COUNTY AGENTS

Prof. Bliss, of the extension department of the Iowa Agricultural College, advises us that more than ninety counties have now formed their organization under the new law, and will have county agents this coming year. The remaining counties of Iowa will be organized before spring work opens up. Thorough search is being made for men competent to take up this work, and it is hoped that the full number will be found in time for work during 1918.

The right kind of county agent can earn many times his salary to the farmers of any county, even in ordinary times. Under war conditions, he is especially valuable. He acts not alone as an agricultural advisor, but as an organizing business agent, in whose office the agricultural activities of the county can be centralized. He can arrange for necessary seeds and in quantities which will insure the lowest possible price. He can form a clearing house for the marketing of surplus pure-bred stock, as well as for the purchase of breeding and feeding stock. He can do the thousand and one things which the farmers of the county need to have done, but which they are not organized to do. As the war goes on, it will become more and more necessary to thoroughly organize our agriculture. The county agent plan is the most practical which has yet been suggested for this purpose.

Wallace Farmer says of the county agent plan:

For the purpose of thoroughly organizing our agriculture to meet the needs of war, an effort is being made now to establish a county farm agent in every county in the farming country. Under the provisions of the law, the farmers themselves must take the first step by organizing a county farm association with at least 200 members, at an annual membership fee of $5. When this is done, the government will pay the expenses of a farm agent for the respectively. These

OBITUARY

Benjamin Schlegel was born in Mulhausen Alsace-Lorraine, France, Mar. 1, 1854, died at his home in Bloomfield, Jan. 7, 1918, aged 63 years, 10 months and 6 days. He was the fifth of a family of seven, the youngest being in infancy, one sister, Mrs. Kate Bechlitz died thirteen years ago.

He was a watch repairer and a few clocks and a little jewelry the little river town—a supply for the mines further back in hills.

Spring was breaking, (the spring of last year) daylight had returned the ice was going out and every one was looking forward when the boat would come in and new and new grub could be had.

"It was a bright, warm day," said my friend, and then I wonder if the story would be as vexatious as the mosquitos.

(But he soon made me forget the insects.)

A friend hunted him up, he and told him it was his birthday, he proposed that a few of the (Alaskan Brotherhood) boys, at a cabin and celebrate both birthday and return of spring by drinking how much booze they could in a given length of time—a test of a capacity and endurance contest as fast as a man went down the him lay and the victor had the privilege and distinction of rubbing coal oil over the loser's face, sprinkling on ashes.

I will cut the details short. The story teller said that at supper he realized he would soon be "laid out," so he slipped, staggered to his bachelor cabin and went to bed.

During the night there was a knock at the outer door, and the man called on him to get up and come. He answered he would in a few minutes and they went away. The man went back to sleep. He had not wanted of the celebration crowd.

He awoke at daylight. His head throbbed and his stomach was in a strike, so he rolled over and slept again.

At about noon he again awoke, washed and beat it for the night saloon for a cocktail. But the saloon was closed, the door locked and no one around.

"I couldn't make it out," said my man. "Certainly this was my last and the saloons were never closed this date. So then I went across the store post office to find the man on for this strange condition. The post office was closed. There was not a man in sight.

"I looked up the street—not a living thing. I looked across to the other side and a bunch of dogs had been tied up a month and they were gone. The thought I had it. A new strike had been reported and the whole town had stampeded. But on closer investigation I found the harnesses, sleds, packing and
