Henry Busch died in 1981. His son Paul relates his father's World War II experiences:

“My dad told me how rough the ocean was going over (everyone was sick). It was extremely cold in France and Germany—my dad crawled under two German tanks one night to hook up telephone wires (this was when he received a bronze star).

“He also told me of being one of the first units to liberate concentration camps.” He saw Landsberg Prison and said how horrible the sights were.

“Landsberg Prison is also where Hitler wrote *Mein
Kampf*.

“On a lighter note, Dad told me of coming into a town that had a warehouse filled with fresh eggs—up until then it was all powdered.”
