SENATOR D. C. CHASE PASSES AWAY THIS MORNING AFTER LONG ILLNESS

Has Been Critically Ill Since Return from State Legislature Over Two Weeks Ago—Was Hamilton County's Greatest Man—Thousands are Mourning Loss of Personal Friend—Lawmaker—Attorney—Literary Man—Friend of the Poor.

Senator D. C. Chase passed away quite suddenly this morning at 8 o'clock at his home on First street where he has been seriously ill since he arrived home from the legislature, February 13th. While it was felt that his condition could only be temporarily improved, on account of the serious heart ailment, his expiration this morning came without warning, as he was so evidently better last night.

Senator Chase's illness dates back to one year ago with an attack of flu which so weakened his heart that his health began to fail rapidly. Early last fall he went to Rochester for medical attention but only remained a short time for treatment. Returning home, he surprised his physicians, and friends, by an apparently remarkable return to health. He was strong enough to appear upon the streets each day and began looking forward to the work of the Fortieth General Assembly, having been elected state senator from the thirty-seventh district, for the third time by a great majority. He had announced to his friends about a year ago that he was thru with politics and would devote more of his time to literary pursuits than he had ever been able to do. His law practice had increased to such proportions that he had little time for anything else. One year ago in March, however, a mass meeting of farmers of the county held at the court house in this city, veritably "drafted" Mr. Chase as a candidate for the third time for state senator. He at that time remarked, "I thought I was thru, but I'm for the people, and if they want me now, I will go."

Accordingly at the November election, he was elected with an enormous majority. His one thought during his period of convalescence was to get into the work as soon as possible. As the first of January approached and his strength was not gained as rapidly as needful for active participation in the legislative affairs, members of his family pleaded with him to save himself and remain at home where he was gaining a little each day, and so regain his normal health. His reply was a characteristic one, "I owe it to the people; they are looking to me to do my duty. I must go."

He went to Des Moines about the 20th of January and attempted to assume his usual vigorous role. He refused to save his strength in any way, but gave of it unstintingly toward the work of law-making.

He fought a good fight and like Paul, he finished the course.

Daniel Cady Chase was born June 18, 1859, in this city which has always been his home. He was the only child of Judge and Mrs. Daniel Darrow Chase, the former one of the sturdiest figures in Hamilton county history. He was named for the famous New York barrister, Daniel Cady, and in every way proved himself worthy of the name. He was educated in the schools of this city and graduated from the department of liberal arts in the state university at Iowa City. In 1880 he took up the study of law in his father's law office and soon gave promise of the later reputation as one of the most brilliant attorneys of the state.

He became city attorney for Webster City in 1890, and in 1891 acted as special United States attorney in the celebrated Riverland cases. His first criminal case was the defense of Tom Basket in the murder charge, the murder occurring in this city during a performance of Ringling's circus. Many residents still remember Mr. Chase's plea for the defense. In 1890 and 1892, he served the county as representative to the Iowa legislature where his ability and leadership were recognized. He was the Iowa delegate at large to the National Republican convention in the early '90's receiving the highest votes in the convention. In 1896 he represented the Tenth District as a presidential elector, casting his vote for William McKinley for president. His career in the state legislature was a brilliant one. He had not much more than taken his seat in the House, when he was made chairman of the more important Republican committees, including the judiciary, and his work on the judiciary committees during the remainder of his legislative career was noteworthy. He was always prominent in debates on parliamentary tactics.

"Cady" Chase as he was familiarly called by all who knew him, was the author of the Car-coupler bill compelling railroad companies to install automatic couplers, which was one of the state's most important measures and was at the time spectacular, because one of the first victories gained by the people over railroad domination. This state law was afterwards incorporated in the federal car-coupler law which has safe-guarded human life all over the American railroad world.

He was always a champion of the cause of prohibition and his record thru all the four terms in the legislature has been straight as a die on those matters. From time to time his enemies attempted to show him up as a secret champion of the wet cause, but each time failed, for it was generally known that Mr. Chase was not a secret champion of any cause. He was avowedly for a cause or against it. There was never a half way course for him.

He has taken the lead in shaping the policies of the Republican party of the state for the past thirty-five years and was never a passive by-stander when matters for the interest of the common people were at stake. In 1913 he was elected state senator with a large majority and was re-called for a second term. It was said in the state house that when Cady Chase had the floor, the offices of the building were adjourned to allow the office forces to hear him speak.

He not only took a large part in the political affairs of the state and city but also was financially prominent. In 1897 he was one of the organizers of the Webster City Savings Bank which is still one of the city's banks.

Cady Chase belonged to the common people. He was always deeply interested in the "under-dog" and never forgot the fact that there are two sides to any question. The poor, the unfortunate, the hardened sinner, the reprobate, the friendless, were sure of at least an audience and a chance to tell their story to Mr. Chase. As a friend he was unfailing and the thousands who called him by that name are each today mourning the loss of their best friend. A poor woman, living in the slum district of a neighboring city came to his office a few years ago, leading one little child by the hand and carrying one in her arms. Hers was a sad case and one the average lawyer turns down for there was no money in it. She ended her appeal: "And they said, there is just one man that will give you the right kind of advice and that is Cady Chase in Webster City."

The woman went on her way, cheered and satisfied, her case settled without the need of further legal advice. There are dozens of these stories. He frequently forgot the fee in his law cases, which is usually the most important feature of such work. To those whom he felt insincerity to be a dominant characteristic, he refused to be a friend. But to the sincere and honest, no matter how misguided they were, he was a living example of the helpful spirit of friendship.

Senator D. C. Chase Passes Away This Morning After Long Illness.

In his many-sided composition, there was another and a beautiful one—that of literary brilliance and ability.

When he returned from the state university, he purchased the Webster City Argus in 1881 and ran it for three years. In 1910 he purchased the Graphic-Herald and was its editor for eight years. His pen was facile and its point as brilliant as a diamond and often, with the same cutting propen-ties. Not by any means all of his friends knew until a few years ago, that he was, with all his other attainments, a poet. Then, he published a collection of poems, "The Choice of Paris, and Other Poems" which has been reviewed with favor by many critics. At the time he was taken sick, he had been busy for months upon a poem which was to be his masterpiece. He had named it "Morpheus," and its theme was upon the mystery we call death. The words lie unfinished, words of beauty and conjecture upon the last sleep, but he completes the poem, with his own experience of the longer journey all must take.

He was deeply religious, with that true religion which expresses itself in the every day business of advising, listening, sympathizing, but had never espoused any creed. He was decidedly against any organization which flavored of aristocracy and his comment upon such associations was that they were undemocratic and un-American because they discriminated against the poor and unsuccessful man. Cady Chase was a great man, one of Hamilton county's greatest, and as such will live in memory in the hearts of the thousands whose friend he was.

Mr. Chase leaves a faithful wife, whose untiring devotion to her husband in the months of his illness could not have been surpassed. He leaves one child—a son, Daniel Cady, Jr., and wife, of Cedar Rapids and three little grandchildren, the youngest of whom, his namesake, Daniel Cady III, five weeks old, he had never seen. There are no other near relatives.

The funeral services will be held at the family home on First street, Sunday afternoon, March 4th, at 3 o'clock, conducted by Rev. George Wood, pastor of the Universalist church. Interment will be in Graceland cemetery.

Harm Pruisman went to Titonka Monday for a visit with his parents.

A number of friends gathered at the M. Seiser home Friday evening as a courtesy to the Herman Seiser family who are moving to their new home north of Stonega. The affair was a surprise and Mr. and Mrs. Seiser were presented with a set of silver teaspoons as a remembrance of the occasion.

The Elmer Larson family are moving from the Lawrence Wehrheim farm to the Schroeder farm north of Stonega. Herman Hemminger is moving from one of the Hemminger farms to the farm formerly occupied by the Geo. Garth family.

Earl Bates is moving from the John Pruisman place to one of the Seiser farms. Wm. Eggers and family are moving from the H. D. Blue farm to the Mrs. F. D. Carson farm near Webster City.

Mrs. W. T. McComb of Waterloo who was visiting her sister-in-law, Mrs. Lee Kennedy recently, called at the John and Miles McPhillips homes, they being old time friends. Jay Fosdick of Webster City repaired the windmills at the J. D. Miller and John McPhillips farms Tuesday.

Friends in this vicinity have been notified of the arrival of a four and one-half pound baby girl to Mr. and Mrs. Lee Weir, of Fort Dodge, recently. The little one has been named Eleanor Jean. Mrs. Weir was formerly Miss Nina Waddell of this vicinity.

Passing of Mrs. Carl Waller.

Another pall of sadness was called over this community when the death of Mrs. Carl Waller became known. Mrs. Waller had been ill with the flu for a little more than a week and recovered somewhat when pneumonia developed and her ease from that time on was very serious. The last of the week she seemed to improve somewhat but the disease had so weakened her that she was unable to cope longer with it and she passed away early Monday morning. Several children, some of them quite small, are left motherless by this sad passing, and they, with the saddened husband and father have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community in their untimely sorrow.—Statford Courier.

State Officials Do Honor to Senator Chase

Lieut. Gov. John Hammil Expected to Name Committee of Senators to Attend Funeral Tomorrow—From Governor Down Officials Express Deep Regret at Great Man's Death.

The morning Des Moines Register contained many fine expressions of state officials, of regret for the death of Senator D.
C. Chase. Following is the very fine article:
"A successor to Senator D. C. (Cady)
Chase, of Webster City, who died yesterday, probably will be selected in time to take part in the last month of the session it developed yesterday, following the announcement of the governor that he would call a special election as soon as possible, though not until after the funeral. The law requires that ten days' notice be given, but even this would permit the new senator to be chosen by the middle of March.

A number of candidates are expected to appear in the next day or two, and Sherman Rath, of Ackley, Hardin county, who ran against Chase in the primary; Rube McFerren, of Webster City, Hamilton county, who was a member of the house in the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh legislatures; H. W.
Emeny, of Eldora, Hardin county; and H. M.
Sparboe, of Webster City, Hamilton county, are among those who may get into the race for the Republican nomination.

McFerrer, Sparboe and Emeny were candidates for the nomination at the primary in 1918, when Eugene Schaffter, of Eagle Grove, Wright County, was a candidate, Schafftner being nominated at a district convention following the failure of any one of the four to receive the necessary 35 per cent of the vote.

Thirty-seventh District Hard Hit.

Death seems to have a particular grudge at the representatives of the thirty-seventh senatorial district, composed of Hamilton, Hardin and Wright counties, as Schaffter died shortly after serving one term of four years as senator.

Senator Chase was one of the veteran legislators of the state, having served in the house in the twenty-third and twenty-fourth sessions and in the senate during the thirty-fourth, thirty-fifth, thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh general assemblies. He retired for four years, but returned for another four-year term this year. He had only partially recovered from a very severe sickness when he came to Des Moines this winter and was not able to be present many days of the session.

The late senator from the thirty-seventh district was one of the strongest legislators and most interesting men ever sent to the senate, a sort of Iowa La Follette, who fought the battles of the progressives in the republican party for years and was never afraid to stand for any cause that appealed to him, even though he stood alone. There was no Iowa legislator who was better liked personally or more feared in senatorial debate, and his death will bring sorrow to politicians all over Iowa.

"I am very sorry to hear of Mr. Chase's death," said Governor Kendall yesterday "he was a fine man." This tribute was echoed by all the state officials.

While Chase was a progressive in most things, he was for many years opposed to woman suffrage, believing that the women did not want the ballot. His speech against a resolution amending the constitution to permit women to vote was one of the stories being recalled at the state house yesterday. The house had passed the resolution and the club women from all over the state assembled to witness another triumph. Chase dared the women to submit the question to a vote of the women, the legislature to be bound by the result of the election, and then helped defeat the resolution by a humorous speech that set the other senators roaring with laughter. He told how the women would go to the polls to vote, illustrating his description by powdering his nose and squinting at the hand mirror. In cataloging the deficiencies of women, he dwelt on their lack of inventiveness and declared that even the mouse trap was invented by man.

"It would have been terribly funny to me, if I had not been so angry," said a woman employe at the state house yesterday, "but he was such a likable man you couldn't remain long angry with him, even when you disagreed with him."

Friend of Labor.

"Though Chase opposed the suffrage movement, he was a good friend to labor and fought many of their battles on the floor of the senate. He was a poet as well as a lawyer and a legislator, and wrote a book of verse which contained many poems of real merit.

"When called upon to address the senate of the fortieth general assembly at the beginning of the session, Senator Chase thanked the senators for the courtesy extended to him, and then, referring to his severe illness which had left him half his former self, he said:

"The recent narrow escape which I have had has made me very charitable toward all men, and it has greatly increased my interest in every movement of a humanitarian nature."

Lieutenant Governor John Hammill, president of the senate, is expected to name a committee of senators to attend the funeral, and it is probable that the senate will adjourn for the day following its reconvening out of respect for Senator Chase, or hold memorial services for him."

Senator Chase's Funeral
Attended by Large Number

Delegation of State Senators Headed by Lieutenant-Governor Attend— Other Notable Officials—Fully One Thousand Persons Pass by Bier.

All that was mortal of Senator Cady Chase was consigned to its last sleep yesterday afternoon in Graceland cemetery, the funeral services having been held at the family home on First street, at 3 o'clock. Fully one thousand persons passed by the bier of the town's best known and most prominent citizen, in the two hours preceding the funeral services.

The casket lay in the south bow window, in the living room of the home, literally buried in flowers which were banked around it, and which came as expressions of love and sympathy from distinguished persons as well as from the most humble admirers in this section of the United States.

Among the more distinguished persons who came to this city yesterday to attend the funeral was a number of senators from the state legislature, appointed by Gov. N. E. Kendall. These included: Lieut. Governor John Hammill, of Britt; and Senators J. D. Buser, of Conesville, John R. Price, of Albia, Bowman, of Waterloo, Fred Gilchrist, of Laurens, Judge R. M. Wright, of Fort Dodge, and Judge G. D. Thompson, of this city, were also in attendance. Ex-senator Fred Larrabee, of Fort Dodge, was present, while Representative James Stedman, of Eagle Grove, who is state president of the Iowa Association of Locomotive Engineers, was here. The Chicago & Northwestern Railway was represented by M. J. Golden, of Boone, Division Freight and Passenger Agent. The late senator's stenographer, Miss Mae Bahrenfus, of this city, also came up from the State House for the funeral services, returning today.

The pall bearers were chosen from the list of Senator Chase's close friends in this city. These were E. F. King, R. E. Channer, J. W. Lee, F. J. Lund, Fred H. Clagg, P. W. Lee, G. J. Long and E. P. Prince.

Out of deference to Senator Chase's known dislike of formalities, the Hamilton County Bar Association did not attend the services in a body, but nearly every member was present.

Rev. George Wood, pastor of the Universalist church of this city, who had during the senator's illness formed an interesting friendship with him, delivered a fine, very brief address at 3 o'clock. He has been requested to supply a copy of his address to the state senate in Des Moines, that it may be published with the resolutions of respect in the House Journals.

His address was as follows:

My Dear Friends:

We are assembled today to show our sense (Continued on page 4).

Senator Chase's Funeral Attended by Large Number.

of appreciation, our high regard for the life and personality of Daniel Cady Chase.

Cady, as he is generally known, was born in this city, June 18, 1859, his parents coming one year previous. His father, Daniel D. Chase was a prominent lawyer and district judge.

Cady, was a graduate of the Webster City schools and also of the state university where he made a brilliant record. For a time he was interested in journalism, but later was admitted to the bar and became one of its most able members.

From 1892 to his death, he was at intervals associated with the state legislature; first as representative and then as senator, holding the seat as senator for the Thirty-seventh district, at the time of his death.

His consecration to duty was as impelling during his previous terms as it was in this, his last, when from a sick bed he would take his faltering way to the Senate chamber, there to engage in debate, and to vote, carrying out the desires of his constituency, but returning each time a much weakened man.

One might say, that his sense of duty was as vital to him as life itself.

Cady Chase passed away at 7:30 o'clock a. m., Friday morning, March 2nd, almost in the arms of Mrs. Chase, who has without rest given herself to him during his long and wearing sickness. He leaves to lament his departure his wife, Mrs. Chase, and one son Cady—Daniel Cady Chase, Jr., who is practising law in Cedar Rapids.

Mr. Chase was always at the service of his fellows, and no legal work nor indeed work of any kind was ever refused because his client had no means wherewith to pay for the services he sought. Cady Chase performed many deeds of helpfulness, few of which were ever made public, and none of which were heralded by a fanfare of trumpets.

He championed the cause of the "underdog," and with considerable relish, fought his case to a finish. He had a mind as keen as a March wind; a sympathy as generous as summer sunshine; and convictions steadfast as a granite cliff, and constant as the stars. He was a statesman, a lawyer, a man of no mean order; the friend of nature's wild life, for bird, flower, stream and tree had its songful message for his ever-ready soul, and it may be, that which passed for aloofness was but preoccupation.

In his early years, he gave his powerful voice to the various churches, singing in the choirs, but later, he seldom attended public worship, not that the failure to attend detracted from his personality, for he found sustaining and enriching interests elsewhere.

And now, for a few brief moments, I would like to show thru the jewelled portals of his poems, and by the aid of his own singing words, some glimpses of his not uncommonly revealed selfhood. He was a patriot not of the wordy mouth, but of the potent deed. He loved his country, and was perhaps one of the heaviest subscribers of his county to the national Liberty Bonds and this instinct of patriotism flames forth in his lines to "Crocket's Iowa Brigade":

"The old brigade—how warms the heart
With memories; Glorious its part
From Shiloh to the sea;
From that baptismal hour of blood,
Until the hour its veterans stood On treston's capital and gave Old Glory to the breeze, to wave
There thru Eternity."
Here his mystic mood visualizes the hour with its setting of consecrated nobility, and martial movement.

He was more—he was a "worshipper":

"Lift up thine eyes, Art thou delving deep?

Scanning the ground long hours? Grovelling o'er a heap

Thou callest gold?

It is unvalued, save as a thing of beauty—Which shines and glitters in the sun;

But naught, when matched with the glorious rise

Of the Golden Dawn itself. Lift up thine eyes;

Earth, is but an atom on the face of the universe.

Thy state—thy power—how small,
Compared with that which moves the stars, guiding them all.

Look, brother, look! Lift up thine eyes, Strip off thy tinsel crown."

Surely my friends, we are here face to face with that vast cosmic sense, which gives to life and to men, a true balance—a true proportion. Cady Chase was a worshipper of that august power, which guides the stars and yet, interests itself in men.

A patriot—a worshipper—he was a "Samaritan" soul! Note the sacred sequence; the simple grace, the high regard, which unveils itself in the lines:

"When courage lags, and cannot take

One step ahead; Nay impotent

Falls down; then Sympathy—Heaven-sent.

And Love, will take the burden up.

Press to the parched lips the cooling cup.

Brush off the dust of failure; then—

Assist the stranger on again."

And I venture to say, that in this state, there are scores of people whose testimony of their experiences with him, would establish that; for from the treasury of his own regnant manhood, he brought forth the cooling cup and extended the lifting hand.

But he had a "secret place"—a place of mental, physical and indeed spiritual restoration.

"There was a tipling stream, a slow moving boat,

Moving past fragrant woods, where violets blow,

Redolent air, and curtains of green.

Where he rested—unseen—unseen."

And I believe from these hidden sanctuaries, he came forth re-born unto power, to disentangle the skeins of human wretchedness and sin. May I go further and say he was a man of "sterling courage," and of "abiding steadfastness." In the lines called "Courage," he stands tall as the snow-capped hills, and as immovable:

"Be ever true,

When fortune darkly glowers,

And frowns forbiddingly.

And all the allied powers

Of evil ruthlessly

Rush in between;

Oh let these then, be truthfulness.

Nay more! The will to draw more closely still.

The bond between us two,

What storm may come—what woe betide;

So, each be true,

You true to me,

And I, to you."

It is an appeal for comradeship in the home, but it is also, an appeal for constancy in all of life's relationships. How vividly this man senses life's direct necessities and with what hallowed consecration he would meet them! And finally, this stalwart son of man, this man whose mind and heart formed one of the noblest assets of this favorable state, reveals to us, the most sacred of all his inner shrines of being when he pens the lines:

"You call me proud; Could you but guess aright,

How all my willing pride would gladly die,
Before a Man, who grandly in his might,
Could rise above me, like a star on high."

Here is a full-orbed, clear visioned sincerity; here is frank, honest, majestic belief in himself; but so poised, so finely balanced, that he could bend the knee, when he had found a Might "which grandly rose above him—like a star on high."

Today—we mourn his passing from these scenes of earth and turn in our love to those who abide with us—"Yet a little while," but our faith is firm, that Cady Chase, having found that greater life, and having seen face to face—the kingly Christ, is walking the avenues of immortality, is changing from glory until glory by beholding, and perhaps slowly, but none the less surely, assuming the same image.

Our prayer surely is this—May the God, whose natural creations he loved so well—and whose voices he heard so clearly, in Forest and Stream, in Laughing Child and in Singing Bird, multiply his graces upon him and lead him into the way everlasting. Amen.
