Sec. 5. NEW SECTION. 554.14105 Control of controllable electronic record.

1. Requirements for control. A person has control of a controllable electronic record if:
   a. the controllable electronic record, a record attached to or logically associated with the controllable electronic record, or the system in which the controllable electronic record is recorded, if any, gives the person:
      (1) the power to avail itself of substantially all the benefit from the controllable electronic record; and
      (2) subject to subsection 2, the exclusive power to:
         (a) prevent others from availing themselves of substantially all the benefit from the controllable electronic record; and
         (b) transfer control of the controllable electronic record to another person or cause another person to obtain control of a controllable electronic record that is traceable to the controllable electronic record; and
   b. the controllable electronic record, a record attached to or logically associated with the controllable electronic record, or the system in which the controllable electronic record is recorded, if any, enables the person to readily identify itself as having the powers specified in paragraph "a". The person may be identified in any way, including by name, identifying number, cryptographic key, office, or account number.

2. Certain limitations on exclusivity permitted. A power specified in subsection 1, paragraph "a", is exclusive, even if:
   a. the controllable electronic record or the system in which the controllable electronic record is recorded, if any, limits the use to which the controllable electronic record may be put or has a protocol that is programmed to result in a transfer of control; or

a. by paying the person having control of the controllable electronic record that evidences the controllable account or controllable payment intangible; or

b. by paying a person that formerly had control of the controllable electronic record.

2. Discharge of account debtor — effect of notification of transfer of control. Subject to subsections 3 and 7, an account debtor may not discharge its obligation by paying a person that formerly had control of the controllable electronic record if the account debtor receives a notification, authenticated by a person that formerly had control or the person to which control was transferred, that reasonably identifies the controllable account or controllable payment intangible, notifies the account debtor that control of the controllable electronic record that evidences the controllable account or controllable payment intangible was transferred, identifies the transferee, and provides a commercially reasonable method by which the account debtor is to pay the transferee. The transferee may be identified in any way, including by name, identifying number, cryptographic key, office, or account number. After receipt of the notification, the account debtor may discharge its obligation only by paying in accordance with the notification and may not discharge the obligation by paying a person that formerly had control.

3. When notification ineffective. Subject to subsection 7, notification is ineffective under subsection 2:

debtor and the person that at that time had control of the controllable electronic record that evidences the controllable account or controllable payment intangible agree in an authenticated record to a commercially reasonable method by which a person can furnish reasonable proof that control has been transferred;

b. to the extent that an agreement between the account debtor and the seller of a payment intangible limits the account debtor's duty to pay a person other than the seller and the limitation is effective under law other than this Article; or

c. at the option of the account debtor, if the notification notifies the account debtor to divide a payment and pay portions by more than one method.

4. Proof of transfer. Subject to subsection 7, if requested by the account debtor, the person giving the notification shall seasonably furnish reasonable proof, using the agreed method, that control of the controllable electronic record has been transferred. Unless the person complies with the request, the account debtor may discharge its obligation by paying a person that formerly had control, even if the account debtor has received a notification under subsection 2.

5. When proof sufficient. A person furnishes reasonable proof that control has been transferred if the person demonstrates, using the agreed method, that the transferee has the power to avail itself of substantially all the benefit from the controllable electronic record, prevent others from availing themselves of substantially all the benefit from the controllable electronic record, and transfer these powers to another person.

6. Subsection 3, paragraph "c", not waivable. Subject to subsection 7, an account debtor may not waive or vary its option under subsection 3, paragraph "c".

7. Rule for individual under other law. This section is subject to law other than this Article which establishes a different rule for an account debtor who is an individual and who incurred the obligation primarily for personal, family, or household purposes.

Sec. 7. NEW SECTION. 554.14107 Governing law.
Unless otherwise agreed to by the parties, the laws of this state shall govern any actions taken pursuant to this Article.

(2) a portion has been assigned to another assignee; or

(2) the identity of the person; and
(3) how to communicate with the person; or

Subsection 2 does not apply to a secured party that, at the time the secured party's security interest attaches to a controllable electronic record, controllable account, or controllable payment intangible, has notice that the nature of the collateral or the system in which the collateral is recorded, if any, would prevent the secured party from acquiring the knowledge specified in that subsection.
EXPLANATION

The inclusion of this explanation does not constitute agreement with the explanation's substance by the members of the general assembly.

BACKGROUND. This bill creates a new article within Code chapter 554, Iowa's version of the uniform commercial code (UCC) covering commercial transactions involving personal property. New Article 12 cited as "Uniform Commercial Code — Controllable Electronic Records" was drafted by a committee appointed jointly by the uniform law commission and the American law institute. The bill incorporates the provisions of that draft under new Article 14 (new Code section 554.14101). New Article 14 governs commercial transactions involving digital assets, including those involving virtual currencies, and the use of distributed ledger technology (DLT). Traditionally, a currency is a government-authorized medium of exchange and specifically money (Code section 554.1201(2)(x)). By comparison, a virtual currency is only available as an electronic record and is decentralized. An electronic record is used to create or transfer rights to receive payment, to receive performance of services or delivery of goods, and to transfer an interest in property. It may also be used as a medium of exchange and assigned intrinsic value.

CONTROLLABLE ELECTRONIC RECORDS. The bill applies to a form of digital assets used in electronic commerce and referred to as controllable electronic records. The UCC defines a record as information retrievable in an electronic form (Code section 554.1201(2)(ae)). A controllable electronic record is a record that is stored in an electronic or other intangible medium and that must be subject to control (new Code section 554.14105). Control is determined by the type of property involved and new Article 14 specifies the rights of a purchaser of a controllable electronic record who acquires whatever rights the transferor had or had the power to transfer; the rule recognized generally under the UCC as shelter (new Code section 554.14104). Specifically, control involves the power to (1) derive substantially all the benefit from the controllable electronic record, (2) prevent others from deriving substantially all the benefit from the controllable electronic record, and (3) transfer control of the controllable electronic record to another person or cause another person to obtain control of a controllable electronic record.

QUALIFIED PURCHASERS. A purchaser who is transferred control of a controllable electronic record for value, in good faith, and without notice of any claim of a property interest in the controllable electronic record is referred to as a qualified purchaser who takes the controllable electronic record free of any claims against the property. Generally, law outside Article 14 determines what rights a person must take in order to acquire an interest in a controllable electronic record which would include the creditor-debtor provisions in Article 9. A security interest in a controllable electronic record, controllable account, or controllable payment intangible perfected by control has priority over a conflicting security interest perfected by another method (e.g., the filing of an Article 9 financing statement) (new Code section 554.9326A).

SPECIAL TYPES OF PROPERTY. Special provisions apply to accounts and payment intangibles in the form of controllable electronic records. The right to payment under these intangibles is referred to as controllable accounts and controllable payment intangibles (amended Code section 554.9102(2)). Under Article 9, the attachment and perfection of a security interest in a controllable electronic record would also be attachment of a security interest in controllable accounts and controllable payment intangibles evidenced by the controllable electronic record (amended Code section 554.9203(10)). Under Article 14, a qualifying purchaser of a controllable electronic record acquires rights in the controllable account or controllable payment intangible free of any claim (new Code section 554.14104). The bill

1 also recognizes intangible money evidenced by a controllable 2 electronic record (amended Code section 554.9102(1)).
3 Similarly, a person having control over the controllable 4 electronic record takes free of any claim (new Code section 5 554.9105A).
6 BACKGROUND — ARTICLES 1 AND 9. Article 1 includes general 7 provisions, including definitions, that apply throughout the 8 Code chapter. This includes providing a definition of the 9 term “electronic” and amending the definition of “account” 10 to include “controllable accounts” (Code section 554.1201).
11 Closely connected to new Article 14 is current Article 9, cited 12 as the “Uniform Commercial Code — Secured Transactions” (Code 13 section 554.9101). Article 9 governs how a debtor provides 14 the debtor’s property as collateral to secure financing 15 provided by a creditor. The creditor obtains a lien in the 16 collateral to secure the debt. Article 9 provides for the 17 rights and obligations of the debtor and creditor as well 18 as other persons, including other creditors, engaged in 19 commercial transactions which involve that debtor’s collateral.
20 Generally, the creditor becomes a secured party able to enforce 21 rights against the debtor when a security interest attaches to 22 the debtor’s collateral. The secured party is able to enforce 23 creditor rights against other persons when the creditor’s 24 security agreement is perfected. Article 9 provides different 25 procedures to attach a security interest to collateral, and 26 to perfect that security interest, depending upon how Article 27 9 classifies that collateral. Generally, Article 9 covers 28 two broad categories of collateral described as tangible or 29 intangible property. Tangible property includes firm assets 30 such as cars, equipment, inventory, and goods. In the case of 31 a security interest in money, perfection requires possession.
32 Intangible property includes accounts receivable, promissory 33 notes, securities, letters of credit, and interests in business 34 entities. The two principal forms of perfection are (1) the 35 secured party’s possession of the collateral and (2) the filing 1 of a financing statement with the secretary of state, in which case the secured party receives priority over secured parties who do not file a financing statement or who file a financing statement later in time.
