Farm Spraying

Greene county farmers are swinging to sprays.

This year hundreds of them are going to try DDT, 2,4-D and other new chemicals in their farming operations, County Extension Director Paul W. Elam said this week.

Many are building or buying their own spray rigs, he reported. Others are relying on custom operators.

Custom spraying is a new business, but it's growing rapidly. Schools conducted by Iowa State college have helped to train operators in the use of DDT against insects and 2,4-D against weeds on Iowa farms.

There are a lot of things to be learned about spraying, Elam said. Applying sprays at the right time and improve can utilize surface. No essential have and equal. He to be creating. When lected then ing. Be
