MINES FOR SHELTER?—Jo Daviess County Civil Defense Director Don Allendorf surveys the Bautsch mine area near Galena which he proposes as a possible fallout shelter. (Telegraph-Herald Photo)

Mile-Long Mine At Galena May Be A Fallout Shelter

By T-H Staff Writer

A Galena mine may play an important role in Civil Defense if a proposal by Jo Daviess County Civil Defense Director Don Allendorf is approved by the U.S. Department of Defense.

Allendorf is charged with the responsibility of accommodating approximately 25,000 people from the Rockford and Stephenson County area in the event of nuclear war or atomic fallout. In his opinion, and the opinion of several Civil Defense officials, the use of a mine may be the answer to this area.

A preliminary survey has been completed by Allendorf at the Bautsch mine, 5 1/2 miles south and east of Galena. The mile-long incline mine could accommodate more than 20,000 people and contains most of the requirements needed for an adequate fallout shelter.

Tri-State Zinc, Inc. has been working the mine for about 17 years and the mine is still in operation.

One of the earlier Civil Defense plans called for the construction of two fallout shelters in Jo Daviess County at a cost of $115,000 each. Allendorf said. But the presence of this mine which is being maintained by the mining firm would mean that we could accommodate more people for a smaller outlay of funds Allendorf explained. He said $115,000 would build a shelter that could only accommodate 2,000 people. Two such

Judge Praises 'Best Neighbor,' Gave Up Dog

A Dubuque man, who took his dog to the animal shelter after three neighbors had complained that he was letting the small miniature collie run loose, was consoled Saturday by Police Judge Alfred E. Hughes.

Donald Schroeder, 950 Spruce, had been charged with violating the city dog ordinance.

Three witnesses signed complaints, but only one showed up in court. He told Hughes that Schroeder had apparently kept the dog confined since the first complaint was registered August 11.

Schroeder pleaded guilty but when he told Hughes that he had taken the dog to the animal shelter Friday night the case was dismissed.

"No one has a better neighbor than this man," said Hughes, "who gave up his dog for them."

Week of Death Ends For Girl, 13, Man, 32

MIDLAND, Tex. (AP)—A Chicago eighth-grader and her 32-year-old boy friend said Saturday they killed four persons for $16 profit. Three of their victims yielded nothing.

The pair signed a joint statement, then talked to officers about the slaying spree, which began Wednesday in Missouri and ended before dawn Saturday at this far West Texas oil center.

Charged with murder of a hitchhiker in Texas is John Edwin Meyers, Donna Marie Stone, who is 13 but appears to be 19 or 20, is charged in Missouri with kidnapping.

Story

Here is the pair's story: Last Wednesday they came upon a father and daughter fishing. They decided to rob them and take their car. They bound George Ballard, 47, of near Belleville, Ill., and bound and gagged Carole, 11. Meyers shot them with a .22-caliber weapon. The victims had no money on them. The car would not start.

They walked to a home near Belleville in which Margaret Wernicker, 29, a St. Louis department store employe, resided.

They demanded a car and Miss Wernicker got her's for them. They took her along, resulting in the kidnapping charges. She gave them $16. Between Alton and Thayer, Mo., they bound her hands behind her and took her to a field, where Donna shot her twice in the back. The teen-ager wasn't certain Miss Wernicker was dead, so Meyers shot her in the head.

Picked Up Iowan

They picked up Lee DeKraai, about 30, of Ottumwa, Iowa, hitchhiking to California, outside Fort Worth, Tex. Near Big Spring, Tex., Donna, sitting between the men, held the steering wheel while Meyers put his arm behind her and shot DeKraai in the head. They shot him three other times and dumped the body in a field. He had no money.

The girl told officers that she had been intimate with Meyers since last March. He lived above her family's residence. Three weeks ago she went to Edwardsville, Ill., to live with her grandparents. Meyers followed her.

She said her grandmother criticized her, and she and Meyers left Aug. 22, walking to Belleville, about 30 miles away, where the first killings took place.

"I was a little scared," Donna told officers. "Texas is a big state and I thought we might get caught here."

About 3 a.m. Saturday, Texas highway patrolman, Jack Reeves, identified the car from a description. He stopped it on the outskirts of Midland.

When Reeves saw blood in the car, Donna Marie started telling the story.

Officers found Miss Wernicker's

Saturday of a peaceful solution for a political crisis that pushed the nation to "match" it out of reach.

The Senate scheduled a vote on a constitutional amendment that would clear the way for an interim parliamentary system. The amendment is aimed at appeasing strong opposition to the succession of leftist vice president Joao Goulart to the presidency Janio Quadros resigned eight days ago.

The Chamber of Deputies earlier gave a thumping 233-55 approval to the measure, which would set Goulart as a figurehead president, with a prime minister operating the government.

If the Senate agrees, if Goulart agrees and if the three top military service chiefs agree, it appeared peace might return. Under the amendment, Goulart would be inaugurated Monday.

Chamber Session

The chamber went into session Friday night after a deputy returned from a flying trip to Montevideo for back-stage talks with Goulart, the former cowboy from the southern cattle state of Rio Grande do Sul. He is opposed by the nation's military chieftains, who insist he is too far to the left.

The deputy said Goulart agreed to the parliamentary system but with some changes.

There were signs of a split among Goulart's supporters. Some continued to clamor for him to reject the parliamentary system and step into the presidency with full powers.

Gov. Leonel Brizola of Rio Grande do Sul, Goulart's brother-in-law, claimed the deputy, Tangere do Neves, failed to get "Goulart's true thinking." Brizola said the amendment's passage "comes Rains Flood Millville, Ia.

MILLVILLE, Ia.—A 5 1/2 inch rainfall flooded parts of this tiny community and left it without telephone service all day Saturday.

A creek from the Turkey River flooded over a dirt road during rains early Saturday and filled the first floor of the Telephone Bldg., "half full of water." Millville is on Highway 52, about 30 miles northwest of Dubuque.

The Mayor of Osterdock, Ia., a few miles northwest of Millville, reported that two families were forced from their homes.

"Things look rough," said Mayor Parnell Fredlake. "There's mud all over." Some power was cut about 5:30 a. m. Saturday, but it was expected to be restored by night.

Tenants on the second story of the telephone office were not forced to evacuate, Fredlake said.

The General Store, which is located above the "lower section" of the community was not flooded. Fredlake said that the water did not reach the highway.

Millville, populated by about 50 persons, is located on the banks of the Big and Little Turkey rivers.

Several dirt roads to area farms also were damaged by the rain, Fredlake said.

Near-by residents were in Millville Saturday helping to clear debris.

and individuals. As an example, in this session the joint finance committee had before it additional spending proposals totaling $30 million over and above the half-billion-dollar general fund budget.

During two sessions, I have been privileged to serve as co-chairman of that committee which scrutinizes and evaluates all appropriations, including the budget measures proposed by the governor.

Our committee carefully weighs the need for various state services, aid programs, and other benefits—and the extent of the state's legitimate responsibility to provide them. It must also consider the ability and willingness of the state taxpayers to finance these expenditures.

A Limit

The state, just as individual families, has a limit to its "ability-to-pay." This is based on revenues available and the present to which rates of its tax structure can be increased without unfairly penalizing one segment of the population or seriously endangering the overall economy of the state.

For instance, on a per capita basis, Wisconsin is fourth highest in the nation for individual income tax collections, and sixth for corporate income taxes. Our property taxes are fourth highest among people buying new homes for FHA mortgages.

On the other hand, on a per capita basis, Wisconsin ranks only 22nd in personal income. Thus, it appears that our state has long ago reached the limits of our "ability-to-pay" present needs of government under the tax structure that has existed for the past 20 years.

While it is reasonable to assume inflation and population growth tend to increase costs of government, I have never felt there is any valid justification for the assumption by many who are calling for a 20 to 30 percent increase of the state general fund to which the state budget for the next year.

More Taxpayers

As a result of the 1954-55 session, I have found many people, including our state officials, legislators and those who occasionally seek increased spending and greater government activity, who ignore a basic, undeniable fact.

It is that spending has now reached the level where each dollar of the average means that more people will never before have had to begin paying some part of financing the benefits which up to now, they have been receiving at someone else's expense.

For any government official or legislator to pretend otherwise is the worst possible kind of irresponsibility.

William A. Draheim of Heenah, veteran state senator for Winneshiek and Calumet counties, had a leading part in the campaign for tax revision in the recent session of the state legislature.

States accuses the Soviet Union because of its resumption of nuclear weapons testing.

Joint steps now impending could even lead to a summit conference, provided preliminary negotiations produced a basis for agreement.

The moves are the answer to the swelling chorus of demands at the neutral nations' conference in Yugoslavia for top-level U.S.-Soviet talks to save the world from nuclear war.

These are the steps:

1. The U.S. ambassador to Moscow, Dilewyn Thompson, is under direction to have a talk with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and explore what may be negotiable—if anything at this stage—in Berlin.

New Effort

2. John J. McCloy, Kennedy's top disarmament adviser, is scheduled to meet with Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian A. Zorin in New York next Wednesday to make a new effort to work out arrangements for an East-West disarmament conference. This will be the third round of McCloy-Zorin talks this summer, which so far have gotten nowhere.

3. Secretary of State Dean Rusk with the backing of Britain, the approval of West Germany and the reluctant consent of France, plans to have a talk with Gromyko in New York in about two weeks—if Gromyko attends the opening of the U.N. General Assembly Sept. 19.

The possibility of personal talks between Khrushchev and Kennedy, even if the Soviet leader shows up at the United Nations, is not highly rated here at the moment, but neither is it ruled out.

The President definitely has under consideration a plan to go to New York and make a major speech on world peace and disarmament. He is due to decide next week.

U.S. To Rescue?

Also next week, officials indicated, a decision is expectable on resumption of U.S. nuclear weapons testing. Most persons in a high position here say privately that they have no doubt that the United States will resume.

But Kennedy and Rusk want to permit maximum time for the Soviet nuclear test explosion of Friday to make an impact on the world.

While Kennedy has been moving less swiftly than he might, officials said he has no intention of becoming boxed in by delaying so long that events limits his field of action.

He does not, for example, intend to permit the present situation to go on so long that other countries assume it is a normal arrangement for the Soviet Union to test and the United States not to test.

At the Belgrade meeting there is reported to be increasing talk about a Kennedy-Khrushchev summit conference. Such a meeting was advocated Saturday by President Kwame Nkrumah of Ghana. Support for a summit session came from President Gamel Abdel Nasser of the United Arab Republic on Friday.

Denounce Russia

Nasser and Prime Minister Nehru of India denounced the Soviet Union's decision to resume nuclear testing.

U.S. officials and experts seem to be in general agreement that Khrushchev had two purposes in mind in resuming tests now.

Perhaps most important was the fact that his scientists had developed new nuclear weapons and Khrushchev was under very heavy military pressure to see whether the new devices would work.

women's hair — wet instead of dry — also cut into the business of Loreta Whyte, a hair stylist. She closed for the day, but reopened when Mrs. Allen Zeal of Apple River pleaded for "a short haircut." Miss Whyte applied water from a cup instead of "using the hose."

One big user of water, the local laundromat, didn't close.
John Hay, the owner, hired two tank trucks which pumped a steady supply to 20 washing machines.

One factory, Micro - Switch, closed eight hours early Friday because of the shutoff. Another, the DeKalb Agricultural hybrid seed firm, was closed anyway.

Two restaurants stayed open. At one the owner said, "we just do dishes once a day while this is on."

Townpeople took it well. "It ain't bad," said Mrs. William Groom. "We drew some ahead."

The street department seized the opportunity to repair several hydrants that had been leaking.

People like John Gellenfeldt enjoyed neighborhood popularity because they have cisterns.

One woman said, "one neighbor of mine ran the hose on his garden just before the shutoff. I was so mad!"

But almost everyone took it in stride. Many heeded the recommendation of Mayor Geach to "get out of town for a couple of days."

body Saturday after the general area in southern Missouri between Alton and Thayer was outlined by Meyers and Donna Marie after their capture.

The chunky Stone girl wore orange slacks and a polka-dot blouse. Her clothing was spotted with blood.

Robert Gibbons, FBI agent in charge of the Springfield, Ill., office, said Meyers and the Stone girl had been identified by witnesses from photographs and by fingerprints found at the scene of the Belleville slayings.

"I feel kind of miserable about all of this," Meyers told newsmen in an interview. "As a matter of fact, I guess I'm kind of glad it's all over."

Prison Record

He said he has a prison record in Minnesota and Nebraska.

"I don't want that kid (Donna Marie) getting any of the blame," Meyers added. "I'll take the rap myself."

The girl, blinking back tears, said Meyers cut her normally long hair very short, using a razor blade.

In Chicago, the girl's father, James, 35, and mother, Norma, 36, were at home when news of their daughter's capture was received. Stone said his wife collapsed.

"I'm all shook up," said the father, and declined comment.

"She was a wonderful person, one of those pleasing personalities, always wanting to do something for someone," said friends of Miss Wernicker.

When she was 17 years old she moved into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Graham to care for Graham's mother. Her own parents were divorced and she remained with the Grahams when the elder Mrs. Graham died eight years ago.

She lived quietly, reading on religious and other subjects. If she had a boy friend she never mentioned him.

reading of a favorable vote before a joint session of Congress.

Behind the political maneuvering to solve the crisis loomed the problem of pacifying the military service chiefs. They vowed they would not accept Goulart in any fashion. His tendencies to butter up the Communist bloc they said, were a threat to national security. Army, navy and air force min-
