KIBBUTZ METZER, Israel (AP) — Israeli leaders today weighed in to retaliate after a Palestinian gunman crept into a communal farm and killed five Israelis, including a mother and her two young sons as she read their bedtime story.

The Al Aqsa Martyrs Brigade militant group loosely affiliated with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat's Fatah movement, claimed responsibility for the attack.

Foreign Minister Benjamin Netanyahu repeated his long-standing call for "expelling Arafat's terror regime," and Prime Minister Ariel Sharon met with his new defense minister, Shaul Mofaz, to discuss a response.

Sharon and Mofaz then toured Kibbutz Metzer, including the bedroom of the slain boys, Noam Ohion, 4, and his brother Matam, 5.

A Sharon adviser, Raanan Gissin, said the response will be "within parameters of the actions we have been taking in the past few months. That seemed to rule out expelling Arafat.

Sharon has assured the United States he would not expel or harm Arafat even though he and other decision-makers support the idea.

The United States also wants to avoid antagonizing the Arab world and doesn't want to distract from preparations for possible war with Iraq.

The attack raised tensions in advance of a visit this week by U.S. envoy David Satterfield, who plans to discuss a U.S.-backed plan aimed at restarting Mideast peace negotiations.

After going under a fence, the gunman reached the center of the community and entered a house where the lights were on, Lieber said.

He shot dead Revital Ohion, 4, and the two boys. She was reading a bedtime story to her children when she first heard shots, which led her to call her husband.

grandchildren; and many step-children and step-grandchildren.

Visitation will be from 6 to 8 p.m. today at the Mitchellville Funeral Home.

Memorials may be given to the Mitchellville Public Library.
