CLINT L. PRICE DIES TUESDAY AT HOME HERE

Editor of Indianola Tribune Since 1902 Succumbs to Long Illness, Prominent Politician

Clint L. Price, 77, editor of the Indianola Tribune, died at his home here at midnight Tuesday, August 25. He had been in ill health since January 25, 1925, but had maintained an active interest in the publication of his paper for a number of years following. Mr. Price had been bedfast since February 11.

For many years a prominent figure in the civic and political affairs of Indianola, Mr. Price held many offices in local and state organizations. He first became connected with the Indianola Tribune on February 15, 1874, and was its editor since 1902. His familiar style editorial column, known as "Whispers Whispered," was a characteristic and popular feature of the Tribune as long as he was able to write it.

Funeral services will be held at 3 o'clock at the Orr funeral home Friday afternoon, August 28. The Rev. Sampson Cocks will conduct the service. Burial will be in the Indianola cemetery.

GRISSOM FAMILY REUNION

Those spending Sunday, August 23, at the John Grissom farm near Conger for a family reunion were: Mr. and Mrs. Rolland Welch, Mrs. Catherine Newell, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Blosser, Mr. and Mrs. Austin Newell and son John, Mr. and Mrs. John Potter and daughters Marcia and Doris, Ira Newell, Mr. and Mrs. James O. Monroe, Mr. and Mrs. Leo

TAKES POSITION IN CHICAGO

C. M. Kirtley left Sunday night for Chicago where he will be connected with the General Motors Co. as district representative for the Buick Motor Co., and will work out of the Chicago office. He probably will locate either at Janesville or Madison, Wis. Mrs. Kirtley and children will move later. Mr. Kirtley, with his brother, W. F. Kirtley, purchased the Chevrolet agency from James Allen last December. C. M. Kirtley was formerly with General Motors as credit manager to the acceptance corporation before coming to Indianola. W. F. Kirtley will manage the local Chevrolet company.

WARREN COUNTY BOYS TO USHER

Four Warren county 4-H club boys will usher in the grandstand at the Iowa State fair in Des Moines. They are William Pemble and Howard Langfitt of Indianola, and Loren Herway and John Hemstra of Liberty Center.

NORTH LIBERTY-LIBERTY CENTER REUNION

The North Liberty-Liberty Center reunion will be held Saturday, Sept. 12, at the Liberty Center high school. Those attending are asked to bring basket dinners. There will be a good program.

Edna Ogan Is Library Assistant

Miss Edna Ogan of Indianola has been appointed second assistant in the Indianola public library, the Rev. Sampson Cocks, library board president, announced Thursday.

Miss Ogan is a graduate of Indianola high school and of Simpson college. She has had six weeks training in the University of Iowa library school and eight months experience in the reserve room of the Iowa State college library at Ames. While she was in Simpson she was student assistant in the college library for two years and had charge of the library during the summer of 1930. She has had part time experience in the city library. For the past several years she has been employed in the office of the Green Day lumber company here.

I.O.P. Volunteers Organized Here

Organization of "Republican Volunteers," a group which augments the regular party organizations in behalf of the Republican ticket at the coming election, was started at a meeting held at the courthouse on Tuesday evening. Precinct workers from all parts of the county were present to hear Hon. George D. Berre from Republican national headquarters explain the plan.

Mr. Berre delivered a forceful address in which he outlined the New Deal's promises of cutting governmental expenses, balancing the budget and eliminating of bureaus and commissions with their performances. The national debt has increased 15 billions, the deficit more than six billions and 250,000 have been added to the government payroll in the more than 50 bureaus set up in the past three years. "The American farmer and workingman want an opportunity to earn a living, not a handout," he said. He stressed unity and co-operation through which the Republican candidates will be elected in November.

Following his address, the Volunteer pledge cards were distributed

One of Two Counties to Give Home Efficiency Exhibit-- Initiate Mrs. E. T. Meredith Into 4-H Group

Warren county was selected as one of two counties in the state to prepare a special home efficiency exhibit for the girls' 4-H club department at the Iowa state fair.

Miss Rayetta Nutting of Milo was selected by the 4-H county committee as the girl most qualified to receive the honor and prepare the exhibit. She has been in club work for nine years; she is president of the Sunny Circle club this year.

The Exhibit

The exhibit which Miss Nutting is preparing consists of three pieces of homemade kitchen equipment which make up the preparation unit of the kitchen. They are a storage closet, a work table and a small utility cupboard. Miss Nutting planned the equipment and assisted with the construction which was supervised by her father, D. R. Nutting.

The state 4-H department again honored the 4-H girls of Warren county when they asked them to give the state 4-H initiation ceremony by which Mrs. E. T. Meredith of Des Moines, wife of the former secretary of agriculture, will become an honorary member of the state 4-H girls organization.

TRIBUNE EDITOR, CLINT L. PRICE, LAID TO REST

Governor Herring Pays Tribute at Bier of Friend at Funeral Held Last Friday, Aug. 28

(By Loren C. Talbot)

During the funeral services for Clint L. Price, last Friday, August 28, there came to my mind a paragraph he had once written in his "Whispers Whispered" column which for years appeared weekly as a front page feature of his newspaper, The Indianola Tribune, and which, I believe, more nearly embodied his entire philosophy of life than anything else he ever wrote.

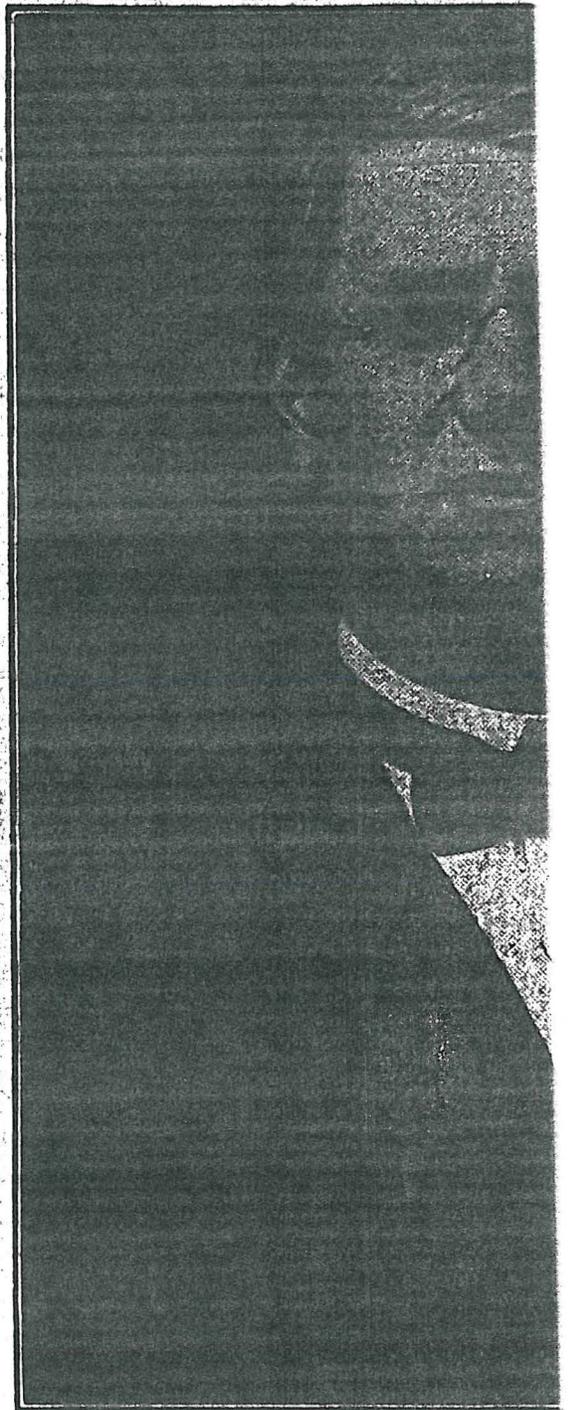

Here is the paragraph: "A man all wrapped up in himself makes a mighty small package."

That single paragraph came off his pen about 1932, after an illness dating back to January 25, 1925, which removed him from active work in the profession he loved so well, but which failed to dim the brightness of his mind. It was copied in other newspapers and went the rounds of the press as so many of the bits of thought that appeared in that column did.

A Rule of Life

There it was—a mite of wisdom containing a world of thought—written when the shadows were beginning to fall; when he was awaiting the inevitable hour as we all must; when he had checked up on himself like we all do, as we blunder along toward the final fadeout; when his rich experiences that gained lustre through contact with a bright mind and that were warmed by a kindly heart, had merged into a humane philosophy which was his only religion; when he had "suffered it out."

There it was—a twelve word pattern to live by. There is contained in it all of those sentiments which make up the goal that we all would cross. From out of it shines the unselfishness of the man who made it.

There it was—a twelve word pattern to live by. There is contained in it all of those sentiments which make up the goal that we all would cross. From out of it shines the unselfishness of the man who made it. In it you can read the Golden Rule, the Sermon on the Mount, the qualities that the moralists would have us acquire—truth, honesty, democracy, helpfulness, service. And Clint Price possessed them all in abundance.

Cross Section of Friends

That paragraph, "A man wrapped up in himself makes a mighty small package," popped into my memory as I watched that sorrowing group of friends pass by the casket. It was a cross section of his friendships. Among them were those who had attained national eminence and whom the world calls great. There were those, good citizens, who performed their work in life just as well and who love as deeply. And who dares say they are not as great?

In that group was Governor Clyde L. Herring, who paused a moment at the bier of his friend. A minute later a man dressed in blue overalls, whom nobody seemed to know, stopped for a second and then passed on. And all the rest in turn, all friends whom Clint Price liked. Among his political friends present were Steve Hill, postmaster of Des Moines and WPA administrator for Iowa, and his brother, B. J. Hill, owner of the Capital City Ink Co., Des Moines; Claude R. Porter of Washington, D. C., chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission; Lester Drennen of Des Moines, Sixth district committeeman of the democratic

PIONEER SPENDS 80th BIRTHDAY IN WARREN CO.

Leander Gates of Martensdale Went to School in Log Cabin Ardent Basketball Fan

In celebration of the eightieth anniversary of a life spent in Warren county, Leander Gates of Martensdale was host to all of his children and a large group of relatives and friends at his home Thursday, Aug. 27. Probably the oldest living pioneer who was born and lived continuously in Warren county, Mr. Gates is still in good health and active in many ways. He is known as one of the most faithful attendants at all basketball games during the season.

He was born Aug. 27, 1856, in a double log cabin about three miles south of Norwalk. He attended school in a log schoolhouse and church services in the same building for many years. The schoolhouse was located on the plot which is now the Linn Grove cemetery. When 27 years of age, he bought a farm seven miles south of Norwalk and lived on this place, actively farming it, until 10 years ago when he retired and moved to Martensdale.

During his very active life he took a deep interest in civic and church organizations, serving as school director and holding township offices and working in his church. For 25 consecutive years he directed the choir in the Linn Grove church.

Mr. Gates retains a vivid memory of the many changes which have taken place in that place.

Mar, commerce counsel of Iowa; Mr. and Mrs. Ben Doyle of Des Moines, both prominent in democratic circles for years, and others with whom Mr. Price had associated during his active political life.

Services Were Simple

It was this cross section of his friendships, I think, that brought the paragraph I have referred to to my mind. Clint Price didn't care a hang who the man was, whether he had money or whether he held position—it was the man who counted, be he broke, down and out or riding the tide of success.

The funeral services, held at 3 o'clock at Orr's Funeral home, were simple as he had wished. They were in charge of the Rev. Sampson Cocks, pastor of the First Presbyterian church.

There was a reading of the ninety-first psalm: "In the secret place of the most high shall ye abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

It was followed by a song, "In the Garden," sung by Mrs. Don L. Berry and Laurence Bryant.

Governor Pays Tribute

The twenty-third psalm was read, there was another song, "The Old Rugged Cross," followed by a tribute by Governor Herring.

"Clint Price, whom I have known for many years, was a type of those Spartan men who gave Iowa its eminence," Governor Herring said.

"And may the youth of Iowa copy those virtues and preserve for Iowa the contributions which such men as Clint Price have given it.

"During my political career I have gone to him to seek his mature judgment. He always spoke frankly and I always trusted him, realizing that his advice was sound.

"He has come to me but he never came to me for anything for Clint Price. It was always for some one else. I count it a privilege to be here to pay a last tribute to a great citizen of Iowa."

The governor's tribute was followed by a reading of selected verses from the fourteenth chapter of St. John: "Let not your heart be troubled. Ye believe in God, believe ye also in me."

Crossing the Bar

The services closed with a reading of Tennyson's poem, "Crossing the Bar."

Clint Price was an example of a man who set out to achieve a definite goal and he achieved it. When as a boy just out of the eighth grade

I learned to know Clint Price and his lovable qualities. That was many years ago when I was employed for a time as his reporter. He was one of the best companions I ever knew and I have sat by the hour listening to the humorous anecdotes of his early life. Jesse Frazier and Miss Zula Wilson whom he married September 15, 1921, were also employed on The Tribune, and friendships were formed which will never be broken.

Capacity for Friendships

Mr. Price had the capacity to form great and lasting friendships. Included among these were such men as William Jennings Bryan, who came into this district to make three speeches for him when he was a candidate for congress in 1910; the late United States Senator Louis Murphy; W. D. Jamieson, one time congressman from the Eighth district of Iowa; many of the prominent newspaper men of Iowa, and state and national officials. But among his closest friends he listed the home folks.

On the fiftieth anniversary of his entrance into the newspaper business, Mr. Price wrote a short autobiography which he published in The Tribune. It is full of his humorous philosophy and brings out many of his traits of character.

In it we learn that he was born in Vermillion county, Illinois, May 13, 1859, and he was therefore past 77 years of age at the time of his death, last Tuesday night, about midnight, August 25.

He Moves Out

But, said he in his autobiography: "I soon thereafter learned that Joe Cannon lived in the same county. Realizing the incompatibility (politically) it was up to me to move."

His parents were Abe and Huldah Cheshire Price, and with them and his brother, Vint, he came to Warren county in October of the same year. They lived on a farm located a mile and a half southeast of town for about five years when they moved to Indianola.

His autobiography, referring to his boyhood, goes on to say: "Used to get ten cents per head for every stray pig that I put in the city pound. Worked in Noble's lumber yard and helped Sam Calhoun run his restaurant, besides going to school when it suited me. Was attending school when I began building fires, sweeping out and washing rollers in The Tribune office. Went after my books later when the teacher (George W. Samson) called my attention to an infraction of the rules two weeks before and requested, directed or rather ordered me to the paper was published until brick building, now occupied by Indianola Hardware Co., was completed, when the plant was moved over there.

After moving to the new location Mr. Parker sold his paper to W. Andrews, who was editor and publisher for only a short time. A few months it was sold to John Clarey, who was once horse whip on the public square for an act he had written. His partner was M. McElroy, who later sold out Clarey.

Papers Consolidated

In his autobiography, Mr. Price informs us that along in the eighties, the late Frank B. Taylor who died about two years ago bought The Tribune and consolidated it with The Advocate, which had purchased from C. B. Taylor. About this time Mr. Price moved from Fairfield to work for Mr. McElroy who had gone there after selling out to Clarey. A short while later he moved to Des Moines, then back to Indianola to become foreman of Advocate-Tribune. After a few months Taylor sold a half-interest in his plant to W. H. Schooley, and his son, Frank Schooley, took charge of the job work. At the end of the year the Schooleys bought out Taylor.

It was while working on The Advocate that Mr. Price was united in marriage to Miss Nancy Kath King, who lived near Summit. That was November 17, 1878.

When the Schooleys took over The Advocate-Tribune, "that's when I quit to embark on the broad sea of journalism as editor of The Motor," Mr. Price writes in the narrative of his life. That was in March, 1884.

A Part of the Town

"As editor of the Motor," Mr. Price continues, "I soon became a part of the town, played in the band, clerk, short stop on the ball team, took the serious parts in the talent plays, played chequers, took advertising for sewing machines, traded the sewing machines for one a brindle cow who could jump a fence higher than the taxes are."

"Cleveland was elected president that fall and the next year as mayor, I found reading the papers very convenient and a source of information.

"The Motor was instrumental in having the trees planted in the city which had been given the town by the State. It was necessary to repair the trees for a few years, some people on Main street were hoot and jeer when the trees were being hauled through the town there was another song, "The Old Rugged Cross," followed by a tribute by Governor Herring.

"Clint Price, whom I have known for many years, was a type of those Spartan men who gave Iowa its eminence," Governor Herring said.

"And may the youth of Iowa by those virtues and preserve for Iowa the contributions which such men as Clint Price have given it.

"During my political career I have gone to him to seek his mature judgment. He always spoke frankly and I always trusted him, realizing that his advice was sound.

"He has come to me but he never came to me for anything for Clint Price. It was always for some one else. I count it a privilege to be here to pay a last tribute to a great citizen of Iowa."

The governor's tribute was followed by a reading of selected verses from the fourteenth chapter of St. John: "Let not your heart be troubled. Ye believe in God, believe ye also in me."

Crossing the Bar

The services closed with a reading of Tennyson's poem, "Crossing the Bar."

Clint Price was an example of a man who set out to achieve a definite goal and he achieved it. When as a boy just out of the eighth grade he took a job in The Tribune office—shining rollers, building fires, cleaning kerosene lamps, carrying coal and water—and all those tasks before breakfast every day for $2 per week—he formed an ambition to own a newspaper. As he progressed in his work he eventually hoped to own The Tribune, and he did.

His lot was cast with some great newspaper men including the late George F. Parker, who founded The Tribune, and who later did newspaper work in Des Moines, eventually moving to Philadelphia, Pa., where he continued in the profession. While in the east Mr. Parker formed a lifetime friendship with Grover Cleveland. It is no exaggeration to say that he was one of Mr. Cleveland's closest political advisers and that he contributed much to his election as president.

Pride in His Art

Mr. Price learned the printing business from a fine old school of printers and he came to be recognized as one of the best in Iowa. It was an art in which he took great pride.

In fact, he was happiest in the "back room" among the type, the forms, the presses and the cases, with a pipe in his mouth, which he smoked incessantly.

It was in these surroundings that

In it we learn that he was born in Vermillion county, Illinois, May 13, 1859, and he was therefore past 77 years of age at the time of his death, last Tuesday night, about midnight, August 25.

He Moves Out

But, said he in his autobiography: "I soon thereafter learned that Joe Cannon lived in the same county. Realizing the incompatibility (politically) it was up to me to move."

His parents were Abe and Huldah Cheshire Price, and with them and his brother, Vint, he came to Warren county in October of the same year. They lived on a farm located a mile and a half southeast of town for about five years when they moved to Indianola.

His autobiography, referring to his boyhood, goes on to say: "Used to get ten cents per head for every stray pig that I put in the city pound. Worked in Noble's lumber yard and helped Sam Calhoun run his restaurant, besides going to school when it suited me. Was attending school when I began building fires, sweeping out and washing rollers in The Tribune office. Went after my books later when the teacher (George W. Samson) called my attention to an infraction of the rules two weeks before and requested, directed or rather ordered me to take my book and stand up in the back corner of the room for 15 minutes." The upshot of it all was that he told the teacher he had just got a job, that he had come after his books and was ordered to "take your books and get out."

Ordered Out

He did as he was ordered and entered the employ of Mr. Parker on The Tribune. But just before he closed with Mr. Parker he writes that he went out and carried two notes which brought him in 20 cents, half of which he spent for hair oil.

He was the office "devil" and went to work at 5 o'clock in the morning. He writes that he got cussed if he was late, but he soon got a raise from $2 to $3 per week. Mr. Belderback was the foreman and when the latter broke training rules, he used to feel sorry for young Price and allowed him to go down to his (Belderback's) home and "hoe the garden, chop wood and lie to his wife as to the time when he would get home."

Those were the days, when the equipment of a country paper was composed almost entirely of an old fashioned Washington hand press and a shirt-tail full of type. And that was the equipment of The Tribune at that time. The office was located west of the Holmes Drug store, where lay out.

It was while working on The Tribune that Mr. Price was united in marriage to Miss Nancy Katharine King, who lived near Summers That was November 17, 1878.

When the Schooleys took over The Advocate-Tribune, "that's when I quit to embark on the broad sea of journalism as editor of The Motor," Mr. Price writes in the narrative of his life. That was March, 1884.

A Part of the Town

"As editor of the Motor," continues, "I soon became a part of the town, played in the band, took clerk, short stop on the ball team, took the serious parts in the hospital plays, played chequers, traded advertising for sewing machines and traded the sewing machines for cow one a brindle cow who could jump a fence higher than the taxes are now."

"Cleveland was elected president that fall and the next year as postmaster, I found reading the postcards very convenient and a source of information.

"The Motor was instrumental in having the trees planted in the park which had been given the town when it was platted. It was necessary to replant the trees for a few years and some people on Main street would hoot and jeer when the trees were being hauled through the town.

"A mighty nice little park now and I am glad of the part The Motor took in getting the trees started."

Sells The Motor

Mr. Price sold The Motor to Charlie Lyon and moved to Stuttgart, Ark., in January, 1889. His wife had died in 1887 and on May 13, 1889, while he was editing the paper at Stuttgart, he was united in marriage to Miss Ida St. John, who died in 1915.

Mr. Price remained in Arkansas until June, 1892. Returning to Iowa he purchased the Louisa County Democrat at Wapello.

"Grover Cleveland was elected a second time that year and remembering the good work I did as postmaster at Milo, asked me to do the same for the people of Wapello," writes humorously. "Was also elected mayor of the town and went to office every year with the best fellows who ever lived, besides doing a lot of other things."

Along in the winter of 1901, Mr. Price realized his long cherished ambition to own The Tribune. The Schooleys sold out to him and he bought the first issue for him after had bought it, on January 2, 1901.

Elected Mayor

the paper was published until the brick building, now occupied by the Indianola Hardware Co., was com-

over there.

After moving to the new location
Mr. Parker sold his paper to W. E.
Andrews, who was editor and publisher for only a short time. After a few months it was sold to John E.
Clarey, who was once horse whipped on the public square for an article he had written. His partner was C.
M. McElroy, who later sold out to Clarey.

Papers Consolidated

In his autobiography, Mr. Price informs us that along in the early eighties, the late Frank B. Taylor, who died about two years ago, bought The Tribune and consolidated it with The Advocate, which he had purchased from C. B. Lake.
About this time Mr. Price moved to Fairfield to work for Mr. McElroy, who had gone there after selling out to Clarey. A short while later he moved to Des Moines, then back to Indianola to become foreman of The Advocate-Tribune. After a few months Taylor sold a half-interest in his plant to W. H. Schooley, whose son, Frank Schooley, took charge of the job work. At the end of a year the Schooleys bought out Mr.
Taylor.

It was while working on The Tribune that Mr. Price was united in marriage to Miss Nancy Katharine King, who lived near Summerset.
That was November 17, 1878.

When the Schooleys took over The Advocate-Tribune, "that's when I quit to embark on the broad sea of journalism as editor of The Milo Motor," Mr. Price writes in the narrative of his life. That was in March, 1884.

A Part of the Town

"As editor of the Motor," he continues, "I soon became a part of the town, played in the band, town clerk, short stop on the ball team, took the serious parts in the home talent plays, played chequers, traded advertising for sewing machines and traded the sewing machines for cows, one a brindle cow who could jump a fence higher than the taxes are now.

"Cleveland was elected president that fall and the next year as postmaster, I found reading the postal cards very convenient and a source of information.

"The Motor was instrumental in having the trees planted in the park which had been given the town when it was platted. It was necessary to plant the trees for a few years and some people on Main street would hoot and jeer when the trees were planted through the town. It's stroke. He returned to the office later but only for a brief period.

Up to the time of his death he was inactive except for his weekly column which he continued to write up to about two years ago, although he continued as editor of The Tribune.

Mr. Price is survived by his widow and three daughters, Mrs. J. M. At-terberry of Maxwell, Mrs. A. E.
Dickerson and Mrs. Norman Gardner of Lynwood, Calif. Another daughter, Mrs. Harry E. Ramay, passed

"Naturally I have people who don't like me and somehow I am glad of it—they probably won't be standing 'round at my funeral where only my friends will be welcome and wanted. That's a peculiar statement to make at a time like this but it is used advisedly and if I didn't say it you wouldn't appreciate to the full extent what I have to say in appreciation of my friends."

CLINT L. PRICE.

Clint L. Price, who has made his influence strongly felt in journalistic and political circles of the state, was born in Vermilion county, Illinois, in 1859. His father, Abraham Price, a native of Madison county, Ohio, where his birth occurred in 1836, was of English extraction. In the fall of 1859 he came to Iowa, locating in what is now Lincoln township, on a tract of land a mile and a half southeast of Indianola. There he remained until the spring of 1865, when he became connected with mercantile interests, subsequently giving his attention to the insurance business. He was a democrat in his political views, and passed away December 22, 1900, in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal church. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Hulda Cheshire, was born near Midway, Madison county, Ohio, in 1837. She is of English ancestry and of Revolutionary stock. She is likewise a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and makes her home in Indianola. Her three children are as follows: Vint K., who is with the Cheshire Clothing Company of Indianola; Clint L., of this review; and Emma, the wife of Morgan M. Reeves, a fruit-grower of Weiser, Idaho.

Clint L. Price attended the schools of Indianola and when little more than fourteen years of age entered the Tribune office, familiarizing himself with the printer's trade. When a lad of fifteen he told his fellow workers that he would one day own the Tribune, and by dint of untiring perseverance and indefatigable labor he at length fulfilled his prophecy. After working on the Tribune for seven years, during which period he had risen to the position of foreman, he entered the Advocate office as foreman and subsequently was engaged in a similar capacity on the Fairfield Tribune. After the consolidation he worked for a time on the Advocate-Tribune under Frank B. Taylor. In March, 1884, he undertook the publication of the Milo Motor, instilling new life into the journal and successfully managing its interests until January 1889, when he went to Arkansas. He continued in the newspaper business at that place until June, 1902, when he returned to Iowa and established the Louisa County Democrat at Wapello, which he published until January 2, 1902. He then exchanged the plant for the Advocate-Tribune, which he has since successfully published, its power and influence ever growing under his able direction and editorship.

On the 10th of November, 1879, Mr. Price was united in marriage to Miss Nannie A. King, whose birth occurred in Decatur county, Iowa. Her father, John A. King, was killed in the battle of Altoona. Mrs. Price passed away in 1887, leaving three children to mourn her loss: John A., who is deceased; E.

Roxy, the wife of Harry E. Ramay, who is connected with the Polk County Abstract Company at Des Moines; and Clint, Jr., who has also passed away. On the 13th of May, 1889, Mr. Price was again married, his second union being with Miss Ida M. St. John, who was born in Boone, Iowa, her parents being O. and Mary St. John. Her father is a shoemaker by trade, and came to Warren county in the '90s. Unto our subject and his second wife have been born four children, namely: E. Gladys; Helen O.; Hugh, who died in infancy; and Hulda Dorothy.

In his political views Mr. Price is a stalwart democrat and has taken an active interest in the work of the party. He served as town clerk of Milo, and for three years acted as mayor of Wapello, while at both places he served as postmaster. In 1907 he was elected from Warren county to the lower branch of the state legislature, and is now chairman of the Warren county democratic central committee. He has been a member from the seventh district of the democratic state central committee and also secretary of the seventh district congressional committee. He is likewise chairman of the democratic state committee. His party fealty is not grounded on partisan prejudice, and he enjoys the respect and confidence of all his associates, irrespective of party. Of the great issues which divide the two parties, with their roots extending down to the very bedrock of the foundation of the republic, he has the true statesman's grasp. Well grounded in the political maxims of the schools, he has also studied the lessons of actual life, arriving at his conclusions as a result of what may be called his post-graduate studies in the school of affairs. Such men, whether in office or out, are the natural leaders of whichever party they may be identified with, especially in that movement toward higher politics which is common to both parties, and which constitutes the most hopeful political sign of the period. Fraternally Mr. Price is connected with the Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Modern Woodmen of America, Mutual Benevolent Association and the Yeomen. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, in the work of which she is actively and helpfully interested.

GEORGE W. TAYLOR.

George W. Taylor, who was born in Indiana, February 3, 1853, is recognized as one of the leading farmers of Virginia township, and is of English descent, his parents being natives of England, emigrating to the United States some years after their marriage. He is the son of George and Margaret Taylor, who on coming to America first settled in Ohio, but later removed to Indiana, where the father died at the age of forty-five years, leaving a widow, who survived him for some years, and six children, three of whom were born in England, and three in America. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Taylor went to Louisville, Kentucky, where she made her home with her daughter up to the time of her death.
