation of parties—"employee" or "independent contractor"—recognized tests. Principle reaffirmed that, on the question whether a party is an "employee" or an "independent contractor," a material consideration is whether the party represents the employer as to the results or only as to the means; also, whether the right exists to terminate the contract instantaneously, without involving liability for the breach of the contract; also, the extent of the control which one party exercises over the methods and details of the work.

Arthur v School Dist., 209-280; 228 NW 70; 66 ALR 718

Independent contractor—test. If, as to the result, and in the employment of the means, one acts entirely independent of the master, he must be regarded as an independent contractor, and not an employee.

Reynolds v Skelly Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Trade-mark signs displayed—common knowledge—-independent dealer's status not affected. In an action for injuries caused by alleged negligence of filling station operator, the fact that trade-mark signs of defendant oil company were displayed did not estop it from claiming that it was not the owner of filling station business and that operator was not employee of company, it being a matter of common knowledge that such signs are displayed throughout country by independent dealers.

Reynolds v Skelly Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Contractor (?) or employee (?). A delivery man who is subject to no control by the person with whom he contracts, except to obey directions as to what and where to deliver, is a contractor, and not an employee.

In re Amond, 203-306; 210 NW 923

 (c) INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—concluded

Employee (?) or independent contractor (?). A party becomes an independent contractor and not an employee, under the workmen's compensation act, when he contracts with a consolidated school district, under a contract terminable instant by the board, to transport school children to and from school for a stated time (a work which would consume each day but a small part of his time) and, to this end, agrees (1) to furnish at his own expense his own conveyance (except the body thereof) and full equipment for the protection of the children while on the road, and (2) to operate said conveyance at his own expense and personally or by a competent driver satisfactory to the board; and the relation of employer and independent contractor exists in such case even tho the operator is required to comply with certain rules of the board designed to protect the children in their moral and physical welfare.

Arthur v Sch. Dist., 209-280; 228 NW 70; 66 ALR 718

Employee (?) or independent contractor (?). One who equips himself with, and owns, complete outfits for hauling gravel, and for housing and maintaining himself and family while so working, becomes an independent contractor when he contracts to employ said outfits at his own expense and risk and at a fixed price per yard per mile, and on his own time, in hauling gravel from the gravel pit to such places on the highway as the public authorities may direct; and this is true tho the primary contractor with whom the independent contractor contracts is obligated to load the vehicles at the pit; likewise tho the primary contractor is obligated to the public authorities to furnish all employees necessary to carry out his contract.

Burns v Eno, 213-881; 240 NW 209

Employee (?) or independent contractor (?). A salesman who, under a contract with a dealer in goods, travels at his own expense, and when and where he pleases in a prescribed territory in quest for orders for goods to be filled by the dealer, and who receives his compensation solely in the form of commissions on sales effected by him through his own exclusive means and methods, is, within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act, an "independent contractor" and not an "employee" of the said dealer in the goods.

Arne v Silo Co., 214-511; 242 NW 539

Road building contractor—truck driver—"employee" rather than "independent contractor". In workmen's compensation proceeding where it is shown that a road builder's contract provided that his own organization, with the assistance of workmen under his immediate superintendence, should perform not less than 80 percent of all work embraced in the contract, and that no portion of the contract should be sublet except with the written consent of contracting officer or his authorized representative, and where claimant, not being a subcontractor, was injured while driving a truck which belonged to a person who was not a subcontractor, held, the claimant was an "employee" and not an "independent contractor" as respects the road building contractor's liability for compensation.

Schrivier v McLaughlin, 227-580; 288 NW 657

Finding against independent contractorship—conclusiveness. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on conflicting but supporting testimony, that a workman when injured was the employee of a named employer, and not of an alleged independent contractor, is conclusive on the courts.

Niemann v Iowa Co., 218-127; 253 NW 815

Independent contractor as invitee—known danger revealed—otherwise reasonable care. Person employing an independent contractor to put steam pipes in downspouting owes only the duty to such invitee to use reasonable care for his safety, and to warn the contractor as to defects or dangers known to the employer and not apparent to the contractor. The employer is not responsible to the contractor for injuries from defects that the contractor knew of or, in the exercise of ordinary care, ought to have known of.

Gowing v Field, 225-729; 281 NW 281.

(d) OFFICIALS

President of corporation not employee. The president of a corporation is not within the benefits of the workmen's compensation act, even tho, at the time of his injury, he is personally engaged in selling the products of his company by traveling about the country.

Kutil v Mfg. Co., 205-967; 218 NW 613

President excluded from coverage. A policy of insurance which simply agrees to pay the employees of the insured such sums as may become due them under the workmen's compensation act of this state does not embrace the corporate president of the insured or confer any right on him, even tho it provides, by way of a rider, that the salary of the president "shall be subject to a premium charge at the rate applicable to the hazard to which such officer is exposed".

Reason: No compensation for injuries can accrue, under said act, to the president of a corporation even tho he be deemed an "employee" under said rider.

Maryland Cas. v Dutch Mill, 220-646; 262 NW 776

General manager not "workman". An employer's alter ego, such for instance, as his general manager, is not entitled, if injured, to benefits under the workmen's compensation act.

Hamilton v Farmer Co., 220-25; 261 NW 506

Representative capacity—conclusiveness. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on supporting testimony, that a person, for whose death compensation is asked, stood, at the time of his death, in a representative capacity to his employer, is conclusive on the courts.

Pattee v Lumber Co., 220-1181; 263 NW 839; 38 NCCA 676

Public "official" not an "employee". Even tho it be conceded, arguendo, that the workmen's compensation act applies to the employees of a civil township, yet a township road superintendent would not be within the benefits of said act because he holds an "official" position.

Hop v Brink, 205-74; 217 NW 551

Officer (?) or employee (?) of city. A city marshal who is appointed by the mayor, and who qualifies by taking the usual oath, and by giving an official bond, all as required by a city ordinance, is a city officer and not a city employee within the scope of the workmen's compensation act.

Roberts v Colfax, 219-1136; 260 NW 57

Highway workman but not road patrolman—not excluded by "official position". A county highway maintenance workman is not necessarily a patrolman under §4774, C., '35, and not a person holding an "official position" such as denies him the benefits of the workmen's compensation act, when there was no record of an appointment, no approval of a bond, no oath as an official nor as a peace officer, and when no badge of office had ever been furnished.

Schroyer v Jasper Co., 224-1391; 279 NW 118

IV INJURY GENERALLY

"Personal injury" defined. A personal injury, within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act, is an injury to the body, the impairment of health, or a disease, not excluded by said legislative act, which comes about, not through natural causes, but because of a traumatic, or other, hurt or damage to the health or body of an employee.

Almquist v Nurseries, 218-724; 254 NW 35; 94 ALR 573

Acceleration of pre-existing disease. Compensation is payable where an apparently insignificant injury arising out of and in the course of an employment fans into life and accelerates a pre-existing dormant disease. The issue is simply one of causal connection.

Fraze v McClelland Co., 200-944; 205 NW 737; 25 NCCA 368

Traumatic injury to diseased organ. A traumatic injury to an organ of the human body is not rendered noncompensable because the organ was already in a weakened condition because of a disease, and, therefore, more susceptible to an injury than a normal organ.

Almquist v Nurseries, 218-724; 254 NW 35; 94 ALR 573; 35 NCCA 432

Injury aggravating disease. In workmen's compensation case where the injury aggravates or accelerates a disease with which the workman is afflicted, it is compensable if death results from or is hastened by the injury.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Injury not occurring from accident. A personal injury may be compensable under the workmen's compensation act, even tho it did not arise out of an accident, or special incident or unusual occurrence. So held where a workman ruptured his stomach consequent on the physical strain of his ordinary work.

Almquist v Nurseries, 218-724; 254 NW 35; 94 ALR 573; 35 NCCA 432

Finding by commissioner—conclusiveness. A supported finding by the industrial commissioner, as to hernia being the cause of death of an injured workman, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Emery v Service Stations, 220-885; 262 NW 786; 38 NCCA 644; 1 NCCA(NS) 605

"Heat exhaustion" as compensable injury.

Belcher v Elec. Lt. Co., 208-262; 225 NW 404; 30 NCCA 361

Causal connection between injury and death. In workmen's compensation action to recover for death of workman allegedly caused by intensified or artificial heat, wherein testimony of physician shows that some of the symptoms of heat exhaustion are that patient perspires freely, has an increased thirst, flushed face, increasing weakness and chills, and where workman manifested substantially all of the symptoms enumerated, such testimony supplied evidence that workman suffered heat exhaustion which hastened his death and thus provided the causal connection between his death and injury.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Excessive heat caused artificially. In workmen's compensation action to recover for death of workman caused by intensified or artificial heat, held, evidence sufficient to sustain finding that there was excessive heat in a bakeshop, caused artificially.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Heat exhaustion. In workmen's compensation action it is essential, in order to recover an award for death from heat exhaustion, that natural heat be intensified by artificial heat.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Exhaustion from artificial heat. Exhaustion from artificial heat in a bakeshop, which caused the death of a workman in the course of his employment, creates a compensable injury.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Lead poisoning to auto mechanic—occupational disease—nonconclusive finding. As to lead poisoning suffered by an automobile me-

IV INJURY GENERALLY—concluded
chanic from using a blowtorch negligently filled with tetraethyl lead gasoline, industrial commissioner's finding it to be an occupational disease was not conclusive on the courts.

Black v Creston Auto Co., 225-671; 281 NW 189

Occupational disease—supported finding. Record reviewed and held sufficient to support a finding by the industrial commissioner that an employee did not die from an occupational disease, but was injured by and died from the accumulation of deadly gases in a coal mine.

Dille v Plainview Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607; 34 NCCA 571

Willful injuries. A claim for workmen's compensation for injuries received by an employee who was attacked by another employee who had recently been discharged was sustainable as not within an exception to the workmen's compensation law providing that no compensation be allowed for injuries caused by an employee's willful intent to injure another, when the commissioner inferred from the evidence that the attack was "willful", meaning "governed by will but without yielding to reason", and was not the result of personal ill will, when the relations between the two men had always been friendly, but that any hostile feelings were against the former employer.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Absence of causal connection between injury and employment. An injury is not rendered compensable simply on a showing that an employee was on duty when he received the injury. Causal connection between the injury and the employment must be made to appear.

Smith v Hospital, 210-691; 231 NW 490; 30 NCCA 370; 1 NCCA(NS) 623

Accident and injury—causal connection necessary—claimant's burden. A workmen's compensation award cannot be predicated on speculation and conjecture, and the burden of proving a causal connection between the accident and its resulting injury is on claimant. So held as to infection in miner's leg and bruise not proven to have been sustained while working in mine.

Nash v Citizens Co., 224-1088; 277 NW 728

Struck by train away from place of work.
Sachleben v Gjellefeld, 228- ; 290 NW 48

V PERSONAL INJURY ARISING OUT OF AND IN THE COURSE OF THE EMPLOYMENT

Discussion. See 12 ILR 73—Employment obtained by fraud

Burden of proof. An injured employee has the burden of showing by a preponderance of the evidence that his injury arose out of and in the course of his employment.

Bushing v Lt. Co., 208-1010; 226 NW 719; 30 NCCA 449

Smith v Hospital, 210-691; 231 NW 490

Death—finding. Tho an employee is found dead on the employer's premises at a place where none of his duties were to be performed, and tho there is no direct testimony as to just when or just how he met his death, yet a finding by the industrial commissioner that the death "arose out of and in the course of" the employment is conclusive on the courts if such finding has support in the circumstances and facts surrounding and attending the death of the employee, so far as known, and in the inferences reasonably deducible from such facts and circumstances.

Bushing v Railway, 208-1010; 226 NW 719; 30 NCCA 449

Death of car salesman. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on supporting testimony, that death of car salesman "arose out of and in the course of" an employment is conclusive on the courts.

Heinen v Motor Corp., 202-67; 209 NW 415; 26 NCCA 53; 4 NCCA(NS) 676

Death from fall due to dizziness. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on supporting testimony, that death resulting from fall of person subject to nosebleed did not arise out of and in the course of an employment is conclusive on the courts.

Pattee v Fullerton Co., 220-1181; 263 NW 839

Night watchman—assault by trespasser. A finding by the industrial commissioner, that injuries to railroad night watchman assaulted by trespasser, "arose out of and in the course of" the employment, is conclusive on the court when the record reveals supporting evidence for the finding.

Califore v Railway, 220-676; 263 NW 29; 38 NCCA 683

Employee attacked by discharged employee—course of employment. When a hotel clerk, while on duty, was attacked by a recently discharged employee of the hotel, injuries received in the attack arose out of and in the course of the employment.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Findings re sportive contest. A finding by the industrial commissioner on conflicting, competent testimony that an injury to an employee arose out of a sportive contest voluntarily participated in by the injured employee and a co-employee is conclusive on the court.

Wittmer v Dexter Mfg. Co., 204-180; 214 NW 700; 27 NCCA 592; 2 NCCA(NS) 824

Chronic dermatitis—secondary infection—noncausal connection—mere possibility insufficient. Since an award of workmen's compensation must stand on something more than a mere possibility of causal connection between the accident and the injury, evidence that aggravation or secondary infection of a chronic dermatitis or ringworm on employee's hand could "possibly" have been the result of house-cleaning work done in employer's funeral home was not sufficient to support an award granted by industrial commissioner.

Boswell v Funeral Home, 227-344; 288 NW 402

Findings re aggravation of cancer. Evidence, expert and otherwise, carefully analyzed and reviewed, and held to be such that the industrial commissioner might justifiably find therefrom that a blow received by an employee, in the course of his employment, lit up and aggravated a cancer and caused the premature death of the employee, and inasmuch as the commissioner did so find, held that said finding was not reviewable by the courts.

Shepard v Carnation Co., 220-466; 262 NW 110; 37 NCCA 772

Leg injury causing pneumonia—failure of proof—claimant's burden. A workmen's compensation claimant fails to maintain her burden to establish a compensable claim sustained in the course of employment when only hearsay evidence is offered to show that a leg injury to her husband occurred during his employment and when the producing cause of subsequent death from lobar pneumonia is under the conflicting medical testimony a matter of uncertainty.

Featherson v Continental-Keller Co., 225-119; 279 NW 432

Garage mechanic—lead poisoning from blow-torch not occupational. An occupational disease is a usual or unavoidable incident or result of the particular employment. Lead poisoning suffered by a garage mechanic over a period of time resulting from using a blow-torch containing tetraethyl lead gasoline negligently furnished by the employer is a disease outside the ordinary diseases that follow the usual business of an automobile mechanic, and is compensable as an injury in the course of his employment.

Black v Creston Auto Co., 225-671; 281 NW 189

Hunting pheasants—course of employment—supported findings. The evidence leading up to and attending the injury of a salesman of steel culverts, while hunting pheasants with a son of a prospective customer, may be such as to support a finding of the industrial commissioner that the salesman was injured in the course of his employment, and entitled to compensation accordingly.

Fintzel v Stoddard Co., 219-1263; 260 NW 725; 37 NCCA 799; 4 NCCA (NS) 694

Act of courtesy resulting in injury. An injury to an employee may be said to "arise out of and in the course of his employment" when received, at the employer's plant during working hours, in extending, as a matter of courtesy, helpful assistance to a nonemployee who is rightfully on the premises for a purpose advantageous to the owner of the plant, provided the employee, from all the facts and circumstances attending his employment and work, believed and had reasonable grounds to believe that his employment embraced and contemplated the giving of such assistance under such circumstances.

Yates v Humphrey, 218-792; 255 NW 639; 35 NCCA 541

Finding re act of courtesy. A finding by the industrial commissioner on supporting testimony that an injury consisting of sliver in thumb while performing act of courtesy arose out of and in the course of an employment is conclusive on the courts in the absence of fraud.

Yates v Humphrey, 218-792; 255 NW 639

Heat exhaustion from and in the course of employment. In workmen's compensation case to recover for death of workman allegedly caused by intensified or artificial heat, commissioner, being the sole final judge of the facts, had, under the record, competent evidence to sustain his finding that deceased received an injury growing out of and in the course of his employment which contributed to and hastened his death.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Fatal sunstroke—when noncompensable. A fatal sunstroke cannot be said to "arise out of" an employment and, therefore, be compensable, when the facts attending the injury fail to reveal any causal connection between the employment and the said injury.

Wax v Des M. Corp., 220-864; 263 NW 333; 38 NCCA 621

Noncompensable injuries—death from lightning. The death of an employee from a fatal stroke of lightning, tho occurring "in the course of" his employment, cannot be deemed to "arise out of" said employment, and therefore be compensable under the workmen's compensation law, unless, by a preponderance of the evidence, a causal connection is established between (1) the circumstances and conditions attending said employment and (2) said death, i. e., that a person engaged in said employment is more susceptible to such an injury than other persons in the same locality. Evidence held insufficient.

Mincey v Dultmeier Co., 223-252; 272 NW 430

Emergency after working hours. An employee is in the course of his employment when, after returning home at the close of his work for the day, he starts to return to his place of work in order there to adjust an unexpected difficulty within the scope of his usual duties; and an injury received during such return trip by being run over by a passing vehicle arises out of his employment, and is compensable.

Kyle v High School, 208-1037; 226 NW 71; 28 NCCA 812; 30 NCCA 404

V PERSONAL INJURY ARISING OUT OF AND IN THE COURSE OF THE EMPLOYMENT—continued

Working in prohibited place—effect. An employee who takes himself out of "the course of his employment" by deliberately and unjustifiably going into a place where he knows he is positively and invariably prohibited from being, may not say that his act was nothing more than an act of negligence.

Enfield v Products Co., 211-1004; 233 NW 141

Employee injured while in prohibited place. An employee is not injured "in the course of the employment" when he is injured in and at a place on the employer's premises where he knows he is positively and invariably prohibited from being, and when he is in and at said place without justifiable excuse or reason; and it is immaterial that at the time he is doing the master's work.

Enfield v Products Co., 211-1004; 233 NW 141; 30 NCCA 34

Violation of orders. The injuries to an employee must be deemed to "arise out of and in the course of" his employment when, at the time of his injuries, he was doing the identical thing, at the identical place, and with the identical instrumentalities required by his contract of employment, even tho at said time he was operating said instrumentality in a manner which he knew was contrary to the explicit command of his employer.

Wallace v Rex Co., 216-1239; 250 NW 589; 34 NCCA 647

Injury while using own vehicle. An injury to a workman must be deemed to "arise out of and in the course of" his employment when received by the workman as a result of cranking his own automobile, while it was standing on the side of a hill, in order to travel, in accordance with the orders of the employer, from one job of work to another job, it appearing that the employer knew the workman in question was using his own conveyance and made no objection thereto, tho he—the employer—had furnished a conveyance for the use of his workmen.

Marley v Johnson & Co., 215-151; 244 NW 833; 85 ALR 969; 32 NCCA 354

Employee injured during continuous employment. An injury "arises out of and in the course of an employment" when received by the employee on a Sunday while crossing a street on his way from his hotel to a nearby restaurant for his evening meal, it further appearing that the employee was a mechanic traveling about the country at the sole expense of the employer, and had arrived during the afternoon of said Sunday in the city where he was injured, solely because of orders from the employer so to report in order to perform at said place certain mechanical work for the employer on the following Monday.

Walker v Mach. Corp., 213-1134; 240 NW 725; 31 NCCA 610

Nondeparture from employment. An injury to an employee of a corporation "arises out of, and in the course of" his employment when the injury is received while the employee is performing work at the private residence of the general manager of the corporation, for the personal and individual benefit of said manager, and under orders from said manager, it appearing that the contract of employment between the corporation and the employee contemplated and required such occasional work for said manager.

Petersen v Corno Co., 216-894; 249 NW 408; 34 NCCA 633

Temporarily leaving place of work.

Sachleben v Gjellefald, 228- ; 290 NW 48

Violation of orders. The injuries to an employee must be deemed to "arise out of and in the course of" his employment when, at the time of his injuries, he was doing the identical thing, at the identical place, and with the identical instrumentalities required by his contract of employment, even tho at said time he was operating said instrumentality in a manner which he knew was contrary to the explicit command of his employer.

Wallace v Fuel Co., 216-1239; 250 NW 589; 34 NCCA 647

Consent of owner-employer to operation of automobile—effect. An employer, whose automobile is being operated with his consent, is not liable, under §5026, C., '35, to his own employee, for an injury suffered by said employee in consequence of the actionable negligence of said operator of the car, provided said injury is compensable under the workmen's compensation act.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Iowa employment contract—action—place of business. Action for damages under oral contract of employment made in Iowa is not governed by the place where the contract was entered into, but may be maintained in state where employer's business was "localized".

Severson v Hanford Air Lines, 105 F 2d, 622

Extra territorial effect. The workmen's compensation law of this state, when not formally rejected, becomes a part of a contract of employment entered into in this state by a resident employer and a nonresident employee, tho the contract requires almost exclusive execution of the contract by the employee in the foreign state—where the employee was injured.

Cullamore v Groneweg Co., 219-200; 257 NW 561

Applicability of state and federal acts. Injuries received by an employee of a common carrier, engaged in the transportation of both intrastate and interstate freight, are compensable under the state workmen's compensation act, and not under the corresponding federal act, when the employment, in the course of which and out of which the injuries arose, consists solely of the duty to patrol the railroad yards of the employer against thieves, trespassers, and fires.

Califore v Railway, 220-676; 263 NW 29

Scope of employment—jury question. The scope of a servant's duties is to be determined by what he was employed to perform, and by what, with knowledge and approval of his master, he actually did perform. Evidence held to present a jury question whether a general farm hand was, at the time of his injury, within the scope of his employment.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

1422 Peace officers.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 209, 235, 260; '28 AG Op 299, 368; '30 AG Op 137, 270, 317, 353; '34 AG Op 379

Policemen not within act. The minor children of a deceased policeman who was a member of an organized police department and contributing to the statutory pension fund of said department, and who was killed while attempting to effect an arrest and at a time when he was not actually "pensioned", are not entitled to compensation under the workmen's compensation act.

Ogilvie v Des Moines, 212-117; 233 NW 526

Policemen under coverage. Section 1422, C., '27, providing for coverage under the workmen's compensation act for policemen killed or injured in effecting an arrest, embraces, in view of §1361, subsec. 4, those policemen only who are not members of an organized police department.

Ogilvie v Des Moines, 212-117; 233 NW 526

Noncompensable injuries. The statutory provision (editorially classified as part of the workmen's compensation act, §1422, C., '31) which, inter alia, grants compensation to a city marshal when injured "while performing such official duties where there is peril or hazard peculiar to the work of his office", does not authorize compensation for an injury received by a marshal from the accidental discharge of his revolver as it dropped from his pocket while cleaning the floor of the city jail.

Roberts v Colfax, 219-1136; 260 NW 57; 37 NCCA 807

CHAPTER 71

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSIONER

1423 Industrial commissioner—term.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 52

1425 Duties of the deputy.

Review—allowable appeal. The action of the deputy industrial commissioner (on the application of an injured employee) in opening up for further consideration an existing agreement for compensation, and the decision of said deputy on said further consideration, constitute an authorized "review" (§1457, C., '35) from which an appeal lies to the district court.

Soukup v Shores Co., 222-272; 268 NW 598

1427 Political activity and contributions.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 668

1436 Compensation agreements.

Agreement as to compensation—limitation. An employer and the surviving dependent wife of a deceased employee have no legal right to agree that a stated lump sum shall be paid, in any and all events, by the employer for the death of the employee. Such agreement can legally go no further than to determine what sum shall be paid per week.

Comingore v Shenandoah Co., 208-430; 226 NW 124

Compensation agreement—sufficiency. A memorandum of agreement relative to compensation tho only signed by the dependent, is all-sufficient and binding when duly approved by the commissioner, and acquiesced in, recognized, and acted on, by the employer and insurer.

Biggs v Bank, 218-48; 254 NW 331

Jurisdiction to correct entry. If a memorandum of agreement as to what compensation shall be paid by an employer for the injury or death of an employee, and the approving entry indorsed thereon by the industrial commissioner, are susceptible of both a legal and an illegal construction, the commissioner has ample power, on due application, notice, and hearing, to make such supplemental entries as will show the legal construction.

Comingore v Shenandoah Co., 208-430; 226 NW 124

Application to correct entry—withdrawal of appearance. In an application by an insurance carrier to the industrial commissioner for the correction of an entry of approval on a memorandum of agreement relative to compensation, it is quite immaterial that the employer withdraws his appearance to the proceedings.

Comingore v Shenandoah Co., 208-430; 226 NW 124

Invalid agreement—approval by commissioner—effect. The approval by the industrial commissioner of an agreement between the employer and the dependent of a deceased employee, providing for a less compensation than that required by statute, is invalid, and therefore no obstacle to the later entry by the commissioner of a valid order.

Forbes v Sand Co., 216-292; 249 NW 399

1437 Board of arbitration.

Death of applicant—proper substitution. Where an injured employee files with the industrial commissioner, under the workmen's compensation act, his application for compensation, and dies before compensation has been adjudicated, the surviving wife, who is the sole surviving dependent, may be substituted as claimant.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

Belated objections. The objection that an insurance carrier was not a proper party defendant along with the employer in proceedings under the workmen's compensation act will not be considered when presented for the first time on appeal to the supreme court.

Walker v Mach. Corp., 213-1134; 240 NW 725

1438 Waiver of right.

Unallowable appeal. Appeal to the district court will not lie from the findings and award of the industrial commissioner sitting as arbitrator. In other words, appeal will lie only from the findings and award of the commissioner when sitting in review of arbitration already had.

Hampton v Railway, 217-108; 250 NW 881

1440 Powers of board—hearings.

Extra-territorial effect. The workmen's compensation act of this state, when not formally rejected, becomes a part of a contract of employment entered into in this state by a resident employer and a nonresident employee, tho the contract requires almost exclusive execution of the contract by the employee in the foreign state—where the employee was injured.

Cullamore v Groneweg & S., 219-200; 257 NW 561

1441 Liberal rules of evidence.

Discussion. See 24 ILR 576—Reception of evidence

Death of party and revival of action. While the right of an injured employee to compensation under the workmen's compensation act is based on disability, and the right of his dependents to compensation in event of his death is based on loss of support, nevertheless the facts maturing each right are substantially the same, and therefore, in case the injured employee dies while his application for compensation is pending, the cause of action survives to his dependents, they being his "successors in interest" within the meaning of the statute.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

Evidence—commissioner not bound by common law or statutory rules. In workmen's compensation case to recover for death of workman, where objection is raised as to expert witnesses testifying to an ultimate fact, held, assuming hypothetical questions called for an ultimate fact, the testimony was admissible under §1441, C., '39, which provides that the commissioner shall not be bound by common law or statutory rules of evidence, but shall make such investigation and inquiries as are best suited to ascertain and conserve the substantial rights of the parties.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Rules of evidence and procedure. The legislature did not contemplate that all ordinary rules of evidence and procedure might be disregarded by the industrial commissioner in hearings before him.

Baker v Roberts & Beier, 209-290; 228 NW 9

Right to compensation—degree of proof. Principle reaffirmed that a claimant under the workmen's compensation act must establish his right to compensation by a preponderance of the evidence.

Susich v Coal Co., 207-1129; 224 NW 86

Employee's burden of proof. In proceeding to recover workmen's compensation, burden of proof rests upon the employee to establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence.

Boswell v Funeral Home, 227-344; 288 NW 402

Exception to workmen's compensation—burden of proof on one asserting exception. One relying on an exception to the workmen's compensation act, providing that no compensation shall be allowed for an injury caused by the employee's willful intent to injure himself or to willfully injure another, has the burden of establishing the facts which bring the matter within the exception.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Exception to workmen's compensation—burden of proof not sustained. The defendant in an action for workmen's compensation who relied on an exception to the law failed to sustain the burden of proving the exception when there was an entire lack of evidence tending to prove or disprove the exception.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Unallowable impeachment of witness—effect. When the testimony of witnesses offered by an employer tends to show that an injury to an employee arose out of and in the course of his employment, it is wholly unallowable for the industrial commissioner to permit the employer to impeach his own witnesses by introducing their former ex parte affidavits as to how the injury occurred, and equally unallowable for said commissioner to treat such affidavits as substantive evidence creating a conflict with the testimony of the injured employee unquestionably showing that his injuries were compensable.

Baker v Roberts & Beier, 209-290; 228 NW 9; 30 NCCA 433; 2 NCCA (NS) 841

Exhibit offered in part—commissioner's right to consider entirety. In a workmen's compensation case where an assignment of error is based upon the contention that the commissioner exceeded his powers in considering an instrument which had been identified and offered as an exhibit, as to which exhibit it was claimed that only a part had been offered, the commissioner considered other parts not offered in evidence, and where it appears that another exhibit was offered which referred to the entire exhibit complained of, the commissioner was authorized to consider such exhibit in its entirety under the statute providing for liberal rules of evidence in workmen's compensation cases, irrespective of what might be the rule under common law, under statutory rules of evidence, or under technical rules of procedure.

Schriver v McLaughlin, 227-580; 288 NW 657

Evidence—records of former compensation claim inadmissible. Records in the industrial commissioner's office as to a former compensation claim are inadmissible when they have no bearing on the merits of the claim at bar.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Res gestae—declarations of injured party. The declarations of an injured party, made shortly after receiving the injury, as to the manner in which the injury was received, may be admissible as substantive evidence.

Califore v Railway, 220-676; 263 NW 29

Hearsay—statements to doctor regarding injuries. Hearsay evidence is not admissible nor competent to prove any of the basic facts in a compensation case. So held, as to statements made by deceased employee to doctor that injury was received in course of employment.

Schuler v Cudahy Co., 223-1323; 275 NW 39

Unobjected to, relevant hearsay evidence considered. In the absence of objection, relevant hearsay evidence may be given consideration.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Hearsay evidence incompetent. A letter written by a physician to an insurer of an employer's industrial risk is incompetent to overthrow a prima facie showing of right of recovery on the part of the employee.

Swim v Fuel Co., 204-546; 215 NW 603

Examining injured employee—physician's opinion—hearsay. The inclusion in a physician's report to an insurance company, of his opinion, that an employee sustaining an eye injury had no vision in that eye previous to the accident, is hearsay evidence.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Evidence—competency—physician—confidential communications—admissibility. The statutory rule of evidence (§11263, C., '35) that information obtained by a physician from his patient is inadmissible does not apply to workmen's compensation cases.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Ex parte communications. Ex parte written communications are incompetent as evidence but the reception, in evidence, of a letter which expresses the opinion of a physician as to the cause of a disability does not constitute reversible error when the findings of the commissioner are otherwise supported by competent evidence, and no request for cross-examination is made.

Hinricks v Locomotive Works, 203-1395; 214 NW 585

Walker v Mach. Corp., 213-1134; 240 NW 725

Expert testimony—evidentiary (?) or ultimate (?) facts. In workmen's compensation action to recover for death of workman allegedly caused by intensified or artificial heat, wherein defendant asserts that expert witnesses testified to the ultimate fact that there was excessive heat, which fact was for the determination of the commissioner, held, the evidence given by the experts consisted of material, evidentiary facts, constituting a basis for one of the ultimate facts in the case, which was that decedent received an injury arising out of and in the course of his employment, and therefore was admissible, particularly so where defendant did not object to the testimony on the ground that it stated an ultimate fact.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Expert testimony—artificial heat. In workmen's compensation action in which objection is raised to the admission of expert testimony to show the heat situation in a bakeshop, where the death of a workman is allegedly caused by intensified or artificial heat, held, that insofar as the conditions, causes, and effects to which the experts testified required special study and experience to understand and explain, the admission of such expert testimony was proper.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Failure to set out objections. In workmen's compensation case, wherein defendants contend hypothetical questions propounded to expert witnesses included statements not supported by the record, and also omitted material facts, and where objections to the questions failed to point out to the commissioner the particular defects, defendant is not in a position to present this proposition on appeal.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Deposition—when admissible. The deposition of an injured employee in support of his application for compensation under the workmen's compensation law, is admissible, after his death, on behalf of a dependent spouse who has been substituted as plaintiff, the proceeding by the employee during his lifetime and the proceeding by the dependent spouse as substituted plaintiff being in law one and the same cause of action.

Dille v Plainview Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

Causal connection between injury and death. In workmen's compensation action to recover for death of workman allegedly caused by intensified or artificial heat, wherein testimony of physician shows that some of the symptoms of heat exhaustion are that patient perspires freely, has an increased thirst, flushed face, increasing weakness and chills, and where workman manifested substantially all of the symptoms enumerated, such testimony supplied evidence that workman suffered heat exhaustion which hastened his death and thus provided the causal connection between his death and injury.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Excessive heat caused artificially. In workmen's compensation action to recover for death of workman caused by intensified or artificial heat, held, evidence sufficient to sustain finding that there was excessive heat in a bakeshop, caused artificially.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

"Customarily"—seasonal employment—failure to establish—effect. Under workmen's compensation statute providing that the basis of computation of compensation for employees in an enterprise "which customarily shuts down and ceases operation during a season of each year" shall be based on the customary number of working days, with a minimum of 200 days, the word "customarily" as used in statute applies only to the custom of the particular employer involved, and the custom of other employers engaged in like activity is immaterial. Where employer voluntarily assumes the burden of showing that claimant was engaged in a business which customarily shut down and ceased operation during a season of each year, and fails to sustain such burden, it is not error to calculate compensation on a basis of 300 days.

Schrivver v McLaughlin, 227-580; 288 NW 657

Conflicting evidence—commissioner's duty. In workmen's compensation case to recover for death of workman, where there is a conflict in the evidence on the question of excessive heat allegedly causing death, it is the duty of the commissioner to determine which testimony is entitled to the greater weight and credibility.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Evidence supporting commissioner's finding. In workmen's compensation case to recover for death of workman allegedly caused by intensified or artificial heat, commissioner, being the sole final judge of the facts, had, under the record, competent evidence to sustain his finding that deceased received an injury growing out of and in the course of his employment which contributed to and hastened his death.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Undisputed evidence—contrary findings—conclusiveness. Industrial commissioner's finding contrary to undisputed evidence is not conclusive on the courts, but where workman's death from septicemia resulting from scratch on finger involves disputed testimony as to whether injury occurred in the course of the employment, the industrial commissioner's decision must stand.

Schuler v Cudahy Co., 223-1323; 275 NW 39

Commissioner's power—appeal from arbitrator's award. The industrial commissioner, on defendant's appeal from arbitrator's award of compensation, can increase the arbitration award in favor of the nonappealing claimant under the statute authorizing the commissioner to retry the issues de novo, hear the parties, consider the transcribed evidence, hear any additional evidence and affirm, modify, reverse, or remand the arbitrator's decision.

Jarman v Collins-Hill Co., 226-1247; 286 NW 526

1443 Transcript of evidence—compensation.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Aug. 15, '39

1444 Depositions.

When admissible. The deposition of an injured employee in support of his application for compensation under the workmen's compensation act is admissible, after his death, on behalf of a dependent spouse who has been substituted as plaintiff, the proceeding by the employee during his lifetime and the proceeding by the dependent spouse as substituted plaintiff being in law one and the same cause of action.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

1446 Findings of arbitration board filed.

Appeal to district court—only from award of commissioner. An appeal to the district court in compensation cases lies only from the industrial commissioner, and not from an arbitrator's award.

Jarman v Collins-Hill Co., 226-1247; 286 NW 526

Commissioner's power—appeal from arbitrator's award. The industrial commissioner, on defendant's appeal from arbitrator's award of compensation, can increase the arbitration award in favor of the nonappealing claimant under the statute authorizing the commissioner to retry the issues de novo, hear the parties, consider the transcribed evidence, hear any additional evidence and affirm, modify, reverse, or remand the arbitrator's decision.

1447 Review.

Commissioner's power—appeal from arbitrator's award. The industrial commissioner, on defendant's appeal from arbitrator's award of compensation, can increase the arbitration award in favor of the nonappealing claimant under the statute authorizing the commissioner to retry the issues de novo, hear the parties, consider the transcribed evidence, hear any additional evidence and affirm, modify, reverse, or remand the arbitrator's decision.

Jarman v Collins-Hill Co., 226-1247; 286 NW 526

Appeal to district court—only from award of commissioner. An appeal to the district court in compensation cases lies only from the industrial commissioner, and not from an arbitrator's award.

Jarman v Collins-Hill Co., 226-1247; 286 NW 526

Commissioner's power to "modify" arbitration award. The statutory provision giving the industrial commissioner power to "modify" the decision of the arbitrator is the power to change, and to increase as well as reduce, the arbitration award.

Jarman v Collins-Hill Co., 226-1247; 286 NW 526

Failure to set out objections. In workmen's compensation case, wherein defendants contend hypothetical questions propounded to expert witnesses included statements not supported by the record, and also omitted material facts, and where objections to the questions failed to point out to the commissioner the particular defects, defendant is not in a position to present this proposition on appeal.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

Award — nonadjudication. An award made by the deputy industrial commissioner of this state (acting under stipulation as a board of arbitration), based on a finding that the employee when injured was engaged in intrastate commerce, and pending on appeal to the industrial commissioner, constitutes no bar to the prosecution in a foreign state of an action by the employee under the Federal Employers' Liability Act on the theory that the employee, when injured, was engaged in interstate commerce.

Chicago, RI Ry. Co. v Schendel, 270 US 611

1448 Decision and findings of fact.

Conflicting evidence. In workmen's compensation case to recover for death of workman, where there is a conflict in the evidence on the question of excessive heat allegedly causing death, it is the duty of the commissioner to determine which testimony is entitled to the greater weight and credibility.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

1449 Appeal.

Appeal to district court—only from award of commissioner. An appeal to the district court in compensation cases lies only from the industrial commissioner, and not from an arbitrator's award.

Jarman v Collins-Hill Co., 226-1247; 286 NW 526

Unallowable appeal. Appeal to the district court will not lie from the findings and award of the industrial commissioner sitting as arbitrator. In other words, appeal will only lie from the findings and award of the commissioner when sitting in review of arbitration already had.

Hampton v Railway, 217-108; 250 NW 881

Review — allowable appeal. The action of the deputy industrial commissioner (on the application of an injured employee) in opening up for further consideration an existing agreement for compensation, and the decision of said deputy on said further consideration, constitute an authorized "review" (§1457, C., '35) from which an appeal lies to the district court.

Soukup v Shores Co., 222-272; 268 NW 598

Trial not de novo. The trial of an appeal from decision of the industrial commissioner to the district court is not de novo, and where aggrieved party fails to appeal, the decision of the industrial commissioner is final and such party cannot obtain a review in either the district or supreme court.

Jarman v Collins-Hill Co., 226-1247; 286 NW 526

New action pending appeal—effect. An appeal by a surviving spouse, in workmen's compensation proceedings, from a judgment that she had no right as surviving spouse to be substituted as plaintiff in a proceeding for compensation commenced by her husband in his lifetime, cannot be deemed abandoned by the act of said appealing spouse in subsequently filing with the industrial commissioner her formal application for compensation as a dependent, when said latter filing was for the sole purpose of avoiding the running of the statute of limitation and preserving her rights as a dependent in the event she, on the merits, lost her pending appeal.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

Failure to appeal—effect. The ruling of the industrial commissioner that a party could not in the capacity of an administratrix maintain a proceeding to recover compensation arising out of an injury to a deceased employee, becomes a finality when not appealed from.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

Modification of award after appeal. The industrial commissioner has no jurisdiction to modify his award after an appeal has been taken therefrom.

Clingsmith v Dairy, 202-773; 211 NW 413

Failure to set out objections. In workmen's compensation case, wherein defendants contend hypothetical questions propounded to expert witnesses included statements not supported by the record, and also omitted material facts, and where objections to the questions failed to point out to the commissioner the particular defects, defendant is not in a position to present this proposition on appeal.

1451 Trial on appeal.

Trial not de novo. The trial of an appeal from decision of the industrial commissioner to the district court is not de novo, and where aggrieved party fails to appeal, the decision of the industrial commissioner is final and such party cannot obtain a review in either the district or supreme court.

Jarman v Collins-Hill Co., 226-1247; 286 NW 526

1452 Record on appeal—findings of fact conclusive.

Discussion. See 11 ILR 381—Cases of undisputed facts

ANALYSIS

- I CONCLUSIVE FINDINGS
- II NONCONCLUSIVE FINDINGS

I CONCLUSIVE FINDINGS

Findings generally. Findings of fact by the industrial commissioner on substantial and supporting testimony are final.

Clingsmith v Dairy, 202-773; 211 NW 413
McKinney v Fuel Co., 202-398; 210 NW 459
Mueller v U. S. Gyp. Co., 203-1229; 212 NW 577

Reid v Reid, 216-882; 249 NW 387
Gardner v Trustees, 217-1390; 250 NW 740
Wichers v McKee Co., 223-853; 273 NW 892
Nash v Citizens Co., 224-1088; 277 NW 728
Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Commissioner's findings — conclusiveness. The supreme court adheres to the residuum of legal evidence rule, and in workmen's compensation cases where there is competent evidence to sustain the decision of the industrial commissioner, the trial court cannot interfere with the award.

West v Phillips, 227-612; 288 NW 625

"Out of and in the course of." A finding by the industrial commissioner, on supporting testimony, that an injury "arose out of and in the course of" an employment is conclusive on the courts in the absence of fraud.

Heinen v Motor Inn, 202-67; 209 NW 415;
26 NCCA 53; 4 NCCA(NS) 676

Heissler v Hide Co., 212-848; 237 NW 343
Yates v Humphrey, 218-792; 255 NW 639
Fintzel v Stoddard Co., 219-1263; 260 NW 725

Califore v Railway, 220-676; 263 NW 29; 38 NCCA 683

"Out of and in the course of." A supported finding by the industrial commissioner, on conflicting testimony, that an employee had failed to show that an injury "arose out of and in the course of" his employment is conclusive on the courts.

Antonew v Cement Co., 204-1001; 216 NW 695

Smith v Hospital, 210-691; 231 NW 490; 30 NCCA 370; 1 NCCA(NS) 623

"Out of and in the course of." Tho an employee is found dead on the employer's premises at a place where none of his duties were to be performed, and tho there is no direct testimony as to just when or just how he met his death, yet a finding by the industrial commissioner that the death "arose out of and in the course of" the employment is conclusive on the courts if such finding has support in the circumstances and facts surrounding and attending the death of the employee, so far as known, and in the inferences reasonably deducible from such facts and circumstances.

Bushing v Iowa Co., 208-1010; 226 NW 719; 30 NCCA 449

Hunting pheasants — course of employment. The evidence leading up to and attending the injury of a salesman of steel culverts, while hunting pheasants with a son of a prospective customer, may be such as to support a finding of the industrial commissioner that the salesman was injured in the course of his employment, and entitled to compensation accordingly.

Fintzel v Stoddard Co., 219-1263; 260 NW 725; 37 NCCA 799; 4 NCCA(NS) 694

Sportive contest. A finding by the industrial commissioner on conflicting, competent testimony that an injury to an employee arose out of a sportive contest voluntarily participated in by the injured employee and a co-employee, is conclusive on the court.

Wittmer v Dexter, 204-180; 214 NW 700; 27 NCCA 592; 2 NCCA(NS) 824

Permanent partial disability. Where the industrial commissioner on a conflicting record found 25 percent permanent disability, the district court may not disregard this finding and award compensation on a total permanent disability basis.

Wichers v McKee Co., 223-853; 273 NW 892

Permanent partial disability — conclusiveness of compensation schedule. An employee under the workmen's compensation act was, under an agreement, paid compensation for a supposedly temporary injury to the employee's foot. On review of said agreement, the deputy industrial commissioner found, on supporting evidence, that the foot had been permanently disabled to the extent of 50 percent of its normal functions, and ordered additional compensation paid according to the statute fixing compensation for permanent partial disabilities.

Held that the court, on appeal, should have treated the finding of the deputy as conclusive—that the court was in error in adjudging that the employee was, in an industrial sense, permanently disabled, and was entitled to compensation for the concededly permanent partial disability, not in accordance with the statutory schedule governing compensation for permanent partial disability, but on the basis of 400 weekly payments for total permanent disability.

Compensation period. The determination by the industrial commissioner (arbitration being waived) of the compensation period for the loss of more than a hand and admittedly less than the arm, at a period between 150 weeks for the loss of a hand and less than 225 weeks for the loss of an arm, is conclusive on the courts.

Pappas v Tile Co., 201-607; 206 NW 146

Advisability of commutation. A supported finding by both the court and the industrial commissioner as to the advisability of commuting compensation is final on the appellate court.

Reeves v Mfg Co., 202-136; 209 NW 289

Length and nature of disability. When an employer agrees with the injured employee to pay the latter a stated compensation "during his disability", the court has no jurisdiction to determine such period of disability and to determine that said injuries are permanent and to enter judgment accordingly.

Sauter v Railway, 204-394; 214 NW 707

Who was employer. A finding by the industrial commissioner on competent, supporting, and conflicting testimony as to who was the employer of an injured servant is conclusive on the courts.

Murphy v Shipley, 200-857; 205 NW 497

Finding of representative capacity. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on supporting testimony, that a person, for whose death compensation is asked, stood, at the time of his death, in a representative capacity to his employer, is conclusive on the courts.

Pattee v Lumber Co., 220-1181; 263 NW 839; 38 NCCA 676

Finding against independent contractorship. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on conflicting but supporting testimony, that a workman when injured was the employee of a named employer, and not of an alleged independent contractor, is conclusive on the courts.

Niemann v Iowa Co., 218-127; 253 NW 815

Nonemployee. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on supporting testimony, that a claimant under the workmen's compensation act was not, at the time of his injury, an employee of the alleged employer is conclusive on the courts.

Norman v City, 206-790; 221 NW 481

Nonwillful neglect of injury. A finding by the industrial commissioner on conflicting and supporting testimony that an employee was not guilty of such willful misconduct in neglecting his injury as to bar recovery of compensation is not reviewable by the appellate courts.

Daugherty v Coal Co., 206-120; 219 NW 65

Notice to employer — finding conclusive. A conflict in the evidence, in a workmen's compensation case, as to whether the employer had notice of the injury within the statutory ninety-day period, is a question whose determination by the industrial commissioner is conclusive on the courts.

Fritz v Rath Co., 224-1116; 278 NW 208

Causal connection. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on competent, supporting, and conflicting testimony, that causal connection has been established between a slight injury and the subsequent condition of an injured workman is conclusive on the court.

Fraze v McClelland Co., 200-944; 205 NW 737
Hinricks v Locomotive Works, 203-1395; 214 NW 585

Noncausal connection — conclusiveness of finding. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on conflicting testimony that the physical condition of an employee was not caused by the heated condition of the atmosphere under which he formerly worked for the employer, is conclusive on the courts.

Brown v Packing Co., 219-9; 257 NW 411; 36 NCCA 540

Cause of death—artificial heat. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on supporting but conflicting testimony, that an employee died during the course of his employment from the effect of artificial heat attending and growing out of his employment is conclusive on the courts.

Belcher v Elec. Lt. Co., 208-262; 225 NW 404; 30 NCCA 361

I CONCLUSIVE FINDINGS—concluded

Cause of death—hernia. A supported finding by the industrial commissioner, as to hernia being the cause of death of an injured workman, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Emery v Ottumwa Service, 220-885; 262 NW 786; 38 NCCA 644; 1 NCCA(NS) 605

Pattee v Lumber Co., 220-1181; 263 NW 839

Employment, injury, and death unconnected. Industrial commissioner's finding that death from lobar pneumonia did not result from employment-connected injury is conclusive on the courts.

Featherson v Continental-Keller Co., 225-119; 279 NW 432

Blow lighting up cancer. Evidence, expert and otherwise, carefully analyzed and reviewed, and held to be such that the industrial commissioner might justifiably find therefrom that a blow received by an employee, in the course of his employment, lit up and aggravated a cancer and caused the premature death of the employee, and inasmuch as the commissioner did so find, held that said finding was not reviewable by the courts.

Shepard v Milk Co., 220-466; 262 NW 110; 37 NCCA 772

Loss of sight—cause. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on competent but conflicting testimony, that the loss of sight was caused by a certain injury, is conclusive on the courts.

Smith v Ice Co., 204-1348; 217 NW 264

Daugherty v Coal Co., 206-120; 219 NW 65

Impairment of vision—finding. A supported finding by the industrial commissioner that the vision of both eyes of an employee has been impaired to a named extent is conclusive on the courts.

Butz v Hahn Co., 220-995; 263 NW 257; 38 NCCA 647

Presence of gas in mine. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on conflicting evidence, as to the presence of carbon dioxide in a mine and as to its effect on a workman if it were present in the mine, is conclusive on the courts.

Susich v Coal Co., 207-1129; 224 NW 86

Cause of injury. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on conflicting, nonspeculative, competent, and supporting testimony, that the cause of death of an employee has been established by a preponderance of the testimony to have been a trauma arising out of the employment is necessarily conclusive on the courts.

Jones v Eppley Co., 208-1281; 227 NW 153; 30 NCCA 449

Septicemia—scratched finger. Industrial commissioner's finding contrary to undisputed evidence is not conclusive on the courts, but where workman's death from septicemia resulting from scratch on finger involves disputed testimony as to whether injury occurred in the course of the employment, the industrial commissioner's decision must stand.

Schuler v Cudahy Co., 223-1323; 275 NW 39

Cerebral hemorrhage—cause. A conflict in the evidence as to whether a workman's injury was, on the following day, the cause of a cerebral hemorrhage from which he died makes a fact question whose determination by the industrial commissioner is a finality on appeal.

Schroyer v Jasper Co., 224-1391; 279 NW 118

Chronic dermatitis—noncausal connection. Since an award of workmen's compensation must stand on something more than a mere possibility of causal connection between the accident and the injury, evidence that aggravation or secondary infection of a chronic dermatitis or ringworm on employee's hand could "possibly" have been the result of housecleaning work done in employer's funeral home was not sufficient to support an award granted by industrial commissioner.

Boswell v Funeral Home, 227-344; 288 NW 402

Riding on freight elevator—prohibition. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on competent, substantial, and supporting testimony, that an employee had full knowledge that all employees were invariably prohibited from riding upon a freight elevator, and that said employee arbitrarily and unjustifiably violated said prohibition, is conclusive on the courts—even tho there is no conflict in the testimony.

Enfield v Prod. Co., 211-1004; 233 NW 141; 30 NCCA 434

Appeal to district court—trial not de novo. The trial of an appeal from decision of the industrial commissioner to the district court is not de novo, and where aggrieved party fails to appeal, the decision of the industrial commissioner is final and such party cannot obtain a review in either the district or supreme court.

Jarman v Collins-Hill Co., 226-1247; 286 NW 526

II NONCONCLUSIVE FINDINGSLaw of admitted facts.

Baldwin v Sullivan, 201-955; 204 NW 420; 208 NW 218

Permissible review. A decision by the industrial commissioner is reviewable by the court on appeal (1) if the facts found by the commissioner do not support the decision, or (2) if there is not sufficient competent evidence in the record to justify the decree.

Stiles v Council, 209-1235; 229 NW 841

Findings on undisputed testimony. The findings and conclusions of the industrial commissioner on undisputed testimony are not conclusive on the courts when such findings and conclusions are not justified as a matter of law.

Tunncliff v Bettendorf, 204-168; 214 NW 516
Petersen v Corno Co., 216-894; 249 NW 408

Findings of commissioner—scope of review. Where the facts are in dispute, the court will ordinarily refuse to disturb the findings of the industrial commissioner, but where they are not in dispute, the court may review the conclusions of the commissioner upon such undisputed facts for the purpose of determining whether or not there is sufficient competent evidence to support commissioner's decision.

Boswell v Funeral Home, 227-344; 288 NW 402

Undisputed evidence—contrary findings—conclusiveness. Industrial commissioner's finding contrary to undisputed evidence is not conclusive on the courts, but where workman's death from septicemia resulting from scratch on finger involves disputed testimony as to whether injury occurred in the course of the employment, the industrial commissioner's decision must stand.

Schuler v Cudahy Co., 223-1323; 275 NW 39

Undisputed facts—interstate commerce. A finding by the industrial commissioner on undisputed facts that an employee was not engaged in interstate commerce is reviewable by the courts.

Johnston v Railway, 208-202; 225 NW 357

Undisputed facts—course of employment. Undisputed facts bearing upon the question whether an injury arose out of and in the course of an employment present a question of law reviewable on appeal.

Marley v Johnson & Co., 215-151; 244 NW 833; 85 ALR 969

Insufficient competent evidence—dependent contractor. A decision of the industrial commissioner (under a written contract and explanatory oral evidence) that a party was an independent contractor and not an employee is reversible by the court when the undisputed facts demonstrate that the party was, as a matter of law, an employee.

Mallinger v Oil Co., 211-847; 234 NW 254

Unsupported findings—clerical employee. The finding of the industrial commissioner, on nonsupportable or insufficient testimony, that an injury to a clerical employee was not the proximate result of a hazard of the employer's business, is reviewable by the appellate court.

Kent v Kent, 202-1044; 208 NW 709

Nonsupported finding—permanent partial disability. A finding by the industrial commissioner on nonconflicting testimony that the disabilities suffered by an employee were permanent and partial, is reviewable by the court.

Diederich v Railway, 219-587; 258 NW 899

Nonconclusive finding—noncompensable injury. A finding by the industrial commissioner on undisputed testimony that an injured employee was not entitled to compensation is not conclusive on the courts.

Almquist v Nurseries, 218-724; 254 NW 35; 94 ALR 573

Lead poisoning to auto mechanic—occupational disease—nonconclusive finding. As to lead poisoning suffered by an automobile mechanic from using a blowtorch negligently filled with tetraethyl lead gasoline, industrial commissioner's finding it to be an occupational disease was not conclusive on the courts.

Black v Creston Auto Co., 225-671; 281 NW 189

Unallowable impeachment of witness—effect. When the testimony of witnesses offered by an employer tends to show that an injury to an employee arose out of and in the course of his employment, it is wholly unallowable for the industrial commissioner to permit the employer to impeach his own witnesses by introducing their former ex parte affidavits as to how the injury occurred, and equally unallowable for said commissioner to treat such affidavits as substantive evidence creating a conflict with the testimony of the injured employee unquestionably showing that his injuries were compensable. In other words, the impeachment being wholly unallowable, the testimony of both the claimant and of the master's witnesses stands uncontradicted and the injury is legally compensable notwithstanding a contrary finding by the commissioner.

1453 Decision on appeal.

Permissible review. A decision by the industrial commissioner is reviewable by the court on appeal (1) if the facts found by the commissioner do not support the decision, or (2) if there is not sufficient competent evidence in the record to justify the decree.

Stiles v Council, 209-1235; 229 NW 841

Ruling of commissioner—when reviewable. The ruling of the industrial commissioner on a stipulation of fact is not conclusive on the courts if the facts so stipulated do not legally support said ruling.

Oswalt v Lucas Co., 222-1099; 270 NW 847

Construction of contract by commissioner. An erroneous legal construction placed on a contract by the industrial commissioner is reviewable by the courts.

Arthur v Sch. Dist., 209-280; 228 NW 70; 66 ALR 718

Conclusion of law on undisputed facts—reviewability. The finding of law by the industrial commissioner on undisputed questions of fact is not binding on the appellate court.

Hoover v Sch. Dist., 220-1364; 264 NW 611

Conclusive finding by commissioner. Principle reaffirmed that findings of industrial commissioner based upon conflict of evidence or sufficient competent evidence are effective as a verdict of the jury and conclusive on the courts.

Wichers v McKee Co., 223-853; 273 NW 892

Supported findings of fact—affirmance. In an appeal from the commissioner's allowance of a claim for workmen's compensation, the order of the commissioner should be sustained when the record contains evidence to support his findings of fact.

Everts v Jorgensen, 227-818; 289 NW 11

Finding as to cause of death—artificial heat. A finding by the industrial commissioner, on supporting but conflicting testimony, that an employee died during the course of his employment from the effect of artificial heat attending and growing out of his employment is conclusive on the courts.

Belcher v Light Co., 208-262; 225 NW 404; 30 NCCA 361

Occupational disease. Record reviewed and held sufficient to support a finding by the industrial commissioner that an employee did not die from an occupational disease, but was injured by and died from the accumulation of deadly gases in a coal mine.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607; 34 NCCA 571

Undisputed evidence—contrary findings—conclusiveness. Industrial commissioner's finding contrary to undisputed evidence is not conclusive on the courts, but where workman's death from septicemia resulting from scratch on finger involves disputed testimony as to whether injury occurred in the course of the employment, the industrial commissioner's decision must stand.

Schuler v Cudahy Co., 223-1323; 275 NW 39

Commissioner's decision reversible when unsupported by evidence. In a workmen's compensation case, the decision of the industrial commissioner will be set aside if not supported by sufficient facts.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Vision—evidence refuting commissioner's decision. Evidence in a workmen's compensation case that the injured employee had from 33 to 50 percent vision in an eye before it was lost in a second industrial accident, leaves the decision of the industrial commissioner, that there was no loss, without support in the evidence, and the trial court was right in reversing the commissioner's decision.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Order based on incompetent evidence. An order of the industrial commissioner is subject to nullification by the court when the order is based solely on incompetent evidence.

Swim v Fuel Co., 204-546; 215 NW 603

Fact findings—permanent partial disability. Where the industrial commissioner on a conflicting record found 25 percent permanent disability, the district court may not disregard this finding and award compensation on a total permanent disability basis.

Wichers v McKee Co., 223-853; 273 NW 892

Road building contractor—truck driver—“employee” rather than “independent contractor”. In workmen's compensation proceeding where it is shown that a road builder's contract provided that his own organization, with the assistance of workmen under his immediate superintendence, should perform not less than 80 percent of all work embraced in the contract, and that no portion of the contract should be sublet except with the written consent of contracting officer or his authorized representative, and where claimant, not being a subcontractor, was injured while driving a truck which belonged to a person who was not a subcontractor, held, the claimant was an “employee” and not an “independent contractor” as respects the road building contractor's liability for compensation.

Schrivver v McLaughlin, 227-580; 288 NW 657

Conflicting adjudications. Where a judgment fixing the compensation for a railroad employee's death due to an accident in Iowa, was rendered by an Iowa court under the Iowa compensation act, it may be pleaded by the railroad in an action brought against it for the same cause in Minnesota under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, since both courts had jurisdiction to decide whether deceased was engaged in intrastate or interstate commerce; and the Iowa judgment, being the earlier one rendered, was res judicata in the other action, altho the other action was brought first.

Chicago, RI Ry. v Schendel, 270 US 611

Records of former compensation claim inadmissible. Records in the industrial commissioner's office as to a former compensation claim are inadmissible when they have no bearing on the merits of the claim at bar.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

Unobjected to, relevant hearsay evidence considered. In the absence of objection, relevant hearsay evidence may be given consideration.

Hamilton v Johnson & Sons, 224-1097; 276 NW 841

1454 Judgment or order remanding.

Final decree—modification. A final decree for compensation under the workmen's compensation act is not erroneous because it does not provide that compensation shall cease on the death of all claimants, as the decree may be promptly modified to meet such a contingency whenever such contingency occurs.

Walker v Mach. Corp., 213-1134; 240 NW 725

1456 Appeal to supreme court.

What constitutes "final order". A ruling of the district court that a surviving wife, sole dependent of her husband, had no right, after the death of her husband, to be substituted as plaintiff in a proceeding for compensation commenced by the husband during his lifetime, and remanding the cause to the industrial commissioner for proceedings in harmony with such ruling, constitutes a final order or judgment from which an appeal will lie to the supreme court.

Dille v Coal Co., 217-827; 250 NW 607

Trial not de novo. Principle reaffirmed that appeals under the workmen's compensation act are not tried de novo.

Arne v Silo Co., 214-511; 242 NW 539

Jarman v Collins-Hill Co., 226-1247; 286 NW 526

Belated objections. The objection that an insurance carrier was not a proper party defendant along with the employer in proceedings under the workmen's compensation act will not be considered when presented for the first time on appeal to the supreme court.

Walker v Speeder Corp., 213-1134; 240 NW 725

1457 Review of award or settlement.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 505

Review for additional compensation—burden of proof. An employee under the workmen's compensation act, allowed and paid compensation for an injury, has the burden of proof, on his application for review and compensation for additional consequences of said injury, to establish by a preponderance of evidence that said additional consequences are such as would naturally and proximately follow said original injury—were not the result of intervening accidents or other causes.

Oldham v Scofield, 222-764; 266 NW 480; 269 NW 925

Review—allowable appeal. The action of the deputy industrial commissioner (on the application of an injured employee) in opening up for further consideration an existing agreement for compensation, and the decision of said deputy on said further consideration, constitute an authorized "review" from which an appeal lies to the district court.

Soukup v Shores Co., 222-272; 268 NW 598

1459 Notice and service.

Jurisdiction—special appearance to question—effect. It seems that a special appearance before an administrative officer, e. g., the industrial commissioner, for the sole purpose of questioning the jurisdiction of the officer to act in a certain proceeding, is proper, and will not be deemed an appearance to the merits.

Elk River Co. v Funk, 222-1222; 271 NW 204; 110 ALR 1415

Foreign employer—adjudication on registered mail service—due process. The workmen's compensation act, in the absence of a statutory rejection thereof, becomes a part of a contract of employment which is performable by the employee wholly within this state, and entered into between a resident employee of this state and a foreign nonresident employer doing business in this state without a state permit; but in case the employee dies from an injury compensable under said act, the industrial commissioner acquires no jurisdiction to determine and adjudicate the compensation due on account of said death by simply sending, by registered mail, notices of said proceedings to said employer in said foreign state, tho, concededly, the addressee received said notices. An adjudication on such service does not constitute due process.

Elk River Co. v Funk, 222-1222; 271 NW 204; 110 ALR 1415

1465 Judgment by district court on award.

Discussion. See 11 ILR 182—Nature of award

Judgment on agreement—time limit. The two-year statute of limitation for instituting original proceedings for compensation under the workmen's compensation act has no application whatever to proceedings instituted in the district court to obtain judgment on a valid agreement as to compensation, even tho such proceedings were instituted more than two years after the agreement was executed and approved.

Biggs v Bank, 218-48; 254 NW 331

Lost memorandum of agreement—procedure. In a proceeding to obtain judgment on a lost memorandum of agreement relative to compensation the said memorandum, if found after the record is closed, may yet be made a part of the record, with the consent of the court, by proper amendment to the pleadings.

Biggs v Bank, 218-48; 254 NW 331

CHAPTER 72

COMPENSATION LIABILITY INSURANCE

1467 Insurance of liability required.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op May 19, '39

Primary liability of employer. The employer is primarily liable for the payment of the compensation provided by the workmen's compensation act, irrespective of any agreement which the dependent may enter into with the employer's insurer.

Biggs v Bank, 218-48; 254 NW 331

1468 Notice of failure to insure.

Neglect to insure liability—effect. The neglect of an employer specifically to reject the workmen's compensation act in the manner provided, automatically and conclusively places such employer under said act; and his neglect to insure his liability does not take him out from under said act.

Van Gorkom v O'Connell, 201-52; 206 NW 637

1475 Policy clauses required.

President excluded from coverage. A policy of insurance which simply agrees to pay the employees of the insured such sums as may become due them under the workmen's compensation act of this state does not embrace the corporate president of the insured or confer any right on him, even tho it provides, by way of a rider, that the salary of the president "shall be subject to a premium charge at the rate applicable to the hazard to which such officer is exposed".

Reason: No compensation for injuries can accrue, under said act, to the president of a corporation even tho he be deemed an "employee" under said rider.

Maryland Cas. v Dutch Mill, 220-646; 262 NW 776

1479 Employer failing to insure.

Neglect to insure liability—effect. The neglect of an employer specifically to reject the workmen's compensation act automatically and conclusively places such employer under said act.

Van Gorkom v O'Connell, 201-52; 206 NW 637

Employer's failure to insure liability—employee's option—presumption. In workmen's compensation case where employer fails to insure his liability, as required under Iowa law, thereby giving employee election to proceed under the act or collect damages at common law, election to proceed under act will be presumed in absence of filing of his election within required time.

Severson v Hanford Air Lines, 105 F 2d, 622

1480 Manner of election—failure to elect.

Employer's failure to insure liability—employee's option—presumption. In workmen's compensation case where employer fails to insure his liability, as required under Iowa law, thereby giving employee election to proceed under the act or collect damages at common law, election to proceed under act will be presumed in absence of filing of his election within required time.

I MASTER AND SERVANT RELATION

The relationship—test. The test of the re-relationship between employer and employee is the right of the employer to exercise control of the details and method of performing the work.

State v Ritholz, 226-70; 283 NW 268; 121 ALR 1450

The relation—servant (?) or independent contractor (?)—test. One who is employed to do a certain work is a servant of the employer and not an independent contractor, when he—the one doing the work—is subject to the direction and control of the employer as to the details and method to be followed in the performance of the work. So held as to one operating an automobile oil truck, on commission.

Lembke v Fritz, 223-261; 272 NW 300

Independent contractor—test. If, as to the result, and in the employment of the means, one acts entirely independent of the master, he must be regarded as an independent contractor, and not an employee.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Independent contractor—burden of proof. One who claims that labor and services accepted by him were performed by an independent contractor has the burden to prove such claim.

Buescher v Schmidt, 209-300; 228 NW 26

Window washer as independent contractor. A party who is employed to clean windows at his own chosen time, and with his own means and appliances, is an independent contractor, and not a servant.

Aita v Beno Co., 206-1361; 222 NW 386; 61 ALR 351; 1 NCCA (NS) 257

The relation—when question of law. When the relationship of parties is fixed by a written contract, the question whether they occupy the relation of master and servant (employer and employee) is one of law to be determined by the court and not one of fact to be determined by the jury.

Page v Koss Con. Co., 215-1388; 245 NW 208

Breach by duty—failure to discharge—effect. Principle recognized that, tho an employer, by continuing the employment after knowledge of the breach of duty by the servant, is deemed thereby to waive his right to discharge, yet he is not thereby deemed to waive the breach of duty.

Durr v Clear Lake Park Co., 205-279; 218 NW 54

Private earnings of servant—right of master. Principle recognized that a master is not entitled to the earnings of his servant for work performed by the servant outside his employment hours and for parties other than the master.

Mayberry v Newell, 200-458; 204 NW 413

Casual employment—“extra” help—character of work. An employment in a labor-embodying business, when the employment embraces the hazards incident to the business, is not rendered “casual” by the mere fact that the employment was for a few days only, and was occasioned by the taking on of “extra” help, owing to an unforeseen accumulation of work.

Eddington v Telephone Co., 201-67; 202 NW 374

Subrelationship—dual independent contractors. Where the primary contractor on a highway improvement sublets the hauling to a second party, and retains no substantial control over said second party except in case of the latter's default, and where said second party in turn sublets to a third party under contract terms substantially similar in effect, neither said third party nor his employees are employees either of said primary contractor, or of said second party.

Page v Koss Con. Co., 215-1388; 245 NW 208

Traveling salesman—employee (?) or independent contractor (?). A salesman who, under a contract with a dealer in goods, travels at his own expense, and when and where he pleases in a prescribed territory in quest for orders for goods to be filled by the dealer, and who receives his compensation solely in the form of commissions on sales effected by him through his own exclusive means and methods, is, within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act, an “independent contractor” and not an “employee” of the said dealer in the goods.

Arne v Western Silo Co., 214-511; 242 NW 539

Oil company and filling station operator—directing verdict. In an action to recover from an oil company for injuries allegedly caused by operator of company's filling station, evidence that operator conducted the station before approval of lease just as if it had been accepted, that he bought merchandise for cash from this company and others and kept the profits, that he received no remuneration from company, that altho company suggested things to help him, it exercised no supervision, that he took out state permits in own name, and personally arranged for utility service, failed to establish relation of employer and employee. Hence company's motion for directed verdict should have been sustained.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Licenses—“employers' association”. Articles of incorporation and the course of business carried on thereunder reviewed, and held to constitute an “employers' association”, within the meaning of §1546-a1, C., '27 [§1546.1, C., '39], as amended.

Employment Bur. v State Emp. Agency Com., 209-1046; 229 NW 677

II INTERFERENCE WITH THE RELATION BY THIRD PARTIES

Third person procuring discharge. A person who voluntarily executes an assignment of his wages may not predicate damages against the assignee on the fact that, when the assignee brought the assignment to the attention of the employer, the employer discharged the assignor.

Hutchins v Jones Piano Co., 209-394; 228 NW 281

III MASTER'S LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO SERVANT

(a) IN GENERAL

Negligence—reasonable care—test. If, in the performance of his duties, the master has exercised that degree of care ordinarily exercised by other reasonably prudent persons acting under the same or similar circumstances, he has met the standard of care the law requires and it cannot be said he is guilty of negligence.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Workmen's compensation act—original action for damages—jurisdiction. The district court has no jurisdiction to try and determine an original action against an employer for damages consequent upon the alleged negligence of the employer, resulting in the death of an employee, when both the employer and the employee are under the terms and conditions of the workmen's compensation act.

Hlas v Quaker Oats Co., 211-348; 233 NW 514

Negligence—proximate cause of injury—when jury question. Whether certain negligence was the proximate cause of a certain injury is always a jury question when different minds might reasonably reach different conclusions.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

Injuries to servant—scope of employment—jury question. The scope of a servant's duties is to be determined by what he was employed to perform, and by what, with knowledge and approval of his master, he actually did perform. Evidence held to present a jury question whether a general farm hand was, at the time of his injury, within the scope of his employment.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

Duty to prevent injury. A farmer is under duty to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to his servant. Evidence reviewed and held, the failure of the farmer to throw a harvesting machine out of gear under certain circumstances presented a jury question on the issue of negligence.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

Independent contractor as invitee—known danger revealed—reasonable care rule. Person employing an independent contractor to put steam pipes in downspouting owes only the duty to such invitee to use reasonable care for his safety, and to warn the contractor as to defects or dangers known to the employer and not apparent to the contractor. The employer is not responsible to the contractor for injuries from defects that the contractor knew of or, in the exercise of ordinary care, ought to have known of.

Gowing v Field Co., 225-729; 281 NW 281

Negligence—causal connection with injury necessary—no conjecture and speculation in verdict. There must be causal connection when an injury is caused by falling from a fire escape because of an alleged defect in the top step. When the allegation is not substantiated by the evidence any more than by the plaintiff's testimony stating that "something moved", that he "caught his heel on the step", it would be mere conjecture and speculation to base a verdict thereon, and verdicts must rest on something more substantial.

Gowing v Field Co., 225-729; 281 NW 281

Failure of duty by employer. It is an implied term of the servant's contract of employment that he assume the risk which naturally pertains to his work, but he is under no contract or legal obligation to assume any risk which is occasioned by a failure of duty on the part of his employer.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Contract assumption by employer—effect. An agreement between an employer and an employee that the employer will assume all risk incident to the performance of a named piece of work is valid, yet it does not embrace an injury which results from the employee's own negligence; and especially is this true when the contract sprang from a contemplated danger which never in fact existed.

Rork v Klein, 206-809; 221 NW 460; 60 ALR 469

Charitable institution—nonliability to beneficiaries for employees' negligence. Tho as between benefactor and beneficiary, an institution conducted solely for doing charity may not be liable for the negligence of its employees to a person receiving the benefits of that charity, however, a WPA worker doing work on the premises of a Y.M.C.A. is not a beneficiary of the charitable work of the institution so as to be within this rule.

Andrews v Y.M.C.A., 226-374; 284 NW 186; 5 NCCA (NS) 335

Charitable institution liable to strangers, invitees, or employees. Public policy has never demanded nor has the legislature adopted any immunity to charitable institutions from liability to strangers, invitees, or employees arising because of negligence of the servants of such institutions, and the court will not grant such immunity.

Andrews v Y.M.C.A., 226-374; 284 NW 186; 5 NCCA (NS) 335

Employee injured by falling derrick—evidence—directed verdict. Evidence that employee engaged in tearing down silo was injured when derrick fell on him did not warrant submission of case to jury on issues of employer's negligence, negligence of fellow servant, and assumption of risk, where the employee was acting on the request of fellow servant or limited vice-principal in charge of the work, where steel pins which gave way were of harder steel than that blacksmiths ordinarily use and were of a type successfully used on derrick in the past, but were not scientifically tested for tensile strength or secured from a manufacturer.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Painting schoolhouse as governmental act—scope of nonliability. A school district in causing its schoolhouse or the rooms thereof to be painted must be deemed as engaged in a governmental function with complete exemption from liability for negligence in so doing. So held where it was urged that the district had impliedly contracted to furnish the workman a "safe place" in which to work.

Ford v School Dist., 223-795; 273 NW 870

(b) PLACE OF WORK, TOOLS AND APPLIANCES

No warranty by master—reasonable care only. In no event is a master held to warrant or insure the servant's safety, but he is held to the exercise of reasonable care to eliminate those elements of danger to the life and limb of the servant which are not the usual and natural incidents of the service when the master has exercised reasonable care.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Defective appliance—assumption of risk. Where a farmer and his employee both know that an appliance designed to throw a tractor out of gear is defective, and the employee is under no duty to repair the defect, the act of the employee in continuing to use the defective appliance does not constitute an assumption of the risk attending such use.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

Safe tools and place to work—reasonable care required. A master is required to exercise reasonable care to furnish reasonably safe tools, appliances, and instrumentalities for use in the work which the servant is expected to perform and the same degree of care in furnishing a reasonably safe place in which to work.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Long use of defective machinery. A farm employee who bases his action for damages on the claim that his employer furnished him a machine with a defective shifting gear with which to perform his work, signally fails to sustain his action when the evidence shows, without question, that the machine and said device thereon had been long used by the employee, and had never, prior to the accident in question, disclosed to anyone any defect.

Degner v Anderson, 213-588; 239 NW 790; 39 NCCA 417

Promise to repair defective equipment—effect. The master's promise to repair a defective instrumentality authorizes the servant to continue its use for a reasonable time without assuming the risk attending such use unless the danger is so imminent that a reasonably prudent person would not continue such use.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229; 34 NCCA 67; 39 NCCA 424

Failure to warn employee. An employer is not negligent in failing to warn an experienced farm hand of the danger of going in front of a team of horses when the employee had full knowledge of the temperamental condition of the team.

Hansen v Jensen, 204-1063; 216 NW 677; 39 NCCA 431

Implied contract to furnish "safe place". A school district in causing its schoolhouse or the rooms thereof to be painted must be deemed as engaged in a governmental function with complete exemption from liability for negligence in so doing. So held where it was urged that the district had impliedly contracted to furnish the workman a "safe place" in which to work.

Ford v School Dist., 223-795; 273 NW 870

Insufficient instructions. Instructions to the effect that an employee may not recover damages sustained or resulting from the ordinary and inherent hazards and dangers of an employment, are wholly insufficient to submit the pleaded and supported defensive issue that plaintiff had knowledge of the defects in the instrumentalities used by him, and of the deficiencies and faults in the methods of using such instrumentalities, and that he fully appreciated the danger which might arise therefrom.

McClary v Railway, 209-67; 227 NW 646

Vice-principal's obligation. Evidence held to warrant conclusion that owner of apparatus used to tear down silo, and who was actively engaged in such work, was a fellow servant; and, if he were a vice-principal, he was such only to the extent of being required to furnish plaintiff proper equipment and a safe place to work. The mere fact that one employee has authority over others does not make him a vice-principal or superior so as to charge the master with his negligence.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Vicious and runaway team. Evidence held insufficient to establish that a team of horses in question were vicious and addicted to running away.

Hansen v Jensen, 204-1063; 216 NW 677

III MASTER'S LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO SERVANT—continued

(b) PLACE OF WORK, TOOLS, ETC.—concluded

Appliance on tractor. A farmer must furnish his employee with a reasonably safe machine with which to perform work. Whether an appliance on a tractor designed to throw the tractor out of gear was reasonably safe, held, under the evidence, a jury question.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785; 39 NCCA 422

Injury from corn shredder—directing verdict. Directing a verdict is proper against a plaintiff, a farm machinery mechanic and salesman, seeking recovery for an injury sustained when his hand was caught in a corn shredder, which had been gratuitously loaned by defendant to a neighbor on whose farm plaintiff was operating the machine, the evidence showing plaintiff was an adult familiar with such machinery and in full possession of his faculties, and that there was no negligence attributable to defendant.

Davis v Sanderman, 225-1001; 282 NW 717

Loose rug on polished floor. The maintenance in the doorway between the dining room and hallway of an ordinary home, and on the polished hardwood floor thereof, of a 3 foot by 6 foot Persian rug with ribbed under-surface but without floor fastenings of any kind, cannot, as a matter of law, as to one who for years has been familiar with said home and the furnishings thereof, be deemed a violation by the householder of his duty to furnish his domestic servant a reasonably safe place in which to work.

Nelson v Smeltzer, 221-972; 265 NW 924

(c) METHOD OF WORK, RULES AND ORDERS

Scope of servant's duties. The scope of a servant's duties is to be determined by what he was employed to perform, and by what, with knowledge and approval of his master, he actually did perform. Evidence held to present a jury question whether a general farm hand was, at the time of his injury, within the scope of his employment.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

Failure to warn employee. An employer is not negligent in failing to warn an experienced farm hand of the danger of going in front of a team of horses when the employee had full knowledge of the temperamental condition of the team.

Hansen v Jensen, 204-1063; 216 NW 677; 39 NCCA 431

Elevator operator violating instructions. When, in order to make repairs, a WPA carpenter descended to the bottom of an elevator shaft in a Y.M.C.A. while the superintendent of the building assisted him, and when the superintendent had twice repeated an instruction to the elevator operator in the presence of the carpenter that the elevator was not to go below the first floor, the carpenter, who died because the elevator descended on him, was not required to anticipate that the elevator operator would negligently violate the instructions. Under these facts, contributory negligence was a jury question.

Andrews v Y.M.C.A., 226-374; 284 NW 186

Employee acting on request of fellow servant. Evidence that employee engaged in tearing down silo was injured when derrick fell on him did not warrant submission of case to jury on issues of employer's negligence, negligence of fellow servant, and assumption of risk, where the employee was acting on the request of fellow servant or limited vice-principal in charge of the work, where steel pins which gave way were of harder steel than that blacksmiths ordinarily use and were of a type successfully used on derrick in the past, but were not scientifically tested for tensile strength or secured from a manufacturer.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

Operation of truck. Evidence reviewed and held quite insufficient to establish a "rule" as to where trucks should be operated in the course of paving operations.

Hedberg v Lester, 222-1025; 270 NW 447

(d) FELLOW SERVANTS

"Vice-principal" or "fellow servant"—master's liability. Evidence held to warrant conclusion that owner of apparatus used to tear down silo, and who was actively engaged in such work, was a fellow servant; and, if he were a vice-principal, he was such only to the extent of being required to furnish plaintiff proper equipment and a safe place to work. The mere fact that one employee has authority over others does not make him a vice-principal or superior so as to charge the master with his negligence.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

(e) ASSUMPTION OF RISK

Assumption of risk. Principle reaffirmed that an employee does not assume the risk of his employer's negligence.

Nelson v. Smeltzer, 221-972; 265 NW 924

Assumption of risk defined. It is an implied term of the servant's contract of employment that he assume the risk which naturally pertains to his work, but he is under no contract or legal obligation to assume any risk which is occasioned by a failure of duty on the part of his employer.

Rehard v Miles, 227-1290; 284 NW 829; 290 NW 702

"Volenti non fit injuria" defined. The maxim "volenti non fit injuria" means: "That to which a person assents is not esteemed in law an injury" or "He who consents cannot receive an injury."

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

Lack of knowledge. An injured party may not be held to assume the risk of a defect of which he had no knowledge.

Dahna v Fun House, 204-922; 216 NW 262

Contract assumption by employer—effect. An agreement between an employer and an employee that the employer will assume all risk incident to the performance of a named piece of work is valid, yet it does not embrace an injury which results from the employee's own negligence; and especially is this true when the contract sprang from a contemplated danger which never in fact existed.

Rork v Klein, 206-809; 221 NW 460; 60 ALR 469

Long use by employee. A farm employee who bases his action for damages on the claim that his employer furnished him a machine with a defective shifting gear with which to perform his work, signally fails to sustain his action when the evidence shows, without question, that the machine and said device thereon had been long used by the employee, and had never, prior to the accident in question, disclosed to anyone any defect.

Degner v Anderson, 213-588; 239 NW 790; 39 NCCA 417

Promise of betterment — effect. The master's promise to repair a defective instrumentality authorizes the servant to continue its use for a reasonable time without assuming the risk attending such use, unless the danger is so imminent that a reasonably prudent person would not continue such use.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229; 34 NCCA 67; 39 NCCA 424

Appliance on tractor. Where a farmer and his employee both know that an appliance designed to throw a tractor out of gear is defective, and the employee is under no duty to repair the defect, the act of the employee in continuing to use the defective appliance does not constitute an assumption of the risk attending such use.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785

Riding unshod horse. A farm employee assumes the danger of riding an unshod horse over frozen and slippery ground at the direction of the employer when he is experienced in farm work and knows of and fully appreciates the said danger.

Laws v Richards, 210-608; 231 NW 321; 39 NCCA 431

Injury from borrowed corn shredder. A person supplying a chattel for another's use, and who derives some beneficial interest therefrom, must use reasonable care to discover, and is liable for, unreasonable risks due to the condition or disrepair of the chattel or its unfitness or inadequacy for the purpose for which supplied. The user assumes only such risks as are not known and not discoverable by the supplier using ordinary care. Rule applied to corn shredder loaned to neighbor and in which shredder a person injured hand.

Davis v Sanderman, 225-1001; 282 NW 717

(f) CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF SERVANT

Departure of employee from zone of service—burden of proof. An employee who voluntarily steps outside the zone of his specific employment and voluntarily engages in a work in which the employer is engaged, and is injured, must, in an action for damages, prove his own freedom from contributory negligence. (§11210, C., '24.)

Tellier v Davenport, 203-1012; 213 NW 565

Mitigation of damages. In an action by an employee against his employer for damages consequent on the negligence of the employer, the contributory negligence of the employee may be pleaded by the employer in mitigation, only, of damages.

Bell v Brown, 214-370; 239 NW 785; 34 NCCA 68

Mitigation of damages. The court may very properly instruct the jury that a master must establish his plea of contributory negligence on the part of his servant by a preponderance of the evidence, and that such plea, if so established, is available to the master only in mitigation of damages.

Oestereich v Leslie, 212-105; 234 NW 229; 34 NCCA 67

Walking down fire escape carrying tools. A plumber, an independent contractor, who attempts the acrobatic feat of walking down a steep, but ordinarily safe, fire escape as if it were a stairway, with his hands full of wrenches and a length of pipe, or, while balancing on one heel, attempts to swing his body around while his hands were so employed, has assumed the risk arising from such conduct and must be held, as a matter of law, to have contributed to his injuries, if he falls.

Gowing v Field Co., 225-729; 281 NW 281

Failure to observe rear—negligence per se. The foreman of a paving outfit is guilty of negligence per se in walking along the unpaved portion of a rough road for a distance of some 200 feet without making any observations to his rear for trucks which he knew were being backed along said road and in his immediate direction at the rate of one truck each 90 seconds.

Hedberg v Lester, 222-1025; 270 NW 447

IV LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS

Liability basis—breach of duty not employment relationship. Every case which allows recovery against a servant can be based not upon any relationship growing out of the employment but upon the fundamental proposition that the servant violated some duty that he owed to the person injured. It may be an act of misfeasance, nonfeasance, or malfeasance.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Exoneration of servant exonerates master. A master cannot be held liable for an injury solely on the ground of the negligence of his servant, when the jury wholly exonerates the servant from any negligence.

Hall v Miller, 212-835; 235 NW 298

Departure of servant from zone of service—effect. When the range or zone of service of an employee embraced the taking of a truck to a place of storage for the night, the act of the employee in temporarily using the truck for his own personal use will not per se absolve the employer from liability for a negligent act by the employee occurring after the employee had resumed his duty to take the truck to its storage place, and while he was pursuing a proper route in the immediate vicinity thereof.

Orris v Tolerton & Warfield Co., 201-1344; 207 NW 365; 25 NCCA 549; 34 NCCA 192, 213

Abandonment of employment—jury question. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a servant had temporarily abandoned his employment and had not returned thereto at the time of the commission by him of an alleged negligent act.

Heintz v Iowa Packing Co., 222-517; 268 NW 607

Master and servant—loaning servant to another. A utility corporation, seeking to set its transmission poles along a public highway, is not responsible for the acts of its employees in assisting the county highway engineer, under his absolute direction and control, in finding a lost section corner which, when found, enables the engineer, first, to locate the lines of the highway, and second, the line of the poles.

Swartzwelter v Util. Corp., 216-1060; 250 NW 121; 34 NCCA 471

Mere employee of tort-feasor—nonliability. The mere employee of a tort-feasor is not necessarily liable for the damage resulting from the tort. So held in an action by the lessee of coal lands for damages consequent on the wrongful removal of coal by the owner of the leased land.

Hartford Coal Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 263 NW 269

Municipal corporation employees personally liable for torts—governmental immunity denied. A governmental employee committing a tortious act which causes injury to another in violation of a duty owed to the injured person, becomes, as an individual, personally liable in damages therefor. (Hibbs v School Dist., 218-841, overruled.)

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Shirkey v Keokuk County, 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Doherty v Edwards, 226-249; 284 NW 159

Municipal corporations—nonliability for employee's tort—respondent superior—exception. The exemption accorded counties and other governmental bodies and their officers from liability for torts growing out of the negligent acts of their agents or employees is a limitation or exception to the rule of respondent superior, and in no way affects the fundamental principle of torts that one who wrongfully inflicts injury upon another is individually liable to the injured person.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

County's nonliability. Neither a county, as a quasi corporation, nor its board of supervisors is liable for the negligence of its employee in operating after dark a road maintainer without lights on the left-hand side of a highway, and in an action by a motorist who sustained injuries on account of such negligence, demurrers to the petition by the county and its board of supervisors were properly sustained.

Shirkey v Keokuk County, 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Admissions—by employee—competency. Admissions by an employee may be competent evidence against such employee while wholly incompetent against the employer.

Glass v Ice Cr. Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

Oil company and filling station operator—liability. In an action to recover from an oil company for injuries allegedly caused by operator of company's filling station, evidence that operator conducted the station before approval of lease just as if it had been accepted, that he bought merchandise for cash from this company and others and kept the profits, that he received no remuneration from company, that altho company suggested things to help him, it exercised no supervision, that he took out state permits in own name, and personally arranged for utility service, failed to establish relation of employer and employee. Hence company's motion for directed verdict should have been sustained.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Trademark signs displayed— independent dealer's status not affected. In an action for injuries caused by alleged negligence of filling station operator, the fact that trademark signs of defendant oil company were displayed did not estop it from claiming that it was not the owner of filling station business and that operator was not employee of company, it being a matter of common knowledge that such signs are displayed throughout country by independent dealers.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Partnership—nonpermissible power of partner—burden of proof. A partnership is not bound by the act of one partner in consenting to, and acquiescing in, an act which is subversive of the very purpose of the partnership, unless he who seeks so to bind the partnership establishes the fact that all the partners consented to, and acquiesced in, said act.

Hartford Coal Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 263 NW 269

Measure of damages—wrongful act without profit to wrongdoer—essential proof. The lessee of coal lands who seeks to recover damages consequent on the wrongful act of the owner of the land in taking coal from the land, need not show that the defendant-owner made any profit from his wrongful operations. Plaintiff need only show wherein and to what extent he was damaged.

Hartford Coal Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 263 NW 269

Salesman employee (?) or independent contractor (?). A salesman who, when traveling from place to place about the country in behalf of the business of another party, employs his own automobile, and does so with the implied authority of said other party, cannot be deemed an independent contractor as to said matter of transportation when he is at all times subject to summary discharge by said other party, and also subject to the orders of said other party as to what he shall do, and when and where he shall do it.

Heintz v Iowa Packing Co., 222-517; 268 NW 607

Salesman—use of automobile—authority of servant. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a master had impliedly authorized his salesman, in order to perform his duties, to travel about the country by means of the salesman's individually owned automobile.

Heintz v Iowa Packing Co., 222-517; 268 NW 607

Gravel hauler—employee (?) or independent contractor (?). One who equips himself with, and owns, complete outfits for hauling gravel, and for housing and maintaining himself and family while so working, becomes an independent contractor when he contracts to employ said outfits at his own expense and risk and at a fixed price per yard per mile, and on his own time, in hauling gravel from the gravel pit to such places on the highway as the public authorities may direct; and this is true tho the primary contractor with whom the independent contractor contracts is obligated to load the vehicles at the pit; likewise tho the primary contractor is obligated to the public authorities to furnish all employees necessary to carry out his contract.

Burns v Eno, 213-881; 240 NW 209

Independent contractorship—window washer. A party who is employed to clean windows at his own chosen time, and with his own means and appliances, is an independent contractor, and not a servant.

Aita v Beno Co., 206-1361; 222 NW 386; 61 ALR 351; 1 NCCA (NS) 257

Tripping over mop handle—negligence—jury question. A naked showing that a pedestrian, while walking along a public street, was tripped and caused to fall by a mop handle in the hands of a window cleaner, does not present a jury question on the issue of negligence.

Aita v Beno Co., 206-1361; 222 NW 386; 61 ALR 351; 34 NCCA 775

Borrowing automobile to deliver telegraph message. A telegraph company is not responsible for the act of its messenger in borrowing an automobile with which to make a delivery of a message when the usual and ordinary way of making delivery was by means of a bicycle, and when the borrowing aforesaid was wholly unauthorized by and unknown to the company.

Discussion. See 21 ILR 595—Legislative power to regulate punishment of contempt; 22 ILR 565—Minimum wages; 23 ILR 2—Injunctions—sit-down strikes

Employer-employee relation—test—control of work. The test of the relationship between employer and employee is the right of the employer to exercise control of the details and method of performing the work.

State v Ritholz, 226-70; 283 NW 268

Contracts—legality. A contract between a street railway company and a local labor union representing the employees will not be decreed illegal by a court of equity on the ground that the contract requires the company, against public policy, to maintain two employees on each car (1) when the city has not exercised its undoubted power over such subject matter, (2) when the city is not a party to the action, and (3) when the object of the action seems to be to obtain a declaratory decree only.

Des Moines Railway v Amalgamated Assn., 204-1195; 213 NW 264

Conflict with international union. Equity will not assume jurisdiction to declare illegal a contract between an employer and a local labor union on the ground that the contract is violative of the constitution of the international union to which the local union is subject, when the international union is not a party to the action and is making no complaint.

Des Moines Railway v Amalgamated Assn., 204-1195; 213 NW 264

Unionizing industry—legality. Equity will not assume to pass upon the public policy of a contract between an employer and a local union on the ground that the contract unionizes an entire industry, when no person is complaining that he is deprived of the right to freely dispose of his labor.

Des Moines Railway v Amalgamated Assn., 204-1195; 213 NW 264

Carriage of livestock—strike as defense. The plea that a carrier of livestock was prevented from making delivery because of a strike among stockyards employees must fall when the jury might well find that, if the carrier had exercised reasonable diligence, delivery would have been made notwithstanding the strike.

Riddle v Railway, 203-1232; 210 NW 770

Boycott—intimidation and coercion. Intimidation and coercion are essential elements of boycott. It must appear that the means used are threatening and intended to overcome the will of others and compel them to do or refrain from doing that which they would or would not otherwise have done.

Smythe Co. v Local Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

Peaceful picketing not secondary boycott—no injunction. A threat to do something that a person has a right to do is not a threat in a legal sense. Held that union officials by lawfully placing a neon sign manufacturer on the unfair list, advertising to the public that he was unfair to electrical workers, and peacefully picketing his place of business, were not guilty of such conspiracy as to constitute a secondary boycott, and an injunction will not lie.

Smythe Co. v Local Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

Secondary boycott—essential elements. A secondary boycott may be defined as a combination to cause a loss to one person by coercing others against their will to withdraw from their beneficial business intercourse, by threats that, unless they do so, the combination will cause similar loss to them, or by the use of means as the infliction of bodily harm on them, or such intimidation as will put them in fear of bodily harm.

Smythe Co. v Local Union, 226-191; 284 NW 126

Injunction against labor union—no denial of freedom of speech and assembly. An injunction against officers of a trade union was not void on its face as a denial of the right of freedom of speech and assembly because it prohibited unlawful interference with a company's business, mass picketing, intimidation and coercion, and going upon the company's premises without consent.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Injunction violation by labor union officials. There was no denial of the right of freedom of speech in holding officers of a trade union in contempt of court for violating an injunction, when they counseled, aided, abetted, and assisted in the violation of the injunction.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

State as party to proceedings against violators of injunction against labor union. Where a grave situation existed in the locality at the time, the state had the right to be made a party to proceedings involving an injunction violation by labor union officials by filing a petition incorporating by reference the affidavits of the plaintiff's petition and the injunction upon which it was based, when the state did not seek different and distinct remedies from that asked by the plaintiff.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Proceedings against violators of injunction against labor union—state as party. A continuance requested on the ground that the state had been made a party to proceedings involving the violation of an injunction by labor union officers was properly refused when the petition of the state alleged the same matter and sought the same relief as the petition of the plaintiff.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Evidence of injunction violation—passion and prejudice negated. There was no merit in a contention that a decision finding the defendants guilty of violating an injunction against a labor union was based on passion and prejudice, when evidence showed that they aided and abetted in mass picketing which was unlawful and which was restrained by the injunction.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Violators of injunction against labor union—maximum penalty excessive. Sentences of six months in jail and a $500 fine each, the maximum permitted by statute, when imposed against labor union officials for violating an injunction against the union, were excessive in view of the circumstances.

The position known as "clerk of the state employment bureau" was, in legal effect, abolished by the act of the general assembly in accepting the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act (29 USC, §49 et seq.) and by the subsequent joint adoption by the federal and state governments of a system under which all employees of the state employment bureau were placed on a civil service basis after competitive examination administered by the federal employment service. It follows that he who was holding the said position of "clerk" at the time the position was legally abolished, tho an honorably discharged soldier, was not entitled to have charges preferred and a hearing had thereon.

that the applicant is an unfit person to hold such permit.

Personal injury action—bad-faith defense by vouchee. One who is vouched by a defendant into an action, and assumes exclusive charge of the defense, and in the trial pursues a course distinctly hostile to the defendant and distinctly favorable to himself, may thereby make himself, in legal effect, a co-defendant, and be conclusively bound by the judgment against the defendant. So held where the vouchee, knowing that he was vouched into the action by the defendant on the theory that the negligence charged was primary as to the vouchee and secondary as to the defendant, actively attempted to establish that he (the vouchee) was not negligent and that the defendant was negligent.

Hoskins v Hotel, 203-1152; 211 NW 423; 65 ALR 1125

"Rapid" descent of elevator—testimony.

Dean v Koolish, 212-238; 234 NW 179

Passenger elevator falling—safety device—nonliability elevator manufacturer. The builder of a passenger elevator is neither liable for a personal injury caused by the falling of the car where the safety device, designed to prevent such falling and stop the car, was of an approved pattern in general use and was not shown to have ever before failed to work efficiently, nor where it is disclosed by the accident a device could have been made which would have obviated the particular defect which caused the particular accident, unless it is further shown that reasonable prudence would have discovered this defect and remedied it. Due care, in a legal sense, does not require an uncanny foresight.

Hoskins v Otis Elev. Co., 16 F 2d, 220

Place of danger—elevator operator violating instructions. When, in order to make repairs, a WPA carpenter descended to the bottom of an elevator shaft in a Y. M. C. A. while the superintendent of the building assisted him, and when the superintendent had twice repeated an instruction to the elevator operator in the presence of the carpenter that the elevator was not to go below the first floor, the carpenter, who died because the elevator descended on him, was not required to anticipate that the elevator operator would negligently violate the instructions. Under these facts, contributory negligence was a jury question.

Construction of wharf—paramount right of state. The construction by the state of a wharf below high watermark on a navigable lake (to the bed of which the state has title), in aid of navigation, and without compensation to the riparian owner, is but the exercise of a right and the execution of a trust which is paramount to any right of ingress and egress of said riparian owner.

Peck v Const. Co., 216-519; 245 NW 131; 89 ALR 1132

Wharf—what constitutes. The character of a public wharf in a navigable lake as an aid to navigation is not negated by the fact that the wharf is in good faith so constructed in a circular form that vehicles going upon the wharf may conveniently turn and depart therefrom.

Peck v Const. Co., 216-519; 245 NW 131; 89 ALR 1132

Dams—new high watermark—title of state. The state of Iowa by erecting a permanent dam in the bed of its navigable river, and by maintaining said dam peaceably and uninterruptedly for a period of ten years, legally extends its title to the new high watermark resulting from the erection of the dam; and especially may a private deed holder not complain when his deed, executed after the dam was erected, simply calls for land "up to the river".

Discussion. See 7 ILB 176—Fencing laws

Injunction unallowable. In the absence of a division of a partition fence by agreement of the parties or by proper order of the fence viewers, either of the adjoining owners has the right to build and maintain all or any part of the fence; and an injunction which curtails such right is unallowable.

Sinnott v Dist. Court, 201-292; 207 NW 129

Maintenance—oral agreement. Principle reaffirmed that adjoining property owners may validly bind themselves by oral contract to maintain designated portions of partition fences.

Nichols v Fierce, 202-1358; 212 NW 151

Landowner's right to legal division. In a line fence controversy where the evidence shows there had never been any legal division of fences, the fact that the fences had been maintained by the respective owners of the real estate for many years does not bar the adjoining landowners from having a legal division made at any time they desire, and a finding that there had never been a legal division of fences, held sustained by evidence.

Morrison v Kipping, 227-1146; 290 NW 59

1831 Powers of fence viewers.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 396

Admission in re jurisdiction—effect. An admission of record by a party, of the existence of a fact upon which jurisdiction of fence viewers depends, manifestly renders further testimony of such fact unnecessary.

Gavin v Linnane, 206-917; 221 NW 462

"Controversy"—jurisdiction. Written request by one landowner to an adjoining landowner to maintain his portion of a partition fence is essential, to create a "controversy" and to invest the fence viewers with jurisdiction to act.

Sinnott v Dist. Court, 201-292; 207 NW 129

Nichols v Fierce, 202-1358; 212 NW 151

Township trustees—right to divide fences not limited by property owner's notice. Where a property owner served notice on township trustees that adjoining owners had refused to maintain their share of division line fences, and the adjoining owners claimed no legal division of such fences had ever been made and asked that a division be made, trustees had authority under the statute to make a legal division and were not limited by the notice given by the complaining property owner.

Morrison v Kipping, 227-1146; 290 NW 59

Landowner's right to legal division. 1840 Division by agreement—record.

Landowner's right to legal division. Morrison v Kipping, 227-1146; 290 NW 59

1841 Orders and agreements—effect.

Enforceable oral agreement—statute of frauds. An oral agreement to change a long established boundary fence is enforceable when taken out of the statute of frauds (1) by the mutual taking of a new survey, (2) by the building of a new fence in accordance with the said survey, and (3) by taking possession of the lands inclosed by such new fence.

Cheshire v McCoy, 205-474; 218 NW 329

Unenforceable oral agreement. A naked oral agreement to change an established boundary line is unenforceable.

Stone v Richardson, 206-419; 218 NW 332

1851 Appeal.

Fence viewers—appeal from confirming order. Only questions of law will be considered on appeal from an order by the trial court which confirms the decision of fence viewers.

In re Fence Dispute, 204-1072; 216 NW 673

Triable at law—trial court's findings—conclusiveness. Since an appeal to district court from decision of fence viewers is triable as a law action to a jury, if demanded, the supreme court will not interfere with verdict if there is substantial evidence to sustain it. Hence, where parties waived jury on trial of such appeal, the trial court's decision, supported by sufficient evidence, was necessarily affirmed.

Moore v Short, 227-380; 288 NW 407

Belated presentation of error point. On appeal from an order by the district court in fence-viewing proceedings, the appellant may not, for the first time, present the claim that the orders of the fence viewers relative to a tight fence were erroneous, and that the district court should have corrected the error.

Gavin v Linnane, 206-917; 221 NW 462

Certiorari. Certiorari will lie to review the proceedings of township trustees in acting as fence viewers without jurisdiction of the subject matter, even tho an appeal is provided for in such proceedings.

Municipal corporation—engineer's opinion on construction of approach to sidewalk. A municipality is not bound to construct an approach from street to sidewalk differently because some engineer other than its own thought some other method would be better, so where a pedestrian, who was familiar with such approach, who admitted that there was plenty of room for a pedestrian to pass on meeting two other pedestrians in broad daylight, and who without thought or attention stepped off approach and fell, such pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence precluding recovery for personal injuries.

1905.41 Action for commission.

Brokers and commission contracts generally. See under Ch 420, note 1(XI)

Discussion. See 1 ILB 183—Revocability of parol license

Status as licensee—failure to allege—effect. The failure of a broker in his petition for the recovery of commission to allege his status as a duly licensed broker, is quite harmless (1) when the petition is not attacked because of such omission, and (2) when the evidence, received without objection, clearly establishes such status.

Baehr-Shive Co. v Stoner-McCray, 221-1186; 268 NW 53

Prima facie right to a commission. A licensed real estate broker makes a prima facie showing for the recovery of a commission for effecting a sale of property on proof that he was employed by one of two owners of the property to find a purchaser at a stated price; that the other owner knew of such employment and assisted the broker in showing the property to a prospect obtained by the broker; that the prospect offered to buy at said stated price; that thereupon one of the owners demanded an increased price to which the prospect finally acceded in part and actually bought the property.

Wareham v Atkinson, 215-1096; 247 NW 534

Employment—failure to show agency. A broker is not entitled to recover a commission on the ground that he procured a purchaser for property when he fails to show, expressly or impliedly, any agency to find such purchaser.

Reeve v Shoemaker, 200-983; 205 NW 742; 43 ALR 839

Dispute in evidence—jury question. Evidence that defendant orally agreed to pay plaintiff a commission to assist in the sale of gypsum lands upon which plaintiff held drill plats, that agents of purchaser conferred with plaintiff and examined the plats, coupled with a denial by defendant that plaintiff accepted the offer or assisted in consummating the sale, presents a question determinable by the jury.

Maher v Breen, 224-8; 276 NW 52

Powers of agent—apparent authority. An owner of land who authorizes his agent (1) to contract with a broker for sale of the land and (2) to pay the broker a specified and limited compensation is bound by the agreement of his agent to pay the broker a greater commission when the broker had no knowledge of such limited authority.

Boylan v Workman, 206-469; 220 NW 49

Authority—revocation by death of agent. The authority of a broker to find a purchaser for the owner of property is necessarily revoked by the death of the agent, and this is true when the broker is a partnership and a member thereof dies.

Reeve v Shoemaker, 200-983; 205 NW 742; 43 ALR 839

Agency revocation—nonpleaded issues—non-review. In an action for real estate commission, contentions as to revocation of the agency arising from disposal of the subject matter of the agency and mental incapacity and death of one of the joint principals before the sale by the agent, will not be considered on appeal when the pleadings show no issue thereon but the action is on a contract allegedly personally made with the defendant.

Maher v Breen, 224-8; 276 NW 52

Broker as nonprocuring cause. A broker is not entitled to a commission when he was not the procuring cause of the sale.

Reeve v Shoemaker, 200-983; 205 NW 742; 43 ALR 839

Procuring cause—burden of proof. In an action by a real estate broker for commission he has burden to prove that he was the efficient and procuring cause of the sale.

Donahoe v Denman, 223-1273; 275 NW 154

Establishing "efficient and procuring cause"—presumption not jury question. In an action by a real estate broker for commission on the theory that he was the efficient and procuring cause for a sale, his showing that he was authorized to sell and had contacted a buyer who afterward purchased directly from the owner, raises no jury question but only a rebuttable presumption which defendant successfully rebuts by direct evidence to the contrary.

Donahoe v Denman, 223-1273; 275 NW 154

Finding sustained by evidence—intervening agent negotiating and consummating sale. In a law action by real estate agent to recover commission for negotiating sale of realty, which had been listed with several brokers, where another agent intervenes claiming such commission, and evidence shows both agents were empowered to dispose of land at reduced price, held, evidence sustained finding of trial court that intervening agent was entitled to commission where he had conducted the preliminary negotiations and also consummated the sale. Broker claiming commission must show he was the efficient and procuring cause of the sale.

Armstrong v Smith, 227-450; 288 NW 621

Listing property for sale—several brokers. In an action at law to recover a real estate commission, plaintiff, who was merely influential in bringing about a sale of land which had been listed with several brokers, was not entitled to commission where he never notified owner's agent of his activities and a sale was negotiated and consummated by another agent. The agent who first procured the consent of the purchaser to enter into the contract on terms satisfactory to the seller was entitled to the commission.

Armstrong v Smith, 227-450; 288 NW 621

Land purchaser obtained by real estate agent. Where the defendant had sent circular letters to real estate agents, listing farms for sale and stating the commission to be paid for any farm sold, and the plaintiff obtained a prospective buyer for a certain farm, but the sale was consummated by another real estate agent to whom the commission was paid, the defendant was entitled to a directed verdict in an action to collect the commission.

Santee v Lutheran Society, 226-1109; 285 NW 685

Procuring cause—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a plaintiff broker was the procuring cause of the leasing of premises when the lease was made, not to the individual produced by the broker, but to an unincorporated entity.

Baehr-Shive Co. v Stoner-McCray, 221-1186; 268 NW 53

Contract to find purchaser—tentative offer—effect. The issue whether a broker found a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy the property of his principal is not affirmatively established by proof that the broker found one who made a tentative proposition to purchase, which was specifically dependent on a further investigation as to the legality and probable security of the property—an issue of bonds—which investigation the person making the offer never made.

MacVicar v Paving Corp., 201-355; 207 NW 378

Compensation—when earned. A broker's right to his commission for finding a purchaser attaches when the owner of the property, his principal, enters into an executory contract of sale with the purchaser, even tho the principal sees fit not to enforce the contract, or sees fit to modify it. Evidence held to establish such contract.

Scott v Realty Co., 206-1158; 221 NW 785

Instructions—burden of proof—issues correctly submitted. In a suit for breach of oral commission contract, instructions plainly stating that burden was on plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of evidence (1) the terms of his contract, and (2) that through his efforts a sale was "effected, obtained, and procured", reviewed and held to correctly submit the issues under the pleadings.

Maher v Breen, 224-8; 276 NW 52

Ambiguous clauses in contracts—interpretation. In an action at law to recover real estate commission under a written contract, which provided that commission would be due upon the signing of the agreement to which was added the words, "The commission being due and payable upon the transfer of properties," held, that the added phrase cannot be disregarded as being repugnant to the original provision providing for time of payment, but is interpreted as limiting earlier provision, and the payment of commission is due upon the execution of the contract together with a transfer of the properties.

Mealey v Kanealy, 226-1266; 286 NW 500

Sale by owner. An owner of property may in good faith effect a sale of his own property without liability to a broker with whom the owner has expressly or impliedly listed it.

Reeve v Shoemaker, 200-983; 205 NW 742; 43 ALR 839

Sale by owner. Contract reviewed, and held to obligate the owner of property to pay a commission in case the owner himself sold the property during the period for which the property was listed with the broker.

Milligan Co. v Claiborne, 213-1088; 240 NW 694

Reformation of broker's contract. A court of equity abuses its discretion when it refuses to reform a written contract wherein the owner of property lists it with a broker for sale and binds himself to pay a commission in case a sale is made, even by himself, when it is shown, by clear, satisfactory, and convincing testimony, that the oral preliminary contract which the parties attempted to reduce to writing embraced the definite, mutual understanding that no commission would be payable if the owner made a sale to his then tenant, and that said understanding was inadvertently omitted from said writing. (In this case the owner made a sale to his tenant and was later sued by the broker for a commission.)

Milligan Co. v Lott, 220-1043; 263 NW 262

Compensation—subterfuge to defeat. An owner of property who has contracted to sell to a purchaser found by his broker cannot defeat the broker's right to commission by selling to a third party and having such third party complete the deal with the original purchaser.

Scott v Realty Co., 206-1158; 221 NW 785

Compensation of agent—nondual employment. The fact that different property owners employ the same rental agent to obtain the same tenant does not constitute such a dual employment as to deprive the agent of his compensation from the owner for whom a lease is obtained.

Foley v Mathias, 211-160; 233 NW 106; 71 ALR 696

Quantum meruit—irrelevant testimony. In an action by a broker to recover commission on a basis of quantum meruit, evidence is properly rejected as to the compensation generally received by brokers when they work by the day, the actual evidence received fairly showing that the customary method of employment of brokers was on a commission basis.

Baehr-Shive Co. v Stoner-McCray, 221-1186; 268 NW 58

Broker's claim against intervening broker—evidence warranting dismissal. In an action to recover real estate commission, the dismissal of one real estate broker's claim against an intervening real estate broker was proper under the evidence where no showing was made of any agreement for the payment of a definite amount.

Doebler v Dodge, 223-218; 272 NW 144

No reinstatement of nol-prossed indictment. An indictment against a corporation for maintaining a liquor nuisance, nol-prossed without fraud at the sole instance of the county attorney, on the mistaken assumption that defendant was not a corporation and, therefore, could not be held to answer, may not later be reinstated when it is discovered that defendant is in fact a corporation. (Keokuk v Schultz, 188 Iowa 937, overruled in part.)

1921.092 Violations by members and employees—acceptance of bribe.

Indictment—fatal insufficiency. An indictment which alleges that a member of the Iowa liquor control commission knowingly and willfully permitted a named person unlawfully to possess intoxicating liquors (other than beer), charges no offense under §1921-f92, C., '35, in the absence of an allegation that said possessor was a member, or secretary, or officer, or employee of said commission. The term "such violation" in said section refers solely to violation by members, by the secretary, by officers, or by employees, of the commission.

GENERAL PROHIBITIONS

1922 Interpretation.

Discussion. See 3 ILB 145—Webb-Kenyon Law; 3 ILB 221—State Power; 15 ILR 120—Jones-Stalker Act; 17 ILR 76—Moral turpitude; 18 ILR 22—Volstead Act

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 201

Instructions proper. It is not erroneous to instruct in a prosecution under the intoxicating liquor statutes, in the language of the statute, "that courts and juries shall construe the laws in regard to intoxicating liquors so as to prevent evasions." (State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328 overruled.)

State v Matthes, 210-178; 230 NW 522

Construction of law by jurors. The statutory provision to the effect that courts and jurors shall construe the intoxicating liquor statutes so as to prevent evasions furnishes no justification whatever for instructing the jury to that effect.

State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328

Requested instruction refused. Requested instructions relative to the duty of courts and jurors so to construe the intoxicating liquor statutes as to prevent evasions are properly refused.

State v Dunham, 206-354; 220 NW 77

1923 Definition.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 129, 138, 156, 621, 695

Beer not intoxicating liquor. In prosecution for driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated, the refusal of accused's requested instruction that beer is not an intoxicating liquor held not error.

State v McGregor, (NOR); 266 NW 22

1924 General prohibition.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 92, 201, '34 AG Op 129, 138; '36 AG Op 566

Scope of statute. The words, "for any of the purposes herein prohibited" as employed in §1930, C., '27, embrace all the prohibitions enumerated in this section.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Indictment—surplusage. Under an indictment charging the unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, the allegation that the possession was for certain unlawful purposes is pure surplusage.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

Articles seized on search. In a prosecution for willful and unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, a still seized, together with liquors, during a search of defendant's premises, is admissible over the general objections of incompetency, immateriality and irrelevancy.

State v Matthes, 210-178; 230 NW 522

Search without warrant. One who is shown to be a violator of the law relative to the sale and possession of intoxicating liquors will be accorded no standing in a court of equity in an action by him to enjoin peace officers from picketing his place of business, interfering with his business, or searching his customers without a search warrant.

Dietz v Cavender, 201-989; 208 NW 354

Excusable or justifiable homicide — defense of intoxicating liquors. A person may validly resist an attempt to steal from him intoxicating liquors which are unlawfully in his possession, even tho the said liquor has no value in a commercial sense.

State v Shannon, 214-1098; 243 NW 507

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held ample to present a jury question on the issue of possession of intoxicating liquors; also of a still.

State v Trumbauer, 207-772; 223 NW 491

State v Bamsey, 208-796; 223 NW 873

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Evidence—fatal insufficiency. Evidence that intoxicating liquors were found in the home of the head of a family is insufficient, in and of itself, on which to base a finding that a son, as a member of the family, was in possession of the liquor.

State v Friend, 207-742; 223 NW 546

Opinion evidence. The opinion of a properly qualified witness is admissible on the issue whether a certain liquid is alcohol.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

Liquor exhibits admissible. On a prosecution for bootlegging, intoxicating liquors and the cans containing the same, seized at a house on premises not occupied by the accused, but from which the jury could find he had obtained like liquors the day previous with which to make an unlawful sale, are admissible as circumstances tending to support the main charge.

State v Madison, 215-182; 244 NW 868

Identification of liquors. An exhibit in the form of alleged intoxicating liquors which were seized under a search warrant, when otherwise fully identified, is not rendered inadmissible because the liquors were left for a very brief time with the justice of the peace under circumstances which render very remote the possibility of tampering.

State v Barton, 202-530; 210 NW 551

Failure to identify liquors. Exhibits, e. g., bottles and the contents thereof seized by the officers at the time of making a search of defendant's premises, are not admissible on the trial of the defendant unless they are properly identified and their integrity established.

State v Reid, 200-892; 205 NW 517

Exhibits—excluding evidentiary statements. Properly identified bottles and their intoxicating contents are not rendered inadmissible because the labels thereon contain evidentiary statements when the jury is instructed to disregard such statements.

State v Christensen, 205-849; 216 NW 710

Evidence—empty bottles, etc. On a charge of unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, empty bottles are admissible in evidence when they were seized at the same time and place where other bottles of liquor were seized; likewise, what the accused said to the officers at the time of such seizure.

State v Bryant, 208-816; 225 NW 854

State v Salisbury, 209-139; 227 NW 589

Unlawful "dispensing." Evidence that an accused made known to others the location of a cache of intoxicating liquors, assisted in actually locating it, and thereupon, jointly with the other parties, consumed the liquors, presents a jury question on the issue of "unlawful dispensing" of such liquors.

State v Meyer, 203-694; 213 NW 220

Self-incrimination. The statutory declaration that the finding of intoxicating liquors in the possession of a person under search warrant proceedings, when the liquors have been adjudged forfeited, shall be prima facie evidence that said person was maintaining a nuisance, does not violate the right of said person not to be a witness against himself.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Possession—election between acts. The court need not require the state to elect, on an indictment charging illegal possession of intoxicating liquors, whether it will rely on possession in the defendant's shop or in his nearby chicken coop, the indictment not distinguishing between the different liquors in respect to the time or place of their possession.

State v Christensen, 205-849; 216 NW 710

Possession—futile defense. Justification of possession of one certain bottle of intoxicating liquor will not be justification of the possession of another and different bottle of such liquor.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

Possession of liquor—third conviction—proof of prior convictions unnecessary under guilty plea. Where an indictment charged the defendant with committing the crime of unlawful possession of alcoholic liquor, and that he had been convicted on two previous occasions of liquor law violations, and when defendant pleaded guilty, trial court was under no duty to require proof of former convictions.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 232 NW 728

Possession of still—permissible inference. The finding of a still buried on defendant's premises justifies an inference that the possessor of the premises was in possession of the still, and the court may very properly so instruct the jury.

State v Trumbauer, 207-772; 223 NW 491

Unlawful "possession." The unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors is a misdemeanor.

State v Boever, 203-86; 210 NW 571
 State v Wareham, 205-604; 218 NW 145
 State v Bamsey, 208-796; 223 NW 873

Unlawful possession—corpus delicti. The corpus delicti is established and a jury question presented on the charge of unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, by evidence that the accused, when approached, threw from an automobile in which he was sitting, a bottle of such liquors, but did not break it, even tho there was no evidence that he was operating the vehicle.

State v Kirkman, 206-364; 220 NW 57

Unlawful possession—control of premises—effect. In a prosecution for possessing liquors unlawfully, it is proper to instruct the jury to convict the accused if he willfully and unlawfully had such liquors in his possession, and that in law he had such liquors in his possession if he had possession and control of the building or place where they were kept.

State v Matthes, 210-178; 230 NW 522

Innocent possession—instructions. In a prosecution charging the unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, the court must, without request, instruct on the supported issue whether defendant was consciously in possession of the liquors found on his person.

State v Wheeler, 216-433; 249 NW 162

Innocent possession—instructions. Instructions which, in effect, direct the jury not to convict unless the possession of intoxicating liquors was "willful and unlawful" on the part of defendant, adequately protect him from a conviction in case his possession was an innocent possession—in case he had no knowledge of the presence of such liquors.

State v Matthes, 210-178; 230 NW 522

Unusual quantity in residence. Instructions are unobjectionable when to the effect that the finding of intoxicating liquors in the residence of the accused in an unusual or unreasonable quantity might be sufficient, with all the other circumstances in the case, to justify a finding that such liquors were being kept for sale.

State v Burch, 202-348; 209 NW 474

Time of commission of offense. An instruction justifying a conviction for possessing intoxicating liquors at any time within three years prior to the return of the indictment is unobjectionable, when the indictment, proof, and trial were exclusively centered on one particular transaction occurring during said period.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

Trial—misconduct of jurors. In a prosecution for illegal possession of intoxicating liquors, statements by jurors to other jurors during the deliberation of the jury that defendant "does nothing but bootleg," and "is the king of bootleggers," constitute such misconduct as to require a new trial.

State v Clark, 210-724; 231 NW 450

1927 "Bootlegger" defined.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 92; '34 AG Op 156

"Carrying on person" defined. An indictment for unlawfully "carrying around liquor on the person" is not supported by evidence which simply shows that the accused, when solicited to sell intoxicating liquors, went to an oat bin, dug up a bottle of such liquor, and from such bottle filled another bottle which he sold to the prosecuting witness.

State v Kenne, 200-1239; 206 NW 247

State v Webb, 204-135; 214 NW 568

Purchaser not particeps criminis. Purchaser of liquor from bootlegger held not an accessory or accomplice.

State v McMahon, (NOR); 211 NW 409

Proper indictment. Under §18737, C., '39, an indictment charging the commission of the offense of bootlegging by any and all of the means denounced by §1927 is proper.

State v McMahon, (NOR); 211 NW 409

Indictment—nonessential allegation. An indictment charging the bootlegging of intoxicating liquors need not allege the place where defendant intended to sell the liquors.

State v Bamsey, 208-802; 226 NW 57

Bootlegging—surplusage allegation. In a prosecution for bootlegging by carrying around liquors on one's person, that portion of the information which charges an actual sale may be treated as surplusage.

State v Parsons, 209-540; 228 NW 307

Election between different sales. On a prosecution for strict bootlegging, viz: carrying around liquors with the intent to sell, the state may not be compelled to elect between actual sales shown by it.

State v Dillard, 205-430; 216 NW 610

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held sufficient to establish the intoxicating character of liquors sold, and to identify the accused as the seller.

State v Cambridge, 216-1422; 250 NW 731

Evidence as to the delivery of bottles and money. Evidence tending to show the passing of bottles by the accused to others, and the passing of money from such others to the accused, is admissible on a charge of bootlegging even tho such testimony is somewhat equivocal.

State v Smalley, 211-109; 233 NW 55

Sales as evidence of intent. The element in a charge of bootlegging of intent to sell may be established by showing sales of intoxicating liquors by the accused.

State v Bamsey, 208-802; 226 NW 57

Circumstantial evidence. An indictment for bootlegging may be sustained by circumstantial evidence.

State v Plew, 207-624; 223 NW 362

Evidence—taste or smell of liquor. A witness may be permitted to testify that certain liquor smelled or tasted like alcohol.

State v Eggleston, 201-1; 206 NW 281

State v Ferro, 211-910; 232 NW 127

Conflicting evidence. Conflicting evidence reviewed, and held to sustain a conviction for bootlegging.

State v Weber, 204-137; 214 NW 531

Possession not prima facie evidence of guilt. Under a specific charge of bootlegging, the fact that intoxicating liquors were found in the possession of the accused is not prima facie evidence of his guilt.

State v Bamsey, 208-802; 226 NW 57

Accomplice. A witness may not be deemed an accomplice in the crime of bootlegging from the mere fact that, while riding with the accused, he (the witness) directed the driver of the vehicle to stop at a point where the accused apparently obtained the liquor.

State v Brundage, 200-1394; 206 NW 607

Gifts—nonphysical delivery. The actual physical delivery of the vessel containing intoxicating liquors is not essential to constitute a "gift" of such liquors.

State v Wareham, 205-604; 218 NW 145

Bootlegging—submission of nuisance. On a simple charge of "bootlegging", it is reversible error to submit (along with said charge) the offense of maintaining a nuisance, even tho there be no evidence of the maintenance of a nuisance, and even tho the two offenses have common elements, and closely approach identity.

State v Moore, 210-743; 229 NW 701

Means and motives in effecting sale. It is proper to instruct that, if a sale of intoxicating liquors was in fact unlawful, then the means adopted by the buyer to effect the sale, and his motives, become quite immaterial.

State v Weber, 204-137; 214 NW 531

Limitation of prosecutions—instructions. In a prosecution for bootlegging, it is proper to instruct the jury that the exact date of guilt is not material provided it is shown that the offense was committed "at some time within three years" just prior to the filing of the trial information, even tho the evidence is such that if the defendant be guilty he is guilty as of a definite date.

State v Howard, 223-767; 273 NW 849

Instructions—presentation of particular theory. Comprehensive and correct instructions by the court render unnecessary, in the absence of a request, the submission of defendant's particular theory of the case.

State v Dillard, 205-430; 216 NW 610

Confusion of elements. An instruction which in defining the term "nuisance" (of the maintenance of which defendant is charged) makes elaborate and somewhat unnecessary recital of the statutes relative to "bootlegging" is not necessarily subject to the vice of confusing the jury as to the elements of the offense charged—nuisance.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Submission of unsupported offense. When an offense may be committed in different ways, and there is no evidence of one of the ways, error results from copying the entire statute into the instructions and directing the jury to convict "if the accused did any one of the things as in these instructions explained."

State v Smalley, 211-109; 233 NW 55

Injunction—acts not constituting violation. An injunction solely against acts constituting bootlegging is not violated by the subsequent maintenance by the defendant of an intoxicating liquor nuisance.

Friend v Cummings, 207-1201; 224 NW 510

Nonexcessive judgment. Imprisonment for five months in the county jail and a fine of $600 for bootlegging will not be deemed excessive as to one who deliberately commits the offense with full knowledge of the law.

State v Weber, 204-137; 214 NW 531

Sentence—excessiveness. Sentences for violation of the intoxicating liquor statutes will not be disturbed in the absence of a substantial reason therefor.

State v Bamsey, 208-796; 223 NW 873

1928 Venue.

Offenses partly in county. See under §13451

1929 Nuisance.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 160

Failure to question indictment. An accused who goes to trial without questioning the sufficiency of an indictment may not thereafter raise the question of sufficiency by objections to evidence.

State v Phillips, 212-1332; 236 NW 104

Former jeopardy—necessary identification of offense. Instructions that a defendant may be found guilty of maintaining a liquor nuisance if he committed the offense within three years prior to the return of the indictment will not be deemed to put the defendant on trial for an alleged liquor offense on which the defendant was acquitted within said three years when the specific nature of the latter offense is not made to appear.

State v Kelly, 217-1305; 253 NW 49

Self-incrimination. The statutory declaration that the finding of intoxicating liquors in the possession of a person under search warrant proceedings, when the liquors have been adjudged forfeited, shall be prima facie evidence that said person was maintaining a nuisance, does not violate the right of said person not to be a witness against himself.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Right to possess for own use. The court, in a prosecution for maintaining a liquor nuisance, is fully justified in failing to instruct as to the right of defendant to possess in his own home and for his own use, the liquors which were seized in his home, when defendant in his testimony positively asserted that he did not have said seized liquors in his possession for his own use.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Nuisance—confusion of elements. An instruction which in defining the term “nuisance” (of the maintenance of which defendant is charged) makes elaborate and somewhat unnecessary recital of the statutes relative to “bootlegging” is not necessarily subject to the vice of confusing the jury as to the elements of the offense charged—nuisance.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of maintaining a nuisance.

State v Phillips, 212-1332; 236 NW 104

Facts attending search warrant proceedings. Disputed questions of fact upon the determination of which depends the right of the jury to consider search warrant proceedings on the issue of the defendant's guilt of maintaining a nuisance are properly submitted to the jury for determination.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to support a verdict of guilty of maintaining a nuisance.

State v Heeren, 200-882; 205 NW 498
 State v Burch, 202-348; 209 NW 474
 State v Cahalan, 204-410; 214 NW 612
 State v Tibbits, 207-1033; 222 NW 423
 State v Salisbury, 209-139; 227 NW 589
 State v Slycord, 210-1209; 232 NW 636
 State v Kelly, 217-1305; 253 NW 49

Voir dire examination of juror—permissible range. The act of the county attorney, in a prosecution for maintaining a liquor nuisance, in asking a proposed juror (whose business was transporting beer) whether he would vote to convict the accused if the accused was proven guilty beyond all reasonable doubt, will not, in and of itself, be deemed prejudicial error.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Cruel and inhuman punishment. Sentence of six months at hard labor for maintaining liquor nuisance held not such “cruel and inhuman punishment” as to violate Amendment 8 of the United States Constitution, when the maximum punishment for the offense was one year at hard labor.

State v Gasparia, (NOR); 214 NW 550

Mulct tax—knowledge of owner. The assessment of a mulct tax against property which the owner knows, or has reason to know, is being used as an intoxicating liquor nuisance is strictly in accordance with the statute.

State v Campbell, 204-147; 214 NW 550

1930 Penalty for nuisance.

Attorney's fee. See under §2023
 Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 259, 433; '32 AG Op 160, 231

Scope of statute. The words, “for any of the purposes herein prohibited” as employed in this section embrace all the prohibitions enumerated in §1924, C., '27.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

“Place” defined. A “brush patch” is a place, within the meaning of the statute which prohibits the maintenance of a liquor nuisance in any place.

State v Cahalan, 204-410; 214 NW 612

Election as to “place”. The state, upon making proof of an allegation of the maintenance of a liquor nuisance at a “dwelling house and brush patch”, may not be required to elect as to which “place” it will rely on for a conviction, it appearing that both “places” were on the farm of the defendant and that the “brush patch” was only an additional hiding place.

State v Cahalan, 204-410; 214 NW 612

Location. The state need not, under a general charge of maintaining a nuisance, confine its proof of the keeping of liquors at any particular place.

State v Tibbits, 207-1033; 222 NW 423

Indictment—sufficiency. Information by county attorney for nuisance reviewed and held sufficient.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held sufficient to identify an accused as the keeper of an intoxicating liquor nuisance.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Evidence—search warrant proceedings.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Evidence—liquors seized. Duly identified liquors seized at the place of an alleged nuisance are admissible on the prosecution for maintaining such nuisance.

State v Salisbury, 209-139; 227 NW 589

Confessions—proof of corpus delicti. A naked confession made out of court will not sustain a conviction unless the corpus delicti is otherwise proven. So held as to a charge of maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance, there being no evidence that the accused had ever, directly or indirectly, been engaged in trafficking in such liquors.

State v Thomsen, 204-1160; 216 NW 616

Sale as element. An actual sale of intoxicating liquors is not a necessary element of the crime of maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance.

State v Friend, 206-615; 220 NW 59

Specifying acts constituting offense—effect. An indictment for nuisance which specifies the acts done by the accused limits the state to proof of the specific acts charged. In other words, the accused may rely on the specific acts charged as constituting the offense. So held where the state alleged the use of a building for the manufacture, sale, and keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, and attempted to support the charge by proof of use of a building for repairing a still.

State v Schuling, 216-1425; 250 NW 588

Striking unnecessary allegation. A trial information by the county attorney for maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance in a named county "in the city of Cedar Rapids" may, after the jury is sworn, be amended by striking therefrom the clause "in the city of Cedar Rapids", it appearing that the said clause was a manifest error, and that the accused so knew, and requested no further time for trial.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Nonnecessity to negative exception.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Insufficient evidence. The maintenance of an intoxicating liquor nuisance at a certain place is not shown by evidence that the accused drove his conveyance containing the liquor up to, and stopped alongside of, the building in question with the unexecuted intent of making an unlawful delivery of liquor at said place.

State v Aliber, 204-144; 214 NW 610

Insufficient evidence. A conviction for maintaining a nuisance cannot be sustained on evidence which simply shows that the accused was on the premises of one who was engaged in the unlawful manufacture of intoxicating liquors, and was probably there for the purpose of buying liquors.

State v Marx, 200-884; 205 NW 518

Possession — evidence — fatal insufficiency. Evidence that intoxicating liquors were found in the home of the head of a family is insufficient, in and of itself, on which to base a finding that a son, as a member of the family, was in possession of the liquor.

State v Friend, 207-742; 223 NW 546

Instructions. An appellant may not complain of instructions which are in harmony with his contention that the accused was charged with maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance.

State v Bryant, 208-816; 225 NW 854

Essential instructions. Under an indictment for maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance, it is reversible error for the court in its instructions (1) to quote the statute which prohibits the mere "manufacture" of such liquors, (2) to tell the jury that the defendant was indicted thereunder, and (3) to fail to set out in some manner the elements of the statute prohibiting a nuisance.

State v Reid, 200-892; 205 NW 517

Character and use of utensils—instructions. In a prosecution for nuisance, a requested instruction by the defendant as to the effect of the possession, use, and character of utensils found in defendant's place of business may be so modified as to present both the theory of the defendant and of the state.

State v Barton, 202-530; 210 NW 551

Acquittal—nonbar to injunction. A verdict of "not guilty" under an indictment charging the keeping of an intoxicating liquor nuisance on certain property is no bar to an action to enjoin the same defendant from maintaining a liquor nuisance on the same property, and based on the same transaction on which the indictment was based.

State v Osborne, 207-636; 223 NW 363

See State v Boever, 203-86; 210 NW 571

Former jeopardy. An acquittal on an indictment which charges the maintenance of an intoxicating liquor nuisance does not constitute a bar to an indictment which charges the unlawful possession of such liquors, even though the same liquors may appear as evidence in both cases.

State v Boever, 203-86; 210 NW 571

See Touche v Bonner, 201-466; 205 NW 751

Sealed verdict by agreement. Permitting the jury to return a sealed verdict and to separate and reassemble when the verdict is opened, is proper when the state and the defendant have agreed in writing to that effect; nor is it erroneous for the court to read such agreement to the jury.

State v Ferro, 211-910; 232 NW 127

Nonexcessive sentence. The maximum statutory penalty is not excessive under testimony showing the possession of a large quantity of liquor for immediate distribution.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Reduction—record required. A sentence for violating the intoxicating liquor statutes will not, on appeal, be reduced in the absence of a record which shows a substantial reason for such reduction.

State v Nolta, 205-595; 218 NW 144

Sentence—impairment of defendant's right of appeal. After imposing, in a criminal case, a fine and imprisonment less than the maximum allowable limit, the court does not impair the defendant's right to appeal by embodying in the judgment a provision for the suspension of a portion of the sentence provided the defendant does not appeal.

State v Kelly, 217-1305; 253 NW 49

Punishment-increasing act. A county jail sentence under the latter part of this section for an offense committed prior to the enactment of such latter part is, of course, improper.

State v Marx, 200-884; 205 NW 518

1931 Intoxication punished.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 695

Opinion evidence. Opinion evidence is admissible on the issue of intoxication.

State v Jenkins, 203-251; 212 NW 475

Opinion evidence. A witness may testify whether a person was sober or intoxicated without first stating the facts on which the opinion is based.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Instructions—nonexpert testimony. No instruction need be given in regard to nonexpert evidence in relation to intoxication.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

1932 Penalty remitted.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 92

1936 Labeling shipments.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 92

Scope of statute. The statute which punished the possession of intoxicating liquors which have been transported without being labeled as such liquor applies solely to a case where there is a consignor, a carrier, and a consignee.

State v Corey, 205-1042; 218 NW 957

State v Drain, 205-581; 218 NW 269

State v Wyatt, 207-319; 222 NW 866

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

Information—essential elements. An information which charges the unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors which had theretofore been transported without being labeled, necessitates proof (1) of such prior unlawful transportation and (2) that the accused became party to such transportation by illegally receiving such liquors into his possession.

State v Edwards, 205-587; 218 NW 266

State v Drain, 205-581; 218 NW 269

State v Corey, 205-1042; 218 NW 957

Ignoring material allegations. The court may not, in the trial of a criminal case, ignore material allegations in the indictment or information and thereby place the accused on trial for a higher and more severely punishable offense than is charged in the indictment or information.

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

Former jeopardy. The conviction of an accused in the court of a justice of the peace of the nonindictable offense of transporting intoxicating liquors without properly labeling the same is a bar to a subsequent prosecution based on the same transaction for the indictable offense of transporting intoxicating liquors (§1945-a1 et seq., C., '27 [§1945.2 et seq., C., '39]), the latter offense being necessarily embraced in the former.

State v Purdin, 206-1058; 221 NW 562

1939 Shipments unlawful—exception.

Insufficient evidence. A charge of illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors is not sustained by unquestioned testimony that the defendant was overtaken by the operator of an automobile and was invited to ride, accepted the invitation, and entered the car (in which he had no interest), where he later found a jug of whisky, in which he likewise had no interest, but which he threw out of the car when pursued by peace officers.

State v Duskin, 202-425; 210 NW 421

1945.2 Illegal transportation generally.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 693

Scope of statute. The statutory prohibition against the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors is not now limited to common carriers, as was the case under §2419, C., '97.

State v Casebolt, 201-574; 207 NW 566

State v Duskin, 202-425; 210 NW 421

Scope of statutes. Section 1936, C., '27, and this section discussed and differentiated.

State v Drain, 205-581; 218 NW 269

Illegal transportation—definition. The word "transportation" in the intoxicating liquor statutes is employed in its ordinary sense; that is, to convey from one place to another—any real carrying about.

State v Canalle, 206-1169; 221 NW 847

State v Near, 214-1083; 243 NW 519

Innocent possession—instructions. In a prosecution charging the unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, the court must, without request, instruct on the supported issue whether defendant was consciously in possession of the liquors found on his person.

State v Wheeler, 216-433; 249 NW 162

Description of offense. An indictment for conspiracy to commit a crime need not set forth the various elements of said crime. Indictment held to charge properly a conspiracy to engage in the unlawful transportation and sale of intoxicating liquors.

State v Terry, 207-916; 223 NW 870

Ignoring material allegations. The court may not, in the trial of a criminal case, ignore material allegations in the indictment or information and thereby place the accused on trial for a higher and more severely punishable offense than is charged in the indictment or information.

State v Wyatt, 207-322; 222 NW 867

Tracing movements of accused. On a charge of illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors, evidence relative to the actions and movements of the accused at the time of the transaction in question and to the subject matter of the charge is material and competent.

State v Canalle, 206-1169; 221 NW 847

Evidence—incriminating circumstance. On a charge of unlawful transportation of liquors, evidence is admissible that shortly before the accused was arrested with intoxicating liquors in his vehicle he was seen on a somewhat remote highway and near a cache containing such liquors.

State v Campbell, 209-519; 228 NW 22

Unlawful transportation—evidence. A jury is amply justified in finding that an accused was engaged in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors when the evidence shows that he was found seated in the driver's seat of an automobile standing on a country road, with a loaded revolver by his side, and with 55 gallons of alcohol stored in the car.

State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306

See State v Canalle, 206-1169; 221 NW 847

Evidence—articles found in conveyance. The empty bottles, cartons, corks, and broken bottles taken from the automobile of a party who is accused of unlawful transportation of liquors, are admissible on the trial of said charge.

State v Campbell, 209-519; 228 NW 22

Inadvertent reception of immaterial testimony. On a charge of illegally transporting intoxicating liquors, the reception of evidence as to the search of an automobile of which the accused was not in possession, and as to the finding of such liquors therein, does not constitute reversible error when the evidence was first received because of a misunderstanding of the court as to which automobile was being referred to, and when the court pointedly directed the jury not to consider it.

State v Canalle, 206-1169; 221 NW 847

Former jeopardy. The conviction of an accused in the court of a justice of the peace of the nonindictable offense of transporting intoxicating liquors without properly labeling the same (§1936, C., '27), is a bar to a subsequent prosecution based on the same transaction for the indictable offense of transporting intoxicating liquors, the latter offense being necessarily embraced in the former.

State v Purdin, 206-1058; 221 NW 562

Aiding and abetting. Evidence held ample to justify the court in submitting to the jury the question whether the accused "aided and abetted" the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors.

State v Canalle, 206-1169; 221 NW 847

Proof of corpus delicti. Proof relative to the alcoholic nature of certain liquors reviewed and held ample to show they could be used for beverage purposes.

State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306

Sentence—excessiveness. Sentence reviewed, and held not excessive, in view of the attending circumstances.

State v Van Klaveren, 208-867; 226 NW 81

Imprisonment for cost. There can be no legal imprisonment for the nonpayment of costs in a prosecution for the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors.

State v Van Klaveren, 208-867; 226 NW 81

See Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 522

CHAPTER 95

INDICTMENT, EVIDENCE, AND PRACTICE

1952 Unnecessary allegations.

Indictment held sufficient.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Negating permit. An indictment or trial information for maintaining an intoxicating liquor nuisance need not negative the existence of a permit to the accused.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Negating exceptions. An indictment charging the unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors need not negative the exceptions which would render the possession legal. The accused must allege and prove the exonerating exceptions.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

Criminal prosecutions—indictment—surplusage. Under an indictment charging the unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, the allegation that the possession was for certain unlawful purposes is pure surplusage.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

1954 Former conviction.

Sufficient particularity. A charge of former conviction is sufficient when it distinctly alleges the time and place of such conviction and the record and page thereof where it may be found.

State v Lambertti, 204-670; 215 NW 752

Method of trial. When the statute requires an allegation of former conviction to be inserted in the indictment, the resulting issue and the issue whether the present and former accused are one and the same person are properly submitted to the jury on supporting evidence, even tho the statute makes the record or a due authentication thereof prima facie evidence that a conviction has been had.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Submission of unsupported issue—harmless error. The submission to the jury of the unsupported issue of former conviction and the unauthorized finding by the jury that the accused had been so convicted are quite harmless when the sentence imposed was less than the maximum provided for the substantive and proven offense charged in the indictment.

State v Lambertti, 204-670; 215 NW 752
See State v Bergman, 208-811; 225 NW 852

1956 Record of conviction.

Proof of identity of persons. Identity of names is not sufficient proof of identity of persons.

State v Logli, 204-116; 214 NW 490
State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328
State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306
See State v Franklin, 215-384; 245 NW 283

Evidence—judgment of former conviction. The record of a former conviction of an accused is admissible under an indictment which properly charges such conviction.

State v Lambertti, 204-670; 215 NW 752
State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Permissible proof. Proof of former convictions of violations of the intoxicating liquor statutes, when pleaded in aggravation of a present like charge, is properly proven by the production and proper identification of the original charge, written plea of guilty, and judgment entry of sentence, together with proof that the person therein prosecuted and the defendant presently on trial are one and the same person.

State v Roberts, 222-117; 268 NW 27

1958 Purchaser as witness.

Taste or smell of liquor. A witness may be permitted to testify that certain liquor smelled or tasted like alcohol.

State v Eggleston, 201-1; 206 NW 281
State v Ferro, 211-910; 232 NW 127

1960 Judgment lien.

State as creditor. A plea of guilty in a criminal prosecution does not create the relation of creditor and debtor between the state and the accused, and a transfer of property by the accused after such plea and before the entry of judgment for a fine is not necessarily fraudulent as to the state.

State v Malecky, 202-307; 210 NW 121; 48 ALR 603

1961 Enforcement of lien.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 433

1964 Second and subsequent conviction.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 160

Ex post facto act.

State v Norris, 208-327; 210 NW 922

Successive offenses—scope of statute. The former convictions which this section authorizes the state to plead in aggravation of a subsequent offense must be convictions which have been had since said section became a law.

State v Kuhlman, 206-622; 220 NW 118

Guilty plea—proof of former convictions. After a plea of guilty to a third offense of unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor, to require proof of the prior convictions would be a useless act not contemplated by the legislature.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 232 NW 728

Separate submission. On the trial of an indictment, the issue of former conviction should be separately submitted to the jury.

State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328

Nonpermissible amendment. An indictment which charges a first offense may not be so amended as to charge a second offense.

State v Herbert, 210-730; 231 NW 318

Former conviction—failure of proof—effect. An accused may very properly be convicted of the primary offense alleged in an indictment, even tho the allegation of a former conviction is unproven.

State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328

Unallowable former convictions—proper presentation. When an indictment charges a complete offense, and is, therefore, not demurrable, but pleads unallowable former convictions, the objections to such convictions may be raised for the first time by objections to the proof of such convictions.

State v Madson, 207-552; 223 NW 153

Allegations of former convictions—withdrawal from jury. In prosecution for illegal possession of intoxicating liquor, county attorney's action in seeking to place the federal convictions before the jury, such matters being entirely withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, was not prejudicial to defendant and did not entitle him to a reversal when there was ample competent evidence to sustain the jury's verdict.

State v Caringello, 227-305; 288 NW 80

Unauthorized allegation of former conviction—effect. An unauthorized allegation in an indictment of a former conviction and the reception in evidence of proof thereof constitute reversible error, even tho, on conviction, the judgment imposed was within the limit provided for a first offense.

State v Bergman, 208-811; 225 NW 852

See State v Lambertti, 204-670; 215 NW 752

Review, scope of—waiver. An accused may not, for the first time on appeal, present the objection that the indictment pleads a former conviction which is legally unallowable.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Sentence—excessiveness. Sentence reviewed, and held not excessive, in view of the attending circumstances.

State v Van Klaveren, 208-867; 226 NW 81

1965 Habitual violators.

Sufficiency—former conviction. A charge of former conviction is all-sufficient when it distinctly alleges the time and place of such conviction and the record and page thereof where it may be found.

State v Lambertti, 204-670; 215 NW 752

Judgment of former conviction. The record of a former conviction of an accused is admissible under an indictment which properly charges such conviction.

State v Lambertti, 204-670; 215 NW 752

Method of trial. When the statute requires an allegation of former conviction to be inserted in the indictment, the resulting issue and the issue whether the present and former accused are one and the same person, are properly submitted to the jury on supporting evidence, even tho the statute makes the record or a due authentication thereof prima facie evidence that a conviction has been had.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

1965.1 Duty of county attorney.

Allegations of former convictions — withdrawal from jury. In prosecution for illegal possession of intoxicating liquor, county attorney's action in seeking to place the federal convictions before the jury, such matter being entirely withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, was not prejudicial to defendant and did not entitle him to a reversal when there was ample competent evidence to sustain the jury's verdict.

State v Caringello, 227-305; 288 NW 80

1965.2 Duty of court.

Third conviction—proof of prior convictions under guilty plea. Where an indictment charged the defendant with committing the crime of unlawful possession of alcoholic liquor, and that he had been convicted on two previous occasions of liquor law violations, and when defendant pleaded guilty, trial court was under no duty to require proof of former convictions.

State v Erickson, 225-1261; 282 NW 728

1966.1 Prima facie evidence.

Nonforfeited liquors. An adjudication that liquors seized on a search warrant are intoxicating and have been forfeited is not a condition precedent to the introduction of such liquors against the accused.

State v Boever, 203-86; 210 NW 571

State v Phillips, 212-1332; 236 NW 104

State v Arluno, 222-1; 268 NW 179

Search warrant proceedings. Search warrant proceedings are admissible on a prosecution for nuisance, in order to lay the foundation for the reception in evidence of liquors seized under such proceedings.

State v McGee, 207-334; 221 NW 556

Possession of still and accompanying exhibits. On the issue whether defendant was in possession of a still which was buried on defendant's premises, a coat and letters and documents therein, addressed to the defendant, and buried with the still, are admissible, there being some evidence that the coat belonged to defendant.

State v Trumbauer, 207-772; 223 NW 491

Bootlegging—possession as prima facie evidence of guilt. Under a specific charge of bootlegging, the fact that intoxicating liquors were found in the possession of the accused is not prima facie evidence of his guilt.

State v Bamsey, 208-802; 226 NW 57

Possession—empty bottles, etc. On a charge of unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors, empty bottles are admissible in evidence when they were seized at the same time and place where other bottles of liquor were seized; likewise, what the accused said to the officers at the time of such seizure.

State v Bryant, 208-816; 225 NW 854

Intent to sell—possession as evidence. The possession of intoxicating liquors may be attended by such circumstances as to justify the jury in finding that such possession was with criminal intent on the part of the possessor to sell.

State v Arluno, 222-1; 268 NW 179

Bootlegging—liquor exhibits admissible. On a prosecution for bootlegging, intoxicating liquors and the cans containing the same, seized at a house on premises not occupied by the accused, but from which the jury could find he had obtained like liquors the day previous with which to make an unlawful sale, are admissible as circumstances tending to support the main charge.

State v Madison, 215-182; 244 NW 868

Self-incrimination. The statutory declaration that the finding of intoxicating liquors in the possession of a person under search warrant proceedings, when the liquors have been adjudged forfeited, shall be prima facie evidence that said person was maintaining a nuisance, does not violate the right of said person not to be a witness against himself.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Indictment—unlawful possession. Evidence held ample to establish unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors.

State v Boever, 203-86; 210 NW 571

Injunction—insufficient evidence. The finding on defendant's premises of two partly filled half-pint bottles of alcohol, one in the actual possession of defendant's wife, and one in the actual possession of the defendant's adult son—the defendant not being at the time on the premises—is insufficient to justify the enjoining of the defendant from the maintenance of a liquor nuisance.

Doebler v Cherpakov, 217-86; 250 NW 894

Searches—presumption of legality. Search warrant proceedings, regular on their face and shown to have been issued on a sworn information, and a separate oral examination of the informant, will, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, be presumed legal, even tho the facts or evidence showing probable cause do not actually appear in any of the proceedings leading up to the issuance of the warrant.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Facts attending search warrant proceedings. Disputed questions of fact, upon the determination of which depends the right of the jury to consider search warrant proceedings on the issue of the defendant's guilt of maintaining a nuisance, are properly submitted to the jury for determination.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Unlawful transportation—evidence. A jury is amply justified in finding that an accused was engaged in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors when the evidence shows that he was found seated in the driver's seat of an automobile standing on a country road, with a loaded revolver by his side, and with 55 gallons of alcohol stored in the car.

State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306

Trial—instructions—ignoring lack of evidence. An instruction which ignores the effect of "want of evidence," but directs the jury to determine guilt solely on the evidence "admitted" is not erroneous when it is manifest the instruction was given solely with reference to the effect to be given certain exhibits received in evidence, and without reference to the instruction on reasonable doubt which is not questioned.

State v Madison, 215-182; 244 NW 868

1966.2 Defense.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 218

Indictment — negating exceptions. An indictment charging the unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors need not negative the exceptions which would render the possession legal. The accused must allege and prove the exonerating exceptions.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

Right to possess for own use—failure to instruct. The court, in a prosecution for maintaining a liquor nuisance, is fully justified in failing to instruct as to the right of defendant to possess in his own home and for his own use, the liquors which were seized in his home, when defendant in his testimony positively asserted that he did not have said seized liquors in his possession for his own use.

State v Harrington, 220-1116; 264 NW 24

Criminal prosecutions—possession — futile defense. Justification of possession of one certain bottle of intoxicating liquor will not be justification of the possession of another and different bottle of such liquor.

State v Healy, 217-1155; 251 NW 649

1966.3 Attempt to destroy.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 218

Attempt to destroy. The attempt on the part of a person to destroy a liquid while the officers are searching his premises under a warrant constitutes prima facie proof that the liquid was intoxicating and intended for unlawful purposes.

State v Barton, 202-530; 210 NW 551

Bottle thrown from automobile. The corpus delicti is established and a jury question is presented on the charge of unlawful possession of intoxicating liquors by evidence that the accused, when approached, threw from an automobile, in which he was sitting a bottle of such liquors, but did not break it, even tho there was no evidence that he was operating the vehicle.

State v Kirkman, 206-364; 220 NW 57

Instructions. No necessity exists for instructing as to the presumption which arises from an attempt to destroy liquor which is the subject of a search, when the destruction, if any, was accomplished by the wife of an accused.

State v Dunham, 206-354; 220 NW 77

Nonreversible error — unsupported instruction. In a prosecution for illegal possession of intoxicating liquors, an instruction as to the statutory presumption attending an attempt, in the presence of peace officers, to destroy such liquors—as to which there was no supporting evidence—does not constitute reversible error, it appearing from the record that the defendant was, beyond question, guilty of the offense charged and, in addition, was an habitual violator of said liquor statutes.

State v Roberts, 222-117; 268 NW 27

CHAPTER 97

SEIZURE AND SALE OF CONVEYANCES

2001 Seizure under transportation.

Self-incrimination. The statutory declaration (§1966-a1, C., '27 [§1966.1, C., '39]) that the finding of intoxicating liquors in the possession of a person under search warrant proceedings, when the liquors have been adjudged forfeited, shall be prima facie evidence that said person was maintaining a nuisance, does not violate the right of said person not to be a witness against himself.

State v Bruns, 211-826; 232 NW 684

Forfeiture when no liquor found. There may be a legal forfeiture of a conveyance which has been used in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors, even tho no such liquors are found in the conveyance at the time of the seizure.

State v Coupe, 205-597; 218 NW 346

2004 Release.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 204

Bond not required. No bond is required by one who intervenes and asks for the possession through an order of court after due hearing.

State v Automobile, 204-1155; 216 NW 611

2005 Information.

Nature of proceeding. A proceeding for the forfeiture of a conveyance because of its use in the unlawful transportation of liquors is a special action, and not triable de novo on appeal.

State v Coupe, 205-597; 218 NW 346

2006 Forfeiture.

Non de novo hearing on appeal. A proceeding for the condemnation of an automobile because employed in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors will not be tried de novo on appeal. Whether the statutory presumption of knowledge of such use by the claimant has been negated rests with the trial court.

State v Coupe, 205-597; 218 NW 346

State v Wilson, 212-1341; 237 NW 511

State v Coupe, 215-1308; 245 NW 243; 247 NW 639

2010 Procedure.

Discussion. See 12 ILR 283—Forfeiture of lienor's rights

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 141, 341

Knowledge of unlawful use—evidence. Knowledge, express or implied, that a conveyance was being used in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors, may be shown (1) by statutory presumption, arising from the finding of liquors in the conveyance when it is seized, or (2) by any competent evidence, in the absence of the presumption.

State v Coupe, 205-597; 218 NW 346

Negating knowledge of unlawful use. The fact that a corporate claimant of an automobile did not know that the car was being employed in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors may be deemed established, under some circumstances, by testimony less than the negative testimony of all the principal officers of the corporation.

State v Sedan, 209-791; 229 NW 173

Overcoming presumption. In proceedings to condemn an automobile a claimant under a conditional sale contract does not overcome the statutory presumption that claimant knew of the unlawful use to which the car was being put, by evidence of one of the managing officers of claimant that he possessed no such knowledge, when it appears that other officers and employees of claimant, not called as witnesses, had knowledge of the original sale of the car, of payments made thereon, and of the purchaser.

State v Sedan, 210-714; 231 NW 385

Overcoming presumption. Proof that a claimant to an automobile had purchased for value an outstanding, unsatisfied, recorded, conditional sale contract covering the car, and that claimant had no knowledge of the unlawful use to which the car was being put, entitles claimant to some form of relief.

State v Sedan, 209-791; 229 NW 173

State v Automobile, 214-1088; 243 NW 303

Following trial court method of trial. An appeal will be heard de novo when the parties mutually and without controversy tried the cause in equity in the trial court.

State v Automobile, 214-1088; 243 NW 303

Condemnation of automobile—non de novo hearing. A proceeding for the condemnation of an automobile because employed in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors will not be tried de novo on appeal. Whether the statutory presumption of knowledge of such use, by the claimant, has been negatived rests with the trial court.

State v Chrysler Coupe, 215-1308; 247 NW 639; 245 NW 243

2012 Orders as to claims.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 204; '30 AG Op 134

Unrecorded claim—effect. A claimant of the conveyance under an unrecorded sales contract may not have the conveyance returned to him, and it is quite immaterial that such contract was executed in a foreign state in which claimant's lien would be valid against subsequent purchasers without recordation.

State v Kelsey, 206-356; 220 NW 324
 State v Jennings, 206-361; 220 NW 327
 State v Automobile, 208-794; 226 NW 48

2013 Notice.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 341

2014 Proceeds.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 341

Return to owner—costs. The court may very properly order an automobile to be returned, without the payment of costs, to an intervening owner who had sold the same under a conditional sale contract, and who had no knowledge, directly or indirectly, of such unlawful use by such vendee. The law does not contemplate an order of forfeiture in every proceeding against such a conveyance.

State v Automobile, 204-1155; 216 NW 611

Improper taxation of costs. In a proceeding to forfeit an automobile because used in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors, and in which proceeding an order of forfeiture is entered, costs may not be taxed to an intervenor claiming the property. Costs must be paid from the proceeds of the sale.

2015 School fund.

Value of car—burden of proof. When an enforceable money claim has been established against an automobile which has been employed in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors, the state, if it desires a forfeiture of the car to the school fund in excess of the amount due claimant, has the burden to show the existence of such excess.

State v Sedan, 209-791; 229 NW 173

CHAPTER 98

INJUNCTION AND ABATEMENT

2017 Action to enjoin.

ANALYSIS

- I ACTION IN GENERAL
- II PARTIES PLAINTIFF
- III PARTIES DEFENDANT
- IV PETITION
- V ANSWER
- VI EVIDENCE
- VII TRIAL
- VIII DECREE
- IX APPEAL

I ACTION IN GENERAL

Nonright of private citizen. A private citizen has no right—since the enactment of the liquor control act, Ch. 93-F1, C., '35 [Ch 93.2, C., '39]—to institute an action to enjoin the maintenance of an intoxicating liquor nuisance which affects him only as one of the general body of citizens. (See also §§1921-f2, -f62, C., '35 [§§1921.002, 1921.062, C., '39].

Doebler v Dodge, 223-218; 272 NW 144

Non-good-faith abatement. A non-good-faith abatement of a nuisance prior to the trial of injunction proceedings will not shield the guilty party from an injunction and the consequences thereof.

State v Riley, 202-1213; 211 NW 731
 State v Jones, 202-640; 210 NW 784

Involuntary abatement. The keeper of an intoxicating liquor nuisance may not escape an injunction and an order of abatement and the assessment of a mulct tax on the claim that the nuisance was fully abated prior to the institution of injunction proceedings by the act of the officers in seizing the liquors and paraphernalia and removing the same from the premises under a search warrant.

State v Seipes, 202-1199; 211 NW 719
 State v Tillotta, 202-1217; 211 NW 721
 See State v Deeney, 202-742; 210 NW 909

Acquittal—nonbar to injunction. A verdict of "not guilty" under an indictment charging the keeping of an intoxicating liquor nuisance on certain property is no bar to an action to enjoin the same defendant from maintaining a liquor nuisance on the same property, and based on the same transaction on which the indictment was based.

State v Osborne, 207-636; 223 NW 363

II PARTIES PLAINTIFF

Abatement by private citizen. A private citizen has no right—since the enactment of the liquor control act, Ch 93-F1, C., '35 [Ch 93.1, C., '39]—to institute an action to enjoin the maintenance of an intoxicating liquor nuisance which affects him only as one of the general body of citizens. (§§1921-f2, -f62, C., '35 [§§1921.002, 1921.062, C., '39].)

Doebler v Dodge, 223-218; 272 NW 144

III PARTIES DEFENDANT

Owner of property—knowledge. Irrespective of the knowledge of the owner of property, an order of abatement of an intoxicating liquor nuisance is mandatory whenever the existence of the nuisance is established in a civil or criminal proceeding. (§2032, C., '24.)

State v Deeney, 202-742; 210 NW 909

Owner of property—lack of knowledge. An injunction is properly decreed against the owner of real property even tho such owner had no knowledge of the violation of the law by his tenant.

State v DeLeon, 204-843; 215 NW 973

Owner of property—imputed knowledge. An owner of property may not escape injunction and the assessment of a mulct tax when from the attending circumstances he must have known that his property was being used for the unlawful sale, etc., of intoxicating liquors.

State v Jones, 202-640; 210 NW 784

IV PETITION

Invalidating amendment. A petition to enjoin a defendant from maintaining a nuisance may not be so amended, before appearance and before answer, as to convert the petition into one to enjoin the defendant from operating as a bootlegger (§1927, C., '27), unless the defendant is given due notice of such amendment.

De Witt v Dist. Court, 206-139; 220 NW 70

V ANSWER

No annotations in this volume

VI EVIDENCE

Nuisance. Evidence reviewed, and held ample to sustain a conviction for nuisance.

State v Japone, 202-450; 209 NW 468

Insufficient evidence. Evidence held insufficient to justify an injunction against the maintenance of an intoxicating liquor nuisance and consequently insufficient to justify the levy of a mulct tax on the premises in question.

State v Straka, 209-572; 227 NW 909

Doebler v Cherpakov, 217-86; 250 NW 894

Evidence—analysis of liquors. Error may not be predicated on the fact that, in an action to abate a nuisance, a chemical analysis of the liquors was made at the instance of the court and unbeknown to the other parties to the action.

State v Marker, 208-1001; 224 NW 588

VII TRIAL

Trial at first term—permissive, not mandatory. The provision of the statute (§2021, C., '24) for trial of injunction proceedings at the first term after due service is permissive only—not mandatory.

State v Johnson, 204-150; 214 NW 594

Contempt—procedure—jury trial. A party charged with contempt is not entitled to a jury trial.

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 522

Chemical analysis at instance of court. Error may not be predicated on the fact that, in an action to abate a nuisance, a chemical analysis of the liquors was made at the instance of the court and without the knowledge of the other parties to the action.

State v Marker, 208-1001; 224 NW 588

Identity of persons. In contempt proceedings, the plaintiff must establish that the person formerly enjoined and the defendant on trial for contempt are one and the same person, even tho the names are identical.

State v Franklin, 215-384; 245 NW 283

VIII DECREE

Knowledge of owner. An injunction is properly decreed against the owner of real property even tho such owner had no knowledge of the violation of the law by his tenant.

State v DeLeon, 204-843; 215 NW 973

Notice of decree. A defendant who has been duly noticed into court on an application against him for an injunction against the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors must take notice of the resulting decree against him.

Labozetta v Dist. Court, 200-1339; 206 NW 139

Benscoter v Utterback, 202-762; 211 NW 403

Injunction as adjudication. A duly rendered decree of injunction against a party for the unlawful trafficking in intoxicating liquors is a bar to another action for the same relief against the same party when premises are the same in both cases.

State v Talarico, 202-744; 210 NW 968

IX APPEAL

Incompetent evidence in equity proceedings. It must be presumed on appeal in an equity proceeding that the court disregarded incompetent testimony which was received under proper objection.

State v Dietz, 202-1202; 211 NW 727

IX APPEAL—concluded

Voluntary abatement—effect. The granting of an injunction, notwithstanding the voluntary abatement of the nuisance prior to trial, will not be disturbed on appeal.

- State v James, 202-1137; 211 NW 372
- State v Johnson, 204-150; 214 NW 594
- State v Campbell, 204-147; 214 NW 550
- State v Marker, 208-1001; 224 NW 588

Review. A decree of injunction, abatement, and assessment of mulct tax will not be disturbed on a record revealing proof of the existence of the nuisance.

- State v Dietz, 202-1202; 211 NW 727

2020 Scope of injunction.

Injunction limited to particular premises. A party who is proceeded against only as owner, and is so enjoined as to specified premises, may not be adjudged guilty of contempt on evidence showing the mere existence of intoxicating liquors on other and different premises of which the party is owner.

- Leonetti v Utterback, 202-923; 211 NW 403

2021 Immediate trial.

Trial term permissive. This section is permissive only—not mandatory.

- State v Johnson, 204-150; 214 NW 594

2022 General reputation.

Nuisance—abatement—costs. The circumstances attending the nuisance and the bad reputation of the place may amply justify the court in taxing the costs and attorney fees against the property.

- State v James, 202-1137; 211 NW 372

2023 Attorney fee.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 269; '28 AG Op 259; '30 AG Op 42

Mulct tax—knowledge of owner. Neither a mulct tax nor the attorney fees and costs attending the proceedings can be properly imposed upon real property and against the owner thereof when the owner did not know and did not have reason to know of the existence of the liquor nuisance on his premises.

- State v DeLeon, 204-843; 215 NW 973

2023.1 Limitation.

ANALYSIS

- I PROCEEDINGS IN GENERAL
- II INFORMATION AND WARRANT
- III VIOLATIONS IN GENERAL
- IV CERTIORARI

I PROCEEDINGS IN GENERAL

Evidence—sufficiency. The evidence in contempt proceedings must clearly and satisfactorily establish the guilt of the accused.

- Tuttle v Peters, 206-435; 220 NW 22

Identity of names. In contempt proceedings, the plaintiff must establish that the person formerly enjoined and the defendant on trial for contempt are one and the same person, even tho the names are identical.

- State v Parsons, 206-390; 220 NW 328
- State v Franklin, 215-384; 245 NW 283
- State v Anderson, 216-887; 247 NW 306
- See State v Logli, 204-116; 214 NW 490

Criminal prosecution as bar. A criminal prosecution for a violation of the intoxicating liquor statutes is not a bar to contempt proceedings based on the same act.

- Touche v Bonner, 201-466; 205 NW 751

Nonforfeited liquors as evidence. Intoxicating liquors which are seized upon the premises of a defendant in contempt proceedings are receivable in evidence even tho they have not been "finally adjudicated and declared forfeited."

- Norris v Utterback, 202-686; 210 NW 933

Chemical examination of liquors. The results of a chemical examination of duly identified liquors are admissible on an issue of contempt.

- Harding v Dist. Court, 202-675; 210 NW 900

Contempt—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held to justify a conviction of contempt in violating an injunction against the sale of intoxicating liquors.

- Harding v Dist. Court, 202-675; 210 NW 900

II INFORMATION AND WARRANT

No annotations in this volume

III VIOLATIONS IN GENERAL

Contempt—evidence. Evidence tending to show repeated possession of intoxicating liquors by an accused, and likewise repeated efforts by the accused to destroy such liquors when his place was searched, furnishes ample evidence on which to base a conviction for contempt.

- Benscoter v Utterback, 202-762; 211 NW 403

Acts not constituting violation. An injunction solely against acts constituting bootlegging is not violated by the subsequent maintenance by the defendant of an intoxicating liquor nuisance.

- Friend v Cummings, 207-1201; 224 NW 510

Insufficient evidence. A landlord is not shown to have violated an intoxicating liquor injunction by proof that a bottle of alcohol was found in his house in the effects of a mere roomer to whom it belonged.

- Dykes v Dist. Court, 216-284; 249 NW 163

IV CERTIORARI

Belated presentation of objection. On certiorari to review a conviction for contempt in violating an intoxicating liquor injunction, the petitioner will not be permitted to present the objection that testimony taken in the trial court should not be considered because taken in his absence, and under a stipulation entered into by an unauthorized attorney, such objection not having been presented in the trial court.

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 552

2028 Method of trial.

Use of affidavits. Affidavits are admissible on the trial of a contempt proceeding, in the absence of a demand for the cross-examination of the affiant.

Harding v Dist. Court, 202-675; 210 NW 900

Review—de novo hearing. Certiorari to review contempt proceedings is not triable de novo in the supreme court, and proof of guilt need not appear beyond a reasonable doubt.

Madalozzi v Anderson, 202-104; 209 NW 274.

Review—extent of. A judgment of conviction of contempt in violating an intoxicating liquor injunction, even tho based on sharply conflicting testimony, will not be disturbed on certiorari if the testimony clearly sustains the action of the lower court.

Froah v Utterback, 202-610; 210 NW 791

Benscoter v Utterback, 202-762; 211 NW 403

Harding v Dist. Court, 202-675; 210 NW 900

Review—belated objection. On certiorari to review a conviction for contempt in violating an intoxicating liquor injunction, the petitioner will not be permitted to present the objection that testimony taken in the trial court should not be considered because taken in his absence, and under a stipulation entered into by an unauthorized attorney, such objection not having been presented in the trial court.

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 522

2029 First conviction.

Imprisonment for costs. Imprisonment for nonpayment of costs in contempt proceedings is unauthorized.

Hammer v Utterback, 202-50; 209 NW 522

See State v Van Klaveren, 208-867; 226 NW 81

Fine satisfied by imprisonment. A judgment that an accused in a prosecution for contempt in violating an intoxicating liquor injunction "pay a fine of $300, or in lieu of payment * * * be committed to jail for three months" is satisfied in toto by serving the term of imprisonment.

State v Oliver, 203-458; 212 NW 572

Punishment—liquor injunction—imprisonment to satisfy fine. Section 13964, C., '39, authorizing imprisonment until fine is satisfied, is applicable to judgment imposing a fine as punishment for contempt of liquor injunction under §2029.

Scavo v Utterback, (NOR); 205 NW 858

Recovery of fine—satisfaction by serving sentence. Where judgment in prosecution for liquor injunction violation ordered defendant to pay a fine or in lieu thereof be committed for three months, held, in action on bond given on certiorari to recover the fine, that serving of sentence satisfied the fine.

State v Oliver, (NOR); 212 NW 572

2030 Subsequent convictions.

Excessive fines. A fine of $1,000 and, in default of payment, commitment to the county jail for ten months for the second offense of violating an injunction against the sale of intoxicating liquors is not constitutionally excessive.

Touche v Bonner, 201-466; 205 NW 751

2031 Bootleggers.

Venue. A bootlegger, irrespective of his legal residence, may be enjoined in any county in which it can be shown that he has been bootlegging.

State v Huntley, 210-732; 227 NW 337

Invalidating amendment. A petition to enjoin a defendant from maintaining a nuisance (§2017, C., '27), may not be so amended, before appearance and before answer, as to convert the petition into one to enjoin the defendant from operating as a bootlegger unless the defendant is given due notice of such amendment.

De Witt v Dist. Court, 206-139; 220 NW 70

Evidence to sustain violation of injunction. Evidence of finding in drawer in defendant's room numerous bottles, cans, and jugs containing certain form of liquor held to sustain conviction for contempt for violating bootlegger injunction.

Eden v Dist. Court, (NOR); 228 NW 14

Injunction. Tho the evidence fails to establish the keeping of a nuisance, yet the defendant is properly enjoined from trafficking in intoxicating liquors if the evidence shows that he is a bootlegger.

State v Aliber, 204-144; 214 NW 610

Acts not constituting violation. An injunction solely against acts constituting bootlegging is not violated by the subsequent maintenance by the defendant of an intoxicating liquor nuisance.

Friend v Cummings, 207-1201; 224 NW 510

Constitutionality of injunctive feature.

State v Fray, 214-53; 241 NW 663; 81 ALR 286

State v Howard, 214-60; 241 NW 682

Conflicting evidence. Conflicting evidence reviewed, and held to sustain a conviction for bootlegging.

State v Weber, 204-137; 214 NW 531

2032 Abatement.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 68

Mandatory abatement. Irrespective of the knowledge of the owner of property, an order of abatement of an intoxicating liquor nuisance is mandatory whenever the existence of the nuisance is established in a civil or criminal proceeding.

State v Deeney, 202-742; 210 NW 909
 State v Pickett, 202-1321; 210 NW 782
 State v Riley, 202-1213; 211 NW 731

Abatement by decree. Even tho the owner of the property has abated the nuisance by excluding the offending tenant, yet the circumstances may be such as to justify the court in making assurance doubly sure by making the abatement a matter of decree.

State v James, 202-1137; 211 NW 372

Non-good-faith abatement. An owner of property may not escape injunction and the assessment of a mulct tax when from the attending circumstances he must have known that his property was being used for the unlawful sale, etc., of intoxicating liquors.

State v Jones, 202-640; 210 NW 784

Nonautomatic abatement. The fact that, when an action to abate an intoxicating liquor nuisance is brought, the building is closed and locked, under the levy of a landlord's attachment, does not constitute an ipso facto abatement of the nuisance.

State v Deeney, 202-742; 210 NW 909
 State v Tillotta, 202-1217; 211 NW 721
 See State v Seipes, 202-1199; 211 NW 719

Decree void in part—effect. An order of abatement based on a conviction on an indictment which charges an intoxicating liquor nuisance is void insofar as it directs the closing of premises which are wholly different from those specifically charged in the indictment, even tho they belong to the same party; and an abatement bond executed under threat to immediately close such other and different premises is likewise void.

Davidson v Bradford, 203-207; 212 NW 476

Jurisdiction to order destruction of liquors. The district court, in an action to abate an intoxicating liquor nuisance, has jurisdiction to order the destruction of liquors found upon the premises, even tho such liquors are being held under undetermined and untried search warrant proceedings in the office of a justice of the peace.

State v Marker, 203-1001; 224 NW 588

2050 Costs.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 230

Improper taxation. Costs in contempt proceedings can be taxed to the individual petitioner only when the court finds that the proceedings were instituted maliciously and without probable cause.

State v Franklin, 215-384; 245 NW 283

2051 Mulct tax.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 319; '28 AG Op 434

Nature of statute. The statute providing for the imposition of a mulct tax upon the entry of a permanent injunction against the maintenance of an intoxicating liquor nuisance is not a criminal statute.

State v Osborne, 207-636; 223 NW 363

Mandatory duty of court. The imposition of a mulct tax is mandatory on the court upon the ordering of a permanent injunction.

State v Marker, 208-1001; 224 NW 588

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to justify an injunction against the maintenance of an intoxicating liquor nuisance and consequently insufficient to justify the levy of a mulct tax on the premises in question.

State v Straka, 209-572; 227 NW 909

Nonbasis for taxation. Failure to establish the alleged nuisance removes the basis for a mulct tax.

State v Aliber, 204-144; 214 NW 610

Unauthorized taxation. A mulct tax may be assessed only under the conditions expressly specified by statute.

State v Talarico, 202-744; 210 NW 968

Void tax. A mulct tax certified and levied some two years after a violation of the intoxicating liquor statutes, and after the repeal of the statutes authorizing the levy of such tax, and after the property affected had passed into the hands of an innocent party, is void as to such latter party.

Shriver v Polk County, 203-529; 212 NW 718

Justifiable assessment of mulct tax. Proof of the existence of a nuisance on the premises, plus evidence that such was the general reputation of the place, plus evidence of the renting to known bootleggers, and a suggestive reluctance on the part of the owner to make inquiries as to the business of his tenants, furnish ample justification for the imposition of a mulct tax.

State v Riley, 202-1213; 211 NW 731

Non-good-faith abatement. An owner of property may not escape injunction and the assessment of a mulct tax when from the attending circumstances he must have known that his property was being used for the unlawful sale, etc., of intoxicating liquors.

State v Jones, 202-640; 210 NW 784

Knowledge of owner. The assessment of a mulct tax against property which the owner knows, or has reason to know, is being used as an intoxicating liquor nuisance, is strictly in accordance with the statute.

State v Campbell, 204-147; 214 NW 550

Knowledge of owner. Neither a mulct tax nor the attorney fees and costs attending the proceedings can be properly imposed upon real property and against the owner thereof when the owner did not know and did not have reason to know of the existence of the liquor nuisance on his premises.

State v DeLeon, 204-843; 215 NW 973

Presumption of coercion of wife. A wife and her property may not escape the assessment of a mulct tax consequent on the maintenance of a liquor nuisance on the premises, on the claim that the husband was maintaining the nuisance and that the wife was presumptively under the coercion of the husband, it appearing that the wife had done nothing to prevent the nuisance.

State v Tillotta, 202-1217; 211 NW 721

Review, scope of. A decree of injunction, abatement, and assessment of mulct tax will not be disturbed on a record revealing proof of the existence of the nuisance.

State v Dietz, 202-1202; 211 NW 727

2053 Evidence.

Evidence of knowledge. A mulct tax, attorney fees, and costs may not be assessed against property on testimony which simply tends to show (1) ownership of the property and (2) that, among a comparatively small class of people of the community, the place had the general reputation of being a place for the unlawful use and sale of intoxicating liquors.

CIVIL ACTIONS AND LIABILITY

2055 Civil action.

Torts—fundamental laws govern liability. The fundamental and underlying law of torts is that he who does injury to the person or property of another is civilly liable in damages for the injuries inflicted.

Controlling principle. Equity will order the disinterment of a dead body for reburial only in cases of extreme necessity.

King v Frame, 204-1074; 216 NW 630

2338 Disinterment for autopsy.

Privileged communication—nonapplicable to physician performing autopsy. In an action to recover on an accident policy for the death of insured, where the court excluded testimony of a physician, who performed a post mortem examination but did not treat the patient before death, on the ground of privileged communication between patient and physician, held, court improperly excluded such testimony, since the privilege is purely statutory and for the purpose of encouraging patients to make full disclosure to the physician of all facts to enable him to prescribe and administer the proper treatment. A deceased body is not a patient and the relation of physician and patient ends when the death of the patient ensues.

Certificate as to "stillborn" infant. A certified copy of a return by a physician showing the delivery, by a Caesarean operation, of a "stillborn" infant, while proper evidence, may have but little bearing on the issue whether said "stillborn" possessed an independent circulation after being fully separated from the mother.

Wehrman v Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

Collateral heirs—burden of proof. Collateral heirs, belonging as they do under the law of inheritance to a deferred class, must, in order to inherit, affirmatively negative by the greater weight of evidence, the existence, at the time the inheritance was cast, of any other heir belonging to a more favored class. Held that collateral heirs had failed to negative the independent existence of twins after they had been taken, by a Caesarean operation, from the womb of a dead mother.

Wehrman v Bank, 221-249; 259 NW 564; 266 NW 290

Inheritable existence—criterion. An infant acquires existence capable of taking an inheritance only when it acquires an independent circulation of its blood after being fully separated from the body of the mother.

Gardner v Boland, 209-362; 227 NW 902

Morton v Ins. Co., 218-846; 254 NW 325; 96 ALR 315

Certificate of death—admissibility. In an action to recover on a policy of insurance, a certificate of death of the insured, tho duly and legally executed by a coroner, is inadmissible as evidence insofar as said certificate assumes to state the cause of death as "suicide by hanging", said stated cause of death being simply the opinion or conclusion of the coroner and not a statement of fact.

2439 License required.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 256, 473; '32 AG Op 248; '34 AG Op 64

License—constitutionality. Constitutionality of statutes requiring certain qualifications and the procurement of licenses by members of the learned professions reaffirmed.

State v Optical Co., 216-1157; 248 NW 332

Dentistry—practice by corporation. A corporation, being incapable of receiving a license to practice dentistry, cannot legally practice such profession, and is, therefore, subject to injunction if it attempts so to do.

State v Bailey Co., 211-781; 234 NW 260

Unauthorized practitioner. A medical practitioner who is not duly licensed as required by law may not recover for medical services.

Hoxsey v Baker, 216-85; 246 NW 653

Optometry—when not unlawful practice—physician and optical company—reciprocal deal. A reciprocal arrangement between an optical company and a physician, whereby the company sent customers to the physician for eye examination and the physician sent patients to the company to have their prescriptions filled, does not constitute said company as practicing optometry, in the complete absence of any proof that said doctor was an employee of the company and an injunction should not issue.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 186, 473; '30 AG Op 327; '34 AG Op 492, 732

Evidence. Evidence held ample to justify a decree which revoked the license of a physician.

State v Knight, 204-819; 216 NW 104

Proof—sufficiency. In proceedings to revoke the license of a physician, ample proof of some of the grounds for revocation renders quite immaterial the fact that other grounds were not proved.

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

2493 Unprofessional conduct.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 142; '34 AG Op 732

Examination of witness—statutory privilege. A female upon whom it is alleged a criminal abortion has been committed by a physician may, when called to testify as to what transpired between her and the physician, legally refuse, not on the ground that her answer might render her criminally liable, but on the ground that her answer would expose her to public ignominy.

State v Brown, 218-166; 253 NW 836

Revocation of license—criminal abortion as grounds. An equitable action by the state to revoke a license to practice medicine on the ground that the defendant procured or aided in procuring a criminal abortion, manifestly requires proof that the female in question was pregnant.

State v Brown, 218-166; 253 NW 836

2495 Jurisdiction of revocation.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 492

Nonjurisdiction to reinstate. The state board of medical examiners having, under statutory authority, properly revoked a license to practice medicine, has no jurisdiction thereafter to reinstate said license when, in the meantime, jurisdiction over the revocation of such licenses has been vested solely in the district court.

Hanson v Board, 220-357; 260 NW 68

Revocation of license—procedure for new license. It seems that one who has suffered a revocation of his license to practice medicine should not move for a reinstatement of his license but should commence anew by making an original application for a license.

Hanson v Board, 220-357; 260 NW 68

2496 Petition for revocation.

Holding under former statute. The right of the county attorney to initiate proceedings for the revocation of the license of a practicing physician is not dependent on any authorization from the state board of health.

State v Knight, 204-819; 216 NW 104

2499 Rules governing petition.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 492

Charges. Definite charges, tho informal, are sufficient in a proceeding to revoke the license of a physician.

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

2500 Trial.

Arbitrary refusal of continuance. The refusal of the board of medical examiners (§2578-a, S., '13), in proceedings for the revocation of a license of a physician, to grant a continuance until the accused had finished serving a sentence in the penitentiary is not necessarily arbitrary.

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

2501 Notice.

Notice—proper service. A statute which distinctly provides that a notice shall be "served as an original notice", authorizes a service on the designated party by leaving a copy of said notice at the usual place of residence of said party with some member of his family over fourteen years of age—when said party is not present in the county at the time of said service.

In re Sioux City Yards, 222-323; 268 NW 18

Defective service cured by appearance. Any defect in the service of the notice of the filing of charges in proceedings to revoke the license of a physician is cured by the appearance of the accused.

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

Substituted service of notice. The requirement that, in proceedings to revoke the license of a physician, the notice of the filing of the charges shall be served "in the manner provided for the service of an original notice in a civil action," authorizes substituted service on a proper member of the defendant's family, in case he cannot be found in the county.

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

2502 Nature of action.

Due process. A physician is not denied his constitutional right to "due process" by being denied a jury trial in proceedings before the board of medical examiners to revoke his license. (§2578-a, S., '13.)

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

Incompetent evidence—effect. In an equitable proceeding for the revocation of the license of a physician, the reception of immaterial or incompetent evidence will be deemed harmless, because it will be presumed that all such testimony was rejected in arriving at the final decision.

State v Knight, 204-819; 216 NW 104

Self-debasement. In an equitable action by the state to revoke the license of a physician, the defendant may not base a claim of error in the fact that, over his objections, the court permitted witnesses for the state to expose themselves to public disgrace and ignominy by their testimony.

State v Knight, 204-819; 216 NW 104

Tampering with witness. Evidence is admissible, in an equitable action for the revocation of the license of a physician, which tends to show that the defendant had tampered with a witness in an effort to induce her to change her testimony.

State v Knight, 204-819; 216 NW 104

2507 Hearing on appeal.

Transcript at expense of county. The statutory requirement that, in criminal cases, an impecunious defendant may, on appeal, have a transcript of the record at the expense of the county, has no application to an appeal by a defendant in an equitable action to revoke his professional license.

2519 Injunction.

"Engaged in business." A person is "engaged in the business" of selling a drug when he has such drug for sale to any person who may apply for it for the seller's profit, irrespective of any other business carried on by the said seller.

State v Market Co., 209-567; 228 NW 288
See State v Howard, 216-545; 245 NW 871

Contempt proceedings—scope of inquiry. In contempt proceedings for the violation of an injunction against the practice of medicine and surgery without a license, the testimony may very properly cover the entire time from the issuance of the writ to the date of hearing.

State v Baker, 222-903; 270 NW 359

Intent to continue violation. A petition which seeks to permanently enjoin the practice of medicine without a license, and which clearly alleges such present practice by the defendant, need not necessarily allege that the defendant intends to continue such practice in the future.

State v Fray, 214-53; 241 NW 663; 81 ALR 286

State v Howard, 214-60; 241 NW 682

Estoppel—evidence—sufficiency. It is futile for the defendant, in an action by the state to enjoin the defendant from practicing medicine without a license, to plead that the state and its officers are estopped to question his right to so practice and assume to support such plea by the fact that the state had not, for twenty years, questioned his right so to practice though he had never offered to take the statutory examination for any recognized system of practice.

State v Howard, 216-545; 245 NW 871

Presumption of continuance of condition. Proof that enjoined acts were being committed at the time of the commencement of an action carries the presumption that the condition complained of existed at the time of the trial.

State v Optical Co., 216-1157; 248 NW 332

Enjoining criminal acts—constitutionality. The statute authorizing the entry of a permanent injunction against a person practicing medicine without a license even though said person may be prosecuted criminally for so practicing, is not unconstitutional on the theory that injunction proceedings are simply a method of punishing the defendant for a crime without the intervention of a trial jury, and consequently denies the defendant due process of law.

State v Fray, 214-53; 241 NW 663; 81 ALR 286

State v Howard, 214-60; 241 NW 682

Allowable injunction. The fact that the state duly issues a license to practice osteo-pathy does not limit it to a criminal prosecution against the licensee should the latter enter upon the practice of "medicine." Injunction will lie.

State v Stoddard, 215-534; 245 NW 273; 86 ALR 616

Injunction—constitutionality. The statute authorizing injunction to restrain the practice of medicine and surgery without a license is constitutional for the reason that such practice constitutes a nuisance under the general law of the state, and chancery has, from time immemorial, possessed jurisdiction to enjoin nuisances.

State v Howard, 214-60; 241 NW 682

Injunction—discontinuance of violations—effect. In an action to enjoin violations of the medical practice act, the all-important and material inquiry is whether the defendant was violating the law at the time the action was brought or during the pendency thereof, not whether the defendant had discontinued his violations at the time the decree was entered.

State v Stoddard, 215-534; 245 NW 273; 86 ALR 616

Practice by corporation. A corporation, being incapable of receiving a license to practice dentistry, cannot legally practice such profession, and is, therefore, subject to injunction if it attempts so to do.

State v Dental Co., 211-781; 234 NW 260

Practice by corporation. A corporation is practicing optometry when it equips, and publicly opens, carries on, manages, and controls, through its employee—a licensed optometrist—an office for the practice of said profession, even though the name of the corporation does not publicly appear as such practitioner. And inasmuch as a corporation cannot legally practice optometry, such practice will be enjoined.

State v Optical Co., 216-1157; 248 NW 332

State v Ritholz, 226-70; 283 NW 268

Optometry—when not unlawful practice—physician and optical company—reciprocal deal. A reciprocal arrangement between an optical company and a physician, whereby the company sent customers to the physician for eye examination and the physician sent patients to the company to have their prescriptions filled, does not constitute said company as practicing optometry, in the complete absence of any proof that said doctor was an employee of the company and an injunction should not issue.

State v Ritholz, 226-70; 283 NW 268

Osteopath—injections. A person who, with the public profession on his part to cure and heal, treats hemorrhoids in the human body by hypodermic injections of a curative medicine—e. g., phenol—is "practicing medicine" and is subject to injunction against practicing.

medicine, generally, without a license, even tho he is already a duly licensed osteopath.

State v McPheeters, 216-1359; 249 NW 349

Sale of aspirin. A corporation may be restrained by injunction from selling or offering or exposing for sale aspirin on proof that aspirin is a drug, and is not a proprietary medicine, and that the corporation is not conducting the business of selling said article under the supervision of a licensed pharmacist.

State v Market Co., 209-567; 228NW 288

2522 Penalties.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 473; '30 AG Op 174

Professional conduct—violation—undue penalty. The practitioner of a profession, e. g., dentistry, may be validly denied a renewal of his license so to practice as a penalty for his violation of a valid statutory standard of professional conduct—this section, C., '35, having no application to such violation.

Craven v Bierring, 222-613; 269 NW 801

2523.1 Department inspector and assistant.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 170

2528 Prima facie evidence.

Practicing without authority—evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held ample to present a jury question on the issue whether the accused was practicing medicine.

State v Hueser, 205-132; 215 NW 643

Practice of dentistry. A corporation is practicing dentistry when it publicly opens an office and equips it for such practice, employs dentists to carry on such practice, and advertises its business in its corporate name accordingly.

State v Dental Co., 211-781; 234 NW 260

“Practicing medicine.” A person owning and operating a hospital for the treatment of diseases is practicing medicine when he furnishes and personally and systematically causes, both directly and indirectly, a carefully guarded secret medical formula possessed, and apparently compounded, by himself to be prescribed for and to be administered to patients as the sole remedy for their ills by attendants who are not licensed physicians; and this is true even tho licensed physicians are employed to diagnose the ailments of patients.

CHAPTER 116

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY

2538 Persons engaged in.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 321

Constitutionality. Principle reaffirmed that the statutes regulating the practice of medicine and surgery are a proper exercise of the police power.

State v Hueser, 205-132; 215 NW 643

State v Howard, 216-545; 245 NW 871

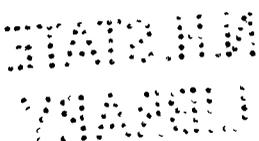

“Practicing medicine”—acts constituting. A person who, with the public profession on his part to cure and heal, treats hemorrhoids in the human body by hypodermic injections of a curative medicine—e. g., phenol—is “practicing medicine” and is subject to injunction against practicing medicine, generally, without a license, even tho he is already a duly licensed osteopath.

State v McPheeters, 216-1359; 249 NW 349

“Practicing medicine”—acts constituting. A person owning and operating a hospital for the treatment of diseases is practicing medicine when he furnishes and personally and systematically causes, both directly and indirectly, a carefully guarded secret medical formula possessed, and apparently compounded, by himself to be prescribed for and to be administered to patients as the sole remedy for their ills by attendants who are not licensed physicians; and this is true even tho licensed physicians are employed to diagnose the ailments of patients.

State v Baker, 212-571; 235 NW 313

Not unlawful practice—physician and optical company—reciprocal deal. A reciprocal arrangement between an optical company and a physician, whereby the company sent customers to the physician for eye examination and the physician sent patients to the company to have their prescriptions filled, does not constitute said company as practicing optometry, in the complete absence of any proof that said doctor was an employee of the company and an injunction should not issue.

State v Ritholz, 226-70; 283 NW 268

Practicing without authority—evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held ample to present a jury question on the issue whether the accused was practicing medicine.

State v Hueser, 205-132; 215 NW 643

Practicing without authority. Instructions which defined "prescribe" reviewed, and held unobjectionable.

State v Hueser, 205-132; 215 NW 643

Offense defined. One "who publicly professes to assume the duties incident to the practice of medicine", i. e., diagnosing human ailments and prescribing the proper treatment for such ailments, is "practicing medicine" even tho the treatment prescribed or applied consists solely of laying the hands of the practitioner upon the body of the person treated.

State v Hughey, 208-842; 226 NW 371

State v Howard, 216-545; 245 NW 871

Parties acting jointly and in cooperation. Several persons engaged jointly and in cooperation in the unlawful furnishing, prescribing, and administering of medicine without a license may be properly joined in one action for injunction.

State v Baker, 212-571; 235 NW 313

Medical services—unauthorized practitioner. A medical practitioner who is not duly licensed as required by law may not recover for medical services.

Hoxsey v Baker, 216-85; 246 NW 653

Faith healer. A naked showing by the state that a so-called faith healer in treating people simply laid his hands upon them or, at most, slightly massaged the back of the neck and head, is wholly insufficient to establish the practice of medicine and surgery, within the meaning of the statute, nor is the lack of proof supplied by a showing that some years prior to such treatment the defendant's name in a telephone directory was preceded by the title "Dr."

State v Miller, 216-806; 249 NW 141

Estoppel of state—evidence—sufficiency. It is futile for the defendant, in an action by the state to enjoin the defendant from practicing medicine without a license, to plead that the state and its officers are estopped to question his right to so practice, and assume to support such plea by the fact that the state had not, for twenty years, questioned his right so to practice tho he had never offered to take the statutory examination for any recognized system of practice.

State v Howard, 216-545; 245 NW 871

Arbitrary refusal. The refusal of the board of medical examiners (§2578-a, S., '13), in proceedings for the revocation of the license of a physician, to grant a continuance until the accused had finished serving a sentence in the penitentiary is not necessarily arbitrary.

State v Hanson, 201-579; 207 NW 769

Right to institute prosecution. Prosecutions for the enforcement of the laws regulatory of the practice of medicine and surgery may be instituted without any authority from the state department of health.

State v Hueser, 205-132; 215 NW 643

Compensation—implied agreement. One who calls upon a physician and hospital authorities to attend an injured person to whom he is under no legal obligation may, by his acts and conduct, give rise to an implied promise to pay for the services rendered.

Valentine v Morgan, 207-232; 222 NW 412

Words actionable—intoxication in connection with profession. The defamation of a physician by accusing him of having been drunk, and because thereof unable to attend a professional call, is actionable per se. Pleadings held sufficient to state such cause of action.

Amick v Montross, 206-51; 220 NW 51; 58 ALR 1147

Taxation—charity and benevolence—nonexemption. Property consisting of town lots and the buildings situated thereon, owned by a corporation, and used in part for charitable and benevolent purposes, and in part for the private profit of one of the incorporators in the practice of his profession of medicine, is not exempt from taxation, to any extent, under §6944, subsec. 9, C., '35. And it is quite immaterial—under such state of facts—that the declared purposes of the corporation are solely charitable and benevolent.

Readlyn Hospital v Hoth, 223-341; 272 NW 90

Malpractice.

Hair v Sorensen, 215-1229; 247 NW 651

Dentist—tooth lodged in lung—malpractice.

Whetstine v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Malpractice. In an action based on malpractice in sewing up in a wound a piece of gauze, instruction reviewed and held not subject to the objections (1) that it assumed the existence of an issuable fact and that such fact constituted negligence per se, and (2) that ordinary care was improperly defined.

Forrest v Abbott, 219-664; 259 NW 238

Evidence—usual and ordinary practice. The defendant in an action for damages for malpractice may always establish, even by his own testimony, the usual and ordinary practice of physicians and surgeons in treating, in the locality in question, the injury which is the subject matter of the action.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Negligence—usual and ordinary treatment—competency of witness. A witness, his competency to testify being established, may testify as to what was the usual and ordinary practice at a named time and place among physicians and surgeons in the treatment of a specified injury.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393; 26 NCCA 82; 28 NCCA 641

Negligence—usual and ordinary treatment—evidence. Evidence that certain medical treatment was not employed on a patient may very properly be met by evidence that such treatment was not the usual and ordinary method of practice at the time and place in question.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393; 26 NCCA 82; 28 NCCA 641

Malpractice—res ipsa loquitur.

Whetstine v Moravec, 228- ; 291 NW 425

Negligence—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to present a jury question on the issue whether a physician was negligent in failing to discover and remove from the womb of plaintiff a portion of the placenta, and whether the retention of said placenta was the cause of septicemia.

McDaniels v Moth, 210-102; 230 NW 311

Malpractice—evidence. A physician does not impliedly guarantee that his treatment of a patient will be beneficial. He fully performs his duty when he, with due care, applies to his patient that treatment which is generally and ordinarily applied by physicians under like circumstances in the locality in question. Evidence held insufficient to show that the defendant had not performed his duty.

Nelson v Sandell, 202-109; 209 NW 440; 46 ALR 1447; 26 NCCA 99

Malpractice—nonjoint liability. The mere fact that a physician directs his patient to go to a named dentist for the extraction of a tooth, and agrees to and does administer the anesthetic, does not create such relation as will render the physician liable for the negligence of the dentist.

Nelson v Sandell, 202-109; 209 NW 440; 46 ALR 1447; 26 NCCA 99

Malpractice—recoverable and nonrecoverable damages—failure to differentiate. In an action for malpractice in that, after performing a successful operation except that the defendant negligently left a piece of gauze in the wound, which negligence necessitated a second operation, instructions relative to damages arising from (1) scars, (2) bodily and mental pain, and (3) expenses paid for household servants, must clearly differentiate, in view of the two operations, between such damages as are, under each heading, recoverable, and those that are not recoverable.

Forrest v Abbott, 219-664; 259 NW 238; 38 NCCA 315

Negligence—evidence. In an action for malpractice, evidence which is narrative of the physical condition of the patient at a time and place in controversy is necessarily admissible.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393

Negligence—proximate cause. In an action for malpractice, proof that the physician negligently failed to apply the proper treatment avails nothing when the effect of proper treatment, had it been applied, is shown by the evidence to be purely speculative—just a guess.

Thompson v Anderson, 217-1186; 252 NW 117

Negligence—proximate cause. In an action for malpractice, plaintiff does not make a jury question by proof that the defendant was negligent in the treatment or in the lack of treatment of the patient, but must go forward with his proof and establish by a preponderance of the testimony that such negligence, and not the original injury, was the proximate cause of death.

Ramberg v Morgan, 209-474; 218 NW 492

Malpractice—proximate cause of damage. In an operation for conization of the cervix, evidence held to clearly place the negligence of the defendants, if any, in failing to keep the canal open while healing, as the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury.

Kirchner v Dorsey & Dorsey, 226-283; 284 NW 171

Negligence—new condition subsequent to discharge. If, after the discharge of a patient, new conditions arise which are not the natural result of the previously existing condition of the patient, the physician must have due notification of such condition and an opportunity to treat it; and the jury must be so instructed, if an instruction is requested.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393

Aggravation of injury by unskillful treatment—liability of original wrongdoer. It is a principle of law that one who negligently inflicts a personal injury on another is liable in damages for the aggravation of said injury resulting from the unskillful treatment of said injury by his physicians and surgeons, provided the injured party exercised reasonable care in selecting said physicians and surgeons, but to permit the application of said principle there must be a proper showing of causal connection between said wrongfully inflicted injury and the said unskillful treatment.

Johnson v Selindh, 221-373; 265 NW 622

Negligence—amputation without X-ray picture. The issue whether a surgeon was negligent in failing to have an X-ray picture taken of a broken arm before amputating it, does not become a jury question on general descriptive testimony of the arm by laymen opposed by unanimous expert testimony that the extent of the broken, crushed, and mangled arm was plainly apparent without an X-ray picture, the issue being whether amputation was necessary.

Jackovach v Yocom, 212-914; 237 NW 444; 76 ALR 551; 38 NCCA 346

X-ray pictures. An X-ray picture of an arm of the human body taken several days after amputation and when the arm is admittedly in a materially different condition than it was in when amputated cannot be received for any other purpose than to show the condition of the arm when the picture was taken, the very material issue being as to the condition of the arm at the time of amputation.

Jackovach v Yocom, 212-914; 237 NW 444; 76 ALR 551; 38 NCCA 346

Negligence—adverse result of X-ray treatment—jury question. While the adverse result attending X-ray treatment, e. g., a burn, is not in and of itself evidence of negligence, yet evidence that such result does not ordinarily follow reasonably skillful treatment, plus evidence that such result may result from too frequent treatment, or from treatment prolonged during a long period of time, and that plaintiff was so treated, may generate a jury question on the issue of negligence.

Berg v Willett, 212-1109; 232 NW 821; 38 NCCA 383

Hearsay—statement of stranger to action. The statement of a physician not a party to an action, relative to an X-ray picture exhibited to him, is hearsay and therefore incompetent.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Negligence—evidence to rebut. On the issue why a reduced oblique fracture of a bone "slipped," evidence is admissible tending to show that in such fractures particles of flesh are liable to gather under the ends of the splintered bones and thus cause a slipping.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393; 26 NCCA 82; 28 NCCA 641

Poor result of treatment—nonpresumption of negligence. The exclusion of testimony (in an action of malpractice growing out of the reduction of a fracture of a broken leg) tending to show that the bone was not, after a certain period of treatment, in the condition in which it ordinarily would be in after the usual and customary treatment had been applied does not constitute error when there is no other evidence of negligence or want of proper treatment of the patient. In other words, no presumption of negligence can be drawn from the naked fact that the result of treatment was unsatisfactory.

Hair v Sorensen, 215-1229; 247 NW 651

Negligence—evidence—competency. Principle reaffirmed that the issue whether the treatment accorded to a patient by a physician was proper must be determined by expert testimony.

Ramberg v Morgan, 209-474; 218 NW 492

Expert testimony—success of treatment. An expert medical witness may not testify as to the success he has had in treating a specified injury in a specified manner.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Medical works—examination concerning. Prejudicial error results from permitting a physician, defendant in an action for malpractice, to be cross-examined as to the contents and teaching of scientific works on medicine, when the witness has not testified directly or indirectly as to such works.

Wilcox v Crumpton, 219-389; 258 NW 704

Negligence—pain and suffering—rebuttal. In an action for malpractice, evidence of pain and suffering on the part of the patient is, of course, rebuttable.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393

Negligence—damages—pain incident to injury. No recovery may be had, in an action for malpractice, for pain (1) incident to an injury, or (2) incident to the usual and ordinary treatment of an injury; and, on request, the court must clearly differentiate, in its instructions, between such pain and pain caused by the negligence of the physician.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393

Amputation without consent of patient or parents. It is the duty of a physician or surgeon, in an emergency which endangers the life or health of his patient, to do that which the occasion demands within the usual and customary practice among physicians and surgeons in the locality in question, even without the consent of the patient or of those who have the right to speak for him. And in so doing the physician or surgeon is not liable for an honest error in judgment.

Jackovach v Yocom, 212-914; 237 NW 444; 76 ALR 551; 38 NCCA 346

Negligence—undue shortening of limb—evidence. In an action for malpractice wherein it is shown that an injured limb, after treatment, was over three inches shorter than the uninjured limb, held that improperly formed questions tending to show that the ordinary results of such an injury would be a shortening of one or two inches were properly excluded.

Lemon v Kessel, 202-273; 209 NW 393; 26 NCCA 82; 28 NCCA 641

Necessity for amputation—jury question. The issue whether a necessity existed for the amputation of an arm does not become a jury question on general descriptive testimony of laymen, bearing on the appearance of the arm, and tending to show no necessity for amputation, and unanimous expert testimony to the effect that amputation was necessary in order to save the life of the patient.

Jackovach v Yocom, 212-914; 237 NW 444; 76 ALR 551; 38 NCCA 346

Negligence—jury question. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue of negligence of a physician in failing to properly treat a traumatically injured patient.

Ramberg v Morgan, 209-474; 218 NW 492

Correct and incorrect instructions—effect. In an action for damages consequent on malpractice in sewing up a sponge in a wound, instructions which in part definitely confine the jury to the one ground of negligence alleged, and which in part fail so to confine them, constitute reversible error.

Forrest v Abbott, 219-664; 259 NW 238; 38 NCCA 315

Malpractice—damages—verdict. Verdict of $20,000 for personal injury consequent on the malpractice of a physician held nonexcessive.

Legler v Clinic, 207-720; 223 NW 405

Release—joint wrongdoers. A party who has been negligently injured and settles with and releases the original wrongdoer may not thereafter maintain an action against a physician for malpractice in treating the very injuries for which he has effected a settlement.

“Internal curative medicine”—scope of term. The statutory prohibition against a duly licensed and practicing osteopath prescribing for, or giving to, a patient “internal curative medicines” is as much violated by prescribing or giving for internal use a medicine designed simply to relieve a diseased condition of the human body as tho he prescribed or gave to the patient for such use a specific—a known cure for said diseased condition.

2573.02 Renewal of licenses.

Deprivation of certificate. The holder of a duly issued certificate to practice a profession, e. g., dentistry, cannot be deprived of said certificate without due process, to wit: notice, hearing, and right to appeal to the courts. Statutes reviewed and held ample to protect such holder.

Craven v Bierring, 222-613; 269 NW 801

Professional conduct—violation. The practitioner of a profession, e. g., dentistry, may be validly denied a renewal of his license so to practice as a penalty for his violation of a valid statutory standard of professional conduct—§2522, C., '35, having no application to such violation.

Craven v Bierring, 222-613; 269 NW 801

2573.09 Grounds for rejecting application.

Professional conduct—violation—undue penalty. The practitioner of a profession, e. g., dentistry, may be validly denied a renewal of his license so to practice as a penalty for his violation of a valid statutory standard of professional conduct—§2522, C., '35, having no application to such violation.

2573.16 Unprofessional conduct.

Limitation on advertising. The right of the state under its police power to regulate in the interest of the public health, morals, and welfare a medical profession, e. g., the practice of dentistry, embraces the right to place stringent limitations on the form and style of advertisement which the practitioner may legally employ in carrying on his said profession, even the right to prohibit the use of advertisements which, in themselves, are truthful. But the state must not act arbitrarily.

Craven v Bierring, 222-613; 269 NW 801

Constitutionality of statute. Injunction will lie to enjoin the enforcement of an alleged unconstitutional statute which fixes a standard of conduct for a professional practitioner, e. g., a dentist.

CHAPTER 122PRACTICE OF OPTOMETRY*2574 "Optometry" defined.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 308

Practice by corporation. A corporation is practicing optometry when it equips, and publicly opens, carries on, manages, and controls, through its employee—a licensed optometrist—an office for the practice of said profession, even tho the name of the corporation does not publicly appear as such practitioner. And, inasmuch as a corporation cannot legally practice optometry, such practice will be enjoined.

State v Optical Co., 216-1157; 248 NW 332

Optometry—corporation practicing through employee-physician. A corporation is practicing optometry when it employs a physician—a licensed optometrist—to carry on his business under the company's control, and such practice may be enjoined.

State v Ritholz, 226-70; 283 NW 268

Optometry—when not unlawful practice—physician and optical company—reciprocal deal. A reciprocal arrangement between an optical company and a physician, whereby the company sent customers to the physician for eye examination and the physician sent patients to the company to have their prescriptions filled, does not constitute said company as practicing optometry, in the complete absence of any proof that said doctor was an employee of the company and an injunction should not issue.

Reppert v Utterback, 206-314; 217 NW 545

Sale of aspirin—injunction. A corporation may be restrained by injunction from selling or offering or exposing for sale aspirin on proof that aspirin is a drug and is not a proprietary medicine, and that the corporation of, a licensed pharmacist, is unconstitutional on the ground that said publications embrace many harmless substances that are of common and domestic use, quaere.

State v Market Co., 209-567; 228 NW 288

Sale of aspirin—injunction. A corporation may be restrained by injunction from selling, or offering or exposing for sale, aspirin on

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 226

Practice by corporation. An incorporation which purports to be a cooperative association may not legally practice the profession of embalming by furnishing its so-called members with the services of a licensed embalmer when, under its organization, no restriction is placed on its membership except that said members must reside within 35 miles of the association's place of business. Whether the association could so practice were its membership reasonably restricted, quaere.

State v Fremont Assn., 222-949; 270 NW 320

Private nuisance—funeral home. The operating of an undertaking business or so-called funeral home in a strictly residential section of a municipality under circumstances which bring to the families in the immediate neighborhood a constant reminder of death, a resulting feeling of mental depression, an appreciable lessening of their happiness and disease-resisting powers, and an appreciable depreciation of the value of their properties, constitutes a nuisance and is enjoicable as such.

Bevington v Otte, 223-509; 273 NW 98

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 584

Private nuisance—undertaking establishment. The operation under formal municipal permit of an undertaking and embalming establishment in a city, in a territory designated by a duly enacted zoning ordinance as a commercial district, will not be enjoined on the sole ground that, being adjacent to a residence, said operation will have a depressing mental effect on the occupant and owner of said residence and on the members of his family.

Cosmetology schools—charges for services of students. A statute defining cosmetologists as being persons who receive compensation for services and which provides that no person or corporation shall use any person as a practitioner of cosmetology unless the person is an apprentice or licensed cosmetologist, is an unconstitutional exercise of police power in requiring that students of cosmetology schools do gratuitous work while obtaining practical experience, as such requirement would be an arbitrary interference with private business and the right to contract and would impose unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations in violation of due process of law.

State v Thompson's School, 226-556; 285 NW 133

Burns by operator—specific negligence—res ipsa loquitur—separate counts. Having received burns from a beauty parlor treatment, a plaintiff, after pleading specific acts of negligence in one count and the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in another count, may at the conclusion of the evidence withdraw the first count and rely on the res ipsa loquitur doctrine which is always applicable in cases where all the instrumentalities are under the control of the operator and where, had ordinary care been used, the injuries would not ordinarily have occurred.

2661 Sale or exposure of infected animals.

2665 Cooperation.

Discussion. See 15 ILR 509—Bovine tuberculosis statutes

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 298

Constitutionality reaffirmed. Constitutionality of bovine tuberculosis law reaffirmed.

Panther v Department, 211-868; 234 NW 560

Accredited area plan—enrollment—condition precedent. A county may not legally be enrolled under the accredited area plan for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis until the county has first been legally enrolled under the county area plan for such eradication.

Phelps v Thornburg, 206-1150; 221 NW 835

Enrollment of county—insufficient publication. A notice of the hearing before the board of supervisors on a petition for the enrollment of a county under the county area eradication plan relating to bovine tuberculosis is a nullity when the last newspaper publication was on August 13th and the hearing was had on August 17th.

Phelps v Thornburg, 206-1150; 221 NW 835

Accredited area plan—withdrawal of signatures—effect. Upon the filing with the secretary of agriculture of the required agreements for the enrollment of a county under the accredited area plan for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis, the jurisdiction in said secretary to act is not taken away by the subsequent withdrawal of signatures to such agreements.

Thede v Thornburg, 207-639; 223 NW 386

Permissible legalization. The legislature may validly legalize the act of the secretary of agriculture in enrolling a county under the accredited area plan for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis when the illegality of such enrollment is predicated on the doubt whether the petitions as a basis for such action contained the statutory number of signatures.

Peverill v Board, 208-94; 222 NW 535

Illegal enrollment of county—waiver and estoppel. Failure to properly publish a notice relative to the enrollment of a county for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis is not a mere irregularity, but is jurisdictional.

Phelps v Thornburg, 206-1150; 221 NW 835

Hearing—mandatory duty of secretary. The statutory requirement that the secretary of agriculture shall, on the basis of certain agreements filed with him, "hold a hearing" on the proposal to enroll a county under the accredited area plan for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis is mandatory, and the secretary has no power to substitute some other person to hold such hearing, even tho such hearing is reported in detail to the secretary, and later passed upon by him.

Thede v Thornburg, 207-639; 223 NW 386

Certification of petitions—sufficiency. Petitions for the enrollment of a county under the county-area-eradication plan for the control of bovine tuberculosis, after being passed upon by the board of supervisors, are properly transmitted by the county auditor to the secretary of agriculture by means of certified copies, such being the direction of the statute.

Thede v Thornburg, 207-639; 223 NW 386

2666 State as accredited area.

Class legislation—permissible agencies. The legislature may, generally speaking, choose any agency for the initiative and realization of the benefits of a public health measure.

Lausen v Board, 204-30; 214 NW 682

Due process as limitation on police power. The due process clause of the federal constitution is no limitation on a legitimate and reasonable exercise by the state of its police powers over bovine tuberculosis.

Peverill v Board, 208-94; 222 NW 535

Compulsory testing. An owner of breeding cattle who is validly required by statute to have them tested for tuberculosis or to submit to criminal prosecution may not complain that the law accords to him the right to enter into an agreement with the public authorities for his own protection.

Fevold v Board, 202-1019; 210 NW 139

Notice of time of testing unnecessary.

Peverill v Dept., 216-534; 245 NW 334

Justifiable and unjustifiable destruction. The constitutional requirement of due process of law—notice and hearing—is fully met by the bovine tuberculosis act (1) in depriving the owner of all notice and hearing prior to the destruction of cattle actually infected with tuberculosis, and (2) in impliedly and necessarily giving to said owner a right of action for damages against persons destroying his cattle when they are not so infected.

Loftus v Dept., 211-566; 232 NW 412

Scientific difference as to efficiency of health measure—effect. When it appears that there is a scientific difference of opinion as to the efficiency, desirability and reliability of a proposed public health measure, e. g., the tuberculin test for bovine tuberculosis, it necessarily follows that the door is open to the legislative department to adopt the theory to which it will apply its police power.

Loftus v Dept., 211-566; 232 NW 412

Panther v Dept., 211-868; 234 NW 560

Nonrequired bond by examiner. In applying the bovine tuberculosis test, the examiner need not, nor may he be required to, post a bond to indemnify the owner against loss in case cattle are wrongfully destroyed, because the statute does not expressly or impliedly require such bond.

Peverill v Dept., 216-534; 245 NW 334

2668 Appraisal.

Right to test prior to appraisalment. Even tho the statute declares that "before being tested, such animals shall be appraised, etc.," nevertheless, an examination of the entire bovine tuberculosis act clearly demonstrates that "shall" is not used in a mandatory sense.

Peverill v Dept., 216-534; 245 NW 334

2669 Presence of tuberculosis.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 350

Wrongful destruction by governmental agency. When animals are wrongfully destroyed by a governmental agency, the individual wrongdoer is liable in damages for such destruction.

Howard v Serum Co., 202-822; 211 NW 419; 26 NCCA 921

Measure of care in manufacture. A manufacturer of hog-cholera virus and serum who, in a contract of sale, distinctly provides that he does not guarantee said product "further than that it will be manufactured strictly in accordance with the rules and regulations as laid down by the department of agriculture" of the federal government (which rules and regulations are distinctly comprehensive, in great detail, and mandatory on all manufacturers by fiat of the federal authorities) may not be held liable in damages resulting from the purchase and use of said product because he did not employ in the manufacture some additional precaution not required by said government regulations, e. g., a bacteriological testing laboratory.

Insurance—auto race—"no action clause"—effect. A policy of insurance indemnifying the insured from damages resulting from the holding of a hazardous automobile racing contest on a race track at a county fair, and which policy specifies that "No action shall be brought against the insurer * * * unless brought by and in the name of the insured for loss actually sustained and paid in money by the assured in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issues," is a contract of indemnity against loss, and not a contract of indemnity against liability, and gives no right of action on the policy to a person who was wrongfully injured as a result of holding said race; and this is true notwithstanding §8940, subsec. 5, par. "e", C., '24, '27, '31, giving, under certain conditions, an injured person a right of action on an automobile accident policy issued to the wrongdoer, said statute having application solely to policies on automobiles used on race tracks in racing contests.

Zieman v Fidelity Co., 214-483; 238 NW 100

Liability for negligence. Nonpecuniary incorporated county fair associations are not such governmental agencies as are exempt from liability for negligence.

Clark v Fair Assn., 203-1107; 212 NW 163; 33 NCCA 40

Negligence—reasonable care only required. It may not be said, as a matter of law, that a county fair association is under a legal duty to erect a fence along its race track sufficiently high to prevent a horse from jumping over such fence. The association is not an insurer. Reasonable care under varying circumstances is the full measure of its duty.

2930 Appropriation by board of supervisors.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 132, 233, 252; '32 AG Op 217; '34 AG Op 62, 71, 93, 113, 177, 226; '38 AG Op 145, 314

Conclusiveness of certificate. The certificate of the proper officers of an incorporated farm bureau as to the number of bona fide members of the bureau, as a basis for an appropriation by the county, is conclusive on the board of supervisors.

Appanoose Co. Bureau v Board, 218-945; 256 NW 687

Certificate—sufficiency. The certificate filed by the proper officers of a farm bureau with the board of supervisors as a basis for county aid need not embrace statements of fact not required, expressly or impliedly, by the statute.

Appanoose Co. Bureau v Board, 218-945; 256 NW 687

When entitled to aid. The statutory provision that a farm bureau organization shall be entitled to financial aid from the county when the "yearly membership dues and pledges" amount to a certain sum, authorizes such aid when the "dues" alone amount to the required sum.

Blume v Crawford Co., 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92 ALR 757

When not entitled to public aid. An incorporated farm aid association which in its articles of incorporation fixes the annual dues at five dollars, instead of one dollar, as mandatorily required by statute, and which raises from its members no annual sum by way of subscription, as mandatorily required by statute, is not entitled to financial aid from the general fund of the county.

Jefferson etc. v Sherman, 208-614; 226 NW 182

Blume v Crawford Co., 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92ALR 757

Misappropriation — recovery — estoppel. Where, during a series of years, public funds have been appropriated by a county to a farm bureau organization under the good faith but mistaken belief that a statute authorized such appropriations, and where said funds have been expended in furtherance of the agricultural activities of said bureau, an action to recover such funds on behalf of the county will not lie by a taxpayer who has at all time had actual knowledge of the making of such appropriations and of the use to which they were being put, and took no action to question them.

Blume v Crawford Co., 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92 ALR 757

Public aid—conditions precedent. A farm bureau organization is not entitled to an appropriation of county funds (1) until the bureau treasurer has first given and filed the bond required by statute, and (2) until the president and secretary of the bureau have certified to the board of supervisors the definite amount, if any, advanced to the said bureau by the federal government for the ensuing year.

Taylor Bureau v Board, 218-937; 252 NW 498

Governmental powers—nondelegation of authority. The statutory provision which requires the board of supervisors, under named conditions, to appropriate from the county general fund money to, and in aid of, a farm bureau organization, cannot be deemed a delegation to the said organization of the power to levy a tax on the public.

Blume v Crawford Co., 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92 ALR 757

Matters specially pleaded. A plaintiff who seeks to enjoin the appropriation of county funds in aid of a farm bureau organization on the ground that the bureau was not organized to cooperate with stated governmental agencies, must specially plead and prove said fact.

Blume v Crawford Co., 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92 ALR 757

Mandamus. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the board of supervisors to make an appropriation of public funds to a farm bureau organization, even tho the board must, as a preliminary matter, determine whether the facts exist justifying the appropriation.

Taylor Bureau v Board, 218-937; 252 NW 498

2931 Limitation on aid.

When entitled to aid. While a farm bureau organization is not entitled to financial aid from the county unless it is organized "to cooperate" with stated federal and state agricultural agencies, yet such cooperation need not be specifically provided for in the articles of incorporation.

Blume v Crawford Co., 217-545; 250 NW 733; 92 ALR 757

2932 Funds advanced by federal government.

Mandamus—sufficiency of petition. In mandamus to compel an appropriation by a board of supervisors to a farm bureau association, the failure of the petition to state the amount of aid furnished the bureau by the federal government is not fatal when the petition was not attacked in the trial court.

Appanoose Co. Bureau v Board, 218-945; 256 NW 687

Public aid—conditions precedent. A farm bureau organization is not entitled to an appropriation of county funds (1) until the bureau treasurer has first given and filed the bond required by statute, and (2) until the president and secretary of the bureau have certified to the board of supervisors the definite amount, if any, advanced to the said bureau by the federal government for the ensuing year.

2934 Bond of treasurer.

Public aid—conditions precedent. A farm bureau organization is not entitled to an appropriation of county funds (1) until the bureau treasurer has first given and filed the bond required by statute, and (2) until the president and secretary of the bureau have certified to the board of supervisors the definite amount, if any, advanced to the said bureau by the federal government for the ensuing year.

ESTRAYS AND TRESPASSING ANIMALS

2980 Restraint of animals.

Damages—thoroughbred cow served by non-thoroughbred bull. Principle reaffirmed that the measure of damages resulting from the serving of a thoroughbred cow by a non-thoroughbred bull is the difference between the value of said cow for breeding purposes before and after such serving.

Madison v Hood, 207-495; 223 NW 178

Duty to restrain. There is no longer any difference between the obligation to restrain male and female animals.

Wheeler v Woods, 205-1240; 219 NW 407

Presumption as to ownership. Proof that stock was on the premises of a defendant and under his control, both before and after it was at large in the public highway (where it was alleged to have caused a damage), and that the defendant had inferentially admitted that the stock was his, creates a jury question on the issue of the defendant's ownership.

Stewart v Wild, 202-357; 208 NW 303

Violation of statute—effect. The unrestrained presence of a domestic animal upon the public highway generates a presumption that the owner of the animal has been negligent in not restraining the animal from running at large, as commanded by statute; but the owner may show that, in view of all the circumstances, he was not, in fact, negligent. The doctrine of negligence per se arising out of the violation of a statute does not here apply.

Failure to maintain fence—effect. A party may neither (1) distrain an animal which comes upon his premises, nor (2) maintain an independent action for damages done by the animal, if the animal comes upon complainant's premises because of his neglect to maintain his part of the partition fence.

Whether the statute (1) which defines "drugs and medicines" as including all substances and preparations for external or internal use recognized in the United States Pharmacopoeia or National Formulary, and (2) which prohibits the sale of "drugs and medicines" except by, or under the supervision of a licensed pharmacist, is unconstitutional on the ground that said publications embrace many harmless substances that are of common and domestic use, quaere.

"Inebriacy" defined. Inebriacy is the state of drunkenness or habitual intoxication.

Maher v Brown, 225-341; 280 NW 553

Accused in state hospital—term for trial after release. An indictment not brought to trial because of accused's confinement in a state hospital as an inebriate is not subject to dismissal because accused was not immediately tried upon his release, when such was impossible because the release came at a time when the term was well under way and the assigned cases completely filled the court's time for that term.

Maher v Brown, 225-341; 280 NW 553

3479 Statutes applicable.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 93

Inebriate in state hospital—delay in trial—no dismissal. Criminal courts have no right to force an inebriate inmate of a state hospital to stand trial on an indictment for driving while intoxicated, and such confinement is good cause for refusing to dismiss for delay in prosecution.

Funds to retry issue of sanity—discretion of court. Where a person is under guardianship and confined in a state hospital under an adjudication of insanity, an application in his behalf for an order directing the guardian to pay a substantial sum for the purpose of retrying the issue of insanity is properly denied on a showing by affidavit that two laymen consider the patient sane.

In re Ost, 211-1085; 235 NW 70

3501 Discharge—certificate.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 573

Adjudication of insanity—evidentiary effect. One who has been duly and legally adjudged to be insane, and seeks to regain his liberty under a writ of habeas corpus, has the burden to establish his sanity.

Bettenga v Stewart, 214-1284; 244 NW 279

Presumption of sanity—jury question. Presumptively a person is sane from and after the time such person is discharged from an insane asylum to which he has been committed for treatment. Evidence, expert and nonexpert, reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether an insured was sane at the time a policy of insurance was issued notwithstanding the conceded fact that said insured had, some four years prior to the issuance of the policy, been adjudged insane and committed to an asylum for the insane and had remained there some three years before being granted a discharge.

3536 Organization.

Court clerk as commissioner of insanity. The clerk of the district court may not, in addition to his regular salary, retain the fees collected by him for acting as a commissioner of insanity.

Baldwin v Stewart, 207-1135; 222 NW 348

3540 Jurisdiction — holding under criminal charge.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 207

Exclusive jurisdiction of district court. The district court acquires exclusive jurisdiction to determine the sanity of an indicted person when he is taken into custody under an indictment, and, during the pendency of such indictment, such jurisdiction continues, and attaches under a subsequently returned indictment under which the person is taken into custody. It follows that an adjudication of insanity of such person by the commission of insanity subsequent to the first indictment and prior to the last indictment is a nullity.

3544 Form of information.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 178

Malicious prosecution—want of probable cause—discharge on insanity inquest. The discharge on an insanity inquest of the person alleged to be insane, does not furnish sufficient proof that the person signing the information did so without probable cause.

Dugan v Cap Co., 213-751; 239 NW 697

Want of probable cause—nonallowable presumption. Principle reaffirmed that while malice may be inferred from a total want of probable cause, yet a want of probable cause cannot be inferred from malice, however great.

Dugan v Cap Co., 213-751; 239 NW 697

3552 Findings and order.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 178; '38 AG Op 365

Adjudication of insanity—nonretroactive presumption. An adjudication of insanity creates no presumption that the person in question was insane at any particular period of time prior to said adjudication.

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

Expert and lay opinions— which must yield. An expert opinion that a person was insane at a named time prior to the time when said person was judicially declared insane will not be permitted to outweigh overwhelming lay testimony which strongly tends to establish the contrary, when said expert opinion is based almost wholly on information obtained from said person after she was adjudged insane, and on information obtained from the relatives of said person. (Equity case)

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

Monomania—belief supported by evidence not illusion. Monomania is generally defined as a derangement of the mind on a single subject, but a belief ceases to be an illusion if there is any evidence to support it.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Want of probable cause—discharge on insanity inquest—effect. The discharge on an insanity inquest of the person alleged to be insane, does not furnish sufficient proof that the person signing the information did so without probable cause.

Dugan v Cap Co., 213-751; 239 NW 697

3560 Appeal.

Inquisitions—appeal—special proceeding—no jury. An appeal to the district court from the finding of the county insanity commission is a special proceeding, and, since the legislature did not provide for a jury trial, the issue is triable to the court.

In re Brewer, 224-773; 276 NW 766

Insanity appeal—noncriminal—nonjury—constitutionality. No constitutional rights are violated in trying an appeal from the insanity commission to the court without a jury, since this is not in any way a criminal proceeding.

In re Brewer, 224-773; 276 NW 766

Nonexpert opinion as to insanity. Nonexpert opinion as to unsoundness of mind is inadmissible unless the nonexpert witness first details such facts as tend, in the judgment of the court, to show an abnormal state of mind of the person whose mentality is under investigation.

3577 Habeas corpus.

Insanity—presumption—burden of proof. One judicially held to be insane has the burden to overthrow the presumption that such insane condition continues.

CHAPTER 178

SUPPORT OF INSANE

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26, AG Op 342; '28 AG Op 406; '38 AG Op 66

3581 Liability of county and state.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '26 AG Op 54; '38 AG Op 66

County paying support of insane person—laches of officials imputed to county. When a county was not liable for the support of a person committed to a state institution as insane, and through the negligence and laches of its officials paid such support for about 14 years before objecting, the negligence was imputed to the county, and the bar of laches prevented a recovery for such expenditures from the county which should have paid, but the burden of continuing payments was on the other county from the time payments ceased.

State v Clay County, 226-885; 285 NW 229

Continuing liability of county of legal settlement. A resident of a county who has no legal settlement therein continues, in case of his commitment to a state hospital for the insane, a legal charge upon that particular county of the state wherein he has such legal settlement, and such charge continues until, by the lapse of one year without notice to depart, his residence ripens into a legal settlement, after which he becomes a legal charge upon the county wherein he has both his residence and legal settlement.

State v Story County, 207-1117; 224 NW 232

Insane wife—acquiring legal settlement—county liable for support. Under a statute providing that "the residence of any person found insane who is an inmate of any state institution shall be that existing at the time of admission thereto", when the mother of a family was committed as insane within a few months after moving to another county, the residence at the time of commitment was in the county to which she had moved, and since no warning to depart was served on her, she acquired a legal settlement in the new county at the end of a year, regardless of the residence of her husband at the time, and that county was liable for her support in the institution after the end of the year.

State v Clay County, 226-885; 285 NW 229

Pauper—insanity commitment within year after moving to another county. When, within a few months after a family of paupers moved from Clay county to O'Brien county, the mother was committed as insane, but no finding of her legal settlement was made, the only effect of sending Clay county notice of the commitment and bills incurred was to notify Clay county of the amount expended for which it was liable, because the expenses were incurred within the year after the family moved from Clay county while legal settlement of the family had not been changed, but created no duty in Clay county to contest legal settlement.

State v Clay County, 226-885; 285 NW 229

Legal settlement of pauper—failure of county to determine—liability for care. When a pauper moved to another county, the failure of the county from which she had moved to take steps to have her legal settlement determined did not estop it from claiming that she acquired a legal settlement in the other county, when it was liable for the care of the pauper for a year after moving, and during that time had no reason to dispute the settlement and did not misrepresent or conceal any facts to cause the other county to fail to serve a warning to depart.

State v Clay County, 226-885; 285 NW 229

3582 Finding of legal settlement.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 365

State v Clay County, 226-885; 285 NW 229

3594 Order when nonresidence or unknown settlement appears.

Appeal nonallowable. No appeal lies from a decision of the trial court on a duly joined issue as to the legal settlement of an insane inmate of a state hospital for the insane.

State v Webster County, 209-143; 227 NW 595

3595 Personal liability.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 75, 356; '36 AG Op 383; '38 AG Op 785

Prior statute. Parents are not liable to a county for the support of their adult insane children in the state hospitals for the insane.

Wright Co. v Hagan, 210-795; 231 NW 298

Holding under former statute. Where a county has maintained in a state hospital an insane person who was a member of an incorporated religious and communistic society, the county's statutory right to recover the resulting expense from any person "legally liable" for the support of such insane person does not entitle it to recover such expense from the said society simply on proof that the society had obligated itself by contract to support said member for life. "Legal" liability under the statute is confined strictly to "common-law" liability.

Iowa Co. v Amana Soc., 214-893; 243 NW 299

County's claim for insane support—filing necessary. County's maintenance claim against estate of deceased who was inmate of state insane hospital is not a public rate or tax so as to make the filing of the claim against the estate unnecessary.

In re Wagner, 226-667; 284 NW 425

Compromise of claims by county — power of board. The board of supervisors, on a proper state of facts, has power to compromise the amount due on judgments obtained by the county for support rendered an incompetent in a state hospital for the insane, and to agree, in consideration of the payment of the compromised sum, that a specific tract of land standing in the name of the incompetent and the proceeds and accumulations of said proceeds, shall be exempt from all liability for the future support of said incompetent by the county in said hospital. So held where the land was encumbered (1) by judgment on mortgage foreclosure, (2) by a judgment other than those of the county, (3) by an outstanding tax sale certificate, and (4) by an apparently quite persuasive claim of both homestead rights and ownership in the wife of said incompetent.

Plymouth County v Koehler, 221-1022; 267 NW 106

Indigent's expense — county's reimbursement. In an action by the county against a husband and wife for reimbursement for amount paid by county to the state for the wife's keep at state tubercular sanatorium, fact that wife was admitted to sanatorium through efforts of county soldiers and sailors relief commission would relieve neither her nor her husband from liability to the county for her expense at the sanatorium.

Woodbury County v Harbeck, 224-1142; 278 NW 918

Unallowable attachment. An attachment cannot be legally issued in an action against a ward and his property guardian. Not being legally issuable, the writ cannot be legally levied on the property of the ward and must be discharged on proper motion.

Reason: The ward's property is in custodia legis.

Irregular investigation. The fact that an investigation of a juvenile matter was, at the request of the judge, made by a person prior to the actual appointment of such person as probation officer, but presented to the court after appointment and on the final hearing of the matter, presents no element of illegality such as to disturb the jurisdiction of the court.

Wissnburg v Bradley, 209-813; 229 NW 205; 67 ALR 1075

Presence of probation officer. Proceedings in juvenile court are not rendered illegal because the duly appointed probation officer was not present in court to represent the child when the matter was first taken up and heard in part.

Residence only essential. The jurisdiction of the juvenile court to adjudicate and order the payment by the county of a "pension" to the mother of indigent, dependent minor children depends, inter alia, not on a finding of legal settlement of the mother in the county, within the meaning of §5311, C., '24 [§3828.088, C., '39], but on a finding of residence in the county by the mother for one year.

Pupils of charitable institution. Statute providing that persons of school age who are residents of districts not having a four-year high school course shall be permitted to attend any public high school in the state, construed to extend to wards of a charitable institution—the legislature not intending to discriminate against private, denominational, or parochial schools, nor to bar them from the benefits of statutory provisions.

School Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

School benefits applicable to charitable institutions. A charitable institution, concededly a home-finding agency under statutory authorization, which, however, did not engage in finding homes and did not comply with the law in accepting children and did not comply with adoption law, was nevertheless properly held to be entitled to benefits of school law for the reason that violations of other statutes were immaterial issues.

Spur track to state institution—maintenance cost. After a contract placed the burden on the state to pay the cost of construction, maintenance, and operation of a spur track to the industrial school for boys at Eldora, a state institution, and in a later clause required the railway company to maintain the spur track, the contract as a whole was construed and the apparent ambiguity resolved in a finding that the railroad should do the maintenance work, but that the state should pay the cost.

SUPPORT OF THE POOR

3828.073 "Poor person" defined.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 356; '32 AG Op 192; '38 AG Op 204, 785

Applicability of statute. A person who is admittedly physically and financially unable to support himself is a "poor person" when it appears that he is sent to the county home by the township trustees in the exercise of a wise discretion, and especially is this true when the finding would be justified that the relatives had peremptorily refused longer to support such person.

Bremer Co. v Schroeder, 200-1285; 206 NW 303

Poor person—evidence. Evidence held to show that a person was a "poor" person within the meaning of the statute.

3828.074 Parents and children liable.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 276; '38 AG Op 327, 785, 864

Liability of "legally bound" persons.

Iowa Co. v Amana Soc., 214-893; 243 NW 299

Application—sufficiency. It is not necessary that a poor person personally make application to the township trustees for support in order to render the son liable for support furnished by the county.

Bremer Co. v Schroeder, 200-1285; 206 NW 303

Recovery by county—condition. The county, in order to recover from the parents of a poor person who has been furnished poor relief, must establish that the said parents were able to support said child.

Cherokee County v Smith, 219-490; 258 NW 182

Holding under prior statutes. Parents are not liable for the support of their adult pauper children, unless such support is initiated by an application therefor by or to the township trustees. (§5328, C., '27, [§3828.105, C., '39]).

3828.078 Enforcement of liability.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 356; '32 AG Op 87; '38 AG Op 327, 785

Conditions precedent. In order for a county to recover of a son for support rendered to the pauper father, it is not necessary, as a condition precedent, that the township trustees first make application to the district court and obtain an adjudication of the son's liability.

Bremer Co. v Schroeder, 200-1285; 206 NW 303

3828.079 Notice—hearing.

Necessaries for child—divorce—liability of parent. The father of a minor child is liable for necessary medical and hospital services rendered without his knowledge to the child in an emergency, even tho the mother has obtained a divorce and the custody of said child and has been paid the decreed alimony.

Stech v Holmes, 210-1136; 230 NW 326

Recovery by county — condition precedent. The county, in order to recover from the parents of a poor person who has been furnished poor relief, must establish that the said parents were able to support said child.

Continuing liability of county of legal settlement. A resident of a county who has no legal settlement therein continues, in case of his commitment to a state hospital for the insane, a legal charge upon that particular county of the state wherein he has such legal settlement, and such charge continues until, by the lapse of one year without notice to depart, his residence ripens into a legal settlement, after which he becomes a legal charge upon the county wherein he has both his residence and his legal settlement.

State v Story County, 207-1117; 224 NW 232

Insane wife—county liable for support. Under a statute providing that "the residence of any person found insane who is an inmate of any state institution shall be that existing at the time of admission thereto", when the mother of a family was committed as insane within a few months after moving to another county, the residence at the time of commitment was in the county to which she had moved, and since no warning to depart was served on her, she acquired a legal settlement in the new county at the end of a year, regardless of the residence of her husband at the time, and that county was liable for her support in the institution after the end of the year.

State v Clay County, 226-885; 285 NW 229

Intent to remain—county removal—support.

Audubon Co. v Vogessor, 228- ; 291 NW 135

Involuntary abandonment (?). The fact that an adult person having a legal settlement in one county is, on conviction in said county of a penitentiary offense, immediately paroled by the court on condition that he depart from said county and not return except on named condition, and the fact that he complies with said condition and removes with his family to another county, presents no obstacle to the acquisition by said person of a new legal settlement in the county to which he so removes. The assumption that the acceptance of the conditions of said parole was compulsory and deprived said party of all mental volition to acquire a new settlement is quite unjustified.

State v Story County, 207-1117; 224 NW 232

Legal settlement of pauper — failure of county to determine—liability. When a pauper moved to another county, the failure of the county from which she had moved to take steps to have her legal settlement determined did not estop it from claiming that she acquired a legal settlement in the other county, when it was liable for the care of the pauper for a year after moving, and during that time had no reason to dispute the settlement and did not misrepresent or conceal any facts to cause the other county to fail to serve a warning to depart.

Notice to depart—invalidity. A notice to a nonresident poor person to depart from the county is a nullity unless officially authorized by the township trustees or board of supervisors. The mere fact that the members of the board individually discussed the matter in regular session and "told the chairman to sign the notice" does not constitute such official authorization.

When, within a few months after a family of paupers moved from Clay county to O'Brien county, the mother was committed as insane, but no finding of her legal settlement was made, the only effect of sending Clay county notice of the commitment and bills incurred was to notify Clay county of the amount expended for which it was liable, because the expenses were incurred within the year after the family moved from Clay county while legal settlement of the family had not been changed, but created no duty in Clay county to contest legal settlement.

County paying support of insane person—laches of officials imputed to county. When a county was not liable for the support of a person committed to a state institution as insane, and through the negligence and laches of its officials paid such support for about 14 years before objecting, the negligence was imputed to the county, and the bar of laches prevented a recovery for such expenditures from the county which should have paid, but the burden of continuing payments was on the other county from the time payments ceased.

State v Clay County, 226-885; 285 NW 229

Insanity commitment within year after moving to another county. Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Doherty v Edwards, 226-249; 284 NW 159

Governmental function—political corporations not suable for torts. Counties and school districts, being political or quasi corporations not clothed with full corporate powers as are cities and towns, cannot be sued for negligence, and the question of the exercise of a governmental function is immaterial.

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Mandatory duty to transport pupils. A statute providing that a school board shall furnish transportation to children living two and one-half miles from the school creates a mandatory duty to transport pupils which is a governmental function, but whether the duty be considered as ministerial or governmental, the school district, being a quasi corporation, cannot be sued for failure to furnish such transportation when such right of action is not expressly given by statute.

Bruggeman v Sch. Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

Compelling transportation to be furnished to pupils. When a school district failed to provide transportation for a pupil as required by statute, the pupil's father, who had furnished such transportation after making a demand on the school district, could not recover for such services under quasi contract or contract implied in law, as the statute did not contemplate that the costs of transportation be paid except under an arrangement with the school board, as provided by statute. The proper remedy of the plaintiff was mandamus to compel the school district to perform its mandatory duty.

Bruggeman v Sch. Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

Painting schoolhouse as governmental act—nonliability. A school district in causing its schoolhouse or the rooms thereof to be painted must be deemed as engaged in a governmental function with complete exemption from liability for negligence in so doing. So held where it was urged that the district had impliedly contracted to furnish the workman a "safe place" in which to work.

Ford v School Dist., 223-795; 273 NW 870

Real property—power to acquire. A school district has general power to acquire and hold real property for its legitimate purposes.

Smith v Maresh, 226-552; 284 NW 390

School sites—contract—rescission and cancellation. The purchase by a school board of a schoolhouse site after bonds for such purchase had been duly voted, but prior to any bond levy, and the due issuance of a warrant in payment for such site, are not canceled or rescinded by the subsequent action of the electors in voting to rescind their former action authorizing the bonds.

Looney v School Dist., 201-436; 205 NW 328

School site—title valid as to part—no injunction. A school district's title to its site for a high school is not wholly invalid simply because the size may be greater than the statutory limitation on the amount that can be obtained by condemnation. When the size of the building is not so great as to cover more ground than the statute allows, and when the title, if defective at all, is defective only as to the excess land, an injunction will not lie on the theory that the district had no title.

Smith v Maresh, 226-552; 284 NW 390

School property—assessability. A school district having lots assessable under a city contract for paving and curbing cannot be deemed a "municipality" entering "into a contract" within the meaning of the state budget law (Ch 23, C., '81). In such circumstances, the district is simply a property owner.

Chambers v Housel, 211-314; 233 NW 502

4124 Names.

"Independent district" defined. A "consolidated" school district is an "independent school district" within the meaning of §4230, C., '24, authorizing the school board to elect a superintendent for a period not exceeding three years.

Cons. Dist. v Griffin, 201-63; 206 NW 86

Indictment—immaterial misdescription. In an indictment for the larceny of coal from a school district it is not a fatal defect that the district is described as Grove Township School District instead of the Grove School District Township.

Detaching territory — remaining territory. The statutory authorization for the formation of new rural independent school districts by detaching, in certain instances, territory from an existing independent school district (not consolidated), is not limited by the provisions of the consolidated school district act (§4173, C., '27) providing that the territory remaining after the detaching shall not be less than four sections, said last statute having no application to independent districts not consolidated.

Chambers v Housel, 211-314; 233 NW 502

Contiguous corporations combined by respective boards without submission to vote. In view of its legislative history and the apparent intention of the legislature, the enactment of §4191, C., '35 [§4144.1, C., '39], requiring that proposals to add territory to an existing district be approved separately by majority of voters in each territory affected, did not modify or repeal §4133, C., '35, providing that "* * * boundary lines of contiguous school corporations may be changed by the concurrent action of the respective boards of directors * * * so * * * that one corporation shall be included with the other as a single corporation"; hence, respective boards of directors of contiguous school corporations had authority to combine such school corporations without approval of voters.

Peterson v Sch. Dist., 227-110; 287 NW 275

Limitation. When the boundary line between a school township and an independent school district is also the line between civil townships, the school boards have no power by concurrent action to change such boundary line (§4135, C., '27), notwithstanding the broad and sweeping provisions of §4133 of said code.

CONSOLIDATED SCHOOL DISTRICTS

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 329; '32 AG Op 92

4154 Consolidated corporations.

"Independent" district. A "consolidated" school district is an "independent school district" within the meaning of §4230, C., '24, authorizing the school board to elect a superintendent for a period not exceeding three years.

Cons. Dist. v Griffin, 201-63; 206 NW 86

"Government section" defined. The statutory provisions that consolidated school corporations shall not be organized with less than, nor reduced below, "sixteen government sections" of contiguous territory, do not mean "sixteen square sections" of land, but mean an area equal to sixteen government sections of land.

Duty of district—refusal—right of parent. When a state boundary river renders a portion of a consolidated school district inaccessible to the consolidated school, and the school authorities agree with the parent of grade pupils residing on such inaccessible lands to pay the tuition of said pupils in a school in a foreign state, but later refuse to pay for transporting said pupils to said school (a distance of five miles), the parent may supply the transportation in the foreign state and the district will be liable for the reasonable value thereof.

Dermit v Sch. Dist. 220-344; 261 NW 636

See Riecks v Sch. Dist., 219-101; 257 NW 546

Mandatory duty to transport pupils—governmental function. A statute providing that a school board shall furnish transportation to children living two and one-half miles from the school creates a mandatory duty to transport pupils which is a governmental function, but whether the duty be considered as ministerial or governmental, the school district, being a quasi corporation, cannot be sued for failure to furnish such transportation when such right of action is not expressly given by statute.

Bruggeman v Sch. Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

Transportation furnished pupils—no implied contract by board to pay for services. When a school district failed to provide transportation for a pupil as required by statute, the pupil's father, who had taken the child to school, could not recover for his services on a theory of contract implied in fact when there was no meeting of the minds or agreement that he should be compensated for such transportation, as no promise to pay can be inferred from the refusal of the school to furnish transportation upon demand and the subsequent transportation of the child by the father, as the school was in no position to reject such services.

Bruggeman v Sch. Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

Compelling transportation to be furnished to pupils. When a school district failed to provide transportation for a pupil as required by statute, the pupil's father, who had furnished such transportation after making a demand on the school district, could not recover for such services under quasi contract or contract implied in law, as the statute did not contemplate that the costs of transportation be paid except under an arrangement with the school board, as provided by statute. The proper remedy of the plaintiff was mandamus to compel the school district to perform its mandatory duty.

Bruggeman v Sch. Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

Mandamus—board's discretion—remedy by appeal. Mandamus will not lie to compel a consolidated school board to transport pupils when by statute it is also given a discretion to suspend service and to require a two mile transportation by the parent to the established bus route. A parent dissatisfied with the school board's procedure has an adequate law remedy by appeal to the county superintendent.

Lanphier v School Dist., 224-1035; 277 NW 740; 118 ALR 801

Suspending service—parent's duty. A consolidated school board in providing transportation for pupils has a discretion to suspend service when roads are impassable and to require parent to transport children not more than two miles to the established bus route.

Lanphier v School Dist., 224-1035; 277 NW 740; 118 ALR 801

Illegal use of busses. School busses of consolidated school districts may legally be employed, and funds for their operation may legally be expended, for the one purpose only of transporting to and from school, children of school age who live more than a mile from school.

Schmidt v Blair, 203-1016; 213 NW 593

Holding under prior statute. A consolidated school district, the former territory of which furnished no high school instruction, is liable for the reasonable cost of transporting children to the grade schools of another district pending the time during which the pupils are deprived of a grade school owing to delay in constructing the new central consolidated school building, but is not liable for the cost of transporting pupils similarly situated, but transported to the high school of another district.

Tow v Sch. Dist., 200-1254; 206 NW 94

4179.1 Extra curricular use.

Holding under prior statute. School busses of consolidated school districts may legally be employed, and funds for their operation may legally be expended, for the one purpose only of transporting to and from school, children of school age who live more than a mile from school.

4180 Transportation routes—suspension of service.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 663

Mandamus—board's discretion—remedy by appeal. Mandamus will not lie to compel a consolidated school board to transport pupils when by statute it is also given a discretion to suspend service and to require a two mile transportation by the parent to the established bus route. A parent dissatisfied with the school board's procedure has an adequate law remedy by appeal to the county superintendent.

Lanphier v School Dist., 224-1035; 277 NW 740; 118 ALR 801

4181 By parent—instruction in another school.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 663

Transportation—suspending service—parent's duty. A consolidated school board in providing transportation for pupils has a discretion to suspend service when roads are impassable and to require parent to transport children not more than two miles to the established bus route.

Lanphier v School Dist., 224-1035; 277 NW 740; 118 ALR 801

Mandamus—board's discretion—remedy by appeal. Mandamus will not lie to compel a consolidated school board to transport pupils when by statute it is also given a discretion to suspend service and to require a two mile transportation by the parent to the established bus route. A parent dissatisfied with the school board's procedure has an adequate law remedy by appeal to the county superintendent.

Lanphier v School Dist., 224-1035; 277 NW 740; 118 ALR 801

4182 Contracts for transportation—rules.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 413

Contracts—termination without cause. A contract for the transportation of pupils for an entire school year, but containing a reservation by the board of right to terminate the contract at any time, enables the board to terminate the contract peremptorily at its pleasure, and without assigning any reason for such action.

Black v School Dist., 206-1386; 222 NW 350

Liability in re performance of governmental acts. The principle that when the officers, servants, or agents of a municipality are engaged in performing a governmental act for and on behalf of the municipality they are not liable in damages consequent on their negligence in doing the act, applies to a person who, with the knowledge and acquiescence of a school board, was operating for the school district a bus in the transportation of children to and from school, even tho the person so operating the bus was acting at the time in lieu of the person with whom the district had actually contracted for the transportation. [Overruled, see Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608.]

Hibbs v School Dist., 218-841; 251 NW 606; 34 NCCA 468; 37 NCCA 711

School bus driver as independent contractor—nongovernmental function. A school bus driver, furnishing his own bus, under a contract embodying certain conditions to transport school children, but not under the supervision, control, and regulation of the board, is an independent contractor liable for his own negligence and not an employee exercising a governmental function.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

4188 Dissolution of corporation.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 41; '28 AG Op 126, 218

Powers of board—employment of counsel. The board of directors of a school corporation has implied power in good faith to employ attorneys to defend against a proceeding for the dissolution of the district and to contract for a reasonable compensation for such services.

Rural Dist. v Daly, 201-286; 207 NW 124

Outstanding bonds as basis for discretion. Refunding bonds issued by a consolidated school district for the purpose of paying off bonds originally issued by a district which was included in the consolidated district are bonds within the meaning of this section.

Sarby v Morey, 207-521; 221 NW 492

Absent voters law—implied power of superintendent. The county superintendent, under her statutory powers and duty to call elections in consolidated districts to vote on the question of dissolution of the district, has implied power to receive applications for ballots by, and to deliver ballots to, electors who wish to cast their ballots under the absent voters law.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 129

Appeal from consent judgment. An election contestant may not appeal from the judgment of the contest board holding the election in question illegal and providing for the calling of a new election by said board, when he consented to the entry of such judgment; nor may an estoppel to question such appeal be based upon the fact that the official board of which appellees were members refused to recognize the validity of the new election called by the contest board.

DIRECTORS—POWERS AND DUTIES

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 464; '38 AG Op 167

4220 Organization.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 140; '36 AG Op 147; '38 AG Op 362

Failure to notify director. The action of a school board at an annual meeting will not be invalidated because a member was not notified of the meeting because he was absent from the state and his whereabouts was not definitely known.

Cons. Dist. v Griffin, 201-63; 206 NW 86

4221 Special meetings.

Special meeting on oral notice. A special meeting of the board of directors of a school corporation is legally called on oral notice to the directors by the secretary, at the direction of the president.

Mershon v Sch. Dist., 204-221; 215 NW 235

4222 Appointment of secretary and treasurer.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 164, 350

4223 Quorum.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 502; '28 AG Op 89; '36 AG Op 173; '38 AG Op 362

Legal quorum. Three members of a board of school directors of five members constitute a legal quorum to elect a successor to one of said three members who had theretofore resigned, with the intent (shared in by his fellow members) that the resignation would not take effect until his successor had been elected and had qualified.

Cowles v Sch. Dist., 204-689; 216 NW 83

Majority of quorum. Vacancies on an official board (which is empowered to fill vacancies) may be filled by a majority of a quorum, in the absence of a statute which requires a majority of the entire membership of the board.

Cowles v Sch. Dist., 204-689; 216 NW 83

4223.2 Vacancies filled by board—qualification—tenure.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 199

De facto officers—collateral attack. Members of a school board who are, in supposed compliance with the law and in good faith, elected to fill vacancies caused by resignations, and who in good faith act as such members, are at least directors de facto, and their official actions may not be collaterally assailed.

Cowles v Sch. Dist., 204-689; 216 NW 83

4224 General rules.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 77, 112; '30 AG Op 337; '34 AG Op 657; '36 AG Op 373; '38 AG Op 230, 800; AG Op April 12, '39

4225 Use of tobacco.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 337

4226 School year.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op July 11, '39

4227 Number of schools—attendance—terms.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 95

Compulsory attendance—power of board and duty of custodian. A school board may validly establish an ungraded school along with and as a part of the district's established system of graded schools, and may, so long as it does not act unreasonably, validly require the proper custodian of a child over 7 and under 16 years of age to cause said child to attend said ungraded school only, provided said child is continued in the public schools. So held as to a child who was in physical and mental condition to attend school but was unable to make the grades in the graded schools.

State v Ghrst, 222-1069; 270 NW 376

Directors—nonrevocation of official action. The official determination of school directors may not be deemed revoked because of the fact that the individual directors knew of a violation of such determination by one member of the board, and did not individually object to such violation.

Mulhall v Pfannkuch, 206-1139; 221 NW 833

4228 Contracts—election of teachers.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 375; '34 AG Op 269; '36 AG Op 119, 392, 474; '38 AG Op 241

Contract for supplies—permissible duration. School boards may validly bind their school districts by reasonable contracts for ordinary school supplies, tho such contracts are not fully performable during the school year in which they were executed or during the school year following.

Dodds Co. v Sch. Dist., 220-812; 263 NW 522

Janitor—soldiers' preference—removal.

Durst v Board, 228- ; 292 NW 73

Illegal action—nonduty to appeal. The oral employment by a subdirector, under authority from the school board, of a teacher, and the formal, written, statutory contract evidencing such employment signed by the president of the board and by the teacher, are not subject to review by the school board, and the assumption of such power by the board may be ignored by the teacher without appeal to the county superintendent.

Shill v School Twp., 209-1020; 227 NW 412

School board's discretion not controllable by mandamus. Re-employment of a teacher is a matter wholly within the discretionary power vested in the school board and may not be controlled through the courts by mandamus.

Driver v School Dist., 224-393; 276 NW 37

Nondisqualifying interest. The adoption by a school board of a resolution is not rendered nugatory because of the affirmative vote of a particular member, by the fact that, subsequent to the adoption, the private corporation of which the particular member of the board was an officer entered into a contract with a third party for the carrying out of the purposes and objects of said resolution.

Security Bk. v Bagley, 202-701; 210 NW 947; 49 ALR 705

Pension—employment prerequisite—no relief outside issues. A public school teacher, after 30 years service and while lacking only six months more service to be entitled to a pension, cannot mandamus the school board to compel her re-employment, and, such re-employment being the relief sought, a court may not go outside the pleaded issues and grant such a pension as the school board may have given.

Driver v School Dist., 224-393; 276 NW 37

4229 Contracts with teachers.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 345, 366; '30 AG Op 375; '32 AG Op 209; '34 AG Op 269, 341; '36 AG Op 119, 134, 392; '38 AG Op 241, 362

Oral extension. An oral extension of time for teaching under a teacher's contract (under which no services were rendered) cannot be recognized.

Krutsinger v Sch. Twp., 219-291; 257 NW 797

Duty of president to sign contract. When a subdirector of a school township orally and under due authority from the school board employs a teacher, the president of the board has no discretion to refuse to sign the formal written contract required by statute.

Shill v School Twp., 209-1020; 227 NW 412

Employment—legality. The official action of a board of school directors in authorizing each subdirector to employ in his subdistrict the teacher of his choice necessarily constitutes no authority to a subdirector to hire a teacher in a district the school of which the board orders closed.

Mulhall v Pfannkuch, 206-1139; 221 NW 833

Employment. Principle reaffirmed that valid employment of a teacher must be made through the medium of a written contract duly signed by the teacher and the president.

Shackelford v Dist. Twp., 203-243; 212 NW 467

Issue as to terms of contract. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a contract had been entered into with a teacher.

Krutsinger v Township, 219-291; 257 NW 797

Modification by extrinsic matters. In an action at law by a teacher upon a written contract of employment, the rights of the parties are necessarily determinable by the actual terms of the contract, unmodified by extraneous matters or circumstances.

Miner v Sch. Dist., 212-973; 234 NW 817

Nonattendance of teacher at school—effect. A duly employed teacher, in order to recover on her contract of employment, need not show that she was in daily attendance at the school-house, when no pupils attended the school, and when she, in compliance with the direction of the board, held herself in readiness to teach whenever notified that pupils would attend the school.

James v School Twp., 210-1059; 229 NW 750

Nonduty to seek employment elsewhere. A duly employed teacher, who, in compliance with the direction of the board, holds herself in readiness to teach but is furnished no pupils, need not, in an action on her contract, show that she made any effort to secure employment elsewhere as a teacher.

James v School Twp., 210-1059; 229 NW 750
See Shill v School Twp., 209-1020; 227 NW 412

Ratification of contract. A contract of employment of a teacher in a public school, signed by the teacher but not signed by the president of the board is ratified for the full term of the contract by the action of the board in accepting the services of the teacher, and paying her therefor, with knowledge of said contract.

Smith v School Dist., 216-1047; 250 NW 126

Termination on notice. A provision in a public school contract authorizing either party to the contract to terminate it by giving written notice of such termination for a named number of days, is not violative of, nor inconsistent with either this section or §4237, C., '27. (Holding by minority of court.)

Miner v Sch. Dist., 212-973; 234 NW 817

Termination on notice—validity. A provision in a public school contract which authorizes the school district to terminate the contract on stated notice at any time and for any reason is valid, and if a termination is effected under such contract authorization and not under statutory authorization (§4237, C., '35), no appeal will lie to the county superintendent or, in turn, to the state superintendent. In other words, neither superintendent has jurisdiction to review such a discharge.

Ind. Dist. v Samuelson, 222-1063; 270 NW 434

4230 Superintendent—term.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 209; '36 AG Op 119

Power to employ. A "consolidated" school district is an "independent school district" within the meaning of this section.

Cons. Dist. v Griffin, 201-63; 206 NW 86

4231 Nonemployment of teacher—when.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 95, 106, 135; '30 AG Op 222; '34 AG Op 155; '38 AG Op 308, 681

Insufficient attendance—duty to close school. A school is legally closeable whenever the average attendance in said school the last preceding term was less than five pupils irrespective of the pupils who reside within the district, but who attend school outside the district.

Kruse v Sch. Dist., 209-64; 227 NW 594

Insufficient attendance—duty to provide school facilities. Where a resident of a school district does not send his grade school children to his home-district school, and the school is legally closed because, during the preceding term, the attendance was less than five pupils (§4231, C., '27), he may not compel the district to pay the cost of tuition and transportation of his said children to a school outside his district. (§4232, C., '27.)

Kruse v School Dist., 209-64; 227 NW 594

Legality. The official action of a board of school directors in authorizing each subdirector to employ in his subdistrict the teacher of his choice necessarily constitutes no authority to a subdirector to hire a teacher in a district the school of which the board orders closed.

Mulhall v Pfannkuch, 206-1139; 221 NW 833

Teachers—employment—mandamus. Principle reaffirmed that, in an action of mandamus against the president and secretary of a school board to compel the execution of a teacher's contract, the validity of the action of the directors in closing the school in question may not be inquired into.

Mulhall v Pfannkuch, 206-1139; 221 NW 833

4233.1 School privileges when school closed.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 248; '34 AG Op 321, 668; '38 AG Op 583, 584, 681

Duty to provide school facilities. Where a resident of a school district does not send his grade school children to his home district school, and the school is legally closed because during the preceding term the attendance was less than five pupils (§4231, C., '27), he may not compel the district to pay the cost of tuition and transportation of his said children to a school outside his district.

Kruse v Sch. Dist., 209-64; 227 NW 594

4233.2 County superintendent—duties.

4233.3 Tuition.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 668; '38 AG Op 583, 674

4233.4 Transportation.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 212; '34 AG Op 321, 668; '36 AG Op 603; '38 AG Op 17, 234, 524, 566, 584

Liability in performance of governmental acts. The principle that when the officers, servants, or agents of a municipality are engaged in performing a governmental act for and on behalf of the municipality they are not liable in damages consequent on their negligence in doing the act, applies to a person who, with the knowledge and acquiescence of a school board, was operating for the school district a bus in the transportation of children to and from school, even tho the person so operating the bus was acting at the time in lieu of the person with whom the district had actually contracted for the transportation. [Overruled, see Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608.]

Hibbs v School Dist., 218-841; 251 NW 606; 34 NCCA 468; 37 NCCA 711

School bus driver as independent contractor—nongovernmental function. A school bus driver furnishing his own bus under a contract embodying certain conditions to transport school children, but not under the supervision, control, and regulation of the board, is an independent contractor liable for his own negligence and not an employee exercising a governmental function.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Power of board. The school board of a non-consolidated school district has ample power to provide for the transportation to and from school of pupils living an unreasonable distance from the school. (Holding under §§4232, 4233, 4375, 4376, C., '31, now repealed.)

Hibbs v School Dist., 218-841; 251 NW 606; 4 NCCA (NS) 3

Refusal to furnish transportation. A school board which closes its school for want of the necessary five pupils is under a mandatory duty to provide transportation for its pupils, if any, to some other district as provided by statute, and in case of failure to perform such duty, the parent should seek relief in court, not by appeal to the county superintendent.

Riecks v School Dist., 219-101; 257 NW 546

Compelling transportation to be furnished to pupils. When a school district failed to provide transportation for a pupil as required by statute, the pupil's father, who had furnished such transportation after making a demand on the school district, could not recover for such services under quasi contract or contract implied in law, as the statute did not contemplate that the costs of transportation be paid except under an arrangement with the school board, as provided by statute. The proper remedy of the plaintiff was mandamus to compel the school district to perform its mandatory duty.

Bruggeman v Sch. Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

Mandatory duty to transport pupils—governmental function. A statute providing that a school board shall furnish transportation to children living two and one-half miles from the school creates a mandatory duty to transport pupils which is a governmental function, but whether the duty be considered as ministerial or governmental, the school district, being a quasi corporation, cannot be sued for failure to furnish such transportation when such right of action is not expressly given by statute.

Bruggeman v Sch. Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

Transportation furnished pupils—no implied contract by board to pay for services. When a school district failed to provide transportation for a pupil as required by statute, the pupil's father, who had taken the child to school, could not recover for his services on a theory of contract implied in fact when there was no meeting of the minds or agreement that he should be compensated for such transportation, as no promise to pay can be inferred from the refusal of the school to furnish transportation upon demand and the subsequent transportation of the child by the father, as the school was in no position to reject such services.

4237 Discharge of teacher.

Appeal as remedy. See under §4298
Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 77; '30 AG Op 185

Discharge on notice—validity. A provision in a public school contract authorizing either party to the contract to terminate it by giving written notice of such termination for a named number of days, is not violative of, nor inconsistent with either §4229, C., '27, or this section. (Holding by minority of court.)

Miner v Sch. Dist., 212-973; 234 NW 817

Due process of law. A written contract between a teacher and a school board is necessarily accompanied by all statutory provisions which govern the original and appellate procedure for the discharge of such teacher. Having by the very act of contracting, legally consented to such procedure, the teacher may not assert that it does not afford him due process in a constitutional sense.

Chehock v Sch. Dist., 210-258; 228 NW 585

Jurisdiction of courts. A teacher who has been discharged by the board on charges of incompetency, after due notice to the teacher and hearing, may not maintain an action in the courts for damages consequent on such discharge.

Courtright v Sch. Dist., 203-26; 212 NW 368

Informal procedure—effect. A school board which has acquired jurisdiction in a proceeding for the discharge of a teacher, and over the teacher affected, does not lose such jurisdiction by conducting the hearing informally in the matter of evidence and procedure.

Chehock v Sch. Dist., 210-258; 228 NW 585

Informality of procedure—effect. The discharge of a teacher by the school board on supporting evidence will not be deemed illegal because of the marked informality of the proceedings, when the record reveals the presence of the elements of jurisdiction, to wit: charges before the board of incompetency on the part of the teacher, and a hearing on said charges at which the teacher was present and in which she participated.

Schrader v Sch. Dist., 221-799; 266 NW 473

Action for salary—insufficient defense. In an action by a teacher to recover salary accrued and unpaid at the time of her discharge by the board, it is no defense that the teacher did not make the report required of teachers at the close of the term (§4339, C., '35), said teacher having been discharged prior to the close of said term.

Schrader v Sch. Dist., 221-799; 266 NW 473

Contract—action on—demurrer. A petition which seeks recovery of the compensation arising under a contract for teaching, but which pleads a statutory discharge of plaintiff by the board of directors, is demurrable, even tho plaintiff also pleads that his appeal from the discharge to the superintendent of public instruction was dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Streiffeler v Sch. Dist., 210-780; 231 NW 325

Contract of employment—termination on notice—validity. A provision in a public school contract which authorizes the school district to terminate the contract on stated notice at any time and for any reason, is valid, and if a termination is effected under such contract authorization and not under statutory authorization, no appeal will lie to the county superintendent or, in turn, to the state superintendent. In other words, neither superintendent has jurisdiction to review such a discharge.

Ind. Dist. v Samuelson, 222-1063; 270 NW 434

Illegal action—nonduty to appeal. The oral employment by a subdirector, under authority from the school board, of a teacher, and the formal, written, statutory contract evidencing such employment signed by the president of the board and by the school teacher are not subject to review by the school board; and the assumption of such power by the board may be ignored by the teacher without appeal to the county superintendent.

Shill v Sch. Twp., 209-1020; 227 NW 412

Wrongful discharge—duty to seek employment. A teacher wrongfully discharged is under obligation to exercise reasonable diligence to secure like employment in the same locality—not like employment at distant places, or similar employment of a lower or different grade.

Shill v Sch. Twp., 209-1020; 227 NW 412

See James v Sch. Twp., 210-1059; 229 NW 750

Appeal—dismissal—effect. Where a teacher appeals to the superintendent of public instruction from an order of the board of directors discharging the teacher, the dismissal of the appeal by said superintendent on the ground of want of jurisdiction cannot be given the legal effect of reversing the said order of discharge.

Streiffeler v Sch. Dist., 210-780; 231 NW 325

Appeal (?) or action in court (?). A teacher who is discharged by a school board, under proceedings over which it had jurisdiction, must seek relief by appeal to the county superintendent. On the other hand, if the board discharges a teacher under proceedings over which it had not acquired jurisdiction, the teacher may sue in the courts for breach of contract.

4245 Employment of counsel.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Jan. 18, '39

Employment of counsel. A school board has legal authority to employ an attorney at the expense of the district to defend the action of the board in contracting with one teacher and in refusing to contract with another, even tho the actions in which the issue directly or indirectly arises are actions in form personally against the teacher and individual members of the board.

Cowles v Sch. Dist., 204-689; 216 NW 83

Powers of board. The board of directors of a school corporation has implied power in good faith to employ attorneys to defend against a proceeding for the dissolution of the district and to contract for a reasonable compensation for such services.

Rural Dist. v Daly, 201-286; 207 NW 124

Employment of county attorney. School boards are under no mandatory duty to secure the services of the county attorney in litigation affecting the corporate affairs of the school districts, even tho the statute (§5180, C., '24) does require such officers to give legal advice to such boards.

Rural Dist. v Daly, 201-286; 207 NW 124

Informal employment of attorney—ratification. An informal employment of attorneys by the directors of a school district in a matter as to which the district had a right to employ attorneys, is fully ratified by the good faith formal action of the board, with full knowledge of the facts, in allowing the claim of the attorneys.

COURSES OF STUDY

Course of study—discretion. The directors have a fair discretion as to the method to be employed in teaching a subject, which the electors have directed to be taught—a discretion not controllable by mandamus.

Neilan v Board, 200-860; 205 NW 506

Courses of study—discretion. The power of directors to prescribe courses of study embraces the discretion merely to authorize, without expense to the district or the pupils, the installation in the schools of a noncompulsory, copyrighted system of thrift instruction which necessarily contemplates the deposit of the child's savings in some bank or banks selected without dictation by the board.

Security Bk. v Bagley, 202-701; 210 NW 947; 49 ALR 705

4254 Medium of instruction.

Discussion. See 9 ILB 123—Foreign languages in private schools

Foreign language instruction. The right of a person to teach a foreign language in a private or parochial school, and the right of a parent to have his child so instructed in such schools, are constitutional rights guaranteed by the 14th amendment to the federal constitution. Dismissal of appeal when question moot. Saner v Sch. Bd., 211-1201; 235 NW 291

Unvaccinated school children. The appellate court will be slow to interfere with an order by the trial court refusing a temporary injunction against the enforcement by a school board of its order which temporarily excluded unvaccinated pupils from the public school; and especially will the appellate court decline to disturb such refusal when it affirmatively appears that the order of the board has expired ex vi termini.

Consent of superintendent—discretion. The county superintendent has discretion to refuse to consent that a pupil residing more than two miles from its home school may (at the expense of the pupil's home district) attend a much nearer school in an adjoining but different school corporation.

Moles v Daland, 220-1170; 264 NW 74

Nonconsent of superintendent—certiorari to review. Certiorari will lie to review the discretion of the county superintendent of schools in refusing to consent that a pupil, residing in one school corporation, may (at the expense of the pupil's district) attend school in an adjoining but different school corporation.

No high school in district—attendance in other district—pupils of charitable institution. Statute providing that persons of school age who are residents of districts not having a four-year high school course shall be permitted to attend any public high school in the state construed to extend to wards of a charitable institution—the legislature not intending to discriminate against private, denominational, or parochial schools, nor to bar them from the benefits of statutory provisions.

Sch. Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

Residence for high school purposes. Children of school age who are so apprenticed to a charitable institution that such institution is their only home until they reach the age of 21 years become residents of the school district in which such charitable institution is located; and if such district does not maintain a high school, such children may attend high school in some other district which does maintain such school and the tuition for such schooling shall be paid by the district of which the child is a resident, as aforesaid.

Salem Dist. v Kiel, 206-967; 221 NW 519

Pupils—duty of district to transport. When a state boundary river renders a portion of a consolidated school district inaccessible to the consolidated school, and the school authorities agree with the parent of grade pupils, residing on such inaccessible lands, to pay the tuition of said pupils in a school in a foreign state, but later refuse to pay for transporting said pupils to said school (a distance of five miles), the parent may supply the transportation in the foreign state and the district will be liable for the reasonable value thereof.

Dermit v Sch. Dist., 220-344; 261 NW 636

Wards of charitable institution from different district—tuition. In dispute over school district's liability for tuition of high school pupils who were wards of a charitable institution located in a school district which had no high school, and who attended high school in the district seeking to collect the tuition, the court properly held, under statute making the district of residence liable, that the children were residents of the school district in which the institution was located. (New statute, see '39 Code, section 4275.1)

Sch. Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

4275.1 Children from charitable institution.

Holding under prior statute. In dispute over school district's liability for tuition of high school pupils who were wards of a charitable institution located in a school district which had no high school, and who attended high school in the district seeking to collect the tuition, the court properly held, under statute making the district of residence liable, that the children were residents of the school district in which the institution was located.

4276 Requirements for admission.

Att. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 424; '32 AG Op 56; '36 AG Op 145, 146, 188; '38 AG Op 632, 674; AG Op Jan. 27, '39

Statutes — construction — “shall” — when synonymous with “may”. Statute providing that person applying for admission to high school shall present affidavit of parent or guardian construed to be directory rather than mandatory, the rule being that the word “shall” is generally construed to be mandatory, but where no right or benefit depends on its imperative use it may be, and often is, treated as synonymous with “may”.

Sch. Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

Liability for tuition—affidavit—failure to file. Where statute required person applying for admission to high school in another district to present affidavit that applicant is a resident of a school district of the state, and such affidavit was not filed, court properly held that such affidavit was not mandatory, and that school officials could waive such affidavit—the legislature not intending to allow a school district to escape liability for tuition because of failure to require such affidavit, particularly where statute was fully complied with in respect to filing certificate of proficiency.

Sch. Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

4277 Tuition fees—payment.

Att. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 217, 238; '28 AG Op 112, 210, 232; '30 AG Op 336; '32 AG Op 128, 172; '34 AG Op 255, 575, 668; '36 AG Op 146, 183, 604; '38 AG Op 69, 95, 516, 524, 566, 825, 828; AG Op Aug. 16, '39

Wards of charitable institution from different district. In dispute over school district's liability for tuition of high school pupils who were wards of a charitable institution located in a school district which had no high school, and who attended high school in the district seeking to collect the tuition, the court properly held, under statute making the district of residence liable, that the children were residents of the school district in which the institution was located. (New statute, see '39 Code, section 4275.1)

Sch. Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

4278 Collection of tuition fees.

Att. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 429; '34 AG Op 600, 668; '36 AG Op 146, 567

Statutory tuition reimbursement without notice—due process. The statute providing for the collection of tuition fees by one school district from another is not unconstitutional under the due process clause because not requiring a notice and hearing, because a school district is not a person, as contemplated by the constitution. It is purely a creature of statute, having no power except that granted by the legislature, and so its funds are under legislative control.

Lincoln Dist. v Redfield Dist., 226-298; 283 NW 881

Action—equity retaining jurisdiction on counterclaim—law issues. An action in equity by one school district to enjoin another school district and the county treasurer from transferring to the defendant school certain funds claimed to be due from the plaintiff school as tuition, remains in equity altho the defendant school files a cross-petition raising issues at law as to determination of the amount due, if any, and for judgment accordingly, since equity, acquiring jurisdiction, may determine all issues.

Lincoln Dist. v Redfield Dist., 226-298; 283 NW 881

Tuition transfer—county treasurer—joinder on cross-petition unnecessary. In an equitable action between school districts to prevent a statutory transfer by a county treasurer of funds in payment of tuition, a cross-petition of the defendant school district, not joined in by the county treasurer, may not be stricken therefrom, inasmuch as the county treasurer has no investment therein and is not a necessary party thereto.

Lincoln Dist. v Redfield Dist., 226-298; 283 NW 881

Wards of charitable institution from different district. In dispute over school district's liability for tuition of high school pupils who were wards of a charitable institution located in a school district which had no high school, and who attended high school in the district seeking to collect the tuition, the court properly held, under statute making the district of residence liable, that the children were residents of the school district in which the institution was located. 4283 Tuition in charitable institutions.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 567; '38 AG Op 569

Residence for high school purposes. Children of school age who are so apprenticed to a charitable institution that such institution is their only home until they reach the age of 21 years become residents of the school district in which such charitable institution is located; and if such district does not maintain a high school, such children may attend high school in some other district which does maintain such school (§4275, C., '27), and the tuition for such schooling shall be paid by the district of which the child is a resident, as aforesaid.

Salem Dist. v Kiel, 206-967; 221 NW 519

4283.01 Tuition when in boarding home.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 569

Children in private charitable institution—not public charges. Statute providing that state shall pay tuition of public charges living in a children's boarding home is not available as a defense in school district's action for tuition when children were supported by Lutheran Society and neither the state nor any political subdivision contributed to their support.

Sch. Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

Payment of tuition—retroaction—intention of legislature. Statute enacted in 1937 providing for payment of tuition of wards of charitable institution attending public schools held not retroactive in action involving liability for tuition incurred for years prior to that date.

ANALYSIS

- I APPEAL IN GENERAL
- II APPEAL TO SUPERINTENDENT AS SOLE REMEDY
- III PERMISSIBLE COURT ACTION

I APPEAL IN GENERAL

Jurisdiction—strict construction. The jurisdiction of the superintendent of public instruction over appeals from decisions and orders of a county superintendent cannot, by the conduct of a party to the appeal, be enlarged beyond the jurisdiction actually conferred by law.

Ind. Dist. v Samuelson, 222-1063; 270 NW 484

Illegal action—nonduty to appeal. The oral employment by a subdirector, under authority from the school board, of a teacher, and the formal, written, statutory contract evidencing such employment, signed by the president of the board and by the teacher, are not subject to review by the school board; and the assumption of such power by the board may be ignored by the teacher without appeal to the county superintendent.

Shill v School Twp., 209-1020; 227 NW 412

Location of school—no injunctive relief. The determination of the location of site of a new high school is within the power of the school board and its decision cannot be controlled by injunction.

Smith v Maresh, 226-552; 284 NW 390

Teachers—contract of employment—termination on notice—validity. A provision in a public school contract which authorizes the school district to terminate the contract on stated notice at any time and for any reason is valid, and if a termination is effected under such contract authorization and not under statutory authorization (§4237, C., '35), no appeal will lie to the county superintendent or in turn to the state superintendent. In other words, neither superintendent has jurisdiction to review such a discharge.

Ind. Dist. v Samuelson, 222-1063; 270 NW 484

II APPEAL TO SUPERINTENDENT AS SOLE REMEDY

Appeal—affidavit—sufficiency. The "affidavit" as the basis of an appeal to the county superintendent is sufficient even tho made by one who is a nonappellant and a nonresident of the subdistrict where the controversy exists, when he is a resident of the school district and a taxpayer in the subdistrict and a patron of the school therein and when the affidavit is filed with the county superintendent by the actual appellants.

Sanderson v Board, 211-768; 234 NW 216

Jurisdiction of courts. A teacher who has been discharged by the board of directors on charges of incompetency, after due notice to the teacher and hearing, may not maintain an action in the courts for damages consequent on such discharge.

Courtright v Sch. Dist., 203-26; 212 NW 368

Proper review of board action. When school directors are invested by statute with control over a named subject matter, their action with reference to such subject matter must be reviewed through an appeal to the county superintendent, and not through a resort to the courts; and this is true howsoever inexpedient, improper, and ill-advised the action may appear to be.

Security Bk. v Bagley, 202-701; 210 NW 947; 49 ALR 705

Transporting consolidated school pupils—board's discretion—remedy by appeal. Mandamus will not lie to compel a consolidated school board to transport pupils when by statute it is also given a discretion to suspend service and to require a two mile transportation by the parent to the established bus route. A parent dissatisfied with the school board's procedure has an adequate law remedy by appeal to the county superintendent.

Lanphier v School Dist., 224-1035; 277 NW 740; 118 ALR 801

III PERMISSIBLE COURT ACTION

Teachers—discharge—appeal (?) or action in court (?). A teacher who is discharged by a school board under proceedings over which it had jurisdiction must seek relief by appeal to the county superintendent. On the other hand, if the board discharges a teacher under proceedings over which it had not acquired jurisdiction, the teacher may sue in the courts for breach of contract.

Schrader v School Dist., 221-799; 266 NW 473

Transportation—refusal to furnish—remedy. A school board which closes its school for want of the necessary five pupils is under a mandatory duty to provide transportation for its pupils, if any, to some other district as provided by statute, and in case of failure to perform such duty, the parent should seek relief in court, not by appeal to the county superintendent.

Riecks v School Dist., 219-101; 257 NW 546
See Dermit v School Dist., 220-344; 261 NW 636

4299 Notice—transcript—hearing.

Appearance in lieu of notice. Failure of the county superintendent to fully comply with the statute relative to notifying adversely interested parties of an appeal is cured by the voluntary appearance of said parties.

Sanderson v Board, 211-768; 234 NW 216

4300 Hearing—shorthand reporter—decision.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 57

4301 Witnesses—fees—collection.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 452

4302 Appeal to state superintendent.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 149; '30 AG Op 208; '32 AG Op 57

Jurisdiction—strict construction. The state superintendent's power over appeals cannot be enlarged beyond jurisdiction actually conferred by law.

Ind. Dist. v Samuelson, 222-1063; 270 NW 434

Appeal from original order. No appeal lies to the superintendent of public instruction from an original order or action of a county superintendent. In other words, the right of appeal to the state superintendent is strictly confined to those decisions or orders that originate with a board of directors of a school corporation.

Field v Samuelson, 212-786; 233 NW 687

Appeal—dismissal—effect. Where a teacher appeals to the superintendent of public instruction from an order of the board of directors discharging the teacher, the dismissal of the appeal by said superintendent on the ground of want of jurisdiction cannot be given the legal right of reversing the said order of discharge.

Streyffeler v Sch. Dist., 210-780; 231 NW 325

Sites—appeal—jurisdiction of state superintendent. The superintendent of public instruction on an appeal involving an order of a school board locating a schoolhouse site has no jurisdiction, after affirming the order of the board, to enter an order directing the school board to provide transportation for certain pupils, the matter of transportation not being mentioned in the order locating the site.

Reason: The jurisdiction of said officers on appeal is strictly appellate.

Albrecht v School Dist., 216-968; 250 NW 129

CHAPTER 220

PRESIDENT, SECRETARY, AND TREASURER

4304 President—duties.

Delegation of authority. A school board may very properly delegate to its president the authority to receive a deed to property purchased by the board and to deliver the warrant in payment for such property.

Looney v Sch. Dist., 201-436; 205 NW 328

4305 Bonds of secretary and treasurer.

Bonds—prima facie liability. Proof that a school treasurer drew a check upon the school district bank account in favor of another bank; that the check was duly cashed; that the payee bank did not credit the amount to any account of the school district; and that said treasurer on demand did not deliver said money to the district, constitutes prima facie evidence of the latter's default and of liability on his bond.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Indemnification of one of two sureties—effect. In an action against a public officer and his bondsmen to recover a shortage in public funds, it is quite immaterial as far as plaintiff is concerned that one of the sureties has received property from the public officer as partial indemnity.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Nonentertainable defense. In an action on the bond of a school treasurer to recover a shortage in his accounts, it is no defense that the plaintiff district has a cause of action against a third party who is unlawfully in possession of the funds constituting the shortage.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

Rejected defensive plea. In an action on the bond of a school treasurer, the defensive plea (if it is a defense) that the treasurer was the innocent victim of another party's wrongdoing will be given no consideration when the wrongdoing of the treasurer is manifest.

School District v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

4308 Duties of secretary.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 164; '38 AG Op 800

4310 Warrants.

District debts—unavailable defense. In an action on a school warrant duly drawn on the schoolhouse fund, it is no defense that the warrant is, in effect, payable out of such fund as may be on deposit in a named bank.

Looney v School Dist., 201-436; 205 NW 328

4316 Duties of treasurer—payment of warrants.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 152

4317 General and schoolhouse funds.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 394; '34 AG Op 223; '38 AG Op 210

Trust property for educational purposes. Property transferred to a county in trust for the establishment of a prescribed seminary of learning, and duly accepted by the board of supervisors on behalf of the county, becomes a special part of the school fund of the county, and remains such, tho the legal title be transferred to court-appointed trustees for managerial purposes. It follows that, being county property and devoted to public use and not held for pecuniary profit, said property is exempt from taxation (§6944, par. 2, C., '35), even tho no action has been taken to actually execute the trust.

McCull v Dallas County, 220-434; 262 NW 824

Unavailable defense. In an action on a school warrant duly drawn on the schoolhouse fund, it is no defense that the warrant is in effect payable out of such fund as may be on deposit in a named bank.

CHAPTER 223TEACHERS*4336 Qualifications — compensation prohibited.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Oct. 9, '39

Action by teacher for compensation—pleading—intervention by taxpayer. In a teacher's action to recover compensation against a school district, where a taxpayer files a defensive petition of intervention after a demurrer to the answer had been sustained, but before defendant had made any election to stand on its answer, before any demand to make such election had been made, before default or judgment had been entered, or any demand therefor—the petition of intervention being unquestioned and raising an issue on the additional defensive matter—the court erred in sustaining a motion to strike the petition of intervention and entering judgment against the school district.

Schwartz v Sch. Dist., 225-1272; 282 NW 754

4339 Daily register.

Action for salary — insufficient defense. In an action by a teacher to recover salary accrued and unpaid at the time of her discharge by the board, it is no defense that the teacher did not make the report required of teachers at the close of the term, said teacher having been discharged prior to the close of said term.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 79, 249, 293

General obligations—trust fund. School warrants which are in form the general obligations of the district, and issued under a purported contract of the district providing for such unconditional issuance, are void if in excess of the constitutional limit of indebtedness, notwithstanding the fact that the said contract carries the inference that the warrants will be paid from a special fund arising from the sale of bonds.

Carstens Bros. v Sch. Dist., 218-812; 255 NW 702

4354 Petition for election.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 79, 93, 249; '36 AG Op 196; '38 AG Op 167, 210

Legal sufficiency of petition. The determination by the board of directors of the legal sufficiency of a petition as regards the signatures thereon is sufficient, even tho the statute does not require the board to keep on file a record of the electors of the district.

Mershon v Sch. Dist., 204-221; 215 NW 235

4355 Election called.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 196

Special meeting on oral notice. A special meeting of the board of directors of a school corporation is legally called on oral notice to the directors by the secretary, at the direction of the president.

Mershon v Sch. Dist., 204-221; 215 NW 235

CHAPTER 226

SCHOOLHOUSES AND SCHOOLHOUSE SITES

4359 Location.

Appeal to county superintendent. See under §4298

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 657

Nonprejudicial order of court. An order of court commanding the school board forthwith to erect a schoolhouse on a specified site is unobjectionable when such site had been already legally selected by the board.

Sanderson v Board, 211-768; 234 NW 216

Decision of school board—no injunctive relief. The determination of the location of site of a new high school is within the power of the school board and its decision cannot be controlled by injunction.

Smith v Maresh, 226-552; 284 NW 390

Order—sufficiency. An order fixing a schoolhouse site of at least one-half acre in the southeast corner of a named quarter section is not fatally indefinite on the theory that such order would require the location to be made in part in the contiguous public highway.

Sanderson v Board, 211-768; 234 NW 216

Purchase—rescission and cancellation. The purchase by a board of a schoolhouse site after bonds for such purchase had been duly voted, but prior to any bond levy, and the due issuance of a warrant in payment for such site, are not canceled or rescinded by the subsequent action of the electors in voting to rescind their former action authorizing the bonds.

Looney v Sch. Dist., 201-436; 205 NW 328

Relocation—record—sufficiency. School record reviewed, and, while quite informal, held to clearly show the official action of the board in relocating a schoolhouse site.

Sanderson v Board, 211-768; 234 NW 216

Appeal—jurisdiction of state superintendent. The superintendent of public instruction on an appeal involving an order of a school board locating a schoolhouse site has no jurisdiction, after affirming the order of the board, to enter an order directing the school board to provide transportation for certain pupils, the matter of transportation not being mentioned in the order locating the site.

Reason: The jurisdiction of said officers on appeal is strictly appellate.

Albrecht v School Dist., 216-968; 250 NW 129

District property—conveyance—review by courts. The courts will not, at the suit of a taxpayer, overturn and nullify the action of a school board in executing and receiving, on behalf of the district, deeds in order to adjust the boundaries of a schoolhouse site, and in finally conveying the site when no longer needed, when the transactions have stood unquestioned for many years, and when there is no allegation or proof that the directors refused to perform their duty, or acted illegally or fraudulently.

Beck v School Dist., 213-1282; 241 NW 427

4361 Five-acre limitation.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 223; '38 AG Op 210

School site—title valid as to part—no injunction. A school district's title to its site for a high school is not wholly invalid simply because the size may be greater than the statutory limitation on the amount that can be obtained by condemnation. When the size of the building is not so great as to cover more ground than the statute allows, and when the title, if defective at all, is defective only as to the excess land, an injunction will not lie on the theory that the district had no title.

Smith v Maresh, 226-552; 284 NW 390

Deposits—payment on forged indorsement—negligence not imputable to state. Negligence and laches of public officers in the handling of state funds are not imputable to the state; for instance, in an action to recover from a drawee bank the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement of a check drawn by a county treasurer against state school funds on deposit with said drawee, it is no defense that the county treasurer was negligent in drawing or delivering the check, or that county officers generally were negligent in not making early discovery of the forged indorsement, and notifying the drawee accordingly.

said ungraded school only, provided said child is continued in the public schools. So held as to a child who was in physical and mental condition to attend school but was unable to make the grades in the graded schools.

Trust property for educational purposes. Property transferred to a county in trust for the establishment of a prescribed seminary of learning, and duly accepted by the board of supervisors on behalf of the county, becomes a special part of the school fund of the county, and remains such, tho the legal title be transferred to court-appointed trustees for managerial purposes. It follows that, being county property and devoted to public use and not held for pecuniary profit, said property is exempt from taxation (§6944, par. 2, C., '35), even tho no action has been taken to actually execute the trust.

ANALYSIS

- I HIGHWAYS IN GENERAL
- II JURISDICTION
- III DEDICATION

Adverse possession, prescriptive rights, abandonment, and estoppel in re highways. See under §§10175, 11007(VI, XXVIII)

I HIGHWAYS IN GENERAL

Unallowable alteration. A highway which was established substantially on a designated line, but which was actually opened and maintained by the public authorities and fenced by the various abutting property owners for more than a half century on a line variant from the established line, may not be summarily changed back to the established line and thereby made to embrace lands which were theretofore undisturbed.

Clarcken v Lennon, 203-359; 212 NW 686

Bequest for paving roads—acceptance by county not enjoined. In an action by a taxpayer to obtain an injunction restraining a county from accepting a bequest to be used for paving roads, the injunction was refused where a will and two codicils provided for the bequest, as when all papers were construed together a valid gift to the county was found to have been created which the county had the authority to accept.

Anderson v Board, 226-1177; 286 NW 735

Codicil creating charitable trust to county for paving roads—improper delegation of duties to executor. A first codicil devising an estate to trustees to be administered under county supervision in building roads and a second codicil appointing one executor to aid the county in building roads created a lawful charitable trust with the county as trustee and taxpayers as beneficiaries which was not necessarily invalid because the executor was given administrative duties in the road construction in violation of statute.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Abandonment of highway. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to establish the claimed intentional abandonment by the public of a duly established highway.

Robinson v Board, 222-663; 269 NW 921

II JURISDICTION

Power lodged with supervisors under Revision 1860. Under the statutes in force on January 9, 1868, the time at which a highway, the boundaries of which are in question, was established, the county board of supervisors had general supervision and power to establish highways.

Davelaar v Marion Co., 224-669; 277 NW 744

Jurisdictional recital as prima facie showing. A recital made in 1868 by a board of supervisors when ordering the establishment of a highway to the effect, "The board being fully advised in the premises", states a prima facie presumption that they had jurisdiction and had complied with all statutory requirements.

Davelaar v Marion Co., 224-669; 277 NW 744

Dual procedure—effect. It is not fatal to the establishment of a highway that, owing to a change in the statutes, the procedure was in part before the court and in part before the board of supervisors.

Harbacheck v Tel. Co., 208-552; 226 NW 171

Alteration—power to make. The power to make changes in the location of highways in the interest of safety, economy, and utility rests:

1. As to primary roads, in the state highway commission on its own motion.

2. As to secondary roads, in the board of supervisors on its own motion. (§§4607, 4755-b36, C., '27 [§§4607, 4755.33, C., '39]).

And a cut-off of 3 miles which will eliminate 4 miles of a 350-mile primary road will not be deemed other than a change—will not be deemed an establishment of a road—the power to establish roads being a power not possessed by the state commission.

Jenkins v Highway Com., 205-523; 218 NW 258

Discontinuance—disregard of statute—effect on right to damages. A board of supervisors cannot deprive a property owner of a valid claim for damages consequent on the vacation or abandonment of a county road by wholly disregarding the statutory procedure governing such vacation or abandonment. The property owner may recognize the irregular procedure of the board by filing his claim with it and the board thereby acquires jurisdiction over the claim, a jurisdiction which it must exercise.

Furgason v County, 212-814; 237 NW 214

III DEDICATION

Implied dedication. An implied dedication of land for a public way and an implied acceptance thereof by the public will not be decreed on evidence tending to show a very perfunctory assumption of jurisdiction over the land by the public authorities, plus a use which is as consistent with the theory of mere permission by the owner as with the theory of rightful public use.

Dugan v Zurmuehlen, 203-1114; 211 NW 986

Prescription. A public way by prescription will not be decreed on evidence which is just as consistent with the theory of the owner that whatever use was made of the land as a road was purely permissive as with the theory that the use was hostile, adverse, and under a claim of right.

Dugan v Zurmuehlen, 203-1114; 211 NW 986

Evidence—old road records—use alone insufficient. In an action to establish a road by prescription, evidence in the form of a page from an old road record made in 1850, which was a copy of the surveyor's notes, and introduced as evidence of an adverse claim, is not sufficient when it does not show that such road as shown on the old record was the same as the road now in use. Without this, the road could not be established on the sole evidence of long continued use.

Slack v Herrick, 226-336; 283 NW 904

Right of way—deed—abandonment—effect. A deed to a strip of land for highway purposes is ipso facto annulled and rendered ineffective by the definite abandonment of the proposal to establish the highway. In other words, the municipality may not, years after definitely abandoning the project, establish the highway and claim anything under the deed.

Beim v Carlson, 209-1001; 227 NW 421

4561 Width.

Width of bridges. See §4667, Vol I
Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 335; '30 AG Op 120

Ipsa facto width. Principle reaffirmed that if, in the establishment of a highway, no width is designated, then the statutory width prevails.

Dickson v Davis County, 201-741; 205 NW 456

Presumption as to width of old road duly established. When the records of the establishment of a highway made many years ago are silent as to the width thereof, it must be presumed to be the statutory width, to wit, 66 feet.

Richardson v Derry, 226-178; 284 NW 82

"Statutory" width—definition. The "statutory" width of a road is the width (1) expressly fixed by the board of supervisors when the road is established, or (2) implied by statute if the board fixes no width, in no case less than 40 feet.

Carstens v Keating, 210-1326; 230 NW 432
McKinley v County, 215-46; 244 NW 663

Territorial road. The establishment of a highway by the legislature and the designation of it as a "territorial" highway are conclusive as to its width—70 feet.

Dickson v Davis Co., 201-741; 205 NW 456

Alteration—effect as to width. A material alteration in the location of a road constitutes the establishment of a new road, and the width thereof will be controlled by the then existing statutes.

Dickson v Davis Co., 201-741; 205 NW 456

Adjoining landowner—no title accrues from encroachment on highway. Encroachment by an adjoining landowner on an established public highway will not ripen into a title through any statute of limitations, doctrine of acquiescence, adverse possession, or estoppel—the establishment and maintenance of public highways being a governmental function.

Richardson v Derry, 226-178; 284 NW 82

4562 Petition.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 125; '36 AG Op 214, 235

Optional procedure to make changes. The board of supervisors may proceed on its own motion under §4607 et seq., C., '27, to widen an established statutory road. It need not wait for the filing of a petition as in case of the original establishment of a road.

Carstens v Keating, 210-1326; 230 NW 432

"Petition presented" construed as "writing". The words "petition * * * and agreement were presented" appearing on the record of a highway established in 1868 can only mean the writing required by statute.

Davelaar v Marion Co., 224-669; 277 NW 744

Petition—location of road. Under the Code, '51, and R., '60, the petition for the establishment of a highway is sufficient as to the location of the highway if the township is indicated by the correct governmental description.

Harbacheck v Tel. Co., 208-552; 226 NW 171

Prohibition relative to "orchards". The statutory prohibition against establishing a highway through an orchard without the owner's consent (§4566, C., '24) applies whether the establishment is by the board of supervisors on petition or by such board on its own motion (§4607 et seq., C., '24).

Junkin v Knapp, 205-184; 217 NW 834

Unallowable plea to avoid damages. A county which through its board of supervisors takes out the bridges and culverts on a long established county road and permits the road to be plowed and cultivated, and thereby rendered impassable, may not avoid a claim for damages resulting to a property owner because of the vacation by the plea that it did not comply with the statute relative to vacation.

Furgason v County, 212-814; 237 NW 214

4563 Bond.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 214, 235

Security—proof. Proof that security was given for the expense attending an application for the establishment of a highway may be established by a record recital to that effect, aided by the legal presumption that the officers acted regularly.

Harbacheck v Tel. Co., 208-552; 226 NW 171

4566 Property exempt.

Discussion. See 16 ILR 271—Construction of statute

Condemnation by state highway commission. The state highway commission has no authority to condemn for primary road purposes the ornamental grounds or orchard of an owner without his consent; and this is true notwithstanding §§4755-b27, 7803, C., '27 [§§4755.23, 7803, C., '39].

Hoover v Highway Com., 207-56; 222 NW 438

Prohibition relative to "orchards". The statutory prohibition against establishing a highway through an orchard without the owner's consent, applies whether the establishment is by the board of supervisors on petition (§4562 et seq., C., '24) or by such board on its own motion (§4607 et seq., C., '24).

Junkin v Knapp, 205-184; 217 NW 834

"Orchard" defined. A group of some 65 bearing fruit trees of different varieties, and maintained by continued replanting, constitutes an "orchard".

Junkin v Knapp, 205-184; 217 NW 834

Removal of building. A "small" privy is not a "substantial, permanent, and valuable building", within the meaning of this section.

Junkin v Knapp, 205-184; 217 NW 834

4568 Survey made — commissioner sworn.

Absence of survey. The absence of a survey is not fatal to the establishment of a highway when the record reveals the fact that the road was located equally on each side of a given section line.

Harbacheck v Tel. Co., 208-552; 226 NW 171

Burden to show government line. A landowner who concedes that a long existing highway was by agreement to be located equally upon both sides of the government line between adjoining tracts, but who disputes the accuracy of the location, has the burden to show the actual location of the government line.

Sedore v Turner, 202-1373; 212 NW 61

Location—evidence. Record reviewed, and held that the highway in question was legally established on a certain section line, but that, because of insufficient evidence, cause should be remanded for the purpose of taking evidence on the exact location of said line.

4571 Plat and field notes.

Disregard of nonsubstantial defects. The fact that a commissioner in recommending the establishment of a highway "as petitioned for", files a plat which does not show a slight variant in the line as petitioned for, does not invalidate the proceeding and thereby deprive the board of supervisors of jurisdiction to establish said highway; and especially is this true when said slight defect was obviated by a detailed plat which was of record prior to the final order establishing the road.

Wheeler v Riggs, 222-1373; 271 NW 509

4575 Notice served.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 214; '38 AG Op 808

Presumption of regularity—when jurisdiction must appear. The statutory presumption that the proceedings of inferior tribunals, e. g., the county board of supervisors, are presumed to be regular, does not extend to the acquisition of jurisdiction of the board—this must be shown.

Davelaar v Marion Co., 224-669; 277 NW 744

Notice—recital of record. Proof that the required preliminary notice of hearing on the petition for the establishment of a highway was given, may be established by the record recitals to that effect, aided by the legal presumption that the officers acted regularly.

Harbacheck v Tel. Co., 208-552; 226 NW 171

Notice as condition precedent. Notice of hearing, on the establishment of a highway and the service of such notice as required by statute (or the waiver of such notice), is an imperative condition precedent to the legal establishment of the road. And the fact that the highway records reveal a paper establishment will not justify the presumption that said notice was given.

McKinley v County, 215-46; 244 NW 663

Notice—waiver. A landowner who files a claim for damages to his land, in proceedings to establish a highway along said land, thereby waives his right to formal statutory notice of said proceedings.

McKinley v County, 215-46; 244 NW 663

4576 Form of notice.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 214

Timely claim under fatally defective notice. A landowner who in eminent domain proceeding for a public road is entitled to a specified time after notice in which to file his claim for damages, and who appears in said proceeding in response to a fatally defective notice, is entitled to said specified time after he so appears, in which to file his claim for damages.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 435; '38 AG Op 808

4581 Appraisers appointed—vacancies—qualification.

Joinder—mandamus and damages. An action of mandamus to compel the board of supervisors to proceed to the assessment of damages consequent on the taking of land in order to effect a change in a highway is properly stricken on motion when joined with an action against the county for damages for the taking of said land.

Valentine v Board, 206-840; 221 NW 517

4586 Damages—conditional order.

Vacation—damages recoverable. A property owner who, by the vacation of a county highway, is deprived of reasonable access to his property may recover from the county the resulting damages.

Furgason v County, 212-814; 237 NW 214

Unallowable action. Pending eminent domain proceedings by and on behalf of a county relative to land for highway purposes preclude an independent action by the landowner for his damages.

Gibson v Union Co., 208-314; 223 NW 111

Damages do not embrace cost of fence. Evidence is admissible, in proceedings to condemn land for highway purposes, to show the general fact that the condemnation may impose on the remainder of the farm an added burden in the form of extra fencing and the repair, maintenance, and replacement thereof; but evidence of the cost of fencing the land along the new highway is wholly unallowable, and equally unallowable are instructions which substantially direct the jury to consider such costs as an element of damages.

Dean v State, 211-143; 233 NW 36

Noncontiguous tracts as one farm. In the condemnation of land for highway purposes, the record may be such as to present a jury question whether noncontiguous tracts are being used as one farm so that the damages resulted to it as an entirety, or whether the land was in such separate tracts that the damages should be assessed to each tract separately.

Paulson v Highway Com., 210-651; 231 NW 296

Conditional establishment—effect. A highway which is ordered established on the condition that petitioners "pay the damages assessed within ninety days" is not legally established until the damages are so paid; and the court cannot presume that payment was so made even tho the way has been used as a public highway for a half century.

McKinley v County, 215-46; 244 NW 663

Notice—waiver. A landowner who files a claim for damages to his land, in proceedings to establish a highway along said land, thereby waives his right to formal statutory notice of said proceedings.

McKinley v County, 215-46; 244 NW 663

Compromise settlement. The acceptance by a property owner, after condemnation and assessment, and while the amount of damages was in controversy, and before the public authorities had taken possession of the land, of an amount less than had been assessed, and the execution of a deed to the right of way, in which deed the amount received is itemized as to (1) right of way, (2) fences, and (3) damages, constitute a full settlement, and preclude recovery of the difference between the assessment and the amount so accepted.

Burrow v County, 200-787; 205 NW 460

4591 Fences—crops.

Removal—nonimplication for compensation. The removal by an owner of land of fences across a public highway on the land, in compliance with a demand of the public authorities, gives rise to no implied contract on the part of the municipality to pay the value of the work and materials necessary in effecting such removal.

Hall v Union Co., 206-512; 219 NW 929

Damages do not embrace cost of fence. Evidence is admissible in proceedings to condemn land for highway purposes to show the general fact that the condemnation may impose on the remainder of the farm an added burden in the form of extra fencing and the repair, maintenance, and replacement thereof; but evidence of the cost of fencing the land along the new highway is wholly unallowable, and equally unallowable are instructions which substantially direct the jury to consider such costs as an element of damages.

Dean v State, 211-143; 233 NW 36

4596 Consent highways.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 808

Foreclosure certificate holder as "owner". A certificate holder under mortgage foreclosure is an "owner" of the land within the meaning of this statute. Establishment in such case without such consent is a nullity.

Vien v County, 209-580; 228 NW 19

Easements—records—different location in use—use alone insufficient. In an action to establish a road by prescription, evidence in the form of a page from an old road record made in 1850, which was a copy of the surveyor's notes, and introduced as evidence of an adverse claim, is not sufficient when it does not show that such road as shown on the old record was the same as the road now in use. Without this, the road could not be established on the sole evidence of long continued use.

Slack v Herrick, 226-336; 283 NW 904

4597 Appeal by damage claimant.

Unallowable appeal. The owner of land sought to be condemned for highway purposes who has never been made a party to the proceedings cannot appeal from the award of damages.

Gibson v Union Co., 208-314; 223 NW 111

4600 Trial on appeal.

Appeal—proper docket. An alleged owner of land who appeals to the district court from an award of damages may not complain of an order which transfers to the equity side of the calendar so much of said appeal as involves the issue whether the condemnor or the appellant owns part of the land sought to be condemned.

Montgomery Co. v Case, 204-1104; 216 NW 633

Condemnation award—separate tracts—joint award—transfer to equity. In a condemnation proceeding where two separate tracts of land under separate ownerships were treated as being jointly owned, and where, on appeal from a lump sum award covering both tracts, the owners in one count of their petition sought dismissal of the condemnation proceeding, and where issues of waiver and estoppel as to such irregularity were joined, it was proper to transfer said count to equity so that such issues could be determined in advance of the trial to a jury on question of damages.

Newby v Des Moines, 227-382; 288 NW 399

Public agency to be treated as individual. A governmental agency has a right, in eminent domain proceedings, to have the jury instructed that such agency is entitled to have the cause tried and determined precisely as tho said agency were an individual.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Damages do not embrace cost of fence. Evidence is admissible in proceedings to condemn land for highway purposes to show the general fact that the condemnation may impose on the remainder of the farm an added burden in the form of extra fencing and the repair, maintenance, and replacement thereof; but evidence of the cost of fencing the land along the new highway is wholly unallowable, and equally unallowable are instructions which substantially direct the jury to consider such costs as an element of damages.

Dean v State, 211-143; 233 NW 36

4601 Costs.

Attorney fees. A statutory provision for the taxation in eminent domain proceedings of attorney fees in favor of a successful party is no authority for such taxation in another like proceeding under a separate and different statute which makes no provision for such taxation.

Nichol v Neighbour, 202-406; 210 NW 281

CHANGES IN ROADS, STREAMS, OR DRY RUNS

4607 Changes for safety, economy, and utility.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 140; '34 AG Op 125; '36 AG Op 235; '38 AG Op 677, 808

Optional procedure to make changes. The board of supervisors may proceed on its own motion under this section to widen an established statutory road. It need not wait for the filing of a petition as in case of the original establishment of a road.

Carstens v Keating, 210-1326; 230 NW 432

"Statutory" width—definition. The "statutory" width of a road is the width (1) expressly fixed by the board of supervisors when the road is established, or (2) implied by statute if the board fixes no width, in no case less than 40 feet.

Carstens v Keating, 210-1326; 230 NW 432

Alteration—power to make. The power to make changes in the location of highways in the interest of safety, economy, and utility rests:

1. As to primary roads, in the state highway commission on its own motion.
2. As to secondary roads, in the board of supervisors on its own motion.

And a cut-off of 3 miles which will eliminate 4 miles of a 350-mile primary road will not be deemed other than a change—will not be deemed an establishment of a road—the power to establish roads being a power not possessed by the state commission.

Jenkins v Highway Com., 205-523; 218 NW 258

Drainage of surface waters. Road authorities will not be held estopped from carrying surface waters across a public highway in the course of natural drainage because of the fact that for more than ten years they have unsuccessfully attempted to divert such waters from said natural course of drainage, the landowner affected not having changed his position because of such unsuccessful efforts.

Schwartz v County, 208-1229; 227 NW 91

Percolating waters—damage to adjoining land—causal connection necessary. A city excavating a new creek channel and which thereby collects water on its own land, from which it percolates to adjoining land resulting in damage, is liable therefor, but there must be probative evidence to establish percolation as the cause of the damage.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 42; '36 AG Op 214

Procedure—exclusiveness. Pending eminent domain proceedings by and on behalf of a county relative to land for highway purposes preclude an independent action by the landowner for his damages.

Gibson v Union Co., 208-314; 223 NW 111

4611 Notice.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 214

Timely claim under fatally defective notice. A landowner who, in eminent domain proceeding for a public road, is entitled to a specified time after notice in which to file his claim for damages, and who appears in said proceeding in response to a fatally defective notice, is entitled to said specified time after he so appears, in which to file his claim for damages.

Witham v Union Co., 202-557; 210 NW 535

4612 Service of notice.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 214

4614 Hearing—adjournment.

Jurisdiction—nonvoluntary appearance. An owner of land sought to be condemned for highway purposes cannot be said to submit himself to the jurisdiction of the condemnatory body by addressing to such body a signed communication denying the existence of any such jurisdiction.

Gibson v Union Co., 208-314; 223 NW 111

4616 Hearing on claims for damages.

Compromise settlement. The acceptance by a property owner, after condemnation and assessment, and while the amount of damages was in controversy, and before the public authorities had taken possession of the land, of an amount less than had been assessed, and the execution of a deed to the right of way, in which deed the amount received is itemized as to (1) right of way, (2) fences, and (3) damages, constitute a full settlement and preclude recovery of the difference between the assessment and the amount so accepted.

Burrow v County, 200-787; 205 NW 460

Noncontiguous tracts as one farm. In the condemnation of land for highway purposes, the record may be such as to present a jury question whether noncontiguous tracts are being used as one farm so that the damages resulted to it as an entirety, or whether the land was in such separate tracts that the damages should be assessed to each tract separately.

Paulson v Highway Com., 210-651; 231 NW 296

4617 Appeals.

Unallowable appeal. The owner of land sought to be condemned for highway purposes who has never been made a party to the proceedings cannot appeal from the award of damages.

Gibson v Union Co., 208-314; 223 NW 111

4618 Damages on appeal—rescission of order.

Damages do not embrace cost of fence. Evidence is admissible, in proceedings to condemn land for highway purposes, to show the general fact that the condemnation may impose on the remainder of the farm an added burden in the form of extra fencing and the repair, maintenance, and replacement thereof; but evidence of the cost of fencing the land along the new highway is wholly unallowable, and equally unallowable are instructions which substantially direct the jury to consider such costs as an element of damages.

Abandonment of highway. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to establish the claimed intentional abandonment by the public of a duly established highway.

Actions against. An action against the commission to enjoin it from relocating a primary road, unaccompanied by any allegation of wrongful acts, is in effect an action against the state and nonmaintainable.

Long v Highway Com., 204-376; 213 NW 532

Legal discretion uncontrollable. The court cannot compel the state highway commission to expend county primary road funds in the improvement of the primary roads of the county; nor can the court control said commission in the legal expenditure of other funds under the control of the commission.

Scharnberg v Highway Com., 214-1041; 243 NW 334

Unallowable delegation of power. The general assembly cannot, for the protection of the highways or for the safety of the traffic thereon, constitutionally delegate to the state highway commission power to adopt rules and regulations which shall have the force and effect of law.

Goodlove v Logan, 217-98; 251 NW 39

Delegating powers to nonlegislative board. While the legislature may not delegate its power to make laws, yet when it had declared a policy which is definite in describing the subject to which it relates and the character of the regulation intended to be imposed, it may delegate to nonlegislative board the power to make rules and regulations for effectuating such policy.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Alteration—power to make. The power to make changes in the location of highways in the interest of safety, economy, and utility rests:

1. As to primary roads, in the state highway commission on its own motion.

2. As to secondary roads, in the board of supervisors on its own motion (§§4607, 4755-b36, C., '27 [§4755.33, C., '39]).

And a cut-off of 3 miles which will eliminate 4 miles of a 350-mile primary road will not be deemed other than a change—will not be deemed an establishment of a road—the power to establish roads being a power not possessed by the state commission.

Jenkins v Highway Com., 205-523; 218 NW 258

Governmental employee — personal liability for torts—governmental immunity denied. An employee of the state highway commission, in going from place to place to inspect bridges, and in doing so commits a tortious act which causes injury to another, in violation of a duty owed to the injured person, becomes, as an individual, personally liable for damages therefor.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 27, 184, 445, 624, 640, 793, 814; AG Op Feb. 20, '39

Independent contractor—liability for negligence. One who as an independent contractor installs a culvert in a public highway is liable to a traveler in damages consequent on the negligence of said contractor in leaving the highway at the point in question in a condition unsafe for public travel, and without barriers.

Kehm v Dilts, 222-826; 270 NW 388; 3 NCCA (NS) 39

County highway maintenance workman—no representative capacity. A county highway maintenance workman stands in no representative capacity for the employer-county when his duties are ministerial only and when he could possess no authority to act for nor bind the county as its representative, since board of supervisors and county engineer cannot delegate their powers and duties to maintain roads except as those duties are ministerial in character.

Schroyer v Jasper Co., 224-1391; 279 NW 118

Injuries from street defects—plans by competent engineer—nonliability. Where a person is thrown against the top of an automobile while crossing a certain type of open gutters in a street, constructed according to plans, even tho faulty, of a competent engineer, there is no liability on the municipality because in adopting such plans it is exercising its discretion and acting in a governmental capacity, unless it can be said, as a matter of law, that the plans adopted were obviously defective. Evidence held to establish that certain open gutters in street were reasonably safe for traffic at lawful speeds.

Dodds v West Liberty, 225-506; 281 NW 476

Bequest for paving roads—acceptance by county not enjoined. In an action by a taxpayer to obtain an injunction restraining a county from accepting a bequest to be used for paving roads, the injunction was refused where a will and two codicils provided for the bequest, as when all papers were construed together a valid gift to the county was found to have been created which the county had the authority to accept.

Anderson v Board, 226-1177; 285 NW 735

Codicil creating charitable trust to county for paving roads—improper delegation of duties to executor. A first codicil devising an estate to trustees to be administered under county supervision in building roads and a second codicil appointing one executor to aid the county in building roads created a lawful charitable trust with the county as trustee and taxpayers as beneficiaries which was not necessarily invalid because the executor was given administrative duties in the road construction in violation of statute.

Ehler v Stier, 205-678; 216 NW 637

Negligence—nonliability of county. The statutory duty of a town to keep its streets free from nuisances is not interrupted or suspended during the time when the county under an arrangement with the town is engaged in constructing a culvert in a street which is a continuation of a county road outside the town; and the county is under no legal obligation to reimburse the town for any sum voluntarily paid by it in settlement of suits jointly against the town and county for damages consequent on persons driving into an unguarded excavation made by the county authorities while constructing the culvert.

COUNTY ENGINEER

4644.17 Engineer—term.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 58

Discharge of engineer—conflicting statutes. A duly appointed county engineer who is an honorably discharged soldier may not be summarily discharged by the board of supervisors prior to the end of the term for which appointed, even tho the statute authorizing the appointment of such engineer provides that the "tenure of office may be terminated at any time by the board".

Hahn v County, 218-543; 255 NW 695

Employment binding on new board. Inasmuch as the board of supervisors has statutory authority to employ a county engineer for a period as long as three years, an employment of such engineer at the December meeting of the board for the ensuing calendar year is valid, even tho the personnel of the board changes in January following the meeting.

Damages—nonliability of highway engineer. A county highway engineer is not liable in damages consequent on his act in making an excavation in a public highway of his county, for a proper and lawful purpose, and in leaving the work in a condition which becomes dangerous, even tho, by leaving the work in said condition, he creates a public nuisance for which he may be punished.

4644.21 Supervision of construction and maintenance work.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 624

Nonliability of highway engineer. A county highway engineer is not liable in damages consequent on his act in making an excavation in a public highway of his county for a proper and lawful purpose, and in leaving the work in a condition which becomes dangerous, even tho, by leaving the work in said condition, he creates a public nuisance for which he may be punished. (§4841, C., '31.)

Swartzwelter v Utilities Corp., 216-1060; 250 NW 121; 34 NCCA 471

Right of way—county engineer—signs. In the absence of signs indicating a different right of way rule, erected by authority not of county engineer but of the board of supervisors, the law giving right of way to traffic from the right applies to an intersection of county trunk roads.

Avoiding estimates and public letting—effect. This statute cannot be avoided by the subterfuge of buying, in disregard of the statute, material in quantities much exceeding said amount, on the plea that the amount used on each subsequent individual work of repair will be much less than $1,000 in value.

State v Garretson, 207-627; 223 NW 390

Systematic disregard of law. The conduct of a member of the board of supervisors in systematically disregarding, or by subterfuges avoiding this section evinces such "willfulness" as to render such acts ample ground for removal from office.

State v Garretson, 207-627; 223 NW 390

Competitive bids—void provision. A clause inserted in a public improvement contract, to the effect that if rock or quicksand is encountered, the contractor shall be paid on the basis of cost plus a named percentage, is void when both the specifications and the advertisement for bids are silent as to such contingency.

Gjellefald v Hunt, 202-212; 210 NW 122

Public improvements—estimated quantities as basis for contract—variation with specifications not fatal. In awarding a contract, the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of "unit prices", as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities, indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

4644.44 Trees—ingress or egress—drainage.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 184

Trees in highway not property of adjoining owner. A property owner abutting and occupying a part of a highway has no rights in trees growing on such part of the highway, no matter how long his occupancy of the highway continued before public convenience and necessity required appropriation of the full highway width.

Rabiner v Humboldt Co., 224-1190; 278 NW 612; 116 ALR 89

Improvement of highway—malice immaterial in performance of legal act. Removal of trees from a highway by county authorities for improvement, being a legal act, the question as to whether or not they were acting maliciously as alleged by an abutting property owner is immaterial.

Rabiner v Humboldt Co., 224-1190; 278 NW 612; 116 ALR 89

Finding by county highway authorities of necessity for tree removal—conclusiveness. Conclusion by county authorities that a secondary road could not be improved without removing certain trees, when substantiated by the record, is conclusive on appeal.

Rabiner v Humboldt Co., 224-1190; 278 NW 612; 116 ALR 89

Highways—tree removal—valid exercise of power—no injunction. Injunction will not lie to restrain county authorities from removing trees along a highway when they are acting strictly within their statutory powers.

Rabiner v Humboldt Co., 224-1190; 278 NW 612; 116 ALR 89

Trees—removal for drainage—no injunction. In landowner's action to restrain county from cutting down seven trees in the construction of a highway, where evidence showed that trees were too far apart to constitute a windbreak, that trees were on the highway right of way, and that their destruction was necessary to provide a drainage ditch, lower court properly refused to enjoin destruction under statute prohibiting such destruction unless "materially interfering with improvement of the road".

Harrison v Hamilton County, (NOR); 284 NW 456

Special restrictive statutes not controlling general law. Statutes relating to hedges and drainage, which for such purposes restrict authorities as to molesting ornamental trees and windbreaks, have no application to the general law on improvements of secondary roads.

Rabiner v Humboldt Co., 224-1190; 278 NW 612; 116 ALR 89

Interference with ingress and egress. A highway improvement which compels a property owner to travel slightly farther in going to and from his farm may not be said to interfere substantially with his right of ingress and egress.

Lingo v Page County, 201-906; 208 NW 327

Unnecessary diversion of drainage. Injunction will lie to restrain highway officers from so improving a highway as to unnecessarily divert natural drainage to the substantial injury of a property owner.

Estes v Anderson, 204-288; 213 NW 566

Drainage of surface waters. Road authorities will not be held estopped from carrying surface waters across a public highway in the course of natural drainage because of the fact that for more than ten years they have unsuccessfully attempted to divert such waters from said natural course of drainage, the landowner affected not having changed his position because of such unsuccessful efforts.

Schwartz v County, 208-1229; 227 NW 91

Perpetuation of unlawful drainage by bridge. The board of supervisors may not, by the construction and maintenance of a culvert in the public highway, supplement, continue and perpetuate an unlawful and material diversion of surface waters by a dominant estate holder, all to the substantial damage of the servient estate holder.

Anton v Stanke, 217-166; 251 NW 153

Prohibited obstruction. Principle reaffirmed that a property owner may not legally place obstructions within a public highway and thereby interfere with the drainage of surface waters across such highway.

Adams County v Rider, 205-137; 218 NW 60

Highway drainage easement—discretion. The authority to erect a bridge at a specified place in a public highway without limitation as to the size of such bridge, necessarily invests the public officials with a fair discretion as to such size.

Ehler v Stier, 205-678; 216 NW 637

4644.45 County trunk roads in cities and towns.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 27, 346

Presumptions. When a board of supervisors proceeds to improve a town street which is a continuation of a county road, it will be presumed, nothing being shown to the contrary, that the board and the town council first entered into a written agreement covering the work as provided by statute.

Norwalk v County, 210-1262; 232 NW 682

Negligence in constructing culvert. The statutory duty of a town to keep its streets free from nuisances is not interrupted or suspended during the time when the county under an arrangement with the town is engaged in constructing a culvert in a street which is a continuation of a county road outside the town; and the county is under no legal obligation to reimburse the town for any sum voluntarily paid by it in settlement of suits, jointly against the town and county, for damages consequent on persons driving into an unguarded excavation made by the county authorities while constructing the culvert.

In awarding a construction contract, the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of "unit prices" as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

Petition—fatal omission. A statute which authorizes the submission to the electors of a proposition for the partial construction and maintenance by the county of a bridge across a boundary line river, on a petition clearly contemplating a statement of the cost of both construction and maintenance, is not substantially complied with by the filing of a petition:

1. Which fails to state the cost of maintenance, either in a definite lump sum, or in terms of an annual maximum tax rate, or 4745 "Secondary road system" defined.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 290

4745.1 Streets as extensions of secondary roads.

Municipal discharge of statutory liability. A contract between a county and a city wherein the city, in discharge of its statutory liability relative to one-half of the cost of paving a city boundary line road, agrees to issue to the county road certificates in anticipation of the collection of special assessments on benefited property, cannot be construed as an unconditional promise on the part of the city to pay said statutory liability.

Appearance in assessment proceedings. The voluntary appearance by a property owner in proceedings to assess his property as part of a road assessment district does not cure the fatal defect arising from want of jurisdiction to establish the district.

Johnson v Board, 213-988; 238 NW 66

Jurisdiction—estoppel. The fact that a property owner lived adjacent to a highway and knew that it was being improved does not estop him from questioning the jurisdiction of the public authorities to establish the district embracing his land.

Johnson v Board, 213-988; 238 NW 66

Fatally defective notice. The board of supervisors acquires no jurisdiction to establish a secondary road assessment district by the service of a notice which fails to state the "year" in which the hearing will be held.

Johnson v Board, 213-988; 238 NW 66

Assessment of tenants in common. Jurisdiction to establish an assessment district as to only one of two tenants in common does not embrace jurisdiction to levy an assessment against the farm as a whole.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 400; '38 AG Op 794

Appearance in assessment proceedings. The voluntary appearance by a property owner in proceedings to assess his property as part of a road assessment district does not cure the fatal defect arising from want of jurisdiction to establish the district.

Johnson v Board, 213-988; 238 NW 66

Assessment—tenants in common. Jurisdiction to establish an assessment district as to only one of two tenants in common does not embrace jurisdiction to levy an assessment against the farm as a whole.

Johnson v Board, 213-988; 238 NW 66

4753.05 Appeals—power of court—duty of clerk.

Abortive appeal. An appeal from an order levying an assessment within a secondary road district is not perfected (1) by the timely giving of notice of appeal, and (2) by the timely filing of a purported appeal bond which is not signed by the surety; nor is the defect cured by the filing, after the statutory time for appeal has expired, of an affidavit of qualification by a party who states "that I am surety in the above bond".

Johnson v Board, 213-988; 238 NW 66

4753.10 Election in re bonds—notice—form of proposition—canvass—procedure to test legality.

Discussion. See 15 ILR 235—State highway bonds

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 86; '36 AG Op 600

Primary road bonds—unlawful diversion. County primary road bonds voted for the purpose of improving "the primary roads of the county" cannot be legally issued except to improve those roads which were primary roads in the county on the date when the bonds were authorized by the voters. For instance, where the state highway commission, after the election, abandoned a 12-mile strip, part of a pre-existing primary road, and substituted therefor a substantially equal mileage two miles distant, held, the bonds could not be legally issued for the purpose of paving the substitute.

Harding v Board, 213-560; 237 NW 625
Scharnberg v Highway Com., 214-1041; 243 NW 334

Plaintiffs—taxpayers. A taxpayer may maintain an action to enjoin the board of supervisors from issuing county bonds for a purpose not authorized by law.

Harding v Board, 213-560; 237 NW 625

4753.11 Bonds—form — denomination —interest—payment.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 282

Vote required. This section insofar as it authorizes the issuance of primary road bonds on a majority vote was impliedly repealed by the subsequent enactment of §1171-d4, C., '31, [§1171.18, C., '39] requiring a favorable vote equal to 60 percent of all the votes cast.

Waugh v Shirer, 216-468; 249 NW 246

Primary road bonds—unlawful diversion. Roads and streets within cities and towns are not part of the primary road system, even though such roads and streets are continuations of primary roads which are outside cities and towns. It follows that county bonds voted for the purpose of improving the primary roads of the county may not be legally issued nor may the proceeds thereof be legally employed for the improvement of roads and streets within cities and towns.

Wallace v Foster, 213-1151; 241 NW 9

Inadequate provision for payment. The court cannot assume that inadequate provision has been made for the payment of county primary road bonds and that, therefore, the bonds are void, in view of the fact that the state has underwritten every such bond through its primary road fund and has appropriated said fund to said purpose for the life of said bonds.

Harding v Board, 213-560; 237 NW 625

4753.12 Bond levy.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 317; '36 AG Op 515

4753.13 Bonds—issuance — sale — retirement — terminating interest — exemption from taxation.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 316; '36 AG Op 362

Taxation of interest on tax-exempt securities. Interest on tax-exempt municipal securities is not exempt from state income tax, though the securities themselves are, by statute, exempt from general property tax. The statutory declaration that said securities "shall not be taxed" has reference solely to general property tax, and not to an excise tax—an income tax—on the interest collected on such securities.

4755.02 "Road systems" defined.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 240, 246; '32 AG Op 98, 116

Primary road bonds—unlawful diversion. County primary road bonds voted for the purpose of improving "the primary roads of the county" cannot be legally issued except to improve those roads which were primary roads in the county on the date when the bonds were authorized by the voters. For instance, where the state highway commission, after the election, abandoned a 12-mile strip, part of a pre-existing primary road, and substituted therefor a substantially equal mileage two miles distant, held, the bonds could not be legally issued for the purpose of paving the substitute.

Harding v Board, 213-560; 237 NW 625
Scharnberg v Highway Com., 214-1041; 243 NW 334

Improvement—primary road bonds—unlawful diversion. Roads and streets within cities and towns are not part of the primary road system, even though such roads and streets are continuations of primary roads which are outside cities and towns. It follows that county bonds voted for the purpose of improving the primary roads of the county may not be legally issued nor may the proceeds thereof be legally employed for the improvement of roads and streets within cities and towns.

Wallace v Foster, 213-1151; 241 NW 9

State commerce commission abandoning overhead crossing—street change resulting. The state commerce commission has no power to order the abandonment of an overpass or overhead crossing over a railroad in a city or town, which results in altering the streets thereof. Jurisdiction of its streets is a city function which may not be invaded by the state commerce commission, regardless of its good faith motives, and certiorari will lie to prevent such invasion.

Huxley (Town) v Conway, 226-268; 284 NW 136

4755.03 Primary road fund.

Crossings—safe condition controlled by transportation needs. It is the duty of railroads and municipalities to keep pace with the changes in transportation methods and to keep highways and railroad crossings in a reasonably safe condition, inasmuch as a type of crossing construction considered safe when built might be unsafe for a later changed method of use by the public.

Harris v Railway, 224-1319; 278 NW 338

4755.08 Improvement of primary system.

Primary road bonds—unlawful diversion. County primary road bonds voted for the purpose of improving "the primary roads of the county," cannot be legally issued except to improve those roads which were primary roads in the county on the date when the bonds were authorized by the voters. For instance where the state highway commission, after the election, abandoned a 12-mile strip, part of a pre-existing primary road, and substituted therefor a substantially equal mileage 2 miles distant, held, the bonds could not be legally issued for the purpose of paving the substitute.

Harding v Board, 213-560; 237 NW 625

Legal discretion uncontrollable. The court cannot compel the state highway commission to expend county primary road funds in the improvement of the primary roads of the county; nor can the court control said commission in the legal expenditure of other funds under the control of the commission.

Scharnberg v Highway Com., 214-1041; 243 NW 334

4755.09 Surveys, plans, and specifications.

Interference with ingress and egress. A highway improvement which compels a property owner to travel slightly farther in going to and from his farm may not be said to interfere substantially with his right of ingress and egress.

Lingo v Page County, 201-906; 208 NW 327

Unnecessary diversion of drainage. Injunction will lie to restrain highway officers from so improving a highway as to unnecessarily divert natural drainage to the substantial injury of a property owner.

Estes v Anderson, 204-288; 213 NW 566

Nonestoppel to drain surface waters in natural course.

Schwartz v County, 208-1229; 227 NW 91

Prohibited obstruction. Principle reaffirmed that a property owner may not legally place obstructions within a public highway and thereby interfere with the drainage of surface waters across such highway.

Adams Co. v Rider, 205-137; 218 NW 60

Highway drainage easement — discretion. The authority to erect a bridge at a specified place in a public highway without limitation as to the size of such bridge necessarily invests the public officials with a fair discretion as to such size.

Ehler v Stier, 205-678; 216 NW 637

Injuries from street defects—plans by competent engineer—nonliability. Where a person is thrown against the top of an automobile while crossing a certain type of open gutters in a street, constructed according to plans, even tho faulty, of a competent engineer, there is no liability on the municipality because in adopting such plans it is exercising its discretion and acting in a governmental capacity, unless it can be said, as a matter of law, that the plans adopted were obviously defective. Evidence held to establish that certain open gutters in street were reasonably safe for traffic at lawful speeds.

Dodds v West Liberty, 225-506; 281 NW 476

Engineer's plans accepted by city—no obvious defects—no imputation of negligence. Where engineer's plans for paving alley were not obviously defective in failing to show grade of alley, and the work was done in accordance with the plans, no negligence in adopting the plans can be imputed to the city, since engineering expertness is not within the province of the council members, and a lack of such expertness is the reason for employing a competent engineer and relying on his ability and plans for the construction of the improvement.

Russell v Sioux City, 227-1302; 290 NW 708

4755.10 Bids—contracts prohibited.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 390; '38 AG Op 185; AG Op June 29, '39

4755.11 Award of contracts—bond.

Public improvements—estimated quantities as basis for contract—variation with specifications not fatal. In awarding a contract, the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of “unit prices”, as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities, indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

4755.21 Improvements in cities and towns.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 199, 518

4755.23 Jurisdiction to establish.

Alteration—power to make. The power to make changes in the location of highways in the interest of safety, economy, and utility rests:

1. As to primary roads, in the state highway commission on its own motion.

2. As to secondary roads, in the board of supervisors on its own motion. (§§4607, 4755-b36, [§4755.33, C., '39], C., '27.)

And a cut-off of 3 miles which will eliminate 4 miles of a 350-mile primary road will not be deemed other than a change—will not be deemed an establishment of a road, the power to establish roads being a power not possessed by the state commission.

Jenkins v Highway Com., 205-523; 218 NW 258

Enjoining state highway commission. An action against the state highway commission to enjoin it from relocating a primary road, unaccompanied by any allegation of wrongful acts, is, in effect, an action against the state, and nonmaintainable.

Long v Highway Com., 204-376; 213 NW 532

Condemnation of orchard, etc. The state highway commission has no authority to condemn for primary road purposes the ornamental grounds or orchard of an owner without his consent.

Hoover v Highway Com., 207-56; 222 NW 438

“Rounding corner.” The statutory provision that, in condemning land for road purposes, no ground shall be taken “for the rounding of a corner” when the dwelling house, lawn, and ornamental trees connected therewith are located at such corner necessarily has no application when the condemnation is of land extending in a straight line.

Hoover v Highway Com., 210-1; 230 NW 561

“Rounding corner.” The statutory provision that no ground shall be taken for a primary road “for the rounding of a corner” where certain named improvements are located, is violated by locating a primary road through a 40-acre tract on an arc which extends substantially from the southeast to the northwest corner of the tract, and which so bends convexly to the northeast corner of the tract as to leave approximately 4 acres at said corner where the said improvements are located.

Butterworth v Highway Com., 210-1231; 232 NW 760

“Rounding corner.” The statutory provision, that in the establishment, relocation, and improvement of primary roads, no ground shall, without the consent of the owner, be taken “for the rounding of a corner where the dwelling house, * * * connected therewith are located”, is violated by locating such road through a 14½-acre and substantially square tract of land, and on an arc which extends from the southeast corner to the northwest corner of said tract, and which arc so bends to the northeast corner of said tract as to cut off a segment of land of 5.22 acres in said latter corner, on which said improvements are located. This is true tho the public authorities propose to condemn for road purposes said entire segment of 5.22 acres in addition to said curved roadway.

Reed v Highway Com., 221-500; 266 NW 47
Hicks v Highway Com., 221-509; 266 NW 51

Review of condemnation proceedings. Certiorari will lie to review condemnation proceedings by the state highway commission.

Jenkins v Highway Com., 205-523; 218 NW 258

Easements—evidence—old road records. In an action to establish a road by prescription, evidence in the form of a page from an old road record made in 1850, which was a copy of the surveyor's notes, and introduced as evidence of an adverse claim, is not sufficient when it does not show that such road as shown on the old record was the same as the road now in use. Without this, the road could not be established on the sole evidence of long continued use.

Slack v Herrick, 226-336; 283 NW 904

Highway construction—interference with easement. When a highway was established through a city, taking the larger part of land over which the plaintiff had been granted an easement, a property right belonging to the plaintiff was thereby destroyed, and when she was compelled to sell the property at a loss because of its impaired value, she was entitled to a writ of mandamus against the highway commission to compel the assessment of the damages sustained.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Noncontiguous tracts as one farm. In the condemnation of land for highway purposes, the record may be such as to present a jury question whether noncontiguous tracts are being used as one farm so that the damages resulted to it as an entirety, or whether the land was in such separate tracts that the damages should be assessed to each tract separately.

Paulson v Highway Com., 210-651; 231 NW 296

Governmental agency to be treated as individual. A governmental agency has a right, in eminent domain proceedings, to have the jury instructed that such agency is entitled to have the cause tried and determined precisely as tho said agency was an individual.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Damages do not embrace cost of fence. Evidence is admissible in proceedings to condemn land for highway purposes to show the general fact that the condemnation may impose on the remainder of the farm an added burden in the form of extra fencing and the repair, maintenance, and replacement thereof; but evidence of the cost of fencing the land along the new highway is wholly unallowable, and equally unallowable are instructions which substantially direct the jury to consider such costs as an element of damages.

Dean v State, 211-143; 233 NW 36

Procedure—exclusiveness. Pending eminent domain proceedings by and on behalf of a county relative to land for highway purposes preclude an independent action by the landowner for his damages.

Gibson v Union Co., 208-314; 223 NW 111

4755.25 Bridges, viaducts, etc., on municipal primary extensions.

4755.33 Transfer of powers and duties.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 361

Alteration—power to make. The power to make changes in the location of highways in the interest of safety, economy, and utility rests:

(Power to "establish" see §§4755-b27, 4755-c1, C., '31 [§§4755.23, 4755.24, C., '39]).

Jenkins v Highway Com., 205-523; 218 NW 258

Eminent domain—excessive award—farm already bisected. A $6,000 verdict, being one-fourth the value of a 212-acre farm, for taking 9.63 acres of land for highway purposes, at least part of which was permanently pasture land, from a farm already bisected by a railroad is so grossly excessive as to indicate passion and prejudice, and when so appearing will, in condemnation proceedings as in negligence cases, be set aside.

Luthi v Highway Com., 224-678; 276 NW 586

MARKINGS FOR MUNICIPALITIES

4755.34 Lateral or detour routes in cities and towns.

ROAD MAINTENANCE PATROL

4774 Road patrolmen.

Highway workman not "road patrolman"—not excluded from workmen's compensation by "official position". A county highway maintenance workman is not necessarily a patrolman under §4774, C., '35, and not a person holding an "official position" such as denies him the benefits of the workmen's compensation act, when there was no record of an appointment, no approval of a bond, no oath as an official nor as a peace officer, and when no badge of office had ever been furnished.

Schroyer v Jasper Co., 224-1391; 279 NW 118

Liability. The statutory bond required of road patrolmen for the performance of their statutory duties in caring for the roads assigned to them, does not embrace liability to a traveler in damages consequent on the negligent handling of road machinery.

4834 Removal.

Obstructions as criminal offense. See under §13120, Vol I

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 297; '30 AG Op 332

Long-continued obstructions furnish no basis for legal right.

Dickson v Davis County, 201-741; 205 NW 456

Malice immaterial in performance of legal act. Removal of trees from a highway by county authorities for improvement being a legal act, the question as to whether or not they were acting maliciously as alleged by an abutting property owner is immaterial.

Rabiner v Humboldt County, 224-1190; 278 NW 612; 116 ALR 89

Duty to remove stalled vehicle from highway. Where a motor vehicle is stalled in a snowdrift and obstructs half of the highway, a motorist must use reasonable expedience to remove such vehicle.

Youngman v Sloan, 225-558; 281 NW 130

Damages—nonliability of highway engineer. A county highway engineer is not liable in damages consequent on his act in making an excavation in a public highway of his county, for a proper and lawful purpose, and in leaving the work in a condition which becomes dangerous, even tho, by leaving the work in said condition, he creates a public nuisance for which he may be punished.

Swartzwelter v Util. Corp., 216-1060; 250 NW 121; 34 NCCA 471

4835 Fences and electric transmission poles.

Road fenced less than established width. Injunction will not lie on behalf of a landowner to prevent a county from removing fences as obstructions in the highway—the fences having been built more than fifty years ago on a 40-foot width—when the road record shows not only a 66-foot road but all the mandatory prerequisites for establishment.

Davelaar v Marion County, 224-669; 277 NW 744

Encroachment on highway—supervisors removing landowner's fences. Injunction by landowner will not lie to prevent county supervisors from removing landowner's fences encroaching on highway even tho such fences have existed for seventy years.

Richardson v Derry, 226-178; 284 NW 82

Adjoining landowner—no title accrues from encroachment on highway. Encroachment by an adjoining landowner on an established public highway will not ripen into a title through any statute of limitations, doctrine of acquiescence, adverse possession, or estoppel—the establishment and maintenance of public highways being a governmental function.

Richardson v Derry, 226-178; 284 NW 82

4836 Notice.

Removal—injunction. Highway officials are properly enjoined from removing a fence from the highway and to the line of the highway (1) when the landowner has not had the full statutory 60-day notice to make the removal, and (2) when the said notice to the landowner was served by registered mail, instead of being served as an original notice of suit is required to be served.

Harbacheck v Tel. Co., 208-552; 226 NW 171

4838 New lines.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 224; '36 AG Op 525; '38 AG Op 318; AG Op May 17, '39, Sept. 8, '39

Power of county engineer. A franchise issued by the board of railroad commissioners to operate an electric transmission line "over, along, and across" a specified highway, under specifications calling for a crossarm at the top of the poles, carries the right and power in the grantee so to erect its line that all parts thereof, including the superstructure, will be wholly within the lines of said highway. It follows that the general power of the county engineer under this section to locate such lines does not embrace the power so to locate the line that part of the superstructure will overhang land outside the highway. (Overruling Central States Elec. Co. v Pocahontas Co., 223 NW 236.)

Iowa Corp. v Lindsey, 211-544; 231 NW 461

Location of transmission poles—jurisdiction. A written application to the highway engineer for the location of transmission poles along a highway is not jurisdictional. In other words, a proper location may be made on an oral application.

Swartzwelter v Utilities Corp., 216-1060; 250 NW 121

Lawfulness of action. In the absence of any evidence or showing to the contrary, it will not be presumed that a public service corporation is seeking the location of its lines along a highway without having procured a franchise or that the highway engineer is proceeding to mark such location without a written application therefor.

Swartzwelter v Utilities Corp., 216-1060; 250 NW 121

Loaning servant to another. A utility corporation, seeking to set its transmission poles along a public highway, is not responsible for the acts of its employees in assisting the county highway engineer, under his absolute direction and control, in finding a lost section corner which, when found, enables the engineer, first, to locate the lines of the highway, and second, the line of the poles.

Reason: The utility employees in the search for the lost corner become the special employees of the highway engineer.

Swartzwelter v Utilities Corp., 216-1060; 250 NW 121; 34 NCCA 471

4839 Cost of removal—liability.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 318; AG Op Aug. 29, '39

Nonimplication for compensation. The removal by an owner of land of fences across a public highway on the land, in compliance with a demand of the public authorities, gives rise to no implied contract on the part of the municipality to pay the value of the work and materials necessary in effecting such removal.

Hall v Union Co., 206-512; 219 NW 929

4840 Duty of road officers.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 318

4841 Nuisance.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 318

Nonliability of highway engineer. A county highway engineer is not liable in damages consequent on his act in making an excavation in a public highway of his county for a proper and lawful purpose and in leaving the work in a condition which becomes dangerous, even tho by leaving the work in said condition he creates a public nuisance for which he may be punished.

Swartzwelter v Utilities Corp., 216-1060; 250 NW 121; 34 NCCA 471

Aerial obstructions—justifiable assumption. The operator of a truck along a public street has a right, in the absence of actual knowledge to the contrary, to assume that the street is free from aerial obstructions which may strike the top of his vehicle, e. g., a guy wire stretched across the street from a nearby building in process of construction. And especially is this true when the surface of the street along which the driver is moving is badly cluttered up with building material.

Hatfield v White Line, 223-7; 272 NW 99

4842 Injunction to restrain obstructions.

Obstructions—drainage. Principle reaffirmed that a property owner may not legally place obstructions within a public highway and thereby interfere with the drainage of surface waters across such highway.

Adams County v Rider, 205-137; 218 NW 60
Herman v Drew, 216-315; 249 NW 277

Trees—removal for drainage—no injunction. In landowner's action to restrain county from cutting down seven trees in the construction of a highway, where evidence showed that trees were too far apart to constitute a wind-break, that trees were on the highway right of way, and that their destruction was necessary to provide a drainage ditch, lower court properly refused to enjoin destruction under statute prohibiting such destruction unless "materially interfering with improvement of the road".

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op July 11, '39

Horse as vehicle. A horse, saddled and bridled, and being used as a means of conveyance or transportation, is not a "vehicle," within the meaning of a policy of insurance which provides indemnity "sustained by the wrecking or disablement of any vehicle or car * * * in which the insured is riding, or by being accidentally thrown therefrom."

Riser v Ins. Co., 207-1101; 224 NW 67; 63 ALR 292

Former statute revised — legislative construction. When the motor vehicle statutes were completely revised, and exempted the vendor of a motor vehicle under a conditional sales contract from liability for negligent operation of the vehicle, such revision did not create a legislative construction that a former statute defining "owner" as the person with the use or control of a vehicle included such vendor within its definition, as a general revision of the laws creates no presumption of an intent to change the law, as is created when a particular section or a limited part of an act is re-enacted.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

Conditional sales—ownership in vendee. When a motor vehicle is sold under a conditional sales contract, altho the seller retains legal title for the purpose of security, the ownership of the car passes to the buyer.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

Assignee from conditional sale vendor not the owner of motor vehicle. The assignee from the vendor of a truck under a conditional sales contract did not have either the "lawful ownership, use or control" or "the right to the use or control" of the truck, and could not be considered as "owner" under a former statute which said that any person coming within those specifications should be included in the term "owner".

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

"Commissioner" as agent for process.

Green v Brinegar, 228- ; 292 NW 229

Conditional seller not "owner"—nonliability. Statute making owner of automobile liable for damage caused by its operation when being driven with owner's consent, held not to extend to seller of automobile under conditional sales contract even when, under the contract of sale, seller retained title, for the buyer is the beneficial, equitable, and substantial owner, and the seller retains only naked title subject to complete divestation upon payment of the final installment of the purchase price.

Craddock v Bickelhaupt, 227-202; 288 NW 109

Ownership of automobile. Evidence that the head of a family bought an automobile, paid for it, used it for the purpose of making a living, and has never parted with the possession, is sufficient to prove his ownership on the question of exemption.

Shepard v Findley, 204-107; 214 NW 676

"Owner" defined. When an automobile actually belongs to an employee, the employer is not also to be deemed an "owner" because in the contract of employment the employee contracts to hold the employer harmless in the operation of the car.

McLain v Armour & Co., 205-343; 218 NW 69

Ownership of car—futile evidence. Evidence that an automobile of a certain make was, at the time of a collision, occupied by a husband and wife, that it carried a registration plate of the county of which said parties were residents, and that said car was being operated by the husband, furnishes no prima facie proof of the wife's ownership of the car.

Putnam v Bussing, 221-871; 266 NW 559

Transfer—prima facie effect. An insurer against the theft of an automobile, defending on the ground that the insured was not the "unconditional and sole" owner, may not complain that the jury is instructed that a transfer of the certificate of registration is only prima facie evidence of change of title.

Abraham v Ins. Co., 215-1; 244 NW 675

Carrying pistol—operator—motor vehicle definition not controlling. The definition of an "operator" of a motor vehicle applicable to and contained in the motor vehicle law is not controlling in construing a criminal statute found in another, distinct part of the code.

State v Thomason, 224-499; 276 NW 619

"Chauffeur" defined. An employee of a business who is not known as a chauffeur, and who is solely employed and paid for services wholly distinct from the operation of a delivery truck, does not become a "chauffeur" within the meaning of §4943, C., '27, [§5013.01, C., '39] by operating the truck during the time the regular chauffeur operator is temporarily absent.

Des M. Rug Co. v Underwriters, 215-246; 245 NW 215

Highway traversing city street—highway law applicable. Where a statute requires pedestrians to walk on left side of a highway, the word "highway" is applicable to a through highway traversing a street within a city, especially in view of other sections in the motor vehicle act concerning highways.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825; 5 NCCA (NS) 724

Intersection—what constitutes—instructions. Where a north and south highway splits into two curves near an east and west highway, and connects with the latter at two points some 900 feet apart, it is not erroneous for the court to instruct that the intersection embraces the entire distance of 900 feet, (1) when the evidence tends to show that the authorized public authorities have treated said distance as the intersection, and (2) when the instruction is manifestly given for the sole purpose of guiding the jury in applying the statutory command that motorists shall reduce their speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing intersections of public highways.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Improper definition of "intersection" in motor vehicle case. There was no error nor abuse of discretion by the court in granting a new trial in a motor vehicle damage case on the ground that an incorrect definition of "intersection" was given to the jury, when the correct definition was a matter of statute, even though both parties to the action during the trial used the wrong interpretation of the term as it was given by the court.

Hupp v Doolittle, 226-814; 285 NW 247

"Intersection" of highways—definition. In a damage action arising from a collision of motor vehicles at a highway intersection, where the question of negligence centered largely around the rights of the parties within the intersection, it was prejudicial error to instruct the jury that "intersection" is the area within the fence lines, if such fence lines were extended across the road, when a statute defines "intersection" as being the area within the lateral boundary lines of highways which join.

Hupp v Doolittle, 226-814; 285 NW 247

Automobile not "baggage". An automobile kept by the occupant of an apartment house in a garage adjacent to the apartment is not "baggage" within the meaning of the hotelkeepers lien act.

Cedar Rapids Co. v Commodore Hotel, 205-736; 218 NW 510

"Dangerous instrumentality." The vendor of a motor vehicle under a conditional sales contract and his assignee are not to be held responsible for the negligent operation of the vehicle by the vendee on the ground that they have a duty to see if the vendee is responsible before turning him loose on the highway with a dangerous instrumentality.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

"Emergency" defined. An emergency is (1) an unforeseen combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action; (2) a perplexing contingency or complication of circumstances; (3) a sudden or unexpected occasion for action; exigency; pressing necessity.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Change in classification of police patrol—effect. While the motor vehicle act in the Code of 1924, classified a "police patrol" as a "nonmotor vehicle", the later legislative classification of "police patrols" as "motor vehicles" was not intended to deprive a municipality of its exemption from liability for damages consequent on the negligent operation of a city-owned police patrol as a governmental agency.

Leckliter v City, 211-251; 233 NW 58

Registration—"special mobile equipment" includes portable mill. Statute exempting "special mobile equipment" from motor vehicle registration fees includes a portable grinding mill so mounted on the vehicle with such permanency that the vehicle and the equipment constitute an integral unit operated on the highways as a subordinate or subsidiary, tho necessary, feature in moving to locations where its primary use in grinding feed is to be performed.

State v Griswold, 225-237; 280 NW 489

Through highway—county trunk road.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Yielding half of "traveled way"—beaten path (?) or entire roadway (?). When the plaintiff's truck turned left at a blind corner, keeping to the right of the beaten path, but not to the right side of the graveled highway, and collided with the defendant's car which was approaching the corner on the right side of the road, it was not improper to instruct the jury that a car must yield half the traveled or graveled part of the road when meeting another car, and, that for the plaintiff to recover, it must be found that the truck was hit while on the right side of the road; or, for a recovery to be had by the defendant on a counterclaim, that the plaintiff was negligent in not yielding half the road.

Kiesau v Vangen, 226-824; 285 NW 181

5000.04 Rules and regulations.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 444

Statutes—construction and operation — in pari materia. Statutes in pari materia are to be construed together, and harmonized, if possible, and especially when such statutes appear in the same chapter. So held as to different statutes relating to the right of way of travelers at highway intersections.

Dikel v Mathers, 213-76; 238 NW 615

Delegating powers to nonlegislative board. While the legislature may not delegate its power to make laws, yet when it had declared a policy which is definite in describing the subject to which it relates and the character of the regulation intended to be imposed, it may delegate to nonlegislative board the power to make rules and regulations for effectuating such policy.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Unallowable delegation. The general assembly cannot, for the protection of the highways or for the safety of the traffic thereon, constitutionally delegate to the state highway commission power to adopt rules and regulations which shall have the force and effect of law.

Goodlove v Logan, 217-98; 251 NW 39

5000.10 Certified copies of records.

Ownership—incompetent evidence. On the issue of ownership of a motor vehicle (arising on the allegation that said vehicle was being operated with the consent of the owner), neither of the following is admissible:

1. A certified copy of a purported application for registration of said vehicle when said purported application is neither signed by nor sworn to by any person. For an added reason is this true when said certification fails to identify said application as a record of any public office.

2. An unauthenticated copy of a purported duplicate certificate of registration of said vehicle, especially when said certificate fails to carry the signature of the purported owner of said vehicle.

Putnam v Bussing, 221-871; 266 NW 559

5001.01 Misdemeanor to violate registration provisions.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Jan. 17, '40

5001.02 Vehicles subject to registration—exception.

Unambiguous tax exemption statute—strict construction rule nonapplicable. Strict construction of statutes granting exemptions from taxation, altho being the rule, has no application to a plain, clear, and unambiguous statute affording no room for construction.

State v Griswold, 225-237; 280 NW 489

Registration—"special mobile equipment" includes portable mill. Statute exempting "special mobile equipment" from motor vehicle registration fees includes a portable grinding mill so mounted on the vehicle with such permanency that the vehicle and the equipment constitute an integral unit operated on the highways as a subordinate or subsidiary, tho necessary, feature in moving to locations where its primary use in grinding feed is to be performed.

TRANSFERS OF TITLE OR INTEREST

5002.01 Notice.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 209

Implied warranty of title. The seller of an automobile impliedly warrants that he has a right to sell it.

Espe v McClelland, 208-512; 226 NW 130

Issue of ownership—instructions. On the issue of actual ownership, as between the vendor and vendee of an automobile, reversible error does not result from instructing, in effect, that the nonregistration of the vehicle with the county treasurer in the name of a prospective purchaser might be considered by the jury as a mere side light of the transaction.

Tigue Sales v Motor Co., 207-567; 221 NW 514

Transfer—right to contradict. On the issue whether plaintiff, in an action on a policy of insurance covering the theft of an automobile, was the "unconditional and sole" owner of the vehicle, plaintiff may testify to facts attending a written transfer of the certificate of registration tending to show that he, in fact, remained the owner of the vehicle notwithstanding said transfer.

Abraham v Ins. Co., 215-1; 244 NW 675

5002.02 Duty of purchaser.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 257; '36 AG Op 209

Scope of statute. Section 4964, C., '35, simply means that no delivery or passing of title is valid against the public tax-collecting authorities until the required registration is consummated. It has no reference to a contract delivery and passing of title between the private parties to a sale.

Cerex Co. v Peterson, 203-355; 212 NW 890

5002.03 Registration and fee.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 135; '34 AG Op 257; '36 AG Op 209

Failure to register auto transfer—passing title. Inference, from their failure to complete registration, that parties did not intend to pass ownership of an automobile sold under conditional sale is not sufficient to make a jury question when the parties at the time of the transaction clearly manifested an intent to immediately transfer ownership.

5002.07 Owner after transfer not liable for negligent operation.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 309; '36 AG Op 209

Conditional sale vendor not liable for negligence of vendee. The vendor of a motor vehicle under a conditional sales contract and his assignee are not to be held responsible for the negligent operation of the vehicle by the vendee on the ground that they have a duty to see if the vendee is responsible before turning him loose on the highway with a dangerous instrumentality.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

Delivery and title—scope of statutory requirement. The provision of the motor vehicle act that delivery of a vehicle shall not be deemed made, nor title to a vehicle be deemed to pass, until the transferee shall receive and sign the certificate of registration, simply means that no delivery or passing of title is valid against the public tax-collecting authorities until the required registration is consummated. The provision has no reference to a contract delivery and passing of title between the private parties to a sale.

Cerex Co. v Peterson, 203-355; 212 NW 890

Conditional sales—motor vehicles—ownership. An instruction was erroneous in stating that a conditional sales contract, containing a clause that title remained in seller, left the ownership of an automobile in the seller. The buyer became the substantial and beneficial owner under the contract, and §4964, C., '35, stating that title to motor vehicle shall not be deemed to pass until transferee has received and written his name on the registration certificate, is not construed to make seller liable as owner of the vehicle.

Craddock v Bickelhaupt, 227-202; 288 NW 109

Registration statutes—contract rights unrestricted between parties. Purpose of §4964, C., '35, in the motor vehicle laws, providing that title does not pass until the registration provisions have been completed, is to enable officials to perform their duty, collect tax, and prevent fraud on state, and does not restrict the contract rights of parties as between themselves, which they would have had in the absence of such statute.

Craddock v Bickelhaupt, 227-202; 288 NW 109

Issue of ownership—instructions. On the issue of actual ownership, as between the vendor and vendee of an automobile, reversible error does not result from instructing, in effect, that the nonregistration of the vehicle with the county treasurer in the name of a prospective purchaser might be considered by the jury, as a mere sidelight of the transaction.

Holding under prior statute. The possession of a motor vehicle the engine number of which has been altered is an offense, irrespective of the knowledge of the person possessing it.

State v Dunn, 202-1188; 211 NW 850

Prior statute. In an action to recover the money paid for an automobile the engine number of which had been changed, it is quite immaterial that there is no evidence that such change was wrongful or illegal.

Espe v McClelland, 208-512; 226 NW 130

Sale—total failure of consideration. The sale of an automobile the engine number of which has been defaced, altered, or tampered with, without an official certificate showing good and sufficient reasons for such change, presents a case of total failure of consideration, and no formal rescission of contract is necessary in order to recover the price paid.

Espe v McClelland, 208-512; 226 NW 130

Latent defects and equal opportunity to inspect. The rules of law pertaining to latent defects and equal opportunity to inspect do not apply to the sale of an article the possession of which the law unconditionally prohibits.

Espe v McClelland, 208-512; 226 NW 130

5006.11 Larceny of motor vehicle.

Unauthorized taking of motor vehicle—presumption of theft. When an owner of a motor vehicle establishes that his car was taken without his knowledge or consent from the place he left it, he has made a prima facie case of theft. The law raises a rebuttable presumption that the taking was with intent to steal the same.

Whisler v Ins. Co., 224-201; 276 NW 606

Intoxication subsequent to automobile theft—inadmissibility. Exclusion of evidence offered by an insurance company in an effort to escape liability on a theft policy, as to a thief's intoxicated condition an hour after the alleged theft of motor vehicles, as bearing on his condition at the time of the taking, held not prejudicial.

Whisler v Ins. Co., 224-201; 276 NW 606

Intoxication—defense to automobile theft insurance. Conflicting evidence as to whether one who took motor vehicles without owner's consent was intoxicated presents a jury question.

Whisler v Ins. Co., 224-201; 276 NW 606

Recent possession—justifiable inference. Unexplained possession of recently stolen property may justify the conviction of the possessor of the larceny in question; and especially when said possession is reinforced by proof of other incriminating circumstances with which the accused is connected.

State v Griswold, 225-237; 280 NW 489

Registration—"special mobile equipment" includes portable mill. Statute exempting "special mobile equipment" from motor vehicle registration fees includes a portable grinding mill so mounted on the vehicle with such permanency that the vehicle and the equipment constitute an integral unit operated on the highways as a subordinate or subsidiary, tho necessary, feature in moving to locations where its primary use in grinding feed is to be performed.

5013.01 Operators and chauffeurs licensed.

Driving without driver's license—effect. The fact that the driver of an automobile had no driver's license at the time of an accident becomes inconsequential when the action is by a passenger and when there is no causal relation between the driver's violation of law and plaintiff's injuries.

Schuster v Gillispie, 217-386; 251 NW 735

"Chauffeur" defined. An employee of a business who is not known as a chauffeur, and who is solely employed and paid for services wholly distinct from the operation of a delivery truck, does not become a "chauffeur" within the meaning of §4943, C., '27, by operating the truck during the time the regular chauffeur operator is temporarily absent.

5015.07 Renting motor vehicle to another.

Robinson v Bruce, 205-261; 215 NW 724; 61 ALR 851; 28 NCCA 626; 30 NCCA 90

Guest injured in rented car—burden of proof. In action by guest against lender of rented car and driven by borrower, for injuries sustained when car because of defective wheels goes into ditch, he must show, not only that car was defective at time of accident, but that it was defective at time of its delivery to borrower. Held burden of proof not sustained.

Gianopoulos v Saunders System, (NOR) 242 NW 53; 32 NCCA 18

LAW OF THE ROAD

OBEDIENCE TO AND EFFECT OF TRAFFIC LAWS

5017.03 Public officers not exempt.

Public officers and agents—personal liability. A public officer while traveling upon the public highway in the performance of a governmental function, in the sense that he is attempting to reach a point where he can actually perform and consummate such function, is under the same duty to exercise care and subject to the same liability for want of such care as any other citizen.

Rowley v City, 203-1245; 212 NW 158; 53 ALR 375; 34 NCCA 464

Governmental employees—personally liable for torts—governmental immunity denied. A governmental employee committing a tortious act which causes injury to another in violation of a duty owed to the injured person becomes, as an individual, personally liable in damages therefor. (Hibbs v School Dist., 218 Iowa 841, overruled.)

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Doherty v Edwards, 226-249; 284 NW 159

Governmental immunity — law question raised in reply—recognizing issue. The defense of "governmental immunity" of an employee, in a personal injury action, should properly be assailed by motion or demurrer. However, if the law question of sufficiency of this defense is raised in the reply and not challenged by the defendant, and the case tried on that theory, then the court is correct in recognizing the issue and instructing on the inadequacy of that defense.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Government employee's automobile collision—immunity as a defense. In a damage action for injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, defendant's claim that he was a state employee performing a governmental function is a matter of defense not properly raised by special appearance.

Anderson v Moon, 225-70; 279 NW 396

Government nonliability for employee's tort—respondent superior—exception. The exemption accorded counties and other governmental bodies and their officers from liability for torts growing out of the negligent acts of their agents or employees is a limitation or exception to the rule of respondeat superior and in no way affects the fundamental principle of torts that one who wrongfully inflicts injury upon another is individually liable to the injured person.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Governmental function—negligent operation of road maintainer—nonliability. Neither a county as a quasi corporation nor its board of supervisors is liable for the negligence of its employee in operating after dark a road maintainer without lights on the left-hand side of a highway, and in an action by a motorist who sustained injuries on account of such negligence demurrers to the petition by the county and its board of supervisors were properly sustained.

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Statute requiring lights on road machinery—violation—nonliability of county. Mandatory statutes requiring danger lights on road machinery and providing punishment for their violation do not create any liability on a county for negligent observance thereof.

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

Maintenance patrolmen — bonds — liability. The statutory bond required of road patrolmen for the performance of their statutory duties in caring for the roads assigned to them, does not embrace liability to a traveler, in damages consequent on the negligent handling of road machinery.

Bateson v Marshall County, 213-718; 239 NW 803

School bus driver as independent contractor — nongovernmental function. A school bus driver furnishing his own bus under a contract embodying certain conditions to transport school children, but not under the supervision, control, and regulation of the board, is an independent contractor liable for his own negligence and not an employee exercising a governmental function.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Legislative change in classification of police patrol — effect on governmental exemption. While the motor vehicle act, C., '24, classified a "police patrol" as a "nonmotor vehicle," the later legislative classification of "police patrols" as "motor vehicles" was not intended to deprive a municipality of its exemption from liability for damages consequent on the negligent operation of a city-owned police patrol as a governmental agency.

Leckliter v Des Moines, 211-251; 233 NW 58

Operation of police patrol a governmental function. The operation of a plainly marked police patrol by a policeman in uniform, in conveying policemen in uniform from the police station to their patrol beats, all under orders from the chief of police, is a governmental function. It follows that the city is not liable for damages consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the driver.

Leckliter v Des Moines, 211-251; 233 NW 58; 38 NCCA 493

5017.06 Road workers exempted.

Person injured on highway construction work. In laborer's personal injury action arising because of truck backing into him while both were engaged in highway construction work, an instruction, that it is the duty of driver in moving a truck to exercise care and caution of ordinarily prudent person and to bring truck under proper control if he discovers, or in exercise of reasonable care should discover, a person in the path of truck, was neither erroneous as submitting to the jury a previously withdrawn issue as to whether defendant driver has truck under control, nor as permitting jury to speculate on defendant's negligence generally.

Rebmann v Heesch, 227-566; 288 NW 695

Co-worker—truck driver's duty. In a laborer's personal injury action against a truck driver for backing truck into laborer while both were engaged in highway construction, §5017.06, C., '39, exempting persons and motor vehicles actually engaged in work upon the highway from the motor vehicle law requirements, does not exempt a truck driver from using his horn if necessary in the exercise of ordinary care when backing from an intersection onto highway under construction. Question of defendant's negligence in not sounding horn nor observing plaintiff's presence when backing truck where men were working, and question of plaintiff's contributory negligence while working under foreman's instruction at outside edge of road were questions properly submitted to jury.

Rebmann v Heesch, 227-566; 288 NW 695

5017.07 Bicycles or animal-drawn vehicles.

Driving blind horse. It is not negligent per se to drive a blind horse in a narrow highway on a dark night, with the horse hitched to an unlighted buggy.

Lange v Bedell, 203-1194; 212 NW 354

Collision resulting in collision. The act of the driver of an automobile in negligently running into a wagon and team on the highway and causing the team to run away, may be the proximate cause of a later collision between said runaway team and another automobile, provided said latter collision was the natural or likely result of the first collision; and this is true tho the first driver did not foresee or apprehend said second collision.

Dennis v Merrill, 218-1259; 257 NW 322; 1 NCCA(NS) 175

Res ipsa loquitur—ambiguous but not erroneous phrase. In an action against a motorist for colliding with the rear of a horse-drawn vehicle, tried on the theory of res ipsa loquitur, an instruction containing the phrase, "within her exclusive control, or the exclusive control of her authorized driver", as applied to the automobile or instrumentality, held not erroneous as meaning control to the exclusion of each other, but rather control to the exclusion of third persons.

Mein v Reed, 224-1274; 278 NW 307

Unnatural appearance and unnecessary noise as negligence. It is actionable negligence to operate a motor vehicle upon the public highway when said vehicle is so equipped as to take on such a strange and unnatural appearance and to emit such unusual and unnecessary noise as may reasonably result in fright to animals properly driven on such highway.

Buchanan v Cream Co., 215-415; 246 NW 41

Striking boy on bicycle—dispute as to lookout. Where a defendant county employe-trucker ran over a boy on a bicycle, an allegation of defendant's lack of proper lookout is clearly for the jury, when from the evidence, indicating the trucker may have struck the boy from the rear and should have seen him, the jury may well have found that defendant did not, in fact, keep such lookout.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Contributory negligence as jury question—boy on bicycle warming ear with hand. Plaintiff riding a bicycle on the sidewalk, a place of comparative safety, observing the traffic ahead of him, cannot, as a matter of law, be said to be guilty of contributory negligence in not watching where he was going simply because he put a hand over his ear to warm it, when there is a sharp conflict in the evidence as to whether the truck which struck the boy turned sharply in ahead of him, or turned gradually and struck him from the rear.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Bicycle lights—contributory negligence—jury question. In a damage action against a motorist for death of a bicycle rider, the jury, under the record, could properly find that cyclist was not traveling with bicycle lights required by statute and was not free from contributory negligence, despite fact that evidence showed a recent purchase of red reflector and lamp by an unidentified person on morning of accident; and the finding of a broken lamp, reflector, etc., by the sheriff at the scene of and some time after the accident does not compel a finding that the bicycle was properly equipped.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6

Collision with bicycle—instructions—jury question. Where a motorist driving east 40 to 50 miles per hour at night on a paved highway, the lights on vehicle properly working (no rain, fog, or snow), his attention being momentarily diverted by an oncoming car, and, simultaneously with its passing, he collided with and fatally injured a bicycle rider also traveling east, instructions covering diverting circumstances relative to speed (§5029, C., '35) and failing to turn to left when passing vehicle (§5022, C., '35) reviewed and held to present correctly questions for jury.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6; 3 NCCA(NS) 184

POWERS OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES

5018.01 Powers of local authorities.

Annotations in Vol I, see under §4992

Violation of ordinance—presumption—instructions. While the violation of a city ordinance relative to the operation of an automobile is only prima facie evidence of negligence, yet, where the sole issue is whether the operator did violate such ordinance—when the operator makes no effort to excuse a violation—it is not erroneous for the court to instruct that if there was such violation the jury "would be warranted in finding the operator guilty of negligence".

McDougal v Bormann, 211-950; 234 NW 807; 32 NCCA 405

Negligence under ordinance embodying statute. It is not error to submit to the jury the question of negligence based on the violation of a city ordinance with reference to control and speed of a motor vehicle when the ordinance merely embodies the provisions of a statute.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Unlawful parking—negligence. The parking of a motor vehicle at a place where parking is prohibited by a valid city ordinance constitutes negligence and, in case a collision occurs with the parked vehicle, the said negligence must be deemed to have contributed to the resulting damage.

Riley v Guthrie, 218-422; 255 NW 502; 35 NCCA 818

Parking on left side without tail light. Section 5056, C., '35, requiring parking on right side of city street, was in effect in city which had not adopted any ordinance to the contrary under authority of §4997, and §5045, in view of its legislative history, required red tail light upon automobile parked at night upon city street. The purpose of these statutes was protection and warning of traffic, and violation thereof without legal excuse was negligence, but whether such negligence was proximate cause of a bicyclist's collision with an automobile so parked was question for jury.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

Right of way at boulevard intersections. The mere legal designation by a city or town of a street as a boulevard or arterial highway, and the erection of stop signs on intersecting streets, does not impliedly give to the traveler on the boulevard or arterial highway the right of way over traffic on intersecting streets. In the absence of a statute giving such right of way, the traveler on the intersecting highway is first controlled by the boulevard stop sign, and thereafter by the statute regulating right of way at intersections generally.

Dikel v Mathers, 213-76; 238 NW 615

“Stop and go” signals—change after entering intersection—nonnegligence per se. A pedestrian who, in obedience to a municipally operated “go” signal, starts across the street on the pathway provided for pedestrians, and suddenly discovers that said “go” signal has changed to “stop”, is not guilty of negligence per se in failing to look for, see, and avoid a vehicle which, under said change in signals, passes entirely across the intersection and hits and injures said pedestrian within less than two seconds after said change in signals occurs; especially is this true, (1) when said pedestrian has, by ordinance, the right of way over said vehicle because he was first properly to enter said intersection, and (2) when said pedestrian, at the very instant of said change in signals, was immediately approaching other stationary vehicles known to be awaiting release from a “stop” signal.

Dougherty v McFee, 221-391; 265 NW 176

Excluding travel from street. A city has no legal right to exclude ordinary travel from a public street in order that the street may be used exclusively for coasting.

Dennier v Johnson, 214-770; 240 NW 745

“Coasting” defined—sled hitched to vehicle excluded. A city ordinance prohibiting “coasting” in the streets applies only to vehicles or sleds moving by the force of gravity and not to sleds hitched to the rear of motor vehicles.

Samuelson v Sherrill, 225-421; 280 NW 596

Ordinance—violation—jury question. Whether the driver of a slowly moving vehicle was violating an ordinance which required him to keep as close as possible to the right-hand curb becomes a jury question on evidence that he was driving three feet from said curb, with adequate space for another vehicle to pass to his left.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

TRAFFIC SIGNS, SIGNALS, AND MARKINGS

5019.01 Highway commission to adopt sign manual.

Official highway markers presumed regular. A motorist has a right to assume that highway signs having the appearance of regularity have been erected by proper authority.

King v Gold, 224-890; 276 NW 774; 4 NCCA (NS) 333

Unallowable delegation. The general assembly cannot, for the protection of the highways or for the safety of the traffic thereon, constitutionally delegate to the state highway commission power to adopt rules and regulations which shall have the force and effect of law.

Goodlove v Logan, 217-98; 251 NW 39

5019.08 Unauthorized signs, signals, or markings.

Highway signs—authorized erection. It may be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the ordinary “Stop” and “Slow” signs, as they are found upon the public highways, were erected by and under authority of the proper public officials.

Rogers v Jefferson, 223-718; 272 NW 532; 277 NW 570; 4 NCCA (NS) 318

Official highway markers presumed regular. A motorist has a right to assume that highway signs having the appearance of regularity have been erected by proper authority.

King v Gold, 224-890; 276 NW 774; 4 NCCA (NS) 333

ACCIDENTS

5020.06 Reporting accidents.

Failure to report accident—negligence of injured person no defense. The fact that a person injured in an automobile accident was negligent does not excuse the operator from making a report.

State v Schenk, 220-511; 262 NW 129

Failure immediately to report accident. All accidents involving injury to a person must be reported “immediately”, irrespective of the place of the accident.

State v Schenk, 220-511; 262 NW 129

5020.11 Reports confidential—without prejudice.

Patrolman’s testimony—law inapplicable.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

Remarks overheard—privileged communication. Evidence of witness who overheard statement of defendant in reporting accident, the witness being neither a peace officer nor an official, was properly excluded under statute requiring such report to be made and further providing that the report shall be confidential and not used as evidence in any trial, civil or criminal, arising out of the accident.

DRIVING WHILE INTOXICATED AND RECKLESS DRIVING

5022.01 Assaults and homicide.

Manslaughter—nonapplicable statute. Section 5026-b1, C., '31 [§5037.10, C., '39], fixes civil liability in the operation of automobiles and has nothing to do with automobile operations resulting in manslaughter.

State v Richardson, 216-809; 249 NW 211

Manslaughter—wanton and reckless conduct. Instructions to the effect that, in order to constitute manslaughter, the operation of an automobile must be in such a wanton and reckless manner as to show utter disregard for the "safety" of others, are not erroneous because the court did not employ the phrase "safety and lives of others".

State v Richardson, 216-809; 249 NW 211

Manslaughter—unavoidable accident—failure to submit issue. Instructions, under a charge of manslaughter, which distinctly place on the state the burden to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was operating his automobile in a careless, reckless, and negligent manner in willful or wanton disregard of the safety of others, clearly protect the defendant from a conviction if the death was the result of unavoidable accident.

State v Richardson, 216-809; 249 NW 211

5022.02 Operating while intoxicated.

Annotations in Vol I, see under §5027

Discussion. See 23 ILR 57—Scientific tests for intoxication; 24 ILR 191—Medico-legal aspects Constitutionality—cruel and unusual punishment.

State v Dowling, 204-977; 216 NW 271

State v Rayburn, 213-396; 238 NW 908

Statutory penalty replaced.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Indictment. An indictment for operating an automobile while the driver thereof is intoxicated need not allege that the operation was "on a public highway".

State v Dowling, 204-977; 216 NW 271; 29 NCCA 580

"Operation" defined. An intoxicated person is "operating" an automobile, when, preparatory to actually moving the car along the highway, he puts the engine in motion.

State v Webb, 202-633; 210 NW 751; 49 ALR 1389; 29 NCCA 560

"Operation" defined. The driving-while-intoxicated statute is violated by so operating a car while attempting to get it out of a ditch along the side of the road, into which ditch the car had inadvertently slid.

State v Overbay, 201-758; 206 NW 634; 29 NCCA 560

Accomplice. The owner of an automobile who causes another person to operate the car while such other person is intoxicated, because such other person is less drunk than the owner, becomes an accomplice in the offense of operating an automobile while intoxicated.

State v Myers, 207-555; 223 NW 166

Aggravation per se. On the plea that the punishment for operating an automobile on the public highways while the driver was intoxicated is excessive, it must be kept in mind that aggravation necessarily inheres in such an act.

State v Giles, 200-1232; 206 NW 133; 42 ALR 1496; 29 NCCA 578

State v Dillard, 207-831; 221 NW 817

Use of liquor—criminal negligence.

State v Weltha, 228- ; 292 NW 148

Burden of proof. In a prosecution for driving while intoxicated the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that (1) defendant was operating the motor vehicle and (2) defendant was intoxicated.

State v Hamer, 223-1129; 274 NW 885

Opinion evidence. Opinion evidence is admissible on the issue of intoxication.

State v Jenkins, 203-251; 212 NW 475

Opinion evidence. A witness may testify whether a person was sober or intoxicated without first stating the facts on which the opinion is based.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Nonexpert testimony. No instruction need be given in regard to nonexpert evidence in relation to intoxication.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Fatally remote evidence. Evidence that a party accused of operating an automobile while intoxicated was free from the odor of alcohol some sixteen hours after the occurrence in question is properly excluded.

State v Jenkins, 203-251; 212 NW 475

Insufficient evidence. Evidence which is not conclusive that an accused was intoxicated when arrested some three or four hours after he had operated an automobile, together with evidence that the accident which resulted from such operation might easily have happened to a sober man, is wholly insufficient to sustain a verdict of guilt of operating an automobile while intoxicated.

State v Liechti, 209-1119; 229 NW 743

Driving while intoxicated not presumed from later intoxication. The fact as established by the state's evidence that defendant was intoxicated some time after a motor vehicle accident carries no presumption that he was intoxicated at the time of the accident, especially when considered with the testimony of another state witness that the defendant was not intoxicated at the time of the accident.

State v Hamer, 223-1129; 274 NW 885

Insufficient evidence. A verdict of guilty of operating an automobile while intoxicated is not sustainable on testimony all of which tends to show that the accused was sober while operating the car in question, and part of which tends to show that he was intoxicated shortly after the operation in question.

State v McKenzie, 204-833; 216 NW 29

No conviction on state's contradictory evidence. In a prosecution for operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, a conviction based solely on the self-contradictory statements of the state's witnesses as to whether defendant was actually driving the vehicle cannot be sustained.

State v Hamer, 223-1129; 274 NW 885

Bias of witness. Fact that a doctor, the real instigator of the prosecution, as a witness in a criminal case showed considerable feeling and interest was a matter for the jury—not for the court.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

Fact cases.

State v Gillman, 202-428; 210 NW 435

State v Jenkins, 203-251; 212 NW 475; 29 NCCA 557

State v Sharpshair, 215-399; 245 NW 350

Acts and declarations of officer. Acts and declarations of an officer after searching the vehicle of an accused, which are not related to the issue on trial, are properly excluded.

State v Jenkins, 203-251; 212 NW 475

Demonstrative evidence. On the issue of intoxication, articles and things found at the scene of an automobile wreck may be relevant and admissible.

State v Jenkins, 203-251; 212 NW 475

Dazed condition from injury—opinion.

State v McDowell, 228- ; 290 NW 65

Second offense—unallowable evidence. On the issue of former conviction of driving an automobile while intoxicated, it is highly prejudicial to receive in evidence on the trial to the jury, the files of said former case. So held where said files consisted of (1) the information of the county attorney with minutes of testimony attached, (2) the indictment with the minutes of some 13 witnesses attached, (3) the bench warrant, and (4) mittimus.

State v De Bont, 223-721; 273 NW 873

Good character witness—cross-examination. A good character witness, who testifies that the general reputation of an accused (charged with operating an automobile while intoxicated) for moral character is good, may, on cross-examination, be asked whether he has heard within a stated recent time that the defendant, while operating a motor vehicle and while in an intoxicated condition, had been involved in certain specified accidents.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Circumstantial evidence—weight and sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that circumstantial evidence when exclusively relied on to support a verdict of guilt in a criminal cause must point to the guilt of the defendant beyond all reasonable doubt and be inconsistent with any reasonable theory of the defendant's innocence. So held as to a charge of operating an automobile while intoxicated.

State v Hooper, 222-481; 269 NW 431

Prosecutor's misconduct—admonition—court's discretion. In a prosecution for operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, where misconduct was alleged because of prosecutor's argument to jury that defendant had admitted his intoxication, and, if other statements of prosecutor were not true, defendant's counsel would not jump up and squeal like a pig under a gate, and when timely admonitions to the jury are given, coupled with the discretion of the trial court in controlling arguments, no reversal should follow as supreme court will not interfere unless such misconduct results in prejudice and deprives a defendant of a fair trial.

State v Dale, 225-1254; 282 NW 715

Evidentiary conflict—jury question. A sharp conflict in the testimony as to whether a motor vehicle driver was intoxicated generates a question of the credibility of the witnesses, which is a matter peculiarly for the jury.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

Physical facts considered by jury. Physical facts that a motorist drove over a sidewalk, into the front yard of a house, striking a child, together with certain remarks he made immediately after the accident which were inconsistent with sobriety, warrants the jury, trying to reconcile conflicting testimony, in finding the driver was intoxicated.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

Intoxication—degree. In a prosecution for operating an automobile while in an intoxicated condition, an instruction that a person is intoxicated when he is so far under the influence of intoxicating liquor that his passions are visibly excited, or his judgment is impaired by the liquor, is sufficient without any additional requirement that defendant's judgment must be "visibly impaired", or that his ability to drive must be affected by the liquor.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Intoxication—evidence—sufficiency. In a prosecution for operating an automobile while in an intoxicated condition, the court need not instruct the jury that the presence of the odor of liquor on defendant's breath after an accident would not of itself constitute proof of intoxication — the court having already adequately, but in a general way, apprised the jury of what constituted intoxication.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Cross-examination of accused—use of liquor. Even tho an accused on trial for driving an automobile while intoxicated is not asked on direct examination whether he had used intoxicating liquors on the day in question or was then sober or drunk, yet on cross-examination the state may make inquiry of defendant concerning his use of intoxicating liquors on the occasion in question, for the purpose of enabling the jury to properly weigh the defendant's testimony.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue as to the operation of an automobile while the operator was intoxicated.

State v Kendall, 200-483; 203 NW 806

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to sustain a verdict of guilty of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated.

State v Fahey, 201-575; 207 NW 608

Intoxication—instructions. In a prosecution for driving an automobile while intoxicated, an instruction that intoxication was not established by evidence that defendant was at fault in the occurrence of a collision or that he drove negligently or recklessly, but that such matters should be given due consideration, neither needs nor requires elaboration as to what constitutes fault or negligence.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Instructions—intoxication element of recklessness.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Instructions—"upon a public highway". An allegation of the driving of an automobile "upon a public highway" while the driver was intoxicated is properly submitted to the jury by instructions which set forth the indictment and direct the jury to acquit unless, inter alia, the jury finds that the accused operated the automobile "at the place alleged."

State v Conklin, 204-1131; 216 NW 704; 29 NCCA 563

Instruction allowing recommendation of clemency—juror's affidavit of explanation. Where during its deliberations jury inquired of judge as to whether a verdict of guilty with recommendation of clemency would have any weight on sentence and judge instructed that any recommendations desired could be made on separate sheet of paper, signed and returned with verdict, held, instruction did not constitute error, and that jurors' affidavits stating that they were influenced by the instruction could not be considered by court in ruling on motion for new trial.

State v Cook, 227-1212; 290 NW 550

Defendant's theory of case—no requested instruction—no reviewable error. Where defendant, charged with operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, requests no instruction on his theory of how he happened to lose control of his car because his trousers caught fire, the court did not err in failing to submit his theory to the jury.

State v Dale, 225-1254; 282 NW 715

Requested instruction—beer not intoxicating liquor—refusal not error. In prosecution for driving a motor vehicle while intoxicated, the refusal of accused's requested instruction that beer is not an intoxicating liquor held not error.

State v McGregor, (NOR); 266 NW 22

Inebriate in state hospital—delay in trial—no dismissal. Criminal courts have no right to force an inebriate inmate of a state hospital to stand trial on an indictment for driving while intoxicated, and such confinement is good cause for refusing to dismiss for delay in prosecution.

Mahe v Brown, 225-341; 280 NW 553

Excessive proof of fact. In a prosecution for driving an automobile while intoxicated, the fact that the gruesome details of a collision were oft detailed by a large number of witnesses furnishes no reason why the defendant should be given a new trial.

State v Wheelock, 218-178; 254 NW 313

Sentence—imprisonment for nonpayment of costs. One convicted for operating an automobile while intoxicated and sentenced to pay a fine and costs may not be imprisoned for the nonpayment of the costs.

State v Gillman, 202-423; 210 NW 435

5022.04 Reckless driving.

Annotations in Vol I, see under §5023

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 167; '36 AG Op 692

Recklessness—civil liability—definition not deducible from criminal statute. The enumeration in this section of certain acts and the denomination of said acts as "reckless driving", and imposing a criminal punishment for doing said acts, cannot be deemed as furnishing a definition as to what conduct constitutes "reckless operation" under §5026-b1, C., '31 [§5037.10, C., '39], which simply states a rule of civil liability.

Shenkle v Mains, 216-1324; 247 NW 635

Recklessness—civil definition.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

"Reckless operation"—plural definitions. Section 5023, C., '31, which, in effect, provides that the operation of a motor vehicle in specified ways shall be deemed "reckless driving", was not intended to define "reckless operation" as provided in the so-called "guest" statute—§5026-b1 [§5037.10, C., '39] of said code.

Fleming v Thornton, 217-183; 251 NW 158

Involuntary manslaughter—evidence—sufficiency. Testimony held to generate a jury question on the issue of manslaughter, arising from reckless driving.

I ASSURED CLEAR DISTANCE AHEAD

Discussion. See 19 ILR 580—Speed standard; 24 ILR 128—Assured clear distance

Definition. Assured clear distance ahead means the distance ahead that discernible objects may be seen.

Mueller v Ins. Assn., 223-888; 274 NW 106; 113 ALR 1256

Proper paraphrase. The statutory command so to drive as to be able to stop "within the assured clear distance ahead" is properly paraphrased in instructions as ability to stop "within the distance that discernible objects may be seen ahead".

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Improper definition. Reversible error results from instructing that "assured clear distance ahead" as used in our statute means "the distance ahead within which the driver of an automobile is sure and certain that the highway is not occupied by other vehicles or persons".

Groshens v Lund, 222-49; 268 NW 496

Vehicle within town limits—no speed sign.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Requirements of rule. The assured clear distance ahead rule requires the driver of an automobile to drive at all times at a rate of speed that will enable him to stop his car within the distance that discernible objects ahead of it may be seen.

Monen v Jewel Tea Co., 227-547; 288 NW 637

Operation after visibility ceases. The statutory command so to drive a vehicle on the highway as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead requires an immediately stop when, for any reason, there is no visibility ahead.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Visibility as affecting speed. As visibility is reduced speed must be reduced accordingly, and when visibility is lost an automobile should be stopped.

Mueller v Ins. Assn., 223-888; 274 NW 106; 113 ALR 1256

Pleading negligence—sufficiency.

Janes v Roach, 228- ; 290 NW 87

Careful and prudent speed not a test. Circumstances indicating a violation of that part of this section requiring a motor vehicle to be driven at a careful and prudent speed would not necessarily also involve a violation of the other part of the section pertaining to the assured clear distance ahead.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Prohibited speed negligence per se. A violation of the statute that no person shall drive any vehicle on a highway at a speed greater than will permit him to bring it to a stop within the assured clear distance ahead permits of no escape from the imputation of negligence per se, except on plea and proof of a recognized legal excuse for so driving.

Swan v Auto Co., 221-842; 265 NW 143

Inability to stop as negligence. The driver of an automobile who pays no attention to objects ahead of him or who operates his car, without legal excuse for so doing, at a speed which will not enable him to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, is necessarily guilty of negligence.

Peckinpaugh v Engelke, 215-1248; 247 NW 822

Rebuttable presumption of negligence. The driving of a vehicle upon a highway at a speed greater than will permit the driver to stop within the assured clear distance ahead creates a rebuttable presumption of negligence only.

Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442

Physical facts—no object ahead—error to submit. It is error to submit the issue of assured clear distance when the physical facts and plaintiff's testimony show that there was no discernible object ahead of defendant's car.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issues whether the operator of an automobile was guilty of negligence in failing (1) to maintain a proper outlook for pedestrians, (2) to warn pedestrians, and (3) to keep his car under control.

Sexauer v Dunlap, 207-1018; 222 NW 420

Altfilisch v Wessel, 208-361; 225 NW 862

Robertson v Carlgren, 211-963; 234 NW 824

Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220

I ASSURED CLEAR DISTANCE AHEAD —continued

Pedestrian accident—legal excuse—jury question. Where a pedestrian crossing the street is struck by a motorist after first being seen 180 feet away on the opposite curb, and could have been seen by the motorist at all times prior to the collision, motorist's showing that pedestrian "popped up" ahead of him as legal excuse for not stopping within the assured clear distance is evidence raising a jury question.

Swan v Dailey-Luce Co., 225-89; 277 NW 580; 281 NW 504

Jury question—sufficient evidence.

Janes v Roach, 228- ; 290 NW 87

Negligence—emergency as legal excuse. Evidence that a pedestrian walking along a shoulder of a highway suddenly stepped in front of an automobile, where he was struck, raises a jury question as to such emergency and as to legal excuse for failing to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Approaching vehicles. The statutory duty of the driver of a vehicle to so drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead applies to drivers approaching each other from opposite directions.

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787

Approaching vehicle turning to left. The statutory duty so to drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead has no application to a situation where the driver has no reason to suppose, until practically instantaneous with the collision, that an approaching vehicle would be driven into his proper pathway of travel.

Howk v Anderson, 218-358; 253 NW 32

Young v Jacobsen Bros., 219-483; 258 NW 104

Vehicle on wrong side of road. The statutory duty of the driver of an automobile so to drive that he can stop within the assured clear distance ahead applies to a driver who is on the wrong side of the road when meeting another vehicle.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Stopping when meeting vehicle. The duty so to operate an automobile as to be able to stop it within the assured clear distance ahead does not necessarily require the operator to stop his car on approaching an oncoming vehicle which is under duty to yield one-half of the traveled way.

Schuster v Gillispie, 217-386; 251 NW 735

Wrong side of highway—violation. The fact that a motorist traveling on the right-hand side of the highway comes into collision with an approaching car traveling on the left-hand side of the highway (in other words, both cars traveling in the same pathway) does not, in and of itself, establish or even tend to establish a violation of the statutory command so to drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

Plural assignment—justifiable submission. Record reviewed in an action for damages consequent on a collision during the nighttime between trucks and held to justify the court in submitting to the jury not only the issue (1) of defendant's failure to turn to the right and yield one-half of the right of way, but also the issues (2) of defendant's failure to maintain a proper lookout for other vehicles, and (3) of defendant's alleged excessive speed.

Pazen v Des Moines Co., 223-23; 272 NW 126

Overtaking and passing—inapplicability. In action to recover for personal injuries resulting from an automobile collision occurring when the driver of an automobile attempted to pass a truck while the vehicles were traveling side by side, and the truck driver attempted a left turn into driveway of a farm, held, that the assured clear distance ahead rule was inapplicable.

Monen v Jewel Tea Co., 227-547; 288 NW 637

Negligence per se—double passing. The operator of a motor vehicle, who, at a speed of forty miles per hour and in the nighttime, attempts to pass another vehicle which he is closely following, at the very time when the operator of such other vehicle is attempting to pass a vehicle which he has overtaken, is guilty of negligence per se; both because he (1) is manifestly driving at an imprudent rate of speed under the circumstances, and (2) is driving at a rate of speed which will not enable him to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-85; 244 NW 660

Parked truck—failure to slow down. The driver of a vehicle who, on a clear and unobstructed road, and at a distance of 250 feet, sees a substantial object on the right-hand side of the road ahead, and at a distance of 150 feet discovers that the object is a truck, and at a distance of 25 feet discovers that the truck is stationary, and thereupon, because of unslackened speed, is unable to avoid hitting the truck by turning to the left into the unobstructed part of the road, is guilty of a negligence which is the proximate cause of the resulting collision.

Albrecht v Constr. Co., 218-1205; 257 NW 183

Continuing travel after loss of visibility. When the driver of an automobile, on a dark and misty night, continues his course on a public street after the street lights and his car lights fail to reveal objects ahead, the proximate cause of running head-on into an invisible street curb must be deemed to be the loss of visibility and the driver's venture into the darkness.

Greenland v Des Moines, 206-1298; 221 NW 953

Failure to see obstruction—contributory negligence per se. The driver of an automobile who, in the nighttime, with his headlights burning, and while on the proper side of a straight, 20-foot-wide, paved highway, drives at the rate of 35 or 40 miles per hour, and under no materially diverting circumstances, squarely into the rear of a stationary, wholly unlighted truck which is directly in his pathway and which, from its build, color, and load, is reasonably discernible, must be deemed to have failed to maintain a proper lookout or to have been so driving as to be unable to stop within the assured clear distance ahead—in either event, negligent. (For some measurable period of time before the collision, said stationary truck was being simultaneously approached from the north by the lights of the colliding car and from the south by the lights of a car traveling northward, which latter car passed said stationary car almost at the instant of the collision.)

Shannahan v Produce Co., 220-702; 263 NW 39

Stalled vehicle—absence of signals—proximate cause. The fact that, upon the stalling of a vehicle in the public highway, no lights or signals were erected to show the presence and position of said vehicle cannot be deemed the proximate cause of a collision with the stalled vehicle when the driver of the colliding vehicle discovered the presence and position of the stalled car in ample time to stop had he been so driving as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Albrecht v Const. Co., 218-1205; 257 NW 183

Visibility of parked car at night.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Inability to stop—blinded by lights. The driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se in driving at such a rate of speed that he cannot stop within the distance that a discernible obstruction may be seen ahead of the car. So held as to a driver who, blinded by the lights of a stationary car by the roadside, nevertheless continued his speed for some material distance, and when too late to stop, discovered an unlighted truck in the highway.

Lindquist v Thierman, 216-170; 248 NW 504; 87 ALR 893

Stopping within radius of lights. The driver of an automobile, in the nighttime and on a public highway, when faced by no emergency or diverting circumstance, is guilty of negligence per se in so driving that he cannot stop within the radius of his lights.

Ellis v Bruce, 217-258; 252 NW 101; 36 NCCA 136; 1 NCCA(NS) 10

Driving into unlighted truck. The operator of an automobile is guilty of contributory negligence in colliding in the nighttime with a truck parked in the highway directly ahead of him, when his lights revealed objects ahead for a distance of from 75 to 100 feet; and he cannot avoid such imputation of negligence by the claim that just preceding the collision his attention was diverted by a light remote from the highway on which he was traveling.

Dearinger v Keller, 219-1; 257 NW 206; 36 NCCA 709

Meeting car without lights. An operator of an automobile does not necessarily violate the assured clear distance ahead statute when he has no reason to anticipate that he will meet another rapidly approaching car without lights, and therefore so drives on a foggy night that he cannot stop instantly when confronted by such nonanticipated event.

Caudle v Zenor, 217-77; 251 NW 69; 34 NCCA 122; 1 NCCA(NS) 44

Inability to stop within range of visibility. The driving of an automobile on the public highway in the nighttime at a speed which will not permit the operator to stop within the range of visibility constitutes, in the absence of plea and proof of a legal excuse for so doing, negligence per se.

Hart v Stence, 219-55; 257 NW 434; 97 ALR 535; 36 NCCA 716; 1 NCCA(NS) 23

Absence of excuse—negligence per se. The failure of the driver of an automobile to drive at such speed as will permit him to bring the car to a stop within the assured clear distance ahead constitutes, in the absence of some legal excuse, negligence per se. And such excuse is not made to appear by evidence that the driver met a car and was temporarily blinded by the lights shining in his face but did not slacken his speed.

Wosoba v Kenyon, 215-226; 243 NW 569; 1 NCCA(NS) 63, 747

Willemsen v Reedy, 215-193; 244 NW 691

Failure to see obstruction in fog. On a foggy evening when visibility was poor, where the plaintiff, with the headlamps on his automobile lighted and the windshield wiper working, drove his car into another car which was parked on the highway, in the absence of any proof of an emergency to excuse his failure to see the other car, he was not free from contributory negligence and the defendant was entitled to a directed verdict.

Newman v Hotz, 226-831; 285 NW 289

Fog—careful and prudent operation—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question whether the operator of an automobile was, on a foggy night, proceeding in a careful and prudent manner, and whether he had such control over the car that he could avoid obstacles appearing within the range of his vision.

Caudle v Zenor, 217-77; 251 NW 69; 34 NCCA 122; 1 NCCA(NS) 44

Accident at crossing—warnings additional to statutory warnings—duty to furnish. Conceded, arguendo, that a public railway crossing may be attended by such danger as to impose on the railway company, in the exercise of reasonable care, the duty to furnish to the highway traveler warnings in addition to those required by statute, but such duty does not arise when the danger is avoidable by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of the traveler. So held, inter alia, as to a fog-shrouded crossing, the danger attending which could be avoided by the traveler so driving as to be able to stop within the range of his vision.

Dolan v Bremner, 220-1143; 263 NW 798

Inability to stop—slippery highway. The fact that the driver of an automobile in the nighttime suddenly comes to an unexpected, slippery spot in the highway without fault or negligence on his part may render inapplicable the statutory command so to drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853

Range of visibility—instructions. Altho the driver of a truck which was following another truck on an icy street on which two cars were parked, could see past the truck and the cars and could have stopped within the distance he could see, when he ran into the truck ahead after it had skidded and turned around, there was a jury question as to whether he had been complying with the assured clear distance ahead rule, and it was proper to give an instruction imposing on him the duty to refrain from driving at a speed greater than would permit him to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Intersection—failure to reduce speed. Record reviewed and held to establish contributory negligence on the part of a motorist in driving into a highway intersection and turning to the left (1) without first observing whether he had sufficient space in which safely to make said turn, (2) without first reducing his speed to a reasonable rate, a rate which would permit a stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) without first driving to the right of, and beyond the center of, said intersection, before turning to the left.

Wimer v Bottling Co., 221-120; 264 NW 262

Driving at reasonable speed—reduction unnecessary. A motorist driving at a reasonable and proper speed need not reduce his speed when traversing an open intersection, and a speed of 30 or 35 miles per hour on a clear day and on a good road is not, as a matter of law, such a speed as violates the assured clear distance statute.

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Predicating error solely on one's own evidence—impropriety. Predication of error based solely on defendant's own evidence and his own theory of the case is ineffective when other conflicting evidence clearly makes a jury question on contributory negligence regarding plaintiff's failure to have adequate brakes on his automobile, his failure to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and his failure to slow down before crossing a bridge.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Vehicle emerging from behind truck. Whether a vehicle suddenly emerged from behind a stalled truck and moved into the pathway of an oncoming car, necessarily has a material bearing on the issue whether the driver of the oncoming car violated the assured clear distance statute. Evidence held to present a jury question.

McWilliams v Beck, 220-906; 262 NW 781

Jury question. Evidence reviewed at length and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a motorist so operated his car that he could not stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782; 1 NCCA(NS) 16

Failure to stop, look, or control speed. Unreconcilable evidence reviewed at length in an action for damages consequent on alleged negligence, and in view of the hopeless conflict therein and the permissible inferences to be drawn therefrom, held to justify the submission of the issue of failure (1) to stop, (2) to maintain a proper lookout, and (3) so to drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

Negligence—jury question. Evidence held to present jury questions on the issues whether defendant (1) drove at a dangerous rate of speed, (2) did not have his car under control, and (3) failed to maintain a proper lookout.

Parrack v McGaffey, 217-368; 251 NW 871

Minks v Stenberg, 217-119; 250 NW 883; 1 NCCA(NS) 57

Right-side driving—peremptory instruction. Instructions that a party is in duty bound to drive on the right-hand side of a highway, or that he must so drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, without any qualification relative to the driver's right to show legal excuse for driving otherwise, are not erroneous when the driver offers no excuse.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Instructions—"legal excuse"—unsupported issue. Instruction submitting "legal excuse" for violation of the assured clear distance statute is reversible error when neither party raises nor gives evidence upon this issue.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Instructions—ability to stop under all conditions. Instruction reviewed and held not to impose on defendant the absolute duty to operate his automobile at such a speed as to be able to bring it to a stop under any and all conditions.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

Erroneous instructions. Instructions relative to the statutory duties of the operator of an automobile (1) to have the vehicle under control, and (2) to so drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, reviewed and held prejudicially misleading and erroneous.

Swan v Auto Co., 221-842; 265 NW 143

Instruction—reducing speed at intersection.
Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Instructions—unsupported theory. Principle reaffirmed that instructions on a theory not supported by the evidence are erroneous. So held as to instructions relative to the duty of the driver of a vehicle so to drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Dougherty v McFee, 221-391; 265 NW 176

Travel in fog—oncoming vehicles. Since as to oncoming vehicles, assured clear distance statute applies only to motorist not traveling on his right-hand side of the road, in an action involving a collision between oncoming vehicles on a foggy night, when vehicle in which plaintiff was riding was traveling on the right-hand side of the road, a requested instruction applying the assured clear distance statute to the plaintiff was properly refused.

Gregory v Suhr, 224-954; 277 NW 721

Right to assume compliance with law. Reversible error results from refusing to instruct that the operator of an automobile has a right to assume (until he knows or should know to the contrary) that other operators of automobiles, (1) will keep their cars under control, (2) will maintain a speed which will enable them to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) will yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right,—all such enumerated subject matters being distinctly in issue.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

II CONDITION OF HIGHWAY—OBSTRUCTIONS

Railroad crossings—safe condition controlled by transportation needs. It is the duty of railroads and municipalities to keep pace with the changes in transportation methods and to keep highways and railroad crossings in a reasonably safe condition, inasmuch as a type of crossing construction, considered safe when built, might be unsafe for a later changed method of use by the public.

Harris v Railway, 224-1319; 278 NW 338

Unsupported issue. The submission of the issue of speed of a vehicle in excess of that fixed by statute when the view is obstructed, is necessarily erroneous when there is no evidence that the view was obstructed.

Stoner v Hutzell, 212-1061; 237 NW 487

Speed limit—construction of statute. A statute which in effect provides that when the view along a highway is obstructed the speed of a vehicle shall not exceed a named rate, has no reference to obstruction of view by a car ahead of a rear driver.

Stoner v Hutzell, 212-1061; 237 NW 487

Failure to see unlighted truck—legal excuse. The failure of the driver of an automobile to see, in time to stop, an unlighted truck standing ahead of him in the highway and within the radius of his lights, may be legally excused by plea and proof that the truck was not reasonably discernible sooner (1) because of its color, (2) because of shadows cast over it by nearby trees, and (3) because his attention was momentarily diverted by a car and the lights thereon which he was about to meet and pass at a lawful rate of speed.

Kadlec v Const. Co., 217-299; 252 NW 103; 35 NCCA 764; 1 NCCA(NS) 3

Failure to see obstruction—contributory negligence per se. The driver of an automobile who, in the nighttime, with his headlights burning, and while on the proper side of a straight, 20 foot wide, paved highway, drives at the rate of 35 or 40 miles per hour, and under no materially diverting circumstances, squarely into the rear of a stationary, wholly unlighted truck which is directly in his pathway and which, from its build, color, and load, is reasonably discernible, must be deemed to have failed to maintain a proper lookout or to have been so driving as to be unable to stop within the assured clear distance ahead—in either event, negligent. (For some measurable period of time before the collision, said stationary truck was being simultaneously approached from the north by the lights of the colliding car, and from the south by the lights of a car traveling northward, which latter car passed said stationary car almost at the instant of collision.)

Shannahan v Produce Co., 220-702; 263 NW 39; 1 NCCA(NS) 16

Parked truck—nondiverting circumstance. The operator of an automobile is guilty of contributory negligence in colliding in the nighttime with a truck parked in the highway directly ahead of him when his lights revealed objects ahead for a distance of from 75 to 100 feet, and he cannot avoid such imputation of negligence by the claim that just preceding the collision his attention was diverted by a light remote from the highway on which he was traveling.

Dearinger v Keller, 219-1; 257 NW 206; 36 NCCA 709

Unlighted truck—blinding lights. The driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se in driving at such a rate of speed that he cannot stop within the distance that a discernible obstruction may be seen ahead of the car. So held as to a driver who, blinded by the lights of a stationary car by the roadside, nevertheless continued his speed for some material distance, and when too late to stop, discovered an unlighted truck in the highway.

II CONDITION OF HIGHWAY—OBSTRUCTIONS—continued

Lindquist v Thierman, 216-170; 248 NW 504; 87 ALR 893; 1 NCCA (NS) 38

Taillight of parked car obscured.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Driving into side of train—proximate cause. Evidence which is solely to the effect that on a misty and foggy night a freight train was standing across a public railway crossing without any visible warning whatever of its presence, except the train itself, reveals no negligence (if it be deemed negligence) on the part of the railway company or its employees which can be deemed the proximate cause of an accident to a motorist who drove his car along the public highway and into the side of said train.

Dolan v Bremner, 220-1143; 263 NW 798

Fog and mist-obscured track. An occupant of an automobile is not necessarily guilty of negligence per se in not seeing a railroad track which intersected the highway until the automobile was entering upon the track, when the presence of the tracks was unknown to him, and when the windshield was covered with fog and mist, even tho he testifies to the opinion that objects could be seen for a distance of from 50 to 75 feet in front of the automobile.

Gilliam v Railway, 206-1291; 222 NW 12

Crossing accident—"physical facts" rule—inapplicability. The so-called "physical facts" rule which is often applied in negligence cases—the rule that when the operator of a vehicle at a known railroad crossing possesses ordinary sense of sight he is conclusively presumed, in the absence of diverting circumstances, to have seen an approaching train which was in plain view—necessarily has no application when the train is not in plain view, owing to a temporary obstruction which the railroad company has interposed to his view, e. g., freight cars on a side track.

Bush v Railway, 216-788; 247 NW 645

Traveling highway in fog—keeping lookout—instructions. Where defendant alleges failure to keep a lookout and contributory negligence on account of plaintiff's travel on the highway in a fog, instructions correctly but generally charging as to negligence and contributory negligence and requiring consideration of all conditions and circumstances are, in the absence of requested instructions thereon, sufficient to require the jury to consider the circumstance of the fog.

Gregory v Suhr, 224-954; 277 NW 721

Operating during fog. The operation of an automobile on the highway in the nighttime at a speed of 25 miles per hour and in a fog with ability to see from 25 to 75 feet ahead is not necessarily negligence.

Caudle v Zenor, 217-77; 251 NW 69; 34 NCCA 122; 1 NCCA (NS) 44

Failure to see obstruction in fog. On a foggy evening when visibility was poor, where the plaintiff, with the headlamps on his automobile lighted and the windshield wiper working, drove his car into another car which was parked on the highway, in the absence of any proof of an emergency to excuse his failure to see the other car, he was not free from contributory negligence and the defendant was entitled to a directed verdict.

Newman v Hotz, 226-831; 285 NW 289

Failure to see obstruction in fog—proximate cause. When, on a foggy night, a car ran into another car which was parked on the highway, and the proof did not show that the stalled car was plainly visible, it was error for the court on motion to rule that the negligence of the driver of the car which ran into the other car was the sole proximate cause of injuries sustained by an occupant of the moving car.

Newman v Hotz, 226-834; 285 NW 287

Fog—stopping automobile not necessary for due care. The driver of an automobile, encountering a fog, is not bound as a matter of law to stop and wait for the fog to lift in order to escape the charge of negligence. He must, however, exercise a degree of care consistent with the existing conditions.

Rabenold v Hutt, 226-921; 283 NW 865

Contributory negligence—matter of law—stalled motorist—poor visibility in snowstorm. A plaintiff motorist who during a snowstorm becomes stalled in a snowdrift is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence because in attempting to extricate his car he must at times place himself with his back to oncoming traffic alongside his vehicle, tho meanwhile making occasional attempts to observe traffic in that direction, especially when before the vehicle struck him he observed it when it was about 50 feet away, such distance under the undisputed evidence being the extreme extent of visibility.

Youngman v Sloan, 225-558; 281 NW 130

Yielding one-half of road—assuming compliance with law—snowstorm. Where two motorists approach each other in a snowstorm—one driving into the face of the storm which has obliterated the pavement outlines and the dividing mark thereon—the other motorist has a right to assume that he will be accorded one-half the traveled way until he sees or until, in view of the storm conditions and added driving difficulties, he should, in using ordinary care, realize that half the highway was not being yielded, under which facts a jury question is presented as to whether his continued reliance on the assumption excused him from the charge of negligence.

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Passenger suing both drivers—concurring negligence—jury question. In an action by a passenger against the drivers of both automobiles involved in a collision, where the vehicle in which he was riding was being driven 50 to 60 miles per hour in a snowstorm, with an oncoming automobile crowding toward the wrong side of the road, a jury question is created as to whether the conduct of the driver with whom the plaintiff was riding was a concurring proximate cause of the passenger's injuries.

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Frost on train—visibility—when jury question on plaintiff's care. Plaintiff's contention that a snowy landscape and frost on a train so camouflaged it that the question of his negligence in driving upon an unobstructed crossing in front of the train was for the jury is not substantiated by a record devoid of any evidence of frost on the front of the engine or that he was in any way blinded by the sun or glare of the sun on the snow.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

Railroad crossing accident—snow glare affecting visibility. Where a passenger riding in a truck was killed in a crossing collision between truck and train, a contention that sun shining on snow and reflecting into truck constituted such obstruction to view of oncoming train that it raised a jury question on issue of deceased's contributory negligence in failing to see approaching train, held not established by his evidence.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

Limb of tree as street obstruction. One who, in broad daylight and without diverting circumstances, drives along a public street with which he is familiar, and permits his vehicle to come in contact with a perfectly visible limb of a tree overhanging the traveled part of the street is guilty of negligence per se.

Abraham v Sioux City, 218-1068; 250 NW 461

Telephone pole in parking. The presence of an unused telephone pole in the parking bordering a traveled street may not be said to be the proximate cause of an accident caused by the driving of an automobile, on a dark and misty night, head-on into a street curb, because the driver did not know that the street on which he was traveling materially jogged at the place in question to one side of a straight line of travel; and this is true tho the pole did enhance the damages suffered.

Greenland v Des Moines, 206-1298; 221 NW 953

Aerial obstructions — justifiable assumption. The operator of a truck along a public street has a right, in the absence of actual knowledge to the contrary, to assume that the street is free from aerial obstructions which may strike the top of his vehicle, e. g., a guy wire stretched across the street from a nearby building in process of construction. And especially is this true when the surface of the street along which the driver is moving is badly cluttered up with building material.

Hatfield v White Line, 223-7; 272 NW 99

Negligence per se in colliding with traffic signal. An experienced driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se when, near midnight, while traveling in the center of a 26-foot wide, brilliantly lighted, paved street with which he was familiar, he drives squarely head-on in the center of the street against a railroad traffic signal consisting of a concrete base 4 feet wide, 2 feet high, and 5 feet long, surmounted by an iron pole several feet high and noticeably painted with black and white diagonal stripes, on which pole at the time were crossarms bearing in large letters the words "railroad crossing" and two burning lights.

Van Gorden v City, 216-209; 245 NW 736; 4 NCCA (NS) 291

Slippery pavement. The fact that the driver of an automobile in the nighttime suddenly comes to an unexpected, slippery spot in the highway, without fault or negligence on his part, may render inapplicable the statutory command so to drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853

Use of ice-covered street. An ice-covered, sloping street may be in such an extreme condition of slipperiness as to render its use negligent by one who knows its condition, and especially when other streets are safe and convenient.

McDowell v Oil Co., 212-1314; 237 NW 456; 31 NCCA 305; 38 NCCA 383

Acts constituting negligence—use of street. Whether the driver of a conveyance is negligent in even attempting to use a street necessarily depends on the peculiar conditions facing him. Evidence held insufficient to show negligence.

McDowell v Interstate Co., 208-641; 224 NW 58; 31 NCCA 282

Collision because of skidding—icy street not legal excuse per se. Where one of two motor vehicles which are approaching each other skids across the street and collides with the other vehicle which had almost stopped at the curb, the existence of ice on a city street, tho a condition over which a motorist has no control, yet is a condition whose presence is not legal excuse to relieve him from his duty to use care commensurate with the existing conditions when he is responsible for the control of his car.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

II CONDITION OF HIGHWAY—OBSTRUCTIONS—concluded

Striking car ahead on icy street. Instructions involving the negligence of the defendant in failing to drive around another truck and in failing to stop when he could see, or should have seen, that he was about to collide with the other truck, properly presented the question of keeping a proper lookout and were justified by evidence that the defendant ran into another truck which had skidded and turned around on the icy pavement at a time when the defendant's truck was 150 or 200 feet away.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Truck skidding on icy pavement. A defendant truck driver's explanation in argument that icy pavement and locked brakes made his truck slide and should excuse his presence on the wrong side of the road, where his truck collided with plaintiff's automobile, will not sustain a directed verdict in his favor since question of plaintiff's contributory negligence, defendant's violation of statute, the sufficiency of his excuse, and whether his negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, being questions on which reasonable minds might differ, are for the jury.

McIntyre v West Co., 225-739; 281 NW 353

Stalled truck—imputed negligence. Where a car collided with a stalled tractor-trailer, jackknifed on an icy hill at night, the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury, wherein it is shown the tractor, with lighted headlamps, standing on the right side of the highway, diverted plaintiff's and husband-driver's attention, and, there being no reasonable apparent cause to suspect that trailer blocked the left side of highway, and, where jury could find that car in which plaintiff was riding was proceeding at less than twenty miles per hour, and, that plaintiff and husband-driver were looking straight ahead, there is no warrant for saying plaintiff was contributorily negligent as a matter of law; however, under the record, the negligence of the husband-driver, if any, could not be imputed to plaintiff.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Animals on highway—violation of statute. The unrestrained presence of a domestic animal upon the public highway generates a presumption that the owner of the animal has been negligent in not restraining the animal from running at large, as commanded by statute; but the owner may show that, in view of all the circumstances, he was not, in fact, negligent. The doctrine of negligence per se arising out of the violation of a statute does not here apply.

Hansen v Kemmish, 201-1008; 208 NW 277; 45 ALR 498; 29 NCCA 326; 33 NCCA 100; 39 NCCA 400

III LOOKOUT NOT MAINTAINED

Absolute duty to see what is manifest. The driver of an automobile on a much traveled street is properly held to actually see vehicles immediately ahead of him, and traveling in the same direction, when there is no impediment to vision and no diverting circumstance except one created by the driver himself; especially so when the driver offers no allowable explanation for not seeing.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Negligence—jury question. Evidence held to present jury questions on the issues whether defendant (1) drove at a dangerous rate of speed, (2) did not have his car under control, and (3) failed to maintain a proper lookout.

Minks v Stenberg, 217-119; 250 NW 883; 1 NCCA(NS) 57

Parrack v McGaffey, 217-368; 251 NW 871

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

McWilliams v Beck, 220-906; 262 NW 781

Failure to watch road. The driver of an automobile who pays no attention to objects ahead of him or who operates his car without legal excuse for so doing, at a speed which will not enable him to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, is necessarily guilty of negligence.

Peckinpaugh v Engelke, 215-1248; 247 NW 822; 33 NCCA 103; 35 NCCA 765; 1 NCCA (NS) 41

Watching road—jury question. In action for damages resulting from automobile collision, where the only pertinent evidence on the question was that of the plaintiff and his witnesses that plaintiff was at all times watching the road, court properly refused to direct the jury, as a matter of law, to find plaintiff negligent in respect to keeping a lookout.

Simmering v Hutt, 226-648; 284 NW 459

Striking boy on bicycle—jury question. Where a defendant county employee-trucker ran over a boy on a bicycle, an allegation of defendant's lack of proper lookout is clearly for the jury, when from the evidence, indicating the trucker may have struck the boy from the rear and should have seen him, the jury may well have found that defendant did not, in fact, keep such lookout.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Car running in reverse—failure to discover. One who, on a fairly clear day, and with no obstruction to vision, and with nothing to distract attention is operating an automobile at the rate of some 25 miles per hour, on the proper side of a straight and level, paved highway, is not guilty of contributory negligence per se in failing to discover, until too late to avoid a collision, that another automobile directly ahead of him (and some 40 rods distant when first seen) was slowly running backward, it appearing that said latter car carried no sign or signal, other than its movement, that it was running in reverse.

Baldwin v Rusbult, 220-725; 263 NW 279; 39 NCCA 339

Failure to see unlighted truck—contributory negligence per se. The driver of an automobile who, in the nighttime, with his headlights burning, and while on the proper side of a straight, 20 foot wide, paved highway, drives at the rate of 35 or 40 miles per hour, and under no materially diverting circumstances, squarely into the rear of a stationary, wholly unlighted truck which is directly in his pathway and which, from its build, color, and load, is reasonably discernible, must, be deemed to have failed to maintain a proper lookout or to have been so driving as to be unable to stop within the assured clear distance ahead—in either event, negligent. (For some measurable period of time before the collision, said stationary truck was being simultaneously approached from the north by the lights of the colliding car and from the south by the lights of a car traveling northward, which latter car passed said stationary car almost at the instant of collision.)

Shannahan v Produce Co., 220-702; 263 NW 39; 1 NCCA(NS) 16

Jury question—plaintiff's car rammed from rear. The issues, whether defendant failed (1) to maintain a proper lookout, or (2) to have his car under control, are properly submitted to the jury on evidence that plaintiff, on a clear day, while immediately approaching an intersecting crossroad and while other cars were closely approaching from the opposite direction, was slowly driving his car in the immediate rear of several other forward-moving cars on the right-hand side of an 18 foot dry, paved road with level shoulders and no accompanying ditches and was suddenly and very unexpectedly rammed from the rear by defendant's truck.

Luther v Jones, 220-95; 261 NW 817; 39 NCCA 139

Plural assignment—justifiable submission. Record reviewed in an action for damages consequent on a collision during the nighttime between trucks, and held to justify the court in submitting to the jury not only the issue (1) of defendant's failure to turn to the right and yield one-half of the traveled way, but also the issues (2) of defendant's failure to maintain a proper lookout for other vehicles, and (3) of defendant's alleged excessive speed.

Pazen v Des Moines Co., 223-23; 272 NW 126

Proof of facts not alleged. Evidence that lights were not burning on defendant's truck should have been admitted, even tho not alleged as a ground of negligence in plaintiff's petition, in order to enable plaintiff to show he was maintaining a proper lookout and was therefore free from contributory negligence.

Haines v Mahaska Works, 227-228; 288 NW 70

Unobserved person. The driver of an automobile is not, broadly speaking, under a duty, before putting the vehicle in motion, to look around or under it, in order to discover the possible presence of persons in a position of danger. A plaintiff seeking personal damages consequent upon a person's being run over is under an imperative necessity to show the location of the injured person just preceding the injury, or such a state of facts with reference thereto as will justify a finding that the driver (1) saw the person, or (2) ought, in the exercise of ordinary care, to have seen him.

Williams v Cohn, 201-1121; 206 NW 823

Child running in front of car. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to present a jury question on the issue whether the operator of an automobile maintained a proper lookout preceding the time when a small child suddenly emerged from behind an obstruction and ran into the pathway of the approaching car.

Howk v Anderson, 218-358; 253 NW 32

Child on sled—view obstructed by snowbank—negligence—directed verdict. In an action for death of seven-year-old child, where defendant-motorist could not see child because of snowbank, and child, lying on sled, coasted into intersection at 20 or more miles per hour and struck rear wheel of defendant's automobile, the court properly directed verdict for defendant, the evidence being insufficient to establish that defendant was driving at excessive speed, lacked control of his car, failed to maintain proper lookout, or failed to give warning of approach to intersection.

McBride v Stewart, 227-1273; 290 NW 700

Pedestrian crossing street—contributory negligence—jury question. A pedestrian crossing a street need not anticipate another's negligence, nor keep a constant lookout in both directions at the same time, nor wait for all approaching vehicles from both directions, and, moreover, he is not as a matter of law contributorily negligent merely in running while crossing a street altho not seeing an approaching motor vehicle 180 feet away, but in any case whether he could rightly assume he could cross in safety is a question of contributory negligence for the jury.

Swan v Dailey-Luce Co., 225-89; 277 NW 580; 281 NW 504

Negligence—pedestrians at intersection. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question as to the negligence of a motorist in operating his car in the business district of a city (1) by maintaining a speed in excess of 15 miles per hour, or (2) by failing to maintain proper lookout, or (3) by increasing instead of reducing his speed on approaching an intersection and pedestrians walking across one side thereof, or by so doing without giving warning of his approach.

Huffman v King, 222-150; 268 NW 144

Jury question—pedestrians. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issues whether the operator of an automobile was guilty of negligence in failing (1) to maintain a proper lookout for pedestrians, (2) to warn pedestrians, and (3) to keep his car under control.

Sexauer v Dunlap, 207-1018; 222 NW 420
Altfilisch v Wessel, 208-361; 225 NW 862; 32 NCCA 482; 34 NCCA 150

Robertson v Carlgren, 211-963; 234 NW 824
Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220; 1 NCCA(NS) 57

Pedestrian on highway. Record reviewed, in an action for damages for death of a pedestrian who was killed by being hit by an automobile on the public highway, and held to justify the court in refusing, for want of evidence, to submit to the jury the issue of the defendant's alleged failure to maintain proper lookout. (Concededly a close case.)

Hartman v Lee, 223-32; 272 NW 140

Proper lookout for pedestrian—jury question. After motorist had seen pedestrian 180 feet away standing on the curb and when pedestrian has almost reached the opposite side of the street before being struck by the motor vehicle, which meanwhile had traveled the 180 feet, during which time pedestrian was plainly visible, and when motorist claims he did not again see pedestrian until just before striking him, the evidence raises a jury question as to whether motorist kept proper lookout, and directing a verdict is improper.

Swan v Dailey-Luce Co., 225-89; 277 NW 580; 281 NW 504

Failure to keep lookout alleged—substituting last clear chance—not permitted. In a law action for damages wherein the petition alleges that defendant motorist was negligent in failing to keep a proper lookout and such allegation was not withdrawn, and it is shown deceased pedestrian was contributorily negligent, it was proper to refuse to submit the case under last clear chance doctrine on the theory that motorist, being under duty to keep a lookout, presumably performed such duty; but after seeing deceased, failed to exercise due care in avoiding the injury.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825

Unsupported issues—stepping from car on highway. Unsupported issues are very properly and necessarily excluded from the jury. So held as to the issues (1) whether the operator of an automobile failed to maintain a proper lookout, (2) whether he was negligent in stepping out of the car and upon the running board preparatory to cleaning the sleet from the windshield, and (3) whether the snowy and icy condition of the pavement was the proximate cause of an accident.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770; 39 NCCA 308

Contributory negligence per se—intersection. Record reviewed and held to establish contributory negligence on the part of a motorist in driving into a highway intersection and turning to the left, (1) without first observing whether he had sufficient space in which safely to make said turn, (2) without first reducing his speed to a reasonable rate, a rate which would permit a stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) without first driving to the right of, and beyond the center of, said intersection, before turning to the left.

Wimer v Bottling Co., 221-120; 264 NW 262

Obscured view of travel at intersection—failure to look or signal. The operator of an automobile in approaching and entering an intersecting country highway, when the view of travel approaching from his right is obstructed, is guilty of negligence (1) if he fails to signal his approach and entry, and also (2) if he fails to look for such travel at a point from which he can see such travel.

Smith v Lamb, 220-835; 263 NW 311

Failure to look to left on entering intersection—not contributory negligence as a matter of law. Principle reaffirmed that vehicle driver's failure to look to the left when entering highway intersection does not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Contributory negligence when not determined as matter of law. In action for personal injuries and damage to automobile resulting from collision with defendant's automobile, plaintiff is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law for failure to maintain lookout, yield right of way, and make proper stop before entering arterial highway, when evidence discloses that as plaintiff was about to cross an arterial highway, he looked to the right and saw defendant's automobile at a distance of 150 feet and then proceeded across intersection at speed of between 5 and 10 miles per hour until defendant's automobile collided with right rear wheel of plaintiff's automobile—more than half of plaintiff's automobile being out of the intersection.

Cowles v Joelson, 226-1202; 286 NW 419

Streetcar operator—failure to stop—excuse. Negligence on the part of the operator of a streetcar cannot be predicated on his failure (1) to maintain a lookout for an injured party, or (2) to stop or slacken the speed of the car, when both parties were aware of the presence of each other long prior to any suggestion of a collision, and when, after the danger of a collision arose, stopping or slackening of speed was not only out of the question but would have been futile.

Bowers v Railway, 219-944; 259 NW 244

Collision with streetcar—negligence per se. The operator of an automobile who, without diverting circumstances, approaches and drives upon streetcar tracks and looks for an approaching streetcar at a place where he knows his view is very limited because of an intervening embankment and fails to look at a point where he would still be within a zone of safety and where his view would be unobstructed, is guilty of negligence per se.

Pender v Railway, 217-1152; 251 NW 55

Negligence per se in driving upon car tracks. The driver of a conveyance is guilty of negligence per se when, upon reaching a street intersection on a clear day, he has positive knowledge that a nearby streetcar is rapidly approaching the same intersection from a side street, and when he, without again looking at the approaching streetcar and confronted by no emergency, continues his journey into the intersection at a speed which would enable him to stop his conveyance instantly and turns and enters upon the streetcar tracks in the direction in which the streetcar is moving.

Middleton v Railway, 209-1278; 227 NW 915

Contributory negligence—guest's lookout at railroad crossing—jury question. A guest in a motor vehicle is not, as a reasonably prudent person, under the same obligation as the driver to keep a lookout, but whether or not, under the circumstances, a guest was lacking in ordinary care in committing his safety to the motor vehicle driver while crossing a railroad is a question for the jury.

Finley v Lowden, 224-999; 277 NW 487

Accident at crossing. A traveler in approaching a railway crossing with which he is familiar, and while he is beset by no diverting circumstance, is guilty of negligence in failing to look at some place from where he knows he can see approaching trains and thus avoid injury.

Glessner v Railway, 216-850; 249 NW 138

Nondiverting circumstance—railway crossing. The fact that a party in crossing railway tracks was compelled, owing to the coldness of the weather, to manipulate the choke on the automobile cannot be deemed a diverting circumstance such as to excuse him from exercising his senses of sight and hearing.

Rosenberg v Railway, 213-152; 238 NW 703

"Physical facts" rule—diverting circumstance. A requested instruction should be given, when the testimony is supporting, to the effect that, if the view of a railway track is unobstructed for a long distance while a traveler is knowingly approaching it, he will be held to have seen the train approaching thereon, there being no diverting circumstance.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356; 27 NCCA 68; 27 NCCA 69

Accident at railway crossing—negligence per se. The driver of a vehicle who, while approaching a railway crossing, knows that his view along the track is obscured by an intervening embankment, and enters upon said crossing, is guilty of contributory negligence per se when, without dispute, his unobstructed view along the track from a point 25 feet distant from the crossing and up to a point 10 feet distant from the crossing enlarged from 360 feet to 954 feet. Under such circumstances the testimony of the driver that he was constantly looking and listening and saw and heard nothing, must be wholly rejected.

Darden v Railway, 213-583; 239 NW 531

Contributory negligence as matter of law—railroad crossing—motorist not looking. A motorist who approaches a railroad crossing on a clear day over a good road, with no obstructions and no diverting circumstances, and who drives upon the tracks where he is struck by a train and killed, when, had he looked, he must have seen the approaching train, which from a point 141 feet from the crossing was visible 2500 feet down the track, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, and the defendant-railroad is entitled to a directed verdict.

Meier v Railway, 224-295; 275 NW 139

Crossing railroad in front of oncoming train—directed verdict. It is error to overrule a motion for a directed verdict when, after considering all the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, there is no doubt but what he drove in front of a train with the view entirely unobstructed and with the train plainly to be seen had he looked, or, if he looked, he did so negligently.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

Unsustained issue—negligence of engineer. Reversible error results from submitting the issue whether the engineer of a railway train was negligent in not maintaining a proper lookout for automobiles approaching a public crossing, when the evidence shows to the contrary and that the approaching automobile was discovered at the earliest reasonable opportunity, which was too late to prevent the accident.

Simmons v Railway, 217-1277; 252 NW 516

Speed—lookout—turning to right—presumption. If there be applicable evidence the court must instruct (at least on request), (1) as to the duty of drivers of cars, on meeting, to obey the laws of the road, such as turning to the right, and maintaining a proper lookout and proper speed, and (2) as to the right of the driver of each car to presume that such duties will be performed by the other driver.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

III LOOKOUT NOT MAINTAINED—concluded

Traveling highway in fog—contributory negligence—instructions. Where defendant alleges failure to keep a lookout and contributory negligence on account of plaintiff's travel on the highway in a fog, instructions correctly but generally charging as to negligence and contributory negligence and requiring consideration of all conditions and circumstances are, in the absence of requested instructions thereon, sufficient to require the jury to consider the circumstance of the fog.

Gregory v Suhr, 224-954; 277 NW 721

Running into truck—instructions. Instructions involving the negligence of the defendant in failing to drive around another truck and in failing to stop when he could see, or should have seen, that he was about to collide with the other truck, properly presented the question of keeping a proper lookout and were justified by evidence that the defendant ran into another truck which had skidded and turned around on the icy pavement at a time when the defendant's truck was 150 or 200 feet away.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Intersecting highways—imposing undue care. An instruction which, after directing the jury that the operator of a vehicle on approaching intersecting highways must keep a lookout for approaching vehicles, imposes on the operator, if there be danger of a collision, the duty to "reduce his speed" or to "bring his vehicle to a stop", is erroneous.

Reason: Such instruction imposes on the operator a greater duty than to exercise reasonable or ordinary care.

Knutson v Lurie, 217-192; 251 NW 147; 37 NCCA 62

Compelling jury to draw certain inference. Where plaintiff and defendant were, under conditions which rendered visibility poor, approaching the same intersection approximately at the same time, the court cannot properly instruct the jury that if plaintiff could see several hundred feet in the direction from which defendant was approaching, then the jury must conclude either (1) that plaintiff did not look for defendant as was his duty, or (2) that plaintiff did see the defendant.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

IV OBSERVANCE OF LAWS BY OTHER PERSONS

Reliance on assumption limited. Assumption that others using the highways will obey the law may be relied on only until the contrary is known, or until in the exercise of ordinary care it should be known.

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Precautions for safety must be taken. While the operator of an automobile has a legal right to act on the assumption that other operators will obey the law, yet this does not necessarily mean that he need take no other precaution for his own safety.

Jeck v Const. Co., 216-516; 246 NW 595; 1 NCCA (NS) 71

Exercising right of way—other motorist's ignorance thereof—no negligence. A motorist approaching an intersection from the west, knowing he has statutory right of way over traffic from the north, and knowing a stop sign is erected on the highway intersecting from the north, may not be charged with negligence because a motorist on his left approaching from the north has no knowledge of the intersection and therefore drives past the stop sign into such intersection, resulting in a collision.

King v Gold, 224-890; 276 NW 774; 4 NCCA (NS) 333

Farfetched construction on use of words. An instruction that each of two operators of automobiles had the right "to assume" that the other would comply with the laws of the road (as correctly stated by the court) is not subject to the farfetched and hypercritical construction that thereby an operator was authorized to assume such compliance when he knew there had been a violation.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

Right to assume care and nonviolation of law of road. After correctly instructing as to the law of the road, it is not erroneous to instruct that each of the operators of the two automobiles in question had the right to assume that the other would not violate such laws, and would exercise ordinary care for the safety of himself and others.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

Refusal of instruction as error. Reversible error results from refusing to instruct that the operator of an automobile has a right to assume (until he knows or should know to the contrary) that other operators of automobiles (1) will keep their cars under control, (2) will maintain a speed which will enable them to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) will yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right—all such enumerated subject matters being distinctly in issue.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

Speed—lookout—turning to right—presumption. If there be applicable evidence the court must instruct (at least on request) (1) as to the duty of drivers of cars, on meeting, to obey the laws of the road, such as turning to the right, and maintaining a proper lookout and proper speed, and (2) as to the right of the driver of each car to presume that such duties will be performed by the other driver.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Obeying statute — presumption. Principle reaffirmed that a motor vehicle driver in attempting to make a left-hand turn into an intersecting road has a right to proceed on the assumption (unless he has knowledge to the contrary) that another driver, approaching from his right, will obey the law (§5031, C., '35) by reducing his speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing said intersection.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Intersection — danger obvious — jury question. Where plaintiff, riding with his son, approaches an intersection of county trunk roads and on his left observes defendant also approaching the intersection, altho plaintiff may assume that defendant will obey the right of way law, he must not place himself in a position of obvious danger avoidable by the exercise of ordinary care, and whether or not he did so place himself is a jury question.

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Yielding roadway — requested instruction. The operators of automobiles have the right to assume, when they meet on the highway, that the other will yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right; and it is erroneous to refuse a request for such instruction.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Yielding one-half of road—assuming compliance with law—reasonable care rule. Where two motorists approach each other in a snow-storm—one driving into the face of the storm which has obliterated the pavement outlines and the dividing mark thereon—the other motorist has a right to assume that he will be accorded one-half the traveled way until he sees or until, in view of the storm conditions and added driving difficulties, he should, in using ordinary care, realize that half the highway was not being yielded, under which facts a jury question is presented as to whether his continued reliance on the assumption excused him from the charge of negligence.

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Knowledge that law is not complied with. The right of a motorist to assume that others using the highway will obey the law ceases when he knows that another motorist is not obeying the law. When such motorist testifies that he saw an approaching car skidding and then drove on the wrong side of a city street to avoid that car, he is not entitled to the embodiment of such rule of assumption in instructions to the jury.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Instructions—following statute enacted after accident. Where an automobile collides at night with a truck displaying no lights, it is error to instruct in the language of this section that plaintiff had a right to assume that others using the highway would obey the law, when such collision causing the injuries complained of occurred before this right of assumption was added by the legislature, and the statute had previously been construed that a driver had no such right.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

Correct but inapplicable instructions refused. Requested instructions that a motorist had a right to assume that a taxi driver would obey the law as to speed and lookout, altho correct as abstract propositions of law, are properly refused when not supported by the evidence.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

New trial—conflicting instructions. Doubt and uncertainty consequent on conflicting instructions relative to the right of the operator of an automobile to assume that another operator would not use the highway unlawfully present ample justification for granting the prejudiced party a new trial.

Jelsma v English, 210-1065; 231 NW 304

V SPEED

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 16 ILR 548—Effect of statute

Pleading under common law (?) or statute (?). An allegation that a defendant "was driving at an excessive, illegal, and negligent rate of speed" must be deemed, in the absence of an attack by motion, as an allegation not at common law, but under the statute regulating speed.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

Witnesses—competency—speed. One may be a competent witness as to the speed of a motor vehicle on a showing that he has observed such vehicles while in operation with a view of determining their speed.

Becvar v Batesole, 218-858; 256 NW 297

Circumstantial evidence. Circumstances are oftentimes more persuasive on the issue of speed than direct testimony is.

Starry v Hanold, 202-1180; 211 NW 696

Careful and prudent speed not a test of assured clear distance. Circumstances indicating a violation of that part of this section requiring a motor vehicle to be driven at a careful and prudent speed would not necessarily also involve a violation of the other part of the section pertaining to the assured clear distance ahead.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Speed determined from skid marks. A witness in an automobile accident case may describe skid marks, but may not base an opinion of the speed of an automobile on them, as it is solely within the province of the jury to draw an inference of speed from skid marks.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

V SPEED—continued

(a) IN GENERAL—continued

Speed remote from accident—admissibility. Where a motorcycle coming over a viaduct at high speed collides with an automobile leaving and making a left-hand turn at the foot of the viaduct, speed of the motorcycle at the instant of or immediately before the collision is admissible, but with nothing to indicate to the trial court the materiality of speed some distance away, the exclusion of such evidence will not be disturbed.

Thomas v Charter, 224-1278; 278 NW 920

Stepping into path of vehicle. A rate of speed which is not negligence per se cannot be deemed the proximate cause of an accident when the act of the injured party in stepping into the pathway of the car was so sudden and unexpected as to render impossible the stopping of the car.

Howk v Anderson, 218-358; 253 NW 32; 35 NCCA 1

Stepping into path of automobile—rate of speed immaterial. The negligence of a pedestrian, who left a position of safety on a curb and walked directly into the path of an automobile which struck him, was the proximate cause of the accident, and under the circumstances the rate of speed of the car was not material.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Unlawful but inconsequential speed. Operating an automobile on the public highway at a speed prohibited by statute becomes quite immaterial when such speed is not the proximate cause of the injury in question.

McDowell v Oil Co., 208-641; 224 NW 58; 35 NCCA 21

Crutchley v Bruce, 214-731; 240 NW 238; 35 NCCA 25

Negligence per se. Operating an automobile upon the public highway at a speed prohibited by law constitutes negligence per se, and error results from instructing that such operation creates a presumption of negligence.

Codner v Stowe, 201-800; 208 NW 330; 26 NCCA 207

Driving beside streetcar—hitting pedestrian. The operation of an automobile, even at an excessive speed, alongside a moving streetcar and in the direction in which the streetcar is moving, is not the proximate cause of an injury to a pedestrian who suddenly darts across the streetcar track ahead of the moving streetcar and into the line of automobile travel, and is hit by the automobile.

Pettijohn v Weede, 209-902; 227 NW 824; 35 NCCA 5

Speed at intersection—jury question. A motor vehicle operator who materially and intentionally increases the speed of his vehicle

“when approaching and traversing a highway intersection”, seemingly in violation of §5031, C., '35, is not necessarily guilty of negligence per se.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 272 NW 169

Collision with left-turning vehicle—contributory negligence. The driver of a rear-moving vehicle is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence because, at high speed, he collides with another vehicle while it is making an abrupt left turn.

McManus v Co-op. Creamery, 219-860; 259 NW 921

Passing vehicle—subsequent accident. The act of passing a vehicle at an illegal rate of speed may not be declared negligence per se as to a collision which occurred after the passing had been completely effected.

Berridge v Pray, 202-663; 210 NW 916

Being struck by faster-moving vehicle. It may not be said that the unlawful speed of a vehicle constitutes contributory negligence per se as to a collision which results from such vehicle being overtaken by a faster-moving vehicle.

Berridge v Pray, 202-663; 210 NW 916

Icy street—jury question. Jury was warranted in finding from conflicting testimony that the defendant's truck was traveling at a speed of 20 to 25 miles an hour and that the speed was excessive and dangerous in view of the icy condition of the street.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Intersection collision—complex facts—jury question. An intersection collision involving disputed facts, fractional seconds, speeds of 40 to 50 miles an hour, and failure to see an approaching automobile presents, not a matter of law for the courts, but a question for the jury to determine blame.

Eby v Sanford, 223-805; 273 NW 918

Speed as element of recklessness—other factors—jury question. Altho speed alone will not be considered recklessness, yet, when combined with such evidence as the car's swerving from side to side, the wetness of the street, the late hour (two o'clock in the morning), the presence of cross streets, and the lack of defendant's effort to check his speed when the view was obstructed, a jury question on the issue of recklessness is created.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

Evidence of recklessness—sufficiency—jury question. In an action by a guest against the driver and owner of a motor vehicle for injuries sustained as a result of a collision with an oncoming vehicle, where it is shown that the collision occurred on the left side of the road while automobile, with defective brakes, was being driven at an excessive rate of speed through a well-traveled intersection in a town over a slope or hill which limited visibility, and on the left side of the highway in face of visible oncoming traffic, such evidence, on the issue of whether or not collision was caused by driver's recklessness, presented a jury question.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Approaching intersection—instruction—jury question. In an action for personal injuries sustained by driver of a motor vehicle in collision with another vehicle which entered intersection from the left, an instruction stating that the statute requires any person operating a motor vehicle to have the same under control and reduce the speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing a crossing or intersection of public highways was correct. Since the jury in most cases must determine from the circumstances whether there had been a compliance with such statute, question was properly submitted.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Plural assignment — justifiable submission. Record reviewed in an action for damages consequent on a collision during the nighttime between trucks, and held to justify the court in submitting to the jury not only the issue (1) of defendant's failure to turn to the right and yield one-half of the traveled way, but also the issues (2) of defendant's failure to maintain a proper lookout for other vehicles, and (3) of defendant's alleged excessive speed.

Pazen v Des Moines Co., 223-23; 272 NW 126

Collision with bicycle — instructions — jury question. Where a motorist driving east 40 to 50 miles per hour at night on a paved highway, the lights on vehicle properly working (no rain, fog, or snow), his attention being momentarily diverted by an oncoming car, and, simultaneously with its passing, he collided with and fatally injured a bicycle rider, also traveling east, instructions covering diverting circumstances relative to speed (§5029, C., '35 [§5023.01, C., '39]) and failing to turn to left when passing vehicle (§5022, C., '35 [§5024.03, C., '39]) reviewed and held to present correctly questions for jury.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6; 3 NCCA (NS) 184

Submission of issues. Instructions reviewed and held adequately to present the issue of excessive speed and lack of control in the operation of an automobile.

Schuster v Gillispie, 217-386; 251 NW 735

Instructions — ability to stop under all conditions. Instruction reviewed and held not to impose on defendant the absolute duty to operate his automobile at such a speed as to be able to bring it to a stop under any and all conditions.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

Speed as negligence irrespective of conditions. Instruction reviewed and held not to submit to the jury the question whether speed, in and of itself, was the proximate cause of an accident, irrespective of the attending conditions and circumstances.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Careful and prudent operation — granting jury undue license. The court is—to say the least—perilously close to committing reversible error when it instructs the jury, even in the literal words of the statute (§5029, C., '35 [§5023.01, C., '39]) that it should determine whether an automobile was driven "at a careful and prudent speed * * *, having due regard to the traffic, the surface and width of the highway, and of any other conditions then existing". The vice of the instruction is its failure affirmatively to limit the jury to a consideration of conditions as shown by the evidence.

Groshens v Lund, 222-49; 268 NW 496

Turning to right—instructions. If there be applicable evidence the court must instruct (at least on request), (1) as to the duty of drivers of cars, on meeting, to obey the laws of the road, such as turning to the right, and maintaining a proper lookout and proper speed, and (2) as to the right of the driver of each car to presume that such duties will be performed by the other driver.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Negligence per se—instruction. It is correct to instruct the jury that a driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence if he drives "at a high and dangerous rate", such being the allegation of the petition and the evidence tending to show a speed materially in excess of the maximum speed allowed by statute.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Collision with overtaking and passing vehicle—instruction on speed not necessary. In a personal injury action arising out of an automobile-truck collision occurring when the automobile in which plaintiff was riding with husband-driver was passing a truck which attempted to make a left turn into driveway of a farm just as the automobile came alongside, and when the automobile driver, attempting to avoid an accident by speeding ahead of truck, collided therewith, held, that statute relating to speed, which requires reasonable speed with due regard to existing conditions, the truck being the only "existing condition" at the time and place of accident, was inapplicable, and the court properly instructed jury only on the statute governing passing vehicles as affecting automobile driver's contributory negligence, which would be imputed to plaintiff by court's former instruction.

Monen v Jewel Tea Co., 227-547; 288 NW 637

Speed—distance. In intersection collision, evidence of speeds and distances raises jury question and directed verdict was error.

Short v Powell, 228- ; 291 NW 406

V SPEED—concluded

(b) SPEED RESTRICTIONS

Speeding—unsworn information—no basis to support conviction. An unsworn municipal court information charging defendant with speeding will not support a conviction.

State v Weston, 225-1377; 282 NW 774

Unsworn information first challenged on appeal—no waiver. Where a municipal court information charging speeding was not sworn to, defendant did not waive his right to challenge its sufficiency to sustain a conviction nor lose his right to raise such objection on appeal in supreme court by failure to question the sufficiency of information before the trial.

State v Weston, 225-1377; 282 NW 774

Speed in suburban district. It is not negligent to operate an automobile in a "suburban district" in a city or town at 40 miles per hour on the proper side of a level, paved street and at a place remote from a street intersection and when the street is apparently free of vehicles and persons except a nearby mail truck traveling in the opposite direction on the proper side of the street.

Hawk v Anderson, 218-358; 253 NW 32; 35 NCCA 1

Vehicle within town limits—no speed sign.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Statute violation—per se negligence must contribute to bar recovery. As involved in a motor vehicle collision, the act of driving a motor vehicle at a speed of more than 25 miles an hour in a residence district, being in violation of statute, is negligence as a matter of law, but unless such negligence contributes to the injuries, it will not defeat recovery.

McIntyre v West Co., 225-739; 281 NW 353

Speeding in residence district—sufficiency of evidence—jury question. Evidence that accident occurred on main street of town about four or five blocks from the business district, that defendant was driving 50 miles per hour, that there were a number of dwellings on both sides of the street, and that defendant had passed a sign which read, "Slow down, speed limit 25 miles per hour", was sufficient to raise jury question on issue of whether car was being driven in a residence district in excess of 25 miles per hour.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Business district intersection—jury question. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question as to the negligence of a motorist in operating his car in the business district of a city (1) by maintaining a speed in excess of 15 miles per hour, or (2) by failing to maintain proper lookout, or (3) by increasing instead of reducing his speed on approaching an intersection and pedestrians walking across one side thereof, or by so doing without giving warning of his approach.

Huffman v King, 222-150; 268 NW 144

Reckless operation—jury question. A jury question on the issue of reckless operation of an automobile is made by evidence that the car was being operated (1) over a wide, well-settled, graveled highway with which the operator was wholly unfamiliar, (2) at a speed of some 65 miles per hour, (3) during the nighttime when visibility was materially limited, and (4) at a turn in the road so belatedly anticipated and discovered that the driver was unable to negotiate it and was compelled to turn his car into the side ditch.

Mescher v Brogan, 223-573; 272 NW 645

Absence of evidence to support. Instructions which submit to the jury the questions whether a defendant has shown legal excuses (1) for exceeding a statutory speed limit, or (2) for not having yielded one-half of the traveled way are erroneous when there is no evidence supporting an affirmative finding on either proposition.

Deweese v Tr. Lines, 218-1327; 256 NW 428

5023.02 Truck speed limits.

Noncausal negligence. Excessive or negligent speed of motor vehicle becomes immaterial when it is not the proximate cause of the injury in question.

McDowell v Oil Co., 208-641; 224 NW 58

Speed statute—instructions. Instruction relative to the speed of a truck reviewed, and held not subject to the vice of being indefinite as to the particular statute violated.

Rogers v Lagomarcino-Grupe Co., 215-1270; 248 NW 1

Collision—jury questions. Evidence reviewed in an action for damages consequent on a collision in the nighttime between a truck and an automobile, and held to present jury questions on the issues:

1. Whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence.
2. Whether defendant was driving his truck without lights.
3. Whether defendant was driving on the wrong side of the road.
4. Whether defendant was operating his truck (weighing three tons) at an unlawful rate of speed.
5. Whether defendant had opportunity to avoid the collision and failed to do so.

Carlson v Decker, 218-54; 253 NW 923; 36 NCCA 93

Plural assignment—justifiable submission. Record reviewed in an action for damages consequent on a collision during the nighttime between trucks, and held to justify the court in submitting to the jury not only the issue (1) of defendant's failure to turn to the right and yield one-half of the traveled way, but also the issues (2) of defendant's failure to maintain a proper lookout for other vehicles, and (3) of defendant's alleged excessive speed.

Pazen v Des Moines Co., 223-23; 272 NW 126

II TAXICABS GENERALLY

Negligence—taxicab door striking eye—res ipsa loquitur. An action for loss of an eye caused by the sudden opening of a taxicab door as plaintiff stopped on the sidewalk to engage the cab, and when plaintiff made no move toward opening the door, the exclusive control of which was lodged in the driver inside the cab, presents a case to which the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies. In such case defendants' motion for a verdict is properly overruled.

Peterson v De Luxe Co., 225-809; 281 NW 737

Responsibility between defendants—jury question. In an action for injuries sustained by a passenger riding in a taxicab, the question of responsibility for the accident between the owner of the cab, the driver, and a party to an agreement under which the cab was operated, was a jury question.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Intersection collision—jury question. In a damage case resulting from a collision between a taxicab and an automobile at an intersection, when the record does not conclusively show negligence, that question and how the accident occurred are for the jury.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Taxicab—carrier's liability—instructions. In an action for injuries sustained in an accident at an intersection while riding in a taxicab, an instruction which held the defendant to the liability of a common carrier of passengers for hire was not error in view of other instructions defining a common carrier and making a high degree of care dependent on a finding that the taxi was a common carrier.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Assuming other motorist will obey law. Requested instructions that a motorist had a right to assume that a taxi driver would obey the law as to speed and lookout, altho correct as abstract propositions of law, are properly refused when not supported by the evidence.

Reed v Pape, 226-98; 284 NW 106

Excessive verdict—$3,500 for broken collarbone. For injuries sustained by a passenger in a taxicab accident, when a verdict of $3,500 was nearly $3,000 over the damages subject to calculation for a broken collarbone, pain and suffering, hospitalization, and loss of about three months work, the amount should be reduced to $2,500.

I SCOPE OF SECTION IN GENERAL

Negligence per se—noncompliance with statutes. Where the automobile of plaintiff's intestate collided with defendant's truck at a highway intersection and the physical facts showed that plaintiff's intestate had violated statutes in not keeping his car under control and not yielding the right of way to the truck, which had entered the intersection first, plaintiff's intestate was therefore guilty of negligence per se which contributed directly to his death and which entitled the truck owner to a directed verdict.

Young v Clark, 226-1066; 285 NW 633

Anticipating child coasting—barricades removed—negligence. Where defendant knew that for many years a certain street was barricaded while children were coasting, and that there had been coasting there recently, but where the snow had melted somewhat so that the middle portion of the paving on the hill was bare of snow, and the barricades had been taken down the day before the accident, the defendant was not bound to anticipate and prepare for some child coasting on the hill.

McBride v Stewart, 227-1273; 290 NW 700

II CONTROL OF VEHICLES

Definition. Principle recognized that a car is "under control" when the driver has the mechanism and power thereof under such control that, in view of the rate at which the car is moving, it can be brought to a reasonably quick stop.

Hanson v Manning, 213-625; 239 NW 793

II CONTROL OF VEHICLES—continued

Excessive requirement. The driver of an automobile is not under a duty to maintain such control over the vehicle as will avoid a collision.

Looney v Parker, 210-85; 230 NW 570

Imputed negligence—fundamental basis of doctrine. The negligence of a husband in the operation of an automobile cannot be deemed the contributory negligence of his wife who rides with him—cannot be imputed to the wife—simply because the husband and wife at the time of the negligence in question are engaged in a common enterprise, unless the wife has the right in some manner at the time in question to control the operation of said car.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 272 NW 169

Joint enterprise between driver and passenger—giving directions to reach destination insufficient. A joint enterprise is not shown between a driver of an automobile and his passenger when the passenger neither drove the car at any time nor exercised any control over its operation, but merely directed the driver which way to go so that the driver might view a team of mules which he was interested in buying.

Churchill v Briggs, 225-1187; 282 NW 280

Passing children—care required. A motorist in approaching and passing, on the highway, children of apparently immature age who are in plain sight, is under duty, even tho the children are in a place of apparent safety near the margin of the traveled way, to bring and keep his vehicle under such control that he will be able, by ordinary care, to prevent injury to a child should the child suddenly, and without warning, leave its place of safety and place itself in a place of danger in the pathway of the oncoming car. Pre-eminently is this true when the motorist knows, or ought to know, from the time he first sees the children that they are preparing to cross said highway in front of his car.

Darr v Porte, 220-751; 263 NW 240

Passing children—nonright to assume care. Testimony in an action against a motorist for striking and killing a 10-year-old child on the highway, supported by the physical facts, from which the jury could find that the child's position on the shoulder could have been seen by defendant when more than 300 feet away, justifies an instruction on the nonright of a motorist to assume that a child under 14, in a place of apparent safety, will remain there, and on his duty to so control his machine as to avoid hitting her if she does not.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Child on sled—view obstructed by snowbank—negligence. In an action for death of a seven-year-old child, where defendant-motorist could not see child because of snowbank, and child, lying on sled, coasted into intersection at 20 or more miles per hour and struck rear wheel of defendant's automobile, the court properly directed verdict for defendant, the evidence being insufficient to establish that defendant was driving at excessive speed, lacked control of his car, failed to maintain proper lookout, or failed to give warning of approach to intersection.

McBride v Stewart, 227-1273; 290 NW 700

Jury question—care toward pedestrians. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issues whether the operator of an automobile was guilty of negligence in failing (1) to maintain a proper lookout for pedestrians, (2) to warn pedestrians, and (3) to keep his car under control.

Sexauer v Dunlap, 207-1018; 222 NW 420
Altflisch v Wessel, 208-361; 225 NW 862; 32 NCCA 482; 34 NCCA 150

Robertson v Carlgren, 211-963; 234 NW 824
Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220

Negligence at intersection—jury question. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issues whether the operator of an automobile (1) had his car under proper control in approaching and entering a busy street intersection, (2) kept a proper lookout ahead, (3) operated his car at an excessive rate of speed, or (4) so operated the car that he could stop it within the assured clear distance ahead.

Minks v Stenberg, 217-119; 250 NW 883; 1 NCCA(NS) 57

Approaching intersection—instruction—jury question. In an action for personal injuries sustained by driver of a motor vehicle in collision with another vehicle which entered intersection from the left, an instruction stating that the statute requires any person operating a motor vehicle to have the same under control and reduce the speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing a crossing or intersection of public highways was correct. Since the jury in most cases must determine from the circumstances whether there had been a compliance with such statute, question was properly submitted.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Plaintiff's car struck from behind. The issues whether defendant failed (1) to maintain a proper lookout, or (2) to have his car under control, are properly submitted to the jury on evidence that plaintiff, on a clear day, while immediately approaching an intersecting crossroad, and while other cars were closely approaching from the opposite direction, was slowly driving his car in the immediate rear of several other forward-moving cars on the right-hand side of an 18-foot dry, paved road with level shoulders and no accompanying ditches, and was suddenly and very unexpectedly rammed from the rear by defendant's truck.

Luther v Jones, 220-95; 261 NW 817

Fog—careful and prudent operation—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question whether the operator of an automobile was, on a foggy night, proceeding in a careful and prudent manner, and whether he had such control over the car that he could avoid obstacles appearing within the range of his vision.

Caudle v Zenor, 217-77; 251 NW 69; 34 NCCA 122; 1 NCCA(NS) 44

Negligence—jury question. Evidence held to present jury questions on the issues whether defendant (1) drove at a dangerous rate of speed, (2) did not have his car under control, and (3) failed to maintain a proper lookout.

Parrack v McGaffey, 217-368; 251 NW 871

Passing vehicle—jury question. Manifestly the court cannot find that a motorist did not have his car under control while attempting to pass another car, and was therefore guilty of negligence per se, when the position and speed of the cars at the time of the collision are in sharp dispute.

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

Truck crossing bridge—care as jury question. The question of a trucker's speed and control while crossing a bridge is properly one to be considered by the jury as bearing on his negligence, when the truck was wide and the bridge was narrow and somehow the truck collided with an oncoming vehicle.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

Striking jackknifed truck on icy hill. Where a car collided with a truck-trailer which had stalled on an icy hill at night on a country highway and had jackknifed across the left side of the highway on which plaintiff's husband was driving, the question of the husband's negligence in braking his car to such extent that it slid on the ice and collided with the side of the trailer, in the absence of any other evidence that car went out of control, held, that question of negligence of the husband as the sole proximate cause of the collision was properly submitted to the jury, and even tho it may be conceded that husband was negligent, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that such negligence was the sole proximate cause of the injury.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Instructions—"control" construed in its practical sense. Common words in instructions must generally be understood by the jury in their ordinary and practical sense, and, if a more specific definition is desired, it must be requested. So held as to the word "control" in connection with operating a motor vehicle.

Johnston v Johnson, 225-77; 279 NW 139; 118 ALR 233

Definition not requested. Failure of the court to define the term "under control" does not constitute error in the absence of a request for such defining.

Altfilisch v Wessel, 208-361; 225 NW 862; 29 NCCA 95

Instruction—definition. Ordinarily, it is not erroneous for the court to instruct the jury that the driver of an automobile has it under control when he has the ability to guide and direct its course of movement, to fix its speed, and bring it to a stop within a reasonable time.

Duncan v Rhomborg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Instructions justified. Evidence held to justify instructions relative to the speed of an automobile and to the control which the driver had over the car.

Altfilisch v Wessel, 208-361; 225 NW 862; 29 NCCA 95

Submission of issues. Instructions reviewed and held adequately to present the issue of excessive speed and lack of control in the operation of an automobile.

Schuster v Gillispie, 217-386; 251 NW 735

Instructions—negligence under ordinance embodying statute. It was not error to submit to the jury the question of negligence based on the violation of a city ordinance with reference to control and speed of a motor vehicle when the ordinance merely embodied the provisions of a statute.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Dragnet instructions under dragnet allegations. A dragnet allegation that defendant drove his automobile in a "careless, negligent and reckless manner without due regard of the safety of others in excess of 25 miles an hour" and "not under proper control", does not justify or permit dragnet instructions which largely cover the statutory law respecting the operation of automobiles, and which thereby places before the jury the duty to determine whether said statutes or some of them have been violated.

Holub v Fitzgerald, 214-857; 243 NW 575

Paraphrasing allegation of negligence. It is quite proper for the court to paraphrase an allegation charging negligence in that defendant "lost control of his car", and to submit the charge in the paraphrased form.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

Res ipsa loquitur—ambiguous but not erroneous phrase. In an action against a motorist for colliding with the rear of a horse-drawn vehicle, tried on the theory of res ipsa loquitur, an instruction containing the phrase, "within her exclusive control, or the exclusive control of her authorized driver", as applied to the automobile or instrumentality, held not erroneous as meaning control to the exclusion of

II CONTROL OF VEHICLES—concluded each other, but rather control to the exclusion of third persons.

Mein v Reed, 224-1274; 278 NW 307

Instructions—speed considered on issue of control. On the issue whether the operator of a motor vehicle had it under control, the court may very properly instruct the jury that it may consider the rate of speed and the attendant circumstances, even tho there is no dispute in the testimony as to the rate of speed.

Comparet v Coal Co., 200-922; 205 NW 779

Blowing out tire—legal excuse instruction. An instruction, stating “ * * * The blowing out of a tire is a legal excuse to a driver for losing control of his or her automobile * * *”, and also stating conditions for recovering control of the car, was not erroneous in that the grounds of negligence alleged and submitted to the jury were referable to the conduct of the driver, not at the time of the blowout, but thereafter—bearing in mind that instructions must be read as a whole and that it is unfair to pick out parts of instructions and give them a forced or strained construction.

Band v Reinke, 227-458; 288 NW 629

Right to assume compliance with law. Reversible error results from refusing to instruct that the operator of an automobile has a right to assume (until he knows or should know to the contrary) that other operators of automobiles, (1) will keep their cars under control, (2) will maintain a speed which will enable them to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) will yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right—all such enumerated subject matters being distinctly in issue.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

Erroneous instructions. Instructions relative to the statutory duties of the operator of an automobile (1) to have the vehicle under control, and (2) to so drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, reviewed and held prejudicially misleading and erroneous.

Swan v Auto Co., 221-842; 265 NW 143; 1 NCCA (NS) 58

Undue degree of care. An instruction which in effect imposes upon the operator of an automobile an absolute duty to have his car under such control as to avoid injury to others under all circumstances is fundamentally erroneous because imposing an undue degree of care, and necessarily justifies an order for new trial.

Gregory v Suhr, 221-1283; 268 NW 14

Undue burden of care—incurable error. An instruction which places on the operator of an automobile the absolute duty to maintain a constant lookout and to use all his senses to avoid the danger of a collision is erroneous as imposing an undue burden, and the error is not necessarily cured by subsequent statements limiting the operator's duty to reasonable care and diligence.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

III REDUCING SPEED

Arterial highway—negligence per se. The operator of an automobile on a county trunk arterial highway (on which no “stop” or “slow” signs had been erected at points intersected by county local roads) is guilty of negligence per se in knowingly approaching an obscured intersection without either (1) slackening his speed (of some 25 or 30 miles per hour) as required by this section, or (2) giving some warning signal of his approach as required by §5043, C., '31 [§5031.03, C., '39]. (But see Dikel v Mathers, 213 Iowa 76.)

Lang v Kollasch, 218-391; 255 NW 493; 37 NCCA 74

Contributory negligence per se. Record reviewed and held to establish contributory negligence on the part of a motorist in driving into a highway intersection and turning to the left (1) without first observing whether he had sufficient space in which safely to make said turn, (2) without first reducing his speed to a reasonable rate, a rate which would permit a stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) without first driving to the right of, and beyond the center of (statute since revised), said intersection, before turning to the left.

Wimer v Bottling Co., 221-120; 264 NW 262

Intersection—what constitutes—instructions. Where a north and south highway splits into two curves near an east and west highway, and connects with the latter at two points some 900 feet apart, it is not erroneous for the court to instruct that the intersection embraces the entire distance of 900 feet (1) when the evidence tends to show that the authorized public authorities have treated said distance as the intersection, and (2) when the instruction is manifestly given for the sole purpose of guiding the jury in applying the statutory command that motorists shall reduce their speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing intersections of public highways.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Approaching intersection—instruction—jury question. In an action for personal injuries sustained by driver of a motor vehicle in collision with another vehicle which entered intersection from the left, an instruction stating that the statute requires any person operating a motor vehicle to have the same under control and reduce the speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing a crossing or intersection of public highways was correct. Since the jury in most cases must determine from the circumstances whether there had been a compliance with such statute, question was properly submitted.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

IV MOTORCYCLES

Motorcycle-automobile collision—speed remote from accident—admissibility in evidence. Where a motorcycle coming over a viaduct at high speed collides with an automobile leaving and making a left-hand turn at the foot of the viaduct, speed of the motorcycle at the instant of or immediately before the collision is admissible, but, with nothing to indicate to the trial court the materiality of speed some distance away, the exclusion of such evidence will not be disturbed.

Thomas v Charter, 224-1278; 278 NW 920

Two vehicles approaching on same side—assumption. Where a motorcycle traveling east and an automobile traveling west approach each other, both driving on the south half of the highway, held, that as long as the automobile driver had sufficient time to return to his right, the north, side of the highway, he had a right to assume that the motorcyclist would not attempt to drive to the north half of the highway for the purpose of passing on the north, the wrong side, of the automobile.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Motorcycle passenger riding behind driver—care required. A girl riding on a motorcycle directly behind the driver, and unable to see the road ahead without standing up, thereby endangering the operation of the vehicle, cannot as a matter of law be under duty to warn the driver of impending danger in order to avoid the driver's negligence being imputed to her.

Williams v Kearney, 224-1006; 278 NW 180

Motorcycle passenger vs automobile owner—nonassumption of risk—sudden danger. In action to recover for death of 13-year-old boy resulting from collision between motorcycle, on which he was riding as a passenger, and defendant's automobile, allegation in defendant's answer that decedent assumed risk of motorcycle driver's negligence was properly stricken where pleaded facts and common knowledge justified conclusion that danger of the collision could not have been apparent more than a few seconds of time so that there was no time for deliberation and voluntary assumption of such risk.

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

Order striking defense of assumption of risk. In an action to recover for death of motorcycle passenger resulting from motorcycle collision with automobile, an order striking allegation of defendant-car owner that decedent assumed risk of motorcycle driver's negligence was appealable because the matter stricken was of such character as to involve the merits of the case.

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

Defendant driving on wrong side—no sudden emergency instruction for defendant. In an action for injuries sustained in a collision between a motorcycle driven east by plaintiff on his right, the south, side of the road and an approaching automobile operated by the defendant, allegedly on the left, or south, side of road, there was no occasion for court giving instruction to effect that defendant was faced with an emergency, when defendant maintained that he was at all times on his own right side of the road, because, if he were on the left, or south, side of highway, the emergency was of his own making.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

5023.05 Speed signs—duty to install.

Absence of signs—effect. The statutory limitation on speed within "residence districts" as provided in §5030, C., '31 [§5023.01, C., '39], applies even tho the speed limit signs provided by this section have not been erected within said district.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Vehicle within town limits—no speed sign.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Presumption of officer's performance of duty. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that town officers properly performed the mandatory duty imposed on them by statute in the erection and maintenance of speed limit signs.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

5023.06 Special restrictions.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op July 12, '39

5023.11 Limitation on elevated structures.

Speed remote from accident—admissibility. Where a motorcycle coming over a viaduct at high speed collides with an automobile leaving and making a left-hand turn at the foot of the viaduct, speed of the motorcycle at the instant of or immediately before the collision is admissible, but, with nothing to indicate to the trial court the materiality of speed some distance away, the exclusion of such evidence will not be disturbed.

Thomas v Charter, 224-1278; 278 NW 920

Control and speed of truck crossing bridge—care as jury question. The question of a trucker's speed and control while crossing a bridge is properly one to be considered by the jury as bearing on his negligence, when the truck was wide and the bridge was narrow, and somehow the truck collided with an oncoming vehicle.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

Contributory negligence—inadequate brakes—jury question. Evidence that a plaintiff motorist approached a bridge at 15 miles per hour and proceeded to cross, keeping his car within 6 inches of the right-hand side, before defendant came on the bridge, and that plaintiff was two-thirds across before defendant swung across the center line and struck him, makes a jury question as to whether the fact of plaintiff's negligence in not having adequate brakes contributed to the collision.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Predicating error solely on one's own evidence—impropriety. Predication of error based solely on defendant's own evidence and his own theory of the case is ineffective when other conflicting evidence clearly makes a jury question on contributory negligence regarding plaintiff's failure to have adequate brakes on his automobile, his failure to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and his failure to slow down before crossing a bridge.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Reckless operation—insufficient proof. The reckless operation of an automobile, within the meaning of §5026-b1, C., '35, is not shown by proof that a motorist, in the daytime and without obstruction to view ahead, and while approaching a bridge on a country highway, was traveling at the rate of some forty-odd miles per hour, and a-straddle the black lines in the center of an 18-foot wide, level, 10-degree curve; that, while so traveling, he confined his view solely to said black lines as they came into view immediately ahead of the fender or hood of his car; that he did not "look up" and see an approaching truck on the bridge until 75 feet therefrom; and that thereupon he swerved his car to the right but not quite far enough to avoid side-swiping the rear part of the truck while the two vehicles were passing on the bridge.

Wilson v Oxborrow, 220-1135; 264 NW 1

DRIVING ON RIGHT SIDE OF ROADWAY—OVERTAKING AND PASSING, ETC.

5024.01 Traveling on right-hand side.

Annotations in Vol I, see under §5019

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 32

Failure to keep to right in city—statute controlling. In an action for negligence on account of an automobile collision occurring in a suburban district of a city, the statute requiring travel on the right-hand side of the street (this section) rather than the statute giving one-half of the traveled way (§5020, Code, 35 [§5024.02, C., '39]) is controlling.

Rusch v Hoffman, 223-895; 274 NW 96

Left-side driving—negligence per se. The operator of a motor vehicle in cities and towns is guilty of negligence per se in driving on the left-hand side of a street without legal excuse.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Justifiable travel beyond center of street. A traveler, in order to avoid an obstruction in the line of his travel, may, if he exercises due care, encroach upon that part of the street which is beyond the center line thereof; and the mere fact that the approaching vehicle is, at the same time, on that half of the highway which the statute has assigned to him does not necessarily show that he is not guilty of actionable negligence.

Cuthbertson v Hoffa, 205-666; 216 NW 733

Operating automobile outside vehicular roadway. The statute which requires the operator of a motor vehicle in cities and towns to travel at all times on the right-hand side of the center of the street has no application to the operation of such vehicle on a driveway which is a part of the street, but which is outside of the vehicular part thereof.

Dickeson v Lzicar, 208-275; 225 NW 406

Nonapplicability of statute—action against city. This section has no application to a controversy between the municipality as a defendant and a plaintiff who was the sole traveler upon the street at the time in question.

Smith v Town, 202-300; 207 NW 340

Facts surrounding automobile accident—right-hand travel. In an action arising out of an automobile collision an allegation as to negligence in failing to travel the right-hand side of the street may be supported by both testimony of witnesses and all the surrounding circumstances.

Rusch v Hoffman, 223-895; 274 NW 96

Evidence of automobile tracks—undue limitation. The action of the trial court in unduly limiting litigants in the introduction of testimony having direct bearing on a vital and material issue constitutes reversible error. So held as to evidence relative to the tracks of colliding automobiles.

Harness v Tehel, 221-403; 263 NW 843

Icy street—skidding not unforeseen. A motorist driving on icy pavement cannot excuse his presence on the wrong side of a city street, in violation of law, on the ground that he thought an approaching vehicle might skid into him, when the approaching vehicle remained at all times on its proper side of the street. Skidding on an icy street could neither be an unforeseen circumstance nor unexpected happening.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Collision because of skidding—icy street not legal excuse per se. Where one of two motor vehicles, which are approaching each other, skids across the street and collides with the other vehicle which had almost stopped at the curb, and while the existence of ice on a city street is a condition over which a motorist has no control, yet its presence is not legal excuse to relieve him from his duty to use care commensurate with the existing conditions when he is responsible for the control of his car.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Icy pavement and locked brakes as excuse—jury question. A defendant truck driver's explanation in argument that icy pavement and locked brakes made his truck slide and should excuse his presence on the wrong side of the road, where his truck collided with plaintiff's automobile, will not sustain a directed verdict in his favor, since question of plaintiff's contributory negligence, defendant's violation of statute, the sufficiency of his excuse, and whether his negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, being questions on which reasonable minds might differ, are for the jury.

McIntyre v West Co., 225-739; 281 NW 353

Evidence of recklessness—sufficiency—jury question. In an action by a guest against the driver and owner of a motor vehicle for injuries sustained as a result of a collision with an oncoming vehicle, where it is shown that the collision occurred on the left side of the road while automobile, with defective brakes, was being driven at an excessive rate of speed through a well-traveled intersection in a town over a slope or hill which limited visibility, and on the left side of the highway in face of visible oncoming traffic, such evidence, on the issue of whether or not collision was caused by driver's recklessness, presented a jury question.

Allbaugh v Ashby, 226-574; 284 NW 816

Equal use of street—instruction. An instruction that drivers of different vehicles are entitled to an "equal use of the street", with elucidating qualifications relative to the duty of one of the drivers under a valid regulatory city ordinance, is quite unobjectionable.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Instructions neutralizing effect—rejection. Instructions which wholly neutralize the effect of driving on the left-hand side of a street are properly rejected when the jury might find that such driving contributed to the injury in question.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Others' compliance with law assumed—when presumption fails—no instruction. The right of a motorist to assume that others using the highway will obey the law ceases when he knows that another motorist is not obeying the law. When such motorist testifies that he saw an approaching car skidding and then drove on the wrong side of a city street to avoid that car, he is not entitled to the embodiment of such rule of assumption in instructions to the jury.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Place of accident—nonapplicability of circumstantial evidence instruction. In a death claim action for negligence arising from an automobile collision occurring in a suburban district of a city where the negligence alleged was in failing to travel on the right-hand side of the street, and where along with the physical facts there was direct evidence by the driver of the car wherein decedent was riding as to decedent's travel on the right-hand side of the street, it was error to give an instruction, applicable only to cases based entirely on circumstantial evidence, when such instruction prevented the jury from properly considering the direct evidence as to where the accident occurred.

Rusch v Hoffman, 223-895; 274 NW 96

Compliance with law assumed—when presumption fails. The right of a motorist to assume that others using the highway will obey the law ceases when he knows that another motorist is not obeying the law. When such motorist testifies that he saw an approaching car skidding and he then drove on the wrong side of a city street to avoid that car, he is not entitled to the embodiment of such rule of assumption in instructions to the jury.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

5024.02 Meeting and turning to right.

Annotations in Vol I, see under §5020
Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 32

"Traveled way" defined. A single track made by vehicles in the snow on an 18-foot pavement is properly treated as the "traveled way", within the meaning of the statute, especially when the parties mutually try their case on such theory.

Rudd v Jackson, 203-661; 213 NW 428

Controlling statute. In an action for negligence on account of an automobile collision occurring in a suburban district of a city, the statute requiring travel on the right-hand side of the street (§5019, Code, 35 [§5024.01, C., '39]) rather than the statute giving one-half of the traveled way (this section) is controlling.

Rusch v Hoffman, 223-895; 274 NW 96

Right to use any part of highway. Principle reaffirmed that a traveler has the right to travel upon the left-hand side of the highway so long as he has no reason to apprehend meeting another conveyance.

Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442

Stopping when meeting car not required. The duty so to operate an automobile as to be able to stop it within the assured clear distance ahead does not necessarily require the operator to stop his car on approaching an oncoming vehicle which is under duty to yield one-half of the traveled way.

Schuster v Gillispie, 217-386; 251 NW 735

Stationary vehicle—inapplicability of statute. The statute relative to the duty of the driver of a vehicle on the public highway, on meeting another vehicle, to yield one-half of the traveled way may, manifestly, have no application to the driver of a vehicle which, to the timely knowledge of an oncoming driver, is standing stationary in such highway.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Preference at intersections—statutes inapplicable. Statutory requirements relative (1) to drivers turning "to the right" when meeting, and (2) to preference accorded drivers at highway intersections (§5035, C., '35 [§5026.01, C., '39]) can, from the very nature of the transaction, have no application to an occurrence where the driver of a westbound car in making, or instantly after making, a left-hand turn into an intersecting road came into collision with an eastbound car traveling on or near the highway from which the left-hand turn was made.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Pleading—using wrong side of road. An allegation that defendant's car at the time of a collision was "over the center of the pavement, and over on plaintiff's side of the pavement" may be very material and not subject to a motion to strike.

Harriman v Roberts, 211-1372; 235 NW 751

Sufficient allegation of negligence. An allegation (1) that defendant drove his vehicle to the left of the center of the traveled way, or (what is practically the same thing) (2) that defendant drove his vehicle upon the wrong or left side of the public highway, tenders a sufficiently definite issue of fact, at least in the absence of any pleaded attack thereon.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Equivalent allegation. Plaintiff's allegation that defendant, on meeting plaintiff's car on the highway, negligently usurped plaintiff's side of the highway, is, in effect, an allegation that defendant failed, on meeting plaintiff, to yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right, and under supporting evidence justifies an instruction accordingly.

Foster v Flaugh, 223-40; 271 NW 503

Sufficient allegation—interpretation by court. An allegation, that "defendant negligently drove his car in a northerly direction and allowed it to travel to the west of the center of the highway and encroached upon the line of travel of the plaintiff" (who was traveling in a southerly direction), is properly interpreted by the court as simply charging that defendant failed to yield one-half of the traveled way to plaintiff.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Negligence—prima facie (?) or per se (?). Where an accident happens upon a public highway outside a city or town, the fact that the vehicle is on the wrong side of the road is only prima facie evidence of negligence. On the other hand, subject to the above, the violation without legal excuse of a standard of care for the operation or equipment of vehicles, whether fixed by statute or ordinance, constitutes negligence per se.

Negligence—prima facie evidence. Driving on the wrong side of a country highway, or failing to give one-half of such road by turning to the right, constitutes prima facie evidence of negligence—not negligence per se.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540
Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Collision not proof of statute violation. The fact that a motorist traveling on the right-hand side of the highway comes into collision with an approaching car traveling on the left-hand side of the highway (in other words, both cars traveling in the same pathway) does not, in and of itself, establish or even tend to establish a violation of the statutory command so to drive as to be able to stop "within the assured clear distance ahead".

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259; 1 NCCA(NS) 51

Evidence—colloquy following accident. In an action for damages consequent on a collision of automobiles, prejudicial error results from receiving against defendant evidence of a heated colloquy between defendant and the other driver, occurring within a very few minutes after the collision, and wherein each driver asserted that he was on the right side of the highway, and wherein the defendant refused to examine certain tracks as bearing on the dispute and applied scandalously opprobrious epithets to the other driver; this because said testimony is neither a part of the res gestae nor does it reveal any admission on the part of the defendant.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Surrounding circumstances—jury question. Circumstances surrounding an accident, viz: the condition of the vehicles, the location of dead bodies and debris, the blood and brains splattered on one side of a bridge, are circumstances for the jury to consider in determining whether a truck driver gave one half of the traveled way by turning to the right.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

Instructions—failure to yield one half traveled way—other circumstances mentioned. In action by automobile passenger, arising out of collision between a bus and approaching automobile wherein the only ground of negligence submitted was bus driver's failure to yield one half of traveled way, instructions relating to speed and control of bus and to rights and duties of bus driver in general relating to fact pavement was wet, relating to a car parked in path of bus, and other circumstances, when read with other instructions, that failure to yield one half of highway was only prima facie negligence and could be justified, explained, or excused, and that parked car on highway might be an emergency creating an excuse, were not erroneous as submitting additional grounds of negligence.

Staggs v Bartovsky, 228- ; 291 NW 443

Assumption that half the roadway will be yielded. Where vehicles are approaching each other on a highway, they each have a right to assume that the other will give one-half the traveled way by turning to the right, until, in the exercise of ordinary care, it becomes apparent that this assumption can no longer be indulged in.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Justifiable assumption—instruction. The operators of automobiles have the right to assume, when they meet on the highway, that the other will yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right; and it is erroneous to refuse a request for such instruction.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Motorcycle approaching on left side—assumption. Where a motorcycle traveling east and an automobile traveling west approach each other, both driving on the south half of the highway, held, that as long as the automobile driver had sufficient time to return to his right, the north, side of the highway, he had a right to assume that the motorcyclist would not attempt to drive to the north half of the highway for the purpose of passing on the north, the wrong side, of the automobile.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Instructions—emergencies—jury question. Instruction that emergency rule would apply in a case "where it reasonably seemed to him, acting as an ordinarily careful and prudent person would act under like circumstances, that he could not safely turn to the right", properly presents question for jury's determination and is not open to objection that it gauges the excuse of emergency by driver's own judgment or impulse.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Turning to left in emergency. The driver of a conveyance is not necessarily guilty of negligence when, faced by a sudden and dangerous emergency, he turns to the left of an approaching vehicle in an effort to avoid a collision.

Lein v Morrell & Co., 207-1271; 224 NW 576; 31 NCCA 165

Emergency—failure to turn to right—effect. Failure of the operator of an automobile to turn to the right in an emergency is not necessarily negligent, and especially when the complaining party was the author of the emergency.

Caudle v Zenor, 217-77; 251 NW 69; 34 NCCA 122; 1 NCCA(NS) 44

Legal excuse—jury question. The act of the operator of a vehicle in turning to the left-hand side of a country highway when meeting another vehicle is presumptively negligent, but testimony that the immediately approaching vehicle was weaving from side to side of the road, and that the turn to the left was made in order to avoid a collision, presents a jury question whether he was, in turning to the left, exercising reasonable care.

Babendure v Baker, 218-31; 253 NW 834; 2 NCCA(NS) 650

Emergency instruction—conflict of testimony. In an action for injuries sustained in a collision between a motorcycle driven east by plaintiff on his right, the south, side of the road and an approaching automobile operated by the defendant allegedly on the left, or south, side of road, there was no occasion for court giving instruction to effect that defendant was faced with an emergency, when defendant maintained that he was at all times on his own right side of the road, because if he were on the left, or south, side of highway, the emergency was of his own making.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Confusion resulting from accident not negligence. A motorist who, while operating his car easterly on the south or right-hand side of a paved road at 50 miles per hour (tho the night is misty and visibility is poor), is unexpectedly, violently, and negligently so hit by the car of another motorist as to be deflected to the north or left-hand side of the road and into collision with an oncoming, westbound car, cannot, as to said latter collision, be deemed negligent because instantly when so deflected his hand involuntarily dropped from his steering wheel and his foot unintentionally reached the accelerator of his car instead of the brake.

Rich v Herny, 222-465; 269 NW 489

Legal excuse—instruction on statute. An instruction, tho in the language of the statute, e. g., that "motor vehicles, meeting each other on the public highway, shall give one-half of the traveled way thereof by turning to the right", may constitute reversible error when unaccompanied by any reference to a sudden emergency which is presented as an excuse for a car actually being on the wrong side of the road at the time of a collision.

Christenson v Tel. Co., 222-808; 270 NW 394

Occupying right side of highway—jury question. A specification of negligence that defendant did not keep his truck on the right-hand side of the highway when struck from the rear could not be withdrawn and was properly submitted to the jury when there was evidence to sustain the specification. Evidence did not show that collision would have occurred even tho truck had been wholly on right-hand side of the highway.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

Passing parked truck—excuse—jury question. The length of a vehicle (34 feet), its load (7 tons), and the space required in which to make a turn (20 to 30 feet) may, especially on a dark night, have a very material bearing on the issue whether the driver, by proof of an attempt to pass around a stalled truck, had legally excused his presumptive negligence in being on the left-hand side of the traveled way at the time of a collision with an oncoming vehicle. Evidence held to present jury question.

McWilliams v Beck, 220-906; 262 NW 781

Yielding right of way—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether the operator of an automobile yielded, to an oncoming vehicle, one-half of a traveled way.

Ryan v Amodeo, 216-752; 249 NW 656

Schuster v Gillispie, 217-386; 251 NW 735

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Proximate cause—jury question. Evidence held to present jury question whether defendant's failure to give half of the traveled highway was the proximate cause of an accident.

Henriksen v Stages, 216-643; 246 NW 913

Crossing black line to pass automobile—jury question. Eyewitness testimony, that a defendant motorist crossed the black line to the left side of the pavement preparatory to passing an automobile, then, observing an approaching vehicle, swung back in again, and in so doing struck this latter vehicle, deflecting his own automobile so as to collide with a second approaching vehicle in which plaintiff was riding, makes a jury question as to defendant's acts being negligence.

Echternacht v Herny, 224-317; 275 NW 576

Collision—jury questions. Evidence reviewed in an action for damages consequent on a collision in the nighttime between a truck and an automobile, and held to present jury questions on the issues:

1. Whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence.

2. Whether defendant was driving his truck without lights.

3. Whether defendant was driving on the wrong side of the road.

4. Whether defendant was operating his truck (weighing three tons) at an unlawful rate of speed.

5. Whether defendant had opportunity to avoid the collision and failed to do so.

Carlson v Decker, 218-54; 253 NW 923; 36 NCCA 93

Collision on bridge—inadequate brakes—jury question. Evidence that a plaintiff motorist approached a bridge at 15 miles per hour, proceeded to cross, keeping his car within 6 inches of the right-hand side, before defendant came on the bridge, and that plaintiff was two-thirds across before defendant swung across the center line and struck him, makes a jury question as to whether the fact of plaintiff's negligence in not having adequate brakes contributed to the collision.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Passenger suing both drivers—concurring negligence—jury question. In an action by a passenger against the drivers of both automobiles involved in a collision, where the vehicle in which he was riding was being driven 50 to 60 miles per hour in a snowstorm, with an oncoming automobile crowding toward the wrong side of the road, a jury question is created as to whether the conduct of the driver with whom the plaintiff was riding was a concurring proximate cause of the passenger's injuries.

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Plural assignment—justifiable submission. Record reviewed in an action for damages consequent on a collision during the nighttime between trucks, and held to justify the court in submitting to the jury not only the issue (1) of defendant's failure to turn to the right and yield one-half of the traveled way, but also the issues (2) of defendant's failure to maintain a proper lookout for other vehicles, and (3) of defendant's alleged excessive speed.

Pazen v Des Moines Co., 223-23; 272 NW 126

Collision with bicycle—negligence—instructions—jury question. Where a motorist driving east 40 to 50 miles per hour at night on a paved highway, the lights on his vehicle working properly (no rain, fog, or snow), his attention being momentarily diverted by an oncoming car, and, simultaneously with its passing, he collided with and fatally injured a bicycle rider, also traveling east, instructions covering diverting circumstances relative to speed (§5029, C., '35 [§5023.01, C., '39]) and failing to turn to left when passing vehicle (§5022, C., '35 [§5024.03, C., '39]) reviewed and held to correctly present questions for jury.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6; 3 NCCA (NS) 184

Directed verdict—defendant's excuse for negligence—jury question. In argument, a defendant truck driver's explanation that icy pavement and locked brakes made his truck slide and should excuse his presence on the wrong side of the road where his truck collided with plaintiff's automobile will not sustain a directed verdict in his favor, since question of plaintiff's contributory negligence, defendant's violation of statute, the sufficiency of his excuse, and whether his negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, being questions on which reasonable minds might differ, are for the jury.

McIntyre v West Co., 225-739; 281 NW 353

Directed verdict—improper unless per se negligence also contributory—jury question. A plaintiff motorist, against whom a directed verdict was rendered because in violating a speed statute he was negligent per se, still should have had the benefit of the best possible view of the evidence, and, moreover, a record showing that he remained at all times on his own side of the road, but that a truck driver, for no apparent reason, drove across the pavement center line, resulting in a head-on collision, makes a jury question as to whether or not plaintiff's per se negligence contributed to his injury.

McIntyre v West Co., 225-739; 281 NW 353

Reckless operation—insufficient proof. The reckless operation of an automobile, within the meaning of section 5026-b1, C., '35, is not shown by proof that a motorist, in the daytime and without obstruction to view ahead, and while approaching a bridge on a country highway, was traveling at the rate of some forty-odd miles per hour, and a-straddle the black lines in the center of an 18-foot wide, level, 10-degree curve; that, while so traveling, he confined his view solely to said black lines as they came into view immediately ahead of the fender or hood of his car; that he did not "look up" and see an approaching truck on the bridge until 75 feet therefrom; and that thereupon he swerved his car to the right but not quite far enough to avoid side-swiping the rear part of the truck while the two vehicles were passing on the bridge.

Wilson v Oxborrow, 220-1135; 264 NW 1

Instruction justified by allegation. Instructions relative to the duty of vehicle drivers to turn to the right, on meeting, are justified by an allegation of negligence in driving on the wrong side of the road at the time of meeting.

Lange v Bedell, 203-1194; 212 NW 354

Instructions—acts of negligence set out. In submitting to the jury the alleged negligence of driving to the left of the center of a traveled way, or driving upon the wrong or left side of the highway, the court must specifically define to the jury what acts would constitute negligence under said allegations.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912
Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

No presumption of fault when on wrong side of highway. It is erroneous to instruct that where a collision occurs between two vehicles, at a time when one of the vehicles is on the wrong side of the road, the presumption is that the collision was caused by the negligence of the driver who was on the wrong side of the road.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

Instruction—violation as presumption of negligence. An instruction that negligence may consist in the failure to do that which the law commands, in connection with an instruction that the statute requires drivers of vehicles to turn to the right when meeting, in effect directs the jury that the failure to turn to the right constitutes negligence in and of itself, and is erroneous because the failure to obey said statute creates a presumption, only, of negligence.

Ryan v Rendering Wks., 215-363; 245 NW 301

Excuse not presented—peremptory instruction. Instructions that a party is in duty bound to drive on the right-hand side of a highway or that he must so drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, without any qualification relative to the driver's right to show legal excuse for driving otherwise, are not erroneous when the driver offers no excuse.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Nonprejudicial instructions—excuse. An instruction to the effect that if the defendant failed to yield to another motorist one-half of the traveled way, the jury, "in the absence of justifiable excuse", might find the defendant negligent, cannot be deemed prejudicial to a defendant who established no excuse whatever.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Instructions—failure to yield half of traveled way—justification. Instruction as to defendant's duty to yield one half of traveled highway and that violation of such duty would be presumptive evidence of negligence and would warrant finding of negligence unless it was shown by "the greater weight or preponderance of the evidence" that under the circumstances defendant's failure was justified and in exercise of ordinary care, held not prejudicial since no evidence of justification was adduced, altho use of quoted words is not to be approved. Instruction as to plaintiff's duty to yield one half of traveled way also reviewed and held sufficient.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Improper burden of proof—excuse presented under general denial. Reversible error results from an instruction that defendant's failure, on meeting plaintiff, to yield half of the traveled way would be prima facie evidence of negligence unless defendant has established by a preponderance of the evidence his excuse for not so yielding, when defendant did not plead said excuse as an affirmative defense, but, under a general denial, presented it in his evidence.

Rich v Herny, 222-465; 269 NW 489

Assumption that laws will be obeyed—instruction. If there be applicable evidence the court must instruct (at least on request), (1) as to the duty of drivers of cars, on meeting, to obey the laws of the road, such as turning to the right, and maintaining a proper lookout and proper speed, and (2) as to the right of the driver of each car to presume that such duties will be performed by the other driver.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Snowstorm—assuming compliance with law—reasonable care rule. Where two motorists approach each other in a snowstorm—one driving into the face of the storm which has obliterated the pavement outlines and the dividing mark thereon—the other motorist has a right to assume that he will be accorded one-half the traveled way until he sees or until, in view of the storm conditions and added driving difficulties, he should, in using ordinary care, realize that half the highway was not being yielded, under which facts a jury question is presented as to whether his continued reliance on the assumption excused him from the charge of negligence.

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Instructions—absence of evidence to support. Instructions which submit to the jury the questions whether a defendant has shown legal excuses, (1) for exceeding a statutory speed limit, or (2) for not having yielded one-half of the traveled way, are erroneous when there is no evidence supporting an affirmative finding on either proposition.

Deweese v Transit Lines, 218-1327; 256 NW 428

Requested instructions—refusal when otherwise favorably covered—nonerroneous. In action arising out of injuries sustained in collision between a bus and approaching automobile, a refusal to give bus owner's requested instruction concerning the discovery of parked car on paved highway in the path of bus as a circumstance bearing on question of bus driver's negligence in failing to yield one half of traveled way, was not prejudicial error where other instructions given at bus owner's request were at least as favorable to bus owner as refused instruction.

Staggs v Bartovsky, 228- ; 291 NW 443

Absence of rear reflectors—nonproximate cause—instruction without issue. A "side-swipe" collision between two head-on approaching automobiles could not proximately result from the absence of red reflectors on the rear of the body and no instruction involving this negligence should be given.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Instructions—noncompliance — unsupported issue. Instruction dealing with contributory negligence and presenting to the jury a situation involving plaintiff's duty to yield one-half of traveled roadway and turning to the right unless impossible to do so is reversibly erroneous when neither allegations nor evidence raise this question.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Unsupported issues not submitted. In a damage action for an automobile collision occurring on a north and south paved road south of an intersection, it is not error to submit the case on the one negligence ground that defendant crossed the center line of the pavement when the record as to other negligence allegations shows a proper speed and lookout, control of the car, and that defendant driving north could not make a left turn before reaching the intersection.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

Failure to turn to right as negligence—non-prejudicial error. An instruction to the effect that the failure of the operator of an automobile on a country road to turn to the right on meeting another vehicle constitutes negligence, if erroneous, is error without prejudice when the record reveals beyond question that said operator was guilty of proximate negligence in other respects.

Scott v Hinman, 216-1126; 249 NW 249

Travel in fog—assured clear distance—oncoming vehicles. Since as to oncoming vehicles, "assured clear distance" statute applies only to motorist not traveling on his right-hand side of the road, in an action involving a collision between oncoming vehicles on a foggy night when vehicle in which plaintiff was riding was traveling on the right-hand side of the road, a requested instruction applying the "assured clear distance" statute to the plaintiff was properly refused.

Gregory v Suhr, 224-954; 277 NW 721

Unbalanced instruction—unallowable limitation on materiality of evidence. Reversible error results to an unsuccessful plaintiff (in an action pivoted on the issue whether defendant traveling northward yielded half of the traveled way to plaintiff traveling southward) from instructions to the effect that "evidence that defendant just preceding the collision swerved his car to the west is material on the issue whether plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence, even tho plaintiff had not alleged such swerving as a specific act of negligence on the part of defendant". The vice is not in what the court does say but in what the court does not say, to wit: that said evidence is material on the issue of defendant's negligence.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Fatally confusing instruction. The presentation to the jury of an assignment of negligence to the specific effect that the two automobiles in question, moving in opposite directions on the highway and immediately before they collided, were each on the left-hand side of the highway, is so confusing as to constitute reversible error.

Balik v Flacker, 212-1381; 238 NW 467

Erroneously refused instruction—right to assume compliance with law. Reversible error results from refusing to instruct that the operator of an automobile has a right to assume (until he knows or should know to the contrary) that other operators of automobiles, (1) will keep their cars under control, (2) will maintain a speed which will enable them to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) will yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right—all such enumerated subject matters being distinctly in issue.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

Yielding half of traveled way—beaten path (?) or entire roadway (?). When the plaintiff's truck turned left at a blind corner, keeping to the right of the beaten path, but not to the right side of the graveled highway, and collided with the defendant's car which was approaching the corner on the right side of the road, it was not improper to instruct the jury that a car must yield half the traveled or graveled part of the road when meeting another car, and, that for the plaintiff to recover, it must be found that the truck was hit while on the right side of the road; or, for a recovery to be had by the defendant on a counterclaim, that the plaintiff was negligent in not yielding half the road.

Kiesau v Vangen, 226-824; 285 NW 181

Ruts in snow on highway—collision—explanatory instruction omitting contributory negligence. Where, on a snow-covered highway containing a single pair of ruts, two automobiles approaching each other collide on a hill, in a damage action by a passenger injured thereby, an instruction further explaining negligence, but not mentioning contributory negligence, is not erroneous when contributory negligence was covered in other instructions and when the jury could not have been misled by the explanatory purpose of the instruction.

Tallmon v Larson, 226-564; 284 NW 367

5024.03 Overtaking a vehicle.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 167

Nonright to assume compliance with law. The operator of an automobile while attempting to pass another car going in the same direction has no right to assume that the car sought to be passed will keep to the right of the center of the highway when the highway is so occupied at the time by another car that the car sought to be passed cannot turn to the right.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144; 33 NCCA 476

Left turn by car ahead—"assured clear distance ahead" rule—inapplicability. In action to recover for personal injuries resulting from an automobile collision occurring when the driver of an automobile attempted to pass a truck while the vehicles were traveling side by side, and the truck driver attempted a left turn into driveway of a farm, held, that the "assured clear distance ahead" rule was inapplicable.

Monen v Jewel Tea Co., 227-547; 288 NW 637

Racing as proximate cause—evidence. On the issue whether two automobiles were racing and whether such race was the proximate cause of an injury to a third party, the court may, in its discretion, refuse to receive evidence of racing remote in point of time unless evidence of racing immediately before the accident is first introduced.

Glass v Hutchinson Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

Use of entire pavement—permissible until signal received. The driver of a truck proceeding down the highway had the right to make use of the entire pavement when there was no vehicle approaching from in front, until he received some signal or in some way acquired knowledge that a truck in the rear desired to pass.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

Driving past stationary vehicle. Driving past and within four feet of a stationary vehicle in the public highway, at a rate of 35 miles per hour and without giving any warning signal, when much more than said four feet was afforded by the highway, may constitute negligence.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Turning to right when overtaking vehicle. Turning to the right on approaching from the rear a stationary vehicle in the highway may not, in an emergency, constitute negligence.

Jeck v Const. Co., 216-516; 246 NW 595; 35 NCCA 766

Passing pedestrian—contributory negligence—jury question. When a truck slowed down and turned out to the left to avoid a pedestrian walking along the traveled portion of the highway, and was struck by another truck proceeding from the rear, the court properly submitted the question of contributory negligence to the jury.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

Conflicting evidence re control. Manifestly the court cannot find that a motorist did not have his car under control while attempting to pass another car, and was therefore guilty of negligence per se, when the position and speed of the cars at the time of the collision are in sharp dispute.

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

Jury question — contributory negligence. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue of the contributory negligence of plaintiff in attempting to pass another car traveling in the same direction.

McCoy v Cole, 216-1320; 249 NW 213

Failure to yield right of way. Record reviewed and held to justify the submission to the jury of the assignment of negligence to the effect that the operator of an automobile failed to yield the right of way to a passing car.

McCoy v Cole, 216-1320; 249 NW 213; 33 NCCA 347

Negligence per se—double passing. The operator of a motor vehicle, who, at a speed of forty miles per hour and in the nighttime, attempts to pass another vehicle which he is closely following, at the very time when the operator of such other vehicle is attempting to pass a vehicle which he has overtaken, is guilty of negligence per se; both because he (1) is manifestly driving at an imprudent rate of speed under the circumstances, and (2) is driving at a rate of speed which will not enable him to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660

"Double passing." Evidence relative to the facts attending a "double passing" reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144; 33 NCCA 476

Repealed statute. Requested instruction in re repealed statute, previously governing overtaking automobiles, properly refused.

Jones v Krambeck, 228- ; 290 NW 56

Negligence—truck struck from the rear—jury question. A specification of negligence that defendant did not keep his truck on the right-hand side of the highway when struck from the rear could not be withdrawn and was properly submitted to the jury when there was evidence to sustain the specification. Evidence did not show that collision would have occurred, even tho truck had been wholly on right-hand side of the highway.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

Negligence—jury question. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether the driver of a vehicle was negligent in attempting to pass on the left of a forward-moving vehicle.

Starry v Hanold, 202-1180; 211 NW 696; 33 NCCA 506

Anticipated negligence—repairing car on highway. Prejudicial error results from instructing, in effect, that a person who has stopped his car at a proper place in the highway in order to repair it must anticipate and guard himself against the possibility that the operator of some passing car may be negligent by passing the stationary car on the wrong side.

Hanson v Manning, 213-625; 239 NW 793

Left turn into passing vehicle—instruction on speed not necessary. In a personal injury action arising out of an automobile-truck collision occurring when the automobile, in which plaintiff was riding with husband-driver, was passing a truck which attempted to make a left turn into driveway of a farm just as the automobile came alongside, and when the automobile driver, attempting to avoid an accident by speeding ahead of truck, collided therewith, held, that statute relating to speed, which requires reasonable speed with due regard to existing conditions, the truck being the only "existing condition" at the time and place of accident, was inapplicable, and the court properly instructed jury only on the statute governing passing vehicles as affecting automobile driver's contributory negligence, which would be imputed to plaintiff by court's former instruction.

Monen v Jewel Tea Co., 227-547; 288 NW 637

Care by driver being overtaken—instructions. Instructions relative to the care required by the driver of a car which is overtaken by another car are proper when such care is in issue under conflicting evidence.

Kuhn v Kjose, 216-36; 248 NW 230

Duty to reduce speed. An allegation that defendant drove his vehicle past a stationary vehicle at an excessive and dangerous rate of speed renders proper, on supporting proof, an instruction as to the duty of the defendant to reduce his speed to a reasonable rate when approaching and passing the stationary vehicle.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Failure to signal. Instructions relative to the duty of the driver of an automobile, in attempting to pass a slower moving vehicle, to sound his horn, may be justified even tho the driver of the slower moving vehicle had knowledge that the other party was attempting to pass.

Johnson v McVicker, 216-654; 247 NW 488

Negligence—improper submission. Only supported grounds of negligence should be submitted to the jury. So held where the court submitted the negligence of the driver of an automobile (1) in failing to turn to the right when signaled by an overtaking car, and (2) in increasing his speed when so signaled, when on the record the only possible proximate negligence was the act of the said driver in overtaking the passing car, after it had passed, and then bringing about a collision.

Berridge v Pray, 202-663; 210 NW 916

5024.06 Overtaking on the right.

Turning to right when overtaking vehicle—effect. Turning to the right on approaching from the rear a stationary vehicle in the highway may not, in an emergency, constitute negligence.

Jeck v Const. Co., 216-516; 246 NW 595; 35 NCCA 766

Failure to lessen speed or signal approach. A jury question on the issue of negligence of the operator of an automobile is generated by evidence tending to show that said operator was driving easterly on a straight road at 50 miles per hour; that he plainly could have seen, while at a distance of 80 rods, two well-lighted cars, and that they were standing together on the south side of the highway, one headed west and one headed east, with all headlights burning; and that, without slacking his speed or giving signal of his approach, he passed to the south of said stationary cars and so close thereto as to strike and break an open door on one of said cars.

Hanson v Manning, 213-625; 239 NW 793; 2 NCCA(NS) 446

5024.07 Limitations on overtaking on the left.

Precautions before passing vehicle. The operator of a vehicle is under duty, before attempting to pass to the left of and around another vehicle moving in the same direction, to make reasonable observation as to the presence, in front, of other vehicles moving in the opposite direction on the highway, and to attempt such passage only when, in the exercise of reasonable care, it appears that he can

(1) effect such passage in safety to the vehicle which is to be passed, and (2) properly return to the right-hand side of the road before meeting oncoming vehicles. A violation of this duty may be the proximate cause of a third vehicle being deflected into the vehicle which had been passed.

Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Proximate cause. The act of passing a vehicle at an illegal rate of speed may not be declared negligence per se as to a collision which occurred after the passing had been completely effected.

Berridge v Pray, 202-663; 210 NW 916

Last clear chance—jury question. When a truck driven by plaintiff's intestate slowed down and turned to the left to avoid a crippled pedestrian who was walking along the highway, whether the defendant's truck, coming from the rear at a greater speed, after discovering the peril of the truck in front in having turned out into his path, should have pulled further to the left on the shoulder of the road to avoid a collision, was a question of last clear chance for the jury.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

Collision with bicycle—instructions—jury question. Where a motorist driving east 40 to 50 miles per hour at night on a paved highway, the lights on vehicle working properly (no rain, fog, or snow), his attention being momentarily diverted by an oncoming car, and, simultaneously with its passing, he collided with and fatally injured a bicycle rider also traveling east, instructions covering diverting circumstances relative to speed (§5029, C., '35) and failing to turn to left when passing vehicle (§5022, C., '35) reviewed and held to present correctly questions for jury.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6; 3 NCCA(NS) 184

Verdict contrary to evidence—setting aside—nonabuse of discretion. In an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in a head-on automobile collision occurring at night near a crest of a hill on a narrow paved country highway, where the vehicle in which plaintiff was riding was then on the left-hand side of the highway attempting to pass another car traveling in the same direction, the setting aside of the verdict for plaintiff on the ground that verdict was contrary to the evidence, and granting a new trial, was not an abuse of discretion.

Brunssen v Parker, 227-1364; 291 NW 535

Negligence per se. The operator of a motor vehicle, who, at a speed of 40 miles per hour and in the nighttime, attempts to pass another vehicle which he is closely following, at the very time when the operator of such other vehicle is attempting to pass a vehicle which he has overtaken, is guilty of negligence per se; both because he (1) is manifestly driving at an imprudent rate of speed under the circumstances, and (2) is driving at a rate of speed which will not enable him to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660; 1 NCCA (NS) 50

Holding under former statute. The operator of a vehicle is guilty of negligence per se when, after passing another vehicle moving in the same direction, he returns to the right-hand side of the highway and in front of the vehicle just passed, within a shorter distance than that provided by law—30 feet.

Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Passing on curve—negligence—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of negligence of the operator of an automobile in passing another vehicle on a curve and returning to the right side of the traveled way within 30 feet of the car which had been passed.

Andersen v Christensen, 222-177; 268 NW 527

5024.08 Prohibited passing.

Passing on curve—negligence—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of negligence of the operator of an automobile in passing another vehicle on a curve, and returning to the right side of the traveled way within 30 feet of the car which had been passed.

Andersen v Christensen, 222-177; 268 NW 527

Verdict contrary to evidence—setting aside—nonabuse of discretion. In an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in a head-on automobile collision occurring at night near a crest of a hill on a narrow paved country highway, where the vehicle in which plaintiff was riding was then on the left-hand side of the highway attempting to pass another car traveling in the same direction, the setting aside of the verdict for plaintiff on the ground that verdict was contrary to the evidence, and granting a new trial, was not an abuse of discretion.

Brunssen v Parker, 227-1364; 291 NW 535

5024.11 Following too closely.

Last clear chance—jury question. When a truck driven by plaintiff's intestate slowed down and turned to the left to avoid a crippled pedestrian who was walking along the highway, whether the defendant's truck, coming from the rear at a greater speed, after discovering the peril of the truck in front in having turned out into his path, should have pulled further to the left on the shoulder of the road to avoid a collision, was a question of last clear chance for the jury.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

TURNING AND STARTING AND SIGNALS ON STOPPING AND TURNING

5025.01 Turning at intersections.

Annotations in Vol I, see under §5033 Intersection collisions generally. See under §§5026.01-5026.05

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 355

Cutting corners—inapplicability of statute. The statutory prohibition against "cutting corners" in making left-hand turns is not applicable when one is approaching on the road into which such turn is made.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Cutting corner. A left-hand "cutting of the corner" while passing from one street into another is ipso facto negligent.

Lein v Morrell & Co., 207-1271; 224 NW 576; 32 NCCA 417

Cutting corner—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether an automobile driver's failure to pass to the right of and beyond the center of a highway intersection was the proximate cause of an injury.

Sexauer v Dunlap, 207-1018; 222 NW 420

Turning or changing course—conditions precedent. The operator of a motor vehicle cannot be deemed guilty of negligence in attempting to turn to the right and into an intersecting road, if he believed and as a reasonably prudent person had a right to believe, in view of all the circumstances, that he could make said turn in safety.

Harmon v Gilligan, 221-605; 266 NW 288

Justifiably attempted left turn. A motor vehicle driver cannot be deemed negligent in attempting a left-hand turn into an intersecting highway when, acting as a reasonably cautious and prudent person, he believes and has a right to believe that vehicles approaching from his right during the turn are at such distance that he can safely make the turn.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Obedying statute—presumption. Principle reaffirmed that a motor vehicle driver in attempting to make a left-hand turn into an intersecting road has a right to proceed on the assumption (unless he has knowledge to the contrary) that another driver, approaching from his right, will obey the law (§5031, C., '35) by reducing his speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing said intersection.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Holding under former statute. In making a left-hand turn into an intersecting road, negligence on the part of a westbound driver (1) in failing to drive to the right and beyond the center before turning, or (2) in failing to note whether he could make the turn in safety, is not the proximate cause of injuries received by him by being hit by an eastbound car after he had completed the turn and was wholly on the intersecting road.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Prior statute. The failure of the owner of a truck, before making a left turn into an intersecting highway, to drive to the right of and beyond the center of the intersection, constitutes negligence per se and if such owner is injured his negligence will be classified as contributory negligence per se if such conclusion is the only one to which reasonable minds could arrive.

Mansfield v Summers, 222-837; 270 NW 417

Holding under prior statute. Record reviewed and held to establish contributory negligence on the part of a motorist in driving into a highway intersection and turning to the left (1) without first observing whether he had sufficient space in which safely to make said turn, (2) without first reducing his speed to a reasonable rate, a rate which would permit a stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) without first driving to the right of, and beyond the center of, said intersection before turning to the left.

Wimer v Bottling Co., 221-120; 264 NW 262

Negligence per se—improper left-hand turn. A left-hand turn from one highway into another highway contrary to the direction of the statute constitutes negligence per se in the absence of plea and proof of a valid excuse.

Wilson v Long, 221-668; 266 NW 482

Turn at intersection—negligence per se. The operator of a westbound automobile, who makes a left-hand turn at an intersecting street and thereupon increases his speed in order to escape a collision with an eastbound car which he knows is but some forty feet west of the intersection and approaching it at a speed twice his own speed, is guilty of negligence per se.

Parrack v McGaffey, 217-368; 251 NW 871

Collision with left-turning vehicle—contributory negligence. The driver of a rear-moving vehicle is not necessarily guilty of contributory negligence because, at high speed, he collides with a forward-moving vehicle while it is making an abrupt left turn.

McManus v Creamery Co., 219-860; 259 NW 921

Negligence per se—prejudicial submission. Prejudicial error results from submitting to the jury whether a motorist was negligent in so making a left-hand turn as to run into the side of another motorist properly operating his car on the road from which the turn was made, because such a turn with such result is negligence per se in the absence of proof of legal excuse.

Rich v Herny, 222-465; 269 NW 489

Overtaking and passing—car ahead turning to left. In action to recover for personal injuries resulting from an automobile collision occurring when the driver of an automobile attempted to pass a truck while the vehicles were traveling side by side, and the truck driver attempted a left turn into driveway of a farm, held, that the "assured clear distance ahead" rule was inapplicable.

Monen v Jewel Tea Co., 227-547; 288 NW 637

Turning or changing course—negligence. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a motorist was negligent in suddenly turning from the right side to the left side of a paved, rural highway (in order to enter a private driveway on the latter side of said road), and whether, if negligent, said negligence was the proximate cause of a collision with another vehicle which he knew he was about to meet.

McKinnon v Guthrie, 221-400; 265 NW 620

Turning to right into intersecting road—contributory negligence—jury question. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether plaintiff, traveling on the right-hand side of the highway, with knowledge that she was being closely followed by a truck, was guilty of contributory negligence in changing her course by turning to the right and entering an intersecting highway—the collision occurring between said turning car and said truck.

Harmon v Gilligan, 221-605; 266 NW 288

Collision with overtaking and passing vehicle—instruction on speed not necessary. In a personal injury action arising out of an automobile-truck collision occurring when the automobile in which plaintiff was riding with husband-driver was passing a truck which attempted to make a left turn into driveway of a farm just as the automobile came alongside, and when the automobile driver, attempting to avoid an accident by speeding ahead of truck, collided therewith, held, that statute relating to speed, which requires reasonable speed with due regard to existing conditions, the truck being the only "existing condition" at the time and place of accident, was inapplicable, and the court properly instructed jury only on the statute governing passing vehicles as affecting automobile driver's contributory negligence, which would be imputed to plaintiff by court's former instruction.

Monen v Jewel Tea Co., 227-547; 288 NW 637

Intersecting highways—jury question. The intersection formed by the junction of two highways may be such that the center thereof may be a question for the jury.

Wambeam v Hayes, 205-1394; 219 NW 813; 31 NCCA 71; 32 NCCA 437

Actions—unsupported issues not submitted.

In a damage action for an automobile collision occurring on a north and south paved road south of an intersection, it is not error to submit the case on the one negligence ground that defendant crossed the center line of the pavement when the record as to other negligence allegations shows a proper speed and lookout, control of the car, and that defendant driving north could not make a left turn before reaching the intersection.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

5025.03 Starting parked vehicle.

Motorist anticipating dangerous position of one aiding—jury question. Where a stalled motorist heard one of several bystanders say, "Let's give him a push", whereupon they arranged themselves in positions to push the automobile, and one called, "Let's go ahead", a directed verdict is properly denied, and a jury question is presented as to whether or not the motorist might have known that a person was directly behind the automobile and would be injured if the car moved backward.

Huston v Lindsay, 224-281; 276 NW 201

Instructions—moving automobile backward—warning person in perilous position. Instructions covering motorist's right to move his car backward and his duty to give warning of his intention to so move the automobile when people are pushing and trying to extricate it from stalled position on icy street, and whether he knew or ought to have known of one in a position of peril at the rear of the automobile, reviewed, and held to correctly present the issues.

Huston v Lindsay, 224-281; 276 NW 201.

Truck in reverse gear—negligent starting. Evidence reviewed and held to present jury questions on the issues:

1. Whether the operator of a truck which he had left in reverse gear was negligent in starting the engine when he had reason to know that another person was in the near vicinity of the rear of the truck, and,

2. Whether the deceased was injured by being crushed between the rear of said truck and a building.

Laudner v James, 221-863; 266 NW 15

Nonduty to apprehend remote danger. The driver of a loaded truck, which is standing with the rear end against a building, is under no duty, when starting the truck, to apprehend that a person then standing beside the truck and some four feet from it and in a position of perfect safety, will, after the truck is started, suddenly run in behind the truck and be caught in a dangerous position provided the engine should unexpectedly stall and the truck "back up" against the building.

Nelson v Mitten, 218-914; 255 NW 662; 39 NCCA 353

Unobserved person. The driver of an automobile is not, broadly speaking, under a duty, before putting the vehicle in motion, to look around or under it in order to discover the possible presence of persons in a position of danger. A plaintiff seeking personal damages consequent upon a person's being run over is under an imperative necessity to show the location of the injured person just preceding the injury, or such a state of facts with reference thereto as will justify a finding that the driver (1) saw the person, or (2) ought, in the exercise of ordinary care, to have seen him.

Williams v Cohn, 201-1121; 206 NW 823

Caterpillar tractor started while man standing on track. Where a gasoline tank-wagon operator, engaged in filling the gas tank on a caterpillar tractor owned by a road construction company, and, while standing on the tractor's endless track, is thrown, by a sudden movement of the tractor, in front of another such tractor, company cannot say that first tractor operator may be negligent but second operator was not and so accident was unavoidable.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 283 NW 735

5025.04 When signal required.

Signals—when unnecessary. One may not complain of the absence of a signal of intention to turn at an intersection when he already has all the knowledge that a signal would have given him.

Ryan v Trenkle, 203-443; 212 NW 888; 30 NCCA 113; 31 NCCA 389; 35 NCCA 59; 3 NCCA(NS) 103

Knowledge by other driver. A charge that an operator of an automobile failed, prior to making a turn, to see that there was sufficient space in which to turn becomes inconsequential when the record reveals the fact that plaintiff and defendant were the only persons present at the intersection and that each was aware of the actions of the other.

Ryan v Trenkle, 203-443; 212 NW 888

Holding under prior statute—effect of signal. The operator of a motor vehicle who "raises and extends his hand" in effect warns the operator of a vehicle immediately following that there is to be a change in the condition then existing, that the signaling driver intends to stop, turn, or change the course of his vehicle, and said operator to the rear must note said warning and exercise ordinary care to safely meet said change in condition.

Harmon v Gilligan, 221-605; 266 NW 288

Signaling turns—evidence in re custom—effect. Testimony relative to the custom of automobile drivers of this state and surrounding territory, in signaling turns, reviewed, and held too inconsequential to justify a reversal, even tho the inadmissibility of such testimony be conceded.

Harmon v Gilligan, 221-605; 266 NW 288

Dual negligence in turning into side road. The operator of an automobile who turns into a side road (1) without first noting whether there is sufficient space in which to make the turn with reasonable safety to himself and to all other persons on the highway, and (2) without first signaling such proposed turn, is guilty of dual statutory negligence.

Miller v Lowe, 220-105; 261 NW 822

Turning into side road—failure to signal—effect. The driver of an automobile who turns abruptly into a side road without first seeing that there is sufficient space in which to make such turn in safety, and without making some proper signal to indicate his intention to make such turn is guilty of negligence—not prima facie evidence of negligence.

Kisling v Thierman, 214-911; 243 NW 552

Dillon v Diamond Co., 215-440; 245 NW 725

See Voiles v Hunt, 213-1234; 240 NW 703; 31 NCCA 59; 32 NCCA 458

Left turn—negligence of truck driver. A jury question on the issue of negligence is made by testimony from which the jury might have found that a truck driver made an abrupt left turn when he could not, from his seat, see to the rear because of the manner in which the truck was loaded, and did not otherwise look to the rear, and that, owing to the wide rack on the truck, his signal (if he made one) by extending his arm could not be seen from the rear.

McManus v Creamery Co., 219-860; 259 NW 921

5025.06 Stopping.

Holding under prior statute—effect of signal. The operator of a motor vehicle who "raises and extends his hand" in effect warns the operator of a vehicle immediately following that there is to be a change in the condition then existing—that the signaling driver intends to stop, turn, or change the course of his vehicle, and said operator to the rear must note said warning and exercise ordinary care to safely meet said change in condition.

Harmon v Gilligan, 221-605; 266 NW 288

"Sudden" stop — legitimate suggestion by counsel. When the word "suddenly" was never used by witnesses to describe how a truck slowed down and turned out to the left to avoid a pedestrian before it was hit by another truck proceeding from the rear, but the word was put into their mouths by legitimate suggestion of counsel, the weight and credibility to be given the word is for the jury.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

Failure to signal "stop" — nonproximate cause. Failure of the driver of a truck to give a visible signal of his intention to stop is not the proximate cause of a collision with an automobile approaching from the rear when the driver of the oncoming rear car did not see the truck until an instant before the collision, and, therefore, had not regulated or gauged his speed with the speed of the truck ahead.

Isaacs v Bruce, 218-759; 254 NW 57

Signaling passing cars—no duty to anticipate negligence. A motorist stalled on the highway has a right to assume that the driver of a passing automobile to whom he signals to stop will use ordinary care in so doing.

McDaniel v Stitsworth, 224-289; 275 NW 572

Disabled vehicle—daytime stopping on highway—signaling. Stopping a disabled motor truck in the daytime upon the right-hand side of a 26-foot graveled road, within 4 feet of a guard rail, where it was visible for 225 feet, and signaling to passing cars do not constitute negligence.

McDaniel v Stitsworth, 224-289; 275 NW 572

Failure to signal "stop"—unsupported submission of issue. The submission to the jury of the issue whether the driver of a truck failed to give a signal of his intention to stop cannot be justified on the naked statement of a witness who was riding with the driver that he did not "see or hear" the driver give any such signal.

Isaacs v Bruce, 218-759; 254 NW 57

Slowing down for pedestrian—jury question. When a truck slowed down and turned out to the left to avoid a pedestrian walking along the traveled portion of the highway, and was struck by another truck proceeding from the rear, the court properly submitted to the jury the question of contributory negligence.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

5025.07 Signals by hand and arm or signal device.

Holding under former statute—effect of signal. The operator of a motor vehicle who "raises and extends his hand" in effect warns the operator of a vehicle immediately following that there is to be a change in the condition then existing, that the signaling driver intends to stop, turn, or change the course of his vehicle, and said operator to the rear must note said warning and exercise ordinary care to safely meet said change in condition.

Harmon v Gilligan, 221-605; 266 NW 288

Left turn—signal hidden by truck box. A jury question on the issue of negligence is made by testimony from which the jury might have found that a truck driver made an abrupt left turn when he could not, from his seat, see to the rear because of the manner in which the truck was loaded, and did not otherwise look to the rear, and that, owing to the wide rack on the truck, his signal (if he made one) by extending his arm could not be seen from the rear.

McManus v Creamery Co., 219-860; 259 NW 921

RIGHT OF WAY

5026.01 Approaching or entering intersections.

Annotations in Vol. I. See under §5035

Statutes in pari materia—construction. Statutes in pari materia are to be construed together, and harmonized, if possible, and especially when such statutes appear in the same chapter. So held as to different statutes relating to the right of way of travelers at highway intersections.

Dikel v Mathers, 213-76; 238 NW 615

Cutting corners not permitted. This section does not authorize the vehicle having the right of way to "cut the corner" or otherwise unlawfully use the highway.

Lein v Morrell & Co., 207-1271; 224 NW 576; 32 NCCA 417

Pleading—sufficiency. A pleader is entitled to claim as many grounds of actionable negligence as flow from his pleaded statements of facts. Pleadings as to the facts attending a collision at an intersection of highways reviewed, and held to warrant the instructions given.

Sutton v Moreland, 214-337; 242 NW 75

Yielding right of way—what constitutes. The statutory duty of the operator of a vehicle to yield the right of way, at intersecting streets or highways, to the vehicle approaching from the right, is not performed by yielding one-half of said street or highway in favor of the vehicle which has the right of way.

Reason: The yielding must be at the point where the paths of the two vehicles intersect.

Newland v McClelland, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Boulevard intersections. The mere legal designation by a city or town of a street as a boulevard or arterial highway, and the erection of stop signs on intersecting streets (§4995, C., '31 [§5018.01, C., '39]), does not impliedly give to the traveler on the boulevard or arterial highway the right of way over traffic on intersecting streets. In the absence of a statute giving such right of way, the traveler on the intersecting highway is first controlled by the boulevard stop sign, and thereafter by the statute regulating right of way at intersections generally.

Dikel v Mathers, 213-76; 238 NW 615

Entering intersection at same time. The naked fact that an eastbound car and a northbound car approach an intersection at substantially the same time and in such manner that their paths will ultimately intersect does not necessarily mean that the latter car has the statutory right of way over the intersection. The statute only applies when, under all the facts and circumstances, danger of a collision may reasonably be apprehended.

Becvar v Batesole, 218-858; 256 NW 297

Crossing intersection before oncoming vehicle.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Failure to grant right of way—justification. The driver of a vehicle upon reaching a street intersection is under no legal duty to stop and wait or yield the right of way to another vehicle which is approaching his right-hand side when such approaching vehicle is so far away that, in view of all attending circumstances, and assuming legal and proper speed on the part of the approaching vehicle, no danger of collision reasonably appears.

Shuck v Keefe, 205-365; 218 NW 31; 30 NCCA 134; 33 NCCA 405; 4 NCCA(NS) 383, 397

Wolfson v Lumber Co., 210-244; 227 NW 608

Turning to right—preference at intersections—statutes inapplicable. Statutory requirements relative (1) to drivers turning "to the right" when meeting (§5020, C., '35 [§5024.02, C., '39]) and (2) to preference accorded drivers at highway intersections can, from the very nature of the transaction, have no application to an occurrence where the driver of a westbound car in making, or instantly after making, a left-hand turn into an intersecting road came into collision with an eastbound car traveling on or near the highway from which the left-hand turn was made.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Collision on icy intersection—facts sufficient to sustain verdict. In an action for damages to plaintiff's automobile, evidence held sufficient to warrant recovery from truck owner where it is shown that the collision occurred on a winter day at an icy intersection which plaintiff entered first.

Schenk v Moore, 226-1313; 286 NW 445

Failure to yield right of way—hidden crossroad. The driver of an automobile may not be said to be negligent per se for failure to yield the right of way to a car approaching him from the right on an unknown and absolutely hidden road.

Sexauer v Dunlap, 207-1018; 222 NW 420

Exercising right of way—other motorist's ignorance of stop sign. A motorist approaching an intersection from the west, knowing he has statutory right of way over traffic from the north, and knowing a stop sign is erected on the highway intersecting from the north, may not be charged with negligence because a motorist on his left, approaching from the north, has no knowledge of the intersection and therefore drives past the stop sign into such intersection, resulting in a collision.

King v Gold, 224-890; 276 NW 774; 4 NCCA (NS) 333

County trunk road intersections—applicability. In the absence of signs indicating a different right-of-way rule, erected by authority not of county engineer but of the board of supervisors, the law giving right of way to traffic from the right applies to an intersection of county trunk roads.

Smithson v Mommsen, 224-307; 276 NW 47

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874; 4 NCCA (NS) 318

Primary and trunk road intersection—preference in re right of way. A northbound motorist on a primary road cannot be deemed guilty of negligence proximately causing a collision with an eastbound car traveling on an intersecting county trunk road:

1. When each car as it approached the intersection was in plain view of the driver of the other car for several hundred feet,

2. When the driver on the trunk road ignored the "stop" sign on said road, and by his rate of speed justified the belief that he intended to turn to the right on entering the primary road,

3. When the motorist on the primary road was, prior to, and at the time of, entering the intersection, traveling on the right-hand side of the road and at the uniform rate of some 30 miles per hour, and

4. When the motorist on the primary road discovered for the first time when near the center of the intersection that the driver on the trunk road was driving straight through the intersection.

May v Hall, 221-609; 266 NW 297

Turning or changing course — conditions precedent. The operator of a motor vehicle cannot be deemed guilty of negligence in attempting to turn to the right and into an intersecting road if he believed and as a reasonably prudent person had a right to believe, in view of all the circumstances, that he could make said turn in safety.

Harmon v Gilligan, 221-605; 266 NW 288

Failure to look to left. The mere fact that the operator of an automobile in approaching on a rainy day, and at a moderate rate of speed, an intersection which afforded a clear view to all travelers, fails to look to his left for approaching vehicles, does not constitute negligence per se.

Roe v Kurtz, 203-906; 210 NW 550; 33 NCCA 409

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Obscured view of travel at intersection—failure to look or signal. The operator of an automobile in approaching and entering an intersecting country highway, when the view of travel approaching from his right is obstructed, is guilty of negligence (1) if he fails to signal his approach and entry, and also (2) if he fails to look for such travel at a point from which he can see such travel.

Smith v Lamb, 220-835; 263 NW 311; 4 NCCA (NS) 368

Negligence per se in approaching crossing. Negligence per se is revealed in the act of the driver of an automobile in approaching and entering an obscured public crossing (with which he was familiar) with knowledge that another vehicle was also rapidly and immediately approaching said intersection from his right, and failing either (1) to sound his horn or (2) to yield the right of way. (See Vol. I, §5028 et seq.)

Masonholder v O'Toole, 203-884; 210 NW 778; 31 NCCA 44

Street intersection—stopping in front of other vehicle. The driver of an automobile who drives into a known, much traveled street intersection and stops in the pathway of an oncoming car which has the right of way, and which he has ample opportunity to see and does see before entering the intersection, and who is not misled by any fact or circumstance attending the entire transaction, is guilty of negligence per se.

Hollingsworth v Hall, 214-285; 242 NW 39

Negligence per se—physical facts. Where the automobile of plaintiff's intestate collided with defendant's truck at a highway intersection and the physical facts showed that plaintiff's intestate had violated statutes in not keeping his car under control and not yielding the right of way to the truck, which had entered the intersection first, plaintiff's intestate was therefore guilty of negligence per se which contributed directly to his death, and which entitled the truck owner to a directed verdict.

Young v Clark, 226-1066; 285 NW 633

Failure to see car on side road. The operator of an automobile on a county trunk road (an arterial highway), having the right of way over traffic on an intersecting local county road, is not guilty of negligence per se in entering such an intersection with his car under apparent control and without seeing a car approaching from his right at a high and dangerous rate of speed.

Arends v DeBruyn, 217-529; 252 NW 249; 37 NCCA 78

Driving at reasonable speed—reduction unnecessary. A motorist driving at a reasonable and proper speed need not reduce his speed when traversing an open intersection, and a speed of 30 or 35 miles per hour on a clear day and on a good road is not, as a matter of law, such a speed as violates the assured clear distance statute.

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Other car not near to intersection. The court cannot say that the operator of a northbound car is guilty of contributory negligence per se in entering an intersection when a westbound car was three-quarters of a block distant.

Leckliter v City, 211-251; 233 NW 58; 38 NCCA 493

Right turn when followed by truck—contributory negligence—jury question. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether plaintiff, traveling on the right-hand side of the highway, with knowledge that she was being closely followed by a truck, was guilty of contributory negligence in changing her course by turning to the right and entering an intersecting highway—the collision occurring between said turning car and said truck.

Harmon v Gilligan, 221-605; 266 NW 288

Contributory negligence—passenger. Record reviewed relative to the facts and circumstances attending the unobscured and simultaneous approach, on a clear day, of northbound and of eastbound automobiles, to an intersection of arterial highways (where a collision occurred), and held insufficient to establish contributory negligence per se on the part of a passenger who was traveling in the northbound car and who was injured in said collision.

Rogers v Jefferson, 223-718; 272 NW 532; 277 NW 570

Contributory negligence per se—street intersection. The occupants of an eastbound automobile were guilty of contributory negligence per se under testimony that upon arriving at an intersecting north and south street, on a clear day, they looked to the south without obstruction for a distance of at least 225 feet, and saw no approaching car, and thereupon entered the intersection and moved across the same at ten miles per hour, but before they had fully cleared the intersection were hit by a northbound car traveling at the rate of 40 or 50 miles per hour.

Hewitt v Ogle, 219-46; 256 NW 755

Contributory negligence—looking to left, and right. The driver of an automobile, moving easterly at the rate of 20 miles per hour, who, when some 140 feet from an intersection, looks and sees no vehicle approaching from the north within a distance of 290 feet, is not guilty of negligence per se in not again looking to the north until after he had satisfied himself, as soon as possible, when near the intersection that no one was approaching from the south.

Little v Hyde, 216-1311; 247 NW 827; 33 NCCA 433

Failure to look to left on entering intersection—not contributory negligence as matter of law. Principle reaffirmed that vehicle driver's failure to look to the left when entering highway intersection does not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Contributory negligence when not determined as matter of law. In action for personal injuries and damage to automobile resulting from collision with defendant's automobile, plaintiff is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law for failure to maintain lookout, yield right of way, and make proper stop before entering arterial highway when evidence discloses that as plaintiff was about to cross an arterial highway he looked to the right and saw defendant's automobile at a distance of 150 feet and then proceeded across intersection at speed of between 5 and 10 miles per hour until defendant's automobile collided with right rear wheel of plaintiff's automobile—more than half of plaintiff's automobile being out of the intersection.

Cowles v Joelson, 226-1202; 286 NW 419

Jury question. Evidence held to present jury question on the issue of negligence at a street intersection.

Hartman v Red Ball, 211-64; 233 NW 23

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Wheeler v Peterson, 213-1239; 240 NW 683; 33 NCCA 451

Branch v Railway, 214-689; 243 NW 379

Negligence—jury question—pedestrians in business district. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question as to the negligence of a motorist in operating his car in the business district of a city (1) by maintaining a speed in excess of 15 miles per hour, or (2) by failing to maintain proper lookout, or (3) by increasing instead of reducing his speed on approaching an intersection and pedestrians walking across one side thereof, or by so doing without giving warning of his approach.

Huffman v King, 222-150; 268 NW 144

Intersection collision—complex facts—jury question. An intersection collision involving disputed facts, fractional seconds, speeds of 40 to 50 miles an hour, and failure to see an approaching automobile presents, not a matter of law for the courts, but a question for the jury to determine blame.

Eby v Sanford, 223-805; 273 NW 918

Negligence—jury question of fact and negligence. In a damage case resulting from a collision between a taxicab and an automobile at an intersection, when the record does not conclusively show negligence, that question and how the accident occurred is for the jury.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Speed—distance. In intersection collision, evidence of speeds and distances raises jury question and directed verdict was error.

Short v Powell, 228- ; 291 NW 406

Increasing speed at intersection—jury question. A motor vehicle operator who materially and intentionally increases the speed of his vehicle "when approaching and traversing a highway intersection", seemingly in violation of §5031, C., '35, is not necessarily guilty of negligence per se.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 272 NW 169

Assuming compliance with law when danger obvious—jury question. Where plaintiff, riding with his son, approaches an intersection of county trunk roads and on his left observes defendant also approaching the intersection, altho plaintiff may assume that defendant will obey the right of way law, he must not place himself in a position of obvious danger avoidable by the exercise of ordinary care, and whether or not he did so place himself is a jury question.

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Prior statute—failure to yield right of way—directing verdict improper. The right-of-way law imposes on a person approaching an intersection from the left the duty to yield the way, a violation of which, under ordinary circumstances, constitutes negligence, and in such a case the defendant is not entitled to a directed verdict.

Bletzer v Wilson, 224-884; 276 NW 836

Unsupported issues not submitted. In a damage action for an automobile collision occurring on a north and south paved road south of an intersection, it is not error to submit the case on the one negligence ground that defendant crossed the center line of the pavement when the record as to other negligence allegations shows a proper speed and lookout, control of the car, and that defendant driving north could not make a left turn before reaching the intersection.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

Intersection—what constitutes—instructions. Where a north and south highway splits into two curves near an east and west highway, and connects with the latter at two points some 900 feet apart, it is not erroneous for the court to instruct that the intersection embraces the entire distance of 900 feet (1) when the evidence tends to show that the authorized public authorities have treated said distance as the intersection, and (2) when the instruction is manifestly given for the sole purpose of guiding the jury in applying the statutory command that motorists shall reduce their speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing intersections of public highways.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

"Intersection" of highways—definition. In a damage action arising from a collision of motor vehicles at a highway intersection, where the question of negligence centered largely around the rights of the parties within the intersection, it was prejudicial error to instruct the jury that "intersection" is the area within the fence lines if such fence lines were extended across the road, when a statute defines "intersection" as being the area within the lateral boundary lines of highways which join.

Hupp v Doolittle, 226-814; 285 NW 247

Instructions considered as a whole. In an action for injuries sustained by driver of a motor vehicle in collision with an automobile approaching an intersection from the left, an instruction which in part states, "If a traveler comes to an intersection and finds no one approaching from the right upon the other highway within such distance and approaching at such a rate of speed as to reasonably indicate danger of a collision, he may proceed as a matter of right to use the intersection, unless from his observation he is apprised to the contrary", when considered with remainder of instruction, was not prejudicial. Instructions must be taken together, and especially must all parts of one instruction be considered as a whole.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Rights and duties at intersection—instructions. Instructions relative to the rights and duties of operators of automobiles at an intersection reviewed and held authorized under the pleadings.

Melsha v Dillon, 214-1324; 243 NW 295

Compelling jury to draw certain inference. Where plaintiff and defendant were, under conditions which rendered visibility poor, approaching the same intersection approximately at the same time, the court cannot properly instruct the jury that if plaintiff could see several hundred feet in the direction from which defendant was approaching, then the jury must conclude either (1) that plaintiff did not look for defendant as was his duty, or (2) that plaintiff did see the defendant.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Instruction similar to request—yielding right of way—justifiable assumption. The court may refuse a requested instruction and give the fair equivalent thereof in its own language. So held as to an instruction relative to the duty of the operator of an automobile to yield the right of way at an intersection.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Assumption of issuable fact. Instructions are properly refused when they assume that one of the parties to an accident had the superior right to enter a street intersection, such right being a matter of dispute.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Instructions—assumption of fact. Instruction relative to a collision between automobiles at a street intersection reviewed, and held not to assume that one of the cars first entered the intersection.

Becvar v Batesole, 218-858; 256 NW 297

Instruction—reducing speed at intersection.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Presentation of conflicting theories—non-assumption of fact issue. Instructions presenting the conflicting theories of the plaintiff and defendant as to a collision between motor vehicles reviewed, and held, when viewed as a whole, not to assume that the collision occurred in the center of an intersection, said point of collision being in issue.

Ballain v Brazelton, 221-806; 266 NW 522

Instruction—imposing undue care. An instruction which, after directing the jury that the operator of a vehicle on approaching intersecting highways must keep a lookout for approaching vehicles, imposes on the operator, if there be danger of a collision, the duty to "reduce his speed" or to "bring his vehicle to a stop", is erroneous.

Reason: Such instruction imposes on the operator a greater duty than to exercise reasonable or ordinary care.

5026.02 Turning left at intersection.

Obeying statute—presumption. Principle reaffirmed that a motor vehicle driver in attempting to make a left-hand turn into an intersecting road has a right to proceed on the assumption (unless he has knowledge to the contrary) that another driver, approaching from his right, will obey the law (§5031, C., '35) by reducing his speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing said intersection.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Justifiably attempted left turn. A motor vehicle driver cannot be deemed negligent in attempting a left-hand turn into an intersecting highway when, acting as a reasonably cautious and prudent person, he believes and has a right to believe that vehicles approaching from his right during the turn are at such distance that he can safely make the turn.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Turning to right—preference at intersections—statutes inapplicable. Statutory requirements relative (1) to drivers turning "to the right" when meeting (§5020, C., '35 [§5024.02, C., '39]), and (2) to preference accorded drivers at highway intersections (§5035, C., '35 [§5026.01, C., '39]), can, from the very nature of the transaction, have no application to an occurrence where the driver of a westbound car in making, or instantly after making, a left-hand turn into an intersecting road came into collision with an eastbound car traveling on or near the highway from which the left-hand turn was made.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Turn at intersection—increasing speed—negligence per se. The operator of a westbound automobile, who makes a left-hand turn at an intersecting street, and thereupon increases his speed, in order to escape a collision with an eastbound car which he knows is but some forty feet west of the intersection and approaching it at a speed twice his own speed, is guilty of negligence per se.

Parrack v McGaffey, 217-368; 251 NW 871

Contributory negligence per se. Record reviewed and held to establish contributory negligence on the part of a motorist in driving into a highway intersection and turning to the left (1) without first observing whether he had sufficient space in which safely to make said turn, (2) without first reducing his speed to a reasonable rate, a rate which would permit a stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) without first driving to the right of, and beyond the center of, said intersection before turning to the left.

Wimer v Bottling Co., 221-120; 264 NW 262

Left-hand turn—conflicting testimony. Evidence reviewed in detail in an action involving a left-hand turn, during the nighttime, of a westbound car, and its collision with an eastbound car near the point of intersection, and held, because of the conflict in testimony, to present a jury question on the issue whether plaintiff had established his freedom from contributory negligence.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Holding under former statute. In making a left-hand turn into an intersecting road, negligence on the part of a westbound driver, (1) in failing to drive to the right and beyond the center before turning, or (2) in failing to note whether he could make the turn in safety, is not the proximate cause of injuries received by him by being hit by an eastbound car after he had completed the turn and was wholly on the intersecting road.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Instructions—yielding half of traveled way—beaten path (?) or entire roadway (?). When the plaintiff's truck turned left at a blind corner, keeping to the right of the beaten path, but not to the right side of the graveled highway, and collided with the defendant's car which was approaching the corner on the right side of the road, it was not improper to instruct the jury that a car must yield half the traveled or graveled part of the road when meeting another car, and, that for the plaintiff to recover, it must be found that the truck was hit while on the right side of the road; or, for a recovery to be had by the defendant on a counterclaim, that the plaintiff was negligent in not yielding half the road.

Kiesau v Vangen, 226-824; 285 NW 181

Unsupported issues not submitted. In a damage action for an automobile collision occurring on a north and south paved road south of an intersection, it is not error to submit the case on the one negligence ground that defendant crossed the center line of the pavement when the record as to other negligence allegations shows a proper speed and lookout, control of the car, and that defendant driving north could not make a left turn before reaching the intersection.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

5026.03 Entering through highways.

Discussion. See 25 ILR 334—Failure to stop at arterial highway when no stop sign

Right of way—county trunk roads. The right-of-way law (§5035, C., '35) applies to an intersection of county trunk roads unless traffic is regulated by signs erected by the supervisors under authority of law indicating a different rule.

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874; 4 NCCA(NS) 318

Right of way—county engineer—signs. In the absence of signs, indicating a different right-of-way rule, erected by authority not of county engineer but of the board of supervisors, the law giving right of way to traffic from the right applies to an intersection of county trunk roads.

Smithson v Mommsen, 224-307; 276 NW 47

Intersecting county roads—negligence per se. The operator of an automobile on a county trunk road (an arterial highway), having the right of way over traffic on an intersecting local county road, is not guilty of negligence per se in entering such an intersection with his car under apparent control and without seeing a car approaching from his right at a high and dangerous rate of speed.

Arends v DeBruyn, 217-529; 252 NW 249; 37 NCCA 78

Primary roads—right of way. Inasmuch as vehicles traveling on a primary road have right of way at intersections with nonprimary roads, the operator of a vehicle on a nonprimary road is guilty of negligence per se when he attempts to cross an intersection with a primary road, at a speed of 10 miles per hour, when he knows or ought to know that another vehicle on the primary road is, at a distance of 80 or 90 feet, approaching the intersection at a speed very greatly in excess of 10 miles per hour.

Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689; 37 NCCA 67

County trunk road without stop signs.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Arterial highway—negligence per se. The operator of an automobile on a county trunk arterial highway (on which no "stop" or "slow" signs had been erected at points intersected by county local roads) is guilty of negligence per se in knowingly approaching an obscured intersection without either (1) slacking his speed (of some 25 or 30 miles per hour) as required by §5031, C., '31 [§5023.04, C., '39], or (2) giving some warning signal of his approach as required by §5043, C., '31 [§5031.03, C., '39]. (But see Dikel v Mathers, 213 Iowa 76.)

Lang v Kollasch, 218-391; 255 NW 493; 37 NCCA 74

Contributory negligence — jury question. Evidence reviewed, in detail, relative to the stoppage of an automobile before entering a curving boulevard (on which traffic had the right of way) and held to present a jury question on the issue of the contributory negligence of the operator, and not a case of contributory negligence per se.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

Contributory negligence when not determined as matter of law. In action for personal injuries and damage to automobile resulting from collision with defendant's automobile, plaintiff is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law for failure to maintain lookout, yield right of way, and make proper stop before entering arterial highway, when evidence discloses that as plaintiff was about to cross an arterial highway, he looked to the right and saw defendant's automobile at a distance of 150 feet and then proceeded across intersection at speed of between 5 and 10 miles per hour until defendant's automobile collided with right rear wheel of plaintiff's automobile—more than half of plaintiff's automobile being out of the intersection.

Cowles v Joelson, 226-1202; 286 NW 419

5026.04 Entering stop intersection.

Disregarding "stop" sign — elements of offense. Defendant in a criminal prosecution for failure to stop his automobile at intersecting roads in obedience to a duly and lawfully erected "stop" sign may be properly convicted tho there is no evidence of careless driving, intent, willfulness, or wantonness except such as may be deduced from the failure to stop, the defendant at the time acting under no compulsion.

State v Wilson, 222-572; 269 NW 205

Highway signs—authorized erection. It may be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the ordinary "stop" and "slow" signs, as they are found upon the public highways, were erected by and under authority of the proper public officials.

Rogers v Jefferson, 223-718; 272 NW 532; 277 NW 570; 4 NCCA(NS) 318

Ignoring statutory "stop" sign—effect. Failure of the operator of an automobile on a highway outside a city or town to comply, before entering an arterial highway, with a duly erected, statutory "stop" sign, constitutes negligence.

Willemsen v Reedy, 215-193; 244 NW 691

Hogan v Nesbit, 216-75; 246 NW 270

Right of way on primary roads. A traveler on a nonprimary road in approaching an intersection with a primary road does not fulfill his full duty of care by stopping at the statutory "stop" sign erected outside the primary road. He must not only so stop and observe the travel on the primary road, but must continue so to observe until he reaches the intersection and until he has passed the point where danger may reasonably be apprehended.

Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689; 37 NCCA 67

Obedying law—right to assume. The operator of a motor vehicle on an arterial (primary) highway in approaching an intersection with a side road has the legal right to act on the assumption that a driver who is immediately approaching on a side road, will stop at and before entering the intersection in obedience to a statutory "stop" sign there erected.

Hogan v Nesbit, 216-75; 246 NW 270

Exercising right of way—other motorist's ignorance of stop sign. A motorist approaching an intersection from the west, knowing he has statutory right of way over traffic from the north and knowing a stop sign is erected on the highway intersecting from the north, may not be charged with negligence because a motorist on his left, approaching from the north, has no knowledge of the intersection and therefore drives past the stop sign into such intersection, resulting in a collision.

King v Gold, 224-890; 276 NW 774; 4 NCCA (NS) 333

Primary and trunk road intersection—preference in re right of way. A northbound motorist on a primary road cannot be deemed guilty of negligence proximately causing a collision with an eastbound car traveling on an intersecting county trunk road:

1. When each car as it approached the intersection was in plain view of the driver of the other car for several hundred feet,

2. When the driver on the trunk road ignored the "stop" sign on said road, and, by his rate of speed, justified the belief that he intended to turn to the right on entering the primary road,

3. When the motorist on the primary road was, prior to, and at the time of, entering the intersection, traveling on the right-hand side of the road and at the uniform rate of some 30 miles per hour, and

4. When the motorist on the primary road discovered for the first time when near the center of the intersection that the driver on the trunk road was driving straight through the intersection.

May v Hall, 221-609; 266 NW 297

Parking—view of stop sign obstructed—others' imputed knowledge of stop sign no defense. Where defendant's truck was parked so as to obscure the view of a stop sign at an intersection, and where motorist proceeded into intersection without stopping and collided with an automobile on intersecting street, defendant will not be exempt from liability on ground that knowledge would be imputed to motorist that intersecting street was an arterial highway, because of statute as to posting signs.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Recklessness. The act of a motorist in the nighttime in driving into a highway intersection without stopping in obedience to a statutory "stop" sign, when shortly theretofore he had seen an automobile approaching said intersection on the intersecting highway, manifestly does not necessarily constitute "recklessness" within the meaning of the guest statute (§5026-b1, C., '35 [§5037.10, C., '39]). Evidence exhaustively analyzed (in a light as favorable to plaintiff as is reasonably possible), and held per se insufficient to support an allegation of recklessness in the operation of an automobile.

Hansen v Dall, 220-817; 263 NW 530

5026.05 Entering from private driveway.

Failure to yield right of way—hidden road. The driver of an automobile may not be said to be negligent per se for failure to yield the right of way to a car approaching him from the right on an unknown and absolutely hidden road.

Sexauer v Dunlap, 207-1018; 222 NW 420

Contributory negligence—jury question. Evidence relative to the act of driving from a private driveway into a public highway in front of an approaching car reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Tinley v Implement Co., 216-458; 249 NW 390

View unobstructed. The statute which requires the driver of a vehicle on a private driveway to stop before entering a public highway does not apply when the view of the driver in the direction of vehicles approaching on the public highway is unobstructed for a distance of a thousand feet.

Tinley v Implement Co., 216-458; 249 NW 390

Backing out of private driveway. Tho the driver of a motor vehicle in driving or backing from a private driveway into a public highway where the view along the public highway is not obstructed, is not by statute required to stop before entering the public highway, yet he is required as a matter of ordinary care and prudence to look for vehicles approaching on the public highway and to act with ordinary care in view of what he sees or should see.

Carstensen v Thomsen, 215-427; 245 NW 734

Emerging from private drive—failure to stop. The issue of negligence on the part of the operator of an automobile in driving out of a private driveway and upon a main traveled road without stopping and looking for approaching vehicles is properly submitted to the jury on supporting testimony.

Olson v Shafer, 207-1001; 221 NW 949; 32 NCCA 252

Tinley v Implement Co., 216-458; 249 NW 390

View obstructed—duty to stop. Driving from a private driveway into a public highway without stopping immediately before entering said highway constitutes negligence when, from the private driveway, the view of nearby and approaching travel on the public highway is obstructed.

Wood v Branning, 215-59; 244 NW 658

Hunter v Irwin, 220-693; 263 NW 34

Physical facts—negligence. Where a car approaching a public highway from a private driveway, traveling in neutral at only 3 miles per hour, and while still 12 feet from such highway, driver saw defendant's truck approaching at a rapid rate, the fact that car was out in the highway when collision occurred would either show that brakes were inadequate or that driver was negligent in the operation of car.

Hermon v Egy, (NOR); 207 NW 116; 31 NCCA 409

Backing vehicle out of private driveway. The driver of a truck who is nonnegligently traveling on the north side of a straight and level public highway in plain and unobstructed view of an automobile standing outside the public highway and in a private driveway on the same side of the highway, has the right to assume that the automobile will not without warning be suddenly backed out of the private driveway and immediately in front of his oncoming truck, and if said automobile is so backed out and in his immediate front, he cannot be deemed negligent because, in such sudden emergency, he turns to his left and unintentionally strikes a person whom he theretofore knew was on the south side of the highway.

Carstensen v Thomsen, 215-427; 245 NW 734; 32 NCCA 300; 34 NCCA 326; 39 NCCA 369

Knowledge of party's predicament. The fact that a defendant drove his automobile from his private driveway upon the public highway with knowledge that plaintiff was rapidly approaching, and had to some extent lost control of his car because of the icy condition of the highway, may have a bearing on the issue of defendant's due care.

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346; 32 NCCA 258; 35 NCCA 111

Turning or changing course. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a motorist was negligent in suddenly turning from the right side to the left side of a paved rural highway (in order to enter a private driveway on the latter side of said road), and whether, if negligent, said negligence was the proximate cause of a collision with another vehicle which he knew he was about to meet.

McKinnon v Guthrie, 221-400; 265 NW 620

PEDESTRIANS' RIGHTS AND DUTIES

5027.01 Pedestrians subject to signals.

"Stop and go" signals—change after entering intersection—nonnegligence per se. A pedestrian who, in obedience to a municipally operated "go" signal, starts across the street on the pathway provided for pedestrians and suddenly discovers that said "go" signal has changed to "stop", is not guilty of negligence per se in failing to look for, see, and avoid a vehicle which, under said change in signals, passes entirely across the intersection and hits and injures said pedestrian within less than two seconds after said change in signals occurs; especially is this true (1) when said pedestrian has, by ordinance, the right of way over said vehicle because he was first properly to enter said intersection, and (2) when said pedestrian, at the very instant of said change in signals, was immediately approaching other stationary vehicles known to be awaiting release from a "stop" signal.

Highway traversing city street—highway law applicable. Where a statute requires pedestrians to walk on left side of a highway, the word "highway" is applicable to a through highway traversing a street within a city, especially in view of other sections in the motor vehicle act concerning highways.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825; 5 NCCA (NS) 724

Minor walking on wrong side of highway—contributory negligence as matter of law. In a law action for damages where it is shown that plaintiff's decedent, a 15-year-old boy, was violating statute requiring pedestrians to walk on the left side of a highway by walking along right side, about 4 or 5 feet from west side of highway, and failing to make observations to oncoming traffic from the rear, while walking after dark on a street traversed by a through highway, held, he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825

Negligence per se—walking in center of highway. A pedestrian who, with normal sight and hearing, travels on a clear night in a space which is substantially two feet wide and which is marked by parallel black lines drawn along the center of a straight, 18-foot, paved highway, with an unobstructed view both to his front and rear of more than a quarter of a mile, with full opportunity to walk on the smooth, 6-foot-wide dirt shoulders bordering the pavement, is guilty of negligence per se.

Lindloff v Duecker, 217-326; 251 NW 698; 34 NCCA 234; 35 NCCA 819; 39 NCCA 308

Pedestrian—duty to leave highway when danger impending—contributory negligence. A pedestrian wearing dark clothes and walking at night along a heavily traveled arterial street should, in the exercise of reasonable care and prudence, ascertain his immediate danger when two automobiles—one from in front and one from behind—are approaching at the same time, and when he fails to remove himself as speedily as possible from the place of danger, he is contributorily negligent.

Armbruster v Gray, 225-1226; 282 NW 342

Ordinary care—undue limitation on jury. Reversible error results from instructing the jury that a pedestrian on the highway need not, in the exercise of due and ordinary care, continuously look backward and forward.

(The injured party, on a dark night, had ascended a hill and passed the crest thereof and was, when injured by a car approaching from his rear, walking down the sharply descending slope, either near the middle line of the 18-foot pavement or near the right-hand side thereof. The car which did the injury met and passed another car momentarily before the pedestrian was hit.)

Taylor v Wistey, 218-785; 254 NW 50

Vehicles approaching from rear—pedestrian's duty. An instruction relative to the duty of a pedestrian traveling in the public highway to keep a reasonable lookout for vehicles approaching from the rear as well as from the front need not necessarily be modified on request to the effect that such duty does not require him to turn about "constantly and repeatedly" to observe the possible approach of vehicles from his rear.

Kessel v Hunt, 215-117; 244 NW 714; 34 NCCA 247

Failure to keep lookout. The foreman of a paving outfit is guilty of negligence per se in walking along the unpaved portion of a rough road for a distance of some 200 feet without making any observations to his rear for trucks which he knew were being backed along said road and in his immediate direction at the rate of one truck each 90 seconds.

Hedberg v Lester, 222-1025; 270 NW 447

5027.03 Pedestrians' right of way.

Negligence—dual view of evidence. A jury question on the issue of negligence arises (1) when the evidence is conflicting as to what the injured party did or did not do, and (2) when there may be a fair difference of opinion whether that which the injured party admittedly did do or omitted to do constituted negligence. Evidence as to what an elderly lady did in crossing a public street after nightfall presented a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Robertson v Carlgren, 211-963; 234 NW 824

Contributory negligence as jury or law question. The court has no right to rule that a pedestrian—injured while attempting to cross a public street at the place provided for such crossing and by coming into collision with a moving vehicle—is guilty of negligence contributing to his own injury unless the facts and circumstances, after viewing them in the light most favorable to the pedestrian, are such that all reasonable minds must arrive at the same conclusion, to wit, negligence upon the part of the pedestrian. Evidence held to present jury, not law, question.

Huffman v King, 222-150; 268 NW 144

Attempting to dodge car. The act of a pedestrian, while crossing a street, in attempting to dodge an oncoming car, may constitute the proximate cause of the injuries suffered by him. So held where the pedestrian evidently stepped or turned back directly in front of said car.

Kortright v Strater, 222-603; 269 NW 745

Duty to pedestrians at intersection. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question as to the negligence of a motorist in operating his car in the business district of a city (1) by maintaining a speed in excess of 15 miles per hour, or (2) by failing to maintain proper lookout, or (3) by increasing instead of reducing his speed on approaching an intersection and pedestrians walking across one side thereof, or by so doing without giving warning of his approach.

Huffman v King, 222-150; 268 NW 144

Instructions—unsupported assumption of fact. A requested instruction which erroneously assumes that there is a marked place on a street pavement for the crossing by pedestrians is properly refused.

Minks v Stenberg, 217-119; 250 NW 883

5027.04 Crossing at other than crosswalk.

Negligence per se in crossing street. A pedestrian who attempts to cross a street in the middle of a block without looking for a plainly approaching vehicle or who sees said oncoming vehicle when it is only a few feet distant and attempts to pass in front of it is guilty of contributory negligence per se.

Whitman v Pilmer, 214-461; 239 NW 686; 35 NCCA 693

Orth v Gregg, 217-516; 250 NW 113; 35 NCCA 612

Crossing traffic-congested street—negligence per se. A pedestrian who, while crossing a traffic-congested street at a place other than the place specifically provided for such crossing, fails to look for approaching vehicles, or voluntarily steps in front of an immediately approaching vehicle which he does see, is guilty of negligence per se.

Spaulding v Miller, 216-948; 249 NW 642; 35 NCCA 676

Crossing highway without looking. An adult person, after alighting from an automobile which had been stopped substantially astraddle the north edge of an 18-foot pavement on a heavily traveled country highway, is guilty of negligence per se in attempting to walk to the south and across said pavement without making any observations to his unobstructed right for eastbound vehicles.

Zuck v Larson, 222-842; 270 NW 384

Diagonal crossing of street—contributory negligence. It cannot be said that a pedestrian is guilty of negligence per se when he looks both at the street curb and in the middle of the street for approaching vehicles and sees a vehicle at a distance of some 150 feet; and this is true tho he was proceeding diagonally across a street intersection of peculiar shape, in order to board an approaching streetcar, there being, apparently, nothing in the movements of the approaching vehicle to fairly suggest danger.

Minks v Stenberg, 217-119; 250 NW 883; 35 NCCA 589

Instructions—right of way—precautions—crosswalks defined—custom.

Scott v McKelvey, 228- ; 290 NW 729

5027.05 Duty of driver.

I PEDESTRIANS GENERALLY

Opinion evidence—allowable conclusion. When the actions and conduct of a witness at a certain time are material and there is no other adequate way of placing the matter before the jury, then the witness should be permitted to describe what he saw, even tho his description consists of a mixed statement of fact and conclusion. So held as to the statement "It seemed as tho the man jumped right in front of the car, and we hit him."

Wieneke v Steinke, 211-477; 233 NW 535

Evidence—harmless error. Evidence concerning a path leading from a sidewalk to a curb line, and traveled by an injured person just before he stepped into a street and was injured by an automobile, is quite harmless when the driver of the automobile admittedly saw the injured party at all times while he was crossing the street.

O'Hara v Chaplin, 211-404; 233 NW 516

Evidence—most favorable view—plaintiff's contention rebutted. Even when the most favorable view of the evidence is taken, plaintiff's contention, that he was struck by defendant's automobile at a street intersection after the automobile had approached the intersection from a side street, was not established when the testimony of the witness on whom the plaintiff relied was inherently inconsistent and was disproved by skid marks and other testimony showing that the automobile had not been on the side street.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

"No eyewitness" rule—nonapplicability. In a pedestrian-automobile accident, where a motorist testifies that he saw deceased just prior to striking and killing him, the rule that in the absence of eyewitnesses the deceased is presumed to have exercised due care has no application.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Res ipsa loquitur—negligence inferred by jury from circumstances. Pleading specific acts of negligence precludes recovery under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and as no inference of negligence arises from the mere fact of a collision, a pedestrian's action to recover damages from a motorist may not be submitted to the jury on the theory that the jury might reasonably infer negligence from the circumstances. A case may be submitted on this theory only when there may be drawn from the circumstances no other reasonable conclusion than the existence of negligence.

Armbruster v Gray, 225-1226; 282 NW 342

Negligence—emergency as legal excuse. Evidence that a pedestrian walking along a shoulder of a highway suddenly stepped in front of an automobile, where he was struck, raises a jury question as to such emergency and as to legal excuse for failing to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Assured clear distance—legal excuse—jury question. Where a pedestrian crossing the street is struck by a motorist after having first been seen 180 feet away on the opposite curb and could have been seen by the motorist at all times prior to the collision, motorist's showing that pedestrian "popped up" ahead of him as legal excuse for not stopping within the assured clear distance is evidence raising a jury question.

Swan v Dailey-Luce Co., 225-89; 277 NW 580; 281 NW 504

Stopping within assured clear distance—scope of duty. Principle reaffirmed that the duty so to operate an automobile as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead does not embrace a duty to so operate as to be able to stop immediately should a person unexpectedly and without warning step into the path of the car.

I PEDESTRIANS GENERALLY—continued

Failure to sound horn—nonproximate cause. Failure to sound the horn on an automobile is quite inconsequential when there was no occasion to give such signal until the injured party, suddenly and without previous warning, ran into the immediate pathway of the car at a time when it was impossible to stop the car and avoid the accident.

Howk v Anderson, 218-358; 253 NW 32; 35 NCCA 1

Attempting to dodge car. The act of a pedestrian, while crossing a street, in attempting to dodge an oncoming car, may constitute the proximate cause of the injuries suffered by him. So held where the pedestrian evidently stepped or turned back directly in front of said car.

Kortright v Strater, 222-603; 269 NW 745

Last clear chance. The physical facts and circumstances attending an accident may present a jury question on the issue whether defendant actually discovered plaintiff's negligently assumed position of peril in such time that defendant, by the exercise of reasonable care, might have avoided said accident.

Groves v Webster City, 222-849; 270 NW 329

"Last clear chance"—erroneous submission. The submission to the jury of the issue of "last clear chance" is improper on undisputed testimony that, while an automobile was moving along a traffic-congested street at a speed of from five to ten miles an hour, a pedestrian negligently placed himself in a position of danger in front of said car, but that the operator of said car did not discover said position of danger until his car was only seven feet from said pedestrian, and that thereupon said operator applied or attempted to apply his brakes but not in time to avoid injuring said pedestrian.

Spaulding v Miller, 220-1107; 264 NW 8

Last clear chance doctrine. A plaintiff, who stepped directly into the path of the defendant's automobile from a position of safety on a curb, could not rely on the last clear chance doctrine when there was no evidence that the defendant could have avoided the accident by exercising reasonable care after discovering that the plaintiff was in a perilous position.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Speed as nonproximate cause. A rate of speed which is not negligence per se cannot be deemed the proximate cause of an accident when the act of the injured party in stepping into the pathway of the car was so sudden and unexpected as to render impossible the stopping of the car.

Howk v Anderson, 218-358; 253 NW 32; 35 NCCA 1

Stepping into path of automobile—rate of speed immaterial. The negligence of a pedestrian, who left a position of safety on a curb and walked directly into the path of an automobile which struck him, was the proximate cause of the accident, and under the circumstances the rate of speed of the car was not material.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Speed—when nonproximate cause. The operation of an automobile, even at an excessive speed, alongside a moving streetcar and in the direction in which the streetcar is moving, is not the proximate cause of an injury to a pedestrian who suddenly darts across the streetcar track ahead of the moving streetcar, and into the line of automobile travel and is hit by the automobile.

Pettijohn v Weede, 209-902; 227 NW 824; 35 NCCA 5

Failure to stop for streetcar—proximate cause. Evidence reviewed, and held that the act of a motorist in turning to the left on meeting a streetcar, instead of stopping, was the proximate cause of an injury to a pedestrian in the street, rather than the act of the streetcar operator in allowing the streetcar to turn to the left on a curve before stopping.

Moss v Railway, 217-354; 251 NW 627

Truck thrown against plaintiff. Conflicting testimony as to the speed of the defendant's truck while following pick-up truck on an icy street, and as to the distance between the trucks when the one in front skidded and turned around, presented a jury question as to whether the driver of the defendant's truck was guilty of negligence in colliding with the pick-up truck, forcing it over a curb where it struck the plaintiff, and whether such negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Collision—trucker struck while retrieving goods scattered on highway. A defendant-motorist's negligence in striking a truck stopped on the highway is not the proximate cause of a later injury to the trucker by another motorist, who struck him while he was attempting to remove his merchandise spilled on the highway. The latter intervening cause was the proximate cause of his injury.

McClure v Richard, 225-949; 282 NW 312

Aiding stalled motorist—automobile moving backward—no duty to anticipate negligence. A bystander, offering to help extricate a motorist's car from an icy parking place, who steps behind the car, other people being on each side, in order to push, and who calls to the motorist, "Let's go ahead," cannot as a matter of law be held to anticipate that the automobile was in reverse gear and would move backward instead of forward, causing him injury.

Huston v Lindsay, 224-281; 276 NW 201

Acts constituting negligence—backing up truck—losing control. It cannot be held as a matter of law that plaintiff failed to establish any negligence on the part of the defendant when the record shows that truck driver, after backing an intended 2 or 3 feet and almost stopping, suddenly moved back an additional 12 feet, crushing plaintiff against a pile of bricks

Johnston v Johnson, 225-77; 279 NW 139; 118 ALR 233

Person in comparative safety—no duty to anticipate negligence. Plaintiff, standing between a truck and a pile of brick 15 feet away, who, after requesting the truck driver to back up 2 or 3 feet, is crushed against the pile of brick by the truck suddenly backing over the entire distance, is not contributorily negligent as a matter of law, but question is for jury as to plaintiff's right to rely on presumption that truck driver would use due care in backing up and would not suddenly back over the entire distance.

Johnston v Johnson, 225-77; 279 NW 139; 118 ALR 233

Negligence—assumption that law will be obeyed. Principle reaffirmed that just what acts of care must be taken by a pedestrian on the highway in order to save himself from the imputation of negligence may be very materially influenced and controlled by his right to assume that others using the highway will obey the law of the road.

Orth v Gregg, 217-516; 250 NW 113; 35 NCCA 612

Driving outside traveled roadway. An allegation that a motorist, without warning, ran his car outside the traveled part of the highway, and injured plaintiff, constitutes an adequate charge of negligence, and must, if supported by evidence, be submitted to the jury.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Lack of precaution for safety—plaintiff's own proof. A person riding with a trucker and struck by an automobile while helping put on tire chains after dark, having placed himself in a perilous position on the traffic side of the truck stopped astraddle the center of the highway, fails to prove his freedom from contributory negligence where there is no evidence that he kept any lookout or took any precautions for his own safety.

Denny v Augustine, 223-1202; 275 NW 117

Contributory negligence—stalled motorist—poor visibility in snowstorm. A plaintiff motorist who during a snowstorm becomes stalled in a snowdrift is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence because, in attempting to extricate his car, he must at times place himself with his back to oncoming traffic alongside his vehicle, the meanwhile making occasional attempts to observe traffic in that direction, especially when before the vehicle struck him he observed it when it was about 50 feet away, such distance under the undisputed evidence being the extreme extent of visibility.

Youngman v Sloan, 225-558; 281 NW 130

Standing on shoulder—standard of care.

Janes v Roach, 228- ; 290 NW 87

Failure to signal approach to stationary truck. The operator of an automobile, driving in broad daylight on the proper side of a country highway where the view is wholly unobstructed, is not guilty of negligence in failing to signal his approach to an open, stationary milk truck with a person standing beside it (which is also on the proper side of the highway) when said operator has no reason to suppose or apprehend that someone may be in or about said truck and may suddenly emerge therefrom and into the pathway of said oncoming automobile.

Crutchley v Bruce, 214-731; 240 NW 238; 51 NCCA 376

Person standing behind tail light of car.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Standing in path of truck. One who is standing substantially on the very edge of a passageway through which an approaching truck on a downgrade had to pass and knows that the truck operator is having difficulty to control the truck owing to the slippery condition of the road and does not step out of the way tho he has ample opportunity to do so, is guilty of contributory negligence.

Norris v Lough, 217-362; 251 NW 646

Walking in middle of highway. A pedestrian who, with normal sight and hearing, travels, on a clear night, in a space which is substantially two feet wide and which is marked by parallel black lines drawn along the center of a straight, 18-foot, paved highway, with an unobstructed view both to his front and rear of more than a quarter of a mile, with full opportunity to walk on the smooth, six-foot-wide dirt shoulders bordering the pavement, is guilty of negligence per se.

Lindloff v Duecker, 217-326; 251 NW 698; 34 NCCA 234

Pedestrian on highway. The rule that a pedestrian and an automobile have equal rights upon the highway does not authorize a highway employee to stand on the edge of the pavement watching an oncoming automobile travel a distance of 200 feet on the same side of the pavement, knowing the pavement is in an icy condition, knowing that the driver of the oncoming automobile is having difficulty controlling it, from which facts it is, or to a reasonably prudent man it would have been, apparent that he was occupying a position of danger, and consequently, in remaining there, he was guilty of contributory negligence. De-defendant's motion for a directed verdict was properly sustained.

Cumming v Dosland, 227-470; 288 NW 647

Pedestrian crossing street — contributory negligence—jury question. A pedestrian crossing a street need not anticipate another's negligence, nor keep a constant lookout in both directions at the same time, nor wait for all approaching vehicles from both directions, and, moreover, he is not as a matter of law contributorily negligent merely in running while crossing a street altho not seeing an approaching motor vehicle 180 feet away; but in any case whether he could rightly assume he could cross in safety is a question of contributory negligence for the jury.

Swan v Dailey-Luce Co., 225-89; 277 NW 580; 281 NW 504

Contributory negligence—failure to look for cars in street. A pedestrian who, while crossing a public street, stops because of a car approaching from his immediate right, is guilty of contributory negligence when, observing that said car had also stopped, he at once moves forward without looking to his left or right, and is instantly hit by another car coming from said latter direction.

Stawsky v Wheaton, 220-981; 263 NW 313

Stepping into street in path of automobile. Plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in stepping from a curb into the path of an oncoming automobile which was in plain sight where it would have been seen by the plaintiff if he had looked.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Duty to pedestrians at intersection. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question as to the negligence of a motorist in operating his car in the business district of a city (1) by maintaining a speed in excess of 15 miles per hour, or (2) by failing to maintain proper lookout, or (3) by increasing instead of reducing his speed on approaching an intersection and pedestrians walking across one side thereof, or by so doing without giving warning of his approach.

Huffman v King, 222-150; 268 NW 144

Jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issues whether the operator of an automobile was guilty of negligence in failing (1) to maintain a proper lookout for pedestrians, (2) to warn pedestrians, and (3) to keep his car under control.

Sexauer v Dunlap, 207-1018; 222 NW 420
 Altflisch v Wessel, 208-361; 225 NW 862; 32 NCCA 482; 34 NCCA 150

Robertson v Carlgren, 211-963; 234 NW 824
 Lprimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220; 1 NCCA (NS) 57

Proper lookout for pedestrian—jury question. After motorist had seen pedestrian 180 feet away standing on the curb, and when pedestrian had almost reached the opposite side of the street before being struck by the motor vehicle, which meanwhile had traveled the 180 feet, during which time pedestrian was plainly visible, and when motorist claims he did not again see pedestrian until just before striking him, the evidence raises a jury question as to whether motorist kept proper lookout, and directing a verdict is improper.

Swan v Dailey-Luce Co., 225-89; 277 NW 580; 281 NW 504

Knowledge dispensing with signals. Whether the operator of an automobile failed to give proper signal on approaching a crossing should not be submitted to the jury when admittedly the complaining pedestrian had full and explicit knowledge of the immediate presence and approach of said car.

Wilkinson v Lbr. Co., 203-476; 212 NW 682; 31 NCCA 345

Irregular crossing of street — negligence. Record held to present a jury question on the issue whether a pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence in crossing a street in the middle of a block; likewise whether the driver of an automobile was guilty of proximate negligence in injuring said pedestrian.

Orth v Gregg, 217-516; 250 NW 113; 35 NCCA 612

Right of way instruction—crossing highway.

Scott v McKelvey, 228- ; 290 NW 729

Driving outside traveled roadway. An allegation that a motorist, without warning, ran his car outside the traveled part of the highway and injured plaintiff, constitutes an adequate charge of negligence, and must, of course, if supported by evidence, be submitted to the jury.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Hitting pedestrian on shoulder of highway. Direct evidence of negligence which is insufficient, in and of itself, to generate a jury question may be sufficient when aided by such fair and reasonable inferences as are legally permissible for the jury to draw from such direct evidence and the attending circumstances. So held on the issue whether the driver of an automobile, in pursuance of a concerted plan between himself and others riding with him, negligently drove the car so close to a woman walking on the shoulder of the pavement that when the door of the car was opened she was hit thereby.

Tissue v Durin, 216-709; 246 NW 806; 2 NCCA (NS) 447

Withdrawal of issue supported by evidence —pedestrian off pavement. Under a record in a motor vehicle pedestrian accident case showing that the jury could have found from the evidence that decedent was more off the pavement than on it, it is error to withdraw from the jury plaintiff's allegation that his intestate had reached a place of comparative safety on the shoulder of the highway and that defendant left the highway without warning the pedestrian.

McCormick v Kennedy, 224-983; 277 NW 576

Failure to maintain lookout—proper failure to submit. Record reviewed in an action for damages for death of a pedestrian who was killed by being hit by an automobile on the public highway, and held to justify the court in refusing, for want of evidence, to submit to the jury the issue of the defendant's alleged failure to maintain proper lookout.

Hartman v Lee, 223-32; 272 NW 140

Failure to keep lookout alleged—substituting last clear chance—not permitted. In a law action for damages wherein the petition alleges that defendant motorist was negligent in failing to keep a proper lookout, and such allegation was not withdrawn, and it is shown deceased pedestrian was contributorily negligent, it was proper to refuse to submit the case under last clear chance doctrine on the theory that motorist, being under duty to keep a lookout, presumably performed such duty, but, after seeing deceased, failed to exercise due care in avoiding the injury.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825; 5 NCCA(NS) 140

Departure from pleaded theory. A plaintiff who predicates negligence in the operation of an automobile solely on the fact that defendant failed to give a warning signal after discovering plaintiff's position of danger may not complain that the court failed to instruct on the statutory duty to give a warning signal "on approaching tops of hills and intersecting highways."

Ryan v Shirk, 207-1327; 224 NW 824

Negating defendant's plea. In an action for damages consequent on plaintiff being negligently struck and injured by defendant's automobile [in which action defendant pleads (1) a denial that his car struck plaintiff, and (2) that plaintiff was struck and injured by some other vehicle], the court commits reversible error by instructing that plaintiff cannot recover unless plaintiff establishes by a preponderance of the evidence not only (1) that defendant's car struck and injured plaintiff, but (2) that no other car struck and injured plaintiff.

Griffin v Stuart, 222-815; 270 NW 442

Stalled motorist—freedom from negligence—requested instruction—jury question. In a damage action for personal injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, the burden is on plaintiff to establish (1) the defendant's negligence, (2) such negligence as the proximate cause of the injury, and (3) plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. Hence a motorist who stands in the center of the road near the rear of her automobile stalled on the highway, attempting to stop a following motorist, and who, having the opportunity, fails to seek a place of safety when she sees the approaching motorist apparently will crash into her stalled automobile, is not entitled to an instruction establishing her freedom from contributory negligence as a matter of law, nor to a directed verdict against the defendant.

Murchland v Jones, 225-149; 279 NW 382

Person injured on highway construction work. In laborer's personal injury action arising because of truck backing into him while both were engaged in highway construction work, an instruction, that it is the duty of driver in moving a truck to exercise care and caution of ordinarily prudent person and to bring truck under proper control if he discovers, or in exercise of reasonable care should discover, a person in the path of truck, was neither erroneous as submitting to the jury a previously withdrawn issue as to whether defendant driver has truck under control, nor as permitting jury to speculate on defendant's negligence generally.

Rebmann v Heesch, 227-566; 288 NW 695

Reliance on another's duty—knowledge of breach no excuse for negligence. A plaintiff, injured by a passing automobile while helping defendant's employee-driver put on tire chains, may not excuse his own lack of due care by testifying that he relied on the driver to place out flares, when as a fact he knew both that the driver had no such intention and that no flares were so placed.

Denny v Augustine, 223-1202; 275 NW 117

Sudden and unexpected appearance of person. The operator of an automobile on a straight, open, and unobstructed public highway cannot be held to anticipate that some one will, without warning, suddenly emerge from behind a stationary object and place himself in the immediate pathway of the vehicle.

Watson v Ins. Assn., 215-670; 246 NW 655; 3 NCCA(NS) 333

Backing vehicle out of private driveway. The driver of a truck who is nonnegligently traveling on the north side of a straight and level public highway in plain and unobstructed view of an automobile standing outside the public highway and in a private driveway on the same side of the highway, has the right to assume that the automobile will not, without warning, be suddenly backed out of the private driveway and immediately in front of his oncoming truck, and if said automobile is so backed out and in his immediate front, he cannot be deemed negligent because, in such sudden emergency, he turns to his left and unintentionally strikes a person whom he theretofore knew was on the south side of the highway.

Carstensen v Thomsen, 215-427; 245 NW 734; 32 NCCA 300; 34 NCCA 326; 39 NCCA 369

II CHILDREN

Discussion. See 21 ILR 803—Anticipating conduct of children.

Passing children—care required. A motorist, in approaching and passing on the highway children who are in plain sight and apparently under 14 years of age, must, even tho said children are in a place of apparent safety along the margin of the traveled way, bring and keep his vehicle under such control that he will be able by ordinary care to prevent injury to a child should the child suddenly, unexpectedly, and without warning leave its place of apparent safety and place itself in a place of danger in front of the oncoming car.

Webster v Luckow, 219-1048; 258 NW 685

Darr v Porte, 220-751; 263 NW 240

Passing children—nonright to assume care. Testimony in an action against a motorist for striking and killing a 10-year-old child on the highway supported by the physical facts, from which the jury could find that the child's position on the shoulder could have been seen by defendant when more than 300 feet away, justifies an instruction on the nonright of a motorist to assume that a child under 14, in a place of apparent safety, will remain there, and on his duty to so control his machine as to avoid hitting her if she does not.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Proper lookout—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to present a jury question on the issue whether the operator of an automobile maintained a proper lookout preceding the time when a small child suddenly emerged from behind an obstruction and ran into the pathway of the approaching car.

Howk v Anderson, 218-358; 253 NW 32

Anticipating child coasting—barricades removed—negligence. Where defendant knew that for many years a certain street was barricaded while children were coasting, and that there had been coasting there recently, but where the snow had melted somewhat so that the middle portion of the paving on the hill was bare of snow, and the barricades had been taken down the day before the accident, the defendant was not bound to anticipate and prepare for some child coasting on the hill.

McBride v Stewart, 227-1273; 290 NW 700

Unavoidable accident. Evidence reviewed and held to reveal per se no act of negligence on the part of a motorist in coming into collision with a child who, suddenly and unexpectedly darted from a hidden cover into the pathway of the car.

Chipokas v Peterson, 219-1072; 260 NW 37; 113 ALR 524; 3 NCCA(NS) 761

Inevitable accident. No actionable negligence is shown on a record which reveals that a small child suddenly ran from a place of safety directly and immediately into the path of an approaching automobile while the vehicle was proceeding at a lawful rate of speed, and when the driver did not know and had no reason to know, until almost the instant of impact, that the child was even present on or near the highway.

Klink v Bany, 207-1241; 224 NW 540; 65 ALR 187; 31 NCCA 112; 3 NCCA(NS) 332

Emergency—turning to right to avoid pedestrian. The driver of an automobile who is driving south on the right-hand side of a north and south highway is not guilty of negligence per se because, in order to avoid hitting a child running across the highway from the east side, he turns still farther to the right, even tho it later appears that had he kept his course or had turned to the left he might have avoided hitting the child.

Garmoe v Colthurst, 215-729; 246 NW 767

Nonnegligence per se. Evidence reviewed and held affirmatively to show no negligence on the part of the driver of an automobile, the injured party being an infant incapable of contributory negligence.

Kessler v Robbins, 215-327; 245 NW 284

Proximate cause—noncausal negligence. Failure of the driver of a conveyance to keep a proper lookout for other persons using the highway, or to keep his windshield clean, is quite inconsequential when the proximate cause of an injury to a boy on a sled was the icy condition of the street.

McDowell v Interstate Oil Co., 208-641; 224 NW 58; 31 NCCA 282; 32 NCCA 486

Contributory negligence—child under 14—burden to overthrow presumption. The presumption is that children under 14 are incapable of contributory negligence. A motorist striking a child of 10 must prove from all the facts and circumstances that the child did not exercise the degree of care ordinarily exercised by a child of like age. Held that the question of whether he had sustained his burden was clearly for the jury.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Minor walking on wrong side of highway—contributory negligence as matter of law. In a law action for damages where it is shown that plaintiff's decedent, a 15-year-old boy, was violating statute requiring pedestrians to walk on the left side of a highway by walking along right side, about 4 or 5 feet from west side of highway, and failing to make observations to oncoming traffic from the rear, while walking after dark on a street traversed by a thru highway, held, he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825

Improper submission of issue. The issue of the alleged negligence of a truck driver in running over and killing a person cannot be properly submitted to the jury on evidence which fails to reveal the facts and circumstances immediately attending the accident itself—which leaves to mere conjecture the manner in which the fatal accident occurred. So held as to a fatal injury to a child.

Westenburg v Johnson, 221-134; 264 NW 18

Requested instruction on absent issue properly refused. A defendant-motorist's requested instruction, which deals with the question of sudden emergency arising because, as he alleges, a child suddenly darted from hiding and ran across the path of his car, is properly refused when the issue of error in judgment after the emergency arose was not in the case, and the theory of how and when the child got in his path was otherwise covered by instructions.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

III INCAPACITATED PERSONS

Last clear chance—jury question. When a truck driven by plaintiff's intestate slowed down and turned to the left to avoid a crippled pedestrian who was walking along the highway, whether the defendant's truck, coming from the rear at a greater speed, after discovering the peril of the truck in front in having turned out into his path, should have pulled further to the left on the shoulder of the road to avoid a collision, was a question of last clear chance for the jury.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

STREETCARS AND SAFETY ZONES

5028.03 Stopping at streetcar.

Negligence—concurrent or intervening cause. Record reviewed, relative to a passenger's alighting from a moving streetcar and being almost immediately hit or touched by a passing automobile, and held to present a jury question on the issues whether the injury was caused (1) solely by the operation of the streetcar, or (2) solely by the operation of the automobile, or (3) by the concurrent movement of both the streetcar and the automobile.

Fitzgerald v Railway, 201-1302; 207 NW 602

Negligence—proximate cause. Evidence reviewed, and held that the act of a motorist in turning to the left on meeting a streetcar, instead of stopping, was the proximate cause of an injury to a pedestrian in the street, rather than the act of the streetcar operator in allowing the streetcar to turn to the left on a curve before stopping.

Moss v Railway, 217-354; 251 NW 627

Stopping streetcar in intersection and failure to warn. The operator of a streetcar is not negligent (1) in stopping, on signal, the car in the middle of a smoothly paved street intersection rather than at the near side thereof, and (2) in failing to warn a passenger that he might encounter peril in the street from passing vehicles.

MacLearn v Utilities Co., 212-555; 234 NW 851; 2 NCCA (NS) 551

5028.04 Driving on streetcar tracks.

Negligence per se in driving upon car tracks. The driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se when, upon entering during the daytime a private crossing over much-used interurban railway tracks located on a curve, he knows when some 25 feet from the track in question that his view of an apprehended approaching car is limited to 300 feet, and when he avails himself of such view and sees no approaching car, and thereupon proceeds to attempt, under no diverting circumstances, to cross the tracks at a rate of three miles per hour without looking or listening for the apprehended car, tho his view of the track materially enlarged as he proceeded.

Rosenberg v Railway, 213-152; 238 NW 703

Negligence per se in crossing street. A pedestrian who, from a place of perfect safety, suddenly hastens across a streetcar track in front of an immediately approaching streetcar, with full knowledge that as soon as he had passed the said track he would be directly in line with the automobile travel moving with the streetcar, is guilty of contributory negligence per se, even tho the automobile which hit him was being operated at an excessive speed.

Pettijohn v Weede, 209-902; 227 NW 824

Driving into streetcar. The driver of a truck is guilty of negligence per se when, without any apparent necessity for so doing, he attempts to steer his vehicle out of a groove or rut in the street, with the result that the vehicle suddenly responded to his efforts, bounded out of the rut, and darted diagonally across the street for a distance of twenty feet, and into an oncoming streetcar, of the prior presence and actions of which he had the fullest knowledge.

Bowers v Railway, 219-944; 259 NW 244

Avoiding contributory negligence. A streetcar motorman who plainly sees that the driver of another conveyance is negligently placing himself in a position of danger on the tracks, or is about to do so, and by ordinary care can avoid an accident and fails to do so, must be deemed guilty of negligence which is the proximate cause of the accident, irrespective of the negligence of the injured party.

Lynch v Railway, 215-1119; 245 NW 219

"Last clear chance"—unallowable submission. Evidence relative to collision between a streetcar and an automobile reviewed and held wholly insufficient to justify the submission to the jury of the "last clear chance" doctrine.

Elliott v Railway, 223-46; 271 NW 507; 5 NCCA(NS) 169

Streetcar operator—failure to maintain lookout—failure to stop—excuse. Negligence on the part of the operator of a streetcar cannot be predicated on his failure (1) to maintain a lookout for an injured party, or (2) to stop or slacken the speed of the car, when both parties were aware of the presence of each other long prior to any suggestion of a collision, and when, after the danger of a collision arose, stopping or slackening of speed was not only out of the question but would have been futile.

Bowers v Railway, 219-944; 259 NW 244

Instructions relative to nonpleaded negligence. Instructions that the jury should not consider the failure to ring a bell on a streetcar as a ground of negligence are properly refused (1) when plaintiff pleads no such ground of negligence, (2) when no such ground was submitted to the jury, and (3) when the testimony relative to such failure was received without objection.

Watson v Railway, 217-1194; 251 NW 31

Instructions—undue burden. No undue burden is imposed on a defending street railway company by requiring it to keep its car "under proper control and to use ordinary care," to operate its car "in a careful manner and not at a dangerous rate of speed," and to give notice of its approach "by ringing the gong or bell or otherwise," when the pleaded assignment of negligence embraces (1) excessive speed, (2) want of proper control of the car, and (3) failure to give warning of the approach of the car.

Johnson v Railway, 201-1044; 207 NW 984

5028.05 Driving in front of streetcar.

Precedence to streetcar. Principle reaffirmed that a streetcar at a street intersection may have precedence over an approaching motorist.

Moss v Railway, 217-354; 251 NW 627

Negligence—proximate cause. Evidence reviewed, and held that the act of a motorist in turning to the left on meeting a streetcar, instead of stopping, was the proximate cause of an injury to a pedestrian in the street, rather than the act of the streetcar operator in allowing the streetcar to turn to the left on a curve before stopping.

Moss v Railway, 217-354; 251 NW 627

Negligence per se—driving in front of streetcar. The operator of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se when, in the nighttime, and without diverting circumstances, and at a speed such that he could have stopped within two feet, he drives upon a streetcar track and immediately in front of an approaching and lighted streetcar which was at all material time in unobstructed view.

Crull v Railway, 217-83; 250 NW 905

Streetcar intersection—negligence per se. The operator of an automobile cannot be said to be negligent per se in driving into an intersection on a dark night in front of a rapidly oncoming streetcar with no headlight and with the entire front end of the streetcar unlighted, when, immediately before entering the intersection, he stops and listens and looks both ways for streetcars, and sees none (so he testifies) because of the glare of oil station lights immediately to his left, from which side the streetcar was approaching, and especially when there is evidence that the streetcar was approaching without audible signals.

Deiling v Railway, 217-687; 251 NW 622

Negligence per se in driving upon car tracks. The driver of a conveyance is guilty of negligence per se when, upon reaching a street intersection on a clear day, he has positive knowledge that a nearby streetcar is rapidly approaching the same intersection from a side street, and when he, without again looking at the approaching streetcar, and confronted by no emergency, continues his journey into the intersection at a speed which would enable him to stop his conveyance instantly and turns and enters upon the streetcar tracks in the direction in which the streetcar is moving.

Middleton v Railway, 209-1278; 227 NW 915

Collision with streetcar—obstructed view. The operator of an automobile who, without diverting circumstances, approaches and drives upon streetcar tracks and looks for an approaching streetcar at a place where he knows his view is very limited because of an intervening embankment, and fails to look at a point where he would still be within a zone of safety and where his view would be unobstructed, is guilty of negligence per se.

Pender v Railway, 217-1152; 251 NW 55

Negligence per se in crossing tracks. A party will not be permitted to excuse his contributory negligence, consequent on his attempt to cross streetcar tracks without using his senses of sight and hearing, by the simple assumption that the streetcars will not be negligently operated.

Rosenberg v Railway, 213-152; 238 NW 703

SPECIAL STOPS REQUIRED

5029.01 Obedience to signal of train.

Accidents at railroad crossings. See under §§8011, 8018

5029.05 Stop at through highways.

Entering stop intersections. See under §5026.04

Highway signs—authorized erection. It may be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the ordinary "Stop" and "Slow" signs, as they are found upon the public highways, were erected by and under authority of the proper public officials.

Rogers v Jefferson, 223-718; 272 NW 532; 277 NW 570; 4 NCCA(NS) 318

Presumption—signs erected by county. On appeal the appellate court will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, assume that the board of supervisors has performed its mandatory duty to erect and maintain proper signs on local county roads where they intersect with county trunk roads.

Arends v DeBruyn, 217-529; 252 NW 249

Ignoring statutory "Stop" sign—effect. Failure of the operator of an automobile on a highway outside a city or town to comply, before entering an arterial highway, with a duly erected, statutory "Stop" sign constitutes negligence.

Willemsen v Reedy, 215-193; 244 NW 691

Disregarding "Stop" sign. Defendant, in a criminal prosecution for failure to stop his automobile at intersecting roads in obedience to a duly and lawfully erected "Stop" sign, may be properly convicted tho there is no evidence of careless driving, intent, willfulness or wantonness except such as may be deduced from the failure to stop, the defendant at the time acting under no compulsion.

State v Wilson, 222-572; 269 NW 205

No stop sign at county trunk highway.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Right of way on primary roads—duty of side traveler. A traveler on a nonprimary road in approaching an intersection with a primary road does not fulfill his full duty of care by stopping at the statutory "Stop" sign erected outside the primary road. He must not only so stop, and observe the travel on the primary road, but must continue so to observe until he reaches the intersection, and until he has passed the point where danger may reasonably be apprehended.

Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689; 37 NCCA 67

5029.10 Primary roads as through highways.

Primary roads—right of way—contributory negligence per se. Inasmuch as vehicles traveling on a primary road have right of way at intersections with nonprimary roads, the operator of a vehicle on a nonprimary road is guilty of negligence per se when he attempts to cross an intersection with a primary road, at a speed of 10 miles per hour, when he knows or ought to know that another vehicle on the primary road is, at a distance of 80 or 90 feet, approaching the intersection at a speed very greatly in excess of 10 miles per hour.

Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689; 37 NCCA 67

Right of way on primary roads—duty of side traveler. A traveler on a nonprimary road in approaching an intersection with a primary road does not fulfill his full duty of care by stopping at the statutory "Stop" sign erected outside the primary road. He must not only so stop, and observe the travel on the primary road, but must continue so to observe until he reaches the intersection, and until he has passed the point where danger may reasonably be apprehended.

Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689; 37 NCCA 67

Highway traversing city street—highway law applicable. Where a statute requires pedestrians to walk on left side of a highway, the word "highway" is applicable to a through highway traversing a street within a city, especially in view of other sections in the motor vehicle act concerning highways.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825; 5 NCCA(NS) 724

5029.11 County trunk roads as through highways.

Intersecting county roads—negligence per se. The operator of an automobile on a county trunk road (an arterial highway), having the right of way over traffic on an intersecting local county road, is not guilty of negligence per se in entering such an intersection, with his car under apparent control, and without seeing a car approaching from his right at a high and dangerous rate of speed.

Arends v DeBruyn, 217-529; 252 NW 249; 37 NCCA 78

Evidence—instructions—county trunk road.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

5029.12 Additional signs—cost.

Highway signs—authorized erection. It may be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the ordinary "Stop" and "Slow" signs, as they are found upon the public highways, were erected by and under authority of the proper public officials.

Rogers v Jefferson, 223-718; 272 NW 532; 277 NW 570; 4 NCCA(NS) 318

STOPPING, STANDING, AND PARKING

5030.01 Stopping on traveled way.

Stopping on highway. Stopping a vehicle on the public highway is not, ordinarily at least, an act of negligence.

Albrecht v Const. Co., 218-1205; 257 NW 183; 36 NCCA 713

Duty to stop and make repairs. It is not only the right but the duty of the operator of an automobile temporarily to stop on the proper side of a highway for the purpose of making necessary repairs, when a failure so to stop would be negligence.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Highway as place of repair. Principle recognized that the driver of an automobile has the right to stop in a public highway, even during the nighttime, and there repair his car, provided he exercises reasonable care in view of all the circumstances.

Hanson v Manning, 213-625; 239 NW 793

Stalled truck—place where stopped. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether the driver of a truck, who suddenly and without warning discovered that his engine had stalled, was negligent in failing to turn his truck farther to the right of the pavement and onto the shoulder of the road before stopping it.

Peckinpugh v Engelke, 215-1248; 247 NW 822

Stopping on highway rather than muddy shoulder. It is not negligence per se for a motorist, on a moonlit, foggy night, with his rear lights burning and discernible for a distance of 30 rods, to stop for a period of from 2 to 5 minutes on the extreme right-hand side of a long, straight, level stretch of an 18-foot wide paved road, for the purpose of removing the loose or broken chains on his tires, even tho he might have stopped on a 6-foot wide slippery and muddy dirt shoulder.

Goodlove v Logan, 219-1380; 261 NW 496

Stopping on highway rather than soft shoulder. Stopping a motor vehicle directly on a public highway at night, because of the soft condition of the shoulder of the highway, in order to make unavoidable repairs on the vehicle necessitated by the unexpected blowing out of tires, does not, in and of itself, constitute negligence at common law.

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660; 36 NCCA 102

Stepping into highway from vehicle. It is not negligence per se for a motorist traveling on a dark, misty, and foggy night, on the proper side of a dark, 28-foot wide roadway, to stop, with his lights in full operation, and immediately to step from the car and into the traveled way.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782; 1 NCCA 157

Stepping from vehicle in order to clean windshield. The driver of an automobile cannot be deemed negligent per se (1) in stopping his car on the right-hand side of the road with the major part of the car on the dirt shoulder bordering the pavement for the purpose of restoring visibility by cleaning the sleet from his windshield nor (2) in stepping out of the car and upon the running board—he, up to the time of said act, not having seen an approaching car.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770; 35 NCCA 819; 39 NCCA 308

Collision—trucker struck while retrieving goods scattered on highway. A defendant motorist's negligence in striking a truck stopped on the highway is not the proximate cause of a later injury to the trucker by another motorist, who struck him while he was attempting to remove his merchandise spilled on the highway. The latter intervening cause was the proximate cause of his injury.

McClure v Richard, 225-949; 282 NW 312

Stalled motorist—freedom from negligence—requested instruction—jury question. In a damage action for personal injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, the burden is on plaintiff to establish (1) the defendant's negligence, (2) such negligence as the proximate cause of the injury, and (3) plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. Hence, a motorist who stands in the center of the road near the rear of her automobile stalled on the highway, attempting to stop a following motorist, and, tho having the opportunity, fails to seek a place of safety when she sees the approaching motorist apparently will crash into her stalled automobile, is neither entitled to an instruction establishing her freedom from contributory negligence as a matter of law, nor to a directed verdict against the defendant.

Murchland v Jones, 225-149; 279 NW 382

Failure to lessen speed or signal approach. A jury question on the issue of negligence of the operator of an automobile is generated by evidence tending to show that said operator was driving easterly on a straight road at 50 miles per hour; that he plainly could have seen, while at a distance of 80 rods, two well-lighted cars, and that they were standing together on the south side of the highway, one headed west and one headed east, with all headlights burning; and that, without slackening his speed, or giving signal of his approach, he passed to the south of said stationary cars, and so close thereto as to strike and break an open door on one of said cars.

Hanson v Manning, 213-625; 239 NW 793; 2 NCCA (NS) 446

Anticipated negligence—passing on wrong side. Prejudicial error results from instructing, in effect, that a person who has stopped his car at a proper place in the highway in order to repair it must anticipate and guard himself against the possibility that the operator of some passing car may be negligent by passing the stationary car on the wrong side.

Hanson v Manning, 213-625; 239 NW 793

Driving past stationary vehicle. Driving past and within four feet of a stationary vehicle in the public highway, at a rate of 35 miles per hour and without giving any warning signal, when much more than said four feet was afforded by the highway, may constitute negligence.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Duty to reduce speed while passing vehicle. An allegation that defendant drove his vehicle past a stationary vehicle at an excessive and dangerous rate of speed renders proper, on supporting proof, an instruction as to the duty of the defendant to reduce his speed to a reasonable rate when approaching and passing the stationary vehicle.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Parked cars—accident between other vehicles. Evidence held affirmatively to show that the stopping of three cars on the highway was not the proximate cause of a collision between a fourth car and a car traveling in the opposite direction from the three stationary cars.

Foster v Flaugh, 223-40; 271 NW 503

Knowledge of parked car—nonproximate cause. A general allegation of negligence in leaving a stalled automobile in the highway unattended is not available to a traveler who had the fullest knowledge of the presence of the automobile long before he reached and collided with it; especially when the leaving of said car in the highway was not the proximate cause of the injury that was suffered.

Scoville v Bakery, 213-534; 239 NW 110; 35 NCCA 719; 36 NCCA 94

Contributory negligence—failure of lights—as jury question. Where a truck is being operated in a fog with 35 feet visibility ahead, under speed and road conditions permitting a stop within 25 feet, and after meeting and passing another automobile, there is a failure of the lights on the truck, the truck driver is confronted with an emergency not of his own making, and if he tries the lights again before applying his brakes and turning on his emergency light, after which he discovers another truck stopped on the road within the visibility range so that it would have been seen and avoided had the lights not failed, he is not as a matter of law contributorily negligent in being unable to stop without a collision, but the question is for the jury.

Mueller v Ins. Assn., 223-888; 274 NW 106; 113 ALR 1256

Failure to see parked car in fog. On a foggy evening when visibility was poor, where the plaintiff, with the headlamps on his automobile lighted and the windshield wiper working, drove his car into another car which was parked on the highway, in the absence of any proof of an emergency to excuse his failure to see the other car, he was not free from contributory negligence and the defendant was entitled to a directed verdict.

Newman v Hotz, 226-831; 285 NW 289

Tail light of car concealed by person's body. State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Yielding half of traveled way—inapplicability. The statute relative to the duty of the driver of a vehicle on the public highway, on meeting another vehicle, to yield one-half of the traveled way, may, manifestly, have no application to the driver of a vehicle which, to the timely knowledge of an oncoming driver, is standing stationary in such highway.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Passing stalled truck. The length of a vehicle (34 feet), its load (7 tons), and the space required in which to make a turn (20 to 30 feet) may, especially on a dark night, have a very material bearing on the issue whether the driver, by proof of an attempt to pass around a stalled truck, had legally excused his presumptive negligence in being on the left-hand side of the traveled way at the time of a collision with an oncoming vehicle. Evidence held to present jury question.

McWilliams v Beck, 220-906; 262 NW 781

Parking in highway—absence of lights. Negligence, alleged to have been the proximate cause of a collision, and asserted in the plea that defendant's truck (1) was parked, in the nighttime, diagonally across the entire right-hand side of a paved highway, and (2) without lights, with substantial evidence pro and con, both as to the position of the truck and as to the lights, necessarily presents a jury question.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853; 37 NCCA 496, 640

5030.02 Disabled vehicle.

Signaling passing cars—no duty to anticipate negligence. A motorist stalled on the highway has a right to assume that the driver of a passing automobile to whom he signals to stop will use ordinary care in so doing.

McDaniel v Stitsworth, 224-289; 275 NW 572

Place of stopping truck—negligence. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether the driver of a truck who suddenly and without warning discovered that his engine had stalled was negligent in failing to turn his truck farther to the right of the pavement and onto the shoulder of the road before stopping it.

Peckinpaugh v Engelke, 215-1248; 247 NW 822

Disabled vehicle—daytime stopping on highway—signaling. Stopping a disabled motor truck in the daytime upon the right-hand side of a 26-foot graveled road within 4 feet of a guardrail, where it was visible for 225 feet, and signaling to passing cars does not constitute negligence.

McDaniel v Stitsworth, 224-289; 275 NW 572

Stopping on highway when shoulder soft. Stopping a motor vehicle directly on a public highway because of the soft condition of the shoulder of the highway in order to make unavoidable repairs on the vehicle necessitated by the unexpected blowing out of tires does not, in and of itself, constitute negligence at common law.

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660; 36 NCCA 102

Contributory negligence—matter of law—stalled motorist—poor visibility in snowstorm. A plaintiff motorist who during a snowstorm becomes stalled in a snowdrift is not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence because, in attempting to extricate his car, he must at times place himself with his back to oncoming traffic alongside his vehicle, tho meanwhile making occasional attempts to observe traffic in that direction, especially when before the vehicle struck him he observed it when it was about 50 feet away, such distance under the undisputed evidence being the extreme extent of visibility.

Youngman v Sloan, 225-558; 281 NW 130

Duty to remove stalled vehicle from highway. Where a motor vehicle is stalled in a snowdrift and obstructs half of the highway, a motorist must use reasonable efforts to remove such vehicle.

Youngman v Sloan, 225-558; 281 NW 130

Failure to see parked vehicle in fog—jury question. In an action for damages resulting from injuries sustained when the car in which the plaintiff and her husband were riding on a foggy evening ran into a car which the defendant had left standing on the highway after an unsuccessful attempt to tow it away, it was error for the lower court to direct a verdict for the defendant, as the question of liability should have gone to the jury.

Newman v Hotz, 226-834; 285 NW 287

Stalled truck—contributory negligence. Where a car collided with a stalled tractor-trailer, jackknifed on an icy hill at night, the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury, where it is shown the tractor, with lighted headlamps, standing on the right side of the highway, diverted plaintiff's and husband-driver's attention, and, there being no reasonable apparent cause to suspect that trailer blocked the left side of highway, and, where jury could find that car in which the plaintiff was riding was proceeding at less than 20 miles per hour, and that plaintiff and husband-driver were looking straight ahead, there is no warrant for saying plaintiff was contributorily negligent as a matter of law; however, under the record, the negligence of the husband-driver, if any, could not be imputed to plaintiff.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

5030.05 Stopping, standing, or parking.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 713—Parking meters

Petition stating cause of action as against demurrer—stop sign—obstructed view. Where petition alleges defendants' truck was parked on curbing or sidewalk so as to obstruct view of stop sign for a motorist who proceeded into intersection and collided with another car, petition held to state a cause of action as against demurrer.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Pleading ordinance and statute violations—assumed for purpose of demurrer. In an action for injuries resulting from a motor vehicle collision at an intersection, where defendants' truck is alleged to have been parked so as to obscure the view of a stop sign, and where the violations of both city ordinance and state law are pleaded, the supreme court will assume, for the purpose of demurrer, that truck was parked within prohibited distance and did obscure the sign.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Unlawful parking—negligence. The parking of a motor vehicle at a place where parking is prohibited by a valid city ordinance constitutes negligence and, in case a collision occurs with the parked vehicle, the said negligence must be deemed to have contributed to the resulting damage.

Riley v Guthrie, 218-422; 255 NW 502; 35 NCCA 818

Parking—view of stop sign obstructed—others' imputed knowledge of stop sign no defense. Where defendants' truck was parked so as to obscure the view of a stop sign at an intersection, and where motorist proceeded into intersection without stopping and collided with an automobile on intersecting street, defendant will not be exempt from liability on ground that knowledge would be imputed to motorist that intersecting street was an arterial highway because of statute as to posting signs.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

5030.08 Parking at right-hand curb.

Municipal corporations—torts—proximate cause. A truck which is legally parked along the curb of a public street is not the proximate cause of an injury to a child whose sled was deflected into the truck by a bump in the street.

Dennier v Johnson, 214-770; 240 NW 745; 35 NCCA 717

Parking on left side without tail light. Section 5056, C., '35, requiring parking on right side of city street, was in effect in city which had not adopted any ordinance to the contrary under authority of §4997, and §5045, in view of its legislative history, required red tail light upon automobile parked at night upon city street. The purpose of these statutes was protection and warning of traffic, and violation thereof without legal excuse was negligence, but whether such negligence was proximate cause of a bicyclist's collision with an automobile so parked was question for jury.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

MISCELLANEOUS RULES

5031.03 Control of vehicle—signals.

ANALYSIS

- I WARNING SIGNALS GENERALLY
- II CURVES
- III HILLS

Annotations Vol I, see under §§5040, 5043
Control of vehicle generally. See under §5023.04

I WARNING SIGNALS GENERALLY

Failure to signal approach to stationary truck. The operator of an automobile, driving in broad daylight on the proper side of a country highway where the view is wholly unobstructed, is not guilty of negligence in failing to signal his approach to an open, stationary milk truck with a person standing beside it (which is also on the proper side of the highway) when said operator has no reason to suppose or apprehend that some one may be in or about said truck and may suddenly emerge therefrom and into the pathway of said oncoming automobile.

Crutchley v Bruce, 214-731; 240 NW 238; 31 NCCA 376

Negligence per se—entering obscured crossing. Negligence per se is revealed in the act of the driver of an automobile in approaching and entering an obscured public crossing (with which he was familiar) with knowledge that another vehicle was also rapidly and immediately approaching said intersection from his right, and failing either (1) to sound his horn or (2) to yield the right of way. (See Vol. I, §5028 et seq.)

Masonholder v O'Toole, 203-884; 210 NW 778; 31 NCCA 44

Arterial highway—negligence per se. The operator of an automobile on a county trunk arterial highway (on which no "stop" or "slow" signs had been erected at points intersected by county local roads) is guilty of negligence per se in knowingly approaching an obscured intersection without either (1) slacking his speed (of some 25 or 30 miles per hour) as required by §5031, C., '31 [§5023.04, C., '39] or (2) giving some warning signal of his approach. (But see Dikel v Mathers, 213 Iowa 76.)

Lang v Kollasch, 218-391; 255 NW 493; 37 NCCA 74

Child on sled—view obstructed by snowbank—negligence—directed verdict. In an action for death of 7-year-old child, where defendant-motorist could not see child because of snowbank, and child, lying on sled, coasted into intersection at 20 or more miles per hour and struck rear wheel of defendant's automobile, the court properly directed verdict for defendant, the evidence being insufficient to establish that defendant was driving at excessive speed, lacked control of his car, failed to maintain proper lookout, or failed to give warning of approach to intersection.

McBride v Stewart, 227-1273; 290 NW 700

Obscured view of travel at intersection—failure to look or signal. The operator of an automobile in approaching and entering an intersecting country highway, when the view of travel approaching from his right is obstructed, is guilty of negligence (1) if he fails to signal his approach and entry, and also (2) if he fails to look for such travel at a point from which he can see such travel.

Smith v Lamb, 220-835; 263 NW 311; 4 NCCA(NS) 368

Plaintiff's negligence per se not necessarily contributory. A plaintiff riding in his automobile driven by his son who enters an obscured intersection without sounding his horn, (§5043, C., '35), is guilty of negligence per se, imputable from his son, but a jury question arises as to whether or not this contributed to the injury, when from the evidence it is questionable whether defendant could have heard such signal had it been given.

In re Green, 224-1268; 278 NW 285

Contributory negligence—failure to sound horn. In action involving collision between car and motorcycle, plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law for failure to sound horn where vehicles were in plain view of each other for more than 200 feet and there was no apparent danger of any collision.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Failure to signal at intersection—jury question. Evidence reviewed on the issues whether the driver of an automobile (1) was driving on the wrong side of the street, (2) "cut the corner" of an intersection, and (3) gave no signal of his approach, and held to present a jury question.

Handlon v Henshaw, 206-771; 221 NW 489; 32 NCCA 433; 35 NCCA 649

Failure to signal—knowledge of approach. The submission to a jury of the issue of negligence on the part of the operator of an automobile in not sounding a warning of his approach to an intersection of streets is reversible error when the undisputed evidence shows that the injured party saw the approaching automobile when it was more than a block from said intersection.

Lauxman v Tisher, 213-654; 239 NW 675

Failure to signal at unknown intersection. The driver of an automobile may not be said to be negligent per se for failure to sound a signaling device upon approaching an intersecting and completely hidden highway, of the existence of which he had no knowledge in fact or reason.

Sexauer v Dunlap, 207-1018; 222 NW 420

I WARNING SIGNALS GENERALLY—concluded

Construction as a whole. An instruction which properly directs the jury that the defendant would be guilty of negligence if, under named circumstances, he failed to signal his approach to the scene of an accident is not rendered erroneous because the court does not, in said instruction, make any reference to the law of direct and proximate cause—said latter subject matter being properly covered elsewhere in the instructions.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Failure to sound horn—pedestrian ran in front of car. Failure to sound the horn on an automobile is quite inconsequential when there was no occasion to give such signal until the injured party, suddenly and without previous warning, ran into the immediate pathway of the car at a time when it was impossible to stop the car and avoid the accident.

Hawk v Anderson, 218-358; 253 NW 32; 35 NCCA 1

Persons working on highway—truck driver's duty. In a laborer's personal injury action against a truck driver for backing truck into laborer while both were engaged in highway construction, §5017.06, C., '39, exempting persons and motor vehicles actually engaged in work upon the highway from the motor vehicle law requirements, does not exempt a truck driver from using his horn if necessary in the exercise of ordinary care when backing from an intersection onto highway under construction. Question of defendant's negligence in not sounding horn or observing plaintiff's presence when backing truck where men were working, and question of plaintiff's contributory negligence while working under foreman's instruction at outside edge of road were questions properly submitted to jury.

Rebmann v Heesch, 227-566; 288 NW 695

II CURVES

Negligence—sudden stopping of car on curve. The driver of an automobile who is on the right-hand side of the road at a curve and driving at a proper speed is not guilty of negligence in suddenly applying the brakes in order to avoid hitting an overtaking and passing car which unexpectedly swerved in front of him, and in order to prevent his own car going into a ditch, tho by so doing the wheels of his car locked and the momentum skidded the car across the road and into another car.

Klaaren v Shadley, 215-1043; 247 NW 301

Passing on curve—negligence—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of negligence of the operator of an automobile in passing another vehicle on a curve, and returning to the right side of the traveled way within 30 feet of the car which had been passed.

Andersen v Christensen, 222-177; 268 NW 527

Guest statute—speed as recklessness. Where an automobile, traveling 40 miles an hour around a curve that was neither a sharp turn nor a long sweeping curve, ran off the pavement and turned over, injuring plaintiff guest, this evidence did not raise a jury question on whether defendant was reckless within scope of guest statute.

Crabb v Shanks, 226-589; 284 NW 446

Reckless operation—jury question. A jury question on the issue of reckless operation of an automobile is made by evidence that the car was being operated (1) over a wide, well-settled graveled highway with which the operator was wholly unfamiliar, (2) at a speed of some 65 miles per hour, (3) during the nighttime when visibility was materially limited, and (4) at a sharp turn in the road so belatedly anticipated and discovered that the driver was unable to negotiate it and was compelled to turn his car into the side ditch.

Mescher v Brogan, 223-573; 272 NW 645

III HILLS

Failure to signal approach—effect. Failure to sound some signaling device when an automobile is approaching the top of a hill may constitute no more than presumptive negligence.

Lane v Varlamos, 213-795; 239 NW 689

Ruts in snow on highway—collision—explanatory instruction omitting contributory negligence. Where, on a snow-covered highway containing a single pair of ruts, two automobiles approaching each other collide on a hill, in a damage action by a passenger injured thereby, an instruction further explaining negligence, but not mentioning contributory negligence, is not erroneous when contributory negligence was covered in other instructions and when the jury could not have been misled by the explanatory purpose of the instruction.

Tallmon v Larson, 226-564; 284 NW 367

Signaling on approaching hilltop—statute inapplicable. The statutory requirement that an adequate signaling device be sounded when a motor vehicle approaches the top of a hill has no application to an accident which happened on a level road, and at a point over 250 feet beyond the top of the hill in question.

Heacock v Baule, 216-311; 249 NW 437; 93 ALR 151

Departure from pleaded theory. A plaintiff who predicates negligence in the operation of an automobile solely on the fact that defendant failed to give a warning signal after discovering plaintiff's position of danger may not complain that the court failed to instruct on the statutory duty to give a warning signal "on approaching tops of hills and intersecting highways."

Ryan v Shirk, 207-1327; 224 NW 824

SCHOOL BUSESSES

5032.04 Drivers.

School bus driver as independent contractor—nongovernmental function. A school bus driver furnishing his own bus under a contract embodying certain conditions to transport school children, but not under the supervision, control, and regulation of the board, is an independent contractor liable for his own negligence and not an employee exercising a governmental function.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

EQUIPMENT

5033.01 Scope and effect of regulations.

Use of known dangerous vehicle. One who continues to ride in an automobile after he knows it is dangerous to do so, and without availing himself of the opportunity to have the vehicle repaired, is guilty of negligence; especially may he not complain when he happens to occupy such relation to the vehicle as renders it his duty to have repairs made.

Helming v Bank, 206-1213; 220 NW 45

Circumstantial evidence — defectively attached wheel. Circumstantial evidence is wholly insufficient, in and of itself, to generate a jury question on the issue whether a defendant in repairing an automobile so negligently replaced a wheel on the car that thereby it became detached while in operation (with resulting damage to plaintiff) when said evidence is also consistent with the additional theory that said wheel became detached because of defects and weaknesses in the car arising from its age and great use.

Tyrrell v Skelly Co., 222-1257; 270 NW 857

Res ipsa loquitur—nonapplicability. In an automobile damage action the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable when the automobile was not under the exclusive control of the defendant nor when the jury must speculate from the evidence whether the injury was caused by a defect in the automobile or by the negligence of the driver.

Sprall v Burkett Co., 223-902; 274 NW 63

Guest injured in rented car—burden of proof. In action by guest against lender of rented car and driven by borrower, for injuries sustained when car, because of defective wheels, goes into ditch, he must show, not only that car was defective at time of accident, but that it was defective at time of its delivery to borrower. Held burden of proof not sustained.

Gianopoulos v Saunders System, (NOR); 242 NW 53; 32 NCCA 18

5033.04 When lighted lamps required.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 51

Absence of lights—inferential evidence to support issue. Testimony by a plaintiff to the effect that as he entered an intersection he looked along the intersecting highway to his right (which was the proper direction) and saw no approaching automobile or automobile lights, may be sufficient to justify the court in submitting to the jury the question whether the defendant was operating his car without lights.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Striking admissible testimony. Excluding evidence that lights on defendant's truck were not burning, plaintiff having failed to allege such fact in petition, held, prejudicial error when such fact had direct bearing on question of plaintiff's contributory negligence.

Haines v Mahaska Works, 227-228; 288 NW 70

Nonproximate cause. The operation of an automobile with lights which do not measure up to statutory requirements becomes quite immaterial in a civil action if such shortcoming in no manner contributes to the damage.

Hansen v Kemmish, 201-1008; 208 NW 277; 45 ALR 498; 29 NCCA 326; 33 NCCA 100

Violation of statute—avoidance by contributory negligence. Failure of defendant, the driver of an automobile, to have the headlights on his car displayed at a time required by statute, becomes inconsequential when the contributory negligence of the plaintiff was the proximate cause of the injury resulting from the collision.

Sheridan v Limbrecht, 205-573; 218 NW 278; 29 NCCA 300; 35 NCCA 661; 2 NCCA (NS) 417

Contributory negligence—insufficient showing. Evidence held insufficient to show contributory negligence per se in not seeing, in the nighttime, an unlighted approaching vehicle.

Carlson v Decker & Sons, 216-581; 247 NW 296; 36 NCCA 91

Driving without lights. The act of driving an automobile without lights on the wrong side of highway on a dark night is per se not careful and prudent.

Lange v Bedell, 203-1194; 212 NW 354

Driving blind horse—buggy without lights. It is not negligent per se to drive a blind horse in a narrow highway on a dark night, with the horse hitched to an unlighted buggy.

Lange v Bedell, 203-1194; 212 NW 354

Absence of lights—negligence per se. The operator of an automobile who, on a dark and foggy night, operates his car without lights because he believes he can see better without them, is guilty of negligence per se.

Caudle v Zenor, 217-77; 251 NW 69; 34 NCCA 122; 1 NCCA(NS) 44

Jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question whether an automobile was negligently operated (1) without lights, (2) at a dangerous rate of speed, and (3) on the wrong side of the highway.

Carlson v Decker & Sons, 216-581; 247 NW 296; 36 NCCA 91

Collision—jury questions. Evidence reviewed in an action for damages consequent on a collision in the nighttime between a truck and an automobile, and held to present jury questions on the issues:

1. Whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence.
2. Whether defendant was driving his truck without lights.
3. Whether defendant was driving on the wrong side of the road.
4. Whether defendant was operating his truck (weighing three tons) at an unlawful rate of speed.
5. Whether defendant had opportunity to avoid the collision and failed to do so.

Carlson v Decker, 218-54; 253 NW 923; 36 NCCA 91

Contributory negligence—failure of lights—jury question. Where a truck is being operated in a fog with 35 feet visibility ahead under speed and road conditions permitting a stop within 25 feet, and after meeting and passing another automobile, there is a failure of the lights on the truck, the truck driver is confronted with an emergency not of his own making, and if he tries the lights again before applying his brakes and turning on his emergency light, after which he discovers another truck stopped on the road within the visibility range so that it would have been seen and avoided had the lights not failed, he is not as a matter of law contributorily negligent in being unable to stop without a collision, but the question is for the jury.

Mueller v Ins. Assn., 223-888; 274 NW 106; 113 ALR 1256

Absence of lights—instructions—sufficiency. An instruction that plaintiff would be guilty of contributory negligence if his automobile was not equipped with two white lights on the front is all-sufficient on that particular subject matter.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Insufficient headlights—erroneous submission of issue. The submission to the jury of the issue whether an automobile was being operated with lights which were insufficient to reveal a person or object 75 feet ahead of the lights, without any evidence that the lights did not meet the statutory requirements, constitutes reversible error.

Grover v Neibauer, 216-631; 247 NW 298; 36 NCCA 133

Failure of lights—right to proceed—instructions. The court should, on supporting testimony, instruct as to the right of a traveler to proceed cautiously toward his destination in case of the failure of his lights to operate.

Sergeant v Challis, 213-57; 238 NW 442

Necessary instructions. The operation of an automobile during the nighttime without the required number of lights is not necessarily negligent; and in submitting such issue the court must clearly state to the jury the circumstances under which the operator would, under the statute, be negligent and the circumstances under which he would not, under the statute, be negligent.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Taking obviously dangerous position on highway. A motorist is guilty of negligence per se when, with darkness rapidly falling, and with his unlighted car stalled on a substantial up-grade, and substantially across the right-hand side of a known heavily-traveled, ice-covered street, he deliberately places himself on that side of his car toward which traffic would be directly moving, and, with his back to such oncoming traffic, attempts to back his car into a private driveway, knowing at the time that the view of an approaching driver would be seriously impaired by the lights of a car which at that moment had passed him, and which was moving toward said approaching driver.

Fortman v McBride, 220-1003; 263 NW 345; 39 NCCA 330

Lights on road machinery—statute violation—nonliability of county. Mandatory statutes requiring danger lights on road machinery and providing punishment for their violation do not create any liability on a county for negligent observance thereof.

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 827; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

5033.05 Head lamps on motor vehicles.

Absence of lights—instructions—sufficiency. An instruction that plaintiff would be guilty of contributory negligence if his automobile was not equipped with two white lights on the front is all-sufficient on that particular subject matter.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Holding under former statute. The operation of an automobile during the nighttime without the required number of lights is not necessarily negligent; and in submitting such issue the court must (especially when requested) clearly state to the jury the circumstances under which the operator would under the statute be negligent and the circumstances under which he would not under the statute be negligent.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

5033.07 Rear lamps and reflectors.

Tail lights—when not required. (Holding under prior statute.)

Leete v Hays, 211-379; 233 NW 481

Improper argument. An argument to the effect that plaintiff could not have known at the time of an accident of the existence of an ordinance relative to rear signal lights on vehicles, because defendant's counsel did not know such fact until long after the accident, is improper.

DeMoss v Cab Co., 218-77; 254 NW 17

Absence of tail lights and reflectors—jury question. Testimony reviewed and held that the court could not say as a matter of law that the truck in question was not, at the time of a collision, equipped with tail lights and reflectors.

Isaacs v Bruce, 218-759; 254 NW 57; 36 NCCA 93

Parking on left side without tail light. Section 5056, C., '35, requiring parking on right side of city street, was in effect in city which had not adopted any ordinance to the contrary under authority of §4997, and §5045, in view of its legislative history, required red tail light upon automobile parked at night upon city street. The purpose of these statutes was protection and warning of traffic, and violation thereof without legal excuse was negligence, but whether such negligence was proximate cause of a bicyclist's collision with an automobile so parked was question for jury.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

5033.09 Reflectors additional.

Absence of rear reflectors—nonproximate cause—instruction without issue. A "side-swipe" collision between two head-on approaching automobiles could not proximately result from the absence of red reflectors on the rear of the body, and no instruction involving this negligence should be given.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

CLEARANCE AND IDENTIFICATION LIGHTS

5034.01 Kinds and placement of lights.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 262

Absence of tail lights and reflectors—jury question. Testimony reviewed and held that the court could not say as a matter of law that the truck in question was not, at the time of a collision, equipped with tail lights and reflectors.

Isaacs v Bruce, 218-759; 254 NW 57; 36 NCCA 93

Lack of proper lamps on trucks or trailers. In an action at law to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when car in which she was riding collided with a tractor-trailer which had stalled on an icy hill on a country highway at night and had jackknifed across the highway, the question of owners' and operators' negligence in failing to comply with statutes prescribing number and place of lamps required on truck or trailer, and whether such negligence, if any, had proximate causal connection with injury sustained by plaintiff, held, under the evidence, properly submitted to the jury.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Failure to submit supported issue. Error results from the failure of the court, in a personal damage action, to submit to the jury a supported issue of negligence as to the absence of sidelights on a truck.

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

5034.04 Lamps on parked vehicles.

Truck flares. See under §5034.57

Absence of tail light—effect. The parking, during the nighttime, of a motor vehicle upon a paved highway outside a city or town, with the tail lights extinguished, constitutes negligence per se, in the absence of a showing of legal excuse.

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660

Evidence—positive vs. negative. Positive evidence of the existence of lights in full operation on a parked automobile is in no degree detracted from by evidence of a witness that he did not see any lights at a material time when his view was obstructed by an intervening object.

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660

Truck trailer jackknifed across road—sufficiency of time to set out flares. In an action at law to recover damages for personal injuries received when car in which plaintiff was riding collided with the trailer of a tractor-trailer unit which had stalled on an icy hill at night on a country highway, and had jackknifed across highway, and where it is claimed the operators of the trailer unit failed to comply with statute requiring such standing vehicles to set out flares, and where operators claimed a warning was given by waving an ordinary flash light from inside or just outside cab of tractor, the question as to whether operators of trailer unit had sufficient time to set out warning signals, and whether the warning by waving an ordinary flash light was sufficient to afford a warning of presence of truck and trailer blocking motorists' passage, were proper questions of fact for the jury.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Unlighted truck in highway. Evidence which would justify a finding that the driver of a truck left it where it obstructed one-half of the highway and with the rear end unlighted presents a jury question on the issue of such assigned negligence.

Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151; 35 NCCA 790; 36 NCCA 106

Stalled vehicle—absence of signals—proximate cause. The fact that, upon the stalling of a vehicle in the public highway, no lights or signals were erected to show the presence and position of said vehicle cannot be deemed the proximate cause of a collision with the stalled vehicle when the driver of the colliding vehicle discovered the presence and position of the stalled car in ample time to stop had he been so driving as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Albrecht v Const. Co., 218-1205; 257 NW 183; 36 NCCA 713

Collision with stationary truck—negligence. The position of an unlighted truck parked in the highway and the diverting circumstances occurring just preceding a collision with the truck may have a very material bearing on the issue of plaintiff's contributory negligence and the assured clear distance rule.

Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151; 1 NCCA(NS) 42

Failure to see unlighted truck. The driver of an automobile who, in the nighttime, with his headlights burning, and while on the proper side of a straight, 20-foot-wide, paved highway, drives at the rate of 35 or 40 miles per hour, and under no materially diverting circumstances, squarely into the rear of a stationary, wholly unlighted truck which is directly in his pathway and which, from its build, color, and load, is reasonably discernible, must be deemed to have failed to maintain a proper lookout, or to have been so driving as to be unable to stop within the assured clear distance ahead—in either event, negligent.

Shannahan v Borden Co., 220-702; 263 NW 69; 1 NCCA(NS) 16

Failure to see unlighted truck—legal excuse. The failure of the driver of an automobile to see, in time to stop, an unlighted truck standing ahead of him in the highway and within the radius of his lights, may be legally excused by plea and proof that the truck was not reasonably discernible sooner (1) because of its color, (2) because of shadows cast over it by nearby trees, and (3) because his attention was momentarily diverted by a car and the lights thereon which he was about to meet and pass at a lawful rate of speed.

Kadlec v Const. Co., 217-299; 252 NW 103; 35 NCCA 764; 1 NCCA(NS) 3

Parking in highway—absence of lights. Negligence alleged to have been the proximate cause of a collision and asserted in the plea that defendant's truck (1) was parked in the nighttime, diagonally across the entire right-hand side of a paved highway, and (2) without lights, with substantial evidence pro and con, both as to the position of the truck and as to the lights, necessarily presents a jury question.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853

Lack of proper lamps on trucks or trailers. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when car in which she was riding collided with a tractor-trailer which had stalled on an icy hill on a country highway at night and had jackknifed across the highway, the question of owners' and operators' negligence in failing to comply with statutes prescribing number and place of lamps required on truck or trailer, and whether such negligence, if any, had proximate causal connection with injury sustained by plaintiff, held, under the evidence, properly submitted to the jury.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Tail light concealed by body of person.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Instructions — following statute enacted after accident. Where an automobile collides at night with a truck displaying no lights, it is error to instruct in the language of §5029, C., '35, that plaintiff had a right to assume that others using the highway would obey the law, when such collision causing the injuries complained of occurred before this right of assumption was added by the legislature and the statute had previously been construed that a driver had no such right.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

5034.06 Lamps on bicycles.

Bicycle lights—contributory negligence—jury question. In a damage action against a motorist for death of a bicycle rider, the jury, under the record, could properly find that cyclist was not traveling with bicycle lights required by statute and was not free from contributory negligence, despite fact that evidence showed a recent purchase of red reflector and lamp by an unidentified person on morning of accident; and the finding of a broken lamp, reflector, etc., by the sheriff at the scene of and sometime after the accident does not compel a finding that the bicycle was properly equipped.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6

5034.07 Lamps on other vehicles and equipment.

Driving blind horse—unlighted buggy. It is not negligent per se to drive a blind horse in a narrow highway on a dark night, with the horse hitched to an unlighted buggy.

Lange v Bedell, 203-1194; 212 NW 354

Safety precautions — violation — negligence per se. The operation of a horse-drawn vehicle on the highway during the nighttime without displaying on said vehicle one or more white or tinted lights or red reflector or reflectors constitutes negligence per se, notwithstanding the substitution at the time by the operator of an ordinary flashlight which lay in the lap of the operator and was pointed rearward.

Knepper v Huismann, 223-569; 272 NW 602

5034.08 Road machinery—lights required.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 51

5034.09 Number of lights—duty to maintain.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 51

5034.10 Duty to enforce.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 51

Road grader—failure to carry signals—effect. The naked fact that a road patrolman fails to carry on a road grader operated by him on the highway the statutory red danger lights does not ipso facto constitute a breach of statutory duty by the board of supervisors to enforce the law requiring the carrying of such lights.

Bateson v County, 213-718; 239 NW 803

5034.39 Brake equipment.

Driver of injured vehicle held negligent. Where a car approaching a public highway from a private driveway, traveling in neutral at only 3 miles per hour, and while still 12 feet from such highway, driver saw defendant's truck approaching at a rapid rate, the fact that car was out in the highway when collision occurred would either show that brakes were inadequate or that driver was negligent in the operation of car.

Hermon v Egy, (NOR); 207 NW 116; 31 NCCA 76

Negligence — sudden stopping of car on curve. The driver of an automobile who is on the right-hand side of the road at a curve and driving at a proper speed is not guilty of negligence in suddenly applying the brakes in order to avoid hitting an overtaking and passing car which unexpectedly swerved in front of him and in order to prevent his own car going into a ditch, tho by so doing the wheels of his car locked and the momentum skidded the car across the road and into another car.

Klaaren v Shadley, 215-1043; 247 NW 301

Operation without brakes—proximate cause. Record reviewed and held that the proximate cause of an accident was not the condition in which a railway crossing was maintained, but was the speed at which an overloaded truck was operated without brakes.

Gable v Kriege, 221-852; 267 NW 86; 105 ALR 539

Directing verdict—inadequate brakes must contribute to injuries. Before a plaintiff motorist can be held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law it must conclusively appear, from a consideration of the evidence in the light most favorable to him, that his negligence in having inadequate brakes contributed in some way or in some degree to the accident and injuries for which he seeks a recovery.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Conflict as to use of brakes—jury question. A conflict in the evidence in a motor vehicle accident case as to whether defendant did or did not apply his brakes is properly a matter for the jury.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

Predicating error solely on one's own evidence—impropriety. Predication of error based solely on defendant's own evidence and his own theory of the case is ineffective when other conflicting evidence clearly makes a jury question on contributory negligence regarding plaintiff's failure to have adequate brakes on his automobile, his failure to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and his failure to slow down before crossing a bridge.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Contributory negligence—inadequate brakes—jury question. Evidence that a plaintiff motorist approached a bridge at 15 miles per hour and proceeded to cross, keeping his car within 6 inches of the right-hand side, before defendant came on the bridge, and that plaintiff was two-thirds across before defendant swung across the center line and struck him, makes a jury question as to whether the fact of plaintiff's negligence in not having adequate brakes contributed to the collision.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Car sliding into stalled truck. Where a car collided with a truck-trailer which had stalled on an icy hill at night on a country highway and had jackknifed across the left side of the highway on which plaintiff's husband was driving, the question of the husband's negligence in braking his car to such extent that it slid on the ice and collided with the side of the trailer, in the absence of any other evidence that car went out of control, held, that question of negligence of the husband as the sole proximate cause of the collision was properly submitted to the jury, and even tho it may be conceded that husband was negligent, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that such negligence was the sole proximate cause of the injury.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Inadequate brakes immaterial unless negligence contributory. An exception to an instruction because the fact question of plaintiff's contributory negligence was erroneously submitted is not an exception to the submission of the sole fact of his negligence, and even if plaintiff's negligence in not having brakes is established beyond question, the fact question of its contributory nature is still for the jury.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

5034.41 Horns and warning devices.

Sounding horn—driver's discretion—jury question. In an automobile damage action, a driver of an automobile is not guilty of negligence as a matter of law for failure to sound horn as he approaches an intersection, since the statute does not require the sounding of the horn under any and all conditions. The propriety of using the horn is left to the reasonable discretion of the driver, and is a fact rather than a law question. The jury determines whether the sounding of a horn would have avoided the accident.

Short v Powell, 228- ; 291 NW 406

5034.47 Windshields unobstructed.

Accident at crossing. The operator of a vehicle is guilty of negligence in driving upon a railway crossing in front of an approaching train (1) when he knows the train is approaching the crossing, (2) when the train is in plain sight for a material distance from the crossing, and (3) when his failure to see the train, at best, was because of a known obstruction on his own vehicle.

Sodemann v Railway, 215-827; 244 NW 865

Parking vehicle in order to clean windshield. The driver of an automobile cannot be deemed negligent per se (1) in stopping his car on the right-hand side of the road with the major part of the car on the dirt shoulder bordering the pavement for the purpose of restoring visibility by cleaning the sleet from his windshield nor (2) in stepping out of the car and upon the running board—he, up to the time of said act, not having seen an approaching car.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770; 35 NCCA 819; 39 NCCA 308

5034.49 Restrictions as to tire equipment.

Stopping on highway. Stopping a motor vehicle directly on a public highway because of the soft condition of the shoulder of the highway, in order to make unavoidable repairs on the vehicle necessitated by the unexpected blowing out of tires, does not, in and of itself, constitute negligence at common law.

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660; 36 NCCA 102

Tire blowout as sole and only cause of injury—proper instruction. In a personal injury action against an automobile owner, where plaintiff complained of instruction denying a recovery if the blowing out of the tire was the sole and only cause of the damage for the alleged reason that the instruction was not warranted by evidence showing that the car, after swerving to the left, veered back and forth, eventually going into the ditch on right side of the road, as this evidence refuted the driver's testimony that she was excited and did nothing to gain control of the car, held, the question of driver's negligence was before the jury, and the instruction was proper.

Band v Reinke, 227-458; 288 NW 629

5034.56 Trucks to carry flares.

"Motor trucks and combinations thereof"—scope of term. A service car consisting of an ordinary touring automobile with the rear part of the body removed, and a wrecking crane substituted therefor, is not a "truck or combination thereof" within the meaning of §5067-e1, C., '35, which, under named conditions, requires "motor trucks or combinations thereof" to carry and display portable flares.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505; 39 NCCA 302

5034.57 Display of flares.

Lamps on parked vehicles. See under §5034.04

Violation of statute—when inconsequential. The violation by a motorist of the statute relative to setting out a "flare" beside a truck standing on the highway constitutes inconsequential negligence as to another motorist who, without the flare, had timely knowledge of every fact that a flare would have furnished.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505; 39 NCCA 326

Truck trailer jackknifed across road—sufficiency of time to set out flares. In an action at law to recover damages for personal injuries received when car in which plaintiff was riding collided with the trailer of a tractor-trailer unit which had stalled on an icy hill at night on a country highway, and had jackknifed across highway, and where it is claimed the operators of the trailer unit failed to comply with statute requiring such standing vehicles to set out flares, and where operators claimed a warning was given by waving an ordinary flashlight from inside or just outside cab of tractor, the question as to whether operators of trailer unit had sufficient time to set out warning signals, and whether the warning by waving an ordinary flashlight was sufficient to afford a warning of presence of truck and trailer blocking motorists' passage, were proper questions of fact for the jury.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Reliance on another's duty—knowledge of breach no excuse for negligence. A plaintiff, injured by a passing automobile while helping defendant's employee-driver put on tire chains, may not excuse his own lack of due care by testifying that he relied on the driver to place out flares, when as a fact he knew both that the driver had no such intention and that no flares were so placed.

5035.06 Maximum length.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 239

Injuries from operation, or use of highway. The length of a vehicle (34 feet), its load (7 tons), and the space required in which to make a turn (20 to 30 feet) may, especially on a dark night, have a very material bearing on the issue whether the driver, by proof of an attempt to pass around a stalled truck, had legally excused his presumptive negligence in being on the left-hand side of the traveled way at the time of a collision with an oncoming vehicle. Evidence held to present jury question.

McWilliams v Beck, 220-906; 262 NW 781

5035.15 Loading capacity.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 165; '34 AG Op 691

License fee as nonproperty tax. A substantial charge placed by the legislature on motor trucks operated on the public highways, graduated on the weight of the load carried, conceding the same to be a tax, tho termed a "license fee", is not a property tax but a tax imposed for the privilege of using the highways as a place of business, and therefore not within the meaning of Const. Art. VII, §7.

5035.20 Local authorities may restrict.

Excluding travel from street. A city has no legal right to exclude ordinary travel from a public street in order that the street may be used exclusively for coasting.

Dennier v Johnson, 214-770; 240 NW 745

Unguarded street set aside for coasting. A city which temporarily sets aside a public street for coasting purposes is not liable in damages for an injury resulting to a person so using the street, from his coming in contact with an automobile which the city had failed to exclude from the street.

Goodlove v Logan, 217-98; 251 NW 39

See State v Van Trump, 224-504; 275 NW 569

Predicating negligence on unlawful rule. Negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle on the public highway may not be predicated on the violation of a rule adopted without legal authority by the state highway commission.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 626

Disregarding "stop" sign—elements of offense. Defendant in a criminal prosecution for failure to stop his automobile at intersecting roads in obedience to a duly and lawfully erected "stop" sign may be properly convicted tho there is no evidence of careless driving, intent, willfulness, or wantonness except such as may be deduced from the failure to stop, the defendant at the time acting under no compulsion.

State v Wilson, 222-572; 269 NW 205

PARTIES, PROCEDURE UPON ARREST, AND REPORTS IN CRIMINAL CASES

5037.05 Procedure not exclusive.

Speeding charge—unsworn information first challenged on appeal—no waiver. Where a municipal court information charging speeding was not sworn to, defendant did not waive his right to challenge its sufficiency to sustain a conviction, or lose his right to raise such objection on appeal in supreme court by failure to question the sufficiency of information before the trial.

State v Weston, 225-1377; 282 NW 774

Verdict set aside—criminal more readily than civil. Where the verdict is clearly against the weight of evidence, a new trial should be granted, and the appellate court will interfere more readily in a criminal case than in a civil one.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

No request for elaboration of instructions. The instructions must be considered as a whole, and if a criminal defendant asks for no elaboration, he is in no position to complain.

I NEGLIGENCE IN GENERAL

(a) ACTS CONSTITUTING

1. In General

Torts—fundamental laws govern liability. The fundamental and underlying law of torts is that he who does injury to the person or property of another is civilly liable in damages for the injuries inflicted.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Ordinary care—definition reaffirmed. The standard definition of ordinary care need not be augmented by adding an extra word “ordinarily” to the phrases “would do” or “would not do under the circumstances”.

Schalk v Smith, 224-904; 277 NW 303
Johnston v Johnson, 225-77; 279 NW 139;
118 ALR 233

Imprudent operation—essential proof. The operator of an automobile cannot be deemed to have operated his car “in a careless and imprudent manner” unless it is shown that he operated it in a manner different from the manner in which an ordinarily prudent person would have operated it under the circumstances.

Crutchley v Bruce, 214-731; 240 NW 238; 3 NCCA(NS) 332

Predicating negligence on unlawful rule. Negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle on the public highway may not be predicated on the violation of a rule adopted, without legal authority, by the state highway commission.

Albrecht v Const. Co., 218-1205; 257 NW 183; 36 NCCA 713

Definition of negligence approved. Instruction defining “negligence” and otherwise correct is not rendered erroneous because it includes the statement that “such care is proportionate to the apparent danger involved; where the apparent danger is great, a greater care is required than where such apparent danger is slight”. So held against the contention that degrees of negligence are not recognized in this state.

Wolfe v Decker, 221-600; 266 NW 4

Use of known dangerous vehicle. One who continues to ride in an automobile after he knows it is dangerous to do so and without availing himself of the opportunity to have the vehicle repaired is guilty of negligence; especially may he not complain when he happens to occupy such relation to the vehicle as renders it his duty to have repairs made.

Helming v Bank, 206-1213; 220 NW 45

Negligent speed—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held wholly insufficient to show that a truck on the running board of which a boy was riding was operated at a dangerous rate of speed, or that the roadway was rough and uneven.

Nicolino v Const. Co., 211-1190; 235 NW 297

Driving on wrong side of road—effect. Proof that the driver of a motor vehicle was, at the time of meeting and passing another vehicle on a country road, operating his vehicle on the left-hand, or wrong side of the road, establishes, not that the driver was actually negligent, but that he was presumptively negligent.

Despain v Ballard, 218-863; 256 NW 426

Failure to yield right of way—directing verdict improper. The right-of-way law imposes on a person approaching an intersection from the left the duty to yield the way, a violation of which, under ordinary circumstances, constitutes negligence, and in such a case the defendant is not entitled to a directed verdict.

Bletzer v Wilson, 224-884; 276 NW 836

Child on sled—view obstructed by snowbank—negligence. In an action for death of 7-year-old child, where defendant-motorist could not see child because of snowbank, and child, lying on sled, coasted into intersection at 20 or more miles per hour and struck rear wheel of defendant's automobile, the court properly directed verdict for defendant, the evidence being insufficient to establish that defendant was driving at excessive speed, lacked control of his car, failed to maintain proper lookout, or failed to give warning of approach to intersection.

McBride v Stewart, 227-1273; 290 NW 700

Dual negligence in turning into side road. The operator of an automobile who turns into a side road (1) without first noting whether there is sufficient space in which to make the turn with reasonable safety to himself and to all other persons on the highway, and (2) without first signaling such proposed turn, is guilty of dual statutory negligence.

Miller v Lowe, 220-105; 261 NW 822

Unlawful parking. The parking of a motor vehicle at a place where parking is prohibited by a valid city ordinance constitutes negligence and in case a collision occurs with the parked vehicle the said negligence must be deemed to have contributed to the resulting damage.

Riley v Guthrie, 218-422; 255 NW 502; 35 NCCA 818

Violation of statute—when inconsequential. The violation by a motorist of the statute relative to setting out a “flare” beside a truck standing on the highway constitutes inconsequential negligence as to another motorist who, without the flare, had timely knowledge of every fact that a flare would have furnished.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505; 39 NCCA 326; 1 NCCA(NS) 163

Driving without driver's license. The fact that the driver of an automobile had no driver's license at the time of an accident becomes inconsequential when the action is by a passenger and when there is no causal relation between the driver's violation of law and plaintiff's injuries.

Schuster v Gillispie, 217-386; 251 NW 735

Predicating negligence on unlawful rule. Negligence in the operation of a motor vehicle on the public highway may not be predicated on the violation of a rule adopted without legal authority by the state highway commission.

Albrecht v Const. Co., 218-1205; 257 NW 183; 36 NCCA 713

Law of road—excuse for violation. Failure to instruct that defendant may excuse his apparent violation of a law of the road is proper when such instruction, if given, would have no support in the evidence.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Instructions regarding open car door—proper evidence necessary. Submission to jury of a ground of negligence not supported by the evidence is erroneous. So held where trial court submitted specification of negligence that left rear door of defendant's car was open at time of collision with approaching motorcycle, whereas only testimony on this question came from witnesses who were not present until after accident occurred.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Anticipating child coasting—barricades removed—negligence. Where defendant knew that for many years a certain street was barricaded while children were coasting, and that there had been coasting there recently, but where the snow had melted somewhat so that the middle portion of the paving on the hill was bare of snow, and the barricades had been taken down the day before the accident, the defendant was not bound to anticipate and prepare for some child coasting on the hill.

McBride v Stewart, 227-1273; 290 NW 700

2. Driver's Physical Condition

Discussion. See 22 ILR 525—Sleeping at the wheel

(b) RECKLESSNESS DISTINGUISHED

"Reckless operation" defined. To constitute "reckless operation" of a motor vehicle, the plea and proof must be such as to justify a finding that the operator was "proceeding without heed of, or concern for, consequences". Plea and proof of negligent operation only is wholly insufficient.

Siesseger v Puth, 213-164; 239 NW 46; 31 NCCA 84; 34 NCCA 495

Neessen v Armstrong, 213-378; 239 NW 56; 31 NCCA 104

McQuillen v Meyers, 213-1366; 241 NW 442; 34 NCCA 348

Passenger as mere guest (?) or otherwise (?). A passenger riding in an automobile is neither a "guest" nor a mere "invitee" when he is riding therein:

1. For the purpose of performing and in order to perform his duty as a servant of the owner or operator of the car; or

2. For the definite and tangible benefit of the owner or operator; or

3. For the mutual, definite, and tangible benefit of the owner or operator on the one hand, and of the passenger on the other hand.

Knutson v Lurie, 217-192; 251 NW 157; 36 NCCA 275; 37 NCCA 62

Passenger as mere guest (?) or otherwise (?). A passenger in an automobile operated by the owner thereof may be a mere guest or invitee with right to recover for damages consequent on the reckless operation, only, of the car; but he may be a passenger (1) for hire, or (2) for the benefit of said operator, or (3) for the mutual benefit of both operator and himself, with right to recover for damages consequent on mere negligent operation by the driver.

Clendenning v Simerman, 220-739; 263 NW 248

II NEGLIGENCE PER SE(a) IN GENERAL

Negligence—prima facie (?) or per se (?). Where an accident happens upon a public highway outside a city or town, the fact that the vehicle is on the wrong side of the road is only prima facie evidence of negligence. On the other hand, subject to the above, the violation without legal excuse of a standard of care for the operation or equipment of vehicles, whether fixed by statute or ordinance, constitutes negligence per se.

Traveling on wrong side of road. Failure of the driver of an automobile on meeting another vehicle on the highway outside cities and towns, to yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right does not constitute negligence per se, but prima facie evidence of negligence only.

Cooley v Killingsworth, 209-646; 228 NW 880
 Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783
 Despain v Ballard, 218-863; 256 NW 426
 Hobbs v Traut, 218-1265; 257 NW 320
 Rainey v Riese, 219-164; 257 NW 346
 McManus v Creamery Co., 219-860; 259 NW 921

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540
 Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Negligence per se (?) or prima facie (?). An instruction that negligence may consist in the failure to do that which the law commands, in connection with an instruction that the statute requires drivers of vehicles to turn to the right when meeting, in effect directs the jury that the failure to turn to the right constitutes negligence in and of itself, and such instruction is erroneous because the failure to obey said statute creates a presumption, only, of negligence.

Ryan v Perry Works, 215-363; 245 NW 301

Left-side driving in municipalities. The operator of a motor vehicle in cities and towns is guilty of negligence per se in driving on the left-hand side of a street without legal excuse.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Control of car. Manifestly the court cannot find that a motorist did not have his car under control while attempting to pass another car, and was therefore guilty of negligence per se, when the position and speed of the cars at the time of the collision are in sharp dispute.

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

Passing vehicle—premature return to traveled path. The operator of a vehicle is guilty of negligence per se when, after passing another vehicle moving in the same direction, he returns to the right-hand side of the highway and in front of the vehicle just passed, within a shorter distance than that provided by law.

Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Turn at intersection. The operator of a westbound automobile, who makes a left-hand turn at an intersecting street, and thereupon increases his speed, in order to escape a collision with an eastbound car which he knows is but some 40 feet west of the intersection and approaching it at a speed twice his own speed, is guilty of negligence per se.

Parrack v McGaffey, 217-368; 251 NW 871

Improper left-hand turn. A left-hand turn from one highway into another highway contrary to the direction of the statute (§5033, C., '35 [§5025.01, C., '39]) constitutes negligence per se in the absence of plea and proof of a valid excuse.

Wilson v Long, 221-668; 266 NW 482

Prior statute. The failure of the owner of a truck, before making a left turn into an intersecting highway, to drive to the right of and beyond the center of the intersection, constitutes negligence per se and if such owner is injured his negligence will be classified as contributory negligence per se if such conclusion is the only one to which reasonable minds could arrive.

Mansfield v Summers, 222-837; 270 NW 417

Failure to signal at unknown intersection—effect. The driver of an automobile may not be said to be negligent per se for failure to sound a signaling device upon approaching an intersecting and completely hidden highway, of the existence of which he had no knowledge, in fact or reason.

Sexauer v Dunlap, 207-1018; 222 NW 420

Plaintiff's negligence per se not necessarily contributory. A plaintiff riding in his automobile driven by his son who enters an obscured intersection without sounding his horn, (§5043, C., '35 [§5031.03, C., '39]), is guilty of negligence per se, imputable from his son, but a jury question arises as to whether or not this contributed to the injury when from the evidence it is questionable whether defendant could have heard such signal had it been given.

In re Green, 224-1268; 278 NW 285

Negligence per se in approaching crossing. Negligence per se is revealed in the act of the driver of an automobile in approaching and entering an obscured public crossing (with which he was familiar) with knowledge that another vehicle was also rapidly and immediately approaching said intersection from his right, and failing either (1) to sound his horn or (2) to yield the right of way. (See Vol. I, §5028 et seq.)

Masonholder v O'Toole, 203-884; 210 NW 778; 31 NCCA 44

Approaching arterial highway. The operator of an automobile on a county trunk arterial highway (on which no "stop" or "slow" signs had been erected at points intersected by county local roads) is guilty of negligence per se in knowingly approaching an obscured intersection without either (1) slacking his speed (of some 25 or 30 miles per hour), or (2) giving some warning signal of his approach as required by §5043, C., '31 [§5031.03, C., '39]. (But see Dikel v Mathers, 213 Iowa 76.)

Lang v Kollasch, 218-391; 255 NW 493; 37 NCCA 74

(a) IN GENERAL—continued

Approaching intersection—failure to look to left. The mere fact that the operator of an automobile in approaching, on a rainy day, and at a moderate rate of speed, an intersection which afforded a clear view to all travelers, fails to look to his left for approaching vehicles, does not constitute negligence per se.

Roe v Kurtz, 203-906; 210 NW 550; 33 NCCA 409

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874
Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Intersecting county roads. The operator of an automobile on a county trunk road (an arterial highway), having the right of way over traffic on an intersecting local county road, is not guilty of negligence per se in entering such an intersection, with his car under apparent control, and without seeing a car approaching from his right at a high and dangerous rate of speed.

Arends v DeBruyn, 217-529; 252 NW 249; 37 NCCA 78

Primary roads—right of way—contributory negligence per se. Inasmuch as vehicles traveling on a primary road have right of way at intersections with nonprimary roads, the operator of a vehicle on a nonprimary road is guilty of negligence per se when he attempts to cross an intersection with a primary road, at a speed of 10 miles per hour, when he knows or ought to know that another vehicle on the primary road is, at a distance of 80 or 90 feet, approaching the intersection at a speed very greatly in excess of 10 miles per hour.

Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689; 37 NCCA 67

Failure to yield right of way—directed verdict. Where the automobile of plaintiff's intestate collided with defendant's truck at a highway intersection, and the physical facts showed that plaintiff's intestate had violated statutes in not keeping his car under control and not yielding the right of way to the truck, which had entered the intersection first, plaintiff's intestate was therefore guilty of negligence per se which contributed directly to his death, and which entitled the truck owner to a directed verdict.

Young v Clark, 226-1066; 285 NW 633

Accidents at crossings. The driver of a conveyance is guilty of negligence per se when, in approaching an unobscured railway crossing with which he is perfectly familiar, in full possession of his faculties, and with no distracting circumstance or emergency facing him, he, when 20 feet from the crossing, sees an engine approaching at a distance of 175 feet, and knows that the bell is not ringing, and thereafter drives upon the crossing without in any manner observing or judging of the speed of the engine; and this is true even tho the engine is in fact running in violation of an ordinance relative to the speed of trains and to the ringing of the engine bell.

Erlich v Davis, 202-317; 208 NW 515; 27 NCCA 164

Driving upon car tracks. The driver of a conveyance is guilty of negligence per se when, upon reaching a street intersection on a clear day, he has positive knowledge that a nearby streetcar is rapidly approaching the same intersection from a side street, and when he, without again looking at the approaching streetcar and confronted by no emergency, continues his journey into the intersection at a speed which would enable him to stop his conveyance instantly, and turns and enters upon the streetcar tracks in the direction in which the streetcar is moving.

Middleton v Railway, 209-1278; 227 NW 915

Negligence per se in driving upon car tracks. The driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se when, upon entering during the daytime a private crossing over much-used interurban railway tracks located on a curve, he knows when some 25 feet from the track in question that his view of an apprehended approaching car is limited to 300 feet, and when he avails himself of such view and sees no approaching car, and thereupon proceeds to attempt, under no diverting circumstances, to cross the tracks at a rate of three miles per hour without looking or listening for the apprehended car, tho his view of the track materially enlarged as he proceeded.

Rosenberg v Railway, 213-152; 238 NW 703

Driving upon unobstructed streetcar tracks. The operator of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se when, in the nighttime, and without diverting circumstances, and at a speed such that he could have stopped within 2 feet, he drives upon a streetcar track and immediately in front of an approaching and lighted streetcar which was at all material time in unobstructed view.

Crull v Railway, 217-83; 250 NW 905

Streetcar intersection—negligence per se. The operator of an automobile cannot be said to be negligent per se in driving into an intersection on a dark night in front of a rapidly oncoming streetcar with no headlight and with the entire front end of the streetcar unlighted, when, immediately before entering the intersection, he stops and listens, and looks both ways for streetcars, and sees none (so he testifies) because of the glare of oil station lights immediately to his left from which side the streetcar was approaching, and especially when there is evidence that the streetcar was approaching without audible signals.

Deiling v Railway, 217-687; 251 NW 622

Collision with streetcar. The operator of an automobile who, without diverting circumstances, approaches and drives upon streetcar tracks, and looks for an approaching streetcar at a place where he knows his view is very limited because of an intervening embankment, and fails to look at a point where he would still be within a zone of safety and where his view would be unobstructed, is guilty of negligence per se.

Pender v Railway, 217-1152; 251 NW 55

Driving into streetcar. The driver of a truck is guilty of negligence per se when, without any apparent necessity for so doing, he attempts to steer his vehicle out of a groove or rut in the street, with the result that the vehicle suddenly responded to his efforts, bounded out of the rut, and darted diagonally across the street for a distance of 20 feet, and into an oncoming streetcar, of the prior presence and actions of which he had the fullest knowledge.

Bowers v Railway, 219-944; 259 NW 244

Colliding with traffic signal. An experienced driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se when, near midnight, while traveling in the center of a 26-foot wide, brilliantly lighted, paved street with which he was familiar, he drives squarely head-on in the center of the street against a railroad traffic signal consisting of a concrete base 4 feet wide, 2 feet high, and 5 feet long, surmounted by an iron pole several feet high and noticeably painted with black and white diagonal stripes, on which pole at the time were crossarms bearing in large letters the words "railroad crossing" and two burning lights.

Van Gorden v City, 216-209; 245 NW 736; 4 NCCA (NS) 291

Limb of tree as street obstruction. One who, in broad daylight and without diverting circumstances, drives along a public street with which he is familiar, and permits his vehicle to come in contact with a perfectly visible limb of a tree overhanging the traveled part of the street is guilty of negligence per se.

Abraham v Sioux City, 218-1068; 250 NW 461

Riding in exposed position. The act of a person in riding on the rear, rounded surface of a coupe, and in such a position that he cannot see what is happening ahead of the car, does not constitute negligence per se when the injury to such person arose out of a collision with another car.

Hamilton v Boyd, 218-885; 256 NW 290; 37 NCCA 664

Arm out of window. The driver of an automobile is not necessarily guilty of negligence per se in driving with his left arm slightly protruding through the left window of his car.

Olson v Tyner, 219-251; 257 NW 538

Taking obviously dangerous position on highway. A motorist is guilty of negligence per se when, with darkness rapidly falling, and with his unlighted car stalled on a substantial upgrade, and substantially across the right-hand side of a known heavily-traveled, ice-covered street, he deliberately places himself on that side of his car toward which traffic would be directly moving, and, with his back to such oncoming traffic, attempts to back his car into a private driveway, knowing at the time that the view of an approaching driver would be seriously impaired by the lights of a car which at that moment had passed him, and which was moving toward said approaching driver.

Fortman v McBride, 220-1003; 263 NW 345; 39 NCCA 330

Place of stopping on highway. It is not negligence per se for a motorist, on a moonlit, foggy night, with his rear lights burning and discernible for a distance of 30 rods, to stop, for a period of from 2 to 5 minutes on the extreme right-hand side of a long, straight, level stretch of an 18-foot wide paved road, for the purpose of removing the loose or broken chains on his tires, even tho he might have stopped on a 6-foot wide slippery and muddy dirt shoulder.

Goodlove v Logan, 219-1380; 261 NW 496

Stopping on highway to clean windshield. The driver of an automobile cannot be deemed negligent per se (1) in stopping his car on the right-hand side of the road with the major part of the car on the dirt shoulder bordering the pavement for the purpose of restoring visibility by cleaning the sleet from his windshield, nor (2) in stepping out of the car and upon the running board—he, up to the time of said act, not having seen an approaching car.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770; 35 NCCA 819; 39 NCCA 308

Stopping on highway at night. It is not negligence per se for a motorist, traveling on a dark, misty, and foggy night, on the proper side of a dark, 28-foot wide roadway, to stop, with his lights in full operation, and immediately to step from the car and into the traveled way.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782; 1 NCCA (NS) 157

Emergency—turning to right to avoid pedestrian. The driver of an automobile who is driving south on the right-hand side of a north and south highway is not guilty of negligence per se because, in order to avoid hitting a child running across the highway from the east side, he turns still farther to the right, even tho it later appears that had he kept his course or had turned to the left he might have avoided hitting the child.

Garmoe v Colthurst, 215-729; 246 NW 767

Unavoidable accident. Evidence reviewed and held to reveal per se no act of negligence

II NEGLIGENCE PER SE—continued(a) IN GENERAL—continued on the part of a motorist in coming into collision with a child who suddenly and unexpectedly darted from a hidden cover into the pathway of the car.

Chipokas v Peterson, 219-1072; 260 NW 37; 113 ALR 524; 3 NCCA(NS) 334

Pedestrian in center of highway. A pedestrian who, with normal sight and hearing, travels on a clear night in a space which is substantially 2 feet wide and which is marked by parallel black lines drawn along the center of a straight, 18-foot, paved highway, with an unobstructed view both to his front and rear of more than a quarter of a mile, with full opportunity to walk on the smooth, 6-foot-wide dirt shoulders bordering the pavement, is guilty of negligence per se.

Lindloff v Duecker, 217-326; 251 NW 698; 34 NCCA 234

Pedestrian—failure to keep lookout to rear. The foreman of a paving outfit is guilty of negligence per se in walking along the unpaved portion of a rough road for a distance of some 200 feet without making any observations to his rear for trucks which he knew were being backed along said road and in his immediate direction at the rate of one truck each 90 seconds.

Hedberg v Lester, 222-1025; 270 NW 447

Crossing highway without looking. An adult person, after alighting from an automobile which had been stopped substantially astraddle the north edge of an 18-foot pavement on a heavily traveled country highway, is guilty of negligence per se in attempting to walk to the south and across said pavement without making any observations to his unobstructed right for eastbound vehicles.

Zuck v Larson, 222-842; 270 NW 384

Minor walking on wrong side of highway—contributory negligence as matter of law. In a law action for damages where it is shown that plaintiff's decedent, a 15-year-old boy, was violating statute requiring pedestrians to walk on the left side of a highway, by walking along right side about 4 or 5 feet from west side of highway, and failing to make observations as to oncoming traffic from the rear while walking after dark on a street traversed by a through highway, held, he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825

"Stop and go" signals—change after entering intersection. A pedestrian who, in obedience to a municipally operated "go" signal, starts across the street on the pathway provided for pedestrians, and suddenly discovers that said "go" signal has changed to "stop", is not guilty of negligence per se in failing to look for, see, and avoid a vehicle which, under said change in signals, passes entirely across the intersection and hits and injures said pedestrian within less than two seconds after said change in signals occurs; especially is this true (1) when said pedestrian has, by ordinance, the right of way over said vehicle because he was first properly to enter said intersection, and (2) when said pedestrian, at the very instant of said change in signals, was immediately approaching other stationary vehicles known to be awaiting release from a "stop" signal.

Dougherty v McFee, 221-391; 265 NW 176

Crossing traffic-congested street. A pedestrian who, while crossing a traffic-congested street at a place other than the place specifically provided for such crossing, fails to look for approaching vehicles, or voluntarily steps in front of an immediately approaching vehicle which he does see, is guilty of negligence per se.

Spaulding v Miller, 216-948; 249 NW 642; 35 NCCA 676

Legal avoidance. The operator of a vehicle who has failed to comply with a statutory or ordinance standard of care governing the operation or equipment of his vehicle may excuse such failure, and thereby avoid the legal imputation of negligence per se, by establishing (1) any excuse specifically provided by statute, or (2) that, without his fault, circumstances rendered compliance with the law impossible.

Kisling v Thierman, 214-911; 243 NW 552; 36 NCCA 90; 37 NCCA 494

Legal excuse—what constitutes. The operator of a vehicle who has failed to comply with a statutory standard of care may avoid the consequences thereof by establishing as legal excuse (1) anything making it impossible to comply, (2) anything over which he has no control which places his vehicle in a position contrary to the law, (3) that he was confronted with an emergency not of his own making, or (4) any excuse specifically provided by statute.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Violating statute without legal excuse—burden of proof. An instruction stating that if a defendant motorist failed to comply with the requirements of a statute "without legal excuse", then the verdict should be for the plaintiff, does not shift plaintiff's burden of proof on the defendant.

Schalk v Smith, 224-913; 277 NW 303

Assured clear distance ahead. The driver of an automobile, in the nighttime and on a public highway, when faced by no emergency or diverting circumstance, is guilty of negligence per se in so driving that he cannot stop within the radius of his lights.

Ellis v Bruce, 217-258; 252 NW 101; 36 NCCA 136; 1 NCCA(NS) 10

Absence of lights. The operator of an automobile who, on a dark and foggy night, operates his car without lights, because he believes he can see better without them, is guilty of negligence per se.

Caudle v Zenor, 217-77; 251 NW 69; 34 NCCA 122; 1 NCCA(NS) 44

Absence of tail light. The parking, during the nighttime, of a motor vehicle upon a paved highway outside a city or town, with the tail lights extinguished, constitutes negligence per se, in the absence of a showing of legal excuse.

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660

(b) EXCESSIVE SPEED

Instruction—presumption of negligence—error. Operating an automobile upon the public highway at a speed prohibited by law constitutes negligence per se, and error results from instructing that such operation creates a presumption of negligence.

Codner v Stowe, 201-800; 208 NW 330; 26 NCCA 207

Holub v Fitzgerald, 214-857; 243 NW 575

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660; 1 NCCA(NS) 50

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

Grover v Neibauer, 216-631; 247 NW 298

Prohibited speed negligence per se. A violation of the statute that no person shall drive any vehicle on a highway at a speed greater than will permit him to bring it to a stop within the assured clear distance ahead permits of no escape from the imputation of negligence per se, except on plea and proof of a recognized legal excuse for so driving.

Ellis v Bruce, 217-258; 252 NW 101; 36 NCCA 136; 1 NCCA(NS) 10

Hart v Stence, 219-55; 257 NW 434; 97 ALR 335; 36 NCCA 716; 1 NCCA(NS) 23

Swan v Auto Co., 221-842; 265 NW 143; 1 NCCA(NS) 58

Inability to stop within assured clear distance. The driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence per se in driving at such a rate of speed that he cannot stop within the distance that a discernible obstruction may be seen ahead of the car. So held as to a driver who, blinded by the lights of a stationary car by the roadside, nevertheless continued his speed for some material distance, and, when too late to stop, discovered an unlighted truck in the highway.

Lindquist v Thierman, 216-170; 248 NW 504; 87 ALR 893; 1 NCCA(NS) 38

Assured clear distance—negligence. The failure of the driver of an automobile to drive at such speed as will permit him to bring the car to a stop within the assured clear distance ahead constitutes, in the absence of some legal excuse, negligence per se. And such excuse is not made to appear by evidence that the driver met a car and was temporarily blinded by the lights shining in his face but did not slacken his speed.

Wosoba v Kenyon, 215-226; 243 NW 569; 1 NCCA(NS) 63, 747

Willemsen v Reedy, 215-193; 244 NW 691

Overtaking and passing—circumstances controlling. The operator of a motor vehicle, who, at a speed of 40 miles per hour and in the nighttime, attempts to pass another vehicle which he is closely following, at the very time when the operator of such other vehicle is attempting to pass a vehicle which he has overtaken, is guilty of negligence per se, both because he (1) is manifestly driving at an imprudent rate of speed under the circumstances, and (2) is driving at a rate of speed which will not enable him to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660; 1 NCCA(NS) 50

Proximate cause. The act of passing a vehicle at an illegal rate of speed may not be declared negligence per se as to a collision which occurred after the passing had been completely effected.

Berridge v Pray, 202-663; 210 NW 916; 29 NCCA 560

Proximate cause—noncausal negligence. Excessive or negligent speed of an automobile becomes immaterial when it is not the proximate cause of the injury in question.

McDowell v Interstate Co., 208-641; 224 NW 58; 35 NCCA 21

Speed as nonproximate cause. A rate of speed which is not negligence per se cannot be deemed the proximate cause of an accident when the act of the injured party in stepping into the pathway of the car was so sudden and unexpected as to render impossible the stopping of the car.

Hawk v Anderson, 218-358; 253 NW 32; 35 NCCA 1

Directed verdict—improper unless per se negligence also contributory. A plaintiff motorist, against whom a directed verdict was rendered because in violating a speed statute he was negligent per se, still should have had the benefit of the best possible view of the evidence, and, moreover, a record showing that he remained at all times on his own side of the road, but that a truck driver, for no apparent reason, drove across the pavement center line, resulting in a head-on collision, makes a jury question as to whether or not plaintiff's per se negligence contributed to his injury.

McIntyre v West Co., 225-739; 281 NW 353

Speed statute violation—per se negligence must contribute to bar recovery. As involved

II NEGLIGENCE PER SE—concluded

(b) EXCESSIVE SPEED—concluded in a motor vehicle collision, the act of driving a motor vehicle at a speed of more than 25 miles an hour in a residence district, being in violation of statute, is negligence as a matter of law, but unless such negligence contributes to the injuries, it will not defeat recovery.

McIntyre v West Co., 225-739; 281 NW 353

Speed at intersection—jury question. A motor vehicle operator who materially and intentionally increases the speed of his vehicle "when approaching and traversing a highway intersection"—seemingly in violation of §5031, C., '35 [5023.04, C., '39], is not necessarily guilty of negligence per se.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 272 NW 169

Insufficient evidence. Evidence held wholly insufficient to show that a truck, on the running board of which a boy was riding, was operated at a dangerous rate of speed, or that the roadway was rough and uneven.

Nicolino v Const. Co., 211-1190; 235 NW 297

Excess of statutory rate. It is correct to instruct the jury that a driver of an automobile is guilty of negligence if he drives "at a high and dangerous rate", such being the allegation of the petition and the evidence tending to show a speed materially in excess of the maximum speed allowed by statute.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

III CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

(a) IN GENERAL

Plaintiff's conduct—conflict in evidence. The presence or absence of contributory negligence is generally a jury question, and two elements are involved, (1) what plaintiff did, and (2) the effect of his action; if either or both of said propositions present uncertainty, there is a jury question.

Riggs v Pan-American Co., 225-1051; 283 NW 250

Model instruction. Courts, in instructing as to contributory negligence which will bar recovery, should employ the model instruction approved by the appellate court, viz: "If the injured party contributed in any way or in any degree directly to the injury complained of there can be no recovery", but it is not erroneous to substitute "cooperated" or an equivalent term for "contributed".

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 787

Correct definition. Preferably, the court should instruct that contributory negligence which will defeat a recovery by plaintiff is that negligence which "directly contributes to the damage in any degree or in anyway", but, of course, the court may employ any other clearly equivalent expression.

Rogers v Lagomarcino-Grupe Co., 215-1270; 248 NW 1

Degree or extent barring recovery—model instruction. It is strictly accurate to instruct, in an action for damages for negligently inflicted injuries; that before plaintiff can recover, he must establish as a fact that he, himself, "was not guilty of any negligence that contributed in any manner or degree directly to his own injury".

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505; 1 NCCA(NS) 166

Adequate definition. An instruction which defines "contributory negligence" as such negligence as "helps" to produce the injury complained of is not erroneous when accompanied by a correct definition of negligence generally.

Swan v Dailey Co., 221-842; 265 NW 143

"Cause of injury"—language approved. A contributory negligence instruction in a motor vehicle collision case stating that if such negligence "became or constituted * * * a cause of the injury" reviewed and held correct.

Smithson v Mommsen, 224-307; 276 NW 47

Negligence must "directly" contribute. Instruction reaffirmed requiring plaintiff's negligence to contribute "directly" to the injuries before it will defeat recovery.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Sole cause of injury. An instruction that "where a party is injured and such injury is due to his own negligence he cannot recover", tho incorporated in a paragraph defining contributory negligence, does not have the effect of declaring that the contributory negligence which will bar an injured party from recovering must be a negligence which is the sole cause of the injury.

Ryan v Rendering Wks., 215-363; 245 NW 301

Need not be proximate cause of injury. Contributory negligence in order to defeat recovery need not be the proximate cause of the injury in question. It is only necessary that such negligence contributes to the injury in some degree or in some manner.

Hogan v Nesbit, 216-75; 246 NW 270

Schuster v Gillispie, 217-386; 251 NW 735

Proximate cause. The contributory negligence which will defeat a plaintiff is such negligence as contributes to the injury in any way or in any degree. Error results from instructing that such negligence must contribute proximately to the injury.

Hamilton v Boyd, 218-885; 256 NW 290

Instructions — proximate cause — incurable error. An instruction that, before plaintiff can recover for alleged negligently inflicted injuries, he must establish that he "was free from contributory negligence that contributed to, or was the proximate cause of such injuries", is entirely erroneous insofar as reference is made to "proximate cause", and the error is not cured by another instruction to the effect that the instructions should be construed "as a whole".

Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Freedom from contributory negligence—failure to instruct. An instruction which summarizes all the elements that plaintiff must prove to make a case, and directs the jury that if these elements and conditions existed, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, is fatally defective when no reference whatever is made to plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. And, in such case, the error is not cured by the fact that in other instructions the jury is instructed that plaintiff must be free from contributory negligence.

Bobst v Hoxie Line, 221-823; 267 NW 673

Contributory negligence—fatally inconsistent instructions. After properly instructing that plaintiff, before she could recover, must establish her entire freedom from contributory negligence, the court commits a fatal inconsistency by instructing that plaintiff could not be charged with negligence in not choosing some other highway than the one in question on which to travel, unless defendant has proven that plaintiff knew or ought to have known that the highway on which she was traveling was in a dangerous condition.

Kehm v Dilts, 222-826; 270 NW 388

Instructions—error in quoting statute only. In submitting specifications of alleged contributory negligence, the court commits error in simply quoting the statute relating to these grounds without defining just what acts of plaintiff, under the evidence, would constitute contributory negligence, and without applying the law to the facts.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Lack of evidence—effect. An instruction which properly directs the jury, in determining the issue of contributory negligence of an injured party, to take into consideration certain enumerated matters as shown by the evidence is not necessarily erroneous because it makes no reference to the effect of a lack of evidence on the subject.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Nonduty to anticipate negligence. An instruction on the subject of contributory negligence is erroneous when it, in effect, requires the person in question to anticipate negligence on the part of the driver of an approaching vehicle.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Requests—right to assume care by plaintiff. A requested instruction in a personal injury action, to the effect that defendant had a right to assume that plaintiff would commit no act of negligence contributing to his own injury, is properly refused (1) when defendant in driving as he did was not influenced by plaintiff's actions, and (2) when the record shows that the jury found that plaintiff was not guilty of any act of contributory negligence.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Most favorable view rule. On motion for directed verdict in determining whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to him.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

Defendant's negligence also considered—directing verdict. In a personal injury action on account of the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, the court, on a motion for directed verdict, should, before considering contributory negligence of the plaintiff, consider the evidence as to negligence on the part of the defendant being a proximate cause of the injury.

Youngman v Sloan, 225-558; 281 NW 130

Law of case. A holding on appeal, that plaintiff in a personal injury action based on alleged negligence was himself guilty of contributory negligence, is the absolute law of the case on retrial on the same state of facts.

Spaulding v Miller, 220-1107; 264 NW 8

Driving from private driveway. Evidence relative to the act of driving from a private driveway into a public highway in front of an approaching car reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Tinley v Implement Co., 216-458; 249 NW 390

Failure to see or hear. Principle reaffirmed that he who failed either to see what was plainly visible or to hear what was clearly audible must be deemed not to have looked or listened at all.

Sodemann v Railway, 215-827; 244 NW 865

Entering highway without looking. The occupants of an eastbound automobile were guilty of contributory negligence per se under testimony that upon arriving at an intersecting north and south street, on a clear day, they looked to the south without obstruction for a distance of at least 225 feet, and saw no approaching car, and thereupon entered the intersection and moved across the same at 10 miles per hour, but before they had fully cleared the intersection were hit by a northbound car traveling at the rate of 40 or 50 miles per hour.

Hewitt v Ogle, 219-46; 256 NW 755

Contributory negligence per se. Record reviewed and held to establish contributory negligence on the part of a motorist in driving into a highway intersection and turning to the left (1) without first observing whether he had sufficient space in which safely to make said turn, (2) without first reducing his speed to a reasonable rate, a rate which would permit a stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) without first driving to the right of, and beyond the center of, said intersection, before turning to the left.

Wimer v Bottling Co., 221-120; 264 NW 262

When not determined as matter of law. In action for personal injuries and damage to automobile resulting from collision with defendant's automobile, plaintiff is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law for failure to maintain lookout, yield right of way, and make proper stop before entering arterial highway, when evidence discloses that as plaintiff was about to cross an arterial highway, he looked to the right and saw defendant's automobile at a distance of 150 feet and then proceeded across intersection at speed of between 5 and 10 miles per hour until defendant's automobile collided with right rear wheel of plaintiff's automobile—more than half of plaintiff's automobile being out of the intersection.

Cowles v Joelson, 226-1202; 286 NW 419

Diverting circumstances. The operator of an automobile when entering upon a known railway crossing is held to know that he is entering a zone of danger; yet (1) the absence of statutory signals, (2) the obscured nature of the crossing, and (3) the distracting influence of other passing vehicles and of nearby objects may save the operator from the imputation of contributory negligence per se.

Nederhiser v Railway, 202-285; 208 NW 856; 27 NCCA 86

"Double passing." Evidence relative to the facts attending a "double passing" reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144; 33 NCCA 476

Standing on endless track of tractor to fill gas tank. Where defendant, engaged in road construction work, was using caterpillar tractor-pulled dump wagons, and while plaintiff, a gasoline tank-wagon operator, was standing on the caterpillar's endless track filling the gasoline tank, the tractor suddenly started moving, throwing plaintiff in path of another oncoming tractor-towed dirt wagon which ran over and injured him, and altho defendant claims that plaintiff was on the tractor at his own peril, even when the peril was created by defendant, the question as to whether plaintiff acted as ordinarily prudent person or was guilty of contributory negligence was for jury.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

Insufficient showing. Evidence held insufficient to show contributory negligence per se in not seeing, in the nighttime, an unlighted approaching vehicle.

Carlson v Decker, 216-581; 247 NW 296; 36 NCCA 91

Collision with stationary truck. The position of an unlighted truck parked in the highway, and the diverting circumstances occurring just preceding a collision with the truck, may have a very material bearing on the issue of plaintiff's contributory negligence, and the assured clear distance rule.

Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151; 1 NCCA (NS) 42

Persons working on highway. In a laborer's personal injury action against a truck driver for backing truck into laborer while both were engaged in highway construction, §5017.06, C., '39, exempting persons and motor vehicles actually engaged in work upon the highway from the motor vehicle law requirements, does not exempt a truck driver from using his horn if necessary in the exercise of ordinary care when backing from an intersection onto highway under construction. Question of defendant's negligence in not sounding horn nor observing plaintiff's presence when backing truck where men were working, and question of plaintiff's contributory negligence while working under foreman's instruction at outside edge of road were questions properly submitted to jury.

Rebmann v Heesch, 227-566; 288 NW 695

Injuries to child—improper direction of verdict. Record reviewed relative to the facts attending the alleged negligent infliction of injuries on a child, and held to be such as to render improper the direction of a verdict for defendant, especially as said child was of such tender years as to be, presumptively, incapable of negligence.

Johnson v Selindh, 221-378; 265 NW 622; 39 NCCA 289, 565

Bicyclist's observation of parked car in time to avoid collision. Where a minor bicyclist collided with a car unlawfully parked on left side of city street without tail light, when he pulled over to his right to avoid an approaching car, the question of his contributory negligence, which depended on whether or not he should have observed the parked car in time to avoid the collision, was for the jury.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

Foreign statutes—right to plead. In an action in this state to recover damages sustained in a foreign state in consequence of the alleged actionable negligence of defendant in operating an automobile in said foreign state, plaintiff may plead those statutes and rules of law of said foreign state from which actionable negligence, under the facts of the case, are deducible, e. g., those (1) which declare the degree of care required of defendant in such operation in said foreign state, and (2) the nature and degree of plaintiff's contributory negligence which will bar his action, said pleaded statutes and laws being of the very essence of plaintiff's cause of action, and not contrary to the public policy of this state, even tho they exact a greater degree of care than would be exacted by the law of this state had the injury occurred in this state.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617; 1 NCCA (NS) 292

Evidence sufficiency. Evidence held to establish contributory negligence per se in the operation of an automobile.

Plummer v Wright, 214-318; 242 NW 28

Insufficient evidence. Evidence held insufficient to establish contributory negligence per se.

Wambeam v Hayes, 205-1394; 219 NW 813
Riddle v Frankl, 215-1083; 247 NW 493

Sudden emergency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to establish contributory negligence per se on the part of a motorist, especially in view of the fact that he was faced by a sudden, almost instantaneous emergency which was not of his making.

McKinnon v Guthrie, 221-400; 265 NW 620

Jury question. Record reviewed relative to a fatal accident at a highway intersection, and held that plaintiff had not shown that the deceased was free from contributory negligence.

Nyswander v Gonser, 218-136; 253 NW 829

(b) DEFINITION

Instruction. No particular or fixed phraseology is required in conveying to a jury, in a case founded on negligence, the idea that plaintiff cannot recover if he has, by his own negligence, contributed in any degree to his own injury.

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

Contributory negligence — degree barring recovery. In an action for damages based on actionable negligence of the defendant, the quantum of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff which will absolutely bar recovery is any negligence which directly contributes to said injury "in any way or in any degree". Any material departure in the instructions from this statement of the law must be deemed reversible error.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561
Rogers v Lagomarcino Co., 215-1270; 248 NW 1

Hellberg v Lund, 217-1; 250 NW 192

Becvar v Batesole, 218-858; 256 NW 297

Hamilton v Boyd, 218-885; 256 NW 290

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

Megggers v Kinley, 221-383; 265 NW 614

Swan v Auto Co., 221-842; 265 NW 143

Clark v Berry Seed Co., 225-262; 280 NW 505

Contributory negligence defined. It is not reversible error to define contributory negligence as negligence which proximately causes an injury or which in some degree contributes to the bringing about of such injury.

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

O'Hara v Chaplin, 211-404; 233 NW 516

McDougal v Bormann, 211-950; 234 NW 807

Adequate definition. Instructions defining contributory negligence as negligence which contributes to cause the injury and stating that before plaintiff could recover he must establish by a preponderance of the evidence that he was not guilty of any negligence that in any degree contributed to cause of collision were not erroneous and did not tell jury such negligence must be a proximate cause before it would prevent recovery.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Degree—fundamental error. An unobjectionable definition of contributory negligence is converted into fundamental error by the addition of the clause "and but for such negligence on the part of the person injured the injury would not have occurred."

Ryan v Rendering Wks., 215-363; 245 NW 301

Direct contribution to injury. Principle reasserted that negligence is not contributory unless it contributes directly to plaintiff's injury.

Engle v Ungles, 223-780; 273 NW 879

(c) DRIVER

Speed statute violation—per se negligence must contribute to bar recovery. As involved in a motor vehicle collision, the act of driving a motor vehicle at a speed of more than 25 miles an hour in a residence district, being in violation of statute, is negligence as a matter of law, but unless such negligence contributes to the injuries, it will not defeat recovery.

McIntyre v West Co., 225-739; 281 NW 353

Absence of lights—instructions—sufficiency. An instruction that plaintiff would be guilty of contributory negligence if his automobile was not equipped with two white lights on the front is all-sufficient on that particular subject matter.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770

Striking admissible testimony. Excluding evidence that lights on defendant's truck were not burning, plaintiff having failed to allege such fact in petition, held prejudicial error when such fact had direct bearing on question of plaintiff's contributory negligence.

Haines v Mahaska Works, 227-228; 288 NW 70

Proof of facts not alleged. Evidence that lights were not burning on defendant's truck should have been admitted, even tho not alleged as a ground of negligence in plaintiff's petition, in order to enable plaintiff to show he was maintaining a proper lookout and was therefore free from contributory negligence.

Haines v Mahaska Works, 227-228; 288 NW 70

Assured clear distance ahead—nondiverting circumstances. The operator of an automobile is guilty of contributory negligence in colliding, in the nighttime, with a truck parked in the highway directly ahead of him, when his lights revealed objects ahead for a distance of from 75 to 100 feet; and he cannot avoid such imputation of negligence by the claim that just preceding the collision, his attention was diverted by a light remote from the highway on which he was traveling.

Dearinger v Keller, 219-1; 257 NW 206; 36 NCCA 709

Sounding horn—driver's discretion—jury question. In an automobile damage action, a driver of an automobile is not guilty of negligence as a matter of law for failure to sound horn as he approaches an intersection, since the statute does not require the sounding of the horn under any and all conditions. The propriety of using the horn is left to the reasonable discretion of the driver, and is a fact rather than a law question. The jury determines whether the sounding of a horn would have avoided the accident.

Short v Powell, 228- ; 291 NW 406

Entering highway from private driveway. Where a car, traveling in neutral at only 3 miles per hour, approaches a public highway from a private driveway, and when the driver, while the car is still 12 feet from such highway, sees defendant's truck approaching at a rapid rate, then the fact that the car was out in the highway when the collision occurred would show either that the brakes were inadequate or that the driver was negligent in the operation of his car.

Hermon v Egy, (NOR); 207 NW 116; 26 NCCA 270

Failure to stop at stop sign—jury question. The alleged failure of plaintiff to stop before entering a paved primary highway, in view of evidence that defendant's truck was several hundred feet away from the intersection and traveling on the left side of pavement at a time when plaintiff's automobile was entirely across the black line and on his right-hand side of the road, cannot, where the evidence conflicts and reasonable men might differ, be, as a matter of law, negligence contributing to the collision.

Russell v Leschensky, 224-334; 276 NW 608

Physical facts—statute violation. Where the automobile of plaintiff's intestate collided with defendant's truck at a highway intersection, and the physical facts showed that plaintiff's intestate had violated statutes in not keeping his car under control and not yielding the right of way to the truck, which had entered the intersection first, plaintiff's intestate was therefore guilty of negligence per se which contributed directly to his death, and which entitled the truck owner to a directed verdict.

Young v Clark, 226-1066; 285 NW 633

Failure to look to left on entering intersection. Principle reaffirmed that vehicle driver's failure to look to the left when entering highway intersection does not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Roe v Kurtz, 203-906; 210 NW 550; 33 NCCA 409

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Left turn—prior statute. The failure of the owner of a truck, before making a left turn into an intersecting highway, to drive to the right of and beyond the center of the intersection, constitutes negligence per se and if such owner is injured his negligence will be classified as contributory negligence per se if such conclusion is the only one to which reasonable minds could arrive.

Mansfield v Summers, 222-837; 270 NW 417

Crossing intersection before oncoming car.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Contributory negligence per se. Record reviewed and held to establish contributory negligence on the part of a motorist in driving into a highway intersection and turning to the left (1) without first observing whether he had sufficient space in which safely to make said turn, (2) without first reducing his speed to a reasonable rate,—a rate which would permit a stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) without first driving to the right of, and beyond the center of, said intersection, before turning to the left.

Wimer v Bottling Co., 221-120; 264 NW 262

Maintaining lookout — jury question. In action for damages resulting from automobile collision, where the only pertinent evidence on the question was that of the plaintiff and his witnesses that plaintiff was at all times watching the road, court properly refused to direct the jury, as a matter of law, to find plaintiff negligent in respect to keeping a lookout.

Simmering v Hutt, 226-648; 284 NW 459

Failure to see parked car in fog. On a foggy evening when visibility was poor, where the plaintiff, with the headlamps on his automobile lighted and the windshield wiper working, drove his car into another car which was parked on the highway, in the absence of any proof of an emergency to excuse his failure to see the other car, he was not free from contributory negligence and the defendant was entitled to a directed verdict.

Newman v Hotz, 226-831; 285 NW 289

Instructions compelling jury to draw certain inference. Where plaintiff and defendant were, under conditions which rendered visibility poor, approaching the same intersection approximately at the same time, the court cannot properly instruct the jury that, if plaintiff could see several hundred feet in the direction from which defendant was approaching, then the jury must conclude, either (1) that plaintiff did not look for defendant, as was his duty, or (2) that plaintiff did see the defendant.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Nonnegligent lookout. The driver of an automobile, moving easterly at the rate of 20 miles per hour, who, when some 140 feet from an intersection, looks and sees no vehicle approaching from the north within a distance of 290 feet, is not guilty of negligence per se in not again looking to the north until after he had satisfied himself, as soon as possible, when near the intersection that no one was approaching from the south.

Liddle v Hyde, 216-1311; 247 NW 827; 33 NCCA 433

Car running in reverse—failure to discover. One who, on a fairly clear day, and with no obstruction to vision, and with nothing to distract attention, is operating an automobile at the rate of some 25 miles per hour on the proper side of a straight and level, paved highway, is not guilty of contributory negligence per se in failing to discover, until too late to avoid a collision, that another automobile directly ahead of him (and some 40 rods distant when first seen) was slowly running backward, it appearing that said latter car carried no sign or signal, other than its movement, that it was running in reverse.

Baldwin v Rusbult, 220-725; 263 NW 279

Passing car traveling in same direction. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue of the contributory negligence of plaintiff in attempting to pass another car traveling in the same direction.

McCoy v Cole, 216-1320; 249 NW 213

Proximate cause. It may not be said that the unlawful speed of a vehicle constitutes contributory negligence per se as to a collision which results from such vehicle being overtaken by a faster-moving vehicle.

Berridge v Pray, 202-663; 210 NW 916

Unbalanced instruction—unallowable limitation on materiality of evidence. Reversible error results to an unsuccessful plaintiff (in an action pivoted on the issue whether defendant traveling northward yielded half of the traveled way to plaintiff traveling southward) from instructions to the effect that "evidence that defendant just preceding the collision swerved his car to the west is material on the issue whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, even tho plaintiff had not alleged such swerving as a specific act of negligence on the part of the defendant". The vice is not in what the court does say but in what the court does not say, to wit: that said evidence is material on the issue of defendant's negligence.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Crossing streetcar tracks. A party will not be permitted to excuse his contributory negligence, consequent on his attempt to cross streetcar tracks without using his senses of sight and hearing, by the simple assumption that the streetcars will not be negligently operated.

Rosenberg v Railway, 213-152; 238 NW 703

Accident at railway crossing—negligence per se. The driver of a vehicle who, while approaching a railway crossing, knows that his view along the track is obscured by an intervening embankment, and enters upon said crossing, is guilty of contributory negligence per se when, without dispute, his unobstructed view along the track from a point 25 feet distant from the crossing and up to a point 10 feet distant from the crossing enlarged from 360 feet to 954 feet. Under such circumstances the testimony of the driver that he was constantly looking and listening and saw and heard nothing, must be wholly rejected.

Darden v Railway, 213-583; 239 NW 531

Accident at crossing. The operator of a vehicle is guilty of negligence in driving upon a railway crossing in front of an approaching train (1) when he knows the train is approaching the crossing, (2) when the train is in plain sight for a material distance from the crossing, and (3) when his failure to see the train, at best, was because of a known obstruction on his own vehicle.

Sodemann v Railway, 215-827; 244 NW 865

Accident at crossing. A traveler in approaching a railway crossing with which he is familiar, and while he is beset by no diverting circumstance, is guilty of negligence in failing to look at some place from where he knows he can see approaching trains and thus avoid injury.

Glessner v Railway, 216-850; 249 NW 138

Failure to see approaching train. A traveler who, when some 15 feet from a railway crossing, looks for but fails to see a train which is in plain sight on a straight track and rapidly approaching the crossing from a point some 230 feet distant, and thereupon drives upon the crossing, is guilty of contributory negligence.

Cashman v Railway, 217-469; 250 NW 111

Railroad crossing—motorist not looking. A motorist who approaches a railroad crossing

(c) DRIVER—concluded

on a clear day, over a good road, with no obstructions and no diverting circumstances, and who drives upon the tracks where he is struck by a train and killed, when, had he looked, he must have seen the approaching train which from a point 141 feet from the crossing was visible 2500 feet down the track, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, and the defendant-railroad is entitled to a directed verdict.

Meier v Railway, 224-295; 275 NW 139

Absence of signs and signals at railroad—nonproximate cause. The failure of a railway company to erect statutory warning signs on both sides of a railway crossing (assuming such duty to exist) or the failure of its engineer, when approaching a crossing, to give the statutory signals, becomes quite inconsequential where the operator of an automobile and his guest saw the crossing and the immediately approaching train when they were 100 feet from said crossing, and while they were traveling at a speed not exceeding 25 miles per hour.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

Sudden emergency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to establish contributory negligence per se on the part of a motorist, especially in view of the fact that he was faced by a sudden, almost instantaneous emergency which was not of his making.

McKinnon v Guthrie, 221-400; 265 NW 620

Common enterprise. The negligence of the driver of an automobile cannot be deemed the contributory negligence of a passenger, on the claim that the driver and passenger were engaged in a common enterprise, unless the passenger has the right in some manner to control the operation of the automobile.

Stingley v Crawford, 219-509; 258 NW 316

Assignment of claim of passenger—effect. The driver of an automobile involved in an accident may take from his passenger an assignment of the passenger's cause of action and recover thereon even tho he—the driver—was guilty of contributory negligence, provided the passenger was not guilty of such negligence. The driver's contributory negligence simply defeats his own individual claim for damages.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

(d) PERSONS OTHER THAN DRIVER

Inferential allegation of nonnegligence. An allegation by plaintiff, that a collision between automobiles was caused solely by the negligence of the defendant, inferentially charges that a passenger riding with plaintiff at the time was not guilty of contributory negligence—at least when the sufficiency of the petition is not attacked and when the parties treat the negligence of the passenger as at issue.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Passenger's duty. A passenger in the front seat of an automobile, with opportunity equal to that of the driver to see what is to be seen, and free from any diverting circumstances, cannot surrender himself to the care of the driver, and then successfully contend that he (the passenger) was in the exercise of ordinary care.

Hutchinson v Service Co., 210-9; 230 NW 387; 33 NCCA 170

Holding prior to guest statute. The court must not instruct that a mere passenger in an automobile (under duty, of course, to exercise reasonable and ordinary care) will be guilty of negligence if he fails to do some particular thing, e. g., attempt in some manner to check the speed of the car.

Codner v Stowe, 201-800; 208 NW 330; 26 NCCA 207

Instruction—care required of passenger. An instruction that a passenger in an automobile must be deemed negligent if he fails to warn the driver of "any situation" that may be dangerous, does not correctly state the law, because requiring more than ordinary care.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Failure to warn driver. The court cannot say that an aged woman passenger riding in the rear seat of an automobile on a dark night with the auto lights turned on was guilty of contributory negligence in not seeing an approaching truck and warning her driver thereof when the said driver saw said truck as soon as the passenger could have seen it, and when the jury found that the driver was not negligent.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Instructions—care required of passenger. It is correct to say that a passenger on a vehicle may be found free of contributory negligence if he acted as a person of ordinary prudence would act under like circumstances. Requested instructions reviewed and held properly refused.

Newland v McClelland, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Passenger's duty. A passenger in an automobile is under no duty to exercise care for his own safety except to exercise ordinary care in view of the circumstances. Manifestly, this duty does not require that the passenger maintain a constant attitude of watchfulness and warning and protests to the driver of possible dangers.

Stingley v Crawford, 219-509; 258 NW 316; 37 NCCA 652

Wife riding with husband—nonduty to warn. A wife while riding in an automobile owned and operated by her husband, and over the movements of which automobile she neither has nor attempts to have control, is under duty to exercise, for her own safety, ordinary care in view of the circumstances, but this duty does not require the wife, in order to escape the imputation of contributory negligence, to maintain an attitude of watchfulness and warning and protest to the husband of possible dangers.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 272 NW 169

Motorcycle passenger—care required. A girl riding on a motorcycle directly behind the driver, and being unable to see the road ahead without standing up, thereby endangering the operation of the vehicle, cannot as a matter of law be under duty to warn the driver of impending danger in order to avoid the driver's negligence being imputed to her.

Williams v Kearney, 224-1006; 278 NW 180

Negligence of driver not imputable to passenger. The negligence of the driver of a car is not imputable to a passenger who has no right to control the operation of the car.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853; 37 NCCA 640

Driver's negligence not imputed to passenger. The negligence of a motor vehicle driver is not ordinarily imputed to a passenger; however, such passenger must show the exercise of ordinary care.

Williams v Kearney, 224-1006; 278 NW 180

Assignment of claim of passenger—effect. The driver of an automobile involved in an accident may take from his passenger an assignment of the passenger's cause of action and recover thereon even tho he—the driver—was guilty of contributory negligence, provided the passenger was not guilty of such negligence. The driver's contributory negligence simply defeats his own individual claim for damages.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Host's action on assignment of passenger's claim. The passenger in an automobile who is injured in a collision with another car may, notwithstanding the contributory negligence of the driver-host, recover his damages from the owner and operator of said other car on proof (1) that said owner and operator were proximately negligent, (2) that he—the passenger—had no control over his driver-host, and (3) that he—the passenger—was free from contributory negligence; and the assignee of such damages, even tho he be the driver-host, may recover on such assignment on the same conditions, and the court must so instruct, even tho said driver-host could not, because of his contributory negligence, recover damages personal to himself.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Contributory negligence of passenger—jury question. Whether a passenger who had no control over the operation of a car was guilty of contributory negligence must almost inevitably be a jury question.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853

Passenger's negligence per se not necessarily contributory. A plaintiff riding in his automobile driven by his son who enters an obscured intersection without sounding his horn (§5043, C., '35 [§5031.03, C., '39]), is guilty of negligence per se, imputable from his son, but a jury question arises as to whether or not this contributed to the injury, when from the evidence it is questionable whether defendant could have heard such signal had it been given.

In re Green, 224-1268; 278 NW 285

Negligence of borrower imputable to lender. One who borrows an automobile becomes, by force of our statute, the agent of the lender, in the operation of the car. It necessarily follows that the negligence of the borrower is imputable to the lender, and is a bar to the recovery of damages by the lender in an action against a third party, if such negligence contributed to the injury and resulting damages.

Secured Fin. Co. v Railway, 207-1105; 224 NW 88; 30 NCCA 90

Declarations of passenger. Testimony by a passenger in an automobile to the effect that shortly before an accident he called the attention of the driver to the approaching car is admissible on the issue of the contributory negligence of the passenger.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Contributory negligence of passenger as jury question. Evidence that a passenger riding in an automobile, when 100 feet from a railway crossing, observed and called the attention of the operator to an approaching train, and that thereupon the operator of the car commenced to reduce and continued to reduce the speed of the car until it was hit by the oncoming locomotive, precludes the court from saying that the passenger was guilty of contributory negligence per se.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

Negligence of passenger—insufficient evidence. Record reviewed relative to the facts and circumstances attending the unobscured and simultaneous approach, on a clear day, of northbound and of eastbound automobiles to an intersection of arterial highways (where a collision occurred), and held insufficient to establish contributory negligence per se on the part of a passenger who was traveling in the northbound car and who was injured in said collision.

Rogers v Jefferson, 223-718; 272 NW 532; 277 NW 570

Passenger — instructions — reversible error. Reversible error results from instructing that the jury may find that a passenger in an automobile was free of contributory negligence from the fact that the passenger neither exercised nor had the right to exercise control over the car in question.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

(e) CHILDREN

Discussion. See 21 ILR 803—Duty to anticipate conduct of children

Child incapable of contributory negligence. Evidence reviewed and held affirmatively to show no negligence on the part of the driver of an automobile, the injured party being an infant incapable of contributory negligence.

Kessler v Robbins, 215-327; 245 NW 284

Negligent infliction of injuries on child—improper direction of verdict. Record reviewed relative to the facts attending the alleged negligent infliction of injuries on a child, and held to be such as to render improper the direction of a verdict for defendant, especially as said child was of such tender years as to be, presumptively, incapable of negligence.

Johnson v Selindh, 221-378; 265 NW 622; 39 NCCA 289, 565

Child of 10—presumption. Plaintiff, in an action for damages for negligently inflicted injuries, establishes prima facie freedom from contributory negligence by proof that when he suffered the injuries in question he was only 10 years of age, thereby availing himself of the common-law presumption arising from such proof. And the case would be quite rare where defendant's rebutting testimony would be so convincing and overwhelming as per se to overthrow said prima facie showing.

Flickinger v Phillips, 221-837; 267 NW 101

Child of 10—overthrowing presumption. In an action for damages for the alleged negligent killing of a child, prima facie absence of contributory negligence on the part of the child is established by simply proving that the child was only 10 years of age; but evidence that said child, apparently without reason for so doing, suddenly and without warning ran from a place of safety into a place of danger in front of an oncoming vehicle, creates a jury question on the issue whether said child exercised that degree of care ordinarily exercised by children of a like age.

Webster v Luckow, 219-1048; 258 NW 685

Child under 14—burden to overthrow presumption. The presumption is that children under 14 are incapable of contributory negligence. A motorist striking a child of 10 must prove from all the facts and circumstances that the child did not exercise the degree of care ordinarily exercised by a child of like age.

Held that the question of whether he had sustained his burden was clearly for the jury.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Contributory negligence—12-year-old child—presumption. A child between the ages of 7 and 14 is presumed to be free from contributory negligence, and where a plaintiff is between those ages a prima facie case of nonnegligence on his part is established.

Samuelson v Sherrill, 225-421; 280 NW 596

Minor walking on wrong side of highway—contributory negligence as matter of law. In a law action for damages where it is shown that plaintiff's decedent, a 15-year-old boy, was violating statute requiring pedestrians to walk on the left side of a highway by walking along right side, about 4 or 5 feet from west side of highway, and failing to make observations as to oncoming traffic from the rear while walking after dark on a street traversed by a through highway, held, he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825

Bicyclist's observation of parked car in time to avoid collision. Where a minor bicyclist collided with a car unlawfully parked on left side of city street without tail light when he pulled over to his right to avoid an approaching car, the question of his contributory negligence, which depended on whether or not he should have observed the parked car in time to avoid the collision, was for the jury.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

Children on sleds hooked to vehicle—ordinary care a jury question. A jury must determine whether a motorist has used ordinary care commensurate with the surrounding circumstances when he drives his automobile over icy streets at a speed of 25 miles per hour, knowing that children of a tender age are in a hazardous position on sleds hooked to the rear of his vehicle.

Samuelson v Sherrill, 225-421; 280 NW 596

Children on sleds hooked to vehicle—speed as proximate cause of injury. Where children on sleds hooked to the rear of a moving automobile became frightened at the speed of the car, released their sleds, and in so doing turned aside into the path of an oncoming vehicle, whereby they were injured, such turning aside by the children did not prevent the motor vehicle operator's negligence from being the proximate cause of their injury.

Samuelson v Sherrill, 225-421; 280 NW 596

Employee's unauthorized use. In a damage action arising out of a collision between the defendant's truck and a motorcycle upon which plaintiff was riding as a guest, in which action it was alleged that the corporation-defendant's truck was being driven by a person "in the course of his employment for * * * his employer"—the employer denying both this allegation and his consent to use of truck—and when the evidence showed that the corporation employed the truck driver for making deliveries during the week, excluding Sunday, on which day the collision occurred while the truck driver was assisting a personal friend tow a stalled car, held, after plaintiff alleged liability under the master and servant theory rather than under the statute making the owner of the motor vehicle liable, a directed verdict for the corporation was proper when plaintiff's evidence failed to support his theory.

Alcock v Kearney, 227-650; 288 NW 785

(f) PEDESTRIANS

Crossing street in middle of block. A pedestrian who attempts to cross a street in the middle of a block without looking for a plainly approaching vehicle, or who sees said oncoming vehicle when it is only a few feet distant, and attempts to pass in front of it is guilty of contributory negligence per se.

Whitman v Pilmer, 214-461; 239 NW 686; 35 NCCA 693

Orth v Gregg, 217-516; 250 NW 113; 35 NCCA 612

Crossing traffic-congested street. A pedestrian who, while crossing a traffic-congested street at a place other than the place specifically provided for such crossing, fails to look for approaching vehicles or voluntarily steps in front of an immediately approaching vehicle which he does see, is guilty of negligence per se.

Spaulding v Miller, 216-948; 249 NW 642; 35 NCCA 676

Stepping in front of vehicle. Instructions to the effect that a pedestrian is guilty of negligence per se if he suddenly steps in front of an automobile reviewed, and held proper, under the circumstances.

Ryan v Shirk, 207-1327; 224 NW 824

Stepping into street in path of automobile. Plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in stepping from a curb into the path of an oncoming automobile which was in plain sight where it would have been seen by the plaintiff if he had looked.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Attempting to dodge car. The act of a pedestrian, while crossing a street, in attempting to dodge an oncoming car, may constitute the proximate cause of the injuries suffered by him. So held where the pedestrian evidently stepped or turned back directly in front of said car.

Kortright v Strater, 222-603; 269 NW 745

Failure to look for cars. A pedestrian who, while crossing a public street, stops because of a car approaching from his immediate right, is guilty of contributory negligence when, observing that said car had also stopped, he at once moves forward without looking to his left or right, and is instantly hit by another car coming from said latter direction.

Stawsky v Wheaton, 220-981; 263 NW 313

"Stop and go" signals—change after entering intersection. A pedestrian who, in obedience to a municipally operated "go" signal, starts across the street on the pathway provided for pedestrians and suddenly discovers that said "go" signal has changed to "stop", is not guilty of negligence per se in failing to look for, see, and avoid a vehicle which, under said change in signals, passes entirely across the intersection and hits and injures said pedestrian within less than two seconds after said change in signals occurs; especially is this true (1) when said pedestrian has by ordinance the right of way over said vehicle because he was first properly to enter said intersection, and (2) when said pedestrian, at the very instant of said change in signals, was immediately approaching other stationary vehicles known to be waiting release from a "stop" signal.

Dougherty v McFee, 221-391; 265 NW 176

Pedestrian crossing street—duties. A pedestrian crossing a street need not anticipate another's negligence, nor keep a constant lookout in both directions at the same time, nor wait for all approaching vehicles from both directions, and, moreover, he is not as a matter of law contributorily negligent merely in running while crossing a street altho not seeing an approaching motor vehicle 180 feet away, but in any case whether he could rightly assume he could cross in safety is a question of contributory negligence for the jury.

Swan v Dailey-Luce Co., 225-89; 277 NW 580; 281 NW 504

Assumption that law will be obeyed. Principle reaffirmed that just what acts of care must be taken by a pedestrian on the highway in order to save himself from the imputation of negligence, may be very materially influenced and controlled by his right to assume that others using the highway will obey the law of the road.

Orth v Gregg, 217-516; 250 NW 113; 35 NCCA 612

Crossing streetcar track. A pedestrian who, from a place of perfect safety, suddenly hastens across a streetcar track in front of an immediately approaching streetcar, with full knowledge that as soon as he had passed the said track he would be directly in line with the automobile travel moving with the streetcar, is guilty of contributory negligence per se, even tho the automobile which hit him was being operated at an excessive speed.

Pettijohn v Weede, 209-902; 227 NW 824

Crossing near intersection—jury question.

Scott v McKelvey, 228- ; 290 NW 729

Diagonal crossing of street. It cannot be said that a pedestrian is guilty of negligence per se when he looks both at the street curb and in the middle of the street for approaching vehicles and sees a vehicle at a distance of some 150 feet; and this is true tho he was proceeding diagonally across a street intersection of peculiar shape, in order to board an approaching streetcar, there being, apparently, nothing in the movements of the approaching vehicle to fairly suggest danger.

Minks v Stenberg, 217-119; 250 NW 883; 35 NCCA 589

Reason for not looking for danger. The reason why a pedestrian while crossing a street did not look in the direction of an oncoming vehicle which injured him is relevant and material, and the injured party may testify as to such reason.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Walking in highway. One who walks around the end of a stationary vehicle in the public highway and thereupon turns and walks along the side of the car in the direction of, and directly in line with, an oncoming vehicle which is wholly unobstructed is guilty of negligence per se.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393; 39 NCCA 309

Duty to leave highway when danger impending. A pedestrian wearing dark clothes and walking at night along a heavily traveled arterial street should, in the exercise of reasonable care and prudence, ascertain his immediate danger when two automobiles—one from in front and one from behind—are approaching at the same time, and when he fails to remove himself as speedily as possible from the place of danger, he is contributorily negligent.

Armbruster v Gray, 225-1226; 282 NW 342

Minor walking on wrong side of highway—violating statute—contributory negligence as matter of law. In a law action for damages where it is shown that plaintiff's decedent, a 15-year-old boy, was violating statute requiring pedestrians to walk on the left side of a highway by walking along right side, about 4 or 5 feet from west side of highway, and failing to make observations as to oncoming traffic from the rear, while walking after dark on a street traversed by a through highway, held, he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825

Crossing highway without looking. An adult person, after alighting from an automobile which had been stopped substantially astraddle the north edge of an 18-foot pavement on a heavily traveled country highway, is guilty of negligence per se in attempting to walk to the south and across said pavement without making any observations to his unobstructed right for eastbound vehicles.

Zuck v Larson, 222-842; 270 NW 384

Failure to keep lookout to rear. The foreman of a paving outfit is guilty of negligence per se in walking along the unpaved portion of a rough road for a distance of some 200 feet without making any observations to his rear for trucks which he knew were being backed along said road and in his immediate direction at the rate of one truck each 90 seconds.

Hedberg v Lester, 222-1025; 270 NW 447

Standing on shoulder of pavement—care.

Janes v Roach, 228- ; 290 NW 87

Standing in path of truck. One who is standing substantially on the very edge of a passageway through which an approaching truck on a downgrade had to pass and knows that the truck operator is having difficulty to control the truck owing to the slippery condition of the road and does not step out of the way tho he has ample opportunity to do so, is guilty of contributory negligence.

Norris v Lough, 217-362; 251 NW 646

Disregarding apparent danger. The rule that a pedestrian and an automobile have equal rights upon the highway does not authorize a highway employee to stand on the edge of the pavement watching an oncoming automobile travel a distance of 200 feet on the same side of the pavement, knowing the pavement is in an icy condition, knowing that the driver of the oncoming automobile is having difficulty controlling it, from which facts it is, or to a reasonably prudent man it would have been, apparent that he was occupying a position of danger, and consequently, in remaining there, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Defendant's motion for a directed verdict was properly sustained.

Cumming v Dosland, 227-470; 288 NW 647

Stalled motorist—freedom from negligence—requested instruction. In a damage action for personal injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, the burden is on plaintiff to establish (1) the defendant's negligence, (2) such negligence as the proximate cause of the injury, and (3) plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. Hence, a motorist who stands in the center of the road near the rear of her automobile stalled on the highway, attempting to stop a following motorist, and, tho having the opportunity, fails to seek a place of safety when she sees the approaching motorist apparently will crash into her stalled automobile, is not entitled to an instruction establishing her freedom from contributory negligence as a matter of law, nor to a directed verdict against the defendant.

Murchland v Jones, 225-149; 279 NW 382

Lack of precaution for safety—plaintiff's own proof. A person riding with a trucker and struck by an automobile while helping put on tire chains after dark, having placed himself in a perilous position on the traffic side of the truck stopped astraddle the center of the highway, fails to prove his freedom from contributory negligence where there is no evidence that he kept any lookout or took any precautions for his own safety.

Denny v Augustine, 223-1202; 275 NW 117

Reliance on another's duty—knowledge of breach no excuse for negligence. A plaintiff, injured by a passing automobile while helping defendant's employee-driver put on tire chains, may not excuse his own lack of due care by testifying that he relied on the driver to place out flares, when as a fact he knew both that the driver had no such intention and that no flares were so placed.

Denny v Augustine, 223-1202; 275 NW 117

Proximate cause—violation of statute. Failure of a defendant, the driver of an automobile, to have the headlights on his car displayed at a time required by statute becomes inconsequential when the contributory negligence of the plaintiff-pedestrian was the proximate cause of the injury resulting from the collision.

Sheridan v Limbrecht, 205-573; 218 NW 278; 29 NCCA 300; 35 NCCA 661; 2 NCCA (NS) 417

Eyewitness testimony—custom of injured party immaterial. Evidence tending to show the usual custom of a person in approaching a highway intersection—where he was killed in a collision—is inadmissible on the issue of negligence—it appearing that there were eyewitnesses to the entire transaction resulting in the collision.

Nyswander v Gonser, 218-136; 253 NW 829; 36 NCCA 1

No-eyewitness rule—nonapplicability. In a pedestrian-automobile accident, where a motorist testifies that he saw deceased just prior to striking and killing him, the rule that in the absence of eyewitnesses the deceased is presumed to have exercised due care has no application.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

"No-eyewitness rule" inapplicable. Where pedestrian crossing highway is killed by automobile, and in action for death where plaintiff's witness clearly observed decedent's conduct for some time immediately prior to accident and did not see him look for approaching car, the "no-eyewitness rule" establishing presumption of freedom from contributory negligence was inapplicable.

Spooner v Wisecup, 227-768; 288 NW 894

Jury or law question. The court has no right to rule that a pedestrian—injured while attempting to cross a public street at the place provided for such crossing and by coming into collision with a moving vehicle—is guilty of negligence contributing to his own injury, unless the facts and circumstances, after viewing them in the light most favorable to the pedestrian, are such that all reasonable minds must arrive at the same conclusion, to wit, negligence upon the part of the pedestrian. Evidence held to present jury, not law, question.

Huffman v King, 222-150; 268 NW 144

Elderly lady crossing street at night. A jury question on the issue of negligence arises (1) when the evidence is conflicting as to what the injured party did or did not do, and (2) when there may be a fair difference of opinion whether that which the injured party admittedly did do or omitted to do, constituted negligence. Evidence as to what an elderly lady did in crossing a public street after nightfall presented a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Robertson v Carlgren, 211-963; 234 NW 824
Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689; 37 NCCA 67

Sudden fright—trial theory. The abstract proposition that a pedestrian who steps suddenly in front of a moving vehicle is guilty of negligence per se need not be limited by the effect of sudden fright or surprise on the part of the pedestrian when no such claim is made in the pleadings or evidence.

Ryan v Shirk, 207-1327; 224 NW 824

Position of danger—last clear chance. The submission to the jury of the issue of "last clear chance" is improper on undisputed testimony that, while an automobile was moving along a traffic-congested street at a speed of from five to ten miles an hour, a pedestrian negligently placed himself in a position of danger in front of said car, but that the operator of said car did not discover said position of danger until his car was only seven feet from said pedestrian, and that thereupon said operator applied or attempted to apply his brakes but not in time to avoid injuring said pedestrian.

Spaulding v Miller, 220-1107; 264 NW 8

Pedestrian in voluntary position of appreciable danger—instruction. In action for death of pedestrian struck by automobile, instruction that decedent's contributory negligence barred recovery unless last clear chance doctrine could be invoked, was not erroneous on theory that such contributory negligence must be proximate cause of accident in order to defeat recovery. Moreover, such instruction was justified under the record showing that decedent voluntarily placed himself in a position of evident danger.

Spooner v Wisecup, 227-768; 288 NW 894

Failure to keep lookout alleged—no submission of last clear chance. In a law action for damages wherein the petition alleges that defendant motorist was negligent in failing to keep a proper lookout and such allegation was not withdrawn, and it is shown deceased pedestrian was contributorily negligent, it was proper to refuse to submit the case under last clear chance doctrine, on the theory that motorist, being under duty to keep a lookout, presumably performed such duty, but, after seeing deceased, failed to exercise due care in avoiding the injury.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825

(g) WHEN LAW OR JURY QUESTION

Jury question unless all minds concur. Contributory negligence is for the jury, and a directed verdict should be denied except in cases where the facts are clear and undisputed and the cause and effect so apparent to every candid mind that but one conclusion may be fairly drawn.

In re Green, 224-1268; 278 NW 285

As jury question. The presence or absence of contributory negligence is, as a general rule, a question for the jury.

Wheeler v Peterson, 213-1239; 240 NW 683; 33 NCCA 451

Grounds for new trial—court mistakenly directing verdict. Ordinarily the question of contributory negligence is peculiarly for the jury, and where the trial court mistakenly directs a verdict for defendant on the ground of plaintiff's negligence, the court does not err in later granting a new trial.

Williams v Kearney, 224-1006; 278 NW 180

Inadequate submission. Defendant's specific allegations as to contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff should be specifically submitted to the jury when they have adequate support in the evidence.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

Instructions—error in quoting statute only. In submitting specifications of alleged contributory negligence, the court commits error in simply quoting the statute relating to these grounds without defining just what acts of plaintiff, under the evidence, would constitute contributory negligence, and without applying the law to the facts.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether there was negligence in the operation of automobiles by the drivers thereof; likewise, whether there was contributory negligence on the part of an injured party.

Shuck v Keefe, 205-365; 218 NW 31

Dickeson v Lzicar, 208-275; 225 NW 406

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

Vass v Martin, 209-870; 226 NW 920; 89 NCCA 325; 1 NCCA(NS) 162

O'Hara v Chaplin, 211-404; 233 NW 516; 85 NCCA 573

Rogers v Lagomarcino Co., 215-1270; 248 NW 1

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Directed verdict—improper unless per se negligence also contributory. A plaintiff motorist, against whom a directed verdict was rendered because in violating a speed statute he was negligent per se, still should have had the benefit of the best possible view of the evidence, and, moreover, under a record showing that he remained at all times on his own side of the road, but that a truck driver, for no apparent reason, drove across the pavement center line resulting in a head-on collision, makes a jury question as to whether or not plaintiff's per se negligence contributed to his injury.

McIntyre v West Co., 225-739; 281 NW 353

Failure to sound horn. In action involving collision between car and motorcycle, plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law for failure to sound horn where vehicles were in plain view of each other for more than 200 feet and there was no apparent danger of any collision.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Sounding horn—driver's discretion—jury question. In an automobile damage action, a driver of an automobile is not guilty of negligence as a matter of law for failure to sound horn as he approaches an intersection, since the statute does not require the sounding of the horn under any and all conditions. The propriety of using the horn is left to the reasonable discretion of the driver, and is a fact rather than a law question. The jury determines whether the sounding of a horn would have avoided the accident.

Short v Powell, 228- ; 291 NW 406

Pedestrian at crossing. The court has no right to rule that a pedestrian—injured while attempting to cross a public street at the place provided for such crossing and by coming into collision with a moving vehicle—is guilty of negligence contributing to his own injury, unless the facts and circumstances, after viewing them in the light most favorable to the pedestrian, are such that all reasonable minds must arrive at the same conclusion, to wit, negligence upon the part of the pedestrian. Evidence held to present jury, not law, question.

Huffman v King, 222-150; 268 NW 144

Pedestrian on shoulder of highway—care.

Janes v Roach, 228- ; 290 NW 87

Elderly lady crossing street at night. A jury question on the issue of negligence arises (1) when the evidence is conflicting as to what the injured party did or did not do, and (2) when there may be a fair difference of opinion whether that which the injured party admittedly did do or omitted to do, constituted negligence. Evidence as to what an elderly lady did in crossing a public street after nightfall presented a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Robertson v Carlgren, 211-963; 234 NW 824
Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689

Truck turning to left to avoid pedestrian. When a truck slowed down and turned out to the left to avoid a pedestrian walking along the traveled portion of the highway, and was struck by another truck proceeding from the rear, the court properly submitted to the jury the question of contributory negligence.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

Car striking person standing on street—jury question. In personal injury action for being struck by automobile while plaintiff was standing at night on city street discussing question of blame for another collision, plaintiff's contributory negligence was question for jury.

Yale v Hanson, 227-813; 288 NW 905

Accident at intersection. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether the driver of an eastbound car was guilty of contributory negligence in entering and attempting to cross the intersection while a northbound car was approaching said intersection.

Hartman v Trans. Co., 211-64; 233 NW 23

Preference at intersecting points. The court cannot say that the operator of a northbound car is guilty of contributory negligence per se in entering an intersection when a westbound car was three-quarters of a block distant.

Leckliter v Des Moines, 211-251; 233 NW 58; 38 NCCA 493

For jury. In damage suit arising from a motor vehicle accident at a highway intersection, the question of contributory negligence was for the jury.

Hupp v Doolittle, 226-814; 285 NW 247

Approaching intersection—instruction. In an action for personal injuries sustained by driver of a motor vehicle in collision with another vehicle which entered intersection from the left, an instruction stating that the statute requires any person operating a motor vehicle to have the same under control and reduce the speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing a crossing or intersection of public highways was correct. Since the jury in most cases must determine from the circumstances whether there had been a compliance with such statute, question was properly submitted.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Stopping before entering boulevard. Evidence reviewed in detail relative to the stoppage of an automobile before entering a curving boulevard (on which traffic had the right of way) and held to present a jury question on the issue of the contributory negligence of the operator and not a case of contributory negligence per se.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

Driving from private driveway. Evidence relative to the act of driving from a private driveway into a public highway in front of an approaching car reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Tinley v Implement Co., 216-458; 249 NW 390

Left-hand turn—conflicting testimony. Evidence reviewed in detail in an action involving a left-hand turn, during the nighttime, of a westbound car, and its collision with an eastbound car near the point of intersection, and held, because of the conflict in testimony, to present a jury question on the issue whether plaintiff had established his freedom from contributory negligence.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Turning to right into intersecting road. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether plaintiff, traveling on the right-hand side of the highway, with knowledge that she was being closely followed by a truck, was guilty of contributory negligence in changing her course by turning to the right and entering an intersecting highway, the collision occurring between said turning car and said truck.

Harmon v Gilligan, 221-605; 266 NW 288

Contributory negligence of passenger—jury question. What a decedent, a passenger in a vehicle, did do, or could have done, for his own safety during the very few seconds during which danger arose, is for the jury to decide.

Newland v McClelland, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Passenger. Evidence which discloses, on the part of a passenger in an automobile, no act or omission to act which contributed in any manner to an accident, justifies the submission to the jury of the issue of contributory negligence of said passenger.

Schuster v Gillispie, 217-386; 251 NW 735

Contributory negligence of passenger as jury question. Evidence which discloses on the part of plaintiff, riding as a passenger in an automobile, no act or omission to act which contributed in any manner to an accident, justifies the submission to the jury of plaintiff's contributory negligence.

Miller v Lowe, 220-105; 261 NW 822

Contributory negligence of passenger as jury question. Whether a passenger who had no control over the operation of a car was guilty of contributory negligence must almost inevitably be a jury question.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853

(g) WHEN LAW OR JURY QUESTION—continued

Contributory negligence of passenger as jury question. Whether an invited passenger in an automobile, over which the passenger has no control, is guilty of contributory negligence can rarely, if ever, be a question of law.

Kehm v Dilts, 222-826; 270 NW 388; 3 NCCA(NS) 39

Instructions—ignoring supported issue. In an action for damages based on the alleged negligence of the defendant in operating an automobile which collided with an automobile in which plaintiff was riding, the court commits reversible error by wholly ignoring in its instructions the duly joined issue as to the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, the evidence being such as to present a jury question on said issue.

Schelldorf v Cherry, 220-1101; 264 NW 54

Passenger's lookout at railroad crossing. A passenger in a motor vehicle is not, as a reasonably prudent person, under the same obligation as the driver to keep a lookout, but whether or not, under the circumstances, a passenger was lacking in ordinary care in committing his safety to the motor vehicle driver while crossing a railroad is a question for the jury.

Finley v Lowden, 224-999; 277 NW 487

Railroad crossing accident—snow glare affecting visibility. Where a passenger riding in a truck was killed in a crossing collision between truck and train, a contention that sun shining on snow and reflecting into truck constituted such obstruction to view of oncoming train that it raised a jury question on issue of deceased's contributory negligence in failing to see approaching train held not established by his evidence.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

Tracks creating hidden danger. A jury question as to the negligent operation of a streetcar and as to the contributory negligence of the driver of an automobile is presented by evidence (1) that the streetcar tracks were so laid that, as they approached a turn at a street intersection, they imperceptibly approached the street curb until, near the intersection, insufficient space remained for the passage of an automobile between a passing streetcar and the curb, and (2) that the driver of the automobile, without knowledge of such condition of the tracks, and without warning from the streetcar employee who was present, was caught at said point of danger, and was not only "wedged in" between the streetcar and curb by the front end of the streetcar, but was crushed by the oversweep of the rear end of the car as it turned away from the auto at the intersection.

Knudson v Railway, 209-429; 228 NW 470

Crossing accident—boxcars hiding view. Evidence tending to show that the driver of a vehicle stopped some twelve feet from a railroad crossing, and reconnoitered for an approaching train, and saw none, owing to a string of cars on a side track, and heard no warning signals of an approaching train, and thereupon drove upon the crossing, presents a jury question on the issue of his negligence.

Bush v Railway, 216-788; 247 NW 645

Crossing—lookout—failure to see train. Evidence tending to show that the driver of a vehicle stopped some 10 or 15 feet from a railroad crossing and reconnoitered for an approaching train and saw none because of dirt elevations and weeds along the side of the track, and heard no warning signals of an approaching train, and thereupon drove upon the crossing, presents a jury question on the issue of his negligence, even tho, had he stopped some few feet nearer the track he would have seen the approaching train.

Markle v Railway, 219-301; 257 NW 771

"Double passing". Evidence relative to the facts attending a "double passing" reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144; 33 NCCA 476

Failure of lights. Where a truck is being operated in a fog with 35 feet visibility ahead under speed and road conditions permitting a stop within 25 feet and after meeting and passing another automobile, there is a failure of the lights on the truck, the truck driver is confronted with an emergency not of his own making, and if he tries the lights again before applying his brakes and turning on his emergency light, after which he discovers another truck stopped on the road within the visibility range such that it would have been seen and avoided had the lights not failed, he is not as a matter of law contributorily negligent in being unable to stop without a collision but the question is for the jury.

Mueller v State Assn., 223-888; 274 NW 106; 113 ALR 1256

Collision—jury questions. Evidence reviewed in an action for damages consequent on a collision in the nighttime between a truck and an automobile, and held to present jury questions on the issues:

1. Whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence.
2. Whether defendant was driving his truck without lights.
3. Whether defendant was driving on the wrong side of the road.
4. Whether defendant was operating his truck (weighing three tons) at an unlawful rate of speed.
5. Whether defendant had opportunity to avoid the collision and failed to do so.

Carlson v Decker, 218-54; 253 NW 923; 36 NCCA 93

Boy on bicycle warming ear with hand. Plaintiff riding a bicycle on the sidewalk, a place of comparative safety, observing the traffic ahead of him, cannot, as a matter of law, be said to be guilty of contributory negligence in not watching where he was going simply because he put a hand over his ear to warm it, when there is a sharp conflict in the evidence as to whether the truck which struck the boy turned sharply in ahead of him, or turned gradually and struck him from the rear.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Directing verdict—inadequate brakes must contribute to injuries. Before a plaintiff motorist can be held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law it must conclusively appear, from a consideration of the evidence in the light most favorable to him, that his negligence in having inadequate brakes contributed in some way or in some degree to the accident and injuries for which he seeks a recovery.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Inadequate brakes immaterial unless negligence contributory. An exception to an instruction because the fact question of plaintiff's contributory negligence was erroneously submitted is not an exception to the submission of the sole fact of his negligence, and even if plaintiff's negligence in not having brakes is established beyond question, the fact question of its contributory nature is still for the jury.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Predicating error solely on one's own evidence—impropriety. Predication of error based solely on defendant's own evidence and his own theory of the case is ineffective when other conflicting evidence clearly makes a jury question on contributory negligence regarding plaintiff's failure to have adequate brakes on his automobile, his failure to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and his failure to slow down before crossing a bridge.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

New trial to plaintiff—propriety. In a case involving a truck and passenger car collision on a bridge, when the defendant contended that he was entitled to a directed verdict and that therefore it was error to grant a new trial after a verdict had been returned in his favor, his contention was without merit when the evidence was such that the jury could have found the defendant negligent, that his negligence was the proximate cause of the accident, and that neither plaintiff nor plaintiff's driver was contributorily negligent.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-1138; 281 NW 790

Racing car at fair. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of the contributory negligence of a party injured by a racing automobile at a county fair.

Zieman v Amusement Assn., 209-1298; 228 NW 48

(h) AVOIDANCE—LAST CLEAR CHANCE

Doctrine must be pleaded. The doctrine of the last clear chance is not available unless distinctly pleaded.

Steele v Brada, 213-708; 239 NW 538

Nyswander v Gonser, 218-136; 253 NW 829; 36 NCCA 1

Doctrine inherent in pleading. The elements of the doctrine of last clear chance may be deemed as inherently attending an allegation which, in effect, charges defendant with proximate negligence up to the very time of the infliction of the injury, even tho said allegation carries no reference to the last clear chance or to the doctrine thereof. It follows that after trial and reversal thereof, such allegation may be amended and amplified by alleging facts which, if proven, will specifically present the issue of the last clear chance.

Spaulding v Miller, 220-1107; 264 NW 8

Burden of proof. A plaintiff who contends for the applicability of the doctrine of the last clear chance has the burden of proof to show that the defendant discovered plaintiff's negligence in such time that defendant, by the exercise of reasonable care, might have avoided injuring plaintiff.

Hogan v Nesbit, 216-75; 246 NW 270

Applicability of doctrine. The doctrine of last clear chance applies only where defendant had actual knowledge of plaintiff's peril, and after acquiring such knowledge, could have avoided the injury by the exercise of due care, but failed to do so.

Steele v Brada, 213-708; 239 NW 538

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825; 5 NCCA (NS) 335

Inapplicability of doctrine. The doctrine of the last clear chance has no application to a record which shows (1) that the plaintiff was confessedly negligent, and (2) that the accident of which plaintiff complains occurred instantly and inevitably after plaintiff's negligence was discovered.

Albrecht v Berry, 202-250; 208 NW 205; 32 NCCA 108

Discovery of danger—inapplicability of doctrine. The doctrine of the last clear chance can have no application when the nonnegligent driver of a conveyance, after he discovers the danger, does everything in his power to prevent an accident.

Middleton v Railway, 209-1278; 227 NW 915

Discovery of danger—erroneous submission. The submission of the last clear chance doctrine under a record which unquestionably

III CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—concluded

(h) AVOIDANCE—LAST CLEAR CHANCE—concl'd'd shows that the accident of which plaintiff complains occurred instantly and inevitably after plaintiff's position of danger was discovered by defendant, constitutes reversible error.

Rutherford v Gilchrist, 218-1169; 255 NW 516

Highway blocked—jury question. When a truck driven by plaintiff's intestate slowed down and turned to the left to avoid a crippled pedestrian who was walking along the highway, whether the defendant's truck, coming from the rear at a greater speed, after discovering the peril of the truck in front in having turned out into his path, should have pulled further to the left on the shoulder of the road to avoid a collision, was a question of last clear chance for the jury.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

Railroad crossing accident. The doctrine of last clear chance is not applicable unless peril of injured party is actually discovered and appreciated in time to prevent his injury by the exercise of ordinary care. So where plaintiff drives his truck at a speed of 4 or 5 miles per hour onto a railroad track and is struck by a train going 4 or 5 miles per hour, and it is shown engineer of train felt a jar and, looking out of cab, saw some object in front of locomotive and immediately applied brakes and placed locomotive in reverse, held, evidence insufficient to submit to jury, and a motion for directed verdict was rightfully sustained.

Kinney v Railway, 17 F 2d, 708

Streetcar collision. Evidence relative to collision between a streetcar and an automobile reviewed, and held wholly insufficient to justify the submission to the jury of the last clear chance doctrine.

Elliott v Railway, 223-46; 271 NW 507; 5 NCCA(NS) 169

Stepping into path of automobile. A plaintiff, who stepped directly into the path of the defendant's automobile from a position of safety on a curb, could not rely on the last clear chance doctrine when there was no evidence that the defendant could have avoided the accident by exercising reasonable care after discovering that the plaintiff was in a perilous position.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Pedestrian in voluntary position of appreciable danger—instruction. In action for death of pedestrian struck by automobile, instruction that decedent's contributory negligence barred recovery unless last clear chance doctrine could be invoked, was not erroneous on theory that such contributory negligence must be proximate cause of accident in order to defeat recovery. Moreover, such instruction was justified under the record showing that decedent voluntarily placed himself in a position of evident danger.

Spooner v Wisecup, 227-768; 288 NW 894

Evidence—erroneous submission. The submission to the jury of the issue of last clear chance is improper on undisputed testimony that, while an automobile was moving along a traffic-congested street at a speed of from 5 to 10 miles an hour, a pedestrian negligently placed himself in a position of danger in front of said car, but that the operator of said car did not discover said position of danger until his car was only seven feet from said pedestrian, and that thereupon said operator applied or attempted to apply his brakes but not in time to avoid injuring said pedestrian.

Spaulding v Miller, 220-1107; 264 NW 8

Evidence—time element. The application of the principle of the last clear chance necessitates some adequate evidence that the party against whom the doctrine is sought to be applied discovered the negligence in question in such time as enabled him to avoid it by the exercise of reasonable care.

Reid v Brooke, 221-808; 266 NW 477

Last clear chance—jury question. Jury must consider all the evidence, and where it tends to show that defendant, after discovering plaintiff's perilous position, might by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided a collision, it is not error to submit the doctrine of last clear chance.

Pettijohn v Weede, 219-465; 258 NW 72

Groves v Webster City, 222-849; 270 NW 329

Russell v Leschensky, 224-334; 276 NW 608

Erroneous and confusing instructions. An instruction, in effect, that if defendant, after he discovered plaintiff's peril, was negligent in the doing of certain acts which resulted in the striking of plaintiff, then "defendant would still be liable even tho plaintiff was negligent", is prejudicially erroneous; also prejudicially confusing and inconsistent in view of repeated instructions that plaintiff could not recover if he was guilty of contributory negligence.

Steele v Brada, 213-708; 239 NW 538

Avoiding contributory negligence. A streetcar motorman who plainly sees that the driver of another conveyance is negligently placing himself in a position of danger on the tracks, or is about to do so, and by ordinary care can avoid an accident and fails to do so, must be deemed guilty of negligence which is the proximate cause of the accident, irrespective of the negligence of the injured party.

Lynch v Railway, 215-1119; 245 NW 219

IV IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE(a) IN GENERAL

Harmless error. Instruction on the subject of imputed negligence held nonprejudicial.

Sutton v Moreland, 214-337; 242 NW 75

(b) DEFINITION

Fundamental basis of doctrine. If two or more persons unite in the joint prosecution of a common purpose, under such circumstances that each has authority, express or implied, to act for all in respect to the conduct or the means of agency employed to execute such common purpose, the negligence of any one of them in the management thereof will be imputed to all of the others.

This doctrine is based on the relation of agency existing between the parties engaged in the common enterprise.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 273 NW 169

(c) TO OWNER-PASSENGER

Common purpose. The negligence of the driver of an automobile who, because of his skill as a driver, is selected by the owners to operate the car on a pleasure trip, is imputable to such owners, even tho such driver was the guest of such owners. (See Vol. I, §5028, Anno. 13)

Wiley v Dobbins, 204-174; 214 NW 529; 62 ALR 432; 28 NCCA 593

Harmless assumption of fact. The assumption in instructions of the fact that an automobile was being operated with the consent of the owner does not constitute reversible error when the evidence bearing on the element of consent was the one persuasive and unquestioned fact that the owner was riding in the car with the driver thereof at the time of the accident.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Son's negligence imputed to father-owner. The negligence of a son driving an automobile in which the father-owner is riding is imputed to the father.

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Plaintiff's negligence per se not necessarily contributory. A plaintiff riding in his automobile driven by his son, who enters an obscured intersection without sounding his horn, is guilty of negligence per se, imputable from his son, but a jury question arises as to whether or not this contributed to the injury when from the evidence it is questionable whether defendant could have heard such signal had it been given.

In re Green, 224-1268; 278 NW 285

(d) OWNER'S CONSENT TO OPERATION

Discussion. See 13 ILR 336—Liability of owner; 21 ILR 804—Wife's recovery against owner of car operated by husband

Literal words limited by intent. Tho a thing is within the literal words of a statute, it will not be deemed in the statute when it is clearly not within the intention of the statute. Applied in the construction of the statute relative to the liability of the owner of an automobile who consents to its operation by another.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Stating cause of action. A cause of action is stated by allegations (1) that the driver of an automobile was negligent in operating it, (2) that plaintiff suffered damages thereby, and (3) that the car was then being operated with the consent of the owner.

Seleine v Wisner, 200-1389; 206 NW 130; 25 NCCA 714

Pleading—nonallowable amendment. A timely brought action based solely on the common-law plea of defendant's liability consequent on the negligent operation of an automobile by defendant's employee in due course of employment may not, after the action would be barred by the statute of limitation, be so amended as to wholly abandon said pleaded basis and to substitute an entirely new basis for recovery, to wit, an allegation that defendant was liable because the automobile in question belonged to defendant and was operated at the time in question with defendant's consent.

Page v Constr. Co., 219-1017; 257 NW 426

Cross complaint—when allowable. In an action by an administrator for damages consequent on the alleged negligent killing by defendant of the intestate in a collision between automobiles, the defendant may cross-petition for damages against the administrator personally under the allegation that the deceased at the time of said collision was negligently operating an automobile which was personally owned by said administrator and was so doing with the consent of said owner. And this is true irrespective of the personal residence of the administrator.

Ryan v Amodeo, 216-752; 249 NW 656

Conditional sales—ownership in vendee. When a motor vehicle is sold under a conditional sales contract, altho the seller retains legal title for the purpose of security, the ownership of the car passes to the buyer.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

Conditional sales—motor vehicles—ownership. An instruction was erroneous in stating that a conditional sales contract, containing a clause that title remained in seller, left the ownership of an automobile in the seller. The buyer became the substantial and beneficial owner under the contract, and §4964, C., '35 [§5002.07, C., '39], stating that title to motor vehicle shall not be deemed to pass until transferee has received and written his name on the registration certificate, is not construed to make seller liable as owner of the vehicle.

Craddock v Bickelhaupt, 227-202; 288 NW 109

Former statute revised—legislative construction. When the motor vehicle statutes were completely revised and exempted the vendor of a motor vehicle, under a conditional sales contract, from liability for negligent operation of the vehicle, such revision did not create a legislative construction that a former statute defining "owner" as the person with the use or control of a vehicle included such vendor within its definition, as a general revision of the laws creates no presumption of an intent to change the law, as is created when a particular section or a limited part of an act is re-enacted.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

Assignee from conditional sale vendor not the owner of motor vehicle. The assignee from the vendor of a truck under a conditional sales contract did not have either the "lawful ownership, use or control" or "the right to the use or control" of the truck, and could not be considered as "owner" under a former statute which said that any person coming within those specifications should be included in the term "owner".

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

Conditional seller not "owner"—nonliability. Statute making owner of automobile liable for damage caused by its operation when being driven with owner's consent, held not to extend to seller of automobile under conditional sales contract even when, under the contract of sale, seller retained title, for the buyer is the beneficial, equitable, and substantial owner, and the seller retains only naked title subject to complete divestment upon payment of the final installment of the purchase price.

Craddock v Bickelhaupt, 227-202; 288 NW 109

Conditional sale vendor not liable for negligence of vendee. The vendor of a motor vehicle under a conditional sales contract and his assignee are not to be held responsible for the negligent operation of the vehicle by the vendee on the ground that they have a duty to see if the vendee is responsible before turning him loose on the highway with a dangerous instrumentality.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

Ownership—relevant proof. On the issue of the ownership of an automobile, the contract of sale to the alleged owner is relevant and material.

Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151

Ownership of car—futile evidence. Evidence that an automobile of a certain make was, at the time of a collision, occupied by a husband and wife, that it carried a registration plate of the county of which said parties were residents, and that said car was being operated by the husband, furnishes no prima facie proof of the wife's ownership of the car.

Putnam v Bussing, 221-871; 266 NW 559

Ownership— incompetent evidence. On the issue of ownership of a motor vehicle (arising on the allegation that said vehicle was being operated with the consent of the owner), neither of the following is admissible:

1. A certified copy of a purported application for registration of said vehicle when said purported application is neither signed by nor sworn to by any person. For an added reason is this true when said certification fails to identify said application as a record of any public office; nor

2. An unauthenticated copy of a purported duplicate certificate of registration of said vehicle, especially when said certificate fails to carry the signature of the purported owner of said vehicle.

Putnam v Bussing, 221-871; 266 NW 559

Ownership—Missouri certificate of ownership—conclusiveness. A duly issued and outstanding certificate of ownership of a motor vehicle, issued by the secretary of state of the state of Missouri under the statute law thereof (§3, Art. 16, Public Acts of 1923), is absolutely conclusive in said state as to such ownership, and will be recognized and accorded the same force and effect in this state, said statutes not being violative of the public policy of this state.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Indispensable element. The consent of such owner to such operation is an indispensable element of the owner's liability.

McLain v Armour & Co., 205-343; 218 NW 69

Presumption from ownership—evidence to refute. Admission of ownership of a motor vehicle involved in a collision establishes, prima facie, that the vehicle was being operated with the consent of the owner and to avoid such finding there must be some showing to the contrary.

Wolfson v Lumber Co., 210-244; 227 NW 608

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

Consent of owner—harmless assumption. The assumption in instructions of the fact that an automobile was being operated with the consent of the owner does not constitute reversible error when the evidence bearing on the element of consent was the one persuasive and unquestioned fact that the owner was riding in the car with the driver thereof at the time of the accident.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Presumption. Presumptively, the owner of an automobile is in control of his own car, but he may rebut the presumption and show that the car was being operated without his consent.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Inference—burden of proof. An inference arises from the ownership of an automobile that it was operated with the owner's consent, or under his direction, and the owner has the burden of establishing that such was not the case.

McCann v Downey, 227-1277; 290 NW 690

Custom of driver—jury question. A jury question is created on the issue whether an automobile was being operated with the consent of the owner by testimony that the driver had habitually used the car for business and pleasure both before and after the accident, even tho the counter testimony of the owner that he had expressly forbidden the use of the car on the occasion in question was not directly contradicted.

Lange v Bedell, 203-1194; 212 NW 354; 27 NCCA 531; 29 NCCA 323

See Tigue Sales v Motor Co., 207-567; 221 NW 514

Presumption from ownership—force and effect. Proof by plaintiff, in an action for damages consequent on the negligent operation of an automobile, that said vehicle, on the occasion in question, was driven by one of the defendants and was owned by the other defendant, generates a presumption that said driving was "by consent" of said owner; but said presumption, while all-sufficient in the first instance, cannot prevail against positive, unimpeached evidence to the contrary unless plaintiff reinforces it with additional evidence sufficient to make a jury question.

Hunter v Irwin, 220-693; 263 NW 34

Brother allowed to keep car—consent presumed. Where the owner of a car allowed his brother to keep the car much of the time and use it and the brother allowed a third person to use the car and the third party had an accident, the proof of ownership established, prima facie, that the car was being operated for the owner, and this inference could not be overcome by vague testimony.

Olinger v Tiefenthaler, 226-847; 285 NW 137

Overcoming inference of consent. The inference that an automobile operated by one person and owned by another person was operated with the consent of the owner is wholly overcome by uncontradicted evidence that the car was being operated against the positive command of said owner, and compels the court, in such a case, to direct a verdict against the plaintiff.

Robinson v Shell Corp., 217-1252; 251 NW 613

Consent to operation—jury question. Proof that an automobile at the time of a collision

(1) was operated by one defendant, (2) was owned by another defendant, and (3) was under lease exceeding ten days to yet another defendant generates a jury question on the issue whether the car was operated with the consent of the owner, and also with the consent of the lessee; and such jury question survives as to the owner and as to the lessee until each, for himself, negatives such consent by undisputed and uncontroverted testimony. And the most positive denials of consent cannot be deemed "undisputed and uncontroverted" when the facts and circumstances attending the operation of the car tend to prove that the owner and lessee did consent.

Greene v Lagerquist, 217-718; 252 NW 94

"Family-car" doctrine inapplicable to foster son. The naked fact that the driver of an automobile is the foster son of the owner of the car, affords no basis, in and of itself, for an inference or presumption that said driving was "by consent" of said owner, when the foster son has attained his majority and is dependent on himself for support.

Hunter v Irwin, 220-693; 263 NW 34

Evidence—jury question. Evidence that 15-year-old son, who often drove family car, had permission to drive the car to choir practice and also to a high school pep meeting, raised a jury question as to whether or not the son was driving with his father's consent at the time of the accident which occurred after the pep meeting.

McCann v Downey, 227-1277; 290 NW 690

Erroneous instructions. In a joint action against the owner of an automobile and against the driver thereof based on the alleged negligent operation of the car, it is erroneous to require the jury to find for both defendants, or against both defendants, when the consent of the owner to the operation in question is distinctly in issue.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Joint action against owner and operator—erroneous instructions. In a joint action against the owner and operator of an automobile the evidence, manifestly, may be such as to justify a verdict against the operator and in favor of the owner, and in such cases instructions holding the owner liable in case the jury finds the operator liable are fundamentally erroneous.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144

Unallowable verdicts. In a joint action for damages against the driver and owner of an automobile, based, as to the driver, on his negligence, and as to the owner, on his consent to the driving (as to which consent the proof is substantially conclusive), there cannot legally be separate verdicts, one holding the driver liable, and one holding the owner nonliable.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

(d) OWNER'S CONSENT TO OPERATION—conclud'd

Responsibility between defendants — jury question. In an action for injuries sustained by a passenger riding in a taxicab, the question of responsibility for the accident between the owner of the cab, the driver, and a party to an agreement under which the cab was operated, was a jury question.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Liability of bailor. The bailor of an automobile is personally liable to a third person for damages consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the bailee. (§5026, C., '24.)

Robinson v Bruce Co., 205-261; 215 NW 724; 61 ALR 851; 28 NCCA 626; 30 NCCA 90

Due process—liability of bailor. The statute which renders the bailor of an automobile liable to third persons for damages consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the bailee is not violative of the due process clause of the constitution.

Robinson v Bruce Co., 205-261; 215 NW 724; 61 ALR 851; 28 NCCA 626; 30 NCCA 90

Liability of owner. The owner of an automobile by consenting to its operation by another renders himself liable in damages consequent on either a negligent or reckless operation by such other person.

White v Center, 218-1027; 254 NW 90

Joint negligence. The owner of an automobile who permits another person to drive it is liable for the joint negligence of the driver and a third party riding with said driver.

Tissue v Durin, 216-709; 246 NW 806

Negligence of borrower imputable to lender. One who borrows an automobile becomes, by force of our statute, the agent of the lender in the operation of the car. It necessarily follows that the negligence of the borrower is imputable to the lender and is a bar to the recovery of damages by the lender in an action against a third party, if such negligence contributed to the injury and resulting damages.

Secured Fin. Co. v Railway, 207-1105; 224 NW 88; 61 ALR 855; 30 NCCA 90

Loan for specific purpose. Unquestioned evidence that an automobile was loaned by the owner to a party for a specific purpose, and that said party wrongfully used said car for a specifically different purpose, and that the injury in question occurred in the operation of the car while it was being so wrongfully used, establishes the nonliability of the owner as a matter of law.

Heavilin v Wendell, 214-844; 241 NW 654; 83 ALR 872

Nonliability of owner. The owner of an automobile is not liable for damages done by his car consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the proprietor of a garage who, without the knowledge of said owner, and as an independent contractor, was towing said car to his place of business in order to repair it; nor is a nonowner of the car, who directed the garageman to take the car and repair it, liable for said damages.

Johnson v Selindh, 221-378; 265 NW 622; 39 NCCA 289, 565

Operation by nonowner—unnecessary proof. In an action for damages consequent on the operation of an automobile by nonowner thereof, plaintiff need not show that such nonowner was in the employ of the owner, or was the agent of the owner or was transacting the business of the owner.

Tigue Sales v Motor Co., 207-567; 221 NW 514

Owner liability—negligence of driver—truck operated by wife. An owner permitting and directing his wife, in driving a truck, to back up the truck 2 or 3 feet is liable in damages if she does so negligently.

Johnston v Johnson, 225-77; 279 NW 139; 118 ALR 233

Municipally owned automobiles. This section does not embrace the ownership of public property used solely for governmental purposes.

Bateson v County, 213-718; 239 NW 803

Road grader not a "car". A caterpillar road grader belonging to a county and operated on the public highway is not a "car" within the meaning of the statutory declaration that the owner of a "car" is liable for damages done by the car when it is operated with his consent.

Bateson v County, 213-718; 239 NW 803

(e) COMMON ENTERPRISE

Fundamental basis of doctrine. If two or more persons unite in the joint prosecution of a common purpose, under such circumstances that each has authority, express or implied, to act for all in respect to the conduct or the means of agency employed to execute such common purpose, the negligence of any one of them in the management thereof will be imputed to all of the others.

This doctrine is based on the relation of agency existing between the parties engaged in the common enterprise.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 273 NW 169

Common enterprise. The contributory negligence of a husband will be imputed to his wife when they are engaged in a joint or common enterprise.

Lindquist v Thierman, 216-170; 248 NW 504; 87 ALR 893; 34 NCCA 309

Negligence of husband imputable to wife. Proof that a husband and wife, riding together in an automobile on the highway, were engaged in a common enterprise is insufficient to justify the imputation of the husband's negligence to the wife. The proof should further show that the wife had some control over the car and the driver thereof.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147
Hough v Freight Service, 222-548; 269 NW 1
Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 273 NW 169

Passenger—common enterprise—limitation. The negligence of the driver of an automobile cannot be deemed the contributory negligence of a passenger, on the claim that the driver and passenger were engaged in a common enterprise, unless the passenger has the right, in some manner, to control the operation of the automobile.

Stingley v Crawford, 219-509; 258 NW 316

Joint adventure or common enterprise. The doctrine that when parties are engaged in a joint adventure or common enterprise each is the agent of the other for the purpose of executing the adventure or enterprise, and that the negligence of one is the negligence of all other co-adventurers, has no application to an action by one joint adventurer against another joint adventurer based on the negligence of the latter.

White v McVicker, 216-90; 246 NW 385; 34 NCCA 416

White v McVicker, 219-834; 259 NW 465

Joint enterprise between driver and passenger—giving directions to reach destination insufficient. A joint enterprise is not shown between a driver of an automobile and his passenger when the passenger neither drove the car at any time nor exercised any control over its operation, but merely directed the driver which way to go so that the driver might view a team of mules which he was interested in buying.

Churchill v Briggs, 225-1187; 282 NW 280

Erroneous direction of verdict. An order for a new trial is, of course, proper when the judgment entered was ordered by the court on an erroneous theory of the law on a material point. So held where the court treated both plaintiff and defendant as joint adventurers and directed a verdict against plaintiff on the erroneous theory that defendant's negligence was imputable to the plaintiff.

Thompson v Farrand, 217-160; 251 NW 44; 34 NCCA 398

(f) TO PASSENGER IN ACTION AGAINST THIRD PARTY

Driver's negligence not imputed to passenger. The negligence of a motor vehicle driver is not ordinarily imputed to a passenger; however, such passenger must show the exercise of ordinary care.

Williams v Kearney, 224-1006; 278 NW 180

Common enterprise. The negligence of the driver of an automobile cannot be deemed the contributory negligence of a passenger, on the claim that the driver and passenger were engaged in a common enterprise, unless the passenger has the right in some manner to control the operation of the automobile.

Stingley v Crawford, 219-509; 258 NW 316

Negligence of driver not imputed to passenger. The negligence of the driver of an automobile—he having full management, control, and supervision of it—is not imputable to his passenger.

Megggers v Kinley, 221-383; 265 NW 614
Kehm v Dilts, 222-826; 270 NW 388

Contributory negligence of driver-host not imputed to passenger. The passenger in an automobile who is injured in a collision with another car may, notwithstanding the contributory negligence of the driver-host, recover his damages from the owner and operator of said other car on proof, (1) that said owner and operator were proximately negligent, (2) that he—the passenger—had no control over his driver-host, and (3) that he—the passenger—was free from contributory negligence; and the assignee of such damages, even tho he be the driver-host, may recover on such assignment on the same conditions, and the court must so instruct, even tho said driver-host could not, because of his contributory negligence, recover damages personal to himself.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776
Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853; 37 NCCA 640

Passenger. The negligence of the driver of an automobile is not imputable to his passenger, they not being engaged in a joint or common enterprise. And the court should not instruct that such negligence is imputable simply because defendant pleads that the driver's negligence was the sole cause of the injury sued for.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Child passenger. The negligence of the driver of a conveyance in which a child is riding is, in an action by the child against a third party for damages, wholly immaterial as far as said child is concerned unless said negligence is the sole cause of the damages. (See Vol. I, §5028, Anno. 13.)

Armstrong v Waffle, 212-335; 236 NW 507; 5 NCCA(NS) 763

Collision with overtaking and passing vehicle. In a personal injury action arising out of a collision occurring when the automobile in which plaintiff was riding with husband-driver was passing a truck which attempted to make a left turn into driveway of a farm just as the automobile came alongside, held, that statute relating to speed, which requires reasonable speed with due regard to existing conditions, the truck being the only "existing condition" at the time and place of accident, was inapplicable, and the court properly instructed jury only on the statute governing passing vehicles as affecting automobile driver's contributory negligence, which would be imputed to plaintiff by court's former instruction.

Monen v Jewel Tea Co., 227-547; 288 NW 637

Wife riding with husband—nonduty to warn. A wife, while riding in an automobile owned and operated by her husband, and over the movements of which automobile she neither has nor attempts to have control, is under duty to exercise, for her own safety, ordinary care in view of the circumstances, but this duty does not require the wife, in order to escape the imputation of contributory negligence, to maintain an attitude of watchfulness and warning and protest to the husband of possible dangers.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 272 NW 169

Imputing husband's negligence to wife. A wife who was riding in the front seat of a car driven by her husband did not have such control or right to direct the movements of the car that the negligence of the husband should be imputed to her, even tho she may have suggested that he should not drive faster than 35 miles an hour.

Newman v Hotz, 226-834; 285 NW 287

Husband and wife. The negligence, if any, of a husband in the operation of an automobile owned by him and used on the occasion of a funeral of one of his relatives is not imputable to his wife who was riding with him. (See Vol. I, §5028.)

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

Negligence of husband not imputable to wife. Proof that a husband and wife, riding together in an automobile on the highway, were engaged in a common enterprise is insufficient to justify the imputation of the husband's negligence to the wife. The proof should further show that the wife had some control over the car and the driver thereof.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

Hough v Freight Service, 222-548; 269 NW 1

Occupant injured — imputed negligence of driver. Where a car collided with a stalled tractor-trailer, jackknifed on an icy hill at night, the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury, where it is shown the tractor, with lighted head lamps, standing on the right side of the highway, diverted plaintiff's and husband-driver's attention, and, there being no reasonable apparent cause to suspect that trailer blocked the left side of highway, and, where

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Collision with stalled truck. Where a car collided with a truck-trailer which had stalled on an icy hill at night on a country highway and had jackknifed across the left side of the highway on which plaintiff's husband was driving, the question of the husband's negligence in braking his car to such extent that it slid on the ice and collided with the side of the trailer, in the absence of any other evidence that car went out of control, held, that question of negligence of the husband as the sole proximate cause of the collision was properly submitted to the jury, and even tho it may be conceded that husband was negligent, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that such negligence was the sole proximate cause of the injury.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Fundamental basis of doctrine. The negligence of a husband in the operation of an automobile cannot be deemed the contributory negligence of his wife who rides with him—cannot be imputed to the wife—simply because the husband and wife at the time of the negligence in question are engaged in a common enterprise, unless the wife has the right in some manner at the time in question to control the operation of said car.

Carpenter v Wolfe, 223-417; 272 NW 169

Motorcycle passenger riding behind driver—care required. A girl riding on a motorcycle directly behind the driver, and unable to see the road ahead without standing up, thereby endangering the operation of the vehicle, cannot as a matter of law be under duty to warn the driver of impending danger in order to avoid the driver's negligence being imputed to her.

Williams v Kearney, 224-1006; 278 NW 180

Negligence of host—proximate cause. The submission to the jury of interrogatories bearing on the negligence of the driver of a conveyance (in an action by a passenger against a third party for damages) is not erroneous when the negligence of the driver was material on, and strictly confined to, the issue of proximate cause.

Schlinkert v Skaalia, 203-672; 213 NW 219

Imputed negligence—instructions construed. In an unsuccessful action against a railway company for negligently causing the death of a passenger riding in a truck, an instruction as to what acts of the said driver would constitute negligence cannot be deemed to impute the negligence, if any, of said driver to the passenger when other instructions specifically state, in effect, that the negligence of the driver would be no defense if the negligence of the defendant was found to be the sole proximate cause of said death.

Reidy v Railway, 220-1386; 258 NW 675

Injuries actionable tho driver negligent. An occupant of a car is not deprived of the right to recover for injuries sustained in an accident even tho the driver of the car in which she was riding and also the defendant, who left another car on the highway where it was run into, were both guilty of proximate negligence.

Newman v Hotz, 226-834; 285 NW 287

Unsupported instructions. In a damage action where a truck traversing the crest of a hill on a snow-drifted highway, sideswipes a passenger automobile, the question of contributory negligence of a plaintiff motorist riding in the back seat should not be submitted to the jury in the absence of any claim that plaintiff's driver's negligence, if any, was imputable to the plaintiff or was the sole proximate cause of the accident.

Schalk v Smith, 224-904; 277 NW 303

Consideration of nonimputable negligence. An instruction to the effect that even tho the negligence of a husband with whom the wife was riding could not be imputed to the wife, nevertheless the negligence of the husband could be considered by the jury on the issue whether the negligence of the defendant—the driver of another car—was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, is a correct statement of law, and if plaintiff wishes such instruction modified by a statement as to the law governing the concurrent negligence of different parties, she must request such instruction.

Kuhn v Kjose, 216-36; 248 NW 230

Passenger going to sleep. The fact that a passenger is asleep in an automobile at the time of an accident does not prevent a recovery of damages by him unless there exists some causal connection between the fact of sleep and the accident.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147; 36 NCCA 316

Injuries from defects or obstructions in highways and other public places. A passenger in the front seat of an automobile, with opportunity equal to that of the driver to see what is to be seen, and free from any diverting circumstances, cannot surrender himself to the care of the driver and then successfully contend that he (the passenger) was in the exercise of ordinary care.

Hutchinson v Service Co., 210-9; 230 NW 387; 33 NCCA 170

Passenger nonapprehensive of danger. A passenger in an automobile is not guilty of negligence per se, nor is the negligence of the driver imputable to such passenger simply from the fact that the passenger implicitly trusts the driver, when the passenger had no occasion to apprehend any danger until the very instant of the accident. (See Vol. I, §5028, Anno. 13.)

Johnson v Railway, 201-1044; 207 NW 984

Motorcycle passenger vs automobile owner—nonassumption of risk—sudden danger. In action to recover for death of 13-year-old boy resulting from collision between motorcycle, on which he was riding as a passenger, and defendant's automobile, allegation in defendant's answer that decedent assumed risk of motorcycle driver's negligence was properly stricken where pleaded facts and common knowledge justified conclusion that danger of the collision could not have been apparent more than a few seconds of time so that there was no time for deliberation and voluntary assumption of such risk.

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

Passenger—nonassumption of risk. A passenger in an automobile cannot be held to assume the risks arising out of the incompetency, inexperience, or recklessness of the driver unless knowledge on the part of the passenger of such condition or conditions is adequately shown.

Stingley v Crawford, 219-509; 258 NW 316

(g) EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE

"Owner" defined. When an automobile actually belongs to an employee, the employer is not also to be deemed an "owner" because in the contract of employment the employee contracts to hold the employer harmless in the operation of the car.

McLain v Armour & Co., 205-343; 218 NW 69

Operation by nonowner—unnecessary proof. In an action for damages consequent on the operation of an automobile by nonowner thereof, plaintiff need not show that such nonowner was in the employ of the owner, or was the agent of the owner, or was transacting the business of the owner.

Tigue Sales v Motor Co., 207-567; 221 NW 514

Negligence of garageman—nonliability of owner. The owner of an automobile is not liable for damages done by his car consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the proprietor of a garage who, without the knowledge of said owner, and as an independent contractor, was towing said car to his place of business in order to repair it; nor is a nonowner of the car, who directed the garageman to take the car and repair it, liable for said damages.

(g) EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE—continued

Pleading—nonallowable amendment. A timely brought action based solely on the common-law plea of defendant's liability consequent on the negligent operation of an automobile by defendant's employee, in due course of employment, may not, after the action would be barred by the statute of limitation, be so amended as to wholly abandon said pleaded basis and to substitute an entirely new basis for recovery, to wit, an allegation that defendant was liable because the automobile in question belonged to defendant and was operated at the time in question with defendant's consent.

Page v Constr. Co., 219-1017; 257 NW 426

Consent of owner-employer—effect. An employer, whose automobile is being operated with his consent, is not liable, under this section, to his own employee, for an injury suffered by said employee in consequence of the actionable negligence of said operator of the car, provided said injury is compensable under the workmen's compensation act.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Discharge of employer's liability—effect on third party wrongdoer. Where an injury which is mandatorily compensable under the workmen's compensation act is received by an employee in consequence of the actionable negligence of the operator of an automobile owned by, and operated with the consent of, the employer, the fact that the employer fully discharges his statutory liability to the employee does not ipso facto discharge the legal liability of the said negligent operator to said employee.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Scope of employment. In an action against the owner of an automobile on the theory that the car was being operated by the owner's agent and with the owner's consent, the court may very properly instruct that there could not be a recovery unless the driver was, at the time in question, driving within the scope of his employment—such instruction being directly applicable to the supported claim of said owner.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Abandonment of employment—jury question. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a servant had temporarily abandoned his employment and had not returned thereto at the time of the commission by him of an alleged negligent act.

Heintz v Packing Co., 222-517; 268 NW 607

Employee exceeding authority. Where an employee, contrary to general and specific instructions, drove gas company's truck five miles outside city to take a co-employee home, instead of driving directly to company's shop, there was no such "consent" to use the truck as would make the company liable for its employee's negligence when a collision occurred during the trip.

Usher v Stafford, 227-443; 288 NW 432

Departure of servant from zone of service. When the range or zone of service of an employee embraced the taking of a truck to a place of storage for the night, the act of the employee in temporarily using the truck for his own personal use will not per se absolve the employer from liability for a negligent act by the employee occurring after the employee had resumed his duty to take the truck to its storage place, and while he was pursuing a proper route in the immediate vicinity thereof.

Orris v Tolerton, 201-1344; 207 NW 365; 25 NCCA 549; 34 NCCA 192, 213

Agent borrowing automobile. A telegraph company is not responsible for the act of its messenger in borrowing an automobile with which to make a delivery of a message, when the usual and ordinary way of making delivery was by means of a bicycle, and when the borrowing aforesaid was wholly unauthorized by, and unknown to, the company.

Hughes v Tel. Co., 211-1391; 236 NW 8; 31 NCCA 423

Use of automobile—authority of servant. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a master had impliedly authorized his salesman, in order to perform his duties, to travel about the country by means of the salesman's individually owned automobile.

Heintz v Packing Co., 222-517; 268 NW 607

Employee (?) or independent contractor (?). A salesman who, when traveling from place to place about the country in behalf of the business of another party, employs his own automobile, and does so with the implied authority of said other party, cannot be deemed an independent contractor as to said matter of transportation when he is at all times subject to summary discharge by said other party, and also subject to the orders of said other party as to what he shall do, and when and where he shall do it.

Heintz v Packing Co., 222-517; 268 NW 607

Servant (?) or independent contractor (?)—test. One who is employed to do a certain work is a servant of the employer and not an independent contractor, when he—the one doing the work—is subject to the direction and control of the employer as to the details and method to be followed in the performance of the work. So held as to one operating an automobile oil truck on commission.

Lembke v Fritz, 223-261; 272 NW 300

Dual independent contractors. Where the primary contractor on a highway improvement sublets the hauling to a second party, and retains no substantial control over said second party except in case of the latter's default, and where said second party in turn sublets to a third party under contract terms substantially similar in effect, neither said third party nor his employees are employees either of said primary contractor or of said second party.

Page v Const. Co., 215-1388; 245 NW 208

Government nonliability for employee's tort—respondent superior—exception. The exemption accorded counties and other governmental bodies and their officers from liability for torts growing out of the negligent acts of their agents or employees is a limitation or exception to the rule of respondent superior and in no way affects the fundamental principle of torts that one who wrongfully inflicts injury upon another is individually liable to the injured person.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608; 4 NCCA (NS) 4

School bus driver as independent contractor—nongovernmental function. A school bus driver furnishing his own bus under a contract embodying certain conditions to transport school children, but not under the supervision, control, and regulation of the board, is an independent contractor liable for his own negligence and not an employee exercising a governmental function.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Injuries to third persons—liability basis. Every case which allows recovery against a servant can be based not upon any relationship growing out of the employment but upon the fundamental proposition that the servant violated some duty that he owed to the person injured. It may be an act of misfeasance, nonfeasance, or malfeasance.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Declarations inadmissible against master. In a joint action against a master and his servant for damages consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the servant, declarations or statements by the servant made several days after the accident and tending to show the negligence of the servant are, while admissible against the servant, not admissible against the master; and the court must by proper instruction, if requested, limit the testimony accordingly.

Drouillard v Rudolph, 207-367; 223 NW 100
Wilkinson v Lbr. Co., 208-933; 226 NW 43
Looney v Parker, 210-85; 230 NW 570
Glass v Hutchinson Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

Subagency—essentials. A subagency cannot arise without the knowledge or consent of either the principal or his agent.

McLain v Armour & Co., 205-343; 218 NW 69

Acting without permit—connivance at violation—effect. A shipper of goods will be deemed as participating in the doing of an illegal act when he enters into a contract with a motor vehicle freight operator for the transportation of freight over the highways of this state by said operator as an independent contractor, and knows, at the time of so contracting, that said operator has no right to carry on his said business because of the failure of said operator (1) to obtain from the board of railroad commissioners (now commerce commission) the legally required official permit to carry on said business, and (2) to file with said board the legally required bond. It follows that said operator will not be deemed an independent contractor but simply the agent of said shipper.

Hough v Freight Service, 222-548; 269 NW 1

V PROXIMATE CAUSE

(a) IN GENERAL

Question of fact—general rules applicable. The question of proximate cause, as a general rule, is a question of fact, and the same rules apply as in other questions of fact.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

No evidence of other cause. The question whether a certain negligent act was the moving or producing cause—the proximate cause—of an injury is properly submitted to the jury when the record contains evidence which establishes an act which could fairly be such proximate cause and contains no evidence tending to establish any other cause.

Buchanan v Cream Co., 215-415; 246 NW 41

Proximate cause tho not sole cause—instructions. Instructions involving the thought that negligence in the operation of an automobile might be the proximate cause of an injury even tho it was not the sole cause, reviewed, and held not to permit a recovery for negligence which was not the proximate cause of the injury.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Instructions—"a proximate cause"—non-prejudicial error. In an automobile collision negligence case where plaintiff's son was driving automobile in which plaintiff was riding, an instruction that plaintiff need only prove defendant's negligence to be "a proximate cause" is not prejudicial error when court also instructed that negligence of plaintiff or plaintiff's son barred recovery and the instructions were to be read as a whole.

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Proximate cause. The contributory negligence which will defeat a plaintiff is such negligence as contributes to the injury in any way or in any degree. Error results from instructing that such negligence must contribute proximately to the injury.

Hamilton v Boyd, 218-885; 256 NW 290

V PROXIMATE CAUSE—continued(a) IN GENERAL—continued

Need not be proximate cause of injury. Contributory negligence in order to defeat recovery need not be the proximate cause of the injury in question. It is only necessary that such negligence contributes to the injury in some degree or in some manner.

Hogan v Nesbit, 216-75; 246 NW 270

Negligence of host—proximate cause. The submission to the jury of interrogatories bearing on the negligence of the driver of a conveyance (in an action by a passenger against a third party for damages) is not erroneous when the negligence of the driver was material on, and strictly confined to, the issue of proximate cause.

Schlinkert v Skaalia, 203-672; 213 NW 219

Proximate negligence of different co-defendants. On separate trials of an action for damages against the operators of different vehicles on one of which plaintiff was a passenger at the time she was injured by a collision, defendant is properly denied an instruction to the effect that he cannot be held liable if his co-defendant might be proximately negligent.

Newland v McClelland & Son, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Negligence of outsider as proximate cause. The court must submit to the jury the supported plea that the proximate cause of an accident was the negligence of an outsider—a person not a party to the action.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Third person's negligence. Under instructions properly stating that a plaintiff cannot recover unless defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of his injuries, and in the absence of a requested instruction, there is no error in failing to instruct that if the sole proximate cause of the injury was the negligence of a third person, plaintiff could not recover.

Gregory v Suhr, 224-954; 277 NW 721

Icy highway. The icy condition of a highway may not be said to be the proximate cause of an accident unless it can be said that such icy condition would have brought about the accident irrespective of the negligence assigned in the pleadings and supported by the proofs.

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

Noncausal negligence. Failure of the driver of a conveyance to keep a proper lookout for other persons using the highway or to keep his windshield clean is quite inconsequential when the proximate cause of the injury in question was the icy condition of the street.

McDowell v Interstate Co., 208-641; 224 NW 58; 31 NCCA 282; 32 NCCA 486

Negligence—unsupported issues. Unsupported issues are very properly and necessarily excluded from the jury. So held as to the issues (1) whether the operator of an automobile failed to maintain a proper lookout, (2) whether he was negligent in stepping out of the car and upon the running board preparatory to cleaning the sleet from the windshield, and (3) whether the snowy and icy condition of the pavement was the proximate cause of an accident.

Winter v Davis, 217-424; 251 NW 770; 39 NCCA 308

Operation without brakes. Record reviewed and held that the proximate cause of an accident was not the condition in which a railway crossing was maintained, but the speed at which an overloaded truck was operated without brakes.

Gable v Kriege, 221-852; 267 NW 86; 105 ALR 539

Insufficient lighting—effect. The operation of an automobile with lights which do not measure up to statutory requirements becomes quite immaterial, in a civil action, if such shortcoming in no manner contributes to the damage.

Hansen v Kemmish, 201-1008; 208 NW 277; 45 ALR 498; 29 NCCA 326; 33 NCCA 100

Violation of statute—avoidance by contributory negligence. Failure of a defendant, the driver of an automobile, to have the headlights on his car displayed at a time required by statute becomes inconsequential when the contributory negligence of the plaintiff was the proximate cause of the injury resulting from the collision.

Sheridan v Limbrecht, 205-573; 218 NW 278; 29 NCCA 300; 35 NCCA 661; 2 NCCA (NS) 417

Lack of proper lamps on trucks or trailers. In an action at law to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when car in which she was riding collided with a tractor-trailer which had stalled on an icy hill on a country highway at night and had jack-knifed across the highway, the question of owners' and operators' negligence in failing to comply with statutes prescribing number and place of lamps required on truck or trailer, and whether such negligence, if any, had proximate causal connection with injury sustained by plaintiff, held, under the evidence, properly submitted to the jury.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Stalled vehicle—absence of signals. The fact that, upon the stalling of a vehicle in the public highway, no lights or signals were erected to show the presence and position of said vehicle cannot be deemed the proximate cause of a collision with the stalled vehicle when the driver of the colliding vehicle discovered the presence and position of the stalled car in ample time to stop had he been so driving as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Albrecht v Const. Co., 218-1205; 257 NW 183; 36 NCCA 713

Parking in highway—absence of lights. Negligence alleged to have been the proximate cause of a collision and asserted in the plea that defendant's truck (1) was parked, in the nighttime, diagonally across the entire right-hand side of a paved highway, and (2) without lights, with substantial evidence pro and con, both as to the position of the truck and as to the lights, necessarily presents a jury question.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853; 37 NCCA 496

Parking on left side without tail light—bicyclist colliding. Section 5056, C., '35 [§5030.08, C., '39], requiring parking on right side of city street, was in effect in city which had not adopted any ordinance to the contrary under authority of §4997, C., '35 [§5018.01, C., '39], and §5045, C., '35 [§§5033.07, 5033.08, C., '39], in view of its legislative history, required red tail light upon automobile parked at night upon city street. The purpose of these statutes was protection and warning of traffic, and violation thereof without legal excuse was negligence, but whether such negligence was proximate cause of a bicyclist's collision with an automobile so parked was question for jury.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

Unavailable negligence. A general allegation of negligence in leaving a stalled automobile in the highway unattended is not available to a traveler who had the fullest knowledge of the presence of the automobile long before he reached and collided with it; and especially when the leaving of said car in the highway was not the proximate cause of the injury that was suffered.

Scoville v Bakery, 213-534; 239 NW 110; 35 NCCA 719; 36 NCCA 94

Stalled motorist—freedom from negligence—requested instruction—jury question. In a damage action for personal injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, the burden is on plaintiff to establish (1) the defendant's negligence, (2) such negligence as the proximate cause of the injury, and (3) plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence. Hence, a motorist who stands in the center of the road near the rear of her automobile stalled on the highway, attempting to stop a following motorist, and, tho having the opportunity, fails to seek a place of safety when she sees the approaching motorist apparently will crash into her stalled automobile, is neither entitled to an instruction establishing her freedom from contributory negligence as a matter of law, nor to a directed verdict against the defendant.

Murchland v Jones, 225-149; 279 NW 382

Collision with stalled truck. Where a car collided with a truck-trailer which had stalled on an icy hill at night on a country highway and had jackknifed across the left side of the highway on which plaintiff's husband was driving, the question of the husband's negligence in braking his car to such extent that it slid on the ice and collided with the side of the trailer, in the absence of any other evidence that car went out of control, held, that question of negligence of the husband as the sole proximate cause of the collision was properly submitted to the jury; and even tho it may be conceded that husband was negligent, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that such negligence was the sole proximate cause of the injury.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Child on sled—parked truck. A truck which is legally parked alongside the curb of a public street is not the proximate cause of an injury to a child whose sled was deflected into the truck by a bump in the street.

Dennier v Johnson, 214-770; 240 NW 745; 35 NCCA 717

Avoiding contributory negligence. A streetcar motorman who plainly sees that the driver of another conveyance is negligently placing himself in a position of danger on the tracks, or is about to do so, and by ordinary care can avoid an accident and fails to do so, must be deemed guilty of negligence which is the proximate cause of the accident, irrespective of the negligence of the injured party.

Lynch v Railway, 215-1119; 245 NW 219

Turning to left—streetcar. Evidence reviewed, and held that the act of a motorist in turning to the left on meeting a streetcar, instead of stopping, was the proximate cause of an injury to a pedestrian in the street, rather than the act of the streetcar operator in allowing the streetcar to turn to the left on a curve before stopping.

Moss v Railway, 217-354; 251 NW 627

Speed—when nonproximate cause. The operation of an automobile, even at an excessive speed, alongside a moving streetcar and in the direction in which the streetcar is moving, is not the proximate cause of an injury to a pedestrian who suddenly darts across the streetcar track ahead of the moving streetcar, and into the line of automobile travel, and is hit by the automobile.

Pettijohn v Weede, 209-902; 227 NW 824; 35 NCCA 5

Speed as nonproximate cause. A rate of speed which is not negligence per se cannot be deemed the proximate cause of an accident when the act of the injured party in stepping into the pathway of the car was so sudden and unexpected as to render impossible the stopping of the car.

Howk v Anderson, 218-358; 253 NW 32; 35 NCCA 1

V PROXIMATE CAUSE—continued

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Stepping into path of automobile. The negligence of a pedestrian, who left a position of safety on a curb and walked directly into the path of an automobile which struck him, was the proximate cause of the accident, and under the circumstances the rate of speed of the car was not material.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Noncausal negligence. Excessive or negligent speed of an automobile becomes immaterial when it is not the proximate cause of the injury in question.

McDowell v Interstate Co., 208-641; 224 NW 58; 35 NCCA 21

Crutchley v Bruce, 214-731; 240 NW 238; 35 NCCA 25

Attempting to dodge car. The act of a pedestrian, while crossing a street, in attempting to dodge an oncoming car, may constitute the proximate cause of the injuries suffered by him. So held where the pedestrian evidently stepped or turned back directly in front of said car.

Kortright v Strater, 222-603; 269 NW 745

Jury question on proximate cause. Conflicting testimony as to the speed of the defendant's truck while following pick-up truck on an icy street, and as to the distance between the trucks when the one in front skidded and turned around, presented a jury question as to whether the driver of the defendant's truck was guilty of negligence in colliding with the pick-up truck, forcing it over a curb where it struck the plaintiff, and whether such negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Racing as proximate cause—evidence. On the issue whether two automobiles were racing and whether such race was the proximate cause of an injury to a third party, the court may, in its discretion, refuse to receive evidence of racing remote in point of time unless evidence of racing immediately before the accident is first introduced.

Glass v Hutchinson Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

Sudden stopping of cars—proximate cause. Evidence held affirmatively to show that the stopping of three cars on the highway was not the proximate cause of a collision between a fourth car and a car traveling in the opposite direction from the three stationary cars.

Foster v Flaugh, 223-40; 271 NW 503

Failure to signal "stop" — nonproximate cause. Failure of the driver of a truck to give a visible signal of his intention to stop is not the proximate cause of a collision with an automobile approaching from the rear when the driver of the oncoming rear car did not see the truck until an instant before the collision, and, therefore, had not regulated or gauged his speed with the speed of the truck ahead.

Isaacs v Bruce, 218-759; 254 NW 57

Assured clear distance ahead—proximate negligence. The driver of a vehicle who, on a clear and unobstructed road, and at a distance of 250 feet, sees a substantial object on the right-hand side of the road ahead, and at a distance of 150 feet discovers that the object is a truck, and at a distance of 25 feet discovers that the truck is stationary, and thereupon, because of unslackened speed, is unable to avoid hitting the truck by turning to the left into the unobstructed part of the road, is guilty of a negligence which is the proximate cause of the resulting collision.

Albrecht v Const. Co., 218-1205; 257 NW 183; 36 NCCA 713; 1 NCCA (NS) 15

Failure to see stalled car in fog. When, on a foggy night, a car ran into another car which was parked on the highway, and the proof did not show that the stalled car was plainly visible, it was error for the court on motion to rule that the negligence of the driver of the car which ran into the other car was the sole proximate cause of injuries sustained by an occupant of the moving car.

Newman v Hotz, 226-834; 285 NW 287

Driving into side of train. Evidence which is solely to the effect that, on a misty and foggy night, a freight train was standing across a public railway crossing without any visible warning whatever of its presence, except the train itself, reveals no negligence (if it be deemed negligence) on the part of the railway company or its employees which can be deemed the proximate cause of an accident to a motorist who drove his car along the public highway and into the side of said train.

Dolan v Bremner, 220-1143; 263 NW 798

(b) DEFINITION

Proximate cause defined. Negligence is the proximate cause of an injury which follows such negligent act, if it can be fairly said that in the absence of such negligence the injury or damage complained of would not have occurred.

Buchanan v Creamery Co., 215-415; 246 NW 41

Dennis v Merrill, 218-1259; 257 NW 322

Gray v Des Moines, 221-596; 265 NW 612

(c) INTERVENING CAUSE

Negligence—intervention of second force—determining liability. Where an injury results through the operation of a second force, ordinarily liability depends upon whether or not that second force may be anticipated to be the natural and probable consequence of the negligent act of the first party.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Negligence—intervening third party's act. Where the act of a third party, even if it is negligent, intervenes between the original negligence of defendant and the injury, there is "proximate cause" if, under the circumstances, an ordinarily prudent man could or should have anticipated that such intervening act, or a similar intervening act, would occur.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Negligence—"superseding cause"—liability—effect. The fact that an intervening act of a third party is negligent in itself, or is done in a negligent manner, does not make it a "superseding cause" of harm to another if the actor should have realized that a third person might so act, or a reasonable man knowing the situation would not regard it as highly extraordinary that the third person had so acted, or the intervening act is a normal response to the situation created by actor's conduct and manner in which it is done is not extraordinarily negligent.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Third person's hazardous acts—liability of first person. If the realizable likelihood that a third person may act in a particular manner is the hazard or one of the hazards which makes a person negligent, such act whether innocent, negligent, intentionally tortious, or criminal does not prevent the first person from being liable for injury caused thereby.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Speed of train—driving upon crossing. If the jury might properly find that the concurrent negligence of defendant and of a third party caused the injury or death of a nonnegligent person, the court cannot properly direct a verdict for defendant on the theory that the negligence of said third party was an intervening negligence which wholly supplanted and superseded the negligence of the said defendant. So held where the concurring negligence was (1) that of defendant in operating its train over a crossing at an unlawful rate of speed, and (2) that of the operator of an automobile in driving upon said crossing.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

Streetcar turning to left. Evidence reviewed, and held that the act of a motorist in turning to the left on meeting a streetcar, instead of stopping, was the proximate cause of an injury to a pedestrian in the street, rather than the act of the streetcar operator in allowing the streetcar to turn to the left on a curve before stopping.

Moss v Railway, 217-354; 251 NW 627

Negligence—proximate cause (?)—intervening cause (?). In making a left-hand turn into an intersecting road, negligence on the part of a westbound driver, (1) in failing to drive to the right and beyond the center before turning, or (2) in failing to note whether he could make the turn in safety, is not the proximate cause of injuries received by him by being hit by an eastbound car after he had completed the turn and was wholly on the intersecting road.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Street defect as cause of collision. The proximate cause of a collision between motor vehicles on a public street may be the defective condition which the city has long permitted to exist in a portion of its street, provided said condition, in view of all the relevant facts, was such as to reasonably charge the city with knowledge that some accident would probably result therefrom to motor vehicles and to the occupants thereof traveling over said defect. Phrased otherwise, where a city has long maintained in and on one side of its street a defect of such nature that an automobile passing over the defect was thereby swerved out of its course and onto the opposite side of the street where it collided with another vehicle properly moving in the opposite direction, the city cannot properly contend that said collision was an independent, intervening, and efficient cause which prevented the negligence of the city from being the proximate cause of the resulting injuries, when the jury might justly find that said defect, in view of all the relevant facts, was such as to reasonably charge the city with knowledge that some accident would probably result therefrom to motor vehicles and to the occupants thereof traveling over said defect.

Gray v Des Moines, 221-596; 265 NW 612; 104 ALR 1228

Accident causing injury—death following—jury question. Where a healthy, normal boy of 17 dies from an ear infection and mastoid involvement, the symptoms of which began shortly after the upsetting of a school bus in which he was riding, a jury question is created as to whether such accident was the moving or producing—the proximate—cause of the injury and death.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Children on sleds hooked to vehicle—speed as proximate cause of injury. Where children on sleds hooked to the rear of a moving automobile became frightened at the speed of the car, released their sleds, and in so doing turned aside into the path of an oncoming vehicle, whereby they were injured, such turning aside by the children did not prevent the motor vehicle operator's negligence from being the proximate cause of their injury.

Samuelson v Sherrill, 225-421; 280 NW 596

Collision—trucker struck while retrieving goods scattered on highway. A defendant-motorist's negligence in striking a truck stopped on the highway is not the proximate cause of a later injury to the trucker by another motorist, who struck him while he was attempting to remove his merchandise spilled on the highway. The latter intervening cause was the proximate cause of his injury.

V PROXIMATE CAUSE—continued(c) INTERVENING CAUSE—concluded

McClure v Richard, 225-949; 282 NW 312

Sudden emergency — nonnegligence. A motorist who, while operating his car easterly on the south or right-hand side of a paved road at 50 miles per hour (tho the night is misty and visibility is poor), is unexpectedly, violently, and negligently so hit by the car of another motorist as to be deflected to the north or left-hand side of the road and into collision with an oncoming westbound car, cannot, as to said latter collision, be deemed negligent because instantly when so deflected his hand involuntarily dropped from his steering wheel and his foot unintentionally reached the accelerator of his car instead of the brake.

Rich v Herny, 222-465; 269 NW 489

(d) CONCURRENT AGENCIES

Negligence liability. Principle reaffirmed that when two parties by their concurrent negligence injure a nonnegligent third party, both of said two parties are liable for the resulting damages suffered by said third party.

Andersen v Christensen, 222-177; 268 NW 527

Concurring negligence—no directed verdict. A defendant whose negligence operates proximately to produce an injury to a passenger in another car is not entitled to a directed verdict because the host of such injured party was guilty of negligence which also operated proximately to produce said injury.

Wolfson v Lumber Co., 210-244; 227 NW 608

Proximate cause not sole cause. Principle reaffirmed that certain negligent acts on the part of one party may be the proximate cause of an injury even tho they concurred with certain negligent acts of another party.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Proximate and concurring cause. If the negligence of the operator of an automobile proximately operates to produce a damage, he is liable therefor, even tho another concurring cause operates at the same time to bring about said damages; and in such case it is quite immaterial whether the concurring cause was or was not negligently put into operation.

Judd v Rudolph, 207-113; 222 NW 416; 62 ALR 1174; 1 NCCA(NS) 184

Proximate negligence of different co-defendants. On separate trials of an action for damages against the operators of different vehicles on one of which plaintiff was a passenger at the time she was injured by a collision, defendant is properly denied an instruction to the effect that he cannot be held liable if his co-defendant was proximately negligent.

Reason: Both defendants might be proximately negligent.

Newland v McClelland, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Collision resulting in collision. The act of the driver of an automobile in negligently running into a wagon and team on the highway and causing the team to run away may be the proximate cause of a later collision between said runaway team and another automobile, provided said latter collision was the natural or likely result of the first collision; and this is true tho the first driver did not foresee or apprehend said second collision.

Dennis v Merrill, 218-1259; 257 NW 322; 1 NCCA(NS) 175

Consideration of nonimputable negligence. An instruction to the effect that even tho the negligence of a husband with whom the wife was riding could not be imputed to the wife, nevertheless the negligence of the husband could be considered by the jury on the issue whether the negligence of the defendant—the driver of another car—was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, is a correct statement of law, and if plaintiff wishes such instruction modified by a statement as to the law governing the concurrent negligence of different parties, she must request such instruction.

Kuhn v Kjose, 216-36; 248 NW 230

Negligence of different agencies—jury question. Where the evidence demonstrates that an injury resulted from the negligence of two agencies, the question of proximate cause is peculiarly one for the jury.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853

Passenger—injuries actionable tho driver negligent. An occupant of a car is not deprived of the right to recover for injuries sustained in an accident even tho the driver of the car in which she was riding and also the defendant who left another car on the highway where it was run into were both guilty of proximate negligence.

Newman v Hotz, 226-834; 285 NW 287

Sudden stopping of car on curve. The driver of an automobile who is on the right-hand side of the road at a curve and driving at a proper speed is not guilty of negligence in suddenly applying the brakes in order to avoid hitting an overtaking and passing car which unexpectedly swerved in front of him, and in order to prevent his own car going into a ditch, tho by so doing the wheels of his car locked and the momentum skidded the car across the road and into another car.

Klaaren v Shadley, 215-1043; 247 NW 301

Concurrent negligence—erroneous instruction. If the jury might properly find that the concurrent negligence of defendant and of a third party caused the injury or death of a nonnegligent person, the court cannot properly direct a verdict for defendant on the theory that the negligence of said third party was an intervening negligence which wholly supplanted and superseded the negligence of the said defendant. So held where the concurring negligence was (1) that of defendant in operating its train over a crossing at an unlawful rate of speed, and (2) that of the operator of an automobile in driving upon said crossing.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

(e) INEVITABLE ACCIDENT

Absence of evidence. An instruction on the subject of "inevitable" accident is wholly improper when there is no evidence whatever supporting such a theory.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Confusing and unsupported instructions. Instructions with reference to an "inevitable" accident and defendant's nonliability therefor are wholly out of place when there is no applicable evidence in the record.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Supplanting issue of negligence with inevitable accident. When the record testimony shows that a collision between automobiles and the resulting damage was caused (1) by the negligence of the plaintiff, or (2) by the negligence of the defendant, or (3) by the negligence of both parties, the court must not in its instructions depart from the issues of negligence and inject into the instructions the theory of inevitable accident.

Christenson v Tel. Co., 222-808; 270 NW 394

Jury question. When the evidence presents a jury question on the issue of defendant's negligence and plaintiff's contributory negligence, the court cannot, of course, sustain defendant's motion to dismiss on his claim of unavoidable accident.

Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220

Person thrown from one tractor under another. Where plaintiff fell from one tractor and was injured by another tractor, whether the accident was unavoidable on the part of the construction company operating the tractors was a jury question.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 283 NW 735

VI DEFENSES

(a) IN GENERAL

Collision with stationary truck—diverting circumstances. The position of an unlighted truck parked in the highway, and the diverting circumstances occurring just preceding a collision with the truck, may have a very material bearing on the issue of plaintiff's contributory negligence, and the assured clear distance rule.

Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151; 1 NCCA(NS) 42

Conversation as diverting circumstance—insufficiency. A brief and apparently inconsequential conversation between an employer and an employee relative to the work of the employee, and occurring very shortly before the employee placed himself in a position of peril, cannot be deemed a diverting circumstance within the meaning of the law of negligence.

Zuck v Larson, 222-842; 270 NW 384

Light remote from highway—nondiverting circumstance. The operator of an automobile is guilty of contributory negligence in colliding, in the nighttime, with a truck parked in the highway directly ahead of him, when his lights revealed objects ahead for a distance of from 75 to 100 feet; and he cannot avoid such imputation of negligence by the claim that, just preceding the collision, his attention was diverted by a light remote from the highway on which he was traveling.

Dearinger v Keller, 219-1; 257 NW 206; 36 NCCA 709

Government employee's automobile collision—immunity. In a damage action for injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, defendant's claim that he was a state employee performing a governmental function is a matter of defense not properly raised by special appearance.

Anderson v Moon, 225-70; 279 NW 396

Negating defendant's plea. In an action for damages consequent on plaintiff being negligently struck and injured by defendant's automobile [in which action defendant pleads (1) a denial that his car struck plaintiff, and (2) that plaintiff was struck and injured by some other vehicle], the court commits reversible error by instructing that plaintiff cannot recover unless plaintiff establishes by a preponderance of the evidence not only (1) that defendant's car struck and injured plaintiff, but (2) that no other car struck and injured plaintiff.

Griffin v Stuart, 222-815; 270 NW 442

View of stop sign obstructed—others' imputed knowledge of stop sign no defense. Where defendant's truck was parked so as to obscure the view of a stop sign at an intersection, and where motorist proceeded into intersection without stopping and collided with an automobile on intersecting street, defendant will not be exempt from liability on ground that knowledge would be imputed to motorist that intersecting street was an arterial highway, because of statute as to posting signs.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Anticipating child coasting—barricades removed—negligence. Where defendant knew

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

that for many years a certain street was barricaded while children were coasting, and that there had been coasting there recently, but where the snow had melted somewhat so that the middle portion of the paving on the hill was bare of snow, and the barricades had been taken down the day before the accident, the defendant was not bound to anticipate and prepare for some child coasting on the hill.

McBride v Stewart, 227-1273; 290 NW 700

Employer paying doctor bills—negligent person still liable. Payment of an injured truck driver's doctor bills by his employer, whether the motive be philanthropy or contract, constitutes a bounty from which a negligent defendant-motorist can derive no benefit in reduction of his liability, inasmuch as he owes compensation for all damages as to which his negligence was the proximate cause.

Clark v Berry Seed Co., 225-262; 280 NW 505

(b) LEGAL EXCUSE

Legal excuse defined. The operator of a vehicle who has failed to comply with a statutory standard of care may avoid the consequences thereof by establishing as legal excuse (1) anything making it impossible to comply, (2) anything over which he has no control which places his vehicle in a position contrary to the law, (3) that he was confronted with an emergency not of his own making, or (4) any excuse specifically provided by statute.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Negligence—legal avoidance. The operator of a vehicle who has failed to comply with a statutory or ordinance standard of care governing the operation or equipment of his vehicle may excuse such failure, and thereby avoid the legal imputation of negligence per se, by establishing (1) any excuse specifically provided by statute, or (2) that, without his fault, circumstances rendered compliance with the law impossible.

Kisling v Thierman, 214-911; 243 NW 552; 36 NCCA 90; 37 NCCA 494

Statutory noncompliance without legal excuse—burden of proof. An instruction stating that if a defendant motorist failed to comply with the requirements of a statute "without legal excuse", then the verdict should be for the plaintiff, does not shift plaintiff's burden of proof on the defendant.

Schalk v Smith, 224-913; 277 NW 303

Excuse—proof under general denial. Proof of legal excuse for failure to comply with a statutory standard of care in operating or equipping an automobile is admissible under a general denial of negligence.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Instructions—unsupported issue. Instruction submitting "legal excuse" for violation of the assured clear distance statute is reversible error when neither party raises, nor gives evidence, upon this issue.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Instructions—paraphrasing "legal excuse." The phrase, "explained or justified by the evidence", used as a substitute in instructions for the term "legal excuse" should be avoided as possibly permitting the jury to consider evidence which would not constitute a legal excuse as defined in another instruction, but under the evidence and considered with other instruction, held no reversible error.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Nonprejudicial instructions. An instruction to the effect that if the defendant failed to yield to another motorist one-half of the traveled way, the jury, "in the absence of justifiable excuse", might find the defendant negligent, cannot be deemed prejudicial to a defendant who established no excuse whatever.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Instructions—failure to yield half of traveled way—justification. Instruction as to defendant's duty to yield one half of traveled highway and that violation of such duty would be presumptive evidence of negligence and would warrant finding of negligence unless it was shown by "the greater weight or preponderance of the evidence" that under the circumstances defendant's failure was justified and in exercise of ordinary care, held not prejudicial since no evidence of justification was adduced, altho use of quoted words is not to be approved. Instruction as to plaintiff's duty to yield one half of traveled way also reviewed and held sufficient.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Instructions—emergency as legal excuse—evidentiary support. Question of emergency as being legal excuse should not be submitted to the jury without competent evidence to support it. Held, instruction amply supported in instant case.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Excusing violation of statute—absence of evidence. While a motorist may plead and establish any recognized legal excuse for having violated a statutory standard of care for the operation of an automobile, yet he is manifestly not entitled to any instruction to the jury on the subject of "excuse" when he wholly fails to establish any excusatory fact.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782

Violation of statute—excuse—required instruction. When the violation of a particular law of the road is pleaded by plaintiff as a ground for recovery of damages and such violation is treated as in issue (tho the applicability of the statute be quite doubtful), the court commits error in failing to instruct as to the effect of defendant's evidence tending to legally excuse such alleged violation.

Rich v Herny, 222-465; 269 NW 489

Blowing out tire—losing control of car. An instruction, stating “* * * The blowing out of a tire is a legal excuse to a driver for losing control of his or her automobile * * *”, and also stating conditions for recovering control of the car was not erroneous in that the grounds of negligence alleged and submitted to the jury were referable to the conduct of the driver, not at the time of the blowout, but thereafter—bearing in mind that instructions must be read as a whole and that it is unfair to pick out parts of instructions and give them a forced or strained construction.

Band v Reinke, 227-458; 288 NW 629

Collision because of skidding—icy street not legal excuse per se. Where one of two motor vehicles which are approaching each other skids across the street and collides with the other vehicle which had almost stopped at the curb, the existence of ice on a city street, tho a condition over which a motorist has no control, yet is a condition whose presence is not legal excuse to relieve him from his duty to use care commensurate with the existing conditions when he is responsible for the control of his car.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Icy street—skidding not unforeseen. A motorist driving on icy pavement cannot excuse his presence on the wrong side of a city street, in violation of law, on the ground that he thought an approaching vehicle might skid into him, when the approaching vehicle remained at all times on its proper side of the street. Skidding on an icy street could neither be an unforeseen circumstance nor an unexpected happening.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Meeting car without lights—assured clear distance. An operator of an automobile does not necessarily violate the assured clear distance ahead statute when he has no reason to anticipate that he will meet another rapidly approaching car without lights, and, therefore, so drives on a foggy night that he cannot stop instantly when confronted by such nonanticipated event.

Caudle v Zenor, 217-77; 251 NW 69; 34 NCCA 122; 1 NCCA(NS) 44

Blinded by lights—assured clear distance. The failure of the driver of an automobile to drive at such speed as will permit him to bring the car to a stop “within the assured clear distance ahead” constitutes, in the absence of some legal excuse, negligence per se. And such excuse is not made to appear by evidence that the driver met a car and was temporarily blinded by the lights shining in his face, but did not slacken his speed.

Wosoba v Kenyon, 215-226; 243 NW 569; 1 NCCA(NS) 63, 747

Failure to see unlighted truck. The failure of the driver of an automobile to see, in time to stop, an unlighted truck standing ahead of him in the highway and within the radius of his lights, may be legally excused by plea and proof that the truck was not reasonably discernible sooner (1) because of its color, (2) because of shadows cast over it by nearby trees, and (3) because his attention was momentarily diverted by a car and the lights thereon which he was about to meet and pass at a lawful rate of speed.

Kadlec v Const. Co., 217-299; 252 NW 103; 35 NCCA 764, 1 NCCA(NS) 3

Pedestrians—assured clear distance—jury question. Where a pedestrian crossing the street is struck by a motorist after first being seen 180 feet away on the opposite curb and could have been seen by the motorist at all times prior to the collision, motorist's showing that pedestrian “popped up” ahead of him as legal excuse for not stopping within the assured clear distance is evidence raising a jury question.

Swan v Dailey-Luce Co., 225-89; 277 NW 580; 281 NW 504

Person injured on highway construction work. In laborer's personal injury action arising because of truck backing into him while both were engaged in highway construction work, an instruction, that it is the duty of driver in moving a truck to exercise care and caution of ordinarily prudent person and to bring truck under proper control if he discovers, or in exercise of reasonable care should discover, a person in the path of truck, was neither erroneous as submitting to the jury a previously withdrawn issue as to whether defendant driver has truck under control, nor as permitting jury to speculate on defendant's negligence generally.

Rebmann v Heesch, 227-566; 288 NW 695

Prohibited speed negligence per se. A violation of the statute that no person shall drive any vehicle on a highway at a speed greater than will permit him to bring it to a stop within the assured clear distance ahead permits of no escape from the imputation of negligence per se, except on plea and proof of a recognized legal excuse for so driving.

Swan v Auto Co., 221-842; 265 NW 143; 1 NCCA(NS) 58

(c) SUDDEN EMERGENCY

“Emergency” defined. An emergency is (1) an unforeseen combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action; (2) a perplexing contingency or complication of circumstances; (3) a sudden or unexpected occasion for action; exigency; pressing necessity.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

(c) SUDDEN EMERGENCY—continued

Element of legal excuse. The operator of a vehicle who has failed to comply with a statutory standard of care may avoid the consequences thereof by establishing as legal excuse (1) anything making it impossible to comply, (2) anything over which he has no control which places his vehicle in a position contrary to the law, (3) that he was confronted with an emergency not of his own making, or (4) any excuse specifically provided by statute.

Young v Hendricks, 226-211; 283 NW 895

Conduct under impulse of the moment. In a personal injury action arising from an automobile accident, an instruction is correct which states that a person in a position of peril in an emergency is not required imperatively to do that which, after the emergency is ended, would seem could have been done to avoid the injury.

Band v Reinke, 227-458; 288 NW 629

Instructions—emergencies—jury question. Instruction that emergency rule would apply in a case "where it reasonably seemed to him, acting as an ordinarily careful and prudent person would act under like circumstances, that he could not safely turn to the right", properly presents question for jury's determination and is not open to objection that it gauges the excuse of emergency by driver's own judgment or impulse.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Burden of proof. The fact that the evidence in an action for damages reveals a claim by defendant that the accident happened under the circumstances of an unexpected emergency furnishes no justification for an instruction that defendant has the burden to establish the existence of such emergency.

McKeever v Batcheler, 219-93; 257 NW 567

Erroneous instruction on burden of proof. Defendant's contention that he acted as he did because faced with a sudden emergency will not place the burden on the plaintiff to prove there was no such emergency when, if it did exist, it was created by the defendant himself, and an instruction placing on plaintiff the burden of proving nonexistence of the emergency is erroneous.

Bletzer v Wilson, 224-884; 276 NW 836

Sudden and unexpected appearance of person. The operator of an automobile on a straight, open, and unobstructed public highway cannot be held to anticipate that some one will, without warning, suddenly emerge from behind a stationary object and place himself in the immediate pathway of the vehicle.

Watson v Ins. Assn., 215-670; 246 NW 655; 3 NCCA (NS) 333

Pedestrian stepping in front of car. Evidence that a pedestrian walking along a shoulder of a highway suddenly stepped in front of an automobile, where he was struck, raises a jury question as to such emergency and as to legal excuse for failing to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Turning to right to avoid pedestrian. The driver of an automobile who is driving south on the right-hand side of a north and south highway is not guilty of negligence per se because, in order to avoid hitting a child running across the highway from the east side, he turns still farther to the right, even tho it later appears that had he kept his course or had turned to the left he might have avoided hitting the child.

Garmoe v Colthurst, 215-729; 246 NW 767

Inevitable accident. No actionable negligence is shown on a record which reveals that a small child suddenly ran from a place of safety directly and immediately into the path of an approaching automobile while the vehicle was proceeding at a lawful rate of speed, and when the driver did not know and had no reason to know, until almost the instant of impact, that the child was even present on or near the highway.

Klink v Bany, 207-1241; 224 NW 540; 65 ALR 187; 31 NCCA 112; 3 NCCA (NS) 332

Backing vehicle out of private driveway. The driver of a truck who is nonnegligently traveling on the north side of a straight and level public highway in plain and unobstructed view of an automobile standing outside the public highway and in a private driveway on the same side of the highway has the right to assume that the automobile will not, without warning, be suddenly backed out of the private driveway and immediately in front of his oncoming truck, and if said automobile is so backed out and in his immediate front, he cannot be deemed negligent because, in such sudden emergency, he turns to his left and unintentionally strikes a person whom he theretofore knew was on the south side of the highway.

Carstensen v Thomsen, 215-427; 245 NW 734; 32 NCCA 300; 34 NCCA 326; 39 NCCA 369

Double collision—nonnegligence. A motorist who, while operating his car easterly on the south or right-hand side of a paved road at 50 miles per hour (tho the night is misty and visibility is poor), is unexpectedly, violently, and negligently so hit by the car of another motorist as to be deflected to the north or left-hand side of the road and into collision with an oncoming, westbound car, cannot, as to said latter collision, be deemed negligent because instantly when so deflected his hand involuntarily dropped from his steering wheel and his foot unintentionally reached the accelerator of his car instead of the brake.

Rich v Hery, 222-465; 269 NW 489

Sudden stopping of car on curve. The driver of an automobile who is on the right-hand side of the road at a curve and driving at a proper speed is not guilty of negligence in suddenly applying the brakes in order to avoid hitting an overtaking and passing car which unexpectedly swerved in front of him, and in order to prevent his own car going into a ditch, tho by so doing the wheels of his car locked and the momentum skidded the car across the road and into another car.

Klaaren v Shadley, 215-1043; 247 NW 301

Failure of lights. Where a truck is being operated in a fog with 35 feet visibility ahead, under speed and road conditions permitting a stop within 25 feet, and after meeting and passing another automobile, there is a failure of the lights on the truck, the truck driver is confronted with an emergency not of his own making, and if he tries the lights again before applying his brakes and turning on his emergency light, after which he discovers another truck stopped on the road within the visibility range so that it would have been seen and avoided had the lights not failed, he is not as a matter of law contributorily negligent in being unable to stop without a collision, but the question is for the jury.

Mueller v Ins. Assn., 223-888; 274 NW 106; 113 ALR 1256

Failure to see parked car in fog. On a foggy evening when visibility was poor, where the plaintiff, with the headlamps on his automobile lighted and the windshield wiper working, drove his car into another car which was parked on the highway, in the absence of any proof of an emergency to excuse his failure to see the other car, he was not free from contributory negligence and the defendant was entitled to a directed verdict.

Newman v Hotz, 226-831; 285 NW 289

Yielding half of highway. An instruction, tho in the language of the statute, e. g., that "motor vehicles, meeting each other on the public highway, shall give one-half of the traveled way thereof by turning to the right", may constitute reversible error when unaccompanied by any reference to a sudden emergency which is presented as an excuse for a car actually being on the wrong side of the road at the time of a collision.

Christenson v Tel. Co., 222-808; 270 NW 394

Failure to turn to right—effect. Failure of the operator of an automobile to turn to the right in an emergency is not necessarily negligent, and especially when the complaining party was the author of the emergency.

Caudle v Zenor, 217-77; 251 NW 69

Defendant driving on wrong side—no sudden emergency instruction for defendant. In an action for injuries sustained in a collision between a motorcycle driven east by plaintiff on his right, the south, side of the road and an approaching automobile operated by the defendant, allegedly on the left, or south, side of road, there was no occasion for court giving instruction to effect that defendant was faced with an emergency, when defendant maintained that he was at all times on his own right side of the road, because, if he were on the left, or south, side of highway, the emergency was of his own making.

Jakeway v Allen, 226-13; 282 NW 374

Requested instruction on absent issue properly refused. A defendant motorist's requested instruction, which deals with the question of sudden emergency arising because, as he alleges, a child suddenly darted from hiding and ran across the path of his car, is properly refused when the issue of error in judgment after the emergency arose was not in the case, and the theory of how and when the child got in his path was otherwise covered by instructions.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

Requested instruction. In the absence of a request therefor, defendant may not complain that the jury was not instructed on the question of sudden emergency, especially where, if it did exist, it was of the defendant's own making.

Schalk v Smith, 224-904; 277 NW 303

(d) ASSUMPTION OF RISK

"Volenti non fit injuria" defined. The maxim "Volenti non fit injuria" means: "That to which a person assents is not esteemed in law an injury" or "He who consents cannot receive an injury."

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

Special defense. The defense of "assumption of risk" must be specially pleaded in order to justify the submission of the issue to the jury.

Johnson v McVicker, 216-654; 247 NW 48

Order striking defense of assumption of risk. In an action to recover for death of motorcycle passenger resulting from motorcycle collision with automobile, an order striking allegation of defendant car owner that decedent assumed risk of motorcycle driver's negligence was appealable because the matter stricken was of such character as to involve the merits of the case.

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

Fog on highway—driver using due care—inapplicability. A passenger in a motor vehicle is not negligent on the theory of assumption of risk, simply because he failed to advise the driver or protest the continuation of the trip on a foggy highway, when no other apparent dangers existed and there was evidence that the driver was using care commensurate with the conditions existing.

Rabenold v Hutt, 226-321; 283 NW 865

VI DEFENSES—concluded(d) ASSUMPTION OF RISK—concluded

Jury question—directed verdict improper. Motion for directed verdict based on contributory negligence and assumption of risk because of travel on highway under foggy atmospheric conditions properly denied as being jury question.

Gregory v Suhr, 224-954; 277 NW 721

Passenger's assumption of risk of riding with aged driver. While riding in the rear seat of an automobile being demonstrated to her employer as a prospective purchaser, an aged lady who protests against the salesman permitting her employer, also an aged person, to drive the automobile and who, altho she cannot get out of the automobile, is assured of safety by the salesman, does not as a matter of law assume the risk incident to her employer's driving, since reasonable minds could differ, and a jury must determine if it was unreasonable for her to rely on the salesman's assurances of safety.

Wittrock v Newcom, 224-925; 277 NW 286

Incompetency—knowledge of passenger. A passenger in an automobile cannot be held to assume the risks arising out of the incompetency, inexperience, or recklessness of the driver unless knowledge on the part of the passenger of such condition or conditions is adequately shown.

Stingley v Crawford, 219-509; 258 NW 316

Motorcycle passenger—sudden danger. In action to recover for death of 13-year-old boy resulting from collision between motorcycle on which he was riding as a passenger and defendant's automobile, allegation in defendant's answer that decedent assumed risk of motorcycle driver's negligence was properly stricken where pleaded facts and common knowledge justified conclusion that danger of the collision could not have been apparent more than a few seconds of time so that there was no time for deliberation and voluntary assumption of such risk.

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

(e) RELEASE

Covenant not to sue—joint wrongdoers. The driver of an oil truck sued for damages consequent on his negligent operation of the truck is not released from liability because another party who owned the oil tank and grease rack carried on the truck obtained from the injured party a covenant wherein the injured party agreed not to sue such other party—the record failing to show that the truck driver and the owner of the tank were joint wrongdoers.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

Release of joint tort-feasor. An injured party, who voluntarily, and without being imposed on by fraud, accepts and receives from one alleged joint tort-feasor a legal consideration in the form of property in settlement of his injuries, may not thereafter maintain an action against another joint tort-feasor for damages for the same injury.

Barden v Hurd, 217-798; 253 NW 127

Joint wrongdoers. A party who has been negligently injured and settles with and releases the original wrongdoer may not thereafter maintain an action against a physician for malpractice in treating the very injuries for which he has effected a settlement.

Phillips v Werndorff, 215-521; 243 NW 525; 39 NCCA 574

Avoidance—mutual mistake. A general release of a claim for personal injuries may, under proper circumstances, be avoided on the ground of mutual mistake as to the nature or seriousness of the injury.

Jordan v Brady Co., 226-137; 284 NW 73

Doctor's belief in recovery—mutual mistake—rescission. A contract for settlement of damages for personal injury in a motor vehicle accident and for release of further liability will be set aside when it is shown that both the injured party and the agent of the defendant relied on the physician's good faith statement that the injury was healing and the patient would soon recover, tho it later developed that the doctor was mistaken—such mistake is a mutual mistake of fact by both parties to the contract.

Jordan v Brady Co., 226-137; 284 NW 73

Signing a release without reading. A signed release and settlement of a claim for damages is conclusive on the signer, even tho he signed it, because of a false statement of its contents, when he had ample time and ability to read, and was in no manner prevented from reading.

Crum v McCollum, 211-319; 233 NW 678; 4 NCCA (NS) 142

Fraud in settlement—burden. A plaintiff, injured when the automobile in which she is riding in a snowstorm is struck from the rear by another automobile, and who, in the presence of her husband and sister, makes a written settlement with the insurance company for such injuries, and who delays two years thereafter before attacking as fraudulent the validity of such settlement, does not meet her burden to overcome the written instruments by giving her own self-contradictory testimony with no proof of actual fraud or misrepresentations.

Mosher v Snyder, 224-896; 276 NW 582; 4 NCCA (NS) 132

VII TRIAL(a) IN GENERAL

Reinstating excluded ground of negligence—waiver. If the court, at the close of plaintiff's testimony, withdraws one of plaintiff's alleged grounds of negligence, but reinstates it after the close of defendant's testimony, defendant waives the error, if any, by failing to move to reopen the case for additional testimony.

Deiling v Railway, 217-687; 251 NW 622

Striking allegation (?) or withdrawal of issue (?). It is not proper practice, at the close of all the evidence, to move to strike from the petition unsupported or legally insufficient allegations of negligence. The proper practice is to move to withdraw such issues from the jury.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Curing error. Error in striking, at the close of all the evidence, an adequate and supported allegation of negligence, is cured by adequately submitting the issue notwithstanding the striking order.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

View of object by jurors—instructions. Principle reaffirmed that when jurors are permitted to view an object which is the subject of the action, they must be instructed that they must base their verdict solely on the evidence received judged in the light of their observation of the object.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144

Inconsistent findings by jury. Findings by the jury, in response to special interrogatories, (1) that the negligence of the operator of an automobile was the proximate cause of an accident, and (2) that the recklessness of said operator was the proximate cause of the accident, are fatally inconsistent.

Stanbery v Johnson, 218-160; 254 NW 303

Counterclaim—instruction to disregard. Where plaintiff sued (1) for damages to his car, and (2) on an assignment of the claim of his injured guest, and defendant counterclaimed for damages to his car, no error occurs in instructing the jury to disregard defendant's claim if a finding is returned for plaintiff, and such finding is so returned.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Remote speed—materiality first presented on appeal. Defendant's claim that plaintiff's speed remote from the collision was material as showing that at the time defendant looked back, before making a left turn, plaintiff was too far distant to be seen over a viaduct may not, when such evidence is excluded, be urged first on appeal as ground for reversal when such purpose for introducing such evidence was not stated to the trial court.

Thomas v Charter, 224-1278; 278 NW 920

(b) INJECTING INSURANCE

Discussion. See 17 ILR 501—Voir dire

Voir dire—interest in insurance companies. The wide discretion of the trial court to permit counsel to ask jurors on their voir dire whether they are stockholders, officers, or directors in any insurance company writing automobile liability insurance will not be interfered with in the absence of an abuse of such discretion. But the purpose of such questions must be solely to guide counsel in exercising his peremptory challenges.

Kaufman v Borg, 214-293; 242 NW 104
Holub v Fitzgerald, 214-857; 243 NW 575
Tissue v Durin, 216-709; 246 NW 806

Voir dire examination. In an action for damages arising out of a collision between automobiles, plaintiff, in the selection of the jury, has the right, in a proper manner, to ask each prospective juror whether he is in any manner interested in any liability insurance company.

Olson v Tyner, 219-251; 257 NW 538

Questioning prospective jurors as insurance stockholders. Counsel, when actuated by good faith and the sole purpose of acquiring information which will control the exercise of his peremptory challenges, may very properly be permitted, in a personal injury action, to ask a juror on his voir dire whether he or any member of his family is a stockholder in any insurance company.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Voir dire examination as to insurance. In examining jurors for an automobile accident case, where counsel asked two or three jurors if they had insurance in a certain company, and the court then learned that the plaintiff was not insured in a mutual company and so informed the counsel, such allowance of questions was not an abuse of discretion of the trial court, when no improper motive or bad faith was shown, and no other mention of insurance was made.

Kiesau v Vangen, 226-824; 285 NW 181

Injecting insurance on voir dire—discretion of court. Control of voir dire examination on the subject of liability insurance is largely within the discretion of the trial court and will not be interfered with without a showing of prejudicial abuse.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

Appellant's jury examination inducing insurance discussion. Jury-room discussion of liability insurance suggested by plaintiff's examination of the jurors is not misconduct of which plaintiff can complain.

Tharp v Rees, 224-962; 277 NW 758

Trucker's statutory insurance requirement—jurors' discussion not misconduct. Jurors' discussion of statutory requirement that certain truckers carry liability insurance—being a discussion of law that all were presumed to know—is neither misconduct nor justification for a new trial.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

(b) INJECTING INSURANCE—continued

Reference to insured liability. The rule of law, in actions for personal injuries, that reversible error results from the willful injection, by plaintiff, into the record and before the jury, of the fact that defendant is carrying insurance against the liability sued on, is not violated:

1. By asking in good faith a juror on voir dire whether he is interested in any such insurance company; or

2. By asking a witness, in good faith, for legitimate testimony, and receiving an answer which, inter alia, reveals the fact of such insurance. (And especially when defendant's cross-examination accentuates the objectionable answer.)

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

Cross-examination of witness. The fact that during a material cross-examination by plaintiff, in a personal injury action arising out of a collision between automobiles, the witness unexpectedly injects an indefinite remark relative to "insurance" from which the jury might conjecture that defendant was protected by liability insurance, is wholly insufficient to reveal prejudicial error.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

Withdrawal of incompetent testimony—effect. The incidental reception in evidence of testimony tending to show that defendant in an action for damages growing out of a collision of vehicles carried indemnity insurance, when the same is withdrawn by the court, will not constitute reversible error.

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

Improper reference to insured liability. In an action for damages consequent on a collision between vehicles, error does not result when, on the proper examination of witnesses, and without design on the part of plaintiff, the fact is revealed that the defendant is, by insurance, indemnified against loss.

Wolfe v Decker, 221-600; 266 NW 4

Injecting into trial fact of insurance. The unintentional or inadvertent injection into the trial of an action for damages of the fact that one of the parties had insured his loss or liability does not necessarily require the granting of a new trial.

Priest v Hogan, 218-1371; 257 NW 403

Incidental reference to indemnity insurance. Plaintiff in an action for damages consequent on an automobile collision has a clear right to show that defendant admitted his negligence and liability therefor, even tho said admission incidentally discloses that defendant was protected by indemnity insurance; and especially no error occurs when the reference to insurance is innocently brought out and was at once withdrawn by the court from the jury.

Liddle v Hyde, 216-1311; 247 NW 827

Cross-examination as to indemnity insurance. Reversible error results, in a personal damage action, from purposely carrying a cross-examination to the extent of revealing the fact that the defendant is protected by insurance from ultimate liability.

Rudd v Jackson, 203-661; 213 NW 428

Admissions—separation of relevant and irrelevant matter. When a conversation relates to two distinct and easily separated subject matters, one relevant and one irrelevant, the latter cannot be deemed admissible simply because it is a part of the conversation as a whole. So held where the conversation related (1) to the manner in which an accident happened and (2) to the insurance carried by the defendant.

Kuhn v Kjose, 216-36; 248 NW 230

Liability insurance—cross-examination. In an automobile accident case where plaintiff's witness was asked to relate a particular conversation with one of the defendants, objection that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial was properly overruled. However, when answer to such question revealed that conversation concerned insurance, motion to strike as immaterial should have been sustained. Likewise, on cross-examination of same defendant, testimony elicited concerning payments of insurance premium, which subject had not been brought out in examination in chief, was immaterial and not proper cross-examination, and refusal to sustain objection on that ground was prejudicial error.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-149; 287 NW 829

Showing insurance against liability. The fact that in the trial of an action for damages the information is brought out that the defendant is carrying indemnity or other insurance against said damages does not constitute reversible error in the absence of some showing or appearance of bad faith on the part of counsel.

McCoy v Cole, 216-1320; 249 NW 213

Liability insurance—improper reference to as grounds for new trial.

Ryan v Trenkle, 199-636; 200 NW 318
Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346
Ryan v Simeons, 209-1090; 229 NW 667
Raines v Wilson, 213-1251; 239 NW 36
Holub v Fitzgerald, 214-857; 243 NW 575
Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561
Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

Asserting damages insured against. In an action for damages resulting from a collision of vehicles, prejudicial misconduct may result from asserting, in effect, before the jury, that the damages sued for have been insured against.

Berridge v Pray, 202-663; 210 NW 916

Insured claim. The act of counsel in persistently keeping before the jury the fact that the defendant carried casualty insurance against the claim sued on constitutes reversible error—an error which is not cured by an instruction to disregard such fact of insurance.

Miller v Kooker, 208-687; 224 NW 46

Liability insurance. The reception of evidence, that the defendant in an action for damages consequent on a collision between automobiles carried liability insurance, constitutes reversible error.

Rutherford v Gilchrist, 218-1169; 255 NW 516

Attorney injecting insurance by innuendo—error. It is reversible error for an attorney in an action for personal injuries to remark to the jury in argument that the defendant will not have to pay if they bring in a verdict for the plaintiff and to state, "You people know exactly who will pay that verdict."

McCornack v Pickerell, 225-1076; 283 NW 899

Misconduct of counsel—injecting "liability insurance". In an automobile accident case where, in argument to jury, plaintiff's counsel developed an idea that the only party interested in preventing a verdict was the insurance company, the court recognized such tactics as being misconduct on the part of counsel.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-149; 287 NW 829

Failure to strike evidence not cured by instructions. Evidence that the owner of an automobile had stated that he did not go out to the scene of the accident after a collision in which the automobile was involved because the car was insured and he would let the insurance company take care of it, improperly injected the question of insurance in an action for damages resulting from the collision. The failure to strike such evidence was error which was not cured by the court's direction to the jury to disregard it.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-154; 289 NW 905

(c) FOREIGN STATUTES GOVERNING LIABILITY

Foreign statutes—right to plead. In an action in this state to recover damages sustained in a foreign state in consequence of the alleged actionable negligence of defendant in operating an automobile in said foreign state, plaintiff may plead those statutes and rules of law of said foreign state from which actionable negligence, under the facts of the case, are deducible, e. g., those (1) which declare the degree of care required of defendant in such operation in said foreign state, and (2) the nature and degree of plaintiff's contributory negligence which will bar his action, said pleaded statutes and laws being of the very essence of plaintiff's cause of action and not contrary to the public policy of this state, even tho they exact a greater degree of care than would be exacted by the law of this state had the injury occurred in this state.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617; 1 NCCA(NS) 292

Foreign procedural statutes—nonright to plead. In an action in this state to recover damages sustained in a foreign state in consequence of the alleged actionable negligence of the defendant in operating an automobile in said foreign state, plaintiff has no right to plead the procedural statutes and rules of law of said foreign state. For example, those pertaining:

1. To what matters would be presumptive evidence of negligence;

2. To the burden of proof in the trial of the action; or

3. To the right of plaintiff to submit his action on different theories of the evidence.

Reason: All said matters are purely procedural.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617; 1 NCCA(NS) 292

Lex fori procedure. While, as a matter of comity, the courts of this state will, under proper pleading, recognize and enforce the civil rights and liabilities of parties to a tort committed in a foreign state—if not contrary to the public policy of this state—yet in determining all issues of fact on which such rights and liabilities depend, the judicial procedure of the courts of this state must be followed.

Kingery v Donnell, 222-241; 268 NW 617; 1 NCCA(NS) 292

Separate specifications submitted—joined by "and"—harmless error. In an action under the Illinois guest statute for damages arising out of injuries received in a motor vehicle collision in Illinois, separate specifications of negligence, based on one charge of excessive speed, but, nevertheless, submitted in the language of the petition, are not rendered prejudicially erroneous because joined together with the word "and".

Moran v Kean, 225-329; 280 NW 543

Ownership—Missouri certificate of ownership—conclusiveness. A duly issued and outstanding certificate of ownership of a motor vehicle, issued by the secretary of state of the state of Missouri under the statute law thereof (§3, Art. 16, Public Acts of 1923), is absolutely conclusive in said state as to such ownership, and will be recognized and accorded the same force and effect in this state, said statutes not being violative of the public policy of this state.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

(d) IMPROPER CONDUCT AT TRIAL

Offer of false testimony. The fact that a party to an action has made a statement out

(d) IMPROPER CONDUCT AT TRIAL—concluded of court inconsistent with his statements in court does not, manifestly, justify the conclusion that his statements in court are false and perjured.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

Counsel — belittling injuries — retaliatory statements. Counsel who, in argument, belittles the personal injuries of the opposing party, may not complain if opposing counsel in reply figuratively magnifies said injuries.

Hoegh v See, 215-733; 246 NW 737

Misconduct of counsel in argument to jury. In an automobile accident case where, in argument to jury, plaintiff's counsel developed an idea that the only party interested in preventing a verdict was the insurance company, the court recognized such tactics as being misconduct on the part of counsel.

Floy v Hibbard, 227-149; 287 NW 829

Order striking defense of assumption of risk. In an action to recover for death of passenger resulting from motorcycle collision with automobile, an order striking allegation of defendant car owner that decedent assumed risk of motorcycle driver's negligence was appealable because the matter stricken was of such character as to involve the merits of the case.

Edwards v Kirk, 227-684; 288 NW 875

New trial — grounds — misconduct of jury. The rule of law (206 Iowa 1263) that the trial court should not set aside the verdict of the jury and grant a new trial, when such verdict is the verdict which the court erroneously refused to direct at the close of the evidence, is not applicable when the grounds for new trial are predicated solely on the grounds of (1) misconduct of the jury, and (2) exceptions to the instructions.

Jordan v Schantz, 220-1251; 264 NW 259

(e) DIRECTING VERDICT

Most favorable view of evidence. On a motion for a directed verdict, the court must view the evidence in the light which is most favorable to the party against whom the motion is aimed.

Robertson v Carlgren, 211-963; 234 NW 824; 35 NCCA 555

Harvey v Knowles Co., 215-35; 244 NW 660

Lynch v Railway, 215-1119; 245 NW 219

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853

McWilliams v Beck, 220-906; 262 NW 781

Youngman v Sloan, 225-558; 281 NW 130

Most favorable view rule. On motion for directed verdict in determining whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, the evidence must be considered in the light most favorable to him.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

Defendant's negligence as proximate cause. In a personal injury action on account of the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, the court, on a motion for directed verdict, should, before considering contributory negligence of the plaintiff, consider the evidence as to negligence on the part of the defendant being a proximate cause of the injury.

Youngman v Sloan, 225-558; 281 NW 130

Force accorded testimony. Principle reaffirmed that the court in ruling on defendant's motion for a directed verdict must treat plaintiff's evidence exactly as the jury would have the right to treat it, viz: that said evidence and all reasonable deductions therefrom are true.

Heintz v Packing Co., 222-517; 268 NW 607

Absence of jurors—effect. When the court sustains a motion for a directed verdict, it is quite immaterial that all the jurors were not present.

Nyswander v Gonser, 218-136; 253 NW 829; 36 NCCA 1

Reasonable minds differing as to conclusions. If reasonable men may differ as to conclusions drawn from the evidence, the question is one for the jury.

Yale v Hanson, 227-813; 288 NW 905

Taking case from jury—plaintiff's burden. A plaintiff's failure to carry the burden of proving at least some of his allegations of negligence properly results in a directed verdict against him.

King v Gold, 224-890; 276 NW 774

Directed verdict at close of defendant's evidence. If there is sufficient evidence to take a case to a jury at the close of the plaintiff's testimony, a defendant cannot claim at the close of his evidence that there is nothing for the jury to determine, except when the testimony by the party having the burden of proof is in conflict with undisputed facts, or is such that under the circumstances it cannot be true, or shows that the witnesses must have been mistaken.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Overcoming inference of consent. The inference that an automobile operated by one person and owned by another person was operated with the consent of the owner is wholly overcome by uncontradicted evidence that the car was being operated against the positive command of said owner, and compels the court, in such case, to direct a verdict against the plaintiff.

Robinson v Shell Corp., 217-1252; 251 NW 613

Taxicab door striking eye—res ipsa loquitur. An action for loss of an eye caused by the sudden opening of a taxicab door as plaintiff stopped on the sidewalk to engage the cab, and when plaintiff made no move toward opening the door, the exclusive control of which was lodged in the driver inside the cab, presents a case to which the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies. In such case defendants' motion for a verdict is properly overruled.

Peterson v De Luxe Co., 225-809; 281 NW 737

Violating right-of-way law—jury question. The right-of-way law imposes on a person approaching an intersection from the left the duty to yield the way, a violation of which, under ordinary circumstances, constitutes negligence, and in such a case the defendant is not entitled to a directed verdict.

Bletzer v Wilson, 224-884; 276 NW 836

Negligence per se. Where the automobile of plaintiff's intestate collided with defendant's truck at a highway intersection, and the physical facts showed that plaintiff's intestate had violated statutes in not keeping his car under control and not yielding the right of way to the truck, which had entered the intersection first, plaintiff's intestate was therefore guilty of negligence per se which contributed directly to his death, and which entitled the truck owner to a directed verdict.

Young v Clark, 226-1066; 285 NW 633

Failure to stop at stop sign—jury question. The alleged failure of plaintiff to stop before entering a paved primary highway, in view of evidence that defendant's truck was several hundred feet away from the intersection and traveling on the left side of pavement at a time when plaintiff's automobile was entirely across the black line and on his own right-hand side of the road, cannot, where the evidence conflicts and reasonable men might differ, be, as a matter of law, negligence contributing to the collision.

Russell v Leschensky, 224-334; 276 NW 608

Injuries to child—improper direction of verdict. Record reviewed relative to the facts attending the alleged negligent infliction of injuries on a child, and held to be such as to render improper the direction of a verdict for defendant, especially as said child was of such tender years as to be, presumptively, incapable of negligence.

Johnson v Selindh, 221-378; 265 NW 622; 39 NCCA 289, 565

Motorist anticipating dangerous position of one aiding—jury question. Where a stalled motorist heard one of several bystanders say, "Let's give him a push," whereupon they arranged themselves in positions to push the automobile and one called, "Let's go ahead," a directed verdict is properly denied and a jury question is presented as to whether or not the motorist might have known that a person was directly behind the automobile and would be injured if the car moved backward.

Huston v Lindsay, 224-281; 276 NW 201

Motorist keeping proper lookout for pedestrian—jury question. After motorist had seen pedestrian 180 feet away standing on the curb and when pedestrian had almost reached the opposite side of the street before being struck by the motor vehicle, which meanwhile had traveled the 180 feet, during which time pedestrian was plainly visible, and when motorist claims he did not again see pedestrian until just before striking him, the evidence raises a jury question as to whether motorist kept proper lookout, and directing a verdict is improper.

Swan v Dailey-Luce Co., 225-89; 277 NW 580; 281 NW 504

Child on sled—view obstructed by snowbank—negligence. In an action for death of seven-year-old child, where defendant-motorist could not see child because of snowbank, and child, lying on sled, coasted into intersection at 20 or more miles per hour and struck rear wheel of defendant's automobile, the court properly directed verdict for defendant, the evidence being insufficient to establish that defendant was driving at excessive speed, lacked control of his car, failed to maintain proper lookout, or failed to give warning of approach to intersection.

McBride v Stewart, 227-1273; 290 NW 700

Pedestrian on highway—disregarding apparent danger. The rule that a pedestrian and an automobile have equal rights upon the highway does not authorize a highway employee to stand on the edge of the pavement watching an oncoming automobile travel a distance of 200 feet on the same side of the pavement, knowing the pavement is in an icy condition, knowing that the driver of the oncoming automobile is having difficulty controlling it, from which facts it is, or to a reasonably prudent man it would have been, apparent that he was occupying a position of danger, and consequently, in remaining there, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Defendant's motion for a directed verdict was properly sustained.

Cumming v Dosland, 227-470; 288 NW 647

Stalled motorist—freedom from negligence—jury question. In a damage action for personal injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, the burden is on plaintiff to establish (1) the defendant's negligence, (2) such negligence as the proximate cause of the injury, and (3) plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence; hence, a motorist who stands in the center of the road near the rear of her automobile stalled on the highway, attempting to stop a following motorist, and, tho having the opportunity, fails to seek a place of safety when she sees the approaching motorist apparently will crash into her stalled automobile, is not entitled to an instruction establishing her freedom from contributory negligence as a matter of law, nor to a directed verdict against the defendant.

Failure to see parked car in fog. On a foggy evening when visibility was poor, where the plaintiff, with the headlamps on his automobile lighted and the windshield wiper working, drove his car into another car which was parked on the highway, in the absence of any proof of an emergency to excuse his failure to see the other car, he was not free from contributory negligence and the defendant was entitled to a directed verdict.

Newman v Hotz, 226-831; 285 NW 289

Failure to see obstruction in fog—jury question. In an action for damages resulting from injuries sustained when the car in which the plaintiff and her husband were riding on a foggy evening ran into a car which the defendant had left standing on the highway after an unsuccessful attempt to tow it away, it was error for the lower court to direct a verdict for the defendant, as the question of liability should have gone to the jury.

Newman v Hotz, 226-834; 285 NW 287

Contributory negligence—assumption of risk—jury question. Motion for directed verdict based on contributory negligence and assumption of risk because of travel on highway under foggy atmospheric conditions properly denied as being jury question.

Gregory v Suhr, 224-954; 277 NW 721

Contributory negligence per se—conclusiveness. Before a plaintiff motorist can be held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law it must conclusively appear, from a consideration of the evidence in the light most favorable to him, that his negligence in having inadequate brakes contributed in some way or in some degree to the accident and injuries for which he seeks a recovery.

Yancey v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Head-on collision—plaintiff's per se negligence contributing to injury. A plaintiff motorist, against whom a directed verdict was rendered because in violating a speed statute he was negligent per se, still should have had the benefit of the best possible view of the evidence, and, moreover, a record showing that he remained at all times on his own side of the road, but that a truck driver, for no apparent reason, drove across the pavement center line, resulting in a head-on collision, makes a jury question as to whether or not plaintiff's per se negligence contributed to his injury.

McIntyre v West Co., 225-739; 281 NW 353

Concurring negligence. A defendant whose negligence operates proximately to produce an injury to a passenger in another car is not entitled to a directed verdict because the host of such injured party was guilty of negligence which also operated proximately to produce said injury.

Wolfson v Lumber Co., 210-244; 227 NW 608

Concurrent negligence—effect. If the jury might properly find that the concurrent negligence of defendant and of a third party caused the injury or death of a nonnegligent person, the court cannot properly direct a verdict for defendant on the theory that the negligence of said third party was an intervening negligence which wholly supplanted and superseded the negligence of the said defendant. So held where the concurring negligence was (1) that of defendant in operating its train over a crossing at an unlawful rate of speed, and (2) that of the operator of an automobile in driving upon said crossing.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

Crossing railroad in front of oncoming train. It is error to overrule a motion for a directed verdict when, after considering all the evidence in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, there is no doubt but what he drove in front of a train with the view entirely unobstructed and with the train plainly to be seen had he looked, or, if he looked, he did so negligently.

Russell v Scandrett, 225-1129; 281 NW 782

Crossing highway in front of oncoming car.

Davis v Hoskinson, 228- ; 290 NW 497

Place of collision uncertain—physical facts—rule inapplicable. Under the physical facts rule, a conclusion cannot be established as a matter of law unless the physical facts and circumstances lead to but one conclusion to the exclusion of all others, and so certain indecisive physical facts will not conclusively rebut direct testimony, indicating the position on the pavement of a motor vehicle collision, so as to sustain a directed verdict thereon.

Clark v Berry Seed Co., 225-262; 280 NW 505

Failure to direct verdict—new trial to plaintiff allowable. A defendant truck driver's contention, in a case involving a truck and passenger automobile collision on a bridge, that under the evidence a verdict should have been directed for him and that therefore when a verdict was returned in his favor, the granting of a new trial was error, is a contention without merit, when the evidence was such that the jury could have found the defendant negligent, that his negligence was the proximate cause of the accident, and that neither plaintiff nor plaintiff's driver was contributorily negligent.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-1138; 281 NW 790

New trial—court mistakenly directing verdict. Ordinarily the question of contributory negligence is peculiarly for the jury, and, where the trial court mistakenly directs a verdict for defendant on the ground of plaintiff's negligence, the court does not err in later granting a new trial.

Williams v Kearney, 224-1006; 278 NW 180

Erroneous direction of verdict. An order for a new trial is, of course, proper when the judgment entered was ordered by the court on an erroneous theory of the law on a material point. So held where the court treated both plaintiff and defendant as joint adventurers and directed a verdict against plaintiff on the erroneous theory that defendant's negligence was imputable to the plaintiff.

Thompson v Farrand, 217-160; 251 NW 44; 34 NCCA 398

Erroneous instructions cured where directed verdict proper. Errors in instructions made by the trial court are not prejudicial to the appellant when appellee is entitled to a directed verdict.

Young v Clark, 226-1066; 285 NW 633

Unduly comprehensive request. Instructions which are so comprehensive as to authorize and direct a verdict in favor of all defendants are properly rejected when one of the defendants would be liable in any event.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

(f) RETRIAL

Witnesses—credibility—contradictory previous testimony. Inconsistent testimony by a witness at one trial as to certain facts in an automobile accident cannot as a matter of law negative his testimony in a later trial, inasmuch as the jury is the sole judge of the credibility of a witness and the weight of his testimony.

Echternacht v Herny, 224-317; 275 NW 576

New trial to plaintiff—propriety. In a case involving a truck and passenger car collision on a bridge, when the defendant contended that he was entitled to a directed verdict and that therefore it was error to grant a new trial after a verdict had been returned in his favor, his contention was without merit when the evidence was such that the jury could have found the defendant negligent, that his negligence was the proximate cause of the accident, and that neither plaintiff nor plaintiff's driver was contributorily negligent.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-1138; 281 NW 790

(g) PLEADINGS

Petition in two counts—(1) guest and (2) not a guest. A passenger in an automobile receiving injuries in a collision may not be required to elect between counts when his petition contains (1) a count alleging recklessness based on theory he was a guest and (2) a count alleging negligence based on theory he was not a guest where plaintiff's cause of action is for a single wrong and he seeks in each count damages for the same injuries arising out of the same act of deceased defendant-driver.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Petition—allegations in one count not admissions as to another count. Different theories of recovery contained in separate counts of a petition are not admissions by which the plaintiff is bound under the rule that he may not controvert his own pleading.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Stating cause of action. A cause of action is stated by allegations (1) that the driver of an automobile was negligent in operating it, (2) that plaintiff suffered damages thereby, and (3) that the car was then being operated with the consent of the owner.

Seleine v Wisner, 200-1389; 206 NW 130; 25 NCCA 714

Pleading—sufficiency. A pleader is entitled to claim as many grounds of actionable negligence as flow from his pleaded statements of facts. Pleadings as to the facts attending a collision at an intersection of highways reviewed, and held to warrant the instructions given.

Sutton v Moreland, 214-337; 242 NW 75

General and specific allegations. The refusal to strike a count confined to general allegations of negligence is of no consequence when the specific allegations of the remaining count simply elaborated the general allegations.

Tissue v Durin, 216-709; 246 NW 806

General and specific allegation of negligence. A general allegation of negligence on the part of a named party is not supplanted by a later specific allegation of negligence on the part of the same party when there is evidence supporting both the general and specific allegations and when it is manifest that the sole purpose of the specific allegation was to obtain the benefit of a particular rule of statute law.

Newland v McClelland, 217-568; 250 NW 229

General and specific allegations—belated attack. Except in res ipsa loquitur cases a specific allegation will not waive a general allegation of negligence, which general allegation must be assailed by motion, if timely, before answer and without such motion is properly submitted to the jury if sustained by the evidence.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

General or dragnet assignment. A general or dragnet allegation of negligence is properly submitted to the jury in accordance with the supporting evidence when such allegation is neither attacked (1) by motion for more specific allegation, nor (2) by motion to strike or withdraw.

Watson v Railway, 217-1194; 251 NW 31

Allowable conclusion. An allegation of fact which is sufficient, if proven, to constitute negligence, is none the less sufficient because the pleader adds thereto his conclusion of negligence.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

(g) PLEADINGS—continued

Sufficient allegation of negligence. An allegation (1) that defendant drove his vehicle to the left of the center of the traveled way, or (what is practically the same thing) (2) that defendant drove his vehicle upon the wrong or left side of the public highway, tenders a sufficiently definite issue of fact—at least in the absence of any pleaded attack thereon.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Pleading under common law (?) or statute (?). An allegation that a defendant “was driving at an excessive, illegal, and negligent rate of speed” must be deemed, in the absence of an attack by motion, as an allegation not at common law, but under the statute regulating speed.

Danner v Cooper, 215-1354; 246 NW 223

Predicating negligence solely on speed. An allegation predicating negligence in the operation of an automobile solely on speed is wholly insufficient.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Assured clear distance allegation.

Janes v Roach, 228- ; 290 NW 87

Statements of facts—sufficiency. Assignments of negligence reviewed and held to constitute sufficient statements of ultimate facts pertaining to a collision between vehicles.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Negligence in re yielding half of highway—interpretation by court of allegation. An allegation, that “defendant negligently drove his car in a northerly direction and allowed it to travel to the west of the center of the highway and encroached upon the line of travel of the plaintiff” (who was traveling in a southerly direction), is properly interpreted by the court as simply charging that defendant failed to yield one-half of the traveled way to plaintiff.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Driving outside traveled roadway. An allegation that a motorist, without warning, ran his car outside the traveled part of the highway, and injured plaintiff, constitutes an adequate charge of negligence, and must, of course, if supported by evidence, be submitted to the jury.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Governmental function—negligent operation of road maintainer. Neither a county, as a quasi corporation, nor its board of supervisors is liable for the negligence of its employee in operating after dark a road maintainer without lights on the left-hand side of a highway, and in an action by a motorist who sustained injuries on account of such negligence, demurrers to the petition by the county and its board of supervisors were properly sustained.

Shirkey v Keokuk Co., 225-1159; 275 NW 706; 281 NW 837; 4 NCCA(NS) 4

Inferential allegation of nonnegligence. An allegation by plaintiff that a collision between automobiles was caused solely by the negligence of the defendant, inferentially charges that a passenger riding with plaintiff at the time was not guilty of contributory negligence—at least when the sufficiency of the petition is not attacked, and when the parties treat the negligence of the passenger as at issue.

Keller v Gartin, 220-78; 261 NW 776

Indirect admission. An answer may, by indirection, clearly admit the truth of an allegation contained in the petition.

Arends v DeBruyn, 217-529; 252 NW 249

Petition stating cause of action as against demurrer—stop sign—obstructed view. Where petition alleges defendant's truck was parked on curbing or sidewalk so as to obstruct view of stop sign for a motorist who proceeded into intersection and collided with another car, petition held to state a cause of action as against demurrer.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Pleading ordinance and statute violations—assumed for purpose of demurrer. In an action for injuries resulting from a motor vehicle collision at an intersection, where defendant's truck is alleged to have been parked so as to obscure the view of a stop sign, and where the violations of both city ordinance and state law are pleaded, the supreme court will assume, for the purpose of demurrer, that truck was parked within prohibited distance and did obscure the sign.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Motion to correct improper joinder. Where causes of action against different defendants are unallowably joined in the same action, a defendant wishing to correct the error should move to strike from the petition the cause of action not affecting himself.

Ellis v Bruce, 215-308; 245 NW 320

Specific reliance on res ipsa loquitur. A plaintiff who sues in tort and alleges generally (1) that defendant was guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of her injuries, and (2) that she relies on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, cannot be compelled, by motion for more specific statement, to state the particular acts of negligence of which she complains.

Harvey v Borg, 218-1228; 257 NW 190; 39 NCCA 139

Motion to dismiss—unavoidable accident. When the evidence presents a jury question on the issue of defendant's negligence and plaintiff's contributory negligence, the court cannot, of course, sustain defendant's motion to dismiss on his claim of unavoidable accident.

Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220

Amending pleadings—substituting specific negligence for general negligence. A plaintiff who, on one trial, rests on a general allegation of negligence, does not plead a new cause of action within the meaning of the statute of limitation, when on retrial he, by amendment, withdraws his general allegation and substitutes a specific allegation of negligence which, if proven, will furnish basis for the doctrine of the last clear chance.

Reason: The latter allegation was always embraced within the former general allegation.

Pettijohn v Weede, 219-465; 258 NW 72
Spaulding v Miller, 220-1107; 264 NW 8

Pleading—nonallowable amendment. A timely brought action based solely on the common-law plea of defendant's liability consequent on the negligent operation of an automobile by defendant's employee, in due course of employment, may not, after the action would be barred by the statute of limitation, be so amended as to wholly abandon said pleaded basis and to substitute an entirely new basis for recovery, to wit, an allegation that defendant was liable because the automobile in question belonged to defendant and was operated at the time in question with defendant's consent.

Page v Const. Co., 219-1017; 257 NW 426

Belated and unsupported amendment. It is doubly erroneous for the court, after argument has closed, (1) to permit an amendment assigning a new ground of negligence which is without support in the evidence, and (2) to submit such alleged negligence to the jury.

Peckinpugh v Engelke, 215-1248; 247 NW 822

Counterclaim—damages growing out of transaction. Joint defendants in an action for damages consequent on a collision of two automobiles may each separately plead as a counterclaim any damages suffered by them in the collision in question.

Harriman v Roberts, 211-1372; 235 NW 751

Counterclaim—malicious prosecution. Defendant in an action for damages consequent on a collision between automobiles may not plead as a counterclaim damages consequent on a malicious prosecution instituted by the plaintiff against defendant for reckless driving at the time of the collision.

Harriman v Roberts, 211-1372; 235 NW 751

Counterclaim as admission. Where corporation, within its agency for an insurance association, insured its own automobile, and when sued along with the driver thereof on account of a collision involving the automobile, and when the corporation counterclaims therein, alleging that it and driver were free from negligence, which counterclaim was subsequently dismissed, then in a later action against corporation to recover on the policy, the corporation was bound by such allegation as an admission of its consent to use the vehicle, and the pleading was admissible in evidence therefor.

Mitchell v Underwriters, 225-906; 281 NW 832

(b) JOINT DEFENDANTS

Release of joint tort-feasor. An injured party who voluntarily, and without being imposed on by fraud, accepts and receives from one alleged joint tort-feasor a legal consideration in the form of property in settlement of his injuries, may not thereafter maintain an action against another joint tort-feasor for damages for the same injury.

Barden v Hurd, 217-798; 253 NW 127

Covenant not to sue—joint wrongdoers. The driver of an oil truck sued for damages consequent on his negligent operation of the truck is not released from liability because another party who owned the oil tank and grease rack carried on the truck obtained from the injured party a covenant wherein the injured party agreed not to sue such other party—the record failing to show that the truck driver and the owner of the tank were joint wrongdoers.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

Requiring defendant to prove allegations of co-defendant. In damage action, by one riding in an automobile, against a truck driver and his employer where defense was conducted jointly and where, in respect to negligence, the question was whether negligence of the automobile driver or the negligence of the truck driver was the sole proximate cause of the accident, it was not prejudicial error to instruct jury that burden was upon both defendants to prove negligence of automobile driver, affirmatively alleged by the employer alone.

Usher v Stafford, 227-443; 288 NW 432

Proximate negligence of different co-defendants. On separate trials of an action for damages against the operators of different vehicles on one of which plaintiff was a passenger at the time she was injured by a collision, defendant is properly denied an instruction to the effect that he cannot be held liable if his co-defendant was proximately negligent.

Reason: Both defendants might be proximately negligent.

Newland v McClelland, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Separate forms of verdicts. In a joint action against the driver of an automobile and the owner of the vehicle, wherein necessity arises so to instruct as to limit the effect of the driver's admissions to the question of his liability, and the effect of the owner's admissions to the question of his liability, separate forms of verdict must be submitted, if requested.

Broderick v Barry, 212-672; 237 NW 481

Verdicts—submission of separate forms. In an action against the driver and owner of a

VII TRIAL—concluded(h) JOINT DEFENDANTS—concluded truck, held, the omission to submit separate forms of verdict for each defendant was not prejudicial error—the court having specifically and correctly instructed the jury as to separate liability of each defendant.

Carlson v Decker & Sons, 218-54; 253 NW 923

Res gestae—admissibility. The declaration of the driver of an automobile almost immediately after a collision had occurred and before or while an injured person was being removed from one of the cars, to the effect that "I know I was driving fast", is part of the res gestae, and admissible against both defendants, to wit, the driver of the car and the owner thereof.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Non res gestae statements of driver. Non res gestae statements of the driver of an automobile tending to show his negligence are not competent against the owner of the vehicle, nor are such statements of the owner competent evidence against the driver, and the court must clearly and definitely so instruct. In addition the court must submit separate forms of verdict if requested.

Broderick v Barry, 212-672; 237 NW 481

Non res gestae statements. When a plaintiff seeks to recover damages from the owner of an automobile because of the negligence of the driver, he must prove such negligence by evidence other and different than the non res gestae statements and declarations of the driver, and where the owner and the driver are co-defendants the court must exercise meticulous care to instruct the jury accordingly.

Cooley v Killingsworth, 209-646; 228 NW 880

Wieneke v Steinke, 211-477; 233 NW 535

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Erroneous instructions. In a joint action against the owner of an automobile and against the driver thereof based on the alleged negligent operation of the car, it is erroneous to require the jury to find for both defendants, or against both defendants, when the consent of the owner to the operation in question is distinctly in issue.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Joint action against owner and operator—erroneous instruction. In a joint action against the owner and operator of an automobile the evidence, manifestly, may be such as to justify a verdict against the operator and in favor of the owner, and in such cases instructions holding the owner liable in case the jury finds the operator liable are fundamentally erroneous.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144

Unallowable verdicts. In a joint action for damages against the driver and owner of an automobile, based, as to the driver, on his negligence, and as to the owner, on his consent to the driving (as to which consent the proof is substantially conclusive), there cannot legally be separate verdicts, one holding the driver liable, and one holding the owner nonliable.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Granting separate trial. Reversible error results from refusing a separate trial to a defendant who is sued jointly with another for damages consequent on his alleged negligence, and on the alleged recklessness of his co-defendant, the defensive issues of the two defendants being wholly hostile to each other, and the opportunity existing for collusion between the plaintiff and such other defendant.

Manley v Paysen, 215-146; 244 NW 863; 84 ALR 1330

Tort of one and contract of another. A joint action (1) against a wrongdoer upon his tort consequent on the negligent operation of a motor vehicle, and (2) against a surety company upon its policy to indemnify the wrongdoer from loss because of said tort, even though one recovery is sought, presents two different causes of action, and the joinder thereof is wholly unallowable. And this is true whether the policy is simply a private, optional contract between the insured and insurer, or a policy mandatorily required by statute to be filed with and approved by the railroad commission as a condition precedent to the obtaining of a permit to operate said vehicle.

Ellis v Bruce, 215-308; 245 NW 320

VIII PRESUMPTIONS, EVIDENCE, AND PROOF(a) IN GENERAL

Plaintiff's burden—proving negligence allegations. A plaintiff's failure to carry the burden of proving at least some of his allegations of negligence properly results in a directed verdict against him.

King v Gold, 224-890; 276 NW 774

Verdict contrary to evidence—setting aside—nonabuse of discretion. In an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff in a head-on automobile collision occurring at night near a crest of a hill on a narrow paved country highway, where the vehicle in which plaintiff was riding was then on the left-hand side of the highway attempting to pass another car traveling in the same direction, the setting aside of the verdict for plaintiff on the ground that verdict was contrary to the evidence, and granting a new trial, was not an abuse of discretion.

Brunssen v Parker, 227-1364; 291 NW 535

Circumstantial evidence—sufficiency to establish theory. A theory cannot be established by circumstantial evidence, even in a civil action, unless the facts relied upon are of such a nature and so related to each other that it is the only conclusion that can fairly or reasonably be drawn from them, and it is not sufficient that they be consistent merely with that theory.

Jakeway v Allen, 227-1182; 290 NW 507

Witnesses—impeachment—shorthand notes. The shorthand notes taken upon the trial of an action may be used for impeaching purposes.

Judd v Rudolph, 207-113; 222 NW 416; 62 ALR 1174

Presumptions act prospectively only. Principle recognized that presumptions do not travel backward. They look forward only.

State v Liechti, 209-1119; 229 NW 743

Speed signs—presumption of officer's performance of duty. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that town officers properly performed the mandatory duty imposed on them by statute in the erection and maintenance of speed limit signs.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Right to assume care by plaintiff. A requested instruction in a personal injury action, to the effect that defendant had a right to assume that plaintiff would commit no act of negligence contributing to his own injury, is properly refused (1) when defendant in driving as he did was not influenced by plaintiff's actions, and (2) when the record shows that the jury found that plaintiff was not guilty of any act of contributory negligence.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Remote speed—materiality of evidence. Defendant's claim that plaintiff's speed remote from the collision was material as showing that at the time defendant looked back, before making a left turn, plaintiff was too far distant to be seen over a viaduct may not, when such evidence is excluded, be urged first on appeal as ground for reversal when such purpose for introducing such evidence was not stated to the trial court.

Thomas v Charter, 224-1278; 278 NW 920

Violation of ordinance—presumption—instructions. While the violation of a city ordinance relative to the operation of an automobile is only prima facie evidence of negligence, yet, where the sole issue is whether the operator did violate such ordinance—when the operator makes no effort to excuse a violation—it is not erroneous for the court to instruct that if there was such violation the jury "would be warranted in finding the operator guilty of negligence".

McDougal v Bormann, 211-950; 234 NW 807; 32 NCCA 405

See Kisling v Thierman, 214-911; 243 NW 552

Negligence—prima facie (?) or per se (?). Where an accident happens upon a public highway outside a city or town, the fact that the vehicle is on the wrong side of the road is only prima facie evidence of negligence.

On the other hand, subject to the above, the violation, without legal excuse, of a standard of care for the operation or equipment of vehicles, whether fixed by statute or ordinance, constitutes negligence per se.

See Masonholder v O'Toole, 203-884; 210 NW 778; Voiles v Hunt, 213-1234; 240 NW 703; 31 NCCA 59; 32 NCCA 458

Presumption that lookout was maintained. In a law action for damages wherein the petition alleges that defendant motorist was negligent in failing to keep a proper lookout, and such allegation was not withdrawn, and it is shown deceased pedestrian was contributorily negligent, it was proper to refuse to submit the case under last clear chance doctrine, on the theory that motorist, being under duty to keep a lookout, presumably performed such duty, but, after seeing deceased, failed to exercise due care in avoiding the injury.

Reynolds v Aller, 226-642; 284 NW 825; 5 NCCA(NS) 140

Declarations of passenger—issue of contributory negligence. Testimony by a passenger in an automobile to the effect that shortly before an accident he called the attention of the driver to the approaching car is admissible on the issue of the contributory negligence of the passenger.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Report of accident—remarks overheard—privileged communication. Evidence of witness who overheard statement of defendant in reporting accident, the witness being neither a peace officer nor an official, was properly excluded under statute requiring such report to be made and further providing that the report shall be confidential and not used as evidence in any trial, civil or criminal, arising out of the accident.

McBride v Stewart, 227-1273; 290 NW 700

Animals at large—presumption of negligence.

Hansen v Kemmish, 201-1008; 208 NW 277; 39 NCCA 400

Appointment of guardian—irrelevant testimony. In an action for damages consequent on the alleged negligent operation by defendant of an automobile, evidence of the appointment and discharge of a temporary guardian for plaintiff and of the various orders granted to said guardian are wholly irrelevant.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Absence of bicycle lights. In a damage action against a motorist for death of a bicycle rider, the jury, under the record, could properly find that cyclist was not traveling with bicycle lights required by statute and was not free from contributory negligence, despite fact that evidence showed a recent purchase of red reflector and lamp by an unidentified person on morning of accident; and the finding of a broken lamp, reflector, etc., by the sheriff at the scene of and some time after the accident does not compel a finding that the bicycle was properly equipped.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6

Careless habits. The carelessness and incompetency of a person as the operator of an automobile may neither be shown by his reputation, nor by specific instances of carelessness and incompetency having no similarity with the occasion in question.

In re Hill, 202-1038; 208 NW 334; 210 NW 241

Wheel coming off—circumstantial evidence. Circumstantial evidence is wholly insufficient, in and of itself, to generate a jury question on the issue whether a defendant in repairing an automobile so negligently replaced a wheel on the car that thereby it became detached while in operation (with resulting damage to plaintiff) when said evidence is also consistent with the additional theory that said wheel became detached because of defects and weaknesses in the car arising from its age and great use.

Tyrrell v Skelly Co., 222-1257; 270 NW 857

Lights not burning—failure to allege—admissibility. Evidence that lights were not burning on defendant's truck should have been admitted, even tho not alleged as a ground of negligence in plaintiff's petition, in order to enable plaintiff to show he was maintaining a proper lookout and was therefore free from contributory negligence.

Haines v Mahaska Works, 227-228; 288 NW 70

Lights not burning—exclusion of evidence. Excluding evidence that lights on defendant's truck were not burning, plaintiff having failed to allege such fact in petition, held prejudicial error when such fact had direct bearing on question of plaintiff's contributory negligence.

Haines v Mahaska Works, 227-228; 288 NW 70

Visibility of parked car at night.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Contributory negligence of child—duty to negative. Plaintiff, in an action for damages for negligently inflicted injuries, establishes prima facie freedom from contributory negligence by proof that when he suffered the injuries in question he was only 10 years of age, thereby availing himself of the common-law presumption arising from such proof. And the case would be quite rare where defendant's rebutting testimony would be so convincing and overwhelming as per se to overthrow said prima facie showing.

Flickinger v Phillips, 221-837; 267 NW 101

Inconsistent testimony at previous trial. Inconsistent testimony by a witness at one trial as to certain facts in an automobile accident cannot as a matter of law negative his testimony in a later trial, inasmuch as the jury is the sole judge of the credibility of a witness and the weight of his testimony.

Echternacht v Herny, 224-317; 275 NW 576

Hospital expenses—evidence of reasonableness. In an action for personal injury no recovery can be had for hospital expenses when there is no evidence of any kind bearing on the reasonableness of the charge—not even in the form of an itemized bill or that the bill had been paid.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Failure to yield half of road. Reversible error results from an instruction that defendant's failure, on meeting plaintiff, to yield half of the traveled way would be prima facie evidence of negligence unless defendant has established by a preponderance of the evidence his excuse for not so yielding, when defendant did not plead said excuse as an affirmative defense, but, under a general denial, presented it in his evidence.

Rich v Herny, 222-465; 269 NW 489

Identification of defendant. In a personal injury action arising out of a collision of vehicles, a conversation between plaintiff and defendant relative to the collision may be admissible for the purpose of identifying the defendant as the wrongdoer.

Harvey v Borg, 218-1223; 257 NW 190

Incompetency of driver. Evidence held insufficient to present a jury question on the issue of the incompetency of the driver of an automobile.

Helming v Bank, 206-1213; 220 NW 45

Judicial notice—ability to stop car. The court will take judicial notice of the fact that an automobile in good mechanical condition, with good brakes, and traveling at a speed not greater than 25 miles per hour on a highway which is in good condition, can be stopped in a less distance than 100 feet.

Wright v Railway, 222-583; 268 NW 915

Skid marks as rebutting testimony. Even when the most favorable view of the evidence is taken, plaintiff's contention, that he was struck by defendant's automobile at a street intersection after the automobile had approached the intersection from a side street, was not established when the testimony of the witness on whom the plaintiff relied was inherently inconsistent and was disproved by skid marks and other testimony showing that the automobile had not been on the side street.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Consent presumed from fact or ownership. Where the owner of a car allowed his brother to keep the car much of the time and use it, and the brother allowed a third person to use the car and the third party had an accident, the proof of ownership established, prima facie, that the car was being operated for the owner, and this inference could not be overcome by vague testimony.

Olinger v Tiefenthaler, 226-847; 285 NW 137

Operation by nonowner—unnecessary proof. In an action for damages consequent on the operation of an automobile by a nonowner thereof, plaintiff need not show that such nonowner was in the employ of the owner or was the agent of the owner or was transacting the business of the owner.

Tigue Co. v Motor Co., 207-567; 221 NW 514

Owner's consent—burden of proof. The inference which arises from ownership places upon the owner of an automobile the burden of proof to show that it was not used with his knowledge or consent, express or implied.

Wolfson v Lumber Co., 210-244; 227 NW 608

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Hunter v Irwin, 220-693; 263 NW 34

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Ownership of car—futile evidence. Evidence that an automobile of a certain make was, at the time of a collision, occupied by a husband and wife; that it carried a registration plate of the county of which said parties were residents, and that said car was being operated by the husband, furnishes no prima facie proof of the wife's ownership of the car.

Putnam v Bussing, 221-871; 266 NW 559

Ownership— incompetent evidence. On the issue of ownership of a motor vehicle (arising on the allegation that said vehicle was being operated with the consent of the owner), neither of the following is admissible:

1. A certified copy of a purported application for registration of said vehicle when said purported application is neither signed by nor sworn to by any person. For an added reason is this true when said certification fails to identify said application as a record of any public office; nor

2. An unauthenticated copy of a purported duplicate certificate of registration of said vehicle, especially when said certificate fails to carry the signature of the purported owner of said vehicle.

Putnam v Bussing, 221-871; 266 NW 559

Ownership—contract of sale. On the issue of the ownership of an automobile, the contract of sale to the alleged owner is relevant and material.

Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151

Missouri certificate of ownership—conclusiveness. A duly issued and outstanding certificate of ownership of a motor vehicle, issued by the secretary of state of the state of Missouri under the statute law thereof (§3, Art. 16, Public Acts of 1923), is absolutely conclusive in said state as to such ownership, and will be recognized and accorded the same force and effect in this state, said statutes not being violative of the public policy of this state.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Registration plate—judicial notice of the county of issuance. The court cannot, from the figures alone, take judicial notice that a registration number plate on an automobile was issued by the county treasurer of a certain county.

Putnam v Bussing, 221-871; 266 NW 559

Control of car—obeying statute—presumption. Principle reaffirmed that a motor vehicle driver in attempting to make a left-hand turn into an intersecting road has a right to proceed on the assumption (unless he has knowledge to the contrary) that another driver, approaching from his right, will obey the law (§5031, C., '35 [§5023.04, C., '39]) by reducing his speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing said intersection.

Enfield v Butler, 221-615; 264 NW 546

Customary place of crossing street.

Scott v McKelvey, 228- ; 290 NW 729

Reason for not looking for danger. The reason why a pedestrian while crossing a street did not look in the direction of an oncoming vehicle which injured him is relevant and material, and the injured party may testify as to such reason.

Orr v Hart, 219-408; 258 NW 84

Signaling turns—evidence in re custom—effect. Testimony relative to the custom of automobile drivers of this state and surrounding territory, in signaling turns, reviewed, and held too inconsequential to justify a reversal, even tho the inadmissibility of such testimony be conceded.

Harmon v Gilligan, 221-605; 266 NW 288

Tracks of colliding vehicles. The action of the trial court in unduly limiting litigants in the introduction of testimony having direct bearing on a vital and material issue constitutes reversible error. So held as to evidence relative to the tracks of colliding automobiles.

Harness v Tehel, 221-403; 263 NW 843

Damages for death—evidence. In an action for damages for wrongful death, evidence is admissible of the recent purchase, solely on credit, by decedent, of a business, and of the marked reduction by decedent of his indebtedness subsequent to such purchase, together with evidence of his ability, health, and other kindred matters.

Scott v Hinman, 216-1126; 249 NW 249

Intemperate habits bearing on damages. In an action for damages consequent on wrongful death, evidence is admissible tending to show the intemperate habits of the deceased.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Occupation and earnings of parent. The occupation and earnings of the father of a minor child may be shown, in an action for the wrongful death of the child, as an element to be considered by the jury on the issue of damages to the child's estate.

McDowell v Oil Co., 212-1314; 237 NW 456

(b) NO-EYEWITNESS RULE

Positive testimony vs. presumption. In a pedestrian-automobile accident the presumption attending the no-eyewitness rule will not overcome actual testimony of eyewitnesses.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Presence of eyewitnesses. The no-eyewitness rule has no application when there is evidence of what the deceased was doing immediately prior and up to the very time of the accident.

Lindloff v Duecker, 217-326; 251 NW 698

Eyewitness testimony—custom of injured party immaterial. Evidence tending to show the usual custom of a person in approaching a highway intersection—where he was killed in a collision—is inadmissible on the issue of negligence—it appearing that there were eyewitnesses to the entire transaction resulting in the collision.

Nyswander v Gonser, 218-136; 253 NW 829; 36 NCCA 1

Nonapplicability. In a pedestrian-automobile accident, where a motorist testifies that he saw deceased just prior to striking and killing him, the rule that in the absence of eyewitnesses the deceased is presumed to have exercised due care has no application.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Direct evidence of decedent's conduct. Where pedestrian crossing highway is killed by automobile, and in action for death where plaintiff's witness clearly observed decedent's conduct for some time immediately prior to accident and did not see him look for approaching car, the "no-eyewitness rule" establishing presumption of freedom from contributory negligence was inapplicable.

Spooner v Wisecup, 227-768; 288 NW 894

Presumption of care in absence of witnesses—nonapplicability. The presumption that a deceased was, at the time of a fatal accident, exercising reasonable and ordinary care for his own safety, cannot be indulged when there are eyewitnesses who fully testify as to the conduct of the deceased at the time in question, nor when the physical facts of a transaction negative such presumption.

Shannahan v Produce Co., 220-702; 263 NW 39

Applicability. The no-eyewitness rule—the presumption or inference that a fatally injured person was, at the time of being so injured, exercising reasonable care—may be applicable even tho there be a witness as to the actions of said party except during a very short but material period of time during which he received the fatal injuries.

Laudner v James, 221-863; 266 NW 15

Jury question. Principle reaffirmed that when there is no witness to a fatal injury, or when there is no witness as to just what the decedent did or did not do just immediately preceding the injury, a jury question may be presented on the issue of the negligence of the deceased because of the jury's right to infer due care under such state of the record; otherwise when the physical facts and surrounding circumstances negative due care.

Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689

Death—no-eyewitness rule—nonapplicability. When there are no eyewitnesses to a fatal accident, no presumption can be indulged that the deceased was, at the time, exercising due care when the mute facts attending the accident negative such presumption.

Van Gorden v City, 216-209; 245 NW 736

Allowable and unallowable scope. The right of a jury, under the no-eyewitness principle, to draw the inference that a fatally injured party exercised due care in approaching an intersection of highways, may justify the jury in presuming that the party at the time made due observations as to the existing travel on the intersecting highways; otherwise as to presuming the truth of affirmative excuses offered for the negligence of the deceased.

Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689; 37 NCCA 67

Existence of eyewitnesses—not jury question. In a pedestrian-automobile accident involving the no-eyewitness rule, it is not for the jury to decide whether or not there were eyewitnesses.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Contributory negligence for jury. Evidence, in connection with the presumption of due care in the absence of eyewitnesses, reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220; 35 NCCA 709

Railway accidents at crossings—obstructions. On the issue whether the view of a railway track was so obstructed at the time of an accident that an approaching train could not be seen, testimony by an eyewitness is manifestly admissible to the effect that he immediately stationed himself at the point of accident and could plainly see the entire track over which a train would approach.

Langham v Railway, 201-897; 208 NW 356

(c) OPINION EVIDENCE

Allowable conclusion. When the actions and conduct of a witness at a certain time are material and there is no other adequate way of placing the matter before the jury, then the witness should be permitted to describe what he saw, even tho his description consists of a mixed statement of fact and conclusion. So held as to the statement "It seemed as tho the man jumped right in front of the car, and we hit him."

Wieneke v Steinke, 211-477; 233 NW 535

Careful driver. A person riding on an automobile and injured in a collision with another car may not properly testify that the driver with whom he was riding "was a careful driver".

Hamilton v Boyd, 218-885; 256 NW 290

Habits of person—conclusion. An opinion, as to "what kind of a driver" the operator of an automobile was, is an unallowable conclusion.

In re Hill, 202-1038; 208 NW 334; 210 NW 241; 26 NCCA 193

General custom—immateriality. Evidence of the manner in which a party usually or customarily drove from a private driveway upon a public highway is quite immaterial.

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346; 32 NCCA 258

Competency of witness. A witness is competent to testify to the value of an automobile before and after an accident when it appears that he has seen cars of that make sold, and also second-hand cars bought and sold.

Anderson v U. S. Ry. Adm., 203-715; 211 NW 872

Distance in which car can be stopped. A properly qualified witness may testify as to the distance in which an automobile may be stopped under given conditions.

Judd v Rudolph, 207-113; 222 NW 416; 62 ALR 1174

Form of hypothetical question. Record reviewed and held that a hypothetical question was not subject to the vice of assuming the existence of a fact not shown by the evidence.

Peckinpaugh v Engelke, 215-1248; 247 NW 822

Identity of automobile tracks. A witness should not be permitted to testify that certain tracks seen by him at the scene of an accident were the identical tracks which he has heard described by other witnesses at the trial.

McKeever v Batcheler, 219-93; 257 NW 567

Physical ability. A nonexpert witness who first recites what he observed about the physical condition of an injured party may testify whether the injured party was able to get out of bed.

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

Radiograph (X-ray)—oral explanation. A radiograph may be explained or interpreted to a jury by an expert, insofar as the radiograph does not interpret itself to the mere observation of a nonexpert.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Res gestae—proper exclusion. The exclusion of declarations of unidentified bystanders, made shortly after an accident, to the effect that, "the boys ran between the cars", does not constitute reversible error when ample evidence bearing on the same point was received in evidence, and when the said declarations were, in view of the entire record, quite inconsequential.

Riddle v Frankl, 215-1083; 247 NW 493

Rate of speed. A witness may, under proper circumstances, testify in effect that a vehicle "sounded like it was traveling fast".

Lane v Varlamos, 213-795; 239 NW 689

Speed—competency. The driver of an automobile seeing another car approaching him around a curve at a distance of 80 feet is competent to estimate the speed of the approaching car.

Albert v Maher Bros., 215-197; 243 NW 561

VIII PRESUMPTIONS, EVIDENCE, AND PROOF—continued

(c) OPINION EVIDENCE—concluded

Direct evidence of speed—surrounding circumstances considered—jury question. A truck driver's direct testimony as to speed will not be taken as a verity, but will generate a jury question when considered with the other facts and circumstances of the accident tending to overcome the direct evidence as to speed.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

Eyewitnesses' estimate of speed, location, distance. The testimony of eyewitnesses to an automobile accident as to speed, location, and distance is only their judgment and estimation, which the jury must consider with other evidence in order to arrive at the truth.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

Inadmissible opinion evidence. Tho a witness may be competent to give his opinion, generally, of the rate of speed of a vehicle, yet the circumstances of a transaction may be such, and the position of the offered witness may be such as to render the opinion valueless and, therefore, wholly inadmissible.

Klaaren v Shadley, 215-1043; 247 NW 301

Rate of speed—striking testimony. The refusal to strike testimony to the effect that "the car sounded like it was going fast" constitutes no prejudicial error, when the witness (1) actually saw the car in question, and (2) elsewhere gave similar testimony without objection.

Lane v Varlamos, 213-795; 239 NW 689

Speed of automobile. A witness who has operated an automobile for several years and whose business necessitates extensive travel by him over the country, mostly by automobile, is competent to give an opinion as to speed at which an automobile was being operated on a certain occasion.

State v Thomlinson, 209-555; 228 NW 80

Speed determined from skid marks. A witness in an automobile accident case may describe skid marks, but may not base an opinion of the speed of an automobile on them, as it is solely within the province of the jury to draw an inference of speed from skid marks.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Witnesses—competency—speed. One may be a competent witness as to the speed of a motor vehicle on a showing that he has observed such vehicles while in operation with a view of determining their speed.

Becvar v Batesole, 218-858; 256 NW 297

(d) PHYSICAL FACTS

Cause and effect—jury question or matter of law. So many elements enter into the physical results produced by motor vehicle collisions that when fact questions are presented, the supreme court cannot substitute its judgment for that of the jury and say, as a matter of law, that a particular result was produced because certain factors constituted the cause.

Echternacht v Herny, 224-317; 275 NW 576
Rabenold v Hutt, 226-321; 283 NW 865

"Physical facts" rule—inapplicability. The so-called "physical facts" rule which is often applied in negligence cases—the rule that when the operator of a vehicle at a known railroad crossing possesses ordinary sense of sight he is conclusively presumed, in the absence of diverting circumstances, to have seen an approaching train which was in plain view—necessarily has no application when the train is not in plain view, owing to a temporary obstruction which the railroad company has interposed to his view, e. g., freight cars on a side track.

Bush v Railway, 216-788; 247 NW 645

Exception to most favorable evidence rule. On appeal from an order overruling defendant's motion for directed verdict, the supreme court need not follow the most favorable evidence rule, as urged by plaintiff, to the exclusion of the physical facts and other uncontradicted matters which plaintiff not only conceded, but affirmatively and intentionally established.

Scott v Hansen, 228- ; 289 NW 710

Assured clear distance—error to submit. It is error to submit the issue of assured clear distance when the physical facts and plaintiff's testimony show that there was no discernible object ahead of defendant's car.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Assured clear distance.

Janes v Roach, 228- ; 290 NW 87

Circumstantial evidence as sole proof. Negligence cannot be deemed established by circumstantial evidence alone unless the facts constituting such circumstances are of such a nature and so related that the conclusion of negligence is the only conclusion to which the mind can fairly and reasonably arrive. So held where the location and condition of wrecked automobiles and marks on the pavement were relied on to show negligence.

Reimer v Musel, 217-377; 251 NW 863

Contributory negligence per se. The occupants of an eastbound automobile were guilty of contributory negligence per se under testimony that upon arriving at an intersecting north and south street, on a clear day, they looked to the south without obstruction for a distance of at least 225 feet, and saw no approaching car, and thereupon entered the intersection and moved across the same at 10 miles per hour, but before they had fully cleared the intersection were hit by a northbound car traveling at the rate of 40 or 50 miles per hour.

Hewitt v Ogle, 219-46; 256 NW 755

Place of collision uncertain—physical facts rule inapplicable. Under the physical facts rule, a conclusion cannot be established as a matter of law unless the physical facts and circumstances lead to but one conclusion, to the exclusion of all others, and so certain indecisive physical facts will not conclusively rebut direct testimony, indicating the place on the pavement of a motor vehicle collision, so as to sustain a directed verdict thereon.

Clark v Berry Seed Co., 225-262; 280 NW 505

Excessive speed. Circumstances are oftentimes more persuasive on the issue of speed than direct testimony is.

Starry v Hanold, 202-1180; 211 NW 696

Last clear chance—jury question. The physical facts and circumstances attending an accident may present a jury question on the issue whether defendant actually discovered plaintiff's negligently assumed position of peril in such time that defendant, by the exercise of reasonable care, might have avoided said accident.

Groves v Webster City, 222-849; 270 NW 329

Law of case—location of tracks. A holding on appeal that a jury question on the issue of negligence in operating an automobile was not generated by record evidence relative to the location and condition of wrecked automobiles, and as to marks and broken glass on the highway, is necessarily conclusive on the court on retrial on substantially the same evidence.

Reimer v Musel, 220-1095; 264 NW 47

Intersection collision. Where the automobile of plaintiff's intestate collided with defendant's truck at a highway intersection, and the physical facts showed that plaintiff's intestate had violated statutes in not keeping his car under control and not yielding the right of way to the truck, which had entered the intersection first, plaintiff's intestate was therefore guilty of negligence per se which contributed directly to his death, and which entitled the truck owner to a directed verdict.

Young v Clark, 226-1066; 285 NW 633

No-eyewitness rule — when nonapplicable. Principle reaffirmed that when there is no witness to a fatal injury, or when there is no witness as to just what the decedent did or did not do just immediately preceding the injury, a jury question may be presented on the issue of the negligence of the deceased because of the jury's right to infer due care under such state of the record; otherwise when the physical facts and surrounding circumstances negative due care.

Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689

Presumption of care in absence of witnesses—nonapplicability. The presumption that a deceased was, at the time of a fatal accident, exercising reasonable and ordinary care for his own safety, cannot be indulged when there are eyewitnesses who fully testify as to the conduct of the deceased at the time in question, nor when the physical facts of a transaction negative such presumption.

Shannahan v Produce Co., 220-702; 263 NW 39

Direct evidence—nonapplicability of circumstantial evidence instruction. In a death claim action for negligence arising from an automobile collision occurring in a suburban district of a city where the negligence alleged was in failing to travel on the right-hand side of the street and where along with the physical facts there was direct evidence by the driver of the car wherein decedent was riding as to decedent's travel on the right-hand side of the street, it was error to give an instruction, applicable only to cases based entirely on circumstantial evidence, when such instruction prevented the jury from considering the direct evidence as to where the accident occurred.

Rusch v Hoffman, 223-895; 274 NW 96

Skid marks—intersection collision. Even when the most favorable view of the evidence is taken, plaintiff's contention, that he was struck by defendant's automobile at a street intersection after the automobile had approached the intersection from a side street, was not established when the testimony of the witness on whom the plaintiff relied was inherently inconsistent and was disproved by skid marks and other testimony showing that the automobile had not been on the side street.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Yielding one-half of road—surrounding circumstances — jury question. Circumstances surrounding an accident, viz: the condition of the vehicles, the location of dead bodies and debris, the blood and brains splattered on one side of a bridge, are circumstances for the jury to consider in determining whether a truck driver gave one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

(e) RES IPSA LOQUITUR

Res ipsa loquitur as rule of evidence. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is a rule of evidence not applicable where specific allegations of negligence are pleaded but only where general allegations of negligence are wholly relied upon.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Passenger injured in motorbus accident. Plaintiff, under a general allegation of negligence on the part of a common carrier of passengers, to wit, a motorbus company, generates, under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, a jury question on the issue of the negligence of such carrier by proof (1) that he was a passenger on said bus; (2) that a collision

(e) RES IPSA LOQUITUR—concluded occurred between said bus and an automobile; (3) that in said collision said bus was overturned; and (4) that plaintiff was injured.

Crozier v Stages, 209-313; 228 NW 320; 29 NCCA 20

Car run into from rear. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable to an occurrence wherein plaintiff in the daytime is driving a vehicle at a moderate rate of speed, and looking ahead, on the right-hand side of a wide and wholly unobstructed highway and is suddenly and unexpectedly run into from the rear by another vehicle.

Harvey v Borg, 218-1228; 257 NW 190; 39 NCCA 139

Collision with rear of horse-drawn vehicle.

In an action against a motorist for colliding with the rear of a horse-drawn vehicle, tried on the theory of res ipsa loquitur, an instruction containing the phrase, "within her exclusive control, or the exclusive control of her authorized driver", as applied to the automobile or instrumentality, held not erroneous as meaning control to the exclusion of each other, but rather control to the exclusion of third persons.

Mein v Reed, 224-1274; 278 NW 307

Inconclusive evidence. In an automobile damage action the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable when the automobile was not under the exclusive control of the defendant or when the jury must speculate from the evidence whether the injury was caused by a defect in the automobile or by the negligence of the driver.

Sproll v Burkett Co., 223-902; 274 NW 63; 2 NCCA (NS) 424

Waiver. One who pleads specific acts of negligence on the part of defendant thereby waives the right to rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Harvey v Borg, 218-1228; 257 NW 190; 39 NCCA 139

Luther v Jones, 220-95; 261 NW 817; 39 NCCA 139

Negligence pleaded specifically. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur may be applicable under one unquestioned count of a petition which alleges negligence generally, notwithstanding the fact that the same cause of action is pleaded in another count under specific allegations of negligence.

Crozier v Stages, 209-313; 228 NW 320; 32 NCCA 46; 34 NCCA 678

Specific reliance on res ipsa loquitur. A plaintiff who sues in tort and alleges generally (1) that defendant was guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of her injuries, and (2) that she relies on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, cannot be compelled by motion for more specific statement to state the particular acts of negligence of which she complains.

Harvey v Borg, 218-1228; 257 NW 190; 39 NCCA 139

Negligence inferred by jury from circumstances. Pleading specific acts of negligence precludes recovery under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and as no inference of negligence arises from the mere fact of a collision, a pedestrian's action to recover damages from a motorist may not be submitted to the jury on the theory that the jury might reasonably infer negligence from the circumstances. A case may be submitted on this theory only when there may be drawn from the circumstances no other reasonable conclusion than the existence of negligence.

Armbruster v Gray, 225-1226; 282 NW 342

Passenger injured in rented car. In an action by passenger against a lender of car for injuries sustained when car driven by borrower went into ditch, res ipsa loquitur doctrine held inapplicable.

Gianopoulos v Saunders System, (NOR); 242 NW 53; 32 NCCA 18

(f) JURY QUESTIONS

Conflicting evidence. On conflicting testimony, the jury is to determine the credibility of the witnesses and to ascertain the facts, and on appeal the supreme court is to determine not what the facts were, but solely what the jury was warranted in finding them to be, reviewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the party in whose favor the verdict was returned.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Contributory negligence—reasonable minds differing. Principle reaffirmed that a jury question exists on the issue of negligence whenever on the record reasonable minds might reasonably differ as to the effect of what was done or not done under the circumstances.

Rosenberg v Railway, 213-152; 238 NW 703

Reasonable minds reaching different conclusions. Where reasonable minds may reach different conclusions from the facts presented, the case is one for the jury.

Short v Powell, 228- ; 291 NW 406

Physical facts—cause and effect. So many elements enter into the physical results produced by motor vehicle collisions that when fact questions are presented, the supreme court cannot substitute its judgment for that of the jury and say, as a matter of law, that a particular result was produced because certain factors constituted the cause.

Rabenold v Hutt, 226-321; 283 NW 865

Jury question (?) or law question (?). Principle reaffirmed that no jury question arises on the issue of the negligence of an injured party when all reasonable minds would agree that the injured party was negligent in what he did or did not do just immediately preceding and at the time when he was injured.

Hittle v Jones, 217-598; 250 NW 689

Abandonment of employment. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a servant had temporarily abandoned his employment and had not returned thereto at the time of the commission by him of an alleged negligent act.

Heintz v Packing Co., 222-517; 268 NW 607

Accident on driveway. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of negligence of both parties to an accident on a driveway contiguous to the vehicular roadway of a street.

Dickeson v Lzicar, 208-275; 225 NW 406

Unavoidable accident. When the evidence presents a jury question on the issue of defendant's negligence and plaintiff's contributory negligence, the court cannot, of course, sustain defendant's motion to dismiss on his claim of unavoidable accident.

Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220

Authority of servant. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a master had impliedly authorized his salesman, in order to perform his duties, to travel about the country by means of the salesman's individually owned automobile.

Heintz v Packing Co., 222-517; 268 NW 607

Assured clear distance statute—jury question. Whether a vehicle suddenly emerged from behind a stalled truck and moved into the pathway of an oncoming car, necessarily has a material bearing on the issue whether the driver of the oncoming car violated the "assured clear distance" statute. Evidence held to present a jury question.

McWilliams v Beck, 220-906; 262 NW 781

Assured clear distance—error to submit. It is error to submit the issue of assured clear distance when the physical facts and plaintiff's testimony show that there was no discernible object ahead of defendant's car.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Speed—clear distance ahead statute. Evidence reviewed at length and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a motorist so operated his car that he could not stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Lukin v Marvel, 219-773; 259 NW 782; 1 NCCA(NS) 16

Range of visibility. Altho the driver of a truck, which was following another truck on an icy street on which two cars were parked, could see past the truck and the cars and could have stopped within the distance he could see, when he ran into the truck ahead after it had skidded and turned around, there was a jury question as to whether he had been complying with the assured clear distance ahead rule, and it was proper to give an instruction imposing on him the duty to refrain from driving at a speed greater than would permit him to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Pedestrian—assured clear distance—legal excuse. Where a pedestrian crossing the street is struck by a motorist after first being seen 180 feet away on the opposite curb, and could have been seen by the motorist at all times prior to the collision, motorist's showing that pedestrian "popped up" ahead of him as legal excuse for not stopping within the assured clear distance is evidence raising a jury question.

Swan v Dailey-Luce Co., 225-89; 277 NW 580; 281 NW 504

Pedestrian crossing near intersection.

Scott v McKelvey, 228- ; 290 NW 729

Careful operation. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether an automobile was operated with due care.

Sexauer v Dunlap, 207-1018; 222 NW 420

Wheel becoming detached—circumstantial evidence. Circumstantial evidence is wholly insufficient, in and of itself, to generate a jury question on the issue whether a defendant in repairing an automobile so negligently replaced a wheel on the car that thereby it became detached while in operation (with resulting damage to plaintiff) when said evidence is also consistent with the additional theory that said wheel became detached because of defects and weaknesses in the car arising from its age and great use.

Tyrrell v Skelly Co., 222-1257; 270 NW 857

Collision. Evidence reviewed in an action for damages consequent on a collision in the nighttime between a truck and an automobile, and held to present jury questions on the issues:

1. Whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence;
2. Whether defendant was driving his truck without lights;
3. Whether defendant was driving on the wrong side of the road;
4. Whether defendant was operating his truck (weighing three tons) at an unlawful rate of speed; or
5. Whether defendant had opportunity to avoid the collision and failed to do so.

Carlson v Decker, 218-54; 253 NW 923; 36 NCCA 93

Collision with bicycle. Where a motorist driving east 40 to 50 miles per hour at night on a paved highway, the lights on vehicle working properly (no rain, fog, or snow), his attention being momentarily diverted by an oncoming car, and, simultaneously with its passing, he collided with and fatally injured a bicycle rider, also traveling east, instructions covering diverting circumstances relative to speed (§5029, C., '35) and failing to turn to left when passing vehicle (§5022, C., '35) reviewed and held to correctly present questions for jury.

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6; 3 NCCA(NS) 184

Conflict as to use of brakes. A conflict in the evidence in a motor vehicle accident case as to whether defendant did or did not apply his brakes is properly a matter for the jury.

Reed v Pape, 226-170; 284 NW 106

Icy pavement as excuse for negligence. In argument, a defendant truck driver's explanation that icy pavement and locked brakes made his truck slide and should excuse his presence on the wrong side of the road where his truck collided with plaintiff's automobile will not sustain a directed verdict in his favor, since question of plaintiff's contributory negligence, defendant's violation of statute, the sufficiency of his excuse, and whether his negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, being questions on which reasonable minds might differ, are for the jury.

McIntyre v West Co., 225-739; 281 NW 353

Emergency as legal excuse—evidentiary support. Question of emergency as being legal excuse should not be submitted to the jury without competent evidence to support it. Held, instruction amply supported in instant case.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Evidence—legitimate suggestion by counsel. When the word "suddenly" was never used by witnesses to describe how a truck slowed down and turned out to the left to avoid a pedestrian before it was hit by another truck proceeding from the rear, but the word was put into their mouths by legitimate suggestion of counsel, the weight and credibility to be given the word is for the jury.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

Consent to operation. Proof that an automobile at the time of a collision (1) was operated by one defendant, (2) was owned by another defendant, and (3) was under lease exceeding ten days to yet another defendant, generates a jury question on the issue whether the car was operated with the consent of the owner, and also with the consent of the lessee; and such jury question survives as to the owner and as to the lessee until each, for himself, negatives such consent by undisputed and uncontroverted testimony. And the most positive denials of consent cannot be deemed "undisputed and uncontroverted" when the facts and circumstances attending the operation of the car tend to prove that the owner and lessee did consent.

Greene v Lagerquist, 217-718; 252 NW 94

Contributory negligence of passenger. Whether a passenger who had no control over the operation of a car was guilty of contributory negligence must almost inevitably be a jury question.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853

Plaintiff's negligence per se not necessarily contributory. A plaintiff riding in his automobile driven by his son, who enters an obscured intersection without sounding his horn (§5043, C., '35), is guilty of negligence per se, imputable from his son, but a jury question arises as to whether or not this contributed to the injury, when from the evidence it is questionable whether defendant could have heard such signal had it been given.

In re Green, 224-1268; 278 NW 285

Negligence—contributory negligence. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether there was negligence in the operation of automobiles by the drivers thereof; likewise, whether there was contributory negligence on the part of an injured party.

Shuck v Keefe, 205-365; 218 NW 31

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

Dickeson v Lzicar, 208-275; 225 NW 406

Vass v Martin, 209-870; 226 NW 920; 39 NCCA 325; 1 NCCA(NS) 162

O'Hara v Chaplin, 211-404; 233 NW 516; 35 NCCA 573

Rogers v Lagomarcino Co., 215-1270; 248 NW 1

Car striking person standing on street. In personal injury action for being struck by automobile while plaintiff was standing at night on city street discussing question of blame for another collision, plaintiff's contributory negligence was question for jury.

Yale v Hanson, 227-813; 288 NW 905

Standing on endless track of tractor to fill gas tank—contributory negligence. Where defendant, engaged in road construction work, was using caterpillar tractor-pulled dump wagons, and while plaintiff, a gasoline tank wagon operator, was standing on the caterpillar's endless track filling the gasoline tank, the tractor suddenly started moving, throwing plaintiff in path of another oncoming tractor-towed dirt wagon which ran over and injured him, and altho defendant claims that plaintiff was on the tractor at his own peril, even when the peril was created by defendant, the question, as to whether plaintiff acted as ordinarily prudent person or was guilty of contributory negligence, was for jury.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

Bicyclist colliding with unlighted car. Where a minor bicyclist collided with a car unlawfully parked on left side of city street without tail light, when he pulled over to his right to avoid an approaching car the question of his contributory negligence, which depended on whether or not he should have observed the parked car in time to avoid the collision, was for the jury.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

Contributory negligence—child under 14—burden to overthrow presumption. The presumption is that children under 14 are incapable of contributory negligence. A motorist striking a child of 10 must prove from all the facts and circumstances that the child did not exercise the degree of care ordinarily exercised by a child of like age. Held that the question of whether he had sustained his burden was clearly for the jury.

Lenth v Schug, 226-1; 281 NW 510; 287 NW 596

"Double passing"—contributory negligence. Evidence relative to the facts attending a "double passing" reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144; 33 NCCA 476

Contributory negligence—failure of lights. Where a truck is being operated in a fog with 35 feet visibility ahead, under speed and road conditions permitting a stop within 25 feet, and after meeting and passing another automobile, there is a failure of the lights on the truck, the truck driver is confronted with an emergency not of his own making, and if he tries the lights again before applying his brakes and turning on his emergency light, after which he discovers another truck stopped on the road within the visibility range so that it would have been seen and avoided had the lights not failed, he is not as a matter of law contributorily negligent in being unable to stop without a collision, but the question is for the jury.

Mueller v State Assn., 223-888; 274 NW 106; 113 ALR 1256

Care—pedestrian on shoulder of highway.
Janes v Roach, 228- ; 290 NW 87

Dual view of evidence. A jury question on the issue of negligence arises (1) when the evidence is conflicting as to what the injured party did or did not do, and (2) when there may be a fair difference of opinion whether that which the injured party admittedly did do or omitted to do constituted negligence. Evidence as to what an elderly lady did in crossing a public street after nightfall presented a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Robertson v Carlgren, 211-963; 234 NW 824

Plaintiff's conduct—conflict in evidence. The presence or absence of contributory negligence is generally a jury question, and two elements are involved, (1) what plaintiff did, and (2) the effect of his action; if either or both of said propositions present uncertainty, there is a jury question.

Riggs v Pan-American Co., 225-1051; 283 NW 250

Contributory negligence—inadequate brakes. Evidence that a plaintiff motorist approached a bridge at 15 miles per hour and proceeded to cross, keeping his car within 6 inches of the right-hand side, before defendant came on the bridge, and that plaintiff was two-thirds across before defendant swung across the center line and struck him, makes a jury question as to whether the fact of plaintiff's negligence in not having adequate brakes contributed to the collision.

Yance v Hoskins, 225-1108; 281 NW 489; 118 ALR 1186

Contributory negligence—jury question unless all minds concur. Contributory negligence is for the jury, and a directed verdict should be denied except in cases where the facts are clear and undisputed and the cause and effect so apparent to every candid mind that but one conclusion may be fairly drawn.

In re Green, 224-1268; 278 NW 285

Person in comparative safety—no duty to anticipate negligence. Plaintiff, standing between a truck and a pile of brick 15 feet away, who, after requesting the truck driver to back up 2 or 3 feet, is crushed against the pile of brick by the truck suddenly backing over the entire distance, is not contributorily negligent as a matter of law, but question is for jury as to plaintiff's right to rely on presumption that truck driver would use due care in backing up and would not suddenly back over the entire distance.

Johnston v Johnson, 225-77; 279 NW 139; 118 ALR 233

Failure of proof — incompetent witness. Where plaintiff, a motor vehicle passenger, predicates his action on two theories, viz: (1) he was not a guest, and (2) he was a guest, and as to the first his proof fails because of witness's incompetency under dead man statute, and as to the second he offers no evidence, there is nothing to be submitted to the jury.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Intoxication of motorist—evidentiary conflict. A sharp conflict in the testimony, as to whether a motor vehicle driver was intoxicated, generates a question of the credibility of the witnesses, which is a matter peculiarly for the jury.

State v Carlson, 224-1262; 276 NW 770

Last clear chance doctrine—nonapplicability. The submission of the last clear chance doctrine, under a record which unquestionably shows that the accident of which plaintiff complaints occurred instantly and inevitably after plaintiff's position of danger was discovered by defendant, constitutes reversible error.

Rutherford v Gilchrist, 218-1169; 255 NW 516

Last clear chance. Jury must consider all the evidence and where it tends to show that defendant, after discovering plaintiff's perilous position, might by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided a collision, it is not error to submit the doctrine of last clear chance.

Pettijohn v Weede, 219-465; 258 NW 72
Groves v Webster City, 222-849; 270 NW 329
Russell v Leschensky, 224-334; 276 NW 608

Lookout for pedestrians. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issues whether the operator of an automobile was guilty of negligence in failing (1) to maintain a proper lookout for pedestrians, (2) to warn pedestrians, and (3) to keep his car under control.

Sexauer v Dunlap, 207-1018; 222 NW 420
Altfilisch v Wessel, 208-361; 225 NW 862; 32 NCCA 482; 34 NCCA 150
Robertson v Carlgren, 211-963; 234 NW 824; 35 NCCA 555
Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220; 1 NCCA(NS) 57

Hitting pedestrian on shoulder of highway. Direct evidence of negligence which is insufficient, in and of itself, to generate a jury question may be sufficient when aided by such fair and reasonable inferences as are legally permissible for the jury to draw from such direct evidence and the attending circumstances. So held on the issue whether the driver of an automobile, in pursuance of a concerted plan between himself and others riding with him, negligently drove the car so close to a woman walking on the shoulder of the pavement that when the door of the car was opened she was hit thereby.

Tissue v Durin, 216-709; 246 NW 806; 2 NCCA(NS) 447

Proper lookout for pedestrian. After motorist had seen pedestrian 180 feet away standing on the curb, and when pedestrian had almost reached the opposite side of the street before being struck by the motor vehicle, which meanwhile had traveled the 180 feet, during which time pedestrian was plainly visible, and when motorist claims he did not again see pedestrian until just before striking him, the evidence raises a jury question as to whether motorist kept proper lookout, and directing a verdict is improper.

Swan v Dailey-Luce Co., 225-89; 277 NW 580; 281 NW 504

Failure to maintain lookout—proper failure to submit. Record reviewed, in an action for damages for death of a pedestrian who was killed by being hit by an automobile on the public highway, and held to justify the court in refusing, for want of evidence, to submit to the jury the issue of the defendant's alleged failure to maintain proper lookout.

Hartman v Lee, 223-32; 272 NW 140

Taillight of parked car concealed by body.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Control—lookout—speed. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issues whether the operator of an automobile (1) had his car under proper control in approaching and entering a busy street intersection, (2) kept a proper lookout ahead, (3) operated his car at an excessive rate of speed, or (4) so operated the car that he could stop it within the assured clear distance ahead.

Minks v Stenberg, 217-119; 250 NW 883; 1 NCCA (NS) 57

Parrack v McGaffey, 217-368; 251 NW 871

Failure to stop, look, or control speed. Unreconcilable evidence reviewed at length in an action for damages consequent on alleged negligence, and, in view of the hopeless conflict therein, and the permissible inferences to be drawn therefrom, held to justify the submission of the issue of failure (1) to stop, (2) to maintain a proper lookout, and (3) so to drive as to be able to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Bauer v Reavell, 219-1212; 260 NW 39

Lookout—control—car rammed from rear. The issues whether defendant failed (1) to maintain a proper lookout, or (2) to have his car under control, are properly submitted to the jury on evidence that plaintiff, on a clear day, while immediately approaching an intersecting crossroad, and while other cars were closely approaching from the opposite direction, was slowly driving his car in the immediate rear of several other forward-moving cars on the right-hand side of an 18-foot dry, paved road with level shoulders and no accompanying ditches and was suddenly and very unexpectedly rammed from the rear by defendant's truck.

Luther v Jones, 220-95; 261 NW 817

Maintaining lookout. Evidence reviewed and held to present jury question on issue whether a motorist had maintained a proper lookout preceding a collision.

McWilliams v Beck, 220-906; 262 NW 781

Negligence—speed. Evidence held to present jury questions on the issues whether defendant (1) drove at a dangerous rate of speed, (2) did not have his car under control, and (3) failed to maintain a proper lookout.

Parrack v McGaffey, 217-368; 251 NW 871

Proper lookout—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to present a jury question on the issue whether the operator of an automobile maintained a proper lookout preceding the time when a small child suddenly emerged from behind an obstruction and ran into the pathway of the approaching car.

Hawk v Anderson, 218-358; 253 NW 32

Striking boy on bicycle—dispute as to lookout. Where a defendant county-employee-trucker ran over a boy on a bicycle, an allegation of defendant's lack of proper lookout is clearly for the jury, when from the evidence, indicating the trucker may have struck the boy from the rear and should have seen him, the jury may well have found that defendant did not, in fact, keep such lookout.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Motorist anticipating dangerous position of one aiding. Where a stalled motorist heard one of several bystanders say, "Let's give him a push", whereupon they arranged themselves in positions to push the automobile, and one called, "Let's go ahead", a directed verdict is properly denied, and a jury question is presented as to whether or not the motorist might have known that a person was directly behind the automobile and would be injured if the car moved backward.

Huston v Lindsay, 224-281; 276 NW 201

Truck in reverse gear—negligent starting. Evidence reviewed and held to present jury questions on the issues:

1. Whether the operator of a truck which he had left in reverse gear was negligent in starting the engine when he had reason to know that another person was in the near vicinity of the rear of the truck; and

2. Whether the deceased was injured by being crushed between the rear of said truck and a building.

Laudner v James, 221-863; 266 NW 15

Backing up truck—control. It cannot be held as a matter of law that plaintiff failed to establish any negligence on the part of the defendant when the record shows that truck driver, after backing an intended 2 or 3 feet and almost stopping, suddenly moved back an additional 12 feet, crushing plaintiff against a pile of bricks.

Johnston v Johnson, 225-77; 279 NW 139; 118 ALR 233

Supported assignments of negligence. Plead- ed and supported assignments of negligence, which the jury might find was the proximate cause of the accident and resulting injury, must necessarily be submitted to the jury.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

General and specific allegations—belated attack. Except in res ipsa loquitur cases a specific allegation will not waive a general allegation of negligence, which general allegation must be assailed by motion, if timely, before answer and without such motion is properly submitted to the jury if sustained by the evidence.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

Driving on wrong side of highway—evidence. Evidence on the issue whether the operator of an automobile was driving on the wrong side of the highway reviewed, and held to present a jury question.

Ryan v Amodeo, 216-752; 249 NW 656

Henriksen v Stages, 216-643; 246 NW 913

McCoy v Cole, 216-1320; 249 NW 213; 33 NCCA 524

Schuster v Gillispie, 217-886; 251 NW 735

Statutory negligence—evidence. Evidence reviewed, on the issues whether the driver of an automobile (1) was driving on the wrong side of the street, (2) "cut the corner" of an intersection, and (3) gave no signal of his approach, and held to present a jury question.

Handlon v Henshaw, 206-771; 221 NW 489; 32 NCCA 433; 35 NCCA 649

Crossing black line on pavement. Eyewitness testimony that a defendant-motorist crossed the black line to the left side of the pavement preparatory to passing an automobile, then, observing an approaching vehicle, swung back in again, and in so doing struck this latter vehicle, deflecting his own automobile so as to collide with a second approaching vehicle in which plaintiff was riding, makes a jury question as to defendant's acts being negligence.

Echternacht v Herny, 224-317; 275 NW 576

Operation on wrong side of road—legal excuse. The act of the operator of a vehicle in turning to the left-hand side of a country highway when meeting another vehicle is presumptively negligent, but testimony that the immediately approaching vehicle was weaving from side to side of the road, and that the turn to the left was made in order to avoid a collision, presents a jury question whether he was, in turning to the left, exercising reasonable care.

Babendure v Baker, 218-31; 253 NW 834; 2 NCCA(NS) 650

Driving outside traveled roadway. An allegation that a motorist, without warning, ran his car outside the traveled part of the highway and injured plaintiff, constitutes an adequate charge of negligence, and must, of course, if supported by evidence, be submitted to the jury.

Townsend v Armstrong, 220-396; 260 NW 17

Negligence—occupying right side of highway. A specification of negligence that defendant did not keep his truck on the right-hand side of the highway when struck from the rear could not be withdrawn and was properly submitted to the jury when there was evidence to sustain the specification. Evidence did not show that collision would have occurring, even the truck had been wholly on right-hand side of the highway.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

Emergency as legal excuse. Evidence that a pedestrian walking along a shoulder of a highway suddenly stepped in front of an automobile, where he was struck, raises a jury question as to such emergency and as to legal excuse for failing to stop within the assured clear distance ahead.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Fog—careful and prudent operation. Evidence held to present a jury question whether the operator of an automobile was, on a foggy night, proceeding in a careful and prudent manner, and whether he had such control over the car that he could avoid obstacles appearing within the range of his vision.

Caudle v Zenor, 217-77; 251 NW 69; 34 NCCA 122; 1 NCCA (NS) 44

Failure to see obstruction in fog. In an action for damages resulting from injuries sustained when the car, in which the plaintiff and her husband were riding on a foggy evening, ran into a car which the defendant had left standing on the highway after an unsuccessful attempt to tow it away, it was error for the lower court to direct a verdict for the defendant, as the question of liability should have gone to the jury.

Newman v Hotz, 226-834; 285 NW 287

Negligence—intersection collision. In a damage case resulting from a collision between a taxicab and an automobile at an intersection, when the record does not conclusively show negligence, that question and how the accident occurred are for the jury.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

Negligence of both plaintiff and defendant—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of the negligence of both plaintiff and defendant in a collision at a street intersection.

Branch v Railway, 214-689; 243 NW 379

Negligence at intersection. Evidence held to present jury question on the issue of negligence at a street intersection.

Appleby v Cass, 211-1145; 234 NW 477

Approaching intersection—instruction. In an action for personal injuries sustained by driver of a motor vehicle in collision with another vehicle which entered intersection from the left, an instruction stating that the statute requires any person operating a motor vehicle to have the same under control and reduce the speed to a reasonable and proper rate when approaching and traversing a crossing or intersection of public highways was correct. Since the jury in most cases must determine from the circumstances whether there had been a compliance with such statute, question was properly submitted.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Intersection collision—complex facts. An intersection collision involving disputed facts, fractional seconds, speeds of 40 to 50 miles an hour, and failure to see an approaching automobile presents, not a matter of law for the courts, but a question for the jury to determine blame.

Eby v Sanford, 223-805; 273 NW 918

Assuming compliance with law when danger obvious. Where plaintiff, riding with his son, approaches an intersection of county trunk roads and on his left observes defendant also approaching the intersection, altho plaintiff may assume that defendant will obey the right-of-way law, he must not place himself in a position of obvious danger avoidable by the exercise of ordinary care, and whether or not he did so place himself is a jury question.

Rogers v Jefferson, 224-324; 275 NW 874

Yielding one-half of road—assuming compliance with law limited. Where two motorists approach each other in a snowstorm, one driving into the face of the storm, which has obliterated the pavement outlines and the dividing mark thereon, the other motorist has a right to assume that he will be accorded one-half the traveled way, until he sees, or until, in view of the storm conditions and added driving difficulties, he should, in using ordinary care, realize that half the highway was not being yielded, under which facts a jury question is presented as to whether his continued reliance on the assumption excused him from the charge of negligence.

Futter v Hout, 225-723; 281 NW 286

Justifiable ignoring of issues. Grounds of negligence which, if proven, would not establish a cause of action, are properly withheld from the jury.

Fleming v Thornton, 217-183; 251 NW 158

Law of case—location of tracks. A holding on appeal that a jury question on the issue of negligence in operating an automobile was not generated by record evidence relative to the location and condition of wrecked automobiles, and as to marks and broken glass on the highway is necessarily conclusive on the court on retrial on substantially the same evidence.

Reimer v Musel, 220-1095; 264 NW 47

Absence of tail lights and reflectors—statement by court. Testimony reviewed and held that the court could not say, as a matter of law, that the truck in question was not, at the time of a collision, equipped with tail lights and reflectors.

Isaacs v Bruce, 218-759; 254 NW 57; 36 NCCA 93

No lights—high speed—wrong side. Evidence held to present a jury question whether an automobile was negligently operated (1) without lights, (2) at a dangerous rate of speed, and (3) on the wrong side of the highway.

Carlson v Decker, 216-581; 247 NW 296; 36 NCCA 91

Unlighted truck in highway. Evidence which would justify a finding that the driver of a truck left it where it obstructed one-half of the highway and with the rear end unlighted, presents a jury question on the issue of such assigned negligence.

Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151; 35 NCCA 790; 36 NCCA 106

Parking in highway—absence of lights. Negligence alleged to have been the proximate cause of a collision and asserted in the plea that defendant's truck (1) was parked, in the nighttime, diagonally across the entire right-hand side of a paved highway, and (2) without lights, with substantial evidence pro and con, both as to the position of the truck and as to the lights, necessarily presents a jury question.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853; 37 NCCA 496

Proximate cause—question of fact—general rules applicable. The question of proximate cause, as a general rule, is a question of fact, and the same rules apply as in other questions of fact.

Blessing v Welding, 226-1178; 286 NW 436

Proximate cause of injury. The question whether a certain negligent act was the moving or producing cause—the proximate cause—of an injury is properly submitted to the jury when the record contains evidence which establishes an act which could fairly be such proximate cause and contains no evidence tending to establish any other cause.

Buchanan v Cream Co., 215-415; 246 NW 41

Negligence of different agencies—proximate cause. Where the evidence demonstrates that an injury resulted from the negligence of two agencies, the question of proximate cause is peculiarly one for the jury.

Schwind v Gibson, 220-377; 260 NW 853

Proximate cause. Section 5056, C., '35, [§5030.08, C., '39], requiring parking on right side of city street, was in effect in city which had not adopted any ordinance to the contrary under authority of §4997, C., '35 [§5018.01, C., '39], and §5045, C., '35 [§§5033.07, 5033.08, C., '39], in view of its legislative history, required red tail light upon automobile parked at night upon city street. The purpose of these statutes was protection and warning of traffic, and violation thereof without legal excuse was negligence, but whether such negligence was proximate cause of a bicyclist's collision with an automobile so parked was question for jury.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

Lack of proper lamps on trucks or trailers—proximate cause. In an action at law to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when car in which she was riding collided with a tractor-trailer which had stalled on an icy hill on a country highway at night and had jackknifed across the highway, the question of owners' and operators' negligence in failing to comply with statutes prescribing number and place of lamps required on truck or trailer, and whether such negligence, if any, had proximate causal connection with injury sustained by plaintiff, held, under the evidence, properly submitted to the jury.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Turning or changing course—proximate cause. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a motorist was negligent in suddenly turning from the right side to the left side of a paved rural highway (in order to enter a private driveway on the latter side of said road), and whether, if negligent, said negligence was the proximate cause of a collision with another vehicle which he knew he was about to meet.

McKinnon v Guthrie, 221-400; 265 NW 620

Proximate cause. Conflicting testimony as to the speed of the defendant's truck while following pick-up truck on an icy street, and as to the distance between the trucks when the one in front skidded and turned around, presented a jury question as to whether the driver of the defendant's truck was guilty of negligence in colliding with the pick-up truck, forcing it over a curb where it struck the plaintiff, and whether such negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Proximate cause—accident causing injury—death following. Where a healthy, normal boy of 17 dies from an ear infection and mastoid involvement, the symptoms of which began shortly after the upsetting of a school bus in which he was riding, a jury question is created as to whether such accident was the moving or producing—the proximate—cause of the injury and death.

Olson v Cushman, 224-974; 276 NW 777

Negligence of outsider as proximate cause. The court must submit to the jury the supported plea that the proximate cause of an accident was the negligence of an outsider—a person not a party to the action.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

Occupant injured—imputed negligence of driver. Where a car collided with a stalled tractor-trailer, jackknifed on an icy hill at night, the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury.

(f) JURY QUESTIONS—continued

wherein it is shown the tractor, with lighted headlamps, standing on the right side of the highway, diverted plaintiff's and husband-driver's attention, and, there being no reasonable apparent cause to suspect that trailer blocked the left side of highway, and, where jury could find that car in which plaintiff was riding was proceeding at less than 20 miles per hour, and, that plaintiff and husband-driver were looking straight ahead, there is no warrant for saying plaintiff was contributorily negligent as a matter of law; however, under the record, the negligence of the husband-driver, if any, could not be imputed to plaintiff.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Passing on curve—negligence. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of negligence of the operator of an automobile in passing another vehicle on a curve, and returning to the right side of the traveled way within 30 feet of the car which had been passed.

Andersen v Christensen, 222-177; 268 NW 527

Persons working on highway—truck driver's duty. In a laborer's personal injury action against a truck driver for backing truck into laborer while both were engaged in highway construction, §5017.06, C., '39, exempting persons and motor vehicles actually engaged in work upon the highway from the motor vehicle law requirements, does not exempt a truck driver from using his horn if necessary in the exercise of ordinary care when backing from an intersection onto highway under construction. Question of defendant's negligence in not sounding horn nor observing plaintiff's presence when backing truck where men were working, and question of plaintiff's contributory negligence while working under foreman's instruction at outside edge of road were questions properly submitted to jury.

Rebmann v Heesch, 227-566; 288 NW 695

Specification of negligence—evidentiary support. Evidence held to support the specifications of negligence submitted to the jury.

O'Hara v Chaplin, 211-404; 233 NW 516

Assured clear distance.

Janes v Roach, 228- ; 290 NW 87

Negligence—speed in city. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question as to the negligence of a motorist in operating his car in the business district of a city (1) by maintaining a speed in excess of 15 miles per hour, or (2) by failing to maintain proper lookout, or (3) by increasing instead of reducing his speed on approaching an intersection and pedestrians walking across one side thereof, or by so doing without giving warning of his approach.

Huffman v King, 222-150; 268 NW 144

Speeding in residence district—sufficiency of evidence—jury question. Evidence that accident occurred on main street of town about four or five blocks from the business district, that defendant was driving 50 miles per hour, that there were a number of dwellings on both sides of the street, and that defendant had passed a sign which read, "Slow down, speed limit 25 miles per hour", was sufficient to raise jury question on issue of whether car was being driven in a residence district in excess of 25 miles per hour.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Speed determined by jury. Jury was warranted in finding from conflicting testimony that the defendant's truck was traveling at a speed of 20 to 25 miles an hour and that the speed was excessive and dangerous in view of the icy condition of the street.

Remer v Takin Bros., 227-903; 289 NW 477

Speed and distance as jury questions. In automobile damage action, where collision occurred about 8:30 a. m. at the intersection of two country highways, and where plaintiff, driving west, allegedly entered the intersection first at about 20 miles per hour and had the right of way, and defendant, driving south about 40 miles per hour in a truck loaded with seven head of cattle, collided with plaintiff's automobile about six or seven feet west of the center of (statutory) intersection, the trial court, deciding the issues as a matter of law by directing a verdict for defendant, was in error, since the question of speeds and distances, being estimates rather than certainties, raises a jury question on evidence submitted.

Short v Powell, 228- ; 291 NW 406

Speed determined from skid marks. A witness in an automobile accident case may describe skid marks, but may not base an opinion of the speed of an automobile on them, as it is solely within the province of the jury to draw an inference of speed from skid marks.

Ward v Zerzanek, 227-918; 289 NW 443

Control and speed of truck crossing bridge. The question of a trucker's speed and control while crossing a bridge is properly one to be considered by the jury as bearing on his negligence, when the truck was wide and the bridge was narrow, and somehow the truck collided with an oncoming vehicle.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

Direct evidence of speed—surrounding circumstances considered. A truck driver's direct testimony as to speed will not be taken as a verity, but will generate a jury question when considered with the other facts and circumstances of the accident tending to overcome the direct evidence as to speed.

Hawkins v Burton, 225-707; 281 NW 342

Failure to lessen speed or signal approach. A jury question on the issue of negligence of the operator of an automobile is generated by evidence tending to show that said operator was driving easterly on a straight road at 50 miles per hour; that he plainly could have seen, while at a distance of 80 rods, two well-lighted cars, and that they were standing together on the south side of the highway, one headed west and one headed east with all headlights burning; and that, without slacking his speed, or giving signal of his approach, he passed to the south of said stationary cars, and so close thereto as to strike and break an open door on one of said cars.

Hanson v Manning, 213-625; 239 NW 793; 2 NCCA (NS) 446

Passenger's assumption of risk of riding with aged driver. While riding in the rear seat of an automobile being demonstrated to her employer as a prospective purchaser, an aged lady who protests against the salesman permitting her employer, also an aged person, to drive the automobile and who, altho she cannot get out of the automobile, is assured of safety by the salesman, does not as a matter of law assume the risk incident to her employer's driving, since reasonable minds could differ, and a jury must determine if it was unreasonable for her to rely on the salesman's assurances of safety.

Wittrock v Newcom, 224-925; 277 NW 286

Submitting both negligence and recklessness. Both questions of negligence and of recklessness may in a proper case be submitted together to the jury.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

General or dragnet assignment. A general or dragnet allegation of negligence is properly submitted to the jury in accordance with the supporting evidence when such allegation is neither attacked (1) by motion for more specific allegation, nor (2) by motion to strike or withdraw.

Watson v Railway, 217-1194; 251 NW 31

Unallowable dragnet assignment. It is erroneous to submit to a jury, over proper objection, a pleaded assignment of negligence to the effect that a defendant operated his automobile "without regard for the rights and safety of the lives and property of others rightfully upon and using said highway, and of plaintiff in particular."

Cooley v Killingsworth, 209-646; 228 NW 880

Improper submission of issue. The issue of the alleged negligence of a truck driver in running over and killing a person cannot be properly submitted to the jury on evidence which fails to reveal the facts and circumstances immediately attending the accident itself—which leaves to mere conjecture the manner in which the fatal accident occurred. So held as to a fatal injury to a child.

Westenburg v Johnson, 221-134; 264 NW 18

Operation—improper submission. Only supported grounds of negligence should be submitted to the jury. So held where the court submitted the negligence of the driver of an automobile (1) in failing to turn to the right, when signaled by an overtaking car, and (2) in increasing his speed when so signaled, when, on the record, the only possible proximate negligence was the act of the said driver in overtaking the passing car, after it had passed, and then bringing about a collision.

Berridge v Pray, 202-663; 210 NW 916

Plural assignment—justifiable submission. Record reviewed in an action for damages consequent on a collision during the nighttime between trucks, and held to justify the court in submitting to the jury not only the issue (1) of defendant's failure to turn to the right and yield one-half of the traveled way, but also the issues (2) of defendant's failure to maintain a proper lookout for other vehicles, and (3) of defendant's alleged excessive speed.

Pazen v Des Moines Co., 223-23; 272 NW 126

Withdrawal of issue supported by evidence—pedestrian off pavement. Under a record in a motor vehicle-pedestrian accident case showing that the jury could have found from the evidence that decedent was more off the pavement than on it, it is error to withdraw from the jury plaintiff's allegation that his intestate had reached a place of comparative safety on the shoulder of the highway and that defendant left the highway without warning the pedestrian.

McCormick v Kennedy, 224-983; 277 NW 576

Truck trailer jackknifed across road—sufficiency of time to set out flares. In an action at law to recover damages for personal injuries received when car in which plaintiff was riding collided with the trailer of a tractor-trailer unit which had stalled on an icy hill at night on a country highway, and had jackknifed across highway, and where it is claimed the operators of the trailer unit failed to comply with statute requiring such standing vehicles to set out flares, and where operators claimed a warning was given by waving an ordinary flash light from inside or just outside cab of tractor, the question as to whether operators of trailer unit had sufficient time to set out warning signals, and whether the warning by waving an ordinary flash light was sufficient to afford a warning of presence of truck and trailer blocking motorists' passage, were proper questions of fact for the jury.

Johnson v Transp. Co., 227-487; 288 NW 601

Violation of ordinance. Whether the driver of a slowly moving vehicle was violating an ordinance which required him to keep as close

VIII PRESUMPTIONS, EVIDENCE, AND PROOF—continued

(f) JURY QUESTIONS—concluded

as possible to the right-hand curb becomes a jury question on evidence that he was driving three feet from said curb, with adequate space for another vehicle to pass to his left.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Eyewitnesses' estimate of speed, location, distance. The testimony of eyewitnesses to an automobile accident as to speed, location, and distance is only their judgment and estimation, which the jury must consider with other evidence in order to arrive at the truth.

Glover v Vernon, 226-1089; 285 NW 652

No-eyewitness rule. Evidence in connection with the presumption of due care in the absence of eyewitnesses reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue of contributory negligence.

Lorimer v Ice Cream Co., 216-384; 249 NW 220; 35 NCCA 709

Existence of eyewitnesses—not jury question. In a pedestrian-automobile accident involving the no-eyewitness rule, it is not for the jury to decide whether or not there were eyewitnesses.

Edwards v Perley, 223-1119; 274 NW 910

Personal injuries. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether injuries were permanent and whether they were the proximate result of an accident or resulted from a former diseased condition of the injured party.

Dickeson v Lzicar, 208-275; 225 NW 406

Pain and suffering—instruction. In an action to recover for personal injuries sustained in an automobile collision where plaintiff testified that headaches causing much suffering affected him since the accident, and when an expert witness testified that plaintiff's injury might have caused headaches and that the injury might be permanent, an instruction permitting recovery for future pain and suffering from headaches was not erroneous and properly submitted the question to the jury.

Rogers v Jefferson, 226-1047; 285 NW 701

Damages—future pain as incident to permanent injury. Even without a claim for damages for future pain and suffering, allegations and proof of permanent injuries from which future pain and suffering are reasonably certain to follow warrant the submission to the jury of this question.

Keller v Dodds, 224-935; 277 NW 467

Res ipsa loquitur—negligence inferred from circumstances. Pleading specific acts of negligence precludes recovery under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and as no inference of negligence arises from the mere fact of a collision, a pedestrian's action to recover damages from a motorist may not be submitted to the jury on the theory that the jury might reasonably infer negligence from the circumstances. A case may be submitted on this theory only when there may be drawn from the circumstances no other reasonable conclusion than the existence of negligence.

Armbruster v Gray, 225-1226; 282 NW 342

Weight of evidence—credibility of witnesses. In action for damages to plaintiff's automobile wherein there is a dispute in the testimony, the weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses are for the jury.

Schenk v Moore, 226-1313; 286 NW 445

Credibility—contradictory previous testimony. Inconsistent testimony by a witness at one trial as to certain facts in an automobile accident cannot as a matter of law negative his testimony in a later trial, inasmuch as the jury is the sole judge of the credibility of a witness and the weight of his testimony.

Echternacht v Heryn, 224-317; 275 NW 576

Responsibility between defendants. In an action for injuries sustained by a passenger riding in a taxicab, the question of responsibility for the accident between the owner of the cab, the driver, and a party to an agreement under which the cab was operated was a jury question.

Womochil v Peters, 226-924; 285 NW 151

(g) DECLARATIONS AND ADMISSIONS

Petition—allegations in one count not admissions as to another count. Different theories of recovery contained in separate counts of a petition are not admissions by which the plaintiff is bound under the rule that he may not controvert his own pleading.

Wells v Wildin, 224-913; 277 NW 308; 115 ALR 169

Caution—weight to be given admission. A cautionary instruction pertaining to the weight to be given an alleged oral admission of defendant to plaintiff, following a motor vehicle accident, should include a counterbalancing statement that, if the admission were deliberately made or often repeated, it might be the most satisfactory evidence.

White v Zell, 224-859; 276 NW 76

Contributory negligence—declarations of passenger. Testimony by a passenger in an automobile to the effect that shortly before an accident he called the attention of the driver to the approaching car is admissible on the issue of the contributory negligence of the passenger.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Damaging statements—failure to deny as admission. Evidence of the failure of a person to reply to material statements made in his presence and hearing, concerning facts affecting his rights, is competent if the statements are of such character and are made under such conditions that a denial would have been natural had the statements been untrue and incorrect.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Declarations inadmissible against master. In a joint action against a master and his servant for damages consequent on the negligent operation of the car by the servant, declarations or statements by the servant made several days after the accident tending to show the negligence of the servant are, while admissible against the servant, not admissible against the master; and the court must by proper instruction, if requested, limit the testimony accordingly.

Drouillard v Rudolph, 207-367; 223 NW 100

Wilkinson v Lbr. Co., 208-933; 226 NW 43

Glass v Hutchinson Co., 214-825; 243 NW 352

Non res gestae statements. When a plaintiff seeks to recover damages from the owner of an automobile because of the negligence of the driver, he must prove such negligence by evidence other and different than the non res gestae statements and declarations of the driver, and where the owner and the driver are co-defendants the court must exercise meticulous care to instruct the jury accordingly.

Cooley v Killingsworth, 209-646; 228 NW 880

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Non res gestae statements by agent. Non res gestae statements by the driver of an automobile, tending to show the negligence of the driver, are not admissible against the owner of the car; and if the owner and the driver are co-defendants, the court should receive the statements only as to the driver, and must clearly instruct the jury that such statements must not be considered in determining the liability of the owner. Whether failure of the owner to ask any instructions would obviate the error in failing so to instruct, quaere.

Wieneke v Steinke, 211-477; 233 NW 535

Non res gestae statements of driver. Non res gestae statements of the driver of an automobile tending to show his negligence are not competent against the owner of the vehicle, nor are such statements of the owner competent evidence against the driver, and the court must clearly and definitely so instruct. In addition the court must submit separate forms of verdict if requested.

Broderick v Barry, 212-672; 237 NW 481; 75 ALR 1530

Statement made at scene of accident.

State v Graff, 228- ; 282 NW 745; 290 NW 97

Opinion evidence—allowable conclusion. The statement of a witness to the effect that, when his vehicle was hit, "he was headed right into" another vehicle, is an allowable conclusion.

Judd v Rudolph, 207-113; 222 NW 416; 62 ALR 1174

Owner and operator as joint defendants—instructions. In a joint action against the owner and the operator of an automobile for damages consequent on the negligent operation of the automobile, wherein there is evidence of declarations and statements by the driver immediately following the accident (but not part of the res gestae), tending to establish the operator's negligence, instructions which permit or require the jury to consider such declarations and statements in determining the liability of said owner are prejudicially erroneous.

Looney v Parker, 210-85; 230 NW 570

Separate forms of verdicts. In a joint action against the driver of an automobile and the owner of the vehicle, wherein necessity arises so to instruct as to limit the effect of the driver's admissions to the question of his liability, and the effect of the owner's admissions to the question of his liability, separate forms of verdict must be submitted, if requested.

Broderick v Barry, 212-672; 237 NW 481; 75 ALR 1530

Incidental reference to indemnity insurance. Plaintiff in an action for damages consequent on an automobile collision has a clear right to show that defendant admitted his negligence and liability therefor, even tho said admission incidentally discloses that defendant was protected by indemnity insurance; and especially no error occurs when the reference to insurance is innocently brought out and was at once withdrawn by the court from the jury.

Liddle v Hyde, 216-1311; 247 NW 827

Separation of relevant and irrelevant matter. When a conversation relates to two distinct and easily separated subject matters, one relevant and one irrelevant, the latter cannot be deemed admissible simply because it is a part of the conversation as a whole. So held where the conversation related (1) to the manner in which an accident happened and (2) to the insurance carried by the defendant.

Kuhn v Kjose, 216-36; 248 NW 230

(h) RES GESTAE

Evidence—gruesome recital. The res gestae of an accident are admissible even tho the recital is gruesome.

Judd v Rudolph, 207-113; 222 NW 416; 62 ALR 1174

Nonconsequential statements—reception discretionary with court. The admissibility of res gestae statements rests in the sound discretion of the trial court. So held as to nonconsequential statements attending an accident.

Fortman v McBride, 220-1003; 263 NW 345

Evidence—colloquy following accident. In an action for damages consequent on a colli-

VIII PRESUMPTIONS, EVIDENCE, AND PROOF—concluded(h) RES GESTAE—concluded

sion of automobiles, prejudicial error results from receiving against defendant evidence of a heated colloquy between defendant and the other driver, occurring within a very few minutes after the collision, and wherein each driver asserted that he was on the right side of the highway, and wherein the defendant refused to examine certain tracks as bearing on the dispute and applied scandalously opprobrious epithets to the other driver; this because said testimony is neither a part of the res gestae nor does it reveal any admission on the part of the defendant.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Admissibility of declaration. The declaration of the driver of an automobile almost immediately after a collision had occurred and before or while an injured person was being removed from one of the cars, to the effect that "I know I was driving fast", is part of the res gestae, and admissible against both defendants, to wit, the driver of the car and the owner thereof.

Duncan v Rhombert, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Declarations by bystanders—proper exclusion. The exclusion of declarations of unidentified bystanders, made shortly after an accident, to the effect that "the boys ran between the cars" does not constitute reversible error when ample evidence bearing on the same point was received in evidence, and when the said declarations were, in view of the entire record, quite inconsequential.

Riddle v Frankl, 215-1083; 247 NW 493

Non res gestae statements of driver. In a joint action against the driver and owner of an automobile, evidence of the non res gestae statements of the driver tending to show his negligence is receivable provided the court properly protects the owner of the automobile from the effect of such statements.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Non res gestae statements. When a plaintiff seeks to recover damages from the owner of an automobile because of the negligence of the driver, he must prove such negligence by evidence other and different than the non res gestae statements and declarations of the driver, and where the owner and the driver are co-defendants the court must exercise meticulous care to instruct the jury accordingly.

Cooley v Killingsworth, 209-646; 228 NW 880

Wieneke v Steinke, 211-477; 233 NW 535

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Non res gestae statements of driver. Non res gestae statements of the driver of an automobile tending to show his negligence are not competent against the owner of the vehicle, nor are such statements of the owner competent evidence against the driver, and the court must clearly and definitely so instruct. In addition the court must submit separate forms of verdict if requested.

Broderick v Barry, 212-672; 237 NW 481

(i) DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE

Appearance of automobile lights. Demonstrations in court as to the appearance of automobile lights on the occasion of a collision in the public highway are properly rejected when the time and conditions of the demonstration are not shown to be the same as at the collision in question.

State v Fahey, 201-575; 207 NW 608

Exhibiting wounds to jury. During the final arguments in a personal injury case, the court may permit the plaintiff to seat himself alongside the jury in order that the jury may have a close-up view of wounds which, during the taking of testimony, have been fully described and exhibited to the jurors while some of them were 20 feet from the witnesses.

Mizner v Lohr, 213-1182; 238 NW 584

Contract of sale. On the issue of the ownership of an automobile, the contract of sale to the alleged owner is relevant and material.

Kimmel v Mitchell, 216-366; 249 NW 151

X-ray sciagraphs—sufficient foundation. Proof that certain X-ray sciagraphs were taken, for the use of the attending physician, by an expert in that science, and other circumstantial evidence tending to show the correctness of such sciagraphs, furnish sufficient basis for their introduction as evidence, even tho no witness specifically asserts that they "correctly portray the condition of the body affected."

Wosoba v Kenyon, 215-226; 243 NW 569; 1 NCCA (NS) 63, 747

IX INSTRUCTIONS(a) IN GENERAL

Incomplete record. Alleged errors in instructions will not be considered on appeal when the record contains only part of the instructions and when those contained in the record announce correct abstract propositions of law.

McDowell v Oil Co., 212-1314; 237 NW 456

Reardon v Hermansen, 223-1207; 275 NW 6

Questions not raised in trial court—no review. Assignments of error relating to instructions not raised or passed upon by the lower court will not be considered on appeal.

Simmering v Hutt, 226-648; 284 NW 459

Proper assumption of fact. An instruction may properly assume as true a fact which the record unquestionably reveals.

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505

Invading province of jury. An instruction which deprives the jury of the right to pass on a jury question is, of course, unthinkable.

Stingley v Crawford, 219-509; 258 NW 316

Impeachment—effect. The ordinary instructions as to the credibility of witnesses are all-sufficient in the absence of a request for a specific instruction as to the effect of impeaching testimony.

Altfilisch v Wessel, 208-361; 225 NW 862

Undenied statement as admission—cautionary instruction—failure to request. Court did not err in failing to give a cautionary instruction concerning evidence of damaging statements against defendant, made in his presence, to which he failed to reply or deny, when no such instruction was requested, nor when such claimed error was not raised in the trial court.

Doherty v Edwards, 227-1264; 290 NW 672

Erroneous instructions cured where directed verdict proper. Errors in instructions made by the trial court are not prejudicial to the appellant when appellee is entitled to a directed verdict.

Young v Clark, 226-1066; 285 NW 633

Harmless error—error in favor of complainant. A litigant may not complain of instructions which gave him an unjustifiable chance for a verdict in his own favor.

Judd v Rudolph, 207-113; 222 NW 416; 62 ALR 1174

Correct and incorrect instruction on same subject matter. A correct and an incorrect instruction on the same subject matter presents a hopeless contradiction to the jury.

Hoover v Haggard, 219-1232; 260 NW 540

View of object by jurors. Principle reaffirmed that when jurors are permitted to view an object which is the subject of the action, they must be instructed that they must base their verdict solely on the evidence received judged in the light of their observation of the object.

Gehlbach v McCann, 216-296; 249 NW 144

Equal degree of care. Any basis in the instructions for claiming that a greater degree of care was required of one party than of the other is fully effaced when the court otherwise instructs definitely to the contrary.

Stilson v Ellis, 208-1157; 225 NW 346

Equal right to use. The abstract statement that "all persons have an equal right to use the highways in an equal manner", without qualification as to the right of way in specific instances, is manifestly incorrect.

Judd v Rudolph, 207-113; 222 NW 416; 62 ALR 1174

Drouillard v Rudolph, 207-367; 223 NW 100

Equal use of highway—right qualified by ordinance. An instruction that drivers of different vehicles are entitled to an "equal use of the street," with elucidating qualifications relative to the duty of one of the drivers under a valid regulatory city ordinance, is quite unobjectionable.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Limiting issues. Issues of negligence submitted to the jury should be specifically limited to those supported acts of commission or omission alleged in the petition.

Parrack v McGaffey, 217-368; 251 NW 871

Pleading—sufficiency. A pleader is entitled to claim as many grounds of actionable negligence as flow from his pleaded statements of facts. Pleadings as to the facts attending a collision at an intersection of highways reviewed, and held to warrant the instructions given.

Sutton v Moreland, 214-337; 242 NW 75

Intermingling general and specific allegations. Instructions which refer the jury to the general allegations of negligence and not to the specific allegations are of harmless consequence when the latter are simply an elaboration of the former.

Tissue v Durin, 216-709; 246 NW 806

Instructions—conformity to general allegation—nonerror. An assignment of error that a general allegation of negligence specifying, "In not operating and driving said truck in a careful and prudent manner on a public highway", should not have been submitted to the jury, because such phraseology implied a moving vehicle, is without merit when there is substantial evidentiary conflict as to whether the truck was moving or stopped.

Gookin v Baker & Son, 224-967; 276 NW 418

Care required. Instructions reviewed, and held correctly to state the degree of care which is incumbent on a person using the highway.

Ryan v Shirk, 207-1327; 224 NW 824

Failure to exercise undue care. Error results from instructing that the driver of an automobile is negligent if he fails "to adopt such means as are within his power to avoid a collision". He performs his full duty if he exercises "ordinary care" to avoid the collision.

Jarvis v Stone, 216-27; 247 NW 393

Control of car—undue degree of care. An instruction, which, in effect, imposes upon the operator of an automobile an absolute duty to have his car under such control as to avoid injury to others, under all circumstances, is fundamentally erroneous because imposing an undue degree of care, and necessarily justifies an order for new trial.

Gregory v Suhr, 221-1283; 268 NW 14

Duty to use ordinary care. The court may very properly tell the jury that the driver of an automobile must exercise ordinary care even tho, at the time in question, a motorcycle officer was assisting the driver in testing the speedometer.

Ege v Born, 212-1138; 236 NW 75

Undue burden of care—incurable error. An instruction which places on the operator of an automobile the absolute duty to maintain a constant lookout and to use all his senses to avoid the danger of a collision is erroneous as imposing an undue burden, and the error is not necessarily cured by subsequent statements limiting the operator's duty to reasonable care and diligence.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

Imposing undue care. An instruction which, after directing the jury that the operator of a vehicle on approaching intersecting highways must keep a lookout for approaching vehicles, imposes on the operator, if there be danger of a collision, the duty to "reduce his speed" or to "bring his vehicle to a stop", is erroneous.

Reason: Such instruction imposes on the operator a greater duty than to exercise reasonable or ordinary care.

Knutson v Lurie, 217-192; 251 NW 147; 37 NCCA 62

Instructions—ability to stop under all conditions. Instruction reviewed and held not to impose on defendant the absolute duty to operate his automobile at such a speed as to be able to bring it to a stop under any and all conditions.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

Avoiding injury by ordinary care. An instruction that a motorman on a streetcar must keep a "constant" lookout for drivers of vehicles on the street, is not subject to the exception that it requires an undue degree of care, when the sole issue on trial is whether the motorman, being fully aware of the dangerous position of the vehicle in question, could have avoided the injury by ordinary care.

Lynch v Railway, 215-1119; 245 NW 219

Conflicting instructions. Doubt and uncertainty consequent on conflicting instructions relative to the right of the operator of an automobile to assume that another operator would not use the highway unlawfully present ample justification for granting the prejudiced party a new trial.

Jelsma v English, 210-1065; 231 NW 304

Right to assume care and nonviolation of law of road. After correctly instructing as to the law of the road, it is not erroneous to instruct that each of the operators of the two automobiles in question had the right to assume that the other would not violate such laws, and would exercise ordinary care for the safety of himself and others.

Shutes v Weeks, 220-616; 262 NW 518

Right to assume compliance with law. Reversible error results from refusing to instruct that the operator of an automobile has a right to assume (until he knows or should know to the contrary) that other operators of automobiles, (1) will keep their cars under control, (2) will maintain a speed which will enable them to stop within the assured clear distance ahead, and (3) will yield one-half of the traveled way by turning to the right—all such enumerated subject matters being distinctly in issue.

Fry v Smith, 217-1295; 253 NW 147

Violation of ordinance — presumption — instructions. While the violation of a city ordinance relative to the operation of an automobile is only prima facie evidence of negligence, yet, where the sole issue is whether the operator did violate such ordinance—when the operator makes no effort to excuse a violation—it is not erroneous for the court to instruct that if there was such violation the jury "would be warranted in finding the operator guilty of negligence".

McDougal v Bormann, 211-950; 234 NW 807; 32 NCCA 405

See Kisling v Thierman, 214-911; 243 NW 552

Passenger—care required. An instruction that a passenger in an automobile must be deemed negligent if he fails to warn the driver of "any situation" that may be dangerous, does not correctly state the law, because requiring more than ordinary care.

Muirhead v Challis, 213-1108; 240 NW 912

Passenger—control over car. Reversible error results from instructing that the jury may find that a passenger in an automobile was free of contributory negligence from the fact that the passenger neither exercised nor had the right to exercise control over the car in question.

Waldman v Motor Co., 214-1139; 243 NW 555

Invading province of jury. The court must not instruct that a mere passenger in an automobile (under duty, of course, to exercise reasonable and ordinary care) will be guilty of negligence if he fails to do some particular thing, e. g., attempt in some manner to check the speed of the car.

Codner v Stowe, 201-800; 208 NW 330; 26 NCCA 207

Contributory negligence—instructions — ignoring supported issue. In an action for damages based on the alleged negligence of the defendant in operating an automobile which collided with an automobile in which plaintiff was riding, the court commits reversible error by wholly ignoring in its instructions the duly joined issue as to the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, the evidence being such as to present a jury question on said issue.

Schelldorf v Cherry, 220-1101; 264 NW 54

Contributory negligence—fatally inconsistent instructions. After properly instructing that plaintiff, before she could recover, must establish her entire freedom from contributory negligence, the court commits a fatal inconsistency by instructing that plaintiff could not be charged with negligence in not choosing some other highway than the one in question on which to travel, unless defendant has proven that plaintiff knew or ought to have known that the highway on which she was traveling was in a dangerous condition.

Kehm v Dilts, 222-826; 270 NW 388

Contributory negligence—"cause of injury"—language approved. A contributory negligence instruction in a motor vehicle collision case stating that if such negligence "became or constituted, * * * a cause of the injury" reviewed and held correct.

Smithson v Mommsen, 224-307; 276 NW 47

Contributory negligence—contributing "directly" to injuries—instruction correct. In a motor vehicle collision case, a contributory negligence instruction stating, "If the injured party by any negligence on his part contributed in any way or in any degree directly to the injuries of which he complains;" follows the form approved by the supreme court and is correct.

Clark v Berry Seed Co., 225-262; 280 NW 505

Contributory negligence—degree or extent barring recovery—model instruction. It is strictly accurate to instruct, in an action for damages for negligently inflicted injuries, that, before plaintiff can recover, he must establish as a fact that he, himself, "was not guilty of any negligence that contributed in any manner or degree directly to his own injury".

Engle v Nelson, 220-771; 263 NW 505; 1 NCCA (NS) 166

Instructions—sufficiency. Instructions reviewed and held properly to present the issue of contributory negligence.

Becvar v Batesole, 218-858; 256 NW 297

Stalled motorist—freedom from negligence—requested instruction. In a damage action for personal injuries arising out of a motor vehicle collision, the burden is on plaintiff to establish (1) the defendant's negligence, (2) such negligence as the proximate cause of the injury, and (3) plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence.

Hence, a motorist who stands in the center of the road near the rear of her automobile stalled on the highway, attempting to stop a following motorist, and, tho having the opportunity, fails to seek a place of safety, when she sees the approaching motorist apparently will crash into her stalled automobile, is not entitled to an instruction establishing her freedom from contributory negligence as a matter of law, nor to a directed verdict against the defendant.

Murchland v Jones, 225-149; 279 NW 382

Proximate cause. The contributory negligence which will defeat a plaintiff is such negligence as contributes to the injury in any way or in any degree. Error results from instructing that such negligence must contribute proximately to the injury.

Hamilton v Boyd, 218-885; 256 NW 290

Submitting nonproximate cause. The submission to a jury of the issue of negligence on the part of the operator of an automobile in not sounding a warning of his approach to an intersection of streets is reversible error when the undisputed evidence shows that the injured party saw the approaching automobile when it was more than a block from said intersection. Nonproximate causes of an injury should not be submitted.

Lauxman v Tisher, 213-654; 239 NW 675

Proximate cause tho not sole cause. Instruction involving the thought that negligence in the operation of an automobile might be the proximate cause of an injury even tho it was not the sole cause, reviewed, and held not to permit a recovery for negligence which was not the proximate cause of the injury.

Duncan v Rhomberg, 212-389; 236 NW 638

Proximate cause—requiring excessive proof. Instructions reviewed and held not subject to the objections that plaintiff was required to prove (1) not only that the negligence of defendant was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, but (2) that said negligence was the sole cause of said injuries.

Rainey v Riese, 219-164; 257 NW 346

Unnecessary amplification. Instructions which fully and correctly instruct the jury as to negligence and proximate cause need not (especially in the absence of a request) be amplified by the specific submission of defendant's plea that some certain act or failure to act on the part of plaintiff was the proximate cause of the injury, said latter matters having been otherwise adequately presented to the jury.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 733

Imputed negligence—instructions construed. In an unsuccessful action against a railway company for negligently causing the death of a passenger riding in a truck, an instruction as to what acts of the said driver would constitute negligence cannot be deemed to impute the negligence, if any, of said driver to the passenger when other instructions specifically state, in effect, that the negligence of the driver would be no defense if the negligence of the defendant was found to be the sole proximate cause of said death.

Reidy v Railway, 220-1386; 258 NW 675

“Independent proximate cause”. In a motor vehicle collision case, an instruction stating that defendant claimed the negligence of plaintiff’s driver was the “independent, proximate cause of the collision”, together with other instructions covering plaintiff’s burden of proof held to properly submit to the jury defenses specially pleaded as to “sole proximate cause” being the negligence of plaintiff’s driver.

Smithson v Mommsen, 224-307; 276 NW 47

Personal injuries—proximate negligence of different co-defendants. On separate trials of an action for damages against the operators of different vehicles on one of which plaintiff was a passenger at the time she was injured by a collision, defendant is properly denied an instruction to the effect that he cannot be held liable if his co-defendant might be proximately negligent.

Newland v McClelland & Son, 217-568; 250 NW 229

Proximate cause—third person’s negligence. Under instructions properly stating that a plaintiff cannot recover unless defendant’s negligence was the proximate cause of his injuries, and in the absence of a requested instruction, there is no error in failing to instruct that if the sole proximate cause of the injury was the negligence of a third person, plaintiff could not recover.

Gregory v Suhr, 224-954; 277 NW 721

Third party nondefendant — instructions. Where, under the pleadings and evidence, the jury might find that plaintiff’s injuries were caused (1) by defendant’s negligence, or (2) solely by the negligence of a third party nondefendant, the court must, on proper request, fully instruct as to the negligence of said third party.

Dennis v Merrill, 218-1259; 257 NW 322

Dual proximate liability—instructions. The court, manifestly, cannot properly instruct in a personal injury action based on negligence, that defendant would not be liable if the injuries were caused by the negligence of a third party, when, under the pleadings and evidence, the jury could find that both defendant and said third party were proximately liable.

Dennis v Merrill, 218-1259; 257 NW 322; 1 NCCA(NS) 175

Negating defendant’s plea. In an action for damages consequent on plaintiff being negligently struck and injured by defendant’s automobile [in which action defendant pleads (1) a denial that his car struck plaintiff, and

(2) that plaintiff was struck and injured by some other vehicle], the court commits reversible error by instructing that plaintiff cannot recover unless plaintiff establishes by a preponderance of the evidence not only (1) that defendant’s car struck and injured plaintiff, but (2) that no other car struck and injured plaintiff.

Griffin v Stuart, 222-815; 270 NW 442
