Iowa's First Snowstorm Likely Today

It's a little late for Christmas Day, but today Iowans may get their first taste this season of a snowstorm with a little muscle in it.

So far, there have been only three snowfalls in central Iowa — on Nov. 1, 9 and 10. None was measurable, and what snow remained on the ground did not remain long.

Today, however, will be a different story.

Storm in Southwest

A gathering storm system in southern Utah and northern Arizona along with a strong, cold high-pressure ridge extending from the Lake of the Woods in Minnesota south to Florida may bring the first general snowstorm of the winter, spreading northeast across the state, says the Weather Bureau. Exactly how much snow, the weatherman isn't sure.

"If the storm passes far enough southward, we may not get much more than a little white on the ground," he says. "On the other hand, we could end up with several inches of snow."

A spokesman for the Iowa Highway Commission said snow plows and salting and sanding equipment were ready in central garages in each of Iowa's 99 counties; prepared to take to the highways as soon as conditions become dangerous.

To complicate things, the southerly winds that will be blowing most of the day today are expected to change to easterly, then to northerly late today and tonight.

Describes Hanoi Civilian Victims of U.S. Bomb

HANOI, NORTH VIETNAM—Hanoi's Christmas shattered at 2:30 p.m. when an air alert sounded, anti-aircraft guns roared and a United States plane was reported shot down.

Residents in central Hanoi reported they heard the sound of aircraft shortly after the alert sounded. Almost immediately anti-aircraft guns fired and a plane was reported downed. Another alert was sounded when a second plane appeared about 12 miles from the city.

HARRISON E. SALISBURY

Hanoi's alert was apparently the same as that touched off in Namdinh, 60 miles south of Hanoi, where this correspondent was inspecting earlier bomb damage. The alarm sounded at Namdinh at 2:26 p.m. when it was announced that a plane had been sighted approaching from the north.

Tells of 51 Raids

Mayor Tran Thi Doan, a petite 40-year-old woman, led a group of officials to a shelter beside city hall, where she continued to tell of a series of 51 raids on the city up to Dec. 23, none of which, as far as she knew, has ever been announced.

The Namdinh alert continued until 2:47 p.m., which residents thought was remarkably long since fast-flying planes had time to make several round trips from the Hanoi vicinity in that period. However, the duration

Christmas was not an occasion for Namdinh. Strings of small red decorated the old gothic Catholic church and star of Bethlehem mounted on the pinnacles of the tower. Few outside heard of Namdinh, which recently was North Vietnam's third largest city.

Mayor Doan regarded the attack as essentially a text containing nothing of significance.

Namdinh has been repeatedly attacked by U.S. Fleet bombers since 1965.

ENSENADA, MEXICO (AP) — Mexican military aircraft based in Ensenada joined the search Monday for a private plane from California missing with 10 persons aboard.

There has been no sight of the plane, which was due in La Paz, Baja California, last week.

The passengers were Richard Y. Dakin, a San Francisco businessman, his wife, children and grandchildren. The two-engine plane had a crew of two. It was last seen when it left the San Diego, Calif., airport after refueling.

Airport officials in Ensenada, Tijuana, La Paz and Mexico all were alerted to watch for the plane.

of the exciting Republican politics of that era. He was a member of the progressive wing of the Republican Party led by Gov. Albert Cummins, and he helped the progressives defeat the "stand-patter" faction in inter-party conflicts.

In 1889, Mr. English bought the Altoona Herald, where he'd learned the printer's trade. Two years later, he sold it and for the next two years worked as an editorial writer on the old Des Moines Mail and Times. In 1893, he founded the Express, the West Des Moines weekly newspaper, and was editor of it until 1904.

From 1904 to 1909, he was editor and publisher of the Mason City Times-Herald.

Mr. English was the Iowa state printer from 1907 to 1912, when he became secretary to Gov. George W. Clarke. He served in that post until 1914 when he was appointed the first state insurance commissioner, a post he held four years.

After that, although he was active in party politics, he held no fulltime state offices until 1943 when he retired from the insurance business.

Stayed on Job

"They needed somebody to edit two to three issues of the Annals," he said, "and so I agreed to do a couple of issues. I stayed there 15 years."

In March, 1958, at the age of 87, he retired because of failing eyesight.

But the retirement didn't slow him much. Using a heavy, extremely thick magnifying glass he was able to read the headlines in newspapers and marked those that he wanted read to him. A reader spent two afternoons a week with him in his Hotel Commodore apartment.

Despite his advanced age and poor eyesight, he maintained a heavy correspondence, doing it himself by using the touch system on a typewriter. His relatives read the letters for typographical errors.

Many persons telephoned him with historical questions and he would draw the answers from his memory.

In the 1961 interview, he expressed disappointment with the lack of interest in Iowa history.

"But I understand it," he said. "Times are different today from 50 years ago. Today, there isn't a great deal of civic pride.

"Today, a citizen of Des Moines might well have come from Keokuk and has no interest in Des Moines history because his family wasn't involved and has no interest in Keokuk history because he has cut all ties there.

"Today, people are more cosmopolitan and the population is mobile so they've lost their interest in one specific area," he said.

"Yes, it's good. It makes the people of the country more alike, with common interests. But it's certainly different from my day."

Moved Residence

Last April, Mr. English moved to Calvin Manor from the Commodore Hotel, where he'd lived 14 years.

He broke his hip Oct. 29, and his death Monday was the result of complications from the accident. He would have been 96 Jan. 15.

Mr. English was a member of the Greater Des Moines Chamber of Commerce — serving as president in 1924 — a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Des Moines Club, the Des Moines Rotary Club, and the church of the Disciples of Christ.

Surviving is a son, Wade H. English of Des Moines.

Funeral arrangements are pending at Dunn's Funeral Home on Grand avenue.

DECATUR, ILL. (AP) — A fiery crash 2 miles east of here, Monday night killed a Rock Island woman, critically injured her husband and son and brought Illinois' Christmas holiday death toll to 24.

Police said the victim was Mrs. Leona M. Youdas, 45.

Her husband, Joseph, 50, and son, Jerry, 21, were rushed to St. Mary's Hospital, Decatur, in critical condition.

The driver of the other car, Larry D. Fellwock, 31, of Decatur, was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol. He was treated for minor injuries and released from the hospital.
