Indemnity insurance—law governing. A policy of insurance issued under subsec. 5-e, §8940, C., '31, insuring the ordinary operation of an automobile necessarily embraces the statutory provision that said policy shall inure to the benefit of a party who obtains a judgment against the insured, even tho said policy purports to be an indemnity policy only. (Zieman case, 214 Iowa 468 overruled in part.)

Schmid v Underwriters, 215-170; 244 NW 729

Indemnity (?) or liability (?)—legality. Either indemnity or liability insurance covering the operation of an automobile may be validly written by mutual associations under §9029 or by reciprocal or interinsurance concerns under this section, even tho subsec. 5-e, §8940, C., '31, prohibits the companies there designated from writing anything but liability insurance, the latter section not controlling the two former sections.

9087 Actions—venue—commissioner as process agent.

Real party in interest—authority to make admission in pleading. A defendant corporation formed to underwrite reciprocal insurance contracts of its unincorporated group of subscribers is the real party in interest in an action to enforce a judgment against the corporation. The group of subscribers is not a legal entity and, when the corporation is the only legal entity of the two, an admission of an important fact by the corporation made in a counterclaim in the action in which judgment was obtained is binding on it in the later action.

9103 Laws applicable.

Reciprocal insurance contracts not controlled by general statutes. The specific provisions of an application for a policy of reciprocal insurance, of which provisions the applicant had notice, to the effect that the policy will not be in force, (1) until the application is approved by the insurer, and (2) until the premium is paid, cannot be waived by the insurer's agent entering into a different arrangement relative to said acceptance and payment of premium; §8959 with reference to the procedure in case of nonpayment of premiums and §9004, C., '31, relative to the power of agents, not being applicable to reciprocal insurance contracts.

Gisin v Ins. Exch., 219-1373; 261 NW 618

Voluntary insertion of nonrequired agreement. The fact that one class of insurance companies is required, by statute, to insert in its policies a provision that an injured third party shall have a right of action against the insurer, does not prevent other insurance companies from inserting such provision in their policies even tho they are not required so to do, and when the provision is so inserted the company is bound thereby.

Venz v Ins. Assn., 217-662; 251 NW 27

Nonstatutory cancellation of policy. A reciprocal or interinsurance policy of insurance is effectively canceled by complying with the contract method for cancellation even tho such method is materially different than the statutory method provided by §8959, C., '31, because said section does not apply to such policies.

CHAPTER 409

CONSOLIDATION AND REINSURANCE

9105 Life companies — consolidation and reinsurance.

Insolvency—assets transferred to obtain reinsurance—propriety. The trial court has power to cause assets of insolvent insurance company to be transferred and used to obtain reinsurance for policyholders without subjecting assets to judicial sale, and under proceedings where it is shown that it is impossible for company to function any longer, the trial court is justified in finding that value of assets upon a fair basis of valuation was insufficient to pay its obligations, and that the interest of policyholders would best be served by obtaining reinsurance.

Royal Ins. v Gross, 76 F 2d, 219

Reinsurance—disclosure of material facts—duties—presumptions. In an action on a reinsurance contract against reinsurer, held, not breached on account of original insurer's failure to retain full amount of liability agreed upon where original insurer was liable on another contract with the same principal and the evidence was insufficient to show any wrongful or fraudulent concealment of material facts, since the same principles of law as to false representations and concealments govern in reinsurance as in original insurance. Altho insured and reinsured have duty to exercise good faith and disclose all material facts, a presumption must be based on facts, not upon other presumptions. The mere nondisclosure of facts possibly known is not fraudulent concealment of facts, so reinsurer, to establish concealment of facts, must show intentional concealment or bad faith in ascertaining facts.

9106 Submission of plan.

Acts of administrative officers. Certiorari may be the proper remedy to review the action of the commissioner of insurance and attorney general (§8688, C., '35) in refusing to approve amended articles of incorporation of an assessment association.

9115 Companies other than life—approval of plan.

Consolidation—assumption of obligations—consideration. The assumption by a consolidating company of the obligations of the companies consolidated will not be rendered nugatory by mere inadequacy of consideration. At any rate, it is not for the court to pass on the sufficiency of the consideration growing out of a consolidation approved by the companies consolidated, by their stockholders, and by duly empowered public officials.

State v Cas. Co., 213-200; 238 NW 726

Consolidation—right of creditors. Where a domestic consolidated insurance company unconditionally assumed the obligations of both a domestic and a foreign company, and where the courts of the foreign state ordered that certain assets of the foreign company be administered on by receivership proceedings in said foreign state, the creditors of the foreign company have the right, after establishing their claims in the foreign receivership and being paid a percentage of their claims, to establish the balance of their claims against the assets in the hands of the domestic consolidated company (it having become insolvent) even tho a portion of said assets consists of a trust fund originally deposited with the state by the original domestic company "for the protection of its policyholders"; but dividends must be equalized by the domestic receiver among all creditors of the same class.

State v Cas. Co., 213-200; 238 NW 726

Loss—pro rata clause—effect on reinsurers. The lessened liability which an insurer automatically acquires (as regards a coinsurer) under the standard pro rata coinsurance clause, automatically works a pro rata reduction in the liability of his reinsurers who have contracted that the total loss under the policy shall likewise be prorated among the reinsurers.

Globe Ins. v American Co., 205-1085; 217 NW 268; 56 ALR 463

Coinurance—solvent and insolvent insurers. Separate insurers of the same loss are co-insurers, even tho one of the insurers issued its policy at a time when the other insurers had gone into the hands of a receiver and the extent of their ability to pay losses had become problematical.

CHAPTER 410 LICENSING OF AGENTS

9119 License required.

License—admissibility. The written request of an insurance company to the commissioner of insurance for a license for a named agent "to transact its authorized business" is admissible for the purpose of showing that said person was the company's agent, but not for the purpose of showing the scope of the powers of such agent.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 218-720; 253 NW 821

License not possessed by agent. An application for registration of securities and for an "issuer-dealer's" license was properly refused to a corporation which proposed to issue investment trusts in which the buyer would obtain life insurance through a foreign insurance company to cover unpaid balances on his contract, when such provision would violate the insurance laws because the corporation was to procure such insurance for the buyer, and neither it nor its salesmen had qualified as insurance agents.

Ind. Fund v Miller, 226-1101; 285 NW 629

Soliciting agent—implied authority. The act of an insurance company at its policy-issuing office, and in response to the request of its soliciting agent, in attaching a "loss payable" clause to a theretofore issued policy of fire insurance, and in returning said policy to its said agent with said clause unsigned, impliedly authorizes said agent to sign said clause on behalf of said insurer.

Stoner v Ins. Co., 220-984; 263 NW 46

TITLE XXI BANKS

CHAPTER 412 BANKING DEPARTMENT

9130 Superintendent of banking — term.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 28

Banking superintendent as good-faith plaintiff—attorney fees—nonliability. The superintendent of banking as a good-faith, tho unsuccessful, plaintiff in a quiet title action is not liable to the defendant for attorney fees.

9137 Salaries.

Initial power to fix salary. The superintendent of banking has the initial power to fix the salary of a bank examiner appointed by him to assist in the liquidation of an insolvent bank of which the superintendent is receiver. The district court has no right to grant a greater salary.

9140 Duties and powers.

Discussion. See 15 ILR 511—New banking legislation

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '36 AG Op 28, 666

Affected with public interest. Principle affirmed that the business of banking is affected with a public interest.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Assessment—nonpower of superintendent. The superintendent of banking has no power to order an assessment on the stockholders of an insolvent bank.

Home Bank v Berggren, 211-697; 234 NW 573

Guaranty of solvency of bank. A contract between the state superintendent of banking and the officers and directors of a state bank, wherein the said officers and directors guarantee that the bank "is at this time solvent", and wherein the contract "to keep and maintain the bank in a solvent" condition, in consideration that the superintendent will permit the bank to continue business, tho the superintendent questions its solvency, is a nullity, because gravely inconsistent with the statutory powers and duties of said superintendent, and therefore against public policy.

Andrew v Breon, 208-385; 226 NW 75

Guaranty by officers—effective delivery. Delivery of a written guaranty of payment, by officers and directors of a bank, of questionable assets of the bank, is shown by evidence that a state bank examiner took the guaranty into his possession with the consent of the guarantors and delivered it to the state superintendent of banking.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

Survival of service of notice. Service on the superintendent of banking, as such, of an original notice of mortgage foreclosure, survives the retirement of said official from office—is valid and binding on his duly appointed successor.

PRIVATE BANKS

9151 Use of banking terms prohibited.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op May 8, '39

Stockholders operating subsidiary unincorporated bank—greater liability than partners. Bank directors, who start unincorporated subsidiary banks owned by stockholders of the parent bank in the same ratio as they hold stock in the parent bank, create more than a simple partnership, and thereunder a deceased stockholder's liability, arising out of the subsidiary banking operations, unlike that of a mere partner, does not cease upon death.

9153 Exceptions.

Nonpartnership tho sharing profits. Where it is contemplated that a private unincorporated bank will be reorganized by incorporating the business (apparently in the same name as the private bank) and where stock in the contemplated incorporation is subscribed for, paid, and issued in a name identical with that of the private bank, and where the plans for incorporation are later wholly abandoned, the subscribers do not become partners in the private business when they never intended such relation, or held themselves out as such partners, or as having any interest in said bank; and this is true even tho said private bank continues for several years to pay said subscribers annual dividends out of its earnings.

Kinney v Bank, 213-267; 236 NW 31

Stockholders operating subsidiary unincorporated bank—greater liability than partners. Bank directors, who start unincorporated subsidiary banks owned by stockholders of the parent bank in the same ratio as they hold stock in the parent bank, create more than a simple partnership, and thereunder a deceased stockholder's liability, arising out of the subsidiary banking operations, unlike that of a mere partner, does not cease upon death.

9154.03 Administration—receivership.

Remedies of creditors—creditor's bill—conditions. The obtaining of a judgment against a purported partner in an insolvent private bank is a condition precedent to the right of the receiver to maintain a general equitable action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance by the partner.

Cooper v Erickson, 213-448; 239 NW 87

Allowance and payment of claims—property available. Where an estate consists of two general classes of assets, to wit, (1) assets employed by a decedent in operating his exclusively owned private bank, and (2) lands and other assets not so employed, and where, under the will, the bank is temporarily continued after the death of the decedent, an unappealed order of the probate court, entered on due notice and service, to the effect that bank depositors be paid from the general assets of the estate, precludes devisees and legatees from thereafter successfully asserting that depositors could only be paid from the assets employed in the operation of the bank, and that, as a consequence, the said lands could not be legally mortgaged in order to effect such payment. Especially should this be true when it appears that large sums of money employed in carrying on the bank have been used by the executors in paying claims not connected with the operation of the bank.

In re Griffin, 220-1028; 262 NW 473

Joining law and equity. It is not permissible for the receiver of an insolvent private bank to join (1) a law action to obtain a judgment against an alleged partner in the bank, and (2) an equitable action against the partner and his grantee to set aside a conveyance alleged to be fraudulent.

Cooper v Erickson, 213-448; 239 NW 87

9155 Organization.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 43

9156 Banking powers.

Discussion. See 17 ILR 505—Access to safety deposit boxes

Right to contract for payment of debts. A good-faith contract by the board of directors of a state bank, for and on behalf of the bank, and providing for the payment of the bank's debts incurred in the operation of the bank, is valid without any approval by the stockholders of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 216-252; 249 NW 352; 89 ALR 783

Corporate powers and liabilities—ultra vires and lack of authority—ratification. A corporation is estopped to plead that the contract of its vice president on behalf of the corporation to repurchase a note and mortgage at face value was neither expressly nor impliedly authorized, and was ultra vires, when the corporation, with full knowledge of all the facts, elects to retain the consideration paid it for the paper.

Hawkeye Ins. v Cent. Trust, 210-284; 227 NW 637

Deposits received on condition—violation—effect. A bank which receives cash, checks, and notes on the agreed condition that said receipts will be held intact, and not placed in the general assets of the bank, and will be returned intact on the happening of a named event, must respect and comply with the condition, even tho at the time the bank has enforceable financial obligations against the parties delivering the property. And, in case of violation of the condition and in case of insolvency, the claimants will be entitled to an order on the receiver for restitution, or for preferred payment out of the funds on hand at the time of insolvency, or for such other relief as will be equitable and possible under the circumstances.

Andrew v Bank, 218-1313; 256 NW 292

Deposits—general (?) or special (?). Whether a bank deposit be general or special necessarily depends on the use to which the depositor puts it.

Andrew v Bank, 218-489; 255 NW 871

Deposits—bank's general right to set-off. The fact that a bank unlawfully invests its funds in securities not permitted by law as proper bank investments, does not prevent the receiver of the bank from offsetting the amount of said securities against the deposit of the party who is obligated to pay said securities; and this is true even tho the bank was a mortgagee for the benefit of holders generally of said securities.

Andrew v Bank, 218-489; 255 NW 871

Special deposit superior to garnishment. Money deposited or caused to be deposited by a depositor in a bank for the sole use and benefit of a bona fide creditor of the depositor, and under an agreement to that effect between the depositor and said creditor, of which arrangement the bank had full knowledge, constitutes a special deposit. It follows that a subsequent garnishment of the fund is subject to the prior rights of the creditor for whom the deposit was made.

Hamilton v Imes, 216-855; 249 NW 135

General manager—power to deposit and withdraw funds. The general manager of an incorporated, cooperative, dairy company who, for years, and to the general knowledge of the banking and business interest of the locality in question, is in unrestricted management of the entire business of the company, must be deemed to have both actual and ostensible authority to select banks of deposit for the corporate funds, and like authority to withdraw said funds—an authority as to which, both as to the making of deposits and as to the withdrawal thereof, the bank need ask no questions, assuming, of course, it acts at all times in perfect good faith.

Fidelity Co. v Bank, 223-446; 273 NW 141

Rediscounting—estoppel to deny authority of officers. A savings bank, notwithstanding statutory limitations on the power of bank officers, will not be permitted to deny the authority of its officers to rediscount the bank's paper by indorsing said paper "without recourse" but accompanying such indorsement with formal, written agreement binding the bank to repurchase said paper prior to or at a named time, when the party advancing the credit relied thereon, and when said bank received, retained, and availed itself of the entire fruits of the said rediscounting.

Bates v Bank, 219-1358; 261 NW 797

Agreement to repurchase—demand for performance unnecessary. When a bank, (1) rediscounts its paper under indorsements "without recourse", but (2) accompanies the indorsement with a formal written agreement to repurchase the said paper on a named date, demand for performance on said date, or on any date, is unnecessary.

Bates v Bank, 219-1358; 261 NW 797

Question of fact—finding by court—conclusiveness. A finding by the trial court on supporting testimony in an action tried to it that a nondrawee-bank was not, and that the drawee-bank was, negligent in cashing a check is conclusive on the appellate court.

Bank of Pulaski v Bloomfield, 210-817; 232 NW 124

9157 Articles of incorporation.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 43; '28 AG Op 233; '34 AG Op 351

Proof of incorporation. A copy of the articles of incorporation of a banking corporation, duly certified by the secretary of state, is sufficient proof of such incorporation.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

Joint stock land banks—legal status. Joint stock land banks, tho organized under federal statutes, are privately owned corporations, organized for profit to their stockholders through the business of making loans on farm mortgages, are not governmental instrumentalities, and are suable in the proper state courts.

Higdon v Bank, 223-57; 272 NW 93

Insolvency — assessment on stock — expiration of charter—effect. The liability of stockholders of a state bank to assessment on their stock is not terminated by the expiration of the charter of the bank.

9162 Powers.

Right to question corporate management. The corporate management of a corporation may not be questioned by stockholders who became such subsequent to the acts in question.

Pomeroy v Bank, 203-524; 211 NW 219

Unauthorized assignment of mortgage—ratification. An unauthorized assignment by bank officials of a note and mortgage belonging to the bank is ratified and confirmed by the act of the bank in receiving and retaining the consideration paid by the purchaser for said note and mortgage.

Iowa Convention v Howell, 218-1143; 254 NW 848

Ratification equal to express authorization. A contract under which a debtor-bank agrees to transfer certain assets to a creditor-bank in payment of an indebtedness entered into on behalf of the debtor-bank by its cashier, but without authorization from his board of directors, is valid and enforceable if the debtor-bank, through its board of directors, had full knowledge of the contract, caused or permitted it to be executed, and availed itself of the full benefits thereof.

In re Johnson, 210-891; 232 NW 282

Collections—subagency. A bank which receives a blank-indorsed check from its correspondent bank, with directions to "collect and credit" the correspondent bank, and thereupon conditionally credits the correspondent bank with the amount of the check, and allows the correspondent bank to later withdraw the credit, in the course of business, cannot be deemed the subagent of the original depositor of the check even tho the original depositor, in depositing the check with the first bank, expressly or impliedly authorized said first bank to select a subagent to do the actual collecting; and, on the question of subagency, it is quite immaterial that the check was nonnegotiable.

Thompson v Bank, 207-786; 223 NW 517; 31 NCCA 493

Officer acting in private and personal matter. The acts of an officer of a bank, tho he be a managing officer, in receiving the funds of a relative, and in managing the investment thereof, purely as a personal matter between himself and said relative, imposes no obligation on the bank, even tho the funds are carried on the books of the bank as a matter of convenient bookkeeping. It follows that, upon the insolvency of the bank, the tender to the relative of the investments belonging to him, and found in the bank, carries down any claim of preferential trust against the bank and its receiver.

Andrew v Bank, 212-649; 235 NW 735

Officers—authority—burden of proof. In an action for preferential payment of funds passing through a bank, the plaintiff, if the issue be raised, has the burden to show that the officer receiving the funds was acting in his official capacity and not in a private capacity.

Andrew v Bank, 212-649; 235 NW 735

Collections—negligence—measure of damages. The measure of damages consequent on the negligent failure of a collecting bank to notify the payee of deposited checks of their nonpayment is not, prima facie, the amount of the checks, but such sum or amount as the payee-plaintiff may be able to prove to a reasonable degree of probability he has lost because he was not promptly notified of the nonpayment—not exceeding the amount of said checks. Substantial but conflicting testimony reviewed and held to present a jury question.

Schooler Motor Co. v Bankers Trust, 216-1147; 247 NW 628

9163 Directors—citizenship.

Insolvency—knowledge of officers presumed. Principle reaffirmed that for many purposes the managing officers of a bank will be conclusively presumed to have knowledge of the insolvent condition of their bank.

Leach v Beazley, 201-337; 207 NW 374

Evidence insufficient to establish relation. Agency arises out of contract, express or implied. Stockholder of bank held not bound by purchase of stock for him by cashier, and charging his account therefor, in view of showing as to cashier's authority.

Andrew v Bank, (NOR); 239 NW 551

Authority to sell realty—jury question. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether the cashier of a savings bank had been given actual authority by the board of directors to sell certain real estate belonging to the bank.

Chismore v Bank, 221-1256; 268 NW 137

Cashier—nonimplied authority. A five-year contract involving an expenditure of $500 for advertising a small village bank in a bank directory is not an ordinary contract within the duties of the cashier, but an extraordinary one requiring the authority of the board of directors in order to bind the bank.

Ashland Corp. v Bank, 216-780; 248 NW 336

Director—violation of trust in re tax deed. A director of a bank may not, for his own personal enrichment, take assignment of a tax sale certificate covering land on which the bank of which he is director holds a first mortgage lien, and take tax deed under such certificate. Such deed will, on timely action and proper proof, be set aside and the bank, or its legal representative in case of insolvency, accorded the right to redeem from the tax sale.

Bates v Pabst, 223-534; 273 NW 151

9169 Officers and employees—bonds.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op May 10, '39

Authority. An agreement by the president of a bank to pay the note of another party to the bank does not preclude the bank from maintaining an action against the maker of the note, it appearing that the transaction between the president and the maker of the note was purely personal, and was concerning a matter in which the bank had no interest.

McRoberts v Ordway, 206-947; 221 NW 507

Cashier's authority. The cashier of a state bank has no authority to bind the bank by representations to a bank director as to the value of bank assets personally taken over by the director and replaced by the director's personal promissory note.

Andrew v Shimerda, 218-27; 253 NW 845

Authority—presumption. The cashier and general manager of a private bank will be presumed to have authority to enter into a contract of rescission relative to the indorsement of negotiable paper.

Runge v Benton, 205-845; 216 NW 737

Estoppel to dispute president's authority. A bank may not dispute the authority of its president in making or causing to be made an unauthorized charge against a depositor's account, and at the same time claim the benefit of the charge.

Dow v Bank, 202-594; 210 NW 815

Inactive president. The president of an insolvent bank cannot escape the legal consequence of her trusteeship because she was inactive and permitted most of the business to be transacted by other officers.

Andrew v Bank, 207-386; 221 NW 954

Officers and agents—duty to protect assets—filing probate claim. A duty is imposed on bank officers and directors to file a claim against the estate of a deceased bank director when the bank's bills receivable are covered by a guaranty agreement executed by such deceased director.

In re Sterner, 224-617; 278 NW 216

Sale of entire assets of bank.

Oskaloosa Bk. v Bank, 205-1351; 219 NW 530; 60 ALR 1204

Responsibility for worthless loans. The president of a bank is personally liable to the bank for loaning the funds of the bank to persons known by him to be financially irresponsible, and especially so when he secures the approval of the directors as to such loans on the repeated assurance that he is back of said loans and will see that they are paid.

Farmers Bk. v Kaufmann, 201-651; 207 NW 764

Investment for customer—burden of proof. A customer who seeks to hold a bank liable for an investment made for and on his behalf has the burden to show that the officers of the bank through whom he dealt were acting for the bank, and not in their individual or private capacity.

Mehaffy v Bank, 210-116; 230 NW 557; 31 NCCA 728

Guaranty of described bank notes—erroneous description—effect. An officer of a bank who, on demand of the state banking department, guarantees in writing the payment of certain separately described bills receivable belonging to the bank, is not liable on a bill receivable which does not strictly correspond to that described in the guaranty. So held where the difference between the bill receivable in the bank and that described in the guaranty was (1) as to amount, or (2) as to name of debtor, or (3) as to the aggregate amount of several bills receivable.

Andrew v Austin, 213-963; 232 NW 79

Fidelity required—violation. The scrupulous fidelity required by law of an agent to his principal is such that one holding the position of vice president and general manager of a bank and who is personally liable as surety on a discounted promissory note, held by the bank as part of its assets, may not cancel his said liability by the simple expedient of surrendering said note to the principal makers thereof and accepting in renewal a new note executed by all the original parties except himself as surety.

Clapp v Wallace, 221-672; 266 NW 493

Fraudulent abstraction of assets. The president of a bank who, knowing that the bank is insolvent, takes the promissory note of the bank for the amount of her personal deposit plus the amount of an actual loan to the bank, will not be permitted to take and retain assets of the bank as collateral security for the payment of the note, except insofar as said note represents said loan.

Andrew v Bank, 207-386; 221 NW 954

Cashier's shortage—acceptance of benefits.
Community Bk. v Gaughen, 228- ; 289
NW 727

Directors — nonviolation of trust relationship. A bank director who, while the bank is a going concern but allegedly insolvent, transfers and sells his certificate of deposit in the bank to the president thereof, and long subsequent thereto receives payment therefor from said president, or who, under the same conditions, transfers a like certificate to another bank and receives a new certificate in such other bank—the transferred certificate in each instance being promptly cashed by the issuing bank—violates no trust duty which he owes to his bank or to the depositors thereof, there being no evidence whatever that either transaction was other than one in the ordinary course of business.

Andrew v Kelly, 215-408; 245 NW 755; 84 ALR 1488

9175 Voting of stock—stockholder disqualified.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 76, 351

9176 Deposits.

General deposit. The depositing in a bank of money and checks which are at once entered upon the customer's pass book with right to immediately draw against the amount constitutes a general deposit.

Andrew v Bank, 204-1190; 216 NW 723

General deposit—effect. A general deposit of money in a bank necessarily passes to the bank title to the money.

Andrew v Bank, 205-872; 219 NW 62

Deposits — general (?) or special (?). Whether a bank deposit be general or special necessarily depends on the use to which the depositor puts it. Evidence held to show that a deposit was general.

Andrew v Bank, 218-489; 255 NW 871

Deposits—application to debt due bank. The fact that a bank agreed to carry and did carry a portion of a deposit as a special deposit, for the purpose of paying certain contingent prizes offered by the depositor in his business, does not deprive the bank of the right to apply said special deposit on its matured claim against the depositor—subject, of course, to the rights of the prize winners, if any.

Peterson v Bank & Trust, 219-699; 259 NW 199

Deposits received on condition—violation—effect. A bank which receives cash, checks, and notes on the agreed condition that said receipts will be held intact, and not placed in the general assets of the bank, and will be returned intact on the happening of a named event, must respect and comply with the condition, even tho at the time the bank has enforceable financial obligations against the parties delivering the property. And, in case of violation of the condition and in case of insolvency, the claimants will be entitled to an order on the receiver for restitution, or for preferred payment out of the funds on hand at the time of insolvency, or for such other relief as will be equitable and possible under the circumstances.

Bank deposit for particular purpose. A trust fund is created by depositing money in a bank with the definite understanding and agreement at the time between the depositor and the bank that said deposit is for the specific purpose of paying a certain check thereafter to be drawn in a named amount.

Townsend v Bank, 212-1078; 237 NW 356

Deposit account for contest winners—non-trust. A "special account" is not a "special deposit" and does not change the relationship of debtor and creditor existing between a corporation and its banker and does not constitute a trust for the benefit of undetermined contest winners, who, however, had they been so determined, would merely have a prior lien on said deposit.

Bielen v Bank, 224-19; 276 NW 25

Deposit may constitute loan. A deposit of money in a bank for a fixed period of time constitutes a loan.

In re Fahlin, 218-121; 254 NW 296

Bank deposits bonded—time deposits excluded—nonliability. A surety on a bond covering bank deposits, but excluding "indebtedness not subject at all times to immediate withdrawal", held not liable for amount of depositor's savings account, where depositor also had checking account and bank's bylaws reserved right to notice of withdrawals of savings deposits as provided by state statute.

U. S. Guarantee Co. v Walsh Const. Co., 67 F 2d, 679

Title to deposited drafts. The act of a consignor in drawing against a consignee a draft (with bill of lading attached) in favor of a bank, and depositing the same in said bank and receiving credit on his checking account to the full amount thereof, constitutes the bank the unqualified owner of the draft and of the proceeds thereof, notwithstanding the fact that at a later time the consignor recognized the right of the consignee-drawee to a reduction on the draft, and requested the bank to make such reduction, and the bank voluntarily complied with the request.

Dubuque Fruit Co. v Emerson & Co., 201-129; 206 NW 672

Termination of trust relationship. Where a bank deposit was made for the sole purpose of enabling the depositor to procure a certified check for use in bidding on a public improvement, with the understanding that if the depositor was not awarded the contract he would surrender the certified check and receive a draft for the amount of the deposit, held, that no trust relationship existed after the depositor surrendered his certified check and in return received a draft for the amount of his deposit.

Andrew v Bank, 215-1336; 245 NW 226

Management and disposal of trust property—legal deposit (?) or illegal investment (?). A deposit by a trustee of trust funds in a savings bank, at a stated rate of interest but with the legal right to withdraw said deposit at any time, does not constitute an "investment" within the meaning of §12772, C., '31.

In re Moylan, 219-624; 258 NW 766

Trusts—pleading—essential allegation. In an action to establish a bank deposit as a trust fund, an allegation as to the trust character of the deposit is all-essential.

Peterson v Bank & Trust, 219-699; 259 NW 199

Change in relation between bank and depositor. A bank depositor wholly ceases to be the creditor of the bank when he turns over his deposit to one of the officers of the bank in furtherance of a personal undertaking in which the bank has no interest whatever.

Leach v Bank, 200-954; 205 NW 790

Wrongful deposit of public funds—preference. A deposit in a bank of municipal pension funds (police and firemen) under, conditions which deprive the trustees of the power to immediately withdraw said funds is wrongful, and being wrongful the trustees do not lose title to said funds. It follows that in case the bank becomes insolvent, the deposit is entitled to preferential payment from the cash on hand at the time of insolvency.

Andrew v Bank, 222-881; 270 NW 465

Nonpreferential deposits. Record reviewed and held that bank deposits in an insolvent bank were attended by no circumstances that justified a preference in payment.

Bates v Bank, 222-1323; 271 NW 638

Nonright to charge back. A bank which credits its depositor with the amount of a check on another bank, and on clearance surrenders such check to the drawee-bank, and receives in payment thereof the drawee's draft, may not, on the nonpayment of the draft, charge back to the depositor any part of said check, even tho said bank had posted a rule authorizing it so to do, but of which rule the depositor had no knowledge.

Virtue v Bank, 205-392; 218 NW 58; 31 NCCA 461

Deposits—best and secondary evidence. The books of a bank constitute the best evidence of the deposits of estate funds by the administrator—not what appears to be deposit slips and letters of the bank relative thereto.

Varga v Guar. Co., 215-499; 245 NW 765

Bank charged with converted receipts.

Peterson v Citizens Bk., 228- ; 290 NW 546

9177 Payment.

Discussion. See 2 ILB 36—Deposits—unmatured claims set off

Fictitious payee. The absolute duty of a bank, before it pays its depositor's check, to know that the payee's indorsement is genuine, and to pay only on such genuine indorsement, applies to a check which the depositor has unwittingly and without negligence made payable to a fictitious person.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

Unintended payee. When a check is unwittingly made payable to a fictitious payee, and delivered to the assumed and supposed agent of such fictitious payee, and the supposed agent indorses the check in the name of the payee and receives the money thereon, it may not be said that the money was paid to the very person to whom the drawer intended it to be paid.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

Unintended payee. The drawer of a check who unwittingly and without negligence makes it payable to a fictitious person to whom he supposed he was making a loan may not be said to have intended payment to be made to the supposed agent of the named payee (to whom it was delivered) because said supposed agent was, without the knowledge of said drawer, doing business in the name of such fictitious payee.

McCornack v Bank, 203-877; 211 NW 561

Payment on forged indorsement. Evidence reviewed, in an action by a depositor against a bank to recover the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement and charged to the depositor's account, and held amply to support a finding that the depositor was not guilty of any negligence which prejudiced the bank.

McCornack v Bank, 207-274; 222 NW 851

Negligence not imputable to state. Negligence and laches of public officers in the handling of state funds are not imputable to the state; for instance, in an action to recover from a drawee-bank the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement of a check drawn by a county treasurer against state school funds on deposit with said drawee, it is no defense that the county treasurer was negligent in drawing or delivering the check, or that county officers generally were negligent in not making early discovery of the forged indorsement, and notifying the drawee accordingly.

New Amst. Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Inadvertently paid check. A drawee of a check may recover of the payee the amount inadvertently paid on the check at a time when the payee knew that the drawer had no funds on deposit with the drawee—knew that the drawer had gone into the hands of a receiver and that his deposit had been transferred to the receiver.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Reg. Co., 200-1014; 205 NW 838

Excessive interest-bearing certificates. A certificate of deposit issued by a savings bank is not illegal because made to draw an apparently very high rate of interest, to wit, seven and one-half percent, nor because part of the interest is paid the depositor in advance, the directors never having fixed any rate of interest on such certificates.

See Partch v Krogman, 202-524; 210 NW 612

Interest paid in advance—receivership—effect. In case interest is paid a depositor in advance, the termination of the accrual of all interest by the appointment of a receiver necessitates the charging of the deposit with the amount of unearned interest.

Murray v Bank, 201-1325; 207 NW 781

Pass book—ambiguity—parol to explain. A pass book issued by a savings bank to a depositor and containing certain printed provisions governing deposits, but silent as to the date when the deposit was payable, and carrying the indorsement "Maytag Employee's Special Savings Account", creates such ambiguity (assuming that the printed provisions embraced the full agreement) as to justify the reception of parol evidence to explain the ambiguity.

Popofsky v Wearmouth, 216-114; 248 NW 358

See In re Olson, 206-706; 219 NW 401

Manipulation of deposit not constituting payment. Evidence relative to the surrender by a depositor to his bank of certificates of deposit issued by the bank, reviewed and held not to reveal payment of said certificates; also held that a subsequently dated certificate of deposit issued by the bank to said depositor was intended to be, and was, but a continuation of the former unpaid deposit.

Certificate of deposit—permissible impairment. A bank depositor may not successfully claim that his certificate of deposit was unconstitutionally impaired by a later, state-approved, good-faith, bank reorganization (in which he did not join) under which all claimants (claims over $10) were given equal but less favorable terms of payment than their contracts originally contemplated, when, at the time of his deposit, the statute law contemplated and substantially provided for such reorganization and change in terms of payment; and if the actual reorganization was effected under later statutes amplifying the said former ones, the answer is that he was dealing with a quasi-public corporation, and that his contract of deposit must reasonably yield to the police power in the interest of the public generally, especially in an emergency resulting from a great financial depression.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Unauthorized charge against deposit. A bank must pay out its depositors' funds strictly as directed by the depositor. Evidence reviewed, relative to an unauthorized charge against a deposit, and held that the depositor was not estopped to question such charge, nor was he negligent in reference thereto, nor had he ratified said charge.

Dow v Bank, 202-594; 210 NW 815

Unauthorized payment. A depositor is not bound to anticipate that his banker will wrongfully make payment from the deposit, and is under no obligation to call for his pass book in order to determine whether such payment has been made.

Acquiescence in bank statements—effect. State Bank v Cooper, 201-225; 205 NW 333

9178 Regulations—posting.

Failure to post—effect. The rules and regulations relative to the payment by a bank of deposits are not conspicuously posted in the office of the bank, as required by statute, yet, if the depositor in question has personal knowledge of the unposted rules, he will be bound thereby.

Andrew v Bank, 222-881; 270 NW 465

Deposits—nonright to charge back. A bank which credits its depositor with the amount of a check on another bank, and on clearance surrenders such check to the drawee-bank, and receives in payment thereof the drawee's draft, may not, on the nonpayment of the draft, charge back to the depositor any part of said check, even tho said bank had posted a rule authorizing it so to do, but the depositor had no knowledge of this rule.

9179 Notice of withdrawal.

Deposits payable on demand—exception. A deposit of trust funds in a savings bank, tho at a stated rate of interest, is legally withdrawable at the pleasure of the trustee unless the bank, prior to the deposit, has adopted and promulgated a rule requiring a 60-day notice of withdrawal as authorized by this section.

In re Moylan, 219-624; 258 NW 766

Bank deposits bonded—time deposits excluded—nonliability. A surety on a bond covering bank deposits, but excluding "indebtedness not subject at all times to immediate withdrawal", held not liable for amount of depositor's savings account, where depositor also had checking account and bank's bylaws reserved right to notice of withdrawals of savings deposits as provided by state statute.

U. S. Guarantee Co. v Walsh Const. Co., 67 F 2d, 679

9181 Demand certificates.

Authority to issue. The issuance of time certificates of deposit by savings banks is clearly contemplated by our statutes.

Murray v Bank, 201-1325; 207 NW 781

Wrongful issuance—timely repudiation. A party to whom a bank, without authority, has issued a certificate of deposit in payment of a claim due from the bank, may not be deemed estopped to repudiate such certificate, or be deemed to have ratified the issuance of such certificate, when his repudiation was reasonably prompt, and when no injury resulted to the bank or to its receiver from any delay in repudiating.

Andrew v Bank, 217-232; 251 NW 860

Illegal issuance. Certificates of deposit issued by a savings bank in payment or exchange for promissory notes when the bank has no funds with which to pay for the notes are absolutely void in the hands of any holder.

Sweet v Bank, 200-895; 205 NW 470

9183 Investment of funds.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 191; '34 AG Op 228, 645

Unlawful investment—bank's general right to set-off. The fact that a bank unlawfully invests its funds in securities not permitted by law as proper bank investments does not prevent the receiver of the bank from offsetting the amount of said securities against the deposit of the party who is obligated to pay said securities; and this is true even tho the bank was a mortgagee for the benefit of holders generally of said securities.

Andrew v Bank, 218-489; 255 NW 871

9183.3 Investments by state banks and trust companies.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 228

9184 Commercial paper.

Discussion. See 16 ILR 85—Drafts taken in payment of checks; 19 ILR 338—Bank as purchaser of paper

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 158; '34 AG Op 228

Public policy—agreement to repurchase note and mortgage. A contract on the part of a trust company to repurchase a note and mortgage sold by it is not against public policy, it appearing that the company was organized to deal in commercial paper and, inter alia, to receive time deposits and issue drafts on its depositories.

Hawkeye Ins. v Cent. Trust, 210-284; 227 NW 637

Rights and liabilities on indorsement or transfer—negotiable certificate of deposit as payment. A bank which issues and delivers its negotiable certificate of deposit in exchange for an unmatured negotiable promissory note then and thereby effects full payment for the note, within the meaning of the negotiable instrument law.

People's Bank v Smith, 210-136; 230 NW 565; 69 ALR 399

Insolvency—right to transfer note. A bank which is a going concern, but insolvent, and known by all its officers to be insolvent, may, for full value, validly transfer a promissory note held by it, to a transferee who knows of such insolvency, even tho the incidental effect of such transfer may be to deprive the maker of said note of his right to offset against said note the amount of his deposit in said insolvent bank at the time of the transfer.

Ottumwa Bank v Crawford, 215-1386; 244 NW 674

Issuance of certificate of deposit in payment of note—validity. A certificate of deposit issued by a savings bank in payment of a negotiable promissory note constitutes a payment of value for the note, it appearing that the bank at the time had ample funds on hand for the purchase of said note; and this is true tho the directors had never authorized the purchase in such manner.

Andrew v Peterson, 214-582; 243 NW 340

Bank's obligation on depositor's check. A bank which agrees to pay checks issued from time to time by an insolvent livestock dealer for stock purchased, and to reimburse itself from the sight drafts drawn from time to time by the dealer when reselling the stock, and which, for a time, carries out the arrangement and encourages its continuance, and, in part, applies the proceeds of such sight drafts to the discharge of other obligations of the dealer in which the bank is financially interested, may not, after taking over sight drafts covering certain resales with knowledge that unpaid checks for said stock were outstanding, apply the proceeds of said drafts to an overdraft against the dealer, and thereby shift the loss to the unpaid check holder. On the contrary, the bank must be held, impliedly, to have agreed to loan to the dealer money sufficient to pay said outstanding checks. In other words the bank is obligated to pay said checks.

Pascoe v Bank, 217-205; 251 NW 63

Payment of funds to one with apparent authority to collect. When the plaintiff gave a third party his passbook to be used to withdraw an account from an Italian bank, and the third party used the passbook to secure a personal note given to the defendant bank through which the exchange transaction was made, the bank was not liable for using the funds received from the Italian bank as payment of the note, when it might have thought that the note was given to obtain an advance for the plaintiff, and had no knowledge of wrongdoing, and previous transactions indicated an apparent authority to transact the business in such manner.

Matalone v Bank, 226-1031; 285 NW 648

9192 Shares—transfers.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 272; '34 AG Op 710

Guaranty—long-continued mutual construction. The mutual construction which parties have for years placed on a guaranty against loss on bank stock, arising from the uncollectibility of bank loans, is very, very influential with the court, especially when the definite and comprehensive terms of the guaranty support said mutual construction.

Nelson v Hamilton, 213-1231; 240 NW 738

Stock, subscription for—payment—trust relation. One who subscribes for corporate shares of stock, pays therefor, and receives a valid receipt evidencing such payment may not claim that he continued to retain title to the money because no certificate of stock was issued to him.

Andrew v Bank, 219-921; 258 NW 911

Issuance of stock—estoppel. One, who has explicit knowledge of the facts under which corporate shares of stock were issued to him and later accepts and retains a dividend paid on the stock, will not, at least as against creditors of the corporation, be heard to say that the stock was improperly issued to him.

Andrew v Bank, 219-939; 258 NW 925

Double liability—bank official's wife—stock transfer to husband. Where a wife transfers her bank stock to her husband, a bank officer, who informed other bank officials thereof, who contributed to the insolvent bank on a basis including this stock and who personally, instead of by proxy as previously, voted this stock, he was in fact the actual owner of bank stock, even tho it had not been transferred to him on the bank's books, and the double liability assessment is not recoverable from the wife.

9193 Deposits—to whom payable.

Relation between bank and depositor. Principle reaffirmed that the deposit of money in a bank creates the relation of debtor and creditor, and not that of borrower and lender.

Leach v Beazley, 201-337; 207 NW 374

Deposit may constitute loan. A deposit of money in a bank for a fixed period of time constitutes a loan.

In re Fahlin, 218-121; 254 NW 296

General deposit—effect. A general deposit of money in a bank necessarily passes to the bank title to the money.

Andrew v Bank, 205-872; 219 NW 62

What constitutes general deposit. A general, and not a special or specific, deposit is shown by proof that a buyer and shipper of stock (who was also engaged in two other different lines of business) had but one bank deposit account, and that in buying stock he simply delivered his bank check to the seller, and then, as a general course of business, shipped the stock in the name of his bank, which thereupon at his direction, drew on the consignee, and credited the shipper's deposit with the amount of the draft, thereby creating a deposit credit out of which any and all checks issued by the shipper, whether for stock purchases or otherwise, would be paid, if and when presented; and this is true even tho the bank knew that the particular purpose in the mind of the shipper was to protect his outstanding checks for purchases of stock.

Andrew v Bank, 205-888; 219 NW 53

Deposits — general (?) or special (?). Whether a bank deposit be general or special necessarily depends on the use to which the depositor puts it.

Andrew v Bank, 218-489; 255 NW 871

Presumption. Deposits are presumed to be general, in the absence of testimony to the contrary.

Andrew v Bank, 205-872; 219 NW 62

Pension money as special or specific deposit. A deposit in a bank may not be deemed either a "special" or a "specific" deposit, and therefore entitled to a preference in payment, from the naked fact that the subject-matter of the deposit was pension money of the depositor's, especially when the deposit was evidenced by a time certificate.

Special deposit superior to garnishment. Money deposited or caused to be deposited by a depositor in a bank for the sole use and benefit of a bona fide creditor of the depositor, and under an agreement to that effect between the depositor and said creditor, of which arrangement the bank had full knowledge, constitutes a special deposit. It follows that a subsequent garnishment of the fund is subject to the prior rights of the creditor for whom the deposit was made.

Hamilton v Imes, 216-855; 249 NW 135

Special deposits—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to show that a deposit was made for the special purpose of meeting payment on a particular draft, or was made under such circumstances that the issuance of the draft effected a pro tanto equitable assignment of the deposit.

Heckman v Bank, 208-322; 223 NW 164

Certificate of deposit. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a time certificate of deposit was accompanied by a collateral oral agreement between the depositor and the bank to the effect that the bank would pay the certificate on demand.

See Popofsky v Wearmouth, 216-114; 248 NW 358

Purchase price—escrow deposit—ownership. The purchaser of land who, on the day of performance, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the vendor, and pending the perfecting and delivering of the deed, goes into possession, and deposits the purchase money in a bank, on condition that it be paid to the vendor when the deed is perfected and delivered, and himself retains the evidence of such deposit until he receives the deed, must be held to be the owner of the deposit and to suffer the loss which results from the subsequently discovered fact that the bank, immediately after receiving the deposit, dissipated it, the bank being then, without the knowledge of both parties, insolvent.

Bolte v Schenk, 205-834; 210 NW 797

Deposits—stated account. Principle reaffirmed that the monthly and customary statement of a bank to its customer of the condition of the customer's account becomes an account stated after the lapse of a reasonable time without objection by the customer.

Pierce & Gamet v Bank, 213-1388; 239 NW 580

Certificate of deposit not collected from insolvent bank—executor a bank director. A finding by the trial court that loss to an estate through the failure to collect on a certificate of deposit belonging to the estate was not caused by the fault of the executor was sustained by evidence that the executor who was a director of the bank on which the certificate was drawn, but took no active part in the management of the bank and did not know it was insolvent, had properly presented the certificate for payment and had been refused because of the insolvency of the bank.

In re Smith, 228- ; 289 NW 694

Administrator—surety—liability—disobeying order of court. An administrator and the surety on his bond are liable for a shortage in estate funds occasioned by the failure of the administrator's own private bank in which the funds were deposited, the administrator having been ordered by the court prior to the insolvency of said bank to remove the funds to another depository, and, while able to comply with said order, had neglected so to do.

In re Kendrick, 214-873; 243 NW 168

Administrator—disobeying order of court—unallowable defense. An administrator who disobeys an order of court as to the bank in which he should deposit estate funds may not, in case of loss, plead in defense that, had he complied with the order, his own private bank in which the funds in fact were on deposit would have been rendered insolvent.

Administrator's bank account—decedent's debt—no offset. Receiver of insolvent bank held unauthorized to set off amount of checking account standing in name of administrator against indebtedness owing to bank by intestate where, immediately on appointment of administrator, checking account passed to administrator who added to account by deposits at various times and drew checks against account until closing of bank.

In re Schwarting, (NOR); 257 NW 189

Right to offset on debt to bank. A bank may apply the deposit of a deceased depositor on the promissory note of the depositor to the bank, even tho such note is barred by the statute of limitation.

Merritt v Peterson, 208-672; 222 NW 853

Deposits by guardian without order of court—effect. A deposit in a bank by a guardian of guardianship funds, as a loan, without a directing or approving order of court, is wrongful, and the bank at once becomes a trustee of the fund for the benefit of the ward.

Andrew v Bank, 207-394; 223 NW 249

Guardian—proper plaintiff. The guardian is the proper plaintiff in an action to recover the property of the minor, even tho the matter is one in which the minor had assumed to act for himself.

McFerren v Bank, 214-198; 238 NW 914

Payment of funds to one with apparent authority to collect. When the plaintiff gave a third party his passbook to be used to withdraw an account from an Italian bank, and the third party used the passbook to secure a personal note given to the defendant bank through which the exchange transaction was made, the bank was not liable for using the funds received from the Italian bank as payment of the note, when it might have thought that the note was given to obtain an advance for the plaintiff, and had no knowledge of wrongdoing, and previous transactions indicated an apparent authority to transact the business in such manner.

Matalone v Bank, 226-1031; 285 NW 648

Forged indorsement—burden of proof. A drawee-bank, when sued for paying a check on a forged indorsement, must affirmatively establish prejudice as a result of the failure of the drawer to give notice of the forged indorsement upon the discovery thereof.

New Amst. Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Fraudulent dissipation—nonliability of bank. A bank is not responsible to its depositor for the fraudulent conduct of the depositor's employee, aided by an employee of the bank, in fraudulently withdrawing from the bank the funds of the depositor, on checks which the depositor's employee had specific written authority to draw to himself personally, when the bank had no knowledge or reason to know of any of said wrongdoings.

Pierce & Gamet v Bank, 213-1388; 239 NW 580

Wrongful issuance of certificate—repudiation. A party to whom a bank, without authority, has issued a certificate of deposit, in payment of a claim due from the bank, may not be deemed estopped to repudiate such certificate, or be deemed to have ratified the issuance of such certificate, when his repudiation was reasonably prompt, and when no injury resulted to the bank or to its receiver from any delay in repudiating.

Andrew v Bank, 217-232; 251 NW 860

Dissolution — nonpreference in deposits. Principle reaffirmed that, in the settlement of the affairs of an insolvent state bank, the deposit of a municipal corporation has no preference over other deposits. (§9239, C., '24.)

Leach v Bank, 201-346; 207 NW 331

Insolvency—claims — general deposit—non-trust relationship. Where receipts from sale of livestock in Chicago were remitted to local bank, which in turn entered the remittance as a deposit for local livestock shipping association, held that association was not entitled to preference on its claim in receivership proceeding of the local bank, there being no element of trust involved in the transaction and the fund being simply a general deposit.

Leach v Bank, (NOR); 212 NW 390

Notice—coparties. In an action by a municipality against the receiver of an insolvent bank and its surety, to obtain a preference in the payment of the municipal deposit, an appeal from the decree granting the prayer on the plea of both plaintiff and the surety will be dismissed when no notice of appeal is had upon the surety.

Independent Dist. v Bank, 204-1; 213 NW 397

Waiver by depositors—effect on nonsigners. The act of a majority of the depositors of a bank (owning a large majority of the deposits) in signing waivers deferring payment of their deposits, in order to preserve the bank as a going concern, cannot be deemed the legal equivalent of an express agreement on their part that the depositors who do not sign such waivers shall be paid in full before such signers are paid; nor can such signing be deemed prejudicial to the nonsigners; nor, by such signing, can said signers be deemed to have lost their status as depositors and thereby become mere lenders of money to the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 216-739; 249 NW 768; 88 ALR 1003

Bank deposits bonded—time deposits excluded—nonliability. A surety on a bond covering bank deposits, but excluding "indebtedness not subject at all times to immediate withdrawal", held not liable for amount of depositor's savings account, where depositor also had checking account and bank's bylaws reserved right to notice of withdrawals of savings deposits as provided by state statute.

9199 Pre-existing obligations.

Dissolution—wholesale transfer of assets—right of creditors. A good-faith transfer by a going bank of substantially all its assets, and a good-faith acceptance of such transfer by the transferee under an agreement by the transferee to pay all record depositors, do not impose on the transferee liability to pay a nonrecord depositor when the transferred assets prove insufficient to pay the record depositors, and the transferor is not shown to have been insolvent at the time of the transfer.

Garvey v Trust Co., 214-401; 239 NW 518

CHAPTER 414

STATE BANKS

9202 "State banks" defined.

Insolvency—right to transfer note. A bank which is a going concern, but insolvent, and known by all its officers to be insolvent, may, for full value, validly transfer a promissory note held by it, to a transferee who knows of such insolvency, even tho the incidental effect of such transfer may be to deprive the maker of said note of his right to offset against said note the amount of his deposit in said insolvent bank at the time of the transfer.

Ottumwa Bank v Crawford, 215-1386; 244 NW 674

Deposits received on condition—violation—effect. A bank which receives cash, checks, and notes on the agreed condition that said receipts will be held intact, and not placed in the general assets of the bank, and will be returned intact on the happening of a named event, must respect and comply with the condition, even tho at the time the bank has enforceable financial obligations against the parties delivering the property. And, in case of violation of the condition and in case of insolvency, the claimants will be entitled to an order on the receiver for restitution, or for preferred payment out of the funds on hand at the time of insolvency, or for such other relief as will be equitable and possible under the circumstances.

Andrew v Bank, 218-1313; 256 NW 292

Certificate of deposit—permissible impairment. A bank depositor may not successfully claim that his certificate of deposit was unconstitutionally impaired by a later, state-approved, good-faith, bank reorganization (in which he did not join) under which all claimants (claims over $10) were given equal but less favorable terms of payment than their contracts originally contemplated, when, at the time of his deposit, the statute law contemplated and substantially provided for such reorganization and change in terms of payment; and if the actual reorganization was effected under later statutes amplifying the said former ones, the answer is that he was dealing with a quasi-public corporation, and that his contract of deposit must reasonably yield to the police power in the interest of the public generally, especially in an emergency resulting from a great financial depression.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Transfer of stock after expiration of charter—effect. When the charter of a bank expires, the legal existence of the corporation terminates. Likewise terminates the legal right to transfer the stock in such sense that the transferor ceases to be a stockholder.

9203 Other use of name prohibited.

9204 Incorporation — articles — contents.

Right to question corporate management. The corporate management of a corporation may not be questioned by stockholders who became such subsequent to the acts in question.

Pomeroy v Bank, 203-524; 211 NW 219

Proof of incorporation. A copy of the articles of incorporation of a banking corporation, duly certified by the secretary of state, is sufficient proof of such incorporation.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

Authority—presumption. The cashier and general manager of a private bank will be presumed to have authority to enter into a contract of rescission relative to the indorsement of negotiable paper.

Runge v Benton, 205-845; 216 NW 737

Joint stock land banks—legal status. Joint stock land banks, tho organized under federal statutes, are privately owned corporations, organized for profit to their stockholders through the business of making loans on farm mortgages, are not governmental instrumentalities, and are suable in the proper state courts.

Higdon v Bank, 223-57; 272 NW 93

Officers—authority—burden of proof. In an action for preferential payment of funds passing through a bank, the plaintiff, if the issue be raised, has the burden to show that the officer receiving the funds was acting in his official capacity and not in a private capacity.

Andrew v Bank, 212-649; 235 NW 735

Officer acting in private and personal matter. The acts of an officer of a bank, tho he be a managing officer, in receiving the funds of a relative, and in managing the investment thereof, purely as a personal matter between himself and said relative, imposes no obligation on the bank, even tho the funds are carried on the books of the bank as a matter of convenient bookkeeping. It follows that, upon the insolvency of the bank, the tender to the relative of the investments belonging to him, and found in the bank, carries down any claim of preferential trust against the bank and its receiver.

Andrew v Bank, 212-649; 235 NW 735

Release or subordination of mortgage—authority of president. A corporation is bound by the act of its president in subordinating its mortgage to another mortgage, (1) when the president is expressly authorized by the articles of incorporation to release and satisfy such mortgages, (2) when the president first executed, on adequate consideration, a written release and subordination without the corporate seal being attached, and later confirmed said act by a new release and subordination with said seal attached, and (3) when the corporation at all times intended so to subordinate its mortgage.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 710

Issuance of stock—estoppel to question. One, who has explicit knowledge of the facts under which corporate shares of stock were issued to him and later accepts and retains a dividend paid on the stock, will not, at least as against creditors of the corporation, be heard to say that the stock was improperly issued to him.

Andrew v Bank, 219-939; 258 NW 925

Subscription for—payment—trust relation. One who subscribes for corporate shares of stock, pays therefor, and receives a valid receipt evidencing such payment may not claim that he continued to retain title to the money because no certificate of stock was issued to him.

9210 Directors.

Cashier—nonimplied authority. A 5-year contract involving an expenditure of $500 for advertising a small village bank in a bank directory is not an ordinary contract within the duties of the cashier, but an extraordinary one requiring the authority of the board of directors in order to bind the bank.

Ashland Towson v Bank, 216-780; 248 NW 336

Corporate contract—unallowable rescission. A stockholder may not rescind a contract entered into by the corporation of which he is a stockholder and another corporation.

Andrew v Bank, 219-921; 258 NW 911

Directors—nonliability. The director of a corporation is not liable, to a person dealing with the corporation, for mere nonfeasance—naked inaction as a director. So held where the director of a bank took no action with reference to the practice of the bank in commingling trust funds with the general funds of the corporation.

Proksch v Bettendorf, 218-1376; 257 NW 383; 38 NCCA 292

Directors—nonviolation of trust relationship. A bank director who, while the bank is a going concern but allegedly insolvent, transfers and sells his certificate of deposit in the bank to the president thereof, and long subsequent thereto receives payment therefor from said president, or who, under the same conditions, transfers a like certificate to another bank and receives a new certificate in such other bank,—the transferred certificate in each instance being promptly cashed by the issuing bank,—violates no trust duty which he owes to his bank or to the depositors thereof, there being no evidence whatever that either transaction was other than one in the ordinary course of business.

Andrew v Kelly, 215-408; 245 NW 755; 84 ALR 1488

Director—violation of trust in re tax deed. A director of a bank may not, for his own personal enrichment, take assignment of a tax sale certificate covering land on which the bank of which he is director holds a first mortgage lien, and take tax deed under such certificate. Such deed will, on timely action and proper proof, be set aside and the bank, or its legal representative in case of insolvency, accorded the right to redeem from the tax sale.

Bates v Pabst, 223-534; 273 NW 151

Fraudulent abstraction of assets. The president of a bank who, knowing that the bank is insolvent, takes the promissory note of the bank for the amount of her personal deposit plus the amount of an actual loan to the bank, will not be permitted to take and retain assets of the bank as collateral security for the payment of the note, except insofar as said note represents said loan.

Andrew v Bank, 207-386; 221 NW 954

Inactive president. The president of an insolvent bank cannot escape the legal consequence of her trusteeship because she was inactive and permitted most of the business to be transacted by other officers.

Andrew v Bank, 207-386; 221 NW 954

Liability of bank president. The board of directors of a state bank, not the president of the bank, is the statutory governing body of the bank. Evidence reviewed in detail and held to reveal no neglect of the president which rendered him personally liable to the bank for damages suffered by the bank consequent on customers being permitted, to the knowledge of the directors, to overdraw their accounts, it appearing, inter alia, that the president's efforts to prevent such overdrafts were secretly frustrated by other officers of the bank, appointed by the board.

Bates v Seeds, 223-70; 272 NW 515

Right to contract for payment of debts. A good-faith contract by the board of directors of a state bank, for and on behalf of the bank, and providing for the payment of the bank's debts incurred in the operation of the bank, is valid without any approval by the stockholders of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 216-252; 249 NW 352; 89 ALR 783

Sale of entire assets. The board of directors of an insolvent banking corporation which is on the verge of complete financial collapse has power to sell en masse the assets of the corporation without the consent of the stockholders, and especially when the directors own a majority of the stock.

Oskaloosa Bank v Bank, 205-1351; 219 NW 530; 60 ALR 1204

CHAPTER 415

GENERAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO BANKS AND TRUST COMPANIES

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 233; '32 AG Op 46; '34 AG Op 117

9217.2 Directors—eligibility.

Mortgage of director—guaranty by bank. Evidence quite exhaustively reviewed and held insufficient to establish a contract of guaranty of payment by a bank of the personal mortgage of a director.

Lindburg v Engster, 220-1073; 264 NW 31; 116 ALR 591

Knowledge of insolvency—not imputable to nonactive director. Knowledge that a bank is insolvent is not imputed to one who is a director and minor stockholder of the bank, when he takes no active part in its management and has no actual knowledge of the insolvency.

In re Smith, 228- ; 289 NW 694

Certificate of deposit not collected from insolvent bank—executor a bank director. A finding by the trial court that loss to an estate through the failure to collect on a certificate of deposit belonging to the estate was not caused by the fault of the executor was sustained by evidence that the executor who was a director of the bank on which the certificate was drawn, but took no active part in the management of the bank and did not know it was insolvent, had properly presented the certificate for payment and had been refused because of the insolvency of the bank.

9217.3 Bonds of officers and employees.

Director's personal note. The cashier of a state bank has no authority to bind the bank by representations to a bank director as to the value of bank assets personally taken over by the director and replaced by the director's personal promissory note.

Andrew v Shimerda, 218-27; 253 NW 845

Guaranty of described bank notes—erroneous description—effect. An officer of a bank who, on demand of the state banking department, guarantees in writing the payment of certain separately described bills receivable belonging to the bank, is not liable on a bill receivable which does not strictly correspond to that described in the guaranty. So held where the difference between the bill receivable in the bank and that described in the guaranty was (1) as to amount, or (2) as to name of debtor, or (3) as to the aggregate amount of several bills receivable.

Andrew v Austin, 213-963; 232 NW 79

Bank charged with converted receipts.

Peterson v Citizens Bk., 228- ; 290 NW 546

Fidelity required—violation. The scrupulous fidelity required by law of an agent to his principal is such that one holding the position of vice president and general manager of a bank and who is personally liable as surety on a discounted promissory note, held by the bank as part of its assets, may not cancel his said liability by the simple expedient of surrendering said note to the principal makers thereof and accepting in renewal a new note executed by all the original parties except himself as surety.

Unallowable defense. It is no defense on the part of one of two sureties on the bond of a public officer that said officer, while so acting, was also acting as cashier of a bank; that, as cashier, he was short in his account with the bank; that said other surety was also surety on the private bond of the cashier; and that said other surety and said cashier conspired to use and did use the public funds with which to make good the cashier's shortage to the bank.

School Dist. v Sass, 220-1; 261 NW 30

9220 Loans to officers or employees—use of funds.

Oral guaranty by bank of payment of director's mortgage. Testimony that a bank, acting through its board of directors, orally guaranteed the payment of the personal mortgage of one of said directors, is incompetent under the statute of frauds.

9221.1 Unsecured loans—conditions.

Money lent—contract for repayment. One seeking to recover money loaned must prove a contract express or implied for its repayment.

9221.2 Owning or loaning on its own stock—prior lien of bank.

Payment of voluntary assessment on bank stock owned by estate. An administrator is properly given credit for paying a voluntary assessment on bank stock owned by the estate when such payment was in the interest of the estate and was necessary in order to reorganize the bank and to maintain it as a going concern.

9221.3 Loans—conditions—gratuities.

Instruction requested—loan to be approved by loan committee—properly refused. In action on fidelity bond of a bank cashier, a request that the court inform jury that statute required that loans be made by executive officer and not by a loan committee was properly refused, since requirement that loan be approved by loan committee was lawful.

Fidelity Co. v Bates, 76 F 2d, 160

9222 Indebtedness. (Repealed)

Additional annotations. See under §9239

Assumption of liabilities. The written agreement by a bank to take over the assets of an insolvent bank and apparently to assume the payment of all the liabilities of the insolvent will be controlled, in its general terms, by the official bank resolution pertaining to the matter. Held, under this rule, that the assumption in a certain case embraced liabilities appearing only on the books of the insolvent bank.

German Amer. Bank v Bank, 203-276; 211 NW 386

Assumption of mortgage. A bank, as grantee in a deed of conveyance, may validly assume and agree to pay an existing mortgage on the land, it appearing that the board of directors had, with full knowledge of all the facts, formally authorized the receipt of such deed.

Sheley v Engle, 204-1283; 213 NW 617

Assumption of mortgage. The action of the directors of a bank in authorizing the receipt by the bank of a deed "as additional security" does not have the effect of overcoming the effect of a clause in the deed whereby grantee assumed and agreed to pay an existing mortgage on the land, when such clause was inserted in the deed as the result of a valid agreement between the bank and the mortgagor, of which the directors had full knowledge.

Sheley v Engle, 204-1283; 213 NW 617

Change in relation between bank and depositor. A bank depositor wholly ceases to be the creditor of the bank when he turns over his deposit to one of the officers of the bank in furtherance of a personal undertaking in which the bank has no interest whatever.

Leach v Bank, 200-954; 205 NW 790

Issuance of certificate of deposit in payment for note—validity. A certificate of deposit issued by a savings bank in payment of a negotiable promissory note constitutes a payment of value for the note, it appearing that the bank at the time had ample funds on hand for the purchase of said note; and this is true tho the directors had never authorized the purchase in such manner.

Andrew v Peterson, 214-582; 243 NW 340

Nonliability of bank for personal deal of officers. A bank is not responsible for the acts of an officer of the bank in misappropriating the proceeds of a draft when said draft, tho payable to the officer in his official capacity, was received by him, not as an officer of the bank, but in his individual capacity, and in the furtherance of a private transaction between himself and others with whom he was associated.

Security Bk. v Bigelow, 205-695; 216 NW 96

Right to secure deposits. The officers of a savings bank which is a duly selected and acting depository of county funds under a statutory depository bond may, in addition to the security afforded by said previously executed bond, validly transfer to the county, and the county through its fiscal officers may validly accept, notes and mortgages of the bank as additional collateral security for said deposits.

Andrew v Bank, 203-1335; 214 NW 559

Unallowable guaranty. A state bank is wholly without authority to guarantee the payment of a credit which has no relation to the ordinary functions of the bank.

Dewey Wks. v Ryan, 206-1100; 221 NW 800

9222.1 Interest on time deposits.

9222.2 Pledge of bank assets.

Agreement to repurchase—demand for performance unnecessary. When a bank, (1) rediscounts its paper under indorsements "without recourse", but (2) accompanies the indorsement with a formal written agreement to repurchase the said paper on a named date, demand for performance on said date, or on any date, is unnecessary.

Bates v Bank, 219-1358; 261 NW 797

Authority of cashier-director. Authority from the board of directors of a bank to its cashier (who was one of the directors) to secure a loan to the bank and to pledge such securities of the bank's as might be necessary embraces power in the cashier to pledge such securities, not only for the payment of the loan then obtained, but for the payment of a pre-existing indebtedness of the bank's to another party with whom the loaner was affiliated in business, when the cashier-director had full knowledge, prior to obtaining authority to secure the loan, that the loaner would not loan under any other conditions.

Leach v Bank, 206-265; 217 NW 865

Hypothecating assets—legality. The statutory prohibition that no "cashier or other officer or employee" of a state bank shall hypothecate any asset of the bank unless authority so to do is granted at least annually by recorded resolution of the board of directors does not prohibit the board from legally ordering the cashier, with the approval of the superintendent of banking, to hypothecate bank assets in order to secure a legal indebtedness of the bank, even tho no formal, written resolution to that effect was actually passed by the board. (§§9222-c3, 9297, C., '31 [§§9222.3, 9297, C., '39]).

Andrew v Bank, 216-1170; 250 NW 492

Hypothecating assets—legality. The statutory prohibition that no "cashier or other officer or employee" of a state bank shall hypothecate any asset of the bank, unless authority so to do is granted at least annually by recorded resolution of the board of directors, does not prohibit the board itself from legally ordering the president and cashier to hypothecate bank assets in order to secure the bank's legal indebtedness, even tho no formal written record of the order is entered. (§§9222-c2, 9297, C., '31 [§§9222.2, 9297, C., '39].)

In re Hannahs, 217-1016, 252 NW 539

Right to contract for payment of debts. A good-faith contract by the board of directors of a state bank, for and on behalf of the bank, and providing for the payment of the bank's debts incurred in the operation of the bank, is valid without any approval by the stockholders of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 216-252; 249 NW 352; 89 ALR 783

Rediscounting—estoppel to deny authority of officers. A savings bank, notwithstanding statutory limitations on the power of bank officers, will not be permitted to deny the authority of its officers to rediscount the bank's paper by indorsing said paper "without recourse" but accompanying such indorsement with formal, written agreement binding the bank to repurchase said paper prior to or at a named time, when the party advancing the credit relied thereon, and when said bank received, retained, and availed itself of the entire fruits of the said rediscounting.

Bates v Bank, 219-1358; 261 NW 797

Unauthorized assignment of mortgage—ratification. An unauthorized assignment by bank officials of a note and mortgage belonging to the bank is ratified and confirmed by the act of the bank in receiving and retaining the consideration paid by the purchaser for said note and mortgage.

Iowa Convention v Howell, 218-1143; 254 NW 848

9222.3 Pledge to secure public funds.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 150; '34 AG Op 109, 403; '36 AG Op 169, 446, 666

9223 Limit of liabilities.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 478

Authority of cashier-director. Authority from the board of directors of a bank to its cashier (who was one of the directors) to secure a loan to the bank and to pledge such securities of the bank as might be necessary, embraces power in the cashier to pledge such securities, not only for the payment of the loan then obtained, but for the payment of a pre-existing indebtedness of the bank to another party with whom the loaner was affiliated in business, when the cashier-director had full knowledge, prior to obtaining authority to secure the loan, that the loaner would not loan under any other conditions.

Leach v Bank, 206-265; 217 NW 865

Debts beyond lawful limit. A debt contracted by a corporation in excess of the maximum limitation prescribed by law is not void.

German Amer. Bk. v Bank, 203-276; 211 NW 386

Dragnet security agreement. A bank which, upon making a loan, exacts from the borrower certain collateral security and an agreement, in effect, that such security may be applied to the discharge of any other liability of the borrower, either to said bank or to a named affiliated bank, arms the said affiliated bank with legal right to apply any remaining balance of said collateral to the discharge of the borrower's pre-existing obligation to such affiliated bank.

Leach v Bank, 206-265; 217 NW 865

Excess loans—note of third party to conceal. One who, in order to enable a state banking institution to conceal the fact that it has made loans to a borrower in excess of the amount permitted by law, executes and delivers to the bank his promissory note in lieu of such excess loans, is entitled, when the said excess notes are paid by the borrower, to a surrender of his note and the collateral pledged therewith.

Pomeroy v Bank, 203-524; 211 NW 219

Certificates of deposit—illegal issuance. Certificates of deposit issued by a savings bank in payment or exchange for promissory notes when the bank has no funds with which to pay for the notes are absolutely void in the hands of any holder.

Sweet v Bank, 200-895; 205 NW 470

Guaranty of payment of rediscounts. A written, individual guaranty by the officers of a bank of the payment of all promissory notes which the bank or its officers might take and rediscount with the guarantee is supported by ample consideration, it appearing that the taking and rediscounting of the notes were part of a plan under which the bank could continue to accommodate its customers with loans which it could not otherwise make because of statutory restrictions on loans.

Bankers Tr. v Hill, 207-1375; 221 NW 916

Officers as guarantors—nonright to set-off. The officers of a bank who, to further the interest of their bank, enter into an individual guaranty of the payment of all promissory notes which their bank or its officers may rediscount with the guarantee, are not entitled, when sued on the guaranty, to offset against their liability the amount of a deposit which their bank had with the guarantee at the time it became insolvent and passed into the hands of a receiver, and which deposit the guarantee surrendered to the receiver on his demand.

Bankers Tr. v Hill, 207-1375; 221 NW 916

Rewards—liability of members. An incorporated bank which, in effect, represents that it is a member of an association which is offering a reward for information leading to the conviction of bank robbers, thereby obligates itself to pay the reward when, in truth, the association is but a voluntary, unincorporated association.

9224 Oath of directors.

Directors—nonliability for naked nonfeasance. The director of a corporation is not liable, to a person dealing with the corporation, for mere nonfeasance—naked inaction as a director. So held where the director of a bank took no action with reference to the practice of the bank in commingling trust funds with the general funds of the corporation.

Proksch v Bettendorf, 218-1376; 257 NW 383; 38 NCCA 292

Director—violation of trust in re tax deed. A director of a bank may not, for his own personal enrichment, take assignment of a tax sale certificate covering land on which the bank of which he is director holds a first mortgage lien, and take tax deed under such certificate. Such deed will, on timely action and proper proof, be set aside and the bank, or its legal representative in case of insolvency, accorded the right to redeem from the tax sale.

9224.1 Meetings—examining committee.

Directors—nonliability for mere neglect. The directors of a bank are not personally liable for the loss of bonds in the possession of the bank as bailee, consequent on the wrongful act of other officers of the bank in hypothecating said bonds as security for a loan to the bank, and consequent on the neglect of the directors to exercise reasonable diligence to learn of said wrongful act and to prevent or correct it.

Cornick v Weir, 212-715; 237 NW 245; 32 NCCA 616

9228 Statements.

Banking corporations—officers—presumed knowledge. The active managing officers of a bank will not be permitted to say that they did not know the condition of the bank when the condition was a mere matter of computation.

Baumchen v Donahoe, 215-512; 242 NW 533

9235 Illegal practices—insolvency.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 38

Indemnity to bank—construction. An instrument in writing, though addressed to the state superintendent of banking, entered into by the stockholders of a bank in order to avoid an impairment of the capital stock of the bank, wherein the stockholders "guarantee the said bank against loss" in a named amount on certain bills receivable, is a contract of indemnity to the bank; and the bank may maintain an action thereon, its acceptance of the instrument being presumed. (§10982, C., '24.)

In re Prunty, 201-670; 207 NW 785

Insolvency—presumption. Principle reaffirmed that for many purposes the managing officers of a bank will be conclusively presumed to have knowledge of the insolvent condition of their bank.

Leach v Beazley, 201-337; 207 NW 374

When bank insolvent. It is not true that a bank is insolvent only when it is unable to pay its obligations in the ordinary and usual course of business.

Andrew v Bank, 207-386; 221 NW 954

Invalid guaranty of solvency of bank. A contract between the state superintendent of banking and the officers and directors of a state bank, wherein the said officers and directors guarantee that the bank "is at this time solvent", and wherein they contract "to keep and maintain the bank in a solvent" condition, in consideration that the superintendent will permit the bank to continue business, tho the superintendent questions its solvency, is a nullity, because gravely inconsistent with the statutory powers and duties of said superintendent, and therefore against public policy.

9236 Examination—oath—evidence.

9238 Liquidation—right of levy suspended.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 325; '28 AG Op 38, '32 AG Op 211; '36 AG Op 28, 666; AG Op Feb. 16, '39

Permissible or optional liquidations. The successful liquidation of the deposit liabilities of a failing bank by a transfer of assets to a stronger financial institution, under a good faith contract approved by the superintendent of banking, constitutes no bar to a final liquidation of the remaining indebtedness of the failing bank by said superintendent, and to the enforcement by said officer of the stockholders' double liability on their stock.

Andrew v Bank, 216-252; 249 NW 352; 89 ALR 783

Guaranty by officers—effective delivery. Delivery of a written guaranty of payment, by officers and directors of a bank, of questionable assets of the bank, is shown by evidence that a state bank examiner took the guaranty into his possession with the consent of the guarantors and delivered it to the state superintendent of banking.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

I LIQUIDATION IN GENERAL

Assets augmentation theory. The assets of an insolvent may be said to have been augmented by a trust fund whenever the trust owner is able to point out the trust property, either by actual proof or by legal presumption of fact.

Andrew v Bank, 204-565; 215 NW 742

Fraudulent abstraction of assets. The president of a bank who, knowing that the bank is insolvent, takes the promissory note of the bank for the amount of her personal deposit plus the amount of an actual loan to the bank, will not be permitted to take and retain assets of the bank as collateral security for the payment of the note, except insofar as said note represents said loan.

Andrew v Bank, 207-386; 221 NW 954

Transfer of assets—trust fund doctrine. The transfer by an insolvent bank, while in the hands of a receiver, of all or of a part of its assets to another bank which pays nothing therefor, but assumes the payment of certain liabilities of the insolvent, does not deprive a judgment creditor of the insolvent of the right to follow said assets into the hands of the transferee and to impress a lien thereon on the basis of the pro rata value of the assets transferred; and this is true tho the transferee bank had no knowledge of the creditor's claim when it accepted the transfer.

German Amer. Bk. v Bank, 203-276; 211 NW 386

Assignment of promissory notes carries pledged collateral securities. An assignment by the receiver of an insolvent bank, duly ordered by the court, of bank assets in the form of promissory notes, automatically carries to the assignee the right to the possession of, and right to enforce, all collateral legally pledged to the bank for the payment of said notes.

Bates v Bank, 219-1358; 261 NW 797

Bidder at sale of trust property—nonaggrieved party. In the sale of the personal property assets of an insolvent bank by the liquidating receiver, a bidder who is not a creditor of the bank, or interested in any manner in the trust property except as a proposed buyer, has no such standing or interest as authorizes him to appeal from an order of the court rejecting his bid for an item of said assets, and approving a lesser bid of another party for the same item. Nor will the court, under such circumstances, order a remand when the difference between the two bids is slight. (This is not suggesting (1) that the unsuccessful bidder may not very properly call the attention of the court to the disparity in bids, or (2) that the court has unbridled discretion to reject high bids and to approve low bids.)

Dean v Clapp, 221-1270; 268 NW 56

Commercial paper held for collection. The receiver of an insolvent bank takes no title to commercial paper coming into his hands and received by the bank for collection only.

Leach v Bank, 201-349; 207 NW 332

Receiver after unsuccessful attempt to liquidate. An unsuccessful attempt, under a good-faith contract, to liquidate, out of court, the deposit liability of a failing state bank by a transfer of assets to stronger financial institutions, constitutes no bar to the appointment of the superintendent of banking as receiver to make final and complete liquidation.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

Receiver—borrowing from federal agency. The superintendent of banking, as a duly appointed statutory receiver of an insolvent bank, has legal right to make application to the district court for authority to borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the court has jurisdiction in directing the "affairs" of said bank to grant or reject such application.

Andrew v Bank, 214-1337; 244 NW 394

I LIQUIDATION IN GENERAL—contin'd

Current statutory law applicable. Receiver-ship proceedings and the method of distribution thereunder are governed by the statute in force at the time of the appointment of the receiver.

Dickinson County v Leach, (NOR); 211 NW 542

Liens and equities unchanged. The title to property is not changed by the appointment of a receiver, as he takes it subject to existing liens and equities, and his taking exclusive possession thereof does not interfere with or disturb any pre-existing liens, preferences, or priorities.

Andrew v Union B. & T., 225-929; 282 NW 299

Nonabatement of action. The appointment of a receiver for an insolvent corporation does not abate an action by the corporation as a judgment creditor to set aside conveyances as fraudulent; and if the receiver be not substituted as plaintiff the action may be continued by the corporation in its corporate name.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 217-636; 251 NW 51

Nonestoppel in enforcing liabilities. The receiver of an insolvent bank by the mere institution of an action on a promissory note, which had (apparently without the then knowledge of the receiver) been taken through a breach of duty by the managing officer of the bank, does not thereby estop himself from proceeding against the parties on a prior improperly surrendered note payable to the bank.

Clapp v Wallace, 221-672; 266 NW 493

Ratification of unlawful acts. The receiver of an insolvent bank has no power to ratify wrongful acts of the officers of the bank committed while the bank was a going concern.

Clapp v Wallace, 221-672; 266 NW 493

Trust funds—augmentation. Funds passing into the hands of the receiver of an insolvent bank must be deemed augmented by the amount of a trust fund in the hands of the bank, when, at all times since the creation of the trust, the cash in the bank exceeded the amount of the trust fund.

McCue v Foster, 219-89; 257 NW 559

Knowledge of insolvency—not imputable to nonactive director. Knowledge that a bank is insolvent is not imputed to one who is a director and minor stockholder of the bank, when he takes no active part in its management and has no actual knowledge of the insolvency.

In re Smith, 228- ; 289 NW 694

Certificate of deposit not collected from insolvent bank—executor a bank director. A finding by the trial court that loss to an estate through the failure to collect on a certificate of deposit belonging to the estate was not caused by the fault of the executor was sustained by evidence that the executor who was a director of the bank on which the certificate was drawn, but took no active part in the management of the bank and did not know it was insolvent, had properly presented the certificate for payment and had been refused because of the insolvency of the bank.

Unallowable preference to bank officials. A president or director of an insolvent banking corporation will not be permitted to surrender his personal deposits in the bank and to take the good assets of the bank in payment therefor; otherwise, if the deposits represent the funds of an estate of which the bank official is administrator, and the exchange involves no element of personal gain to the administrator.

Leach v Beazley, 201-337; 207 NW 374

Cashier's authority. The cashier of a state bank has no authority to bind the bank by representations to a bank director as to the value of bank assets personally taken over by the director and replaced by the director's personal promissory note.

Andrew v Shimerda, 218-27; 253 NW 845

Checks—conflicting claims to proceeds. The holder of a check who, before payment thereof is stopped, indorses the same to a nondrawee private banker, and unwittingly receives in exchange therefor the worthless draft of said private banker, is entitled, in a subsequent action on the check, to the amount recovered thereon, in preference to the receiver for the private banker. Especially is this true when the bank was insolvent when he issued the draft.

Runge v Benton, 205-845; 216 NW 737

Subrogation accorded to check holder. When a drawee-bank receives for collection a check drawn upon itself and at once charges the drawer's checking account with the amount thereof, the owner of the check will be subrogated to the rights of said depositor to the amount of the check.

Leach v Bank, 207-1254; 219 NW 496; 224 NW 583

Claim for conversion—priority. A claim against an insolvent bank for conversion must await the payment of the expense attending liquidation and the payment of depositors.

Bailey v Bank, 200-1147; 206 NW 126

Claims—allowance and payment—property available for payment. Where an estate consists of two general classes of assets, to wit, (1) assets employed by decedent in operating his exclusively owned private bank, and (2) lands and other assets not so employed, and where, under the will, the bank is temporarily continued after the death of the decedent, an unappealed order of the probate court, entered on due notice and service, to the effect that bank depositors be paid from the general assets of the estate, precludes devisees and legatees from thereafter successfully asserting that depositors could only be paid from the assets employed in the operation of the bank, and that, as a consequence, the said lands could not be legally mortgaged in order to effect such payment. Especially should this be true when it appears that large sums of money employed in carrying on the bank have been used by the executors in paying claims not connected with the operation of the bank.

Belated filing of claims—effect. The belated filing of a claim against a receiver is not necessarily fatal to the claim.

Andrew v Bank, 218-1313; 256 NW 292

Builders' loan department—crediting payments after insolvency. A borrower in a so-called "builders' loan department" of a trust company whose monthly payments on the loan are seemingly carried by the trust company as deposits and not indorsed on the note, has the right, after the trust company has become insolvent, to have his payments credited on his note, and to pay the balance due and to receive a discharge irrespective of the rights of creditors of the company.

In re Wash. Loan Co., 214-884; 241 NW 308

Estoppel to present claim. Plea of estoppel to present a claim in bank receivership reviewed and held not sustained.

Andrew v Bank, 218-1313; 256 NW 292

Failure to object to claim. A receiver may contest the allowance of a claim filed with him, even tho he files no formal objections to the claim.

Andrew v Church, 216-1134; 249 NW 274

Fatal delay in filing claim. A secured creditor of an insolvent bank who fails to file with the receiver, within the time fixed by the court, his claim for a contemplated deficiency, may very properly be refused the right, after the receiver has been discharged, to file such claim with and against trustees of the assets of the bank who are such under an order of court entered in accordance with an agreement of unsecured creditors.

Spooner v Blair, 209-1113; 229 NW 826

Filing claims—fatal delay. A depositor in an insolvent bank has no right to have his account corrected so as to exclude therefrom an erroneous debit, when he delays his application for such correction until long after the time has elapsed for the filing of claims as provided by a duly published order of the court.

Andrew v Bank, 209-277; 227 NW 899

Liberality in pleadings. In the adjudication of claims pending in receivership proceedings, compliance with the strict rules of pleadings will not ordinarily be demanded.

Andrew v Bank, 207-948; 222 NW 8

Setting aside order. The court in bank receivership proceedings has discretionary power to set aside an order relative to the classification of claims as general or preferential.

Leach v Bank, 207-1254; 219 NW 496; 224 NW 583

Consideration—director's note to bank. The directors of a financially embarrassed bank who execute their individual promissory notes to the bank, and receive in return certain assets of the bank to which the state banking department had objected, may not say that the notes were executed without consideration.

Andrew v Shimerda, 218-27; 253 NW 845

Conversion by officer—effect. The fraudulent conversion by an officer of a bank of a promissory note which had been sent to the bank for collection by the bank renders the bank liable for the conversion, and the owner of the note must be given the status of a general creditor of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 204-1317; 217 NW 438

Debts due federal government—preference. Bank deposits made by federal trustees in bankruptcy and belonging to pending estates in bankruptcy are not, in case of insolvency of the bank, within the scope of the federal statutes which require a preference in the payment of debts due to the United States, even tho such deposits are secured by bonds running to the United States.

Andrew v Bank, 208-1248; 224 NW 499

Partnership—action to enforce partner's liability—waiver. The liquidating receiver of a private bank, when appointed with power to bring action against the partners on their individual liability, may, with the approval of the court, and notwithstanding the objections of a creditor, settle and compromise the liability of a partner when the creditor has appeared in the receivership proceedings and secured the allowance of his claim.

Ellis v Bank, 218-750; 251 NW 744

Action against partners—receivership—effect. A creditor of an insolvent banking partnership who, under an authorizing order of court, files proof of his claim with a duly appointed and unquestioned receiver of the partnership will not be permitted thereafter to maintain an independent action against the partners until after the receivership has been closed, when the receiver, under an order of court, has already instituted an action against all the partners to collect the amount necessary to settle the indebtedness of said bank; especially is this true when a multiplicity of suits is avoided.

Bierma v Ellis, 212-366; 236 NW 402

I LIQUIDATION IN GENERAL—continu'd

Adjusting debits and credits. When a partnership is indebted to a bank, and the bank fails, an individual deposit in the bank belonging to one of the partners of said partnership, should be credited on the partnership debt to the bank.

Boeger v Hagen, 204-435; 215 NW 597; 55 ALR 562

See In re Trusteeship, 214-884; 241 NW 308

Authorizing suit against partners. In an action for the dissolution of an insolvent partnership, a court of equity has power to authorize its receiver to bring suit against the partners to collect the funds necessary to pay the debts of the partnership in full.

Bierma v Ellis, 212-366; 236 NW 402

Preference—nonapplicability of statute. The statute which gives depositors in insolvent banks a preference in payment does not apply to private banks.

In re Thomas, 203-174; 210 NW 747

Nonpreference as to private banks. The statutory right of depositors in insolvent incorporated banking institutions to be first paid, in preference to general creditors, does not apply to depositors in private banks.

Mowatt v Bank, 204-1106; 216 NW 760

Appeal from orders in re preference. Depositors and creditors in a bank receivership have a right to appeal from an order of court which grants to a depositor an unallowable preference in the payment of his deposits.

Schubert v Andrew, 205-353; 218 NW 78

Interest on preferred claims. The holder of a preferential claim, for public funds, which has been allowed against the receiver of an insolvent bank, is not entitled to interest on the claim, tho payment be long delayed on account of litigation.

Leach v Bank, 210-613; 231 NW 497; 69 ALR 1206

Municipal preference. Principle reaffirmed that in the settlement of the affairs of an insolvent state bank the deposit of a municipal corporation has no preference over other deposits.

Leach v Bank, 201-346; 207 NW 331

Conclusiveness of judgment—nonparty to action. A decree or order to the effect that a deposit in an insolvent bank belonged to a municipality, but was not entitled to an equitable preference in the liquidation of the assets of the bank, is not binding on a party who actually made the deposit, but who was in no manner made a party to, or had any control over, the proceeding which resulted in said decree or order, tho he had requested the municipality and its treasurer to apply to the court for an order granting said preference.

Leach v Bank, 206-265; 217 NW 865

Notice—coparties. In an action by a municipality against the receiver of an insolvent bank and its surety, to obtain a preference in the payment of the municipal deposit, an appeal from the decree granting the prayer on the plea of both plaintiff and the surety will be dismissed when no notice of appeal is had upon the surety.

Independent Dist. v Bank, 204-1; 213 NW 397

Municipal preference—vested right. A municipal corporation which, at the time an insolvent bank is placed under receivership, is entitled, under a statute as construed by the supreme court, to a priority in the payment of its municipal deposit, is not deprived of such priority by a subsequently enacted statute which denies such priority.

Murray v Bank, 202-281; 208 NW 212

Pension funds—preference. The fact that the subject-matter of a time certificate of deposit in a bank is the pension money of the depositor furnishes no legal basis for a preference in payment in settling up the affairs of the insolvent bank, even tho the federal and state statutes exempt pension money from seizure for the debts of the pensioner.

Andrew v Bank, 205-872; 219 NW 62

Tax claims—nonpreference. Taxes on corporate bank stock and against the individual owners thereof may not be collected from the receiver of a bank which is insolvent to the extent that it cannot pay its depositors.

Andrew v Munn, 205-723; 218 NW 526

Set-offs unallowable. A debtor of an insolvent bank may not, after the appointment of a receiver for the bank, buy up claims against the bank and offset such purchased claims against the amount he is owing the bank. Statutory right of set-off not applicable.

Parker v Schultz, 219-100; 257 NW 570

Administrator's bank account—decedent's debt—no offset. Receiver of insolvent bank held unauthorized to set off amount of checking account standing in name of administrator against indebtedness owing to bank by intestate where, immediately on appointment of administrator, checking account passed to administrator who added to account by deposits at various times and drew checks against account until closing of bank.

In re Schwarting, (NOR); 257 NW 189

Bank's general right to set-off. The fact that a bank unlawfully invests its funds in securities not permitted by law does not prevent the receiver of the bank from offsetting the amount of said securities against the deposit of the party who is obligated to pay said securities; and this is true even tho the bank was a mortgagee for the benefit of holders generally of said securities.

Andrew v Bank, 218-489; 255 NW 871

Deposit as set-off. Where, prior to the insolvency of a bank, said bank and a depositor became irrevocably obligated under a letter of credit issued to said depositor to enable him to make a purchase of goods in a foreign country, and where the drafts drawn in the foreign country under said letter of credit did not mature until after the insolvency of said bank, and where the receiver of said bank paid said drafts in full on their maturity, the claim of said receiver against said depositor for reimbursement is subject to an offset to the extent of the depositor's deposit in said insolvent bank.

Andrew v Trust Co., 217-657; 251 NW 48

Equitable set-off—nature and scope. The doctrine of equitable set-off is a rule of equity, and is applied quite independently of the limitations which attach to a so-called legal or statutory offset.

Andrew v Bank, 216-240; 249 NW 154; 93 ALR 1156

Right of set-off. In receivership matters the rights of all parties as to set-off are to be determined as of the date of the appointment of the receiver.

Andrew v Trust Co., 217-657; 251 NW 48

Right of set-off. An order of court approving the report of the receiver of an insolvent bank as to the amount of various deposits owing by the bank does not constitute an adjudication against the receiver precluding him from later setting off against a particular deposit the amount owing by the depositor to the bank, it appearing that the approving order was entered without the joining of any issue as to the right of set-off.

Andrew v Bank, 218-489; 255 NW 871

Stockholders—double liability—change of venue. A stockholder in an insolvent bank who is sued by the receiver, on his "double liability", in the forum of the receivership, in one equitable action, along with all other stockholders, is not entitled to a change of venue in case the county of suit is not the county of his residence in this state.

Broulik v Henderson, 218-640; 254 NW 63

Stock held in trust—double assessment liability. Under decree of an Iowa equity court assessing statutory liability on stock in a closed Iowa bank against a national bank as trustee under an identified trust, the bank does not become personally liable, under laws of Iowa, for such assessment. Neither could the receiver of the Iowa closed bank, in a common-law action, charge the trust property with such statutory liability.

Bates v Bank, 101 F 2d, 278

Double liability—national bank as stockholder. A resident national bank as a stockholder in an insolvent state bank of this state is subject to suit in equity by the receiver in the county of the receivership forum, along with all other stockholders, to enforce the statutory double liability of stockholders, even tho the county of said forum is not the county of which the national bank is a resident.

Merchants Bank v Henderson, 218-657; 254 NW 65

Double liability not subject to offset. Funds voluntarily paid into a bank by a stockholder thereof, in order to repair or make good the impaired capital of the bank while it is a going concern, may not later, after the bank has gone into the hands of a receiver for liquidation because of insolvency, be set off by the stockholder against the demand of the receiver for a 100 percent statutory assessment on the stock for the benefit of creditors.

Andrew v Bank, 204-243; 213 NW 925; 56 ALR 521

Double liability—application of assets as condition precedent. The application of the assets of an insolvent bank to the payment of the debts of the bank is not a condition precedent to the right of the receiver to maintain an action to enforce the double liability of stockholders.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1070; 221 NW 809

Basis for assessment. A showing that the assets of a state bank plus a 100 percent assessment on the stock will not be sufficient to pay the debts of the bank furnishes abundant basis for an assessment on the stock, even tho there be no showing as to the amount of claims filed and approved.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

Deprivation of jury—constitutionality. An action by the receiver of an insolvent bank against stockholders for the purpose of determining the necessity for an assessment on stock holdings, and adjudicating the amount of such assessment, is not inherently a law action and, therefore, the legislature may provide that the action shall be brought in equity.

Broulik v Henderson, 218-640; 254 NW 63

Insolvency—stock assessments nonassignable. An assessment against a holder of corporate bank stock in an insolvent bank, ordered by the court under the so-called "double liability" statute (§9251, C., '31, now repealed), even tho said assessment is in the form of a judgment, is nonassignable by the receiver, even under an authorizing order of court, and if formally assigned, is nonenforceable by the assignee, said attempted assignment being for a purpose other than the payment of creditors.

Roe v King, 217-213; 251 NW 81

II DEPOSITORS

Discussion. See 2 ILB 36—Deposit—unmatured claims set off

"Depositor" defined. The act of a bank, while a going concern, in receiving money for and on behalf of a customer, and entering the same as a deposit, constitutes the customer a "depositor", which relation is not lost by the subsequent insolvency of the bank.

Leach v Bank, 202-265; 209 NW 422

Depositor (?) or creditor (?). A certificate of deposit does not necessarily carry a conclusive presumption that the holder is a mere lender of money to the bank.

Partch v Krogman, 202-524; 210 NW 612

Depositor (?) or money loaner (?). An actual depositor in a savings bank under interest-drawing time certificates of deposit does not cease to be a depositor because of the fact that, when he demanded his existing deposit for the purpose of re-investing in securities drawing an increase of interest over his existing certificates, he was, in good faith on his part, induced to accept from the bank new and long-time certificates of deposit drawing legal interest (part of which was paid in advance) at the rate desired by him, with an oral understanding that he might have his money on demand by a proportional refund of interest advanced; and it is immaterial that the bank officials, without his knowledge, were not acting in good faith.

Murray v Bank, 201-1325; 207 NW 781

Bank as depositor. A bank may lawfully become a depositor of another bank. So held where a bank was the sole depository of the funds of a municipality, and upon receipt of such funds deposited a part thereof with other banks under a so-called "gentlemen's agreement" with reference thereto.

Leach v Bank, 206-265; 217 NW 865

Bank deposits of public funds. Principle reaffirmed that a good-faith, nonnegligent deposit by a public officer of public funds in a bank for temporary safekeeping does not constitute a conversion of said funds by said officer.

Andrew v Bank, 214-105; 241 NW 412

Effect of usury. The act of a depositor in accepting a certificate of deposit which is tainted with usury does not destroy his status as a depositor.

Partch v Krogman, 202-524; 210 NW 612

Holder of bank's note. One who sells land to a party and receives in return the promissory note of a private bank which is operated by said party may not be said to be a depositor in the bank.

In re Thomas, 203-174; 210 NW 747

Manipulation of deposit not constituting payment. Evidence relative to the surrender by a depositor to his bank of certificates of deposit issued by the bank, reviewed and held not to reveal payment of said certificates; also held that a subsequently dated certificate of deposit issued by the bank to said depositor was intended to be, and was, but a continuation of the former unpaid deposit.

Bates v Bank, 221-1251; 268 NW 74

Relation between bank and depositor. Principle reaffirmed that the deposit of money in a bank creates the relation of debtor and creditor, and not that of borrower and lender.

Leach v Beazley, 201-337; 207 NW 374

Withdrawals—debtor—creditor relationship. Each new deposit creates a new or additional indebtedness to the depositor, and each withdrawal operates as a payment of such indebtedness to the extent of the amount received.

Duckworth v Manning's Estate, (NOR); 252 NW 559

Deposits—"notice" in pass book—effect. The deposit in a bank of unrestrictedly indorsed checks and the crediting of the depositor's checking account with the amount of the checks creates, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, the relation of debtor and creditor, and the contrary is not shown by a "notice" printed in the customer's pass book that "In receiving items for deposit or collection this bank acts only as depositor's collecting agent and assumes no responsibility beyond the exercise of due care" (with added provision for charging back uncollected items). The sole function of such notice, in view of the terms thereof, and of the intention of the parties as reflected in the attending facts and circumstances, is to confirm the right of the bank to charge back bad items, and to exempt the bank from the negligence of its corresponding collecting banks.

Andrew v Bank, 214-1199; 243 NW 542

Assignment of deposit. An executed agreement between a bank depositor and an administrator (who was cashier of the bank) and an estate debtor that, in order to discharge the estate debtor, the depositor will surrender his pass book to the administrator and accept the note of the estate debtor for the full amount of the deposit, works a complete assignment of said deposit to the estate, and gives said estate the status of a general depositor to the full amount of the assigned deposit; and this is true even tho the bank books fail to show the full amount of the assigned deposit or any formal transfer thereof to the estate.

Leach v Bank, 203-988; 213 NW 601

Holder of cashier's check. The holder of cashier's checks, in case of the subsequent insolvency of the bank, is properly classified as a depositor when he has been permitted without objection to show by oral testimony that the said checks were in fact intended to evidence a deposit of money.

Townsend v Andrew, 206-1006; 221 NW 572

Inconsistent remedies—holder of draft. One who receives a check from his debtor and, on presenting it, receives in payment from the drawee-bank a draft which is dishonored because of the insolvency of the bank, and who thereupon seeks to be decreed the status of a preferential trust holder to the amount of the draft, but is decreed the status of a general creditor only, may not later re-shape and refile his claim and be decreed subrogated to the rights of the depositor who originally drew the check; and especially is this true when the latter remedy was alternatively sought in the prior litigation.

Becker v Leach, 208-1347; 227 NW 344

Interest paid in advance. In case interest is paid a depositor in advance, the termination of the accrual of all interest by the appointment of a receiver necessitates the charging of the deposit with the amount of unearned interest.

Murray v Bank, 201-1325; 207 NW 781

Payment—check in escrow—effect. A vendor who causes the vendee to make payment of matured interest in the form of an interest-bearing certificate of deposit payable to himself, which certificate is placed in escrow with the issuing bank, pending the vendor's effort to make the title merchantable, must bear the loss resulting from the subsequent failure of the issuing bank.

Downey v Gifford, 206-848; 218 NW 488

Set-off by depositor. Where notes are executed and delivered to a bank, and the bank in return executes its certificates of deposit for a like amount to the maker of the notes, the transaction being simply a paper one, the certificates aforesaid will be set off against the notes aforesaid.

Andrew v Bank, 211-483; 231 NW 293

Depositor by subrogation. In settling and adjusting the affairs of an insolvent bank, a claimant who is not a depositor in fact may not be decreed to be subrogated to the rights of certain depositors who are not parties to the controversy over the claim in question.

Leach v Bank, 207-471; 220 NW 10

Notes for collection only—not bank's property. Notes of depositors pledged as collateral with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a bank loan and, upon insolvency of the bank, sent to examiner for collection and remittance to the corporation, do not thereupon become assets of the bank; therefore, depositors would not be entitled to offset their deposits against their indebtedness thereunder.

Andrew v Bank, 225-929; 282 NW 299

Collateral—holder in due course—set-off against holder denied. Where commercial paper is rediscounted or put up as collateral, the holder is a bona fide holder in due course and the plea of set-off is not available against such holder.

Andrew v Bank, 225-929; 282 NW 299

Offsetting deposit against note. A bank depositor who, after the bank becomes insolvent, pays to a collateral holder his outstanding note to the bank, may not compel the receiver to refund to him an amount equal to that part of his deposit which he would have had the right to offset against his note had it remained in the hands of the bank. And this is true tho the payment is under protest and is made because of the fraudulent representations of the collateral holder.

Leach v Bank, 207-1254; 219 NW 496; 224 NW 583

Depositor's right to set-off—receiver refunding amount paid on note. A bank depositor, who, after the bank becomes insolvent, pays to one holding as collateral such depositor's outstanding note to the bank, may not compel the receiver to refund to him an amount equal to his deposit which he would have been allowed to offset against his note, had it remained in the hands of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 225-929; 282 NW 299

Wrongful issuance of certificate of deposit—timely repudiation. A party to whom a bank, without authority, has issued a certificate of deposit in payment of a claim due from the bank, may not be deemed estopped to repudiate such certificate, or be deemed to have ratified the issuance of such certificate, when his repudiation was reasonably prompt, and when no injury resulted to the bank or to its receiver from any delay in repudiating.

Andrew v Bank, 217-232; 251 NW 860

Right of review—receivers. The receiver of an insolvent bank has a right to appeal from an order which grants to a depositor an equitable preference over all other creditors in the payment of his claim.

Andrew v Bank, 205-1248; 218 NW 24

Claims arising out of extrinsic transactions. A defendant sued by the receiver of an insolvent bank on indebtedness due the bank may not, in order to establish a set-off, plead an interest in certain deposits in the bank, and interest in extraneous transactions when such interests can only be determined by bringing in total strangers to the transactions sued on, and adjudicating their interests.

Foster v Read, 212-803; 237 NW 634

Equitable set-off—surety of insolvent. In an action by the receiver of an insolvent, the defendant may set off, against the obligation sued on, the amount which the defendant, as surety for the insolvent, has been compelled to pay on the contract of suretyship.

Leach v Bassman, 208-1374; 227 NW 339

II DEPOSITORS—concluded

Equitable set-off. Where an insolvent bank in the hands of a receiver owes an estate on a deposit, an heir who owes the bank, tho he is the executor of the estate, may have his interest in the deposit set off against his indebtedness to the bank, subject, of course, to claims which may be filed against the estate.

Andrew v Bank, 216-240; 249 NW 154; 93 ALR 1156

Husband's deposit in wife's name—set off against indebtedness. It may be shown that a deposit in an insolvent bank, solely in the name of a wife, is, in truth and fact, the money of the husband, and upon such proof being made, the husband may have the deposit applied on his indebtedness to the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 216-777; 249 NW 276

Waiver by depositors—effect on nonsigners. The act of a majority of the depositors of a bank (owning a large majority of the deposits) in signing waivers deferring payment of their deposits, in order to preserve the bank as a going concern, cannot be deemed the legal equivalent of an express agreement on their part that the depositors who do not sign such waivers shall be paid in full before such signers are paid; nor can such signing be deemed prejudicial to the nonsigners; nor, by such signing, can said signers be deemed to have lost their status as depositors and thereby become mere lenders of money to the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 216-739; 249 NW 768; 88 ALR 1003

III NONTRUST RELATIONSHIPS

Discussion. See 14 ILR 206—Establishment of preference; 15 ILR 195—Checks sent to drawee-bank for collection

Banking corporations—nonpreferential deposits. Record reviewed and held that bank deposits in an insolvent bank were attended by no circumstances that justified a preference in payment.

Bates v Bank, 222-1323; 271 NW 638

Claims—general deposit. Where receipts from sale of livestock in Chicago were remitted to local bank, which in turn entered the remittance as a deposit for local livestock shipping association, held that association was not entitled to preference on its claim in receivership proceeding of the local bank, there being no element of trust involved in the transaction and the fund being simply a general deposit.

Leach v Bank, (NOR); 212 NW 390

Deposits—nonequitable preference. A temporary deposit of money in a bank for safekeeping by parties who had accumulated it for a special purpose does not constitute a trust fund (entitled to an equitable preference in payment in case of the insolvency of the bank) simply because the bank had knowledge, when it accepted the deposit, of the nature of the fund, and of the manner in which, and purposes for which, it would be withdrawn by check.

Andrew v Bank, 217-684; 251 NW 508

Deposit of trust funds as general deposit—effect. A deposit in a bank of actual trust funds in a manner identical with that pursued in making a general deposit subject to check, creates the relation of debtor and creditor and not that of trustee and trustor.

Andrew v Bank, 209-271; 228 NW 55

Trust funds—nonpreference. The title to a testamentary fund perpetually bequeathed as a saving deposit to a bank as trustee with direction to pay the interest thereon to a church organization, for the sole purpose of repairing the church, necessarily passes to the trustee, and becomes a general deposit, with result that the fund is not entitled to an equitable preference in payment when the bank becomes insolvent.

Andrew v Church, 216-1134; 249 NW 274

Trust funds treated as private deposit. A trustee who deposits trust funds in his individual name is not entitled to a preference in the settlement of the affairs of the insolvent depository.

In re F. & M. Bank, 202-859; 211 NW 532; 51 ALR 910

Resulting trusts—fraud—elements. The plea that a trust resulted against one who fraudulently obtained the property necessitates proof of representation, reliance thereon, falsity thereof, scienter, deception, and injury.

Andrew v Bank, 205-244; 216 NW 551

Issuance of cashier's check. The mere issuance and delivery of a cashier's check to a depositor creates no trust relation whatever.

Leach v Bank, 202-879; 211 NW 526

Deposits—when deemed made. A deposit in a bank cannot be deemed a trust fund and entitled to an equitable preference in payment because of the fact that the books of the bank show that the deposit was made after the bank had permanently closed its doors, when in truth the deposit was made before the bank so closed its doors.

Andrew v Bank, 204-1190; 216 NW 723

General deposit. The depositing in a bank of money and checks which are at once entered upon the customer's pass book with right to immediately draw against the amount constitutes a general deposit.

Andrew v Bank, 204-1190; 216 NW 723

What constitutes general deposit. A general and not a special or specific deposit is shown by proof that a buyer and shipper of stock (who was also engaged in two other different lines of business) had but one bank deposit account, and that in buying stock he simply delivered his bank check to the seller, and then, as a general course of business, shipped the stock in the name of his bank, which thereupon, at his direction, drew on the consignee, and credited the shipper's deposit with the amount of the draft, thereby creating a deposit credit out of which any and all checks issued by the shipper, whether for stock purchases or otherwise, would be paid, if and when presented; and this is true even tho the bank knew that the particular purpose in the mind of the shipper was to protect his outstanding checks for purchases of stock.

Andrew v Bank, 205-888; 219 NW 53

Deposit—fraud in reception. The fact that a deposit in a bank was made only two hours prior to the permanent closing of the bank does not necessarily show that the bank was insolvent when the deposit was received, and that the officers must have known of such insolvency, and that, therefore, the deposit was fraudulently obtained and should be decreed to be a trust fund.

Andrew v Bank, 204-1190; 216 NW 723

Deposit of check—presumptive passing of title. The depositing in a bank of duly indorsed checks and the entry of the amount thereof on the customer's pass book with right to immediately draw against the same presumptively constitutes the bank the owner of the checks, and the depositor has the burden to overcome the presumption.

Andrew v Bank, 204-1190; 216 NW 723

Deposit of official funds. A deposit in a bank by a clerk of the district court of his official funds (known to be such by the bank) does not make the bank a trustee of the county or of its treasurer.

Andrew v Bank, 204-878; 216 NW 1

Deposit of public funds—nonpreference. The trustees of a municipal firemen's pension fund may validly make a bank deposit of its funds in an amount sufficient to meet current pension demands. It follows that if the bank becomes insolvent the trustees are simply depositors and no preference over other depositors exists.

Andrew v Bank, 214-105; 241 NW 412

Denial of deposit. The fact that a banker falsely states to an administrator that the deceased had no deposit in the bank furnishes no basis for decreeing the administrator a preference in the settlement of the affairs of the insolvent bank.

In re F. & M. Bank, 202-859; 211 NW 532; 51 ALR 910

Changing general deposit into special trust deposit. A seizure, by garnishment proceedings, of a general bank deposit, followed, (1) by a direction by the garnishing plaintiff to the garnishee bank to hold said deposit in a named amount (which was 150 percent of the amount sued for), and (2) by an answer by the garnishee in accordance with said direction, does not have the legal effect of changing said sum from the status of a general deposit to the status of a special deposit,—to the status of a trust fund,—with consequent right to preferential payment in case the bank becomes insolvent.

Andrew v Bank, 220-712; 263 NW 495

Draft by insolvent drawer. The rule that a trust relation is created by the act of an insolvent in drawing a draft which he knows will not be paid, has no application on a record revealing the fact that the payee of the draft long delayed presentation, and that, in the meantime, numerous drafts subsequently issued by the same drawer were paid by the same drawee.

Leach v Bank, 203-790; 211 NW 516

Drafts—purchase from insolvent. On the issue whether the purchase of drafts at different times from an insolvent bank created the relation of debtor and creditor or a trust relation, knowledge on the part of the officers of such insolvency (as a basis for fraud) will not be presumed from proof that, when the drafts were issued, the account of the drawer-bank with the drawee-bank was overdrawn, but that the drawer-bank had, almost simultaneously with the issuance of the drafts, made a remittance to replenish said account, which remittance proved abortive because of the sudden closing of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 206-65; 218 NW 957

Nondrawee bank cashing checks. No trust relation results from the act of one bank in cashing checks drawn upon another bank and presenting and having them accepted by the drawee-bank and receiving in payment a draft on a third bank, which draft was never paid.

Danbury Bk. v Leach, 201-321; 207 NW 336

Nonpayment of draft. The fact that a depositor in an insolvent but going bank causes a draft to be drawn upon himself, through his said bank, and directs the bank to pay the same upon presentation, out of his general deposit, which direction the bank fails to comply with, creates no trust relationship which will, in liquidating the affairs of the bank, give the depositor a preference to the amount of the draft.

Border v Bank, 202-27; 209 NW 302

Preference under worthless collection. The remittance of a draft to a bank with direction to "collect and remit", and the act of the collecting bank in receiving a worthless draft in payment, present no possible basis for a preference in payment in case the collecting bank becomes insolvent.

Purchase of draft—effect. The purchase of a draft on a drawee which has ample funds of the drawer's is but the purchase of the credit of the drawer. In other words, the purchaser of such a draft voluntarily makes himself one of the general creditors of the drawer.

Leach v Bank, 203-790; 211 NW 516

Draft works no assignment. A bank which pays checks drawn on foreign banks and remits said checks to its correspondent bank for collection is not entitled to be preferred in the payment of its claim (the collecting bank having become insolvent) on the naked showing that it holds the unpaid draft of the collecting bank for the amount of said collection.

Leach v Bank, 202-871; 211 NW 519

Draft works no assignment. The issuance of a draft works no equitable assignment to the payee of the funds of the drawer in the hands of the drawee, and consequently, in case of the subsequent insolvency of the drawer, the payee is not a preferred creditor, (1) even though the drawer at once charges himself and credits the drawee with the amount of the draft, (2) even tho the draft was issued by the drawer in payment of checks drawn upon himself by his depositors, whom he at once charges with the amounts of their checks, and (3) even tho the controversy over the funds is solely between the receiver of the insolvent drawer of the draft and the payee of the draft.

Leach v Bank, 202-894; 211 NW 517

Leach v Bank, 202-899; 211 NW 506; 50 ALR 388

Leach v Bank, 203-507; 211 NW 520; 212 NW 760

Leach v Bank, 203-782; 211 NW 522

Drawee-bank as agent to collect from self. The act of the indorsee of a check in sending it to the drawee-bank for collection and remittance, and the act of the drawee-bank in charging the account of the drawer of the check with the amount thereof, creates no relation of principal and agent and consequently no trust relationship.

Leach v Bank, 207-471; 220 NW 10

Drawee-bank as agent to collect from self. The holder of a bank check in sending it to the drawee-bank for "collection and remittance" does not create the relation of principal and agent or any trust relation sufficient to support a claim of preference in case the draft of the said drawee-bank in payment of the check is not paid because of the insolvency of the bank.

Leach v Burton & Co., 205-973; 219 NW 43

Directors—nonviolation of trust relationship. A bank director who, while the bank is a going concern but allegedly insolvent, transfers and sells his certificate of deposit in the bank to the president thereof, and long subsequent thereto receives payment therefor from said president, or who, under the same conditions, transfers a like certificate to another bank and receives a new certificate in such other bank—the transferred certificate in each instance being promptly cashed by the issuing bank—violates no trust duty which he owes to his bank or to the depositors thereof, there being no evidence whatever that either transaction was other than one in the ordinary course of business.

Andrew v Kelly, 215-408; 245 NW 755; 84 ALR 1488

Officer acting in private and personal matter—liability of bank. The acts of an officer of a bank, tho he be a managing officer, in receiving the funds of a relative, and in managing the investment thereof, purely as a personal matter between himself and said relative, imposes no obligation on the bank, even tho the funds are carried on the books of the bank as a matter of convenient bookkeeping. It follows that, upon the insolvency of the bank, the tender to the relative of the investments belonging to him, and found in the bank, carries down any claim of preferential trust against the bank and its receiver.

Andrew v Bank, 212-649; 235 NW 735

Conversion by officer of bank—effect. The act of an officer of a bank in fraudulently converting to his own use a promissory note which had been sent to the bank for collection by the bank furnishes no basis for decreeing to the owner of the note an equitable preference in payment out of the assets of the insolvent bank.

Andrew v Bank, 204-1317; 217 NW 438

Payment of note—acts constituting. The acts of a bank (1) in receiving, without authority, payment of its customer's notes at a time when said bank had either rediscounted or collaterally pledged and indorsed said notes to another bank, and (2) in forwarding to the then holder a draft and other remittances sufficient to cover the amount of the notes, and the act of the then holder (1) in accepting the remittances, (2) in marking the notes "paid", and (3) in returning them, work a complete payment of the notes, even tho the draft was not paid, owing to the failure of the drawer-bank, it appearing that, at the time of each transaction, both parties had entered the proper debits and credits on their mutual accounts in harmony with the theory of payment. No right of preference was created by reason of the issuance or nonpayment of the draft.

Leach v Bank, 204-493; 215 NW 617

Pension money as special or specific deposit. A deposit in a bank may not be deemed either a "special" or a "specific" deposit, and therefore entitled to a preference in payment, from the naked fact that the subject-matter of the deposit was pension money of the depositor's, especially when the deposit was evidenced by a time certificate.

Andrew v Bank, 205-872; 219 NW 62

Relation of debtor and creditor. The act of the indorsee of a check in sending it to the drawee-bank for "collection and remittance" creates no relation of principal and agent. The result is that, if the drawee-bank becomes insolvent, the indorsee's claim on account of the check is not a preferred claim.

Leach v Bank, 203-782; 211 NW 522; 38 NCCA 426

Relation of debtor and creditor. The act of a bank in forwarding a collection made by it for another, in the form of a draft, in accordance with an agreement to that effect, creates the relation of debtor and creditor and consequently no trust relationship.

Leach v Bank, 207-471; 220 NW 10

Relation of debtor and creditor. When a bank pays checks on foreign banks and remits said checks to its correspondent for "collection and remittance", and when the understanding and course of dealing between said banks is for the remittance to be by draft, and such draft is executed and delivered, no trust relation is created, but the relation of general debtor and creditor is created, and there can be no preference in payment to the draft holder in the subsequent settlement of the affairs of the insolvent drawer.

Leach v Bank, 202-894; 211 NW 517

Relation of debtor and creditor. When the understanding and general course of dealing between two banks are that each will cash checks drawn on the other and that the daily balance will be paid by draft in favor of the bank to which the balance is due, and such draft is issued and delivered, no trust relation is created, but the relation of general debtor and creditor is created, with the result that no preference in payment may be demanded by the payee of the draft in the subsequent settlement of the affairs of the insolvent drawer.

Leach v Bank, 203-507; 211 NW 520; 212 NW 760

Relation of debtor and creditor. When the general course of dealing between two banks is for each to cash checks drawn upon the other and then to exchange the checks and adjust the same by mutual credits and debits, they thereby voluntarily create a shifting relation of debtor and creditor, and the one who is the final creditor will not be entitled to a preference in payment out of the assets of the debtor if he becomes insolvent.

Relation of debtor and creditor. The act of the officers of a local fraternal order in ex-cuting in favor of the grand lodge a warrant on the local lodge funds, and therewith purchasing an ordinary bank draft in favor of the grand lodge, creates no trust relation and furnishes no basis for a claim of preference to the assets of the drawer-bank in case the latter becomes insolvent.

Leach v Bank, 203-235; 212 NW 485

Relation of debtor and creditor. The mere purchase of a draft gives rise to no trust relation between the purchaser and the bank issuing the draft.

Leach v Bank, 204-497; 212 NW 748; 215 NW 728

Relation of debtor and creditor. Principal reaffirmed that no relation of principal and agent—in other words, no trust relation—is created by the act of the transferee of a draft in sending it to the drawer for payment.

Leach v Bank, 202-894; 211 NW 517

Relation of debtor and creditor. A bank which cashes checks drawn upon another bank, and in payment receives from the latter a draft (which is not paid), will not be accorded a preference in the settlement of the affairs of the insolvent drawee-bank.

Leach v Bank, 202-95; 209 NW 279

Relation of debtor and creditor. A bank which pays a series of checks on foreign banks and remits the checks to its correspondent with direction to collect and "to credit" the paying and remitting bank, thereby makes itself one of the general creditors of the collecting bank and deprives itself of the right of preference which it otherwise would have had, had the relation of principal and agent been created (the collecting bank having subsequently become insolvent).

Leach v Bank, 202-871; 211 NW 519

Temporary deposit by guardian. A temporary deposit by a guardian of guardianship funds in a bank for safekeeping does not constitute a trust fund (entitled to an equitable preference in payment in case of the insolvency of the bank) simply because the bank had knowledge of the nature of the funds and of the manner in which they would be withdrawn.

Andrew v Bank, 205-1248; 218 NW 24

Unlawful relation. A federal reserve bank may not predicate a claim for preferential payment out of the assets of an insolvent bank on the plea that a federal reserve bank may not legally become the creditor of a nonmember bank.

Leach v Bank, 207-471; 220 NW 10

IV TRUST RELATIONSHIPS

Discussion. See 18 ILR 362—Pension money

Trust relation—insufficient showing. The receipt by a bank of money with full knowledge

IV TRUST RELATIONSHIPS—continued that the money constituted trust funds in the hands of the depositor, and the issuance to the depositor of cashier's checks for the amount thereof, in lieu of an ordinary deposit, do not, in and of themselves, constitute the bank a trustee of the fund. Under such circumstances, it must be shown that the bank expressly or impliedly agreed to act as agent or bailee either of the depositor or of the beneficiary of the trust.

Townsend v Andrew, 206-1006; 221 NW 572

Trust treated as general deposit—effect. The carrying on the books of a bank of an admitted express trust as a general deposit in no manner changes the nature of the trust.

Andrew v Bank, 203-546; 213 NW 245

Trust funds—presumption—insufficient basis. The court cannot, in the face of affirmative evidence to the contrary, presume that trust funds over and above the amount of cash on hand in the trustee-bank when it closed its doors were embraced in the bills receivable or in the cash in the hands of correspondent banks, on the somewhat specious basis that, inasmuch as there was not cash enough in the bank when the trust was created to pay the trustor in full, therefore the balance of the trust fund must have been embraced in assets of the bank other than the cash in the bank.

In re American Bank, 210-568; 231 NW 311

Augmentation of bank funds. An augmentation in the funds of a bank may result from what might, to the layman, seem to amount to nothing more than naked bookkeeping entries in the books of the bank; for instance, such augmentation is shown by proof that a bank as agent made a collection (1) by loaning to the debtor on his note and from its actual, existing funds, an amount sufficient to enable the debtor to pay the claim, (2) by crediting the checking account of the borrower with the amount of the loan, (3) by accepting the latter's check for the amount of the claim, and (4) by marking the check "paid" and charging the checkmaker's account with the amount of the check.

Andrew v Bank, 217-232; 251 NW 860

Dissipated trust funds—nonliability of receiver. The receiver of an insolvent bank may not be charged with that part of a trust fund which has been wrongfully and unlawfully dissipated prior to the time when the balance of the fund came into his hands.

Leach v Bank, 206-675; 220 NW 113

Dissipation of trust funds. Proof that a bank collected certain checks as agent for the holder thereof, but that in so doing the entire amount of the collection was applied in the payment of the general obligations of the collecting bank, conclusively negatives any augmentation of the assets of the collecting bank.

Leach v Bank, 204-497; 212 NW 748; 215 NW 728

Want of authority—effect. Want of authority in a bank to assume a trusteeship in no manner changes the nature of the trust and in no manner gives the bank title to the subject-matter of the trust.

Andrew v Bank, 203-546; 213 NW 245

Transfer of property—effect. Property impressed by a trust and received by a bank with full knowledge of that fact continues to retain its trust character in the hands of the bank and its subsequent receiver.

Andrew v Bank, 209-1149; 229 NW 819

Liability of bank. A bank will be deemed the trustee of an express trust when such was the understanding, even tho an officer of the bank was treated on the books of the bank as trustee.

Andrew v Bank, 203-546; 213 NW 245

Directors—nonliability for naked nonfeasance. The director of a corporation is not liable, to a person dealing with the corporation, for mere nonfeasance—naked inaction as a director. So held where the director of a bank took no action with reference to the practice of the bank in commingling trust funds with the general funds of the corporation.

Proksch v Bettendorf, 218-1376; 257 NW 383; 38 NCCA 292

Wrongful act of trustee—right to ratify. A bank which, as guardian, wrongfully treats the guardianship funds as its own property (by carrying said funds as a general deposit with itself) may not complain if, after the failure of the bank, the succeeding guardian ratifies the former wrongful act, and elects to retain the position of an ordinary depositor.

Bates v Bank, 219-258; 257 NW 806

Bank as involuntary trustee. A bank may, because of the wrongful conduct of its cashier, become the trustee of a trust fund, and especially so when the misconduct is in the interest of the bank and hostile to the interest of the owner of the trust fund. So held where the clerk of an auction sale, in bad faith, converted the proceeds of the sale into a cashier's check issued by himself as cashier to himself as clerk in an insolvent bank of which he was cashier, said conversion being without the knowledge, consent, or subsequent ratification of his principal, the owner of said funds.

Andrew v Bank, 217-780; 253 NW 133

Trust fund—bookkeeping—effect. An actual trust fund is not changed into a nontrust fund by the fact that the bank receiving the fund credited the owner's general deposit account with the amount of the fund.

Miller v Andrew, 206-957; 221 NW 543

Receipt of funds after closing of bank. The receiver of an insolvent bank, who, after the closing of the bank, receives the proceeds of a shipment of stock, with knowledge of the ownership thereof, must be deemed to hold said proceeds as a trust fund.

Leach v Bank, 206-675; 220 NW 113

Agent of court only—trustee of funds. A receiver is not an agent of anyone except the court appointing him, but he holds any fund at least as quasi-trustee for the benefit of whoever may eventually establish title thereto.

Andrew v Bank, 225-929; 282 NW 299

Sales contract—court approval as condition. A definite written offer by the superintendent of banking of this state to sell to a foreign administrator Iowa real estate, belonging to a bank receivership, and the written acceptance of the offer, by said foreign administrator, may constitute a valid and specifically enforceable contract tho the offer and the acceptance be both conditioned on the approval of the respective state courts.

Bates v Bank, 223-385; 272 NW 412

Draft fraudulently procured. The drawer of a draft who receives in payment therefor a draft which the payee has no reasonable grounds to believe will be paid, may enforce an equitable preference against the receiver of the wrongdoer for the full amount of his—the drawer's—loss, it appearing that the draft issued by the said drawer has been paid and that the proceeds thereof are in the hands of the receiver.

Leach v Trust Co., 203-1060; 213 NW 777; 57 ALR 1165

Bank as executor—merger and subsequent insolvency. Funds which were held by a bank as executor of an estate, and which belonged to such estate at the time of merger of such bank with another bank, were "trust funds" and did not constitute part of assets of bank, with respect to whether such funds were payable as preferred claim against such merged bank which subsequently became insolvent.

Bates v Bank, (NOR); 269 NW 346

Estate funds as preferential deposit. Estate funds on deposit in a bank which has been appointed executor, administrator or trustee of the estate, even tho carried in the name of the estate, constitute a trust fund, and, in case of insolvency of the bank, must be paid in full on a showing that, after the trust deposit was made, the deposit in the bank has never been less than the amount of said trust funds. (Ch 416, C., '24.)

Andrew v Bank, 208-252; 225 NW 379

Estate funds as preferential deposit. Estate funds on deposit in a bank which has been appointed trustee or guardian of the estate constitute a trust fund, and in case of insolvency of the bank, are entitled to preference in payment; and an order of court entered without notice to interested parties, and authorizing the appointee-bank to deposit the estate funds with itself, cannot change this rule of preference. (§9285, C., '27.)

Andrew v Bank, 208-392; 226 NW 73

Estate—deposits without order of court. A deposit in a bank by a guardian of guardianship funds, as a loan, without a directing or approving order of court, is wrongful, and the bank at once becomes a trustee of the fund for the benefit of the ward.

Andrew v Bank, 207-394; 223 NW 249

Insolvent estates—unallowable payment in full. The act of the administratrix of an insolvent estate in applying estate funds to the full payment of a debt, which is the personal obligation of both the deceased and the administratrix, is fundamentally unallowable. It follows that the creditor, by receiving such payment, becomes a trustee of the fund for the use and benefit of the estate, especially when he knew that the estate was insolvent.

Reason: The administratrix could not legally make such payment, even on an authorizing order of the court.

Andrew v Bank, 217-69; 251 NW 23

Express trusts. The deposit of funds with a bank under an agreement that the bank will keep the same invested and pay the interest income to a named beneficiary necessarily constitutes an express trust.

Andrew v Bank, 203-546; 213 NW 245

Bank deposit for particular purpose. A trust fund is created by depositing money in a bank with the definite understanding and agreement at the time between the depositor and the bank that said deposit is for the specific purpose of paying a certain check thereafter to be drawn in a named amount.

Townsend v Bank, 212-1078; 237 NW 356

Special deposit as part of real estate deal. A cash deposit in a bank, understood by all parties, including the bank, to be made for the purpose of paying a vendor for land sold, and which, with accompanying papers, was held in escrow pending completion of title, must be deemed a special deposit and entitled to preferential payment on the insolvency of the bank, even tho a certificate of deposit, payable to the vendor, was issued by the bank and retained among the papers evidencing the deal.

Gillett v Bank, 219-497; 258 NW 99

Special deposit as trust fund. A special deposit (and consequently a trust fund) is created in favor of an administrator by the action of bank directors in waiving the interest of the bank in a particular fund in its possession, and owned jointly by the bank and a guardian, and doing so in order to enable the guardian to have the entire fund for the immediate payment of his liability to the administrator of the deceased ward, and by the action of the guardian carrying out the arrangement by taking a check to himself for the entire fund, and by immediately issuing and delivering (after banking hours) to the administrator a check for the same amount.

Rime v Andrew, 217-1030; 252 NW 542

Special deposits — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to show that a deposit was made for the special purpose of meeting payment on a particular draft, or was made under such circumstances that the issuance of the draft effected a pro tanto equitable assignment of the deposit.

Heckman v Bank, 208-322; 223 NW 164

Deposit as trust fund. Cash and checks deposited by the owner thereof in a bank, under a written instrument which provides that the receipt is "in trust for the purpose only of transmittal to" the owner in another locality, and which instrument is utilized solely for the purpose of effecting such transmittal, constitutes a trust fund and entitles the holder of the instrument to a preference in payment, in case the bank fails, provided such trust fund is traced into the hands of the receiver, even tho in some minor respects the deposits were made, and carried on the bank books as ordinary deposits.

Standard Oil v Andrew, 218-438; 255 NW 497

Deposits received on condition—violation—effect. A bank which receives cash, checks, and notes on the agreed condition that said receipts will be held intact, and not placed in the general assets of the bank, and will be returned intact on the happening of a named event, must respect and comply with the condition, even tho at the time the bank has enforceable financial obligations against the parties delivering the property. And, in case of violation of the condition and in case of insolvency, the claimants will be entitled to an order on the receiver for restitution, or for preferred payment out of the funds on hand at the time of insolvency, or for such other relief as will be equitable and possible under the circumstances.

Relation of principal and agent. The act of a county treasurer in sending tax receipts to a bank with the implied understanding that the bank would collect the amount thereof and then deliver the receipts, and the act of the bank in so doing, create the relation of principal and agent, and give the funds in the hands of the bank and the receiver thereof the character of a preferred claim, it appearing (1) that the treasurer had no lawful authority to make deposit of such funds in said bank, and (2) that the treasurer gave no direction as to the manner of remitting said fund to him.

Leach v Bank, 202-881; 211 NW 536

Principal and agent. Principle reaffirmed that the act of the owner of a draft in forwarding the same to a bank for collection, and the act of the bank in making the collection, create the relation of principal and agent, and not that of debtor and creditor.

Andrew v Bank, 207-403; 223 NW 176

Receipt by agent for special purpose. A bank which, as agent either of the lender or the borrower, receives the proceeds of a loan for the specific purpose of discharging certain incumbrances on property, holds said proceeds in a trust capacity.

Second Bk. v Millbrandt, 211-1299; 235 NW 577

Collections—resulting trusts. A bank upon making a collection for its implied principal, under authority to "collect and remit", takes no title to the collected funds, but immediately becomes a trustee thereof and remains such trustee until said funds are paid over to the principal. It follows that such relationship is not affected in the least by the unauthorized act of the bank in issuing and mailing to the principal a certificate of deposit for the amount of the collection.

Andrew v Bank, 217-232; 251 NW 860

Funds received for investment. A bank which makes a collection for a customer, under instructions immediately to invest the proceeds in a specified and agreed way, must be deemed to hold such proceeds in trust for the customer. It follows that, in case the bank becomes insolvent, the customer may reclaim his money from the funds which passed into the hands of the receiver, provided the cash bank balance at all times since the collection was made equaled or exceeded the collection.

Miller v Andrew, 206-957; 221 NW 543

Instructions to "collect and return"—effect of custom. The direction of a sending bank to a collecting bank to "collect and return" the items inclosed conclusively implies a collection and return in cash or its equivalent, and a return by draft does not terminate the relation of principal and agent; and this is true even tho a general custom exists among banks to return such collections by draft.

Leach v Bank, 207-1254; 219 NW 496; 224 NW 583

Collection of draft. A bank which, as agent, receives for collection a draft, with orders to collect in cash only, and to remit to the owner of the draft, and which accepts in payment of the draft the amply protected check of the drawee upon itself, must be deemed to have collected the draft in cash, even tho it fails either (1) to cancel the said check, or (2) to charge the account of the drawer of the check with the amount thereof. It follows that the collection belongs to the principal, is impressed with a trust character, and, upon the insolvency of the bank, is entitled to preferential payment out of the appropriate cash balance passing to the receiver.

Andrew v Bank, 204-565; 215 NW 742

Bailment—nondissipation—effect. The deposit in a bank of specifically identified bonds with the mutual understanding between the depositor and the officers of the bank that the identical bonds will be returned on demand, creates a trust, even tho the bank carried said bonds as a part of its assets and liabilities.

Leach v Bank, 202-887; 211 NW 529

Leach v Bank, 202-885; 211 NW 535

Andrew v Bank, 203-345; 212 NW 745; 51 ALR 906

Unidentified bailments. When the subject matter of various bailments with the same bailee is identical in kind—e. g., government bonds—and becomes so intermingled that the owners are unable to identify their separate property, the entire series of bailments must, in case of the insolvency of the bailee, be ratably distributed among the bailors.

In re Bank, 202-859; 211 NW 532; 51 ALR 910

Bailment—preferential order. The deposit of government bonds with a bank for safe-keeping only, creates the relation of bailor and bailee; but the bailor may not have a preferential order against the receiver of the bank for the return of his bonds or the proceeds thereof when he is wholly unable to identify any bond as belonging to him, and equally unable to identify any property in the hands of the receiver as the proceeds of his bonds.

Leach v Bank, 206-675; 220 NW 113

No fraud by bank—no constructive trust.

Community Bk. v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Trust funds—facts showing. A bank which through its officers manages a public sale as agent for a party, and holds the cash proceeds thereof in the bank without settlement with the said party, will be deemed to hold the money as trustee, and in case of insolvency the trust funds will be presumed embraced in a final cash balance which is in excess of the trust; and it is immaterial how or in what manner the bank, on its own motion, treated said cash on its books.

Andrew v Bank, 209-1147; 229 NW 907

Wrongful hypothecation—effect. A trust is not destroyed by the fact that the insolvent trustee, without the knowledge of the beneficiary of the trust, has wrongfully pledged the subject-matter of the trust and other securities of his own as collateral to his personal debt, and by the fact that the subject-matter of the trust has been actually sold by the collateral holder, with the consent of the insolvent's receiver, when the receiver had unhampered opportunity to direct the sale of the insolvent's personally owned collateral (which was ample), and thus save and protect the subject-matter of the trust.

Leach v Bank, 202-887; 211 NW 529

Reinstating trust after wrongful dissipation. A trust which has been inadvertently or wrongfully converted and dissipated by the trustee to his own use is effectually reinstated by the subsequent act of the trustee, while solvent, in repurchasing with his own funds the subject-matter of said trust, with the specific intent to effect such reinstatement.

Leach v Bank, 202-887; 211 NW 529

Wrongful deposits. A bank acquires no title to wrongfully deposited funds, and consequently becomes a trustee for the actual owner.

Leach v Bank, 207-478; 223 NW 171

Wrongful deposit basis of trust. Principle reaffirmed that the wrongful deposit in a bank of the funds of a municipality gives rise to a trust relation between the bank and the municipality.

Leach v Bank, 205-971; 219 NW 59

Wrongful deposit of public funds. The deposit in a state bank by a city treasurer of municipal funds without the execution and delivery of the indemnifying bond required by statute is wrongful, and brings into existence a constructive trust, which is enforceable against the receiver of said bank when it is made to appear, by presumption or proof, that said fund has passed into his hands to the augmentation of the assets of the bank.

New Hampton v Leach, 201-316; 207 NW 348

Wrongful deposit of public funds. A deposit in a bank of municipal firemen's pension funds under conditions which deprive the trustees of the power to immediately withdraw said funds, is wrongful and being wrongful the trustees do not lose title to said funds. It follows that in case the bank becomes insolvent the deposit is entitled to preferential payment from the cash on hand at the time of insolvency; and it matters not that the trustees and bank are in pari delicto.

Andrew v Bank, 222-881; 270 NW 465

Wrongful deposit — presumption. Public funds, unlawfully deposited in a bank because no statutory bond guaranteeing the return of IV TRUST RELATIONSHIPS—concluded the deposits was given by the bank, constitute a trust fund which presumptively is included in the cash, if any, which comes into the hands of the receiver upon the insolvency of the bank. Evidence held to overcome the presumption.

Poweshiek Co. v Bank, 209-467; 228 NW 32; 82 ALR 39

Estoppel. Where the funds of a municipality have been wrongfully deposited in a bank, the municipality will not be deemed estopped from insisting that the deposit constitutes a trust fund simply on the assumption that the municipality received statutory interest on the deposit.

Leach v Bank, 205-971; 219 NW 59

Wrongful deposit—estoppel. Where school funds have been wrongfully deposited in a bank, the fact that such funds draw interest works no estoppel on the school district to insist that such funds constitute a trust.

Leach v Bank, 205-1345; 219 NW 483

Wrongful deposit of public funds. School funds deposited in a bank by a school treasurer without authority from the school board constitute a trust fund, which presumptively exists and remains in the cash on hand when the bank passes into the hands of a receiver.

Leach v Bank, 205-1345; 219 NW 483

Wrongful deposits—resulting trust. A deposit of school funds in a bank is wrongful when made without the filing of a depository bond and the approval thereof by the school treasurer and the board of directors. Held that the finding of a bond not formally approved, in the desk of the president of the school board after the failure of the bank, and the evidence in connection therewith, were insufficient to show an implied approval of the bond.

Leach v Bank, 207-478; 223 NW 171

Wrongful deposits. Deposits by a city treasurer of city funds in a bank are wrongful and title to such deposits does not pass to the bank when the city council had simply "designated" the bank as a city depository, without specifying the amount of deposits authorized and without requiring or receiving any bond as required by statute. (§5651, C., '27 [§7420.01 et seq., C., '39]).

Leach v Bank, 204-1083; 216 NW 748; 65 ALR 679

V TERMINATION OF TRUST RELATIONSHIPS

Trust relation terminated by accepting draft. Trust funds in a bank lose their trust character and become general assets of the bank when the bank, under authority from the owner of the trust funds, remits to the owner its draft against existing funds, for the amount of the trust funds. The loss of said trust character necessarily precludes any claim of preference in case of the subsequent insolvency of the drawer-bank.

Leach v Bank, 203-398; 212 NW 746

Leach v Bank, 204-497; 212 NW 748; 215 NW 728

Trust relation—termination. The relation of principal and agent which exists between a collecting bank and the party who remits a claim for collection, terminates (and necessarily the trust relationship) when the collecting bank remits the proceeds of the collection by draft, in accordance with the instructions of the principal.

Leach v Bank, 207-1254; 219 NW 496; 224 NW 583

Remittance by draft—termination of trust relation. The act of a bank which had made a collection for the owner of a claim, in forwarding the proceeds to the owner by draft, as the owner had directed, terminates any trust relation which may have attended the collection and substitutes therefor the relation of debtor and creditor.

Andrew v Bank, 204-870; 216 NW 553

Trust relation terminated by accepting draft. The act of the holder of a promissory note in forwarding it to a bank for collection from the maker (not the bank) creates the trust relation of principal and agent, but such relation is ipso facto terminated and the relation of debtor and creditor substituted by the act of the bank in issuing and forwarding to said holder its draft for the proceeds of said collection strictly in accordance with the holder's direction.

Leach v Bank, 202-875; 211 NW 527

Trust deposit—termination of trust relationship. Where a bank deposit was made for the sole purpose of enabling the depositor to procure a certified check for use in bidding on a public improvement, with the understanding that if the depositor was not awarded the contract he would surrender the certified check and receive a draft for the amount of the deposit, held, that no trust relationship existed after the depositor surrendered his certified check and in return received a draft for the amount of his deposit.

Andrew v Bank, 215-1336; 245 NW 226

Fatal delay in enforcing unknown trust. A trust fund created without the knowledge of the cestui que trust, in the form of a bank deposit in a national bank, and carried on the books of the bank for many years, and then dropped, may not, after the bank has become insolvent, a receiver appointed, its affairs liquidated, and its charter surrendered and canceled, be enforced against a bank which took over certain assets of the old insolvent bank and assumed certain of its obligations, not including, however, the trust fund in question.

Short v Bank, 210-1202; 232 NW 507

Acceptance of draft—effect. A cestui que trust who accepts from the trustee a certificate of deposit in lieu of the actual trust funds, and later accepts a draft in lieu of the certificate of deposit, thereby cancels the trust relation, and substitutes therefor the relation of debtor and creditor.

Leach v Bank, 204-954; 216 NW 267

Loss of trust relation. A principal who, instead of demanding cash of his collecting agent, his bank, accepts the certificates of deposit of the latter, thereby terminates the trust relation, becomes a simple depositor, and loses any right of preference in case of the insolvency of the bank; and this result is not overcome by oral testimony to the effect that no such result was intended.

Valentine v Andrew, 203-463; 212 NW 674

Estoppel to set up trust. A chattel mortgagee who, knowing that the mortgaged property has been sold without his consent, and that the proceeds of the sale have been deposited in a bank to the mortgagor's credit, accepts the mortgagor's check on said deposited proceeds for the amount due under the mortgage, together with security for the payment of said check in the form of an assignment by the mortgagor of the balance of said deposit in the bank (which had failed), thereby estops himself from asserting that said deposited proceeds have always belonged to him and therefore constitute a trust fund in his favor.

Andrew v Bank, 209-273; 228 NW 12

Check on trust fund—delayed presentation. Where a check is drawn on a special deposit or trust fund, the act of the payee in withholding presentation for a few days, and until the bank had become insolvent and closed its doors, does not nullify the trust.

Rime v Andrew, 217-1030; 252 NW 542

Non-change in trust funds. The unauthorized act of a bank in drawing in favor of the owner of trust funds in its possession a cashier's check for the amount of such funds, and its act in placing said check among the papers of said owner, cannot change the trust character of said funds.

Leach v Bank, 204-497; 212 NW 748; 215 NW 728

Receivership for insolvent trustee creates vacancy—power to fill. A judicial finding that a banking institution is insolvent and the appointment of a receiver to liquidate its affairs, ipso facto, (1) transfer, to the custody of the law, trust property held by said insolvent as a duly appointed testamentary trustee, (2) deprive said insolvent trustee of power further to act in said trusteeship, and (3) necessarily create a vacancy in the office of said trust—which vacancy the probate court has legal power to fill by appointing a successor in trust, (1) on the sworn application therefor supplemented by the professional statement of counsel, (2) at an ex parte hearing and without notice to interested parties, and (3) without any formal proceedings whatever for the termination of said former trusteeship; and especially is this true when said former trustee, formally and by its conduct, abandons its said trusteeship and all right and interest therein.

In re Carson, 221-367; 265 NW 648

Final report by trustee after receivership. The filing of a final report by a trust company as trustee of an estate after the company had gone into receivership and could no longer perform any duty as active trustee, was not an act in administering the trust, but was the performance of its duty to make such final report upon its removal as trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Noninference as to manner of remitting funds. Authority to a banker to remit trust funds to the owner thereof by means of a draft may not be inferred from the simple fact that said owner expected the remittance to be made in that manner, the actual fact being that the owner had never given any direction as to the manner of remitting.

Andrew v Bank, 204-870; 216 NW 553

Unauthorized draft or check remittance. Trust funds in the possession of a bank do not lose their trust character by the unauthorized issuance by the bank of drafts or cashier's checks to the trust owner for the amount of the fund.

Leach v Bank, 204-497; 212 NW 748; 215 NW 728

VI PRESUMPTION OF PRESERVATION

Presumption. The presumption that a trustee has preserved a cash trust fund in his cash balance applies solely to the lowest cash balance subsequent to the creation of the trust and prior to insolvency.

Leach v Bank, 205-114; 213 NW 414; 217 NW 437; 56 ALR 801

Presumption of preservation—limitation. The presumption of fact that a trustee has preserved a cash trust fund in his cash balances applies exclusively to the lowest cash balance possessed by him subsequent to the receipt of the trust funds; and, upon proof that all other cash balances prior to such low balance have been used in the payment of the debts of the trustee, the trustor must find his funds in such low balance, or not find them at all.

—continued

Andrew v Bank, 205-1064; 217 NW 250

Presumption. Presumptively, a cash trust fund in the hands of a bank has been preserved intact, and exists in the cash balance of the bank on hand when the bank becomes insolvent; and said presumption is applicable even tho the bank originally received the trust fund through a check drawn upon itself at a time when it had insufficient funds with which to pay the check, when it is stipulated that, at a later time, the bank did receive the entire amount.

Andrew v Bank, 207-394; 223 NW 249

Following trust funds—presumption. An established trust in a bank is presumed to be embraced in the final balance turned over to the receiver (in case of insolvency) provided the cash balance in the bank at all times since the trust was created has not dropped below the amount of the trust fund.

Andrew v Bank, 217-232; 251 NW 860

Presumption as to preservation. Upon the establishment of a trust in cash funds in the hands of an insolvent bank, the rebuttable presumption is not that the bank preserved the trust in the general mass of bank assets, but that the bank preserved the trust in the smallest cash bank balance existing between the creation of the trust and the time of enforcing the trust.

Poweshiek County v Bank, 209-467; 228 NW 32; 82 ALR 39

Limit on preference. When a cestui que trust fails to trace a cash trust fund into the assets of the bank other than the cash assets, an order of preference in payment against the receiver must not exceed a sum coming into the hands of the receiver in excess of the lowest cash balance existing in the bank after the trust came into existence.

Leach v Bank, 205-971; 219 NW 59

Intermingled funds—presumption—scope of. The presumption that the cash on hand in an insolvent bank and coming into the hands of the receiver embraces a cash trust fund with which the bank has been intrusted is a rigidly limited presumption—a presumption having no application beyond its literal terms. If the trustor lays claim to other non-cash items of bank assets he must, by evidence, trace his trust funds into such items, even tho the receiver has in the meantime converted such non-cash items into cash.

Townsend v Bank, 212-1078; 237 NW 356

Intermingled trust and private funds. Upon the insolvency of a trustee, it cannot be presumed that trust funds were preserved in the cash and loan notes taken over by the receiver when the proof shows (1) that the trustee received trust funds in the form of checks and, instead of cashing the checks and holding the cash for application on certain bonds as was his sole duty, he converted said checks by indorsing and depositing them in a bank in his personally owned deposit account, and thereby promiscuously intermingled both classes of funds, (2) that, from time to time, he drew checks against said intermingled funds for the purpose of carrying on his own private loan business, or so drew checks and placed the proceeds in his cash drawer for the same purpose, (3) that during all said time said private business was carried on at a heavy loss, and (4) that at one time after the trust funds were received the trustee's deposit account was materially overdrawn.

Andrew v Trust Co., 217-464; 250 NW 177

Presumption—right to rebut. The presumption that a cash trust fund was preserved in the trustee's cash balance may be rebutted by the receiver of the insolvent trustee.

Andrew v Bank, 204-1317; 217 NW 438

Presumption as to cash balance. Presumptively a cash trust fund in the hands of a bank has been preserved in the actual cash on hand in the bank at the time it closes and passes into the hands of a receiver, and when the presumption is not rebutted the beneficiary of the trust is entitled to receive his property out of said cash balance or to share therein pro rata with other preferred creditors.

Andrew v Bank, 217-69; 251 NW 23

Preservation—presumption. Trust funds in the form of cash are presumptively preserved in the cash balance which passed into the hands of the receiver for the insolvent trustee.

Leach v Bank, 204-1083; 216 NW 748; 65 ALR 679

Negating preservation. Proof that a bank used cash trust funds in the payment of the debts of the bank necessarily proves that the bank did not preserve said funds in the non-cash assets of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 205-1064; 217 NW 250

Nullifying presumption. Even if it be conceded, arguendo, that the agreement of a bank was to hold the trust funds in "liquid assets" and to return to the trustor "in kind all cash or its equivalent", and that said agreement authorized the bank to convert the trust funds into bills receivable or to deposit them with correspondent banks, yet the court cannot presume that said trust funds, over and above the amount of cash on hand in the bank when it closed its doors, were embraced in the bank's bills receivable or in the bank's deposits in correspondent banks, when the receiver affirmatively shows not only that the trust funds were not invested in bills receivable or deposited with correspondent banks, but that from the time the trust was created the bills receivable and the deposits with correspondent banks steadily declined.

In re American Bank, 210-568; 231 NW 311

Wrongful deposits—presumption. Presumptively a bank retains intact a wrongful deposit of money, and has it on hand in its cash balance on the day of insolvency, a presumption which becomes conclusive in the absence of contrary evidence by the receiver.

Leach v Bank, 207-478; 223 NW 171

Presumption. It will be presumed, in the absence of a counter showing, that a bank receiving a wrongful deposit of municipal funds retained the same in its possession, and that the same passed to its receiver.

New Hampton v Leach, 201-316; 207 NW 348

Unallowable presumption. No presumption exists that a bank which has wrongfully received an ordinary deposit of money, has converted the same into other non-cash items of property belonging to the bank at the time of insolvency.

Andrew v Bank, 207-394; 223 NW 249

Limited equitable preference. A bank which, in making collection on a draft sent to it "for collection", receives in payment the check of the drawee on itself for the full amount of the draft cannot, in a proceeding between the drawer of the draft and the subsequently appointed receiver of the bank, be deemed to have collected the draft, except to the extent that the check drawer then had money in his checking account in the collecting bank. Resultantly, an equitable preference to the funds in the hands of the receiver is limited to the amount so on deposit.

Andrew v Bank, 207-948; 222 NW 8

Presumption—evidence to overcome. It will be presumed that a bank acting as trustee has preserved the subject-matter of the trust; and in case of insolvency, the receiver does not establish dissipation of the trust by a mere showing that he, when appointed, received in money much less than the amount of the trust, it appearing that the amount of the trust had passed into the general assets of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 203-546; 213 NW 245

Tracing trust property—requirements. No presumption exists that a cash trust fund in the hands of a bank was preserved in any or all of the many general, non-cash assets of the bank, nor in the cash deposits of the bank in other banks. In other words, while the beneficiary of the trust may trace his property into such items of assets, yet this can be done only by definite evidence and by proof that the assets have been augmented and the extent of such augmentation.

Andrew v Bank, 217-69; 251 NW 23

Essential allegation—presumption. The presumption that a trustee has preserved the subject-matter of the trust cannot exist, in the absence of an allegation that said subject-matter came into the hands of the representative of the trustee, and some proof to sustain the allegation.

Andrew v Bank, 204-431; 215 NW 623

Presumption as to retaining. The act of a banker, after collecting a trust fund, in issuing and retaining in his own possession, on his own motion, a demand certificate of deposit payable to the owner of the fund will not, of itself, overcome the presumption that he did in fact retain the actual trust funds.

Andrew v Bank, 204-870; 216 NW 553

VII ENFORCEMENT OF TRUST

Discussion. See 16 ILR 256—Recovery of trust assets

Fundamental requirements. A trust may not be impressed upon funds in the hands of the receiver of an insolvent unless it is established (1) that the insolvent received in a trust capacity the particular funds in question, and (2) that the receiver also received said particular funds either in specie or by way of augmentation of the assets which did come into his hands.

Andrew v Bank, 204-870; 216 NW 553

Following trust funds. A cestui que trust owns the property into which he can trace dissipated trust funds.

Mandel v Siverly, 213-109; 238 NW 596

Necessary proof to enforce. A trust deposit in an insolvent bank cannot be enforced as such against the receiver of the bank when the proof is silent on the issue whether the receiver, actually or presumptively, received said trust fund.

Andrew v Bank, 215-1336; 245 NW 226

Insufficient tracing of funds. A trust fund is not traced into the hands of a collecting bank by simply showing that the bank, in collecting a draft as agent of the owner, accepted (1) an unnamed amount in cash, and (2) checks on various other local banks; and this is true even tho the cash on hand in the bank on the day of insolvency exceeded the amount of the trust fund.

Andrew v Bank, 207-403; 223 NW 176

Check as working augmentation of assets. The act of a bank in receiving and accepting an amply protected check on itself in payment of a collection for its principal works a legal augmentation of the assets of the bank, even tho the account of the check drawer is not charged with the amount of the check.

Leach v Bank, 204-1343; 217 NW 445

Augmentation of assets—acts constituting.

The act of a bank in accepting a surrender of its outstanding general certificate of deposit, and in issuing in lieu thereof, and for the same amount, a special certificate of deposit, wherein it specifically recognized that it was holding said amount in a named trust capacity, constitutes an augmentation of the assets of the bank, even tho no money was actually handled in the transaction.

Dugan v Bank, 205-171; 217 NW 831

Augmentation of assets—nonpresumption.

An equitable preference in the payment of trust funds may not be decreed against the receiver of the insolvent trustee when there is no evidence whatever as to the property taken over by the receiver except the concession by the receiver that he had "assets sufficient to pay" the claims if the court decreed an equitable preference in payment.

Leach v Bank, 204-760; 216 NW 16

Andrew v Bank, 205-237; 216 NW 12

Presumption in re augmentation of assets.

Mere proof that a check payable to a bank was paid by the remotely located drawee will not warrant the presumption that the amount of such payment actually reached the payee bank and became a part of its cash assets.

Andrew v Bank, 207-407; 219 NW 929

Presumption as to payment. The law will presume that a check was paid on proof that the check was, subsequent to its execution, (1) stamped "Paid", and (2) charged by the drawee to the account of the drawer.

Andrew v Bank, 207-407; 219 NW 929

Charging and crediting accounts—augmentation of assets. The act of a bank which is the common depository of both the drawer and payee of a check in charging the amount of the check to the account of the drawer and in crediting the same amount to the account of the payee constitutes an augmentation of the assets of the bank.

Leach v Bank, 204-1083; 216 NW 748; 65 ALR 679

Nonaugmentation of assets. Proof that a bank to which checks were sent for collection put them through the clearing house on a day when the clearance was against said bank affirmatively shows that the assets of the bank were not augmented by the amount of said checks because such handling of the checks amounted to applying them to the bank's own debt; otherwise, if the clearance was in favor of said bank and the amount thereof is paid in cash.

Leach v Bank, 207-1254; 219 NW 496; 224 NW 583

Nonaugmentation of assets. When a trust fund in an insolvent bank is wrongfully deposited with the bank's correspondent and is used in the general operations of the depositing bank, it may not be said that the funds of the depositing bank were "augmented" because the corresponding bank returned to the depositing bank a larger amount of collateral than it would have returned had the wrongful deposit not been made.

Ronna v Bank, 213-855; 236 NW 68

Negating augmentation of assets. The fact that the cash balance in a bank after the receipt by the bank of trust funds never dropped below the amount of such trust is of no avail to the beneficiary of the trust when the further fact affirmatively appears that the trust funds were, immediately upon their receipt, used by the bank in the payment of its debts.

Andrew v Bank, 204-878; 216 NW 1

Trust fund—improper allowance against assets. The allowance of a trust fund as a preferred claim should be against the fund properly traced into the hands of the receiver, not against the assets of the bank.

Standard Oil v Andrew, 218-438; 255 NW 497

Trust fund—interest. Interest is not allowable on an established trust fund against an insolvent bank.

Standard Oil v Andrew, 218-438; 255 NW 497

Interest as affecting status. A testamentary trust fund deposited as an investment in a saving account under the terms of the will does not lose its preferential character because of the payment of interest on the deposit.

Bates v Bank, 222-370; 269 NW 341

Intermingled funds—cash in excess of trust—effect. A bank, having been appointed trustee of testamentary trust funds, deposited said funds with itself, and intermingled said trust funds with its general funds, but carried the trust funds in an account which clearly revealed their trust character. The bank was merged into another bank. The trust account, and all other deposit accounts (general and special), and the entire cash balance, of the bank, were transferred to the merging bank, the latter agreeing to pay all deposit liabilities of the merged bank. The transferred deposit accounts were thereafter carried in the merging bank as theretofore carried in the merged bank. The merging bank became insolvent. The cash balances of the respective banks were always in excess of said trust funds.

Held, said trust funds were intact, and were entitled to preference in payment over the general creditors of the merging bank.

Bates v Bank, 222-370; 269 NW 341

Bailment—dissipation—effect. Even tho a trust relation is clearly established in relation to the deposit of government bonds with a bank as a bailment, yet the receiver of such insolvent bank may defeat a plea of preference in payment by showing that, prior to his appointment, the bank had wholly dissipated the bailment and that, therefore, no part of the same came in any form into his possession.

Leach v Bank, 203-401; 212 NW 694; 51 ALR 900

Bailment—dissipation—effect. A bailor who asks that his claim against the receiver of an insolvent bailee be decreed preferred, on the plea that the insolvent wrongfully converted the subject-matter of the bailment by hypothecating the same for a loan, must trace the proceeds of the conversion into the hands of the insolvent to the augmentation of the assets coming into the hands of the receiver.

Leach v Bank, 202-885; 211 NW 535

Affirmative showing of misappropriation. An affirmative showing that a bank, prior to its failure, used trust funds in part in the payment of the obligations of the bank and in part in the payment of the personal obligations of one of the officers of the bank necessarily precludes any equitable preference in payment of such trust funds from the assets of the insolvent bank.

Mowatt v Bank, 204-1106; 216 NW 760

Presumption of misappropriation. The act of a bank in actively, for several months, concealing from the owner of trust funds the receipt of such funds, and later in making remittance of small amounts thereof, justifies the legal presumption that the bank had wholly misappropriated said fund, especially when no effort is made to trace the funds into the hands of a subsequently appointed receiver for the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 204-870; 216 NW 553

Check as equivalent of cash—presumption. When the deposit of a county treasurer in an insolvent bank consists merely of transfers of credit from the accounts of private depositors in the same bank to the account of said treasurer, made on the basis of checks drawn by the private depositors on said bank (in order to enable the bank to pay the taxes due from the drawers to the treasurer), the law cannot presume that said checks were the equivalent of cash, in the absence of evidence as to the cash on hand in the bank at the various times; nor can the law presume under such circumstances that the bank, on receipt of a check, would, if requested, have forthwith paid said taxes to the treasurer in cash.

Poweshiek County v Bank, 209-467; 228 NW 32; 82 ALR 89

Wrongful sale of mortgaged property—dissipation of proceeds. Conceding, arguendo, that when mortgaged personal property is sold without the consent of the mortgagee, and the proceeds are deposited in a bank to the mortgagor's credit, said proceeds constitute a trust fund of which the mortgagee is the beneficiary, yet such trust is dissolved if such proceeds are wholly dissipated in the payment of the debts of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 209-273; 228 NW 12

VIII PAYMENT OF TRUST

Depleted fund. If a cash trust fund is duly established, and successfully traced into the final cash balance of an insolvent bank, and paid from said balance under an order of court, a subsequently established trust, which is likewise traced into said balance, can be enforced only against the amount remaining when the subsequent trust is established; and even then, such latter trust beneficiary may be compelled to prorate said remaining amount with other trust beneficiaries.

Andrew v Bank, 207-394; 223 NW 249

Equitable preference in payment—limitation. An equitable preference in the payment of cash trust funds may not be allowed against all the assets of an insolvent bank, but only against the cash balance which passed to the receiver, there being no claim that such trust funds have been preserved in the non-cash assets of the bank.

Leach v Bank, 204-1343; 217 NW 445

Preference— from what moneys payable. The money actually on hand in an insolvent bank at the time it closes its doors is the only fund from which preferred claims may be paid,—in the absence of a successful attempt to trace trust funds into other moneys or property.

Andrew v Bank, 208-392; 226 NW 73

VIII PAYMENT OF TRUST—concluded

Tracing trust funds. A solvent bank, which, in due course of business, comes into possession of a trust fund of which its correspondent bank is trustee, effects full delivery of said fund to the said trustee by crediting said trustee with the amount of said fund, and notifying the trustee accordingly.

Shifflett v Bank, 215-823; 246 NW 757

Galvin v Citizens Bank, 217-494; 250 NW 729

Failure to argue vital statutory question. Where the holder of a cashier's check on an insolvent bank is given by the receiver, the preferential classification of a "depositor", the appellate court will not accord an enlarged preference under this section, when said statute manifestly presents a grave problem of construction and is in no manner argued.

Andrew v Bank, 214-590; 243 NW 152

"Clearings" defined. The word "clearings" in banking parlance relates only to transactions between banks.

Andrew v Bank, 215-1336; 245 NW 226

Collections—insolvency of collecting bank. The drawer of drafts which were paid by drawees by checks drawn on bank to which drafts had been sent for collection was not entitled to preference on failure of bank on theory of trust relationship, since there was no increase in bank's funds, and where another draft sent to such collecting bank was paid by drawee by check on another bank, which check was used in exchange of checks between collecting bank and such other bank, the drawer was not entitled to preference on insolvency of such collecting bank since its funds were not augmented by payment of draft.

Rorebeck v Benedict Co., 26 F 2d, 440

Draftholder — when not entitled to preference. Where a bank, instead of paying a certificate of deposit from its cash on hand, issued and delivered to the certificate holder a draft in order to enable the latter to obtain the cash from the drawee, it may not be said that the draft was issued "for the bona fide transfer of funds" within the meaning of this section. It follows that, if the draft is not paid, the holder is not entitled, under said section, to a preference in payment over other creditors of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 215-290; 245 NW 329

Draft as preferred claim. Delay in cashing a draft purchased by the holder and payable to himself for the purpose of transferring his funds from the drawer-bank to another bank will not deprive the holder of his statutory right to a preferential repayment of the money paid for the draft in case the drawer-bank becomes insolvent before the draft is cashed, when such delay was induced by the conduct of the officers of the drawer-bank.

Andrew v Bank, 212-1375; 238 NW 425

Draft for clearances. The payee of a draft given for bank clearances and unpaid because of the insolvency of the drawer is entitled to be paid in full before the payment of any general claim or of any depositor.

Andrew v Bank, 215-1150; 247 NW 797

Draft for clearings. A draft drawn and issued, in payment of clearings at a time when the drawer's account with the drawee is overdrawn, is not drawn "against actual existing values", even tho the drawee holds, on another transaction with the drawer, excess collateral belonging to the drawer sufficient to pay said draft, the drawee never having agreed that the drawer might draw drafts against said excess collateral. (Statute since amended.)

Andrew v Bank, 216-972; 250 NW 152

Purchase of draft — nonpreference. Record reviewed and held that the purchase of a draft was for the purpose of more safely preserving the money, and for the purpose of concealing the money from the holder's creditors, with resulting consequence that the holder, when the bank became insolvent, was entitled to no preference over other creditors.

Liams v Andrew, 215-923; 247 NW 277

Insolvency—draft as preferred claim. One who, in good faith and for the bona fide purpose of meeting an obligation, long prior thereto contracted, buys a draft of his bank of deposit, and pays therefor with a check drawn by him on his deposit in said bank, will hold said draft as a preferred claim in case the drawer-bank becomes insolvent, it being shown that at the time the bank possessed ample funds to pay said check.

In re Bank, 220-61; 261 NW 807; 101 ALR 627

"Money paid for draft". A bank depositor who holds unpaid certified checks to the full amount of his deposit, and surrenders the checks to the certifying bank at a time when the bank does not have sufficient funds with which to pay the checks, and then receives in return, from the bank, a draft for the amount of the checks, may not be said to have paid money for the draft.

Andrew v Bank, 215-1336; 245 NW 226

Preference for clearance drafts. The statutory provision that the payee of a draft drawn and issued "against actual existing values", for bank clearances, is entitled to a preference in payment in case the drawer-bank becomes insolvent, imposes an obligation on the payee bank to establish that the draft was drawn against values which the drawer-bank then had on deposit with the drawee-bank. (Statute now changed.)

Andrew v Bank, 214-204; 242 NW 80

Transfer of funds by draft—statutory preference. A bank depositor who, with the bona fide intent to transfer his deposit to a new depository, presents to his bank of deposit a check for the full amount of his deposit, and receives a draft therefor (the bank having cash funds with which to pay the check), thereby in legal effect "pays money" for the draft, and acquires a statutory preferred claim against all the assets of the draft-issuing bank, irrespective of the amount of cash on hand in said bank when it failed.

Bates v Bank, 219-78; 257 NW 578

Transfer of funds by check. Where, "for the bona fide transfer of funds" a cashier's check is purchased by one who supposed he was receiving a draft (and the bank official so knew), the court may treat the check as a draft in order to afford the check holder a preference in case the bank becomes insolvent before the check is paid.

Reason: So treating the check constitutes, in effect, a proper reformation of the check to comply with the mutual understanding of the parties.

Andrew v Bank, 216-1165; 250 NW 487

Trust relationship—pleading. The claim that the purchase price of a bank draft which was not paid constitutes a trust fund because the bank was insolvent at the time of the receipt of the money and the issuance of the draft, must, manifestly, be presented by definite plea and supported by sufficient proof.

Reorganization—waiver—estoppel. A general waiver by a depositor and creditor of an insolvent bank of a percentage of "any and all claims" which he may have against the bank, in return for which he receives an agreement from a reorganizing bank for payment of the balance of his claims, is final and conclusive when he knows the full purpose of such waiver, and acquiesces therein until the reorganization is effected.

Ronna v Bank, 213-855; 236 NW 68

Waiver by depositors—effect on nonsigners. The act of a majority of the depositors of a bank (owning a large majority of the deposits) in signing waivers deferring payment of their deposits, in order to preserve the bank as a going concern, cannot be deemed the legal equivalent of an express agreement on their part that the depositors who do not sign such waivers shall be paid in full before such signers are paid; nor can such signing be deemed prejudicial to the nonsigners; nor, by such signing, can said signers be deemed to have lost their status as depositors and thereby become mere lenders of money to the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 216-739; 249 NW 768; 88 ALR 1003

Depositor's agreement—conditions. An order of the probate court, authorizing a national bank acting as executor of an estate to execute a depositor's agreement relative to the estate funds, should specifically provide that said order is entered on the condition that the same shall not prejudice the right of the heirs, (1) to a lien upon any securities in possession of the executor, (2) to the right of action against the executor to recover the amount due, and (3) to any existing rights under federal law.

Collection and management of estate—compounding claim. Andrew v Trust Co., 219-1059; 258 NW 921

Dissolution—wholesale transfer of assets—right of creditors. A good-faith transfer by a going bank of substantially all its assets, and a good-faith acceptance of such transfer by the transferee under an agreement by the transferee to pay all record depositors, does not impose on the transferee liability to pay a nonrecord depositor when the transferred assets prove insufficient to pay the record depositors, and the transferor is not shown to have been insolvent at the time of the transfer.

Garvey v Trust Co., 214-401; 239 NW 518

Reorganization—classifying claims. In the reorganization of an insolvent bank under statutory authority, the small claims, such as $10 and less, may be constitutionally placed in a class by themselves and paid in full while larger claims are accorded less favorable terms of payment.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Certificate of deposit—permissible impairment. A bank depositor may not successfully claim that his certificate of deposit was unconstitutionally impaired by a later, state-approved, good-faith, bank reorganization (in which he did not join) under which all claimants (claims over $10) were given equal but less favorable terms of payment than their contracts originally contemplated, when, at the time of his deposit, the statute law contemplated and substantially provided for such reorganization and change in terms of payment; and if the actual reorganization was effected under later statutes amplifying the said former ones, the answer is that he was dealing with a quasi-public corporation, and that his contract of deposit must reasonably yield to the police power in the interest of the public generally, especially in an emergency resulting from a great financial depression.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Insolvency—assumption of liabilities—construction. The written agreement by a bank to take over the assets of an insolvent bank and apparently to assume the payment of all the liabilities of the insolvent will be controlled, in its general terms, by the official bank resolution pertaining to the matter. Held, under this rule, that the assumption in a certain case embraced liabilities appearing only on the books of the insolvent bank.

German Bank v Bank, 203-276; 211 NW 386

Merger—creditor's right to follow assets. A creditor of a banking corporation may, for the satisfaction of his claim, follow the assets of the corporation into the hands of another like corporation which has bodily taken over said assets and paid therefor by an issuance of its corporate shares of stock—it appearing that the latter corporation had assumed the liabilities of the former but had become insolvent.

Andrew v Bank & Trust, 219-1059; 258 NW 921

Merger—nontrust relation. Under a valid agreement between two banking institutions to the effect that one should be merged into the other, the title of the bank receiving the assets of the merged bank and the title of said receiving bank to the money paid to it by the stockholders of the merged bank must be deemed absolute and not in trust, when every material term of the agreement affecting the financial interest of the stockholders of the merged bank has been substantially fulfilled.

Andrew v Bank & Trust, 219-921; 258 NW 911

Merger—immaterial failure to perform—trust relation. On the question whether a merger contract between two banks had been so far performed that the bank receiving the assets of the merged bank (and other moneys) took absolute title or only in trust, it will be deemed immaterial that said receiving bank failed to comply with a provision which was, in truth and fact, no part of the consideration for the merger and which was not performed because the superintendent of banking legally refused his approval.

Merger contract—nonrescission. A contract for the merger of two banking corporations must be deemed final and irrevocable, even though there has not been full compliance with every provision thereof, (1) when the corporation receiving the merger has passed into insolvency, (2) when, prior to such insolvency, substantial and good-faith acts were performed by both parties in fulfillment of the contract, (3) when neither corporation ever attempted to rescind, and (4) when the restoration of the status quo would probably be impossible.

Bank examiner's final report vacated—procedure. An application by the superintendent of banking to set aside and vacate on the ground of fraud an order approving the final report and discharging the receiver and examiner of a closed bank is governed by Ch 552 of the code—the statutory procedure to vacate and modify judgments—which provides a complete legal remedy for setting aside a judgment or order after the term in which it is entered and within one year of the rendition of the judgment.

Bates v Loan Co., 227-1347; 291 NW 184

Vacating final report of receiver—jurisdiction of court. After approval of the final report of the receiver of a closed bank which discharged both the receiver and the examiner in charge, an application by the receiver for vacation of the order consented to the jurisdiction of the court only as to the receiver, but the court had jurisdiction to deal summarily with the examiner by prescribing the form of notice to be served on him and to set the time for his appearance so long as the statutory provisions for vacating and modifying judgments were complied with and the application filed within one year from the date of rendition of the order attacked.

Bates v Loan Co., 227-1347; 291 NW 184

Appearance date agreed on—waiver of notice. Where the parties in a proceeding to vacate an order of court approving the final report of a bank receiver stipulate that the court may set a date for appearance later than the second day of the term, and that the bank examiner will file an appearance or pleading on or before that date, and that no other or further notice to him shall be necessary, the examiner may not assert the departure from the statutory requirements as to the appearance date as a ground for challenging the jurisdiction of the court by a special appearance.

9239.7 Secured creditors—contracts with third parties.

Insolvency—transfer of assets—trust fund doctrine. The transfer by an insolvent bank, while in the hands of a receiver, of all or of a part of its assets to another bank which pays nothing therefor, but assumes the payment of certain of the liabilities of the insolvent, does not deprive a judgment creditor of the insolvent's of the right to follow said assets into the hands of the transferee and to impress a lien thereon on the basis of the pro rata value of the assets transferred; and this is true tho the transferee bank had no knowledge of the creditor's claim when it accepted the transfer.

Superintendent as sole receiver—exceptions. The statutory declaration that the superintendent of banking shall be the sole and only receiver or liquidating officer for state incorporated banks has no application (1) when the receiver is prayed for, not by said superintendent, but by private parties, and for a bank which has largely closed out its business as a bank, and is preparing to dissolve, and (2) when the receiver is prayed for as an auxiliary remedy in an action for the adjudication of matters in which the superintendent of banking is interested adversely to plaintiff.

Bates v Niles, 226-1077; 285 NW 626

Liability of bank superintendent for failure to collect claims. When there was no evidence of wrongdoing on the part of the superintendent of banking in his capacity as bank receiver, nor sufficient evidence to show negligence on the part of the bank examiner, a previous decision that the superintendent was negligent in not filing claims within the statutory time for filing in order to collect them, does not control when an objection was made because there was no accounting of these claims in the final report of the receiver when neither the issues nor parties are identical with the previously decided case.

Bates v Niles, 226-1077; 285 NW 626

Compromise of claims. A receiver may not compromise claims except under prior authority of, or under subsequent ratification by, the court.

Andrew v Rivers, 207-343; 223 NW 102

Rents—priority over receiver. The receiver of an insolvent bank who, pending receivership, acquires, on behalf of the insolvent, a deed to real estate "subject to" a specified first mortgage, holds the rent notes and the proceeds thereof, covering the redemption period, subject to the said mortgagee's right thereto under his mortgage pledge thereof.

Connecticut Ins. v Stahle, 215-1188; 247 NW 648

Rents—priority over receiver. The receiver of an insolvent bank who forecloses a second mortgage belonging to the insolvent and receives a sheriff's deed, acquires by said deed simply the rights formerly possessed by the mortgagor-owner. It follows that the receiver holds said land subject to the right of the first mortgagee subsequently to perfect and enforce a pledge of the undisposed of rents, in order to satisfy a deficiency judgment, as provided in the first mortgage. (Schlesselman v Martin, 207 Iowa 907, overruled.)

Metropolitan v Smith, 215-1052; 247 NW 503

Rents—priority over receiver. The receiver of an insolvent bank must be deemed to hold the insolvent's mortgaged land subject to the right of the mortgagee, in order to satisfy a deficiency judgment, to perfect and enforce a pledge of the undisposed of rents as provided in the mortgage. In other words, the receiver may no more deny the mortgagee's right to said rents than might the insolvent deny such right.

Bates v Zehnpfennig, 220-164; 262 NW 141

Compromise—approval by court—review. The action of the court in bank receivership proceedings in approving a compromise on a written guaranty by the directors of payment of certain assets of the bank will not be set aside in the absence of a showing that such approval is not in the interest of the depositors; and especially is this true when an element of uncertainty exists as to the extent of the legal recovery under the guaranty.

Andrew v Bank, 205-712; 218 NW 520

Bank examiner's final report vacated—procedure. An application by the superintendent of banking to set aside and vacate on the ground of fraud an order approving the final report and discharging the receiver and examiner of a closed bank is governed by Ch 552 of the code—the statutory procedure to vacate and modify judgments—which provides a complete legal remedy for setting aside a judgment or order after the term in which it is entered and within one year of the rendition of the judgment.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Double liability not subject to off-set. Funds voluntarily paid into a bank by a stockholder thereof, in order to repair or make good the impaired capital of the bank while it is a going concern, may not later, and after the bank has become insolvent and has passed into the hands of a receiver, be offset by the stockholder against the demand of the receiver for a 100 percent assessment on the stock for the benefit of the creditors.

Andrew v Bank, 204-243; 213 NW 925; 56 ALR 521

Bank deposits—no set-off against assessment irregularly made. A purported assessment by the directors of a bank is not chargeable against the deposit of a deceased stockholder in the bank, when, under the record, the payments to be made were purely voluntary in nature as distinguished from enforceable statutory assessments by order of the state banking department.

Younkin v Bank, 226-343; 284 NW 151

Legal and equitable owners differentiated. The legal owners of corporate shares of stock may be legally liable to assessments, while one who simply has an equitable interest in said shares of stock may not be so liable.

Andrew v Bank & Trust, 219-921; 258 NW 911

Stockholders' assessment to replace impaired capital—jury question. Conflicting evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether an assessment on bank stockholders was for the purpose of making good the impaired capital of the bank, or whether it was a voluntary arrangement among the stockholders to form a pool and purchase from the bank certain assets of doubtful value and thereby to relieve, in part, the individual guarantors thereon.

Andrew v Austin, 213-963; 232 NW 79

Assessment—nonpower of superintendent. The superintendent of banking has no power to order an assessment on the stockholders of an insolvent bank.

Home Bk. v Berggren, 211-697; 234 NW 573

Improper payment—assessment on bank stock. An executor will not be given credit for estate funds voluntarily used by him, in discharging an assessment on bank stock which is held by the estate solely as collateral security.

In re Moe, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

Corporate entity—unallowable disregard of. Where collaterally secured bonds, owned by a corporation, were depreciated in value by the wrongful act of the collateral-holding trustee in permitting worthless collaterals to be substituted for valuable collaterals, the resulting damages belong solely to the corporation. In other words, a stockholder may not maintain an action against the trustee for alleged special damages suffered by said stockholder consequent on the fact that said depreciation so impaired the capital of the corporation that an assessment on the corporate shares became necessary, and that the stockholder was unable to pay said assessment and thereby lost his said stock.

Grimes v Brammer, 214-405; 239 NW 550

9248 Assessment enforced. (Repealed.)

Issuance of stock—estoppel to question. One, who has explicit knowledge of the facts under which corporate shares of stock were issued to him and later accepts and retains a dividend paid on the stock, will not, at least as against creditors of the corporation, be heard to say that the stock was improperly issued to him.

9248-a1 Liability for deficiency. (Repealed.)

Additional remedy to enforce. A statutory assessment against a holder of bank stock in order to restore the impaired capital of the bank creates a personal liability on the part of the stockholder, and the statutory remedy for enforcing such personal liability by a sale of the stockholder's stock may, after the stockholder acquires his stock, be constitutionally supplemented by an additional statutory remedy, to wit: an action at law to recover of the stockholder the balance due on said assessment after selling said stock. The granting of such additional remedy does not impair the stockholder's contract in a constitutional sense.

Woodbine Bk. v Shriver, 212-196; 236 NW 10

Sale of stock for payment of assessment—common-law or statutory right of action. As to a stockholder who acquired his stock prior to the enactment of a statute permitting the sale of stock to enforce payment of a stockholder's assessment to reimburse an impairment of the bank capital, such statute does not necessarily exclude a common-law remedy by action when not so construed by the highest state court, and such statute declaring that the stockholder shall be liable for any deficiency after applying the proceeds of such sale, and providing for its collection by suit, is not a deprivation of property without due process by impairing a contract obligation.

Shriver v Bank, 285 US 467

9250 Liability of directors. (Repealed.)

Directors' right to contract for payment of debts. A good-faith contract by the board of directors of a state bank, for and on behalf of the bank, and providing for the payment of the bank's debts incurred in the operation of the bank, is valid without any approval by the stockholders of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 216-252; 249 NW 352; 89 ALR 783

Personal liability. The directors of a bank who personally know of, and connive at, the investment of the funds of a cemetery association (in the hands of the president of said bank as trustee) in the time certificates of deposit of the bank—in violation of §10202, C., '35—are personally liable, ex maleficio, for the loss of said funds consequent on the insolvency of said bank.

Olin Assn. v Bank, 222-1053; 270 NW 455; 112 ALR 1205

9251 Liability of stockholders. (Repealed.)

Discussion. See 21 ILR 611—Scope of statute; 21 ILR 630—Corporate device to avoid liability

Improper plaintiff. An insolvent bank may not maintain an action against its stockholders to enforce and collect the superadded double liability imposed by this section.

Home Bk. v Berggren, 211-697; 234 NW 573

Foreign receiver as plaintiff.

Gruetzmacher v Quevli, 208-537; 226 NW 5

Enforcement of liability. The successful liquidation of the deposit liabilities of a failing bank by a transfer of assets to a stronger financial institution, under a good-faith contract approved by the superintendent of banking, constitutes no bar to a final liquidation of the remaining indebtedness of the failing bank by said superintendent, and to the enforcement by said officer of the stockholders' double liability on their stock.

Andrew v Bank, 216-252; 249 NW 352; 89 ALR 783

Heirs as owners of corporate shares. The heirs of an intestate may not be said to own the corporate shares of stock of the intestate, and may not, therefore, be said to be stockholders, (1) when they have never held themselves out as such owners, (2) when there has been no administration on the estate, and (3) when there is no showing as to the extent or distribution of the estate, or as to the debts and the discharge thereof.

Andrew v Dunn, 202-364; 210 NW 425

Stockholders—acts constituting. One who buys corporate bank stock necessarily becomes a stockholder even tho the bank officials in good faith but mistakenly represented that such purchase would rehabilitate the impaired capital of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 211-649; 234 NW 542

Voluntary purchase of stock to rehabilitate bank. Persons who, in an effort to rehabilitate a financially embarrassed bank and make good its impaired capital, voluntarily purchase of the bank corporate stock which had been surrendered to the bank by impecunious stockholders, must be deemed full-fledged stockholders, on ample consideration, and subject to an assessment on said stock in case the bank later becomes insolvent and passes into the hands of the superintendent of banking.

Andrew v Bank, 209-1153; 229 NW 905

Acts constituting transfer. A stockholder in a bank who has never held a formal certificate for his stock and who, having made a bona fide sale of his stock, notifies an officer of the bank of such sale, and requests a transfer of the stock on the books of the bank, and is told that such transfer would be made, ceases to be a stockholder even tho no transfer is entered on the stock book of the bank.

Andrew v Sanford, 212-300; 233 NW 529

Stockholder—who is—wholly inadequate evidence. In an equitable action to enforce, against an estate, "double" liability on bank stock, a finding and decree (based almost exclusively on the testimony of the record owner of said stock) that the deceased had actually owned said stock for some thirty years and was such owner at the time of his death, will (notwithstanding the deference accorded to the trial court in judging of the credibility of witnesses) be annulled on appeal as without adequate support in the evidence when the actions and conduct of said record owner during substantially all of said time in asserting exclusive ownership in himself, even after the death of the deceased, is wholly at war with his present testimony that he had never owned said stock and that the deceased had always owned it.

Andrew v Bank, 220-219; 261 NW 810

Who are not stockholders. A person does not, within the meaning of this section, become the owner of bank stock when, in supposedly buying the stock, he is designedly led by the president of the bank to believe and does believe that the purchase is of stock owned by the bank when in truth and fact the stock was owned by the president himself.

Bates v Bank, 222-407; 269 NW 437

Nonrecord stockholder. The statutory "double" liability of stockholders in banks is enforceable against all actual owners of stock whether they are or are not recorded on the stock book of the bank as such owners.

Andrew v Bank, 220-219; 261 NW 810

Insufficient sale. An absolute and good-faith transfer by a failing bank of part of its assets to a stronger financial institution, under a contract by which the latter agreed to discharge the deposit liabilities of the former (which contract was fulfilled) does not constitute such a "sale" or "transaction" as to relieve stockholders of their stock liability on the final liquidation of the remaining liabilities.

Andrew v Bank, 216-252; 249 NW 352; 89 ALR 783

Transfer of stock after expiration of charter—effect. When the charter of a bank expires, the legal existence of the corporation terminates; likewise terminates the legal right to transfer the stock in such sense that the transferor ceases to be a stockholder.

Andrew v Bank, 211-649; 234 NW 542

Expiration of charter—effect. The liability of stockholders of a state bank to assessment on their stock is not terminated by the expiration of the charter of the bank.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

"Trustee" not subject to double liability. The holder of corporate bank stock as "trustee" is not personally subject to double liability on the stock in case the bank becomes insolvent.

Andrew v Bank, 205-42; 217 NW 431; 57 ALR 767

Stock held in trust—double assessment liability. Under decree of an Iowa equity court assessing statutory liability on stock in a closed Iowa bank against a national bank as trustee under an identified trust, the bank does not become personally liable, under laws of Iowa, for such assessment. Neither could the receiver of the Iowa closed bank, in a common-law action, charge the trust property with such statutory liability.

Bates v Bank, 101 F 2d, 278

"Accruing" defined. The statutory provision that the stockholders of a bank are under a double liability as to "liabilities accruing while they remain such stockholders" means that such liability, in case of the insolvency of the bank, embraces any liability within the purview of the statute which exists while a stockholder remains a stockholder.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1070; 221 NW 809

"Accruing" defined. The statutory double liability of stockholders on bank stock owned by them for all liabilities "accruing while they remained such stockholders" embraces all liabilities "incurred" by the bank during said period of ownership.

Andrew v Bank, 217-447; 252 NW 245

Double liability—bank official's wife—stock transfer to husband. Where a wife transfers her bank stock to her husband, a bank officer, who informed other bank officials thereof, who contributed to the insolvent bank on a basis including this stock and who personally, instead of by proxy as previously, voted this stock, he was in fact the actual owner of bank stock, even tho it had not been transferred to him on the bank's books, and the double liability assessment is not recoverable from the wife.

Bates v Bank, 223-1215; 275 NW 91

Indebtedness to pay depositors—assessment of stockholders. An insolvent bank may, under §9297, C., '31, and under authority of a majority of its stockholders, legally take the written agreement of a solvent bank to pay in full the depositors of said insolvent bank, and in return for such agreement legally transfer its assets to said solvent bank, and legally obligate itself to pay to said solvent bank any deficiency existing after said transferred assets are liquidated and applied. It follows that if said solvent bank pays said depositors in full, notwithstanding the fact that the said liquidating receipts are insufficient so to do, the stockholders of the insolvent bank, even tho they did not consent to said arrangement, must submit to an assessment to pay the unsatisfied obligations of their bank.

Andrew v Bank, 215-627; 246 NW 618

Depositors — assessment to pay. A state bank, through its directors, may validly create an indebtedness for the good-faith purpose of paying its depositors, and the stockholders must submit to an assessment for the purpose of discharging said indebtedness, even tho they had no knowledge of said proposed indebtedness at the time it was entered into.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

Basis for assessment. A showing that the assets of a state bank plus a 100 percent assessment on the stock will not be sufficient to pay the debts of the bank furnishes abundant basis for an assessment on the stock, even tho there be no showing as to the amount of claims filed and approved.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

Stock liability assessment—100 percent not mandatory. Statute imposing liability assessment on a bank stockholder does not mandatorily require a 100 percent levy in every instance, but the assessment is determined by ascertaining the deficiency between the assets and the liabilities proportioned to the amount of stock owned.

Bates v Bank, 225-232; 280 NW 487

Assessment—amount necessary—fact question. The question as to what amount of assessment on the stockholders of a bank is necessary to repair the bank's assets is one of fact to be determined by the court from evidence of the bank's assets and liabilities.

Bates v Bank, 225-232; 280 NW 487

Unauthorized assessment. A stockholder in an insolvent bank is not liable to an assessment on his stock to discharge the personal obligations of other stockholders that were contracted in effecting a consolidation with a solvent bank, when the stockholder proposed to be assessed did not participate in the said consolidation.

Andrew v Dunn, 202-364; 210 NW 425

Bank deposits—no set-off against assessment irregularly made. A purported assessment by the directors of a bank is not chargeable against the deposit of a deceased stockholder in the bank, when, under the record, the payments to be made were purely voluntary in nature as distinguished from enforceable statutory assessments by order of the state banking department.

Younkin v Bank, 226-343; 284 NW 151

Successive assessments. An assessment on stockholders and the payment of the same for the purpose of restoring the impaired capital of the bank is no impediment to the subsequent assessment on stockholders to pay the debts of the insolvent bank.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Liability survives. The cause of action for the enforcement of an assessment on corporate bank stock survives the death of the stockholder, the stock continuing to stand in his name on the books of the bank until the necessity for, and right to, the assessment arose.

Andrew v Bank, 219-1244; 260 NW 849

Nonallowable set-off. Advancements made by a stockholder in a bank for the purpose of enabling the bank to continue as a going concern cannot be offset against the receiver's demand for judgment against the stockholder on his "double" liability to creditors on his stock, even tho the advancements were so fraudulently induced by the bank that the bank, itself, might be held as a trustee.

Bates v Bank, 217-741; 252 NW 138

Nonallowable set-off. Stockholders of an insolvent savings bank may not offset against their "double" liability on stock, (1) the amount of their deposits in the bank and other sums due them from the bank, or (2) the amount of assessments voluntarily or involuntarily paid by them to the bank while it was a going concern and made for the purpose of restoring the impaired capital of the bank; and this is true tho the proceeds of said assessments were used to pay depositors.

Andrew v Bank, 221-98; 265 NW 113

Double liability not subject to off-set. Funds voluntarily paid into a bank by a stockholder thereof, in order to repair or make good the impaired capital of the bank while it is a going concern, may not later, and after the bank has become insolvent and has passed into the hands of a receiver, be offset by the stockholder against the demand of the receiver for a 100 percent assessment on the stock for the benefit of the creditors.

Andrew v Bank, 204-243; 213 NW 925; 56 ALR 521

Credit by amount of former assessment unallowable. One who purchases corporate bank stock by paying an existing assessment thereon (and but little in addition thereto) will not be permitted, after the bank has become insolvent, to assert that said assessment was coercive as to him and that the amount of such assessment should be credited on his "double liability".

Andrew v Bank, 211-649; 234 NW 542

Double liability of stockholders—nonassignability. The statutory "double liability" of a stockholder in an insolvent state bank to all the creditors of the bank is not of such nature that a sale or assignment thereof by the receiver, even under an order of court, will vest in the vendee or assignee the right to enforce such liability exclusively for his own use and benefit.

Andrew v Bank, 214-1339; 242 NW 62; 82 ALR 1280

Fraud-induced purchase of stock—damages. The measure of damages for false representations inducing the purchase of corporate bank stock is the price paid for the stock; also, in addition, the amount of assessments subsequently paid on the stock if said assessments are the proximate results of the cause which brought about the original loss.

Baumchen v Donahoe, 215-512; 242 NW 533

Liability of life tenants. Life tenants of substantially all of testator's property, which consists in part of certain shares of corporate bank stock, are liable to a judgment, payable from said property, in satisfaction of the statutory "double" liability on such stock.

Andrew v Bank, 219-1334; 261 NW 815

Nonliability of children of deceased stockholder. The children of a deceased stockholder in a state bank, which has become insolvent since the death of the deceased and the probate of his will, are not personally subject to judgment on an assessment on said stock, (1) when the will of the deceased granted to his widow a life estate in his entire estate with power to sell any part of the corpus of the estate if necessary for her support, and with remainder to said children, (2) when the widow has taken possession of said estate after probating the will (tho the stock still stands in the name of the deceased), and (3) when said children have not in any manner whatever indicated a willingness to become stockholders in said bank.

Andrew v Bank, 219-1244; 260 NW 849

Life-estate holder nonliable. The holder of a testamentary life estate in corporate bank stock standing on the books of the insolvent bank in testator's name, is not personally liable for an assessment on the stock, even tho said holder would have power, under the will, to sell said stock if such sale was necessary for her support.

Andrew v Bank, 219-1244; 260 NW 849

Statutory double liability repealed. After the effective date of chapter 219 of the 47th GA, the act repealing the statutory double assessment liability on bank stock, a closed bank's receiver may not maintain against the executor and beneficiaries under the will an action to enforce the double liability as to stock issued prior to December 1, 1933, and formerly owned by decedent.

Bates v Bank, 227-925; 289 NW 735

When estate beneficiary liable. One who, in the final settlement of an estate, receives the corporate bank stock of the deceased intestate as his or her share of the estate, becomes a "stockholder", and is subject to assessment like other stockholders, even tho the stock has not been transferred on the stock books of the bank.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

When heir not liable. An heir is not liable to a statutory assessment on state bank stock owned by his deceased, intestate ancestor when, in the final settlement of the ancestor's estate, said heir, under contract with other heirs, receives his share solely in property other than said stock.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

Liability of assets of settled estate. An assessment on corporate bank stock standing on the corporate bank books in the name of a deceased stockholder may, by an action in equity, be enforced against the assets comprising the estate of the deceased stockholder, tho the estate has been legally settled and closed, and the said assets have passed into the hands of a testamentary devisee, when the necessity for, and right to said assessment arose, and the assessment was made, long after the settlement of said estate.

Bank stock assessment claim—judgment—conclusiveness. State superintendent of banking, who in a final decree in equity was denied right of recovery on stock assessment against executor and beneficiaries under will of decedent, could not thereafter recover the same assessment by way of a claim filed in the estate, even tho in the latter instance he acted in statutory capacity as receiver. So held in reaffirming principles that one not a party to a suit, who assumes control of the litigation, employs counsel and has a right to control and conduct the same, is bound by the judgment, and that a judgment is conclusive as to all parties to a suit and all parties in privity.

In re Lyman, 227-1191; 290 NW 537

Double liability—change of venue. A stockholder in an insolvent bank who is sued by the receiver, on his "double liability", in the forum of the receivership, in one equitable action, along with all other stockholders, is not entitled to a change of venue in case the county of suit is not the county of his residence in this state.

Broulik v Henderson, 218-640; 254 NW 63

Double liability—national bank as stockholder. A resident national bank as a stockholder in an insolvent state bank of this state is subject to suit in equity by the receiver in the county of the receivership forum, along with all other stockholders, to enforce the statutory double liability of stockholders, even tho the county of said forum is not the county of which the national bank is a resident.

Merchants Bank v Henderson, 218-657; 254 NW 65

Assessment to discharge receiver's certificates. In an action against the stockholders of an insolvent bank on an assessment on their corporate shares of stock, it is no defense that the proceeds of the assessment will be used in discharging the amount due on certificates of indebtedness issued and sold by the receiver and used by him in discharging the original debts of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Subrogation. The holder of certificates of indebtedness issued and sold by the receiver of an insolvent bank in order to raise funds with which to pay the debts of the bank will, in an action by the receiver to enforce an assessment on corporate stock in order to pay the certificates, be deemed to stand in the shoes of the original creditors of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Double liability—liability of homestead. The very act of acquiring the ownership of corporate bank stock ipso facto creates a contract "debt" for the statutory double liability on the stock. It follows that a judgment against the stockholder on such double liability may (the debtor having no other leviable property) be enforced against the stockholder's subsequently acquired homestead, even tho the judgment was rendered subsequent to the acquisition of the homestead.

Smith v Andrew, 209-99; 227 NW 587

Voluntary, nonfraudulent conveyance—valid against judgment on subsequent bank stock assessment. Altho wholly voluntary, a conveyance executed when the grantor has no fraudulent intent cannot be impeached by a subsequent creditor, so a real estate conveyance by a husband to his wife many years before he becomes a bank stockholder cannot be invalidated by the creditors of the bank, seeking to collect a judgment on stock liability assessment.

Bates v Kleve, 225-255; 280 NW 501

Allowable defense. The receiver of an insolvent bank may not recover of a stockholder on the latter's superadded liability on his stock (1) when, at a time when it was believed the bank would continue as a going concern, the said stockholder had, under a contract approved by the state banking department, surrendered his stock to the bank and turned over to the bank a fund equal to the amount of his surrendered stock for the sole and specific purpose of discharging said superadded liability, should necessity arise therefor, and (2) when said fund, intact, came into the hands of said receiver. In other words, the receiver must treat said fund as a trust and therewith discharge the stockholder's superadded liability.

Andrew v Bank, 216-830; 249 NW 373

Unallowable defense. An unperformed agreement between a bank and its stockholders to the effect that an assessment to repair the depreciated capital of the bank would be returned to the stockholders, in case the bank could not continue as a going concern, constitutes no defense to an action by the receiver against the stockholders after the bank has become insolvent to collect an assessment for the benefit of the creditors of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 212-329; 236 NW 392

Laches as bar. Record reviewed and held insufficient to show such laches as would bar an action to enforce, against the estate of a stockholder, the latter's statutory, superadded liability on capital stock.

Bates v McGill, 223-62; 272 NW 535

How enforced. A claim by the receiver of an insolvent state bank for the statutory, superadded, contingent liability on capital stock need not, as to the liability of a stockholder who has died prior to the insolvency of the bank, be filed as a claim against the stockholder's estate. Such claim may be enforced by action against the executor or administrator as such.

Bates v McGill, 223-62; 272 NW 535

Statute of limitations. An action by the receiver of an insolvent state bank, to enforce the statutory, superadded, contingent liability on capital stock, is not necessarily barred by the statute of limitation because not commenced within five years after the stockholder ceased to own the stock.

Bates v McGill, 223-62; 272 NW 535

Stock assessments nonassignable. An assessment against a holder of corporate bank stock in an insolvent bank, ordered by the court under the so-called "double liability" statute, even tho said assessment is in the form of a judgment, is nonassignable by the receiver, even under an authorizing order of court, and if formally assigned, is nonenforceable by the assignee, said attempted assignment being for a purpose other than the payment of creditors.

Roe v King, 217-213; 251 NW 81

Payments of prior assessments no defense. Payment of assessments on bank stock prior to insolvency is no defense to an action after insolvency to enforce the statutory "double" liability.

Bates v Bank, 219-1356; 261 NW 614

9252 Enforcement. (Repealed.)

Application of assets as condition precedent. The application of the assets of an insolvent bank to the payment of the debts of the bank is not a condition precedent to the right of the receiver to maintain an action to enforce the double liability of stockholders.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1070; 221 NW 809

Assessment—amount necessary—fact question. The question as to what amount of assessment on the stockholders of a bank is necessary to repair the bank's assets is one of fact to be determined by the court from evidence of the bank's assets and liabilities.

Bates v Bank, 225-232; 280 NW 487

Stock liability assessment—100 percent not mandatory. Statute imposing liability assessment on a bank stockholder does not mandatorily require a 100 percent levy in every instance, but the assessment is determined by ascertaining the deficiency between the assets and the liabilities proportioned to the amount of stock owned.

Bates v Bank, 225-232; 280 NW 487

Stock held in trust—double assessment liability. Under decree of an Iowa equity court assessing statutory liability on stock in a closed Iowa bank against a national bank as trustee under an identified trust, the bank does not become personally liable, under laws of Iowa, for such assessment. Neither could the receiver of the Iowa closed bank, in a common-law action, charge the trust property with such statutory liability.

9253 Action by creditor. (Repealed.)

Title constitutional. The constitutional provision (Art. III, §29) which provides that "Every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title" is not violated by the title preceding this section, to wit: "Action by creditor", even tho said section does provide for action by three different parties, viz: action by an assignee, action by a receiver, and action by a creditor.

Andrew v Bank, 216-244; 249 NW 377

Deprivation of jury—constitutionality. An action by the receiver of an insolvent bank against stockholders for the purpose of determining the necessity for an assessment on stock holdings, and adjudicating the amount of such assessment, is not inherently a law action and, therefore, the legislature may provide that the action shall be brought in equity.

Broulik v Henderson, 218-640; 254 NW 63

Procedure. The question whether an assessment on the stockholders of an insolvent banking institution is necessary and, if necessary, the legal amount of such assessment on each stockholder, must be determined in one equitable action, instituted by the receiver in the forum of the receivership, against all the stockholders. No change of venue is allowable to a defendant who is not a resident of the county where suit is properly brought.

Williams v McCord, 204-851; 214 NW 702

National bank as stockholder. A resident national bank as a stockholder in an insolvent state bank of this state is subject to suit in equity by the receiver in the county of the receivership forum, along with all other stockholders, to enforce the statutory double liability of stockholders, even tho the county of said forum is not the county of which the national bank is a resident.

Merchants Bank v Henderson, 218-657; 254 NW 65

Change of venue. A stockholder in an insolvent bank who is sued by the receiver, on his "double liability", in the forum of the receivership, in one equitable action, along with all other stockholders, is not entitled to a change of venue in case the county of suit is not the county of his residence in this state.

Broulik v Henderson, 218-640; 254 NW 63

Petition—sufficiency. A foreign bank receiver, in an action in this state to collect "double" stock liability, need not allege that the defendant stockholder had notice of the hearing on the necessity for such assessment; nor need the petition set forth a copy of the order entered by the foreign court on such hearing.

Baird v Cole, 207-664; 223 NW 514

Proper joinder. The various stockholders of an insolvent bank are all proper defendants in an action to enforce the statutory "double" liability of such stockholders.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1070; 221 NW 809

Personal judgment. In an action to enforce the double liability of the stockholders of an insolvent bank, a personal judgment necessarily follows a successful prosecution of the action.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1070; 221 NW 809

9255 List of officers, stockholders, and holdings.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 272

Double liability of nonrecord stockholder. The statutory "double" liability of stockholders in banks is enforceable against all actual owners of stock whether they are or are not recorded on the stock book of the bank as such owners.

9266 Forged or raised checks—liability of bank.

Scope of statute. The statute which relieves a bank from liability for paying a forged check unless it is notified of the forgery within six months after it has returned to the depositor the voucher showing payment has no application to the payment of a genuine check on a forged indorsement.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

Fictitious payee. The absolute duty of a bank, before it pays its depositor's check, to know that the payee's indorsement is genuine, and to pay only on such genuine indorsement, applies to a check which the depositor has unwittingly and without negligence made payable to a fictitious person.

Intent of drawer. The drawer of a check who unwittingly and without negligence makes it payable to a fictitious person to whom he supposed he was making a loan may not be said to have intended payment to be made to the supposed agent of the named payee (to whom it was delivered) because said supposed agent was, without the knowledge of said drawer, doing business in the name of such fictitious payee.

McCornack v Bank, 203-877; 211 NW 561

Unintended payee. When a check is unwittingly made payable to a fictitious payee, and delivered to the assumed and supposed agent of such fictitious payee, and the supposed agent indorses the check in the name of the payee and receives the money thereon, it may not be said that the money was paid to the very person to whom the drawer intended it to be paid.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

Unauthorized payment. A depositor is not bound to anticipate that his banker will wrongfully make payment from the deposit, and is under no obligation to call for his pass book in order to determine whether such payment has been made.

Dow v Bank, 202-594; 210 NW 815

Unauthorized charge against deposit. A bank must pay out its depositor's fund strictly as directed by the depositor. Evidence reviewed, relative to an unauthorized charge against a deposit, and held that the depositor was not estopped to question such charge, nor was he negligent in reference thereto, nor had he ratified said charge.

Dow v Bank, 202-594; 210 NW 815

Inadvertently paid check. A drawee of a check may recover of the payee the amount inadvertently paid on the check at a time when the payee knew that the drawer had no funds on deposit with the drawee—knew that the drawer had gone into the hands of a receiver and that his deposit had been transferred to the receiver.

Bankers Tr. v Reg. Co., 200-1014; 205 NW 838

Check paid on forged indorsement—negligence of drawer—effect. Tho a drawee-bank is under an absolute duty to pay its depositor's check only to a holder thereof under a genuine indorsement, yet the depositor is estopped to question the payment of a check on a forged indorsement when he, by his own negligence or by the negligence of his authorized agents, materially misleads the drawee-bank into the justifiable belief that the indorsement on the check is genuine.

Erickson Co. v Bank, 211-495; 230 NW 342

Deposits—estoppel to question payment. The right of the drawer of a check to question the payment of the check on a forged indorsement is lost by such negligent delay as deprives the drawee of the opportunity to recoup his loss from the party committing the forgery.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

Failure to examine monthly statement—effect. The failure of a depositor to examine the monthly statement furnished to him by the bank and the paid checks accompanying the same, may have a material bearing on the issue whether the depositor's negligence has materially misled the bank, to its loss, into paying checks on forged indorsements.

Erickson Co. v Bank, 211-495; 230 NW 342

Deposits—stated account. Principle reaffirmed that the monthly and customary statement of a bank to its customer of the condition of the customer's account becomes an account stated after the lapse of a reasonable time without objection by the customer.

Pierce & Gamet v Bank, 213-1388; 239 NW 580

Payment on forged indorsement—recovery—negligence. Evidence reviewed, in an action by a depositor against a bank to recover the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement and charged to the depositor's account, and held amply to support a finding that the depositor was not guilty of any negligence which prejudiced the bank.

McCornack v Bank, 207-274; 222 NW 851

Forged indorsement—prejudice—burden of proof. A drawee-bank, when sued for paying a check on a forged indorsement, must affirmatively establish prejudice as a result of the failure of the drawer to give notice of the forged indorsement upon the discovery thereof.

New Amsterdam Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Surety—taking assignment of claim. Where, because of the peculations of a county auditor, a depository bank pays a forged check on school funds, the county, on effecting settlement with the surety on the auditor's official bond, may assign to the said surety its cause of action against the bank, and the assignee may enforce the said assigned action as the county might have enforced it.

New Amsterdam Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Negligence not imputable to state. Negligence and laches of public officers in the handling of state funds are not imputable to the state; for instance, in an action to recover from a drawee-bank the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement of a check drawn by a county treasurer against state school funds on deposit with said drawee, it is no defense that the county treasurer was negligent in drawing or delivering the check, or that county officers generally were negligent in not making early discovery of the forged indorsement, and notifying the drawee accordingly.

New Amsterdam Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Action based on forged indorsement of checks and drafts. Where an employee wrongfully possessed himself of checks and drafts belonging to his employer, and by forged indorsements caused a bank to pay them, the act of a surety company in paying the employer the amount of his loss does not discharge the bank from its liability to the employer for having paid the checks and drafts on forged indorsements. The employer, upon being so indemnified, may assign his cause of action against the bank to the surety, and the surety may maintain the action against the bank.

9266.1 Stop-order on checks and drafts—requirements.

Deposit for collection—ill-advised indorsement. The payee of a negotiable check, who, when depositing it with a nondrawee bank, intends to retain title to the proceeds of the check, should indorse "for collection only" or words of similar import; should he indorse in blank he thereby presumptively vests said bank with unrestricted ownership of the check, and should said bank forward said check to its correspondent bank with direction to collect "and credit" the account of the forwarding bank, and should said correspondent enter said credit and, in reliance thereon, pay the drafts drawn on it by said forwarding bank to the full amount of said credit, and does so in good faith and without knowledge of any defect in the title of said forwarding bank or that said forwarding bank had ceased to be a going concern, then said correspondent bank will thereby acquire an unimpeachable title to said check, even tho the drawer thereof has assumed to stop payment thereon because of the insolvency of said forwarding bank.

9267 Deposit in names of two persons.

Alternate payees—effect. A certificate of deposit taken out by a mother, and "payable to the order of self or Hazel Pent, daughter" may be treated as a gift to the daughter when the mother dies without change in the certificate, and when there is no evidence to the contrary as to the intent of the mother.

Andrew v Bank, 205-237; 216 NW 12

What constitutes general deposit. A general, and not a special or specific, deposit is shown by proof that a buyer and shipper of stock (who was also engaged in two other different lines of business) had but one bank deposit account, and that in buying stock he simply delivered his bank check to the seller, and then, as a general course of business, shipped the stock in the name of his bank, which thereupon, at his direction, drew on the consignee, and credited the shipper's deposit with the amount of the draft, thereby creating a deposit credit out of which any and all checks issued by the shipper, whether for stock purchases or otherwise, would be paid, if and when presented; and this is true even tho the bank knew that the particular purpose in the mind of the shipper was to protect his outstanding checks for purchases of stock.

See Andrew v Bank, 204-1190; 216 NW 723

Gifts inter vivos—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence that bonds had donee's name added, were turned over to her, and she kept them in a safety deposit box registered in her name but rented by donor, that donee had the key, coupled with other testimony of disinterested persons, shows a conclusive intention of a completed gift inter vivos.

Reeves v Lyon, 224-659; 277 NW 749

Personal earnings represented by bank deposit. A joint bank deposit in the name of a husband and wife which represents the earnings of the husband for his personal services at any time within 90 days preceding a levy is exempt from an execution against both husband and wife, the wife being made a joint depositor as a matter of convenience in the payment of bills.

Staton v Vernon, 209-1123; 229 NW 763; 67 ALR 1200

Muniment of title—right to bank deposits. In an action by a son against a bank to recover funds which the son claimed his father had deposited for him, a previous adjudication that the funds belonged to the father and not to the son, rendered in an action by the father against the bank and the son, was not res judicata, but constituted a muniment of title showing that the son had no title to the funds, and barred the present action.

Bennett v Bank, 226-705; 285 NW 266

Survivor as owner of balance. Upon the death of one of two joint bank depositors, the survivor is entitled to the balance in the account, when the money originally belonged to said survivor, and was deposited under an agreement with the bank (1) that withdrawals should be on the joint order of both depositors, and (2) that the balance should be paid to the survivor.

Hollingsworth v Hollingsworth, 212-1165; 235 NW 726

Gifts inter vivos—joint (?) bank account. The mere opening of a joint bank account is insufficient to create a gift and claimant has the burden to prove by clear, convincing evidence that depositor had present intention to (1) make a gift, and (2) divest himself of all control and dominion over the subject of the gift.

Taylor v Grimes, 223-821; 273 NW 898

Fraudulent dissipation—nonliability of bank. A bank is not responsible to its depositor for the fraudulent conduct of the depositor's employee, aided by an employee of the bank, in fraudulently withdrawing from the bank the funds of the depositor, on checks which the depositor's employee had specific written authority to draw to himself personally, when the bank had no knowledge or reason to know of any of said wrongdoings.

Pierce & Gamet v Bank, 213-1388; 239 NW 580

Husband's deposit in wife's name. It may be shown that a deposit in an insolvent bank, solely in the name of a wife, is, in truth and fact, the money of the husband, and upon such proof being made, the husband may have the deposit applied on his indebtedness to the bank.

9267.1 Safe-deposit boxes—liability.

Trust officer's brokerage account—husband pledging wife's securities. Where a husband having a general agency, acquiesced in and ratified by the wife, to transact the wife's business, has a key to her bank deposit box, and personally removes certain securities therefrom which he pledges as collateral for a brokerage account in the name of the bank's assistant trust officer, of which transaction the wife receives knowledge, the fact that the brokerage account is in the name of such trust officer will not impose liability on the bank for a breach of a fiduciary relation, because, the husband having authority to pledge the stock, the account for which he pledged it would not matter.

9268 Securities—deposit with federal treasurer.

Att. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 401; '28 AG Op 269; '30 AG Op 133

9272 Acceptance of drafts.

Payment by check. A draft is paid (1) by the act of the drawee in delivering to the collecting bank his personal check for the amount of the draft on his ample checking account in said bank, without knowledge that the bank was then insolvent, and (2) by the act of the bank in surrendering the draft to the drawee, and in marking the check "paid" and charging the amount thereof to the check drawer's account, the bank then having on hand ample funds with which to pay said check.

Wells Co. v Marcus Co., 206-1010; 221 NW 547; 65 ALR 1145

Deposit for collection—ill-advised indorsement. The payee of a negotiable check, who, when depositing it with a nondrawee bank, intends to retain title to the proceeds of the check, should indorse "for collection only" or words of similar import; should he indorse in blank he thereby presumptively vests said bank with unrestricted ownership of the check, and should said bank forward said check to its correspondent bank with direction to collect "and credit" the account of the forwarding bank, and should said correspondent enter said credit and, in reliance thereon, pay the drafts drawn on it by said forwarding bank to the full amount of said credit, and does so in good faith and without knowledge of any defect in the title of said forwarding bank or that said forwarding bank had ceased to be a going concern, then said correspondent bank will thereby acquire an unimpeachable title to said check, even tho the drawer thereof has assumed to stop payment thereon because of the insolvency of said forwarding bank.

9273 Acceptances limited.

Excess loans—note of third party to conceal—effect. One who, in order to enable a state banking institution to conceal the fact that it has made loans to a borrower in excess of the amount permitted by law, executes and delivers to the bank his promissory note in lieu of such excess loans, is entitled, when the said excess notes are paid by the borrower, to a surrender of his note and the collateral pledged therewith.

9278.3 Method—court approval.

Stock—no restriction on judicial sale—mandamus to transfer. Sale of assets of insolvent national bank made in obedience to an order of court is not a voluntary but a judicial sale; therefore, a corporation whose stock was sold thereunder is not entitled to notice thereof, even tho its articles of incorporation required notice of proposed sale of stock, and mandamus will lie to compel the transfer of said stock on its records.

McDonald v Farley Co., 226-53; 283 NW 261

9279 Receiving deposits when insolvent.

Federal court's jurisdiction limited—persons detained by state. The federal court, in the absence of exceptional circumstances or emergencies, held without jurisdiction on habeas corpus action to determine constitutionality of Iowa statutes as applying to state banks on receiving deposits while insolvent and providing penalty therefor. The supreme court of Iowa has jurisdiction therein.

Ketcham v State, 41 F 2d, 38

Unconstitutional application of valid statute. The holding by the federal supreme court that the statute of this state prohibiting the receipt of deposits by insolvent banks and bankers generally, was constitutionally inapplicable to national banks and bankers, did not have the effect of carrying down the statute in toto—did not have the effect of thereafter rendering said statute inapplicable to state banks and bankers, even tho the state legislature did not, after said holding, re-enact said sections.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Definition of offense—ascertainable standard of guilt or innocence. The statute which prohibits banks and bankers from receiving deposits when they know they are insolvent, and the interpretation by the courts and by the legislature of the term "insolvency" to mean "inability to pay, through their own agencies, all liabilities within a reasonable time, and in the ordinary course of business" presents no instance of prescribing or fixing an unascertainable standard of guilt or innocence, violative of the due-process clauses of the federal and state constitutions.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Indictment—duplicity. In a prosecution for receiving bank deposits with knowledge of the bank's insolvency, separate and distinct deposits by separate and distinct individuals may not be charged, even in separate counts. (§13737, C., '24.)

State v McCarty, 202-162; 209 NW 288

General allegation of intent. An indictment for fraudulent banking need not specifically allege the name of the person whom the defendant intended to defraud by receiving the deposit in question; but nevertheless, an allegation that defendant (a private banker), knowing of his insolvency, received a named deposit from a named person, with intent to defraud, is, in effect, an allegation to defraud the named person.

State v Boysen, 214-46; 238 NW 581

Harmless error—action favorable to accused. In a prosecution for fraudulent banking, the action of the court in withdrawing that part of the indictment which charges an "intent to receive a financial benefit" constitutes no error of which the accused may complain.

State v Boysen, 214-46; 238 NW 581

"Deposit" defined. The act of a drawee-bank in charging the amount of a check to the drawer's existing money deposit and in crediting the payee's deposit in the same bank with a like amount constitutes a deposit, within the meaning of this statute.

State v Ostby, 203-333; 210 NW 934; 212 NW 550

When bank insolvent. It is not true that a bank is insolvent only when it is unable to pay its obligations in the ordinary and usual course of business.

Andrew v Bank, 207-386; 221 NW 954

Solvency of partners. The state, in prosecuting a managing officer of an unincorporated bank owned by various persons as partners, for receiving deposits at a time when the bank was knowingly insolvent, is under no obligation to show that the various individual partners were insolvent; but the solvency of said partners may be admissible on the issue whether the defendant had knowledge of the insolvency of the bank when the deposits were received by him.

State v Childers, 202-1377; 212 NW 63

Unallowable defense. On an indictment for receiving deposits from a partnership while the bank was insolvent, it is no defense that one of the members of the partnership was a director of the bank, and that said deposit was made with his approval and with full knowledge on his part of the financial condition of the bank.

State v Pierson, 204-837; 216 NW 43

Insolvency subsequent to receipt of deposit. On the issue whether a bank was insolvent when a deposit was received, evidence of the conduct of the accused tending to show that the bank was insolvent on a subsequent day is admissible when accompanied by other evidence that, in the meantime, no substantial change had taken place in the financial condition of the bank.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Evidence—other deposits. Upon a prosecution for receiving deposits while insolvent, testimony of deposits other than that alleged in the indictment is admissible over the objection of incompetency, irrelevancy, immateriality, and failure to lay proper foundation.

State v Ostby, 203-333; 210 NW 934; 212 NW 550

Subsequent deposits. Under an indictment for fraudulent banking, and on the issue of the bank's solvency or insolvency, evidence is admissible of deposits other than, and subsequent to, the specific deposit on which the indictment is based.

State v Boysen, 214-46; 238 NW 581

Proof of going concern. Testimony tending to show that deposits were made in an insolvent bank on the day when it closed its doors or on the day preceding such closing, is admissible to show that the bank was then a going concern.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

Admissions of insolvency. In a prosecution for receiving bank deposits with knowledge that the bank was insolvent, evidence is admissible that the accused some two weeks prior to the closing of the bank admitted in effect that the bank was cramped for funds.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

Other offenses. In a prosecution for receiving bank deposits when the bank is insolvent, testimony tending to show a criminal diversion by the defendant of the funds of the bank, subsequent to the occurrence of the specific charge on which the indictment is based, is wholly inadmissible as bearing on the question of the solvency or insolvency of the bank on the prior date alleged in the indictment.

State v Brown, 215-600; 246 NW 258

Evidence—subsequent deposits. On a prosecution for receiving a specific deposit, evidence tending to show all of the existing deposits in the bank, both prior and subsequent to the specific deposit in question, is, as to the prior deposits, admissible as bearing on the liabilities of the bank, and, as to the subsequent deposits, as bearing on the status of the bank's solvency or insolvency.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Declarations subsequent to receipt of deposit. On the issue whether a bank deposit was received by the accused with knowledge of the bank's insolvency, declarations of the accused subsequent to the receipt of the deposit tending to show that he then and at the time of the deposit, knew that the bank was insolvent, is admissible.

State v Bevins, 210-1031; 230 NW 865

Knowledge of insolvency—evidence. The statement of a mere employee of a bank, made long prior to the closing of the bank, and inferentially reflecting his belief that the bank was insolvent, is wholly inadmissible against an accused on the issue of knowledge of the accused of the insolvency of the bank, no attempt being made to connect the accused with the statement.

State v Childers, 202-1377; 212 NW 63

Opinion evidence. In a prosecution for receiving deposits with knowledge that the bank was insolvent, the value of the assets of the bank may be proven by any witness who is familiar with such assets and knows the value thereof.

State v Childers, 202-1377; 212 NW 63

Itemized tabulation or summary of bank books. A correct, itemized tabulation or summary of bank books is admissible in a prosecution for fraudulent banking.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

Banking corporations — incompetent evidence. In a prosecution for receiving a bank deposit when the bank was insolvent, an unsigned written report by an employee of the state banking department, covering an examination of the bank a year prior to the date on which the prosecution is based, and consisting of the opinion of the author of the report concerning various features of the business and assets of the bank, is inadmissible either to show the insolvency of the bank or the defendant's knowledge of such insolvency.

State v Henderson, 212-144; 232 NW 172

Opinion evidence—solvency of note-maker. A witness who has made a personal investigation as to the solvency of the maker of a promissory note, and has personal knowledge of the property owned by such maker, is competent to express an opinion as to such solvency.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

Bankruptcy proceedings as evidence. On the issue of the insolvency of a bank on the date when a deposit was accepted, the state may show by means of bankruptcy proceedings that certain debtors of the bank have listed their obligations to the bank and been discharged therefrom.

State v Henderson, 212-144; 232 NW 172

Incompetency of witness—excessive motion to strike. A motion to strike the entire testimony of a bank examiner as to the value of the assets of an alleged insolvent bank, should not be sustained simply because it appears that, as to some of many particular assets, he was not competent to express an opinion.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

Former jeopardy as rebuttal. When the state, in a prosecution for receiving deposits while the bank was insolvent, seeks to establish the insolvency by proof which tends to show that the accused had both embezzled funds of the bank and had made false reports concerning the assets of the bank, the accused may show, in rebuttal, that he has been indicted for both of said alleged offenses and acquitted.

State v Pierson, 204-837; 216 NW 43

Intent—instructions. Instructions relative to intent to defraud and to the conditions under which it might be inferred, and to the presumption that a person intends the reasonable and natural consequences of acts deliberately and intentionally done by him, reviewed and held to reveal no error.

State v Boysen, 214-46; 238 NW 581

Instructions—popular designation of offense. Designating an offense in instructions by its popular name is quite unobjectionable when the specific elements of the offense are correctly set forth.

9280 Violations.

Adding new element of criminal offense—effect as pardon. The amendment of a criminal statute by adding a new and additional element of the offense does not, because of the saving clause in subsec. 1, §63, C., '31, have the effect of pardoning all unconvicted violators of the statute as it existed prior to the enactment of the additional element, unless the act which adds the new element evinces an intent to pardon.

State v Brown, 215-600; 246 NW 258

“Renewal” of certificate of deposit. A certificate of deposit cannot be said to be “renewed” within the meaning of the fraudulent banking act (§9279 et seq., C., '27) when the holder presents the certificate to the bank, causes it to be canceled, is paid a substantial part thereof, and receives a new certificate of deposit for the balance.

State v Niehaus, 209-533; 228 NW 308

Violation of constitutional right. The constitutional right of an accused in a criminal case to be confronted by the witnesses against him is violated, in a criminal case wherein the value of various items of property is material, by an instruction to the effect that the jurors “have the right to use their own knowledge of values * * * in connection with the testimony as to values which have been given by the different witnesses”.

9281 Official neglect of officers.

Directors—nonliability for naked nonfeasance. The director of a corporation is not liable, to a person dealing with the corporation, for mere nonfeasance—naked inaction as a director. So held where the director of a bank took no action with reference to the practice of the bank in commingling trust funds with the general funds of the corporation.

Proksch v Bettendorf, 218-1376; 257 NW 383; 38 NCCA 292

9282 False statements or entries—diversion of funds.

Bank responsible for converted receipts.

Peterson v Citizens Bk., 228- ; 290 NW 546

Fidelity bond—fraud in extension of credit by overdrafts—evidence. In action on fidelity bond of bank cashier the exclusion of evidence of bank's custom of deferring posting of checks creating an overdraft was not erroneous where the dishonest acts complained of were the extension of credit by means of overdrafts in violation of statute.

Fidelity Co. v Bates, 76 F 2d, 160

Fidelity insurance—construction. The conduct of an officer of a bank in intentionally and deceitfully omitting to make any entry on the books of the bank of payments made on the bills receivable of the bank (other than a memorandum slip hung on a spindle), with resulting loss to the bank, is covered by a bond or policy of insurance which guarantees indemnity against “dishonest or criminal acts or omissions” of said officers.

Andrew v Ind. Co., 207-652; 223 NW 529

Opinion evidence—assets of bank. A qualified expert accountant is competent to testify that certain proven payments of money to a bank "did not come into the assets of the bank as shown by the books and records of the bank".

Andrew v Ind. Co., 207-652; 223 NW 529

False return—verdict set aside. Judgments of conviction in criminal cases will be set aside when they are clearly against the weight of the evidence and the instructions of the court. So held where, in a prosecution for making a false bank return, the issue turned on whether certain notes were accommodation paper.

State v Klein, 218-1060; 256 NW 741

Cashier's shortage—drafts on other bank—no constructive trust—inconsistent contentions. Community Bk. v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

9283 Intentional fraud—unlawful dividends.

Acts constituting fraud—legal opinion. A representation, tho false, that a bank and the directors thereof are personally liable, as a matter of law, on certain paper rediscounted by the bank cannot constitute a fraud when the parties concerned stand on equal footing as to all the material facts. Otherwise when such equality does not exist, and when the statement is made for the purpose of being relied on as a statement of fact, and is justifiably so relied on by the party to whom made. And instructions must make this distinction clear to the jury.

Commercial Bk. v Kietges, 206-90; 219 NW 44

Responsibility for worthless loans. The president of a bank is personally liable to the bank for loaning the funds of the bank to persons known by him to be financially irresponsible, and especially so when he secures the approval of the directors as to such loans on the repeated assurance that he is back of said loans and will see that they are paid.

9283.01 Unauthorized sale of real estate or securities.

Scope of prohibition. The statutory prohibition against officers and employees of a bank offering for sale or promoting the sale of real estate etc., unless such acts are sanctioned and approved of record by the directors, has no application whatever to lands owned by the bank.

Shanda v Bank, 220-290; 260 NW 841

9283.03 False statements for credit.

Discussion. See 21 ILR 151—False representation

MANAGEMENT BY SUPERINTENDENT

9283.05 Management by superintendent—legal and equitable remedies suspended.

Surrender of management to superintendent. The right of a stockholder in a bank, or his representative, to have or make an examination of the books and records of the bank in order to determine its financial condition and the value of its corporate stock, is not negated or suspended by an emergency act of the legislature providing for the taking over of the bank and of its management by the superintendent of banking on application of the bank directors and suspending legal and equitable remedies during the time of such management.

Becker v Trust Co., 217-17; 250 NW 644

Bank deposits—no set-off against assessment irregularly made. A purported assessment by the directors of a bank is not chargeable against the deposit of a deceased stockholder in the bank, when, under the record, the payments to be made were purely voluntary in nature as distinguished from enforceable statutory assessments by order of the state banking department.

Younkin v Bank, 226-343; 284 NW 151

Banker's conveyance—balancing sister's false entries—no consideration. Transfers of land to the superintendent of banking as receiver of an insolvent bank by a banker in order to balance false entries made by sister as cashier, on the bank books, are, in an action by trustee in bankruptcy to set the deeds aside, fraudulent as to creditors of the banker because lacking consideration, when it is shown that the banker's sister and not the banker himself was personally indebted to the bank on account of the false entries.

Bagley v Bates, 224-637; 276 NW 797

9283.07 Power to reorganize.

Discussion. See 17 ILR 384—Merger—transfer of assets

Right of depositor to question. A depositor in a bank may not question the reorganization of the bank unless he shows that he will be substantially injured by said reorganization.

Pugh v Polk County, 220-794; 263 NW 315

DEPOSITORS AGREEMENTS

9283.10 Power to enter into.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 183, 188, 205, 210, 212, 214, 281, 369, 456, 469, 523, 592

Agreements in re county deposits—right of taxpayer. The statutory discretion of the board of supervisors to enter into an agreement with legally and approved reorganized banks, with reference to the county's deposits in said banks, cannot be questioned by a taxpayer except on proof of fraud or arbitrary abuse of said discretion.

Pugh v Polk County, 220-794; 263 NW 315

9283.11 Depositors agreement—effect.

Depositor's agreement—conditions. An order of the probate court, authorizing a national bank acting as executor of an estate to execute a depositor's agreement relative to the estate funds, should specifically provide that said order is entered on the condition that the same shall not prejudice the right of the heirs, (1) to a lien upon any securities in possession of the executor, (2) to the right of action against the executor to recover the amount due, and (3) to any existing rights under federal law.

In re McElfresh, 218-97; 254 NW 84

9283.14 Conditions precedent to reorganization.

Discussion. See 21 ILR 633—Constitutionality
Att. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 197, 211, 244, 369, 456, 469, 739

Certificate of deposit—permissible impairment. A bank depositor may not successfully claim that his certificate of deposit was unconstitutionally impaired by a later, state-approved, good-faith, bank reorganization (in which he did not join) under which all claimants (claims over $10) were given equal but less favorable terms of payment than their contracts originally contemplated, when, at the time of his deposit, the statute law contemplated and substantially provided for such reorganization and change in terms of payment; and if the actual reorganization was effected under later statutes amplifying the said former ones, the answer is that he was dealing with a quasi-public corporation, and that his contract of deposit must reasonably yield to the police power in the interest of the public generally, especially in an emergency resulting from a great financial depression.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Compliance with statute—sufficiency. Record, relative to the reorganization of an incorporated bank, reviewed, and held to show compliance with the governing statute.

Timmons v Bank, 221-102; 264 NW 708

Action on certificate of deposit unallowable. After the legal reorganization, under state supervision, of a financially embarrassed banking institution, the holder of a prior-issued certificate of deposit in said bank may not maintain an action for a money judgment on said certificate, even tho he did not consent to said reorganization.

Timmons v Bank, 221-102; 264 NW 708

Statutory reorganization—constitutionality. Constitutionality of this and following sections on bank reorganization reaffirmed.

Timmons v Bank, 221-102; 264 NW 708

9283.23 Majority agreement governs minority.

Reorganization—majority binding minority. In the reorganization of an insolvent bank, an equitable plan proposed by the majority of claimants as required by statute may be validly approved and made binding on the minority when it appears that the minority claimants are not deprived of any assets of the bank.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

DEPOSITORS SUPPLEMENTAL AGREEMENTS

9283.29 Method of reorganization—approval.

Merger—agreement to pay deposit liabilities—scope. An agreement by a merging bank to pay the deposit liabilities of the merged bank must be deemed to include liability for all deposits, special as well as general.

Bates v Bank, 222-370; 269 NW 341

CAPITAL STOCK—CLASSES—NONASSESSABILITY

9283.43 Assessment limitations.

Nonpower of superintendent. The superintendent of banking has no power to order an assessment on the stockholders of an insolvent bank.

Home Bk. v Berggren, 211-697; 234 NW 573

Successive assessments. An assessment on stockholders and the payment of the same for the purpose of restoring the impaired capital of the bank is no impediment to the subsequent assessment on stockholders to pay the debts of the insolvent bank.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Stockholders—acts constituting. One who buys corporate bank stock necessarily becomes a stockholder even tho the bank officials in good faith, but mistakenly, represented that such purchase would rehabilitate the impaired capital of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 211-649; 234 NW 542

Credit by amount of former assessment unallowable. One who purchases corporate bank stock by paying an existing assessment thereon (and but little in addition thereto) will not be permitted, after the bank has become insolvent, to assert that said assessment was coercive as to him, and that the amount of such assessment should be credited on his "double liability".

Andrew v Bank, 211-649; 234 NW 542

Stockholders assessment to replace impaired capital—jury question. Conflicting evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether an assessment on bank stockholders was for the purpose of making good the impaired capital of bank or whether it was a voluntary arrangement among the stockholders to form a pool and purchase from the bank certain assets of doubtful value and thereby to relieve, in part, the individual guarantors thereon.

Andrew v Austin, 213-963; 232 NW 79

Assessment on stock—receiver's certificates. In an action against the stockholders of an insolvent bank on an assessment on their corporate shares of stock, it is no defense that the proceeds of the assessment will be used in discharging the amount due on certificates of indebtedness issued and sold by the receiver and used by him in discharging the original debts of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Purpose of assessment. An assessment on the stock of a bank, in order to restore the impaired capital and in order to enable the bank to continue as a going concern, followed by a continuation of the bank's business, cannot be deemed an assessment for liquidating purposes, even tho the bank, within a very short time, becomes insolvent and passes into the hands of a receiver.

Andrew v Bank, 206-869; 221 NW 668

Double liability—"accruing" defined. The statutory provision that the stockholders of a bank are under a double liability as to "liabilities accruing while they remain such stockholders" means that such liability, in case of the insolvency of the bank, embraces any liability within the purview of the statute which exists while a stockholder remains a stockholder.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1070; 221 NW 809

Double liability—proper joinder. The various stockholders of an insolvent bank are all proper defendants in an action to enforce the statutory "double" liability of such stockholders.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1070; 221 NW 809

Double liability—personal judgment. In an action to enforce the double liability of the stockholders of an insolvent bank, a personal judgment necessarily follows a successful prosecution of the action.

Andrew v Bank, 206-1070; 221 NW 809

Superadded double liability—improper plaintiff. An insolvent bank may not maintain an action against its stockholders to enforce and collect the superadded double liability imposed by §9251, C., '27 (now repealed).

9284 Authorization—additional powers.

Trust relations. See under §9239
Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 478; '28 AG Op 233

Receivership for insolvent trustee creates vacancy—power to fill. A judicial finding that a banking institution is insolvent and the appointment of a receiver to liquidate its affairs, ipso facto, (1) transfer, to the custody of the law, trust property held by said insolvent as a duly appointed testamentary trustee, (2) deprive said insolvent trustee of power further to act in said trusteeship, and (3) necessarily create a vacancy in the office of said trust,—which vacancy the probate court has legal power to fill by appointing a successor in trust, (1) on the sworn application therefor supplemented by the professional statement of counsel, (2) at an ex parte hearing and without notice to interested parties, and (3) without any formal proceedings whatever for the termination of said former trusteeship; and especially is this true when said former trustee, formally and by its conduct, abandons its said trusteeship and all right and interest therein.

In re Carson, 221-367; 265 NW 648

Final report by trustee after receivership. The filing of a final report by a trust company as trustee of an estate after the company had gone into receivership and could no longer perform any duty as active trustee, was not an act in administering the trust, but was the performance of its duty to make such final report upon its removal as trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Objections to executor's final report—failure to dispose of securities. Objections to the final report of a trust company are not subject to a motion for more specific statement when officers of the trust company have equal or better knowledge of the facts called for by the motion, especially where the motion calls for evidentiary facts. Held, also, that trustee was charged with maladministration and not fraud.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Accounting by trustee—bank inducing lien release—proof. Where a bank holds a chattel mortgage on horses, executed as part of an arrangement with the mechanic lienholder for payment of his lien, the release of which was induced by the execution of the chattel mortgage, a sale of the horses by the bank, under a subsequent chattel mortgage, would constitute the bank a trustee required to account to the mechanic lienholder, but, without proof that the horses sold were the same ones in both mortgages, no showing is made of trust funds to be accounted for.

Shimp Bros. v Place, 225-1098; 281 NW 471

Payment of funds to one with apparent authority to collect. When the plaintiff gave a third party his passbook to be used to withdraw an account from an Italian bank, and the third party used the passbook to secure a personal note given to the defendant bank through which the exchange transaction was made, the bank was not liable for using the funds received from the Italian bank as payment of the note, when it might have thought that the note was given to obtain an advance for the plaintiff, and had no knowledge of wrongdoing, and previous transactions indicated an apparent authority to transact the business in such manner.

Matalone v Bank, 226-1031; 285 NW 648

Trust officer's brokerage account—husband pledging wife's securities. Where a husband having a general agency, acquiesced in and ratified by the wife, to transact the wife's business, has a key to her bank deposit box, and personally removes certain securities therefrom which he pledges as collateral for a brokerage account in the name of the bank's assistant trust officer, of which transaction the wife receives knowledge, the fact that the brokerage account is in the name of such trust officer will not impose liability on the bank for a breach of a fiduciary relation, because, the husband having authority to pledge the stock, the account for which he pledged it would not matter.

Clark v Bank, 223-1176; 274 NW 919

Trusteed special assessment certificates—pro rata distribution. Where a corporation, dealing in securities, owns a group of special assessment certificates for public improvements, and places them in a trust, against which trust are sold certain "ownership certificates" issued in numerical order as representing an interest therein and redeemable in their numerical order, and when, subsequently, it becomes apparent that the trust is insolvent, an application by the trustee to the court for instructions as to whether payment was to be made in numerical order or pro rata was properly decided for the pro rata method on the equity rule of equality and proportionate distribution of the remaining assets.

9285 Deposit of trust funds—payment.

Estate funds as preferential deposit. Estate funds on deposit in a bank which has been appointed trustee or guardian of the estate constitute a trust fund and, in case of insolvency of the bank, are entitled to preference in payment; and an order of court entered without notice to interested parties, and authorizing the appointee-bank to deposit the estate funds with itself, cannot change this rule of preference.

Andrew v Bank, 208-892; 226 NW 73

Administrator's bank account—decedent's debt—no offset. Receiver of insolvent bank held unauthorized to set off amount of checking account standing in name of administrator against indebtedness owing to bank by intestate where, immediately on appointment of administrator, checking account passed to administrator who added to account by deposits at various times and drew checks against account until closing of bank.

In re Schwarting, (NOR); 257 NW 189

Keeping funds in insolvent bank. An executor or administrator who, on his own motion and authority, deposits and keeps estate funds in an insolvent bank of which he is cashier must account for the resulting loss.

In re Foster, 218-1202; 256 NW 744

Surety—liability—disobeying order of court. An administrator and the surety on his bond are liable for a shortage in estate funds occasioned by the failure of the administrator's own private bank in which the funds were deposited, the administrator having been ordered by the court prior to the insolvency of said bank to remove the funds to another depository, and, while able to comply with said order, had neglected so to do.

In re Kendrick, 214-873; 243 NW 168

Administrator disobeying order of court—unallowable defense. An administrator who disobeys an order of court as to the bank in which he should deposit estate funds may not, in case of loss, plead in defense that, had he complied with the order, his own private bank in which the funds in fact were on deposit would have been rendered insolvent.

In re Kendrick, 214-873; 243 NW 168

Management of estate—unauthorized bank deposit. An executor who, on his own motion and without any authorizing order of court, deposits the funds of the estate in a financially embarrassed bank of which he was president, in which he was heavily interested, and which later failed, must account to the estate in cash for the loss. The president of a bank must be held to have knowledge of the general financial condition of the bank.

In re Rorick, 218-107; 253 NW 916

Trust property—legal deposit (?) or illegal investment (?). A deposit by a trustee of trust funds in a savings bank, at a stated rate of interest but with the legal right to withdraw said deposit at any time, does not constitute an "investment" within the meaning of §12772, C., '31.

In re Moylan, 219-624; 258 NW 766

Wrongful act of trustee—right to ratify. A bank which, as guardian, wrongfully treats the guardianship funds as its own property (by carrying said funds as a general deposit with itself) may not complain if, after the failure of the bank, the succeeding guardian ratifies the former wrongful act, and elects to retain the position of an ordinary depositor.

Bates v Bank, 219-258; 257 NW 806

Inferential authorization of deposit. The due approval by the probate court of a guardian's report wherein he recited that he had deposited the funds of the ward in a bank and had received a stated amount of interest on such deposit, is in legal effect an authorization to the guardian to continue the deposit, with resulting consequence that, irrespective of this section, the guardian is relieved of personal responsibility in case the bank subsequently becomes insolvent.

Robinson v Irwin, 204-98; 214 NW 696

Deposit in bank—subsequent approval by court. The rule of law that the approval by the probate court or a judge thereof of a guardian's report showing the depository of the ward's funds is in legal effect an authorization to deposit said funds with said depository is a rule which necessitates a showing that said report was actually called to the attention of the court.

Snyder v Ind. Co., 214-1055; 243 NW 343

Depositing funds with itself. A corporate guardian and its surety will not be permitted to escape liability for guardianship funds on the plea that the guardian on its own motion but in good faith deposited said funds with itself.

Snyder v Ind. Co., 214-1055; 243 NW 343

Loss notwithstanding reasonable care—liability of assignee. An assignee for the benefit of creditors, who deposits in a bank trust funds coming into his hands and loses them because the bank subsequently closes its doors in consequence of insolvency, while not protected from loss under an ex parte order of court authorizing such deposit yet he is protected from such loss if, in making such deposit, and in looking after and caring for said funds, he exercised that degree of care which a person of ordinary care and prudence would exercise under the same or similar circumstances.

In re Stone, 220-1341; 264 NW 604

Bank deposit without authority of court. The temporary deposit by a guardian of guardianship funds in a bank for safekeeping is not rendered wrongful because made without an authorizing order of the court or judge, such deposit not being within the scope of either this section or section 12581, C., '24.

Andrew v Bank, 205-1248; 218 NW 24

Unambiguous life income trust—annuity policy substitution nonpermissible. Under a clear, unambiguous will setting up a trust fund and providing for a $30 a month bequest to be paid therefrom to a beneficiary as long as she lived, a different method of paying said bequest, by purchase of an annuity for said beneficiary, not permitted.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

9287 Payment of deposited funds.

No failure of trust for want of trustee. A trust estate will not fail for want of a trustee. So held where the bank, named as trustee in a will, failed.

9288 National banks.

Statutory reward applicable to national banks. The statute which obligates the owner of lost goods, money, etc., to compensate the finder of such property, is applicable to a national bank as owner, even though the federal statutes are silent on the subject, as said statute does not impair the efficiency of said bank as a federal, governmental agency.

9290 Separation of funds—liability.

Estate funds as preferential deposit. Estate funds on deposit in a bank which has been appointed executor, administrator, or trustee of the estate, even though carried in the name of the estate, constitute a trust fund, and in case of insolvency of the bank, must be paid in full on a showing that, after the trust deposit was made, the deposit in the bank has never been less than the amount of said trust funds.

Leach v Bank, 205-114; 213 NW 414; 217 NW 437; 56 ALR 801

Andrew v Bank, 208-392; 226 NW 73

Bank as executor—merger and subsequent insolvency. Funds which were held by a bank as executor of an estate, and which belonged to such estate at the time of merger of such bank with another bank, were "trust funds" and did not constitute part of assets of bank, with respect to whether such funds were payable as preferred claim against such merged bank which subsequently became insolvent.

Bates v Bank, (NOR); 269 NW 346

Commingling funds. Where trust funds are deposited in the individual account of the trustee, the cestui que trust has the right to elect to sue the trustee for the conversion, or he may pursue the trust funds and establish a preference thereto if they can be traced.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Intermingled funds—cash in excess of trust—effect. A bank, having been appointed trustee of testamentary trust funds, deposited said funds with itself, and intermingled said trust funds with its general funds, but carried the trust funds in an account which clearly revealed their trust character. The bank was merged into another bank. The trust account, and all other deposit accounts (general and special), and the entire cash balance, of the bank, were transferred to the merging bank, the latter agreeing to pay all deposit liabilities of the merged bank. The transferred deposit accounts were thereafter carried in the merging bank as theretofore carried in the merged bank. The merging bank became insolvent. The cash balances of the respective banks were always in excess of said trust funds.

Held, said trust funds were intact, and were entitled to preference in payment over the general creditors of the merging bank.

Bates v Bank, 222-370; 269 NW 341

Trustee buying property from himself. The act of a trustee in transferring his individually owned bonds and mortgages to himself as trustee and charging the trust funds with the amount thereof is wholly void even when authorized by an order of court. A fortiori is this true when the order was not obtained in good faith.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Bank as executor and depositor. A state or savings bank when acting as an administrator or executor and carrying the estate funds in its own bank does not sustain the relation of a general depositor of funds in a banking corporation.

In re McElfresh, 218-97; 254 NW 84

Interest as affecting status. A testamentary trust fund deposited as an investment in a savings account under the terms of the will does not lose its preferential character because of the payment of interest on the deposit.

Bates v Bank, 222-370; 269 NW 341

Wrongful act of trustee—right to ratify. A bank which, as guardian, wrongfully treats the guardianship funds as its own property (by carrying said funds as a general deposit with itself) may not complain if, after the failure of the bank, the succeeding guardian ratifies the former wrongful act, and elects to retain the position of an ordinary depositor.

9291 Analogous rights and duties—compensation—bonds.

Receiver—liens and equities unchanged. The title to property is not changed by the appointment of a receiver, as he takes it subject to existing liens and equities, and his taking exclusive possession thereof does not interfere with or disturb any pre-existing liens, preferences, or priorities.

Andrew v Bank & Trust, 225-929; 282 NW 299

Receiver—agent of court only—trustee of funds. A receiver is not an agent of anyone except the court appointing him, but he holds any fund at least as quasi-trustee for the benefit of whoever may eventually establish title thereto.

9292 Appointment of successor.

Receivership for insolvent trustee creates vacancy—power to fill. A judicial finding that a banking institution is insolvent and the appointment of a receiver to liquidate its affairs, ipso facto, (1) transfer, to the custody of the law, trust property held by said insolvent as a duly appointed testamentary trustee, (2) deprive said insolvent trustee of power further to act in said trusteeship, and (3) necessarily create a vacancy in the office of said trust,—which vacancy the probate court has legal power to fill by appointing a successor in trust, (1) on the sworn application therefor supplemented by the professional statement of counsel, (2) at an ex parte hearing and without notice to interested parties, and (3) without any formal proceedings whatever for the termination of said former trusteeship; and especially is this true when said former trustee, formally and by its conduct abandons its said trusteeship and all right and interest therein.

9293 Release from liability.

Discussion. See 10 ILB 319—Preference of claims against banks

9297 Indebtedness or liability—exceptions.

Unallowable guaranty. A state bank is wholly without authority to guarantee the payment of a credit which has no relation to the ordinary functions of the bank.

Dewey Works v Ryan et al, 206-1100; 221 NW 800

Issuance of certificate of deposit to pay note—validity. A certificate of deposit issued by a savings bank in payment of a negotiable promissory note constitutes a payment of value for the note, it appearing that the bank at the time had ample funds on hand for the purchase of said note; and this is true tho the directors had never authorized the purchase in such manner.

Andrew v Peterson, 214-582; 243 NW 340

Indebtedness to pay depositors—assessment of stockholders. An insolvent bank may, under this section and under authority of a majority of its stockholders, legally take the written agreement of a solvent bank to pay in full the depositors of said insolvent bank, and in return for such agreement legally transfer its assets to said solvent bank, and legally obligate itself to pay to said solvent bank any deficiency existing after said transferred assets are liquidated and applied. It follows that if said solvent bank pays said depositors in full, notwithstanding the fact that the said liquidating receipts are insufficient so to do, the stockholders of the insolvent bank, even tho they did not consent to said arrangement, must submit to an assessment to pay the unsatisfied obligations of their bank.

Andrew v Bank, 215-627; 246 NW 618

Assessment to pay. A state bank, through its directors, may validly create an indebtedness for the good-faith purpose of paying its depositors, and the stockholders must submit to an assessment for the purpose of discharging said indebtedness, even tho they had no knowledge of said proposed indebtedness at the time it was entered into.

Bates v Bank, 218-1320; 256 NW 286

Hypothecating assets—legality. The statutory prohibition that no "cashier or other officer or employee" of a state bank shall hypothecate any asset of the bank, unless authority so to do is granted at least annually by recorded resolution of the board of directors, does not prohibit the board itself from legally ordering the president and cashier to hypothecate bank assets in order to secure the bank's legal indebtedness, even tho no formal written record of the order is entered (§9222-c2, C., '31 [§9222.2, C., '39]).

In re Hannahs, 217-1016; 252 NW 539

Hypothecating assets. The statutory prohibition that no "cashier or other officer or employee" of a state bank shall hypothecate any asset of the bank unless authority so to do is granted at least annually by recorded resolution of the board of directors (§9222-c2, C., '31, [§9222.2, C., '39]) does not prohibit the board from legally ordering the cashier, with the approval of the superintendent of banking, to hypothecate bank assets in order to secure a legal indebtedness of the bank, even tho no formal, written resolution to that effect was actually passed by the board. (§9222-c3, C., '31 [§9222.3, C., '39]).

Andrew v Bank, 216-1170; 250 NW 492

Rediscounting—agreement to repurchase—demand for performance unnecessary. When a bank, (1) rediscounts its paper under indorsements "without recourse", but (2) accompanies the indorsement with a formal written agreement to repurchase the said paper on a named date, demand for performance on said date, or on any date, is unnecessary.

Bates v Bank, 219-1358; 261 NW 797

Estoppel to deny authority of officers. A savings bank, notwithstanding statutory limitations on the power of bank officers, will not be permitted to deny the authority of its officers to rediscount the bank's paper by indorsing said paper "without recourse" but accompanying such indorsement with formal, written agreement binding the bank to repurchase said paper prior to or at a named time, when the party advancing the credit relied thereon, and when said bank received, retained, and availed itself of the entire fruits of the said rediscounting.

Stockholder's contractual right of withdrawal of funds—unalterable by amendments or bylaws. A stockholder contracting with a building and loan association, a financially sound going concern, for withdrawal of funds on specified terms, has an unqualified vested right of withdrawal not subject to the association's subsequent modification through amendment or bylaw changes.

O'Connor v Home Assn., 224-1127; 278 NW 636

Contract with stockholders for withdrawal of funds—essentials. Where a right of withdrawal of funds is involved, a contract between stockholders and a building and loan association consists of the certificates, the charter, the bylaws, and the statute, but right of withdrawal afforded therein is applicable only to a going concern.

O'Connor v Home Assn., 224-1127; 278 NW 636

State auditor's action affecting stockholder's contractual rights. Fact that auditor of state approved building and loan association's refusal to honor applications for withdrawal of funds does not affect stockholder's contractual rights with the association for such withdrawal.

Crediting payments after insolvency. A borrower in a so-called "builders' loan department" of a trust company, whose monthly payments on the loan are seemingly carried by the trust company as deposits and not indorsed on the note, has the right, after the trust company has become insolvent, to have his payments credited on his note, and to pay the balance due and to receive a discharge irrespective of the rights of creditors of the company.

MONEY AND INTEREST

9403 Denominations of money.

Economic conditions and fluctuations in values. Equity cannot refuse to foreclose a mortgage because of a depressed economic condition existing throughout the country, nor, in foreclosing, may it assume to adjust the judgment to the fluctuating value of the legal tender as declared by the federal government.

ANALYSIS

- I INTEREST RECOVERABLE
- II INTEREST UPON INTEREST
- III TIME INTEREST COMMENCES TO RUN
- IV RATE OF INTEREST

I INTEREST RECOVERABLE

Interest on claims not necessarily allowable. An assignee for the benefit of creditors of an insolvent estate pays interest on claims at his peril. The court may wholly or partially disapprove of such payments, but where a fund belonging to a claimant has been drawing interest as a bank deposit, claimant is entitled to the interest.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 213-983; 234 NW 238; 238 NW 80

Unallowable interest. Interest on claims of laborers and materialmen on public improvements will not be allowed when the fund from which payment must be made is insufficient to pay the principal of all allowed claims.

Southern Sur. v Jenner, 212-1027; 237 NW 500

Interest on compromise agreement. Creditors who, in a composition agreement with their debtor, contract to accept specified sums in settlement of their respective demands, are not entitled to interest on said sums during the time required to carry out the agreement.

Bailey v Ins. Co., 221-1195; 268 NW 173

Administratrix — accounting — interest on security. A widow to whom support allowance is awarded in the form of a bond or security, belonging to the estate, is under no duty as administratrix to account for the interest subsequently accruing on said bond.

In re Paulson, 221-706; 266 NW 563

Fraud—disallowance of interest. Where in setting aside a conveyance as fraudulent the court decrees grantee a lien for the amount which grantor was owing grantee, the failure of the court to allow interest on the claim will not be disturbed on a record showing that grantee has been in possession of the land for some two years without accounting to grantor for the rents, and that the trial court deemed said rents ample to meet the said interest, said interest being a matter of future adjustment on any balance remaining after satisfying the creditor's claim.

Lietz v Grieme, 212-1305; 236 NW 395

Nonrecoverable interest. A guardian, in a successful action to cancel an exchange of property which the minor ward assumed to enter into, may not recover of the other party to the exchange interest on money which was never in the hands of such other party, and from which he derived no interest, but which was held by a third party as custodian, pending the litigation, especially when the deposit was made with the custodian without any arrangement as to interest.

Cloud v Burnett, 207-593; 223 NW 379

Compensation—interest. Interest on a long delayed award of compensation will not be allowed when the delay was consequent on the applicant's neglect to perfect her petition for review of the decision of the board of arbitration.

Bushing v Railway, 208-1010; 226 NW 719

Deposits—interest paid in advance—receivership—effect. In case interest is paid a depositor in advance, the termination of the accrual of all interest by the appointment of a receiver necessitates the charging of the deposit with the amount of unearned interest.

Murray v Bank, 201-1325; 207 NW 781

Receivers—interest. Where allowed claims in a receivership are all general claims and of the same class, any balance of funds remaining after paying said claims in full and costs of administration will be applied as interest on a pro rata basis among said claimants.

State v Cas. Co., 216-1221; 250 NW 496

Tender—nonproduction of money. A litigant who admits his indebtedness and is able and willing to pay it, and who, in order to protect himself, equitably interpleads warring claimants to the fund, and therein tenders the sum to whomsoever it is adjudged to belong, may not be held liable for interest because he does not actually bring the money into court until after the issues are determined.

Kelly v Bank, 217-725; 248 NW 9; 250 NW 171

Interest on deferred payment. Interest on long deferred payments due to a contractor may properly be ordered.

Gjellefald v Drain. Dist., 203-1144; 212 NW 691

Interest on unpaid legacy. Interest, but not compound interest, should be allowed on a legacy not paid when due.

In re Mann, 212-17; 235 NW 733

Interest on unpaid legacy. An executor may be chargeable with interest on an unpaid cash legacy to a minor, even tho his actions have been in perfect good faith.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-477; 255 NW 671

Trust fund—interest. Interest is not allowable on an established trust fund against an insolvent bank.

Standard Oil v Andrew, 218-438; 255 NW 497

Advance by executor of his own funds—re-payment and interest. An executor who, because of a temporary shortage in estate funds, advances sums from his own private funds and therewith pays legal claims against the estate, rather than to sell, on a poor market, assets of the estate, is properly allowed interest on the amount so advanced.

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Executor's indebtedness to estate—interest charged. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report, where the executor owed a note to the estate bearing interest which was not added to principal, held, interest should be charged in the absence of any evidence to warrant a finding for the principal only.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Funds used by executor—interest chargeable. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report where it is shown that the estate funds were intermingled with executor's funds and used by him with no attempt being made to reinvest such funds, executor is held chargeable with interest at six percent a year with annual rests.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Advancement (?) or debt (?)—interest. An ordinary promissory note executed by an heir to his ancestor, and representing money received by the heir from the ancestor, must, in the settlement of the estate, be deemed, presumptively, a debt and not an advancement; consequently, interest is chargeable as provided in the note.

In re Manatt, 214-432; 239 NW 524

Interest on purchase price. Interest on the purchase price is properly decreed from the time the purchase price was due and payable.

In re Hager, 212-851; 235 NW 563

Interest on preferred claims. The holder of a preferential claim, for public funds, which has been allowed against the receiver of an insolvent bank, is not entitled to interest on the claim, tho payment be long delayed on account of litigation.

Leach v Bank, 210-613; 231 NW 497; 69 ALR 1206

Eminent domain—improper addition of interest. It is improper for the court in the trial of an appeal in eminent domain proceedings to direct the jury to add to their verdict interest from the date of the taking, such direction being an assumption by the court that the jury would return a verdict for damages in excess of the damages awarded by the condemnation jury.

Welton v Highway Com., 211-625; 233 NW 876

Recovery dependent on pleading. In an action on a nonnegotiable promissory note, by a transferee thereof, defendant's plea that he be given a set-off in a stated sum, because of an account held by defendant against the original payee, will not be construed as embracing a demand for interest on said "stated sum".

Lewis v Grain Co., 214-143; 241 NW 469

Promissory note—severability of interest—when barred. Unless the maker and payee on a promissory note agree to sever the promise to pay interest installments from the promise to pay principal so as to make each promise separate and independent of the other, the interest is an incident to the principal debt and as such is barred when the statute of limitations has run against the principal debt.

Yeadon v Farmers Co., 224-829; 277 NW 709; 115 ALR 725

Verdicts—responsive to issues—sufficiency. A verdict, in an action on promissory notes, for "$5000 and interest dollars" is all-sufficient to authorize the court to compute the interest, add it to the principal, and enter judgment accordingly.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 213-969; 236 NW 418; 36 NCCA 205

II INTEREST UPON INTEREST

Executor chargeable with compound interest. An executor who wrongfully fails to close an estate within the statutory three-year period and uses the estate funds for his personal enrichment is properly charged with interest at six percent, with annual rests, from the expiration of said three years, even tho the net interest would only have been four percent had the executor closed the estate within the time required by statute and turned the remaining assets over to a trustee as directed by the will.

In re Mowrey, 210-923; 232 NW 82

Compound interest. Interest on interest may not be compounded, in the absence of an agreement to that effect.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

Mutual construction of parties. The maker of a promissory note who is unable to pay at maturity because of an unapprehended and long-continued change of condition, for which the payee is not responsible, and who repeatedly and voluntarily renews his note by including in each renewal the amount of principal and legal interest then due, may not claim that he was improperly charged with interest upon interest, when such renewals appear to have been the mutual and practical construction by the parties of the contract out of which the original note arose.

Frank Cram v Trust Co., 205-408; 216 NW 71

III TIME INTEREST COMMENCES TO RUN

Right in general. Interest is recoverable on any claim from the date when the damages become complete, whether the claim arises out of express or implied contract, or in tort.

Olson v Shuler, 203-518; 210 NW 453

Ambiguous provision as to interest. A certificate of deposit payable "on the return of this certificate properly indorsed 12 months after date with interest at 5 percent or six months after date with interest at 5 percent per annum", is payable on demand, (1) with interest at 5 percent if presented in 12 months or later, (2) with interest at 5 percent if presented in six months or later, and (3) with no interest if presented within six months.

Patch v Krogman, 202-524; 210 NW 612

Compensation—interest. Interest on a long delayed award of compensation will not be allowed when the delay was consequent on the applicant's neglect to perfect her petition for review of the decision of the board of arbitration.

Bushing v Railway, 208-1010; 226 NW 719

Excise taxes—mistaken refunds—recovery interest. The state treasurer who, under a mistaken interpretation of the law, refunds to a distributor of motor vehicle fuel a portion of the excise properly paid on account of said fuel, may, on behalf of the state, legally recover the amount of said mistaken refund, but with interest only from the date of the judgment.

State v Standard Oil Co., 222-1209; 271 NW 185

Foreclosure—interest on accelerated debt. Where a mortgage provides for an increased but legal rate of interest on all sums due and unpaid, and foreclosure is instituted (1) on sums due and in default, and (2) because of an acceleration clause, on the balance called for by the mortgage, interest on the accelerated part of the debt can only be computed from the date when foreclosure was commenced.

Federal Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

Increased rate of interest—when effective. A mortgage clause to the effect that upon the exercise by the mortgagee of his right to declare the entire debt due because of default in payment of any part of the matured debt the mortgage debt shall bear an increased rate of interest, is valid, and such increased rate commences to run from the date of action to foreclose.

III TIME INTEREST COMMENCES TO RUN—concluded

Whitney v Krasne, 209-236; 225 NW 245

Interest on antenuptial-contract allowance. A provision in an antenuptial contract that the wife shall be paid a named sum within a named time after the death of the husband contemplates interest on said sum from the maturity date, even tho said contract also provides that the widow shall be paid a monthly sum until the former main sum is paid.

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Policies of insurance. Interest is allowable, on the amount recovered under a hail insurance policy, from the date when the loss occurred.

Glandon v Ins. Assn., 211-60; 232 NW 804

Rentals for successive seasons. In an action to recover the rental of lands for successive seasons, interest is properly computed from the end of each annual period on each item of annual rent.

Bigelow v Ins. Co., 206-884; 221 NW 661

Abandonment and dismantlement of railroad—claims of donors. In the establishment against the owner of a railroad of claims for donations made for the construction of the road, interest should be allowed only from the date when the claims were established.

State v Beaton, 209-1291; 228 NW 111

Unliquidated set-off. In an action on a note executed with the mutual understanding that the maker and payee would, at some future date, agree on and adjust certain set-offs against the note, interest on the set-offs may very properly be allowed from the date of filing the answer pleading such set-offs.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

IV RATE OF INTEREST

Increased rate after default. Interest on a note and mortgage is necessarily computable, after default in payment, at the increased rate provided by the mortgage, for such a contingency, provided said rate does not exceed the maximum legal rate.

Penn Ins. v. Orr, 217-1022; 252 NW 745

Repossessed motor vehicles—no retaking on ground that conditional sale usurious. A replevin action to retake a motor vehicle covered by, and repossessed under, a conditional bill of sale, is not maintainable on the ground that the conditional bill of sale was allegedly usurious. The debt in the conditional bill of sale is valid and still exists even tho a usury penalty attaches.

Hill v Rolfsema, 226-486; 284 NW 376

When foreign law governs. In an action on a foreign contract to recover a money judgment, it is proper to allow interest at the rate authorized by the laws of such foreign state.

Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Funds used by executor—interest chargeable. In probate proceedings on objections to executor's final report where it is shown that the estate funds were intermingled with executor's funds and used by him with no attempt being made to reinvest such funds, executor is held chargeable with interest at 6 percent a year with annual rests.

In re Sheeler, 226-650; 284 NW 799

Improper interest. Tho the lien of a materialman may, in a certain case, be superior to the lien of a prior mortgage on the land, yet the court is in error in computing interest at a rate in excess of 6 percent and in allowing an attorney's fee and taxing it as costs and decree a lien for such excess interest and costs, even tho the claim of the materialman is evidenced by a promissory note calling for such excess interest and attorney fees.

Spieker v Fair Assn., 216-424; 249 NW 415

Mortgages—increased interest rate—penalty. A mortgage provision empowering the mortgagee to declare the entire debt due and payable in case of nonpayment of an installment of principal, or of interest, taxes, etc., imposes no penalty on the mortgagor, likewise a provision fixing one rate of interest on unmatured sums, and a different and higher rate on matured and unpaid sums, provided the legal rate is not exceeded.

Federal Bank v Wilmarth, 218-339; 252 NW 507; 94 ALR 1338

Savings banks—deposits—excessive interest-bearing certificates. A certificate of deposit issued by a savings bank is not illegal because made to draw an apparently very high rate of interest to wit, 7½ percent, nor because part of the interest is paid the depositor in advance, the directors never having fixed any rate of interest on such certificates.

Murray v Bank, 201-1325; 207 NW 781

9405 Interest on judgments and decrees.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 253

Amount in controversy—including interest on judgment. In determining the amount in controversy under the statute limiting supreme court appeals to cases involving over one hundred dollars, the allegations of the pleadings are controlling, and where the propriety of the judgment is the only issue, interest or costs will not be considered in determining the amount in controversy, but where defendant's motion attacked purported judgment of district court confirming justice's judgment in sum of $74, together with accrued interest of $35, amount of interest would be added to judgment in determining whether amount involved was sufficient to authorize appeal to supreme court.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

Interest under condemnation proceedings. In eminent domain proceedings where the property owner recovers on appeal more than was awarded by the sheriff's jury, interest should be allowed on the verdict from the date when the condemnor takes possession of the land.

Beal v Highway Com., 209-1308; 230 NW 302; 36 NCCA 196

9406 Illegal rate prohibited—usury.

I USURY IN GENERAL

Interest in advance—effect. A bank certificate of deposit which is payable on demand, and on which the interest is in part paid in advance, will not be declared usurious, in the absence of evidence tending to establish an express or an implied agreement for the payment of usurious interest.

Partch v Krogman, 202-524; 210 NW 612

Seeking and doing equity — unconscionable mortgage. Equity will not foreclose an unconscionable mortgage—i. e., a mortgage pyramided with usury, and given as additional security for part of a debt already secured by mortgage; and especially is this true when the mortgagee is manifestly seeking to sequester the property situated in a foreign state and covered by the original security without accounting for the value thereof.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

II TRANSACTIONS CONSTITUTING USURY

Usurious transactions. Notes and mortgages which are untainted with usury are not so tainted by subsequent contracts by which forbearance of the holder to insist upon an accelerated maturity is secured.

Squire Co. v Hedges, 200-877; 205 NW 525

Usurious transactions. A note and mortgage which calls for less than the maximum legal rate of interest, but requires the mortgagor to pay in addition certain known charges, and taxes assessable to the mortgagee, will not be deemed usurious in the absence of proof that the interest contracted for, plus the added exactions, when computed over the full term of the note and mortgage, will exceed the said maximum legal rate.

Penn Ins. v Orr, 217-1022; 252NW 745

Usurious transactions—rule to determine (Nebraska contract). A Nebraska note and accompanying mortgage calling for interest at six and one-half percent, when the maximum legal rate is ten percent, is not rendered usurious by the additional provision that the maker-mortgagor will pay all taxes on the mortgage debt, the Nebraska law being that such contracts are not usurious unless it is made affirmatively to appear that the borrower intended to give and the lender intended to receive interest in excess of the legal limit.

Federal Trust v Nelson, 221-759; 266 NW 509

III COMMISSIONS FOR NEGOTIATING LOANS

Full period of loan used in determining usury. When mortgagor is required to pay a commission for securing the loan, the note and mortgage which call for less than the maximum legal rate of interest are not usurious when the interest, plus the amount of the commission, when computed over the full term of the note and mortgage, does not exceed the maximum legal rate.

Penn Ins. Co. v Orr, 217-1022; 252 NW 745

IV USURY BY AGENTS

Attorney and client—fraud—illegal interest charge. Evidence held insufficient to show fraud on the part of an attorney in charging interest in excess of the legal rate on certain obligations.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

V USURIOUS PAYMENTS

Usury—interest in advance—effect. A bank certificate of deposit which is payable on demand, and on which the interest is in part paid in advance, will not be declared usurious in the absence of evidence tending to establish an express or an implied agreement for the payment of usurious interest.

Partch v Krogman, 202-524; 210 NW 612

VI PURGING CONTRACT OF USURY

Rights to nonusurious item of indebtedness. When foreclosure of a mortgage is refused in toto because of the fact that unconscionable usury permeated the entire debt except as to one item, and when the court separates such item from the rest of the contract and, without objection, renders personal judgment against the mortgagor therefor, it should grant the plaintiff legal interest thereon. In other words, it is not justified in rendering judgment for interest on such item in favor of the school fund.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

VII CONFLICT OF LAWS

Usurious transactions—rule to determine (Nebraska contract). A Nebraska note and accompanying mortgage calling for interest at six and one-half percent, when the maximum legal rate is ten percent, is not rendered usurious by the additional provision that the maker-mortgagor will pay all the taxes on the mortgage debt, the Nebraska law being that such contracts are not usurious unless it is made affirmatively to appear that the borrower intended to give and the lender intended to receive interest in excess of the legal limit.

I USURY AS DEFENSE AND AS AFFIRMATIVE RELIEF

(a) DEFENSE

Defense not available to third party. The plea of usury is not available to one who is a stranger to the contract attacked.

Squire Co. v Hedges, 200-877; 205 NW 525

(b) AFFIRMATIVE RELIEF

Rights and remedies—nonusurious item of indebtedness. When foreclosure of a mortgage is refused in toto because of the fact that unconscionable usury permeated the entire debt except as to one item, and when the court separates such item from the rest of the contract and, without objection, renders personal judgment against the mortgagor therefor, it should grant the plaintiff legal interest thereon. In other words, it is not justified in rendering judgment for interest on such item in favor of the school fund.

Repossessed motor vehicles—no retaking by replevin on ground that conditional sale usurious. A replevin action to retake a motor vehicle covered by, and repossessed under, a conditional bill of sale is not maintainable on the ground that the conditional bill of sale was allegedly usurious. The debt in the conditional bill of sale is valid and still exists even tho a usury penalty attaches.

Hill v Rolfsema, 226-486; 284 NW 376

Seeking and doing equity—unconscionable mortgage. Equity will not foreclose an unconscionable mortgage—i. e., a mortgage pyramided with usury, and given as additional security for part of a debt already secured by mortgage; and especially is this true when the mortgagee is manifestly seeking to sequester the property situated in a foreign state and covered by the original security without accounting for the value thereof.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

(c) PLEADING USURY

Unconscionable action—pleadings—waiver. A court of equity will not reject testimony before it showing the unconscionable nature of the transaction upon which action is brought (i. e., that a contract is pyramided with unconscionable usury), simply because the pleadings are general and indefinite, and do not specifically plead such usury. Especially is this true when the parties have treated the pleadings as all-sufficient.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

Nonavailable to stranger. The plea that a promissory note is usurious cannot be raised by an entire stranger to the note.

Capital Loan v Keeling, 219-969; 259 NW 194

Repossessed motor vehicles—no retaking on ground that conditional sale usurious. A replevin action to retake a motor vehicle covered by, and repossessed under, a conditional bill of sale, is not maintainable on the ground that the conditional bill of sale was allegedly usurious. The debt in the conditional bill of sale is valid and still exists even tho a usury penalty attaches.

Hill v Rolfsema, 226-486; 284 NW 376

(d) EVIDENCE

Usury as defense—burden of proof. The burden of proving that a note is usurious is on the defendant.

Penn Ins. Co. v Orr, 217-1022; 252 NW 745

II USURY AS AFFECTING RIGHTS OF THIRD PARTIES

Defense not available to third party. The plea of usury is not available to one who is a stranger to the contract attacked.

Squire Co. v Hedges, 200-877; 205 NW 525

Usurious transactions—nonavailable to stranger. The plea that a promissory note is usurious cannot be raised by an entire stranger to the note.

Capital Loan v Keeling, 219-969; 259 NW 194

III FORFEITURES

Interest in advance—effect. A bank certificate of deposit which is payable on demand, and on which the interest is in part paid in advance, will not be declared usurious in the absence of evidence tending to establish an express or an implied agreement for the payment of usurious interest.

Partch v Krogman, 202-524; 210 NW 612

IV JUDGMENTS

Nonusurious item of indebtedness. When foreclosure of a mortgage is refused in toto because of the fact that unconscionable usury permeated the entire debt except as to one item, and when the court separates such item from the rest of the contract and, without objection, renders personal judgment against the mortgagor therefor, it should grant the plaintiff legal interest thereon. In other words, it is not justified in rendering judgment for interest on such item in favor of the school fund.

9438.01 License and rights thereunder.

Legislative power to regulate. Regulation and control of the small loan business is a proper field for legislation.

Miller v Schuster, 227-1005; 289 NW 702

Disclaiming agency—effect. If a loan company and a party through whom loans are made occupy, in truth and fact, the relation of principal and agent, it matters not that, in their contract, they positively disclaim such relation, or provide that the party through whom loans are made shall be deemed the agent of the borrower, or otherwise studiously seek to disguise such relation.

Burlington Bk. v Ins. Co., 206-475; 218 NW 949

Moneyed capital used in small loan business. Moneyed capital employed, under this section, in the making of small loans of $300 or less on personal or chattel security is taxable as moneys and credits, and not at the rate at which national bank stock is taxable, when the evidence shows that such moneyed capital does not come into competition with the business of national banks.

9438.13 Banking board—report—additional restrictions.

Delegation of powers to executive. A statute, which delegates to the state banking board authority to determine and fix by regulation such maximum rate of interest or charges upon each class of small loans as will induce efficiently managed commercial capital to enter such business in sufficient amounts to make available adequate credit facilities to persons without the security usually required by commercial banks, is not an invalid delegation of legislative power because the standards fixed by the legislature are sufficiently definite and carefully defined to warrant conferring on such board the power to adopt rules and regulations and give effect to the legislative policy.

9438.15 Usury—limitation on principal loan.

Usury—nonavailable to stranger. The plea that a promissory note is usurious cannot be raised by an entire stranger to the note.

Capital Loan v Keeling, 219-969; 259 NW 194

9438.16 Loan—what constitutes.

Money lent—burden of proof. One seeking to recover money loaned must prove a contract express or implied for its repayment.

9438.17 Assignment of wages.

Incumbrance of exempt property—invalidity because of failure of consideration. A chattel mortgage on the exempt property of a husband and wife is void when the wife is in no manner indebted to the mortgagee, and concurs in and signs said mortgage with her husband solely because of the explicit promise of the mortgagee that he would advance certain funds to the mortgagors for use in their business, which promise the mortgagee subsequently wholly failed to perform.

9439 Seals abolished.

Instruments not under corporate seal—legality. Principle recognized that corporations may be bound by written contracts which are not executed under their corporate seals.

Homesteaders Life v Salinger, 212-251; 235 NW 485

Authority of corporate president. A corporation is bound by the act of its president in subordinating its mortgage to another mortgage (1) when the president is expressly authorized by the articles of incorporation to release and satisfy such mortgages, (2) when the president first executed, on adequate consideration, a written release and subordination without the corporate seal being attached, and later confirmed said act by a new release and subordination with said seal attached, and (3) when the corporation at all times intended so to subordinate its mortgage.

ANALYSIS

I IMPLIED CONSIDERATION IN GENERAL
II DEEDS

I IMPLIED CONSIDERATION IN GENERAL

Implied in written contracts. The presumption created by statute providing that all contracts in writing, signed by the party to be bound, should import consideration is sufficient to cast burden upon defendant asserting lack of consideration to overcome such presumption.

Beal v Milliron, (NOR); 267 NW 83

Presumption. Presumptively a written contract is supported by a sufficient consideration, and the burden of proof rests on him who asserts to the contrary.

Krcmar v Krcmar, 202-1166; 211 NW 699

Presumption. A written contract of guaranty carries an evidentiary presumption that it was entered into on adequate consideration, and he who contends to the contrary has the burden to establish his contention, and he does not do so by showing that the recited nominal money consideration was not paid.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

Conclusive presumption. A specifically recited consideration must be treated as correct, in the absence of any counter showing.

Burrow v County, 200-787; 205 NW 460
Y. M. C. A. v Caward, 213-408; 239 NW 41

Tax certificate priority waived—extension of time of payment of mortgage. Extension of the time of payment on bonds secured by mortgage held sufficient consideration to support waiver of priority of tax certificate owned by mortgagor's daughter.

Beal v Milliron, (NOR); 267 NW 83

Requisites and validity—compromise and settlement as consideration. A promissory note executed without fraud and in compromise and settlement of a disputed but honestly asserted claim—which may have been unfounded—must be deemed supported by an adequate consideration. Evidence held to support such a finding.

Booth v Johnston, 223-724; 273 NW 847

Signature of surety obtained by fraudulent representations—nonliability. Extension of mortgage debt would be sufficient consideration to support signature of mortgagor's daughter to extension agreement if extension were granted on condition that such daughter sign, but where such signature of the daughter is obtained by fraudulent misrepresentations, it is without consideration and void as to the daughter.

Beal v Milliron, (NOR); 267 NW 83

Joint adventure. The requisites of an ordinary contract, and of a contract of joint adventure, as to form and validity, are substantially the same.

Smith, et al. v Hollingsworth, 218-920; 251 NW 749

Antenuptial contract—when acknowledgment unnecessary. A simple antenuptial contract, not involving the conveyance of real property, needs no acknowledgment to be valid.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

Construction—entire or severable. Principle recognized that, if the consideration for a contract is single and not apportionable, the contract is single or entire, and not apportionable.

Peek Est. v Ins. Co., 206-1237; 219 NW 487

Breach of part not destructive of whole. Generally, where contracts are severable and divisible, and the consideration justly apportioned to part of the contract, a breach of that part does not destroy the contract in toto, but the defendant may only recoup himself in damages.

Paramount Pictures v Maxon, 226-308; 284 NW 119

Evidence of custom and usage—contract prevails. Evidence of custom and usage cannot prevail against an express contract to the contrary.

Paramount Pictures v Maxon, 226-308; 284 NW 119

Director's note to bank. The directors of a financially embarrassed bank who execute their individual promissory notes to the bank and receive in return certain assets of the bank to which the state banking department had objected, may not say that the notes were executed without consideration.

See North Side Bank v Schreiber, 219-380; 258 NW 690

Officers and agents—liability for excess indebtedness. Ample consideration for a contract waiver by the purchaser of corporate bonds, of his statutory right (now repealed) to hold the officers and directors personally liable for a prohibited excess indebtedness of the corporation, may be found in the fact that the corporation has withdrawn a large amount of its assets and specifically pledged them with a trustee for the purpose of paying said bonds.

Preston v Howell, 219-230; 257 NW 415; 97 ALR 1140

Waiver—no release by insured without consideration. A purported release by one party to a contract of the other party's obligations is without effect unless duly supported by a consideration. So held where an insured accepted the return of his premium upon the statement that the policy had lapsed and thereupon the insurer claimed a waiver of its obligations.

Pennbaker v Ins. Co., 226-314; 284 NW 147

Assignment in payment of pre-existing debt. The assignment of funds by the legal owner thereof in payment of a pre-existing debt is not effective against the equitable owner of said funds.

Stegemann v Bendixen, 219-1190; 260 NW 14

Assignment to trustee. A written assignment of a fractional interest in a life insurance policy to a trustee, made for the purpose of protecting the attorneys for the agreed value of their services in prosecuting an action on the policy, is supported by adequate consideration, especially when it appears that the trustee was to receive compensation for his services.

Welsh v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

Gifts inter vivos—consideration—presumption—burden. Altho a promissory note for which there is no consideration is an unenforceable promise to make a future gift, nevertheless in an action against an executor on a note the presumption that the note imports a consideration, if negated, must be overcome by evidence and this burden is on the maker or his representatives.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Father promising son's creditor not to change son's legacy. Simply because a testator contracts with a bank not to change his will bequeathing $10,000 to a son who was indebted to the bank, and when the father did not contract to pay the son's debt, there is no "unjust enrichment" of devisees and legatees who accept property willed to them, altho father during his lifetime had depleted his estate by property transfers and conveyances to his other children.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Devise and bequest—consideration unnecessary—resulting trust not created. Heirs and devisees are not required to give a consideration for devises and bequests to them; consequently, a resulting trust cannot be impressed on property conveyed to them, on the theory that they are not bona fide purchasers, when the property was not subject to the lien before conveyed.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Voluntary gratuitous services—recovery for. Services, tho valuable and continued for years, when voluntarily rendered as a gratuity, and accepted as such, furnish no basis for a later action in quantum meruit.

Equitable v Crosley, 221-1129; 265 NW 137

Marriage as high consideration. Marriage is a good consideration for a contract—one of the highest known to the law.

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Consideration—claim in probate. On a wife's claim against her deceased, divorced husband's estate, a promissory note expressly stating a consideration, which, however, is invalid to support the claim, will not under this section import a valid consideration, so as to generate a jury question. This section was not intended to furnish the consideration but only import it when not stated, which in any event could not be different than that stated in the contract.

In re Straka, 224-109; 275 NW 490

Consideration for wife's signature. The signature of a wife to her husband's note and mortgage is supported by ample consideration

I IMPLIED CONSIDERATION IN GENERAL—concluded

when her signature was a condition precedent to obtaining the loan represented by the note.

Andrew v Ingvoidstad, 218-8; 254 NW 334

Wife signing to release dower — inadequate evidence to show lack of consideration. The presumption of consideration for a promissory note and mortgage, signed jointly by a husband and wife but evidencing and securing an originally created debt of the husband only, is not overcome, as to the wife, by evidence that she was a stranger to the negotiations for the loan, received no part of the loan, had no interest in the mortgaged lands except a contingent dower interest, signed the instruments without reading them and solely at the request of the husband and solely to release said contingent interest. The fatal defect in such evidence is its failure to establish the fact that the loan would have been made without the wife's signature—that the payee-mortgagee did not part with the money in reliance on the wife's signature.

Northern Trust v Anderson, 222-590; 262 NW529

Liability of wife on husband's note. A wife, after signing promissory notes which represent the husband's indebtedness only, may not avoid personal liability on the ground of absence of consideration flowing to her when it appears that the notes were so signed on demand of the payee and as a condition precedent to the granting by payee of an extension of time of payment.

First N. Bank v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

Bates v Green, 219-136; 257 NW 198

II DEEDS

Future support—when not consideration. A conveyance of property in consideration of future support is voluntary as to existing creditors.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

Overthrowing presumption. The statutory presumption that a deed of conveyance was supported by a consideration is not overcome by the naked testimony of the grantor that he was never paid anything for the conveyance.

Carr v McCauley, 215-298; 245 NW 290

Exception. A written clause in a deed of conveyance, to the effect that the grantee assumes and agrees to pay an existing mortgage on the land does not import a consideration.

Sheley v Engle, 204-1283; 213 NW 617

Assumption of mortgage—burden of proof. A mortgagee who, in foreclosure proceedings, asks for judgment on an assumption clause in a subsequent deed of conveyance not signed by the assumpor, and pleads a specified consideration for said assumption, must, if met by a denial, establish said consideration by a preponderance of the evidence.

Peilecke v Cartwright, 213-144; 238 NW 621

Cancellation—want of consideration not a ground. Want of consideration in itself will not warrant the setting aside of a deed, it being competent for a grantor to make a gift of his property and, altho want of consideration is a good defense to an executory contract, a deed is not such a contract, but instead represents a contract executed and a conveyance fully accomplished.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Wife's deed for husband's debt—consideration—estoppel. Wife who was not illiterate, and who deeded her land in payment of husband's notes, and who, by placing deed in husband's hands, clothed him with apparent authority to deliver the deed, thereby inducing creditors to surrender other land owned by the husband, is estopped from questioning the validity of the deed. The consideration to wife was advantage to husband and detriment to creditors.

Allen v Hume, 227-1224; 290 NW 687

Adequacy. A deed of conveyance which recites (1) that it is in payment for services performed by grantee in caring for her mother in her lifetime and (2) that grantee will support and care for grantor during his lifetime, is supported by an adequate consideration.

Ellis v Allman, 217-483; 250 NW 172

Setting aside fraudulent deed on condition. The grantee in a deed of conveyance executed for the primary purpose of preserving a means of support for the aged grantor (tho not so expressed in the deed) has a right, in an equitable action by grantor's executor to set aside the deed, to demand that his reasonable claim for furnishing the grantor a very substantial support be first paid as a condition precedent to any judgment setting aside the deed; and this is true tho said deed would have been declared fraudulent and invalid had it been attacked by the grantor's existing creditors.

Meyers v Schmidt, 220-370; 261 NW 502

Fraud—burden of proof. A creditor, seeking to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance which recites a consideration which is apparently valid and substantial tho indefinite in amount, must carry his proof beyond showing that the grantor and grantee were husband and wife and that the grantor was insolvent when he delivered the conveyance. In other words, such proof does not cast upon grantee the burden (1) to sustain the adequacy of the consideration, and (2) to negative bad faith in the transaction, or (3) to show that the grantor at the time retained sufficient other property to pay his creditors.

First N. Bank v Currier, 218-1041; 256 NW 734

Evidence insufficient to show fraud. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a judgment refusing to set aside a conveyance of realty by devisee thereof to claimant against estate on ground of lack of consideration or fraud in making conveyance.

First N. Bank v Adams, (NOR); 266 NW 484

9441 Failure of consideration.

ANALYSIS

I PLEADING AND PROOF OF CONSIDERATION

II SUFFICIENCY OF CONSIDERATION

Negotiable instruments. See under §§9484, 9485

Consideration in promissory notes. See under §§9484, 9485

Discussion. See 21 ILR 621—Gratuitous promises

I PLEADING AND PROOF OF CONSIDERATION

Pleading. The all-essential element of a plea of failure of consideration is the facts. There need not necessarily be any formal statement "that there was a total failure of consideration".

Miller v Laing, 212-437; 236 NW 378

Parol evidence to establish. Principle reaffirmed that parol evidence may be admissible to establish lack of consideration for a written instrument.

Northern Trust v Anderson, 222-590; 262 NW 529

Evidence of assumption of note—discharge of maker—insufficient. Evidence held insufficient to establish oral agreement discharging makers from liability on note and substituting purchaser of property for maker.

Citizens Bank v Probasco, (NOR); 233 NW 510

Parol as affecting writings—clearly expressed consideration. The clearly expressed consideration recited in an unambiguous written instrument cannot be contradicted by parol evidence.

Burrier v Sheriff, 207-692; 223 NW 395

Parol or extrinsic evidence affecting writings—"exceptions" catalogued. The so-called "exceptions" to the parol evidence rule may be stated thus: Parol evidence is admissible,

1. To establish grounds for the reformation of a written contract.

2. To establish the unnamed consideration for a unilateral written contract.

3. To establish a distinctly separate and complete contract contemporaneous with, and noncontradictory of, a written contract.

4. To establish the conditional delivery of a written contract, and the failure of said condition.

5. To complete a written contract which shows on its face that it is fragmentary and incomplete.

In re Simplot, 215-578; 246 NW 396

Conclusiveness of one's own plea. A plaintiff who, in an action on a promissory note, specifically pleads a definite consideration, must stand or fall thereon. Having fallen, he will not be permitted to advantage himself of a consideration possibly reflected in the record, but not embraced within his own chosen plea.

Persia Bk. v Wilson, 214-993; 243 NW 581

Unallowable conclusion plea. An allegation that the transferee of a negotiable promissory note received it without consideration,—that said transferee was not a bona fide holder for value,—is a conclusion plea, and is not justified by the additional allegation of fact that said transferee took the note as a "donation or gift".

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Failure to plead—effect. Refusal to instruct as to the want of consideration in the signing of a promissory note is proper when defendant (1) causes plaintiff's plea of consideration to be stricken, and (2) does not himself plead want of consideration.

Conner v Henry, 205-95; 215 NW 506

Unavailable plea of want of consideration. The purchaser of corporate stock in praesenti by cash and by delivering his promissory note to the corporation for the balance, which note is sold by the corporation for cash, may not plead want of consideration when sued on the note, because, by such transaction, he has acquired the status of a stockholder, even tho no stock has been formally issued to him.

Conover v Hasselman, 206-100; 220 NW 42

Estoppel to plead. The maker of a promissory note may not plead failure of consideration when his own fraud brought about such failure.

Cloud v Burnett, 201-733; 206 NW 283

Estoppel to plead. One who signs a promissory note as surety, and also a renewal thereof, in order to secure a dismissal of an action on a prior note for the same debt, and in order to increase the security of the note, may not plead want of consideration for his signing.

Castelline v Pray, 200-695; 205 NW 339

Nonestoppel to plead. The maker of a promissory note is not estopped to plead failure of consideration for the note as to him because of the fact that, subsequent to the signing, he was a party to a contract under which there was a novation of security.

I PLEADING AND PROOF OF CONSIDERATION—continued

Insell v McDaniels, 201-533; 207 NW 533

When consideration operative on all original makers. The consideration which supports a strictly original promissory note operates, in the absence of fraud or mistake, upon all the original and contemporaneous signers of said note; and especially must this be true when a maker who pleads want of consideration signs as a prospective participant in the enterprise.

Starry v Starry, 212-274; 234 NW 281

When consideration unnecessary. One who obtains from the owner of real estate a written permission to erect improvements on the property and agrees that he will look solely to a third party for compensation, and not to the owner, may not, after the improvements have been erected, plead want of consideration for said writing.

Coen & Conway v Bank, 205-483; 218 NW 325

Statutory bond. The surety on the statutory bond of an executor may not plead want of consideration for signing the bond.

New Amsterdam Cas. v Bookhart, 212-994; 235 NW 74; 76 ALR 897

Burden of proof. A husband who signs a note and mortgage along with his wife has the burden to show failure of consideration for his signature, and he does not meet such burden by proof that his wife received all of the money borrowed and that he signed the mortgage in order to waive his dower interest.

Penn Ins. v Orr, 217-1022; 252 NW 745

Insufficient proof of failure of consideration. In an action for the balance due on a contract of subscription, a denial that the amount already paid was applied to the purpose for which the subscription was executed, avails nothing.

Y. M. C. A. v Caward, 213-408; 239 NW 41

Assumption of obligations of insolvent estate. Where heirs of a deceased take up the outstanding obligations of the latter and execute their personal note for the same, their plea of want of consideration, when sued on the note, imposes on them the burden to show that the estate of the said deceased was insolvent.

Alpha Bank v Ostrander, 214-563; 243 NW 198

Rent—eviction by foreclosure decree. Even tho a wife who had joined with her husband in the execution of rent obligations was not made a party to subsequent mortgage foreclosure wherein her husband and the landlord were evicted by the appointment of a receiver, yet she may, when sued on the rent obligations by the landlord or by his assignee, plead the foreclosure decree as establishing a total failure of consideration.

Miller v Laing, 212-437; 236 NW 378

Inadequate consideration. A creditor may be unable to prove actual fraud in a conveyance carrying substantially all of the debtor's property, but may be able to prove a constructive fraud in said conveyance, to wit: that the consideration paid by the grantee was substantially inadequate in view of the value of the property conveyed. And, on such proof, the power of a court of equity is so boundless as to justify the entry of most any decree which will equitably protect both the grantee in the conveyance, the complaining creditor, and all other parties involved.

McFarland v Johnston, 219-1108; 260 NW 32

Impeaching recited consideration. The general recital in a deed of conveyance of a valuable consideration may be impeached, in an action to cancel the deed for fraud, by showing that no consideration passed, and by showing that the only relation of grantor and grantee was that of aunt and niece.

Guenther v Kurtz, 204-732; 216 NW 39

Failure of consideration—facts showing. The signer of a promissory note (no holder-ship in due course being involved) may plead want of consideration (1) when the note grew out of a transaction with which he was in no manner connected, (2) when he was under no possible obligation to sign the note, and (3) when he received nothing of value for so signing.

Insell v McDaniels, 201-533; 207 NW 533

Lack of mutuality and consideration—agreement to purchase steers retained and fed by alleged seller. In law action based on written instrument, wherein plaintiff agreed to feed 24 head of steers for a period from 90 to 120 days, and defendant agreed to purchase the steers at any time during such period at 14 cents per pound, hoof weight, at Chicago or other reasonable marketing point, such agreement was not enforceable due to lack of mutuality and consideration, especially where there was no other consideration than that imported by the instrument, and this being a law action rather than in equity to make contract mean what plaintiff contends that it was intended to say, hence plaintiff could not recover on instrument the difference between 14 cents per pound and price at which plaintiff sold the steers on Chicago market.

May v Burns, 227-1385; 291 NW 473

Suretyship—want of consideration. A plea of want of consideration, interposed by a gratuitous surety on a promissory note may be very properly ignored in the instructions of the court when the record shows (1) that the surety signed the note without fraud imposed upon him, and (2) that there was a consideration between the principal and the payee.

Granner v Byam, 218-535; 255 NW 653

Want of consideration—burden of proof. The beneficiaries of a trust, defendants in an action on a note and mortgage executed by their authorized agent, have the burden to show want of consideration.

Daries v Hart, 214-1312; 243 NW 527

Payment—jury question. The issue of accord and satisfaction is for the jury when the evidence is not clear whether one party tendered the sum in full settlement, or, if he did so tender it, whether the other party so accepted the sum.

Zabawa v Osman, 202-561; 210 NW 602

Verdicts on conflicting evidence—conclusive. A jury verdict on competent, but conflicting testimony, relative to the consideration—if any—for a chattel mortgage, is conclusive on the appellate court.

McDonald v Webb, 222-1402; 271 NW 521

Discussion. See 13 ILR 332—Promissory estoppel; 17 ILR 233—Antecedent debt; 18 ILR 445—Restatement and decisions; 19 ILR 395—Past and moral consideration

Statutory presumption—when conclusive. A consideration specifically recited in a written contract signed by the defendant must be treated as correct in the absence of any counter showing.

Y. M. C. A. v Caward, 213-408; 239 NW 41

Consideration—who may not question. A plaintiff has no standing to attack a conveyance of land for want of consideration when, if he be successful, his only interest in the land would be that of an heir of the grantor.

O'Neil v Morrison, 211-416; 233 NW 708

Consideration — adequacy. Evidence reviewed relative to an assignment of a note and mortgage for $5,000, and held that a life annuity of $200 per year to the assignor was sufficiently adequate to prevent any imputation of fraud, actual or constructive.

Scott v Seabury, 220-655; 262 NW 804

Default of loan agent. A mortgagor may not assert failure of consideration for the mortgage because his own duly authorized agent to procure the loan and receipt for the proceeds did not remit the proceeds to him.

Hedges Co. v Holland, 203-1149; 212 NW 480

Rendering consideration worthless. The consideration for a contract to purchase a non-negotiable promissory note necessarily fails when the vendor-holder of the note cancels the contract out of which the note arose, and thereby renders the note worthless.

Durband v Nicholson, 205-1264; 216 NW 278; 219 NW 318

Mutual enlargement of business. Where parties are carrying on a business under written contract, a subsequent and additional oral contract under which they mutually enlarge their operations, obligations, and prospective benefits manifestly cannot be deemed without consideration.

Fisher v Nicola, 214-801; 241 NW 478

Absence of consideration. An assignment of the proceeds of a life insurance policy is a nullity when not supported by a consideration.

Mutual Ins. v Schubert, 201-697; 207 NW 741

Illegal sale. The sale of an automobile, the engine number of which has been defaced, altered, or tampered with, without an official certificate showing good and sufficient reasons for such change, presents a case of total failure of consideration, and no formal rescission of contract is necessary in order to recover the price paid.

Espe v McClelland, 208-512; 226 NW 130

Compounding offense as consideration.

Cotten v Halverson, 201-636; 207 NW 795

See Queen Ins. v Railway, 201-1072; 206 NW 804

Remote consideration. A bank may not be said to have received the benefit of a loan transaction between parties not connected with the bank, simply because the proceeds of the loan were used by one of the parties in purchasing the treasury stock of the bank.

McRoberts v Ordway, 206-947; 221 NW 507

Assumption of mortgage. Consideration for an agreement by a subsequent grantee of mortgaged premises to pay the mortgage is found in the fact that such agreement is the result of a settlement of the good-faith contention of the mortgagee that said grantee had, by the modification of a deed, wrongfully obliterated all evidence that the mortgagor ever had any interest in the land, to the damage of said mortgagee.

Sheley v Engle, 204-1283; 213 NW 617

Assumption of mortgage. The grantee of mortgage-incumbered land by absolute deed of conveyance but for the purpose of effecting security only, is not liable on his agreement to assume and pay the existing mortgage unless a consideration for such assumption and agreement is made to appear.

Herbold v Sheley, 209-384; 224 NW 781

Assumption of mortgage. An oral agreement by the grantee of land to assume and pay an existing mortgage on the land, whether made before or after the execution of a written contract of sale which was silent as to such assumption, is without consideration when, in the final closing of the sale, the grantor was paid not only the full and conceded value of his equity in the land, but the amount of said mortgage.

Crane v Leclere, 206-1270; 221 NW 925

Assumption and agreement to pay. Consideration for an agreement to pay an existing mortgage on land is prima facie shown by proof (1) that the grantee accepted a deed which recited such agreement to pay "as part of the consideration" for the land, and (2) that he went into full possession under such deed.

First N. Bank v McDonough, 205-1329; 219 NW 329

Conveyance—consideration. Evidence held to show that the consideration for a conveyance of land was the satisfaction both of a mortgage indebtedness and also of certain judgments against the grantors.

Taylor v Heiny, 210-1320; 232 NW 695

Unjust enrichment. Where the purchaser of land was at no time delinquent in his payments or other conditions to be performed on his part, it would be unjust and inequitable to allow the vendor to retain the payments when, through his own fault, he failed to perform his part of the contract.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Subordination in favor of other mortgages. The act of a corporation in waiving its priority and subordinating its mortgage to a mortgage held by another party, finds ample consideration in the fact that such waiver and subordination enabled the creditor of the corporation to obtain a new loan and to so re-finance his obligations as to avoid foreclosures, and thereby protect the corporation from the necessity of paying off prior mortgages in order to protect its own mortgage.

Homesteaders Life v Salinger, 212-251; 235 NW 485

Vendor's inability to perform—purchaser's tender unnecessary. When the vendor had put it out of his power to perform a contract to sell realty by permitting a mortgage on the property to be foreclosed, it was not necessary for the purchaser to tender the unpaid part of the purchase price before commencing suit for the amounts paid.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Pre-existing debt. A pre-existing indebtedness is ample consideration, as between the debtor and creditor, for the execution of a mortgage securing its payment.

Charlson v Bank, 201-120; 206 NW 812

Equitable estoppel—detriment and change of position. A chattel mortgage on property which the mortgagor does not own cannot prevail against the claim of the actual owner, even tho the latter has permitted the mortgagor to treat the property as his own, when the mortgagee takes such mortgage as additional security to a pre-existing debt, and without parting with anything of value, and without in any manner changing his position to his detriment.

People's Bank v McCarthy, 206-28; 217 NW 453

Pre-existing debt. A pre-existing indebtedness furnishes ample consideration for a transfer by a mortgagor of rent notes.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Conway, 215-1031; 247 NW 253

Hypothecation to secure extension. The hypothecation of corporate stock as collateral security to a note, in order to secure an extension of time of payment, is supported by ample consideration.

Klatt v Bank, 206-252; 220 NW 318

Agreement extending time—consideration. The extension of the time for the payment of the debt was sufficient consideration for an agreement extending a mortgage, even tho the holder reserved the right to sue at any time any person who did not consent in writing to the extension.

Lincoln Ins. v McKenney, 227-727; 289 NW 4

Extending time on mortgage as consideration—burden of proof. In an action by a bank to foreclose a mortgage on land, the defendants had the burden of proving their defenses of fraud and want of consideration, and altho there was testimony that the mortgage was given to enable the bank to make a good showing to bank examiners and that there had been a promise that it would never be foreclosed, the court was justified in finding from other evidence that there was no fraud and that the consideration was the granting of an extension of time, on a past-due mortgage on other land.

Panama Bank v Arkfeld, 228- ; 291 NW 182

Promise to answer for debt, default, or miscarriage of another—extension of time—insufficient consideration. An oral promise to pay the debt of another person if the creditor will give such other person—the original debtor—an extension of time in which to pay is within the statute of frauds.

Leytham v McHenry, 209-692; 228 NW 639

Consideration for chattel mortgage—credit on debt—extension of time. A vendor of a house whose vendee had not completed the payments on the contract of purchase gave valuable consideration for two mortgages on an automobile owned by the vendee by taking the mortgages in return for payments advanced on the contract, by paying cash to the chattel mortgagee, and by extending the time on the payments for the house.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Consideration — mutuality — constructing a grotto. An agreement between an individual and a charitable organization for the construction of a grotto is neither lacking in consideration, nor in mutuality where the parties clearly intended and provided for corresponding mutual obligations.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Reconveyance of land. A contract cannot rest on a past consideration, but has ample support in a consideration consisting of the doing of something of value which the promisor was under no legal duty to do. So held where the mortgagor of land, in order to escape obligation on the mortgage, contracted to reconvey the land and to assume and pay the attorney fees of the mortgagee.

Anderson v Lundt, 200-1265; 206 NW 657

Consideration—adequacy. A deed of conveyance which recites (1) that it is in payment for services performed by grantee in caring for her mother in her lifetime and (2) that grantee will support and care for grantor during his lifetime, is supported by an adequate consideration.

Ellis v Allman, 217-483; 250 NW 172

Consideration—nonconclusiveness. The consideration named in a deed of conveyance is only prima facie evidence of the amount, and as to the fact of payment.

Gilbert v Plowman, 218-1345; 256 NW 746

Novation. A contract of novation under a contract for the sale of real estate is supported by ample consideration when the vendor agrees to divide the original contract and to have it executed by different parties and in a different manner than as provided in said original contract.

Montgomery v Beller, 207-278; 222 NW 846

Nonmoney agreement — justifiable refusal. A servant who agrees to accept corporate stock in a contemplated corporation in payment of his wages is justified in refusing the stock at a time when, without his consent, the corporation has become heavily encumbered by mortgage.

Tracey v Judy, 202-646; 210 NW 793

Agreement to pay in other than money—refusal—effect. An agreement to receive corporate stock in payment of wages is converted into a money demand by a failure to deliver the stock.

Tracey v Judy, 202-646; 210 NW 793

Past services or past indebtedness as consideration for contract to will property. Although past services or past indebtedness may be a lawful consideration for an agreement, the parol evidence of such past services or indebtedness will not establish a contract by which the debtor agrees to sell or transfer his property by will in satisfaction of such services or debt.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Mutual expectations — presumption. The rendition on one hand and the acceptance on the other of valuable services (board and lodging) for a series of years generates a presumption that the one rendering was to receive pay and that the one receiving was to pay; and this is true tho the receiver and the giver were lifelong associates, and related, but were not members of the same family.

Peterson v Johnson, 205-16; 212 NW 138

Future support—when not consideration. A conveyance of property in consideration of future support is voluntary as to existing creditors.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

Consideration and revocability. An executed, delivered, and accepted gift needs no consideration for its support, and is irrevocable.

Stonewall v Danielson, 204-1367; 217 NW 456

Love and affection—when not consideration. A conveyance of property in consideration of love and affection is voluntary as against existing creditors.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

Naming child. A promise by grandfather to will property to grandson, if the parents name the grandson after the grandfather, is void for lack of legal consideration when such promise was made over three months after grandson had already been named after the grandfather.

Lanfier v Lanfier, 227-258; 288 NW 104

Love and affection — consideration — sufficiency. In an action to enforce grandfather's oral promise to will property to grandson in return for naming grandson after him, court held that love and affection, while being a "good" consideration, was not a sufficient consideration when unsupported by a pecuniary or material benefit, and created, at most, a bare moral obligation.

Lanfier v Lanfier, 227-258; 288 NW 104

Oral agreement to devise realty—insufficiency of evidence to set aside. In an equity action to recover a sum of money alleged to be the share of plaintiff's intestate in the estate of his father, where evidence shows the mother of plaintiff's intestate was left with five minor children, and that she filed a partition proceeding involving 400 acres of land

owned by her husband who died intestate, and she thereafter was the successful purchaser at a sale of the land, and that, as a part of the purchase price, she executed a note and mortgage on the land to a guardian appointed for the minor children to secure their respective shares in the father's estate, and that, as the children became of age, there were no guardianship funds to pay their respective shares, and that it was orally agreed that the children would receipt for their respective shares, in cash, to the guardian (altho no cash was received), and the mother agreed to, and did execute a will leaving the land to the children in equal shares, the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to set aside the agreement, and the trial court's order, affirming the agreement and impounding the mother's will until her death, was affirmed.

Baumann v Willemsen, 228- ; 292 NW 77

Care and nursing. An oral contract for a deed of conveyance is supported by ample consideration,—if any consideration be necessary,—in the agreement of the grantee to care for and nurse the aged grantor during his lifetime, whether such time be long or short.

Kissling v Bank, 203-62; 212 NW 314

Contract for care and support. A contract for the support of an aged person during his lifetime will not be deemed to be without adequate support simply because death follows quickly in the wake of the execution of the contract.

Burmeister v Hamann, 208-412; 226 NW 10

Agreement to support grantor. Principle recognized that ample consideration for a deed of conveyance may be found in the agreement of the grantee to support the grantor for life, even tho it may ultimately develop that the value of the property materially exceeds the value of the support.

In re O'Hara, 204-1331; 217 NW 245

Honest but inadequate consideration. Even tho a conveyance of land by an insolvent father to his son may not be actually fraudulent, yet it may be constructively fraudulent to the extent of the substantial difference between the actual value of the land and the lesser price paid therefor by the son; and in such case a court of equity may make such order as will protect both the grantee and the complaining creditor.

Williams Bk. v Murphy, 219-839; 259 NW 467

Fraudulent conveyance—repaying grantee's consideration. In an action by a bankruptcy trustee, where property was conveyed to a brother by a sister, who thereafter took bankruptcy and such property was considerably in excess of consideration therefor, the deeds were only constructively fraudulent as to grantee, and the setting aside of such deeds required that grantee be paid amount he gave as consideration for the conveyance.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Foreclosure—transfer of rents—consideration. Record reviewed and held that a written transfer of the right to the use and occupancy of mortgaged premises during the period of redemption was supported by adequate consideration and was free from fraud.

Andrew v Miller, 218-301; 255 NW 492

Chattel mortgage foreclosure—defense. The right of a mortgagee to foreclose a chattel mortgage by notice and sale (1) under the statute (Ch 523, C., '31), or (2) under the terms of the mortgage itself, may not be transferred to the district court on the application of the mortgagor on the ground of fraud and want of consideration in obtaining the mortgage, when an action of replevin involving the mortgaged chattels, and pending against the mortgagor furnishes him ample opportunity to test the mortgagee's right to foreclose by interposing said plea of fraud and want of consideration.

McDonald v Johnston, 218-1352; 256 NW 676

Mortgage without consideration as to wife. A mortgage on homestead property duly signed by both husband and wife cannot be enforced against the wife when it appears that there was no consideration for the wife's signature.

Greenland v Abben, 218-255; 254 NW 830

Wife signing mortgage and note to release dower. Evidence to the effect that a wife signed, not only the mortgage of her husband, but also the promissory note, and did so in order to enable the husband to obtain the loan and complete the deal, does not establish that the note was without consideration as to her, even tho she asserts that she signed solely to release her dower interest.

Des Moines JSL Bank v Allen, 220-448; 261 NW 912

First Tr. JSL Bank v Diercks, 222-534; 267 NW 708

Consideration—avoiding execution levy. A deed for 120 acres of land which recites "$2,300 and other valuable consideration", the payment of which is otherwise sustained by evidence, is supported by a sufficient consideration when the transaction was made at a time when land values were depressed and the grantor needed to make the sale to satisfy a judgment creditor who was threatening to levy an execution on grantor's real estate.

Gilligan v Jones, 226-86; 283 NW 434

Husband to wife—"one dollar and other valuable consideration"—sufficiency. A deed from husband to wife, executed two years prior to the rendition of a judgment against the husband and which deed recites a consideration of "one dollar and other valuable consideration", is not fraudulent as against such judgment creditor of the grantor-husband, when it is shown that the "other consideration" consisted of $3,000 actually paid by the wife.

Donovan v White, 224-138; 275 NW 889

Consideration—definition—resolution deferring corporate salary. Consideration being a benefit or advantage accruing to one party or a loss or disadvantage incurred by the other, a corporation resolution deferring salary payment is a benefit to the corporation and a detriment to the employees constituting a valid consideration.

Bankers Trust Co. v Economy Coal Co., 224-36; 276 NW 16

Public benefit. Principle recognized that the contract of a municipal corporation must be supported by a consideration in the nature of a public benefit.

Love v City, 210-90; 230 NW 373

Revival of discharged debt. Principle recognized that the moral obligation to pay a debt which has been discharged in bankruptcy will support an oral promise to pay the discharged debt.

Fierce v Fleming, 205-1281; 217 NW 806

Moral obligation. Principle recognized that a moral obligation is not sufficient consideration to support a subsequent promise.

Northwest. Bk. v Muilenburg, 209-1223; 229 NW 813

Settlement of action. A stipulation of settlement of an action is supported by an adequate consideration.

Salinger v Elev. Co., 210-668; 231 NW 366

Contract of reguaranty. A guarantor who, in a new written contract, reguarantees the payment of the amount past due on a former contract on which he is guarantor, and also guarantees the payment of future accruing indebtedness, will not be heard to say that there was no consideration for the guaranty in the new contract of the old indebtedness when by the new contract an extension of time of payment of the old indebtedness was secured.

Watkins Co. v Peterson, 210-661; 231 NW 489

Assignment of expectancy as security. An assignment of an expectancy, in a contemplated estate, as security for a debt is supported by adequate consideration.

Gannon v Graham, 211-516; 231 NW 675; 73 ALR 1050

Burk v Morain, 223-399; 272 NW 441

Contract to relinquish part of devise. A written agreement between devisees that they would so divide the devised property that certain nondevisees would also share in the property is supported by a sufficient consideration in that the agreeing devisees suffered a detriment by relinquishing part of the devise, and the nondevisees acquired a benefit.

Clayman v Bibler, 210-497; 231 NW 334

Pledge of collateral—consideration. The naming of a surety as beneficiary in a life insurance policy, and the pledging of the policy in order to indemnify the said surety on signing a renewal note, are supported by a sufficient consideration.

Beed v Beed, 207-954; 222 NW 442

Part payment of debt in discharge of whole. An executed agreement between a debtor and a creditor to the effect that the debtor will, before any part of the indebtedness is legally due, pay a part thereof in full satisfaction of the entire indebtedness, is supported by ample consideration, and is, therefore, enforceable.

Fisher Co. v Gravel Co., 216-909; 249 NW 664

Recovery of consideration paid. A vendee of land who is and always has been in undisturbed possession of the land, and who has never rescinded the contract of purchase, but is distinctly standing thereon, may not recover the consideration paid because the vendor is unable to convey good title.

Weech v Read, 208-1083; 226 NW 768

Contemporaneous collateral contract. An oral contract contemporaneous with the execution of a written contract cannot be deemed collateral to said written contract unless said oral contract has a supporting consideration separate and distinct from the consideration which supports the written contract.

In re Simplot, 215-578; 246 NW 396

Subscriptions—validity. A written undertaking to pay a named sum for the purpose of discharging the debts of a Young Men's Christian Association is an enforceable obligation.

Y. M. C. A. v Caward, 213-408; 239 NW 41

Bona fide dispute. The settlement of a bona fide dispute as to the amount of an account is ample consideration for an accord and satisfaction.

Minn. Paper Co. v Register, 205-1228; 219 NW 321

Compromise and settlement. A written contract of compromise and settlement of a bona fide controversy between parties is supported by adequate consideration.

Kilts v Read, 216-356; 249 NW 157

Unsupported promise. An oral compromise and settlement of a bona fide controversy between parties relative to a claim of one of the parties is not established by evidence which affirmatively shows that no controversy existed between the parties, but that one of the parties made a promise to the other for which promise no consideration appears.

Marron v Lynch, 215-341; 245 NW 346

Promise to pay legal debt. A promise to pay a part of what one is legally owing cannot furnish a consideration for a contract which is collateral to said promise.

Durband v Nicholson, 205-1264; 216 NW 278; 219 NW 318

Compromise of illegal claim. A compromise in the amount of a claim which a municipal corporation has no legal authority to pay, in any amount, affords no consideration for the agreement to pay the lesser sum.

Love v City, 210-90; 230 NW 373

Barred claim as consideration. A conveyance by a husband to his wife will not be set aside on the sole ground that the conveyance was in satisfaction of an indebtedness against which the statute of limitation had fully run.

Cover v Wyland, 205-915; 218 NW 915

Past or moral consideration. Past or moral consideration is not sufficient to support an executory contract.

Lanfier v Lanfier, 227-258; 288 NW 104

Inheritance tax—transfer without consideration. A bona fide transfer of property for a fair consideration, sufficient to render the property nontaxable under the inheritance tax law, is not established by evidence that the instruments of transfer—concededly executed in contemplation of death and to take effect after death—were, at the most, supported only by a past and wholly executed consideration.

McEvoy v Wegman, 216-395; 249 NW 263

Past consideration. Where plaintiff agreed to construct, at his own expense, an electric power line from his residence to defendant's power plant, a subsequent promise by defendant, without a new consideration, to pay the expense of constructing said line is nudum pactum.

Heggen v Clover Leaf Co., 217-820; 253 NW 140

Cancellation of nudum pactum. An agreement that one of two stockholders shall draw all dividends up to a certain time, unsupported by any consideration, is properly canceled in an action in equity.

Petersen v Heywood, 212-1174; 236 NW 63

Promise to pay debt of another—consideration. Tho the vendee of a stock of goods did not, in making the purchase, assume the payment of an outstanding account for goods, yet his later written promise to pay said bill if the creditor would extend the time of payment and furnish additional stock for the store—which was done—is supported by ample consideration.

Smith Bros. Co. v Carmichael, 221-301; 264 NW 65

Earnings of minor as consideration. The fact that a parent has received the earnings of his unemancipated minor child will not support a conveyance to the minor when the conveyance leaves the parent without property sufficient to pay his debts.

Scovel v Pierce, 208-776; 226 NW 133

Wages of minor as consideration. A deed from a father to a son of a $2,500 town property for admittedly no consideration, and a deed of a $12,000, partly encumbered farm, in fulfillment of an alleged contract that the son (at the time of contract, an unemancipated, unmarried, nineteen-year-old minor) should, when married, be given said farm if he remained on, and helped in the management of said farm, are, irrespective of any actual fraud, constructively fraudulent as to a prior existing creditor of the grantor, because of want of, or grossly inadequate, consideration, it appearing that the son married within a month after attaining majority; and grantee must, in order to sustain said deeds, prove that grantor still continued to retain sufficient property to pay his said creditor.

Commercial Bank v Balderston, 219-1250; 260 NW 728

Waiver of tax sale certificates—detriment to promisee. The holder of tax sale certificates covering mortgaged real estate who, in writing, waives the priority of said certificates over the lien of said mortgage, in order to enable the mortgagor to ward off foreclosure by obtaining an extension of time in which to pay the mortgage debt, may not, after the mortgagor has obtained said extension on the strength of the waiver, successfully assert that said waiver was without consideration.

Goff v Milliron, 221-998; 266 NW 526

Unilateral contract as to wage scale. An action to enjoin the violation of a so-called wage agreement will not lie when the writing is wholly unilateral,—when it purports to impose on the defendant an obligation to pay a certain scale of wages but imposes no obligation whatever on the other party or parties to the writing.

Wilson v Coal Co., 215-855; 246 NW 753

Bank night—consideration for unilateral contract. Where the promoter of a motion picture bank night drawing voluntarily makes certain requirements to qualify for the prize which is promised, he does not merely extend an offer to make a gift, but a unilateral contract is created in which the promoter determines the adequacy of the consideration for his promise, and when a person is induced to accept the promise and perform the specified act which was bargained for, it does not matter how insignificant the benefit of the performance may apparently be to the promoter, the promise can be enforced by the winner of the drawing.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Lottery—bank night—value of consideration in contract. A bank night scheme is not a lottery merely because a legal consideration is given in return for the promise to give the prize. The value of the consideration given in a lottery is important, as a lottery depends on whether persons are induced to hazard something of value on a mere chance, but in a civil action to enforce the payment of a bank night prize the value of the consideration does not control, as any legal consideration is sufficient to support the promise.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Consolidation—assumption of obligations. The assumption by a consolidating company of the obligations of the companies consolidated will not be rendered nugatory by mere inadequacy of consideration. At any rate, it is not for the court to pass on the sufficiency of the consideration growing out of a consolidation approved by the companies consolidated, by their stockholders, and by duly empowered public officials.

State v Cas. Co., 213-200; 238 NW 726

Adequacy of executed consideration. The court will not pass upon the adequacy of a fully executed consideration.

Kisor v Litzenberg, 203-1183; 212 NW 343

Surrender of legal right. The execution of an obligation to make good the embezzlement of a relative is supported by adequate consideration when, in return for the obligation, the obligee waives or surrenders his right to proceed against the embezzler's surety bond.

Smith v Morgan, 214-555; 240 NW 257

Fraudulent conveyance. Consideration for a conveyance of land by a son to his mother is found in the fact that the mother is executrix under a will which gives her the personal property subject to the debts of the estate, and that she agrees, in return for the land, to pay off all the debts of the estate and, on so doing, to cancel and return to the son all his direct and indirect liabilities to the estate.

Cherokee Auto v Stratton, 210-1236; 232 NW 646

Exchange of property. Instruments duly executed in exchange of property cannot be impeached without convincing proof of fraud, and values of exchanged properties are liberally regarded in determining adequacy of consideration.

Ragan v Lehman, (NOR); 216 NW 717

Antenuptial contracts—consideration marriage—validity. Antenuptial contracts the same as other contracts, if fair and free from fraud, are valid, binding, and enforceable, being based upon the consideration of marriage which is of the very highest known to the law.

In re Onstot, 224-520; 277 NW 563

Antenuptial contract. The consideration for an antenuptial contract necessarily inheres in the resulting marriage.

Kalsem v Froland, 207-994; 222 NW 3

Marriage settlements—validity. A marriage settlement, duly and in good faith executed, and confirmed by the subsequent marriage of the parties, is valid against the creditors of the husband when not grossly out of proportion to the husband's station and circumstances.

Benson v Burgess, 214-1220; 243 NW 188

Withholding action. The fact that the obligee in a bond of indemnity withheld action for failure of title furnishes ample consideration for the bond.

Duke v Tyler, 209-1345; 230 NW 319

Forbearance to sue. Forbearance on the part of a creditor to institute an action may furnish ample consideration to pay a claim.

Hefen v Brown, 208-325; 223 NW 763

Rent—payment in advance—ouster—right to recover. A tenant who pays the rent in advance to the landlord, and is legally evicted by foreclosure proceedings before the commencement of the term, may recover of the landlord the sum so paid as for a total failure of consideration.

Ransier v Worrell, 211-606; 229 NW 663

Individual mortgages by bank directors. Bank directors may not question the legality of individual mortgages executed by them when, through such execution, they obtain (1) the surrender of their formerly executed guaranty in behalf of their bank, (2) an extension of time in which to pay the guaranteed obligations, and (3) the surrender by the mortgagee of assets of which the director-mortgagors individually avail themselves.

Live Stock Bk. v Irwin, 207-1083; 224 NW 76

Repossessed motor vehicles—no retaking on ground that conditional sale usurious. A replevin action to retake a motor vehicle covered by, and repossessed under, a conditional bill of sale, is not maintainable on the ground that the conditional bill of sale was allegedly usurious. The debt in the conditional bill of sale is valid and still exists even tho a usury penalty attaches.

Hill v Rolfsema, 226-486; 284 NW 376

9442 Gaming contracts void.

Discussion. See 17 ILR 524—"Void" and "voidable"

ANALYSIS

- I IN GENERAL
- II ACTION ON WAGERING CONTRACT
- III NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS
- IV MONEY PAID ON WAGER
- V MONEY DEPOSITED WITH STAKEHOLDER

I IN GENERAL

Annuity contract as "wager". An annuity contract, entered into in good faith, under which the annuitant, for a lump sum payment determined by skilled actuaries, is promised a definite annual payment during the lifetime of the annuitant, does not offend against public policy—is not a "wager" contract.

Hult v Ins. Co., 213-890; 240 NW 218

Connivance at violation of commerce statutes—effect. A shipper of goods will be deemed as participating in the doing of an illegal act when he enters into a contract with a motor vehicle freight operator for the transportation of freight over the highways of this state by said operator as an independent contractor, and knows, at the time of so contracting, that said operator has no right to carry on his said business because of the failure of said operator (1) to obtain from the board of railroad commissioners (now commerce commission) the legally required official permit to carry on said business, and (2) to file with said board the legally required bond. It follows that said operator will not be deemed an independent contractor but simply the agent of said shipper.

Hough v Freight Service, 222-548; 269 NW 1

Dealing in "futures"—implied or apparent authority of agent—unallowable plea. A commission firm was prohibited by the mandatory rules of the board of trade of which it was a member from dealing in so-called "futures" for and on behalf of a nonmember corporation unless the firm first obtained from said nonmember corporation a writing authorizing the latter's manager to contract for such "futures". The firm disregarded said rule and accepted orders for such "futures" from a manager who had been expressly forbidden to exercise such power. Held, that said firm, when sued by the injured corporation for the resulting loss, would not be permitted to defend on the ground that said manager had implied or apparent power to issue said orders.

Watkins Co. v Smith Co., 221-1164; 267 NW 115

II ACTION ON WAGERING CONTRACT

Property sold in furtherance of gambling. A vendor of property susceptible of a perfectly legitimate use may not recover therefor when he sells it for the very purpose of enabling the vendee to operate a gambling device, to wit, a punch board.

Parker-Gordon Co. v Benakis, 213-136; 238 NW 611

Contracts and transactions—presumption. The presumption under the bucket shop act that grain, the subject matter of a purported contract of sale, was never intended to be delivered by the broker is not overcome by the simple expedient of having the broker testify that he intended to deliver the grain unless he had sooner sold it prior to the date of delivery.

Yoerg v Geneser, 219-132; 257 NW 541

Bank night—value of consideration in contract. A bank-night scheme is not a lottery merely because a legal consideration is given in return for the promise to give the prize. The value of the consideration given in a lottery is important, as a lottery depends on whether persons are induced to hazard something of value on a mere chance, but in a civil action to enforce the payment of a bank night prize the value of the consideration does not control, as any legal consideration is sufficient to support the promise.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

III NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS

Dealing in margins—illegality—jury question. Evidence that promissory notes sued on were furnished for illegal transactions in dealing in margins on corn on the board of trade, and that the parties had no intention of having the corn delivered, was sufficient to make a case for the jury.

I REQUISITES AND VALIDITY IN GENERAL

(a) IN GENERAL

Power of courts. Courts may not make contracts for the parties.

Beal v Milliron, (NOR); 267 NW 83

Valid statutes read into contracts. Principle affirmed that contracts are conclusively presumed to have been entered into in view of the valid statutes then existing and controlling the subject-matter.

Priest v Whitney Co., 219-1281; 261 NW 374

Requirements generally—express contract. To constitute an "express contract" there must have been an offer and acceptance as to the same thing. Usually an agreement is arrived at by means of an expressed or implied proposal or offer from one side, expressly or impliedly accepted on the other, but formality in proposing and accepting is not required, providing there is an intention to assume legal liability as distinguished from a mere ebullition of emotion or expression of intention to do an act of generosity. A promissory expression without intention to contract is not sufficient.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Execution—signing of duplicates. There may be a valid written contract altho one party signs one duplicate original of the contract, and the other party signs a different duplicate original.

Hunt, Hill & Betts v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Execution—unreasonableness of contract—effect. It would require a very clear showing which would justify the court in holding as a matter of law that a contract was not entered into because some of its terms were unreasonable.

Goben v Paving Co., 214-834; 239 NW 62

Signing without knowing contents. A party may not dispute the binding force of a contract which, without fraud, he freely signs without informing himself of its contents.

Proctor v Hansel, 205-542; 218 NW 255; 58 ALR 153

Unilateral contract. A simple order for goods constitutes a unilateral contract—one in which the promisor receives no promise in return for his promise.

Port Huron Co. v Wohlers, 207-826; 221 NW 843

(a) IN GENERAL—continued

Joint adventure. The requisites of an ordinary contract, and of a contract of joint adventure, as to form and validity, are substantially the same. Evidence held to establish such adventure.

Smith & Co. v Hollingsworth, 218-920; 251 NW 749

Place of contract—order in this state and acceptance in foreign state. The execution in this state by a proposed vendee of a naked order for goods, and the oral acceptance of such order by the vendor at his place of business in a foreign state, do not constitute the making of a contract in this state.

Anderson & Co. v Monument Co., 210-1226; 232 NW 689

Interstate carrier — employment — lex loci contractus. A contract of employment for and on behalf of an interstate commerce carrier is consummated in this state when the conditional offer of employment is accepted in this state by a resident thereof, even tho the offer is made in a foreign state.

Chicago, Burl. Ry. v Lundquist, 206-499; 221 NW 228

Sales contract—court approval as condition. A definite written offer by the superintendent of banking of this state to sell to a foreign administrator Iowa real estate, belonging to a bank receivership, and the written acceptance of the offer, by said foreign administrator, may constitute a valid and specifically enforceable contract tho the offer and the acceptance be both conditioned on the approval of the respective state courts.

Bates v Bank, 223-385; 272 NW 412

Consideration—benefit to third person. A written agreement between devisees to divide the devised property in such proportions that certain nondevisees will also share in the property is supported by a sufficient consideration in that the agreeing devisees suffer a detriment by relinquishing part of the devise and the nondevisees acquire a benefit.

Clayman v Bibler, 210-497; 231 NW 334

Contract for benefit of third party. Principle reaffirmed that two parties may validly contract for the benefit of a third party, and that the third party may accept, and avail himself of, said contract.

Hunt, Hill & Betts v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

Evidence—weight and sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held to establish the making of a contract for the benefit of a third party.

Climan v Lepley, 218-1038; 256 NW 739

Fiduciary relation — evidence — sufficiency.

Evidence held insufficient to show that a fiduciary relation existed between a minister and a member of his church.

Felton v Thompson, 209-29; 227 NW 529

Delivery—intent of parties. An effective delivery of an instrument is made to the grantee by the naked execution of the instrument and by simply leaving said instrument at the place of execution, if such was the actual intent of the parties. Evidence relative to the delivery of a chattel mortgage held to present jury question.

Beery v Glynn, 214-635; 243 NW 365

Offer—ineffectual acceptance. An offer by a mortgagor to deed the mortgaged land to the mortgagee on condition that the mortgage notes would be deemed canceled from the time the deed was received is not accepted by the act of the mortgagee in forwarding for execution a blank deed on condition that the mortgage notes would be deemed canceled from the time the deed was recorded.

O'Brien v Fitzhugh, 204-787; 215 NW 944

Corporate powers and liabilities—authority of president—insufficient showing. A contract is not binding on a corporation, tho entered into in its name by its president, to the effect that the corporation shall be and remain liable on promissory notes negotiated by it without recourse, when authority to the president to enter into such contract cannot be found in the articles of incorporation, in the bylaws, in the proceedings of the directors, in any act of corporate ratification, or in the customs and practices of the corporation.

First N. Bank v Cement Co., 209-358; 227 NW 908

Contracts partly written, partly oral. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a building contract was partly in writing and partly oral.

Golwitzer v Hummel, 201-751; 206 NW 254

Municipal utility—rates in contract. A contractor who is paid in cash for building a municipal public utility plant is not interested in the electric rates the city proposes to charge nor in the rate of interest on the bonds sold to provide the cash, nor does the statute contemplate that these items be inserted in the construction contract when such contractor is to be paid in cash.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

Power to bind future councils. A city council, under legislative authority, may validly enter into a contract which will be binding on future city councils.

Iowa-Neb. Co. v Villisca, 220-238; 261 NW 423

When offer becomes contract. An unconditional offer by mail to enter into a specified contract becomes a contract in fact at the time and place at which a duly stamped and addressed acceptance is mailed.

International Assn. v Des Moines Co., 215-268; 245 NW 244

Proposal and acceptance—use of mails. An offer by mail invites a reply by mail.

Rogers v Ins. Co., 204-804; 213 NW 757

Offer and acceptance not necessarily consummated contract. Principle reaffirmed that a contract of purchase of real estate is not necessarily completely consummated when the buyer asserts that he will pay a certain sum, and the seller says he will accept said sum, when it is manifest that the parties contemplated the execution of a writing as such consummated contract.

Starry v Starry & Lynch, 212-274; 234 NW 281

Offer to pay attorney fees not accepted. When an attorney, who had received a retainer fee of $100 to represent the insured in a criminal case arising from an automobile accident, received a letter from the attorney for the insurer requesting him to tell the insured that the insurer was willing to take care of attorney fees, such letter was admissible to show an offer to pay such fees, but was insufficient to show that such offer was authorized by the insurer, and his reply that he would look to the company for payment of only those fees exceeding $100, did not amount to an acceptance of the offer.

Gipp v Lynch, 226-1020; 285 NW 659

Consideration—part payment of debt in discharge of whole. An executed agreement between a debtor and a creditor to the effect that the debtor will, before any part of the indebtedness is legally due, pay a part thereof in full satisfaction of the entire indebtedness, is supported by ample consideration, and is, therefore, enforceable.

Fisher Co. v Northwestern Co., 216-909; 249 NW 664

Promise to pay debt of another—consideration. Tho the vendee of a stock of goods did not, in making the purchase, assume the payment of an outstanding account for goods, yet his later written promise to pay said bill if the creditor would extend the time of payment and furnish additional stock for the store—which was done—is supported by ample consideration.

Smith Co. v Carmichael, 221-301; 264 NW 65

Offer and acceptance—disregard of conditions—effect. One who enters into a word-building contest for an award or prize for the largest list, and intentionally and materially violates the rules of the contest, cannot be said to create any contract relation with the party who made the offer, even tho such contestant furnishes the largest list of words.

Scott v People's Monthly Co., 209-503; 228 NW 263; 67 ALR 413

Prize money deposit—insolvency of sponsor—availability. Where, after starting a contest to place small "R's" within a large "R", the sponsor company became insolvent and its receiver under agreement with defendant bank set up a special bank account as prize contest payment money,—which account was later applied by the bank on a note of the insolvent sponsor company,—an individual contestant, altho complying with all contest rules, may not, without being declared to be the winner according to the contest rules, recover against the bank the amount of the first prize from such special account.

Bielen v Bank, 224-19; 276 NW 25

Bank night—consideration for unilateral contract. Where the promoter of a motion picture bank-night drawing voluntarily makes certain requirements to qualify for the prize which is promised, he does not merely extend an offer to make a gift, but a unilateral contract is created in which the promoter determines the adequacy of the consideration for his promise, and when a person is induced to accept the promise and perform the specified act which was bargained for, it does not matter how insignificant the benefit of the performance may apparently be to the promoter, the promise can be enforced by the winner of the drawing.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Lottery—bank night—value of consideration in contract. A bank-night scheme is not a lottery merely because a legal consideration is given in return for the promise to give the prize. The value of the consideration given in a lottery is important, as a lottery depends on whether persons are induced to hazard something of value on a mere chance, but in a civil action to enforce the payment of a bank night prize the value of the consideration does not control, as any legal consideration is sufficient to support the promise.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Allowable restraint of trade — newspaper publications. An agreement, entered into on the sale of a newspaper, to the effect that the seller will not in any manner engage, either alone or with others, in the publication or circulation of a newspaper in the locality specified for a period of fifteen years, is not invalid as being in restraint of trade.

Henry & Sons v Rhinesmith, 219-1088; 260 NW 9

Taxes not contract — decisions involving former assessments not res judicata. Taxes do not arise out of contract and each year's taxes constitute a separate cause of action. Therefore, a decision or judgment involving assessments on the same property in former years cannot be res judicata as to future assessments.

I REQUISITES AND VALIDITY IN GENERAL—continued(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Board v Sioux City Yards, 223-1066; 274 NW 17

Unincorporated associations—noncapacity to contract or sue. Strictly speaking, a voluntary unincorporated association organized for literary and social purposes has no right to contract and cannot maintain a suit in the name of such voluntary unincorporated association alone.

Lamm v Stoen, 226-622; 284 NW 465

(b) MUTUALITY

Discussion. See 1 ILB 65—Doctrine of mutuality; 6 ILB 129, 209—"Illusory" promises and options; 15 ILR 42—Enforceable promises Executed contracts unassailable. An executed contract may not be assailed on the ground of want of mutuality.

Burmeister v Hamann, 208-412; 226 NW 10

Unilateral wage agreement—effect of intervention. A wage agreement which is void as to plaintiff who seeks to enforce it (because wholly lacking in mutuality of obligation and remedy) is necessarily void as to interveners who join in the prayer of plaintiff.

Wilson v Airline Co., 215-855; 246 NW 753

Unilateral contract as to wage scale. An action to enjoin the violation of a so-called wage agreement will not lie when the writing is wholly unilateral—when it purports to impose on the defendant an obligation to pay a certain scale of wages but imposes no obligation whatever on the other party or parties to the writing.

Wilson v Airline Co., 215-855; 246 NW 753

Unilateral contract—when promise binding. An order for the shipment of goods and a promise to pay therefor become a binding promise when the order is filled and shipped.

Port Huron Co. v Wohlers, 207-826; 221 NW 843

Noninconsistency. Manifestly there is no inconsistency in a contract that services should be rendered for a specified present compensation, and for an enlarged and additional compensation to be paid in the future, under specified conditions.

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

Acceptance—conclusive presumption. It must be presumed that an advantageous contract, entered into by an uncle for and on behalf of his motherless and paternally abandoned infant nephew and niece, has been accepted by the beneficiaries, when for some 40 years they have been fulfilling their part of the contract.

Kisor v Litzenberg, 203-1183; 212 NW 343

Belated and unallowable withdrawal. An offerer may not withdraw his offer after having received an acceptance thereof, even tho the offerer imposed as a condition that the deal should be closed "at once", it appearing that the parties manifestly intended that "at once" meant a reasonable time, in view of the circumstances.

Harris v Bills, 203-1034; 213 NW 929

Proposal and acceptance—imposing implied law condition. An offer by mail of certain lands and of a certain sum of money in exchange for certain, corporate stock, followed by a timely acceptance by mail if the land was free of incumbrance, constitutes a binding contract, as the condition imposed exactly what the law would impose; and it is quite immaterial that, in the subsequent dealings between the parties, the party ultimately denying the existence of a contract injected conditions to which the other party did not object.

Harris v Bills, 203-1034; 213 NW 929

Transportation furnished pupils—no implied contract by board to pay for services. When a school district failed to provide transportation for a pupil as required by statute, the pupil's father who had taken the child to school could not recover for his services on a theory of contract implied in fact when there was no meeting of the minds or agreement that he should be compensated for such transportation, as no promise to pay can be inferred from the refusal of the school to furnish transportation upon demand and the subsequent transportation of the child by the father, as the school was in no position to reject such services.

Bruggeman v Sch. Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

Third parties. A contract between a mortgagor and a mortgagee by which the former purchased his freedom from a deficiency judgment on foreclosure sale cannot work an obligation on the part of a grantee of the premises who was in no manner a party to the contract.

Marx v Clark, 201-1219; 207 NW 357

Antenuptial contract—validity. Antenuptial contract reviewed, and held not invalid on the grounds of unfairness, unconscionableness, and nonmutuality, or because it contained an invalid provision in relation to property interest and the right to children, which in no manner affected the consideration actually received by the wife.

Kalsem v Froland, 207-994; 222 NW 3

Merchandise sold—seller determining quantity—unenforceability. In an action for damages where an alleged contract was to sell surplus stock of merchandise, to be subsequently listed, a list previously sent merely as information in response to a request from buyer to the seller is inadmissible to complete a contract, under statute of frauds, §4625, C., '97 [§11285, C., '39]. Where such list could only be made a part of contract by proof of distinct oral contract, no connection appearing between the two papers by comparison or surrounding circumstances of parties, the contract leaving the quantity to be delivered to buyer to be determined by the will, want, or wish of the seller, makes the contract unenforceable because of lack of mutuality.

Midland Co. v Waterloo Co., 9 F 2d, 250

Lack of mutuality and consideration—agreement to purchase steers retained and fed by alleged seller. In law action based on written instrument, wherein plaintiff agreed to feed 24 head of steers for a period from 90 to 120 days, and defendant agreed to purchase the steers at any time during such period at 14 cents per pound, hoof weight, at Chicago or other reasonable marketing point, such agreement was not enforceable due to lack of mutuality and consideration, especially where there was no other consideration than that imported by the instrument, and this being a law action rather than in equity to make contract mean what plaintiff contends that it was intended to say, hence plaintiff could not recover on instrument the difference between 14 cents per pound and price at which plaintiff sold the steers on Chicago market.

May v Burns, 227-1385; 291 NW 473

(c) IMPLIED AND QUASI-CONTRACTS AND QUANTUM MERUIT

1 In General

Implied contracts distinguished. Implied contracts are of two kinds:

First, those implied in law, irrespective of the consent of the parties, on the principle that one will not be permitted to unjustly enrich himself at the expense of another without making compensation therefor, and Second, those implied in fact from the consenting acts of the parties.

Pella v Fowler, 215-90; 244 NW 734

Power of city. A city may, in the absence of a prohibiting statute, validly enter into an implied contract for the grading of its streets preparatory to the construction of permanent sidewalks.

Carlson v Marshalltown, 212-373; 236 NW 421

Petition—separate counts required. A plaintiff who pleads both quantum meruit and express contract in the same count should be compelled, on motion, to separate his cause of action into separate counts.

Donahoe v Gagen, 217-88; 250 NW 892

Voluntary nonpaper issues—sufficiency. In an action to recover quantum meruit for the use of machinery, the court, in submitting defendant's nonpaper issue (acquiesced in by plaintiff) whether the use was under a contract for an agreed rental entered into with plaintiff's employee, must submit the question of the authority of the employee to enter into such a contract, there being evidence of the lack of such authority.

Des Moines Co. v Lincoln Co., 201-502; 207 NW 563

Pleading—contract and quantum meruit value. Evidence of both the reasonable and contract value of services is admissible when so pleaded, even tho the pleading is embraced in one slovenly drawn but unquestioned count.

Pressley v Stone, 214-449; 239 NW 567

Alleging quantum meruit and proving express contract. An allegation of quantum meruit cannot be supported by proof of an express contract.

Wayman v Cherokee, 208-905; 225 NW 950

Commission—express contract. A broker may plead in different counts (1) an express contract to pay a specified commission and (2) an implied contract to pay a reasonable commission, and may insist on the submission of both issues to the jury if the evidence supports both. It follows that evidence may be admissible on the issue of quantum meruit, even tho plaintiff produces evidence of an agreement to pay the specifically named commission.

Ransom-Ellis Co. v Eppelsheimer, 205-809; 218 NW 566

Pleading quantum meruit and proving express contract. A fatal variance between allegation and proof results from pleading quantum meruit and proving an express contract for compensation.

Sammon v Roach, 211-1104; 235 NW 78

Express contract excludes implied contract, and vice versa. There cannot be an express and an implied contract embracing the same subject-matter.

Hodgson v Keppel, 211-795; 232 NW 725

Implied from conduct—express contract contrasted. A contract implied in fact, differing from an express contract only in the method of proof, may be inferred under certain circumstances from acts and conduct justifying a promisee in understanding a promisor intended to contract.

Snell v Kresge, 223-911; 274 NW 35

Joint ownership—accounting—division of receipts. When it happens that only one of two joint, equal, equitable owners of real estate is personally obligated on the contract for a deed under which the land is held, it is quite manifest that the law cannot presume, without supporting evidence, that forfeited payments received by said parties as the result of a futile attempt at sale of said premises, belong wholly to said nonobligated party; and equally manifest that the law cannot, on such circumstances, rear a so-called quasi contract to the same effect, in the absence of like evidence.

1. In General—continued

In re Kelly, 221-1067; 267 NW 667

Contract price (?) or quantum meruit (?). A plaintiff who pleads that he partially performed an express contract for services and thereupon abandoned the work because of a breach of the contract by defendant must not be permitted to recover the contract price for the work actually performed unless he establishes his pleaded justifiable abandonment; and if he fails to establish justifiable abandonment, he may not recover on the basis of a quantum meruit which does not exceed the contract price when he neither pleads nor proves a quantum meruit.

Goben v Paving Co., 208-1113; 224 NW 785

Liability of school district to transport pupils. When a state boundary river renders a portion of a consolidated school district inaccessible to the consolidated school, and the school authorities agree with the parent of grade pupils, residing on such inaccessible lands, to pay the tuition of said pupils in a school in a foreign state, but later refuse to pay for transporting said pupils to said school (a distance of five miles), the parent may supply the transportation in the foreign state and the district will be liable for the reasonable value thereof.

Dermitt v School Dist., 220-344; 261 NW 636

Breach—damages (?) or quantum meruit (?). An action for damages for breach of a contract of employment may be supported by evidence of the reasonable value of the services rendered, when the pleadings present such sum as the damages.

Westerfield v Oil Co., 208-912; 223 NW 894

Acceptance of offer—implication. Principle recognized that the conduct of parties to an alleged contract may furnish ample evidence that an offer by one party of certain terms was accepted by the other party.

Breen v Central L. Co., 207-1161; 224 NW 562

Proposal or offer—implied acceptance. One who is, in writing, offered work at a specified price and proceeds to perform the work without further negotiation necessarily agrees to do the work for the offered compensation.

Commercial Bank v Broadhead, 212-688; 235 NW 299

Offers—when implied acceptance not recognized. Proof that a party made an offer to pay a stated sum for services to be performed and that the offeree thereafter proceeded to perform the services, creates a presumption that the offeree accepted all the terms of the offer; not so, however, when such offer is made after a large part of the services has been rendered on the basis of a quantum meruit, and the offeree continues to perform the remaining services. In the latter instance, the quantum meruit contract will be deemed to continue unless an acceptance of the offer is actually proven.

Kelly, etc. v Trust Co., 217-725; 248 NW 9

Compensation—implied agreement. One who calls upon a physician and hospital authorities to attend an injured person to whom he is under no legal obligation may, by his acts and conduct, give rise to an implied promise to pay for the services rendered.

Valentine v Morgan, 207-232; 222 NW 412

Contract for services—question of quantum meruit—insufficient for jury. In an action against city for engineering services rendered in reconstruction of sewage disposal plant wherein plaintiff bases his claim on quantum meruit, and city contends services were contemplated by contract providing for lump sum compensation, question of liability of city for services on quantum meruit basis held insufficient for jury.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Public improvements—contract—substantial failure to perform—nonallowable recovery. Principle reaffirmed that a contractor who, in the construction of a street pavement, substantially fails to comply with the contract specifications, and is thereby barred from recovering the contract price, may not recover on quantum meruit, either from the city or from the property owners—and especially is this true when the contractor is guilty of fraud in the construction work.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Obstructions—removal. The removal by an owner of land of fences across a public highway on the land, in compliance with a demand by the public authorities, gives rise to no implied contract on the part of the municipality to pay the value of the work and materials necessary in effecting such removal.

Hall v Union County, 206-512; 219 NW 929

Renewal of written contract by conduct. Where a heating plant owner contracted to furnish to a storekeeper heat for a period of one year at the termination of which no new written nor verbal contract was made, but for seven years more the heat was furnished and accepted at the same price as in the original agreement, until discontinued at nearly the end of the 1933-34 season, in an action to recover the contract price for the 1933-34 year's heat, a contract would be implied from the storekeeper's conduct, to pay the contract price regardless of fact that storekeeper shut off some of the radiators.

Snell v Kresge Co., 223-911; 274 NW 35

Allowance and payment of estate claims—persons in family relation. A daughter-in-law who enters the home of her father-in-law and cares for him for many years while performing the duties of a housewife, as had formerly been done by other relatives, cannot recover from the estate of the father-in-law for said services in the absence of an express or implied contract; and an implied contract is not established by proof that on occasions the father-in-law expressed appreciation for the personal care rendered him, and a purpose to pay therefor.

In re Unangst, 213-1064; 240 NW 618

Services in family—evidence—sufficiency. An agreement to pay for services rendered by a member of a family is established by testimony which shows that the one rendering the services justifiably expected pay therefor, and that the one receiving such services equally expected to make such payment.

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

Compensation—nonliability. The theory that a party is personally liable for an improvement for which he has in no manner contracted, because he has received the full benefit thereof (if its correctness be assumed, as a proposition of law), can have no application when the party has received exactly what he contracted for with a third party.

Coen v Bank, 205-483; 218 NW 325

Independent contractor—burden of proof. One who claims that labor and services accepted by him were performed by an independent contractor has the burden to prove such claim.

Buescher v Schmidt, 209-300; 228 NW 26

Deeds—delivery—presumption attending acceptance. Principle reaffirmed that the acceptance of a deed of conveyance implies an agreement by the grantee to perform legal conditions imposed on him by the deed, e.g., the payment of stated sums to named persons.

Carlson v Hamilton, 221-529; 265 NW 906

Relevancy, materiality, and competency. On the issue of quantum meruit for services rendered, a former contract between the same parties for similar services performed under like conditions, and specifying the compensation, is admissible as a circumstance for the jury's consideration.

Olson v Shuler, 203-518; 210 NW 453

Olson v Shuler, 208-70; 221 NW 941

Compensation of brokers. Under the issue of quantum meruit, evidence of the commission usually and customarily paid as reasonable in the community in question is admissible.

Northrup v Herrick, 206-1225; 219 NW 419

Services of partner—value. In action for accounting and dissolution of partnership, reasonable value of services of partner managing garage held properly fixed at $30 per week.

Boldrini v Beneventi, (NOR); 240 NW 680

Compensation of brokers—Independent judgment of jurors. A jury may be instructed that, in determining the reasonable value of services rendered, they may give due heed to their own knowledge and experience on the subject at issue.

Northrup v Herrick, 206-1225; 219 NW 419

Uncertainty as to compensation. The fact that a contract of employment is fatally uncertain in its inception as to the compensation to be paid is no ground for denying a quantum meruit after the services have been fully performed.

Olson v Shuler, 203-518; 210 NW 453

School district—compelling transportation to be furnished to pupils. When a school district failed to provide transportation for a pupil as required by statute, the pupil's father, who had furnished such transportation after making a demand on the school district, could not recover for such services under quasi contract or contract implied in law, as the statute did not contemplate that the costs of transportation be paid except under an arrangement with the school board, as provided by statute.

Bruggeman v Sch. Dist., 227-661; 289 NW 5

City election favoring utility—no implied obligation to construct. Under the Simmer law an action by an engineering company for a general judgment against a city for engineering services cannot be maintained, based on an implied obligation of the city to erect light and power plant, even after repeal of the enabling ordinance, and altho the special election therefor had carried. Such would be unlawful and contrary to public policy and beyond powers of city council. Persons dealing with a municipality are bound to take notice of legislative restrictions upon its authority.

Burns & McDonnell Co. v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

Contractual prerequisites—burden of proof. In an action against a husband and wife on a promissory note signed only by the husband, and involving the wife on a theory that both were engaged in a joint adventure for which the money was used, liability of the wife may be predicated only upon a joint adventure contract, either express or implied, and plaintiff has the burden to prove the existence of such contract.

Valley Bank v Staves, 224-1197; 278 NW 346

Contract of indemnity—implied agreement.

An agreement by a defendant to indemnify plaintiff if plaintiff would sign a promissory note with defendant's son is not per se fatally incomplete because the agreement did not embrace any reference to the time the note was to run or to the rate of interest it should bear.

Kladivo v Melberg, 210-306; 227 NW 833

Inducing third party to perform one's covenants. An owner of mortgaged premises who leases the same and agrees with the lessee to erect certain improvements on the land, and who pledges the lease with the mortgagee as additional collateral security for the mortgage debt, and who, in the foreclosure of the mortgage, fully acquiesces in and approves and ratifies an application by the receiver for authority to borrow money and therewith to make the improvements which the lessor had obligated himself to make, thereby impliedly empowers the mortgagee, who advanced the funds with which to make the improvements, to reimburse himself out of the rentals accruing under the lease and collected prior to the expiration of the period for redemption from the mortgage sale. Under such state of facts, it is quite immaterial that the mortgagee bought in the property at foreclosure sale for the full amount of the mortgage debt.

Quaintance v Bank, 201-457; 205 NW739

Failure to enter formal judgment on collateral order. The failure of the court, following a dismissal of a quantum meruit count by plaintiff, to enter a formal judgment of dismissal of the said count cannot possibly detrimentally affect the defendant on his appeal from a judgment against him on the remaining count.

Hunt v Moore, 213-1323; 239 NW 112

2 Right of Contribution

Contribution—nature of doctrine. The doctrine of contribution applies in a proper case even tho there was no contract between the parties to the effect that each would make contribution.

Licht v Klipp, 213-1071; 240 NW 722; 1 NCCA(NS) 419

Contribution between husband and wife. Husband cannot secure contribution from divorced wife for payment of notes signed by both and paid by husband when wife signed as surety only.

Hall v Brownlee, (NOR); 216 NW 953

Property rights of joint adventurers. Property and profits of joint adventure after division between participants therein become separate and distinct property of joint adventurers. However, joint adventurer sustaining loss through transactions involving mortgage received in settlement and division of property and profits held not entitled to contribution.

Scott v McEvoy, (NOR); 228 NW 16

Co-obligors on note. Joint obligor on note was obliged to reimburse co-obligor for amount paid on common obligation in excess of co-obligor's share.

Carter v Lechty, 72 F 2d, 320

Tenants in common—contribution for taxes, interest, repairs, and tiling. A surviving mother, in partition of lands left by the deceased husband, is entitled to proper contribution from the children for money paid by her for taxes, interest on mortgages, and necessary repairs, but not (under certain facts) for tiling of the land.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

Sale—redemption by co-tenant. One who, during the period for redemption from mortgage foreclosure and sale en masse, purchases by quitclaim the undivided interests in the land of a part of the personal judgment defendants, can redeem only by paying the full amount of the sheriff's certificate of purchase, plus interest and costs, the remedy of such redemptioner being to enforce contribution from his co-tenants.

Kupper v Schlegel, 207-1248; 224 NW 813

Tenants in common—accounting—limitation of action. Between tenants in common, the statute of limitation does not commence to run on a claim of one of the tenants for the amount individually paid by him on a mortgage on the common property, until there has been a demand for an accounting.

Creger v Fenimore, 216-273; 249 NW 147

Tenants in common—purchase of outstanding lease, etc. One of several tenants in common of the fee to land who, on his own behalf, purchases of a lessee both an outstanding long-time lease on the said land and the building thereon, erected and owned by the lessee under said lease, may not enforce contribution from his co-tenants for his outlay; neither may said co-tenants legally demand the right to make contribution to the purchasing tenant and become tenants in common of the building.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

Costs—persons liable—right to contribution. Principle recognized that a coparty paying all the costs taxed against coparties may enforce contribution from other coparties.

Read v Gregg, 215-792; 247 NW 199

Bank directors' note. Evidence held sufficient to present a jury question on the issue whether bank directors had entered into an agreement as to what each, as between themselves, should pay on a promissory note given for the benefit of the bank.

Adamson v McKeon, 208-949; 225 NW 414; 65 ALR 817

Heirs—decendent's debt—election of remedies. In an action to compel certain heirs to contribute a share of a judgment arising out of a decedent's ownership of bank stock, a petition that alleges defendants' liability as individuals is not an election of remedies so as to prevent an amendment thereto setting up liability against an estate as an additional party, since there was no change in the nature of relief asked and no choice was made between inconsistent remedies at the time of the election.

Daniel v Best, 224-1348; 279 NW 374

(d) PARTIES

Transacting business in assumed or trade name. Contracts which are otherwise valid are not rendered invalid because entered into by one of the parties in an assumed or trade name without having complied with the statutory command to file with the county recorder a statement of the names and addresses of the persons so carrying on the business. Such statutes are regulatory only, even tho they declare it to be "unlawful" to carry on business in an assumed or trade name without the filing of said statement.

Ambro Agency v Speed-way Co., 211-276; 233 NW 499

Ratification by stranger to contract. A contract cannot be "ratified" by a party who is a total stranger thereto.

Fitch v Stephenson, 217-458; 252 NW 130

Privity of contract. A lessee who has contracted with his lessor to erect, at his own expense, permanent improvements on the property, but who, with the consent of his lessor, subleases to a subtenant who agrees to erect such improvements at his own expense, is not personally liable to the contractor who erects such improvements under a contract exclusively with the subtenant.

Coen v Bank, 205-483; 218 NW 325

Real party in interest—equitable owner. An equitable owner of land who effects a sale of the land through an agent, but permits the contract of sale to be made between the purchaser and the legal titleholder in order to secure to the latter the amount due him, remains the real party in interest in an action against the agent to compel him to account for a consideration received by him in the sale of the land and concealed from the said equitable owner.

Hiller v Betts, 204-197; 215 NW 533

Signing in representative capacity. The principle that an agent is not personally liable on a contract when the writing shows that another person is the principal is necessarily not applicable when the signer intended to make the contract his own.

Vance v Sowden, 205-389; 217 NW 874

General rule of liability. Persons of unsound mind will be held liable as to executed contracts when the transaction is in the ordinary course of business, when it is reasonable, when the mental condition was not known to the other party, and when the parties cannot be put in statu quo.

Farmers Ins. v Ryg, 209-330; 228 NW 63

Disaffirmance—estoppel. A minor may estop himself by his conduct from disaffirming or questioning the legality of his contract.

First Bk. v Torkelson, 209-659; 228 NW 655

Written contract not signed by wife—ineffectual as to wife. Where a husband and wife had an oral agreement for the sale of farm personalty in which they had a joint interest, and a written contract, specifying manner of disposition of proceeds of sale, which was signed by the husband but not by wife, she was not bound by written contract.

Russell v Moeller, (NOR); 268 NW 60

Construction—joint contracts. A contract wherein two parties, for one and the same consideration, agree to pay to another party a named sum in stated proportions is a joint contract.

Lockie v Baker, 206-21; 218 NW 483

Associations—unincorporated—noncapacity to contract or sue. Strictly speaking, a voluntary unincorporated association organized for literary and social purposes has no right to contract and cannot maintain a suit in the name of such voluntary unincorporated association alone.

Lamm v Stoen, 226-622; 284 NW 465

Merger and consolidation—liability on contracts. A contract with a public utility corporation which has apparently gone out of business, with the advent in the same place of another corporation of identically the same nature, is not enforceable against the latter corporation, in the absence of some adequate allegation and proof of merger and consolidation.

Hess v Iowa Co., 207-820; 221 NW 194

(e) UNDUE INFLUENCE, DURESS, FRAUD, MISTAKE, ASSENT GENERALLY

Discussion. See 24 ILR 337—Mistake of law

Undue influence—showing required. Influence, to be undue, must be such as to destroy the free agency of the person influenced, and substitute the will of the influencer for the will of the person influenced. Evidence reviewed in detail, and held quite insufficient.

Hult v Ins. Co., 213-890; 240 NW 218

Gifts—undue influence—destroying free will. Undue influence necessary to set aside a conveyance must be enough to destroy the free agency of the grantor. Evidence reviewed and found insufficient to establish undue influence.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Undue influence—burden of proof. The mental incompetency of a grantor to execute a deed of conveyance, or the obtaining of said conveyance by the grantee by undue influence, when assigned as ground for setting aside said conveyance, must be established by plaintiff and by clear, satisfactory and convincing evidence—there being no proof that a confidential relationship existed. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to meet said burden of proof.

Foster v Foster, 223-455; 273 NW 165

Fraud—undue influence as phase. Undue influence, a phase of actual fraud, will invalidate a transaction between persons in a confidential relationship.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Nonpresumption and burden of proof. Principle reaffirmed (1) that no presumption of fiduciary relationship arises from the fact of kinship, and (2) that in the absence of proof of such relationship, plaintiff in an action to set aside a conveyance because of undue influence, has the burden to establish such fraud by convincing evidence. Evidence held quite insufficient.

Craig v Craig, 222-782; 269 NW 743

Monomania and undue influence unproved. Where a daughter, among other things, testified against her father in a divorce action and left him to live with her mother, she furnished the evidence for his belief of her lack of filial affection, and conveyances of his property executed pursuant to his intention to disinherit her upheld over her contentions that he was a monomaniac and that the conveyances resulted from the use of undue influence.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Cancellation of instruments—duress—required showing. A contract obtained by so oppressing a person, by threats regarding his personal safety or liberty as to deprive him of the free exercise of his will and prevent the meeting of minds necessary to a valid contract, may be avoided on the ground of duress. So held in case of mortgages and notes.

Guttenfelder v Iebesen, 222-1116; 270 NW 900

Long acquiescence. Long recognition of a contract by a party thereto has material bearing on a subsequently raised issue of duress.

Krcmar v Krcmar, 202-1166; 211 NW 699

Duress—threat of prosecution. The execution of an obligation to make good the embezzlement of a relative cannot be deemed the result of duress when the signer is motivated, without threats, solely by a purpose to save the good name of his family, and to protect the estate of the embezzler from financial demands, and especially by a purpose to prevent a demand on the embezzler's surety bond and a criminal prosecution which would probably result from such demand.

Smith v Morgan, 214-555; 240 NW 257

Duress—pleading—conclusiveness. A party must stand or fall on the particular threat alleged by him as constituting duress. Reversible error results from permitting the jury to base its finding of duress on unpleaded matters.

Gray v Shell Corp., 212-825; 237 NW 460

Execution of note—duress. Evidence held insufficient to establish duress in the execution of a promissory note.

Mohler v Andrew, 206-297; 218 NW 71

Duress—estoppel to assert. The plea that an obligation was signed under duress must fall when the signer, during a long time following the execution of said obligation, recognized it as legally binding, and caused others to act on such recognition to their detriment.

Smith v Morgan, 214-555; 240 NW 257

Duress—inadequate instructions. On the issue whether a settlement was invalid because of duress in the form of threats to arrest and imprison, it is not sufficient to define "duress" as "compulsion or restraint by which a person is illegally forced to do an act". The jury must be told, in effect, that the duress must be such as to deprive the party of the power to enter into a contract.

Gray v Shell Corp., 212-825; 237 NW 460

Fraud pleas—status in court. In fraud actions, courts are reluctant to permit a cheater to profit by his own wrongdoing, tho at the same time courts are constrained by another consideration—that it is for the public welfare not to afford parties to written agreements such ready avenues of escape from their obligations that the purpose of lastingly recording such obligations in writing would be quite indifferently attained—the aim being to minimize both evils without accentuating either of them.

Griffiths v Brooks, 227-966; 289 NW 715

Deception constituting fraud—essential elements. The defense of fraudulent representations inducing a contract must fall when the alleged victim fails to show that he had a right to rely on, and did rely on, and was misled by, the said representations.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

Fraud—absurd representations—reliance on—effect. It is no defense to liability for false representations, actually made with intent to deceive, and actually relied on by the one to whom made, that said representations were too unreasonable to deceive an ordinarily sensible person. The credulity of humankind remains yet unmeasured.

McTee & Co. v Ryder, 221-407; 265 NW 636

Knowledge of fraud—effect. One who knows that he is being defrauded and voluntarily submits thereto and consummates the transaction waives the fraud.

Loots v Knoke, 209-447; 228 NW 45

Validity of assent—fraudulently induced signature—negligence. A party may, by his own negligence, be precluded from relying on a fraud which induced him to sign an instrument.

State Bank v Deal, 200-490; 203 NW 293

Essential elements. A jury question is presented by testimony which tends to show that defendants, with the intent to defraud, falsely represented the value and ownership of corporate stock and its great desirability as an investment, and that the victim thereof justifiably relied thereon to his damage.

Faust v Parker, 204-297; 213 NW 794

Contracts performable. A fraudulently obtained contract will not be specifically enforced, but will, on proper plea and proof, be canceled.

Boyle v Geling, 206-1208; 218 NW 506

Deception constituting fraud. The purchaser of corporate shares of stock will not be permitted to say that he relied to his damage on false representations as to the assets of the corporation and the value thereof, and as to amount originally paid in on the stock and the dividends declared, when, at the time the representations were made, he personally knew that some of the representations were false, and when, at said time, he had equal opportunity with the seller to know and learn the actual truth of the remaining representations but did not avail himself of said opportunity.

Wead v Ganzhorn, 216-478; 249 NW 271

Negating fraud. The plea of fraudulent representation as to the value of property must necessarily fall in the face of testimony that the complainant was a person of unusual business ability and experience and had had long, personal and intimate knowledge of the property in question far superior to that of the alleged wrongdoer.

Tobin, Tobin & Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

Rescission for fraud—general denial. Where plaintiff alleges rescission of a contract of sale because of defendant's fraud, and seeks to recover the money paid, a general denial does not raise the issue that plaintiff, after discovering the fraud, elected to affirm the contract.

Blecher v Schmidt, 211-1063; 235 NW 34

Fraud as defense to law action—nonright to transfer. A defendant who is sued at law for damages for breach of contract, and who defensively pleads that he was fraudulently induced to enter into the contract, and prays for the cancellation of the contract, is not entitled to an order transferring the action to the equity calendar.

Randolph v Ins. Co., 216-1414; 250 NW 639

Intrinsic and extrinsic fraud. A default judgment on a promissory note is justifiably set aside and a new trial ordered on proof that the execution of the note was induced by false representations as to the consideration therefor, and that said fraud was repeated shortly prior to the entry of said judgment and the maker thereby induced to believe, until after judgment was entered, that he had no defense to said note.

Rock Island Co. v Brunkan, 215-1264; 248 NW 32

Fraud-induced signing. The peculiar arrangement of the various subject-matters of a writing, and the various sizes of the type in which said subject-matters are printed, together with the subtle manner in which the writing is presented to one who signs without reading, may justify a finding by the court or jury that the entire transaction was an intentionally fraudulent scheme to induce such signing without thought on the part of the signer that he was entering into a contract.

International Assn. v Atlantic Co., 216-339; 249 NW 240

Fraudulently procured release. Evidence reviewed at length relative to a written release of damages consequent on shockingly severe injuries, and held to present a jury question on the issues (1) of defendant's fraudulent procurement of the release, and (2) of plaintiff's negligence in signing said release.

Engle v Ungles, 223-780; 273 NW 879; 4 NCCA(NS) 92

Avoiding release for fraud. The burden of proof to avoid a written release of damages, on the ground that said release was obtained by fraud, rests on the party who alleges the fraud. Instructions reviewed and held adequately to impose such burden in substance the not in words, assuming ordinary intelligence on the part of the jury.

(e) UNDUE INFLUENCE, DURESS, FRAUD, MISTAKE, ASSENT GENERALLY—continued

Engle v Ungles, 223-780; 273 NW 879; 4 NCCA(NS) 92

Release—false representation—jury question. A jury question as to the validity of a release of personal injury damages is made by proof that the releasee represented that the doctor's charges would be "about" $10, and that the representation was materially false and was made to the releasor and acted on by him when he was alone and practically helpless from his injuries.

Robinson v Meek, 203-185; 210 NW 762; 5 NCCA(NS) 434

False promise not to sue. A statement to the effect that, if a party will sign an obligation, "he will never be sued thereon," is fraudulent when made for the purpose of deceiving the party to whom made, and when the latter justifiably relies thereon.

Commercial Bank v Kietges, 206-90; 219 NW 44

Note—jury question. Evidence held to generate a jury question on the issue whether a promissory note was signed as the result of a good-faith, nonfraudulent compromise and settlement.

Rounds v Butler, 207-735; 223 NW 487

Will contests—contract of settlement. In action to set aside contract for settlement of will to contest, representations that "lawyers would get all the property" and that devisee "did not need a lawyer" were not fraudulent representations, and failure of court to submit issue of undue influence and constructive fraud was not error under the evidence.

Smith v Smith, (NOR); 230 NW 401

Fraud by seller—future promises—opinions. In an action for the purchase price of a trademarked beer dispenser bought for resale, purchaser, altho same may have been an inducement to buy, may neither predicate fraud on seller's promise to procure for purchaser future resales, unless the promise is made with a secret intent to disavow, nor upon statements amounting to an opinion as to superior design; however, the jury should determine whether a statement as to merchantableness is an opinion or representation of fact.

Rowe Co. v Curtis-Straub Co., 223-858; 273 NW 895

Fiduciary relationship—required proof. In an action to set aside a trust agreement executed to a son and attorney by plaintiff, evidence held to support decree dismissing plaintiff's petition. The existence of a confidential relationship or facts giving rise thereto must be proved before doctrine of fiduciary relationship can be applied—the mere relationship of parent and child does not create fiduciary relationship.

Hatt v Hatt, (NOR); 265 NW 640

Fraud in lease. In action for rent, answer alleging fraudulent representations regarding condition of leased building held to charge fraud, tho not alleging lessee had not examined premises.

Gamble-Robinson Co. v Buzzard, 65 F 2d, 950

Making restoration. Where defrauded party is suing to rescind, he must do equity by restoring whatever he received from wrongdoer; but, when wrongdoer as plaintiff is attempting to enforce tainted contract, he can have no relief.

First Tr. Bank v Bridge Co., 98 F 2d, 416

Bridges. In suit to foreclose trust deed securing bridge company's bonds, evidence supported findings of fraud in transfer of almost 90 percent of bonds to corporations controlled by bridge corporation's president, where transfer of bonds was partly in exchange for bridge corporation's stock contrary to statute, and partly in liquidation of pretended indebtedness.

First Tr. Bank v Bridge Co., 98 F 2d, 416

Combination of fraudulent transactions. In suit by trustees and finance corporation to foreclose fraudulent trust deed securing bridge company's bonds, most of which were fraudulently issued to such finance corporation or its successor, plaintiffs were not entitled to such modification of decree denying foreclosure as would command reissuing of certain stock to finance corporation, which canceled stock when fraudulently obtaining bonds, where court found that all of transactions leading up to issuance of bonds were steps in single fraudulent enterprise to obtain ownership of bridge after a foreclosure.

First Tr. Bank v Bridge Co., 98 F 2d, 416

Fraud in compromise. A party who compromises and settles his claim for damages consequent on an alleged fraudulent sale, and voluntarily and under no additional fraud does so on the basis of his then knowledge of the claimed fraud, may not have the compromise set aside on the claim that he later discovered an additional element of fraud in the sale not known to him when he compromised.

Williams v Herman, 216-499; 249 NW 215

Public improvements—acceptance—avoidance by proof of fraud. A nonfraudulently induced acceptance by a city council of a street pavement estops the city thereafter to plead nonperformance of the contract, but not so when the city pleads and proves that, at the time of said acceptance, the contractor, unbeknown to the council and in collusion with city employees, had constructed said pavement of a thickness substantially less than the thickness required by the contract.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Fraud—cancellation. Evidence reviewed, and held wholly insufficient to warrant cancellation of a contract for fraud in its execution.

Anders v Crowl; 210-469; 229 NW 744

Failure to read contract—effect. A party will not, in an action on a contract, be permitted to defend on the ground that his signature to the writing was obtained by false and fraudulent representations as to the contents of such writing when he is fully able to read, but does not read, and when the other party to the contract does nothing whatever to prevent such reading.

Bixler Co. v Argyros, 206-1081; 221 NW 828
Legler v West Side Assn., 214-937; 243 NW 157

Mutual mistake and fraud—proof necessary. To entitle a person to reformation of a contract, there must be some showing of fraud, ambiguity, or mutual mistake, and the general rule is that proof must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing. A contract cannot be reformed on grounds of both mutual mistake and fraud, as such claims would be mutually destructive. Evidence insufficient to warrant finding of fraud or mutual mistake.

Wall v Ins. Co., 228- ; 289 NW 901

Public improvements—void contract—sweeping deprivation of rights. A contract for the repair or reconstruction of a street pavement, entered into in total disregard of the mandatory statute requiring competitive bidding (§6004, C., '31), is void ab initio, and, if performed, it follows as a matter of public policy and irrespective of the motives of the parties:

1. That special assessments may not be legally levied to defray the cost of such performance, and

2. That the contractor may not, either, (1) on the theory of a contract implied in fact, or (2) on the theory of quasi contract or contract implied in law (unjust enrichment), recover against the city for the expenditures made by him even tho all profit be excluded therefrom.

Especially is the foregoing true when the record reveals a contract manipulation which emits an unmistakable odor of fraud and evasion.

Horrabin Co. v Creston, 221-1237; 262 NW 480

Husband and wife—property-settlement contract. A defendant sued by his former wife on a property-settlement contract, fully performed by her, availeth himself nothing in the way of a defense by nakedly alleging fraud by the wife in obtaining the contract when such allegation is made neither as a basis for a rescission of the contract nor for damages.

Poole v Poole, 219-70; 257 NW 305

Oral agreement to devise realty—insufficiency of evidence to set aside. In an equity action to recover a sum of money alleged to be the share of plaintiff's intestate in the estate of his father, where evidence shows the mother of plaintiff's intestate was left with five minor children, and that she filed a partition proceeding involving 400 acres of land owned by her husband who died intestate, and she thereafter was the successful purchaser at a sale of the land, and that, as a part of the purchase price, she executed a note and mortgage on the land to a guardian appointed for the minor children to secure their respective shares in the father's estate, and that, as the children became of age, there were no guardianship funds to pay their respective shares, and that it was orally agreed that the children would receipt for their respective shares, in cash, to the guardian (altho no cash was received), and the mother agreed to, and did, execute a will leaving the land to the children in equal shares, the plaintiff's evidence was insufficient to set aside the agreement, and the trial court's order, affirming the agreement and impounding the mother's will until her death, was affirmed.

Baumann v Willemssen, 228- ; 292 NW 77

Notes—fraud—failure to establish per se. Evidence held insufficient to show as a matter of law that promissory notes were obtained by false representations.

Andrew v Peterson, 214-582; 243 NW 340

Parol—proof of fraud. The parol evidence rule is not an obstacle to the proof of fraud in obtaining a contract.

Schmidt v Twedt, 219-128; 257 NW 325

Fraud—burden of proof. A plaintiff who attacks a compromise settlement of the amount due under a policy of insurance on the ground that it was fraud-induced has the burden to show that the representations inducing the settlement were knowingly false and that he innocently relied thereon; and plaintiff must, of course, fail on a record showing that the representations were true, and that he knew they were true.

Bockes v Cas. Co., 212-499; 232 NW 156

Burden of proof. He who pleads fraud must prove it by a preponderance of the evidence.

I REQUISITES AND VALIDITY IN GENERAL—continued(e) UNDUE INFLUENCE, DURESS, FRAUD, MISTAKE, ASSENT GENERALLY—continued

Evidence—weight and sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that proof of fraud must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Goff v Milliron, 221-998; 266 NW 526

Elements and degree of proof. An action to set aside a contract of compromise and settlement because of alleged fraudulent representations must be supported by proof which clearly, satisfactorily and convincingly establishes (1) the actual making of the material representations, (2) the falsity thereof, (3) the defendant's knowledge of the falsity, (4) the plaintiff's ignorance of the falsity, and (5) plaintiff's reliance thereon. If plaintiff fails to show by the required amount of proof the actual making of the representations, the court, of course, need proceed no farther, except to enter a dismissal.

Kilts v Read, 216-356; 249 NW 157

Evidence of intent to defraud—sufficiency. In an action to cancel an alleged fraud-induced compromise settlement of indebtedness, proof that in the negotiations leading up to said settlement defendant made to plaintiff inducing and material statements as of fact but which defendant, at the time, knew to be false, justifies the finding, without further proof, that defendant made said statements with intent to defraud and deceive the plaintiff.

Andrew v Baird, 221-83; 265 NW 170

Evidence required to establish fraud. Principle reaffirmed that fraud, actual or constructive, duress, and undue influence must be established by clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence. Evidence held wholly insufficient to show such fraud in the assignment by a grandmother to a grandson of a note and mortgage.

Scott v Seabury, 220-655; 262 NW 804

Presumption and burden of proof. Fraud is never presumed. He who alleges its existence must establish it by clear, convincing and satisfactory evidence. Principle applied in an equitable action to set aside and cancel certain financial obligations allegedly obtained by fraud.

Eckhardt v Trust Co., 223-471; 273 NW 347

Signing without reading—fraud. A signed release and settlement of a claim for damages is conclusive on the signer, even tho he signed it because of a false statement of its contents, when he had ample time and ability to read, and was in no manner prevented from reading.

Crum v McCollum, 211-319; 233 NW 678

Mental unsoundness — fraud — degree of proof. A deed of conveyance will be set aside on the ground of fraud or grantor's mental unsoundness, only on clear and convincing evidence in support of the charge. Evidence held insufficient.

Ellis v Allman, 217-483; 250 NW 172

Mistake and fraud—evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held ample to justify the reformation of a deed because of the mistaken, and fraudulently induced, omission therefrom of a clause reserving to grantors a life estate in the land in question.

Foote v Soukup, 221-1218; 266 NW 904

Recovery of payments—mutual mistake—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed in an action to recover back money alleged to have been paid under a mutual mistake for heat furnished, and held insufficient to establish such mistake.

Thomas v Central Co., 217-899; 251 NW 616

Reformation of instruments—assumption of mortgage debt—mistake. Where an instrument is executed without consideration on the part of a grantee, to assume and pay the mortgage debt, the contract is not binding upon him, or if the deed is delivered in blank, or the conveyance made as security only, or if a clause if inserted by fraud, inadvertance, or mistake, without the knowledge or acquiescence of the grantee, he may have the instrument reformed in equity so as to make it express the true intent and understanding of the parties.

Guarantee Co. v Cox, 201-598; 206 NW 278

Validity—failure to read. A party may not avoid the binding effect of a contract by the plea that he did not know what he was signing, when he could read, and was not prevented from reading.

Williams v Ins. Assn., 204-991; 216 NW 269

Assent—mental weakness. Mere weakness of mental power will not constitute mental incapacity if the person retains mind enough to know and comprehend in a general way the nature and extent of his estate, the natural objects of his bounty, and the distribution he desires to make of his property.

Penn Ins. v Mulvaney, 221-925; 265 NW 889

Mental capacity—existence—burden to disprove. Mental weakness from disease does not deprive a person of capacity to dispose of property until the power of intelligent action is destroyed, and executor relying thereon to recover gift made by decedent to sister has burden of proof.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Adjudication of insanity—nonretroactive presumption. An adjudication of insanity creates no presumption that the person in question was insane at any particular period of time prior to said adjudication.

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

Deeds—mental incapacity—proof required to set aside. In order to set aside conveyances on the grounds of mental incapacity and undue influence, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish same by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Insane persons — contracts — validity — demand for accounting—burden of proof. In an action by the guardian of an insane ward to compel defendant to account for property paid or delivered by the ward to defendant, without consideration, and at various periods of time prior to the time the ward was adjudged insane, the guardian must establish the insanity of the ward at each particular transaction, or must establish such fact condition as compels an accounting. Evidence held insufficient to meet the burden of proof as to one transaction.

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

Mental incompetent—degree of proof. Evidence of mental incompetency sufficient to invalidate a contract must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Hult v Ins. Co., 213-890; 240 NW 218

Insane delusion—insufficiency. The plea that a contract of purchase was impelled by an "insane" delusion, and therefore invalid, signally fails when it appears that said purchaser had some basis in fact for entertaining the belief which he did entertain, even tho it be conceded that said belief was erroneous.

Hult v Ins. Co., 213-890; 240 NW 218

Insane person—expert and lay opinions— which must yield. An expert opinion, that a person was insane at a named time prior to the time when said person was judicially declared insane, will not be permitted to outweigh overwhelming lay testimony which strongly tends to establish the contrary,—when said expert opinion is based almost wholly on information obtained from said person after she was adjudged insane, and on information obtained from the relatives of said person. (Equity case.)

Davidson v Piper, 221-171; 265 NW 107

Validity of assent—mental weakness and mental incapacity contrasted. Capacity to enter into a contract does not necessarily require entire soundness of mind.

Dunlop v Wever, 209-590; 228 NW 562

Insane person — contracts — legality. An adjudicated incompetent may not, while under guardianship, execute a valid and binding contract, since such person is under protection of the court. Contract of incompetent is voidable, not void, and facts and circumstances of each case are controlling.

Dean v Est. of Atwood, (NOR); 212 NW 371

Insane persons — guardianship — advancing funds to retry issue of sanity—discretion of court. Where a person is under guardianship and confined in a state hospital under an adjudication of insanity, an application in his behalf for an order directing the guardian to pay a substantial sum for the purpose of retrying the issue of insanity is properly denied on a showing by affidavit that two laymen consider the patient sane.

In re Ost, 211-1085; 235 NW 70

(f) LEGALITY OF OBJECT

Statutes against public policy. See under Const Art XII, §1 (II)

Discussion. See 21 ILR 149—Agreements not to compete

Performance illegal—recovery thereunder barred. A contract to do an illegal act, which cannot be performed without violating the constitution, a constitutional statute or ordinance, is illegal and void, even in some cases when no penalty is provided for the violation.

Keith Co. v MacVicar, 225-246; 280 NW 496

Public policy—inducing allowance of claim against city. A contract by which a party agrees to use his influence to induce a municipality to allow a just and legal claim against it is valid, in the absence of any showing that nonlegitimate means were contemplated.

Stoner v Stehm, 200-809; 202 NW 530

Money given to obstruct justice—recovery denied. The courts will not aid one to recover money that has been given to another to be used in obstructing or interfering with the orderly course of justice, nor will they protect one who obtains the money of another for a particular lawful purpose when he fails to so use it and refuses to return it.

Sarico v Romano, (NOR); 205 NW 862

Public policy—guaranty of solvency of bank. A contract between the state superintendent of banking and the officers and directors of a state bank, wherein the said officers and directors guarantee that the bank "is at this time solvent", and wherein they contract "to keep and maintain the bank in a solvent" condition, in consideration of an agreement that the superintendent will permit the bank to continue business, tho the superintendent questions its solvency, is a nullity, because gravely inconsistent with the statutory powers and duties of said superintendent, and therefore against public policy.

Andrew v Breon, 208-385; 226 NW 75

Trade unions—contracts—legality. A contract between a street railway company and a local labor union representing the employees will not be decreed illegal by a court of equity on the ground that the contract requires the company, against public policy, to maintain two employees on each car, (1) when the city has not exercised its undoubted power over such subject-matter, (2) when the city is not a party to the action, and (3) when

I REQUISITES AND VALIDITY IN GENERAL—concluded

(f) LEGALITY OF OBJECT—concluded the object of the action seems to be to obtain a declaratory decree only.

Des Moines Ry. v Amalgamated Assn., 204-1195; 213 NW 264

Public improvements—patentee as bidder—legality of bid. When the city calls for competitive bids on four different kinds of paving mixtures, all of substantially the same utility, desirability, and cost of commercial materials, three of which mixtures are unpatented and one of which is patented, the bid of the patentee, tho the only bid on the patented article, to furnish and lay the patented mixture for one cent per square yard above the price (not shown to be exorbitant) at which he had agreed simply to furnish it to all other bidders, is not fraudulent and void as stifling competition, tho the cost of laying the mixture is some 28 cents per square yard.

Hoffman v Muscatine, 212-867; 232 NW 430; 77 ALR 680

Public policy—agreement to repurchase note and mortgage. A contract on the part of a trust company to repurchase a note and mortgage sold by it is not against public policy, it appearing that the company was organized to deal in commercial paper and, inter alia, to receive time deposits and issue drafts on its depositories.

Hawkeye Ins. v Central Trust, 210-284; 227 NW 637

Dragnet clause in mortgage. An oppressive and unconscionable dragnet clause in a mortgage is void as against public policy, even in the hands of a bona fide holder.

Sullivan v Murphy, 212-159; 232 NW 267

Legality of object—contract in re rule of evidence. It is not against public policy for parties to contract that, in an action on the contract, a specified nonstatutory rule of evidence shall not apply.

Lunt v Grand Lodge, 209-1138; 229 NW 323

Legality of object—reasonable restraint on trade. An agreement by the vendor of a furniture business and its good will that he will not sell or offer for sale furniture "so long as the vendee is in business" in a named town is reasonable as far as the time element is concerned, and is enforceable by injunction; and such agreement will not be held unlimited as to scope of territory (and therefore unreasonable) when the contract as a whole and the attending circumstances clearly show that the parties had in mind the town in question and the trade territory adjacent thereto.

Haggin v Derby, 209-939; 229 NW 257

Annuity contract as "wager". An annuity contract, entered into in good faith, under which the annuitant, for a lump sum payment determined by skilled actuaries, is promised a definite annual payment during the lifetime of the annuitant, does not offend against public policy—is not a "wager" contract.

Hult v Ins. Co., 213-890; 240 NW 218

Gambling contracts and transactions—property sold in furtherance of gambling. A vendor of property which is capable of a perfectly legitimate use may not recover therefor when he sells it for the very purpose of enabling the vendee to operate a gambling device, to wit, a punch board.

Parker-Gordon Co. v Benakis, 213-136; 238 NW 611

Compounding offense—proof of agreement. The plea that an obligation is invalid because executed in consideration of the compounding of a crime necessitates proof of an agreement, express or implied, (1) to compound or conceal the offense, or (2) not to prosecute the same, or (3) not to give evidence thereof.

Cotten v Halverson, 201-636; 207 NW 795

Verdicts—directed on questions of law only. Directed verdicts have no place in jury trials unless the record clearly presents controlling questions of law. Record evidence held wholly insufficient to justify a directed verdict against plaintiff on the ground that as a matter of law the contract for damages for assault—on which plaintiff sued—was based in part (1) on an agreement by plaintiff to compound or conceal the commission of a public offense, or (2) on an agreement by plaintiff as an employee to refrain from circulating scandalous information concerning his employer.

In re Cuykendall, 223-526; 273 NW 117

Assessments—jurisdictional objections. The objection that an assessment for sewer is void because the work was let on a cost-plus contract when the specifications and notice to bidders were silent as to any such contract goes to the jurisdiction of the council to make the assessment, and may be raised for the first time on appeal.

Chi., RI Ry. v Dysart, 208-422; 223 NW 371

Entire or severable contract. A contract provision which is valid when standing alone is not necessarily rendered invalid by the fact that in the contract in question it is interwoven with other contract provisions which may be violative of a statute. So held where a lease sought to exempt the lessor, a railroad company, from liability to the lessee for negligence, but provided that, if such exemption legally failed, "the lessor shall have full benefit of any insurance effected by the lessee on structures erected on the premises".

Queen Ins. v Railway, 201-1072; 206 NW 804

II CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 5 ILB 65—Nonnegotiable bills and notes

Construction—intention of parties controls. In construing any instrument in writing, the primary object is to arrive at what the parties had in mind when it was drawn.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

When construed. Purpose of construction of a contract is to arrive at intent of parties, and, where intent is so plainly expressed that a mere reading of the contract leads the mind at once to a satisfactory conclusion as to what parties intended, there is no room for construction.

Beal v Milliron, (NOR); 267 NW 83

Different instruments treated as one. Two instruments executed at the same time and as part of the same transaction constitute, for purposes of construction, one instrument.

In re Barnett, 217-187; 251 NW 59

Policy of insurance and contract with mortgage—construed together. A contract by which an insurance company agreed to insure all property on which a mortgagee held mortgages, and a certificate issued by the company when a policy was issued in compliance with the contract, when both referred to an open policy, must be construed together with the open policy so that a statutory provision of the open policy preventing the insured from obtaining additional insurance on his property becomes a part of his contract of insurance.

Calendro v Ins. Co., 227-829; 289 NW 485

Implied adoption of terms of related contract. A contract by a "subcontractor" to furnish the principal contractor certain artificial stone "according to the plans and specifications" of the architects of the building, together with samples and setting plans "approvable" by said architects, impliedly adopts and embraces within its terms the provisions of the plans and specifications of the general contract (between the principal contractor and the owner of the building) to the effect (1) that the architects may reject any and all materials, and their rejection shall be final; (2) that the subcontractor will, at his own expense, remove from the premises all rejected materials; and (3) that the subcontractor will replace rejected material with other proper material.

Granette Co. v Neumann & Co., 200-572; 203 NW 935; 205 NW 205

the parties thereto necessarily points strongly to the real intent of the parties.

Tucker v Leise, 201-48; 206 NW 258

Union Rep. Co. v Anderson, 211-1; 232 NW 492

Nelson v Hamilton, 213-1231; 240 NW 738

Melman Co. v Melman, 216-45; 245 NW 743

Mutual construction of parties. The maker of a promissory note who is unable to pay at maturity because of an unapprehended and long-continued change of condition for which the payee is not responsible, and who repeatedly and voluntarily renews his note by including in each renewal the amount of principal and legal interest then due, may not claim that he was improperly charged with interest upon interest, when such renewals appear to have been the mutual and practical construction by the parties of the contract out of which the original note arose.

Frank Cram v Trust Co., 205-408; 216 NW 71

Intention and practical construction of parties. A pledge of corporate shares of stock as collateral security will not be deemed novated into subsequently taken security and by an agreement in connection therewith, when such novation was never discussed between the parties, when the collateral holder never intended such novation, when pledgor's claim of novation was very belated, and when the parties had by their practical conduct negated such novation.

Winfield Bk. v Snell, 208-1086; 226 NW 774

General words—scope. A written contract to act as agent "in the purchase, inspection, erection, and supervision of all labor employed and material purchased in the building of two additional stories upon" an existing building does not embrace mechanical equipment to be installed in the structure,—i.e., installation of elevators. Especially is this true when the parties never mutually treated the contract as embracing such equipment.

Parks & Co. v Howard Co., 200-479; 203 NW 247

Conflicting clauses—construction as an entirety. In an action upon written contract for real estate commission, in which there are conflicting clauses as to time of payment of commission, the rule is that a contract should be read and interpreted as an entirety rather than seriatim by clauses and that the position of clauses in such instrument is not material nor controlling.

Mealey v Kanealy, 226-1266; 286 NW 500

Intent derived from entire contract. Contract should be considered in its entirety in arriving at the intent of the parties.

State v Sprague, 225-766; 281 NW 349

Selling price—standard price as basis. The selling price of goods was as definitely fixed in a contract as tho it were expressed in money or some other medium, when placed at a certain amount lower than the standard price on standard staple goods of the same kind.

Lee v Sundberg, 227-1375; 291 NW 146

Parol or extrinsic evidence affecting writings—right to enlarge writing. When the written evidence of a contract provides, in effect, that named subject matters shall be controlled thereby, oral evidence is admissible to enlarge said subject matters when the writing on its face reveals the contemplation of the parties to make such addition.

Smith & Co. v Hollingsworth, 218-920; 251 NW 749

Right to explain ambiguous clause. The rule that an ambiguous provision in a written contract may be explained by parol evidence, for the purpose of arriving at a basis on which to rest a legal conclusion as to the meaning of said provision, assuredly does not embrace the right of one party to the contract to show, (1) his understanding of said provision, and (2) the understanding of a former assignee of the contract (at a time when the question of the meaning of the provision had not arisen) as evidence of the understanding which a later assignee had or should have had of said provision.

Zimbelman v Boone Coal, 220-1310; 263 NW 335

Lease—oral explanation. The fact that both of two parties sign a lease and the accompanying rent notes does not necessarily establish, in a controversy strictly between said two parties, that each party should pay one-half the rent. The said fact is open to oral explanation.

Fisher v Nicola, 214-801; 241 NW 478

Mutual construction—effect. Conduct of a party in executing a contract as to matters over which there is no controversy may not be deemed a construction of the contract as to after-arising matters concerning which there is a controversy.

Iowa Co. v Coal Co., 204-202; 215 NW 229

Joint and several (?) or several only (?). Whether a contract is joint and several must be determined by the terms thereof, viewed in the light of the attending circumstances, and especially in view of the practical mutual construction placed thereon by the parties.

Shively v Mfg. Co., 205-1233; 219 NW 266
Licht v Klipp, 213-1071; 240 NW 722

Practical construction by parties—partial performance—effect. Where parties to a contract have given the contract a practical construction,—as by acts of partial performance,—such construction is entitled to great, if not controlling, weight.

Dodds Co v Sch. Dist., 220-812; 263 NW 552

Conclusiveness of conditions. Distinct contract provisions to the effect that a highway between two named points shall be located on either of two clearly specified routes cannot be so construed as to justify a departure from both of said routes, nothing otherwise appearing in said contract which justifies such construction.

Clayton County v Thein, 204-911; 216 NW 276

Charities—devise—power of municipality to take. Devises and bequests for charitable purposes are such favorites of the law that "they will not be construed void if, by law, they can be made good." Will construed, and held that the conditions attending a devise and bequest to a municipality of a charitable trust in the form of a free public library, were conditions subsequent, and not conditions precedent, to the vesting of said trust, and that said conditions were within the legal power of the municipality to accept—under prescribed statutory procedure—and perform.

In re Nugen, 223-428; 272 NW 638

Surrounding circumstances. A contract to the effect that certain orders for goods should be "uniformly distributed" over a named period of time does not imply that there shall be mathematical uniformity in the orders. Reasonableness in the matter must prevail.

Weitz' Sons v Fidelity Co., 206-1025; 219 NW 411

Written confirmation of oral sale—effect. Where, immediately following a telegraphic inquiry and answer as to the price of an article, and a telephone order by the buyer, the seller prepares and furnishes to the buyer a confirmatory writing, in the form of a contract reflecting his understanding, and the buyer makes no objection until after shipment is made, the contract will be deemed to consist solely of the confirmatory writing.

Lamis v Grain Co., 210-1069; 229 NW 756

Evidence attending interwoven transactions. Conversations had at the time of entering into a series of contracts at different times may be so closely related to, and so closely interwoven with, a subsequent contract as fully to justify their consideration on the issue whether the latter contract was entered into.

Adamson v McKeon, 208-949; 225 NW 414; 65 ALR 817

Forfeiture notwithstanding supplemental contracts. That part of a land-sale contract which provides for the forfeiture of the contract, in case of nonpayment of stipulated sums, applies to supplemental contracts, (1) which simply extend the time of payments, or (2) which simply make a new division and new time of payment of former agreed payments, and in addition specifically provide that the provisions of the original contract shall not be deemed otherwise changed.

Schwab v Roberts, 220-958; 263 NW 19

Legality of object—entire or severable contract. A contract provision which is valid when standing alone is not necessarily rendered invalid by the fact that in the contract in question it is interwoven with other contract provisions which may be violative of a statute. So held where a lease sought to exempt the lessor, a railroad company, from liability to the lessee for negligence, but provided that, if such exemption legally failed, "the lessor shall have full benefit of any insurance effected by the lessee on structures erected on the premises".

Queen Ins. v Railway, 201-1072; 206 NW 804

Effect of separable invalid covenant. In an agreement to construct a grotto, an invalid provision as to restraint on alienation of property will not vitiate other valid covenants therein when separable therefrom.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Unilateral contract—voiding contract by one's own default. A provision in a deed of conveyance to the effect that if the grantee fails to make any of the payments which he has agreed to make, or fails to perform any of the obligations which he has agreed to perform the deed "shall be void and the title immediately revert" in grantor, simply means that the grantee has covenanted that if he defaults his default shall void the deed if the grantor so elects. Especially is this true when the acts of the parties indicate that they mutually so construe the contract.

Earle v Rehmann, 214-784; 243 NW 345

Equality in corporate control. Contracts relative to the purchase of corporate stock reviewed, and held to require plaintiff to pay therefor a sum equal to what defendant had paid therefor.

Holsinger v Herring, 207-1218; 224 NW 766

Avoidance of absurd, un contemplated results. The court, in construing a contract, must necessarily view the contract as a whole, and not from the angle of one ambiguous provision, and must arrive at a conclusion, if possible, which will avoid results which, in the very reason of things, the parties manifestly never contemplated. So held as to contract provisions relative to the terms on which a party might purchase an interest in property.

Conn v Heaps, 205-248; 216 NW 73

Purchase of land. Evidence held to show that a contract for the purchase of land embraced all the land within the limits of an existing and visible inclosure.

Elliott v Horton, 205-156; 217 NW 829

Variation of terms. A written contract relative to the purchase, holding, management, and sale of land may not, in the absence of fraud or mistake, be contradicted as to that part thereof which clearly states the amount of money which one party had put into the land.

Conn v Heaps, 205-248; 216 NW 73

Assignment of rent construed. In construing the provisions of a settlement wherein a judgment debtor agreed to assign to his judgment creditor " * * * the amount due from the tenant * * * " of the debtor on certain real estate, the same " * * * being all rentals * * * " for a certain year, held, that federal agricultural conservation payments received by the debtor on the land in question were not in contemplation of the parties, hence creditor was not, on the basis of said assignment, entitled to these payments.

Cooke v Harrington, 227-145; 287 NW 837

Vendor and purchaser. Contract between the vendor and the purchaser of land in modification of the original contract of purchase reviewed, and held not to create the relation of landlord and tenant, notwithstanding the fact that the contract referred to the income from the land as "rent".

Thielen v Davenport Co., 203-100; 212 NW 352

Punctuation a fallible standard. Punctuation is ordinarily of little aid in the construction of a contract.

Seeger v Manifold, 210-683; 231 NW 479

Joint adventures—mutual liabilities of parties. A contract provision to the effect that if income fails to pay expenses of a joint adventure, "at the end of two years and thereafter", the deficiency shall be carried in named proportions by named parties, "after the two years have expired", means, that if, during the first two years, income fails to pay expenses, thereafter the named parties are liable therefor, in said proportions, whether said deficiency occurred during said two years or thereafter,—in view of other contract declarations that should any loss be incurred by reason of said adventure, such loss shall be borne by said parties in said proportions.

Fitzhugh v Thode, 221-533; 265 NW 893

Joint adventures—losses—joint liability. Two or more parties to a contract of joint adventure who agree to pay one-half of resulting losses, if any, are each individually liable for said one-half, tho no provision is made for any division among themselves.

Fitzhugh v Thode, 221-533; 265 NW 893

Indemnity for operation of dam. A contract which provides that one joint owner of a dam to whom it is turned over for joint mutual use shall hold the other joint owner harmless from any damages arising from the "operation" thereof, imposes upon the operator of the dam, as between said joint owners, liability for damages to overflowed property owners, consequent on the general maintenance of the dam above the authorized level, even tho the other joint owner does reserve some control over the movable parts of said dam in order to avoid such damages.

Ellis Co. v Iowa Co., 204-1325; 217 NW 262

Contradictory provisions. A contract which provides (1) that, in consideration of a mortgagor's reconveying the property to the mortgagee (a former owner), the latter will pay the former a specified sum out of a contemplated future sale, and (2) that said sum "will not be paid under any circumstances until the farm shall have been sold", and (3) that "this contract is to continue for two years, and the sale provided for and full settlement hereunder shall be made in that time", obligates the promisor to pay the specified sum at the end of two years, even tho the land be not then sold.

Yerkes v Edmonds, 202-205; 208 NW 624

Pipe-line right of way—ambiguity as to compensation. Where landowner made written agreement giving pipe-line company a right of way, and where receipt, executed simultaneously with the agreement, aided by extrinsic oral proof, showed that he actually received five dollars per rod for the first line put in, held, landowner was entitled to judgment compensating him at same rate for installation of a second pipe-line under the agreement, which provided that "additional lines shall be laid for a consideration the same as for the first", despite the fact that such agreement also provided for a compensation of only fifty cents per rod.

Vorthmann v Pipe Line Co., 228- ; 289 NW 746

Undertaker's services—fee including casket. The fact that an undertaker makes a contract, wherein he furnishes a casket and a vault, tho called a contract for services, does not change the legal character of the transaction nor preclude it from being a sale of personal property nor prevent a transfer of title of said property to the purchaser.

Kistner v Board, 225-404; 280 NW 587

Indefinite duration—termination. A contract for the furnishing of a named commodity may be terminated on reasonable notice when the contract is silent as to its duration.

Hess v Iowa L. & P. Co., 207-820; 221 NW 194

Guarding against one's own fraud—effect. Contract provisions, designed to protect one from the effects of his own fraud, present no obstacles to the judicial uncovering of such fraud and the application of the proper principles thereto.

McTee & Co. v Ryder, 221-407; 265 NW 636

Construction against party using words. Principle reaffirmed that, speaking generally, a contract will be construed most strongly against the author of the words employed in the contract.

Buser v Land Co., 211-659; 234 NW 241

Ambiguity clarified by parol—doubts resolved against maker. In reviewing various canons of construction, principles reaffirmed that (1) if a contract is clear-cut and unambiguous the wording of the contract must control, but, if it is ambiguous, then parol evidence is admissible to ascertain intention of the parties, and (2) where there is ambiguity the doubt will be resolved against the party who prepared the instrument.

Vorthmann v Pipe Line Co., 228- ; 289 NW 746

Strict construction against sole drafter. The rule that a written obligation will be construed most strongly against the sole drafter thereof manifestly has no application where the form and phraseology of the obligation are provided by statute.

Ballard-Hassett Co. v City, 207-1351; 224 NW 793

Perpetuities—not validated by estoppel or ratification. Since a restraint on alienation of title is in contravention of public policy, such a provision in a contract cannot be validated by ratification or estoppel.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Paving—suing city on express contract. Where a holder of invalid paving assessment certificates elects to base his recovery solely on an express written contract, no question of estoppel, waiver, ratification, or accord and satisfaction is involved.

Lytle v Ames, 225-199; 279 NW 453

Promissory note—severability of interest—when barred. Unless the maker and payee on a promissory note agree to sever the promise to pay interest installments from the promise to pay principal so as to make each promise separate and independent of the other, the interest is an incident to the principal debt and as such is barred when the statute of limitations has run against the principal debt.

Yeadon v Farmers Elevator Co., 224-829; 277 NW 709

Statutes and articles as part of contracts. The corporation charter and the statutes of the state of domicile of the corporation become a part of any contract between the corporation and a purchaser of its stock.

Bishop v Middle States Co., 225-941; 282 NW 305

Municipal discharge of statutory liability. A contract between a county and a city where-in the city, in discharge of its statutory liability relative to one-half of the cost of paving a city boundary-line road, agrees to issue to the county road certificates in anticipation of the collection of special assessments on benefited property, cannot be construed as an unconditional promise on the part of the city to pay said statutory liability.

Polk County v Des Moines, 210-342; 226 NW 718

Unpermitted furnace installation—lawful and unlawful acts. A contract to install an oil burner, being a lawful act, is not rendered void on account of a failure to first secure an installation permit required by a city ordinance, inasmuch as this wrongful omission, not inhering in the contract, does not make an otherwise valid contract void. A distinction exists between doing a per se unlawful and prohibited thing, and doing a lawful thing in a prohibited manner.

Keith Co. v MacVicar, 225-246; 280 NW 496

Promise for benefit of third party is enforceable. The promise, made on adequate consideration, for the benefit of a third person, is enforceable by said third party.

Tracewell v Sanborn, 210-1324; 232 NW 724

Agreement for benefit of third party. Principle recognized that a third party, for whose benefit a contract is made, has a right to bring an action on the contract.

Venz v State Auto. Assn., 217-662; 251 NW 27

Transfer of property—assumption of mortgage debt—insufficiency. An agreement between partners in their contract of partnership to pay mortgages on land to which they have taken title "subject" to existing mortgages, will be deemed an agreement solely for their own mutual benefit, and not for the benefit of third parties, to wit, said mortgagees.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Knee, 222-988; 270 NW 438

"Bi-monthly payments." A contract for services providing for payments each two weeks is obligatory, even tho the party rendering the service has not worked two full weeks.

Goben v Paving Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

Contract for haulage—unoccupied time. A contract for hauling material at a stated price per load, with right in the hirer to designate the number of hours each day and the number of days each week on which the work should be done, does not embrace a right of recovery for days on which there was no hauling to do. Especially is this true in view of repeated unexplained receipts "in full of account to date".

Peerboom v Minges, 201-706; 207 NW 758

Extraneous documents as part of contract. The words, "Regarding the sand and gravel to be used in the construction of the Spottsville Bridge, which contract you have, we agree to deliver" etc., contained in a letter of offer which was accepted, cannot be construed as making the "Spottsville" contract a part of the contract by letter, or as having any other force than to identify the subject-matter of the offer and the place of delivery.

Koch Co. v Koss Co., 221-685; 266 NW 507

Building contract—extra costs—written authorization required—effect. A written building contract which, in effect, excludes all claims for extra costs consequent on changes in the plans unless such claims are evidenced by written authorization signed by the owner or by the architect on behalf of the owner, must be given the legal effect of excluding all evidence of oral authorization, there being no plea or proof, on behalf of the contractor, of waiver or ratification.

Iowa Elec. Co. v Hopp, 221-680; 266 NW 512

Requirement of written order for extra work—effect. A building contractor may not recover for extra work performed under the oral advice of the architect when the contract specifically required a written order in such cases. Especially is this true when the owner lived in a distant part of the state and had no knowledge of the extra work until after it had been performed.

Des Moines Co. v Magarian, 201-647; 207 NW 750

Suggested change in contract—effect. A subcontractor who "suggests" to the contractor that the latter make certain modifications in the plans in the way of extras does not thereby obligate himself to pay to the contractor the cost entailed by such changes, even tho such changes were advantageous to the subcontractor.

Berger Co. v Salyers Co., 203-565; 213 NW 212

Public improvements—estimated quantities as basis for contract. In awarding a contract to build an electric plant, the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of "unit prices", as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities, indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

(a) IN GENERAL—continued

Commission on "refund" of taxes—computation. Under a contract to pay an accountant a percentage of the amount "refunded" by the federal government as excess payment for certain years of income and war-profit taxes, the percentage must be computed on the actual amount returned by the government, even tho the government arrived at said amount by deducting from what would otherwise have been the refund the amount of tax inadequately paid in a certain year.

Gregerson Bros. v Cherry Co., 210-538; 231 NW 350

Homestead—debts enforceable against—contingent contract—noncertain debt. Under a written contract providing that first party will pay second party a named fee whenever second party secures the legal allowance of a certain claim in first party's favor, no debt is contracted which can be enforced against the subsequently acquired homestead of first party until said second party actually obtains the allowance of said claim, because until such allowance is obtained no debt accrues against first party which is certain and in all events payable.

Hunt v Moore, 219-451; 258 NW 114

Liability of principal and independent contractors. A contract granting the right of way over land for an underground pipe line, on payment of a certain sum per rod, and on payment of "damages to growing crops, fences, or improvements occasioned in laying, repairing, or removing lines", does not constitute an agreement by grantee that he will pay damages consequent on the negligent act—tort—of an independent contractor in injuring grantor's private bridge which was located wholly outside said right of way.

Asher v Continental Corp., 216-977; 250 NW 179

Contracts in name of association—personal liability. One who contracts for, or in the name or on behalf of, a legal nonentity, e. g., an unincorporated society or association, is personally liable on the contract unless he establishes the fact that at the time of so contracting his nonpersonal liability was agreed on.

Haldeman v Addison, 221-218; 265 NW 358

Prohibited changes—futility. A written contract, which in effect declares that no change in any portion of the contract shall be valid, cannot be construed to take away the right of the parties to subsequently orally modify the contract; nor does a provision for the termination of the contract in a certain manner preclude the parties from mutually terminating it in some other manner.

Webster County Co. v Nebraska Co., 216-485; 249 NW 203

Construction of undefined term. A stipulation that certain property was sold for the purpose of using the same as prizes in the operation of a punch board, is a concession that the term "punch board" has a general recognized meaning which must control the construction of the stipulation.

Parker-Gordon v Benakis, 213-136; 238 NW 611

Statutes part of special assessment certificate holder's contract—no effect by amending tax sale statute. The right of a special assessment certificate holder to take advantage of statutes providing that special assessments be collected in the same manner as ordinary taxes, and to have the property sold to pay assessments, was a part of his contract when he purchased the certificates, and was not defeated when another statute providing for tax sales was amended to prevent the tax sale of property against which the county holds a tax sale certificate.

Bennett v Greenwalt, 226-1113; 286 NW 722

Right to lien—vendee's contract to keep in repair. An executory contract by a vendee of premises that he will keep the premises in reasonably good repair cannot be construed as authorizing the vendee to install an entirely new bathroom equipment, and to bind the vendor's interest therefor.

Darragh v Knolk, 218-686; 254 NW 22

Restraint of trade—scope of territory. An agreement not to engage in a named business in a named place presumptively embraces said named place and the trade territory adjacent thereto.

Haggin v Derby, 209-939; 229 NW 257

Contract pending appeal. Where, pending an appeal which involved the title to land, the rival claimants under a landlord's lien and under a chattel mortgage on the crop entered into an agreement for the harvesting and sale of the crop and the holding of the proceeds until the appeal was decided, held that the contract evidently contemplated that the final holding on appeal would settle the right of one or the other of the parties to the controversy without further litigation.

Farber v Andrew, 208-964; 225 NW 850

Varying contract by evidence of custom. Principle recognized that a clearly expressed and unambiguous contract cannot be varied by evidence of a custom.

Wall v Ins. Co., 217-1106; 253 NW 46

Evidence of custom and usage—contract prevails. Evidence of custom and usage cannot prevail against an express contract to the contrary.

Paramount Pictures v Maxon, 226-308; 284 NW 119

Change in venue of action. A legislative change in the venue of an action may validly be applied to an existing contract.

Grain Belt Ins. v Gentry, 208-21; 222 NW 855

(b) GOOD WILL

Sale or transfer. Principle reaffirmed that the "good will" of a business may be sold or otherwise transferred.

Haggin v Derby, 209-939; 229 NW 257

Contract not to practice profession. Injunction will lie to restrain the violation of a contract wherein the defendant has agreed not to practice his profession in a named place for a stated period, the contract not being oppressive, unreasonable, or inequitable; and this is true even tho the plaintiff might have a remedy at law in the form of damages.

Proctor v Hansel, 205-542; 218 NW 255; 58 ALR 153

(c) TIME AS OF ESSENCE

Time of making payments as condition precedent. The making of payments under a contract at the exact time specified therein will not be deemed a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action for breach of the contract by the payee, when the contract does not, expressly or impliedly, make the time of payment the essence of the contract.

Armstrong Pav. v Nielsen, 215-238; 245 NW 278

Equitable relief—proof. Time will not, in equity, be deemed of the essence of a contract when the parties thereto have neither expressly so stipulated, nor, by their conduct, revealed that such was their understanding of the contract. So held as to the time of performance of a compromise settlement of mortgage indebtedness.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Hanlon, 223-440; 273 NW 114

Services and compensation—ambiguous contract in re commissions. Contract construed, and held to provide no commission on sales until said sales exceeded a named amount.

Clinton v Music Co., 209-636; 228 NW 664

(d) WHAT LAW GOVERNS—LEX LOCI CONTRACTUS

Interstate carrier—lex loci contractus. A contract of employment for and on behalf of an interstate commerce carrier is consummated in this state when the conditional offer of employment is accepted in this state by a resident thereof, even tho the offer is made in a foreign state.

Chicago RI Ry. v Lundquist, 206-499; 221 NW 228

Mortgages—deficiency after foreclosure—action to recover—lex loci contractus. In an action in this state on promissory notes executed in Nebraska, and secured by mortgage on Nebraska land, to recover the balance due after foreclosure of said mortgage, the substantive rights of the parties must be determined by the lex loci contractus.

Federal Tr. Co. v Nelson, 221-759; 266 NW 509

What law governs. When the payee of a promissory note prepares it in blank in this state and sends it to the proposed maker in another state without any specific direction as to the method or manner in which it is to be returned to the payee after being signed, delivery takes place only when the note reaches the hands of the payee in this state. It follows that the statute of limitation of this state governs such note.

In re Young, 208-1261; 226 NW 137

Statutory bonds—law governing. A statutory bond executed in a foreign state and delivered in this state will be construed under the laws of this state.

Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Interest rate—when foreign law governs. In an action on a foreign contract to recover a money judgment, it is proper to allow interest at the rate authorized by the laws of such foreign state.

Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Foreign law—comity. The law of a foreign state, which holds parties who are interested as shareholders in an unincorporated association, personally and individually liable as partners for the debts of such association even tho said parties, to the knowledge of the creditor, specifically contracted against such liability, will not be enforced by the courts of this state.

Farmers Bank v Anderson, 216-988; 250 NW 214

Place of contract—order in this state and acceptance in foreign state. The execution in this state by a proposed vendee of a naked order for goods, and the oral acceptance of such order by the vendor at his place of business in a foreign state, do not constitute the making of a contract in this state.

Anderson & Co. v Monument Co., 210-1226; 232 NW 689

Statute of limitation—what law governs. A note and mortgage representing a loan on land in a foreign state, duly signed in a foreign state by a resident thereof, and forwarded to the payee in this state, is an Iowa contract insofar as the statute of limitation is concerned, when such forwarding and receiving were with the understanding that the payee would apply the amount of the loan in discharging a prior matured mortgage on the land, if in so doing payee would be assured of a first lien.

Andrew v Ingvolstad, 218-8; 254 NW 334

II CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION—concluded(d) WHAT LAW GOVERNS—LEX LOCI CONTRACTUS—concluded

Iowa employment contract—action—place of business. Action for damages under oral contract of employment made in Iowa is not governed by the place where the contract was entered into, but may be maintained in state where employer's business was "localized".

Severson v Hanford Air Lines, 105 F 2d, 622

Foreign corporation without business permit—action on contract barred. A foreign stock corporation which, through its president while personally present in Iowa, sells on contract, accepts payment, part in cash and part in notes, and makes delivery of a machine, is doing business in the state, and not having first secured a permit to do business may not maintain an action on such contract.

Actino Lab v Lamb, 224-573; 278 NW 234

Common-law rule for recovery—modification. Principle reaffirmed that the common law rule that there can be no recovery on a written contract without a showing that it has been strictly performed has been modified in this state.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

III ORAL CONTRACTS IN GENERAL

Parol evidence of execution of oral contract. Oral evidence of the execution of an oral contract, which has been performed or partially performed by one of parties, may be introduced in evidence, altho the witnesses who testified were not present when the contract was made.

Ford v Young, 225-956; 282 NW 324

Fully performed oral contract. A count which pleads a fully performed oral contract for an interest in real estate is not subject to a plea of the statute of frauds.

Halstead v Rohret, 212-837; 235 NW 293

Contemporaneous collateral contract. An oral contract contemporaneous with the execution of a written contract cannot be deemed collateral to said written contract unless said oral contract has a supporting consideration separate and distinct from the consideration which supports the written contract.

In re Simplot, 215-578; 246 NW 396

Specific performance—transfer to equity. In consolidated actions at law, involving a promissory note payable "to ourselves", the issue of specific performance of an oral contract by one of the makers to indorse the note, should be transferred to the equity calendar.

In re Divelbess, 216-1296; 249 NW 260

Statute of frauds—part performance. An oral agreement that a mortgagor of real estate will pay the mortgagee a stated sum, and, in addition, will convey to the mortgagee the mortgaged premises in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt, is not within the statute of frauds. (Contra, Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664)

Northwestern Ins. v Steckel, 216-1189; 250 NW 476

Promise to answer for debt of another—promise prior to any indebtedness. A defendant who is simply an old acquaintance of a deceased, and who, before any funeral expenses are contracted, orally promises to pay such expenses may not say that he contracted to pay the debt of "another". Evidence held to present jury question on the issue whether an oral promise was direct or collateral.

Samuels Bros. v Falwell, 215-650; 246 NW 657

Striking legally unprovable allegation. Legally unprovable allegations in pleadings are properly stricken on motion. So held where, in an action at law to recover the amount due on a written lease, defendant, while admitting the due execution by him of the written lease, pleaded a prior oral lease—contradictory of the written lease—as containing the correct terms of the leasing.

Jacobsen v Moss, 221-1342; 268 NW 162

Absence of agreement to pay entire price—effect. An allegation of oral sale of an article to a defendant is prima facie established, with consequent liability for the entire purchase price, by evidence that the price was fully understood and agreed upon, and that the defendant took and retained possession of the article, notwithstanding the fact that the defendant (1) promised to pay one-half only of the purchase price, and (2) promised, without warrant or authority, that a third party would pay the remaining one-half.

Finnerty v Shade, 210-1338; 228 NW 886

Assumption of mortgage—unallowable contradiction. A deed to land wherein the grantee assumes one-half of an existing mortgage on the land may not be modified by testimony to the effect that when the deed was executed it was orally agreed that the grantee should continue to be bound by the original written contract of sale wherein he agreed to assume the entire mortgage.

Reit v Driesen, 212-1011; 237 NW 325

Mortgages—priority—oral agreement of parties. The assignee of one of two simultaneously executed mortgages on the same property to different parties may show, in an action wherein the foreclosure of each mortgage is asked, that just prior to the execution of said mortgages it was orally agreed by all parties to both mortgages that a certain one of said mortgages should be the first lien on the property.

Wuenecke v Hausman, 216-725; 247 NW 531

Oral wage agreement—erroneous writing—effect of employee's conduct. An oral wage scale agreement applicable to the first few weeks of employment, incorrectly reduced to writing by employer's agent, but correctly followed in paying wages which was not challenged by employee during the several years he continued in this employment, justifies a reformation of the writing to conform to the oral agreement.

Koch v Abramson, 223-1356; 275 NW 58

Oral employment agreement—no consideration for promissory note. Where one person agrees to make a loan of $3,500 to start a corporation and does loan $1,500 of this sum taking in exchange a promissory note, the borrower agreeing to employ the lender as a bookkeeper and salesman but for no definite period of time, such employment feature of the agreement is a separate contract and not the consideration for the loan.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-48; 275 NW 880

Apparent scope of agent's authority—evidence. Evidence that an agent, for many years, had charge of a certain department of his principal's business and had, during said times, negotiated many written contracts relative to the subject-matter in his charge, may create a jury question on the issue whether the agent had authority, within the scope of his apparent powers, to enter into an oral contract covering the subject matter in his charge.

Webster Co. v Nebr. Co., 216-485; 249 NW 203

Liability on note—discharge of maker—insufficient evidence. Evidence held insufficient to establish oral agreement discharging makers from liability on note and substituting purchaser of property for maker.

Citizens Bank v Probasco, (NOR); 233 NW 510

Custody and care of ward's estate—valid contract by ward. A mentally competent adult person who has, on her own voluntary application, been placed under guardianship solely because of her physical inability to freely move about and transact her business—tho no statute existed which authorized the appointment of a guardian under such application—is not deprived of power to enter into a valid oral contract for necessaries in the form of board and lodging and personal care for herself. And such contract, when executed, will be binding on her estate, even tho never approved by the probate court having jurisdiction over the guardianship.

Dean v Atwood, 221-1388; 221 NW 371

Enforceability—time limit. An oral agreement between a debtor and his creditors under which the creditors agree to accept a composition amounting to less than their demands is enforceable in equity; and if no time for performance be agreed on, the law will imply a reasonable time. Evidence reviewed and held to establish such agreement, and that the debtor's offer of performance was within a reasonable time.

Bailey v Ins. Co., 221-1195; 268 NW 173

Sale of goods—unenforceable contracts. Replevin for the possession of an existing article of personal property cannot be maintained when the action is based solely on an oral contract of purchase which is clearly within the statute of frauds, and under which contract title necessarily did not pass.

Lockie v McKee, 221-95; 264 NW 918

Conditional sale (?) or contract of agency (?). The act of the owner of an article in reluctantly permitting it to pass into the possession of a party (to whom he had theretofore actually sold many like articles) with permission to forthwith sell the article (which sale was then practically assured) at a stated cash price or to forthwith return the article, without any expressed intention of selling the article to the party so given possession, presents a jury question on the issue whether the transaction was one of simple agency, or whether the transaction constituted an oral conditional sale contract which would not be valid against a third party who had no knowledge thereof.

Greenlease-Lied Motors v Sadler, 216-302; 249 NW 383

Oral testimony showing sale conditions—inadmissibility. In an action to recover on trade acceptances by indorsee thereof, where there is no provision in sales contract prohibiting either delivery, negotiation, or transfer of such acceptances which are regular on their face, held, proof of an alleged oral agreement that acceptances were subject to certain conditions in sale contract is inadmissible in evidence.

State Bank v Feed Co., 227-596; 288 NW 614

Lease—husband's oral termination invalid. An oral agreement between the landlord and the tenant-husband, to terminate a joint lease of the husband and wife, will not terminate their homestead rights in 40 acres of the land, so as to permit a forcible entry and detainer action, since a homestead can be terminated only in writing by both husband and wife signing the same joint instrument containing a legal description of the homestead.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

Insurance—assignment by deceased. An oral contract assigning insurance, made with a deceased, must be established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence and leave no doubt as to the sufficiency of the consideration.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Implied authority of insurance agent. An insurance company which, in the issuance of policies against loss by hail, customarily dates said policies from the date of the insured's written application therefor, and not from the date of the acceptance by the company of such applications, must, notwithstanding provisions in said applications to the contrary, be deemed to have impliedly authorized its soliciting agents, on taking such applications, to validly enter into oral, preliminary contracts of insurance covering the period from the date of said applications to the date of their acceptance or rejection.

Boever v Ins. Co., 221-566; 266 NW 276

Contractor authorized by owner to hire architect. It is common knowledge that ordinarily the architect is employed by the owner and not by contractor, but evidence held to show that owner authorized contractor to employ an architect in owner's behalf.

Sugarman Co. v Phoenix System, (NOR); 243 NW 369

Well drilling—casing damage—discovery. In action on oral contract to recover for drilling well where, more than four months after judgment, defendant discovered damage to casing caused by plaintiff in digging the well, and thereupon moved for new trial, held that newly discovered evidence was not cumulative, and that under peculiar circumstances existing, the defendant was not guilty of lack of diligence in making such discovery.

Ross v Fahey, (NOR); 205 NW 855

Maintenance of fences. Principle reaffirmed that adjoining property owners may validly bind themselves by oral contract to maintain designated portions of partition fences.

Nichols v Fierce, 202-1358; 212 NW 151

Dead man statute—failure to prosecute claim or disclaimer of interest ineffective. A divorced wife of a deceased may not become a competent witness to an oral contract made jointly between herself, her mother, and the deceased, in order to subject his insurance to payment of her mother's valid probate claim, merely by failing to prosecute a similar claim of her own and disclaiming any interest in the claim in litigation, since she still has her claim and may enforce payment if the contract is established.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Life estate—proof of creation. A series of mortgages accepted by a bank describing the undivided third interest of a son subject to the life estate of the mother, together with other evidence, held to establish an alleged oral contract of the heirs and their mother to create such life estate in the property of a deceased intestate husband and father; consequently, partition of the realty was properly denied against the mother.

Redding v Redding, 226-327; 284 NW 167

Oral contract to devise—evidence to establish. Evidence to establish an alleged oral contract between a father and son, that the father would leave to the son a farm when he died, must be established by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence and it is the duty of the court to subject the evidence to every fair test which may tend to weaken its credibility.

Blezek v Blezek, 226-237; 284 NW 180

Love and affection—consideration—sufficiency. In an action to enforce grandfather's oral promise to will property to grandson in return for naming grandson after him, court held that love and affection, while being a "good" consideration, was not a sufficient consideration when unsupported by a pecuniary or material benefit, and created, at most, a bare moral obligation.

Lanfier v Lanfier, 227-258; 288 NW 104

Oral contract to convey land at death—absence of "strong equities". Absence of strong equities in favor of the plaintiff, a son trying to establish an oral contract with his father, since deceased, does not tend to weaken his corroborating testimony.

Blezek v Blezek, 226-237; 284 NW 180

Attachment when not waiver of unknown right to equitable lien. Where a father had orally contracted with a bank to pledge his son's share in his estate as security for a note executed by his son, later a bankrupt, on the understanding that payment from the father would not be sought while he lived, and where the father's copy of the contract contained an additional notation, made by a bank officer, that the bank would seek payment only from the son's share in the estate, which notation was unknown to the succeeding officers of the bank at the time of commencing an attachment action based on the father's attempted disposal of the pledged real estate, the bank's equitable lien on the real estate was not waived by the proceeding in attachment.

Emerson Bank v Cole, 225-281; 280 NW 515

Interest in real estate—part payment. Principle reaffirmed that part payment of the purchase price on an oral contract for an interest in land takes the contract out of the statute of frauds.

Bremhorst v Coal Co., 202-1251; 211 NW 898

Contract of sale—statute of frauds. In buyer's action on an oral contract for sale of a business college where there was no competent evidence taking case out of statute of frauds, a directed verdict for defendant was proper.

Patterson v Beard, 227-401; 288 NW 414

Change and correction—statute of frauds. An oral agreement to change a long established boundary fence is enforceable when taken out of the statute of frauds (1) by the mutual taking of a new survey, (2) by the building of a new fence in accordance with the said survey, and (3) by taking possession of the lands inclosed by such new fence.

Cheshire v McCoy, 205-474; 218 NW 329

Debt or default of another—original or collateral promise. The statute of frauds relative to answering for the debt of another does not enter into the proof of an oral contract to the effect that plaintiff should perform stated services and that the defendant would unconditionally pay therefor.

Richmann v Beach, 201-1167; 206 NW 806

IV MODIFICATION AND MERGER

General rule. Principle reaffirmed that there can be no modification of a contract unless there is a meeting of the minds of the parties on the modification.

Heggen v Coal Co., 217-820; 253 NW 140

Evidence to be clear and satisfactory. A court of equity will only reform a written instrument when it is moved to do so by clear and satisfactory evidence of a mutual mistake or other reason for reformation.

Knott v Ins. Co., 228- ; 290 NW 91

Oral contract merged in written. Principle reaffirmed that the terms of an oral contract are presumed to be merged into a subsequently executed written contract covering the same subject matter.

Jacobsen v Moss, 221-1342; 268 NW 162

Subsequent contract working merger. A contract is merged into a subsequent contract only in those cases where the subsequent contract completely covers the subject matter of the first contract, is inconsistent with the first contract, and is intended as a substitute for the first contract.

Oskaloosa Bank v Bank, 205-1351; 219 NW 530; 60 ALR 1204

Nonmerger of oral in subsequent written contract. An oral contract on a distinct consideration, and in no manner varying or contradicting a later written contract between the same parties on another and different consideration, is not merged in said written contract, even tho said oral contract was the inducing cause for the execution of the written contract.

Stoner v Stehm, 200-809; 202 NW 530

Contemporaneous writing. An absolute promise in a promissory note to pay on or before a named time cannot be deemed qualified and limited by a contemporaneous written contract which reaches no further than a promise by the maker to exercise certain economies in his business and thereby possibly effect payment before the stipulated time.

Hughes v Campbell, 202-1352; 212 NW 115

Independent undertakings. An original written contract obligation is necessarily not abridged, enlarged, or modified by a subsequent undertaking which is independent of and separate from said original undertaking.

Schmoller Co. v Smith, 204-661; 215 NW 628

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held wholly insufficient to establish a pleaded modification of a contract relative to the compensation of an agent for his services and for the use of his automobile in performing said services.

Hueston v Pointer Co., 222-630; 269 NW 754

Mutual partial modification—remainder in force. In a well drilling contract, a provision to use 4 inch casing all the way to the bottom of the well may be subsequently modified by an oral agreement to use 3 inch pipe, implied from the conduct of one party in accord with a change proposed by the other; but such a modification will not, necessarily, also modify the contract price per foot for the drilling.

Collins v Gard, 224-236; 275 NW 392

Right of action and defense—grounds—mistake. Equity will, on clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence that such was the actual contract of the parties, insert in a contract for the exchange of lands a provision that one of the parties shall pay the interest on the mortgage on his land up to the time he delivers possession of the land; and this is true tho, at the time of executing the contract, the parties mistakenly believed that a particular clause of the contract covered said matter of interest.

Wormer v Gilchrist, 210-463; 230 NW 856

Fraud-induced contract. One who, after discovering that he had been fraudulently induced to enter into a contract of lease, secures a modification of the contract substantially beneficial and advantageous to himself, thereby waives the fraud and the original rights arising by reason thereof.

Timmerman v Gurnsey, 206-35; 217 NW 879

Prohibited changes—futility. A written contract, which in effect declares that no change in any portion of the contract shall be valid, cannot be construed to take away the right of the parties to subsequently orally modify the contract; nor does a provision for the termination of the contract in a certain manner preclude the parties from mutually terminating it in some other manner.

Webster Co. v Nebr. Co., 216-485; 249 NW 203

IV MODIFICATION AND MERGER—concluded

Consummating contract in manner inconsistent therewith—effect. An original contract of sale of real estate is necessarily merged and discharged when the parties, on final settlement day, consummate the deal in a manner which is entirely inconsistent with the original contract as regards parties, price, terms, payments, conveyances, assumption of mortgage clause, and covenants generally.

Reit v Driesen, 212-1011; 237 NW 325

Contract to convey merged in resulting deed.

A contract to convey land is presumed to be merged in the subsequent deed executed in performance thereof, except that the contract may be resorted to for explanation of an ambiguity or collateral agreement not incorporated in the deed, but, in instant case, deed held to be unambiguous when it warranted against all persons other than those asserting rights under existing tenancies and when the contract provided for possession upon delivery of the deed subject to all leases. Thereunder, the provisions of the contract merged in the deed so that grantee could not look to grantor for relief when the tenant in possession refused to vacate.

Swensen v Ins. Co., 225-428; 280 NW 600

Physician's certificate—conclusiveness—estoppel—absence of fraud. An Iowa statute providing that medical examiner's certificate of health issued to insured would estop insurer from setting up in defense of action on policy that insured was not in condition of health required by policy at time of issuance or delivery thereof, unless certificate was procured by fraud of insured, had the effect of changing contract through estoppel. A statute of this character does not limit the equitable jurisdiction of federal court and is enforceable therein, whether statute had been construed by Iowa supreme court as being rule of substantive law passing into contract, or as being merely a remedial right.

Mutual Ins. v Cunningham, 87 F 2d, 842

V NOVATION

Affirmative showing required. There is no such thing as an implied novation.

Blank v Michael, 208-402; 226 NW 12

Essential elements to establish. The necessary legal elements to establish a novation are (1) parties capable of contracting, (2) a valid prior obligation to be displaced, (3) consent of all parties to the substitution based on sufficient consideration, and (4) extinction of the old obligation and creation of a new one.

Wade v Central Co., 227-422; 288 NW 439

Pleading—sufficiency. A plea of novation must allege a mutual assent of all the parties affected by the transaction.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held ample to establish a novation under a contract for the purchase of real estate.

Montgomery v Beller, 207-278; 222 NW 846

Contract for sale of realty—consideration. A contract of novation under a contract for the sale of real estate is supported by ample consideration when the vendor agrees to divide the original contract and to have it executed by different parties and in a different manner than as provided in said original contract.

Montgomery v Beller, 207-278; 222 NW 846

New agreement supersedes old contract. When the parties to a contract mutually enter upon a new agreement abandoning the old contract, the old agreement is extinguished and any new rights accruing because of a default will not revive the old agreement, but will arise under the new and substituted contract.

Munn v Drakesville, 226-1040; 235 NW 644

New policy substituted for original contract—conclusiveness. Where a life policy is surrendered by insured to insurer, and a new policy issued therefor, the later executed policy is conclusive as to what the contract was, in the absence of mistake or fraud, and the probative force of the prior policy goes no further than the extent to which it may tend to prove there was a mistake.

Knott v Ins. Co., 228- ; 290 NW 91

Promissory note as accommodation. On the issue whether promissory notes were received by a bank in payment of commercial paper surrendered by the bank, it may be shown that the notes were intended by all the parties to be accommodations for the bank receiving the surrender and to enable the surrendering bank to account, as a matter of bookkeeping, for the paper in question, and that the said accommodation notes were not to be paid by the makers thereof, but by other means.

Flack v Bank, 211-6; 228 NW 667

Flack v Bank, 211-15; 228 NW 670

Mere extension of note at reduced interest. An agreement to extend the time of payment of a promissory note, and mortgage securing it, at a reduced rate of interest does not constitute a novation.

Des Moines JSL Bk. v Allen, 220-448; 261 NW 912

Consideration, failure of—nonestoppel to plead. The maker of a promissory note is not estopped to plead failure of consideration for the note as to him because of the fact that, subsequent to the signing, he was a party to a contract under which there was a novation of security.

Insell v McDaniels, 201-533; 207 NW 533

Insufficient showing. A purchaser of real estate who has assumed the payment of existing incumbrances may not base a novation of his obligation on the simple expedient of causing the deed to be made to his wife as grantee.

Richardson v Short, 201-561; 207 NW 610

Consummating contract in manner inconsistent therewith. An original contract of sale of real estate is necessarily merged and discharged when the parties, on final settlement day, consummate the deal in a manner which is entirely inconsistent with the original contract as regards parties, price, terms, payments, conveyances, assumption of mortgage clause, and covenants generally.

Reit v Driesen, 212-1011; 237 NW 325

Pledge of stock—intention and practical construction of parties. A pledge of corporate shares of stock as collateral security will not be deemed novated into subsequently taken security by an agreement in connection therewith when such novation was never discussed between the parties, when the collateral holder never intended such novation, when the pledgor's claim of novation was very belated, and when the parties had by their practical conduct negatived such novation.

Winfield Bk. v Snell, 208-1086; 226 NW 774

Intent as controlling element. An agreement between a partnership and the individual members thereof, on one side, and a corporation, on the other side,—the corporation having succeeded to the business of the partnership,—to the effect that the corporation “hereby assumes and takes over as its own all the liabilities and obligations of said partnership”, does not constitute a novation of an individual claim held by one of the partners against the partnership, unless the parties actually intended such novation.

In re Talbott, 209-1; 224 NW 550

Action for purchase price. A plaintiff-vendor who seeks to recover on a contract of sale of land, but pleads that, on performance day, he conveyed to a party other than the contract purchaser, but under an oral agreement that, by so doing, the contract purchaser would not be released, must stand or fall on his chosen theory. In other words, he must establish his own theory of non-novation.

Bobbitt v Van Eaton, 208-404; 226 NW 79

Contract for employment of acrobats—assignment to booking agency—non-novation. Where a broadcasting company assigned to a booking agency an oral contract for employment of an acrobatic team, and such agency subsequently became the booker of the acrobats under a written contract, the company was not relieved of liability under the employment contract on the ground of “novation”, because there was no evidence that all parties consented to a substitution of the agency for the company.

Wade v Central Co., 227-422; 288 NW 439

Accord and satisfaction (?) or novation (?). An “accord” without “satisfaction” is a nullity; but nevertheless, the agreement of the parties, even tho the subject-matter be a tort, may rise to the dignity of a novation—the mutual substitution of a new obligation for an existing one which is thereby extinguished. Whether an obligation has been novated is necessarily a jury question, on conflicting testimony.

Wheeler v Woods, 205-1240; 219 NW 407

Novation as species of accord and satisfaction. Since the term “novation” is frequently applied when a substitution of obligation is effected as the result of an accord and satisfaction, it may be said that novation is a species of accord and satisfaction.

Munn v Drakesville, 226-1040; 285 NW 644

Substitution of new debtor. A debtor may validly contract with another that such other will wholly take over and assume the debtor's obligation, and such debtor is thereby fully released if the creditor acquiesces in the substitution of the new debtor and subsequently accepts acts of performance by the latter.

Reimers v Tonne, 207-1011; 221 NW 574

Substitution of new debtor—consent. A creditor may, by his actions and conduct, consent to the substitution of a new debtor.

Andrew v American Tr. Co., 219-1059; 258 NW 921

Nondischarge of existing obligations—extension of mortgage. An agreement between a mortgagee and an assumptor of the mortgage for an extension of time of payment does not constitute a novation, when the prior existing obligations for the same debt are not referred to, and when such extension agreement was entered into without the knowledge or consent of prior existing obligors.

Royal Ins. v Wagner, 209-94; 227 NW 599

Substitution and release—determination—new contract not creating presumption. The mere fact of the making of a new contract by which a third party becomes obligated to pay another person's previously existing indebtedness does not alone give rise to presumption that the creditor accepts the new debtor and releases the original debtor—question as to whether there is such a release is one of fact to be determined by all the evidence in the case.

Wade v Central Co., 227-422; 288 NW 439

VI ACCORD AND SATISFACTION

Discussion. See 3 ILB 240—Accord and satisfaction; 24 ILR 697—Outmoded terminology Accord without satisfaction. An accord without a satisfaction is a nullity.

Hughes v National Corp., 216-1000; 250 NW 154

Officers—compensation—acceptance in part—effect. An officer who accepts part of a statutory compensation does not thereby es-

VI ACCORD AND SATISFACTION—cont. top himself from enforcing payment of the balance.

Broyles v Mahaska County, 213-345; 239 NW 1

Action commenced—note to settle unlawful transaction—estoppel. Where, after an original notice of an action to recover commissions in purchase and sale of grain on Board of Trade had been served so that action was deemed commenced under the statute providing for service of original notice, a compromise was consummated whereby defendant executed a note extending payment for a period of 6 months, defendant is estopped in subsequent action on note to plead or prove that transactions were unlawful, since, regardless of validity of original transaction, the compromise, effected in good faith, estopped either party from any further litigation of matter in dispute.

Hoyt v Wickham, 25 F 2d, 777

Inadvertent cashing of check. When parties are in a bona fide dispute as to the amount due on account, the receipt by the creditor from the debtor of a check marked "In full of account," and accompanied by a letter to the same effect, and the cashing of said check in the ordinary course of business, constitute a complete accord and satisfaction, even tho the creditor, in cashing the check, overlooked the fact that both the check and the letter notified him that the remittance was in full settlement of the account.

Minnesota Co. v Register Co., 205-1228; 219 NW 321

Bona fide dispute. The settlement of a bona fide dispute as to the amount of an account is ample consideration for an accord and satisfaction.

Minnesota Co. v Register Co., 205-1228; 219 NW 321

Nature and requisites—execution. Principle recognized that an accord and satisfaction can exist only when there is a bona fide dispute, a compromise as to the amount to be paid, and an execution of the compromise agreement.

Olson v Shuler, 203-518; 210 NW 453

Debts included—plain and literal meaning controlling. In construing an "assumption-and-agreement-to-pay" clause in a deed of conveyance which, concededly, was executed and delivered in connection with a compromise and settlement agreement between a creditor and debtor, the court has no choice but to give effect to the plain and literal meaning of the words employed in said clause, there being no competent evidence dehors the written clause reflecting a different intention.

Monticello Bk. v Schatz, 222-335; 268 NW 602

Offer accepted or rejected as a whole. When a town warrant was issued in full payment of a disputed claim and was accepted with such knowledge, there was an accord and satisfaction of all claims, as such offer must be accepted or rejected as a whole.

Munn v Drakesville, 226-1040; 285 NW 644

Claims against county. The allowance by the board of supervisors of a lump sum on a claim consisting of several unliquidated items, and the taking and cashing by claimant of a warrant for said allowed amount, constitute a final accord and satisfaction.

Smith v Cherokee Co., 219-475; 257 NW 788

When plea unallowable. A plea of accord and satisfaction is properly stricken from a pleading when the pleading affirmatively shows that no basis existed or could exist for the plea—affirmatively shows that no bona fide dispute existed or could exist as to the amount due under the instrument on which suit was brought.

Jacobsen v Moss, 221-1342; 268 NW 162

Burden of proof. A debtor has the burden to establish his plea that the creditor accepted a check in full payment of the debt in question.

Kruidenier Co. v Manhardt, 220-787; 263 NW 282

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to establish per se an accord and satisfaction.

Koch Co. v Koss Co., 221-685; 266 NW 507

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence exhaustively reviewed in an equitable action wherein was involved the issue of accord and satisfaction, and, inter alia, held that it is not in accord with reason that an aged and experienced, and financially involved business man would convey property of substantial value (and the last remnant of his once ample fortune) for no consideration whatever except that the grantee would pay to the public authorities the taxes thereon.

Stuart v Beans, 221-307; 263 NW 816

Payment—jury question. The issue of accord and satisfaction is for the jury when the evidence is not clear whether one party tendered the sum in full settlement, or, if he did so tender it, whether the other party so accepted the sum.

Zabawa v Osman, 202-561; 210 NW 602

Question of fact—conclusiveness of findings. Whether the facts and circumstances attending the receipt by a creditor from a debtor of a check for an amount less than claimed by the creditor, and the cashing of the check by the creditor, constituted an accord and satisfaction may be a question of fact; and the findings of the court thereon in a law action tried to the court, on conflicting and supporting testimony, are necessarily conclusive on the appellate court.

Barth Co. v Kelly, 211-1154; 235 NW 471

New trial—grounds. New trial is necessarily proper when based on the established ground that the court failed to submit a defensive issue (e. g., accord and satisfaction) as to which the testimony makes a jury question.

Goben v Paving Co., 204-466; 215 NW 508

VII RESCISSION OR ABANDONMENT

(a) IN GENERAL

Technical breach. Principle reaffirmed that a purely technical and nonsubstantial breach of a contract affords no proper grounds for a rescission.

White v Masee, 202-1304; 211 NW 839; 66 ALR 1434

Executory contract—mutual disregard. Mutual disregard of an executory contract nullifies it.

Kortum v Kortum, 211-729; 234 NW 220

Cancellation by defaulting party. A contract may not be canceled by the arbitrary action of a party who is in default.

Atlas Co. v Huffman, 217-1217; 252 NW 133

Rescission as alternative remedy. Rescission will not be granted as a matter of course on denial of specific performance.

Davis v Eaton, 211-837; 234 NW 252

Burden of proof. To sustain a cause of action for rescission, proof of fraud must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing, and a mere preponderance is not sufficient.

Wiley v Bank, (NOR); 257 NW 214

Fraud—irrevocable waiver of action for damages. One who, with full knowledge that he has been fraudulently inveigled into signing an option contract for the sale of his property, elects not to rescind but to affirm and perform the contract, and does perform at a time when the contract is wholly executory and without consideration, thereby irrevocably waives, as a matter of law, any and all right to sue the wrongdoer for damages.

Ankeney v Brenton, 214-357; 238 NW 71

Loss of right by foreclosure. The purchaser of a mortgage-secured promissory note may not rescind on the ground of fraudulent representations as to the value of the security when, with full knowledge of the fraud, he forecloses the mortgage, bids in the property for the full amount of the judgment, and later takes a sheriff's deed to the premises.

Iowa Loan Co. v Bank, 200-952; 205 NW 744

Rescission for fraud—general denial—effect. Where plaintiff alleges rescission of a contract of sale because of defendant's fraud, and seeks to recover the money paid, a general denial does not raise the issue that plaintiff, after discovering the fraud, elected to affirm the contract.

Blecher v Schmidt, 211-1063; 235 NW 34

Mutuality of rescission—proof required. The vendee of goods who, in an action for the purchase price, defends on a plea of rescission must show that the rescission was mutual, expressly or impliedly.

Central Co. v Clancy, 206-1090; 221 NW 774

Rescission of sales contract — incurable breach. A dairyman who contracts to have his cows tested for tuberculosis, and to sell his milk to a retailer at a price substantially in excess of the market price for other milk of the same butterfat test, fatally breaches his contract by failing, for twelve months, (§3077, C., '27) to have his cows so tested, even tho a test, subsequent to the retailer's rescission, shows that the cows are free from tuberculosis.

Niederhauser v Jackson Co., 213-285; 237 NW 222

Unauthorized representations of seller's agent—buyer's rescission for falsity—seller's responsibility. Where buyer rescinds contract induced by fraudulent misrepresentations of seller's agent and seeks recovery of purchase price, the agent's limited authority, otherwise binding on the buyer, does not preclude the buyer from alleging and proving such representations, and the seller is bound by such representations even tho unauthorized and even tho the contract expressly limits the agent's authority to make agreements.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

Corporate contract—rescission by stockholder unallowable. A stockholder may not rescind a contract entered into by the corporation of which he is a stockholder and another corporation.

Andrew v Trust Co., 219-921; 258 NW 911

Termination without cause. A contract for the transportation of pupils for an entire school year, but containing a reservation by the board of right to terminate the contract at any time, enables the board to terminate the contract preemptorily at its pleasure, and without assigning any reason for such action.

Black v School Dist., 206-1386; 222 NW 350

School sites—contract—rescission and cancellation. The purchase by a school board of a schoolhouse site after bonds for such purchase had been duly voted, but prior to any bond levy, and the due issuance of a warrant in payment for such site, are not canceled or rescinded by the subsequent action of the electors in voting to rescind their former action authorizing the bonds.

Looney v School Dist., 201-436; 205 NW 328

Contract employing physician—future practice restraint unaffected by indefinite employment extension. When a physician is employed by a medical clinic in a locality where he is not acquainted, his contract, agreeing that at its termination he will not practice his profession for ten years within a certain locality, is not invalidated by reason of an indefinite extension of the employment period mutually acted upon by all parties, and injunctive relief was properly granted to employer.

Larsen v Burroughs, 224-740; 277 NW 463

Contracts to devise. The abandonment of a contract which is, in effect, a contract to devise property, and which is highly advantageous to the party who is alleged to have done the abandonment, must be established by very clear and cogent testimony.

Kisor v Litzenberg, 203-1183; 212 NW 343

Alteration of plans—nonabandonment of contract. Where a city council hired an engineer to reconstruct a sewage disposal plant for a lump sum compensation, and thereafter adopted a motion to hire an engineer to investigate the adoption of a "trickling filter system" as a substitute for the original plan, to which the engineer who had been employed protested that the original contract was for the entire engineering work, and where a motion before the council to reject engineer's original plans was lost, but a motion was adopted to instruct the engineer to change the original plans, nevertheless the adoption of such motion to change original plans was not an abandonment of the original contract as respects the right of the engineer to compensation.

Slippy Corp. v Grinnell, 226-1293; 286 NW 508

Banking corporations—merger contract—nonrescission. A contract for the merger of two banking corporations must be deemed final and irrevocable, even tho there has not been full compliance with every provision thereof, (1) when the corporation receiving the merger has passed into insolvency, (2) when, prior to such insolvency, substantial and good faith acts were performed by both parties in fulfillment of the contract, (3) when neither corporation ever attempted to rescind, and (4) when the restoration of the status quo would probably be impossible.

Andrew v Trust Co., 219-921; 258 NW 911

Instructions—nonrequest for elaboration. An instruction to the effect, in substance, that plaintiff must prove that he fully carried out the contract sued on necessarily embraces and covers defendant's contention that the plaintiff had abandoned the contract. If defendant desires elaboration of the idea of abandonment, he must request an additional instruction.

Hornish v Overton, 206-780; 221 NW 483

Forfeiture by delay. The right of rescission of a contract of purchase is per se forfeited by a delay of almost two years after the full execution of the contract, with knowledge, or with ample means of acquiring knowledge, of every fact relevant to the deal.

Edmunds v Ninemires, 200-805; 204 NW 219

Nonfatal delay. A delay of over a year in declaring a rescission because of a failure of title to the land contracted for is not shown to be unreasonable, on a record revealing a conflict as to negotiations for a settlement of the controversy.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

Cancellation—proceedings and relief—laches—when no defense. Delay, on the part of the signer of an unmaturing, negotiable promissory note, in bringing action to cancel the note for want of consideration, is quite immaterial when the delay has not been harmful to anyone.

Sterner v Bank, 221-1362; 268 NW 158

Sales—reasonable time for rescission—jury question. Whether the right to rescind a contract of sale for fraud was exercised within a reasonable time is ordinarily a jury question. Held that a rescission of a contract for the purchase of a store within five or six days after discovery of the fraud presented a jury question on the issue of reasonable time.

Blecher v Schmidt, 211-1063; 235 NW 34

Rescission within reasonable time—jury question—waiver. Where an Iowa seller's agent, by falsely representing that buyer would have exclusive territory, fraudulently induced a buyer in Texas to purchase vending machines and confections to be vended therein, the buyer, after discovering their falsity, waived such representations by accepting the machines and placing them in operation for about two months, but as to representations that the confections would withstand heat and humidity of Texas climate, and that a surety company bond would be filed with a certain bank, question as to whether rescission was made within reasonable time after discovery of falsity was for jury. It is buyer's duty to rescind contract within reasonable time after discovery that representations by seller are false, and what is a reasonable time must be determined with reference to all the circumstances, and ordinarily such question is for the jury.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

Delay in rescinding induced by promises of other party. When the purchaser's delay in rescinding a contract to buy real estate was induced by promises and representations of the vendor, there could be no complaint because rescission was not made within a reasonable time.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Use and occupancy—measure. When the assignee of an option contract for the purchase of land rescinds after he has been put in possession, his liability for the use and occupancy of the land is measured by the reasonable value thereof, and not by the provisions of the rescinded contract.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

Cancellation—right of action—nudum pactum. An unmatured, negotiable, promissory note, in the hands of the original payee, will be canceled, in equity, as to a party who signs it without consideration after the transaction giving rise to the note as to the other signer had been fully closed without obligation on the part of said other signer to obtain the additional signature in question.

Sterner v Bank, 221-1362; 268 NW 158

Defaulting plaintiff—equitable relief denied. Plaintiff vendee, after first defaulting under a contract for the sale of real estate, may not in equity, while still in default, rescind the contract because defendant vendor had later allowed a prior mortgage on the real estate to be foreclosed, and, therefore, had no title to deliver if plaintiff fully performed.

Fitchner v Walling, 225-8; 279 NW 417

Loss of right. A purchaser of land may not rescind the contract, prior to final performance, because the vendor did not have title and because the incumbrances on the land exceeded the amount the purchaser was to assume, when, with full knowledge of such facts, he takes possession of the land and makes payment on his contract; neither may the purchaser rescind at a time when the deed is due, under the contract, from the vendor, if he (the purchaser) is then in default.

Keifer v Dreier, 200-798; 205 NW 472

Subscription contract—when rescission unallowable. Principle reaffirmed that a contract of subscription for corporate shares of stock cannot be rescinded after the insolvency of the corporation, there being corporate creditors who became such after the subscription was executed.

Andrew v Bank, 219-921; 258 NW 911

Contract termination. A nondefaulting party to a contract who, because of a total breach of the contract by the other party thereto, proceeds to the formal termination of the contract in the manner required by the contract is standing upon and enforcing the contract, and not rescinding it.

Dunkelbarger v Ladd, 204-1208; 212 NW 726

Rescission by assignee—effect. The assignee of an option contract does not, by giving notice that he rescinds the contract between the original optionor and optionee, destroy the rights of the original optionee under the contract. Especially is such notice inconsequential when the record shows that the original option had no value.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

Disaffirmance—sufficiency. Where a party has not received the property purchased and paid for, and the status quo has not been disturbed, a notice to the adverse party of disaffirmance and rescission is all-sufficient.

Ayres v Nopoulos, 204-881; 216 NW 258

Fraud—nonvariance. An allegation of fraudulent representations of title, as a basis in equity for rescission of a contract of purchase, is sufficiently met by proof of a mutual mistake by the parties as to the title.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

Husband and wife—property-settlement contract—fraud—insufficient defense. A defendant sued by his former wife on a property-settlement contract, fully performed by her, availeth himself nothing in the way of a defense by nakedly alleging fraud by the wife in obtaining the contract when such allegation is made neither as a basis for a rescission of the contract nor for damages.

Poole v Poole, 219-70; 257 NW 305

Finality of election—right to change remedy. A plaintiff who pleads a rescission of a fraud-induced contract, and prays for judgment for the consideration paid, may, upon discovering his inability to prove the rescission, amend his pleadings and pray for damages caused by the fraud. (Note that the reverse of this proposition presents a different rule.)

Reinertson v Struthers, 201-1186; 207 NW 247

Setting aside executed contract. A court of equity is not warranted in setting aside an executed contract such as a warranty deed in the absence of actual or constructive fraud.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Innocent false representations. False representations, when material and justifiably relied on, furnish ample grounds for an equitable decree of rescission, even tho it be conceded that the representations were innocently made.

Lorenzen v Langman, 204-1096; 216 NW 768

Nature or subject of action—real property—action to establish and foreclose vendee's lien. An action by the vendee of land for rescission of the contract, for personal judgment against the defendant, and for the establishment and foreclosure of a lien on the land for the purchase money paid under mutual mistake, is properly brought in the county in which the land is located, irrespective of the residence of the defendant.

(a) IN GENERAL—concluded

Lee v Bank, 209-609; 228 NW 570

Proper law action nontransferable in toto. An action brought on a contract (e. g., a property settlement between husband and wife), and properly brought at law, is not rendered transferable in toto to the equity calendar by defendant's plea of fraud and prayer for a judicial rescission of the contract.

Poole v Poole, 221-1073; 265 NW 653

Adjudication as to legal effect of contract. A final holding on appeal that a certain agreement between a corporation and a purchaser of its corporate shares constituted an absolute rescission of a contract of purchase of such shares becomes the law of the case, and precludes the after-presented contention that such agreement was a contract of indemnity only.

In re Selway Co., 211-89; 232 NW 831

(b) TENDER OR RETURN OF PROPERTY

Rescission—condition precedent. Rescission of a contract of sale imperatively requires a return of the status quo.

Rogers v Hale, 205-557; 218 NW 264

Rescission by buyer—restoration of goods—tender—placing goods within jurisdiction of court unnecessary. When a buyer rescinds contract for purchase of goods, his duty to restore the status quo only requires that he tender return of the goods at place of delivery, and the tender may be kept good by holding them in readiness for delivery to seller at such place on demand, it not being necessary that the goods be actually or constructively placed within the jurisdiction of the court.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

Rescission by buyer—restoration of worthless goods unnecessary—buyer's duty to do substantial justice. On rescission of contract for purchase of vending machines and confections to be vended therein, the buyer was not obliged to return confections that had become worthless, and his failure to tender to seller a few coins found in the vending machines did not constitute such a failure to restore the status quo as would prevent him from recovering purchase price, the buyer being required only to do substantial justice to the seller.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

Useless formal tenders unnecessary. A formal tender of property as a basis for the rescission of a contract is excusable when the one to whom the tender is to be made has given advance warning that the formal tender, if made, will not be accepted.

McTee & Co. v Ryder, 221-407; 265 NW 636

Indorsement of check. An agreement between the indorser of a check and the indorsee-bank, to the effect that the indorser would return to said indorsee that which he had received for the check, and that the indorsee-bank would return the check to the indorser, constitutes a full rescission of the contract of indorsement.

Runge v Benton, 205-845; 216 NW 737

Inability to return property. The purchaser of corporate bank stock cannot rescind when he has pledged the stock and is unable to tender it back to the seller.

Rogers v Jungkunz, 204-1119; 216 NW 705

Plea of return of consideration. The maker of a renewal note may not plead that said renewal note was executed to the indorsee of the original note because of the false and fraudulent representation of said indorsee that he was a holder without notice or knowledge of fraud in the original note, unless said maker also pleads and proves that he has returned or tendered everything of value received by him for the original note. So held where the original note was given for corporate shares of stock.

Continental Bank v Greene, 200-568; 203 NW 9

Judgment on note—relief—indivisible transaction. A party who is entitled to judgment for the return of a promissory note is necessarily entitled, on proper prayer, to a judgment for the return of another note which grew out of the same transaction and was attended by the same conditions.

Breza v Federal Society, 200-507; 205 NW 206

Status quo—nonapplication of principle. The rule of law that, when a party to a contract of sale rescinds the contract, he must restore the status quo has no application to a case where the vendor repossesses himself of the property after default of the vendee and, under and in accordance with the terms of the contract, retains the preceding payments and betterments made on the property as liquidated damages for nonperformance of the contract, depreciation, and rental; and in such case it is immaterial that the vendor, after so doing, surrendered the unpaid notes and released the contract of record.

Stauffer v Motor Co., 207-1038; 221 NW 918

Recovery for betterments. The assignee of an option contract for the purchase of land may, upon rescission, recover of his assignor the value of betterments which he—the assignee—has necessarily been compelled to place on the land.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

Nonrecovery. The assignee of an option contract for the purchase of land may not, upon rescinding, recover of the original option-or (with whom he has no contract) the amount paid for the option.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

Unallowable rescission by purchaser. A vendor who is able to convey, who is not legally in default, and who has at all times insisted on performance by the purchaser, does not (1) by serving the 30-day notice of forfeiture, (2) by retaking possession, and (3) by instituting an action to quiet title, breach, abandon, or repudiate the contract in such sense that the purchaser may declare a rescission, and on the basis thereof recover the payments made by him.

Mintle v Sylvester, 202-1128; 211 NW 367

Recovery on sales in violation of securities law—tender of securities necessary. Purchaser suing to recover price paid for securities sold in violation of Iowa securities law must at least tender to seller securities equivalent in value to those purchased.

Huglin v Byllesby & Co., 72 F 2d, 341

Mental incompetency — realty exchange — voidable—duty to restore status quo. Where one of the parties to an exchange contract of realty is mentally incompetent, such contract is only voidable, not void, being valid until disaffirmed, and can only be disaffirmed as a whole, not in part, and when party seeks to avoid such contract it is necessary to restore, or offer to restore, status quo.

In re Gensicke, (NOR); 237 NW 333

Conditional sales—action for contract possession works no rescission. The vendor in a conditional sale contract by instituting replevin for the possession of the article, as provided by the contract in case of the vendee's default, manifests a clear intent to stand on the contract, and not to rescind it. It follows that the refusal of the court to submit to the jury the issue of rescission and return of the purchase price is proper. (Analogous holding, 202-1128.)

Schmoller Co. v Smith, 204-661; 215 NW 628

Liability—effect of rescission. A defendant who is tendered in court his promissory note, in rescission of the transaction out of which the note arose, and accepts said note may not defend against a claim based on the original transaction. In other words, defendant cannot, by accepting the offered rescission, defeat rescission and also escape all liability.

Miller v Nesbitt, 204-771; 212 NW 733

Contract price (?) or quantum meruit (?). A plaintiff who pleads that he partially performed an express contract for services and thereupon abandoned the work because of a breach of the contract by defendant must not be permitted to recover the contract price for the work actually performed unless he establishes his pleaded justifiable abandonment; and if he fails to establish justifiable abandonment, he may not recover on the basis of a quantum meruit which does not exceed the contract price when he neither pleads nor proves a quantum meruit.

Goben v Paving Co., 208-1113; 224 NW 785

Prohibited repudiation. A vendor who accepts and retains a partial payment for goods on the condition that the balance will be paid by the vendee when the goods are delivered may not, after a subsequent tender of the balance, repudiate the contract on the claim that the initial payment should have embraced the entire purchase price.

Daeges v Beh, 207-1063; 224 NW 80

Rescission and accounting—payments to third party by mistake. A purchaser of land who has been granted a rescission of the contract may compel an accounting by other executory vendors and vendees to whom part of the purchaser's payments has been made by mistake or inadvertence.

Winn v Williams, 200-905; 205 NW 541

Joint adventures—termination and accounting. A contract of joint adventure, which is wholly silent as to its duration, is terminable at will by a notice of any one of the parties to all other parties, especially when such other parties make no objection to such termination, and the right to an accounting necessarily follows.

Fitzhugh v Thode, 221-533; 265 NW 893

Guardianship—disaffirmance of contract—tender. The guardian of an incompetent may disaffirm the contract of his ward without going into equity and recover the amount paid by the ward on the contract.

Ayres v Nopoulos, 204-881; 216 NW 258

Unexecuted rescission of fraudulent contract. A subscriber for corporate shares of stock who, while the corporation is a going concern, enters into a bona fide agreement with the corporation for the complete rescission of the stock subscription contract, will be entitled to judgment against a subsequently appointed receiver for the amount of the stock subscription notes executed by him and transferred by the corporation and not returned to him as provided in the contract of rescission.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Breach of patent license contract. When a patent licensee ceased to pay royalties due the licensor, the licensor was not limited to an action against the licensee as a patent infringer, but could elect to treat the contract as still in force and bring an action to collect royalties.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 235 NW 131

Defaulting vendor may not recover payments. A vendor may not recover of his defaulting vendee payments advanced on incumbrances when the vendor is himself in default because of his inability to convey title.

Keifer v Dreier, 200-798; 205 NW 472

VIII PERFORMANCE OR BREACH

(a) PERFORMANCE GENERALLY

Justifiable abandonment—recovery. Principle reaffirmed that one who has contracted to render services, and justifiably abandons the work because of the breach of the contract by the other party, may recover at the contract price for the work already done.

Goben v Paving Co., 214-834; 239 NW 62

Goben v Paving Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

Justifiable abandonment—instructions. Instructions held adequately to present the issue whether the performance of a contract was justifiably abandoned.

Goben v Paving Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

Voluntary part performance—effect. Voluntary part performance of a contract by a legal stranger to the contract imposes no legal obligation to continue such performance.

Hess v Iowa L. & P. Co., 207-820; 221 NW 194

Impossible performance—when no excuse. A person is not legally excused from performing an act which he has unconditionally contracted to perform, but is prevented from performing because of the happening of a contingency of which he had knowledge when he contracted, and against which he might have protected himself. For instance, an insurer may not rely on a contract that he will, in full satisfaction of his liability, repossess a stolen automobile and properly repair it, and return it to the insured, when such return to the insured was prevented by the act of the seller of the car rightfully seizing the car, while it was in the possession of the insurance company, for nonpayment of installments due on the car, such possible seizure being well known to the insurance company when it so contracted.

Salinger v General Corp., 217-560; 250 NW 13

Failure to complete loan—no bar to recovery of part loaned. Where one person agrees to loan money to form a corporation, pursuant to which he loans a part and takes a note therefor, his failure to loan the balance will not prevent recovery of the part loaned, and a counterclaim so alleging states no cause of action and should be stricken.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

Partnership changes after contract—performance. A physician as a party to a contract of employment with a medical clinic partnership is not in a position to question its validity on the ground that there had been a change in the members of the partnership and consequently no contract with the new entity, when his full performance of and under the contract had been with the new entity, including an extension of the contract.

Larsen v Burroughs, 224-740; 277 NW 463

Executory contract. Principle argumentatively recognized that a party to an executory agreement who is wholly in default may not maintain an action to enforce a part of the contract.

Crane v Leclere, 206-1270; 221 NW 925

Readiness and ability to perform. In an action by an architect on a contract of employment to draw plans and specifications, on the claim that the owner abandoned the contemplated construction, the all-important issue is the readiness, ability, and willingness of the architect to carry out his part of the contract.

Shockley v Davis Co., 200-1094; 205 NW 966

Exact (?) or substantial (?) performance. A building contractor, in order to recover the contract price, need not establish a technical, exact, and perfect performance of the contract. Substantial, good-faith performance is all-sufficient.

Miller v Gray, 205-1305; 217 NW 228

Breakage of tile—neglect of buyer. Burden of proof in action on contract providing for delivery of drain tile was upon seller to show that tile were "sound and true", and evidence held to show that breakage was due to neglect of buyer.

Graettinger Works v Gjellefald, (NOR); 214 NW 579

Public improvements—substantial compliance with contract. Evidence relative to the performance of a paving contract reviewed, and held to show substantial compliance in the matter of performance.

Central Co. v Des Moines, 204-678; 216 NW 41

Public improvements—acceptance—avoidance by proof of fraud. A nonfraudulently induced acceptance by a city council of a street pavement estops the city thereafter to plead nonperformance of the contract, but not so when the city pleads and proves that, at the time of said acceptance, the contractor, unbeknown to the council and in collusion with city employees, had constructed said pavement of a thickness substantially less than the thickness required by the contract.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624; 109 ALR 608

Reasonable time to construct grotto. An individual constructing a grotto for a charitable organization under an agreement containing no time for completion has a reasonable time for performance.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Contract restraining competition—liquidated damages. Injunction is a proper remedy to restrain one physician from practicing his profession contrary to the provisions of his contract not to engage in competitive practice in the same county for a specified period. A provision in the contract for "liquidated damages" will not bar injunctive relief.

McMurray v Faust, 224-50; 276 NW 95

Right to complete contract. Upon a substantial breach of a building contract and the refusal of the contractor to proceed with the work, the owner of the property may himself take over the completion of the contract according to its terms, and charge the cost thereof against the contractor.

Golwitzer v Hummel, 201-751; 206 NW 254

Nonrecoverable damages. In the construction of a building, defects and imperfections which do not establish a substantial failure to comply with the contract may not be compensated for by an allowance of damages when complainant plants his claim for damages solely on the difference between the value of the house as built and its value if built in compliance with the contract.

Hayes v Ramsey, 205-167; 217 NW 808

Action by subcontractor—principal contract admissible. A subcontractor under a building contract is impliedly bound by the standards of performance provided in the principal contract; therefore it is error to reject the principal contractor's offer of such contract as evidence.

Lantz v Goodwin, 210-605; 231 NW 331

(b) SUBSTANTIAL PERFORMANCE

Evidence. Plaintiff in an action to recover for materials furnished under a building contract may very properly be permitted to show that the quality of the materials furnished was as called for by the contract, even tho defendant was defending on the theory that, irrespective of such quality, the architect had a legal right, under the contract, arbitrarily to reject the materials, and that the architect had so done.

Granette Co. v Neumann & Co., 208-24; 221 NW 197

Statute of limitation—completion of work. Where a statutory provision declares that action may not be brought on the bond of a contractor "after six months of the completion" of a public improvement, the improvement will be deemed completed when the contractor has substantially performed on the improvement all that he contracted to perform, and has turned it over to the public authorities; and it is immaterial that controversy exists as to extras, or that trifling defects or shortcomings afterwards come to light, or that the formal certificate of acceptance was delayed.

Daniels Co. v Const. Co., 204-268; 214 NW 481

Contract to bring infringement suits. A contract between a patent owner as licensor and the manufacturer of the patented article as licensee, providing that the licensor receive royalties and should bring suits to prevent infringement upon the patent using royalties received, was fully performed on the part of the licensor when he spent, in bringing infringement suits, more than the amount of the royalties received.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 285 NW 181

(c) BREACH GENERALLY

Breach of part not destructive of whole. Generally, where contracts are severable and divisible, and the consideration justly apportioned to part of the contract, a breach of that part does not destroy the contract in toto, but the defendant may only recoup himself in damages.

Paramount Pictures v Maxon, 226-308; 284 NW 119

Nonwaiver. A party to a contract does not waive a breach of the contract by the other party thereto by failing to notify such other party that he has knowledge of such breach. Instructions held not to announce a contrary doctrine.

Cox v Fleisher Constr. Co., 208-458; 223 NW 521

Waiver by inconsistent conduct. When minority and majority stockholders agree that the former will withdraw their objections to the renewal of the corporation and the latter will vote for such directors as will employ the minority in certain corporate positions, the minority waives all rights under the contract by subsequently joining with all the other stockholders in the adoption of renewal articles which wholly ignores the said contract.

Clark v Bank, 219-637; 259 NW 211

Discharge of employee. The peremptory discharge without cause of an employee under a definite time contract is, of course, a breach of the contract.

Westerfield v Liberty Oil Co., 208-912; 223 NW 894

Failure to make repairs. The measure of damages for breach of a contract to make all necessary repairs to a pavement is the fair and reasonable cost of such repairs, and not the difference in value of the real estate with and without said repairs.

Armstrong, Inc. v Nielsen, 215-238; 245 NW 278

VIII PERFORMANCE OR BREACH—concluded

(c) BREACH GENERALLY—concluded

Refusal of employer to sell at price stated—not excused by resulting loss. One who contracted to pay a commission to a dealer for selling goods at a certain price could not excuse his breach of the contract by refusing to sell except at a higher price, at least as to orders for goods taken before the breach, on the ground that to fulfill the contract would cause him to operate his business at a loss.

Lee v Sundberg, 227-1375; 291 NW 146

Violation in re publication of newspaper. An agreement not to engage in the publication or circulation of a "newspaper" in a named locality is violated by the publication and circulation in said locality, without charge, of a so-called "Shopper's Guide" of eight pages arranged in the form of an ordinary newspaper, and containing much advertisement, some current news, serial stores, editorial comment, and newspaper clippings.

Henry & Sons v Rhinesmith, 219-1088; 260 NW 9

Discharging acrobatic team. In acrobatic team's action for breach of contract of employment for two bookings, evidence, that plaintiffs were ready to perform and that employer replaced them in one of the engagements and told them they would not be used in the other, justified finding that plaintiffs were discharged.

Wade v Central Co., 227-422; 288 NW 439

Building contracts—right to take over work. A building contractor who materially breaches his contract to erect a building at a certain minimum cost and refuses to proceed with the work opens the door to the other party to the contract to take over the work and complete it and recover of the contractor the resulting damages.

Johnson v Vogel, 208-44; 222 NW 864

Agreement to give, deed, or will property. One who orally contracts that, upon his death, he will pay for certain services "by giving, deeding, or willing" certain real property to the promisee, constructively breaches his contract by failing to either give, deed, or will the property as promised, and thereby opens the door to the promisee to maintain an action at law for damages; and especially is this true when the promisee establishes the contract by the same degree of proof as would be required in equity, and, moreover, offers to accept a deed to the property in lieu of damages allowed for the breach.

Ballard v Miller, 210-1144; 229 NW 159

Foreclosure—agreement to defer. An owner of mortgaged premises who has not assumed the mortgage, but who makes a payment thereon on the express or implied agreement that the mortgagee will defer foreclosure for a stated time, may recover back the payment from the mortgagee if the latter breaches the agreement.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Cuthbert, 215-718; 246 NW 810

Approval by architect—conclusiveness. An architect who, in the absence of fraud or mistake, approves material may not, after the material is furnished, reverse his decision and reject the material.

Granette Co. v Neumann & Co., 208-24; 221 NW 197

Injunction—inducing breach of contract. Injunction will lie to prevent a third party from inducing parties to a contract to violate it.

Henry & Sons v Rhinesmith, 219-1088; 260 NW 9

Injunction—fatally indefinite decree. A decree which enjoins a party from doing any act which "would infringe upon the rights of the plaintiff" under a specified contract is fatally indefinite and therefore unallowable.

Henry & Sons v Rhinesmith, 219-1088; 260 NW 9

IX RELEASES AND SETTLEMENTS AND WAIVER IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 20 ILR 106—"Mending hold doctrine"; 21 ILR 146—Rescission of release from liability

(a) IN GENERAL

Impeachment—burden of proof. He who seeks to avoid a duly proven compromise, settlement and release must establish:

1. That the release was procured by fraud, or
2. That the contention or claim on which the compromise and settlement was based was wholly unfounded, and, therefore, could not support a compromise and settlement.

Evidence reviewed and held wholly insufficient to impeach a compromise and settlement of liability under a policy of life insurance.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

Compromise and settlement—impeachment—burden of proof. Fraud, in impeachment of a compromise and settlement, must be established by the pleader who alleges it.

Coffman v Brenton, 214-185; 239 NW 9

Personal injury release—mutual mistake. A contract for settlement of damages for personal injury in a motor vehicle accident, and for release of further liability, will be set aside when it is shown that both the injured party and the agent of the defendant relied on the physician's good-faith statement that the injury was healing and the patient would soon recover, tho it later developed that the doctor was mistaken—such mistake is a mutual mistake of fact by both parties to the contract.

Jordan v Brady Co., 226-137; 284 NW 73

Delivery date of policy—other evidence competent. In an action on a life policy to which insurance company pleads a general denial and further pleads a release and settlement, wherein the delivery date of the policy is in dispute, and the insurance company assigns, as error, the exclusion of testimony of an officer of the company concerning underwriting practices of the company and a letter written by the company to its agent, upon which the agent's reply was indorsed, concerning the date of delivery of the policy, such evidence should have been admitted, and was competent to show that the company honestly believed it had a defense to the policy and explained why the company had the right to rely upon the date appearing upon the receipt for the policy.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Release—fraud—jury question. A jury question as to the validity of a release of personal injury damages is made by proof that the release represented that the doctor's charges would be "about" $10, and that the representation was materially false, and was made to the releasor and acted on by him when he was alone and practically helpless from his injuries.

Robinson v Meek, 203-185; 210 NW 762; 5 NCCA(NS) 434

(b) RELEASES GENERALLY

Burden of proof. The burden of proof that a release was executed rests on the party alleging the release.

Vande Stouwe v Life Co., 218-1182; 254 NW 790

General release of claim avoided by mutual mistake. A general release of a claim for personal injuries may, under proper circumstances, be avoided on the ground of mutual mistake as to the nature or seriousness of the injury.

Jordan v Brady Co., 226-137; 284 NW 73

Personal injury release—doctor's belief in recovery—mutual mistake. A contract for settlement of damages for personal injury in a motor vehicle accident, and for release of further liability will be set aside when it is shown that both the injured party and the agent of the defendant relied on the physician's good-faith statement that the injury was healing and the patient would soon recover, tho it later developed that the doctor was mistaken—such mistake is a mutual mistake of fact by both parties to the contract.

Jordan v Brady Co., 226-137; 284 NW 73

Joint wrongdoers. A party who has been negligently injured and settles with and releases the original wrongdoer may not thereafter maintain an action against a physician for malpractice in treating the very injuries for which he has effected a settlement.

Phillips v Werndorff, 215-521; 243 NW 525; 39 NCCA 574

Discharge of employer's liability—effect on third party wrongdoer. Where an injury, which is mandatorily compensable under the workmen's compensation act, is received by an employee in consequence of the actionable negligence of the operator of an automobile owned by, and operated with the consent of, the employer, the fact that the employer fully discharges his statutory liability to the employee does not ipso facto discharge the legal liability of the said negligent operator to said employee.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Covenant not to sue—joint wrongdoers. The driver of an oil truck sued for damages consequent on his negligent operation of the truck is not released from liability because another party who owned the oil tank and grease rack carried on the truck obtained from the injured party a covenant wherein the injured party agreed not to sue such other party—the record failing to show that the truck driver and the owner of the tank were joint wrongdoers.

Lang v Siddall, 218-263; 254 NW 783

Release of joint tort-feasor. An injured party, who voluntarily, and without being imposed on by fraud, accepts and receives from one alleged joint tort-feasor a legal consideration in the form of property in settlement of his injuries, may not thereafter maintain an action against another joint tort-feasor for damages for the same injury.

Barden v Hurd, 217-798; 253 NW 127

Notice of release after promising to pay for goods furnished to third person. A landlord who promised his tenant, in the presence of a gasoline dealer, to pay for tractor fuel furnished by the dealer to the tenant, and who later was released from his promise, was not obligated to pay the dealer for fuel sold to the tenant after the dealer received notice of the release.

Reichart v Downs, 226-870; 285 NW 256

Substitution and release—new contract not creating presumption. The mere fact of the making of a new contract by which a third party becomes obligated to pay another person's previously existing indebtedness does not alone give rise to presumption that the creditor accepts the new debtor and releases the original debtor—question as to whether there is such a release is one of fact to be determined by all the evidence in the case.

Wade v Central Co., 227-422; 288 NW 439

Fraudulent release. A written release of all damages suffered by an injured party is fraudulent and void when it was in fact mutually intended as a receipt for wages only, and was signed by the injured party without negligence on his part; and the failure of the injured person, who was himself unable to read, to have such instrument read to him does not necessarily constitute negligence per se.

Farwark v Railway, 202-1229; 211 NW 875; 26 NCCA 231; 4 NCCA(NS) 98

Fraud in securing release—consideration—burden of proof. In an action on a life policy where the insurance company pleads a release, the burden of proof is on the company to show the execution and delivery of the release and payment of amount due thereunder, and where failure of consideration or fraud is alleged in obtaining the release, the burden of proof is on the party making the allegation, so where the court excluded such a release from evidence on account of insurance company's failure to establish consideration for the execution of such release, it placed a burden on the company which the company should not have been required to sustain, and the ruling was clearly erroneous.

Luce v Ins. Co., 227-532; 288 NW 681

Fraudulent procurement—negligent execution—jury question. Evidence reviewed at length relative to a written release of damages consequent on shockingly severe injuries, and held to present a jury question on the issues (1) of defendant's fraudulent procurement of the release, and (2) of plaintiff's negligence in signing said release.

Engle v Ungles, 223-780; 273 NW 879; 4 NCCA(NS) 92

Bank promising father to carry son's debt until father's death. A father's contract with a bank, by which the bank agreed to carry a son's indebtedness to the bank until the death of the father, is personal and involves a trust and confidence, and such contract may not be assigned without the consent of the father, and when the bank's assignee started action for a money judgment, during the lifetime of the father, he was released from the obligation of his contract.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Signing a release without reading. A signed release and settlement of a claim for damages is conclusive on the signer, even tho he signed it, because of a false statement of its contents, when he had ample time and ability to read, and was in no manner prevented from reading.

Crum v McCollum, 211-319; 233 NW 678; 4 NCCA(NS) 142

Implied fraud. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a release of damages was binding on the plaintiff who signed the same without reading it.

Shadduck v Railway, 218-281; 252 NW 772

Consideration—presumption. Presumptively, a written release by a mortgagee of a mortgage is supported by a sufficient consideration.

Shaffer v Zubrod, 202-1062; 208 NW 294

(c) SETTLEMENTS GENERALLY

Construction — intent as polestar. Quite manifestly a written compromise and settlement may not be given an interpretation contrary to the actual intention of the parties.

Bates v Bank, 223-729; 273 NW 867

Construction—same as other contracts. An unjust compromise or private settlement will not be accorded by the court any different construction or treatment than any other unjust contract.

Jordan v Brady Co., 226-137; 284 NW 73

Agreement "to take care of claim". An agreement by one party to a compromise and settlement that he will "take care of" the claim of a named third party may not, in view of the circumstances attending the parties, be equivalent to an agreement to pay said claim.

Southern Surety v Railway, 215-525; 245 NW 864

Consideration. A written contract of compromise and settlement of a bona fide controversy between parties is supported by adequate consideration.

Kilts v Read, 216-356; 249 NW 157

Notes—compromise and settlement as consideration. A promissory note executed without fraud and in compromise and settlement of a disputed but honestly asserted claim—which may have been unfounded—must be deemed supported by an adequate consideration. Evidence held to support such a finding.

Booth v Johnston, 223-724; 273 NW 847

Promissory note—liability. A compromise and settlement which results from a bona fide controversy as to the liability of one of the parties on promissory notes is final. In other words, there need be no evidence that the party denying liability was not, in fact, legally liable on the notes.

Fairfax Bank v Coligan, 211-670; 234 NW 537

Compromising barred claim. If parties have actually compromised a bona fide controversy between themselves relative to the claim of one of the parties, it is immaterial whether, at the time of the compromise, the claim in controversy was barred by the statute of limitation.

Marron v Lynch, 215-341; 245 NW 346

Failure to plead and prove avoidance. A clearly established contract of settlement must prevail in the absence of plea and proof of matter in avoidance.

Bebensee v Blumer, 219-261; 257 NW 768

Absence of controversy—unsupported promise. An oral compromise and settlement of a bona fide controversy between parties relative to a claim of one of the parties is not established by evidence which affirmatively shows that no controversy existed between the parties, but that one of the parties made a promise to the other for which promise no consideration appears.

Marron v Lynch, 215-341; 245 NW 346

Mortgage indebtedness—time as essence of contract. Time will not, in equity, be deemed of the essence of a contract when the parties thereto have neither expressly so stipulated, nor, by their conduct, revealed that such was their understanding of the contract. So held as to the time of performance of a compromise settlement of mortgage indebtedness.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Hanlon, 223-440; 273 NW 114

Offer of settlement—insufficient evidence. A statement by a creditor to his debtor that "You can do one of three things—pay the bill, return the merchandise, or beat the bill" held quite insufficient, in view of the record, to constitute an offer of settlement justifying the debtor in returning the goods in full settlement of the creditor's claim.

United Service v Heinen, 220-859; 263 NW 343

Performance—interest—when not allowable. Creditors who, in a composition agreement with their debtor, contract to accept specified sums in settlement of their respective demands are not entitled to interest on said sums during the time required to carry out the agreement.

Bailey v Ins. Co., 221-1195; 268 NW 173

Compromise by guardian—nonadversary proceedings. The good-faith compromise by a guardian, with the approval of the court, of pending litigation to which the minor is a party is not a proceeding adversary to the minor.

Kreamer v Wendel, 204-20; 214 NW 712

Corporation judgment compromised—former stockholder—no authority. Stockholders who had sold their stock after the corporation had recovered a judgment no longer had an interest in the judgment which remained the property of the corporation even when its name was changed, so a compromise settlement of the judgment had no validity when made by attorneys with consent given by one former stockholder, as only the corporation could authorize such settlement.

Glenwood Lbr. Co. v Hammers, 226-788; 285 NW 277

Apparent authority of agent—showing preliminary to receiving testimony. Testimony relative to a contract of compromise with a corporate agent on behalf of the corporation is admissible upon proof that the party offering the testimony, preliminary to entering into such contract, in good faith availed himself of the bureau of information maintained by the corporation, and by means thereof made contact with corporate agents who had physical possession of the papers and files relative to the subject-matter of said compromise, and who were, apparently and to all appearance, in authoritative charge of said matter for settlement. (Of course, the issue of apparent authority may be a jury question.)

Northwestern Ins. v Steckel, 216-1189; 250 NW 476

Building contracts—final certificate by architect—what constitutes. A certificate by an architect that the contractor has been overpaid a stated amount, even tho it purports to be an "opinion" only, is a final certificate when the parties mutually expected that the certificate would be final, and mutually so treated it, and when the certificate contains an itemized computation showing how the overpayment was determined.

Van Dyck Co. v Central Co., 200-1003; 205 NW 650

Injury from motor vehicle—fraud in settlement. A plaintiff, injured when the automobile in which she is riding in a snowstorm is struck from the rear by another automobile, and who, in the presence of her husband and sister, makes a written settlement with the insurance company for such injuries, and who delays two years thereafter before attacking as fraudulent the validity of such settlement, does not meet her burden to overcome the written instruments by giving her own self-contradictory testimony with no proof of actual fraud or misrepresentations.

Mosher v Snyder, 224-896; 276 NW 582

Setting aside—insufficient grounds. A party who compromises and settles his claim for damages consequent on an alleged fraudulent sale, and voluntarily and under no additional fraud does so on the basis of his then knowledge of the claimed fraud, may not have the compromise set aside on the claim that he later discovered an additional element of fraud in the sale not known to him when he compromised.

Williams v Herman, 216-499; 249 NW 215

Validity—good faith—fraud—duress. Evidence held to generate a jury question on the issue whether a promissory note was signed as the result of a good-faith, nonfraudulent compromise and settlement.

Rounds v Butler, 207-735; 223 NW 487

Matters included—presumption. It being conceded, arguendo, that the execution and delivery of a promissory note generate a presumption that all prior mutual claims between the maker and payee were thereby settled, yet such presumption is necessarily rebuttable.

Fitzgerald v Miller, 200-718; 205 NW 324

IX RELEASES AND SETTLEMENTS AND WAIVER IN GENERAL—continued

(c) SETTLEMENTS GENERALLY—concluded

Posted signs—settlement offer. Denying a directed verdict based on a general standing offer of settlement, made by posted signs to all patrons of a beauty shop in the event of injury, pleaded in answer but stricken on motion by an order not alleged as error, cannot be reviewed on appeal.

Pearson v Butts, 224-376; 276 NW 65

(d) COMPOSITION WITH CREDITORS

Oral agreement enforceable—time limit. An oral agreement between a debtor and his creditors under which the creditors agree to accept a composition amounting to less than their demands is enforceable in equity; and if no time for performance be agreed on, the law will imply a reasonable time. Evidence reviewed and held to establish such agreement, and that the debtor's offer of performance was within a reasonable time.

Bailey v Ins. Co., 221-1195; 268 NW 173

Fatally delayed execution. A written composition with creditors, silent as to the time of performance, must be executed within a reasonable time in view of all the attending circumstances.

Federal Corp. v Western Co., 219-271; 257 NW 785

Consideration—part payment of debt in discharge of whole. An executed agreement between a debtor and a creditor to the effect that the debtor will, before any part of the indebtedness is legally due, pay a part thereof in full satisfaction of the entire indebtedness, is supported by ample consideration, and is, therefore, enforceable.

Fisher Supply Co. v Northwestern Co., 216-909; 249 NW 664

Deception constituting fraud and liability therefor—right to rely on false statement. A debtor who falsely asserts his complete insolvency, and thereby induces his creditor, wholly ignorant of the true facts, to enter into a compromise settlement of indebtedness, will not, in an action to cancel the fraud-induced settlement, be heard to assert that the creditor had no right to rely on said false statement—that the creditor, before acting, should have made an independent investigation as to the truth of said statement.

Andrew v Baird, 221-83; 265 NW 170

(e) WAIVER GENERALLY

Waiver defined—burden of proof. A waiver is the voluntary and intentional relinquishment or abandonment of an existing legal right. He who relies thereon has the burden of establishing all elements thereof. Evidence involving the payment of renewal commissions on insurance policies reviewed and held insufficient to establish a waiver.

McPherrin v Assur. Co., 219-159; 257 NW 316

Jones v Des Moines, 225-1342; 233 NW 924

Mechanics' liens—waiver by conduct. A materialman who files his lien after inducing a mortgagee to take his mortgage on the express or implied promise that no lien will be filed, will not be decreed priority over the mortgage.

Fullerton Co. v Miller, 217-630; 252 NW 760

Matters specially pleadable. "Waiver" must be specially pleaded.

Cole v Ins. Co., 201-979; 205 NW 3

Schmid v Underwriters, 215-170; 244 NW 729

Fraud—irrevocable waiver of action for damages. One who, with full knowledge that he has been fraudulently inveigled into signing an option contract for the sale of his property, elects not to rescind but to affirm and perform the contract, and does perform at a time when the contract is wholly executory and without consideration, thereby irrevocably waives, as a matter of law, any and all right to sue the wrongdoer for damages.

Ankeney v Brenton, 214-357; 238 NW 71

"Estoppel" and "waiver" contrasted. Principle reaffirmed that, to constitute waiver, action to the prejudice of the party relying thereon is not essential; while such showing is essential to estoppel.

Euclid Bank v Nesbit, 201-506; 207 NW 761

Renewal of note—waiver of defense. Principle reaffirmed that the maker of a promissory note waives his defense to the note when he renews the note with full knowledge of the defense; and especially is this true if the maker secures an extension of time.

Euclid Bank v Nesbit, 201-506; 207 NW 761

Validity—renewal of forged note. The execution of a promissory note in renewal of a known forged note necessarily works a waiver of the fraud consequent on the forgery. Evidence held sufficient to establish the absence of such knowledge.

Bacon v Bank, 204-887; 216 NW 274

Incorporation denied by state—partnership formed. Promoters of a corporation are liable to an investor for money received as the agreed purchase price for stock in a corporation, even tho the failure to deliver stock occurred because the state denied the right to incorporate, and they are not relieved by a partnership agreement, signed by the investor, who nowhere waives nor abandons the agreement for delivery of the corporate stock.

Smith v Secor, 225-650; 281 NW 178

Merchandise return as condition for refund—waiver by correspondence manager. A requirement that buyer return warranted machines as a prerequisite to a refund of the purchase price may be waived by seller's agent in charge of correspondence when, in reply to buyer's offer to return, he instructs buyer not to return the machines.

Henriott v Main, 225-20; 279 NW 110

Right to discharge employee. Principle recognized that, tho an employer, by continuing the employment after knowledge of the breach of duty by the servant, is deemed thereby to waive his right to discharge, yet he is not thereby deemed to waive the breach of duty.

Durr v Park Co., 205-279; 218 NW 54

Insurance company's waiver of policy provision. When facts are disputed as to whether insurance company waived policy provisions as to unconditional ownership and as to location where property was to be kept which was later destroyed by fire, such dispute is for the jury.

Buettner v Ins. Assn., 225-847; 282 NW 733

Reply or amendment—waiver of objections. Altho a pleading, denominated as a reply, is really an amendment to the petition, but the question of proper pleading was not raised, and the defendants amended their answers as tho the reply had been an amendment to petition, and parties, without objection, offered evidence pertaining thereto, any objections possibly arising on account of the departure from the rules of pleading were waived.

Burns & McDonnell Co. v Iowa City, 225-1241; 282 NW 708

Error in pleadings by filing answer. To preserve an objection that an allegation of negligence was too general and indefinite to constitute basis of cause of action, a defendant should stand on its motion to strike and for more specific statement. Failing in this and filing its answer, it waived any error of court in overruling motion. A cause of action should be sufficiently precise to enable the defendant to prepare his defense.

O'Meara v Green Const. Co., 225-1365; 282 NW 735

X ACTIONS

(a) IN GENERAL

Counts—express and implied contract. A plaintiff may, in different counts, plead an express and an implied contract as to the same subject matter.

Richmann v Beach, 201-1167; 206 NW 806

Reformation—implied contract. A court of equity cannot reform a written contract, let alone an implied contract.

Snell v Kresge Co., 220-837; 263 NW 493

Account—inconsequential plea. In an action on a contract to recover a money judgment for plaintiff's interest in certain property, the plea of an intervenor who claims an interest in the property that there must first be an accounting between plaintiff and defendant is of no consequence where there is no evidence that defendant has ever paid plaintiff anything on his claim.

Benson v Sawyer, 216-841; 249 NW 424

Action for breach—variance. Principle reaffirmed that a contract relied on must be established as pleaded.

Economy P. Co. v Honett, 222-894; 270 NW 842

Pleading—want of consideration. The all-essential element of a plea of failure of consideration is the facts. There need not necessarily be any formal statement "that there was a total failure of consideration".

Miller v Laing, 212-437; 236 NW 378

Lack of mutuality and consideration—agreement to purchase steers retained and fed by alleged seller. In law action based on written instrument, wherein plaintiff agreed to feed 24 head of steers for a period from 90 to 120 days, and defendant agreed to purchase the steers at any time during such period at 14 cents per pound, hoof weight, at Chicago or other reasonable marketing point, such agreement was not enforceable due to lack of mutuality and consideration, especially where there was no other consideration than that imported by the instrument, and this being a law action rather than in equity to make contract mean what plaintiff contends that it was intended to say, hence plaintiff could not recover on instrument the difference between 14 cents per pound and price at which plaintiff sold the steers on Chicago market.

May v Burns, 227-1385; 291 NW 473

Proper law action nontransferable in toto. An action brought on a contract (e. g., a property settlement between husband and wife), and properly brought at law, is not rendered transferable in toto to the equity calendar by defendant's plea of fraud and prayer for a judicial rescission of the contract.

Poole v Poole, 221-1073; 265 NW 653

Contract for repayment—burden of proof. One seeking to recover money loaned must prove a contract express or implied for its repayment.

In re Green, 227-702; 288 NW 881

(a) IN GENERAL—continued

Judgment—nonbar or estoppel. A decree that a subscriber for corporate stock could not recover of the corporate receiver the amount already paid to the corporation on his subscription contract—such being the sole issue—does not estop the subscriber, when sued by the receiver for the unpaid amount of said contract, from pleading in defense that the purported corporation never had any corporate existence.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

Contract omitted from evidence. In a law action, where a written contract to furnish advertising material was not offered in evidence, a judgment for defendant was proper.

Clare v Pearson, 227-928; 289 NW 737

Plea of oral contract—failure of proof. There is a total failure of proof when plaintiff bases his action solely on a plea of oral contract and establishes a written contract.

Lamis v Des Moines Co., 210-1069; 229 NW 756

Coal mining—royalties—reduction by oral agreement—jury question. In an action to recover alleged balance due under coal mining contract for royalties, whether payments provided for in contract were reduced by subsequent oral agreement held to be a jury question.

Heggen v Mining Co., (NOR); 263 NW 268

Cashier of bank—nonimplied authority. A five-year contract involving an expenditure of $500 for advertising a small village bank in a bank directory is not an ordinary contract within the duties of the cashier, but an extraordinary one requiring the authority of the board of directors in order to bind the bank.

Ashland Towson Corp. v Bank, 216-780; 248 NW 336

Contract entered into by business department of real party. An action on a contract is properly brought by the real contracting party, even tho such contract was entered into by one of the business departments of said party.

Butler Co. v Elliott, 211-1068; 233 NW 669

Execution of promissory notes—subsequent ratification—effect. A plea that promissory notes were executed on Sunday is avoided by a plea, and proof thereof, that the maker of the notes subsequently ratified the execution of said notes.

Witmer v Fitzgerald, 209-997; 229 NW 239

Execution on Sunday—collateral agreement. The fact that a promissory note was signed on Sunday has no legal bearing on an agreement growing out of and relating to said note, but wholly collateral thereto.

Hirtz v Koppes, 212-536; 234 NW 854

Compensation—unallowable defense. In an action by a broker for a commission, it is no defense that the plaintiff had an arrangement with another broker for the sharing of the commission in return for services rendered in effecting a sale for defendant.

Lowery Co. v Lamp, 200-853; 205 NW 538

Illegal transaction. Principle reaffirmed that in an action on a fraudulent contract, as to which both parties are in pari delicto, the court will refuse relief to either party.

Schmidt v Twedt, 219-128; 257 NW 325

Teachers—issue as to terms of contract. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a contract had been entered into with a teacher.

Krutsinger v Township of Liberty, 219-291; 257 NW 797

Contract price (?) or quantum meruit (?). A plaintiff who pleads that he partially performed an express contract for services and thereupon abandoned the work because of a breach of the contract by defendant must not be permitted to recover the contract price for the work actually performed unless he establishes his pleaded justifiable abandonment; and if he fails to establish justifiable abandonment, he may not recover on the basis of a quantum meruit which does not exceed the contract price when he neither pleads nor proves a quantum meruit.

Goben v Paving Co., 208-1113; 224 NW 785

Form of remedy—quantum meruit for services covered by express contract. Plaintiff may not recover on quantum meruit for services which are inseparably connected with, and a part of, services which plaintiff has contracted to perform for an agreed compensation.

Gregerson Bros. v Cherry Co., 210-538; 231 NW 350

Oral express contract—compensation—evidence of reasonable value. On the issue whether parties to an express oral contract for services agreed on a certain stated compensation, evidence of the fair, reasonable, and usual compensation for such services is admissible.

Goben v Akin, 208-1354; 227 NW 400

Voluntary gratuitous services—recovery for. Services, tho valuable and continued for years, when voluntarily rendered as a gratuity, and accepted as such, furnish no basis for a later action in quantum meruit.

Equitable v Crosley, 221-1129; 265 NW 137

Validity of assent—confidential relations. No presumption of confidential relations arises from the mere fact that the parties are closely related by blood.

Krcmar v Krcmar, 202-1166; 211 NW 699

Contract for equality in stock holdings—violation—injunction. Equity will, by injunction and other proper orders, protect a stockholder of a corporation from a violation of his contract with another stockholder under which equality of stockholdings of the two stockholders was clearly intended.

Holsinger v Herring, 207-1218; 224 NW 766

Transaction with deceased—coplaintiffs. When plaintiff and an intervening plaintiff are each claiming an undivided one-third interest in land, and one is incompetent to testify to a personal transaction with a deceased and thereby establish his contract, he is equally incompetent to testify to said personal transaction and thereby establish the contract for his coplaintiff.

Wagner v Wagner, 208-1004; 224 NW 583

Breach of patent license contract. When a patent licensee ceased to pay royalties due the licensor, the licensor was not limited to an action against the licensee as a patent infringer, but could elect to treat the contract as still in force and bring an action to collect royalties.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 285 NW 131

Violation in re publication of newspaper. An agreement not to engage in the publication or circulation of a "newspaper" in a named locality is violated by the publication and circulation in said locality, without charge, of a so-called "Shopper's Guide" of eight pages arranged in the form of an ordinary newspaper, and containing much advertisement, some current news, serial stories, editorial comment, and newspaper clippings.

Henry & Sons v Rhinesmith, 219-1088; 260 NW 9

Injunction—subjects of protection and relief—inducing breach of contract. Injunction will lie to prevent a third party from inducing parties to a contract to violate it.

Henry & Sons v Rhinesmith, 219-1088; 260 NW 9

Conditions precedent—inconsistent theories of recovery. When a plaintiff can, as a matter of law, avail himself of a contract provision only on the supported theory that defendant has performed the contract, it is baldly manifest that plaintiff cannot recover under said provision when his entire action rests on the asserted theory that defendant has not performed the contract.

Andrew v American Tr. Co., 219-921; 258 NW 911

Counterclaim—nullification. Proof that plaintiff substantially performed part of a contract for services and justifiably abandoned the performance of the remaining part necessarily precludes recovery by the defendant on his counterclaim for damages, (1) for negligent performance of the part performed, and (2) for failure to complete the work. Instructions held properly to present the issues.

Goben v Paving Co., 218-829; 252 NW 262

Redundant matter. In an action for breach of a written contract to sell all fine coal screenings "produced" during a stated time, a pleading that the parties mutually understood that the contract required the delivery of all fine screenings "produced * * * during the term of said contract" is redundant and properly stricken on motion.

Iowa Co. v Coal Co., 204-202; 215 NW 229

Irrelevant and immaterial matter. In an action for breach of a written contract to sell all fine coal screenings "produced" during a stated time, a pleading that the parties mutually understood that the contract required the seller "to screen all the coal mined during the term" of the contract, is irrelevant and immaterial, and properly stricken on motion, (1) even tho the contract specifies what shall be deemed "screenings", and (2) even tho such pleading is sought to be aided by a plea of estoppel and custom.

Iowa Co. v Coal Co., 204-202; 215 NW 229

Motion picture booking as severable contract. A motion picture exhibitor who books a series of films under contract, a part of which contract specified that he should have a certain film to exhibit on a certain date, is not entitled to breach the entire contract, when distributor fails to provide this certain film on the specified date, but exhibitor must recoup by way of damages, if any.

Paramount Pictures v Maxon, 226-308; 284 NW 119

Foreign corporation's contract to install pipe organ—interstate commerce. In an action on contract by a Connecticut corporation doing business in New Jersey to build, deliver, and install a pipe organ in a theater in Iowa, held, the transaction was in "interstate commerce", and therefore local statutes governing foreign corporations doing business within this state were inapplicable.

Palmer v Aeolian Co., 46 F 2d, 746

(b) SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE GENERALLY

Discussion. See 1 ILB 53—Specific performance for the purchase price; 11 ILR 69—Contract terminable by plaintiff; 25 ILR 766—Extended supervision by the court

Contracts enforceable—conditions precedent. Principle reaffirmed that a contract may not be specifically enforced (1) unless the execution is established by very clear and definite proof, and (2) unless the terms of the contract as established are equally clear and definite.

Uncertainty in terms. Specific performance cannot be decreed of a contract which is uncertain in its terms.

Fenton v Clifton, 204-933; 216 NW 53

Rescission as alternative remedy. Rescission will not be granted as a matter of course on denial of specific performance.

Davis v Eaton, 211-837; 234 NW 252

Contracts performable—fraud. A fraudulently obtained contract will not be specifically enforced, but will, on proper plea and proof, be canceled.

Boyle v Geling, 206-1208; 218 NW 506

Nature and form—legal relief. The plaintiff in equity prays for a decree for the specific performance by defendant of the latter's written contract to repurchase corporate shares of stock sold to plaintiff, yet, if plaintiff's alternate prayer be sufficiently broad, the court may, on supporting evidence, enter such a judgment in favor of plaintiff as would be his legal due were his action strictly at law. And, in such case, it is manifestly wholly aside the mark for defendant to contend that specific performance was unallowable (1) because the life of the corporation in question had expired, (2) because of the nature of the property involved, and (3) because the contract in question was nonmutual.

Patterson v Bingham, 222-107; 268 NW 30

Contract of sale—right to conveyance. The purchaser of real estate who has fully complied with the contract is entitled to specific performance, in the absence of some fact or condition which renders such decree inequitable.

May v Haynie, 212-66; 236 NW 98

Probate claimant for services—incompetency as witness. In probate action to establish a claim against an estate based on an express contract for services rendered to decedent, claimant could not testify as to existence of contract.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Action against estate—evidence—sufficiency. The rule of law, that he who asks the specific performance of a contract must establish said contract by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, is pre-eminently and with added force applicable to prayers for the specific performance of oral contracts against the estates of deceased persons. Alleged contract to convey property, in return for privilege of naming a child, held unproven.

Baker v Fowler, 215-1157; 247 NW 676

Wills—contract to devise or bequeath—irrevocability of will. A will is irrevocable when executed in compliance with a contract which is (1) in writing, and (2) contains mutual promises then and there executed by the parties; nor is such a will rendered revocable by the death of the beneficiary therein prior to the death of the testator.

Powell v McBlain, 222-799; 269 NW 883

Wills—contract to devise or bequeath—disposal during lifetime—validity. A contract that one will make a will and devise and bequeath to the promisee "all property which I may own at the time of my death" and the due execution of a will of the same scope, leaves the promisor (testator) free to use, control and dispose of his property in his lifetime, and nonfraudulent transfers and conveyances by him before his death are valid.

Powell v McBlain, 222-799; 269 NW 883

Contracts for estate in return for services. An oral executed contract to the effect that, in return for personal services, the party shall, on the death of the other party to the contract, have the entire personal and real estate of such other party, is specifically enforceable, provided that the evidence is clear and convincing. Evidence held insufficient.

Jordan v Doty, 200-1047; 205 NW 964

Contract to will—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held wholly insufficient to establish the genuineness of an alleged written contract to will property.

Shisler v Catholic Cem. Impr. Assn., 207-306; 222 NW 838

Oral contract to devise. An alleged oral contract between a childless couple and a neighbor, that such couple would leave all their property to the neighbor's minor son when he became of age, if he would live with them until that time, must be established by clear, satisfactory and convincing evidence, and when so established, along with proof of compliance by the son, entitles the son to specific performance of the contract.

Ford v Young, 225-956; 282 NW 324

Oral contract to will property. Where the plaintiff had done work for a woman who was ill, and had been promised that she would give him certain property in her will in return for the services, and plaintiff seeks specific performance of the agreement, claiming as consideration his oral agreement not to file a claim against the estate for the services until after such claim had been barred by the statute of limitations, such oral agreement was only the manner adopted for extinguishing the claim for the past services and the consideration for the oral agreement was the cancellation of the claim for the services and the discharge and compromise of the obligation which had accrued.

Fairall v Arnold, 226-977; 285 NW 664

Contract not to change will—not guaranty of son's debt. A son being indebted to a bank in the sum of $10,000, the father entered into a contract with the bank, that he would not alter his will wherein said son was bequeathed that sum, in consideration of which the bank would not press payment while the father lived. Held that such contract was not an absolute guarantee that the son was to have $10,000 from his father's estate regardless of its condition at the father's death, nor an undertaking that would nullify other provisions of the will.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Mutual wills enforced as contract. Clear and satisfactory evidence that husband and wife entered into a mutual contract, and in accordance therewith executed mutual and reciprocal wills providing for the disposition of all their property to each other and to certain named beneficiaries upon the death of survivor, entitles beneficiaries to specific performance thereof and to restrain probating of another will, executed by husband after the wife's death, making provision contrary thereto.

Child v Smith, 225-1205; 282 NW 316

Unconscionable fraud-induced contract. An inequitable and unconscionable contract, obtained by fraudulent representations, will not be specifically enforced.

Yarcho v Dawson, 211-248; 233 NW 21

Contract procured by misrepresentation. Where purchaser of grain elevator falsely represented to vendor that another person would furnish necessary financial assistance to perform the contract, and vendor relied thereon, held, purchaser was not entitled to specific performance of the contract.

Dunkelbarger v Brasted, (NOR); 212 NW 676

Writing repudiated before fully signed. Specific performance of a contract of purchase of real estate will not be decreed when the purchaser, prior to the actual signing of the contract by the actual title holder, rejected the title except on a condition which the said owner never complied with after he did sign the writing.

Jones v Anderson, 213-788; 239 NW 522

Waiver of time element—effect. When the vendee in a contract of sale of real estate waives the time element for the performance of the contract, he, in legal effect, arms the vendor with right to perform within a reasonable time, and to enforce specific performance if vendee then refuses to perform.

Andrew v Miller, 216-1378; 250 NW 711

Contract to repurchase note and mortgage. A written contract by the seller of a note and mortgage to repurchase the same in case the mortgage is foreclosed is specifically enforceable.

Hawkeye Ins. v Cent. Trust, 210-284; 227 NW 637

Reconveyance of property—estoppel. The fractional owner of property who quit-claims his interest to his co-owner in order to enable the co-owner to mortgage the entire property for his own purpose, and who receives from the co-owner an agreement to reconvey, free of incumbrance, within a named time or to pay a named sum, may not, after the mortgage is executed, and after the mortgagee has in good faith agreed to take over the property in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, obtain specific performance of the agreement to reconvey, even tho the mortgagee, before the deal was fully closed, had notice of the agreement to reconvey.

Clarkson v Bank, 218-326; 253 NW 25

Nondelivery of abstract company records—plaintiff's burden. Plaintiff had burden of proving defendant did not deliver all of property of abstract company as provided in contract whereby assets of abstract company were to be turned over to plaintiff, in that all "take-offs" were not delivered.

Mills Co. v Otis, (NOR); 228 NW 47

Trade unions—unilateral contract as to wage scale—enforcement. An action to enjoin the violation of a so-called wage agreement will not lie when the writing is wholly unilateral,—when it purports to impose on the defendant an obligation to pay a certain scale of wages but imposes no obligation whatever on the other party or parties to the writing.

Wilson v Coal Co., 215-855; 246 NW 753

Transfer of liability—receivership—effect. An action for specific performance is not abated by the subsequent appointment of a receiver for the defendant.

Hawkeye Ins. v Cent. Trust, 210-284; 227 NW 637

Sales contract—court approval as condition. A definite written offer by the superintendent of banking of this state to sell to a foreign administrator Iowa real estate, belonging to a bank receivership, and the written acceptance of the offer, by said foreign administrator, may constitute a valid and specifically enforceable contract tho the offer and the acceptance be both conditioned on the approval of the respective state courts.

Bates v Bank, 223-385; 272 NW 412

Composition—oral agreement enforceable—time limit. An oral agreement between a debtor and his creditors under which the creditors agree to accept a composition amounting to less than their demands, is enforceable in equity; and if no time for performance be agreed on, the law will imply a reasonable time. Evidence reviewed and held to establish such agreement, and that the debtor's offer of performance was within a reasonable time.

Bailey v Life Co., 221-1195; 268 NW 173

Construction and operation—time as essence of contract. Time will not, in equity, be deemed of the essence of a contract when the parties thereto have neither expressly so stipulated, nor, by their conduct, revealed that such was their understanding of the contract. So held as to the time of performance of a compromise settlement of mortgage indebtedness.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Hanlon, 223-440; 273 NW 114

Cashing conditional down payment check—claim of mistake. In an action for specific performance of a land purchase contract, the act of an agent having power to contract in allowing a down payment check to be cashed when it bears a notation, of which he is aware, that it is not to be cashed until and unless the contract is accepted, furnishes support for a finding in equity that the contract was accepted, even tho the agent later claims that the check was cashed by mistake.

Hotz v Assur. Soc., 224-552; 276 NW 413

Irretrievably abandoned contract. An irretrievably abandoned contract necessarily cannot be specifically enforced. So held where the heirs of an estate sought specific performance of an alleged contract by the donee of a deceased donor to reconvey the gift to the donor's estate and to take the share of a general heir, and where it developed that said heirs had, regardless of said alleged contract, fully settled the estate among themselves to the exclusion of the said donee.

McGaffin y Helmts, 210-108; 230 NW 532

Fatal indefiniteness. A written contract for the sale of real estate is not specifically enforceable when it is silent as to (1) the date of final settlement, (2) when possession is to be given, and (3) what kind of conveyance shall be executed.

Donovan v Murphy, 203-214; 212 NW 466

Divorce settlement stipulation—unenforceable if uncertain. Where a divorce stipulation of settlement leaves for future decision certain matters of education of the children, there is such uncertainty and ambiguity and lack of definiteness, that specific performance cannot be granted.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

Unconscionable contract. Equity will not decree the specific performance of a contract of exchange under which plaintiff would obtain defendant's property for nothing.

Pickett v Comstock, 209-968; 229 NW 249

Proceedings and relief—general inequitable-ness—nonmutuality—innocent third parties. A decree awarding specific performance cannot be justified (1) when the party awarded such performance has neither tendered performance nor specifically shown his ability to perform, (2) when the decree contains mandates on parties over whom the court has no jurisdiction, (3) when the decree awards such performance both in favor of and against parties who are not and never have been parties to the contract in question, and (4) when the decree compels parties who are strangers to the contract in question to change their position to their possible financial loss.

Anders v Crown, 210-469; 229 NW 744

Nature and grounds of remedy—enforcing partial performance. When a vendor has contracted to convey an entire property, but owns only a fractional part thereof, the purchaser who shows that he is entitled to specific performance may elect to take and may enforce specific performance as to the part which the vendor is able to convey; and in such case, the purchaser will be entitled to a pro tanto abatement of the purchase price.

Anderson v Weirsmith, 209-714; 229 NW 199

Discretion of court—trustee in bankruptcy. Principle reaffirmed that whether specific performance shall be granted rests largely in the discretion of the court. Record held to justify specific performance, on the prayer of a trustee in bankruptcy.

Wilson v Holub, 202-549; 210 NW 593; 58 ALR 646

Improvident contract. Equity cannot relieve a person of the duty to perform his contract simply because the contract turns out to be ill-advised, unprofitable, or disadvantageous.

Carson v Mikel, 205-657; 216 NW 60

Failure of proof—retention of suit to award damages. When plaintiff in an action for specific performance has quite successfully shown that he is not entitled to any equitable relief, equity will not retain the suit in order to award damages.

Fisher v Bank, 206-1105; 221 NW 816

Specific performance action—amendment asking damages. Where a plaintiff, after starting a specific performance action to require a federal land bank to complete a loan as agreed, loses the land by foreclosure because the money from the agreed loan is not available to pay off the outstanding mortgage—thereby damaging the plaintiff-landowner by the loss of his equity in the land—an amendment to the specific performance petition changing the relief sought and seeking damages ascertainable after institution of the original suit does not set up a new cause of action.

Johnston v Bank, 226-496; 284 NW 393

Repurchase of securities. Specific performance of a contract to repurchase securities or to exchange them for other securities will not be ordered on a showing which tacitly concedes that an action at law for damages would be full, complete, adequate, and speedy.

Fisher v Bank, 206-1105; 221 NW 816

Proceedings and relief—damages in lieu of specific performance. A party who has failed to establish his right to specific performance may not complain that the court of equity refused to allow damages in lieu of specific performance and relegated him to an action at law as to such damages.

Dunlop v Wever, 209-590; 228 NW 562

Moot case—dismissal. An appeal by plaintiff-appellant from an order dismissing his action for specific performance will be dismissed on motion when it is made to appear that since the ruling in the trial court the defendant-appellee has specifically performed, and that such performance has been accepted by appellant. The court will not retain the appeal for the purpose of determining costs.

Fish v Sioux City, 210-862; 232 NW 118

Defensive matter — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held insufficient to show such fraud, inadequacy of consideration, or undue hardship as would justify a refusal of a prayer for specific performance.

Anderson v Weirsmith, 209-714; 229 NW 199

XI PARTICULAR CONTRACTS

(a) IN GENERAL

Breach of contract not to engage in business. In an action to recover damages consequent on the breach by defendant of a contract not to engage for a named time in a named business in a named place, a judgment is sustained by competent and adequate evidence as to the value of plaintiff's business immediately prior to the said breach by defendant and a like showing of the effect which said breach of contract had on such value.

Eyerly v Smith, 210-1056; 231 NW 383

Surface waters—natural flow—contract to change. Adjoining land owners, as between themselves, may validly contract for ditches and dikes which will free the servient estate from the burden of natural drainage, and the right, if not abandoned, to have such ditches and dikes maintained will pass to subsequent owners of the land. But he who alleges such contract must establish the same by clear and satisfactory evidence.

Young v Scott, 216-1253; 250 NW 484

Improvements — assessments. The assessment procedure to cover the cost of remodeling a public drainage improvement is controlled by the statute in effect when the contract is let.

Mayne v Board, 208-987; 223 NW 904; 225 NW 953

Pipe-line right of way—ambiguity as to compensation. Where landowner made written agreement giving pipe-line company a right of way, and where receipt, executed simultaneously with the agreement, aided by extrinsic oral proof, showed that he actually received five dollars per rod for the first line put in, held, landowner was entitled to judgment compensating him at same rate for installation of a second pipe-line under the agreement, which provided that "additional lines shall be laid for a consideration the same as for the first", despite the fact that such agreement also provided for a compensation of only fifty cents per rod.

Vorthmann v Pipe Line Co., 228- ; 289 NW 746

Bank night — consideration for unilateral contract. Where the promoter of a motion picture bank night drawing voluntarily makes certain requirements to qualify for the prize which is promised, he does not merely extend an offer to make a gift, but a unilateral contract is created in which the promoter determines the adequacy of the consideration for his promise, and when a person is induced to accept the promise and perform the specified act which was bargained for, it does not matter how insignificant the benefit of the performance may apparently be to the promoter, the promise can be enforced by the winner of the drawing.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

(b) ESCROWS

Discussion. See 14 ILR 461—Power of recall

Wrongful delivery of deed—effect. Principle recognized that no title passes where the escrow holder of a deed of conveyance delivers the deed to the grantee without performance of the conditions upon which it was to be delivered.

Lindberg v Younggren et al., 209-613; 228 NW 574

Delivery of deed as gift. The unconditional delivery, as a gift, of a duly executed and acknowledged deed of conveyance, by the compos mentis grantor therein, and without fraud, to a third party with explicit direction, both orally and in writing, to said party, to hold said deed for the grantee, and to record the same immediately upon the death of the grantor, constitutes an irrevocable delivery to said grantee; and a priori, when, in addition to the foregoing, it affirmatively appears from the circumstances of the transaction that the

XI PARTICULAR CONTRACTS—cont.

(b) ESCROWS—concluded

grantor was intending to pass title to the grantee.

Keating v Augustine, 213-1336; 241 NW 429

Stock—assignment without delivery of certificate. A written assignment by the owner of corporate shares of stock of all his right, title and interest therein conveys good title, (1) even tho the owner places the assignment in escrow and causes it, together with the stock certificate, to be delivered to the assignee after his death, and (2) even tho the assignor, prior to his death, pledges the said stock certificate as security for a personal loan, which his estate later paid.

Leedham v Leedham, 218-767; 254 NW 61

Liability of escrow holder. The holder of funds in escrow becomes personally liable for the fund when he makes application thereof contrary to or in violation of the escrow agreement.

Stevens v Eggerichs, 219-479; 257 NW 775

Delivery to trustee—no reservation of right to recall. Where deed is delivered by grantor to a third party with instructions to deliver it to the grantee or record the same upon the death of the grantor, with no reservations of a right to recall the same during the lifetime of the grantor, there is sufficient delivery.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Authority of depository—assessment on corporate stock. The holder in escrow of corporate stock has no implied authority to pay an assessment on said stock.

Harris v Bills, 203-1034; 213 NW 929

Special deposit as part of real estate deal. A cash deposit in a bank, understood by all parties, including the bank, to be made for the purpose of paying a vendor for land sold, and which, with accompanying papers, was held in escrow pending completion of title, must be deemed a special deposit and entitled to preferential payment on the insolvency of the bank, even tho a certificate of deposit, payable to the vendor, was issued by the bank and retained among the papers evidencing the deal.

Gillett v Bank, 219-497; 258 NW 99

Contract pending appeal. Where, pending an appeal which involved the title to land, the rival claimants under a landlord's lien and under a chattel mortgage on the crop entered into an agreement for the harvesting and sale of the crop and the holding of the proceeds until the appeal was decided, held that the contract evidently contemplated that the final holding on appeal would settle the right of one or the other of the parties to the controversy without further litigation.

Farber v Andrew, 208-964; 225 NW 850

(c) OPTIONS

Discussion. See 3 ILB 173—Mutuality in option contracts

Option distinguished from executory contract. An obligation on the part of the owner of real estate to sell, and of another party to buy, are all-essential elements of an executory contract of purchase of said land. Writing reviewed and held to constitute a mere option to buy which became a nullity on failure of optionee to exercise the option.

Burmeister v Council Bluffs Co., 222-66; 268 NW 188

Sale (?) or option (?). A writing wherein the vendor agrees to sell and convey, and the vendee agrees to buy, on stated terms and conditions, and under which the vendee takes possession, is a contract of sale, and not an option to buy.

Wilson v Holub, 202-549; 210 NW 593; 58 ALR 646

Personal liability (?) or option (?). Contract construed, and in the light of the conduct of the parties, held to impose a personal obligation, and not to constitute a mere option.

Spencer v Likes, 214-1066; 241 NW 493

Option to buy in lease. An option reserved in an ordinary lease of real estate for the purchase of the described property by the lessee at a fixed price, and on specified time and methods of payment (among which was an agreement that the rent paid should be credited on the purchase price), is specifically enforceable, even tho no provision is embodied therein as to (1) formal possession or (2) title or (3) conveyance, and even tho the parties thereto unnecessarily reserved the right generally to enter into additional agreements relative to such option.

Carter v Bair, 201-788; 208 NW 283

Strip mining coal—back-filling required. A holder of a strip mine coal lease who enters upon and strips coal from land, upon which land a pipe line company holds an easement, knowing that by so mining violates his lease, must back-fill the land when the easement holder exercises his option to buy; and upon his failure to make the back-fill, a judgment against the coal lessee for the cost thereof is proper.

Penn v Pipe Line Co., 225-680; 281 NW 194

Rescission by optionee—nonrecovery. The assignee of an option contract for the purchase of land may not, upon rescinding, recover of the original optionor (with whom he has no contract) the amount paid for the option.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

Rescission—recovery for betterments. The assignee of an option contract for the purchase of land may, upon rescission, recover of his assignor the value of betterments which he—the assignee—has necessarily been compelled to place on the land.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

Rescission — use and occupancy — measure. When the assignee of an option contract for the purchase of land rescinds after he has been put in possession, his liability for the use and occupancy of the land is measured by the reasonable value thereof, and not by the provisions of the rescinded contract.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

Rescission by assignee—effect. The assignee of an option contract does not, by giving notice that he rescinds the contract between the original optionor and optionee, destroy the rights of the original optionee under the contract. Especially is such notice inconsequential when the record shows that the original option had no value.

Bredensteiner v Oviatt, 202-993; 210 NW 133

(d) EMPLOYMENT CONTRACTS

Discussion. See 17 ILR 388—Negative covenants enforced

Employer-employee relation—test. The test of the relationship between employer and employee is the right of the employer to exercise control of the details and method of performing the work.

State v Ritholz, 226-70; 283 NW 268

Master and servant—the relation—when question of law. When the relationship of parties is fixed by a written contract, the question whether they occupy the relation of master and servant (employer and employee) is one of law to be determined by the court and not one of fact to be determined by the jury.

Page v Constr. Co., 215-1388; 245 NW 208

Proposal or offer—implied acceptance. One who is, in writing, offered work at a specified price and proceeds to perform the work without further negotiation necessarily agrees to do the work for the offered compensation.

Commercial Bank v Broadhead, 212-688; 235 NW 299

Receiver—federal appointment—effect on state courts. The mere pendency of federal receivership proceedings over a party does not necessarily oust the jurisdiction of the state courts over the party and over his property, and such pendency may not be allowed as a defense to an employment contract.

Lippke v Milling Co., 215-134; 244 NW 845

Attorney and client—summary proceedings—findings conclusive. In a summary proceeding by a client against his attorney, the finding by the trial court on conflicting testimony is conclusive on the appellate court.

Norman v Bennett, 216-181; 246 NW 378

Employee earning bonus—effect. Evidence held to sustain a verdict that a bonus under an employment contract had been fully earned before the execution of a subsequent contract which supplanted the former contract.

Williams v Oil Corp., 216-821; 247 NW 817

Bonus at end of year—question of fraud. Oral contract of employment at fixed hourly rate and providing for bonus at end of year held not within statute of frauds.

Meredith v Youngstrom Co., (NOR); 205 NW 749

Partnership changes—performance with new entity—waiver. A physician as a party to a contract of employment with a medical clinic partnership is not in a position to question its validity on the ground that there had been a change in the members of the partnership and consequently no contract with the new entity, when his full performance of and under the contract had been with the new entity, including an extension of the contract.

Larsen v Burroughs, 224-740; 277 NW 463

Oral wage agreement—erroneous writing—effect of employee's conduct. An oral wage scale agreement applicable to the first few weeks of employment, incorrectly reduced to writing by employer's agent, but correctly followed in paying wages which was not challenged by employee during the several years he continued in this employment, justifies a reformation of the writing to conform to the oral agreement.

Koch v Abramson, 223-1356; 275 NW 58

Teachers—contract—oral extension—validity. An oral extension of time for teaching under a teacher's contract (under which no services were rendered) cannot be recognized.

Krutsinger v Township of Liberty, 219-291; 257 NW 797

Estates—payment for services. Where a deceased had taken his nephew, reared him, and promised to pay him for working on decedent's farm, testimony as to statements made by the deceased in conversations where-in deceased had said the boy was to be paid from his estate when he died, may be received from the wife of deceased, the wife of claimant, and the claimant himself, provided they took no part in the conversations.

Gardner v Marquis, 224-458; 275 NW 493

Evidence of express contract for services—jury question. In probate action to establish claim against estate based on express contract; where evidence that claimant acted as housekeeper, assisted with clerical work, and performed other duties about the farm for decedent, pursuant to his agreement to pay her a small amount sufficient to cover the cost of her clothing and other personal expenses, and in addition thereto to compensate her out of his estate at his decease in such amount as would be in excess of any amount she could earn teaching school, a jury question was presented as to the existence of an enforceable contract and as to its nature.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Services rendered to decedent—evidence of agreement admissible—jury question. In probate action where a claimant seeks to recover for services rendered to decedent under an express contract, the performance of such services must have been induced by a proposal and must have been in accordance therewith. Testimony by a witness to a conversation with decedent, who stated that he intended to see that claimant was properly cared for, that he would give her spending money (the little she would need), and at the end of his life he would leave her a home, was admissible and proper evidence for the jury to consider on question of whether or not there was any such arrangement or agreement. What the parties agreed to must be determined by the jury.

In re McKeon, 227-1050; 289 NW 915

Estates—partnership checks not showing payment. In proving a claim against an estate, by showing an oral contract to pay for services extending over a period of many years, neither the lapse of time nor checks payable to claimant drawn by decedent during the fourteen years just preceding his death, when a partnership existed between them for those years, raises a presumption of payment in view of decedent's admission of the debt shortly before his death.

Gardner v Marquis, 224-458; 275 NW 493

Services to be paid for "on or before" death. An oral contract to pay for services, payable "on or before" the death of the promisor, matures at his death and therefore is not barred by the statute of limitations, even though the claim was running for over 20 years.

Gardner v Marquis, 224-458; 275 NW 493

Employment of acrobats—assignment to booking agency—nonnovation. Where a broadcasting company assigned to a booking agency an oral contract for employment of an acrobatic team, and such agency subsequently became the booker of the acrobats under a written contract, the company was not relieved of liability under the employment contract on the ground of "novation", because there was no evidence that all parties consented to a substitution of the agency for the company.

Wade v Central Broadcasting Co., 227-422; 288 NW 439

Discharging acrobatic team. In acrobatic team's action for breach of contract of employment for two bookings, evidence, that plaintiffs were ready to perform and that employer replaced them in one of the engagements and told them they would not be used in the other, justified finding that plaintiffs were discharged.

Wade v Central Broadcasting Co., 227-422; 288 NW 439

Discharge of employer's liability—effect on third party wrongdoer. Where an injury, which is mandatorily compensable under the workmen's compensation act, is received by an employee in consequence of the actionable negligence of the operator of an automobile owned by, and operated with the consent of, the employer, the fact that the employer fully discharges his statutory liability to the employee does not ipso facto discharge the legal liability of the said negligent operator to said employee.

McGraw v Seigel, 221-127; 263 NW 553; 106 ALR 1035

Unilateral contract as to wage scale—enforcement. An action to enjoin the violation of a so-called wage agreement will not lie when the writing is wholly unilateral—when it purports to impose on the defendant an obligation to pay a certain scale of wages but imposes no obligation whatever on the other party or parties to the writing.

Wilson v Airline Co., 215-855; 246 NW 753

Contingent attorney fee—validity of contract. A contract between an attorney and a client fixing the contingent compensation of the attorney at one-third of the amount recovered, entered into at a time when the extent of the litigation was quite problematical, is not rendered unenforceable because ultimately the services necessary to effect a recovery were quite small. Nor is such a contract champertous.

State v Cas. Co., 212-1052; 237 NW 360

Compensation liability—contract in avoidance—effect. A contract must be wholly rejected insofar as it appears to be a mere device resorted to by the employer in order to relieve himself of liability under the workmen's compensation act.

Mallinger v Oil Co., 211-847; 234 NW 254

Compensation—use of auto. Evidence reviewed and held wholly insufficient to establish a pleaded modification of a contract relative to the compensation of an agent for his services and for the use of his automobile in performing said services.

Hueston v Pointer Co., 222-630; 269 NW 754

Devoting full time—question for jury. In action to recover for services in securing contract for construction of building, question of whether plaintiff breached his contract by failing to devote full time to developing and financing the project was for the jury.

Cox v Fleisher Const. Co., (NOR); 213 NW 442

Overdrawn moneys — counterclaim — pleadings. Where defendant employee's answer, in action by employer to recover overdrawn moneys sets up counterclaim for moneys due him under oral employment contract the lower court properly denied the counterclaim when the contract was not established as pleaded.

Economy Hog Co. v Honett, 222-894; 270 NW 842

Deducting employee's debt to employer. Where a defendant-employer in paying his employee deducted an amount which the employee was owing the employer, and, when sued, based his right so to do (1) on an oral contract that he might so deduct, and (2) on his right to so deduct irrespective of such oral contract, the court prejudicially errs, in its instructions, in making the right to deduct dependent on proof of the oral contract.

Jorgensen v Cocklin, 219-1103; 260 NW 6

Breach—acts constituting. An employee who is employed for a definite time to assist in or to supervise the sale of corporate securities may treat his contract of employment as breached when the master discontinues the sale of the securities and offers him employment in peddling merchandise from house to house.

Breen v Power Co., 207-1161; 224 NW 562

Contract employing physician—future practice restraint unaffected by indefinite employment extension. When being employed by a medical clinic in a locality where he is not acquainted, a contract by a physician agreeing that at the termination thereof he will not practice his profession for ten years within a certain locality is not invalidated by reason of an indefinite extension of the employment period mutually acted upon by all parties, and injunctive relief was properly granted to employer.

Larsen v Burroughs, 224-740; 277 NW 463

Contract restraining competition. An employment contract between two physicians, which after setting forth several requirements of the employee, further provides for "liquidated damages" in case the employee independently practices in the county within five years after termination of the employment, may be construed, not as a contract for liquidated damages, but as a penalty.

McMurray v Faust, 224-50; 276 NW 95

Contract restraining competition of profession—liquidated damages—nonbar. Injunction is a proper remedy to restrain one physician from practicing his profession contrary to the provisions of his contract not to engage in competitive practice in the same county for a specified period. A provision in the contract for "liquidated damages" will not bar injunctive relief.

McMurray v Faust, 224-50; 276 NW 95

Contract not to competitively engage in guarding property. Where a discharged employee of a company engaged in guarding business houses at night threatens to breach his contract prohibiting him from entering into competition therewith, a petition seeking injunctive relief against him and alleging these facts sets up a good cause of action for an injunction.

Sioux City Patrol v Mathwig, 224-748; 277 NW 457

Infringement and unfair competition—employee entering employ of rival. An employee may lawfully terminate his employment with his employer, and enter into the employment of a rival of his former employer, and advertise and circularize such fact, and no legal right of the former employer is violated so long as it appears that the employee furnishes to his new employer no list of the former employer's customers and that no confidential information acquired in the former employment is used in the latter.

Universal Corp. v Jacobson, 212-1088; 237 NW 436

Unfair competition — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to show that a party, in leaving an employment and entering into the same business in the same territory, took anything that could be deemed the property of his former employer.

Rosenstein v Smith, 218-1381; 257 NW 397

Performance or breach—waiver—evidence—sufficiency. A waiver is the voluntary and intentional relinquishment or abandonment of an existing legal right. He who relies thereon has the burden of establishing all elements thereof. Evidence involving the payment of renewal commissions on insurance policies reviewed and held insufficient to establish a waiver.

McPherrin v Assur. Co., 219-159; 257 NW 316

Breach—damages (?) or quantum meruit (?). An action for damages for breach of a contract of employment may be supported by evidence of the reasonable value of the services rendered, when the pleadings present such sum as the damages.

Westerfield v Oil Co., 208-912; 223 NW 894

Iowa employment contract—action—place of business. Action for damages under oral contract of employment made in Iowa is not governed by the place where the contract was entered into, but may be maintained in state where employer's business was "localized".

Severson v Hanford Air Lines, 105 F 2d, 622

Wage recovery dependent on reformation. In a law action for wages, allegedly due an employee under contract, where parties stipulate that the employee shall not recover such wages if the defendant prevails on his cross-petition for reformation, transferred to equity on motion, the employee may not thereafter deny the court's right to try the reformation issue and is bound by the decree if not contrary to the evidence.

(d) EMPLOYMENT CONTRACTS—continued

Koch v Abramson, 223-1356; 275 NW 58

Duplicate counts pleading quantum meruit and express contract. In an action for services, duplicate counts are proper, one pleading quantum meruit, and the other an express contract for definite compensation, and a refusal to compel plaintiff to elect between the two counts is not erroneous.

Halstead v Rohret, 212-837; 235 NW 293

Value of services—issues control. Issues control the relevancy, materiality and competency of evidence. Principle applied where it is held that evidence of the value of services is not admissible on the narrow issue whether an oral contract for services for $500 had been entered into.

McManus v Kucharo, 219-865; 259 NW 926

Oral contract—bonus—submission of issues. In action on oral contract of employment submission to jury of controlling issue of whether plaintiff is entitled to $10 weekly bonus is sufficient even tho the court did not literally and technically follow the pleadings.

Yaus v Shawmutt Egg Co., 204-426; 213 NW 230

Employment contract—duration—jury question not within statute of frauds. Whether an employer agreed to pay bonus on wages earned by employee for each year of employment, or only for year in which agreement was made, held for jury on conflicting evidence and under the facts and circumstances such agreement was not within the statute of frauds.

Meredith v Youngstrom Co., (NOR); 205 NW 749

Duration—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether a contract of employment had been entered into for a definite time.

Breen v Power Co., 207-1161; 224 NW 562

Employment of school janitor. When a school board each year considered hiring the janitor at a specified salary, the board proceedings invited a contract with the janitor, the acceptance being evidenced by performance on his part. The employment was for definite yearly periods, and the board proceedings being public records accessible to the janitor, he should have known that the employment was yearly, and he could not avoid the terms of the contract and claim an indefinite period of employment when by the exercise of reasonable diligence he could have known upon what he was agreeing.

Durst v Board, 228- ; 292 NW 73

Teachers—issue as to terms of contract. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a contract had been entered into with a teacher.

Krutsinger v Township of Liberty, 219-291; 257 NW 797

Injecting unpleaded issue into instructions. On the one duly joined issue whether plaintiff was orally employed to render services for defendant in a certain matter, the court commits reversible error by injecting into the instructions the unpleaded issue whether defendant knew that plaintiff was performing services for defendant and accepted the benefits of such services.

Graeser v Jones, 217-499; 251 NW 162

Similar but independent contracts. Parol evidence of a contract binding defendant to purchase and deliver to plaintiff a named number of corporate shares of stock in payment for services performed by plaintiff is independent of a subsequent written agreement binding plaintiff to buy of defendant the same number of shares of stock of the same company.

Cox v Constr. Co., 208-458; 223 NW 521

Value of services—harmless error—competent and incompetent evidence. It is not reversible error to permit to remain in the record on the issue of the quantum meruit of services testimony of what amount an expert witness would be willing to pay for such services, when the witness further testifies that said amount is the reasonable value of such services.

Olson v Shuler, 208-70; 221 NW 941

Services and compensation—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to support a finding that the salary received by plaintiff while she was in the employ of an individual was continued when she became an employee of a corporation of which her former individual employer was president.

Crawford v Finance Corp., 217-175; 251 NW 57

Unreasonable and unconscionable contract—evidence. On the issue whether a contract of employment was unreasonable and unconscionable, evidence of the salaries paid to former employees of the same corporation may be material.

Schulte v Ideal Co., 208-767; 226 NW 174

Breach—discharge of employee. The peremptory discharge without cause of an employee under a definite time contract is, of course, a breach of the contract.

Westerfield v Oil Co., 208-912; 223 NW 894

Teaching contract—modification by extrinsic matters. In an action at law by a teacher upon a written contract of employment, the rights of the parties are necessarily determinable by the actual terms of the contract, unmodified by extraneous matters or circumstances.

Miner v Sch. Dist., 212-973; 234 NW 817

School contract — termination on notice — validity. A provision in a public school contract authorizing either party to the contract to terminate it by giving written notice of such termination for a named number of days is not violative of or inconsistent with either §4229 or §4237, C., '27.

Miner v Sch. Dist., 212-973; 234 NW 817

Teacher's contract—termination on notice. A provision, in a public school contract, which authorizes the school district to terminate the contract on stated notice at any time and for any reason, is valid, and, if a termination is effected under such contract authorization and not under statutory authorization (§4237, C., '35), no appeal will lie to the county superintendent or, in turn, to the state superintendent. In other words, neither superintendent has jurisdiction to review such a discharge.

School Dist. v Samuelson, 222-1063; 270 NW 434

Sales contract — indefinite term — termination. The oral granting, on adequate consideration, by a manufacturer to another party of the exclusive right to sell a legal article in prescribed territory so long as there is a demand for the article, and so long as such other party desires to continue such sale, is, on acceptance, a valid contract until terminated by reasonable notice.

Atlas Co. v Huffman, 217-1217; 252 NW 133

Employment of soldier for definite time—effect. An honorably discharged soldier who is employed by the board of supervisors, under a written contract, for a definite period of time as janitor of the courthouse, does not, by serving said contract period of time, acquire a legal right, even tho his competency and conduct are unquestioned, to continue in said position in preference to another honorably discharged soldier of equal qualifications.

Sorenson v Andrews, 221-44; 264 NW 562

Cancellation—instructions. In action by ballplayer to recover for services under written contract which could be terminated by defendant at any time, an instruction that oral notice of termination given by any of the members of the defendant baseball club would cancel the contract was not prejudicial when in fact all members of the club were present and in complete accord at the meeting at which the contract was canceled.

Jacobs v Vander Wicken, (NQR); 218 NW 147

Foreign employer — adjudication on registered mail service. The Workmen's Compensation Act, in the absence of a statutory rejection thereof, becomes a part of a contract of employment which is performable by the employee wholly within this state, and entered into between a resident employee of this state and a foreign nonresident employer doing business in this state without a state permit; but in case the employee dies from an injury compensable under said act, the industrial commissioner acquires no jurisdiction to determine and adjudicate the compensation due on account of said death by simply sending, by registered mail, notices of said proceedings to said employer in said foreign state, tho, concededly, the addressee received said notices. An adjudication on such service does not constitute due process.

Elk River Co. v Funk, 222-1222; 271 NW 204; 110 ALR 1415

(e) BROKERS AND COMMISSION CONTRACTS GENERALLY

Petition—separate counts required. A plaintiff who pleads both quantum meruit and express contract in the same count should be compelled, on motion, to separate his cause of action into separate counts.

Donahoe v Gagen, 217-88; 250 NW 892

Compensation—insufficient proof. It is a far-fetched proposition that a broker employed to effect a sale of all the capital stock of a corporation has established his right to a commission by proof that he contacted a party in the effort to effect such sale but was unsuccessful, and that some two years later, without any further effort on his part, the party so contacted and said corporation effected a reorganization of the corporation on the basis of a stock issue entirely different than that formerly existing.

Jackley-Wiedman Co. v Washer Co., 220-486; 262 NW 97; 101 ALR 1216

Presence or absence of directions as to sale. Factors must comply with specific directions as to time of sale. In the absence of such directions, they must sell within a reasonable time.

Alley Co. v Cream. Co., 201-621; 207 NW 767

Contract to find purchaser—tentative offer—effect. The issue whether a broker found a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy the property of his principal is not affirmatively established by proof that the broker found one who made a tentative proposition to purchase, which was specifically dependent on a further investigation as to the legality and probable security of the property—an issue of bonds—which investigation the person making the offer never made.

MacVicar v Paving Corp., 201-355; 207 NW 378

Action for compensation—status as licensee —failure to allege—effect. The failure of a broker in his petition for the recovery of commission to allege his status as a duly licensed broker is quite harmless (1) when the petition is not attacked because of such omission, and (2) when the evidence, received without objection, clearly establishes such status.

Baehr-Shive Co. v Stoner-McCray, 221-1186; 268 NW 53

Action for compensation—quantum meruit—irrelevant testimony. In an action by a broker to recover commission on a basis of quantum meruit, evidence is properly rejected as to the compensation generally received by brokers when they work by the day, the actual evidence received fairly showing that the customary method of employment of brokers was on a commission basis.

Baehr-Shive Co. v Stoner-McCray, 221-1186; 268 NW 53

Refusal of employer to sell at price stated—not excused by resulting loss. One who contracted to pay a commission to a dealer for selling goods at a certain price could not excuse his breach of the contract by refusing to sell except at a higher price, at least as to orders for goods taken before the breach, on the ground that to fulfill the contract would cause him to operate his business at a loss.

Lee v Sundberg, 227-1375; 291 NW 146

Loss of commissions on sales—price raised after orders taken. Where a manufacturer contracted with a dealer who was to take orders for twine at a certain price and the manufacturer later refused to fill the orders taken except at a higher price, in an action by the dealer for loss of commissions, damages were sufficiently proven by evidence that the dealer had incurred expenses in taking the orders, and that only about 25 percent of the orders were accepted by customers because of the increased price, while normally 95 percent of the orders would have been accepted.

Lee v Sundberg, 227-1375; 291 NW 146

Duties and liabilities to principal—acting for parties adversely interested. A broker may act for adversely interested parties provided that they consent to such dual agency.

Loots v Knoke, 209-447; 228 NW 45

CHAPTER 421

TENDER OF PAYMENT AND PERFORMANCE

9443 Demand required.

Refusal—effect. An agreement to receive corporate stock in payment of wages is converted into a money demand by a failure to deliver the stock.

Tracey v Judy, 202-646; 210 NW 793

Contracts—performance—reasonable time to construct grotto. An individual constructing a grotto for a charitable organization under an agreement containing no time for completion has a reasonable time for performance.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Cashing conditional down-payment check—claim of mistake. In an action for specific performance of a land purchase contract, the act of an agent having power to contract in allowing a down-payment check to be cashed when it bears a notation, of which he is aware, that it is not to be cashed until and unless the contract is accepted, furnishes support for a finding in equity that the contract was accepted, even tho the agent later claims that the check was cashed by mistake.

Hotz v Assur. Soc., 224-552; 276 NW 413

Nonpayment of royalties not repudiation of patent license. A contract to pay royalties under a patent license was not repudiated by the mere refusal to make the royalty payments which were legally due.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 285 NW 131

Proof—deferred salary—later payments non-waiver. Waiver being an intentional relinquishment of a known right and provable only by clear, satisfactory, unambiguous evidence, where a corporation resolution deferring payment of certain delinquent salary accounts due corporate officers, did not of itself prevent payments thereon, fact of withdrawals thereafter from such salary accounts is not a waiver of such resolution.

Bankers Trust v Economy Coal, 224-36; 276 NW 16

Parol evidence to explain ambiguous contract. A written contract for storage of corn, which makes no provision as to when the seller is to exercise an option to sell nor as to when the storage is to be paid, does not contain the entire agreement entered into, and parol evidence is admissible on the question as to what was reasonable time to perform.

Andreas & Son v Hempy, 224-561; 276 NW 791

Waiver—definition—fact question. Waiver is the voluntary and intentional relinquishment of a known right and is a question of fact.

Jones v Des Moines, 225-1342; 283 NW 924

9444 Tender of labor or property.

Payment generally. See under §11209

Conditional tender. Principle reaffirmed that a tender is not good unless made unconditionally.

Schwab v Roberts, 220-958; 263 NW 19

Tender—sufficiency. On rescission of a contract of purchase of corporate shares of stock because of fraud which induced the purchase, an unconditional tender to the seller of the stock certificate is all-sufficient, even tho the certificate is being held as collateral security for the debt of the one who makes the rescission.

North Amer. Ins. v Holstrum, 208-722; 217 NW 239; 224 NW 492

Tax titles—paying taxes before attacking tax deed—valid tender sufficient. Statute requiring payment of taxes as a prerequisite to attacking a tax deed, §7290, does not preclude questioning the title by a person who repeatedly offers to do equity by tendering the whole of the taxes legally and rightfully due together with interest and penalties thereon.

Jordan v Beeson, 225-460; 280 NW 625

Mode and sufficiency. Evidence held to show a good tender of corporate shares of stock.

Calvert v Mason City Co., 219-963; 259 NW 452

Right to increase tender. Tho a tender of the amount due under a contract is slightly inadequate, the court, in an equitable action involving the contract, may very properly permit the purchaser to increase his tender to the required amount.

May v Haynie, 212-66; 236 NW 98

Tender of deeds before suit—nonnecessity. In an equity action for specific performance of a land contract, a vendor need not formally tender the deeds before starting suit, and when vendee specifically contracts to first pay the purchase price before getting the deed, the vendor need only get himself in readiness to perform.

Utterback v Stewart, 224-1135; 277 NW 735

Justifiable refusal. A servant who agrees to accept corporate stock in a contemplated corporation in payment of his wages is justified in refusing the stock at a time when, without his consent, the corporation has become heavily incumbered by mortgage.

Tracey v Judy, 202-646; 210 NW 793

Sale for delinquent taxes not carried forward—setting aside—insufficient tender. A tax sale for delinquent taxes not carried forward will not be set aside in equity nor the deed issuance restrained when the titleholder's offer to do equity by tendering such taxes as "constitute a valid lien" and "actually paid" by the purchaser is a disingenuous tender.

McClelland v Polk County, 225-177; 279 NW 423

9446 Effect of tender.

Payment generally. See under §11209

Sufficiency—effect—burden of proof. Tender will not discharge a debt, and is of no avail unless kept good, and the burden of proving affirmatively that it has been kept good is on the party relying thereon.

Hill v Rolfsema, 226-486; 284 NW 376

Specific performance of real estate sale contract—tender. In an action to recover rent a counterclaim for specific performance of a contract to sell the property was properly prepared when it contained allegations that the purchaser was at that time, and at all times had been, ready, willing, and able to perform, and had made a tender of performance which was refused, and a copy of the letter constituting such tender was attached to the counterclaim.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Resh, 226-780; 285 NW 192

9448 Offer in writing—effect.

Offer in pleadings. An offer by a litigant in an equitable pleading to pay whatever sums are legally necessary to effect a redemption constitutes a sufficient tender.

Fidelity Inv. v White, 208-519; 223 NW 884

Sufficiency in equity. In equity, it is sufficient to tender in the pleadings and at the trial, the restoration of the status quo.

Hoyt v Hampe, 206-206; 214 NW 718; 220 NW 45

Nonproduction of money. A litigant who admits his indebtedness and is able and willing to pay it, and who, in order to protect himself, equitably interpleads warring claimants to the fund, and therein tenders the sum to whomsoever it is adjudged to belong, may not be held liable for interest because he does not actually bring the money into court until after the issues are determined.

Kelly etc. v Bank, 217-725; 248 NW 9; 250 NW 171

Tender of conveyance—sufficiency. Tender of a deed is not a condition precedent to the beginning of an equitable action by a vendor to enforce a contract for the sale of land. A tender in the petition is all-sufficient.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

Specific performance. One who had agreed to obtain a loan to be used for the purchase of land did not make a sufficient showing that he was ready, willing, and able to perform the alleged contract to buy the land so as to entitle him to specific performance when it was never shown that he had the purchase money, when an attempted loan of the money was never completed, when there was no application on file for the loan at the time of trial, and when it was not shown that the loan would have been granted had the application been made.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Resh, 226-780; 285 NW 192

Tender—real estate contract. When the vendor had put it out of his power to perform a contract to sell realty by permitting a mortgage on the property to be foreclosed, it was not necessary for the purchaser to tender the unpaid part of the purchase price before commencing suit for the amounts paid.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Check as good tender. The tender of a valid, collectible check in payment of a debt is good when not objected to because not lawful money, but objected to on an untenable ground.

Schmith v Cas. Co., 216-936; 247 NW 655

Time of performance—relative rights of parties. The vendor in a contract specifically requiring the vendee to first pay before getting the deed, need only get himself in readiness to perform, and need make no tender until payment is made or offered by vendee, and the vendor is not in default until this is done.

Foft v Page, 215-387; 245 NW 312

9449 Nonacceptance of tender.

ANALYSIS

- I SUFFICIENCY AND NECESSITY OF TENDER
- II MAINTENANCE OF TENDER
- III EFFECT OF TENDER

Payment generally. See under §11209

I SUFFICIENCY AND NECESSITY OF TENDER

Conditional tender. Principle reaffirmed that a tender is not good unless made unconditionally.

Schwab v Roberts, 220-958; 263 NW 19

Rescission of promissory note—status quo. An offer by the maker of a promissory note, on rescission thereof, to return everything received by virtue of the note is a sufficient offer to put the holder in statu quo.

Larson v Bank, 202-333; 208 NW 726

Payment of dues and fines. When a lodge and the officers thereof are subject to contempt for failure to reinstate a member "upon the payment of all dues and fines", no basis for contempt proceedings is shown by testimony that a representative of the member attended a session of the lodge, made inquiry as to said member, discovered that the members present were hostile, and thereupon sat down without producing or offering to produce money for said dues and fines and without even giving notice that he was representing said member.

St. George's Soc. v Sawyer, 204-103; 214 NW 877

Contract for sale of land. A contract purchaser of land may rescind and recover the payment made by him when, at the contract time for performance, the vendor has no title, and in such case the purchaser need make no tender of performance by himself.

Dolliver v Elmer, 220-348; 260 NW 85

Real estate contract—vendor's inability to perform. When the vendor had put it out of his power to perform a contract to sell realty by permitting a mortgage on the property to be foreclosed, it was not necessary for the purchaser to tender the unpaid part of the purchase price before commencing suit for the amounts paid.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Nontender of abstract and deed. In an action against a defaulting vendee, to foreclose a contract of sale of real estate for matured and unpaid installments, no tender of abstract and deed is necessary as a condition precedent to maintaining the action, when the right to said abstract and deed has not yet matured under the contract.

Dimon v Wright, 206-693; 214 NW 673

Replevin under conditional sale. In an action of replevin based on a conditional sale contract which provides for possession by the vendor in case of condition broken, tender of payments already made is not a condition precedent to the institution of the action.

Schmoller Co. v Smith, 204-661; 215 NW 628

Payment of disputed claim accepted. When a town had contracted to pay a certain rate for furnishing street lighting services, and later a reduced rate was adopted, and there was a disagreement as to the rate to be paid on certain months, there was accord and satisfaction when the plaintiff accepted and cashed a warrant knowing that it was tendered in full payment of all claims.

Munn v Drakesville, 226-1040; 285 NW 644

Offer accepted or rejected as a whole. When a town warrant was issued in full payment of a disputed claim, and was accepted with such knowledge, there was an accord and satisfaction of all claims, as such offer must be accepted or rejected as a whole.

Munn v Drakesville, 226-1040; 285 NW 644

Public utility—justifiable refusal to furnish product. A public utility company is within its rights in refusing to furnish its product—electric energy—to one who fails to pay his current bill for such product, and it is not sufficient that the customer tenders payment for future service.

Bailey v Power Co., 209-631; 228 NW 644

Recovery of purchase price—sales in violation of securities law—tender of securities necessary. Purchaser suing to recover price paid for securities sold in violation of Iowa securities law must at least tender to seller securities equivalent in value to those purchased.

Huglin v Byllesby & Co., 72 F 2d, 341

II MAINTENANCE OF TENDER

Rejection—effect. Even tho a tender has been refused, equity may require it to be kept good.

Thompson v Mott, 202-246; 210 NW 91

Temporary injunction — automatic dissolution. Under an order providing that defendant's motion to dissolve a temporary injunction "be sustained" if defendant, within a named time, paid plaintiff a named sum, and also certain costs, the injunction is automatically dissolved both (1) by the act of defendant in paying, within said time, the said costs and tendering to plaintiff the named sum (tho plaintiff refused the tender), and (2) by the affirmance of the order on appeal by plaintiff. It follows that a further unnecessary order, subsequent to the affirmance, finally dissolving the injunction, is not erroneous, even tho defendant had not kept good his tender.

Peoples Bk. v McCarthy, 210-952; 231 NW 487

III EFFECT OF TENDER

Workmen's compensation act. A tender by an employer of the proper amount of compensation payments, and for the proper compensation period, absolves the employer from all obligation to pay interest on such payments pending an unsuccessful attempt by the employee to secure an increase in the compensation period.

Pappas v Tile Co., 201-607; 206 NW 146

Workmen's compensation act. The acceptance by an employee of tendered compensation payments under the workmen's compensation act cannot prejudice him when the sole dispute between the employer and employee is as to the time the payments should continue.

Pappas v Tile Co., 201-607; 206 NW 146

Modification of contract — repudiation — effect. Where a vendor and purchaser of real estate mutually agree to an extension of time for the final performance of the contract, the purchaser may not put the vendor in default by a tender and demand during said extension of time. But, nevertheless, the vendor may acquiesce in the act of the purchaser in repudiating the extension agreement, and, within a reasonable time, put himself in a position to fulfill his contract to sell, and make tender and demand accordingly.

Foft v Page, 215-387; 245 NW 312

ASSIGNMENT OF ACCOUNTS AND NONNEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS

9451 Assignment of nonnegotiable instruments.

Assignment of leases. See under §10159 (III)
Assignment of leases in mortgage foreclosures. See under §§10107, 12372
Assignment of thing in action. See under §10971

I ASSIGNMENTS IN GENERAL

Owner's right of disposal. Under ordinary circumstances one has the absolute right to dispose of his property as he pleases.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Note and mortgage — consideration — adequacy. Evidence reviewed relative to an assignment of a note and mortgage for $5,000, and held that a life annuity of $200 per year to the assignor was sufficiently adequate to prevent any imputation of fraud, actual or constructive.

Scott v Seabury, 220-655; 262 NW 804

Pre-existing debt as consideration. A pre-existing indebtedness furnishes ample consideration for a transfer by a mortgagor of rent notes.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Conway, 215-1031; 247 NW 253

Writing designated as "check". An instrument in the form of a combined voucher and receipt, and containing no words of negotiability, is not a negotiable instrument and does not become such when indorsed by the indicated payee, tho the instrument states that when so indorsed "it becomes a check".

Soldier V. S. Bank v Camanche Co., 219-614; 258 NW 879

Draft not ipso facto assignment. The oral statement by the president of a bank, made to the payee of a draft at the time of its issuance and delivery, that the draft "operated as an assignment" of an equal amount of money then in the hands of the drawee-bank and belonging to the issuing bank does not constitute an actual assignment.

Andrew v Bank, 215-290; 245 NW 329

Contract for sale of realty—liability of assignee. One who receives, from a purchaser, an assignment of a contract for a deed, which assignment binds the said assignee to fully perform the assigned contract, must be deemed to have ratified the terms of said assignment and be bound thereby when, henceforth, he treats said land as his land and said contract as his obligation, even tho the assignee did not sign said instrument of assignment.

Gables v Kleaveland, 220-1280; 263 NW 339

Statutory bonds—surety (?) or assignee (?). A surety who takes over the work of a defaulting public drainage contractor and proceeds to pay off claims which are statutorily lienable against the funds due under the contract acquires a right of subrogation superior to that of a prior assignee of said funds.

I ASSIGNMENTS IN GENERAL—continued

Ottumwa Works v O'Meara, 206-577; 218 NW 920

Pledgee as purchaser—nonallowable lien on sale price. An assignee of a promissory note as collateral security who takes his assignment without delivery to him of the note may not have a lien for the amount of his claim established on the sum paid for the note by a subsequent pledgee of the note at a judicial foreclosure sale of said pledged note, it appearing that said pledgee acted in perfect good faith, and without notice of the assignee's equity in said note.

Reyelts v Feucht, 206-1326; 221 NW 937

Rights on indorsement—nonprotected party. A nonnegotiable instrument in the hands of a third party indorsee is subject to the equities existing between the original parties to the instrument.

Soldier V. S. Bank v Camanche Co., 219-614; 258 NW 879

Rents assigned—equities of parties. Principle recognized that an assignee of a landlord's right to demand an accounting for rents simply stands in the shoes of the assignor.

Quaintance v Bank, 201-457; 205 NW 739

Miller v Sievers, 213-45; 238 NW 469

Culavin v Telephone Co., 224-813; 276 NW 621

Attorney fees—persons liable—assignee of written lease. Attorney fees may be taxed as costs under a written lease so providing, when the action for rent is against the written assignee of the lease who orally accepted the assignment.

Central Bk. v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

Rents—assignee (?) or mortgagee (?). Rents accruing during the year in which a mortgage is foreclosed, and based on crops harvested or matured by the time the period starts to run, belong to the assignee of such rents who (1) became such assignee prior to the commencement of foreclosure, (2) was not made a party to the foreclosure, and (3) had no knowledge of the foreclosure.

Bain v Washburn, 214-609; 243 NW 286

Assignee of lease—rights limited to interest of mortgagor-landlord. The assignee of a lease from a landlord-mortgagor cannot take, as against mortgagee, any greater interest than held by the landlord-mortgagor.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Foreclosure—transfer of rents—consideration. Record reviewed and held that a written transfer of the right to the use and occupancy of mortgaged premises during the period of redemption was supported by adequate consideration and was free from fraud.

Andrew v Miller, 218-301; 255 NW 492

Forfeiture by assignee of contract. The assignee of a contract of sale of real estate has the same right to forfeit the contract as the assignor had.

Moore v Elliott, 213-374; 239 NW 32

Defense available against transferee. The maker of a nonnegotiable promissory note who, subsequent to the execution of the note, and before he had knowledge of the transfer of the note, has on deposit with the payee (a private banker), subject to check, an amount equal to the entire amount due on the note, may plead said claim against a transferee of the note when it is made to appear that the said maker, under an arrangement with the banker to apply the deposit on the note, never withdrew any part of said deposit.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Nonnegotiable note—estoppel to plead defense. The maker of a nonnegotiable promissory note who signs it in blank for the accommodation of a bank, and delivers it to the cashier of the bank in such incomplete condition, is estopped to plead, against a good-faith and innocent indorsee, that, without his knowledge or consent, the cashier wrongfully inserted his own name in the note as the accommodation payee instead of the name of the bank. This is true because the maker must, under such circumstances, be held, impliedly at least, to have constituted the cashier his agent to fill out and complete the note, and must, as regards the perfectly innocent holder, bear the loss resulting from the wrongful act of his own agent.

First N. Bk. v McCartan, 206-1036; 220 NW 364

Interest—recovery dependent on pleading. In an action on a nonnegotiable promissory note, by a transferee thereof, defendant's plea that he be given a set-off in a stated sum because of an account held by defendant against the original payee, will not be construed as embracing a demand for interest on said "stated sum".

Lewis v Grain Co., 214-143; 241 NW 469

Counterclaim—unquestioned establishment—procedure. A duly pleaded counterclaim which is unquestionably established by the evidence should not be submitted to the jury, but should be summarily allowed by the court; and in a personal injury action the court should direct the jury how to proceed if plaintiff's recovery be more than the amount of the counterclaim; likewise how to proceed if plaintiff's recovery be less than the amount of the counterclaim.

Forrest v Abbott, 219-664; 259 NW 238; 38 NCCA 315

Waiver of counterclaim. A party who is sued on a nonnegotiable claim by the assignee or quasi assignee thereof or by one who has been subrogated to the right to the claim, and fails to plead in defense a counterclaim which he then holds against the assignor, whether such counterclaim be liquidated or unliquidated, unconditionally waives the right to use such counterclaim as an offset against the judgment obtained by the assignee or subrogated party on the claim sued on.

Southern Sur. v Ins. Co., 210-359; 228 NW 56

Dual assignment of same chose—priority. As between two assignees of the same chose in action,—e. g., money due on contract,—the assignee who first obtains his assignment is prior in right, even tho he gives the debtor no notice of his assignment, while the subsequent assignee does give such notice.

Ottumwa Boiler v O'Meara, 206-577; 218 NW 920

Dual assignment of same chose—priority. An unconditional assignment of a chose in action—one effective instant—takes priority over a prior conditional assignment of the same chose—one effective only on the happening of a future contingency. And this is true irrespective of the time notice of the assignments is given to the debtor.

Coon River Assn. v Constr. Co., 215-861; 244 NW 847

Conflicting assignments by partnership and partners. An unrecorded assignment by a partnership to a partnership creditor, of a lease of real estate and of the rents accruing thereunder, is superior in right to a subsequent recorded assignment by one of the partners to his individual creditor of the individual partner's one-half interest in said rents; and especially is this true when the partnership creditor holds a mortgage which pledges the rents of said land.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

Delivery of assignment—sufficiency. Proof that a written assignment of a claim has been in the possession of the assignee since its execution constitutes prima facie proof of delivery by the assignor to the assignee, and especially when the delivery of such assignment is substantially admitted by the hostile pleadings.

Steenhoek v Trust Co., 205-1379; 219 NW 492

Admission by assignor of chose. In an action on a chose in action by the assignee thereof, suing on behalf of himself and said assignor (because the assignor had retained an interest in the claim), an affidavit by the assignor, containing a recital of facts materially discrediting the claimed chose in action, is admissible even tho made long after the assignment was executed.

Lake v Moots, 215-126; 244 NW 693

Apparent authority to transfer—estoppel. An owner who leaves in the hands of another, negotiable paper or nonnegotiable choses in action or security which can be transferred without the execution of further documents, thereby creates an appearance of ownership or control in the custodian, and is estopped as against an innocent party who has acted in reliance on the appearance thus created.

Matalone v Bank, 226-1031; 285 NW 648

II ASSIGNABILITY OF INSTRUMENTS AND CLAIMS

Owner's right of disposal. Under ordinary circumstances one has the absolute right to dispose of his property as he pleases.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Oral assignment of insurance policy. An oral assignment of a policy of fire insurance is valid (especially when the insurer consents thereto) and is prior in right to a subsequent assignment.

Boyce v Ins. Assn., 209-11; 227 NW 523

Interest in proceeds of life policy. A written assignment of a fractional interest in a life insurance policy to a trustee, made for the purpose of protecting the attorneys for the agreed value of their services in prosecuting an action on the policy, is supported by adequate consideration, especially when it appears that the trustee was to receive compensation for his services.

Welch v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

Assignment of life policy—estoppel. The beneficiary of a legal reserve life insurance policy who, without fraud, joins with the insured in an assignment of all right, title, and interest in the policy in order to collaterally secure a debt due from each of said assignors, is estopped, after the death of the insured, from asserting any interest in the policy except as the same may exceed the said secured indebtedness—it appearing that the policy reserved to the insured both the right to assign the policy and to change the beneficiary.

Andrew v Life Co., 214-573; 240 NW 215

Real estate contract—nonnegotiable instrument law inapplicable—assignor not liable to assignee. Under statute, assignor of nonnegotiable instruments guarantees payment thereof to assignee, but such statute is limited to commercial paper and does not embrace bilateral real estate purchase contract and does not create a right of action in vendor's assignee against such vendor as assignor under statute.

Nash v Rehmann Bros., 53 F 2d, 624

Lease and rent notes—priority. The simple delivery by a landlord to his creditor of his real estate lease and rent notes, with the intent thereby to effect an assignment to his creditor as collateral security, is valid against a mortgagee who subsequently institutes foreclosure action on a mortgage pledging the rents.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Bank, 217-620; 252 NW 519

Nonexistent lease. A naked oral promise or understanding to assign a nonexistent but contemplated lease is not good against the subsequently accruing rights of a stranger to the understanding.

Kooistra v Gibford, 201-275; 207 NW 399

Lease — assignability — when lease survives death of lessee. A lease which requires the lessee to diligently farm a portion of the land and to "vigorously utilize" a portion of said land "by extraction of the available sand and gravel" thereon is assignable and survives the death of the lessee, it appearing that the lease was entered into without reliance on any particular personal fitness of the lessee.

In re Grooms, 204-746; 216 NW 78

Assignment of rent not recordable. A written assignment of a lease of real estate and of the rents accruing thereunder, (especially when the lease is at the time manually delivered to the assignee) is not an instrument which the law requires to be recorded, and if recorded the record imparts no notice.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

Equitable assignment—sheriff's certificate—homestead—redemption by judgment creditor. Where judgment creditor redeemed from foreclosure sale and secured an assignment of the sheriff's certificate from the mortgagee, and appellant-owners failed to make a statutory redemption, the judgment creditor was an equitable assignee of the sheriff's certificate entitled to deed, even assuming that he had no right to redeem because of the homestead character of the land, since it made no difference to appellant-owners whether the mortgagee or judgment creditor was the holder of the certificate.

Ackerman v Bank, 228- ; 291 NW 150

Stock — assignment without delivery of certificate. A written assignment by the owner of corporate shares of stock of all his right, title and interest therein conveys good title, (1) even tho the owner places the assignment in escrow and causes it, together with the stock certificate, to be delivered to the assignee after his death, and (2) even tho the assignor, prior to his death, pledges the said stock certificate as security for a personal loan, which his estate later paid.

Leedham v Leedham, 218-767; 254 NW 61

Equitable conversion — nonapplicability of doctrine. An assignment by an heir of all his interest in the "personal property" of an estate carries to the assignee the assignor's interest in funds derived from the sale of real estate for the purpose of paying debts and remaining in the hands of the administrator as an unused balance. The doctrine of equitable conversion has no application to such a state of facts.

In re Wilson, 218-368; 255 NW 489

Father's guaranty of son's debts — nonassignability. A father's contract with a bank, by which the bank agreed to carry a son's indebtedness to the bank until the death of the father, is personal and involves a trust and confidence, and such contract may not be assigned without the consent of the father, and when the bank's assignee started action for a money judgment, during the lifetime of the father, he was released from the obligation of his contract.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Assignment of expectancy. An assignment by a debtor to his creditor of the debtor's expectancy in an estate as collateral security to the debt, with a proviso that, if the debtor does not pay within a stated time, the assignment shall operate as a "full receipt" against said expectancy, simply extends to the creditor an option to so treat the proviso. The creditor may ignore the proviso and maintain an action on his claim.

Smoley v Smoley, 203-685; 213 NW 229

Assignment of expectancy. Principle reaffirmed that while an assignment of an expectancy is not a favorite of the law, yet if, after careful scrutiny, it appears to have been made in good faith, for an adequate consideration, without fraud, and is not unconscionable or otherwise invalid, equity will sustain and enforce it.

Gannon v Graham, 211-516; 231 NW 675; 73 ALR 1050

Burk v Morain, 223-399; 272 NW 441

Assignment of expectancy. A mortgage which recites that the mortgagor "sells and conveys her undivided interest and all future rents, issues, and profits" in named lands (in which the mortgagor then has no interest whatever) speaks solely in the present tense, and is wholly ineffectual to convey the mortgagor's future expectant interest in the land as an heir.

Lee v Lee, 207-882; 223 NW 888

See Berg v Shade, 203-1352; 214 NW 513

Assignment of expectancy as security. An assignment of an expectancy in a contemplated estate as security for a debt is supported by adequate consideration.

Gannon v Graham, 211-516; 231 NW 675; 73 ALR 1050

Assignment of promissory notes carries pledged collateral securities. An assignment by the receiver of an insolvent bank, duly ordered by the court, of bank assets in the form of promissory notes, automatically carries to the assignee the right to the possession of, and right to enforce, all collateral legally pledged to the bank for the payment of said notes.

Bates v Bank, 219-1358; 261 NW 797

Drainage warrants. Record reviewed and held that a written assignment of a drainage warrant must be deemed to have deprived the assignor of all interest therein.

Simmons v Tatham, 219-1407; 261 NW 434

Action based on forged indorsement of checks and drafts. Where an employee wrongfully possessed himself of checks and drafts belonging to his employer, and by forged indorsements caused a bank to pay them, the act of a surety company in paying the employer the amount of his loss does not discharge the bank from its liability to the employer for having paid the checks and drafts on forged indorsements. The employer, upon being so indemnified, may assign his cause of action against the bank to the surety, and the surety may maintain the action against the bank.

National Sur. v Trust Co., 210-323; 228 NW 635

New Amsterdam Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Surety—taking assignment of claim. Where, because of the peculations of a county auditor, a depository bank pays a forged check on school funds, the county, on effecting settlement with the surety on the auditor's official bond, may assign to the said surety its cause of action against the bank, and the assignee may enforce the said assigned action as the county might have enforced it.

New Amsterdam Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Set-offs against insolvent bank. A debtor of an insolvent bank may not, after the appointment of a receiver for the bank, buy up claims against the bank and offset such purchased claims against the amount he is owing the bank. Statutory right of set-off not applicable.

Parker v Schultz, 219-100; 257 NW 570

Partial assignment of chose in action. The owner of a chose in action has a legal right to assign a part of his interest in such chose, and thereafter to join with the assignee in the prosecution of the entire cause of action.

Welch v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

9452 Assignment prohibited by instrument.

Scope of statute. This statute has no applicability to a personal executory contract,

e. g., a lease of lands prohibiting an assignment by the tenant.

Snyder v Bernstein Bros., 201-931; 208 NW 503

Probate order for sale of lease which prohibits sale.

In re Owen, 219-750; 259 NW 474

Assignment working acceleration of maturity. A proviso in a contract for the purchase of real estate on installment payments, entered into without artifice or deception, to the effect that an assignment of the contract by the vendee without the written consent of the vendor will ipso facto mature the entire indebtedness, is valid, even though our statute authorizes the assignment of such an instrument irrespective of the terms of any contract by the parties to the contrary.

Risser v Sec. Co., 200-987; 205 NW 648

Assignment in payment of pre-existing debt. The assignment of funds by the legal owner thereof in payment of a pre-existing debt is not effective against the equitable owner of said funds.

Stegemann v Bendixen, 219-1190; 260 NW 14

Stock assessments nonassignable. An assessment against a holder of corporate bank stock in an insolvent bank, ordered by the court under the so-called "double liability" statute (§9251, C., '31), even though said assessment is in the form of a judgment, is nonassignable by the receiver, even under an authorizing order of court, and if formally assigned, is nonenforceable by the assignee, said attempted assignment being for a purpose other than the payment of creditors. (Double liability statute repealed.)

Roe v King, 217-213; 251 NW 81

Double liability of stockholders—nonassignability. The statutory "double liability" of a stockholder in an insolvent state bank to all the creditors of the bank is not of such nature that a sale or assignment thereof by the receiver, even under an order of court, will vest in the vendee or assignee the right to enforce such liability exclusively for his own use and benefit.

Andrew v Bank, 214-1339; 242 NW 62; 82 ALR 1280

9453 Assignment of open account.

Limitation of action on open account. See under §11011

Assignment for collection. Principle reaffirmed that the holder of a claim or account may validly assign it to another solely for collection.

Carson, et al. v Long, 219-444; 257 NW 815

Proceedings and relief—evidence. Evidence reviewed, in an action for an accounting, and held that an assignment of a claim by plaintiff to defendant was absolute and not for collection for the benefit of plaintiff.

Moore v Bolton, 220-258; 260 NW 676

Causes assigned for collection—right of assignee to join. Plaintiff, in an action at law against a defendant, may join in separate counts:

1. Any number of causes of action against defendant of which plaintiff is the unqualified holder, and which are triable at law in said county of suit, and

2. Any number of causes of action against defendant of which plaintiff is holder as assignee for collection only, and which are triable at law in said county of suit.

Carson, et al. v Long, 222-506; 268 NW 518

Future accounts not founded on existing contract. An assignment of book accounts to accrue in the future is void when there is no obligation on the part of the assignor to sell, and no obligation on the part of customers to buy.

In re Nelson, 211-168; 233 NW 115; 72 ALR 850

Assignee of claim—priority. An assignment of a bank deposit in an insolvent bank, with notice thereof to the receiver, is prior in right to a subsequent garnishment of the receiver, if it be assumed that the receiver is subject to garnishment.

Newell v Edwards, 208-1214; 227 NW 151

9454 Assignment of wages.

Liability of assignee to assignor. Where an employee assigns his wages and said wages are paid by the employer to the assignee, the amount so paid may not be recovered by the employee-assignor of the assignee even tho it be conceded that the assignment was void because of defective acknowledgment.

Hutchins v Piano Co., 209-394; 228 NW 281

Procuring discharge. A person who voluntarily executes an assignment of his wages may not predicate damages against the assignee on the fact that when the assignee brought the assignment to the attention of the employer, the employer discharged the assignor.

Hutchins v Piano Co., 209-394; 228 NW 281

9456 Assignor liable.

Real estate contract—nonnegotiable instrument law inapplicable—assignor not liable to assignee. Under statute, assignor of nonnegotiable instruments guarantees payment thereof to assignee, but such statute is limited to commercial paper and does not embrace bilateral real estate purchase contract and does not create a right of action in vendor's assignee against such vendor as assignor under statute.

Nash v Rehmann Bros., 53 F 2d, 624.

Change in form of debt guaranteed—scope of guaranty. A vendor who, upon assigning his contract for the sale of land, guarantees the payment of the amount due on the contract, must be held to guarantee the payment of a mortgage for said amount subsequently accepted by the assignee, when the converting of the amount due on the contract into a mortgage was of the very essence of the contract of sale.

Buster v Land Co., 211-659; 234 NW 241

Discharge of guarantor—nonrelease by conduct of guaranty. The guarantor of the payment of the amount due on a contract of sale of land is not relieved of his contract of guaranty because the assignee-guarantee of the contract failed to control the action of the purchaser of the land in disbursing building funds, when the assignee-guarantee had no knowledge of the wrongful disbursement.

Buser v Land Co., 211-659; 234 NW 241

Rent—liability of assignee under his written acceptance. One who, in writing, accepts an assignment of a lease, with the consent of the lessor, thereby contracts to carry out the terms of the lease irrespective of any later assignment of the lease by the said assignee, and it is no defense that the lessor, the property being vacant, obtains the aid of a receiver.

Pickler v Mershon, 212-447; 236 NW 382

Rent—assignee—liability to discharge rent obligations. The written assignee of a lease of real estate who orally accepts the assignment, or effects such acceptance by his conduct, with the approval or acquiescence of the lessor, thereby binds himself to discharge the rent obligations; especially is this true when the express provisions of the lease impose such obligation.

Central Bank v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

Rent—obligation of assignee of lease to pay rent. The assignee of a lease (which simply binds the "lessee, his heirs, and assigns" to pay the rent) is obligated to pay rent because of privity of estate, and when said privity of estate is terminated by a valid reassignment of the lease the obligation of the assignee to pay rent necessarily terminates unless said assignee has, expressly or impliedly, otherwise obligated himself. And the fact that the lessor accepts the rent from the assignee during the assignee's occupancy is not sufficient to show that the assignee has assumed the obligation to pay rent after reassignment.

Seeburger v Cohen, 215-1088; 247 NW 292; 89 ALR 427

CHAPTER 423

SURETIES

9457 Requiring creditor to sue.

Scope of statute. This section applies even tho the principal on the obligation is not a resident of the state.

Cleophas v Walker, 211-122; 233 NW 257

Oral notice to sue—effect. Written notice by a surety to the holder of a promissory note to sue the principal is essential, in order to base thereon a plea of discharge because of failure to comply with the notice. Oral notice is ineffective.

Johnson v Hollis, 205-965, 218 NW 615

Unsigned notice to creditor. A written notice by a surety to a creditor requiring the creditor to sue on the obligation or to permit the surety so to do in the name of the creditor, is valid and effective tho wholly unsigned (1) when it is addressed to the creditor, (2) when the context thereof suggests that it is being given by the surety, and (3) when the surety personally delivers the notice to the creditor.

Cleophas v Walker, 211-122; 233 NW 257

Proof of lost notice and service thereof. The contents of a written notice by a surety to a creditor requiring the creditor to sue on the obligation or to permit the surety so to do in the name of the creditor, and the service of such notice, may be proven by oral evidence when neither the original notice nor a copy thereof can be produced, but such proof must be clear, positive, convincing, and satisfactory.

Cleophas v Walker, 211-122; 233 NW 257

9458 Refusal or neglect of creditor.

Discharge of surety. Principle reaffirmed that a contract of settlement which releases a principal ipso facto releases the surety.

Iowa Co. v Wagner Co., 203-179; 210 NW 775

See Warman v Ranch Co., 202-198; 207 NW 532

CHAPTER 424

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS LAW

Discussion. See 5 ILB 65—Nonnegotiable bills and notes

FORM AND INTERPRETATION

9461 [§1] Form of negotiable instrument.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 237

Construction—modern tendency. Principle reaffirmed that, within the bounds of reason, liberality of construction will be exercised in favor of the negotiability of promissory notes.

Townsend v Adams, 207-326; 222 NW 878; 77 ALR 1079

Negotiability not terminated by maturity. The mere maturity of a negotiable promissory note does not destroy its negotiable character.

Federal Trust v Nelson, 221-759; 266 NW 509

Maturity on failure to give security. A promissory note, otherwise negotiable, is rendered nonnegotiable by a provision to the effect that the holder may at any time demand additional security, and if the demand is not complied with the note shall instantly mature.

First N. Bk. v McCartan, 206-1036; 220 NW 364

Extension of payment—effect. A promissory note which is payable on a specified day is not rendered nonnegotiable by the inclusion of a provision to the effect that, "after" the note falls due, the time of payment may be extended,—the term "after" being construed to refer to a time subsequent to the day of maturity.

Townsend v Adams, 207-326; 222 NW 878; 77 ALR 1079

"Myself" note. Principle reaffirmed that a promissory note payable to "myself" is a nullity until duly indorsed by the maker.

In re Richardson, 202-328; 208 NW 374

Writing designated as "check". An instrument in the form of a combined voucher and receipt, and containing no words of negotiability, is not a negotiable instrument and does not become such when indorsed by the indicated payee, tho the instrument states that when so indorsed "it becomes a check".

Soldier Valley Bank v Camanche Co., 219-614; 258 NW 879

Note on foreign letterhead—effect. The fact that a promissory note, made by a resident of this state and payable in this state to a resident of this state, was written in longhand on the letterhead of a foreign business concern does not establish, as a matter of law, that the note was executed and delivered in such foreign state and intended to be a foreign contract.

In re Thorne, 202-681; 210 NW 952

Contemporaneous writing as to time of payment. An absolute promise in a promissory note to pay on or before a named time cannot be deemed qualified and limited by a contemporaneous written contract which reaches no further than a promise by the maker to exercise certain economies in his business and thereby possibly effect payment before the stipulated time.

Hughes v Campbell, 202-1352; 212 NW 115

Contemporaneous written contract. An ordinary promissory note must, between the original parties thereto, be construed in the light of a contemporaneous written agreement which makes reference to the note as a part thereof. So held where the two instruments were construed as an agency contract, with liability on the note limited to the amount of goods sold by the maker thereof.

Nolta v Lander, 200-608; 203 NW 710

No priority between equally dated and maturing notes. Neither of two promissory notes secured by the same mortgage have priority over the other when they carry the same date of execution and maturity.

Templeton v Stephens, 212-1064; 233 NW 704

Unallowable modification. Principle reaffirmed that oral evidence may not be introduced to nullify, modify, or change the character of a written obligation.

First N. Bk. v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

Unallowable variation. Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that a note is not payable according to its terms.

Farmers Bk. v Fisher, 204-1049; 216 NW 709

Parol evidence as to fund. Proof of an oral agreement contemporaneous with the signing of a promissory note, to the effect that the note is to be paid out of a particular or specified fund only, is inadmissible.

Davenport v Mullins, 200-836; 205 NW 499

Promise to pay in application for insurance. An application for hail insurance containing a promise to pay insurer a certain amount upon designated dates is not a "negotiable instrument" within the meaning of statute concerning requirements of such instruments.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Gabrielson, 226-1242; 286 NW 514

Parol evidence to show maturity date. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a time certificate of deposit was accompanied by a collateral oral agreement between the depositor and the bank, to the effect that the bank would pay the certificate on demand.

In re Olson, 206-706; 219 NW 401

Parol in re accommodation note. Parol evidence to the effect that the payee of a note orally assured the maker, when the note was executed, and at later times, that the maker was not liable on the note and would never be called upon to pay it, is admissible on the issue whether the note was an accommodation note for the accommodation of the payee plaintiff.

Security Bk. v Carlson, 210-1117; 231 NW 643

Oral testimony as to liability. The accommodation maker of a promissory note may not, in the absence of evidence of fraud, testify that when he executed the note an oral agreement was entered into that he was not to assume any liability on the note.

Citizens Bk. v Rowe, 214-715; 243 NW 363

Parol—plea of fraud—effect. In an action on a promissory note, parol evidence to the effect that the maker was assured he would never be compelled to pay the note is admissible as bearing on the maker's plea of fraud in the procurement of the note.

Schipfer v Stone, 206-328; 218 NW 568

Bank officer—estoppel to deny liability. An officer of a national bank who, being unable to obtain a loan for his bank on the bank's own real estate, from a First Trust Joint Stock Land Bank—because such land banks are prohibited by federal statutes from making loans to a corporation such as a national bank—enters into a plan, without the knowledge of the land bank, to circumvent the federal statutes and obtain the loan for his bank by falsely representing to the land bank that he personally owns the land in question, and who successfully consummates said fraudulent scheme and obtains the loan on his personal note and mortgage, is estopped to deny his personal responsibility on said note and mortgage.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Diercks, 222-534; 267 NW 708

Genuineness of signature—jury question. Where in an action on a promissory note the defendant in his answer denies under oath the genuineness of the signature, a jury question is generated by positive testimony of the payee that the purported maker did sign the note, together with expert testimony on handwriting tending to prove that the signature was genuine, met by equally positive testimony by the purported maker that he did not sign the note.

Seibel v Fisher, 213-388; 239 NW 34

Unusual signature—allegation—sufficiency. An allegation, in an action on a promissory note, that both defendants executed and delivered the note, followed by a copy of the note bearing the signature "H. G. & L. T. Greenland", sufficiently alleges the signature of "H. G. Greenland".

Greenland v Carter, 219-369; 258 NW 678

Agent signing in representative capacity—nonliability. In an action to recover hail insurance premium under a policy to which was attached an application with a promise to pay and signed by defendant, alleged to be a member of a partnership, and who used the symbol

"%" in signing partnership name, such defendant is not liable individually where it is shown that defendant received commission for selling property and merely acted as agent for the partnership.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Gabrielson, 226-1242; 286 NW 514

Joint payees—rebuttable presumption of equal ownership. The presumption, that joint payees of a promissory note and of a mortgage securing the same are equal, must yield to evidence establishing the actual interest of each. So held in the settlement of an estate.

In re Morrison, 220-42; 261 NW 436

Alleging note as receipt—sham defense—striking. Where a written instrument sued upon contains the legal elements of a negotiable promissory note, an allegation in an answer that such written instrument was a receipt shows on its face that such pleading is false and should be stricken on motion.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

9462 [§2] Certainty as to sum—what constitutes.

Naked reference to mortgage. A promissory note, otherwise negotiable, is not rendered nonnegotiable by the insertion therein of a statement to the effect that it is "secured by mortgage".

Williamson v Craig, 204-555; 215 NW 664

Incorporating mortgage into note—effect. A promissory note, otherwise negotiable, is rendered nonnegotiable by incorporating into the note, by definite reference, the provisions of the mortgage security which give the mortgagee holder the option to secure insurance on the mortgaged property and to pay therefor, and also to discharge unpaid "taxes, charges, and assessments" on the property, and, if not repaid for such outlay, to declare the maturity of the note and of all of said outlay; and this is true even tho the purpose of making the terms of the mortgage a part of the note is to emphasize the fact that the note is secured by mortgage.

Hubbard v Wallace Co., 201-1143; 208 NW 730; 45 ALR 1065

Note incorporating mortgage providing payment of taxes. The federal court is bound only by superior federal court decisions in determining note's negotiability where state law merely declares principles of commercial law. Note incorporating mortgage authorizing holder to pay taxes in default, for which note was security, held nonnegotiable, as being uncertain in amount as contemplated by the law merchant and the negotiable instrument law of Iowa.

Peterson v Ins. Co., 19 F 2d, 74

Mortgage provisions not incorporated in note. The provisions of a mortgage will not be deemed incorporated into the mortgage-secured promissory note by a statement in such note to the effect that the note is secured by a first mortgage on real estate in a named county.

Des M. Bank v Stanley, 206-134; 220 NW 80

9463 [§3] When promise is unconditional.

Oral agreement as to fund. Proof of an oral agreement contemporaneous with the signing of a promissory note, to the effect that the note is to be paid out of a particular or specified fund only, is inadmissible.

Davenport v Mullins, 200-836; 205 NW 499

Recital of transaction. An instrument, otherwise negotiable, is not rendered nonnegotiable by the insertion therein of a statement of the transaction which gives rise to the instrument.

First N. Bk. v Power Equip. Co., 211-153; 233 NW 103

9464 [§4] Determinable future time—what constitutes.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 287

Indefinite maturity. A promissory note which is payable "on settlement of William Dagele estate after date" is nonnegotiable.

Scott v Dagele, 200-1090; 205 NW 859

Agreement for extensions of time of payment. A promissory note, otherwise negotiable, is rendered nonnegotiable by the insertion therein of an agreement by the makers and indorsers "to extension of time from time to time by any one of the signers".

Second N. Bk. v Mielitz, 211-218; 233 NW 108

Reference in trade acceptance to maturity date. A trade acceptance, otherwise negotiable, is rendered nonnegotiable by the insertion therein of the clause "maturity being in conformity with the original terms of the purchase".

First N. Bk. v Power Equip. Co., 211-153; 233 NW 103

9465 [§5] Provisions not affecting negotiability.

Discussion. See 14 ILR 458—Extension provisions

9466 [§6] Omissions—seal—particular money.

Discussion. See 5 ILB 209—Payable in foreign money; 8 ILB 92—Unstamped paper; 9 ILB 128, 10 ILB 135—Instruments payable "in current funds"

Instrument payable in "current" funds. An instrument otherwise negotiable is not rendered nonnegotiable by the fact that it provides for payment in "current funds".

Peoples Bk. v Smith, 210-136; 230 NW 565; 69 ALR 399

Note payable at particular office—effect. Principle recognized that the fact that a promissory note is payable at the office of a particular person does not, in and of itself, authorize or empower such particular person to receive payment on the note.

Whitney v Krasne, 209-236; 225 NW 245

9467 [§7] When payable on demand.

Signing after maturity—effect. A promissory note which is signed by a party after maturity is, as to such signer, payable on demand and parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary such legal effect.

Fairley v Falcon, 204-290; 214 NW 538

Ambiguous provision as to interest. A certificate of deposit payable "on the return of this certificate properly indorsed, twelve months after date with interest at 5 percent or six months after date with interest at 5 percent per annum", is payable on demand, (1) with interest at 5 percent if presented in 12 months or later, (2) with interest at 5 percent if presented in six months or later, and (3) with no interest if presented within six months.

Partch v Krogman, 202-524; 210 NW 612

Statute of limitation. A promissory note due on demand is barred after ten years from the date thereof.

Citizens Bk. v Taylor, 201-499; 207 NW 570

Time of payment—marginal entry. A properly dated promissory note which fails to state, in the strict body thereof, any time for payment, is, nevertheless, for the purpose of a demurrer presenting the bar of the statute of limitation, payable at a fixed and definite date when, in the corner of the note and opposite the signature to the note, appear the words, "the term of five years".

Nylander v Nylander, 221-1358; 268 NW 7

Novation—mere extension of note at reduced interest. An agreement to extend the time of payment of a promissory note and mortgage securing it, at a reduced rate of interest does not constitute a novation.

Des M. Bank v Allen, 220-448; 261 NW 912

9469 [§9] When payable to bearer.

Fictitious payee. Evidence held to show knowledge of the fictitious character of a payee.

American Exp. Co. v Bank, 200-408; 205 NW 1

Fictitious payee. A check unwittingly made payable to a fictitious person is not payable to bearer.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

Fictitious payee. The absolute duty of a bank, before it pays its depositor's check, to know that the payee's indorsement is genuine, and to pay only on such genuine indorsement, applies to a check which the depositor has unwittingly and without negligence made payable to a fictitious person.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

Fictitious mortgagee. A mortgage which is executed to a fictitious mortgagee with the acquiescence of the mortgagor, but which is wholly free from fraud, is valid between the mortgagor and the actual mortgagee and likewise valid between the mortgagor and one who has acquired all the interest of the actual mortgagee. And this is true tho it be conceded, arguendo, that the note was nonnegotiable, and that the mortgage was not entitled to recordation.

Richardson v Stewart, 216-683; 247 NW 273

9471 [§11] Date—presumption as to.

Time of execution immaterial. When the one narrow issue is whether the defendant signed the note in question, the court may very properly instruct the jury that the time of signing is immaterial.

Conner v Henry, 205-95; 215 NW 506

9474 [§14] Blanks—when may be filled.

Discussion. See 4 ILB 195—Payee's name in blank

Unauthorized filling of blanks—ratification. Ratification by the signer of a promissory note of an unauthorized filling of blanks is simply dependent on the fact that the signer, when he acts, must have full knowledge of all the facts relative to such unauthorized filling.

Windahl v Vanderwilt, 200-816; 203 NW 252

Filling in place of payment. The holder of a negotiable promissory note has authority to fill in the place of payment in a blank provided for that purpose, there being no agreement between the parties relative to such completion of the note.

Citizens Bk. v Martens, 204-1378; 215 NW 754

Place of payment—materiality. Testimony by the maker of a negotiable promissory note to the effect that he had never authorized any one to fill in the place of payment in a blank which had been inserted in the note for that purpose is material (1) on the question whether the note was incomplete when issued, and (2) on the issue whether there had been any agreement between the parties relative to such completion.

Citizens Bk. v Martens, 204-1378; 215 NW 754

Place of payment—material alteration. Testimony that a negotiable promissory note had been delivered without any agreement relative to the filling of a blank therein for the place of payment, and that the holder had filled the blank without any authority from the maker, presents, on the issue of material alteration, a question of law for the court, and not a question of fact for the jury.

Citizens Bk. v Martens, 204-1378; 215 NW 754

Accommodation payee—wrongful insertion. The maker of a nonnegotiable promissory note who signs it in blank for the accommodation of a bank, and delivers it to the cashier of the bank in such incomplete condition, is estopped to plead, against a good-faith and innocent indorsee, that, without his knowledge or consent, the cashier wrongfully inserted his own name in the note as the accommodation payee instead of the name of the bank. This is true because the maker must, under such circumstances, be held, impliedly at least, to have constituted the cashier his agent to fill out and complete the note, and must, as regards the perfectly innocent holder, bear the loss resulting from the wrongful act of his own agent.

First N. Bk. v McCartan, 206-1036; 220 NW 364

9476 [§16] Delivery—when effectual.

Discussion. See 5 ILB 257—Delivery

Delivery as essential element—restatement of common law. This section, providing that every contract on a negotiable instrument is incomplete and revocable until delivery of the instrument for the purpose of giving effect thereto, is a restatement of the common-law rule.

In re Martens, 226-162; 283 NW 885

Right to show conditional delivery—limitation. The statutory right of the maker of a negotiable promissory note to show, against nonholders in due course, that the delivery of the note was on a condition, and not for the purpose of transferring the property in the instrument, does not embrace the right of the maker of an admittedly delivered note to show that the note was not to be paid according to its terms: e. g., that a director's note to a bank was to be paid by an assessment on the stockholders, or out of the future earnings of the bank, or was not to be paid at all, unless the bank was forced into liquidation.

Hills Bk. v Hirt, 204-940; 216 NW 281

Trade acceptance—authority conferred. In an action to recover on negotiable trade acceptances by indorsee bank, wherein drawee alleges nonliability on account of nonperformance by drawer of a condition in sales contract entered into between drawee and drawer providing for repurchasing of goods after certain date and furnishing salesman to assist drawee in selling goods, held, evidence established that delivery of acceptances was made, without condition, for the purpose of transferring all property rights therein to seller with full authority to negotiate acceptances or put them up as collateral security.

State Bank v Feed Co., 227-596; 288 NW 614

Lien of garnishment and liability of garnishee—ineffectual plea of payment by check. A garnishee should not be discharged on his plea that, prior to the garnishment, he issued his check to the judgment defendant in full payment of his indebtedness, when the facts and circumstances attending the issuance of such check show that the parties thereto never intended to treat the check as a negotiable instrument—never intended that it, in and of itself, should constitute payment of the indebtedness.

Lee v Lee, 210-618; 231 NW 426

Parol evidence affecting. Where the holder of a promissory note indorsed and surrendered it, and received in payment the duly indorsed note of a third party, parol evidence that, at the time the respective indorsements were made, there was talk to the effect that if such indorsements were made, one indorsement would cancel the other indorsement, has no probative force to show (1) inducement, or (2) conditional delivery, or (3) delivery for a specific purpose, of said indorsements, or (4) that the paid note was reissued and payment thereof guaranteed.

Versteeg v Hoeven, 214-92; 239 NW 709

Trade acceptances negotiated. In an action to recover on trade acceptances by indorsee thereof, where there is no provision in sales contract prohibiting either delivery, negotiation, or transfer of such acceptances which are regular on their face, held, proof of an alleged oral agreement that acceptances were subject to certain conditions in sales contract is inadmissible in evidence.

State Bank v Feed Co., 227-596; 288 NW 614

Execution of note—presumption. Principle recognized that the execution and delivery of a promissory note is prima facie evidence of the settlement of all existing demands between the parties up to the date of the note.

In re Kahl, 210-903; 232 NW 133

Place of delivery determines governing law. When the payee of a promissory note prepares it in blank in this state and sends it to the proposed maker in another state without any specific direction as to the method or manner in which it is to be returned to the payee after being signed, delivery takes place only when the note reaches the hands of the payee in this state. It follows that the statute of limitation of this state governs such note.

In re Young, 208-1261; 226 NW 137

See County Bk. v Jacobson, 202-1263; 211 NW 864

Directors' notes to bank. Bank directors who execute their promissory notes to the bank for the sole purpose of making good an impairment of the bank's capital and of preventing the immediate closing of the bank, and who know that said notes have been placed in the assets of the bank, may not say that a jury question exists as to the delivery of the notes to the bank.

Farmers Bk. v Bunge, 211-1357; 231 NW 651

Delivery by decedent—dead man statute. In the absence of contrary evidence, a valid delivery was proved by the statutory presumption of delivery arising from possession of a note, aided by evidence, secured without violating the dead man statute, to the effect that the note was in decedent maker's hands while visiting payee during an illness and after decedent left, the note was reposing on payee's bed.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Notes of deceased—prima facie case. In an action in probate by payees of notes to establish notes as claims against maker's estate, the conceded signature of deceased and admission of the notes in evidence establish a prima facie case for claimants.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Note found in decedent's safe—no delivery. In spite of a mother's declarations as to the existence of a note and her instructions to her daughter to get it after the mother's death, a promissory note executed by a mother, with her daughter as payee, in repayment of money allegedly borrowed from the daughter, and found by said daughter in the mother's safe after her death, is not a valid claim against the estate of the mother—there having been no sufficient delivery thereof to payee. Quaere, as to validity of claim if based on the debt independent of the note.

In re Martens, 226-162; 283 NW 885

Death of payee—prima facie showing. Prima facie delivery of notes is shown by testimony that the notes were found, after the death of payee, among the private papers of the payee.

Lusby v Wing, 207-1287; 224 NW 554

Conditional delivery. Principle recognized that the delivery of a promissory note may be shown to have been conditional or for a particular purpose.

Kline v Reeder, 203-396; 212 NW 693

Conditional delivery—parol evidence. Parol evidence is admissible to prove that a surety signed a promissory note on the express condition that the note should not be deemed effective until another named party signed it.

Andrew v Hanson, 206-1258; 222 NW 10

Conditional delivery—parol evidence. While parol evidence is not admissible to vary the terms of a written instrument, yet it is competent as between the immediate parties to show that the delivery thereof may have been conditional or for a special purpose only, and not for the purpose of transferring the property in the instrument.

Walker v Todd, 225-276; 280 NW 512

Conditional delivery—waiver. The plea that a promissory note was negotiated in violation of a conditional delivery must fail in the face of conclusive testimony that said note was surrendered by the indorsee to the maker, who thereupon executed and unconditionally delivered the note in suit.

Anderson, etc. v Reinking, 204-239; 213 NW 775

Conditional delivery—signatures of others. A written contract which provides that the failure of any party named therein to sign shall not affect the liability of those who do sign, may be shown to have been delivered on the condition that the writing was to be effective only after being signed by all of the parties.

Boyd v Miller, 210-829; 230 NW 851

Conditional delivery—sale of property. A surety on a promissory note may show, as against the payee, that he signed the note and permitted the delivery thereof on the express agreement with the principal and payee that the principal would sell certain property and deliver the proceeds to the payee, and that the payee would indorse such proceeds on the note.

Randolph Bk. v Osborn, 207-729; 223 NW 493

Conditional delivery—option to buy farm. With the evidence in conflict, a jury question is generated as to whether or not the delivery of a note was conditional, when it was given at the time of the execution of a farm lease which contained an option to purchase the farm on condition that the note should be paid.

Walker v Todd, 225-276; 280 NW 512

Conditionally delivered note—purchaser with knowledge not "holder in due course". Where insurance agent takes an application for life insurance, and as a part of the same transaction notes are executed and delivered conditionally, or for specific purpose of paying insurance premium, and a party takes the notes, as security for a loan to the agent, with knowledge that application has not been approved, such party is not a "holder in due course" and cannot enforce payment of the note after application has been rejected.

Economy Co. v Ins. Co., 227-1123; 290 NW 82

Right to show conditional delivery. Defendant in an action on a promissory note may show, against the plaintiff who is not a holder in due course, that the original delivery of the note was conditional, and for a special purpose only.

Hill v May, 205-948; 218 NW 946

Instructions in re delivery. Instruction to the effect that delivery of a promissory note is largely a matter of intention, and as to what acts will constitute delivery, reviewed and held unobjectionable.

Chariton Bank v Wright, 222-417; 269 NW 439

Evidence—jury question. Evidence held to present jury question on the issue of delivery.

Chariton Bank v Wright, 222-417; 269 NW 439

Proof of execution and delivery. In an action in probate to establish notes of deceased as claims, proof of the execution and delivery being established, it is presumed that notes were issued for a valuable consideration and the burden of showing lack of consideration is on the defense.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Consideration and delivery—proof by presumptions—instructions. The questions of want of consideration and nondelivery of a note, supported only by presumptions, need not be submitted to the jury when such presumptions are not overcome by evidence, and when the only conflict arises over the genuineness of the signature, the submission of this single question was proper.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Delivery as nonjury question. The plea of a surety (1) of want of consideration for, and (2) of improper delivery of, the notes sued on, is wholly ineffective:

1. When the surety signed and forwarded the notes for delivery on the prearranged and contracted condition that the payee would receive delivery only on condition that he—payee—would first cancel and surrender specified indebtedness held by him against the principal maker of the notes, and

2. When the surety knew that the payee had complied with said condition and had received delivery of the notes, and

3. When the surety thereafter, until sued, interposed no objection of illegality in the notes or improper delivery thereof, but on the contrary promised to pay them and negotiated for additional time in which to pay.

North Side Bank v Schreiber, 219-380; 258 NW 690

9477 [§17] Construction.

Conflict between note and mortgage. In case of a conflict between the note and the mortgage securing it, as to the conditions under which the mortgagee may treat the entire debt as due for the nonpayment of interest, the note will prevail.

Wilson v. Tolles, 210-1218; 229 NW 724

Signature of spouse to mortgage only—effect. The defeasance clause in a real estate mortgage on the lands of a husband, to the effect that the mortgage shall be void if the signers shall "pay or cause to be paid" the secured notes, does not, in and of itself, impose personal liability on the wife who is one of the signers to the mortgage.

Fairfax Bk. v Coligan, 211-670; 234 NW 537

Waiver of homestead right—unauthorized decree. A waiver in a promissory note of the maker's homestead right does not constitute authority in the court in an action on the note to decree a lien on the maker's homestead for the amount due on the note.

First N. Bk. v Phillips, 203-372; 212 NW 678

Notes designed to resemble checks and so treated. Instruments for the payment of obligations, which papers resembled checks and were treated as such, but upon which the maker had cleverly executed certain qualifying words whereby he hoped that they could be treated as promissory notes, held to be in fact ordinary checks when it was noted that the payee was required to indorse them before payment.

State v Doudna, 226-351; 284 NW 113

9478 [§18] Liability of person signing in trade or assumed name.

Action in trade name. A person has the legal right to maintain an action in the duly registered trade name under which he transacts his business.

Keeling v Priebe, 219-155; 257 NW 199

Unusual signature—allegation—sufficiency. An allegation, in an action on a promissory note, that both defendants executed and delivered the note, followed by a copy of the note bearing the signature "H. G. & L. T. Greenland", sufficiently alleges the signature of "H. G. Greenland".

Greenland v Carter, 219-369; 258 NW 678

Discharge of surety—conditional signing—nonestoppel. A surety on a promissory note who signs and delivers the note on the condition that another named party also signs is not bound because he makes no response to a later notification from the payee that other parties have been substituted as signers in lieu of the one named and specified by the surety.

9479 [§19] Signature by agent—authority—how shown.

Agency of husband. Testimony tending to show a custom by a husband to sign the name of his wife to promissory notes, with her express or implied knowledge and approval, extending continuously through many years prior to the transaction in question, is admissible on the issue whether the husband had such authority from the wife.

State Bk. v Fairholm, 201-1094; 206 NW 143

“Apparent authority” defined. “Apparent authority” is the result of the manifestation by one person of consent that another shall act as his agent, made to a third person, where such manifestation differs from that made to the purported agent.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Pleading agent’s apparent authority—sufficiency. In payee’s action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed without actual authority by payee’s local attorney, bank’s answer alleging (1) payee’s knowledge and acquiescence in the attorney’s custom of indorsing payee’s checks and remitting proceeds to it by his personal checks, (2) the bank’s reliance thereon, and (3) that payee was estopped from asserting lack of authority held sufficient to raise question of attorney’s implied, apparent, or ostensible authority.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Attorney indorsing client’s checks. In payee’s action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed without actual authority by payee’s local attorney who, over a period of years, had collected rents for the payee, evidence of transactions to show custom of attorney in indorsing payee’s checks and in remitting by his personal checks was admissible, even tho bank did not have knowledge of all of the transactions, and it warranted finding that payee had knowledge of and acquiesced in such custom and was bound thereby.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Undisclosed limitation of agent’s authority—effect. Altho a principal may by special limitations restrict the authority of his agent, and altho such restrictions are obligatory between the principal and his agent, such limitations are not binding upon third parties, and, in the absence of knowledge of such restrictions by them, the principal will be bound to the same extent as tho the restrictions were not made.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Agent’s authority to indorse check. In payee’s action against bank which had cashed checks upon indorsement by payee’s attorney, the burden of proof is upon defendant-bank to establish apparent, ostensible, or implied authority in the attorney to indorse the checks as the basis for estoppel against payee to assert lack of authority on part of attorney.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Estoppel to deny agent’s authority. In payee’s action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed by payee’s attorney without actual authority, where bank defended on ground that payee was estopped from asserting lack of authority, held, strict rules relating to equitable estoppel based upon false misrepresentation or concealment were not applicable in determining such defense.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Implied ratification of agent’s acts. Acquiescence by the principal in a series of acts by the agent indicates authorization to perform similar acts in the future, and an affirmation of an unauthorized transaction may be inferred from a failure to repudiate it.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Indorsement by payee’s attorney—authority. In action to recover against bank which had cashed checks indorsed by payee’s attorney, the authority to make such indorsements is, under this section, determinable from the rules applicable in cases of agency generally.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Liability to third persons. As between a principal and third parties, the principal is bound by the acts of his agent within the limits of the apparent scope of his authority.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

9480 [§20] Liability of person signing as agent.

Knowledge of agent—when not imputed to principal. The knowledge of an agent—especially an agent with limited authority—will not be imputed to his principal when such knowledge involves a breach of duty to the principal and is in regard to a transaction which is so unusual and exceptional—so out of the ordinary—as necessarily to put on guard the party dealing with the agent.

Clapp v Wallace, 221-672; 266 NW 493
First Tr. JSL Bank v Diercks, 222-534; 267 NW 708

Directors—personal liability. A director of a corporation who indorses the promissory obligations of the corporation for the purpose of guaranteeing payment cannot escape the obligation assumed because of the fact that he affixed to his signature the official designation of “director”.

Northern Bk. v Ellwood, 200-1213; 206 NW 256

Signing in representative capacity—liability. No recovery can be had against one who, as treasurer of an unincorporated association, assumes to execute a promissory note in the name of the association, when he is allowed to plead and prove, without objection, that when the note was executed it was agreed with the payee that no personal liability should attach to the said treasurer.

Andrew v Golf Club, 217-577; 250 NW 709

Execution of unauthorized contract—effect. An executor or administrator who signs a contract of subscription in the name of the estate and by himself as such officer, without authority so to do, thereby personally binds and obligates himself.

Y. M. C. A. v Caward, 213-408; 239 NW 41

9481 [§21] Signature by procuracy—effect of.

Unusual signature—allegation—sufficiency. An allegation, in an action on a promissory note, that both defendants executed and delivered the note, followed by a copy of the note bearing the signature "H. G. & L. T. Greenland", sufficiently alleges the signature of "H. G. Greenland".

Greenland v Carter, 219-369; 258 NW 678

9483 [§23] Forged signature—effect of.

Discussion. See 15 ILR 357—Double forgery—bank liability

Agent's authority to indorse check. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks upon indorsement by payee's attorney, the burden of proof is upon defendant-bank to establish apparent, ostensible, or implied authority in the attorney to indorse the checks as the basis for estoppel against payee to assert lack of authority on part of attorney.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Attorney indorsing client's checks. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed without actual authority by payee's local attorney who, over a period of years, had collected rents for the payee, evidence of transactions to show custom of attorney in indorsing payee's checks and in remitting by his personal checks was admissible, even tho bank did not have knowledge of all of the transactions, and it warranted finding that payee had knowledge of and acquiesced in such custom and was bound thereby.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Implied ratification of agent's acts. Acquiescence by the principal in a series of acts by the agent indicates authorization to perform similar acts in the future, and an affirmation of an unauthorized transaction may be inferred from a failure to repudiate it.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Estoppel to deny agent's authority. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed by payee's attorney without actual authority, where bank defended on ground that payee was estopped from asserting lack of authority, held, strict rules relating to equitable estoppel based upon false misrepresentation or concealment were not applicable in determining such defense.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Pleading agent's apparent authority—sufficiency. In payee's action against bank which had cashed checks indorsed without actual authority by payee's local attorney, bank's answer alleging (1) payee's knowledge and acquiescence in the attorney's custom of indorsing payee's checks and remitting proceeds to it by his personal checks, (2) the bank's reliance thereon, and (3) that payee was estopped from asserting lack of authority held sufficient to raise question of attorney's implied, apparent, or ostensible authority.

Federal Land Bank v Trust Co., 228- ; 290 NW 512

Action based on forged indorsement of checks and drafts. Where an employee wrongfully possessed himself of checks and drafts belonging to his employer, and by forged indorsements caused a bank to pay them, the act of a surety company in paying the employer the amount of his loss does not discharge the bank from its liability to the employer for having paid the checks and drafts on forged indorsements. The employer, upon being so indemnified, may assign his cause of action against the bank to the surety, and the surety may maintain the action against the bank.

National Sur. v Tr. Co., 210-323; 228 NW 635
New Amsterdam Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Payment on forged indorsement—negligence not imputable to state. Negligence and laches of public officers in the handling of state funds are not imputable to the state; for instance, in an action to recover from a drawee bank the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement of a check drawn by a county treasurer against state school funds on deposit with said drawee, it is no defense that the county treasurer was negligent in drawing or delivering the check, or that county officers generally were negligent in not making early discovery of the forged indorsement, and notifying the drawee accordingly.

New Amsterdam Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Renewal of forged note—effect. The execution of a promissory note in renewal of a known forged note necessarily works a waiver of the fraud consequent on the forgery. Evidence held sufficient to establish the absence of such knowledge.

Bacon v Bank, 204-887; 216 NW 274

Failure to examine monthly statement—effect. The failure of a depositor to examine the monthly statement furnished to him by the bank and the paid checks accompanying the same, may have a material bearing on the issue whether the depositor's negligence has materially misled the bank, to its loss, into paying checks on forged indorsements.

Erickson Co. v Bank, 211-495; 230 NW 342

Forged indorsement—negligence of drawer—effect. Tho a drawee-bank is under an absolute duty to pay its depositor's check only to a holder thereof under a genuine indorsement, yet the depositor is estopped to question the payment of a check on a forged indorsement when he, by his own negligence or by the negligence of his authorized agents, materially misleads the drawee-bank into the justifiable belief that the indorsement on the check is genuine.

Erickson Co. v Bank, 211-495; 230 NW 342

Forged indorsement—evidence—sufficiency. An indorsement "Hazen Spears" on a check payable to "Hazen Spears" is not shown to be a forgery by evidence (1) that a person by the name of Hazen Speer lived in the county in which the check purported to be drawn and in which it was cashed, and (2) that said Hazen Speer did not make the said indorsement.

Bank of Pulaski v Bank, 210-817; 232 NW 124

Genuineness of signature—jury question. Where in an action on a promissory note the defendant in his answer denies under oath the genuineness of the signature, a jury question is generated by positive testimony of the payee that the purported maker did sign the note, together with expert testimony on handwriting tending to prove that the signature was genuine, met by equally positive testimony by the purported maker that he did not sign the note.

Seibel v Fisher, 213-388; 239 NW 34

Consideration and delivery—proof by presumptions—instructions. The questions of want of consideration and nondelivery of a note, supported only by presumptions, need not be submitted to the jury when such presumptions are not overcome by evidence, and when the only conflict arises over the genuineness of the signature, the submission of this single question was proper.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

CONSIDERATION

9484 [§24] Presumption of consideration.

Consideration implied in contracts generally. See under §9440

Pleading and proof of consideration generally. See under §9441 (1)

Actions—sufficiency of proof. The payee in possession of a promissory note the execution of which is not denied makes a prima facie case for recovery by the simple introduction of the note in evidence.

Henderson v Holt, 201-1017; 206 NW134

Consideration—when operative on all original makers. The consideration which supports a strictly original promissory note operates, in the absence of fraud or mistake, upon all the original and contemporaneous signers of said note; and especially must this be true when a maker who pleads want of consideration signs as a prospective participant in the enterprise.

Starry v Starry, 212-274; 234 NW 281

Executed consideration. The plea of fraud is unavailing in an action on promissory notes given for the purchase price of corporate stock when it appears (1) that the contract of purchase has been fully executed by the note maker, and (2) that there is no plea of rescission.

Conover v Hasselman, 206-100; 220 NW 42

Consideration and signature—resting on presumption. Plaintiff in an action on a promissory note which he has set forth by copy in his pleadings, may, on the trial, introduce the note in evidence and rest his case, it appearing that the purported maker of the note (defendant) has made no denial, under oath, of the genuineness of his signature; and this is true tho the defendant maker has pleaded want of consideration as a defense.

Booth v Johnston, 223-724; 273 NW 847

Failure to plead—effect. Refusal to instruct as to the want of consideration in the signing of a promissory note is proper when defendant (1) causes plaintiff's plea of consideration to be stricken, and (2) does not himself plead want of consideration.

Conner v Henry, 205-95; 215 NW 506

Notes of deceased—prima facie case. In an action in probate by payees of notes to establish notes as claims against maker's estate, the conceded signature of deceased and admission of the notes in evidence establish a prima facie case for claimants.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Notes of deceased—lack of consideration. In probate action to establish as claims notes signed by deceased, evidence submitted by defense to show lack of consideration, was properly held to be insufficient to present a jury question.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Notes of deceased—consideration presumed. In an action in probate to establish notes of deceased as claims, proof of the execution and delivery being established, it is presumed that notes were issued for a valuable consideration and the burden of showing lack of consideration is on the defense.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Note given by decedent in settlement of claim. In an action in probate to establish a claim against the estate based upon a note which was the third renewal of a note originally given as the result of an accounting and settlement between deceased and claimants in 1913, such note is supported by consideration.

In re Humphrey, 226-1230; 286 NW 488

Gifts inter vivos—note as future gift. Altho a promissory note for which there is no consideration is an unenforceable promise to make a future gift, nevertheless in an action against an executor on a note the presumption that the note imports a consideration, if negatived, must be overcome by evidence and this burden is on the maker or his representatives.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Consideration for wife's signature. The signature of a wife to her husband's note and mortgage is supported by ample consideration when her signature was a condition precedent to obtaining the loan represented by the note.

Andrew v Ingvoldstad, 218-8; 254 NW 334

Wife signing to release dower—inadequate evidence to show lack of consideration. The presumption of consideration for a promissory note and mortgage, signed jointly by a husband and wife but evidencing and securing an originally created debt of the husband only, is not overcome, as to the wife, by evidence that she was a stranger to the negotiations for the loan, received no part of the loan, had no interest in the mortgaged lands except a contingent dower interest, signed the instruments without reading them and solely at the request of the husband and solely to release said contingent interest. The fatal defect in such evidence is its failure to establish the fact that the loan would have been made without the wife's signature—that the payee-mortgagee did not part with the money in reliance on the wife's signature.

Northern Trust v Anderson, 222-590; 262 NW 529

Execution by agent. The beneficiaries of a trust, defendants in an action on a note and mortgage executed by their authorized agent, have the burden to show want of consideration.

Daries v Hart, 214-1312; 243 NW 527

Consideration and delivery—proof by presumptions—instructions. The questions of want of consideration and nondelivery of a note, supported only by presumptions, need not be submitted to the jury when such presumptions are not overcome by evidence, and when the only conflict arises over the genuineness of the signature, the submission of this single question was proper.

In re Cheney, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Consideration — accommodation — evidence. Evidence reviewed and held to show that a promissory note was executed without consideration and purely as an accommodation to the payee who was attempting to collect it.

Markworth v Bank, 217-341; 251 NW 857

Parol evidence to establish. Principle reaffirmed that parol evidence may be admissible to establish lack of consideration for a promissory note.

Northern Trust v Anderson, 222-590; 262 NW 529

Assumption of obligations of insolvent estate—consideration. Where heirs of a deceased take up the outstanding obligations of the latter and execute their personal note for the same, their plea of want of consideration, when sued on the note, imposes on them the burden to show that the estate of the said deceased was insolvent.

Alpha Bank v Ostrander, 214-563; 243 NW 198

Corporate note to director. Adequate consideration for a promissory note is revealed by proof that the note was executed by a corporation to one of its directors for the purpose of raising money for the corporation in an emergency, and by supporting proof that the director's check to the corporation for the amount of the note was paid.

Lewis v Grain Co., 214-143; 241 NW 469

Jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a note was signed, without consideration, by defendant after the full execution and delivery of the note by other signers thereof.

Persia Bk. v Wilson, 214-993; 243 NW 581

Signing after execution and delivery by another. The signer of a promissory note may show that he signed it after its full execution and delivery by another signer and that there was no consideration for his belated signing.

Hiatt v Hamilton, 215-215; 243 NW 578

Employing third party note as payment. The payee of an unquestioned promissory note who surrenders the same to the maker, and in payment receives from said maker, under proper indorsement, a negotiable, unmaturing promissory note which the maker holds against a third party, must be presumed, there being no evidence to the contrary, to pay value for the latter note to the full face value of the surrendered note.

Sword v Spry, 205-266; 215 NW 737

9485 [§25] Consideration—what constitutes.

Discussion. See 12 ILR 69—Debt as consideration for signature after delivery

Consideration generally. See under §§9440-9442

Face value presumed actual value. The face value of negotiable instruments and other like or similar choses in action is presumptively the actual value.

Leonard v Sehman, 206-277; 220 NW 77

Pleading. The all-essential element of a plea of failure of consideration is the facts. There need not necessarily be any formal statement "that there was a total failure of consideration".

Miller v Laing, 212-437; 236 NW 378

Detriment—forbearance—benefit. The indorsement of a promissory note subsequent to its full execution is without a supporting consideration, and therefore nonenforceable by the payee, when the payee suffered no detriment and extended no forbearance by reason of such subsequent indorsement, and when no benefit passed to such indorsers by reason of their indorsement.

Northern Bk. v Ellwood, 200-1213; 206 NW 256

Agreement to pay another's debt. A promissory note which represents in part the separate debt of the maker and in part the separate debt of a nonparty to the note, is supported by sufficient consideration when the maker, by reason of the note, obtains a material extension of time in the payment of his debt.

Mohler v Andrew, 206-297; 218 NW 71

Promise to pay another's note. A promise by one party to pay the promissory note of another if such other will do certain things which he is under no legal obligation to do, is supported by adequate consideration.

Lange v Nissen, 208-211; 225 NW 266

Agreement relative to payment by indorser and surety. An agreement by the indorser and accommodation signer of a promissory note that each will pay one-half of the note to the indorsee, and that the accommodation signer will then sue the maker, and pay the indorser one-half of the amount collected, is supported by ample consideration and is enforceable.

Hirtz v Koppes, 212-536; 234 NW 854

Consideration to surety. It is quite immaterial that a surety, in signing a promissory note, received no actual consideration for such signing.

Castelline v Pray, 200-695; 205 NW 339
Windahl v Vanderwilt, 200-816; 203 NW 252
Granner v Byam, 218-535; 255 NW 653

Renewal notes signed by wife—burden of proof. The signing of a promissory note in renewal of the prior original note on which the signer was also a signer, ipso facto constitutes sufficient consideration for such renewal note, even tho no consideration for such renewal signing actually moved to the signer; and if there was no consideration for the original signing, the said signer must assume the burden of so showing.

Aetna Bank v Hawks, 213-340; 239 NW 91

Husband's renewal note signed by wife—contemporaneous signing. The signing of a promissory note by a wife with her husband in renewal of a note signed by the husband alone, is supported by sufficient consideration as to the wife if the wife signs contemporaneously with the husband; otherwise there must be a new consideration as to the wife. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue.

Nolte v Nolte, 211-1289; 235 NW 483

Wife signing without reading. A wife who can read, but, voluntarily and without circumvention, signs, as surety, and without reading, the promissory note of her husband, in pursuance of a prior agreement to that effect between the husband and the payee, is bound thereby, both on the basis of assent and on the basis of consideration.

First N. Bk. v Phillips, 203-372; 212 NW 678

Signing husband's promissory note. Even tho a wife signed a promissory note solely because her husband asked her to do so, and even tho she received no benefit whatever for so signing, nevertheless she is personally liable on the note if it appears that the payee would not, without her signature, have advanced the money for the husband.

Hakes v Franke, 210-1169; 231 NW 1

Wife signing to secure extension on husband's debt. Principle reaffirmed that a wife who signs the promissory note of her husband, in order to enable him to secure an extension of time of his indebtedness, may not say there was no consideration for her signature.

American Bk. v Kramer, 204-49; 219 NW 931
Commercial Bk. v Carey, 207-1060; 224 NW 62

First N. Bank v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

Bates v Green, 219-136; 257 NW 198

Wife signing mortgage and note to release dower. Evidence to the effect that a wife signed, not only the mortgage of her husband, but also the promissory note, and did so in order to enable the husband to obtain the loan and complete the deal, does not establish that the note was without consideration as to her, even tho she asserts that she signed solely to release her dower interest.

Des Moines JSL Bk. v Allen, 220-448; 261 NW 912

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Diercks, 222-534; 267 NW 708

Signing note to release dower—effect. A wife is not personally liable to the original payee of a promissory note which grew out of her husband's real estate transaction to which she was an entire stranger, except that she signed said note (and mortgage) for the sole and only purpose of releasing her possible dower interest.

Gorman v Sampico, 202-802; 211 NW 429
Cooley v Will, 212-701; 237 NW 315

Bates v Green, 219-136; 257 NW 198

First B. & T. Co. v Welch, 219-318; 258 NW 96

Jones v Wilson, 219-324; 258 NW 82

See Bank v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

Husband waiving dower interest. A husband who signs a note and mortgage along with his wife has the burden to show failure of consideration for his signature, and he does not meet such burden by proof that his wife received all of the money borrowed and that he signed the mortgage in order to waive his dower interest.

Penn Ins. v Orr, 217-1022; 252 NW 745

Corporate president's authority to write checks—burden of proof. In action by payee of check drawn by president of corporation for interest on officer's note it was held that payee had burden to prove check was executed by the corporation, that president had no implied authority to give check for interest on officer's personal debt, that president's check on corporation for officer's debt was without consideration as to the corporation, and that payee could not recover on the check as a matter of law without proof of president's authority or benefit received by the corporation.

Smoltz v Meat Co., (NOR); 224 NW 536

Extension of time of payment. Principle reaffirmed that an extension to a debtor of time for payment furnishes ample consideration for the signature to a new note by another for a debt owing by the principal debtor.

Frank Cram v Trust Co., 205-408; 216 NW 71

Scovel v Pierce, 208-776; 226 NW 133

Surrendering note and substituting new note. The act of the payee of a promissory note in surrendering it and thereby waiving his remedy against the signers, and accepting a new note signed in part by new parties, constitutes ample consideration for said substituted note.

Hirtz v Koppes, 212-536; 234 NW 854

Surrender of legal right. The execution of an obligation to make good the embezzlement of a relative is supported by adequate consideration when, in return for the obligation, the obligee waives or surrenders his right to proceed against the embezzler's surety bond.

Smith v Morgan, 214-555; 240 NW 257

Collateral signing. The collateral signing of a promissory note is supported by a consideration (1) when the collateral signer omits to inform himself of the agreement out of which the note arose, and (2) when part of such agreement was that he should sign the note.

Van Houten v Van Houten, 202-1085; 209 NW 293

Notes given in renewal of former notes. Promissory notes given in renewal of former notes of the same party are supported by a sufficient consideration.

Powers v Rogers, 212-1184; 234 NW 849

Surrender of old obligations. A showing that a mortgagee surrendered outstanding notes and mortgages of the mortgagor and took from the mortgagor a new note and mortgage, necessarily reveals full consideration for the latter obligations.

Winterset Bk. v Hams, 211-1226; 233 NW 749

Mutual mistake as to maker's financial worth. The plea, in an action on a promissory note given by a husband to his wife as part of a separation agreement, to the effect that, when the note was executed, the husband and wife were mutually mistaken as to the husband's financial condition, is not established by evidence that a subsequent depreciation in the value of property left the husband insolvent. Whether such plea, if proved, is permissible, quare.

Castelline v Pray, 200-695; 205 NW 339

Cancellation proceedings—laches—when no defense. Delay, on the part of the signer of an unmatured, negotiable promissory note, in bringing action to cancel the note for want of consideration, is quite immaterial when the delay has not been harmful to anyone.

Sterner v Bank, 221-1362; 268 NW 158

Right of action to cancel—nudum pactum. An unmatured, negotiable, promissory note, in the hands of the original payee, will be canceled, in equity, as to a party who signs it without consideration after the transaction giving rise to the note as to the other signer had been fully closed without obligation on the part of said other signer to obtain the additional signature in question.

Sterner v Bank, 221-1362; 268 NW 158

Employing third party note as payment. The payee of an unquestioned promissory note who surrenders the same to the maker, and in payment receives from said maker, under proper indorsement, a negotiable, unmatured promissory note which the maker holds against a third party, must be presumed, there being no evidence to the contrary, to pay value for the latter note to the full face value of the surrendered note.

Sword v Spry, 205-266; 215 NW 737

Pledge of collateral. The naming of a surety as beneficiary in a life insurance policy and the pledging of the policy in order to indemnify the said surety on signing a renewal note constitute a sufficient consideration.

Beed v Beed, 207-954; 222 NW 442

Indemnity against impairment of bank capital. An agreement by the stockholders of a bank with the state superintendent of banking that the former will indemnify the bank (a third party) against loss on certain bills receivable, needs no consideration for its support; but if the rule were otherwise, such consideration is found in the interest of the stockholders in preserving the bank as a going concern and in preventing an impairment of the bank's capital.

In re Prunty, 201-670; 207 NW 785

Guaranty of payment of rediscounts. A written, individual guaranty by the officers of a bank of the payment of all promissory notes which the bank or its officers might take and rediscount with the guarantee is supported by ample consideration, it appearing that the taking and rediscounting of the notes were part of a plan under which the bank could continue to accommodate its customers with loans which it could not otherwise make because of statutory restrictions on loans.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Hill, 207-1375; 221 NW 916

Pre-existing debt. Principle reaffirmed that he who takes an unmatured negotiable promissory note as collateral security for a pre-existing indebtedness is a holder for value.

Des M. Bk. v Stanley, 206-134; 220 NW 80

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Conway, 215-1031; 247 NW 253

Subsequent signing—effect. A party who signs a note after its execution, delivery, and acceptance is not liable to the payee when there was no consideration for such signing, either in the form (1) of some advantage to some of the signers, or (2) of some disadvantage to the payee, or (3) of an agreement, at the time of the original execution and delivery, that the note would be so signed.

Merchants Bk. v Roline, 200-1059; 205 NW 863

Subsequent unauthorized signing — effect. One who signs a promissory note after its execution, delivery, and maturity, and without the consent of the original maker, thereby releases the original maker and makes the note his own: it follows that such belated signer may not successfully assert want of consideration for his signature.

Fairley v Falcon, 204-290; 214 NW 538

Release of existing maker as consideration for signature of new signer. The court will not, in order to supply a consideration for a third party's signing a pre-existing note, hold, as a matter of law, that the said signing, being without the knowledge or consent of the existing signers, (1) worked an absolute release of said existing signers, and (2) constituted the making of a new note by the new signer, when plaintiff was pressing his action on a theory flatly contradictory to such a holding.

Blain v Johnson, 201-961; 208 NW 273

Rent and advances—failure of consideration. The consideration for a lease of mortgaged premises (which mortgage pledges the rents) and for the promissory note given for the rent, wholly fails when the assignee in an unrecorded assignment of the lease and note stands by, during foreclosure, and, without asserting his claim by intervention or otherwise, knowingly permits the mortgagee to foreclose and oust the mortgagor and his tenant, and obtain a decree against the rents and a receiver therefor in order to discharge a deficiency judgment.

Miller v Sievers, 213-45; 238 NW 469

Compromise and settlement. A compromise and settlement which results from a bona fide controversy as to the liability of one of the parties on promissory notes, is final; in other words, there need be no evidence that the party denying liability was not, in fact, legally liable on the notes.

Fairfax Bk. v Coligan, 211-670; 234 NW 537

Compromise and settlement as consideration. A promissory note executed without fraud and in compromise and settlement of a disputed but honestly asserted claim—which may have been unfounded—must be deemed supported by an adequate consideration. Evidence held to support such a finding.

Booth v Johnston, 223-724; 273 NW 847

Accommodation party—consideration—jury question. Absence of consideration for the signing of a promissory note by an accommodation party is properly submitted to the jury when the record justifies a finding that the original delivery of the note was conditional, and for a specified purpose only, and that the accommodation signing was with the design of perpetuating said condition and special purpose, and that the indorsee-plaintiff had ample knowledge of all said facts when he assumed to purchase the note.

Hill v May, 205-948; 218 NW 946

Forbearance — evidence. Evidence held insufficient to establish an agreement to forbear suit on a pre-existing promissory note as a consideration for the signing of the note by a third party.

Blain v Johnson, 201-961; 208 NW 273

Forbearance of suit. An express or implied agreement by the payee and principal debtor in a promissory note to the effect that the time of paying the note shall be extended for one year is supported by ample consideration in that the payee forbears suit for one year, and in that the maker secures the benefit of the forbearance.

Eilers v Frieling, 211-841; 234 NW 275

Directors' note to bank. The directors of a financially embarrassed bank who execute their individual promissory notes to the bank and receive in return certain assets of the bank to which the state banking department had objected, may not say that the notes were executed without consideration.

Andrew v Shimerda, 218-27; 253 NW 845

Directors' note to bank. Ample consideration for promissory notes executed to a bank by the directors and stockholders thereof conclusively appears when undisputed testimony shows that said notes were executed and delivered for the sole purpose of being substituted in lieu of certain questionable assets of the bank and thereby making good an impairment of the bank's capital and preventing the immediate closing of the bank.

Bankers Tr. Co. v Hill, 207-1375; 221 NW 916

Farmers Bk. v Bunge, 211-1357; 231 NW 651

Conveyance by parent to minor child. The fact that a parent has received the earnings of his unemancipated minor child will not support a conveyance to the minor when the conveyance leaves the parent without property sufficient to pay his debts.

Scovel v Pierce, 208-776; 226 NW 133

Disaffirmance by minor and acquiescence. A promissory note executed by a minor for undelivered property is deprived of all consideration by the disaffirmance of the note by the minor prior to any delivery of the property, and by the acquiescence of the payee in such disaffirmance.

Lagerquist v Guar. Co., 201-430; 205 NW 977; 43 ALR 585

Sale of note by agent. When a promissory note is executed and delivered by a principal to his agent, in furtherance of a plan for the agent to sell the note, and thereby secure money with which to pay certain debts of the principal, the consideration becomes complete when the note is sold and the money is received by the agent.

Old Line Ins. v Jones, 206-664; 221 NW 210

Indorsement in blank. An indorsement in blank of a promissory note is necessarily supported by ample consideration when the indorser has a personal interest in the transaction, and likewise when the indorsee parts with his money on the strength of the indorsement.

Kent Bk. v Campbell, 208-341; 223 NW 403

Indorsement without consideration—effect. The indorser of a promissory note may not be held on his indorsement by a holder who is not such in due course, even tho the indorser was the original payee of the note, when he never personally had any interest in the note, and indorsed it solely for the purpose of passing the legal title to the actual owner.

Spurway v Read, 210-710; 231 NW 306

Indorsement without consideration. The indorsement of a promissory note by a stranger thereto, and subsequent to the execution and delivery of the note, must be accompanied by some consideration in order to impose any legal obligation on the indorser.

Young v Jackson, 218-628; 255 NW 877

Conclusiveness of one's own plea. A plaintiff, who, in an action on a promissory note, specifically pleads a definite consideration, must stand or fall thereon. Having fallen, he will not be permitted to advantage himself of a consideration possibly reflected in the record, but not embraced within his own chosen plea.

Persia Bk. v Wilson, 214-993; 243 NW 581

Instructions in re failure of consideration. Instructions in re failure of consideration for a promissory note reviewed and, in view of the record, held quite unobjectionable.

Chariton Bank v Wright, 222-417; 269 NW 439

9486 [§26] What constitutes holder for value.

See under §9485

9488 [§28] Effect of want of consideration.

Failure of consideration—contracts generally. See under §9441

Stranger to contract—volunteer. The signer of a promissory note (no holdership in due course being involved) may plead want of consideration (1) when the note grew out of a transaction with which he was in no manner connected, (2) when he was under no possible obligation to sign the note, and (3) when he received nothing of value for so signing.

Insell v McDaniels, 201-533; 207 NW 533

Wife signing bank note at home. Evidence to the effect that defendant signed a promissory note to a bank at her home, at the request of her husband (an officer of the bank) and that she was paid nothing for so signing and never had had, up to that time, any business transaction with the bank, is quite insufficient to establish the broad plea of want of consideration.

Millard v Curtis, 208-682; 223 NW 489

Wife signing to release dower. Parol evidence is admissible between the original parties to a note and mortgage to show that the wife signed the obligations without any consideration flowing to her, and solely for the purpose of releasing her possible dower interest, and without any knowledge that her signature was being required or demanded by the payee.

Cooley v Will, 212-701; 237 NW 315

Fraud—estoppel to plead no consideration. The maker of a promissory note may not plead failure of consideration when his own fraud brought about such failure.

Cloud v Burnett, 201-733; 206 NW 283

Novation—nonestoppel to plead. The maker of a promissory note is not estopped to plead failure of consideration for the note as to him because of the fact that, subsequent to the signing, he was a party to a contract under which there was a novation of security.

Insell v McDaniels, 201-533; 207 NW 533

Note for stock purchase—unavailable plea. The purchaser of corporate stock in praesenti by cash and by delivering his promissory note to the corporation for the balance, which note is sold by the corporation for cash, may not plead want of consideration when sued on the note, because by such transaction he has acquired the status of a stockholder, even tho no stock has been formally issued to him.

Conover v Hasselman, 206-100; 220 NW 42

Waiver by not pleading. Refusal to instruct as to the want of consideration in the signing of a promissory note is proper when defendant (1) causes plaintiff's plea of consideration to be stricken, and (2) does not himself plead want of consideration.

Conner v Henry, 205-95; 215 NW 506

Note as gift—unallowable conclusion plea. An allegation that the transferee of a negotiable promissory note received it without consideration,—that said transferee was not a bona fide holder for value,—is a conclusion plea, and is not justified by the additional allegation of fact that said transferee took the note as a "donation or gift".

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Indorsement—absence of consideration. The indorser of a promissory note may not be held on his indorsement, even tho he was the original payee of the note, when he never owned any interest in the note, and when his indorsement was wholly without any consideration.

Pomeroy v Bank, 207-1310; 224 NW 512

Disaffirmance by minor—effect.

Lagerquist v Guar. Co., 201-430; 205 NW 977; 43 ALR 585

Corporate president's authority to write checks—burden of proof. In action by payee of check drawn by president of corporation for interest on officer's note it was held that payee had burden to prove check was executed by the corporation, that president had no implied authority to give check for interest on officer's personal debt, that president's check on corporation for officer's debt was without consideration as to the corporation, and that payee could not recover on the check as a matter of law without proof of president's authority or benefit received by the corporation.

Smoltz v Meat Co., (NOR); 224 NW 536

9489 [§29] Liability of accommodation party.

Discussion. See 23 ILR 385—Defenses

Party accommodated. Evidence reviewed and held to show that note was signed as an accommodation for the maker and not for the payee of the note in question.

Hirtz v Koppes, 212-536; 234 NW 854

Holder for value. The holder for value of accommodation paper may, of course, sue the accommodation maker.

Pennington v Nelson, 208-1310; 227 NW 163

When defense. The fact that a signer of a promissory note, negotiable or nonnegotiable, was an accommodation maker, is not, as against third persons, an infirmity or ground of defense.

Aetna Bank v Hawks, 213-340; 239 NW 91

Insufficient defense. It is no defense against the transferee of a promissory note that one of the signers was an accommodation maker, and that the transferee had knowledge of such fact at the time of acquiring the note; and it is immaterial whether the accommodation maker was loaning his name to the payee or to the principal maker.

Aetna Bank v Hawks, 213-340; 239 NW 91

Guaranty of payment. A general, unlimited guaranty of payment of an obligation is absolute. It follows that the neglect of the creditor to collect of the principal debtor becomes quite immaterial.

Schaffer v Acklin, 205-567; 218 NW 286

Varying indorsement of note. An unrestricted indorsement of a promissory note may not be modified by oral evidence to the effect that the indorser was not to be held personally liable on his indorsement.

Aetna Bank v Hawks, 213-340; 239 NW 91

Promises to answer for debt of another. Evidence that promissory notes were accommodation paper, and that the party accommodated was the real debtor, is not a violation of the statute of frauds.

Flack v Linden Bk., 211-15; 228 NW 670

Wife's separate estate—signing husband's promissory note—consideration. Even tho a wife signed a promissory note solely because her husband asked her to do so, and even tho she received no benefit whatever for so signing, nevertheless she is personally liable on the note if it appears that the payee would not, without her signature, have advanced the money for the husband.

Hakes v Franke, 210-1169; 231 NW 1

Parol evidence. Parol evidence is admissible on the issue whether a promissory note is accommodation paper.

State Bk. v Markworth, 203-461; 212 NW 729

Parol on issue of "accommodation". Parol evidence to the effect that the payee of a note assured the maker, when the note was executed, that the maker would never be compelled to pay it is admissible on the issue whether the note was an accommodation note for the accommodation of plaintiff.

First N. Bank v Holley, 200-938; 205 NW 767

Oral testimony as to liability. The accommodating maker of a promissory note may not, in the absence of evidence of fraud, testify that when he executed the note an oral agreement was entered into that he was not to assume any liability on the note.

Citizens Bank v Rowe, 214-715; 243 NW 363

Who was accommodated party. Parol evidence to the effect that the payee of a note orally assured the maker, when the note was executed, and at later times, that the maker was not liable on the note and would never be called upon to pay it, is admissible on the issue whether the note was an accommodation note for the accommodation of the payee-plaintiff.

Security Bk. v Carlson, 210-1117; 231 NW 643

Burden of proof. On the issue whether a promissory note was an accommodation, it seems that the introduction of the note makes a prima facie case for the payee, and that thereupon the maker must establish the fact that the note was an accommodation.

Markworth v Bank, 217-341; 251 NW 857

Consideration — accommodation — evidence. Evidence reviewed and held to show that a promissory note was executed without consideration and purely as an accommodation to the payee who was attempting to collect it.

Markworth v Bank, 217-341; 251 NW 857

Accommodation note to bank. On the issue whether promissory notes were received by a bank in payment of commercial paper surrendered by the bank, it may be shown that the notes were intended by all the parties to be accommodations for the bank receiving the surrender, and to enable the surrendering bank to account as a matter of bookkeeping for the paper in question and that said accommodation notes were not to be paid by the makers thereof but by other means.

Flack v Linden Bank, 211-6; 228 NW 667

Flack v Linden Bank, 211-15; 228 NW 670

Liability—evidence. The maker of an accommodation note is not liable thereon to the party accommodated. Evidence held to show that the plaintiff was the accommodated party, and not the bank of which the makers were directors.

First N. Bk. v Holley, 200-938; 205 NW 767

State Bk. v Markworth, 203-461; 212 NW 729

Execution and delivery—evidence. One who executes and delivers a promissory note solely as an accommodation to another is not liable on the note to the person accommodated. Evidence reviewed and held that plaintiff was not the party accommodated in the execution of the note in question.

Citizens Bank v Rowe, 214-715; 243 NW 363

Ultra vires in re corporate accommodation note. A corporation is not estopped to plead ultra vires in becoming the maker of an accommodation promissory note, from the fact that its officers knew that the payee (who was not the accommodated party) was making advances to the party actually accommodated, when the payee knew (1) that the note was an accommodation solely to the party receiving the advances, and (2) that the note was not executed in conformity with the authority which the corporation had granted to its officers.

Black H. Bk. v Monarch Co., 201-240; 207 NW 121

Directors not to relieve excess bank loans. A director of a bank who executes a promissory note in order to raise the money which he, as a partner, had contracted to put into a partnership for the pecuniary profit of the partners, may not be said to be an accommodation party, even tho the object and purpose of forming the partnership was to relieve the bank of excess loans.

Pennington v Nelson, 208-1310; 227 NW 163

Plea of accommodation guarantor rejected. A nonstockholder of a corporation who, in order to enable the corporation to borrow money, signs a promissory note for the purpose of inducing certain stockholders of the corporation to sign it, may not, when sued on the note, proceed on the theory that he is simply an accommodation guarantor and that the stockholder signers are principals; it follows that the nonstockholder is not entitled to judgment against the other signers for whatever sum he may be compelled to pay on the note.

Bankers Tr. v Beinhauer, 211-112; 233 NW 34

Jury question. Evidence reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue, who was the party accommodated, by the maker of an admittedly accommodation note.

Security Bk. v Carlson, 210-1117; 231 NW 643

Conditional delivery—jury question. Absence of consideration for the signing of a promissory note by an accommodation party is properly submitted to the jury when the record justifies a finding that the original delivery of the note was conditional, and for a specified purpose only, and that the accommodation signing was with the design of perpetuating said condition and special purpose, and that the indorsee-plaintiff had ample knowledge of all said facts when he assumed to purchase the note.

Hill v May, 205-948; 218 NW 946

Breach of agreement—waiver—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a surety signed a renewal note with knowledge that the payee had violated an agreement to apply certain moneys on the preceding note.

Randolph Bank v Osborn, 207-729; 223 NW 493

Signature in blank—estoppel. The maker of a nonnegotiable promissory note who signs it in blank for the accommodation of a bank and delivers it to the cashier of the bank in such incomplete condition, is estopped to plead, against a good-faith and innocent indorsee, that, without his knowledge or consent, the cashier wrongfully inserted his own name in the note as the accommodation payee instead of the name of the bank. This is true because the maker must, under such circumstances, be held, impliedly at least, to have constituted the cashier his agent to fill out and complete the note, and must, as regards the perfectly innocent holder, bear the loss resulting from the wrongful act of his own agent.

First N. Bk. v McCartan, 206-1036; 220 NW 364

Recitals not an adjudication. Recitals in the nondecretal portions of a foreclosure decree that the wife of the maker of the note in question was an accommodation maker are not evidence in a subsequent hearing in probate on the wife's claim against the estate that she was such accommodation maker, especially when the foreclosure order left such question open for future determination.

In re Cohen, 216-649; 246 NW 780

False return—unsustained verdict. Judgments of conviction in criminal cases will be set aside when they are clearly against the weight of the evidence and the instructions of the court. So held where, in a prosecution for making a false bank return, the issue turned on whether certain notes were accommodation paper.

State v Klein, 218-1060; 256 NW 741

NEGOTIATION

9490 [§30] What constitutes negotiation.

Lex loci contractus. A tentative understanding between an Iowa and a Minnesota bank to the effect that the foreign bank would negotiate commercial paper to the Iowa bank and guarantee the payment thereof, becomes a consummated Iowa contract upon the receipt and acceptance in this state of the paper aforesaid.

County Bk. v Jacobson, 202-1263; 211 NW 864

See In re Young, 208-1261; 226 NW 137

Authorized but bad-faith indorsement. The fact that the duly authorized officers of a corporation in indorsing in the name of the corporation a promissory note payable to it were not in good faith furthering the interest of the corporation, will not affect the rights of the good-faith indorsee who was not chargeable with knowledge of the bad faith actuating the said officers.

Lex v Selway Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

Indorsement by executor—effect. An executor may, for a proper consideration, and under a duly authorized permissive order by the court, indorse a promissory note belonging to the estate, and bind the estate to liability on the indorsement.

University Bk. v Johnson, 202-654; 210 NW 785

"Myself" note. Principle reaffirmed that a promissory note payable to "myself" is a nullity until duly indorsed by the maker.

In re Richardson, 202-328; 208 NW 374

Implied authority to negotiate note. The maker of a nonnegotiable promissory note will not be held to be estopped to deny liability on the theory that he impliedly clothed the payee with authority to negotiate the note, when the entire transaction contemplated such transfer.

Hubbard v Wallace Co., 201-1143; 208 NW 730; 45 ALR 1065

Rescission—authority—presumption. The cashier and general manager of a private bank will be presumed to have authority to enter into a contract of rescission relative to the indorsement of negotiable paper.

Runge v Benton, 205-845; 216 NW 737

Indorsement contract—rescission. An agreement between the indorser of a check and the indorsee-bank to the effect that the indorser would return to said indorsee that which he had received for the check, and that the indorsee-bank would return the check to the indorser, constitutes a full rescission of the contract of indorsement.

Runge v Benton, 205-845; 216 NW 737

"Indorsement" or "assignment"—instructions. Instructions relative to acquiring negotiable promissory notes by "assignment", instead of by "indorsement", are quite harmless, when complainant does not claim the rights of a holder in due course.

First Bk. v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767

9491 [§31] Indorsement—how made.

Indorsement in blank—parol explanation. Parol evidence is admissible to show that an indorsement in blank of commercial paper was made solely to enable the holder to make collection, and not to transfer title. Especially is this true when the other writings accompanying the indorsement are ambiguous.

Leach v Bank, 201-349; 207 NW 332

Varying legal effect of blank indorsement. Oral evidence is inadmissible to vary the legal effect of a blank indorsement of a promissory note.

First N. Bk. v Raatz, 208-1189; 225 NW 856
Kent Bk. v Campbell, 208-341; 223 NW 403
See Aetna Bk. v Hawks, 213-340; 239 NW 91

Ratification of unauthorized indorsement. Evidence held to show the ratification of an unauthorized indorsement of a promissory note.

Lex v Steel Corp., 203-792; 206 NW 586

By corporate payee—prima facie sufficiency. An indorsement on a negotiable check payable to the "order of" a corporate payee, tho consisting simply of the name of said corporation, effects a prima facie transfer of absolute ownership of the check to a bank to which the check is delivered by the said corporation as a deposit; and especially so when it appears that said indorsement is in the handwriting of a general, managerial officer of the corporation.

Bureau Service v Lewis, 220-662; 263 NW 7

9493 [§33] Kinds of indorsement.

Blank indorsement. The indorsement "For value received, I guarantee payment and waive protest to F. A. Sword", duly signed by the payee, is, in effect, a blank indorsement.

Sword v Spry, 205-266; 215 NW 737

9494 [§34] Special indorsement—indorsement in blank.

Parol explanation. Parol evidence is admissible to show that an indorsement in blank of commercial paper was made solely to enable the holder to make collection, and not to transfer title. Especially is this true when the other writings accompanying the indorsement are ambiguous.

9495 [§35] Blank indorsement—how changed to special indorsement.

Blank indorsement—material alteration. The act of converting a blank indorsement into a special indorsement is proper so long as the indorser's liability is not increased, but the unauthorized insertion in such special indorsement of a guaranty of payment of any renewal of the note (no such provision otherwise appearing in the note) constitutes a material alteration and releases the indorser.

First N. Bk. v Sweeney, 203-35; 212 NW 333

9496 [§36] When indorsement restrictive.

Deposit for collection—ill-advised indorsement. The payee of a negotiable check who, when depositing it with a nondrawee bank, intends to retain title to the proceeds of the check, should indorse "for collection only" or by words of similar import; should he indorse in blank he thereby presumptively vests said bank with unrestricted ownership of the check, and should said bank forward said check to its correspondent bank with direction to collect "and credit" the account of the forwarding bank, and should said correspondent enter said credit and, in reliance thereon, pay the drafts drawn on it by said forwarding bank to the full amount of said credit, and does so in good faith and without knowledge of any defect in the title of said forwarding bank or that said forwarding bank had ceased to be a going concern, then said correspondent bank will thereby acquire an unimpeachable title to said check, even tho the drawer thereof has assumed to stop payment thereon because of the insolvency of said forwarding bank.

Bureau Service v Lewis, 220-662; 263 NW 7

9498 [§38] Qualified indorsement.

Indorsement "without recourse". The indorsee of a mortgage-secured note is not entitled to a personal judgment against the indorser for the amount due on the note when such indorsee is holding the note (1) under an indorsement "without recourse", and (2) under an agreement by the indorser to repurchase the note in case of nonpayment by the maker at maturity, and when, after the indorser refuses to repurchase, the indorsee continues to treat the note and mortgage as his own property, and sues in foreclosure as such owner.

Hawkeye Ins. v Trust Co., 208-573; 221 NW 486

Agreement to repurchase—effect. The payee of a promissory note does not convert his indorsement “without recourse” into a general and unqualified indorsement by separately executing an agreement to repurchase the note in case it was not paid by the maker at maturity.

Hawkeye Ins. v Trust Co., 208-573; 221 NW 486

Agreement to be bound contrary to indorsement. A contract is not binding on a corporation, tho entered into in its name by its president, to the effect that the corporation shall be and remain liable on promissory notes negotiated by it “without recourse” when authority to the president to enter into such contract cannot be found in the articles of incorporation, in the bylaws, in the proceedings of the directors in any act of corporate ratification, or in the customs and practices of the corporation.

First N. Bk. v Products Co., 209-358; 227 NW 908

Alteration of instruments—indorsement—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question whether an alteration of an indorsement “without recourse” was made as part of the negotiations for the purchase of the note or after the transaction of purchase was fully consummated.

Falcon v Falcon, 214-490; 240 NW 735

9501 [§41] Indorsement where payable to two or more persons.

Essential indorsements. A promissory note payable “to ourselves” and signed by two makers and indorsed by only one of the makers, is obviously an incomplete instrument.

In re Divelbess, 216-1296; 249 NW 260

Indorsement without authority—effect. Where, at a sale of the joint property of a landlord and tenant, promissory notes were, without authority from the landlord or the tenant, taken in their names and later formally indorsed by the tenant in the name of both payees for the sole purpose of obtaining what was due to the landlord and tenant, held that neither of the so-called indorsers was liable as such, and especially the landlord, who did not even know that the notes had been so executed.

Johnson v Watland, 208-1370; 227 NW 410

9502 [§42] Effect of instrument drawn or indorsed to a person as cashier.

Deposit for collection—ill-advised indorsement. The payee of a negotiable check who, when depositing it with a nondrawee bank, intends to retain title to the proceeds of the check, should indorse “for collection only” or by words of similar import; should he indorse in blank he thereby presumptively vests said bank with unrestricted ownership of the check, and should said bank forward said check to its correspondent bank with direction to collect “and credit” the account of the forwarding bank, and should said correspondent enter said credit and, in reliance thereon, pay the drafts drawn on it by said forwarding bank to the full amount of said credit, and does so in good faith and without knowledge of any defect in the title of said forwarding bank or that said forwarding bank had ceased to be a going concern, then said correspondent bank will thereby acquire an unimpeachable title to said check, even tho the drawer thereof has assumed to stop payment thereon because of the insolvency of said forwarding bank.

Bureau Service v Lewis, 220-662; 263 NW 7

Election of remedies. Where a bank credits its correspondent bank with the amount of a check forwarded by the correspondent, and, in reliance on said credit, pays the drafts drawn on it by the correspondent, the act of said crediting bank in canceling the said credit on learning of the insolvency of said correspondent, and in returning said check to the receiver as a claim against the correspondent, is not such an election of remedies as will estop the crediting bank from later contending that it had, in due course of business, become the absolute owner of said check.

Bureau Service v Lewis, 220-662; 263 NW 7

9507 [§47] Continuation of negotiable character.

Negotiability not terminated by maturity. The mere maturity of a negotiable promissory note does not destroy its negotiable character.

Federal Trust v Nelson, 221-759; 266 NW 509

9509 [§49] Transfer without indorsement—effect of.

Applicability. This section has no application whatever to a promissory note payable “to ourselves” and not indorsed by the maker. (See §9501, C., '31.)

In re Divelbess, 216-1296; 249 NW 260

RIGHTS OF HOLDER

9511 [§51] Right of holder to sue—payment.

Real party in interest—disproving ownership of note. The plea that plaintiff in an action on a note as indorsee is not the real party in interest because the note carries a subsequent indorsement by plaintiff to another indorsee becomes of no consequence when said subsequent indorsee is in court and personally causes proof to be made that plaintiff is the real owner of the note.

First Bank v Johnson, 202-799; 211 NW 373

Actions—nonadmissibility as evidence. Promissory notes, when offered in evidence, are properly excluded as to a party not shown to be liable thereon.

West Chester Bank v Dayton, 217-64; 250 NW 695

Transfer of title after action brought—effect. The fact that plaintiff, after commencing an action on promissory notes, transfers the title thereof does not prevent the prosecution of said action to judgment in the name of the original plaintiff.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 213-969; 236 NW 418.

Right to transfer note. A bank which is a going concern, but insolvent, and known by all its officers to be insolvent, may, for full value, validly transfer a promissory note held by it, to a transferee who knows of such insolvency, even tho the incidental effect of such transfer may be to deprive the maker of said note of his right to offset against said note the amount of his deposit in said insolvent bank at the time of the transfer.

Ottumwa Bank v Crawford, 215-1386; 244 NW 674

Conflicting claims to proceeds. The holder of a check who, before payment thereof is stopped, indorses the same to a nondrawee private banker, and unwittingly receives in exchange therefor the worthless draft of said private banker, is entitled, in a subsequent action on the check, to the amount recovered thereon, in preference to the receiver for the private banker. Especially is this true when the banker was insolvent when he issued the draft.

Runge v Benton, 205-845; 216 NW 737

Title to deposited drafts. The act of a consignor in drawing against a consignee a draft (with bill of lading attached) in favor of a bank, and depositing the same in said bank and receiving credit on his checking account to the full amount thereof, constitutes the bank the unqualified owner of the draft and of the proceeds thereof, notwithstanding the fact that at a later time the consignor recognized the right of the consignee-drawee to a reduction on the draft, and requested the bank to make such reduction, and the bank voluntarily complied with the request.

Dubuque Fruit Co. v Emerson & Co., 201-129; 206 NW 872

Bearer or holder of negotiable paper. The trustee in a deed of trust which secures a series of bonds payable "to said trustee or to bearer", and which have been sold and delivered to numerous parties who continue to be the owners thereof, may maintain an action at law against the maker, on all the bonds, (1) when the trust deed empowers the trustee to declare the entire debt due in case of any default of the maker, and to proceed by means of any legal or equitable action to enforce collection, and imposes on the trustee the duty so to declare and proceed when the bondholders request him so to do, and (2) when all said bondholders, after default in payment of interest, individually redeliver to said trustee all of said bonds and specifically request the trustee in writing to declare the entire debt due and to proceed against the maker by legal action. Authority in plaintiff to maintain said action rests on a two-fold legal basis, viz:

1. Plaintiff is the legal bearer and holder of said bonds.

2. Plaintiff is the trustee of an express trust.

Minnesota Co. v Hannan, 215-1060; 247 NW 536

Lien on funds representing check. A drawee-bank which certifies a negotiable check at the request of a stranger to the check, and is informed that the stranger claims a lien on the proceeds, is nevertheless under no obligation to recognize such claim. The bank's sole duty is to pay the check on presentation with proper indorsement.

Parker v Walsh, 200-1086; 205 NW 853; 42 ALR 622

Prima facie showing for recovery. In an action on a promissory note, the introduction of the note with proof of the genuineness of the signature thereto makes a prima facie case for the plaintiff.

Pfeffer v Corey, 211-203; 233 NW 126

Matured principal and interest—permissible splitting of action. When a promissory note and the last interest coupon note both mature at the same time in the hands of the same holder, a judgment in an action solely on the interest coupon note (which contains no promise to pay the principal) is not an adjudication of the amount due on the principal note. In other words, the holder may first sue on the coupon note and later on the principal note.

Des Moines Bk. v Littell, 209-22; 227 NW 503

Accommodation note—burden of proof. On the issue whether a promissory note was an accommodation, it seems that the introduction of the note makes a prima facie case for the payee, and that thereupon the maker must establish the fact that the note was an accommodation.

Markworth v Bank, 217-341; 251 NW 857

Equitable estoppel—silence. The holder of a note and mortgage as collateral, who stands by, and even encourages and assists the maker and payee of the note to execute a rescission of the transaction out of which the note and mortgage arose, may not thereafter assert against the maker his right as a collateral holder, the said maker being ignorant that the said obligations were being so held as collateral.

Iowa Bank v Rons, 203-51; 212 NW 362

Ownership of note—adjudication. A judgment in an action between the payee of a promissory note and a former collateral holder, to the effect that the latter had become and was the unqualified owner of the note, precludes the maker of the note, when sued on the note by the adjudged owner, from rejudicating the ownership of the note on the basis of the same facts existing in the former action.

Commercial Bk. v Allaway, 207-419; 223 NW 167

9512 [§52] What constitutes a holder in due course.

Discussion. See 9 ILB 299—Payee as holder in due course

Payee as holder in due course. Conceding, arguendo, that the payee of a promissory note might, under some circumstances, be a holder in due course, yet he cannot have such standing when he knew, when he acquired the note, that it had not been executed by the proper officers of the corporation maker.

Black H. Bk. v Monarch Co., 201-240; 207 NW 121

Assignment of mortgage or debt. The rights acquired by a holder in due course of a negotiable promissory note attach to and accompany the mortgage securing said note, even tho the mortgage is simply "assigned" to said holder.

Fed. Bank v Sherburne, 213-612; 239 NW 778

Collateral—holder in due course—set-off against holder denied. Where commercial paper is rediscounted or put up as collateral, the holder is a bona fide holder in due course and the plea of set-off is not available against such holder.

Andrew v Union B. & T. Co., 225-929; 282 NW 299

Pre-existing debt as "value". Principle reaffirmed that he who takes a negotiable promissory note as collateral security for a pre-existing debt takes the note "for value".

Miller v Miller, 211-901; 232 NW 498

Employing third party note as payment. The payee of an unquestioned promissory note who surrenders the same to the maker, and in payment receives from said maker, under proper indorsement, a negotiable, unmatured promissory note which the maker holds against a third party, must be presumed, there being no evidence to the contrary, to pay value for the latter note to the full face value of the surrendered note.

Sword v Spry, 205-266; 215 NW 737

Release of surety—nonapplicability of principle. The maker of a fraud-induced promissory note may not claim against a collateral holder in due course that he is released on the note because, without his consent, the collateral holder extended payment on the payee's note for which the fraud-induced note was collaterally pledged, on the theory that the act of collaterally pledging constituted the payee a principal and the maker a surety.

Mid-West Bk. v Struble, 203-82; 212 NW 377

Cashing fraud-induced check — nonliability to maker. The payee of a check, negotiable in form and regular on its face, and received in the ordinary course of business, and for value, and wholly without knowledge of a fraud which attended and induced the execution and delivery of the check, may not be held liable to the drawer of the check for damages consequent on said fraud.

Deater v City N. Bank, 223-86; 272 NW 423

Circumstances evincing bad faith. The indorsee of a negotiable promissory note must, upon proof that the note was fraud-induced, establish his bona fide holdership in due course. Evidence reviewed, and held to furnish substantial support for a finding by the trial court (which tried the case under waiver of jury) that the indorsee had acquired the note under circumstances evincing bad faith.

Windell v Steinhoff, 211-999; 234 NW 795

Burden of proof. The claim that, fraud being shown, the holder must establish his holdership in due course is manifestly answered by a record which, by findings of fact, judicially shows such holdership.

Sword v Spry, 205-266; 215 NW 737

Holder in due course—burden to show. Where a check is issued on a condition, placing limitations on payee's right to negotiate it, in spite of which defective title the check is negotiated to a bank, after which payment is refused by drawee-bank because payment stopped, the burden, in an action, between the bank to whom check was negotiated and the maker, is on the bank to show that it was a holder in due course and had no notice of payee's defective title.

Newton Bank v Strand Co., 224-536; 277 NW 491

Conditionally delivered note—purchaser with knowledge not "holder in due course". Where insurance agent takes an application for life insurance, and as a part of the same transaction notes are executed and delivered conditionally or for specific purpose of paying insurance premium, and a party takes the notes, as security for a loan to the agent, with knowledge that application has not been approved, such party is not a "holder in due course" and cannot enforce payment of the note after application has been rejected.

Economy Co. v Ins. Co., 227-1123; 290 NW 82

Value in form of "credits". Where the purchaser of a negotiable promissory note paid for the same by giving the payee a credit on others of payee's notes then held by the purchaser, the question of the value of said credit should not be submitted to the jury when the uncontradicted testimony shows that the payee was solvent; and this is true even tho the jury finds (contrary to the evidence) (1) that the credit had no value, and (2) that the purchaser was not a holder in due course.

State Bk. v Behm, 202-192; 209 NW 523

Issuance of certificate of deposit to pay note—validity. A certificate of deposit issued by a savings bank in payment of a negotiable promissory note constitutes a payment of value for the note, it appearing that the bank at the time had ample funds on hand for the purchase of said note; and this is true tho the directors had never authorized the purchase in such manner.

9513 [§53] When person not deemed holder in due course.

Burden of proving bad faith. Where payee returned check to maker on account of a debt owing to maker, but by some unknown means again obtained possession of the check, which had not been put in a place of safety, and negotiated it to plaintiff eight days after execution, burden was on defendant-maker to prove plaintiff's lack of good faith in acquiring the check, and lapse of eight days was not such an unreasonable time within statute as to rebut presumption that plaintiff was a holder in due course. What constitutes such an unreasonable time must be determined on facts of each particular case.

9514 [§54] Notice before full amount paid.

Negotiable certificate of deposit as payment. A bank which issues and delivers its negotiable certificate of deposit in exchange for an unmatured negotiable promissory note, then and thereby effects full payment for the note within the meaning of the negotiable instruments law.

People's Bk. v Smith, 210-136; 230 NW 565; 69 ALR 399

Amount recoverable by good-faith holder.

Sword v Spry, 205-266; 215 NW 737

9515 [§55] When title defective.

Fraud—nonavailability. Fraud, in order to be available as a defense to a promissory note in the hands of the original payee, must, of course, in some manner be brought home to the said payee.

Henderson v Holt, 201-1017; 206 NW 134

Incredible representations. The plea of fraud in the execution of a promissory note is not necessarily defeated by the fact that the fraud was such that only a gullible person would rely thereon.

McCorkle v Lessenger, 200-967; 205 NW 781

Parol as affecting writings—plea of fraud. In an action on a promissory note, parol evidence to the effect that the maker was assured that he would never be compelled to pay the note is admissible as bearing on the maker's plea of fraud in the procurement of the note.

Schipfer v Stone, 206-328; 218 NW 568; 219 NW 933

Renewal with knowledge of fraud. A fraud-induced note is validated by the act of the maker in renewing the note at a time when he knew of the fraud, or in reason ought to have had such knowledge.

Home Bk. v Heizer, 200-793; 205 NW 467

Walnut Bk. v Mueller, 202-961; 211 NW 215

Repeated renewals—fraud—effect. The maker of a negotiable promissory note who repeatedly renews the note in the hands of a transferee, with full knowledge of the fraud perpetrated upon him in the execution of the original note, and with like knowledge, necessarily, that an agreement that the original note should not be transferred, had been violated, thereby irrevocably waives his right to rescind the transaction out of which the original note grew.

First N. Bk. v Bensene, 200-1165; 206 NW 122

Renewal—waiver of defense. Principle reaffirmed that the maker of a promissory note waives his defense to the note when he renews the note with full knowledge of the defense; and especially is this true if the maker secures an extension of time.

Euclid Bk. v Nesbit, 201-506; 207 NW 761

Renewal with knowledge of fraud—jury question. Evidence reviewed, on the issue whether a maker of fraudulently procured promissory notes renewed them at a time when he had knowledge of the fraud, or in reason ought to have had such knowledge, and held to present a jury question.

Larson v Bank, 202-333; 208 NW 726

Renewal with partial knowledge—effect. The fact that a fraudulently induced maker of a promissory note knew, when he renewed the note, that one of the very material inducing representations was false does not necessarily constitute a waiver of all other actionable fraud of which he was then ignorant; nor does such knowledge ipso facto charge him with knowledge of such other fraud.

Larson v Bank, 202-333; 208 NW 726

Fraud—similar facts and transactions. A party alleged to have been defrauded may show, on the issue of fraudulent representations inducing the execution of a promissory note, that the defendant made like representations to other parties at about the time in question.

Larson v Bank, 202-333; 208 NW 726

Holder in due course—burden to show. Where a check is issued on a condition, placing limitations on payee's right to negotiate it, in spite of which defective title the check is negotiated to a bank, after which payment is refused by drawee-bank because payment stopped, the burden, in an action between the bank to whom check was negotiated and the maker, is on the bank to show that it was a holder in due course and had no notice of payee's defective title.

Newton Bank v Strand Co., 224-536; 277 NW 491

Conditionally delivered note—purchaser with knowledge not "holder in due course". Where insurance agent takes an application for life insurance, and as a part of the same transaction notes are executed and delivered conditionally, or for specific purpose of paying insurance premium, and a party takes the notes, as security for a loan to the agent, with knowledge that application has not been approved, such party is not a "holder in due course" and cannot enforce payment of the note after application has been rejected.

Economy Co. v Ins. Co., 227-1123; 290 NW 82

Fictitious payee—indorsement as forgery. Principle recognized that the indorsement of a check payable to a fictitious payee, by one to whom the drawer did not intend payment to be made, is forgery.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

Signing without reading. A wife who can read, but voluntarily and without circumvention signs as surety and without reading the promissory note of her husband, in pursuance of a prior agreement to that effect between the husband and the payee, is bound thereby, both on the basis of assent and on the basis of consideration.

First N. Bk. v Phillips, 203-372; 212 NW 678
Legler v Ins. Assn., 214-937; 243 NW 157
See Crum v McCollum, 211-319; 233 NW 678

Rescission—status quo. An offer by the maker of a promissory note, on rescission thereof, to return everything received by virtue of the note is a sufficient offer to put the holder in statu quo.

Larson v Bank, 202-333; 208 NW 726

9516 [§56] What constitutes notice of defect.

When notice imputed to corporate holder. A corporation may not be deemed to be a holder in due course of a negotiable promissory note when its holdership was acquired solely through the instrumentality of its own president, who owned substantially all the stock of the corporation, and who was an active participant in the fraud which permeated the note.

Kenwood Lbr. v Armstrong, 201-888; 208 NW 371

Holder in due course—burden to show. Where a check is issued on a condition, placing limitations on payee's right to negotiate it, in spite of which defective title the check is negotiated to a bank, after which payment is refused by drawee-bank because payment stopped, the burden, in an action between the bank to whom check was negotiated and the maker, is on the bank to show that it was a holder in due course and had no notice of payee's defective title.

Newton Bank v Strand Co., 224-536; 277 NW 491

Instructions in re holder in due course. Instructions in re holder in due course reviewed and, in view of other instructions, held quite unobjectionable.

Chariton Bank v Wright, 222-417; 269 NW 439

Knowledge of agent—when not imputed to principal. The knowledge acquired by the director of a corporation as to the proceedings of its directors will not be imputed to a bank of which the director is cashier, especially when the director-cashier is interested adversely to the bank.

Hancock Bk. v McMahan, 201-657; 208 NW 74

Nonevidence of bad faith. The fact that the transferee of a negotiable promissory note, when he acquired the note, required the transferor to guarantee its payment furnishes no evidence of a lack of good faith.

Williamson v Craig, 204-555; 215 NW 664

Rights on indorsement—holder in due course. One who executes a negotiable promissory note to his agent under an agreement that the agent will sell the note and with the proceeds discharge an existing mortgage on the principal's property, runs the risk that the agent may, in discharge of his own debt, transfer the note, before due, to a bona fide holder.

Mynster v Baker, 215-456; 245 NW 722

Stolen bonds—when purchaser protected. The purchaser of stolen United States liberty bonds will be protected in his purchase when he purchases in good faith, for full value, in the ordinary course of business, and without actual notice or knowledge of any defect in the title of the seller, and without notice or knowledge of any fact which would put said purchaser on inquiry as to said seller's title.

State Bank v Iowa-Des Moines Bank, 223-596; 273 NW 160

9517 [§57] Rights of holder in due course.

Gambling obligations. See under §9442

Former statute—amount of recovery—implied repeal. The former statutory rule (§3070, C., '97) to the effect that when a note has its inception in fraud, a holder in due course could only recover the amount which he paid for the note was impliedly repealed by the enactment of the negotiable instruments law.

Sword v Spry, 205-266; 215 NW 737

Insanity as defense. Neither a negotiable promissory note nor a mortgage given by the makers to secure the same, even tho the mortgage is on a homestead, is subject, when in the hands of a holder in due course, to the plea that the maker was insane at the time of the execution of such note and mortgage.

Farmers Ins. v Ryg, 209-330; 228 NW 63

Liability of indorsee. One who has been induced to issue his check because of the criminal fraud of the payee may not recover the amount thereof from an indorsee on the naked showing that said indorsee received the said check from said payee in settlement of a like criminal fraud perpetrated by said payee on said indorsee.

Bogle v Goldsworthy, 202-764; 211 NW 257

Offsetting deposit against note—loss of right. The maker of a promissory note to a bank may not, after the insolvency of the bank, set off against the amount due on the note the amount of the maker's deposit in the bank, when, prior to insolvency, the note had been transferred by the bank to a holder in due course.

Leach v Bank, 207-1254; 219 NW 496; 224 NW 583

Prima facie case established without disproof—when credibility of witnesses not jury question. In an action on a note by alleged holder in due course, letters written by prior indorsee, after maturity, demanding payment from maker were properly excluded as hearsay, and in the absence of any disproof of prima facie case made under such circumstances it is not the duty of the court to submit case to jury solely on matter of credibility of witness.

Colthurst v Lake View Bank, 18 F 2d, 875

Second mortgage to secure items secured by first mortgage. Even tho a first mortgage on land is, by its terms, security for both accruing interest and taxes, nevertheless, where the owner of the land, after the first mortgage-secured notes had passed into the hands of holders in due course, executes to the mortgagee additional promissory notes in the amount of the then accrued interest and taxes, and secures such notes by an additional mortgage which is distinctly made subject to the first mortgage, the holders of such latter notes may not, as against said holders in due course, claim that such notes are secured by the first mortgage.

Des M. Bk. v Stanley, 206-134; 220 NW 80

Unallowable defense. A promissory note taken by a payee-bank without fraud and on a valuable consideration is not subject to an after-discovered fraud perpetrated on the same maker in the execution of another and different note to another and different party, in a transaction to which the payee-bank was in no manner a party; and this is true even tho the note in question worked a readjustment or rearrangement of the indebtedness represented by the said other note.

Hancock Bk. v McMahon, 201-657; 208 NW 74

Unallowable defense. In an action by the indorsee of a nonnegotiable promissory note for judgment thereon, and to foreclose the mortgage securing the same, it is no defense that the payee of the note did not use the proceeds derived from the negotiation of the note as he and his joint co-adventurers had agreed; and especially is this true where all of said proceeds were used for the benefit of the joint adventurers.

Co. Bluffs Bk. v Towl, 205-1185; 219 NW 315

9518 [§58] When subject to original defenses.

Certificates of deposit—illegal issuance. Certificates of deposit issued by a savings bank in payment or exchange for promissory notes when the bank has no funds with which to pay for the notes are absolutely void in the hands of any holder.

Sweet v Bank, 200-895; 205 NW 470

Defense available against transferee. The maker of a nonnegotiable promissory note who, subsequent to the execution of the note, and before he had knowledge of the transfer of the note, has on deposit with the payee (a private banker), subject to check, an amount equal to the entire amount due on the note, may plead said claim against a transferee of the note when it is made to appear that the said maker, under an arrangement with the banker to apply the deposit on the note, never withdrew any part of said deposit.

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Duress—estoppel to assert. The plea that an obligation was signed under duress must fall when the signer, during a long time following the execution of said obligation, recognized it as legally binding, and caused others to act on such recognition to their detriment.

Smith v Morgan, 214-555; 240 NW 257

Failure to reply to letter as to ownership of instrument. The acceptor of a trade acceptance does not estop himself from pleading defensive matter by failing to reply to a letter from an indorsee to the effect that the indorsee has purchased the acceptance.

First N. Bk. v Power Equip. Co., 211-153; 233 NW 103

Ineffectual rescission—effect on nonholder in due course. The nonholder in due course of a promissory note is not exempt from a plea of fraud in the inception of the note because the maker of the note, after discovering the fraud, had demanded of the payee a rescission, and said payee had agreed to return the note, even tho he did not then own it.

Galloway v Hobson, 206-507; 220 NW 74

Fraud—estoppel. The maker of a negotiable promissory note may not be said to be estopped to plead fraud in the inception of the note, against a transferee, on a record which fails to show that the maker's conduct ever came to the knowledge of the transferee or in any manner controlled his conduct.

State Bk. v Behm, 202-192; 209 NW 523

Fraud—evidence. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue of fraud in the inception of a negotiable certificate of deposit.

Sweet v Bank, 200-895; 205 NW 470

Fraud—evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held ample to show that the promissory note in question was fraud-induced.

Andrew v Hanson, 206-1258; 222 NW 10

North Amer. Ins. v Holstrum, 208-56; 221 NW 215

Fraud — evidence — insufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to present a jury question on the issue of fraud in the execution of notes to a bank by the directors thereof in order to prevent the closing of the bank.

Farmers Bank v Bunge, 211-1357; 231 NW 651

Fraud of payee—failure to establish. In action on promissory note, evidence failed to show payee fraudulently represented amount due upon various occasions when respective accounts were stated.

Conrad v Ashby, (NOR); 247 NW 218

Renewal of fraud-induced note. The renewal of a fraudulently induced note does not, of itself, alter the position of the victim of the fraud.

Hills Bk. v Cress, 205-306; 218 NW 74

Settlement for fraud. A mere promise by the payee of a fraud-induced note to return it to the maker cannot be deemed a settlement of the fraud.

Galloway v Hobson, 206-507; 220 NW 74

Holderhip in due course—burden of proof—circumstances evincing bad faith. The indorsee of a negotiable promissory note must, upon proof that the note was fraud-induced, establish his bona fide holderhip in due course. Evidence reviewed, and held to furnish substantial support for a finding by the trial court (which tried the case under waiver of jury) that the indorsee had acquired the note under circumstances evincing bad faith.

Windell v Steinhoff, 211-999; 234 NW 795

Holderhip in due course—participation in fraudulent transaction—evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held to sustain a verdict to the effect that the acquisition of a negotiable promissory note by the holder thereof was part of a fraudulent transaction of which the holder had full knowledge and in which he actively participated.

Kenwood Co. v Armstrong, 201-888; 208 NW 371

Negating fraud. The plea of fraudulent representation as to the value of property must necessarily fall in the face of testimony that the complainant was a person of unusual business ability and experience and had had long, personal and intimate knowledge of the property in question far superior to that of the alleged wrongdoer.

Tobin v Budd, 217-904; 251 NW 720

Ratification or waiver of fraud. A person who has been fraudulently induced to sign a promissory obligation may not be deemed to ratify or waive the fraud because he is not swift to notify the swindler that his fraud has been discovered.

Commercial Bank v Kietges, 206-90; 219 NW 44

Instructions as regards note not in issue. Instructions relative to the liability of the maker of an original note, are quite harmless when the action is on a renewal note and the instructions relative thereto are correct.

Farmers Bk. v DeWolf, 212-312; 233 NW 524

Nonprotected party. A nonnegotiable instrument in the hands of a third party indorsee is subject to the equities existing between the original parties to the instrument.

Soldier Valley Bank v Camanche Co., 219-614; 258 NW 879

Note as receipt and not as loan. Evidence held to support a finding by the trial court that the nonnegotiable promissory note sued on was not intended to represent a loan by the payee to the maker, but was intended to evidence the fact that the payee had advanced to the maker the sum called for in the note as pro tanto payment of the payee's obligation to the maker.

Second N. Bk. v Mielitz, 211-218; 233 NW 108

Unallowable conclusion plea. An allegation that the transferee of a negotiable promissory note received it without consideration,—that said transferee was not a bona fide holder for value,—is a conclusion plea, and is not justified by the additional allegation of fact that said transferee took the note as a "donation or gift".

Benton v College, 202-15; 209 NW 516

Unpleaded defense—effect. The maker of a promissory note cannot be given the benefit of testimony tending to show that he signed the note under duress when he rests his defense on a distinctly different defense; and the court should so inform the jury.

Farmers Bk. v DeWolf, 212-312; 233 NW 524

9519 [§59] Who deemed holder in due course.

Holder in due course—presumption. The possessor of a negotiable promissory note, as owner, prior to its maturity, is presumptively a holder in due course.

Union Cent. Life v Mitchell, 206-45; 218 NW 40

Holder in due course—sufficiency of evidence. It is not necessarily true in all cases that a bank must prove its holdership in due course of a negotiable promissory note, by the testimony of all the officers of the bank.

Williamson v Craig, 204-555; 215 NW 664

Sufficiency of evidence. Testimony by a bank officer to the effect that he, on behalf of the bank, made the purchase of a promissory note, and that he had no notice of any defense to the note, may be sufficient to establish the bank's holdership in due course, even tho the other officers of the bank do not testify to their lack of knowledge of any defense.

Old Line Ins. v Jones, 206-664; 221 NW 210

Evidence—sufficiency. The corporate holder of a promissory note sufficiently establishes its holdership in good faith and for value by calling those of its officers only who participated in the purchase of said note.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 213-969; 236 NW 418

Sufficiency of evidence. Evidence fairly tending to negative holdership in due course of a negotiable promissory note presents a jury question, especially when not all of the officers of the plaintiff (a bank) testify, and negative knowledge of the pleaded fraud.

State Bk. v Behm, 202-192; 209 NW 523

Evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held to show that the holder of a promissory note was not a holder in due course.

McCorkle v Lessenger, 200-967; 205 NW 781

Evidence of ownership. The introduction in evidence by the payee-holder of a promissory note makes a prima facie showing of right of recovery.

Nolta v Lander, 200-608; 203 NW 710

Burden to show. Where a check is issued on a condition, placing limitations on payee's right to negotiate it, in spite of which defective title the check is negotiated to a bank, after which payment is refused by drawee-bank because payment stopped, the burden, in an action between the bank to whom check was negotiated and the maker, is on the bank to show that it was a holder in due course and had no notice of payee's defective title.

Newton Bank v Strand Co., 224-536; 277 NW 491

Burden of proof. The claim that, fraud being shown, the holder must establish his holdership in due course, is manifestly answered by a record which, by findings of fact, judicially shows such holdership.

Sword v Spry, 205-266; 215 NW 737

Burden of proving bad faith. Where payee returned check to maker on account of a debt owing to maker, but by some unknown means again obtained possession of the check, which had not been put in a place of safety, and negotiated it to plaintiff eight days after execution, burden was on defendant-maker to prove plaintiff's lack of good faith in acquiring the check, and lapse of eight days was not such an unreasonable time within statute as to rebut presumption that plaintiff was a holder in due course. What constitutes such an unreasonable time must be determined on facts of each particular case.

Clarinda Sales Co. v Radio Sales, 227-671; 288 NW 923

Burden of proof—circumstances evincing bad faith. The indorsee of a negotiable promissory note must, upon proof that the note was fraud-induced, establish his bona fide holdership in due course. Evidence reviewed and held to furnish substantial support for a finding by the trial court (which tried the case under waiver of jury) that the indorsee had acquired the note under circumstances evincing bad faith.

Windell v Steinhoff, 211-999; 234 NW 795

Evidence — decree of dissolution. A decree of dissolution of a corporation based on the fraud of the corporation is admissible, on the issue of fraud and want of consideration, against an alleged bona fide holder of a negotiable promissory note which was given to the corporation as the purchase price for its corporate stock, even tho neither of the parties to the action on the note were parties to the dissolution suit.

Andrew v Peterson, 214-582; 243 NW 340

Holder in due course — sufficiency of evidence. A jury question on the issue of holder-ship in due course of a negotiable promissory note is made by the explicit testimony of the trustee-plaintiff for the corporate indorsee that he had sole charge of the negotiations attending the purchase of the note, and that he had no notice whatever of any infirmity in the note; and this is true even tho he did not call all the other officers of the corporation to testify to their want of notice.

Brainerd v Koffmeal, 200-1281; 206 NW 606

Conflicting testimony. Holdership in due course of a negotiable promissory note as collateral security for a pre-existing debt is not shown as a matter of law by testimony which, besides being in part impeached, is uncertain as to how, when, and under what circumstances the note was acquired and when the indorsement was made; and especially is this true when the holdership in due course bears the appearance of being an afterthought, born subsequent to the filing of the petition.

Ottumwa Bk. v Starns, 202-412; 210 NW 455

Conflicting inference from testimony. The court has no right to say that the holder of a negotiable note is a holder in due course and to direct a verdict accordingly when conflicting inferences may be drawn from the facts whether viewed individually or collectively.

Grimes Bk. v McHarg, 204-322; 213 NW 798
Pierce v Lichtenstein, 214-315; 242 NW 59

Earmarks of knowledge of fraud. The extraordinary discount allowed in the negotiation of a promissory note, and the unusualness of the transaction in general, may very clearly create a jury question on the issue of holder-ship in due course.

Sweet v Bank, 200-895; 205 NW 470

Fraud—failure to establish per se. Evidence held insufficient to show as a matter of law that promissory notes were obtained by false representations.

Andrew v Peterson, 214-582; 243 NW 340

Estoppel to plead fraud.

Macedonia Bk. v Graham, 198-12; 199 NW 248

Estoppel to plead fraud. The maker of negotiable promissory notes is not estopped to plead fraud in the inception of the notes because he appeared in the insolvency proceedings against the payee, and obtained judgment for the amount of the notes (which had been negotiated), and in such proceedings took the position, in effect, that the indorsees were holders in due course, when the evidence fails to show that anyone had relied on such course of conduct to his injury.

Citizens Bk. v Martens, 204-1378; 215 NW 754

Waiver of fraud. The holdership in due course of a negotiable promissory note is not put in issue by testimony that a former note of which the note sued on was a renewal was obtained by fraud.

Walnut Bk. v Mueller, 202-961; 211 NW 215

Waiver of fraud. It is quite immaterial whether the holder of a negotiable promissory note is or is not a holder in due course if the maker has waived the circumstances which originally invalidated the note.

Home Bk. v Heizer, 200-793; 205 NW 467

Waiver of fraud. The purchaser of a mortgage-secured promissory note may not rescind on the ground of fraudulent representations as to the value of the security when, with full knowledge of the fraud, he forecloses the mortgage, bids in the property for the full amount of the judgment, and later takes a sheriff's deed to the premises.

Iowa Co. v Bank, 200-952; 205 NW 744

Incompetent witness. In an action on a promissory note by the indorsee thereof, the maker is not a competent witness to testify to the fraud perpetrated on him by the payee in the execution of the note, when, at the time of the action, said payee is insane.

Cherokee Bk. v Lawrey, 203-20; 212 NW 359

Instructions re holder in due course. Instructions in re holder in due course reviewed and, in view of other instructions, held quite unobjectionable.

Chariton Bank v Wright, 222-417; 269 NW 439

Payee as holder in due course. Conceding, arguendo, that the payee of a promissory note might, under some circumstances, be a holder in due course, yet he cannot have such standing when he knew, when he acquired the note, that it had not been executed by the proper officers of the corporation maker.

Black Hawk Bk. v Monarch Co., 201-240; 207 NW 121

Undisclosed principal as indorsee. An indorsee of a negotiable promissory note has no basis for a claim of holdership in due course when he was the sole owner of the note from its inception, and simply took under an indorsement by his own agent, to whom the note had been made payable.

Nolta v Lander, 200-608; 203 NW 710

LIABILITIES OF PARTIES

9520 [§60] Liability of maker.

When indorser primarily liable. A vendor of land who negotiates the purchase-price note received by him, and later either acquiesces in the abandonment of the contract by the purchaser or himself rescinds the contract and conveys the land to a new purchaser, thereby becomes primarily liable on the negotiated note, as between himself and a surety on said note.

First N. Bk. v LeBarron, 201-853; 208 NW 364

Agreement relative to payment by indorser and surety—enforceability. An agreement by the indorser and accommodation signer of a promissory note that each will pay one-half of the note to the indorsee, and that the accommodation signer will then sue the maker, and pay the indorser one-half of the amount collected, is supported by ample consideration and is enforceable.

Hirtz v Koppes, 212-536; 234 NW 854

Extension to principal available to surety—abatement of action. An order of a court of bankruptcy granting, to a maker of a negotiable promissory note, an extension of time in which to make payment, is not personal to said maker only, but inures, under USC, title 11, §204, to the benefit of another maker of said note who in fact signed said note as surety only, but without so indicating on the face of the note; and said latter maker, when sued alone by the original payee, may, for the purpose of abating the action, establish his suretyship and consequent secondary liability.

Benson v Alleman, 220-731; 263 NW 305

Liability of parties—beneficiary of loan. A promissory note executed by the maker in order to raise funds with which to take up his personal indebtedness to a bank is not in any sense the obligation of said bank (1) because the president of said bank personally indorsed the note, or (2) because the payee (who was correspondent for said bank), on accepting the note, credited said bank with the amount, or (3) because said bank applied the credit on the maker's indebtedness to said bank.

Andrew v Bank, 203-1; 212 NW 320

Payment on forged indorsement—negligence not imputable to state. Negligence and laches of public officers in the handling of state funds are not imputable to the state; for instance, in an action to recover from a drawee-bank the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement of a check drawn by a county treasurer against state school funds on deposit with said drawee, it is no defense that the county treasurer was negligent in drawing or delivering the check, or that county officers generally were negligent in not making early discovery of the forged indorsement, and notifying the drawee accordingly.

New Amst. Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Release of surety—nonapplicability of principle. The maker of a fraud-induced promissory note may not claim, against a collateral holder in due course, that he is released on the note because, without his consent, the collateral holder extended payment on the payee's note for which the fraud-induced note was collaterally pledged, on the theory that the act of collaterally pledging constituted the payee a principal and the maker a surety.

Mid-West Bank v Struble, 203-82; 212 NW 377

Release of existing maker as consideration for signature of new signer. The court will not, in order to supply a consideration for a third party's signing a pre-existing note, hold, as a matter of law, that the said signing, being without the knowledge or consent of the existing signers, (1) worked an absolute release of said existing signers, and (2) constituted the making of a new note by the new signer, when plaintiff was pressing his action on a theory flatly contradictory of such a holding.

Blain v Johnson, 201-961; 208 NW 273

Statutory admission of existence and capacity to indorse. The maker of a promissory note who makes it payable "to the order of" a named payee thereby admits the existence of such payee and his then capacity to indorse the note, even tho the maker, when he executed the note, actually believed the named payee to be a corporation, when in fact the payee was only the trade name of an individual.

Schipfer v Stone, 206-328; 218 NW 568

Wife's separate estate—no joint adventure from husband's management. Where a wife inherits real property which is managed, as an incident to their marital relation, by her husband, his individual purchase of livestock in connection with such management and executing his individual promissory note therefor will not make the wife liable thereon as a joint adventure.

Valley Bank v Staves, 224-1197; 278 NW 346

Wife signing husband's notes—unallowable defense. Assuming that a wife was advised, when she signed promissory notes evidencing the husband's sole indebtedness that her signature would have no other effect than to release her dower interest in the husband's land

(which was embraced in the accompanying mortgage which she signed) constitutes no defense to personal judgment against her on the notes when there is no issue or proof of fraud or conditional delivery, no prayer for reformation or proof supporting such prayer, and when the notes are wholly bare of any reference to dower interest.

First N. Bank v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

9521 [§61] Liability of drawer.

Drafts—demand necessary within limitation period. Before an action can be maintained against a drawer upon a check, demand for its payment must be made upon the drawee bank, but the demand cannot be postponed indefinitely and must be made within the 10-year limitation period.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Admitting existence of payee. The statutory provision that by drawing a check the drawer "admits the existence of the payee and his then capacity to indorse" is solely for the protection of the holders in case the drawee fails to pay. The statute does not, in case a check is unwittingly and without negligence made payable to a fictitious person, relieve the drawee of the duty to ascertain the identity of the indorser and the genuineness of the indorsement.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

Deposits—cancellation of credit. A bank which, having issued foreign exchange, later receives it back (when its value is problematical), under an agreement to sell the same and collect the proceeds, does not thereby become the owner either of the returned exchange or of a check subsequently received as the result of the collection, and may cancel a credit which was entered on the mistaken assumption that the check was of face value.

Tropena v Bank, 203-701; 213 NW 398

Dishonor by drawee—drawer's recourse to drawee's funds in indorsee's hands. When a check is honored by the drawee's depository bank in satisfaction of payee's debt to said bank, and is properly charged to the drawee's deposit in said bank, and is later dishonored by the drawee because of insolvency, the cancellation of all of said entries, and the return of said check to the drawer who paid the amount thereof to the payee, leaves the drawer without any claim against the funds of the drawee in the said depository bank.

Davis Bros. v Bank, 216-277; 249 NW 170

Payment on forged indorsement—recovery—negligence. Evidence reviewed, in an action by a depositor against a bank to recover the amount paid by the bank on a forged indorsement, and charged to the depositor's account, and held ample to support a finding that the depositor was not guilty of any negligence which prejudiced the bank.

McCornack v Bank, 207-274; 222 NW 851

Drafts—laches in presentment—action barred. An action to collect a draft is barred by the statute of limitations where no presentment for payment is made for over 19 years, on the theory that a creditor may not postpone the running of the statute by his own neglect or inaction.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

9525 [§65] Warranty where negotiation by delivery.

"Without recourse"—liability. The payee of a promissory note who, without fraud or deceit, indorses "without recourse" both the note and the mortgage securing it, cannot be deemed to warrant the solvency of the maker of the note.

Leekley v Short, 216-376; 249 NW 363; 91 ALR 394

9526 [§66] Liability of general indorser.

Absence of consideration. The indorser of a promissory note may not be held on his indorsement, even though he was the original payee of the note, when he never owned any interest in the note, and when his indorsement was wholly without any consideration.

Pomeroy v Bank, 207-1310; 224 NW 512

Agreement relative to payment by indorser and surety—enforceability. An agreement by the indorser and accommodation signer of a promissory note that each will pay one-half of the note to the indorsee, and that the accommodation signer will then sue the maker, and pay the indorser one-half of the amount collected, is supported by ample consideration and is enforceable.

Hirtz v Koppes, 212-536; 234 NW 854

Agreement to repurchase as guaranty. An agreement by the seller of a promissory note to repurchase the note of the vendee, in the event of nonpayment at maturity, cannot be given the force and effect of a guaranty that the maker will pay at maturity.

Hawkeye Ins. v Trust Co., 208-573; 221 NW 486

Change of venue—indorser sued in wrong county. The indorser in blank of a promissory note, when sued alone on his indorsement in the county in which the note requires the maker to make payment, is entitled to a change of venue to the county of his residence when said first county is not the county of his residence in this state.

Dougherty v Shankland, 217-951; 251 NW 73
See Darling v Blazek, 142-355; 120 NW 961

Disaffirmance of promissory note—release of surety. The disaffirmance by a minor of his contract of purchase and of his negotiable promissory note given in connection therewith, before the property is delivered to him, releases the surety on the note of all liability to the payee, even tho the surety signed the note because of the known minority of the principal. In case the note has passed to a holder in due course by indorsement by the payee, the liability of the indorser becomes primary and the liability of the surety becomes secondary.

Lagerquist v Guar. Co., 201-430; 205 NW 977; 43 ALR 585

Delivery—parol evidence affecting. Where the holder of a promissory note indorsed and surrendered it, and received in payment the duly indorsed note of a third party, parol evidence that, at the time the respective indorsements were made, there was talk to the effect that if such indorsements were made, one indorsement would cancel the other indorsement, has no probative force to show (1) inducement, or (2) conditional delivery, or (3) delivery for a specific purpose, of said indorsements, or (4) that the paid note was reissued and payment thereof guaranteed.

Versteeg v Hoeven, 214-92; 239 NW 709

Forged indorsement—evidence—sufficiency. An indorsement "Hazen Spears" on a check payable to "Hazen Spears" is not shown to be a forgery by evidence (1) that a person by the name of Hazen Speer lived in the county in which the check purported to be drawn and in which it was cashed, and (2) that said Hazen Speer did not make the said indorsement.

Bank of Pulaski v Bank, 210-817; 232 NW 124

Indorsement without consideration—effect. The indorser of a promissory note may not be held on his indorsement by a holder who is not such in due course, even tho the indorser was the original payee of the note, when he never personally had any interest in the note, and indorsed it solely for the purpose of passing the legal title to the actual owner.

Spurway v Read, 210-710; 231 NW 306

Judgment against maker—effect. A judgment obtained by the indorsee of a promissory note solely against the maker thereof, does not adjudicate or affect any right or obligation of the indorser.

Callaway v Hauser Bros., 211-307; 233 NW 506

Liability of indorsee. One who has been induced to issue his check because of the criminal fraud of the payee may not recover the amount thereof from an indorsee on the naked showing that said indorsee received the said check from said payee in settlement of a like criminal fraud perpetrated by said payee on said indorsee.

Bogle v Goldsworthy, 202-764; 211 NW 257

Liability of parties—beneficiary of loan. A promissory note executed by the maker in order to raise funds with which to take up his personal indebtedness to a bank is not in any sense the obligation of said bank (1) because the president of said bank personally indorsed the note, or (2) because the payee (who was correspondent for said bank), on accepting the note, credited said bank with the amount, or (3) because said bank applied the credit on the maker's indebtedness to said bank.

Andrew v Bank, 203-1; 212 NW 320

Neglect to collect of maker. The plea of the indorser of a note that the indorsee negligently failed to file a claim against the estate of the maker for the amount of the note becomes of no consequence when it appears that the indorser himself had filed such claim.

First Bk. v Johnson, 202-799; 211 NW 373

Parol modification. Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the legal effect of an indorsement in blank of a promissory note.

Union Mtg. v Evans, 200-1000; 205 NW 776

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

Kent Bk. v Campbell, 208-341; 223 NW 403

First N. Bk. v Raatz, 208-1189; 225 NW 856

See Leach v Bank, 201-349; 207 NW 332

Payment by indorser reverts original rights. The payee of a promissory note who indorses with recourse, necessarily continues to be a party to the note, and if he pays the note when due because of the default of the maker, he thereby re-acquires his original rights under the note. It follows that if the note was originally given for the purchase price of property, the indorser may enforce said note against such property, and it is quite immaterial that he does so under a duly assigned judgment obtained by the indorsee against the maker.

Callaway v Hauser Bros., 211-307; 233 NW 506

Unallowable counterclaim. A defendant sued on his indorsement of a promissory note manifestly may not avail himself, by way of counterclaim, of an indorsement by plaintiff to defendant of a promissory note which has been fully discharged. Somewhat unusual circumstances reviewed and held to show such discharge.

Versteeg v Hoeven, 214-92; 239 NW 709

PRESENTMENT FOR PAYMENT

9530 [§70] Effect of want of demand on principal debtor.

Deposit certificate—action accrues only after demand. Makers of notes, acceptors of bills of exchange and issuers of certificates of deposit are charged on the instruments from their inception, and presentment to the maker or acceptor is unnecessary; but, as to the issuer of a certificate of deposit, there is an imputed agreement that before the depositor may sue the bank thereon, actual demand is necessary to mature the debt.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

"Reasonable time" for presentment—primary and secondary liability. The "reasonable time" clause of §9531, C., '35, negotiable instruments law, applies only to persons secondarily liable on the instrument. It has no application in determining what is a reasonable time for presentment where such step is only preliminary to the enforcement of a remedy against a party primarily liable.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Insufficient excuse for nonpresentment. Principle reaffirmed that presentment for payment of a negotiable promissory note is not excused because the bank which is named as the place of payment is insolvent, or because the indorser knew of such insolvency.

Wood v Roe, 205-399; 218 NW 51

Drafts—statute runs after reasonable time for presentment. Where no demand or presentment for payment of draft is made for over 19 years after its issuance, and where only person who could make due presentation was plaintiff-holder, the statute of limitations began to run after a reasonable time for presentment.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Lapse of time with other circumstances—presumption. Mere lapse of time for less than 20 years may, with other circumstances, raise a presumption of payment, but it is not alone sufficient.

Citizens Bank v Probasco, (NOR); 233 NW 510

Nonpresentment of check. The plea that a loss resulting from the nonpayment of a check must be borne by the payee because of delay by the attorney who received it to present it for payment must fall when there is no showing that the attorney had authority to make the indorsement.

Prudential v Hart, 205-801; 218 NW 529

Pleading. In an action on a negotiable promissory note and against the indorser thereof, the petition is demurrable when it fails to allege (1) that presentation and demand of payment were made on the due date of the instrument, and (2) that notice of dishonor was served on the indorser within the time required by the statute.

Wood v Roe, 205-399; 218 NW 51

9531 [§71] Presentment—instrument payable and not payable on demand.

"Reasonable time" for presentment—primary and secondary liability. The "reasonable time" clause of this section applies only to persons secondarily liable on the instrument. It has no application in determining what is a reasonable time for presentment where such step is only preliminary to the enforcement of a remedy against a party primarily liable.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Drafts—demand necessary within limitation period. Before an action can be maintained against a drawer upon a check, demand for its payment must be made upon the drawee bank, but the demand cannot be postponed indefinitely and must be made within the 10-year limitation period.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Drafts — laches in presentment — action barred. An action to collect a draft is barred by the statute of limitations where no presentment for payment is made for over 19 years, on the theory that a creditor may not postpone the running of the statute by his own neglect or inaction.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Notice—pleading. In an action on a negotiable promissory note and against the indorser thereof, the petition is demurrable when it fails to allege (1) that presentation and demand of payment were made on the due date of the instrument, and (2) that notice of dishonor was served on the indorser within the time required by the statute.

Wood v Roe, 205-399; 218 NW 51

9532 [§72] Sufficient presentment.

Demand and notice—pleading. In an action on a negotiable promissory note and against the indorser thereof, the petition is demurrable when it fails to allege (1) that presentation and demand of payment were made on the due date of the instrument, and (2) that notice of dishonor was served on the indorser within the time required by the statute.

Wood v Roe, 205-399; 218 NW 51

9533 [§73] Place of presentment.

Presentment, demand, and notice—failure to make. Principle reaffirmed that presentment for payment of a negotiable promissory note is not excused because the bank which is named as the place of payment is insolvent, or because the indorser knew of such insolvency.

Wood v Roe, 205-399; 218 NW 51

Note payable at particular place. Principle reaffirmed that the fact that a note is payable at a particular office does not authorize the persons in charge of said office to receive payment without the production and surrender of the note, nor warrant the belief on the part of the maker that said persons were so authorized.

Engelke v Drager, 213-598; 239 NW 569

9534 [§74] Instrument must be exhibited.

Agent's authority to receive payment. The maker of a promissory note who pays it to one who is not the payee or indorsee and does not receive a surrender of the note, must show that the recipient of the payment had actual or implied authority from the payee or holder to receive payment.

Engelke v Drager, 213-598; 239 NW 569

Note payable at particular place. Principle reaffirmed that the fact that a note is payable at a particular office does not authorize the persons in charge of said office to receive payment without the production and surrender of the note, nor warrant the belief on the part of the maker that said persons were so authorized.

Engelke v Drager, 213-598; 239 NW 569

9535 [§75] Presentment where instrument payable at bank.

Presentment, demand, and notice—failure to make. Principle reaffirmed that presentment for payment of a negotiable promissory note is not excused because the bank which is named as the place of payment is insolvent, or because the indorser knew of such insolvency.

Wood v Roe, 205-399; 218 NW 51

9542 [§82] Presentment dispensed with.

Guaranty with agreement for extension. A guarantor of payment of a promissory note who waives demand and consents to renewals and extensions must keep himself informed as to the nonpayment of the paper and protect himself if he can.

Granger v Graef, 203-382; 212 NW 730

9545 Holidays affecting presentation.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 890, 896

Execution of promissory notes—subsequent ratification—effect. A plea that promissory notes were executed on Sunday is avoided by a plea, and proof thereof, that the maker of the notes subsequently ratified the execution of said notes.

9548 [§87] Rule where instrument payable at bank.

Construction—notes designed to resemble checks and so treated. Instruments for the payment of obligations, which papers resembled checks and were treated as such, but upon which the maker had cleverly executed certain qualifying words whereby he hoped that they could be treated as promissory notes, held to be in fact ordinary checks when it was noted that the payee was required to indorse them before payment.

State v Doudna, 226-351; 284 NW 113

Refusal of bank to pay. Making a promissory note payable at a named bank is equivalent to an order to the bank to pay the note, but such statutory rule has no application when the bank does not see fit to make such payment.

Iowa Co. v Seaman, 203-310; 210 NW 937

9549 [§88] What constitutes payment in due course.

Bills and notes—actions—prima facie proof of default in payment. The introduction in evidence of a promissory note which fails to carry any indorsement of the payment of an installment which, under the terms of the note, is past due, establishes, prima facie, a default in payment enabling the holder to avail himself of an accelerating payment clause in the note.

First Bank v Kruse, 219-1229; 260 NW 665

NOTICE OF DISHONOR

9550 [§89] Notice of dishonor.

Notice and protest—allowable and unallowable proof. Testimony tending to show the contents of a lost official notarial certificate of protest of a promissory note is inadmissible, but the facts constituting a legal protest of the note may, in such case, be established by any competent oral testimony.

Frank v Johnson, 212-807; 237 NW 488; 75 ALR 128

Pleading. In an action on a negotiable promissory note and against the indorser thereof, the petition is demurrable when it fails to allege (1) that presentation and demand of payment were made on the due date of the instrument, and (2) that notice of dishonor was served on the indorser within the time required by the statute.

Wood v Roe, 205-399; 218 NW 51

Waiver of notice. A surety may not complain that he was not notified of the nonpayment of the note by the principal when the surety has expressly waived notice of nonpayment.

Davenport v Mullins, 200-836; 205 NW 499

9564 [§103] Where parties reside in same place.

Presentment, demand, and notice—pleading. In an action on a negotiable promissory note and against the indorser thereof, the petition is demurrable when it fails to allege (1) that presentation and demand of payment were made on the due date of the instrument, and (2) that notice of dishonor was served on the indorser within the time required by the statute.

9566 [§105] When sender deemed to have given due notice.

Delay. Mere delay in the delivery to an indorser of a notice of dishonor of a negotiable instrument is not sufficient to make a jury question on the issue whether such notice, properly addressed, was mailed within the statutory time, when the record reveals positive testimony of such mailing.

City Bk. v Edson, 202-671; 210 NW 898

9570 [§109] Waiver of notice.

Waiver by agreement. An indorser who has specifically agreed to carry out an extension agreement which provides for optional maturity if the interest be not paid, is not entitled to demand presentment and notice of dishonor when the option is exercised.

Hansen v Bowers, 208-545; 223 NW 891

Waiver by conduct. An indorser may, by his conduct, both before and after dishonor, clearly waive the failure to present the note to the maker and to accord him (the indorser) notice of such dishonor.

Hansen v Bowers, 208-545; 223 NW 891

Waiver by subsequent promise. Presentment to and demand on the maker and notice to the indorser of dishonor are waived by the subsequent unconditional promise of the indorser to pay the obligation.

County Bk. v Jacobson, 202-1263; 211 NW 864

9576 [§115] When notice need not be given to indorser.

Discussion. See 12 ILR 175—Joint accommodation indorsers—notice of dishonor 9579 [§118] When protest need not be made—when must be made.

Allowable and unallowable proof. Testimony tending to show the contents of a lost official notarial certificate of protest of a promissory note is inadmissible, but the facts constituting a legal protest of the note may, in such case, be established by any competent oral testimony.

Conditional delivery of note. See under §9476

Payment—acts constituting. The act of a bank (1) in receiving, without authority, payment of its customer's notes at a time when said bank had either rediscounted or collaterally pledged and indorsed said notes to another bank, and (2) in forwarding to the then holder a draft and other remittances sufficient to cover the amount of the notes, and the act of the then holder (1) in accepting the remittances, (2) in marking the notes "paid", and (3) in returning them, work a complete payment of the notes, even tho the draft was not paid, owing to the failure of the drawer-bank, it appearing that, at the time of each transaction, both parties had entered the proper debits and credits on their mutual accounts in harmony with the theory of payment.

Leach v Bank, 204-493; 215 NW 617

Payment—acts constituting. Payment of a check which is amply protected by an available deposit is effected by the act of the payee in presenting it to the drawee-bank for payment, in having it honored, and in receiving, at his own request, in lieu of cash, a certificate of deposit on the bank on which the check was drawn, even tho the certificate of deposit is not paid, owing to the subsequent failure of the bank.

Cavanaugh v Praska, 205-660; 216 NW 15

Payment—acts constituting. Absolute payment of a promissory note is established by a showing that the payee received as payment from his collecting agent the full amount of the note, and thereafter retained said amount, and that his right so to do was not questioned by anyone; and this is true even tho it does appear that the check which was forwarded to the collecting agent in payment of the note went to protest.

Braun v Cox, 202-1244; 211 NW 891

Payment by check. A draft is paid (1) by the act of the drawee in delivering to the collecting bank his personal check for the amount of the draft on his ample checking account in said bank without knowledge that the bank was then insolvent, and (2) by the act of the bank in surrendering the draft to the drawee, and in marking the check "paid", and charging the amount thereof to the check drawer's account,—the bank then having on hand ample funds with which to pay said check.

Wells Oil v Supply Co., 206-1010; 221 NW 547; 65 ALR 1145

Check not necessarily payment. A check issued by an insurer for the amount of an adjusted loss and payable to a mortgagor and mortgagee, jointly, and never cashed because the mortgagor refused to indorse it, cannot be deemed a payment of the loss when there was no express or implied agreement to that effect—when the insurer-drawer first asserted such claim after the bank on which the check was drawn failed.

Union Ins. v Ins. Co., 216-762; 249 NW 653

Payment by note. A mortgagee who accepts from the mortgagor the latter's promissory note for an item of interest, and in his then and subsequent conduct treats such note as payment of the said interest, will not be permitted to enforce payment of such interest against one who has assumed and agreed to pay said mortgage.

Gilmore v Geiger, 206-161; 220 NW 7

Payment—incompleted transactions. An agreement to the effect that the payee of a promissory note would accept as pro tanto payment an outstanding promissory note for a lesser amount in which he was maker, does not constitute payment of said smaller note when the agreement was never carried out, even to the extent of delivering said smaller note to the maker thereof, or to the extent of indorsing the amount thereof on the larger note.

Jasper Bk. v Saheroff, 205-774; 218 NW 486

Payment by guarantor—effect. Payment of a promissory note by the guarantor thereof will be deemed a purchase of the note as regards the maker, when such is the manifest intent of the guarantor.

Whitney v Eichner, 204-1178; 216 NW 625

Application of payments. A chattel mortgagee who consents to the shipment and sale of the mortgaged property in his name must obey the instructions of the mortgagor to apply the receipts on the mortgage-secured debt, irrespective of his right in the absence of such instructions.

Reichenbach v Bank, 205-1009; 218 NW 903

Application of payment prejudicial to surety. The fact that the common maker of two promissory notes signed by different sureties and payable to the same payee was aided by a loan by one of the sureties in order to enable the common maker to make up the amount of a payment to the payee, with the understanding that the total payment would be applied—indorsed—on the note on which said surety was obligated, does not estop or prevent the payee long afterwards (five years) from applying said payment (in accordance with the wishes of the common maker) on the note on which said surety was not obligated, the payee having no knowledge of said agreement. And this is true tho the common maker, and the surety on the note receiving the application, had, in the meantime, become insolvent.

Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

Contradicting method of payment. A promissory note "payable in gold coin of the United States" may not be modified by a parol agreement, contemporaneous with the execution of the note, to the effect that the payee might pay the note by surrendering stock certificates which were pledged as collateral to the note.

Union Mtg. v Evans, 200-1000; 205 NW 776

Judgment—when not payment. The entry of judgment against the maker and assumptors of a note does not work a payment and discharge of the note as to an indorser, especially when the cause was continued to a future day for hearing on the liability of the indorser.

Hansen v Bowers, 208-545; 223 NW 891

Note payable at particular office. Principle recognized that the fact that a promissory note is payable at the office of a particular person does not, in and of itself, authorize or empower such particular person to receive payment on the note.

Whitney v Krasne, 209-236; 225 NW 245
Engelke v Drager, 213-598; 239 NW 569

Note payable at particular place. Principle reaffirmed that the fact that a note is payable at a particular office does not authorize the persons in charge of said office to receive payment without the production and surrender of the note, nor warrant the belief on the part of the maker that said persons were so authorized.

Engelke v Drager, 213-598; 239 NW 569

Payment to agent without production of note. Payment of a promissory note to one who is the actual or implied agent of the owner of the note, even tho the note is not produced and surrendered, effects a full discharge of the note, even tho the payer supposed he was making payment to the actual owner of the note.

Lusby v Bank, 207-147; 217 NW 459; 222 NW 450

Carr v Benjamin, 207-1139; 222 NW 373
Whitney v Krasne, 209-236; 225 NW 245
Northwest. Life v Blohm, 212-89; 234 NW 268

Payment without production of note. The maker of a promissory note who makes partial payment thereof to the original payee at the office at which the note is payable by its terms, and at a time when an assignment of the note (and mortgage securing it) is of record, without knowing that said original payee has possession of said note, and without demanding the production of said note, must, in order to receive credit on the note, prove that said original payee was then the agent of the then holder of said note to receive payment; and especially is this true when at the time of payment no part of the principal and no interest were due.

Holden v Batten, 215-448; 245 NW 750

Payment without production of note—effect. Principle reaffirmed that the payment of a negotiable promissory note without the production and surrender of the note is at the peril of the payer.

Commercial Bk. v Allaway, 207-419; 223 NW 167

Payment without production of note. The maker of a promissory note secured by mortgage who pays the same to the payee-mortgagee without requiring the production and surrender of the note does so at his peril, even tho the record reveals no assignment of the note and mortgage, such maker not being a subsequent purchaser, within the meaning of the recording acts.

Shoemaker v Nodland, 202-945; 211 NW 567
 Shoemaker v Ragland, 202-947; 211 NW 564
 Shoemaker v Minkler, 202-942; 211 NW 563
 Wood v Swan, 206-1198; 221 NW 791

Right to possession of note. The court very properly refuses to instruct that a surety on a promissory note has a right to the possession of the note when it is paid by the principal maker.

Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

Wrongful receipt of payment of note—ratification. The payee of a promissory note does not ratify and confirm the act of a third person in wrongfully receiving payment of the note by subsequently receiving and accepting partial payments from said wrongdoer.

Moron v Tuttle, 211-584; 233 NW 691

"Payment" is affirmative defense.

Columbia College v Hart, 204-265; 213 NW 761

Equitable estoppel—evidence—degree of proof required. The plea of a surety on a promissory note that he, under an arrangement with the principal maker, furnished a portion of the funds with which to make full payment of the note, but that the payee wrongfully applied said payment on another note owing by said maker, and that, therefore, said payee is estopped to maintain an action against him, must be supported by clear, convincing, and satisfactory evidence that said payee had full knowledge of said arrangement before he made application of said payment.

Reason: Fundamentally, estoppel is not a favorite of the law.

Stookesberry v Burgher, 220-916; 262 NW 820

Evidence of payment—burden of proof. A debtor has the burden to establish his plea that the creditor accepted a check in full payment of the debt in question.

Kruidenier Co. v Manhardt, 220-787; 263 NW 282

Payment—burden of proof. A plaintiff who alleges the nonpayment of the note and mortgage which he is seeking to foreclose must prove such nonpayment even tho defendant pleads payment.

Larson v Church, 213-930; 239 NW 921

Payment—burden of proof. Defendants, claiming payment on note which plaintiff denied, had burden to prove such payment by a preponderance of evidence, whether payment was made as partial payment on note or on property purchased, held for jury.

Sager v Skinner, (NOR); 229 NW 846

Burden of proof. The maker of a promissory note who claims prospective credits on the note, other than those shown by the record, must point out and establish such credits.

Aetna Bank v Hawks, 213-340; 239 NW 91

Unchangeable burden to show payment.

Riggs v Gish, 201-148; 205 NW 833

Circumstantial evidence showing payment. Payment of a promissory note may be established by circumstantial evidence, i. e., that the payee was a careful business man; that the maker and payee resided in the same place; that business transactions occurred between them which might have furnished opportunity for payment; that the note was always readily collectible; that no annual interest and no part of the principal were ever indorsed on the note; that 17 years elapsed from the maturity of the first annual interest, and 11 years after the maturity of the principal before any claim was made on the note and then only after the death of both maker and payee.

Finley v Thorne, 209-343; 226 NW 103

Deceased payee—proof of payment—when interested witness competent. In a proceeding between the maker of a promissory note and the administratrix of the estate of the deceased payee (involving the issue whether said note had been paid), the wife of said maker, tho herself a joint maker of said note, is a competent witness to testify to a conversation and transaction which occurred between her husband and said payee and which strongly tended to establish said payment—provided said witness took no part in said conversation and transaction.

In re Fish, 220-1247; 264 NW 123

Payment—insufficient evidence. Evidence held wholly insufficient to present a prima facie showing of payment.

McCornack v Bank, 207-274; 222 NW 851

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held quite insufficient to establish payment of a note.

Andrew v Ingvaldstad, 218-8; 254 NW 334

Payment—sufficient evidence. Testimony reviewed, and held that defendant had established his plea of payment of interest by the equivocal and contradictory testimony of the plaintiff.

Pace v Mason, 206-794; 221 NW 455

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held to show that a party who received money with which to pay a note and mortgage was the agent of the maker of the note and mortgage and not of the payee thereof.

Clayton Bk. v McMorrow, 209-165; 225 NW 859

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held wholly insufficient to show that a party who received the amount due on a note and mortgage was the agent of the holder to receive such payment.

Wood v Swan, 206-1198; 221 NW 791

Presumption of payment. The law will presume that a check was paid on proof that the check was, subsequent to its execution, (1) stamped "Paid", and (2) charged by the drawee to the account of the drawer.

Andrew v Bank, 207-407; 219 NW 929

Presumption from payment. Mere proof that a check payable to a bank was paid by the remotely located drawee will not warrant the presumption that the amount of such payment actually reached the payee bank and became a part of its cash assets.

Andrew v Bank, 207-407; 219 NW 929

Lapse of time with other circumstances—presumption. Mere lapse of time for less than 20 years may, with other circumstances, raise a presumption of payment, but it is not alone sufficient.

Citizens Bank v Probasco, (NOR); 233 NW 510

Presumption from possession. Possession of an unmatured negotiable promissory note by the maker thereof creates no presumption of payment and discharge, especially when such possession is open to the suspicion of being wrongful.

Haldeman v Martin, 205-302; 217 NW 851

Prima facie proof of default in payment. The introduction in evidence of a promissory note which fails to carry any indorsement of the payment of an installment which, under the terms of the note, is past due, establishes, prima facie, a default in payment enabling the holder to avail himself of an accelerating payment clause in the note.

First Bank v Kruse, 219-1229; 260 NW 665

Release—presumption. A marginal release of a mortgage, executed by the agent of the holder constitutes prima facie evidence of payment and discharge of both the note and the mortgage securing the note.

Larson v Church, 213-930; 239 NW 921

Receipts—parol showing purpose. Under plea of payment of a promissory note, parol evidence is admissible to show that nonexplanatory receipts represented money paid on the note and accepted as such by the payee.

Hallowell v Van Zetten, 213-748; 239 NW 593

Overcoming presumption of nonpayment. An instruction that the possession of an uncanceled promissory note creates a presumption of nonpayment is erroneous insofar as it further directs the jury, in effect, that it may find the presumption to be overcome by long delay in bringing action on the note and other circumstances, when the delay was some nine years, coupled with the circumstances that the defendant was at all times a nonresident of the state.

Mitchell v Burgher, 216-869; 249 NW 357

Agent's authority to receive payment. The maker of a promissory note who makes payment to some one other than the payee or holder must take on the burden of showing that the recipient of the payment had actual or apparent authority from the payee or holder to receive it. Evidence held to show that the party receiving payment on a note was the agent of the holder.

Whitney v Krasne, 209-236; 225 NW 245

Agent's authority to receive payment. The maker of a promissory note who pays it to one who is not the payee or indorsee, and does not receive a surrender of the note, must show that the recipient of the payment had actual or implied authority from the payee or holder to receive payment.

Engelke v Drager, 213-598; 239 NW 569

Agency to receive payment. Record reviewed and held to present a jury question on the issue whether the original payee of a promissory note was the agent of the indorsee to receive payment.

Andrew v Kolsrud, 218-15; 253 NW 913

Authority to receive payment. Authority or agency in a third party to receive payment of a promissory note is not shown by evidence:

1. That the note provided for payment at the office of said third party,
2. That the payee received payments of interest from said third party,
3. That the payee authorized said third party to grant an extension of the mortgage security,
4. That the payee wrote to said third party relative to the payment of the note, but long after said third party had collected the amount due thereon.

Moron v Tuttle, 211-584; 233 NW 691

Authority to collect interest not authority to collect principal. Principle reaffirmed that authority in an agent to receive interest on a promissory note does not, in and of itself, carry authority to receive the amount of the principal.

Holden v Batten, 215-448; 245 NW 750

Payment and discharge—apparent agency. A payment made in a bank that is open and transacting business, to one behind the counter, with the permission of the managing officers of the bank, and with apparent authority to receive the money, constitutes a payment to the bank. It follows that the conversation at the time, relative to the subject matter of the payment, is competent.

First Bk. v Tobin, 204-456; 215 NW 767

Assumed agency—ratification. The holder of a note and mortgage was informed by one who had subsequently bought the mortgaged property that he had, without requiring the production of the note, paid the note to one of the original makers of the note. Thereupon, the holder admitted that he had received part payment from the said maker, and exhibited the mortgage papers to the informant. Held insufficient to show ratification of the payment to the said maker.

Ritter v Plumb, 203-1001; 213 NW 571

Implied agency to receive payment. The assignee of a promissory note who receives numerous payments of principal and interest from the original payee, with knowledge that such payments had been made to such payee by the makers of the note, thereby impliedly constitutes such payee his agent to receive such payments.

Shoemaker v Ragland, 202-947; 211 NW 564

Nonimplied agency to receive payment. Makers of promissory notes who make payment to the original payee without then demanding the surrender of the paid notes and without then knowing that the original payee had hypothecated said notes and others, as collateral security, may not assert apparent agency in said original payee to receive payment on behalf of the collateral holder, on the mere showing that the collateral holder, upon actual receipt from said original payee of the amount of a matured collateral note, credited said payee on his debt and returned the note to him.

Iowa Co. v Seaman, 203-310; 210 NW 937

Nonimplied agency to receive payment. The holder of notes and mortgage who accepts payment of one of the notes from a maker thereof, in form of part cash and part check payable to the holder, from one who had bought the property subject to the mortgage, cannot be held thereby to have held out the said maker as his agent to receive payment of the remaining note; nor will the added fact that on two occasions subsequent to the payment in question, and on one occasion prior thereto, the said holder had authorized the said maker to receive payments on wholly different transactions constitute such "holding out".

Ritter v Plumb, 203-1001; 213 NW 571

See Huismann v Althoff, 202-70; 209 NW 525

Receiving agent's authority to accept—maker's duty to know and prove. One who pays his promissory note has a duty to know and the burden to prove that (1) an agent to whom he makes payment has authority to receive on behalf of the holder, or that (2) the holder received the payment; and without proving one or the other the note is not discharged.

Fisher v Pride, 225-6; 280 NW 492

Payment to holder's agent. The holder of a promissory note who permits another person for a series of years to collect both interest and installments of principal on the note will not be permitted to deny the authority of such other person to make all collections on the note. And it is immaterial that the note was not surrendered to the maker when he made his final payment.

Ragatz v Diener, 218-703; 253 NW 824

Unauthorized agency—ratification by accepting benefit. The holder of a note is not estopped to challenge the unauthorized act of a party in receiving payment of the note, by accepting from such unauthorized agent part of the payment, (1) when he accepted such payment without knowledge that the party was assuming such agency, and (2) when such party was a maker of the note.

Ritter v Plumb, 203-1001; 213 NW 571

Assignment—payment to original payee—effect. The maker of a promissory note and mortgage who for four years before maturity of the principal and for eight years after maturity of the principal pays the accruing interest to an agent of the original payee without knowledge that the note and mortgage had been assigned, and finally pays the principal in the same manner without asking for or receiving the note in question, effects a complete discharge of the note and mortgage against an assignee thereof who had been such during all said times of payment but without recording his assignment, and in the meantime had permitted the original payee, a corporation, (1) to appear on the records as the owner of the paper, and (2) to collect the interest and pay it to him.

Kann v Fish, 209-184; 224 NW 531

Conditional sales—replevin of automobile conditionally sold under "trust receipt". Trust receipt for automobile delivered by a finance company was in effect conditional sale when accompanied by promissory note and agreement to return the automobile on demand. Held, in a replevin action the finance company sustained its burden to prove its right to immediate possession by a showing of default in payment, which gave the right to possession.

General Motors v Koch, 225-897; 281 NW 728

Conditional sales — purchase without notice — effecting payment. Full payment for an article, bought in good faith, and for value and without notice of an existing conditional sales contract thereon, is effected by the act of the vendee in delivering to the vendor his negotiable check on actual funds in a foreign bank for the purchase price, and by the act of the vendor-payee in immediately negotiating the check to his bank as a general deposit, even tho the deposit slip in the latter transaction provided that the receiving bank took the check for collection only. It follows that the vendee is under no obligation to stop payment on the check issued by him because he learned of the conditional sale contract after said deposit and before his drawee-bank had paid the check.

General Motors v Whiteley, 217-998; 252 NW 779

Dishonor by drawee — drawer's recourse to drawee's funds in indorsee's hands. When a check is honored by the drawee's depository bank in satisfaction of payee's debt to said bank, and is properly charged to the drawee's deposit in said bank, and is later dishonored by the drawee because of insolvency, the cancellation of all of said entries, and the return of said check to the drawer who paid the amount thereof to the payee, leaves the drawer without any claim against the funds of the drawee in the said depository bank.

Davis Bros. v Bank, 216-277; 249 NW 170

Execution sale—purchase by maker—effect. The maker of a promissory note and mortgage may, by himself or through others, validly purchase said note and mortgage at execution sale against the payee or holder thereof, and thereby completely discharge the same.

Buter v Slattery, 212-677; 237 NW 232

Payee obtaining and negotiating check previously returned to maker. Where payee returned an executed check to maker on account of a debt owing to maker, but by some unknown means again obtained possession of the check, which had not been put in a place of safety, and negotiated it to plaintiff, evidence in action against maker warranted trial court's finding that check was never in hands of payee after indorsement and that it had never been canceled or paid.

Clarinda Sales Co. v Radio Sales, 227-671; 288 NW 923

Principles — sleeping on rights. One who, without requiring the production of a note, innocently pays the note to one who is not the agent of the holder, may not insist that the said holder, and not himself, should suffer the loss, especially when the latter, upon discovering the truth, does nothing to protect himself against the solvent wrongdoer.

Ritter v Plumb, 203-1001; 213 NW 571

Promissory note as collateral—release and discharge per se. The payment of the promissory notes for which another promissory note is held solely as collateral, necessarily releases and discharges the collateral note, the maker of all of said notes being one and the same person; especially is this true when the collateral note was without original consideration other than as collateral, and when the record is void of any competent evidence that said collateral had taken on any new or different status.

Monticello Bank v Schatz, 222-335; 268 NW 602

Recorded assignment — constructive notice. A duly recorded assignment of a mortgage and of the promissory note secured, carries constructive notice to the world that the assignee is the owner of said note.

Holden v Batten, 215-448; 245 NW 750

9581 [§120] When persons secondarily liable discharged.

Extension of time of payment. The surety on a promissory note is released from all liability whenever the payee makes a binding agreement with the principal debtor, without the consent of the surety, to extend the time of payment to a certain definite time.

Eilers v Frieling, 211-841; 234 NW 275

Extension of time—prima facie presumption. The indorsement on an overdue promissory note of interest in advance of its maturity does not constitute conclusive evidence that the parties have entered into a binding agreement for the extension of the time of payment. The presumption is not more than a prima facie one.

Commer. Bk. v Dunning, 202-478; 210 NW 599; 59 ALR 983

Extension of time of payment. An extension of time of payment of a promissory note will not work a release of the surety when the note contains the consent of all parties to all such extensions.

Johnson v Hollis, 205-965; 218 NW 615

Extension of time to assuming vendee. The principle that the holder of an obligation releases the surety on the obligation by granting an extension of time of payment to the principal without the consent of the surety, has no application to a case where the maker of a mortgage-secured promissory note sells the mortgaged property to a vendee who assumes and agrees to pay the note, and where the holder of the note subsequently grants an extension of time of payment to the assuming grantee without the consent of the original maker of the note.

Blank v Michael, 208-402; 226 NW 12
Iowa Co. v Clark, 209-169; 224 NW 774
Herbold v Sheley, 209-384; 224 NW 781

Consideration for extension of time of payment. An express or implied agreement by the payee and principal debtor in a promissory note to the effect that the time of paying the note shall be extended for one year is supported by ample consideration, in that the payee forbears suit for one year, and in that the maker secures the benefit of the forbearance.

Eilers v Frieling, 211-841; 234 NW 275

9585 [§124] Alteration of instrument—effect of.

Alteration by stranger—effect. A purported alteration of a promissory note by a stranger thereto does not invalidate the note.

Mandel v Siverly, 213-109; 238 NW 596

Stranger to instrument—defense of alteration not available. A third-party stranger to an instrument cannot avail himself of the alteration of such instrument by one of the parties thereto, as a defense against his own wrongful and fraudulent acts.

Winker v Tiefenthaler, 225-180; 279 NW 436

Attorney correcting instrument after employment terminates—invalidity. Attorneys hired to draft a mortgage, altho discovering that they have made a mistake in the description of the land, have no authority on their own initiative after termination of their employment and without consulting the mortgagee, to change the description and re-record the mortgage in the recorder's office.

Winker v Tiefenthaler, 225-180; 279 NW 436

Burden of proof. He who alleges a material alteration of an instrument has the burden to prove his allegation. No presumption exists that the alteration was made after the execution of the instrument.

Council Bluffs Bank v Wendt, 203-972; 213 NW 599

Pleading—burden of proof. A pleader who wishes to avoid the legal effect of an instrument, because of a material and unauthorized alteration therein, must plead that the alteration was made after delivery.

Hartwick v Hartwick, 217-758; 252 NW 502

Indorsement—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question whether an alteration of an indorsement "without recourse" was made as part of the negotiations for the purchase of the note or after the transaction of purchase was fully consummated.

Falcon v Falcon, 214-490; 240 NW 735

Nonmaterial changes—effect on surety.

Throp v Chaloupka, 202-360; 208 NW 299

9586 [§125] What constitutes a material alteration.

Burden of proof. The maker of a promissory note must establish his plea of material alteration without his consent, but he may not be compelled to establish that the payee knew of the alteration and of the maker's non-consent thereto.

Schram v Johnson, 208-222; 225 NW 369

Change of place of payment.

Johnson v Ballou, 201-202; 204 NW 427

Law (?) or jury (?) question. Testimony that a negotiable promissory note had been delivered without any agreement relative to the filling of a blank therein for the place of payment, and that the holder had filled the blank without any authority from the maker, presents, on the issue of material alteration, a question of law for the court, and not a question of fact for the jury.

Citizens Bk. v Martens, 204-1378; 215 NW 754

Adding new signer to note. After a promissory note is fully executed and delivered, the signing of an additional name thereto as maker, without the consent of the first maker, constitutes a material alteration, and avoids the note in the hands of the original payee.

Schram v Johnson, 208-222; 225 NW 369

Blank indorsement—material alteration. The act of converting a blank indorsement into a special indorsement is proper so long as the indorser's liability is not increased, but the unauthorized insertion in such special indorsement of a guaranty of payment of any renewal of the note (no such provision otherwise appearing in the note) constitutes a material alteration and releases the indorser.

First N. Bk. v Sweeny, 203-35; 212 NW 333

Erasure and reinsertion—effect. The defense of material alteration in a promissory note after its delivery fails when the proof shows the erasure of a material provision and the subsequent exact reinsertion of that which had been erased.

Anderson v Foglesong, 201-481; 207 NW 562

Extension of time of payment. An agreement between a mortgagee and an assuming grantee for an extension of time of payment of the mortgage-secured note does not constitute a material alteration of the note.

Blank v Michael, 208-402; 226 NW 12

Royal Union v Wagner, 209-94; 227 NW 599

Extension agreement. The entering upon a promissory note of an agreement to extend the maturity date does not constitute an "alteration of the instrument".

Cresco Bk. v Terry & T., 202-778; 211 NW 228

Presumption as to time of alteration. A material alteration, manifest on the face of a promissory note, creates no presumption that the alteration was made after delivery.

In re Thorne, 202-681; 210 NW 952

Release of existing maker as consideration for signature of new signer. The court will not, in order to supply a consideration for a third party's signing a pre-existing note, hold, as a matter of law, that the said signing, being without the knowledge or consent of the existing signers, (1) worked an absolute release of said existing signers, and (2) constituted the making of a new note by the new signer, when plaintiff was pressing his action on a theory flatly contradictory of such a holding.

Blain v Johnson, 201-961; 208 NW 273

Subsequent unauthorized signing. One who signs a promissory note after its execution, delivery, and maturity, and without the consent of the original maker, thereby releases the original maker and makes the note his own. It follows that such belated signer may not successfully assert want of consideration for his signature.

Fairley v Falcon, 204-290; 214 NW 538

BILLS OF EXCHANGE—FORM AND INTERPRETATION

9587 [§126] "Bill of exchange" defined.

Drafts and checks—distinction. The distinguishing feature between a "check" and a "draft" is that in a draft the drawer is a bank, while in a check the drawer is an individual.

Leach v Bank, 202-899; 211 NW 506; 50 ALR 388

9588 [§127] Bill not an assignment of funds in hands of drawee.

See annotations on related matters under §9239

Operation and effect as to assignment. The issuance of a draft or check works no equitable assignment to the payee of the funds of the drawer in the hands of the drawee, and consequently, in case of the subsequent insolvency of the drawer, the payee is not a preferred creditor, (1) even tho the drawer at once charges himself and credits the drawee with the amount of the draft, (2) even tho the draft was issued by the drawer in payment of checks drawn upon himself by his depositors, whom he at once charges with the amounts of their checks, and (3) even tho the controversy over the funds is solely between the receiver of the insolvent drawer of the draft and the payee of the draft.

Leach v Bank, 202-894; 211 NW 517

Leach v Bank, 202-899; 211 NW 506; 50 ALR 388

Leach v Bank, 203-507; 211 NW 520; 212 NW 760

Leach v Bank, 203-782; 211 NW 522

Dishonor by drawee—drawer's recourse to drawee's funds in indorsee's hands. When a check is honored by the drawee's depository bank in satisfaction of payee's debt to said bank, and is properly charged to the drawee's deposit in said bank, and is later dishonored by the drawee because of insolvency, the cancellation of all of said entries, and the return of said check to the drawer who paid the amount thereof to the payee, leaves the drawer without any claim against the funds of the drawee in the said depository bank.

Davis Bros. v Bank, 216-277; 249 NW 170

Special deposits. Evidence held insufficient to show that a deposit was made for the special purpose of meeting payment on a particular draft, or was made under such circumstances that the issuance of the draft effected a pro tanto, equitable assignment of the deposit.

Heckman v Bank, 208-322; 223 NW 164

9590 [§129] Inland and foreign bills of exchange.

Deposits—cancellation of credit. A bank which, having issued foreign exchange, later receives it back (when its value is problematical), under an agreement to sell the same and collect the proceeds, does not thereby become the owner either of the returned exchange or of a check subsequently received as the result of the collection, and may cancel a credit which was entered on the mistaken assumption that the check was of face value.

9591 [§130] Bill treated as promissory note.

Cashier's check as bill of exchange—demand unnecessary — action accrues at making — barred after ten years. The holder of a cashier's check, certain in amount, containing no provision respecting demand and not in the nature of a certificate of deposit, has a right to sue thereon at any time from and after its issuance. Treated as a bill of exchange, presentment and demand for payment are not necessary to start running the statute of limitations. Therefore, after ten years from its issuance, a right of action thereon is barred.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

ACCEPTANCE

9593 [§132] Acceptance—how made.

Bank's obligation on depositor's check. A bank which agrees to pay checks issued from time to time by an insolvent livestock dealer for stock purchased, and to reimburse itself from the sight drafts drawn from time to time by the dealer when reselling the stock, and which, for a time, carries out the arrangement and encourages its continuance, and, in part, applies the proceeds of such sight drafts to the discharge of other obligations of the dealer in which the bank is financially interested, may not, after taking over sight drafts covering certain resales with knowledge that unpaid checks for said stock were outstanding, apply the proceeds of said drafts to an overdraft against the dealer, and thereby shift the loss to the unpaid check holder. On the contrary, the bank must be held, impliedly, to have agreed to loan to the dealer money sufficient to pay said outstanding checks.

Pascoe v Bank, 217-205; 251 NW 63

PROMISSORY NOTES AND CHECKS

9645 [§184] "Promissory note" defined.

Promissory notes in general. See under §§9461-9477

Oral employment agreement—no consideration for promissory note. Where one person agrees to make a loan of $3,500 to start a corporation and does loan $1,500 of this sum taking in exchange a promissory note, the borrower agreeing to employ the lender as a bookkeeper and salesman but for no definite period of time, such employment feature of the agreement is a separate contract and not the consideration for the loan.

Hillje v Tri-City Co., 224-43; 275 NW 880

Severability of interest—when barred. Unless the maker and payee on a promissory note agree to sever the promise to pay interest installments from the promise to pay principal so as to make each promise separate and independent of the other, the interest is an incident to the principal debt and as such is barred when the statute of limitations has run against the principal debt.

Yeadon v Farmers Co., 224-829; 277 NW 709; 115 ALR 725

9646 [§185] "Check" defined.

Discussion. See 15 ILR 195—Checks sent to drawee bank for collection

Parol as affecting check as receipt. A check "in full", duly indorsed by the payee, is but a receipt, and subject to explanation and even contradiction.

In re Newson, 206-514; 219 NW 305

Bank's obligation on depositor's check. A bank which agrees to pay checks issued from time to time by an insolvent livestock dealer for stock purchased, and to reimburse itself from the sight drafts drawn from time to time by the dealer when reselling the stock, and which, for a time, carries out the arrangement and encourages its continuance, and, in part, applies the proceeds of such sight drafts to the discharge of other obligations of the dealer in which the bank is financially interested, may not, after taking over sight drafts covering certain resales with knowledge that unpaid checks for said stock were outstanding, apply the proceeds of said drafts to an overdraft against the dealer, and thereby shift the loss to the unpaid check holder. On the contrary, the bank must be held, impliedly, to have agreed to loan to the dealer money sufficient to pay said outstanding checks. In other words, the bank is obligated to pay said checks.

Pascoe v Bank, 217-205; 251 NW 63

Check not payment without agreement. The acceptance of a check by a creditor is not payment of a debt unless an understanding to that effect appears from the circumstances and conduct of the parties, as where a receipt stating "cash" was issued for an insurance premium check—such check later returned marked "insufficient funds".

Hockert v Ins. Co., 224-789; 276 NW 422

Payment by check. Principle reaffirmed that the delivery of a check to a creditor does not constitute payment unless, in due course of time, the check is actually paid.

Schwab v Roberts, 220-958; 263 NW 19

Conflicting claims to proceeds. The holder of a check who, before payment thereof is stopped, indorses the same to a nondrawee private banker, and unwittingly receives in exchange therefor the worthless draft of said private banker, is entitled, in a subsequent action on the check, to the amount recovered thereon, in preference to the receiver for the private banker. Especially is this true when the banker was insolvent when he issued the draft.

Runge v Benton, 205-845; 216 NW 737

Damages—check as measure of. Where in the sale of a business, the vendee gives a check for the full purchase price of a particularly designated part of said business, and later repudiates the entire contract except that part pertaining to said particularly designated part, the vendor may maintain an action to recover as damages the full amount of the check.

Courshon Co. v Brewer, 215-885; 245 NW 354

Deposits—cancellation of credit. A bank which, having issued foreign exchange, later receives it back (when its value is problematical), under an agreement to sell the same and collect the proceeds, does not thereby become the owner either of the returned exchange or of a check subsequently received as the result of the collection, and may cancel a credit which was entered on the mistaken assumption that the check was of face value.

Tropena v Bank, 203-701; 213 NW 398

Drafts and checks—distinction. The distinguishing feature between a "check" and a "draft" is that in a draft the drawer is a bank, while in a check the drawer is an individual.

Leach v Bank, 202-899; 211 NW 506; 50 ALR 388

Forged indorsement—burden of proof. A drawee bank, when sued for paying a check on a forged indorsement, must affirmatively establish prejudice as a result of the failure of the drawer to give notice of the forged indorsement upon the discovery thereof.

New Amst. Cas. v Bank, 214-541; 239 NW 4; 242 NW 538

Inadvertently paid check. A drawee of a check may recover of the payee the amount inadvertently paid on the check at a time when the payee knew that the drawer had no funds on deposit with the drawee—knew that the drawer had gone into the hands of a receiver and that his deposit had been transferred to the receiver.

Bank. Tr. Co. v Reg. Co., 200-1014; 205 NW 838

Payment of checks—fictitious payee. The absolute duty of a bank, before it pays its depositor's check, to know that the payee's indorsement is genuine, and to pay only on such genuine indorsement, applies to a check which the depositor has unwittingly and without negligence made payable to a fictitious person.

McCornack v Bank, 203-833; 211 NW 542; 52 ALR 1297

McCornack v Bank, 207-274; 222 NW 851

9647 [§186] Within what time a check must be presented.

Drafts—demand necessary within limitation period. Before an action can be maintained against a drawer upon a check, demand for its payment must be made upon the drawee-bank, but the demand cannot be postponed indefinitely and must be made within the 10-year limitation period.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Presentation mandatory. A check must be presented for payment within a reasonable time, even tho the drawer's deposit in the drawee-bank is less than the amount of the check, it appearing that the drawer had arranged with the drawee-bank for payment in full.

Knauss v Aleck, 202-91; 209 NW 444

Check not necessarily payment. A check issued by an insurer for the amount of an adjusted loss and payable to a mortgagor and mortgagee, jointly, and never cashed because the mortgagor refused to indorse it, cannot be deemed a payment of the loss when there was no express or implied agreement to that effect—when the insurer-drawer first asserted such claim after the bank on which the check was drawn failed.

Union Ins. v Ins. Co., 216-762; 249 NW 653

Collections—negligence—measure of damages. The measure of damages consequent on the negligent failure of a collecting bank to notify the payee of deposited checks of their nonpayment, is not, prima facie, the amount of the checks, but such sum or amount as the payee-plaintiff may be able to prove to a reasonable degree of probability he has lost because he was not promptly notified of the nonpayment—not exceeding the amount of said checks.

Schooler Motor v Bankers Tr. Co., 216-1147; 247 NW 628; 38 NCCA 361

Delayed presentation—effect. Where a check is drawn on a special deposit or trust fund, the act of the payee in withholding presentation for a few days, and until the bank had become insolvent and closed its doors, does not nullify the trust.

Rime v Andrew, 217-1030; 252 NW 542

Indorsement of check. The plea that a loss resulting from the nonpayment of a check must be borne by the payee because of delay by the attorney who received it to present it for payment must fall when there is no showing that the attorney had authority to make the indorsement.

Prudential v Hart, 205-801; 218 NW 529

Negligence of collecting bank. The indorsee for collection of a check who forwards it to the drawee-bank for payment is chargeable with the negligence of the drawee-bank in holding the check until such drawee-bank becomes insolvent and is unable to pay the check; and such negligence is attributable to the original payee.

Forgan v Allen Bros., 207-1198; 224 NW 500

Negligent delay—burden of proof. The payee of a check who is guilty of negligent delay in presenting the check for payment, has the burden to show that his negligence did not injure the drawer of the check.

Forgan v Allen Bros., 207-1198; 224 NW 500

Payment of taxes—uncashed check. The uncashed check of a taxpayer to the county treasurer in payment of taxes does not constitute such payment, even tho said check would have been paid, had it been properly presented, and even tho the treasurer, as a matter of book-keeping, treated said check as cash, and prepared receipts accordingly.

Morgan v Gilbert, 207-725; 223 NW 483

Unreasonable delay. The holding of a check until after the drawee-bank became insolvent and closed its doors, 27 days after the check was received, ipso facto discharges the drawer to the extent of the loss suffered, when presentation for payment might have been made manually or by mail without undue effort on the part of the payee. This is true even tho, when the check was given, the drawer's account was insufficient to meet the check, but was replenished and rendered ample within three days succeeding the date of the check.

Ostrand v Sauer, 208-77; 224 NW 581

Unreasonable delay. The presentation of a check for payment is not made within a reasonable time when the check is drawn on a bank located at the place of business of the payee, and there received by him, and forwarded by a circuitous route of 200 miles for collection, and presented some four days later, and after the bank had failed.

Northern Lbr. v Clausen, 201-701; 208 NW 72

Unreasonable delay. A check is not presented for payment within a reasonable time, as a matter of law, when it was received by the payee in the town in which the drawee bank was located and was taken by the payee "to his farm" and not presented until six days later.

Knauss v Aleck, 202-91; 209 NW 444

Drafts — laches in presentment — action barred. An action to collect a draft is barred by the statute of limitations where no presentment for payment is made for over 19 years, on the theory that a creditor may not postpone the running of the statute by his own neglect or inaction.

9648 [§187] Certification of check — effect of.

Certified check as certificate of deposit—action accrues only after demand. The act of a bank in certifying a check, at the request of the holder, creates a new obligation on the part of the bank to that holder, and the check then becomes in legal effect an ordinary certificate of deposit for the holder. Being such, an action thereon does not accrue until it is presented for payment.

9649 [§188] Effect where the holder of check procures it to be certified.

Certified check as certificate of deposit—action accrues only after demand. The act of a bank in certifying a check, at the request of the holder, creates a new obligation on the part of the bank to that holder, and the check then becomes in legal effect an ordinary certificate of deposit for the holder. Being such, an action thereon does not accrue until it is presented for payment.

9650 [§189] Check not an assignment —when bank liable.

Holdings under analogous statute relative to drafts. See under §§9239, 9538

Discussion. See 9 ILB 64, 210—Checks—as assignment of funds

Bank's obligation on depositor's check. A bank which agrees to pay checks issued from time to time by an insolvent livestock dealer, for stock purchased, and to reimburse itself from the sight drafts drawn from time to time by the dealer, when reselling the stock, and which, for a time, carries out the arrangement and encourages its continuance, and, in part, applies the proceeds of such sight drafts to the discharge of other obligations of the dealer, in which the bank is financially interested, may not, after taking over sight drafts covering certain resales with knowledge that unpaid checks for said stock were outstanding, apply the proceeds of said drafts to an overdraft against the dealer, and thereby shift the loss to the unpaid check holder. On the contrary, the bank must be held, impliedly, to have agreed to loan to the dealer money sufficient to pay said outstanding checks. In other words, the bank is obligated to pay said checks.

Pascoe v Bank, 217-205; 251 NW 63

Draft not ipso facto assignment. The oral statement by the president of a bank, made to the payee of a draft at the time of its issuance and delivery, that the draft "operated as an assignment" of an equal amount of money then in the hands of the drawee-bank and belonging to the issuing bank does not constitute an actual assignment.

Andrew v Bank, 215-290; 245 NW 329

Payment of taxes—uncashed check. The uncashed check of a taxpayer to the county treasurer in payment of taxes does not constitute such payment, even tho said check would have been paid, had it been properly presented, and even tho the treasurer, as a matter of bookkeeping, treated said check as cash, and prepared receipts accordingly.

Morgan v Gilbert, 207-725; 223 NW 483

Premium check received as "cash"—no lapse by nonpayment. Where an insurer notifies its insured that his premium lien note is due, but his new note and remittance mailed on or before a certain Saturday on which his policy lapses, will prevent any such lapse, the insurer knowing that thereby payment could not reach its office in another city before the policy lapse date, but, nevertheless, when the payment check arrives, receipts for it as cash, and when the insured shortly thereafter dies, and the check meanwhile being returned unpaid, and the insured altho then dead being notified that the policy had lapsed, is a situation justifying a finding that the check was received as payment and a repudiation of such payment to escape liability on the policy will not be permitted.

Hockert v Ins. Co., 224-789; 276 NW 422

GENERAL PROVISIONS

9651 [§190] Short title.

Effect on prior rulings. The negotiable instrument law will not be construed as repealing former rulings unless there is such repugnancy between the two that they cannot be consistently reconciled.

Dougherty v Shankland, 217-951; 251 NW 73

9653 [§192] Person primarily liable on instrument.

When indorser primarily liable.

First N. Bk. v Le Barron, 201-853; 208 NW 364

Deposit certificate—action accrues only after demand. Makers of notes, acceptors of bills of exchange and issuers of certificates of deposit are charged on the instruments from their inception, and presentment to the maker or acceptor is unnecessary; but, as to the issuer of a certificate of deposit, there is an imputed agreement that before the depositor may sue the bank thereon, actual demand is necessary to mature the debt.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Extension to principal available to surety—abatement of action. An order of a court of bankruptcy granting, to a maker of a negotiable promissory note, an extension of time in which to make payment, is not personal to said maker only, but inures, under USC, title 11, §204, to the benefit of another maker of said note who in fact signed said note as surety only, but without so indicating on the face of the note; and said latter maker, when sued alone by the original payee, may, for the purpose of abating the action, establish his suretyship and consequent secondary liability.

9654 [§193] Reasonable time—what constitutes.

Collections—negligence—measure of damages. The measure of damages consequent on the negligent failure of a collecting bank to notify the payee of deposited checks of their nonpayment, is not, prima facie, the amount of the checks, but such sum or amount as the payee-plaintiff may be able to prove to a reasonable degree of probability he has lost because he was not promptly notified of the nonpayment,—not exceeding the amount of said checks.

Schooler Motor v Bankers Tr. Co., 216-1147; 247 NW 628; 38 NCCA 361

Drafts—laches in presentment—action barred. An action to collect a draft is barred by the statute of limitations where no presentment for payment is made for over 19 years, on the theory that a creditor may not postpone the running of the statute by his own neglect or inaction.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Drafts—statute runs after reasonable time for presentment. Where no demand or presentment for payment of draft is made for over 19 years after its issuance, and where only person who could make due presentation was plaintiff-holder, the statute of limitations began to run after a reasonable time for presentment.

Dean v Bank, 227-1239; 281 NW 714; 290 NW 664

Reasonable time—undisputed facts. Whether a check is presented for payment within a reasonable time is a question of law for the court to decide, when the facts are undisputed.

Knauss v Aleck, 202-91; 209 NW 444

Unreasonable time. Where payee returned check to maker on account of a debt owing to maker, but by some unknown means again obtained possession of the check, which had not been put in a place of safety, and negotiated it to plaintiff eight days after execution, burden was on defendant-maker to prove plaintiff's lack of good faith in acquiring the check, and lapse of eight days was not such an unreasonable time within statute as to rebut presumption that plaintiff was a holder in due course. What constitutes such an unreasonable time must be determined on facts of each particular case.

9657 [§196] Law merchant—when governs.

Wife signing husband's notes—unallowable defense. Assuming that a wife was advised, when she signed promissory notes evidencing the husband's sole indebtedness that her signature would have no other effect than to release her dower interest in the husband's land (which was embraced in the accompanying mortgage which she signed) constitutes no defense to personal judgment against her on the notes when there is no issue or proof of fraud or conditional delivery, no prayer for reformation or proof supporting such prayer, and when the notes are wholly bare of any reference to dower interest.

First N. Bank v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

9658 Days of grace—demand made on.

See annotations under §9546, Vol I

9659 Indemnifying bond to protect payer.

Stolen bonds—when purchaser protected. The purchaser of stolen United States liberty bonds will be protected in his purchase when he purchases in good faith, for full value, in the ordinary course of business, and without actual notice or knowledge of any defect in the title of the seller, and without notice or knowledge of any fact which would put said purchaser on inquiry as to said seller's title.

PART II

OBLIGATIONS AND RIGHTS OF WAREHOUSEMEN UPON THEIR RECEIPTS

9681 [§21] Liability for care of goods.

Negligence—degree. The failure of a warehouseman to exercise such care in regard to goods stored with him "as a reasonably careful owner of similar goods would exercise" renders him liable in damages, but any instruction which substantially embodies this rule is all-sufficient.

Kline v Transfer Co., 215-943; 247 NW 215

Presumption of negligence—required elaboration. An instruction, to the effect that on proof that goods were in good condition when stored with a warehouseman and in damaged condition when returned a presumption of negligence on the part of the warehouseman arises, is correct, but, on proper plea and proof, it may be necessary for the court to explain further the nonliability of the warehouseman for damages consequent on causes over which he has no control.

Kline v Transfer Co., 215-943; 247 NW 215

Fatally inconsistent instructions. A definite and unqualified instruction which, in effect, holds a warehouseman to liability as an insurer, and an additional instruction holding him to liability for negligence only, presents a fatal inconsistency.

Kline v Transfer Co., 215-943; 247 NW 215

Negligence—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether a warehouseman was negligent in not properly guarding goods against damage from water.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIP LAW

9806 [§1] "Limited partnership" defined.

Sharing of losses as essential element. Principle reaffirmed that an express or implied sharing of losses as well as profits is an essential element of an ordinary partnership.

Butz v Hahn Co., 220-995; 263 NW 257

9847 [§23] Distribution of assets.

Chattel mortgage to secure partner's debt. A chattel mortgage by a partner on his undivided chattel interest in the partnership, to secure his individual debt, becomes absolute when it is made to appear that the partnership is free of debt.

Schwanz v. Co-op. Co., 204-1273; 214 NW 491; 55 ALR 644

Discovered assets. A partner may recover his proportionate share of partnership assets discovered subsequent to a dissolution and settlement, and collected by a copartner.

Power v Wood, 200-979; 205 NW 784; 41 ALR 1452

Father-son partnership—no claim in father's estate—no estoppel. Estoppel would not prevent a son from maintaining an action against his mother for an accounting and dissolution of a partnership which was established between son and father and mother and upon father's death was continued with mother; theory being that estoppel arose on account of son's acquiescence in mother's taking possession of and disposing of certain partnership assets as executrix and sole beneficiary of her husband's estate under his will. Son, having no claim against estate of his father, and not knowing of mother's claim that she was sole partner with her husband, could not be estopped thereby.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

Joint adventures—accounting. One of two joint adventurers may not wholly exclude his co-adventurer from all fruits of a successful consummation by claiming that the undertaking was accomplished solely through his efforts when he has never rescinded the contract with his co-adventurer, claims no damages because of a breach of contract by the co-adventurer, and when he has to some material extent profited from the funds and efforts of his co-adventurer.

O'Neil v Stoll, 218-908; 255 NW 692

Liability to third parties. Parties who enter into a joint adventure for the purchase of land for purpose of speculation are all liable for the purchase price thereof, even tho the note and mortgage for such price are executed by only one of the parties.

CHAPTER 429.1

CONDUCTING BUSINESS UNDER TRADE NAME

9866.1 Use of trade name—verified statement required.

Action in trade name. A person has the legal right to maintain an action in the duly registered trade name under which he transacts his business.

Keeling v Priebe, 219-155; 257 NW 199

Bad check—issued in trade name with maker as agent. A livestock buyer who issues a bad check under a trade name, with himself as manager, cannot by this device escape criminal liability, since it is not essential in a prosecution that he obtained the property for himself; and there is no doctrine of agency in the criminal law which will permit an officer of a corporation to shield himself on the ground that his wrongful acts were for the corporation.

State v Doudna, 226-351; 284 NW 113

Husband and wife as partners—joint or separate liability—evidence. A transfer company operating under a trade name, headquartering at defendants' home, having trucks registered in wife's name, but with the state permit in the husband's name, and performing contracts in husband's name, are facts so indicating a partnership that court properly submitted automobile collision case as a joint liability of the husband and wife operating the transfer company.

Schalk v Smith, 224-904; 277 NW 303

Transacting business in assumed or trade name. Contracts which are otherwise valid are not rendered invalid because entered into by one of the parties in an assumed or trade name without having complied with the statutory command to file with the county recorder a statement of the names and addresses of the persons so carrying on the business; such statutes are regulatory only, even tho they declare it to be "unlawful" to carry on business in an assumed or trade name without the filing of said statement.

Ambro Adv. v Mfg. Co., 211-276; 233 NW 499

Unfair competition. Employing the business name of "Jasper Products Company" in the sale of jasper stone as "jasper silica" does not constitute unfair trade as regards an existing business carried on under the name of "Jasper Stone Company", and engaged in selling the same article as "adamant silica", complainant establishing neither fraud nor deception calculated to reasonably mislead.

same territory, took anything that could be deemed the property of his former employer.

Rosenstein v Smith, 218-1381; 257 NW 397

9872 Damages and general relief.

Unfair competition. Employing the business name of "Jasper Products Company" in the sale of jasper stone as "jasper silica" does not constitute unfair trade as regards an existing business carried on under the name of "Jasper Stone Company", and engaged in selling the same article as "adamant silica", complainant establishing neither fraud nor deception calculated to reasonably mislead.

Lytle v Smith, 204-619; 215 NW 668

Unfair competition — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to show that a party, in leaving an employment and entering into the same business in the "Wormix"—neither descriptive nor parts of two words. The word, "Wormix", an artificial word coined and used as the name of a hog remedy, is not descriptive in such sense that it may not be used as a valid trademark and registered, nor the fact that it is composed of parts of two words does not disqualify it for registration as a trademark. So the use by defendant of the word, "Worm-X", for a similar remedy was held a colorful imitation and an infringement, and where defendant has refused on notice to cease the use of an infringing device, and has continued to infringe, neither a fraudulent intent to injure complainant nor an actual misleading of the public need be proved, but will be presumed.

TRADEMARKS FOR ARTICLES MANUFACTURED IN IOWA

9876 "Manufacturer" defined.

Blaster and crusher of stone not manufacturer. One who blasts stone from a quarry and breaks it into merchantable size and sells such resulting product is not a manufacturer, within the taxation statute, §6975, C., '27.

Iowa Co. v Cook, 211-534; 233 NW 682

CHAPTER 431.1

DISTRIBUTION OF TRADEMARKED ARTICLES

9884.1 Contracts as to selling price.

Discussion. See 4 ILB 40—Price fixing by patentee; 13 ILR 324—Retail price fixing; 14 ILR 338—Price discrimination—Clayton Act; 19 ILR 577—Due process; 21 ILR 175, 486—Unfair competition—general survey

Price cutting—goods purchased before notice to desist. A wholesaler who had a contract to market a trademarked product at a certain price, after he gave a retailer notice to desist from selling the product at less than the established price and was refused, was entitled to an injunction to restrain the unfair trade practice, even tho he had refused to sell the product to the retailer who had made an attempt to buy, not in good faith, but as an attempt to establish a defense in the threatened injunction suit, and altho the retailer's stock was purchased before the notice to desist was received.

Barron Motor v May's Drug Stores, 227-1344; 291 NW 152

Refusal of wholesaler to sell to price-cutting retailer. A wholesaler was under no obligation to sell a trademarked product to a retailer who had refused to desist from selling the article at a price less than was specified by the manufacturer.

Att'y. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 63

Damages—failure to establish. Proof that defendants have conspired to injure plaintiff's business or to employ unfair competition against plaintiff becomes of no consequence in a law action when plaintiff fails to establish damages.

Roggensack v Winona Co., 211-1307; 233 NW 493

Essential elements—rejected opportunity. A claim of unfair competition because a particular bank was chosen as the depository of funds arising from a thrift system introduced into a public school falls when it is made to appear that the complainant was given full opportunity to be such depository.

Security N. Bank v Bagley, 202-701; 210 NW 947; 49 ALR 705

Infringement and unfair competition—employee entering employ of rival. An employee may lawfully terminate his employment with his employer, and enter into the employment of a rival of his former employer, and advertise and circularize such fact, and no legal right of the former employer is violated so long as it appears that the employee furnishes to his new employer no list of the former employer's customers and that no confidential information acquired in the former employment is used in the latter.

Universal Corp. v Jacobson, 212-1088; 237 NW 436

Literary property—trade secrets. Originator or proprietor may have property in idea, trade secret, or system, but, if it cannot be sold, negotiated or used without disclosure, contract should guard or regulate disclosure, or otherwise the idea becomes the acquisition of whoever receives it.

Young v Ralston-Purina Co., 88 F 2d, 97

Nonpayment of royalties not repudiation of patent license. A contract to pay royalties under a patent license was not repudiated by the mere refusal to make the royalty payments which were legally due.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 285 NW 131

Right to reject advertisement. The business of publishing a newspaper is a strictly private enterprise, and the owner thereof is free to accept or reject tendered advertisements as he sees fit.

Shuck v Daily Herald, 215-1276; 247 NW 813; 87 ALR 975

Unfair competition—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to show that a party, in leaving an employment and entering into the same business in the same territory, took anything that could be deemed the property of his former employer.

Rosenstein v Smith, 218-1381; 257 NW 397

Royalties to pay costs of infringement suits—nonrepugnant provisions. A provision in a patent license contract which provided that the amount spent by the licensor in bringing suits to prevent patent infringements should not exceed the amount of royalties received by him, was not repugnant to other clauses providing that such suits should be brought by the licensor, or if not brought by him, the licensee could use the royalties to bring such suits.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 285 NW 131

Contract to bring infringement suits. A contract between a patent owner as licensor and the manufacturer of the patented article as licensee, providing that the licensor received royalties and should bring suits to prevent infringement upon the patent using royalties received, was fully performed on the part of the licensor when he spent, in bringing infringement suits, more than the amount of the royalties received.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 285 NW 131

Breach of patent license contract. When a patent licensee ceased to pay royalties due the licensor, the licensor was not limited to an action against the licensee as a patent infringer, but could elect to treat the contract as still in force and bring an action to collect royalties.

Eulberg v Cooper, 226-776; 285 NW 131

Evidence—sufficiency. In an action for injunction, where plaintiffs advanced capital to organize a corporation for the purpose of putting invention on market—the inventor in turn assigning to them an absolute interest in patent, and where plaintiffs thereafter organize a separate corporation to engage in marketing the patented device both directly and by license, the evidence held sufficient to entitle plaintiffs to injunction restraining inventor from circulating to plaintiffs' prospective customers material to effect plaintiffs had no interest in patent, and restraining the threatening of such prospective customers with litigation in event they should buy from plaintiffs.

I IN GENERAL

Implied or apparent authority of agent—unallowable plea. A commission firm was prohibited by the mandatory rules of the board of trade of which it was a member from dealing in so-called “futures” for and on behalf of a nonmember corporation unless the firm first obtained from said nonmember corporation a writing authorizing the latter’s manager to contract for such “futures”. The firm disregarded said rule and accepted orders for such “futures” from a manager who had been expressly forbidden to exercise such power. Held, that said firm, when sued by the injured corporation for the resulting loss, would not be permitted to defend on the ground that said manager had implied or apparent power to issue said orders.

Watkins Co. v Smith Co., 221-1164; 267 NW 115

Stock market profits—when not taxable—refunds—stipulated record. In an action to cancel and secure a refund of income taxes submitted on a stipulated record, stock market transactions involved therein would be illegal and void as based on a gaming transaction if the buyer neither intended nor contemplated taking actual delivery but intended that the profits or losses should be settled on the market quotations; however, illegality is not presumed, and without illegality appearing in the record, profits accruing from such transactions must be held to be profits from the sale of capital assets, and not taxable as income, hence taxes paid thereon must be refunded.

Martin v Board, 225-1319; 283 NW 418; 120 ALR 1273

9905 Prima facie evidence.

Presumption. The presumption, under the bucket shop act, that grain, the subject-matter of a purported contract of sale, was never intended to be delivered by the broker is not overcome by the simple expedient of having the broker testify that he intended to deliver the grain unless he had sooner sold it prior to the date of delivery.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 538; '36 AG Op 591

9906 Pools and trusts.

Discussion. See 21 ILR 175, 486—Unfair competition—general survey

Allowable restraint of trade. An agreement, entered into on the sale of a newspaper, to the effect that the seller will not in any manner engage, either alone or with others, in the publication or circulation of a newspaper in the locality specified for a period of 15 years, is not invalid as being in restraint of trade.

Henry & Sons v Rhinesmith, 219-1088; 260 NW 9

9915 Combinations, pools, and trusts—fixing prices.

Implied repeal because of repugnancy. It may not be successfully contended that a statute is invalid because repugnant to a prior and existing statute, since, as between repugnant statutes, the later in enactment must prevail. So held as to an alleged repugnancy between chapter 390 and this section.

9916 Labor—unions.

Labor disputes. See under Ch 74, Note 1

9921 “Gift enterprise” defined.

Consideration for chance indispensable element. A scheme for the distribution, by lot or chance, of valuable prizes does not constitute a lottery when the recipient of the prize neither pays nor hazards anything of value for the chance to obtain said prize. And it is quite immaterial that the donor of such prizes expects such distribution of prizes will work a financial betterment of his business.

State v Hundling, 220-1369; 264 NW 608; 103 ALR 861

Bank night — consideration for unilateral contract. Where the promoter of a motion picture bank night drawing voluntarily makes certain requirements to qualify for the prize which is promised, he does not merely extend an offer to make a gift, but a unilateral contract is created in which the promoter determines the adequacy of the consideration for his promise, and when a person is induced to accept the promise and perform the specified act which was bargained for, it does not matter how insignificant the benefit of the performance may apparently be to the promoter, the promise can be enforced by the winner of the drawing.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Bank night—value of consideration in contract. A bank night scheme is not a lottery merely because a legal consideration is given in return for the promise to give the prize. The value of the consideration given in a lottery is important, as a lottery depends on whether persons are induced to hazard something of value on a mere chance, but in a civil action to enforce the payment of a bank night prize the value of the consideration does not control, as any legal consideration is sufficient to support the promise.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Theatre employees—announcement of bank night winner. Testimony by the manager of a theatre that he had hired a lady to call out the name of the bank night drawing in front of the theatre, with evidence that she habitually announced the name drawn on former occasions, was sufficient to establish that she was employed to announce the winner and to establish her agency and make her announcement binding on the theatre owner.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Winner's failure to act promptly caused by act of agent. Where the plaintiff's name was called outside a theatre as winner of a bank night drawing, and when she entered she was told that it was her husband's name that was called, and he was told he was one second too late when he followed her in, the theatre could not claim that neither she nor her husband had claimed the prize within the time set. If the husband was the one entitled to the prize, the theatre was estopped to claim the advantage of the one-second delay caused by the act of their agent in calling the wrong name outside the theatre.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

Bank night—evidence of drawing of winner—statements of agents. When one agent of a theatre announced the name of the plaintiff as winner of a bank night drawing and her husband's name was announced by another agent, both agents being in a position to bind the theatre, there was evidence that the name of one was drawn.

St. Peter v Theatre, 227-1391; 291 NW 164

9928 Provision part of every contract—forfeit.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 591

Competitive bidding—patentee as bidder—legality of bid. When the city calls for competitive bids on four different kinds of paving mixtures, all of substantially the same utility, desirability, and cost of commercial materials, three of which mixtures are unpatented and one of which is patented, the bid of the patentee, tho the only bid on the patented article, to furnish and lay the patented mixture for one cent per square yard above the price (not shown to be exorbitant) at which he had agreed simply to furnish it to all other bidders, is not fraudulent and void as stifling competition, tho the cost of laying the mixture is some 28 cents per square yard.

PART I

FORMATION OF THE CONTRACT

9930 [§1] Contracts to sell and sales.

ANALYSIS

- I CONTRACTS GENERALLY
- II SALES
- III CONTRACT TO SELL
- IV OFFERS
- V ACCEPTANCES
- VI CANCELLATION OR WITHDRAWAL OF ORDERS
- VII PAROL AS AFFECTING WRITING

I CONTRACTS GENERALLY

Formal bill of sale unnecessary. Execution of formal bill of sale is not essential to pass title to restaurant.

Bain v Thompson, (NOR); 239 NW 561

Conditional sale (?) or contract of agency (?). The act of the owner of an article in reluctantly permitting it to pass into the possession of a party (to whom he had theretofore actually sold many like articles) with permission to forthwith sell the article (which sale was then practically assured) at a stated cash price or to forthwith return the article, without any expressed intention of selling the article to the party so given possession, presents a jury question on the issue whether the transaction was one of simple agency, or whether the transaction constituted an oral conditional sale contract which would not be valid against a third party who had no knowledge thereof.

Greenlease-Lied Motors v Sadler, 216-302; 249 NW 383

Severable (?) or indivisible (?) contract. A bill of sale which transfers different fractional parts of property to different parties for different prices is a severable contract.

Ayres v Nopoulos, 204-881; 216 NW 258

II SALES

Sale of article "produced". The operator of a coal mine who contracts to sell "all fine screenings produced by him" during a named period—the screenings being defined as the coal which will pass through described screens—may not absolve himself of his obligation by the simple expedient of failing to screen the coal.

Iowa Co. v Coal Co., 204-202; 210 NW 440; 215 NW 229

Liability for sales tax—undertaker as retailer. A funeral director becomes a retailer when he transfers title to personal property, the casket, vault, etc., to relatives of the deceased, by contract for his services in which such articles are used, and as such is liable for the retail sales tax on such articles.

Kistner v Board, 225-404; 280 NW 587

III CONTRACT TO SELL

Nonmeeting of minds. There can be no sale or contract of sale so long as the parties do not definitely agree upon the subject-matter nor upon the terms thereof.

Des M. Marble v Seevers, 201-642; 207 NW 743

Offer or order—insufficient acceptance by corporation. A contract for the purchase of an article from a corporation is not established by the simple, naked showing that the purported buyer signed an order addressed to the corporation for the article, and that said order carries an acceptance signed individually by a person who was, in fact, the vice president and general manager of the corporation.

Birum-Olson v Johnson, 213-439; 239 NW 123

Unaccepted order. Necessarily, no contract of sale results from a mere written order signed by the intended purchaser and delivered to an agent known to have no authority to accept it, and especially so when the order was conditioned on acceptance by the "general office", and was affirmatively rejected by the latter.

Am. Coal Co. v Hide Co., 201-306; 207 NW 347

IV OFFERS

Offers and acceptances. A contract for the sale of goods cannot result from an offer and acceptance unless (1) the offer is definite and certain in its terms, and (2) the acceptance is an unqualified and unconditional acceptance of the identical terms set out in the offer.

Bradley Lbr. v Hunting Lbr., 218-739; 255 NW 711

Unilateral contract. A simple order for goods constitutes a unilateral contract—one in which the promisor receives no promise in return for his promise.

Port Huron Co. v Wohlers, 207-826; 221 NW 843

V ACCEPTANCES

Order—acceptance—sufficiency. A buyer's written order for goods "subject to the approval" of the seller does not necessarily require a written acceptance—in fact, requires nothing more in the way of an acceptance than proof of unequivocal acts done by the seller on the faith of the order and evincing an intent to accept.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

Parol evidence to show acceptance. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a naked order for goods was accepted and, when material, that such acceptance was at a certain place.

Anderson Bros. v Monument Co., 210-1226; 232 NW 689

Unilateral contract—when promise binding. An order for the shipment of goods and a promise to pay therefor become a binding promise when the order is filled and shipped.

Port Huron Co. v Wohlers, 207-826; 221 NW 843

Unallowable assumption of fact. Assuming that a contract was fully executed as soon as it was signed by the plaintiff by his agent, and by the defendant, is erroneous when the contract on its face demonstrates that no contract resulted unless plaintiff accepted the order, and the fact of such acceptance was in issue.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

VI CANCELLATION OR WITHDRAWAL OF ORDERS

Order—right to cancel. An order for goods may be canceled prior to acceptance of the order, and it is quite immaterial that the maker of the order referred in his cancellation to the "order" as a contract.

Doll & Smith v Dairy Co., 202-786; 211 NW 230

Prohibited repudiation. A vendor who accepts and retains a partial payment for goods on the condition that the balance will be paid by the vendee when the goods are delivered, may not, after a subsequent tender of the balance, repudiate the contract on the claim that the initial payment should have embraced the entire purchase price.

Daeges v Beh, 207-1063; 224 NW 80

VII PAROL AS AFFECTING WRITING

Delivery—intent—evidence. The intent of the parties necessarily controls the issues (1) whether, in a parol contract of purchase, title passed on delivery, with a right to rescind if a trial proved unsatisfactory, or (2) whether title passed only after a satisfactory trial. Necessarily, what the parties said to each other at the time the contract was entered into is admissible.

Bishop v Starrett, 201-493; 207 NW 561

9931 [§2] Capacity—liabilities for necessities.

Minors generally. See under Ch 472

Invalid signature—nonratification. The invalid signature of a husband to a mortgage on the homestead—invalid because of his inebriate condition when he signed—is not ratified by a delay of some eight months in repudiating such signature (1) when the delay was caused in part by his continued inebriate condition and in part by a proper investigation by his attorney, and (2) when he did not actually intend to ratify.

State Bank v Nolan, 201-722; 207 NW 745

FORMALITIES OF THE CONTRACT

9932 [§3] Form of contract or sale.

Order—acceptance—sufficiency. A buyer's written order for goods "subject to the approval" of the seller does not necessarily require a written acceptance—in fact, requires nothing more in the way of an acceptance than proof of unequivocal acts done by the seller on the faith of the order and evincing an intent to accept.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

Extraneous documents as part of contract. The words "Regarding the sand and gravel to be used in the construction of the Spottsville Bridge, which contract you have, we agree to deliver" etc., contained in a letter of offer which was accepted, cannot be construed as making the "Spottsville" contract a part of the contract by letter, or as having any other force than to identify the subject-matter of the offer and the place of delivery.

Koch Co. v Koss Co., 221-685; 266 NW 507

Telegrams and letters—intention of parties. Telegrams which are brief and incomplete and which reserve the right in each instance to clarify and amplify by letter point quite conclusively to the conclusion that the parties intended that the contract should be determined by a consideration of both the telegrams and letters.

Appel v Carr, 216-64; 246 NW 608

9933 [§4] Statute of frauds.

ANALYSIS

- I CONTRACT IN GENERAL
- II PROPERTY NOT OWNED BY VENDOR
- III PART PAYMENT OR PERFORMANCE
- IV DELIVERY

General statute of frauds. See under §§11285-11288

I CONTRACT IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 17 ILR 87—Construction of “void”

Memo sufficient to take contract out of statute. A written order for goods prepared by the seller but not signed by the buyer is taken out of the statute of frauds by a subsequent letter signed by the buyer and addressed to the seller, and requesting the seller to hold said order “until we give further notice”.

Morris Co. v Braverman, 210-946; 230 NW 356

Memorandum of contract—essentials. In an action to recover damages for seller’s refusal to perform an alleged oral contract for sale of a business college, a letter written to buyer merely indicating that seller would, in the near future, attend to the matter of writing the contract was not a “memorandum of contract” satisfying statute of frauds, it being essential that such a memorandum completely evidence the contract which the parties made, and not just merely indicate that a contract was made.

Patterson v Beard, 227-401; 288 NW 414

Merchandise sold—seller determining quantity—unenforceability. In an action for damages where an alleged contract was to sell surplus stock of merchandise, to be subsequently listed, a list previously sent merely as information in response to a request from buyer to the seller is inadmissible to complete a contract, under statute of frauds, §4625, C., ’97 [§11285, C., ’39]. Where such list could only be made a part of contract by proof of distinct oral contract, no connection appearing between the two papers by comparison or surrounding circumstances of parties, the contract leaving the quantity to be delivered to buyer to be determined by the will, want, or wish of the seller, makes the contract unenforceable because of lack of mutuality.

Midland Co. v Waterloo Co., 9 F 2d, 250

Oral contract of purchase. Replevin for the possession of an existing article of personal property cannot be maintained when the action is based solely on an oral contract of purchase which is clearly within the statute of frauds, and under which contract title necessarily did not pass.

Lockie v McKee, 221-95; 264 NW 918

Oral contract for particular manufacture. An oral contract under which the seller agrees to manufacture for the buyer certain goods in particular styles, is not within the statute of frauds when such goods are not suitable for sale to others in the ordinary course of the seller’s business.

Morris Co. v Braverman, 210-946; 230 NW 356

Oral contract to repurchase. An oral contract that the vendor of corporate shares of stock will repurchase the stock from the vendee, at the latter’s option, is not within the statute of frauds when the vendor is selling as owner and not as agent of the owner.

Calvert v Mason City Co., 219-963; 259 NW 452

Oral contract to repurchase—when within statute. An oral contract by one who effects a sale of corporate shares of stock as agent of the owner thereof, that he will repurchase the shares on demand of the purchaser, is within the statute of frauds.

Thomas v Peoples Co., 220-850; 263 NW 499

Oral contract unenforceable. In buyer’s action on an oral contract for sale of a business college where there was no competent evidence taking case out of statute of frauds, a directed verdict for defendant was proper.

Patterson v Beard, 227-401; 288 NW 414

Rule of evidence rather than invalidating statute. The Iowa statute of frauds relating to sales of goods is held to be a rule of evidence and not an invalidating statute, in view of subsequent provision of statute that regulations related merely to proof of contracts and should not prevent enforcement of those not denied in pleadings, and that oral evidence of maker against whom unwritten contract was sought to be enforced should be competent to establish contract. Under Iowa rule, both delivery and passing of title in sale of personal property are determined by intent of parties at time of transaction.

Tipton v Miller, 79 F 2d, 298

Telephone order. A telephone conversation wherein the buyer orders and the seller agrees to ship stated goods constitutes an oral contract, and is within the statute of frauds, notwithstanding the fact that the buyer had, immediately preceding the telephone talk, telegraphed the seller as to the price of the goods and the seller had wired his reply.

Lamis v Grain Co., 210-1069; 229 NW 756

II PROPERTY NOT OWNED BY VENDOR

Frauds, statute of—sales of goods—oral contract to repurchase. An oral contract that the vendor of corporate shares of stock will repurchase the stock from the vendee, at the latter's option, is not within the statute of frauds when the vendor is selling as owner and not as agent of the owner. Evidence held to justify a finding that a vendor sold as owner.

Calvert v Loan Co., 219-963; 259 NW 452

III PART PAYMENT OR PERFORMANCE

Giving "something" to bind contract. Under exception in this section, authorizing enforcement of an oral contract when buyer gives to seller "something in earnest to bind the contract", the "something" given must be money or a thing that possesses value, tho the value may be of a small amount, and evidence that the buyer of a business college resigned from position of superintendent of a public school pursuant to alleged oral agreement of purchase did not satisfy such requirement. The determination of such a question is purely one of statutory construction and not a matter of equities between the parties.

Patterson v Beard, 227-401; 288 NW 414

Readiness to perform. Where there was no competent evidence to take case out of statute of frauds, it was not error to exclude oral testimony tending to show the making of an oral contract to sell a business college and the buyer's readiness and ability to perform the same.

Patterson v Beard, 227-401; 288 NW 414

IV DELIVERY

Nonphysical delivery of goods. An actual physical delivery of goods to a purchaser is not absolutely essential in order to take an oral contract out of the statute of frauds.

Madden v Eldridge, 210-938; 230 NW 371

THE PRICE

9938 [§9] Definition and ascertainment of price.

Selling price—standard price as basis. The selling price of goods was as definitely fixed in a contract as tho it were expressed in money or some other medium, when placed at a certain amount lower than the standard price on standard staple goods of the same kind.

Lee v Sundberg, 227-1375; 291 NW 146

Total failure of consideration. The sale of an automobile, the engine number of which has been defaced, altered, or tampered with, without an official certificate showing good and sufficient reasons for such change, presents a case of total failure of consideration, and no formal rescission of contract is necessary in order to recover back the price paid.

Espe v McClelland, 208-512; 226 NW 130

Nonpremature action. An action for the price of goods sold under a contract which provides that one-half of the purchase price is due on delivery, and the balance 6 months thereafter, is not premature when the goods were furnished, duly tendered to the defendant, and refused, and the action commenced some 4 years after said refusal.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

CONDITIONS AND WARRANTIES

9940 [§11] Effect of conditions.

Failure to perform condition—effect. Failure of a vendor to furnish a pedigree, in accordance with his contract, after title to animals had passed to the purchaser and after they had died, does not render the sale without consideration.

Stanhope Bk. v Peterson, 205-578; 218 NW 262

Contract for warranty satisfactory to buyer. One who orders goods on the express condition that, before shipment, he be furnished a written guaranty which will be satisfactory to him, covering the effectiveness of the goods, is under no obligation to accept or pay for the goods until he receives such warranty, and when he acts honestly and in good faith his decision that he is not satisfied is final.

Mortemoth Co. v Furniture Co., 211-188; 233 NW 133

Motion picture booking as severable contract—damages as remedy. A motion picture exhibitor who books a series of films under contract, a part of which contract specified that he should have a certain film to exhibit on a certain date, is not entitled to breach the entire contract, when distributor fails to provide this certain film on the specified date, but exhibitor must recoup by way of damages, if any.

Paramount Pictures v Maxon, 226-308; 284 NW 119

Warranty—merchandise return as condition for refund—waiver by correspondence manager. A requirement that buyer return warranted machines as a prerequisite to a refund of the purchase price may be waived by seller's agent in charge of correspondence when, in reply to buyer's offer to return, he instructs buyer not to return the machines.

Henriott v Main, 225-20; 279 NW 110

Warranty—waiver—jury question. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether the buyer of goods had waived the warranty for which he had contracted.

Mortemoth Co. v Home Co., 211-188; 233 NW 133

9941 [§12] Definition of "express warranty".

Implied warranties. See under §9944
 Discussion. See 22 ILR 118—Recoupment for breach of warranty

I WARRANTIES IN GENERAL

Warranty—what constitutes. The assertion by the vendor to the vendee of animals that they were "healthy and all right" will constitute a warranty if such was the mutual intention of the parties.

Cavanaugh v Farm Co., 206-893; 221 NW 512

Fact assertion (?) or opinion (?). A representation that water softeners "would produce sufficient water, properly softened, with which to conduct the business" of the prospective buyer, may constitute a warranty.

Brennan v Laundry Co., 209-922; 229 NW 321

Operation of tractor. In action by seller to foreclose a chattel mortgage on a tractor, the trial court's finding that the tractor would not operate properly as warranted was sustained by the evidence.

Cunningham v Drake, (NOR); 224 NW 48

Fraud by seller—promise of future resales. In an action for the purchase price of a trade-named beer dispenser bought for resale, purchaser, altho same may have been an inducement to buy, may neither predicate fraud on seller's promise to procure for purchaser future resales, unless the promise is made with a secret intent to disavow, nor upon statements amounting to an opinion as to superior design; however, the jury should determine whether a statement as to merchantableness is an opinion or representation of fact.

Rowe Mfg. Co. v Curtis-Straub Co., 223-858; 273 NW 895

Reports on vending machine earning power—noncompliance waived by acceptance. A seller of vending machines, who warrants their earning power and agrees to repurchase if they fail, may not in buyer's action on this warranty to recover the purchase price complain for the first time as to buyer's periodical reports not conforming to the contract, when, after being asked if they were satisfactory, he made no reply.

Henriott v Main, 225-20; 279 NW 110

II RELIANCE ON WARRANTY

Sales—reliance on warranty—unallowable defense. The vendor of animals who actually warrants them to be "healthy and all right" may not avail himself of the claim that he had only recently purchased them, and that the vendee had equal knowledge with him as to their state of health.

Cavanaugh v Farm Co., 206-893; 221 NW 512

III WRITTEN AND PAROL WARRANTIES

Seller escaping warranty—contract construed against him. A sale contract prepared by the seller limiting his liability under a warranty will be strictly construed against him.

Henriott v Main, 225-20; 279 NW 110

IV PRINCIPAL AND AGENT

Waiver of warranty by agent. A requirement that buyer return warranted machines as a prerequisite to a refund of the purchase price may be waived by seller's agent in charge of correspondence when, in reply to buyer's offer to return, he instructs buyer not to return the machines.

Henriott v Main, 225-20; 279 NW 110

V CONSTRUCTION

Construction against writer of contract. A sale contract prepared by the seller limiting his liability under a warranty will be strictly construed against him.

Henriott v Main, 225-20; 279 NW 110

Vending machine repurchase contingent on earning power failure. A seller of forty vending machines, who writes in the sale contract many avenues to escape liability on his warranty as to their earning power and his promise to repurchase if they fail in this respect, cannot, after notice of and acquiescence in the nonoperation of three of the machines, be relieved of his warranty on the claim that it only covered the full time operation of the entire forty machines sold.

Henriott v Main, 225-20; 279 NW 110

VI PLEADINGS AND PROOF

Breach of warranty—burden of proof. Burden of proof in action on contract providing for delivery of drain tile was upon seller to show that tile were "sound and true", and evidence held to show that breakage was due to neglect of buyer.

Graettinger Works v Gjellefald, (NOR); 214 NW 579

Negligence as defense. In an action for the breach of an express warranty as to the healthfulness of animals, it is incumbent on the defendant to allege contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, rather than for plaintiff to allege his freedom from negligence.

Cavanaugh v Farm Co., 206-893; 221 NW 512

Unallowable defense. The vendor of animals who actually warrants them to be "healthy and all right" may not avail himself of the claim that he had only recently purchased them, and that the vendee had equal knowledge with him as to their state of health.

Cavanaugh v Farm Co., 206-893; 221 NW 512

Warranty—failure of proof. An action for damages consequent on the breach of an express warranty as to the operation of automatic candy vending machines cannot, manifestly, be maintained unless there is evidence tending to establish said warranty, especially when the machines purchased were strictly in accordance with the sample furnished prior to the sale.

Dorman v Thorpe, 217-91; 250 NW 902

9942 [§13] Implied warranties of title.

Implied warranty of right to sell. The seller of an automobile impliedly warrants that he has a right to sell it.

Espe v McClelland, 208-512; 226 NW 130

Transfer of title—incumbrance—effect. The existence of an implied warranty that goods sold are free from incumbrance, and a breach of such warranty, do not prevent the title from passing to the purchaser.

Stanhope Bank v Peterson, 205-578; 218 NW 262

9943 [§14] Implied warranty in sale by description.

Implied warranty—reasonable fitness. Where a written contract to sell a specified trade-named beer dispenser contains no express warranties, but does contain a stipulation excluding all other agreements not mentioned therein, the purchaser, in seller's action for purchase price, may nevertheless go to the jury on defense of breach of implied warranty as to reasonable fitness for particular purpose, since this is not inconsistent with nor negated by such express condition or stipulation.

Rowe Mfg. Co. v Curtis-Straub Co., 223-858; 273 NW 895

9944 [§15] Implied warranties of quality.

I REASONABLE FITNESS FOR SPECIAL PURPOSE

Discussion. See 5 ILB 6, 86—Unwholesome food—liability; 5 ILB 259—Liability for unwholesome food

Animal for breeding purposes. There may be an implied warranty that an animal is suitable for breeding purposes. Evidence reviewed, and held to sustain such implied warranty.

Tronsdale v Burkhardt, 207-1133; 224 NW 93

Buyer relying on seller—article for known purpose. Ordinarily no warranty of fitness will be implied where buyer orders specific article for specific purpose known to the seller, but where buyer relies on seller to furnish a suitable article for a known purpose warranty of fitness will be implied altho articles may have a well-known trade name. So whether seller impliedly warranted that certain lumber was fit for manufacture of tool chests, held, a jury question.

Davenport Co. v Edward Hines Co., 43 F 2d, 63

Contract exclusion. A written clause in a contract of sale of an article which declares that the contract contains the entire agreement does not exclude an implied warranty where one would otherwise be found.

Hughes v Equip. Corp., 216-1000; 250 NW 154

Fraud by seller—promise of future resales. In an action for the purchase price of a trade-named beer dispenser bought for resale, purchaser, altho same may have been an inducement to buy, may neither predicate fraud on seller's promise to procure for purchaser future resales, unless the promise is made with a secret intent to disavow, nor upon statements amounting to an opinion as to superior design; however, the jury should determine whether a statement as to merchantableness is an opinion or representation of fact.

Rowe Mfg. Co. v Curtis-Straub Co., 223-858; 273 NW 895

Implied warranty—reasonable fitness. Where a written contract to sell a specified trade-named beer dispenser contains no express warranties, but does contain a stipulation excluding all other agreements not mentioned therein, the purchaser, in seller's action for purchase price, may nevertheless go to the jury on defense of breach of implied warranty as to reasonable fitness for particular purpose, since this is not inconsistent with nor negated by such express condition or stipulation.

Rowe Mfg. Co. v Curtis-Straub Co., 223-858; 273 NW 895

Negating implied warranty. An implied warranty that a rebuilt tractor is reasonably fit for the particular purpose for which it is purchased, which purpose is specifically stated to the seller at and before the sale is consummated, cannot exist when the written contract of sale contains the clause: "No warranty on second-hand or rebuilt tractors."

Dollen v Tractor Co., 214-774; 241 NW 307

Passenger elevator falling—nonliability elevator manufacturer. The builder of a passenger elevator is neither liable for a personal injury caused by the falling of the car where the safety device, designed to prevent such falling and to stop the car, was of an approved pattern in general use and was not shown to have ever before failed to work efficiently, nor where it is disclosed by the accident a device could have been made which would have obviated the particular defect which caused the particular accident, unless it is further shown that reasonable prudence would have discovered this defect and remedied it. Due care, in a legal sense, does not require an uncanny foresight.

Hoskins v Otis Elev. Co., 16 F 2d, 220

Parol warranty—when incompetent. Principle reaffirmed that when a written contract of sale contains no warranty, a parol one may not be engrafted thereon.

Blecher v Schmidt, 211-1063; 235 NW 34

Patented article—implied warranty. The fact that an article purchased is patented and is generally sold under a trade name does not exclude an implied warranty when, to the knowledge of the seller, it is purchased for a particular purpose.

Hughes v Equip. Corp., 216-1000; 250 NW 154

See Dorman v Thorpe, 217-91; 250 NW 902

Purchase for particular purpose. The knowledge of the authorized agent of the seller of an article that the article was being bought by the buyer for a particular purpose is imputed to the seller even tho the agent fails so to inform his principal.

Hughes v Equip. Corp., 216-1000; 250 NW 154

Waiver of breach by use or making payments. The buyer of an article by retaining it in his possession, and using it, and making payments thereon, after he knows it is not fulfilling the implied warranty, does not thereby estop himself from rescinding when said retention, use and payments were at the request of the seller and in consequence of the seller's promise to make the article work in a satisfactory manner.

Hughes v Equip. Corp., 216-1000; 250 NW 154

Warranty—necessity to plead. In an action for the purchase price of a machine, an offset of damages consequent on the defective construction and inefficient operation of the machine cannot be allowed when defendant fails to allege any representations or warranties relative to said defects.

Baker v Ward, 217-581; 250 NW 109

II PURCHASE BY DESCRIPTION—MERCHANTABLENESS

Documentary evidence—Coca-Cola advertisements—admissibility. In an action against a beverage bottler and wholesaler for damages caused by drinking unwholesome Coca-Cola, sold by the bottler to a retailer, the admission of Coca-Cola advertisements in evidence held nonprejudicial.

Anderson v Tyler, 223-1033; 274 NW 48

Implied warranty of merchantability. The assertion by a dealer in effecting a sale of a fur coat that "it is an A-No. 1 fur coat" and that the purchaser "would get a number of years' service out of the coat", may constitute the basis of an implied warrant of merchantability, when the buyer relies thereon.

Brandenberg v Stores, 211-1321; 235 NW 741; 77 ALR 1161

Remedies of buyer—breach of warranty, negligence, or both. A failure to use care in preparation and manufacture of a beverage constitutes negligence and anyone suing for injuries therefrom may rely on either this breach of duty or a breach of warranty, or both.

Anderson v Tyler, 223-1033; 274 NW 48

Sales on Sunday—unwholesome food—damages. Fact that beverage was sold on Sunday, in violation of §13227, C., '35, does not deprive plaintiff of right to recover proven damages.

Anderson v Tyler, 223-1033; 274 NW 48

III EXAMINATION PRIOR TO PURCHASE

Latent defects and equal opportunity to inspect. The rules of law pertaining to latent defects and equal opportunity to inspect do not apply to the sale of an article, the possession of which the law unconditionally prohibits.

Espe v McClelland, 208-512; 226 NW 130

Nonwaiver by inspection of goods. The inspection and acceptance of goods by the buyer thereof do not terminate an implied warranty of quality when the buyer immediately notifies the seller of the breach of warranty.

Roland v Markman, 207-1322; 224 NW 826

IV PURCHASE OF SPECIFIED ARTICLE

Implied warranty—trade name as affecting reasonable fitness. Where a newly designed and marketed beer dispenser not generally known to the trade was purchased for a particular purpose on seller's recommendation therefor, fact that it was purchased under a trade name will not relieve seller of implied warranty as to fitness under this section.

Rowe Mfg. Co. v Curtis-Straub Co., 223-858; 273 NW 895

V EXPRESS EXCLUDING IMPLIED WARRANTY

Express and implied warranty. An express written warranty does not bar a noninconsistent implied warranty.

Wise v Motors Co., 207-939; 223 NW 862

SALE BY SAMPLE

9945 [§16] Implied warranties in sale by sample.

Unallowable directed verdict. The existence of conflicting evidence on the issue whether goods furnished were according to samples by which ordered, or whether a portion of the goods were ever ordered and were consequently properly returned, necessarily justifies the court in overruling a motion for a directed verdict for the entire sum sued for.

Central Shoe Co. v Kraft Co., 213-445; 239 NW 238

PART II

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY AS BETWEEN SELLER AND BUYER

9946 [§17] When property passes.

Unascertained goods. The title to unascertained or unexamined goods contracted for does not pass to the vendee upon their delivery to the carrier.

Hostler Co. v Stuff, 205-1341; 219 NW 481

9947 [§18] Property in specific goods passes when parties so intend.

Motor vehicle act. The requirement of the motor vehicle act that delivery shall not be deemed made or title passed until a registration of transfer is consummated has no reference to a contract delivery and passing of title strictly between private parties.

Cerex Co. v Peterson, 203-355; 212 NW 890

Conditional seller not "owner". Statute making owner of automobile liable for damage caused by its operation when being driven with owner's consent, held not to extend to seller of automobile under conditional sales contract even when, under the contract of sale, seller retained title, for the buyer is the beneficial, equitable, and substantial owner, and the seller retains only naked title subject to complete divestation upon payment of the final installment of the purchase price.

Craddock v Bickelhaupt, 227-202; 288 NW 109

Incumbrance—effect. The existence of an implied warranty that goods sold are free from incumbrance, and a breach of such warranty, does not prevent the title from passing to the purchaser.

Stanhope Bk. v Peterson, 205-578; 218 NW 262

Purchase with option to return unused portion. Where manufactured lumber is shipped freight prepaid under a contract that the buyer may return whatever portion he does not use, title to the entire shipment passes to the buyer, not as he uses the lumber, but when he receives and accepts the shipment.

Queal Lbr. v Anderson, 211-210; 229 NW 707

9948 [§19] Rules for ascertaining intention.

Title to unascertained goods. See under §9946
Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 582

Delivery—intent—evidence. The intent of the parties necessarily controls the issues (1) whether, in a parol contract of purchase, title passed on delivery, with a right to rescind if a trial proved unsatisfactory, or (2) whether title passed only after a satisfactory trial. Necessarily, what the parties said to each other at the time the contract was entered into is admissible.

Bishop v Starrett, 201-493; 207 NW 561

Registration statutes. Purpose of §4964, C., '35, in the motor vehicle laws, providing that title does not pass until the registration provisions have been completed, is to enable officials to perform their duty, collect tax, and prevent fraud on state, and does not restrict the contract rights of parties as between themselves, which they would have had in the absence of such statute.

Craddock v Bickelhaupt, 227-202; 288 NW 109

Unenforceable oral contracts. Replevin for the possession of an existing article of personal property cannot be maintained when the action is based solely on an oral contract of purchase which is clearly within the statute of frauds, and under which contract title necessarily did not pass.

Lockie v McKee, 221-95; 264 NW 918

9949 [§20] Reservation of right of possession or property when goods are shipped.

Defective acknowledgment—trustee's rights. Where conditional sale contract provided that title to goods should remain in vendor until contract was performed, the property did not pass to trustee in bankruptcy of such vendee, notwithstanding that contract was not acknowledged in accordance with Iowa statute so as to entitle it to be recorded.

In re Pointer Brewing Co., 105 F 2d, 478

9950 [§21] Sale by auction.

When title passes. The act of a bidder at auction in settling with the clerk for his purchase by part payment in money and by the execution of a note conclusively establishes title in the purchaser.

Stanhope Bk. v Peterson, 205-578; 218 NW 262

9951 [§22] Risk of loss.

Retention of title as security—effect in case of loss. After full and proper delivery of an automobile has been made by the seller to the buyer, the risk of future loss of the car by fire or theft is on the buyer, even tho by contract the seller reserves title to the property merely as security for the performance of the contract of purchase.

Securities Inv. Corp. v Noltze, 222-678; 269 NW 866

PART IIIPERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT*9970 [§41] Seller must deliver and buyer accept goods.

Contract for warranty satisfactory to buyer—effect. One who orders goods on the express condition that, before shipment, he be furnished a written guaranty which will be satisfactory to him, covering the effectiveness of the goods, is under no obligation to accept or pay for the goods until he receives such warranty, and when he acts honestly and in good faith his decision that he is not satisfied is final. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue.

Mortemoth Co. v Furniture Co., 211-188; 233 NW 133

Delivery prevented by buyer—instructions. The court cannot properly instruct in an action to recover for goods sold that a verdict should be for defendant if no delivery was made when, under the record, the jury might find that the defendant prevented the plaintiff from making delivery.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

Failure to perform contract—effect. Failure of a vendor to furnish a pedigree, in accordance with his contract, after title to animals had passed to the purchaser and after they had died, does not render the sale without consideration.

Stanhope Bank v Peterson, 205-578; 218 NW 262

Nondelivery of abstract company records—plaintiff's burden. Plaintiff had burden of proving defendant did not deliver all of property of abstract company as provided in contract whereby assets of abstract company were to be turned over to plaintiff, in that all "take-offs" were not delivered.

Mills Co. v Otis, (NOR); 228 NW 47

9971 [§42] Delivery and payment are concurrent conditions.

Acceptance of goods by paying draft—effect. The act of the vendee of goods in paying the draft attached to the bill of lading for the goods, cannot be deemed an acceptance of the goods as of the quality purchased.

Kelly Co. v Strand Co., 213-852; 239 NW 568

Prohibited repudiation. A vendor who accepts and retains a partial payment for goods on the condition that the balance will be paid by the vendee when the goods are delivered, may not, after a subsequent tender of the balance, repudiate the contract on the claim that the initial payment should have embraced the entire purchase price.

Daeges v Beh, 207-1063; 224 NW 80

9972 [§43] Place, time, and manner of delivery.

"About November first." A contract to deliver a commercial product "about November first" requires a delivery substantially on said date, or near approximation thereto. An offer to deliver six weeks after said date is not a compliance with the contract.

North Am. Co. v Gilbertson, 200-1349; 206 NW 610

Time of delivery—waiver. A waiver of the contract time for the delivery of goods is not established by testimony simply showing forbearance on the part of the buyer to specifically insist upon immediate delivery according to the contract.

North Am. Co. v Gilbertson, 200-1349; 206 NW 610

Varying contract as to delivery. A seller who has contracted to deliver "about" a named date a specified quantity of "dry ginseng" may not excuse his failure to deliver at approximately said time by the plea of a general custom to the effect "that delivery was not to be made until the roots had been thoroughly dried according to a well established method of treatment".

North Am. Co. v Gilbertson, 200-1349; 206 NW 610

9976 [§47] Right to examine the goods.

Latent defects and equal opportunity to inspect. The rules of law pertaining to latent defects and equal opportunity to inspect do not apply to the sale of an article the possession of which the law unconditionally prohibits.

Espe v McClelland, 208-512; 226 NW 130

Unascertained goods. A vendee of unexamined goods has a right to examine them when delivery is tendered, and if he discovers that the goods are not what he ordered, and that a fraud has been perpetrated on him, his prompt refusal to receive the goods, and notification to the vendor accordingly, constitute a justifiable rescission.

Hostler Co. v Stuff, 205-1341; 219 NW 481

9977 [§48] What constitutes acceptance.

Acceptance of goods by paying draft—effect. The act of the vendee of goods in paying the draft attached to the bill of lading for the goods cannot be deemed an acceptance of the goods as of the quality purchased.

Kelly Mill. v Baking Co., 213-852; 239 NW 568

9978 [§49] Acceptance does not bar action for damages.

- II ACCEPTANCE AFTER INSPECTION

I ACCEPTANCE OF BELATED DELIVERIES

No annotations in this volume

II ACCEPTANCE AFTER INSPECTION

Acceptance of goods—estoppel. A buyer who knows that the goods received are not the kind ordered, and is given by the seller the unrestricted option to return the goods, and who thereupon proceeds to use the goods, may not, when sued for the price, plead the defect as a defense.

McDonald Co. v Morrison, 211-882; 228 NW 878

Nonwaiver by inspection of goods. The inspection and acceptance of goods by the buyer thereof does not terminate an implied warranty of quality when the buyer immediately notifies the seller of the breach of warranty.

Roland v Markman, 207-1322; 224 NW 826

9980 [§51] Buyer's liability for failing to accept delivery.

Contracts—breach of part not destructive of whole. Generally, where contracts are severable and divisible, and the consideration justly apportioned to part of the contract, a breach of that part does not destroy the contract in toto, but the defendant may only recoup himself in damages.

Paramount Pictures v Maxon, 226-308; 284 NW 119

Incurable breach. A dairyman who contracts to have his cows tested for tuberculosis, and to sell his milk to a retailer at a price substantially in excess of the market price for other milk of the same butter-fat test, fatally breaches his contract by failing, for twelve months, (§3077, C., '27) to have his cows so tested, even tho a test, subsequent to the retailer's rescission, shows that the cows are free from tuberculosis.

Niederhauser v Dairy Co., 213-285; 237 NW 222

PART IV

RIGHTS OF UNPAID SELLER AGAINST THE GOODS

9982 [§53] Remedies of an unpaid seller.

Rescission—conflict of testimony. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether parties to a contract had mutually rescinded the contract.

Percival v Sea, 207-245; 222 NW 886

RESALE BY THE SELLER

9989 [§60] When and how resale may be made.

Buyer's rescission—seller's duty to resell—measure of damages. Where a stock buyer after purchasing cattle under contract refuses to accept them and stops payment on the check given to seller, it becomes the seller's duty to exercise reasonable care within a reasonable time to dispose of the cattle at the best market price available, and an instruction measuring the damages as the difference between the sum obtained and the contract price is correct.

Bogren v Conn., 224-1031; 278 NW 289

Rent and advances—liability under assignment of lease. A vendee who in the purchase of a business takes an assignment of the lease and agrees to pay the future accruing rental, but later abandons the property, is liable for said rentals for the time consumed by the vendor in effecting a resale of the property for and on behalf of the defaulting vendee.

Courshon Co. v Brewer, 215-885; 245 NW 354

Right to resell—reasonable time. The right of a vendor to resell the property on vendee's account and because of vendee's abandonment of the property and refusal to pay for the property, must be exercised within a reasonable time. Three months after the original sale held reasonable under the circumstances.

Courshon Co. v Brewer, 215-885; 245 NW 354

Vendor's right to resell for vendee. A vendee who, under a contract of purchase, takes title to and possession of personal property, and later abandons said property without paying the contract price, arms the vendor, by reason of said abandonment and refusal to pay, with legal right, on notice to the vendee, to retake possession of said property within a reasonable time, for and on behalf of said vendee, and to sell the property, credit the net proceeds on the contract price, and sue vendee for the balance.

Courshon Co. v Brewer, 215-885; 245 NW 354

Agreement to purchase steers retained and fed by alleged seller. In law action based on written instrument, wherein plaintiff agreed to feed 24 head of steers for a period from 90 to 120 days, and defendant agreed to purchase the steers at any time during such period at 14 cents per pound, hoof weight, at Chicago or other reasonable marketing point, such agreement was not enforceable due to lack of mutuality and consideration, especially where there was no other consideration than that imported by the instrument, and this being a law action rather than in equity to make contract mean what plaintiff contends that it was intended to say, hence plaintiff could not recover on instrument the difference between 14 cents per pound and price at which plaintiff sold the steers on Chicago market.

May v Burns, 227-1385; 291 NW 473

RESCISSION BY THE SELLER

9990 [§61] When and how the seller may rescind the sale.

Rescission of contract—material evidence. The fact that a vendee at no time offered to place the vendor in statu quo—in fact had so handled the property that he was unable so to do,—tends quite forcibly to show that there had never been a mutual rescission of the contract of purchase.

Courshon Co. v Brewer, 215-885; 245 NW 354

Rescission of contract—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held quite conclusively to show that a contract of sale had not been rescinded.

Marshall v Greenlease-Lied, 218-597; 255 NW 666

Useless formal tenders unnecessary. A formal tender of property as a basis for the rescission of a contract is excusable when the one to whom the tender is to be made has given advance warning that the formal tender, if made, will not be accepted.

McTee & Co. v Ryder, 221-407; 265 NW 636

PART V

ACTIONS FOR BREACH OF THE CONTRACT
REMEDIES OF THE SELLER

9992 [§63] Actions for the price.

Action for damages—check as measure of. Where in the sale of a business, the vendee gives a check for the full purchase price of the good will of the business, and later repudiates the entire sale except that part pertaining to said good will, the vendor may maintain an action to recover as damages the amount of such check.

Courshon Co. v Brewer, 215-885; 245 NW 354

Conditional sales—breach—rescission. The seller of an automobile, under a conditional sales contract, who, when the buyer is not in default, peremptorily repossesses himself of the car, and applies unreasonable and exorbitant repairs on the car, and refuses to redeliver possession unless the buyer agrees to pay such charges, arms the buyer with right to rescind the contract, even tho the seller had reserved the right to make necessary repairs.

Manbeck Sales Co. v Davis, 217-1141; 251 NW 61

Agreement to purchase steers retained and fed by alleged seller. In law action based on written instrument, wherein plaintiff agreed to feed 24 head of steers for a period from 90 to 120 days, and defendant agreed to purchase the steers at any time during such period at 14 cents per pound, hoof weight, at Chicago or other reasonable marketing point, such agreement was not enforceable due to lack of mutuality and consideration, especially where there was no other consideration than that imported by the instrument, and this being a law action rather than in equity to make contract mean what plaintiff contends that it was intended to say, hence plaintiff could not recover on instrument the difference between 14 cents per pound and price at which plaintiff sold the steers on Chicago market.

May v Burns, 227-1385; 291 NW 473

Conditional sales—seizure of property. A vendor of goods who retains title until the purchase price is paid, and who, on default in payment, repossesses himself of the goods and sells them, may not thereupon collect the balance of the purchase price from the vendee.

McNabb v Bunting, 207-1300; 224 NW 506

Defect as defense—waiver. The buyer of an article may not predicate objections to it on the ground of a defect which, at his request, was wholly corrected.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

Delivery prevented by buyer—instructions. The court cannot properly instruct in an action to recover for goods sold that a verdict should be for defendant if no delivery was made when, under the record, the jury might find that the defendant prevented the plaintiff from making delivery.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

Nonpremature action. An action for the price of goods sold under a contract which provides that one-half of the purchase price is due on delivery, and the balance six months thereafter, is not premature when the goods were furnished, duly tendered to the defendant, and refused, and the action commenced some four years after said refusal.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

Payment on condition. A vendor who has contracted for payment of an article after he has delivered and erected it at a named place may not recover the purchase price, in the absence of proof that he has complied with said conditions.

Capitol Hill Co. v Chadwick, 200-916; 205 NW 766

Property sold in furtherance of gambling. A vendor of property which is capable of a perfectly legitimate use may not recover therefor when he sells it for the very purpose of enabling the vendee to operate a gambling device, to wit, a punch board.

Parker-Gordon v Benakis, 213-136; 238 NW 611

Representation or warranty—necessity to plead. In an action for the purchase price of a machine, an offset of damages consequent on the defective construction and inefficient operation of the machine cannot be allowed when defendant fails to allege any representations or warranties relative to said defects.

Baker v Ward, 217-581; 250 NW 109

Total breach. Proof that an article was worthless for the purpose for which purchased precludes recovery therefor.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

Wrongful repudiation of contract—splitting action. A party to a continuing, executory contract may, notwithstanding the wrongful repudiation of the contract by the other party, insist on the contract and sue and recover the matured installments to date; and such action is no bar to a subsequent action to recover henceforth for the wrongful breach of the contract.

Collier v Rawson, 202-1159; 211 NW 704

9993 [§64] Action for damages for nonacceptance of the goods.

Refusal to receive—resumption by seller of dominion over goods—effect. The seller of goods, by resuming dominion over the shipment after the buyer had unqualifiedly refused to receive it on the ground that the goods were not in accordance with the contract, does not thereby waive his rights under the contract—does not thereby waive the breach of the contract by the buyer if there was such breach; and especially is this true when the goods are bulky, valuable, and at the time, subject to railroad demurrage and other expenses.

Appel v Carr, 216-64; 246 NW 608

Nonmarketable goods—refusal to accept. The measure of damages consequent on the refusal of the vendee to accept goods which have no market value because manufactured or remodeled for the vendee for a particular purpose is the difference between the non-market value, if any, and the contract price, and not the profit which the vendor would have made on the deal, had it been consummated.

Percival Co. v Sea, 207-245; 222 NW 886

Lack of mutuality and consideration—agreement to purchase steers retained and fed by alleged seller. In law action based on written instrument, wherein plaintiff agreed to feed 24 head of steers for a period from 90 to 120 days, and defendant agreed to purchase the steers at any time during such period at 14 cents per pound, hoof weight, at Chicago or other reasonable marketing point, such agreement was not enforceable due to lack of mutuality and consideration, especially where there was no other consideration than that imported by the instrument, and this being a law action rather than in equity to make contract mean what plaintiff contends that it was intended to say, hence plaintiff could not recover on instrument the difference between 14 cents per pound and price at which plaintiff sold the steers on Chicago market.

May v Burns, 227-1385; 291 NW 473

Offer or order—insufficient acceptance by corporation. A contract for the purchase of an article from a corporation is not established by the simple, naked showing that the purported buyer signed an order addressed to the corporation for the article, and that said order carries an acceptance signed individually by a person who was, in fact, the vice president and general manager of the corporation.

Birum-Olson v Johnson, 213-439; 239 NW 123

Unallowable directed verdict. The existence of conflicting evidence on the issue whether goods furnished were according to samples by which ordered, or whether a portion of the goods were ever ordered and were consequently properly returned, necessarily justifies the court in overruling a motion for a directed verdict for the entire sum sued for.

Central Shoe Co. v Kraft Co., 213-445; 239 NW 238

9994 [§65] When seller may rescind contract or sale.

Status quo—nonapplication of principle. The rule of law that when a party to a contract of sale rescinds the contract he must restore the status quo has no application to a case where the vendor repossesses himself of the property after default of the vendee and, under and in accordance with the terms of the contract, retains the preceding payments and betterments made on the property as liquidated damages for nonperformance of the contract, depreciation, and rental; and in such case it is immaterial that the vendor after so doing surrendered the unpaid notes and released the contract of record.

Stauffer v Motor Co., 207-1038; 221 NW 918

Conflict of testimony. Evidence reviewed, and held to present a jury question on the issue whether parties to a contract had mutually rescinded the contract.

Percival Co. v Sea, 207-245; 222 NW 886

Prohibited repudiation. A vendor who accepts and retains a partial payment for goods on the condition that the balance will be paid by the vendee when the goods are delivered may not, after a subsequent tender of the balance, repudiate the contract on the claim that the initial payment should have embraced the entire purchase price.

Daeges v Beh, 207-1063; 224 NW 80

REMEDIES OF THE BUYER

9995 [§66] Action for converting or detaining goods.

Option to resell to vendor—reasonable time. The course of dealings between a vendor and vendee of personal property may have a very material bearing on the question whether the vendee exercised, within a reasonable time, his option to demand a repurchase of the property by the vendor.

Calvert v Mason City Co., 219-963; 259 NW 452

9996 [§67] Action for failing to deliver goods.

ANALYSIS

- I ACTION IN GENERAL
- II DAMAGES RECOVERABLE

I ACTION IN GENERAL

Refusal of employer to sell at price stated—not excused by resulting loss. One who contracted to pay a commission to a dealer for selling goods at a certain price could not excuse his breach of the contract by refusing to sell except at a higher price, at least as to orders for goods taken before the breach, on the ground that to fulfill the contract would cause him to operate his business at a loss.

Lee v Sundberg, 227-1375; 291 NW 146

Construction of contract—termination. The oral granting, on adequate consideration, by a manufacturer to another party of the exclusive right to sell a legal article in prescribed territory so long as there is a demand for the article, and so long as such other party desires to continue such sale, is, on acceptance, a valid contract until terminated by reasonable notice.

Atlas Co. v Huffman, 217-1217; 252 NW 133

Evidence—self-serving declarations. A contract of sale fully executed and no longer in controversy may be so related to and connected with a later contract between the same parties that the correspondence attending the former may be admissible as interpreting the latter, but the offerer must not be permitted to go to the extent of showing, by his own self-serving letters, his dissatisfaction with the goods furnished to him under said first contract, and the loss he suffered thereunder.

Appel v Carr, 216-64; 246 NW 608

Evidence—unallowable conclusion and assumption. A buyer of goods who is seeking to recover back from the seller the price paid because the goods were not in accordance with the contract and who has testified on cross-examination that he rejected the goods because his buyer refused to take the goods, may not show on re-direct that his buyer refused the goods because the goods “were not up to the grade purchased”.

Appel v Carr, 216-64; 246 NW 608

II DAMAGES RECOVERABLE

Buyer’s right to treat contract terminated. Seller’s unjustified refusal to furnish materials under a continuing contract was ground for buyer (1) to treat contract as terminated and purchase elsewhere and (2) to make counterclaim for damages in seller’s action against buyer on account.

Eastman Stores, Inc. v Eckert Studio, (NOR); 231 NW 434

Net profits as damages—evidence. The measure of damages suffered by one who has been wrongfully deprived of the exclusive right to sell a specified article in prescribed territory, is the net profits or commissions, provided for or contemplated by the contract, which he would have earned had the contract been carried out. And the evidentiary basis for computing such profits may be (1) proof of the number of such articles sold in the territory up to time of trial by plaintiff’s successor, and (2) the profits and commissions he would have received on such sales, less the expenses and value of time necessarily entailed on him had he made such sales.

Atlas Co. v Huffman, 217-1217; 252 NW 133

9997 [§68] Specific performance.

Cancellation by defaulting party. A contract may not be canceled by the arbitrary action of a party who is in default.

Atlas Co. v Huffman, 217-1217; 252 NW 133

9998 [§69] Remedies for breach of warranty.

- III RESCISSION
- IV RETURN OF GOODS AND STATUS QUO

- VI DAMAGES

I REMEDIES IN GENERAL

As offer of settlement. A statement by a creditor to his debtor that "You can do one of three things—pay the bill, return the merchandise, or beat the bill" held quite insufficient, in view of the record, to constitute an offer of settlement justifying the debtor in returning the goods in full settlement of the creditor's claim.

United Service v Heinen, 220-859; 263 NW 343

Duty to pay notwithstanding breach. One who buys an article of substantial value, and is precluded by his own delay from rescinding because of a breach of warranty, must pay for the article, in the absence of evidence of the damage caused by the breach of warranty.

Chariton Co. v Lester, 202-475; 210 NW 584

II ACTION FOR BREACH OF WARRANTY

Evidence of breach—sufficiency. Evidence held to demonstrate a breach of warranty on a radio.

Des M. Music v Lindquist, 214-117; 241 NW 425

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to show breach of warranty of a tractor and plow.

Wetmore v Wooster, 212-1365; 237 NW 430

Failure to prove. A buyer who relies on breach of warranty and fraud must fail if he fails to prove his allegations.

Oelwein Co. v Baker, 204-66; 214 NW 595

Nonwaiver of breach by renewing note. The fact that the buyer of various goods gives his promissory note for the entire amount and renews said note after he knew that an express warranty as to one class of the goods had been breached, does not constitute a waiver of his right, when sued on the note, to counterclaim for damages consequent on such breach.

Peet Co. v Bruene, 210-131; 230 NW 327

Nonwaiver by inspection of goods. The inspection and acceptance of goods by the buyer thereof does not terminate an implied warranty of quality when the buyer immediately notifies the seller of the breach of warranty.

Roland v Markman, 207-1322; 224 NW 826

Performance of contract—acceptance of goods—estoppel. A buyer who knows that the goods received are not the kind ordered, and is given by the seller the unrestricted option to return the goods, and who thereupon proceeds to use the goods, may not, when sued for the price, plead the defect as a defense.

McDonald Co. v Morrison, 211-882; 228 NW 878

Proof of both affirmative and negative. A vendee who, in defense to an action for the purchase price of hogs, alleges that he purchased under a representation that the stock had been doubly vaccinated, and that the representation was false, has the burden to establish not only (1) the representation, but (2) the falsity thereof.

Co-operative Sales Co. v Van Der Beek, 219-974; 259 NW 586

Representation or warranty—necessity to plead. In an action for the purchase price of a machine, an offset of damages consequent on the defective construction and inefficient operation of the machine cannot be allowed when defendant fails to allege any representations or warranties relative to said defects.

Baker v Ward, 217-581; 250 NW 109

Scienter. In an action on warranty, it is not necessary for plaintiff to prove that defendant knew that his warranty was false.

Passcuzzi v Pierce, 208-1389; 227 NW 409

Warranty—breach—evidence. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether animals were, contrary to a warranty, infected with a disease at the time they were purchased.

Passcuzzi v Pierce, 208-1389; 227 NW 409

Warranty—total breach. Proof that an article was worthless for the purpose for which purchased precludes recovery therefor.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

Warranty—insufficient proof of breach. In an action for damages consequent on the alleged breach of a warranty that certain powders would prevent clover bloat in cattle, plaintiff must establish (1) that the powders were administered to the cattle in accordance with the instructions of the seller, and (2) that thereafter the cattle died of clover bloat.

Peet Co. v Bruene, 210-131; 230 NW 327

Warranty—reports on vending machine earning power—noncompliance waived by acceptance. A seller of vending machines, who warrants their earning power and agrees to repurchase if they fail, may not in buyer's action on this warranty to recover the purchase price complain for the first time as to buyer's periodical reports not conforming to the contract, when, after being asked if they were satisfactory, he made no reply.

Henriott v Main, 225-20; 279 NW 110

III RESCISSION

Rescission—belated assertion of right. The purchase and receipt of household furnishings and the use thereof for some three years constitute an irrevocable acceptance of the goods.

Braverman v Naso, 203-1297; 214 NW 574

Rescission—damages recoverable. A vendee of material for a particular purpose may rescind for failure of the material to meet the contract terms, and may recover his reasonable expense in attempting to use the material.

Granette Prod. v Neumann, 200-572; 203 NW 935; 205 NW 205

Rescission—fatal delay. A delay of more than a year to rescind the purchase of a freshwater-pumping apparatus, with full knowledge at all times of its defects, is unreasonable per se.

Chariton Co. v Lester, 202-475; 210 NW 584

Delay in rescission—excuse. The fact that the seller of an article induces the buyer to retain it, with the assurance that he—the seller—will make it comply with the warranty, is very material on the issue whether the buyer rescinded the contract within a reasonable time.

Brennan v Laundry Co., 209-922; 229 NW 321
Van Dyck v Abramsohn, 214-87; 241 NW 461

Rescission within reasonable time—jury question—waiver. Where an Iowa seller's agent, by falsely representing that buyer would have exclusive territory, fraudulently induced a buyer in Texas to purchase vending machines and confections to be vended therein, the buyer, after discovering their falsity, waived such representations by accepting the machines and placing them in operation for about two months, but as to representations that the confections would withstand heat and humidity of Texas climate, and that a surety company bond would be filed with a certain bank, question as to whether rescission was made within reasonable time after discovery of falsity was for jury. It is buyer's duty to rescind contract within reasonable time after discovery that representations by seller are false and what is a reasonable time must be determined with reference to all the circumstances and ordinarily such question is for the jury.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

Rescission—inability to return property. The purchaser of corporate bank stock cannot rescind when he has pledged the stock and is unable to tender it back to the seller.

Rogers v Jungkuz, 204-1119; 216 NW 705

Rescission—total failure of consideration. The sale of an automobile, the engine number of which has been defaced, altered, or tampered with, without an official certificate showing good and sufficient reasons for such change, presents a case of total failure of consideration, and no formal rescission of contract is necessary in order to recover back the price paid.

Espe v McClelland, 208-512; 226 NW 130

Rescission—waiver by unauthorized use. The buyer of a machine who substantially operates it in his business and for his own profit after thoroughly testing it and tendering it back with notice of rescission, thereby irrevocably waives the rescission once made by him.

Advance Co. v Wharton, 211-264; 233 NW 673; 77 ALR 1153

Rescission—waiver by using article. The buyer of a fur coat will not be held to waive his right to rescind for breach of an implied warranty of merchantableness because of the fact that he temporarily wore the coat once or twice after asserting such rescission.

Brandenberg v Stores, 211-1321; 235 NW 741; 77 ALR 1161

Contract limitation on remedy. It seems that the seller and buyer of goods may validly contract to the effect that the sole remedy of the buyer for a breach of warranty shall be a rescission of the contract.

Advance Co. v Wharton, 211-264; 233 NW 673; 77 ALR 1153

Corporation stock—fraud. On rescission of a contract of purchase of corporate shares of stock because of fraud which induced the purchase, an unconditional tender to the seller of the stock certificate is all-sufficient, even tho the certificate is being held as collateral security for the debt of the one who makes the rescission.

North Amer. Ins. v Holstrum, 208-722; 217 NW 239; 224 NW 492

Tender—sufficiency. The buyer of an installed refrigerator performs his full legal duty, as far as rescission is concerned, by tendering an installed refrigerator at the place where the buyer received it and by keeping the tender good.

Van Dyck v Abramsohn, 214-87; 241 NW 461

Unauthorized representations of seller's agent—buyer's rescission for falsity—seller's responsibility. Where buyer rescinds contract induced by fraudulent misrepresentations of seller's agent and seeks recovery of purchase price, the agent's limited authority, otherwise binding on the buyer, does not preclude the buyer from alleging and proving such representations, and the seller is bound by such representations even tho unauthorized and even tho the contract expressly limits the agent's authority to make agreements.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

Unascertained goods—right of examination. A vendee of unexamined goods has a right to examine them when delivery is tendered, and if he discovers that the goods are not what he ordered, and that a fraud has been perpetrated on him, his prompt refusal to receive the goods, and notification to the vendor accordingly, constitute a justifiable rescission.

Hostler Co. v Stuff, 205-1341; 219 NW 481

When tender excused. The buyer of an article is not required as a condition precedent to rescinding to tender the article to the seller at the railway depot where it was received when the seller has demonstrated by his conduct and declarations that he would not receive the article if so tendered.

Hughes v Equip. Corp., 216-1000; 250 NW 154

IV RETURN OF GOODS AND STATUS QUO

Rescission—condition precedent. Rescission of a contract of sale imperatively requires a return of the status quo.

Rogers v Hale, 205-557; 218 NW 264

Tender—placing goods within jurisdiction of court unnecessary. When a buyer rescinds contract for purchase of goods, his duty to restore the status quo only requires that he tender return of the goods at place of delivery and the tender may be kept good by holding them in readiness for delivery to seller at such place on demand, it not being necessary that the goods be actually or constructively placed within the jurisdiction of the court.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

Restoration of worthless goods unnecessary—buyer's duty to do substantial justice. On rescission of contract for purchase of vending machines and confections to be vended therein, the buyer was not obliged to return confections that had become worthless, and his failure to tender to seller a few coins found in the vending machines did not constitute such a failure to restore the status quo as would prevent him from recovering purchase price, the buyer being required only to do substantial justice to the seller.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

V PLEADINGS IN RE RESCISSION

Express and implied—pleading. An express written warranty does not bar a noninconsistent implied warranty. So held in the sale of an automobile for a particular purpose.

Wise v Central Co., 207-939; 223 NW 862

Estoppel to assert partial rescission. A buyer of goods who, in resisting payment, rests his defense solely on a total rescission of the contract of purchase, may not, after the close of the evidence, interpose a plea of partial rescission even tho the terms of the contract be severable.

Butler Co. v Elliott, 211-1068; 233 NW 669

Finality of election of remedy. A plaintiff who pleads a rescission of a fraud-induced contract, and prays for judgment for the consideration paid, may, upon discovering his inability to prove the rescission, amend his pleadings and pray for damages caused by the fraud. (Note that the reverse of this proposition presents a different rule.)

Reinertson v Struthers, 201-1186; 207 NW 247

Rescission—proof required. The vendee of goods who, in an action for the purchase price, defends on a plea of rescission must show that the rescission was mutual, expressly or impliedly.

Cent. Motors v Clancy, 206-1090; 221 NW 774

Rescission—jury question. In an action by the vendee of an article to recover payments made, a jury question on the issue of rescission of the contract is made by evidence tending to show that the vendor made repeated but unsuccessful efforts to repair and adjust the article so it would work to vendee's satisfaction, and that thereupon vendee (1) refused to accept it, (2) returned it to the vendor, (3) received from the vendor the note executed when the purchase was made, and (4) was told by the vendor that he would order a new article for vendee.

Trester v Swan, 216-465; 249 NW 168

Unauthorized representations of seller's agent—buyer's rescission for falsity—seller's responsibility. Where buyer rescinds contract induced by fraudulent misrepresentations of seller's agent and seeks recovery of purchase price, the agent's limited authority, otherwise binding on the buyer, does not preclude the buyer from alleging and proving such representations, and the seller is bound by such representations even tho unauthorized and even tho the contract expressly limits the agent's authority to make agreements.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

VI DAMAGES

Failure to rescind—damages. The buyer of an article who fails to rescind within a reasonable time for breach of warranty will be deemed to have elected to retain the article and to rely on damages for relief.

VI DAMAGES—concluded

Brennan v Laundry Co., 209-922; 229 NW 321

Giving note for goods—estoppel. A vendee who executes and delivers his promissory note for goods purchased does not thereby estop himself from the recovery of damages consequent on feeding the goods to his stock.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

PART VI

INTERPRETATION

10000 [§71] Variation of implied obligations.

Negating implied warranty. An implied warranty that a rebuilt tractor is reasonably fit for the particular purpose for which it is purchased, which purpose is specifically stated to the seller at and before the sale is consummated, cannot exist when the written contract of sale contains the clause: "No warranty on second-hand or rebuilt tractors."

Dollen v Tractor Co., 214-774; 241 NW 307

Option to resell to vendor—reasonable time. The course of dealings between a vendor and vendee of personal property may have a very material bearing on the question whether the vendee exercised, within a reasonable time, his option to demand a repurchase of the property by the vendor.

Calvert v Inv. Co., 219-963; 259 NW 452

10002 [§73] Rule for cases not provided for herein.

- II RESCISSION IN GENERAL
- III GROUNDS FOR RESCISSION
- IV NONGROUNDS FOR RESCISSION
- V TIME OF RESCISSION
- VI ELECTION OF REMEDIES
- VII DAMAGES

I FRAUD IN GENERAL

Fraud pleas—status in court. In fraud actions, courts are reluctant to permit a cheater to profit by his own wrongdoing, tho at the same time courts are constrained by another consideration—that it is for the public welfare not to afford parties to written agreements such ready avenues of escape from their obligations that the purpose of lastingly recording such obligations in writing would be quite indifferently attained—the aim being to minimize both evils without accentuating either of them.

Griffiths v Brooks, 227-966; 289 NW 715

Fraud—cancellation and return of goods—burden of proof. A seller who seeks the cancellation and rescission of a contract of sale for fraud must prove that the buyer, when he bought the goods, did not intend to pay for them.

Vacuum Oil v Carstens, 211-1129; 231 NW 380

Deception constituting fraud—duty to investigate. Under clause in bonds entitling buyers to statement of securities, it is no excuse for failing to request the same, to say that statement from fraud perpetrators if furnished would not be true.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

Transfer of note. Evidence held insufficient to show that transfer of a promissory note was fraudulent.

Hoyer v Jordan, 208-1256; 224 NW 574

Fraud—scienter as essential element. A demand for damages based on alleged fraud cannot be sustained without proof of scienter, or its equivalent, whether the action be at law or in equity.

Appleby v Kurtz, 212-657; 237 NW 312

Property sold in furtherance of gambling. A vendor of property which is capable of a perfectly legitimate use may not recover therefor when he sells it for the very purpose of enabling the vendee to operate a gambling device, to wit, a punch board.

Parker-Gordon v Benakis, 213-136; 238 NW 611

Remedy of buyer. A buyer who relies on breach of warranty and fraud must fail if he fails to prove his allegations.

Oelwein Co. v Baker, 204-66; 214 NW 595

Sale by known nonowner. A vendee of property takes nothing by his conveyance when he knows who is the actual owner of the property, and that his vendor is simply in possession of the property as manager.

Kollmann v Kollmann, 204-950; 216 NW 77

II RESCISSION IN GENERAL

Rescission—useless formal tenders unnecessary. A formal tender of property as a basis for the rescission of a contract is excusable when the one to whom the tender is to be made has given advance warning that the formal tender, if made, will not be accepted.

McTee & Co. v Ryder, 221-407; 265 NW 636

Unauthorized representations of seller's agent—buyer's rescission for falsity—seller's responsibility. Where buyer rescinds contract induced by fraudulent misrepresentations of seller's agent and seeks recovery of purchase price, the agent's limited authority, otherwise binding on the buyer, does not preclude the buyer from alleging and proving such representations, and the seller is bound by such representations even tho unauthorized and even tho the contract expressly limits the agent's authority to make agreements.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

Tender—placing goods within jurisdiction of court unnecessary. When a buyer rescinds contract for purchase of goods, his duty to restore the status quo only requires that he tender return of the goods at place of delivery and the tender may be kept good by holding them in readiness for delivery to seller at such place on demand, it not being necessary that the goods be actually or constructively placed within the jurisdiction of the court.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

Restoration of worthless goods unnecessary—buyer's duty to do substantial justice. On rescission of contract for purchase of vending machines and confections to be vended therein, the buyer was not obliged to return confections that had become worthless, and his failure to tender to seller a few coins found in the vending machines did not constitute such a failure to restore the status quo as would prevent him from recovering purchase price, the buyer being required only to do substantial justice to the seller.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

III GROUNDS FOR RESCISSION

Fraud-induced sales. Principle reaffirmed that a fraud-induced sale of goods may be rescinded by the seller and the goods recovered.

Endicott Johnson v Shapiro, 200-843; 205 NW 511

Guardianship — disaffirmance of contract. The guardian of an incompetent may disaffirm the contract of his ward without going into equity, and recover the amount paid by the ward on the contract.

Ayres v Nopoulos, 204-881; 216 NW 258

Disaffirmance — sufficiency. Where a party has not received the property purchased and paid for, and the status quo has not been disturbed, a notice to the adverse party of disaffirmance and rescission is all-sufficient.

Ayres v Nopoulos, 204-881; 216 NW 258

IV NONGROUNDS FOR RESCISSION

Inability to restore status quo. The assignee or transferee of a mortgage-secured promissory note who forecloses the mortgage, buys in the property for the full amount of the judgment, and takes a deed, thereby necessarily releases the maker of the note from all personal liability. Manifestly, such assignee may not thereafter, in an action against his assignor, rescind the contract of purchase on the ground of fraud in the purchase, because he has disabled himself from putting the assignor in statu quo.

Iowa Co. v Bank, 200-952; 205 NW 744

Rescission—loss of right. The purchaser of a mortgage-secured promissory note may not rescind on the ground of fraudulent representations as to the value of the security when, with full knowledge of the fraud, he forecloses the mortgage, bids in the property for the full amount of the judgment, and later takes a sheriff's deed to the premises.

Iowa Co. v Bank, 200-952; 205 NW 744

V TIME OF RESCISSION

Reasonable time for rescission—jury question. Whether the right to rescind a contract of sale for fraud was exercised within a reasonable time is, ordinarily, a jury question.

Blecher v Schmidt, 211-1063; 235 NW 34

Reasonable time—jury question—waiver. Where an Iowa seller's agent, by falsely representing that buyer would have exclusive territory, fraudulently induced a buyer in Texas to purchase vending machines and confections to be vended therein, the buyer, after discovering their falsity, waived such representations by accepting the machines and placing them in operation for about two months, but as to representations that the confections would withstand heat and humidity of Texas climate, and that a surety company bond would be filed with a certain bank, question as to whether rescission was made within reasonable time after discovery of falsity was for jury. It is buyer's duty to rescind contract within reasonable time after discovery that representations by seller are false and what is a reasonable time must be determined with reference to all the circumstances and ordinarily such question is for the jury.

Robinson v Main, 227-1195; 290 NW 539

VI ELECTION OF REMEDIES

Bankruptcy—nondischargeable debt. A tenant who fraudulently causes the consumption and disposal of property belonging to his landlord as rent, thereby matures a cause of action against himself for the "malicious injury" to the said property—a claim not dischargeable in bankruptcy.

Russell v Peters, 219-708; 259 NW 197

Cases not covered by uniform act. The Uniform Sales Act is not a substitute for the entire law merchant existing before its adoption on the subject of sales.

Courshon Co. v Brewer, 215-885; 245 NW 354

Corn storage and sale—time indefinite—directing verdict. A contract for storage and sale of corn, "seller's option as to time", being indefinite as to what constitutes a reasonable time, the trial court's exclusion of defendants'

VI ELECTION OF REMEDIES—concluded proffered evidence on this point and direction of a verdict for the plaintiff was error.

Andreas & Son v Hempy, 224-561; 276 NW 791

Defect as defense—waiver. The buyer of an article may not predicate objections to it on the ground of a defect which, at his request, was wholly corrected.

Gibson v Miller, 215-631; 246 NW 606

Irrevocable waiver of action for damages. One who, with full knowledge that he has been fraudulently inveigled into signing an option contract for the sale of his property, elects not to rescind but to affirm and perform the contract, and does perform at a time when the contract is wholly executory and without consideration, thereby irrevocably waives, as a matter of law, any and all right to sue the wrongdoer for damages.

Ankeney v Brenton, 214-357; 228 NW 71

Option to resell to vendor—reasonable time. The course of dealings between a vendor and vendee of personal property may have a very material bearing on the question whether the vendee exercised, within a reasonable time, his option to demand a repurchase of the property by the vendor.

Calvert v Mason City Co., 219-963; 259 NW 452

Rescission for fraud—general denial—effect. Where plaintiff alleges rescission of a contract of sale because of defendant's fraud and seeks to recover the money paid, a general denial does not raise the issue that plaintiff after discovering the fraud elected to affirm the contract.

Blecher v Schmidt, 211-1063; 235 NW 34

Right to change remedy. A plaintiff who pleads a rescission of a fraud-induced contract, and prays for judgment for the consideration paid, may, upon discovering his inability to prove the rescission, amend his pleadings and pray for damages caused by the fraud. (Note that the reverse of this proposition presents a different rule.)

Reinertson v Struthers, 201-1186; 207 NW 247

Specific performance—cashing conditional down-payment check—mistake. In an action for specific performance of a land-purchase contract, the act of an agent having power to contract in allowing a down-payment check to be cashed when it bears a notation, of which he is aware, that it is not to be cashed until and unless the contract is accepted, furnishes support for a finding in equity that the contract was accepted, even tho the agent later claims that the check was cashed by mistake.

Hotz v Equitable, 224-552; 276 NW 413

VII DAMAGES

Defendants not fraud perpetrators—directing verdict. In an action against the incorporators of an investment company for damages for fraud in the sale of bonds, a directed verdict in favor of the incorporators was proper when the evidence, other than the outlawed printed representations on the back of the bonds, showed the fraud, if any, was committed by a bank trustee of the securities.

McGrath v Dougherty, 224-216; 275 NW 466

Fraud and negligence—damages—recovery. Instructions reviewed, and held to correctly state the conditions under which recovery could be had for damages consequent on the feeding of a so-called hog remedy to hogs.

Crouch v Remedy Co., 205-51; 217 NW 557

10004 [§75] Provisions not applicable to mortgages.

Qualified indorsement—liability. The indorsee of a mortgage-secured note is not entitled to a personal judgment against the indorser for the amount due on the note when such indorsee is holding the note (1) under an indorsement "without recourse", and (2) under an agreement by the indorser to repurchase the note in case of nonpayment by the maker at maturity, and when, after the indorser refuses to repurchase, the indorsee continues to treat the note and mortgage as his own property, and sues in foreclosure as such owner.

Hawkeye Ins. v Trust Co., 208-573; 221 NW 486

Rescission—loss of right. The purchaser of a mortgage-secured promissory note may not rescind on the ground of fraudulent representations as to the value of the security when, with full knowledge of the fraud, he forecloses the mortgage, bids in the property for the full amount of the judgment, and later takes a sheriff's deed to the premises.

Iowa Tr. Co. v Bank, 200-952; 205 NW 744

10005 [§76] Definitions.

Pre-existing debt is not value. Where a car was sold on a conditional sales contract which was not recorded, and the purchaser later gave a chattel mortgage in payment of a pre-existing debt evidenced by a demand note, there being no extension of time or other new consideration for the mortgage, the pre-existing debt did not constitute value to entitle the mortgage to priority over the conditional sales contract.

Hughes v Wessell, 226-811; 285 NW 200

Consideration for chattel mortgage—credit on debt—extension of time. A vendor of a house whose vendee had not completed the payments on the contract of purchase gave valuable consideration for two mortgages on an automobile owned by the vendee by taking the mortgages in return for payments advanced on the contract, by paying cash to the chattel mortgagee, and by extending the time on the payments for the house.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Value of realty bequest determined as of date of testator's death. Where, prior to his death, testator had given land of the value of $15,600 to four of his five children and directed his executors to purchase, for a daughter who had rejected partial distribution before his death, good Iowa land of the value of $15,600, the will, which was clear and definite as to the intention of testator, spoke as of date of testator's death, and the value of $15,600 fixed for land to be purchased for daughter was required to be determined as of the date of testator's death.

In re Holdorf, 227-977; 289 NW 756

Valuation of realty—evidence. In an equity action brought by trustee in bankruptcy to set aside an attachment lien on bankrupt's property, where judgment creditor complains of the evidence establishing the valuation in order to determine debtor's insolvency, and where creditor relies on a valuation of $4,500 offered for the property several years previous, but which offer had not been subsequently made by anyone, the reasonable finding, in view of all the evidence, is that the fair value of such property did not exceed $2,600.

SALES LAW—SALES IN BULK §10008

Matthews v Engineering Co., 228- ; 292 NW 64

Valuation of accounts. The fair valuation of accounts is that amount which, with reasonable diligence, can be realized from their collection within a reasonable time, and the amount as shown on the face of ordinary retail business accounts is not usually their fair value, tho of course accounts may be such that their face value, as a matter of fact, is their fair value.

Matthews v Engineering Co., 228- ; 292 NW 64

Valuation of business assets—evidence. In an equity action by trustee in bankruptcy to set aside an attachment lien wherein the attaching creditor urges the insufficient showing of the debtor's insolvency, the evidence of the trustee as to fair valuation of the personal assets of a lumber company was sufficient to sustain the finding of the court as to valuation. Since the record stipulated the appraisal found by two competent lumbermen, acquainted with such values, substantiated the value placed thereon by the trustee, and, as the trustee was not bound by any one witness' testimony, it was the function of the court to consider all the admissible evidence.

Matthews v Engineering Co., 228- ; 292 NW 64

CHAPTER 436

SALES IN BULK

10008 Inventory—creditors—notice.

Discussion. See 20 ILR 815—Iowa Bulk Sales Act

Bulk sales act—scope. The bulk sales act is for the protection of all creditors of the seller, not of any particular class of creditors.

Iowa Bank v Young, 214-1287; 244 NW 271; 84 ALR 1400

Nonapplicability of statute. This chapter has no application to a sale of a partnership interest to a copartner.

Peterson Co. v Freeburn, 204-644; 215 NW 746

Insufficient list of creditors. This chapter is not substantially complied with when the purported "list of creditors" simply states, under oath, (1) that the goods sold "have been paid for, and (2) that there are no creditors existing at the time of sale who could, by any process of law, obtain any interest in said goods"; and it is quite immaterial that the purchaser, in good faith, orally questioned the seller in regard to his creditors.

Hronik v Warty, 205-1111; 217 NW 449

Noncompliance with act—duty of creditor.

A creditor who learns that neither his debtor nor his debtor's vendee has complied with this chapter must, within a reasonable time thereafter, determine his course of action, and by some appropriate legal procedure announce such determination; but he is not necessarily limited to seven days.

Andrew v Rivers, 207-343; 223 NW 102

Credit due purchaser. One, who purchases a stock of merchandise without compliance with the bulk sales act, will, when called upon to account for the property, be given full credit for the amount paid by him in discharging a prior and existing lien on the property, and a proportional credit for the amount paid by him in discharging unsecured claims of creditors of the seller.

Iowa Bank v Young, 214-1287; 244 NW 271; 84 ALR 1400

Receiver—waiver of valuable rights. A chancery receiver may not waive a valuable right without the authority of the court, nor may an agent of a statutory receiver (e. g., the superintendent of banking) waive such valuable right without the authority of such statutory receiver. So held under this chapter.

Andrew v Rivers, 207-343; 223 NW 102

Waiver of illegality in sale. A creditor knowing that his debtor's stock of merchandise has been sold in bulk without notice to him, irrevocably waives all illegality in the sale by accepting, three months later, the debtor's note in full of his account—a note which enlarged the previous obligation of the debtor on the account.

Schramm & Co. v Shope, 200-760; 205 NW 350

See Andrew v Rivers, 207-343; 223 NW 102

10011 Purchaser deemed a receiver.

Second transferee as receiver. One, who receives title to a stock of merchandise, through the medium of a purported transfer from the former owner to a third party, with full knowledge that neither himself nor said other party had complied with the bulk sales act, will be held to hold said stock as receiver for the creditors of said former owner.

Iowa Bank v Young, 214-1287; 244 NW 271; 84 ALR 1400

Violation—election by creditor. In case of a sale in disregard of this chapter a creditor waives his right to hold the bona fide vendee for value as a receiver by failing to assert such right with due diligence.

Litchfield Co. v Heinicke, 200-958; 205 NW 774

CHAPTER 437

CHATTEL MORTGAGES AND CONDITIONAL SALES OF PERSONAL PROPERTY

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '32 AG Op 204; '34 AG Op 538; '38 AG Op 45

GENERAL PROVISIONS

10013 Exempt property—mortgage by husband and wife—exception.

Belated waiver of exemptions. The invalidity of a lease (unsigned by the wife of the lessee), insofar as it attempts to grant a lien for rent on the exempt property of the lessee, is not cured by the act of the wife in waiving her exemptions after the commencement of an action to determine the rights of existing creditors.

Brownlee v Masterson, 215-993; 247 NW 481

Necessity for proof. A chattel mortgagee who pleads that the mortgage covers exempt property and that the mortgage is void because his wife did not join therein, can be given no relief in the absence of proof of the facts upon which exemption can be based.

Citizens Bank v Scott, 217-584; 250 NW 626

Right of spouse to sell. The statutory provision which, in effect, provides that if a debtor "absconds", the property exempt to him shall be exempt to his wife and children, does not deprive the debtor, who is about to be sentenced to the penitentiary, of his legal right validly to sell, in good faith, his exempt property without the consent of his wife.

Brayman v Brayman, 215-1183; 247 NW 621

Bankruptcy—effect on existing liens. The discharge in bankruptcy of the mortgagor of exempt chattels does not discharge the lien of such mortgage.

Schwanz v Co-op. Co., 204-1273; 214 NW 491; 55 ALR 644

Enforcement after contest in bankruptcy. The holder of a chattel mortgage on exempt property who appears in bankruptcy proceedings against the mortgagor and unsuccessfully contests the asserted right of the mortgagor to have said property set off to him—the mortgagor—as exempt, is not thereby estopped to later and after the mortgagor has been discharged, enforce the lien of said mortgagor.

Schwanz v Co-op. Co., 204-1273; 214 NW 491; 55 ALR 644

Federal jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the federal bankruptcy court over the exempt property of the bankrupt extends no further than to enter an order setting off such property to the bankrupt. Irrespective of the proceedings in such court, the right to the exempt property, as between the owner and a mortgagee thereof, must be determined in the state court.

Eckhardt v Hess, 200-1308; 206 NW 291

Invalidity because of failure of consideration. A chattel mortgage on the exempt property of a husband and wife is void when the wife is in no manner indebted to the mortgagee, and concurs in and signs said mortgage with her husband solely because of the explicit promise of the mortgagee that he would advance certain funds to the mortgagors for use in their business, which promise the mortgagee subsequently wholly failed to perform.

Whittier Bank v Smith, 214-171; 241 NW 481

Nonexecution by wife—effect. A chattel mortgage on the exempt personal property of a husband and wife, not concurred in and signed by both of said parties, is absolutely void as to such exempt property.

Nat. Bank v Chapman, 212-561; 234 NW 198
Brownlee v Masterson, 215-993; 247 NW 481

Purchase of car—wife not joining—payment by employer—replevin. Where defendant was unable to meet payments on car, and employer, under an agreement with defendant, made delinquent and future payments to the finance company and took an assignment of the note and chattel mortgage, the employer was entitled to the possession of the car as against contentions that intervenor (defendant's wife) did not join in the execution of the chattel mortgage, that the assignment to employer did not create any right or lien sufficient to sustain writ of replevin, and that the payments made by the employer constituted a satisfaction and payment and not a purchase of the chattel mortgage.

Simpson v McConnell, 228- ; 291 NW 862

Signing chattel mortgage—effect. The mere signing of a chattel mortgage in a partnership name does not, in and of itself, estop the signer from denying that the mortgaged property is partnership property.

Citizens Bank v Scott, 217-584; 250 NW 626

Unrecorded mortgage lease—priority. A lien on the exempt personal property of a tenant by virtue of the terms of an unrecorded lease, signed by both husband and wife, is subordinate in right to a subsequently executed and recorded chattel mortgage on the property, even tho the mortgagee takes his mortgage with knowledge that the mortgagor was a tenant, but without knowledge that the lease granted the landlord a lien on the tenant's exempt property.

Brenton v Bream, 202-575; 210 NW 756

Brownlee v Masterson, 215-993; 247 NW 481

10014 Right to possession—title.

Right to execution levy on mortgaged property. See under §11682, Vol I Conversion by mortgagee. Where a chattel mortgage stipulates that the mortgagee may take possession of the mortgaged chattels "and sell the same", the mortgagee is guilty of conversion when he seizes the property and holds it in his possession for some four years without sale.

Wetmore v Wooster, 212-1365; 237 NW 430

Description omitting livestock increase or additions—effect. A chattel mortgage description not specifying future increase or additions to livestock will not be amplified by the court to include the same under a clause mortgaging "all personal property owned * * * and kept * * * in their possession", which clause speaks from the execution date of the mortgage.

Central B. & T. v Squires & Co., 225-416; 280 NW 594

Repossessed motor vehicles—no retaking on ground that conditional sale usurious. A replevin action to retake a motor vehicle covered by, and repossessed under, a conditional bill of sale, is not maintainable on the ground that the conditional bill of sale was allegedly usurious. The debt in the conditional bill of sale is valid and still exists even tho a usury penalty attaches.

Hill v Rolfsema, 226-486; 284 NW 376

Stipulation for possession. A stipulation in a chattel mortgage to the effect that the mortgagee, may, on default, take possession of the mortgaged chattels "and sell the same", excludes the mortgagee from seizing the property for any other purpose except to sell it.

Wetmore v Wooster, 212-1365; 237 NW 430

10015 Sales or mortgages—recording.

I NECESSITY OF RECORDING AND INSTRUMENTS TO BE RECORDED

Discussion. See 14 ILR 329—Conditional sales distinguished

"Actual possession" defined. A mortgagor must be deemed in actual possession of the mortgaged chattels when he has them on his own farm and in the actual custody of his own servant, even tho he—the mortgagor—does not reside upon said premises.

Raybourn v Creger, 204-961; 216 NW 272

Belated delivery. One who buys personal property from a seller who is not then or afterwards in actual possession of the property cannot be affected by a chattel mortgage

I NECESSITY OF RECORDING AND INSTRUMENTS TO BE RECORDED—concl'd'd subsequently acknowledged and subsequently delivered by the seller. The naked execution of a chattel mortgage confers no right on the one named therein as mortgagee.

Meredith v Beadle, 211-390; 233 NW 512

Chattel mortgage clause in real estate mortgage—when lien effective. The lien on the rents and profits created by a chattel mortgage clause in a real estate mortgage is effective from the date of the execution of the mortgage, and not from the date when petition for foreclosure and for the appointment of a receiver is filed.

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

Consideration for chattel mortgage—credit on debt—extension of time. A vendor of a house whose vendee had not completed the payments on the contract of purchase gave valuable consideration for two mortgages on an automobile owned by the vendee by taking the mortgages in return for payments advanced on the contract, by paying cash to the chattel mortgagee, and by extending the time on the payments for the house.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Chattel mortgage to secure partner's debt. A chattel mortgage by a partner on his undivided chattel interest in the partnership to secure his individual debt, becomes absolute when it is made to appear that the partnership is free of debt.

Schwanz v Co-op. Co., 204-1273; 214 NW 491; 55 ALR 644

Mortgage on partner's interest. A recorded chattel mortgage executed by an incoming partner to an outgoing partner on the one-half interest in the partnership property and on future additions thereto, and representing the purchase price of said interest (all with the consent of the old partner who remains in the business), is superior in right to the subsequently contracted debts of the new partnership.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 204-739; 212 NW 573; 54 ALR 527

Priority of creditor's claim over taxes. A chattel mortgagee may not have his claim reduced by taxes which have never been a lien on the mortgaged chattels superior to that of the mortgage.

In re Cutler, 213-983; 234 NW 238; 238 NW 80

See Linn County v Steele, 223-864; 273 NW 926

Lien on exempt property. A lease of land, unsigned by the lessee's wife, is a nullity insofar as it attempts to give the lessor a lien for rent on the exempt property of the lessee. Unnecessary to say that such a lease is of no validity against a subsequent valid chattel mortgage on the same property.

Brownlee v Masterson, 215-993; 247 NW 481

Delivery—intent of parties. An effective delivery of an instrument is made to the grantee by the naked execution of the instrument and by simply leaving said instrument at the place of execution, if such was the actual intent of the parties.

Beery v Glynn, 214-635; 243 NW 365

Limitation of actions—failure to index. The breach of official duty, and not the resulting damage, creates the cause of action making operative the statute of limitations, so where a recorder negligently omitted to index a chattel mortgage resulting in a subsequent mortgagee obtaining priority through lack of notice of first mortgage, the cause of action accrued at the time of such omission and an action against the recorder for this nonfeasance was barred after three years by §11007, C., '35.

Baie v Rook, 223-845; 273 NW 902; 110 ALR 1062

Unrecorded conditional sales contract. An automobile which the state seeks to forfeit because such vehicle had been employed in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors may not be returned by the court to one who had sold the vehicle under a conditional sales contract which he had not recorded prior to the seizure, such contract having been taken, manifestly, as security only.

State v Automobile, 208-794; 226 NW 48

Pledge and mortgage distinguished. The deposit of collateral securities with a trustee, in order to secure the payment of bonds issued by the depositor, constitutes a pledge, and not a mortgage.

Central Bk. v Sec. Co., 206-75; 218 NW 622

Receiver's nonright to question mortgage. The receiver of an insolvent corporation has no such standing as will enable him to advantage himself of technical defects in a chattel mortgage executed by the corporation when solvent.

Silver v Farms, Inc., 209-856; 227 NW 97

Validity of unrecorded conditional sale. Altho a conditional sale contract on an automobile was not properly recorded, it was valid and enforceable between the parties and all others except purchasers for value and without notice.

Hughes v Wessell, 226-811; 285 NW 200

II CHANGE OF POSSESSION

Conditional sales contract—defective acknowledgment—trustee's rights. Where conditional sale contract provided that title to goods should remain in vendor until contract was performed, the property did not pass to trustee in bankruptcy of such vendee, notwithstanding that contract was not acknowledged in accordance with Iowa statute so as to entitle it to be recorded.

In re Pointer Brewing Co., 105 F 2d, 478

Conditional sales—motor vehicles—ownership. An instruction was erroneous in stating that a conditional sales contract, containing a clause that title remained in seller, left the ownership of an automobile in the seller, because the buyer became the substantial and beneficial owner under the contract. Section 4964, C., '35, stating that title to motor vehicle shall not be deemed to pass until transferee has received and written his name on the registration certificate, is not construed to make seller liable as owner of the vehicle.

Craddock v Bickelhaupt, 227-202; 288 NW 109

III DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY

Discussion. See 12 ILR 421—Description of goods

Description of property—rule of sufficiency. The description of property covered by a chattel mortgage is sufficient if the description is such as to enable third persons, aided by inquiries which the instrument itself indicates and directs, to identify the property. Description considered and held sufficient for the purposes of the case at bar.

Producers Assn. v Morrell & Co., 220-948; 263 NW 242

Description of property—standard of sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that to render a chattel mortgage valid as to third parties the description of the property embraced in the mortgage must be such as to direct the mind to evidence whereby the precise thing conveyed may be ascertained with absolute certainty.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

Chattel mortgage clause in real estate mortgage—sufficiency. A complete chattel mortgage results from inserting, in a real estate mortgage following the description of the land conveyed, the words, "And, also, the rents, issues, use and profits of said land and the crops raised thereon, from now until the debt secured thereby shall be paid", coupled with a habendum clause to the effect that said property shall be held by the mortgagee forever.

Capital Bank v Riser, 215-680; 246 NW 763

Purchase of immature mortgaged animals. When pigs are covered by a chattel mortgage, and a nonfraudulent purchaser with knowledge of the mortgage matures said pigs into hogs, the holder of the mortgage may enforce against the proceeds of a sale of the hogs a trust for the full value of the hogs, not exceeding, of course, the amount of the mortgage debt.

Schwanz v Co-op. Co., 204-1273; 214 NW 491; 55 ALR 644

Synonymous terms for "rent". A sale and conveyance in a real estate mortgage of "all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom and all crops raised thereon" as security additional to that afforded by the land, and in connection with a receivership clause, simply constitutes a chattel mortgage on "all the rents" (in whatever represented), said various terms in such case being deemed synonymous.

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

Unallowable blanket clause. The filing for record or recording of a chattel mortgage works no constructive notice to a third party of a mortgage on chattels which are sought to be embraced in the general, unlimited, blanket clause, "all other personal property which either of us own or may own so long as this mortgage may remain unpaid".

Reinig v Johnson, 202-1366; 212 NW 59

IV CONSTRUCTION OF DESCRIPTIONS

Description of property—fatal indefiniteness. A description in a chattel mortgage of "about 40 stock hogs" is insufficient to enable a searcher to identify the mortgaged property with absolute certainty, even tho the location of the hogs is shown, and consequently no constructive notice is imparted by the record of the mortgage.

Panama Bk. v De Cou, 209-450; 228 NW 35

Erroneous description—effect. An erroneous statement in a chattel mortgage as to the location of the property is not necessarily fatal. The description may be such, notwithstanding the erroneous statement, as to generate a jury question as to whether the property could have been identified from the entire description contained in the mortgage.

Wertheimer v Shultice, 202-1140; 211 NW 568

Description—fatal error in location. A chattel mortgage on property in this state, which gives the permanent location of the property at a point outside the state, imparts no constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser.

Slimmer v Lawler, 205-813; 218 NW 516

Description—jury question—instructions. When the sufficiency of a description of mortgaged chattels to impart constructive notice becomes a jury question, it is quite inaccurate for the court to instruct that "the recording gives notice of what its terms contained—but nothing more than its terms contained".

Wertheimer v Parsons, 209-1241; 229 NW 829

Description of property—nonjury question. A jury must not be permitted to pass on the sufficiency of a description of mortgaged chattels which is sufficient as a matter of law. So held where the description revealed the particular kind of cattle, their age, average weight, the particular brand thereon, the particular farm where kept, and the particular possessor.

Wertheimer v Parsons, 209-1241; 229 NW 829

V PURCHASERS AND CREDITORS

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 17 ILR 223—Antecedent debt

Actual notice without actual knowledge. A mortgagee will be deemed to have had "actual notice" of a prior unrecorded mortgage (or of a prior mortgage so defectively acknowledged that the record thereof imparts no constructive notice) when the facts and circumstances attending and surrounding the taking of the second mortgage are such as to lead him as a reasonably prudent person to make inquiries, and when such inquiries if prosecuted with ordinary diligence would have revealed the former mortgage.

Mill Owners Ins. v Goff, 210-1188; 232 NW 504

Amount in controversy—chattel mortgage under $100, judgment for $330. Where in an action to foreclose a conditional sale contract on an automobile, the court granted priority of a lien of less than $100, and gave a judgment for $330 to the seller, an appeal therein involved more than $100 and was not subject to dismissal, altho no certificate had been filed by the trial court.

Hughes v Wessell, 226-811; 285 NW 200

Authorized sale waives lien. The purchaser of mortgaged chattels is not liable to the mortgagee, as for a conversion, when the mortgagee has waived his lien by expressly or impliedly consenting to a sale by the mortgagor.

Producers Assn. v Morrell & Co., 220-948; 263 NW 242

Conditional sale lien—superiority of tax lien. Taxes assessed (§§7205, 7206, C., '35) after execution of a conditional sale contract on a stock of goods and other personalty are superior to the lien of such contract inasmuch as (1) historically these sections were contained in a single section; (2) one section already carries a construction creating a lien paramount to all other liens; (3) necessarily security of the revenue is an incident of sovereignty; and (4) the above sections contain language which by necessarily implied legislative intent creates liens continuing and paramount to all other liens.

Linn County v Steele, 223-864; 273 NW 920; 110 ALR 1492

See In re Cutler, 213-983; 234 NW 238; 238 NW 80

Conversion. A senior chattel mortgagee who, without foreclosure, takes possession of the mortgaged property and sells it at private sale must account to a junior mortgagee for such part of the proceeds as he applies to unsecured claims due him.

Money v Bank, 202-106; 209 NW 275

Trial—limiting damages—issue not raised in trial. Where an action in replevin by one claiming an automobile under a conditional sales contract was brought against a chattel mortgagee who had given some cash and extended credit in return for his mortgage, the plaintiff, having permitted the trial to be concluded on the issue of possession without raising any other issue or requesting instructions on any other issue, could not complain that the mortgagee's recovery should have been limited to the amount of actual cash given for the mortgage.

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Forfeiture of real estate contract—rights of chattel mortgagee. An equitable owner of land who, while holding the land under a contract of purchase which, in case of forfeiture, unconditionally forfeits all improvements thereon to the legal title holder, erects a dwelling house on the land with materials sold for such purpose, and on individual credit, may not, after he has forfeited or surrendered his contract of purchase, and while he is in possession of the land solely as a tenant, execute a chattel mortgage on the house to the seller of the materials, as security for the past-due purchase price of the materials, and thereby invest the mortgagee with any right against the owner of the realty.

O'Bryon v Weatherly, 201-190; 206 NW 828

Impounding proceeds. While a chattel mortgagee may not follow the proceeds of wrongfully sold mortgaged property and enforce a lien thereon, yet the court will recognize an arrangement under which such proceeds are impounded in the hands of a third party and the right thereto litigated.

Slimmer v Lawler, 205-813; 218 NW 516

Mortgage on rents—exclusive power of mortgagee to collect. A chattel mortgage on the rents and income of real estate, tho combined in a real estate mortgage as dual security for the same debt, vests the mortgagee with full and exclusive power to collect said rents and income.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

Mortgage on rents—right to receiver to protect. A mortgagee of the rents and income of real estate is entitled to have a receiver appointed to protect his right to said rents and income when said right is jeopardized by the unauthorized acts of an impecunious mortgagor.

Equitable v McNamara, 220-297; 259 NW 231; 262 NW 466

Sub-purchaser as subsequent purchaser. The third purchaser of mortgaged chattels does not establish the status of "subsequent purchaser", within the meaning of the recording statute, unless he shows that his immediate vendor purchased of the mortgagor.

Wertheimer v Shultice, 202-1140; 211 NW 568

Subsequent purchaser—assignee of mortgage. The good-faith assignee for value of a chattel mortgage and of the promissory note secured thereby, without actual or constructive notice of a prior existing mortgage, is a "subsequent purchaser", within the meaning of the recordation statutes, and therefore protected against such prior mortgage.

Slimmer v Lawler, 205-813; 218 NW 516

Wrongful application of trust funds. The principle that the lien of a chattel mortgage does not follow the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged property has no application to an action to recover wrongfully dissipated or applied trust funds.

In re Aasheim, 212-1300; 236 NW 49

Impressment of trust on proceeds. An understanding between a lienor and a lienee to the effect that personal property upon which the lienor has a lien may be sold by the lienee and the lien satisfied from the proceeds of the sale, will be enforced in equity by impressing a trust on said proceeds. So held as to rent due a landlord.

Stegemann v Bendixen, 219-1190; 260 NW 14

Wrongful release of conditionally canceled mortgage—effect. Where, in rescission proceedings, a decree in effect provided that a promissory note and recorded real estate mortgage given for the purchase price of goods should be null and void from and after the return of the goods by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and where the goods were never so returned, and where the mortgage was wrongfully released of record by a court-appointed commissioner, the mortgage may be foreclosed against a purchaser of the land who innocently bought in reliance on the wrongful release. This is true because, while both the mortgagee and the subsequent purchaser were innocent, yet the purchaser had the means of knowing whether the goods had been returned to the mortgagee,—the very act which, under the decree, would work a nullification of the mortgage and note and justify a release.

Moore v Crawford, 210-632; 231 NW 363

(b) WITHOUT NOTICE—PRIORITY

Agreed public sale—lien on proceeds. An agreement between chattel mortgagees and the chattel mortgagor that the mortgaged property shall be sold at public sale and the proceeds turned over to the mortgagees in the order of their liens, is valid and enforceable in equity. In other words equity, in order to enforce the agreement, will impress a trust on said proceeds in favor of said mortgagees, even tho the occasion so to do arises in a proceeding at law, to wit, a garnishment.

Jasper Co. Bank v Klauenberg, 218-578; 255 NW 884

Antenuptial contract—preference—"existing creditors". On the issue whether a widow has the right in the settlement of her husband's estate to be paid, prior to all third and fourth class claimants, a sum provided for her in an unrecorded, antenuptial contract, said third and fourth class claimants will be deemed "existing creditors" within the meaning of this section, there being no evidence that said third and fourth class claimants had any knowledge of said antenuptial contract until after the death of the husband.

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Assigned rent note—priority over chattel mortgage. A mortgagor may, in the absence of fraud, deed his land to another who, as owner, may lease for an ensuing term within the period of redemption and assign to a bank his lease and rent note, which assignment made prior to any foreclosure action will be superior to the lien of the chattel mortgage clause and entitle the bank to the rent as against the receiver in the foreclosure action claiming under such chattel mortgage clause.

Equitable v Hastings, 223-808; 273 NW 908

Assignments for benefit of creditors—recording not necessary. Where the interest of a beneficiary of a testamentary trust is assigned for the benefit of creditors, such assignment need not be recorded to be valid against existing creditors without notice.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Date of recording immaterial. A chattel mortgage which is taken without actual knowledge of an existing unrecorded chattel mortgage is prior in right to said first mortgage, even tho said first mortgage is first recorded.

Iowa Bk. v Bradfield, 204-488; 215 NW 602

Equitable estoppel. A chattel mortgage on property which the mortgagor does not own cannot prevail against the claim of the actual owner, even tho the latter has permitted the mortgagor to treat the property as his own, when the mortgagee takes such mortgage as additional security to a pre-existing debt, and without in any manner changing his position to his detriment.

Peoples Bk. v McCarthy, 206-28; 217 NW 453

Mortgage given for pre-existing debt—no priority over unrecorded conditional sale. Where a car was sold on a conditional sales contract which was not recorded, and the purchaser later gave a chattel mortgage in payment of a pre-existing debt evidenced by a demand note, there being no extension of time or other new consideration for the mortgage, the pre-existing debt did not constitute value to entitle the mortgage to priority over the conditional sales contract.

Hughes v Wessell, 226-811; 285 NW 200

Priority—pledge for pre-existing debt. A pledge of rents contained in a real estate mortgage and taken as security for a pre-existing indebtedness is not entitled to priority over chattel mortgage clauses in prior real estate mortgages for value on the same land, even tho said prior mortgages are not indexed in the chattel mortgage index.

Soehren v Hein, 214-1060; 243 NW 330

Priority of unrecorded mortgage. An unrecorded chattel mortgage has priority over a subsequent bill of sale based on a pre-existing consideration.

National Bk. v Chapman, 212-561; 234 NW 198

Notice only issue—unnecessary instructions. Where the plaintiff claimed the right to possession of an automobile under a conditional sales contract and the defendant claimed under two chattel mortgages acquired subsequent to the conditional sale but recorded first, instructions which submitted only the issue of whether the chattel mortgagee had notice of the prior conditional sale were not erroneous in failing to define "subsequent purchaser" as used in recording statutes and in failing to require the jury to determine whether the defendant gave value so as to constitute himself a "subsequent purchaser".

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Remedies of creditors — evidence — sufficiency. Proof, (1) that the vendee of personal property did not record or file his bill of sale as required by law, (2) that there was no change of possession following the bill of sale, and (3) that the vendee actively aided the vendor in disposing of the property as the property of the vendor, furnishes ample justification for the holding that the rights of a good-faith and innocent attaching creditor of the vendor were superior to the asserted rights of the vendee.

Beno Co. v Perrin, 221-716; 266 NW 539

Sale—right to proceeds. A chattel mortgagee who consents to a sale of the mortgaged property on condition that the proceeds be paid to him acquires a right to such proceeds superior to the rights of the garnishing creditor of the mortgagor.

Scurry v Quaker Co., 201-1171; 208 NW 860

Sale—right to proceeds. While the lien of a chattel mortgage does not follow the proceeds of a sale of the mortgaged property, yet the mortgagee may in equity impress a trust on such proceeds when in the hands of one who had full knowledge of the mortgage and of the source of said proceeds.

Jones v Bank, 200-1186; 206 NW 107

Sale—right to proceeds. The sale and converting into money of incumbered chattels under agreement between the lienholder, the debtor, and a third party, under which the third party agrees to collect the proceeds and apply the same on the existing lien, create in the lienholder a right to said proceeds which is superior to garnishments of said third party by the creditors of the debtor.

Korner v McKirgan, 202-515; 210 NW 562

Subsequent purchaser—burden of proof. A mortgagee in an action for the conversion of the mortgaged chattels need only allege the existence of his unsatisfied mortgage. The defendant must allege and prove not only (1) that he is a subsequent purchaser, but (2) that he became such purchaser without notice of the plaintiff's mortgage.

Loranz & Co. v Smith, 204-35; 214 NW 525; 53 ALR 662

Manbeck Motor v Garside, 208-656; 226 NW9

Subsequent mortgages securing pre-existing indebtedness. An unrecorded chattel mortgage (or one improperly recorded because fatally defective in its acknowledgment) is nevertheless prior in right to a subsequent chattel mortgage given in satisfaction of or as security for a pre-existing indebtedness.

Chariton Bk. v Taylor, 210-1153; 232 NW 487

Unacknowledged subsequent mortgage—priority. A chattel mortgage, even tho the acknowledgment thereto is wholly void—in legal effect, no acknowledgment at all—is superior to a prior chattel mortgage of which the subsequent mortgagee had no actual or constructive notice.

Heitzman v Hannah, 206-775; 221 NW 470

Unrecorded mortgage—lease. A provision in a valid lease of land that the lessor shall have a lien for rent on the exempt property of the lessee constitutes a chattel mortgage, and must be recorded or filed in order to have priority over a subsequent good-faith mortgagee of said exempt property, without notice.

Brownlee v Masterson, 215-993; 247 NW 481

Chattel mortgage on rents—priority. The right to the appointment of a receiver under a receivership clause in a real estate mortgage, and the right to have the rents accruing during the redemption year applied to discharge a foreclosure deficiency, are superior to a chattel mortgage executed subsequent to the real estate mortgage on crop to be grown by the mortgagor on said land during said year, said crop not being yet in existence when the real estate foreclosure was commenced.

Louis v Hansen, 205-1216; 219 NW 523
 Phelps v Taggart, 207-164; 219 NW 528
 Virtue v Teget, 209-157; 227 NW 635

Chattel mortgage as part of real estate mortgage—lien and priority. A clause (inserted in a mortgage of real estate) which sells and conveys to the mortgagee "all the rents" of the mortgaged land as security for the payment of the debt in question, constitutes a legal chattel mortgage which, inter alia, (1) gives to the mortgagee, as against the mortgagor and others having actual knowledge thereof, a first lien on all subsequently executed leases of said land and on the promissory notes which represent the rental under said leases, and (2) gives to the mortgagee a first lien on such leases and notes against all assignees thereof provided that when the assignees became such the real estate mortgage had been duly recorded as such, and the record thereof had been duly indexed in the chattel-mortgage index book. (No plea in this case of holdership in due course.)

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

Rent—unrecorded contract lien. An unrecorded lease giving the landlord a lien on exempt property kept on the premises is not effective against a purchaser of the exempt property without notice of the written lease.

Sparks v Flesher, 217-1086; 252 NW 529

Chattel mortgage clause—failure to index—effect. A recorded real estate mortgage containing a mortgage on the rents of the mortgaged real estate, but not indexed in the chattel mortgage index, is, as regards the rents, subject to a subsequent like mortgage taken by one for value and without notice of the former chattel mortgage clause, even tho the latter mortgage is not indexed in the chattel mortgage index.

Soehren v Hein, 214-1060; 243 NW 330

Chattel mortgage clause—lien—when acquired. Under a combined real estate and chattel mortgage of the rents, the mortgagee, as against parties not subsequent purchasers for value and without notice, acquires a lien from the date of the execution of the mortgage.

Soehren v Hein, 214-1060; 243 NW 330

Lien on crops pending foreclosure. The remedial provisions of a mortgage, including a pledge of the rents and profits, are such a part of the subject-matter of a foreclosure action that indexing in lis pendens imparts to a purchaser of the mortgagor-landlord's share of the corn constructive notice of the mortgagee's lien on the corn.

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

Mortgage on crop-share rent superior to garnishment of tenant. The lien of a chattel mortgage on a landlord's share of crops reserved as rent, but in the possession of the tenant, is, as to matured crops actually set aside to the landlord or otherwise actually determined as belonging to the landlord, superior to a subsequent garnishment of the tenant by a judgment creditor of the landlord.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

Chattel mortgage on rents—priority. A chattel mortgage on a landlord's crop-rental share of growing crops is prior in right to the claim of a receiver appointed in real estate mortgage foreclosure proceedings instituted subsequent to the execution of the chattel mortgage, even tho the real estate mortgage was executed prior to the chattel mortgage, and pledged the rents to the payment of the real estate mortgage debt.

Hansen v Sheffer, 205-1191; 219 NW 529

Pledge of rents and subsequent chattel mortgage on crops—priority. A pledge, in a duly recorded real estate mortgage, of the rents of the mortgaged premises is superior to a subsequently executed and duly recorded chattel mortgage on crops which the chattel mortgagee was obligated to grow on said premises, but which crops were not in existence when the real estate mortgagee instituted his foreclosure proceedings.

Bunting v Berns, 212-1127; 237 NW 220

Priority over rent accruing under tenancy at will. A recorded chattel mortgage on the property of a tenant used on the demised premises under a lease for years, attains priority, immediately upon the termination of the lease, over the landlord's claim for future rent accruing under a succeeding tenancy at will of the same premises; likewise a recorded chattel mortgage executed by a tenant at will, on property used on the leased premises, attains priority immediately upon the expiration of 30 days after the execution and recording of the mortgage, over the landlord's claim for future accruing rent.

Nickle v Mann et al., 211-906; 232 NW 722

Rent notes subject to prior chattel mortgage. The receiver of an insolvent takes the land of said insolvent subject to the lien of a prior unsatisfied, combined real estate and chattel mortgage covering both the said real estate and the "rents, issues, use and profits" thereof. It necessarily follows that notes taken by the receiver for the rent of said mortgaged premises for the year embracing foreclosure proceedings and the redemption period are subject to said chattel mortgage lien.

Capital Bank v Riser, 215-680; 246 NW 763

Rents—adjudication against chattel mortgage. On the issue, in real estate mortgage foreclosure, whether an outstanding lease between the owner and his tenant (parties to the action) was superior to the mortgagee's right to a receiver for said premises and for the rents thereof, an unappealed decree which orders the appointment of such receiver works an eviction of said tenant and the consequent nullification of a chattel mortgage by the landlord on his share of the crop rent under said lease, it appearing that the real estate mortgagee had no notice or knowledge of such chattel mortgage until after the entry of his decree of foreclosure.

Keenan v Jordan, 204-1338; 217 NW 248

Rents—conflicting claims. The lien on matured crops, acquired by virtue of the commencement of foreclosure proceedings on a second mortgage carrying simply a pledge of the rents, is inferior to the lien acquired under the first mortgage, which is a duly recorded, combined real estate and chattel mortgage on the land and on the rents and crops thereof. This is true because the lien under the first mortgage necessarily attaches ahead of the lien of the second mortgage. Likewise the lien acquired by such second mortgage on un-matured rents is inferior to the lien of the first mortgage because, while both liens attach at the same instant of time, the first mortgage lien is first in time of origin.

Equitable v Read, 215-700; 246 NW 779

(c) UNLAWFUL PREFERENCES

"Rent"—taxes included—notice to creditors—recording. The term "rent", within statutes giving a landlord a lien for rent, cannot be construed to include taxes in absence of a clear intention of parties to that effect expressed in lease, and so a lessor was held not entitled to preferential lien against assets of bankrupt assignee of lease for unpaid taxes, interest, and penalties, on ground that chattel mortgage clause of lease, which was recorded in deed and chattel mortgage records, was sufficient to protect lessor's lien, the assignment of lease being recorded only in deed record and not in chattel mortgage records. Such filing did not give notice to creditors, as required by recording statutes.

Lamoine Mott Estate v Neiman, 77 F 2d, 744

Bankruptcy—limitation on evidence. Where a chattel mortgage was executed within four months preceding the filing of bankruptcy proceedings against the mortgagor, and where, later, the mortgaged property was sold by the mortgagor and a new mortgage was executed by the purchaser on the same property to the former mortgagee, and where the original mortgage was thereupon released, and where the two transactions were attacked by the trustee in bankruptcy as an unlawful preference, the evidence must be confined to the conditions existing on the date of the first transaction.

VI AFTER-ACQUIRED PROPERTY AND PROPERTY NOT IN BEING

Discussion. See 10 ILB 224—Mortgages on "potential property"

After-acquired stock. Even tho a chattel mortgage on a stock of goods does not provide that it shall cover after-acquired stock, it must be deemed to cover the existing stock, in the absence of some definite evidence as to what part of the original stock had been sold.

Smith Bros. v Goldberg, 204-816; 215 NW 956

Chattel clause in real estate mortgage. A real estate mortgage which, in addition to the land, conveys the crops raised on the land "from now until the debt secured is paid" is also a chattel mortgage to the extent of the crops.

Farmers Bk. v Miller, 203-1380; 214 NW 546

Future grown crops—death of mortgagor—effect. A chattel mortgage on crops to be grown in the future (combined in a real estate mortgage as additional security) does not become a lien on crops grown subsequent to the death of the mortgagor.

Fawcett Co. v Rullestad, 218-654; 253 NW 131; 94 ALR 800

Landlord's share of crops to be grown. A chattel mortgage executed by a landlord on all grain, feed, and hay "to be grown" on definitely and accurately described lands which were then under lease for the ensuing year, is a valid incumbrance on the landlord's share of the crops reserved as rent under said lease.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

Lien—increase of animals. The lien of a chattel mortgage (prior in time to a lease) on animals and on the increase thereof is superior to the landlord's lien as to all increase born prior to the actual execution of the lease, and inferior to the landlord's lien on all increase born subsequent to the actual execution of the lease and prior to its termination. An agreement between the landlord and tenant that the lease shall be effective from a date prior to its actual execution is not binding on the mortgagee.

Wunder v Schram, 217-920; 251 NW 762

Lien—priority on increase of mortgaged stock. A landlord's lien on the increase of stock after the stock is taken upon the leased premises is superior to the lien of a chattel mortgage executed on the stock and on its prospective increase, and prior to the commencement of the rent term.

Corydon Bank v Scott, 217-1227; 252 NW 536

"Increase of livestock"—subsequent exception—effect. A chattel mortgage which, in the granting clause, enumerates certain livestock "together with all increase of livestock of every description now on said farm" must be held to cover such increase even tho it is exempt from execution, notwithstanding the fact that, after enumerating yet other classes of property as covered by the mortgage, the said granting clause terminates with the sub-clause "Also all personal property of every description, except that covered by legal exemptions".

Chambers v Bank & Trust, 218-63; 254 NW 309

Mortgaged and unmortgaged goods. When a chattel mortgage covered the crops grown on a designated part of a farm only, the unmortgaged crops are properly segregated by placing them in a separate crib.

Peoples Bk. v McCarthy, 206-28; 217 NW 453

VII FIXTURES

Movable farm structures. Movable hog houses and feed bunks on a farm will not constitute fixtures when to so declare would be contrary to the actual expressed intent of the person—a tenant—who placed them on the farm, and contrary to the intent as reflected in the nature of the articles, their use, and the mode of attachment to the realty.

Speer v Donald, 201-569; 207 NW 581

VIII WAIVER OF MORTGAGE LIEN

Mortgagee authorizing sale of property by mortgagor—waives lien. The purchaser of mortgaged chattels is not liable to the mortgagee, as for a conversion, when the mortgagee has waived his lien by expressly or impliedly consenting to a sale by the mortgagor.

Producers Livestock Assn. v Morrell & Co., 220-948; 263 NW 242

IX ACKNOWLEDGMENT AND RECORDING

Acknowledgment—disqualification of officer. A chattel mortgage which is acknowledged before a notary public who is the mortgagee is not recordable, and if recorded, the record imparts no constructive notice.

Heitzman v Hannah, 206-775; 221 NW 470

Recording—law governing. A chattel mortgage executed and delivered in a foreign state on property there situated will be governed by the recording laws of this state when the parties mutually contemplate the immediate transfer of the property to this state to the domicile of the mortgagor, under a lien good under the laws of this state.

Wertheimer v Shultice, 202-1140; 211 NW 568

Recording after death of mortgagor—effect. The recording of a chattel mortgage after the death of an insolvent mortgagor does not, as between the mortgagee and other creditors of the estate, give the mortgage any preferential standing over what it had prior to the recording.

Raybourn v Creger, 204-961; 216 NW 272

Recording after death of mortgagor. The rule of law that a valid chattel mortgage recorded after the death of the insolvent mortgagor is void as to the creditors of the deceased can have no application where the mortgaged chattels are delivered to the mortgagee prior to the death of the mortgagor, or where the mortgagor is solvent. Evidence held to present jury question on both insolvency and change of possession.

Beery v Glynn, 214-635; 243 NW 365

Real estate mortgage pledging rents. A real estate mortgage which pledges the rents and profits of the land need not be recorded as a chattel mortgage.

Union Ins. v Eggers, 212-1355; 237 NW 240

Limitation of actions—failure to index. The breach of official duty, and not the resulting damage, creates the cause of action making operative the statute of limitations, so where a recorder negligently omitted to index a chattel mortgage resulting in a subsequent mortgagee obtaining priority through lack of notice of first mortgage, the cause of action accrued at the time of such omission and an action against the recorder for this nonfeasance was barred after three years by §11007, C., '35.

Baie v Rook, 223-845; 273 NW 902; 110 ALR 1062

Chattel mortgage not properly acknowledged or recorded—secured claim denied. Where a chattel mortgage on restaurant fixtures, given to secure purchase price, was never properly acknowledged, and hence not properly recorded as required by statute, mortgagee was not entitled to secured claim against trustee in bankruptcy of purchaser.

Albert Pick v Wilson, 19 F 2d, 18

Conditional sales contract—defective acknowledgment—trustee's rights. Where conditional sale contract provided that title to goods should remain in vendor until contract was performed, the property did not pass to trustee in bankruptcy of such vendee, notwithstanding that contract was not acknowledged in accordance with Iowa statute so as to entitle it to be recorded.

Greenland v Abben, 218-255; 254 NW 830

Mandamus to compel recording.

Weyrauch v Johnson, 201-1197; 208 NW 706

“Rent”—taxes included—notice to creditors—recording. The term “rent”, within statutes giving a landlord a lien for rent, cannot be construed to include taxes in absence of a clear intention of parties to that effect expressed in lease, and so a lessor was held not entitled to preferential lien against assets of bankrupt assignee of lease for unpaid taxes, interest, and penalties, on ground that chattel mortgage clause of lease, which was recorded in deed and chattel mortgage records, was sufficient to protect lessor’s lien, the assignment of lease being recorded only in deed record and not in chattel mortgage records. Such filing did not give notice to creditors, as required by recording statutes.

Lamoine Mott Estate v Neiman, 77 F 2d, 744

Unacknowledged subsequent mortgage—priority. A chattel mortgage, even tho the acknowledgment thereto is wholly void—in legal effect, no acknowledgment at all—is superior to a prior chattel mortgage of which the subsequent mortgagee had no actual or constructive notice.

Heitzman v Hannah, 206-775; 221 NW 470

X FOREIGN MORTGAGES

Foreign mortgage—priority. A chattel mortgage validly executed and recorded in and according to the laws of a foreign state where the mortgagor then resides, and where the property is then situated, retains its priority over a subsequent mortgage executed and recorded in this state after the mortgagor has removed to this state with said property; and this is true even tho the foreign mortgagee knew that the property had been removed to this state.

See Wertheimer v Shultice, 202-1140; 211 NW 568

Forfeiture—conveyance—unrecorded claim—effect. In proceedings for the forfeiture of a conveyance which has been employed in the unlawful transportation of intoxicating liquors, a claimant of the conveyance under an unrecorded sales contract may not have the conveyance returned to him, and it is quite immaterial that such contract was executed in a foreign state in which claimant’s lien would be valid against subsequent purchasers without recording.

State v Kelsey, 206-356; 220 NW 324

State v Jennings, 206-361; 220 NW 327

XI LOSS OF RIGHTS UNDER RECORDING LAW THROUGH FRAUD

(a) FRAUD IN FACT

Foreclosure—transfer to court. The right of a mortgagee to foreclose a chattel mortgage by notice and sale (1) under the statute (Ch 523, C., '31), or (2) under the terms of the mortgage itself, may not be transferred to the district court on the application of the mortgagor on the ground of fraud and want of consideration in obtaining the mortgage, when an action of replevin involving the mortgaged chattels, and pending against the mortgagor furnishes him ample opportunity to test the mortgagee’s right to foreclose by interposing said plea of fraud and want of consideration.

McDonald v Johnston, 218-1352; 256 NW 676

Remedies of creditors and purchasers—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held to show that a chattel mortgage was fraudulent.

Northwestern Bk. v Muilenburg, 209-1223; 229 NW 813

(b) RETENTION OF POSSESSION BY MORTGAGOR

Actual possession defined. A mortgagor must be deemed in actual possession of the mortgaged chattels when he has them on his own farm and in the actual custody of his own servant, even tho he (the mortgagor) does not reside upon said premises.

Raybourn v Creger, 204-961; 216 NW 272

(c) RIGHT TO SELL IN ORDINARY COURSE OF TRADE

Sale of property—right to proceeds. A chattel mortgagee who consents to a sale of the mortgaged property on condition that the proceeds be paid to him acquires a right to such proceeds superior to the rights of the garnishing creditor of the mortgagor.

Scurry v Quaker Oats Co., 201-1171; 208 NW 860

Impounding proceeds of wrongful sale. While a chattel mortgagee may not follow the proceeds of wrongfully sold mortgaged property and enforce a lien thereon, yet the court will recognize an arrangement under which such proceeds are impounded in the hands of a third party and the right thereto litigated.

Slimmer v Lawler, 205-813; 218 NW 516

(d) DELAY IN RECORDING

Withholding from record—effect. Creditors who seek to avoid a chattel mortgage because it has been withheld from record must show that such withholding was for the purpose of enabling the debtor to obtain credit.

Baxter v Baxter, 204-1321; 217 NW 231

(e) CIRCUMSTANCES TENDING TO SHOW FRAUD

Corporate officer's lien denied. In an action by the state for dissolution of a mining corporation, a chattel mortgage and conditional sale contract covering the mine property are fraudulently invalid and may not be established as first liens when held and asserted by a defendant who, among other things, as an incorporator, director, president, and general manager of the corporation, secured such instruments while acting in his fiduciary capacity for the purpose of insuring payment to himself of debts previously created, thus serving his personal interests, rather than as fiduciary, preserving the assets for the creditors and stockholders.

State v Exline Fuel Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Evidence—fraudulent transfer. Evidence held to establish a fraudulent transfer by a bankrupt.

Schnurr v Miller, 211-439; 233 NW 699

I THE COMMON LAW AND THE STATUTE

Discussion. See 5 ILB 129—Uniform conditional sales act; 12 ILR 235—Insurance of interests

Conditional sale vendor not liable for negligence of vendee. The vendor of a motor vehicle under a conditional sales contract and his assignee are not to be held responsible for the negligent operation of the vehicle by the vendee on the ground that they have a duty to see if the vendee is responsible before turning him loose on the highway with a dangerous instrumentality.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

II WHAT CONSTITUTES A CONDITIONAL SALE

Discussion. See 14 ILR 329—Chattel mortgages distinguished

Definition. A contract of sale of personal property in which the seller reserves and retains title until the purchase price is fully paid constitutes a conditional sales contract and not a chattel mortgage.

Northern Fin. v Meinhardt, 209-895; 226 NW 168

Stull v Davidson, 211-239; 233 NW 114

Ownership depending on condition—statute applicable. Under a contract for sale of automatic sprinkler system where the title or ownership is made to depend on a condition, it comes within this section, making such contracts invalid against creditors, and where seller by way of counterclaim to buyer's action to avoid a mechanic's lien for the same property, elected to recover the purchase price, such seller made an irrevocable exercise of his option and neither the fact of filing such action nor filing the notice of lis pendens was a notice of lien as against the trustee for bondholders whose bonds were secured by a mortgage on all equipment of the corporation filed subsequent to such action. However, the action was a notice of an election to recover purchase price which waived any right to title, but was not such notice as was required by this section.

Fire Protection Co. v Hawkeye Co., 8 F 2d, 810

Bailment (?) or conditional sale (?). A so-called "trust receipt" for goods delivered constitutes a conditional sale contract when accompanied, as a part of the same transaction, by an unconditional promise to pay for the goods.

General Motors v Whiteley, 217-998; 252 NW 779

Conditional sale (?) or contract of agency (?). The act of the owner of an article in reluctantly permitting it to pass into the possession of a party (to whom he had theretofore actually sold many like articles) with permission to forthwith sell the article (which sale was then practically assured) at a stated cash price or to forthwith return the article, without any expressed intention of selling the article to the party so given possession, presents a jury question on the issue whether the transaction was one of simple agency, or whether the transaction constituted an oral conditional sale contract which would not be valid against a third party who had no knowledge thereof.

Greenlease-Lied Motors v Sadler, 216-302; 249 NW 383

Conditional sales—elements. When a truck was sold under a written agreement reserving title in the seller for the purpose of security to be divested on the payment of the final installment on a note given for the purchase price, the vendee was clearly obligated by a promise to pay for the truck, so it was a conditional sale contract rather than a bailment or lease.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

II WHAT CONSTITUTES A CONDITIONAL SALE—concluded

Contract covering future sales. A conditional sale contract covering specific goods may legally provide that all future purchases of goods by vendee shall be controlled by said contract.

Davidson Co. v Francis, 214-1817; 243 NW 333

Right to sell in ordinary course of business—effect. A conditional sale contract with proviso that the vendee may sell in the ordinary course of business, remains and continues as a conditional sale contract as to all unsold goods; especially is this true when the contract provides that the vendee shall hold the proceeds of goods sold for the benefit of the vendor.

Internat. Co. v Poduska, 211-892; 232 NW 67; 71 ALR 973

Ownership in vendee. When a motor vehicle is sold under a conditional sales contract, altho the seller retains legal title for the purpose of security, the ownership of the car passes to the buyer.

Hansen v Kuhn, 226-794; 285 NW 249

Replevin of automobile conditionally sold under "trust receipt". Trust receipt for automobile delivered by a finance company was in effect conditional sale when accompanied by promissory note and agreement to return the automobile on demand. Held, in a replevin action the finance company sustained its burden to prove its right to immediate possession by a showing of default in payment, which gave the right to possession.

General Motors v Koch, 225-897; 281 NW 728

III CREDITORS AND PURCHASERS WITHOUT NOTICE

Innocent subsequent purchaser. Principle reaffirmed that the right of a vendor under a sale on condition that the vendee pay the purchase price is subordinate to the rights of a subsequent purchaser without notice in good faith from the vendee.

Hart v Wood, 202-58; 209 NW 430

Purchase without notice—effecting payment. Full payment for an article, bought in good faith, and for value and without notice of an existing conditional sales contract thereon, is effected by the act of the vendee in delivering to the vendor his negotiable check on actual funds in a foreign bank for the purchase price, and by the act of the vendor-payee in immediately negotiating the check to his bank as a general deposit, even tho the deposit slip in the latter transaction provided that the receiving bank took the check for collection only. It follows that the vendee is under no obligation to stop payment on the check issued by him because he learned of the conditional sale contract after said deposit and before his drawee-bank had paid the check.

General Motors v Whiteley, 217-998; 252 NW 779

Mortgage given for pre-existing debt—no priority over unrecorded conditional sale. Where a car was sold on a conditional sales contract which was not recorded, and the purchaser later gave a chattel mortgage in payment of a pre-existing debt evidenced by a demand note, there being no extension of time or other new consideration for the mortgage, the pre-existing debt did not constitute value to entitle the mortgage to priority over the conditional sales contract.

Hughes v Wessell, 226-811; 285 NW 200

Acknowledgment—form and contents—failure of statutory requirements—not constructive notice. Under statute requiring that, in order to give constructive notice, conditional sales contracts be acknowledged in the same manner as chattel mortgages, a certificate of acknowledgment on a conditional sales contract, stating merely that person making acknowledgment was personally known to notary and that person making acknowledgment said he signed it voluntarily, held defective, because notary did not therein identify the person making the acknowledgment as signer of contract acknowledged. Hence contract was invalid as against creditors of bankrupt conditional buyer.

In re Elliott, 72 F 2d, 300

Notice and means of knowledge—instructions—adequacy. Instructions defining "notice" and "means of knowledge" and concretely applying such definitions to the evidence, reviewed, and held adequate without further elaboration.

General Motors v Whiteley, 217-998; 252 NW 779

Notice only issue—unnecessary instructions. Where the plaintiff claimed the right to possession of an automobile under a conditional sales contract and the defendant claimed under two chattel mortgages acquired subsequent to the conditional sale but recorded first, instructions which submitted only the issue of whether the chattel mortgagee had notice of the prior conditional sale were not erroneous in failing to define "subsequent purchaser" as used in recording statutes and in failing to require the jury to determine whether the defendant gave value so as to constitute himself a "subsequent purchaser".

C. I. T. Corp. v Furrow, 227-961; 289 NW 697

Failure to index. The breach of official duty, and not the resulting damage, creates the cause of action making operative the statute of limitations, so where a recorder negligently omitted to index a chattel mortgage resulting in a subsequent mortgagee obtaining priority through lack of notice of first mortgage, the cause of action accrued at the time of such omission and an action against the recorder for this nonfeasance was barred after three years by §11007 (4), C., '35.

Baie v Rook, 223-845; 273 NW 902; 110 ALR 1062

False representation—law of foreign state. A representation to the effect that, when a good-faith purchaser of property acquired it, a conditional sale contract was already of record in a foreign state in conformity with the laws thereof, is a representation of fact, and, if false, will sustain a plea of fraud in the execution of notes by said purchaser in the good-faith reliance on such representation, even tho such purchaser makes no examination of the laws of the foreign state.

Baker v Bockelman, 208-254; 225 NW 411

Nonwaiver of rights. A vendor who sells an article under the conditions (1) that the title shall not pass to vendee until the purchase-money note is paid in full, and (2) that the vendor may at any time repossess himself of the article and sell the same and hold the vendee for a deficiency, does not, as to a purchaser with notice of said conditional sale, waive or relinquish any right possessed by him under such conditional sale by simply taking judgment on the purchase-money note.

Murray v McDonald, 203-418; 212 NW 711; 56 ALR 233

Public service vehicles—tax—nonliability of vehicle. An automobile truck purchased under an ordinary conditional sale contract, and operated by a motor vehicle carrier as such under a certificate of authority issued by the board of railroad commissioners, is not subject to levy for the payment of the statutory motor vehicle carrier tax under a tax warrant issued by the commissioners after the vendor had repossessed himself of said truck for default in payment of the purchase price.

Universal Co. v Mamminga, 214-1135; 243 NW 513

Wrongful conveyance by agent. An agent in possession of chattels, with power "to sell" and to account immediately to the principal, may not, in payment of his pre-existing personal debt, transfer the property to a third party, even tho such possession is under a contract which is in the nature of a conditional sale, said third party making no claim that he did not have notice of the contract.

Ohio Co. v Schneider, 202-938; 211 NW 248

IV VALIDITY OF SALES NOT IN COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE

Conditional sale contract valid against bankruptcy trustee tho not acknowledged as per statute. Where conditional sale contract provided that machinery and equipment should remain the property of the seller until contract was completely performed by buyer, title remained in seller, so that, on buyer's filing of petition for reorganization under the Bankruptcy Act, the property did not, under Iowa law, pass to trustee in bankruptcy, notwithstanding that contract was not acknowledged in accordance with Iowa laws.

In re Pointer Brewing Co., 105 F 2d, 478

V EXECUTION OF CONTRACT, RECORDING, AND REMEDIES

Acknowledgment—dual purpose. The sole purpose of a certificate of acknowledgment of a conditional sale contract is (1) to prove the execution of the instrument, and (2) to render the instrument legally recordable.

Atlas Co. v O'Donnell, 210-810; 232 NW 121; 30 NCCA 273

Surplus acknowledgment. When a conditional sale contract is validly acknowledged by the vendor, an acknowledgment by the vendee may be deemed surplusage.

Atlas Co. v O'Donnell, 210-810; 232 NW 121; 30 NCCA 273

Defective acknowledgment—trustee's rights. Where conditional sale contract provided that title to goods should remain in vendor until contract was performed, the property did not pass to trustee in bankruptcy of such vendee, notwithstanding that contract was not acknowledged in accordance with Iowa statute so as to entitle it to be recorded.

In re Pointer Brewing Co., 105 F 2d, 478

False certificate—proximate cause. A willfully false certificate by a notary public as to the acknowledgment by the vendee of the execution of a forged conditional sale contract, is not the proximate cause of the damage suffered by one who purchases the forged contract and the forged promissory note accompanying it.

Atlas Co. v O'Donnell, 210-810; 232 NW 121; 30 NCCA 273

Conditional sales contract in foreign state—priority. The lien of a garage keeper on an automobile for storage in this state is subject to the superior right of the vendor of said vehicle, or his assignee, under a conditional sales contract executed, delivered and recorded solely in a foreign state at the place of sale, said vehicle having been removed to this state without the knowledge or consent of the vendor.

Northern Fin. v Meinhardt, 209-895; 226 NW 168

Validity against trustee in bankruptcy. An ordinary conditional sale contract, covering present and future purchases, is enforceable against the vendee's assignee for the benefit of creditors, and against the vendee's trustee in bankruptcy who has never had possession of the property; and this is true irrespective (1) of the recording or filing of the contract, and (2) of the fact that the contract imperfectly describes the goods.

Internat. Co. v Poduska, 211-892; 232 NW 67; 71 ALR 973

Remedy of trustee in bankruptcy. Where property sold under a conditional sale contract is replevined by the vendor and thereafter bankruptcy proceedings are instituted against the vendee, the trustee in bankruptcy necessarily has notice of the rights and claims of the vendor, and occupies, as to such property, the legal position of a judgment creditor holding an execution duly returned unsatisfied.

Internat. Co. v Poduska, 211-892; 232 NW 67; 71 ALR 973

Validity of unrecorded conditional sale. Altho a conditional sale contract on an automobile was not properly recorded, it was valid and enforceable between the parties and all others except purchasers for value and without notice.

Hughes v Wessell, 226-811; 285 NW 200

Unrecorded contract—election of remedy by seller—third party's rights. Under a contract for sale of automatic sprinkler system where the title or ownership is made to depend on a condition, it comes within this section making such contracts invalid against creditors, and where seller by way of counterclaim to buyer's action to avoid a mechanic's lien for the same property, elected to recover the purchase price, such seller made an irrevocable exercise of his option and neither the fact of filing such action nor filing the notice of lis pendens was a notice of lien as against the trustee for bondholders whose bonds were secured by a mortgage on all equipment of the corporation filed subsequent to such action. However, the action was a notice of an election to recover purchase price which waived any right to title, but was not such notice as was required by this section.

Fire Protection Co. v Hawkeye, 8 F 2d, 810

Foreclosure. A conditional sales contract which provides that, on default, the vendor may seize the property and sell at public or private sale and credit the vendee with the net proceeds may be foreclosed by judicial proceedings.

Cent. Motors v Clancy, 206-1090; 221 NW 774

Right to foreclose. A conditional sale contract which retains title in the vendor, but which binds the vendee to pay the entire price, and provides for foreclosure in case of default of payment, arms the vendor in case of such default to proceed in equity for the foreclosure of his lien.

Jensen v Kissick, 204-756; 215 NW 962

Foreclosure—required credit on judgment. Where a vendor under a conditional sale contract elects to declare the entire debt due and to foreclose, and to hold the vendee for the deficiency judgment, the vendor must (under the contract in question) credit on the judgment the net amount received on the foreclosure sale, notwithstanding he was compelled to expend a substantial sum in buying in the property at tax sale in order to protect his lien.

Wis. Chair v Bluechel, 216-717; 246 NW 817

Unallowable foreclosure. In an action to foreclose a conditional sales contract on a specifically described article, foreclosure may not be decreed on another and different article, but of the same general nature, in the absence of allegation and proof that the latter article had been mutually substituted for the former.

Des M. Music v Lindquist, 214-117; 241 NW 425

Action for contract possession works no rescission. The vendor in a conditional sale contract by instituting replevin for the possession of the article, as provided by the contract in case of the vendee's default, manifests a clear intent to stand on the contract, and not to rescind it. It follows that the refusal of the court to submit to the jury the issue of rescission, and return of purchase price, is proper. (Analogous holding, 202-1128.)

Schmoller Piano v Smith, 204-661; 215 NW 628

Rescission. The seller of an automobile, under a conditional sales contract, who, when the buyer is not in default, peremptorily repossesses himself of the car, and applies unreasonable and exorbitant repairs on the car, and refuses to redeliver possession unless the buyer agrees to pay such charges, arms the buyer with right to rescind the contract, even tho the seller had reserved the right to make necessary repairs.

Manbeck Sales Co. v Davis, 217-1141; 251 NW 61

Right of forfeiture—effect. Tho the vendor in a conditional contract of sale has retained the right to forfeit the contract for nonpayment and to resume absolute ownership, yet, so long as he has not done so, his assignment of the contract invests the transferee with no greater right than the vendor had under the contract.

Soodhalter v Coal Co., 203-688; 213 NW 213

Right to remove fixture. A dealer who, under an unrecorded conditional sale contract, permanently installs for the vendee of real estate a furnace in the house situated thereon, may not legally remove said furnace, as against the vendor of the real estate who did not authorize or know of the installation, and who has sold under a contract which he has caused to be forfeited in accordance with the terms thereof.

Holland Co. v Pope, 204-737; 215 NW 943

Removal against mortgagee. A steam boiler and a bake oven so erected on mortgaged real estate that they become fixtures, in lieu of former articles of the same kind, cannot be legally removed, even tho sold under a contract providing for retention of title in the vendor until paid for, when such removal would materially diminish the security of the said mortgagee.

Comly v Lehmann, 218-644; 253 NW 501

Concealment by vendee under conditional sale—demand necessary. The state, in a prosecution for larceny based solely on the charge that the vendee in a conditional bill of sale "willfully and with intent to defraud concealed the property", must, in order to create, under §13037-c1, C., '31 [§13037.1, C., '39], prima facie evidence of such concealment, establish the making of a demand by the vendor on the vendee that the latter pay for the property or produce and return it, and that the latter failed to comply with said demand.

State v Delevie, 219-1317; 260 NW 737

Forcible repossession of property. That part of a conditional sale contract which provides that the vendor, in case of default under the contract, may repossess himself of the property "forcibly and without process of law" is void because violative of public policy.

Girard v Anderson, 219-142; 257 NW 400; 4 NCCA(NS) 203

Seizure of property—collection of purchase price. A vendor of goods who retains title until the purchase price is paid, and who, on default in payment, repossesses himself of the goods and sells them, may not thereupon collect the balance of the purchase price of the vendee.

McNabb v Bunting, 207-1300; 224 NW 506

Absence of annexation or connection of fixtures—effect. An oil tank buried entirely in the parking of a public street and covered with cement, and a pump connected with said tank and bolted into said cement, tho wholly used in connection with the operation of an automobile service garage on a lot abutting said street and adjacent to said tank and pump, do not become fixtures to said lot, (1) when said tank and pump are in no manner in contact with said lot or with any building thereon or fixture thereof, and (2) when the parties to the original installation distinctly intended that the title to said tank and pump should remain in the party installing them, the latter not being the owner of said lot.

McCoy v Drews, 221-227; 265 NW 160

Tender—when unnecessary. In an action of replevin based on a conditional sale contract, which provides for possession by the vendor in case of condition broken, tender of payments already made is not a condition precedent to the institution of the action.

Schmoller Piano v Smith, 204-661; 215 NW 628

Default on payments—nonright to redeem. The buyer, under a conditional sale contract, of an article of personal property, who has long been in default on payments, and who has lost possession to the seller, has no right to redeem by tendering the amount then due, the contract providing (1) that title to the property shall remain in the conditional seller until all payments have been made, and (2) that in case of default on payments, the seller may repossess the property and treat all payments made as rent for use of the property.

Smith v Russell, 223-123; 272 NW 121

Unallowable lien. A provision in a conditional sale contract reserving a lien on the goods and providing that said contract shall control future purchases, does not, manifestly, authorize the vendor to charge into the future account charges for goods purchased prior to the date of the said sale contract, and claim a lien for said prior purchases.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 96, 164; '28 AG Op 213, 218; '32 AG Op 101, 145; '34 AG Op 449

Application of rents—foreclosure. See under §12372 (III)

Appointment of receiver on foreclosure. See under §12372 (VII)

Chattel mortgages. See under §10015

Chattel clause in real estate mortgage. A real estate mortgage which, in addition to the land, conveys the crops raised on the land "from now until the debt secured is paid" is also a chattel mortgage to the extent of the crops.

Farmers Bk. v Miller, 203-1380; 214 NW 546

Sufficiency. A complete chattel mortgage results from inserting, in a real estate mortgage following the description of the land conveyed, the words, "And, also, the rents, issues, use and profits of said land and the crops raised thereon, from now until the debt secured thereby shall be paid", coupled with a habendum clause to the effect that said property shall be held by the mortgagee forever.

Capital Bank v Riser, 215-680; 246 NW 763

Reference to realty mortgage provisions for interpretation. In a realty mortgage, a chattel mortgage clause conveying all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom and crops raised thereon "from date of this agreement until the terms of this instrument are complied with and fulfilled" was not invalid on ground that such provision required reference to realty mortgage provisions for interpretation or effect.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Chattel mortgage as part of real estate mortgage—lien and priority. A clause (inserted in a mortgage of real estate) which sells and conveys to the mortgagee "all the rents" of the mortgaged land as security for the payment of the debt in question, constitutes a legal chattel mortgage which, inter alia, (1) gives to the mortgagee, as against the mortgagor and others having actual knowledge thereof, a first lien on all subsequently executed leases of said land and on the promissory notes which represent the rental under said leases, and (2) gives to the mortgagee a first lien on such leases and notes against all assignees thereof provided that when the assignees became such the real estate mortgage had been duly recorded as such, and the record thereof had been duly indexed in the chattel-mortgage index book. (No plea in this case of holdership in due course.)

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

When lien effective. The lien on the rents and profits created by a chattel mortgage clause in a real estate mortgage is effective from the date of the execution of the mortgage, and not from the date when petition for foreclosure and for the appointment of a receiver is filed.

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

Effective date—priority over subsequent assignee of rents and profits. A clause in realty mortgage, duly recorded and indexed, providing that mortgagor conveyed in addition to realty "also all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom, and all the crops raised thereon from the date of this agreement until the terms of this instrument are complied with and fulfilled", created a valid chattel mortgage, effective from date of execution of the mortgage and not from date of filing the foreclosure petition in which appointment of receiver is asked, and subsequent assignee of property, described in instrument, took subject to lien provided in such chattel mortgage clause.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Lien on rents—priority. The commencement of foreclosure proceedings on a real estate mortgage which pledges the rents as security gives the mortgagee a lien on the crop rent of the legal title holder superior to a prior attempted levy on the immature crops; and this is true even tho the mortgage is not indexed in the chattel mortgage record.

Rodgers v Oliver, 200-869; 205 NW 513

Priority of creditor's claim over rents. A chattel mortgagee may not have his claim reduced by a claim for unpaid rent accruing subsequent to the mortgage and on the premises whereon the mortgaged chattels were kept.

In re Cutler, 213-983; 234 NW 238; 238 NW 80

Pledge of rents—what constitutes. A provision in a mortgage to the effect that, in case of foreclosure, a receiver may be appointed to collect the rents and to apply the same to the payment of taxes and principal and interest constitutes a pledge of the rents.

Wilson v Tolles, 210-1218; 229 NW 724

Construing decree—pledge of rents not a chattel mortgage. A decree, which recites that a real estate mortgage is also foreclosed as a chattel mortgage and that the receiver shall collect the rents "during the period of redemption", will, when construed as a whole—resort being taken to the pleadings—be taken to mean that the receiver collect the rents "pending foreclosure sale, and redemption"—the petition neither alleging nor asking for such foreclosure but instead praying for a receiver from the date of the petition.

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

Pledge of rents not chattel mortgage. Clause in real estate mortgage not conveying but merely pledging rents and profits is not chattel mortgage.

First JSL Bk. v Blount, 223-1339; 275 NW 64

Synonymous terms for "rent". A sale and conveyance in a real estate mortgage of "all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom and all crops raised thereon" as security additional to that afforded by the land, and in connection with a receivership clause, simply constitutes a chattel mortgage on "all the rents" (in whatever represented), said various terms in such case being deemed synonymous.

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

Real estate mortgage pledging rents. A real estate mortgage which pledges the rents and profits of the land need not be recorded as a chattel mortgage.

Union Ins. v Eggers, 212-1355; 237 NW 240

Rents—transfer—effect on pledge. Under a mortgage which carries a simple pledge of the rents, an unconditional transfer, by the mortgagor prior to foreclosure proceedings, of rent notes for the redemption period passes the rents beyond the reach of the mortgagee, the transferee being a good faith holder for consideration.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Conway, 215-1031; 247 NW 253

Landlord mortgagor's assignment of lease—no effect on chattel clause of realty mortgage. A lien on rents and profits created by chattel mortgage clause in realty mortgage, duly recorded and indexed, was not invalid as to mortgagor's share of crops produced under two-year lease, because such crops did not belong to mortgagor at time they came into existence, and, the landlord having assigned the lease, the subsequent assignee of property described in mortgage would take subject to the lien provided therein.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Chattel mortgage clause—effect on landlord's agreement to rent to third party. Where a valid chattel mortgage clause is contained in a realty mortgage, duly recorded and indexed, providing that mortgagor conveyed, in addition to realty, all the rents, issues, uses, profits and income therefrom and all crops raised thereon from date of instrument until payment of debt, an agreement by mortgagor to rent land to a third party was subject to such chattel mortgage clause, as against contention that agreement to rent was not the same as rents, issues, income, profit, or crops.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

When lien under pledge of rent attaches. Principle reaffirmed that a mortgagee has no lien on rents pledged under the mortgage until foreclosure action is commenced with prayer for a receiver.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Conway, 215-1031; 247 NW 253

Pledge of rents—when lien perfected. A mortgagee's lien on the rents of the mortgaged premises under a pledge of the rents, accrues only when the mortgagee makes proper prayer or request, in his duly commenced foreclosure suit, for the appointment of a receiver. It follows that, if prior to such prayer or request said rents have been unconditionally transferred, the good faith transferee thereof has an unassailable title thereto.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Stevenson, 215-1114; 245 NW 434

Lien—when acquired. Under a combined real estate and chattel mortgage of the rents, the mortgagee, as against parties not subsequent purchasers for value and without notice, acquires a lien from the date of the execution of the mortgage.

Soehren v Hein, 214-1060; 243 NW 330

Pledge of rents and subsequent chattel mortgage on crops—priority. A pledge, in a duly recorded real estate mortgage, of the rents of the mortgaged premises is superior to a subsequently executed and duly recorded chattel mortgage on crops which the chattel mortgagee was obligated to grow on said premises, but which crops were not in existence when the real estate mortgagee instituted his foreclosure proceedings.

Bunting v Berns, 212-1127; 237 NW 220

Rent notes subject to prior chattel mortgage. The receiver of an insolvent takes the land of said insolvent subject to the lien of a prior unsatisfied, combined real estate and chattel mortgage covering both the said real estate and the "rents, issues, use and profits" thereof. It necessarily follows that notes taken by the receiver for the rent of said mortgaged premises for the year embracing foreclosure proceedings and the redemption period are subject to said chattel mortgage lien.

Capital Bank v Riser, 215-680; 246 NW 763

Receiver to collect unpaid rents. A pledge of rents in a real estate mortgage entitles the mortgagee, even tho the redemption period has expired (a deficiency judgment existing), to the appointment of a receiver to collect unpaid rents which had accrued when the lien on the rents attached, and rents which accrued thereafter prior to the expiration of the redemption period. And this is true tho the rent be in the form of an agreement by lessee to support and maintain the mortgagor-lessors during their lifetime, and to pay said lessors such sums as they might request.

Metropolitan v Andrews, 215-1049; 247 NW 551

"Pledge" and "chattel mortgage" contrasted—priority. A mere pledge of rents written into a real estate mortgage remote from the granting clause of the mortgage cannot be deemed a chattel mortgage. It follows that such pledge is inferior to the rights of the good-faith assignee of a lease and rent notes executed subsequent to the real estate mortgage and prior to an action to foreclose such mortgage, and accompanying pledge.

Owen v Fink, 218-412; 255 NW 459

Foreclosure—rents—conflicting claims. The lien on matured crops, acquired by virtue of the commencement of foreclosure proceedings on a second mortgage carrying simply a pledge of the rents, is inferior to the lien acquired under the first mortgage, which is a duly recorded, combined real estate and chattel mortgage on the land and on the rents and crops thereof. This is true because the lien under the first mortgage necessarily attaches ahead of the lien of the second mortgage. Likewise the lien acquired by such second mortgage on unmatured rents is inferior to the lien of the first mortgage because, while both liens attach at the same instant of time, the first mortgage lien is first in time of origin.

Equitable v Read, 215-700; 246 NW 779

Rents and profits—secondary security after exhausting land—showing for immediate receiver. A pledge of rents and profits in a real estate mortgage, being secondary and unavailable until the land as primary security is exhausted, the filing of a petition in foreclosure does not immediately entitle mortgagee to a receiver prior to the sale without a showing both of mortgagor's insolvency and the insufficiency of the land alone to pay the mortgage indebtedness.

First JSL Bk. v Blount, 223-1339; 275 NW 64

Harmless error. In the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage and of a chattel mortgage clause embraced therein, the fact that the lower court failed to enter an order for the formal foreclosure of the chattel mortgage is quite inconsequential when the court did appoint a receiver of said mortgaged chattels and properly ruled that plaintiff's lien was superior to that of appellant's.

Equitable v Brown, 220-585; 262 NW 124

Priority—pledge for pre-existing debt. A pledge of rents contained in a real estate mortgage and taken as security for a pre-existing indebtedness is not entitled to priority over chattel mortgage clauses in prior real estate mortgages for value on the same land, even tho said prior mortgages are not indexed in the chattel mortgage index.

Soehren v Hein, 214-1060; 243 NW 330

Pledge of possession—effect. A pledge in a real estate mortgage of the right of possession of the premises is in substance a pledge of the rents and profits of the premises.

Mickelson v Rehnstrom, 215-1056; 247 NW 275

Real estate mortgage with chattel provision—failure to index. Failure to index the record of a real estate mortgage in the chattel mortgage index in order to give notice of chattel provisions in the real estate mortgage becomes quite immaterial when the complainant, a subsequent chattel mortgagee, simply held a chattel mortgage on crops which had not yet come into existence.

Louis v Hansen, 205-1216; 219 NW 523

Failure to index—effect. A recorded real estate mortgage containing a mortgage on the rents of the mortgaged real estate, but not indexed in the chattel mortgage index, is, as regards the rents, subject to a subsequent like mortgage taken by one for value and without notice of the former chattel mortgage clause, even tho the latter mortgage is not indexed in the chattel mortgage index.

Soehren v Hein, 214-1060; 243 NW 330

Recording "instrument relating to real estate". A mortgage (1) on chattels on certain described real estate and (2) on all crops "sown, planted, raised, growing or grown" on said real estate for two specified years following the execution of said instrument, being an instrument which "relates to real estate", is recordable as a real estate mortgage, and such recording may be enforced by mandamus.

Weyrauch v Johnson, 201-1197; 208 NW 706

TITLE XXV

REAL PROPERTY

REAL PROPERTY IN GENERAL

GENERAL PRINCIPLES

10040 Who deemed seized.

Discussion. See 4 ILB 48—Landowner's rights in underground waters; 16 ILR 169—Ownership of air above land; 18 ILR 67—Subjacent land

Owner's right of disposal. Under ordinary circumstances one has the absolute right to dispose of his property as he pleases.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

10041 Estate in fee simple.

Estate by entirety not recognized.

Fay v Smiley, 201-1290; 207 NW 369

Nature of estate devised—fee (?) or life (?). A testamentary devise, to testator's wife of specified real estate "to be and become the absolute property" of said wife, must be deemed to convey a fee simple estate unless accompanied by some other valid and enforceable provision manifesting a contrary intent. So held where the contrary intent was sought to be drawn from other provisions of the will which were either (1) precatory, or (2) repugnant to the granted fee.

Baker v Elder, 223-395; 272 NW 153

Deed—life estate (?) or fee (?). A deed which is in consideration of love and affection, which contains no words of inheritance, nor the word "heirs", which reserves to the grantor the right to control the premises during his life, which provides that, when the grantor dies, the grantee shall take absolute control of the premises, and which provides that, when the grantee dies, the absolute title shall vest in the grantee's children, (1) reserves a life estate in grantor, (2) conveys a life estate to grantee, and (3) conveys the fee to grantee's children.

Farmers Mtg. v Walker, 207-696; 223 NW 497

Conveyance to "heirs and assigns"—effect. A grant of land to a named person "and to his heirs and assigns" conveys a fee simple title, irrespective of a habendum clause which provides that, upon the death of the grantee, the property shall revert to the grantor or to his heirs.

Dolan v Newberry, 204-443; 215 NW 599

Will—words "to own" conveying absolute title. A devise of "one-half of all property

I may own at the time of my death" to testator's wife "to own, hold and enjoy as her own", conveys an absolute title to one half of testator's estate.

In re Bigham, 227-1023; 290 NW 11

Will—property devised in fee—subsequent limitation void. Principle reaffirmed that a testator cannot make an absolute devise of his property in fee and in a subsequent clause destroy or place a limitation on such title. The subsequent limitation is void for repugnancy.

In re Bigham, 227-1023; 290 NW 11

Rule in Shelley's case—when inapplicable. The rule in Shelley's case has no application when the conveyance, deed, or will is to one for life with remainder over to the children of the life tenant, unless it is manifest that the grantor used the word "children" as the equivalent of the word "heirs".

Blair v Kenaston, 223-620; 273 NW 184

10042 Conveyance passes grantor's interest.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 696—Alienability—contingent remainders—defeasible fees.

I IN GENERAL

Owner's right of disposal. Under ordinary circumstances one has the absolute right to dispose of his property as he pleases.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Elements of conveyance—delivery. All the elements for conveying the title to land were established by evidence that when a warranty deed was given to prevent an expected judgment against the grantor from becoming a lien on the land, with a lease back to the grantor to terminate at the death of himself and his wife, it was signed by all parties in the presence of the others, a copy was given the grantee, it was acknowledged by a notary and given him to record and keep, and three years later the grantor affixed a federal stamp to the deed and re-recorded it.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Transfer of present interest necessary—intent of grantor. Any instrument to be effective as conveyance of real estate must operate to convey a present interest in the real estate, and the intent of the grantor is the controlling factor in determining whether or not such present interest is conveyed.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Accretion passes by ordinary deed. Accretion to land passes by a deed of the upland owner unless expressly excepted.

Haynie v May, 217-1233; 252 NW 749

Excessive conveyance—reversion—effect. A deed in which two cotenant-grantors purport to convey the whole of premises, tho they owned but a two-thirds interest therein, to a cotenant who already owned the other one-third interest, with proviso that, in case a named condition fails, "the aforesaid premises shall revert back" to the grantors and their heirs, works the effect, in case the said condition does fail, of reinvesting the grantors and their heirs with precisely the interest which the grantors parted with by said deed: to-wit, a two-thirds interest, and no more.

Boley v Boley, 206-1394; 220 NW 121

Invalid reservation in land grant. Principle reaffirmed that the insertion in a patent issued by the federal government, under a public improvement grant, of a clause "excepting and reserving all mineral lands" is, in the absence of fraud, a nullity, even tho the grant itself did except mineral lands.

Herman v Engstrom, 204-341; 214 NW 588

Boundary line between farm buildings—grantor's alleged use and occupancy of buildings denied. In a special action to determine the true location of an east and west half-section line, where the grantor, owning the entire west half of the section, sells the northwest quarter, thinking his barn and corncrib were situated south of the half-section line, whereas a survey showed the buildings to be situated north of the half-section line, grantor's claim of a reservation of the use and occupancy of the barn and corncrib and ground appurtenant thereto under an implied easement on the theory that the barn and corncrib were necessary to the use and enjoyment of the land retained by grantor, could not be sustained, since the use of such buildings was just as essential, to the part sold, in proportion to the acreage, as it was to the part retained.

Dyer v Knowles, 227-1038; 289 NW 911

Part of single ownership conveyed—implied easement or reservation—clear intent of parties necessary. Principle reaffirmed that, where real estate has been used under single ownership and as a unity, one part of it may be burdened with a use which is largely or entirely for the benefit of another part of it, and when divided by devise, descent or sale, one part may be burdened or benefited by an implied reservation or granting of an easement right if it is apparent and necessary, but such implied grant or reservation must be clearly within the intention of the parties.

Dyer v Knowles, 227-1038; 289 NW 911

Fee devised but alienation restricted—co-existence impossible. The fee simple title to real property cannot be devised coupled with a restriction on alienation of said property.

Hudnutt v Ins. Co., 224-430; 275 NW 581

"Church purposes". A broad and comprehensive meaning must be accorded to the term "church purposes" in a conveyance of land to trustees "so long as used for church purposes".

Presbyterian Church v Johnson, 213-49; 238 NW 456

Right of way deed—abandonment—effect. A deed to a strip of land for highway purposes is ipso facto annulled and rendered ineffective by the definite abandonment of the proposal to establish the highway. In other words, the municipality may not, years after definitely abandoning the project, establish the highway and claim anything under the deed.

Beim v Carlson, 209-1001; 227 NW 421

Express trusts—unconditional conveyance—parol evidence. A parol, unexecuted, and unadmitted trust cannot be grafted on an unconditional conveyance in fee of real estate.

Hospers v Watts, 209-1193; 229 NW 844

Termination—merger—acquisition of title by stockholder of corporate lessee. A lease in which a corporation with many stockholders is lessee may not be said to be merged, and thereby terminated, simply because some of the stockholders acquire the equitable title to the real estate.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

Mortgages—priority—right of parties in possession. Assuming, arguendo, that a person who is negotiating with the record grantee of land for an interest in the land (e. g., as mortgagee), is under duty to make inquiry as to the rights of the former warranty deed grantor who has remained in actual possession, yet said duty is fully performed when the negotiator is assured by said former grantor that said grantee is the absolute owner of the land. It follows that said grantor will not thereafter be permitted to assert that when he conveyed the land by warranty deed he orally reserved an equitable interest in the land.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Loan to discharge mortgage—subsequent mortgagee subrogated to former's rights. A governmental loaning agency, set up to meet an emergency, by making loans to save homes from foreclosure, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the original mortgagee, when it discovers that there is an heir of one of the original mortgagors who has an interest in the title and who did not join in the mortgage it holds, and when through no fault or negligence on its part, said heir's interest was not discovered and he was not prejudiced by this latter mortgage, but was given the right to redeem in the event of foreclosure.

Home Owners Corp. v Rupe, 225-1044; 283 NW 108

Strip mining—when back-filling required. A holder of a strip mine coal lease who enters upon and strips coal from land, upon which land a pipe line company holds an easement, knowing that by so mining violates his lease, must back-fill the land when the easement holder exercises his option to buy; and upon his failure to make the back-fill, a judgment against the coal lessee for the cost thereof is proper.

Penn v Pipe Line Co., 225-680; 281 NW 194

Strip mining—pipe line easement. Where a pipe line company has an easement across land and an option to buy a designated strip of land along the pipe line if a strip coal mine should be opened on the land, a subsequent strip mine coal lease, subject to the pipe line easement and option, gives the coal lessee no rights to strip mine coal on the land covered by the purchase option and thus destroy the lateral support of the pipe line, nor is such lessee entitled to any part of the purchase price for such strip of land.

Penn v Pipe Line Co., 225-680; 281 NW 194

II ESTATES CONVEYED—LIFE ESTATES, ETC.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 543—Renunciation of life estate

Future-acquired interest. A conveyance which purports to convey the grantor's present interest in land cannot be held to convey an interest subsequently acquired in the land by the grantor.

Lee v Lee, 207-882; 223 NW 888

Assignment by heir—construction. A written assignment by an heir "of all interest of every kind and nature" in the estate works a complete conveyance of the heir's interest in the real estate of the estate, as against a subsequently rendered judgment against the assignor.

Berg v Shade, 203-1352; 214 NW 513
See Funk v Grulke, 204-314; 213 NW 608

Expectancies—ineffectual conveyance. A mortgage which recites that the mortgagor "sells and conveys her undivided interest and all future rents, issues, and profits" in named lands (in which the mortgagor then has no interest whatever) speaks solely in the present tense, and is wholly ineffectual to convey the mortgagor's future expectant interest in the land as an heir.

Lee v Lee, 207-882; 223 NW 888

Conditions—unallowable disregard of. A conveyance "of the fee title" of land may make the vesting, in the grantee, of said fee conditional on the happening of any named, legal condition; and, in such case, it is idle to contend that this section furnishes authority to disregard the conditions and to hold the conveyance absolute.

So held where the vesting was, inter alia, dependent on the conditions:

1. That grantees should survive their mother, the holder of a preceding life estate.
2. That in case grantees did not survive their mother, only direct heirs of the body of grantees should take said title.

Schultz v Peters, 223-626; 273 NW 134

Repugnancy between clauses—modern rule. The technical rules of the common law as to the division of deeds of conveyances into formal parts, i. e., premises or granting clause, and habendum clause, will not prevail as against the manifest intention of the parties as shown by the deed as a whole. Applied (1) where the granting clause clearly granted a life estate, while (2) the habendum clause defined the estate received by the grantee as the fee.

Blair v Kenaston, 223-620; 273 NW 184

Life estate (?) or fee (?). A deed which is in consideration of love and affection, which contains no words of inheritance, nor the word "heirs" which reserves to the grantor the right to control the premises during his life, which provides that, when the grantor dies, the grantee shall take absolute control of the premises, and which provides that, when the grantee dies, the absolute title shall vest in the grantee's children, (1) reserves a life estate in grantor, (2) conveys a life estate to grantee, and (3) conveys the fee to grantee's children.

Farmers Co. v Walker, 207-696; 223 NW 497

Will—property devised in fee—subsequent limitation void. Principle reaffirmed that a testator cannot make an absolute devise of his property in fee and in a subsequent clause destroy or place a limitation on such title. The subsequent limitation is void for repugnancy.

In re Bigham, 227-1023; 290 NW 11

Devisees and heirs joining in deed. A conveyance of land carries the entire fee when properly joined in (1) by all those who could take under the probated will of the fee owner, and (2) by all those who would take the property under the laws of inheritance in case said property proved to be intestate property.

Bahls v Dean, 222-1291; 270 NW 861

Construction—life estate—title vests on termination. Will bequeathing income of property to widow for life with remainder equally to his then living brothers and sisters, a woman not related to testator, and a business associate also not related, construed to vest title at widow's death rather than at death of testator so as to entitle unrelated legatees to take entire remainder as against heirs of brothers and sisters who predeceased widow.

Rice v Yockey-Klein, 227-175; 288 NW 63

Remainder—vested (?) or contingent (?). A provision in a deed of conveyance that the remainder—after the termination of a life estate—shall pass to the named remaindermen "on the death of" or "at the death of" the life tenant, has reference solely to the time of enjoyment by the remaindermen of their estate in remainder—not to the time of the vesting of said remainder.

Blair v Kenaston, 223-620; 273 NW 184

Conveyance to deceased junior mortgagee. In an equity action for foreclosure against mortgagor and administrators of deceased junior mortgagee to whom mortgagor had allegedly executed the land, evidence held to establish that a deed had been executed by mortgagor in favor of deceased junior mortgagee.

Federal Bank v Ditto, 227-475; 288 NW 618

Conveyance to junior mortgagee. In an equity action for foreclosure of realty mortgage, where it is shown mortgagor made a conveyance of land to junior mortgagee who surrendered note and mortgage and accepted land in payment, and who, at the same time assumed payment of first mortgage and thereafter took possession and rented the land, held, sufficient consideration to bind junior mortgagee on his assumption agreement as to first mortgage.

Federal Bank v Ditto, 227-475; 288 NW 618

Valuable improvements—nonliability of remainderman. Principle recognized that a life tenant of realty may not, on his own initiative, place valuable improvements on the property, and legally hold the remainderman liable for the value of such improvements.

Kinnett v Ritchie, 223-543; 273 NW 175

Life estate — proof — mortgage recitals. A series of mortgages accepted by a bank describing the undivided third interest of a son subject to the life estate of the mother, together with other evidence, held to establish an alleged oral contract of the heirs and their mother to create such life estate in the property of a deceased intestate husband and father; consequently, partition of the realty was properly denied against the mother.

Redding v Redding, 226-327; 284 NW 167

Lands subject to mortgage—contingent interest. Lands devised by will are mortgageable by the devisee tho the devise be subject (1) to a preceding life estate in another, and (2) to the payment, after the death of the life tenant, of a named legacy; being thus legally mortgageable, the mortgage is legally forecloseable during the life of the life tenant, but subject, of course, to all outstanding superior equities.

State Bank v Bolton, 223-685; 273 NW 121

Mortgage of life estate and remainder. A court of equity, in an emergency, has inherent power, on the application of life tenants and remaindermen—tho some of the latter be minors—to authorize the execution of a mortgage on the entire fee title in the property in question regardless of the respective interest of the parties among themselves, when such order or authorization is necessary to preserve the property for all said parties and prevent loss to any of them. And this is true tho the creator of the two estates did not contemplate such emergency.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

Delivery to trustee—no reservation of right to recall. Where deed is delivered by grantor to a third party with instructions to deliver it to the grantee or record the same upon the death of the grantor, with no reservations of a right to recall the same during the lifetime of the grantor, there is sufficient delivery.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Deeds to children delivered to trustee—wife acquiescing in husband's instructions. An agreement reached by a husband and wife, that he should deed his property to her and she would deed it to the children, the deeds to be placed with a trustee, who was to record the first deed on the death of the husband and then record the second deeds on the death of the wife, is binding on the wife, when she is present at the execution of the deeds and, by her silence, acquiesces in the instructions given by the husband to the trustee.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Escrow delivery—life estate reserved. Delivery of a deed to a trustee for redelivery to grantee after grantor's death reserves a life estate in the grantor, with title immediately passing to grantee, but with his right to possession and enjoyment of land therein conveyed postponed until grantor's death.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Admission by nominal defendant not binding on principal defendant—guardianship. A wife seeking to quiet title in herself by virtue of a deed from her deceased husband, recorded by a trustee after the husband's death, must prevail on the strength of her own title as opposed by her insane son's title, obtained through a deed from her, also in the hands of the trustee, the two deeds being executed at the same time; but she gains nothing because the trustee concedes her title, when the real party in interest, the son, through his guardian, made no such admission in his separate answer.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Resulting trust denied—deed from father to son—conduct of parties. In a partition action involving a decedent's property, tried on issues raised by defendant's cross-petition, alleging that another property of decedent, which had been deeded by decedent to one of his sons, should be included in the partition action—in the absence of fraud—such deed therefor will not be set aside on the theory of a resulting trust in favor of the decedent's estate, when there is no evidence that either the grantor or grantee so considered it altho they both lived several years after the deed was made.

Gilligan v Jones, 226-86; 283 NW 434

When life estate not subject to sale. A trust agreement and a deed of conveyance accompanying it, executed as security for a named debt, and granting the trustee immediate possession with right and duty to apply the rents to the secured debt, may not be foreclosed and the grantor's life estate sold, when the trust agreement and conveyance (1) recite the grantor's interest as a life estate only, but (2) contain no agreement or inference that the trustee may alienate said life estate.

In re Barnett, 217-187; 251 NW 59

Execution sale purchaser—buying tax certificates—remainderman unaffected. Where a judgment creditor purchases a life estate at execution sale and then purchases tax certificates outstanding against such life estate he is merely redeeming the taxes and cannot acquire any interest adverse to the remainderman.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

Life tenant—duty to pay taxes. It is the duty of a life tenant to pay taxes.

Kinnett v Ritchie, 223-543; 273 NW 175

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

Taxes paid by life tenant—heirs cannot recover from remainderman. Heirs of a life tenant, who acquired life estate at execution sale, cannot recover from the remainderman, contribution for delinquent taxes paid on life estate which accrued prior to execution sale, since it is the duty of life tenant to pay taxes.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

Transfers taxable—life reservation, by grantor, of income. Section 7307, C., '24, declaring that property passing by a "transfer made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor or donor" is subject to an inheritance or transfer tax, embraces property which passes by a conveyance in trust in which the grantor or donor reserves unto himself, during his lifetime, the net annual income of the conveyed property; and this is true even tho the said section is later so amended as to specifically declare the above to be the effect of such a reservation.

In re Toy, 220-825; 263 NW 501

Administrator liable only for funds in hands of life tenant. Administrator who was garnished by judgment creditor of decedent's widow, who was life tenant, held liable only for property constituting income of life estate which was in his hands at time of service of notice of garnishment, and not for such income that might come into his hands thereafter.

Yoss v Sampson, (NOR); 269 NW 22

III FIXTURES INVOLVED

Essential elements—intent controlling. The essential elements in determining whether a chattel is a fixture are (1) actual annexation to the realty, (2) the use or purpose to which that part of the realty is appropriated, and (3) the intent of the party making the annexation to make a permanent accession to the freehold. The latter, being the most controlling factor, is determined from the expressed inten-

III FIXTURES INVOLVED—concluded
tion or by the facts and circumstances surrounding the annexation.

Equitable v Chapman, 225-988; 282 NW 355

Intent in making annexation. The particular method of attaching a thing to the realty becomes quite inconsequential when the parties admit that it was bought, sold, and erected with the mutual intent of having it become a fixture.

O'Bryon v Weatherly, 201-190; 206 NW 828

Intent and purpose in making annexation. Buildings resting solely on beveled skids, to which they are securely attached in the process of construction, and therefore capable of being moved from place to place, are fixtures, when they are appropriate and essential to the successful use of the land upon which they rest and to which they relate, and when they were placed upon said land with intent to make them permanent structures on the land.

College v Crain, 211-1343; 235 NW 731

Steam boiler and bake oven. A steam boiler weighing a ton and a half becomes a fixture—a part of the realty—(1) when set on a cement foundation, (2) when it is so large that when installed it cannot be removed from the building without removing a portion of the wall of the building, and (3) when it is connected with a bake oven and with various radiators throughout the building; likewise a bake oven weighing eleven tons (1) when set upon a cement foundation without fastenings other than its own weight, and (2) when so built into the building as seemingly to be a part thereof.

Comly v Lehmann, 218-644; 253 NW 501

Removal against mortgagee. A steam boiler and a bake oven so erected on mortgaged real estate that they become fixtures, in lieu of former articles of the same kind, cannot be legally removed, even tho sold under a contract providing for retention of title in the vendor until paid for, when such removal would materially diminish the security of the said mortgagee.

Comly v Lehmann, 218-644; 253 NW 501

Right to remove fixture as against vendor. A dealer who permanently installs a furnace in a house for a subvendee, under a contract that he (the dealer) shall retain title to the furnace and the right to remove it in case of nonpayment, may not lawfully remove the furnace for nonpayment, as against the vendor, who did not expressly or impliedly consent to such installation, and who sold under a written forfeitable contract, which was, subsequent to the installation of the furnace, forfeited and abandoned by both the original vendee and the subvendee.

Des Moines Co. v Holland Co., 204-274; 212 NW 551

Movable farm structures. Movable hog houses and feed bunks on a farm will not constitute fixtures, when to so declare would be contrary to the actual expressed intent of the person who placed them on the farm—a tenant—and contrary to the intent as reflected in the nature of the articles, their use, and the mode of attachment to the realty.

Speer v Donald, 201-569; 207 NW 581

Mortgage foreclosure—effect of decree on pipe line fixtures—damages. A mortgagee, having foreclosed and taken a sheriff's deed, may not require a gas pipe line company to pay for its pipe and fixtures previously installed across the mortgaged premises in addition to the damages for right of way on the theory that the foreclosure decree vested in mortgagee the title to such pipe and fixtures.

Titus Co. v Natural Gas Co., 223-944; 274 NW 68

Eminent domain—compensation—fixtures on mortgaged premises—res judicata. In a proceeding to condemn right of way for a gas pipe line, the fact that the pipe was already installed under an easement which was held in a foreclosure action to be inferior to a prior mortgage, did not thereby give the mortgagee through his foreclosure decree title and ownership of the pipe and fixtures installed on the mortgaged premises, nor is such foreclosure decree res judicata as to title to such pipe and fixtures without in the foreclosure action trying the issue thereon.

Titus Co. v Natural Gas Co., 223-944; 274 NW 68

10043 After-acquired interest—exception.

Future-acquired interest. A conveyance which purports to convey the grantor's "present" interest in land cannot be held to convey an interest subsequently acquired in the land by the grantor.

Lee v Lee, 207-882; 223 NW 888

After-acquired interest in buildings. A grantee of land under a full warranty deed may hold the buildings on the land even tho, unbeknown to him when he contracted for the land, the grantor did not own said buildings, it appearing that, since the execution of the deed, the grantor did become the owner of said buildings.

Schiltz v Ferguson, 210-677; 231 NW 358

Remedies of purchaser—right to lien. The contracting purchaser of land who rescinds, because the contracting vendor has no title whatever, is nevertheless entitled to a lien on the land for payments advanced in case the vendor, subsequent to the rescission, acquires such title.

Dolliver v Elmer, 220-348; 260 NW 85

10045 Future estates.

Estates created by will. See under §11846 (V)

Discussion. See 3 ILB 133—Possibilities of reverter after determinable fees; 3 ILB 170—Conveyances to take effect on death of grantor; 6 ILB 198—Freeholds in future; 8 ILB 104—Future interests in personality; 18 ILR 289—Modern classification; 21 ILR 1—Conversion of use into a legal interest; 22 ILR 437; 23 ILR 1; 24 ILR 1, 635; 25 ILR 1, 707—Alienability and perpetuities; 22 ILR 696—Alienability—contingent remainders—defeasible fees

Educational and religious purposes—not a conditional limitation. A conditional limitation in a deed is self-operative and determines the period of the existing estate without any act on the part of the person entitled to the next expectant estate, and therefore a deed containing merely a provision for educational and religious purposes is not restricted by a conditional limitation.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Educational and religious purposes—not condition subsequent. A deed, conveying the title and the fee and containing the single statement "said land to be used for educational purposes and religious purposes only" followed by a warranty but by no words of condition, and no conditions appearing in the circumstances surrounding its execution, does not signify an intention by the grantor to create a condition subsequent which, in case the land is not used as designated or is conveyed by grantee, will upon re-entry by an heir, invest him with title.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Delivery to trustee—no reservation of right to recall. Where deed is delivered by grantor to a third party with instructions to deliver it to the grantee or record the same upon the death of the grantor, with no reservations of a right to recall the same during the lifetime of the grantor, there is sufficient delivery.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Escrow delivery—life estate reserved. Delivery of a deed to a trustee for redelivery to grantee after grantor's death reserves a life estate in the grantor, with title immediately passing to grantee, but with his right to possession and enjoyment of land therein conveyed postponed until grantor's death.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Admission by nominal defendant not binding on principal defendant—guardianship. A wife seeking to quiet title in herself by virtue of a deed from her deceased husband, recorded by a trustee after the husband's death, must prevail on the strength of her own title as opposed by her insane son's title, obtained through a deed from her, also in the hands of the trustee, the two deeds being executed at the same time; but she gains nothing because the trustee concedes her title, when the real party in interest, the son, through his guardian, made no such admission in his separate answer.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Particular estate. A "particular estate" is an estate for life or for years for the reason that it is only a small part or portion of the inheritance.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Death of joint life tenant without issue—remainder over in fee. In a will where father devised realty to surviving spouse for life, then to three named children for life with remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, and one of such children died without lawful issue, after mother's death, remainder over of her share, being a one-third of said realty, became intestate property and through the father passed to the two remaining children in fee, subject to payment of taxes and debts against estate of deceased child to the extent of one-third interest in the lapsed estate.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Remainder over—absence of issue. In a will where father devised realty to surviving spouse for life, then to three named children for life with remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, the fact that there were no grandchildren in being at the time of mother's death did not lapse the remainder so as to cause it to descend intestate and merge with life estate in children, since, at mother's death, the life estate in children was a "particular estate" supporting the contingent remainder, which was not required to vest until termination of such life estate.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Remainder over—in fee per stirpes to lawful issue. When a will provides for a devise of realty to wife for life, then to three named children for life as tenants in common and remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, held, life estate vested in children after wife's death with contingent remainder over in fee, as provided by statute—the life estates being the particular estate supporting the contingent estate which would vest, upon death of each of testator's named children, in that child's lawful issue, if any.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Vested (?) or contingent (?) estate. A will giving a life estate to a sister and the remainder to a nephew receivable immediately upon sister's death if nephew had reached majority, or if he had not attained majority, providing for a guardianship during minority, creates not a contingent but a vested remainder with only the enjoyment postponed, and as such, on the death of the nephew after reaching majority by marriage, goes to his widow rather than as residuary property in the estate.

Boehm v Rohlf, 224-226; 276 NW 105

Debt-encumbered remainder—equitable action to enforce. Where a testator devises to his wife a life estate in all his property (which estate she accepts), with remainder to his children, a provision of the will to the specific effect that "all just debts and funeral expenses" of said wife shall be paid out of testator's estate, will enable the wife's creditor, who became such subsequent to the probating of the will and the closing of the estate, and shortly prior to the death of the wife some 30 years later, to maintain an action in equity to establish the debt, and to subject the lands, passing under the will and in the hands of remaindermen, to the satisfaction of said debt.

Diagonal Bank v Nichols, 219-342; 258 NW 700

Special assessments—duty to discharge. As between life tenants and remaindermen, the former, during their tenancy, should pay the interest on special assessments, and the latter should pay the principal; and refunds on such assessments should be distributed in the same proportions.

Cooper v Barton, 208-447; 226 NW 70

10046 Contingent remainders.

Discussion. See 8 ILB 49—Restraints on the alienation of fee; 8 ILB 109—Invalidity of new estates of inheritance; 8 ILB 247—Alienation of contingent interests; 10 ILB 89, 275—Contingent remainder act; 10 ILB 317—Restraints on the alienation of equitable fee; 14 ILR 80—Vested and contingent remainders—executions; 13 ILR 425—Common law estates; 22 ILR 543—Renunciation of life estate; 22 ILR 696—Alienability—contingent remainders—defeasible fees; 22 ILR 437; 23 ILR 1; 24 ILR 1, 635; 25 ILR 1, 707—Alienability and perpetuities; 24 ILR 268—Seizin and possession—title

Vested (?) or contingent (?)—definition. A vested remainder is an estate which passes by will or other conveyance with possession and enjoyment postponed until a particular preceding estate terminates—an estate which is invariably fixed by the will or other conveyance "to remain to certain determinate persons". A remainder is not vested when it is dependent on the grantee being alive when the preceding life tenant dies or re-marries.

In re Est. Gordon, 213-6; 236 NW 37
Diagonal Bank v Nichols, 219-342; 258 NW 700

Distinction between a vested and a contingent interest. In an action to partition land, it is not uncertainty of time of enjoyment in the future, but the uncertainty of the right to that enjoyment, which marks difference between a vested and a contingent interest.

Flanagan v Spalti, 225-1231; 282 NW 347

Remainder—contingent (?) or vested (?). The remainder is contingent, in a devise of a life estate to a daughter, with remainder to the "surviving children", if any, of the life tenant at the time of her death; otherwise to certain designated devisees.

Saunders v Wilson, 207-526; 220 NW 344; 60 ALR 786

Vested (?) or contingent (?)—general rule. A remainder must be deemed vested, generally speaking, when a designated taker is living and ready to go into possession instantly upon the termination of the preceding estate, even tho such person may, in the course of time, die prior to the preceding life tenant.

Bogenrief v Law, 222-1303; 271 NW 229

Vested or contingent remainder—transfer and alienation. Remainders, whether vested or contingent, may be transferred, alienated or incumbered.

Bogenrief v Law, 222-1303; 271 NW 229

Vested estates. The estate of a remainderman must be deemed vested upon the probate of a will devising a life estate to testator's wife with remainder to testator's children.

Diagonal Bank v Nichols, 219-342; 258 NW 700

Remainder to class—rule as to vesting. When there is an immediate gift to a class of persons, the gift vests in the members of that class who are existent at the time testator dies, unless a different intention appears from the context of the will. So held where the gift was "to the children living of my brothers and sisters living or dead".

In re Gordon, 213-6; 236 NW 37

Contingency—person not in esse. A remainder, so limited as to take effect in persons not in esse, is a contingent remainder.

Bankers Trust v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Estate "to heirs of father at death of husband"—vested interest. A will devising a portion of an estate "to the legal heirs of my father to be distributed * * * at the death of my husband" vests this portion in such heirs of the father as were living at the time of testatrix' death—the father being dead at that time.

Flanagan v Spalti, 225-1231; 282 NW 347

Right to possession on expiration of life estate—vested remainder. A person in being who, under a will, would have an immediate right to possession of the lands devised upon the termination of a life tenancy therein provided, has a vested remainder.

Flanagan v Spalti, 225-1231; 282 NW 347

Perpetuities—limitations void ab initio. Testamentary attempts by means of limitations to create in property contingent interests or estates, which will not necessarily become vested within the period of time prescribed by the statute prohibiting perpetuities, are futile, all such limitations being void ab initio. (§10127, C., '35.)

Bankers, Tr. Co. v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Unborn contingent remaindermen. The contingent interest in land of the unborn children of a life tenant arising out of the terms of a testamentary devise is not cut off by a decree in an action to quiet title by making the life tenant a party defendant as a "representative" of such unborn children; especially so when said life tenant assumes a hostile attitude toward said unborn children.

Mennig v Graves, 211-758; 234 NW 189

Merger of life estate and contingent remainder into fee. The grantee of a life estate, on condition, however, that if grantee violates any one of named prohibited acts the said estate shall ipso facto instantly terminate, and the fee pass to grantee's issue, or to named remaindermen if grantee then has no issue, may, if without issue, take a conveyance by warranty deed from said contingent remaindermen of all their present and possible future interest in the land, and thereby merge the life estate and contingent remainders into a fee in himself.

Thorsen v Long, 212-1073; 237 NW 515

Interest of remainderman passes to trustee. The interest of a bankrupt as a real estate remainderman, whether the interest be vested or contingent, passes to the trustee in bankruptcy.

Noonan v Bank, 211-401; 233 NW 487

Attachment or execution levy. A contingent remainder—contingent because of the uncertainty of the person who will take the property—is not subject to attachment or execution levy and sale.

Saunders v Wilson, 207-526; 220 NW 344; 60 ALR 786

Sale under execution. A contingent remainder, being legally mortgageable, is necessarily subject to sale on mortgage foreclosure execution.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

Protection from execution sale. Principle reaffirmed that a contingent remainderman may maintain an action to protect his contingent interest from execution sale.

Skelton v Cross, 222-262; 268 NW 499; 109 ALR 129

10048 Defeating expectant estate.

Discussion. See 10 ILB 314—Destruction of contingent remainders by merger; 22 ILR 268—Tax on trust income; 22 ILR 696—Alienability—contingent remainders—defeasible fees; 22 ILR 437; 23 ILR 1; 24 ILR 1, 635; 25 ILR 1, 707—Alienability and perpetuities

Merger of life estate and contingent remainder into fee. The grantee of a life estate, on condition, however, that if grantee violates any one of named prohibited acts the said estate shall ipso facto instantly terminate, and the fee pass to grantee's issue, or to named remaindermen if grantee then has no issue, may, if without issue, take a conveyance by warranty deed from said contingent remaindermen of all their present and possible future interest in the land, and thereby merge the life estate and contingent remainders into a fee in himself.

Thorsen v Long, 212-1073; 237 NW 515

Establishing trust to defeat heir's judgment creditors. When a will devised all of testatrix's property to daughter in trust, directing trustee to make a monthly payment to a third party and to transfer a one-fourth interest in the trust estate to each of two grandchildren when they reached a certain age, and providing that daughter should have a one-half interest in the estate during her life only in the event obligations to her judgment creditors were barred or satisfied, such will established a trust, and did not repose entire beneficial interest in daughter. Nor was the trust extinguished by a merger of daughter's legal and equitable estate so that property could be subjected to satisfaction of creditor's judgments, because in equity the doctrine of merger will not be invoked if it would frustrate the testatrix's expressed intentions or if there is some other reason for keeping the estates separate.

Cy pres doctrine invoked by state in equity court. A public charity, created by trust, about to fail, is properly represented in court of equity to invoke jurisdiction to apply cy pres doctrine by the state or some authorized agency thereof.

Schell v Leander Clark College, 10 F 2d, 542

Trust property for educational purposes. Property transferred to a county in trust for the establishment of a prescribed seminary of learning, and duly accepted by the board of supervisors on behalf of the county, becomes a special part of the school fund of the county, and remains such, tho the legal title be transferred to court-appointed trustees for managerial purposes. It follows that, being county property and devoted to public use and not held for pecuniary profit, said property is exempt from taxation (§6944, subsec. 2, C., '35), even tho no action has been taken to actually execute the trust.

McCull v Dallas County, 220-434; 262 NW 824

Charitable trust to county for paving roads. A first codicil devising an estate to trustees to be administered under county supervision in building roads, and a second codicil appointing one executor to aid the county in building roads, created a lawful charitable trust with the county as trustee and taxpayers as beneficiaries which was not necessarily invalid because the executor was given administrative duties in the road construction in violation of statute.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Trust fund doctrine—unpaid stock subscription. A subscriber for corporate stock who is not a promoter of the purported corporation is not liable on his fraud-induced, unpaid stock subscription contract in an action by the receiver of the corporation when the charter of the corporation has been judicially annulled, subsequent to the subscription contract, by the state, for fraud perpetrated on the state in obtaining the charter; in other words, the so-called English "equitable trust fund doctrine" does not apply to such a condition.

Fundamental reason. Such purported corporation, having been conceived, born, and nurtured in fraud, was never, in truth or fact, a corporation de jure or de facto, in a business sense.

State v Packing Co., 216-1344; 249 NW 761; 90 ALR 1339

Augmentation theory. The assets of an insolvent may be said to have been augmented by a trust fund whenever the trust owner is able to point out the trust property, either by actual proof or by legal presumption of fact.

Andrew v Bank, 204-565; 215 NW 742

Equitable preference—pro rata distribution. A trust fund must be prorated among the established claims when the fund is insufficient to pay all in full.

Leach v Bank, 205-114; 213 NW 414; 217 NW 437; 56 ALR 801

Following trust funds into property. A cestui que trust owns the property into which he can trace dissipated trust funds.

Mandel v Siverly, 213-109; 238 NW 596

Impressing trust on proceeds of lienable property—limitation. An action to impress a trust on the proceeds of property on which a landlord had a lien, against a depository who had full knowledge that the sale had been had for the benefit of the landlord, is not barred immediately after the lapse of six months from the termination of the lease.

Andrew v Bank, 208-1184; 225 NW 957

Lien—sale of property—impressing trust on proceeds. Where property subject in part to a lien for rent was sold by the tenant-owner for the benefit of the landlord, and at public sale, in order to save court costs, a depository of the proceeds who was also a creditor of the tenant's, and who had full knowledge of the purpose of the sale, may not complain that the court impressed a trust on such proceeds to the amount of the lien which the landlord had on the property.

Andrew v Bank, 208-1184; 225 NW 957

Assessment certificates create no trust relationship. A city or town in issuing valid special assessment certificates for street improvements and in levying valid assessments for the payment of the certificates, does not constitute itself a trustee for said certificate holders.

Stockholders Inv. Co. v Brooklyn, 216-693; 246 NW 826

Deed and agreement creating trust. Where a husband conveyed his separate property to wife pursuant to an agreement providing that upon her death property was to go to a granddaughter either by will or deed, and where, after consummation of this transaction, the husband tore up the original copy of the agreement and executed an absolute conveyance of the same property to his wife, held, that the original deed and agreement, which were simultaneously executed, must be construed as one instrument, and that an irrevocable trust was created in favor of the granddaughter since no power of revocation was expressly reserved.

Young v Young-Wishard, 227-431; 288 NW 420

Prohibitory statute—excludes trust conveyance. Where a husband conveyed his separate property to wife pursuant to agreement providing that, upon her death, property was to go to granddaughter either by will or proper deed of conveyance, such an agreement was not a contract dealing primarily with the inchoate right of dower of the wife and therefore was not void under statute providing that a husband or wife has no interest in the property owned by the other which can be the subject of contract between them, since that statute prohibits only such transactions when they relate directly to dower rights.

Young v Young-Wishard, 227-431; 288 NW 420

Partnership and trust—construed separately. A trust deed and a partnership agreement, altho executed at the same time, cannot be construed together, when the parties thereto and the purposes thereof are not the same.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 224-1323; 278 NW 631

Establishing trust to defeat heir's judgment creditors. When a will devised all of testatrix's property to daughter in trust, directing trustee to make a monthly payment to a third party and to transfer a one-fourth interest in the trust estate to each of two grandchildren when they reached a certain age, and providing that daughter should have a one-half interest in the estate during her life only in the event obligations to her judgment creditors were barred or satisfied, such will established a trust, and did not repose entire beneficial interest in daughter. Nor was the trust extinguished by a merger of daughter's legal and equitable estate so that property could be subjected to satisfaction of creditor's judgments, because in equity the doctrine of merger will not be invoked if it would frustrate the testatrix's expressed intentions or if there is some other reason for keeping the estates separate.

Freier v Longnecker, 227-366; 288 NW 444

Validity—nonright to question. A creditor may not have his claim decreed a lien on the property of a nonfraudulent trust which the debtor has created for the specific purpose of discharging an obligation as to which the said creditor is a stranger; and especially is this true when the said creditor fails to show that he was injured by the creation of said trust.

Clark v Langerak, 205-748; 218 NW 280

Enforcement—loss of right against innocent grantee. The owner of an equitable interest in land loses all right (1) to establish his interest as a trust in the land, and (2) to personal judgment against the grantees of the land, when, after refusing a proffered deed to the land, he knowingly permits the legal title holder to convey the land by quitclaim deed and for a valuable consideration to another equitably interested party who had no notice or knowledge of said first party's claim; and especially is this true when the consideration for the quitclaim deed was at all times a senior claim.

Brenton Bros. v Bissell, 214-175; 239 NW 14

Estoppel—knowledge and acceptance of benefits. Beneficiaries of a trust will not be heard in equity to assert the invalidity of a lease entered into by their trustee, when they (1) had full general knowledge thereof, (2) long acquiesced therein, (3) accepted and retained the rentals arising from the lease, and (4) knew at all times that the lessee was relying thereon at great expense.

Bowman v Swanwood Co., 201-1236; 207 NW 591

Transaction with deceased—intervenor—competency. In equity action to quiet title and to declare a trust in realty, an intervenor who claims same relief as plaintiff may not testify to alleged oral agreement between parties, some of whom are deceased.

Wagner v Wagner, (NOR); 224 NW 583

Rights of legatees—election—notice—right of wife as cestui to ignore. A wife who ignores a notice requiring her to elect whether she would take under her husband's will does not estop herself from alleging and proving that the property which the husband assumed to devise was held by him in trust for her.

Spring v Spring, 210-1124; 229 NW 147

Computation of period of limitation—repudiation necessary to start statute. The statute of limitation does not commence to run against the beneficiary of an express and continuing trust until the trustee directly repudiates the trust. Evidence held insufficient to show repudiation at such remote date as to bar an action for accounting. So held where the grantee of land—the trustee—took title under written agreement to account to grantor for one-half of the profits which might be realized on a sale.

Howes v Sutton, 221-1326; 268 NW 164

I IN GENERAL—concluded

Shelley's case inapplicable. The so-called "rule in Shelley's case" has no application to a deed of conveyance which creates a trust in the grantee for the benefit of his heirs.

Hibler v Hibler, 208-586; 226 NW 8

Transfers taxable—life reservation, by grantor, of income. The statutory declaration of §7307, C., '24, that property passing by a "transfer made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor or donor" is subject to an inheritance or transfer tax, embraces property which passes by a conveyance in trust in which the grantor or donor reserves unto himself, during his lifetime, the net annual income of the conveyed property; and this is true even tho said section is later so amended as to specifically declare the above to be the effect of such a reservation.

In re Toy, 220-825; 263 NW 501

Note—consideration—absence of—burden of proof. The beneficiaries of a trust, defendants in an action on a note and mortgage executed by their authorized agent, have the burden to show want of consideration.

Daries v Hart, 214-1312; 243 NW 527

Creation—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held quite insufficient to create a trust in funds passing through the hands of the defendant.

Federal Sur. v Morris Plan, 213-464; 239 NW 99

Oral evidence—when competent. Parol evidence is admissible to establish and show the nature of an admitted, or partially or wholly executed trust.

Andrew v Bank, 209-1149; 229 NW 819

Presumption from possession. A mere preponderance of the evidence is not sufficient to overcome the presumption arising from the possession of the legal title to real property.

Wagner v Wagner, 208-1004; 224 NW 583

II EXPRESS TRUSTS

Discussion. See 12 ILR 66—Beneficiaries in charitable trusts

Equality of benefits—ambiguous provision. The fact that various provisions of a conveyance in trust clearly require, under named conditions, equality of benefits between beneficiaries, may very materially influence the construction of other provisions which are ambiguous as to equality of benefits under other and different conditions.

Dunn v Dunn, 219-349; 258 NW 695

Designation of devisee. The fact that the name of the beneficiary of a religious or charitable trust as specified in a will is different than the name of the claimant of the devise becomes unimportant, in the face of ample testimony that the designated beneficiary and the claimant are one and the same institution.

Ross v Seminary, 204-648; 215 NW 710

Establishing trust by oral agreement—prohibitory statute. Under the Iowa statute an express trust cannot be established by a parol agreement, but such statute is inapplicable to constructive trusts.

D. M. Terminal v D. M. Union, 52 F 2d, 616

When parol evidence competent. Principle reaffirmed that parol evidence is competent to impress an express trust upon an absolute deed, provided the trust has been partially executed.

Hardy v Daum, 219-982; 259 NW 561

Conveyance by grantor to himself as trustee—effect. A conveyance in which the grantor as an individual divests himself, by comprehensive and unequivocal language, of all interest in the conveyed property and casts said property upon himself (and successors) as trustee for a specified purpose, and containing no clause authorizing a revocation, must be deemed to create an absolute and irrevocable trust.

Dunn v Dunn, 219-349; 258 NW 695

Trustee and beneficiary as same person—conveyance to self-quieting title. A sister, as the only heir in her brother's estate, who conveys by a trust instrument to a nonrelated person her entire interest in such estate, in exchange for the trustee providing her life support, and upon fulfillment of which the trustee became the beneficiary and was directed to convey the balance of the property from himself, as a trustee, to himself, individually, evidence, in trustee-beneficiary's quieting title action against settlor's heirs, held to establish soundness of mind and freedom of action by settlor in executing the trust instrument.

Goodman v Bauer, 225-1086; 281 NW 448

Testamentary trusts. A devise for charitable purposes tho apparently uncertain will be enforced if the court can from extrinsic evidence discover the testator's meaning.

In re Durham, 203-497; 211 NW 358

Testamentary trust. A testamentary devise of a charitable trust the object and beneficiaries of which are designated with any reasonable certainty will be sustained.

Martinson v Jacobson, 200-1054; 205 NW 849

Testamentary trust—validity. A testamentary trust will be sustained when the intent of testator is evident, even tho the bequest runs to an unincorporated entity.

Meeker v Lawrence, 203-409; 212 NW 688

Powers—execution of notes. Power in a testamentary trustee to invest and reinvest the subject-matter of the trust and generally to do substantially whatever the testator might do, were he alive, necessarily embraces the power to purchase lands and to execute promissory notes therefor.

Arnette v Watson, 203-552; 213 NW 270

Nontermination by beneficiaries. The beneficiaries of a testamentary trust may not, by mutual agreement, even tho approved and confirmed by the court, terminate the trust and accelerate the final vesting of the corpus of the trust, when the testator has clearly demonstrated a contrary intent.

Windsor v Barnett, 201-1226; 207 NW 362

Renunciation of trust by wife—effect. A testamentary trust embracing all of testator's property, and for the benefit of the testator's wife and other named beneficiaries in named proportions, is not terminated by the renunciation of the will by the wife. The trust will proceed as to two-thirds of the property, for the benefit of the remaining beneficiaries.

Windsor v Barnett, 201-1226; 207 NW 362

Nontestamentary instrument. A declaration of trust in and over real estate for the benefit of the trustor and named beneficiaries, and a contemporaneously executed and delivered warranty deed to the same property to the trustee, cannot be deemed a will, even tho the trustor-grantor reserves in the declaration of trust complete control, management, and dominion over the property during his lifetime, even to the power to revoke the trust and to demand a reconveyance, or to dispose of the property by testament.

Keck v McKinstry, 206-1121; 221 NW 851

Nonalienable interest. No present alienable interest which can be made subject to a lien by the creditor of a cestui que trust son passes to the son under a testamentary trust which is created for the express purpose of maintaining, supporting, and educating testator's son, wife, and family, with proviso (1) that the income of the trust fund shall be paid periodically to the wife of said son, and (2) that the corpus of the trust shall be paid, at a named future date, to both the son and wife, with direction, in substance, for the son and wife thereafter to continue the trust for the benefit of any of their then surviving children.

Damhoff v Shambaugh, 200-1155; 206 NW 248

Charities—devise—power of municipality to take. Devises and bequests for charitable purposes are such favorites of the law that "they will not be construed void if, by law, they can be made good". Will construed, and held that the conditions attending a devise and bequest to a municipality of a charitable trust in the form of a free public library, were conditions subsequent, and not conditions precedent, to the vesting of said trust, and that said conditions were within the legal power of the municipality to accept—under prescribed statutory procedure—and perform.

In re Nugen, 223-428; 272 NW 638

Voluntary association—personal liability. Individuals who voluntarily associate themselves in a business venture in the form of a trust are each personally liable for the authorized acts of their agent.

Daries v Hart, 214-1312; 243 NW 527

Educational and religious purposes—declaration of purpose or trust. A covenant in a deed specifying use for educational and religious purposes is only a "declaration of purpose" or a trust.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Indefinitely named charitable beneficiary. A testamentary devise in trust to "some old ladies' home" in a named locality necessarily implies a substantial institution devoted to said purposes, and manifestly, the court will not be compelled to bestow such bounty only on one of those who apply for such bounty.

In re Clifton, 207-71; 218 NW 926

Joint purchase of property. When the beneficiaries of a trust in real property and in the long-time lease thereon are given the right either to continue to receive the rent under the lease or to terminate the lease by jointly purchasing of the lessee the building which the lessee has erected on the land, under the lease, then the assignees of the beneficiaries must likewise act jointly in the purchase of the building.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

Alimony—property settlement under trust agreement. A property settlement under an irrevocable trust agreement made by husband and wife previous to and confirmed in divorce decree discharged husband's obligation for further support and precluded right to further alimony.

Fitch v Com. of Internal Rev., 103 F 2d, 702

Trustor's life support—gift "when funds are available". Where a will and trust instrument, designed to support two trustors as long as either one of them lived, contains also a $5,000 gift for each of two named beneficiaries, payable as soon as funds are available, such gifts may not be paid until after the death of last trustor, when it appears uncertain from the encumbered status of the trustee property whether or not the property is adequate to provide the required support for last surviving trustor, and even then the gifts or legacies with interest thereon are not due until one year after death of the last trustor.

In re Jeffrey, 225-316; 280 NW 536

II EXPRESS TRUSTS—concluded

Trust agreement—evidence insufficient to set aside. Evidence held insufficient to entitle trustor to set aside trust agreement and conveyances of property to trustees pursuant thereto on ground of mismanagement of trust property by trustees in failing to pay trustor full amount of monthly payments provided under trust agreement.

Hatt v Hatt, (NOR); 265 NW 640

Foreclosure—when life estate not subject to sale. A trust agreement and a deed of conveyance accompanying it, executed as security for a named debt, and granting the trustee immediate possession with right and duty to apply the rents to the secured debt, may not be foreclosed and the grantor's life estate sold, when the trust agreement and conveyance recite, (1) the grantor's interest as a life estate only, but (2) contain no agreement or inference that the trustee may alienate said life estate.

In re Barnett, 217-187; 251 NW 59

Relief—decree beyond issues. In a quiet title action by grantee against grantor's heir and successor in interest, a decree based on a deed containing a declaration of purpose (educational and religious use), goes beyond the issues when it finds the grantee to be the "sole and absolute owner, in fee simple"; the effect being to adjudicate the rights of persons, not before the court, who may have trust interests under the terms in the deed.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

III RESULTING TRUSTS

Discussion. See 6 ILB 177—Cy pres doctrine
Resulting trust—insufficient basis. A resulting trust cannot be based on facts showing the purchase of land and the taking of title in the name of the purchaser, and the long subsequent borrowing of money with which to pay the purchase price.

Andrew v Martin, 218-19; 254 NW 67

Devise and bequest—resulting trust not created. Heirs and devisees are not required to give a consideration for devises and bequests to them; consequently, a resulting trust cannot be impressed on property conveyed to them, on the theory that they are not bona fide purchasers, when the property was not subject to the lien before conveyed.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

Payment by one and title in another. Principle reaffirmed that a husband who takes title to real estate which has been wholly paid for by the wife will be deemed to hold the title in resulting trust for the wife.

State Bk. v Nolan, 201-722; 207 NW 745

Consideration paid by one and deed taken in name of another. Where, upon the purchase of property, the consideration is paid by one, and the legal title is conveyed to another, a resulting trust is thereby raised in favor of the one paying the consideration.

Spring v Spring, 210-1124; 229 NW 147

Warranty deed and contemporaneous trust. A warranty deed which absolutely and unconditionally conveys real estate to the grantee and to "his heirs and assigns forever" will, in equity, be restricted, in its apparently limitless legal effect and operation, to such extent as will bring it into harmony with the terms of a contemporaneously executed instrument of trust covering the same property, which trust the grantee has acquiesced in and agreed to carry out as trustee.

Keck v McKinstry, 206-1121; 221 NW 851

Resulting trust denied—deed from father to son—conduct of parties. In a partition action involving a decedent's property, tried on issues raised by defendant's cross-petition, alleging that another property of decedent, which had been deeded by decedent to one of his sons, should be included in the partition action—in the absence of fraud—such deed therefor will not be set aside on the theory of a resulting trust in favor of the decedent's estate, when there is no evidence that either the grantor or grantee so considered it altho they both lived several years after the deed was made.

Gilligan v Jones, 226-86; 283 NW 434

Wife's funds in husband's realty. A deceased wife's administrator, seeking to impress a resulting trust on her surviving second husband's realty, held by him for more than 30 years, has the burden to prove the trust, not by a mere preponderance, but by clear, satisfactory evidence. Evidence held insufficient where alleged funds of wife came from wife's land, whose value arose largely from husband's improvements thereon, and which funds were turned over by wife to husband, commingled with his money and used to purchase realty, later exchanged for the property upon which a trust impressment is sought.

Keshlear v Banner, 225-471; 280 NW 631

Deed and agreement creating trust. Where a husband conveyed his separate property to wife pursuant to an agreement providing that upon her death property was to go to a granddaughter either by will or deed, and where, after consummation of this transaction, the husband tore up the original copy of the agreement and executed an absolute conveyance of the same property to his wife, held, that the original deed and agreement, which were simultaneously executed, must be construed as one instrument, and that an irrevocable trust was created in favor of the granddaughter since no power of revocation was expressly reserved.

Young v Young-Wishard, 227-431; 288 NW 420

Resulting trust—fraud—elements. The plea that a trust resulted against one who fraudulently obtained the property necessitates proof of representation, reliance thereon, falsity thereof, scienter, deception and injury.

Andrew v Bank, 205-244; 216 NW 551

Resulting trust—surety as cestui que. Where a party, by his promissory note and by the aid of a surety thereon, (1) effects a loan and with the proceeds thereof buys land of an equitable owner who, himself, had not yet paid for the land, and (2) where said borrower and purchaser later loses all interest in said land, the dual facts (1) that the surety was compelled to pay said note, and (2) that said equitable owner employed the money—the proceeds of said loan—in carrying out his contract of purchase, will not enable said surety to establish a resulting trust in said land against said former equitable owner.

Harnagel v Fett, 215-868; 244 NW 704

Banking corporations—making collections. A bank upon making a collection for its implied principal, under authority to “collect and remit”, takes no title to the collected funds, but immediately becomes a trustee thereof and remains such trustee until said funds are paid over to the principal. It follows that such relationship is not affected in the least by the unauthorized act of the bank in issuing and mailing to the principal a certificate of deposit for the amount of the collection.

Andrew v Bank, 217-232; 251 NW 860

Fraudulent conveyance—dower nonexistent. Where a debtor, as grantor, made a conveyance to sister-in-law without consideration in order to escape payment of judgment which he feared would be rendered against him, and where 25 days after settlement of claim for which grantor was being sued she reconveyed without consideration, sister-in-law obtained no beneficial interest in the property. Hence, her husband could not claim a one-third interest in property upon her death, altho he signed deed of reconveyance only as a witness.

Renne v Tumbleson, 227-159; 287 NW 839

Establishing trust to defeat heir's judgment creditors. When a will devised all of testatrix's property to daughter in trust, directing trustee to make a monthly payment to a third party and to transfer a one-fourth interest in the trust estate to each of two grandchildren when they reached a certain age, and providing that daughter should have a one-half interest in the estate during her life only in the event obligations to her judgment creditors were barred or satisfied, such will established a trust, and did not repose entire beneficial interest in daughter. Nor was the trust extinguished by a merger of daughter's legal and equitable estate so that property could be subjected to satisfaction of creditor's judgments, because in equity the doctrine of merger will not be invoked if it would frustrate the testatrix's expressed intentions or if there is some other reason for keeping the estates separate.

Freier v Longnecker, 227-366; 288 NW 444

Voluntary deed to persons entitled to property. When land, which was part of an estate, was purchased by decedent's two sons who paid no cash consideration, but occupied, paying rent to the other heirs, and who later, in order to protect the land from creditors, deeded it to two sisters who did not know of the indebtedness of the brothers, and when the sons made a contract with the sisters at the time of the deed protecting the other heirs in case the land were sold, a creditor of one of the brothers who knew of the rent payments and knew of the deed, but made no objection, could neither have it set aside as a fraudulent conveyance nor have the real estate subjected to a judgment against the debtor-brother, as the deed and contract conveyed the mere legal title to the sisters in trust for the heirs who were the persons entitled to the property.

Lakin v Eittreim, 227-882; 289 NW 433

Evidence—sufficiency. A resulting trust will be established only on testimony which is clear and certain.

Irving v Grimes, 208-298; 225 NW 453

See Kortum v Kortum, 211-729; 234 NW 220

Evidence to establish in order to justify compulsory deed. The court will order an executor to execute a deed to real property, and to the proper person, on proof that the deceased personally owned no interest in the property and was holding the legal title in consequence of a resulting trust; but the evidence must be so explicit and decisive as to leave the existence of no essential fact to conjecture, or to remote and uncertain inference.

In re Moore, 211-804; 232 NW 729

Avoidance of statute of frauds. Parol evidence is competent to show that the titleholder to land has admitted he was to hold such title only until such time as he was reimbursed for money expended on the property, and that such arrangement has been in part carried out.

Neilly v Hennessey, 208-1338; 220 NW 47

Unconditional conveyance—parol evidence. A parol, unexecuted, and nonadmitted trust cannot be ingrafted on an unconditional conveyance in fee of real estate.

Hospers v Watts, 209-1193; 229 NW 844

Parol to prove execution of unenforceable trust. It is true that one claiming to be the absolute owner of land may not, as against the

III RESULTING TRUSTS—concluded

grantee in a conveyance, prove, by parol evidence, that when the conveyance was executed grantee's name was inserted in the conveyance as grantee under an oral agreement that said substituted grantee would hold said land solely and exclusively for said secret grantee, but said parties may show by parol evidence, as against a stranger, that said oral agreement was actually carried out and executed by said parties.

Bates v Zehnpfennig, 220-164; 262 NW 141

Estoppel. A party estops himself from ingrafting a trust on an absolute conveyance of real estate after he has stood by and allowed the grantee to treat the property as his own and to pledge it to grantee's innocent creditors.

Hospers v Watts, 209-1193; 229 NW 844

Waiver of trust relation. Any possible presumption of a resulting trust in a husband who pays for realty conveyed to the wife cannot prevail against the act of the husband, after the death of the wife, in founding an action in behalf of himself and his children on the solemn declaration that he and the children inherited the property from the wife and mother.

Campbell v Humphreys, 202-472; 210 NW 558

IV CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS

Discussion. See 2 ILB 78—Following trust money

Applicability of statute. This statute has no application to constructive or resulting trusts.

Durband v Nicholson, 205-1264; 216 NW 278; 219 NW 318

Constructive trusts solely cognizable in equity. An action to establish and enforce a constructive trust, e.g., an action to recover funds to which plaintiff has equitable title against a defendant who holds the legal title, must, on timely motion by the defendant, be tried as an equitable action, (1) even tho plaintiff disclaims all equitable relief, and prays for a money judgment only, and (2) even tho, under plaintiff's allegation defendant obtained possession of the funds by fraud practiced on a third party, but under circumstances excluding any inference or presumption that he received the funds for the use and benefit of plaintiff.

Markworth v Bank, 212-954; 237 NW 471

Fraud between banks—constructive trust not established. The plaintiff bank, in failing to establish that the defendant bank was guilty of fraudulent conduct in aiding the plaintiff's cashier to conceal a shortage in his accounts, thereby failed to establish any basis for a constructive trust against the assets of the defendant bank for the amount of the shortage, or a basis for requiring the defendant bank to be held to account for the loss.

Community Sav. Bk. v Gaughen, 228- ; 289 NW 727

Constructive trusts—when existent. A constructive trust arises where a conveyance of real estate is without consideration and:

1. It appears that the grantee was not intended to take beneficially, or as a gift; or
2. Where the conveyance is fraud-induced.

This is true irrespective of the statute which renders parol evidence incompetent to establish an unexecuted express trust in real property.

Wellman v Wellman, 206-445; 220 NW 82

Constructive trust—secret intent not to perform condition. A grantee of land who receives the conveyance on the oral condition that the land will be reconveyed to grantor on the happening of a named event, e. g., on return from a trip abroad, and who secretly intends not to comply with said condition, will be deemed in equity a trustee ex maleficio.

Carlson v Smith, 213-231; 236 NW 387; 80 ALR 186

Constructive trust—fraud by grantee. Where grantee obtained title by false assurance that he would hold title as trustee to protect grantor's ownership, and immediately placed a mortgage on the property for his own benefit after obtaining title, a constructive trust was created and grantee became a trustee ex maleficio for benefit of grantor.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Fraud in procuring deed. Where deed containing recital of consideration was obtained by fraud, the grantor is not precluded as a matter of law from showing a constructive trust arising from the fraud, and equity will allow such showing to be made by parol evidence, but such evidence must be clear and satisfactory.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Constructive trusts—fiduciary relation—burden of proof. One who exercises exclusive management of the funds of an aged, sick, infirm, illiterate, inexperienced, unadvised, and mentally dependent person (especially a relative) and assumes a position of trust and confidence toward such person, and thereby acquires from such person, either for himself or for members of his family, a profit and benefit, will be presumed to do so fraudulently and must establish that such profit and benefit was acquired with the full, free, and intelligent consent of such dependent person, and if he fails in such proof he will be held to account for all such benefits.

Burger v Krall, 211-1160; 235 NW 318

Fraudulent purchase of property. An owner of real estate who has been fraudulently induced to convey the same because of the secret intent of the supposedly solvent purchaser not to pay the promissory note given therefor may enforce a trust therein against one who holds the property as security for the pre-existing debt of the fraudulent purchaser. Especially is this true when the security holder had, in legal effect, made himself a party to the fraudulent transaction of the purchaser.

Bogle v Goldsworthy, 202-764; 211 NW 257

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held insufficient to show that a deed was other than what it purported to be, to wit: a voluntary, good-faith gift to grantor's sister, of the land in question, and insufficient to establish any constructive trust therein in favor of other relatives of the grantor.

Redden v Murray, 213-519; 239 NW 129

Cancellation of fraudulently acquired deed. A person who secretly buys up a certificate of execution sale and takes a sheriff's deed in his own name, in violation of his agreement with the judgment defendant to pay off the judgment in question and thereby satisfy his own debt to the judgment defendant, has no standing to contest an action by the latter for the cancellation of said deed.

Swearingen v Neff, 204-1167; 216 NW 621

Constructive trust — evidence — sufficiency. An express trust in real property cannot be legally established by parol, nor may an implied or constructive trust in such property be established except by evidence which is clear, convincing, and satisfactory.

McMains v Tullis, 213-1360; 241 NW 472

Establishing trust by oral agreement—prohibitory statute—inapplicable to constructive trusts. Under the Iowa statute an express trust cannot be established by a parol agreement, but such statute is inapplicable to constructive trusts.

D. M. Terminal v D. M. Union, 52 F 2d, 616

Gifts inter vivos—fiduciaries—donee's burden. The donee of a gift inter vivos, when holding a fiduciary relationship with the donor, has the burden to rebut the presumption that the transaction was fraudulent and voidable, but this does not apply to testamentary gifts. So held where a mother first willed, and later assigned, all her property to one son, in consideration of a contract that he should support her as long as she lived—the result being to disinherit another son.

Reed v Reed, 225-773; 281 NW 444

Property held by administrator. Where trust property in the possession of an administrator is identifiable and not affected by rights of innocent third parties, equity may impress a trust thereon.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

Loss of improperly created trust fund—reimbursement. Where an executor is devised a named sum of money in trust for a named person, and where the executor assumes to set aside or hold certain bank stock as said trust fund, which stock becomes worthless, by the failure of the bank, the estate must make good the resulting loss (or pro rata if the estate is insufficient to pay all legacies) less any payments made to the cestui que trust.

Mills v Manchester, 213-95; 237 NW 228; 238 NW 718

Insolvent estates—unallowable payment in full. The act of the administratrix of an insolvent estate in applying estate funds to the full payment of a debt, which is the personal obligation of both the deceased and the administratrix, is fundamentally unallowable. It follows that the creditor, by receiving such payment, becomes a trustee of the fund for the use and benefit of the estate, especially when he knew that the estate was insolvent.

Reason: The administratrix could not legally make such payment, even on an authorizing order of the court.

Andrew v Bank, 217-69; 251 NW 23

Recovery of funds expended without order of court. Guardianship funds expended by a guardian in the purchase of property without an authorizing order of court may be recovered from the seller who had knowledge of the trust nature of the funds when he received them.

Kowalke v Evernham, 210-1270; 232 NW 670

Collections by agent. An agent necessarily holds collections in trust for his principal, and an assignee of the agent for the benefit of creditors has no title or interest thereto.

Second N. Bank v Millbrandt, 211-1299; 235 NW 577

V SPENDTHRIFT TRUSTS

Discussion. See 4 ILB 139—Spendthrift trusts; 9 ILB 305—Spendthrift trusts; 11 ILR 386—Words necessary to create Spendthrift trusts—general requirements. If the terms of a trust provide that the income be applied to the cestui at the discretion of the trustee, or the income is payable to the cestui at his demand, or the trust is for a special purpose, or in general where no debt is owed the cestui by the trustee, the creditors of the cestui cannot appropriate the benefaction.

Standard Chemical v Weed, 226-882; 285 NW 175

Spendthrift trust—intent to create must be in instrument. The intention to create a spendthrift trust must be found on the face of the instrument creating the trust and cannot be found from the circumstance that the

V SPENDTHRIFT TRUSTS—concluded
 cestui was a spendthrift and insolvent when a will creating such trust was executed.

Standard Chemical v Weed, 226-882; 285 NW 175

Spendthrift trust—beneficiary's quitclaim. A trust in a deed vesting in grantees as trustees the absolute control of the property from which two beneficiaries receive the income until termination of the trust at a future time, if said beneficiaries are free from debt, is a spendthrift trust and a quitclaim grantee from one beneficiary secures thereby no present interest in the property.

Beemer v Challas, 224-411; 276 NW 60

Trusts which vest no inheritable interest in beneficiary. A testator who bequeaths directly to his wife a specific fund in trust, with directions to the wife to pay to their daughter for the latter's "care and support" such part of the accruing interest on said fund as the wife "shall deem advisable", and such part of the principal of said fund as the wife "shall deem advisable", will not be deemed to have intended to vest in the daughter any interest in said fund which would survive her death, it appearing as side lights that the daughter was debt-ridden, was possessed of an impecunious, inefficient, and likewise debt-ridden husband, and that the testator, prior to his death, had supported said daughter.

In re Bunting, 220-186; 261 NW 922

No spendthrift trust created—creditor's rights in. When the testator's will created a trust for his son, providing that the proceeds of the trust be paid to the son "yearly or oftener if collected for shorter periods," and contained no words showing an intent to place the trust income beyond the reach of the son's creditors, a debt due the son from the trustee was created, which was a vested right which could be assigned and was subject to claims of creditors.

Standard Chemical v Weed, 226-882; 285 NW 175

Judgment creditor of devisee-heir. When a father's will left property to a son and heir in trust so that it could not be subjected to the son's debts, a judgment creditor of the son was an interested person who had a beneficial and pecuniary interest in the estate of the deceased and in the son's share therein, of which he would be deprived to his prejudice if the will were probated.

In re Duffy, 228- ; 292 NW 165

Termination or removal of trustee by court—evidence insufficient. Evidence sustained trial court's refusal to terminate a spendthrift trust, or discharge trustees, upon application of beneficiary who alleged mismanagement and lack of cooperation on part of trustees, and also that beneficiary was not a spendthrift and that trust was not accomplishing purpose intended.

In re Sexauer's Trust, (NOR); 287 NW 247

VI TRUSTS ON PERSONALTY GENERALLY

Trust funds—nonpreference. The title to a testamentary fund perpetually bequeathed as a saving deposit to a bank as trustee with direction to pay the interest thereon to a church organization, for the sole purpose of repairing the church, necessarily passes to the trustee, and becomes a general deposit, with result that the fund is not entitled to an equitable preference in payment when the bank becomes insolvent.

Andrew v Presbyterian Church, 216-1134; 249 NW 274

Wrongful payment of dividends. Stockholders who, while their corporation is solvent and so remains, in good faith receive dividends which, unbeknown to them, are paid from corporate capital and not from corporate profits or surplus, are not, in case the corporation subsequently becomes insolvent, liable, in an action at law, to corporate creditors for the amount of such dividends. And it is quite immaterial whether the claimed liability is predicated on the statutes (§§8377, 8378, C., '35) or on and under the so-called corporate "trust fund" doctrine of the common law.

Bates v Brooks, 222-1128; 270 NW 867; 109 ALR 1371

Bank deposit—evidence to establish. In action to establish trust in funds in bank, represented by certificate of deposit which defendants claimed as a gift, evidence held to warrant decree for plaintiff.

Wier v Davidson, (NOR); 242 NW 37

Fatal delay in enforcing unknown trust. A trust fund, created without the knowledge of the cestui que trust, in the form of a bank deposit in a national bank and carried on the books of the bank for many years and then dropped, may not, after the bank has become insolvent, a receiver appointed, its affairs liquidated, and its charter surrendered and canceled, be enforced against a bank which took over certain assets of the old insolvent bank, and assumed certain of its obligations, not including, however, the trust fund in question.

Short v Bank, 210-1202; 232 NW 507

Rent—lien—impression of trust. A landlord may, against one who has no lien thereon, impress a trust upon the proceeds of property on which he—the landlord—had a lien for rent.

Federal Bank v Wylie, 207-816; 221 NW 831

Wrongful sale of mortgaged property—dissipation of proceeds. It being conceded, arguendo, that, when mortgaged personal property is sold without the consent of the mortgagee, and the proceeds are deposited in a bank to the mortgagor's credit, said proceeds constitute a trust fund, of which the mortgagee is the beneficiary, yet such trust is dissolved if such proceeds are wholly dissipated in the payment of the debts of the bank.

Andrew v Bank, 209-273; 228 NW 12

Stock held in trust—double assessment liability—form of action to enforce. Under decree of an Iowa equity court assessing statutory liability on stock in a closed Iowa bank against a national bank as trustee under an identified trust, the bank does not become personally liable, under laws of Iowa, for such assessment. Neither could the receiver of the Iowa closed bank, in a common-law action, charge the trust property with such statutory liability.

Bates v Bank, 101 F 2d, 278

Trusteed special assessment certificates—pro rata distribution. Where a corporation, dealing in securities, owns a group of special assessment certificates for public improvements, and places them in a trust, against which trust are sold certain "ownership certificates" issued in numerical order as representing an interest therein and redeemable in their numerical order, and when, subsequently, it becomes apparent that the trust is insolvent, an application by the trustee to the court for instructions as to whether payment was to be made in numerical order or pro rata was properly decided for the pro rata method on the equity rule of equality and proportionate distribution of the remaining assets.

Iowa-Des Moines Bank v Dietz, 225-566; 281 NW 134

Improper allowance of attorney fees. A trust created by a legislative appropriation act solely for the "education, care, and keep" of a designated person may not be depleted by the allowance by the court of attorney fees for services rendered not in the administration of the trust, but in inducing the legislature to make the appropriation.

In re Gage, 208-603; 226 NW 64

VII TRUSTEES GENERALLY

Powers of trustee. Principle reaffirmed that the power of a trustee to dispose of trust property is limited to the powers granted in the trust agreement.

In re Barnett, 217-187; 251 NW 59

Dry trust—duty of trustee. A trustee who holds the naked legal title to property under a trust which has become legally dry should convey to the beneficial owners.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

Trust rendered dry by conveyance. A testamentary, nonspendthrift trust in real estate and in the income thereof, which imposes no limitation or prohibition on the right of the beneficiaries to convey, is rendered passive by the conveyance by all the beneficiaries of their respective interests; and this is true where the beneficiaries have the right, under the will, to compel the trustee, on petition to him, to sell the subject-matter of the trust and to divide the proceeds among themselves.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

Defending dry trust. A trustee may not employ attorneys at the expense of the estate to defend a trust which has become legally dry.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

Death of trustee—title of new appointee. A declaration of trust which makes a conveyance of the real estate to the trustee, and which reserved the right in the trustor to appoint a new trustee on the death of the original trustee, necessarily has the effect of casting upon such new trustee the identical title formerly held by the said original trustee.

Keck v McKinstry, 206-1121; 221 NW 851

Consent to change in trustee. An owner of land under trust deed to secure a bond issue, who unqualifiedly consents to a change of trustee may not thereafter claim that the new trustee is not the proper party to foreclose the trust deed, and especially when the bondholders unanimously approve of such change.

Central Bk. v Benson, 209-1176; 229 NW 691

Receivership for insolvent trustee creates vacancy—power to fill. A judicial finding that a banking institution is insolvent and the appointment of a receiver to liquidate its affairs, ipso facto, (1) transfer, to the custody of the law, trust property held by said insolvent as a duly appointed testamentary trustee, (2) deprive said insolvent trustee of power further to act in said trusteeship, and (3) necessarily create a vacancy in the office of said trust,—which vacancy the probate court has legal power to fill by appointing a successor in trust, (1) on the sworn application therefor supplemented by the professional statement of counsel, (2) at an ex parte hearing and without notice to interested parties, and (3) without any formal proceedings whatever for the termination of said former trusteeship; and especially is this true when said former trustee, formally and by its conduct, abandons its said trusteeship and all right and interest therein.

In re Carson, 221-367; 265 NW 648

Final report by trustee after receivership. The filing of a final report by a trust company as trustee of an estate after the company had gone into receivership and could no longer perform any duty as active trustee, was not an act in administering the trust, but was the performance of its duty to make such final report upon its removal as trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Right to collect collateral. Trust deed held unequivocally to authorize the pledgor of collateral as security for a bond issue, to collect the principal and interest maturing on the collateral so long as the pledgor was not sixty days in default in himself paying the maturing principal and interest of the bonds, in which latter case the right and duty to collect devolved on the trustee.

Walker v Howell, 209-823; 226 NW 85

Trustee by contract—jurisdiction of court. A trustee who is such by contract between himself and the beneficiaries, but who applies to the district court for formal appointment, who is so appointed, who qualifies as such trustee under order of court, and who, in compliance with a prayer therefor, is authorized to take possession of, and manage the property in question under "orders of court", is subject to the jurisdiction of the court in the matter of reports, the rejection thereof, and final accounting.

In re Skinner, 215-1021; 247 NW 484

Trustees—control and removal by court. Trustees are subject to control or removal by the court.

In re Sexauer's Trust, (NOR); 287 NW 247

Execution of trust—trustees (?) or receiver (?). A court of equity may not terminate or violate a trust agreement between the issuer of bonds and trustees to the effect that the former will transfer to the latter securities for the benefit of bondholders, and that if the issuer defaults in the payment of interest on, or principal of, the bonds, the trustees, on notice from the unpaid bondholders, shall liquidate said securities and apply the proceeds to the payment of the bonds. It follows that, if the issuer of the bonds becomes insolvent, the trustees, in the absence of any counterwish of the bondholders, have a right, superior to that of the receiver, to liquidate the securities, the securities being less than the outstanding bonds; and this is true even tho the securities in question are not actually transferred to the trustees but only delivered to them.

In re Trusteeship, 214-884; 241 NW 308

Trustee for beneficiaries. The administrator is a trustee for the benefit of persons interested in the estate.

Goodman v Bauer, 225-1086; 281 NW 448

Right of trustee-plaintiff. When a plaintiff is a trustee with power simply to receive the amount of the recovery and deliver the same to the real party in interest, the action will be determined solely on the basis of the rights of such real party.

Ronna v Bank, 213-855; 236 NW 68

No failure for want of trustee. A trust estate will not fail for want of a trustee. So held where the bank, named as trustee in a will, failed.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Trustee—disqualification—effect. Equity will not permit a trust to fail simply because a particular trustee is disqualified from acting.

State v Cas. Co., 206-988; 221 NW 585

Management of trust property—compensation and attorney fees. The compensation of a trustee and of his attorney necessarily rests quite largely in the discretion of the trial court.

Turner v Ryan, 223-191; 272 NW 60; 110 ALR 554

Rights and liabilities as to third persons—imputation of notice or knowledge. A party who, as managing officer of a company, transfers the company's mortgage-secured promissory notes, and orally agrees that the indorsee shall have priority over other prior maturing notes secured by the same mortgage, must be held to have knowledge of said agreement when said prior maturing notes are subsequently transferred by the company to him as trustee of an estate.

White v Gutshall, 213-401; 238 NW 909

Commingle funds. Where trust funds are deposited in the individual account of the trustee, the cestui que trust has the right to elect to sue the trustee for the conversion, or he may pursue the trust funds and establish a preference thereto if they can be traced.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Intermingled trust and private funds—presumption. Upon the insolvency of a trustee, it cannot be presumed that trust funds were preserved in the cash and loan notes taken over by the receiver when the proof shows (1) that the trustee received trust funds in the form of checks and, instead of cashing the checks and holding the cash for application on certain bonds as was his sole duty, he converted said checks by indorsing and depositing them in a bank in his personally owned deposit account, and thereby promiscuously intermingled both classes of funds, (2) that, from time to time, he drew checks against said intermingled funds for the purpose of carrying on his own private loan business, or so drew checks and placed the proceeds in his cash drawer for the same purpose, (3) that during all said time said private business was carried on at a heavy loss, and (4) that at one time after the trust funds were received the trustee's deposit account was materially overdrawn.

Andrew v Trust Co., 217-464; 250 NW 177

Unauthorized and unallowable investments. The court may charge a court-appointed trustee with the amount of an investment purchased by the trustee from himself at a profit and without an authorizing order of court.

In re Siberts, 216-336; 249 NW 196

Wrongful purchase of securities by trustee. An objection to the final report of a trust company acting as trustee and executor was sufficient in alleging that securities were purchased without the approval of the court, altho the date of each purchase was not stated, and it was not stated whether the purchases were made as executor or trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Wrongful retention of securities by trustee. An objection to the final report of a trust company acting as trustee and executor of an estate is sufficient in alleging generally that the trust company wrongfully retained securities which it should have disposed of altho it does not state on what dates the securities should have been sold and what their values were on those dates.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Mortgages—authority of trustee. Trust agreement construed and held to authorize the trustee to execute mortgages and to bind the beneficiaries of the trust for the payment thereof.

Daries v Hart, 214-1312; 243 NW 527

Consideration—assignment to trustee. A written assignment of a fractional interest in a life insurance policy to a trustee, made for the purpose of protecting the attorneys for the agreed value of their services in prosecuting an action on the policy, is supported by adequate consideration, especially when it appears that the trustee was to receive compensation for his services.

Welch v Taylor, 218-209; 254 NW 299

Escrow delivery—life estate reserved. Delivery of a deed to a trustee for redelivery to grantee after grantor's death reserves a life estate in the grantor, with title immediately passing to grantee, but with his right to possession and enjoyment of land therein conveyed postponed until grantor's death.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Fiduciary relationship. A person is said to receive money in a fiduciary capacity when it does not belong to him or for his benefit, but is received for the benefit of another person to whom the receiver stands in a relation implying great confidence and trust on the one part and a high degree of good faith on the other.

Vertman v Drayton, 223-380; 272 NW 438

Fiduciary relationship—when not presumed. Principle reaffirmed that no presumption of fiduciary relationship arises from the fact of kinship. Evidence held quite insufficient to invalidate a deed on the ground of undue influence.

Craig v Craig, 222-783; 269 NW 743

Purchase of corporate stock by officers—fiduciary relation. Principle recognized that an officer or director of a corporation occupies a fiduciary relation towards a fellow stockholder in the purchase of the latter's corporate stock and is under duty to disclose to the selling stockholder evidence which has bearing on the value of the stock and which has come to him as such officer or director. Held, principle not applicable under certain facts.

Humphrey v Baron, 223-735; 273 NW 856

Fiduciary relationship—required proof. In an action to set aside a trust agreement executed to a son and attorney by plaintiff, evidence held to support decree dismissing plaintiff's petition. The existence of a confidential relationship or facts giving rise thereto must be proved before doctrine of fiduciary relationship can be applied—the mere relationship of parent and child does not create fiduciary relationship.

Hatt v Hatt, (NOR); 265 NW 640

Order fixing fiduciary's liability. An unappealed order of court, entered on the objections of a beneficiary to the report of a fiduciary, fixing the amount of liability of the fiduciary, is conclusive (in the absence of fraud) on the surety and those claiming under said surety.

Baker v Baker, 220-1216; 264 NW 116; 103 ALR 995

Nonpermissible purchase by trustee. A trustee of property may not sell trust property to himself, nor to a co-trustee, nor to his or her spouse, without the consent of all beneficiaries of the trust, nor may the court authorize or approve such a sale without the consent of said beneficiaries.

In re Holley, 211-77; 232 NW 807

Trustee buying property from himself. The act of a trustee in transferring his individually owned bonds and mortgages to himself as trustee and charging the trust funds with the amount thereof is wholly void even when authorized by an order of court. A fortiori is this true when the order was not obtained in good faith.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Conflict of duty with personal interest—fiduciary's burden. A fiduciary may not appropriate funds to himself without consent of the beneficiary having full knowledge of the facts and any act by the fiduciary wherein personal interest and duty conflict is voidable at the mere option of the beneficiary. Fiduciary has

State v Exline Fuel Co., 224-466; 276 NW 41

Presumption of nondissipation. Principle reaffirmed that there is no presumption that a trust fund has been invested by the trustee in property other than cash.

Poweshiek County v Bank, 209-467; 228 NW 32; 82 ALR 39

Preservation—presumption. Trust funds in the form of cash are presumptively preserved in the cash balance which passed into the hands of the receiver for the insolvent trustee.

Leach v Bank, 204-1083; 216 NW 748; 65 ALR 679

Trust fund—presumption. The presumption that a trustee has preserved a cash trust fund in his cash balance applies solely to the lowest cash balance subsequent to the creation of the trust and prior to insolvency.

Leach v Bank, 205-114; 213 NW 414; 217 NW 437; 56 ALR 801

Augmentation of assets—nonpresumption. An equitable preference in the payment of trust funds may not be decreed against the receiver of the insolvent trustee when there is no evidence whatever as to the property taken over by the receiver except the concession by the receiver that he had "assets sufficient to pay" the claim if the court decreed an equitable preference in payment.

Andrew v Bank, 205-237; 216 NW 12

Trust to secure bond issue—withdrawal of securities. Trust agreement under which mortgage securities were deposited with a trustee as security for the payment of a bond issue construed, and held not to authorize, expressly or impliedly, the withdrawal of securities from the trustee and the substitution of other securities in lieu of the ones withdrawn.

Richardson v Union Co., 210-346; 228 NW 103

Impressing unpaid warrant on excess assessment—necessary parties. Where two counties, by contract between both boards of supervisors and the contractors, issued warrants for construction of an intercounty drain and one county had a balance remaining from its assessments after paying all its drainage warrants but the other county after exhausting all funds from its assessments still owed outstanding unpaid warrants, an action in equity by an assignee of one of the unpaid warrants of the latter county to impress a trust for the amount of his warrant on the excess balance of the assessment in the former county, cannot be maintained against the former county alone because the other unpaid warrant holders and the landowners who paid the excess assessment are necessary parties.

Straub v Board, 223-1099; 274 NW 84

Substitution of securities. A trustee who, in violation of a trust agreement, permits valuable securities (pledged with him as security for payment of bonds issued by the trustor) to be withdrawn by the trustor and other securities to be substituted for the ones withdrawn has the burden of proof to show that the substituted securities were of the actual value of the securities withdrawn.

Richardson v Union Co., 210-346; 228 NW 103

Withdrawal and substitution of securities—liability of trustee. A trustee who, in violation of the trust agreement, permits valuable securities to be withdrawn from him by the trustor, and worthless securities to be substituted by the trustor, in lieu of the securities withdrawn, thereby fraudulently breaches his trust, and renders himself personally liable for the damages resulting to bondholders for whose benefit and security the trustee was holding said securities.

Richardson v Union Co., 210-346; 228 NW 103

Objections to trustee's final report—failure to dispose of securities. Objections to the final report of a trust company are not subject to a motion for more specific statement when officers of the trust company have equal or better knowledge of the facts called for by the motion, especially where the motion calls for evidentiary facts. Held, also, that trustee was charged with maladministration and not fraud.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Testamentary trustee's conduct. The intentions of a testator must be ascertained from the terms of the will and such intentions must prevail. In a matter of doubtful construction, circumstances surrounding the execution of the will may be shown to aid in determining what the testator meant by the language used. The conduct of a testamentary trustee is not such a circumstance and is therefore not a material, evidentiary matter in determining testator's intention.

Freier v Longnecker, 227-366; 288 NW 444

Reinstating trust after wrongful dissipation. A trust which has been inadvertently or wrongfully converted and dissipated by the trustee to his own use is effectually reinstated by the subsequent act of the trustee, while solvent, in repurchasing with his own funds the subject-matter of said trust, with the specific intent to effect such reinstatement.

Leach v Bank, 202-887; 211 NW 529

Accounting by trustee—bank inducing lien release. Where a bank holds a chattel mortgage on horses, executed as part of an arrangement with the mechanic lienholder for payment of his lien, the release of which was induced by the execution of the chattel mortgage, a sale of the horses by the bank, under a subsequent chattel mortgage, would constitute the bank a trustee required to account to the mechanic lienholder, but, without proof that the horses sold were the same ones in both mortgages, no showing is made of trust funds to be accounted for.

Shimp Bros. v Place, 225-1098; 281 NW 471

Reports—justification—burden of proof. A trustee has the burden to justify his own reports.

In re Bartholomew, 207-109; 222 NW 356

Reports — disapproval — jurisdiction. A trustee who, in his acceptance of a nontestamentary trust, agrees to report annually to the district court, and does so report, and who invokes the jurisdiction of the probate court to pass upon his reports, may not thereafter question the power and right of such court to act upon such reports.

In re Bartholomew, 207-109; 222 NW 356

Right to impeach action of trustee. The act of a trustee in individually buying in property at tax sale and receiving a tax sale certificate when a mortgage on the property constituted part of the trust fund is unimpeachable except by the cestui que trust. In other words, the subsequent purchaser of said property at foreclosure sale may not impeach such act, especially when such purchaser had both actual and constructive knowledge when he purchased that the taxes had not been paid.

Eyres v Koehler, 212-1290; 237 NW 351

Fraud of trustee—affirmance or disaffirmance. It is of no concern to a surety on the bond of a trustee whether the beneficiary affirms or disaffirms the fraudulent conduct of the trustee.

Dodds v Cartwright, 209-835; 226 NW 918

Fraudulent substitution of pledged securities—effect on purchaser. The plea that the holder of bonds bought with full knowledge of the nature of the securities held by a trustee for the payment of the bonds can avail nothing when the holder, in purchasing, had no knowledge that said securities were inadequate because the trustee fraudulently permitted the trustor fraudulently to withdraw valuable securities and to substitute worthless securities with the trustee.

Richardson v Union Co., 210-346; 228 NW 103

Misconduct—attempted exemption—effect. A trustee may not, by any provision in a trust agreement, exempt himself from the consequences of his own fraudulent conduct, nor escape responsibility for an act done by an employee when the act was the trustee's own act, nor escape like responsibility for the doing of a prohibited act on the plea that he simply exercised a mistaken judgment.

Richardson v Union Co., 210-346; 228 NW 103

Maladministration by trustee—definiteness of allegation. When the final report of an executor and trustee of an estate was objected to on the ground of maladministration, the objection was sufficient tho it did not state whether the alleged wrongful acts were performed while the trustee was acting in its official capacity as executor or trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Self-enrichment of trustee—insufficient evidence of misconduct. A testamentary trustee of a coal mining company who, personally or in connection with employees of the company, with his own funds, buys up lands or mining rights in lands and leases to the company the right to mine coal from said lands under a royalty, will not be compelled, long afterward, to account to the legatees and devisees for the royalties so received and for salary drawn during said time (1) when the trustee had been vested, under the will, with substantially the same power over the business as the deceased possessed when living, (2) when the policy of operating on leases was but a continuance of the life-long policy of the deceased, (3) when the royalties paid were the royalties ordinarily and customarily paid in said locality, and (4) when the existence and history of said transactions were carried openly on the books of the company, and were either personally known or capable of being easily known by all the legatees and devisees.

Evans v Hynes, 212-1; 232 NW 72

Transfer of trust funds—recovery. Funds transferred from one trust fund by the trustee thereof to another trust fund of which he is also the trustee, in order to make good a wrongful shortage in the latter fund, may be recovered by the beneficiary of the wrongfully depleted fund.

Burger v Krall, 211-1160; 235 NW 318

Burkey v Bank, (NOR); 256 NW 300

In re Siberts, 216-336; 249 NW 196

Garnishment of trustee and trust funds. A trustee cannot be made a garnishee by a creditor of the cestui que trust when, at the time of garnishment, the net income only of the trust is (under the terms of the trust) payable to the cestui, and then only on his optional demand, and when such net income was not only then undeterminable, but the cestui had not exercised his option to demand it.

Darling v Dodge, 200-1303; 206 NW 266

Dodds v Cartwright, 209-835; 226 NW 918

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Wife's deed for husband's debt—cancellation—consideration—estoppel. Wife who was not illiterate and who deeded her land in payment of husband's notes, and who, by placing deed in husband's hands, clothed him with apparent authority to deliver the deed, thereby inducing creditors to surrender other land owned by the husband, is estopped from questioning the validity of the deed. The consideration to wife was advantage to husband and detriment to creditors.

Allen v Hume, 227-1224; 290 NW 687

Reservation of homestead right—evidence. Where a form book used for the recordation of warranty deeds in the office of the recorder of deeds contained a printed relinquishment by a spouse of "dower and homestead", the fact that in a certain instance the word "homestead" has been erased furnishes no evidence that the grantors had orally reserved a homestead right in the conveyed property.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Elements of conveyance—delivery. All the elements for conveying the title to land were established by evidence that when a warranty deed was given to prevent an expected judgment against the grantor from becoming a lien on the land, with a lease back to the grantor to terminate at the death of himself and his wife, it was signed by all parties in the presence of the others, a copy was given the grantee, it was acknowledged by a notary and given him to record and keep, and three years later the grantor affixed a federal stamp to the deed and re-recorded it.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Forfeiture of insurance policy for breach of condition subsequent—change of title. A conveyance, without consideration, by a husband to his wife of a stock of insured goods with the intent to place the goods beyond the reach of his apprehended creditors, without any actual change of possession or use taking place, followed later by a reconveyance, without consideration, by the wife to the husband, constitutes no such change in the interest or title of the insured as will void the policy, the wife never having had any financial interest in the property.

McVay v Ins. Co., 218-402; 252 NW 548

"One dollar and other valuable consideration"—sufficiency. A deed from husband to wife, executed two years prior to the rendition of a judgment against the husband and which deed recites a consideration of "one dollar and other valuable consideration", is not fraudulent as against such judgment creditor of the grantor-husband, when it is shown that the "other consideration" consisted of $3,000 actually paid by the wife.

Donovan v White, 224-138; 275 NW 889

10052 Covenants—spouse not bound.

Legal cancellation of covenant of seizin. A grantee of land, in legal effect, cancels the covenant of seizin contained in his deed, and likewise cancels an indemnity bond which is tantamount to a covenant of seizin, by reconveying the land to the grantor with covenant of seizin.

Duke v Tyler, 209-1345; 230 NW 319

Restrictions as to use—omission from deed—effect. The grantee of a lot who takes by quitclaim deed which contains no restrictions as to the use of the property is, nevertheless, bound by restrictions as to the use of the property contained in the deed to his grantor and in substantially all other deeds to lots in the addition, it appearing that the addition in question was publicly and notoriously platted as a restricted residence area.

Shuler v Gravel Co., 203-134; 209 NW 731

Signature of spouse to mortgage only—effect. The defeasance clause in a real estate mortgage on the lands of a husband, to the effect that the mortgage shall be void if the signers shall "pay or cause to be paid" the secured notes, does not, in and of itself, impose personal liability on the wife who is one of the signers to the mortgage.

Fairfax Bank v Coligan, 211-670; 234 NW 537

"Mortgagor" defined. A "mortgagor" is he who holds title to the premises mortgaged. A wife who joins in a mortgage of the husband's land for the purpose of releasing her distributive share is not a mortgagor.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Covenant to pay taxes—nonduty of wife to pay. A wife who, for the purpose of releasing her distributive share, joins with her husband in a mortgage of the husband's lands is not bound by the husband's covenants or legal obligation to pay future accruing taxes on the land.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Covenant for insurance does not run with land. A covenant by a mortgagor to keep the buildings on the mortgaged premises insured for the benefit of the mortgagee is entirely personal in character, and does not run with the land. Where a mortgagor obtained a policy payable to himself, and later sold the premises to one who did not assume the mortgage, and assigned the policy, held that the grantee, upon discovering that the policy had lapsed because of nonpayment of premiums, might reinstate the policy by paying the premiums, and henceforth carry the policy solely for his own benefit, and free from any equitable claim of the mortgagee.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Duroe, 212-795; 237 NW 319

10053 Title and possession of mortgagor.

Rights to possession and rents. A grantee of land who takes possession under his deed at a time when the purchaser under an outstanding, unforfeited bond-for-a-deed contract of sale of the land is entitled to possession, cannot be deemed a "mortgagee in possession", and must account to said purchaser or to his grantees for rents.

Harrington v Feddersen, 208-564; 226 NW 110; 66 ALR 59

Mortgagee in possession. A mortgagee who, under an agreement with the mortgagor, takes possession of the mortgaged premises, and rents the land and applies the rents in accordance with the agreement, must be deemed a mortgagee in possession.

Richardson v Rusk, 215-470; 245 NW 770

Right of mortgagee to possession. A general provision in a real estate mortgage that the mortgagee may, for any default of the mortgagor, declare the entire debt due, and thereupon "shall be entitled to the immediate possession of said premises and to the appointment of a receiver", does not contemplate or authorize any possession of the premises by the mortgagee except a possession obtained by a foreclosure and by the appointment of a receiver thereunder.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v Stevenson, 215-1114; 245 NW 434

Andrew v Haag, 215-282; 245 NW 436

Transfer to mortgagee—nonmerger of lien. A mortgagee who, subsequent to the execution of his mortgage, acquires the fee title to the mortgaged land does not thereby merge the lien of the mortgage into the fee when such was not his intention and when such merger would be detrimental to his interest.

Andrew v Woods, 217-453; 252 NW 112

Quitclaim to avoid foreclosure—effect of existing junior liens—insurance unaffected. A mortgagee's status as such, as affecting his rights under a fire insurance policy, is not lost by merger when he takes a quitclaim deed from mortgagor agreeing not to foreclose if no junior liens exist against the property, when thereafter it is found that such liens do exist whose presence would cause a merger to be against the interest and inconsistent with the intention of the mortgagee.

Guaranty Ins. v Farmers Assn., 224-1207; 278 NW 913

10054 Tenancy in common.

Discussion. See 12 ILR 415—Estates by entirety

Estate by entirety. The common-law estate by entirety has not been recognized in this state.

Fay v Smiley, 201-1290; 207 NW 369

Conveyance by husband to wife and himself. A conveyance of land by a husband to his wife and to himself creates a tenancy in common.

Fay v Smiley, 201-1290; 207 NW 369

Conveyances — statutory presumption. Conveyances of land to two grantees in their own right create a tenancy in common (no contrary intent appearing in the conveyance) irrespective of the legal terms privately employed by the grantees in describing their relation to the property.

Conlee v Conlee, 222-561; 269 NW 259

Partners as tenants in common. Principle reaffirmed that the legal title to partnership realty is held by the partners as tenants in common.

Bankers Trust v Knee, 222-988; 270 NW 438

Surviving spouse and children. Upon the death of the owner of land, the surviving spouse and children become tenants in common of said land.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Joint tenancy—validity. Two or more persons may validly orally agree that their accumulations of real and personal property shall be held and owned jointly, and that, upon the death of one of the parties, the property shall pass to the survivors, and that the final survivor shall take the property absolutely.

Stonewall v Danielson, 204-1367; 217 NW 456

Possession of tenant possession of landlord. The possession of a tenant is the possession of the landlord, and is notice of the rights of the landlord.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

Mutual liabilities—contribution for necessary expenditures. A tenant in common is entitled to contribution from his co-tenant for expenditures absolutely necessary for the benefit and preservation of the common property. So held where one tenant paid off a mortgage.

Yagge v Tyler, 225-352; 280 NW 559

Action for partition—allowance to co-tenant for improvements. A co-tenant who, in good faith, makes valuable and beneficial improvements upon the common property, even without the knowledge or consent of the other co-tenant, will, on final decree in partition, be protected to the extent which the improvements have enhanced the sale value of the land.

Nelson v Pratt, 212-441; 230 NW 324; 236 NW 386

Paying mortgage to protect undivided interest—not gift to co-tenant. Payment, by a mother, of a mortgage on property she holds as a tenant in common with her adopted son, held to be for the preservation and protection of her share in the property, when otherwise unexplained.

Yagge v Tyler, 225-352; 280 NW 559

Widow preserving unadministered estate—contribution from co-tenant — nonestoppel. Where an adopted son and the widow are tenants in common in a deceased husband's estate, the fact that the widow did not open administration, no showing being made that she administered de son tort, does not estop her executor from claiming contribution from the adopted son for payments made by the widow to preserve the common property.

Yagge v Tyler, 225-352; 280 NW 559

Joint tenancy not favored—words creating strictly construed. The rule of joint tenancy with right of survivorship is not favored in public policy, and the mere inclusion of the words in a deed "Said real estate being taken jointly" will not be sufficient to establish a joint tenancy, especially when followed by words tending to negative such assumption, such as, "to the grantees, their assigns, heirs, and devisees forever".

Albright v Winey, 226-222; 284 NW 86

Ouster of all tenants by superior title—effect. Principle reaffirmed that after tenants in common are all ousted by a superior title, e. g., a tax deed, one who was such former tenant in common may buy in the superior title exclusively for his own benefit.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Accounting—division of receipts. When it happens that only one of two joint, equal, equitable owners of real estate is personally obligated on the contract for a deed under which the land is held, it is quite manifest that the law cannot presume, without supporting evidence, that forfeited payments received by said parties as the result of a futile attempt at sale of said premises, belong wholly to said non-obligated party; and equally manifest that the law cannot, on such circumstances, rear a so-called quasi contract to the same effect, in the absence of like evidence.

In re Kelly, 221-1067; 267 NW 667

Highway assessment — tenants in common. Jurisdiction to establish an assessment district as to only one of two tenants in common does not embrace jurisdiction to levy an assessment against the farm as a whole.

In re Road Dist., 213-988; 238 NW 66

Sale—redemption by co-tenant. One who, during the period for redemption from mortgage foreclosure and sale en masse, purchases by quitclaim the undivided interests in the land of a part of the personal judgment defendants, can redeem only by paying the full amount of the sheriff's certificate of purchase, plus interest and costs, the remedy of such redemptioner being to enforce contribution from his co-tenants.

Kupper v Schlegel, 207-1248; 224 NW 813

Contribution for taxes, interest, repairs, and tiling. A surviving mother, in partition of lands left by the deceased husband, is entitled to proper contribution from the children for money paid by her for taxes, interest on mortgages, and necessary repairs, but not (under certain facts) for tiling of the land.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

Accrual of right of action—contribution by co-tenant. The cause of action in favor of one tenant in common against his co-tenant for contribution for the outlay in discharging an incumbrance on the common property accrues instantly upon payment of the incumbrance and is barred in five years.

Lawrence v Melvin, 202-866; 211 NW 440

Accounting—limitation of action. Between tenants in common, the statute of limitation does not commence to run on a claim of one of the tenants for the amount individually paid by him on a mortgage on the common property, until there has been a demand for an accounting.

10055 Co-tenant liable for rent.

Purchase of outstanding lease, etc. One of several tenants in common of the fee to land who, on his own behalf, purchases of a lessee both an outstanding long-time lease on the said land and the building thereon, erected and owned by the lessee under said lease, may not enforce contribution from his co-tenants for his outlay; nor may said co-tenants legally demand the right to make contribution to the purchasing tenant and become tenants in common of the building.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

Purchase by tenant of undivided interest. A lessee who exercises his option under the lease to buy an undivided half of the leased premises does not cease to be the tenant of the lessor as to the undivided interest retained by the lessor, and after the purchase, such tenant remains liable under the lease to the lessor for one half of the originally reserved rent.

Schick v Realty Co., 200-997; 205 NW 782

Nonduty to account for rents. A surviving wife is under no legal obligation, in partition proceedings, to account to her children for the rent of their shares of the land left by the deceased husband and father, when, upon the death of the latter, the wife and children continued to jointly occupy and farm the land in the usual way, and to apply the resulting profits and products to their joint maintenance and education.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

10057 Vendor's lien.

ANALYSIS

- I NATURE OF LIEN
- II PRIORITY
- III LOSS OR WAIVER OF LIEN

Foreclosure of vendee's rights. See under §§12382, 12383
Vendor and purchaser generally. See under §12389 (II)

I NATURE OF LIEN

Vendor's and equitable lien contrasted. The power of a court of equity to establish an equitable lien is quite independent of the law applicable to a vendor's lien.

Bogle v Goldsworthy, 202-764; 211 NW 257

Vendee as owner under executory contract. The vendee of land under a contract calling for installment payments is the equitable titleholder, and therefore, the "owner" of the land within the mechanic lien statutes, and may contract for improvements on the land and subject his interest to the resulting mechanic liens.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

Specific performance—allowable relief under general prayer. In bank receiver's specific performance action to compel heirs to perform contract to purchase receiver's interest in estate property, a prayer for general equitable relief warrants a decree establishing vendor's lien, ordering a special execution sale of the receiver's interest, and a general execution for any deficiency.

Utterback v Stewart, 224-1135; 277 NW 735

Waiver of time element. When the vendee in a contract of sale of real estate waives the time element for the performance of the contract, he, in legal effect, arms the vendor with right to perform within a reasonable time, and to enforce specific performance if vendee then refuses to perform.

Andrew v Miller, 216-1378; 250 NW 711

I NATURE OF LIEN—concluded

Enforcement of vendee's lien—burden of proof. A vendee who rescinds, and seeks to establish a lien on the land for his proper advancements, need not show that a subsequent titleholder had knowledge of his (vendee's) rights. The subsequent titleholder must show his want of knowledge.

Larson v Metcalf, 201-1208; 207 NW 382; 45 ALR 344

Rescission by vendee—lien. A vendee of land is entitled in equity, on proper rescission by him of the contract of purchase, to a lien on the land (1) for the amount of the purchase price advanced by him, (2) for the reasonable value of all proper improvements made on the land by him, and (3) for any other proper expenditure suffered by him and growing out of the contract,—a right enforceable against all parties who take rights in the land with knowledge, actual or constructive, of vendee's rights.

Larson v Metcalf, 201-1208; 207 NW 382; 45 ALR 344

II PRIORITY

Purchase-money mortgage. A real estate mortgage may not be deemed a purchase-money mortgage and have extended to it the pre-eminent right of priority over all other liens and claims arising through the mortgagor, unless the holder distinctly establishes the fact that the money secured by the mortgage was advanced for the express purpose of paying the purchase price of the land.

Ely Bk. v Graham, 201-840; 208 NW 312

Purchase-money mortgage. A mortgage on land given to secure a balance due the mortgagee from the mortgagor on a transaction disconnected with the land, is not a purchase-money mortgage in such sense as to give the mortgagee priority over pre-existing liens.

Miller v Miller, 211-901; 232 NW 498

When superior to mechanic's lien. A vendor's lien for the purchase price of land sold on installments without obligating or requiring the vendee to make any improvement on the property is superior to mechanics' liens growing out of the repair and improvement of a building existing on the land when it was sold; and this is true even tho the vendor may have expected that the vendee would or might make such repairs or improvements, or may have actually known that the vendee was making them.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

Unremovable repairs and improvements. Where the vendee of land, exclusively on his own authority, places repairs and improvements upon an existing building on the land of such a nature that they cannot be removed without material damage to the building, the vendor's lien for the purchase price of the land is superior to the lien of the mechanic lien claimants both as to the real estate, and as to repairs and improvements.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

III LOSS OR WAIVER OF LIEN

Absence of necessary parties. A vendor's lien may not be established against land after it has been transferred by the purchaser and the new owners are not made party defendants.

In re Thomas, 203-174; 210 NW 747

Deed—new grantee. The grantor in a deed of conveyance in escrow who consents to the substitution in the deed of the name of a new grantee, and to the delivery of the deed to such new grantee, and who permits such new grantee to pay taxes and interest on incumbrances and ultimately to sell and convey the land to a good-faith purchaser for value, necessarily loses the right to establish a vendor's lien on the land.

Lindberg v Younggren, 209-613; 228 NW 574

Election of remedies. A purchaser of land who rescinds, and obtains against the vendor judgment at law for the amount advanced as purchase price and for other proper expenditures, does not thereby waive his right to bring an action in equity to have the judgment declared a lien on the land.

Larson v Metcalf, 201-1208; 207 NW 382; 45 ALR 344

10058 Fraudulent conveyances.

Actual or constructive fraud required. A court of equity is not warranted in setting aside an executed contract such as a warranty deed in the absence of actual or constructive fraud.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Evidence insufficient to show fraud. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a judgment refusing to set aside a conveyance of realty by devisee thereof to claimant against estate on ground of lack of consideration or fraud in making conveyance.

First N. Bank v Adams, (NOR); 266 NW 484

Fraud in procuring deed. Where deed containing recital of consideration was obtained by fraud, the grantor is not precluded as a matter of law from showing a constructive trust arising from the fraud, and equity will allow such showing to be made by parol evidence, but such evidence must be clear and satisfactory.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Constructive trust—fraud by grantee. Where grantee obtained title by false assurance that he would hold title as trustee to protect grantor's ownership, and immediately placed a mortgage on the property for his own benefit after obtaining title, a constructive trust was created and grantee became a trustee ex maleficio for benefit of grantor.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Trustee in bankruptcy—remedy. A trustee in bankruptcy cannot maintain an action at law against a grantee of the bankrupt to recover the "value" of property collusively and fraudulently transferred to said grantee in fraud of creditors. This is not saying that the trustee may not treat the property in the hands of the grantee as belonging to the bankrupt, or impress a trust on the proceeds of the property if grantee has disposed of it.

Lambert v Reisman Co., 207-711; 223 NW 541

Unallowable action for damages. A judgment plaintiff may not maintain an action at law for damages against the fraudulent grantee of land transferred by the judgment defendant, even tho the action is aided by an allegation of conspiracy to defraud plaintiff.

McKay v Barrick, 207-1091; 224 NW 84

Proof required. Principle reaffirmed that a deed of conveyance will not be set aside on an allegation of fraudulent representation which is sustained by a mere preponderance of the evidence.

Clark v Beck, 208-156; 225 NW 353

Burden of proof. In an action to set aside a deed and an assignment of a mortgage executed by mother to stepson, burden was on plaintiff to establish the existence of confidential relationship raising presumption of fraud.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 238 NW 447

Conveyance and assignment to stepson. Where an elderly but unusually self-willed woman executed a deed to her stepson during time in which she managed her own affairs, and relationship with grantee was only that which ordinarily exists between a mother and son, evidence in action to set aside the deed did not warrant finding that confidential relationship existed so as to raise presumption of fraud, but as to the assignment of a mortgage procured by this stepson after he came to live with her and had taken over management of her affairs, evidence justified finding that such relationship did exist.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 238 NW 447

Fraud and undue influence not proved. In an action in equity by a 73-year-old grantor, who had no children of his own, to set aside deed to adult children of second wife, subject to a life estate in grantor, where associations of the grantor and grantees, over a long period of years, were not unlike that ordinarily observed between natural parents and children, evidence did not sustain charge that deed was procured by fraud and undue influence.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Undue influence as phase. Undue influence, a phase of actual fraud, will invalidate a transaction between persons in a confidential relationship.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Monomania and undue influence unproved. Where a daughter, among other things, testified against her father in a divorce action and left him to live with her mother, she furnished the evidence for his belief of her lack of filial affection, and conveyances of his property executed pursuant to his intention to disinherit her upheld over her contentions that he was a monomaniac and that the conveyances resulted from the use of undue influence.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Undue influence—destroying free will. Undue influence necessary to set aside a conveyance must be enough to destroy the free agency of the grantor. Evidence reviewed and found insufficient to establish undue influence.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79.

Evidence necessary to invalidate deed. A deed is presumed to express the intention of the grantor and one who attempts to set it aside on the ground of undue influence or insanity has the burden of proof to present evidence that is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Mental incompetency — undue influence — burden of proof. The mental incompetency of a grantor to execute a deed of conveyance, or the obtaining of said conveyance by the grantee by undue influence, when assigned as ground for setting aside said conveyance, must be established by plaintiff and by clear, satisfactory and convincing evidence—there being no proof that a confidential relationship existed. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to meet said burden of proof.

Foster v Foster, 223-455; 273 NW 165

10059 Rule in Shelley's case.

Application. A conveyance to grantee "during his natural lifetime with remainder to his legal heirs" carries the fee to grantee under the rule in Shelley's case. (Deed executed prior to July 4, 1907.)

Biddle v Worthington, 216-102; 248 NW 301

When inapplicable. The rule in Shelley's case has no application when the conveyance, deed, or will is to one for life with remainder over to the children of the life tenant, unless it is manifest that the grantor used the word

"children" as the equivalent of the word "heirs".

Blair v Kenaston, 223-620; 273 NW 184

Shelley's case inapplicable. The so-called "rule in Shelley's case" has no application to a deed of conveyance which creates a trust in the grantee for the benefit of his heirs.

Hibler v Hibler, 208-586; 226 NW 8

Inapplicability of rule. The so-called "rule in Shelley's case" has no application to a deed of conveyance which creates a trust in the grantee for the benefit of his heirs.

Hibler v Hibler, 208-586; 226 NW 8

Construction of wills—intent of testator to nullify rule. While the rule in Shelley's case applied to wills as well as deeds, yet, wills being construed more liberally than deeds, if the intent of the testator appears to create a life estate, the rule did not apply.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Abrogative statute not retroactive. The legislature by abrogating the rule in Shelley's case did not give the statute any retroactive effect; therefore, the rule applies to wills made before the enactment of the statute.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

Testator's intention—rules of construction—when used. Intention of testator will be determined from the actual language of the entire will, but if this is not possible, then rules of construction will be employed, not including rule in Shelley's case abrogated by statute.

Hudnutt v John Hancock Ins., 224-430; 275 NW 581

10060 Devise, bequest, or conveyance not enlarged.

Disclaimers. See 22 ILR 543—Renunciation of life estate

Sale of life estate—interest acquired. Judgment creditor of a life tenant in purchasing a life estate at execution sale cannot acquire any greater interest than that held by the life tenant.

Rich v Allen, 226-1304; 286 NW 434

Life estate (?) or fee (?)—intestacy. An unambiguous will of property for the devisee's "perfectly free use during his lifetime", without any gift over, conveys a life estate only. It is not permissible to construe such a will as conveying the fee simply to avoid intestacy.

Horak v Stanley, 216-318; 249 NW 166

"Particular estate". A "particular estate" is an estate for life or for years for the reason that it is only a small part or portion of the inheritance.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Testator's intention. In construing a will the principal concern will be to ascertain and determine the intention of the testator, and it is the duty of the court, if it be reasonably possible, to give effect to all of the will's provisions.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Life estates—remainder over. When a will provides for a devise of realty to wife for life, then to three named children for life as tenants in common and remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, held, life estate vested in children after wife's death with contingent remainder over in fee, as provided by statute—the life estates being the particular estate supporting the contingent estate which would vest, upon death of each of testator's named children, in that child's lawful issue, if any.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Remainder over—absence of issue—no lapse of remainder. In a will where father devised realty to surviving spouse for life, then to three named children for life with remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, the fact that there were no grandchildren in being at the time of mother's death did not lapse the remainder so as to cause it to descend intestate and merge with life estate in children, since, at mother's death, the life estate in children was a "particular estate" supporting the contingent remainder, which was not required to vest until termination of such life estate.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Deeds—creation of vested interest—inviolability. A deed, (1) which is conditioned on grantee paying, after the death of grantor, named sums to each of grantee's two sisters, and (2) which is executed and delivered by grantor and accepted by grantee in accordance with a plan entered into by all of said parties for the settlement of their inherited interests in said land, creates, instantaneously, in said sisters a vested landed interest which is immune from change without their consent. So held where the grantor, later, erroneously assumed the right to treat the deed as testamentary and, by a new deed, to reduce the payments to the sisters.

Carlson v Hamilton, 221-529; 265 NW 906

Death of joint life tenant without issue—remainder over in fee. In a will where father devised realty to surviving spouse for life, then to three named children for life with remainder over in fee per stirpes to their lawful issue, and one of such children died without lawful issue, after mother's death, remainder over of her share, being a one-third of said realty, became intestate property and through the father passed to the two remaining children in fee, subject to payment of taxes and debts against estate of deceased child to the extent of one-third interest in the lapsed estate.

Anderson v Anderson, 227-25; 286 NW 446

Devise—life estate (?) or fee (?)—mortgage validity. Where a will devised land to a son to use until son's youngest child became twenty years old, or if such child died before such age, then until January 1, 1940, when the land became the property of the "son and his heirs", a mortgage placed on the land by the son, altho before 1940, is a valid lien, not merely on a life estate, but on the fee, and an equitable action by son's children against the mortgagee and others to establish title in the land was properly dismissed.

Hudnutt v John Hancock Ins., 224-430; 275 NW 581

CHAPTER 439

CONVEYANCES

10066 "Instruments affecting real estate" defined—revocation.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '30 AG Op 277

Recording "instrument relating to real estate". A mortgage (1) on chattels on certain described real estate and (2) on all crops "sown, planted, raised, growing or grown" on said real estate for two specified years following the execution of said instrument, being an instrument which "relates to real estate", is recordable as a real estate mortgage, and such recording may be enforced by mandamus.

Weyrauch v Johnson, 201-1197; 208 NW 706

Lease—assignment—recordation. A lease of real estate and the assignment thereof are recordable for the purpose of conveying constructive notice to a mortgagee and his subsequently appointed receiver under a mortgage which contains a pledge of the rents, even tho said parties are not entitled, as a matter of right, to such notice.

King v Good, 205-1203; 219 NW 517

Assignment of rent not recordable. A written assignment of a lease of real estate and of the rents accruing thereunder, (especially when the lease is at the time manually delivered to the assignee) is not an instrument which the law requires to be recorded, and if recorded the record imparts no notice.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

10067 Corporation having seal.

Release or subordination of mortgage—authority of president. A corporation is bound by the act of its president in subordinating its mortgage to another mortgage (1) when the president is expressly authorized by the articles of incorporation to release and satisfy such mortgages, (2) when the president first executed, on adequate consideration, a written release and subordination without the corporate seal being attached, and later confirmed said act by a new release and subordination with said seal attached and (3) when the corporation at all times intended so to subordinate its mortgage.

Homesteaders Life v Salinger, 212-251; 235 NW 485

Duty to affix—scope of requirement. A writing granting to a party a mere option to repurchase land from a corporation within a named time and at a named price, is not an instrument such as is contemplated by the statute which requires the corporate seal to be affixed to instruments "conveying, incumbering or affecting real estate", nor as is contemplated by substantially similar requirements in articles of incorporation.

Shanda v Bank, 220-290; 260 NW 841

10069 Release of corporate lien—omission of seal.

Change in name of mortgagee—presumption. A recital in a formal release of a mortgage, to the effect that the mortgagee has, by proper amendment to its articles of incorporation, changed its name to the name indicated by the one executing the release, will be deemed presumptively true.

Vanderwilt v Broerman, 201-1107; 206 NW 959

10070 Contract for deed—presumption of abandonment.

Lost instrument—real property title affected. Where a lost instrument relied upon affects the record title to real estate, public policy demands that the proof of its former existence, its loss and its contents, should be strong and conclusive—rule applied to real estate contract.

Forrest v Otis, 224-63; 276 NW 102

10071 Christian names—variation—effect.

Variation in names—notice to purchasers. See under §10105 (V), Vol I

"Idem sonans" doctrine—applicability. The doctrine of idem sonans is recognized by Iowa courts and, while each case must be determined according to its own facts, the mere fact that names spelled differently from true name could be pronounced like the true name by a strained pronunciation would not make the doctrine applicable, but where the names, when general and ordinary rules of pronunciation are applied, are so identical in pronunciation and so alike that there is no possibility of mistake, the doctrine should be applied; or where two names, as commonly pronounced in the English language, are sounded alike, a variance in their spelling is immaterial; and even slight difference in their pronunciation is unimportant, if the attentive ear finds difficulty in distinguishing the two names when pronounced. Such names are "idem sonans" and, altho spelled differently, are to be regarded as the same.

Webb v Ferkins, 227-1157; 290 NW 112

Discrepancy in names—effect. The fact that in the body of a mortgage, and in the certificate of acknowledgment of said mortgage, the name of the wife of the mortgagor-owner appears as "Mary F. McNeff" instead of "Mary T. McNeff" (her correct name) is not of controlling importance on the issue as to the validity of the mortgage as to the wife, it appearing that she was correctly identified in said certificate of acknowledgment "as the wife" of said mortgagor-owner.

First Tr. JSL Bank v McNeff, 220-1225; 264 NW 105

10072 Assignment of certificate of entry deemed deed.

Patents—collateral attack. The issuance by the state of a patent to lands is an assertion of the existence of the property conveyed; and such patent is immune from attack in a collateral proceeding.

Meeker v Kautz, 213-370; 239 NW 27

10074 Railroad land grants—duty to record.

Invalid reservation in land grant. Principle reaffirmed that the insertion in a patent issued by the federal government under a public improvement grant of a clause "excepting and reserving all mineral lands", is, in the absence of fraud, a nullity even tho the grant itself did except mineral lands.

Herman v Engstrom, 204-341; 214 NW 588

10075 Patents covering land in different counties.

Patents—presumption. A government patent is not conclusive that the government owned the land at the date of the patent.

Bigelow v Herrink, 200-830; 205 NW 531

User—estoppel. In an action to enjoin the repair of a dike originally constructed in connection with drainage system created jointly by adjoining landowners, including plaintiff's predecessor in title, and used with knowledge of plaintiff for over 20 years without objection, principles reaffirmed (1) that where there is proof of more than mere user, the statute providing that an easement cannot be established by proof of mere user alone does not apply, and (2) that the owner of a dominant estate may by consent, express or implied, estop himself from insisting upon adherence to the principle that the owner of a servient estate has no right to interfere with the natural flow of water in a well-defined course so as to cast it back upon the dominant estate.

Dodd v Aitken, 227-679; 288 NW 898

10083 Certification—effect.

Certified copies of records. See §11296

10084 Forms of conveyance.

I DEEDS IN GENERAL

(a) IN GENERAL

Owner's right of disposal. Under ordinary circumstances one has the absolute right to dispose of his property as he pleases.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Estate by entirety. The common-law estate by entirety has not been recognized in this state.

Fay v Smiley, 201-1290; 207 NW 369

Instrument not passing present title.

Tilton v Klingaman, 214-67; 239 NW 83

Repugnancy between clauses—modern rule. The technical rules of the common law as to the division of deeds of conveyances into formal parts, i. e., premises or granting clause, and habendum clause, will not prevail as against the manifest intention of the parties as shown by the deed as a whole. Applied (1) where the granting clause clearly granted a life estate, while (2) the habendum clause defined the estate received by the grantee as the fee.

Blair v Kenaston, 223-620; 273 NW 184

Repugnancy—modern rule. The technical rules of the common law as to the division of deeds of conveyances into formal parts, i. e., premises or granting clause and habendum clause, will not prevail as against the manifest intention of the parties as shown by the deed as a whole. Applied (1) where the granting clause granted a fee and, apparently, vested it at once, while (2) the habendum clause clearly revealed a purpose to render the vesting conditional.

Shultz v Peters, 223-626; 273 NW 134

“Subject to liens of record.” The expression “subject to liens of record”, when embraced in the habendum clause of a deed of conveyance, does not have the effect of continuing the lien of a judgment after the holder thereof has failed to exercise his right to redeem.

Paulsen v Jensen, 209-453; 228 NW 357

Substitution of grantee. Principle recognized that substitution of grantees in a deed of conveyance may be made, with the consent of the parties concerned.

Lindberg v Younggren, 209-613; 228 NW 574

Transfer of present interest necessary—intent of grantor. Any instrument to be effective as conveyance of real estate must operate to convey a present interest in the real estate, and the intent of the grantor is the controlling factor in determining whether or not such present interest is conveyed.*

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Unreasonable deed—validity. If a grantor is of sound mind, and acts of his own free will and accord, he has a legal right to make an unjust and unreasonable conveyance.

O’Neil v Morrison, 211-416; 233 NW 708

Absolute deed as mortgage—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed at length and held, that a deed of conveyance, absolute in form, was intended to be such, and not a mortgage.

Shanda v Bank, 220-290; 260 NW 841

Accretion passes by ordinary deed. Accretion to land passes by a deed of the upland owner unless expressly excepted.

Haynie v May, 217-1233; 252 NW 749

Acknowledgment before disqualified notary. The validity of a deed of conveyance is, as between the grantor and grantee, in no manner affected by the fact that the deed was acknowledged before a disqualified notary public.

Shanda v Bank, 220-290; 260 NW 841

Acquiescence in title by grantor—deed not set aside. When the grantor of a warranty deed had acquiesced for five years in the title of the grantee, he could not set aside the deed and quiet title in himself without establishing a plain, clear, and decisive case.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Assignment of share—construction. A written assignment by an heir “of all interest of every kind and nature” in the estate works a complete conveyance of the heir’s interest in the real estate of the estate, as against a subsequently rendered judgment against the assignor.

Berg v Shade, 203-1352; 214 NW 513

See Funk v Grulke, 204-314; 213 NW 608

Bona fide purchaser—recital in deed—effect. A grantee of real estate is bound by a recital in his deed that the land is taken subject to all recorded mortgages.

Citizens Bank v Hamilton, 209-626; 227 NW 112

Cancellation. Want of consideration in itself will not warrant the setting aside of a deed, it being competent for a grantor to make a gift of his property and, altho want of consideration is a good defense to an executory contract, a deed is not such a contract, but instead represents a contract executed and a conveyance fully accomplished.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Cancellation of deed—statements to attorney subsequent to execution—incompetency. In an action by a grantor to set aside deed, testimony as to the contents of statements made by grantor to his attorneys eight days after execution of deed, was incompetent and inadmissible.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Confidential relations—-independent advice. In connection with a gift from a person occupying a confidential relation with another, “independent advice” means the donor’s opportunity of conferring fully and privately with a person competent to advise as to the legal effect of the transaction and who will advise in a manner disassociated from the interests of the donee.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Consideration—adequacy. A deed of conveyance which recites (1) that it is in payment for services performed by grantee in caring for her mother in her lifetime and (2) that grantee will support and care for grantor during his lifetime, is supported by an adequate consideration.

Ellis v Allman, 217-483; 250 NW 172

Wife's deed for husband's debt—cancellation—consideration—estoppel. Wife who was not illiterate and who deeded her land in payment of husband's notes, and who, by placing deed in husband's hands, clothed him with apparent authority to deliver the deed, thereby inducing creditors to surrender other land owned by the husband, is estopped from questioning the validity of the deed. The consideration to wife was advantage to husband and detriment to creditors.

Allen v Hume, 227-1224; 290 NW 687

Consideration—nonconclusiveness. The consideration named in a deed of conveyance is only prima facie evidence of the amount, and as to the fact of payment.

Gilbert v Plowman, 218-1345; 256 NW 746

Levy and assessment—equalization—evidence—recitals of consideration. The recitals of consideration in deeds of conveyances are not admissible to prove the value of real estate for the purpose of taxation.

Iowa Corp. v Board, 209-687; 228 NW 623

Deed consideration—no negative fact from affirmative testimony. Positive, uncontradicted testimony of husband and wife, defendants, called to testify by plaintiff, affirming, in their own behalf, fact of consideration for a deed to wife, cannot be held to have proven a negative fact of lack of consideration.

Donovan v White, 224-138; 275 NW 889

Construction—meaning of "children". At common law, the word "children", when used in wills, deeds, or other conveyances, means legitimate children unless will reveals a clear intention to use the generic term "children" so as to include an illegitimate child, or it is impossible under the circumstances that legitimate children could take.

In re Estate of Ellis, 225-1279; 282 NW 758

Conveyance to "heirs and assigns"—effect. A grant of land to a named person "and to his heirs and assigns" conveys a fee simple title, irrespective of a habendum clause which provides that, upon the death of the grantee, the property shall revert to the grantor or to his heirs.

Dolan v Newberry, 204-443; 215 NW 599

Conveyance—insufficiency. A stipulation between plaintiff and defendant in a divorce proceeding to the effect that the defendant, for the good of the children of the parties, shall not "convey, incur, or mortgage in any manner" certain named lands does not constitute a conveyance to the children, even tho the stipulation is fully embraced in the subsequently entered decree.

Putensen v Dreeszen, 206-1242; 219 NW 490

Conveyance and devise of same property. A deed of conveyance in the ordinary form and placed in proper escrow for delivery immediately after the death of grantor conveys full title, even tho the grantor, a few days after the execution of the deed, devises the same property to the same grantee.

In re Champion, 206-6; 218 NW 37

Conveyance by husband to wife and himself. A conveyance of land by a husband to his wife and to himself creates a tenancy in common.

Fay v Smiley, 201-1290; 207 NW 369

Corporate seal—duty to affix. A writing, granting to a party a mere option to repurchase land from a corporation within a named time and at a named price, is not an instrument such as is contemplated by the statute which requires the corporate seal to be affixed to instruments "conveying, incumbering or affecting real estate", nor as is contemplated by substantially similar requirements in articles of incorporation.

Shanda v Bank, 220-290; 260 NW 841

Deed as mortgage—consideration. A warranty deed may not be decreed to be a mortgage when the daughter-grantee pays a good-faith and complete consideration to her father, the grantor.

Witousek & Co. v Holt, (NOR); 224 NW 530

Deed to trustees—grantor's subsequent land contract invalid. An absolute warranty deed subject only to a trust created therein precludes the grantor from later contracting to sell the property to another and will support an action to quiet title in the trustees.

Beemer v Challas, 224-411; 276 NW 60

Descriptions—acreage—representations in deed—effect. Principle reaffirmed that a deed covenant which specifies the acreage, "be it more or less", constitutes a representation that the specified acreage is approximately correct.

Mahrt v Mann, 203-880; 210 NW 566

Fatally indefinite description. A deed which is so indefinite that the land intended to be conveyed cannot be determined, is a nullity.

Beim v Carlson, 209-1001; 227 NW 421

Particular description followed by recital of acreage—effect. A deed to a governmental described 20-acre division of land, but containing the recital "containing 18½ acres, more or less", does not convey a tract of 1½ acres contained in said division and already conveyed by the grantor to another grantee.

Montgomery Co. v Case, 212-73; 232 NW 150

Educational and religious purposes—not condition subsequent. A deed, conveying the title and the fee and containing the single statement "said land to be used for educational purposes and religious purposes only" followed by a warranty but by no words of condition, and no conditions appearing in the circumstances surrounding its execution, does not signify an intention by the grantor to create a condition subsequent which, in case the land is not used as designated or is conveyed by grantee, will upon re-entry by an heir, invest him with title.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Educational and religious purposes—not a conditional limitation. A conditional limitation in a deed is self-operative and determines the period of the existing estate without any act on the part of the person entitled to the next expectant estate, and therefore a deed containing merely a provision for educational and religious purposes is not restricted by a conditional limitation.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Escrow agent's memorandum made in absence of parties—inadmissible. An escrow agent's understanding of the arrangement by which he was to record deeds after the death of the grantor, noted on the envelope in the absence of the parties, is not admissible in evidence as to the substance of the arrangement and would be of doubtful evidentiary value even if admitted.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Equitable ownership superior to judgment lien. An actual bona fide oral agreement between a debtor and creditor, that the debtor will convey to the creditor certain lands in part satisfaction of the debt, creates in the creditor an equitable ownership in the land (especially when the creditor is already in possession of the land) which is superior to the rights of a subsequent judgment creditor of said debtor. It follows that delay in making delivery of the deed, or even the loss of the deed, will not elevate the subsequent judgment creditor into priority.

Richardson v Estle, 214-1007; 243 NW 611

Foreclosure—agreement to pay. The recital in a deed to real estate that the grantee assumed and agreed to pay an existing mortgage is conclusive unless the grantee overcomes the presumption that the deed correctly expresses the final contract of the parties, even tho the original contract of sale is silent as to such agreement to pay.

Royal Ins. v Hughes, 205-563; 218 NW 251

Foreclosure against vendor — purchaser's payments recoverable. An action to recover payments made on the purchase of a lot was not barred by a quitclaim deed given by the purchaser to one who had bought the land at a foreclosure sale, when it was given for the purpose of transferring possession during the period of redemption and in order to reduce the loss to the purchaser, after the vendor had failed to obtain a release of the lot from a mortgage and had no intention of redeeming after the mortgage was foreclosed.

Trammel v Kemler, 226-918; 285 NW 196

Fraud—cancellation—grounds. When a grantee in securing a deed to land acquires an unconscionable and inequitable advantage over the grantor, equity will infer fraud; likewise when the grantee obtains the deed through a promise which he intends to breach in the future.

Bruner v Myers, 212-308; 233 NW 505; 235 NW 726

Part performance—fraud. An oral contract for the sale of land is not within the statute of frauds when the owner of the land executes and delivers to the buyer a deed of conveyance even tho said deed is blank as to grantee.

Gilbert v Plowman, 218-1345; 256 NW 746

Gifts—inter vivos—fiduciary relation—evidence. A fiduciary relationship is not established or even presumed from the naked fact that the parties are closely related by blood, or live and reside in the same house.

Humphrey v Norwood, 213-912; 240 NW 232

Granting and habendum clauses. The habendum clause of a deed of conveyance which clearly indicates the quality of the estate conveyed will be given full force and effect when the granting clause does not clearly indicate such quality.

Central Life v Spangler, 204-995; 216 NW 116

Impeachment of title. Principle recognized that the grantor in a deed of conveyance may not by subsequent declarations impeach the title conveyed by him.

Jones v Betz, 203-767; 210 NW 609; 213 NW 282

Unallowable impeachment. The ex parte recitals in a will by a grantor of real estate are insufficient to impeach the title conveyed by the deed.

Bibler v Bibler, 205-639; 216 NW 99

Mortgage embraces conveyance. A valid prohibition against the "conveyance" of real property embraces a mortgage.

Iowa Corp. v Halligan, 214-903; 241 NW 475

Nature and effect—controlling elements. The nature and effect of a deed of conveyance must be determined from the words therein contained which are descriptive of the estate conveyed, and not from the mere legal name employed. So held where the deed named the estate conveyed as one "by entirety", while the covenants of the deed demonstrated that it was a warranty in fee.

Fay v Smiley, 201-1290; 207 NW 369

(a) IN GENERAL—continued

Oral contract contemporaneous with deed. When a duly recorded deed contains a prohibition against a sale or conveyance of any part of the land during the lifetime of the grantor, parol evidence is admissible against a subsequent mortgagee to show that the purpose of said prohibition was to protect the grantor during his lifetime in a contract reservation of rent in the land.

Iowa Corp. v Halligan, 214-903; 241 NW 475

Parol testimony—deed as mortgage. Parol testimony is admissible to show that deed was in fact a mortgage and was so intended.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Proceedings and relief—negligence—mistake—evidence—sufficiency. A deed of conveyance will not, on the plea of the grantor, be reformed by inserting therein an assumption by the grantee of an existing mortgage, when the grantor executed the deed without reading it, tho he was able to read, and was not prevented from reading, when his testimony in support of a mutual mistake is neither satisfactory nor convincing; and especially when the grantee has, in the meantime, justifiably changed his position in reliance on the omission of the assumption clause.

Scover v Gauley, 209-1100; 229 NW 684

Prohibition against conveyance—validity—record. A provision in an ordinary warranty deed absolutely prohibiting a sale or conveyance of any part of the land during the lifetime of the grantor without the consent of the grantor, is not repugnant to the deed if the unrevealed purpose of said prohibition is legal, and a part of the consideration for the deed, and is expressed in a contract which accompanies the execution of the deed, even tho the contract be oral. It follows that the record of such deed charges third parties with notice of said contract if reasonable inquiry would reveal it.

Iowa Corp. v Halligan, 214-903; 241 NW 475

Quiet title—issues under general denial. In an action to quiet title where plaintiff's claim of ownership arose out of a deed deposited with a bank for delivery, and delivered to plaintiff after grantor's death, a general denial puts in issue both the execution and the delivery of the deed.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Defaulted real estate vendee's deed after decree—invalidity. In a quieting title action against a real estate contract vendee, the decree ends all rights of the vendee under a defaulted contract, and if he deeds to another before the decree, the grantee takes nothing.

Forrest v Otis, 224-63; 276 NW 102

Previous and subsequent chain of title lacking—title not established as against tax deed. In a quiet title action, stipulated evidence that an ancestor of defendant's received and recorded a deed to the land from another is insufficient to overthrow plaintiff's tax deed without a further showing of the previous and subsequent chain of title.

Inter-Ocean Co. v Morrison, 225-1336; 283 NW 909

Relief—decree beyond issues. In a quiet title action by grantee against grantor's heir and successor in interest, a decree based on a deed containing a declaration of purpose (educational and religious use), goes beyond the issues when it finds the grantee to be the "sole and absolute owner, in fee simple"; the effect being to adjudicate the rights of persons, not before the court, who may have trust interests under the terms in the deed.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Quitclaim grantees—knowledge of prior equities. The grantee of land under a quitclaim deed is conclusively presumed to have known of all prior equities in and to the land, and will be held to have taken and to hold said land subject to said equities.

Junkin v McClain, 221-1084; 265 NW 362

Quitclaim deed from spendthrift trust beneficiary. The rights of a grantee under a quitclaim deed from a spendthrift trust beneficiary cannot be determined until the trust is terminated, and cannot be litigated in an action between the trustees and grantee where the rights between the grantee and beneficiary are not issues.

Beemer v Challas, 224-411; 276 NW 60

Quitclaim—prior claims—nonapplicability of rule. The principle that one who acquires title by quitclaim takes with notice of prior bona fide claims has no application to a case where a mortgagee receives his mortgage for a valuable consideration and without notice of any infirmity, and later, in order to avoid the expense of a foreclosure, receives a quitclaim deed to the land in satisfaction of the mortgage.

Brenton Bros. v Bissell, 214-175; 239 NW 14

Reservation of right to repurchase. A recital in a conveyance that the grantor "reserves the right to repurchase said premises under his contract with said grantee" does not, in and of itself, show that said deed was intended as a mortgage.

Sheley v Engle, 204-1283; 213 NW 617

Riparian rights—accretion—apportionment—estoppel. Riparian land owners interested in accretions to their lands may by agreement, acquiescence, or other conduct, apportion the accretion in a manner and way different than the law would apportion it, and thereby estop themselves, in an action to quiet title, from asserting that land did not pass under their deed because it was not accretion land.

Haynie v May, 217-1233; 252 NW 749

Riparian rights—when not withheld by deed. A conveyance of lands by a riparian owner, especially when the lands are largely accretions, will not be deemed to withhold conveyance of riparian rights simply because the land is described by metes and bounds.

Harrington v Foster, 220-1066; 264 NW 51

Sale by known nonowner. A vendee of property takes nothing by his conveyance when he knows who is the actual owner of the property and that his vendor is simply in possession of the property as manager.

Kollman v Kollman, 204-950; 216 NW 77

Signing and executing without reading—effect. One who signs and delivers a deed of conveyance without either reading it or asking to have it read to him is bound thereby, when he can read it and is given free and unlimited opportunity to read it.

Raible v Bernstein, 209-1083; 229 NW 753

Spendthrift trust—beneficiary's quitclaim—interest conveyed. A trust in a deed vesting in grantees as trustees the absolute control of the property from which two beneficiaries receive the income until termination of the trust at a future time, if said beneficiaries are free from debt, is a spendthrift trust and a quitclaim grantee from one beneficiary secures thereby no present interest in the property.

Beemer v Challas, 224-411; 276 NW 60

Validity—evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held insufficient to establish the invalidity of a deed.

Bibler v Bibler, 205-639; 216 NW 99

Banking corporations—director—violation of trust in re tax deed. A director of a bank may not, for his own personal enrichment, take assignment of a tax sale certificate covering land on which the bank of which he is director holds a first mortgage lien, and take tax deed under such certificate. Such deed will, on timely action and proper proof, be set aside and the bank, or its legal representative in case of insolvency, accorded the right to redeem from the tax sale.

Bates v Pabst, 223-534; 273 NW 151

Consideration — overthrowing presumption. The statutory presumption that a deed of conveyance was supported by a consideration is not overcome by the naked testimony of the grantor that he was never paid anything for the conveyance.

Carr v McCauley, 215-298; 245 NW 290

(b) WANT OF ASSENT (Undue Influence, Mistake, Insanity, etc.)

Evidence—sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that, in an action to set aside a conveyance because of fraud, undue influence, or mistake, the proof must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Stonewall v Danielson, 204-1367; 217 NW 456

Evidence—insufficiency. In action to set aside deed, evidence held insufficient to support contention that deed was executed through fraud, duress, undue influence, or lack of mental capacity.

Ryan v Church, (NOR); 216 NW 713

Freedom of disposal. Courts must be zealous to guard the right of every man to dispose of his own property as he sees fit, so long as he has the mental capacity (1) to know what property he possesses, (2) to know what he desires to do with it, and (3) to exercise his free and voluntary will in such disposition.

Coughlin v Church, 201-1268; 203 NW 812

Invalidity—burden of proof. Principle reaffirmed that (barring fiduciary relationships) the burden of proof rests on the party who alleges fraud, undue influence, or mental incompetency as the basis for invalidating a deed of conveyance.

Kramer v Leinbaugh, 219-604; 259 NW 20

Undue influence. "Influence" exercised over the grantor by the grantee in a deed of conveyance in obtaining the deed is not "undue" in a legal sense unless it submerges the free agency of the grantor.

Osborn v Fry, 202-129; 209 NW 303

Validity—substitution of will. Principle reaffirmed that a deed of conveyance will not be set aside on the ground of undue influence unless it is made to appear that the will of the wrongdoer was substituted for the will of the grantor.

Utterback v Hollingsworth, 208-300; 225 NW 419

Age of grantor—undue influence. In an action contesting deeds on the ground of undue influence, the age of the grantor is an important consideration, but it is not conclusive.

Tedemandson v Morris, 227-774; 289 NW 1

Mental incapacity—proof required. Clear, satisfactory, and convincing proof of mental incapacity must be produced in order to invalidate a deed of conveyance on that ground.

Bardsley v Spencer, 215-616; 244 NW 275

Burden of proof. The burden to establish undue influence in the execution of a deed rests on the one who so alleges.

Bardsley v Spencer, 215-616; 244 NW 275

(b) WANT OF ASSENT (Undue Influence, Mistake, Insanity, etc.)—continued

Undue influence—evidence. Influence, to be undue, within the meaning of the law, must be such as to substitute the will of the person exercising the influence for the will of the party upon whom the influence is brought to bear. Evidence held insufficient to meet the rule.

Arndt v Lapel, 214-594; 243 NW 605

Undue influence—claim not supported by evidence. When two daughters had cared for their aged mother for about twenty years while the mother was in good health, neat in appearance, mentally alert, and did much reading in a foreign language, altho she could not read English, and the daughters went with the mother to a lawyer's office, but remained outside while deeds were drawn up by which the mother granted property to them to be effective after her death, there was no showing of mental weakness, fraud, or undue influence upon which to base a decree setting aside the deeds.

Tedemandson v Morris, 227-774; 289 NW 1

Undue influence—parent and child. There was sufficient evidence to warrant setting aside a deed on the ground of undue influence when it was made by an aged, eccentric father who was not in the best of health and had a limited business experience and had a kindly feeling toward all his children, the deed to the farm, which consisted of almost all his property, being made to a son, without the father having an independent adviser, seven days after the father had gone to live with the son who handled his business affairs and to whom he had at one time sold the farm, receiving a reconveyance when the payments were not kept up.

Stout v Vesely, 228- ; 290 NW 116

Confidential relationship established—grantee's failure to sustain burden. In an action to set aside a deed from a deceased mother, 83 years of age and ill at the time of execution of the deed, to her daughter, who had handled her mother's business for a number of years, who had the deed prepared by an attorney, and who was the only person present when mother signed the deed, evidence held to establish that there was a confidential relationship between mother and daughter, thus placing burden of proof on daughter to show that deed was not procured by fraud, and, such burden not having been met, the deed could not be sustained.

Tiernan v Brulport, 227-1152; 290 NW 53

Undue influence—evidence to negative. On the issue of undue influence in the execution of a deed to land, it seems that the grantee may show that the grantor, subsequent to the execution of the deed, repeatedly expressed his full satisfaction with, and approval of, said deed.

Hess v Pittman, 214-269; 242 NW 113

Deed from parent to child—constructive fraud—presumption. The doctrine of constructive fraud arises from the existence of a fiduciary relationship, and equity raises a presumption against the validity of a transaction where the superior party obtains a possible benefit, as in a case where a parent has become the dependent person in his relationship with a child, trusting his interests to the advice and guidance of the child, and has deeded his land to the child.

Stout v Vesely, 228- ; 290 NW 116

Fiduciary relation between husband and wife. Whether in an action by an heir to set aside a conveyance by a wife to her husband on the ground of undue influence the burden of disproof of said ground shifts to the defendant-husband, quaere.

Browne v Johnson, 218-498; 255 NW 862

Gifts—inter vivos. Undue influence necessary to set aside a conveyance must be enough to destroy the free agency of the grantor. Evidence reviewed and found insufficient to establish undue influence.

Coughlin v Church, 201-1268; 203 NW 812
Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Undue influence—degree of proof. A deed to land must not be disturbed on the ground of undue influence unless the proof clearly and convincingly establishes that the said instrument is not the free and voluntary act of the grantor, but is the will and purpose of the grantee. Evidence reviewed and, conceding, arguendo, that a confidential relation existed between the grantor and grantee, held that the grantee had met the burden of proof to sustain the deed.

Hess v Pittman, 214-269; 242 NW 113

Relationship—effect. Blood relationship between a grantor and a grantee furnishes, in and of itself, no basis for a presumption of undue influence.

O'Neil v Morrison, 211-416; 233 NW 708

Mistake—evidence. Evidence held quite insufficient to show any mistake in the reservation in a conveyance of an easement.

Spalding v McCartney, 207-1025; 221 NW 665

Performance of contract—implied reformation. A decree which correctly, by metes and bounds, describes the land which was mutually sold and purchased, impliedly reforms the grantor's deed, which inadvertently described slightly less acreage than as correctly described by the decree.

Elliott v Horton, 205-156; 217 NW 829

Reformation of deed. The statute of limitation does not commence to run against an action to reform a deed on the ground of mutual mistake until the mistake has been discovered.

American Bank v Borcharding, 205-633; 216 NW 719

Reformation—proceedings and relief. Evidence reviewed, and held to establish clearly, satisfactorily, and convincingly plaintiff's right, on the ground of mutual mistake, to the reformation of a deed by striking therefrom an agreement by the grantee to pay an existing mortgage.

Eglin v Miller, 209-326; 228 NW 305

Insanity—effect. Principle reaffirmed that a deed of conveyance by an insane person is not necessarily void.

Montagne v Cherokee County, 200-534; 205 NW 228

Mental incompetency affecting validity. Principle reaffirmed that old age and physical impairment do not, in and of themselves, invalidate deeds of conveyance.

Utterback v Hollingsworth, 208-300; 225 NW 419

Burden of proof—failure to meet. In an action to set aside the probate of a will, and to cancel a deed (1) on the ground of the mental incapacity of the testator-grantor, and (2) on the ground of the undue influence of the devisee-grantee, the burden rests on plaintiff to establish at least one of said grounds. Evidence quite elaborately reviewed and held, plaintiff had failed to meet the burden of proof resting upon him.

Walters v Heaton, 223-405; 271 NW 310

Canceling deed—nonright to withdraw answer. In an action (1) to cancel a deed and (2) to set aside the probate of a will on the ground of mental incapacity of the testator-grantor—both instruments having been executed by the same party and at the same time—it is not necessarily error for the court to refuse to permit defendant to withdraw his answer in order to permit defendant to file motion to separate the alleged separate causes of action and to transfer to the law docket.

Walters v Heaton, 223-405; 271 NW 310

Grantor 90 years old—evidence insufficient. Evidence reviewed, as to the mental capacity of a 90-year-old mother who, to the exclusion of one son, willed and assigned her property to another son, in exchange for life support and care; and held that she still was sane and that the charge of undue influence was not substantiated.

Reed v Reed, 225-773; 281 NW 444

Mental incapacity—evidence—sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that the courts will zealously guard the right of every person to make such legal disposition of his property as he sees fit, and to that end will demand the production of very convincing evidence in support of the plea of mental incapacity interposed by strangers to the deed.

Keating v Augustine, 213-1336; 241 NW 429

Mental incapacity—proof required to set aside. In order to set aside conveyances on the grounds of mental incapacity and undue influence, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish same by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Mental incompetency—realty exchange—voidable—duty to restore status quo. Where one of the parties to an exchange contract of realty is mentally incompetent, such contract is only voidable, not void, being valid until disaffirmed, and it can only be disaffirmed as a whole, not in part, and when party seeks to avoid such contract it is necessary to restore, or offer to restore, status quo.

In re Gensicke, (NOR); 237 NW 333

Mental incompetency—undue influence—burden of proof. The mental incompetency of a grantor to execute a deed of conveyance, or the obtaining of said conveyance by the grantee by undue influence, when assigned as ground for setting aside said conveyance, must be established by plaintiff and by clear, satisfactory and convincing evidence—there being no proof that a confidential relationship existed. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to meet said burden of proof.

Foster v Foster, 223-455; 273 NW 165

Mental unsoundness—fraud—degree of proof. A deed of conveyance will be set aside on the ground of fraud or grantor's mental unsoundness, only on clear and convincing evidence in support of the charge. Evidence held insufficient.

Ellis v Allman, 217-483; 250 NW 172

Rescission of contract of sale—evidence sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to justify the rescission and cancellation of a contract of purchase of real estate on the ground of the mental incompetency of the purchaser.

Ridenour v Jamison, 218-277; 254 NW 802

Setting aside deed—burden of proof. A delivered deed carries a presumption in favor of its validity, so one suing to set aside a deed has the burden of proving that at the time of execution of deed, grantor was incapable of understanding her property and her relations thereto, or understanding natural objects of her bounty or nature and effect of instrument.

Bishop v Leighty, (NOR); 237 NW 251

 (b) WANT OF ASSENT (Undue Influence, Mistake, Insanity, etc.)—continued

Validity. Evidence relative to the validity of deeds reviewed, and held insufficient to show that the grantor was mentally incompetent to execute them, or that they were the result of undue influence.

Thompson v Mott, 202-246; 210 NW 91

Validity of deed. Record reviewed, and held insufficient to establish such mental incapacity in a grantor as to invalidate a deed executed by him.

Goodman v Andrews, 203-979; 213 NW 605

Fraud—evidence—sufficiency. Principle reaffirmed that testimony sufficient to overthrow a duly acknowledged deed of conveyance must amount to more than a preponderance—must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing. Record held insufficient to meet said rule of law.

Richardson v Richardson, 216-1205; 250 NW 481

Fiduciary relationship — nonpresumption. Principle reaffirmed (1) that no presumption of fiduciary relationship arises from the fact of kinship, and (2) that in the absence of proof of such relationship, plaintiff in an action to set aside a conveyance because of undue influence, has the burden to establish such fraud by convincing evidence. Evidence held quite insufficient.

Craig v Craig, 222-783; 269 NW 743

Fraud—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held sufficient to set aside deed for fraud in its procurement.

Marsh v Hanna, 219-682; 259 NW 225

Assumption of mortgage debt—reformation of instruments—generally. Where an instrument is executed without consideration on the part of a grantee, to assume and pay the mortgage debt, the contract is not binding upon him, or if the deed is delivered in blank, or the conveyance made as security only, or if a clause is inserted by fraud, inadvertence, or mistake, without the knowledge or acquiescence of the grantee, he may have the instrument reformed in equity so as to make it express the true intent and understanding of the parties.

Guarantee Co. v Cox, 201-598; 206 NW 278

Age of grantor—insufficient to invalidate deed. Before the supreme court will set aside a deed executed by a person advanced in years, there must be evidence that such individual was not capable of carrying on his business transactions, and that he did not understand the nature of the transaction into which he was entering.

Gilligan v Jones, 226-86; 283 NW 434

Cancellation of fraudulently acquired deed. A person who secretly buys up a certificate of execution sale and takes a sheriff's deed in his own name in violation of his agreement with the judgment-defendant to pay off the judgment in question and thereby satisfy his own debt to the judgment-defendant has no standing to contest an action by the latter for the cancellation of said deed.

Swearingen v Neff, 204-1167; 216 NW 621

Confidential relation. Where an elderly but unusually self-willed woman executed a deed to her stepson during time in which she managed her own affairs, and relationship with grantee was only that which ordinarily exists between a mother and son, evidence in action to set aside the deed did not warrant finding that confidential relationship existed so as to raise presumption of fraud, but as to the assignment of a mortgage procured by this stepson after he came to live with her and had taken over management of her affairs, evidence justified finding that such relationship did exist.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Confidential relationship—showing grantor's freedom of action. One who stands in a confidential relationship to another may not retain advantages of a transaction with the cestui when they may reasonably be the result of the confidence reposed, unless he shows that the cestui acted with freedom, intelligence, and with full knowledge of the facts.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Transactions scrutinized with vigilance. Courts of equity must scrutinize, with jealous vigilance, transactions between persons sustaining relations of trust and confidence, to the end that the dominating member shall conduct himself with the utmost good faith.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Confidential relations — presumption — burden of proof. The law presumes that a deed of conveyance is fraudulent and void whenever it is made to appear that, when the deed was executed, the grantee occupied a position of trust and confidence as regards the grantor, or held a dominating and controlling influence over the grantor. It follows that the grantee must overthrow the presumption by a showing of the eminent fairness and legality of the transaction. Evidence held insufficient to overthrow the presumption.

McNeer v Beck, 205-196; 217 NW 825

Burden of proof. In an action to set aside a deed and an assignment of a mortgage executed by mother to stepson, burden was on plaintiff to establish the existence of confidential relationship raising presumption of fraud.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Actual or constructive fraud. A court of equity is not warranted in setting aside an executed contract such as a warranty deed in the absence of actual or constructive fraud.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Constructive fraud. Evidence held to show affirmatively that the execution of a deed was not brought about by any constructive fraud arising out of the intimate relations of the parties.

Utterback v Hollingsworth, 208-300; 225 NW 419

Constructive fraud not inevitable from blood relationship. As to constructive fraud arising from the gift of real property to one standing in a confidential or fiduciary relationship to the grantor, the rule placing the burden of proof on the grantee, to show the bona fides of the transaction, is of necessity applied according to the peculiar circumstances of each particular case, and not necessarily applied because mere blood relationship exists.

Jensen v Phippen, 225-302; 280 NW 528

Duty to set aside fraud-induced deed. When a deed has been manifestly obtained by the fraud of the grantee, and without consideration, a court of equity must set it aside, on a distinct prayer for such relief, and not assume to reform it, without any prayer therefor, and decree a life interest in the defrauded grantor.

Guenther v Kurtz, 204-732; 216 NW 39

Fiduciary relation—burden of proof. Plaintiff, in an action to avoid a deed of conveyance, makes a prima facie case of constructive fraud by proof that, when the deed was executed, the grantor, tho mentally competent, was, in the transaction of his business and in his conduct generally, under the absolute domination of the grantee. After such proof, the grantee must take on the burden of affirmatively showing the complete bona fides of the transaction. Proof that the deed left grantor practically penniless, that grantee paid no consideration and was aggressively active in obtaining the deed, accentuates the presumption of fraud instead of overcoming it.

Ennor v Hinsch, 219-1076; 260 NW 26

Fiduciary relation between husband and wife. A fiduciary relation within the meaning of the law is not established by a showing that the parties were husband and wife and that the wife frequently aided her husband in the transaction of his business, it appearing that the husband was physically infirm.

Arndt v Lapel, 214-594; 243 NW 605

Fiduciary relation—proof. The fact that a grantor and grantee in a deed (being father and son) frequently talk over business matters is, in and of itself, quite insufficient to establish a fiduciary relation.

Bardsley v Spencer, 215-616; 244 NW 275

Fiduciary relationship—intestate and heir—receiving property—failure of proof. In an action by heirs of intestate to set aside a conveyance of realty made by intestate to son, on the ground of an alleged fiduciary relationship existing between aged intestate and son, held, that evidence was insufficient to establish such relationship, and even tho such relationship existed, whatever property the son received from his mother was by her voluntary and intelligent act, and without duress, dominance or overreaching on his part.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Fiduciary relationship—required proof. In an action to set aside a trust agreement executed to a son and attorney by plaintiff, evidence held to support decree dismissing plaintiff's petition. The existence of a confidential relationship or facts giving rise thereto must be proved before doctrine of fiduciary relationship can be applied—the mere relationship of parent and child does not create fiduciary relationship.

Hatt v Hatt, (NOR); 265 NW 640

Fraudulent conveyance—sufficient showing. A deed from a mother to her son will be set aside as fraudulent, in a proper action by the administrator of the mother, on a showing that the mother, when the deed was executed, was in serious financial embarrassment, of which the son had full knowledge, and that the son, who then occupied a close fiduciary relation to his mother, presented no competent evidence of any consideration for the deed, or evidence overcoming the presumption of fraud and bad faith.

Howell v Howell, 211-70; 232 NW 816

Gift to daughter—no fiduciary relation—no fraud. Where a daughter, receiving a real estate gift from her parents, did not transact, nor advise concerning, her parents' business, nor dominate nor support them but, on the contrary, was more or less dependent upon them, such gift does not present a case of fiduciary or confidential relationship sufficient to nullify the deed on the ground of constructive fraud.

Jensen v Phippen, 225-302; 280 NW 528

Mere inference of invalidity. A mere alleged inference of fraud or illegality cannot overthrow a deed of conveyance.

Carr v McCauley, 215-298; 245 NW 290

Nullifying fraud—degree of proof required. A deed of conveyance will not be set aside for fraud practiced on the grantor unless proof of the fraud is clear, satisfactory, and convincing. Evidence held insufficient.

Valentine v Read, 217-57; 250 NW 634

Resulting trust denied—deed from father to son—conduct of parties. In a partition action involving a decedent's property, tried on issues raised by defendant's cross-petition, alleging that another property of decedent, which had been deeded by decedent to one of his sons, should be included in the partition action—in the absence of fraud—such deed therefor will not be set aside on the theory of a resulting trust in favor of the decedent's estate, when there is no evidence that either the grantor or grantee so considered it altho they both lived several years after the deed was made.

Gilligan v Jones, 226-86; 283 NW 434

Secret deeds—87-year-old grantor. A nephew, who was a sort of de facto guardian for his 87-year-old aunt, who procured from her certain deeds with utmost secrecy a short time before her death, and who did not record one of them until the day of her death, has the burden to prove his aunt acted of her own free will or from independent advice, when there is evidence bearing on her mental incapacity.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Transfer of land. A vendee of land who has never agreed to assume and pay a mortgage on the land cannot be made so liable by the act of the vendor in executing and recording, without the knowledge or consent of the vendee, a deed containing such assumption and agreement to pay, it appearing that the vendee promptly repudiated and rejected said deed.

Steffes v Hale, 204-226; 215 NW 248

Validity of assent—signing without reading. A party will not be permitted to say that he was defrauded into signing an instrument without knowing its contents when he could read, did not read, and was in no manner prevented from reading.

Legler v Ins. Assn., 214-937; 243 NW 157

(c) DELIVERY

Discussion. See § 8 ILB 254—Conditional delivery

Delivery—acts constituting. Delivery of a deed is necessarily established by uncontradicted, competent testimony that the grantor personally handed the deed to the grantee, with the intent to make the delivery.

Buckley v Ebendorf, 204-896; 216 NW 20

Delivery — indispensable elements. The physical delivery by a grantor to a grantee of a warranty deed passes no title unless such was the intent of the parties.

Kiser v Ins. Assn., 213-18; 237 NW 328

Intent of grantor as element of delivery. The intent of the grantor is the controlling element in the delivery of a deed.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Acceptance of deed—no waiver of easement rights under contract. When a contract of sale of land provided that the deed would grant an easement for the right of ingress and egress to the property, but the deed drawn on the same day failed to make such provision, the acceptance of the deed by the grantee did not waive the provision of the collateral contract, altho ordinarily the acceptance of a deed would complete the execution of the contract and would be conclusive evidence of its complete fulfilment.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Delivery—burden of proof. A judgment creditor who claims that his transcript of judgment was filed prior to the delivery of a deed of conveyance by the judgment debtor has the burden of so showing.

Richardson v Estle, 214-1007; 243 NW 611

Burden on plaintiff to show delivery of deed. In a replevin action against an administrator for possession of a deed found in the safety deposit box of the deceased, the burden is on the plaintiffs to show a valid delivery of the deed effective to pass title.

Orris v Whipple, 224-1157; 280 NW 617

Delivery of deed as gift. The unconditional delivery, as a gift, of a duly executed and acknowledged deed of conveyance, by the compos mentis grantor therein, and without fraud, to a third party with explicit direction, both orally and in writing, to said party, to hold said deed for the grantee, and to record the same immediately upon the death of the grantor, constitutes an irrevocable delivery to said grantee; and a priori, when, in addition to the foregoing, it affirmatively appears from the circumstances of the transaction that the grantor was intending to pass title to the grantee.

Keating v Augustine, 213-1336; 241 NW 429

Deeds to children delivered to trustee—wife acquiescing in husband's instructions. An agreement reached by a husband and wife, that he should deed his property to her and she would deed it to the children, the deeds to be placed with a trustee, who was to record the first deed on the death of the husband and then record the second deeds on the death of the wife, is binding on the wife, when she is present at the execution of the deeds and, by her silence, acquiesces in the instructions given by the husband to the trustee.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Delivery — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held to establish the delivery of a deed.

McCloud v Bates, 220-252; 261 NW 766

Delivery—evidence—sufficiency. On the issue of delivery of a deed, the recitals in the will of the grantor that he was then deeding the property to said grantee, and other oral statements of the purported grantor to the same effect, may have material and influential bearing.

Arndt v Lapel, 214-594; 243 NW 605

Insufficient delivery. No delivery of a deed of conveyance is shown by the act of the grantor (without the knowledge of the grantee) in executing and acknowledging the deed, with the continuing purpose in mind to change the grantee if the grantee predeceased the grantor, and thereafter retaining the deed among his (grantor's) private papers, with a memorandum attached to the deed, directing the grantor's executor to make delivery.

Lathrop v Knop, 202-621; 210 NW 764

Deposit by grantor in safety deposit box. Legal delivery of deeds of conveyance is established, (1) by proof that the grantor executed them, placed them in her safety deposit box in a bank, and apparently never thereafter disturbed them during her lifetime, and (2) by proof, aliunde the deeds, that, in doing that which she did do, she intended to pass title to the grantees; and this is true even tho grantor after executing said deeds continued, until her death, to manage said lands as she had managed them prior to the execution of said deeds. (Overruled, see Orris v Whipple, 224-1157; 280 NW 617.)

Robertson v Renshaw, 220-572; 261 NW 645

Depositing with third party. The depositing of a duly executed deed with a third party with direction without reservation to record the same in case of the death of the grantor constitutes a delivery to the grantee.

Goodman v Andrews, 203-979; 213 NW 605

Escrow delivery—effect on title—life estate reserved. Delivery of a deed to a trustee for redelivery to grantee after grantor's death reserves a life estate in the grantor, with title immediately passing to grantee, but with his right to possession and enjoyment of land therein conveyed postponed until grantor's death.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Escrow—safety deposit box—recall power nullifies delivery. No valid delivery of a deed is made by depositing it in a safety deposit box over which grantor thereafter maintains full dominion, with power to recall the deed. (Davis v College, 208 Iowa 480; Robertson v Renshaw, 220 Iowa 572; and Boone College v Forrest, 223 Iowa 1260, overruled.)

Orris v Whipple, 224-1157; 280 NW 617

Delivery—intent of parties. An effective delivery of an instrument is made to the grantee by the naked execution of the instrument and by simply leaving said instrument at the place of execution, if such was the actual intent of the parties.

Beery v Glynn, 214-635; 243 NW 365

Delivery by mail. Where it was definitely agreed between a debtor and creditor that the debtor would execute a deed of specified land to the creditor in partial satisfaction of the debt, and that the debtor upon the execution of the deed would forward it to the county recorder with direction to record and forward to the grantee, delivery will be deemed complete at the point of time when the deed is duly mailed by the debtor to the recorder.

Richardson v Estle, 214-1007; 243 NW 611

Delivery to notary—acceptance by grantee without obtaining possession of deed. Acceptance is a necessary element of the delivery of a deed and may be presumed where the conveyance is beneficial to the grantee and carries no onerous obligations. Where the grantee agreed to accept a deed, and it was executed and, in her presence, delivered for her to a notary to be recorded, there was acceptance and title vested in her at the time of delivery to the notary, altho the notary kept the deed and she never had possession of it.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Delivery to trustee with power to recall. A grantor, in depositing a deed with a trustee for delivery to the grantee upon grantor's death, may reserve the right to recall the deed; but if he does not exercise such right, the final passing of the deed by the trustee to the grantee, after the death of the grantor, consummates a valid delivery. (Overruled, see Orris v Whipple, 224-1157; 280 NW 617.)

Davis v College, 208-480; 222 NW 858

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Delivery—presumption. A deed in the possession of the grantee, tho the estate created is to take effect in the future, carries a presumption of delivery.

Browne v Johnson, 218-498; 255 NW 862

Delivery—presumption attending possession by grantee. A deed of conveyance when produced by the grantee therein, need not be accompanied by any evidence of the execution or of the delivery of the deed, because due execution and delivery will be presumed until he who attacks it shows to the contrary. And this is true even tho the deed did not reach the hands of the grantee, or was not recorded, until after the death of the grantor.

Heavner v Kading, 209-1275; 228 NW 313

Delivery—overthrowing presumption. The presumption of delivery of a deed which arises from possession and recording of the deed by the grantee cannot be overthrown by equivocal testimony.

Jones v Betz, 203-767; 210 NW 609

Delivery—presumption from record. The fact that a deed of conveyance has been duly recorded generates a presumption of delivery

(c) DELIVERY—continued

so strong and persuasive that only clear and satisfactory evidence will overthrow such presumption. Evidence held insufficient.

Gibson v Gibson, 205-1285; 217 NW 852

Delivery presumed from recording. Recording of a deed does not constitute delivery, but it is evidence which creates a presumption of delivery rebuttable only by clear and satisfactory evidence.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Delivery—rebutting presumption by possession—forgery. Transfers and assignments of property of a deceased, in the hands of certain heirs, raise a presumption that they were delivered. However, facts and circumstances may overcome this presumption, especially when it is shown that the signatures of the deceased to the instruments are forgeries.

Brien v Davidson, 225-595; 281 NW 150

Elements of conveyance—delivery. All the elements for conveying the title to land were established by evidence that when a warranty deed was given to prevent an expected judgment against the grantor from becoming a lien on the land, with a lease back to the grantor to terminate at the death of himself and his wife, it was signed by all parties in the presence of the others, a copy was given the grantee, it was acknowledged by a notary and given him to record and keep, and three years later the grantor affixed a federal stamp to the deed and re-recorded it.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Equitable estoppel—fraud as essential element. If there be no fraud, actual or constructive, in the execution and delivery of a deed of conveyance, there can be no estoppel against the grantee.

McCloud v Bates, 220-252; 261 NW 766

Management of estate—unlawful delivery of action. An administrator who has in his possession a deed of conveyance purporting to have been executed by the deceased has no authority to deliver said deed to the grantee in said deed without an authorizing order of court.

Blain v Blain, 215-69; 244 NW 827

Mortgage assumed by grantee—accrual of action. When grantees of property accepted a deed by which they assumed a mortgage debt on the property, the statute of limitations began to run from the time of the acceptance of the deed, but the grantees were still liable after the 10 years when they had extended the time of maturity.

Lincoln Ins. v McKenney, 227-727; 289 NW 4

Nondelivery of pledge—effect. An agreement that a deed of conveyance may be held by a creditor as collateral security to an indebtedness of the debtor is ineffective when unaccompanied by an express or implied delivery of the deed to the creditor.

Andrew v Hanchett, 208-1179; 226 NW 3

Non-presumption of delivery. Assuming that, at the trial of an action to quiet title, the production of a deed of conveyance by the grantee named therein creates a presumption that the deed was duly delivered to the grantee, yet such presumption does not prevail when the deed was in the possession of the grantor's administrator at the commencement of said action, and when the grantee is enabled to produce the deed at the trial because the administrator, before the trial, unlawfully delivered said deed to the grantee.

Blain v Blain, 215-69; 244 NW 827

Passing with intent to transfer title. An intent on the part of a grantor to make the passing of the instrument a present transfer of title is an element of an effective delivery.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Proof of delivery. In an action for partition, wherein defendant claimed absolute title under a deed which she first physically obtained, after the grantor's death, by going to the bank where it was on deposit, the defendant is a competent witness to testify, (1) that she knew where the deed was kept, but (2) not that grantor told her where it was kept.

Robertson v Renshaw, 220-572; 261 NW 645

Recording long after grantor's death—no delivery—nonvalidity. A deed, found among the personal effects of a deceased grantor and recorded seven or eight years after the estate was closed, not having been delivered by grantor nor ordered delivered by the court, has no validity.

Forrest v Otis, 224-63; 276 NW 102

Delivery intended by recording. If a deed, after being signed and acknowledged by grantor, is placed of record by him with the intention of making the recording stand for delivery, the title will pass to the grantees, assuming there was acceptance by them of the title.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Rebuttable presumption from recording. In an action by a 73-year-old grantor to set aside deed to stepchildren, wherein grantor reserved a life estate to himself, the grantor failed to overcome by clear and satisfactory evidence the presumption arising from the recording of the deed that there was a delivery that transferred the title.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Sale or transfer—nonintent to pass title—effect. Proof that an insured, after the issuance of a policy, and without notice to the insurer, executed, physically delivered, and permitted to be recorded an unqualified warranty deed to the insured property, establishes, prima facie, an automatic forfeiture of the policy when the policy provides that such forfeiture shall follow any "sale or transfer" of the property without notice; but evidence is admissible, under proper plea, in avoidance of the apparent forfeiture, to show that there was no completed sale or transfer in fact—that the insured-grantor and grantee mutually understood and agreed that such execution, delivery, and recording should not have the effect to pass title until a future date; but ordinarily such evidence can only generate a jury question on the issue of intent to pass title.

Kiser v Ins. Assn., 213-18; 237 NW 328

Symbolical delivery. Evidence relative to an alleged symbolical delivery of a deed of conveyance reviewed, and held insufficient to establish delivery.

Blain v Blain, 215-69; 244 NW 827

Symbolical or constructive delivery. An effective symbolical or constructive delivery of a deed of conveyance is established by proof (1) that the grantor showed the deed to a party (not the grantee) and, in effect, said: "I am going to keep this deed in my safety deposit box in the bank. After my death you get the deed from the box and record it"; (2) that later when the grantor was stricken with a fatal illness he handed a key to said party and in effect said it was the key to his said box, and told said party to look after the recording of the deed, and (3) that after the death of the grantor, the safety deposit box was unlocked by said party with said key, the deed was found therein, and thereupon recorded.

Heavner v Kading, 209-1275; 228 NW 313

Surrender—effect. The voluntary surrender of an unrecorded deed by the grantee therein, with the intent thereby to relinquish the title conveyed by such deed, and the acceptance of such surrender by the grantor, in consideration of other agreements entered into by the grantor and grantee, estop the grantee from asserting any further rights under the deed.

Bibler v Bibler, 205-639; 216 NW 99

Wrongful delivery—effect. Principle recognized that no title passes where the escrow holder of a deed of conveyance delivers the deed to the grantee without performance of the conditions upon which it was to be delivered.

Lindberg v Younggren, 209-613; 228 NW 574

(d) COVENANTS

Discussion. See 3 ILB 40—Equitable restrictions on land; 8 ILB 259—Liability of grantor to remote grantee on covenants

Attorney fees. Attorney fees may be a proper element of recovery in an action for breach of a covenant of warranty.

Kellar v Lindley, 203-57; 212 NW 360

Breach of warranty—evidence available against vouchee. In an action for breach of warranty because of an existing mortgage on the property, the foreclosure proceedings and judgment entry therein are admissible against the covenantor-defendant to prove the plaintiff's measure of damages, it appearing that the covenantor had been duly vouched into said foreclosure proceedings.

Kellar v Lindley, 203-57; 212 NW 360

Breach—evidence—sufficiency. A covenant against incumbrance, or to defend the title against the lawful claims of all persons whomsoever cannot be deemed broken on a naked showing that the covenantee remained out of possession because some one else was in possession. The nature of that possession is, manifestly, all-important; e.g., whether it is lawful and paramount and hostile to the rights of the covenantee.

Pope v Coe, 208-759; 225 NW 939

Breach—insufficient record. A mortgagee may not maintain an action for damages for breach of the covenant of warranty of title in the mortgage, on a record which fails to show that the mortgage is invalid in any particular.

Churchman v Wilson, 204-1017; 216 NW 726

"Buildings"—intent of parties. The word "building" as used in restrictive covenants in deeds of conveyance will be so construed as to give effect to the manifest intention and purposes of the parties. Held, inter alia, that structures for screening sand, and a derrick with hoisting machinery were "buildings" within the meaning of restrictive covenants against the erection of buildings which would cut off a view.

Curtis v Schmidt, 212-1279; 237 NW 463

Building restrictions—knowledge of. A grantee of land who at the time of purchasing knows, generally, that there are building restrictions running with the land, is bound by such restrictions even tho they are omitted from the deed taken by him.

Burgess v Magarian, 214-694; 243 NW 356

Contract—presumption as to waiver. A provision for the forfeiture of a life estate reserved in a contract for the sale of land will be presumed waived, prima facie, when not inserted in the subsequently executed deed.

Toedt v Bollhoefer, 206-39; 218 NW 56

Damages—improper measure. In an action for damages consequent on a breach of the covenant of warranty of title contained in a mortgage, the amount of the mortgage is not the proper measure of damages, when the mortgagor received no consideration for executing the mortgage, and when the mortgagee parted with no consideration, except to

I DEEDS IN GENERAL—concluded(d) COVENANTS—concluded

forbear the enforcement of his judgment against a third party.

Churchman v Wilson, 204-1017; 216 NW 726

Educational and religious purposes—declaration of purpose or trust. A covenant in a deed specifying use for educational and religious purposes is only a "declaration of purpose" or a trust.

Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260; 275 NW 132; 116 ALR 67

Indemnity bond as covenant of seizin. An indemnity bond conditioned to hold the obligee harmless from any loss which he may sustain by reason of a defect of title to certain real estate, is equivalent to a covenant of seizin and governed by the same rule, to-wit: no action for substantial damages is maintainable on the bond until a hostile, paramount title is asserted.

Duke v Tyler, 209-1345; 230 NW 319

Legal cancellation of covenant of seizin. A grantee of land in legal effect cancels the covenant of seizin contained in his deed, and likewise cancels an indemnity bond which is tantamount to a covenant of seizin, by reconveying the land to the grantor with covenant of seizin.

Duke v Tyler, 209-1345; 230 NW 319

Restrictions as to use of property—estoppel. Record reviewed, and held insufficient to show that property owners were estopped to insist on compliance with certain restrictions as to the use of platted lots.

Shuler v Sand Co., 203-134; 209 NW 731

Restrictions as to use of property—omission from deed. The grantee of a lot who takes by quitclaim deed which contains no restrictions as to the use of the property is, nevertheless, bound by restrictions as to the use of the property contained in the deed to his grantor and in substantially all other deeds to lots in the addition, it appearing that the addition in question was publicly and notoriously platted as a restricted residence area.

Shuler v Sand Co., 203-134; 209 NW 731

Unilateral contract—voiding contract by one's own default. A provision in a deed of conveyance to the effect that if the grantee fails to make any of the payments which he has agreed to make, or fails to perform any of the obligations which he has agreed to perform, the deed "shall be void and the title immediately revert" in grantor, simply means that the grantee has covenanted that if he defaults, his default shall void the deed if the grantor so elects. Especially is this true when the acts of the parties indicate that they mutually so construe the contract.

Earle v Rehmann, 214-784; 243 NW 345

Warranty and incumbrance—drainage improvement. A covenant against incumbrance is not broken by the existence of a public drainage improvement on the land, nor is a general covenant of warranty breached by the fact that, subsequent to the deed, an additional assessment is levied on the land for such improvement.

Kleinmeyer v Willenbrock, 202-1049; 210 NW 447

II MERGER OF REALTY INTERESTS GENERALLY

Merger and cancellation. The fact that the holder of trust or mortgage-secured bonds later acquires an incomplete title to the mortgaged premises, and later conveys both the premises and bonds in trust, as security to a creditor, and yet later has his title to the premises fully completed, does not work a merger and cancellation of the bonds, it appearing that such merger and cancellation would have been to the disadvantage of said titleholder and his transferee in trust.

Sunset Park Co. v Eddy, 205-432; 216 NW 93

Merger of life estate and contingent remainder into fee. The grantee of a life estate, on condition, however, that if grantee violates any one of named prohibited acts the said estate shall ipso facto instantly terminate, and the fee pass to grantee's issue, or to named remaindermen if grantee then has no issue, may, if without issue, take a conveyance by warranty deed from said contingent remaindermen of all their present and possible future interest in the land, and thereby merge the life estate and contingent remainders into a fee in himself.

Thorsen v Long, 212-1073; 237 NW 515

Contract to convey merged in resulting deed. A contract to convey land is presumed to be merged in the subsequent deed executed in performance thereof, except that the contract may be resorted to for explanation of an ambiguity or collateral agreement not incorporated in the deed, but, in instant case, deed held to be unambiguous when it warranted against all persons other than those asserting rights under existing tenancies and when the contract provided for possession upon delivery of the deed subject to all leases. Thereunder, the provisions of the contract merged in the deed so that grantee could not look to grantor for relief when the tenant in possession refused to vacate.

Swensen v Ins. Co., 225-428; 280 NW 600

Merger of easement in title and fee. A recorded conveyance of land which, in addition to conveying the land, also grants a private roadway over other lands of the grantor, creates an easement which runs with the land, even tho the grantor subsequently reacquires title to the lands first conveyed and again becomes the owner of both tracts and subsequently conveys both tracts by separate conveyances to different grantees.

Feilhaber v Swiler, 203-1133; 212 NW 417

Establishing trust to defeat heir's judgment creditors. When a will devised all of testatrix's property to daughter in trust, directing trustee to make a monthly payment to a third party and to transfer a one-fourth interest in the trust estate to each of two grandchildren when they reached a certain age, and providing that daughter should have a one-half interest in the estate during her life only in the event obligations to her judgment creditors were barred or satisfied, such will established a trust, and did not repose entire beneficial interest in daughter. Nor was the trust extinguished by a merger of daughter's legal and equitable estate so that property could be subjected to satisfaction of creditor's judgments, because in equity the doctrine of merger will not be invoked if it would frustrate the testatrix's expressed intentions or if there is some other reason for keeping the estates separate.

Freier v Longnecker, 227-366; 288 NW 444

Quitclaim to avoid foreclosure—effect of existing junior liens—insurance unaffected. A mortgagee's status as such, as affecting his rights under a fire insurance policy, is not lost by merger when he takes a quitclaim deed from mortgagor agreeing not to foreclose if no junior liens exist against the property, when thereafter it is found that such liens do exist whose presence would cause a merger to be against the interest and inconsistent with the intention of the mortgagee.

Guaranty Ins. v Ins. Assn., 224-1207; 278 NW 913

Termination—acquisition of title by stockholder of corporate lessee. A lease in which a corporation with many stockholders is lessee may not be said to be merged, and thereby terminated, simply because some of the stockholders acquire the equitable title to the real estate.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

Transfer of property mortgaged—merger—general rule. Where a titleholder of real estate pays off a prior existing mortgage thereon, the mortgage lien merges in the fee, but where a mortgagee acquires the fee to the mortgaged premises his mortgage lien does not thereby merge therewith if this would be detrimental to his interest unless he intends such merger.

I PARTIES AUTHORIZED TO TAKE

Disqualification of officer. A chattel mortgage which is acknowledged before a notary public who is the mortgagee, is not recordable, and if recorded, the record imparts no constructive notice.

Heitzman v Hannah, 206-775; 221 NW 470

Elements of conveyance—delivery. All the elements for conveying the title to land were established by evidence that when a warranty deed was given to prevent an expected judgment against the grantor from becoming a lien on the land, with a lease back to the grantor to terminate at the death of himself and his wife, it was signed by all parties in the presence of the others, a copy was given the grantee, it was acknowledged by a notary and given him to record and keep, and three years later the grantor affixed a federal stamp to the deed and re-recorded it.

ANALYSIS

- I FORM OF CERTIFICATE
- II CERTIFICATE AS EVIDENCE
- III OFFICIAL TITLE OF OFFICER

I FORM OF CERTIFICATE

Note: A legal form of a certificate of acknowledgment is set out in §10103

Statutory form. In absence of express requirements to that effect, exact language of statute need not be used, it being sufficient if necessary facts required to be contained in acknowledgment be expressed in words of substantially equivalent import.

Hauser v Callaway, 36 F 2d, 667

Statutory forms—recital as to authority of officer—sufficiency. It is the general rule that forms of acknowledgment as prescribed in statutes are permissive, and not mandatory, and it is therefore sufficient if substantial compliance as to essentials is present. So where title of acknowledging officer did not appear in body of certificate as suggested by statute, but appeared in subscription of certificate, the acknowledgment was held valid.

Advance-Rumely Co. v Wagner, 29 F 2d, 984

Insufficient form. Notary's certificate of acknowledgment to conditional sale contract, not mentioning in body name, title, or county of subscribing notary, held insufficient as basis for record.

In re Holley, 25 F 2d, 979

Sufficient acknowledgment. Under statute, requiring notary in acknowledgment of mortgage to show that mortgagor acknowledged execution of instrument to be his voluntary act and deed, acknowledgment, reciting that mortgagor named who executed said instrument "acknowledged said instrument to be his voluntary act and deed," held sufficient to make filing and recording of such mortgage constructive notice; the objection that the acknowledgment stated that the instrument, and not the execution of the instrument, was the mortgagor's free act and deed, being hypercritical.

Hauser v Callaway, 36 F 2d, 667

Form and contents—failure of statutory requirements—not constructive notice. Under statute requiring that, in order to give constructive notice, conditional sales contracts be acknowledged in the same manner as chattel mortgages, a certificate of acknowledgment on a conditional sales contract, stating merely that person making acknowledgment was personally known to notary and that person making acknowledgment said he signed it voluntarily, held defective, because notary did not therein identify the person making the acknowledgment as signer of contract acknowledged. Hence contract was invalid as against creditors of bankrupt conditional buyer.

In re Elliott, 72 F 2d, 300

Name variation of mortgagor—when non-effective. A mortgage executed by "Chester C. Callaway", which was acknowledged, filed, and recorded, was constructive notice to trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of Charles Chester Callaway, bankrupt, the bankrupt being best known in the community in which he lived by the name which he signed to the mortgage, and the fact that the acknowledgment stated that he "acknowledged said instrument", instead of statutory requirement of "acknowledged execution of instrument", was held sufficient to make the filing and recording of such mortgage constructive notice.

Hauser v Callaway, 36 F 2d, 667

II CERTIFICATE AS EVIDENCE

Impeachment by notary of his own certificate. Very little weight will be given to the testimony of a notary public that the recitals of his certificate are false.

McDaniel v Bank, 210-1287; 232 NW 653

Denial of signature overcome by certificate of acknowledgment. Tho a proper denial of the genuineness of the signature to an instrument casts the burden on the opposing litigant to prove the genuineness of such signature, yet, if the instrument is one which is legally acknowledgeable and is duly acknowledged and properly introduced in evidence with the acknowledgment, the burden of proof henceforth is on the party causing the signature to be denied to overcome, by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, the very strong presumption, generated by the certificate of acknowledgment, that the instrument was actually executed by the acknowledging party. Held, presumption not overcome.

Northwestern Ins. Co. v Blohm, 212-89; 234 NW 268

Presumption. Principle reaffirmed that great weight is accorded to a certificate of acknowledgment.

Hutchins v Jones Piano Co., 209-394; 228 NW 281

III OFFICIAL TITLE OF OFFICER

10101 Certificate of acknowledgment.

Curing defects. A notary public may not, after his term of appointment has expired, voluntarily or under order of court validly attach a new certificate of acknowledgment to a statutory agreement for arbitration executed during his expired term, even tho, at the time of attaching such new certificate, he was a notary public under a new appointment.

Koht v Towne, 201-538; 207 NW 596

Disqualified notary — when inconsequential. The validity of a deed of conveyance is, as between the grantor and grantee, in no manner affected by the fact that the deed was acknowledged before a disqualified notary public.

Shanda v Bank, 220-290; 260 NW 841

Impeachment—evidence—sufficiency. Principle recognized that testimony sufficient to overthrow the probative force of a certificate of acknowledgment must amount to more than a preponderance in the balancing of probabilities.

Parry v Reinertson, 208-739; 224 NW 489; 63 ALR 1051

Presumption. Principle reaffirmed that great weight is accorded to a certificate of acknowledgment.

Hutchins v Piano Co., 209-394; 228 NW 281

10103 Forms of acknowledgment.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 135; '30 AG Op 144

Curing defects. A notary public may not, after his term of appointment has expired, voluntarily or under order of court validly attach a new certificate of acknowledgment to a statutory agreement for arbitration executed during his expired term, even tho, at the time of attaching such new certificate, he was a notary public under a new appointment.

Koht v Towne, 201-538; 207 NW 596

Denial of signature overcome by certificate of acknowledgment. Northwestern Ins. v Blohm, 212-89; 234 NW 268

Discrepancy in names—effect. The fact that in the body of a mortgage, and in the certificate of acknowledgment of said mortgage, the name of the wife of the mortgagor-owner appears as "Mary F. McNeff" instead of "Mary T. McNeff" (her correct name) is not of controlling importance on the issue as to the validity of the mortgage as to the wife, it appearing that she was correctly identified in said certificate of acknowledgment "as the wife" of said mortgagor-owner.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v McNeff, 220-1225; 264 NW 105

Evidence—inference of execution. The fact that a mortgage carries a notarial certificate of acknowledgment by the parties purporting to execute it is persuasive evidence that said parties did, in fact, execute it—that their signatures are genuine.

Greenland v Abben, 218-255; 254 NW 830

Fraudulent assignment—evidence. In an action by heirs of an intestate against a son and heir of intestate to set aside a transfer of a note and mortgage from intestate to said son, evidence held insufficient to show signatures of aged mother are not the genuine signatures of intestate on assignments.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Impeaching signature but not acknowledgment—effect. Even tho it appears that the purported signature of a wife to a promissory note and mortgage (admittedly executed by the husband on his own land) was affixed by someone other than the wife, yet if the mortgage carries a certificate of acknowledgment in due and proper form as required by law reciting an acknowledgment by said wife of said mortgage as her voluntary act and deed, the wife must, in order to avoid the mortgage as to herself, overcome by clear, satisfactory and convincing evidence the facts affirmed in said certificate.

First Tr. JSL Bk. v McNeff, 220-1225; 264 NW 105

Official title—sufficiency. A certificate of acknowledgment which in the body thereof describes the acknowledging officer as a "notary public in and for said county" is all-sufficient, when the heading to the acknowledgment specifically names the county.

Dunham v Grant, 207-602; 223 NW 385

See Citizens Bk. v Hamilton, 209-626; 227 NW 112

Omission of name of officer—effect. A certificate of acknowledgment may be sufficient without any recital therein of the name of the officer before whom the acknowledgment was taken.

Manbeck Motor v Garside, 208-656; 226 NW 9

Statutory forms—recital as to authority of officer—sufficiency. It is the general rule that forms of acknowledgment as prescribed in statutes are permissive, and not mandatory, and it is therefore sufficient if substantial compliance as to essentials is present. So where title of acknowledging officer did not appear in body of certificate as suggested by statute, but appeared in subscription of certificate, the acknowledgment was held valid.

Hawkeye Ins. v Valley-Des Moines Co., 220-556; 260 NW 669; 105 ALR 1018

Delivery of deed—presumption from record. The fact that a deed of conveyance has been duly recorded generates a presumption of delivery so strong and persuasive that only clear and satisfactory evidence will overthrow such presumption. Evidence held insufficient.

Gibson v Gibson, 205-1285; 217 NW 852

Delivery of deed presumed from recording. Recording of a deed does not constitute delivery, but it is evidence which creates a presumption of delivery rebuttable only by clear and satisfactory evidence.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Fraudulent conveyances—transfers invalid— withholding from record. The withholding of a mortgage from record until after the mortgagor became involved in litigation is not, in and of itself, sufficient to justify an inference of fraud, in the face of unquestioned evidence that the debt secured was genuine.

Citizens Bank v Hamilton, 209-626; 227 NW 112

Husband and wife—secret, unrecorded deed—estoppel. A wife who, even without fraudulent intent, receives from her husband a secret, voluntary conveyance of land, and withholds the deed from record for many years, and allows her husband publicly to treat, manage, and control the land as his own and to obtain credit on the strength of such apparent ownership, thereby estops herself from asserting her ownership against said creditors.

Meltzer v Shafer, 215-785; 244 NW 851

Delivery intended by recording. If a deed, after being signed and acknowledged by grantor, is placed of record by him with the intention of making the recording stand for delivery, the title will pass to the grantees, assuming there was acceptance by them of the title.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Delivery—rebuttable presumption from recording. In an action by a 73-year-old grantor to set aside deed to stepchildren, wherein grantor reserved a life estate to himself, the grantor failed to overcome by clear and satisfactory evidence the presumption arising from the recording of the deed that there was a delivery that transferred the title.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Disqualification of officer. A chattel mortgage which is acknowledged before a notary public who is the mortgagee is not recordable, and, if recorded, the record imparts no constructive notice.

Heitzman v Hannah, 206-775; 221 NW 470

Elements of conveyance. All the elements for conveying the title to land were established by evidence that when a warranty deed was given to prevent an expected judgment against the grantor from becoming a lien on the land, with a lease back to the grantor to terminate at the death of himself and his wife, it was signed by all parties in the presence of the others, a copy was given the grantee, it was acknowledged by a notary and given him to record and keep, and three years later the grantor affixed a federal stamp to the deed and re-recorded it.

Huxley v Liess, 226-819; 285 NW 216

Failure to record deed—effect. In a controversy between a landlord and a chattel mortgagee over the priority of their liens, it is quite immaterial that the landlord's title deed is not of record.

Corydon Bank v Scott, 217-1227; 252 NW 536

Mortgages executed on same day on same property. As between mortgages executed and delivered on the same day on the same property, it will be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, that the mortgage first recorded was first executed and delivered, and consequently entitled to priority.

Miller v Miller, 211-901; 232 NW 498

Nonconstructive knowledge. One who takes a mortgage from a mortgagor who, under the recording acts, appears to be the sole owner of the fee is not charged with constructive knowledge of matter which appears in the "probate record" (§11842, C., '31) and which suggests or implies that some person other than the apparent fee owner has an interest in the property.

Booth v Cady, 219-439; 257 NW 802

Recording long after grantor's death—no delivery—nonvalidity. A deed, found among the personal effects of a deceased grantor and recorded seven or eight years after the estate was closed, not having been delivered by grantor nor ordered delivered by the court, has no validity.

Forrest v Otis, 224-63; 276 NW 102

II INSTRUMENTS AFFECTING REAL ESTATE

Discharge in bankruptcy—effect. The discharge in bankruptcy of a mortgagor does not affect the lien of the mortgage.

Webber v King, 205-612; 218 NW 282

Attorney and client—correcting instrument after employment terminates. Attorneys hired to draft a mortgage, altho discovering that they have made a mistake in the description of the land, have no authority on their own initiative after termination of their employment and without consulting the mortgagee, to change the description and re-record the mortgage in the recorder's office.

Winker v Tiefenthaler, 225-180; 279 NW 436

Deeds to children delivered to trustee—wife acquiescing in husband's instructions. An agreement reached by a husband and wife, that he should deed his property to her and she would deed it to the children, the deeds to be placed with a trustee, who was to record the first deed on the death of the husband and then record the second deeds on the death of the wife, is binding on the wife, when she is present at the execution of the deeds and, by her silence, acquiesces in the instructions given by the husband to the trustee.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

III SUBSEQUENT PURCHASERS

Failure to record—who may complain.

Johnson v Railway, 202-1282; 211 NW 842

Inadvertent antedating and recording of intended second mortgage—priority. Altho all parties to two mortgages, growing out of the same transaction and executed at substantially the same time, intended that one of them should be a first lien, yet if the intended second mortgage and note are inadvertently antedated and recorded, a subsequent purchaser of said antedated and recorded mortgage acquires a first lien when he purchased in good faith, for value, before maturity, without notice of the intention of said original parties, and in the honest and justifiable belief that he was acquiring a first mortgage lien; and it is quite immaterial that said purchaser long delayed the recording of his formal assignment of the mortgage.

Fed. Bank v Sherburne, 213-612; 239 NW 778

Mortgage on interest of joint adventurer. Land belonging to a joint adventure becomes individually owned land when the joint adventurers execute and place of record an instrument which specifically states the fractional individual ownership of each in the land. It follows that as subsequent mortgagee who in good faith relies on such record cannot be detrimentally affected by equities arising out of the joint adventure and existing between the joint adventurers.

State Bank v Calvert, 219-539; 258 NW 713

Oral contract contemporaneous with deed. When a duly recorded deed contains a prohibition against a sale or conveyance of any part of the land during the lifetime of the grantor, parol evidence is admissible against a subsequent mortgagee to show that the purpose of said prohibition was to protect the grantor during his lifetime in a contract reservation of rent in the land.

Iowa Corp. v Halligan, 214-903; 241 NW 475

Mortgages—recitals—effect. One who in good faith and for value purchases a note and a mortgage which from its face and recording date is a first lien, is not charged with notice that another mortgage of later date and record is in fact the first lien on the same land because the later mortgage runs to a federal land bank (which is prohibited from taking second mortgages) and recites that the land is free from incumbrance.

Fed. Bk. v Sherburne, 213-612; 239 NW 778

Unrecorded conveyance of interest of co-tenant. A tenant in common who, while in possession under a deed granting such tenancy, orally purchases his co-tenant's interest may not thereafter claim that his continued possession is notice to the world of his newly acquired right to his co-tenant's share. It follows that if the co-tenant, who has sold his interest, subsequently mortgages his apparent record interest to a good-faith mortgagee without notice of the oral purchase, the mortgage will take priority over the said purchase.

Oxford Jct. Bk. v Hall, 203-320; 211 NW 389

IV VALUABLE CONSIDERATION

Exchange of property. Instruments duly executed in exchange of property cannot be impeached without convincing proof of fraud, and values of exchanged properties are liberally regarded in determining adequacy of consideration.

Ragan v Lehman, (NOR); 216 NW 717

Purchaser—nonpayment—effect. The purchaser of land from a fraudulent grantee will not be protected as a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration when, at the time notice of the fraud is brought home to him, the purchase-price note was in the hands of the grantor, and unpaid.

Reining v Nevison, 203-995; 213 NW 609

Transfers and transactions invalid—good-faith grantee. Principle reaffirmed that a conveyance will be sustained in favor of a grantee who in good faith paid an adequate consideration, without participating in the fraudulent purpose, if any, of the grantor.

First N. Bk. v Currier, 218-1041; 256 NW 734

V NOTICE

(a) RECORD NOTICE

Prohibition against conveyance—validity—record. A provision in an ordinary warranty deed absolutely prohibiting a sale or conveyance of any part of the land during the lifetime of the grantor without the consent of the grantor, is not repugnant to the deed if the unrevealed purpose of said prohibition is legal, and a part of the consideration for the deed,

V NOTICE—continued(a) RECORD NOTICE—concluded and is expressed in a contract which accompanies the execution of the deed, even tho the contract be oral. It follows that the record of such deed charges third parties with notice of said contract if reasonable inquiry would reveal it.

Iowa Corp. v Halligan, 214-903; 241 NW 475

Landlord's contractual lien—constructive notice to trustee. Where a lease provided for lien in favor of lessors for taxes and other money paid by lessors under provisions of lease, and when assignments of lease to corporations, articles of incorporation of bankrupt lessee under its original name, and amendment changing its name to that of bankrupt had all been recorded, that record gave constructive notice to trustee in bankruptcy and all subsequent lienors of lessor's prior lien.

Ginsberg v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 721

(b) ACTUAL AND IMPLIED NOTICE

Actual notice without actual knowledge. A mortgagee will be deemed to have had "actual notice" of a prior unrecorded mortgage (or of a prior mortgage so defectively acknowledged that the record thereof imparts no constructive notice) when the facts and circumstances attending and surrounding the taking of the second mortgage are such as to lead him as a reasonably prudent person to make inquiries, and when such inquiries if prosecuted with ordinary diligence would have revealed the former mortgage.

Mill Owners Ins. v Goff, 210-1188; 232 NW 504

Codicil as deed. A duly signed, acknowledged, and recorded contract to the effect that a specified devise in the will of one of the parties to the contract should act as a deed to the other party to the contract will prevail over a subsequent conveyance of the property by the testator, especially when the grantee had actual notice of the contents of the will and of the contract in reference thereto.

Krcmar v Krcmar, 202-1166; 211 NW 699

Constructive notice imposes duty to make inquiry. A mortgagee who is constructively charged with notice of another mortgage executed on the same day is actually charged with notice that said other mortgage was first executed if appropriate inquiry would have revealed such fact.

Miller v Miller, 211-901; 232 NW 498

Inquiry and constructive notice. A purchaser of real estate must be charged with actual notice of such facts as he would have ascertained had he made such inquiries as ordinary prudence reasonably suggested.

Young v Hamilton, 213-1163; 240 NW 705

Maintenance of railroad bridge—notice implied. The existence, on a minor fractional part of a government 40-acre tract, of permanent improvements in the form of a railway bridge spanning a public drainage ditch constitutes implied notice to the purchaser of the remaining part of the said 40-acre tract of the unrecorded written contract right of the railway company to maintain said bridge in its then length and elevation without liability in damages to the owner of the abutting land.

Johnson v Railway, 202-1282; 211 NW 842

Mortgage on partner's undivided interest. The mortgagee of an undivided interest in land, taken on the supposition or assumption that the mortgagor's interest was absolute, is subject to a showing that the owners of the land were partners and that the land was the property of the partnership, and needed for the payment of partnership obligations, when the fact of such partnership and its ownership of the property in question could readily have been discovered by the mortgagee by the exercise of reasonable diligence before he accepted the mortgage.

Norwood v Parker, 208-62; 224 NW 831

Mortgages—unknown lessee—estoppel. A lessee of mortgaged land whose rights are such that the mortgagee is not chargeable with notice thereof, will not be permitted to assert his rights when he deliberately withholds such assertion until after the court enters a decree making permanent the receivership over the rents.

Ferguson v White, 213-1053; 240 NW 700

Wrongful release of conditionally canceled mortgage. Where, in rescission proceedings, a decree in effect provided that a promissory note and recorded real estate mortgage given for the purchase price of goods should be null and void from and after the mortgagor returned the goods to the mortgagee, and where the goods were never so returned, and where the mortgage was wrongfully released of record by a court-appointed commissioner, the mortgage may be foreclosed against a purchaser of the land who innocently bought in reliance on the wrongful release. This is true because, while both the mortgagee and subsequent purchaser were innocent, yet the purchaser had the means of knowing whether the goods had been returned to the mortgagee—the very act which, under the decree, would work a nullification of the mortgage and note and justify a release.

Moore v Crawford, 210-632; 231 NW 363

(c) NOTICE IMPARTED BY POSSESSION1 Nature of Notice

Buildings as personalty—rights of one in possession. A mortgagee of real estate, tho his mortgage contains no reservation or exception of the buildings situated on the land, is charged with notice of the possible fact that said buildings are personal property, and belong exclusively, not to the mortgagor, but to the person who, when the mortgage is executed, is in the open, visible and unequivocal possession and use of said buildings.

Lutton v Steng, 208-1379; 227 NW 414

Notice of rights of party in possession. A party who in good faith takes a mortgage of land from the record owner thereof, who was then and had been for years in the unrestricted possession, control, and management of the land, is not chargeable with notice of the rights of a nonrecord owner from the simple fact that said nonrecord owner had moved some household goods into a small building on the land and had lived there "part of the time".

Burmeister v Walz, 216-265; 249 NW 197

Overcoming presumption from possession—amount of proof. A mere preponderance of the evidence is not sufficient to overcome the presumption arising from the possession of the legal title to real property. The evidence for that purpose must be clear, convincing, and satisfactory.

Wagner v Wagner, (NOR); 224 NW 583

Possession insufficient to impart notice. One who acquires an interest in real estate is charged with knowledge of the rights of the person in possession, provided the possession is of such a character as to indicate that the party is claiming ownership, partial or otherwise.

Booth v Cady, 219-439; 257 NW 802

Rights of grantor in possession. One who acquires a mortgage from the record warranty-deed grantee is not chargeable with notice of the rights of the warranty-deed grantor who continues in possession of the property, when said grantor wholly fails to overthrow the legal presumption that his possession is in subordination to the said deed—that his possession is without claim of right, and by sufferance of his grantee.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Rights of one in possession. A contract purchaser of real estate becomes the equitable owner, and his actual possession is notice to the world of his rights, even tho he purchases from a person who has no title whatever, but who assumed equitable ownership, and who later had such assumption ratified and confirmed in himself by a contract of purchase and by a deed of conveyance from the legal titleholder.

Ely Bank v Graham, 201-840; 208 NW 312

Rights of person in possession. A mortgagee is not chargeable with notice that one of the members of the mortgagor's family residing upon the mortgaged property, is a lessee of the land when to all appearances, the possession of said person is the possession of the mortgagor.

Ferguson v White, 213-1053; 240 NW 700

2 What Constitutes Possession

Possession of tenant—landlord's right. The possession of a tenant is the possession of the landlord and is notice of the rights of the landlord.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

Possession insufficient to impart notice. One who acquires an interest in real estate is charged with knowledge of the rights of the person in possession, provided the possession is of such a character as to indicate that the party is claiming ownership, partial or otherwise.

Booth v Cady, 219-439; 257 NW 802

When possession not notice of adverse claim. The actual possession of real estate by the grantor in a duly recorded conveyance in fee during a reasonable time following the execution of such conveyance does not charge a good-faith subsequent purchaser for value of the land with notice that the one in possession continues to claim ownership notwithstanding said conveyance.

Tutt v Smith, 201-107; 204 NW 294; 48 ALR 394

Vendor and purchaser—purchase from non-titleholder—equitable ownership. A contract purchaser of real estate becomes the equitable owner, and his actual possession is notice to the world of his rights, even tho he purchases from a person who has no title whatever, but who assumed equitable ownership, and who later had such assumption ratified and confirmed in himself by a contract of purchase and by a deed of conveyance from the legal titleholder.

Ely Bank v Graham, 201-840; 208 NW 312

VI NOTICE OF EXISTING EQUITIES AND LIENS

Advancements after judgment. A mortgage on realty actually given to secure future advances of money to the mortgagor is prior in right to subsequently rendered judgments against the mortgagor as to advances made after the rendition of the judgments, it not appearing that the mortgagee had actual knowledge of said judgments.

Everist v Carter, 202-498; 210 NW 559

Devise and bequest—resulting trust not created. Heirs and devisees are not required to give a consideration for devises and bequests to them; consequently, a resulting trust cannot be impressed on property conveyed to them, on the theory that they are not bona fide purchasers, when the property was not subject to the lien before conveyed.

Evans v Cole, 225-756; 281 NW 230

VI NOTICE OF EXISTING EQUITIES AND LIENS—concluded

Mortgage on devise—prior rights of estate.
Bell v Bell, 216-837; 249 NW 137

Subsequent easement in land. A permanent easement in land, granted subsequent to the recording of a mortgage on the land, is subsequent in right to said mortgage.

Kellogg v Railway, 204-368; 213 NW 253; 215 NW 258

VII NOTICE UNDER PARTICULAR CONVEYANCES

Assignment of rent not recordable. A written assignment of a lease of real estate and of the rents accruing thereunder, (especially when the lease is at the time manually delivered to the assignee) is not an instrument which the law requires to be recorded, and if recorded the record imparts no notice.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67
See King v Good, 205-1203; 219 NW 517

Bona fide purchaser—quitclaim claimant. Principle reaffirmed that a quitclaim deed holder is not entitled to be considered a bona fide purchaser, and does not acquire priority over equities which are valid against the grantor.

Howell v Howell, 211-70; 232 NW 816

Conflicting assignments by partnership and partners—priority. An unrecorded assignment by a partnership to a partnership creditor, of a lease of real estate and of the rents accruing thereunder, is superior in right to a subsequent recorded assignment by one of the partners to his individual creditor of the individual partner's one-half interest in said rents; and especially is this true when the partnership creditor holds a mortgage which pledges the rents of said land.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

Foreclosure—rents—grantee not entitled to retain. The grantee under quitclaim deed of premises which are subject to a duly recorded mortgage pledging the rents and profits, even tho he does not assume the payment of said mortgage, is not entitled to collect and retain the rents accruing during the redemption period following foreclosure of the mortgage with a deficiency judgment. This is true because the grantee takes the premises subject to the same burdens under which the mortgagor held them.

Equitable v Jeffers, 215-696; 246 NW 784

Fraudulent release of prior mortgage by agent. A mortgagee who takes his mortgage as a first mortgage, in good-faith reliance on the release by his agent of a prior mortgage, does not lose his priority because of the fact that the release was fraudulent in that, prior to the release, the prior mortgage had been assigned, without a recording of the assignment, the knowledge of the agent of his own dishonesty not being imputable to his principal, the first mortgagee.

Leach v Bank, 202-265; 209 NW 422

Quitclaim—prior claims—non-applicability of rule. The principle that one who acquires title by quitclaim takes with notice of prior bona fide claims has no application to a case where a mortgagee receives his mortgage for a valuable consideration and without notice of any infirmity, and later, in order to avoid the expense of a foreclosure, receives a quitclaim deed to the land in satisfaction of the mortgage.

Brenton Bros. v Bissell, 214-175; 239 NW 14

Quitclaim security. A mortgagee of an "undivided interest" in certain land is not protected against unrecorded instruments which affect the land and which are valid against the mortgagor.

Young v Hamilton, 213-1163; 240 NW 705

VIII BURDEN OF PROOF

Equitable estoppel—unrecorded conveyance—pleader's burden. One alleging an equitable estoppel must prove it by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, hence in asserting in a fraudulent conveyance action, an equitable estoppel against the wife of a bank stockholder, because she withheld from record, for many years, a deed to herself from her husband, the creditors of the bank have not sustained the burden of proving estoppel when they admit that they did not deposit their money on the wife's representation, nor upon their belief in the husband's ownership of the land.

Bates v Kleve, 225-255; 280 NW 501

Escrow agent's memorandum made in absence of parties—inadmissible. An escrow agent's understanding of the arrangement by which he was to record deeds after the death of the grantor, noted on the envelope in the absence of the parties, is not admissible in evidence as to the substance of the arrangement and would be of doubtful evidentiary value even if admitted.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Unrecorded conveyance—burden of proof. Where children, holding undivided interests in lands as heirs, vest their mother, by an unrecorded instrument, with actual possession of the lands during her widowhood, a subsequent deed holder of the interest of one of the children may not have partition of the land unless he pleads and proves (1) his subsequent purchase, (2) that he paid value therefor, and (3) that he had no notice of said unrecorded instrument.

Young v Hamilton, 213-1163; 240 NW 705

Unrecorded mortgage—estoppel to assert lien. Naked proof that, during the time the mortgagee of land neglected to record his mortgage, the mortgagor obtained credit from another, who placed his claim in judgment, is wholly insufficient to estop the mortgagee from insisting on the priority of his mortgage lien. Additional proof of fraud or deception in some form is indispensable.

Brauch v Freking, 219-556; 258 NW 892

IX COUNTY OF RECORDING

No annotations in this volume

10106 Acknowledgment as condition precedent.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 317
Acknowledgment of chattel mortgages. See under §10015 (IX)

Disqualified notary—when inconsequential. The validity of a deed of conveyance is, as between the grantor and grantee, in no manner affected by the fact that the deed was acknowledged before a disqualified notary public.

Shanda v Bank, 220-290; 260 NW 841

Name variation of mortgagor—when non-effective. A mortgage executed by "Chester C. Callaway", which was acknowledged, filed, and recorded, was constructive notice to trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of Charles Chester Callaway, bankrupt, the bankrupt being best known in the community in which he lived by the name which he signed to the mortgage, and the fact that the acknowledgment stated that he "acknowledged said instrument", instead of statutory requirement of "acknowledged execution of instrument", was held sufficient to make the filing and recording of such mortgage constructive notice.

Hauser v Callaway, 36 F 2d, 667

10107 Assignment by separate instrument.

Mortgage foreclosure provisions. See under §12372 (III)

Assignment—failure to record—effect. The failure of the assignee of a duly recorded first mortgage on real estate to record his assignment does not deprive him of his position of priority over the assignee of subsequently executed mortgages on the same property who records his assignment.

Wood v Swan, 206-1198; 221 NW 791

Kuhn v Larson, 220-365; 259 NW 765

Assignment of note—payment to original payee—effect. The maker of a promissory note and mortgage who, for four years before maturity of the principal, and for eight years after maturity of the principal, pays the accruing interest to the agent of the original payee, without knowledge that the note and mortgage had been assigned, and finally pays the principal in the same manner, without asking for or receiving the note in question, effects a complete discharge of the note and mortgage against an assignee thereof who had been such during all said times of payment, but without recording his assignment, and in the meantime had permitted the original payee, a corporation, (1) to appear on the records as the owner of the paper and (2) to collect the interest and pay it to him.

Kann v Fish, 209-184; 224 NW 531

Assignment—recordation—scope of notice. The recording of an assignment of a promissory note and of a real estate mortgage securing the note charges the world with no constructive notice except of the assignee's interest in the land. Such record does not charge a subsequent pledgee of the note and mortgage with constructive notice of the assignee's equity in the note as personal property.

Reyelts v Feucht, 206-1326; 221 NW 937

Recorded assignment—constructive notice. A duly retorded assignment of a mortgage and of the promissory note secured, carries constructive notice to the world that the assignee is the owner of said note.

Holden v Batten, 215-448; 245 NW 750

Assignment reserving interest—construction. A broker who, in negotiating a loan, takes the note and mortgage in his own name and, pursuant to an agreement, adds to the rate of interest due the actual mortgagee a fractional percent to cover his commission, and who, in assigning the note and mortgage to said actual mortgagee, reserves to himself said fractional percent of the interest "when and as the interest matures and is paid, without right of priority or interest in the mortgage", thereby deprives himself of all interest in the mortgage in case the mortgagor voluntarily, or involuntarily because of foreclosure, ceases to pay interest.

Metropolitan v Sutton, 219-879; 259 NW 788

Failure to record assignment. The assignee of a real estate mortgage and the note secured thereby is under no legal obligation to record his assignment as to a person who buys the property with particular reference to said note and mortgage.

Shoemaker v Minkler, 202-942; 211 NW 563

Failure to record assignment. A transferee of one of several notes secured by a recorded junior real estate mortgage who fails to take and record any assignment to himself of said mortgage is bound by the subsequent wrongful agreement of the record mortgagee that a prior mortgagee (who had no notice of the transfer of the note) might take a new mortgage in lieu of his old mortgage, and for an increased amount, and retain priority over the junior mortgage; and it is immaterial that said agreement is evidenced by an unacknowledged entry on the margin of the recorded mortgage.

Squire Co. v Hedges, 200-877; 205 NW 525

Fraudulent assignment. In an action by heirs of an intestate against a son and heir of intestate to set aside a transfer of a note and mortgage from intestate to said son, evidence held insufficient to show signatures of aged mother are not the genuine signatures of intestate on assignments.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Lease—assignment—recordation—effect. A lease of real estate and the assignment thereof are recordable for the purpose of conveying constructive notice to a mortgagee and his subsequently appointed receiver under a mortgage which contains a pledge of the rents, even tho said parties are not entitled, as a matter of right, to such notice.

King v Good, 205-1203; 219 NW 517

Payment without production of note. The maker of a promissory note secured by mortgage who pays the same to the payee-mortgagee without requiring the production and surrender of the note does so at his peril, even tho the record reveals no assignment of the note and mortgage, such maker not being a subsequent purchaser, within the meaning of the recording acts.

Shoemaker v Nodland, 202-945; 211 NW 567
Shoemaker v Ragland, 202-947; 211 NW 564

Transfer of part of mortgage-secured debt—effect. Principle reaffirmed that a transfer of part of a mortgage-secured debt operates ipso facto as a pro tanto assignment of the mortgage security.

Miller & C. Bk. v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550

10109 Index books.

Recording "Instrument relating to real estate". A mortgage (1) on chattels on certain described real estate and (2) on all crops "sown, planted, raised, growing or grown" on said real estate for two specified years following the execution of said instrument, being an instrument which "relates to real estate", is recordable as a real estate mortgage, and such recording may be enforced by mandamus.

ANALYSIS

- I NECESSITY AND EFFECT OF INDEXING
- II SUFFICIENCY OF INDEXING
- III PRIORITY

Sufficiency of recording. See under §10118, Vol. I

I NECESSITY AND EFFECT OF INDEXING

Assignment of mortgage or debt—recorded—constructive notice. A duly recorded assignment of a mortgage and of the promissory note secured carries constructive notice to the world that the assignee is the owner of said note.

Holden v Batten, 215-448; 245 NW 750

II SUFFICIENCY OF INDEXING

Fatally defective index. An index of the recording of a written instrument constituting an equitable mortgage is fatally defective when it designates the actual grantor as grantee and the actual grantee as grantor.

Parry v Reinertson, 208-739; 224 NW 489; 63 ALR 1051

III PRIORITY

Failure to index. The breach of official duty, and not the resulting damage, creates the cause of action making operative the statute of limitations, so where a recorder negligently omitted to index a chattel mortgage resulting in a subsequent mortgagee obtaining priority through lack of notice of first mortgage, the cause of action accrued at the time of such omission and an action against the recorder for this nonfeasance was barred after three years by §11007 (4), C., '35.

Effect of record notice. See under §10105

Property conveyed—ownership not paramount—title at issue. In an action between a creditor and a grantee to set aside a deed, ownership by the grantor being the question in issue rather than recovery by virtue of a superior title, an uncontradicted public record showing ownership in grantor at time the deeds were made is conclusive on that issue.

Discussion. See 22 ILR 437; 23 ILR 1; 24 ILR 1; 24 ILR 635; 25 ILR 1—Perpetuities

Clause repugnant to fee. A stipulation in divorce proceedings, even tho carried into the decree, is a nullity insofar as it seeks to render land exempt from the claims of creditors of the fee-title owner.

Putensen v Dreeszen, 206-1242; 219 NW 490

Limitations void ab initio. Testamentary attempts by means of limitations to create in property contingent interests or estates, which will not necessarily become vested within the period of time prescribed by the statute prohibiting perpetuities, are futile, all such limitations being void ab initio.

Bankers Trust v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Partial invalidity of will—effect on valid part. The invalidity of a testamentary limitation—invalid because prohibited by the statute against perpetuities—will not affect the validity of preceding limitations which are otherwise valid, when it is manifest from the will that testator had no intent to make said preceding limitations dependent on said subsequent limitations—ultimately rejected as void.

Bankers Trust v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Perpetual care of burial lot. A bequest for the perpetual maintenance of testator's cemetery lot is not violative of this statute.

Hipp v Hibbs, 215-253; 245 NW 247

Prohibition against conveyance—validity. A provision in an ordinary warranty deed absolutely prohibiting a sale or conveyance of any part of the land during the lifetime of the grantor, without the consent of the grantor, is not repugnant to the deed if the unrevealed purpose of said prohibition is legal, and a part of the consideration for the deed, and is expressed in a contract which accompanies the execution of the deed, even tho the contract be oral. It follows that the record of such deed charges third parties with notice of said contract if reasonable inquiry would reveal it.

Iowa Corp. v Halligan, 214-903; 241 NW 475

Restraint on alienation—as affecting charitable organization—validity. Where an individual agrees to construct a grotto on land then belonging to a charitable organization which in return agrees among other things not to alienate the land, such a covenant, not being created in a gift for charitable purposes and as such an exception to the rule against perpetuities or against restraint on alienation, but instead, an attempt by the fee titleholder to retain his land while separating from the fee the unlimited power of alienation, is violative of public policy, void and unenforceable in equity.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Restraint on alienation—definitions. Rule against perpetuities concerns vesting of estates and rule against restraint on alienation concerns limitations on enjoyment of property, both of which are founded on the public policy preventing property being taken out of commerce.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Restraint on alienation—not validated by estoppel or ratification. Since a restraint on alienation of title is in contravention of public policy, such a provision in a contract cannot be validated by ratification or estoppel.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Void remainders as intestate property. Property embraced in a void, testamentary limitation—void because prohibited by the statute relating to perpetuities—passes to those persons who would have been entitled thereto under the laws of intestacy had the limitation been omitted from the will, and a judgment creditor may, by proper procedure, have a lien established thereon.

Bankers Trust v Garver, 222-196; 268 NW 568

Will suspending property control—terminable at death of heirs—no perpetuity. A will which suspends the power of controlling the property during the life of persons now in being only until the time it passes to the heirs does not create a perpetuity.

Friedmeyer v Lynch, 226-251; 284 NW 160

CHAPTER 440
OCCUPYING CLAIMANTS

10128 Right to improvements.

Improvements. In an action to quiet title the court may, on proper pleading and proof, decree a lien on the land in defendant's favor for improvements made in good faith on the property.

Rainsbarger v same, 208-764; 224 NW 45

Loss of remedy. An unsuccessful defendant in an action for the recovery of real property who is afforded no opportunity therein to interpose a claim for permanent improvements (§§12235, 12249, C., '27), must necessarily resort to the occupying claimant's act for relief, and when he fails to resort to such remaining and exclusive remedy, and quits and surrenders the premises, he will not be permitted, when subsequently sued on a supersedeas bond growing out of the litigation, to interpose a claim for such improvements as a set-off.

I ACQUISITION AND ESTABLISHMENT

(a) NECESSITY AND SUFFICIENCY OF OCCUPANCY

Acquisition—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held ample to show the homestead character of property.

Hagge v Gonder, 222-954; 270 NW 371

Acquisition—necessity of occupancy. Principle reaffirmed that mere intention to occupy property as a home, howsoever definite the intention may be, is insufficient to give said property a homestead character.

In re McClain, 220-638; 262 NW 666

Adjudication of homestead status. An unquestioned order in bankruptcy setting off to a bankrupt certain land as a homestead is, as to all parties to the proceedings, a final adjudication that said land was then a homestead.

Bracewell v Hughes, 214-241; 242 NW 66

Homestead exemption—waiver of residence relates to year of homestead acquisition. The provision in the homestead tax exemption statute waiving the six months requirement for residence, for the first year of a newly acquired homestead, is not sufficient to extend the exemption back to taxes levied a year previous to the year in which it was acquired.

Ahrweiler v Board, 226-229; 283 NW 889

Infirmity in title—effect. A homestead in land exists from the time of actual, good-faith occupancy by claimant and his family under a parol gift, and if the occupancy is continuous it matters not that said occupant does not acquire the legal title until many years later.

Lennert v Cross, 215-551; 241 NW 787; 244 NW 693

Nonoccupancy. The naked act of a husband and wife in moving certain of their belongings to a farm and leaving them there does not constitute the farm the homestead of the husband and wife.

Harris v Carlson, 201-169; 205 NW 202

Presumption of continuance. Upon proof that a homestead in property was acquired by a mother because of the occupancy of the property by herself and minor daughter as a home, and that such occupancy continued until the mother died, it will be rebuttably presumed that the property was the homestead of the mother at the time of her death, even tho, in the meantime, the daughter marries and, with her husband, continues joint occupancy of the property with the mother.

In re McClain, 220-638; 262 NW 666

Subordinate to contract under which acquired. Homestead rights which are acquired under a contract of sale are necessarily subordinate to the contract under which they are acquired.

Westerman v Raid, 203-1270; 212 NW 134

(b) OCCUPANCY OF PORTION OF PREMISES

Extent—noncontiguous tracts. One-half of a double garage, situated on property used by the owner solely for rental purposes, may not be deemed an appurtenance of the said owner's homestead, composed of a nearby, separate, independent and wholly different tract, noncontiguous to the rental property. So held in an action involving the validity of a sheriff's deed based on a sale en masse—a sale without platting.

Van Law v Waud, 223-208; 272 NW 523

II PROPERTY CONSTITUTING HOMESTEAD(a) OWNERSHIP, ESTATE, OR INTEREST IN PROPERTY

Debts enforceable against. One of several remaindermen may not acquire, in a portion of the common property, a homestead based on his occupancy of the property as a tenant of the life tenant. If, after the death of the life tenant, he acquires a homestead by virtue of his new occupancy, such homestead is necessarily subject to a judgment based on claims long antedating the death of the life tenant.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361

Homestead character of property—evidence. Evidence held to show that the property in question was, at the time of a conveyance by a husband to his wife, the homestead of the grantor and grantee, and therefore not fraudulent as to creditors.

Hansen v Richter, 208-179; 225 NW 361

Setting off homestead—effect. An unappealed order in bankruptcy proceedings setting off a homestead to the bankrupt does not constitute an adjudication of the bankrupt's rights in the homestead, e. g., the existence of liens and the order and priority thereof.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361

(b) RENTS, PROFITS, PRODUCTS, AND PROCEEDS OF HOMESTEAD

Abandonment—subsequent sale and investment in homestead—effect. When the owner of a homestead in lands moves therefrom with the intent never to return thereto,—in other words, when the owner of a homestead abandons it,—no part of the proceeds of a subsequent sale by the owner of the lands can be said to represent a homestead; and the investing of any part of such proceeds in lands then used as a homestead simply constitutes the acquisition of an original homestead, just as tho he had never theretofore had a homestead.

Craill v Jones, 206-761; 221 NW 467

Temporary business structures on homestead land—no effect on homestead exemptions. Temporary structures, built on land otherwise exempt to bankrupt as part of homestead, removable without injury to themselves or the land, tho not themselves exempt, having been used in business of the bankrupt, held, not to render the land nonexempt under state statutes.

Duffy v Tegeler, 19 F 2d, 305

III ABANDONMENT AND WAIVER OF RIGHT(a) ABANDONMENT IN GENERAL

Abandonment—evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held insufficient to show an abandonment of a homestead.

Phoenix Tr. v Vaught, 201-450; 205 NW 792

Abandonment—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to establish the abandonment of a homestead.

Des M. Marble v McConn, 210-266; 227 NW 521

Abandonment—evidence. Record reviewed and held to establish the existence of a homestead and the nonabandonment thereof.

Mill Owners Ins. v Petley, 210-1085; 229 NW 736

Abandonment—evidence. The homestead character of rural property is seriously questioned by testimony that, upon the destruction of the residence, the husband and wife did not rebuild, but moved to town, purchased a new residence, and thereafter continued to live and vote in said town. Especially is this true when the record is silent as to the intentions of the husband.

Evans v Evans, 202-493; 210 NW 564

Abandonment—nonvoluntary removal. An abandonment of the homestead by a wife may not be predicated on her involuntary absence from the property; i. e., her removal from the property in compliance with a court order which practically evicted her, pending divorce proceedings.

Novotny v Horecka, 200-1217; 206 NW 110; 42 ALR 1158

Presumption of abandonment. A presumption of abandonment of a homestead arises when the owners thereof actually cease to occupy it as a homestead. Evidence held insufficient to overcome the presumption.

Citizens Bk. v Frank, 212-707; 235 NW 30

Antenuptial contract specifying manner of property descent—dower lost. An antenuptial contract, preserving the property of each party for the benefit of their respective heirs, operates to extinguish the homestead right, and, in the absence of children to the union, the property of each descends to his heirs as tho no marriage existed.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

(b) TEMPORARY ABSENCE WITH INTENT TO RETURN

Abandonment—burden of proof. Ceasing to occupy a homestead creates a presumption of

III ABANDONMENT AND WAIVER OF RIGHT—concluded abandonment, and the burden of proof is on the claimant to overcome the presumption by showing a fixed and definite purpose to return to the homestead.

Fardal v Satre, 200-1109; 206 NW 22

Abandonment — temporary leasing. The temporary leasing of a homestead does not affect its homestead character.

Hatter v Icenbice, 207-702; 223 NW 527

Intent to return necessary—burden of proof. In order to preserve the homestead character of property when the owner goes to live elsewhere, it is necessary that said owner have a fixed, specific, and abiding intent to return and burden of proving same is on the owner.

Grimes Bank v McHarg, 224-644; 276 NW 781

Temporary removal—effect. The homestead character of property is not lost by a removal therefrom by the owner in order to be more conveniently located for medical treatment, with the continuing intent to return to the homestead as soon as the treatment ceases.

Southwick v Strong, 218-435; 255 NW 523

(c) ACTS RELEVANT TO ABANDONMENT

Removal from old, and acquiring new—effect. A homestead must be deemed abandoned on naked testimony that the owner thereof removed therefrom, and immediately acquired a new homestead which he continuously maintained until his death many years later.

In re McClain, 220-638; 262 NW 666

Voting as evidence of change of residence. Voting at a place other than where a homestead is located is a very strong circumstance tending to show a permanent change of residence.

Citizens Bk. v Frank, 212-707; 235 NW 30

(d) WAIVER OF RIGHT

Abandonment—burden of proof on claimant—sufficiency. Ceasing to occupy a homestead creates a presumption of abandonment, and the burden of proof is on the claimant to overcome the presumption by showing a fixed and definite purpose to return to the homestead. Burden held amply sustained.

Fardal v Satre, 200-1109; 206 NW 22

Abandonment — evidence. The homestead character of rural property is seriously questioned by testimony that, upon the destruction of the residence, the husband and wife did not rebuild, but moved to town, purchased a new residence, and thereafter continued to live and vote in said town. Especially is this true when the record is silent as to the intentions of the husband.

Evans v Evans, 202-493; 210 NW 564

10136 Extent and value.

Discussion. See 16 ILR 96—Determining value

Temporary business structures on homestead land—no effect on homestead exemptions. Temporary structures, built on land otherwise exempt to bankrupt as part of homestead, removable without injury to themselves or the land, tho not themselves exempt, having been used in business of the bankrupt, held, not to render the land nonexempt under state statutes.

Duffy v Tegeler, 19 F 2d, 305

Town property exceeding half acre. A homestead within the corporate limits of a town may consist of contiguous subdivisions of a government forty, habitually and in good faith used as a part of the homestead, even tho such subdivisions aggregate more than half an acre. To reduce such a homestead to a half acre, the creditor must show that the property has taken on an exclusively municipal aspect, nature, or use.

Hatter v Icenbice, 207-702; 223 NW 527

10137 Dwelling and appurtenances.

Temporary business structures on homestead land—no effect on homestead exemptions. Temporary structures, built on land otherwise exempt to bankrupt as part of homestead, removable without injury to themselves or the land, though not themselves exempt, having been used in business of the bankrupt, held, not to render the land nonexempt under state statutes.

Duffy v Tegeler, 19 F 2d, 305

10139 Platted by officer having execution.

Notice to plat before execution sale—non-prejudicial failure. A sheriff's failure to notify a mortgagor to plat his homestead before selling under mortgage foreclosure execution is immaterial under a showing that the sheriff himself platted the homestead, offered separately the nonexempt property and then the homestead, but, receiving no bids, he then sold the property as a whole.

Travelers Ins. v Brooks, 224-170; 276 NW 617

10141 Changes—nonconsenting spouse.

Change of homestead—evidence. Evidence reviewed, and held wholly insufficient to sustain a claim to homestead exemption of the proceeds of an execution sale on the ground of intended use in acquiring another homestead.

Phoenix Tr. v Vaught, 201-450; 205 NW 792

Nonmutual abandonment. The abandonment of a homestead by a husband without the consent of the wife in possession is ineffective as to the wife.

Novotny v Horecka, 200-1217; 206 NW 110; 42 ALR 1158

Change to a different portion of the same tract. An owner of land who, while possessing an unplatted homestead right in one portion of the land, erects new residence buildings on another unplatted portion of the land, and removes thereto, simply continues in the new homestead his former homestead right. In other words, if, after so doing, he sells the entire tract of land except that embraced in the new homestead, such new homestead will not be liable for a debt for which the original homestead was not liable.

Berner v Dellinger, 206-1382; 222 NW 370

10145 Occupancy by surviving spouse.

Antenuptial contract—effect on homestead occupancy. An antenuptial contract under which the wife agrees to accept a named fractional part of the husband's property in case she survives, does not have the legal effect of depriving her of her statutory right to occupy the homestead, free of all rent, until her share is actually set off to her or otherwise actually disposed of.

Fraizer v Fraizer, 201-1311; 207 NW 772

Antenuptial contract—forfeiture of homestead and life estate. When by an antenuptial contract a spouse has relinquished all right to homestead or distributive share, the rights ordinarily accorded under this section and section 10146, C., '35, do not apply.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

No presumption of election from mere occupancy by spouse. Surviving spouse's occupancy of the homestead will not alone, unless inconsistent with every other right, raise a presumption of an election to occupy the homestead for life.

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Exemption from debt. Principle reaffirmed that a homestead, set aside to the widow as her dower or distributive share, passes to her free from the debts of the husband-owner.

Southwick v Strong, 218-435; 255 NW 523

Occupancy not newly created right. The right of a surviving spouse to freely occupy the homestead until it is otherwise disposed of according to law, is but a continuation of the right possessed by him or her prior to the death of the homestead owner.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Right to free occupancy. In case rents accumulate in an estate prior to the setting off of the wife's distributive share, the wife, in the division of said rents with the other tenants in common, cannot be charged with the rental value of the homestead occupied by her. Moreover if the other tenants have wrongfully ousted the wife for a time of her said occupancy, they must account to her for the rentals received.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Surviving spouse's occupancy not conclusive on taking homestead. Inasmuch as the surviving spouse's occupancy of the homestead may be as a tenant in common, as a life tenant, or under the statute pending administration, such occupancy, altho being evidence, is not conclusive of her election to take the homestead right, but the true character of the occupancy is determinable from all the surrounding facts and circumstances.

Jackson v Grant, 224-579; 278 NW 190

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Failing to plead and prove election. An adopted son, defending a contribution action growing out of expenditures made by his mother as tenant in common in inherited real estate, and in his answer admitting that his mother possessed by right of dower, but nowhere claiming or assuming his burden to prove that the widow elected to take a life estate in lieu of other dower rights, is estopped to raise such point on appeal or matters corollary thereto.

Yagge v Tyler, 225-352; 280 NW 559

Undue length of occupation. The heirs of an intestate will not be heard to complain of the extreme length of time the surviving spouse has maintained the free occupancy of the homestead when they were the direct cause of delaying the admeasurement of the spouse's distributive share.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

Warranty deed—effect. A warranty deed duly signed by both husband and wife necessarily constitutes a complete subordination and waiver of all the rights of both husband and wife, including homestead and dower.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Wrongful ouster—effect. Manifestly a surviving spouse who has been wrongfully ousted from her occupancy of the homestead following the death of her husband-owner cannot be held thereby to have lost said right.

Crouse v Crouse, 219-736; 259 NW 443

10146 Life possession in lieu of dower.

Making election of record. See under §12012, Vol I

I ESTATE AND RIGHTS OF SURVIVOR

Discussion. See 22 ILR 543—Renunciation of life estate

Antenuptial contract—forfeiture of homestead and life estate. When by an antenuptial contract a spouse has relinquished all right to homestead or distributive share, the rights ordinarily accorded under this section and section 10145, C., '35, do not apply.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

II ELECTION BETWEEN HOMESTEAD AND DISTRIBUTIVE SHARE

Dower—when vested—divesting by choosing homestead. Instantly on the death of a married intestate, an undivided one-third interest and estate in his real estate vests in the surviving spouse as tenant in common, which vested estate is subject to being divested by a later election to take the homestead for life in lieu of such distributive share.

Jackson v Grant, 224-579; 278 NW 190

Homestead or distributive share—election—evidence necessary. The distributive share being the primary and more worthy right of the surviving spouse, evidence that the survivor elected to take the homestead right in lieu thereof should be clear and satisfactory.

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Life occupancy—unprayed-for relief. A surviving spouse who, in a contest with an heir of the intestate's, claims absolute ownership of the entire homestead, and who is decreed to own only an undivided fractional part thereof, may be decreed the right to elect to occupy the homestead for life, even tho there is no prayer for such relief.

Myrick v Bloomfield, 202-401; 210 NW 428

Nonforfeiture by taking foreign homestead. A wife who is legally disinherited by her husband's will executed in a foreign state, where the parties had their domicile, is not deprived of her dower or distributive share in the husband's Iowa real estate because of the fact that in said foreign state the homestead there situated was set off to her by the probate court on her application. In other words, the Iowa statute according to a wife the right to take the homestead in lieu of dower applies solely to an Iowa homestead.

Ehler v Ehler, 214-789; 243 NW 591

No presumption of election from mere occupancy by spouse. Surviving spouse's occupancy of the homestead will not alone, unless inconsistent with every other right, raise a presumption of an election to occupy the homestead for life.

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Selling homestead for debts—necessity of election between will and dower. An order of court to an executrix to sell real estate, to pay claims, is erroneous where the only real estate was the homestead, and the surviving husband, who was willed one-third of the estate, had never been required to make an election as to whether or not he took under the will. In such case the presumption remains that he took his distributive share.

In re Dyer, 225-1238; 282 NW 359

Surviving spouse's occupancy not conclusive on taking homestead. Inasmuch as the surviving spouse's occupancy of the homestead may be as a tenant in common, as a life tenant, or under the statute pending administration, such occupancy, altho being evidence, is not conclusive of her election to take the homestead right, but the true character of the occupancy is determinable from all the surrounding facts and circumstances.

Jackson v Grant, 224-579; 278 NW 190

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

Vesting and divesting. The unadmeasured distributive share (dower) of a surviving spouse vests immediately upon the death of the other spouse, subject to being divested by the subsequent election of the surviving spouse to take under the will, if there be one, or to take homestead rights in lieu of distributive share.

Van Veen v Van Veen, 213-323; 236 NW 1; 238 NW 718

Prichard v Anderson, 224-1152; 278 NW 348

I NATURE OF HOMESTEAD RIGHT OF SPOUSE

Purpose of statute. The purpose of the statute was to prevent the destruction of the homestead rights of married persons except in the manner prescribed by the statute.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

II CONSENT AND JOINDER OF HUSBAND AND WIFE

(a) CONVEYANCES

Ineffectual partial conveyance to wife. A conveyance by a husband to his wife of a life estate in their homestead and of the fee to another, when the wife does not join therein, is a nullity.

Thayer v Sherman, 218-451; 255 NW 506

(b) CONTRACTS TO CONVEY

Insane persons' contracts—general rule of liability. Persons of unsound mind will be held liable as to executed contracts when the transaction is in the ordinary course of business, when it is reasonable, when the mental condition was not known to the other party, and when the parties cannot be put in statu quo.

Farmers Ins. Co. v Ryg, 209-330; 228 NW 63

(c) MORTGAGES AND OTHER INCUMBRANCES

Joint execution—sufficiency. An incumbrance upon a homestead must be jointly executed by the husband and wife, but not necessarily at the same point of time.

Harlow v Larson, 204-328; 213 NW 417

Instrument reformable. A mortgage which is duly and jointly executed by a husband and wife on part of their homestead when they unquestionably intended to embrace in the mortgage the entire homestead, is so reformable, on proper showing of the mistake, as to make the instrument in form exactly what it always has been in law; and such reformation is not violative of this statute.

Rankin v Taylor, 204-384; 214 NW 725

Mortgage—invalidity—estoppel. A husband, by accepting from his wife a conveyance of homestead property subject to a named existing mortgage thereon, thereby estops himself from questioning the validity of said mortgage on the ground that he never joined in the execution thereof.

Truro Bk. v Foster, 206-432; 220 NW 20

(d) ASSIGNMENTS AND LEASES

Extent—tenant's right to homestead before termination of lease. A tenant may have a homestead right under a leasehold interest which is available to him as against all persons, including the holder of the superior title, the lessor-owner, during the term of the tenancy and before the lease has expired.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

Lease—husband's oral termination invalid—statutory requisites. An oral agreement between the landlord and the tenant-husband, to terminate a joint lease of the husband and wife, will not terminate their homestead rights in 40 acres of the land, so as to permit a forcible entry and detainer action, since a homestead can be terminated only in writing by both husband and wife signing the same joint instrument containing a legal description of the homestead.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

Unexpired lease—tenant's oral agreement to vacate as "conveyance" of homestead. This section will not be construed narrowly as referring only to a conveyance or incumbrance of a homestead. Oral termination of a lease during the term and the homestead thereunder held invalid.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

(e) EASEMENTS

No annotations in this volume

III NATURE AND SUFFICIENCY OF CONSENT

(a) CONSENT BY JOINDER IN EXECUTION OF INSTRUMENT

Partial conveyance—nonjoinder by wife. A conveyance by a husband to his wife of a life estate in their homestead and of the fee to another, when the wife does not join therein, is a nullity.

Thayer v Sherman, 218-451; 255 NW 506

Unexpired lease—tenant's oral agreement to vacate as "conveyance" of homestead. Statute requiring written joint instrument by husband and wife to terminate a homestead will not be construed narrowly as referring only to a conveyance or incumbrance of a homestead. Oral termination of a lease during the term and the homestead thereunder held invalid.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

(b) VERBAL ASSENT

Lease—husband's oral termination invalid—statutory requisites. An oral agreement between the landlord and the tenant-husband, to terminate a joint lease of the husband and wife, will not terminate their homestead rights in 40 acres of the land, so as to permit a forcible entry and detainer action, since a homestead can be terminated only in writing by both husband and wife signing the same joint instrument containing a legal description of the homestead.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

III NATURE AND SUFFICIENCY OF CONSENT—concluded

(c) RATIFICATION

Invalid signature—nonratification. The invalid signature of a husband to a mortgage on the homestead—invalid because of his inebriate condition when he signed—is not ratified by a delay of some eight months in repudiating such signature (1) when the delay was caused in part by his continued inebriate condition and in part by a proper investigation by his attorney, and (2) when he did not actually intend to ratify.

State Bank v Nolan, 201-722; 207 NW 745

(d) CONSENT BY CONDUCT

Conveyance to husband subject to mortgage—estoppel. A husband, by accepting from his wife a conveyance of homestead property subject to a named existing mortgage thereon, thereby estops himself from questioning the validity of said mortgage on the ground that he never joined in the execution thereof.

Truro Bank v Foster, 206-432; 220 NW 20

(e) MENTAL INCAPACITY OF SPOUSE

Note and mortgage in hands of holder in due course. Neither a negotiable promissory note nor a mortgage given by the makers to secure the same, even tho the mortgage is on a homestead, is subject, when in the hands of a holder in due course, to the plea that the maker was insane at the time of the execution of such note and mortgage.

Farmers Ins. v Ryg, 209-330; 228 NW 63

(f) FRAUD AND DURESS

Nonhomestead character of land. A creditor who is seeking to set aside the deed of his debtor as fraudulent need not prove the non-homestead character of the land even tho he alleges such fact, because the homestead character of the land is an affirmative defense, pleadable and provable by the grantee.

Malcolm Bk. v Mehlin, 200-970; 205 NW 788

IV FORM AND EXECUTION OF INSTRUMENT

Life estate to wife—fee simple title to another by husband only—ineffectual. A conveyance by a husband to his wife of a life estate in their homestead and of the fee to another, when the wife does not join therein, is a nullity.

Thayer v Sherman, 218-451; 255 NW 506

V EFFECT OF DEFECTIVE INSTRUMENT

Reformation of mortgage embracing homestead. A mortgage which is duly and jointly executed by a husband and wife on part of their homestead, when they unquestionably intended to embrace in the mortgage the entire homestead, is so reformable, on proper showing of the mistake, as to make the instrument in form exactly what it always has been in law; and such reformation is not violative of this section, which declares conveyances of the homestead invalid when the husband and wife do not join in the execution of the same joint instrument.

Rankin v Taylor, 204-384; 214 NW 725

VI RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PURCHASERS

Insane persons—validity and liability of contract. Persons of unsound mind will be held liable as to executed contracts when the transaction is in the ordinary course of business, when it is reasonable, when the mental condition was not known to the other party, and when the parties cannot be put in statu quo.

Farmers Ins. Co. v Ryg, 209-330; 228 NW 63

VII FORECLOSURE OF INCUMBRANCES AGAINST HOMESTEAD

Mortgage foreclosures generally. See under §12372 (VII)

Nonloss of lien in bankruptcy proceedings.

First Bk. v Kleih, 201-1298; 205-NW 843

Eviction of husband—effect. The eviction of a husband, by foreclosure decree, of lands of which he and his wife are both tenants is, to all practical purposes, an eviction of the wife.

Miller v Laing, 212-437; 236 NW 378

Equitable assignment—sheriff's certificate—redemption by judgment creditor. Where judgment creditor redeemed from foreclosure sale and secured an assignment of the sheriff's certificate from the mortgagee, and appellant-owners failed to make a statutory redemption, the judgment creditor was an equitable assignee of the sheriff's certificate entitled to deed, even assuming that he had no right to redeem because of the homestead character of the land, since it made no difference to appellant-owners whether the mortgagee or judgment creditor was the holder of the certificate.

Ackerman v Bank, 228- ; 291 NW 150

Redemption of homestead by judgment creditor. A judgment creditor who was made a defendant in a foreclosure action against appellant's 120-acre farm is a junior lienholder under the statute, not a stranger nor interloper, and is entitled to redeem from sheriff's sale, even tho the judgment was not a lien on the 40 acres constituting appellant's homestead.

Ackerman v Bank, 228- ; 291 NW 150

VIII EFFECT OF FAILURE TO CLAIM HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION

Reservation of homestead right—evidence. Where a form book used for the recordation of warranty deeds in the office of the recorder of deeds contained a printed relinquishment by a spouse of "dower and homestead", the fact that in a certain instance the word "homestead" has been erased furnishes no evidence that the grantors had orally reserved a homestead right in the conveyed property.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

10148 Devise.

Intention to render homestead subject to debts. A testator in devising a homestead will not be deemed to have intended to render it subject to his debts—even to his funeral expenses—unless such intention is clearly and unequivocally expressed in the will.

Buck v MacEachron, 209-1168; 229 NW 693

10149 Removal of spouse or children.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 325

Unexpired lease—tenant's oral agreement to vacate as "conveyance" of homestead. Section 10147, C., '35, requiring written joint instrument by husband and wife to terminate a homestead, will not be construed narrowly as referring only to a conveyance or incumbrance of a homestead. Oral termination of a lease during the term and the homestead thereunder held invalid.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

10150 Exemption—divorced spouse.

Application of payments—preservation of homestead. In the absence of any direction by a debtor as to how his payment shall be applied, as between a homestead-secured obligation and a non-secured obligation, the equities of the law may require an application which will preserve the homestead of the debtor and family.

Pospishil v Jensen, 205-1360; 219 NW 507

Consideration—value of homestead. On the issue whether a creditor took a conveyance of real property at a fair valuation, the value of that part of the land which represented the debtor's homestead must be excluded from the computation.

Commercial Bk. v McLaughlin, 203-1368; 214 NW 542

Findings in re homestead—conclusiveness. On an application by an executor for an order to sell real estate to pay debts, a finding by the court that certain land was not the homestead of the deceased is conclusive on appeal (1) unless such finding is without substantial support in the evidence, or (2) unless the court erroneously applied the law to conceded facts.

In re McClain, 220-638; 262 NW 666

Homestead exemption—waiver. A decree to the effect that a conveyance was fraudulent as to a judgment plaintiff and that plaintiff's judgment was a lien on the land is immune from subsequent attack on the ground that the land was, at the time of the conveyance, the homestead of the grantor and grantee, such fact not being pleaded in the action.

Reining v Nevison, 203-995; 213 NW 609

Liabilities—family expenses. A homestead is exempt from execution on a judgment for a family expense contracted after the acquisition of the homestead. In other words, the statutory declaration that a homestead is exempt from judicial sale "when there is no special declaration of statute to the contrary" has no reference whatever to the statutory declaration that a family expense is "chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife". (§10459, C., '27.)

Dorsey v Bentzinger, 209-883; 226 NW 52

Unenforceable agreement. An oral agreement by one of several heirs of homestead property that the funeral expenses of the deceased should stand against the property is of no validity.

Warner v Tullis, 206-680; 218 NW 575

Notice of homestead right. The holder of a sheriff's deed under execution sale necessarily takes the deed subject to the homestead rights of the execution defendant of which he had actual or constructive notice.

Frum v Kueny, 201-327; 207 NW 372

Subrogation. If a second mortgagee uses his own funds in discharging a first mortgage in order to save the property he will be subrogated to the rights of said first mortgagee; on the other hand, if funds are obtained through a new mortgage, and used in the discharge of said first mortgage, then the new mortgagee will acquire said right of subrogation, and in either case, the homestead character of part of the mortgaged property is quite immaterial.

Clark v Chapman, 213-737; 239 NW 797

Waiver in promissory note—effect. A waiver in a promissory note of the maker's homestead right does not constitute authority in the court in an action on the note to decree a lien on the maker's homestead for the amount due on the note.

First N. Bk. v Phillips, 203-372; 212 NW 678

Waiver through antenuptial contract. An antenuptial contract will not be construed to embrace a waiver of homestead rights in the absence of plain and unmistakable language to that effect. Such waiver must have a more secure basis than a mere inference from broad and sweeping language referable to waiver of right to dower or distributive share.

Mill Owners Ins. v Petley, 210-1085; 229 NW 736

10151 "Family" defined.

ANALYSIS

I PERSONS ENTITLED TO EXEMPTION
II DISPOSAL OF HOMESTEAD IN DIVORCE ACTIONS

I PERSONS ENTITLED TO EXEMPTION

"Family" defined. Principle reaffirmed that, within the meaning of the homestead exemption statute, a family is a collective body of persons who live in one house, under one head or manager.

Solnar v Solnar, 205-701; 216 NW 288

Father and crippled son. A father who substantially supports his adult, motherless, crippled son in his home is the head of a family, and consequently capable of acquiring and holding a homestead.

Poffinbarger v Admr., 206-961; 221 NW 550

Acquisition—presumption of continuance. Upon proof that a homestead in property was acquired by a mother because of the occupancy of the property by herself and minor daughter as a home, and that such occupancy continued until the mother died, it will be rebuttably presumed that the property was the homestead of the mother at the time of her death, even tho, in the meantime, the daughter marries and, with her husband, continues joint occupancy of the property with the mother.

In re McClain, 220-638; 262 NW 666

Childless widow—right to sell and acquire new homestead. A childless widow to whom the family homestead has been devised by her husband may sell said homestead and invest the proceeds thereof in a new homestead and hold the latter, to the extent in value of the old homestead, exempt from execution in all cases where the old homestead would have been exempt had she retained it.

Magel v Hunt, 221-199; 265 NW 119

Noninterest of absent spouse. The fact that a homestead was both acquired and lost by the wife, during a time when the whereabouts of the husband was unknown, renders quite immaterial the question whether the husband is yet alive.

Solnar v Solnar, 205-701; 216 NW 288

Termination of family relation. Land which acquires the status of a homestead because of its occupancy by the owner and by her minor children as a family (the mother being, long prior thereto, permanently deserted by her husband) loses such status when the family relation is destroyed by the death of some of the minors and by the attaining of maturity by the others and the removal to homes of their own, thereby leaving the owner-mother in sole occupancy of the property.

Solnar v Solnar, 205-701; 216 NW 288

II DISPOSAL OF HOMESTEAD IN DIVORCE ACTIONS

Divorce—sale of homestead. The court may properly decree in divorce proceedings that a monthly allowance solely for the support and education of a child shall be a lien on the defendant-parent's homestead—all the property the parent possesses—but may not properly decree that in case of a failure to pay the allowance the homestead shall be sold and the proceeds impounded solely for the support and education of the child. On the contrary, a sale of the parent's homestead should be permitted only on proof of the parent's willful refusal or neglect to pay as far as he can reasonably pay.

Paul v Paul, 217-977; 252 NW 114

10152 Descent.

Devise subject to unenforceable debts—requirements. The will of a spouseless testator will not be held to devise testator's homestead to his children subject to debts which could not be otherwise enforced against said homestead, unless the intent so to do is evidenced by testamentary language which is unequivocal and imperative. The usual and formal paragraph in the preliminary part of a will directing the payment of "all my just debts" is quite insufficient to evince such intent.

Luckenbill v Bates, 220-871; 263 NW 811; 103 ALR 252

Homestead possession—effect. An heir cannot successfully claim that he is the owner of premises because his father continuously occupied said premises for some thirty-five years and until his death, as a homestead, when it appears that during said time the premises went to tax deed, and that thereupon the mother re-acquired title from the tax deed holder and thereunder adversely occupied said premises under said newly acquired deed for more than ten years.

Mann v Nies, 213-121; 238 NW 601

Foreclosure—unallowable collateral attack. In the foreclosure of a mortgage, executed by an administrator on lands of the deceased and on due order and authorization of the court, the defending heirs, who were parties to the order and authorization for the mortgage, will not be permitted to collaterally attack the validity of the mortgage on the ground that part of the land was the homestead of the deceased and therefore descended to the heirs exempt from the debts of the deceased.

Reinsurance Life v Houser, 208-1226; 227 NW 116

10153 Exemption in hands of issue.

Right of heirs. A homestead devised by the owner thereof to his wife, who accepts the same in lieu of her distributive share, descends, upon the death of the wife intestate, to her heirs at law, free from the debts of the original owner contracted subsequent to his acquisition of the said homestead.

Wheeler v Meyer, 201-59; 206 NW 301

Devisee takes exempt from testator's debts. Homestead may be devised exempt from the debts of the testator contracted subsequent to its acquisition.

Long v Northup, 225-132; 279 NW 104; 116 ALR 1475

See In re Schultz, 192-436; 185 NW 24

Purchase (?) or descent (?). A homestead cannot be deemed to descend under the laws of descent to the children of a spouseless parent when the parent leaves a will which provides that no child contesting the will shall take anything under the will, altho the will otherwise gives to the children the identical shares which the laws of descent would give.

Luglan v Lenning, 214-439; 239 NW 692

Title under will (?) or law of descent (?)—attending rights. Devisees whose shares under a will are, both in quantity and quality, exactly the shares which they, in the absence of a will, would take under the statute law of descent, are deemed to take title, not under the will, but under the said statutes of descent—the worthier title—and so taking they necessarily take the statutory exemptions, if any, attending the property.

Luckenbill v Bates, 220-871; 263 NW 811; 103 ALR 252

Exemption from debt. When an intestate homestead owner is survived by a spouse, or by issue, or by both spouse and issue, the homestead property cannot be subject to the debts of the deceased owner except as provided in §10155, C., '31.

Southwick v Strong, 218-435; 255 NW 523

Immateriality as to source of title. On the question of the descent to heirs of the homestead of an intestate, the source of title of the intestate is quite immaterial.

Oskaloosa Bk. v Jamison, 205-349; 218 NW 29

Involuntary sale—effect. When, in probate proceedings, the sale of the homestead of an intestate is involuntary as to an heir, then the proceeds of such sale, insofar as the interest of such heir is concerned, are exempt from execution levy.

Oskaloosa Bk. v Jamison, 205-349; 218 NW 29

Rights of children. Homestead property which descends to children of an intestate and spouseless owner is exempt from all antecedent debts of such children.

Dever v Turner, 200-926; 205 NW 755

Arispe Bk. v Werner, 201-484; 207 NW 578

Rights of children. Homestead property passing by will to testator's children by way of remainder after the termination of a life estate in the surviving spouse is not exempt from the antecedent debts of such children.

Arispe Bk. v Werner, 201-484; 207 NW 578
See Bracewell v Hughes, 214-241; 242 NW 66

Liability for debts of children. Children who take a homestead under the will of their spouseless parent, take it subject to their own debts created subsequent to the acquisition of the homestead by their parent.

Luglan v Lenning, 214-439; 239 NW 692

10154 New homestead exempt.

Acquisition of new homestead. A present homestead is shown to be a continuation of a prior homestead by evidence that, immediately after the sale of the prior homestead, the ground for the present homestead was acquired, and that thereon a residence was erected with all due diligence, and occupied as a home by the owner and his family, all at an expense which did not exceed the value of the prior homestead; and it is immaterial that part of the said expense was not shown to be the identical money which was received from the prior sale.

Harm v Hale, 206-920; 221 NW 582

Burden of proof. One who claims that his present homestead was purchased with funds received from the sale of a prior homestead has the burden so to show.

Harm v Hale, 206-920; 221 NW 582

Childless widow—right to sell and acquire new homestead. A childless widow to whom the family homestead has been devised by her husband may sell said homestead and invest the proceeds thereof in a new homestead and hold the latter, to the extent in value of the old homestead, exempt from execution in all cases where the old homestead would have been exempt had she retained it.

Magel v Hunt, 221-199; 265 NW 119

Destruction by fire—proceeds of insurance—exemption. The act of the owners of a homestead destroyed by fire in immediately using a portion of the proceeds of the insurance on the destroyed homestead in the purchase of a new homestead does not deprive them of the right to hold, for a reasonable time, the balance of said proceeds as exempt, when they have the bona fide intention of applying said balance in the repair and improvement of the new homestead, said entire proceeds being less than the value of the old homestead.

Blakeslee v Paul, 212-1385; 238 NW 447

Exemption of proceeds. A homesteader who exchanges his homestead for other property—even for property other than money—may, for a reasonable time, hold exempt the property so received, when he made the exchange in the then bona fide intent to acquire a new homestead with the proceeds.

Fardal v Satre, 200-1109; 206 NW 22

Trading old for new—rule for valuation. When the owner of a mortgage-incumbered homestead trades it for a new homestead, and the issue arises, under this section, whether the value of the new homestead exceeds the value of the old homestead, the old homestead must be valued as wholly unincumbered.

[The fundamental reason for such holding is that the owner of such incumbered homestead would have the right, of course, to pay off or discharge the incumbrances, and, after so doing, would have the legal right to hold the entire unincumbered homestead, exempt from any debt contracted after it became his homestead.]

American Bank v Willenbrock, 209-250; 228 NW 295

Selling, investing and buying new homestead. A person who temporarily moves away from his homestead, but later sells it on credit, may invest the proceeds, as collected, in loans, with the bona fide purpose at all times of using said proceeds and the accumulations therefrom in the purchase of a new homestead, and if said purpose is executed within a reasonable time, the new homestead, to the extent in value of the old, is exempt from execution in all cases where the old one would have been exempt.

Elliott v Till, 219-649; 259 NW 460

When unimproved lot exempt. An unimproved city lot purchased with the proceeds of the purchaser's former homestead, and within a reasonable time after the sale of said homestead, and with the bona fide purpose of at once improving said lot as a new homestead—said proceeds never having lost their homestead character,—is, to the extent in value of the old homestead, exempt from execution where the old would have been exempt.

Elliott v Till, 219-649; 259 NW 460

10155 Debts for which homestead liable.

I DEBTS CONTRACTED PRIOR TO ACQUISITION OF THE HOMESTEAD

(a) NATURE AND KIND OF DEBTS

Descent of homestead free from prior debts of devisor.

Wheeler v Meyer, 201-59; 206 NW 301

Devise subject to unenforceable debts. The will of a spouseless testator will not be held to devise testator's homestead to his children subject to debts which could not be otherwise enforced against said homestead, unless the intent so to do is evidenced by testamentary language which is unequivocal and imperative. The usual and formal paragraph in the preliminary part of a will directing the payment of "all my just debts" is quite insufficient to evince such intent.

Luckenbill v Bates, 220-871; 263 NW 811; 103 ALR 252

Rights of children or heirs. When an intestate homestead owner is survived by a spouse, or by issue, or by both spouse and issue, the homestead property cannot be subject to the debts of the deceased owner except as provided in this section.

Southwick v Strong, 218-435; 255 NW 523

(b) METHOD OF ACQUIRING AND HOLDING HOMESTEAD IN RE LIABILITY FOR DEBTS

Devisee takes exempt from testator's debts. Homestead may be devised exempt from the debts of the testator contracted subsequent to its acquisition.

Long v Northup, 225-132; 279 NW 104; 116 ALR 1475

See In re Schultz, 192-436; 185 NW 24

Presumption from continued occupancy. Upon proof that a homestead in property was acquired by a mother because of the occupancy of the property by herself and minor daughter as a home, and that such occupancy continued until the mother died, it will be rebuttably presumed that the property was the homestead of the mother at the time of her death, even tho, in the meantime, the daughter marries and, with her husband, continues joint occupancy of the property with the mother.

In re McClain, 220-638; 262 NW 666

Will subjecting homestead to debts of life tenant. A provision in a will, setting up a life estate with remainder over to certain devisees, after all indebtedness and funeral expenses of the life tenant are paid, subjects the estate to a claim for funeral expenses of the life tenant, even if it was his homestead, such provision being a condition upon the devise to the remaindermen.

De Cook v Johnson, 226-246; 284 NW 118

(c) ACCRUAL AND ENFORCEMENT OF CLAIM AGAINST THE HOMESTEAD

Jurisdiction of bankruptcy court. The jurisdiction of the federal bankruptcy court over the exempt property of the bankrupt extends no further than to enter an order setting off such property to the bankrupt. Irrespective of the proceedings in such court, the right to the exempt property, as between the owner and a mortgagee thereof, must be determined in the state court.

Eckhardt v Hess, 200-1308; 206 NW 291

Debts enforceable against—unallowable procedure. After a court of bankruptcy had adjudged a debtor to be a bankrupt and after the court has set off a homestead to said debtor, a creditor holding a duly scheduled, unliquidated, and unsecured debt has no right to proceed in equity in the state court, and have his debt adjudicated and enforced as a lien on the said homestead because said debt antedates the acquisition of said homestead. And it is immaterial that the creditor, preceding his action in the state court, obtained an order staying the final discharge of the bankrupt.

Bracewell v Hughes, 214-241; 242 NW 66

Failure of junior mortgagee to redeem—effect. The holder of a junior mortgage on both homestead and nonhomestead property of a bankrupt, who is not satisfied out of the proceeds of a "free-from-lien" sale of the nonhomestead property by the trustee in bankruptcy, does not lose his lien on the homestead property by failing to redeem from the foreclosure of senior mortgages which are satisfied out of said proceeds, because the satisfaction of said senior mortgages left nothing from which redemption could be made.

First Bk. v Kleih, 201-1298; 205 NW 843

Homestead and nonhomestead property—sale en masse—appropriation of surplus. A junior execution creditor who, at a senior mortgage foreclosure sale, buys in property which, in accordance with the mortgagor's agreement to that effect, is sold en masse, and regardless of the homestead character of part of the property, and who, in so buying, bids an amount in excess of the senior mortgage debt, on the express condition that said excess be indorsed on his junior execution (which is done), and who, with the full knowledge of the mortgagor, and without objection by him, complies with his bid, and after a year for redemption takes a deed, is not thereafter liable to the mortgagor for the amount of said excess on the theory that such excess represents the mortgagor's homestead, on which the junior execution creditor admittedly had no lien.

Phoenix Tr. v Vaught, 201-450; 205 NW 792

Receiver under mortgage foreclosure. The right of a homestead to be protected from receivership in mortgage foreclosure is fully protected by delaying the appointment of a receiver until after the sale of all the mortgaged lands under foreclosure has revealed a deficiency judgment.

Finken v Schram, 212-406; 236 NW 408

Incumbrance—right to receiver. In the foreclosure of a mortgage solely on a homestead and for the purchase price thereof, the mortgagee is entitled (except under exceptional circumstances) to the appointment of a receiver without proof of the insolvency of the debtor, (1) when the mortgage pledges a lien on the rents in case of default in payment, and provides for a receiver in case of foreclosure, and (2) when the inadequacy of the security is clearly made to appear.

Iowa-D. M. Bank v Crawford, 217-609; 252 NW 97

Receiver—inequitable circumstances. On the issue whether a receiver for pledged rents should be appointed in the foreclosure of a mortgage solely on a homestead, the court cannot give consideration to the plea that extensive improvements have been made on the property since the mortgage was given when there is no proof that the mortgagee is the grantor of the defendant homestead owner.

Iowa-D. M. Bank v Crawford, 217-609; 252 NW 97

(d) LIEN OF JUDGMENTS

Administrator's settlement of unenforceable lien—homestead's nonliability. Altho a settlement agreement was made between a claimant and an administrator, a decedent's homestead may not be subjected to a mortgage or judgment which has never become a lien thereon, which was not filed nor allowed against the estate, which was not enforced within two years after judgment entry, and when such settlement was never approved by the probate court.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

Antecedent debts—double liability on bank stock. The very act of acquiring the ownership of corporate bank stock ipso facto creates a contract "debt" for the statutory double liability on the stock. It follows that a judgment against the stockholder on such double liability may (the debtor having no other leviable property) be enforced against the stockholder's subsequently acquired homestead, even tho the judgment was rendered subsequent to the acquisition of the homestead.

Smith v Andrew, 209-99; 227 NW 587

I DEBTS CONTRACTED PRIOR TO ACQUISITION OF HOMESTEAD—concluded
(d) LIEN OF JUDGMENTS—concluded

Family expenses. A homestead is exempt from execution on a judgment for a family expense contracted after the acquisition of the homestead. In other words, the statutory declaration that a homestead is exempt from judicial sale "where there is no special declaration of statute to the contrary" (§10150, C., '27) has no reference whatever to the statutory declaration that a family expense is "chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife". (§10459, C., '27.)

Dorsey v Bentzinger, 209-883; 226 NW 52

Judgment on loans to pay alimony. Judgments against a husband on obligations contracted since the acquisition of a homestead are not liens on the homestead which is awarded to the wife in divorce proceedings as alimony, even tho the judgment be for money borrowed by the husband to pay temporary alimony and attorney fees for the wife in said proceedings.

Novotny v Horecka, 200-1217; 206 NW 110; 42 ALR 1158

Subsequent loan to pay prior debt. A judgment on a loan made to the owners of a homestead long after the acquisition of the homestead is not a lien on the homestead, because of the fact that said loan was made and used for the specific purpose of paying off a debt antedating the acquisition of said homestead.

Brauch v Freking, 219-556; 258 NW 892

Unallowable acquisition—debts enforceable against. One of several remaindermen may not acquire, in a portion of the common property, a homestead based on his occupancy of the property as a tenant of the life tenant. If, after the death of the life tenant, he acquires a homestead by virtue of his new occupancy, such homestead is necessarily subject to a judgment based on claims long antedating the death of the life tenant.

Kramer v Hofmann, 218-1269; 257 NW 361

Valueless and oppressive lien. A court of equity will not decree a lien on the nonexempt portion of the judgment defendant's homestead and award a special execution for the enforcement of such lien, tho the plaintiff is technically entitled thereto, when on the record such procedure would be valueless, and possibly oppressive on the defendant.

American Bk. v Willenbrock, 209-250; 228 NW 295

Wife's homestead not liable for husband's debt. A judgment against a husband is not enforceable against a homestead acquired by his wife in her own name,—even tho so acquired long after the inception of the debt on which said judgment was rendered,—on proof that the husband, while perfectly solvent, and with no fraudulent intent, and without expressly or impliedly acquiring any interest in the land, voluntarily permitted a portion of his own assets to be applied on the debt of the wife for her said homestead.

Price v Scharpff, 220-125; 261 NW 511

Admissions of husband—when inadmissible against wife. In an action against a wife to subject her homestead to a judgment which had been rendered against her husband on his debt antedating the acquisition by the wife of her said homestead, admissions of the husband tending to show that he furnished the money to pay for the said homestead are not binding on, or admissible against, the wife.

Price v Scharpff, 220-125; 261 NW 511

(e) PURCHASE MONEY

Incumbrance—pledge of rents—effect. The purchaser of property who, simultaneously with the purchase, mortgages the property for the purchase price, and therein pledges the rents in case of default, and agrees to a receivership in case of foreclosure, does not, by subsequently occupying the property as a homestead, acquire a homestead right which will be superior to the right of the mortgagee to enforce, by receivership, the pledge of rents in order to pay a deficiency judgment.

Iowa-D. M. Bank v Crawford, 217-609; 252 NW 97

II DEBTS CREATED BY WRITTEN CONTRACT

Contingent contract—noncertain debt. Under a written contract providing that first party will pay second party a named fee whenever second party secures the legal allowance of a certain claim in first party's favor, no debt is contracted which can be enforced against the subsequently acquired homestead of first party until said second party actually obtains the allowance of said claim, because until such allowance is obtained no debt accrues against first party which is certain and in all events payable.

Hunt, etc. v Moore, 219-451; 258 NW 114

Mortgage without consideration as to wife. A mortgage on homestead property duly signed by both husband and wife cannot be enforced against the wife when it appears that there was no consideration for the wife's signature.

Greenland v Abben, 218-255; 254 NW 830

III EXHAUSTION OF OTHER PROPERTY BEFORE RESORTING TO HOMESTEAD

(a) ASSERTING RIGHT TO HAVE OTHER PROPERTY EXHAUSTED

Homestead and nonhomestead property—sale en masse—apportionment of surplus. Tho it be conceded, arguendo, that, where mortgaged property is sold on foreclosure en masse, and regardless of the homestead character of part of the property, to a junior execution creditor on an indivisible bid in excess of the mortgage debt, the mortgagor would have a recoverable interest in the excess on the theory that it represented his homestead, on which the junior creditor had no lien, nevertheless the mortgagor would not be entitled to recover the entire excess, because equity would require the bid to be apportioned between the homestead and the nonhomestead property, in order that the homestead should bear its just proportion of the mortgage debt.

Phoenix Co. v Vaught, 201-450; 205 NW 792

(b) INCUMBRANCES ON BOTH HOMESTEAD AND OTHER PROPERTY

Exhausting nonhomestead property. The right, under this section, of a mortgagor of both homestead and nonhomestead property to insist that the nonhomestead property be first exhausted before resorting to the homestead property, is a right which a subsequent mortgagee of the same property may insist on against a prior mortgagee of the nonhomestead property only.

Moody v Century Sav. Bank, 239 US 374

Exhausting other property. A sheriff in selling a homestead forty, and a nonhomestead forty (under special mortgage-foreclosure execution) may very properly call for and receive, in turn, separate, substantial, and good-faith bids, (1) on the nonhomestead forty, (2) on the homestead forty, and (3) on the two forties en masse, and, over the objections of the debtor, may accept the bid en masse and sell thereunder when said bid en masse is substantially in excess of the aggregate of the other two bids, tho insufficient to completely satisfy the execution.

Prudential v Westfall, 219-1119; 260 NW 344
American Bk. v Davis, 221-1183; 268 NW 9

(c) PROCEDURE IN EXHAUSTING OTHER PROPERTY

Failure of junior mortgagee to redeem. The holder of a junior mortgage on both homestead and nonhomestead property of a bankrupt, who is not satisfied out of the proceeds of a "free-from-lien" sale of the nonhomestead property by the trustee in bankruptcy, does not lose his lien on the homestead property by failing to redeem from the foreclosure of senior mortgages which are satisfied out of said proceeds, because the satisfaction of said senior mortgages left nothing from which redemption could be made.

First Tr. & Sav. Bk. v Kleih, 201-1298; 205 NW 843

Liabilities enforceable against—exhausting other property. A sheriff in selling a homestead forty, and a nonhomestead forty (under special mortgage-foreclosure execution) may very properly call for and receive, in turn, separate, substantial, and good-faith bids, (1) on the nonhomestead forty, (2) on the homestead forty, and (3) on the two forties en masse, and, over the objections of the debtor, may accept the bid en masse and sell thereunder when said bid en masse is substantially in excess of the aggregate of the other two bids, tho insufficient to completely satisfy the execution.

Prudential Ins. v Westfall, 219-1119; 260 NW 344

American Bk. v Davis, 221-1183; 268 NW 9

Liabilities enforceable against—prayer for valueless and oppressive lien. A court of equity will not decree a lien on the nonexempt portion of the judgment defendant's homestead and award a special execution for the enforcement of such lien, tho plaintiff is technically entitled thereto, when, on the record, such procedure would be valueless; and possibly oppressive on the defendant.

American Savings Bk. v Willenbrock, 209-250; 228 NW 295

IV DISPOSAL OF HOMESTEAD AS AFFECTING RIGHTS OF CREDITORS

Voluntary conveyance—burden of proof. The principle that the grantee in a voluntary conveyance of a homestead may sustain the conveyance against the claims of the creditors of the grantor necessarily imposes on the grantee the burden of showing the homestead character of the property.

Dolan v Newberry, 200-511; 202 NW 545; 205 NW 205

V MECHANICS' LIENS

VI ABSENCE OF SPOUSE OR ISSUE

Acquisition and loss—noninterest of absent spouse. The fact that a homestead was both acquired and lost by the wife during a time when the whereabouts of the husband was unknown renders quite immaterial the question whether the husband is yet alive.

Solnar v Solnar, 205-701; 216 NW 288

Loss of homestead status—termination of family relation—effect. Land which acquires the status of a homestead because of its occupancy by the owner and by her minor children as a family (the mother being, long prior thereto, permanently deserted by her husband) loses such status when the family relation is destroyed by the death of some of the minors and by the attainment of maturity by the others and the removal to homes of their own, thereby leaving the owner-mother in sole occupancy of the property.

Solnar v Solnar, 205-701; 216 NW 288

CHAPTER 442

LANDLORD AND TENANT

10156 Apportionment of rent.

Rentals for successive seasons. In an action to recover the rental of lands for successive seasons, interest is properly computed from the end of each annual period on each item of annual rent.

Bigelow v Ins. Co., 206-884; 221 NW 661

10157 Double rental value—liability.

Constructive eviction—effect. The constructive eviction of a tenant does not absolve him from the payment of the agreed rent unless he surrenders the premises.

Zimbelman v Boone Coal, 220-1310; 263 NW 335

10158 Attornment to stranger.

Attornment—acts not constituting. No attornment takes place by the mere act of a tenant in assigning his interest in the lease and placing the assignee in possession of the leased premises.

Snyder v Bernstein, 201-931; 208 NW 503

Disputing title. Proof that an apparently valid lease is in reality a fraud and a sham is not violative of the rule that a tenant will not be permitted to deny the title of his landlord.

Schmidt v Twedt, 219-128; 257 NW 325

Estoppel to dispute landlord's title. One who mistakenly supposes that he has lost his property by the issuance of a tax deed (which in fact is void) and, under the influence of legal duress, becomes the tenant of the deed holder, is not estopped to dispute the latter's title.

Galleger v Duhigg, 218-521; 255 NW 867

Estoppel of tenant. A lessee in possession will not be heard to assert against his lessor that he never intended to carry out his agreement to surrender the premises and every part thereof, on the termination of his lease.

Taylor v Olmstead, 201-760; 206 NW 88

Landlord's title—estoppel to dispute. A tenant who remains in undisturbed possession of realty under a lease with an executor, and refuses to quit and surrender said premises at the termination of said lease, may not defend his wrongful possession by or under the plea that the executor had no legal right to lease the land.

Wright v Zachgo, 222-1368; 271 NW 512

Nonpermissible plea by tenant. In an action to quiet title to lands, a defendant who is in peaceable possession of the premises under a lease from plaintiff will not be permitted to assert that plaintiff had no title when the lease was executed.

McKenney & Seabury v Nelson, 220-504; 262 NW 101

Rents—adjudication against chattel mortgage. On the issue, in real estate mortgage foreclosure, whether an outstanding lease between the owner and his tenant (parties to the action) was superior to the mortgagee's right to a receiver for said premises and for the rents thereof, an unappealed decree which orders the appointment of such receiver works an eviction of said tenant and the consequent nullification of a chattel mortgage by the landlord on his share of the crop rent under said lease, it appearing that the real estate mortgagee had no notice or knowledge of such chattel mortgage until after the entry of his decree of foreclosure.

Keenan v Jordan, 204-1338; 217 NW 248

Rent—incident to land—passes to heirs. General rule is that rents accruing after the owner's death belong to the heirs or devisees, as an incident to the ownership of the land which descends to them.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

Title of landlord. In an action by a landlord to recover damages consequent on the conversion by defendant of property on which the landlord had a lien for rent, the question of the ownership of the land by the landlord is wholly irrelevant and immaterial.

Mau v Rice Bros., 216-864; 249 NW 206

10159 Tenant at will—notice to quit.

I NATURE AND CREATION OF TENANCY AT WILL

Lease (?), joint adventure (?), or partnership (?). Instrument reviewed and held to create the relation of landlord and tenant, and not that of a joint adventure or partnership.

Johnson v Watland, 208-1370; 227 NW 410

Apparent authority of manager sufficient to bind corporation to tenancy. Corporation held liable for rent as tenant at will, based on correspondence and telephone conversations with corporation's manager, as against contention that manager was not authorized to enter into arrangement made—principal being bound by apparent authority of its agent.

Daly Co. v Brunswick Co., (NOR); 263 NW 234

Implied obligation. Proof that the holder of a first mortgage on real estate was himself in occupancy of the premises, and continued such occupancy after the issuance of a sheriff's deed under a junior lien, generates the presumption that such occupancy was with the assent of the said occupant and the said deed holder, with consequent obligation of the occupant to pay reasonable rental to said deed holder until such time as a deed might be executed under foreclosure of the first mortgage.

Norman v Dougan, 201-923; 208 NW 366

Payment of rent not essential. Payment of rent is not an essential element to the creation of the relation of landlord and tenant.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Possession of tenant possession of landlord. The possession of a tenant is the possession of the landlord, and is notice of the rights of the landlord.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

II TERMINATION OF TENANCY

Constructive eviction. The constructive eviction of a tenant does not absolve him from the payment of the agreed rent unless he surrenders the premises.

Zimelman v Boone Coal, 220-1310; 263 NW 335

Injunction not available in lieu of possessory action. One, who claims the possession of realty against another who is in actual possession as a tenant at will, may not resort to injunction proceedings to adjudicate his claimed right of possession.

Austin v Perry, 219-1344; 261 NW 615

Oral sale with part payment. An oral agreement to sell land, accompanied at the time by part payment, constitutes a "sale", within the terms of a lease which provides that, in case of a sale of the premises, the tenancy may be terminated.

Luse v Elliott, 204-378; 213 NW 410

Termination—30 days notice—insufficiency appearing in petition. In a forcible entry and detainer action where the petition alleged a notice dated January 12th terminating a tenancy at will "within 30 days from the date of this notice", such notice being served on January 13th, a demurrer should have been sustained, as only 29 and not the statutory 30 days written notice was given.

Murphy v Hilton, 224-199; 275 NW 497

Unavailable defense. A tenant who has agreed that his tenancy may be terminated in case the landlord sells the property may not predicate a defense to such termination on the fact that the landlord (concededly in good faith) actually conveyed a part of the land to his wife, solely in consideration of the wife's agreement to sign a conveyance of the remaining part of the land.

Luse v Elliott, 204-378; 213 NW 410

III LEASES

Discussion. See 6 ILB 173—Occupation of premises by employee

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 9 ILB 119—Duty of landlord to relet premises

Change of relation—effect. Manifestly a landlord and his tenant may, at the close of the tenancy, take on and assume the relationship of vendor and purchaser, and thereby enable the former tenant to hold the premises in question adversely to the former landlord.

Burch v Wickliff, 209-582; 227 NW 133

Commencement of term. A lease which definitely provides that the term of the lease shall begin with the execution of the lease, but which, with equal definiteness, provides that the landlord shall not give possession until a named date after the execution of the lease, gives the landlord no lien for rent on property which the tenant takes and keeps upon the property after the execution of the lease, but which he removes before the day for possession under the lease arrives, it appearing that such short-time possession by the tenant was for a purpose foreign to the lease.

Federal Bank v Wylie, 207-816; 221 NW 831

Conditional delivery. No contract relation is created by the execution of a lease and the delivery thereof on a condition which later fails.

Standard v Kinseth, 204-974; 215 NW 972

Collateral evidence—interference by lessor—evidence. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to show that the parties to a lease had entered into an alleged collateral agreement, or that the lessor had so interfered with the lessee and his possession as to render impossible the carrying on of lessee's business.

Woodhull v Trainor, 215-1330; 247 NW 808

Conflicting evidence. Conflicting testimony on the issue whether a tenant had waived his right to certain refrigerating room, as called for by the lease, necessarily generates a jury question; and the verdict thereon is a finality.

Rocho Bros. v Dairy, 204-391; 214 NW 685

Oral explanation. The fact that both of two parties sign a lease and the accompanying rent notes does not necessarily establish, in a controversy strictly between said two parties, that each party should pay one half the rent. The said fact is open to oral explanation.

Fisher v Nicola, 214-801; 241 NW 478

Nonabuse of discretion. In action for forcible entry and detainer, where there was evidence of error in instructions in that court assumed that an alleged lease was made with agent of plaintiff with authority to make an oral lease, and that court did not specifically define to jury necessary elements of an oral lease, and there was also question that verdict was not supported by evidence, granting new trial held not an abuse of discretion.

Holman v Rook, (NOR); 271 NW 612

Precautionary instructions. A jury may very properly be told not to allow a recovery of rents prior to a specified time, even tho no claim is made in the pleadings for such prior rents, when it is manifest that the court was simply guarding against possible confusion because of the state of the record.

Bigelow v Ins. Co., 206-884; 221 NW 661

Contract lien—enforcement. An action to establish and enforce a contract lien for rent is properly brought in equity, and is not transferable to law, because the answer presents law issues. Held that a contract lien for rent is validly created by a lease provision that the landlord should have, not only the statutory lien for rent, but also a lien upon all property of the tenant used or situated on the leased premises whether exempt from execution or not.

Beh v Tilk, 222-729; 269 NW 751

Contract against lien—validity. An owner of land in leasing his property has a right to contract that improvements made by the lessee on the land shall not be made on credit, and that said property shall not be liable therefor.

Thompson Yards v Haakinson Co., 209-985; 229 NW 266

Contract of sale in lease. An option reserved in an ordinary lease of real estate for the purchase of the described property by the lessee at a fixed price, and on specified time and methods of payment (among which was an agreement that the rent paid should be credited on the purchase price), is specifically enforceable, even tho no provision is embodied therein as to (1) formal possession or (2) title or (3) conveyance, and even tho the parties thereto unnecessarily reserved the right generally to enter into additional agreements relative to such option.

Carter v Bair, 201-788; 208 NW 283

Construction—joint purchase of property. When the beneficiaries of a trust in real property and in the long-time lease thereon are given the right either to continue to receive the rent under the lease, or to terminate the lease by jointly purchasing of the lessee the building which the lessee has erected on the land, under the lease, then the assignees of the beneficiaries must likewise act jointly in the purchase of the building.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

Lease—readjustment of rent—construction. A long-time lease which provides (1) that the rental shall be computed at a named percentage on the value of the land (subject to a minimum rental); (2) that, for the first five-year period, a specified rental shall be paid (which was said percentage on the agreed and estimated value); (3) that the rental for the balance of the term shall, at the close of each five-year period, be subject to revision, "based upon any increase in the estimated value of the land"; and (4) that such valuation shall be made by certain valuers or appraisers, requires the valuers, in making such valuation, to treat the last preceding value as a verity. In other words, the valuers may not adjudge that the preceding valuers were mistaken in their judgment. Phrased otherwise, the valuers must confine themselves to a determination of the simple question whether the value has increased or decreased since the last preceding valuation, and add such increase to, or subtract such decrease from, the last preceding valuation.

Minot v Pelletier Co., 207-505; 223 NW 182

Disputing landlord's title—fraud. Proof that an apparently valid lease is in reality a fraud and a sham is not violative of the rule that a tenant will not be permitted to deny the title of his landlord.

Schmidt v Twedt, 219-128; 257 NW 325

Execution by husband only—liability of wife. A wife is not liable on a written lease signed by the husband alone as lessee, tho the leased premises be occupied by the husband and wife as a family residence.

Whether the wife be liable for the rent as a family expense under §10459, C., '35, is a quite different question—a question which cannot be deemed before the court in landlord's attachment proceedings manifestly based solely on the lease signed by the husband alone.

Rogers v Davis, 223-373; 272 NW 539

Foreclosure—sale—deed—right to unaccrued rents. The principle that one who receives a sheriff's deed is entitled to unaccrued rents under an outstanding lease can have no application when the lease had terminated immediately prior to the issuance of said sheriff's deed.

Kerr v Horn, 211-1093; 232 NW 494

Forfeiture—noncontract grounds. A lease may not be forfeited on a noncontract ground.

In re Grooms, 204-746; 216 NW 78

Landlord's contractual lien—recording articles and assignments—constructive notice to trustee. Where a lease provided for lien in favor of lessors for taxes and other money paid by lessors under provisions of lease, and when assignments of lease to corporations, articles of incorporation of bankrupt lessee under its original name, and amendment changing its name to that of bankrupt had all been recorded, that record gave constructive notice to trustee in bankruptcy and all subsequent lienors of lessor's prior lien.

Ginsberg v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 721

Measure of damages—wrongful act without profit to wrongdoer—essential proof. The lessee of coal lands who seeks to recover damages consequent on the wrongful act of the owner of the land in taking coal from the land, need not show that the defendant-owner made any profit from his wrongful operations. Plaintiff need only show wherein and to what extent he was damaged.

Hartford Coal Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 263 NW 269

Merger—acquisition of title by stockholder of corporate lessee. A lease in which a corporation with many stockholders is lessee may not be said to be merged, and thereby terminated, simply because some of the stockholders acquire the equitable title to the real estate.

Fleming v Casady, 202-1094; 211 NW 488

Mutual rights—compensation—nondual employment. The fact that different property owners employ the same rental agent to obtain the same tenant does not constitute such a dual employment as to deprive the agent of his compensation from the owner for whom a lease is obtained.

Foley v Mathias, 211-160; 233 NW 106; 71 ALR 696

Mutual termination—jury question. Whether a lease has been mutually terminated is necessarily a jury question on conflicting testimony.

Benson v Iowa Co., 207-410; 221 NW 464

Negligence of tenant—liability of landlord. Principle recognized that a property owner who has parted with full possession and control of his premises by lease is not liable to third persons for injuries caused by the negligence of the tenant.

Updegraff v City, 210-382; 226 NW 928

Nonpermissible power of partner—burden of proof. A partnership is not bound by the act of one partner in consenting to, and acquiescing in, an act which is subversive of the very purpose of the partnership, unless he who seeks so to bind the partnership establishes the fact that all the partners consented to, and acquiesced in, said act.

Hartford Coal Co. v Helsing, 220-1010; 263 NW 269

Option conditioned on payment of note—conditional delivery—jury question. With the evidence in conflict, a jury question is generated as to whether or not the delivery of a note was conditional when it was given at the time of the execution of a farm lease which contained an option to purchase the farm on condition that the note should be paid.

Walker v Todd, 225-276; 280 NW 512

Pledge of rents and profits—tenant's right of offset. The right which a mortgagee has, as pledgee of the rents and as assignee of a lease executed by the mortgagor-owner, is subordinate to the right of the tenant under said lease to offset against the rents owed by him to the insolvent landlord-mortgagor an unpaid indebtedness which was due to the tenant from said landlord-mortgagor prior to the time when the mortgage and lease were executed.

Loots v Clancey, 209-442; 228 NW 77

Priority over rent accruing under tenancy at will. A recorded chattel mortgage on the property of a tenant used on the demised premises under a lease for years, attains priority, immediately upon the termination of the lease, over the landlord's claim for future rent accruing under a succeeding tenancy at will of the same premises; likewise a recorded chattel mortgage executed by a tenant at will, on property used on the leased premises, attains priority immediately upon the expiration of 30 days after the execution and recording of the mortgage, over the landlord's claim for future accruing rent.

Nickle v Mann, 211-906; 232 NW 722

Reformation of lease—right of action—negligence barring relief. A party who has no excuse whatever for signing a writing without reading it, or without requesting a reading of it, will not be granted reformation. And the rights of the wife of the signer insofar as she is interested in the writing, tho not a signer thereof, will be foreclosed by her like inexcusable neglect to read or request the reading of the instrument.

Stillman v Bank, 216-957; 249 NW 230

Reformation of lease—mandatory degree of proof. Plaintiff seeking the reformation of a written instrument must fail unless he establishes by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence—by evidence exceeding a mere preponderance—by evidence approximating proof beyond a reasonable doubt—the definite contract which the executed writing does not embrace. Evidence reviewed in detail under a prayer for the reformation of a lease, and held insufficient to comply with the rule.

Stillman v Bank, 216-957; 249 NW 230

Rents—payment in advance—ouster—right to recover. A tenant who pays the rent in advance to the landlord and is legally evicted by foreclosure proceedings before the commencement of the term may recover of the landlord the sum so paid as for a total failure of consideration.

Ransier v Worrell, 211-606; 229 NW 663

Right to terminate. Lease reviewed and held that the lessor in terminating the lease was acting strictly within his contract right.

Liberty Oil v Green, 208-1136; 225 NW 858

Securing modification of fraud-induced contract—effect. One who, after discovering that he had been fraudulently induced to enter into a contract of lease, secures a modification of the contract substantially beneficial and advantageous to himself, thereby waives the fraud, and the original rights arising by reason thereof.

Timmerman v Gurnsey, 206-35; 217 NW 879

Strip mining coal—pipe-line right-of-way easement—back-filling required. A holder of a strip mine coal lease who enters upon and strips coal from land, upon which land a pipe-line company holds an easement, knowing that by so mining violates his lease, must back-fill the land when the easement holder exercises his option to buy; and upon his failure to make the back-fill, a judgment against the coal lessee for the cost thereof is proper.

Penn v Pipe Line Co., 225-680; 281 NW 194

Lease of minable coal—breach—burden of proof. In an action to recover minimum royalties under a lease of coal lands because of defendant's breach of contract to mine all minable, workable and merchantable coal underlying said lands, plaintiff has the burden to establish the existence of such coal, especially when plaintiff assumed such burden by his pleadings. Evidence exhaustively reviewed and held insufficient to generate a question for the jury.

Scovel v Coal Co., 222-354; 269 NW 9

Tenant's right to homestead before termination of lease. A tenant may have a homestead right under a leasehold interest which is available to him as against all persons, including the holder of the superior title, the lessor-owner, during the term of the tenancy and before the lease has expired.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

Unilateral right to terminate. The fact that a lease accords to the lessee the right to terminate the lease on a given notice, without a corresponding right in the lessor, does not render the lease unenforceable when the consideration for the lease does not lie in mutual promises.

Standard v Veland, 207-1340; 224 NW 467

(b) ASSIGNMENT GENERALLY

Assignees—original relationship continues. Lessor's assignee of a lease, and a telephone corporation succeeding to the ownership of the original lessee corporation, stand in the same position as the original parties to the lease.

Culavin v Tel. Co., 224-813; 276 NW 621

Assignee of lease—rights limited to interest of mortgagor-landlord. The assignee of a lease from a landlord-mortgagor cannot take, as against mortgagee, any greater interest than held by the landlord-mortgagor.

Bankers Life v Garlock, 227-1335; 291 NW 536

Assignment prohibited. A lease of lands may validly prohibit the tenant from assigning the lease and validly provide for an optional termination by the landlord of the lease in case the prohibition is violated.

Snyder v Bernstein, 201-931; 208 NW 503

Acceptance of assignment of lease—effect. One who, in writing, accepts an assignment of a lease, with the consent of the lessor, thereby contracts to carry out the terms of the lease irrespective of any later assignment of the lease by the said assignee, and it is no defense that the lessor, the property being vacant, obtains the aid of a receiver.

Pickler v Mershon, 212-447; 236 NW 382

Assignee—liability to discharge rent obligations. The written assignee of a lease of real estate who orally accepts the assignment, or effects such acceptance by his conduct, with the approval or acquiescence of the lessor, thereby binds himself to discharge the rent obligations; especially is this true when the express provisions of the lease impose such obligation.

Central Bk. v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

Assignment of rent construed—federal soil conservation payments not included. In construing the provisions of a settlement wherein a judgment debtor agreed to assign to his judgment creditor “* * * the amount due from the tenant * * ” of the debtor on certain real estate, the same “ * * being all rentals * * *” for a certain year, held, that federal agricultural conservation payments received by the debtor on the land in question were not in contemplation of the parties, hence creditor was not, on the basis of said assignment, entitled to these payments.

Cooke v Harrington, 227-145; 287 NW 837

Conflicting assignments by partnership and partners—priority. An unrecorded assignment by a partnership to a partnership creditor of a lease of real estate and of the rents accruing thereunder is superior in right to a subsequent recorded assignment by one of the partners to his individual creditor of the individual partner's one-half interest in said rents; and especially is this true when the partnership creditor holds a mortgage which pledges the rents of said land.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

Liability under assignment of lease. A vendee who in the purchase of a business takes an assignment of the lease and agrees to pay the future accruing rentals, but later abandons the property, is liable for said rentals for the time consumed by the vendor in effecting a resale of the property for and on behalf of the defaulting vendee.

Courshon Co. v Brewer, 215-885; 245 NW 354

Liabilities—equities between original parties. Principle recognized that an assignee of a landlord's right to demand an accounting for rents simply stands in the shoes of the assignor.

Quaintance v Bank, 201-457; 205 NW 739

Estate—sale of lease which prohibits sale. The probate court may validly order the administrator of an insolvent estate to sell and assign a lease of realty of which the deceased was lessee, notwithstanding the fact that the lease prohibits the lessee from assigning the lease without the lessor's consent, and provides that the terms of the lease are binding on the heirs, executors, and administrators of the parties, but contains no provision specifically applicable to a sale or assignment by operation of law.

In re Owen, 219-750; 259 NW 474

When lease survives death of lessee. A lease which requires the lessee to diligently farm a portion of the land and to "vigorously utilize" a portion of said land "by extraction of the available sand and gravel" thereon is assignable, and survives the death of the lessee, it appearing that the lease was entered into without reliance on any particular personal fitness of the lessee.

In re Grooms, 204-746; 216 NW 78

Obligation of assignee of lease to pay rent. The assignee of a lease (which simply binds the "lessee, his heirs, and assigns" to pay the rent) is obligated to pay rent because of privity of estate, and when said privity of estate is terminated by a valid re-assignment of the lease the obligation of the assignee to pay rent necessarily terminates unless said assignee has, expressly or impliedly, otherwise obligated himself. And the fact that the lessor accepts the rent from the assignee during the assignee's occupancy is not sufficient to show that the assignee has assumed the obligation to pay rent after re-assignment.

Seeburger v Cohen, 215-1088; 247 NW 292; 89 ALR 427

Recording of assignment of rent not authorized. A written assignment of a lease of real estate and of the rents accruing thereunder (especially when the lease is, at the time, manually delivered to the assignee) is not an instrument which the law requires to be recorded; and if it is recorded, the record imparts no notice.

Phelps v Kroll, 211-1097; 235 NW 67

Recording—effect. A lease of real estate and the assignment thereof are recordable for the purpose of conveying constructive notice to a mortgagee and his subsequently appointed receiver under a mortgage which contains a pledge of the rents, even tho said parties are not entitled, as a matter of right, to such notice.

King v Good, 205-1203; 219 NW 517

Rents—release of tenant—insufficient evidence. Knowledge on the part of a landlord that his tenant has assigned his lease, and the subsequent receipt by the landlord of rent payments from the assignee, are not sufficient, in and of themselves, to show that the landlord has released the original tenant.

Lazerus v Shapiro, 211-376; 233 NW 723

Sale, assignment or sub-letting—principles governing. Principles recognized that provisions in a lease of realty prohibiting the sale or assignment of the lease:

1. Are not favorites of the law and are construed most strongly against the lessor.
2. Will, when unambiguous, be enforced between the original parties.
3. Are not deemed broken when the assignment is by operation of law, unless such an assignment is specifically and by apt words prohibited.

In re Owen, 219-750; 259 NW 474

Sale by known nonowner. A vendee of property takes nothing by his conveyance when he knows who is the actual owner of the property and that his vendor is simply in possession of the property as manager.

Kollman v Kollman, 204-950; 216 NW 77

Stock—restraint on transfer—strictly construed. Restraints on powers to transfer corporate stock, or to assign leases, must be strictly construed.

McDonald v Manufacturing Co., 226-53; 283 NW 261

(b) ASSIGNMENT GENERALLY—concluded

Sufficiency—nonexistent lease. A naked oral promise or understanding to assign a nonexistent but contemplated lease is not good against the subsequently accruing rights of a stranger to the understanding.

Kooistra v Gibford, 201-275; 207 NW 399

Validity—scope of statute. Section 9452, C., '24, which, in effect, provides that an instrument is assignable even tho such assignment is prohibited by the instrument, has no applicability to a personal executory contract, e. g., a lease of lands prohibiting an assignment by the tenant.

Snyder v Bernstein Bros., 201-931; 208 NW 503

(c) FIXTURES INVOLVED

Discussion. See 3 ILB 243—Removing trade fixtures; 18 ILR 527—Renewal—right of removal

Fixtures—absence of annexation or connection. An oil tank buried entirely in the parking of a public street and covered with cement, and a pump connected with said tank and bolted into said cement, tho wholly used in connection with the operation of an automobile service garage on a lot abutting said street and adjacent to said tank and pump, do not become fixtures to said lot, (1) when said tank and pump are in no manner in contact with said lot or with any building thereon or fixture thereof, and (2) when the parties to the original installation distinctly intended that the title to said tank and pump should remain in the party installing them, the latter not being the owner of said lot.

McCoun v Drews, 221-227; 265 NW 160

Constructive severance doctrine inapplicable to movable chattel. When a tenant purchases an electric lighting plant on agreement with the landlord that he may take it with him upon termination of the tenancy, and when, at the termination of such tenancy, the tenant purchases the reversion, there is no occasion to apply the doctrine of constructive severance, because the plant maintained at all times its character as a movable chattel.

Equitable v Chapman, 225-988; 282 NW 355

Farm light plant—not part of realty. In a replevin action for a Delco lighting plant placed on a concrete block in the basement of a farmhouse, such electric plant is not essential to the main business of operating the farm, but is a mere convenience, and is not a part of the realty when it is easily removable, along with the batteries resting on a shelf, and without damage to the house, the wiring being capable of use with any other electrical installation, and when there is no evidence of an intent that it be permanently fixed.

Equitable v Chapman, 225-988; 282 NW 355

Improvement by tenant with right to remove. A mechanic's lien may not be established for a building erected on land by a tenant under an agreement with the landlord-owner that the tenant may, and if required by the landlord will, remove it when the lease terminates.

Southern Sur. v Tire Serv., 209-104; 227 NW 606

Movable farm structures. Movable hog houses and feed bunks on a farm will not constitute fixtures, when to so declare would be contrary to the actual expressed intent of the person, a tenant, who placed them on the farm, and contrary to the intent as reflected in the nature of the articles, their use, and the mode of attachment to the realty.

Speer v Donald, 201-569; 207 NW 581

Removal of building. A mechanic's lien is properly decreed against an improvement erected by a tenant on leased ground when the tenant and his lessor have mutually contracted that the tenant might, at the end of the term, remove all improvements placed on the property by the tenant; and this is true even tho the removal cannot be made without damage to the premises.

Lane-Moore Co. v Kloppenburg, 204-613; 215 NW 637

(d) REPAIRS GENERALLY

Discussion. See 9 ILB 250—Rights of tenant—repairs

Injury to tenant—common-law rules. The housing law (Ch 323, C., '31) providing that "Every dwelling and all the parts thereof shall be kept in good repair by the owner", (§6392, C., '31) does not change the common-law rule of tort liability of the lessor to the lessee.

Johnson v Carter, 218-587; 255 NW 864; 93 ALR 774

Nonduty to repair. Principle reaffirmed that a landlord is under no duty to repair or maintain the leased premises in a safe and suitable condition in the absence of a covenant to that effect.

Chicago JSL Bank v Eggers, 214-710; 243 NW 193

Premises and enjoyment and use thereof—abandonment—recovery for work done. A tenant who, at his own instance, and to advance his own interest under his lease, performs fall plowing on the leased premises, and later, over the landlord's protest, voluntarily surrenders and abandons the premises, may not recover of the landlord the reasonable value of said plowing, even tho the landlord has advantaged himself on account thereof.

Hill v Groves, 209-45; 227 NW 582

Tenantable premises—jury question. In an action on a lease which provided for the payment of rent except when the premises are

"untenantable by reason of fire", the issue whether certain painting, papering, and decorating were necessary to render the premises tenantable after a fire, is a jury question, under conflicting testimony.

Benson v Iowa Co., 207-410; 221 NW 464

10160 Termination of farm tenancies.

Abandonment—recovery for work done. A tenant who at his own instance and to advance his own interest under his lease performs fall plowing on the leased premises, and later, over the landlord's protest, voluntarily surrenders and abandons the premises, may not recover of the landlord the reasonable value of said plowing even tho the landlord has advantaged himself on account thereof.

Hill v Groves, 209-45; 227 NW 582

Assignability of lease which survives death of lessee. A lease which requires the lessee to diligently farm a portion of the land and to "vigorously utilize" a portion of said land "by extraction of the available sand and gravel" thereon, is assignable and survives the death of the lessee, it appearing that the lease was entered into without reliance on any particular personal fitness of the lessee.

In re Grooms, 204-746; 216 NW 78

Evidence supporting oral lease for year. In action for conversion by landlord against purchaser of tenant's buckwheat, the findings of trial court that tenant leased premises for one year rather than being a sharecropper held supported by evidence and conclusive on appeal.

Schaper v Farmers' Exch., (NOR); 239 NW 134

Nonduty to repair. Principle reaffirmed that a landlord is under no duty to repair or maintain the leased premises in a safe and suitable condition in the absence of a covenant to that effect.

Chicago JSL Bank v Eggers, 214-710; 243 NW 193

Right to remove tenant if landlord dissatisfied. A landlord, under a lease authorizing either party thereto to cancel the same "in case the farming conditions are not satisfactory", need not, in a petition to remove the tenant, allege or set forth the reasons for his alleged dissatisfaction.

Jepson v Conner, 210-1267; 232 NW 693

10161 Agreement for termination.

Evidence supporting oral lease for year. In action for conversion by landlord against purchaser of tenant's buckwheat, the findings of trial court that tenant leased premises for one year rather than being a sharecropper held supported by evidence and conclusive on appeal.

Schaper v Farmers' Exch., (NOR); 239 NW 134

Eviction by foreclosure decree—plea of want of consideration. Even tho a wife who had joined with her husband in the execution of rent obligations was not made a party to subsequent mortgage foreclosure wherein her husband and the landlord were evicted by the appointment of a receiver, yet she may, when sued on the rent obligations by the landlord or by his assignee, plead the foreclosure decree as establishing a total failure of consideration.

Miller v Laing, 212-437; 236 NW 378

Lease—assignees—original relationship continues. Lessor's assignee of a lease, and a telephone corporation succeeding to the ownership of the original lessee corporation, stand in the same position as the original parties to the lease.

Culavin v Telephone Co., 224-813; 276 NW 621

Lease construed—automatic renewal. A lease providing for a written notice of discontinuance, and in the absence of which a "renewal shall be assumed and in force" for an additional term, is automatically renewed unless the notice provided for is given by lessee.

Culavin v Telephone Co., 224-813; 276 NW 621

Noncontract grounds. A lease may not be forfeited on a noncontract ground.

In re Grooms, 204-746; 216 NW 78

Tenant's right to homestead before termination of lease. A tenant may have a homestead right under a leasehold interest which is available to him as against all persons, including the holder of the superior title, the lessor-owner, during the term of the tenancy and before the lease has expired.

Wright v Flatterich, 225-750; 281 NW 221

CHAPTER 443

WALLS IN COMMON

10163 Resting wall on neighbor's land.

Discussion. See 8 ILB 249—Lateral support

Creek channel excavation destroying lateral support—rules for liability. A city excavating a new creek channel near the boundary of its land must use reasonable care that it does not destroy the natural lateral support for the adjoining land. Nevertheless, (1) if despite using reasonable precautions the adjoining land falls under its own weight, a liability arises for damage to the land but not to the superstructure; but (2) if a fall is occasioned solely by the weight of a superstructure, no liability arises for damage to either land or superstructure; however (3) if negligent excavation causes the fall, liability arises for damage to both soil and superstructure.

Covell v Sioux City, 224-1060; 277 NW 447

Strip mining—coal lease subject to pipe line easement. Where a pipe line company has an easement across land and an option to buy a designated strip of land along the pipe line if a strip coal mine should be opened on the land, a subsequent strip mine coal lease, subject to the pipe line easement and option, gives the coal lessee no rights to strip mine coal on the land covered by the purchase option and thus destroy the lateral support of the pipe line, nor is such lessee entitled to any part of the purchase price for such strip of land.

Penn v Pipe Line Co., 225-680; 281 NW 194

10174 Special agreements—evidence.

Damages. The fact that a party, who legally attaches his building to a wall, does not actually own the wall does not prevent him from recovering damages to his goods consequent on the wrongful act of the actual owner in causing surface waters to seep through the wall.

I EASEMENTS BY PRESCRIPTION

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 17 ILR 235—Assignability in gross

Prescription—essential elements. An easement by prescription demands a showing (1) of some claim of right which is independent of use, and (2) of knowledge of such claim on the part of the person against whom the easement is sought to be enforced.

Black v Whitacre, 206-1084; 221 NW 825

Easements and tenements—relation. An easement is a privilege or right without profit which the owner of one piece of realty may have in another, or conversely, it is a service which one tract of land owes to another. The land entitled to the easement is the dominant tenement, and the land burdened with the servitude is the servient tenement, neither the easement nor servitude being personal, but accessory, running with the land.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Claim broad as possession—unaccepted street. Where their claim extending to a certain fence was as broad as their possession, persons, who for more than ten years had continuous and exclusive possession of a dedicated but unaccepted street secured title thereto by adverse possession.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Creation by ancient grantors—effect. An owner of land may not, except with the consent of all interested parties, question a visible and permanent drainage easement imposed upon the land by his ancient grantors.

Ehler v Stier, 205-678; 216 NW 637

Easement—loss of right. One who bases his attempt to enjoin interference with a public or private easement in a strip of land solely on the ground of his ownership of the abutting land loses such right by an unconditional conveyance of the abutting land.

Rider v Narigon, 204-530; 215 NW 497

Easement—scope and extent. Where a right of way is jointly used by the fee owner, and by the owner of a duly granted easement therein, (1) the width of said easement, (2) the duty of the owner of the easement to close the gates leading thereto, (3) the duty of each party to refrain from interfering with the use by the other, (4) the mutual right to repair the way, and (5) the proper division of the expense of such repairs, should, under proper evidence, be specifically decreed, and all violations thereof enjoined.

Bina v Bina, 213-432; 239 NW 68; 78 ALR 1216

Element of "right" and "notice"—evidence. The fact that a property owner claimed an easement in the land of another "as his right", and "that the party against whom the claim is made had express notice thereof", may manifestly be conclusively deduced from evidence of the negotiations, conduct, and acts which led to and culminated in the creation and establishment of the easement by the parties.

Ehler v Stier, 205-678; 216 NW 637

Establishment—evidence—sufficiency. Record reviewed in detail, and held insufficient to establish an easement in the form of a driveway by oral agreement, by prescription, by estoppel, or by or from necessity.

Black v Whitacre, 206-1084; 221 NW 825

Equitable estoppel—nonestoppel to deny existence of street. Where a dedicated but unaccepted street is partly enclosed within defendants' land and partly used by both plaintiffs and defendants for mutual access to their properties, defendants are not thereby estopped from denying the legal existence of the street and claiming title thereto by adverse possession.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Estoppel—evidence—sufficiency. An easement by estoppel may not, of course, be established on the basis of a fact or transaction which is as consistent with mere permissive use as the contrary.

Black v Whitacre, 206-1084; 221 NW 825

Hostile possession—notice. An easement in the form of a driveway on the land of another can be established only by evidence distinct from and independent of its use, to the effect that, for ten years, the user has claimed such use as a right, and that for all of said time the owner of the land has had notice of such asserted right.

Manning v George, 205-994; 219 NW 135

Long and unquestioned use—effect. Thirty years of continuous and unquestioned use of an easement across land is persuasive that the owners of the dominant and servient estates were interpreting the easement as a permanent one and not a mere temporary and personal one.

Thul v Weiland, 213-713; 239 NW 515

Mutual agreement and acquiescence. A driveway equally upon the dividing line between two adjoining owners may be used by them under such condition of mutual acquiescence and agreement as to ripen in each an irrevocable easement.

Molene v Tansey, 203-992; 213 NW 759
Ellsworth v Martin, 208-169; 225 NW 417

Natural watercourses—duty to maintain. It is the duty of the owner of a servient estate to maintain free from obstruction the natural watercourses, even tho they have no well-defined banks.

Heinse v Thorborg, 210-435; 230 NW 881

Necessity—scope. Easements in the form of a roadway by or from necessity arise, generally speaking, only in favor of a grantee as against his grantor.

Black v Whitacre, 206-1084; 221 NW 825

Permissive use. Mere use of a way over the land of another by permission of the latter furnishes no basis for a title by prescription.

Feilhaber v Swiler, 203-1133; 212 NW 417

Permissive use—revocation. A naked permissive use of land as a driveway may be revoked at the pleasure of the person granting the permission.

Black v Whitacre, 206-1084; 221 NW 825

Permissive use of passageway. Mere permissive use of an opening under a railroad track, howsoever long continued, will not ripen into an irrevocable easement.

Chicago, Mil. Ry. v Cross, 212-218; 234 NW 569

Termination—violating conditions. The owner of a duly established right of way easement in the land of another does not forfeit the right to said easement by inadvertently or carelessly leaving open the gates leading to said easement even tho the duty to close said gates is made mandatory by the conveyance granting said easement; but the easement owner will be enjoined from violating said mandatory duty.

Bina v Bina, 213-432; 239 NW 68; 78 ALR 1216

Unaccepted platted street—applicability. Where parties claim land, dedicated in plat as a street but, not being accepted, never became a street, the public has no interest therein and the doctrine of adverse possession is applicable.

Brewer v Claypool, 223-1235; 275 NW 34

Unallowable obstruction. Principle recognized that an easement which is appurtenant to specific land only may not be used in connection with other land to which the easement is not appurtenant, but that a violation of such rule by the owner of the dominant estate does not justify the owner of the servient estate in excluding the dominant owner from all use of the easement.

I EASEMENTS BY PRESCRIPTION—concluded

Thul v Weiland, 213-713; 239 NW 515

(b) HIGHWAYS

Essential elements. Principle reaffirmed that to establish a public highway by prescription there must be satisfactory evidence of a general, uninterrupted public use, under a claim of right, continued for the statutory period.

Shuler v Gravel Co., 203-134; 209 NW 731

Easement—fundamental requirements. The mere use of a roadway, howsoever long continued, will not ripen into an irrevocable private easement in favor of the private user nor into a dedicated public highway in favor of the public generally, unless, in the case of a claim of private easement, the fact is established, independent of the evidence of use, that the private user has, for at least ten years, and to the knowledge of the landowner, asserted or claimed a hostile right to use such way, and unless, in the case of a claimed public dedication, the fact is established that the landowner has, by deliberate, unequivocal, and decisive acts and declarations, manifested a positive intention permanently to abandon the land in question to the public for highway purposes.

Culver v Converse, 207-1173; 224 NW 834

Adjoining landowner—no title accrues from encroachment on highway. Encroachment by an adjoining landowner on an established public highway will not ripen into a title through any statute of limitations, doctrine of acquiescence, adverse possession, or estoppel—the establishment and maintenance of public highways being a governmental function.

Richardson v Derry, 226-178; 284 NW 82

Evidence—old road records—different location in use—use alone insufficient. In an action to establish a road by prescription, evidence in the form of a page from an old road record made in 1850, which was a copy of the surveyor's notes, and introduced as evidence of an adverse claim, is not sufficient, when it does not show that such road as shown on the old record was the same as the road now in use. Without this, the road could not be established on the sole evidence of long continued use.

II EASEMENTS CREATED BY CONVEYANCES

Discussion. See 9 ILB 309—Easements—implied grant and reservation; 13 ILR 74—Easements by implication.

Part of single ownership conveyed—implied easement or reservation—clear intent of parties necessary. Principle reaffirmed that, where real estate has been used under single ownership and as a unity, one part of it may be burdened with a use which is largely or entirely for the benefit of another part of it, and when divided by devise, descent or sale, one part may be burdened or benefited by an implied reservation or granting of an easement right if it is apparent and necessary, but such implied grant or reservation must be clearly within the intention of the parties.

Dyer v Knowles, 227-1038; 289 NW 911

License — definition — revocability — constructing a grotto for charitable organization. Since a license is a permission to do particular acts on another's land without possessing an interest therein, revocable at licensor's pleasure except where coupled with an expenditure of money or labor, an individual constructing a grotto on the land of a charitable organization under an agreement containing a provision for entry on the land for purposes of the agreement, has a personal privilege of going on the land to complete the undertaking.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Abandonment of easement—affirmative defense. Abandonment is an affirmative defense, and clear, unequivocal evidence is required to establish that an easement was abandoned.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Acceptance of deed—no waiver of easement rights under contract. When a contract of sale of land provided that the deed would grant an easement for the right of ingress and egress to the property, but the deed drawn on the same day failed to make such provision, the acceptance of the deed by the grantee did not waive the provision of the collateral contract, altho ordinarily the acceptance of a deed would complete the execution of the contract and would be conclusive evidence of its complete fulfillment.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Contract for definite easement—substitute. A contract under which land was purchased, which provided that the purchaser would receive a definitely established easement for the right of ingress and egress to the land, entitled the purchaser to all the contract gave her, and not merely to another easement as a substitute for what was granted.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Easement rights omitted from deed—extrinsic evidence. When land was purchased under a contract providing that the deed would grant an easement of the right of ingress and egress to the property, and that the exact description of the easement would be made a part of the deed, but such description having been omitted, it was proper, in purchaser's action to assert such easement rights, to admit extrinsic evidence to show the exact location of the easement.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Easement running with land. A recorded conveyance of land which, in addition to conveying the land, also grants a private roadway over other lands of the grantor, creates an easement which runs with the land, even tho the grantor subsequently re-acquires title to the lands first conveyed (and again becomes the owner of both tracts) and subsequently conveys both tracts by separate conveyances to different grantees.

Feilhaber v Swiler, 203-1133; 212 NW 417

Grant—construction. An instrument which grants to a railway company a release of all present and future damages resulting from the overflow of land consequent on the maintenance of tracks and bridges, but also grants, as running with the land, the right to maintain the railway as then or thereafter existing, together with the right to overflow the land, creates not only (1) a settlement of damages, present and prospective, but (2) a permanent easement in the land.

Kellogg v Railway, 204-368; 213 NW 253; 215 NW 258

Boundary line between farm buildings—grantor's alleged use and occupancy of buildings denied. In a special action to determine the true location of an east and west half-section line, where the grantor, owning the entire west half of the section, sells the north-west quarter, thinking his barn and corncrib were situated south of the half-section line, whereas a survey showed the buildings to be situated north of the half-section line, grantor's claim of a reservation of the use and occupancy of the barn and corncrib and ground appurtenant thereto under an implied easement on the theory that the barn and corncrib were necessary to the use and enjoyment of the land retained by grantor, could not be sustained, since the use of such buildings was just as essential, to the part sold, in proportion to the acreage, as it was to the part retained.

Dyer v Knowles, 227-1038; 289 NW 911

Highway construction — interference with easement. When a highway was established through a city, taking the larger part of land over which the plaintiff had been granted an easement, a property right belonging to the plaintiff was thereby destroyed, and when she was compelled to sell the property at a loss because of its impaired value, she was entitled to a writ of mandamus against the highway commission to compel the assessment of the damages sustained.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Release of part of easement—no waiver of remainder. One who had an easement for the right of ingress and egress to her land over a curved driveway with two exits, and who consented to the closing of one exit, did not thereby waive or abandon her easement rights to the other exit.

Dawson v McKinnon, 226-756; 285 NW 258

Reservation—construction. Reservation of an easement construed, and held to demonstrate that the right to beautify the land in question rested in the defendant, and not in the plaintiff and defendant jointly.

Spaulding v McCartney, 207-1025; 221 NW 665

Right of way—deed—effect as to subsequently laid out streets. An ordinary railroad right-of-way deed simply grants to the railroad an easement, and works no impediment to the vesting in a municipality, subject to such easement, of streets subsequently laid out across such right of way; and especially so when the railroad company acquiesces in and recognizes the statutory dedication to the public.

Ackley v Elec. Co., 206-533; 220 NW 315

Stipulation in sidewalk dispute. A stipulation disposing of litigation over use of sidewalk, and providing for joint use, creates an easement for said purpose, and injunction would lie for interference with such right.

McEachron v Schick, (NOR); 218 NW 955

Water easement—protection by injunction. Where a contract easement exists to pipe water from the premises of the owner of land to the premises of the easement owner, it necessarily follows that the latter's right to go upon said premises of the former to make reasonable repairs to the pipes and related equipment will be protected from interference by injunction.

Hawkeye Cement v Williams, 213-482; 239 NW 120

Pipe-line right of way—ambiguity as to compensation. Where landowner made written agreement giving pipe-line company a right of way, and where receipt, executed simultaneously with the agreement, aided by extrinsic oral proof, showed that he actually received $5 per rod for the first line put in, held, landowner was entitled to judgment compensating him at same rate for installation of a second pipe-line under the agreement, which provided that "additional lines shall be laid for a consideration the same as for the first", despite the fact that such agreement also provided for a compensation of only 50 cents per rod.

Vorthmann v Pipe Line Co., 228- ; 289 NW 746

10176 Light and air.

Overhanging windows and box screens. A property owner who builds upon a boundary line has no right to operate and maintain windows and box screens that overhang adjoining property.

Minear v Furnace Co., 213-663; 239 NW 584

10177 Footway.

License—evidence. A contract easement in a footway over land is not established by evidence which is perfectly consistent with a mere naked license only.

Hawkeye Cement v Williams, 213-482; 239 NW 120

Mutual agreement and acquiescence. A driveway upon and along the dividing line between two adjoining owners may be used by them under such conditions of mutual acquiescence and agreement as to ripen in each an irrevocable easement.

Codicil with invalid provision giving executor highway construction powers. Where a conflict exists between a second codicil and the will and first codicil, the second codicil prevails, but under the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, if the later codicil contains an invalid provision, such provision does not revoke the provisions with which it conflicts in the earlier will and codicil. Where a will and two codicils left property to a county for use in building roads, even if a provision in the second codicil was invalid in improperly delegating county powers to the executor, the doctrine prevented a complete revocation of the previous documents, but they were revoked only to give effect to the second codicil, as there was no change in the purpose of the will, but only a change in the manner of effectuating the gift.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Lapsing of legacy. A condition in a charitable bequest, that if the legatee takes no steps within a named time to augment said bequest the same shall revert to testator's estate, must be deemed a condition precedent and not a condition subsequent. It follows that said bequest lapses upon the expiration of said time if the legatee, with actual knowledge of the bequest, fails to signify any acceptance of the bequest, and fails to take any steps to augment said bequest.

Cy pres doctrine invoked by state in equity court. A public charity, created by trust, about to fail, is properly represented in court of equity to invoke jurisdiction to apply cy pres doctrine by the state or some authorized agency thereof.

Schell v Leander Clark College, 10 F 2d, 542

10188 Gifts to municipal corporations.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 357

Devise for charity—power of municipality to take. Devises and bequests for charitable purposes are such favorites of the law that "they will not be construed void if, by law, they can be made good". Will construed, and held that the conditions attending a devise and bequest to a municipality of a charitable trust in the form of a free public library, were conditions subsequent and not conditions precedent, to the vesting of said trust, and that said conditions were within the legal power of the municipality to accept—under prescribed statutory procedure—and perform.

In re Nugen, 223-428; 272 NW 638

Waterworks—Simmer law unaffected by federal money grants. The words "maximum amount to be expended" in the so-called "Simmer law" refer not to the size of the plant but to the amount to be paid from the earnings. It follows that the construction fund may be enlarged by other funds that do not have to be repaid from taxes or from earnings.

Keokuk W. Co. v Keokuk, 224-718; 277 NW 291

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Bequest for paving roads—acceptance by county not enjoined. In an action by a taxpayer to obtain an injunction restraining a county from accepting a bequest to be used for paving roads, the injunction was refused where a will and two codicils provided for the bequest, as when all papers were construed together a valid gift to the county was found to have been created which the county had the authority to accept.

Anderson v Board, 226-1177; 286 NW 735

Absolute bequest—later repugnant provision disregarded. Where a codicil made an absolute bequest of a residuary estate to a county to be used in paving a highway, and a later provision in the codicil gave certain directions to the executor and imposed conditions for acceptance of the bequest by the county, such later conditions were repugnant and would defeat the purpose of the testator and must be disregarded when void in delegating power to the executor in violation of statute, and the intention of the testator as expressed in the first provision must be given effect to prevent intestacy.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Codicil creating charitable trust to county for paving roads. A first codicil devising an estate to trustees to be administered under county supervision in building roads, and a second codicil appointing one executor to aid the county in building roads, created a lawful charitable trust with the county as trustee and taxpayers as beneficiaries which was not necessarily invalid because the executor was given administrative duties in the road construction in violation of statute.

Blackford v Anderson, 226-1138; 286 NW 735

Federal grant for constructing municipal plant. Under this section, authorizing municipal corporations to accept gifts and providing that "conditions attached to such gifts or bequests become binding upon the corporation * * * upon acceptance thereof", a city may accept a federal grant of money to construct a municipal electric light and power plant, tho the grant is conditioned upon the payment of a minimum wage for labor, notwithstanding the Simmer law requiring such contracts be let by competitive bidding, where the wages provided did not in any manner increase the cost of construction.

I GIFTS GENERALLY

(a) IN GENERAL

Cancellation—fraud and undue influence not proved. In an action in equity by a 73-year-old grantor, who had no children of his own, to set aside deed to adult children of second wife, subject to a life estate in grantor, where associations of the grantor and grantees, over a long period of years, were not unlike that ordinarily observed between natural parents and children, evidence did not sustain charge that deed was procured by fraud and undue influence.

Lawson v Boo, 227-100; 287 NW 282

Confidential relations—-independent advice—sufficiency. In connection with a gift from a person occupying a confidential relation with another, "independent advice" means the donor's opportunity of conferring fully and privately with a person competent to advise as to the legal effect of the transaction and who will advise in a manner disassociated from the interests of the donee.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Confidential relations — presumption of fraud. The act of a mother, in causing a certificate of deposit to be changed from her own name to that of a son who, it is made to appear, occupied a very close and confidential relation with his mother, is presumptively fraudulent, and will be sustained only on proof by the son that the transfer was free from all undue influence and fraud.

Roller v Roller, 201-1077; 203 NW 41

Construction of writing. Language which clearly indicates a completed gift may be so controlled by other parts of the same writing and by attending circumstances as to show that no such gift was intended.

Rodgers v Reinking, 205-1311; 217 NW 441

Conveyances as gifts. A surviving wife has no interest in lands which the husband bought and paid for, and which he, without working any fraud upon the wife and without intending such fraud, caused to be conveyed directly by his vendor to grantees other than himself, as a gift.

Grout v Fairbairn, 204-727; 215 NW 963

Deposits—alternate payees—effect. A certificate of deposit taken out by a mother, and "payable to the order of self or Hazel Pent, daughter," may be treated as a gift to the daughter when the mother dies without change in the certificate, and when there is no evidence to the contrary as to the intent of the mother.

Andrew v Bank, 205-237; 216 NW 12

Evidence—weight and sufficiency. Proof of an oral gift of real estate must be clear, substantial and convincing. Evidence reviewed and held quite insufficient to comply with the rule.

Long v Kline, 222-81; 268 NW 150

Advancements—burden of proof. An irrevocable gift by a parent to a child is pre-sumptively an advancement, but the child may show, by any competent evidence, that the parent did not intend the gift to be an advancement. Evidence held to overthrow the presumption.

I GIFTS GENERALLY—continued

Fell v Bradshaw, 205-100; 215 NW 595

Bank deposit—evidence to establish as gift. In action to establish trust in funds in bank, represented by certificate of deposit which defendants claimed as a gift, evidence held to warrant decree for plaintiff.

Wier v Davidson, (NOR); 242 NW 37

Deeds—evidence necessary to invalidate. A deed is presumed to express the intention of the grantor and one who attempts to set it aside on the ground of undue influence or insanity has the burden of proof to present evidence that is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Delivery—evidence—sufficiency. The act of a donor in inclosing his gifts to different persons in an envelope, with an indorsement on each gift of the name of the donee, and forwarding the envelope by mail to one of the donees, constitutes a delivery of the gifts to each donee, such being the manifest intent of the donor.

In re Higgins, 207-95; 222 NW 401

Evidence—insufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to show that the transfer of a certificate of deposit by a mother to her son was intended as a gift.

Roller v Roller, 201-1077; 203 NW 41

Fiduciary relationship—intestate and heir receiving property—failure of proof. In an action by heirs of intestate to set aside a conveyance of realty made by intestate to son, on ground of an alleged fiduciary relationship existing between aged intestate and son, held, that evidence was insufficient to establish such relationship, and even tho such relationship existed, whatever property the son received from his mother was by her voluntary and intelligent act, and without duress, dominance or overreaching on his part.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Incompetency of donor—evidence. Evidence held insufficient to establish the mental incompetency of a donor.

Humphrey v Norwood, 213-912; 240 NW 232

Oral contract—evidentiary demands. Principle reaffirmed that oral evidence of the gift of real estate must be clear, cogent, and convincing.

Black v Nichols, 213-976; 240 NW 261

Transfer for support—insufficiency to show mental incapacity. In an action by heirs to set aside an assignment of note and mortgage and transfer of realty by an intestate to a son, who had lived with and cared for her a number of years, on ground of mother's mental incapacity, evidence which tended to show preference to son is insufficient to support claim of mental incapacity.

Robbins v Daniel, 226-678; 284 NW 793

Electric plant—Simmer law unaffected by federal money grant. The words "maximum amount to be expended" in the Simmer law refer not to the entire cost of the plant but to the amount to be paid from the earnings, therefore the amount expended for construction may be enlarged by gifts or other funds not repayable from taxes nor from earnings.

Abbott v Iowa City, 224-698; 277 NW 437

Owner's right of disposal. Under ordinary circumstances one has the absolute right to dispose of his property as he pleases.

O'Brien v Stoneman, 227-389; 288 NW 447

Intent to make—effect. An expressed intention to make a gift is, of course, quite insufficient to constitute a gift in praesenti.

Nugent v Dittel, 213-671; 239 NW 559

Inconsistent conduct. Grossly inconsistent conduct may outweigh direct testimony to the contrary. So held as to the making of a gift.

Cherniss v Thompson, 209-309; 228 NW 66

Mental competency and elements of gift—when jury question. In a replevin action by executor against decedent's sister to recover property held under claim of gift inter vivos from decedent, where clear, cogent, definite, and convincing evidence conclusively established mental competency and all the essential elements of a completed gift inter vivos appear without conflict, no jury question is presented.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Monomania and undue influence unproved. Where a daughter, among other things, testified against her father in a divorce action and left him to live with her mother, she furnished the evidence for his belief of her lack of filial affection, and conveyances of his property executed pursuant to his intention to disinherit her upheld over her contentions that he was a monomaniac and that the conveyances resulted from the use of undue influence.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Mutual expectations—presumption. The rendition on one hand and the acceptance on the other of valuable services (board and lodging) for a series of years generates a presumption that the one rendering was to receive pay and that the one receiving was to pay; and this is true tho the receiver and the giver were lifelong associates, and related, but were not members of the same family.

Peterson v Johnson, 205-16; 212 NW 138

Renunciation—no control by creditors—not a conveyance. A creditor has no control over a beneficiary's right to refuse or accept a gift, as a renunciation is not equivalent to a conveyance.

McGarry v Mathis, 226-37; 282 NW 786

Right of debtor to renounce gift after suit brought. The act of the life beneficiary of an annual interest charge imposed as a gift in her favor in a deed (which the grantee duly accepted), in formally and unconditionally renouncing and rejecting all benefits "which do, may, or might accrue" to her under the deed, legally places such interest charge beyond the reach of a judgment creditor who duly institutes an equitable action to subject such interest charge to the satisfaction of his judgment, even tho the said renunciation was not made until long after the said action was duly instituted.

Gottstein v Hedges, 210-272; 228 NW 93; 67 ALR 1218

Rights of legatees—advancement (?) or gift (?). The cancellation by a testator, after making his will, of notes held by him against a legatee, and the surrender of said notes to the legatee (after carefully computing the amount due thereon) are not sufficient to overcome the presumption of an advancement, in view of the declaration in the will (1) that testator intended an equal division between his legatees, and (2) that all loans to legatees, as shown by testator's account book (made part of the will) should be deemed part of his estate, and in view of the fact that said account book listed the notes in question as loans, and not as gifts.

In re Francis, 204-1237; 212 NW 306

Secret deeds—87-year-old grantor—confidential relation—grantee's burden of proof. A nephew, who was a sort of de facto guardian for his 87-year-old aunt, who procured from her certain deeds with utmost secrecy a short time before her death, and who did not record one of them until the day of her death, has the burden to prove his aunt acted of her own free will or from independent advice, when there is evidence bearing on her mental incapacity.

Merritt v Easterly, 226-514; 284 NW 397

Verdict sustaining part of gift as establishing mental competency. In a replevin action by executor to recover property held under claim of gift inter vivos from decedent, a jury verdict validating part of the gift made on a later date, from which part of the verdict no appeal is taken, also establishes the donor's mental competency to consummate that part of the gift made on an earlier date.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

(b) GRATUITOUS SERVICES GENERALLY

Cosmetology schools—charges for services of students. A statute defining cosmetologists as being persons who receive compensation for services and which provides that no person or corporation shall use any person as a practitioner of cosmetology unless the person is an apprentice or licensed cosmetologist, is an unconstitutional exercise of police power in requiring that students of cosmetology schools do gratuitous work while obtaining practical experience, as such requirement would be an arbitrary interference with private business and the right to contract and would impose unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations in violation of due process of law.

State v Thompson's School, 226-556; 285 NW 133

Family relation—presumption. Services rendered in a family by one member thereof to another member are presumptively gratuitous, but claimant may overthrow the presumption by proof of an express contract to pay for such services, or by proof of such circumstances as will justify a finding that the member rendering the services expected to be paid therefor and that the member receiving the services expected to pay therefor. Instructions reviewed in detail, and held to adequately present the law.

Wilson v Else, 204-857; 216 NW 33

Living with and caring for parents at their request—nongratuitous services—allowable probate claim upheld on appeal. Reciprocal services rendered by and between members of a family are presumed to be gratuitous, yet, the court, a jury being waived, may find that a married daughter, who with her family, returns to the home of her aged parents at their request to care for them, for which she expected to receive and the parents expected to pay remuneration, did not re-establish a family relationship with her parents so as to raise the presumption of gratuitous services. Such finding will be binding on the appellate court.

Clark v Krogh, 225-479; 280 NW 635

Services by child—presumption. Principle reaffirmed that services rendered by a member of a family are presumptively gratuitous.

Howell v Howell, 211-70; 232 NW 816

Services in family—presumption. There can be no presumption that services performed for a deceased were gratuitous when claimant and deceased were not related and not members of the same family.

In re Walton, 213-104; 238 NW 577

II GIFTS INTER VIVOS

Bank deposit with symbolical delivery. A bank deposit made with the intent to make a gift, and followed by a symbolical delivery to the donee, constitutes a consummated gift.

In re Belgard, 202-1356; 212 NW 116

Consideration and revocability. An executed, delivered, and accepted gift needs no consideration for its support, and is irrevocable.

Stonewall v Danielson, 204-1367; 217 NW 456

Oral gift of real property. An oral, executed gift of real estate, established to a reasonable certainty, is valid.

Mann v Nies, 213-121; 238 NW 601

Mere "expectancy" as subject-matter. The insured in a policy of life insurance, who has the right, under the policy, to change the beneficiary, does not deprive himself of said right by delivering the policy to the beneficiary therein named accompanied by the statement or assurance that he is thereby making a "gift" to said named beneficiary, such policy not being the subject-matter of a completed gift inasmuch as it simply proffers an expectancy, and an expectancy does not constitute property.

Penn Ins. v Mulvaney, 221-925; 265 NW 889

Gift inter vivos—notes assigned direct to donee on purchase by donor—donor retaining interest and notes deposited at bank. To constitute a gift inter vivos there must be a clear intention to make a present gift fully executed by actual, constructive, or symbolic delivery, so where donor purchased notes and mortgages from a trust company, and had assignments thereof made to her sister, established a gift inter vivos and neither the fact that the donor reserved the right to collect interest thereon nor that trust company retained possession of the notes and mortgage invalidate the gift.

Ratterman v Lodge, 13 F 2d, 805

Perpetuities—charitable organization—validity. Where an individual agrees to construct a grotto on land then belonging to a charitable organization which in return agrees among other things not to alienate the land, such a covenant, not being created in a gift of land for charitable purposes and as such an exception to the rule against perpetuities or against restraint on alienation, but instead, an attempt by the fee titleholder to retain his land while separating from the fee the unlimited power of alienation, is violative of public policy, void and unenforceable in equity.

Sisters of Mercy v Lightner, 223-1049; 274 NW 86

Retention of authority and interest—effect. It is not essential to the validity of a gift that the donor relinquish all authority or even all interest in the subject of it. So held as to a banking account, consisting of money and securities.

Eaton v Blood, 201-834; 208 NW 508; 44 ALR 1516

Right of revocation. A writing which on its face carries a presumption of a consummated gift of the property which accompanies the writing does not foreclose the apparent donor from establishing in his lifetime that such was not his intention; that, in the execution of the writing, he did not intend to surrender either his dominion over the property or his right to revoke the writing.

Needles v Bank, 202-927; 211 NW 392

Evidence. Proof of an oral gift of real estate must be clear, substantial and convincing. Evidence reviewed and held quite insufficient to comply with the rule.

Long v Kline, 222-81; 268 NW 150

Evidence—failure to list for taxation—effect. The naked fact that a donee fails to list the gift (a substantial sum in cash) for taxation cannot have such evidentiary force as to overthrow other evidence which persuasively shows that the gift was actually made and executed.

Humphrey v Norwood, 213-912; 240 NW 232

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence that bonds had donee's name added, were turned over to her, and she kept them in a safety deposit box registered in her name but rented by donor, that donee had the key, coupled with other testimony of disinterested persons, shows a conclusive intention of a completed gift inter vivos.

Reeves v Lyon, 224-659; 277 NW 749

Confidential or fiduciary relationship—presumption of fraud. A gift of a deed to one who stands in a confidential or fiduciary relationship to the donor raises a presumption of constructive fraud, and the burden is on the donee to make such showing of fact as to overcome the presumption.

Jensen v Phippen, 225-302; 280 NW 528

Deed—confidential relationship established—grantee's failure to sustain burden. In an action to set aside a deed from a deceased mother, 83 years of age and ill at the time of execution of the deed, to her daughter, who had handled her mother's business for a number of years, who had the deed prepared by an attorney, and who was the only person present when mother signed the deed, evidence held to establish that there was a confidential relationship between mother and daughter, thus placing burden of proof on daughter to show that deed was not procured by fraud, and, such burden not having been met, the deed could not be sustained.

Tiernan v Brulport, 227-1152; 290 NW 53

Delivery — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence that a father and mother mutually intended at one time to make a gift of land to their daughter; that a deed conveying the land to the daughter, subject to a life estate in grantors, was actually executed by the father and mother but was never manually delivered; that the daughter paid rent to the parents during their lifetime; that the father who held the legal title often declared that the land belonged to the daughter; and that the daughter made substantial and permanent improvements on the land at her own expense, may be ample to establish an actual delivery of the subject matter of the gift—the land.

Rapp v Losee, 215-356; 245 NW 317

Essential elements—evidence. The subject of a gift inter vivos must be certain; and there must be the mutual consent and concurrent will of both parties followed by delivery of the specific subject-matter. Evidence held insufficient to establish these essential requirements.

Woodward v Woodward, 222-145; 268 NW 540

Fiduciary relation—evidence. A fiduciary relationship is not established or even presumed from the naked fact that the parties are closely related by blood, or live and reside in the same house.

Humphrey v Norwood, 213-912; 240 NW 232

General denial—evidence of gift admitted. Evidence to establish a gift is admissible under a general denial.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Gifts inter vivos—joint (?) bank account—evidence. Where during her lifetime decedent permitted defendant, for years her confidential advisor, to sign with her the bank's signature card applying to decedent's personal bank account, whereupon the bank added defendant's name thereto as a joint bank account, but decedent kept her passbook and an interest in and control over the account, then under these circumstances, defendant, whose custody of the account during decedent's lifetime was never inconsistent with decedent's sole ownership, cannot after her death claim a gift of the deposit on the sole basis of the signature card.

Taylor v Grimes, 223-821; 273 NW 898

Inter vivos—evidence—ownership and presumption. The fact that an alleged donee was, for a time prior to the death of the alleged donor, in possession of bonds (the subject of the alleged gift) does not in and of itself, establish ownership in the alleged donee, or raise a presumption of gift to said alleged donee, the record unquestionably showing that the alleged donor died in the full ownership of said bonds unless he had made a gift thereof.

Malcor v Johnson, 223-644; 273 NW 145

Mental competency and elements of gift—when jury question. In a replevin action by executor against decedent's sister to recover property held under claim of gift inter vivos from decedent, where clear, cogent, definite, and convincing evidence conclusively established mental competency and all the essential elements of a completed gift inter vivos appear without conflict, no jury question is presented.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Mother to son gift for mother's life support. The donee of a gift inter vivos, when holding a fiduciary relationship with the donor, has the burden to rebut the presumption that the transaction was fraudulent and voidable, but this does not apply to testamentary gifts. So held where a mother first willed, and later assigned, all her property to one son, in consideration of a contract that he should support her as long as she lived—the result being to disinherit another son.

Reed v Reed, 225-773; 281 NW 444

Note as future gift—presumption—burden. Altho a promissory note for which there is no consideration is an unenforceable promise to make a future gift, nevertheless in an action against an executor on a note the presumption that the note imports a consideration, if negated, must be overcome by evidence and this burden is on the maker or his representatives.

In re Cheney's Estate, 223-1076; 274 NW 5

Oral gift—possession followed by improvements. Evidence that the donee in an alleged oral gift of land took possession of the land, but that said possession was not necessarily referable solely to said alleged gift, together with evidence of the making of temporary and inconsequential improvements on the land, is wholly insufficient to take the transaction out of the statute of frauds.

Nugent v Dittel, 213-671; 239 NW 559

Setting aside deed—lack of assent. In action to set aside deed, evidence held insufficient to support contention that deed was executed through fraud, duress, undue influence, or lack of mental capacity.

Ryan v Church, (NOR); 216 NW 713

Trusts — creation — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held insufficient to show that a deed was other than what it purported to be, to wit, a voluntary, good-faith gift to grantor's sister, of the land in question, and insufficient to establish any constructive trust therein in favor of other relatives of the grantor.

Redden v Murray, 213-519; 239 NW 129

Undue influence—rule—destroying free will. Undue influence necessary to set aside a conveyance must be enough to destroy the free

II GIFTS INTER VIVOS—concluded agency of the grantor. Evidence reviewed and found insufficient to establish undue influence.

Mastain v Butschy, 224-68; 276 NW 79

Verdict sustaining part of gift as establishing mental competency. In a replevin action by executor to recover property held under claim of gift inter vivos from decedent, a jury verdict validating part of the gift made on a later date, from which part of the verdict no appeal is taken, also establishes the donor's mental competency to consummate that part of the gift made on an earlier date.

Wilson v Findley, 223-1281; 275 NW 47

Bonds—nonexclusive possession — unallowable directed verdict. An alleged donee of bonds may not, as defendant in replevin proceedings, have a verdict directed in her favor, (1) on the strength of her claimed exclusive possession, or (2) on the strength of lack of evidence of ownership in the alleged donor, when the jury might properly find that the possession of the alleged donee was not exclusive, and when the alleged donor was manifestly the owner of the bonds if the jury found there had been no gift.

Malcor v Johnson, 223-644; 273 NW 145

III GIFTS CAUSA MORTIS

Essential elements. A gift causa mortis is a gift of personal property, intentionally made, even orally, by the mentally competent owner of said property, in expectation of his or her imminent death from an impending disorder or peril (tho not necessarily so imminent as to exclude the opportunity to execute a will), and made and delivered by the donor to the donee on the essential condition that, if the gift be not in the meantime revoked, the property shall belong to the donee in case the donor dies, as anticipated, of the disorder or peril, leaving said donee surviving.

Flint v Varney, 220-1241; 264 NW 277

Bank deposit—delivery. The act of a donor in making a bank deposit in the joint name of himself and a donee, and in retaining no authority to withdraw the deposit except on the signature of himself and the donee, with unqualified directions to the bank to pay the deposit to the donee on the death of the donor, constitutes full delivery.

In re Hanson, 205-766; 218 NW 308

Burden of proof. The burden to establish a gift causa mortis rests on the donee claiming thereunder. Evidence reviewed, and held that said burden had been successfully met.

Flint v Varney, 220-1241; 264 NW 277

Evidence—competency. Delivery of a gift causa mortis may be established by circumstantial evidence; likewise the gift itself may be established by the declarations of the donor tho they be not res gestae.

Flint v Varney, 220-1241; 264 NW 277

Delivery of deed as gift. The unconditional delivery, as a gift, of a duly executed and acknowledged deed of conveyance, by the compos mentis grantor therein, and without fraud, to a third party with explicit direction, both orally and in writing, to said party, to hold said deed for the grantee, and to record the same immediately upon the death of the grantor, constitutes an irrevocable delivery to said grantee; and a priori, when, in addition to the foregoing, it affirmatively appears from the circumstances of the transaction that the grantor was intending to pass title to the grantee.

Keating v Augustine, 213-1336; 241 NW 429

Delivery to third person. The act of a donor in placing the subject-matter of a gift in the unqualified possession of a third party for the benefit of the donee constitutes a complete delivery.

In re Hanson, 205-766; 218 NW 308

CHAPTER 446

CEMETERIES AND MANAGEMENT THEREOF

10198 Trustee appointed—trust funds. 10202 Loans—security.

“Donations” defined. Funds received by a court-appointed trustee “for the perpetual care” of a named cemetery are “donations” within the meaning of the statute requiring a bond securing such funds.

Belmond Assn. v Luick, 217-805; 253 NW 521

Testamentary trust. A testamentary trust will be sustained when the intent of testator is evident, even tho the bequest runs to an unincorporated entity.

Meeker v Lawrence, 203-409; 212 NW 688

Directors of bank—trust funds—personal liability. The directors of a bank who personally know of, and connive at, the investment of the funds of a cemetery association (in the hands of the president of said bank as trustee) in the time certificates of deposit of the bank—in violation of this section—are personally liable, ex maleficio, for the loss of said funds consequent on the insolvency of said bank.

Olin Assn. v Bank, 222-1053; 270 NW 455; 112 ALR 1205

10204 Bond—approval—oath.

Construction and operation—intent of parties controls. A bond given to secure cemetery funds in the hands of a trustee will be construed in accordance with the undoubted intentions of the parties thereto. Held, bond not given to secure funds received during the one year term of the bond only, but to secure the entire fund as it might exist at any time during said term.

Olin Assn. v Bank, 222-1053; 270 NW 455; 112 ALR 1205

Equitable estoppel—pleading one's own wrong. In an action on a bond given by a bank as principal and by its directors as sureties to secure a trust fund which was in the possession of the bank, the defensive plea that plaintiff was estopped from prosecuting the action by his laches in so doing, is not available to the sureties when they at all times, before the bank became insolvent, had unhampered opportunity to compel compliance with the bond, and thus protect themselves, but, on the contrary, manifestly connived at a continuous breach of the bond in order to conserve the interest of the bank.

Olin Assn. v Bank, 222-1053; 270 NW 455; 112 ALR 1205

Evidence required to reform bond. To justify the reformation of a written instrument, the evidence must be clear, satisfactory and convincing and free from reasonable doubt. So held in an action to reform the term of a bond, the evidence being held insufficient.

Olin Assn. v Bank, 222-1053; 270 NW 455; 112 ALR 1205

Unauthorized deposit of trust funds. A court-appointed trustee of cemetery funds and the sureties on his bond are liable for said funds deposited, without authority of court, in a bank of which both the trustees and the sureties were officers, and lost because of the insolvency of said bank.

Belmond Assn. v Luick, 217-805; 253 NW 521

10213.1 Settlement of estates—maintenance fund.

Perpetual care of burial lot. A bequest for the perpetual maintenance of testator's cemetery lot is not violative of the statute relating to perpetuities.

Discussion. See 8 ILB 100—Accretion as affected by surveyed and determinable boundaries
Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 352

Accretions—construction of decree quieting title. A decree quieting title to accretions, and based on adverse possession, will be deemed to quiet title up to the high watermark of the river in question, even tho when literally and hypercritically construed it seemingly quiets title only to the high watermark as it existed when the action to quiet title was commenced. So held where, pending the action, trial and entry of decree, the river continued to recede.

Harrington v Foster, 220-1066; 264 NW 51

Accretion—apportionment—estoppel. Riparian landowners interested in accretions to their lands may by agreement, acquiescence, or other conduct, apportion the accretion in a manner and way different than the law would apportion it, and thereby estop themselves, in an action to quiet title, from asserting that land did not pass under their deed because it was not accretion land.

Haynie v May, 217-1233; 252 NW 749

Accretion passes by ordinary deed. Accretion to land passes by a deed of the upland owner unless expressly excepted.

Haynie v May, 217-1233; 252 NW 749

Accretion—original land washed away—new land in same place. Where original lands in place are washed away by river erosion and at a later time redeposited, then such deposits are accretions becoming a part of the land to which at such later time they accrete.

Sheldon v Chambers, 225-716; 281 NW 438

Lands under water—continuing ownership of land in place. The mere fact that land may disappear for a time, because river water enters a slough and spreads over it, will not destroy the ownership thereto as lands in place after the water recedes.

Sheldon v Chambers, 225-716; 281 NW 438

Estoppel—disclaimer filed—foreclosure of adjoining property in prior action. In an action foreclosing a mortgage and also asking for the reformation of the description of land in said mortgage in which one of the defendants by way of answer denies that plaintiff is entitled to reformation of description because of confusion as to the property covered by said mortgage as a result of a shifting river channel between the mortgaged land and the defendant's adjoining land, and alleging the plaintiff is estopped from asserting any interest in such adjoining land on account of a disclaimer filed by plaintiff's predecessor in a prior foreclosure action involving said adjoining land, held that such estoppel and disclaimer in the present action is ineffective in the absence of any evidence of any confusion or encroachment upon the adjoining land.

State Central Bank v Maple, 226-1328; 286 NW 517

Ownership of lands—accretions. The owner of land along the bank of a navigable stream is entitled to accretions to the land even though such accretions extend over the exact spot where another person formerly owned land eroded by the river, because the complete erosion of land works a complete destruction of the title and of all governmental descriptions pertaining thereto.

Bone v May, 208-1094; 225 NW 367

Riparian rights—accretions—formation of sand bars. Land by accretions is not established by showing that sand bars formed in the bed of the stream beyond high watermark and became visible as the waters of the river receded.

McFerrin v Wiltse, 210-627; 231 NW 438

Riparian rights—lands—accretion. An island in a navigable stream cannot be deemed an accretion to another island when the surface of said islands at the point where they connect is not visible even at ordinary stage of the water, let alone being visible when the water is at its high watermark.

Meeker v Kautz, 213-370; 239 NW 27

Riparian rights—when not withheld by deed. A conveyance of lands by a riparian owner, especially when the lands are largely accretions, will not be deemed to withhold conveyance of riparian rights simply because the land is described by metes and bounds.

the sale by the board of supervisors of county-owned land, signed by the purported purchaser and by one member of the board as "acting chairman", together with proof that the board never took any official action in regard to the said matter, is quite insufficient to show a valid and enforceable contract.

Leases in general. See under §10159 (III)
Rents in mortgage foreclosures. See under §12372 (III)

I CREATION AND EXISTENCE OF LIEN

"Lien" defined. A "lien" is a right of property, and not mere matter of procedure.

Britton v Western Iowa Co., 9 F 2d, 488

Landlord's lien—vested right prior to Chandler Act. Under Iowa statutes and the bankruptcy act of 1898, rent accruing within year preceding lessee's bankruptcy was secured by a valid statutory lien and was entitled to priority in bankruptcy proceeding, such a lien being a vested property right. So the provision of Chandler Act which became effective two months before filing of petition in bankruptcy, restricting priority for rent to the rent accruing within three months before bankruptcy, would not be allowed to destroy priority of rent claim for preceding 12 months under the Iowa statute.

Ginsberg v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 721
Miles Corp. v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 729

The relation—insufficient showing. Contract between the vendor and the purchaser of land in modification of the original contract of purchase reviewed, and held not to create the relation of landlord and tenant, notwithstanding the fact that the contract referred to the income from the land as "rent".

Thielen v Elev. Co., 203-100; 212 NW 352

Leases—execution by husband only—liability of wife. A wife is not liable on a written lease signed by the husband alone as lessee, tho the leased premises be occupied by the husband and wife as a family residence.

Whether the wife be liable for the rent as a family expense under §10459, Code, '35, is a quite different question—a question which cannot be deemed before the court in landlord's attachment proceedings manifestly based solely on the lease signed by the husband alone.

Rogers v Davis, 223-373; 272 NW 539

No lien prior to possession given. A lease which definitely provides that the term of the lease shall begin with the execution of the lease, but which provides that the landlord shall not give possession until a named date after the execution of the lease, gives the landlord no lien for rent on property which the tenant takes and keeps upon the property after the execution of the lease, but which he removes before the day for possession under the lease arrives, it appearing that such short-time possession by the tenant was for a purpose foreign to the lease.

Federal Bk. v Wylie, 207-816; 221 NW 831

Rent and advances—liability of assignee under his written acceptance. One who, in writing, accepts an assignment of a lease, with the consent of the lessor, thereby contracts to carry out the terms of the lease irrespective of any later assignment of the lease by the said assignee, and it is no defense that the lessor, the property being vacant, obtains the aid of a receiver.

Pickler v Mershon, 212-447; 236 NW 382

II RENT AND OTHER INDEBTEDNESS FOR WHICH LIEN MAY BE CLAIMED

General equitable relief prayed. In equity action seeking the appointment of a receiver, defendant's contention, that a receiver could not be appointed because no main cause of action was stated, was without merit, since plaintiff was in fact seeking to foreclose a lien on rents and had asked for general equitable relief, the rule being that "equity does not deal in technicalities, but rather it seeks to ascertain the true intent of the pleading filed."

Wagner v Securities Co., 226-568; 284 NW 461

Tenantable premises. In an action on a lease which provided for the payment of rent except when the premises are "untenantable by reason of fire", the issue whether certain painting, papering, and decorating were necessary, to render the premises tenantable after a fire, is a jury question, under conflicting testimony.

Benson v Bake-Rite Co., 207-410; 221 NW 464

III PROPERTY SUBJECT TO LIEN

Burden of proof to show lien. A landlord seeking to enforce a landlord's lien on pigs must show that they were kept on the leased premises after they became six months old.

Sparks v Flesher, 217-1086; 252 NW 529

Crops grown by subtenant. A landlord has a lien for his rent on crops which have been grown upon the leased premises by a subtenant between whom and the landlord no privity of contract exists; and a sale of such crops by the subtenant will not defeat the lien.

Hanson v Carl, 201-521; 207 NW 579

Purchaser of nonexempt property. Pigs farrowed on leased premises but removed from said premises before they were six months old, and not thereafter returned to said premises, are not subject to the landlord's lien for rent.

Sparks v Flesher, 217-1086; 252 NW 529

Unincorporated association—property liable for rent. Where a provision of a lease executed by members of a voluntary unincorporated association mortgaged the property of the society as security for the rent, a further provision exempting the individual members from liability did not exempt the assets of the association, as the individual members had only a severable interest in the association's property which terminated with the membership.

Lamm v Stoen, 226-622; 284 NW 465

IV PRIORITIES

(a) PRIORITY BETWEEN LANDLORD'S LIEN AND LIEN OF MORTGAGE

Discussion. See 21 ILR 109—Relative priority

Lien—failure to record deed. In a controversy between a landlord and a chattel mortgagee over the priority of their liens, it is quite immaterial that the landlord's title deed is not of record.

Corydon Bank v Scott, 217-1227; 252 NW 536

Lien—increase of animals—priority over mortgagee. The lien of a chattel mortgage (prior in time to a lease) on animals and on the increase thereof is superior to the landlord's lien as to all increase born prior to the actual execution of the lease, and inferior to the landlord's lien on all increase born subsequent to the actual execution of the lease and prior to its termination. An agreement between the landlord and tenant that the lease shall be effective from a date prior to its actual execution is not binding on the mortgagee.

Wunder v Schram, 217-920; 251 NW 762

Lien—priority on increase of mortgaged stock. A landlord's lien on the increase of stock after the stock is taken upon the leased premises is superior to the lien of a chattel mortgage executed on the stock and on its prospective increase, and prior to the commencement of the rent term.

Corydon Bank v Scott, 217-1227; 252 NW 536

Priority of mortgage over rent. A recorded chattel mortgage on the property of a tenant used on the demised premises under a lease for years, attains priority, immediately upon the termination of the lease, over the landlord's claim for future rent accruing under a succeeding tenancy at will of the same premises; likewise a recorded chattel mortgage executed by a tenant at will, on property used on the leased premises, attains priority immediately upon the expiration of 30 days after the execution and recording of the mortgage, over the landlord's claim for future accruing rent.

Nickle v Mann, 211-906; 232 NW 722

Mortgage on crop-share rent superior to garnishment of tenant. The lien of a chattel mortgage on a landlord's share of crops reserved as rent, but in the possession of the tenant, is, as to matured crops actually set aside to the landlord or otherwise actually determined as belonging to the landlord, superior to a subsequent garnishment of the tenant by a judgment creditor of the landlord.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

Sale of crops—landlord's and purchaser's rights. A tenant's sale of crops will not divest a landlord of his statutory lien, and the landlord may maintain a conversion action against the purchaser who, if he has disposed of grain, is liable for damages unless he shows a waiver or estoppel of such lien which he must prove as an affirmative defense. So, in an equity action to enforce landlord's lien on grain sold to elevator by tenant, wherein evidence shows the manager of the elevator informed landlord's agent by telephone that tenant was selling grain, and landlord's agent replied that they had a man in the field looking after corn, the trial court was justified, under such circumstances, in holding that landlord rather than elevator company rendered the wrongful act of tenant possible, and therefore was the one to suffer from such wrongful act.

Sensibar v Hughtett, 227-591; 288 NW 674

(b) PRIORITY BETWEEN LANDLORD'S LIEN AND OTHER CLAIMS

Enlargement against third party. A tenant may not, against a third party, enlarge the landlord's lien provided by statute.

O'Donell v Davis, 201-214; 205 NW 347

Impressing trust for rent on proceeds of property sold. Where property subject in part to a lien for rent was sold by the tenant-owner for the benefit of the landlord, and at public sale, in order to save court costs, a depository of the proceeds who was also a creditor of the tenant's, and who had full knowledge of the purpose of the sale, may not complain that the court impressed a trust on such proceeds to the amount of the lien which the landlord had on the property.

Federal Bk. v Wylie, 207-816; 221 NW 831
Andrew v Bank, 208-1184; 225 NW 957

Mortgage on crop-share rent superior to garnishment of tenant. The lien of a chattel mortgage on a landlord's share of crops reserved as rent, but in the possession of the tenant, is, as to matured crops actually set aside to the landlord, or otherwise actually determined as belonging to the landlord, superior to a subsequent garnishment of the tenant by the landlord's judgment creditor.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

"Rent"—taxes included—notice to creditors—recording. The term "rent", within statutes giving a landlord a lien for rent, cannot be construed to include taxes in absence of a clear intention of parties to that effect expressed in lease, and so a lessor was held not entitled to preferential lien against assets of bankrupt assignee of lease for unpaid taxes, interest and penalties, on ground that chattel mortgage clause of lease, which was recorded in deed and chattel mortgage records, was sufficient to protect lessor's lien, the assignment of lease being recorded only in deed record and not in chattel mortgage records. Such filing did not give notice to creditors, as required by recording statutes.

Lamoine Mott Estate v Neiman, 77 F 2d, 744

Right to rents after sheriff's deed. Upon the execution and delivery of a deed by the sheriff in real estate mortgage foreclosure, the grantee becomes vested eo instanti with the right to future-maturing rents—no contract or stipulation to the contrary appearing—even tho such rents accrued in part during the period of redemption and in part afterward. In other words, the right of the grantee to such rents may be superior to that of the assignee of the lease and of the rent notes executed thereunder.

First JSL Bank v Ingels, 217-705; 251 NW 630

Unrecorded contract lien. An unrecorded lease giving the landlord a lien on exempt property kept on the premises is not effective against a purchaser of the exempt property without notice of the written lease.

Sparks v Flesher, 217-1086; 252 NW 529

Landlord's lien—vested right prior to Chandler Act. Under Iowa statutes and the bankruptcy act of 1898, rent accruing within year preceding lessee's bankruptcy was secured by a valid statutory lien and was entitled to priority in bankruptcy proceeding, such a lien being a vested property right. So the provision of Chandler Act which became effective two months before filing of petition in bankruptcy, restricting priority for rent to the rent accruing within three months before bankruptcy, would not be allowed to destroy priority of rent claim for preceding 12 months under the Iowa statute.

Ginsberg v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 721
Miles Corp. v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 729

V REMOVAL OR TRANSFER OF PROPERTY SUBJECT TO LIEN(a) LIABILITIES OF PURCHASERS

Evidence supporting oral lease for year. In action for conversion by landlord against purchaser of tenant's buckwheat, the findings of trial court that tenant leased premises for one year rather than being a sharecropper held supported by evidence and conclusive on appeal.

Schaper v Farmers' Exch., (NOR); 239 NW 134

(b) ACTIONS

Contract lien—enforcement. An action to establish and enforce a contract lien for rent is properly brought in equity, and is not transferable to law, because the answer presents law issues. Held that a contract lien for rent is validly created by a lease provision that the landlord should have, not only the statutory lien for rent, but also a lien upon all property of the tenant used or situated on the leased premises whether exempt from execution or not.

Beh v Tilk, 222-729; 269 NW 751

"Destruction" of building. In an action on a lease which provided that it should be void in case the building was "destroyed" by fire, evidence reviewed, and held not to show a destruction of the building within the meaning of the lease.

Benson v Bake-Rite Co., 207-410; 221 NW 464

Title of landlord. In an action by a landlord to recover damages consequent on the conversion by defendant of property on which the landlord had a lien for rent, the question of the ownership of the land by the landlord is wholly irrelevant and immaterial.

Mau v Rice Bros., 216-864; 249 NW 206

VI ESTOPPEL AND WAIVER OF LIEN

Liability of purchaser. A landlord may successfully maintain an action for conversion against the purchaser of property on which he has a lien for rent unless such purchaser avoids the action by a plea of waiver or estoppel. Especially is it erroneous to instruct the jury that the landlord must prove that he had no "knowledge" of the sale.

Wilson v Fortune, 209-810; 229 NW 190

Sale of crops—landlord's and purchaser's rights. A tenant's sale of crops will not divest a landlord of his statutory lien, and the landlord may maintain a conversion action against the purchaser who, if he has disposed of grain, is liable for damages unless he shows a waiver or estoppel of such lien which he must prove as an affirmative defense. So, in an equity action to enforce landlord's lien on grain sold to elevator by tenant, wherein evidence shows the manager of the elevator informed landlord's agent by telephone that tenant was selling grain, and landlord's agent replied that they had a man in the field looking after corn, the trial court was justified, under such circumstances, in holding that landlord rather than elevator company rendered the wrongful act of tenant possible, and therefore was the one to suffer from such wrongful act.

Sensibar v Hughett, 227-591; 288 NW 674

Statute of limitation—estoppel to plead—delay induced by debtor. The fact that a debtor repeatedly requests time in order to investigate the claim made against him before paying it, and the fact that the creditor repeatedly acquiesces in such delay tho under no obligation so to do, will not estop the debtor, when sued, from pleading the statute of limitation which in the meantime has fully run because of said delays.

Bundy v Grinnell Co., 215-674; 244 NW 841

VII RENT IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 13 ILR 328—Liability when premises untenable; 18 ILR 251—Mortgagee's right during redemption

Payment of rent not essential element. Payment of rent is not an essential element to the creation of the relation of landlord and tenant.

Reynolds v Oil Co., 227-163; 287 NW 823

Abandonment—duty of landlord. A landlord is under duty, in case the tenant abandons the premises, to use reasonable diligence to re-lease the premises, in order to avoid unnecessary damages.

Benson v Bake-Rite Co., 207-410; 221 NW 464

Acceleration of maturity of rent—construction. Under a farm lease for a stated number of years at a stated yearly rental payable semiannually, a provision that "a failure to pay any portion of the rent as the same becomes due shall mature the whole amount of rent", must, in case of default, be construed as having reference solely to the rent of each rental year as it falls due. In other words a default during the first rental year does not mature the rent for all the remaining years of the lease.

Hoefler v Fortmann, 219-746; 259 NW 494

Action on separate installments. The bringing of separate actions on separate installments of rent as they fall due under a lease does not constitute a splitting of a single cause of action, because the maturing of each installment matures a new cause of action.

Hoefler v Fortmann, 219-746; 259 NW 494

Allowable failure to collect rents. A widow who is entitled to receive during life from the executor the annual rents accruing on lands belonging to residuary devisees may allow such devisee to occupy the land free of rent, and objections to the executor's final report will not lie because of such action.

In re Murphy, 209-679; 228 NW 658

Assignee—liability to discharge rent obligations. The written assignee of a lease of real estate who orally accepts the assignment, or effects such acceptance by his conduct, with the approval or acquiescence of the lessor, thereby binds himself to discharge the rent obligations; especially is this true when the express provisions of the lease impose such obligation.

Central Bank v Herrick, 214-379; 240 NW 242

Directed verdict—payment of rent—sufficiency of evidence. Direction of verdict in action to recover on rent note from tenant was erroneous when there was sufficient evidence of payment by tenant in turning over proceeds of crop to warrant submission of the case to jury.

McCann v McCann, (NOR); 226 NW 922

Implied obligation. Proof that the holder of a first mortgage on real estate was himself in occupancy of the premises, and continued such occupancy after the issuance of a sheriff's deed under a junior lien, generates the presumption that such occupancy was with the assent of the said occupant and the said deed holder, with the consequent obligation of the occupant to pay reasonable rental to said deed holder until such time as a deed might be executed under foreclosure of the first mortgage.

Norman v Dougan, 201-923; 208 NW 366

Leases—readjustment of rent—construction. A long-time lease which provides (1) that the rental shall be computed at a named percentage on the value of the land (subject to a minimum rental); (2) that, for the first five-year period, a specified rental shall be paid (which was said percentage on the agreed and estimated value); (3) that the rental for the balance of the term shall, at the close of each five-year period, be subject to revision, "based upon any increase in the estimated value of the land"; and (4) that such valuation shall be made by certain valuers or appraisers, requires the valuers, in making such valuation, to treat the last preceding value as a verity. In other words, the valuers may not adjudge that the preceding valuers were mistaken in their judgment. Phrased otherwise, the valuers must confine themselves to a determination of the simple question whether the value has increased or decreased since the last preceding valuation, and add such increase to, or subtract such decrease from, the last preceding valuation.

Minot v Pelletier Co., 207-505; 223 NW 182

Mortgage of landlord's share of crops to be grown. A chattel mortgage executed by a landlord on all grain, feed, and hay "to be grown" on definitely and accurately described lands which were then under lease for the ensuing year, is a valid incumbrance on the landlord's share of the crops reserved as rent under said lease.

Pierre v Pierre, 210-1304; 232 NW 633

Nonimplied promise to pay rent. No implied promise by a parent to pay rent is shown by proof that the parent bought the property, and caused it to be conveyed to his minor child, and immediately erected substantial improvements on the property and continued to occupy the property as a homestead, together with the grantee, for a great number of years, without any claim for rent being made during the lifetime of the parties.

Hodgson v Keppel, 214-408; 238 NW 439

Obligation of assignee of lease to pay rent. The assignee of a lease (which simply binds the "lessee, his heirs, and assigns" to pay the rent) is obligated to pay rent because of privity of estate, and when said privity of estate is terminated by a valid reassignment of the lease the obligation of the assignee to pay rent necessarily terminates unless said assignee has, expressly or impliedly, otherwise obligated himself. And the fact that the lessor accepts the rent from the assignee during the assignee's occupancy is not sufficient to show that the assignee has assumed the obligation to pay rent after reassignment.

Seeburger v Cohen, 215-1088; 247 NW 292; 89 ALR 427

Purchase by tenant of undivided interest—effect. A lessee who exercises his option under the lease to buy an undivided half of the leased premises does not cease to be the tenant of the lessor as to the undivided interest retained by the lessor, and after the purchase, such tenant remains liable under the lease to the lessor for one-half of the originally reserved rent.

Schick v Realty Co., 200-997; 205 NW 782

Release of tenant. Knowledge on the part of a landlord that his tenant has assigned his lease, and the subsequent receipt by the landlord of rent payments from the assignee, is not sufficient, in and of itself, to show that the landlord has released the original tenant.

Lazerus v Shapiro, 211-376; 233 NW 723

Rent—constructive eviction. The constructive eviction of a tenant does not absolve him from the payment of the agreed rent unless he surrenders the premises.

Zimbelman v Boone Coal, 220-1310; 263 NW 335

Rent incident to land—passes to heirs. General rule is that rents accruing after the owner's death belong to the heirs or devisees, as an incident to the ownership of the land which descends to them.

In re Jensen, 225-1249; 282 NW 712

Rent—when due in absence of agreement. In the absence of a contrary agreement, rentals of realty are not due prior to the customary time of payment.

Wilson v Wilson, 220-878; 263 NW 830

"Rent"—taxes included—notice to creditors—recording. The term "rent", within statutes giving a landlord a lien for rent, cannot be construed to include taxes in absence of a clear intention of parties to that effect expressed in lease, and so a lessor was held not entitled to preferential lien against assets of bankrupt assignee of lease for unpaid taxes, interest, and penalties, on ground that chattel mortgage clause of lease, which was recorded in deed and chattel mortgage records, was sufficient to protect lessor's lien, the assignment of lease being recorded only in deed record and not in chattel mortgage records. Such filing did not give notice to creditors, as required by recording statutes.

Lamoine Mott Estate v Neiman, 77 F 2d, 744

Rescission of contract—status quo—rents—permanent improvements. A decree confirmatory of a rescission of a real estate contract of purchase should, inter alia, charge the rescinding purchaser with the fair and reasonable rental of the property during the time he was in possession, and credit said purchaser with the reasonable value of permanent improvements placed on the property.

Kunde v O'Brian, 214-921; 243 NW 594

Right to rents prior to sheriff's deed—exception to general rule. Ordinarily, the owner of mortgaged real estate is entitled to the rents until the issuance of the sheriff's deed on foreclosure sale; but where, substantially at the close of the redemption period, litigation arose over the right to redeem, and where it was agreed that the rights of the parties should remain in statu quo without the issuance of a deed until the litigation was determined, and where the court later decreed the ownership of the property as of the date when redemption expired, held that the rents accruing subsequent to the expiration of the period of redemption belonged to the parties so decreed to be the owners, even tho the sheriff's deed was executed long subsequent to said expiration.

Peoples Bank v McCarthy, 209-1283; 228 NW 7

10262 Duration of lien.

Lien—automatic termination. A landlord's lien automatically expires six months after the lease terminates.

Kerr v Horn, 211-1093; 232 NW 494

Computation of six months period. In computing the six months during which a landlord's lien survives the expiration of the lease, the count must commence with the first day following the said expiration. The statutory rule to exclude the first day and to include the last day has no application.

Welch v Welch, 212-1245; 238 NW 81

Barred claim as counterclaim. The statutory right under the general statute of limitations to plead as a counterclaim a barred claim, does not extend to a claim barred under a limitation contained in this chapter.

Miller Bk. v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550

Delay induced by debtor. The fact that a debtor repeatedly requests time in order to investigate the claim made against him before paying it, and the fact that the creditor repeatedly acquiesces in such delay tho under no obligation so to do, will not estop the debtor, when sued, from pleading the statute of limitation which in the meantime has fully run because of said delays.

Bundy v Canning Co., 215-674; 244 NW 841

Impressing trust on proceeds of lienable property. An action to impress a trust on the proceeds of property on which a landlord had a lien, against a depository who had full knowledge that the sale had been had for the benefit of the landlord, is not barred immediately after the lapse of six months from the termination of the lease.

Andrew v Bank, 208-1184; 225 NW 957

Insufficient "commencement" of action. In landlord attachment, the filing of a petition only, and the issuance of the writ prior to the expiration of six months after the termination of the lease, and the levying of the writ after the expiration of said six months, do not constitute the "commencement" of an action in such sense as will preserve the lien against a general creditor who levies after the expiration of said six months.

O'Donell v Davis, 201-214; 205 NW 347

Landlord's lien—vested right prior to Chandler Act. Under Iowa statutes and the bankruptcy act of 1898, rent accruing within year preceding lessee's bankruptcy was secured by a valid statutory lien and was entitled to priority in bankruptcy proceeding, such a lien being a vested property right. So the provision of Chandler Act which became effective two months before filing of petition in bankruptcy, restricting priority for rent to the rent accruing within three months before bankruptcy, would not be allowed to destroy priority of rent claim for preceding 12 months under the Iowa statute.

Ginsberg v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 721

Miles Corp. v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 729

Limitation on landlord's lien—nonapplicability to rents and profits pledge. This section does not apply to a contract lien against a mortgagor-landlord and in favor of a mortgagee under a "rents and profits" pledge in a real estate mortgage.

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

Loss of lien as to one who has converted crops. A landlord's lien automatically terminates six months after the termination of the lease; likewise, the right of the landlord to proceed after said six months in any form against a third party who has converted to his own use the crops grown on the leased premises.

Miller Bk. v Collis, 211-859; 234 NW 550

Three-year lease—period of lien. The term of a 3-year lease (March 1, 1934, to March 1, 1937) cannot, as to the 1935 crops, be said to expire on March 1, 1936, under the provisions of this section, giving the landlord a lien on the crops for six months after "the expiration of the term".

Sutton v Schnack, 224-251; 275 NW 870

10263 Limitation on lien in case of sale under judicial process.

Refusal of future rent. A landlord who buys the property of the tenant under a sale by an assignee for the benefit of creditors and immediately resumes possession of said property on his own premises and continues the business formerly carried on by the tenant is properly refused any allowance of future rent under the interrupted lease.

In re Cutler & Horgen, 204-739; 212 NW 573; 54 ALR 527

"Lien" defined. A "lien" is a right of property, and not mere matter of procedure.

Britton v Western Iowa Co., 9 F 2d, 488

Landlord's lien—vested right prior to Chandler Act. Under Iowa statutes and the bankruptcy act of 1898, rent accruing within year preceding lessee's bankruptcy was secured by a valid statutory lien and was entitled to priority in bankruptcy proceeding, such a lien being a vested property right. So the provision of Chandler Act which became effective two months before filing of petition in bankruptcy, restricting priority for rent to the rent accruing within three months before bankruptcy, would not be allowed to destroy priority of rent claim for preceding 12 months under the Iowa statute.

Ginsberg v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 721
Miles Corp. v Lindel, 107 F 2d, 729

10264 Enforcement — proceeding by attachment.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 270

Contract for lien — enforcement — proper forum. An action to establish and enforce a contract lien for rent is properly brought in equity, and is not transferable to law, because the answer presents law issues. Held that a contract lien for rent is validly created by a lease provision that the landlord should have, not only the statutory lien for rent, but also a lien upon all property of the tenant used or situated on the leased premises whether exempt from execution or not.

Beh v Tilk, 222-729; 269 NW 751

Conversion by commission merchant. A defendant may not defend his conversion of property on which a plaintiff-landlord had a lien for rent on the plea that he received the property as agent for the tenant and sold the property on commission.

Mau v Rice Bros., 216-864; 249 NW 206

Conversion—chattel mortgage—materiality. In an action by a landlord to recover damages consequent on the conversion by defendant of property on which the landlord had a lien for rent, the rejection of defendant's offer in evidence of a chattel mortgage on the property is proper (1) when the record demonstrated that the landlord's lien was prior to the lien of the said mortgage, and (2) when it appeared that the mortgage had been satisfied.

Mau v Rice Bros., 216-864; 249 NW 206

Lien—nonwaiver by taking general judgment. The plaintiff in landlord's attachment by failing to ask for a special execution for the sale of the attached property, and by taking a general judgment against the lessee, does not thereby waive his landlord's lien. On the contrary, the lien follows the general judgment upon which a special execution may issue notwithstanding the failure to pray therefor, and notwithstanding the failure of the judgment to provide therefor.

Wunder v Schram, 217-920; 251 NW 762

Loss of lien. The levy of a landlord's writ of attachment after the lien has expired effects nothing.

O'Donell v Davis, 201-214; 205 NW 347

Right to docket action. A judgment creditor, after perfecting a garnishment of the tenant of the judgment debtor, has a right to have an action docketed, without fee, for the purpose of enforcing the landlord's lien theretofore held by said judgment debtor, and such action may not be deemed a "creditor's bill," in the ordinary sense.

Kinart v Churchill, 210-72; 230 NW 349

Sale—impressment of trust on proceeds. An understanding between a lienor and a lienee to the effect that personal property upon which the lienor has a lien may be sold by the lienee and the lien satisfied from the proceeds of the sale, will be enforced in equity by impressing a trust on said proceeds. So held as to rent due a landlord.

Stegemann v Bendixen, 219-1190; 260 NW 14

See Jasper County Bank v Klauenberg, 218-578; 255 NW 884

Statutory and contract lien for rent. A landlord who seeks to enforce his statutory lien for rent through an ordinary landlord's attachment makes no election of remedies such as will prevent him from amending his pleading and asking the foreclosure of a contractual lien embraced in the lease. Both remedies are coexistent and consistent.

Pickler v Lanphere, 209-910; 227 NW 526
Mau v Rice Bros., 216-864; 249 NW 206

Subsequent writs authorized. When a landlord's attachment is timely in that it was commenced within 6 months after the expiration of the lease, and the writ is improperly levied on property in a foreign county, a new writ may issue, even after the 6 months has expired, and a valid levy made thereunder on the same property if it has, in the meantime, been brought into the county of suit.

Welch v Welch, 212-1245; 238 NW 81

Subtenant as party. A landlord need not, in an action to enforce his lien, make a subtenant a party defendant, even tho a lien is claimed on crops grown by the subtenant.

Hanson v Carl, 201-521; 207 NW 579

Landlord's statutory lien—taxes as part of rent—interest—lien on proceeds of sale. Where bankrupt's stock of merchandise was sold by receiver and proceeds turned over to trustee, bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to enforce against the proceeds a landlord's lien as provided by §6502, C.C., '19 (§§10261-10263, C., '24-'39), regardless of whether debt was provable under §63 of the bankruptcy act (Comp. St. §9647; 11 USC 103). Taxes are part of rent protected by landlord's lien under a lease requiring tenant to pay taxes, and landlord is entitled to legal interest from the dates rental payments and taxes became due, but not from date of filing bankruptcy petition.

Britton v Western Iowa Co., 9 F 2d, 488

Want of probable cause—improper submission. In an action for malicious prosecution in suing out a writ of landlord's attachment for rent admittedly due (but which was canceled by a pleaded and established counterclaim), manifest error results from submitting to the jury the question whether the landlord had probable grounds to believe the truth of the ground alleged as a basis for the writ.

Kelp v McManus, 218-226; 253 NW 813

Writ of attachment—legality. The issuance of a landlord's writ of attachment for rent admittedly due is not rendered unlawful because the tenant subsequently pleads and establishes a counterclaim which cancels the landlord's admitted claim for rent.

Kelp v McManus, 218-226; 253 NW 813

10265 Lien upon additional property.

Belated waiver of exemptions. The invalidity of a lease (unsigned by the wife of the lessee), insofar as it attempts to grant a lien for rent on the exempt property of the lessee, is not cured by the act of the wife in waiving her exemptions after the commencement of an action to determine the rights of existing creditors.

Brownlee v Masterson, 215-993; 247 NW 481

Lien on exempt property. A lease of land, unsigned by the lessee's wife, is a nullity insofar as it attempts to give the lessor a lien for rent on the exempt property of the lessee. Unnecessary to say that such a lease is of no validity against a subsequent valid chattel mortgage on the same property.

Brownlee v Masterson, 215-993; 247 NW 481

Nonpriority over mortgage. A lien on the exempt personal property of a tenant by virtue of the terms of an unrecorded lease, signed by both husband and wife, is subordinate in right to a subsequently executed and recorded chattel mortgage on the property, even tho the mortgagee takes his mortgage with knowledge that the mortgagor was a tenant, but without knowledge that the lease granted the landlord a lien on the tenant's exempt property.

Brenton v Bream, 202-575; 210 NW 756

Brownlee v Masterson, 215-993; 247 NW 481

10267 Acts sufficient to constitute taking of property.

Return—permissible amendment. The return of the levy of an attachment may be so amended as (1) to definitely locate the property levied on and (2) to specifically describe the kind of property levied on.

Salinger v Elev. Co., 210-668; 231 NW 366

CHAPTER 451

MECHANIC'S LIEN

10270 Definitions and rules of construction.

ANALYSIS

- I OWNERSHIP OR POSSESSION OF LAND
- II ESTATES OR INTERESTS SUBJECT TO LIEN

I OWNERSHIP OR POSSESSION OF LAND

"Owner" defined. The legal titleholder of real estate and a prospective purchaser, for whose benefit and use an improvement is erected upon the real estate, may both be considered "owners" of the property within the meaning of the mechanic's lien law.

American Bk. v West, 214-568; 243 NW 297

Scope of term "owner". The term "owner" embraces not only an "owner" in the ordinary acceptance of such term, but "every person for whose use or benefit" an improvement is made.

Schoeneman Lbr. v Davis, 200-873; 205 NW 502

Owner requiring improvements by vendee. An owner of land, who, in a contract of sale, binds the purchaser to make specified improvements on the existing buildings, will be deemed the owner of the property in proceedings for the enforcement of the mechanics' liens resulting from such improvements. It follows that the statutes (§§10287, 10290, C., '27) which adjust the equities between rival lienholders have no application to the case of said owner.

Consumers v Rozema, 212-696; 237 NW 433

Vendee as owner under executory contract. The vendee of land under a contract calling for installment payments is the equitable titleholder, and, therefore, the "owner" of the land within the mechanic's lien statutes, and may contract for improvements on the land and subject his interest to the resulting mechanics' liens.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

II ESTATES OR INTERESTS SUBJECT TO LIEN

Right to lien—vendor's interest bound—consent to improvement. The term "owner" in the mechanic's lien statutes includes a vendor who expressly or impliedly consents to improvements on the real estate and the interest of said vendor is subject to mechanics' liens for labor and materials furnished for such improvements.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 275 NW 21

10271 Persons entitled to lien.

Labor and material on public improvements. See Ch 452

I MECHANIC'S LIEN IN GENERAL

Contract waiver. A principal contractor may, by explicit contract with the owner of the premises, validly waive his statutory right to a mechanic's lien as against the owner.

Van Dyck Co. v Bldg. Co., 200-1003; 205 NW 650

Contractor of vendee. A mechanic's lien may not be established against the land of a vendor or against a building thereon of which the improvement became an integral part, when the vendor is not directly or indirectly a party to such improvement. Especially is this true when the vendee is not a party to the action to foreclose such claimed lien.

Joyce Lbr. Co. v Wick, 200-796; 205 NW 476

Improper interest and attorney fees. The lien of a materialman may, in a certain case, be superior to the lien of a prior mortgage on the land, yet the court is in error in computing interest at a rate in excess of 6 percent and in allowing an attorney's fee and taxing it as costs and decree a lien for such excess interest and costs, even tho the claim of the materialman is evidenced by a promissory note calling for such excess interest and attorney fees.

Spieker v Fair Assn., 216-424; 249 NW 415

Model house constructed by lienholders' joint enterprise—priority of vendor's lien. Where materialmen and laborers who enter into an enterprise, whereby all agree to furnish labor and materials to construct a model home to be given away by a chance drawing and agree that they will receive their reimbursement from the sale of tickets to an entertainment at which said drawing will be held, and when the returns from the ticket sale are insufficient to pay all claims, the mechanics' liens are not superior to a vendor's lien held by the vendor of the land on which the house was built, when such vendor did not enter the joint enterprise; such cooperating mechanics' lienholders share pro rata.

Joyce Co. v Marshalltown League, 226-274; 283 NW 912

House constructed by lienholders' joint enterprise—vendor's lien inferior to noncooperating worker's mechanic's lien. Where an owner sells land knowing that certain materialmen and laborers are promoting a joint enterprise to build a model home thereon and dispose of the property at an advertising chance drawing scheme, such owner's vendor's lien is inferior to a mechanic's lien acquired by a laborer whose work was not performed as a part of, nor in cooperation with, the joint enterprise.

Joyce Co. v Marshalltown League, 226-274; 283 NW 912

Nature of lien—waiver or estoppel by conduct. A mechanic's lien is a statutory right given to contractor furnishing labor or material to protect himself from loss. He may, by contract or by his actions, expressly or impliedly waive that right or be estopped from asserting it.

Joyce Co. v Marshalltown League, 226-274; 283 NW 912

Parties to appeal—fatal defect in parties. In an action by the purchaser of land to quiet title against certain claims for mechanics' liens, the decree confirmed the claims as liens on the land, and ordered said land sold for the payment—at least pro tanto—of said liens, and, in addition, entered personal judgments against a former owner of the land for the amount of each of said claims. Plaintiff appealed from the decree insofar as it established said claims as liens.

I MECHANIC'S LIEN IN GENERAL—concluded

Held, the appeal could not be maintained without service of notice of appeal on said former owner.

Gordon-Van Tine Co. v Ideal Co., 223-313; 271 NW 523

Property subject—mechanic's lien debtor's right of redemption. A mechanic's lien debtor's right of redemption and right of possession are not subject to levy nor to junior mechanic's lien judgments obtained more than nine months after the sale, but within the year for redemption.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 275 NW 21

Property subject to lien—furnace. The refusal to establish a mechanic's lien against a duly installed furnace is proper when the removal of the furnace would leave the building in a dilapidated condition.

Ilten & Taege v Pfister, 202-833; 211 NW 407

Quasi-mechanics' liens—materialman not subcontractor. A party who contracts to furnish and deliver gravel to a contractor on a public improvement, at the contractor's place of work, and at a stated price per ton, is not a subcontractor but is a materialman. It follows that demands for labor, gasoline, and oil furnished to various parties, in the execution of a part of the gravel contract which the materialman sublets, cannot be enforced against the retained percentage of the contract price in the hands of the public authorities.

Forsberg v Const. Co., 218-818; 252 NW 258

Right to lien—agency—facts not constituting. The vendor of land sold on installments does not constitute the vendee his agent to make improvements and repairs on the property by requiring the vendee to obligate himself to the effect that all improvements placed upon the property shall remain thereon and not be destroyed until final payment is made.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

Unauthorized sale by co-tenant. One tenant in common may not, without authority from his co-tenants, so sell the property as to render it liable to a mechanic's lien for material contracted for by the purchaser.

Ilten & Taege v Pfister, 202-833; 211 NW 407

Waiver—obligation of mortgagee. A mortgagee who consents that insurance money collected by him on a destroyed building on the mortgaged premises may be used by the mortgagor in the construction of a new building on the premises, tho said consent is communicated to a materialman, does not thereby obligate himself to pay the deficiency in the cost of said new building after applying the insurance money, nor does the mortgagee thereby waive the priority of his mortgage in favor of the materialman; and this is true tho the mortgagee knew that the insurance money would not be sufficient to pay the cost of the new building.

First Bank v Westendorf, 213-475; 239 NW 73

II PERSONS ENTITLED TO LIEN

Quasi-mechanics' liens—employee of materialman. One who assists a materialman in producing the material which the materialman has contracted to furnish to a county for highway purposes has no quasi lien on, or claim to, the fund due the materialman from the county.

Nolan v Larimer, Inc., 218-599; 254 NW 45

Performance—well drilling—faulty pump. A well driller's guarantee to secure an ample supply of water has been fulfilled when the evidence in a mechanic's lien foreclosure fairly establishes that there is a constant head of 180 feet of water in the well, and the lack of ample water was due entirely to the improper pump line furnished by the owner.

Collins v Gard, 224-236; 275 NW 392

III SERVICES AND MATERIALS SECURED BY LIEN

Proof of claim—evidence. A claim for extra work is not proved by the production of the contractor's books of account, showing items of time employed, and made up from oral statements by workmen who were not called as witnesses, neither the contractor nor the bookkeeper having any personal knowledge of the correctness of the items.

Van Dyck Co. v Bldg. Co., 200-1003; 205 NW 650

Quasi-mechanics' liens—nonlienable claims. Claims for meals furnished employees of a contractor on a public improvement are not lienable; likewise claims for groceries bought by an employee for his personal use.

Coon River Co-op. v McDougall Co., 215-861; 244 NW 847

Lumber for cement forms nonlienable. Lumber furnished to a contractor on a public improvement, solely for the purpose of building forms to hold cement or concrete while it is solidifying, is not lienable under the statute providing for quasi mechanics' liens growing out of public improvements.

Melcher Co. v Robertson Co., 217-31; 250 NW 594

Right to complete contract. Upon a substantial breach of a building contract and the refusal of the contractor to proceed with the work, the owner of the property may himself take over the completion of the contract according to its terms, and charge the cost thereof against the contractor.

Golwitzer v Hummel, 201-751; 206 NW 254

Right to take over work. A building contractor who materially breaches his contract to erect a building at a certain minimum cost, and refuses to proceed with the work, opens the door to the other party to the contract to take over the work and complete it, and recover of the contractor the resulting damages.

Johnson v Vogel, 208-44; 222 NW 864

Well drilling—compensation per foot to ample water, as a basis for a mechanic's lien. A contract to drill a well at an agreed price per foot for each foot drilled, coupled with a guarantee by the driller to secure an ample supply of water with no limitation on the depth of the well, means that the driller is to be paid at the contract price for every foot drilled to whatever depth it is necessary to go to fulfill the guarantee.

Collins v Gard, 224-236; 275 NW 392

IV REQUIREMENT OF CONTRACT WITH OWNER

Contract against lien—validity. An owner of land in leasing his property has a right to contract that improvements made by the lessee on the land shall not be made on credit, and that said property shall not be liable therefor.

Thompson Yards, Inc. v Haakinson & Beaty Co., 209-985; 229 NW 266

Contract forfeiture of improvements. One who purchases property under a contract which provides that, in case of forfeiture, all improvements placed thereon by the purchaser shall belong to the vendor, and who voluntarily surrenders and abandons the property, has no such interest in the property as may be made subject to a mechanic's lien.

Ilten & Taege v Pfister, 202-833; 211 NW 407

Contract with purchaser—forfeiture—effect. One who erects an improvement on land solely under a contract with the purchaser of the land is not entitled to a mechanic's lien on the land when the purchaser has lost all interest in the land because of the legal forfeiture of his contract of purchase; and this is true, even tho the legal owner had knowledge that the improvement was being erected.

Nolan v Wick, 218-660; 254 NW 80

Contract with owners of land in severalty. Fundamentally, there must be a contract with the owner of land as a basis for a mechanic's lien thereon. Evidence reviewed relative to the remodeling by a tenant of a building situated on three separate, contiguous tracts of land owned in severalty by three different owners, and held, insufficient to show the existence of any contract, express or implied, with either of the landowners, even tho said owners did know that the work was being carried on.

Thompson Yards, Inc. v Haakinson & Beaty Co., 209-985; 229 NW 266

Contract with landowner—evidence—sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held to justify the finding of the trial court that the owner of realty had authorized his tenant as his agent to contract for material for making repairs to improvements on the farm and that a mechanic's lien was properly foreclosed against said owner and his subsequent grantee.

Iowa Supply v Petersen, 221-978; 267 NW 716

Contract with nonowner of premises. Failure of a mechanic's lien claimant to prove that he furnished the materials in question, under and by virtue of a contract with the owner of the premises or with some one legally representing the said owner, is fatal to his claim to a lien.

Eclipse Lbr. v Murphy Co., 206-1280; 221 NW 930

Improvements by tenant. A mechanic's lien may not be decreed on the land of a landlord, for improvements erected on the land by the tenant with the knowledge of the landlord, the tenant having reserved in the lease the right to remove, at the end of the term, all improvements erected by him.

Lane-Moore Lbr. Co. v Kloppenburg, 204-613; 215 NW 637

Enforcement—contract not foreclosed or made with owner. A mechanic's lien claimant has no lien against intestate property when (1) his claim was not foreclosed within the time allowed by statute, and (2) his contract for furnishing the labor and material was not made with decedent's heirs as owners of the property.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

Impossible ratification. A vendor of land who, upon discovering that his vendee has placed repairs and improvements upon the property, does nothing in the way of repudiating the actions of the vendee, cannot be held thereby to have ratified the actions of the vendee and constituted the vendee his agent to make the improvements, when the vendee in making said repairs and improvements never assumed to act for the vendor.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

Improvement by tenant with right to remove. A mechanic's lien may not be established for a building erected on land by a tenant under an agreement with the landlord-owner that the tenant may, and if required by the landlord will, remove it when the lease terminates.

Southern Sur. v Serv. Co., 209-104; 227 NW 606

IV REQUIREMENT OF CONTRACT WITH OWNER—concluded

Tenant's agency for landlord—burden of proof on mechanic's lien claimant. Burden of proving agency is upon the one who seeks to impress a mechanic's lien on a landlord's real estate for material furnished at the instance of the tenant, and such agency is not found in a lease which consents to the building of a room on the premises, but specifically provides that no obligation shall be imposed on the landlord therefor, such a contract being one which he had a right to make when no fraud is involved.

Perkins Service v Rosenberg, 226-27; 282 NW 371

Grounds—contract as necessary element. Before one can successfully maintain a mechanic's lien, he must have a contract with the owner, his agent, trustee, contractor, or subcontractor.

Perkins Service v Rosenberg, 226-27; 282 NW 371

Priority—avoidance of prior mortgage. A mechanic's lien claimant may not complain of the act of the legal titleholder in taking a mortgage on a part only of a number of lots, instead of asserting his prior right to a mortgage on all the lots, when the mechanic's lien claimant has made no attempt to perfect his lien on any of the lots omitted from the mortgage.

Marker v Davis, 200-446; 204 NW 287

Priority—rights of titleholder under contract of sale. A mechanic's lienholder takes subject to the rights of the legal, recorded titleholder, including the rights of such holder under a contract of sale of the land: e. g., the right of the said holder ultimately to receive a mortgage on every part and parcel of the land as security for the entire unpaid purchase price.

Marker v Davis, 200-446; 204 NW 287

Right to lien—vendor's interest bound—consent to improvement. The term "owner" in the mechanic's lien statutes includes a vendor who expressly or impliedly consents to improvements on the real estate and the interest of said vendor is subject to mechanic's liens for labor and materials furnished for such improvements.

Murray v Kelroy, 223-1331; 275 NW 21

Right to remove fixture as against vendor. A dealer who permanently installs a furnace in a house for a subvendee, under a contract that he (the dealer) shall retain title to the furnace and the right to remove it in case of nonpayment, may not lawfully remove the furnace for nonpayment, as against the vendor, who did not expressly or impliedly consent to such installation, and who sold under a written forfeitable contract, which was, subsequent to the installation of the furnace, forfeited and abandoned by both the original vendee and the subvendee.

Des M. Impr. v Furnace Co., 204-274; 212 NW 551

Vendee's contract to keep in repair—construction. An executory contract by a vendee of premises that he will keep the premises in reasonably good repair cannot be construed as authorizing the vendee to install an entirely new bathroom equipment, and to bind the vendor's interest therefor.

Darragh v Knolk, 218-686; 254 NW 22

Vendee under contract for deed—forfeiture of contract—effect. One who erects or installs an improvement on premises under a contract with a bond-for-deed vendee may establish a mechanic's lien against the vendee's interest, but if said vendee's contract for a deed be legally forfeited and he be left without interest, said lien cannot be established against the vendor's interest unless said vendor required or authorized said improvement.

Darragh v Knolk, 218-686; 254 NW 22

V CONTRACT WITH HUSBAND FOR IMPROVEMENT ON WIFE'S LAND

No annotations in this volume

VI SUFFICIENCY OF CONTRACT

Well drilling—compensation per foot to ample water, as a basis for a mechanic's lien. A contract to drill a well at an agreed price per foot for each foot drilled, coupled with a guarantee by the driller to secure an ample supply of water with no limitation on the depth of the well, means that the driller is to be paid at the contract price for every foot drilled to whatever depth it is necessary to go to fulfill the guarantee.

Collins v Gard, 224-236; 275 NW 392

10273 Security after completion of work.

Action at law aided by attachment. The obtaining of a judgment at law on an account and the sale of property seized on an attachment, do not constitute a waiver of a mechanic's lien for the same account to the extent that the judgment remains unpaid.

Southern Sur. v Serv. Co., 209-104; 227 NW 606

Accounting by trustee—bank inducing lien release by mortgage on horses. Where a bank holds a chattel mortgage on horses, executed as part of an arrangement with the mechanic's lienholder for payment of his lien, the release of which was induced by the execution of the chattel mortgage, a sale of the horses by the bank, under a subsequent chattel mortgage, would constitute the bank a trustee required to account to the mechanic's lienholder, but, without proof that the horses sold were the same ones in both mortgages, no showing is made of trust funds to be accounted for.

Shimp Bros. v Place, 225-1098; 281 NW 471

10274 Extent of lien.

Dower—not subject to mechanic's lien. A mechanic's lien filed after the death of the titleholder is not a lien on the unassigned dower, of the surviving spouse, in the property in question.

Fullerton Lbr. Co. v Miller, 217-630; 252 NW 760

10275 In case of leasehold interest.

Improvement by tenant—sale and removal. A mechanic's lien may not be enforced against a tenant's leasehold interest and against the improvement erected by him, other than by a sale of the leasehold interest and the improvement as a whole,—as a unit,—when the improvement was erected by the tenant under a specific agreement that the improvement should, upon the termination of the lease, become the property of the lessor. In other words, the improvement may not be separately sold and removed.

Queal Lbr. v Lipman, 200-1376; 206 NW 627

Removal of building. A mechanic's lien is properly decreed against an improvement erected by a tenant on leased ground when the tenant and his lessor have mutually contracted that the tenant might, at the end of the term, remove all improvements placed on the property by the tenant; and this is true, even though the removal cannot be made without damage to the premises.

Lane-Moore Lbr. Co. v Kloppenburg, 204-613; 215 NW 637

10277 Perfection of lien.

Nonfraudulent claim for nonlienable articles. Principle reaffirmed that the nonfraudulent inclusion in an account of nonlienable items will not nullify the lien to which the materialman is entitled.

Consumers Lbr. v Rozema, 212-696; 237 NW 433

Public improvements—"verified" statement as condition precedent. Failure to file a verified statement of materials or labor employed on a public improvement, as the basis of an action under §3102, C., '97, and Ch 347, 38 GA, is fatal to the validity of the claim; and a mere "certification" is not a "verification".

Francesconi v School Dist., 204-307; 214 NW 882

10278 Time of filing.

Computation of time. The 60-day period within which a subcontractor is permitted to file a statement for a mechanic's lien commences to run when all interested parties regard the subcontractor's contract as completed, and not from a subsequent time when some trifling work is done, for the purpose (1) of correcting defective work, or (2) of furnishing an excuse for further time in which to file the statement.

Nielson v Buser, 207-288; 222 NW 856

Fatal delay in perfecting. A mechanic's lien claimant acquires no lien when he delays the perfecting of his claimed lien by proper filing until long after the expiration of the 90 days given by statute, and until, in the meantime, a mortgage has been taken and foreclosed on the land by parties who had no knowledge of any claim for such nonperfected lien.

Cochran v Ory, 222-772; 269 NW 764

10282 Liability of owner to original contractor.

Payment of subcontractors—receipts and waivers. In action for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, the amount due to subcontractors must be determined when the contractor fails to furnish receipts and waivers of claims for liens as required by statute.

Newell Co. v Fyler, (NOR); 230 NW 322

10283 Liability to subcontractor after payment of original contractor.

Right to lien—misapplication of payments. A subcontractor who receives money from the contractor with knowledge that the money had been paid to the contractor by the owner of the improvement may not apply said funds on other claims which he holds against the contractor.

McDonald Mfg. Co. v Leverett, 203-1215; 211 NW 849

Establishment—misapplied payments. A subcontractor who attempts to establish his lien against the premises is very properly charged with the amount of payments received by him from the contractor with knowledge that they came from the owner and wrongfully applied by crediting them on an antecedent debt of the contractor.

Hawkeye Lbr. v Day, 203-172; 210 NW 430

Payment of subcontractors—receipts and waivers. In action for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, the amount due to subcontractors must be determined when the contractor fails to furnish receipts and waivers of claims for liens as required by statute.

Newell Co. v Fyler, (NOR); 230 NW 322

10287 Priority over other liens.

Discussion. See 17 ILR 516—Mortgages and mechanics' liens

ANALYSISI PRIORITY OVER CONVEYANCES, LIENS, AND INCUMBRANCES

- (a) PRIORITY IN GENERAL
- (b) CONVEYANCES
- (c) MORTGAGES
- (d) VENDOR'S LIEN

I PRIORITY OVER CONVEYANCES, LIENS, AND INCUMBRANCES(a) PRIORITY IN GENERAL

Decree does not inure to nonappellant. Where an equitable decree adjudged (1) that one of two assignees of the same fund took priority over the other assignee, but (2) that certain mechanics and dealers had lienable claims on said fund prior to both of said assignees, and where, on appeal solely by the defeated assignee, it was adjudged not only (1) that the appellant-assignee took priority over the appellee-assignee, but (2) that said mechanics and dealers had no lienable claims on said fund, held that the judgment on appeal that the mechanics and dealers had no lienable claims on said fund did not inure to the benefit of the appellee-assignee. In other words, the appellee-assignee was still bound by the decree of the trial court because he did not appeal therefrom.

Ottumwa Works v O'Meara, 208-80; 224 NW 803

(b) CONVEYANCES

Sale on foreclosure. A purchaser of land at mechanic's lien foreclosure sale (there being no redemption) acquires the entire title of the then owner of the property, and such right is necessarily transmitted to the purchaser's grantee and to all others claiming title from such source. It follows that a mechanic's lien claimant has no standing who delays the filing of his lien against the same owner until after said sale, even tho he files it before the issuance of the sheriff's deed.

Soltow v Roth, 204-665; 215 NW 705

(c) MORTGAGES

Improvements contemplated—effect on priority of purchase money mortgage. Contract of sale held not to contemplate improvements to the purchased premises so that mechanic's lien has priority over seller's purchase money mortgage.

Queal Lbr. v McNeal, 226-631; 284 NW 479

Intent to give—constructive notice. When the mortgagor has told materialman that mortgagor intended to give a mortgage for the purchase price, materialman, claiming mechanic's lien, has constructive notice of such prior mortgage of record, even tho the acknowledgment thereof is defective.

Queal Lbr. v McNeal, 226-631; 284 NW 479

Mortgage to finance improvement. A mortgage on unimproved land in an amount much in excess of the value of the land, made for the specific purpose of enabling the owner to obtain funds with which to erect, and with which he does erect, an improvement on the land, (1) carries in equity a lien on the entire property as improved, superior to the mechanic's lien of a claimant who at all times had full knowledge of the purpose of the mortgage, and (2) carries, under the statute (§3095, C., '97), a superior right to the entire proceeds of a sale of the improved property.

Crawford-Fayram Lbr. Co., v Mann, 203-748; 211 NW 225

Priority—actual notice of mortgage not required. Statute making mechanic's lien inferior to mortgage, where materialman has notice of the mortgage, construed not to require actual notice.

Queal Lbr. v McNeal, 226-631; 284 NW 479

Priority—belated filing of lien. A mechanic's lien, tho not filed within the statutory limit of time, is prior in right to a mortgage on the premises executed during the construction of the improvement in question.

American Bk. v West, 214-568; 243 NW 297

Priority—mechanic's lien. Materialman is not entitled to priority of his mechanic's lien over previously recorded mortgage to the extent of balance of mortgage funds not paid to borrower who built the house, when such amount was past due to mortgagee and was applied on the mortgage debt.

Queal Lbr. v McNeal, 226-631; 284 NW 479

Priority—mortgage less than permitted amount. Materialman, claiming mechanic's lien, has no priority to extent of $300 over prior recorded mortgage, where a contract for the sale of land upon which the building was constructed permitted a $3200 mortgage, but contract vendee mortgaged it for only $2900.

Queal Lbr. v McNeal, 226-631; 284 NW 479

Priority over mortgage—time of furnishing material. Where material is furnished to a building for one property, and part of the material is left over and taken to another property for which the materialman also furnishes material and upon which a mechanic's lien is being asserted, the materialman may not incorporate into his claim against the second property the cost of such remaining material and thus carry back the first item of his claim for a mechanic's lien to defeat an intervening mortgage.

Queal Lbr. v McNeal, 226-631; 284 NW 479

Priority on building over prior mortgage on land. A mechanic's lien on a new and independent building on mortgaged land for material furnished on the construction of such building may be decreed priority on the building, with right to remove it in case such removal can be effected without substantial injury to either the land or the building.

Lincoln Ins. v McSpadden, 211-97; 232 NW 824

Priority—title to realty not in purchaser of materials. In determining priority of mechanic's lien for materials furnished prior to time mortgage was recorded, the court properly denied priority to mechanic's lien when record title to the property was not in the purchaser of the materials, and materialman was charged with notice of an unrecorded contract which provided that the mortgage was to be executed.

Queal Lbr. v McNeal, 226-631; 284 NW 482

Priority over equitable mortgage. The making and acceptance of a written application for a loan, together with a written agreement to secure the loan on land in which the proposed borrower then had no interest whatever (tho he later acquired the title), no money being then advanced on the strength of the acceptance, create no equitable mortgage which will be superior to mechanics' liens accruing prior to the actual execution and recording of the contemplated mortgage.

Iowa Co. v Plewe, 202-79; 209 NW 399

Waiver by conduct. A materialman who files his lien after inducing a mortgagee to take his mortgage on the express or implied promise that no lien will be filed, will not be decreed priority over the mortgage.

Fullerton Lbr. Co. v Miller, 217-630; 252 NW 760

Waiver—mortgage to secure funds. Proof, provided it is clear, satisfactory, and convincing, that a materialman agreed that the owner of land should, by a mortgage on the land, raise the funds with which to pay for the materials going into an improvement, and that such mortgage was so executed during the period of construction, subordinates the lien of said materialman to the lien of the mortgage.

Eclipse Lbr. v Bitler, 213-1313; 241 NW 696

(d) VENDOR'S LIEN

Improvement by vendee. A mechanic's lien for an improvement erected by a vendee cannot have precedence over the vendor's lien and claim for the unpaid purchase price when the improvement was not for the vendor's "use or benefit", and when, in its last analysis, the vendor simply knew that the vendee was making the improvement.

Schoeneman Lbr. v Davis, 200-873; 205 NW 502

Rights of titleholder under contract of sale. A mechanic's lien claimant who commences to furnish material to a vendee of land while the recorded title is in the vendor, is chargeable with notice of the contract rights of the vendor.

Magnesite Products Co. v Bensmiller, 207-1303; 224 NW 514

Unremovable repairs and improvements. Where the vendee of land, exclusively on his own authority, places repairs and improvements upon an existing building on the land of such a nature that they cannot be removed without material damage to the building, the vendor's lien for the purchase price of the land is superior to the lien of the mechanic's lien claimants both as to the real estate, and as to repairs and improvements.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

Vendor's lien—when superior to mechanic's lien. A vendor's lien for the purchase price of land sold on installments without obligating or requiring the vendee to make any improvement on the property is superior to mechanics' liens growing out of the repair and improvement of a building existing on the land when it was sold; and this is true even tho the vendor may have expected that the vendee would or might make such repairs or improvements, or may have actually known that the vendee was making them.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

10289 Priority as to buildings over prior liens upon land.

Priority over prior mortgage. A mechanic's lien for materials furnished for a grandstand, on lands belonging to a fair association, to replace one burned, may, in a proper case, have priority over a prior mortgage on the land when the structure can be removed without damage to the realty; and this is true tho the insurance on the burned structure was applied in payment of the material going into the new structure, a fact which the materialman did not know until long after the building had been completed.

Spieker v Fair Assn., 216-424; 249 NW 415

10290 Foreclosure of mechanic's lien when lien on land.

Appeal—triable de novo. An appeal from judgment of dismissal in action to foreclose mechanic's lien is triable de novo in supreme court.

Sloan Co. v Hall, (NOR); 206 NW 573

Curtailing right of mortgagee. Whether a mortgagee of unimproved land may constitutionally be deprived of a lien on future-erected and permanent improvements on the land, quaere.

Crawford-Fayram Lbr. Co. v Mann, 203-748; 211 NW 225

Enforcement—modern house—removal without undue loss. The trial court's finding in a mechanic's lien foreclosure that a house built on a concrete foundation, having a sewer and other improvements, could be removed from the soil without undue loss or damage, held justified from the evidence; especially when the house was on a farm possessing in addition a full complement of farm buildings, including another house.

Anfinson v Cook, 224-833; 276 NW 762

Enforcement—modern house—court discretion in removal. The fact that a building is modern, with gas, sewer, and water connections to the soil, does not necessarily, in a mechanic's lien foreclosure, take it from the realm of discretion of the trial court to order it removed under proper evidence.

Anfinson v Cook, 224-833; 276 NW 762

Priority—estoppel. A mortgagee cannot be held estopped to insist on the priority of his mortgage over the mechanic's lien of a materialman on an indefinite showing of the conduct of the mortgagee on which the materialman never relied.

First Bank v Westendorf, 213-475; 239 NW 73

Priority on building over prior mortgage on land. A mechanic's lien on a new and independent building on mortgaged land for material furnished in the construction of such building, may be decreed priority on the building, with right to remove it in case such removal can be effected without substantial injury to either the land or the building.

Lincoln Ins. v McSpadden, 211-97; 232 NW 824

Spieker v Fair Assn., 216-424; 249 NW 415

Refusal of proportional distribution on sale. Failure of the court to decree a proportional part of the proceeds of a mortgage foreclosure sale to the prior mortgagee and a proportional part to the subsequent mechanic's lien holder for additions, repairs, and betterments is harmless error when the property sold simply for the amount of the mortgage and the mechanic's lien holder did not redeem.

Hedges Co. v Holland, 203-1149; 212 NW 480

Right to remove improvement. Principle recognized that the removal from land of a modern residence, as ordinarily constructed, entails unjustifiable waste.

Crawford-Fayram Lbr. Co. v Mann, 203-748; 211 NW 225

First Bank v Westendorf, 213-475; 239 NW 73

Sale en masse and division of proceeds. Where land with a residence thereon was mortgaged and the residence burned and was replaced by a new one, the court cannot order a sale of the land and so divide the proceeds as to give the mortgagee priority on the land, and the mechanic's lien claimant priority on the new residence, when there is no evidence demonstrating how the division should be made; and especially when the mortgagee has surrendered the insurance on the old residence and allowed it to be expended on the new residence.

First Bank v Westendorf, 213-475; 239 NW 73

Unremovable repairs and improvements. Where the vendee of land, exclusively on his own authority, places repairs and improvements upon an existing building on the land of such a nature that they cannot be removed without material damage to the building, the vendor's lien for the purchase price of the land is superior to the lien of the mechanic's lien claimants both as to the real estate, and as to repairs and improvements.

Knapp v Baldwin, 213-24; 238 NW 542

10293 Time of bringing action—court.

Adjudication and loss of right. The right to foreclose a mechanic's lien is wholly lost by the act of the claimant, when made a party to mortgage foreclosure, (1) in filing a cross-petition for foreclosure of his lien without service of notice of such filing and of hearing thereon; (2) in filing an answer which, in effect, repeats all the allegations of the cross-petition; (3) in allowing the proceedings to go to decree, which omitted any foreclosure of the mechanic's lien, but determined the status and priority of all parties, and which ordered a sale of the premises and foreclosed all subordinate parties of all rights after sale, except the right of redemption; and (4) in failing to appeal from said decree.

Matthews v Quaintance, 200-736; 205 NW 361

Contract limitation — unreasonableness. A contract provision in an indemnity bond which requires the obligee to begin suit thereon before the amount of his recovery on the bond is determinable, is unreasonable, and therefore unenforceable. In such case, the general statute which limits actions applies. So held as to a building performance bond which involved mechanics' liens.

Cook v Heinbaugh, 202-1002; 210 NW 129

Sale on foreclosure—effect. A purchaser of land at mechanic's lien foreclosure sale (there being no redemption) acquires the entire title of the then owner of the property; and such right is necessarily transmitted to the purchaser's grantee and to all others claiming title from such source. It follows that a mechanic's lien claimant has no standing who delays the filing of his lien against the same owner until after said sale, even tho he files it before the issuance of the foreclosure deed.

Soltow v Roth, 204-665; 215 NW 705

10295 Kinds of action.

Receiver—appointment. The appointment in mechanic's lien foreclosure proceedings of a receiver of the rents, at the instance of a vendor and lien claimants, may be proper when the equitable owner of the property in question is insolvent, and when the property itself is inadequate security for the established claims.

Des M. Marble v McConn, 210-266; 227 NW 521

Foreclosure—amount due. Plaintiff's failure to prove that some amount is due him necessarily precludes a foreclosure.

Hagen v Reid, 207-39; 222 NW 377

Performance—well drilling—faulty pump. A well driller's guarantee to secure an ample supply of water has been fulfilled when the evidence in a mechanic's lien foreclosure fairly establishes that there is a constant head of 180 feet of water in the well, and the lack of ample water was due entirely to the improper pump line furnished by the owner.

Collins v Gard, 224-236; 275 NW 392

10296 Limitation on action.

Contract not foreclosed or made with owner. A mechanic's lien claimant has no lien against intestate property when (1) his claim was not foreclosed within the time allowed by statute, and (2) his contract for furnishing the labor and material was not made with decedent's heirs as owners of the property.

Finn v Grant, 224-527; 278 NW 225

Principal contractor. An action to enforce the mechanic's lien of a principal contractor is not barred until the lapse of two years from the expiration of 90 days for filing the claim.

Fryman v McCaffrey, 208-531; 222 NW 19; 224 NW 95

Statute, not contract, governs. Where an owner of land in a contract of sale requires the vendee to make certain improvements on the property within a certain time, it cannot be held that the time for the enforcement of the mechanic's lien commences to run from the time the vendee contracts to have the improvements finished.

Consumers Lbr. v Rozema, 212-696; 237 NW 433

When action deemed commenced. An action to enforce a mechanic's lien is deemed commenced at the time the original notice of the action is delivered to the sheriff for immediate service.

Consumers Lbr. v Rozema, 212-696; 237 NW 433

CHAPTER 452

LABOR AND MATERIAL ON PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS

10299 Terms defined.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 46; '32 AG Op 166

Statute not retroactive.

Francesconi v School Dist., 204-307; 214 NW 882

Bonds—scope. A bond conditioned to pay all subcontractors for "materials" furnished embraces "fuel", when the statute under which the bond is given defines "materials" as including "fuel".

Standard v Marvill, 201-614; 206 NW 37

Right to lien—groceries, meats, oil, and money loaned.

Teget v Drain. Ditch, 202-747; 210 NW 954
See Monona County v O'Connor, 205-1119; 215 NW 803

Right to lien—"materials, feed, provisions, and fuel".

Aetna Cas. v Kimball, 206-1251; 222 NW 31

Nonlienable claims. Claims for labor and materials furnished to a contractor on a public drainage improvement in repairing the machinery which the contractor employed on the work are not lienable on the drainage funds.

Ottumwa Boiler v O'Meara, 206-577; 218 NW 920

Nonlienable claims. Claims for meals furnished employees of a contractor on a public improvement are not lienable; likewise claims for groceries bought by an employee for his personal use.

Coon River Assn. v Constr. Co., 215-861; 244 NW 847

Lumber for cement forms. Lumber furnished to a contractor on a public improvement, solely for the purpose of building forms to hold cement or concrete while it is solidifying, is not lienable under the statute providing for quasi mechanics' liens growing out of public improvements.

Melcher Lbr. Co. v Robertson Co., 217-31; 250 NW 594

Public improvements—estimated quantities as basis for contract—variation with specifications not fatal. In awarding a contract to build an electric plant, the function of plans and estimated quantities is to permit a uniform comparison of bids, and the requirement of "unit prices", as a means of payment for variations from the estimated quantities, indicates their variable character, so certain variations between the plans and specifications will not result in a failure of competitive bidding invalidating a contract based thereon.

Interstate Co. v Forest City, 225-490; 281 NW 207

10300 Public improvements—bond and conditions.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 26; '36 AG Op 527

Assignments of contracts—priorities.

Ottumwa Boiler v O'Meara, 206-577; 218 NW 920

Coon River Assn. v McDougall, 215-861; 244 NW 847

Statutory bond not deemed common-law bond. A statutory bond may not be treated as a common-law bond.

Zeidler Co. v Ryan & Fuller, 205-37; 215 NW 801

Execution and delivery in foreign state. A statutory bond which is executed and delivered in a foreign state for the performance of a contract in this state will be construed in accordance with the laws of this state when such was the intention of the parties, as shown (1) by the nature of the transaction, (2) by the subject matter, and (3) by the attending circumstances.

Philip Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

Statutory bonds—sufficiency. A statutory bond conditioned to pay a subcontractor on a public improvement the amount owed him by the principal contractor need not be signed by the latter.

Ft. Dodge Co. v Miller, 200-1169; 206 NW 141

Statutory bonds—estoppel. A surety on a bond given for the performance of a public building contract, and containing some of the conditions which the statute mandatorily prescribes for such bond,—anything in any contract to the contrary notwithstanding,—will be deemed a statutory bond, with all the statutory conditions impliedly inserted therein.

Philip Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

See Francesconi v School Dist., 204-307; 214 NW 882

Action on bond—accrual. The right of a public corporation to bring an action on a public contractor's bond conditioned to hold the municipality harmless from all loss which it may suffer in consequence of the contractor's default does not accrue until after judgment is rendered against the city and the same is paid by the city.

Waukon v Surety Co., 214-522; 242 NW 632

Construction against party using words—premium on contractor's bond. On the question whether, under a written application for a contractor's bond on a grading contract, the contractor had agreed to pay, when the contract was fully executed, an additional percentage premium on the amount received by him on "overhaul", doubts and uncertainties arising from the noncomprehensiveness of the language used will be construed most strongly against the insurer who solely drafted the application on information solely obtained by himself, without fraud on the part of the contractor.

Iowa Co. v Cram, 209-424; 228 NW 24

Bond of contractor—breach—no piecemeal recovery. Recovery on a contractor's bond may not be piecemeal, consequently that part of trial court's decree, holding its judgment is not a bar nor an adjudication of any future claim against the bond, will be stricken on appeal.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Contractor's bond—implied condition—no acceptance of hidden defects. A bond filed by a contractor, assuming the sole responsibility of constructing a water-tight dam for a city reservoir, contains the implied condition that acceptance by the city of the work will not bar recovery by the city on account of defects unknown and undiscovered at the time of acceptance.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Nonpermissible assumption of liability. A statutory bond for the performance of a public improvement contract is void insofar as it attempts to assume liability for the nonperformance of independent obligations which the statute does not contemplate, but which are voluntarily inserted into the contract; and this is true as to the surety, even tho the public authorities have on hand and undistributed, a fund arising under the contract and sufficient to discharge such nonstatutory obligations.

Monona County v O'Connor, 205-1119; 215 NW 803

Ottumwa Boiler v O'Meara, 206-577; 218 NW 920

Breach of contract to build. In an action for damages based on alleged breach of a written contract for the erection, under written specifications, of a structure (especially when it is of magnitude and complexity), general conclusion allegations by plaintiff of the use by defendant of defective materials and workmanship must, on proper motion, be accompanied and supported by fact allegations showing, with reasonable certainty, (1) wherein said material and workmanship were defective, (2) the location of the several alleged defects, and (under some circumstances) when each of said defects became manifest, and (3) the particular specification which was violated by using such material and workmanship.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 220-685; 263 NW 1

Leakage through dam—causal connection with contract violation. In an action on a contractor's bond because of leakage through a dam, a defense that no causal connection existed between the violation of the specifications and the damage, inasmuch as extreme heat and freezing as natural causes could also produce the leakage between the cement slabs, raises a fact question for the court, in the absence of a jury, to determine along with other circumstances as to whether this explanation sufficiently justifies a 12- to 18-inch separation of the concrete slabs.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

City engineer supervising construction—no abrogation of contract duty. The fact that a city had an engineer directing the construction of a dam does not relieve the contractor of his specified duty to make a water-tight dam when contractor practically concedes that, had he followed the specifications, the dam would hold water.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Damages—superior replacement construction—contractor nonliable. A contractor should not be required to pay in damages for a quality and quantity of replacement construction superior to what he originally contracted to do.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

10302 Deposit in lieu of bond.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 527

10303 Amount of bond.

Contractor's bond—implied condition—no acceptance of hidden defects. A bond filed by a contractor, assuming the sole responsibility of constructing a water-tight dam for a city reservoir, contains the implied condition that acceptance by the city of the work will not bar recovery by the city on account of defects unknown and undiscovered at the time of acceptance.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Successive actions by several beneficiaries. A recovery on a statutory bond by one beneficiary constitutes no bar to an action by another beneficiary to the extent of the unexhausted penalty of the bond.

Philip Carey Co. v Cas. Co., 201-1063; 206 NW 808; 47 ALR 495

10304 Subcontractors on public improvements.

Settlement between contractor and subcontractor—effect. In an action by a second subcontractor on a bond for the performance of a contract for a public improvement, it is no defense, as to claims properly filed and established, that the principal contractor has fully settled with the first subcontractor, especially when the principal contractor knew that plaintiff was a subcontractor.

Ryerson v Schraag, 211-558; 229 NW 733

10305 Claims for material or labor.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 64; '30 AG Op 142; '32 AG Op 167

Failure to file with proper officer—effect. The failure of a laborer or materialman on a public improvement to make a timely and proper filing of his claim with the officer designated by statute, even tho after action is brought he files his claim with the court, deprives him of all right to a judgment against the surety on the contractor's bond in case the retained percentage of the contract price is insufficient to pay his claim.

Southern Sur. v Jenner, 212-1027; 237 NW 500

Lumber for cement forms nonlienable. Lumber furnished to a contractor on a public improvement, solely for the purpose of building forms to hold cement or concrete while it is solidifying, is not lienable under the statute providing for quasi-mechanics' liens growing out of public improvements.

Melcher Co. v Robertson Co., 217-31; 250 NW 594

Quasi-mechanics' liens—nonlienable claims. Claims for meals furnished employees of a contractor on a public improvement are not lienable; likewise claims for groceries bought by an employee for his personal use.

Coon River Co-op. v McDougall Co., 215-861; 244 NW 847

Employee of materialman. One who assists a materialman in producing the material which the materialman has contracted to furnish to a county for highway purposes has no quasi-lien on, or claim to, the fund due the materialman from the county.

Nolan v Larimer, 218-599; 254 NW 45

Fatally defective petition. A petition by a subcontractor on a public improvement to establish, on public funds due his contractor, his claim for rentals of machinery leased to said contractor and used "in the construction" of said improvement, is fatally defective when it fails to allege how long or to what definite extent said machinery was used "in" said construction. Whether the leasing of machinery and the use thereof constitutes the furnishing of "services" within the meaning of the statute, quaere.

Byers Mach. v Highway Com., 214-1347; 242 NW 22

Itemized statement—sufficiency. A statement for labor employed by the week upon a public improvement is sufficiently itemized when it shows the dates between which the labor was performed; likewise a statement for labor which consists of duly indorsed weekly time checks which show the date and number of hours worked during each day, even tho the statement fails specifically to identify the building on which the work was performed.

Francesconi v Sch. Dist., 204-307; 214 NW 882

Materialman not subcontractor. A party who contracts to furnish and deliver gravel to a contractor on a public improvement, at the contractor's place of work, and at a stated price per ton, is not a subcontractor but is a materialman. It follows that demands for labor, gasoline, and oil furnished to various parties, in the execution of a part of the gravel contract which the materialman sublets, cannot be enforced against the retained percentage of the contract price in the hands of the public authorities.

Forsberg v Const. Co., 218-818; 252 NW 258

"Verified" statement as condition precedent. Failure to file a verified statement of materials or labor employed on a public improvement, as the basis of an action under §3102, C., '97 and Ch 347, 38 GA, is fatal to the validity of the claim and a mere "certification" is not a "verification".

Francesconi v School Dist., 204-307; 214 NW 882

Use of materials—burden of proof. A subcontractor on a public improvement is not entitled to have his claim established against the retained portion of the contract price due the contractor unless he establishes the fact that the materials furnished by him were actually used "in the construction" of the improvement, that is, were used in some proper way in connection with said construction work.

Rainbo Oil v McCarthy Co., 212-1186; 236 NW 46

Place of filing claims. Claims for labor or materials employed on a public improvement were properly filed with the warrant-issuing officer, as provided by Ch 347, 38 GA, even tho a prior enacted and existing statute (§3102, C., '97) provided for filing with the warrant-paying officer.

Francesconi v School Dist., 204-307; 214 NW 882

"Warrant-issuing officer" determined. (Statute now changed.)

Missouri Gravel v Surety Co., 212-1322; 237 NW 635

10306 Highway improvements.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 142; '32 AG Op 166

Primary road improvements. Under prior statutes (§3102, C., '97, and Chs. 237 and 380, 38 GA) now repealed, claims for labor or material furnished by subcontractors on primary road improvements were fileable with the county auditor.

Fuller & Hiller v Shannon, 205-104; 215 NW 611

10308 Time of filing claims.

Belated filing of claim and bringing of action. Failure of a subcontractor on a municipal improvement to file his claim and to bring his action on the bond of the principal contractor within a stated statutory time is fatal to the right to maintain such action when such timely filing and bringing of action is made a statutory condition precedent to the right to bring the action.

Zeidler Co. v Ryan & Fuller, 205-37; 215 NW 801

Belated filing of claim—belated suit—effect. A materialman who furnishes material to a contractor who is constructing a public improvement is twice barred of any right to enforce his claim against the municipality or against the surety on the contractor's bond, (1) when he files his claim after the expiration of the 30 days given him by statute, and after the municipality has fully settled with the contractor (except for a merely nominal sum), and (2) when he fails to commence action to enforce his claim until after the expiration of the six months given him by statute in which to commence such action.

Perkins Co. v School Dist., 206-1144; 221 NW 793

"Completion and final acceptance." "The completion and final acceptance" of a public improvement, within the meaning of this section, may be made by the municipality by acts other than a formal resolution.

Perkins Co. v School Dist., 206-1144; 221 NW 793

Failure to make timely filing of claim. Under a statute making the liability of a surety on a statutory bond for the performance of a public contract dependent on the filing by the claimant of a verified statement of the goods sold, within a specified time after the goods are "furnished", it is not necessarily sufficient to file such statement within the time specified by the statute, after the goods are "used" by the buyer, even tho the goods were bought under a contract providing that the buyer might return such portion as he did not use.

Queal Lbr. v Anderson, 211-210; 229 NW 707

10309 Claims filed after action brought.

Quasi-mechanics' liens—failure to file with proper officer—effect. The failure of a laborer or materialman on a public improvement to make a timely and proper filing of his claim with the officer designated by statute, even tho after action is brought he files his claim with the court, deprives him of all right to a judgment against the surety on the contractor's bond in case the retained percentage of the contract price is insufficient to pay his claim.

So. Sur. Co. v Jenner, 212-1027; 237 NW 500

10310 Payments under public contracts.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 73, 85, 86, 102, 338; '28 AG Op 312

Construction aside contract. A public drainage contractor may not recover for construction work which is neither provided for in his contract nor ordered nor approved by the board of supervisors, even tho it was ordered by the engineer in charge.

Gjellefald v Drainage Dist., 203-1144; 212 NW 691

Interest on deferred payment. Interest on long deferred payments due to a contractor may properly be ordered.

Gjellefald v Drainage Dist., 203-1144; 212 NW 691

Ten percent retention fund—loss of status. The "ten percent retention fund", which a public corporation is required to hold for at least 30 days following the completion and acceptance of a public improvement under contract, loses its statutory status immediately after the expiration of said 30 days when no claims for labor or materials have been filed.

Southern Sur. v Jenner, 212-1027; 237 NW 500

Failure to include statutory provisions. A contract let by a town for the erection of a municipal light and power plant was not void for failure to require that 10 percent of the contract price be retained to cover possible claims for labor and materials as required by statute, when the statute protects the persons furnishing labor and materials on public contracts without regard for the express provisions of the contract.

Weiss v Woodbine, 228- ; 289 NW 469

10311 Inviolability and disposition of fund.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 86, 102; '28 AG Op 312

Lien on retained percentage only. Claimants for material, labor, or services furnished in the execution of a public improvement contract can assert no claim to or lien on any part of the monthly estimates except to or on that part of the estimates which the municipality holds back as a retained percentage.

Federal Sur. v Morris Plan, 213-464; 239 NW 99

10312 Retention of unpaid funds.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 73, 85, 86, 102; '28 AG Op 312; '30 AG Op 148; '32 AG Op 166

Premature payment to contractor—effect. The fact that a municipality pays its contractor immediately after the completion and final acceptance of a public improvement becomes quite immaterial when the materialman fails to file his claim or to commence action to enforce his claim until after the time provided by statute.

Perkins Co. v School Dist., 206-1144; 221 NW 793

Failure to file claim—right of public corporation. The public corporation is under no legal obligation to retain any percentage of the contract price beyond 30 days after the completion and acceptance of the work if no claims have been filed by laborers or materialmen.

Southern Sur. v Jenner, 212-1027; 237 NW 500

10313 Optional and mandatory actions—bond to release.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 102; '28 AG Op 312; '30 AG Op 148; '32 AG Op 166

Accrual of action—contractor's bond. The right of a public corporation to bring an action on a public contractor's bond conditioned to hold the municipality harmless from all loss which it may suffer in consequence of the contractor's default does not accrue until after judgment is rendered against the city and the same is paid by the city.

Waukon v Sur. Co., 214-522; 242 NW 632

Assignment as security—effect. The second subcontractor on a public improvement may recover on the bond given by the principal contractor for the full amount of his properly filed and established claim notwithstanding the fact that he has received from the first subcontractor an assignment of the amount due the latter from the principal contractor (1) when, at the time of the assignment, the principal contractor had already honored a trade acceptance for the entire amount due to the first subcontractor, and (2) when the second subcontractor had, consequently, never received anything on his assignment.

Ryerson v Schraag, 211-558; 229 NW 733

Bond as written contract. The statute of limitation relative to unwritten contracts manifestly has no relevancy to an action for damages consequent on the breach of the statutory bond of a public contractor.

Waukon v Sur. Co., 214-522; 242 NW 632

"Completion of work". Where a statutory provision declares that action may not be brought on the bond of a contractor "after six months of the completion" of a public improvement, the improvement will be deemed completed when the contractor has substantially performed on the improvement all that he contracted to perform, has turned it over to the public authorities, and it is immaterial that controversy exists as to extras, or that trifling defects or shortcomings afterwards come to light or that the formal certificate of acceptance was delayed.

Daniels Lbr. v Ottumwa Co., 204-268; 214 NW 481

Dismissal before trial—effect. The dismissal of an action by plaintiff before trial, even tho it is an equitable action which involves the liability of a defendant city relative to various claimants for work and materials on a public improvement, deprives the court of all jurisdiction thereafter to proceed with the trial and adjudicate any right of the dismissing plaintiff, when the pleadings of the defendant are solely defensive.

Eclipse Lbr. v City, 204-278; 213 NW 804
Eclipse Lbr. v Kepler, 204-286; 213 NW 809

Belated filing of claim and bringing of action—effect. Failure of a subcontractor on a municipal improvement to file his claim and to bring his action on the bond of the principal contractor within a stated statutory time is fatal to the right to maintain such action when such timely filing and bringing of action is made a statutory condition precedent to the right to bring the action.

Zeidler Co. v Ryan, 205-37; 215 NW 801

Belated filing of claim—belated suit—effect. A materialman who furnishes material to a contractor who is constructing a public improvement is twice barred of any right to enforce his claim against the municipality or against the surety on the contractor's bond (1) when he files his claim after the expiration of the 30 days given him by statute, and after the municipality has fully settled with the contractor (except for a merely nominal sum), and (2) when he fails to commence action to enforce his claim until after the expiration of the six months given him by statute in which to commence such action.

Perkins Co. v School Dist., 206-1144; 221 NW 793

Equitable action—adjudication. The general equitable action, authorized by this section, in favor of any party interested under a public improvement contract, may be utilized for two purposes, to wit: (1) to adjudicate the rights of the various parties to the contract funds retained by the public corporation, and (2) to adjudicate the liability, to said parties, of the surety on the contractor's bond to the municipality; but a decree in such action is not an adjudication of the right of the municipality to recover on the said bond when such issue was in no manner presented in such action.

Waukon v Surety Co., 214-522; 242 NW 632

Limitation of actions. The statutory provision authorizing a public corporation to bring an action within a specified time to adjudicate the rights of claimants to the funds retained by the municipality imposes no limitation of time on the right of the municipality to proceed against the surety on the bond held by it.

Waukon v Surety Co., 214-522; 242 NW 632

Provisional and conditional order of condemnation. When the court on appeal in an action to adjudicate rights to a fund growing out of a public improvement, is in a quandary as to how far an admitted claim can be enforced against a fund belonging to a nonparty to the action, it may enter a provisional and conditional order of condemnation.

Commercial Bank v Broadhead, 212-688; 235 NW 299

Relief notwithstanding partial failure of recovery. A subcontractor on a public improvement who, in an equitable action, establishes a contract right of recovery against the principal contractor, is entitled to judgment accordingly, notwithstanding the fact that, because of his noncompliance with the statute, he is denied recovery either against the surety for the principal contractor, or against the municipality, or against the undistributed funds in the hands of the municipality.

Zeidler Co. v Ryan, 205-37; 215 NW 801

Statutory bond—subrogation of surety. A surety on a statutory bond for the performance of a public improvement contract who has performed his statutory contract at an expense which exceeds the balance on hand and due under the contract is ipso facto subrogated to the right of the principal contractor to such balance, in preference to subcontractors who hold claims which arise out of contract obligations which are not contemplated by the statute, but which were, nevertheless, inserted into the contract.

Monona County v O'Connor, 205-1119; 215 NW 803

10315 Adjudication—payment of claims.

Right to personal judgment. One who sues on and establishes his claim against a materialman for a county is entitled to a personal judgment against the materialman, even tho his prayer for a lien on the amount due the materialman from the county is denied.

Nolan v Larimer, 218-599; 254 NW 45

When interest unallowable. Interest on claims of laborers and materialmen on public improvements will not be allowed when the fund from which payment must be made is insufficient to pay the principal of all allowed claims.

Southern Sur. v Jenner, 212-1027; 237 NW 500

10318 Attorney fees.

Nonpermissible allowance by court. The allowance by the court of attorney fees to a party not contemplated by the statute is manifestly erroneous.

Teget v Drain. Ditch, 202-747; 210 NW 954

10319 Unpaid claimants—judgment on bond.

Issue of liability. In an action on a bond running to a subcontractor on a public improvement and conditioned to pay whatever amount may be found due him from the principal contractor, a stipulation for judgment signed by the said contractor and subcontractor is material and competent on the issue of the proper amount due the subcontractor.

Ft. Dodge Co. v Miller, 200-1169; 206 NW 141

10323 Public corporation—action on bond.

Acceptance of completed construction work—undiscoverable defects—recovery. In the absence of fraud or mistake, the acceptance of construction work by a city bars recovery on the contractor's bond, except as to defects undiscoverable or unknown at the time of acceptance; however, the fraud or mistake necessary to overcome the acceptance must be alleged and proven.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

Bond of contractor—breach—no piecemeal recovery. Recovery on a contractor's bond may not be piecemeal, consequently that part of trial court's decree, holding its judgment is not a bar nor an adjudication of any future claim against the bond, will be stricken on appeal.

Osceola v Gjellefald Co., 225-215; 279 NW 590

CHAPTER 453

MINER'S LIEN

10324 Nature of miner's lien.

Agreement for payment in stock—effect. A miner who, under a contract with a lessee, opens a mine, is entitled to a lien on the land of the lessor to the extent that his work has enhanced the value of the land, notwithstanding the fact that the work was done under an agreement to receive part payment in corporate stock, which was never delivered.

Tracey v Judy, 202-646; 210 NW 793

Priority. A miner who opens and works a coal mine for a lessee has a lien on the leasehold prior to a mortgage on the entire tract of land, the mortgage not assuming to cover such leasehold.

Ford v Dayton, 201-513; 207 NW 565

Priority. The lien of a miner on land for work in opening a mine thereon is superior to a mortgage given within the, lienable period on the leasehold interest to one who had full knowledge of the work already performed.

Tracey v Judy, 202-646; 210 NW 793

Extent. A miner's lien for opening and working a coal mine for a lessee whose lease covers only the coal and a necessary part of the surface, does not extend to the entire tract of land covering the mine and owned by the lessor.

Ford v Dayton, 201-513; 207 NW 565

Lien for improvements—limit. A person contracting to open a slope coal mine is entitled to a lien for the work done, not to exceed the increase in the value of the property because of the improvement, when the tipple is built, the track laid, and the coal is reached.

Hazen v Penn, 226-263; 284 NW 139

Sale—impressment of trust on proceeds. An understanding between a lienor and a lienee to the effect that personal property upon which the lienor has a lien may be sold by the lienee and the lien satisfied from the proceeds of the sale, will be enforced in equity by impressing a trust on said proceeds.

Stegemann v Bendixen, 219-1190; 260 NW 14

CHAPTER 454

COMMON CARRIER'S LIEN

10326 Lien of common carrier.

Interstate shipment—building contractor not consignee—nonliability. A common carrier's petition against a building contractor alleging transportation as a benefit received, alleging unjust enrichment and nonpayment, and seeking to collect transportation charges on an interstate shipment of building material is demurrable and fails to state a cause of action in omitting an allegation showing a contractual liability on the defendant contractor as a party to the shipping contract.

Des Moines & C. I. Ry. v Ins. Co., 224-15; 276 NW 56

CHAPTER 455

FORWARDING AND COMMISSION MERCHANT'S LIEN

10341 Nature of lien.

Belated and unexplained sale at low price—effect. A sale by a commission merchant at an extremely low price, and on a steadily falling market, and after a long and unexplained delay, may be sufficient to present a jury question on the issue of negligence.

Blanchard v Wood Co., 204-255; 214 NW 583

Failure to obey instructions. A commission merchant is excused from all liability for failure to sell goods on the terms prescribed by the principal when such failure was because of conditions over which he had no control.

Blanchard v Wood Co., 204-255; 214 NW 583

Presence or absence of directions as to sale. Factors must comply with specific directions as to time of sale. In the absence of such directions, they must sell within a reasonable time.

Alley Co. v Cream Co., 201-621; 207 NW 767

CHAPTER 456

ARTISAN'S LIEN

10344 Enforcement of lien.

Sale—impressment of trust on proceeds. An understanding between a lienor and a lienee to the effect that personal property upon which the lienor has a lien may be sold by the lienee and the lien satisfied from the proceeds of the sale, will be enforced in equity by impressing a trust on said proceeds.

Stegemann v Bendixen, 219-1190; 260 NW 14

CHAPTER 457

LIEN FOR CARE OF STOCK AND STORAGE OF MOTOR VEHICLES

10345 Nature of lien.

Bailment from unauthorized person. A garage keeper has no lien on an automobile for the storage thereof when received from one who has the wrongful possession thereof.

Lewis v Garage, 200-1051; 205 NW 983

Conditional sales contract in foreign state—priority. The lien of a garage keeper on an automobile for storage in this state is subject to the superior right of the vendor of said vehicle, or his assignee, under a conditional sales contract executed, delivered, and recorded solely in a foreign state at the place of sale, said vehicle having been removed to this state without the knowledge or consent of the vendor.

Northern Fin. v Meinhardt, 209-895; 226 NW 168

10346 Satisfaction of lien by sale.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op June 12, '39

10347 Disposal of proceeds.

Sale—impressment of trust on proceeds. An understanding between a lienor and a lienee to the effect that personal property upon which the lienor has a lien may be sold by the lienee and the lien satisfied from the proceeds of the sale, will be enforced in equity by impressing a trust on said proceeds.

Stegemann v Bendixen, 219-1190; 260 NW 14

CHAPTER 457.1

LIEN FOR SERVICES OF ANIMALS

10347.08 Sale—application of proceeds.

Sale—impressment of trust on proceeds. An understanding between a lienor and a lienee to the effect that personal property upon which the lienor has a lien may be sold by the lienee and the lien satisfied from the proceeds of the sale, will be enforced in equity by impressing a trust on said proceeds.

CHAPTER 458

HOTELKEEPER'S LIEN

10348 Definitions.

Automobile not "baggage". An automobile kept by the occupant of an apartment house in a garage adjacent to the apartment is not "baggage", within the meaning of this chapter.

Cedar R. Inv. v Hotel Co., 205-736; 218 NW 510; 56 ALR 1098

"Rooming" house defined. An apartment house is not a "rooming" house, within the meaning of this chapter.

Cedar R. Inv. v Hotel Co., 205-736; 218 NW 510; 56 ALR 1098

Lien on personal effects. An incorporated hospital in which a patient is furnished board and room, in addition to care, medicine, hospital supplies, treatment and nursing, is not entitled to a lien on personal effects left by the patient in the hospital.

Reason: A "hospital" is not a "hotel" within the meaning of the hotel lien act. [§§10347.14-10347.17, C., '39.]

Hull Hospital v Wheeler, 216-1394; 250 NW 637

10352 Disposal of proceeds—statement.

Sale—impressment of trust on proceeds. An understanding between a lienor and a lienee to the effect that personal property upon which the lienor has a lien may be sold by the lienee and the lien satisfied from the proceeds of the sale, will be enforced in equity by impressing a trust on said proceeds.

Stegemann v Bendixen, 219-1190; 260 NW 14

CHAPTER 459

RELEASE OF LIENS BY BOND

10354 Liens subject to release.

Procedure optional. The statutory right of an owner of personal property who disputes the existence of a lien thereon, to give a bond conditioned to pay the amount of any lien which may be established, and thereby secure right to possession of the property, is a procedure entirely optional with the owner.

Lewis v Garage, 200-1051; 205 NW 983

Statutory bond to discharge receiver and pay claims—effect. Where, in order to secure an order for the discharge of a receiver, the defendant in the receivership proceedings executes and delivers to a claimant in said proceedings a bond conditioned to pay said claimant whatever judgment he may obtain on his claim, it follows that the claimant's lien on the assets in the hands of the receiver is thereby transferred to the bond, and recovery may be had on said bond, for whatever judgment the claimant secures on his claim.

Shanahan v Truck Co., 209-1231; 229 NW 748

TITLE XXVII

LEGALIZING ACTS

CHAPTER 460

PUBLICATION OF PROPOSED LEGALIZING ACTS

10358 Publication prior to passage.

Discussion. See 11 ILR 390—Validity of curative legislation on judgments

Legalizing acts—self-nullification. A legislative act which purports to legalize specified municipal warrants, the legality of which is then being litigated, is completely nullified, so far as said question of legality is concerned, by the insertion in the act of a proviso that “nothing in this act shall affect any pending litigation”.

CHAPTER 462.1

EXECUTION SALES

10383.1 Failure to make proper entries.

Curative acts—omission of levying officer. The failure of an officer to indorse on an execution the procedural matter required by statute may be legalized by an act of the legislature.

DOMESTIC RELATIONS

MARRIAGE

10427 Contract.

Antenuptial agreements. See under §11990(IV)
Postnuptial agreements. See under §10447

Discussion. See 8 ILB 245—Mohammedan marriage; 13 ILR 210—State's interest in marital relation; 14 ILR 215—Presumptions in common law marriage; 16 ILR 534—Marriage by proxy; 23 ILR 75—Cohabitation necessary—common law marriage

Antenuptial agreement—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence held sufficient to show execution of antenuptial agreement precluding widow from dower share.

In re Dunn, (NOR); 224 NW 38

Evidence of marriage—heirs claiming estate. In probate proceedings by heirs claiming under the deceased spouse of intestate, the evidence was sufficient to establish the marriage between the intestate and deceased spouse, tho the trial court found that there was insufficient evidence to establish heirship and rendered judgment that the property escheat to the state as uninherited property.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Common-law requisites—known inability to contract. A common-law marriage may not exist between parties who mutually know that one of them has a legal spouse, living and undivorced.

Baldwin v Sullivan, 201-955; 204 NW 420; 208 NW 218

Common-law marriage—evidence. Evidence held insufficient to establish a common-law marriage.

Hoese v Hoese, 205-313; 217 NW 860
Reppert v Reppert, 214-17; 241 NW 487

Common-law marriage—written contract—sufficiency. A written agreement between a man and a woman "to live as husband and wife until such time that we are lawfully married" is insufficient to constitute a common-law marriage, because the writing not only furnishes a cover for illicit relation but fails to carry on its face the required element of a present intention to assume the legal relation.

State v Grimes, 215-1287; 247 NW 664

Marriage settlements—validity. A marriage settlement, duly and in good faith executed, and confirmed by the subsequent marriage of the parties, is valid against the creditors of the husband when not grossly out of proportion to the husband's station and circumstances.

Benson v Burgess, 214-1220; 243 NW 188

Marriage as consideration. Marriage is a good consideration for a contract,—one of the highest known to the law.

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Interest on antenuptial-contract allowance. A provision in an antenuptial contract that the wife shall be paid a named sum within a named time after the death of the husband contemplates interest on said sum from the maturity date, even tho said contract also provides that the widow shall be paid a monthly sum until the former main sum is paid.

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

Claim under antenuptial contract—nontransferability to equity. A simple, unsecured claim for money, filed against an estate by the surviving widow, is not, against the objections of the administrator, transferable to equity for trial. So held as to a claim due the widow under an alleged antenuptial contract.

In re Mason, 223-179; 272 NW 88

Manslaughter—marriage as inference of suppressing testimony. It is reversible error in a manslaughter case for the state to call accused's wife as a witness and, in the presence of, the jury after discovering her relationship, to elicit testimony over accused's objection thereby creating the prejudicial inference that accused's marriage was purposefully to suppress testimony.

State v Chismore, 223-957; 274 NW 3

Support and maintenance—stepchildren. The legal obligation of a father to support his minor children extends to stepchildren.

Rule v Rule, 204-1122; 216 NW 629

Construction of will—conditions and restrictions—restraint of marriage. That part of a devise to testator's widowed daughter-in-law which provides that the property shall pass to her children upon her remarriage is not void because in undue restraint of marriage.

Anderson v Crawford, 202-207; 207 NW 571; 45 ALR 1216

10428 Age.

Valid where made, valid everywhere. Generally speaking, a marriage valid where made is valid everywhere.

Boehm v Rohlf, 224-226; 276 NW 105

Foreign state—parties below age requirement. A marriage, the parents consenting thereto, in a foreign state, between two persons, one of whom has not reached the age at and above which parents may give their consent for marriage, is not void but merely voidable, and as affecting rights in Iowa such parties thereby legally reach majority.

Baldwin v Sullivan, 201-955; 204 NW 420; 208 NW 218

10445 Void marriages.

Discussion. See 17 ILR 254—"Void" and "voidable"

"Sister" contemplates "half-sister". The statute which declares void a marriage between a man and his sister's daughter, embraces a marriage between a man and his half-sister's daughter. As a consequence carnal knowledge between a man and the daughter of his half-sister constitutes incest. (§12978, C., '27.)

State v Lamb, 209-132; 227 NW 830

Temporary alimony—showing. Ample showing of marriage justifying an order for temporary alimony, suit money, and attorney fees in an action for separate maintenance, is made by proof that even the plaintiff and defendant were married at a time when plaintiff's decree of divorce from a former husband had not been entered of record, yet plaintiff and defendant for several years lived together as husband and wife after said decree had been so entered.

Conveyances by wife. See under §10050, Vol. I
Discussion. See 25 ILR 351—Larceny of spouse's property

Admissions of husband—when inadmissible against wife. In an action against a wife to subject her homestead to a judgment which had been rendered against her husband on his debt antedating the acquisition by the wife of her said homestead, admissions of the husband tending to show that he furnished the money to pay for the said homestead are not binding on, or admissible against, the wife.

Price v Scharpff, 220-125; 261 NW 511

Antenuptial contract—validity. Antenuptial contract reviewed, and held not invalid on the grounds of unfairness, unconscionableness, and non-mutuality, or because it contained an invalid provision in relation to property interest and the right to children, which in no manner affected the consideration actually received by the wife.

Kalsem v Froland, 207-994; 222 NW 3

Equitable conversion—right to reconvert—consent of spouse. The right of a legatee to make and enforce an election to take real estate in lieu of a devise of the proceeds thereof, does not depend in any degree on the consent of the spouse of such legatee.

In re Warner, 209-948; 229 NW 241

Mutual wills—husband and wife. Where wills were drawn by the same scrivener, executed by the husband and wife, at the same time and place, before the same witnesses, and each will containing reciprocal provisions, such wills, in and of themselves, establish prior agreement to execute mutual wills and no other evidence is necessary, even when wills contain no memorandum of the agreement.

Maurer v Johansson, 223-1102; 274 NW 99
Child v Smith, 225-1205; 282 NW 316

Purchase by wife who joined in mortgage—effect. A wife who joins with her husband in a mortgage on the husband's land, but who assumes no obligation, contractual or otherwise, to pay subsequently accruing taxes on the land, may, after the land has gone to tax deed to a stranger without collusion with her and while she was not in possession, purchase the land of the tax deed holder and acquire his title, viz, a fee simple indefeasible title—a title free from the lien of said mortgage.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Property rights determinable after death. Principle reaffirmed that the mutual property rights of a husband and wife may be determined after the death of one of the parties.

Melvin v Lawrence, 203-619; 213 NW 420

Torts during coverture. A wife may not maintain an action against her husband for damages consequent upon willful injuries inflicted upon her by her husband.

In re Dolmage, 203-231; 212 NW 553

Wife's separate estate—no joint adventure from husband's management. Where a wife inherits real property which is managed, as an incident to their marital relation, by her husband, his individual purchase of livestock in connection with such management and executing his individual promissory note therefor will not make the wife liable thereon as a joint adventure.

Valley Bank v Staves, 224-1197; 278 NW 346

Wife's homestead not liable for husband's debt. A judgment against a husband is not enforceable against a homestead acquired by his wife in her own name—even tho so acquired long after the inception of the debt on which said judgment was rendered—on proof that the husband, while perfectly solvent, and with no fraudulent intent, and without expressly or impliedly acquiring any interest in the land, voluntarily permitted a portion of his own assets to be applied on the debt of the wife for her said homestead.

Price v Scharpff, 220-125; 261 NW 511

Written contract not signed by wife. Where a husband and wife had an oral agreement for the sale of farm personalty in which they had a joint interest, and a written contract, specifying manner of disposition of proceeds of sale, which was signed by the husband but not by wife, she was not bound by written contract.

I TRANSACTIONS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 15 ILR 481—Insurable interest

Accounting against bank—husband as wife's agent. In an action by a wife against a bank challenging her husband's speculations and transactions in her behalf and for an accounting as to funds and securities where the wife having (1) permitted, acquiesced in, and cooperated with her husband in managing her business with the bank for a period of years, (2) kept a personal record showing she had knowledge of many challenged transactions (proved through ultra violet ray photography of obliterated items), (3) reported income tax on other challenged transactions, (4) a bank account in her own name showing profits from other challenged transactions, (5) been a woman personally familiar with business and speculative dealings, and (6) made a settlement with the bank after ample consideration and acting upon the advice of friends skilled in the business of securities, cannot thereafter claim that the bank could not rely upon her husband's apparent general agency, nor that his dealings with the bank involving her securities and obligations arising therefrom were not the joint operations of herself and husband, nor that a settlement thereof she thereafter made with the bank resulted from the bank's concealment and duress.

Clark v Iowa-D. M. Bank, 223-1176; 274 NW 919

Action for partition. A husband may not maintain an action to partition lands of which his wife holds the legal title, and in which he has no interest except the contingent interest of a husband.

Jones v Park, 220-903; 262 NW 801

Antenuptial contract—insufficiency. A written instrument purporting to be an antenuptial contract waiving all interest which each of the contracting parties would have after marriage in the property of the other, but shown to have been actually signed after marriage, will not bar such property interest when the instrument neither recites (1) that it was executed for the purpose of furnishing evidence of a previous antenuptial oral contract nor (2) that it was executed in consideration of a previous oral antenuptial contract.

Battin v Bank, 202-976; 208 NW 343

Claims—peculiar circumstances excusing service of notice of hearing. Altho claimant is executor's wife, peculiar circumstances excusing a claimant's failure to serve notice of hearing may be found in evidence showing that the claim was filed within six months from executor's appointment, that executor told claimant he had knowledge of the matters upon which the claim was based, and that it would be unnecessary to serve notice. Suspicious circumstances surrounding the claim are to be considered in the trial of the claim on its merits.

In re Hill, 225-527; 281 NW 500

Marriage settlements. The parties to an antenuptial contract which simply and generally provides that the wife shall, on the death of the husband, "be paid" a named sum by the latter's personal representative, will not be deemed to have intended that in the settlement of the estate of the husband, the said sum to be paid the wife should have priority over third and fourth class claims. (Holding based on the intent of the parties as reflected in the contract and surrounding circumstances.)

In re Shepherd, 220-12; 261 NW 35

I TRANSACTIONS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE IN GENERAL—concluded

Deed and agreement creating trust. Where a husband conveyed his separate property to wife pursuant to an agreement providing that upon her death property was to go to a granddaughter either by will or deed, and where, after consummation of this transaction, the husband tore up the original copy of the agreement and executed an absolute conveyance of the same property to his wife, held, that the original deed and agreement, which were simultaneously executed, must be construed as one instrument, and that an irrevocable trust was created in favor of the granddaughter since no power of revocation was expressly reserved.

Young v Young-Wishard, 227-431; 288 NW 420

Mutual wills not prohibited contract. Mutual reciprocal wills, drawn pursuant to a compact between husband and wife, do not violate the statute prohibiting agreements affecting the right which, by reason of the marriage relation, one party has in the property of the other.

Maloney v Rose, 224-1071; 277 NW 572

Wife's claim for services—public policy. When necessarily including compensation for purely domestic duties, a wife's claim against the estate of her deceased, divorced husband, furnishes in itself sufficient ground for denying it, under the rule that agreements that a wife be compensated for the performance of obligations incident to the marital relation violate public policy and are void.

In re Straka, 224-109; 275 NW 490

Mutual wills enforced as contract. Clear and satisfactory evidence that husband and wife entered into a mutual contract, and in accordance therewith executed mutual and reciprocal wills providing for the disposition of all their property to each other and to certain named beneficiaries upon the death of survivor, entitles beneficiaries to specific performance thereof and to restrain probating of another will, executed by husband after the wife's death, making provision contrary thereto.

Child v Smith, 225-1205; 282 NW 316

Taxes—nonduty of wife to pay. A wife who, for the purpose of releasing her distributive share, joins with her husband in a mortgage of the husband's lands is not bound by the husband's covenants or legal obligation to pay future accruing taxes on the land.

Wood v Schwartz, 212-462; 236 NW 491

Transactions concerning separate property. Where a husband conveyed his separate property to wife pursuant to agreement providing that, upon her death, property was to go to granddaughter either by will or proper deed of conveyance, such an agreement was not a contract dealing primarily with the inchoate right of dower of the wife and therefore was not void under statute providing that a husband or wife has no interest in the property owned by the other which can be the subject of contract between them, since that statute prohibits only such transactions when they relate directly to dower rights.

Young v Young-Wishard, 227-431; 288 NW 420

II SEPARATION AGREEMENTS

Division of property pending divorce. An agreement for a division of property between husband and wife pending contemplated divorce proceedings is enforceable.

Castelline v Pray, 200-695; 205 NW 339

Property-settlement contract. A defendant sued by his former wife on a property-settlement contract, fully performed by her, avails himself nothing in the way of a defense by nakedly alleging fraud by the wife in obtaining the contract when such allegation is made neither as a basis for a rescission of the contract nor for damages.

Poole v Poole, 219-70; 257 NW 305

Property settlement action nontransferable in toto. An action brought on a contract (e.g., a property settlement between husband and wife), and properly brought at law, is not rendered transferable in toto to the equity calendar by defendant's plea of fraud and prayer for a judicial rescission of the contract. Said alleged fraud, if established in the law action, constitutes a complete defense, and remaining equitable issues are properly transferred to and disposed of in equity. Failure, in the law action, to establish said alleged fraud, necessarily removes from the case said equitable issue of rescission.

Poole v Poole, 221-1073; 265 NW 653

III OWNER'S LIABILITY FOR SPOUSE'S DEBTS

Discussion. See 18 ILR 30—Torts of wife

Estoppel in favor of creditors or trustee in bankruptcy. A husband who, in the sale of his land, permits a note and mortgage to be given on the land to his wife for one-third of the deferred payments, and later mutually rescinds the sale with the vendee, and causes the mortgage to be released and accepts a reconveyance of the land, is estopped, as against the wife's creditors or trustee in bankruptcy, to dispute the lien and full validity of said note and mortgage, when, with the knowledge of the husband, and without objection by him, the creditors extended credit to the wife in reliance on her supposed ownership of the note and mortgage.

Browning v Kanno, 202-465; 210 NW 596

Signature of spouse to mortgage only—effect. The defeasance clause in a real estate mortgage on the lands of a husband, to the effect that the mortgage shall be void if the signers shall "pay or cause to be paid" the secured notes, does not, in and of itself, impose personal liability on the wife who is one of the signers to the mortgage.

Fairfax Bank v Coligan, 211-670; 234 NW 537

Wife's separate estate—surety on mortgage. Where a married woman without any consideration therefor mortgages her separate property to secure the separate debt of the husband, he is the principal and she is a surety as to such indebtedness.

Clindinin v Graham, 224-142; 275 NW 475

10448 Remedy by one against the other.

Action by wife against the husband. See under §10461 (II)

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op Jan. 24, '39

Accounting—evidence—insufficiency. A husband will not be compelled to account to his wife for the amount of certificates of deposit discovered by the wife in the common safety-deposit box of the husband and wife and payable to the wife, when there is no evidence of the source of the money represented by the certificates and no evidence of what became of the certificates.

Junger v Bank, 208-336; 223 NW 381

Converted bank account. A husband must account to his wife for the proceeds of a bank deposit personally made by her in her own name, and of her own funds, but credited on the books of the bank to the husband and converted by him to his own use without the consent of the wife.

Junger v Bank, 208-336; 223 NW 381

Joint securities deposit—settlement. Where securities are deposited with a bank by husband and wife as joint principals, a settlement thereon can be made by the joint cooperation of the principals or by one as authorized legal representative of both.

Clark v Bank, 223-1176; 274 NW 919

Tort action by one against other. The rule of the common law that neither the husband nor wife may maintain an action against the other for damages consequent on the negligent or willful injuring of one by the other, is the law of this state,—not having been abrogated by anything contained in §10991-d1, C., '35. [§10991.1, C., '39].

Aldrich v Tracy, 222-84; 269 NW 30

When wife not creditor. A wife does not, against her husband's creditors, become the creditor of her husband by turning over to him her money for indiscriminate use in the family, and without any agreement for or expectation of repayment.

ANALYSIS

I CONTRACTS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE II TRANSFERS OF PROPERTY BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE

Antenuptial agreements. See under §§10427, 11285 (III), 11990 (IV)
Fiduciary relations, fraudulent transactions. See under §11815

I CONTRACTS BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE

Deeds to children delivered to trustee—wife acquiescing. An agreement reached by a husband and wife, that he should deed his property to her and she would deed it to the children, the deeds to be placed with a trustee, who was to record the first deed on the death of the husband and then record the second deeds on the death of the wife, is binding on the wife, when she is present at the execution of the deeds and, by her silence, acquiesces in the instructions given by the husband to the trustee.

Bohle v Brooks, 225-980; 282 NW 351

Resulting trust—payment by wife and title in husband.

State Bank v Nolan, 201-722; 207 NW 745

Fraud—remedies of creditors—burden of proof. A creditor, seeking to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance which recites a consideration which is apparently valid and substantial tho indefinite in amount, must carry his proof beyond showing that the grantor and grantee were husband and wife and that the grantor was insolvent when he delivered the conveyance. In other words, such proof does not cast upon grantee the burden, (1) to sustain the adequacy of the consideration, and (2) to negative bad faith in the transaction, or (3) to show that the grantor at the time retained sufficient other property to pay his creditors.

First N. Bank v Currier, 218-1041; 256 NW 734

Transfers and transactions invalid—bona fide conveyance to wife. A conveyance by a husband to his wife, for the sole purpose of paying a bona fide indebtedness long owing by the husband to the wife, is unimpeachable, even tho the creditors of the husband are thereby hindered or perhaps wholly prevented from collecting their claims, it appearing that the value of the land was less than the debt due the wife.

Andrew v Martin, 218-19; 254 NW 67

Transfers and transactions invalid—right of wife—burden of proof. A wife as a bona fide creditor of her husband has the legal right to take from her husband a conveyance of all his real and personal property provided she is actuated by the sole purpose of obtaining payment of her claim. And if the property received is out of proportion to the debt, the party questioning the conveyance has the burden so to show.

Farmers Bank v Ringgenberg, 218-86; 253 NW 826

II TRANSFERS OF PROPERTY BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE

Alimony—property settlement under trust agreement. A property settlement under an irrevocable trust agreement made by husband and wife previous to and confirmed in divorce decree discharged husband's obligation for further support and precluded right to further alimony.

Fitch v Com. of Internal Rev., 103 F 2d, 702

Equitable estoppel—unrecorded conveyance—pleader's burden. One alleging an equitable estoppel must prove it by clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence, hence in asserting in a fraudulent conveyance action, an equitable estoppel against the wife of a bank stockholder, because she withheld from record, for many years, a deed to herself from her husband, the creditors of the bank have not sustained the burden of proving estoppel when they admit that they did not deposit their money on the wife's representation, nor upon their belief, in the husband's ownership of the land.

Bates v Kleve, 225-255; 280 NW 501

Estoppel to dispute husband's title. A wife who permits her husband to take and record title to her lands, and for a long series of years, to exercise the usual and customary indicia of ownership, is estopped to assert her title against the claims of the husband's creditors who have extended credit to him in reliance on his apparent title.

Farmers Bank v Pugh, 204-580; 215 NW 652

Fiduciary relation between husband and wife. Whether in an action by an heir to set aside a conveyance by a wife to her husband on the ground of undue influence the burden of disproof of said ground shifts to the defendant-husband, quaere.

Browne v Johnson, 218-498; 255 NW 862

Fiduciary relation between husband and wife. A fiduciary relation within the meaning of the law is not established by a showing that the parties were husband and wife and that the wife frequently aided her husband in the transaction of his business, it appearing that the husband was physically infirm.

Arndt v Lapel, 214-594; 243 NW 605

Fraud—validity of transfer. A wife who has a bona fide claim against her husband may, when actuated by the sole and good-faith purpose of obtaining payment, take a non-excessive conveyance of property from her husband, even tho she knows at the time that the husband is financially embarrassed and that he intends by the conveyance to circumvent another of his creditors.

Clark v Clark, 209-1179; 229 NW 816

Sustaining constructively fraudulent deed. A deed from a husband to his wife, constructively fraudulent as to an existing creditor because it left the husband insolvent, will, nevertheless, be sustained as superior in right to that of the creditor, to the extent of the valuable consideration admittedly paid by the wife for the land, when the creditor fails to establish some active fraud on the part of the wife.

Malcolm Bank v Mehlin, 200-970; 205 NW 788

Homestead character of property—evidence. Evidence held to show that the property in question was, at the time of a conveyance by a husband to his wife, the homestead of the grantor and grantee, and therefore not fraudulent as to creditors.

Hansen v Richter, 208-179; 225 NW 361

Nonestoppel against wife. One who purchases a promissory note without any consultation whatever with the maker or the maker's wife, may not successfully assert that the wife is estopped to lay claim to lands which stood in the name of the husband-maker at the time of said purchase.

Jordan v Sharp, 204-11; 214 NW 572

"One dollar and other valuable consideration"—sufficiency. A deed from husband to wife, executed two years prior to the rendition of a judgment against the husband and which deed recites a consideration of "one dollar and other valuable consideration", is not fraudulent as against such judgment creditor of the grantor-husband, when it is shown that the "other consideration" consisted of $3,000 actually paid by the wife.

Donovan v White, 224-138; 275 NW 889

Personal liability of grantee. A wife who, knowing that her husband intended to hinder and delay his creditors, accepts a voluntary transfer of his bank deposit is, nevertheless, not personally liable to the husband's subsequently appointed trustee in bankruptcy for that part of the deposit which is expended prior to the bankruptcy proceedings in carrying on in good faith the ordinary business of the husband.

Barks v Kleyne, 201-308; 207 NW 329

Preference to wife—insolvency of husband. A conveyance of land by a husband to his wife for the sole purpose on his part of repaying, and for the sole purpose on her part of receiving, that which he is actually owing to her, (no question of adequacy of consideration being raised) is unassailable, even tho such conveyance works a direct preference in favor of the wife over other creditors of the husband; and especially is this true when the party attacking the conveyance fails to plead and prove that the conveyance left the husband insolvent.

Bartlett v Webber, 218-632; 252 NW 892

Allowable preference to wife. A wife who permits her husband to use her personal funds in payment for land purchased by him in his own name, and so permits under circumstances fairly justifying the inference that said use was as a loan and not as a gift, may thereafter (some 20 years in present case), validly take from the husband a conveyance of said land at a fair valuation and for the sole and only purpose of satisfying said loan; and this is true tho such conveyance works a preference in her favor over other creditors of the husband. (No issue of estoppel in the case.)

Bates v Maiers, 223-183; 272 NW 444

Voluntary, nonfraudulent conveyance. Altho wholly voluntary, a conveyance executed when the grantor has no fraudulent intent cannot be impeached by a subsequent creditor, so a real estate conveyance by a husband to his wife many years before he becomes a bank stockholder cannot be invalidated by the creditors of the bank, seeking to collect a judgment on stock liability assessment.

Bates v Kleve, 225-255; 280 NW 501

Wife as noncreditor. A husband who takes title to land paid for by the wife without any agreement to repay the wife, may not later by a conveyance to the wife validly prefer the wife over his creditors on the theory that the wife was a creditor.

Farmers Bank v Pugh, 204-580; 215 NW 652
See Harris v Carlson, 201-169; 205 NW 202

Right of wife—burden of proof. A wife as a bona fide creditor of her husband has the legal right to take from her husband a conveyance of all his real and personal property provided she is actuated by the sole purpose of obtaining payment of her claim. And if the property received is out of proportion to the debt, the party questioning the conveyance has the burden to so show.

Farmers Bank v Ringgenberg, 218-86; 253 NW 826

Right of wife to take conveyance solely to protect herself.

Harris v Carlson, 201-169; 205 NW 202
Johnson v Warrington, 213-1216; 240 NW 668

Right to prefer. A conveyance by a husband to his wife, executed and received for the sole purpose of paying an actual bona fide debt of the husband to the wife, is beyond the reach of other creditors provided the property conveyed is not substantially in excess of the debt.

Johnson v Warrington, 213-1216; 240 NW 668

Securing wife against loss on homestead mortgage. A bona fide conveyance of personal property by a husband to his wife, to secure her from liability on a mortgage on her homestead, executed for the purpose of raising money to discharge a debt of the husband's, is prior in right to subsequently rendered judgments against the husband and levies thereunder on the said conveyed property; but the security will be sustained only insofar as will make the wife whole.

Sherman v Linderson, 204-532; 215 NW 501

Secret, unrecorded deed—estoppel. A wife who, even without fraudulent intent, receives from her husband a secret, voluntary conveyance of land, and withholds the deed from record for many years, and allows her husband publicly to treat, manage, and control the land as his own and to obtain credit on the strength of such apparent ownership, thereby estops herself from asserting her ownership against said creditors.

Meltzer v Shafer, 215-785; 244 NW 851

Setting aside—limitation of actions—laches. A suit in equity by trustee in bankruptcy to set aside deed by bankrupt to husband on grounds of want of consideration, fraud, and failure to take possession of land, brought more than 6 years after recording of deed, is barred by laches under statute of limitations where only one creditor secured allowance of claim, which claim was based on note past due when deed was recorded.

Monroe v Ordway, 103 F 2d, 813

Tenancy—termination—unavailable defense. A tenant who has agreed that his tenancy may be terminated in case the landlord sells the property may not predicate a defense to such termination on the fact that the landlord (concededly in good faith) actually conveyed a part of the land to his wife, solely in consideration of the wife's agreement to sign a conveyance of the remaining part of the land.

Luse v Elliott, 204-378; 213 NW 410

Transfers and transactions invalid. Record reviewed and held that a deed from a husband to his wife was executed for the sole purpose of repaying the wife a bona fide indebtedness, and was without any intent to defraud the husband's creditors.

Farmers Bk. v Skiles, 220-462; 261 NW 643

Nonimpeachable transfer to wife. A non-excessive conveyance by a husband to his wife in satisfaction of an actual and good faith indebtedness owing by him to her is unimpeachable when in taking the conveyance the wife is motivated by the sole purpose of obtaining payment of her claim; and this is true irrespective of her knowledge of the financial condition of her husband.

Steffy v Schultz, 215-837; 246 NW 910

Wife's separate estate—surety on mortgage. Where a married woman without any consideration therefor mortgages her separate property to secure the separate debt of the husband, he is the principal and she is a surety as to such indebtedness.

Clindinin v Graham, 224-142; 275 NW 475

Withholding from record—effect. The non-fraudulent act of a wife in withholding from record a deed of land from the husband will not estop her from disputing the title of the husband, when she did not know or have reason to know that anyone would be extending credit to the husband in reliance on his supposed title.

10450 Attorney in fact.

Accounting against bank—husband as wife's agent—evidence. In an action by a wife against a bank challenging her husband's speculations and transactions in her behalf and for an accounting as to funds and securities where the wife having (1) permitted, acquiesced in, and cooperated with her husband in managing her business with the bank for a period of years, (2) kept a personal record showing she had knowledge of many challenged transactions (proved through ultra violet ray photography of obliterated items), (3) reported income tax on other challenged transactions, (4) a bank account in her own name showing profits from other challenged transactions, (5) been a woman personally familiar with business and speculative dealings, and (6) made a settlement with the bank after ample consideration and acting upon the advice of friends skilled in the business of securities, cannot thereafter claim that the bank could not rely upon her husband's apparent general agency, nor that his dealings with the bank involving her securities and obligations arising therefrom were not the joint operations of herself and husband, nor that a settlement thereof she thereafter made with the bank resulted from the bank's concealment and duress.

Clark v Bank, 223-1176; 274 NW 919

Custom as evidence. Testimony tending to show a custom by a husband to sign the name of his wife to promissory notes, with her express or implied knowledge and approval, extending continuously through many years prior to the transaction in question, is admissible on the issue whether the husband had such authority from his wife.

State Bk. v Fairholm, 201-1094; 206 NW 143

Evidence of agency. Prima facie proof of agency of a husband for his wife is shown by evidence that the husband had, in a transaction in question, always acted for his wife, both in her presence and in her absence, and that the wife had never denied or repudiated the right of the husband so to act.

Herron v Temple, 198-1259; 200 NW 917

Dealings—trust officer's brokerage account—husband pledging wife's securities. Where a husband having a general agency, acquiesced in and ratified by the wife, to transact the wife's business, has a key to her bank deposit box, and personally removes certain securities therefrom which he pledges as collateral for a brokerage account in the name of the bank's assistant trust officer, of which transaction the wife receives knowledge, the fact that the brokerage account is in the name of such trust officer will not impose liability on the bank for a breach of a fiduciary relation, because, the husband having authority to pledge the stock, the account for which he pledged it would not matter.

Clark v Bank, 223-1176; 274 NW 919

Joint securities deposit—settlement—manner. Where securities are deposited with a bank by husband and wife as joint principals, a settlement thereon can be made by the joint cooperation of the principals or by one as authorized legal representative of both.

10459 Family expenses.ANALYSIS

- I NATURE OF THE OBLIGATION FOR FAMILY EXPENSES
- II WHAT CONSTITUTES FAMILY EXPENSES
- III DUTY TO SUPPORT MINOR CHILDREN

Action by one parent against the other for contribution. See under §10448, Vol I
Minors' contracts. See under §10493

I NATURE OF THE OBLIGATION FOR FAMILY EXPENSES

Liabilities enforceable against. A homestead is exempt from execution on a judgment for a family expense contracted after the acquisition of the homestead. In other words, the statutory declaration that a homestead is exempt from judicial sale "where there is no special declaration of statute to the contrary" (§10150, C., '27) has no reference whatever to the statutory declaration that a family expense is "chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife".

Dorsey v Bentzinger, 209-883; 226 NW 52

Living with and caring for parents at their request—nongratuitous services—allowable probate claim upheld on appeal. Reciprocal services rendered by and between members of a family are presumed to be gratuitous, yet, the court, a jury being waived, may find that a married daughter, who with her family, returns to the home of her aged parents at their request to care for them, for which she expected to receive and the parents expected to pay remuneration, did not re-establish a family relationship with her parents so as to raise the presumption of gratuitous services. Such finding will be binding on the appellate court.

Clark v Krogh, 225-479; 280 NW 635

Services by child—presumption. Principle reaffirmed that services rendered by a member of a family are presumptively gratuitous.

Howell v Howell, 211-70; 232 NW 816

II WHAT CONSTITUTES FAMILY EXPENSES

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to present jury questions on the issues of the delivery of certain articles of family expense and the liability of the husband therefor.

Yunker Bros. v Meredith, 217-1130; 253 NW 58

Leases—execution by husband only—liability of wife. A wife is not liable on a written lease signed by the husband alone as lessee, tho the leased premises be occupied by the husband and wife as a family residence.

Whether the wife be liable for the rent as a family expense under this section is a quite different question—a question which cannot be deemed before the court in landlord's attachment proceedings manifestly based solely on the lease signed by the husband alone.

Rogers v Davis, 223-373; 272 NW 539

III DUTY TO SUPPORT MINOR CHILDREN

Divorce—liability of parent. The father of a minor child is liable for necessary medical and hospital services rendered without his knowledge to the child in an emergency even tho the mother has obtained a divorce and the custody of said child, and has been paid the decreed alimony.

Stech v Holmes, 210-1136; 230 NW 326

Hensen v Hensen, 212-1226; 238 NW 83

Stepchildren. The legal obligation of a stepfather to support his minor children extends to stepchildren.

Rule v Rule, 204-1122; 216 NW 629

Support and education of child. Principle recognized that, ordinarily, a parent is not entitled to compensation for the support of his child when the parent has sufficient means of his own.

In re Nolan, 216-903; 249 NW 648

10460 Custody of children.

Alienation of affections. A mother may not maintain an action for damages for the alienation of the affection for her of her minor son, in the absence of an allegation that she has thereby been deprived of the custody and services of said minor.

Pyle v Waechter, 202-695; 210 NW 926; 49 A.L.R. 557

Award of custody of child ordinarily not disturbed. In deciding the custody of child so much depends on appearance and demeanor of the parties, witnesses, trial court's discretion, and child's welfare as disclosed by his appearance and affections, that supreme court is not ordinarily justified in disturbing trial court's finding.

Ellison v Platts, 226-1211; 286 NW 413

Best interest of child. The paramount consideration in determining the custody of a child is the best interest of the child.

Ellison v Platts, 226-1211; 286 NW 413

Modification of order of custody—considerations. In an action for the modification of an order for the custody of a 10-year-old child, where the affection and care received in the homes of each of the divorced parents was satisfactory, the wishes of the child cannot have great weight, the controlling consideration being the welfare of the child, and, when there was no change in circumstances to require the action of the court, a previous adjudication that the child remain with his mother should not be modified.

Vierck v Everson, 228- ; 291 NW 865

Custody of child. Evidence held not to warrant disturbing trial court's decree in habeas corpus denying mother custody of her 20-months-old child when child had been in custody of mother's aunt and uncle with whom child had resided and been cared for since her birth out of wedlock.

Ellison v Platts, 226-1211; 286 NW 413

Proceeding for child custody treated as equitable action. Habeas corpus actions involving the custody of minor children treated as equitable proceeding.

Ellison v Platts, 226-1211; 286 NW 413

Controlling considerations. The fact that one custody of a child may offer larger financial and educational advantages than another custody, is not necessarily a controlling consideration on the issue of the child's best welfare.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Death of custodial mother—revival of paternal rights—conditions. Assuming that the death of a mother (to whom the custody of her infant child had been judicially awarded) revives the custodial rights of the father, yet he must assert such rights with a promptness commensurate with the helplessness of the child, or he will be deemed to have forfeited and waived them, and will not, thereafter, be permitted to challenge the rights of another custodian except on the grounds of unfitness.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Dying request—materiality. Evidence of the dying request of a mother as to the future custody of her infant child is highly material on the issue of such custody.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Guardian—invalid appointment as to parent. The right of a fit and proper father to the custody of his minor child whom he has never abandoned, and whose custody he has neither forfeited nor waived, is in no manner affected by orders of court (1) appointing, without notice to said parent, the maternal grandfather as guardian of said child, and (2) authorizing said guardian to proceed and adopt said child; especially is this true when the petition by the mother for the appointment of the grandfather was not filed until after the appointment was made.

In re McFarland, 214-417; 239 NW 702

Illegitimate child. The mother of an illegitimate child is entitled to its custody, service, and earnings.

Pitzenberger v Schnack, 215-466; 245 NW 713

Loss of right. The mother of an illegitimate child, who has for a long series of years evinced but a very casual interest in the child, may not successfully urge her right to the custody of the child, against fit and proper parties who have nurtured, cared for, and educated the child, from birth, even tho they have been paid compensation by parties other than the mother, it appearing that it would not be to the best interest of the child to decree custody to the mother.

Barry v Reeves, 203-1345; 214 NW 519

Pre-eminent right of child. The moral and legal right of a father to the custody of his motherless child must yield to a custodial order which is best for the child.

Werling v Heggen, 208-908; 225 NW 952

Presumptive right. A father is necessarily given the custody of his motherless child when he has neither abandoned the child, nor surrendered his right to the custody of the child, and when there is no showing that the welfare of the child requires its custody to be awarded to another.

ANALYSIS

I RIGHT TO PERSONAL EARNINGS OF WIFE II ACTIONS BY WIFE AGAINST HUSBAND

I RIGHT TO PERSONAL EARNINGS OF WIFE

Wife as employee of husband. A husband who is the sole owner of a printing plant may validly employ his wife as a linotype and press operator in said plant and the wife may legally accept such employment and collect therefor, because such services are wholly outside of, and foreign to, the usual and ordinary marital duties of a wife. It follows that the wife is entitled to compensation under the workmen's compensation act for injuries arising out of and in the course of said employment.

Reid v Reid, 216-882; 249 NW 387

II ACTIONS BY WIFE AGAINST HUSBAND

Action by one spouse against the other. See under §10448

Contribution between husband and wife. Husband cannot secure contribution from divorced wife for payment of notes signed by both and paid by husband when wife signed as surety only.

Hall v Brownlee, (NOR); 216 NW 953

10462 Action for personal injuries—elements of recovery. (Repealed.)

Separate occupations — decreased earning capacity—damages.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

Torts during coverture. A wife may not maintain an action against her husband for damages consequent upon willful injuries inflicted upon her by her husband.

In re Dolmage, 203-231; 212 NW 553

10463 Action by administrator—elements of recovery. (Repealed.)

Excessive verdict—wrongful death of wife. In an action for the wrongfully caused death of a wife, the statutory power to allow "such sum as the jury may deem proportionate to the injury" is not an unbridled discretion. Evidence reviewed and held that a verdict of $10,000 was excessive to the extent of $4,000. The deceased was childless and illiterate, had accumulated no property, was a beet weeder for a small part of the year at small wages, and also operated a boarding house, but whether at a profit did not appear.

Hanna v Electric Co., 210-864; 232 NW 421

Judgment of jurors. Jurors must necessarily rely on their own fair and unbiased judgment.

ment as to the amount of damages recoverable for pain and suffering and for disability as a wife and homemaker.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

Separate occupations—double recovery (?). Whether a married woman and a mother who has an independent occupation and who also occupies a home with her family may recover in both capacities for loss of the same time and for services at the same time, quare. Record held to show no double recovery in instant case.

Rulison v X-ray Corp., 207-895; 223 NW 745

10464 Exemplary damages—maximum recovery. (Repealed.)

Instructions inviting excess recovery. Instructions allowing the jury to return damages in excess of statutory limitation are harmless when the jury returns a verdict for less than the statutory limit.

Siesseger v Puth, 211-775; 234 NW 540

10465 Liability for separate debts.

Court findings—when conclusive. A finding by the trial court on supporting testimony that a wife signed both the note and mortgage of her husband solely for the purpose of waiving her dower interest, and received no actual consideration herself, is conclusive on the appellate court.

Bates v Green, 219-136; 257 NW 198

Liability of wife on husband's note. A wife, after signing promissory notes which represent the husband's indebtedness only, may not avoid personal liability on the ground of absence of consideration flowing to her when it appears that the notes were so signed on demand of the payee and as a condition precedent to the granting by payee of an extension of time of payment.

First N. Bank v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

Liability—wife signing husband's note. A wife who signs the note and mortgage of her husband cannot escape personal liability thereon on the ground of want of consideration as to her—because she signed simply to release her dower interest—when, without her signature, the husband would be unable to obtain the loan.

First Tr. JSL Bank v Diercks, 222-534; 267 NW 708

Signing husband's promissory note—consideration. Even tho a wife signed a promissory note solely because her husband asked her to do so, and even tho she received no benefit whatever for so signing, nevertheless she is personally liable on the note if it appears that the payee would not, without her signature, have advanced the money for the husband.

Hakes v Franke, 210-1169; 231 NW 1

Signing mortgage to release dower—effect. Principle recognized that a wife who is an entire stranger to her husband's note and mortgage, except to sign the same solely for the purpose of releasing her possible dower interest, is not personally liable thereon.

First B. & T. Co. v Welch, 219-318; 258 NW 96

Wife signing husband's notes—unallowable defense. Assuming that a wife was advised, when she signed promissory notes evidencing the husband's sole indebtedness that her signature would have no other effect than to release her dower interest in the husband's land (which was embraced in the accompanying mortgage which she signed) constitutes no defense to personal judgment against her on the notes when there is no issue or proof of fraud or conditional delivery, no prayer for reformation or proof supporting such prayer, and when the notes are wholly bare of any reference to dower interest.

First N. Bank v Mether, 217-695; 251 NW 505

Wife's deed for husband's debt—cancellation—consideration—estoppel. Wife who was not illiterate, and who deeded her land in payment of husband's notes, and who, by placing deed in husband's hands, clothed him with apparent authority to deliver the deed, thereby inducing creditors to surrender other land owned by the husband, is estopped from questioning the validity of the deed. The consideration to wife was advantage to husband and detriment to creditors.

Allen v Hume, 227-1224; 290 NW 687

Signing to release dower. A promissory note and mortgage for the pre-existing debt of a husband are without consideration as to the wife who signs the same for the sole purpose of releasing her dower interest.

Gorman v Sampica, 202-802; 211 NW 429

Signing note to release dower. A wife is not personally liable to the original payee of a promissory note which grew out of her husband's real estate transaction to which she was an entire stranger, except that she signed said note (and mortgage) for the sole and only purpose of releasing her possible dower interest.

Jones v Wilson, 219-324; 258 NW 82

Transfers and transactions invalid—wife's suretyship for husband—effect in husband's bankruptcy. Where land owned jointly by husband and wife is mortgaged and the wife signs the note and mortgage on her separate interest to secure the loan to the husband who received and used the loan for his own personal debts and later conveyed his one-half interest in the land to his wife, then, in an action by the husband's trustee in bankruptcy to set aside the conveyance as in fraud of creditors, the wife, as surety, is entitled to have the husband's interest in the land applied first to the satisfaction of the mortgage debt in preference to the claims of the trustee in bankruptcy, and the conveyance accomplishing her subrogation thereto was valid.

Clindinin v Graham, 224-142; 275 NW 475

Wife's separate estate—no joint adventure from husband's management. Where a wife inherits real property which is managed, as an incident to their marital relation, by her husband, his individual purchase of livestock in connection with such management and executing his individual promissory note therefor will not make the wife liable thereon as a joint adventure.

Valley Bank v Staves, 224-1197; 278 NW 346

Wife's separate estate—surety on mortgage. Where a married woman without any consideration therefor mortgages her separate property to secure the separate debt of the husband, he is the principal and she is a surety as to such indebtedness.

Clindinin v Graham, 224-142; 275 NW 475

10466 Contracts of wife.

See under §10465

10467 Husband not liable for wife's torts.

Coercion of wife in crime. See under §12895

Coercion of wife by husband. No presumption exists that a wife who commits a crime in the presence of her husband does so under the coercion of the husband.

State v Renslow, 211-642; 230 NW 316; 71 ALR 1111

Crimes—presumption of coercion. The presumption that the participation of a wife, in the presence of her husband, in the commission of a crime is the result of the coercion of the husband applies only when the wife is in the near presence of her husband.

State v Kuhlman, 206-622; 220 NW 118

Tort action by one against other. The rule of the common law that neither the husband nor wife may maintain an action against the other for damages, consequent on the negligent or willful injuring of one by the other, is the law of this state,—not having been abrogated by anything contained in §10991-d1, C., '35 [§10991.1, C., '39].

Aldrich v Tracy, 222-84; 269 NW 30

I IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 2 ILB 137—Loss of citizenship by marriage; 4 ILB 166—Breach of marriage; 10 ILB 68—Physical condition as excuse for breach of marriage

Coercion—no presumption. In arson prosecution against husband and wife, it is no longer presumed that a wife, committing a crime in the presence of her husband, did so under his coercion.

State v Bazoukas, 226-1385; 286 NW 458

II ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS

Son from mother. A mother may not maintain an action for damages for the alienation of the affection for her of her minor son, in the absence of an allegation that she has thereby been deprived of the custody and services of said minor.

Pyle v Waechter, 202-695; 210 NW 926

Evidence—declarations of wife—hearsay. In an action by a husband for damages for alienation of affection, declarations of the wife made long after she had separated from her husband, and explanatory of such separation, are manifestly hearsay.

McGlothlen v Mills, 221-204; 265 NW 117

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to present a jury question on the issue whether the affections of the wife had been alienated.

Weyer v Vollbrecht; 208-914; 224 NW 568

Hearsay. Plaintiff in an action against the parents of her husband for damages for alienating the affections of her husband must not, under the guise of showing the state of mind of her husband toward her, be permitted to testify to a recital by her husband of what his parents had said to him about the plaintiff.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

Judgment for temporary alimony. In an action for damages consequent on defendants' acts in alienating the affections of plaintiff's husband, evidence that plaintiff obtained a judgment for temporary alimony and for attorney fees in an action by her husband for divorce and that the judgment was never paid is wholly irrelevant to the issue of relationship existing between plaintiff and defendant.

Case v Case, 212-1213; 238 NW 85

Measure of damages—inadequate instructions. A husband's right of action for the wrongful alienation and enticing of his wife is based on the loss of her consortium, not alone on the loss of her love. Instructions held inadequate.

McGlothlen v Mills, 221-204; 265 NW 117

Pleadings—sufficiency. An allegation that the affections of a wife were alienated by slandering the plaintiff-husband and by cultivating in the wife a dislike for plaintiff is sufficient without setting out the words uttered and the persons in whose presence they were spoken; likewise an allegation that defendants "jointly and severally" conspired to alienate the affections of the wife from the husband.

Depping v Hansmeier, 202-314; 208 NW 288

Presumption. Presumptively a wife has affection for her husband, and a defendant has the burden to overcome such presumption.

Weyer v Vollbrecht, 208-914; 224 NW 568

Prosecution of plaintiff by husband. In an action for damages consequent on the acts of defendants in alienating the affections of plaintiff's husband, the fact that plaintiff was criminally prosecuted by her husband is admissible provided it is shown that defendants participated in or instigated such prosecution. But neither the docket entries of the justice of the peace nor the verdict of the jury is competent to show such participation or instigation.

Case v. Case, 212-1213; 238 NW 85

Relevancy and competency. In an action by a wife for damages for the alienation of the affections of her husband, an information filed by the plaintiff, charging the defendants with having threatened to injure her, is wholly irrelevant and incompetent.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

Unallowable conclusions. The mere conclusions of a plaintiff in an action for damages for alienating the affections of her husband as to what the defendants had done in procuring the enlistment of the husband in the army and thereby effecting a separation of plaintiff and her husband, are wholly unallowable.

Paup v Paup, 208-215; 225 NW 251

III CRIMINAL CONVERSATION

Cross-examination. A plaintiff who, in an action for damages for criminal conversation, testifies, in effect, on direct examination, that the defendant's criminal relation with plaintiff's husband was the sole cause of disrupting plaintiff's home, thereby opens the door to cross-examination of the husband's criminal relations with other women and plaintiff's knowledge thereof, even though defendant has not pleaded such matter in mitigation of damages.

Morrow v Scoville, 206-1134; 221 NW 802

Criminal conversation—instructions. Instructions in action for damages for criminal conversation which allegedly occurred "on or about" a certain date "or at any time thereafter" are prejudicially erroneous when the record reveals the fact that the jury might have found the existence of said wrongful act from transactions occurring some four months prior to the limiting date specified by the instructions.

DIVORCE AND ANNULMENT OF MARRIAGES

10468 Jurisdiction.

ANALYSIS

- I JURISDICTION IN GENERAL
- II RESIDENCE
- III SETTING ASIDE DIVORCE DECREES
- IV PRESUMPTION OF DIVORCE

Validity of foreign decrees. See under §11567 (XII)

I JURISDICTION IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 13 ILR 320—Recognition of foreign decrees; 18 ILR 492—Divorce by judicial process

Absence of recital of facts found. A decree of divorce is not void because it contains no recitals of facts as found by the court.

Oliver v Oliver, 216-57; 248 NW 233

Consent decree. The mere fact that a defendant in divorce proceedings makes, during the trial, certain concessions of fact does not render the decree a consent decree.

Radle v Radle, 204-82; 214 NW 602

Jurisdiction—estoppel to question. A party, who instigates and successfully promotes a fraudulent proceeding on the part of his wife under which she is granted a decree of divorce, who pays the alimony decreed, and who promptly remarries, will not be permitted, after the death of his former wife, to maintain an action to annul said decree (and thereby restore his property rights) on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to enter said decree.

Robson v Kramer, 215-973; 245 NW 341

Notice by publication—plaintiff assailing own decree not permitted. A wife who obtains a divorce by publication may not in a subsequent action between the same parties for divorce, aided by attachment, complain that her previous divorce decree is void for defective publication on the ground that the record fails to show selection of the newspaper by "plaintiff or his attorney", when she relied on the publication and induced the court to grant a decree thereon.

Hanson v Hanson, 226-423; 284 NW 141

I JURISDICTION IN GENERAL — concluded

Previous divorce by publication — defense. Decree of divorce denied on the ground that the parties were already divorced in a previous proceeding in which the court had full and complete jurisdiction upon service of notice by publication.

Hanson v Hanson, 226-423; 284 NW 141

Separate maintenance. Principle reaffirmed that an action by a wife against the husband for separate maintenance is a creature of equity only, not of statute.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

State party by implication. The state is impliedly a party to every divorce action.

Walker v Walker, 205-395; 217 NW 883

Unallowable new trial. The statutory provision for a new trial for a defaulting defendant served by publication only does not apply to divorce proceedings.

Girdey v Girdey, 213-1; 238 NW 432

II RESIDENCE

Change of venue mistaken remedy. Motion for change of venue in an action for divorce is not the proper remedy to present the claim that plaintiff is not a resident of the county in which the action is instituted.

Garside v Garside, 208-534; 224 NW 586

Effect of military service. A person who has once acquired a legal residence in this state does not lose it by entering the military service of the federal government, and by being stationed, in accordance with superior military order, for a series of years at various military posts, his intentions being at all times ultimately to return to his formerly acquired residence, and his conduct being in harmony with such expressed intention.

Harris v Harris, 205-108; 215 NW 661

Foreign divorce—when not recognized. A foreign decree of divorce will not be recognized in this state when it is made to appear that the defendant (1) was at all times domiciled in this state, the matrimonial domicile, (2) was never subject to the jurisdiction of such foreign court, and (3) had never consented to, or justified by misconduct, the acquisition by plaintiff of a domicile in such foreign country. Especially is this true when there is no showing that the plaintiff ever acquired a domicile in such foreign country.

Bonner v Reandrew, 203-1355; 214 NW 536

Foreign decree—"full faith and credit"—comity. The "full faith and credit" clause of the federal constitution does not compel the courts of this state to recognize as valid a default decree of divorce against a defendant domiciled in this state, rendered in a foreign state in appropriate proceedings in rem; but such a decree, when valid on its face, will, as a matter of reciprocal comity between the states, be recognized as valid in this state, in the absence of allegation and proof of fraud in obtaining it.

Miller v Miller, 200-1193; 206 NW 262

Fraud—motion to set aside decree. A motion to set aside a decree of divorce for fraud, in that plaintiff had not acquired a bona fide residence required by statute, is a proper procedure, but the burden of proof necessarily rests on the maker of the motion.

Girdey v Girdey, 213-1; 238 NW 432

Vacation for nonresidence. Record reviewed, in an action to vacate a decree of divorce on the ground of nonresidence of both of the parties, and held to show that the husband at least was, at the time of the divorce action, a resident of the county in which the decree was rendered.

Melvin v Lawrence, 203-619; 213 NW 420

III SETTING ASIDE DIVORCE DECREES

Vacation of illegal order. A motion to set aside and vacate an order which is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court is proper.

Guisinger v Guisinger, 201-409; 205 NW 752

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to set aside a decree of divorce and to grant a new trial on the grounds of fraud and unavoidable casualty and misfortune.

McAtlin v McAtlin, 205-339; 217 NW 864

Fraudulently obtained decree—swift annulment. In view of the confidential relationship existing between a husband and wife, a court of equity should be swift to set aside a decree of divorce obtained by the husband by fraudulent means, the application by the innocent party for such annulment being made promptly after learning of the deception.

Petersen v Petersen, 221-897; 267 NW 719

Incompetent testimony in disregard of statute. A final decree of divorce, rendered by a court which has jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties, is not void because no witness was sworn or testified in the cause and no corroborating testimony was offered.

Radle v Radle, 204-82; 214 NW 602

Nonextrinsic fraud. Principle reaffirmed that the fraud which will justify the setting aside of a decree must be extrinsic and collateral to the matter determined by the decree—something other than false swearing in procuring the decree.

Girdey v Girdey, 213-1; 238 NW 432

Void decree—collateral attack. A decree of divorce, wheresoever rendered, is always open to collateral attack by proof that the court was without jurisdiction to render it.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Vacation—unallowable grounds. A decree of divorce, rendered on full jurisdiction, will not be set aside and cancelled on the ground that the applicant for the cancellation fraudulently colluded with the other party to the action to obtain the decree.

Reppert v Reppert, 214-17; 241 NW 487

IV PRESUMPTION OF DIVORCE

Foreign decree—duty of court. The "full faith and credit" clause of the federal constitution does not compel the courts of this state to recognize as valid a default decree of divorce against a defendant domiciled in this state, rendered in a foreign state in appropriate proceedings in rem; but such a decree, when valid on its face, will, as a matter of reciprocal comity between the states, be recognized as valid in this state, in the absence of allegation and proof of fraud in obtaining it.

Miller v Miller, 200-1193; 206 NW 262

Presumption of sameness of foreign laws. It is presumed that the laws of every other state are the same as those of this state, in the absence of any showing to the contrary.

Harris v Harris, 205-108; 215 NW 661

Jurisdiction—unappealed decree of separate maintenance in foreign state—final adjudication. An unappealed decree of a court of competent jurisdiction of a sister state, granting separate maintenance to a wife on the ground of desertion, and dismissing the husband's cross-petition for divorce on the same ground, constitutes a final adjudication that the husband was not entitled to a divorce on any ground (the laws of the two states being the same), and is binding on the courts of this state, and a decree of divorce subsequently obtained in this state by the husband on service by publication and on the ground of desertion, and without revealing the foreign decree, will be deemed fraudulent and will be set aside on timely petition by the wife and a new trial granted on her prayer.

Bowen v Bowen, 219-550; 258 NW 882

10469 Kind of action—joinder.

Adjudication of bastardy—effect on child. That part of a decree of divorce which adjudges that a child of the wife is not the child of the husband is a nullity as far as the child is concerned.

Ryke v Ream, 212-126; 234 NW 196

Decree—refusal—nonallowable accounting. The court, after refusing a decree of divorce, may not enter into an accounting and make a division of property between the parties.

Henriksen v Henriksen, 205-684; 216 NW 636

Separate maintenance. Record held to justify the entry of a decree and for the allowance of $40 per month for the separate maintenance of the wife, on her counter plea in divorce action.

Crees v Crees, 218-338; 255 NW 515

10470 Petition.

Condonation—pleading. Principle recognized that condonation must be specifically pleaded.

Nelson v Nelson, 208-713; 225 NW 843

Pleadings—objections not raised in lower court. In an action for divorce based on cruelty, where the defendant made no objection either to the verification or the form of an amendment to a petition which alleged conviction of a felony, and the cause proceeded to trial without objection to petition as amended, the defendant on appeal could not complain that, because of the finding that equities were with plaintiff and were based on facts alleged in petition, trial court could not consider ground set out in amendment.

Ayers v Ayers, 227-646; 288 NW 679

10471 Verification—evidence.

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held to sustain a decree of divorce.

Garside v Garside, 208-534; 224 NW 586

Former decree—effect. In a second action for divorce, evidence of events antedating the first decree and including the history of the parties, and their relations, is not objectionable insofar as such evidence throws light upon the conduct of the parties subsequent to the former decree.

Garside v Garside, 208-534; 224 NW 586

Objections not raised in lower court. In an action for divorce based on cruelty, where the defendant made no objection either to the verification or the form of an amendment to a petition which alleged conviction of a felony, and the cause proceeded to trial without objection to petition as amended, the defendant on appeal could not complain that, because of the finding that equities were with plaintiff and were based on facts alleged in petition, trial court could not consider ground set out in amendment.

Ayers v Ayers, 227-646; 288 NW 679

10473 Residence—failure of proof.

Residence—absence on visit—effect. A bona fide residence in this state, once acquired, is not lost by a temporary visit of some considerable length in a foreign state.

Coulter v Coulter, 204-575; 215 NW 619

Void decree—collateral attack. A decree of divorce, wheresoever rendered, is always open to collateral attack by proof that the court was without jurisdiction to render it.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

10474 Corroboration of plaintiff.

Corroborative evidence. It is unnecessary that every fact and circumstance detailed by complaining party to divorce action be corroborated. Evidence held corroborated sufficiently to entitle wife to divorce on ground of cruel and inhuman treatment.

Bohlmann v Bohlmann, (NOR); 240 NW 693

Disregard of statute. A final decree of divorce, rendered by a court which has jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties, is not void because no witness was sworn or testified in the cause and no corroborating testimony was offered.

Radle v Radle, 204-82; 214 NW 602

Difficulty attending proof. Corroboration of testimony tending to establish grounds for divorce is indispensable, irrespective of the difficulty of obtaining such corroboration.

Hummel v Hummel, 200-1176; 206 NW 115

Evidence sufficient. In an action for divorce resulting in decree for plaintiff on a general finding, where defendant assigns error based on a failure of proof of cruelty, and where, during the same term and before the same judge hearing the divorce proceedings, the defendant pleaded guilty to a grand jury indictment charging him with the crime of assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury upon plaintiff, and where on the following day plaintiff amended her petition for divorce by alleging defendant had been convicted of felony, and, while plaintiff did not personally testify to cruel and inhuman treatment, the record of conviction was offered and introduced in evidence without objection, the trial court did not err in granting a divorce as both parties apparently assumed the court was fully advised of the cruelty. Moreover, since defendant made no objection in court below, the question cannot be considered on appeal.

Ayers v Ayers, 227-646; 288 NW 679

Sufficiency. Corroboration sufficient to sustain a divorce is found in evidence, other than that of complainant, either direct or circumstantial, tending to establish the grounds charged, even tho such corroborative testimony does not extend to every part of complainant's testimony.

Courtney v Courtney, 214-721; 243 NW 510
Blazek v Blazek, 216-775; 249 NW 199

Vacation of decree. A final decree of divorce may not be vacated, even during the term at which entered, on a motion by defendant which alleges that no witness was sworn or testified in the cause and no corroborating testimony was offered, but which is silent as to any showing that plaintiff had no cause of action, or that defendant had a defense to plaintiff's action, or that there was fraud in obtaining the decree.

Radle v Radle, 204-82; 214 NW 602

10475 Causes.

Separate maintenance actions. See under §10481 (V)

I IN GENERAL

Attorney fees — when nontaxable. Tho a husband's action against his wife for the annulment of the marriage is legally nonmaintainable, and is therefore dismissed, attorney fees for the wife for defending the action may not be taxed against him.

Clark v Clark, 219-338; 258 NW 719

Connivance at wrongdoing. A husband who connives at the wrongdoing of his wife may not avail himself of such wrongdoing as a ground for divorce.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Hopeless conflict of testimony. No divorce will be granted on a petition and cross-petition thereof when the testimony and the weight thereof are in hopeless and irreconcilable conflict.

Ross v Ross, 205-424; 216 NW 22

Imputation of unchastity. The act of a husband, for a long series of years, in accusing his wife, without foundation, of unchastity, may furnish ample grounds for divorce.

Miller v Miller, 203-1218; 211 NW 705; 214 NW 613

Blazek v Blazek, 216-775; 249 NW 199

Two-fold insufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held wholly insufficient to justify the granting of a divorce because (1) of lack of evidence of cruel and inhuman treatment and (2) of lack of evidence that the treatment accorded plaintiff endangered her life.

Siverson v Siverson, 217-1167; 251 NW 653

II ADULTERY

Adultery — insufficient evidence. Circumstantial evidence on the issue of adultery reviewed and held, in view of its improbability in part, and in view of its manifest fabrication in part, to be quite insufficient on which to base a decree of divorce.

Goodrich v Goodrich, 205-1096; 216 NW 609

Adultery — evidence. The court will not be swift to impose the stigma of adultery upon a party even tho the party has been very indiscreet and has seriously violated the laws of propriety.

Turner v Turner, 219-334; 257 NW 819

Separate maintenance — evidence — insufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to justify a decree of separate maintenance either on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment or on the ground of adultery.

Agnew v Agnew, 216-1; 248 NW 241

III DESERTION

Discussion. See 15 ILR 477—Denial of intercourse

Desertion. The act of a wife in leaving her husband without legal cause necessarily constitutes desertion.

Depping v Depping, 206-1203; 219 NW 416

Desertion—insanity—burden of proof. When it appears that the defendant in an action for divorce based on desertion has been judicially declared insane, plaintiff must overcome the presumption that such insanity continued. In other words, plaintiff must establish a return to sanity on the part of defendant—must establish a mental condition such as would enable defendant to form an intent to desert.

Carr v Carr, 209-160; 225 NW 948

Desertion—computation of period. In order to establish willful desertion for two years, plaintiff will not be permitted to include the time intervening between the date of a former decree of divorce for desertion and the date when said decree was wholly reversed on appeal, because during said time the defendant was excusably absent from the home of the plaintiff.

Carr v Carr, 212-1130; 237 NW 492

IV CONVICTION OF FELONY

Evidence sufficient. In an action for divorce resulting in decree for plaintiff on a general finding, where defendant assigns error based on a failure of proof of cruelty, and where, during the same term and before the same judge hearing the divorce proceedings, the defendant pleaded guilty to a grand jury indictment charging him with the crime of assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury upon plaintiff, and where on the following day plaintiff amended her petition for divorce by alleging defendant had been convicted of felony, and, while plaintiff did not personally testify to cruel and inhuman treatment, the record of conviction was offered and introduced in evidence without objection, the trial court did not err in granting a divorce as both parties apparently assumed the court was fully advised of the cruelty. Moreover, since defendant made no objection in court below, the question cannot be considered on appeal.

Ayers v Ayers, 227-646; 288 NW 679

V HABITUAL DRUNKENNESS

Inebriacy defined. Inebriacy is the state of drunkenness or habitual intoxication.

Maher v Brown, 225-341; 280 NW 553

Drunkenness—cruelty. Evidence as to habitual drunkenness and cruel and inhuman treatment reviewed and held to justify decree.

Converse v Converse, 225-1359; 282 NW 368

VI INHUMAN TREATMENT

Discussion. See 14 ILR 266—Cruelty as ground

Corroborative evidence. It is unnecessary that every fact and circumstance detailed by complaining party to divorce action be corroborated. Evidence held corroborated sufficiently to entitle wife to divorce on ground of cruel and inhuman treatment.

Bohlmann v Bohlmann, (NOR); 240 NW 693

Inhuman treatment—proof required. Proof of inhuman treatment sufficient to endanger life, and thereby justify the granting of a decree of divorce, must be clear, definite and satisfactory.

Wallace v Wallace, 212-190; 235 NW 728

Imperative requirements. Proof that alleged inhuman treatment endangered the life of the victim thereof, and the required statutory corroboration, are essential conditions to the right to a divorce.

Bartlett v Bartlett, 214-616; 243 NW 588

Cruelty — evidence — sufficiency. Evidence held sufficient to require a decree of divorce on the grounds of cruel and inhuman treatment.

Coulter v Coulter, 204-575; 215 NW 619

McGrath v McGrath, 205-192; 217 NW 821

O'Brien v O'Brien, 205-212; 217 NW 629

McCulla v McCulla, 213-1348; 241 NW 453

Courtney v Courtney, 214-721; 243 NW 510

Strickler v Strickler, (NOR); 255 NW 528

Drunkenness—cruelty. Evidence as to habitual drunkenness and cruel and inhuman treatment reviewed and held to justify decree.

Converse v Converse, 225-1359; 282 NW 368

Evidence sufficient. In an action for divorce resulting in decree for plaintiff on a general finding, where defendant assigns error based on a failure of proof of cruelty, and where, during the same term and before the same judge hearing the divorce proceedings, the defendant pleaded guilty to a grand jury indictment charging him with the crime of assault with intent to inflict great bodily injury upon plaintiff, and where on the following day plaintiff amended her petition for divorce by alleging defendant had been convicted of felony, and, while plaintiff did not personally testify to cruel and inhuman treatment, the record of conviction was offered and introduced in evidence without objection, the trial court did not err in granting a divorce as both parties apparently assumed the court was fully advised of the cruelty. Moreover, since defendant made no objection in court below, the question cannot be considered on appeal.

Ayers v Ayers, 227-646; 288 NW 679

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to justify a decree of divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment.

Walker v Walker, 205-395; 217 NW 883

Nelson v Nelson, 208-713; 225 NW 843

Vogt v Vogt, 208-1329; 227 NW 107

Krotz v Krotz, 209-433; 228 NW 30

Wallace v Wallace, 212-190; 235 NW 728

Evidence — sufficiency. Evidence reviewed, and held that certain treatment of a refined and cultured woman was “inhuman” within the meaning of the statute, and amply justified a decree of divorce.

Roach v Roach, 213-314; 237 NW 439

Evidence—sufficiency. Evidence of mistreatment of feeble old man in failing health and at times dangerously ill held sufficient to justify decree of divorce.

Graham v Graham, 227-223; 288 NW 78

Endangering health and life. On husband's cross-petition, trial court properly denied divorce where there was no evidence to show that wife's refusal to share the burdens naturally incident to the relationship of marriage so affected him as to injure his health and ultimately endanger his life. In the absence of physical violence, cruel and inhuman treatment to justify a divorce must not only endanger health, but must also be such as to ultimately endanger life.

Goecker v Goecker, 227-697; 288 NW 884

Mere filing of petition. The mere filing of a petition for divorce in which no actual moral delinquency is charged against the defendant does not establish cruel and inhuman treatment.

Biebesheimer v Biebesheimer, 202-668; 210 NW 896

Nonphysical violence. Life may be endangered by treatment tho it involves no physical violence.

Coulter v Coulter, 204-575; 215 NW 619

Insufficiency of evidence. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to warrant divorce for cruel and inhuman treatment.

West v West, (NOR); 218 NW 292

Indirect charges of infidelity. Indirect charges of infidelity may constitute cruel and inhuman treatment.

McClurg v McClurg, 207-271; 222 NW 862

Williges v Williges, 215-960; 247 NW 222

Mental cruelty — evidence — sufficiency. Record reviewed and held to reveal such cruel and inhuman treatment of a wife by her husband as amply to support a decree of divorce to the wife, said cruelty being in the form of a systematic course of conduct, by the husband, deliberately designed to mentally harass the wife.

Hemmen v Hemmen, 221-894; 267 NW 687

Showing of indiscretion. The act of a husband in obtaining an affidavit which tends to show indiscretions on the part of the wife with other male persons does not establish cruel and inhuman treatment, it appearing that the existence of the affidavit was not revealed until the trial.

Biebesheimer v Biebesheimer, 202-668; 210 NW 896

Separate maintenance — evidence — insufficiency. Evidence held insufficient to justify a decree of separate maintenance either on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment or on the ground of adultery.

Agnew v Agnew, 216-1; 248 NW 241

Unsustained charge of infidelity. Unsustained charges by a husband that his wife, at the time of their marriage, was, unbeknown to him, pregnant with child by another than the husband, may constitute cruel and inhuman treatment.

Heath v Heath, 222-660; 269 NW 761

Unwarranted charges and threats. Unwarranted charges of unchastity and violent threats may constitute such cruel and inhuman treatment as to justify a decree of divorce provided they endanger the life of complainant.

Massie v Massie, 202-1311; 210 NW 431

Inhuman treatment — sufficiency. Evidence that a husband treated his wife as a mere servant and mistress, constantly swore at and reviled her, struck her on occasions, drew a gun on her, threatened her life, begrudgingly furnished her medical services, and falsely accused her of infidelity, and that such treatment seriously undermined her health, held ample to support a decree of divorce.

Schneckloth v Schneckloth, 209-496; 228 NW 290

Impairment of health. (1) Impairment of health and (2) endangering the life of complainant are indispensable elements of "in-human treatment," within the meaning of the divorce statutes.

White v White, 200-779; 205 NW 305
 Hill v Hill, 201-864; 208 NW 377
 Henriksen v Henriksen, 205-684; 216 NW 636

VII CONDONATION

Condonation. Condonation is always conditional upon the fact that the party forgiven will thereafter abstain from the commission of offenses similar to those forgiven.

Massie v Massie, 202-1311; 210 NW 431

Condonation. A formal agreement to withhold divorce proceedings pending the good conduct of the other party to the marriage relation, followed by no resumption of the marriage relation, does not constitute condonation of existing grounds for divorce.

Vincent v Vincent, 201-299; 207 NW 114

Condonation—insufficient basis. The plea of condonation is not established by evidence that, on one occasion, and for a considerable period of time, the wife visited the husband in order that he might visit with the children, the husband and wife not cohabitating as husband and wife; and especially is this true when, throughout said visit, there was no reformation in the husband's conduct.

Coulter v Coulter, 204-575; 215 NW 619

Condonation — cohabitation — husband and wife during continued cruelty. The fact that a wife during long and continued cruelty on the part of the husband, lived and cohabited with him as his wife, does not constitute condonation of such cruelty, especially when she was justifiably in fear of him.

Schneckloth v Schneckloth, 209-496; 228 NW 290

Unpleaded condonation. After adultery has been unquestionably established, the court, in the absence of plea and proof of condonation, may not legally refuse a decree of divorce to the innocent party on the theory that said party has condoned the adultery by apparently living with the guilty party after the adultery but before learning thereof.

Stambaugh v Stambaugh, 214-327; 242 NW 46

Condonation. A husband who, with full knowledge of the misconduct of his wife, resumes the marital relation thereby condones the wrong.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

10476 Husband from wife — other causes.

Pregnancy at time of marriage. A husband who marries his wife in the belief that he was the father of her unborn child is entitled to a divorce upon discovery of his mistake, he having no illegitimate children living at the time of said marriage.

Wiley v Wiley, 204-553; 215 NW 705

"Annulment" and "divorce" distinguished. A husband may not maintain an independent action in equity to nullify a marriage on the ground that the wife, at the time of marriage, was, unbeknown to him, pregnant by another than himself. His action should be one for divorce on said ground.

Clark v Clark, 219-338; 258 NW 719

Unknown pregnancy — evidence — insufficiency. Evidence reviewed and held insufficient to rebut the presumption of legitimacy which attends a child born in lawful wedlock.

Heath v Heath, 222-660; 269 NW 761

10477 Cross petition.

Separate maintenance. Principle recognized that in an action by a husband for divorce the wife may, on proper pleading and supporting evidence, be granted a decree for separate maintenance.

Waddington v Waddington, 218-460; 255 NW 462

10478 Maintenance during litigation.

Absence of marriage relation — effect. A prayer, in a divorce action, for alimony, attorney fees, and costs becomes a nullity when it is found that the plaintiff and defendant are not husband and wife.

Reppert v Reppert, 214-17; 241 NW 487

Attorney fees — inadequacy. An inadequate allowance to the wife for attorney fees will be corrected on appeal.

Tennigkeit v Tennigkeit, 222-657; 269 NW 877

Decree for attorney fees — nonadjudication as to attorney. A decree in divorce proceedings awarding plaintiff (in addition to a divorce) a specified sum as attorney fees is not an adjudication as to the amount owing by plaintiff to her attorney for services rendered in the action,—the attorney, of course, not being a party to the action.

Duke v Park, 220-889; 262 NW 799

Maddy v Park, 220-899; 262 NW 796

Jones v Park, 220-894; 262 NW 797; 264 NW 700

Attorney fees — ordering clerk to satisfy. When at the time of agreeing to a property settlement, plaintiff in divorce proceeding also orally agreed to pay her attorney a fee of $250 for his services, the court should order the clerk to satisfy said fee from the money paid into his hands in satisfaction of said property settlement and on which money the attorney had perfected a lien,—it appearing that said fee was reasonable in amount and the agreement therefor untainted with any illegality.

Mickelson v Mickelson, 222-942; 270 NW 365

Nonallowable attorney fees. Attorney fees may not be allowed in a proceeding to modify a decree of divorce as to alimony.

Handsaker v Handsaker, 223-462; 272 NW 609

Action on divorce settlement stipulation—unallowable attorney fees. A stipulation or contract of settlement in a divorce action as a basis for a money recovery is in no different category from any other contract, and, unless provided for therein, attorney fees are not taxable in an action based thereon.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

Dismissal—effect on taxation of attorney fees. The action of plaintiff in divorce proceedings in dismissing his action pending defendant's application for suit money, deprives the court of jurisdiction thereafter to tax to plaintiff, as costs, any allowance to compensate defendant for attorney fees for services performed prior to said dismissal.

Dallas v Dallas, 222-42; 268 NW 516

Modification — attorney fees unallowable. The statutory authority to allow attorney fees in an original divorce proceeding, does not apply to proceedings for the modification of a decree of alimony.

Nicolls v Nicolls, 211-1193; 235 NW 288

Rule for allowance. Temporary alimony and suit money will be gauged in harmony with the station in life of the parties and the financial ability of the husband to pay. An allowance of $500 per month as temporary alimony, $1,000 as suit money, and $1,000 as attorney fees held not excessive.

Hanford v Hanford, 214-839; 240 NW 732

Suit money and attorney fees not allowable. Suit money and attorney fees are not allowable to the defendant in an action or application for the modification of a decree of divorce as to the custody of a child of the parties.

Hensen v Hensen, 212-1226; 238 NW 83

Temporary alimony, etc.—showing. Ample showing of marriage justifying an order for temporary alimony, suit money, and attorney fees in an action for separate maintenance, is made by proof that even tho plaintiff and defendant were married at a time when plaintiff's decree of divorce from a former husband had not been entered of record, yet plaintiff and defendant for several years lived together as husband and wife after said decree had been so entered.

Hanford v Hanford, 214-839; 240 NW 732

10479 Attachment.

Statutory origin. Principle reaffirmed that proceedings in attachment are of statutory origin only, and in derogation of the common law.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Fatally delayed presentation. The objection that a motion to discharge an attachment was not timely may not be raised for the first time on appeal.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Separate maintenance. The statutory power of a judge of the district court in action for divorce to order an attachment, with or without bond, does not authorize him to enter such order in an action for separate maintenance.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

I CUSTODY AND SUPPORT OF CHILDREN

Discussion. See 11 ILR 365—Jurisdiction of status created by award of custody

Affirmance of order—effect. The affirmance, on appeal, of an order relative to the custody of children will not prevent a future modification by the trial court of such order.

Oliver v Oliver, 216-57; 248 NW 233

Alimony—support when husband able. A decree of divorce should not make the divorced husband and father destitute for purpose of permitting the wife and children to live in idleness and luxury, but, on other hand, so long as the divorced husband and father has property or income, the divorced wife and children of tender age should not be deprived of a decent home and decent support.

Converse v Converse, 225-1359; 282 NW 368

Appeal—deference to trial court. Tho divorce proceedings are triable de novo on appeal, yet the wide discretion vested in the trial court in determining the custody of children will be respected and confirmed in all cases except where the discretion has been abused.

Wood v Wood, 220-441; 262 NW 773

Allowance for child—sale of homestead. The court may properly decree in divorce proceedings that a monthly allowance solely for the support and education of a child shall be a lien on the defendant-parent's homestead—all the property the parent possesses—but may not properly decree that in case of a failure to pay the allowance the homestead shall be sold and the proceeds impounded solely for the support and education of the child. On the contrary, a sale of the parent's homestead should be permitted only on proof of the parent's willful refusal or neglect to pay as far as he can reasonably pay.

Paul v Paul, 217-977; 252 NW 114

Change in condition—burden of proof—supplemental decree—effect. When plaintiff in divorce proceedings is unconditionally awarded the custody of children, a supplemental decree which is plainly temporary in its provisions in that it clearly awards custody to defendant only during plaintiff's then sickness, necessarily loses all force and effect when plaintiff is admittedly restored to good health. Defendant, to justify his refusal to surrender custody, has the burden to establish a material change in conditions since the original decree, by proof other than by proof of the facts on which the supplemental decree rests.

Wood v Wood, 220-441; 262 NW 773

Conditional custody. The court in a decree of divorce has power to award to one of the parties the custody of the children so long as such party maintains his or her residence in this state.

Goodrich v Goodrich, 209-666; 228 NW 652

Controlling considerations. The fact that one custody of a child may offer larger financial and educational advantages than another custody, is not necessarily a controlling consideration on the issue of the child's best welfare.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Custody of child—best interest of child. The paramount consideration in determining the custody of a child is the best interest of the child.

Ellison v Platts, 226-1211; 286 NW 413

Selecting parent—custody—when not disturbed. Where children are old enough to elect with which parent they will live, the refusal of the lower court to disturb their custody sustained on appeal.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

Custodial order as adjudication. An order in divorce proceedings awarding to the mother, without fraud on her part, the unconditional custody of her children, constitutes a final adjudication in her favor of each and every fact then bearing on her fitness for such custody.

Wood v Wood, 220-441; 262 NW 773

Custodial order improper. In wife's action for divorce wherein husband also sought divorce by way of cross-petition and trial court found neither party guilty of grounds for divorce, it was improper and inequitable to grant wife custody of child and support money, because under such circumstances husband was under no duty to support wife and child away from home, and because such order would merely serve to continue the estrangement and create a situation naturally productive of evil results and inimical to the best interests of society.

Goecker v Goecker, 227-697; 288 NW 884

Divorce—effect as to children. Principle reaffirmed that the duties and liabilities of the parents to a minor child do not terminate by a decree of divorce.

Hensen v Hensen, 212-1226; 238 NW 83

Divorce settlement stipulation—unenforceable if uncertain. Where a divorce stipulation of settlement leaves for future decision certain matters of education of the children, there is such uncertainty and ambiguity and lack of definiteness, that specific performance cannot be granted.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

Dying request—materiality. Evidence of the dying request of a mother as to the future custody of her infant child is highly material on the issue of such custody.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Foreign decree. A foreign decree of divorce fixing the custody of a child is not res judicata of the rights of a third party in this state to such custody. In any event, such third party may show that, by statute in such foreign state, the custodial decree is not conclusive and unalterable; or he may rest on the presumption that the foreign statute is the same as in this state, relative to such decree's being non res judicata as to subsequent changed conditions.

Barnett v Blakley, 202-1; 209 NW 412

Garnishment—divorce proceedings—allowance for children. Money awarded to a mother in a decree of divorce "for the support and maintenance" of her minor children is not subject to process of garnishment under a personal judgment against the mother.

I CUSTODY AND SUPPORT OF CHILDREN—continued

Peck v Peck, 207-1008; 222 NW 534

Health of mother as element—discretion of court. The action of the trial court in reaffirming, or refusing to modify, an original decree which unconditionally awarded to a mother the custody of her immature, minor children, will not be disturbed when the mother is admittedly in good mental and physical health, and when the sole support for cancellation of the decree is limited to nonpersuasive, opinion evidence relative to the mother being afflicted with epileptic insanity, and whether, if so afflicted, the disease may or probably will light up at some future time.

Wood v Wood, 220-441; 262 NW 773

Improper allowance for support. The fact that a wife, successful plaintiff in divorce proceedings, (1) has title to or possession of the life-accumulations of the parties, (2) has but recently personally inherited, in her own right, substantial amounts of property, and (3) that the health of the defendant has failed with consequent lessened earning power, may render improper any monthly financial allowance to the plaintiff for the support of the minor children.

Tennigkeit v Tennigkeit, 222-657; 269 NW 877

Irrevocable decree prohibited. The court cannot, in divorce proceedings, make an irrevocable order relative to the custody of children.

Goodrich v Goodrich, 209-666; 228 NW 652

Justifiable order. In an action for divorce, the property rights of the parties and the custody of the children cannot be adjudicated unless a case is made warranting a decree of divorce.

Oliver v Oliver, 216-57; 248 NW 233

Maternal preference. All other matters being equal, the court will be strongly inclined to favor the mother as the proper custodian of immature children.

Werner v Werner, 204-550; 212 NW 569

Modification of decree—conditions. A decree of divorce will not be modified as to the custody of children except on a clear showing by the applicant of such facts and circumstances occurring subsequent to the date of the decree, as affect the well-being of the children, and demand a change in their custody.

Neve v Neve, 210-120; 230 NW 339

Modification—insufficient showing. That part of a decree of divorce which conditionally awards the successful party the custody of children cannot be so modified as to avoid the conditions except on allegation and proof of a substantial change in the conditions or circumstances of the parties. So held where a mother was decreed the custody of children while she remained a resident of the state, with right of visitation in the father. Held, the investment of her assets in property outside the state was insufficient as such change of circumstances.

Goodrich v Goodrich, 209-666; 228 NW 652

Private modification—confirmation by court. When parties to a divorce voluntarily modify the decree relative to the custody of the children, the court may, by a subsequent order, very properly confirm the said modification when it is conducive to the welfare of the children.

Wheeler v Wheeler, 217-422; 251 NW 693

Refusal to modify. Evidence in proceedings supplemental to divorce reviewed, and held to sustain the refusal of the trial court to order a change in the custody of a minor child in favor of a parent who had never contributed to the support of the child, and had not even seen it until it was some eighteen months old.

Reeves v Reeves, 205-215; 217 NW 823

Review—divorce modification. Where a woman seeks, by virtue of a divorce settlement stipulation, to collect, from her ex-husband, the expenses of a son while at college, and the trial court, after hearing the evidence, reduced the amount she was seeking, held no error.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

Moot questions. An order of the supreme court on appeal that the trial court enter a decree of divorce in favor of plaintiff, and all proper orders relative to the custody of the children, renders moot the legality of all prior orders of the trial court in injunctive proceedings relative to the custody of such children.

McGrath v Dist. Court, 205-191; 217 NW 823

Preference to mother. To separate immature, minor children from a mother possessing a normal outlook on life, and normal motherly instincts, is a tragedy which should be avoided wherever reasonably possible.

Wood v Wood, 220-441; 262 NW 773

Paternal preference. Circumstances may be such as to justify the trial court in divorce proceedings in giving the custody of an immature infant to the father, even tho he is the party in the wrong.

Watland v Watland, 206-1191; 221 NW 819

Presumptive right of parent. A father is necessarily given the custody of his motherless child when he has neither abandoned the child, nor surrendered his right to the custody of the child, and when there is no showing that the welfare of the child requires its custody to be awarded to another.

Bonnarens v Klett, 213-1286; 241 NW 483

Revival of paternal rights—conditions. Assuming that the death of a mother (to whom the custody of her infant child had been judicially awarded) revives the custodial rights of the father, yet he must assert such rights with a promptness commensurate with the helplessness of the child, or he will be deemed to have forfeited and waived them, and will not, thereafter, be permitted to challenge the rights of another custodian except on the grounds of unfitness.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Unallowable condition. The right of a father and child to visit each other should not be conditioned on the father's paying the alimony decreed to the mother.

Fitch v Fitch, 207-1193; 224 NW 503

Welfare of child sole question. Orders in divorce proceedings as to the custody of minor children of the parties will, irrespective of the wishes of the parents, be made on the basis of what the equity court deems to be for the best interest of the child.

Horn v Horn, 221-190; 265 NW 148

II PERMANENT ALIMONY

(a) IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 13 ILR 164—Garnishment of alimony; 18 ILR 64—Enforcement by contempt; 24 ILR 735—Separate action after divorce

Alimony—nonabatement by death. A decree for alimony does not abate on the subsequent death of the party to whom the alimony was awarded.

Higgins v Higgins, 204-1312; 216 NW 693

Alimony—property settlement under trust agreement. A property settlement under an irrevocable trust agreement made by husband and wife previous to and confirmed in divorce decree discharged husband's obligation for further support and precluded right to further alimony.

Fitch v Com. of Internal Rev., 103 F 2d, 702

Lien against homestead. In a divorce action granting wife a decree of divorce and alimony, decree could make provision for the disposition of the homestead or make charges against it in favor of one of the parties as against the other.

Ayers v Ayers, 227-646; 288 NW 679

Right to alimony—how determined. In action for divorce the right to alimony must be determined in light of all facts and circumstances, and is not mandatory, but depends somewhat on parties' ages, sex, health, abilities to earn, properties, resources, etc.

Retman v Retman, (NOR); 254 NW 804

DIVORCE AND ANNULMENT §10481

(b) NATURE OF ALIMONY

Alimony—nonlienable decree for money. A decree (in divorce proceedings) which, inter alia, simply "orders" defendant to pay to the clerk for the use of plaintiff a stated sum each month, but renders against defendant no present judgment for money but authorizes the clerk to enter such judgment for payments in default, neither becomes a lien on defendant's lands, nor authorizes the issuance of an execution.

Millisack v O'Brien, 223-752; 273 NW 875

Temporary appointment of guardian—validity. The appointment of a temporary guardian on proper and sufficient notice to the person sought to be placed under guardianship is valid, even tho the statute authorizing such appointment is silent as to notice.

In re Barner, 201-525; 207 NW 613

(c) JURISDICTION

Alimony to guilty party. The allowance of alimony to a guilty party is within the legal discretion of the court.

Mitchell v Mitchell, 193-153; 185 NW 62

Blain v Blain, 200-910; 205 NW 785

Allowance on prior divorce. The court may be justified in wholly denying to a successful party in divorce proceedings any alimony, in view of the amount allowed to said party on a former decree of divorce between the same parties.

Black v Black, 200-1016; 205 NW 970

Decree—refusal—nonallowable accounting. The court, after refusing a decree of divorce, may not enter into an accounting and make a division of property between the parties.

Henriksen v Henriksen, 205-684; 216 NW 636

(d) CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH ALIMONY ALLOWED

Unallowable allowance to guilty party. Alimony should not be allowed to a defendant against whom a decree of divorce is entered, when he has never made any contribution to plaintiff's property.

Rule v Rule, 204-1122; 216 NW 629

(e) AMOUNT OF ALIMONY

Alimony—refusal of—construction of decree. A decree of divorce will not be held to deny all alimony if it makes some provision for the maintenance of plaintiff. So held on an application to modify alimony.

Handsaker v Handsaker, 223-462; 272 NW 609

Allowance for children. Allowance to a successful party in divorce proceedings for the support of children reviewed, and order increased by 100 percent.

Black v Black, 200-1016; 205 NW 970

II PERMANENT ALIMONY—concluded
(e) AMOUNT OF ALIMONY—concluded

Excessive alimony.

Blain v Blain, 200-910; 205 NW 785

Nonexcessive alimony.

Schneckloth v Schneckloth, 209-496; 228 NW 290

Williges v Williges, 215-960; 247 NW 222

Nonexcessive allowance. An award of $22,000 as alimony, and of $100 per month for the support and education for a named time of minor children, is not excessive as regards a defendant who is worth at least $75,000.

Goodrich v Goodrich, 205-1096; 216 NW 609

Nonexcessive allowance. Decree for alimony reviewed, and held that an allowance of $75 per month out of the husband's income of $125 per month was proper.

Roach v Roach, 213-314; 237 NW 439

Nonexcessive allowance. Record reviewed, and held that an allowance to the wife of $40 per month for five years was not excessive in view of the financial condition, earning power, and health of the parties.

Ellsworth v Ellsworth, 218-957; 256 NW 690

Equitable allowance. Evidence reviewed and held that alimony of $30 per month to a wife to whom was decreed the custody of three minor children was not inequitable in view of the wife's contribution to the tangible property and the division of such property.

Crouch v Crouch, 213-460; 239 NW 106

Equitable apportionment. An order for alimony in divorce proceedings should be based on a reasonable and equitable apportionment of the income of the defendant, and not solely on the basis of the amount of money necessary to support the wife and children.

Schorr v Schorr, 206-334; 220 NW 31

Reasonableness. Award of $7,000 for the first year, of $6,000 for each ensuing year, and $4,000 for attorney fees, reviewed and held reasonable in view of the circumstances of the parties.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Fundamental considerations. A decree for alimony and support must fundamentally rest on the necessities and financial condition of both the husband and wife and children, yet the court will not be blind to the relative deserts of the principal parties as reflected in their conduct and in the aggravations and palliations thereof. Decree reviewed, and held unreasonably burdensome.

Saunders v Saunders, 211-976; 234 NW 830

Manifest inability to pay. Alimony which is so large in amount as manifestly to be wholly beyond the ability of the husband to pay is legally excessive, irrespective of the needs of the wife.

Fitch v Fitch, 207-1193; 224 NW 503

One-half of property to wife. Record reviewed and held to demand a modification to the extent of awarding one-half of the property to the injured wife, and an increase in the amount of a monthly award in money.

Parizek v Parizek, 210-1099; 229 NW 689

(f) PROPERTY SUBJECT TO ALIMONY—ENFORCEMENT OF DECREE

Contingent liability not debt "to become due". The defendant in a decree for alimony (assuming such decree to create a "debt") is not garnishable on an installment which is unmatured on the date of the garnishment, and the maturity of which will be wholly defeated by the death of the plaintiff in alimony before the maturity date as provided by the decree.

Malone v Moore, 204-625; 215 NW 625; 55 ALR 356

Property subject to garnishment—decree for alimony. A decree for alimony in fixed monthly payments does not create a "debt". It follows that the defendant in alimony cannot be legally garnished for unpaid installments as a debtor of the plaintiff in alimony, even tho the claim on which the garnishment is based is for necessities sold to the plaintiff in alimony since the entry of the decree and in reliance on said decree.

Malone v Moore, 212-58; 236 NW 100

III SUBSEQUENT CHANGES IN ALIMONY AND CUSTODY OF CHILDREN

Discussion. See 2 ILB 204—Alimony—modification; 6 ILB 233—Modification of alimony decree

Custody of children—subsequent modification of orders. The fact that a parent who was given the right to visit her child at stated times has, since the entry of the order, become better circumstanced financially to provide for the child will not necessarily constitute such "change of condition" as to justify a change in the court order; and whether the court order should be changed may be materially controlled by a consideration of the difficulties which the parties have experienced since the entry of the order and which relate to the welfare of the child.

Bennett v Bennett, 200-415; 203 NW 26

Modification in re children. A decree of divorce which specifically denies all allowance of alimony may be subsequently so modified as to require the defendant to pay a stated sum for the care and support of his children.

Duvall v Duvall, 215-24; 244 NW 718; 83 ALR 1242

Insufficient grounds. A decree for alimony with right in defendant to visit his children will not necessarily be suspended because the wife, immediately upon the rendition of the decree, took the children beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

Schneider v Schneider, 207-189; 222 NW 400

Loss of right. The mother of an illegitimate child, who has for a long series of years evinced but a very casual interest in the child, may not successfully urge her right to the custody of the child against fit and proper parties who have nurtured, cared for, and educated the child from birth, even tho they have been paid compensation by parties other than the mother, it appearing that it would not be to the best interest of the child to decree custody to the mother.

Barry v Reeves, 203-1345; 214 NW 519

Modification of order of custody—considerations. In an action for the modification of an order for the custody of a 10-year-old child, where the affection and care received in the homes of each of the divorced parents was satisfactory, the wishes of the child cannot have great weight, the controlling consideration being the welfare of the child, and, when there was no change in circumstances to require the action of the court, a previous adjudication that the child remain with his mother should not be modified.

Vierck v Everson, 228- ; 291 NW 865

Modification refused—evidence. Evidence justified trial court's refusal to modify divorce decree giving custody of children to be reared in home of wife's parents. Lower court's discretion and responsibility in such cases discussed.

Townsend v Townsend, (NOR); 213 NW 273

Support of children—stipulated settlement. Altho a divorced father's financial condition has changed but he is still able to carry out a settlement stipulation merged in a divorce decree, and altho his ex-wife has property and an income of her own, a review of the evidence on appeal held to justify the refusal of the lower court to modify the support provisions of the divorce decree.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

Alimony—modification. Order for alimony reviewed, and an equitable modification ordered.

McClurg v McClurg, 207-271; 222 NW 862

Accounting between parties. Where in an application to modify a decree in alimony it is made to appear that the defendant is in arrears on payments, but it also appears that plaintiff has seized and converted certain property of the defendant, the court may work out an accounting by plaintiff for the property seized, and may, on supporting testimony, decree that the property seized equals the payments which are in arrears, it appearing that the parties had, without objection, litigated such issue.

Woodall v Woodall, 204-423; 214 NW 483

Accrued and unpaid installments unchangeable. While the court, in divorce proceedings, has ample power, on a showing of change of conditions of the parties, to modify a former order or judgment for alimony or support money, yet the court is wholly without jurisdiction to cancel installments which have accrued and which remain unpaid under said former order or judgment.

Horn v Horn, 221-190; 265 NW 148

Unpaid accrued installments—status. Accrued and unpaid installments of alimony cannot be modified by the court.

Roach v Oliver, 215-800; 244 NW 899

Adjudicated grounds. A modification of a decree of divorce as to the property rights of the parties may not be had on grounds known to exist at the time the decree was entered.

Guisinger v Guisinger, 201-409; 205 NW 752

Appeal—nonabatement by death. The death of a party to whom a decree of divorce has been awarded does not abate an appeal insofar as property rights and the custody of children are affected by the decree.

Oliver v Oliver, 216-57; 248 NW 233

Fatally belated objection. The objection that a party to a divorce decree filed no pleadings in resistance to an application for a modification of the decree may not be raised for the first time on appeal.

McNary v McNary, 206-942; 221 NW 580

Findings in alimony modifications—weight on appeal. In equity cases triable de novo, much weight should be given to findings of the trial court because of the better opportunities of that court to weigh the testimony, and in matters like modification of alimony decrees the court exercises a large discretion which, unless abused, will not be interfered with on appeal.

Siders v Siders, 227-764; 288 NW 909

Jurisdiction. The statutory provision that the court in divorce proceedings may make changes in prior orders ipso facto works a retention in the court of jurisdiction of both (1) the subject-matter of the orders and (2) the parties, even tho the decree is silent as to such retention of jurisdiction.

Franklin v Bonner, 201-516; 207 NW 778

Notice. The retained jurisdiction of the court may be reasserted by the court at any time on such reasonable notice as the court may order.

Franklin v Bonner, 201-516; 207 NW 778

Presentation and reservation of grounds of review. On application to modify an award of

III SUBSEQUENT CHANGES IN ALIMONY AND CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—continued

alimony and support money, a plea of adjudication must be presented to the trial court, or it will not be considered on appeal.

Kruckman v Kruckman, 209-1218; 229 NW 700

Decree on publication service—effect on alimony. A plaintiff who takes a decree of divorce on service by publication may not thereafter resurrect the proceeding for the purpose of an allowance of alimony. This is true even tho plaintiff prayed for alimony, and even tho the court assumed to continue the proceeding on the question of alimony.

Doeksen v Doeksen, 202-488; 210 NW 545

Decree providing alimony until child attains majority—not subject to change thereafter. Decree of divorce providing that husband's monthly payments of alimony for child should continue "until said minor child has attained his 21st birthday, unless this decree should be modified or changed by said court", held not to authorize change in decree after child attained majority.

Hartwick v Hartwick, (NOR); 227 NW 341

Default—effect. The alimony provisions of a decree of divorce will not be modified as a matter of course simply because the other party to the decree defaults when the application for modification comes on for hearing.

McNary v McNary, 206-942; 221 NW 580

General equitable relief. In an application for the modification of a decree of alimony, a prayer for general equitable relief justifies, under proper showing, a modification of that part of the alimony decree pertaining to the maintenance of insurance.

Nicolls v Nicolls, 211-1193; 235 NW 288

Interest. Circumstances may be such as to justify an award of interest on an agreed settlement of alimony long delayed by the wrong of the defendant.

Miller v Miller, 203-1218; 211 NW 705; 214 NW 613

Legally unmodifiable decree. A final, legal decree of divorce, which denies alimony, may not be modified by the court as to alimony, even under a showing of materially changed circumstances.

Handsaker v Handsaker, 223-462; 272 NW 609

Lessened earning power. A material decrease in the earning power of a person subsequent to the time when he was decreed to pay monthly alimony, is such change of circumstances as will justify a modification of the decree.

Nicolls v Nicolls, 211-1193; 235 NW 288

Keller v Keller, 214-909; 243 NW 182

Junger v Junger, 215-636; 246 NW 659

Lessened earning power—willful neglect. The plea of lessened earning power of one who has been decreed to pay alimony will not be deemed such "change in circumstances" as to justify a modification of the decree of alimony when such lessened earning power is the result of his own willful neglect.

Stone v Stone, 212-1344; 235 NW 492

Lessened earning power. Basis for a modification of a decree for monthly alimony may be found in the unavoidable lessened earning power of the defendant.

Corl v Corl, 217-812; 253 NW 125

Lien on homestead. Defendant, in an application for modification of an alimony allowance, by praying for general equitable relief thereby offers to do equity, and arms the court with power to make the reduced allowance a lien on defendant's homestead, even tho former allowances had not thus been made a lien on said homestead.

Paul v Paul, 217-977; 252 NW 114

Life estate to wife, remainder to children—modified on appeal. A decree of divorce awarding to the wife a life estate in real property, with remainder to the children, modified on appeal to give the remainder to the husband subject to the wife's life estate.

Converse v Converse, 225-1359; 282 NW 368

Modification—changed financial condition. A change for the better in the financial condition of a party to divorce proceedings may furnish basis for an application for modification of the decree. Decrees in re alimony will be subsequently modified only under unusual circumstances.

Handsaker v Handsaker, 223-462; 272 NW 609

Contemplated change of circumstances. A plea for modification of a decree of alimony must be based on some condition or state of circumstances not known to or reasonably contemplated by the parties when the decree was originally entered.

Handsaker v Handsaker, 223-462; 272 NW 609

Modification by action by executor. Whether an action or proceeding to modify an alimony allowance survives the death of the obligated party, and passes to the latter's executor, quaere, but, conceding such survival, there must be proof that the right to such modification existed in the obligated party during his lifetime.

Goldsberry v Goldsberry, 217-750; 252 NW 531

No modification without substantially changed condition. Trial court may not modify an original divorce decree without a substantial change in the condition of the parties, which must be more than small income employment for the wife and remarriage of the husband.

Metzger v Metzger, 224-546; 278 NW 187

Facts warranting modification. Divorce decree providing for $75 monthly payments for alimony and child support modified on showing of defendant's ownership of 120-acre farm and $1,500 unsecured debt as only assets.

Jones-Holmes v Jones, (NOR); 216 NW 688

Justifiable modification. A modification of a decree for monthly payments of alimony is justified by a showing that, since the entry of the decree, the defendant has, by reason of age, been retired by his employer on a pension which is defendant's sole means of support, and which is a very material reduction of his former income.

Toney v Toney, 213-398; 239 NW 21

Justifiable modification. A decree for alimony may be subsequently modified by reducing the amount on a showing of loss of health and lessened earning ability, even tho the allowance is solely for the benefit of a child.

Paul v Paul, 217-977; 252 NW 114

Factors justifying reduction. On application for modification of alimony decree, evidence relating to both parties' ages, health, wages, earning capacities, expenses and indebtedness justified trial court's reduction of alimony from $50 to $30.

Siders v Siders, 227-764; 288 NW 909

Insufficient change in condition. Evidence held insufficient to show such change in the condition of the parties to a divorce decree as to justify a modification of the provisions relative to alimony by returning to the applicant a part of a specific property once awarded to plaintiff.

McNary v McNary, 206-942; 221 NW 580

Justifiable refusal to increase. The refusal of the court to increase a former award of alimony finds full justification in the fact that, at the time of the application for the increase, the applicant was in affluent circumstances.

Miller v Miller, 200-1193; 206 NW 262

Unallowable modification. Where parties to a divorce proceeding formally stipulated that they owned all the capital stock of a corporation, and that said stock should be equally divided between them, and said stipulation was carried into, and confirmed by, the decree, the defendant will not later be granted a modification assigning to plaintiff a minority of the stock on the ground that defendant was mistaken, when the decree was entered, in the ownership of one share, when at said time he had knowledge of every fact bearing on the ownership of said share.

Parker v Parker, 214-1327; 241 NW 497

Unallowable modification. An unappealed decree of divorce, which specifically denies all allowance of alimony because the parties had theretofore entered into a property settlement, is a finality on the subject matter of alimony, and may not, long after the court term has expired, be modified by inserting said settlement therein as alimony, because (1) said modification would contradict said final decree, and (2) any prior contract between the parties relative to alimony necessarily merges into the final decree.

Duvall v Duvall, 215-24; 244 NW 718; 83 ALR 1242

Nonallowable modification. Where parties to a divorce proceeding owned the entire capital stock of a corporation, and said stock was decreed to the parties in equal shares, a subsequent modification of the decree will not be entered because of the doing of acts in the course of the corporate management in which each acquiesced, nor because one of the parties now apprehends that said equal division of stock will ultimately result in a deadlock in corporate management.

Parker v Parker, 214-1327; 241 NW 497

Unauthorized modification. A decree in divorce proceedings to the effect that the wife should, until a named date, have the possession of certain property belonging to the husband, and that the husband, in the meantime, should pay off an existing mortgage and accruing taxes on the property, works a vested interest in the husband when he complies with the decree—an interest which the court has no jurisdiction to disturb by a subsequent order conferring the property absolutely on the wife.

Guisinger v Guisinger, 201-409; 205 NW 752

Modification refused—noninterference on appeal. The refusal of the trial court to modify its previous order relative to monthly payments will not be interfered with in the absence of a showing of abuse. Evidence held insufficient to reveal such abuse.

Kirk v Kirk, 222-945; 270 NW 432

Unsupported modification. A decree in divorce action may not be subsequently modified on hearsay evidence of misconduct on the part of one of the parties.

McDaniel v McDaniel, 218-772; 253 NW 803

Unallowable grounds. An unappealed decree in divorce proceedings as to the property rights of the parties may not be modified on the grounds that the applicant did not "understand" the decree.

Guisinger v Guisinger, 201-409; 205 NW 752

III SUBSEQUENT CHANGES IN ALIMONY AND CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—concluded

Overestimated values. A decree for alimony will not be modified on the ground (1) that the stipulation for alimony and the decree confirming it overestimated the value of the husband's property, or (2) that the defendant has unexpectedly been called upon to discharge an obligation of suretyship of which he had knowledge when the decree was entered.

Goldsberry v Goldsberry, 217-750; 252 NW 531

Remarriage. One who asks for a modification of a decree for alimony has the burden to plead and prove the change of circumstances which will justify such modification. Where the only proven change in circumstances was that the defendant had remarried and had a dependent family, held that the modification granted was ample and would not be increased.

Morrison v Morrison, 208-1384; 227 NW 330

Remarriage—lessened earning power, etc. The remarriage of a person at a time when an unsatisfied decree for alimony in monthly installments exists against him does not constitute grounds for an order reducing said alimony, but an unavoidable reduction in earning power of the defendant, and the fact that the family of the plaintiff in alimony has decreased in size may furnish such grounds.

Boquette v Boquette, 215-990; 247 NW 255

Remarriage—effect. While remarriage is not, in and of itself, such change of circumstances as will justify a modification of a decree of alimony, yet the remarried person may secure a modification if his evidence, other than the mere showing of remarriage, meets the requirements of the statute.

Nicolls v Nicolls, 211-1193; 235 NW 288

Remarriage—effect. Remarriage of divorced husband does not alone present such change in the circumstances as to justify a modification of alimony requirements.

Siders v Siders, 227-764; 288 NW 909

Remarriage as "change of circumstances". The continuing expense consequent on the remarriage of a person decreed to pay alimony is not, in and of itself, such "change in circumstances" as to authorize a modification of that part of the decree pertaining to alimony, especially when such remarriage is in violation of the statute.

Stone v Stone, 212-1344; 235 NW 492

Impaired health and remarriage. The fact (1) that the health, but not the income, of a defendant has become impaired since the entry of a decree for alimony, (2) that the defendant has remarried since the divorce, and that a child will soon be born to him, and (3) that the plaintiff has since the decree become more able to support herself and child (such being contemplated by the decree) are not such "change in circumstances" as will authorize a modification of the decree for alimony.

Newburn v Newburn, 210-639; 231 NW 389

Remarriage justifying modification. Monthly payments decreed to a wife "for the support" of her minor child, will be canceled when it is made to appear (1) that the wife was also decreed substantial alimony "for the support of herself and minor child"; (2) that she has since remarried and is being amply supported by her present husband, (3) that she has adequate means from the alimony awarded to her to support the child, and (4) that the financial condition of the father has changed to his detriment.

Kruckman v Kruckman, 209-1218; 229 NW 700

Subsequent birth of child. A decree of divorce will not be modified by increasing the alimony because of the subsequent birth of a child when consideration was given to such possible birth in fixing the original amount of alimony.

Kiger v Kiger, 205-1200; 219 NW 314

Subsequent entry of omitted provision. An agreement as to alimony inadvertently omitted from the decree may be subsequently entered on proper application.

Bennett v Bennett, 200-415; 203 NW 26

Stipulated decree—effect. The fact that the alimony part of a decree was based upon an agreed stipulation of the parties, does not place it in the category of an enforceable contract and therefore beyond the power of the court to modify.

Nicolls v Nicolls, 211-1193; 235 NW 288

Waiver of notice. Failure to serve an adverse party in divorce proceedings with notice of a hearing to modify the decree becomes quite immaterial when such adverse party appears at said hearing in person and by attorney.

Guisinger v Guisinger, 201-409; 205 NW 752

IV COSTS AND ATTORNEY FEES

Attorney fees. A successful party in divorce proceedings is entitled to an allowance for attorney fees.

Black v Black, 200-1016; 205 NW 970

Attorney fees. Equity will not set aside a consent judgment for attorney fees for both parties in divorce proceedings, against the defeated party and his land, when no fraud is shown, and when the court had personal jurisdiction over both parties to the proceeding.

Coulter v Smith, 201-984; 206 NW 827

Decree for attorney fees—nonadjudication as to attorney. A decree in divorce proceedings awarding plaintiff (in addition to a divorce) a specified sum as attorney fees is not an adjudication as to the amount owing by plaintiff to her attorney for services rendered in the action,—the attorney, of course, not being a party to the action.

Jones v Park, 220-894; 262 NW 797; 264 NW 700

Duke v Park, 220-889; 262 NW 799

Maddy v Park, 220-899; 262 NW 796

Former dismissed actions. The court may refuse to a successful party in divorce proceedings any allowance by way of costs and attorney fees contracted in prior and voluntarily dismissed actions for divorce between the same parties.

Black v Black, 200-1016; 205 NW 970

Nonallowable attorney fees. Attorney fees are not allowable on an application to modify alimony allowance.

Barish v Barish, 190-493; 180 NW 724

Nicolls v Nicolls, 211-1193; 235 NW 288

Stone v Stone, 212-1344; 235 NW 492

Hensen v Hensen, 212-1226; 238 NW 83

Duvall v Duvall, 215-24; 244 NW 718; 83 ALR 1242

V SEPARATE MAINTENANCE

Discussion. See 24 ILR 137—Separate maintenance

Creature of equity only. Principle reaffirmed that an action by a wife against the husband for separate maintenance is a creature of equity only, not of statute.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Separate decree to wife. Principle recognized that in an action by a husband for divorce the wife may, on proper pleading and supporting evidence, be granted a decree for separate maintenance.

Waddington v Waddington, 218-460; 255 NW 462

Separate maintenance. Separate maintenance may not be decreed on evidence which would be insufficient to justify a decree of divorce.

Depping v Depping, 206-1203; 219 NW 416

Krotz v Krotz, 209-433; 228 NW 30

Bartlett v Bartlett, 214-616; 243 NW 588

Agnew v Agnew, 216-1; 248 NW 241

Separate maintenance. Tho a husband is guilty of no personal violence toward his wife, yet she may be entitled to separate maintenance on a showing that his conduct toward her has been domineering, arbitrary, unsympathetic, unkind, stubborn, uncommunicative, and parsimonious, and that such treatment has endangered her life.

Cruse v Cruse, 201-810; 208 NW 324

Divorce in lieu of separate maintenance. The court has no right to decree a divorce on a cross-petition which alleges cruel and inhuman treatment but specifically prays for separate maintenance only; and this is true tho there is also a prayer for general equitable relief, it appearing that cross-petitioner's attitude on the trial was in strict accord with said prayer.

Davis v Davis, 209-1186; 229 NW 855

DeReus v DeReus, 212-762; 237 NW 323

Essential conditions. A wife in an action against her husband for separate maintenance, on the ground of inhuman treatment, is entitled to a decree only in case her supporting evidence is such as would entitle her to a divorce if she asked such relief. Evidence held amply to meet said requirement.

Bartlett v Bartlett, 214-616; 243 NW 588

Approved allowance. An allowance of $60 per month for separate maintenance reviewed, and held proper.

Bartlett v Bartlett, 214-616; 243 NW 588

Attachment not authorized. The statutory power of a judge of the district court in action for divorce to order an attachment, with or without bond, does not authorize him to enter such order in an action for separate maintenance.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Counter plea—allowance. Record held to justify the entry of a decree and for the allowance of $40 per month for the separate maintenance of the wife, on her counter plea in divorce action.

Crees v Crees, 218-338; 255 NW 515

Divorce and remarriage as bar. An action for separate maintenance presupposes the existence of the marriage relation, and a wife who institutes such action while the marriage relation exists may not, after the entry of a valid decree of divorce, and after the remarriage of both parties, maintain the action, even to the extent of recovering (1) for her own past support up to the time of her remarriage, or (2) for the past and future support of her minor child.

Freet v Holdorf, 205-1081; 216 NW 619

Foreign decree. The recognition of the validity in this state of a foreign divorce decree in rem does not preclude the courts of this state from adjusting the property rights of one of the parties, under a decree in this state for separate maintenance.

Miller v Miller, 200-1193; 206 NW 262

Foreign judgment — full-faith-and-credit clause. An unmodified judgment in personam in a court of competent jurisdiction of a foreign state which is then the matrimonial domicile of both husband and wife, for the

V SEPARATE MAINTENANCE—conclud'd maintenance of the wife, payable in monthly installments, is entitled to the full-faith-and-credit clause of the federal constitution as to all matured installments, even tho, subsequent to the entry of such judgment, the judgment defendant departs from the matrimonial domicile and obtains in this state a naked degree of divorce on service by publication.

Bennett v Tomlinson, 206-1075; 221 NW 837

Fraudulent decree—new trial. An unappealed decree of a court of competent jurisdiction of a sister state, granting separate maintenance to a wife on the ground of desertion, and dismissing the husband's cross-petition for divorce on the same ground, constitutes a final adjudication that the husband was not entitled to a divorce on any ground (the laws of the two states being the same), and is binding on the courts of this state, and a decree of divorce subsequently obtained in this state by the husband on service by publication and on the ground of desertion, and without revealing the foreign decree, will be deemed fraudulent and will be set aside on timely petition by the wife and a new trial granted of her prayer.

Bowen v Bowen, 219-550; 258 NW 882

Habitual drunkenness—fixed habit as essential element. In determining whether a husband or wife, after marriage, has become an habitual drunkard, the element of "fixed habit" in the excessive use of intoxicants is an all-essential element.

Leonard v Leonard, 221-722; 266 NW 537

Statute of limitation. In case of a judgment for the separate maintenance of a wife through monthly installments, the statute of limitation does not commence to run from the date of the judgment, but on each separate installment from the maturity thereof.

Bennett v Tomlinson, 206-1075; 221 NW 837

Weight given decision of lower court. Altho a divorce action, being in equity, is triable de novo on appeal, yet the supreme court will give serious consideration to the decision of the lower court when there is a conflict in the testimony. Evidence reviewed and held to justify award of separate maintenance to the wife and to deny divorce to the husband.

Blew v Blew, 225-832; 282 NW 361

Written stipulation for decree—effect. The signing by a plaintiff and a defendant in an action for separate maintenance of an agreement which specifies the amount and terms of such maintenance and provides for the entry of decree in accordance therewith, and the filing of such stipulation in the action, constitute an appearance by the defendant to said action.

Kalde v Kalde, 207-121; 222 NW 351

VI DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY

Disposition of property. An adjudication of property interests and a disposition of the household goods in a divorce action, is proper, there being a prayer by both parties for general equitable relief, and the issue, moreover, being voluntarily litigated.

Garside v Garside, 208-534; 224 NW 586

Cancellation of instruments. In divorce action, trial court was justified in cancelling notes and deeds from husband to wife for lack of consideration, under statute empowering court to make proper disposition of the property of the parties.

Graham v Graham, 227-223; 288 NW 78

Death of party—appeal not abated. Death of appellee during pendency of divorce appeal to the supreme court does not abate the action when property rights are involved.

Graham v Graham, 227-223; 288 NW 78

Division in kind not desirable. In divorce action, where trial court awarded the wife unincumbered land, a dwelling house, household goods, a money judgment, and various sums of money for child support, payment of a debt, costs, attorney fees, and temporary alimony, all of which, at court's valuation, amounted to approximately one-third of husband's property, held, the decree was as nearly equitable as was possible, especially in view of fact that his nonliquid assets consisted of various interests in real estate and were of such nature that even an equal division in kind would have put the wife in a worse position.

Twombly v Twombly, 227-177; 287 NW 841

Factors considered in dividing property. In divorce action, general principle recognized that in division of property court should take into consideration the sex, age, health, future prospects of the parties, the private estate of each, the contributions of each to the joint or accumulated property, the earning capacity of each, their respective incomes and their respective indebtedness, and so of necessity each case involving disposition of property must stand on its own facts.

Twombly v Twombly, 227-177; 287 NW 841

Factors in disposition of property. Where wife is offending party and contributed nothing to property of husband, the court, taking into consideration the age, health, and future prospects of the parties was justified in granting property to the husband.

Graham v Graham, 227-223; 288 NW 78

Noninvalidating provision. That part of a decree in divorce proceedings which, in disposing of the property of the parties, purports to impose an obligation on a corporation, the entire capital stock of which is owned by the parties and decreed to them in equal shares, is not void as between the parties to the action, or as to the property decreed to each of the parties.

Parker v Parker, 214-1327; 241 NW 497

Lien against homestead. In a divorce action granting wife a decree of divorce and alimony, decree could make provision for the disposition of the homestead or make charges against it in favor of one of the parties as against the other.

Ayers v Ayers, 227-646; 288 NW 679

Property-settlement contract — fraud — insufficient defense. A defendant sued by his former wife on a property-settlement contract, fully performed by her, availeth himself nothing in the way of a defense by nakedly alleging fraud by the wife in obtaining the contract when such allegation is made neither as a basis for a rescission of the contract nor for damages.

Poole v Poole, 219-70; 257 NW 305

Stipulation in re property—effect. A stipulation between plaintiff and defendant in a divorce proceeding to the effect that the defendant, for the good of the children of the parties, shall not "convey, incumber, or mortgage in any manner" certain named lands does not constitute a conveyance to the children, even tho the stipulation is fully embraced in the subsequently entered decree.

Putensen v Dreeszen, 206-1242; 219 NW 490

Unconscionable stipulation. A stipulation relative to the property and personal rights of a wife, tho signed by her, may be so unconscionable that a court of equity will refuse to enforce it.

Olds v Olds, 219-1395; 260 NW 1; 261 NW 488

Validity of deeds—clause repugnant to fee. A stipulation in divorce proceedings, even tho carried into the decree, is a nullity insofar as it seeks to render land exempt from the claims of creditors of the fee-title owner.

Putensen v Dreeszen, 206-1242; 219 NW 490

10482 Contempt.

Burden to purge. In proceedings for contempt in failing to pay alimony, defendant must purge himself.

Roach v Oliver, 215-800; 244 NW 899

Contempt proceedings—constitutionality. A defendant who is decreed to pay alimony and who willfully secretes his property for the purpose of avoiding compliance with said order, may be imprisoned as for a contempt of court, an award of alimony not being a "debt" in the sense of the constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for "debt".

Mason v Dist. Court, 209-774; 229 NW 168
Roberts v Fuller, 210-956; 229 NW 163
Roach v Oliver, 215-800; 244 NW 899

Disobedience of divorce decree. In an equity action involving alleged nonpayment of support under a divorce decree and seeking punishment for alleged disobedience of the decree, a contempt order will not issue unless the disobedience was willful and the proof thereof clear and satisfactory, and where a father is willing to pay a reasonable sum for his son's expenses at college, a refusal to cite for contempt is proper.

Johnstone v Johnstone, 226-503; 284 NW 379

Inability to pay. Actual inability to pay alimony is a complete defense to a charge of contempt of court.

Pewick v Meyer, 202-134; 209 NW 396
Porter v Maxwell, 208-1224; 226 NW 917
Mason v Dist. Court, 209-774; 229 NW 168

Orders—violation. The violation of an order to the defendant in pending divorce proceedings not to interfere with the person of the plaintiff or with plaintiff's peaceable possession of her home is properly punished as a contempt.

Blunk v Walker, 206-1389; 222 NW 358

Willful avoidance of decree. A willful refusal to pay an award of alimony may be punished as a contempt of court by imprisonment until the award is paid.

Roberts v Fuller, 210-956; 229 NW 163

Unallowable avoidance. Under a decree awarding a wife and mother the custody of minor children, and directly awarding her alimony for herself and children, the defendant may not excuse his default in making payment by showing that he has expended a named amount for the support of one of the said children and obligated himself for other sums for the same purpose, there being no proof that the wife consented to such method of payment.

Roach v Oliver, 215-800; 244 NW 899

10484 Remarriage.

Atty. Gen. Opinton. See AG Op June 20, '39

10486 Annuling illegal marriage—causes.

"Annulment" and "divorce" distinguished. A husband may not maintain an independent action in equity to nullify a marriage on the ground that the wife, at the time of marriage, was, unbeknown to him, pregnant by another than himself. His action should be one for divorce on said ground.

Clark v Clark, 219-338; 258 NW 719

Insanity—sufficiency of evidence. Evidence reviewed and held sufficient to authorize default decree annulling marriage on ground of insanity at time of marriage.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

Foreign judicial records—improper certification first raised on appeal. Admission of improperly certified judicial records of Texas and Michigan bearing on issue of defendant's sanity in trial of default action to annul marriage is not ground for reversal of court's action in refusing to set aside the default annulment when lower court was not given opportunity to pass upon the competency of the records. The rule is that a party is not to be surprised on appeal by new objections and issues, nor as to defects within his power to remedy had he been advised in the proper time and manner.

Kurtz v Kurtz, 228- ; 290 NW 686

Attorney fees — when nontaxable. Tho a husband's action against his wife for the annulment of the marriage is legally nonmaintainable, and is therefore dismissed, attorney fees for the wife for defending the action may not be taxed against him.

Clark v Clark, 219-338; 258 NW 719

Temporary alimony and suit money. In an action by a wife for separate maintenance, a prayer by the husband for an annulment of the marriage because of the alleged invalidity of said marriage, furnishes sufficient showing of a marriage to justify an allowance of temporary alimony and suit money.

Hanford v Hanford, 214-839; 240 NW 732

10489 Children—legitimacy.

Adjudication of bastardy — effect on child. That part of a decree of divorce which adjudges that a child of the wife is not the child of the husband is a nullity as far as the child is concerned.

Ryke v Ream, 212-126; 234 NW 196

Child begotten out of, but born in, wedlock —presumption. A child manifestly begotten out of wedlock but born during wedlock is presumed to be the child of such intermarried persons.

Ryke v Ream, 212-126; 234 NW 196

CHAPTER 472

MINORS

10492 Period of minority.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '30 AG Op 173; '38 AG Op 899

Contributory negligence — duty to negative —sufficient proof by infant. Plaintiff, in an action for damages for negligently inflicted injuries, establishes prima facie freedom from contributory negligence by proof that when he suffered the injuries in question he was only ten years of age, thereby advantaging himself of the common-law presumption arising from such proof. And the case would be quite rare where defendant's rebutting testimony would be so convincing and overwhelming as per se to overthrow said prima facie showing.

Flickinger v Phillips, 221-837; 267 NW 101

Contributory negligence. Where a minor bicyclist collided with a car unlawfully parked on left side of city street without tail light, when he pulled over to his right to avoid an approaching car the question of his contributory negligence, which depended on whether or not he should have observed the parked car in time to avoid the collision, was for the jury.

Trailer v Schelm, 227-780; 288 NW 865

Marriage in foreign state—parties below age requirement—voidable only. A marriage, the parents consenting thereto, in a foreign state, between two persons, one of whom has not reached the age at and above which parents may give their consent for marriage, is not void but merely voidable, and as affecting rights in Iowa such parties thereby legally reach majority.

Boehm v Rohlfs, 224-226; 276 NW 105

Support and maintenance—stepchildren. The legal obligation of a father to support his minor children extends to stepchildren.

Rule v Rule, 204-1122; 216 NW 629

Will construction—reaching majority—law of testator's domicile controls. When the property is situated and the testator was domiciled in Iowa, provisions of the will as to real and personal property and question as to named devisee attaining majority are to be determined according to the law of testator's domicile.

Boehm v Rohlfs, 224-226; 276 NW 105

10493 Contracts—disaffirmance.

Family expenses. See under §10459

Discussion. See 11 ILR 394—Liability of surety when infant disaffirms; 20 ILR 785—Infant's liability on contract

Disaffirmance of joint contract. A party who jointly contracts with an adult and a minor must take notice of the amount which the minor contributed to the deal.

Roeper v Danese, 206-964; 221 NW 506

Disaffirmance—release of surety. The disaffirmance by a minor of his contract of purchase and of his negotiable promissory note given in connection therewith, before the property is delivered to him, releases the surety on the note of all liability to the payee, even tho the surety signed the note because of the known minority of the principal. In case the note has passed to a holder in due course by indorsement by the payee, the liability of the indorser becomes primary and the liability of the surety becomes secondary.

Lagerquist v Guar. Co., 201-430; 205 NW 977; 43 ALR 585

Ineffectual affirmance. A minor, being under a disability to enter into a contract during his minority, is likewise under a disability to affirm the contract during his minority. Held, that the bringing of an action by the minor during minority for damages consequent on the contract did not prevent him, after withdrawing from the action during minority, and before trial, from bringing an action to disaffirm the contract.

Roeper v Danese, 206-964; 221 NW 506

Disaffirmance by minor. A void order of the probate court authorizing the executor to satisfy a cash bequest to a minor by transferring a note and mortgage to the father of the minor as the latter's natural guardian, may be disaffirmed and repudiated by the minor on reaching his majority.

Irwin v Bank & Trust, 218-477; 255 NW 671

Timely disaffirmance. A delay of some fifty days after a person attains his majority before disaffirming a contract of exchange of automobiles is not necessarily untimely.

Eckrich v Hogan Bros., 220-755; 263 NW 308

Disaffirmance—reasonable time. A minor, upon becoming of age, is required to disaffirm contracts made during minority within a reasonable time after attaining majority or within a reasonable time after discovery of the fraud.

In re Fisher, 226-596; 284 NW 821

Limitation on right. A minor may not disaffirm a contract which has been entered into by a partnership of which he is a member, and recover of the other party to the contract on the theory that the money of the minor was paid out under such contract, when such other party in good faith entered into the contract, without knowledge that the minor was a member of the partnership.

Kuehl v Means, 206-539; 218 NW 907; 58 ALR 1359

Nonliability of agent. A minor upon disaffirmance of his contract may not recover of an agent who disclosed his principal and acted strictly within his authority.

Hubler v Gates, 209-1198; 229 NW 767

Ratification of settlement—failure to disaffirm. In guardianship proceeding, wherein father acting as guardian made a settlement with his children after son had reached his majority, but daughter lacked three months of being 21 years of age, and suit against the father for an accounting was not brought until two and one-half years after the settlement, held, evidence sufficient to support finding of trial court in approving the guardian's report which, in effect, approved the settlement, the same having been ratified by failure to disaffirm within a reasonable period of time.

In re Fisher, 226-596; 284 NW 821

Guardian—unauthorized investments—rejection by ward. A ward, on the hearing on the final report of the guardian, may reject any or all loans or investments made by the guardian without the authority or approval of the court.

In re Jefferson, 219-429; 257 NW 783

Guardian—unauthorized and imprudent investments. A guardian who, without authorization from the court, invests his ward's funds in real estate does so at his peril and irrespective of his good faith; nor may he compel the ward to accept such property even tho the ward did not promptly disavow the investment on attaining his majority.

In re Pharmer, 211-1285; 235 NW 478

Unauthorized and invalid investments—who may question. The invalidity which attends the act of a guardian in loaning guardianship funds to himself, individually, and in securing such loan by a first mortgage on real estate,—all without any preauthorizing order of court,—may not be pleaded by a second mortgagee of the land on the theory that such invalidity absolutely voided the said note and mortgage to the guardian, and thereby left the purported second mortgage as the first lien on the land. The sole right to question the legality of said acts of the guardian rests in the ward, or in his heirs, or in those properly representing said ward or heirs.

Richardson v Lampe, 221-410; 265 NW 629

10494 Misrepresentations—engaging in business.

Disaffirmance barred by misrepresentation. A person may not disaffirm his contract on the ground that he was a minor when the contract was entered into, when, at said time, he falsely represented that he was an adult, and, to all appearance, was such.

Eckrich v Hogan Bros., 220-755; 263 NW 308

Failure to restore property—effect. A minor may not disaffirm his contract when he has entered into it as an apparent adult, and when the party contracted with had good reason to believe, and did believe, that he was contracting with an adult. Especially is this true when the minor fails to make any restoration of the property received by him under the contract.

Kuehl v Means, 206-539; 218 NW 907; 58 ALR 1359

Invalid articles of adoption as enforceable contract. See under §11846 (II), Vol. I

Right of foster parents to inherit from adopted child. See under §12017

Discussion. See 3 ILB 48—Specific performance in adoption contracts; 13 ILR 84—Specific performance of contracts to adopt

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 421

Articles—liberal construction. In determining the validity of articles of adoption, the court will note, if such is the fact, that the attack is being made by collateral heirs.

In re Wadst, 209-1200; 229 NW 835

Articles—noninvalidating defects. Articles of adoption otherwise valid, are not, under Ch. 7, Title 15, C., '73, rendered invalid:

1. When they are signed and consented to by only one of the natural parents, the other being insane, and confined in a state hospital, or

2. Because they do not literally contain the statutory provision that the consenting parent "gives the child to the adopter for the purpose of adoption as his own child", or

3. Because, while they state the residence of the consenting parent, they fail to state the residence of the child or insane parent, or

4. Because, while they state the present name of the child, they fail to state the future name of such child.

In re Wadst, 209-1200; 229 NW 835

Creature of statute. Adoption of children is a procedure unknown to the common law.

In re Fitzgerald, 223-141; 272 NW 117

Adoption by estoppel. The execution, by the actual and the foster parents of a child, of articles of adoption of the child, with implicit reliance thereon by said parties that said articles were legally complete, followed during the ensuing years by full performance by the child of all duties legally incident to a complete adoption (even tho said articles were never entered of record as required by statute, and even tho the contents of said articles cannot be determined because they have been lost) creates an adoption by estoppel absolutely binding on the foster parents and necessarily on their heirs.

Shaw v Scott, 217-1259; 252 NW 237

Adoption by estoppel. Evidence that deceased recognized plaintiff as his own son and so referred to him, that plaintiff gave deceased the obedience, loyalty, and affection of a natural son, and that deceased reciprocated in kind and gave plaintiff his name and took him into his home, created an adoption by estoppel, so that heirs of deceased were estopped from denying the adoption, and plaintiff held entitled to inherit as adopted son.

Bergman v Carson, 226-449; 284 NW 442

Adoption by estoppel. Evidence that at the age of thirteen months the plaintiff was taken by foster parents from her natural parents under an agreement to adopt her, and that she was reared by the foster parents, the foster mother referring to her as a daughter in conversation and in a will, established an adoption by estoppel, estopping other heirs of the foster mother from denying the adoption.

Vermillion v Sikora, 227-786; 289 NW 27

Charitable institution. A charitable institution, concededly a home-finding agency, under statutory authorization which, however, did not engage in finding homes and did not comply with the law in accepting children and did not properly held to be entitled to benefits of school law for the reason that violations of other statutes were immaterial issues.

School Twp. v Nicholson, 227-290; 288 NW 123

Domicile of abandoned child. Upon the death of a parent of a child and the abandonment of the child by the other parent, the next of kin may, if acting in good faith, legally determine the domicile of said child for the purpose of adoption.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Parol agreement to adopt. A parol agreement to adopt a child is unenforceable.

Morris v Trotter, 202-232; 210 NW 131

Material departure from statute. A material departure from the statutory requirements for the adoption of a child nullifies the articles of adoption.

In re Williamson, 205-772; 218 NW 469

Support and maintenance—stepchildren. The legal obligation of a father to support his minor children extends to stepchildren.

Rule v Rule, 204-1122; 216 NW 629

10501.3 Consent, when necessary.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 421, 559

Consent by guardian ad litem. A guardian ad litem in adoption proceedings need not consent to such adoption.

In re Burkholder, 211-1222; 233 NW 702

Consent by guardian. The statutory requirement that a guardian consent to the adoption of his ward is complied with when the guardian consents that he adopt the child himself.

In re Burkholder, 211-1222; 233 NW 702

Consent of both divorced parents—father contributing to support. Under adoption statute providing that, where the parents are not married to each other, the "parent having the care and providing for the wants of the child" may give consent to adoption, where mother and father, who were divorced, had stipulated that in case of divorce the father would contribute to the support of child and have the right of visitation and thereafter divorce decree gave effect to the stipulation, the mother was not "parent having the care and providing for the wants of child" to the exclusion of father so as to authorize child's adoption with mother's consent without consent of natural father.

Rubendall v Bisterfelt, 227-1388; 291 NW 401

Divorced father contributing child support not notified—adoption invalid. Where a father and mother stipulated that father would contribute to support of child and have the right to visit the child, and divorce decree gave effect to the provisions, and thereafter the mother gave consent to adoption in an adoption proceeding without notice to the father, he not having consented, abandoned, waived, or forfeited his paternal right, the mother's consent to the adoption was not sufficient and the decree of adoption was void.

Rubendall v Bisterfelt, 227-1388; 291 NW 401

Controlling considerations. The fact that one custody of a child may offer larger financial and educational advantages than another custody, is not necessarily a controlling consideration on the issue of the child's best welfare.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Custody of child—loss of right. The mother of an illegitimate child, who has for a long series of years evinced but a very casual interest in the child, may not successfully urge her right to the custody of the child, against fit and proper parties who have nurtured, cared for, and educated the child from birth, even tho they have been paid compensation by parties other than the mother, it appearing that it would not be to the best interest of the child to decree custody to the mother.

Barry v Reeves, 203-1345; 214 NW 519

Death of mother—revival of paternal rights—conditions. Assuming that the death of a mother (to whom the custody of her infant child has been judicially awarded) revives the custodial rights of the father, yet he must assert such rights with a promptness commensurate with the helplessness of the child, or he will be deemed to have forfeited and waived them, and will not, thereafter, be permitted to challenge the rights of another custodian except on the grounds of unfitness.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Dying request—materiality. Evidence of the dying request of a mother as to the future custody of her infant child is highly material on the issue of such custody.

Jensen v Sorenson, 211-354; 233 NW 717

Invalid appointment of guardian. The right of a fit and proper father to the custody of his minor child whom he has never abandoned, and whose custody he has neither forfeited nor waived, is in no manner affected by orders of court (1) appointing, without notice to said parent, the maternal grandfather as guardian of said child, and (2) authorizing said guardian to proceed and adopt said child; especially is this true when the petition by the mother for the appointment of the grandfather was not filed until after the appointment was made.

In re McFarland, 214-417; 239 NW 702

10501.4 Notice of hearing.

Fabricated ground of abandonment. A decree of adoption of a child, based solely on a finding that the child had been abandoned by its parent, and entered without notice to the parent of the hearing, tho her residence was known, will be set aside on a direct attack supported by affirmative and conclusive evidence that the child had never been so abandoned.

Pitzenberger v Schnack, 215-466; 245 NW 713

10501.5 Decree—change of name.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 360

10501.6 Status of the adopted child.

Discussion. See 16 ILR 538—Visits by natural parents; 22 ILR 145—Inheritance by adopted children

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '36 AG Op 191

Scope of section. This section "does not determine the status of the adopted child as to the ancestor or other relative of the adopting parent".

Cook v Underwood, 209-641; 228 NW 629

Right of inheritance.

McCune v Oldham, 213-1221; 240 NW 678

Status of children of adopted child. The legal status of children of an adopted child is, inter alia, that of grandchildren of their foster grandparents.

Shaw v Scott, 217-1259; 252 NW 237

Liberal construction against collateral heirs. Articles of adoption, executed under §3251, C., '97, will not, in an action involving the right of the alleged adopted child to inherit from the alleged foster parents in preference to collateral heirs, be held invalid simply because the name of the father of said child is not stated in said articles, tho said section literally requires such statement.

Eggimann-Eckard v Evans, 220-762; 263 NW 328

Collateral heirs over natural parents. The estate of a legally adopted, intestate, spouseless and issueless person whose adopting parents are both dead leaving surviving collateral heirs only, descends to said collateral heirs and not to the surviving natural parents or parent of said adopted person.

In re Fitzgerald, 223-141; 272 NW 117

Descent and distribution—persons entitled. The heirs as a class of each adopting parent, each class receiving one half, rather than the natural parents or their heirs, inherit the estate of an adopted child dying intestate to the exclusion of adopting father's surviving second wife who was decreed no part of the estate and did not appeal—but, quære, if surviving second wife had claimed a dower interest.

In re Smith, 223-817; 273 NW 891

Adoption by estoppel. Evidence that deceased recognized plaintiff as his own son and so referred to him, that plaintiff gave deceased the obedience, loyalty, and affection of a natural son, and that deceased reciprocated in kind and gave plaintiff his name and took him into his home, created an adoption by estoppel, so that heirs of deceased were estopped from denying the adoption, and plaintiff held entitled to inherit as adopted son.

Bergman v Carson, 226-449; 284 NW 442

Adoption by estoppel. Evidence that at the age of thirteen months the plaintiff was taken by foster parents from her natural parents under an agreement to adopt her, and that she was reared by the foster parents, the foster mother referring to her as a daughter in conversation and in a will, established an adoption by estoppel, estopping other heirs of the foster mother from denying the adoption.

Vermillion v Sikora, 227-786; 289 NW 27

Adoption by estoppel—surrender of child as consideration. An oral contract to adopt a child, not followed by legal adoption, was not within the statute of frauds when part of the consideration, the surrender of the child, was given at the time the agreement was made. So the child was entitled to specific performance of the contract even tho it was contended that the contract was void under the statute of frauds of a foreign state.

Vermillion v Sikora, 227-786; 289 NW 27

10501.7 Annulment.

TITLE XXIX

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE

CHAPTER 474

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE COURT

10502 Jurisdiction.

Criminal jurisdiction. See under §13557
Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '25-26 AG Op 205

Exclusive jurisdiction to first court acquiring. The first court of competent jurisdiction to acquire jurisdiction of the subject matter of a case does so to the exclusion of all other courts of coordinate authority.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Requirements for valid decree. To be valid and binding, the acts of a court must be within the court's jurisdiction, i. e., it must have (1) jurisdiction of the subject, which is power to hear and determine cases in the general class of the question presented, and (2) jurisdiction of the person, which is power to subject the parties to the judgment.

Collins v Powell, 224-1015; 277 NW 477

Failure to notify party of trial day. The failure of a justice of the peace to notify defendant of the time to which a cause had been continued at defendant's request does not deprive the justice of jurisdiction to render judgment against the defendant.

Hensch v Meyers, 200-850; 205 NW 510

10503 Amount in controversy.

Exceeding amount—replevin a nullity. Under the statute allowing an enlarged jurisdiction for a justice of the peace up to $300 by written agreement, he is without authority to issue a writ of replevin for automobiles whose value exceeds such amount limiting his jurisdiction.

In re Sweet, 224-589; 277 NW 712

10505 Where defendant served.

Resident of adjoining township. A resident of a township in which there is no justice of the peace is suable in justice court in an adjoining township on personal service in the township of his residence.

Coulter Bros. v Riegel, 204-1032; 216 NW 715

10506 Replevin.

Constructive severance doctrine inapplicable to movable chattel. When a tenant purchases an electric lighting plant on agreement with the landlord that he may take it with him upon termination of the tenancy, and when, at the termination of such tenancy, the tenant purchases the reversion, there is no occasion to apply the doctrine of constructive severance, because the plant maintained at all times its character as a movable chattel.

Equitable Life v Chapman, 225-988; 282 NW 355

Farm light plant—not part of realty. In a replevin action for a Delco lighting plant placed on a concrete block in the basement of a farm house, such electric plant is not essential to the main business of operating the farm, but is a mere convenience, and is not a part of the realty when it is easily removable, along with the batteries resting on a shelf, and without damage to the house, the wiring being capable of use with any other electrical installation, and when there is no evidence of an intent that it be permanently fixed.

Equitable Life v Chapman, 225-988; 282 NW 355

Jurisdiction—exceeding amount—replevin a nullity. Under the statute allowing an enlarged jurisdiction for a justice of the peace up to $300 by written agreement, he is without authority to issue a writ of replevin for automobiles whose value exceeds such amount limiting his jurisdiction.

In re Sweet, 224-589; 277 NW 712

10515 In adjoining township.

Resident of adjoining township. A resident of a township in which there is no justice of the peace is suable in justice court in an adjoining township on personal service in the township of his residence.

Coulter Bros. v Riegel, 204-1032; 216 NW 715

10516 Docket furnished.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '28 AG Op 96

10517 Entries on docket.

Confession of judgment—mandatory duties. A "statement of confession", or "cognovit" oftentimes referred to as a "power of attorney" or simply as a "power", is the written authority of the debtor and his direction to the clerk of the district court, or justice of the peace, to enter judgment against him as stated therein and the statutory provision that "the clerk shall thereupon make an entry of judgment" is definite and mandatory, so the mere recording by the clerk of the debtor's admission of indebtedness, confession of judgment, and authorization to the clerk to enter judgment was not the "entry of judgment by confession" required by statute. Execution issued thereon was properly annulled and decree quieting title to land in owners as against execution levy and making permanent a temporary injunction enjoining execution sale was proper.

Blott v Blott, 227-1108; 290 NW 74

10524 Service and return.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '34 AG Op 396

10529 Time for appearance.

Municipal courts. This section is not applicable to municipal courts.

Boody v Sawyer, 201-496; 207 NW 589

10531 Adjournment.

Jurisdiction. The failure of a justice of the peace to notify defendant of the time to which a cause had been continued at defendant's request does not deprive the justice of jurisdiction to render judgment against the defendant.

Hensch v Myers, 200-850; 205 NW 510

10536 Written instruments filed.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See AG Op July 17, '39

10548 Judgment set aside.

Forcible entry and detainer — dismissal — effect. A justice of the peace who, after an action of forcible entry and detainer has been returned to him on a writ of error, enters an authorized order of dismissal, has no jurisdiction, so long as said order of dismissal remains on the docket, to enter in said assumed proceedings "The decision of Justice Jones reversed. Order of removal cancelled."; moreover, assuming jurisdiction, the form of such entry is quite nugatory.

Rasmussen v Alberts, 215-644; 246 NW 620

10560 Mutual judgments set off.

Effect on lien of attorney. The offsetting of the larger against the smaller of two mutual judgments wholly terminates an unadjudicated attorney's lien duly noticed in the judgment docket of the smaller judgment, when the indebtedness represented by the larger judgment antedates the indebtedness represented by the smaller judgment.

McIntosh v McIntosh, 211-750; 234 NW 234

10568 Costs in case of set-off.

See §11740

10574 Effect.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '38 AG Op 272; AG Op July 17, '39

10576 Form.

Form of execution. See §11659

10577 Return.

Sale—right to withdraw bid because of mistake. A plaintiff in execution, who bids at the sale the full amount of the judgment and costs in the honest belief that he was bidding on two separate tracts of land, when only one tract was being offered, may, on the discovery of his mistake, withdraw his bid, and the levying officer has discretion, without the consent of the defendant in execution, to accede to said withdrawal and to treat the sale as a nullity, and to resell, if there be time enough, and if there be not time enough, to return the execution in accordance with said facts. And in such latter case plaintiff may order out a new execution.

Van Rheenen v Windell, 220-211; 262 NW 120

10582 Appeal.

De novo status. An appeal from justice court, perfected and docketed, is in the district court as tho it had been commenced there; the justice's judgment is completely annulled; the appeal brings up the action for trial on its merits; and it is the duty of the plaintiff to prosecute the action. So where a district court, under its rule providing for dismissal of all actions remaining on the court calendar for over one year without being noticed for trial, dismissed such an appeal under its rule, and the clerk of court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount recovered in justice court together with interest and against appealing defendant, the defendant's motion to expunge the clerk's entry and correct the record was well-grounded and should have been sustained.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

10583 Amount in controversy.

Amount in controversy as bearing on appeals generally. See under §12833

Claim for attorney fee. In computing the amount involved in an appeal from a court of a justice of the peace, costs cannot be considered whether they be ordinary costs or costs claimed as attorney fees.

Johnson v Boren, 215-453; 245 NW 711

10589 Proceedings suspended.

Expunging clerk's judgment entry after court's dismissal. An appeal from justice court, perfected and docketed, is in the district court as tho it had been commenced there; the justice's judgment is completely annulled; the appeal brings up the action for trial on its merits; and it is the duty of the plaintiff to prosecute the action. So where a district court, under its rule providing for dismissal of all actions remaining on the court calendar for over one year without being noticed for trial, dismissed such an appeal under its rule, and the clerk of court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount recovered in justice court together with interest and against appealing defendant, the defendant's motion to expunge the clerk's entry and correct the record was well-grounded and should have been sustained.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

10595 Affirmance—trial.

Docketing appeals. See under §11440

Expunging clerk's judgment entry after court's dismissal. An appeal from justice court, perfected and docketed, is in the district court as tho it had been commenced there; the justice's judgment is completely annulled; the appeal brings up the action for trial on its merits; and it is the duty of the plaintiff to prosecute the action. So where a district court, under its rule providing for dismissal of all actions remaining on the court calendar for over one year without being noticed for trial, dismissed such an appeal under its rule, and the clerk of court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount recovered in justice court together with interest and against appealing defendant, the defendant's motion to expunge the clerk's entry and correct the record was well-grounded and should have been sustained.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

10597 How served.

Appeal—notice of—proper service. A statute which distinctly provides that a notice, e. g., a notice of appeal, shall be "served as an original notice", authorizes a service on the designated party by leaving a copy of said notice at the usual place of residence of said party with some member of his family over 14 years of age—when said party is not present in the county at the time of said service. So held as to the service of a notice of appeal under §7133, C., '35.

In re Sioux City Yards, 222-323; 268 NW 18

10598 Trial of appeal.

Allowable amendment. On appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, an unassailed amendment by defendant, setting up a counterclaim which was stricken in the justice court, is good.

Davis v Robinson, 200-840; 205 NW 520

De novo status. An appeal from justice court, perfected and docketed, is in the district court as tho it had been commenced there; the justice's judgment is completely annulled; the appeal brings up the action for trial on its merits; and it is the duty of the plaintiff to prosecute the action. So where a district court, under its rule providing for dismissal of all actions remaining on the court calendar for over one year without being noticed for trial, dismissed such an appeal under its rule, and the clerk of court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount recovered in justice court together with interest and against appealing defendant, the defendant's motion to expunge the clerk's entry and correct the record was well-grounded and should have been sustained.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

10602 Judgment on appeal bond.

Suretyship generally. See under §11577

10605 Writs of error—when allowed.

Futile writ. It is futile for defendant in an action of forcible entry and detainer to sue out a writ of error after he has been found guilty, and after he has surrendered possession of the premises in controversy.

Rasmussen v Alberts, 215-644; 246 NW 620

Writ coram nobis. Holding reaffirmed that the common law writ of error coram nobis is not available in this state.

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

10613 Restitution.

Writ of error (?) or appeal (?)—order of restitution. The district court has no jurisdiction, on writ of error, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, to enter an order restoring the defendant to the possession of the premises in question.

Rasmussen v Alberts, 215-644; 246 NW 620

10627 Special constables.

10638 In criminal cases.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '25-26 AG Op 179; '28 AG Op 445; '32 AG Op 149; '38 AG Op 798

Criminal process in state cases. A county is liable to the bailiff of a municipal court for mileage and expenses incurred in the service of warrants and subpoenas in state cases pending in said court.

Brookins v Polk Co., 203-567; 213 NW 258

10639 Accounting for fees—compensation.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '28 AG Op 445; '32 AG Op 27; '38 AG Op 171, 798

Compensation—acceptance in part—effect. An officer who accepts part of a statutory compensation does not thereby estop himself from enforcing payment of the balance.

Broyles v County, 213-345; 239 NW 1

Compensation—contradictory provisions. A constable in a township having a population of ten thousand and under twenty thousand is entitled to $800 per annum and no more, all fees belonging to the county, except such as may be legally allowed for office expenses.

Broyles v County, 213-345; 239 NW 1

Non-estoppel to claim compensation. A constable is not estopped to claim a specific compensation as distinguished from fees (the former being due him because of a change in population) because of the fact that during a time when the population was not officially known he continued to act on a fee basis.

Broyles v County, 213-345; 239 NW 1

TITLE XXX

COURTS OF RECORD OF ORIGINAL JURISDICTION

CHAPTER 475

MUNICIPAL COURT

10643 Election.

Percentage of voters required. The phrase "fifteen per cent of the qualified electors as shown by the poll list" as employed in this section, must be deemed to refer to the "poll books" in cities having no statutory system of permanent registration of voters, while in cities having such system of registration (where poll books are not employed) the phrase must be deemed to refer to the "certificates of registration" duly signed by voters just preceding their actual voting.

Gilman v Sioux City, 215-442; 245 NW 868

10648 Qualification and duties of officers.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 789

10655 Jurisdiction—civil matters.

Territorial limitations—effect. The municipal court has concurrent jurisdiction with the district court in the territory within the municipal court district, and not otherwise. (§§694-c1, 694-c18, 694-c23, SS., '15.)

Gumbert v Sheehan, 200-1310; 206 NW 604

Enjoining proceedings—proper court. An action to enjoin proceedings on a judgment rendered in a municipal court cannot be maintained in the district court, even tho both courts are located in the same county.

Keeling v Priebe, 219-155; 257 NW 199

Enjoining proceedings to enforce judgment in another county. A municipal court of one county has no jurisdiction to enjoin proceedings to enforce a judgment entered by a municipal court of another county.

Educational Film v Hansen, 221-1153; 266 NW 487

Establishing and foreclosing lien. An action in equity in municipal court on an account with prayer for the establishment and foreclosure of a lien on certain real estate should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction as far as equitable relief is concerned. The court may, on application of plaintiff, proceed at law on the account.

Avon Lakes v Deaton, 218-303; 255 NW 531

Exclusive jurisdiction to first court acquiring. The first court of competent jurisdiction to acquire jurisdiction of the subject matter of a case does so to the exclusion of all other courts of co-ordinate authority.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Jurisdiction defined. Jurisdiction means the power of a court to take cognizance of and to decide a case and carry its judgment and decree into execution.

Western Grocer Co. v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

Dropping action from calendar—reinstatement. The district court has jurisdiction to reinstate a cause which, under order of court, has been "dropped from the calendar," if such dropping from the calendar was not with the intent to dismiss.

Bankers Trust v Dist. Court, 209-879; 227 NW 536

Lack of jurisdiction—raised at any time. Objection based upon the want of jurisdiction of the court over the subject matter of the action may be raised at any time, and, when the law withholds from a court, authority to determine a case, jurisdiction cannot be conferred, even by consent of parties.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

Special appearance and motion to dismiss. In an action against insurance company to recover value of property destroyed by fire, in which action a special appearance attacked only one count of petition, the overruling of the special appearance and motion to dismiss was proper, inasmuch as jurisdiction that may be attacked by special appearance is jurisdiction of court over the entire action, and not jurisdiction of court as to part of such action.

Sanford Co. v Ins. Co., 225-1018; 282 NW 771

10657 Territorial jurisdiction and powers.

Resident of county but not city. Municipal courts have jurisdiction, on proper service, of a resident of the county in which the court exists tho not a resident of the city in which the court is established.

Kinsey v Clark, 215-765; 246 NW 840

Contracts performable in county. A municipal court has jurisdiction on personal service on the defendant within this state, but outside the county of the court's organization, to render judgment for not exceeding $1,000 on a promissory note signed by the defendant and payable within the said county, even tho the defendant is a nonresident of said county.

West v Heyman, 214-1173; 241 NW 451

Procedure in general—correcting erroneous decisions. Courts have a duty to correct their own decisions when found to be wrong.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '32 AG Op 30

10664 Laws applicable—rules.

Atty. Gen. Opinions. See '34 AG Op 616; '38 AG Op 739

Change of venue. An action instituted in the municipal court at Council Bluffs must be transferred, on proper motion, to the Avoca district court, on a showing that the plaintiff and defendant are both residents of the latter district. (§§694-c1, 694-c18, 694-c23, SS., '15.)

Gumbert v Sheehan, 200-1310; 206 NW 604

Contracts performable in county. A municipal court has jurisdiction on personal service on the defendant within this state, but outside the county of the court's organization, to render judgment for not exceeding $1,000 on a promissory note signed by the defendant and payable within the said county, even tho the defendant is a nonresident of said county.

West v Heyman, 214-1173; 241 NW 451

Default—affidavit of merit. Defaults in municipal courts may not be set aside in the absence of an affidavit which specifically sets forth the facts relied on as a defense to the action sued on.

Boody v Sawyer, 201-496; 207 NW 589

Defaults—nonapplicable statutes. The statute (§11589, C., '35) requiring applications to set aside defaults in the district court, to be made "at the term" in which default is entered, is not applicable to defaults in municipal courts because said latter courts have no terms.

La Forge v Cooter, 220-1258; 264 NW 268

Judgment by default—setting aside—"practice of court" includes practices of attorneys. Expression "practice of this court" fairly includes more than acts of presiding judge and means practices characteristic of the proceedings when attorneys appear for litigants therein, including practice of attorneys of informing opposing counsel of intention to take default, and evidence of such practice of attorneys was admissible under a petition to set aside a default judgment, altho petition alleged practice of this court.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

Jurisdiction. The municipal court has jurisdiction to enter an order extending the time to file a motion for a new trial and exceptions to instructions and judgment non obstante veredicto. Such order is reviewable by appeal, not by certiorari.

Eller v Mun. Court, 225-501; 281 NW 441

Jurisdiction to dismiss pending an appeal. An appeal from the municipal court to the supreme court from an interlocutory order involving part of an answer (order striking pleaded set-offs from part of the divisions of the answer), without supersedeas bond in, or stay order by, the appellate court, does not deprive the municipal court of jurisdiction to dismiss the action, in accordance with its rules, for want of attention.

Des M. & CI Ry. v Powers, 215-567; 246 NW 274

No right to set aside orders on own motion. A judge of the municipal court has no jurisdiction to set aside, on his own motion, a duly rendered and journalized order of another judge of the same court sustaining a motion to set aside a default; and equally without jurisdiction, thereupon, to overrule said motion.

Denman v Sawyer, 211-56; 232 NW 819

10665 Change of venue.

Criminal process in state cases. A county is liable to the bailiff of a municipal court for mileage and expenses incurred in the service of warrants and subpoenas in state cases pending in said court.

Brookins v Polk Co., 203-567; 213 NW 258

10678 Jurors—number—demand for jury.

Municipal court jury trial. Where plaintiff requested jury trial and later withdrew such request, municipal court's refusal to allow defendant trial by jury was error.

Metier v Brewer, (NOR); 205 NW 734

Number of jurors. The trial of a nonindictable misdemeanor may legally be had in municipal court before a jury of six persons.

State v Porter, 206-1247; 220 NW 100

Jury of six—constitutionality. The municipal court act is not unconstitutional because, in the absence of a demand for a jury of twelve, it compels a defendant residing outside the city in which the court is established to submit to a trial by a jury of six which are drawn from the city and not from the county at large.

Kinsey v Clark, 215-765; 246 NW 840

Presumption of regularity. In municipal courts, judgments rendered by the court without a jury must, on appeal, be deemed regular in the absence of any showing as to the rules of the court governing demand for a jury.

La Forge v Cooter, 220-1258; 264 NW 268

10681 Entry judgment—jurisdiction—setting aside default.

Atty. Gen. Opinion. See '38 AG Op 739

Absence of affidavit of merit. Judgments by default in municipal courts, after proper service, may not be set aside in the absence of an affidavit of merit, nor may such judgments be set aside on a motion filed more than ten days after the default is entered, nor are such defects remedied by renewing the motion, after the ruling of the court, with an affidavit of merit.

Borden v Voegtlin, 215-882; 245 NW 331

Affidavit of merit. Defaults in municipal courts may not be set aside in the absence of an affidavit which specifically sets forth the facts relied on as a defense to the action sued on.

Boody v Sawyer, 201-496; 207 NW 589

Defaults—nonapplicable statutes. Section 11589, C., '35, requiring applications to set aside defaults in the district court to be made "at the term" in which default is entered, is not applicable to defaults in municipal courts because said latter courts have no terms.

La Forge v Cooter, 220-1258; 264 NW 268

Notice of taking default—attorneys' custom. Defendants may have a default judgment set aside, where two reputable attorneys, one of which resided in the county where the action was brought, were employed, and where such attorneys rely on a practice among the attorneys in that county to inform opposing counsel of intention to take default, and where a default without notice pending appeal would not have been anticipated.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

"Practice of court" includes practices of attorneys. Expression "practice of this court" fairly includes more than acts of presiding judge and means practices characteristic of the proceedings when attorneys appear for litigants therein, including practice of attorneys of informing opposing counsel of intention to take default, and evidence of such practice of attorneys was admissible under a petition to set aside a default judgment, altho petition alleged practice of this court.

Lunt v Van Gorden, 225-1120; 281 NW 743

Case reinstated after dismissal. Where an action is dismissed by the clerk under district court rules, but the judge thereof, without notice to the defendant, reinstates the case on motion and showing that the clerk acted erroneously, ously, and where an application to vacate the order of reinstatement is denied, supreme court could not on appeal assume that judge lacked jurisdiction to reinstate without notice to defendant, without the district court rules of practice being in evidence and before the appellate court.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

Court acting on own motion contrary to agreement of counsel. Consolidated actions, dismissed by the court on its own motion in the absence of counsel, for want of prosecution, are properly reinstated on a showing of "unavoidable casualty and misfortune" in that there was no negligence on the part of plaintiffs or their counsel and that they were relying on an agreement between counsel that certain motions would not be made nor issues made up until convenient to all counsel.

Thoreson v Central States Co., 225-1406; 283 NW 253

Filing motions after verdict—extending time—jurisdiction. The municipal court has jurisdiction to enter an order extending the time to file a motion for a new trial and exceptions to instructions and judgment non obstante veredicto. Such order is reviewable by appeal, not by certiorari.

Eller v Munic. Court, 225-501; 281 NW 441

Improper to review setting aside of default—appeal proper. Appeal, not certiorari, is the proper method to proceed to attack an alleged erroneous order of the municipal court in sustaining a motion to set aside a default judgment, where the court had jurisdiction to enter the order.

Weston v Allen, 225-835; 282 NW 278

Judgment by default—timely motion to reconsider. In municipal court a motion to reconsider the overruling of a motion to set aside a default judgment, tho filed more than 10 days but within 90 days after entry of the order refusing to set aside the default, when such motion to reconsider was based on irregularity in obtaining the judgment, was a timely motion and the court had jurisdiction to sustain it.

Weston v Allen, 225-835; 282 NW 278

Non-jurisdiction to set aside dismissal. A municipal court having entered a valid order of dismissal of an action has no jurisdiction, seven months later, to set aside said order and reinstate said action without notice to the defendant.

Des M. & CI Ry. v Powers, 215-567; 246 NW 274

No right to set aside orders on judge's own motion. A judge of the municipal court has no jurisdiction to set aside, on his own motion, a duly rendered and journalized order of another judge of the same court sustaining a motion to set aside a default; and equally without jurisdiction, thereupon, to overrule said motion.

Denman v Sawyer, 211-56; 232 NW 819

Opening or vacating—discretion of court. The action of the municipal court, on timely motion, in vacating a judgment for irregularity in obtaining the judgment will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a clear showing of abuse on the part of the court.

Mitchell v Brennan, 213-1375; 241 NW 408

Revoking order for costs. An order relative to the costs of a continuance may be set aside by the municipal court when motion for new trial is heard.

Main v Brown, 202-924; 211 NW 232

Setting aside—different allowable procedures. When final judgment is erroneously rendered in municipal court against a defendant (1) because of the mistaken assumption by the court that defendant was in default for want of an answer, and (2) because of the fraud of plaintiff, said defendant may (at least when he acts diligently under the circumstances) proceed by petition under §12787 et seq., C., '35, for the setting aside of said judgment, instead of proceeding by motion under this section for the same relief. It necessarily follows that if defendant so proceeds, he is not bound by the 90-day limitation imposed by said last named section.

La Forge v Cooter, 220-1258; 264 NW 268

Setting aside—fatal delay. A delay of over five months in instituting proceedings to set aside a default judgment in municipal court, bars relief.

Harding v Quinlan, 209-1190; 229 NW 672

Setting aside judgment. Judgments in municipal courts may not be set aside after the lapse of ten days from the entry simply on the ground that the petition shows on its face that the claim sued on was barred by the statute of limitation.

Merkel v Hallagan, 207-153; 222 NW 393

Timely motion to set aside default. Where judgment is entered in a municipal court on April 9th, a motion filed on April 19th following, to set aside the default, is timely.

Service System v Johns, 206-1164; 221 NW 777

Vacating—nonpermissible issue. In an action to cancel a judgment by default on a promissory note, the defendant will not be permitted to present the issue that he was not personally liable on said note.

West v Heyman, 214-1173; 241 NW 451

Void judgment always subject to attack. A void judgment may be attacked in any proceeding in which it is sought to be enforced.

Gohring v Koonce, 224-1186; 278 NW 283

10682 Judgment liens.

Establishing and foreclosing lien. An action in equity in municipal court on an account with prayer for the establishment and foreclosure of a lien on certain real estate should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction as far as equitable relief is concerned. The court may, on application of plaintiff, proceed at law on the account.

Exclusive jurisdiction to first court acquiring. The first court of competent jurisdiction to acquire jurisdiction of the subject matter of a case does so to the exclusion of all other courts of coordinate authority.

First Methodist Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Procedure in general—correcting erroneous decisions. Courts have a duty to correct their own decisions when found to be wrong.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Special appearance and motion to dismiss—attacking only part of jurisdiction improper. In an action against insurance company to recover value of property destroyed by fire, in which action a special appearance attacked only one count of petition, the overruling of the special appearance and motion to dismiss was proper, inasmuch as jurisdiction that may be attacked by special appearance is jurisdiction of court over the entire action, and not jurisdiction of court as to part of such action.

Sanford Co. v Ins. Co., 225-1018; 282 NW 771

Lack of jurisdiction—not conferred by consent. Objection based upon the want of jurisdiction of the court over the subject matter of the action may be raised at any time, and, when the law withholds from a court, authority to determine a case, jurisdiction cannot be conferred, even by consent of parties.

Braverman v Burns, 207-1382; 224 NW 596

Requirements for valid decree. To be valid and binding, the acts of a court must be within the court's jurisdiction, i. e., it must have (1) jurisdiction of the subject, which is power to hear and determine cases in the general class of the question presented, and (2) jurisdiction of the person, which is power to subject the parties to the judgment.

I NATURE AND EXTENT OF JURISDICTION IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 15 ILR 309, 434—Restatement of conflicts; 19 ILR 385—Nonjudicial functions; 19 ILR 406, 540—U. S. Courts—consent receiverships

Jurisdiction defined. Jurisdiction means the power of a court to take cognizance of and to decide a case and carry its judgment and decree into execution.

Western Grocer v Glenn, 226-1374; 286 NW 441

Jurisdictional questions always presentable.
Latta v Utterback, 202-1116; 211 NW 503

Requirements for valid decree. To be valid and binding, the acts of a court must be within the court's jurisdiction, i. e., it must have (1) jurisdiction of the subject, which is power to hear and determine cases in the general class of the question presented, and (2) jurisdiction of the person, which is power to subject the parties to the judgment.

Collins v Powell, 224-1015; 277 NW 477

Rules—general order—dismissal for want of prosecution. Under the recognized rule that courts have the inherent power to prescribe such rules of practice and rules to regulate their proceedings in order to expedite the trial of cases, to keep their dockets clear, and to facilitate the administration of justice, the judges of a judicial district could adopt and enforce a general order requiring parties to cause each case to be finally determined within two years from date of filing petition and providing upon failure to comply with such order the clerk should enter upon the record, “Dismissed without prejudice for want of prosecution”.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Dropping action from calendar—reinstatement. The district court has jurisdiction to reinstate a cause which, under order of court, has been “dropped from the calendar”, if such dropping from the calendar was not with the intent to dismiss.

Bankers Trust v Dist. Court, 209-879; 227 NW 536

Procedure in general—correcting erroneous decisions. Courts have a duty to correct their own decisions when found to be wrong.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Concurrent jurisdiction—possession of res. The court appointing a receiver and having possession of the res has exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all controversies affecting title, possession and control of the property, which jurisdiction must be respected by all other courts, except that another court may entertain another cause concerning the same subject matter if it does not oust the appointing court from possession of the res, or appropriate disposal of the cause there entertained.

Bates v Evans, 226-438; 284 NW 385

Unauthorized release of bond. The liability of a surety on an appeal (supersedeas) bond, attaches the moment when the bond is accepted. It follows that an order of court assuming to set aside and to cancel the bond and to authorize the filing of a new and different bond, without notice to the appellee-obligee, is a nullity as to the first filed bond.

State v Packing Co., 219-419; 258 NW 456

Death of party without substitution. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Deposition of adversary. The court has no legal right, even in an equitable action, to enter an order authorizing plaintiff to take, on his own behalf and by deposition, the testimony of the defendants bearing on the issues joined between plaintiff and all of said defendants.

Bagley v Dist. Court, 218-34; 254 NW 26

I NATURE AND EXTENT OF JURISDICTION IN GENERAL—continued

Disbarment—jurisdictional order. The order of court, finding that formal charges against an attorney are sufficient to justify disbarment proceedings, and ordering copy thereof served on him and for his appearance is jurisdictional, but not the preliminary order for the investigation into the conduct of the attorney.

In re Cloud, 217-3; 250 NW 160

District court—enjoining unlicensed person practicing law. In an equity suit brought by members of bar for injunction to restrain an unlicensed person from professing to be an attorney and from practicing law, where irreparable damage was the gist of the action, this subject matter was within the jurisdiction of the district court.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741

Enjoining proceedings—proper court. An action to enjoin proceedings on a judgment rendered in a municipal court cannot be maintained in the district court, even tho both courts are located in the same county.

Keeling v Priebe, 219-155; 257 NW 199

Exclusive jurisdiction to first court acquiring. The first court of competent jurisdiction to acquire jurisdiction of the subject matter of a case does so to the exclusion of all other courts of coordinate authority.

First M. E. Church v Hull, 225-306; 280 NW 531

Personal jurisdiction assumed when unchallenged. Where the jurisdiction of the person is not challenged in an action to set aside a default judgment, it must be assumed that the court had such jurisdiction, and, if it also had jurisdiction of the subject matter, it was warranted in entering judgment.

Jensen v Martinsen, 228- ; 291 NW 422

Foreign corporation—interference with internal affairs. Where a foreign corporation receives, as a consideration for the legal sale of its entire assets, a certain amount in money and the balance in the bonds, and in the preferred and participating stock of the purchaser, the courts of this state will not, in an action against the corporation, adjudicate the question whether a dissenting stockholder should be paid in cash the value of his stock, as such adjudication would be an unallowable interference with the internal affairs of said foreign corporation.

Graeser v Finance Co., 218-1112; 254 NW 859

Foreign law—refusal to enforce. The law of a foreign state, which holds parties who are interested as shareholders in an unincorporated association, personally and individually liable as partners for the debts of such association even tho said parties, to the knowledge of the creditor, specifically contracted against such liability, will not be enforced by the courts of this state.

Reason: Said foreign law is directly contrary to the law of this state.

Farmers & M. Bk. v Anderson, 216-988; 250 NW 214

Action involving land along Missouri river. In an action to enjoin trespass and recover damages, wherein cross-action to quiet title was brought, and where all parties appeared, and where at the time of the action and for many years prior thereto, the land in controversy was situated on the Iowa side of the Missouri river and within Pottawattamie county, altho formerly as result of changes in course of river, such land lay, for a certain period of time, on the Nebraska side, the district court for said county had jurisdiction.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Federal appointment of receiver—effect on state courts. The mere pendency of federal receivership proceedings over a party does not necessarily oust the jurisdiction of the state courts over the party and over his property.

Lippke v Milling Co., 215-134; 244 NW 845

Lands in foreign state. The district court, when it has jurisdiction of all parties to a controversy, has jurisdiction to determine their contract relations to lands situated in a foreign state: e. g., whether an absolute deed to such lands was an absolute conveyance or a mortgage.

Tansil v McCumber, 201-20; 206 NW 680

Lex rei sitae. The title to real estate in this state under a will must be determined by the courts of this state, and under the law of this state.

Seofield v Hadden, 206-598; 220 NW 1

Life policy payable in Iowa pledged in another state—Iowa jurisdiction. Tho a life policy payable to the estate of a deceased Iowa resident is deposited in a foreign state, as security for a debt, the proceeds are not beyond the jurisdiction of the Iowa probate court, inasmuch as the right to such proceeds depends, not upon their location, but upon the terms of the policy, supplemented by any contract relating thereto.

In re Hazeldine, 225-369; 280 NW 568

Probate—nonwaiver of federal jurisdiction. Agreed postponements of a probate hearing in the state court will not prevent the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, a party authorized by act of congress to sue in the federal courts, from thereafter commencing action thereon in the federal courts.

RFC v Dingwell, 224-1172; 278 NW 281

Service on foreign insurer—physician not agent. An Iowa accident insurance association which has not been licensed to transact its business in a foreign state (in which it has neither office, agent nor property), and whose certificates of insurance are strictly Iowa contracts, cannot be deemed to have subjected itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of such foreign state (1) because a very large number of its certificate holders reside in said foreign state, or (2) because said association, from time to time and by mail from its Iowa office, requests a physician in said foreign state to there examine claimants and to report as to accidental injuries received by claimants,—it appearing that said physician was under no contract obligation to comply with said requests and to make such examinations tho he had done so for several years and had received a stated fee for each separate examination.

Held, the foreign court, in an action on a certificate, acquired no jurisdiction under process served on said physician.

Saunders v Trav. Assn., 222-969; 270 NW 407

Indictments—district court (?) or juvenile court (?). The juvenile court act has not deprived the district court of jurisdiction over indictments against persons under eighteen years of age. (Ch 179, C., '27.)

State v Reed, 207-557; 218 NW 609

Judgment of dismissal—nonjurisdiction to set aside. The district court, having at one term entered a judgment of dismissal of an action for want of prosecution of the action as required by the rules of the court, has no jurisdiction at a subsequent term, tho the judgment entry remains unsigned, to set aside said judgment under §10801, C., '35, and reinstate the action. The governing procedure, under such circumstances, is provided by §12787 et seq., C., '35.

Workman v Dist. Court, 222-364; 269 NW 27

Rules in re failure to prosecute action. Rules of the district court for the dismissal of actions for want of reasonable prosecution thereof are proper.

Workman v Dist. Court, 222-364; 269 NW 27

Dismissal of cases for want of prosecution—validity of general order. The fact that an order of the judges of a judicial district, requiring the parties to cause each case to be finally determined within two years from date of filing petition, was a general order applicable to all cases or proceedings pending or to come before the courts of the district did not invalidate such order.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Clerk's entry of dismissal under general order—nonreviewable when court approves entry. Where a general order of the judges of a judicial district provided for the dismissal of all actions and proceedings undetermined after a period of two years, and directed the clerk of court to enter the dismissal without prejudice, and where such order was so entered in the district court record by the clerk, the supreme court is not required to pass upon the question of whether such entry by the clerk would be an effective dismissal, when at the same term of court the presiding judge made an entry in the same record "approving, affirming and ratifying" this and all other orders of dismissal under the general order.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Clerk's dismissal for want of prosecution—reinstatement—statutory proceedings necessary. The power of the court to modify or set aside a judgment, when once entered, is purely statutory, and where clerk of court, under a general order of judges of judicial district, on April 20, 1935, entered an order dismissing action without prejudice for want of prosecution, and trial court's order of approval was entered on August 28, 1935, the trial court could set aside judgment of dismissal by statutory proceedings only, and by bringing defendants into court by same proceedings, respecting notice and service, as an ordinary action, hence, an order of reinstatement made September 8, 1938, was unauthorized where application for reinstatement was made on November 27, 1936, and a five-day notice of hearing on application was given defendants by mail and defendants appeared specially in response to notice.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Master and servant—original action for damages—jurisdiction. The district court has no jurisdiction to try and determine an original action against an employer for damages consequent upon the alleged negligence of the employer, resulting in the death of an employee, when both the employer and the employee are under the terms and conditions of the workmen's compensation act.

Hlas v Oats Co., 211-348; 233 NW 514

Social welfare board—administrative duties—nonjudicial review. While the lines of demarcation between the three branches of government are sometimes difficult to determine and the duties sometimes overlap, the duties of the state board of social welfare in determining eligibility for old-age assistance are clearly administrative and, under the statute, in the absence of fraud or abuse of discretion, they are not and could not well be the subject of judicial inquiry.

Schneberger v Board, 228- ; 291 NW 859

I NATURE AND EXTENT OF JURISDICTION IN GENERAL—concluded

Money given to obstruct justice—recovery denied. The courts will not aid one to recover money that has been given to another to be used in obstructing or interfering with the orderly course of justice, nor will they protect one who obtains the money of another for a particular lawful purpose when he fails to so use it and refuses to return it.

Sarico v Romano, (NOR); 205 NW 862

Motions—sua sponte simplification by court. The district court has inherent power, sua sponte, to simplify pleadings.

Collins v Cooper, 215-99; 244 NW 858

Retention, of jurisdiction—effect. In judicial proceedings to accomplish a certain purpose, e. g., the proper and legal protection of both life tenants and remaindermen in the matter of preserving the estate for all the parties, the record retention by the court of jurisdiction over the proceedings and parties thereto, will enable the court subsequently to make valid and supplementary orders in furtherance of the said purpose.

John Hancock Ins. v Dower, 222-1377; 271 NW 193

Removal of administrator. Jurisdiction to remove an administrator is furnished by an application by the surety on the bond wherein he prays for an order (1) removing the administrator or (2) requiring the filing of a report and the making of distribution, when notice of the application is duly served on all interested parties and when no part of the prayer has been withdrawn of record. The filing of a report under a mutual arrangement between the parties does not exhaust the jurisdiction of the court.

In re Donlon, 201-1021; 206 NW 674

Stipulation—effect. A stipulation in an equity cause that testimony may be taken before any judge of the district does not deprive the court of the county wherein the action is brought of jurisdiction.

Gotsch v Schoenjahn, 201-1317; 207 NW 567

Vacating final report of receiver of closed bank—jurisdiction of court. After the approval of the final report of the receiver of a closed bank which discharged both the receiver and the examiner in charge, an application by the receiver for vacation of the order consented to the jurisdiction of the court only as to the receiver, but the court had jurisdiction to deal summarily with the examiner by prescribing the form of notice to be served on him and to set the time for his appearance so long as the statutory provisions for vacating and modifying judgments were complied with and the application filed within one year from the date of rendition of the order attacked.

Bates v Loan & Tr., 227-1347; 291 NW 184

Refunding erroneous tax—administrative remedies must be exhausted before resorting to court. Under the statute providing for refunding erroneous tax, stockholders of a national bank are not entitled to money judgment in alternative of statute. All adequate administrative remedies must be exhausted to recover tax illegally collected before resorting to the courts.

First Nat. Bk. v Harrison County, 57 F 2d, 56

Hammerstrom v Toy Nat. Bk., 81 F 2d, 628

Wrongful assessment—administrative remedy to be exhausted before appeal to court. All adequate administrative remedies in matters of taxation must be exhausted before resort can be had to court, so when administrative stage of action is completed, judicial power of court may begin, and the parties may resort to any tribunal having jurisdiction. Hence, where national banks bring an action to restrain collection of alleged illegal taxes on capital stock, basing alleged illegality on fact that other competitive "moneyed capital" was taxed intentionally and consistently at lower rate in violation of federal statutes, held, banks failed to exhaust remedy provided by statutes providing appeal from assessor to board of review.

Nelson v First Nat. Bk., 42 F 2d, 30

Crawford Co. Bk. v Crawford Co., 66 F 2d, 971

II LAW AND EQUITY

Avoidance of multiplicity of law actions. A strict action at law may not be brought and maintained in equity on the mere allegation that thereby a multiplicity of actions will be avoided. So held where plaintiff sought, in equity, to recover not only presently accrued but future possibly accruing weekly total disability benefits under a policy of accident insurance.

Gephardt v Ins. Co., 213-354; 239 NW 235

Fraud as defense in law action—nonright to transfer. A defendant in an action at law on a policy of insurance is not entitled to a transfer of the action to the equity calendar simply because he pleads fraudulent representation as a defense and prays a cancellation of the policy.

Beeman v Life Co., 215-1163; 247 NW 673

Proper law action nontransferable in toto. An action brought on a contract (e. g., a property settlement between husband and wife), and properly brought at law, is not rendered transferable in toto to the equity calendar by defendant's plea of fraud and prayer for a judicial rescission of the contract. Said alleged fraud, if established in the law action, constitutes a complete defense, and remaining equitable issues are properly transferred to and disposed of in equity. Failure, in the law action, to establish said alleged fraud, necessarily removes from the case said equitable issue of rescission.

Poole v Poole, 221-1073; 265 NW 653

Sales—remedies of purchaser—optional remedies. A vendee who has been fraudulently induced to purchase property may exercise one of three remedies, to wit:

1. He may, within a reasonable time, offer to place the vendor in statu quo, and, when the vendor refuses, keep his tender good, and ask a court of equity to cancel and rescind the contract and give him a judgment for the price paid.

2. He may himself, within a reasonable time, do the canceling and rescinding of the contract, by offering to place the vendor in statu quo; and, when the vendor refuses, keep his tender good, and sue at law for the purchase price.

3. He may affirm the contract and sue at law for the damages suffered by him.

Lambertson v Natl. Inv. & Fin., 200-527; 202 NW 119

Equity proceeding to establish heirs—triable de novo. In a probate proceeding to assist administrator to determine heirs of intestate, it being determined upon appeal from (1) the form of the pleadings as prescribed in equity, (2) the record of proceedings indicating use of equitable powers, (3) the reception of evidence under equitable procedure, and (4) rulings of the court reserved as in equity, that such proceeding, having been conducted in a manner wholly foreign to procedure at law, was tried in equity and therefore was triable de novo on appeal.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Transfer as sole remedy. A court which has jurisdiction of an action when brought in the right forum has jurisdiction when brought in the wrong forum. The remedy for an incorrect forum is to transfer to the correct docket.

In re Nish, 220-45; 261 NW 521; 100 ALR 1516

III COURT AND JUDGE

Discussion. See 13 ILR 456—Control of master's fees; 15 ILR 141—Powers of court and judge

Distinction between "court" and "judge". Statutes, providing for the prosecution of injunction violators, which do not prohibit the "court" from trying the defendant forthwith should be construed as consistent with statutes providing punishment for contempt, which allow the court to try the defendant forthwith, when both statutes recognize the distinction between the terms "judge" and "court", so that when acting in the capacity of "court" rather than as "judge", the court could try the defendants for an injunction violation during the same term in which the precept to punish them for contempt was issued.

Carey v District Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Procedure in general—correcting erroneous decisions. Courts have a duty to correct their own decisions when found to be wrong.

Montanick v McMillin, 225-442; 280 NW 608

Nonjurisdiction to dismiss action. When a cause is assigned to, and tried by, a judge of the district court, all other judges of the same court are thereby deprived of jurisdiction to dismiss the cause while it is pending before said trial judge.

Dunkelbarger v Myers, 211-512; 233 NW 744

Rules in re failure to prosecute action. Rules of the district court for the dismissal of actions, for want of reasonable prosecution thereof, are proper.

Workman v Dist. Court, 222-364; 269 NW 27

Ruling on motion as adjudication—unallowable review. An order overruling plaintiff's motion (1) to strike an answer, and (2) for judgment nil dicit (assuming the propriety of such procedure) constitutes an adjudication that plaintiff has no legal right to a judgment on the pleadings as they then stand; and plaintiff has no right later to present, to another judge of the same court, a motion for judgment on the same pleadings, and said latter judge has no right to review the rulings of the former judge by sustaining said latter motion.

Taylor v Canning Corp., 218-1281; 257 NW 353

IV ATTACKING JURISDICTION—COLLATERAL AND DIRECT

Reports — disapproval — jurisdiction. A trustee who, in his acceptance of a nontestamentary trust, agrees to report annually to the district court and does so report, and who invokes the jurisdiction of the probate court to pass upon his reports, may not thereafter question the power and right of such court to act upon such reports.

In re Bartholomew, 207-109; 222 NW 356

IV ATTACKING JURISDICTION—COLLATERAL AND DIRECT—concluded

Special appearance and motion to dismiss. In an action against insurance company to recover value of property destroyed by fire, in which action a special appearance attacked only one count of petition, the overruling of the special appearance and motion to dismiss was proper, inasmuch as jurisdiction that may be attacked by special appearance is jurisdiction of court over the entire action, and not jurisdiction of court as to part of such action.

Sanford Co. v Western Ins., 225-1018; 282 NW 771

Irregular petition for appointment of guardian—collateral attack. Irregularities in the form of a petition for the appointment of a guardian, while perhaps subject to direct attack, were not sufficient to justify a collateral attack in an action to set aside a default judgment obtained by the guardian.

Jensen v Martinsen, 228- ; 291 NW 422

V CONFERRING JURISDICTION

Lack of jurisdiction not conferred by consent. Objection based upon the want of jurisdiction of the court over the subject matter of the action may be raised at any time, and, when the law withholds from a court authority to determine a case, jurisdiction cannot be conferred, even by consent of parties.

Johnson v Purcell, 225-1265; 282 NW 741
Eby v Phipps, 225-1328; 283 NW 423

VI EXCEEDING JURISDICTION

Judicial legislation. A court enters the wholly unallowable field of judicial legislation when it assumes to enter ex parte orders directing the payment of mileage to grand jurors in an amount different than the amount provided by statute.

Park v Polk County, 220-120; 261 NW 508

Retaining jurisdiction. In action on life insurance policy for payment of annual total disability benefits, where court ordered payment up to time of trial, court's action in retaining jurisdiction for adjudication of rights and liabilities of parties accruing in the future held erroneous.

Kurth v Ins. Co., 227-242; 288 NW 90

Mandatory procedendo for dismissal. On the reversal and remand in toto, on the merits, of a judgment for plaintiff in an equitable action, a procedendo directing the trial court, generally, to take "further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of the supreme court," must be deemed, in the absence of additional pleadings or evidence in the trial court, a mandatory direction to the trial court to dismiss the action. In the absence of such pleadings or evidence, the trial court has no jurisdiction to enter a judgment on a basis not presented by the pleadings or authorized by the opinion.

Ronna v Bank, 215-806; 246 NW 798

VII REMOVAL OF CAUSES

State and federal courts—comity. The necessity for comity between state and federal courts demands that controversies shall not arise concerning their respective jurisdictional powers on account of unsubstantial considerations, and certiorari from the supreme court of Iowa will lie to require a district court of the state to relinquish jurisdiction over a probate matter after the federal court, through diversity of citizenship, has assumed jurisdiction.

RFC v Dingwell, 224-1172; 278 NW 281

Removal of causes by nonresident. When a petition for removal to the federal court was filed, the state court did not lose jurisdiction of the action when both the trial court and federal court decided that the petition was insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the federal court, and all the petitioners but one were residents of the state with no right to removal, and the one nonresident failed to make a claim of a separable controversy.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

Joinder of "separable controversy"—removal to federal court by nonresident. The liability of several insurance companies which were members of an association which insured plaintiff's property against loss by fire presented a "separable controversy", and when plaintiff under the statute joined the several defendants in a single action, it did not create a joint liability so as to preclude a nonresident defendant from removing cause from state to federal court.

D. M. Elev. Co., v Underwriters' Gr. Assn., 63 F 2d, 103

United States courts—transfer of jurisdiction. A petition for removal to federal court must be filed before noon of second day of term for which the action is brought, and if good and sufficient, and so filed with proper notice and bond, the state court loses jurisdiction to the federal court.

Johannsen v Mid-Cont. Corp., 227-712; 288 NW 911

Filing of petition—general (?) or special (?) appearance. Rule of federal courts recognized that filing of petition for removal of cause to federal court constitutes special and not general appearance. Under Iowa statute, the filing of such petition with notation thereof on record would constitute a special appearance even tho not expressly announced as such, since court will look to substance rather than form in determining whether an appearance is general or special.

Johannsen v Mid-Cont. Corp., 227-712; 288 NW 911

10762 Appeals and writs of error.

Stay under inherent power of court.

Francis v Todd, 219-672; 259 NW 249

Writ of error (?) or appeal (?)—order of restitution. The district court has no jurisdiction, on writ of error, in an action of forcible entry and detainer to enter an order restoring the defendant to the possession of the premises in question.

Rasmussen v Alberts, 215-644; 246 NW 620

De novo status. An appeal from justice court, perfected and docketed, is in the district court as though it had been commenced there; the justice's judgment is completely annulled; the appeal brings up the action for trial on its merits; and it is the duty of the plaintiff to prosecute the action. So where a district court, under its rule providing for dismissal of all actions remaining on the court calendar for over one year without being noticed for trial, dismissed such an appeal under its rule, and the clerk of court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount recovered in justice court together with interest and against appealing defendant, the defendant's motion to expunge the clerk's entry and correct the record was well-grounded and should have been sustained.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

10763 Wills—administration—guardianship.

ANALYSIS

- I ESTATES OF DECEASED PERSONS
- II GUARDIANSHIP

I ESTATES OF DECEASED PERSONS

Nature of probate proceedings. Probate proceedings by which jurisdiction of a probate court is asserted over the estate of a decedent for the purpose of administering the same, is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, and is one as to which all the world is charged with notice.

In re Harsh, 207-84; 218 NW 537

Jurisdiction—domicile of deceased—evidence. Evidence reviewed and held to warrant finding that deceased was resident of Boone county at time of death, giving the district court of that county exclusive jurisdiction to appoint an administrator for his estate.

Crawford County v Kock, 227-1235; 290 NW 682

Jurisdiction—appointment of administrator—recital of residence in petition. The district court of the county in which deceased resided at time of his death has exclusive jurisdiction to appoint an administrator and petition for appointment need not recite the place of residence of the deceased.

Crawford County v Kock, 227-1235; 290 NW 682

Approval of unauthorized act. The contention that the court by approving a report of an administrator thereby approved a former unauthorized act of the administrator, cannot be sustained when the alleged approval was subsequent to the joinder of issues in the action in question, when such approval was in no manner pleaded, and when there was no showing that the court had jurisdiction to enter the approval.

Blain v Blain, 215-69; 244 NW 827

Jurisdiction—exclusiveness. Where a clear and unambiguous will is admitted to probate and administration is being had thereon in probate court, the jurisdiction of such court to determine any rights thereunder, and to administer and direct the disposition of the property involved, cannot be interfered with by a court of equity.

Anderson v Meier, 227-38; 287 NW 250

Equity proceeding to establish heirs—triable de novo. In a probate proceeding to assist administrator to determine heirs of intestate, it being determined upon appeal from (1) the form of the pleadings as prescribed in equity, (2) the record of proceedings indicating use of equitable powers, (3) the reception of evidence under equitable procedure, and (4) rulings of the court reserved as in equity, that such proceeding, having been conducted in a manner wholly foreign to procedure at law, was tried in equity and therefore was triable de novo on appeal.

In re Clark, 228- ; 290 NW 13

Jurisdiction. The district court of the county in which an unsatisfied judgment was rendered has jurisdiction to appoint administration upon the estate of the nonresident judgment plaintiff.

Edwards v Popham, 206-149; 220 NW 16

Jurisdiction when will exists. The appointment of an administrator cannot be said to be without jurisdiction even tho a will existed.

Murphy v Hahn, 208-698; 223 NW 756

I ESTATES OF DECEASED PERSONS—concluded

Lost will—probate jurisdiction exclusive. An action to establish a lost will must be brought in the probate court.

Coulter v Petersen, 218-512; 255 NW 684

II GUARDIANSHIP

Presumption. Orders in probate appointing guardians are presumptively regular.

Marsh v Hanna, 219-682; 259 NW 225

Testamentary guardian of person. Principle recognized that a testamentary guardianship of the person is unknown to our law.

Turner v Ryan, 223-191; 272 NW 60; 110 ALR 554

Appointment—foreign courts—jurisdiction. Record reviewed, and held to show jurisdiction in the courts of a foreign state validly to appoint a guardian of the property and person of an adult former resident of this state who has had a mental defect (tho not an imbecile or idiot) from birth, and who has lived in said foreign state continuously for some 25 years with a protecting chaperon.

Turner v Ryan, 223-191; 272 NW 60; 110 ALR 554

Approval of unauthorized act. A court order which impliedly approves a former unauthorized hypothecation by a guardian of the ward's property as security for a loan does not deprive the probate court of jurisdiction over the hypothecated property.

Fansher v Bank, 204-449; 215 NW 498

Compromise settlement—approval—conclusiveness. An order in guardianship proceedings approving a settlement of a claim on behalf of the ward is conclusive until set aside by some direct and appropriate proceedings in the probate court.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

Settlement of claim—irregularities—effect. The validity of a settlement of a claim on behalf of a ward is not affected by the fact that the settlement was signed shortly before the guardian was actually appointed, or that there was some delay in filing the order of court approving the settlement.

Bennett v Ryan, 206-1263; 222 NW 16

Testamentary provision in re guardianship. A testamentary request that "the court" appoint a guardian of the property devised to minors does not give the presiding judge a personal power to appoint, but contemplates an appointment by the court acting as a judicial tribunal.

Hodgen's Executors v Sproul, 221-1104; 267 NW 692

Ward's control over appointment. In proceedings for the appointment of a guardian or trustee of the property of a minor who is over 14 years of age and under no legal disability, the court abuses its discretion when it refuses to appoint the concededly competent and qualified person formally requested by the ward for such appointment. So held where the court ignored the request solely because the person whose appointment was requested resided just outside the judge's judicial district and some short distance from the location of the trust property.

Hodgen's Executors v Sproul, 221-1104; 267 NW 692

10764 Executors and trustees.

Testamentary trusts. See under §11876

Findings of fact in probate. A supported finding of fact by trustees that the beneficiary of a testamentary bequest had fulfilled the conditions imposed on the payment of said bequest is conclusive on the appellate court.

In re Sants' Est., 219-374; 258 NW 682

Nonpower to approve termination of testamentary trust.

Windsor v Barnett, 201-1226; 207 NW 362

Creation of trust—mistaken view of law. Securities deposited by an insurance company with the commissioner of insurance for the specific purpose of protecting the policyholders constitute a trust fund for said specified purpose, both in the hands of the commissioner and, in case of insolvency, in the hands of the receiver of the company, even tho said deposit was made on demand of the commissioner, acquiesced in by the company, in the mutually mistaken, but good-faith, belief that the statute required such deposit before a license to transact business could legally issue to the company.

State v Cas. Co., 206-988; 221 NW 585

Escrow delivery—recall power nullifies delivery. No valid delivery of a deed is made by depositing it in a safety deposit box over which grantor thereafter maintains full dominion, with power to recall the deed. (Davis v College, 208-480; Robertson v Renshaw, 220-572; and Boone College v Forrest, 223-1260, overruled.)

Orris v Whipple, 224-1157; 280 NW 617

Unlawful delivery of deed. An administrator who has in his possession a deed of conveyance purporting to have been executed by the deceased has no authority to deliver said deed to the grantee in said deed without an authorizing order of court.

Blain v Blain, 215-69; 244 NW 827

Improper allowance of attorney fees. A trust created by a legislative appropriation act, solely for the "education, care, and keep" of a designated person, may not be depleted by the allowance by the court of attorney fees for services rendered, not in the administration of the trust, but in inducing the legislature to make the appropriation.

In re Gage, 208-603; 226 NW 64

"Net income"—what constitutes. "Net income" does not mean the general income of the estate without provision for the payment of just charges, taxes, and reasonable repair and upkeep. On the contrary, it means the income remaining, if any, after such charges and expenses are taken care of. (So held as to a testamentary trust which provided for the keeping of the trust estate intact and for the annual distribution of the net income.)

In re Whitman, 221-1114; 266 NW 28

Distribution of trust income—when conclusive. When the sole beneficiaries of the annual net income of a trust estate have been and are, themselves, trustees of the trust estate, the court will not disturb the annual distributions which the trustee-beneficiaries, on an erroneous but good-faith interpretation of the trust instrument, have made among themselves during a long series of years. But the court will give proper directions as to future distributions.

In re Whitman, 221-1114; 266 NW 28

Note found in decedent's safe—no delivery. In spite of a mother's declarations as to the existence of a note and her instructions to her daughter to get it after the mother's death, a promissory note executed by a mother, with her daughter as payee, in repayment of money allegedly borrowed from the daughter, and found by said daughter in the mother's safe after her death, is not a valid claim against the estate of the mother—there having been no sufficient delivery thereof to payee. Quare, as to validity of claim if based on the debt independent of the note.

In re Martens, 226-162; 283 NW 885

Property held by administrator. Where trust property in the possession of an administrator is identifiable and not affected by rights of innocent third parties, equity may impress a trust therein.

Carpenter v Lothringer, 224-439; 275 NW 98

Receiver of insolvent executor bank—duty. Where the Scott county district court appoints a receiver to take charge of an insolvent trust company, which company had been previously appointed by the Johnson county district court as co-executor in an estate pending in the Johnson county district court, such receiver did not become an officer accountable to the Johnson county district court but was an officer of the Scott county district court having possession of the property and his duty was only to deliver such property under direction of the Scott county district court to the person entitled thereto.

Bates v Evans, 226-438; 284 NW 385

Rent-free occupancy by beneficiary. A testamentary trust manifestly cannot be construed to authorize one of the beneficiaries to occupy a portion of the trust estate free of rent when the trust instrument contains no such authorization, but clearly provides that the net income of the entire trust estate shall be divided in a stated manner among named beneficiaries.

In re Whitman, 221-1114; 266 NW 28

Rescission of contract—tender of performance to trustee. The guardian of an incompetent has no authority, even with the approval of the court, to contract for the sale of lands held by the ward as trustee only, yet the purchaser under such a contract may not base a rescission of the contract on such a lack of authority only, and recover payments already made, if, on the death of the trustee-ward, and before full performance of the contract is due, the guardian is also appointed successor trustee, thereby enabling said purchaser, to tender performance to the trustee.

Copple v Morrison, 221-183; 264 NW 113

Trustee—disqualification—effect. Equity will not permit a trust to fail simply because a particular trustee is disqualified from acting.

State v Cas. Co., 206-988; 221 NW 585

Trustee for beneficiaries. The administrator is a trustee for the benefit of persons interested in the estate.

Goodman v Bauer, 225-1086; 281 NW 448

Compensation and attorney fees. The compensation of a trustee and of his attorney necessarily rests quite largely in the discretion of the trial court.

Turner v Ryan, 223-191; 272 NW 60; 110 ALR 554

Commingling funds. Where trust funds are deposited in the individual account of the trustee, the cestui que trust has the right to elect to sue the trustee for the conversion, or he may pursue the trust funds and establish a preference thereto if they can be traced.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Trustee by contract. A trustee who is such, by contract between himself and the beneficiaries but who applies to the district court for formal appointment, who is so appointed, who qualifies as such trustee under order of court, and who, in compliance with a prayer therefor, is authorized to take possession of, and manage the property in question under "orders of court", is subject to the jurisdiction of the court in the matter of reports, the rejection thereof, and final accounting.

In re Skinner, 215-1021; 247 NW 484

Credit for overpayment of income. On final accounting, a trustee will be credited with an overpayment to the beneficiary of income even tho such payment was made in advance of the actual receipt of the income.

In re Siberts, 216-336; 249 NW 196

Liability on trustee's bonds—receipt of funds. Where a party was guardian of minors and also trustee for said minors (bond in each case having been given), his written receipt showing the receipt of funds as guardian is not necessarily conclusive on the issue whether he received said funds as trustee.

In re Baldwin, 217-279; 251 NW 696

Powers of trustee. Principle reaffirmed that the power of a trustee to dispose of trust property is limited to the powers granted in the trust agreement.

In re Barnett, 217-187; 251 NW 59

Trustee borrowing from himself. A trustee, duly appointed by the court to execute a contract trusteeship, who loans the trust funds to himself, and uses the same in the purchase and improvement of various properties, without any authorizing order of court and without the knowledge or consent of the beneficiaries of the trust, will, on final report, be ordered to account in cash for said funds, and not in the physical properties bought by him, especially when said properties are inferior to the standard of investments required by said contract.

In re Skinner, 215-1021; 247 NW 484

Trustee buying property from himself. The act of a trustee in transferring his individually owned bonds and mortgages to himself as trustee and charging the trust funds with the amount thereof is wholly void even when authorized by an order of court. A fortiori is this true when the order was not obtained in good faith.

In re Riordan, 216-1138; 248 NW 21

Death of trustee—revesting of title. Upon the death of a trustee, the title to the trust property vests in the beneficiary of the trust.

Copple v Morrison, 221-183; 264 NW 113

Investments—negligence—evidence. Evidence held to support a finding that a trustee had failed to exercise a fair and sound discretion in investing trust funds.

In re Bartholomew, 207-109; 222 NW 356

Investments without authorizing order—subsequent confirmation. Assuming, arguendo, that an authorizing order of court is absolutely necessary in order to render legal an investment of trust funds, yet a trustee, who, without such order, has made an investment in good faith, and without loss to the estate, may, subsequently, on a full showing of the controlling facts, and at a time when the estate has suffered no loss, be granted a valid order confirming said investment. (See §12772, C., '31.)

In re Lawson, 215-752; 244 NW 739; 88 ALR 316

Unauthorized and unallowable investments. The court may charge a court-appointed trustee with the amount of an investment purchased by the trustee from himself at a profit and without an authorizing order of court.

In re Siberts, 216-336; 249 NW 196

Unauthorized investment—advice of counsel—effect. An illegal and unauthorized investment by a trustee will not, on an accounting, be treated as legal and authorized on a showing that the investment was made on the advice of an attorney.

In re Skinner, 215-1021; 247 NW 484

Wrongful purchase of securities by executor or trustee. An objection to the final report of a trust company acting as trustee and executor was sufficient in alleging that securities were purchased without the approval of the court, altho the date of each purchase was not stated, and it was not stated whether the purchases were made as executor or trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

Probate application by trustee—transfer to equity. Where an application in probate brought by a trustee under a will asking for directions of the court was transferred to equity on a motion by intervenors after a hearing at which all parties appeared and submitted arguments but did not except to the transfer, it was proper for the court to refuse a motion made eight months later asking that the transfer be canceled, when it was not shown that the rights of the parties could be better determined in probate than in equity, the question being a matter of forum rather than of jurisdiction.

In re Proestler, 227-895; 289 NW 436

Trust—precatory words as basis. Expression in a will, following an absolute devise of property, of an apparent wish that said devisee will, on his death, distribute said property among named persons, cannot be deemed to create a trust on behalf of said persons unless it is clear from the will as a whole that said so-called wish was not, in fact, a wish, but a mandatory direction.

In re Hellman, 221-552; 266 NW 36

Trusts—precatory statements—legal effect. The construction of a testamentary trust cannot be controlled by a written, precatory statement made by the testatrix subsequent to the execution of the will and not even made a part thereof.

In re Whitman, 221-1114; 266 NW 28

Trust property held by ward. A contract by the guardian of an incompetent, for the sale of land owned by the ward solely as trustee, tho approved by the court, cannot, in any sense, be deemed the contract of the ward; therefore, such contract cannot, in the event of the death of the ward, be deemed to create any indebtedness against the estate of the ward.

Copple v Morrison, 221-183; 264 NW 113

Receivership for insolvent trustee creates vacancy—power to fill. A judicial finding that a banking institution is insolvent and the appointment of a receiver to liquidate its affairs, ipso facto, (1) transfer, to the custody of the law, trust property held by said insolvent as a duly appointed testamentary trustee, (2) deprive said insolvent trustee of power further to act in said trusteeship, and (3) necessarily create a vacancy in the office of said trust,—which vacancy the probate court has legal power to fill by appointing a successor in trust, (1) on the sworn application therefor supplemented by the professional statement of counsel, (2) at an ex parte hearing and without notice to interested parties, and (3) without any formal proceedings whatever for the termination of said former trusteeship; and especially is this true when said former trustee, formally and by its conduct, abandons its said trusteeship and all right and interest therein.

In re Strasser, 220-194; 262 NW 137; 102 ALR 117

In re Carson, 221-367; 265 NW 648 .

Final report by trustee after receivership. The filing of a final report by a trust company as trustee of an estate after the company had gone into receivership and could no longer perform any duty as active trustee, was not an act in administering the trust, but was the performance of its duty to make such final report upon its removal as trustee.

In re Carson, 227-941; 289 NW 30

10767 Counties bordering on Missouri river.

Mississippi and Missouri rivers, concurrent jurisdiction. See under §13449 (III)

Accretion and avulsion—presumptions. In an action involving title to land affected by changes in course of Missouri river, court recognized principles that boundaries established in the middle of the main channels vary as channels change by accretion, but that boundaries are unaffected where change takes place suddenly by avulsion; that land on Iowa side of Missouri river is presumed to be in Iowa, and that land, left by recession of the river, is presumed to be the result of accretion rather than avulsion.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

Jurisdiction. In an action to enjoin trespass and recover damages, wherein cross-action to quiet title was brought, and where all parties appeared, and where at the time of the action and for many years prior thereto, the land in controversy was situated on the Iowa side of the Missouri river and within Potawattamie county, altho formerly as result of changes in course of river, such land lay, for a certain period of time, on the Nebraska side, the district court for said county had jurisdiction.

Arnd v Harrington, 227-43; 287 NW 292

10794 Decisions and entries in vacation.

Judgment in vacation—when a lien. Where a cause is tried, submitted, and taken under advisement under a stipulation that judgment may be entered "during term time or vacation", a subsequently rendered judgment becomes a lien on the defendant's land from the date of its actual entry, and not from the date of actual trial and submission under said stipulation, even tho the judgment entry recites such day of trial and submission.

Andrew v Winegarden, 205-1180; 219 NW 326

Entry two terms after submission. In an action between co-sureties on probate bond, the fact that two terms intervene between date cause was submitted to trial court and date of trial court's judgment does not divest trial court of jurisdiction of parties or subject matter of litigation such as to invalidate judgment and decree notwithstanding statute concerning decisions and entries in vacation.

Bookhart v Cas. Co., 226-1186; 286 NW 417

10795 Expiration of term—pending trials.

Adjournment sine die—sufficient entry. The entry by the clerk of the court in the permanent records of the court, of the usual entry of adjournment sine die, all in compliance with the oral direction of the court, effectually terminates the term of court, tho said entry is not signed by the court or by any judge thereof.

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

10797 Judges not to sit together.

Dismissal—nonjurisdiction of court. When a cause is assigned to and tried by a judge of the district court, all other judges of the same court are thereby deprived of jurisdiction to dismiss the cause while it is pending before said trial judge.

Dunkelbarger v Myers, 211-512; 233 NW 744

10798 Preparation and signing of record.

ANALYSIS

- I MEMORANDA OF DECREE
- II RECORDING, APPROVING, AND SIGNING
- III JUDICIAL NOTICE OF RECORDS

I MEMORANDA OF DECREE

Unallowable amendment. A record cannot be amended by affidavits of counsel.

Parker-Gordon v Benakis, 213-136; 238 NW 611

Calendar memorandum—approval by judge. A calendar memorandum of findings of fact may be sufficient basis for a judgment entry by the clerk in the proper record, when approved by the judge.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Order noted on calendar. A party may not appeal from an order in the form of a mere notation on the judge's calendar, which order is later incorporated into the final decree.

Yeomen v Ressler, 216-983; 250 NW 169

II RECORDING, APPROVING, AND SIGNING

Adjournment sine die—sufficient entry. The entry by the clerk of the court in the permanent records of the court, of the usual entry of adjournment sine die, all in compliance with the oral direction of the court, effectually terminates the term of court, tho said entry is not signed by the court or by any judge thereof.

State v Harper, 220-515; 258 NW 886

Calendar memorandum—approval by judge. A calendar memorandum of findings of fact may be sufficient basis for a judgment entry by the clerk in the proper record, when approved by the judge.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

III JUDICIAL NOTICE OF RECORDS

Another case in same county—same parties. The supreme court cannot take judicial notice of the record of another case involving the same parties and tried in the same county, when the record of such prior case is not before it.

Lawrence v Melvin, 202-866; 211 NW 410

Notice of information and warrant—condemnation of gambling devices. In proceeding to condemn slot machines and punch boards as gambling devices, failure to introduce in evidence the information, search warrant, and the property seized was not error where the defendant in his answer admitted seizure of the property and since information and warrant were a part of the case and court would take judicial notice of the files therein.

State v Doe, 227-1215; 290 NW 518

Bankruptcy proceedings in another court. Court cannot take judicial notice of bankruptcy proceedings in another court however seriously they affect the rights of parties to the suit already pending. Defense of discharge in bankruptcy should have been pleaded.

Reining v Nevison, 203-995; 213 NW 609

Dismissal for lack of prosecution—another action pending. In denying motion for reinstatement of case which had lain dormant for 25 years, it was not error for the court to take notice that such cause was eliminated from the calendar for want of prosecution under circumstances inherent in the record; and it was also proper to take notice of another pending action even tho the record was silent in regard to it.

Benjamin v Jackson, 207-581; 223 NW 383

History of state—statutes—decisions of court. Court may take judicial notice of history of events in the state, and especially of the statutes of the state and the decisions of this court.

Mathews v Turner, 212-424; 236 NW 412

Probate and equity jurisdiction exercised by same judge. The court will judicially notice the fact that the same judge was exercising both probate jurisdiction, and equity jurisdiction in an action for appointment of a receiver for the estate property—the extent that an appellate tribunal may divide the equity and probate functions of the same judge, so that the equity judge may know nothing of the probate proceedings, and the probate judge know nothing of the equity proceedings, being a puzzle sui generis.

Frazier v Wood, 214-237; 242 NW 78

Supreme court's own records. Principle reaffirmed that the supreme court will take judicial notice of its own records.

Dayton v Ins. Co., 202-753; 210 NW 945
Farmers Bk. v Miles, 206-766; 221 NW 449

10799 Signing after term—effect.

Filing for record after term time—effect. A judgment is not rendered erroneous because signed, filed and entered of record after the adjournment of the trial term, when the decision was rendered in term time, and then noted on the court calendar and on the appearance docket, with directions to the attorneys to prepare a decree in accordance with the decision.

Andrew v Bank, 209-1149; 229 NW 819

- I CORRECTIONS DURING TERM
- II CORRECTIONS AFTER TERM
- III NOTICE OF CHANGE

I CORRECTIONS DURING TERM

Application to vacate. Where no personal representative was substituted for plaintiff who died after institution of partition action, and heirs of decedent were not in court, plaintiff's attorney had no authority to dismiss cause, and court was without jurisdiction to enter decree on petition of intervention against interests once held by plaintiff. Hence, application made during same term to vacate the dismissal and decree should have been sustained.

Bingaman v Rosenbohm, 227-655; 288 NW 900

Calendar memorandum—superseded by subsequent decree. Where trial judge made calendar memorandum of findings of fact which he did not sign, and the clerk's record thereof was not signed, the signing of the recorded entry of a subsequent decree was convincing proof that the subsequent decree and not the memorandum was the final decree.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Entry of judgment—record clarified by later entry. When the court stated in its entry of judgment: "The defendant excepts to said judgment. Exceptions allowed and granted.", and in ruling on a motion for a new trial, made an entry that the above-quoted was intended to save an exception for the defendant, the court was correct in its action to clarify the record, and on appeal the defendant could not contend that the entry could only be interpreted to mean that the exception to the judgment was sustained.

Wessman v Sundholm, 228- ; 291 NW 137

Default—setting aside. The superior court has ample jurisdiction, during a term at which a motion to set aside a default is overruled, to reconsider its judgment and to enter an order sustaining said motion.

Braverman v Burns, 207-1382; 224 NW 596

Default—setting aside—when affidavit of merit unnecessary. A default may be legally set aside, tho the mover therefor files no affidavit of merit, when the court, in entering the default, stated that he would set aside the default if a motion so asking be filed, and when the applicant for the default then affirmatively acquiesced in such purpose of the court.

Wagoner v Ring, 213-1123; 240 NW 634

Dismissal—jurisdiction to set aside. The voluntary dismissal of an action may not, even during the same term, be set aside and the action reinstated when such dismissal was brought about by the negligence of the dismissing party and such negligence is wholly unexplained or unexcused. Whether the court has jurisdiction in any case to set aside a voluntary dismissal, quaere.

Ryan v Ins. Co., 204-655; 215 NW 749

Inaccurate judgment—correction without new trial. When parties to an action voluntarily (tho irregularly) submit to a referee certain counts only of the petition, and later judgment is entered on the report of the referee in such form as to indicate that all counts of the petition had been so submitted, the court, on proper proof, is under mandatory duty, during the term at which the judgment was entered, to exercise its statutory and inherent power and, itself, correct said inaccuracy.

Watters v Knutsen, 223-225; 272 NW 420

Inherent power of court. The district court has inherent power to set aside a judgment during the term at which it was rendered on proof that the judgment was obtained by fraud, extrinsic and collateral to the judgment, even tho there was no default.

Cedar R. Co. v Bowen, 211-1207; 233 NW 495

Misunderstanding as to decree. A pardonable misunderstanding between parties and their attorneys which results in a consenting by one of the parties to an unintended decree, affords ample grounds for vacating the decree during the term at which it is entered.

Dimick v Munsinger, 202-784; 211 NW 404

Municipal court—filing motions after verdict. The municipal court has jurisdiction to enter an order extending the time to file a motion for a new trial and exceptions to instructions and judgment non obstante verdicto. Such order is reviewable by appeal, not by certiorari.

Eller v Munic. Court, 225-501; 281 NW 441

Non-jurisdiction to set aside dismissal. A municipal court having entered a valid order of dismissal of an action has no jurisdiction, seven months later, to set aside said order and reinstate said action without notice to the defendant.

Des M. & CI Ry. v Powers, 215-567; 246 NW 274

No right to set aside orders on judge's motion. A judge of the municipal court has no jurisdiction to set aside, on his own motion, a duly rendered and journalized order of another judge of the same court sustaining a motion to set aside a default; and equally without jurisdiction, thereupon, to overrule said motion.

Denman v Sawyer, 211-56; 232 NW 819

Recitals—presumption—insufficient showing to overcome. A judgment recital that a plaintiff appeared and requested the dismissal of the action will not be expunged on motion on testimony which is in equipoise on the issue whether such recital is correct.

Sullivan v Coakley, 205-225; 217 NW 820

Trial record—not corrected in appellate court. Any correction of the trial court record should be made by a motion to correct or expunge in the lower court as provided by statute, and not in the appellate court.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Unauthorized entry. A provision in a judgment sentence to the county jail to the effect that the sentence shall be served in the penitentiary is a nullity, even tho the defendant consents thereto; and the court may at the same term, and in the absence of the defendant, strike said provision from the judgment entry and change the commitment to a county other than the county of trial.

State v Herzoff, 200-889; 205 NW 500

Vacation of divorce decree. A final decree of divorce may not be vacated, even during the term at which entered, on a motion by defendant which alleges that no witness was sworn or testified in the cause and no corroborating testimony was offered, but which is silent as to any showing that plaintiff had no cause of action, or that defendant had a defense to plaintiff's action, or that there was fraud in obtaining the decree.

Radle v Radle, 204-82; 214 NW 602

II CORRECTIONS AFTER TERM

Attorney's lien—belated cost modification. Where an action was instituted to set aside conveyances and to subject land to a judgment, and an attorney having a lien on such judgment intervenes, establishes and gets an adjudication of priority in the decree, which made no provision for payment of costs but later was invalidly modified under guise of a motion to retax costs, the trial court being without jurisdiction to modify the decree (1) after an appeal therefrom had been perfected and (2) because the modification was not made during the term the decree was entered, certiorari will lie to correct the lower court's excess of jurisdiction, and fact that plaintiff is a banking corporation no longer in existence will not defeat the certiorari, since corporation must be regarded as existing to the degree necessary to wind up its affairs.

Grimes Sav. Bk. v Jordan, 224-28; 276 NW 71

Case reinstated after dismissal—court rules not in evidence. Where an action is dismissed by the clerk under district court rules, but the judge thereof, without notice to the defendant, reinstates the case on motion and showing that the clerk acted erroneously, and where an application to vacate the order of reinstatement is denied, supreme court could not on appeal assume that judge lacked jurisdiction to reinstate without notice to defendant, without the district court rules of practice being in evidence and before the appellate court.

Eggleston v Eggleston, 225-920; 281 NW 844

Expunging clerk's judgment entry after court's dismissal. An appeal from justice court, perfected and docketed, is in the district court as tho it had been commenced there; the justice's judgment is completely annulled; the appeal brings up the action for trial on its merits; and it is the duty of the plaintiff to prosecute the action. So where a district court, under its rule providing for dismissal of all actions remaining on the court calendar for over one year without being noticed for trial, dismissed such an appeal under its rule, and the clerk of court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount recovered in justice court together with interest and against appealing defendant, the defendant's motion to expunge the clerk's entry and correct the record was well-grounded and should have been sustained.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

Foreclosure — decree — nonjurisdiction to amend. The district court has no jurisdiction, long after a duly rendered decree in mortgage foreclosure has become final, to amend said decree by striking therefrom a provision for redemption from execution sale, and by substituting therefor a provision directing the sheriff to issue deed forthwith upon making such sale. So held where the judgment plaintiff sought such amendment on the theory that the judgment defendant had lost his right to redeem because of a stay of execution obtained by him pending ineffectual bankruptcy proceedings.

Nibbelink v De Vries, 221-581; 265 NW 913

Judgment of dismissal—nonjurisdiction to set aside. The district court, having at one term entered a judgment of dismissal of an action for want of prosecution of the action as required by the rules of the court, has no jurisdiction at a subsequent term, tho the judgment entry remains unsigned, to set aside said judgment under this section, C., '35, and reinstate the action. The governing procedure, under such circumstances, is provided by §12787 et seq., C., '35.

Workman v Dist. Court, 222-364; 269 NW 27

Modification under curative and legalizing act. A decree which adjudges the rights of the public under a statute as it exists at the date of the decree may, after the term and after the enactment of a curative and legalizing act, be so modified as to express the public rights under the statute as it exists under the curative act.

Wilcox v Miner, 201-476; 205 NW 847

Unallowable modification. The court, having overruled a motion (1) to strike an answer, and (2) for judgment nil dicit, has no right, later and after the term of court has expired, and while the cause is pending, to materially amend said ruling without pleadings, without hearing, and without notice to the defendant.

Taylor v Canning Corp., 218-1281; 257 NW 353

Motion to retax costs—limited applicability. A motion to retax costs can reach only errors of the clerk and not errors inhering in a judgment.

Grimes Sav. Bk. v Jordan, 224-28; 276 NW 71

Nunc pro tunc—inherent power. It is fundamental law that courts possess the inherent power to correct their records so as to make them speak the truth and enter judgments nunc pro tunc, and the lapse of time is no obstacle to the exercise of such power. So where a district court clerk's entry of judgment on record not only misinterpreted trial judge's entry on calendar, but was such an interpretation as would constitute action which was beyond jurisdiction of the district court, aggrieved party's right to have judgment set aside was neither waived by delay and negligence, nor by failure to show fraud, unavoidable casualty, or misfortune preventing defendant from filing his motion promptly.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

III NOTICE OF CHANGE

Absence of notice. A material amendment to a judgment of conviction of contempt, without notice to the defendant, is a nullity.

Ciccio v Utterback, 205-482; 218 NW 253

Notice as condition precedent. A decree may not be materially corrected or amended, even during the term at which the decree was entered, without notice to the adverse party.

Chariton Bk. v Taylor, 210-1153; 232 NW 487

10802 Unauthorized alteration.

Expunging clerk's judgment entry after court's dismissal. An appeal from justice court, perfected and docketed, is in the district court as tho it had been commenced there; the justice's judgment is completely annulled; the appeal brings up the action for trial on its merits; and it is the duty of the plaintiff to prosecute the action. So where a district court, under its rule providing for dismissal of all actions remaining on the court calendar for over one year without being noticed for trial, dismissed such an appeal under its rule, and the clerk of court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount recovered in justice court together with interest and against appealing defendant, the defendant's motion to expunge the clerk's entry and correct the record was well-grounded and should have been sustained.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

Nunc pro tunc—inherent power. It is fundamental law that courts possess the inherent power to correct their records so as to make them speak the truth and enter judgments nunc pro tunc, and the lapse of time is no obstacle to the exercise of such power. I GENERAL POWER TO MAKE CORRECTIONS

Judgment—amendment without notice. A trial court has no jurisdiction, after term time and after a proceeding for contempt has been removed to the supreme court by certiorari, to enter, without notice to the defendant (petitioner in certiorari), a nunc pro tunc amendment to the record to the effect that the defendant entered a plea of guilty in said contempt proceeding.

Sergio v Utterback, 202-713; 210 NW 907

Correction of record. Corrections of the trial court record must be made in the trial court, not in the appellate court.

Educational Exchanges v Thornburg, 217-178; 251 NW 66

Default—right to set aside after term. An order declaring that defendant is in default for want of appearance—in other words, a "simple" or "naked" default unaccompanied by any judgment on the claim sued on—may be validly set aside at a subsequent term on proper showing.

Weinhart v Meyer, 215-1317; 247 NW 811

Effect on decree and mistaken stipulation. An order, on appeal, for a new trial on the ground of a conceded mutual mistake in entering into a written stipulation for judgment

I GENERAL POWER TO MAKE CORRECTIONS—concluded necessarily works a setting aside, not only of the judgment, but of the stipulation; and, after procedendo, the trial court does not exceed its jurisdiction in entering a formal order to said effect.

Hall v Dist. Court, 206-179; 215 NW 606

Evident mistake. The evident mistake of the court in entering upon its calendar that a motion was sustained, when in fact the motion had been overruled, may, on notice, etc., be corrected at a subsequent term.

State v Frey, 206-981; 221 NW 445

Rulings in re change of records. A ruling of the trial court relative to changing its records will not be interfered with by the appellate court in the absence of a clear and satisfactory showing that the trial court was in error.

Gow v County, 213-92; 238 NW 578

Unallowable modification. An unappealed decree of divorce, which specifically denies all allowance of alimony because the parties had theretofore entered into a property settlement, is a finality on the subject matter of alimony, and may not, long after the court term has expired, be modified by inserting said settlement therein as alimony, because (1) said modification would contradict said final decree, and (2) any prior contract between the parties relative to alimony necessarily merges into the final decree.

Duvall v Duvall, 215-24; 244 NW 718; 83 ALR 1242

Unallowable modification. The court, having overruled a motion (1) to strike an answer, and (2) for judgment nil dicit, has no right, later and after the term of court has expired, and while the cause is pending, to materially amend said ruling without pleadings, without hearing, and without notice to the defendant.

Taylor v Canning Corp., 218-1281; 257 NW 353

II NATURE OF MISTAKE

Attorney's lien—belated cost modification—review. Where an action was instituted to set aside conveyances and to subject land to a judgment, and an attorney having a lien on such judgment intervenes, establishes and gets an adjudication of priority in the decree, which made no provision for payment of costs but later was invalidly modified under guise of a motion to retax costs, the trial court being without jurisdiction to modify the decree (1) after an appeal therefrom had been perfected and (2) because the modification was not made during the term the decree was entered, certiorari will lie to correct the lower court's excess of jurisdiction, and fact that plaintiff is a banking corporation no longer in existence will not defeat the certiorari, since corporation must be regarded as existing to the degree necessary to wind up its affairs.

Grimes Sav. Bk. v Jordan, 224-28; 276 NW 71

Mistake of clerk—unpardonable delay. A judgment may not be corrected for error of the clerk in computing the amount thereof, when the defendant, before the expiration of the year following the entry felt in his own mind that such error had been made, but, without explanation, delayed the filing of his application for correction until after the expiration of said year, and until after land had been sold under the judgment; and especially when his application is accompanied by an inequitable demand.

Floyd County v Ramsey, 213-556; 239 NW 237

III ALLOWABLE CORRECTIONS

Correction of order for new trial. The trial court has power to so correct an order for a new trial as to show the grounds upon which the order was made.

Euclid Bank v Nesbit, 201-506; 207 NW 761

Costs—motion to retax—limited applicability. A motion to retax costs can reach only errors of the clerk and not errors inhering in a judgment.

Grimes Sav. Bk. v Jordan, 224-28; 276 NW 71

Erroneous entry of amount. The inadvertent entry on the appearance docket of the amount of a judgment, followed by the issuance of an execution in the erroneous amount, sale thereunder, and issuance of sale certificate, must, on proper motion, be corrected by expunging the erroneous entry, recalling the execution, setting aside the sale, and canceling the certificate, no rights of third parties having intervened.

Equitable v Carpenter, 202-1334; 212 NW 145

Judgment after death of defendant. Principle recognized that the court having taken a cause under advisement, and delayed decision until after the death of the defendant, may validly render judgment as of the date of the submission.

Chariton Bk. v Taylor, 213-1206; 240 NW 740

Modification under curative and legalizing act. A decree which adjudges the rights of the public under a statute as it exists at the date of the decree may, after the term and after the enactment of a curative and legalizing act, be so modified as to express the public rights under the statute as it exists under the curative act.

Wilcox v Miner, 201-476; 205 NW 847

IV NOTICE OF CHANGE

Ciccio v Utterback, 205-482; 218 NW 253

V NUNC PRO TUNC ORDERS IN GENERAL

Discussion. See 13 ILR 241, 426—Corrective entries

Nunc pro tunc generally. The power is inherent in the court to make nunc pro tunc entries.

State v Frey, 206-981; 221 NW 445

Nunc pro tunc entry—effect. The recital in a judgment entry of the date on which a cause came on for trial does not, in and of itself, constitute a nunc pro tunc order that a subsequently entered judgment shall be a lien from said recited date of trial.

Andrew v Winegarden, 205-1180; 219 NW 326

Nunc pro tunc—inherent power. It is fundamental law that courts possess the inherent power to correct their records so as to make them speak the truth and enter judgments nunc pro tunc, and the lapse of time is no obstacle to the exercise of such power. So where a district court clerk's entry of judgment on record not only misinterpreted trial judge's entry on calendar, but was such an interpretation as would constitute action which was beyond jurisdiction of the district court, aggrieved party's right to have judgment set aside was neither waived by delay and negligence, nor by failure to show fraud, unavoidable casualty, or misfortune preventing defendant from filing his motion promptly.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

Nunc pro tunc order for more time—ineffective after five days from verdict. An application for a nunc pro tunc order for an extension of time to file motion for new trial is properly overruled when made more than five days after the verdict.

In re Larimer, 225-1067; 283 NW 430

Amendment without notice. A trial court has no jurisdiction, after term time and after a proceeding for contempt has been removed to the supreme court by certiorari, to enter, without notice to the defendant (petitioner in certiorari), a nunc pro tunc amendment to the record to the effect that the defendant entered a plea of guilty in said contempt proceeding.

Sergio v Utterback, 202-713; 210 NW 907

Denying moratorium cancels restraining order on sheriff. An order restraining the sheriff from issuing a deed, pending a hearing on a moratorium application for extension of period for redemption, is automatically dissolved when the application is denied, and a deed issued is valid when a nunc pro tunc order places the moratorium denial order on record as of a date prior to the issuance of deed.

Lincoln Bk. v Brown, 224-1256; 278 NW 294

Expunging clerk's judgment entry after court's dismissal. An appeal from justice court, perfected and docketed, is in the district court as though it had been commenced there; the justice's judgment is completely annulled; the appeal brings up the action for trial on its merits; and it is the duty of the plaintiff to prosecute the action. So where a district court, under its rule providing for dismissal of all actions remaining on the court calendar for over one year without being noticed for trial, dismissed such an appeal under its rule, and the clerk of court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount recovered in justice court together with interest and against appealing defendant, the defendant's motion to expunge the clerk's entry and correct the record was well-grounded and should have been sustained.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

Harmless error—nunc pro tunc correction—waiver. Overruling a special appearance to plaintiff's application for a nunc pro tunc order and then correcting the trial record thereunder by substituting "plaintiff" for "defendant" in an order extending time to file exceptions to instructions and motion for new trial is harmless error where defendant appeared and without objections thereto permitted and participated in hearing on the merits of such exceptions and motion for new trial.

Thompson v Butler, 223-1085; 274 NW 110

Inherent power of court. The district court is but exercising its inherent power when, on motion, it corrects by nunc pro tunc order, and regardless of the one-year limitation imposed by §12791, C., '35, the unquestionably established error of its own clerk in entering a judgment against a judgment defendant for a less amount than theretofore ordered by the court,—it appearing that the judgment plaintiff had not, by laches, forfeited the right to demand such correction against the judgment defendant.

Murnan v Schuldt, 221-242; 265 NW 369

Unallowable nunc pro tunc entry. The supreme court may not enter a nunc pro tunc order to the effect that an abstract was filed within the time provided by statute when, in truth and in fact, it was not so filed.

Farmers Bank v Miles, 206-766; 221 NW 449

VI MATTERS CORRECTABLE BY NUNC PRO TUNC ORDERS

Nunc pro tunc correction—appeal as sole remedy. The nunc pro tunc correction of an unsigned decree in order to make it conform to the original order of the court, such correction being made on motion, service, and appearance of all parties, is a finality in the absence of an appeal therefrom.

Samek v Taylor, 203-1064; 213 NW 801

Nunc pro tunc correction of manifest error. A decree in chattel mortgage foreclosure may be so corrected by nunc pro tunc entry that the detailed enumeration of the mortgaged property will appear in the corrected decree exactly as the court unquestionably intended such enumeration to appear in the original judgment entry.

Chariton Bk. v Taylor, 213-1206; 240 NW 740

Direct pecuniary interest. The interest which disqualifies a trial judge, means some direct pecuniary gain or property interest, and has no reference to the remote interest which he, along with every other citizen and taxpayer of a city, might have in the result of a judgment against a city.

Sioux City v Western Corp., 223-279; 271 NW 624

Nondisqualifying interest of judge. A judge of the district court does not, by signing a petition to a city council for an election to vote on the proposition whether the city shall erect a specified public utility plant, thereby disqualify himself from fully presiding over litigation questioning the legal sufficiency of said petition.

CHAPTER 479

CLERK OF THE DISTRICT COURT

10825 General duties.

Payment to clerk—effect. Payment by an administrator to the clerk of the district court of the amount of an allowed claim is an authorized and legal payment and discharges the estate from further liability.

In re Nairn, 209-52; 227 NW 585

Affidavit lacking seal of court clerk. Affidavit of publication of notice of hearing on drainage assessment was sufficient altho court seal was not attached by court clerk before whom the affidavit was made. Moreover, statute did not require that proof of service be by affidavit.

Whisenand v Van Clark, 227-800; 288 NW 915

Confession of judgment—mandatory duties. A "statement of confession", or "cognovit" oftentimes referred to as a "power of attorney" or simply as a "power", is the written authority of the debtor and his direction to the clerk of the district court, or justice of the peace, to enter judgment against him as stated therein and the statutory provision that "the clerk shall thereupon make an entry of judgment" is definite and mandatory, so the mere recording by the clerk of the debtor's admission of indebtedness, confession of judgment, and authorization to the clerk to enter judgment was not the "entry of judgment by confession" required by statute. Execution issued thereon was properly annulled and decree quieting title to land in owners as against execution levy and making permanent a temporary injunction enjoining execution sale was proper.

Blott v Blott, 227-1108; 290 NW 74

10826 Payment of money—notice.

Not insurer of official funds. The clerk of the district court is not liable for loss of official funds coming into his hands and lost because of the failure of the bank in which they were deposited, when, at the time of deposit, he in good faith justifiably believed the bank to be solvent.

I RECORDS GENERALLY

Rules—general order—dismissal for want of prosecution. Under the recognized rule that courts have the inherent power to prescribe such rules of practice and rules to regulate their proceedings in order to expedite the trial of cases, to keep their dockets clear, and to facilitate the administration of justice, the judges of a judicial district could adopt and enforce a general order requiring parties to cause each case to be finally determined within two years from date of filing petition and providing upon failure to comply with such order the clerk should enter upon the record, "Dismissed without prejudice for want of prosecution".

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

Entry—necessity. Principle reaffirmed that the oral rendition by the court of his decision, the entry of such decision on the court calendar, and the transcribing of such entry into the appearance docket and fee book, do not constitute a judgment.

State v Wieland, 217-887; 251 NW 757

Clerk's entry of dismissal under general order—nonreviewable when court approves entry. Where a general order of the judges of a judicial district provided for the dismissal of all actions and proceedings undetermined after a period of two years, and directed the clerk of court to enter the dismissal without prejudice, and where such order was so entered in the district court record by the clerk, the supreme court is not required to pass upon the question of whether such entry by the clerk would be an effective dismissal, when at the same term of court the presiding judge made an entry in the same record "approving, affirming and ratifying" this and all other orders of dismissal under the general order.

Hammon v Gilson, 227-1366; 291 NW 448

II RECORD BOOK (PAR. 1)

Belated entry in clerk's record—showing by later order. Where a proceeding was shown on the judge's calendar as held on November 15, and, although given that date in the district court record book, was not entered therein before December 12, plaintiff was entitled to an entry on the record book showing that the proceedings were not therein entered before the latter date.

Buser v Kriechbaum, 224-1147; 278 NW 330

III JUDGMENT DOCKET (PAR. 2)

Calendar memorandum as basis for judgment. A calendar memorandum of findings of fact may be sufficient basis for a judgment entry by the clerk in the proper record, when approved by the judge.

Rance v Gaddis, 226-531; 284 NW 468

Expunging clerk's judgment entry after court's dismissal. An appeal from justice court, perfected and docketed, is in the district court as though it had been commenced there; the justice's judgment is completely annulled; the appeal brings up the action for trial on its merits; and it is the duty of the plaintiff to prosecute the action. So where a district court, under its rule providing for dismissal of all actions remaining on the court calendar for over one year without being noticed for trial, dismissed such an appeal under its rule, and the clerk of court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount recovered in justice court together with interest and against appealing defendant, the defendant's motion to expunge the clerk's entry and correct the record was well-grounded and should have been sustained.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

Journal entry as evidence. As a general rule, a judgment must be entered of record in order to be of any validity, but for many purposes the court's decision is effective from the time it is actually pronounced, or when the judge writes in his calendar a statement of the decision, but there is no competent evidence of the rendition until the memorandum is entered in the court record, and, after recording, the judgment may for some purposes relate back to the time when it was actually ordered.

Street v Stewart, 226-960; 285 NW 204

Nunc pro tunc—courts' inherent power. It is fundamental law that courts possess the inherent power to correct their records so as to make them speak the truth and enter judgments nunc pro tunc, and the lapse of time is no obstacle to the exercise of such power. So where a district court clerk's entry of judgment on record not only misinterpreted trial judge's entry on calendar, but was such an interpretation as would constitute action which was beyond jurisdiction of the district court, aggrieved party's right to have judgment set aside was neither waived by delay and negligence, nor by failure to show fraud, unavoidable casualty, or misfortune preventing defendant from filing his motion promptly.

Yost v Gadd, 227-621; 288 NW 667

Transcript of evidence filed prior to judgment. When the reporter's notes and a transcript thereof were made a part of the record before final judgment was signed, filed, or entered, there was no merit in a contention that the court had no jurisdiction because the evidence was not properly made of record before entering judgment.

Carey v Dist. Court, 226-717; 285 NW 236

V APPEARANCE OR COMBINATION DOCKET (PAR. 6)

"Filing"—acts constituting. The indorsement and signing on the combination docket of the court of a remittitur constitutes a "filing" of a remittitur within the meaning of a court order to the effect that a new trial would automatically follow the failure "to file" such remittitur.

Fox v McCurnin, 210-429; 228 NW 582

Curing erroneous docketing. The erroneous docketing on the equity side of the calendar of an action of forcible entry and detainer becomes inconsequential when subsequent pleadings put title in issue and thereby convert the original law action into an equitable action.

10833 Pleadings—when deemed filed—removal of papers.

Drainage appeal notice—proper filing notwithstanding auditor's failure to mark "filed". A paper is said to be "filed" when it is delivered to the proper officer and by him received to be kept on file.

Mills v Board, 227-1141; 290 NW 50

Court rule contravening statute. A court-established rule, as to when a motion shall be deemed filed, is a nullity when the rule is in contravention of the statute.

Tate v Delli, 222-635; 269 NW 871

Appeal—filing of notice. The filing of a duly served notice of appeal with the clerk of the trial court is an essential step in perfecting an appeal.

Educational Exch. v Thornburg, 217-178; 251 NW 66

Notice of amendment unnecessary. A plaintiff who at one stage of the pleadings wholly withdraws his claim for personal judgment against the defendant may later, by proper amendment, reassert such claim without notice to the defendant who has appeared, personally and by counsel, and is actively contesting the relief sought by plaintiff.

Gotsch v Schoenjahn, 201-1317; 207 NW 567

Notice of appeal—fatally deficient record. An appeal cannot be entertained when the record affirmatively shows (1) that the appearance docket of the trial court carries no notation of the filing of a notice of appeal, and (2) that no notice of appeal can be found in the office of the clerk of said court.

Statute of limitation—clerk's costs barred after five years. Clerk's costs inuring to the general fund when collected are no part of the judgment to which they are incident, but are only a debt, not necessarily arising out of a governmental function, which costs are such debts as become outlawed at the expiration of five years and may not then be retaxed and collected.
