REMARKS BY THE
PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE

President Kibbie provided the following remarks:

As we end the third longest session in history, it's important to recognize and thank the many people who help us make this Legislature work. The pages and doorkeepers are important to any session. Our Senate backroom staff work long hours and provide us with indispensable service and without whom the institution couldn't function. Our partisan staffs are filled with dedicated and intelligent people who also work long hours and are exceptional employees of the Senate. Without them we could not do our jobs nearly as well as we do and we are forever in their debt. Lastly, we are very fortunate to have a group of very talented people in the Legislative Services Agency who serve this institution with distinction. They deserve our thanks and appreciation for their expertise and dedication.

During the long days of this session we have often had contentious debates. It is my hope that all members feel I have been fair and consistent in my rulings. I respect this institution and all of you.

The 2010 election brought us divided government and new challenges. I wanted us to make progress on issues related to education, health care and jobs, and feel we did the best we could in a difficult and partisan environment.

I am most proud that we showed discipline and responsibility over the last two or three sessions by spending the taxpayers money wisely. The proof of that is the fact we have full reserve funds and a healthy bank account. We leave this session with a balanced and honest budget and one billion dollars as a cushion for any fiscal or economic problems.

Iowa's economy is in better shape than almost every other state. Only two or three have stronger balance sheets. I believe the bedrock of our economy has always been agriculture and the job growth in agriculture related businesses plus strong commodity prices have helped keep the state's economy moving forward.

I am disappointed that we did not reach agreement on the reduction of commercial property taxes. I think the proposal put forward by Senate Democrats was fair, aimed at Main Street, and much better than the proposal put forward by the administration. We must make progress on this issue so we can come together on a reasonable compromise during the 2012 session.

We now have six months to prepare for the 2012 session. I hope we can continue to find common ground during the interim so we can develop greater consensus on solutions for the problems facing our citizens. Right now, our economy is strong and I hope we can continue to see growth for all parts of our state.

I wish you all the best for the interim and I look forward to coming back together in January for a very successful session next year.

Thank You

REMARKS BY THE MAJORITY LEADER

Senator Gronstal provided the following remarks:

Thank you, Mr. President.

First, I would like to thank the Senate backroom staff, the Republican and Democratic staffs, the Senate doorkeepers, the Legislative Service Agency, and the pages (those here with us today and those who were lucky enough to have departed months ago).

Your dedication made it possible for us to bring the session to conclusion today. Your work is truly a service to the people of Iowa

This has been a difficult session.

Finding agreement has not been easy, and that is probably a considerable understatement.

Why was it so difficult? It sure wasn't a lack of funds.

Unlike other states, Iowa's economy is growing, and our state budget is in good shape.

Our reserve funds are full at $600 million. Our current budget is ending with another $400 million in the bank. That's one BILLION dollars in the state's savings accounts, and revenue estimates for next year continue to rise.

And contrary to the Governor's posturing, Senate Democrats have ALWAYS insisted that Iowa should spend less than we take in.

In fact, in the 1990s, I was a member of the Senate Democratic majority that limited state spending to no more than 99 percent of projected revenues, and created Iowa's rainy day funds.

What's more, the initial Senate Democratic 2011 budget proposal would have spent only 98 percent of projected revenues. Spending more than we take in was never proposed by anyone.

And just to be perfectly clear, Senate Democrats are very proud of how we guided Iowa through the worst national recession in history.

We cut state spending by a quarter of a billion dollars. We made state government leaner and more effective when it comes to providing services by conducting the first state government reorganization in 25 years. And we did it without raising taxes or gutting the services Iowa families depend on.

Our success then is a big reason why Iowa's state budget is now one of the healthiest in the nation.

I mention all this just to make it as clear as possible that the reason we are still in session on June 30 has nothing to do with spending more than we take in or straightening out the Iowa budget.

When this session started just six short months ago, I used that occasion to speak directly to Iowa's small businesses and their employees. I responded to the questions and concerns they shared with me in the months before the 2011 session.

On January 10th, I told the Senate that Iowa's small business owners and workers especially wanted to know the answer to one question:

"Are legislators serious about helping Iowans recover from the worst recession in more than 50 years?"

Today, almost six months later, I believe the Senate, at least, can answer "Yes, we are."

Iowa's commercial property tax rates are too high, especially for small businesses.

That's why an overwhelmingly bipartisan majority of the Senate voted to cut commercial property taxes by $200 million. We did it in a way that targets the relief to Iowa's small businesses.

More than four out of five commercial property taxpayers receive a bigger tax cut under our plan than under Governor Branstad's proposal.

Iowa's economic recovery needs to be strengthened.

That's why the Senate unanimously passed Senate File 209, a 148 million dollar tax cut for working Iowans and businesses. It would:

Allow businesses to immediately deduct the entire cost of automobiles, machinery, property and other big ticket items, and increase the state Earned Income Tax Credit for working families, providing an immediate boost for many Iowa small businesses.

Iowa's businesses often struggle to find the skilled employees needed to expand.

That's why the Senate approved Senate File 328. It would take a successful community college pilot program statewide.

Working Iowans would receive help earning industry-recognized certificates in welding, nursing and a host of other fields and Iowa's small businesses could fill critical local skill shortages.

Small businesses pay 18 percent more than large businesses for the same health care coverage, and health insurance premiums have gone up three times faster than wages in the last 10 years.

That's why the Senate unanimously approved Senate File 506 which would have benefited 60,000 Iowa small businesses with 10 or fewer employees by sending them an annual state tax refund to help pay for employee health insurance.

Small wind and small solar projects at homes and businesses mean jobs for local construction firms, plumbers, and electrical, heating and air conditioning contractors, and lower utility bills for families, farmers, and businesses.

That's why the Senate passed Senate File 516, which provides rebates to help jumpstart Iowa's local renewable energy economy.

Distressed buildings on Main Street make it harder for communities to grow.

That's why the Senate approved new state dollars to make it easier for communities to clean-up and revitalize their business districts and industrial parks.

Those are some of the reasons the Senate can say: "Yes, we were serious about helping Iowans recover from the worst recession in more than 50 years."

Helping small businesses grow. That's what we should have focused on during this session.

Unfortunately, the Republicans in charge of the Iowa House had a different agenda.

The Senate's job creation legislation was, for the most part, ignored.

House Republicans decided instead to demand deep, deep cuts to Iowa education at all levels, starting with an unprecedented two-year freeze in state support for local schools, the elimination of statewide, voluntary preschool, and double digit tuition increases at our community colleges and public universities.

At a time when we should have moved aggressively forward on job creation, the Senate was forced to fight furiously to defend the great teachers, students and schools at the heart of our communities and the educational opportunity that makes Iowa workers among the most productive in the world.

I still don't understand why.

Why have we spent the last two months arguing whether Iowa should close successful, high quality preschools for four-year-olds?

Why were so many of Iowa's superintendents, school board members, and parents forced to travel to the Statehouse to patiently explain that putting schools on a starvation diet for two years was a bad idea?

Why did community college students and university students have to endure legislative hostility in order to point out that making it more difficult, more expensive for Iowans to improve their skills was a very, very bad idea?

Why?

It wasn't because we didn't have the money.

As I've said many times, our reserve funds are full at $600 million and the current budget is ending with another $400 million in the bank.

Republicans and Democrats rely on the same non-partisan revenue and budget estimates. And as far as I know, two plus two equals four whether you are a Republican or a Democrat.

I wish that the Iowa House and Governor Branstad would have joined the Senate in continuing to make smart investments in education. Then this session could have focused on encouraging small business and creating jobs.

Instead, the state of Iowa was forced into a lengthy, bitter fight to save preschool, to provide a modest increase in state support to local schools THE YEAR AFTER NEXT, and to soften cuts to colleges.

These fights, fights all of which could have been easily avoided, nearly brought Iowa its first ever government shutdown.

Why?

That's the question I'll spend the next six months trying to answer.

Because next January, the Senate will be back. Helping small businesses and their employees will again be at the top of our agenda.

Next year, the state's bank accounts will still be overflowing.

Next year, the argument that we are too broke to provide a good future for our kids will be even more baseless than it was this year.

Next year, I hope we will quickly agree that Iowa should continue to be a national leader when it comes to education. I hope we can then complete the work the Senate started this year: growing Iowa's small business and creating more jobs for Iowans.

REMARKS BY THE MINORITY LEADER

Senator McKinley provided the following remarks:

Thank you Mr. President.

Colleagues, friends and all Iowans:

What a session!

This was truly one for the history books: 6 different months, 25 weeks, 172 calendar days and 91 total days of session.

As we finally close the books on this session, I think history will ultimately view this session as the real beginning of a transformation progression for Iowa.

When the voters spoke last fall, they said they wanted a smaller, more efficient government that taxes less, spends less, promotes an environment where private sector job creation flourishes and encourages freedom, liberty and opportunity.

Republicans have listened to the wishes of the voters and after years of overspending, ever higher taxes and rampant job losses – the tide is beginning to change and a new course is being charted.

Yet, make no mistake – our work does not end today. It is only just beginning and we have a lot of work ahead of us.

When we started this session on that cold January day, Senate Republicans said we wanted to give the citizens back their government and make it more responsive, open and transparent. We said we wanted to spend our time this session focusing on the message the Iowa voters delivered last fall: to concentrate on private sector job creation, remove onerous barriers to economic growth, reduce spending and cut our taxes.

From day one, our mission has been to begin to restore the public trust in government and to move forward on a new and more hopeful agenda.

While there is still much yet to be accomplished when it comes to opening Iowa up for more good paying jobs, we took a major step forward this session by beginning to address the onerous rules and regulations that are holding back job creators and sending jobs across our borders.

Our eleven city "Re-Open Iowa for Business" Rules and Regulations tour generated hundreds of comments, was attended by over 1000 people and truly began to push the conversation toward removing – instead of building up the barriers that are hindering the success of our people.

In the coming weeks, Senate Republicans will be releasing our report on the tour, which will include specific policy and procedure changes that must be implemented to ensure Iowa is friendlier to those who wish to invest in our communities and our workforce.

When it comes to encouraging private sector job creation and the over 100,000 Iowans that are still unacceptably out of work, Senate Republicans look forward to continuing to be a leader on all issues related to job creation.

On jobs, we made progress but there is more that needs to be done.

Though it took the full six months to accomplish, we finally have a budget that funds our core essential services without employing the kinds of reckless budgeting gimmicks that have put our state in financial peril in recent years.

While nobody likes everything about this new budget, it is more sustainable, predictable and spends less than we take in.

As we look to the future, we will continue to work hard to find savings, eliminate waste and offer systemic reforms that will result in a leaner and more efficient delivery of services for the people that elected us to serve as their voice and their vote.

On the budget, we made substantive progress but there is plenty more that can be done.

A leaner budget also goes hand in hand with a more reasonable and responsible tax system.

In order to make our state more competitive for jobs, we must have lower property taxes. Unfortunately, the property taxpayers of Iowa will not get the comprehensive tax reform that they deserve this session.

However, Senate Republicans remain emboldened to do what is right for all classes of property taxpayers.

Whether it is property or income taxes, there is still plenty of work yet to be done to make Iowa more competitive for all of those who wish to call our great state home.

When it comes to our tax code in the future, we have no choice but to make serious reforms.

In addition to the budget, job creation and taxes, there are still challenges that must be addressed in other areas in the coming year.

We must get past the partisan obstructionism and finally address legislation that bans late-term abortions so communities like Council Bluffs can avoid becoming the "Late-Term Abortion Mecca of the Midwest." In addition, it is wrong for Senate Democrats to continue to obstruct a vote of the people on the basic definition of marriage, defying the unmistakable message delivered by the voters' last election.

Our work on other important endeavors and reforms in education, health care, energy, agriculture policy and with our natural resources will be part of the conversation in the near future and we can and must always do more to make our government more open and transparent.

We must also challenge ourselves to guarantee sufficient public safety and ensure that we have roads and infrastructure that are safe, reliable and capable of supporting the Iowa economy of the future.

We must work to help those along our western border as they battle the flooding created by the Mighty Missouri. They, like other flooding victims, are a wonderful example of the resiliency and profound sense of community that exists amongst the people of Iowa.

Clearly, Mr. President, can there be any doubt that we have plenty of work ahead of us?

Before I conclude, I want to thank my fellow members of the Senate Republican Caucus for their hard work. I want to thank all of our caucus staff members, the staff of the LSA and Secretary of the Senate's office and our pages and door keepers for their excellent work.

It takes a lot of dedicated people to keep us all on track.

Yet, it also takes real leadership to really put Iowa back on a track of growth and prosperity. I believe we have started down the right path but we can, should and will do more.

Iowans did not elect us to continue the status quo. They elected us to make difficult decisions and to take real steps forward. The future generations of Iowa cannot afford for us to sit idly by while our neighbors and competitors only continue to make the progress we are missing.

We, as elected officials, have been granted an incredible ability to set policy and represent the people of this state. As individuals, we are here to serve the constituents in our districts, but together we must work for the betterment of all.

Every Iowan is unique and special but we all are looking for similar things: a better life and good paying jobs, world class schools and safe communities for their children and a government that lives within its means, promotes liberty and fosters opportunity.

Iowans are blessed with common sense, are hardworking, compassionate, frugal and optimistic about the future. They care about their communities, their schools and their neighbors around them. Our people are smart, they love this state and they want what is best for their families. This exceptional sense of independence, community and self-sufficiency is our bedrock and our lifeblood.

As we look toward the future, let us again unleash the unbridled entrepreneurial spirit and ingenuity of the private sector. This state is dotted with manufacturers and small businesses who have served as the foundation of our communities. We must embrace the understanding that the new Iowa economy will be about the things that we can touch, feel, need and use. Never should we allow our valuable agricultural commodities to leave this state to have value added elsewhere.

We could be on the verge of a new economic explosion if we lead with the right vision, take the right approach and move away from the notion that government picking winners and losers is the answer to growing our economy.

We must stay focused on job creation and send a clear message that Iowa is the destination for all those who wish to find success and pursue their dreams.

As legislators, we must never stop trying to renew the boundless potential embodied in all 99 counties.

May God bless you all, our constituents back home and may you always be proud to be an Iowan.

Thank you very much.
