1911
B. F. BOWEN & COMPANY
INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA

Cheney Byam, who moved to Hubbard early in 1890 or 1891, died in September, 1891. He was a man of fine business qualities and exemplary character, and he was highly respected by all with whom he came into contact.

Besides his banking interests, Dan E. Byam has for years dealt in farm land and live stock, dealing in North Dakota lands for the past ten years with great success in a financial way, and he is now the owner of twenty-five hundred acres there. At one time he owned over six thousand acres in partnership with A. M. Drake, formerly of Radcliffe, now living in Minnesota.

Politically, Mr. Byam is a Republican and has long taken an abiding interest in local affairs, and has generally held some office at Hubbard, being school treasurer at present, though he is not an active aspirant for political positions. He always supports any measure looking to the development of his community in any way. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and was a member of the local lodge of Knights of Pythias until they surrendered their charter. He and his wife belong to the Methodist church and are liberal supporters of the same.

On June 8, 1887, Mr. Byam was united in marriage with Kitty Kerr, a lady of culture and refinement, the daughter of Joseph A. and Rebecca (Seibert) Kerr, an excellent and worthy old family. She was born at Ridott, Stephenson county, Illinois, and came to Hubbard, Hardin county, Iowa, in 1883, her father having bought a farm within the corporate limits of Hubbard. He lived here until in March, 1887, then moved to Ames, this state. He now lives in Oregon, his wife being deceased. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Byam, namely: L. Vera, who married Glen B. Whitney, lives in Hubbard; Cheney A. and Dannie E. are the younger members of the family.

Personally, Mr. Byam is a pleasant gentleman to meet, being a genial, obliging, optimistic and well informed man, who has long been regarded as a leader in this community.

JOSEPH WALLACE.

The life of the eminent and successful business man, though filled to repletion with activity and incident, presents fewer salient features to excite the interest of the general reader than the man whose place in the public eye has been won through the glamour and display of military achievement. But to acquire distinction or great prosperity in the business pursuits which give to the country its financial strength and credit requires ability of as high if not higher order than that which leads to victory on the field of battle. This will be readily appreciated by all who tread the busy thoroughfares of trade. Ordinarily merit may attain a respectable position and enjoy a moderate competence, but to spring from the common walks of life to a place of credit and power can only be the fortune of the rarely gifted. Eminent business talent is composed of a combination of high mental and moral attributes. It is not simply energy and industry: there must be sound judgment, breadth of capacity, rapidity of thought, justice and firmness, the foresight to perceive the course of the drifting tides of business and the will and ability to control them, and, withal, a collection of minor but important qualities to regulate the details of the pursuits which engage attention. Joseph Wallace, one of the leading citizens of central Iowa, affords an exemplification of the talent set forth above, if not in its highest development, yet an extraordinary character, and he has achieved a reputation which places him among the first of this section's business and public men.

Mr. Wallace, who maintains his home at Eldora, Hardin county, is one of that large and worthy class of citizens from the fair Emerald Isle, who have come to our new republic and helped so materially to develop it, his birth having occurred in county Tyrone, Ireland, on January 26, 1854, his forefathers having recently come there from Scotland, he being the son of John and Eleanor (Graham) Wallace. In 1862 the family came to America and settled on a farm in Marshall county, Iowa, and it was here that the son Joseph grew to maturity and attended the public school and the Albion Seminary. He was compelled to spend most of each year working on the home place, but being ambitious to succeed and naturally an insatiable student, he prepared himself for a teacher at the age of twenty, and two years later he became principal of the public school in Union, Hardin county. After two years of faithful service he was elected to a better position, that of superintendent of the city schools of Waseca, Minnesota. In order to advance in the teaching profession and to gratify his ambitions to become highly educated, he remained a very close student during his school work. Although having made a start in this vocation that seemed to mark him as one of the leading educators of the middle west in future years, Mr. Wallace, after he had been at Waseca a year, decided to abandon the school room and turn his attention to the business world, so in 1879 he began dealing in stock and buying land in Hardin county. He soon had a good start in this line, which he has continued to the present time, with an unusual degree of success attending his efforts. He is regarded as one of the best judges of live stock of all kinds in this part of the state, and he has persistently followed a systematic, conservative and honorable course which has led to the desired goal. Besides large ranch interests in the West, he conducted a large feeding farm near St. Paul, and also his fine farm of eight hundred and eighty acres in Hardin county. He has fattened cattle and sent them to market by the train loads and in this way has accumulated a handsome fortune. His residence in Eldora is one of the finest, most modern and attractive in this and surrounding cities. It is presided over with rare grace and dignity by a lady of many estimable attributes, known in her maidenhood as Florence C. Doty, whom Mr. Wallace married on September 11, 1878. She is the representative of a fine old English family, the daughter of David and Esther (Canfield) Doty, her birth occurring at Ingersol, Canada. This union has been graced by the birth of two children: Mabel Canfield Wallace, born in 1879, married Wendel Huston, an attorney of Blandinsville, Illinois; he practiced law in Chicago six years, and he is now living in Carrington, North Dakota. The other child, Bruce Graham Wallace, who was born in 1885, is now a partner and interested with his father in the real estate and live stock business in Iowa, Minnesota and the Dakotas. The daughter was graduated from Cornell College in the collegiate and oratorical classes in 1900, and afterwards traveled in Europe. She is a lady of talent and culture, and her brother gives promise of a successful man of affairs. Mr. Wallace has been a liberal contributor to the above educational institution. Joseph Wallace at one time owned ten sections of land, six in one body near Carrington, North Dakota, where he still has extensive interests.

Mr. Wallace has long been a very potential factor in political circles and has wielded a wide influence for the general good of the people and the Republican party. For six years he was a member of the board of supervisors of Hardin county and during that period the new court house was built in Eldora. In 1897 his party nominated him as senator from the district composed of Hardin, Wright and Hamilton counties, and while in the Legislature he made a very commendable and satisfactory record, making his influence felt for the good of his constituents and the state in general and became popular throughout the state through his commendable course. His rare business judgment was of much benefit to the Senate and his counsel was often sought in important political matters and various policies. Following his own convictions and accurately voicing the sentiments of the people, he did many things that stamped him as a public servant of exceptional ability and foresight, one of the most notable being the passage through the Senate of what was known as the five-mile-limit bill in the session of 1900. This bill prohibited the existence of saloons within five miles of any state institutions. The general public was of the opinion that the bill would not pass the Senate, but it was done through the influence of Senator Wallace. Many specific items could be recited to indicate that his four years' service in this important body were replete with honor and success and duty ably and conscientiously performed, his record being without the suspicion of evil or the shadow of wrong, being ever characterized by lofty purpose, proper ideals and progressive ideas. A criterion of his popularity is seen from the fact that every time he has been a candidate for office he has had but little opposition and has run ahead of his ticket.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, the Senator having been superintendent of Sunday schools for a period of fifteen years and he has been a steward in the church for about thirty-two years, giving much of his talents, time and means to the furtherance of religious work as well as educational and other lines in this locality, whose every interest he has always had at heart and which he has sought to promulgate whenever occasion presented itself. Personally he is a most courteous and pleasant gentleman to know, obliging, generous, plain and unassuming, a man who has kept well abreast of the times, politically and materially as well as in the world of science and literature. He is cosmopolitan in his tastes, a man of the people in all that the term implies, proud of his distinction as a citizen of a state and nation for whose laws and institutions he has the most profound admiration and respect, while his strong mentality, ripe judgment and unimpeachable integrity demonstrate to the satisfaction of all his ability to fill honorably important official positions and to discharge worthily the duties of high trusts. His position in the business, civic and social circles of the country is firmly established, and he stands today among the leaders of thought and moulders of public opinion in a locality prolific of talent and power.

EDWARD H. LUNDY.

Through struggle to triumph seems to be the maxim which holds sway for the majority of our citizens, and, though it is undoubtedly true that many fall exhausted in the conflict, a few, by their inherent force of character and strong mentality, rise above their environment and all which seems to hinder them, until they reach the plane of affluence toward which their face was set through the long years of struggle that must necessarily precede any accomplishment of great magnitude. Such has been the history of Edward H. Lundy, of Eldora, one of the leaders of the Hardin county bar and one of our most progressive and public-spirited citizens.

the daily papers of the western part of the country. In 1893 Mr. Wadsworth was elected a member of the board of county commissioners of Pottawattamie county, and during 1895 he was chairman of the board.

He is a member of the Woodmen, Royal Arcanum, Knights of Pythias, Elks, Eagles, D. O. K. K., Maccabees and Masonic orders, and belongs to the Unitarian church. He was married October 11, 1883, at Oregon, Illinois, to Anna E. Etnyre, daughter of Daniel Etnyre, president of the First National Bank of that city. Two children have been born of this union: Mary M., born February 17, 1887, and Paul E., born November 12, 1889. In 1883 Mr. Wadsworth added to his already large store of knowledge by traveling extensively in Europe.

In the year 1897 he was elected city solicitor of Council Bluffs, which position he still holds, having been elected for a second term. In the fall of 1900, he was the democratic nominee for congressman in the Ninth district of Iowa, and made a thorough canvass of the district, and was defeated by Judge Walter I. Smith.

WALLACE, JOSEPH, of Eldora, was born in Tyrone county, Ireland in 1854. He is the son of John Wallace and Eleanor Graham Wallace. They were farmers and of Scotch ancestry on both sides of the family. In 1862 the family came to America and settled on a farm in Marshall county, Iowa. Here Joseph Wallace attended school when the work of the farm permitted. When he was twenty years old he had fitted himself for teaching school and two years later he became principal of the public school in Union, Hardin county. He remained in this position two years, when he was elected to a better position as superintendent of the city schools in Waseca, Minnesota. During his connection with public school work Mr. Wallace was a very industrious student, having an ambition to secure a higher education and advancement in his profession of teaching. But he had been in Waseca but a year when in 1877 his business instinct attracted him to the occupation of stock raising. He had been well trained as a farmer and so he decided to leave the school room and go into the stock business. In this he has been eminently successful. He has large ranch interests in the West and owns a stock and feeding farm near St. Paul besides his farm of eight hundred and eighty acres in Hardin county. He fattens and sends to market cattle by the train load and in this way has accumulated a handsome fortune.

September 11, 1878, Mr. Wallace was married to Miss Florence C. Doty of Ingersoll, Canada. They have two children, Mabel Canfield, born in 1879, and Bruce Graham, born in 1885. Miss Wallace was graduated from Cornell College in the collegiate and oratorical courses in 1900 and then traveled in Europe. The family lives in one of the finest residences in central Iowa.

Senator Wallace has always voted the republican ticket. He was for six years a member of the board of supervisors of Hardin county, at the time the new court house was built in Eldora. In 1897 he was nominated by the republicans and elected senator from the district composed of Hardin, Wright and Hamilton counties. His service in the legislature has not only been satisfactory to his constituents but valuable to the state. His judgment on business matters was beneficial to the senate and was often sought when important policies were to be shaped. Following his own convictions and voicing the sentiment of his people, he secured the passage through the senate of what was known as the five-mile limit bill in the session of 1900. This bill prohibited the existence of saloons within five miles of any state educational institution. It had not been supposed that the bill could pass the senate, and it was done through the influence of Senator Wallace and some of his personal friends. The bill was afterwards defeated in the house by two votes.

With all his efforts crowned with success, a popular man at home and throughout the state wherever he is known, Senator Wallace has every reason for being a contented man. Whenever he has been a candidate for office he has run ahead of his ticket. He belongs to the Methodist church and is actively interested in the affairs of his locality.

WETTSTEIN, FRANK EUGENE, of La Porte City, cashier of the First National Bank of that place, is one of the energetic and successful young bankers of the state.

His father, Otto Wettstein of Rochelle, Illinois, was a pioneer of Northern Illinois, locating at Rochelle in 1857, and being of over forty years engaged in the business of watchmaking at that place. He was noted all over that part of the country for his skill as a mechanic.

His grandfather, Theodore Wettstein, was proprietor of the Milwaukee house in the city of that name back in the "forties," and in the early history of that place his name will be found as a leader of German society, and as the founder of its first Musical Association.

Mr. Wettstein's maternal grandfather, Thomas Tracy, was a native of Vermont, in which state he was prominent as a business man. He was a delegate from that state to the convention at which the Republican party had its birth.

The subject of this sketch was born at Rochelle, Illinois, June 6, 1867. His education was derived from the excellent high school of that place, from which he was graduated in 1884, taking highest honors of the school up to that time. Following his school days he spent two years in the employ of his father, but finding the business distasteful, in 1886 he entered the Rochelle National Bank as janitor, messenger and collection clerk. By diligent attention to business, and especially by the habit of reading everything that he could find that would increase his knowledge of the causes of success on part of the leaders of the banking business, he had in 1889 risen to a position of responsibility in the bank. During the time he was employed in the Rochelle National Bank he had been an occasional visitor to La Porte City, and his business judgment telling him that it was a good place for a second bank, he was successful in bringing about its organization, a majority of its stock being held by his Rochelle friends.

The entire management of the institution has been in the hands of Mr. Wettstein, and its record for conservative accommodation of its customers has been equal to its freedom from losses, the latter amounting with the Democratic party, and running on that ticket, was elected sheriff in 1890, and was twice re-elected, serving three terms. Disagreeing with his party over free silver in 1896, he became a Republican. He served for a few years on the Osage City Council, from 1903 to 1907 was associate editor of the Mitchell County Press, and in 1912 was elected representative, was re-elected two years later and served in the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh general assemblies.

LEONARD E. STANLEY was born near Salem, Columbiana County, Ohio, April 7, 1853, and died in Corning, Iowa, August 1, 1932. Burial was in Walnut Grove Cemetery, Corning. His parents were Moses and Hannah (Gruwell) Stanley. The family removed to Johnson County, Iowa, in 1853, to Oskaloosa in 1860, and to Warren County in 1864. As Leonard grew up he alternated between working on his father's farm and attending public school. In 1872 he accompanied a brother to Grant Township, Adams County, and commenced school-teaching, which vocation he followed for twelve years. He also farmed in that locality. In 1898 he was elected clerk of the District Court of Adams County, and was re-elected two years later, holding that position four years. In 1916 he was elected representative and served in the Thirty-seventh General Assembly. He also acted as a justice of the peace. He was of Quaker parentage, and was a Republican in politics.

JOHN H. JUDG was born near Burlington, Iowa, in 1860 and died in Des Moines January 14, 1933. Burial was in Bethel Cemetery, Chariton. Left an orphan at the age of fourteen, he removed to Lucas County and made his home with relatives. He spent most of his life as a farmer, but also worked as a carpenter. He was a member of the Lucas County Inheritance Tax Appraisal Board for sixteen years, and was also for some time secretary and treasurer of the Lucas County Taxpayers' League. He took great interest in public matters, was for years prominent locally as a Democrat and was elected senator in November, 1932, making his campaign on a policy of tax reduction. His untimely death occurred only one week after the opening of the session of the Forty-fifth General Assembly.

JOSEPH WALLACE was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, January 26, 1854, and died in Long Beach, California, March 12, 1933. The family emigrated to the United States in 1862 and located in Marshall County, Iowa. Joseph obtained his schooling in that vicinity and followed the teaching profession for several years, first at Union, Hardin County, and later at Waseca, Minnesota. In 1879 he returned to Union and engaged in farming and cattle feeding. He served some years as a member of the Board of Supervisors of Hardin County, and in 1897 was elected senator and served in the Twenty-seventh and Twenty-eighth general assemblies.
