Randy Schooley, who works for Forrest and Associate Masonry of Des Moines, works at the top of the scaffold he's helping erect in front of the west face of the Statehouse. When finished, the scaffold will tower 130 feet above the ground. It is part of the refurbishing of the Statehouse.

Buried Memories

After entering therapy in 1988, the buried memories came back to him.

"The emotional problems were so severe that I didn't even recognize the fact that it had happened," Perrin said in an interview. "Even initially, when the therapist worked with me and the recollection came, there was so much fear and so much denial and so much guilt."

that cantorio to Perrin states: "Maybe I seem like the bad ogre in your life at this time. I am sorry about that. I did and do care for the welfare of you and of your family. I love you all very much, even if I was not always able to show it in an appropriate way."

4-year AIDS battle conquers lawyer Willits

By CYNTHIA HUBERT

Register Staff Writer

Earl Willits, a Des Moines lawyer and former state legislator, died Wednesday night of AIDS.

Willits, who served more recently as an assistant attorney general, spent the past few months preparing for death, coming to terms with it, telling his loved ones goodbye.

"He tried to be very forthright," said the Rev. James Gilliom, pastor of Plymouth Congregational United Church of Christ in Des Moines.

"He let everyone know he had fought the fight, and the fight was over," said Gilliom, a friend and spiritual adviser to Willits.

Willits, father of two teen-age girls, was 43 years old when he died at Mercy Hospital Medical Center in Des Moines.

Although AIDS ravaged his body, leaving him frail, weak and partially blind in his final weeks, his mind remained sharp, friends said. He planned his own funeral and memorial service, right down to the hymns to be played.

At the service, scheduled for 11 a.m. Saturday at Plymouth Congregational, Gilliom will talk about homosexuality, AIDS and how Willits struggled physically and emotionally as a public figure fighting a disease with a terrible stigma.

"Earl faced a difficult situation with courage and sensitivity as all of us who knew him would have anticipated and greatly appreciate," his former wife, Martha Willits, a member of the Polk County Board of Supervisors, said Wednesday evening.

The Willitses were divorced in 1987. A year earlier, a blood test showed that Earl Willits had been exposed to the virus that causes AIDS. It was then that he confided with friends and family members about his homosexuality.

Although he knew AIDS would eventually take his life, Willits refused to bow to it, friends said. He traveled across the country to participate in research on various experimental drugs, attempting to boost his immune system and battle the illnesses that bombarded his body.

"At times, he did not know whether he was getting a real drug or a placebo," said Gilliom. "But even if his own life was not to be prolonged, he wanted to do what he could to help others in the future."

Willits resolved to live his final years to the fullest. He climbed mountains, spent as much time as he could with friends and took a vacation cruise to the Caribbean with his daughters.

In recent months, AIDS sapped his strength and left him bedridden. When it became clear that very strong sense of justice and an especially sensitive awareness of the rights of the powerless."

Although many knew about his gay lifestyle and his illness, Willits declined to be interviewed about his struggle with AIDS. He said he feared that public disclosure would harm his daughters.

"Earl really went many extra miles to live up to society's expectations of him," said former Polk County Attorney Dan Johnston, who once practiced law with Willits and now lives in New York City. "His relationship with Martha and the girls were the most important things in his life for most of his life.

"He was very strong, very heroic about his sickness. And that was consistent with efforts he made to try and live up to the expectations of society for a boy who grows up in small-town Iowa."

Born in Marshalltown, Willits was a 4-H member and graduated from Union-Whitten High School. He earned an undergraduate degree at Iowa State University in 1968 and a law degree from Drake University in 1974.

He taught American government at Hoover High School in Des Moines, but he found his niche in state government.

At Home in Legislature

At the age of 24, he won a seat in the Iowa House of Representatives, a liberal Democrat in a Legislature controlled by Republicans. A year later, in 1972, he was elected to the state Senate and later served as an assistant majority leader.

"He was one of those people who seemed at home from the day he

During his time in the Legislature, Willits raised concerns about the Iowa Commission for the Blind, resulting in the resignation of the director and sparking state and federal investigations. He led an unsuccessful campaign for school reorganization, criticized the cost of restoring Terrace Hill, helped force the mansion open to the public and criticized schools that hire teachers based on coaching ability.

In 1979, Willits resigned from the Senate to work for Miller.

Fraud in Agriculture

His first appointment was to the office's farm division, which Miller created to battle fraud in the farming industry and handle other issues related to agriculture. In its first six months, the division recovered nearly $200,000 for Iowa farmers.

In 1982, Willits was appointed Miller's top assistant, and later he became deputy attorney general for administration.

"Earl was a most trusted adviser to me," said Miller. "He was a public servant in the deepest sense of the term. He worked for the good of people, he worked extremely hard and he was exceedingly effective."

Said Bill Roach, administrator of Miller's office:

"Earl's work as a legislator and in the attorney general's office reflected a strong belief in serving the public, particularly Iowa farmers. It was Earl who conceived the idea of a Beginning Farmer Loan Program, for example. I think that the young farmers who benefit from that program are better off today because of Earl's insight and hard work.

"Another part of Earl's legacy is the respect and friendship of those who worked with him. His intelligence, humor and friendship will be missed in this office and throughout the rest of state government.

"One of the last comments I heard from Earl was about his work as a public servant and lawyer: 'I always tried to be fair,' he said. And that's true, he did."

Survivors include his daughters, Emily and Anne; his father, Levi Willits of Union; two brothers, Don of Belle Plaine and Ray of Union; and a sister, Nancy Woodward, of Nairobi, Kenya. Willits asked that contributions be made the American Foundation for AIDS Research in New York.

Parents were unsure of charges until they went filing at the district office.

The parents didn't dispute statements Williams said but they felt Williams took comments out of context, Williams said.

In one remark, Williams concerned about a lack of models at Wright, she said. Instance, she had called to ask about two black men been looking into Wright she said.

"She said because I am a 'black gentlemen,' I was the first," Williams said.

Sanxter said Williams used an expression she used during a meeting.

"I had called her a 'fly in the ointment,' my point being to the problem, not everyone. Sanxter, the mother of the student. "She took great offense at this and believed that it was a sexist statement."

About FamilySearch Pedigree Resource File

The Pedigree Resource File is a new lineage linked database of records available on compact disc containing family history records submitted by individuals through FamilySearch Internet Genealogy Service. Family information is organized in family groups and pedigrees and includes submitted notes and sources. Many charts and reports can be printed from this data. Each disc contains about 1.1 million names. With the publication of every five discs, a master index for those discs will be published and packaged with that set of discs. With the publication of every 25 discs, a master index for those discs will also be published and packaged with that volume of discs. Discs may be purchased as sets or volumes.
