the 1990s, the number of people with a mental health problem has increased in the UK (Mental Health Act 1983, 1990).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the lives of people with mental health problems. The Department of Health (1998) has set out a strategy for mental health care in the UK, which includes the following aims:

- to reduce the number of people with mental health problems who are admitted to hospital;
- to improve the care of people with mental health problems who are admitted to hospital;
- to improve the lives of people with mental health problems who are not admitted to hospital.

These aims are being achieved through a number of initiatives, including the following:

- the development of mental health trusts;
- the development of mental health services in the community;
- the development of mental health services for children and young people;
- the development of mental health services for people with learning disabilities;
- the development of mental health services for people with severe mental illness.

The Department of Health (1998) has also set out a number of key principles for mental health care, which include the following:

- people with mental health problems should be treated as individuals;
- people with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to participate in decisions about their care;
- people with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to live in the community;
- people with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to work and to study;
- people with mental health problems should be given the opportunity to live a full and active life.

The Department of Health (1998) has also set out a number of key objectives for mental health care, which include the following:

- to reduce the number of people with mental health problems who are admitted to hospital;
- to improve the care of people with mental health problems who are admitted to hospital;
- to improve the lives of people with mental health problems who are not admitted to hospital;
- to improve the lives of people with mental health problems who are admitted to hospital.

The Department of Health (1998) has also set out a number of key actions for mental health care, which include the following:

- to develop mental health services in the community;
- to develop mental health services for children and young people;
- to develop mental health services for people with learning disabilities;
- to develop mental health services for people with severe mental illness.
