JOHN P. GALLAGHER BURIED ON TUESDAY IN WILLIAMSBURG

Popular Former Editor Was Active in Politics, All Community Affairs

John P. Gallagher, 84, former editor and owner of this newspaper for many years, well known to residents of Iowa county and to many over the entire state, passed from this life at Mercy hospital in Davenport on Sunday, March 3. His death occurred just two weeks after he had suffered a broken hip in a fall at the hospital where he had been a patient for the past two years.

Funeral services were held at St. Mary's Catholic church in Williamsburg on Tuesday morning with the Rev. J. J. Gaule as celebrant of the requiem high mass, Rev. A. E. Cone of Victor as deacon, Rev. D. C. Browne of Parnell as sub-deacon, and the Msgr. W. E. Carroll of Marengo and Rev. T. J. Ryan of Oxford present in the sanctuary. St. Mary's choir sang the responses.

Burial was made in St. Mary's cemetery, Williamsburg. The pallbearers who served were: Charles O'Neill, Gus O'Donnell, J. D. Lewis, Werner Uhlmann, L. J. Hogan and Arthur J. Wallace.

John Peter Gallagher, son of John and Catherine Burns Gallagher, was born on a farm in York township, Iowa county, Jan. 1, 1862, and received his education in the rural schools of his home community. He taught school for a short time and then was employed with the railway mail service from 1888 until 1901, at which time he returned to Williamsburg to become co-publisher of the Journal-Tribune with Thomas T. Osborn. He served as editor of the newspaper from 1920 until 1936, when he transferred his activities to the Williamsburg Shopper with which he was associated until 1941.

Interested In Politics

During these years he became interested in politics and was elected in 1922 as state representative of Iowa county, serving in the 40th regular and 40th extra session. In 1924 he did not run for re-election, in 1926 he was a candidate for congressional representative and in 1928 he ran for the state senate, neither election resulting favorably for him.

In 1930 he again ran for representative and was elected, holding that office for eight consecutive years until 1938. He served in two extra sessions during that time and also spent much time at the state capitol as a member of the code revision committee in 1922.

Mr. Gallagher was a very fluent writer and speaker and is well known to many of the residents of the county in the forceful manner in which he defended or attacked any proposition, depending on his personal views of the matter.

democracy for which he received many compliments from both party members.

He was very much interested in the proper and necessary education of the public, and in unadulterated American political philosophy, and realized that a real representative government could not be maintained without due recognition and observance of the fundamental principles of morals, ethics, and religion.

Mr. Gallagher was as outspoken in lauding good legislative principles as he was in denouncing such which he considered to have a sinister ulterior motive, although as citizen or official he rather leaned towards praising an individual than to criticize him without due cause, and all of us contemporary townsmen know that he was always most interested and active in promoting issues for the economic and social benefit of the community.

FRANK PRIEBE'S WEEKLY LETTER to POULTRY RAISERS

Dear Friends:
President Truman has asked the American people to eat LESS food. The poultry industry, at the same time, has asked distributors and retailers to encourage the American people to eat MORE poultry.

There is not the contradiction in those requests that you might think. World food stocks are at an all-time low. U. S. poultry stocks are at an all-time high.

At the beginning of February we had 135 million pounds of turkeys in storage—almost twice as many as a year ago and three times as many as we normally had in pre-war years. We had 55 million pounds of roasting chickens—twice as many as last year; 26 million pounds of fryers—two and a half times as many as last year; 12 million pounds of broilers—three times as many as last year.

You don't ship chickens to people who are starving for bread.

But if relief shipments result in a scarcity of other meats here at home, at least there is no scarcity of poultry. In the face of a world food shortage, I don't think anyone is justified in saying we have a surplus of poultry or any other kind of food. It's fortunate the supply is as large as it is. We can use it. But the attention of the public should be directed to the fact that poultry is plentiful.

Raise All You Can Raise Right

As far as this year's production is concerned, I believe that every farmer in the Middle West should raise as many chicks as he can feed and care for properly. I think there will be a good market for them.

There are sections of the country where poultry production was increased enormously during the war. Many people saw a chance to get rich quick raising chickens. But they had to ship in most of their feed, production costs were high, and today there is not much margin for them. A lot of them are getting out of the poultry business. There are wails of distress from producers in these sections, but I can't see any reason why the government, in peace time, should subsidize high-cost production. If poultry can be produced for less money in the Middle West than in other sections of the country (and I believe it can be), then this is where chickens should be raised.

We've had a pretty good illustration lately of how impossible it is to plan food production on paper in Washington. It's evident now that the government miscalculated last year's feed crop by about 51 million bushels. And now there is a great hurry to revise this year's production goals. Statistics which are six months behind the times are not a sound
