His marriage to Anna Frances Crime Wave In Iowa Still Going Strong

DES MOINES, IA. (AP) - The post war crime wave still is going strong, a survey of state penal institution populations indicated to-

The upward trend at the five institutions hasn't been marked in the last year and a half. But it has been generally consistent. And a year and a half ago represents about three years after the close of the war.

"It simply means that more folks are getting into jams," a representative of the state board of control commented. The board has jurisdiction over the five institutions, along with nine other mental institutions and custodial homes.

Meanwhile, the population frend at the four insane hospitals was the reverse. Neither was the change great. The trend at the two institutions for the feeble-minded and epileptics followed that of the penal-institutions.

Populations at the soldiers' home and the juvenile home were upward, that at the orphans' home downward.

"Although there has been some outward movement of patients at the mental institutions, in general the overcrowded condition of re-Fair this afternoon, tonight and cent years still persists," the board
