Toledo's John Gray Voted To County Land Use Group

There were 11 persons representing just six of the 12 incorporated communities in Tama County at the county convention last Wednesday as the final three members of the Tama County Land Preservation Policy Commission were chosen.

Automatic members to the commission are district soil commissioners Kenneth Brune, Bob Fontinel, and Harry Scurr, and Tama County Supervisors Jim Black, Don Dunham and Bob Cold.

Elect Three

The group voted to nominate members from the floor rather than just vote at random. Toledo Councilman John Gray was nominated by Toledo Mayor Harry Gardner, Jr., Leonard Siemens, Dysart councilman, was nominated by Elberon City Councilman Elmer Chalupsky, and Chalupsky was nominated by Siemens.

Temporary chairman Dick Pulse, Tama County Extension Director, noted then that no vote was necessary since only three were nominated. There was a motion and second that nominations cease and they did.

Other persons presented included Toledo Councilman Hersh Weidner, Tama Councilman Cleo. Melsa, Dysart Councilman Agnes Doeckal, Chelsea Councilman John L. Zhorne, Jr., Elberon Councilman Kay E. Batey, Vining Mayor James E. Breja, and Vining Councilman Richard Hosek.

Not Represented

Communities not represented included Traer, Lincoln, Gladbrook, Garwin, Montour, and Clutier.

Pulse then explained the duties of the commission as prescribed by the 1977 Iowa Legislature. The law was signed June 30 by Governor Ray and went into effect July 1.

The object of the Tama Commission is to provide information for development for the consideration of the Iowa general assembly. They are to do this by a process involving participation of citizens. This means at least three public hearings in the coming months.

The county commission is to provide feed back to the state land use group so the legislators have something to use when drawing up a state land use policy or law.

The recommendations from the county are to provide for orderly use and development of land and related natural resources, preserve property rights, preserve prime agriculture land for agricultural production, and preserve and guide development of critical areas, key facilities and large scale development.

The recommendations are to provide for future needs of the state housing, commerce, industry and recreation.

Recommend To State

The basic job of the county commission will be to submit recommendations to the state land preservation committee by July 1, 1978. They will have submitted a land preservation policy for Tama County and land preservation policy for the state of Iowa. The legislation rather specifically details the areas of concern to be included

Pulse said that although the recommendation is to be quite comprehensive they're not asking for any real detailed set of rules and laws. He says they're looking, more or less, for what people in Tama County feel are the issues.

Pulse said that there will be no need to push for controversial issues as he has been contacted already about when the first public hearings will be held.

The commission will consider the county conservation board, solid waste disposal, soil survey status for the county, plan for control of erosion, and recommend methods for implementing policies.

Weidner noted that before government bodies can go ahead with projects they have been required to submit an environmental impact statement and he wanted to know where that figured in. Pulse felt that that could be one of the questions brought up by the group.

No Real Rules

Pulse said that the legislation is necessary because, "right now there isn't much of any rule or law that can stop you from doing anything you want. Straightening a creek or opening a feedlot with a foul smell for example."

The makeup of the group was discussed and Pulse said he felt that, although there would still be a slight edge to the rural areas by the time it got to the state level, he felt that all interests would be represented by the method the Iowa Legislature has set out.

Land Use

The renewed drive to pass a state land use bill culminated in legislation dramatically different from that opposed by the League last year.

The bill passed this session—HF210—offers city officials a greater voice on local land preservation commissions and promises more grassroots participation in development of a state land use policy than did last year's versions (HF 1422 and SF 1313).

HF 210 creates temporary commissions at the county and state levels, controlled by elected officials. In developing policy recommendations, county commissions must consider local governments' existing plans, ordinances, regulations and policies that have an impact on land use. Other considerations are: preserving agricultural land for food and fiber production; reviewing land resources and growth trends within the county; disposing of solid waste; treating sewage; supplying water; siting various facilities; planning transportation; preserving private property rights; creating land preservation guidelines for state agencies, and identifying critical land areas.

The state commission reviews county commission recommendations and submits a state land preservation policy and implementation plan to the general assembly by March, 1979.

Both the temporary county commissions and the state commission self-destruct in 1979.

HF 210 also authorizes the Legislative Council to appoint an executive director for the state commission and requires the state agricultural extension and clerical assistance to the temporary county land preservation commissions.

The legislature also appropriated $100,000 for implementation, staff support, salaries for temporary county and state land preservation policy commissions established by HF 210.

Reflect Decisions

According to Martha Tushaus, Tama County 4-H and youth leader, home economics classes reflect decision-making and basic homemaking skills. For instance, this year, through new food exhibits, 4-H'ers focus on the use of time human energy, fuel and money as part of the food management category. Clothing projects are displayed amidst new backgrounds that feature fashion-related careers. And home improvement is one of the largest divisions.

Another large division is SMA—science, mechanics and arts. SMA includes much variety within entomology, forestry, woodworking, electricity, welding, mechanics, photography, creative visual art and garden exhibits.

"The 4-H exhibits serve two purposes," said Tushaus, "They are a means for recognizing 4-H'ers for their accomplishments, and they show fairgoers the areas of emphasis in the 4-H
