Preparing for the future

Security State Bank's opening

The Security State Bank in Algona was formed in 1937, pictured here around the time of its opening with Charlie Murtagh, Frank Kohlhaas, Flora Fiss and Gene Schemel at the front of the bank. Prior to helping organize the bank, of which he was named vice president, Frank Kohlhaas had been in the grocery and garage business with his brother, and then in the real estate and insurance business.

In 1921, he was named to the Algona City Council, serving until 1924; he was on the council again 1931-1942. He was appointed mayor in 1942. He continued to serve in that capacity until his death in 1948. He also was president of the Algona volunteer fire department for 17 years.

Murtagh retired from the bank in 1961, having spent a total of 62 years in the banking industry.

Family man and candidate

In preparation for a campaign for the Iowa Legislature, Theodore "Tedo" Hutchison posed for this photo with his family in 1940. Pictured are his wife, Helen (Murtagh), son Ted, daughter Sue (later Sue Carroll) and the newest member of the family, Tom. Theodore Hutchison practiced law with his brother, Donald, for many years in Algona, following in the footsteps of their Irish immigrant father, who had also been an attorney. Though he did not win the 1940 election (which went instead to then-incumbent Phil J. Kohlhaas of Algona), Hutchison was elected in 1942 and served until 1946.

Mrs. Hutchison was the daughter of Charles and Edna Murtagh. Her father retired in 1951 after 62 years in the banking business, the last as president of Security State Bank. Mrs. Murtagh held the distinction of being the first woman to serve on the Algona School Board.

Newspaper notes

It was announced in February 1943 that more than 4,000 acres of Kossuth County cropland had been committed to growing hemp, named as a "war crop." With the commitment of acres, it was also announced that the government would be building a processing plant on Highway 18 East in Algona, to turn the plant fibers into rope and other cordage for use in the war and civilian industry. An advertisement aimed at farmers urged them to grow hemp as a contribution to the war effort.

Algona's Coast to Coast store advertised furniture as the perfect Christmas gift in November 1943. Lounge chairs could be purchased for $29.95, knee-hole desks were $39.95, and sewing cabinets ranged in price from $1.98 to $7.95. They also offered 30 styles of mirrors for $1.49 to $6.95.
