A small white dog. A liberal reward will be given for its return at Blondel & Co's. the popular grocers, where you will always find a full line of staple and fancy groceries, crockery and glassware.

The skating carnival for the benefit of the Library, which was mentioned last week will come off next Tuesday evening the 22d. The floor will be reserved for those in masks and costumes. The band will furnish the music. seats will be provided for spectators and the hall will be beautifully lighted and trimmed, and a brilliant effect will probably be produced.

Those of our subscribers who are a year or more in arrears will receive this week or next a statement of the amount they owe the News. We hope these little accounts will be promptly paid, for we need the money which is due us, and which is but a small amount for each individual, but in the aggregate it is quite a sum, which would help us materially.

The holidays with their usual excitements have now become things of the past, and as it is getting into the dead of winter, but little out of the commonplace order of things seems to be transpiring, and the News is proportionally out of material for local items of interest. Even the great skating rink, though well patronized is no longer the novelty it was at first, and as the skaters improve by practice there is not so much hope of seeing a grand tumble of five or six piled up and mixed up so that neither of them can tell exactly which is which.

Chenango county, N. Y. In May 1855 they, in company with his two brothers came to Clear Lake, which he selected for his future home. He immediately commenced opening out a farm of two hundred acres on the eastern shores of the lake. In 1856, he, with James Dickerson, laid out the town of Clear Lake, and with his public spirit and enterprise since that time has done more than any other man to make it the prosperous and popular city and place of resort of northwestern Iowa that it now is.

The following extract from the Clear Lake Mirror succinctly states the worth, qualities and character of a former citizen and property owner of that town:
'He has always been the first to move in all public enterprises, and his name appears at the head of all subscription papers with the largest amount subscribed for all public improvements and charitable purposes. He was a thorough business man, and had the faculty of adopting himself to almost any branch of business, and almost invariably made a success of any and all business engagements. He was at one time County Judge of this county, and for several years was United States assessor of internal revenue for this district, which position he resigned to take his seat in the State Senate to which he had been elected from the district composed of Butler, Grundy, Franklin, Cerro Gordo counties. He served four years in the senate as one of its most active and efficient members; with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. He was an active republican and one of the pillars of the M. E. church at this place until 1879, when he removed to Spencer, in Clay county, at which time Clear Lake lost one of its best business men and most highly esteemed families.'

Also in the United States Biographical Dictionary may be found a lengthy sketch of Mr. Tuttle, and printed in the Clear Lake Record. The following is an extract:
He was in the senate four years, and was chairman of the committee on commerce, a member of the committee on railroads, and the committee on constitutional amendments, etc. While a member of that body his greatest interest centered in the railroad committee, working very hard to secure the grant of land for what is now the Iowa and Dakota division of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, an enterprise which brought this thoroughfare to Clear Lake in 1871.

He also favored and helped to secure the passage of a bill to amend the state constitution so as to extend the right of suffrage to females. The next General Assembly, however, defeated the final completion of the measure. The school laws of Iowa are conceded to be among the best in the Union, and among them is the present county high school law which was framed by Mr. Tuttle, and by him carefully guarded until its final passage. The interests of Mr. Tuttle have been with northern Iowa as well as with those of his adopted home. His views were broad and comprehensive, and he and many others of like forecast and energy have seen great and happy results realized from their untiring efforts.

In politics Mr. Tuttle has always been republican, and was both active and influential in the party, being usually a delegate to its county and state conventions. He was a member of the Methodist church and a trustee of the same. But his religious views were of the broad and liberal type that led him to think and act for himself regardless of whether it conflicted with the creed of one church or another.

lana and southern California for the benefit of his health, but had only proceeded as far as Clear Lake when he became worse and could not be brought back home. Mr. Tuttle was buried Thursday afternoon, Jan. 10th, in the family grounds in the Clear Lake cemetery - land that he purchased in 1855 and presented to the town for cemetery purposes a few years ago. At his earnest request a public funeral was held, his friend-meeting at the old home where he lived so long and from which he was borne to his last and chosen resting place. He leaves a devoted wife and three children with whom their many friends sympathize most deeply in their loss of a kind, indulgent and honored husband and father. He was conscious of the nearness of death and in the strength of a living faith expressed himself as willing to abide by God's will and so peacefully fell asleep. R. A. C.

shire; operated for himself awhile as a merchant, and in the spring of 1844 removed from Hopkinton to De Witt. Here he resumed the mercantile business on a small scale, De Witt village at that time having less than fifty inhabitants. His first store was on Jackson street, facing the public square, where he remained several years, his family and goods being under the same roof. For twenty years or more he has been on Jefferson street, and is one of the leading merchants in the place, having a large store well stocked with general merchandise. For twenty-five years Mr. Butterfield has also dealt in agricultural implements and machines, being one of the first men in Clinton county to introduce such articles, and having been quite successful. A very large number of farmers in the county have dealt with him and found him "true as steel."

Mr. Butterfield was county clerk five years; treasurer and recorder four years, when the two offices were combined; a member of the board of supervisors a year or two; has been mayor of the city, and held other offices, both city and county, and has left an untarnished record. He usually votes with the democratic party. He is a Freemason and has taken the thirty-second degree.

His wife was Caroline A. Gove, of Deering, New Hampshire, their marriage taking place in 1843. They have five children, three of whom are married and living in De Witt. Dennis G., formerly adjutant of the 26th Iowa Infantry, is a grain and lumber dealer; Mary Jane is the wife of Parley S. McCracken, and Ann A., of Jay O. Ferrel. Franklin P., a graduate of the Ann Arbor, Michigan, University, is an attorney at De Witt, and Charles is clerk for his father. The last two are single.

Mr. Butterfield is a man of hardly medium stature, dark complexion, "snugly built," well-preserved and "tough as a knot." He has a cheerful disposition, laughs easily, often and long, believes in sunshine and aids in making it.

HON. MARCUS TUTTLE,

CLEAR LAKE.

ONE of the town builders of Iowa is Marcus Tuttle, who selected Clear Lake for his home when there were not more than half-a-dozen families here, and no other settlement nearer to the northward or westward than Algona, forty miles distant; except eastward, there was no road and no communication. Clear Lake spread out seemingly in primeval freshness and wildness, as if poured from the hollow of God's hand only the day before. On every other side rolled the prairies, "boundless and beautiful," challenging the coffers of enterprise and wooing the hand of industry. Here, thought Mr. Tuttle, must some day be a watering place, and he resolved to help make it attractive. Here he commenced operations, and his judgment did not lead him astray.

Mr. Tuttle is the son of Ira Tuttle, a New York farmer and cheese manufacturer, and was born in Fairfield, Herkimer county, on the 10th of May, 1830. The maiden name of his mother was Lucy Brockett. The Tuttle were early settlers in New Haven, Connecticut, and their descendants have since spread over most of the western as well as the eastern states. President Tuttle, of Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Indiana, and General Tuttle, of Des Moines, Iowa, are distant relatives of the subject of this sketch.

Ira Tuttle moved to Clinton, Oneida county, New York, when his son was about twelve years old. Like many farmer boys in those days, the lad's opportunities for education were very limited from ten to sixteen years of age, consisting of three months' schooling in the winter. At the latter age, his time being given him by his father, by working out in the summer and teaching in the winter, carefully saving his hard-earned wages, he paid his own expenses for two terms at the Whitestown Seminary, purposing at that time to go through college. But at the age of eighteen, his father, having become financially embarrassed by the hard times, and being in danger of losing his home, insisted that Marcus should give up his ideas of further literary pursuits and help save the farm for the family. This he consented to do, though with great reluctance, and has since regarded this as the greatest disappointment of his life. By dint of the hardest work, foregoing most of the amusements and innocent pleasures so congenial to the youthful taste, the son succeeded in clearing the property of debt, and removing the anxiety of his parents.

Marcus Tuttle

Being a great reader from childhood, and becoming familiar with the glowing pictures of the rising west, he at length made up his mind that here was the field for his future operations. Early in 1855, having sold his farm, and finding himself possessor of a little fortune of three thousand dollars, and a wife whom he had chosen four years before, he crossed the "Father of Waters" into Iowa, and leaving his wife in Johnson county, he found his El Dorado at Clear Lake, in May of that year, where his wife joined him two months later. He commenced opening a farm of two hundred acres on the eastern shore of the lake. Two years later he assisted in laying out the town of Clear Lake, part of which was situated on his own land, and since 1857 one branch of his business has been the buying and selling of real estate, in which he has been an extensive and successful operator. During all this time he has cultivated more or less land, partly by the aid of hired help and partly through renters; he has been constantly on the alert and actively engaged in supplying the wants of Clear Lake, and has very largely contributed to the growth of the village. At an early day he saw that a saw-mill was indispensable, so he bought a steam one, moved it hither, and run it several years. The first merchant who settled here failed in a short time and moved away, leaving the place without merchandise. In this emergency, though having his hands already pretty full, Mr. Tuttle purchased a stock of goods, and continued in mercantile trade until the spring of 1876. He has been interested in almost every enterprise that promised to build up the place; and his energy and indomitable will seemed to make him successful in everything that he undertook.

Mr. Tuttle was county judge many years ago, holding the office for two years. He held the position of assessor of internal revenue from the creation of the office, in the early part of the civil war, until the autumn of 1867, when he resigned in consequence of being elected state senator. He was in the senate four years, and was chairman of the committee on commerce, and a member of the committee on railroads, and the committee on constitutional amendments, etc. While in that body his great interest centered in the railroad committee, he working very hard to secure the grant of land for what is now the Iowa and Dakota branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, an enterprise which brought this thoroughfare to Clear Lake in 1871. He also favored and helped to secure the passage of a bill to amend the state constitution so as to extend right of suffrage to females. The next general assembly, however, defeated the final completion of the measure. The school laws of Iowa are conceded to be among the best in the Union, and among them is the present county high-school law, which was framed by Mr. Tuttle, and by him carefully guarded until its final passage.

The interests of Mr. Tuttle have been with northern Iowa as well as his adopted home; his views are broad and comprehensive, and he and many others of like forecast and energy have seen great and most happy results from their untiring efforts. The world has seldom seen anything that exceeded the growth of northern Iowa during the last twenty years.

Mr. Tuttle has always been a republican, and is both active and influential in the party, being usually a delegate to its county and state conventions.

He is a member of the Methodist church, and a trustee of the same. But his religious views are of the broad and liberal type that leads him to think and act for himself, regardless of whether it conforms to the creed of one church or another. As a worker in sabbath-school, and in the temperance cause, no man stands higher in Cerro Gordo county.

He is a strict temperance man, and is opposed to the use of tobacco.

His wife, of whom mention has been made, was Miss Caroline M. Warner, of Otselic, Chenango county, New York, their union taking place on the 4th of February, 1851. She seems to have been admirably adapted for a helpmeet for one who must be self-made, if made at all. She is a noble Christian woman, the mother of three children now living, and of one child, their first-born, whose burial caused the breaking of the first sod in the Clear Lake cemetery.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Tuttle occurred on the 4th of February, 1876, and was observed by a large attendance of friends and a generous supply of gifts. The interest of the occasion was greatly enhanced by the happy surprise and marriage of the eldest child, Rose, to Mr. G. B. McIntosh, of Cerro Gordo county.

In less than a week after Mrs. Tuttle arrived at Clear Lake she had quite a "scare." She and one or two other women were in the cabin, and all the men away: her husband at Mason City, and two or three other men in the field. Suddenly a dozen

Sioux Indians walked into the cabin, looked around, made themselves free with provisions, took down two or three guns which hung overhead, and wanted to buy the best one; but it was Mr. Tuttle's new and favorite fowling-piece, and she would not part with it. They then went out-of-doors, after pilfering a few things, and carefully loaded their own guns. About this time two of the men returned from the field. A small grindstone lay on the ground, and one of the Indians picked it up and tried to break off a small piece by letting it fall on a log. He did not succeed, but the white man, Mr. D., reproved him, when he caught up the stone and was making off with it. Mr. D. had a scuffle with him, and succeeded in wresting the grindstone from him, when the Indian knocked his hat off with a club. Mr. D. thereupon threw the grindstone at him, and for some time he lay as though dead. The other Indians then became boisterous, and made some threats, but by-and-by the wounded Indian arose, and at length the whole squad left, taking some plunder with them, threatening a speedy return and revenge. About this time Mr. Tuttle returned, and having ascertained what had transpired, he took all the women in a rustic vehicle and hastened back to Mason City, and before midnight he was at Clear Lake again with all the men in Mason City who had arms to bear. That night about twenty-five men, all told, watched till morning for the return of the savages. They did not come, and the next forenoon it was resolved to go to them. Following their trail, they were found a few miles away, hunting on Lime creek. The chief met them, very much frightened, heard their demands, restored all the pilfered property not eaten or destroyed, paid for what they could not restore, and departed, never to return.

Mr. Tuttle has seen the village of Clear Lake expand from half-a-dozen log cabins to two or three hundred frame houses, and, scattered among them, neat little churches, large hotels and brick blocks, and every sign of thrift. At the end of twenty-two years he finds himself in the center of one of the most popular summer resorts in the northwest, and increasing in attractiveness every season. In the summer of 1877 the Methodists held a national camp-meeting, and the Sunday-school people an international convention at Clear Lake.

HENRY C. BULIS, M.D.,

DECORAH.

HENRY C. BULIS, a son of Hiram L. and Amanda (Reynolds) Bulis, is a native of New York, and was born at Chazy, Clinton county, on the 14th of November, 1830. His maternal grandfather was a soldier in the revolutionary war. Hiram L. Bulis was a farmer, and moved to Alburgh, Grand Isle county, Vermont, when Henry was sixteen years old. A year or two later, after aiding his father in the more busy season, and attending the common school during the winter, the son spent four years in teaching, and in attending different academies. At twenty-one he commenced studying medicine with Dr. A. C. Butler, of Alburgh, attending lectures subsequently at Woodstock, and graduating in the summer of 1854. In October of the same year Dr. Bulis settled in Decorah, and has practiced here since that date, when not discharging official duties outside his profession.

When the law creating the office of county superintendent of public schools went into force, Dr. Bulis was the first man to fill it. He served three years. He was a member of the county board of supervisors several years ago. In 1865 he was elected state senator, and by reelection served six years, resigning in the middle of his second term to take the office of lieutenant-governor, to which the people had called him. While in the upper branch of the general assembly he was at one time chairman of the committee on claims, and at another, of the committee on state university. He did especially good service on the latter committee; a warm friend of education, and being generous and broad in his views on the subject, he earnestly advocated the appropriation bills, and every measure calculated to advance the interests of the university. Part of the time while in the senate he served as its president pro tem., and was in that position when placed in the chair of lieutenant-governor. He has been a trustee and regent of the university; he was examining surgeon for pensions from 1865 to 1876, and is now president of the Iowa State Medical Society.

children since mortality rates were so high, were very common throughout Iowa and the nation. In other instances, the photographer would simply photograph the floral displays used at the funeral, hoping this would serve as a comfort in the days ahead for the mourners. Occasionally the photographer would be asked to document the tombstone of the deceased, perhaps so a photo could be sent to relatives living away who were unable to attend the funeral or to provide proof that an appropriate monument had been selected. Fleeting as life was, the photographer could preserve and perpetuate the memory of loved ones for posterity through these images.

A view of head stones in Clear Lake Cemetery, probably early 1880s. The image was made by Orville Slocum. This is a column styled stone for the Palmeter family, possibly that of Emily Fletcher Palmeter who was buried on May 25th, 1882. Palmeter was a businessman in Clear Lake. The Tuttle family lot is shown in the background.

A prominent home showing affluence and taste was that of the Marcus Tuttle family in this image taken by Timothy W. Townsend in either the summer of 1877 or 1878. Mr. Tuttle may be pictured by the picket fence that surrounded his property, while other family members stand in the yard. Most of the windows appear shuttered. There was a barn and a carriage house behind the structure. One of Mr. Tuttle's daughters, Rose, had married G. B. McIntosh in 1876, two years before this photo was taken. The huge tower with the double bay windows made this a striking and imposing home. The home was located at the northwest corner of Third Street and State Street (now First Avenue North). Opposite the Tuttle home was the Leavenworth home, built by Col. Henry Leavenworth for whom Ft. Leavenworth, Kansas, was named. It was built on the ruins of what had been a bathhouse and hotel.

In Later Years...

The marriage between Rose Tuttle and G. B. McIntosh created a family with much wealth and property. Rose's father had helped plat the town of Clear Lake and was active in real estate, banking, and other capitalistic ventures. He also served as a state senator. Holdings of the newly combined family included the fifty acres which is now the Baptist camp grounds on the North Shore and also the seventy acres which became McIntosh Woods State Park. The G. B. McIntoshs raised three children in this home: two boys and a girl. The boys, Arthur and Walter, later opened one of Chicago's largest real estate firms with over 300 subdivisions and 50,000 lots.

By the time this photograph was made by Henry S. Mather in the early 1880s, the Tuttle house was being referred to as the McIntosh home. Mather has taken the image from a fine vantage point among the trees in City Park. An attic room at the top of the tower of this impressive home was accessible only by a hidden stairway. In the background, further on Third Street (now North Third Street), one can see a Gothic window in the Baptist Church, which had been erected in 1874.

About FamilySearch Pedigree Resource File

The Pedigree Resource File is a new lineage linked database of records available on compact disc containing family history records submitted by individuals through FamilySearch Internet Genealogy Service. Family information is organized in family groups and pedigrees and includes submitted notes and sources. Many charts and reports can be printed from this data. Each disc contains about 1.1 million names. With the publication of every five discs, a master index for those discs will be published and packaged with that set of discs. With the publication of every 25 discs, a master index for those discs will also be published and packaged with that volume of discs. Discs may be purchased as sets or volumes.

Please Note

Submitter information is provided to help in the coordination of personal family history research. Use of this information for any other purpose, including marketing, advertising, or commercial solicitation, is strictly prohibited.
